THE

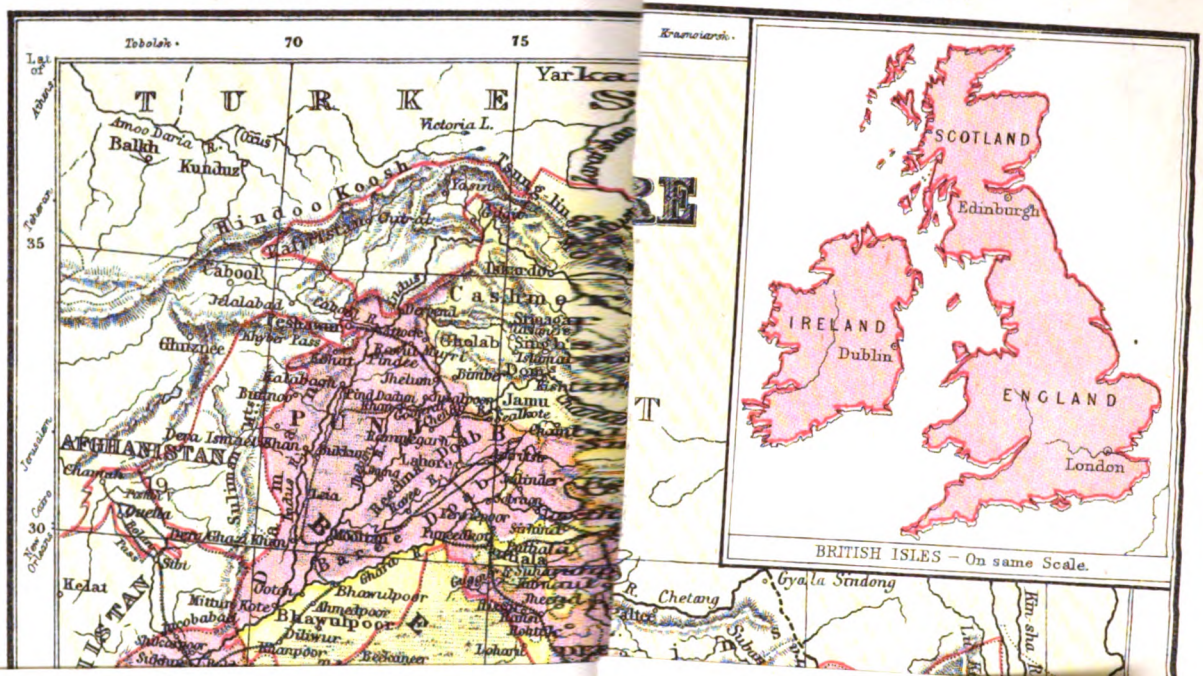
BANNER OF ISRAEL.

A Weekly Journal.

ADVOCATING THE

IDENTITY OF THE BRITISH NATION

WITH THE



LOST TEN TRIBES OF ISRAEL.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

VOLUME XVII. 1893.

London:
ROBERT BANKS & SON, RACQUET COURT, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

HARVARD UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

INDEX.

PAGE

Articles by the Editor.

Acceptable, Upright, and Truthful Words 112
Advent, The Sunday Next Before... ... 582
A Look Ahead 449
Argument, The Only, in Favour of "The Hobby," according to The Warrior Square Magazine 450
Africa—
A New South African British Empire 31
See also "Uganda"—Cairo, Egypt, Colonization of—A New British Expedition 392
All that See Them Shall Acknowledge Them, that They are the Seed which the Lord hath Blessed 577
British Central Africa 615
Anglo-Israelism 76, 197
Ark, The, of the Mosaic Covenant and Its Teachings 66
Assyria and the Bible 519
Axe, The, at the Very Root of the Pet Theory 567
Balaam's Prophecies, Part I., 295; Part II., 309
Balak and Balaam 390
"Barren Woman, The," Becomes the Joyful Mother of Many Children 39
Behring Sea Award 438
"Beluchistan," the Western Gate of British India 505
"Be Ye Mindful Always of His Covenant" 291
Bible, The, at Gibraltar 494
"Borrow, Thou Shalt Not" 338
Britain's Progress for Forty Years 1851-91 176
British Federation 159
British-Israel Association 79
British-Israel's Recent Acquisitions of Foreign Territory 175
British, Do the, Enjoy the Blessings Promised to Israel? 416
British-Israel's Naval Strength at Sea ... 601
Cairo, The Breeze at... 73
Certain Difficulties Intelligently Considered by a Vicar 245
Chamberlain, Mr. Austin, M.P., on the Expansion of England 111
Children, Let the, First be Filled 487
Conflagration, The Coming Fearful ... 433
Daniel's Metallic Image, A Popular View of 87
Demoralizing Effects of Gladstonian Politics 446
Doing Israel's Work and Sketching Israel's Destiny 89
Egypt—
Reinforcement of British Troops in ... 85
Government in, with Rosewater ... 109
Egyptian Progress and the Financial News 164
French Testimony to British Good: Administration in Egypt 351
Elijah and Carmel 77
Empire, The 194
Empire, The Integrity of, the Queen ... 253
Empire, The, Secretaries of State 313
Empire, The, which is Sporadic and Ubiquitous 325
Empire, The Federation of... 522
Empire, Our Huge, and the French Moans Thereat 546 England—
Mr. Grant Allen on 205
The Destiny of 445
The Expansion of and the Necessary Cost in Blood... 565
Ephraim, The Tribe of, and the British Nation 266
Evangelists to all Nations 583

PAGE

"Foolish, The, Nation" 63
Franco-Siamese Settlement... 409
"Frightful, The, Catastrophe" 493
"Go Ye into all the World and Preach the Gospel to Every Creature" 219
Goldsmid, Lieut.-Col. Albert E., on the Colonization of Palestine 524
Gold Coast Colony, Its Trade and Resources 402
"Go and Tell Them" 521
Great Britain and Biblical Prophecy ... 137
Great Britain and Russia in Central Asia 206
Great, The, King over all the Earth ... 520
Haifa, Damascus, The Projected Railway 233
Head, The, and Not the Tail" among all the Nations... 57
"Head, The, and Not the Tail," even in Fruit-growing 158
Home Rule Bill, The 133
Holy and Holiness 476
" " " The BANNER on... ... 234
Home Rule of Ireland 557
Identity, Another Deathblow to the ... 80
Identity, A Sydney Controversy on our ... 151
Identity, Is the, Favourable to the Cause of Missions to the Heathen? 230
Identity, Col. A. O. Molesworth on our ... 341
Identity, Our, Recent Public Notices Respecting 529
"If He Go through . . . . He Teareth in Pieces" 589
Imperial Federation in London, Ontario, Canada 37
Imperial Institute: Its Opening 277
Imperial Institute, Mr. W. E. H. Lecky's Inaugural Lecture at the... 613
Indian Empire, Our Map of the 21
India, South, Some Great Feudatory Native States in 25
Indian Railways, The Success of 40
India Under the Crown 174
India! Bravo 314
India, or British Rule in, by Professor A. Vambery 481
Inherit, To Make Them, the Desolate Heritages 61
Irish Home Rule 376
Israel's Efforts to Bless the Nations of the World 38
Israelites are All Jews? 124
Israel "Pegging Out" Her Claims ... 145
Israel's Colonies Compared with those of Athens 169
Israel's Destiny, Signs of Progress in ... 301
"Israel Pre-ordained to be the Chief Nation in Christian Times" 620
I will Bring Again the Captivity of Elam 212
Is Ireland a Nation? 289
Israel's Financial Conquest of the World 373
Israel Keepeth Sabbath 302
Isaiah liv. Regarded as a Political Chapter 310
Israel-England Must Hold on to Her Colonies 506
Israel Dwelling Confidently in the Isles 517
Japan, The Great Earthquake in 439
Jews, The, Restoration of to Palestine ... 43
Judah, The House of, Walking to the House of Israel 170
Judah's Envy and Jealousy of British-Israel 627
Kingdom of God, The: Its Dual Aspect 305
Kingdom of Christ 569
"Let There Be Light" 93
Levy, Mr. Mark 101
Lords, The House of, is True to the Empire of England 469
Lord's, The, Servants Must be Active ... 78
Masonry, The Antiquity of 495

PAGE

Message from Singapore 221
Merchant Shipping, The, Shipping of the World, and What Israel Share of it is ... 525
Missionary to the Jews on the Supremacy of Britain 437
Motto for 1893, for All Anglo-Israelites 217
Matabeleland and Mashonaland 541
Nations, The Pyre of 97
National Morality 265
National Forgetfulness of God and Misuse of Wealth 581
New, The, Covenant Made in the Blood of Christ 269
New Zealand, How Matters are Progressing in 112
Our New Year's Number 5
Nova Scotia Objector, A 208
Objections, A Fresh Series of, from India 363, 542. Reply thereto 556
Obligation of the Great Missionary Societies to the British and Foreign Bible Society 282
"One of the Greatest, Richest, and Most Powerful Nations in the World" ... 270
Palestine, The Colonization of 524
Pearse, The Rev. Mark Guy 290
Pessimists and Optimists 64
"Pessimism" During the Week of Universal Prayer 150
Pessimism Rampant 241
Queensland's Petition 157
Recent Public Notices Respecting Our Identity 529
Report of the Lord's Watchmen, The ... 625
Return, O Lord, to the Many Thousands of Israel 518
Royal Wedding, The 349
Russia and France versus The Triple Alliance; But Israel in Hiding ... 553
"Sanctuary," The, and Yet "The Stone of Stumbling" 368
"Salvation is of the Jews" 437
Sabbath, The, and The World's Fair ... 487
Schaff, Professor, of New York, on the English Language 243
Scourges in Our Sides, and the Thorns in Our Eyes 397
Siam, The Trouble in 385
Solomon and the British Mile 523
"Son of Man, The, came Not to be Ministered Unto, but to Minister" ... 254
Sunday at The World's Fair 140
The Race Which Has Girdled the Earth ... 193
The Ten Tribes—New Theory to Account for Their Being Lost 362
The Lost Ten Tribes 461
The Great King Over All the Earth ... 520
To and Fro 189
Trade Prospects and Revivals 629
Two Nations But One People 341
Two Questions Asked and Answered ... 377
Uganda and the Railway, According to Mr. Stanley 26
Uganda, Captain Lugard's Speech in Liverpool on Retention of 42
Uganda, Mr. Chamberlain on the Question of 181
Ulster—Nonconformist Minister's Protest Against the Home Rule Bill 197
Union Jack: What Does it Mean? ... 421
Vambery, Professor, on British Rule in India 481
Vast, The, World-wide Importance of the Fact that Israel is Found 39
"Victoria," The Loss of H.M.S. 337
Visigoths and Vandals were Englishmen ... 196
War, The Coming, with Two Fronts ... 121
Western, The, Sea-Gate of the Empire ... 457
"What Dost Here, O Israel? 296

Digitized by Google

PAGE

What I Saw in India 423
"Who Giveth Thee Power to Get Wealth?" 229
"What Good" 410
Who Are Israel? 566
Who Encircles the Globe with this Iron Net of the Submarine Cables? ... 584
Wild, Dr., on Prophecy 317
Wilkinson, Rev. John, on the Restoration of Israel and Judah 482
Witness, The, of God, and the Witnesses to God 256
Witness from Brisbane in Israel's Favour, A 435

Adam, Rev. S. C.

The Great Image (Dan. ii.); or, the Time and End of Gentile Supremacy 29

Adcock, Robert.

The Lost Sheep of the House of Israel ... 231

Anderson, John S.

A Nation and a Company of Nations 134, 255
The Welsh Suspensory Bill... 278
Another Proof 439
Russia and Israel 602
Literal v. Spiritual 618

An Australian.

Manifest Destiny 471

Aston, Rev. F.

The Fulness of the Gentiles 554

Barton, J. S.

The House of Judah Walking to the House of Israel 210

Bastard, Jas. P.

By-paths of Bible Knowledge 44
Bible History... 449

Bell, Miss.

Close of the Times of the Gentiles... ... 392

Browett, H. L.

The National Prayer-book's Testimony to our Israelitish Descent 393, 308, 316

Blore, W. L.

"Go Forward" (Exod. xiv.) 15, 28
Multiplication 135, 209
Israel on the March 375

Bridgman, Rev. A. A.

1893 11

Cachemaille, Rev. Alfred J. J., M.A.

The New Covenant, or Testament... ... 16
A Verdict of Ignorance 332

G. M. C., Rev., of Canada.

"Blessed are the Meek, for they shall Inherit the Earth" 267

Correspondence.

Abraham Henly, to the Chairman of the Christian Evidence Society 44
To one Minister regarding the Sermon of another 45
Edmond Ireland, Some Objections and the Answers to them 45
The Tribe of Benjamin and Hosea i. 4, 6, 9 57
J. G. D. 58
Edmond Ireland 58
P. C., on Dean Alford's Notes on the Millennium 69
E. V. Newby... 69
R. Illidge, Milton, Brisbane 69
H. H. Pain, on the B. I. Association Badge 70
J. Rutter, on Islington Cattle Show ... 70
C. P., Suggestions for Proclaiming the Identity 82
J. W. Brame, "Choveri," Zion 82
Primrose Dame 82
Superiority of British Coal... 82
Thomdike, C. F., with Note by the Editor 94
Percy Churchman, Identity Meetings at Cowes 105
Robert Adcock, Possible Origin of St. Valentine's Day Gifts 106
L. P., Skill in Athletic Sports 106
Ubau Chemdoth Kol Haggoiym (Hag. ii. 7) 116
H. Alder-Smith, on the 3rd edition of the Handbook 117
Alfred Porcelli, Signs of the Times ... 118
L. E. B., The Greatest of all Languages ... 118

PAGE

F. Thomson, The Association Badge ... 118
J. M. H. 118
Anglo-Israelite 130
Heywood-Smith, The Badge 130
Edmond Ireland, An Identity Controversy 140
Browett, H. L., Two Drawing-room Identity Meetings 142
W. T. W., Ridicule 154
Mr. John Emms' Letter to Mr. E. Ireland, with Notes thereon 165
Lawrence, J., Utility of Wearing a Badge 178
Levy, Mark, His Departure for America... 178
Edward Hide... 202
G. Vicars Brown 202
Howe, Miss L., as to Nestorian Christians 213
Fernival, H. E. 214
L. P., Israel in Egypt 214
Willoughby, James, Enquiring Date of S. Omar's Mosque 214
Brighton Beach-work, by H. A. Marchant 226
Odd Fellows Hall Work, by ditto... ... 226
Browett, H. L., Notes on Mr. Granville's paper 238
E. L., Suggesting the advisability of writers giving the authorities quoted 238
The Verangians 249
When was the Mosque of Omar Built? ... 250
Does an Alliance Exist Between the United States, Russia, and France? 250
Abraham Henly, in answer to Mr. Brame's letter on p. 82 250
The God of England... 262
Date of Capture of Jerusalem by Omar ... 262
The Rev. Hugh S. Hamilton 274
J. S. Ainstie, a Prophetic Song 286
W. Blore on the Manifestation of Our Identity 295
A Constant Reader, as to Caleb and Joshua 298
G. Vicars Brown, a Buddhist Catechism ... 321
C. P., The Projected Haifa-Damascus Railway 321
Col. H. Senior, for help to purchase lantern slides 322
H. L. Blore 322
G. Wells, jun., Increase in the May Meetings 322
British Colonization 333
British-Israel Association, Brisbane Branch 333
R. of Devon, Antagonism between Romish and Ultra Ritualism and the Anglo-Israel Position 333
Poverty Bay, on Appreciation of BANNERS 333
C. Rawson, A Prayer for God's guidance in this nation's present dangers... ... 334
A. J. Stokes, Tasmania 346
A. P. Vickers... 346
Geo. Betts, International Lessons, Comments, and the Ten Tribes 357
F. A. R. Winter, British Guiana 357
Anglo Israel letter not inserted in the Church Times 357
Heywood Smith, Look Ahead 358
David M'Laren, Plymouth Brethren and the Identity 370
The Hine Memorial Fund 382
John S. Anderson, A letter not published by the Standard 382
A. O. Molesworth, An Apology 382
F. J. Annear 393, 608
H. L. Blore 394
G. Vicars Brown 394
G. W. Friend... 394
Diminishing Elbow-room 394
John S. Anderson, Jewish persecution in Russia 430
Caroline Pearson 430
E. K., Quotations from "The Lamp in the Wilderness 442
J. Read, Ancient Preaching of the Gospel in Ireland 442
Hope, Necessity for daily intercessory prayer for delivery of His chosen nation from Rome Rule, &c. 442

PAGE

Mrs. Hine's Relief Fund 453
Israel in Canada, the Gates of the West ... 453
God has Gone Forward, by P. C. 454
E. H. 454
From Major Le Carron's book on "The Stone of Destiny," by C. P. 454
British-Israel Meeting at Bexhill 466
Argument for our Roman Catholic friends to elucidate 477
F. C. P., As to a good Political Newspaper Answer, England 484
A. E. M., For the source of a quotation ... 478
Railway Concession from Beyrout... ... 478
Hugh Stewart, Australian Emigration to South America 490
Guy, John A., on Mr. Rudyard Kipling's Patriotic Poem 501
Miss Rush, The Present Need 514
Mr. Theodore S. Hill, Identity Music ... 538
Mr. L. E. M. Richards, The News: a National Fireside Journal and Review... 538
James Grant, Col. Goldsmid on Jewish Colonization 538
A. J. S., In Memoriam of Col. Chas. Joseph Hadfield 574
H. Senior, His Lecture at Llanduff Deaf and Dumb School... 574
Editorial Reply to a Correspondent ... 594
A Working-man's Outlook, by Miss Rush... 596
R. Wilson, The good work of Hull British-Israel Identity Society 597
W. T. W., on the Conference at Edinburgh 597
Dr. Piazzi Smyth, The Predestined Egyptian Event of 1882 597
Anglo-Israel 610
K. A. Wardrop ("Revertite") 610
Robert Adcock 610
H. A. Marchant 610
British-Israel Association, Howard S. Bliss 622
E. U. 622
James Coyle 634
C. Fox... 634

Cox, V. M.

The Good of It 15
An Erroneous Conclusion based on False Premises 329
History Elucidating Prophecy 358
Ephraim-Israel, the Pivot Nation of Prophecy and History... 394

Cumberland, Stuart.

Monarchs who Speak English 414

De St. Dalmas, The Rev. H.

Urgency of Missions in the Light of Prophecy 259
Discussion in Yarmouth, Nova Scotia 319, 327, 339, 350, 463, 473, 485, 496, 511, 544, 558, 604

Ellsworth, Will.

Thoughts on the Gathering, "The Ensign" 366

Enigmas.		Answers
No. 10	277	298
Double acrostic ...	344	354
6	476	489
7	501	514
8	550	562
9	598	608

F. C. P.

The Psalms, Part I., 149, Part II., 161, Part III. 171
Bishop Lightfoot on the Celtic Church ... 585

Gandy, F. S.

India and its Greatness 268

Gass, F.

The National Mace of the United States ... 32
Early Britain, Part I., 86, Part II., ... 100
Anglo-Saxons and the Aborigines, Part III, 103
The Future of the White Races 244
The Messianic Ideal of the Post-exilic Period 428
The Tell Armana Tablets 470
The Colonization of Palestine 578

Digitized by Google

PAGE

General Articles (see also Sundries.)

The Mills of God 6
Set Thee Up Waymarks 23
Blind Evidence 46
Rev. Thos. Allen, on the Empire 53
Hard upon Commentators 82
Mr. Gladstone upon the Observance of the Sabbath 82
Hooker upon the Literal Interpretation of Scripture 82
Anglo-Israelism 90
Blind Evidence from Edmund Waller ... 113
Semitic and Aryan Languages 122
Query? Date of Capture of Jerusalem, by Omar 202
News from Australia... 328
A Methodist's Advice to the Pope 331
Extracts from a Note Book, by A. B. C. ... 331
Dr. Croly on the Universal Language ... 370
European Preparations for War 378
Blind Evidence for British-Israel Truth from Delitzsch 488
The Wonder of Bible Work 489
Sir Colin Moncrieff on "the Nile"... ... 620
Colonel Senior's Limelight Lantern Lecture in Bristol 621
Bishop Potter, of New York, Gives Evidence at Quebec 630

G. S.

The Study of the Bible in the Light of the Identity, and its Effect on our Daily Life 50

Hanan, The Rev. Denis, D.D.

The Shame of the Heathen (Ezek. xxxiv. 29) 19
Some Questions to and his Answers ... 56
Tara 75
"For Zion's sake I will not Hold My Peace" 110
National Danger, and a few of its Lessons 147
The Kingdom of God Cometh not with Outward Show 242
The Throne of the Lord 257
The Practical Aspects of Our Identity ... 282
"Advance" along the Line 292
"A Cogitation," Lord Salisbury's Speech at Derry 334
Tara 367
The Perpetual Throne 374
The Teutonic Theory 434
"A Nation" and the Stone" 603
Dr. Pearson's "Forecast" 614
The Throne of the World 626

H. J. F.

Some Remarks Concerning the Cunieform Records of Sargon the Assyrian... ... 164
Sargon 171

Hailes, B.

Imperial Federation 326
An Anglo-American Nation... 351
What name? 422
"Yom Kippur" 585

Henly, A.

"The Scripture Cannot be Broken" ... 619

Jashub.

Extracts from "An Historical Account of the Ten Tribes Settled Beyond the River "Sambatyon in the East" 533

Johnston, A. W. J.

The Return from Babylon 604

Jones, The Rev. J. Idrisyn.

John Bunyan's Desire to be an Israelite ... 102
Shall We Wear a Badge 128
Presentation to Him 272
Infidelity Silenced 399
Troy-Nouvant... 430

J. F. B.

More Blind Evidence Respecting British-Israel Truth 522

Larkins, Lieut-Col. W. H.

The Tribe of Benjamin 182
The Tribe of Dan 258, 271
Benjaminites Leaving Jerusalem before its Siege 370

PAGE

Lectures.

By Dr. Hanan on the Identity 99
By Rev. F. Ashton in Bournemouth ... 224
By W. Marchant; Britain's Responsibilities: Her Reign and Destiny 509
By Rev. M. F. O. Bridgman in Southport 579
"The Ethics of Empire" By A. Milner ... 617

Metropolitan Provincial and Colonial British-Israel Association.

Monthly Reports ... 23, 67, 114, 176, 225, 273, 285, 380, 440, 475, 517, 594
Society's Meetings—Brighton 57
Queensland Branch at Brisbane ... 70
Foresters' Hall, Cowes 114
Clifton 131
Bristol and Clifton Branch Accounts 154
Edinburgh 176
Newcastle Association 200
Annual Meeting 273
Leicester Meeting 500
Conference at Edinburgh 513
Conference at Chester 526
Progress in Australia 568
Conversazione at Bath 573
Bath Anglo-Israel Association ... 573
Cardiff, British-Israel Illustrated ... 594
Anglo-Israel Free Distribution Fund 22, 67, 115, 176, 177, 225, 285, 332, 440, 489, 526, 537, 594
Israel's Scripture and Prayer Union 22, 68, 116, 154, 178, 226, 286, 310. 332, 381, 441, 490, 538, 596

McIntosh, Rev. James.

Westward Ho! 6

McNaughton, Rev. W.

French and English Feelings 591

Mason, W. H.

The Church of God, What Is It? 125

Mitchell, Rev. John R.

Which is the True Church? 458, 498, 510

Morton. Rev. Henry, B.A.

Genesis xlix. 16, 17 17

Obituary.

Adams, Rev. S. C. 213
Alder-Smith, Mrs. H. 213
Roe, Surgeon-Major, P. H. 466

Olive, H. E.

Elect According to the Foreknowledge of God 218

Onslow. Douglas A., J.P.

The Term "Jew" is Never in Scripture Applied to the House of Israel of the Ten Tribes 13

Parker, William.

Israel in Britain 248

Poetry.

On Mrs. Martha Rieks' Visit to the Queen 57
Lost Ephraim Found! Shout, Judah, for Joy 101
The Stone of Israel 118
East to West, by A. L. Swinburne ... 178
Taken from "A Song of the English," by Rudyard Kipling 274, 501
"God Speed the Right" 378
"None is Like Jeshurun's God,' by Rev. John Wesley 381
The Bible 382
The Coming Day, by W. S. Drury ... 465
Forgotten 537
England's Sabbath, by J. D. W. 622

P. C., Rev.

Nut to Crack—Our Twelve Tribes ... 23
"Sold His Birthright" 101
The Coming Golden Age 126
The Newton Stone 235
The Evidence of Ethnology 246
A Handful of Nuts to Crack 453

Progress.

Progress in Nova Scotia 54
Progress in Australia 568

Prowse, Dr. Arthur B.

Our Identity with Lost Israel, The Kingdom of God: Its Dual Aspect ... 305

PAGE

Q. E. D.

Testimony of Louis Philippe, King of the French, to the Necessity of England to the World's Welfare 178

Rankin, James.

The Behistun Cuneiform Inscription ... 234
The Captivity of Israel from a Cuneiform Inscription 379
The Great Charter 593

Reid, J. D.

The Blessing of Moses 199

"Revertite."

Why is Anglo-Israelite Truth Rejected? ... 451

Rogers, Mrs. G. Albert.

Who Was Job? 411

Reep, E.

"Seek Ye Me and Ye Shall Live"... ... 12
Mr. Alfred Milner's England in Egypt ... 91
Israel's Religious Growth 162
Who Were the Etruscans? 220
M. Flinders Petrie's Discoveries in Egypt 304
England and Russia 329
Hebrew Origin of the British Founded on Ancient Coins. 338, 400, 413
Berean Enquiry and Correspondence ... 429
The Israel of God 483
Who so Blind as the Lord's Servant? ... 834
Historical Gleanings 550, 562, 569, 580, 590

Reviews.

Mr. Milner's England in Egypt 91
Nineteen Centuries Ago and Now 105
"Israel a Christian Nation," &c. 129
"For and Against the Truth" 225
British Dominion in India 249
Charles Lagrange on Major Brück's Concord Existing Between the Historical Law of Nations, the Chronology of the Bible and that of the Great Pyramid ... 344, 355
"Who Are You?" 369
Our Handbook of British-Israel Truth ... 405
The Pillars of Our Faith 387, 403
Dr. W. H. Poole's Work 418
The End of the World, by Joseph Grace ... 441
The Lord's Declaration Confirmed by Oath to Two and to Daniel 476
Our Race and Its Origin, Nos. 9 and 10 ... 586
Israel's World: Origin and Destiny of the British Race, Colonies, and Empire. Edited by Rev. H. Roe 596
The Anglo-Israel Almanack for 1894 ... 633
The Lord Shall Comfort Zion 634

Rowe, Rev. Henry.

British Pentecosts and Identity 21

Roe, George.

Traced Back to Judea 426

Rush, Miss E. M.

Sowing the Seed 103, 356
A Forecast in 1842 186

Sermons.

Rev. C. F. Cooper on Our Identity ... 52
" Replies Thereto 136, 173
Bishop of Rochester 386
Canon Brooke's on July 6th, 1893 398
Dr. Wild—Israel-England Must Hold on to Her Colonies 506
Rev. W. Gray Dixon on the British Empire 530
Dr. Wild—The Hebrew Question 547
G. Vicars Brown—A Fifth of November Sermon 591
Growth of Melbourne 594

Senior, Colonel H. W. J.

Stumbling-blocks to the Acceptance of British Truth 279
Israelitish Tree, and His Lecture in Bristol 378
British-Israel: Illustrated Lecture... ... 594

Shaw, H. R.

The Barometer as an Identification ... 9
Rule Britannia 92
Home, Sweet Home 122

Shootingham, John.

Random Thoughts or Shafts 33, 81, 128, 189, 237, 297, 342, 391, 451, 499, 560, 607

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India).

"And the Remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS OF THE EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XVII., No. 836. Entered at Stationer's Hall.] WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 4, 1893 [PRICE TWOPENCE.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
The New Year's Number	5
Westward Ho! By Rev. Jas. MacIntosh	6
Narrow Literalisms. By J. G. Taylor	7
The Barometer as an Identification. By H. R. Shaw	9
1893. By Rev. A. A. Bridgeman, B.A.	11
"Seek Ye Me, and Ye Shall Live." By E. Reep	12
The Term "Jew" is never in Scripture applied to the House of Israel of the Ten Tribes. By Douglas A. Onslow, J.P.	13
The Good of It. By V. Cox	15
The New Covenant, or Testament. By Alfred J. J. Cachemaille, M.A.	16
Gen. xlix. 16, 17. By Rev. Henry Morton, B.A.	17
The Identity in Sweden. By Dr. C. Piazzi Smyth	18
"The Shame of the Heathen." By Rev. Denis Hanan, D.D	19
The Perpetuity and Supremacy of Israel. By Rev. Thomas Lowe	20
British Pentecosts and Identity. By Rev. Henry Roe	21
Our Map of the Indian Empire	21
Anglo-Israel Free Distribution Fund	22
Israel's Scripture and Prayer Union	22
The British-Israel Association	23
Nut to Crack—No. 7. By (the Reverend) P.C.	23

OUR NEW YEAR'S NUMBER.

OUR Seventeenth Volume of the BANNER OF ISRAEL is introduced to the world to-day. The same editorial leader (spared so long!), who as many as 17 years ago asked from the then diminutive body of Anglo-Israelites a favourable consideration for the journal handed them for their perusal, still guides the ship. Since that date many and great changes have taken place among those who were asked then to accept the facts of Our Identity. Our views have outgrown the stage when men loudly laughed at our teaching. We have left behind us, too, the disagreeable period when the hasty ones among our opponents were wont to grow violently angry with us as teachers of "blasphemous fables and dangerous deceits," resorting, even during pulpit ministrations, to personal abuse of such as the writer of these lines. To-day how great is the change! The ministers and clergy of the day, if they do not admit the subject into their pulpits, are still, in many instances, considering in their studies and in their hearts whether the Identity is not after all from God; also whether they are not called on at once as an article of belief to embrace opinions founded, as they seem to be, upon the Word of God. The consequence is that with such men as the Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, the Rev. Denis Hanan, D.D., and the Rev. R. A. Hunter on our side, it is seen at last that the Anglo-Israelites cannot be put down by either abuse or ridicule. Also, that in regard to arguments, our opponents are deficient in these, but that the disputes seem always, no matter whence they arise, to make for those who are at one with the BANNER OF ISRAEL.

The year opens with many signs that the British Empire is still enlarging. Its growth is, as usual, portentous. In South Africa it has never ceased to expand. The Transvaal will ere long be under the rule of a majority of British subjects, and then unheard-of prosperity will commence there. The Uganda question is all but settled. Till March next the country will remain, as at present, under the British East Africa Company. British power is firmly settled in Egypt, and all round the African coasts where France is not in power, British influence is growing. Even in Madagascar, where the French have been allowed a free hand, the cry is that the Hava Government are alienating huge slices of their land to the British, and that in two or three years the island will have entirely passed into the hands of the British or Americans, unless the French assert themselves speedily. In India and British Burmah British influence and British power are growing. Upper Burmah is settling down, and only on the frontiers of China do the predatory tribes remain to give trouble to the paramount power. The Viceroy's tour through South India proves how completely the British Raj is established in those regions, and how it blesses where it prevails. Contrasted with the increase of British population, which really is at the foundation of our national prosperity and greatness abroad, the papers of the day (the Edinburgh Evening Dispatch, of Nov. 19, to wit) tell us how France is suffering from the depopulation of her home habitations, thus:—

In the report drawn up by the Committee of the Chamber to which the Government Bill for "the Protection of the Public Health" was referred, some very striking, not to say alarming, statistics are adduced to demonstrate the urgent necessity of such a measure. The report states that while the number of births is decreasing the rate of mortality is actually increasing, and the number of marriages is also decreasing. Thus in 1890, the last year for which the returns are available, there were 42,520 fewer births than in 1889, and 99,885 fewer than in 1883, while the number of marriages declined during the same period from 289,555 to 269,332, the decrease in both cases being a constant one. Upon the other hand the number of deaths had been steadily increasing, from 828,828 in 1881 to 876,505 in 1890.

Digitized by Google

Many other existing signs warn us that we are approaching a great crisis in the history of the nations. The return of the Master is drawing near. His people must be actively at work getting His kingdom ready and preparing the peoples of the earth to welcome Him. Our missionary operations accordingly were never so extensive or so important as they are to-day. Whether we look to India, Ceylon, or Africa we see earnest, energetic work in progress, and God's Word is sent out as the pioneer of the missionary "to all nations, families, and kindreds of the earth," as the special function of the British and Foreign Bible Society. Those nations, on the other hand, to whom the Gospel has been offered but who have rejected both it and the Word of God as well, are preparing for themselves their own destruction, even as by fire and earthquake, by means of those warlike measures which will ere long place in array against each other nearly 20 millions of men armed for battle. Nations are now standing in arms, two against three and three against two, the combatants being Germany aided by Austria and Italy, opposed by united France and Russia. The burning questions which thus divide Europe to-day are connected with the Eastern question, the possession of the holy places, and with Constantinople on the one hand, and desire to wipe out the military disgrace inflicted on France by Germany in 1870 on the other. Between these two gigantic powers there will be no quarter offered or expected. One or the other must perish out of Europe as the result of the coming war, and France aided by Russia will apparently surround the Teutonic nation with a ring of fire which must, one fears, bring it to the ground. How the Teutonic or Gothic theory will survive the approaching crash of arms we cannot imagine, but we suppose the Rev. Robert Douglas will be equal to the occasion, and find ample Scriptural confirmation of his views, when he finds his German Israelites engaged in the most awful war men have ever experienced since the world began, with a strong probability that in that conflict Germany as an empire will be brought low!

We commence the new year with a strong band of literary fellow helpers, to whom, in anticipation, we tender our hearty thanks for the aid they are rendering and will yet afford to our interesting journal in 1893. We have evidence that the subject of Our Identity is attracting wide attention and that the BANNER is regarded with favour in many directions. For this we are, under God, largely indebted to our staff of BANNER writers, who have so faithfully stood by us for many years. New friends are, as our readers see, constantly appearing in our pages, and that is a favourable sign.

We wish to all our BANNER friends a Happy New Year. We trust that each and all of them will help us to increase the circulation of this paper. We desire that the "good news" we promulgate may extend into ever-widening circles, and so enable more and yet more of the children of Israel to rejoice in the discovery of "Ephraim and the Tribes of Israel his fellows," praising God and the Lord the King of Israel for His faithfulness and truth towards His chosen ones, according to the prophecies!

THE MILLS OF GOD.—Why should it be accounted strange that for the full realization of these temporal blessings so many centuries must have elapsed? Is this not in perfect keeping with the sequence of fulfilment, which might naturally have been anticipated, to the promises made the fathers? Experience is ever busily demonstrating that aftersight is always better than merely human foresight.

WESTWARD HO!

BY THE REV. JAMES MCINTOSH

(Vicar of Sacriston, Durham).

IN the remarkable prophecies of Daniel we have clearly foreshadowed the chief and distinctive epochs of the world's history as it relates to the Israelitish nation. The four great empires of the world were directly brought into contact with Israel. The first took the Israelites captive under Nebuchadnezzar; the second restored them to comparative freedom under Cyrus; the third confirmed their privileges under Alexander the Great, and made their scriptures known by the Septuagint; the fourth reduced them to complete subjection, and paved the way for the preaching of the Gospel to all the world. To the last or fifth, as distinctly and wholly Israelitish, belongs the right and heritage to supplant and supersede these crumbling, and almost effete powers, and reign over all the earth.

On looking at the geographical positions of these kingdoms, their naval forces, and their several developments towards an island shape, we see a regular law at work, and from this law there is no variation. What we behold in the establishment of the Babylonian, Medo-Persian, Greco-Macedonian, and Roman Empires, we can trace in the establishment of the fifth, or British Israelitish world kingdom.

The dream of Nebuchadnezzar, as explained by the prophet Daniel, revealed to that mighty monarch what should arise after him. This prophecy has been literally fulfilled in the rise and fall of these great world-wide kingdoms, and we affirm that it will also be equally verified in the establishment of that greater, more righteous, more peaceful, and more enduring kingdom that has been set up, and which possesses the same marks of universality which the four preceding empires show.

Space will not allow a detailed account of these great monarchies, but we will as briefly as possible, propound the law, which governs their rise, development, and extension, and this law will clearly point out to us by analogy the coming universal empire.

The first universal empire as made known to Nebuchadnezzar was that of the Babylonian, which had overcome the Assyrian power, and extended its conquests in all directions till it subdued Syria, the kingdom of Judah, and Egypt. This kingdom was almost wholly INLAND. Nebuchadnezzar spent 13 years in overcoming Tyre, because of his want of ships. Thenceforth he is able to subdue Egypt. But on the death of this mighty monarch, dissensions began to break up this vast empire, and Media, along with other tributaries, revolted. Then the second kingdom came into existence under Cyrus as head of the Medes and Persians. This kingdom extended its conquests over Asia Minor, Cyprus, Syria, Palestine, and Egypt, and endeavoured to make itself arbiter of Greece. We see that its conquests were still more westward, acquiring a greater extent of sea coast, and the empire of the seas was its, until defeated at Salamis and Platœa by the Greeks. From this time it became a decaying power. Persia was much more surrounded by sea, approached nearer the shape of an island, and possessed a much greater extent of sea-coast than the Babylonian. The third empire, under Alexander the Great, called the Greco-Macedonian, now subdued and crushed the Medo-Persian. It became possessed of Asia Minor, Syria, Palestine, Cyprus, and Egypt. The seat of its kingdom being more westward, it was thus more westward in its extension, possessed a longer line of sea-board, held the supremacy of the seas, and approached still nearer in its seat of power, the form of an island, Greece being more surrounded with water than Persia.

Digitized by Google

On the sub-division of this mighty empire, and its continuance for a period, another kingdom was gradually making its influence felt throughout the world. The Roman power was rising by successive strides. It is not, however, till she gains maritime supremacy over the Carthaginians, and Greeks, that she is able to subdue the world. Then she becomes possessed of Asia Minor, Syria, Palestine, Cyprus, and Egypt. She extends her sway to the British Isle, the limits of geographical discovery. Her empire is still more Westward, possessing a longer line of sea-coast, her seat still more approaching an island shape, situated in Italy, a peninsula, and she rules both sea and land.

As Babylon extended her sway partially to Persia, and Persia extended her arms to Greece, so Greece planted her colonies in Italy and Sicily, and styled it Grecia Major, so also Rome extended her conquests to Britain, the limits of the West, and thus pointed out the island, to which each of the successive seats of power approximated in shape, and marked out this island home as the seat of the most magnificent and extensive empire that ever existed, and which should become the universal kingdom.

At various periods universal empire has been attempted. The Turks essayed to establish it, but were beaten back again and again. They never could attain maritime supremacy, and hence failed in the first requirement to obtain universal sway. Then the Spanish, Dutch, and French endeavoured to usurp this position, but none was ever able to claim unrivalled power by sea, and hence they failed. France almost snatched the sceptre from Britain's hand, but under the redoubtable Nelson, she was foiled in her ambitious design, and her empire was soon brought within the narrow limits of her own boundaries. These kingdoms did not possess the marks of the coming kingdom. Though France invaded Syria and Egypt, yet she was driven from her vantage ground by British valour. She was not the country marked out by the law at work. An island kingdom, a company of islands must be the seat of the last great empire. "The Lord reigneth; let the earth rejoice; let the multitude of the isles be glad thereof" (Psa. xcvii. 1).

Already we possess all the marks which distinguished the former universal kingdoms. They all subdued Egypt. Britain has done the same, and as God called Israel His son out of Egypt, and also the Lord Jesus His well-beloved Son, so will He again call Ephraim His first-born out of Egypt to take possession of the wasted heritages of Israel.

Then each of them possessed Asia Minor and the Bosphorus excepting the Babylonian, so by Anglo-Turkish Convention we have rights and privileges of interference which make us responsible for the safe keeping of Asia Minor against all aggression. Each of these empires obtained Cyprus except Babylon. So we have obtained possession without bloodshed, and without force of arms. How strange that these empires should follow each other so closely in their possessions. Britain has also obtained India, possessed by Persia and Greece.

We then already have all the marks of universal supremacy. First we hold the empire of the seas. Since the time of the Crusades, we have claimed this position. It has never been wrested from us, and yet we see that all the previous universal kingdoms have been compelled to obtain the dominion of the seas ere they could attain the sceptre of world-wide power. Secondly, our empire stretches much more Westward than that of Rome. We claim a large portion of the New World as our heritage, and our empire is about seven times larger than Rome's in her palmiest days. We now possess universality. The sun never sets on the Queen's dominions, a forecast of still more extended power. Thirdly, the seat of empire is altogether an island.

Then do we not bear the other mark pointed out in the prophecy? The stone cut out of the mountain without hands, growing and becoming itself a great mountain, and filling the earth. So Britain was taken out of the grasp of Pagan and Imperial Rome without hands. No hostile movement was made in Britain against the rule of Rome's Imperial power, yet of her own accord she left Britain to rule her own destinies, and gather strength and empire till she has become the mightiest empire of the world. Britain by her attachment to the Word of God also assisted to shatter Papal pretension and stay the progress of Roman heresy and error. What then is left to be done for Israel in these isles? Possessing the Gates of her enemies, excepting the sublime Porte, the Grand Gate, which she eagerly watches, intending to take possession of it when God commands, and from this strong city of Constantinople blowing the blast of jubilee that captive Judah may return to her own land, and then Jerusalem shall become the metropolis of the universe.

We thus see Britain in possession of an island home, undoubted maritime supremacy, the coasts of the earth, situated in the midst of the ocean, stretching her right hand on the New World, and her left on the Old. She speaks to all mankind the message of peace and glad tidings, and seeks by her beneficent sway to extend the kingdom of Christ. Thus does our own land lay claim to the last mark of universal dominion which has been promised to Israel, and which the law governing the four preceding world kingdoms points out as Britain, the land of the brave and free.

NOTE.—Westward is expressed in Hebrew by the term "sea-ward."

NARROW LITERALISMS.

By J. G. TAYLOR.

No feature of the Identity seems to provoke such a liberal expenditure of combined anger and contempt, as the proposal to give a literal colouring to sundry prophecies which at present are exclusively spiritualized. The resistance to this design is so venomous that one might imagine we were defrauding Christians of their spiritual sustenance, or shutting out vast sections of humanity from all hope of heaven. With a curl of the lip, and a manual gesture of impatience, the "narrow literalisms" of the wretchedly-constructed Anglo-Israelite are cast from the pulpit into an invisible refuse basket below. Of course the valuable moments are never wasted in an attempt to demonstrate the cramping effects of these despicable literalisms. It is assumed that the majority of people are easily hoodwinked by a catching phrase and results appear to justify the assumption. But rules have their exceptions, and for the sake of the exceptions it is desirable that spiritualizers condescend now and then to explain how they arrive at their conclusions. We do not see why the literal rendering of a text should make it any narrower than it was. It ought to be broader. When a wing is added to a palace, the general impression is that the palace has been enlarged. But there is something worse than narrowness, and that is shallowness. A river may be comparatively narrow yet float the mighty ironclad, holding thunder and destruction behind its plates; or may bear on its waters the busy merchantman whose every nook is stored with the necessaries of life. On the other hand, a river may be miles in width, but if it is shallow it is merely fit for children to sail their toys upon. Similarly, a literal definition may be relatively restricted, but profound, vital, and prolific; while spiritual definitions may be exceeding broad but superficial, fictitious, and deceitful.

Digitized by Google

Instead of saying they "may be," it is nearer the truth to say that they are. For an illustration let us glance at Isaiah lx. 3, which declares "The Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising." The heading to the chapter informs us that this signifies "the glory of the Church in the abundant access of the Gentiles." It is a passage for which the spiritualists are extremely jealous, and are perfectly incensed when it is touched by the profane finger of literalism. But, reading on, we observe that the contents of the ocean are transferred to this alleged church; that it would be covered with a multitude of camels, with the dromedaries of Midian, the flocks of Kedar, and the rams of Nebaioth. We also find that its sons are "brought" from far, and what is equally inexplicable, they are conveyed in ships of Tarshish. Previous to the admission of Gentiles, the Church had apparently been forsaken by both God and man; God smiting it and man ceasing to go through it. But after the admission of the Gentiles, violence should no more be heard in the Church's land; it would inherit the place for ever, and receive gold for brass, brass for wood, and silver for iron. These are surely astonishing words if they refer to the Church. When was God wrath with His Church? When was it so utterly deserted that men ceased to go through it; or, rather, do men go through it at all, do they not enter it and remain therein? When Gentiles turn to the Saviour do they take a sea voyage? Are gold and silver the proper wealth of a Church? If verse 5 indicates the conversion of Gentiles it must also indicate the conversion of fishes, and verse 6 must foreshadow the conversion of camels. No living writer in his senses would select similies of this kind with which to describe the triumphs of the Gospel, and we submit that Isaiah was not only in his senses but under Divine direction. The whole chapter is incompatible with the spiritual conception. It is a picture of national restoration, power, and prosperity; consequently to hold up verse 3 as an inspired utterance concerning the Church is to wrest the Scriptures in a flagrant fashion, and whatever theories or lessons have been extracted from it by that treatment are no better than dreams.

It is not our intention to prove the lawfulness of literal interpretations. The time for that has gone. The point has been fought out, and, instead of attacking our position, the spiritualizers will in future have to defend their own unwarranted system. They may abuse us as they please, but seeing that Christ and the apostles quoted prophecy in a natural way the sanction of modern ecclesiastics is not essential. It is no doubt strange that they should be blind to His example and deaf to our reasoning, but thereby hangs a tale—a tale which is repeated in each successive century. Those who have devoted their professional career to the spinning of ethnological schemes based upon our Japhetic origin will not hurriedly endorse a canon which favours our Semitic origin. And those who have published a couple of volumes dealing with the Bible as if it were composed of myth, figure, and enigma, will be the last, not the first, to admit the cogency of our contention. To discuss with them is useless; to quarrel with them is foolish. We must do as Abraham did in the matter of Lot, and when their Sodom is being reduced to ashes they will, as is usual, escape with alacrity; forgetting in the confusion to bring their books with them, or protesting that the contents had been entirely misapprehended. But apart from "lawfulness," the imputation of narrowness to Identity views has a prodigious effect on people who wish above all things to be thought broad-minded, and in these days of jelly principles, that class includes the bulk of the species. They associate "narrowness" with ignorance and intolerance, and the very suspicion that the Identity is tainted with it is enough to repel them. Hence it becomes needful to remark that when a believer in Revelation examines a text the question for him to decide is not which is the broadest exposition but which is the truest. It is not his business whether the right interpretation is wide or the reverse of wide. We are prepared to state that if the alternative is put before us, and we have to choose between a narrow explanation and a false one, we prefer the narrow. Are our critics prepared to state that they prefer the false one? To be consistent they should re-model history as well as deny prophecy, because prophecy in the past has not developed on the benevolent lines they lay down. It was foretold of Israel that they would slaughter the idolatrous tribes of Canaan. This would have been more latitudinarian if it had meant that the Church should exterminate heathenism, but events showed that it meant what it said.

Jeremiah notified that the Rechabite family would have a perpetual existence. This would have been more comprehensive had it implied that the families of all abstainers from strong drink in all lands should be prevented from lapsing; but events have shown that the prediction affected Rechab and Rechab alone. Christ pronounced against Jerusalem that its enemies would dig a trench about it and level it with the ground. This would have been more in accord with the whims of sentimentalists if it had typified that the Gospel would dismantle the citadels of unbelief throughout the earth; but we are aware that it had no such import.

From these instances we glean that the political or physical boundaries of a prophecy are never overstepped by its fulfilment, be the boundaries ever so contracted. Prophecy has no special reverence for long measure or cubic capacity. It unrolls its folds with punctilious fidelity to the letter of the Word, and if the promises bestowed on Israel are too circumscribed for the spacious hearts of our opponents the fault does not rest with us.

The fundamental mistake of the spiritualists lies in supposing that where a particular fulfilment is more limited in its scope than some other fulfilment, God's exalted nature requires Him to adopt the second method and ignore the first. In this they are simply repeating the error of the atheist, who contrasts our tiny planet with the infinite universe around, and laughs at the idea of a Deity concentrating His thoughts on this dot of a globe or its inhabitants. But the Christian answers that God is not influenced by bigness. His wonderful attributes shine as brightly in the daisy and the butterfly as in the oak or the lion. The smallest object in creation is invested with His protecting care. We may learn this if we like to look. And the most trivial sentence He has recorded, whether it relates to the soil of Samaria or the Throne of Heaven, will not be neglected. We may learn this also if we like. Numbers of the Messianic prophecies were far less substantial than those on which the Identity is built, but they were scrupulously adhered to. The predictions respecting Ishmael, Edom, and Assyria sink into obscurity beside the world-embracing decrees attached to Israel, yet they have been vindicated with almost startling exactness. Therefore it betokens considerable presumption to teach that the merit of a prophecy in God's sight depends on its size—on the length or breadth of its sphere of action; and it would betoken considerable gullibility on our part were we to accept that flimsy dogma even at the dictation of the wisest master in theology that a college can produce.

Digitized by Google

It would indeed be extraordinary if God was unmindful of jots and tittles seeing that He insists on men remembering them and strictly regarding them. Adam and Eve were forbidden to meddle with the fruit of a specific tree, but they took an apple. What is an apple? Just a narrow literalism. But no mathematician, from that day to this, has computed what it cost the human race. Moses was commanded to speak to the rock at Meribah, whereas he struck it with a rod. What was the difference? Just a narrow literalism. But it debarred Moses from enjoying the land on which his eyes had been fixed for fifty years. The sprinkling of blood on lintels and doorposts was a trifle in itself, but it carried life and death with it. The feeblest intellect may discern that although there must be a literal fulfilment of Scripture before a spiritual or reflected interpretation is possible, deeper still there is a spiritual principle at the root of the literal incidents. It was not the bare eating of the apple or striking of the rock which brought down judgment, but the disloyal temperament that prompted those acts. And if God has failed to perform His minutest promise—the most microscopically minute promise—it would argue the existence of fickleness in His character. If the Lord has made a single engagement with Israel which must be set aside unredeemed, the loss sustained by Israel would be the very least of the evil. She might be deprived of a Gate or a Colony, but what would God's reputation be deprived of? Adam's trespass was verily calamitous, but which is the worst to contemplate: *dis*obedience in Adam or unreliability in God? If the Church succeeds in proving—what it is evidently anxious to prove—that a pledge given by God has an element of uncertainty in it, religion will dissolve with chemical rapidity. "But," retort our opponents, "we value the integrity of Jehovah as highly as any; and fully appreciate the dishonour which would accompany the slightest breach of faith." Doubtless they do. The fact that they have spiritualized half the Bible denotes that they do. Could they have discovered an historical realization of the Abrahamic and other Old Testament blessings they would not have discarded it. They would have sprung at it as they sprang at Volney's Ruins and Buckingham's Travels, which depict the condition of countries under the ban of prophecy. But being unable to perceive historical accomplishments they invented allegorical accomplishments; hollow and illogical as already shown. We do not dispute that this was often done from the best of motives. It was an attempt to cope with a difficult situation. But we are not disposed to admit that the determination to preserve these palpable fictions proceeds from the best of motives. The national response to Israel's national destiny is no longer absent or hard to recognize. It rises up on every hand, and is deliberately suppressed; it clamours to be heard in God's Name, and is refused a hearing. What may have been virtuous in the Middle Ages is vicious to-day. What was excusable then is criminal now. God stands in no want of chicanery; and we are convinced that it is as distasteful to Him when practised by His friends as when it is enlisted by His bitterest foes.

THE BAROMETER AS AN IDENTIFICATION.

By H. R. Shaw.

When it is sought to demonstrate the identity of something found with something previously lost the theorem will be greatly assisted if it be known that the debateable object is endued with any mark of the nature of a stamp or brand denoting ownership. Thus in the very early ages of mankind the first murderer Cain received a brand from the hand of the Almighty by which his identity might be demonstrated should anyone finding him seek to slay him in opposition to the divine will and intention.

It is also worthy of note that in the two parables of our Lord in which the subject relates to things lost and found, the objects in each case selected as illustrations are objects that did manifestly possess such a determining mark as is here suggested. Thus there can be little doubt that the sheep which ventured to stray away from his ninety-nine fellows and become lost in the wilderness was, when the good shepherd came across him, easily recognisable by the brand of his owner appearing in some prominent part of his body. And we may take it as perfectly certain that the lost piece of money was stamped with the image and superscription of the king from whose royal mint the coin had been issued.

These two parables thus afford an obvious lesson to seekers for Israel's Lost Ten Tribes, which is that the people submitted for such an identification should be not only similar to the Israel of old, but should be found to be so stamped with the brand as it were of Israel's God, the Lord Jehovah, as to determine absolutely their identity to the exclusion of all other people not so stamped. Such, indeed, is the testimony of more than one of the prophets. Micah declares (chap. iv. 5) that in the latter days, when halting Judah is to be gathered as a remnant, with cast-out Ephraim as a strong nation, that "we will walk in the name of the Lord our God for ever." And Zechariah (chap. x. 12) says, but more particularly of Ephraim-Israel, "I will strengthen them in the Lord, and they shall walk up and down in His name, saith the Lord."

The name of the Lord then appears to be the brand which is to be found stamped upon re-covenanted and rediscovered Israel in the latter days to which the prophets looked forward. And this is precisely what all the writers in these pages have, whether directly or remotely ever aimed at exhibiting to their readers. The present writer having more particularly given attention to the numerical characteristics of the sacred name whose Hebrew letters count alternately five and six, and which in a New Year's paper for 1888 was shown to be most expressively marked upon the English-speaking peoples by means of their British standard linear and other measures hereditarily drawn, it would seem, from the perfect standards of weight and measure laid up four thousand years ago in the great altar and pillar to the Lord, in but not of the land of Egypt.

But more especially, in the following New Year's paper for 1889, the inquiry extended itself into the world of terrestrial science, where, in a chapter upon the scale of Fahrenheit's thermometer, it was shown how distinctly the Lord God rules the earth and its temperatures in harmony with the fives and sixes in His Israelitish name, and rules it, as it would furthermore seem, very much in harmony with Ephraim-Israel's yard-stick of 36 earth-derived inches; such natural phenomena as the temperatures of water's greatest density, man's blood, ancient Bible lands and modern British islands, heat changing into light, melting point of platinum, all arrange themselves into proportions of five and six when measured between the two ends of the scale, at both of which water, the universal fluid, loses its identity in ice and steam respectively.

Digitized by Google

In continuation of this line of thought, it has recently occurred to us that the barometer, with its English scale, is another instance in high science of how the God of Israel has stamped His quinto-sextuple name upon the British people who use the inch, to the exclusion of all people who do not use that unit measure. The barometer or instrument for measuring the weight of the atmosphere, according to Professor Huxley, whose excellent little scientific manual, "Physiography" (13th edition), is the authority for much that herewith follows, is the result of an experiment first made in 1643 by an Italian philosopher named Torricelli. Taking a glass tube rather more than 30 inches in length filled with mercury, and closed at one end, and then, inverting the same in a basin of mercury, he found the column to fall slightly and stand at about 30 inches in the tube, the space above the mercury being, of course, a vacuum, and the column of mercury being in consequence supported, as is now well known, by the pressure outside the tube of the air whose weight is just sufficient to counterbalance that of the imprisoned mercury—i.e., 15lbs. to the square inch in area.

If, instead of a dense liquid like mercury, the experimentalist took a lighter one, such as water, he would naturally expect that the column required to balance the weight of the external atmosphere would be proportionally longer. As a matter of fact, it is found that when water is used, the suspended column is something like 33 feet in length; in other words, as water is about 13½ times lighter than mercury, bulk for bulk, the column of water will be about 13½ times longer than the mercurial column. These are somewhat approximate figures, as we shall presently observe; but the principle of the barometer and the common suction pump is thus shown to be identical, because in working a common pump, air is sucked out of the tube communicating with the well below, and the pressure of the atmosphere then forces the water up the pipe in order to supply the place of the air which has been removed. But when the pipe reaches a length of more than about 30 feet, the column of water which it contains balances the atmospheric pressure and the pump ceases to draw. And it was in seeking to find out the cause of such a phenomenon that Torricelli was led to make the experiment which resulted in the construction of the first barometer.

Various forms have been given to the barometer, but with the exception of the aneroid, an entirely distinct instrument, they all depend on the same principle—viz., that of causing a column of liquid to be balanced against the weight of the atmosphere. Water and glycerine have been used, and an instrument containing the former liquid may be seen in the museum of practical geology in Jermyn-street, and one containing the latter at South Kensington; but in these cases their great length renders them unwieldy by comparison with an instrument containing mercury, the densest of liquids, and therefore the one and only medium suitable for the purpose in view.

And hence arises what we venture to term another instance of the divine Providence in stamping Israel of the Ten Tribes with the seal or brand of His ownership in order to render her identity conclusive wherever and whenever discovered. He might have given any other name to Moses, and he might, we suppose, have used some other Hebrew letters in the spelling thereof, and he might have made water and air different from what they are, and He might have made mercury of greater or less density than it is, or have omitted to make it altogether; and He might have made the earth larger or smaller than it is, or sent it spinning more or less rapidly around a larger or smaller orbit than it does at present, and indeed He might have chosen any other people than Israel to bear His name, and He might have sent them away anywhere else than into these British islands to recover their lost moral fibre by an exile of thousands of years.

But He did not execute any of these alternatives, and so it comes about that the people who alone use the inch for a unit of linear measure, are they who get the mark of the Lord's quinto-sextuple name upon themselves when constructing a barometer scale where the mercurial equivalent of mean terrestrial atmospheric pressure is marked at 30 inches, or six times five inches.

What this 30 inches of mercury means to mankind is best told in the words of Professor Piazzi Smyth in "Our Inheritance," where in treating of the zone of latitude of the Great Pyramid, 30 deg. North, as being that parallel which by the geometry of a sphere has an equal amount of terrestrial surface between itself and the Equator on one side and itself and the Pole on the other, and is therefore pointing to something like mean terrestrial surface temperature, he goes on to say: "Equally, too, does the Pyramid point to 30 of its inches of mercurial pressure of the atmosphere as being the very clear and distinctly separating line between good and bad of the weather all the world over; above 30 inches of the barometer meaning dry weather, sunshine, and bracing Polar air; below 30 inches, rain, clouds, moisture, and electric equatorial gales, while the French metricalists can only say that the same grand bounding-line or pathway between the serene and the stormy of terrestrial meteorology is marked amongst them by the indistinct number of 761·99 millimetres." There is evidently no brand of Israelism upon the French meteorology.

It will be proper to here mention that this mean pressure of 30 inches is usually understood to refer to the sea level, which, however, is not the common level of man's observation: and it was a knowledge of this fact, coupled with an observation of the apparent divergence between fact and theory that occurs when the makers of dial instruments do mark the circle in such a manner that not 30 but 29·5 inches appears in the place where the ordinary human eye looks for a noon or zero, which led the writer to make application to the Government Meteorological Office for some explanation of this proceeding, when, from the courteous reply thereby elicited from the secretary, Mr. R. H. Scott, it appears that the actual height of the barometer in London on the mean of 100 years, according to Mr. H. S. Eaton, is 29·952 inches; and the reason that the scale of a wheel barometer is placed with 29·5 at top is that the barometer sinks much lower below 30 inches than it rises above it. For instance, a reading of 31 inches has hardly ever been noticed in these islands, but a fall of more than two inches below 30 has been recorded (27·4 was a reading at Ochtertyre in Scotland) and the instrument makers must make provision for that.

When the barometer is over 30 inches it usually remains so for some days; the curve is flattened, but when the barometer is below 28 inches it does not remain so for many hours, if for one; that is to say, 29 5 inches may be regarded as the simple mean of readings, while 30 inches is undoubtedly the true mean when duly weighted with the time element.

Digitized by Google

It may, perhaps, be a trifling coincidence, but it should be mentioned that this number 29·5, so ostentatiously displayed at the top of English barometer dials, is for some reason carefully recorded at the building of the Great Pyramid, from whence so many other British and Israelite ideas seem to have been derived, inasmuch as the eccentricity of the system of passages therein, or the distance of their centres eastward from centre of the Pyramid's northern flank, as between its east and west ends is found to be 294 inches, or practically ten times the simple mean of British barometer readings.

It has been already observed that any other fluid than mercury will answer for a barometer, but in practice none other is at all suitable in consequence of its superior density. It is, however, interesting to note the comparative measurements of a column of mercury as the densest known fluid in nature and a column of water as the universal fluid of nature, since in the result it turns out that whereas the mercury column stamps the name of the God of Israel upon the British people through the medium of their inches, the water column, which is the same thing as the tube of a well-constructed common water-pump, does, through the medium of the same inches, connect the people with the entire cosmos of which Israel was destined to be the heir, as thus:—

Mercury is commonly reported to be about 13½ times heavier than water, but it appears from the work of Professor Huxley already mentioned that these proportions require some little adjustment, for it is therein stated that atmospheric air is about 800 times lighter than an equal bulk of water, and as much as 11,000 times lighter than an equal volume of quicksilver. According to these figures, then, the proportion between water and mercury is not 13½, but 13·75, and, using this value, we find that when the column of mercury stands at the dividing line of 30 inches, then the water column will stand at 412·5 inches, or a good pump should draw water to a height of 412·5 inches, or 34·375 feet, because 30 multiplied by 13·75 gives 412·5.

Now, this 412·5 inches is a remarkable dimension, being for one thing precisely the length of the beautifully-finished King's Chamber in the Great Pyramid, as measured by Piazzi Smyth in British inches, which length is thus shown to be in absolute agreement with the mean length of the water column quite irrespective of inches, metres, cubits, or any other standard measure.

And leaving the Great Pyramid out of the problem altogether these 412·5 inches are more remarkable still, for when corrected for some amount of depreciation equal to one part in one thousand, and thus reduced to what Professor Smyth calls pyramid inches, and the late Sir John Herschell called geometrical inches, the quantity becomes eminently suggestive of the celebrated circle-squaring cosmic number of 412·132, in which is enigmatically expressed the true length of the solar year in mean solar days. For let each day's journey of the earth through the course of its complete year be represented by the space of one inch; then the circle thus formed would have a circumference of 365·242 inches, and the area enclosed by such a circle would be equal to that enclosed by a square whose four sides sum up to 412·132 inches, or practically the number of inches to which water will rise in the vacuum tube when the mercury stands at 30 inches.

24, Ludgate-hill, E.C., Dec. 10, 1892.

1893.

By the Rev. A. A. Bridgman, B.A.

When Robert Fleming, in 1701, published, as the result of his studies of the prophecies of Daniel, that the years 1848 and 1866 would be critical years in the history of the Papacy, and that it would be destroyed then, one can easily imagine the smart things that would be said by the scoffing wits of the day, or the sneers with which its supporters would felicitate him on assigning so far distant a date as the time, at which his prediction was to take effect, and meet with its fulfilment, as by doing so, he very wisely sheltered himself from the ridicule which would assuredly assail his prediction in 1848, provided always that men at that time would know anything whatever of it or him, as it had but a very infinitesimal probability of outliving the tenth part of that period and being remembered. Nevertheless, the prediction, or rather the interpretation of prophecy, made by him in 1701, was fulfilled in 1848, when the Papacy received its first great blow, and the Pope thought it wise to escape from Rome disguised as a footman, and it received a still greater blow in 1866, when, through the action of the French Emperor, the unification of Italy took place, and the Pope lost all his territory except the small province around the city of Rome, and at length received its death-blow when, on the breaking out of the Franco-German war, Garibaldi took Rome, destroyed the Papal government, and so completed the kingdom of Italy by establishing the throne in Rome, where the Pope thenceforth was to live as a subject, if he continued to make the capital his residence.

So, again, when Faber, in his "Canon of Sacred Chronology," published early in this century, as the result of his study of the books of Daniel and Revelation, that the French Empire would be restored, because it was predicted to be the instrument for the destruction of the Papacy, his writing was regarded as the rhapsody of a moon-struck fool. The French Empire had been overthrown at Waterloo; the Emperor was just dead; Europe was wearied with the long wars that had but lately come to an end; the French Monarchy, as was supposed, was firmly established, and the Holy Alliance was strictly bound together to prevent any attempt at the restoring of the empire they had at length destroyed, but the very ruins of which they still regarded with unfeigned dread.

The French Monarchy fell with a crash; and that of the barricader rose on its ruins, and was so firmly established, as men thought, as to be able to resist any effort to injure it. Yet it fell in a day, to the utter bewilderment of all Europe, as those who are old enough well remember, while those who are not may learn from the "Greville Memoirs" the temporary stupefaction caused by the reception of the news. But it did not fall without warning, though none heeded the warning; for, only a few months before its fall Faber had again foretold the immediate restoration of the Empire, because the predicted time for the destruction of the Papacy was come, and that consequently the Empire must be restored, since it was to be the instrument by which the Papacy was to be destroyed. Faber lived to see the restoration of the Empire, though he did not live to see the destruction of the Papacy; nevertheless, in his little book called "The Restoration of the French Empire," he reasoned out again from the apocalypse the conclusion, that the Papacy would be destroyed, and that when the Empire had accomplished its alloted purpose, it, too, would be destroyed by the sword; all of which we have seen come to pass within recent years.

Digitized by Google

Yet how many were there, or are there, who know anything of either Fleming's or Faber's predictions from the prophecies, or of their fulfilment within the lifetime of every middle-aged man living. Still, these predictions were made, and they were fulfilled, and so give us demonstration, by means of things within our own knowledge, that the Scriptures are the Word of God, and therefore true; because He alone could have told mankind, more than two thousand years ago, what would happen toward the close of the nineteenth century of the Christian era; and they further prove to us that the prophecies still remaining to be fulfilled will be fulfilled in their appointed time, and that as it has already been given to men to interpret some of those prophecies so accurately as to be able to fix to a year, when certain great events affecting mankind should take place, so is it possible that it may be likewise given to other men to interpret other prophecies; and therefore, when we find earnest men striving to interpret them, it is not unreasonable to watch for the fulfilment at the time they assign it will take place. They may be in error, and seeing how many erroneous interpretations have been given, how few correct ones, the probability concerning any one interpretation is that it is erroneous; but still, as it may possibly be correct, it is not unreasonable—nay, it is more, it is wise—to watch, though with suspended judgment, for the result. If the prediction fail, then we shall know that it had been based on erroneous interpretation; but if it be fulfilled, then we know that we have still further demonstration that the Scriptures are God's Word, and that we cannot be too earnest in searching them, so as to learn what the will of the Lord is.

Now, it is well known to most of the readers of the BANNER that there is strong expectation on the part of many students of prophecy, that we are close upon the fulfilment of those relating to the controversy of Zion—in other words, to the Eastern Question, as it is called—and that we may consequently look soon for a further curtailment of the power of the Sultan (an opinion which is very prevalent also among politicians of all classes), but it is not so generally known that for years past 1893 has been predicted to be marked out in prophecy as one of the critical years in the controversy. The politicians make no pretension to fixing any year as an epoch in the subject. They are content to wait, and to recognize it when it comes; but the interpreters of God's Word can see in the political events that usher in the fulfilment, only so many proofs of the truth of prophecy; and so of ever-increasing assurance that all will in time be accomplished, and that, consequently, Israel will be restored to the land of its inheritance. Of course, it is quite possible that 1893 may not be the critical year it is expected to be. In that case we shall have seen another erroneous interpretation; another will have to be added to hundreds already made; but if the interpreters be not in error; if the signs of the times should prove to be only the precursors of the coming storm; if the evident anxiety of the German Government to prepare for the conflict, which the constantly accumulating masses of Russian troops on its eastern frontier, and the enormous array of France on its western, be justified by coming events, which are all intended to facilitate operations in the directions of Constantinople and of Amenia; then we shall have proof given us in this case, as in those of Fleming and of Faber, it has been given to men to interpret correctly the prophecies, and to point out, years before the fulfilment of their predictions, the great events which mark out the development of the great purpose of the Almighty in the restoration of Israel as the protector and companion of the Jews to the land given to them by covenant in the person of their common ancestor, Abraham.

It will, therefore, be well with us to watch closely the coming year, 1893, not only as we might any and every year, but with special regard to the fact, that it has been singled out by the interpreters as one specially marked in God's Word in connection with the promises made to Israel. 1893 is not the only year so singled out. Together with 1897 it is declared to be specially marked out in the prophecies as critical in our history. Neither interpretation may be correct. Both years may have been erroneously deduced as critical ones; but if either of them—if 1893—should prove to be what it has been said it will be, then "when the Lord bringeth back the captivity of His people, Jacob shall rejoice, and Israel shall be glad," for then it will be seen that the day of our restoration is fast drawing on.

"SEEK YE ME AND YE SHALL LIVE."

(AMOS v. 4.)

BY E. REEP.

IT is often very depressing to hear, on almost every side, the cry of the Preacher—"All is vanity." To many who succumb to the scowl of adversity, to resentment against pain, or, as it more frequently happens, to a spirit of acrimonious discontent, it does not seem to occur that the remedy for the evils of which they so bitterly complain is in their own safe keeping. Of this we have many proofs. We all know that the failure of God's chosen people to become happy and prosperous in the land given to their fathers was not due to any non-performance of God's promises to them, but to their own oblivion to the necessity of asking for the fulfilment of them. God does not compel His creatures to accept His blessings, though He is ready to bestow them when enquired of concerning them (Ezek. xxxvi. 37). If this were not so the word "come" would not hold the conspicuous place it does in our Bibles. It is, moreover, a word that implies that there is no coming of God to us until we first go to Him. Hence it is written: "And the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to His temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in." The remedy then we hold in our hands for the cure of the many ills that afflict us is to comply with God's invitation to seek Him. "Seek ye Me and ye shall live." If as a nation we obeyed this command what a glorious consciousness of Divine blessing would be ours. As it is we fail to appreciate the happiness of our environment, and thus follow up a trail of suffering that need not be. God promised to the House of Joseph the fruits brought forth by the sun, the precious things of the earth and the fulness thereof, and God has kept His promise. What better evidence of this fact can we have than in the wondrous provision made for all our needs in the different zones of our vast British Empire? Our farmers bewail their deplorable harvests, employers of labour the conditions with which they have to contend, the employed the hardships that fall to their lot; but is all this seeming misery an unmitigated evil? Is it not rather the bestirring weapon that will sooner or later arouse our people to resort to God, even as one man, for counsel and succour? When this shall happen then may we not venture to hope for the nation's speedy recognition of its Identity with Israel, and as a result the mercies that encompass it on all sides? For let this recognition be made and then will come the knowledge that God has not said in vain, 'Seek ye Me and ye shall live." The problem that troubled Malthus will cease to be a problem; instead of an evil it will be seen to be a blessing. The cry for bread will be no longer raised, for it will be realised that to Israel has been given the high places of the earth, and that in these she will be mistress of the most important granaries of the world.

Digitized by Google

If there be already signs of Ephraim-Israel's golden age as foretold in Gen. xlviii., there are not wanting equally significant signs of Manasseh's coming glory in that great future. In a book of travel, which has the title of "Seas and Lands," Sir Edwin Arnold tells us that it is difficult to limit the excursions of the imagination in thinking what Anglo-America may and must become in the way of material development and mass population. To show that he is not writing nonsense he gives a table by which we may see what has been the growth of the latter from the Revolution until to-day (p. 138). From it we learn that the population of 1790 became in 1860 eight-fold, or 31,443,321, which is equivalent to doubling every 23⅓ years and that an American statistician calculates in 1900 for 77,100,000, and in 1950 for 103,314,000. "Those," says Sir Edwin Arnold, "who believe in the prospects here set forth will rule their undertakings and investments in the expectation that property in real estate must advance in the next half-century; that commerce and transportation and production must increase enormously. . . In 1990 the urban population will be 240,000,000, and of these New York will probably contain over 30,000,000. What work for architects, contractors, builders, carpenters, masons, bricklayers, plasterers, brickmakers, etc., etc. Fourteen million new homes to be constructed besides markets, stores, warehouses, post-offices, etc."

Wondrous as now appears this picture of the United States, it is just possible that in the far future its colours may appear cold and grey in comparison with the expansion of Ephraim-Israel's billions and trillions (Deut. xxxiii. 17) in the, as yet, sparsely occupied Dominion of Canada and the yet but half-known continents of Australia and Africa. The regret that such a possibility brings—and it does bring a regret—is that the contemplation of this joyous, prosperous future for both Ephraim and Manasseh is one, to-day, so limited that only a few believers in British-Israelism can ponder upon and thank God for the hopeful, happy prospect. Nevertheless it is open to the whole united race if only they would care to see. They do not, however, for a little while wish to penetrate beyond the very present, and so they practically do not seek God that they may live in full blessedness, for He has said, "Thus saith the Lord, the Holy One of Israel, and his Maker, Ask Me of things to come concerning My sons (the chosen people), and concerning the work of My hands command ye Me" (Isa. xlv. 11).

With this plain and simple command in our Bibles why should Israel and Judah delay one hour to seek to do the bidding of God and His Son who died that Israel might live, might have life, that they might know that the ten thousands of Ephraim and the thousands of Manasseh are veritably the children of the Most High? Even in ignorance and darkness these sons of Israel have inspired admiration, though perhaps they have not always deserved it. Macaulay, in a spirit of patriotism, thus speaks of England: "It is her peculiar glory, not that she has ruled so widely, not that she has conquered so splendidly, but that she has ruled only to bless, and conquered only to spare. Her mightiest empire is that of her morals, her language, and her laws; her proudest victories are those she has achieved over ferocity and ignorance; her most durable trophies are those she has erected in the hearts of civilized and liberated nations."*

Hillside, Selhurst-road, South Norwood, S.E., Dec. 9th, 1892.

THE TERM "JEW" IS NEVER IN SCRIPTURE APPLIED TO THE HOUSE OF ISRAEL OF THE TEN TRIBES.

By Douglas A. Onslow, J.P.

"For the Lord God will slay thee, and call His servants by another name."—Isaiah lxv. 15.

At the half-yearly meeting of the Prophecy Investigation Society, held at Exeter Hall in November last, a very interesting paper was read by the Rev. E. P. Cachemaille, brother of our well-known friend the Rev. A. J. J. Cachemaille, upon the subject of Gog's future invasion of the Holy Land, in connection with the events referred to in Zech. xii.—xiv.

I need scarcely say that, though in many ways the handling of this subject was interesting, from the fact that the reverend gentleman dealt with it from a literal and not a spiritual point of view, still the treatment of it betrayed much confusion of thought, because throughout the paper the Jews alone were taken as representing the Twelve Tribes of Israel at the present time.

For the purpose of this article it is altogether unnecessary for me to enter fully into, or even more than refer to Mr. Cachemaille's paper; because, I could not within the limits allowed me, at all fairly deal with it, and my only object in referring to it at all is that, after the paper had been read and the discussion upon it nearly concluded, the Rev. S. C. Adam, of Wolverhampton, in a few brief, but well-chosen words, told the meeting that the prophecies could not possibly be rightly understood, or their teaching elucidated without the House of Israel was recognised as being distinct from the House of Judah. He reminded his listeners that for years past, he, and others who recognised this distinction, had done their utmost to enforce this view so clearly set forth in the Scriptures, upon the attention of the Society. He told them plainly that until this Scripture truth was admitted, and, in expounding the Word, acted upon, prophecy could never be intelligently studied, or properly taught.

Mr. Adam's forcible and pertinent remarks gave me an opportunity of still further driving this point home. I said that I could not understand how any intelligent person reading the Bible could possibly apply the prophecies relating to the House of Israel and the House of Judah to the same people; or how in view of their great divergence of character, they could reasonably be applied to the same people, the Jews of modern times. In the course of my remarks, I told the meeting that I emphatically stated that "The term 'Jew' is never applied in Scripture to the House of Israel of the Ten Tribes," and I challenged disproof of this assertion.

Further, I said that, the name of Jew was only used in connection with the people of the House of Judah, who returned from the 70 years' captivity in Babylon. That it was only from the date of the Babylonian captivity that this name had been applied even to the House of Judah, and had remained applicable solely to them ever since.

* Quoted in "Egypt To-day." By W. Fraser Rae.

Digitized by Google

I did not throw out my challenge in vain, for it was at once taken up by one of the members, who solemnly reminded me that if I read the book of Esther, I should see that King Ahasuerus — who was at that time king of Persia—reigned "from India even unto Ethiopia, over an hundred and seven and twenty provinces." Moreover, that throughout the whole book the people of God were called Jews, and that this name had reference to all the Israelites whether of the House of Judah, or the House of Israel. This he argued must have been the case, because the decree of the king, written at the instigation of Haman, was to bring about the destruction of "all the Jews that were throughout the whole kingdom of Ahasuerus, even the people of Mordecai" (Esther iii. 6). Also that the decree of the king, written at his command by Mordecai, was sent "to the lieutenants, and the deputies and rulers of the provinces, which are from India unto Ethiopia, an hundred, twenty and seven provinces, unto every province according to the writing thereof, and unto every people after their language, and to the Jews according to their writing, and according to their language" (viii. 9).

The line of argument adopted was to the following effect :—That, as the Medo-Persian kingdom had taken the place of the Babylonian, the Jews, who were the captives of the Babylonian monarchs, were also the captives of the Medo-Persian kings. But the Babylonian kings had superseded, or taken the place of the Assyrian monarchs, and held sway over the people of the House of Israel, who had been deported from Samaria into the provinces of the Assyrian kingdom, which lay to the south and west of the Caspian Sea. These provinces passed under the dominion of the Babylonian empire, and then under the Medo-Persian; consequently the term "Jews," in Ahasuerus's decrees must have included the people of the House of Israel as well as those of the House of Judah. This line of reasoning, which to my understanding, involved a non sequitur, seemed to be accepted as sufficient answer to my challenge, and a somewhat supercilious wave of the hand was supposed to settle me, then and there, for ever! Having spoken, it was not permitted me to make any reply; I had therefore to content myself with making a mental note that I would treat this matter in a BANNER article; where I think such fallacious reasoning should be exposed, to enable our supporters to meet our opponents, when such mistaken notions are put forward to try and upset our statements.

I propose to show briefly wherein the fallacy of this reasoning lies.

If we look at the date set in the margin of our Bibles against the first chapter of the book of Esther, we find it given, "cir. 521" B.C., or 15 years after the decree of Cyrus, king of Persia, under which the people of the captivity of Judah had been permitted to return to Jerusalem to re-build the Temple; for it was in B.C. 536 that this decree was made, and the 70 years' captivity of the House of Judah in Babylon ceased. Esther and her cousin Mordecai, with very many other Jews, had remained in the land of their captivity instead of returning to the land of Judah. Whatever might be the date at which this book of Esther was written, it is perfectly clear that it was after the return of the people of Judah to the Holy Land, and it was not until after they returned from the Babylonian captivity that the people of Judah were called Jews by the sacred historians in the Bible.

It is further to be noted that nowhere in the book of Esther is any other captivity referred to, but the captivity of the House of Judah, and this only once in chap. ii. 6. But in chap. iii. 6, we read, "Wherefore Haman sought to destroy all the Jews that were throughout the whole kingdom of Ahasuerus, even the people of Mordecai." Now, Mordecai was a Benjamite, and therefore of one of the three tribes that formed the kingdom of the House of Judah.

Seeing, therefore, that the captivity of Judah alone is mentioned in this book of Esther, and that all the Jews are referred to as "the people of Mordecai," and that no mention whatever is made of the people of the captivity of the other House, I think we are fairly justified in saying that the term Jew, throughout the whole of the book of Esther, must be limited to the people of the House of Judah. Now, to go back for a moment to the argument that "throughout the whole book, the people of God were called Jews, and that this name had reference to all the Israelites whether of the House of Judah or the House of Israel."

In the first place, I am willing to admit that at the time when Ahasuerus was on the Persian throne, the people of God were called Jews. That is to say, the recognised people of God were called Jews.

Our learned clerical opponents seem altogether to fail to see the effect of the prophecy contained in Hosea i. 9. This prophecy foretold the divorce of the House of Israel. It foretold their non-recognition by God as His people, their outcasting from the land, and the withdrawal of God's mercy from them; though to the other House of Judah His mercy would be extended, and they should remain His people.

When did this bill of divorce take effect, and when did the House of Israel cease to be a kingdom by being completely outcasted from their land?

In Isaiah vii. 8, we read, "Within three-score and five years shall Ephraim be broken, that it be not a people." The margin gives us the date of this prophecy as "cir. 742," consequently before the year 677 B.C. we should find that the captivity of Ephraim-Israel must have been completed. 2 Kings xvii. 24, where we find the marginal date to be "cir. 678," proves the fulfilment of the prophecy. That this was the "bill of divorce" we find from Jer. iii. 8, for the marginal reference there given takes us to 2 Kings xvii.

The House of Israel, therefore, had ceased to be God's people 157 years before Ahasuerus sat on the Persian throne. But the decree of Cyrus had only been issued 15 years before Ahasuerus reigned, therefore, for 142 years the people of the House of Israel had ceased to be God's people.

The decree of Cyrus, given in Ezra i. 2—4, is addressed to the people of God, because verse 3 commences, "Who is there among you of all His people? His God be with him." It, therefore, was limited in its application to the people of the House of Judah, as the people of the other House, had, 140 years before that date, ceased to be God's people. Again, "The Lord stirred up the spirit of Cyrus" that "the Word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah might be fulfilled." In order to discover what "the Word of the Lord" spoken by Jeremiah was, we have only to read the 29th chapter of that prophet, and we find again that the whole of it is strictly limited to the House of Judah. The House of Israel, therefore, could not have returned with the House of Judah from Babylon, for if they had, it would not have been a fulfilment of the Word of the Lord "by the mouth of Jeremiah."

In further confirmation of what I have already said, I will explain the applicability of the text which heads this article.

In Isaiah lxv., we have a remarkable contrast drawn between a people mentioned in the first verse, and another called "a rebellious people" in the second and subsequent verses. The blind annotators of the Bible, who furnished the headlines to the chapters, have thus treated this chapter:—"1. The calling of the Gentiles. 2. The Jews, for their incredulity, idolatry, and hypocrisy, are rejected." It is remarkable how near these good people sometimes get to the truth, without actually striking it fair. Verse 1 is certainly "The calling of the Gentiles," but it is the calling of the Gentilized House of Israel, for the text is, "I said, Behold Me, behold Me, unto a nation that was not called by My name." This could only be the divorced, or Gentilized House of Israel, for there was no other nation, that had had God's Name taken from it. But verses 9 and 15 prove this point indisputably, because these called ones are in the first called "Mine elect," and in the second "My chosen." These are Israel's titles alone, and belong to no Gentile, non-Hebrew people on the face of the whole earth.

Digitized by Google

We find, therefore, that the divorced and so-Gentilized House of Israel is called at the coming of Christ, and He is found, or accepted, of them; whereas, the Jews rejected Him, and as a consequence were rejected by Him.

But verse 15 says, "And ye (Jews) shall leave your name for a curse unto My chosen (the Gentilized House of Israel): for the Lord God shall slay thee (the Jews), and call His servants (the House of Israel) by another name."

The name Jew was for centuries—even if it is not now—a curse to our people, and for that matter to all peoples, but it has never been changed. The people of Judah have been called Jews since their return from Babylon, 2428 years ago. But the word of the Lord by the mouth of Isaiah, as quoted at the head of this article, says that He will "call His servants (the House of Israel) by another name." Therefore, as God is true, the House of Israel cannot now be Jews, or the prediction and promise of Isaiah lxv. 15 would be falsified, to which I say, God forbid!

It seems to me, therefore, that my contention that "the term 'Jew' is never in Scripture applied to the House of Israel of the Ten Tribes" has been fairly established; and beyond that, that since the Advent of Christ, they have been called by another name than Jew. We have no right, therefore, to say that the House of Israel are Jews, or to speak of them as such.

THE GOOD OF IT.

By V. Cox.

It is not improbable that in the majority of instances an enquiry as to the utility of the Anglo-Israel belief was the initial stage of our own acquaintance with what has now become to us a truth of paramount importance and a study of absorbing interest. If, therefore, the cui bono question be sometimes raised in our presence, we shall do well to be ready with a reply which shall not only disarm criticism, but also awaken interest by demonstrating that Our Identity is of present day significance, and that it vitally affects matters which, as Christian believers no less than as lovers of our country, ought to occupy a very foremost place in our consideration, dwarfing by comparison many of the things which claim so large a portion of the time and the regard of men, generally speaking, to-day.

In the first place, then, we may tell inquirers that our truth is a powerful weapon in the hands of those who desire to defend the inspiration of Holy Scripture. The present is an age of keen criticism and of sharp attack on the sacred Canon. Men of erudition and of genius are lending their energies, not to establish, but to undermine, the claims of the Bible to a divine origin. We need have no fears for the Bible; it has survived many a sharp onset and weathered many a storm: but if we had not the light of the Identity by which to interpret its prophetic utterances, we should fear for it very greatly, because we should then fail to discover any possible way in which its statements could be verified, and its divine origin placed beyond a doubt. If that marvellous volume described in minute detail a nation unique alike in character and destiny, the very pivot-nation of all ages, and if history furnished no counterpart, we should be constrained to say, "Since these prophecies have fallen short of fulfilment, where is the proof that the men who indited them derived their inspiration from that omniscient Teacher before whom the story of all time has ever lain open and revealed?" But while we see the living original of Israel's portrait working out her destiny in every particular to-day, doubt becomes impossible, the arrows of the foes of truth glance harmlessly aside, and we rejoice to feel our faith is founded on a rock, against which the very gates of hell are powerless to prevail.

But of what use can the Identity be to men who accept the Bible as a divine revelation, and to whom there never comes the temptation to despise its teaching, or to undervalue its authority? Well, we suppose that many, many even of the saintliest, have at times been assailed by a temptation, far more terrible—that which leads them to fear that they may be forsaken of God, rejected on account of unworthiness, and cast away in spite of all His glorious promises to those who through faith become heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ. Awful is the force that such a temptation must possess to a thoughtful student of prophecy who discredits Our Identity. To such an one it must appear as if scores of the declarations of Holy Writ were worthless and false: Israel in prophecy having no counterpart in a real living Israel, enjoying, in the nineteenth century, the inheritance secured to her by promise in the remote ages of the past.

To escape this fearful difficulty the spiritualizing of the prophetic writings has been adopted. And terrible is the confusion of ideas it has produced in those who have thus maltreated Scripture; yet it seems to us that it must occasionally strike them that God's supposed violation of His promises to the literal Israel is a very poor guarantee of His faithfulness to the so-called spiritual one. To Anglo-Israelites the fulfilment of the predictions of the Old Testament is the best voucher for the stability and truth of the asseverations of the New. Since God has kept His Word to His chosen nation, have we not an added and a potent argument for reposing unquestioning trust in Him who, having brought to pass what He declared in reference to Ephraim-Israel, will no less surely keep His covenant with every son of man who claims, through Jesus Christ, the blessings of His great salvation.

But it may be that there are in our midst many who, unhappily, concern themselves little either with the vindication of the divine character, or of the inspiration of the Bible. To such the arguments just adduced would carry no weight. But even among men whom such considerations fail to influence, there are not a few who, when patriotism is in question, can be thrilled to the inmost soul by the name of the land that gave them birth, and for whose sake they would be ready to hazard, perhaps to sacrifice, life itself. To all such we may say, "If you want a guarantee that Britain's greatness can never know decay; that our Empire is destined to perpetual advancement; and that she is certain of ultimate victory over every foe that may rise against her, it is in her Identity with Ten-tribed Israel that you will find it, and there only. Disprove that Identity, and no pessimist can paint her future in hues too sombre, or forecast her decline in language too mournful. Prove it, and you may for ever confute all that has been said or written about her zenith being past, and her decadence having set in. Israel's Empire is for ever. Unlike Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece, and Rome, the stone kingdom shall endure; not bare existence only, but growth, progress, potency, and, at last, universal dominion are assured to Britain as Israel of the House of Joseph.

Digitized by Google

We are not citing arguments to prove the Identity. That is done in the BANNER week by week, and done to demonstration. But the object of this paper is to show how "the good of it" can be made evident in ways so numerous that from one standpoint or another it becomes a question of practical importance to every member of the community, and that none can afford to ignore or neglect it. One more "good" of our belief is that it affords a safe guide in many political matters where we might, without its direction, feel uncertain how to act. The BANNER is no party organ; nor are we, as Anglo-Israelites, necessarily all of one name politically. But on many burning questions, such as that of Imperial Federation, of Home Rule, of our position in Egypt, of the cession or retention of Uganda, &c., our knowledge of Our Identity will largely affect the formation of our opinions, and mould our course of action.

As current history goes on recording itself, we shall doubtless prize increasingly the light we possess, which has already in the past enabled us, in numerous instances, to forecast the issues of events, even when probabilities, humanly speaking, pointed in an opposite direction. There is still much unfulfilled prophecy in the Bible respecting Israel and Judah. As time passes we may expect additional and ever more surprising proofs of Our Identity to be revealed. We are far from knowing all about it yet.

> "Our Lord has yet more light and truth
> To break forth from His Word."

But it is glorious to observe the development of His purposes, which, in very truth, "ripen fast, unfolding every hour;" and ever and anon our hearts thrill with delight as we realize our part in this magnificent inheritance, upon which we are as yet but entering, but which holds undreamed of possibilities for our nation and race in the future now opening out before them.

We call upon you, then, Christians, who love the Bible, and desire to prove it the inspired Word of God; men who need some logical basis for your faith, or who are longing to prove to all the world how faithful God has been; patriots who care more for your dear country's welfare than for any selfish interests or sordid aims; politicians who, at times, tremble for your country's future, and who want an assurance that the blunderings of statesmen shall never avail to rob her of her glorious destiny—ours is a truth to solace, to strengthen, and to stimulate one and all. Study it for yourselves, and, instead of asking, "Cui bono?" you will soon be actively proclaiming "the good of it" in every direction where opportunity serves; having realized with joy that in very truth "the Lord hath spoken good concerning Israel!"

Abingdon, Nov. 20th, 1892.

THE NEW COVENANT OR TESTAMENT.

By ALFRED J. J. CACHEMAILLE, M.A.,
Rector of Cheriton, Alresford, Hants.

ALL Anglo-Israelites are well aware of the fact that our Book of Common Prayer is so apt and close an expression of the worship of Israel that not only are we forced to believe in an overruling Mind when the book was framed, but the fact adds an intense beauty to a form of worship endeared to us by every sacred tie of antiquity and of association. We are uttering words in our form of worship which can be explained only on the grounds of our being actually God's ancient people Israel.

Not the least striking illustration of this truth is that which meets us in our central service of the Holy Communion, the one great service instituted and commanded by our Lord. Every Sunday in most parishes, and every day in many parishes, we recite the great truth that this is the sealing of the New Testament or covenant which God promised that He would make with His people.

In the prayer of consecration we say as follows: "Likewise after supper He took the Cup; and when He had given thanks, He gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of this, for this is My Blood of the New Testament, which is shed for you and for many for the remission of sins: Do this as oft as ye shall drink it in remembrance of Me." As soon as we touch this thought the whole of the service harmonizes with it, and we are at once led to the promise of it in Jer. xxxi. 31 and to its fulfilment as expressed in Heb. viii. and the surrounding chapters.

We are reminded of a former covenant, made with a certain people at a definite date, and we are told that this first covenant was removed, for it had fulfilled its office, and had itself been fulfilled in the person of Christ; and we are told that the days were to come in which a new covenant would be entered into by God of a deeper and far grander character. Not only does it follow as a matter of course that a new covenant must be made with the same people as the old covenant was made with, or else there is no force in the term new; but God expressly says that the new covenant would be made "with the House of Israel," so that all question and argument are at an end. The New Testament or covenant which Christ established and sealed with His Blood, and which we recite in our communion office, is made with the House of Israel, and unless we are to satisfy ourselves with a purely artificial application, for which there is neither ground nor necessity, we must awake to the thrilling truth that for centuries we have been declaring, for the most part unconsciously, and every year with growing conviction that we are Israel, for we have held up to the world the seal of our title-deeds and the declaration of our Lord and Redeemer Christ.

It must seem, to any candid mind, a very strange thing that we should constantly be declaring a fact at the most solemn time of our worship, and then, with the next breath, repudiating its most plain application, especially as we cannot discover any other people, to whom it can apply, nor indeed any other people except the great Anglo-Saxon nation who actually apply it; for, although people will say that we are not the only Christian nation in the world, nor the only Church who celebrate the sacred mysteries of that holy service, it is very remarkable that the greatest communion outside our own which professes Christianity shuts itself out from actual participation in this covenant. It is a striking fact that our Lord uttered these great words in reference not to His Body when He broke the bread, but only with respect to the cup which was the sealing of the covenant in His Blood. And it is equally striking that the Roman Church refuses the cup to the laity, so that they are left outside the bond, and fail to ratify the Testament which is the evidence and the glory of Israel. A similar remark will apply to the Eastern Church, where the cup is practically denied to the people, and the eucharistic bread, dipped in the consecrated wine, is given to the people.

Digitized by Google

It adds a singular interest and depth to a service already priceless beyond words to realise that each time we communicate at the Holy Table of our Lord we again declare ourselves to be that Israel around whom the most marvellous and inspiring history gathers, and to whom the most noble future is assured. One cannot but be sorry that so many refuse to weigh this truth dispassionately, and with all the promises of God open before them, still prefer to remain in the lean and barren wilderness as their forefathers did. One cannot but pray that the time may soon come for the opening of the eyes of the blind and the manifestation of Israel in the promised brightness which shall swallow up the last vestige of uncertainty.

From that first Holy Supper, when the Passover feast of former covenant passed into the greater feast of the new covenant, down to this present day, the great memorial of that covenant has been in the hand and the witness of Israel, and is to-day repeated in every part of the world where the Church of England and that of America gathers the millions of Israel for public worship and for sacramental joy.

GENESIS XLIX. 16, 17.

By the Rev. Henry Morton, B.A.,
Rector of Great Stainton, Durham.

The peculiar adaptability of the blessing of Dan, as spoken by Jacob and Moses, to the known character of the tribe, is very remarkable. Jacob under the image of a serpent suggests that they would make use of wiles and stratagems against their enemies and thereby gain their ends; and Moses (Deut. xxxiii. 22) intimates that they would form colonies distinct from the rest of Israel, "leaping" like lions upon the secure inhabitants of a place. The situation of the place from whence they should "leap" (i.e., make excursions) is also intimated—viz., the north of the land. That they had a navy we know from Judges v. 17, and probably in the time of anarchy succeeding the death of Joshua they practically broke away from the rest of Israel, making incursions into the neighbouring countries to the west. That they colonized part of Greece we know. They also, perhaps, in company with the Phœnicians, traded to the isles of the West, and founded colonies there. They penetrated even to Ireland fully 1,200 years B.C., and under the name of Tuatha Danaans made a new home for themselves there, thereby vindicating the right "of his people" (i.e., his tribe) "as one of the Tribes of Israel," to the place appointed for them (2 Sam. vii. 10). I use the word vindicate advisedly. Gen. xlix. 16 says, "Dan shall 'judge' his people, as one of the Tribes of Israel." Now I am inclined to think that "avenge," or "vindicate the right of," is the sense intended. The verb דּוּן (dun) besides the signification of judging and contending, certainly signifies to avenge, or assert the right of the injured—i.e., to vindicate. This is evidently the sense intended (in Gen. xxx. 6) by Rachel, when she assigns a reason for giving Bilhah's child the name of Dan. "God," saith she, "hath avenged me, and hath heard my voice." Then if Dan had his name from dun, and דּוּן is used by Jacob in allusion to the signification of Dan, it follows that the verb דּוּן here must have the same signification. In the construction of this passage there is an unmistakable intention on the part of Jacob to accentuate this word and draw especial attention to it by the repetition, and in Hebrew poetry rythmic repetition of similar combinations is very common. The bringing matters to the rule of right—i.e., to administer justice as a magistrate, or governor—is expressed by the verb Shaphat, and there is a considerable difference between this word and dun or dan, the former being much more general, e.g., Jer. x. 24, "Correct me, but with judgment," that is, as a just as well as a considerate judge, the latter occurring very seldom (about twenty times) in the Scriptures, and the rather implying a settlement of right between two persons as to what is due to one or both—see Deut. xvii. 8 and Jer. xxx. 13—which seem to make the matter plain. If Jeremiah had used this word (in x. 24) he would have prayed God to correct him according to his deserts. So when Jacob said, "Dan shall avenge his people," he simply intimated that Yehova, ever mindful of His people, would use Dan in the preparing of the place of security and rest which He even then had in His mind to do for them, but which He afterwards promised definitely to His servant David (2 Sam. vii. 10), Dan acting as the pioneer of the Tribes until the full time should come when "He would bring them out from the peoples with a mighty hand, and bring them into the wilderness," &c. (Ezek. xx. 34) under the bond of the (New) Covenant.

Again, Moses says (Deut. xxxiii. 22), "Dan is a lion's whelp," and in Gen. xlix. 9, Jacob says, "Judah is a lion's whelp." The lion was the standard of the Tribe of Judah, and afterwards of the Royal House of David, and Dan could only become a lion's whelp by having a kingdom set up amongst them, having for a ruler a lineal descendant of David. So here again Dan is the avenger, or vindicator—the vanguard—to be the nucleus of the future gathering of the rest of the Tribes of Israel in the isles of the West, the vindicator of the House of David. There is yet another sense in which Dan was the vindicator, being the first of the Tribes after Benjamin to receive and accept the blessing in Christ promised to Abraham, not only receiving the blessing themselves with readiness of mind, probably from the hand of the Apostle Paul himself, but becoming a blessing to their brethren and the world, for from them in their island home sounded out the Gospel tidings how that "God so loved the world that He spared not His Only-begotten Son," &c., thus again vindicating the right of the Tribes of Israel to inherit the blessing of the New Covenant, and to be His witnesses to the end of the earth. We can well then imagine that Jacob in foretelling to Dan what would befal his tribe in the latter days (the days of the Messiah) saw like Abraham the day of Christ, and in longing hope and earnest desire (like Simeon waiting for the consolation of Israel) should exclaim, "I have waited for Thy salvation, O Yehova."

We have in type articles by the Rev. S. C. Adam, M.A., on "The Great Image (Dan. ii.); or, The Time and the End of Gentile Supremacy." Also an article by W. L. Blore on "Go Forward." These we shall publish in our next week's number.

Digitized by Google

THE IDENTITY IN SWEDEN.

By Dr. C. Piazzi Smyth
(Late Astronomer-Royal for Scotland).

In the sixteenth year of the Banner continuing to testify for Anglo-Israel, it is time to enquire, from independent sources, with what effect? Wherefore it may be allowed to introduce here a little correspondence from abroad, which neatly exhibits, and just when and where it was least expected, how the "leaven" is working, perchance in some distant countries, to which we have hardly yet paid all the attention they deserve. Thus, at all events did I find myself addressed from Stockholm on Sept. 7th, 1892, by an entire stranger, but in remarkably good English, as well as faultless caligraphy.

Letter 1.

"Dear Sir,—On page 97, in a little pamphlet by Edward Hine, called "Flashes of Light," there is a letter from you, stating the reasons why the Prussians do not belong to the House of Israel. Until I read this I always rejoiced in the glorious light thrown upon the Bible by Anglo-Israelitic researches, and exulted in the assured hope that we Swedes were, equally with the Germans, of the House of Israel according to the flesh. But on reading there why the Prussians could not claim that distinction; and believing, from previous teachers, that we were in exactly the same national category - I came down heavily from the lofty position whence I had begun to view past, present, and future; my tears came into my eyes, and now I have only to cling, as a mere Gentile, to the mercy equally offered to all repentant Gentiles through the Lord Jesus Christ. Yet if my Lord be exalted, I shall greatly rejoice."

"With holy reverence I have also tried to research in the awful revelations of the Pillar of the Lord in Egypt, which you have expounded to the world; though our literature on that wonderful consummation of architecture, is very deficient. Yet true prophecy, combined with history, will always succeed in asserting itself when the time is ripe; and truly a great and most glorious epoch seems now coming for the House of Isaac. But I will not, though only a Gentile, envy the Lord's chosen people.

"Please to excuse my boldness in writing to you, but my heart has been so sad. "M."

Certain expressions in the above letter being of rather doubtful bearing my first endeavour, before answering it, was to learn something of the writer. In a few days came the following reply; or

Letter 2.

"To you, dear sir, it may seem that I can hardly mean in reality all that my words imply—but there are few in this land with whom I can converse in English, and discuss the English authors who are our leaders on this topic. Many, indeed, of my countrymen have heard vague rumours that the British nation believe themselves to be the Ten Lost Tribes of Israel. But our clergy do so mix the subject, and confound their hearers about Jews, saying that is all the same, Jews or Israelites. But my reading, in such books as I could get, went steadily on year after year, developing, if not all, yet much glorious light on both Bible history and Bible prophecy, until at last I was requested to give a public lecture on the subject. This I also did in the lecture hall of the Royal Academy of Sciences last February. There was a fine audience, and being asked to deliver the same lecture again, I did so in one of our Free Churches.

"At that time, as I have indicated above, I was still rejoicing to think that we Swedes had also, with the Prussians, an inheritance with the lineal House of Israel. But when, all of a sudden, I learned from your writings, quoted by Edward Hine, that the Prussians were not 'heirs,' and had believed already that we must go with them wherever they went, even into outer darkness, and be Gentiles and nothing more. Oh, how desolate I felt! Nothing could give me any comfort then, except reading again and again those passages in the New Testament which display the mercy with which Christ receives all who now look to Him. But though they may be thus free pardoned and accepted disciples, they are not 'heirs'; and I know that the time of the Gentiles is appointed to be one day summed up. For the promises to God's chosen people must be fulfilled.

"Can you forgive me now for writing straight to you? Please do so. "M."

After the receipt of this letter, I had no longer any hesitation in writing to its author, thus much of the general result of British research in this quarter—viz., that Sweden had no necessary prehistoric connection with, or dependence on, Prussia, or any other part of either the German land or the German people in a sacred point of view. For when the prophet Ahijah rent away symbolically the Ten Tribes from Solomon, and gave them to Jeroboam to form the kingdom of Israel, did he not take one of them back, and give it to Judah to be a light-bearer to the remnant of the House of David through the remainder of its royalty, through its captivity in Babylon, its subsequent restoration to Palestine, and until the Roman armies should begin to encompass Jerusalem?

But then that one Tribe—viz., Benjamin—was ordered to flee and save themselves. So flee they did, both Westward and Northward, taking a route quite different from that of the other nine Tribes, full 600 years earlier—a route, indeed, which brought them up from Finland, rounding the North Cape, and then enabled them, in subsequent ages, to stream down both coast lines of that grand Scandinavian Peninsula, Southwards, or through what we now call the Swedish and Norwegian countries. Not mixing in the slightest degree with the Lapps and Finns of those lands, but preserving fully the purity of the blood of the lordly Tribe of Benjamin; until, besides establishing there a bulky population of their own, they could also, from the Eastern side, send some of their chiefs as the Varangians to take the rule of the Gentile hordes of Russia; and from the Western side—a still larger detachment of the nation—first to France, and then from there, under William the Conqueror, "ravining" like the Benjaminian wolf of Scripture and his own heraldry, to become the yet more aristocratic rulers of England. But subsequently, and almost instinctively, discovering their own long-separated brethren in the nine Tribes already there, they could begin amalgamating with, instead of only domineering over, them, through the rights of one battle, whose success was so signal because the finger of the Lord was in it.

So that the deeply heart-stricken Swede, in the midst of his grief and supposed outer and absolute Gentile darkness before God, found himself rather to represent racially the bulk of the present living souls of one of the finest Tribes of Israel; though not to be, or to constitute that most sacred branch or remnant of it which has been, from early time, selected and set apart by God, with other like remnants of Israel, for great things to be realized in and by England alone.

And what was the effect of this information upon him?

Digitized by Google

A whirlwind of joy for grace so far, in which he accepted everything, and expressed himself thus in

LETTER 3.

"Oh! venerable sir, I take the liberty to let the feelings of my heart go out in full length when addressing you. I agree, moreover, entirely with you in all you also say about the measures of the Great Pyramid as the sacred ones, versus those of the French metric system; and I now understand why I always had such a born antipathy to the latter.

"But cannot you or your friends tell us something more? Where are we now in the sacred chronology? and how long is this "time"? Will the Spirit of Truth, the Spirit of Jesus, yet abide with us? And what will be hereafter? Will our Lord appear soon? or what will take place on earth before that glorious Advent?

"But forgive all this hasty questioning, for my mind is almost bewildered; and the Lord, in His good time, will doubtless bring light and grace with Him to enable us to understand. While we have long been told that 'Man that is in honour and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish' (Psa. xlix. 20). "M."

"THE SHAME OF THE HEATHEN."

(EZEK. XXXIV. 29.)

BY REV. DENIS HANAN, D.D.

WHEN Ezekiel prophesied Israel and Judah were bearing "the shame of the heathen," the two peoples were then scattered (verses 5 and 6), one in Assyria and elsewhere, the other in Babylon. Those who ought to have been their shepherds cared only for themselves (ver. 7, &c.) The God-fearing spirit manifested by Tobit and his son was evidently an exception to the general rule; those who as civil governors ought to have prevented the oppression of the weak by the strong (ver. 17), or who as religious teachers and ministers ought to have endeavoured to bring the scattered exiles together (ver. 6), neglected their duties, and God said by His spokesman that He was therefore "against the shepherds." But He also said that He Himself would do what they had not done: that He Himself would gather and protect the people; that He would replace them in power and in peace upon the mountains of Israel (ver. 13), and that then they should bear the shame of the heathen no more. It is evident that the people of Israel and Judah are not now restored to the mountains of Israel, and therefore the shame of the heathen is on both Houses to-day. What is it?

"The Speaker's Commentary" says: "The shameful reproaches with which the heathen assail them,' but this seems to be an inadequate conception of the meaning of the word kelimmah, which does not mean reproach or reviling, but blushing, or the shame which causes blushing. The comment would have support if the word cherpah was used. We find the two words contrasted in chap. xxxvi 15, where the first is translated "shame," and the second "reproach." This distinction is also found in both the Septuagint and the Vulgate of the latter passage, where Kelimmah is rendered by atimia and confusionem, and cherpah by oneidismous and opprobrium. Here the words have been used advisedly, the kelimmah or shame of the overthrown nations (chap. xxxii. 24, 25) and of the land (chap. xxxvi. 6) means not reproaches, or opprobrium cast upon them, but their disgraced lot; and so also in the case of Israel it means not reproaches wherewith the heathen assailed them, but rather their deposition from the "My people," to the "not My people," position. Israel's shame is that which causes her covenant relationship to God to be ignored, or unknown, or despised.

In the text (chap. xxxiv. 29), strange to say, both the Septuagint and the Vulgate translate the word kelimmah by the words which are equivalent to our reproach, although they so carefully make the distinction pointed out in xxxvi. 15; this probably led the writer in the "Speaker's Commentary" into what must be regarded as a mistake.

We now must consider the word "heathen," in the Septuagint rendered ethnôn, and in the Vulgate gentium: the Hebrew word being goyim, meaning nations. As all the peoples who were outside the Abrahamic covenant: and in later times, outside the covenant of the law; were heathen, the words nations and heathen became synonymous. To obtain the true meaning of that which is called "the shame of the heathen," we must remember that "the shame of the nations" conveys more accurately to our minds that which is meant, for it is not only when in contact with, or when not distinguished from those whom we now call heathen, that Israel's and Judah's shame appears. Again the word goyim is applied to those who are Gentiles as distinct from the seed of Abraham. In these passages the words Gentiles and nations are interchangeable: thus the heathen, the nations, and the Gentiles, are synonymous expressions, and the words "the shame of the Gentiles" is an expressive rendering of that which Israel now bears, and from which she is to be delivered.

Israel and Judah, the seed of Abraham, God's nation, shall not bear the shame or blush of the Gentiles any more, when once they are replaced by the direct action of God, their Shepherd, on the mountains of Israel.

What then is this shame of the Gentiles, whether they be Heathen, or Mahometan, or Christian, which yet clings to Israel? In the highest sense it must be the scornful query, "Where is now their God?" He who had made an irrevocable covenant with Abraham, His friend, is thereby dishonoured. His wisdom and righteous dealing, His providential care and covenant faithfulness are not known, when His relationship to both Houses is forgotten, or when their relationship to Him is ignored. In this sense the blush of shame, because Israel is no more to Him—assumedly—than Gentiles, is, or ought to be caused by a jealousy for His honour. In the second place the Jew is oppressed. Even the wealthy members of the community are ruled over by the Gentile governments in the countries where they are scattered. In the struggle for life, the strong push the weak, and in their political life there is no effort publicly expressed to restore the exiles to Judea. There is a set of tide or drift towards Palestine, but its very character and condition is but a proof that although the Jew is distinguished from the Gentile, yet the reproach is upon him of being dominated by the Gentiles. The treatment which Judah receives to-day even from Christian nations, is a practical expression of the non-recognition that they are God's people; the shame of the Gentiles—i.e., of being inferior to the Gentiles—has not been removed from them. But there is another way in which the shame of the Gentiles may rest upon the Hebrew race—viz., they may be reckoned as Gentiles even if not in subjection. They may be unrecognised as the seed of Abraham, and unknown as the firstborn nation of God. This is the shame or blush caused by Gentilization. Such a possibility as this must have been dimly present to the mind of Jacob, when in prophetic power he said, "Ephraim shall become the fulness of the Gentiles" (Gen. xlviii. 19). Such a despising of their birthright must have been popular when Israel said, "We will be as the heathen" (Ezek. xx. 32). Such Gentilization was the result of the faithlessness of the shepherds, whom Ezekiel rebuked, and of those in the later or latter ages, who were and are equally regardless of the existence of the cause of blushing, and the shame which clings to that part of Israel which is ignorant of, or neglectful of, or which, let it be plainly said, blushes to acknowledge her origin.

Digitized by Google

But the shepherds, whether civil or ministerial, having in past ages and in the present age, failed to guard the flock, the power of God directly put forth, independently of their office, alone could direct Israel's wandering footsteps to an appointed place of safety and of re-gathering. There Israel has been free from oppression, and to that place Judah has to walk. Apparently the shame of Gentilization is not to be removed from the multitudinous House, or the shame of inferiority to the Gentiles is not to be removed from the House that is few in number, until they are replaced by God, their Shepherd upon the mountains of Israel. "For thus saith the Lord God, Behold I, even I, will both search My sheep and seek them out. . . . I will feed them in a good pasture, and upon the high mountains of Israel shall their fold be." "And I, the Lord, will be their God . . . and I will make with them a covenant of peace . . . and they shall be safe in their land . . . and I will raise up for them a Plant of renown, and they shall be no more consumed with hunger in the land, neither bear the shame of the heathen any more. Thus shall they know that I the LORD their God am with them, and that they, even the House of Israel are My people saith the Lord God." That is when the House of Israel are publicly known to be God's people, then the shame of Gentilization will have passed away and be for ever removed. The people will be "Ammi," and not "Lo-ammi." They themselves and all the nations recognising their re-covenanted position, will no longer despise their birthright, and the shame of the Gentiles will be exchanged for the glorious universal acknowledgement. "Happy art thou, O Israel: who is like unto thee, O people saved by the LORD, the shield of thy help, and who is the sword of thy excellency."

But at present the assumption of being Gentile, and of being unknown as the Israel of God, is a reproach upon the people, and upon Him who pledged Himself to be their Shepherd, and the more readily it is acquiesced in, the greater is the cause for the blush of shame. When Israel blushes with shame because some proclaim her national origin, the other nations may safely think themselves superior. While British-Israel, proud of her national position—given to her as promised by God—will yet see in it, in spite of all evidence, nothing of the covenant faithfulness of God, she yet bears "the shame of the Gentiles," which may the Shepherd of the nation soon remove.

The civil and religious polity of the Hebrews was inseparable, and the shame of the Gentiles which humbled the nation also humbled the Church. It will be a corroboration of the exposition just made if we find the British-Israel Church affected by the same reason for blushing—viz., the now recognition of her true position. And it is so. The Gentile wild graft boasts itself against the branches, and assumes that it is the root which bears all (see Rom. xi. 18), that the Church is essentially Gentile, and that the Hebrew element must be in subjection to the Gentile Church. It is true that the British Church has cast off the foreign usurpation; but yet she looks upon herself, and is regarded by Christendom as a national branch of the Gentile Church, while in truth she is the re-covenanted Church of Israel, the representative of the original branches upon the Abrahamic stem, with and among which the Gentiles partake of the root and fulness. To her, as an integral part of the nation, was transferred the Kingdom of God, when it was taken from Judah (Matt. xxi. 43). The re-betrothed Hebrew Church extended itself to, and embraced the Gentiles, and became the Church Catholic or universal, but the Gentile Church would overshadow the Hebrew. Thus the Church, as well as the nation of British-Israel, bears even to-day the shame of Gentilization; and she has had to blush for certain of her sons, who not discerning the truth, left her fold for that of the boastful wild graft. But the time is at hand, when He whom she serves, will roll away from her also the "shame of the Gentiles," and cause her to be seen in her true character, "arrayed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars."

THE PERPETUITY AND SUPREMACY OF ISRAEL.

By Rev. Thomas Lowe.

It is customary for Biblical readers and students to speak and write of "the Lost Tribes," that formed the Kingdom of Israel, as still "Lost" among the nations. Lost? Then what becomes of God's promise and oath (vide Gen. xvii. 5, 7, 19; Gen. xxii. 16, 18).

This promise has never been revoked. "The Scripture cannot be broken" (John x. 35). Babylon, "the Golden City"—the great city which counted its population by millions, and filled the world with a renown not yet forgotten, has disappeared under the dust of twenty centuries—an utter desolation for ever: "It shall never be inhabited, neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation" (Isa. xiii. 20).

That purpose of Jehovah is unalterable. It is equally certain in the case of the vitality and indestructibility of Israel. Amid "the ruins of empires," we hear the hooting of the owl, the scream of the vulture, and the hiss of the serpent, the roar of the lion, the cry of the jackal, and the "Backsheesh" appeal of the Arabs. The cylinders of the mighty Assyrian kings are buried in the desert sands. "I will make thy grave; for thou art vile" (Nah. i. 14). The gorgeous dominion of Xerxes, glittering with the jewels and gold of a hundred tributary states, are buried in the waves of the Hellespont, and scattered on the plains, where legions tramped in the thunder of battle. The Persian dart moulders in the dust of Marathon. Cleopatra in her barge, whose poop was beaten gold, whose oars were silver, whose purple sails were perfumed with various odours, gliding in the waters of the Cydnus to the music of silver flutes, as in imperial state she reclined in a pavilion of silk, seemed possessed of an enduring monarchy and dominion. But all that pomp and power has vanished like an unsubstantial vision. Egypt is now "the basest of kingdoms," and what remains of her glory and power are under the British Protectorate—of the Israel of God.

But amid the crash of thrones and the convulsion and fall of kingdoms, England is seen supreme, bursting into new and splendid fulness of intellectual life, moral influence, commercial prosperity, in martial prowess invincible, her literature rivalling that of ancient Greece, her statesmen the princes of their craft, and her court one of the most brilliant among the kingdoms and states of Europe, and the world.

Digitized by Google

Here in the subliment sense we see "the survival of the fittest" among the peoples of the world. Here we have memories imperishable, facts incontrovertible, eternal principles of truth, not fancies, fads—or as one of the foremost preachers of our age flippantly called our Israelitish origin in a conversation I had with him—"that Rot!" "And I will gather the remnant of My flock out of all the countries whither I have driven them, and will bring them again into their folds; and they shall be fruitful and increase. And I will set up shepherds over them which shall feed them: and they shall fear no more, nor be destroyed, neither shall they be lacking, saith the Lord" (vide Jer. xxiii. 3, 4).

Our views are facts more "enduring than the Pyramids."

The Meadow Side, Old Leake, via Boston, Lincolnshire.
Dec. 9th, 1892.

BRITISH PENTECOSTS AND IDENTITY.

By the Rev. Henry Roe
(Author of "Israel's World").

"This is that which hath been spoken by the prophet Joel (ver. 17); And it shall be in the last days, saith God, I will pour forth of My Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams (ver. 18): Yea, and on My servants and on My handmaidens in those days will I pour forth of My Spirit; and they shall prophesy" (Acts ii. 16, 18).

We could give details of Pentecostal scenes personally witnessed, from Land's End to the Clyde; from the eastern coasts of England to the mountains of Wales; in the beautiful Channel Isles; and under British preaching in Africa. But let this one chapter of the modern "Acts of the Preachers'" be read and devoutly studied side by side with the first two chapters of the Bible's "Acts of the Apostles," and tell me whether there is not an Identity. (chap. i. ver. 5). "For John indeed baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence." Here, at Radstock, we believed this; knowing that nearly everyone in our congregation had been baptized with water; but very many gave no sign of ever being baptized with the Holy Ghost. How was this? God's covenant had not changed. The need was not altered.

Ver. 8: "Ye shall receive power, when the Holy Ghost is come upon you . . . and ye shall be My witnesses . . . unto the uttermost part of the earth." We felt the need of this power. We could easily go through all the forms and ceremonies of religion, such as reading, singing, praying, teaching, baptizing, marrying, burying, and even preaching, without any power of the Holy Ghost. Do not many act so? Why not be only religious machines? Because that even machines that have no power are useless, and only fit for destruction. Yea, an engine, acting without the designed power of the engineer, will destroy lives. So do religious engines. We believed the promise, "Ye shall receive power." We longed to be included in "My witnesses." We now are such in publishing this article. May it witness "unto the uttermost part of the earth." We believe it will.

Chap. ii., ver. 1: "And when the day of Pentecost was now come, they were all together in one place." We fixed November 13, 1892, for such a day. We were not "all together in one place," or there would have been more "power," and "mighty sounds," and strange "signs," and "added unto them about three thousand souls." To prevent such a Pentecost, the devil has split up the Church into a thousand little sects, called "High," and "Low," and "Broad," and others mostly "Narrow." British-Israel Identity Witnesses are undoing this devil's work, and bringing "all together in one place," and preparing for a far more glorious Pentecost than the world ever saw.

Even as things now are; with so much division; so little light; and so little power; here at three Churches under my care—namely, Frome Hill, Charlton, and Westfield—during this November, the Lord brought forth ninety-five penitents, weeping over their sins, praying for mercy, believing in Jesus, receiving the joy of salvation, and openly giving themselves to the service of the Christ. Many of them are coal miners, and young men rescued from a life of sin. Oh, that I could give you the details! I may another day. But the promise of such Pentecosts is made to Israel. We British receive the fulfilment. Then who are the British? We know, and you may.

I am going to-night to another service of Pentecost.

Radstock, via Bath, Dec. 9th, 1892.

OUR MAP OF THE INDIAN EMPIRE.

The map which accompanies the opening number of the Banner for 1893 is small in scale, but it is produced by Messrs. W. & A. K. Johnston, of Edinburgh and London, and thus has a guarantee for accuracy and excellence hardly to be surpassed. The map shows at a glance the size of our Heathen Empire, and how it bulks as compared with the British Islands. The latter as exhibited in the right upper corner of the inlet map may be said to be equal in size to that portion of India with Ceylon which lies southward of the 15th degree of north latitude. The Peninsula is a huge wedge running southwards out of Asia into the great Indian Ocean, and in the hands of Great Britain it dominates that sea. It occupies a length of 30 degrees of latitude, or 1,800 miles, north and south, and at its broadest part about the same extent of territory. The Empire has quite lately been rounded off to the north-east by the annexation of Upper Burmah, which is hardly yet completely pacificated. The greatest part of the powerful military states of the Panjab, Oude, Scinde, Lower Burmah, and we may almost add Beluchistan, have been added, or made tributary to the Empire, within the lifetime of this generation. A small inlet chart of Malaysia, in the right lower corner of the map, shows how largely Israel is represented there, and how completely she rules the only ocean highway—the Straits of Malacca—which connects the Indian Ocean directly with the China seas, Borneo, and Japan.

Our map indicates almost all the Indian railways and main telegraph lines along them, but they are very faintly drawn and can with difficulty be discerned.

The area of the British possessi ns in India and Burmah consists of 1,477,375 square miles, while that of the mother country is only 121,000 square miles. The population of India in round numbers is 257,000,000, while that of our own islands is under 40,000,000.

The river systems of India are important because they serve to irrigate the arid land. The plain through which the Ganges flows is the most fertile in the Peninsula. On its banks the capital of the Empire is situated, and it passes through "the richest provinces of British India." In the south there are many large rivers flowing from the western ghats towards the east. The chief are the Godavery, the Kistna, the Pennar, and the Cauvery. In the north the Nurbudda and the Tapti flow from east to west, and fall into the Gulf of Cambay.

Digitized by Google

The wonderful heritage God has given our nation in India and Burmah is assigned to us, being Israel, not to make us wealthy and powerful only, but in order to enable us to bring its almost countless millions to Christ. From the earliest times the possession of the Peninsula has been the desire of all the stronger nations in the neighbourhood. The Persians, the Greeks under Alexander the Great, and the Mohammedan conquerors of India, strove in their turn to retain the country; but to us, for over a century, the charge of the gigantic land has been confided as the mistress of the seas. With that dominion in our possession, humanly speaking, India will always be ours. But if that source of power could be wrested from us, with the ownership of the Gates, then India would be occupied by the conquerors of Israel, an idea which involves an impossibility viewed from the standpoint of the prophecies.

The map of India we now present to our readers is full of suggestive thought in respect to our Israelite origin, and we believe will be highly valued by BANNER readers.

ANGLO-ISRAEL FREE DISTRIBUTION FUND.

"To make known to the sons of men His mighty acts, and the glorious majesty of His kingdom" (Psa. cxlv. 12).

"Now therefore perform the doing of it; that as there was a readiness to will, so there may be a performance also out of that which ye have" (2 Cor. viii. 11).

ONE HUNDRED AND NINTH MONTHLY REPORT.

THE following subscriptions and donations, received from Nov. 18th to Dec. 17th, are very gratefully acknowledged:—

By the Treasurer: Miss B., Bury-St.-Edmunds, 10s.; Mrs. B., Bournemouth, 5s.; J. P. B., Streatham, 10s.; Mrs. C., Chippenham, £1; W. W., Norwood (for BANNERS), £1 1s.; H. W., 1s.; C. M., Hampstead. 2s.; Philo-Israel, £1; Mrs. H., Banbury, 1s. 6d.; J. C. P., Worthing, 1s.

By Miss E. M. Rush: "Hawaiian Islands," £9 12s. 2d. (48 dollars 50 cents).

Total, £14 10s. 8d.

In response to John Shootingham's suggestive "Random Shaft," in No. 833, that every reader of the BANNER should send 1s. as a New Year's gift to the Fund, we have received the following:—

J. P. B. says: "I emphatically cannot refuse to give 10s. towards the spread of our great truth. Would it were ten times as much. Many thanks to John Shootingham for his seasonable pointed shaft."

Another writes: "I have much pleasure in sending 1s. as suggested. I noticed with surprise, when you appealed for 1s. subscriptions before, how few were sent in. A great contrast to the immense sums lately received (in single shillings) in connection with the Missing Word craze! From this, however, we Israelites may learn a lesson, if we will."

Another says: "This is a very good suggestion, and I trust it will be duly responded to."

GIFT.—Five dozen pamphlets, from J. Weldon, Esq., are very gratefully acknowledged.

OLD BANNERS.—In future, friends having old BANNERS to give away are particularly requested not to send them to the Hon. Secretary or Treasurer. The addresses of Sowers to whom such packets may be transmitted will be forwarded on application. The carriage should in all cases be fully paid, and the BANNERS sent should be clean and in good condition.

BANNER DISTRIBUTION. — From 219 to 228 BANNERS are now sent out weekly, to the places already enumerated in previous reports.

LITERATURE DISTRIBUTION.—Forty-five parcels have been forwarded to the following places since last report: Commercial-road, E., Edinburgh, Aldershot (2), Birkenhead, Carlisle, Dover, Vauxhall, Calne, Devonport, East Grinstead, Brighton, Birmingham, Chatham, Alvaston, East Twickenham, Northroe, N.B., Perranarworthal, Westgate-on-Sea; Paris; Malta (5); Nellore, Secunderabad, Bangalore (2), Poona; Rangoon; Ograbeis, Port Nolloth, and Vryburgh, South Africa; Nelson's Plains and Dubbo, New South Wales; Launceston, Tasmania; Taranaki and Gisborne, New Zealand; Broughton, Victoria; Kingston, Jamaica; Detroit, United States; Yarmouth, Nova Scotia; Port Arthur and Morden, Canada.

CORRESPONDENCE.—From Yarmouth, Nova Scotia: "I wish to thank you very much for parcel of literature. I have found the pamphlets very useful, and should be glad of more when you have any to spare. The work goes on apace here. We are diligently sowing, and, I am glad to say, rejoicing too. I pray God to bless you in your endeavours to spread the glorious truth."

Another energetic Sower writes: "Just a few lines to acknowledge receipt of parcel enclosing No. 1 Study of 'Our Race.' Thank you very much for promptness. It is at work already, and I know you will rejoice with me that the good work is progressing here slowly but surely. You will, I am sure, ask God to bless our humble efforts. I shall be glad when the Almanacks and the 'Handbooks' come. I feel this will be a busy season, and I cannot have too many BANNERS, please."

Another: "I am so glad to see from the BANNER that you have sent out so many parcels. I must thank you for the little packets of leaflets you have sent me from time to time. They are given away in many directions. It is good to know the knowledge is spreading, for people will then realize more and more the faithfulness and love of our God."

J. LAWRENCE, Hon. Treasurer.

Contributions to the Fund will be thankfully received and acknowledged by the Hon. Treasurer, Miss J. Lawrence, Rosslyn, Hampton-road, Upper Teddington, Middlesex; or by the Hon. Secretary, Miss E. M. Rush, 4, Westgate-road, Westgate-on-Sea. Cheques may be crossed, "London and Provincial Bank, Teddington Branch."

ISRAEL'S SCRIPTURE AND PRAYER UNION.

THE total number of members is now 1,434.

It is hoped that many friends who are not members, yet believers in the Identity, will, with the New Year, join us in studying the Scriptures, and in prayer for the spread of the knowledge concerning Israel.

Any donations towards the funds would be gladly received, as they are very low.

New members are requested, when writing for cards, to kindly state whether their names are to be entered as Mr., Mrs., or Miss, etc.

For the convenience of those members who wish to continue the daily reading, the following list of chapters for January is appended:—

1st ...	1 Sam.	xxi.	12th ...	2 Sam.	i.	23rd ...	2 Sam.	xii.
2nd ...	,,	xxii.	13th ...	,,	ii.	24th ...	,,	xiii.
3rd ...	,,	xxiii.	14th ...	,,	iii.	25th ...	,,	xiv.
4th ...	,,	xxiv.	15th ...	,,	iv.	26th ...	,,	xv.
5th ...	,,	xxv.	16th ...	,,	v.	27th ...	,,	xvi.
6th ...	,,	xxvi.	17th ...	,,	vi.	28th ...	,,	xvii.
7th ...	,,	xxvii.	18th ...	,,	vii.	29th ...	,,	xviii.
8th ...	,,	xxviii.	19th ...	,,	viii.	30th ...	,,	xix.
9th ...	,,	xxix.	20th ...	,,	ix.	31st ...	,,	xx.
10th ...	,,	xxx.	21st ...	,,	x.
11th ...	,,	xxxi.	22nd ...	,,	xi.

Digitized by Google

The card of membership will be sent on receipt of 3 stamps.

The first and second series of Monthly Comments on the whole Bible, by Philo-Israel, may now be obtained in volume form. Price, in paper cover, 1s. 2d. each; in cloth 2s. each, post free.

The "Prayers for Daily Use," being a prayer for each day of the week, by Philo-Israel, are 1d., or 9d. per doz., postage extra. Address—Miss A. Wilson, 119, Bravington-road, St. Peter's Park, W.

THE BRITISH-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

Monthly Report.

Very good meetings, despite the inclement weather which prevailed, have been held at Hastings and Leicester. At the former town, there was a drawing-room meeting held, at which a discussion was arranged; subject, "Where are the Lost Tribes of Israel?" The discussion was opened by a paper by the Rev. F. Aston, who showed that the promises made to the seed of Abraham were made over to Judah and to Joseph. To the former was given the sceptre and the promised Seed; to the latter the temporal greatness and dominion, and that the promises of national greatness made to Israel were literally and completely all fulfilled in our own race or nation. A Jewish clergyman took the opposite view, and tried to prove that all Israel were to be found in the people called "the Jews" of the present day. The rev. gentleman's remarks were chiefly those of ridicule; but this one statement of any value which he did make, was one well defined and easily met. Ridicule, all will admit, is no argument. Dr. H. Alder-Smith then proved that the rev. gentleman's views —viz., that Israel of the Ten Tribes were mixed up with the House of Judah of to-day, were absolutely contrary (1) to the Bible statements; (2) to the opinion of the leading divines of the present day, quoting the "Speaker's Commentary"; (3) to history—to wit, Josephus and Esdras; and (4) to the opinion of the Jews themselves; for Dr. Neubauer, Kimchi, and others emphatically declared that the House of Israel was not with the House of Judah. The Rev. Marcus Bergmann followed, speaking from a Jewish point of view, and showed that our opponent had not met our argument at all. Great interest was aroused, and a feeling of inquiry excited. The chair was taken by a clerical brother (who was neutral), who opened the meeting well, by stating the question very fairly —viz., that the subject had nothing to do with our salvation, but only as to the question, To whom belonged the temporal blessings promised to Israel, and in what nation were they fulfilled? He closed the meeting, however, with the lucid and intelligible statement that he considered these blessings were to be spiritually understood! a statement which, I expect, even our Jewish opponent could not endorse.

The evening public meeting was a grand one; for over an hour and a quarter was taken up with questions after the lecture was over, and the people would not leave, although the meeting had already lasted two hours and a half. To Miss James and Mr. and Mrs. Reep the success of these meetings is due. Our readers will no doubt be encouraged by this news.

The following public meetings have been arranged, but full details as to the places of meeting have not at present been received:—

Jan. 24—At West Cowes. Lecturer, Rev. F. Aston.
„ 25—At West Cowes. Lecturer, Rev. F. Aston.
„ 27—At Bournemouth. Lecturer, Rev. F. Aston.
Feb. 2—At Wellingborough. Lecturer, Rev. F. Aston.
Mar. 14—At Manchester. Lecturer, Rev. F. Aston.

There is no doubt that a change is taking place with respect to the reception of British-Israel truth. The clergy no longer hold aloof from our meetings, as they used to do, but show a more liberal spirit by coming to hear what is said on the subject. I have given 23 lectures myself this past year, and as one therefore capable of forming an opinion, I most distinctly affirm that our cause is making great progress, secretly to a great extent, but nevertheless surely. At no time have I ever come in contact with more clergy, either personally or by letter, than I have this last year. The "Handbook" has done wonders, and its merits, greatly appreciated, cannot be over-rated.

Thirty-six public lectures have been given this year; not quite so many as in former years, but they have been better attended. I should be glad to hear from any friends who are desirous of having one, and will do my best to help them to get one up. Looking back upon the past twelve months work, I can say with absolute knowledge that the outlook is far more cheery, and the prospects more encouraging.

Wishing you all "A Happy New Year," believe me,

Yours in the hope of Israel,

Fredk Aston, General Secretary.

86, St. Martin's-lane, London, W.C., Dec. 31, 1892.

NUT TO CRACK—No. 6.

Acts xxvi. 7—"our twelve tribes."

By (the Reverend) P. C.

We present this nut to those who content themselves with the gratuitous theory that the Ten Tribes of Israel are all merged in the two as the best way of accounting for their disappearance from the face of the earth. Let them explain why St. Paul contrasts himself with his persecutors and holds them up to the irony of arraigning him for proclaiming "the promise made of God unto their fathers; for which hope's sake (said he) I am accused of the Jews"—rather (the definite article being omitted), "I am accused by Jews." I, forsooth, a Benjamite accused by Jews for adhering to our common inheritance, to which "our Twelve Tribes" hope to attain! Let them note also St. Paul's appeal to "the chief Jews" at Rome, whom he called to confer with him on the same "hope of Israel" (Acts xxviii.).

Before attempting to answer, let them especially notice in the Greek St. Paul's designation of his compatriots ("to dodecaphylon") not "the Twelve Tribes," but "the Twelve-tribed nation." It is a remarkable and unique phrase, showing a clear conception and statement of the perpetuity of the whole nation in twelve divisions. No other status can satisfy the grand prophetic destiny of the "chosen people," and the fiction of their absorption can only foster a scornful rejection of the Bible.

Our nut lies within the shell of one word, "Dodecaphylon." Who will maintain, in the face of this word, that in the New Testament Israelite and Jew are one and the same, nothing but Jews?

Edinburgh.

"Set Thee Up Waymarks."—If prophecy is to be fulfilled at all, it must all share in the fulfilment. A failure anywhere demonstrates that our interpretation is at fault, or that the passage needs closer study and examination. Upon the other hand, a cumulative and corroborating sequence of circumstances, a sequence that becomes only more convincing as we amplify it, such a sequence proves both the dream and its interpretation sure. Now the kingdom of Judah comprised but two tribes of the Hebrew union. We have its direct descendant and modern representative in the "Jews." They recognise themselves as such, and know that Israel is not among them. Israel is as thoroughly "lost" to Judah as she is to all the rest of mankind; aye, as she is unto herself!

Some minds need more than others to convince them. For instance, Darwin's followers believe in evolution, while they prosecute their search for many missing links whereon alone its truth must ultimately rest! And so it is with all who search for hidden things. It is faith alone, well founded first on facts enough to warrant hope, that ever yields success.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed "PHILO-ISRAEL," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION for the BANNER OF ISRAEL, in Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts. To any part of the United Kingdom, Canada, America, or Europe, in the postal union:—

	s. d.		s. d.
1 copy, including postage	.. 7 0	Tasmania ..	.. 7 0
New Zealand	.. 7 0	South Australia	.. 7 0
Cape Colony	.. 7 0	Queensland	.. 7 0
Victoria ..	.. 7 0	Natal	. 7 0
Western Australia	.. 7 0	New South Wales	.. 7 0
Transvaal ..	7 0	India ..	.. 7 0
		Ceylon, via Brindisi	.. 7 0

All Post Office Orders, Cheques, &c., should be crossed "City Bank, Ludgate-hill, to the ac. of ROBERT BANKS AND SON." They will then only be paid to our account.

READING CASES for holding the Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts, may be had, price 2s. Sent post free on receipt of Postal Order.

THE ANNUAL VOLUMES, bound in handsome blue cloth, price 8s.

THE MONTHLY PARTS, in tinted wrapper, published the last day of each month, 6d.

HANDSOME BLUE CLOTH

CASES FOR BINDING.

Price 1s. 6d., or post free, 1s. 8d.

VOLUME XVI. OF THE BANNER OF ISRAEL,

Price 8s. Sent Post Free.

ROBERT BANKS AND SON, Racquet-ct., Fleet-st., E.C

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The Geography of the Gates. With Map and six full-page, and one double-page, Illustrations, printed on plate paper. 208 pages, in handsome cloth, gilt. Second Edition, Price 2s. 6d.; post free for P.O.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific. 56 pages. Price 4d.; by post 4½d.

Are the English People the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel? An Inquiry Establishing the Identity of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 4d.; by post 4½d.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d.; by post 4½d. Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters."

Historical, Ethnic, and Philological Arguments in Proof of the British Identity with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel, Clearly and Simply Stated. Price 2d.; by post 2½d.

The History of the House of Israel: How They were Lost, and How They were Found. Told for the Children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fifth Edition.

Our Identity: What it is Not; What it is; and Our Obligations To-day in Respect to it. Price 2d.; a reduction for quantities.

Philo-Israel's Leaflets. 4 pages, crown 8vo. Price 1s. 6d. per 100, postage 2d. Assorted packets, 1s. 8d. 19 different subjects.

The British Constitution. Followed by "A NECESSARY CONSEQUENCE," by L. P. Price 3d., post free 3½d.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument, Proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100, postage 6d.

Anglo-Israelism. True, Not False. Being Philo-Israel's Reply to the Rev. Canon Bell's Pamphlet, "Anglo-Israelism: True or False?" Price 1d.; 6s. 6d. per 100. 16 pages, crown 8vo.

Egypt's Place in the Bible. By PHILO-ISRAEL. A Paper read before the Clerical and Lay Association at Bristol and Clifton. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100.

London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C.

No. 26.—Price 1s. per 100, 8s. 6d. per 1,000.

THOUGHTS FOR THE BRITISH FOLK.

SUGGESTED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

OUR ISRAELITE MINERS.

London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C.

WORKS by JAMES KEITH

(OF DINGWALL, N.B.).

RECENTLY PUBLISHED, Price 6d., by Post 7d.

An Outline of the Past, the Present and Future of Great Britain as Revealed in the Word of God.

Also an Examination of the Theory which asserts the Kingdom to be Unconquerable.

"Known unto God are all His works from the beginning of the world."—Acts xv. 18.

Price 9d., by Post 10d.

The Eastern Question of To-day,

As unfolded by the Prophet Isaiah, in a Panoramic View of the Great Woes to befall the Earth prior to the Second Advent of Jesus Christ, beginning with Great Britain.

Price 1s., Post Free.

The Impending Judgment of Great Britain.

An Exposition of Chapter xxviii. of the Book of the Prophet Isaiah.

"And the Lord answered me and said, Write the vision, and make it plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth it."—Hab. ii. 2.

Price 4d., by Post 5d.

Light Shed by the Great Pyramid of Egypt

On the Last Days of this Dispensation, from A.D. 1814 to A.D. 1922.

PROFESSOR PIAZZI SMYTH says:—

"I have read through every word of your pamphlet, 'Light Shed by the Great Pyramid of Egypt.' I am both charmed and instructed by it. In all your allusions to the architecture, the measures, or the history of the Great Pyramid, you are, to the extent of my knowledge, perfectly correct."

LONDON:

R. BANKS & SON, RACQUET COURT, FLEET STREET, E.C.,

Or of the AUTHOR, Dingwall, N.B.

THIRD EDITION NOW READY.

With 38 Additional Pages.

Paper Cover, Price 1s. nett., postage 2d. extra. Limp Boards, lettered, 1s. 6d., postage 2d. extra. Cloth boards, gilt lettered, thick toned paper 2s., postage 3d. extra.

BRITISH-ISRAEL TRUTH

A Handbook for Enquirers.

EDITED BY

REV. DENIS HANAN, M.A., D.D.,

AND

H. ALDER-SMITH, M.B., F.R.C.S.

WITH A CHART AND MAP.

Published by the Authority of the BRITISH-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION, (Metropolitan, Provincial and Colonial.)

"British-Israel Truth." Edited by the Rev. Denis Hanan and H. Alder-Smith (R. Banks & Son.)—The sale of the first edition of this work, and the consequent issue of a second, shows that there is a growing interest in the study of the questions of the Israelitish origin of the English speaking people. Clever, interesting, pathetic, and showing considerable research, the volume has been a success, and doubtless has made some converts.—THE ROCK.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C

Just ready, 220 Large Post 8vo. pages, in clear, readable type, price 2s. 6d., limp cloth, gilt lettered, red edges, post free to any part of the world on receipt of postal remittance.

Nineteen Centuries Ago and NOW.

BY J. C. H. MEHL.

WITH BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH,

BY E. M. RUSH.

LONDON:

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., or by order of any bookseller.

AT SPECIALLY REDUCED PRICE.

Carriage Paid to any address in the United Kingdom or the Colonies, Fifth and last Edition, published at 16s.,

FOR 11s. 6d.

C. PIAZZI SMYTH'S well-known work,

OUR INHERITANCE IN THE GREAT PYRAMID,

with

TWENTY-FIVE EXPLANATORY PLATES,

showing the more crucial parts of this really Anti-Egyptian and most Primeval Structure, in Plan, Elevation, and Section.

As the number of copies to be offered at this reduced price is very limited, early application should be made direct to Messrs. R. Banks and Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London

USEFUL BOOKS FOR BIBLE STUDENTS.

In Two Vols., about 500 pages in each, cloth bound, price 5s., originally published at 7/6.

HISTORY OF THE JEWS

In Three Concurrent Sections.

I.—Ten Books of the Antiquities of the Jews, as TRANSLATED by WHISTON, with Notes from FLAVIUS JOSEPHUS.

II.—The Bible Narrative from the Creation to the Captivity at Babylon, fully given and faithfully rendered.

III.—A Modern History of the Jews. Abridged and Offered as a Commentary on the Preceding Sections.

The Two Volumes sent post free for 5/3 nett

To be had only direct from ROBERT BANKS AND SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

"I am delighted with this."—PHILO-ISRAEL.

NEW AND IMPROVED EDITION OF

ISRAEL'S WORLD,

By Rev. HENRY ROE. 2d.

Also "Consecration," 2d., "Going to Africa," 1s.; "West African Scenes," 2s.; "Fernando Po Mission," 1s. Also "Israel's World" and "Consecration" bound together in cloth, with Author's latest photograph portrait, 1s.

Order of ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C., or of Rev. HENRY ROE, Radstock, via Bath.

Jehovah Triumphant. The New and Complete Theology and Electric Light of the Bible, containing the History of British-Israel, compiled from the Sacred Scriptures. A handsome crown 8vo., cloth bound volume of 550 pages, with Index of Scripture references. Price 5s. (published at 10s.), post free for P.O.

NEW CATALOGUE of Works on Our Identity post free from R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India).

"And the Remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS OF THE EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XVII., No. 837. Entered at Stationer's Hall.] WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 11, 1893 [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
Some Great Feudatory Native States in South India	25
Uganda and the Railway, According to Mr. Stanley	26
Go Forward.—Exodus xiv. 15. By W. L. Blore	28
The Great Image (Daniel ii.); or, The Time and End of Gentile Supremacy. By Rev. S. C. Adam, M.A.	29
A New South African British Empire	31
The National Mace of the United States. By F. Gass	32
Random Shafts. By John Shootingham	33

SOME GREAT FEUDATORY NATIVE STATES IN SOUTH INDIA.

LORD LANSDOWNE, the British Viceroy, has lately been paying official visits to two of the great South Indian Feudatory States, Hyderabad, and Mysore. The Governor of the former is the Premier Mohammedan Prince of the Indian Empire, and the Maharaja of Mysore is a Hindu prince, educated in British ways, who has governed his territories for ten years most successfully by the help of a native representative assembly which Lord Lansdowne called a "a Consultative Council."

The Nizam of Hyderabad is one of the oldest of our native allies in Hindostan. When the Penjdeh incident took place the Nizam made a magnificent offer of money and of a military contingent to the British paramount power, which is said to have been "the foundation of the system of imperial contingents maintained by the Feudatory States," in defence of the Indian Empire. Many of these States maintain such military contingents, but Hyderabad is not permitted to join them. Lord Lansdowne explained the reason why, during the public hospitality given him, after a most royal fashion by the Nizam. The British Government, he said, were unwilling to impose any fresh military burdens on the people of the Hyderabad State. The Nizam's present expenses in this direction were as costly as the paramount power could allow. But the Viceroy explained that a contingent brought up to the prescribed standard out of the Nizam's present forces would be welcomed, provided that the present total expenditure for military purpose were not exceeded. "That is," says the Times report on Nov. 14th last, "the Nizam must curtail the number of his present ill-disciplined regiments, and concentrate the saving thus effected on a smaller body of picked and really efficient troops."

Our readers notice here how complete is the authority that the British Viceroy exercises over the most ancient and powerful native Mahommedan rulers in that wonderful congregation or company of native princes and their dominions which form so remarkable a feature of her Majesty's Indian Empire. The Nizam has ten millions of subjects, a powerful armament, and a claim on the British Empire which after a century and a half of loyalty to the Raj must surely be recognised. Yet the Viceroy curbs the military instinct of such a native prince, tells him what he must and what he must not do, while thanking him in the Queen's name for his steady support of her Government in the Eastern Empire for 150 years.

The case of the Mysore State is more remarkable still. In close contiguity to the Mohammedan State there is a purely Hindu Principality, dating from 1799, when Lord Wellesley formed it into a Rajahship out of the ruins of Tipu Sahib's possessions. The extravagance and misconduct of the native Rajah forced the British Government at last to set him aside and to assume direct control themselves. For fifty years the British directly administered their trust, and very successfully did so. In 1881, when the adopted heir came of age, he was placed in charge of the principality, being qualified for the burden by a careful education under British auspices and English tutors. For ten years the experiment has been tried, and now, at the end of the decade of pure native rule, Lord Lansdowne went down to Mysore to congratulate the young Maharaja on the success of his administration. What is the nature of the machinery employed, and how the Maharaja has worked out the problem he had to solve, is well told by the Times correspondent, and we shall quote his words. He wrote thus:—

It is due to the Maharaja of Mysore to say that his ten years of government have abundantly justified the rendition of so large a population to native management. The Maharaja rules with the aid of a Prime Minister or Diwan, but the special feature of his system is his effort to incorporate his subjects in the work of government. As he said with a noble simplicity in his speech on Thursday evening, he desired "to show his gratitude for British generosity by ruling directly in the interests of the governed." He has called into existence a Representative Assembly which meets annually at his capital, and which not only advises on matters submitted to it, but also recommends for initiation important measures and reforms. The Maharaja does his best to find out through the representatives of his subjects the points in regard to which they believe that hardships are inflicted or that improvements may be made. Each year the Prime Minister submits to the Assembly a lengthy review of the administration, together with an exposition of his master's policy with reference to the questions which the Representative Assembly has raised. It is difficult for an outside critic to pronounce as to the exact amount of reality in such a system. For we must always remember that if a Representative Assembly in a native State were to abuse its powers the British Government would in the last resource intervene to prevent the Maharaja from coming to serious harm. As long as a Feudatory Prince of India governs righteously, he is secured in his sovereignty by the British Power, and neither the disorders of his nobility nor the discontent of his people can oust him from it. He may adopt unwise methods, but if he is really trying to govern well, he is protected alike from palace factions and from popular revolts. In Mysore we see an experiment at representative government on a large scale without the risks which such an experiment involves in British India, or among any really independent nation. It is noteworthy that while in Mysore State documents the Representative Assembly always appears prominently, and with capital initial letters, Lord Lansdowne, although accepting that term, also varied it by the synonym of "Consultative Council."

Digitized by Google

Nevertheless, it is possible to test the success of the Mysore system by the ordinary methods by which we judge of the management of other Feudatory States. If the people are contented during years of average harvests, if their distress is promptly and effectively met in seasons of famine, if the taxation is so adjusted that it can be realized without oppression, if justice is impartially administered and brought near to the peasants' door, if crime is kept down by an efficient police, if education is widely extended, and if public works are carried out on a scale commensurate with the revenues of the State—then that State is, in the eyes of the Government of India, well administered, whatever may be the mechanism of administration. The Maharaja of Mysore has succeeded in satisfying all the foregoing tests with the help of his Prime Minister and his Representative Assembly. His success is due in no small measure to his high personal character, and to the character and ability of his Prime Minister, Mr. Sheshadri Iyer; but both the Maharaja and the Prime Minister unite in ascribing a large share of their success to the Representative Assembly.

These details of the Viceroy's visits to two such States as Hyderabad and Mysore are deeply interesting to those who, knowing the British are Israel, see how God has blessed and is blessing our nation in her administration of great Mahommedan and Hindu States, which, though protected by the British Raj, are yet existing within our territories, possessors of great military and political power. We have here, we think, a good illustration of the prophecy of Isa. lxi. 9 (R.V.) respecting Israel scattered among the heathen, in the words, "Their seed shall be known among the nations and their offspring among the peoples; all that see them shall acknowledge them, that they are the seed which the Lord hath blessed." In the case of Hyderabad it is seen that our nation is blessed by being set high above such powerful native rulers as the Mohammedan Nizam of Hyderabad. In Mysore men see that our example is so potent for good that a native Hindu Maharaja, educated by English tutors, becomes, "in some of the best senses of the word, a thorough young gentleman." His State becomes a model State, peace and plenty reign within his borders, and he rules by means of a new principle in India —representative institutions. He governs not selfishly, as is the custom in native circles in India, but by the golden rule learnt from the practice of the British officials, civil and military alike, "directly in the interests of the governed."

Surely India is a land where many proofs of the Israelitish origin of the British nation are accumulated. We know none more valuable and direct than those to which we have alluded, for they prove that God is showing us, His people, the power of His works, in giving us the heritage of the nations; setting us high above them all, and giving us "to eat the wealth of the nations," according to Isa. lxi. 6 (R.V.). To Him be all the praise.

UGANDA AND THE RAILWAY, ACCORDING TO MR. STANLEY.

We are glad to quote a portion of Mr. H. M. Stanley's speech made on December 7th to the members of the Constitutional Club, on the subject of Uganda, because it is full of valuable information interesting to our readers, and it teems with geographical, and commercial facts, which have a direct reference to the burning question of the day regarding the retention or evacuation of Uganda, now trembling in the balance. The Government are going to send their Commissioner to inquire on the spot whether Uganda is worth keeping or not, but no one has heard whether the Government when they get the report will act upon it, if Sir Gerald Portal should be favourable to the annexation of the country to the British Dominions. Mr. Stanley has again gone over the ground, and assigned good and sufficient reasons why the country should not be evacuated, and what the result would be if it were. Sir. G. Baden Powell, M.P., was in the chair, and introduced the great traveller.

"In the course of his speech, Mr. Stanley said,—We are met to-night to examine this piece of Imperial landed property called Uganda, with a view of ascertaining its merits as an imperial possession, and to find out whether it is worth our while to tax ourselves a little so as to render it remunerative, and to discover what duties and obligations we have incurred by attaching it to the Empire. So far it has cost us goodly sums in money and many valuable lives. Thirty-two years ago we sent an expedition, at a cost of £5,000, to discover the river that disparts the Uganda empire. Fifteen years later an English journal expended another £5,000 to circumnavigate its great lake. Since 1877 the charitable of this country have supported missions in Uganda at a cost of over £100,000. Three years ago, by invitation of King and people, we entered the country with our troops, and since have spent £120,000 in maintaining order in it. Then this year we voted £20,000 for a railway-route survey. We also surrendered an island in the North Sea, which had a revenue of £8,000, to make our title to the coast and Hinterland clear. Twenty-two English missionaries and explorers have died either while going to Uganda or returning from it. One of these was a Bishop, who was murdered on the threshold; another Bishop died while wistfully looking across the inland sea towards the destined scene of his labour; another was Mackay, a man of God-given greatness, who died after 14 years of faithful endeavour and exemplary devotion. What is this Uganda which is already hallowed by deeds of self-sacrifice and ennobled by martyrdom? Uganda proper curves like a bent bow from the Alexandra Nile to the Victoria Nile at the north-west portion of the great Nyanza, and, with the numerous islands lying parallel with the shores, is about 30,000 square miles in extent—say, equal in size to Scotland. But the old Uganda empire, which is nearly alike in character and value, is about 90,000 square miles, or equal to Great Britain in area. This old empire of Uganda is by far the most valuable portion of the large territory which was included in the charter of the British East Africa Company. It is a land teeming with possibilities. The soil is wonderfully productive. It contains the finest native race in the whole continent from the Cape to Egypt. Then Mr. Stanley went on to speak more fully of the country and its history, the readiness with which the natives embraced Christianity, and the religious rivalry that broke out between Protestants and Roman Catholics. Speaking of Captain Lugard, he said,—As regards the presentation of the claims of Uganda to the consideration of the English people, I, personally, am very much indebted to him that he has pleaded so well. But I have been greatly amused by the criticisms of a certain portion of the Press on the very temperate and just remarks he has made. . . . During the last election I heard some very strange things uttered. Some even went so far as to say that we did not want colonies at all. Yet I estimate our trade with the colonies to be a fifth of the entire trade abroad of the United Kingdom, say 250 millions annually, which means, of course, a fleet of 1,180 ships and employment to 34,200 seamen every year. At how many hundreds of thousands shall we estimate the number of men who build the ships, manufacture the goods, and handle that enormous trade? If with all our trade of 1,200 millions sterling a year we have about 100,000 out of employment in London alone, how many hundred thousand would be thrown out of employment if by some misfortune we lost a fifth of our trade?

Digitized by Google

"GREAT BRITAIN'S OBLIGATIONS.

"As no Minister cares to undertake to lead public opinion in the matter of Uganda, we must trust to public opinion to influence our Ministers. That is the purpose of such meetings as this and many others which are being held through the length and breadth of the land. Public opinion should, however, be based upon accurate knowledge of all facts relating to this subject, and I propose now to begin the argument why we should not only strenuously oppose the evacuation of Uganda, but should insist that our solemn promises made before United Europe should be fulfilled. Mr. Stanley first turned his attention to the Berlin Conference of 1884-85. By the Act for the prohibition of the slave trade, as well as by the convention with the Congo Free State, signed in 1884, Great Britain bound herself to do everything possible to put an end to the slave trade and to suppress slavery. Further, by the General Act of the Brussels Conference the organization of administrative, judicial, religious, and military services in African territories, the gradual establishment in the interior of strongly occupied stations, the construction of roads, and in particular of railways, were declared to be among the most effective means for counteracting that trade. Now it seems to me, gentlemen, Mr. Stanley continued, that we cannot any longer plead ignorance as to the duty of this country, or remain any longer in doubt as to what Her Majesty's Government ought to do. I marvel myself at the hesitation of Lord Rosebery. The British Government was perfectly justified in delegating its duties, or a portion of them, to the British East Africa Company; but immediately the company announced its intention to withdraw from Uganda, the Government, having solemnly undertaken these obligations in the name of Almighty God,' and before assembled, civilization, ought without an instant's hesitation to have said, 'Very well, we assume all the responsibility. The hour you depart we take your place.' Gentlemen, we are absolutely hedged around by our obligations. Why then do we hesitate? The money is in the British Treasury. The surveyors of the railway say it will cost two-and-a-half millions. That is equal to £75,000 a year for interest. We can surely afford that.

"WHAT THE RAILWAY WILL DO.

"High among the benefits to be derived from the railway is the wonderful economy of native life, now wasted by many things in a country so peculiarly constituted as Africa. Travellers shirk the recital of the horrors of the road, but no traveller can forget them. In East Africa alone I have lost four companions; Cameron lost two, and a third returned. Seven French missionaries have died between Bagamoyo and Lake Victoria. English, Belgians, and Germans have filled many a grave. Some people attribute this mortality to the climate. But it is not the climate that kills the native travellers as well as the whites. It is the absolute poverty of the land in providing for the wants of the wandering man or quadruped. You hear frequently of the sad condition of the poor in this country, but their worst condition is bliss compared to that of the African wayfarer. Central Africa would ages ago have produced centres of civilization had it not been that Egyptian, Persian, and Arab had discovered that the interior of the continent was inaccessible by animal transport. Our colonists and the Americans proceed on different lines. They first discover a desirable objective point and then make their connections. Now from Mombasa, that unrivalled port of British East Africa, we have as magnificent an objective point as can be desired. Mr. Stevens, an American traveller, who has visited this region, says,—'Hindi merchants and traders will flock to Mombasa, and at the lake terminus of the railway a city will spring up; it will become the Chicago of Africa. Five years after the railway is finished it will be a city more populous than Zanzibar, and its trade will be £6,000,000 a year.' English capitalists, who generally know fairly well from what investments they may obtain dividends, have been asking what returns may they expect from this British Central Africa for their outlay. Look at the map and imagine the railway terminus at the north-east end of Lake Victoria. By that one advance into Central Africa we have obtained two lines of defence against the slave-trader's operations—the sea coast garrisoned by the company's troops, and the lake stretching down to the German territory—and between the two lines we have obliterated the track of the slave-traders throughout the entire block of British East Africa. That is one great gain. You observe also that we are now able to maintain a sufficient jurisdiction to secure peace along our borders against the slave-traders from Manyema, against any Mahdist zealots from the north, and the Tanganyika Arabs from the south. This is the second gain. The railway to the lake having brought us within easy access of our furthest borders in the heart of Africa, and having enabled us to extirpate the slave traffic throughout all our territory, we are in a position to assist the Germans throughout all their territory, and the Congo State will be able to draw her cordon of troops around the last stronghold of the trade. This is the third gain. The other considerable gains are the abolition of the caravan system, the relief of two hundred thousand porters who now exhaust their strength in the transport service in the British and German territories, who will furnish us and the Germans with a vast army of food producers, trusty police, and native armies, the complete barrier we acquire against the extension of the liquor traffic, against the importation of rifles and destructive weapons, and for the prevention of the murderous civil wars and tribal feuds, and the certain protection we are able to afford all religious, moral, and commercial enterprises. Besides the sure maintenance of European authority and restraining the horrible violations of Divine and human laws, which have for ages converted Africa into a shambles, we gain an immense market for our manufactured goods, access to mines, fine stock-breeding areas, and new farm lands. . . . "My last words to you are :—Retain Uganda, but begin to build that railway that we may be secure against any possible contingency, that we may redeem our pledges and promises to Europe, that we may extinguish once and for ever the detestable slave trade, avoid the waste of human life, and give to Africa the means of communicating with Europe easily, freely, and unreservedly, and save her from that dreadful isolation which has been the only cause of her past backwardness and her long-enduring misery."

Digitized by Google

GO FORWARD.—Exodus xiv. 15.

By W. L. Blore.

It is written, "And the Lord said unto Moses, Wherefore criest thou unto Me? Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward." As then, so now, we are commanded to go forward by the God of Israel, by the voice of His wonderful providence, and by the earnest invitation of the oppressed and the outcast to come and rescue them from the tyranny of Satan and his emissaries. We are assured of the promised help of the God of Israel; for, thus saith God the Lord, "I will bring the blind by a way that they knew not. I will lead them in paths that they have not known. I will make darkness light before them, and not forsake them."

With this assurance and with the command to go forward, ours is a hopeful and cheerful progress in the extension of the kingdom of God throughout the world; and the weapons of our warfare are not carnal but spiritual; and so we say in our national church every Sabbath day, "There is none that fighteth for us but only Thou, O God!"

On every hand, from what is transpiring throughout Europe, Asia, Africa, and even America, we see clearly that we, as a nation, are designated by God to go forward in the extension of the kingdom of God throughout the world; for He, in His providence, has placed in our hands all the centres of influence and commercial intercourse; for the world is the Lord's and they that dwell therein.

The purely providential discoveries of the diamond fields in 1870, and of the gold fields, in 1880, in South Africa, at most critical times of our colonial history, the discovery of the value of Mashonaland, Nyassaland, and Uganda on the south and east, and of the Niger on the west, as great commercial highways, and as great centres of missionary influence in the extension of the kingdom of God, are a sufficient indication that it is not possible for the House of Israel to do otherwise than to go forward.

The annual report of the British South African Company, the Uganda episode, and the extraordinary missionary effort put forth in this country to go forth and teach all nations, all prove that the Spirit of God is the great mover in this extraordinary progressive action of the House of Israel.

But jealousy and opposition have been rife all round. France, Germany, Belgium, Portugal, and even the Transvaal have endeavoured, both directly and indirectly, to harass the House of Israel in this great work of commercial and missionary progress.

But all to no purpose. The late announcement by Mr. Kruger that it is impossible longer to withhold the rights of citizenship from the House of Israel is a proof that all opposition by white or black will not avail to withstand Him, who upholdeth all things by the word of His power.

The male adults in the Transvaal, of the House of Israel, outnumber all others hailing from Europe. At Kimberley, on their western flank, reside 30,000 Britons; in Natal there are 35,000; in the two republics 80,000; so that these 145,000, of whom the British have the majority in male adults—which is a very important consideration—naturally exercise a powerful influence in a population, which, in the States above mentioned, number only 280,000 whites; of which the adult males number 66,000. Of these 40,000 are British. The immigration during 1891 and 1892 of Britons into South Africa will number at least 20,000, of whom at least one-half are male adults; so that, in all South Africa, including the Cape Colony, we find that the House of Israel, in every way, is in the ascendant, and is going forward in Bechuanaland, in Mashonaland, and in Nyassaland.

The sympathies of the native population throughout South Africa—in number about five million—are with the House of Israel, and, when Zambesia shall have acquired more rapid communication with the sea-coast in 1893, that population—as has been the case in Cape Colony—will rapidly increase. The natives will desert Portugal, and serve Britain; for, where the Union Jack waves, there is liberty.

In both the South African Republics the natives have been deprived of all their civil rights, and they are, virtually, the serfs of Boerdom, and have no voice whatever in the election of representatives to the Volksraad, although they form the majority of the population.

In ministering to the spiritual wants of the natives of South Africa the House of Israel leads the way, and we locally supply the funds for the purely missionary work in that part of the world. The present condition of this work may be estimated from the following return:—

	Native Communicants.	Representing Natives.
House of Israel ...	150,000 ...	500,000
Dutch	14,000 ...	50,000
German	8,000 ...	25,000

There is also a mixed race, which number 206,000 all told. Of these the House of Israel ministers to 116,000. The above return refers solely to Cape Colony. Beyond the Colony, in mission work, Israel is of course paramount.

Whilst the Dutch preachers throughout South Africa number 160, those of the House of Israel number upwards of 500. In addition to these there are local preachers, Sabbath-school teachers, mission-school teachers, catechists, interpreters, colporteurs, and Bible-women. Of these we have 7,000, whilst all others, unitedly, have not more than 1,500.

The mission work in Madagascar, in Uganda, on the Congo, in the Cameroons, in Egypt, and on the Niger occupies some hundreds of our missionaries, and some 10,000 assistants.

As to the advance of commerce in our African field of operations, we find that the trade of South Africa has risen from 8,000,000 in 1872 to 28,000,000 in 1890—a wonderful advance in 18 years. The Mashonaland and Niger reports for the current year speak for themselves. The results of the Zanzibar and Egypt occupations speak for themselves, and the commercial operations as carried on through our other South African stations prove that, in Africa generally, we are leading in the commercial race, and in the development of the wealth of that extensive continent, and that notwithstanding the jealousy and opposition of competitors, to whom we have given protection, shelter, and support in their hour of need.

Digitized by Google

As to the capital value of the African estate to Great Britain there is much misconception. In South Africa alone the amount of British capital there invested, and yielding on an average upwards of 5 per cent., is 60,000,000 sterling. Stanley values Uganda at 50,000,000—i.e., as an investment. The position of Uganda is most favourable as a commercial centre, and I consider Stanley's estimate to be a very moderate one. The capital value of our Niger centre is increasing daily. That of Egypt is large and important, and already Zanzibar, as a commercial centre, has not only astonished the natives, but foreigners as well. I estimate the commercial value of our African stations at the present moment at 300,000,000 as to their capital value, or their value for present investment. The income from this will support 2,000,000 of our labouring population.

No wonder that at the close of the Mashonaland meeting 2,000 shareholders carried the report with three cheers, and three more for Cecil Rhodes. No wonder that a German gentleman present said that a few enterprising Englishmen had acquired an empire for their country, and laid it at the foot of the throne of our most gracious Queen. To the God of Israel be all the glory. Onward! then.

EXODUS XIV. 15—31.

Onward then, ye sons of Israel!
Listen to your Leader's Word;
Forward go! and fight the battle
Of salvation and your Lord!

Onward then to free the slave!
Turn not to the right or left!
Forward go the lost to save!
For for them the "Rock was cleft."

Onward then, and follow Jesus!
He will guide your footsteps right.
Forward go! for He has to us
Shown the Way, the Truth, the Light.

Onward then! and never falter,
Look not back as did Lot's wife;
Forward go with song of Psalter
Fill'd with Joy, and Love, and Life.

Onward then! obey the Word
Of Him who is your Captain;
Forward go! Unsheathe His Sword,
And fight the sons of Satan.

Onward then! The God of Israel,
As of yore, so now doth say,
Forward go! I, Immanuel,
Will be with you all the way.

Hill House, Sandown, Isle of Wight.
Emancipation Day at the Cape, Dec. 1, 1892.

ERRATUM.—"Free Distribution Fund." The amount received from Hawaiian Islands should be £9 19s. 2d., instead of £9 12s. 2d., as given, through printer's error, in last report.

GET the individual to work, and you will get the multitude to work; for each individual who becomes an efficient worker will continue to be one, and after a while the whole lump will be leavened.

THE GREAT IMAGE (DANIEL II.); OR, THE TIME AND END OF GENTILE SUPREMACY.

BY REV. S. C. ADAM, M.A.

IN this chapter we read of a vision shown by God to Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon. The vision was that of a great image, a colossal idol, with a head of gold, the breast and arms of silver, the belly and thighs of brass, and the legs of iron, and the feet partly of iron and clay. In the interpretation all these several parts are taken up, and the symbolic meaning of each is unfolded and explained.

The four metals, of which the image consisted, represented four kingdoms, which should successively bear rule over Jerusalem. They are the embodiment of the corrupt politics and the false worship of the world. They continually deteriorate, till, at last, the iron and the pottery take the place of the fine gold. These four successive kingdoms are, as generally admitted, and revelation and history affirm them to be, the Babylonian, the Medo-Persian, the Grecian, and the Roman Empires. Under these successive Empires, Jerusalem and Mount Zion have been trodden down. They have stood up in opposition to God in His holy mount; they have planted their standards and set up their abomination on the mountain of the height of Israel. The great boast of the king of Babylon was Isa. xiv. 13; and Dan. xi. 45 tells that the wilful king shall plant his tabernacle in the glorious holy mountain.

But these idolatrous powers are to be subverted and superseded. By what? ver. 34, 35. Now, what is this stone? The answer is: Both from the explanatory terms used, and the ordained mission of the stone, it is evidently a kingdom strictly and properly exercising political and missionary functions, and this in an overpowering degree. The kingdom referred to in ver. 44 must be homogeneous—i.e., of the same kind as those referred to in the preceding verses; it stands in the same category. To say that those refer to the temporal kingdoms on earth, but that this, the fifth, refers to a spiritual kingdom in the heart, is, as has well been said, a transmutation of simple language and a distortion of the obvious uniformity of prophecy. At its origin it was like a stream hidden in the sand; anon it issues forth broader and deeper, till at length it becomes a mighty river; so this kingdom, from small beginning, was ultimately to become mighty, and more than co-extensive with the dominion assumed by kingdoms of gold, &c. It will cover the same ground and more. The powers these usurped, it will hold eventually as its lawful right. It is to fill the world, and rule the earth. You see, then, that it is a literal kingdom in the earth. But it is not a mere earthly kingdom. It is not really originated or operated by human genius, skill, or force. It depends not on the sagacity of statesmen, the strategy of generals, nor on the prowess of navies or armies of flesh and blood.

It is a kingdom cut out, cut out of the mountain without hands, or not in hands—i.e., human hands or agency, but in or by the hands of Him who is almighty and invisible—the God of heaven. The kingdom is His. "It comes not with observation," as said our blessed Lord. Under omniscient and omnipotent guidance it silently carves its way to its distinguished destiny of righteous supremacy in the world. In its whole character and career it is governed and guarded and guided by a special Providence. It is the kingdom of God. It is the kingdom of Christ so frequently spoken of in other prophecies, for the kingdoms of this world are to become His. He, we are constrained to believe, presides over it and shapes its destiny, to accomplish the grand aims and ends He has in view, in setting up and establishing such a kingdom on earth.

Digitized by Google

To say that the stone is Christ is only parallel, or of a piece with affirming, that Queen Victoria is the vast and mighty empire over which she reigns. Look at the real office and use of the stone, according to this prediction in Daniel. It is not a foundation stone, which Christ is, but a stone hurled, like David's from his sling against Goliath, with an irresistible might and invincible force and power. The hand is indeed Christ's; the stone must be something else. The words of the Lord Jesus Christ in Matt. xxi. 42—44 present a difficulty, to which Dan. ii. gives a clue. He evidently uses the figure of a stone in two senses: 1. Of Himself as a stone rejected by the Jewish builders as the Messiah, the King of Israel, and yet becoming the quoin or head corner-stone in which two walls of a building meet (Psa. cxviii. 22; Acts iv. 16; Ephes. ii. 20); and (2) because of His rejection as King, and the consequent transference of the kingdom to another nation—viz., the House of Israel, —He employs the term of that kingdom with Himself as King (Psa. ii. 6 and 9) as the stone kingdom of Daniel, breaking and grinding to powder all that is opposed to it: "Whosoever shall fall on this stone shall be broken, but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder." This is not Christ Himself. It is not the Church or a spiritual body, but a temporal kingdom on earth, which is also a spiritual kingdom.

Observe, too—for this is very important—Daniel says that "in the days of these (or those, R.V.) kings or kingdoms shall the God of heaven set up this stone kingdom." It was not to be only a future thing, but in its course and development its history was to be concurrent with theirs. Hence the time for its appearance on the historical arena has long since passed. It must be in existence now, and in active and conspicuous operation. Our Lord's words necessitate the finding this kingdom in a nation accepting Him at or by the time of the destruction of Jerusalem, A.D. 70, when the kingdom of God was taken from the Jews, and their House left desolate, as said our blessed Lord. All this involves its continuous national existence as a professedly Christian people to this day (Jer. xxxi 35, 36). This power must be an increasing power, and more and more bringing forth fruit unto God, blossoming and budding, and filling therewith the whole earth.

Then, ultimately, this stone kingdom is to be identified by the fact of its coming into conflict and collision with the fourth, or Roman, kingdom, at a particular crisis—viz., when it is divided, in the latter days, into ten kingdoms. These it must finally break in pieces, and utterly annihilate, as governmental powers. Having done this, it dilates and expands, and becomes a great mountain, the mountain kingdom of the Lord, and enters upon, and exercises under Him as King, universal sovereignty; and, as the prophet foretells, it must stand for ever.

Now, the great question for us to answer is, What is this surprising, this surpassing, this stupendous kingdom? In the LXX. Version I note that it is expressly affirmed that the stone is cut out of a mountain. This is confirmed in ver. 45. What mountain then is this? Why, the mountain that was ever uppermost in Daniel's thoughts, and for which he felt so jealous (ix. 16—20). This mountain is Israel in its sovereignty. (N.B.—This is confirmed in ii. 44.) It is there declared that this glorious kingdom or sovereignty shall not be left to other (another, R.V.) people. Hence the inference, which cannot be gainsayed, is, that it shall be assigned to God's own covenant people Israel. So Dan. vii. 27. In the Old Testament, saints is a synonym for Israel (see Deut. xxxiii. 1—3; 2 Chron. vi. 41; Psa. l. 1—5; cxxxii. 9, 13, 17; cxlviii. 14; cxlix. 1, 2).

It was, you know, the expectation, founded on these prophecies, of pious and devout Jews in the time of Christ that the Messiah would re-unite the two Houses of Israel and Judah, and restore the kingdom to Israel—i.e., to more than its pristine glory (see Luke i. 31—33, 68—75; xxiv. 12; John xi. 51; Acts i. 6). Our blessed Lord witnessed before Pontius Pilate, and said, "My kingdom is not of this world"—i.e., did not originate or spring out of this world—"but is heavenly and divine in its origin, and was to have its sphere on, and one day its sceptre over, this world."

David, His type, would have made the same declaration. His life and psalmody ring out the heaven-born truth that the kingdom of Israel then, as now and hereafter, is a supernatural kingdom, neither belonging to, nor after the pattern of such kingdoms as are symbolized by the gold, &c., in the image in Nebuchadnezzar's dream.

It is a noteworthy fact that the Psalms are full of this transcendent theme, this kingdom of God associated with Israel (Psa. ii. 1—6; x. 16; xxix. 10, 11; xlv. 1; xlvii. 7—9; lxviii. 32; xcviii. 1—3; xcix. 1—4; cii. 15, 16; cx.; cxviii.; cxlvi. 10; cxlix. 1, 2).

Here I beg to cite independent but important testimony from De Burgh's commentary on the book of Psalms, "Preliminary Dissertation":—"The kingdom of the Messiah, the subject, by anticipation, of joy and praise in so many of these sacred songs, will not be found to correspond in its description or results with any state of the Church or the world in this present dispensation. As to the King Himself —the Messiah—particulars are given incapable of explication and utterly irreconceivable with a "spiritual reign;" meaning by this the ascendancy of Christian principles in the world, or an extended influence of religion, as now professed, in the absence of Christ. On the contrary, the King whom the Psalms celebrated, is a King manifested and present, ruling in personal power and majesty; His throne the throne of David, the seat of His kingdom, Mount Zion, and Jerusalem; His immediate subjects, the House of Jacob; His own people, Israel."

There can be no question but that, in the time of David and Solomon, the kingdom of God was substantial and political as well as moral and spiritual, and so it will be again. God's plan has never altered, though men have lost the key to it. "I, the Lord, change not." His kingdom must be identical with the kingdom of Israel under Solomon, as a man of sixty is identical with a child of six. Solomon sat on the throne of the Lord, and His throne "shall be established for ever."

That kingdom, even in its stone condition, and before it becomes a great mountain kingdom, must be a witness for God, must honour His Word and day, and have His sanctuary in its midst. It must be specially guarded by His Providence and guided by His Spirit, and its multitudinous people—and in all probability through much tribulation, (prepared) for the pre-eminence designed for them in His holy counsels, as to Ephraim's inheritance. There is only one kingdom on earth now that answers thus far, in its history, to each and all the points of Identity required by the kingdom of the stone.

Need I say that this is our own British Empire, whose destiny, statesmen and authors are continually declaring, is unique and unparalleled in history. Its moral and spiritual pre-eminence points it out, as even now, God's representative, responsible, and righteous kingdom on earth. Its throne is occupied by a direct descendant of David according to God's covenant of salt, and must continue to be so filled until the King comes to reign in Person, even our Lord Jesus Christ the King of kings. Then shall be fulfilled Zech. xii. 1—3; xiv. 1—9.

Digitized by Google

What a vastly different prospect is this for our great country and glorious constitution compared with that entertained by some interpreters of prophecy, who hold that, as ancient Rome conquered and subdued this land of ours, England must form one of the ten toes into which the Empire has to be divided, and is liable to the doom of being fallen upon by the stone and ground to powder. It ought to be remembered, that Rome only partially subdued Southern Britain, and never conquered North Britain or Ireland, and that what she did effect was as much by politics and arts as by arms; and that she was finally compelled to abandon this island, because she could no longer hold it, in A.D. 409; and in the following year her very empire was overthrown, in its centre, by our kinsman, Alaric the Goth, and the first Anglo-Saxon kingdom of Kent was only established in A.D. 454. Moreover, though Augustine, the monk, and other Papist emissaries, did their utmost in after times to subdue Britons, Saxons, and Normans; yet one and all resisted these encroachments, and both by the sword of steel and the sword of the Spirit, vehemently expelled the Papal aggressions. And at the great and glorious Reformation, Great Britain, under God, was re-constituted and established as the head and champion of God's truth, as His witnessing Church on earth, and His chosen people and nation, for making known His way on earth and His saving health unto all nations.

It will, perhaps, strike some persons that it is strange that all through this paper no allusion is made to the Church of Christ. It is impossible in a brief paper to deal with everything, and I have rigidly confined myself to the subject allotted to me. But here I cannot do better than refer to Dr. Hanan's "Appendix I." If we survey the aspect of visible Christendom at the present day, we see apostacy and corruption spread over the whole of the countries—Eastern and Western—that were once incorporated in the Roman Empire. If we contemplate the whole world, we must admit that Anglo-Saxon Christianity is the pillar and ground of the truth, and that there are more true Christians to be found among them than among all other peoples on the face of the globe. I believe that this has always been the case, and that the true Christian Church will be found to be made up mainly, and under God's sovereignty, of the true Israel of God. But it may be said, The Church—i.e., Christ's mystical body, in which His elect are knit together, &c.—is His Bride. So, too, is Israel. You remember reading, in Gen. xxxii. 1, 2, "And Jacob went on his way, and the angels of God met him. And when Jacob saw them he said, This is God's host: and he called the name of that place Mahanaim"—i.e., two hosts or camps.

I will conclude by citing Mr. B. W. Newlon, a well-known writer on prophecy, and no British-Israelite, who has some pertinent and beautiful remarks on this verse, and solves the difficulty effectually. He says: "This word Mahanaim has been adopted by God. It remains to us a word pregnant with meaning; teaching us of glories in heaven and in earth yet to come, when Jacob's weakness shall give place to Israel's strength, and glory rest upon Immanuel's land. In that day, strengthened from on high, Israel shall become the host of the Lord their God, appointed to serve Him in the earth; but in association with others, more glorious than themselves, even risen (and translated) saints, who, as being heavenly and glorified, shall serve the Lord in heaven His dwelling-place, as well as fulfil the missions entrusted to them in the earth. Thus there will be two hosts (Mahanaim), even as there will be two Jerusalems, heavenly and earthly—heaven bestowing and earth receiving: and so linked together in concurrent and harmonious action under God. This is that which shall be seen in the Shulamite in the day of her blessing. Shulamite means the spouse of Solomon; the name bestowed on Israel when married to the Great King, the true Solomon, the Lord Jesus Christ!"

A NEW SOUTH AFRICAN BRITISH EMPIRE.

THE British South Africa Company have just issued their Report of their wonderful enterprise in South Africa. Their object, as the public journals in England declare, is nothing less than the "creation of a new empire under the British flag."

This is the opinion and declaration of the Times leader on Nov. 26, last. The country assigned to the Company by its Charter, extends over an area of 750,000 square miles! This vast Continent is in size "greater than the area covered by the European Dominions of France, Germany, Austria-Hungary, and Italy taken together"! It includes Mashonaland, said to be rich in gold. There, "civilized life and organic government have obtained a footing." Its occupation by English and Boer settlers has begun, and many thousands of gold mining claims have been registered. The land needs railway communication to the Eastern Coast, a part of the intervening country being the abode of the deadly fly, fatal to horses and cattle. This railway called the Beira line has been commenced, and its coast portion through the dangerous "fly country," will soon be finished. South of the Zambesi there are already 3,000 white settlers; and hotels, banks, and newspapers of a rudimentary sort, are established. Fort Salisbury is even now the centre of an adequate administrative system. The defence of the country is carried on by a small civil police force, consisting of 40 white men and 35 natives! The defence of the Company is entrusted to "a thoroughly efficient, well-equipped volunteer force of about 500 men, of whom 300 could be mounted, and all are trained to arms. Besides this, every able-bodied man in the country is liable to Burgher duty, and this would bring the total defensive force to 1500 men. The country yields not only gold, but silver, copper, lead, iron, nitrate of potash, and plumbago; besides native cotton, and tobacco. Roads have been made, and old ones kept in repair. A new road 73 miles long, has been made between Umtali and Chimoio, the proposed terminus of the Beira Railway from the East coast. The home government have placed two gunboats on Lake Nyassa, and a steam launch on the Upper Shiré, whereby the power of the slave-traders in those parts will certainly be broken. Already this is taking place; confidence is being restored, and steadily increasing revenue is the result. The Company sum up the progress during the past in the following short sentences.

They relate to the settlement of Mashonaland, and testify according to the opinion of the Directors, that "within the next few years, owing to their mineral and agricultural development, the territories entrusted to them by Her Majesty's Government, will prove to be one of the most valued of England's Colonial possessions. The progress is reported thus by the Directors:

Digitized by Google

The following extract will give a general idea of the progress that has been made in the work of settling Mashonaland:—

"A Sanitary Board has been formed at Salisbury to manage the township. Three members of the board are nominated by the company, and three by the inhabitants, the resident magistrate being a member ex officio, and presiding at all meetings.

The qualification for voting is the ownership of immovable property of the value of £75.

"All regulations passed by the board are subject to the approval of the company.

"The Sanitary Board revenue is derived from one-half of the stand rents (10s. per month) and other taxes and fees—e.g., outspans, market dues, &c.

"At Tuli there is an excellent hotel, conducted by the Tuli Hotel Company (Limited), and between Tuli and Victoria (200 miles) there are some ten hotels and wayside houses where travellers can be accommodated. At Victoria there are two, and between Victoria and Salisbury there are hotels at the various post stations of Makori, Inyatzitzi, and U niati, while in Salisbury itself there are several most substantial buildings of brick and iron, all offering good accommodation for man and beast. At Manica there are also hotels, and, in view of the early completion of the railway, this township affords excellent prospects.

"On June 20, 1892, the Standard Bank despatched to Salisbury two officers with the view of establishing a branch there, and on July 20 the office was opened for the transaction of business.

"A small cyclostyle newspaper, the Mashonaland Herald and Zambesian Times, was started at Salisbury by Mr. W. E. Fairbridge, in the early part of August, 1891. A large printing plant was recently sent to Salisbury by the Argus Company, who will take over Mr. Fairbridge's business, and publish a printed paper under the title of the Rhodesia Herald. The first issue has been already published.

"At Tuli a cyclostyle newspaper is published weekly, called the Rhodesia Chronicle.

"Missionaries of various religious denominations have established themselves in Mashonaland. They include representatives of the Church of England, the Roman Catholic Church, the Wesleyans, the Dutch Reformed Church, and the Salvation Army. Dr. Knight Bruce is the Bishop of Mashonaland, and he is assisted amongst others by Archdeacon Upcher, Canon Balfour, and the Rev. Mr. Sylvestre. The Wesleyans, under the Rev. Mr. Skimins, have had well-built brick and iron buildings erected by local subscription. The Jesuit Mission intends establishing a permanent agricultural settlement, and the necessary land will probably be selected near Victoria. A school is also to be founded by the mission."

The vast territory with which the Company is dealing, is coming quickly under the civilizing influence of a working post office department, and of a telegraph system. Since August 1, last, the Company has entered the postal union of South Africa, which works under the International Postal Convention. "An excellent weekly service for passengers and mails has been established throughout Mashonaland. Letters and parcels can now be despatched from any town or station in Mashonaland to all parts of the world, franked by the Company's stamp! The telegraph line was completed last February to Fort Salisbury from Mafeking, 819 miles in length. The cost was £92,809.

These and many other interesting details are to be found in the Company's Report. They show us how Israel's Empire in Africa, in the heart of the country, far North of the Cape Colonies, is growing; and that God is blessing our efforts in a surprising manner, in order to bring the whole land under British influence, rule, and spiritual blessing.

One of the most wonderful facts connected with this wonderful report of the creation of a new African Empire, is the ease with which the native chiefs of those parts seem to yield up to us their rights in their inheritance in the land. South of the Zambesi Lobengula gives up valuable mineral and land rights. Gungunhana does the same. The Barotse Chief who claims 225,000 square miles from Portuguese territory in Angola, southward and eastward, and the native chiefs of lesser order between the Barotse and Nyassaland have all concluded treaties with us, giving us valuable privileges. The Arab chiefs and the Portuguese no longer harass the African Lake Company and the missionaries, because the British flag now protects them, and enables them in their turn to carry on the settlement of Nyassaland. Well may the Times regard the new empire thus growing before our eyes in South Africa as "a splendid inheritance."

A rich promise lies in the development of Northern Zambesia [says The Times] where the climate is said to be exceptionally healthy for Africa; where, though the land is not densely peopled, and thus closed against European occupation, there is plenty of native labour, as yet unspoiled by gin; where the fertile districts are neither soaked by floods nor parched by thirsty winds; where timber and water are plentiful, and where white men can thrive and work in the air of the highland plateaus. It is a splendid inheritance, enough, if not more than enough, for the most ambitious corporation to administer without seeking for new realms to conquer.

The above is a striking corroboration of our contention that the British are Israel. God has granted us with hardly any effort on our part, a vast stretch of valuable territory fit for the occupation of our Northern race, that we may add it to the kingdom of Christ, now so rapidly extending under our flag, throughout the planet. Surely all who see us must acknowledge us, that we are the seed the Lord hath blessed (Isa. lxi. 9). Just as in India God gave us the land by a surprising series of wonderful military successes, so in Mashonaland God's hand is equally apparent in quelling all opposition to our advance from native races, from Portuguese, Arab, or European Powers, and surrendering vast stretches of land to our rule with the consent of all concerned. We have no fear regarding the use we shall make of our inheritance. The God of Israel who gave, can and will guide us in our use of this new African estate He has entrusted to our keeping for Him, and to Him shall be nationally all the praise!

THE NATIONAL MACE OF THE UNITED STATES.

By F. Gass.

The mace of the United States of America House of Representatives was made in 1884, and consists in part of a bundle of thirteen ebony rods, entwined and bound together with silver bands. The thirteen ebony sticks are intended to represent the thirteen original States of the Union. This curious fact recalls Ezekiel xxxvii. 16, 17:—"Moreover, thou son of man, take thee one stick, and write upon it, For Judah, and for the children of Israel his companions: then take another stick, and write upon it, For Joseph, the stick of Ephraim, and for all the House of Israel his companions: and join them one to another into one stick [i.e., entwine them]; and they shall become one in thine hand."

The two sticks represent the two Houses of Judah and Israel; Ephraim and Manasseh standing in place of Joseph. The kingdom of Judah was composed of the tribes of Judah and Benjamin with the Levites. Jeroboam, the first king of the Ten Tribes, was an Ephraimite, Joseph represents the Ten Tribes in general, they were in the hand of Ephraim

Digitized by Google

(ver. 19), that is, under the government of Jeroboam—Manasseh may be accepted as the thirteenth tribe; and there can be no objection to accepting the American mace of thirteen sticks as representing, by the entwining and binding with bands, the joining together, as foretold by Ezekiel, of all the tribes as one nation on the mountains of Israel never again to be divided. The entwining and binding of the thirteen sticks, symbolising the "two sticks" of Ezekiel becoming "one" in the prophet's hand. At least it will be admitted that the coincidence is remarkable.

The bands of the mace are of silver; and the Psalmist says of Israel:—"Thou God hast proved us, Thou hast tried us, as silver is tried" (lxvi. 10). And God declares of Israel, through His prophet Zechariah:—"I will refine them as silver is refined; they shall call on My Name and I will hear them: I will say, It is My people; and they shall say, The Lord is my God" (xiii. 9).

It is remarkable that the number thirteen is the national symbol of the United States of America, they having thirteen stars and thirteen stripes on the flag, and thirteen rods in the mace the representation of the might and rule of the nation, with thirteen original States in the Union.

The thirteen mingled and securely bound ebony sticks composing the body of the mace are surmounted by a globe of silver, upon which the two hemispheres are traced, while a silver eagle, with outstretched wings, is perched upon the summit of the globe. This may be interpreted as symbolising the United States and the Canadian Dominion, with Great Britain and her other Colonies governing the world between them. Isaiah prophecies of God's people Israel, when they shall become obedient, thus:—"They (Israel) that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles" (xl. 31). An old commentator and accomplished scholar renders the passage in this manner:—"Israel shall put forth fresh feathers like the moulting eagle."

It was a common and popular opinion for ages, lasting into the early part of the nineteenth century, that the eagle lives and retains his vigour to a great age; and that beyond the common lot of other birds, he moults in his old age, and renews his feathers and with them his youth. The Psalmist (ciii. 5), says: "Thou shalt renew thy strength like the eagle." A poet addressing himself to the emperor Michael Palæologus, junior, flatters him thus:—

> "Long may'st thou live, O king; still like the eagle > Renew thy youth, and still retain thy vigour."

The meaning and moral of the prophet are not difficult of comprehension. He no doubt referred to the common belief in the renewal of youth by the eagle, called the king of birds, because of his bulk, superior strength and vivacity. He saw, through his prophetic prevision, Israel spreading abroad, mighty and advancing from Pole to Pole, as the eagle encompasses all lands by the great power of his wings and his long endurance. He beheld, far distant, yet sure, Judah and Israel repentant, and joined together as one nation in the land, by a new and indissoluble covenant ratified in Zion before the Lord. He saw and gloried in the mingling or entwining of Israel of the thirteen tribes in their apparent old age, and in the "latter days" of the earth, casting aside as the eagle her moulting feathers, the encumbrance of their many sins, and renewing their youth and vigour. He also taught that they should be quickened by the Divine Spirit, that old things should be passed away, and all things become new.

The renewal of the strength of the Ten Tribes was assured when God became incarnate in the Person of the Lord Christ Jesus, the anniversary of which glorious event has just been celebrated wherever the Anglo-Saxon tongue is spoken. The renewal took place when the Gospel was first preached in the British Islands, perhaps by Paul himself. This renewal was repeated at the great Protestant Reformation when it was said unto outcast Israel: "Ye are the sons of the living God."

Isaiah evidently refers to the traditional rejuvenating power of the eagle in the words partly quoted before (xl. 31; xli. 1): "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles. . . . Keep silence before Me, O Islands, and let the peoples renew their strength." The simile appears to have been a favourite one with the prophets, and was well understood by the people.

RANDOM SHAFTS.

One of the religious weeklies has made a great discovery. It has been drawing attention to and bemoaning the fact that, in these days, when people are confronted with a new idea, they do not ask, Is it sound? but, What does So-and-So say about it?—So-and-So being their favourite guide. Mr. Editor, this is plagiarism. It has appeared in the Banner every month for the last fifteen years, yet your contemporary has not the courtesy to make any acknowledgment. However, its onslaught is quite justifiable. So-and-So has it much his own way, even in this nineteenth century, which may explain why the century is so very so-so. We are accustomed to hear that the present age is an era—is the era—of independent thought. There may be a grain or two of truth in this, but, broadly speaking, it is a gross delusion. To a large extent the world has changed its conductors; that is all. Before the revival of letters the Romish prelate opened his lips and none said him nay. Then the commentators ruled the roost. And now the professors come forward with their monstrous conclusions, with their protoplasmism, their spontaneous generation, and their transmutation of species, which are greedily devoured by gaping multitudes. Human nature is the same as ever. Outside the Church men and women blindly swallow the most hare-brained theories of fashionable atheists; inside, they may accept what they are taught, or reject it, but they seldom investigate it, and there can be no "independent thought" where there is no independent inquiry.

* * *

Despite the rival attractions of scientific professors, the world still has considerable faith in the commentators, and although it used to be stronger than it is, I did not know until recently that once on a time they were counted inspired. The following narrative plainly shows that the venerable John Brown, famed for his Self-interpreting Bible, was undoubtedly regarded as belonging to the prophetic line. A comet had been prowling round in the upper regions, and like comets of a later date, it was suspected of having designs on the earth. Panic on a small scale broke out, but the unbidden guest kept at a respectful distance, and proved to be inoffensive. When the danger was over, a parish minister called on one of his flock, who observed, "Weel, sir, what did ye think o' the comet?" "Well," the pastor replied, "it was a wonderful sight, but you see it has done no harm." "I aye said that, I aye said that," was the ardent response; "but plenty o' them wudna' believe it; they didna' soop in their horses for a fortnicht, for they said if they were to be burnt up they micht as weel be burned dirty as c'ean. But, sir, I just gaed to Brown's Dictionary, an' he says that the millennium is no' to begin till the year 2222, an' we ken that the world is to last at least 1,000 years after that. Noo hoo could it be burnt up e'enoo? The thing is perfec nonsense.'

Digitized by Google

***

It must be confessed—I confess it with contrition—that I was wont to stand in awe of the doctor myself. He gave one the impression that he was a genuine legate of the skies, with a commission to pull down and destroy, to build and to plant. He seemed to possess "plenipotentiary powers," lavishing his favours and launching his terrific judgments with the easy air of an autocrat. Louis XIV. signing the Revocation of the E lict of Nantes was nothing to it. With a stroke of his pen he would transfer immense territories and fabulous wealth to spiritual Israel, clothing it in the richest apparel and leaving literal Israel with hardly a rag. Yes, he was a clever man, and his generosity towards the Church (at the expense of others) simply had no bounds. But what began to shake my confidence in him were his extra-thick notes on Lev. xi., a chapter which instructs Israel as to foods fit and unfit. In treating of the fourth and subsequent verses, the spiritualizing fever rose to an abnormally high pitch. The pitch was a little too high.

***

Verse 4: These shall ye not eat of them that chew the cud or of them that divide the hoof: the camel, the coney, the hare, &c. "These pointed out persons who profess but do not practice the true religion." Verse 10: All that have not fins and scales in the seas, and in the rivers, of all that move in the waters, and of any living thing which is in the waters, they shall be an abomination unto you. "These figured out persons who have no faith and love, and no shining and soul-protecting righteousness, grace, and holy conversation." Verse 13, &c.: These are they which ye shall have in abomination among the fowls, they shall not be eaten, they are an abomination: the owl, the night-hawk, and the cuckoo, &c. "These fowls represented persons, cruel, selfish, ignorant, superstitious, or earthly-minded." Verse 29, &c.: These also shall be unclean unto you among the creeping things that creep upon the earth: the weasel, and the mouse, and the tortoise, &c. "These creeping animals pointed out persons ignorant, slothful, sensual, and earthly-minded." After this—well, anything.

***

Let His Holiness the Pope have a turn. Why shouldn't he? What is upright in an ultra-Protestant cannot be iniquitous in an Ultramontane? Good. And this is what a certain Pontiff propounds: "Through this pre-eminence of my priesthood, having all things subject to me, it may seem well verified in me that was spoken in Christ, 'Thou hast subdued all things under His feet, sheep and oxen, and all cattle of the field, the birds of heaven, and fish of the sea;' where it is to be noted that by oxen Jews and heretics, by cattle of the field Pagans, be signified. . . . By sheep and all cattle are meant all Christian men, both great and less, whether they be emperors, princes, and prelates, or others. By birds of the air you may understand angels and potentates of heaven, who be all subject to me, as that I am greater than the angels, and have power to bind and loose in heaven, and to give heaven to them that fight in my wars. Finally, by the fishes of the sea are signified the souls departed, in pain or in purgatory." Of course, we do not exactly admit that His Holiness controls both heaven and earth, but apart from this his elucidation of Scripture is not far amiss. The sentiment may be deemed disgraceful for a Protestant, but, candidly, I feel that the Pope has as much right to transform an ox into a heretic as our commentators have to convert an owl or a cuckoo into persons of superstitious proclivities.

***

The last addition to Philo-Israel's "Thoughts for the British Folk" is a leaflet entitled "Our Israelite Miners." As its name implies, it is specially intended for the mining population, and seeing that this is a very large section of the nation—or, rather, of the race—the demand for the tract ought to be proportionately heavy. There must be many Israelites in all our colliery districts, and they would do the Identity a real service if they scattered this little missive about. Fifteen hundred of them are being circulated among the pitmen of Durham and Northumberland, and that they will bear fruit is certain. Sometimes it only needs a spark to cause a big fire. One of the most active associations I ever knew was created by a single leaflet, and the leaflet was not to be compared with "Our Israelite Miners." Perhaps it is necessary to state that the latter is not addressed exclusively to pitmen. The mineral treasures of Israel—its tin, lead, iron, coal, silver, gold, and precious stones—form a telling argument, and as Philo-Israel has handled the matter in a comprehensive way, the tract is equally suitable for those who work with black diamonds or white ones. Indeed, the whole series of "Thoughts for the British Folk," of which there are now twenty-six in print, afford exceptional advantages to distributors of our literature. They are cheap (1s. the hundred), and they deal with particular classes or particular identifications, thus combining ample choice with moderate cost.

***

There is an earnest wish in several quarters that we Israelites should wear a distinguisher. Mr. Pain, in his letter to the BANNER, of Dec. 17th, recommends a badge sanctioned by the Metropolitan Association, while Mrs. Thompson, of the Bath Association, has another cognizance in hand, which was expected to be on sale before this: but manufacturers are slow in their movements at the festive season, and it will not be ready until the end of January. It is in the shape of a star, being emblematical of the Star of Jacob, and is formed by the union of a white St. Andrew's cross with a red St. George's, having the word "Israel" emblazoned on its face. Probably it would have been more acceptable without the inscription, and a set should be prepared minus the legend; but, anyway, it is superior to the Metropolitan insignia. Now, clearly, if we are to have a badge at all, there ought not to be two in the market. This would be true if we numbered as many millions as we do thousands, and therefore it strikes me that Mr. Pain's appeal was ill-timed, especially as the article he advocates does not meet with wide approval. Mr. Pain's object is just the same as Mrs. Thompson's, and if he were to co-operate with that lady in securing the adoption of the Bath badge, the results might be satisfactory to all concerned. Those who wish to be decorated with the new Order of the Bath should communicate with Mrs. Thompson, of 27, Pulteney-street, in that city. It will serve as a brooch, a pin, or a pendant for the chain.

JOHN SHOOTINGHAM.

Digitized by Google

GIGANTIC SALE OF

100 COLOURS TO SELECT FROM

GREATEST BARGAINS EVER OFFERED

In consequence of the mild season, we have still in stock over 250,000 DRESS LENGTHS of our famous Cloths which, in order to effect a rapid clearance we have reduced to less than Manufacturers' Cost Price. 100 lovely new colours to select from. All goods are new and in perfect condition. We will gladly send patterns post free, and they need not be returned. Write to-day for patterns and Sale Price List

FULL DRESS LENGTHS OF MAGNIFICENT CLOTHS 9s.6d. CARRIAGE PAID.

LADIES CLOTH DRESSES

GENUINE REDUCTIONS! WRITE FOR PATTERNS

LUTAS LEATHLEY & Co ARMLEY, LEEDS.

FOR CHILDPEN'S PARTIES AND SOCIAL GATHERINGS.

MASON'S WINE ESSENCES NON-INTOXICATING

A 6d. Bottle will make a Gallon of delicious Wine. Sample bottle post free for 9 stamps.

A LADY WRITES:

"The 6d. bottle of Ginger Wine Essence made several bottles of most delicious wine, far better than what we have paid 2/- a bottle for. It is most suitable for children's parties."

NEWBALL & MASON, NOTTINGHAM.

Mason's Extract of Herbs for making delicious non-intoxicating beer. A 6d. bottle makes eight gallons. Sample bottle, 9 stamps, or a sample of both Wine Essence and Extract of Herbs, post free, for 15 stamps. AGENTS WANTED.

The Fulness of the Nations; or, the A B C of the Promises Given to the House of Israel Considered in Relation to the Second Advent. By Dr. H. ALDER-SMITH. Cloth gilt, price 5s.

"My Jewels." Choice Selections from Writers of Sacred Poetry, with Appropriate Texts from Holy Scripture, arranged for every day. By SARAH SHARP. Gilt lettered, 1s. 8d.; Royal edition, white calf, gilt (as accepted by the Queen), 4s. 6d.

The Lost Ten Tribes of Israel. By the Rev. JOSEPH WILD, D.D., Pastor of Bond-street Congregational Church, Toronto. Price 3s.

London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C.

BIRLEY'S PHOSPHORUS.

The most SCIENTIFIC and RATIONAL Tonic of the present day. Dr. Birley's new process renders Phosphorus, which is necessary to health and strength of brain and nerve, absolutely unobjectionable to take for any length of time. Its therapeutic value also is greater than the crude Phosphorus usually prescribed. Descriptive pamphlet free to enquirers (mention this paper) from

GORDON, MURRAY & Co., Ltd.,

10, ADAM STREET, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.

"A WONDERFUL REMEDY."
"I WAS GIVEN UP BY ALL."
"SAVED FROM AN EARLY GRAVE."

Such are the words of grateful Patients relative to their CASES OF

CONSUMPTION

CURED BY THE TREATMENT OF

MR. GEO. T. CONGREVE.

Read his Book, "ON CONSUMPTION, &c." which may be had post free for ONE SHILLING from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.; or may be ordered of any Bookseller.

NOTE.—CONSULTATIONS FREE at Coombe Lodge, Peckham, on TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings only. No Charge except the usual charge for three weeks or six weeks' supply of medicine. All Patients should read the book first.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT

FOR

PARALYSIS

J. FULLER, Jun., Esq., Whiteparish, Salisbury, Wilts, writes:—"Since wearing your Electropathic Belt I am decidedly better and stronger. I have more confidence in myself, and the pain in my back is completely gone. Your Belt is truly wonderful."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST. LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

TEETH.—£1 A FULL SET

ESKELL'S.—CELEBRATED MAKE, £2 2s. Warranted and fitted in one visit. No extractions needed. HALF A MILLION SETS already supplied. The Nursing Record and Hospital World says:—We recommend all who require Reliable and Good Teeth at a small cost to go to Messrs. ESKELL, 445, Strand (facing Charing Cross Station), and 58, Ludgate Hill, City, London. Also at 27, Western Road, Brighton, and 23, Mount Pleasant, Tunbridge Wells. Hours 9 till 7. Illustrated Pamphlets, explaining everything, free. Established 100 years.

"THE WORLD'S PROVED REMEDY FOR ALL CHEST DISEASES."

COUGH, ASTHMA,

CHRONIC BRONCHITIS,

INFLUENZA,

THERE IS NONE TO EQUAL IT.

Rev. F. E. HEAPE, of DERBY, in a recent letter, says: "Your Medicine always puts my lungs right, and drove out the terrible INFLUENZA last May."

This Medicine has been prepared for 65 years.

CONGREVE'S BALSAMIC ELIXIR.

In Bottles, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 22s., may be had of all Chemists and Medicine Vendors.

TEA! TEA! TEA!

FROM

INDIA, CEYLON, AND CHINA.

Best Quality and Best Value.

From 1/6 to 3/6 per lb. Samples Gratis.

Carriage Paid on Parcels of 6lbs. and upwards.

Robinson & James,

42, TRINITY SQUARE, TOWER HILL, LONDON, E.C.

TOOTH-ACHE

CURED INSTANTLY BY

BUNTER'S NERVINE

Prevents Decay, Saves Extraction, Sleepless Nights Prevented.

Neuralgic Headaches and all Nerve Pains removed by BUNTER'S NERVINE. All Chemists, 1s. 1½d.

The most useful Tracts Published, Price ½d. each, one dozen copies post free for sixpence, in stamps, or 100 Assorted, post free for 4s.

ANGLO-ISRAEL TRACTS.

No. 1.—The Case Put Concisely. By the Right Rev. BISHOP TITCOMB, D.D.

No. 2.—The Inheritance of the Gentiles in Israel. By PHILO-ISRAEL.

No. 3.—Why Accept Anglo-Israelism? By W. S. CAVILL.

No. 5.—Our National Heirloom. By Mrs. G. ALBERT ROGERS.

No. 6.—Infidelity: and Our Responsibility as Anglo-Israelites. By A. E. I., Author of "The New Old Story."

No. 7.—An Appeal to the House of Judah. By the Right Rev. BISHOP TITCOMB, D.D.

No. 8.—The Crucial Test of Our Identity. By PHILO-ISRAEL.

No. 9.—Some Common Objections and Misapprehensions. By Surgeon-General J. M. GRANT, M.D.

No. 10.—Consistency. By DOUGLAS A. ONSLOW, J.P.

Price ½d. each; 1s. 6d. per 100. 12 copies post free 6½d.

Each Tract contains 8 royal 16mo. pages, folded, stitched, and cut.

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed "PHILO-ISRAEL," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION for the BANNER OF ISRAEL, in Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts. To any part of the United Kingdom, Canada, America, or Europe, in the postal union:—

	s. d.		s. d.
1 copy, including postage	.. 7 0	Tasmania	.. 7 0
New Zealand	.. 7 0	South Australia	.. 7 0
Cape Colony	.. 7 0	Queensland	.. 7 0
Victoria	.. 7 0	Natal	.. 7 0
Western Australia	.. 7 0	New South Wales	.. 7 0
Transvaal	.. 7 0	India	.. 7 0
		Ceylon, via Brindisi	.. 7 0

All Post Office Orders, Cheques, &c., should be crossed "City Bank, Ludgate-hill, to the ac. of ROBERT BANKS AND SON." They will then only be paid to our account.

READING CASES for holding the Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts, may be had, price 2s. Sent post free on receipt of Postal Order.

THE ANNUAL VOLUMES, bound in handsome blue cloth, price 8s.

THE MONTHLY PARTS, in tinted wrapper, published the last day of each month, 6d.

CONTRIBUTIONS TOWARDS the FREE DISTRIBUTION of the NEW YEAR'S DOUBLE NUMBER of the "BANNER OF ISRAEL."

Many friends have also sent remittances for sending copies to addresses given. These have been sent as directed, and are not included in this List.

	£ s. d.
G. Wells	0 1 0
J. G. Taylor	0 6 0
J. Roberts	0 1 0
C. C. Baker	0 3 0
G. Rouse	0 2 0
Lady Milbank	1 0 0
Mary M. James	0 4 0
Miss Grace C. Fraser	0 5 0
Charles G. Porter	1 1 0
"For 'Banner' Help"	0 1 9
E. J. C	0 3 0
W. Ralph	0 2 7
H. Lloyd	0 3 0
J. Hey	0 3 0
Mr. Hart, New Barnet	0 3 0
Rev. H. Fairlee	0 1 8
Mrs. Mansell	0 1 6
Mrs. Simon	0 10 6
J. Gilbert	0 0 9
S. T. Jones	0 0 9
J. C. F.	0 2 3
W. Parker	0 4 6
Hailes, Mrs.	0 4 3
Mrs Travers	0 18 6
Ogle, W.	0 1 6
Dungey	0 1 9
Miss Parker	0 1 9
Mrs Tyndale	0 1 6
W. Langly	0 2 6
Mrs. Shears	0 2 3
Mrs. Hussey	0 3 0
W. Henderson	0 14 0
E. K.	0 2 0
Mary Silvester	0 1 0
John Fenwick	0 14 0
Major Newbury	0 3 0

HANDSOME BLUE CLOTH
CASES FOR BINDING.
Price 1s. 6d., or post free, 1s. 8d.

VOLUME XVI. OF
THE BANNER OF ISRAEL,
Price 8s. Sent Post Free.
ROBERT BANKS AND SON, Racquet-ct., Fleet-st., E.C

The Future of Israel and Judah. Being the Discourses on the Lost Ten Tribes, from "How and When the World will End." By the Rev JOSEPH WILD, D.D. With portrait of Author. Price 2s.

Anglo-Israel; or, The Saxon Race Proved to be the Lost Tribes of Israel. By the REV. W. H. POOLE, D.D. Large royal 8vo., of 700 pages, with illustrations, price 10s. 6d.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-ct., Fleet-st., E.C.

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co. (Ltd.) 23, Paternoster-row. Wednesday, JANUARY 11, 1893. All Rights Reserved.

Just ready, 220 Large Post 8vo. pages, in clear, readable type, price 2s. 6d., limp cloth, gilt lettered, red edges, post free to any part of the world on receipt of postal remittance.

Nineteen Centuries Ago and NOW.

BY J. C. H. MEHL.

WITH BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH,

BY E. M. RUSH.

LONDON:
ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., or by order of any bookseller.

AT SPECIALLY REDUCED PRICE.
Carriage Paid to any address in the United Kingdom or the Colonies, Fifth and last Edition, published at 16s.,
FOR 11s. 6d.
C. PIAZZI SMYTH'S well-known work,
OUR INHERITANCE
IN THE
GREAT PYRAMID,
with
TWENTY-FIVE EXPLANATORY PLATES,
showing the more crucial parts of this really Anti-Egyptian and most Primeval Structure, in Plan, Elevation, and Section.

As the number of copies to be offered at this reduced price is very limited, early application should be made direct to Messrs. R. Banks and Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London.

USEFUL BOOKS FOR BIBLE STUDENTS.
In Two Vols., about 500 pages in each, cloth bound, price 5s., originally published at 7/6.
HISTORY OF THE JEWS
In Three Concurrent Sections.

I.—Ten Books of the Antiquities of the Jews, as TRANSLATED by WHISTON, with Notes from FLAVIUS JOSEPHUS.

II.—The Bible Narrative from the Creation to the Captivity at Babylon, fully given and faithfully rendered.

III.—A Modern History of the Jews. Abridged and Offered as a Commentary on the Preceding Sections.

The Two Volumes sent post free for 5/3 nett To be had only direct from ROBERT BANKS AND SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

"I am delighted with this."—PHILO-ISRAEL.
NEW AND IMPROVED EDITION OF
ISRAEL'S WORLD,
By Rev. HENRY ROE. 2d.
Also "Consecration," 2d., "Going to Africa," 1s.; "West African Scenes," 2s.; "Fernando Po Mission," 1s. Also "Israel's World" and "Consecration" bound together in cloth, with Author's latest photograph portrait, 1s.

Order of ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C., or of Rev. HENRY ROE, Radstock, via Bath.

Jehovah Triumphant. The New and Complete Theology and Electric Light of the Bible, containing the History of British-Israel, compiled from the Sacred Scriptures. A handsome crown 8vo., cloth bound volume of 550 pages, with Index of Scripture references. Price 5s. (published at 10s.), post free for P.O.

LUNG SAVE YOUR LIVES BY TAKING TONIC
OWBRIDGE'S LUNG TONIC
THE MIGHTY HEALER.
It has a power over disease hitherto unknown in Medicine.
Are you at all Weak-chested or inclined to be Consumptive, with just a touch of Cough now and then?
"Try this Wonderful Medicine." The Cough and Weakness will disappear as if by magic, and you will feel a strength and power you never had before.
HAVE YOU A COUGH?
A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT.
HAVE YOU A COLD?
A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL REMOVE IT!
Bronchitis & Asthma it relieves instantly
The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful in Whooping Cough become less with each dose of the medicine.
Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE Chemist Hull
Sold in bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d. 4s. 6d. and 11s.. by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors. Wholesale all London and Provincial Houses.

The True and Divine Appointment for the Cure of Disease.
Send to
B. V. SCOTT, M.B.M.R.S.,
College of Health, 121, Kensington, Liverpool,
for his
VOICE OF NATURE TO THE INVALID,
Post free 5 stamps.

Thousands of incurables (so-called) have proved God's own means could save when others failed.

Rev. F. Harper says of Mr. Scott's book: "It is a library in itself, and free from quackery."

Rev. Lush says: "Mr. Scott's treatment is natural, safe, reasonable, and Scriptural."

Send for the Book at once.

PAGE WOODCOCK'S
WIND PILLS
A CLERGYMAN
Writes: "I am so convinced from my own experience and that of others of the real value of your WIND PILLS, in complaints arising from a disordered state of the STOMACH, BOWELS, or LIVER, that I wish much to promote the use of the Medicine in this parish, and I now inclose P.O. for a large box, and should be glad of some papers for circulation among my parishioners. In my own case
Page Woodcock's Wind Pills
have been of the greatest use. I have no objection to your publishing my communication, provided you divulge not my name and address, which you may give, nevertheless, to those who require such a verification."—Vicarage, near Malvern.

All Sufferers from INDIGESTION, LIVER COMPLAINTS, WIND on the STOMACH, COSTIVENESS, SICK HEADACHE, HEARTBURN, PALPITATION of the HEART, BILIOUSNESS, &c.,
should avail themselves of this most excellent medicine.

☞ The WIND PILLS being PURELY VEGETABLE, TASTELESS, and MILD and TONIC in their action, may be taken with perfect safety by the most delicate of either sex.

Of all Chemists, at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d., or Post Free for P.O. or Stamps, from PAGE WOODCOCK, LINCOLN.

NEW CATALOGUE of Works on Our Identity post free from R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India).

"And the Remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS OF THE EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XVII., No. 838. Entered at Stationer's Hall.] WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 18, 1893 [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
Imperial Federation in London, Ontario, Canada	37
Israel's Efforts to Bless the Nations of the World	38
"The Barren Woman" Becomes "the Joyful Mother of Children"	39
The Vast, World-Wide Importance of the Fact that Israel is Found	39
The Success of Indian Railways	40
Captain Lugard's Speech in Liverpool	42
The Restoration of the Jews to Palestine	43
By-Paths of Bible Knowledge. By Jas. P. Bastard	44
Letter to the Chairman of the Christian Evidence Society from an Anglo-Israelite	44
Letter to One Minister Regarding the Sermon of Another	45
Correspondence	45
Blind Evidence	46

IMPERIAL FEDERATION IN LONDON, ONTARIO, CANADA.

THE Daily Free Press of London, Ontario, of Nov. 29th last, contained the report of an enthusiastic meeting of the Imperial Federation League, when a branch of that body was formed there. The Bishop of Huron, Dr. Baldwin, presided, and the speeches were of a very patriotic, loyal description. The object of the meeting was "to consolidate the British Empire," which was a good way of expressing the purpose of God respecting Israel of our days—namely, to constitute her a nation and a company of nations. The Bishop was strongly in favour of "building up our vast dominion," as part of the great Empire to which it was their privilege to belong. He regarded with enthusiasm "the dignity of our own Empire." He looked on Canada as their "heritage," but it was a part of the very being of Canadians that they should maintain the unity of the mother country with their own Canada. The Rev. Principal Miller, with whom some of us are acquainted on this side the water, made an eloquent speech, of which the following is an imperfect résumé:—

Rev. Principal Miller moved, seconded by Rev. T. F. Kingsmill, a number of resolutions expressing pleasure at the progress being made by the League. The mover said he would be unworthy the name of a British subject, much less the name of an Englishman, if he could not give his hearty support to this scheme of confederation. It was of vital importance to Canada to maintain the British connection, and it too was of vital importance to Great Britain to retain her Empire in unity. (Applause.) The advantages proposed to be reaped by the adoption of this scheme were threefold—material, moral, and political. The material advantages were evident in the great market Great Britain afforded for all the products of Canada. When the McKinley Bill was put in force it was said that Canada would thereby be forced to seek connection with the United States, but the result proved quite contrary to expectations. (Applause.) In 1881 the exports from Canada amounted to 98,500,000 dols., and in the present year it was 114,000,000 dols. (Applause.) And so the closing up of what some people called our natural market had resulted in the opening up of some more remunerative and more natural markets. (Applause.) It would be impossible for Canada to profit by annexation with the United States. We could not hope to feed any considerable portion of the United States, while their mill men and manufacturers would enter into keen competition with our manufacturers in our own country. It had been truly said that a week's journey across the continent found a greater barrier than any tariff that could be formed even in the mind of a McKinley. (Laughter.) Great Britain with her forty millions of people, who would rather be fed by their own kin, provided the real market for Canada. (Applause.) Speaking of the moral value of federation, the rev. gentleman said that no people would ever be great unless they were filled with large public spirit and a continuous political purpose. (Applause.) "I do think that it would be an incalculable loss if we were to discard lightly all the grand traditions of the past," the speaker continued, and he was vigorously applauded for his sentiment. Generations must pass before we could hope to win such a voice in the affairs of the nations as we now could utter as a part of the great British Empire—the greatest power the world had ever known. The advantages that would accrue to England were found in the certainty of its food supply, and for which it would not then be dependent upon foreigners. Suppose war should break out with Russia, what would become of Great Britain's wheat supply? And then there was the strategic value of the railways and waterways of Canada, and the fact that the people of the motherland could come here and build up new homes without parting with one jot or tittle of their home rights and privileges, and without passing from beneath their flag. (Applause.) As a son of England and an adopted son of Canada he expressed the hope that the good relations between Canada and the mother country should continue, and he recognised in that union that we were invulnerable. (Applause.)

The gist of Principal Miller's speech was to show that Canada and Britain were indispensable to each other, and together formed "the greatest power the world had ever known." The other speakers were equally patriotic. Lieut.-Colonel Gartshore, an Englishman, and Mr. H. Macklin, a North

Digitized by Google

Irishman, declared they were loyal to the mother country and desired to remain with her, but never to throw her over, in order to seek for impossible markets in the United States. while the British people were the natural customers of Canada for all articles of consumption.

The Bishop of Huron, in replying at the close of the meeting, declared that he loved the Empire, "not because we think of her vast population, nor because commercially and politically she holds so great a sway," but because of her troubled past history, and "because of the triumphs to which she can this day point." He remarked that our nation had contended for and won national liberty, while "to-day the people of Europe are sighing because they have not got it!" "Such liberty," said his Lordship, "makes free the Anglo-Saxon race. Look at Rome to-day, and look at Italy, stretching from Lombardy to Sicily on the South, and then look at England sitting on her rocky isle and giving out justice to her people! Italy's ideas were carried from that old island that her legions once held in their iron grasp. . . . The great Anglo-Saxon race has fought for religious liberty. The great battle of liberty for the slave was fought in Britain. When England emancipated the slaves of the West Indies the battles she fought were long, anxious, keen, and sometimes bitter. And to-day the English flag is a symbol, not of thraldom, but the symbol of the truth and liberty as it is in the Word of God. (Applause.) Look at the religious liberty that her people have! Look at the various creeds that are within her to-day! And what nation is it that has a greater liberty than her people? (Applause.) And if her Bible is free to all, if every person can worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, that victory has been first fought out in the dear old motherland, that claims us for her own." Concluding, his Lordship repeated the pleasure he felt in being able to serve the Federation League movement in any way in his power, and on resuming his seat was vigorously applauded.

The speakers at the above meeting, we are assured, knew nothing of Our Identity, or at any rate did not publicly admit that they believed it. Yet how wonderfully they one and all followed on the lines of our great subject, and appealed to each point as one on which they placed reliance. In advocating the union of the colonies and the mother nation, they expressed in words the spirit of the prophecy which declared that the afterseed of Abraham should become "a nation and a company of nations" (Gen. xxxv. 11, and xlviii. 19).

The Bishop of Huron was not content with speaking in general terms of the Empire he loves so well. He alluded to her vast population, which we know is a sign of Israel in the latter days (Gen. xxii. 17 and Hos. i. 10). Her commercial and political greatness, as well as her power over the nations, were matters with which he was familiar, he said; but how was it the Bishop forgot that in these very respects Israel was to be distinguished according to Deut. viii. 18, where "the power to get wealth" was promised her (by lawful commerce, of course), and her "reigning or ruling capacity" over the nations was guaranteed to her, as well as the ability always "to lend to many nations, but never to borrow," was predicted as her exclusive and special attributes in Deut. xv. 6 and xxviii. 1, 12, 13 (R.V.). The Bishop glanced at our nation's past troubled history, but he did not reflect that our troubles were but a continuation of Israel's, and that in our present prosperity we had devoted ourselves to the vindication of national liberty, of religious liberty, and to the liberty and freedom of the African, and all other slaves wherever slavery of any kind exists. He appealed to our national conduct as founded on "the Word of God," our love of religious liberty ourselves, but failed to connect all this with God's promise to one people only, that He would show His words, His statutes, and His judgments to Jacob and Israel only, and that He would not so deal with any nation, since they have not known His judgments at all (Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20).

The subject of the federation of the Empire is founded as anyone can see upon the identity of our nation with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel; but the wonder is that while bishops, statesmen, heads of colleges, colonels, and lawyers agreed in attributing to the British Empire qualities and functions that God has tied up exclusively to His chosen ones, the children of Israel, these learned ones were not able "to see" that they were all the time speaking of Israel while extolling their old mother in "the Isles of the West," and so fulfilling another prophecy in Isa. xlii. 18, 19, and xliii. 8—12, which declared of them as part of the nation that claims them as her sons that they were "blind." To the Lord be all the praise, even for the blindness of Israel, because, though blind, God Himself has all along been our glorious and divine Guide, Protector, Saviour, and God (Isa. xlii. 16, R.V.).

ISRAEL'S EFFORTS TO BLESS THE NATIONS OF THE WORLD.

THE following annual summary of British contributions to all missionary societies for the propagation of the Gospel in foreign parts—that is, throughout the whole world—has been issued by Canon Scott Robertson for the 21st time. He says:—

"The total for the year 1891 is £1,421,509, which is larger than that for 1890 by £120,203. The channels of contributions selected by the donors were as follows:—

Church of England Societies	£539,510
Joint Societies of Churchmen and Nonconformists	206,330
Nonconformist Societies in England and Wales	456,348
Scotch and Irish Presbyterian Societies	210,306
Roman Catholic Societies	9,015
Total	£1,421,509."

The above, which appeared in the papers on Nov. 17th last, is satisfactory as showing a fair advance, and as exhibiting Israel's chief Church—the Church of England—well ahead of her rivals in making known the glorious Gospel of Christ to all the nations, families, and kindreds of the earth. The wretched position occupied by the Church of Rome, acting through the Roman Catholic societies, shows at a glance where God's blessing rests and where it is lacking. The Protestant societies disbursed over £1,412,000 in the cause of the Gospel; but Rome, which poses as "the true Church," touches but £9,015, and can do no more. All that see the agents of Rome at work among the nations cannot but perceive that they are not "the seed that the Lord hath blessed," but that the British Israelites are! We do not say that the million and a-half sterling, which is about the limit (as yet) of our nation's sacrifices for Christ, are an adequate return to Him for the national blessings He has bestowed on us. Far from it! But we do say that the work represented by the large figures we quote point to what is already a world-wide attempt to preach Christ to all nations, and to distribute His written Word in both British and foreign lands.

Digitized by Google

Greater efforts than these will doubtless follow, and sums adequate to our nation's wealth will be spent when God calls for the men and means; for He it is who giveth Israel power to get wealth, that He, not we, "may establish His covenant which He sware unto our fathers, as it is this day (Deut. viii. 18).

No other nations on the face of the earth can compare with ours in the extent of the efforts we are making to evangelize the world, and none others excepting our kinsmen in the United States have come near the sums which we are spending with this object in view. None, in short, have the message to proclaim to the nations, since none fully accept the Gospel themselves. The figures are in fact an indication of our Israelitish origin, and we trust no one will despise them. God has accepted our national missionary efforts and blessed us. We must praise Him for His grace!

"THE BARREN WOMAN" BECOMES "THE JOYFUL MOTHER OF CHILDREN."

THE Word of God is rich in allegorical teaching not only in the New Testament but in the Old as well. In Psa. cxiii., which begins and ends with the hallelujah song of praise which we so desire to imitate in the BANNER OF ISRAEL, we have allusion by allegory and metaphor to Israel, God's servants, degraded in the dust by sin, but raised by His grace to the rank of the princes of the earth, who, being like the barren woman of Isa. liv. 1, is by His grace made like the sand of the sea-shore which cannot be measured nor numbered, according to Hos. i. 10, and finally appears to the world not only as a mother of children but as a joyful mother of a vast progeny, praising the Lord for the good gift as the Author of all her blessings. We are aware that Psa. cxiii. is regarded by those who spiritualize the passage as a proof of the Lord's condescension to the Church without the least reference to Israel of the House of Ephraim or Joseph. He condescends, it is said, (1) To behold the things that are in heaven and in earth; (2) To raise up the poor out of the dust and to lift the needy out of the dunghill; (3) To set them with princes, even with the princes of His people; and (4) To make His Church a joyful mother of children.

It may be asked, in reference to this view, whether, if David, in this psalm sung of the Church, but not of Israel, when the Church as a spiritual body shared in the elevation of princes? and those princes the magnates of Israel, God's people? Whether the Church, quâ Church, has become so grandly numerous on the earth as to be compared to "a joyful mother" of Christian, believing children? The psalm seems to us rather to refer to the chosen seed of Israel, who are addressed in ver. 1 as "the servants of Jehovah," and as such called on to praise Him. "The servants of the Lord" are, in Isa. lxiii. 17, R.V., declared to be "the tribes of His inheritance," those Ten-tribed ones who have become as those over whom God never bore rule, as those not called by His name—that is, His Lo-ammi, outcasts (Hos. i. 9). In Isa. xli. 8, 9, the Lord's servant is openly described as Israel, who were in circumstances of distress and terror, but who were nevertheless God's chosen ones whom He would not cast away. In Isa. xliii. 10 the assurance is repeated, "Ye are My servant whom I have chosen." Those who are degraded in the dust and whose abode is the dunghill but are destined to be "set with princes, even the princes of His people" (that is, Israel), must be Israelites themselves.

The House of which the psalmist speaks is obviously the House of Ephraim-Israel, since the allusion of ver. 9 is clearly to Isa. liv. 1. "Sing, O barren, that didst not bear: break forth into singing, and cry aloud, thou that didst not travail with child, for more are the children of the desolate than the children of the married wife, saith the Lord." Those addressed here, as ver. 17 proves, are "the servants of the Lord," whose righteousness is God's own righteousness, even that of Jehovah-Jesus. The House of Israel was "the wife forsaken and grieved in spirit" of ver. 6, forsaken by the Lord for a small moment, but with great mercies gathered since (ver. 7). For these are mercies reserved, unbounded in extent, and precious in value. This is she who, according to Micah v. 3, was to travail and bring forth, but according to Hos. i. 10, was to have for the number of the children of Israel, a population as the sand of the sea, which cannot be measured nor numbered, and was also to be reckoned in her outcast condition as "the sons of the living God."

The counterpart of all this, then, appears in Psa. cxiii., and the reference is surely not to the believing Church of God, but to the House of Israel, which is to appear in these last days as a great and mighty nation, noted for its wondrous numerical increase, a people set high above all the nations of the earth, whose sons are literally "set with princes, even with the princes of God's people Israel."

Viewed in this light, there is a beauty and a glory in this psalm which connects it with the facts of the present hour. It calls for the praises of God by British-Israel, because our history shows forth God's faithfulness to His oaths, to Abraham and his seed for ever, which is a lasting comfort to His servant Israel. St. Paul, in Gal. iv. 21—31, R.V., connects the barren woman of Isa. liv. 1 with Isaac and the children of promise as opposed to Jerusalem of his day, but declares that he and the Galatian Christians he addressed were the children of the free woman, Sarah, the free Jerusalem, our mother, as represented by the allegory.

THE VAST, WORLD-WIDE IMPORTANCE OF THE FACT THAT ISRAEL IS FOUND.

MEN find it hard to believe that the discovery of the Lost Ten Tribes as the British Nation and Empire, can be of any real importance to the world. Men have got on very well, they argue, for the last 25 centuries without Israel, and there can be no good to come of the asserted detection of the lost people in the inhabitants of these Islands of the West. Godly folks, men and women, who love the Lord Jesus Christ, are just as hard to persuade as their brethren of the world, who care for none of these things, after the fashion of Gallio of Achaia. They deny the Scriptural importance of the discovery of the Ten Tribes. For salvation, they say, does not depend on the whereabouts of Ephraim-Israel, and even if they are ever to be restored to God's favour after their vile conduct towards Him, their salvation will concern only themselves, but will be of no avail to any sinner of the Gentiles. To those who argue in this fashion, and so make light of the provision God has made for the terrible miseries of the nations lying in the wicked one by and through the agency of Christ's messengers, Christian Israel, we desire to speak and to place before them certain considerations founded on three important passages of Scripture, which we have no doubt are closely connected, though hitherto the connection between them has been ignored, or missed, and passed by from carelessness. The first of these is Hosea i. 10, a passage with which BANNER readers are very well acquainted. It runs thus in the Revised Version : "Yet the number of the children of Israel shall be as the sand of the sea which cannot be measured nor numbered, and it shall come to pass, that instead of that which was said unto them, 'Ye are not My people,' it shall be said unto them, 'The sons of the living God.'" This is the marginal reading which seems preferable. But the text agrees with the Authorised Version, and renders thus : "And it shall come to pass, that in the place where it was said to them, Ye are not My people, it shall be said to them, Ye are the sons of the living God." This passage clearly declares that God's outcast, banished, Lo-ammi ones, should yet in days subsequent to Hosea's epoch, become exceedingly numerous, and that in the very spot, where they should be declared by the majority of men not to be Israel at all, they should become known and spoken of as "the Christian nation," veritably "the sons of the living God;" therefore, according to John i. 12, "believers in the Lord Jesus Christ." The event spoken of then—namely, the discovery of Israel as a Christian people—was one reserved for the Christian Dispensation, while in their Gentile disguise and when the mark of multitudinousness was very remarkably apparent upon them. These two signs alone suffice to point to the British people, since they alone among the nations respond to the dual signs of vast population-increase, hand-in-hand with true evangelical Christianity exhibited in the national character.

Digitized by Google

We come now to apostolic days, to the time when the Lord of glory was an Infant of days. He was brought to the Temple for circumcision, when the aged Simeon, a righteous and devout man, looking for the consolation of Israel, took the Lord in his arms and said : (R.V.)

"Now lettest Thou Thy servant depart, O Lord, according to Thy Word, in peace.

"For mine eyes have seen Thy salvation, which Thou hast prepared before the face of all peoples.

"A light for the revelation (or apocalypse or unveiling) of the Gentiles (or nations), and the glory of Thy people Israel."

We have here the fact that God's people Israel were to be glorified by Christ's revelation or unveiling of something among the nations. Now Israel was among the nations according to Hosea i. 9, 10, buried, unknown, unrecognised as Israel, called by God Himself "not His people," and yet subjects of His mercy and grace. They were even as Gentiles or one of "the nations," to be known as "the sons of God." Simeon then foresaw that the Infant Jesus having come, was about to discover Israel, His hidden ones, among the nations, to be a light for their revelation among them, and such revelation was to be "the glory" of His people Israel.

The discovery of Israel in Britain then, foreseen by Hosea, and revealed to Simeon, was a still future event to that time, and was destined to occur later on in the Christian Dispensation, when Divine power should unveil one of the so-called Gentile nations, and reveal to the world that that nation was lost Israel, the multitudinous—that is, the Imperial Race !

We now come to our third and decisive text, showing the inexpressible importance of the discovery of Israel to the world at large. In Rom. viii. 18 (R.V.), the apostle was writing of the sons of God—the children who were heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ, to suffer and be glorified with Him. "For," he adds, "I reckon that the sufferings of this present time (St. Paul's time), are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed to us-ward. For, the earnest expectation of the creation waiteth for the revealing of the sons of God." The creation was subjected to vanity—to the bondage of corruption, and it is to be delivered from both into the liberty of the glory of the children of God" (ver. 21) We see, then, the immense importance of the revelation of the Israelite children of God; the Ten-tribed multitudes, who, in their outcast Lo-ammi state, are to be acknowledged as "the sons of the living God." When that event occurs the creation as a whole will be delivered from its curse—"the bondage of corruption." And yet men ask us what good the revelation and unveiling of Israel will bring to the world ! To the Christian Church, too, the discovery or recovery of Israel will bring immense relief and consolation.

St. Paul admits that in verse 23, where he said, "And not only so, but ourselves also, which have the firstfruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves, groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption (or sonship), to wit the redemption of our body." How glorious, then, is the discovery of the Ten Tribes and their restoration to God's favour ! It is as "life from the dead" (Rom. viii. 15, R.V.). "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and the knowledge of God ! How unsearchable are His judgments and His ways past tracing out !" (ver. 33).

THE SUCCESS OF INDIAN RAILWAYS.

OF all the merely material reforms which are revolutionising India, silently and almost without observation, the most remarkable is the railway, its rapid extension and financial results. It took ten years, half a century ago, to persuade the East India Company of the value of what the Marquis of Dalhousie urged on them as the greatest improvement which man's invention has yet applied to the means of movement —the locomotive engine upon iron rails. When at last, in 1853 from Bombay, and in 1855 from Calcutta, the first short sections of the great trunk system which crosses the peninsula of Hindostan were opened, a steady fight was maintained till the authorities were convinced that fares low enough to tempt the poor millions of the natives to travel would soon make Indian railways pay better dividends than will ever be possible in Great Britain, so far as ordinary capital is concerned. Step by step the passenger rates have been reduced, till from Chaman (near Kandahar) and Peshawur in the far north to Tinnevelley and Tuticorin in the extreme south, the third-class fare is below the third of a penny per mile. Not till 1870 did the Government of India in India realise its own success, when the Dalhousie policy, which had created the great trunk lines which cross and recross India by means of guaranteed companies, gave place to an extensive form of railway development by the direct agency of the State. Giving up the India gauge of 5½ feet as too costly and slow in construction, the authorities would have nothing but light lines to feed the trunk system on the metre gauge. This craze continued ten years, long enough to disorganize the Imperial organization of railways all over India by the short-sighted break of guage, when, in 1880, private enterprise was again invited to help, and there was a return to the 5½ feet gauge, which may now be taken as the uniform system of the future, for both strategic and commercial reasons, save in isolated or hilly tracts. The State has bought up the early guaranteed companies, and has created sinking funds and annuities for the commutation of their capital. It continues to invite private undertakings, like that of the Bengal and North-Western Railway, to which it gave no direct pecuniary help, while it encourages others by assistance in varying forms, and uses them to construct and work State lines. The whole enterprise is now on right lines, and in every case Government reserves power to take over each new railway at stated times and terms. India enjoys all the advantages of the English system of private enterprise and working, with those of the continental plan of State ownership and control.

Digitized by Google

The results, as revealed by the telegraphed figures of the Simla report of the Director-General of Indian Railways, justify the present administrative system. The year 1891 saw an addition of 874 miles to the open railways of India, and 1,697 are this year under construction—namely, the Assam-Bengal, the Mu Valley, and the line from Attok to the Punjab hill station of Murree. How the great Lord Dalhousie—who was cheered when dying by Lord Canning's message that his railway had from Calcutta reached the Ganges at Rajmahal—would have rejoiced over the fact that there are some 18,000 miles of railway now open in India, and that the average return on all lines on capital expenditure is 5¾ per cent.! This has been reached after paying the third of a million sterling into a sinking fund, and in the face of the fall in the silver exchange. It is the shareholders of the guaranteed companies who are benefited meanwhile; but the loss of the State, due to the early contracts to pay interest in gold at the average rate of 4¾ per cent., raised to 6½ by the depreciation of silver, has steadily fallen year by year, till now it is less than a quarter of a million sterling, and will soon be converted into gain. Had silver remained at par, as in Lord Dalhousie's days, the Government of India's share of the profit would have been £695,000 last year.

The latest railway figures have a human interest of their own. A quarter of a million of natives, or rather more, are employed upon them, as artisans in the workshops, as labourers on the permanent way, as clerks and writers, as stokers, and—in increasing numbers every year—as engine-drivers of goods trains. If British rule is slowly killing out the native arts and industries, as is said, it has introduced such widespread civilization as is involved in railway construction and working, and in cotton, jute, and paper mills. So many as 4,626 Europeans and 5,936 Eurasians are on the railway staff, but the former are gradually giving place to the mixed and native races. The pure Europeans are costly, an engine-driver being better paid than a Christian missionary. The whole employed staff have raised a volunteer force of 8,900 soldiers. This is a real addition to the army, for ever since the Mutiny of 1857 railway stations have been built so as to be easily converted into forts of refuge and defence. The Europeans are exposed to hardships of climate, which, in such a season of extreme heat as the past, caused serious suffering and mortality. A driver's work in May and June on the plains of India is appalling. Sunstroke is frequent. Philanthropic and spiritual agencies are at work for the good of the men and their families in the central places, but the temptations to practical heathenism are many.

The railway accidents are happily few, for even express speed does not exceed thirty miles an hour. Only 56 persons were killed and 135 injured, otherwise than by their own fault, last year. Yet the railways carry nearly 120 millions of human beings every year, besides 26 millions of tons of goods. The passengers are natives to the extent of 97 per cent. of the whole. The flux and reflux of this vast number of Asiatics, hitherto, by creed and custom, immovably attached to their own homesteads save when tempted to walk or crawl to the nearest shrine, if it could be traced in detail, would reveal an upheaval of the lowest strata of our Indian subjects and an intellectual movement among them of a kind such as even the experts fail to realize. And the education process has only begun. Each year sees nearly a thousand miles opened in British districts and native States over which the darkness of all the past centuries has brooded. Every year five millions more of our native fellow-subjects are tempted to travel by rail who never before saw the lightning horse, as they call the locomotive. The priests who fatten on the offerings at the pilgrim shrines were the first to bless the railway, for it brings to them greater crowds, with more money than when that was spent on tedious journeys on foot. What do they know of the irony of the situation, when the same railway is proving the sure destroyer of caste and is undermining the superstition by which they live? Hinduism will last their time.

One rich peculiarity of the Indian railways is this, that the companies are owners of the great coalfields which they have tapped. In ten years the output of Indian coal has more than doubled, till it is above two millions of tons. Since Stephen Hislop discovered coal in the Central Provinces, in the Saturday walks which alone he allowed himself as an overworked missionary, the fields of Wardha, Chanda, and the Satpoora region have revealed deposits like that of Mohpani, twenty feet thick. The import of English fuel for railways which do not command such a supply has gradually been reduced to a quarter of a million of tons a year. The railway supplies in the Central and Bengal Provinces are feeding the as yet infant manufactures of native India.

From every point of view, material and moral, the British Government has good reason to be proud of its Indian railways. But even were they as costly as they are profitable to the shareholders and beneficial to the people, the railways of India must be made and maintained for strategic reasons. Although he said little about that, save in his secret dispatches, it was on military grounds that Lord Dalhousie urged their construction, and with a view to the defence of the Empire that he planned their route from Calcutta to Lahore, from Agra through Gwalior and other warlike States to Bombay, and from Poona by the borders of Haidarabad to Madras. Lahore was hardly reached before the late Lord Napier of Magdala, who had made the costly trunk road thence to Peshawur, gave the Government of India no rest till a system of military railways for the north-west frontier was planned. What that distinguished engineer-soldier began, till he saw the iron horse enter Peshawur, his successors, especially Lord Roberts, have largely extended. The evil second Afghan War had one good result: it compelled the Government to hurry on the frontier lines, till the British locomotive is now within an hour's English express railway journey of Kandahar. Only Afghanistan proper is left out of our railway system, for political reasons; but the next, the impending, troubles there should see a line of some kind laid from the Himalayas, where it temporarily rests, to the Hindoo Koosh. The railway is the great peace-maker and peace-keeper of our Indian Empire.—The Scotsman, August 2nd, 1892.

It is important to note that at this same time the Assyrians also carried away most all of the smaller Gentile and kindred nations who occupied the contiguous eastern borders of Israel. Among them were the Ammonites, the Moabites, the Midianites, the Rechabites, the Edomites, and most of the Amalekites and Idumeans.—Our Race.

Digitized by Google

CAPTAIN LUGARD'S SPEECH IN LIVERPOOL.

THE Liverpool Courier, of December 1st, published Captain Lugard's address to the representatives of commerce in Liverpool on the previous day. The meeting was crowded as a matter of course, and the captain's address was one regarding which an Anglo-Israelite listener reported to us "that in many respects it might have been uttered by one of our own 'crazy people!'" We quote it, therefore, as reported for the information and instruction of our readers.

Captain Lugard, who was warmly welcomed, said that while deeply sensible of the honour conferred upon him by the Chamber inviting him to read a paper, he felt incompetent to do justice to the opportunity, for public speaking had hitherto formed no part of his duties. Moreover, in dealing with the commercial side of the question he was at a special disadvantage. On his arrival in Uganda he found the country so torn by internal dissensions, that almost his whole time was taken up with administration. Hence the question of the commercial value of the districts concerned could not be said as yet to have been fairly tested or to have received adequate attention. The source from which he had hoped to raise a revenue in Uganda, in the immediate present, was mainly by dues on ivory, and by certain taxes. Traders from the coast would pay a trading tax on their exports to assist the cost of administration, and in return for the safety to life and property which that administration would bring. There would, of course, be no monopoly of trade. (Hear, hear.) That he had distinctly repudiated by the terms of the treaty he had made with the King. The only dues levied would be such as were justly due in recognition of the corresponding advantages enjoyed. A poll tax on natives he looked upon as a dangerous experiment in the very early stages of development in Africa. (Hear, hear.) The natives did not yet appreciate the reasons for such taxation, and such taxes, moreover, would be difficult to collect. The products of interior Africa were of two classes—those whose value rendered them profitable under present modes of transport, and those which would be available were a cheaper form of transport introduced. Of the first class the most important by far was ivory. It was his own idea before penetrating into the countries to the west of Uganda, that the supply of ivory must rapidly fail. But he had come away from East Africa with the knowledge that there were yet vast quantities of ivory available. (Hear, hear.) Opposed though he was to the destruction of the elephant for its ivory, there was no room for hesitation if the choice was to lie between the abandonment of the natives to destruction, or the destruction of the elephant to provide a source of revenue. In any case elephants were being destroyed wholesale by the Manyema ivory hunters, and the Arabs of the Congo Free State. Unless concerted action were taken for their preservation, it would be a Quixotic humanity which would stand by with empty pockets to see the Manyema fill theirs at our expense. (Hear, hear.) These remarks had been only applied to the districts on the border of the Congo State, and he urged that measures should be taken for the preservation of elephants in the internal districts of the British sphere. Next, perhaps, in order of value for export purposes was coffee. It was important to note that Uganda afforded large areas of country not at present under cultivation, so that there was room for the cultivation to any extent of coffee, and even of cereals. He had little doubt that tea could also be grown, and that the conditions were suitable for viticulture. Throughout East Africa he had observed large quantities of what in India was called "cotton soil." In the Southern Soudan large quantities of cotton were grown, and its culture was being introduced in the areas adjoining the Albert Lake. After speaking in detail of the production of gums and cereals in Uganda and adjoining districts, Capt. Lugard said that culture for purposes of export of cereals must necessarily depend on a cheap form of transport. The interests involved in holding a country admittedly the key to Central Africa and the Nile sources, were sufficient to warrant the responsible authorities in constructing a railway. He had suggested that the railway should be constructed at least half way, so as to cross the foodless and waterless zone in which the fly fatal to transport animals was found. This would at once give access to fertile areas, reduce the cost of transport to Uganda more than half, and relieve the Uganda budget of the cost of maintenance of the connecting stations from the coast to the Lake. (Hear, hear.) He had spoken elsewhere of the Mou plateau, between Masailand and Kavirondo, and advanced reasons why this district might be made the location of an experimental European colony. Were this scheme carried out, and these highlands, with their cold, bracing climate, found suitable for the habitation of Europeans, the history of Africa would be revolutionised. The import of the goods required for their needs, and the export of the produce and stock raised by them, would largely ensure the success of the railway. If the railway realised their anticipations, it would then be feasible to carry it on for the remaining section to Lake Victoria, the best objective point in Africa. The whole question of the possibility of the civilisation and development of these countries would then be solved, and new fields opened up for commercial activity, which might in time equal those in India. It would achieve the grandest work the world has seen for centuries, and if success attended it the Victoria would not long be the sole objective of the railway; it would be the centre towards which the trade of all these countries would radiate. (Hear, hear.) He pictured in the far future an extension from the Victoria Lake through Buddu across an easy country—devoid of mountain ranges, of large rivers, of ravines or swamps—to the Albert Edward Lake. He pictured in the more remote future when we, perhaps, had passed away, still further extensions along the gradually rising plateau at the foot of Ruwenzori to the Albert Lake, and southwards thence to the north of Tanganyika. And thus the great system of the Lakes of Central Africa would be connected, and the slave trade would receive its death-blow. (Hear, hear.) From the south of Tanganyika to the waters of the Nile, from Gondokoro to Mombassa by rail and steamer, we should control the country and civilize and develop it. These schemes of further extension might seem wild, and they were certainly premature. But if the railway to Kikuyu proved successful, its extension to the Lake was a matter of course. From the Victoria to the Albert Edward was only some 140 miles of easy country, and from there to the Albert some 70 miles more; and each of these extensions gave a new objective, and involved no further extension unless they ensured success. From the Albert Edward to Tanganyika was some 160 miles only. But he by no means would imply that the retention of Uganda was dependent upon the construction of a railway. It was possible to retain the country by the present available methods of transport, with a yearly subsidy infinitely small, it seemed to him in comparison to the interests involved. It was his firm conviction that a great colonial empire like ours could not stand still. We must go forward or we must go back. (Hear, hear.) As an Englishman he refused to believe that the time had come when Great Britain was to go downhill. (Cheers.) If free trade was to remain our motto, then fresh markets and new developments were a necessity to us. It was our destiny to go forward, to open up the uncivilized world, for none could do it so successfully as we, and no city in the world was more interested in it than Liverpool. (Hear, hear.) Our history in the glorious past, in the building up of Greater Britain, in America, Australia, India, and South Africa, had proved that we were the colonizing nation of the world. Our destiny was not yet fulfilled, nor would it be, so long as vast areas of little known lands remained—lands which were known to be fertile, peoples whom we alone had treated with success, and markets which invited our commercial extension. We could not limit our vision to the necessities of the hour alone. Had such been the short-sighted policy of our forefathers we would not to-day have those noble dependencies he had named as outlets for our trade. To summarise: The country was certainly fertile, its climate temperate, the soil generally good. The people—some tribes of them at least—he had shown to be intelligent and eager to learn. The land was not over-populated. Large areas existed untouched by the hoe for the production of European needs. Expanses of water, facilitating communication, lent exceptional advantages; the natural products were not inferior to those of other countries—some of them, like ivory, were of extreme value. Could any wholly undeveloped, little exploited savage country show more? He had endeavoured, so far as his ignorance permitted, to speak on subjects which, he hoped, would interest them as members of the Chamber of Commerce of the most influential city in the world. He craved indulgence while he said one word as an Englishman to Englishmen. This country might turn out a successful commercial venture, or it might be a failure. He knew not. One thing he did know. A company was formed numbering among its leading men names which were honoured where the English language was spoken. It received a Royal Charter from Her Majesty. Urged by public opinion, as the papers of the time would show, if not by more direct Government incentive, it deputed him to go to Uganda, and to offer protection to the peoples of those countries in return for a treaty with them. (Hear, hear.) It was no petty thing done in a hole and a corner; it was done with the approval of the nation. He did as he was directed. With no small difficulty and not without bloodshed, some progress had been made. At present order reigned where faction, and bitterness, and war were before. Trusting to us, a helpless people (of Toru) had settled down in their old country under their rightful king—a people who had been ousted and enslaved and massacred by Kararega before. Our evacuation meant their absolute destruction. (Hear, hear.) Of that there was no doubt. Our withdrawal meant leaving all to chaos—a worse chaos than we found; to throw to the winds the pledges he had made; to abandon those who trusted an Englishman's word. The company's reasons for withdrawal they had made most fully public; they were conclusive. But we, as Englishmen, had the situation to face. Let those who cared apportion the blame. We had our responsibilities, as Englishmen, to look to. Were we now to turn back? Germany had spent millions to carry out her pledges and preserve her national honour, when the company, with her sanction, found itself unequal to its task. Italy had done the same, and annually spent a sum variously estimated at from £400 000 to £600,000. Belgium gave £80,000 per annum to the Congo State, and subsidised the railway. France had spent a sum equal at least to these in Africa. Should we, a rich nation, a nation who claimed by the consent of the world the foremost rank in colonization and civilization, be less careful of our national honour, and grudge a sum so paltry as that which would save the situation in Uganda, and in British East Africa? Within the last few days the decision of the Government with regard to Uganda and East Africa had been made known. It was to the effect that the company would be allowed to carry out their resolve of evacuation, but a commissioner sent by the Government would be on the spot to report on the position of affairs, and upon him would devolve the responsibility that order was maintained. This was but the earnest of a more direct and complete responsibility, the responsibility of direct administration, and it devolved upon them to support Her Majesty's Government in the course they had taken to show them that that course had the approval of the nation, and to strengthen their hands in that policy which alone we judge to be worthy of our national honour, and of our traditions as a nation. (Loud applause.)

Digitized by Google

Capt. Lugard drew in the above a tempting picture of Uganda and the Lake Country, and gave valid reasons why it should not, and must not, be abandoned by this nation. Had the gallant captain known anything of the Identity, he would have seen why this people, as one man, have stood up and refused to allow the new Government to abandon the position. They have bowed to the will of the nation, and directed Sir Gerald Portal, Her Majesty's representative at Zanzibar, to proceed as their Commissioner to Uganda, to report upon the situation. The announcement of the appointment is not altogether satisfactory, and falls short of this nation's demand that Uganda be not abandoned, but ruled directly by Her Majesty's Government. We hope, however, that having conceded all that Lord Rosebery demanded, they are content to give the nation what it desires, and will undertake the government of the Lake region, provide it a railway, crush the slave trade, and finally secure a market for the suffering masses at home, who are finding all the markets of the alien world closing against them, by reason of hostile tariffs.

The real questions at issue, are, shall Christ's kingdom extend, so as to embrace all Africa? and shall the Lake region about Uganda, being the Gate of Central Africa, be in Israel's grasp to control and subdue the rest? This is the heart and kernel of the present crisis; but God is forcing this, our people, to do His will by showing them that they must secure the African markets for themselves, or starve! Once our nation takes the work in hand, and seizes the Gate of Central Africa at the Victoria Nyanza, the rest will follow! The slave-trade will die, missionaries will begin their work with zeal and, under God, with success; civilization and commerce will follow; and at last the native millions in regions beyond, will ask for the benefits the people of Uganda have secured, and join themselves to the people of the Lord. We trust all this will be brought about in God's due time; and Israel meanwhile must give all the praise to Him, who is the Giver of this and all their blessings.

THE RESTORATION OF THE JEWS TO PALESTINE.

THE Christian Jews' Patriotic Alliance has just put forth a paper signed "Mark Levy," wherein a proposal is made to establish a weekly journal devoted to the ventilation of questions respecting "the spiritual and national views of Hebrew Christians, and also the opinions of the friends of Israel generally, on the Jewish question." The writer, of course, being a Jew by birth, and a Christian Jew by religion, is not prepared to accept the Identity. That idea doubtless is foolishness to him. The Jews, in his view, are "Israel," and the restoration to Palestine which he anticipates is "the turning back the captivity of Jacob" "and the final establishment of the Jews once more as a nation in Palestine."

The prospectus of the journal contains the following passage on which we wish to comment:—

Briefly stated, our position and aspirations are as follows:—(1) We are Jews who believe in the Messiahship of the Lord Jesus Christ, and trust in His atoning blood for the remission of sins. Thus, spiritually we are Christians; nationally, we remain Jews, and seek to enkindle the spirit of patriotism in the hearts of our Hebrew brethren. We are looking forward to a speedy turning back of the captivity of Jacob, when, according to prophecy, under the guidance of Almighty God we shall once more be established as a nation in Palestine, on the arrival of which long-wished-for day the majority of our number hope to return to the Holy Land: "For the Lord shall comfort Zion: He will comfort all her waste places; and He will make her wilderness like Eden, and her desert like the garden of the Lord; joy and gladness shall be found therein, thanksgiving, and the voice of melody" (Isa. li. 3).

Digitized by Google

The Jews thus anticipate their return to Palestine with joy, but apparently have no idea that they will not return alone. Israel of the House of Ephraim is not in all their thoughts. The existence of the House of Israel they ignore, but look to be established as a nation alone in Palestine, returning to the Holy Land as though it had always been their own. But it never was their own. The Jews were always confined to Judea in a national point of view. On the return from the Babylonian captivity they were located in the South again.

When the restoration takes place the Jews are to be allotted a portion, a little to the north of Jerusalem; but there is no promise that the land in its entirety shall be theirs. Ephraim and Manasseh inherit eleven-thirteenths of it, according to Ezek. xlviii., and nothing can deprive them of that right. It is strange that converted Jews who rely upon the Scriptures for their future national glories do not recollect that every promise which speaks of their return tells them that apart from Israel of the Ten Tribes, the House of Judah never can possess their land again.

In Hos. i. 11, Isa. xviii. 1—7, in Jer. iii. 18, and Ezek. xxxvii. 15—28, the return is always described as effected by the united Houses of Israel and Judah—Israel being the stronger and grandly numerous body, Judah the solitary and weak remnant, leaning upon the strength of their stronger companion. In Deut. xxxiii. 7 the future of Judah is drawn in sombre colours, and her recovery is contingent on her being brought unto her people; her hands are to be made sufficient for her, and God's help is needed against her enemies.

"BY-PATHS OF BIBLE KNOWLEDGE."

By Jas. P. Bastard.

Professor Sayce, in "The Times of Isaiah," p. 69, says: "The overthrow of Samaria by the Assyrians meant the complete obliteration of the Israelitish tribes as a nation. Those who were carried into exile were lost among the peoples in the midst of whom they were settled; those who remained at home were absorbed into the older Canaanite population or else united themselves with the Jews." A fact which so many Bible students overlook is that of the great difference foretold by the prophets concerning the future histories of the two Houses of Israel and Judah.

Our friend the professor leads us into "by-paths" of ancient history, or, as he terms it, "Bible knowledge," and very interesting and fascinating it is; but he quite misses the plain meaning of the prophecies respecting the two Houses of Israel and Judah, as well as the grand panorama mapped out by the Lord as His plan for the ultimate safety and redemption of His people and His salvation offered to the whole world. If the Bible marks on the two Houses were followed up, they must surely be seen, and the people identified. Those on the House of Judah are generally recognized, as well as the prophecies concerning our Lord, and they are called wonderful proofs of the truth of Holy Writ. Well, how much more wonderful when the marks on the other House are seen and recognized. "Many nations," the "nation and the company of nations," the "fulness of the nations," and other promises made to the fathers, all of which promises Christ came to confirm (Rom. xv. 8), not to abrogate, as some would have us suppose. These blessings were only to descend to the recipients, as St. Paul puts it, "after the death of the testator" (Heb. ix. 16, 17).

The House of Judah is no direct blessing to the world in this dispensation, and as the blessings given were to take effect in these latter days, it must be through the multitudinous seed promised to Abraham, the other House of Israel or Ephraim, agreeing with our blessed Lord's words that "the kingdom should be taken from Judah and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." The literal blessings to the fathers, do they stand for nothing? I have heard a preacher say, "We may by faith take to ourselves individually all the promises." How can a man take to himself the "fulness of the nations," or the "Gate of his enemies," or "a nation and a company of nations"? If a man is one of the spiritual Israel, how is he going up into the land with the Jews? Or take the land spiritually to mean heaven. Who is this spiritual Judah which is to accompany the spiritual Israel into heaven? or who are the Israel and the Judah represented by the two sticks which the prophet was commanded to take, and they should become one in his hand? (Ezek. xxxvii. 17). No, this is absurd. The "becoming one" is certainly still future, when the House of Judah walks to the House of Israel and they are to come together up into the land (Jer. iii. 18). This "coming together" is beginning to show itself in various ways, one way in the great influx on our shores of poor helpless Jews driven by persecution out of Eastern Europe, and looked upon with no very favourable eye by our trades' unions and artizans.

Upon enquiry being made of the prophet as to the meaning of the two sticks becoming one, Ezekiel's reply was that Judah and Israel were again, as one nation, to possess the land, and they are described as having a descendant of David as their reigning King. This prophecy has not yet been fulfilled, because when it comes to pass, and the people "are at hand to come," man and beast will be multiplied therein, and "I will settle you after your old estates, and will do better unto you than at your beginnings, and ye shall know that I am the Lord." This does not look much like the "complete obliteration of the Israelitish tribes." "Then shall the children of Judah and the children of Israel be gathered together." "The Lord shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah." May the Lord hasten the time when the "fulness of the nations" shall have come in, and our professors will all see eye to eye with God's Word upon this subject.

Streatham, S.W.

LETTER TO THE CHAIRMAN OF THE CHRISTIAN EVIDENCE SOCIETY FROM AN ANGLO-ISRAELITE.

My Lord,—In addressing you, as chairman of the council of the Christian Evidence Society, on the subject of the enclosed cutting from the Daily News, of Dec. 8th, "Infidelity and How to Meet It," may I suggest that it is not so much "a larger liberality" that is required to convince the infidel as a plain, natural, and truthful exposition of the Scriptures? We see that the Jews of to-day are not at all in possession of the splendid temporal or spiritual blessings promised by God on oath through His prophets to Israel in the latter days, and that the clergy and ministers, knowing that such is the case, have invented a way of spiritualizing temporal promises, and claim for the Church the blessings of Israel, and give all the prophetic curses to the Jews. That manner of interpretation will do very well for unthinking people, but the honest infidels (those who would accept proved truth) are thoughtful people, and they will not accept such a subterfuge as that, and therefore there are very many more infidels through their teachings than there would have been had there been no clergy or ministers at all.

Digitized by Google

Men whom God has endowed with reason (expecting them to use it) will put no trust in a God who has promised repeatedly on solemn oath to give certain blessings to the descendants of one particular person—Abraham—and then in violation of that oath gave one and all of those blessings to a totally different race. Those temporal blessings promised to Israel Britain possesses, and our teachers still insisting that the British are a Gentile people, and the Jews the only representatives of Israel, point to the unfaithfulness of Jehovah, and thus make many infidels as a natural consequence among thoughtful people who listen to their teaching. As these teachers do not recognize the plain distinction the Scriptures make between Israel and Judah, they are unable to see that whilst God is just in punishing Judah for their sin in rejecting His dear Son, He is yet faithful to His oath and promises when He bestows those blessings upon the other portion of the same Hebrew race—namely, Israel of the Ten Tribes, who were separated from the House of Judah in the reign of Rehoboam, and have never yet united again, although they are to do so in the near future, according to the Scriptures.

The Anglo-Saxon race are in possession of those blessings promised to Israel, occupying the localities in the world Israel had to occupy, doing the work assigned to Israel, and laying plans for the future for filling up the rôle prophecy imposes upon Israel of the Ten Tribes, and upon them alone, and yet doing, occupying, and possessing, all in total ignorance of their ancestry and nationality, as the Scripture plainly points to Israel as doing, for they were to be called by another name.

There is but one conclusion, then, and that is, that the Anglo-Saxon race are the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel, and if the infidel were shown this proof positive of God's faithfulness and truth, he would cease to be an infidel, and would worship God through the one and only Mediator Jesus Christ, as many have already done, when this glorious truth has been placed before them.

Would not your lordship serve the cause you have at heart—the Christian Evidence Society—by convening a meeting of those who, knowing the Scriptures can point to the fulfilment of God's purposes and promises, and thus prove His faithfulness and truth, also that the Scriptures were written by direct inspiration of the Spirit of Truth—the Anglo-Israelite? Let them meet those ministers and clergy who as yet oppose this truth in favour of their own pet theory (a spiritual Israel), and by open, fair, and Scriptural argument, conducted under your own auspices, in your own rooms (or any other), search the Scriptures, desiring only the truth of God—a noble Berean aspiration—and one on which you could well seek the guidance of the Spirit of truth, and obtain it too.

I am, my Lord, your obedient servant,

ABRAHAM HENLY.

Banners Ash, Wootton Bassett, Wilts, Dec. 12, 1892.

Lord Halsbury.

LETTER TO ONE MINISTER REGARDING THE SERMON OF ANOTHER.

DEAR SIR,—I sent you the BANNER OF ISRAEL this morning, and presume you received it. I thought of you on Sunday morning, while listening to Mr. A. B. C. He gave us a very good ordinary sermon, but I find he has not yet discovered the difference between Jews and Israelites; for the words are synonymous with him. He spoke of the Jews in the wilderness. I wonder if he thinks the Israelites are a portion of the Jews? or the Jews a portion of the Israelites? Certainly not the latter, which is the correct statement, or he would not have spoken of the Twelve Tribes as Jews. Of course, all Jews are Israelites, but all Israelites are not Jews. Only one, or at the most two tribes can be Jews. The sooner the pulpit can discern one of the plainest truths in the Bible the better for the pew—I mean the distinction between Jews and Israelites.

When our teachers will allow God to mean what He says when He is speaking of Israel as when He is speaking of the Jews, they will not then spiritualize all the promises to Israel, seize on all the blessings for the Church, and give all the curses to the Jews, as they almost invariably do now. You must certainly give your friend a lesson on the Identity of the British with Israel, and let him know that the Israel of the Ten Tribes is before the world to-day, and fulfilling her destiny according to the written word of God, also enjoying the birthright blessings as promised, and then he (Mr. A. B. C.) will be able to count God faithful to His oath and promises, which he cannot possibly do so long as he supposes that God made certain great, temporal, and precious promises to one people, the seed of Abraham, and then deliberately gave the blessings to another race, the British, generally supposed to be Gentiles. It is undeniable that the British are at present in possession of the blessings God exclusively promised to Israel, and we know that the Jews have not one of them. God never intended that they should have them, as they (those we refer to) are post-millennial. Yours truly, A. H.

Oct. 24th, 1892.

Correspondence.

SOME OBJECTIONS AND THE ANSWERS TO THEM.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—Many thanks for the BANNERS OF ISRAEL duly received, and which are most interesting. Whether the views put forward by such able theologians as the Rev. Dr. Hanan be sound or the reverse, he deserves the greatest praise for his able expositions of Holy Writ, relative to what is called the Lost Tribes. I believe that God's covenant with the progenitors of the Jewish race were made not to two but to the Twelve Tribes of Israel, as preached by Paul before King Agrippa (Acts xxvi. 7); and as the apostle's teaching is contrary to the non-existence of the Ten Tribes, he would, were he placed in similar circumstances, preach the same truth to-day that he preached 1,800 years ago. Praying that God's Holy Spirit may be abundantly poured out upon His ancient people, and that they may soon be joined together in the one true Israel of God,

I am, your humble servant for Christ's sake, J. E.

Co. Kilkenny, Oct., 1892.

[COPY.]

DEAR SIR,—I received your sympathetic note and the Protestant Observer, which is an excellent magazine. I am glad you have read with interest the BANNER OF ISRAEL and the other literature on the Identity which I forwarded. It is a pleasure and gratification to observe that you have not treated that subject with the contempt and ridicule which it receives from the hands of individuals who ought to know better. It is, however, easier to say "Pooh, pooh," than to overthrow the Biblical arguments, the historical evidence, and the world-renowned facts which are adduced in proof of our Israelitish origin. How true is the following observation of Professor Agassir: "Whenever a new or startling fact is brought to light, people first say, 'It is not true,' then 'It is contrary to religion,' and lastly, 'Everybody knew it before.'"

Now, you are a gentleman for whose sound religious principles and sentiments I entertain the highest respect, knowing as I do the fearless and uncompromising manner in which you have so "earnestly contended for the faith once for all delivered to the saints," with high ecclesiastics of the Roman Church, who have not attempted to reply to you, simply because the statements in your letter are unanswerable. It is, therefore, with the greatest respect that I would suggest that, in my opinion, there are some inaccuracies in the following passage which I quote from your letter:—"I believe that God's covenants with the progenitors of the Jewish race were made not to two but to the Twelve Tribes of Israel, as preached by Paul before King Agrippa (Acts xxvi. 7); and as the apostle's teaching is contrary to the non-existence of the Ten Tribes, he would, were he placed in similar circumstances, preach the same truth to-day as he preached 1,800 years ago."

Digitized by Google

First, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were not the progenitors of the Jewish race merely, but of the whole Hebrew race, or the descendants of the Twelve Tribes of Israel. The Jews, or Jewish race, or the House of Judah, are descended from the tribes of Judah and Levi only, and are consequently but two-twelfths of the whole Hebrew race. It is, therefore, not accurate to designate the whole Hebrew race by the particular and exclusive epithet, "the Jewish race."

Second, The Jewish race is not in the possession of a single one of the blessings promised under the Abrahamic covenant to the Hebrew race (Gen. xxii. 18, 19). The Jews are neither multitudinous nor do they possess the Gates of their enemies; and instead of all the nations of the earth being blessed through them, they are cursed as no other nation has been cursed, because they not only have crucified the Lord of glory (1 Cor. ii. 8), but still persist in rejecting Christ as their Saviour and Messiah. What then? Has God failed to keep His covenant? or has He broken His oath by bestowing the blessings upon a Gentile nation, which He swore by Himself that He would give to the seed of Abraham? To this I emphatically answer, No; and also emphatically affirm that God has faithfully kept His covenant, and has fulfilled it to the very letter. This is proved to mathematical demonstration by the existence of the British Empire, which is at the present day in the actual possession of all the blessings promised in God's covenant with Abraham. The British Empire has multitudinous population, holds the principal Gates of the globe (including Gibraltar and Egypt, the literal Gates of its literal enemies), and is blessing all the nations of the earth by giving them a free Bible, and by preaching to them a full, free, and perfect salvation, through the sacred name of Jesus Christ, whose blood, the blood of the everlasting covenant, cleanseth us from all sin. These notorious facts are alone sufficient to establish the Identity of the British nation with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel.

The new covenant, which God said that He would make not with the Gentiles but with the House of Israel and with the House of Judah (Jer. xxxi. 31, 32), is the Old Testament witness to the Gospel (Heb. viii. 8), and it was under this covenant that Paul preached the Gospel of the kingdom to the Twelve Tribes of Israel, as stated in Acts xxvi. 7. But the Jewish nation refused to believe in Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant (Heb. xii. 24), and it (the Jewish nation) was consequently overthrown, and the Jewish race was destined to be cursed and persecuted during the Christian dispensation, as recent events in Russia clearly prove; while it seems to be indicated in Scripture that the Jews will continue to be debarred from the enjoyment of the temporal and spiritual blessings promised to the Hebrew race under the Abrahamic and new covenant until the time shall have arrived when they shall "look on Him whom they have pierced" (Zech. xii. 10), and shall acknowledge and adore the crucified, risen, crowned, and glorified Christ as their Redeemer and Deliverer. St. John has recorded that Christ came unto His own (the Tribe of Judah), and His own received Him not (John i. 11). Therefore, said the Master, addressing the House of Judah, "Behold your House left unto you desolate" (Matt. xxiii. 38), and "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you"—the Jews—"and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof" (Matt. xxi. 43). Christ did not say that the kingdom of God was to be given to the Gentiles, or the nations, but to "a nation"—the singular number, as rendered in the Authorised and Revised Versions, and even in the Douay Testament.

Now, the question is, which is the fruit-bearing nation to which the Lord referred? The answer will be found in Isa. xxvii. 6, where it is distinctly affirmed that "In the days to come Jacob shall take root, Israel shall blossom and bud, and they shall fill the face of the world with fruit." Thus it is evident that when the kingdom of God was taken from the House of Judah, it was given not to a Gentile nations (as is generally believed and asserted without proof), but to the House or nation of Israel. The House of Israel or Ephraim, therefore, are manifestly the chosen missionaries for God, destined to promulgate the everlasting Gospel, and to distribute the sacred Scriptures in all the nations of the globe. And that is just the great and glorious work of universal evangelization in which the British nation is engaged in carrying on to-day, through the medium of the British Bible Society and the various missionary associations, thus literally filling the face of the earth with Gospel fruit, in accordance with the divine mission, which has been conferred on the House of Ephraim-Israel, by the authority of the Old and New Testaments.

Third, The advocates of the Identity do not say that the Ten Tribes became non-existent. That statement is contrary to the plain teaching of the Scriptures, such as Jer. xxxi. 10, "He that scattereth Israel will gather him"; and Amos ix. 9, "For, lo, I will command and I will sift the House of Israel among all nations, like as corn is sifted in a sieve, yet shall not the least grain fall upon the earth." With regard to the term "lost," as applied to the House of Israel, that word is used exactly in the same sense as it is applied in Jer. l. 6, "My people hath been lost sheep," and by our blessed Lord Himself when He said that "I am not sent but to the lost sheep of the House of Israel," and when He commissioned His twelve apostles to "Go rather to the lost sheep of the House of Israel." Many of the Saviour's most touching parables clearly pointed out Lost Israel. The parables of the lost treasure, the lost silver, the lost sheep, and the lost son, while the lost was in every case found, amid great rejoicings. "This thy brother was lost and is found" Thus the Biblical distinction between lost and being non-existent is quite obvious.

The contrast between the Jews and the true Israelites is clearly presented in one of the collects for Good Friday, in which these words will be found:—"Have mercy upon all Jews . . . and so fetch them home, blessed Lord, to Thy flock, that they may be saved among the remnant of the true Israelites, and be made one fold under one Shepherd, Jesus Christ our Lord."

I do most sincerely join you in the prayer that the Jewish portion of God's ancient people may soon be united to the Israel of God, which, I believe, is not a Gentile Church, but the Christian Church and nation of Israel, which Peter calls in his first epistle "a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people" (1 Peter ii. 9).

Yours very faithfully,

EDMOND IRELAND.

Mount Eland, Ballyragget, co. Kilkenny.

BLIND EVIDENCE.

THE REV. J. T. BROWN, of Northampton, in speaking at the Missionary Centenary Service at the Tabernacle in the Metropolis, held for prayer and praise, said what must have surprised his hearers, thus:—

"O people, O Christians of England, the waiting nations now look to us for sympathy and help. Out of the excellent glory there comes a voice at this very juncture, which says, 'Speak to the children of Israel that they go forward': and if we linger among sacred memories, or if we spend our energies in admiring past men and past things, may we not expect that from angels' mouths will come the Word of God, 'Why, when so much remains to be done—why stand ye gazing?'"

"The Christians and people of England" are, in the speaker's estimation, "the children of Israel," and their functions are what Israel's were of old, "to go forward," and to preach the Gospel to every creature throughout the world.

Digitized by Google

GIGANTIC SALE OF

100 COLOURS TO SELECT FROM

GREATEST BARGAINS EVER OFFERED

In consequence of the mild season, we have still in stock over 250,000 DRESS LENGTHS of our famous Cloths which, in order to effect a rapid clearance we have reduced to less than Manufacturers' Cost Price. 100 lovely new colours to select from. All goods are new and in perfect condition. We will gladly send patterns post free, and they need not be returned. Write to-day for patterns and Sale Price List

FULL DRESS LENGTHS OF MAGNIFICENT CLOTHS 9s.6d. CARRIAGE PAID.

LADIES CLOTH DRESSES

GENUINE REDUCTIONS! WRITE FOR PATTERNS

LUTAS LEATHLEY & Co. ARMLEY, LEEDS.

WE ALL REQUIRE SOMETHING TO DRINK EVEN IN WINTER.

MASON'S EXTRACT OF HERBS For making NON-INTOXICATING BEER

The finest, most refreshing and pleasantest beverage obtainable. One table-spoonful of this Extract makes one gallon of splendid Beer. Try it. A sample bottle, enough to make eight gallons, post free for 9 stamps.

NEWBALL & MASON, NOTTINGHAM.

Mason's Wine Essences, non-intoxicating. For childrens' parties, and social gatherings. A 6d. bottle will make one gallon of delicious wine. Post free 9 stamps, or a bottle of both Extract of Herbs and Wine Essence post free 15 stamps.

AGENTS WANTED.

TRADE MARK

FREEMAN'S ORIGINAL CHLORODYNE.

THIS valuable medicine, discovered and invented by Mr. RICHARD FREEMAN in 1844, introduced into India and Egypt in 1850, and subsequently all over the world, maintains its supremacy as a special and specific Remedy for the Treatment and Cure of Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Cancer, Bronchitis, Asthma, Ague, Sore Throat, Influenza, Neuralgia, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Asiatic Cholera, Colic, Gout, and all Fevers.

At 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 20s. per bottle.

Sold by Patent Medicine Dealers in all parts of the world.

N.B. Lord Chancellor Selborne, Lord Justice James, and Lord Justice Mellish, decided in favour of FREEMAN'S ORIGINAL CHLORODYNE, and against Brown and Davenport, compelling them to pay all costs in the suit.—See Times of July 24, 1873.

BIRLEY'S PHOSPHORUS.

The most SCIENTIFIC and RATIONAL Tonic of the present day. Dr. Birley's new process renders Phosphorus, which is necessary to health and strength of brain and nerve, absolutely unobjectionable to take for any length of time. Its therapeutic value also is greater than the crude Phosphorus usually prescribed. Descriptive pamphlet free to enquirers (mentioning this paper) from

GORDON, MURRAY & Co., Ltd.,

10, ADAM STREET, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.

"A WONDERFUL REMEDY."
"I WAS GIVEN UP BY ALL."
"SAVED FROM AN EARLY GRAVE."

Such are the words of grateful Patients relative to their CASES OF

CONSUMPTION

CURED BY THE TREATMENT OF

MR. GEO. T. CONGREVE.

Read his Book, "ON CONSUMPTION, &c." which may be had post free for ONE SHILLING from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.; or may be ordered of any Bookseller.

NOTE.—CONSULTATIONS FREE at Coombe Lodge, Peckham, on TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings only. No Charge except the usual charge for three weeks or six weeks' supply of medicine. All Patients should read the book first.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT

FOR

LUMBAGO

Mr. J. B. CARNE, Station Master L. B. & S. C. Ry., Clapham Junction Station, S.W., writes:—"I have derived great benefit from wearing your Electropathic Belt. The Lumbago and pains in my back have both ceased."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST., LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

TEETH.—£1 A FULL SET

ESKELL'S.—CELEBRATED MAKE, £2 2s. Warranted and fitted in one visit. No extractions needed. HALF A MILLION SETS already supplied. The Nursing Record and Hospital World says:—We recommend all who require Reliable and Good Teeth at a small cost to go to Messrs. ESKELL, 445, Strand (facing Charing Cross Station), and 58, Ludgate Hill, City, London. Also at 27, Western Road, Brighton, and 23, Mount Pleasant, Tunbridge Wells. Hours 9 till 7. Illustrated Pamphlets, explaining everything, free. Established 100 years.

"THE WORLD'S PROVED REMEDY FOR ALL CHEST DISEASES."

COUGH, ASTHMA, CHRONIC BRONCHITIS, INFLUENZA,

THERE IS NONE TO EQUAL IT.

Rev. F. E. HEAPE, of DERBY, in a recent letter, says: "Your Medicine always puts my lungs right, and drove out the terrible INFLUENZA last May."

This Medicine has been prepared for 65 years.

CONGREVE'S BALSAMIC ELIXIR.

In Bottles, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 22s., may be had of all Chemists and Medicine Vendors.

TEA! TEA! TEA!

FROM

INDIA, CEYLON, AND CHINA.

Best Quality and Best Value.

From 1/6 to 3/6 per lb. Samples Gratis.

Carriage Paid on Parcels of 6lbs. and upwards.

Robinson & James,

42, TRINITY SQUARE, TOWER HILL, LONDON, E.C.

TOOTH-ACHE

CURED INSTANTLY BY

BUNTER'S NERVINE

Prevents Decay, Saves Extraction. Sleepless Nights Prevented.

Neuralgic Headaches and all Nerve Pains removed by BUNTER'S NERVINE. All Chemists, 1s. 1½d.

Price 6d. Monthly. Annual Subscription 7s.

THE MESSENGER.

Edited by "OXONIAN."

Each number contains papers by the EDITOR, and other well-known writers, a SERMON by Dr. WILD, Notes and Queries, &c

Now Ready, price 5s., post free, 5s. 4d., Illustrated by MAPS,

RUSSIA JAPHET;

OR, THE MUSCOVITE, THE COSSACK, AND THE MONGOL.

Being a detailed Identification of the principal peoples subject to the Czar. By "OXONIAN."

London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed "PHILO-ISRAEL," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION for the BANNER OF ISRAEL, in Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts. To any part of the United Kingdom, Canada, America, or Europe, in the postal union:—

	s.	d.		s.	d.
copy, including postage	.. 7	0	Tasmania ..	.. 7	0
New Zealand	.. 7	0	South Australia	.. 7	0
Cape Colony	.. 7	0	Queensland	.. 7	0
Victoria ..	.. 7	0	Natal ..	.. 7	0
Western Australia	.. 7	0	New South Wales	.. 7	0
Transvaal ..	.. 7	0	India ..	.. 7	0
			Ceylon, via Brindisi	.. 7	0

All Post Office Orders, Cheques, &c., should be crossed "City Bank, Ludgate-hill, to the ac. of ROBERT BANKS AND SON." They will then only be paid to our account.

READING CASES for holding the Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts, may be had, price 2s. Sent post free on receipt of Postal Order.

THE ANNUAL VOLUMES, bound in handsome blue cloth, price 8s.

THE MONTHLY PARTS, in tinted wrapper, published the last day of each month, 6d.

CONTRIBUTIONS TOWARDS the FREE DISTRIBUTION of the NEW YEAR'S DOUBLE NUMBER of the "BANNER OF ISRAEL," received since January 6.

Many friends have also sent remittances for sending copies to addresses given. These have been sent as directed, and are not included in this List.

	£	s.	d.
Miss Deane	0	3	0
Rev. W. R. Capel	0	6	0
Mr. E. Beesley	0	1	0
Mrs. Turner	0	3	0

NOW READY.
HANDSOME BLUE CLOTH
CASES FOR BINDING.
Price 1s. 6d., or post free, 1s. 8d.

VOLUME XVI. OF THE BANNER OF ISRAEL,
Price 8s. Sent Post Free.
ROBERT BANKS AND SON, Racquet-ct., Fleet-st., E.C

THIRD EDITION NOW READY.
With 38 Additional Pages.
Paper Cover, Price 1s. nett., postage 2d. extra
Limp Boards, lettered, 1s. 6d.. postage 2d. extra.
Cloth boards, gilt lettered, thick toned paper 2s., postage 3d. extra.

BRITISH-ISRAEL TRUTH
A Handbook for Enquirers.
EDITED BY
REV. DENIS HANAN, M.A., D.D.,
AND
H. ALDER-SMITH, M.B., F.R.C.S.
WITH A CHART AND MAP.

Published by the Authority of the BRITISH-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION, (Metropolitan, Provincial and Colonial.)

"British-Israel Truth." Edited by the Rev. Denis Hanan and H. Alder-Smith (R. Banks & Son.)—The sale of the first edition of this work, and the consequent issue of a second, shows that there is a growing interest in the study of the questions of the Israelitish origin of the English speaking people. Clever, interesting, pathetic, and showing considerable research, the volume has been a success and doubtless has made some converts.—THE ROCK.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C

Anglo-Israel; or, The Saxon Race Proved to be the Lost Tribes of Israel. By the REV. W. H. POOLE, D.D. Large royal 8vo., of 700 pages, with illustrations, price 10s. 6d.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-ct., Fleet-st., E.C.

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co. (Ltd.) 23, Paternoster-row. Wednesday, JANUARY 18, 1893. All Rights Reserved.

Just ready, 220 Large Post 8vo. pages, in clear, readable type, price 2s. 6d., limp cloth, gilt lettered, red edges, post free to any part of the world on receipt of postal remittance.

Nineteen Centuries Ago and NOW.

BY J. C. H. MEHL.

WITH BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH,

BY E. M. RUSH.

LONDON:
ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., or by order of any bookseller.

AT SPECIALLY REDUCED PRICE.

Carriage Paid to any address in the United Kingdom or the Colonies, Fifth and last Edition, published at 16s.,

FOR 11s. 6d.

C. PIAZZI SMYTH'S well-known work,

OUR INHERITANCE IN THE GREAT PYRAMID,
with
TWENTY-FIVE EXPLANATORY PLATES,

showing the more crucial parts of this really Anti-Egyptian and most Primeval Structure, in Plan, Elevation, and Section.

As the number of copies to be offered at this reduced price is very limited, early application should be made direct to Messrs. R. Banks and Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London.

USEFUL BOOKS FOR BIBLE STUDENTS.

In Two Vols., about 500 pages in each, cloth bound, price 5s., originally published at 7/6.

HISTORY OF THE JEWS
In Three Concurrent Sections.

I.—Ten Books of the Antiquities of the Jews, as TRANSLATED by WHISTON, with Notes from FLAVIUS JOSEPHUS.

II.—The Bible Narrative from the Creation to the Captivity at Babylon, fully given and faithfully rendered.

III.—A Modern History of the Jews. Abridged and Offered as a Commentary on the Preceding Sections.

The Two Volumes sent post free for 5/3 nett
To be had only direct from ROBERT BANKS AND SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

"I am delighted with this."—PHILO-ISRAEL.
NEW AND IMPROVED EDITION OF
ISRAEL'S WORLD,
By Rev. HENRY ROE. 2d.

Also "Consecration," 2d., "Going to Africa," 1s.; "West African Scenes," 2s.; "Fernando Po Mission," 1s. Also "Israel's World" and "Consecration" bound together in cloth, with Author's latest photograph portrait, 1s.

Order of ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C., or of Rev HENRY ROE, Radstock, via Bath.

Jehovah Triumphant. The New and Complete Theology and Electric Light of the Bible, containing the History of British-Israel, compiled from the Sacred Scriptures. A handsome crown 8vo., cloth bound volume of 550 pages, with Index of Scripture references. Price 5s. (published at 10s.), post free for P.O.

London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C.

LUNG SAVE YOUR LIVES BY TAKING TONIC
LUNG OWBRIDGE'S TONIC
LUNG LUNG TONIC TONIC
LUNG THE MIGHTY HEALER. TONIC
LUNG It has a power over disease hitherto unknown in Medicine. TONIC
LUNG Are you at all Weak-chested or inclined to be Consumptive, with just a touch of Cough now and then? TONIC
LUNG "Try this Wonderful Medicine." The Cough and Weakness will disappear as if by magic, and you will feel a strength and power you never had before. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COUGH? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COLD? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL TONIC
LUNG REMOVE IT! TONIC
LUNG Bronchitis & Asthma it relieves instantly TONIC
LUNG The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful TONIC
LUNG in Whooping Cough become less with TONIC
LUNG each dose of the medicine. TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE Chemist Hull TONIC
LUNG Sold in bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. TONIC
LUNG and 11s., by all Chemists and Patent TONIC
LUNG Medicine Vendors. Wholesale all TONIC
LUNG London and Provincial Houses. TONIC

The True and Divine Appointment for the Cure of Disease.
Send to
B. V. SCOTT, M.B.M.R.S.,
College of Health, 121, Kensington, Liverpool,
for his
VOICE OF NATURE TO THE INVALID,
Post free 5 stamps.

Thousands of incurables (so-called) have proved God's own means could save when others failed.

Rev. F. Harper says of Mr. Scott's book: "It is a library in itself, and free from quackery."

Rev. Lush says: "Mr. Scott's treatment is natural, safe, reasonable, and Scriptural."

Send for the Book at once.

PAGE WOODCOCK'S WIND PILLS

It is astonishing how many people imagine they suffer from

HEART DISEASE

They experience a depressing feeling about the region of the heart, accompanied by an occasional stab of pain, nervous debility, loss of appetite and general depression. The fact is they suffer from

INDIGESTION, OR DYSPEPSIA.

The food, instead of being thoroughly digested, develops into Wind, and flies about the valves of the heart, causing the symptoms named. All who suffer in this way should at once take

Page Woodcock's Wind Pills,

A world-renowned remedy for all Stomach disorders.
All Sufferers from INDIGESTION, LIVER COMPLAINTS, WIND on the STOMACH, COSTIVENESS, SICK HEADACHE, HEARTBURN, NERVOUS DEBILITY, PALPITATION of the HEART, BILIOUSNESS, &c.,
should avail themselves of this most excellent medicine.

Of all Medicine Vendors, at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d., or Post Free for P.O. or Stamps, from PAGE WOODCOCK, Lincoln.

NEW CATALOGUE of Works on Our Identity post free from R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

Digitized by Google

HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE.
(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India).

"And the Remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS OF THE EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XVII., No. 839. Entered at Stationer's Hall.] WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 25, 1893 [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
The Wonderful Empire of the British People	49
The Study of the Bible in the Light of the Identity, and Its Effect on Our Daily Life. By G. S.	50
"The Head and Not the Tail" Among All the Nations	51
The Rev. C. F. Cooper, of Yarmouth, Nova Scotia.—Sermon on Our Identity	52
The Rev. Thomas Allen, of Manchester, on The Empire	53
Progress in Nova Scotia	54
The Education of British Children	55
Some Questions to the Rev. Denis Hanan, D.D., and His Answers	56
Gleanings. By J. Thomson	56
British-Israel Addresses	57
On Mrs. Martha Rick's Visit to the Queen on July 16, 1892	57
Correspondence	57

THE WONDERFUL EMPIRE OF THE BRITISH PEOPLE.

THE British public naturally fail to realise, and seldom try to grasp, the vast extent and value of the Empire which God has given it in the four quarters of the earth. Those who have seen it, lived in the portions of Greater Britain which appertain to the dominions of the Queen, and know what a unique thing that "Greater Britain" is, can hardly express in language their admiration of its miraculous greatness, splendour, and extent. Our eldest daughter in the Canadian Dominion was, in 1877, the subject of an eloquent notice in a speech made at that time by Lord Dufferin. The words sound almost too grand for sober truth, but who can deny that they accurately describe the value of the magnificent Dominion the Queen of Israel owns in North America? He spoke as follows:—

From its geographical position, and its peculiar characteristics, Manitoba may be regarded as the keystone of that mighty arch of sister provinces, which spans the continent from the Atlantic to the Pacific. It was here that Canada, emerging from her woods and forests, first gazed upon the rolling prairies and unexplored North-west, and learned, as by an unexpected revelation that her historical territories of the Canadas, her eastern seaboards of New Brunswick, Labrador, and Nova Scotia, her Laurentian lakes and valleys, corn lands and pastures, though themselves more extensive than half-a-dozen European kingdoms, were but the vestibules and ante chambers to that, until then, undreamt of Dominion, whose illimitable dimensions alike confound the arithmetic of the surveyor and the verification of the explorer. It was hence that, counting her past achievements as but the preface and prelude to her future exertions and expanding destinies, she took a fresh departure, received the afflatus of a more imperial inspiration, and felt herself no longer a mere settler along the banks of a single river, but the owner of half a continent, and in the amplitude of her possession, in the wealth of her resources, in the sinews of her material might, the peer of any power on earth.

We pass now to the giant colonies rising in glory in the far South-east. Australasia is wholly a British possession! We have there first the largest island in the world, which was quietly occupied by our race at the end of the 18th century, through the Gate of Sydney. Our people found the land a veritable desert, sparsely inhabited by hostile Aborigines, but they have since, in spite of opposition, occupied it all, and now we have on the mainland and the neighbouring Islands of New Zealand and Tasmania seven Anglo-Saxon nations in the throes of federation, vying with the mother country in population, wealth, commerce, and whatever else constitutes and forms a prosperous cluster of daughter nations. In the case of Canada there was, as Lord Dufferin shows, vast expansion and splendid prosperity; and so again in Australasia in a totally different sphere of action under southern skies, the same blessings have attended the operations of our Imperial race. An island continent has, in Australia, been added to the Empire; and the island nation of New Zealand is advancing rapidly in greatness, while Tasmania, with its English scenery and climate, is sure at last to be occupied by a prosperous Anglo-Saxon community.

The Empire that is gradually forming in Africa in view to its final incorporation with that of British-Israel is patent to the world. Already it reaches from Cape Town northwards, nearly to the southern shore of Lake Tanganyka. Uganda, and all that surrounds that strategic country, belongs virtually to the British Empire already; and public opinion refuses to hear of its evacuation by a Liberal Government. Egypt and the Nile Valley as far south as Wady Halfa is British in all but name. We are there and we mean to stay! We are doing good there and we want to complete our work. Those who desire to get rid of us out of Egypt are aware that if we are driven from the land, their own interests will suffer with Egypt's. It is being settled therefore, that it is no use to drive us from the Valley of the Nile since no one would benefit if that were accomplished. To the west of Africa there are British settlements more or less unhealthy, which will never be colonies like those where our race have found a habitation for their children. But here commerce with the natives is valuable, and all that commerce enriches the Isles of the West and the House of Israel which occupies them.

Digitized by Google

Finally we have a British dependency, unique in the history of the world—British India and British Burmah. While our own home contains 121,000 square miles, the British Empire in India represents 1,452,375 square miles. Our home population is now about 40 millions. In India, exclusive of the Indian Native States, the population owning Britain as its Suzerain is over 207,000,000. Hindostan itself is wonderfully situated. It extends as a vast wedge into the Indian Ocean, and commands it. It is a vast storehouse of British power. The ocean into which it abuts is entirely under its influence. The only road of access to that ocean from Europe is commanded by British Gates at Port Said, Perim, Aden, and Socotra. The exit from it eastward to China is under British lock and key, at the Straits of Malacca, at Malacca, Penang, and Singapore. India is the armed apex of a vast triangle, of which the south-eastern point is British Australia, and the south-western the Cape Colonies, both held in military and naval strength. India has been, and ever will be, held mainly by the sword—with which for the most part it was secured. It is one of our best commercial customers, and it supports for us, free of cost, somewhere about 75,000 of our best British troops. Its gigantic size, from the north of the Punjab to Cape Cormorin in the south, is about 1,300 miles, and its breadth, from Kurrachee in the west to the east of Upper Burmah, nearly the same. Yet great as India is in size, it is only one third of the Dominion of Canada.

THE STUDY OF THE BIBLE IN THE LIGHT OF THE IDENTITY, AND ITS EFFECT ON OUR DAILY LIFE.

By G. S.

Let us notice first that because we are God's chosen people we possess to a larger extent than any other nation the grand and glorious privilege of having the whole Word of God (see Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20). What use are we making of it? This Bible of ours is not given us because we are better than other nations, but because we are of the literal seed of Israel. Take for example a Roman Catholic country such as Spain. The converts to Protestantism are persecuted and imprisoned, although they may be Christ's own children just as we are; yet they do not possess the glorious privilege of the open Bible.

This, then, is the first great blessing we obtain from being the descendants of God's chosen people. What use are we making of it? Is it influencing our daily lives as it should? There are varieties of ways of studying God's Word. Take for example the people who try and get through the whole book in a year, as if their one aim is to read as much in a given time as ever they can. This seldom answers. Then there are others who select only the devotional parts, and live in a sort of atmosphere far removed from the rest of mankind, in a kind of spiritual world of their own manufacture, and who never descend from their ethereal heights to do even a kindness to their fellow creatures, forgetting the words of the divine Master that "whosoever giveth to drink a cup of cold water in the name of a disciple shall in no wise lose his reward." The disciples formed the idea of a sojourn upon the Mount of Transfiguration. It might have seemed good to be there, but Jesus set a nobler example. "His meat and drink was to do the will of His Father in heaven," and to finish His work, and should the disciple be above his Lord?

Devotional reading from God's Word kept to ourselves, unless it be brought to bear practically on our daily life before the world, is worse than useless, and, to say the least of it, intensely selfish. There are others, again, who confine themselves almost exclusively to the New Testament, because they tell us that the Old was done away with at the advent of the New. They forget that Christ only came to "confirm the promises made to the fathers." He Himself says that He came "not to destroy, but to fulfil." The New Testament is the key to unlock the glories of the Old. What good would a valuable estate be without the means of entrance? Christ brought us the golden key that unlocks the treasure-house. A Jew remarked some time ago that he was converted to Christianity by reading the books of the Old Testament before ever he became possessed of the New. There are others, again, who never study prophecy, because they foolishly imagine that when Christ comes, then, as they express it, "the world will end." When the Lord comes, it will be very different from what the ignorant reader of a portion only of the Scriptures expects. The glories that God has in store for His chosen people will but then be commencing.

How important, then, it is to study prophecy (2 Peter i. 19, 20). We should read God's Word as a whole, not isolated passages, praying beforehand, that we may arrive at God's interpretation, not just a fanciful one of our own conception. Now, if all "Scripture is given by inspiration of God," and is profitable, why should we not study it? You hear people making some such remark as this: "The prophets are so dry." Where does the fault lie? Certainly not with the prophets, but with themselves. Now, it is just here that a knowledge of the Identity illuminates like the electric light the whole prophetic Scriptures. Does it not behove those to whom it has been revealed to pass the blessing on to others?

If we, looking at Gen. xii., see that to one man God has promised great and glorious blessings, that were to be handed down from him in that one family to all generations to be a blessing to countless millions, and that God in His infinite mercy has selected us, as his descendants, to be the recipients of those blessings, should it not call for deep, heart-felt gratitude? We might have been born in a heathen land, where the light of the Gospel has never yet penetrated, but God willed it otherwise; He predestinated us to be a part of His own chosen family, placed the open Bible in our hands, and commanded us to be "His witnesses for the truth." What are we doing? Are we just spiritualizing all the blessings of Israel away as referring to the "Gentile Church?" If so, we are daring to do what our Lord never did. He said, "I am not sent but to the lost sheep of the House of Israel." We must not, in studying the Word, fail to see that, although many passages bear a spiritual interpretation, they also first bear a literal one.

Look at Ezek. xxxvii. Most people take the vision of dry bones to mean sinners dead in trespasses and sins resurrected into newness of life by the Spirit of God. That is their spiritual interpretation, but ver. 11 says, "Son of man, these bones are the whole House of Israel." Now, if it meant simply the saved or spiritual Israel, as they express it, would it say the whole House? But this prophesy perfectly agrees with the invasions one after the other of the

Digitized by Google

Saxons, Danes, Jutes, and Normans, all of whom came together, "bone to his bone," by their amalgamation in Britain in a state of heathen nationality. Look at verses 9 and 10, where a new page of the vision presents itself. The bones were brought together covered with flesh and skin, and yet remaining dead, represent Israel reformed, but without being Christianized.

At this point of the vision Ezekiel is told a second time to prophesy, when breath came into them and they lived, and stood upon their feet an exceeding great army. Israel had been lost in the grave, cast out, divorced, heathenized, carried captive to Assyria. In the vision we have a beautiful picture of their awakening, as one from the dead into newness of life, to be a Christian nation.

The Normans, we believe, were the Benjamites. As Dr. Wild says, "this tribe of Benjamin has a singular and special place in providence, and neither the Old nor the New Testament can be well understood without seeing this clearly." They were always counted as one of the Ten Tribes, and were only loaned to Judah for the space of about 800 years (see 1 Kings xii. 21). They were to be a light for David in Jerusalem. God, foreseeing that the Jews would reject Christ, kept back this one tribe from the ten to be in readiness to receive Him. And so they did. Most of the apostles were Benjamites, as also was St. Paul. At the destruction of Jerusalem they escaped, warned to do so in Jer. vi. 1, fulfilling the blessing of Moses that the beloved of the Lord should dwell in safety (Deut. xxxiii. 12). After centuries of wanderings they turn up again as the proud and haughty Normans, finally settling here with the other tribes, fulfilling Jacob's prediction that Benjamin should raven as a wolf (Gen. xlix. 27), which animal the Normans had engraved upon their shield. A proper insight into the work of Benjamin will greatly aid one in interpreting the New Testament.

The story of the prodigal son is spiritually interpreted as referring to the sinner wandering away, returning, and being forgiven, but literally it represents the two Houses of Israel and Judah. The prodigal is the embodiment of the Ten Tribes, not satisfied with the divine love, wandering into Assyria. The House of Judah meanwhile remained in covenant favour, but as the book of Esdras most beautifully puts it, "They made up their mind to repent and go and serve the Lord and keep His commandments," which they had never done in their own land. Like the prodigal, they return, and hear the voice of the Lord saying, "I have redeemed thee," but the House of Judah holds aloof, and, like the elder brother, is outside the new covenant still.

Now let us look at Manasseh and Ephraim. The history of these two representative characters is worth our careful study. We well remember the circumstance of the old patriarch's blessing—how the hands were crossed, and the greatest benediction descended on the head of the younger. As Philo-Israel in his able pamphlet puts it, "Had we been present, and able to suggest to St. Paul when he wrote Heb. xi. 21, what particular facts in the history of Jacob would best have illustrated the acts or the life of faith that patriarch exhibited, should we have selected the history of his two grandsons? Yet it did, for looking back now we can see what Jacob's faith was. God gave him in his dying moment a glimpse not only of Ephraim and Manasseh in exile, wandering among the nations, but also of their glorious future and restoration to favour, their exaltation, the younger (Ephraim) to become the greatest nation upon earth, the other (Manasseh) to become a great people, and, finally, their representative return to the land of promise, never more to be rooted out, when the Lord Himself would reign in triumph over them, the branch of His planting, the work of His hands, that He might be glorified. Well might the patriarch worship on His staff and adore his sovereign Lord at the thought of such a grand fulfilment of all the promises.

We now come back to the point from which we started—namely, that the Bible should be studied as a whole, comparing Scripture with Scripture. It is only as we do this that we can arrive at a rightful interpretation. Having a good knowledge ourselves of the prophetic Scriptures, we can see how the various changes politically and socially are all, in God's divine plan, working for the highest welfare of His own chosen people Israel. When we realize God's faithfulness and love all through the ages, it should lead us to live nearer to Christ, to keep in closer fellowship with Him, and to desire and pray for the good time coming when He shall reign whose right it is, and sway His sceptre over the whole world.

"THE HEAD AND NOT THE TAIL" AMONG ALL THE NATIONS.

"MR. ASQUITH'S action in placing a further list of dangerous trades under the provisions of the Factory Act will be generally applauded. The list comprises chemical works, quarries, earthenware factories, and the manufacture of certain high explosives. This scheduling empowers the inspectors under the Factory Act to require the owner or occupier of a factory in which processes are carried on that are injurious to life or health, or in which there is imminent danger of accident, to adopt such safeguards as may be reasonably required. A large discretion is necessarily vested in the Inspectors, and were it not so, the section of the Act which confers these powers would be very difficult to enforce. It is inevitable that certain trades should be perilous to those who follow them; but it is at once a business like precaution, and a moral duty to restrict those perils as much as possible. And it is an agreeable reflection that, thanks to the energy and foresight of the Conservative party, we are far and away ahead of all foreign countries in our arrangements for the comfort and safety of work-people. . . .

"It is satisfactory to find that there is at least one industry in which Britons are holding their own, and that is ship-building. The statistics printed in the annual review published by the Liverpool Journal of Commerce show that Great Britain is first and the rest nowhere. In fact, a single yard, that of Messrs. Harland and Wolff at Belfast, has turned out more tonnage than the whole of any Continental country—namely, 68,612 tons of shipping as against the German aggregate (the largest for the Continent) of 54,063 tons. The importance of our ship-building trade may best be measured by such a comparison as that: and it may also be noticed that on the Clyde alone the tonnage of ships built is nearly three times as much as in all the Continental yards put together."—St. James's Gazette, December 28th, 1892.

The largest ship-building nation in the world is also the largest carrier by sea of any extant power, and hence we claim that ours is the wealthiest of the nations, as it is the most widely expanded by reason of our enormous and rapidly increasing population.

St. James's Gazette, in the extracts above given, touches another of our nation's traits of character, and tells us that "far and away we are ahead of all foreign countries in arrangements for the comfort and safety of workpeople." The writer, we suppose, would be surprised if we told him that he has been pointing to the fulfilment of God's promises to Israel-obedient in Deut. xxviii. 1 and 13, where He engaged "to set them on high, above all the nations of the earth." In beneficent provision for her workmen and workwomen, in ocean trade and commerce, and in all that makes for wealth and world-wide influence, our nation is in advance of all other races, and so the evidence of our Israelite origin is adduced blindly, even by St. James's Gazette. But St. James's Gazette on Dec. 12, last, published a very suggestive article on the British "Flag and the Stamp," which pointed to another aspect of our subject. It discussed the Federation of the Empire, which, in Scriptural language, has reference to the Israelite "nation and company of nations," promised to Jacob's afterseed in Gen. xxxv. 11, and xlviii. 19. Where is the sign that this great Federation xists or is likely to exist among any of the modern nations? Ve see it in actual being, in the British Empire to-day! Britain is the central nucleus; the colonies of the empire are "a company of nations" showing marks already of a coming, if not present, confederation. Hitherto the unity of the colonies and their confederation with their old mother in the Isles of the West, has been marked by the identity of the language. English is the vernacular of "England" and her British Colonies. Another point of union would be the penny postage stamp to be the unit of postal charges for the whole British Empire. On this subject the journalist writes thus:—

Digitized by Google

"A uniform postage will undoubtedly go a considerable distance towards developing the consciousness of the colonist, wherever he may be, that he is a member of the most splendid and powerful, if informal, confederation on the face of the earth. Sentiment counts for much in these matters; but the change will not be without its advantages from the solid business point of view. The volume of business correspondence between England and the distant offshoots of the Empire is enormous, and no doubt many great firms will save substantial sums by the reduction of the rate of postage by more than one-half. The home exporter to the colonies will in this, and in collateral ways, enjoy a certain advantage over his foreign rivals which should be of increasing value and importance to him as time goes on.

"We are, it would seem, getting a little nearer, by degrees, to the true Imperial ideal—that every subject of the Crown should feel that he is in the same position under the Crown, wherever he goes. That he should be able to live under precisely the same laws, whatever the latitude, is perhaps too much to expect. Not even the most advanced form of Imperial Federation could quite bring that about. But there is nothing Utopian in hoping and believing that the day is coming when every member of our Imperial race may know that, in whatever continent or island of the British dominions he may reside, he stands in the same political position, and enjoys the same privileges as every other man who owes allegiance to Britain—that, in short, he enjoys the advantages of the subject and citizen who lives within sound of Big Ben. Eventually we may have unity of taxation; and it should not be insuperably difficult to prepare an inter-imperial code which should unify legal proceedings between one part of the empire and another. It ought not, for instance, to be more difficult or more expensive for an Australian to recover a debt owing to him in London than for an inhabitant of Newcastle. Obviously, too, in our ideal, but not unworkable, Commonwealth, the British subject, whether he live in Canada or in Australia, ought to find the Imperial and Indian Civil Services as readily open to him as if he lived in England. And need we despair of uniformity of postage presently helping us to an inter-imperial telegraph service, which is really quite as much needed? Our aim should be—and this is the true Imperialism, and the essential foundation of any Federation which shall be more than a name—to level all barriers, save such as separate the Briton and the foreigner. By granting, among ourselves, every possible advantage and immunity, political and commercial, we largely disarm at once foreign commercial rivalry, and that still more alarming military jealousy which must always be a danger for a scattered empire held together by bonds of sentiment rather than by more solid and tangible ties."

There are, no doubt, other ties existing, which at present already unite the company of British Colonies. These last are nations even now, and their union under one Crown is an existing and very remarkable fact. Queen Victoria is Queen of them all, whether in Canada, or Australia, South Africa, East, West, or Central Africa, and in India. The Church of England is represented in all the Colonial nations, and is a recognised tie. The supremacy of the sea which follows on British Israel's possession of the Gates, is a benefit and blessing in which the Colonial and Indian Empires participate. Their security under the British Crown, in fact, depends on this great and Divine gift of the Gates. The Gates firmly held throughout the world, give our nation the supremacy of the seas. Commerce and wealth follow, as we said before; and all these are God's good gifts to His people. Let Israel, therefore, praise the Lord for His goodness to His chosen people!

THE REV. C. F. COOPER, OF YARMOUTH, NOVA SCOTIA.—SERMON ON OUR IDENTITY.

We take the following from The Yarmouth Light, of November 3rd, last. The report purports to be only "the notes" of the preacher's sermon, and does not give us the full statement, which we regret. It is as follows:—

"ANGLO-ISRAELISM.

"The Rev. C. F. Cooper preached again on Anglo-Israelism on Sunday evening. Text, Jer. xxxi. 7. There was as usual a large and attentive congregation. After insisting that the national acknowledgment of Our Identity meant as a consequence the salvation of the world, the preacher said: Now consider (1) Israel, during the Christian dispensation, was to develop into a 'strong' nation outside Palestine—to become the 'chief' or 'head' of the nations (Gen. xlix. 22—27; Deut. xxxii. 13—18; Isaiah xviii. 27; Jer. xxxi. 6—15; Micah x. 6, 7; Zech. x. 6—16).

"This is what the Chicago Herald says:—

"Let us not delude ourselves with fictitious greatness. There is another country at whose greatness we may well pause for contemplation. Its area exceeds eight and a half million square miles. The basis of its power is not land but water. Its greatness is maritime and its coast line is 28,500 miles long. It lies on both sides of the equator, but its boundaries touch the extremes of heat and cold. Its uncultivated area, which can be made to feed unborn millions without the help of the United States, covers millions of square miles. It contains 100,000 square miles of forest. Its population amounts to 345,000,000 souls, including pretty nearly all the races known to man. Its revenue for government amounts to more than a thousand million dollars annually, only one-fourth of which is levied in direct taxation. It has nearly a million men under arms. Its 246 war vessels are all in commission. Its merchant navy consists of 39,000 ships manned by 170,000 sailors. Its seagoing tonnage amounts to eight and a half millions. It surpasses in steamers all other powers on the globe, and nearly equals their combined total in sailing vessels. Forty-nine per cent of the carrying power of the world is under that flag. More than half the ship earnings from freight and passengers belong to it. Two-thirds of the tonnage annually built belong to it. The banks of that empire transact one third of the business of the entire world. Its manufactures comprise one third those of all Europe. It uses 30 per cent. of the horse-power of the world. Its enormous debt, which it uses as the most profitable investments of its own earnings, amounts to only 9 per cent. of its wealth. It is the wealthiest state in the world, and its wealth has been made by experts. Its name is Greater Britain.

Digitized by Google

"Israel was to become the greatest nation in the world. But the British Empire is the greatest nation. Therefore the British Empire is Israel's facsimile.

"(2) It was foretold that the tribe of Manasseh would separate from his brethren and become an independent and 'great people' (Gen. xlviii. 19). We believe the people of the United States are Manasseh. If they be not, where is Manasseh? Can we point to any other race than ours fulfilling this prediction? A race, one part of which is the greatest nation in the world, and the other part independent and truly great? In this connection study Isaiah xlix—a most remarkable chapter. In verse 19 we read that the land of Israel's destruction, i.e., her exile, i.e., England should 'become too narrow by reason of the inhabitants.' And in verse 20 we read, 'The children which thou shalt have after thou hast lost the other (Manasseh) shall say in thine ears, The place is too straight for me; give place to me that I may dwell.' After the declaration of 'Independence' many 'waste and desolate places' were colonized by England.

"(3) God declares that after Israel's banishment from Palestine, when they were 'scattered among the countries,' He would be to them as a 'little sanctuary' in the countries where they should come (Ezek. xi. 16). And the following passages prove that Israel in their island home should never be conquered: Isaiah xli. 8—17; liv. 17; Micah v. 7, 8. England is the only nation in the world that has never been conquered in her own land by another race. Moreover, we were to conquer against all odds (Lev. xxvi. 7, 8; Deut. xx. 1). 'This seal of Our Identity was witnessed to' in the Peninsular war, at the Crimea, when fighting China, Abyssinia, the Ashantees, etc., and as Mr. Hine says, 'Our armies suffered the great disadvantage of having oceans intervening between the battle field and the resources of the mother country.'

"Now let me sum up as far as we have gone: God declared that Israel in the present dispensation (a) should dwell in islands north-west of Palestine; (b) should there be invincible; (c) should lose Manasseh; (d) should form colonies in every quarter of the globe; (e) possess the Gates of her enemies; (f) becoming the greatest nation on earth. The British nation, and it alone, fulfils every one of these predictions. The conclusion therefore is inevitable. Let me put the argument in form of a syllogism: God, who cannot lie, promised to Israel exclusively such and such blessings in the Christain dispensation. The Anglo-Saxon race are now enjoying these blessings exclusively. Therefore the Anglo-Saxon race must be Israel."

THE REV. THOMAS ALLEN, OF MANCHESTER, ON THE EMPIRE.

AT the annual meeting of the Wesleyan Foreign Missions, held on Monday, November 21st, at Smethwick, the Rev. Thomas Allen, of Manchester (the deputation), made a remarkable speech, wherein he went a great part of the way with the Anglo-Israelites, but, as far as we are aware, with no reference whatever to the Scriptural conclusion that the British nation, being such as he described, must be the remnant of Israel or the Lost Ten Tribes. No doubt he would, if he could see this article, maintain that he had not the British Empire as Israel in his mind at all when he made his speech; but that, in spite of that, the British nation was such as he described, and therefore must be incited to carry out its missionary career with benefit and blessing to the world.

We ask Mr. Allen how that can be possible (the Bible being true) if the British have no connection with the Lost Ten Tribes of the House of Israel? He described, as the chief points of the British national character, that they were striving throughout the earth to establish the kingdom of Christ therein; that to qualify them for the work (just our own BANNER contention!) God has given them territory, commanding colonial power, a sea-girt home, and vast population, the basis of empire! In regard to Britain's spiritual gifts, he added that our English Christianity was a noble vine and plant. Its boughs spread out to the seas, and its branches to the rivers! The fruit this nation had brought forth was wonderful fruit—fruit that had moistened the lips of millions beyond the seas. These are the words of Matt. xxi. 43, of Gen. xxii. 18, Gen. xxviii. 14, and Isa. xxvii. 6, written and spoken of Israel, but applied quite correctly by Mr. Allen to our own nation, though independently of Israel.

But we would ask the speaker to consider how these things can be true of our nation, as no doubt they are, unless they are the afterseed of Abraham—that is, Israel of the Ten Tribes in their modern condition, described so graphically in Hosea i. 10? If God has given us, to qualify us to be His world-wide missionaries, territory, population, colonies, good fruits in foreign missions, and the duty of establishing the kingdom of Christ upon the earth, then surely we must be Israel, to whom God gave all these gifts and duties exclusively, or He has authorized two nations to go to His work armed exactly with the same powers, which is not only absurd, but contrary to the Scriptures!

In regard to Israel as God's missionaries to the world, we have, in Isa. xxvii. 6, R.V., the words, "Israel shall blossom and bud, and they shall fill the face of the world with fruit." As to population, Hosea i. 10 tells us that the children of Israel should be "as the sand of the sea, which cannot be measured nor numbered," at the time of her Christian profession and away from Palestine. Her vast territories are promised in Daniel's prophecy (vii. 27), "The kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High," the saints being the children of Israel" (Psalm cxlviii. 14). They were to become "a nation and a company of nations," which includes territorial extension (Gen. xxxv. 11); while "the Gates of their enemies" were to be theirs, giving them the command of the seas (Gen. xxii. 17). In reference to their good fruits (necessarily, Christian good fruits), we have our Lord's promise to Ephraim-Israel that the kingdom of God taken from the Jews would be given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof; and Isaiah xxvii. 6, as we have seen above, tells us that Ephraim-Israel was to bring forth those very fruits (Matt. xxi. 43).

Digitized by Google

"The kingdom of God" is the kingdom of Christ, and when the former was transferred to Israel from Judah, the latter kingdom followed. To them was given the kingdom on earth, to prepare it for the King who is to come. We see, then, that God, who cannot lie, gave in His Word, which cannot mislead us, all the good things in question to His people Israel, to qualify them to prepare Christ's kingdom upon the earth. When we see a nation, the British, doing these very things, and possessing all those special gifts, with the very object in question, as the Rev. Thomas Allen declares is the case, then we must, if we are reasonable, come to the conclusion that, God being true, the British must be Lost Israel, the heir of all the glorious promises, temporal and spiritual, made to them by God Himself in His Holy Word.

The report of Mr. Allen's address, taken from the Smethwick Telephone, of Nov. 26th last, was to the following effect. Mr. Jabez Jones was in the chair:—

The chairman said they were called together to support the Wesleyan missionary organization, the ramifications of which no doubt touched the whole of their colonial possessions, and was doing a great deal for the commercial prosperity of our country, for an English missionary going into heathenish countries could not step into those uncivilized parts without carrying with him the habits and customs of British society, and thereby indirectly benefiting their trade. He had no doubt the mills of Lancashire and Yorkshire had felt the influence of missionary enterprise. Therefore they were called upon, apart from the religious aspect, to support that missionary work. He appealed for a substantial collection.

The Rev. Thomas Allen then addressed the meeting. He remarked that the home income had been declining for many years. A good many reasons might be assigned for this, but there was one reason which he thought had been somewhat overlooked, and it was this—that during the last fifteen or twenty years fine old supporters of this society had been passing away from nearly all the circuits of Methodism. He did not think it indicated that the Methodists were losing faith in this grand work. (Applause.) He wished their people would study geography in relation to this particular enterprise in which they were engaged. He was afraid the English people were very much behind other people in their general knowledge of the world. There were millions of people in England who had no conception what China and India meant. He thought it was about time that the Methodist people took down the maps to see where those stations were, and where missionaries were working. They ought to get intelligence in regard to the matter. The time had come when the Christian people of England of all Churches who were interested in the conversion of the world should acquaint themselves with the distribution of nations, and with the distribution of religious and of missionary enterprise. A special responsibility rested upon the English nation in regard to missionary work. They all agreed that missionary societies were established for extending the light and influence of the Gospel throughout the world, but he contended that in many forms at the present time God was using the British Empire in order to establish in the earth the kingdom of His Son Jesus Christ. England had territory. (Hear, hear.) After enumerating some of our possessions, he pointed out that in the race for colonization England alone remained in possession of a commanding colonial power. He asked the thoughtful men of that congregation whether they did not think that there was a wonderful Providence in the fact that at the present time so much of the territory of the world was tied, so to speak, to this little island of ours in the midst of the sea. He believed it was intended to prepare the way for the accomplishment of a great moral and spiritual purpose. Providence has also given them population. A nation could not colonize without a surplus population. This question of population must press itself upon the attention of statesmen, and upon ecclesiastical statesmen. It was population more than anything else that determined and modified their political theories. (Hear, hear.) In conclusion, he observed that the vine of English Christianity was a noble plant. It had spread out its boughs to the seas, and its branches to the rivers. It had brought forth wonderful fruit, and fruit which had moistened the lips of millions beyond the seas. If that was to go on, then this vine of English Christianity must be nourished by all means possible. (Hear, hear.) Should there be any withdrawal from missionary effort? A thousand times no. They were not far from great successes. (Hear, hear.)

The Rev. J. Robinson said he wished to convey an expression of gratitude to the deputation (the Rev. T. Allen), the chairman, and the choir. He asked the meeting to join with him in that expression of gratitude. He remarked that Mr. Allen was an ecclesiastical statesman, and they were highly privileged in having him with them.

Mr. Josiah Brookes seconded the vote of thanks, which was heartily accorded.

The Rev. R. Heslam announced that the collections for the services amounted to £21 6s., which was considerably in excess of the previous year.

An anthem was rendered by the choir, and solos were sung by Miss Constance Yorke and Mr. Fred Hall.

We are not sure that the British folk are more ignorant of the geography of the world than the French, Germans, or Italians, taken as nations. There is, no doubt, at home, a lamentable amount of ignorance and indifference in regard to the size and importance of the British colonies, and of our heathen empire in India, Borneo, and Africa. We "dwell alone" among the nations, and never care to realize the greatness of the British Empire or its unique character. They take India for granted, and imagine it to be a diminutive country like our own island home. They are astounded to learn that in one direction its length would cover the distance between London and Moscow, and its breadth would be the distance between London and Alexandria! They have no conception that Canada is three times the size of gigantic India, that Australia is as large as Europe, and that the South African colonies are immense in dimensions. God's hand is indeed visible in all this, and while men are called on to see it, surely it is right to remind them that God promised all these things exclusively as the reward of obedience to Abraham and his seed for ever, and that Israel therefore should praise the Lord for His faithfulness and truth to His chosen people Israel!

PROGRESS IN NOVA SCOTIA.

The Rev. C. F. Cooper, of Yarmouth, N.S., writes to us under date November 22nd last, reporting the progress of Our Identity in his neighbourhood. It appears to be very satisfactory and encouraging. He is finding that openings are being made by one who has been a reader of the Banner of Israel from the beginning. This zealous friend has secured for Mr. Cooper a good number of buildings for lectures and addresses. A Baptist Church is at his disposal, a Presbyterian Church, and an Oddfellows' Hall, in different places have been engaged by him for the purpose. Our clerical fellow-helper intends, God willing, to commence his tour in that locality in January. Mr. Cooper proposes to lecture on "The History of Canada," from the Anglo-Israelite point of view, and offers us the lecture for publication. We hope in the course of 1893 to make use of it for the benefit of our readers. The subject will be new to the majority of us at home, and no doubt will be ably handled.

Digitized by Google

While we are on the subject of progress in "Greater Britain," we should like to add a piece of good news which Dr. H. Alder-Smith supplies. He says that a desire for Identity information has suddenly sprung up in Honolulu, in the Hawaiin Islands! and that a firm of solicitors have been authorised to send him a third remittance of £10—thirty pounds in all—for Identity literature, which is to comprise twenty copies of "The Fulness of Nations," and twenty-five of the third edition of "The Handbook!" "At this rate," says Dr. H. Alder-Smith, "the ends of the earth will know more than the mother country soon!" We hope our readers note that the knowledge of Our Identity springs up as it were spontaneously; now in Nova Scotia, again in Honolulu in the North Pacific, and in parts of the United Kingdom where it never was suspected to be existing! We never broach the subject now with those believed to be ignorant of its importance, without evidence that the outlines of the matter have been brought to the notice of our questioners or that they know some person or persons who are rejoicing in this truth, and anxious to make it known to all their relations and friends. This should encourage those who are diffident about making known the good news to strangers. We believe God requires this truth to be made known far and wide at the present time, and who are the proper agents for such employment but those who have been enabled to see the truth and rejoice in it themselves?

There is no doubt that many at the present time are making serious efforts in the right direction. Our pages teem with reports of lectures, addresses, and meetings in all parts of the country, having for their object the promulgation of our glorious Identity, and the diffusion of the good news among the nation and company of nations. Many efforts of the same character, of which we are privately informed, are being made in all directions with the certain result that the truth is spreading, is being studied, and then first secretly and at last openly avowed to the praise of God's faithfulness and truth to His people, British-Israel, His chosen nation. To Him be all the praise and all the glory.

THE EDUCATION OF BRITISH CHILDREN.

DURING a practical discourse from an Evangelical Church of England pulpit we lately heard, with reference to Eph. vi. 4, a statement to the effect that our national greatness and prosperity were due to the fact that the Bible was the foundation of our educational system. Our nation honours the Bible in the voluntary schools, and in some measure also in the Board Schools. So far we are mindful "to bring up our children in the nurture and admonition of "the Lord," and the blessing of God follows us as a nation. "It will be an evil day for the nation," said the preacher, "when we cease to make the Bible the foundation of the education of our children, for then, the cause of our greatness will have passed away, and we may expect our greatness and prosperity to disappear. We shall be, then, as the other nations who have no blessing from on high."

To those who hold these views, and attribute our national prosperity to our obedience to God's commands in respect to the Word of God, the question ought naturally to suggest itself, that if our greatness depends on our attention to the Bible, how came it that the Scriptures were given us by God as our priceless heritage? His Book was once "committed or entrusted" to the Jewish nation being "the oracles of God," as Rom. iii. 1, 2, R.V., declares. But when "the kingdom of God was taken from them" it is obvious the Word of God, as we have it, also left their custody. The Jews now have not the whole Word. The New Testament they reject; the Old they misunderstand; for they see not Jesus the Messiah in them! The custody of the Book having left them, all the world knows, that among the nations, our own, the Anglo-Saxon race, is exclusively entrusted with it now, for the benefit and blessing of mankind. We distribute it among all nations, families, and kindreds of the earth, and in so doing we clearly "bring forth the fruits of the kingdom of God" according to our Lord's remarkable prophecy in Matt. xxi. 43, R.V.

We see, then, that the Bible is a gift of God to our nation, for a very special purpose—namely, that in the place of the Jews who are for a season disinherited for slaying the Son of God, the Lord of glory, we may become God's almoners to all the nations, and the messengers of His Gospel grace in Christ Jesus our Lord. One of the results of our possession of the Word, and of our faithful use of it in our British schools at home, and in the colonies, is, that British children are instructed in the ways of the Lord, and "they are brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord" according to St. Paul's declaration in Eph. vi. 4. We have, however, not yet arrived at the conclusion of this matter. Why, we would ask again, is this nation gifted with the Book, and able to make use, as God desires, of its teaching, not only in our own schools, but throughout all the nations of the world, as a means of grace, and to make known to sinners the only "Name under heaven, given among men whereby they must be saved"? (Acts iv. 12, R.V.). To answer this question we must search the Scriptures to see if there be any revelation there of God's purposes as to which of the nations He means so to employ? All is now clear! It is manifest from the Bible that God means to use one people, the sons of Abraham, the seed of Israel, for this gracious work. The Jews being rejected for rebellion and murder, the heritage of honour devolves on the House of Israel or Ephraim. "In thy seed," was the promise, "shall all the nations, all the families, all the kindreds of the earth be blessed" (Gen. xxii. 18, xxviii. 14; Acts iii. 25, R.V.). "In the days to come," said the prophet, "Jacob shall take root, Israel shall blossom and bud, and they shall fill the face of the world with fruit."

The qualification for this evangelistic work to prepare the messengers of God's grace for their functions is described in Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20, as the exclusive possession of the children of Israel. "He showeth His words unto Jacob, His statutes and His judgments unto Israel; He hath not dealt so with any nation; and as for His judgments they have not known them. Praise ye the Lord."

These Scriptural promises suffice. "The chosen of God" for this blessed work, failing the Jews, is Israel of the House of Joseph! They have had given to them all that is needful to qualify them to become God's messengers of peace to the nations, and our nation and empire which answers to the prophecies in this, as in all other respects, is the favoured race, the heirs of all the promises to Israel! As Israel, God has given us the Word of God. As Israel, He has given us the desire to teach it to our children as part of their national education; and as Israel He has given us to know His words, His statutes, and His judgments as no other nation has learned them, that we may instruct the nations of the earth, to their spiritual benefit and salvation. Our national greatness and prosperity, consequently, do not depend, as our preacher declared, upon our possession of the Scriptures, but upon our Israelitish origin, and because of God's promises to Abraham. As Israel (by way of a means to the end) God has given us the Scriptures to guide us and bless, and instruct as a nation; and He has given us besides, the indwelling of the Holy Spirit of God, to teach us the meaning of His Word, and "to incline our hearts that we may keep His laws" (1 Kings viii. 57, 58, R.V.; see Communion Service). Having thus blessed us and qualified us for His work, He has commissioned us to go to all nations; and, with the Bible in our hands, to bring them to Christ. "For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John iii. 16).

Digitized by Google

The education of our children, then, is part of the plan. We have to qualify them to do their part as the world's evangelists, and to effect that, their education as the children of Israel, must be founded on the Word of God. We have no fear that there will be any failure in this respect, though the signs of the times are sometimes ominous. God is faithful to His promises, and He has solemnly declared respecting His people Israel, that "He will never leave them nor forsake them," but by them will make known His salvation to "the ends," "the coasts," and "uttermost parts of the earth," to the glory of His great name. Let Israel, therefore, praise the Lord for His faithfulness to them, His people (Psa. lxvii., xcviii. 3).

SOME QUESTIONS TO THE REV. DENIS HANAN, D.D., AND HIS ANSWERS.

"In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and with Assyria, a blessing in the midst of the earth: whom the Lord of hosts shall bless, saying, Blessed be Egypt My people, and Assyria the work of My hands, and Israel Mine inheritance."—Isaiah xix. 24, 25.

DEAR SIR,—Will you kindly explain in the BANNER, (1) How Israel is to be a third with Egypt and Assyria, and how Egypt and Assyria are given titles belonging to Israel? Will you state your opinion of Mr. Douglas's explanation of this passage given on folio 256 of the Two Witnesses for May, 1888, and say also who now represents Assyria? (2) If, as believed, Ireland is not to be separated from England, and the Church of England is not to be disestablished, why was the Church of Ireland disestablished?

Faithfully yours,

C. N.

[REPLY.]

My opinion is that the prophecy quoted refers to the countries between the Nile and the Euphrates. These lands were promised to Abraham (Gen. xv. 18), and they will be possessed by his seed. The Egyptians will serve with the Assyrians (ver. 23), but the lands will be possessed and ruled over by Israel, and thus the peculiar Israelitish titles of "My people," "the work of My hands," and "Mine inheritance," will be predicated of the race that possesses and rules—that is, of Abraham's heirs.

My opinion of Mr. Douglas's theory concerning the Teutonic peoples will be found in the BANNER OF ISRAEL for June 12th, 1889.

I have never attempted to identify the modern nation which is Assyria. There is a reference to "the Assyrian" in the third edition of the "Handbook of British-Israel Truth," Appendix C., pages 207 and 212.

The Church of Ireland was disestablished because she was not true to her trust, and therefore failed to influence the nation; at least this was the indictment brought against her by the author of the measure. Undoubtedly she was content to be the one favoured or State-recognised sect among the sects, and nothing but disestablishment could have restored her to a true conception of her Catholic status. The Church of England is in a different position, both historically and practically. No enactment ever established her. Rather, it was she that formed the State; and she has never forgotten that her status is not that of a State-recognised sect.

But I have never held that the Church of England will not be disestablished because of the Identity of Britain with Israel. In none of our company of nations is the Church established; nor when the land from the Nile to the Euphrates becomes the centre of British-Israel rule, will there be any need of a legal enactment giving State-recognition to the Church, any more than there was need for such an enactment in the early history of England; for then "all shall know the Lord," and "they shall see eye to eye when the Lord shall bring again Zion." This will constitute the truest establishment. The visible rule of the one Head will produce a universal recognition of the Catholicity of the Church, such as is now witnessed to by those who recognise the reality of His rule although He is invisible.

Nevertheless I do not think that the Church of England will cease to occupy her present place as an integral portion of the nation, until the time comes when all shall know that the kingdom of God, when taken from Judah, was given to the nation of Israel. Then the efforts to sever Church and State will cease for evermore.

DENIS HANAN.

GLEANINGS.

BY J. THOMSON.

15.—JAFFA, THE PORT OF JERUSALEM.

IN his "Underground Jerusalem,"* Captain Warren, speaking of Jaffa, which is the port of Jerusalem, mentions as being in the harbour, "a reef of rocks which is supposed to mark the limit of the ancient harbour made by King Solomon," within which is "smooth water of about six fathoms. . . . And here, without a doubt," is the "same harbour in which the stores for the building of the Temple by King Solomon were collected. Here was the cedar-wood and fir gathered together which Hiram, King of Tyre, caused his Sidonian woodmen, assisted by above thirty thousand Israelites, to cut down in the forests of Lebanon, and thence float along the sea-coast to Jaffa, where he handed it over to a deputy from King Solomon. Then Jaffa became the seaport of Jerusalem, though no doubt it previously had existed as a port for small craft.

"Although there are few remains visible to connect Jaffa with the past, yet unquestionably it is one of the most interesting sites in Palestine; it is one of the few cities which can claim a place both in early biblical and classical history. . . . All geographers, except Strabo, are in favour of its being the spot where Andromeda was exposed to the sea-monster; and Pliny even goes so far as to suggest that the town existed before the Flood. Josephus precisely informs us that Jaffa is not naturally a haven, and that the space within the reef was then (as now) particularly exposed to the north wind.

"Nevertheless it was a place of shipping from the earliest days, allotted to the tribe of Dan at the distribution of the land, who appears to have rapidly become accustomed to passing their days in the great waters; and may, probably, even before the time of Solomon, have joined with the Phœnicians in voyages to our native and other lands" (pp. 24—26).

16.—SOME SMALL COUNTRIES OF GREAT INFLUENCE.

"Palestine has been likened to Wales as to position, shape, and size; and some have expressed a doubt how so small a country could ever have taken up such a position in the world

* "Underground Jerusalem," by Charles Warren, R.E., F.R.G.S. &c. London: Richard Bentley and Son, 1876.

Digitized by Google

as it did in the reign of King Solomon. But when we look at the leading countries of the Mediterranean, they were none of them large; the whole Peloponnesus, with its several States, is smaller than Palestine; the province of Rome was considerably smaller, and so was Carthage. The States of Phœnicia were smaller than Palestine. Even at the present day, England, which is colonizing the world, and sends emigrants and missionaries everywhere, is not of huge proportion in comparison.

"The population of Palestine would probably have been most dense, and the number of the people must, in a great measure, have given importance to the State. A people who on their entry into Palestine could send forty thousand fighting men across the Jordan, from two and a-half tribes, was in their days a 'mighty nation,' quite capable of taking a place and asserting a position, even between Egypt and Assyria."—"Underground Jerusalem," pp. 45, 46.

BRITISH-ISRAEL ADDRESSES.

THE subject of British-Israel, as bearing upon the Lost Tribes and their place among the peoples of the world, is one full of interest to all who concern themselves with the history of the human race, and more especially so to Bible students, opening up the prophecies and bringing them into relation one with the other. The topic has been tolerably well ventilated in Brighton on various occasions, and arrangements have now been made for a series of addresses to Bible students to be delivered by the Rev. Frederick Aston, vicar of Bushbury, Wolverhampton, and other well-known gentlemen. These addresses will be given under the auspices of the British-Israel Association, in the Mission Church, New England-road, on Tuesday evening, November 8th, when General Godby will occupy the chair, and on Wednesday afternoon and evening, November 9th, the afternoon meeting commencing at three o'clock, and the evening gatherings at eight. Questions are invited, and will be answered at the end of each meeting; and every effort will be made to encourage investigations as to the soundness of the British-Israel theory.—Brighton Examiner, Oct. 25, 1892.

ON MRS. MARTHA RICK'S VISIT TO THE QUEEN ON JULY 16, 1892.

Tell me the meaning of this curious scene—
An old black slave shakes hands with Britain's Queen.

HAVE you not heard, how from Liberia's strand
That old black woman came to our fair land?
Oh, 'tis a tale would touch a heart of stone—
She was a slave girl once, and all alone
From kindred sold away—she only left to mourn
Her bitter lot—from friend and country torn,
To Afric's shore her weary way she made.
And there, perchance beneath some palm tree's shade,
She heard of England and of England's Queen,
A far-off rumour of a realm unseen,
Where there was freedom for the toiling slave
Who trod her shores; a rising from the grave
Of misery, and darkness and despair—
A very paradise—a country oh! so fair,—
And o'er this land one mother held the sway,
Ruling her sons by kindly love alway.
A noble Queen whose fame spread o'er the earth,
Reflecting mercy—causing freedom's birth.

* * * * * *

Thus sprang the thought within that dusky breast,
In childhood's springtide—"Oh that I could rest
Within the presence of that wondrous Queen,
Could I but see her, though myself unseen,
Unheard of joy would thrill my sluggish veins,
And I should happy die, midst any pains!"
This thought she nursed—and through her life she saved
Each paltry coin her hardy toil had craved.
Slow years rolled on—and seventy summers past,
Till she had gained a tiny pile at last,
Then to Liberia's shores she bent her way,
Glowing with radiance, as the wished-for day
Of her long cherished-scheme at last drew nigh.
She scans the ocean with a falcon eye—
A poor old negress, threescore years and more!
Severed by boundless seas from England's shore—
Yet, what a man has done, she too may do,
And with a lion's heart, to purpose true,
She finds a ship which sails for English shore,
And for her passage spends her scanty store.
She reaches England after perils past,
And on the longed-for shore sets foot at last;
And when her story is in England known,
The rumour of it reaches to the Throne.
And she of noble heart, our gracious Queen,
Decrees at once to see, and to be seen
By this poor pilgrim, calls her to her side,
And welcomes her with all a mother's pride.
She summons all her children to attend,
And to the aged black their welcome lend;
Thus do we see displayed before our view,
A parallel of what the King of kings will do.
Our noble Sovereign acts a gracious part,
For God Himself rewards the loving heart;
All they who seek Him thus shall surely find
More than they sought for, comfort to the mind
And body, rest for heart and soul,
A Royal welcome, joy beyond control.

W. H. O.

—Yorkshire Weekly Post, 1892.

Correspondence.

THE TRIBE OF BENJAMIN AND HOSEA I. 4, 6, 9.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—I see in your last issue an enquirer asking when Hosea prophesied, and if the marriage of the prophet was real or figurative. The marginal reference in the Authorised Version would have given your correspondent the information sought for on the first point—namely, the date of Hosea's prophecy, which extended over 58 years, from B.C. 783 to 725, or within a few years of the date when the House of Israel went into captivity; so the prophet may probably have lived to witness the fulfilment of his own prophecies referred to in the heading. As regards the other point, the marriage was not real, but under the figure of an adulterous wife the prophet foreshadows the apostacy of the House of Israel.

Now, when on the subject of Hosea's prophecies, can you or any of your readers explain if the prophecies referred to in the heading applied to the Ten-tribed House of Israel; why were they not fulfilled in Benjamin, one of the Ten Tribes? That they were not fulfilled in that Tribe is, in my opinion, a conclusive proof that they did not apply to Benjamim, but only to those Tribes that constituted the Kingdom of the House, and not the House of Israel.

Secondly, as Hosea was dealing with both Houses, if the prophecies contained in the verses referred to in the heading did not apply to Benjamin, did that in ver. 7 include that Tribe as well as the House of Judah also? This is a very difficult question to answer; but the later history of Benjamin, after their separation from the House of Israel, and when so long associated with the House of Judah (B.C. 985 to A.D. 68 or 69), sharing in all their wars and the Babylonish captivity, is more in accord with that House than with the history of the House to which they really belonged, and certainly tends to the belief that ver. 7, "I will have mercy on the House of Judah, and will save them," may embrace Benjamin also, although not named. But look again at Jer. xxiv., and there we find no mention made of Benjamin, but implied in the basket of good figs, and spoken of as "them of Judah that were carried away captive" (ver. 7), and these were sent away for their good, but the evil fruit (Judah) for their hurt. The prophecies referred to in the heading are usually applied to the Ten Tribes, who are spoken of as divorced from the Mosaic covenant; but how, I would ask, could this apply to Benjamin, who, like the Jews, were under the law until Benjamin accepted Christ, who became the end of the law to them. The history of the House of Israel is not the history of Benjamin beyond a certain point, and as there is so little mention of this Tribe in the New Testament, a good deal that is said or written as to its later history must be conjectural, but there is one thing certain, that during the apostolic age it could never have been included in the term "Gentiles," inasmuch as they were under the law until their conversion, and never beyond the borders of Palestine.

Digitized by Google

If you or any of your readers can throw any further light on the points, they will greatly oblige,

Yours truly,

W. H. LARKINS, Lt.-Col.

Bromley, Kent, Nov. 7th, 1892.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR. — The subject of the position of Benjamin amongst the Tribes composing the two Houses of Israel and Judah, was fully explained by Mr. Edward Hine in his larger work, "Lost Israel." On pages 85, 183 and 184 nearly all that can be said on the matter appears. The conclusions seem to be:—

1. Benjamin was a tribe of the House of Joseph—that is, of "Israel," or the Ten Tribes (2 Sam. ii. 8, 9, xix. 18—20; 1 Kings xi. 35).

2. The prophecy respecting the disruption of the Polity of Israel, and the removal of "the kingdom," or Ten Tribes, from Rehoboam's dominion, involved the gift of one of the Tribes of Israel to the House of Judah for the special purpose named in 1 Kings xi. 33, 35, 36.

3. From the date this was fulfilled, B.C. 975, Benjamin belonged to Judah, to fulfil that purpose, but did not share in the punishment decreed in Hosea i. 4, 6 and 9, against the House and Kingdom of Israel. It became merged in the fate, destiny, and blessings of Judah till, on the eve of the Crucifixion, God severed "the brotherhood" till then existing "between Judah and Israel," as stated in Zech. xi. 10—14.

4. After that date Benjamin, we believe, escaped from Jerusalem during the Roman siege, and eventually found her way, 1,000 years afterwards, to "the Isles of the West," that she might throw in her lot again with the Ten Tribes, or "Kingdom of Israel," henceforth to continue under God's blessing, as "sons of the living God" (Hosea i. 10). Benjamin consequently escaped the punishment the other Nine Tribes endured under Hosea i. 4, 6, and 9, since they were retained under the law with Judah, in order that, being made free by Christ, they might be His light-bearers and the preachers of His Gospel, to both Jews and to non-Israelite Gentiles.

5. It is clear then that Benjamin as a tribe was not included in the Lo-ammi curse of Hosea i. 4, 6, 9, but was highly blessed and honoured in political union with Judah, as being Christ's light-bearers. They escaped, too, the punishment of the Jews, since they had no part in the Crucifixion. They were obliged to leave Palestine, but joined their brethren of Israel to partake in their blessings as a highly honoured Christian nation.

A point respecting which there is some confusion arises from the fact that the House or Kingdom of Israel was described in 1 Kings xi. 35 as the "Ten Tribes"; whereas by our well-founded belief, Benjamin being deducted because united to Judah in B.C. 975, they constituted only Nine Tribes. The late Surg.-Gen. J. M. Grant was very strong in respect to the point that Joseph counted only as one tribe of the ten, though he was represented by two tribes, Ephraim and Manasseh. We have always held, and do so now, that Joseph having one portion above his brethren, his sons were often properly reckoned as two of the tribes of Israel, and so the number "ten" was made up, while Benjamin was absent to fulfil its destiny as the light-bearers of the Lord Jesus in Jerusalem. When, however, Benjamin was liberated from that duty and rejoined their brethren in the Isles, the number of the tribes of Israel would have been redundant, unless the Tribe of Manasseh had departed westward, as it did 500 years afterwards, to constitute the great and independent people now flourishing wonderfully in the United States (see Gen. xlviii. 19—22).

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—I am pleased to say that, by God's grace, three or four here have quietly accepted the Identity, and one young fellow, having taken a wonderful grip of the subject, seems never happy except when trying to explain it to others. We hope to commence a class for the study of the Identity question in the new year. I wish also at the same time to lay before your readers a few thoughts:—

1. Why did our Lord say, "I am not sent but to the lost sheep of the House of Israel," if, when a man believes on Him, he becomes a spiritual Israelite? What is he before he believes? He cannot be a non-spiritual Israelite before, and a "spiritual Israelite" after this event, else all men are Israelites, and we have no Gentiles? But this is absurd: therefore we are bound up to the conclusion that the Lord Jesus meant what He said, otherwise these words of His were quite unnecessary.

2. The Lord Jesus said this, for had He said, "sent to all mankind," Israel's occupation, "go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," as His messengers, would have been taken away. They could not then have "shown forth His praise," nor could they have budded and blossomed and filled the earth with fruit.

3. Is there not in the importunity of this woman who called forth the remark of our Lord, which we are considering, the very essence of humility and meekness willing to be classed with "dogs"?

Have we not here a swift fulfilment of the Virgin Mary's apostrophe—"He hath exalted the humble and meek;" "He hath filled the hungry with good things"?

Praying the Lord may spare you to us, and for His glory, for many years.

Yours, &c., J. G. D.

Kent, Dec. 7, 1892.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—The following remarkable passage is taken from a sermon on "the Feast" (Luke xiv. 13, 14), which was delivered by the famous American preacher, Mr. D. L. Moody, at Waterford City, as reported in the Waterford Standard, of Sept, 28, 1892. The great evangelist is doubtless an unbeliever in the Identity, and yet he is compelled by the force of truth and facts to bear "blind testimony" to the truth of our Israelitish origin. E. IRELAND.

[EXTRACT.]

"It would be a pretty dark world if it was not for this old Book (the Bible), and if it were not for the Church, and these Young Men's Christian Associations. I would like to see these sceptics put upon an island by themselves, and I venture to say that upon the first boat touching it they would all jump on board it. (Laughter.) Where has there been any civilization without that Book? What has made your nation to-day? Why is it that the English language is circling the globe? It is because Britain has given the Bible to the globe. Should God draw up the whole of the Bibles out of this world, what terrible things would settle down upon it! Take those things you understand, and leave those things you do not understand until you get more light. The idea that you are going to find out about God without the Bible!"

NOTICE.—The Threepenny Edition of the Anglo-Israel Almanack for 1983 is entirely out of print. A few copies of the Fivepenny and One Shilling Editions may still be had.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed "PHILO-ISRAEL," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION for the BANNER OF ISRAEL, in Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts. To any part of the United Kingdom, Canada, America, or Europe, in the postal union:—

	s. d.		s. d.
copy, including postage	.. 7 0	Tasmania ..	.. 7 0
New Zealand	.. 7 0	South Australia	.. 7 0
Cape Colony	.. 7 0	Queensland	.. 7 0
Victoria ..	.. 7 0	Natal	.. 7 0
Western Australia	.. 7 0	New South Wales	.. 7 0
Transvaal ..	.. 7 0	India ..	.. 7 0
		Ceylon, via Brindisi..	7 0

All Post Office Orders, Cheques, &c., should be crossed "City Bank, Ludgate-hill, to the ac. of ROBERT BANKS AND SON." They will then only be paid to our account.

READING CASES for holding the Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts, may be had, price 2s. Sent post free on receipt of Postal Order.

THE ANNUAL VOLUMES, bound in handsome blue cloth, price 8s.

THE MONTHLY PARTS, in tinted wrapper, published the last day of each month, 6d.

CONTRIBUTIONS TOWARDS the FREE DISTRIBUTION of the NEW YEAR'S DOUBLE NUMBER of the "BANNER OF ISRAEL," received since January 13.

Many friends have also sent remittances for sending copies to addresses given. These have been sent as directed, and are not included in this List.

	£ s. d.
J. Hammond	0 2 6
Mr. Richards	0 1 0
Lieut.-Col. Saunders	0 3 0
C. F.	0 5 0

NOW READY.
HANDSOME BLUE CLOTH
CASES FOR BINDING.
Price 1s. 6d., or post free, 1s. 8d.

VOLUME XVI. OF THE BANNER OF ISRAEL,
Price 8s. Sent Post Free.
ROBERT BANKS AND SON, Racquet-ct., Fleet-st., E.C

THIRD EDITION NOW READY.
With 38 Additional Pages.
Paper Cover, Price 1s. nett., postage 2d. extra
Limp Boards, lettered, 1s. 6d., postage 2d. extra.
Cloth boards, gilt lettered, thick toned paper 2s., postage 3d. extra.

BRITISH-ISRAEL TRUTH
A Handbook for Enquirers.
EDITED BY
REV. DENIS HANAN, M.A., D.D.,
AND
H. ALDER-SMITH, M.B., F.R.C.S.
WITH A CHART AND MAP.

Published by the Authority of the BRITISH-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION, (Metropolitan, Provincial and Colonial.)

"British-Israel Truth." Edited by the Rev. Denis Hanan and H. Alder-Smith (R. Banks & Son.)—The sale of the first edition of this work, and the consequent issue of a second, shows that there is a growing interest in the study of the questions of the Israelitish origin of the English speaking people. Clever, interesting, pathetic, and showing considerable research, the volume has been a success, and doubtless has made some converts – THE ROCK.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C

Bible Lessons and Reflections,
By ROBERT GAIRDNER,
OF KILMARNOCK, N.B.

"Mr. Gairdner has given us in his book a series of Bible lessons, with his own reflections added thereto, and though he has been very cautious in the latter, and has not committed himself too broadly, he has plainly let it be seen that he is an Anglo-Israelite by conviction, and that the Scriptures which he quotes at length and extensively throughout his book, are meant to teach Our Identity and God's faithfulness, from first to last, to His promises to Abraham and his seed for ever."—Banner of Israel.

R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

"A WONDERFUL REMEDY."
"I WAS GIVEN UP BY ALL."
"SAVED FROM AN EARLY GRAVE."

Such are the words of grateful Patients relative to their CASES OF

CONSUMPTION
CURED BY THE TREATMENT OF
MR. GEO. T. CONGREVE.

Read his Book, "ON CONSUMPTION, &c." which may be had post free for ONE SHILLING from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.; or may be ordered of any Bookseller.

NOTE.—CONSULTATIONS FREE at Coombe Lodge, Peckham, on TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings only. No Charge except the usual charge for three weeks or six weeks' supply of medicine. All Patients should read the book first.

Just ready, 220 Large Post 8vo. pages, in clear, readable type, price 2s. 6d., limp cloth, gilt lettered, red edges, post free to any part of the world on receipt of postal remittance.

Nineteen Centuries Ago and NOW.
BY J. C. H. MEHL.
WITH BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH,
BY E. M. RUSH.

LONDON:
ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.
or by order of any Bookseller.

Mr. E. HINE'S PUBLICATIONS
Can be obtained of ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London; or of ISAAC LOVELAND, Shoreham, Sevenoaks.

Lost Israel Found. One handsome Demy 8vo. vol., cloth, gilt edges. 3s. 6d., post 3s. 9d.
Forty-seven Identifications. 6d., post 7d
Coming Glories. 6d., by post 7d.
Flashes of Light. 6d., by post 7d.
Oxford Wrong 4d., by post 7d.
Anglo-Saxon Riddle. 2d., by post 2½d.
The Nation Warned, &c. 6 ., by post 7d.
About half a million copies of these works have been sold.

The Future of Israel and Judah.
Being the Discourses on the Lost Ten Tribes, from "How and When the World will End." By the Rev JOSEPH WILD, D.D. With portrait of Author. Price 2s.

The Lost Ten Tribes of Israel.
By the Rev. JOSEPH WILD, D.D., Pastor of Bond-street Congregational Church, Toronto. Price 3s.
London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C.

BIRLEY'S PHOSPHORUS.
The most SCIENTIFIC and RATIONAL Tonic of the present day. Dr. Birley's new process renders Phosphorus, which is necessary to health and strength of brain and nerve, absolutely unobjectionable to take for any length of time. Its therapeutic value also is greater than the crude Phosphorus usually prescribed. Descriptive pamphlet free to enquirers (mentioning this paper) from
GORDON, MURRAY & Co., Ltd.,
10, ADAM STREET, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.

"THE WORLD'S PROVED REMEDY FOR ALL CHEST DISEASES."

COUGH, ASTHMA,
CHRONIC BRONCHITIS,
INFLUENZA,
THERE IS NONE TO EQUAL IT.

Rev. F. E. HEAPE, of DERBY, in a recent letter, says: "Your Medicine always puts my lungs right, and drove out the terrible INFLUENZA last May."

This Medicine has been prepared for 65 years.

CONGREVE'S BALSAMIC ELIXIR.

In Bottles, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 22s., may be had of all Chemists and Medicine Vendors.

TEA! TEA! TEA!
FROM
INDIA, CEYLON, AND CHINA.
Best Quality and Best Value.
From 1/6 to 3/6 per lb. Samples Gratis.
Carriage Paid on Parcels of 6lbs. and upwards.
Robinson & James,
42, TRINITY SQUARE, TOWER HILL, LONDON, E.C.

TOOTH-ACHE
CURED INSTANTLY BY
BUNTER'S NERVINE
Prevents Decay, Saves Extraction, Sleepless Nights Prevented.
Neuralgic Headaches and all Nerve Pains removed by BUNTER'S NERVINE. All Chemists, 1s. 1½d.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.
ELECTROPATHIC BELT
FOR
PARALYSIS

J. FULLER, Jun., Esq., Whiteparish, Salisbury, Wilts, writes:—"Since wearing your Electropathic Belt I am decidedly better and stronger. I have more confidence in myself, and the pain in my back is completely gone. Your Belt is truly wonderful."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.
Only Address,
52, OXFORD ST. LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)
Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

Digitized by Google

LUNG SAVE YOUR LIVES BY TAKING TONIC
LUNG OWBRIDGE'S TONIC
LUNG LUNG TONIC TONIC
LUNG THE MIGHTY HEALER. TONIC
LUNG It has a power over disease hitherto unknown in Medicine. TONIC
LUNG Are you at all Weak-chested or inclined to be Consumptive, with just a touch of Cough now and then? TONIC
LUNG "Try this Wonderful Medicine." The Cough and Weakness will disappear as if by magic, and you will feel a strength and power you never had before. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COUGH? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COLD? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL REMOVE IT! TONIC
LUNG Bronchitis & Asthma it relieves instantly TONIC
LUNG The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful in Whooping Cough become less with each dose of the medicine. TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE Chemist Hull TONIC
LUNG Sold in bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. and 11s., by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors. Wholesale all London and Provincial Houses. TONIC

The True and Divine Appointment for the Cure of Disease.
Send to
B. V. SCOTT, M.B.M.R.S.,
College of Health, 121, Kensington, Liverpool,
for his
VOICE OF NATURE TO THE INVALID,
Post free 5 stamps.

Thousands of incurables (so-called) have proved God's own means could save when others failed.

Rev. F. Harper says of Mr. Scott's book: "It is a library in itself, and free from quackery."

Rev. Lush says: "Mr. Scott's treatment is natural, safe, reasonable, and Scriptural."

Send for the Book at once.

PAGE WOODCOCK'S
WIND PILLS

A CLERGYMAN

Writes: "I am so convinced from my own experience and that of others of the real value of your WIND PILLS, in complaints arising from a disordered state of the STOMACH, BOWELS, or LIVER, that I wish much to promote the use of the Medicine in this parish, and I now inclose P.O. for a large box, and should be glad of some papers for circulation among my parishioners. In my own case

Page Woodcock's Wind Pills

have been of the greatest use. I have no objection to your publishing my communication, provided you divulge not my name and address, which you may give, nevertheless, to those who require such a verification."—Vicarage, near Malvern.

All Sufferers from INDIGESTION, LIVER COMPLAINTS, WIND on the STOMACH, COSTIVENESS, SICK HEADACHE, HEARTBURN, PALPITATION of the HEART, BILIOUSNESS, &c.,

should avail themselves of this most excellent medicine.

☞ The WIND PILLS being PURELY VEGETABLE, TASTELESS, and MILD and TONIC in their action, may be taken with perfect safety by the most delicate of either sex.

Of all Chemists, at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d., or Post Free for P.O. or Stamps, from PAGE WOODCOCK, LINCOLN.

NEW CATALOGUE of Works on Our Identity post free from R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

GIGANTIC SALE OF

100 COLOURS TO SELECT FROM

In consequence of the mild season, we have still in stock over 250,000 DRESS LENGTHS of our famous Cloths which, in order to effect a rapid clearance we have reduced to less than Manufacturers' Cost Price. 100 lovely new colours to select from. All goods are new and in perfect condition. We will gladly send patterns post free, and they need not be returned. Write to-day for patterns and Sale Price List
FULL DRESS LENGTHS OF MAGNIFICENT CLOTHS 9s.6d. CARRIAGE PAID.

GREATEST BARGAINS EVER OFFERED

LADIES CLOTH DRESSES

GENUINE REDUCTIONS! WRITE FOR PATTERNS

LUTAS LEATHLEY & Co ARMLEY, LEEDS.

BE SURE TO CUT

10,000 RUGS GIVEN AWAY.

IT MAY THIS OUT,

THIS PHENOMENAL OFFER is made to the Readers of this Journal only.
On receipt of this advertisement, accompanied by Postal Order for 6/-, or 74 stamps, we will forward DIRECT FROM OUR LOOMS to your address, one of our genuine SEAMLESS WOVEN REVERSIBLE CARPETS, suitable for Drawing-room, Dining-room, Bedroom, &c., handsomely bordered and woven in 30 different patterns and art colourings to suit all requirements, and LARGE ENOUGH TO COVER ANY ORDINARY SIZED ROOM. These carpets are manufactured from a material equal in wear to wool, and are undoubtedly the cheapest in the world.

With every Carpet we shall ABSOLUTELY GIVE AWAY a very handsome RUG to match, or we will send 2 CARPETS and 2 RUGS for 10/6

The Queen says: "Decidedly stouter and handsomer than any of the kind, the price being one astounding part of the matter." Schoolmistress: "For style, durability, and cheapness, they cannot be beaten." Penny Illustrated Paper: "Manufactured in every variety of colour, and is one of the most surprising bargains I have seen." Church Bells: "Truly wonderful value."

Thousands of Testimonials similar to the following, & Repeat Orders, have been received from our Customers:
14, London-street, Folkestone.
GENT.,
The Carpet I bought of you last year wears well and gives every satisfaction. One which has been in use four years is as strong and keeps its colour as well as ever.—J. ASHTELL.

This offer is made to the Readers of this Paper only, and will not be repeated. All Orders despatched same day as received. Cheques and Postal Orders to be crossed "Union Bank." Address—

THE BRITISH CARPET WEAVING COMPANY,
31, OLD STREET, LONDON, E.C.

NOT APPEAR AGAIN.

"I am delighted with this."—PHILO-ISRAEL.

NEW AND IMPROVED EDITION OF

ISRAEL'S WORLD,

By Rev. HENRY ROE. 2d.

Also "Consecration," 2d., "Going to Africa," 1s.; "West African Scenes," 2s.; "Fernando Po Mission," 1s. Also "Israel's World" and "Consecration" bound together in cloth, with Author's latest photograph portrait, 1s.

Order of ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C., or of Rev. HENRY ROE, Radstock, via Bath.

TEETH.—£1 A FULL SET

ESKELL'S.—CELEBRATED MAKE, £2 2s. Warranted and fitted in one visit. No extractions needed. HALF A MILLION SETS already supplied. The Nursing Record and Hospital World says:—We recommend all who require Reliable and Good Teeth at a small cost to go to Messrs. ESKELL, 445, Strand (facing Charing Cross Station), and 58, Ludgate Hill, City, London. Also at 27, Western Road, Brighton, and 23, Mount Pleasant, Tunbridge Wells. Hours 9 till 7. Illustrated Pamphlets, explaining everything, free. Established 100 years.

USEFUL BOOKS FOR BIBLE STUDENTS.

In Two Vols., about 500 pages in each, cloth bound, price 5s., originally published at 7/6.

HISTORY OF THE JEWS

In Three Concurrent Sections.

I.—Ten Books of the Antiquities of the Jews, as TRANSLATED by WHISTON, with Notes from FLAVIUS JOSEPHUS.

II.—The Bible Narrative from the Creation to the Captivity at Babylon, fully given and faithfully rendered.

III.—A Modern History of the Jews. Abridged and Offered as a Commentary on the Preceding Sections.

The Two Volumes sent post free for 5/3 nett To be had only direct from ROBERT BANKS AND SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co. (Ltd.) 23, Paternoster-row. Wednesday, JANUARY 25, 1893. All Rights Reserved.

Digitized by Google

antipodes. The writer in question, reported by the Times, while dealing with the Colony of Queensland alone, takes a general view of the whole island continent, and declares it was "a land virtually vacant"! How remarkable is this language! How exact its parallelism to the words of desolate heritage. It is huge! It is three times the size of France! Between Brisbane and the other end of the colony the distance is little less than that from London to Gibraltar. It takes as long to travel from the capital to its Northern

Digitized by Google

WOODCOCK, LINCOLN.

NEW CATALOGUE of Works on Our Identity post free from R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

able and Good Teeth at a small cost to go to Messrs. ESKELL, 445, Strand (facing Charing Cross Station), and 58, Ludgate Hill, City, London. Also at 27, Western Road, Brighton, and 23, Mount Pleasant, Tunbridge Wells. Hours 9 till 7. Illustrated Pamphlets, explaining everything, free. Established 100 years.

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & CO. (Ltd.) 23, Paternoster-row. Wednesday, JANUARY 25, 1893. All Rights Reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India).

"And the Remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS OF THE EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XVII., No. 840. Entered at Stationer's Hall.] WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1893 [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
To Make Them Inherit the Desolate Heritages	61
Afraid to Look. By L. P.	63
The Foolish Nation	63
Pessimists and Optimists	64
The Ark of the Mosaic Covenant and its Teachings	66
Astounding Proof of the Wealth of Britain	67
Gleanings. By J. Thomson	67
Anglo-Israel Free Distribution Fund	67
Israel's Scripture and Prayer Union	68
Correspondence	69

TO MAKE THEM INHERIT THE DESOLATE HERITAGES.

THE above words occur in Isa. xlix. 8, R.V., and relate to Christian Israel, as may be gathered from 2 Cor. vi. 1, 2, where Isa. xlix. 8 is distinctly quoted as applicable to St. Paul and his Christian co-workers, as well as to the Corinthian Church which 1 Cor. x. 1—6 shows was largely composed of Israelites. The prophet Isaiah then predicted that during the Christian Dispensation, Israel preserved by the Lord, and given as a covenant to the people, should raise up or establish the earth, and that God would make them "inherit" the "desolate heritages." The present time belongs to the Christian Dispensation Is there, then, a nation extant, answering to Israel, inheriting places and countries which respond to the above description; true "desolate" lands, which have fallen to them as "heritages" or "inheritances," in a manner so marked that the secular histories and journals of the day are compelled to describe them in terms synonymous with those employed by the divine penmen? We think there is!

If we turn to the Times leader of Dec. 27, 1892, we find there a comment on an article published in the same paper on "Queensland," one of a series of articles on "Australia," by a correspondent of the leading journal, who is going to review the whole of our Australasian possessions at the antipodes. The writer in question, reported by the Times, while dealing with the Colony of Queensland alone, takes a general view of the whole island continent, and declares it was "a land virtually vacant"! How remarkable is this language! How exact its parallelism to the words of Scripture, that Israel was "to inherit the desolate heritages"! "No prior occupant," says the Times, "ventured to dispute the English colonist's title, or interfere with the uses to which they put their stupendous windfall. A true parallel cannot be found in the history of the world, since the days of Adam, and of Noah, for the circumstances of the appropriation of Australia by the British Crown. The acquisition resembled that of the bed of a river, which has changed its channel. The English people had an absolutely free hand for dealing with the accretion. There was nobody and nothing to interfere with its full discretion in the mode and nature of its enjoyment."

These are wonderful words, and every word and line corresponds with the idea conveyed by Isaiah's prophecy, that Israel's inheritance was to be among the desolations or desolate heritages of the earth. The Times actually, without meaning it, adopts the Scriptural idea that Australia is "Britain's inheritance"! In almost the next sentence, succeeding to the above, the leader remarks thus:—"At the commencement it must be admitted that Englishmen were slow to recognise the multifariousness of the inheritance which had fallen to them." It is assumed that we are and were the "heirs" of Queensland; that it was our nation's inheritance; and that it came to us as "a desolate heritage," one as barren of occupants as the bed of a river from which the stream had just been diverted with "nobody and nothing" to interfere with our absolutely free enjoyment of it. There was more than chance in the Scriptural prophecies respecting Australia's occupation by the British people! The literal prophecy finds in our days a literal fulfilment, and the facts are a strong proof of Our Identity; since they show that our people can be none other than Israel, because no yet-coming Israel will ever find the "desolate heritages" to occupy, seeing we have already seized them, and have turned them into the British gardens of the Lord! We have fulfilled Isa. xxxv. 1, 2, and no other nation yet to appear can do the same!

The object of the Times correspondent is to teach us the character of the colony which goes by the name of Queensland. In the first place we can judge of the size of this desolate heritage. It is huge! It is three times the size of France! Between Brisbane and the other end of the colony the distance is little less than that from London to Gibraltar. It takes as long to travel from the capital to its Northern extremity as it takes men to go now from the Thames to the Cape! "The mere space," says the Times, "is nothing;" it becomes a marvel when it is remembered that the whole, with tracts immensely larger around, is British soil"! We verily "inherit the desolate heritages," according to the Scriptures, and "our right there is none to dispute." It is the gift of God to Israel according to Isaiah our prophet! The desolate heritages of Australia are no ordinary desolations. The description of the railway journey from Melbourne through Sydney to the Queensland border is a graphic illustration of the Scriptural idea of a desolate country which it is worth while to quote. The correspondent, writing from Brisbane, said:—

Digitized by Google

Brisbane, Nov. 10.

The first impression which is gained of Australia in the long train journey from Melbourne to Brisbane is one of extraordinary monotony. I am told that this is partly due to the circumstance that the railway line has been laid through a poor belt of country, and partly to the accident of passing the least interesting portion of the landscape. However it comes about, the effect produced is of a scarcely broken tract of grass and gum-trees. From Melbourne to Sydney, from Sydney to the Queensland border, grass and gum-trees stretch on every side. Day after day the eyes open on the same unvaried tints of grey and green; night after night stars shine upon the same spreading masses of foliage grown dusky in the absence of the sun. One acre is like another, one mile is like the last. Hundreds of miles are left behind, and there is nothing to show that the end of the journey is any nearer. The river and forest scenery of Tasmania, with its farms and orchards, its hedgerows of sweetbriar and yellow gorse, and the familiar English aspect of its gardens, fade in the distance like a dream. The tropical vegetation of the North has not yet become a reality. Between the two the immense extent of gum-trees stretches indefinitely, blotting out the conception of anything but its own lightly-timbered pasture. It has not even the gloom and impressiveness which we associate in England with the name of forest land, for the trees are thinly scattered, their long leaves hang vertically from the branches, and sunlight filters through with sufficient force to promote the growth of the tussocked grass beneath. The whole would be indescribably commonplace, but that the vastness becomes at last by its own force impressive. Here, again, you feel, as you feel in Africa, the immense size of the physical problem. The areas are so wide, the distances to be got over are so great, that even the preliminary network of civilization, which the train you are travelling in, and the towns you have stopped at represent, contains subjects for marvel, and the first sensation of weariness is lost in admiration for the patience and the energy that have, as it were, lassoed the wilderness and brought its resources within the limits of the empire.

The country resembles a wilderness according to the traveller, and with bold imagery he declares that the British have "lassoed it" and "brought it within the limits of the empire"! The fact is God gave the wilderness to Israel that she might bring them all to Christ, and, therefore, we see a mighty continent like Australia placed without opposition in our nation's hand, that we may "raise it" up and establish it to God's glory. The following, from the Brisbane correspondent's paper, illustrates further the "wilderness" character of part of Queensland, and the efforts which are being made to force it to blossom and bud and fill the face of that desolate heritage with merchantable fruit:—

Everywhere, whether it be upon these rivers or among the lily-covered lagoons of the Burdekin delta, where a system of artificial irrigation has been carried out with signal success, or at Mackay, where the cane fields are fast breaking the bounds of their pink-flowering hedgerows and spreading to the very tops of the surrounding hills, or still further down towards the South, the cultivation of sugar represents just so much land won from the wilderness. The scrub on the Johnstone gives the best conception of the ground with which farmers and planters have to deal. Cultivated clearings are still cut only in patches from the edge of it, and the eye passes without transition from the ordered growth of fruit or cane to the rank luxuriance of vegetation which has never known an axe. Palms, banyans, with their innumerable suckers, silky-oak, blood-wood, hickory, the bean-tree, and a thousand nameless trees, jostle each other in an impenetrable wall. The whole is netted and bound together by monster creepers, which in some instances drop curtains of verdure to the ground, and in others hang leafless, swaying upon the hot, dead air, like loose ropes from the rigging of a ship. Some of them are of the thickness of a man's arm, and will support a weight, I was told, of five or six tons. But no obstacle is worse for the clearer to encounter than the lawyer vines where they are not burnt off. These are a form of palm which grows in feathery tufts along a pliant stalk, and fastens itself as a creeper upon other trees. From beneath its tufts of leaves it throws down trailing suckers of the thickness of stout cord, armed with sets of sharp red barbs. These suckers sometimes throw themselves from tree to tree across a road which has not been lately used, and render it as impassable to horses as so many strains of barbed wire. When they merely escape from the undergrowth of wild ginger and tree-fern, and stinging bush which fringes the scrub and coil themselves in loose loops upon the ground, they are dangerous enough as traps for either man or horse. In the jungle, where they weave themselves in and out of the upright growths, they form a web which at times defies every engine of destruction but fire. It may easily be conceived that the work of clearing in such ground is not light. In the Cairns district it has nearly all been done by Chinamen. They are not allowed to own freehold land in the colony, but scrub land is often let to them on lease to clear and use for a certain number of years. The ground, when it is cleared, is extraordinarily rich, and they appear to recoup themselves for their labour by the first crops which they grow upon their leaseholds. The owner afterwards has it in his power to resume his land, and the Chinaman passes on to clear and use more scrub. In this way they are employed as a sort of self-acting machine for the opening of the country. They devote themselves principally to the cultivation of fruit. A walk round a Chinese garden is an instructive botanical excursion, so many and strange are the edible varieties of fruit to which you are introduced. Spices, too, and flowers flourish under their care, and the fields of bananas and pine-apples dotted with orange and mango orchards, which stretch for miles beside the sugar plantations, are nearly all Chinese. They ship fruit to the southern colonies, but their profits must be very small, and one of the principal complaints which is made against them is that they can make a living where a white man would starve. Nevertheless, it is found that where they hire themselves out to work they are not a very great deal cheaper than white men. They are employed to a certain extent in mills where Kanaka labour is forbidden, but their principal labour is on the soil, where, whether they clear it for their own use or for the use of others, they are manifestly rendering at present a very valuable service to the community.

Our space forbids us to pursue the subject; but it can easily be seen by what we have quoted, that Queensland and its Northern province answer exactly, as almost all Australia does, to the Scriptural description of a "wilderness" or "desolation." It has been given by the Lord, bodily, to His people, and they are rapidly converting it into a cultivated garden, yielding valuable profit to His chosen ones, to the glory of His faithfulness and truth. Let Israel, therefore, praise His holy name, and rejoice in His salvation (Psa. xiv. 7).

Digitized by Google

AFRAID TO LOOK.

By L. P.

It has frequently struck me of late years, that there is a growing disregard of the Old Testament, and an undue depreciation of it as compared with the New. As if in reality these two parts of God's Word rightly admit of any comparisons, being portions of one sacred whole, each explaining, enforcing, or supplementing the other.

If I am correct in thinking there is this regrettable tendency on the part of clergy and laity, why is it so? Is it a reaction from the Puritan's views of the seventeenth century, when the awful punishments awarded to God's enemies by His commands, as seen in the historical books of the Old Testament, were deemed suitable by erring man in those later times, untempered by the merciful teaching of the Gospel of Christ Jesus? Or is it that many hold, as a man of exceptional intellectual repute stated was his supposition, that we had done with the Old Testament, with the exception of the Psalms, which he must allow seemed adapted to all times?

Who can say what is the true reason for the apparent desire to place on a lower level the first portion of the Bible, to that allotted to the latter part of it. There are lectures given and sermons preached on Old Testament prophecies, but as far as I can judge they deal principally with reference to the terrible things coming on the earth, the second advent of our Lord, the approaching end of this dispensation, and the return of the Jews to the Holy Land. Then it is expected all the ancient prophecies of good are to be fulfilled on these same Jews, who for centuries have been ground down by the fulfilment of predicted curses. But the Israelites, the Ten Tribes of God's chosen people—are nowhere! unless forsooth they are a "submerged tenth" in the House of Judah! Does this arise from ignorance, or from prejudice? or is it the outcome of a determination not to bow to the opinions of others which have been sarcastically opposed, and from a feeling of false pride? Is it from a disinclination to break away from beaten spiritualizing tracks, to follow a new road, and perhaps have to go a long way back, and begin as it were the journey afresh by the light of literal interpretations?

I came quite lately upon the following passage, which I quote from Dr. Boyd's "Thirty-nine Years in St. Andrew's," published in 1892, which seems to me to point to remarkable ignorance on the part of a man, who is stated to have been one "of culture and devotion," and "very remarkable and attractive" also. We must remember that to be a man of culture in Scottish ranks means a high standard of knowledge and thought. "Dr. Alexander's humour," writes Dr. Boyd, "was not always suppressed in his preaching. Once speaking of Moses, he said that possibly it seemed strange to the congregation that Moses should be described as the meekest of men, seeing that on several occasions he showed a good deal of temper. But then, you must consider how Moses was placed. For many years he had the charge of a great many Jews. Now if any of you had the charge of one Jew for a few weeks, instead of being disposed to blame Moses for irritability, you would be astonished at his meekness.'" Was Dr. Alexander aware that the Jews were for the first time called so, 2 Kings xvi. 6, "literally Judeans—i.e, a man of Judah?" (Paragraph Bible note).

In glancing through an article on Britain in the "Encyclopædia Brittanica," published by Black, in Edinburgh, in 1842, it seemed to me that in tracing back the origin of our people, the writers grew sorely perplexed at last. They were like two friends of mine, who lately stepped along easily in a fair light in London, when suddenly they walked into a dense black thickness, which hid them from each other, my informant adding he was not able to see his own feet.

It is somewhat of a surprise to me, so far did the Encyclopædia writers look back, that they did not discover whither their researches really landed them, and that they did not suspect from whom we sprang. If the fog had lifted after it had gathered round them, stopping their way, what a revelation it would have been! Yet in all probability, if published, it would have been received with cries of reprobation and mocking jeers. No! the time for the discovery had not then arrived, or at any rate for its open announcement. But now assuredly the mist has cleared away, and light has come for those, who not fearing the sunshine, rejoice in its brightness. They do not, as do our opponents, put on smoked glasses, and exclaim, "It is still dark to us, and we cannot descry the wonders you declare are revealed to your sight. You are gazing at the sun, which dazzles you till to you a shadow becomes a substance, and a fiction is as a fact. We commend to you our dark spectacles." But we decline to put them on!

"THE FOOLISH NATION."

In Deut. xxxii., which contains the song the Lord Himself composed and taught the children of Israel through the agency of Moses, there occurs a remarkable prediction which was so important that St. Paul quoted it in Rom. x. 19, and applied it to the "Israel" of his own day—namely, to the Jews. It is clear from this New Testament comment, that in the Song of Moses (Deut. xxxii. 21, R.V.), the reference was also to the House of Judah. They were the House which "moved God to jealousy by that which was not God"; "provoked Him to anger by their vanities"—that is, by their idolatries; and by their refusal to accept His Son. In return, or retaliation, God told the Jews:—

"And I will move them to jealousy with those which are not a people;
I will provoke them to anger with a foolish nation."

The "foolish nation," meant literally, "a nation which is a fool," the "goi Nabal," a very Nabal among the nations!

The question we wish to ask and answer is, which is this "foolish nation"? so silly in the eyes of God that it is comparable only with Nabal, "the fool" of 2 Sam. xxv. 25. The passage was lately expounded from the pulpit in our hearing, and the explanation given was that "the Jewish nation" had provoked the Lord, and He in retaliation had provoked the Jewish nation by "the foolish nation," which was the Gentile nations at large! In proof of this position, whereby the single "foolish nation" of the Lord's song is made to represent the multitude of the nations of the Gentiles, we were referred, as a glorious prophetic fulfilment to the passage which the preacher read from Hos. i. 10, as singularly appropriate to the point he was maintaining! "Yet the number of the children of Israel shall be as the sand of the sea which cannot be measured nor numbered; and it shall come to pass, that in the place where it was said unto them, 'Ye are not My people, it shall be said to them, 'Ye are the sons of the living God'"!

The preacher evidently thought the children of Israel represented the Gentile nation of Deut. xxxii. 21; but how either passage, speaking of a single nation, could be the Gentiles at large, who are many nations did not transpire! And yet the preacher was right though he did not himself know it! The "foolish nation" of Deut xxxii. is the House or children of Israel, of Hos. i. 10, silly and foolish in departing from the living God, like the prodigal son of Luke xv. et seqr., reckoned as Gentiles, because "Gentilized," by being expelled from Palestine, and by being largely mingled with "the nations." The preacher was not aware of the God-made separation of the two Houses of Israel, and did not realise that Israel as apart from the Jews, was now in the world, fulfilling its destiny, enjoying its promises, and at this moment provoking the Jews to anger; also moving them to jealousy by reason of the undeserved magnificent blessings poured upon them as foolish, besotten Israel!

Digitized by Google

Our clergy cannot, it appears, realise what is so plainly stated in Scripture—namely, that the people chosen by the Lord to provoke the Jews to turn and serve Him are one single nation. This chosen nation of our modern Christian dispensational days is described by our Lord Himself in Matt. xxi. 43 (which our preacher actually quoted also, in support of his view that the Gentiles supersede the Jews in God's favour)! In that verse the Lord told the Jews that "The kingdom of God should be taken from them and given to A nation" (not many, but to one), "bringing forth the fruits thereof." In Isa. lxv. 1, 2, also quoted by St. Paul in Rom. x. 20, 21, R.V., the Lord made mention of this one nation, saying, "I am sought of them that asked not for Me; I am found of them that sought Me not. I said, 'Behold Me, behold Me,' unto a nation not called by My name." St. Paul in Rom. x, tells us that the Jews were "the nation," or people, brought into comparison with this chosen nation, and that they were described as a "disobedient and gainsaying—i.e., rebellious—people."

The nation so found and called by Christ must have been the foolish ones like the Galatians of old (chap. iii. 1), who sought not for the Lord, nor asked after Him, He called them, and they followed, being Gentilized Lo-ammi Israel, "a people not called by His name," to whom alone, however, He showed, and still showeth, His words, His statutes, and His judgments (Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20).

When the pulpit fails to distinguish between Israel and Judah, and between the promises and curses which appertain to each House respectively, it cannot be a matter for surprise that the words of Scripture are set aside, and the nation (foolish as it was) of Deut. xxxii. 21, is declared to mean the Gentiles at large, but not one nation only, at all; and that the Jewish people, or the Jews, represent Israel as a body, leaving no place for the House of Joseph in the world.

If we require evidence to prove that Israel as distinct from Judah were "foolish," like Nabal the fool, we have only to study the prophecy of Israel's seer Hosea, where in chap. vii. 11, Ephraim is likened to a "silly dove;" also St. Paul's verdict on the same people in Gal. iii. 1, where he declares they are still in his day "the foolish Galatians" or Celts; as well as our Lord's words in Matt. x. 6, and xv. 24, R.V., where they are likened to "lost sheep," the most senseless and silly of animals! Like the prodigal son, they ruined themselves by their folly, answering truly to the elder son's description in Luke xv. 30 of the younger's conduct in "devouring their father's living with harlots." This "foolish nation" is, nevertheless, the object of the Lord's tender love! He has received her back to Himself with all the wealth of regard which the father of the parable bestowed upon the repentant outcast (Luke xv.). "This my son," "this thy brother," O Jew, "was dead, and is alive again; he was lost, and is found!" The British are this restored nation, and the very thought of the good news, should make the heart of every patriot bound for joy! But let Israel praise the Lord!

PESSIMISTS AND OPTIMISTS.

In a publication called Answers, of Nov. 5, last, an extraordinary paper was contributed by a "pessimist," who propounding the question whether "Great Britain is going down hill"? answered it with the word "Yes," in capital letters. The reasons he gives for this opinion are some of them very puerile. He believes that our downward progress is rapid, and that we are speedily becoming a "second-rate Power among the nations of the world." If that be the case, we can scarcely be the House of Israel; because God promised them in Deut. xxviii. 1, that "He would set them high above all the nations of the earth."

The reason assigned by this writer for his strange opinion is, that "in commerce, in war, in athletics, in steam, in electricity, even in naval matters, we are gradually being left behind!" In regard to war we are happily not engaged in one, just now, and are not likely to be so. It is admitted by the pessimist that we have, as a nation, no desire to vie with the nations of the continent in war; and in naval affairs "we have undoubtedly the best navy in the world." The complaint is, that "we could not withstand the attacks of many combinations of naval Powers that might be formed." This would be a foolish nation indeed to keep up a navy equal to every combination of foreign navies that might be formed! We have only the prospect of meeting the combination of two Powers, and with God on our side, as Israel, we need no better defence!

As to commerce. The pessimist who glories in abasing his own nation, is under the impression that the French "could blow us out of the Mediterranean any day they choose, if it were not for our alliance with a semi-bankrupt power, Italy"! The folly of such writing as this is apparent. No Power, certainly not France, could drive, or "blow" our navy out of the Mediterranean, while Malta and Gibraltar remain in British hands, and while the road to India through the Suez Canal is protected by British guns and British troops.

Our pessimist's unfavourable comparison of the British with foreign nations in respect to lack of excellence (on occasions) in athletic sports, cricket, sculling, cycling, boxing (!), electric lighting, railway rapid speed, shipbuilding, and horse-racing, also our meanness in spending our gigantic national wealth, all these are matters which do not touch the main fact that our nation is what Israel was to be, "set high above all the nations of the earth." We may for a time lose our skill in certain athletic sports, and be beaten for a time by our own Colonial and American offspring in cricket, sculling, boating, cycling, and the inventive faculty. These were not promised in the Scriptures to Israel, God's people, for ever, as permanent gifts contributing to their national greatness. It is quite conceivable that a nation might be in advance of the rest of the world in these subordinate particulars, but fall short in regard to the grand ingredients of population, wealth, commerce, security in their Island home, and dominant influence amongst the nations. The pessimist thinks if we do not recover our national energy we shall "one day" "sink into the condition of Holland and Spain!" These countries, says our unscrupulous pessimist, "occupied almost as important a place in the world as we imagine we do at the present moment." Hardly so! When had either of these nations a commerce yielding an income of 2,000 millions a year, and a surplus to put by and invest of 200 millions? When had they such colonies as ours, in Australasia, America, and Africa? When did they hold the Gates which are ours to-day, commanding every ocean highway in the world; or so mighty a Heathen Empire as India and Burmah? It is folly to write in such wild a style as this to support a vain assertion!

Digitized by Google

The Editor of Answers has given the pessimist a series of replies to his gloomy anticipations. He allows the pessimist far too much credit for his depressing facts; but in some respects has given him a satisfactory rebuff. These are some of the answers:—

"I do not know who 'A Sorrowful Briton' may be, or whether he has travelled. The present writer has been all over the world, and, while admitting that Britons are not as much respected or feared as they were at one time, it is ridiculous to pretend that our power has greatly waned.

"'A Sorrowful Briton's' chief contention is that nowadays half the things we use in our homes are made abroad, but is it not a fact that in foreign countries British goods are not only in great demand, but are considered the best in the world?

"Is it also not a fact that, whereas the words 'made in Germany' are a term of reproach, 'made in England' is the highest proof of excellence?

"I have been both in the United States and Germany.

"In North America we are undoubtedly greatly feared.

"The anxiety of every American to get a Briton's opinion of his country shows how much we, if disliked, are respected over there. I should like to know where America would be without Britain. What would become of their railways, breweries, and commerce?

"Is it not a fact that the greater portion of the United States is mortgaged to British people, that 'British Capitalist' and 'British Syndicate' are known throughout the whole of the United States?

"Your correspondent speaks of the number of American goods that are imported to Britain. He has evidently not studied the figures.

"With the exception of the one element of food (corn, that is to say) the balance is in our favour.

"If you leave Britain for a trip to the United States you travel most probably in a British steamer, there are other lines, I know, but the best of them (a German line, which is also one of the largest in the world) does not pay expenses.

"On landing you are received by the Custom House authorities, whose system is copied from our own as closely as possible, even, I am sorry to say, down to the bribery which, despite the warning notice posted up in the examination rooms, is still extant in Britain and America.

"As you walk about the streets in the United States you see that the shops are full of British goods. The papers contain columns of advertisements of British wares 'just imported.'

"You travel by railways, the greater portion of the stock of which (unfortunately for us) is owned by British people. The very hotel in which you stop is most probably mortgaged to a British syndicate, for you may take it for granted that almost everything in the United States is mortgaged. No one here is proud to know that he has a mortgage on his house; but over there a mortgage is, or is pretended to be, considered as a sign of enterprise.

"If we copy the Americans, as alleged, they copy us in a far greater degree, and what are considered as the best people in America are by no means proud of their nationality.

"The poor British workman, tempted to emigrate there by reason of the arguments of the touts who go throughout the counties lecturing on the joys of California and other parts of the United States, in nine cases out of ten is only too anxious to get back.

"He finds that the workmen there are at the absolute mercy of men like Mr. Carnegie (vide the recent Homestead riots). He finds that though he may appear to get more money he is really poorer. He finds that even the consolation of the workhouse is denied him, and if he lacks food he may starve in the streets.

"Starvation and the United States are not often connected in the British mind, but any diligent reader of American newspapers is familiar with the fact that poverty and starvation are quite as frequent in New York, in proportion to its size, as in London.

"The absolute power of the police, too, is a very terrible feature of the American's existence.

"The population of the United States is increasing by reason of immigration. The expansion of the British Empire increases by vast seizures of new country.

"It is not generally known that we own more of North America than the Americans themselves. Canada, which is more British in sentiment than we are, is larger than the United States, and will be richer than the United States. The Americans during the last 100 years have worked out a great portion of their virgin soil as they go further and further West. They leave this soil, as they call it, 'played out.' There are vast territories in the United States, that have been farmed, but are now desolate.

"Canada, on the other hand, has yet to be worked. It is a home to which thousands of British workmen can emigrate with very fair safety. Canada is largely peopled by folk of Scotch descent, and all this talk about the Canadians desiring to become Americans is rubbish. Having traversed Canada from end to end, and mixed with every class of people, I have only met a very few discontented folk over there who ever thought of the thing.

"The Scotchman in Canada looks down upon the United States very much as Britain looks upon Spain.

"We talk about the progress of Germany, but what is it? The Germans are enlightened and intelligent people; they are making good progress, but they know as well as we do that a great cloud is always hanging over them in the shape of a tremendous war for which they are preparing as rapidly as possible, more rapidly during this year than at any time since the Franco-Prussian War. We have no wars to fear, and while I admit that we are not going forward at the present moment, our opportunity will come soon enough.

"Your correspondent sneers at Britons because we do not readily jump at new inventions. He thinks we are pig-headed. I consider that we are merely cautious.

"Our recent defeats in the athletic world at the hands of foreigners will stimulate us to better things in future. I have no fear that the thirty-seven millions of people in Great Britain, backed up by our splendid children in Australasia, Canada, the Cape, and other parts of the world, are not well able to hold their own, as they do at present, against the whole universe.

"A Believer in the Greatest Nation
"the World Has Ever Seen."

Digitized by Google

We have thus far dealt with the pessimists. We turn now to the optimists. The BANNER and its writers are ranked among these because our views of the present and future condition of our native land and its inhabitants, justify us in saying, that being Israel, God dwells with us, and will give us in future, as He has in the past, all the blessings that lie at His right hand, promised to the people of His choice. Among these is vast population, which is Empire; supremacy at sea and on land; the Gates of the earth, and of the oceans; and all spiritual blessings needed to make us the evangelists of the world's inhabitants. This suffices us; and we praise Him for His grace!

THE ARK OF THE MOSAIC COVENANT AND ITS TEACHINGS.

THE ark, no doubt, was a glorious type of our Lord Jesus Christ. Its place was in the holiest of all, the tabernacle called the most holy place (Exod. xxvi. 33, 34). Over it was the mercy seat with the two cherubims with outspread wings covering it (Exod. xxxvii. 6—9). There the Lord, the God of Israel, was visibly present among His people, and there He issued His commandments by which He governed, led, and educated them for their future destiny. The types centred in that place of mercy all pointed onward to the true Ark, the Lord Jesus Christ, their Antitype. That being so, it is interesting to learn what this vessel, so connected with the King and Redeemer of Israel as well as with the Saviour of the world, contained.

In the first place, there were there the two tables of the law according to the commandment of the Lord. We see that stated in Exod. xxv. 16, 21, xl. 20; Deut. x. 1—5. The ten true laws of God, by doing which Israel were to live, were enclosed in the ark. They were words spoken by the Lord to Israel in the mount, and Moses, to whom as representing Israel God gave them, placed them in the most sacred place, representing the Christ of God. They were Israel's laws, made for and promulgated for and to them. Our Lord bore testimony to that fact in Mark xii. 29, when being asked by one of the Scribes, "Which is the first commandment of all?" answered "Hear, O Israel! The Lord our God is one Lord, and thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength: this is the first commandment" (quoting Deut. vi. 4, 5). The law was thus addressed to Israel, was given to Israel, was laid up in Christ for Israel, and fulfilled and kept by the Lord for Israel. He redeemed Israel, and fully obeyed the law for them. The ark, then, contained "the truth written," by which men should live, and that law was Israel's. Not for them alone, however, but given to and for them that as God's messengers and servants they might administer it as His will to all the nations.

But the ark contained more than the two tables of the law written by the finger of God Himself. It contained the "golden pot that had manna" (Exod. xvi. 32—34; Heb. ix. 4). This was the bread from heaven meant for man's food, representing the Gospel of the grace of God for men, the food of His flesh which is indispensable for sinners desiring life in him, the bread that "he that eateth shall live for ever" (John vi. 58). The ark, then, contained within it the types of the law of God and of the Gospel of Christ stored up in the Redeemer of Israel, who gave the law to Israel and sent His Gospel-word to Ephraim (Isa. ix. 8, 9).

But the ark contained still more than the tables of the law and the pot of manna. There was placed there besides, as a memorial before God for ever, Aaron's rod that budded, bloomed, and blossomed, and bore almond fruit, according to Num. xvii. 2—10 and Heb. ix. 4. The rod betokened strength, and power, and support, and the blossoming, budding, and fruitfulness of the rod of strength call to mind, in connection with the law and the Gospel typified in the ark, that House of Israel which God has strengthened for Himself and uses for the furtherance of the Gospel throughout the world. The rod, stored up as a witness of God's choice of Aaron as the representative of the ministering tribe of Levi, points to the Christian work the stronger House of Israel was destined to perform for God among all the nations, families, and kindreds of the earth by blessing them, according to Gen. xviii. 18, xxii. 18, xxviii. 14.

Here, then, there is an interesting combination of types, pointing first to the laws of God which were confided to Israel to keep; to the manna next, which was the Gospel entrusted to Israel to disseminate among the nations; and lastly, to the Hebrew House God deigns to use in His service, which, strengthened by God with all secular endowments, blossoms and buds and fills the face of the world with Gospel, gracious fruit. That House is the British people shown by other lines of proof to be the House of Israel, as distinguished from the House of Judah. The modern view of the types connected with the ark, and especially with the contents of it, differ, we are aware, greatly from the above. The Lord Jesus Christ is not regarded specially, if at all, as a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God to confirm the promises made to the fathers (Rom. xv. 8), but as the Redeemer of the world and as the Saviour of a few of the Jews who believe on His name.

The law is not regarded as specially addressed to the Houses of Israel and Judah, because, in reciting them in our Church Communion Service, our reformers have deliberately altered the first commandment where God's message in the tables is declared to be limited to the children of Israel whom He brought out of Egypt. In Exod. xx. 1 and Deut. v. 6 the words are express in respect to the first commandment thus: "And God spake all these words, saying, I am the Lord thy God, which have brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage. Thou shalt have none other gods before Me." Our version, as accepted by the British Churches, is a remarkable one, carefully destroying all connection between the God who uttered His voice and the special people He addressed—namely, all those He brought out of bondage from Egypt. The Church's version reads thus: "God spake these words and said, I am the Lord thy God; thou shalt have none other gods but Me." Our blessed Lord, as we have shown, declared, in Mark xii. 29, that Israel was the people to whom God addressed Himself on Sinai, "Hear, O Israel . . . this is the first commandment."

The popular opinion as to the type of the manna and Aaron's rod that budded is that these have reference to the body of Christ given for all men and to the rod as Christ Himself as the fruit bearer. But this interpretation ignores the fact that a rod is an instrument in the hand of another, and that as Israel was God's dominion (Psa. cxiv. 2) so the rod of Aaron was God's agent or messenger-servant to the whole world to bring it to Christ. That messenger is Israel Christianized, known as "the sons of the living God" (Hosea i. 10), sent to blossom and bud and fill the face of the world with fruit to God's glory. Whether these ideas commend themselves to our readers or not, the facts are true. Christ came to fulfil the law for us. The Gospel is the law fulfilled for us by the Lord Jesus, and the instrumentality by which the great salvation is to be published to the world at large is Israel, His chosen nation, the British people, endowed with the kingdom of God, and bringing forth the fruits thereof (Matt. xxi. 43).

Digitized by Google

ASTOUNDING PROOF OF THE WEALTH OF BRITAIN.

THE following deposits are held by the Banks undermentioned, being money confided to these institutions by the public at large:—

National Provincial	£40,822,274
Bank of England	36,043,915
London and County	34.781,907
London and Westminster	26,063,748
Lloyd's	21.053,194
Union	13,486,748
Glyn, Mills, and Co.	11.723,975
London Joint Stock	11,516,801
Capital and Counties	11.141,819
Williams, Deacon	9,830,198
London and Midland	8,118,887
London and Provincial	6,472,641
City	6,380,492
Birkbeck	5,674.713
London and S. Western	5,301,544
Alliance	4,608,049

—Daily Telegraph, Sept. 13, 1892.

GLEANINGS.

By J. THOMSON.

17.—ANCIENT STONE CROSSES.

"ABOUT two miles from Cirencester, on the Fairford-road, is Ampney Crucis, which is probably an example of the 'weeping cross,' or place to which penitents resorted to bemoan over their shortcomings. This is not, apparently, a very uncommon, or even uncongenial pursuit with many devotees; for up to the present day Jews go every week to the walls of the Temple, and lament over its destruction. It is almost impossible not to connect these weeping crosses in some way with old Jewish customs; there are many of them still left in Egypt, and the name clings to them. One thing is certain, that the old habits of weeping and wailing date much earlier than the destruction of the Temple. The lamentatious of Jeremiah fully attest this (see Lam i. 4; iii. 48, 49; Jer. xlviii. 3, 4); many other passages occur all through the prophets in the Old Testament. Probably more appropriate ones might be found, but these surely express a recognition of public lamentation, and almost an encouragement of it, that, perhaps, may appear strange in the present day, when the tendency of all our teaching is rather to avoid making any exhibition of strong feeling. Undoubtedly there were many crosses connected with some demonstration. Of course there were penitential crosses, where delinquents had to make a pilgrimage in a sheet in expiation of some offence. Penitential crosses were in use even in the Church of England within the last thirty years, and that not always in obscure villages." "Ancient Stone Crosses of England." By Alfred Rimmer. Pp. 127-129. London: Virtue & Co., Ivy-lane, Paternoster-row, 1875.) Banner readers will notice the questionable use of the word "Jewish" in the above quotation.

18.—SOME ANTIQUITIES IN THE EAST.

"There was, some years ago, exhibiting at the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly, a moving Diorama of the Holy Land, painted from photographs taken on the spot in 1849 and 1850. One of these views deserves the special notice of Irish antiquarians, from its presenting a feature so strikingly Irish, that one would think it was taken from an Irish subject. In the immediate vicinity of Lake Tiberias, and Mount Tabor, there stand two monuments of that kind, which in Ireland are called 'Druidical Altars,' or 'Cromleacs.' The larger is of this kind: three great blocks or pillars of stone support a fourth placed horizontally upon them. Ireland is full of monuments of this description, and it is impossible to deny that they were erected with the same design. The second is composed of two blocks of unequal size and height, supporting a third, which thus presents an incline like the stone altar at the 'Giant's Ring,' Belfast. These monuments are probably older than the time of Moses; and there can be little doubt that they are structures raised by the Canaanites, or primitive inhabitants of the Holy Land. Another striking feature in these views of Palestine is the number of Pillar Towers which we discover in every city; in Jerusalem no less than 6 or 8. In the ruins of Petra also stands a Pillar Tower, as also in Joppa, Tyre, Sidon, Beyrout. Most of them indeed are modern; but they prove that this kind of building is peculiar to the country. The ruined tower of Petra stands alone in the midst of desolation in that wonderful place, and one is compelled to say, in spite of scepticism, 'How like an Irish round tower.' This is the only ancient round tower which was shown in the views of the Diorama.' (Ulster Journal of Archæology," 1853. P. 226).

ANGLO-ISRAEL FREE DISTRIBUTION FUND.

"To make known to the sons of men His mighty acts, and the glorious majesty of His kingdom" (Psa. cxlv. 12).

'Now therefore perform the doing of it; that as there was a readiness to will, so there may be a performance also out of that which ye have" (2 Cor. viii. 11).

ONE HUNDRED AND TENTH MONTHLY REPORT.

THE following subscriptions and donations, received from Dec. 17th, 1892, to Jan. 13th, 1893, are very gratefully acknowledged:—

By the Treasurer: The Misses F., Dublin, 2s.; R. T. and G. B., Hanley, 2s.; Two Friends, Woking, 4s.; G. P., Acton, 2s 6d.; A. D., Dorchester, 1s.; R. E. M., Croydon, 1s.; F., Cheltenham, 5s.; S. S., Birkenhead, 2s. 6d.; Mr. and Mrs. S., Hampton, 2s.; P. C. I., 1s.; M. C. S., 2s. 6d.; W., Margate, 1s.; I. B., Whetstone, 1s.; W. B., South Shields, 5s.; A. J. S., 1s. 6d.; T. W., Hamilton, 1s.; I. H., Ripon, 10s.; R. R., Lancaster, 1s.; S. G., Edinburgh, 2s.; G. H., Liverpool, 1s.; S. C. and M. B., Brighton, 2s.; A. S., 1s.; E. S. T., Islington, 10s.; J. A., Lowestoft, 5s.; J. S. A., 10s.; E. L., St. Leonards, 1s.; J. M., Masham, 3s. 6d.; G. H., Chislehurst, 2s.; F. S. and E. M., Radcliffe, 5s.; J. G. T., Newcastle, 1s.; E. G., Exmouth, 1s.; E. M., Liverpool, 1s.; A Friend, Weston-Super-Mare, 1s.; M. and J. R., Edinburgh, 2s. 6d.; J. W. M., Newcastle, 1s.; Major N., per Messrs. Banks and Son, 10s.; J. G., R. G., and C. L., Dieppe, 3s.; J. L., H. L., and E. L., Teddington, 3s.; J. C. F., London, 5s.; E. B., London, 2s.; M. A., Glasgow, 1s.; E. F., Richmond, 1s.; F. W., Gravesend, 1s.; H. S., Lutterworth, 1s.; E. N., Cardiff, 5s.; G. R., Southsea, 4s.; W., Bootle, 1s.; I. H. and S. F., Bath, 2s.; Mrs. T., Smethwick, 1s.; Mrs. S., Cheshire, 5s.; A. G. H., Bournemouth, 10s.; E. F., Richmond, a collection, 6s.; G. E. D., Berwick, 1s.; Mrs. T., Kensington, 2s.; Mrs. S., Manchester, 1s.; E. M., London, 5s.; Mrs. C., Southsea, 1s.; A Friend, Glasgow, 1s.; Miss B., 2s.; M. B., Dublin, 1s.

By Miss E. M. Rush: Mrs. H., 2s. 3d.; A. A., 2s. 6d.; R. N., 2s. 6d.; E. G., 1s.; G. W. B., 1s.; "Ven," £1; E. H., Barnwood, 1s.; W. H. P. (20 subscriptions), £1; E. K., 1s.; Rabboni, 10s.; P. C., West Cowes, a collection, 9s.; E. B., 4d.; E. M. R., 1s.; P. C., Cowes, 7s. 6d.; L. T., 1s; A. E. L., 3s.; Liverpool Marine Engineer, £1; E. L., £2; L. L., £2; Mrs. M., 5s.; Desboro', 1s.; J. D., 1s. 6d.; Mrs. E., 5s.; J. A., Lowestoft, 1s. 6d.; G. W., Barnsley, 1s. 6d.; Miss

Digitized by Google

D., 2s.; Mrs. T., Redditch, 1s.; "John Shootingham," 1s.; Miss M., Waddingham, 6s. 6d.; J. F. W., 1s.

Total, £19 1s. 1d.

As "John Shootingham" suggested that this collection should be a New Year's gift to the Fund, will all our Sowers and other friends kindly send in their 1s. with as little delay as possible.—R. S. P.

The amount acknowledged in last report from "Hawaiian Islands" should have been £9 19s. 2d.

Owing to delay in getting in some accounts the Treasurer has been unable to get the accounts for 1892 audited in time for this report, but hopes to give the usual annual statement shortly.

GIFTS.—One thousand leaflets, "Who are You?" from Mrs. Thompson, Bath; and 254 copies of last year's "Messenger," together with "Our Race," Study No. 8, from Messrs. Folkard and Son, are all very gratefully acknowledged. The title of the pamphlets from Mr. Weldon, acknowledged in last report, is "A Short and Simple Exposition of the Doctrines of Predestination and Election."

BANNER DISTRIBUTION. — From 219 to 228 BANNERS are now sent out weekly, to the places already enumerated in previous reports.

LITERATURE DISTRIBUTION. — Seventy-two parcels have been forwarded to the following places since last report: Shetland, Perranarworthal, Catford, Canterbury, Aldershot, Hamilton, Maesteg, Woolwich, Lewisham, Colchester, Bow, Tottenham, Lee, Fermoy, Plympton, Lowestoft, Hull (2), Wadingham (2), Faversham, South Benfleet, Cockburnspath, Edinburgh, Dublin (2), Southwold, Bexley, Penzance, Staplehurst, Westgate-on-Sea, Stirling, Crewe, Kingsbridge, St. Leonards, Chatham, Dundee (2), Horsforth, Fulham, Primrose-hill, West Cowes, Athercliffe, Southsea, Ludlow, Hulme, Tunbridge Wells, Moreton-in-Marsh, Weymouth, Barnsley, Birmingham, Shepherd's Bush, Wandsworth, Bingley, Chippenham, Cardiff, Chester, Porthgwarra, Walthamstow, Portsmouth, Malta; Cape Town; Barbadoes; George Town, B. Guiana; Kandy, Ceylon; Moulmein, Burmah; Thames, Tearoka, Kati Kati, and Auckland; Halifax and Yarmouth, Nova Scotia.

CORRESPONDENCE.—One writing from Yorkshire says: "I give a good many books and pamphlets away, and also lend such books as 'The Fulness of the Nations.' I generally take a stock of Identity literature when I go by train, and not only give it away, but try and interest the passengers in the subject. I had 5s. worth of BANNERS with map sent direct from the BANNER office to 30 of the most influential ladies and gentlemen in this neighbourhood; and I take the BANNER for some country reading-room or the Mechanic Institute, varying the place each year."

We are glad to learn that the subject is now being brought before the people of East and West Cowes in a most thorough and business-like manner. Our Sower writes: "We are now working energetically and with good results. At this moment we are arranging to get Mr. Aston down on January 24th and 25th, and are sowing right and left in view of his visit. We got a good audience at East Cowes on Wednesday week, who were intensely interested and wish to hear more. I distributed what pamphlets, &c., I had, and we hope for a good result therefrom. Many remained after the meeting to express personally their interest and thanks."

We have much pleasure in publishing the following appeal in the hope that many may see their way to follow so good an example. It resulted in this case in 9s. being sent from Cowes, although it is only recently that active steps have been taken there to make our subject known. Our hearty thanks to all.

ANGLO-ISRAEL FREE DISTRIBUTION FUND.

"This Society sends out to all parts of the world Anglo-Israel literature for free distribution in such manner and place as to promote interest and knowledge of the subject which we as Anglo-Israelites value so much.

"A well-known BANNER writer has just issued a forcible appeal in behalf of this work, and suggests that each Anglo-Israelite should at this very fitting season, forward the small sum of 1s. as an annual subscription to the Fund.

"I am heartily in accord with this, and although we are at present but a small colony in Cowes, and have special efforts to make locally, we ought nevertheless to encourage and strengthen the workers of the 'Free Distribution Fund' by a ready response to the present appeal."

From Colon, Panama. "The literature has already begun its work, and I think before long our clergymen will be brought to our views. Sailors show great willingness and pleasure in reading the leaflets 'An Englishman an Israelite.'"

One writing from Hanley says: "There are in the potteries lots of believers in Israelism."

From Birkenhead: "The work goes steadily on, and the light is fast spreading here."

A gardener writes: "I find people will read the literature with pleasure and delight. I have had a long experience of it, ever since 1872. I distribute the literature mostly at Acton, Richmond, Kew, and Chiswick, as my calling draws me all through this neighbourhood. I could give many testimonies of success in the cause."

J. LAWRENCE, Hon. Treasurer.

Contributions to the Fund will be thankfully received and acknowledged by the Hon. Treasurer, Miss J. Lawrence, Rosslyn, Hampton-road, Upper Teddington, Middlesex; or by the Hon. Secretary, Miss E. M. Rush, 4, Westgate-road, Westgate-on-Sea. Cheques may be crossed, "London and Provincial Bank, Teddington Branch."

ISRAEL'S SCRIPTURE AND PRAYER UNION.

THREE friends have joined the Union with the New Year, making a total of 1,437 members.

The following donations were gladly received:—1s. from Miss M., Sandown, and 1s. from Mr. J. H. D., Chatham.

Any sums would be gladly received to help to pay the cost of new stock of Monthly Comments.

New members are requested, when writing for cards, to kindly state whether their names are to be entered as Mr., Mrs., or Miss, etc.

For the convenience of those members who wish to continue the daily reading, the following list of chapters for February is appended:—

1st	2 Sam.	xxi.	12th	1 Kings	viii.	23rd	1 Kings	xix.
2nd	,,	xxii.	13th	,,	ix.	24th	,,	xx.
3rd	,,	xxiii.	14th	,,	x.	25th	,,	xxi.
4th	,,	xxiv.	15th	,,	xi.	26th	,,	xxii.
5th	1 Kings	i.	16th	,,	xii.	27th	2 Kings	i.
6th	,,	ii.	17th	,,	xiii.	28th	,,	ii.
7th	,,	iii.	18th	,,	xiv.
8th	,,	iv.	19th	,,	xv.
9th	,,	v.	20th	,,	xvi.
10th	,,	vi.	21st	,,	xvii.
11th	,,	vii.	22nd	,,	xviii.

The card of membership will be sent on receipt of 3 stamps.

The first and second series of Monthly Comments on the whole Bible, by Philo-Israel, may now be obtained in volume form. Price, in paper cover, 1s. 2d. each; in cloth 2s. each, post free.

The "Prayers for Daily Use," being a prayer for each day of the week, by Philo-Israel, are 1d., or 9d. per doz., postage extra. Address—Miss A. Wilson, 119, Bravington-road, St. Peter's Park, W.

THE ANNUAL VOLUME of THE BANNER OF ISRAEL is now ready, with the various maps that have been issued with the parts during the year. It may be had direct from the publishers, carriage paid, price 8/-. Only a limited number can be supplied. Handsome blue cloth cases for binding the Numbers for one year may be had, price 1/6 each. Readers should advise their local binders to obtain publishers' cases.

Digitized by Google

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—On referring a few days ago to Dean Alford's Commentary to see what he made of Rev. xx. 1—6, I was surprised to find his view of the Millennium to be very decisive and very literal; and his reasons seem to be so concisely and clearly stated, that I am copying an extract from his notes to submit to you, either for publication in the BANNER pro bono publico, or as a vindication of two passages in "The Handbook," which are too startling at first sight, and perhaps too bald in their original draft—I mean the references in ch. iv., pp. 65 and 79, to events coming "after the resurrection." In any case our doctrine of British-Israelism, and the responsibility attached to our birthright both of restoring our brethren of Judah to our common land, and of manifesting the Gospel to all nations, associate us so intimately with the doctrine of the Millennium, that I am thankful on my own account to derive fresh confirmation of my hopes, and desirous to communicate my conviction for the little it may be worth to others. Dean Alford's notes contain the following reasons for his own positive views on the coming Millennium. "I cannot consent to distort words from their plain sense and chronological place in the prophecy, on account of any consideration of difficulty, or any risk of abuses which the doctrine of the Millennium may bring with it. Those who lived next to the apostles, and the whole Church for 300 years, understood them in the plain literal sense; and it is a strange sight in these days to see expositors who are among the first in reverence of antiquity, complacently casting aside the most cogent instance of consensus which primitive antiquity presents. As regards the text itself, no legitimate treatment of it will extort what is known as the spiritual interpretation now in fashion. If, in a passage where two resurrections are mentioned, where certain souls lived at the first, and the rest of the dead lived only at the end of a specified period after that first; if in such a passage the first resurrection may be understood to mean spiritual rising with Christ, while the second means literal rising from the grave; then there is an end of all significance in language, and Scripture is wiped out as a definite testimony to any thing. If the first resurrection is spiritual, then so is the second, which I suppose none will be hardy enough to maintain; but, if the second is literal, then so is the first, which in common with the whole Primitive Church and many of the best modern expositors, I do maintain, and receive as an article of faith and hope." So far the Dean; and I confess I agree with him. And now for my main motive in enlisting this opinion, let me add that I think this confirmation of the writer's view in "The Handbook" vindicates the language above referred to; and if an emendation be admitted in the third edition (which I rejoice to hear is in progress), nothing more will be needed to remove any misconstruction than the simple introduction of the word "first," so that instead of "after the resurrection" the passage should stand in each instance "after the first resurrection," or the second "after the raising of the dead in Christ," may remain as it is. If you think this proposal an improvement, perhaps you will promote it. P. C.

Edinburgh, November 9, 1892.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—Being somewhat of a psychological stray sheep, I think there are few denominations whose relative claims to the possession of ultimate truth I have not at one time or another weighed in the balance and found wanting. Nonconformity seemed very early in my existence to lack that spirit of unity and concord which one would naturally look for among followers of our Divine Redeemer and the contemplation of the variety of meanings by them ascribed to one and the same Word did not help me. Ritualism had its turn, and eventually Rome seemed to meet a number of objections with its oneness of ritual, tongue, and teaching, and one of the very strongest arguments advanced by Protestants against her, the fact that the laity are not encouraged or even expected to engage themselves in scriptural study was a decided source of hope and attraction to me. Interpret the Bible in accordance with all I had heard I could not, and the same individual neglect of Holy Writ and utter, abject reliance for its interpretation upon a clergy bound in its turn to teach what custom and the councils of the Church dictated looked like a substantial advantage, in so far as it shifted the task of explaining a huge riddle on to the shoulders of those who, from their special training, seemed best calculated to get at the nearest solution to that which was correct. Truly absurd, one might well say. Why not search the Scriptures as you are told to do? Why not, indeed? Why not search for a needle in the proverbial haystack, or gold in a suburban dustbin.

The spiritual Israel of your churches deducible by a variety of methods and supported by a number of brilliantly-imaginative arguments, all so very different one from another, but all so satisfactory for a time has its turn. Then the little something in one's inner self finds a weak spot in the carefully-constructed fabric on which one had taken refuge, and that spot becomes a gap in the sand through which the water rushes with terrible effect, and the weary, truth-starved soul is again left desolate, doubting, and all but in despair. One of those natures which demand something more than the mere empty fact of general acceptance as evidence of the truth of any proposition, I never went to Church because it was considered the correct thing to do, or read my Bible because I was told to. It was sufficient for me that the best and ablest preachers I had heard deemed it right when glancing over the prophecies which form such an important part of Scripture to treat of them in an apologetic and shame-faced manner, and that I could make neither head nor tail of them myself.

There were moments at which I trembled at my nearness to unbelief, and I think I must have gone down to the substitution of what Col. Fenton truthfully describes as the "Devil's forgery of divine truth in galvanized heathen vice" had not I come across a section of the Great Pyramid in the house of a friend who is a staunch Anglo-Israelite. The utterly irrefutable truths of angle, line, and measure displayed by the Pillar of Witness set me thinking; the arguments for the Identity halted me.

Both associated prophecy with fulfilment instead of vague symbolisms, apologetically stated as such, and struck the keynote of a revolution which, by the help of Almighty God, has enabled me to read His Word as a living truth, and to read it with all the more interest because it had previously seemed so meaningless.

To the end I will do my best for the Identity, and as the stages in my pilgrimage are probably but the counterparts of those now being undergone by very many others, I dare to hope my acquaintance with them may help me to do a little to its furtherance.

That your efforts may be blessed to the benefit of our nation and to the glory of Him who gave it this glorious inheritance is the prayer of Yours very sincerely,

E. V. NEWBY.

Cardiff, Jan. 2, 1893.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—Enclosed you will find two slips cut from the Brisbane Evening Observer, by which you will see that we are about to form another British-Israel Association, I may say out of the ashes of the last, which was formed as near as I can remember, in 1880, under the presidency of the late and much respected, Mr. Warner, and which will contain a good number of the old members; there are a good many Anglo-Israelites in the Colony, I think I know, personally, of over thirty myself, but they are very much scattered about, and it is rather a difficult matter to get them together at meetings. I am in hopes that much good may arise from this, although we have some violent opposers to contend with.

Before I close this, permit me to express the great pleasure and instruction I receive from the reading of the BANNER OF

Digitized by Google

ISRAEL, which I have done for the past twelve years; and may the God of our fathers and our God spare your life for many years, to conduct the work in which you are engaged to His glory. Knowing that you take an interest in all progressive work in the Identity of the British Race with lost Israel, I send you these few lines, and remain, dear sir,

Yours faithfully,

R. ILLIDGE.

Milton, Brisbane, Queensland.

"THE LOST TEN TRIBES."

"A meeting of ladies and gentlemen was held at the Y.M.C.A. Hall, Elizabeth-street, last evening for the purpose of forming an association for spreading the knowledge of the identification of the Anglo-Saxon race with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel. There were about thirty present, and Mr. G. Lang presided. Mr. T. W. Connah moved the first resolution,—'That it is desirable to form a branch of the British-Israel Association,' and spoke at some length, pointing out that not only were the British fulfilling all the prophecies concerning Israel, but that the ancestors of that nation were known to have come from the exact spot to which the Ten Tribes had been carried captive. He also drew particular attention to the division of the Israelites under Rehoboam into two kingdoms—namely, Jews, consisting of Judah and Levi, and Israel, composed of the other ten, and since then they had never been, as was prophesied, united. The following resolutions were also carried unanimously:—"That the management shall consist of a president, two vice-presidents, a treasurer, and a secretary;' 'That a sub-committee be formed to frame rules, &c, for the guidance of the Association;' 'That the subscription of a life member be £2 2s., and for the ordinary members 5s. per annum.' As a considerable number appeared averse to subscription being compulsory it was arranged that the matter would be the first thing dealt with by the sub-committee, which is to consist of Messrs. S. Grimley, N. Lassell, and D. P. Milne. The works now being issued on the subject being so numerous it was decided to at once start a library. Mr. O. M'Clay was appointed hon. treasurer, and Mr. Howard S. Bliss hon. secretary; the election of the other officers was left over until the first meeting of the Association. It was unanimously decided that ladies were to be invited to join the Association as hon. members. Amongst the speakers were Messrs. G. Lang, D. P. Milne, S. Grimley, and P. Gregory. — Evening Observer, Tuesday, November 8th, 1892.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—With reference to John Shootingham's remarks on my letter in the BANNER of December 17, recommending the badge sanctioned by the British-Israel Association, in which he informs your readers "that MRS. Thompson of the Bath Association had another cognizance in hand in the shape of a star, being emblematical of the star of Jacob, and formed by the union of a white St. Andrew's cross with a red St. George's, having the word "Israel emblazoned on its face," I cannot but express my sincere regret at this announcement.

We must all be desirous, I think, of appearing to the world as a united body of believers in British-Israel Truth, but the fact of supporters of the subject wearing different badges is not calculated to create such an impression. I have no wish to disparage Mrs. Thompson's design, but I cannot conceive that to the unitiated it will convey much meaning from a British-Israelite point of view, and it is news to me that the recognised badge of the Association "does not meet with approval." Personally I have found after ten years experience, that besides attracting much attention, and many enquiries as to the meaning of the emblems, that the design has been, without one single exception, greatly admired. What can be possibly more attractive and imposing in design, than on the obverse of the medals, the Royal Arms, which are the arms of the two Houses of Israel, with the inscription in Hebrew characters, "The Holy One of Israel is our King," pointing to our heavenly expectation; and on the reverse, the Pyramid inverted (being the traditional signets of King David) with the words in the centre, "Ye are My witnesses" (in Hebrew) declaring our mission as a Protestant nation. On the score of expense it cannot be objected to, as, although in gold it costs £3 3s., in silver or bronze it costs only a few shillings or pence respectively.

Of course, British-Israelites are not bound to accept the only officially recognised badge in existence, if I may so term it; but on the other hand if every now and again someone chooses to start a fresh design, it only tends to confusion, and brings discredit on the authority of the Head Association, which, in the interests of us all, I should like to see upheld. There is only one other course to pursue in my opinion, and that is to withdraw one or both badges, and have none at all in the future, but this alternative I shall be sorry to see adopted.

Yours truly,

H. H. PAIN.

Pinewood, Highland-road, Brom'ley, Kent.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—I was at the great Cattle Show at Islington, at the beginning of December, and it passed through my mind, "Does, or can, any Continental city or country, gather together such a number of fine, well-grown beasts of various kinds, and roots for their fodder?" Well, you may say, that is a very minor point of excellence! Nevertheless, it probably is a point in which Britain excels. We may recall, too, the words of Deut. xxviii. 3—5, xxx. 9, xxxii. 13, 14, and xxxiii. 16, first clause.

P.S.—It is very greatly to be lamented that in Board Schools, National (Church) Schools, &c., so very little or nothing is done to teach the young, geography, and the extent of the British Empire, nor to instil into their minds sentiments of patriotism, loyalty, gratitude for national mercies, love of their native country, their Queen, and some little knowledge of the history of England's Church and State, and Constitution. This should be insisted on, but our authorities are blind, and almost dead to the signs of the times. What our children are made that our men will be. Terribly wanting we are in many ways, in obedience to the Lord our God. Yet, compared with other nations, we are, I trust, less criminal.

J. RUTTER.

Tottenham, Dec., 1892.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—It is with pleasure that I can now advise you of our having formed an Association, in fact, we call ourselves "The Queensland Branch of the British-Israel Association." I enclose a short report of our first meeting, as appeared in all the Brisbane Dailies. A large number of enquiries are being made, and many converts made, and in the course of a month or two we hope to have at least sixty members, whilst the believers will total not far short of a couple of hundred. It is our desire to form a circulating library of all the works on the subject, and, with that object in view, will ask you to so far oblige and assist us as to furnish us with a list of all the works obtainable and their prices; your kind recommendations attached would be very gratefully appreciated. We hope to make our meeting, not only mutually beneficial, but a place and time of report on individual work since previous meeting. It is also our desire to obtain a quantity of leaflets for distribution.

We hold the first meeting of the Association early next month, and if you would like them I will, directly after our meetings, send you a report thereon.

Hoping we may, as a body of workers in the great cause, so behave as to in a small way merit, and in a much greater way, receive the Lord's blessing on our small efforts.

I am, dear sir, yours very sincerely,

HOWARD S. BLISS, Hon. Sec.

The Treasury, Brisbane, Nov. 16, 1892.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed "PHILO-ISRAEL," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION for the BANNER OF ISRAEL, in Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts. To any part of the United Kingdom, Canada, America, or Europe, in the postal union:—

	s. d.		s. d.
copy, including postage	7 0	Tasmania	7 0
New Zealand	7 0	South Australia	7 0
Cape Colony	7 0	Queensland	7 0
Victoria	7 0	Natal	7 0
Western Australia	7 0	New South Wales	7 0
Transvaal	7 0	India	7 0
		Ceylon, via Brindisi	7 0

All Post Office Orders, Cheques, &c., should be crossed "City Bank, Ludgate-hill, to the ac. of ROBERT BANKS AND SON." They will then only be paid to our account.

READING CASES for holding the Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts, may be had, price 2s. Sent post free on receipt of Postal Order.

THE ANNUAL VOLUMES, bound in handsome blue cloth, price 8s.

THE MONTHLY PARTS, in tinted wrapper, published the last day of each month, 6d.

CONTRIBUTIONS TOWARDS the FREE DISTRIBUTION of the NEW YEAR'S DOUBLE NUMBER of the "BANNER OF ISRAEL," received since January 20.

Many friends have also sent remittances for sending copies to addresses given. These have been sent as directed, and are not included in this List.

	£ s. d.
Major Maxwell Reeve	0 10 0

NOW READY.

HANDSOME BLUE CLOTH

CASES FOR BINDING.

Price 1s. 6d, or post free, 1s. 8d.

VOLUME XVI. OF THE BANNER OF ISRAEL,

Price 8s. Sent Post Free.

ROBERT BANKS AND SON, Racquet-ct., Fleet-st., E.C

THIRD EDITION NOW READY.

With 38 Additional Pages.

Paper Cover, Price 1s. nett., postage 2d. extra Limp Boards, lettered, 1s. 6d., postage 2d. extra. Cloth boards, gilt lettered, thick toned paper 2s., postage 3d. extra.

BRITISH-ISRAEL TRUTH

A Handbook for Enquirers.

EDITED BY

REV. DENIS HANAN, M.A., D.D.,

AND

H. ALDER-SMITH, M.B., F.R.C.S.

WITH A CHART AND MAP.

Published by the Authority of the BRITISH-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION, (Metropolitan, Provincial and Colonial.)

"British-Israel Truth." Edited by the Rev. Denis Hanan and H. Alder-Smith (R. Banks & Son.)—The sale of the first edition of this work, and the consequent issue of a second, shows that there is a growing interest in the study of the questions of the Israelitish origin of the English speaking people. Clever, interesting, pathetic, and showing considerable research, the volume has been a success, and doubtless has made some converts.—THE ROCK.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C

Price 2s. 6d. Cheap Edition, 1s.

Bible Lessons and Reflections,

By ROBERT GAIRDNER,

OF KILMARNOCK, N.B.

"Mr. Gairdner has given us in his book a series of Bible lessons, with his own reflections added thereto, and though he has been very cautious in the latter, and has not committed himself too broadly, he has plainly let it be seen that he is an Anglo-Israelite by conviction, and that the Scriptures which he quotes at length and extensively throughout his book, are meant to teach Our Identity and God's faithfulness, from first to last, to His promises to Abraham and his seed for ever."—Banner of Israel.

R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

"A WONDERFUL REMEDY."

"I WAS GIVEN UP BY ALL."

"SAVED FROM AN EARLY GRAVE."

Such are the words of grateful Patients relative to their CASES OF

CONSUMPTION

CURED BY THE TREATMENT OF

MR. GEO. T. CONGREVE.

Read his Book, "ON CONSUMPTION, &c." which may be had post free for ONE SHILLING from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.; or may be ordered of any Bookseller.

NOTE.—CONSULTATIONS FREE at Coombe Lodge, Peckham, on TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings only. No Charge except the usual charge for three weeks or six weeks' supply of medicine. All Patients should read the book first.

Just ready, 220 Large Post 8vo. pages, in clear, readable type, price 2s. 6d., limp cloth, gilt lettered, red edges, post free to any part of the world on receipt of postal remittance.

Nineteen Centuries Ago and NOW.

BY J. C. H. MEHL.

WITH BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH,

BY E. M. RUSH.

CONTENTS.—Biographical Sketch—Nineteen Centuries Ago and Now—Letter to the Editor of the Banner of Israel—A German's Views on Our Identity—The Church of England—The Woman Arrayed with the Sun (Rev. xii.)—"Remember the Sabbath Day to Keep It Holy"—"Blessed are the Meek, for They Shall Inherit the Earth"—The Spirit of Negation, and the Spirit of Prayer—"Righteousness Exalteth a Nation"—"The Dispersion Among the Greeks"—The Protracted Era of Grace—"The Power of the Holy People"—The Present Aspect of the Kingdom of Heaven—One, and Yet Many—A Great Truth Slow in its Progress—A Two-fold Alienation—On Co-operating with the Divine Purpose—A Lamp Shining in a Dark Place (2 Pet. i. 19)—Was St. Patrick an Israelite, and Was He Aware of It?

LONDON:

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st. or by order of any Bookseller.

Price 6d. Monthly. Annual Subscription 7s

THE MESSENGER.

Edited by "OXONIAN."

Each number contains papers by the EDITOR and other well-known writers, a SERMON by Dr. WILD, Notes and Queries, &c

Now Ready, price 5s., post free, 5s. 4d., Illustrated by MAPS,

RUSSIA JAPHET:

OR, THE MUSCOVITE, THE COSSACK, AND THE MONGOL.

Being a detailed Identification of the principal peoples subject to the Czar. By "OXONIAN."

London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C.

The Lost Ten Tribes of Israel.

By the Rev. JOSEPH WILD, D.D., Pastor of Bond-street Congregational Church, Toronto, Price 3s.

London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C.

"THE WORLD'S PROVED REMEDY FOR ALL CHEST DISEASES."

COUGH, ASTHMA,

CHRONIC BRONCHITIS,

INFLUENZA,

THERE IS NONE TO EQUAL IT.

Rev. F. E. HEAPE, of DERBY, in a recent letter, says: "Your Medicine always puts my lungs right, and drove out the terrible INFLUENZA last May."

This Medicine has been prepared for 65 years.

CONGREVE'S BALSAMIC ELIXIR.

In Bottles, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 22s., may be had of all Chemists and Medicine Vendors.

TEA! TEA! TEA!

FROM

INDIA, CEYLON, AND CHINA.

Best Quality and Best Value.

From 1/6 to 3/6 per lb. Samples Gratis.

Carriage Paid on Parcels of 6lbs. and upwards

Robinson & James,

42, TRINITY SQUARE, TOWER HILL, LONDON, E.C.

TOOTH-ACHE

CURED INSTANTLY BY

BUNTER'S NERVINE

Prevents Decay, Saves Extraction. Sleepless Nights Prevented.

Neuralgic Headaches and all Nerve Pains removed by BUNTER'S NERVINE. All Chemists, 1s. 1½d.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT

FOR

LUMBAGO

Mr. J. B. CARNE, Station Master L. B. & S. C. Ry., Clapham Junction Station, S.W., writes:—"I have derived great benefit from wearing your Electropathic Belt. The Lumbago and pains in my back have both ceased."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. HARNESS, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd. Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST. LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

Digitized by Google

LUNG SAVE YOUR LIVES BY TAKING TONIC
LUNG OWBRIDGE'S TONIC
LUNG LUNG TONIC TONIC
LUNG THE MIGHTY HEALER. TONIC
LUNG It has a power over disease hitherto TONIC
LUNG unknown in Medicine. TONIC
LUNG Are you at all Weak-chested or in- TONIC
LUNG clined to be Consumptive, with just a TONIC
LUNG touch of Cough now and then? TONIC
LUNG "Try this Wonderful Medicine." The TONIC
LUNG Cough and Weakness will disappear as TONIC
LUNG if by magic, and you will feel a strength TONIC
LUNG and power you never had before. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COUGH? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COLD? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL TONIC
LUNG REMOVE IT! TONIC
LUNG Bronchitis & Asthma it relieves instantly TONIC
LUNG The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful TONIC
LUNG in Whooping Cough become less with TONIC
LUNG each dose of the medicine. TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE Chemist Hull TONIC
LUNG Sold in bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. TONIC
LUNG and 11s., by all Chemists and Patent TONIC
LUNG Medicine Vendors. Wholesale all TONIC
LUNG London and Provincial Houses. TONIC

The True and Divine Appointment for the Cure of Disease.
Send to
B. V. SCOTT, M.B.M.R.S.,
College of Health, 121, Kensington, Liverpool,
for his
VOICE OF NATURE TO THE INVALID,
Post free 5 stamps.

Thousands of incurables (so-called) have proved God's own means could save when others failed.

Rev. F. Harper says of Mr. Scott's book: "It is a library in itself, and free from quackery."

Rev. Lush says: "Mr. Scott's treatment is natural, safe, reasonable, and Scriptural."

Send for the Book at once.

PAGE WOODCOCK'S
WIND PILLS

It is astonishing how many people imagine they suffer from

HEART DISEASE

They experience a depressing feeling about the region of the heart, accompanied by an occasional stab of pain, nervous debility, loss of appetite and general depression. The fact is they suffer from

INDIGESTION, OR DYSPEPSIA.

The food, instead of being thoroughly digested, develops into Wind, and flies about the valves of the heart causing the symptoms named. All who suffer in this way should at once take

Page Woodcock's Wind Pills,

A world-renowned remedy for all Stomach disorders.

All Sufferers from INDIGESTION, LIVER COMPLAINTS, WIND on the STOMACH, COSTIVENESS, SICK HEADACHE, HEARTBURN, NERVOUS DEBILITY, PALPITATION of the HEART, BILIOUSNESS, &c., should avail themselves of this most excellent medicine.

Of all Medicine Vendors, at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d., or Post Free for P.O. or Stamps, from PAGE WOODCOCK, Lincoln.

NEW CATALOGUE of Works on Our Identity post free from R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

GIGANTIC SALE OF
100 COLOURS TO SELECT FROM
GREATEST BARGAINS EVER OFFERED

In consequence of the mild season, we have still in stock over 250,000 DRESS LENGTHS of our famous Cloths which, in order to effect a rapid clearance we have reduced to less than Manufacturers' Cost Price. 100 lovely new colours to select from. All goods are new and in perfect condition. We will gladly send patterns post free, and they need not be returned. Write to-day for patterns and Sale Price List
FULL DRESS LENGTHS OF MAGNIFICENT CLOTHS 9s.6d. CARRIAGE PAID.

LADIES CLOTH DRESSES
GENUINE REDUCTIONS! WRITE FOR PATTERNS
LUTAS LEATHLEY & Co ARMLEY, LEEDS.

No. 26.—Price 1s. per 100, 8s. 6d. per 1,000.

THOUGHTS FOR THE BRITISH FOLK.

SUGGESTED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

OUR ISRAELITE MINERS.

London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C.

USEFUL BOOKS FOR BIBLE STUDENTS.

In Two Vols., about 500 pages in each, cloth bound, price 5s., originally published at 7/6.

HISTORY OF THE JEWS

In Three Concurrent Sections.

I.—Ten Books of the Antiquities of the Jews, as TRANSLATED by WHISTON, with Notes from FLAVIUS JOSEPHUS.

II.—The Bible Narrative from the Creation to the Captivity at Babylon, fully given and faithfully rendered.

III.—A Modern History of the Jews. Abridged and Offered as a Commentary on the Preceding Sections.

The Two Volumes sent post free for 5/3 nett To be had only direct from ROBERT BANKS AND SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

"I am delighted with this."—PHILO-ISRAEL.

NEW AND IMPROVED EDITION OF

ISRAEL'S WORLD,

By Rev. HENRY ROE. 2d.

Also "Consecration," 2d., "Going to Africa," 1s.; "West African Scenes," 2s.; "Fernando Po Mission," 1s. Also "Israel's World" and "Consecration" bound together in cloth, with Author's latest photograph portrait, 1s.

Order of ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C., or of Rev. HENRY ROE, Radstock, via Bath.

TEETH.—£1 A FULL SET

ESKELL'S.—CELEBRATED MAKE, £2 2s. Warranted and fitted in one visit. No extractions needed. HALF A MILLION SETS already supplied. The Nursing Record and Hospital World says:—We recommend all who require Reliable and Good Teeth at a small cost to go to Messrs. ESKELL, 445, Strand (facing Charing Cross Station), and 58, Ludgate Hill, City, London. Also at 27, Western Road, Brighton, and 23, Mount Pleasant, Tunbridge Wells. Hours 9 till 7. Illustrated Pamphlets, explaining everything, free. Established 100 years.

New Pamphlet Just Issued, price 3d., by post 3½d.; one dozen, post free, 3s.

Every Anglo-Israelite should read

ISRAEL A CHRISTIAN NATION AT THE PRESENT DAY.

BY COL. WM. CAREY. C.B.

London: ROBERT BANKS AND SON, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, or by order of any Bookseller.

Anglo-Israel; or, The Saxon Race Proved to be the Lost Tribes of Israel. By the REV. W. H. POOLE, D.D. Large royal 8vo., of 700 pages, with illustrations, price 10s. 6d.

"My Jewels." Choice Selections from Writers of Sacred Poetry, with Appropriate Texts from Holy Scripture, arranged for every day. By SARAH SHARP. Gilt lettered, 1s. 8d.; Royal edition, white calf, gilt (as accepted by the Queen), 4s. 6d.

The Fulness of the Nations; or, the A B C of the Promises Given to the House of Israel Considered in Relation to the Second Advent. By Dr. H. ALDER-SMITH. Cloth gilt, price 5s.

The Future of Israel and Judah. Being the Discourses on the Lost Ten Tribes, from "How and When the World will End." By the Rev. JOSEPH WILD, D.D. With portrait of Author. Price 2s.

London: ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, or by order of any bookseller.

PHOSPHORUS

A new process of preparing this necessary food for the Brain and Nervous System, invented by Mr. Samuel Birley, M.D., renders its therapeutic value superior to all the Phosphates, Hypophosphites, &c., usually prescribed. May be taken for years with perfect safety! Descriptive pamphlet free to enquirers (mentioning this paper), from

GORDON, MURRAY & Co., Ltd..
10, ADAM STREET, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co. (Ltd.) 23, Paternoster-row. Wednesday, FEBRUARY 1, 1893. All Rights Reserved.

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India).

"And the Remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS OF THE EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XVII., No. 841. Entered at Stationer's Hall.] WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1893 [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
The Breeze at Cairo	73
The New Badge	74
Tara. By the Rev. Denis Hanan, D.D.	75
Anglo-Israelism	76
Elijah at Carmel	77
The Lord's Servants Must be Active	78
The British-Israel Association	79
Another Death Blow to the Identity	80
Random Shafts. By John Shootingham	81
Correspondence	82
Hard Upon the Commentators, By Rev. E. Brentnall, M.A.	82

THE BREEZE AT CAIRO.

ON January 17, Europe was startled out of its propriety by the news that the young Khedive, Abbas Pasha, had "kicked over the traces," and was going to assert himself in opposition to the British Government in the matter of the Prime Minister, and of two other members of his government! It was announced that he had set aside Mustapha Pasha Fehmy, the Premier, a friend of British reforms, and placed in his room Fakhri Pasha, a man absolutely opposed to reform, and "devoid of the qualities of a good Oriental ruler."

Such an act as this, of course, plainly proved that the young Khedive believed the time had come when the authority of Mr. Gladstone being uppermost once more, he had a chance of securing power unbridled, in Egypt, and that he might by a bold stroke get rid of British tutelage and restraint altogether. Lord Rosebery, however, happily is at the helm, and he has some strong notions as to Imperial questions, and among the rest, of the value of a well-governed and contented Egypt on the road to India. Besides that, he was fortified by Lord Granville's instruction to the then Sir Evelyn Baring, in 1884, when he sent the latter the following clear instructions, which govern the present case:—

I hardly need point out that, in important questions where the administration and safety of Egypt are at stake, it is indispensable that Her Majesty's Government should, so long as the provisional occupation of the country by English troops continues, be assured that the advice which, after full consideration of the views of the Egyptian Government, they may feel it their duty to tender to the Khedive should be followed. It should be made clear to the Egyptian Ministers and governors of provinces that the responsibility which, for the time, rests on England, obliges Her Majesty's Government to insist on the adoption of the policy which they recommend, and that it will be necessary that those Ministers and governors who do not follow this course should cease to hold their offices.

It was in defiance of these clear instructions with which doubtless he was well acquainted, that Abbas Pasha, the young Khedive, acted. He had twenty-four hours allowed him by Lord Cromer to decide whether he would comply with the fresh orders of the British Government which were furnished for the occasion, and happily he submitted with apologies for his indiscretion, and with promises in future always to carry on his government in conformity with the expressed wishes of the British authorities. Such has been the crisis which has suddenly arisen and as suddenly subsided at Cairo. The facts leave behind them, however, a teaching and a warning. It is clear that Abbas Pasha is not inclined to be as subservient in carrying out measures for the good of his country as was his late father Tewfik Pasha. His purpose seems to be rather to aspire to the independent career of his grandfather, Ishmail Pasha, and to set the British at defiance. He has submitted for a time, but it is plain how his inclination leans, and what Egypt has to expect, if once the British troops retire, and the young Khedive, whom the French were always telling us was an enlightened prince, quite capable of carrying on the government of Egypt alone, were left to stand without the support of British bayonets. Foreign newspapers see the problem, and are quite outspoken on the subject. The following is an Austrian opinion which can be well put against the rabid hate that issues from the press in France. This, from the Times of January 20, 1893, is strong.

Vienna, Jan. 19.

There is reason to believe that the article on Egypt published to-day by the semi-official Fremdenblatt, of which I append an extract, faithfully represents the view taken by the Austrian Government:—

"The condition of Egypt has so strikingly improved within the last ten years that no unprejudiced person can refuse to acknowledge the activity and value of the English administration. A series of reforms has been introduced, order is admirably maintained, and the existing administration of the towns is beyond all comparison better than that which preceded it, the sanitation in particular being very good. From a recent report by the Financial Under-Secretary, Mr. Gorst, who has just returned from a journey of inspection in Upper Egypt, it appears that there is a continuous improvement in the various branches of provincial administration. This might be looked upon as mere self-praise, were it not for the fact that the greater part of the merit is due to the native officials, whose growing energy and activity in the work of the administration is the object of special mention in this report. Mr. Gorst says that these officials are becoming capable under the direction and training of the central authorities of doing valuable independent work.

Digitized by Google

"It is thus clear that England has taken her civilizing mission to heart, and that the Egyptian people, the European colonists, and also Europe itself, have reason to be thankful to her for doing so. English statesmen of both parties have repeatedly explained that when they consider England's mission to be fulfilled they do not propose to retain their present position in Egypt, but they have always refused to bind themselves to a certain time, and it is easy to understand that they will neither permit themselves to be dictated to from Cairo as to the period of their stay, nor agree to allow the duties they have undertaken to be reduced to insignificance. The Khedive himself will certainly come round to this point of view before long, and seek the welfare of his people in harmonious co-operation with the officials deputed by England. That co-operation is now all the more necessary as the Dervishes have again made their appearance in Southern Egypt. . . . A man of understanding could not conceal from himself that the presence of the English in Egypt was the only means of providing the elements which would render possible the creation of a useful and independent native administration. There are few peoples who have not in one way or another been educated into independent civilized communities by the tutelage of foreign Powers. Egyptian patriots would consequently do well to force their national pride to give way before the interests of the country itself, that ancient land which has already suffered so many changes of evil fortune, and to leave it for a long time to come to be governed and defended with the co-operation of their experienced British advisers."—Our Own Correspondent.

At home a provincial journal discusses the subject intelligently, and comes to the conclusion that though Abbas Pasha has "climbed down," we have not yet heard the last of him! The remarks in question were these:—

It by no means follows, as some people seem to think, that the business is at an end. On the contrary, the late outbreak of insubordination on the part of Abbas Pasha must mark an important new departure in British relations to Egypt. The effect of the Khedive's behaviour must be to make the prospect of our withdrawal from Egypt more remote than it ever was before. The young Khedive has given us a very disagreeable taste of his quality. But the dose, like some medicines of a distasteful kind, will be salutary. For instance, the incident utterly confutes the arguments of those who urge that the time has arrived, or is near at hand, when the Khedive can be left to himself. In order to show this, it is necessary briefly to recapitulate what has happened. And in doing so, it is hardly necessary to inquire whether the Khedive acted entirely of his own motion or at the instigation of others. Abbas Pasha clearly thought that the time was opportune for repudiating British tutelage. It does not matter much whether he was brought to this frame of mind by the pressure of native and anti-English intriguers, or by that of interested foreigners. It is worth while to remark, however, that the Parisian Journal des Debats yesterday published a jubilant article on the subject, declaring that the Khedive's "courageous initiative" would greatly facilitate the task of the French Ambassador in London, in discussing the settlement of the Egyptian question. The courageous initiative proved itself to be the beginning of a supremely pusillanimous performance. But there can be no doubt that something serious was intended; and that nothing short of a sledge-hammer blow of British policy could have convinced the Khedive that he was making a gross miscalculation. This blow Lord Rosebery promptly delivered.

Arguing from the smaller to the greater, it is easy to forecast the result of the withdrawal from Egypt of the British troops, the visible symbol of British authority. All the reforms which Great Britain, at enormous pains, has introduced, which, moreover, according to all competent authorities, have produced splendid results, would be swept away. The Khedive would surround himself with counsellors who hate, not only British reforms, but all reforms of every kind. If England were not to interfere to prevent Egypt from going back to barbarism, some other European Power would do so. There would, under the best of circumstances, be unseemly wrangling and disputes. In the end, whatever else might happen, the last state of Egypt would be worse than the first; and a great and profitless war would be well nigh inevitable. The danger to British interests is obvious. Although he has given way, in all essential respects, to the peremptory demands of Lord Cromer, the British Pro-Consul in Egypt, the young Khedive may reasonably be supposed to be in the position of one who, complying against his will, is of the same opinion still. The lesson to be learned from the whole affair is that, valuable as the work is which England has done in Egypt, it would be liable to be undone by the caprice of an Egyptian ruler, if there were to be any faltering in British policy. There has not been sufficient lapse of time to efface the memory of those days, delightful for a large class of Egyptian notables, when oppression and corruption could be practiced with impunity. The European education of Abbas Pasha, of which much has been heard, does not seem to have brought with it a full appreciation of the advantages of civilisation and its responsibilities.

We have here the political aspect of this Egyptian crisis, which seems over, but yet is bound to leave its lessons behind it. God has spoken to us by it, and He has a message for His people Israel which He has delivered and means us to heed. He has told us that Egypt must be held at all costs as a strategic position with reference to coming events in Palestine; and that while there are enemies abroad, and in the very citadel at Cairo itself, He is on our side, and means to see us through. By His arrangement Lord Rosebery was at hand to guide the new Gladstonian Government. He has made it clear that all talk of evacuating Egypt because the Egyptians are now strong enough to stand alone must be set aside. Egypt while it is and remains Asiatic, cannot stand alone, and requires the strong arm of Israel to uphold it. Our position at the strategic point which commands the Suez Canal and the Red Sea is thus assured; and men who before this "Breeze at Cairo" might have supposed that Egypt was now educated up to the needful point can say so no more, with truth. In the whole matter God's guiding, gracious Hand is visible, and seeing it let Israel rejoice and praise the Lord.

THE NEW BADGE.

THE Hon. Sec. of the Bath Association requests that all app'ications for badges should be sent at once to her 27, Pulteney-street, Bath, or to Major-General Carlyle Bell, St. Lawrence Villa, Kingston Hill, Surrey, accompanied by postal order. Name and address to be clearly written. It is necessary to know how many are required in order to give instructions to the manufacturers. They will be sent as soon as they are received from them. Those first ordered are all sold out. It would be a great convenience if secretaries of associations would take the names of their members requiring them, when the badges would be sent to them to distribute. For prices see advt. next week.

Digitized by Google

TARA.

By The Rev. Denis Hanan, D.D.

The following paper was read before The Royal Society of Antiquaries of Ireland, in December, 1890. At that time the Society did not wish to commit itself to the investigation suggested, partly, perhaps, because its advocate was touched by the British-Israel craze, and partly because one of the guiding spirits upon the committee was deeply engaged in tabulating those important trinkets, ancient glass beads!

It is to be observed that the question is treated solely from an antiquarian point of view. The writer has always deprecated the idea that the traditions concerning Tara are in any way involved in the evidence concerning modern Israel. But this does not prevent British-Israelites being deeply interested in those traditions, and their possible confirmation.

"An Attempt to Identify Certain Sites on the Hill of Tara, and a Practical Suggestion.

"The study of antiquities, interesting and instructive as it is, becomes of practical use and attains its highest ends, when it is made the means whereby the historical value of legends is established, or whereby their mythical, and it may be misleading character, is exposed. When there is any probability that such results may be obtained The Royal Society of Antiquaries of Ireland, would doubtless undertake the quest with greatly intensified interest.

"In this paper I hope to direct attention to a well-known locality, not far away, and to an ancient legend connected therewith. Both the locality and the legend interest us as antiquarians. The possible, if not probable, elucidation of the one by the other, must interest us as historians.

"The locality is the well-known Hill of Tara, 24 miles distant. It is thus described by Mr. Petrie: 'The Hill of Tara, though undistinguished either for altitude or picturesqueness of form, is not less remarkable for the pleasing and extensive prospects which it commands, than for the associations connected with it, as the site of the residence of the Irish monarchs from the earliest times.'

"The legend is this: 'That Tea Tephi, wife of the Heremon, or chief King of Ireland, is buried in the 'Great Mergch' that is said to be hidden there.' The exact site of this receptacle is undecided. I propose to make a suggestion as to its identification.

"The Hill is covered with earthworks, similar to those which are to be found all over the country—viz., circular raths or forts: and also a long and narrow excavation is pointed out as the site of the Hall of Tara.

"A fence of stone, known as 'the old wall,' running from the churchyard across the Hill, separates the Russell and Preston properties. It is only the earthworks on the former or southern side, known as the Rath na Reogh, or Cathair Corofin, to which the legends concerning Tea Tephi are attached. These at present consist of an outer ring, which encloses two central circular raths, and one mound of earth. The two raths touch one another, but it seems evident that that to the west was the first constructed, as the outer ring of that to the east has been cut into it in order to form the latter. The older earthwork, or western, has a double trench surrounding it, and the central part is raised; the eastern is surrounded by one trench, and is depressed in the centre. In my opinion the tomb, mergch or receptacle, if it exists at all, is under the raised central part of the western rath. The tradition of the locality is, that it is not known under which of the many mounds or raths the princess lies buried.

"Mr. Petrie's researches caused him to write: 'The next important monument noticed is that called Tea-mur: of this there is now no vestige, but its situation is pointed out as a little hill, which lies between the two murs (septa) to the south of the Rath na Reogh, and the poem of Kinneth O'Hartigan indicates that it was 60 feet in extent, and contained within it the sepulchre of the Milesian Queen Tea.'

"'The length and breadth of the tomb of Tephi,
Accurately measured by the sages,
Was sixty feet of exact measure,
As prophets and druids have related.'

Cu-an O'Cochlain, A.D. 1024.

"With all deference to Mr. Petrie's opinion, I proceed to give the reason which cause me to think that the raised mound, now known as the Croppies grave, is the tomb of Tea. Before I do so, it may be well to mention why the rath is now so called. During the rebellion of 1798, a body of men defended themselves on the Hill of Tara, and those who fell were buried in a trench that was cut across the top of the central mound. At a later date the pillar-stone that now marks the grave was moved from the mound upon which the kings were crowned. It stands about 5½ feet high, and must be sunk at least 3 feet in the ground. It is round, and about 5 feet in circumference.

"But to return. The western rath is the largest and oldest of the earthworks, and the most carefully constructed. It alone has the raised centre, and its size suits the traditional dimensions of the tomb. The section of the rath given in Petrie's Tara, shows that the central mound is 88 feet in diameter. Cu-an O'Cochlain's poem states that the tomb was 60 feet in circumference—i.e., 20 feet in diameter. Supposing this 20 feet to be the inside measurement, and that the walls were, say, 6 feet, the whole 32 feet could be covered up in the 88 feet, and leave 28 feet of earth surrounding. It is almost impossible to estimate the original height of ancient earthworks, probably they were at least twice as deep and as steep as they now are. The central mound in question is about 12 feet over the present level of the surrounding foss. There is room for a lofty chamber under the super-imposed clay.

"Mr. Petrie's statement is based upon a translation of a poem by Amergin, written in the sixth century (A.D.), and given in the 'Notes of the Annals of the Four Masters:'

"'A rampant was raised round her house,
For Teah, the daughter of Lug-haidh;
She was buried outside in her mound,
And from her it was named Tea-mur.'

"The word translated 'outside,' seems to have given rise to the tradition that she was not buried under her house in the fortress, or 'Cahir Circular and strong.' But considering the doubtful signification of the word—that it may mean the outside chamber of the Mergch, that this Cahir alone could contain such a chamber, and that any other Tea-mur cannot be found—it seems an insufficient datum upon which to conclude that 'the grave, the Great Mergch, a sepulchre that has not been violated,' does not lie under this, the most remarkable of the Tara mounds.

"The legend connected with Tea Tephi is a remarkable one. Ollam Fola and Simon Brugh brought with them from the East, about the sixth century (B.C.), a princess, and a stone. The princess was married to the Heremon, or chief Prince of the Tuatha de Danaan, who then ruled Ireland. It is said that the descent of our most gracious Queen can be traced from her, and also that certain Irish families claim her as an ancestress. It is said that she was buried on the Hill of Tara, in a tomb spoken of to this day as the Mergch (a Hebrew word, signifying a receptacle—as distinct from a grave). The stone, which tradition says was brought with the princess, is that upon which the kings of Ireland were crowned; it was removed to Scotland, and on it the Scotch kings were crowned; it was finally removed to England, and placed in Westminster Abbey, and on it the British monarchs are crowned.

Digitized by Google

"If our society could solve somewhat of the mystery that attaches to this material fact, and to the closely-connected legend, it would achieve a success such as has never been attained to by any kindred association.

"It will be asked how any researches could produce a practical result. It is well known that burial mounds, such as I conceive the Rath na Reogh to be, have been explored in the Crimea by the Russian Government. The accounts of these archæological researches state, that an inner chamber or chambers, arched, and built of unmortared stone, contain the body. The stone chamber is covered with a layer of sea-weed, and over this the mound of earth is raised. Great treasure in gold ornaments has been usually found; within the past twelve months as much as £6,000 worth of gold, estimated by weight, not by its archæological value, was obtained from one tomb. But yet more strange, tombstones recording the name of the dead, the date of death, and the faith professed, are found. Many of these stones are in the Petersburgh Museum, and the inscriptions are recorded in its published statements.

"Now, suppose that nothing was found in the tomb on the Hill of Tara but such a stone record, how absolutely invaluable the knowledge thus gained would be. What a light it would cast upon the legend: either confirming it, or manifesting its mythical character; and what more probable than that in this tomb which remains absolutely inviolate, other objects of historic and intrinsic value would be found. Tara has already yielded some of the most valuable objects in the Royal Irish Academy Museum. The historical question, who was Tephi? would probably be answered; and if the identity of the princess could be established, light would be thrown upon the personality of Ollam Fola and his companion. Something of the mystery of the 'Lia Fail,' or stone of destiny, might be revealed, and the word mergch or receptacle may suggest that something more than the body was stored away.

"If ever an effort is made to enter the Rath na Riogh, it must be attempted from the western side, as the Croppies grave is upon the top of the mound. A shaft driven in somewhat below the present level of the foss, for about 20 or 30 feet, ought to reveal whether there is a stone centre over which the mound is raised. This work would not be very expensive, and the association would find no difficulty in procuring funds, if it was known that the effort was to be made.

"As far as I could gather from enquiries made on the spot, there would be no local prejudice or superstition which would raise a difficulty. I believe that the tenant would be willing to permit the exploration, and a former tenant actually removed one of the adjoining hillocks for top-dressing. The owner of the property, Lord Russell, and his agent, Mr. Hamilton, would doubtless, if approached by a responsible body such as the R. S. A. I., lend their aid. Some knowledge, if only of a negative character, would be obtained. I feel certain that knowledge of an absolute and practical character would result. Our members would find an interesting field of research; and, as I said when commencing my paper, the highest objects that can be attained by a society of antiquaries would be legitimately attempted.

"I hope that I may be considered to have made a 'practical suggestion.'"

On the 10th January, 1893, I made the further practical suggestion when writing to the Hon. Treasurer of the R. S. A. I.:—

"If at any time the Society should free itself from the strange influence which prevents it investigating the 'Mergh' on the Hill of Tara, I shall, I doubt not, be able to procure ample funds without delay or much difficulty."

To this I have received the reply: "Your letter will be laid before the Council at their next meeting, in reference to the suggested explorations at Tara."

Now, if I could make a definite statement to the Council as to the subscriptions promised, in case the explorations were undertaken, such a definite offer could not be lightly set aside. It would be far more tangible than my personal opinion, and would mean business.

I therefore propose that all who are willing to join in a guarantee fund should send their names and addresses to me. No money will be received at present, or asked for, unless the R. S. A. I. will move in the matter within twelve months from the 1st March, 1893. But to avoid the possible cavil, that it is easy to promise but that there may be no performance, I suggest that each guarantor should send with his or her letter a postal order for 1/-, to meet postage and preliminary expenses, and to form a nucleus for the fund; the balance, if not given to the R. S. A. I., to be handed to the Treasurer of The Banner of Israel Free Distribution Fund at the end of twelve months.

The guarantee would be in this form:—"I promise to contribute £, or such part thereof as may be required, towards the suggested explorations at Tara, provided the Royal Society of Antiquaries of Ireland express their willingness to receive the same within twelve months from the 1st March, 1893. Postal order for 1/- enclosed." Envelopes to be addressed to me, "Rev. Denis Hanan, D.D., The Rectory, Tipperary," and marked in left-hand corner, "Tara Fund."

Many friends have from time to time offered me most liberal subscriptions if I would start a fund. Hitherto I have refused, but I think I am now justified in endeavouring to ascertain what general interest exists with reference to Tara, its tradition, and its possible revelation, amongst the readers of the BANNER OF ISRAEL, and their friends.

17th January, 1893.

ANGLO-ISRAELISM.

"THE REV. C. F. COOPER preached again last Sunday week on Anglo-Israelism. Text, Psalm xxxiii. 12. Referring to his morning sermon on the Jews the preacher said: I promised to quote from various authors who have found striking resemblances in character, &c., between the Anglo-Saxon race and the Jews. He then read lengthy extracts from several authors, the most remarkable passages of which were as follows:—

"'We must refer the passionate use of Hebrew writings (by the early Puritans and their opponents) to affinity of disposition between our race and the Jews.'—George Elliot. 'The sons of Isaac are literally our spiritual ancestors; their poetry, their imagery, their very names have descended to us; their hopes, their prayers, their psalms are ours.'—Dean Stanley. 'The most popular poet in England is the sweet singer of Israel, and by no other race, except his own, have his odes been so often sung. It was the "sword of the Lord and of Gideon" that won for England its boasted liberties. The Scotch achieved their religious freedom, chanting upon their hillsides the same canticles which cheered the hearts of Judah amid their glens.'—Disraeli. 'At the sight of such prosperity (in England) I said, "Ascribe ye strength unto God. His excellency is over Israel. The God of Israel is He that giveth strength and power unto His people."'—D'Aubigne.

Digitized by Google

"These and other writers, the speaker said, give unconscious evidence of a racial affinity between the Anglo-Saxon and the Jew.

"The preacher then dwelt upon some spiritual blessings enjoyed by Anglo-Saxons, as further marks of Our Identity. (a) We are the

"CHIEF CHRISTIAN NATION.

"We have freed slaves at enormous cost and great sacrifices, and are now endeavouring to put down slavery everywhere. We are ready, wherever we can, to relieve oppressed nationalities, and to give to other nations the blessings we ourselves enjoy. Amongst no other people is there an extensive, impassioned, overmastering crusade on behalf of temperance and social purity. We are renowned the world over for our charity, bestowed where there is need, without regard to race or creed. London alone spends 5,000,000 dols. a year for strictly charitable objects. Moreover, we are the chief—almost the only—Protestant people in the world. The Christianity of our churches is more scriptural than that of any other. We are the 'imperial race' (as the late Cardinal Manning called us) which forms the strongest bulwark against Romanism on the one hand and infidelity on the other. We may say with thankfulness that we are comparatively speaking, notwithstanding our many sins and vices, a righteous nation. But these were to be Israel's characteristics, and this Israel's work during the Christian era. (See Isa. xxiv. 15; xl. 10—12; xliv. 8; xlv. 25; xlix. 3; li. 13; lix. 21; Jer. xxxi. 31—34; Hos. i. 10; ii, 20—23.) Surely these predictions mean something, and if they are being fulfilled anywhere they are being fulfilled by us.

"(b) THE BIBLE.

"We are a Bible-loving and Bible-reading people. The records of the British and Foreign Bible Society show that its aggregate issues reach over 100,000,000 copies in some 267 languages or dialects. Very few translations of the Scriptures have been made into heathen tongues except by Anglo-Saxon missionaries. Is it not evident that unto us are now committed the oracles of God as unto our fathers before Christ? See Rom. ix. 4, and mark particularly the present tense, 'Whose is,' &c.

"(c) THE SABBATH.

"No other race keeps the Sabbath as we do. No other people has a law demanding Sabbath observance. The Rev. Canon Brownrigg says that 'our standing tradition respecting the observance of the entire Sabbath day is founded upon some instinctive feeling of the nation.' Whence this instinctive feeling? Is it not a striking and unique fact that we only of all the nations of the earth obey the fourth commandment given to Israel on Mount Sinai? But the Sabbath was to be for ever a sign between God and Israel (Exod. xxxi. 17; Deut. iv 13; vi, 8—11; xii. 28; Ezek. xx. 20). We possess this sign, while no other nation does. Therefore, &c.

"(d) THE HERITAGE OF THE HEATHEN.

"We reign over many millions of heathen besides Mahommedans. Some on this continent; some in Africa; some in Australasia; most of all in Asia. The preacher went on to describe our Indian Empire and to show at length the blessing our rule has been to the natives. We had put an end to perpetual war and to religious persecution, forbidden slavery, and as far as possible, protected women. We had utterly, abolished the cruel practice of suttee, infanticide and human sacrifices. We had placed all on an equality before the law, establishing law courts where justice is done between man and man, as certainly as in our own land. We had encouraged and enormously increased trade and commerce, constructed railroads, introduced the electric telegraph. We had lent India upwards of $1,000,000,000 wherewith they had improved their material condition. We had made missionary work in that country, comparatively speaking, pleasant; and now there are between 750,000 and 1,000,000 native Christians. But all this was the work assigned by God in the Christian dispensation to Israel (see several passages already referred to), who was to be 'in the midst of many people as a dew from the Lord' (Micah v. 7). And who should possess the 'heritage of the heathen.' Therefore we must be Israel."—Yarmouth Light, Dec. 8th, 1892.

The above report of the Rev. C. F. Cooper's sermons are, it can easily be seen, mere notes of discourses which doubtless were much more elaborate and full of detail when preached. We publish them to show our readers how earnest Mr. Cooper is and what splendid use he is making both of the pulpit and the press in our distant colony Nova Scotia. We wish we had more clergy of this kind in the United Kingdom, and that public utterance on the subject of Our Identity were more common here than they are.

ELIJAH AT CARMEL.

THE 1 Kings xviii., which was read as a lesson in the Church of England on August 28th, 1892, is a noted chapter, which contains important matter bearing on our controversy regarding Israel. It is often quoted by us against our opponents as a strong point in our favour, that the prophet built his altar to the Lord with twelve stones representing "the twelve sons of Jacob named Israel by the word of Jehovah Himself" (ver. 31), though Elijah ministered only among the Ten Tribes, not a man of the Two Tribes being probably present. A parallel passage in Ezra viii. 35 is often paraded by our opponents to prove that the return from Babylon represented and included the Twelve Tribes, because "the captivity" from Babylon presented burnt-offerings to the Lord of twelve bullocks for all Israel, besides rams, lambs, and he-goats.

Our reply to this is that, as in Elijah's case, the twelve stones did not prove that the Twelve Tribes were even representatively present at Carmel; so it cannot be argued that the offering of twelve bullocks for "all Israel" implied that the Ten Tribes and the Two were united in the return under Ezra. The number in each case was commemorative only of the fact that the nation in its united character, as seen by the Lord continually, was and is a twelve-tribed body—separated now, but destined to be one nation, one kingdom, and one people, when restored by the Lord to the land of their inheritance. The fact that the offerings in Ezra's time were twelve bullocks, ninety-six rams, seventy-seven lambs, and twelve he-goats, for "all Israel" either meant that they were for all the children of Israel in union, or for "all Israel" the Ten Tribes, as representing the

Digitized by Google

"first-born" Ephraim, the head and type of the whole nation.

In 1 Kings xviii. we have it clearly proved that this name, "all-Israel," was one which was copyright to the Ten-tribed House of Joseph or Ephraim. Thus, when Ahab met Elijah, after the prophet's interview with Obadiah, the king asked Elijah, "Is it thou, thou troubler of Israel?" a name common to the Twelve Tribes, but specially applicable on that occasion to Ahab's ten-tribed kingdom. Elijah in ver. 19, however, proceeded to particularize, and asked the king to summon to Carmel "all Israel"—not meaning Judah at all, but the Ten Tribes under Ahab. The latter accordingly sent for "all the children of Israel," and summoned the prophets of Baal among them to Mount Carmel (ver. 20). Throughout the chapter the name Israel stands for the Ten Tribes only, but not for the Twelve Tribes or the Two.

Thus, in Elijah's invocation to God, recorded in ver. 36, He is described as the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, and He desired Him to make it known that He was "God in Israel." In God's commission to the prophet (chap. xix. 15) he was directed "to anoint Jehu, the son of Nimshi, to be king over Israel"—meaning the Ten, but not the Twelve, Tribes.

In the chapters preceding 1 King xviii. we have the term "Israel" and "all Israel" constantly applied to the Ten, but never to the Two Tribes as regards the latter appellation. Thus, in chap. xvi. (to go no further back) we have in ver. 2 the following spoken respecting Baasha, king of the Ten Tribes: "The word of the Lord came to Jehu, son of Hanani, against Baasha, saying, "Forasmuch as I exalted thee out of the dust and made thee prince over My people Israel, and thou has walked in the way of Jeroboam, and hast made My people Israel to sin, &c." (R.V.). The term, "My people Israel," thus used, described in this passage, the Ten Tribes; just as the same expression in Jer. vii. 12—15 (R.V.) was used by that prophet to indicate "the whole seed of Ephraim, the brethren of the Jews—but not the Jews themselves, or the united Twelve-tribed body.

Elijah himself was a prophet to the Ten Tribes exclusively. To him the Lord gave some remarkable revelations, and he was so highly honoured that he was one of only two individuals who were honoured by removal to glory without passing through death. He too only was, with Moses, honoured by the Lord Jesus to testify to His majesty on the mount of glory before He suffered. Moses, as the law-giver to the whole united race, Elijah as the representative of the Ten-tribed House of Israel, God's "dominion" (Psa. cxiv. 2). Israel in its corporate capacity as the Twelve Tribes was there to testify by Moses, the law-giver, that the Lord Jesus Christ was God, and the House of Israel, even the British nation, was there to add its witness in the person of our prophet Elijah, that the Lord is the king of Israel, and we His dominion, His people, and His kingdom (Matt. xxi. 43). Elijah, or one with the spirit of Elijah, is yet to come—nay, has in type already come, as John the Baptist, to do that which Malachi iv. describes in the words, "Behold, I will send you Elijah, the prophet, before the great and terrible day of the Lord come. And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to (or with) the children, and the heart of the children to (or with) the fathers, lest I come and smite the earth (or land) with a curse" (or ban). This seems to anticipate the coming of a time when Britain and her colonies will be estranged from each other on some burning questions, but their disagreements quelled and pacified by the appearance on the scene of some commanding personage, speaking in the name of the Lord, with the power and the spirit of Elijah, "turning the hearts" of the British to unite with their colonial children, and the hearts of the colonists in the four quarters of the globe, to unite with their "old mother in the West."

What this crisis may be no one can yet say; but it is quite possible to imagine a time when burning questions will be sure to arise, to separate the parents from the colonial children, and it would require a voice from heaven as it were to prevent the children from following the disastrous example of our firstborn — the United States of America. In regard to the future, we may not dogmatize; but in dealing with the past and present, it is permitted to us to see the Lord's hand working with and for us, and to praise Him for the consolation.

THE LORD'S SERVANTS MUST BE ACTIVE.

ISRAEL has a great work to do, and it is time that, in doing it, she should know who she is, and in whose service she is working. In Isa. xxvii. 6, R.V., we find the commission plainly given to her: "In days to come shall Jacob take root; Israel shall blossom and bud; and they shall fill the face of the world with fruit." The days were those subsequent to Isaiah's epoch, and there is evidence to show they must be the days of the Christian Dispensation. In those days wandering, supplanting, degraded Jacob was to take root, and consolidate into a nation. Then rising from the "Jacob" stage of national character, to one blessed by the Master's presence and guidance, that same ennobled race, now known as "Israel" or "the sons of the living God," were to bear fruit for Christ. First, the blossom should appear, then the bud, lastly the fruit, which the favoured tree of God's culture would transport to "the ends," the "coasts" and "uttermost parts of the earth," "filling the face of the world with fruit," such as God approves and recognises. But all this means effort, exertion, work, and that incessantly, and to God's glory. Not only are Christian converts to Christ called to labour for Him for the salvation of men; but the literal Israel, the sons of the living God, are especially devoted to the self-same struggle, seeing that they are those, who, from Abraham's days were set apart to be the seed (through, and in, Christ) whereby the nations and families of the world were to be blessed (Gen. xxii. 18, xxviii. 14).

Our Lord Himself described what these works were to be. They were to be those of "the kingdom of God." That kingdom He removed from the Jews for rejection of Himself, as Matt. xxi. 43 teaches us; but the nation on whom it was to be bestowed instead, were to show proof of their Divine offspring and commission, by "bringing forth the fruits thereof." The fruits that Israel, newly rooted, was to produce in order to fill the face of the world thereby, are declared by the Lord of the kingdom, even by Jesus Christ the King, to be the fruits of the kingdom itself.

Those set apart for so glorious a function must then bestir themselves. It will not do now to keep the good news to ourselves! We must proclaim the fact that "Israel is found" with all our strength, and we must join such Associations as the British-Israel in London, and those nearer ourselves in the provinces, which are actively engaged in the cause. A sermon of the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, published in the Christian Herald of January 19, 1893, puts the case we have been dealing with very forcibly from the standpoint of Esther's story. Mutatis mutandis, the words of the preacher will apply to our Israelite case, and we commend them to our readers.

Digitized by Google

"V. Our next remark is the Lord in His providence

"CALLS HIS OWN SERVANTS TO BE ACTIVE.

This was done, and well done, by Divine Providence, but those concerned had to pray about it. Mordecai and all the Jews outside in Shushan fasted and cried unto the Lord. Unbelievers enquire, 'What difference could prayer make?' My brethren, prayer is an essential part of the providence of God, so essential, that you will always find that when God delivers His people, His people have been praying for that deliverance. They tell us that prayer does not affect the Most High, and cannot alter His purposes. We never thought it did; but prayer is a part of the purpose and plan, and a most effective wheel in the machinery of providence. The Lord sets His people praying, and then He blesses them. Moreover, Mordecai was quite sure the Lord would deliver His people, and he expressed that confidence, but he did not, therefore, sit still: he stirred up Esther, and when she seemed a little slack, he put it very strongly, 'If thou altogether holdest thy peace at this time, then enlargement and deliverance will arise from another place, but thou and thy father's house shall be destroyed.' Nerved by this message, Esther braced herself to the effort. She did not sit still and say, 'The Lord will arrange this business, there is nothing for me to do,' but she both pleaded with God, and ventured her life and her all for her people's sake, and then acted very wisely and discreetly in her interviews with the king. So, my brethren, we rest confidently in Providence, but we are not idle. We believe that God has an elect people, and therefore do we preach in the hope that we may be the means, in the hands of His Spirit, of bringing this elect people to Christ. We believe that God has appointed for His people both holiness here, and heaven afterwards; therefore do we strive against sin, and press forward to the rest which remaineth for the people of God."

It is a matter of serious moment for us to know and reflect, that we exist as a nation, and as Christian people belonging to that nation, for one purpose—namely, that appointed as His people to carry Christ and salvation to the ends of the earth, we should strive hard to fulfil our destiny, and so conduce to God's glory. "He so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." The missionary promulgators of this good news are the sons of God, "Ephraim-Israel," according to Hosea i. 10, and it is a serious thing to allege that the preachers of the Word are indifferent as to their commission to preach, or that when it is in question, they manifestly despise their birthright by asking with contempt "What is the good of this thing?" and wherewith will it benefit us if we believe and announce it? Hitherto it is true we have done something in the home and foreign mission fields in ignorance of Our Identity with Israel, and the question is asked, why, if the work was well done before in ignorance, is there any need now for this knowledge, or our active propagation of it? The true reply is that foreign missions are in their infancy, and some large constraining motive is needed now to force men to see their duty nationally in this matter. Our Identity supplies this motive, and if acted on by the empire at large, would furnish a reason for the foreign missionary enterprise, such as we have not had yet brought to bear upon the masses. Besides, God's plans and purposes for the salvation of the world are being matured; and it is to His glory that His faithfulness to His oaths and covenants with Abraham should be made known in these "the latter days," whereby that salvation was promised to the nations of the earth by the agency of the afterseed of the patriarch. Let each of us then strive earnestly to promote this cause, remembering that the salvation of all the nations is bound up in it, to God's praise and glory.

THE BRITISH-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

A LETTER signed "C. P.," which we publish in another column, brings before us an important subject. Our friends on the Committee of the British-Israel Association consider that, editorially, too little BANNER notice is taken of their proceedings, that we fail to urge our readers generally to join that body. We fear there is some truth in these remarks, and that we have too long refrained from calling on our readers to enrol themselves as members of the highly useful and painstaking Society, which is working for the cause in London; a society to which we also belong. We have left the matter rather in the hands of the secretary, the Rev. F. Aston, whose monthly notices have given us continual intimation of the proceedings of our London friends, and left little or nothing for us to urge in the matter of detail. There is one fact however, which is greatly to be regretted—namely, that in spite of all their efforts the membership of the British-Israel Association does not seem to increase. There are hundreds of believers throughout the country, as Mr. Aston observes, who belong to no organization, but whose interest and help would be invaluable to the British-Israel Association. How are these persons to be gained? That they exist outside our body there can be no doubt. A friend, writing to us independently, says, "that to her knowledge there is very much work going on, unknown to the Association. Many people are making themselves associations to their friends and neighbourhood.' Our correspondent describes the process in her own case. In 1887 she was herself first induced to read a BANNER by a promise exacted by one of these self-constituted workers, and it ended not only in the conversion to our views of the lady herself, but of all her family. The father yielded the last, and only acknowledged belief in 1892. During the last four years, this one family of converts has interested 70 others, now believers, and of these 70, only 19 had the good news from sources outside her own family. It appears clear that this expanding circle of believers, and enthusiastic believers, are content to remain so without joining a central body like the British-Israel Association; and the problem is, what can be done to induce such to become paying members of a society which is actively at work on a large scale? We can personally do no more than place the matter before our readers, and urge them, if they have not yet joined the British-Israel Association, to do so at once, and send their names to the Secretary, at 86, St. Martin's-lane, E.C. "Union is strength," and it is a sheer waste of strength to work individually for the publication of the Identity, neglecting at the same time those larger and more powerful means which the British-Israel Association has at its command for the publication of these truths

In reference to "C. P.'s" quotation from some Bristol resident's reply, that he knew several of the Vice-Presidents of the British-Israel Association there, but that "none of them had ever named the subject to him," we cannot offer any explanation without some clue to the speaker. We hold it to be unwise to thrust identity proofs before unwilling or indifferent minds, but where an opportunity is offered, we have followed the practice of presenting the good news, with such of the literature as may be acceptable, for the consideration of the inquirer. We are glad to be assured by one of our friends that "the BANNER is always popular!" For this we are grateful; but we should be rejoiced if our friends, who esteem the BANNER, would gives its Editor the satisfaction of knowing that his recommendation in regard to enrolment and subscription, has been largely complied with.

Digitized by Google

ANOTHER DEATH BLOW TO THE IDENTITY.

OUR subject is evidently reviving in interest to the public. Our opponents are waking up, and are sending shaft after shaft at us in hopes of quenching the most glorious prospect of blessings any nation ever could entertain, or ever expect to enjoy from the hand of God. On the present occasion we have to deal with the objections of the Rev. A. B. C., of The Church, whose rather strange argument is, that the prophecy of Ezek. xlviii., regarding the tribal, yet future, division of the land of Israel's inheritance, is the final "death-blow to the Anglo-Israel theory." He says, in a letter now before us, that in that chapter "we find that the land promised to Israel is accurately portioned out among the tribes, every tribe having its separate tract of land duly assigned to it, the intention evidently being that when the Lord will bring Israel again that He may sit as their Prince upon the throne of David, the Twelve Tribes shall enjoy separately and distinctly, and yet in happy union, the vast territory (? the whole peninsula of Arabia!) which, according to God's promise shall be theirs (comp. Gen. xv. 18; Deut. xi. 24; Ezek. xlvii. 17, 21), as a matter of necessity, if the Twelve Tribes are to be thus found distinct one from another, so that when our Lord comes they may be separately made the occupants of their appointed territories, then, they must be separate one from another now, and, moreover, must have been so from the beginning. They cannot possibly be all swallowed up in the Anglo-Saxon Race, which itself cannot be discerned as such, for it is composed of Normans, Danes, Celts, and tribes and nationalities, nearly innumerable, besides Saxons. A certain sprinkling of the Israelite blood may be found also amongst us, and probably there is hardly a nation, except some very remote, of which we 'Anglo-Saxons' are not in certain measure composed. A conglomerate 'Ephraim' cannot again be divided into the Ten Tribes. But the whole twelve are to be found absolutely separate, one from another, that they may be separately placed in their portions of the promised land. Therefore, it is absolutely certain (to my mind at least) that the Anglo-Israelite theory cannot hold good." He added that the above "little argument, which he had used for many years against the Anglo-Israelite theory, and never heard answered, is conclusive." "He cannot hold with it, nor consent to such a lowering of our standing in Christ."

Such is this new argument advanced by a clergyman of the Church of England! It amounts to this. A people who are destined to occupy Palestine as tribes in future, cannot, even by the power of God, be separated into tribes, if at the present moment they are mingled and their tribal constitution is for any reason held in abeyance.

With equal reason might our clerical friend tell us that the human race now dead, and mingled in the grave, can never more be restored to their individual personality because no power can effect such a miraculous restoration, as far as our clergyman's experience goes! He will hardly carry his argument so far as that! but his objection to Our Identity is equally futile, and equally dishonouring to God! He denies that the British can be Israel, because Israel is to be restored to the land as tribes, and the political condition of the British is not such to-day. He admits, however, that the Ten Tribes are to be restored; and in tribal condition. Therefore, it stands to reason they are existing somewhere to-day, and, according to Mr. A. B. C., as separate tribes. In what part of the world can such a people be found, organised as ten separate tribes? Our opponent should point them out. The burden of the discovery is his. Let him tell us where they are! He cannot! and his argument falls in ruins to the ground when it is shown from the Scriptures that the people (the sacred and miraculous people) of Ephraim-Israel were actually destined by God Himself to be mingled with all the nations of the earth, and that their individuality was never to be lost. Amos ix. 9, is to this effect: "For lo! I will command, and I will sift (or cause to move to and fro) the House of Israel among ALL the nations, like as corn is sifted in a sieve, yet shall not the least grain fall upon the earth." The same truth is set forth in Ezek. xi. 16, 17.

If God could and will remove Israel individually from the nations after they have mingled among them, cannot He be credited with the power to restore them, or some of them, to their tribal formations, after a long period of political combination as two Houses? That He will restore them as tribes Ezek. xlviii. proves. That their tribal formation was to be previously lost for a long period of time is apparent from Hosea iii. and the other texts we have quoted above. Here, then, is the very thing described as a matter God will certainly perform, which Mr. A. B. C., in his wisdom, tells us cannot be done in respect to the British people, on account of its inherent impossibility! Our friend must learn that with God there is nothing impossible (Gen. xviii. 14; Jer. xxxii. 17, 27; Luke i. 37), and that the restoration of Israel and Judah together, is a matter God will Himself carry out by His own Almighty power (Ezek. xxxvii. 15—28; Jer. iii. 18, xxxi. 15—17, xxxii. 41). The two Houses of Israel will set out to return as Houses; but their settlement in the land shall be by tribes! God's Word says that in Jer. iii. 18, and Ezek. xlviii., and it will require more than many clergymen like Mr. A. B. C. can advance, to induce us to put aside such solemn precise declarations of the living God, as those we have just quoted, upon the point.

"ALIKE for the philosopher and the statistician the Registrar-General's returns are always full of curious and suggestive material. In the newest available figures, for instance, there is a striking statement about the fecundity of the Jews in England. That race marries with such extraordinary diligence that 'the proportion of Jews in the population of this country has more than doubled in the last twenty years,' without counting immigration. The Jews are, therefore, becoming a more and more important factor in the population."—St. James's Gazette, Jan. 21, 1893. Does this not look as if this may be one of the natural circumstances our Master may overrule for the bringing about Israel's appointed task of carrying back Judah to Palestine? This extraordinary increase of Jews may necessitate the clearing out of our brethren from this island, which is not of unlimited size, and settling them elsewhere.—L. P.

Digitized by Google

RANDOM SHAFTS.

LIGHT is the friend of Truth. Infidel arguments against the Bible on the ground of its historical or geographical allusions are notoriously feeble, and every volume of Oriental research that issues from the press makes them feebler. In the same way the objections of our opponents are often amusing, and every book or treatise that happens to touch these objections makes them more and more amusing. For instance, there is no commoner assertion than this: that if we were Israelites we could not have forgotten our Hebrew speech; and as we talk in an Aryan language we must be an Aryan race. The sagest of sages—men with a string of words before their name, and a string of letters after it—have doled out this absurdity. The fallacy of it has been so frequently and thoroughly exposed that one might well despair of being able to say anything new or adduce anything fresh on the subject. But the journal of Dr. Parke, who accompanied the last Stanley expedition, seems to supply a further ray of light, and, as observed in my preface, light is friendly to truth.

***

The doctor relates in his "Personal Experiences" how he and his companions camped at Fort Bodo for a while, and writes:—"Having now had to speak Kiswahili for so long a time, we have come to forget many of our ordinary English words, and are often actually confused about the names of things when we are talking among ourselves. To-day there was a competition between Nelson and myself as to who could remember the name 'egg' first—pointing at the article." The phrase, "so long a time," is assuredly a pungent comment on the effusions of the learned professors who deride the Identity because we fail to converse in Hebrew. If a few month's contact with the heathen is sufficient to obscure a man's recollection of the language in which he has been educated, it would be instructive to know what a thousand years would do. I have not gone into it, not being good at figures, but it is a calculation that ought to have attractions for the scientific mind.

***

There were two expressions of opinion in the New Year's number of the BANNER, which if correct, are full of encouragement to Israelites, and perhaps, therefore, no apology will be demanded if I take the liberty of referring to them for the purpose of verifying their soundness. It might indeed be of service if all who can do this would do so. The first was made by our friend Mr. Roe, who stated that the Identity would lead to the healing of our Church divisions. This is a gigantic task. Christians are inclined to be religious in everything except religion, and our opponents may laugh at Mr. Roe's prediction, but it will not be denied by those who are familiar with facts. The platform of a Metropolitan Association Meeting is an indication of what the Identity will accomplish, and the same fellowship is to be seen wherever the Cause has found its way. All sorts and conditions of Christians are brought into harmony and sympathy by its magic influence. I might mention a case in point. An address was given on Our Identity. It was delivered in a Methodist Chapel; the lecturer was a vicar; the chairman was a Presbyterian; Congregationalists, Plymouth Brethren, and Episcopalians, were among the supporters; and, as a climax, the collection was for the cleaning of the building. It is rare that a clergyman ventures inside a Methodist chapel, and still less is he in the habit of lecturing on behalf of the whitewashing. But the Identity is a wonderful cementer, and it will certainly unite the broken Church for it has done so already in miniature.

***

Our able champion, Mr. Aston, is responsible for the second statement. In his monthly report he declared that a change had come over the public in their attitude towards the Identity, and that the view was making great progress. My own more limited observation entirely agrees with this. The audience composed of chilling indifference, pitying contempt, and dogged refusal to yield, is the exception now, not the rule. People do not now repair to an Anglo-Israel lecture with the intention of hearing an escaped lunatic, and they have ceased to imagine that the Identity can be upset by a little chatter. If I were asked to analyse the situation, I should have to say that, in a large measure, a wish to believe it has taken the place of a determination not to believe it, but that preconceptions on history, &c., cannot be surmounted. It may be that our arguments are better understood, or it may be that the incessant expansion and extraordinary position of the empire are driving the truth home; but, whatever the reason, the result is most manifest.

***

The "Anglo-Israel Almanack" is at its best this year. Besides much valuable printed matter, it has four portraits, the frontispiece being a likeness of Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, which will render it acceptable far beyond Identity circles. This is a fine engraving, and every admirer of Mr. Pearse ought to have it. We cannot, I think, do better than give away an almanack or two. The articles are numerous; they are varied; they are not too lengthy; and if they should not be relished by the person who receives it, the other features,—its calendar and general intelligence,—may preserve it from the fire. A pamphlet is liable to be quickly shelved, whereas an almanack has a chance of living for twelve months. But where is the sheet almanack for which entreaty was made a year ago? Useful as the book-almanack is, a broad-sheet would be more so. A sheet-almanack both teaches and advertises, and we cannot afford to do without it.

***

At the end of the Almanack there is an item which affords an interesting study,—a roll of the Identification Associations scattered up and down the world. It is satisfactory to see so many societies in the field, and it is unsatisfactory to see so few. This may look like a paradox, but truth is often paradoxical. The list proves that our subject has rooted itself throughout the country, which is befitting; but the number of Associations is small to what it ought to be and might be. Messrs. Banks are presenting a series of maps to the readers of the BANNER, and if they were to favour us with an Identity Map of Great Britain on the model of election maps—marking in red those towns which can boast of an Anglo-Israel organization, and putting the rest in blue—it would probably arouse Israelites from their sleep.

***

Such a chart would display astonishing blanks. Taking the extensive stretch from Leeds to Edinburgh, there is but a single Association intervening—the Newcastle one. What can this mean? Are there no adherents in York, Whitby, Scarborough, Darlington, Hartlepool, Durham, Sunderland, Carlisle, Morpeth, or Berwick? And going South, are there none in Reading, Dover, Southampton. Plymouth, Falmouth, Truro, Cardiff, Winchester, or Maidstone? It is impossible to believe this, but there is evidently no union or exertion in these districts. I fear we are too prone to reflect that the Identity is God's work, and that He will hasten it in His time. This bears a strong resemblance to the logic of our opponents, and if it is valid —if God's work needs no help from us—we had better discontinue the BANNER, and devote our energies to something which is not God's work, as the latter is clearly the only kind of work that should give us any anxiety.

Digitized by Google

JOHN SHOOTINGHAM.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—Will you allow me space for a few words on a subject often touched on in your valuable paper—viz., how to increase our numbers. A few weeks since you gave a list of dates and places where the Rev. F. Aston would hold lectures. From this list we have chosen one place and "hunted up" and sent notices to all the friends or "friend's friends" we know in that place, telling them of the meeting, begging them to go, and to tell everyone they could to go also. If others will do this, and the Rev. F. Aston will give a timely notice of his month's engagements in the BANNER, the subject would be better ventilated than it is. If, to the list, the name and address of the person arranging the meeting could be added, so much the better. Names of friends in the place could be sent to this person, and notices would be given them on the spot. There does not seem to be sufficient bringing forward of the truth in daily intercourse with friends. If it is a proof of God's love and fidelity in the past, surely we may bring it forward as a pledge that he will be the same "to-day and for ever" that He was "yesterday"?

Do not let us assume that people will not be interested in it. A visitor staying here lately, looking down the list of vice-presidents at the end of the "Handbook," remarked, "Why, I know five or six of those men, and live in Bristol, but they have never mentioned the subject to me! I hardly know what you refer to." Again, Mr. "Mark Levy," mentioned in the last BANNER (Jan. 18, page 43), is neither "not prepared to accept the Identity," nor is "the idea foolishness to him." In return for his late circular—alluded to—he willingly accepted papers on the Identity, and would rejoice to prove it true. He writes he has since met Dr. H. Alder-Smith, and is reading all the latest books on the subject.

Perhaps the "order of (the) Bath," which "John Shootingham" has told us of, may make some less afraid of drawing people's attention to the subject, and their courage be rewarded by finding how many will thank them for fuller knowledge of a truth which is spreading daily. Hoping that both these suggestions may work to the glory of God,

I remain, yours very faithfully, C. P.

Salisbury, Jan. 20, 1893.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—The "Chovevi Zion" advertisement in No. 803, Vol. XVI. of the BANNER has put a thought into my head. Briefly, it is something like this. Israel was to be "known by another name," after their removal from Palestine. Judah retains the political and tribal name. Prior to the restoration to Palestine, Judah will "walk to Israel." Now the question is, Will Judah recognise Israel under her new name, or will the re-occupation of the land be accomplished in blind ignorance or unbelief on the part of the majority of both Houses? Is there any reason to suppose that Israel will resume her original name, or will the new name be perpetuated in that land? I incline to the latter opinion, but should be glad if an able Identist would investigate the question and give your readers, myself included, the benefit of his research.—I am, &c.,

J. W. BRAME.

Opunake, New Zealand, Aug. 6, 1892.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

SIR,—Referring to the hints given under head "Presentation," in the BANNER, of Nov. 30th, in Primrose League Habitations it is the rule to charge entrance-fee, say 6d. to 1s., according to rank of associate, for which they must receive a badge (brooch, or stud, or pin), value 3d. or 4d. Now, why cannot we have a simple cheap badge, say Roman I's crossed, which would form a St. Andrew's cross, and which each member should have given them when entrance-fee was paid? I feel sure many would join.

PRIMROSE DAME.

Nov. 30, 1892.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

ANOTHER confirmation of the fact that the British are the chosen people of God, appears in to-day's Standard as follows:—

"Experiments recently made in the Italian Navy with German coal, have not given the results that were anticipated, either as regards quality, or from the point of view of economy. The supplies will, therefore, henceforth be ordered chiefly in England, as hitherto." Further comment is unnecessary.

JOHN S. ANDERSON.

Croydon, Dec. 23, 1892.

HARD UPON THE COMMENTATORS.

BY REV. E. BRENTNALL, M.A.

I KNOW a great many people have an idea that the one way to become a successful teacher, preacher, tract-distributor, temperance orator, or anything else, is by becoming a collector of commentaries and magazines, &c. They think these contain all the wisdom and learning of the ages, no matter what the commentary may be, and their business is to retail as much of this as possible. The chief blessing that can come to such is to leave them alone to find out their mistake for themselves.

The fact is, commentary-making has just now become a grand money-making concern, and the world is being deluged with square miles of such literature. A man has only to fail in every other department of life, to seek next the editorship of some fine, healthy-looking, portly commentary. Whereas, the works of that sort that may be read and studied to advantage are few.

"BELIEVING in the authority of the Lord's-day as a religious institution," says Mr. Gladstone, "I must, as a matter of course, desire the recognition of that authority by others. But over and above this, I have myself, in the course of a laborious life, signally experienced both its mental and its physical benefits. I can hardly overstate its value, and for the interest of the working men of this country, there is nothing I more anxiously desire than that they should more and more highly appreciate the Christian day of rest."

HOOKER ON LITERAL INTERPRETATION OF SCRIPTURE.—I hold it for a most infallible rule in Expositions of Sacred Scripture that where a literal construction will stand, the farthest from the letter is commonly the worst. There is nothing more dangerous than this licentious and deluding art, which changeth the meaning of words, as alchemy doth or would do the substance of metals, making of anything what it listeth; and bringeth in the end all truth to nothing.—Eccles. Polity, B. V., sec. 59.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed "PHILO-ISRAEL," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION for the BANNER OF ISRAEL, in Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts. To any part of the United Kingdom, Canada, America, or Europe, in the postal union:—

	s.	d.		s.	d.
copy, including postage	.. 7	0	Tasmania ..	.. 7	0
New Zealand	.. 7	0	South Australia	.. 7	0
Cape Colony	.. 7	0	Queensland	.. 7	0
Victoria ..	.. 7	0	Natal	.. 7	0
Western Australia	.. 7	0	New South Wales	.. 7	0
Transvaal ..	.. 7	0	India ..	7	0
			Ceylon, via Brindisi ..	7	0

All Post Office Orders, Cheques, &c., should be crossed "City Bank, Ludgate-hill, to the ac. of ROBERT BANKS AND SON." They will then only be paid to our account.

READING CASES for holding the Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts, may be had, price 2s. Sent post free on receipt of Postal Order.

THE ANNUAL VOLUMES, bound in handsome blue cloth, price 8s.

THE MONTHLY PARTS, in tinted wrapper, published the last day of each month, 6d.

CONTRIBUTIONS TOWARDS the FREE DISTRIBUTION of the NEW YEAR'S DOUBLE NUMBER of the "BANNER OF ISRAEL," received since February 2.

Many friends have also sent remittances for sending copies to addresses given. These have been sent as directed, and are not included in this List.

	£	s.	d.
C. F. Thorndike, Esq. ...	0	7	11
Elementary Teacher ...	0	2	0

NOW READY.
HANDSOME BLUE CLOTH
CASES FOR BINDING.
Price 1s. 6d., or post free, 1s. 8d.

VOLUME XVI. OF THE BANNER OF ISRAEL,
Price 8s. Sent Post Free.
ROBERT BANKS AND SON, Racquet-ct., Fleet-st., E.C

THIRD EDITION NOW READY.
With 38 Additional Pages.

Paper Cover, Price 1s. nett., postage 2d. extra
Limp Boards, lettered, 1s. 6d., postage 2d. extra.
Cloth boards, gilt lettered, thick toned paper 2s., postage 3d. extra.

BRITISH-ISRAEL TRUTH

A Handbook for Enquirers.
EDITED BY
REV. DENIS HANAN, M.A., D.D.,
AND
H. ALDER-SMITH, M.B., F.R.C.S.
WITH A CHART AND MAP.

Published by the Authority of the BRITISH-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION, (Metropolitan, Provincial and Colonial.)

"British-Israel Truth." Edited by the Rev. Denis Hanan and H. Alder-Smith (R. Banks & Son.)—The sale of the first edition of this work, and the consequent issue of a second, shows that there is a growing interest in the study of the questions of the Israelitish origin of the English speaking people. Clever, interesting, pathetic, and showing considerable research, the volume has been a success and doubtless has made some converts – THE ROCK.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C

"I am delighted with this."—PHILO-ISRAEL.
NEW AND IMPROVED EDITION OF

ISRAEL'S WORLD,

By Rev. HENRY ROE. 2d.

Also "Consecration," 2d., "Going to Africa," 1s.; "West African Scenes," 2s.; "Fernando Po Mission," 1s. Also "Israel's World" and "Consecration" bound together in cloth, with Author's latest photograph portrait, 1s.

Order of ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C., or of Rev. HENRY ROE, Radstock, via Bath.

"A WONDERFUL REMEDY."
"I WAS GIVEN UP BY ALL."
"SAVED FROM AN EARLY GRAVE."

Such are the words of grateful Patients relative to their CASES OF

CONSUMPTION

CURED BY THE TREATMENT OF

MR. GEO. T. CONGREVE.

Read his Book, "ON CONSUMPTION, &c." which may be had post free for ONE SHILLING from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.; or may be ordered of any Bookseller.

NOTE.—CONSULTATIONS FREE at Coombe Lodge, Peckham, on TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings only. No Charge except the usual charge for three weeks or six weeks' supply of medicine. All Patients should read the book first.

Just ready, 220 Large Post 8vo. pages, in clear, readable type, price 2s. 6d., limp cloth, gilt lettered, red edges, post free to any part of the world on receipt of postal remittance.

Nineteen Centuries Ago and NOW.

BY J. C. H. MEHL.
WITH BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH,
BY E. M. RUSH.

CONTENTS.—Biographical Sketch—Nineteen Centuries Ago and Now—Letter to the Editor of the Banner of Israel—A German's Views on Our Identity—The Church of England—The Woman Arrayed with the Sun (Rev. xii.)—"Remember the Sabbath Day to Keep It Holy"—"Blessed are the Meek, for They Shall Inherit the Earth"—The Spirit of Negation, and the Spirit of Prayer—"Righteousness Exalteth a Nation"—"The Dispersion Among the Greeks"—The Protracted Era of Grace—"The Power of the Holy People"—The Present Aspect of the Kingdom of Heaven—One, and Yet Many—A Great Truth Slow in its Progress—A Two-fold Alienation—On Co-operating with the Divine Purpose—A Lamp Shining in a Dark Place (2 Pet. i. 19)—Was St. Patrick an Israelite, and Was He Aware of It?

LONDON:
ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.
or by order of any Bookseller.

FREEMAN'S ORIGINAL CHLORODYNE.

THIS valuable medicine, discovered and invented by Mr. RICHARD FREEMAN in 1844, introduced into India and Egypt in 1850, and subsequently all over the world, maintains its supremacy as a special and specific Remedy for the Treatment and Cure of Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Cancer, Bronchitis, Asthma, Ague, Sore Throat, Influenza, Neuralgia, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Asiatic Cholera, Colic, Gout, and all Fevers.

At 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 20s. per bottle.

Sold by Patent Medicine Dealers in all parts of the world.

N.B. Lord Chancellor Selborne, Lord Justice James, and Lord Justice Mellish, decided in favour of FREEMAN'S ORIGINAL CHLORODYNE, against Brown and Davenport, compelling them to pay all costs in the suit.—See Times of July 24, 1873.

No. 26.—Price 1s. per 100, 8s. 6d. per 1,000.

THOUGHTS FOR THE BRITISH FOLK.

SUGGESTED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

OUR ISRAELITE MINERS.

London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C.

"THE WORLD'S PROVED REMEDY FOR ALL CHEST DISEASES."

COUGH, ASTHMA,

CHRONIC BRONCHITIS,

INFLUENZA,

THERE IS NONE TO EQUAL IT.

Rev. F. E. HEAPE, of DERBY, in a recent letter, says: "Your Medicine always puts my lungs right, and drove out the terrible INFLUENZA last May."

This Medicine has been prepared for 65 years.

CONGREVE'S BALSAMIC ELIXIR.

In Bottles, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 22s., may be had of all Chemists and Medicine Vendors.

TEA! TEA! TEA!

FROM

INDIA, CEYLON, AND CHINA.

Best Quality and Best Value.

From 1/6 to 3/6 per lb. Samples Gratis.

Carriage Paid on Parcels of 6lbs. and upwards

Robinson & James,
42, TRINITY SQUARE, TOWER HILL, LONDON, E.C.

TOOTH-ACHE

CURED INSTANTLY BY

BUNTER'S NERVINE

Prevents Decay, Saves Extraction, Sleepless Nights Prevented.

Neuralgic Headaches and all Nerve Pains removed by BUNTER'S NERVINE. All Chemists, 1s. 1½d.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT

FOR

PARALYSIS

J. FULLER, Jun., Esq., Whiteparish, Salisbury, Wilts, writes:—"Since wearing your Electropathic Belt I am decidedly better and stronger. I have more confidence in myself, and the pain in my back is completely gone. Your Belt is truly wonderful."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST., LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

Digitized by Google

LUNG SAVE YOUR LIVES BY TAKING TONIC
LUNG OWBRIDGE'S TONIC
LUNG LUNG TONIC TONIC
LUNG THE MIGHTY HEALER. TONIC
LUNG It has a power over disease hitherto unknown in Medicine. TONIC
LUNG Are you at all Weak-chested or inclined to be Consumptive, with just a touch of Cough now and then? TONIC
LUNG "Try this Wonderful Medicine." The Cough and Weakness will disappear as if by magic, and you will feel a strength and power you never had before. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COUGH? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COLD? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL REMOVE IT! TONIC
LUNG Bronchitis & Asthma it relieves instantly TONIC
LUNG The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful in Whooping Cough become less with each dose of the medicine. TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE Chemist Hull TONIC
LUNG Sold in bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. and 11s., by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors. Wholesale all London and Provincial Houses. TONIC

The True and Divine Appointment for the Cure of Disease.
Send to
B. V. SCOTT, M.B.M.R.S.,
College of Health, 121, Kensington, Liverpool,
for his
VOICE OF NATURE TO THE INVALID,
Post free 5 stamps.

Thousands of incurables (so-called) have proved God's own means could save when others failed.

Rev. F. Harper says of Mr. Scott's book: "It is a library in itself, and free from quackery."

Rev. Lush says: "Mr. Scott's treatment is natural, safe, reasonable, and Scriptural."

Send for the Book at once.

PAGE WOODCOCK'S
WIND PILLS

A CLERGYMAN

Writes: "I am so convinced from my own experience and that of others of the real value of your WIND PILLS, in complaints arising from a disordered state of the STOMACH, BOWELS, or LIVER, that I wish much to promote the use of the Medicine in this parish, and I now inclose P.O. for a large box, and should be glad of some papers for circulation among my parishioners. In my own case

Page Woodcock's Wind Pills

have been of the greatest use. I have no objection to your publishing my communication, provided you divulge not my name and address, which you may give, nevertheless, to those who require such a verification."—Vicarage, near Malvern.

All Sufferers from INDIGESTION, LIVER COMPLAINTS, WIND on the STOMACH, COSTIVENESS, SICK HEADACHE, HEARTBURN, PALPITATION of the HEART, BILIOUSNESS, &c.,

should avail themselves of this most excellent medicine.

☞ The WIND PILLS being PURELY VEGETABLE, TASTELESS, and MILD and TONIC in their action, may be taken with perfect safety by the most delicate of either sex.

Of all Chemists, at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d., or Post Free for P.O. or Stamps, from PAGE WOODCOCK, LINCOLN.

NEW CATALOGUE of Works on Our Identity post free from R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

GIGANTIC SALE OF

100 COLOURS TO SELECT FROM

In consequence of the mild season, we have still in stock over 250,000 DRESS LENGTHS of our famous Cloths which, in order to effect a rapid clearance we have reduced to less than Manufacturers' Cost Price. 100 lovely new colours to select from. All goods are new and in perfect condition. We will gladly send patterns post free, and they need not be returned. Write to-day for patterns and Sale Price List
FULL DRESS LENGTHS OF MAGNIFICENT CLOTHS 9s.6d. CARRIAGE PAID.

GREATEST BARGAINS EVER OFFERED

LADIES CLOTH DRESSES

GENUINE REDUCTIONS! WRITE FOR PATTERNS

LUTAS LEATHLEY & Co ARMLEY, LEEDS.

BE SURE TO CUT

10,000 RUGS GIVEN AWAY.

IT MAY THIS OUT.

THIS PHENOMENAL OFFER is made to the Readers of this Journal only. On receipt of this advertisement, accompanied by Postal Order for 6/-, or 74 stamps, we will forward DIRECT FROM OUR LOOMS to your address, one of our genuine SEAMLESS WOVEN REVERSIBLE CARPETS, suitable for Drawing-room, Dining-room, Bedroom, &c., handsomely bordered and woven in 30 different patterns and art colourings to suit all requirements, and LARGE ENOUGH TO COVER ANY ORDINARY SIZED ROOM. These carpets are manufactured from a material equal in wear to wool, and are undoubtedly the cheapest in the world.

With every Carpet we shall ABSOLUTELY GIVE AWAY a very handsome RUG to match, or we will send 2 CARPETS and 2 RUGS for 10/6

The Queen says: "Decidedly stouter and handsomer than any of the kind, the price being the astounding part of the matter." Schoolmistress: "For style, durability, and cheapness, they cannot be beaten." Penny Illustrated Paper: "Manufactured in every variety of colour, and is one of the most surprising bargains I have seen." Church Bells: "Truly wonderful value."
Thousands of Testimonials similar to the following, & Repeat Orders, have been received from our Customers:
GENT, 14, London-street, Folkestone.
The Carpet I bought of you last year wears well and gives every satisfaction. One which has been in use for years is as strong and keeps its colour as well as ever.—J. ASHTELL.
This offer is made to the Readers of this Paper only, and will not be repeated. All Orders despatched same day as received. Cheques and Postal Orders to be crossed "Union Bank." Address—

THE BRITISH CARPET WEAVING COMPANY,
31, OLD STREET, LONDON, E.C.

NOT APPEAR AGAIN.

New Pamphlet Just Issued, price 3d., by post 3½d.; one dozen, post free, 3s.

Every Anglo-Israelite should read

ISRAEL A CHRISTIAN NATION AT THE PRESENT DAY.

By COL. WM. CAREY, C.B.

London: ROBERT BANKS AND SON, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, or by order of any Bookseller.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument Proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100, postage 1d.
R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

TEETH.—£1 A FULL SET

ESKELL'S.—CELEBRATED MAKE, £2 2s. Warranted and fitted in one visit. No extractions needed. HALF A MILLION SETS already supplied. The Nursing Record and Hospital World says:—We recommend all who require Reliable and Good Teeth at a small cost to go to Messrs. ESKELL, 445, Strand (facing Charing Cross Station), and 58, Ludgate Hill, City, London. Also at 27, Western Road, Brighton, and 23, Mount Pleasant, Tunbridge Wells. Hours 9 till 7. Illustrated Pamphlets, explaining everything, free. Established 100 years.

The Fulness of the Nations; or, the A B C of the Promises Given to the House of Israel Considered in Relation to the Second Advent. By Dr. H. ALDER-SMITH. Cloth gilt, price 5s.

The Lost Ten Tribes of Israel. By the Rev. JOSEPH WILD, D.D., Pastor of Bond-street Congregational Church, Toronto. Price 3s.
London: R. BANKS & SON Racquet-court, E.C.

PHOSPHORUS

A new process of preparing this necessary food for the Brain and Nervous System, invented by Mr. Samuel Birley, M.D., renders its therapeutic value superior to all the Phosphates, Hypophosphites, &c., usually prescribed. May be taken for years with perfect safety! Descriptive pamphlet free to enquirers mentioning this paper, from

GORDON, MURRAY & Co., Ltd.
10, ADAM STREET, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co. (Ltd.) 23, Paternoster-row. Wednesday, FEBRUARY 8, 1893. All Rights Reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India).

"And the Remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a Lion among the beasts of the forest, as a Young Lion among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—Micah v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the Horns of Unicorns: with them he shall push the people together to the ends of the earth."—Deut. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

Vol. XVII., No. 842. Entered at Stationer's Hall.] WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1893. [Price One Penny.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	Page
Reinforcement of the British Troops in Egypt	85
Early Britain. By F. Gass. Part I.	86
A Popular View of Daniel's Metallic Image	87
Doing Israel's Work and Sketching Israel's Destiny	89
Anglo-Israelism	90
Mr. Alfred Milner's "England in Egypt." By E. Reep	91
Rule Britannia. By H. R. Shaw	92
"Let There Be Light."	93
Correspondence	94

REINFORCEMENT OF THE BRITISH TROOPS IN EGYPT.

A very small and apologetic notice appeared in the papers of January 24, 1893, to this effect: "Her Majesty's Government have determined, in view of recent occurrences which threatened to disturb public security in Egypt, to make a slight increase in the number of British troops stationed in that country." Where "a slight increase" can be made, a larger can be effected at will, and therefore we look on the announcement as a sort of apology to Europe, for the necessity which has arisen; but a proclamation, all the same, that we are in Egypt governing it well, and that we mean to stay. Different conduct was expected from the Gladstone Government, which is liberating the dynamite convicts, and would surely, it was thought, on the first threat of dissatisfaction be prepared to loosen but not tighten our nation's grasp upon the land of Egypt. God rules, however, and He has decided now, as He did before, that Egypt cannot stand alone, but must exist and prosper leaning on the strength of Israel His chosen, to whom He gave the land in 1882. The Times clearly expounds the action of the Government in the matter of the troops, and says it means this:—

The Khedive has plenty of accessible advisers, who can tell him exactly what is the meaning of a slight increase in the number of British troops stationed in Egypt. Riaz Pasha is much too able a man to remain for an instant in doubt upon that point. He will understand at once that we mean to maintain our authority and not to suffer any tampering with the reforms we are carrying out. He has signalized his return to power by the issue of a circular which embodies I is well-known views about internal administration, but tempers them with a politic recognition of the institutions we have established. He strengthens the authority of the provincial Governors, and instructs the police and sanitary and irrigation officials to regard these Governors as their proper chiefs. This looks very pretty upon paper, but in practice it would mean the withdrawal from the mass of the fellaheen of existing safeguards against injustice. Irrigation is a matter of life and death in Egypt, and is managed by Europeans because they alone can be trusted to dispense the water without fear or favour. To put them under the orders of the native Governors would tend to bring back the good old days when the local Pasha could steal the water of all his poorer neighbours, and at one stroke enrich himself and secure cheap labour from starved-out peasants. That side of the Premier's circular is for the benefit of the Khedive and the native cliques now trying to seize upon power. But there is a saving clause. Riaz also enjoins respect for the Courts of justice, which are under English supervision and are a serious obstacle in the way of a return to the good old Oriental methods. Thus, like a wise man, he has made himself safe in either event. If the Khedive were to get his way, very little more would be heard about respect for the Courts of justice. As there is to be a slight increase in the number of British troops, the police and sanitary and irrigation officials will not be called upon to suffer much interference on the part of provincial Governors. There is a "flexibility of adaptation" about Riaz Pasha and his circular which that energetic administrator has hitherto not generally displayed.

* * * * *

In this way it may happen that further measures will be necessary to bring the Khedive to a proper sense of the situation. But whatever measures are necessary will be taken, and however slow the Khedive may be to learn his lesson, he will have to learn it. The lesson chiefly consists in finding out that he has not nearly so much power as he imagines himself to have at present, and that, with his good will or without it, means must be found to consult the real interests of the Egyptian people, and to carry on the work we have in hand.

On the whole it is well that the late crisis should have taken place in Egypt. It has given the needful hint to the people of this country that God means it to be held in furtherance of His purposes, as revealed in the prophecies respecting the restoration of the Tribes. It will be seen by those who reflect, that Egypt in the hands of any other Power, such as France or Russia, would make the return impossible, since it would block the Red Sea approach as well as that by the Levant. Egypt is on the flank of Israel's advance by either and both routes. It is needful, therefore, that it should be held. The tendency of the times is to yield. So it is in Ireland to-day, and so it would be in Egypt, were not the responsibilities connected with India, Australia, and the Cape Colonies, which are bound up with the Suez Canal, so tremendous. The late crisis sounded a salutary warning note that a fresh outbreak might happen, and that its success would imperil all that our British officials had effected for the land.

Digitized by Google

The warning has been heeded and the reply is a sort of half-hearted notice that we mean to stay, but that to enable us to do so, we shall make an increase—"a very slight increase"—in our garrison, as the means to the end! The truth now is as good as proclaimed, and no doubt the French press will make much of it. "The British relying upon force, mean by force of arms to hold Egypt against all comers!" This will hardly be openly avowed, but we read the notice thus. Looked at in the lowest, most worldly point of view, it can be recognised that Egypt is a pivot country towards those whose commerce leads them to the east and south by the Red Sea, and that Great Britain which is in that position cannot afford to allow the control of such a territory to lapse into hostile hands, or into such hands as those of Abbas Pasha, who would speedily ruin Egypt and call for the active interference of the French or of ourselves once more. The crisis, therefore, was, we doubt not, God directed, and God sent, to guide our rulers in their action. Lord Rosebery has been raised up to manage the helm of State at this critical juncture, being a man "having understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do" (1 Chron. xii. 32).

In reference to the British force in Egypt, when the crisis occurred, it will hardly be believed that gradual reductions of troops from time to time left only 2,000 men in Egypt to represent the British power. This was a timid appeal to France and other jealous powers that we meant no harm—did not mean to keep Egypt, but were ready to go as soon as we could. Now that Abbas Pasha has taken us at our word and hinted that he did not require our help longer, we have assured him we are going to stop, but that our 2,000 men shall only be "slightly increased." How the reinforcements are to be provided is seen from the following, from an authentic source:—

The additional force which is to be landed will not be large, but it will be sufficient to demonstrate how quickly this country can send reinforcements. There are troops on the way from India, and also reliefs going out, which will be available the moment they reach the Suez Canal, where orders have been sent to stop them. There was some idea of making a demonstration by the Mediterranean fleet, but it is believed that this will not be necessary. There are in Egypt three full regiments of Foot—the 1st Dorset, the 1st Devon, and the 1st South Staffordshire, one squadron of the 1st Dragoon Guards, a battery of Artillery, and a company of Engineers. At Malta, from which, in a crisis, troops could be sent and landed at Alexandria in three days, there are 6½ regiments of Infantry, viz., 1st Royal West Surrey, 2nd South Lancashire, 1st Welsh Regiment, 1st Royal Berkshire, 1st Cameron Highlanders, 3rd Royal Irish Rifles, and half of the 2nd Connaught Rangers, the other half being at Cyprus. It is believed that, although the official announcement says the British force will be slightly increased, preparations have been made for a very considerable addition to the present force should it be necessary. In political and service circles last night, the decision of the Government created considerable excitement.

In a later despatch the Press Association says:—"We understand that Lord Cromer has been instructed to inform the Khedive that, for the safety of European residents in, and visitors to, Egypt, Great Britain finds it necessary to increase the force now in operation. It is also understood that, in consequence of the insulting attitude of the Cairo crowd, towards ladies particularly, it will be necessary for the British troops to exercise control over the whole of the city."

EARLY BRITAIN.

By F. Gass.

PART I.

A SUBJECT of interest to Anglo-Israelites is the early history of Britain, before and during the time of the frequent invasions, by the several tribes who crossed over from the adjacent seaboard and made the new land their permanent home. There is a series of small hand-books published on the subject by the Religious Tract Society, that is very helpful; a perusal of them places one in a position to judge fairly well of the value of the references not infrequently made in current literature to this rather obscure subject (see "Celtic Britain," by Prof. J. Rhys, M.A.; "Roman Britain," by Rev. H. M. Scarth, and "Anglo-Saxon Britain," by Grant Allen.) We cannot accept all these writers say, and they differ among themselves not seldom, but they make together a convenient three-armed guide-post showing Anglo-Israelites the best road to travel on the way to new discoveries. These books, which are supposed to give the results of the very latest investigations, inform us of the state of the country, and its inhabitants, when the dominant tribes, the Anglo-Saxon (i.e., the Angles-and-Saxons) descended in force on these shores. That there were invasions previous to the landing of the Romans under Cæsar, even pre-historic ones cannot be doubted. The restless energy of large bodies of primitive men, in the search for fresh hunting grounds, led them on irresistibly to overrun the new and unknown land.

In fitting the ancient inhabitants of these islands into their proper places, in the true Israelitish origin of the great Anglo-Saxon race, we must bear in mind that naturally, by the near proximity, in one direction of the mainland of Europe, these invasions almost invariably came by way of the East and South-East. The general result was, that the older inhabitants were, at intervals of long duration, pressed backwards toward the West of England, and many from there over into Ireland, their places being taken by the invading hosts. This is why Wales and Cornwall are still largely inhabited by a Celtic population. There is nothing to compel us to believe that the new comers in all of these very ancient settlements of the country, were descendants of Israel, only and solely, neither that their blood is entirely dead within the English race of to-day. Therefore there may be something in the assertion of opponents, that in some parts of England, there are still indications of the remains of a dark type of men, having peculiarities indicating a racial distinction from the prevalent fair-haired Saxon race. But it is well to be cautious, as it is quite possible, when historians concentrate their attention upon this point, its apparent difficulties will vanish.

It is hard to accept the theory put forward, amongst others, by Professor Huxley, that there is a really large admixture existing among us, of an aboriginal race of dark, short people of stone-age blood. An early race of men supposed to have lived on the soil, from the remote time when the glacial epoch terminated, and Britain which was then covered with constant and deep ice and snow, became sufficiently temperate to support human life. That there was such a people inhabiting prehistoric Britain may be admitted, but that their strain of blood has stood against, and continues to flow in any appreciable quantity, in the veins and heart of the livelier and vastly more energetic Scandinavian and Saxon race, is more than doubtful. Aliens were absorbed into Israel from time to time, throughout their history, and we have yet to learn that from this cause they ceased to be God's people. It has ever been the reputation of the great Anglo-Saxon race, both here and in America, that they absorb into themselves all inferior races in association with them, so that their language and characteristics disappear completely. Anthropology as a science cannot be said to have yet touched the bottom; there are still some depths left to be sounded. One such is this question of a certain physical type continuing to hold its ground in a country, notwithstanding more than one, or even two, complete changes of its inhabitants. Such a continuity of physical caste may, perhaps, to a considerable extent, be due to climate and soil. Grant Allen says that the people of these Islands are, by slow and almost imperceptible degrees, becoming darker in hair and complexion. This he endeavours to explain, by saying that the darker Celts are gravitating, in constantly increasing numbers, into the large towns, and mingling with their fairer Saxon brethren. This may be so, though others may prefer to fall back on climatic influences. We have two familiar examples before us, in the present American and Australian natives, of British descent. Careful observers see that in both face and form these Anglo-Americans and Anglo-Australasians are already differentiated within comparatively such a short period of time, from the parent stock. It is too early yet to make a positive statement, but if it is not a climatic change that is gradually working in them, it seems almost impossible to arrive at any adequate explanation. The inference is, knowing physical alterations in such cases occur largely now, that they took place from like causes thousands of years ago.

Digitized by Google

Every historian is convinced of the truth of his own theory of the genesis of the British race; it is only right it should be so; but they labour in vain to conceal that amongst even the best and highest of them, there are irreconcilable differences of opinion on the subject. Where doctors differ who shall agree? Professor Huxley ("Anglo-Saxon Britain," Grant Allen) has stated that: "The British people are vastly less Teutonic than their language," meaning that they are largely descended from the aboriginal natives of Britain. The late Professor Freeman, opposing this view (see BANNER, vol. xiv., p. 113), wrote thus: "In the land where we (English) settled, we found men of another speech, other beliefs, other customs, with, in short, all that makes up national life other than our own. In the greater part of the land, the speech, the belief, the customs of other people so thoroughly passed away, that it is hard to come to any other conclusion than that one company of men, one nation, if we choose so to call them, has so far displaced another, that any remnants of the nation that lived on, abide as mere survivals. . . . Our nation thus formed, known on our lips as English, on the lips of the elder folk as Saxon, has ever since kept its ground and remained the abiding folk of the land. . . . We took in not a few foreign elements; but we took them in, a mere infusion into an existing body."

Again, the Rev. H. M. Scarth, in "Roman Britain," declares that, "The colonists, and others connected with the Roman occupation, did intermarry with the natives, which has been shewn by inscribed stones as well as by historic mention. . . . Roman blood mingled with the population, and Roman blood has flowed ever since in English veins."

Notwithstanding this opinion we may rest easy in the belief that the Roman blood in Englishmen is very thin indeed, akin to water, and we have this assurance in the firm opinion of the late redoubtable Professor Freeman, who frequently declared that Englishmen could congratulate themselves on the absence of Roman blood in them, which was more than the Latin nations could boast. There is another line of argument against the theory of the existence of a large body of Englishmen descended from the prehistoric human element of these Islands, that, with Philo-Israel's permission, I will bring forward in another paper.

(To be continued.)

A POPULAR VIEW OF DANIEL'S METALLIC IMAGE.

"THE BELIEVER'S ALMANACK" for 1893 is a small publication which has lived through 20 years, and being edited by a Mr. Walter Scott, takes a very pessimist view of our nation's future. We British are in a bad way now, and are going to become worse. According to the editor "England seems to have reached the zenith of her prosperity," and "a retrograde movement has set in which will land Great Britain as a third-rate power amongst her continental compeers." This is poor consolation to our people, and it is all that those have to offer us who fail to "see" the value of the evidence in favour of our nation's Identity with Lost Israel. The author of this almanac has something interesting to tell us respecting Daniel's metallic image, giving very clearly the popular view of that wonderful prophecy. We quote it thus:—

"In Daniel ii.," says this writer, "we are furnished with a general history of a Gentile power from its rise to its consummation, presenting us a series of panoramic visions. The dreams of the Babylonian monarch were interpreted to the king and to all succeeding rulers and generations of men. How wise is God!

"At what point in the history of the world have we got? Are we near the end of man's rule, of mere human government? We firmly believe that the present uprising of the peoples and their evident determination to grasp the reigns of government bring us to the last phase of governmental rule, to be succeeded by the horrors of the brief reign of the anti-Christian king, and then the coming of the King of kings who will still the universal groan, stanch earth's bleeding wounds, and pass a healing hand o'er the fevered brow of man. After the government by the people there is no other form of human political rule. It is on that the judgment of God descends, and hence the working classes may be permitted to shiver royal diadems and break imperial sceptres, but their triumph will be but short-lived. The kings and great of earth may cry for shelter to rock and hill (Rev. vi. 16). But the working classes, now so eager to taste the sweets of power, shall in God's righteous ways be the first to suffer in the coming storm of divine wrath which will desolate Christendom, and turn Europe into a charnel house (Rev. vi. 4—8; xiv. 20). The image beheld in dreams by the eastern despot consisted of four metals each inferior in value to the other. The head of gold represented the majesty of the Babylonian empire in the person of its mighty monarch. 'Thou, O king, art a King of kings; for the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power, and 'strength, and glory' (verse 37). Imperial rule, absolute government was divinely committed to Nebuchadnezzar. It was a pure and simple autocracy. It was the rule of one, not that of many. Nebuchadnezzar was the autocrat of the earth. He made the laws and enforced their execution. Nebuchadnezzar was alone responsible to God.

Digitized by Google

"The second empire symbolished by silver, was foretold by Isaiah, and the surname of the renowned Persian monarch mentioned 150 years before Persia rose on the ruins of the Babylonian monarchy, and succeeded to its power and empire (Isa. xlv.). Cyrus was inferior to Nebuchadnezzar, as silver is inferior to gold. The second empire pales in glory and grandeur before the first (verse 39). The laws were made, not by the king, the supreme head of the state, but by the hereditary aristocracy of the empire, and bound even the king to obedience (Dan. vi. 14—17).

"The third empire shows a still further departure from the direct and original grant of power conferred upon Nebuchadnezzar. The military controlled the state. The generals of Alexander were invested with power to make and unmake laws. It was a military despotism and much inferior in greatness to the empire it overthrew.

"The fourth or Roman empire was a strong and aggressive power (verse 40). And yet further depreciation of monarchical greatness is witnessed in the "iron" kingdom of Rome. The emperors were elected by the people, or military, or both, and were in theory at least, expected to consult the Senate on grave matters of state.

"In the interpretation of the dreams of the royal autocrat additional features of interest are supplied, not found in the vision itself. Thus the toes of the image—the extremities—composed of iron and clay, bring us to the final point of Gentile rule on earth, and that which the descending Lord shall crush and grind to powder. That is about where we are to-day. The irruption of barbarian hordes from the north led ultimately to the ruin of the kingdom of the Cæsars, and the consequent formation of modern Europe out of the chaos formed thereby. There have been attempts made to revive the imperial greatness of Rome, but in vain. Government of the people and by the people has been steadily advancing. Popular elected bodies for the government of local and municipal affairs is the idol of the hour, and are serving as an educational process for the management of imperial interests. The working classes are a recognised and potent power. They are at once feared and courted. The representation of the working classes in imperial affairs is now a recognised principle in the government of this great empire on which the sun never sets. The Queen and Empress of India rules over many millions of people. Her 100 vessels of war and 100,000 sailors sweep her seas. Her empire exceeds by far, the largest, the strongest, the most populous of ancient and modern kingdoms. Personally, the sovereign is powerless to stem the torrent of radicalism which threatens, at no distant date, the dismemberment of her mighty empire. The fusion of iron and clay, the union of strength with the government of many—is an impossibility. Scripture (Daniel ii. 42, 43) and facts demonstrate the truth of this. The union of the people, with a strong and independent executive, cannot long hold together. The people in Great Britain, in France, in Germany, in Italy are loudly demanding an equal share in the government of their respective countries. We seem to be on the eve of a general uprising of the people. You cannot successfully check the popular movement. When it has reached the giddy heights of power, and the reins of government are grasped by the sons of toil and socialism sits in high places, then the vengeance of an angry God will scatter like chaff the power of man, close up the "times of the Gentiles," and establish the everlasting Kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. The death throes of the great struggle shall usher in a 1,000 years of rest for wearied men.

"The stone cut out without hands (verse 34) refers to the coming of our Lord in destructive power upon the kingdoms of the earth, then divided into two vast opposed and opposing camps. The stone smites the image on its feet and toes—the last phase of Gentile rule on earth. How near is His coming? But ere the blow descends and kingdoms crash, and crowns are shivered and the earth rocks and reels, and the magnates of the civilised scene seek to hide themselves in terror, the redeemed of the Lord shall be caught up from earth to heaven. The moment of our triumph is at hand. Are we each ready, waiting, working, watching, praying?"

Such is the anticipation of this writer. He sees and knows nothing of Ephraim-Israel anywhere, but deeming ours one of the nations of the earth, awaits with terror the blow of the stone which he deems to be the Lord Himself coming in destructive power! But that surely is not the idea of the prophecy! There the stone is the representative of a nation, and that a great and mighty one, whose King is the Lord Jesus, as Daniel vii. 27 explains. A great mountain in prophetic imagery represents a nation, as Jer. li. 24, 25 teaches us. There Babylon by name is described as a "destroying mountain, which destroyeth the earth," and her punishment is, that God "will roll her down from the rocks, and will make her a burnt mountain." The striking stone is not the Lord, then, but the Lord's people, those He formed, created, made, and uses as His weapons of war, and therefore Israel (Isa. xliii. 1, 7, 21; Jer. li. 20, et seq.). This great mountain-nation, whose origin was like that of a stone, diminutive in size, was in the days or time of the previous four empires destined to be founded by God Himself according to Daniel ii. and to Isaiah's prophecy just quoted. It was to be endowed with power and known as a "kingdom," indestructible in character, as one which was to be always in the care and keeping of the same people, but was never to lapse, or be left to another people. God will use its instrumentality "to break in pieces" and consume all the preceding kingdoms, "but it shall stand for ever" (compare Jer. li. 20). The writer in the almanac evidently entertains the fallacy that Great Britain is a portion of the Roman Empire in its later development of ten toes. But the parable does not tell us that these toes represent ten kingdoms any more than the ten silver fingers of the silver arms of Greece represented then ten states or kingdoms, east and west. Besides which it is an historical fact that in A.D. 409 and 410 the Roman Emperor Honorius finally severed the tie between Britain and Rome. In A.D. 410 he wrote to the cities of Britain, telling them "to provide for their own safety." "The island was left to its fate. Even the troubled light of later Roman history ceased to shine upon it, and a darkness of nearly 200 years closed round its shores" (Collier's History of England, p. 25, 26). The Angles, Saxons, and Jutes arrived in A.D. 449 and onwards to seize upon a house vacated by the Romans (being islands no longer part or parcel of Rome's territory), and so built up the Anglo-Saxon Empire as we see it now—the wonder of the world. The almanac writer speaks of "the times of the Gentiles" as something to be "closed up before the everlasting kingdom of the Lord Jesus" can be established. The only passage where the words occur is in Luke xxi. 24, where the treading down of Jerusalem by the nations or "Gentiles" is foretold, and the limit of such treading down will only be reached when "the times" of those "Gentiles is fulfilled."

Digitized by Google

The stone kingdom in short is the kingdom of an earthly power, the fifth in the history of the world. It exists to-day as no one can deny, and its name is the British Empire. It is incomparably larger than any of its predecessors in dominion, and it is a heavenly kingdom, because it is made, formed, and created by the King of Israel, the Lord Jesus Christ, who guarantees that it shall last for ever under His own sceptre (Daniel vii. 27). To Him be all the praise!

DOING ISRAEL'S WORK AND SKETCHING ISRAEL'S DESTINY.

NOTHING tends more clearly to show the healthy vitality of the British race than the almost miraculous success of organizations formed for the moral and spiritual elevation of the public. No doubt the forces of wickedness are just as active in our own land as in others, but the forces of resistance are not by any means so strong or determined abroad as in the countries of the Anglo-Saxon. Throughout the latter, whenever "the enemy cometh in like a flood," the Spirit of the Lord lifts up a standard in the shape of some influential and aggressive league. This is a hopeful sign, and is not without its bearing on the Identity. It is a manifest fulfilment of the promise that God's Spirit should never be withdrawn from Israel (Isa. lix. 21), for where the Spirit is present there is bound to be resolute opposition to prevalent evils. One of the latest of these "powers for good" is the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour, an American institution, and its astonishing progress illustrates the point we have referred to. It is only eleven years old. In 1882 it had 481 adherents; in 1886, 50,000; in 1888, 310,000; in 1890, 660,000; in 1891, 1,000,000; while on July 1st, 1892, it could boast of 1,500,000 members, all of whom are pledged to exert themselves on behalf of moral and religious principles in their own circle; but the union is, in fact, fast becoming a missionary society. It is quite certain that the world has not witnessed such a federation heretofore. It is unique both in its history and its objects.

The Christian Endeavourers recently held their annual demonstration at New York, and one of the speakers (Dr. Josiah Strong) delivered an address which indicates that men are beginning to understand two things—first, the solidarity of the race in spite of political squabbles; and, second, that the race has one common duty and destiny before it, and the instructed are well aware that this duty and destiny are Israel's. According to the New York Times, the doctor, in the course of his speech, said:—

Among the ancients there were three, and only three, nations which profoundly influenced the world's history. We find their impress on all modern and Occidental civilization. These three peoples were the Hebrews, the Greeks, and the Romans, each of whom was supreme in one of the three great essential spheres of life—the Hebrews in the religious, the Greeks in the intellectual, and the Romans in the physical. It is because they were supreme in these essential spheres that their influence was supreme, and that God could use them to prepare the way for the founding of His kingdom.

If, now, it could be shown that those characteristics which made the Hebrews and their influence great, belong to the Anglo-Saxons, it would be evidence that Anglo-Saxon influence will be far-reaching through the ages. Or if it could be shown that those characteristics which made the Greeks great belong in like measure to the Anglo-Saxons, that would afford evidence that this race is to have a profound influence on the world's future.

Or, again, if it could be shown that these characteristics which gave the Romans their mighty power all belong to the Anglo-Saxon, in still greater degree, that alone would afford a presumption that the Anglo-Saxon is to dominate the world's future. What shall we say, then, to the fact that the essential characteristics of these three supreme races, those qualities which made them the great instruments of the Divine purposes, all unite in the one Anglo-Saxon race?

In the time of Abraham idolatry degraded mankind. In order to the elevation of the race man must be led to a knowledge of the one true God. To be instrumental of this was the high mission of the Hebrews. Their conception of Deity was infinitely superior to that of other nations, and was worth the thousand years of schooling which it cost. The great lesson of monotheism seems to have been fully learned in the Babylonian captivity, and then the Jews were scattered around the Mediterranean and throughout the civilized world that they might furnish in every land a prepared soil for the seed of Christian truth.

But there was to be an intellectual preparation for Christ's coming as well as spiritual, and this was to be wrought by the Greeks. If the good news of the kingdom of God was to be widely published and men generally invited to citizenship, there must be some common medium of communication, a language generally understood, and this tongue must be a fit vessel in which to bear to the nations the water of life. No adequate language existed. There must be developed not only such a tongue, but also a civilization capable of diffusing it throughout the civilized world.

This work the Greeks accomplished. They produced a language perfectly adapted to its destined use and a civilization which, by their restless energy, was carried around the Mediterranean, while Alexander stamped it upon the East. Thus for a time their language gained a universal dominion.

But equally necessary was the work to be wrought by the Roman. He was to supply the necessary physical conditions, to level the barriers between different peoples by bringing them under one government, and to cast up the great highways which would facilitate the intercourse of the nations. Thus three great lines of preparation were developed by three great peoples, and in Palestine, where their civilizations met in most perfect conjunction, appeared He whose advent Hegel calls "the goal of all previous history and the starting point of the history to come." He was to inaugurate on the earth the kingdom of heaven. Now that the kingdom has been established, the great consummation to which we look forward and for which we labour is the full coming of God's kingdom among men. Because man has a spiritual, an intellectual, and a physical nature, the preparation for the full coming of God's kingdom must be spiritual, intellectual, and physical. And I believe it can be shown that the Anglo-Saxon race is as well fitted to work out this threefold preparation as were those three ancient races to prepare the world for the coming of Christ.

Permit me to cite a few facts in confirmation of this view, and you shall then see how vital it is to our subject. The religious life of the Anglo-Saxon (I use the word broadly to include all English-speaking peoples) is more vigorous, more spiritual, more Christian than that of any other. Anglo-Saxons are not righteous overmuch. They will have to answer for many sins against weaker races, but, for all that, they are a mightier power for righteousness in the earth than any other. No race has ever shown such philanthropy; none is so easily moved by great moral ideas; none so capable of moral enthusiasm and disinterested endeavour. This race is for ever organizing a society to help someone.

Of the 139 missionary societies represented at the General Conference of Protestant Foreign Missions in London in 1888, eighteen represented all other races and 121 represented the Anglo-Saxon race. Evidently it is to this race that we must look for evangelization of the world, and to show that this is pre-eminently the missionary race is to show that it is the most Christian race, for the missionary spirit is the essential spirit of Christianity. As the Hebrew carried his pure monotheism around the Mediterranean, so the Anglo-Saxon is carrying a spiritual Christianity around the world. I do not forget that comparisons are odious, but our argument requires a comparison of the intellectual powers of the Anglo-Saxon race with those of other races.

Digitized by Google

The highest expression of the intellectual life of a people is to be found in their literature, and more especially in their poetry. Surely no one would be so bold as to attempt to match English poetry in any modern literature. Speaking of the brightest lights of English literature, Emerson said, "I find the great masters out of all rivalry and reach." We do not forget the precious contributions to letters, philosophy, science, and every department of scholarship made by the Germans, the French, and other races, but comparing the entire product of the Anglo-Saxon mind, as preserved in the English language, with that of all other races, can anyone doubt that the destruction of these treasures would be a greater loss to the world than would be the destruction of all the thought embodied in any other language? And if this be so, may we not correctly infer that, on the whole, the Anglo-Saxons are the intellectual leaders of the world?

Several continental races are superior to the Anglo-Saxon in speculative thought, in scholarship, in music, and in art. But these are the flowers, not the roots of life; they adorn civilizations, but do not create them. The Anglo-Saxon, like the ancient Greek, has the rare power of propagating his civilization which, together with his language, he is carrying around the world. At the beginning of this century French, Russian, German, and Spanish were each spoken by more people than English, but during ninety years, English rose from fifth place in point of numbers to the first. In 1800 German was spoken by 10,000,000 more people than English; now English is spoken by 36,000,000 more than German. Then French was spoken by 11,000,000 more than English; now English is spoken by 60,000,000 more than French.

Travel, commerce, the missionary are carrying the English tongue to every land, but the English language is no more pervasive than English civilization. Evidently the Anglo-Saxon is doing for the modern world what the Greek did for the ancient. They each produced a civilization characterized by a high development of the individual; they each produced an unequalled language and literature; and as the Greek carried his language and civilization around the Mediterranean, so the more restless Anglo-Saxon is carrying his language and civilization around the globe.

We have seen that the Romans possessed a mastery of physical conditions and a genius for law, organization, and government unequalled in the ancient world. A glance suffices to show that in the modern world the Anglo-Saxon occupies a position of like prominence. This is the most inventive race; more than any other it builds and owns the world's railways and steamships; it commands the world's communications; it will soon possess more than one-half of all the world's wealth. During this century it has increased more than fivefold—from 20,500,000 to 111,000,000. It has spread from its little island home until now it possesses a third of the earth and rules over 400,00),000 of its inhabitants.

No intelligent man can look at the facts and doubt that humanly speaking this race holds in its hands the future of the world. And the home of this mighty race of the future must be that which Professor Bryce calls "the land of the future." Scattered as is this race, more than one-half of its members are already found in the United States. North America constitutes seven-twelfths of the possessions of this race, and here its empire is unsevered, while the remaining five-twelfths are fragmentary and scattered over the earth. North America is twice as large as all Europe, and fully capable of sustaining 1,500,000,000 souls—the present population of the globe. Surely this majestic continent is to be the home of this majestic race; and from this land it will mould the future of mankind.

We are not unacquainted with Dr. Josiah Strong's opinions respecting the destiny of the United States as the future representative of the Anglo-Saxon race. We endeavoured, on a previous occasion, to answer his statements in respect to the States. At present, no doubt, the figures are in his favour. The population of the Republic is vast and increasing, but it lacks one ingredient of greatness. The States are destined to be a single great and independent people; but their brethren of the British Empire are to be in the end greater still, because of them is to come "the filling up" or "fulness of the nations" (Gen. xlviii. 19). The world outside the United States is to be British, if we read the prophecy aright, and in that case, given a population increasing even faster than ours does now, the result must be that British-Israel's empire will be greater and more important than even American-Manasseh's splendid states. Dr. Josiah Strong writes and speaks without reference to Israel and British Identity with her; but the latter is a great fact nevertheless, which, if accepted by the doctor, must of necessity modify his views.

ANGLO-ISRAELISM.

"We have received from Mr. F. J. Annear a communication in reference to an extract which appeared in our last issue, giving the opinion of the late Rev. Charles Spurgeon, as expressed in a critique of 'The Veil Lifted from all Nations; the Discovery of the Long-lost Tribes of Israel.' The letter is written in a candid and earnest spirit; but we regret that our space prevents us from giving it in full. The writer says that 'the author of the work in question apparently identifies certain Continental nations as parts of Lost Israel, and can hardly be reckoned among Anglo-Israelites who desire to promulgate the important truth that the British Empire (Home and Colonial) and the United States of America—and these alone—are the two great peoples into which it was predicted that the House of Israel would be divided in these latter days (Genesis xlviii. 15—20).' Mr. Annear then proceeds to set forth the Scriptural basis on which he rests the views which he holds on this disputed question, and recommends, as a guide to enquirers, the handbook of Drs. Denis Hanan and H. Alder-Smith."

The above is taken from The Presbyterian Monthly of Melbourne, for June 1, 1892, and seems written in a candid, respectful spirit. We trust the editor, who is said to be a scholarly, venerable man, may be induced to look into the subject of the Identity and possibly to accept it.

Some clay tablets recently found at Tel-el-Amarna, in Egypt, furnish, in the words of Professor Sayce, "solid standing-ground in Egyptian history for the events which issued in the Exodus." They consist of letters received by Amenophis III. and IV. from Palestine and other parts of Western Asia in the fifteenth century B.C. They show that Ramses II. was the Pharaoh of the Oppression; that during the latter part, at any rate, of the eighteenth Dynasty, the Egyptian Court was more than half Semitic, and the governors and officials of the king were for the most part of Semitic descent. This explains the friendliness of the Egyptians towards the early descendants of Abraham. They also show that writing was known in Palestine before the days of the Exodus, and that therefore the earlier records of the Bible need not have been so dependent on tradition as is ordinarily supposed. In fact, Professor Sayce suggests, in his paper in The Newbery House Magazine, that the list of Edomite kings in Gen. xxxvi. may have been derived from the cuneiform tablets of some ancient library.

Digitized by Google

MR. ALFRED MILNER'S "ENGLAND IN EGYPT."

By E. Reep.

It is with mingled curiosity and anxiety that British folk are looking towards Egypt. Those who were captivated a little time since by the belief that Mr. Gladstone on coming into power would speedily relieve that country of its British administration have had the ground of their hope taken from under them. There will be no British evacuation of Egypt for many years to come. In consequence of the late political crisis at Cairo the British force in Egypt is to be strengthened, and thereby all interruption to the predicted healing of the land effectually prevented. How this healing process, so clearly alluded to in Isa. xix., is being carried out by British jurisdiction, is comprehensively told by Mr. Milner in his "England in Egypt."

"The spirit of the eccentric and the improbable," says Mr. Milner, "seems inseparable from all things Egyptian." That this remark contains a profound truth may be judged by the fact that prophecy is being fulfilled. A declaration of Isaiah reads, "And the Lord shall smite Egypt, smiting and healing." Mr. Milner's record is, "If the conditions under which the government of Egypt has to be carried on seem like a nightmare, the revival of the country during the last few years, under and in spite of these conditions, is almost worthy of a fairy tale." In short, the result of England's (Israel's) influence in this oppressed and troubled land "has been beyond all human expectation." Why this should be so is an enigma fully interpreted in Holy Writ.

Thus redeemed Israel in the sanctuary of her island home has assumed the functions and responsibilities for which she was formed and created. She is, as the chosen of God (Isa. xliii., xliv.), establishing justice and consideration for the oppressed in all lands, and to the Egyptians she has appeared as the saviour and defender promised to that cruelly-governed people in Isa. xix. 20; for, as our author asserts, "Look where you will—at the army, at finance, at agriculture, at the administration of justice, at the every-day life of the people and their relations to their rulers—it is always the same tale of revival, of promise, of a slowly developing faith in equity and possible improvement." And all this revivification has proclaimed itself in the midst of almost general ruin and depression, made still more dark and blighting by a total distrust in the possibility of just government, and a rooted belief in administrative corruption as the natural and invariable rule of human society.

As to some people, our present right to be in Egypt is a mystery a slight sketch of the circumstances that compelled a British occupation may be here mentioned. In a rather ancient number of the Contemporary Review (Dec., 1882), there appeared an article giving an extract from the Treaty of Paris of 1856, wherein it was stipulated by the sovereigns of England, Austria, France, Russia, and Sardinia, that Turkey should participate in the advantages of the public law and concert of Europe. These sovereigns also engaged to respect the integrity of the Ottoman Empire. This integrity has been more than once threatened at Cairo—on one occasion, it is said, with the moral support of France. In 1866 Ismail Pasha was raised to the rank of Khedive or Viceroy, and subsequently had the power conferred on him to make laws for the internal government of Egypt. He was, however, by a special firman forbidden to contract any loan without the permission of his Suzerain at Constantinople, a restriction removed in 1872 by heavy bribery whereby he acquired the authority to contract as many loans as he pleased. According to the writer of the Contemporary Review article (J. Westlake, Q.C.), the firmans affecting this business were arranged without reference to the Powers, an incident that drew from England a hint that any concessions to the Khedive tending to weaken the ties binding him to the Ottoman Empire would certainly meet with disapproval in England.

The insolvency of Egypt has been the result, as everyone now knows, of Ismail's borrowings. Her foreign creditors have enforced their claims, and they have been recognised; but by a divine ordering of things the attitude of the Powers originally concerned in the Egyptian question has, leaving out Britain, degenerated into impotence, and thus left Israel in Britain free to assert international rights and her protection over her shortest route to India. She is now endeavouring to teach Egypt the art of self-government according to her pre-destined role of saviour and defender of the Egyptians. That such a role should be regarded by foreign critics with disfavour is hardly a matter for surprise, for, as Mr. Milner points out, Englishmen themselves have regarded with horror the tremendous step of military occupation. But, as he aptly observes, the English Government and people have been swept along in spite of themselves by the current of events.

In Jer. xlvi. 20 Egypt is described as a very fair heifer. Mr. Milner has not, of course, stimulated his imagination by any reference to Scripture, but he portrays Egypt nevertheless as the very centre of the world, as the great highway of nations, and as a country in which of all European nations Great Britain is, by virtue of its enormous direct trade, and still more enormous transit trade, the most deeply interested.

Why Britain is blessed with this stupendous trade we are not told, nor would the explanation of a British-Israelite be regarded with the smallest savour of reverence. Be it so, it does not alter the reality that Israel now dwells safely, that the Almighty Himself has become her strength, and that she has become His servant in whom He will be glorified (Isa. xlix.).

INTERVENTION INEVITABLE.

At the time when European men and women and European property were threatened with violence and massacre the English Government looked to the European concert to help avert such a catastrophe. Diplomacy, however, moved too slowly and no one was ready or willing to strike at once. Hence, to save Egypt from anarchy, Great Britain took upon herself the duty of independent interference. Then followed the task, not yet finished, of restoring order and preserving, much as some may doubt the fact, "Egypt for the Egyptians."

The commencement of the administrative regeneration of Egypt is affirmed by Mr. Milner to date from the fall of Ismail and the establishment of the Dual Control. But on looking back, he says, it is now plainly seen that British and French co-operation was doomed to failure. British-Israelites know better than Mr. Milner the reason why it was not destined to succeed. France has not been selected, as it would appear, to enact the part of special benefactor in any land, least of all in Egypt; the ultimate evangelization of that country (Isa. xix. 20—22) rests obviously on a nation having faith in God and bringing forth the fruit thereof. In this regenerative mission, to which we have no alternative but to see that we are bound hand and foot, Great Britain has had to encounter the most determined hostility. In her attempts, says Mr. Milner, to loosen the financial fetters which were strangling Egypt she has had, with the exception of Italy, no single friend in the councils of Europe. Nevertheless, the great majority of the Egyptian nation, and especially the peasantry, have benefitted enormously by the presence of the British in their country. For the few the new system introduced has meant loss as well as gain; for the many it is all pure gain. At no previous period of his history, we are informed, has the fellah lived under a Government so careful to promote his interests or to protect his rights.

Digitized by Google

What more conspicuous evidence do we require than what is here set forth to show the moral certainty that Isaiah's prophetic announcement of a coming saviour and defender of the Egyptians is finding fulfilment before our eyes.

The uncertainty as to the aim and end of the British occupation is a source of dissatisfaction to the Egyptians. They do not understand a "veiled Protectorate," and, says Mr. Milner, the power and popularity of England in Egypt has always varied in proportion to the degree of general belief in the permanence of English control. In 1882, when we were in absolute possession of the country, there was a conviction among all the European inhabitants, even among Frenchmen, that the British occupation should be permanent.

It is perhaps to the obscurity of our intentions that the present crisis at Cairo is to be attributed. That France has exercised a baneful influence in the matter is hardly credible, since she of her own free will long ago retired from any responsible share in the control of Egyptian finance, thus leaving England unaided to re-establish European authority over the finances of Egypt. Under these circumstances it would be dishonourable to make it her business to prejudice Egyptian officials against British reform and British influence, we may therefore give her the benefit of the doubt and conclude that she is not so envious of Britain as public report would make her. But though France may have had no hand in producing the present state of affairs, French newspapers published in Egypt seem to have contributed not a little towards it.

Had the late Khedive lived another ten years the Egyptian question, Mr. Milner thinks, might have passed definitely out of its present critical difficulties. Possibly; but more possibly, had he been spared, there would have been, with Mr. Gladstone in office, an increasing agitation in this country for the entire withdrawal of the British force from Egypt. What this would mean for the Egyptian peasantry can only be gathered by a study of Mr. Milner's invaluable book. They are not rich, but they are not poverty-stricken, and they are cheerful and contented.

The summing up of the whole matter appears to lie in the fact that the neutralization of Egypt is a necessity for the peace of the world, and this we may well believe was foreseen by divine Providence when He planned in His own good time to place a people there who at once were capable of evangelizing and protecting it.

"Hillside," South Norwood, S.E., Jan. 25, 1893.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL VOLUME FOR 1892, a useful present for any public library.

ERRATA.—The Editor regrets that the following errors have occurred on p. 52, col. 2, lines 13 and 14 from end of page:—For Isa. xviii. 27, read xvii. 7; for Jer. xxxi. 6, 15, read xxxi. 7, 14; for Micah x. 6, 7, read iv. 6, 7; for Zech. x. 6, 16, read x. 6, 10.

RULE BRITANNIA.

By H. R. SHAW.

UNDER this heading it is proposed to place before the notice of our readers from time to time, as occasion permits, extracts and selections, from current news, reports, speeches of public men, and opinions of writers in secular journals, tending to prove that our British fellow-countrymen claim and take to themselves, as a matter of indisputable right and simple justice, all the blessings covenanted to Abraham by God Almighty in return for his one act of simple obedience upon the Mount Moriah; which blessings were afterwards, with large and larger increase, entailed onwards through Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, and Ephraim, to the LOST Ten Tribes of the Northern Israelitish Kingdom, during their uncovenanted and Lo-ammi state (Hos. i. 10).

The subject will not be altogether new to Anglo-Israel readers, having been some years ago treated upon by the present writer in another place, where it was shown, in taking the song of Rule Britannia, verse by verse, that the writer was claiming this our people to be none other than Israel-obedient, according to her Scriptural portrait. It is no mere braggart boast, but a simple statement of fact, that this island was especially prepared by Providence for the habitation of a special people, distinguished for their sturdy independence, love of freedom, excellence in all the arts of commerce and agriculture, ability to colonise and spread abroad throughout the waste places of the earth, and above all, and as a matter of first necessity, possessing the capacity for ruling the waves as a sea-going community, and thereby holding the Gates of all nations not so blessed as they. We can conceive of no other means whereby a special people could be preserved and strengthened, and rendered free from the interference of foreign foes, than by placing them upon a comparatively large island with fertile soil and salubrious climate; and we can conceive of no other purpose of Providence in creating such an island as Britain, than that of preparing a place for a specially-favoured people. But there never was but one specially-favoured people known to the God of the Bible, and that people was—nay, is—Israel, and they were not favoured because of their personal merits; and the only defect in our national poem is that the author fails to grasp the idea that all this charter of the land and rule of the waves was granted for a certain purpose, and therefore only to a certain people, and that purpose the shewing forth of the greater glory of the Lord of heaven and the establishment of His own United Kingdom here below.

The latest illustration of this claim, by Britons, of the portion of Lost Israel, occurs in the editorial remarks of the Daily Telegraph, of Jan. 16th, 1893, upon what is called the Morocco question. Great Britain has a serious matter on hand with the Sultan of Morocco. A British subject has been murdered in that country and reparation has been demanded; and there are other questions, the settlement of which may necessitate the tempory presence of one or more British men-of-war in Tangier harbour, and the bare possibility of such an event seems to have woke up our somewhat sleepy neighbour and quondam foe, Spain, who having been compelled for two centuries to submit to the humiliation of seeing us in possession of her strongest Gate, Gibraltar, naturally may be expected to view with alarm the prospect of the lapse of Tangier, in some respects a more valuable Gate than Gibraltar, to any other power than herself. And so she proposes to join us in the anticipated naval exhibition to the Sultan of Morocco. And this is what the journalist thinks about the matter:—

Digitized by Google

We can almost fancy the Muse of History rubbing her august eyes, and standing on tiptoe to listen while the news comes that Spain is fitting out a squadron at Cadiz to "make a demonstration" side by side with English ships of war at Tangier. Even if there were anything hostile in this sudden and surprising activity, it might give Britons a certain pleasurable feeling. We were such old enemies, and have been for so many generations such good friends, that England must always be deeply interested in the picturesque country of Spain and her high-spirited people. Whoever else may forget how great were once the power and glory of the Castilian Monarchy, the offspring of those ancestors who fought for the existence of the British Realm against the Grand Armada are not likely to be oblivious. In those "spacious times" of Elizabeth, when Drake and Frobisher and Raleigh roamed about the seas picking up Spanish galleons laden with silver, and now and then descending upon the coast to "singe the whiskers of the King of Spain," it was possible enough that the Castilian flag, which had been supreme in two worlds, might remain so. There was a period when that ensign of red and gold really flew higher and prouder than any other national banner. Upon it was inscribed, not without some reason, the picture of a whole globe dominated, and the Spanish kings drew from one hemisphere silver and gold to wage their wars in the other. Rome, always well aware that the battle for the Papacy rested chiefly on the bigoted dynasty of Fernando, Charles, and Philip, gave the ocean to Spain by a special Bull. In the octagonal chamber of the Escurial no fewer than twenty-six kings and queens have laid together their mortal remains, a range of regal glory to be seen nowhere else in the world. Mingling the blood of so many gifted races, and stamped with so strong a civilisation by the Romans, Spain, after the expulsion of the Moors, had many chapters of magnificent history, and did a wonderful part in the opening up of the world. She would have done more but for the blighting effect of the militant Papalism whose cause she had made national. The uprise of the Protestant Powers put an end to her sway, and at the beginning of this century she had to be saved by England from extinction at the hands of Bonaparte. Since then her history has been that of an exhausted State, ranked by courtesy rather than by right among the great nations of Europe, although always maintaining her dignity as the mother of noble artists, poets, navigators and caballeros. In recent years—thanks largely to the wise and unselfish administration of Amadeo, and to the influence of the present gifted and gentle Queen Regent—Spain has consolidated herself not a little. Her finances have been set in fair order; her "pronouncing" generals have been kept quiet; she has developed to some extent her mines and her railroads, and has more and more appeared to deserve the international consideration which the memory of her bygone splendour and virtues would incline every enlightened mind to wish her to receive. It comes, after all, however, with quite a startling effect upon the modern mind to hear of Spain equipping a squadron to make Mediterranean demonstrations. One is at once glad to know that she can do such a thing, and astonished thus to see modern Spain wake up from a sleep which seemed too profound for political marriages or diplomatic difficulties ever to break again.

It is obviously impossible to forget that this country was called upon but three centuries ago to fight the fleets of Spain for its very existence, which, but for an interposition of Providence almost as remarkable as that which is anticipated another day on behalf of Israel against the armies of Gog, must surely have been extinguished. It is interesting also to be reminded of the melancholy failure of the Papal Bull which gave the ocean to Spain in defiance of the Charter, which, as described by our own poet, gave the rule of the waves to Britannia. And to finish the matter, the writer avers, in language that might have appropriately occurred to Abraham, the heir of the world, as he journeyed homewards from Mount Moriah with the son whom he had just received, in a figure, from the dead, but scarcely to anyone else not an Israelite, that it is perfectly well understood by Spain, France, Italy, and Germany that no other European flag than the Union Jack must ever float over the Gate of Tangier—thus:

The key to the Morocco question is simple enough, as far as England is concerned. It is a matter of absolutely vital import to this country that Tangier shall not be seized upon and occupied by any other Power. That port must either remain, as it is, the property of a native government, however feeble, or if held, whether provisionally or permanently, under any European flag, that flag must be the Union Jack. This is not Jingoism; it is a self-evident proposition of international diplomacy, perfectly well understood by Spain, by France, by Italy, by Germany, by all the world. It is not a policy of Lord Salisbury's, reluctantly adopted by Lord Rosebery, but the unchanged and inevitable policy of all British Foreign Ministers, flowing inexorably from the conditions of the problem. Tangier in the hands of any Power possibly hostile to Britain would neutralise and cancel Gibraltar; and all Europe would justly laugh to scorn the English Cabinet which for one moment hesitated or held doubtful language about the axiomatic fact in diplomacy that Tangier must be independent, or held by English ships and an English garrison. Our trade with Morocco amounts to nearly fifty per cent. of all her exports and imports; and our interests there, as everywhere, are to have the peace kept. We do not want to occupy Tangier, nor was the mission of Sir Charles Euan Smith based upon any intentions or demands which could not be made known to Spain or the other Powers. It failed because of the dogged folly and ignorant caprice of the moody Sovereign of the Moors, and, fresh difficulties having arisen, Sir West Ridgeway has gone to Morocco to try to put matters on a better and a safer footing. Nothing can be more senseless than the pretence that Lord Rosebery has inherited these difficulties from Lord Salisbury; the present able and enlightened Foreign Minister of Mr. Gladstone would be the first to laugh at such a misconception or mischievous invention. The problem is a standing one, which cannot be neglected by any Administration; and Lord Rosebery had no choice, except to follow it up by a very reasonable and natural attempt to make the Sultan see his own interests and the interests of the peace of the Mediterranean.

24, Ludgate Hill, Jan. 18, 1893.

"LET THERE BE LIGHT."

How blind and dark is the heart of man to the light and knowledge and understanding of God's truth, until, in effect, the Spirit of God says, "Let there be light." But when He supplies the power to see, and hear, and understand, how rapid often is the progress in revealed truth. This is seen in the following extract from a sermon preached by Mr. Harvey, the pastor of the Congregational Church, Wootton Bassett, when preaching on November 6th last, on the Syrophœnician woman. It appears in the clear manner in which he distinguishes between Israel and Judah, considering that less than a year ago he did not know (like most of our ministers and clergy now) that there was any difference, or that the Bible made any distinction; although he had spent very recently five years at college, under professors. An Anglo-Israelite, one of the congregation at the Church at which he is pastor, pointed out this truth to him, and he searched the Scriptures whether these things were so. He found, to his astonishment, that it was the most noticeable distinction in the Bible. The extract is as follows:—

Digitized by Google

"The woman was a Greek, a Syrophœnician by nation and she besought the Lord that he would cast forth the devi out of her daughter.

"This is a remarkable case of faith outside Israel. It will be well for us to remember that Palestine was once divided into two main divisions. The Jews—the tribe of Judah—inhabited the lower part with Jerusalem as their capital, whilst the other tribes of Israel inhabited the northern part, with Samaria as their chief city.

"It will greatly help us in understanding the Bible to remember, that the Jews are only a part of Israel, and that many of the children of Israel are not Jews at all. Some people think that because Christ was a Jew He was sent first and foremost of all to bless the Jews; but Christ Himself gives a different account of Himself. He says, 'I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the House of Israel;' and when He sent forth His disciples, He said; 'Go to the lost sheep of the House of Israel.' Now, the Jews are not the lost sheep of the House of Israel; they are just the very sheep of Israel that never have been lost. It was to the other tribes of Israel that Christ was specially sent. And yet though this was so, Christ was willing to bless a Gentile, a Greek woman, a Syrophœnician by nation, who put her trust in Him. St. Matthew calls her a woman of Canaan, one of the accused race that is, yet, though not belonging to Israel, she becomes blessed through faith in Jesus. Though not a daughter of Abraham, she can be blessed through Christ. And that is what I want you to understand. In endeavouring to have correct beliefs as to who and what Israel is, that in no way destroys our belief in the blessings which come through Christ. So this Canaanite woman, this Gentile, comes to Christ, and He hears her prayer, and listens to her request. 'But Jesus said unto her, Let the children first be filled: for it is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it unto the dogs.' Here we have another proof of what I have been saying. Christ no doubt wished her to understand that His mission was a mission to the children of Israel first of all: 'Let the children first be filled.' One man cannot do everything, and even the God-man could not do all He desired, while He was on earth. Christ must select His people, and God had selected Israel for Him. If the children of Israel will accept Christ, they will soon make their influence felt in the world. Christ does not mean to say that He desires this woman to go unblessed, but that His work is to bless Israel, so that all the nations of the earth may be blessed through them. 'Let the children,' the children of Israel, 'first be filled: it is not meet to take the children's bread and to cast it unto the dogs.' Perhaps some dogs were present at the very moment Christ made this remark; for He always drew illustrations from things around. It may seem hard at first for Christ to liken this woman to a dog, but God often appears to discourage us—He tries us—to find out if we are really in earnest or not. So Christ likens this woman to a dog, not because He did not love her, but perhaps to hear what she would say, and to test whether she thought most of her own pride, or her daughter's recovery. 'And she answered and said unto Him, Yes, Lord: yet the dogs under the table eat of the children's crumbs.' Now mark her reply. It shows her reverence, her earnestness, and her humility at the same time. Although she may not understand why Israel should be likened to children and herself only to a dog, she does not argue the point with Jesus, neither does she contradict Him. She was quite willing as a Gentile to accept God's appointed way, and would be satisfied with the crumbs from Israel's table."

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

MY DEAR SIR,—I cannot allow this season to pass without wishing you all the blessings a happy Christmas gives, and that the New Year may bring you fresh reasons for rejoicing, by a multiplication of believers in Anglo-Israelism. I myself am deeply indebted to you and other writers in the BANNER OF ISRAEL. Through you and such writers as Dr. Denis Hanan and Mr. H. Alder-Smith, the difficulties of the prophetic Scriptures have been overcome, and what was uncertain and confused before, to my understanding, is now sure and intelligible. It is true that, by some wonderful display of God's power, another nation might arise and take our place, but nothing now that can happen on this earth can deprive us of that greater blessing—the certainty of the truth of God's Word, and that not one word of His promises to Israel will fail.

I beg to enclose a small sum for the Free Distribution Fund. I am, most truly yours,

C. F. THORNDIKE.

Trieste, via Tigor No. 12, Dec. 24th, 1892.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.

The above letter causes us great satisfaction and thankfulness that the BANNER, and those who contribute to its pages, have proved useful to the writer of this Christmas greeting. Mr. Thorndike puts forward a supposition which is not at all likely to be enacted as fact—nay, it is an impossibility. He says that "it is true that, by a wonderful display of God's power, another nation might arise and take our place." If such events could take place, and we were to lose the Gates, the dominion of the sea, India, the colonies, the wealth they bring, there is one thing the coming Israel could never find—namely, "the desolate heritages" of the earth. We have seized on all these ourselves, and turned them into "gardens of the Lord" (Isa. li. 3; xxxv. 1, 2). The coming Israel could never fulfil her prophecies, since the British have already got the desolations of the earth in charge, and have so transformed them that they cannot pass as desolations any more.

In the same way Israel, when she comes, is to preach the Gospel to every creature, and to administer blessings of every sort to "all the nations, families, and kindreds of the earth." But the British have done this already, and the coming Israel will not, in this respect also, be able to carry the Bible prophecies into effect if the British be not they. It is clear, then, that what our correspondent thinks may possibly happen cannot come to pass at all, because God is faithful, and He cannot have given to our nation, being non-Israelites, what on oath He promised to bestow on the chosen sons of Abraham without fail or abeyance. If it were possible to suppose that God had done this, and so broken faith with Israel, what "certainty" could there be "of the truth of God's Word"? Since God has bestowed on the British already all He promised to give Israel, up to the present date, we cannot but conclude that the British are Israel, as God is true. To Him let Israel give all the praise.

The remittance, in value 7s. 11d., has been handed to Messrs. Banks, for free distribution of New Year's BANNERS.

THE QUEENSLAND FLOODS.—British philanthropy is furnished with an excellent opportunity for disproving the charge that it is far more attentive to foreign suffering than to misery in outlying parts of the Empire. The floods which have been playing such terrible havoc in Queensland have happened at a most unfortunate time. Owing to one cause and another, this once prosperous colony has latterly fallen upon evil days. Her resources are strained almost to the breaking point, and it is to be feared that the destruction caused by the floods cannot be made good without external help. At all events, it would be a graceful thing on part of the mother country to offer assistance to a colony which reflects honour on the English name by her boundless enterprise.—The Graphic.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed "PHILO-ISRAEL," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION for the BANNER OF ISRAEL, in Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts. To any part of the United Kingdom, Canada, America, or Europe, in the postal union:—

	s. d.		s. d.
copy, including postage ..	7 0	Tasmania	7 0
New Zealand ..	7 0	South Australia ..	7 0
Cape Colony ..	7 0	Queensland ..	7 0
Victoria	7 0	Natal	7 0
Western Australia ..	7 0	New South Wales ..	7 0
Transvaal	7 0	India	7 0
		Ceylon, via Brindisi ..	7 0

All Post Office Orders, Cheques, &c., should be crossed "City Bank, Ludgate-hill, to the ac. of ROBERT BANKS AND SON." They will then only be paid to our account.

READING CASES for holding the Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts, may be had, price 2s. Sent post free on receipt of Postal Order.

THE ANNUAL VOLUMES, bound in handsome blue cloth, price 8s.

THE MONTHLY PARTS, in tinted wrapper, published the last day of each month, 6d.

NEW BADGES.

Gold Brooches, 6/3 and 4/-
Scarf Pins, 4/9 and 3/9.
Pendants, large, 4/6; small, 2/9.
All Badges, Metal Gilt, 9d.

All Post Free. Applications, with Postal Order enclosed, to be sent to MRS. THOMPSON or to MAJOR-GEN. CARLYLE BELL, St. Laurence Villa, Kingston-hill, Surrey.

NOW READY.
HANDSOME BLUE CLOTH
CASES FOR BINDING.
Price 1s. 6d., or post free, 1s. 8d.
VOLUME XVI. OF
THE BANNER OF ISRAEL,
Price 8s. Sent Post Free.
ROBERT BANKS AND SON, Racquet-ct., Fleet-st., E.C

No. 26.—Price 1s. per 100, 8s. 6d. per 1,000.
THOUGHTS FOR THE BRITISH FOLK.
SUGGESTED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.
OUR ISRAELITE MINERS.
London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C.

Price 6d. Monthly. Annual Subscription 7s.
THE MESSENGER.
Edited by "OXONIAN."
Each number contains papers by the EDITOR, and other well-known writers, a SERMON by Dr. WILD, Notes and Queries, &c

Now Ready, price 5s., post free, 5s. 4d.,
Illustrated by MAPS,
RUSSIA JAPHET;
OR, THE MUSCOVITE, THE COSSACK, AND THE MONGOL.
Being a detailed Identification of the principal peoples subject to the Czar. By "OXONIAN."
London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C.

"I am delighted with this."—PHILO-ISRAEL.
NEW AND IMPROVED EDITION OF
ISRAEL'S WORLD,
By Rev. HENRY ROE. 2d.
Also "Consecration," 2d., "Going to Africa," 1s.; "West African Scenes," 2s.; "Fernando Po Mission," 1s. Also "Israel's World" and "Consecration" bound together in cloth, with Author's latest photograph portrait, 1s.
Order of ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C., or of Rev. HENRY ROE, Radstock, via Bath.

"A WONDERFUL REMEDY."
"I WAS GIVEN UP BY ALL."
"SAVED FROM AN EARLY GRAVE."
Such are the words of grateful Patients relative to their CASES OF
CONSUMPTION
CURED BY THE TREATMENT OF
MR. GEO. T. CONGREVE.
Read his Book, "ON CONSUMPTION, &c.," which may be had post free for ONE SHILLING from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.; or may be ordered of any Bookseller.
NOTE.—CONSULTATIONS FREE at Coombe Lodge, Peckham, on TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings only. No Charge except the usual charge for three weeks or six weeks' supply of medicine. All Patients should read the book first.

FREEMAN'S ORIGINAL CHLORODYNE.

THIS valuable medicine, discovered and invented by Mr. RICHARD FREEMAN in 1844, introduced into India and Egypt in 1850, and subsequently all over the world, maintains its supremacy as a special and specific Remedy for the Treatment and Cure of Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Cancer, Bronchitis, Asthma, Ague, Sore Throat, Influenza, Neuralgia, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Asiatic Cholera, Colic, Gout, and all Fevers.
At 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 20s. per bottle.
Sold by Patent Medicine Dealers in all parts of the world.

N.B.—Lord Chancellor Selborne, Lord Justice James, and Lord Justice Mellish, decided in favour of FREEMAN'S ORIGINAL CHLORODYNE, and against Brown and Davenport, compelling them to pay all costs in the suit.—See Times of July 24, 1873.

GIGANTIC SALE OF LOCKSTITCH
SEWING MACHINES
To be sold without reserve by order of the manufacturers. Must be sold for cash at once. Lockstitch Machines for 6s. 6d. Each one guaranteed by us. Writing about these machines, Miss Rushton, Heaton Norris, says: "Enclosed is money for another machine. I am much pleased with them." Mrs. Brooks, Pye Bank, Sheffield, says: "We are very much pleased with the machine." Mrs. Gillett, Rectory-lodge, Church-street: "I am very much pleased with it, and will recommend it to all." When you can get a thoroughly reliable, well-made Sewing Machine for 6s. 6d, doing work as well as one at two guineas, you are foolish not to do so. They do the most beautiful work, they are splendidly made, and we hold the entire stock. You cannot get a LOCKSTITCH machine in your town under about 40s. We offer you one for 6s. 6d., examined and guaranteed by us to be perfect. We will pack it in box and send it, carriage paid, to your door, without any extra charge. Every machine is beautifully silver-plated, has a real shuttle, and is a real LOCKSTITCH, not Chain Stitch, Machine. It is an absurd price, and you may think there is some catch in it, but it is absolutely true, and if not you can send it back. The manufacturers wanted money, and we bought their stock at a ruination price. If you have any doubt write to your friends in London to call and see them. Plenty of people do this, and when they see them, wonder how we can sell them for the money, and of course it could not be done in the ordinary way. It is just the chance of a lifetime. Do not wait till they are all gone as we cannot get any more, and you will not see this advertisement again, as we feel sure we shall get more orders than we can execute, so send at once. Remember the price, 6s 6d., includes the Lockstitch Machine complete, guaranteed by us, and delivered, carriage paid. Send for extra needles, 1s. per dozen. Three extra spools for 6d. Oil-can, 4d. Specimen of work done by machine, 1d.
J. THEOBALD & CO.,
Purchasers of Bankrupt Stocks, &c. Est. 60 years.
43, FARRINGDON ROAD, LONDON, E.C.

"THE WORLD'S PROVED REMEDY
FOR ALL CHEST DISEASES."
COUGH, ASTHMA,
CHRONIC BRONCHITIS,
INFLUENZA,
THERE IS NONE TO EQUAL IT.
Rev. F. E. HEAPE, of DERBY, in a recent letter, says: "Your Medicine always puts my lungs right, and drove out the terrible INFLUENZA last May."
This Medicine has been prepared for 65 years.
CONGREVE'S BALSAMIC ELIXIR.
In Bottles, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 22s., may be had of all Chemists and Medicine Vendors.

TEA! TEA! TEA!
FROM
INDIA, CEYLON, AND CHINA.
Best Quality and Best Value.
From 1/6 to 3/6 per lb. Samples Grati.
Carriage Paid on Parcels of 6lbs. and upwards
Robinson & James,
42, TRINITY SQUARE, TOWER HILL
LONDON, E.C.

TOOTH-ACHE
CURED INSTANTLY BY
BUNTER'S NERVINE
Prevents Decay, Saves Extraction, Sleepless Nights Prevented.
Neuralgic Headaches and all Nerve Pains removed by BUNTER'S NERVINE. All Chemists, 1s. 1½d.

Certain HARNESS Cure.
ELECTROPATHIC BELT
FOR
LUMBAGO
Mr. J. B. CARNE, Station Master L. B. & S. C. Ry., Clapham Junction Station, S.W., writes:—"I have derived great benefit from wearing your Electropathic Belt. The Lumbago and pains in my back have both ceased."
Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.
Only Address,
52, OXFORD ST., LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)
Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

Digitized by Google

LUNG SAVE YOUR LIVES BY TAKING TONIC
LUNG OWBRIDGE'S TONIC
LUNG LUNG TONIC TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG THE MIGHTY HEALER. TONIC
LUNG It has a power over disease hitherto TONIC
LUNG unknown in Medicine. TONIC
LUNG Are you at all Weak-chested or in- TONIC
LUNG clined to be Consumptive, with just a TONIC
LUNG touch of Cough now and then? TONIC
LUNG "Try this Wonderful Medicine." The TONIC
LUNG Cough and Weakness will disappear as TONIC
LUNG if by magic, and you will feel a strength TONIC
LUNG and power you never had before. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COUGH? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COLD? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL TONIC
LUNG REMOVE IT! TONIC
LUNG Bronchitis & Asthma it relieves instantly TONIC
LUNG The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful TONIC
LUNG in Whooping Cough become less with TONIC
LUNG each dose of the medicine. TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE Chemist Hull TONIC
LUNG Sold in bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. TONIC
LUNG and 11s., by all Chemists and Patent TONIC
LUNG Medicine Vendors. Wholesale all TONIC
LUNG London and Provincial Houses. TONIC

The True and Divine Appointment for the Cure of Disease.
Send to
B. V. SCOTT, M.B.M.R.S.,
College of Health, 121, Kensington, Liverpool,
for his
VOICE OF NATURE TO THE INVALID,
Post free 5 stamps.

Thousands of incurables (so-called) have proved God's own means could save when others failed.

Rev. F. Harper says of Mr. Scott's book: "It is a library in itself, and free from quackery."

Rev. Lush says: "Mr. Scott's treatment is natural, safe, reasonable, and Scriptural."

Send for the Book at once.

PAGE WOODCOCK'S
WIND PILLS

It is astonishing how many people imagine they suffer from

HEART DISEASE

They experience a depressing feeling about the region of the heart, accompanied by an occasional stab of pain, nervous debility, loss of appetite and general depression. The fact is they suffer from

INDIGESTION, OR DYSPEPSIA.

The food, instead of being thoroughly digested, develops int › Wind, and flies about the valves of the heart causing the symptoms named. All who suffer in this way should at once take

Page Woodcock's Wind Pills,

A world-renowned remedy for all Stomach disorders.

All Sufferers from INDIGESTION, LIVER COMPLAINTS, WIND on the STOMACH, COSTIVENESS, SICK HEADACHE, HEARTBURN, NERVOUS DEBILITY, PALPITATION of the HEART, BILIOUSNESS, &c.,

should avail themselves of this most excellent medicine.

Of all Medicine Vendors, at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d., or Post Free for P.O. or Stamps, from PAGE WOODCOCK, Lincoln.

NEW CATALOGUE of Works on Our Identity post free from R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

GIGANTIC SALE OF

100 COLOURS TO SELECT FROM

In consequence of the mild season, we have still in stock over 250,000 DRESS LENGTHS of our famous Cloths which, in order to effect a rapid clearance we have reduced to less than Manufacturers' Cost Price. 100 lovely new colours to select from. All goods are new and in perfect condition. We will gladly send patterns post free, and they need not be returned. Write to-day for patterns and Sale Price List
FULL DRESS LENGTHS OF MAGNIFICENT CLOTHS 9s.6d. CARRIAGE PAID.

GREATEST BARGAINS EVER OFFERED

LADIES CLOTH DRESSES

GENUINE REDUCTIONS! WRITE FOR PATTERNS

LUTAS LEATHLEY & Co. ARMLEY, LEEDS.

MASON'S EXTRACT OF HERBS FOR MAKING NON-INTOXICATING BEER

WE ALL REQUIRE SOMETHING TO DRINK

The finest, most refreshing and pleasantest beverage obtainable. One table-spoonful of this Extract makes one gallon of splendid Beer. Try it. A sample bottle, enough to make eight gallons, post free for 9 stamps.

NEWBALL & MASON, NOTTINGHAM.

AGENTS WANTED.

MASON'S WINE ESSENCES, non-intoxicating. For children's parties and social gatherings. A 6d. bottle will make one gall. of delicious wine. Post free 9 stamps, or a bottle of both Extract of Herbs and Wine Essence post free 15 stamps.

New Pamphlet Just Issued, price 3d., by post 3½d.; one dozen, post free, 3s.

Every Anglo-Israelite should read

ISRAEL A CHRISTIAN NATION AT THE PRESENT DAY.

BY COL. WM. CAREY. C.B.

London: ROBERT BANKS AND SON, Racquet Court, Fleet S reet, or by order of any Bookseller.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument Proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.: 6s. per 100, postage 1d.
R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

PHOSPHORUS

A new process of preparing this necessary food for the Brain and Nervous System, invented by Mr. Samuel Birley, M.D., renders its therapeutic value superior to all the Phosphates, Hypophosphites, &c., usually perscribed. May be taken for years with perfect safety! Descriptive pamphlet free to enquirers (mentioning this paper), from

GORDON, MURRAY & Co., Ltd.
10, ADAM STREET, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.

TEETH.—£1 A FULL SET

ESKELL'S.—CELEBRATED MAKE, £2 2s. Warranted and fitted in one visit. No extractions needed. HALF A MILLION SETS already supplied. The Nursing Record and Hospital World says:—We recommend all who require Reliable and Good Teeth at a small cost to go to Messrs. ESKELL, 445, Strand (facing Charing Cross Station), and 58, Ludgate Hill, City, London. Also at 27, Western Road, Brighton, and 23, Mount Pleasant, Tunbridge Wells. Hours 9 till 7. Illustrated Pamphlets, explaining everything, free. Established 100 years.

Just ready, 220 Large Post 8vo. pages, in clear, readable type, price 2s. 6d., limp cloth, gilt lettered, red edges, post free to any part of the world on receipt of postal remittance.

Nineteen Centuries Ago and NOW.

BY J. C. H. MEHL.

WITH BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH,

BY E. M. RUSH.

CONTENTS.—Biographical Sketch—Nineteen Centuries Ago and Now—Letter to the Editor of the Banner of Israel—A German's Views on Our Identity—The Church of England—The Woman Arrayed with the Sun (Rev. xii.)—"Remember the Sabbath Day to Keep It Holy"—"Blessed are the Meek, for They Shall Inherit the Earth"—The Spirit of Negation, and the Spirit of Prayer—"Righteousness Exalteth a Nation"—"The Dispersion Among the Greeks"—The Protracted Era of Grace—"The Power of the Holy People"—The Present Aspect of the Kingdom of Heaven—One, and Yet Many—A Great Truth Slow in its Progress—A Two-fold Alienation—On Co-operating with the Divine Purpose—A Lamp Shining in a Dark Place (2 Pet. i. 19)—Was St. Patrick an Israelite, and Was He Aware of It?

LONDON:
ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., or by order of any bookseller.

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co. (Ltd.) 23, Paternoster-row. Wednesday, FEBRUARY 15, 1893. All Rights Reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India).

"And the Remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS OF THE EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XVII., No. 843. Entered at Stationer's Hall] WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1893 [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
"The Pyre of Nations"	97
The Egyptian Hubbub. By J. G. Taylor	98
A Lecture by the Rev. Denis Hanan, D.D., in Ireland	99
The Descent of the Anglo-Saxons. By F. Gass	100
Mr. Mark Levy	101
Nut to Crack.—No. 7	101
John Bunyan's Desire to be an Israelite. By Rev. J. Idrisyn Jones	102
Sowing the Seed. By E. M. Rush	103
Review	105
Correspondence	105

"THE PYRE OF NATIONS."

WE are not alone in anticipating the occurrence of a great earthquake "war-woe," such as there has not been since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake and so great! The Scriptures, as our readers well know, tell us such a convulsion is surely coming, and the signs seem to indicate to us that it will be not long delayed. We are able to show, and as a matter of fact have constantly in these pages, on Identity grounds, indicated to our readers in what quarter the storms are gathering. The air is full of them, and now and again we find our secular newspapers suddenly waking up to the consciousness of the fact that a mighty cataclysm is at hand and that we may look for it from the direction of the Czar of all the Russias! We are bidden to notice that the nations are piling on their armour, that "for twenty years past what might become the 'pyre of nations' has been in process of building!" What an idea does this convey of a mighty conflagration! The nations have, in this figure, been busy for twenty years in erecting a vast stage to act as "the pyre" of dead nations, and are only waiting the moment when the torch shall be applied, and the whole consumed!

The chief actors in this terrific drama are described as "Nihilist Russia" and "infidelistic and revengeful France"! The present condition of things is stated to be an existing "terror," which for the moment is abated, but none can say has been removed. The objects at which Russia is striking, are also clearly seen to be just those we have so often indicated—namely, Constantinople; but the latter Gate, as we believe, only as a means to an end—namely, the occupation of Palestine and the holy places, according to the programme laid down in Ezek. xxxviii. and xxxix. The other object of the Muscovite is believed, by our secular writers, to be India; but this only in a secondary degree, the first being the great European Gate, when the Ottoman Empire falls to pieces, and the map of Europe will be vastly altered.

These ideas are pretty general now, and most men, given to thought, cannot but see that the time is not far off, when the Eastern Question must come on again (as a part of the controversy of Zion according to our view, Isa. xxxiv. 8), and preparation must be made for the strategical control by this nation of countries like Egypt and India, to further the great Divine programme of the happy, blessed, restoration of Israel, Judah, and Manasseh, to their own land, together. We have been led into these reflections by the perusal, not for the first time, of an article written on Dec. 28, last, by the Irish Times. It is a remarkable deliverance, and one which it will be seen might well have appeared in the BANNER itself. The writer said, inter alia.

> We are about to enter upon a year, the history of which, in all human probability, will involve greater and graver issues than the generation has heretofore had to face. Upon all sides we find Europe armed to the teeth. The burden of the enormous warlike organisations on shore and sea grows heavier, and so complicated have the interests of States become, that the outbreak of war would, almost of necessity, involve every Power in a struggle whereof human imagination can conceive no end. For twenty years what might become the pyre of nations has been in process of building. State after State has competed in the collection of material, and now, looking upon what has been accomplished, we may well stand aghast at the powers of destruction which at any time may be put to a fell and terrible test. All our boasted civilization has not laid the grim spectre of war. It has been made a thousand-fold more frightful in aspect, but it has not been banished. The prayer for peace in our time has never more fervently been uttered, but it is accompanied by fears which no one pretends to misunderstand. At any point the torch might be applied. Many times within the past twelve months the danger was imminent. The crisis barely tided over in France might have ended differently. The horrors of the barricades, and of the Commune, might have been re-enacted upon the most shifting and blood-stained stage in the Western world. These we have escaped, but how near we were to the catastrophe the students of the times know. We have seen no decline of the racial hatred between the Teutonic and the Gaulish races. Both have been making ready. Both have vastly increased their armaments, and the occurrence of an international feud now would mean much more than when the brief war game of 1870 was played out, and culminated in the horrors of civil disintegration. And, further, in the case of Russia there is a force which loves not peace. The cry of "wolf" has so often been raised that it is now well-nigh disregarded. But the power of disruption is still at work, and has intermitted none of its designs. To its quarter, if the public apprehension mistakes not, anxious eyes will be turned during the coming year. Slow in advance, but keenly cunning in design, the Russian men of war have been planning and plotting long in advance of circumstances. The corruption of the French Republic—the canker which still gnaws at its vitals—has saved the world from a mischievous alliance for a while, though there still are at work the framers of an evil which we have but too good reason to dread. Nihilist Russia in association with infidelistic and revengeful France is a combination which may well startle the world, and though for a while the terror is abated, who can tell that it has been removed?

Digitized by Google

To such considerations as these, which will strike every reflecting observer, point is given by an article from the able pen of Herr Karl Blind which appears in the January number of the United Service Magazine. The subject of the writer's discourse is "Russia's Final Aim in Asia." He sets the hard fact before the public that "within our memory, the armies of the Czar have swept from the shores of the Caspian through what was formerly known as Independent Tartary, right up to Afghanistan—nay, into that very bulwark of England's Asiatic Empire. Whilst this country (he adds) has reached greatness of power there without much system and design, and rather by frequent chance and the favour of circumstances, there can be no doubt for the student of history, or the close observer of Russian procedures, that the gradual, persistent, and latterly most speedy approach of Northern autocracy towards India, is part and parcel of a deep plan, the result of 'malice aforethought.' Constantinople and India are the two aims which have for a long time been steadfastly kept in view by the Court of St. Petersburg and its military and bureaucratic class. These are the centres towards which its policy constantly gravitates in the endeavour of establishing Muscovite world-dominion." The situation stands now thus. In times of faineant policy upon the part of England, Russia has been allowed to secure a footing upon the frontiers of India from which she cannot be dislodged. In the direction of Constantinople she has also pushed her steps, and the instant that the question arises of dividing the heritage of the "Sick Man" she will put a finger in the pie, and actually will be in a position to reap the first fruits of opportunity. The possession of Constantinople is, perhaps, a more grateful dream of the Muscovite imagination than a successful raid upon a portion of India. That seems to be the opinion of the writer of this remarkable article, and he further expresses his conviction that both Liberal and Conservative statesmen, the former pre-eminently so, have strangely erred in under-rating the danger of Russia's forward policy in Central Asia. Mr. Gladstone found it suited his purposes to describe the apprehensions of as able men as himself as a "political nightmare." But, as it is argued, those who agreed with him "certainly did not foresee the rapidity of events which have occurred within the last thirty years. When one stage after the other of Muscovite progress in the direction of India was found to be strewn with proofs of broken pledges given to England by the Court of St. Petersburg, they still persevered in their incomprehensible infatuation." We need not follow the reasoning further. Its drift is clear. It is obvious to every student of political history that Russia is awaiting her dual opportunity—on the frontiers of India and on the Bosphorous. The break-up of the Ottoman Empire which Hallam predicted has come nearer within the limits of measurable possibility, and Russia is ready—to quote the fanciful phrase of Keats—to "seize the arrow's barb ere yet the tense string murmur." The year closes in doubt and danger so far as the foreign outlook is concerned, and we may well conjecture that we stand upon the threshold of great events in the history of the world.

Whether the year 1893 may be the one which will introduce these mighty changes seems doubtful. The year, at any rate, does not seem marked in any schemes of prophetic interpretation as one which will be critical. However that may be, the facts are patent. Circumstances are taking place in Europe, and preparations making, which plainly point to an impending convulsion such as prophecy calls for and men anticipate with terror. "Men's hearts" are already "failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth" (Luke xxi. 26). For the nations of Europe the outlook is dreadful, but for ourselves, because we are Israel, there is comfort and consolation. Then it will be ours to lift up our heads, and look up, for our redemption draweth nigh (Luke xxi. 28). To the Lord be all the praise!

THE EGYPTIAN HUBBUB.

By J. G. Taylor.

If France could have foreseen the far-reaching result of her hesitation when the British fleet was threatening Alexandria, she would have adopted a widely different course. She would probably have spent her last franc to ward off the mortifying spectacle of a British protectorate over the land of the Pharaohs. But nations cannot read the future any more than individuals; and, like individuals, they have to bear the consequences of their mistakes. It would seem that France finds it very hard to do this. She is perfectly aware that her exclusion from Egypt was self-inflicted, and counter to the wishes of the British Administration; she must also be aware that our occupation of the country has relieved the population of a grinding tyranny, and that, in prosecution of this laudable object, English life and treasure have been profusely sacrificed. Yet the French have nothing but spite and abuse for us. Ever since our control was established, they have shamefully hampered the Egyptian executive in its policy of regeneration, and now that they have Russia at their back they are waxing a little bolder. No one is so dull as not to see that the recent action of the young Khedive in changing the members of his ministry, was instigated by foreigners, nor is it difficult to understand how they have managed to gain his ear. The present position of Abbas will not be, in his own eyes, particularly dignified or exalted. He has not a tithe of the luxuries, or liberties, or prerogatives, of his grandfather, and is not likely to have them either, so long as his affairs are superintended by a race which believes that the happiness of a people is more desirable than the indulgences of a monarch. In these circumstances it is comparatively easy to wean him from his allegiance by fanning his ambition, and holding out the prospect of a return to something of the good old days when plunder and oppression went unchecked. These are the tactics of the Cairo French, and naturally they are aided by all the "unemployed" pachas, and the whole army of ex-officials who used to fatten on their extortions. We do not say that the French want to reinstate the lash and the corvée. It is notorious that the latter would have been abolished sooner than it was had it not been for their opposition—an opposition which is systematic. Still, we would not do them an injustice, and assert that they are anxious to restore the cruelties which lately had full sway in Egypt. But it is plain that the interests of the native are secondary considerations with them, and they are willing to imperil his deliverance from slavery provided they can only overthrow the British supremacy. Hence they were jubilant at the appointment of Fakhri Pacha because it was a blow at our authority, and were not at all disturbed by the fact that the presence of such a man as Premier meant the stoppage of reform, and perhaps the undoing of much which had alleviated the sufferings of the fellaheen.

Digitized by Google

It is suggested by certain "special correspondents" that the Turk and not the Gaul was the real prompter of the Khedive. How did they learn it? If the Turk was at the bottom of this escapade, he is taking his rebuff very quietly. The Porte has not muttered a protest that can be heard. The noise comes from an altogether different quarter. Of course it is not to be supposed that the French Cabinet is directly mixed up with the plot. The French colony can play the game with less danger, while the French newspapers make no secret of their leanings towards the Khedive, and are thus participants in his reactionary conduct. Their language cannot be misapprehended. The Figaro stated that "if Abbas Pacha continues his present course he will greatly facilitate the task of the French Ambassador in London, who will be charged to discuss the Egyptian question with the Foreign Office." Another confessed that Abbas had the sympathy of the French nation, and ought to have the assistance of French diplomacy; and they all sincerely compassionated him on the result of his ill-starred attempt to secure his "freedom." Even the sedate Temps could not refrain from referring to the Khedive's "cage" and "chains," regardless of the chains which Fakhri would be pleased to rivet once more on the poor peasantry. The whole French and Russian press sent up their chorus in a similar strain of sorrow, and it is significant that they were alone in their lamentations. Every Power not blinded by prejudice is desirous that we should remain in the Delta, knowing well, from past performances, that our designs are not selfish, but beneficient. It seems to us that in prolonging this vindictive hostility, France is depriving herself of the right to be called a civilized nation. No properly civilized people would go hand in hand with a brutal despotism like Russia, or set themselves against the elevation of a population which has been trodden upon by aliens for twenty-four centuries. Civilization does not consist in the civilities of a boulevard, or the gilt of a picture gallery. It should serve the same purpose in the moral universe as a fountain or a stream in the material universe, and send forth healthy influences into less favoured lands. The most captious critic would not deny that we have been discharging this function in Egypt, and discharging it to a far greater extent than when the Dual Control was in existence; whereas the attitude of France is but worthy of Turkey or Russia, Pachas and Czars; her very appropriate allies in this broil.

When we remember how the French were expelled from India and America, we cannot suppress a feeling of condolence with them in their enormous losses, and now that Egypt has followed suit, we are sure there is no disposition amongst us to cherish a spirit of boasting. That would be as offensive in us as it would be to them. But they will gain nothing by kicking against the pricks: by deep scheming or dark threats. We went down into Egypt, and we will remain there. This was seen from the first, without the guiding light of the Identity. No doubt, the statesmen who committed the deed, and who were pledged to reduce the Empire, or at least to arrest it, spoke of the expedition as a matter of "police." We would rescue Egypt from the bane of military rule, and then gracefully retire, Six months was assigned as the outside limit of our tenancy, and bearing this in mind, it is no wonder that the French accuse us of perfidy, dishonesty, and falsehood. But independent politicians of both parties had the confidence to ridicule the six months theory, and put the date of our evacuation at the Greek Kalends. One of them declared "we have laid the nest egg of an African Empire. Our borders, like the poet's North, will recede as we advance. It will be Cairo now, Khartoum next, the sources of the White Nile some other time, and on and on till we reach Natal, and hold unbroken sway from Alexandria to the Cape." This has the appearance of a prophecy in view of Cecil Rhodes' proposals to join the Cape with Egypt by rails and wires; and the reason why men are able to prophecy on this point is that they are beginning to recognize the destiny of the empire. The story of its expansion is becoming stereotyped. It is noticed that the Briton has an incurable habit of periodically seizing somebody's territory, and the equally inveterate habit of keeping what he gets. And if politicians can make these blind guesses at the truth, it should be very easy for believers in the Identity to predict the train of events. We have laid the nest egg of an African Empire. The healing of Egypt and Africa will continue. The late conspiracy has simply shown the world who are the masters of Egypt, and who are not; and every effort to dislodge us will lead to the tightening of our grasp, until Mizraim and Ethiopia are subjugated for God.

A LECTURE BY THE REV. DENIS HANAN, D.D., IN IRELAND.

THE following appeared in The Waterford Standard of December 7, 1892, and will interest the readers of the BANNER. The Rev. Dr. Hanan's utterances are always important and acceptable to our friends on this side of St. George's Channel.

"LECTURE AT TRAMORE.

"On Friday, 2nd inst., a learned and interesting lecture was delivered in the Church School House, Tramore, by the Rev. Denis Hanan, D.D., Rector of Tipperary. The subject of the lecture was 'Modern Israel—a Working Theory—a Practical Fact,' in other words, an investigation of our claim to identification with the House of Israel. Dr. Hanan has taken a deep interest in this subject for many years, and has lectured on it frequently in this country and in England; it is no wonder then that he was enabled to keep the attention of his audience for an hour and forty-five minutes. The lecturer traced God's revealed purpose with respect to Israel, commencing from Abraham's call and promise; their deliverance from Egypt; their settlement under Joshua; the division of the Kingdom under Rehoboam. About 250 years after separation, the House of Israel, as a nation, was carried into captivity from which it has never been restored to the land. The history of the two kingdoms ever since their separation was distinct. The Jew is to be seen in every land under the sun. He is a living witness of the truth of Scripture. The history of Israel is not so clear. He is supposed to have buried himself in the unknown regions of heathendom, but that theory is not borne out by Holy Scripture. Israel was by God's promise to be blessed by having a place of safety (2 Sam. vii. 10), of being recovenanted (Hos. i., ii.), of having Joseph's portion (Gen. xlix. 25), of becoming multitudinous, of developing into a nation, and a company of nations; of being ever a nation

Digitized by Google

(Jer. xxxi. 36), of becoming the kingdom prophesied by Isaiah, Ezekiel, and Daniel. The lecturer, after tracing Israel's journey from the Caspian Sea, where it is known they were carried captive, until they settled in these far-off and far-famed isles of the sea, showed that Britain now occupies Israel's place. The prophecies in the Bible answer to no other nation, but are properly descriptive of Britain and her numberless colonies. (1) Ephraim was to become a multitude of nations. (2) Children of Joseph were to be a very strong people. (3) They were to have the blessings of the deep (Gen. xlix. 25). The supremacy of the British power on the sea is universally acknowledged. (4) Ephraim was to possess great wealth (Deut. xxxiii. 13—16). (5) Israel was to lend unto many nations, but not to borrow. England is the bank of the world; she lends to all nations, but never borrows.

"The lecturer concluded his eloquent discourse by saying that, having come out of the region of 'theory' into that of historic fact, it was the duty of the nation to witness to the faithfulness of God by acknowledging His hand. He briefly showed its duty towards Judah, towards the world, towards the land, towards the National Church.

"A hearty vote of thanks was proposed to Dr. Hanan by Mr. H. J. Forde, seconded by Mr. T. D. Smith.

"The Chairman (Rev. Chancellor Toppin) concluded the proceedings by reading the prayer for Christian Missions."

THE DESCENT OF THE ANGLO-SAXONS.

By F. Gass.

(Continued from page 87.)

PART II.

Respecting the place of habitation of the progenitors of the British race, in their Continental home, previous to crossing the Channel into Britain, it is not suggested by any historian of note that we came out from the midst of the Teutonic family of nations. The great Anglo-Saxon tribe that has stamped itself so strongly on our nation, settled to the North of the German tribes, near the Danish peninsula on the borders of Scandinavia. Professor John Earle, in "The Philology of the English Tongue," says: "It was at the point of junction between these halves—at the neck of the Danish peninsula, along the banks of the Elbe, and along the south-west coasts of the Baltic—that our continental progenitors lived and spoke. . . . Our ancestors can hardly be classed as pure and unadulterated Teutons. The Saxons were a border people and their language was strongly impregnated with border associations."

The chief points relied upon in the ordinary method of tracing the descent of the Anglo-Saxons are two. First: that our mother tongue is, in fundamentals, to be identified with the Platt-Deutsch, the dialect of the Hanseatic cities, therefore we are of Teutonic origin. Second, that we came from the northern branch of the great Teutonic family of nations, and are therefore of common descent. The first point has long since been disposed of by general consent among philologists, that contact with a powerful body of men speaking one tongue, particularly in a wild, nomadic state of life, is sufficient, without intermarriage and racial affinity, to account for a change of language in a smaller tribe. The matter is well summed up in the pithy sentence that has appeared before, more than once, in the Banner:—"Language is proof of contact, but not of race." In his characteristic way, Grant Allen says: "Skulls are harder than consonants, and races lurk behind when languages slink away."

The second point depends for its cogency very much on the character of the country at large, the people, and their surroundings. The state of Eastern Europe, when the Germanic tribes were slowly working their way westward is lucidly described by Gibbon in the "Decline and Fall." These tribal village settlements were clearings made often in the midst of dense forests, by the side of streams and lagoons. So that the isolation of each settlement was practically complete, and it was not safe for any person to pass from one to another without giving, as he drew near the border of his neighbour's clearing, some well-understood signal of his presence, such as blowing a horn. Anyone venturesome enough to neglect this precaution was liable to be transfixed with an arrow, for which his family had no legal redress in the rough but necessary laws of the time. This state of things was compulsory, otherwise a spy might lurk in security under cover of the woods, with a sinister purpose. From this it will be seen that if language is no proof of the Saxons origin, the mode of life at that early and uncultivated period, is far indeed from involving a demonstration that the racial connection between them and their German neighbours was one.

Grant Allen ("Anglo-Saxon Britain") has not much to say in favour of the manners of our ancestors:—"The Anglo-Saxons when they settled in Eastern and Southern England were a horde of barbarous heathen pirates. They massacred or enslaved the civilised or half-civilised Celtic inhabitants with savage ruthlessness. They burnt or destroyed the monuments of Roman occupation. They let the roads and cities fall into utter disrepair. They stamped out Christianity from end to end of their domain, and restored the land to its primitive barbarisms. Nor was there any improvement until Christian teachers from Rome and Scotland once more introduced the forgotten culture which the English pirates had utterly destroyed."

This description of our forefather's method of colonising Britain differs, as light from darkness, from the later mode of the great Anglo-Saxon race in colonising so great a portion of the world as they have done, and may not be quite pleasant reading, but it is endorsed by Professor Freeman and other historians, and doubtless is true. The noblest races of men the world has seen came from a like parentage, to wit, the Romans, who, as Canon Rawlinson states, passed from the wandering robber life of the eighth century B.C., to the splendour and law-abiding rule of the Cæsars, possessing and governing the major part of the world with the keen intelligence of a high civilisation. The rough actions of our forefathers in those primitive times were but the finest qualities of man, run wild from want of understanding. Great physical strength, high courage, long endurance, overflowing energy and superior cunning afterwards developing into high intelligence. Without "law" there is to a great extent an absence of "sin"; and we may console ourselves that so it was with our lawless ancestors.

It may be taken almost as an axiom that predatory tribes on reaching the coast take to the sea as pirates and adventurers; and our progenitors probably did not remain long after reaching the seaboard, and becoming expert seamen before crossing over to the coasts of Britain. Such tribes, in association with the formidable Scandinavian "Vikings," would be little relished by their quieter Teutonic, inland, southern neighbours. They would be given plenty of room and little companionship. Hence the anger of historians is misplaced, at the objection to their view, that the Anglo-

Digitized by Google

Saxons can be traced back in company with the Indo-Germanic peoples to their home, in common, among the great table-lands and plains of Central Asia.

At the time of the migration to these shores, a considerable body of Saxons remained behind on the mainland and founded Saxony, but the tribes were separated into families, and they may have been the purest race who colonised England. The continental Saxons founded no lasting, first class dynasty, and it is said that very little trace is left of the original race; they have died out. "By race the majority of the people inhabiting Saxony are Germanised Slavs" (Chambers' "Encyclopædia").

They had their freedom of choice, either to go forward with their brethren or to remain, but were not willing to follow the destinies of Israel. They may not have been Israelites, but if they were, accordingly despised their birthright, and so were cut off from any share in the promises made to the fathers.

I have mentioned elsewhere, that the Angles crossed over to Britain in a body. There is no trace of any Angli-men, i.e., "Englishmen," in Denmark or Germany after the exodus to Britain. Their language, of which a dialect still survives in Friesland, has utterly died out in Sleswick.

(To be continued.)

MR. MARK LEVY.

In our notice of the circular issued by Mr. Mark Levy in connection with the Christian Jews' Patriotic Alliance, we unwittingly did that gentleman an injustice when we stated that "he was not prepared to accept the Identity," and "the idea doubtless was foolishness to him" (see BANNER, No. 838, p. 43).

Mr. Mark Levy is a Jew by birth, and a Christian by religion. He has been carefully studying the evidence in support of our contention respecting the Identity of the British with the Lost Ten Tribes, and the result is, according to his own words addressed to us, as follows:—"I frankly admit," he says, "that if I were on a jury, and compelled to deliver a verdict on the evidence advanced in support of 'the Identity' in your 'Handbook' for Enquirers,' I should adjudge the case as proven." This is very satisfactory, and calls for an apology on our part, that we too hastily concluded, judging from his published words, that Mr. Mark Levy was not on our side, or likely to be so. We are rejoiced to know that "the President of the Patriotic Alliance of the Christian Jews" is practically a believer in our views. We understand that he is about to visit America so that we shall not have the advantage of his advocacy here. We trust he will proclaim the good news in the States, and that others will be won over by the exertions of our London friends, who are striving, with God's help, to convince converted Jews who come under their influence, that "Lost Ephraim is found," and that the British are they. May the work in this direction of Dr. H. Alder-Smith and Mr. Bergmann be abundantly prospered.

Since the above was written we have received the following lines from Mr. Mark Levy, addressed originally to Dr. H. Alder-Smith. Our readers will peruse the verses with joy, since they prove that the writer is entirely on our side by conviction, and is further prepared to announce to the world that it is so. We heartily congratulate Mr. Mark Levy on the change which his opinions have undergone, and trust that he may now find it possible with voice and pen to bring other Jews, converted to Christ or not, to accept Our Identity as the most glorious news yet published for poor down-trodden, unhappy Judah; the first fruits of greater tidings of great joy, yet in store for him. Mr. Mark Levy is just the agent qualified for this work, and we trust he will be constrained to accept it for Christ's sake. His lines are as follows:—

LOST EPHRAIM'S FOUND! SHOUT, JUDAH, FOR JOY!!

Are Britons true Hebrews—the Israel of old,
Unto whom God has given, as prophets foretold,
The fulness of covenant blessings below
His gracious omnipotent love did bestow?
Yes, Britons are Hebrews—Lost Ephraim found,
In whose Isles of th' West birthright blessings abound.
Lost Ephraim's found! Shout, Judah, for joy,
And every emotion of triumph employ;
For now thou canst change thy sad garments of fear
To brave robes of glory thy brethren wear,—
Lost Ephraim found, thy brothers by birth,
Exult as the conquering nation on earth!
Now fewer vile taunts in thy teeth will be cast,
And the ages of scorn are hurrying past,
For Britain sad Judah's stern battles will fight,
And on thy dear sons shed prophetical light.
Shout, Judah, for joy thy redemption draws nigh,
The beauty of blessing is hovering by;
In the near future on Canaan's fair land
In glory triumphant Messiah will stand.

MARK LEVY.

To Dr. H. Alder-Smith.

NUT TO CRACK.—No. 7.

"Sold his birthright."—Heb. xii. 16.

In popular theology the misunderstanding is very prevalent that God's covenant with Abraham is summed up in one spiritual blessing—viz., that "in his seed (which is Christ) shall all the nations of the earth be blessed!" Doubtless this is the first and greatest of its blessings; but (seeing that it is absolutely universal) if it were all, what is there left to constitute any special birthright to Esau and afterwards to Ephraim? This is another nut to crack. Our view is clear. As in No. 6, so again here, our point lies in a word or phrase ta prototokia. Out of this word we derive a great truth. Our Authorised Version translates the phrase by a single word birthright, but the Greek is plural, and signifies the rights of the firstborn, which are many. In conformity with the Authorized Version, the usual conception of the blessings of the Abrahamic covenant limits its promise to the single issue that salvation is brought to all nations through Christ.

It is of those who see no other than this one meaning that we (holding this its highest sense in common with them) would ask why is the birthright to this possession expressed by a plural word. In our belief the rights of birth which Esau inherited were manifold, as implied by the Greek word; and besides the spiritual heritage, they included the temporal endowments of enlargement, dominion, power, and all enabling means of carrying the spiritual blessings to the ends of the earth. That is a characteristic element in our doctrine. God has not only given a Saviour to the world, but has chosen "a peculiar people" to proclaim its tidings, and to manifest this Saviour unto all nations, which the profane Esau did not value as an heirloom in his family, and therefore "sold his birthright," with all its privileges and powers. Once more: can they, who limit the gift, tell us why it is expressed by a plural Greek word?

THE REV. P. C.

Edinburgh.

NOTE.—Nuts 6 and 7 form together the remarkable contrast of a singular Greek noun (dodecaphylon) standing for "the Twelve Tribes," and a plural noun (prototokia) for "the birthright."

Digitized by Google

JOHN BUNYAN'S DESIRE TO BE AN ISRAELITE.

By Rev. J. Idrisyn Jones.

John Bunyan would have been delighted if some one could have said to him that he was a lineal descendant of Abraham. All, therefore, who wish to claim such a pedigree stand in the same category as the famous author of the "Pilgrim's Progress," whose commanding intellect, and sweet goodness, and splendid labours confer a reflected honour on such as may be classified with him. In the early dawn of his spiritual experiences there came upon him the suspicion that he was a veritable literal Israelite, and an ardent, even passionate, longing seized him to find out whether he actually was one of those people who have held so conspicuous a place in the drama of the ages. He gives the following account of his feelings in paragraph No. 18 of his little book, "Grace Abounding": "After I had been thus for some considerable time, another thought came into my mind, and that was whether we were Israelites or no? For, finding in the Scriptures that they were once the peculiar people of God, thought I, if I were one of this race, my soul must needs be happy. Now, again, I found within me a great longing to be resolved about this question, but could not tell how I should. At last I asked my father of it, who told me, 'No, we were not,' wherefore then I fell in my spirit as to the hopes of that, and so remained."

Thus we see how the cup was dashed from his lips, from which he had hoped to sip an exhilarating draught of joy and hope which would enrich his soul and speed him on the tiresome pilgrimage to the city of God; and not until this illustrious pilgrim had waded through the river which had no bridge did he clearly understand that he was hewn out of the same rock and digged out of the same pit from whence the tribes of Israel came. But is it to be wondered that he died without any certainty as to the matter, when it is remembered (1) that in his day there was not a preacher in the land who could reveal it to him; that there was not a single writer on the stage who could publish a book for him on the subject. John Wilson, and Edward Hine, and Bishop Titcomb, and Philo-Israel, and others were as yet in the distant future. Oh, how he would have welcomed the clearer light of these days! Nor could the postman of those times have brought to his cottage a more acceptable budget than the literature of British-Israel truth. (2) That the British Empire was not so developed as to furnish the many tokens of its Israelitish origin as in these days; the colonies were yet unbegun; Manasseh had not gained its independence; the greater victories by sea and land had not then been won; England's supremacy had not asserted itself; her teeming population, her prodigious wealth, her evangelizing and civilizing mission were marks of Identity which belong to an age after that of Bunyan's; events were not yet ripe, and the portrait of the kingdom of Israel existed only in rude outline, and so John Bunyan had to go to his grave without seeing what we see and without hearing the blessed things that have gladdened our ears.

It will be pertinent to ask, how the thought of an Israelitish origin became started in the mind of John Bunyan. We think the clue is furnished by his words "for finding in the Scriptures," &c. It was from his Bible, then, the idea came; that sacred volume, of which he was so profound a student, and into which he had such a penetrative insight, burrowing down with his acute intellect into its deeper depths, and with his quick discernment gathering up meanings which lesser minds might altogether miss. In his Bible he must have found sufficient material to start him on the enquiry, whether he was "of the race of the Israelites or no." Would not, for instance, his attention become arrested by the fact, that the name "Abram" was changed into "Abraham," to signify that he was to be the father of many nations? Would he not also be led to ponder over the very remarkable prediction uttered by the dying Jacob concerning the two great nations—and the congeries of nations in these last days, springing from the two sons of Joseph? Is it not likely that Balaam's glowing picture of Israel's future; and the splendid visions of Isaiah and Jeremiah and the other prophets, of the seed of Abraham spreading over the world; conquering all their enemies; amassing the treasures of land and sea, and proving themselves the benefactors of all other nations, would awaken deep reflections. Then when he came to his New Testament, is it not likely that so mighty a searcher into its teachings would be struck by the fact that Israel formed the golden thread running all through it, as he read of Jesus and His apostles being sent to "the lost sheep of the House of Israel;" and that the latter in the time of final glory should be seated on twelve thrones, judging the Twelve Tribes; that Paul before Agrippa proclaimed to him that these Twelve Tribes were waiting for the fulfilment of the promise made to their forefathers; that the Epistles of James and Peter were dedicated to these scattered descendants of the patriarchs; and that in the visions of Patmos, John saw them in connection with some future crisis of the Church—and their names written on the twelve gates of the New Jerusalem? How likely that all these intimations made a powerful impression on this great Bible-reader, revealing to him that Israel had still a great rôle to fulfil; and that, therefore possibly, she was then to be found in the very people inhabiting these islands of the sea.

We might well express the wish that he were now amongst the living, instead of amongst the dead: who can doubt that in the former case we should find him amongst our foremost champions, and busy at work propagating the grand truth of an Abrahamic origin; writing, perhaps, the story of another pilgrimage—viz., from Samaria to Britain. How he would revel in the fact that with this truth he could shut the mouths of blatant infidels, and rescue his much-loved Bible from the charge of being the shrine of broken promises, and of a dishonoured covenant. With what enraptured praises would he acknowledge the goodness of God in placing his country at the head of all nations, and of distinguishing it from all, by giving to it the custodianship of the Gospel, and a mission of mercy to all people; fitting it for so great a task by lavish and munificent gifts of temporal power and wealth.

He must have watched the career of the two brothers, the one who despised and sold the birthright; and the other, who so eagerly coveted it. He must have been impressed with the contrast in their history: Jacob's prosperity rising into a consolidated nation amid the adverse influences of Egyptian slavery; causing the land of Egypt to quake and tremble because of them, while plague succeeded plague until they were freed from their bondage; triumphantly crossing an arm of the sea without a single ship or boat; marching on amid the miracles of God for forty years in the wilderness, finally gaining the Land of Promise, and there rising to be the most splendid kingdom yet seen, giving birth to kings and prophets, and warriors and patriots of great renown. While on the other hand, Esau's posterity becomes the wild Arabs of the desert, and the deluded victims of the false prophet Mahomed: a people without God, and without hope in the world. No wonder that he wanted to be a descendant of Jacob.

Digitized by Google

Yes, we wish that John Bunyan, with his big heart and his rich genius, were indeed with us to-day! But he sleeps in peace; undisturbed by the roar and din of the London which contains his ashes, his labours ended, and Jordan passed; but it will be for us to always remember him as the man in the 17th century who desired to be an Israelite.

Muswell-hill, N.

SOWING THE SEED.

By E. M. Rush.

With the beginning of a New Year, those who conduct a public work, depending, humanly speaking, for its very existence upon monies subscribed, must go over its records of the past year, and report to those who have entrusted them with their pounds, shillings, or pence. And so the Distributors of the Anglo-Israel Free Distribution Fund, look back over the twelve months that have passed and thankfully have to report progress.

1st. The Distributors record thankfully more money received. 2nd. They have the pleasure to report a gain of more Sowers. 3rd. The good news of seed-sowing accomplished over a wider field.

A detailed report will be found at the end of this paper of the amount of literature sent out, and of the free distribution of the Banner of Israel to various trusted Sowers who make good use of them by winning through these papers an interest in Our Identity with Israel, in those around them, and continually also, through the Banner, an increase of knowledge in the truths ascertained concerning Israel is provided in all divisions of the British Empire. We also at home, gain in return accounts of the glad reception of the revelation of Israel, and of the consequent greater regard for the Bible. Now what can we say, but, thank God! Let those who sow, and those who reap, and those who read of the work done, say from the heart,—Thank God! Then let us all endeavour to seek for a greater increase in all ways, on all sides.

Having this desire in mind, perhaps it will be of advantage to dwell for a few minutes upon what it is we are doing, to justify our own interest if it be needed at all, and to afford information to any who may be unacquainted with our work.

Free Distribution! Yes, free, but always with a curb on nevertheless. Not the wholesale broadcast free scattering. No that requires a magic purse, a lucky bag ever full. And even had we that, there would be no denying that behind the teeming press which it would command, there would be wanting the unknown power that would compel every eye to read. Would that we might have it! Failing that, it will be good to remember when haphazard sowing is desired, that there is the Waste Paper Basket always ready and willing to receive contributions, and it may be only too frequently made use of. Again, a repeated putting before people of matter which they do not wish for, is apt to induce contempt. So to those who are not familiar with the working of the Anglo-Israel Free Distribution Fund, it may be explained that the Method of Work is, to give liberally to those who cannot buy for themselves, but of whom there is well-grounded expectation that they will read, and try to induce others to do so.

Another division of our work is to lend publications. In this way some of the more expensive books, and others, pass from hand to hand, return to the Sowers, and go out again, and in rare cases, as occasion has seemed fit, Sowers have been encouraged to obtain purchasers for books in their hands, the money for which is returned to the Fund for further use. So our books, papers, pamphlets, and leaflets work their silent way, and it is endeavoured to avoid waste, and lead those who value the help given to contribute as they are able to the maintenance of the Fund, and to take their part in the honourable work of passing on the light to others. A sure test it is of the right spirit in which the truths we teach have been taken, when the pounds, shillings, or pence, as they can be really spared, are given in thankfulness for that which has been received, and when it has brought to heart and mind a deeper assurance of the faithfulness of Jehovah, of the truth of the Gospel of salvation, and of the love of God.

It may be well to consider a little more particularly what is the true meaning of this seed sowing. It is certainly Missionary work. Then it may be asked "What is the precise object of the Mission?" Turn to Matt. xxiv. 14, and we see the words of our Saviour—"And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in the whole world for a testimony unto all the nations." Can any one doubt that it is "this gospel of the kingdom" which British-Israelites preach and teach? And to make known "this gospel" is the object of our mission.

We hear it continually said, and we see it constantly written that now that "the Gospel" has been preached in nearly all lands, the second coming of our Lord must be imminent. Is this so? Let it be observed how carefully these speakers and writers leave out of count those pertinent words, probably because they do not understand them, which follow Christ's declaration of the preaching of "this gospel" (not the gospel), "this gospel of the kingdom. This is similar to the prevailing custom of ignoring the existence of Israel as a nation. Now we may ask, "Has this Gospel been preached?" "Truly no." Such must be the answer from those who can and will carefully weigh words and take note of what is generally taught by both churchmen and dissenters.

It should be noticed, for it has gained but little attention, the very frequent mention by our Lord of "the kingdom," "the kingdom of God," referring to it on many occasions as to an earthly kingdom rather than a spiritual, and by many indications showing that it was not in the heavens above. See one instance only (Matt. xxvi. 29). As there are literal and spiritual promises, so it seems there are the literal and spiritual kingdoms, the former to be pervaded by the elevating influences of the latter. It may perhaps be confidently asserted that a little care in thought and study will shew that in the preaching of "this gospel of the kingdom," the gospel of salvation must be included, but the gospel of salvation preached alone does not, and cannot, include that of the kingdom.

What is the situation then? It seems patent that only conscious British-Israelites are attempting to make known this complete gospel of the kingdom, and they are doing it with marked success. In this work the Anglo-Israel Free Distribution Fund is steadily and actively engaged.

Here and there in all quarters of the Empire the Sowers of the Seed supplied by our fund are proclaiming the fact that Israel exists, and the Kingdom within her. Is it not the beginning of great things and the commencement of the end of the insufficient teaching that has prevailed? And how should we increase all our efforts to make known the truths now being revealed in Israel—and for Israel, and for the whole world—to all missionaries, that "the testimony unto all nations" of the complete Gospel should be made.

Digitized by Google

So doubtless will the knowledge of salvation through our Saviour Jesus Christ be preached with additional power that God may be more fully glorified for the gift of His Son—"Christ Jesus, who gave Himself a ransom for all; the testimony to be borne in its own times" (1 Tim. ii. 6, R.V.), "whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, whereof God spake by the mouth of His holy prophets which have been since the world began" (Acts iii. 21).

Now and again there is evidence that individuals in foreign lands to whom the new light on Bible truth has been presented, are showing it to those around them, if they will receive it, and even now this truth concerning Israel is taking root in a place little expected, and this is beyond the bounds of Israel's Possessions.

BANNER readers have lately seen the mention of a strong interest that has sprung up in the Hawaiian Islands, and our ANGLO-ISRAEL FREE DISTRIBUTION FUND also acknowledges with thankfulness, generous aid from friends in those lovely Islands. It has come to us as a glad surprise, none the less because this warm interest has welled up outside the confines of the British Empire, the truth has fallen on fruitful soil. We little realize what is going on in distant lands in quiet, peaceful times, till some sudden motion appears to lift a veil.

Who of us is aware that in the Hawaiian Islands Christianity with civilization has made such progress that for the English-speaking people there is an Anglican cathedral in Honolulu, and churches, a bishop, and regular clergy, and there is issued a Monthly Church Chronicle which testifies within to the interest taken in church matters. But more than this, not only are there Native Christian Churches with ordained ministers, but there is an "Hawaiian Evangelical Association" which actively carries on home and foreign missions. To look through the Twenty-ninth Annual Report, and observe the varied and extensive work amongst those far-off Islands, is to make one say with shame, "What have we, the christians of this christian land, as it has been for many hundreds of years in Gospel light, to compare, in proportion to our years of privilege and our population, with such devoted efforts?"

Let us remember that every splendid christian work such as this brought to light does but stimulate the general body of the christian public throughout the world to cry out aloud, "The Gospel has been preached in all lands, our blessed Saviour's coming at any moment should be looked for." Yes, indeed, in a sense—for those who are called from this life. But has the Gospel of the Kingdom been preached? Can He come yet to Zion? Come over to Africa, East and West, see numbers of the natives as never before, accepting the Bread of Life, and themselves enduring in some places the fiery trial of persecution with the utmost fortitude, such persecution as we in our generation personally know nothing of. What an awakening! It takes us back in solemn thought to the early christian church with its patient, beautiful martyr spirits, and to the suffering times of persecution later down the ages. How one longs that these earnest, hopeful, young christian communities shall never experience the grave differences and violent rifts, breeding jealousies and heartburnings that have been, and still are, a most grievous blemish and great drawback to the christian character and power of our older christian Churches. See also in India, and China, and elsewhere, the missionaries of many societies, of many denominations, sowing the good seed of the Gospel of salvation, and, alas! sowing the tares unconsciously of religious differences.

With all this in our minds, let us, with prayer for guidance, think and act. What have we conscious British-Israelites to do? To sow the seed of the whole truth of the Gospel—of the kingdom, of salvation—to give out that knowledge which will stem the stream of infidelity that rises in our midst, because "this gospel of the kingdom" gives proof that the Bible is true. And we have to show to all christian workers, missionaries and others, at home and abroad, the wonderful revelation of Israel according to prophecy, which throws light on many, so many dark passages in the Word, gives point to a hundred arguments, teaches all to seek for union, sinking our differences, ever serving the Lord in preparation for the full fruition of the glorious hope that He has won for us that we may be counted worthy to see the Kingdom of God on earth, and inherit the Kingdom of Heaven.

May God grant that our hands may be further strengthened in all ways for the work that is before us, for His praise, and honour, and glory for ever.

A glance at the Report below will show where the seed has been cast during the year that has passed away and an idea may be gathered of the quantity and quality of that which has been sown.

TREASURER'S STATEMENT.

OUR friends will see from the following résumé of accounts that the receipts and expenditure for 1893 compare very favourably with those for 1892. Although more literature and BANNERS have been sent out, the postage is less than last year. This very satisfactory result is owing chiefly to two causes—1st, the reduction in size of the BANNER, the double number having been done away with, the copies for the first week in each month are sent out without extra cost; 2ndly, the very welcome reduction in foreign postage has helped materially to reduce this item in our expenditure. Leaflets, &c., are also sometimes sent out with BANNERS to make up weight.

	1893.	1892.
Income	£141 9 1½	£111 14 9
Literature ...	51 9 11½	28 5 11
BANNERS ...	33 6 8½	26 1 10
Postage	23 13 2½	25 5 6½

The receipts number 204, but the individual subscribers do not reach this number, as many friends very kindly send in subscriptions more than once during the year.

About 550 parcels of literature (besides the BANNERS sent weekly) have been despatched during the year.

The following is a list of places to which literature (including the BANNER OF ISRAEL) has been sent:—

Alverton, Aldershot, Alvaston, Attercliffe, Andover, Aasleigh, Beckingham, Brighton, Birmingham, Barnsley, Bingley, Bermondsey, Birkenhead, Bow, Barrow-in-Furness, Bishopstrow, Bournemouth, Commercial-road, E., Canterbury, Catford, Colchester, Crewe, Calne, Cowbridge, Chester, Carlisle, Claughton, Camberwell, Chatham, Chippenham, Clerkenwell, Cardiff, Collyhurst, Cockburnspath, Cork, Cheetham, Dover, Devenport, Dublin, Dalston, Dundee, Droitwich, East Grinstead, Edinburgh, Eastbourne, Eckington, Fermoy, Freshford, Faversham, Fulham, Glasgow, Gosport, Henley-on-Thames, Hamilton, Hull, Hulme, Horsforth, Hampstead, Harpurhey, Hampton-hill, Kirton-Lindsey, Kingsbridge, Lee, Lewisham, Lowestoft, Liverpool, Lewes, Ludlow, London, Leytonstone, Maesteg, Moreton-in-Marsh, Mission to Deep-Sea Fishermen, Manchester, Minster, New Brompton, Northroe, Oldham, Plympton, Penzance, Portsmouth, Penge, Perranarworthal, Porthgwarra, Rugby, Ramsgate, Reigate, Richmond, Shepherd's Bush, Southsea, South Benfleet, Stirling, St. Leonards, Southwold, St. Margaret's, Sandgate, Sheffield, Staplehurst, South Norwood, Teddington, Ulverston, Vauxhall, Woolwich, Wandsworth, Wadingham, Walton-on-Naze, Weymouth, Whitstable, Wellingborough, Westgate-on-Sea, Wimbledon, Westminster, Willsden.

Digitized by Google

Paris, Passy; Malta; Nellore, Poona, Bangalore, Secunderabad, Meppadi, India; Rangoon and Moulmein, Burmah; Kandy, Ceylon; Ograbeis, Vryburgh, Port Nolloth, South Africa; Nelson's Plains, Dubbo, New South Wales; Melbourne, Castlemaine, Broughton, Victoria, Taranaki, Thames, Tearoki, Auckland, New Zealand; Hobart, Launceston, Tasmania; Honolulu; Colon, Panama; Barbadoes; Kingston, Jamaica; George Town, Demerara, Berbice, British Guiana; Detroit, New Haven, United States; Port Arthur; Morden, Newdale, Victoria, B.C., Canada; Halifax, Yarmouth, Nova Scotia.

Literature has been purchased for distribution as under:—

Books, including "Messengers" and almanacks ...	648
Pamphlets	4,044
Leaflets and tracts	47,523
"BANNER OF ISRAEL"	10,443

STATEMENT OF ACCOUNTS

From Jan. 1st to Dec. 31st, 1892.

RECEIPTS.	£	s.	d.
Balance in hand ...	12	1	5½
Subscriptions and Donations... ...	119	7	8
Subscription towards Assistant Secretary's Honorarium	10	0	0
	£141	9	1½

EXPENDITURE.	£	s.	d.
Books, Pamphlets, and Leaflets, including carriage from Publishers	51	9	11½
The BANNER OF ISRAEL, including carriage from Publishers	33	6	8½
Assistant Secretary's Honorarium ...	20	0	0
Cheque Book... ...	0	2	0
Postage, Carriage, &c.	12	6	10½
Postage of BANNER OF ISRAEL	11	6	4
Balance in hand ...	12	17	3
	£141	9	1½

JESSIE LAWRENCE, Hon. Treasurer.

Examined and found correct,
THOS. CLARK WESTFIELD.

27th January, 1893.

Review.

"Nineteen Centuries Ago and Now." By the late J. C. H. Mehl. Also other Papers by the same Author. London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. 1892. Price 2s. 6d.

MISS E. M. RUSH has given to the public in this volume the collected papers of the late Miss J. C. H. Mehl, adding to them a valuable biographical sketch of the authoress, in every line of which her loving Christian regard for her she cherished as a sister, clearly appears. Both the biography and many of the papers of the late authoress have been published already in the BANNER OF ISRAEL, and we need not enlarge on their merits. The one that is first reproduced in the volume under notice is a very thoughtful, able production, "Nineteen Centuries Ago and Now." There is a fine passage on page 28, which we shall quote as giving this German lady's testimony to the rise of the missionary spirit in our land, pointing distinctly to our nation's Israelitish origin. She wrote thus:—

"Again our attention is arrested by the rising of a bright light from out of the British Isles. The early years of this century, which thus sealed the collapse of the ungodly principles of the Revolution, are marked in England, notwithstanding the strain and din of the war in which the nation was involved, by a decided manifestation of religious life in many, and by an awakening to the consciousness of a call from on high, to carry the glad tidings of salvation to all kindreds of the earth. Those were the years when in faith and prayer the foundations were laid of those Christian enterprises, which since then have blossomed and budded and in our day are bearing fruit increasingly. Whether man will bear or forbear, from the British race has the testimony gone forth, and it is being maintained by a growing number of witnesses that God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself, and that 'whosoever will, let him come and take the water of life freely.'"

In regard to the Identity itself, Miss Mehl said (page 50):—"In the history and development of the British race the believers in the Identity have traced the destiny of outcast Israel from their early condition of 'wanderers among the nations' (Hos. ix. 17) to their present position as the foremost people of the earth, possessing in a degree hitherto unknown in the world's history empire, influence, wealth, the capacity to multiply, to spread abroad as well as to absorb foreign elements. This free and mighty race, whether belonging to the company of nations forming the greatest empire that has ever existed or to the dominant people in the United States of America, is also found to be the greatest missionary people of the earth, the upholder of the true Christian faith, the disseminator of the Word of God, thus 'bringing forth the fruits of His kingdom.'"

The conclusion of the writer in respect to Our Identity was this:—"So mighty are the issues that, to the dismay of the enemies of the Lord, to the joy of all that fear His name, this truth of the Identity of the British race with the Lost House of Israel must, ere long, rise upon the world a giant in strength, and of perfect proportions."

We recommend Miss Rush's handy little volume of 220 pages to our reader's notice as containing a world of thought well worthy of careful consideration and study. Miss Mehl's German origin made it remarkable that she should have thrown in her lot with our people and that she had no sympathy with the Rev. R. Douglas' views in regard to the Israelite origin of the Protestant portion of the German people, to which she herself belonged. The subjects with which the late Miss Mehl dealt were remarkable also as being the work of one who was of foreign origin. The articles on "A German's Views on Our Identity," "Remember the Sabbath Day to Keep it Holy," "Blessed Are the Meek, for They Shall Inherit the Earth," and others like them, give evidence in favour of our nation's Israelite origin from a German standpoint which cannot but be interesting to the student of our subject. We trust Miss Rush's labour of love may have a wide circulation, and that Miss Mehl's writings may become household words in Anglo-Israelite homes to the glory of God and of His grace.

Correspondence.

IDENTITY MEETINGS AT COWES.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—You will, I am sure, be glad to learn that at the instance of myself and co-worker, Mr. Samson, there assembled at the Foresters' Hall, West Cowes, on Jan. 24 and 25, under the presidency of the Rural Dean, two large audiences of some 400 to 450 persons, to hear addresses by the Rev. F. Aston on the Identity of the Anglo-Saxon Race with the House of Ephraim-Israel. Mr. Aston, as you will gather from the paper I have sent you, delivered two powerful addresses, which were warmly and frequently applauded, and a hint from him that he feared he was keeping his audience too long was negatived in a most vigorous manner. This was the first "official" announcement of the Identity in Cowes, and in view of the event Mr. Samson and myself left no stone unturned to ensure present success, and a good foundation being laid for future work.

We personally waited upon and conversed with almost every minister in Cowes, and in every case met with a remarkable consideration of our views—the "Handbook," or other suitable pamphlet, being left for perusal in these instances. The following were much interested, and would have been at the meetings but for previous engagements:—Rev. — Fry, Rev. — Greaves, Rev. — Sparkes. Seven chapels exhibited bills relating to the meetings, and at the majority of them they were publicly announced. The whole received circulars and tickets for distribution among the several congregations, and for the convenience of persons attending from East Cowes, a late floating-bridge was run each evening. Circulars and pamphlets were addressed and delivered to the more prominent persons, due attention being paid to the Royal Yacht, Guardship, Coastguard station, and barracks. Posters and window bills were exhibited, and individuals were waited upon at an opportune moment, much being done by this latter method. In one instance a lay preacher was reported as having made distant allusion to our views in his address. He was duly visited, conversed with in a suitable manner, and literature left for his perusal. He is now much interested, and, true to his word, was present at both meetings.

Digitized by Google

We also had the opportunity of paving the way for Mr. Aston's visit by giving three several addresses to a Debating Society, and a goodly number of Sunday-school workers, etc. The Rural Dean, who was waited upon early in our programme, after reading the "Handbook," consented to take the chair on the 24th and 25th ult., and has rendered us every possible kindness and assistance throughout; entertaining Mr. Aston during his visit, and speaking in most favourable terms of the Identity.

At the conclusion of the lectures the chairman proposed a very cordial vote of thanks to Mr. Aston, and an allusion made by him as to the possibility of the lecturer visiting Cowes on a like errand in the future, met with instant applause. Mr. J. Whitman seconded in an able and appreciative manner, the vote being carried by loud applause. Over fifty books and pamphlets, including twelve "Handbooks," three "Fulness of the Nations," two "Message to the Church," &c., were sold at the meetings, in addition to others we had on hand. We are about to procure a further supply of "Handbooks," and are pleased to hear that the publishers are contemplating a fourth edition.

We are daily being accosted by individuals who express their conviction and warm appreciation of the matter placed before them, testifying as to their ability to understand much of the Bible hitherto incomprehensible to them. Representatives from the Navy and Royal Yachts were present, as were also Rev. G. H. Schofield, Rev. — Fawcett, and Rev. — Hancock. We also had the pleasure of making the acquaintance of, and welcoming, Miss Mount, of Sandown, who was present each evening. A register has been kept of all literature given away, together with much of that sold, in order that we may follow the individuals up. We have just secured two new subscribers to the BANNER, and orders for two more "Handbooks."

For your information I enclose copies of the two circulars issued, and, with an assurance of my kind regards,

Remain, sincerely yours,

PERCY CHURCHMAN.

Pelham-road, West Cowes, Feb. 4, 1893.

[The two circulars contain the announcement of the lectures and quotations from a letter by Rev. Mark Guy Pearse.]

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—I think I discern a most interesting link in the chain which connects us with the favoured nation, and one which, so far as I know, has not been previously noticed; in this, however, I write subject to correction. In the Book of Esther ix. 17—22 we are told that the Jews celebrated their deliverance from threatened annihilation at the hands of Haman the Agagite, by instituting a festival of a peculiar character, to be observed annually on the 14th day of the month Adar, which month in the Jewish Calendar corresponds (at least in part) to our February. It is to be noted that a special feature of this festival was the "sending of portions one to another," or, in our vernacular, they gave and received presents. Now the origin of the feast, or festival, of St. Valentine is shrouded in mystery, and I venture to think that here we have a clue to it, especially as in the City of Norwich, in which I have been a resident for more tham 30 years, there survives what seems to have been the original and probably universal manner of observance, which is not the foolish one of sending anonymous love sonnets and absurd and vulgar caricatures, but the giving of useful and sometimes costly presents, and these are not limited to the children, although they do come in for the principal share. These gifts are usually delivered on the evening of the 13th, and the orthodox plan of delivery is by depositing them on the doorstep. The person who so deposits them is supposed to give a loud knock, or succession of knocks, or a violent tug at the door-bell, and then to beat a hasty retreat. All the little folks are on the qui vive, but not infrequently the mysterious parcel contains some gift for mamma, of which papa is apparently quite innocent, or, vice versa, papa may be the recipient and mamma the one who feigns surprise.

The reality of this interesting custom is attested by the fact that retail tradesmen do a very large business, and that for the two weeks preceding Feb. 13th shop windows are filled with goods "suitable for Valentines." I have recently written to a local daily paper, asking for information as to the origin of this Norwich (and Norfolk) practice, and I find it dates from time immemorial, but no one seems to have other than a mythical reason to give for its institution. That it was not always confined to this neighbourhood there does exist some evidence, for Pepys wrote on Valentine's Day, 1667, "I am also this year my wife's Valentine, and it will cost me £5. . . ."

Now, sir, I am aware that the discomfiture of Haman occurred long after at least nine of the tribes comprising the House of Israel were removed from contiguity to Judah and Benjamin, but undoubtedly through the latter tribe this beautiful practice may have been brought here at the Norman Conquest, and it would be interesting to know if any readers of the BANNER can throw further light on the subject, for which purpose I shall be glad if you can find room for this letter in your columns, and I remain, dear sir,

Faithfully yours,

ROBERT ADCOCK.

Bracondale, Norwich, February 10th, 1893.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

SIR,—"A Believer in the Greatest Nation," etc., says, in BANNER 840, "We may for a time lose our skill in certain athletic sports, and be beaten for a time by our own colonial and American offspring in cricket, sculling, boating, cycling, and the inventive faculty. These were not promised in the Scriptures to Israel, God's people for ever, as a permanent gift, contributing to their national greatness," etc. It strikes me, from this passage and others further on, that the optimist in the article headed "Pessimists and Optimists," scarcely realizes that our colonial and American offspring are as much Israel as are the inhabitants of Great Britain. We think the United States men are not Ephraim, but surely they are Israelites as we are, while our colonial children may claim to be headed up under the representative name of Ephraim. Therefore if either of these excel us in minor particulars, it does not in any way affect our claim to have possession, and the rightful expectation to retain possession of the especial blessings, privileges, and pre-eminent position promised alone to Israel. Manasseh, whose descendants we hold to be the people of the United States, were to share the blessings foretold by Jacob to his descendants, but not to the same degree as Ephraim. The former was to be a great nation, but the younger brother was to be greater. As to the company of nations scattered about the globe, which we believe to be represented by our colonies, assuredly they are Israel, though of Greater Britain, while our tight little island remains the head centre.

Yours, etc., L. P.

Feb. 2.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed "PHILO-ISRAEL," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION for the BANNER OF ISRAEL, in Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts. To any part of the United Kingdom, Canada, America, or Europe, in the postal union:—

	s. d.		s. d.
copy, including postage	.. 7 0	Tasmania	.. 7 0
New Zealand	.. 7 0	South Australia	.. 7 0
Cape Colony	.. 7 0	Queensland	.. 7 0
Victoria	.. 7 0	Natal	.. 7 0
Western Australia	.. 7 0	New South Wales	.. 7 0
Transvaal	.. 7 0	India	.. 7 0
		Ceylon, via Brindisi	.. 7 0

All Post Office Orders, Cheques, &c., should be crossed "City Bank, Ludgate-hill, to the ac. of ROBERT BANKS AND SON." They will then only be paid to our account.

READING CASES for holding the Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts, may be had, price 2s. Sent post free on receipt of Postal Order.

THE ANNUAL VOLUMES, bound in handsome blue cth, price 8s.

THE MONTHLY PARTS, in tinted wrapper, published he last day of each month, 6d.

GLASGOW ISRAELITE IDENTIFICATION ASSOCIATION.

J. G. TAYLOR, Esq. (Newcastle),

WILL DELIVER A

LECTURE,

"The British in the Bible," in St. John's Chambers, 158, George-street, on Monday, 27th February, at 8.15 p.m. Bailie Chalmers, Chairman.

NEW BADGES.

Gold Brooches, 6/3 and 4/-
Scarf Pins, 4/9 and 3/9.
Pendants, large, 4/6; small, 2/9.
All Badges, Metal Gilt, 9d.

All Post Free. Applications, with Postal Order enclosed, to be sent to MRS. THOMPSON, or to MAJOR-GEN. CARLYLE BELL, St. Laurence Villa, Kingston-hill, Surrey.

NOW READY.
HANDSOME BLUE CLOTH
CASES FOR BINDING.
Price 1s. 6d., or post free, 1s. 8d.
VOLUME XVI. OF
THE BANNER OF ISRAEL,
Price 8s. Sent Post Free.
ROBERT BANKS AND SON, Racquet-ct., Fleet-st., E.C

"A WONDERFUL REMEDY."
"I WAS GIVEN UP BY ALL."
"SAVED FROM AN EARLY GRAVE."

Such are the words of grateful Patients relative to their CASES OF

CONSUMPTION

CURED BY THE TREATMENT OF

MR. GEO. T. CONGREVE.

Read his Book, "ON CONSUMPTION, &c." which may be had post free for ONE SHILLING from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.; or may be ordered of any Bookseller.

NOTE.—CONSULTATIONS FREE at Coombe Lodge, Peckham, on TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings only. No Charge except the usual charge for three weeks or six weeks' supply of medicine. All Patients should read the book first.

No. 26.—Price 1s. per 100, 8s. 6d. per 1,000.

THOUGHTS FOR THE BRITISH FOLK.

SUGGESTED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

OUR ISRAELITE MINERS.

London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C.

"I am delighted with this."—PHILO-ISRAEL.

NEW AND IMPROVED EDITION OF

ISRAEL'S WORLD,

By Rev. HENRY ROE. 2d.

Also "Consecration," 2d., "Going to Africa," 1s.; "West African Scenes," 2s.; "Fernando Po Mission," 1s. Also "Israel's World" and "Consecration" bound together in cloth, with Author's latest photograph portrait, 1s.

Order of ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street. London, E.C., or of Rev. HENRY ROE, Radstock, via Bath.

The Future of Israel and Judah.

Being the Discourses on the Lost Ten Tribes, from "How and When the World will End." By the Rev. JOSEPH WILD, D.D. With portrait of Author. Price 2s.

London: ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court Fleet-street, or by order of any bookseller.

"THE WORLD'S PROVED REMEDY FOR ALL CHEST DISEASES."

COUGH, ASTHMA,

CHRONIC BRONCHITIS,

INFLUENZA,

THERE IS NONE TO EQUAL IT.

Rev. F. E. HEAPE, of DERBY, in a recent letter, says: "Your Medicine always puts my lungs right, and drove out the terrible INFLUENZA last May."

This Medicine has been prepared for 65 years.

CONGREVE'S BALSAMIC ELIXIR.

In Bottles, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 22s., may be had of all Chemists and Medicine Vendors.

TEA! TEA! TEA!

FROM

INDIA, CEYLON, AND CHINA.

Best Quality and Best Value.

From 1/6 to 3/6 per lb. Samples Gratis.

Carriage Paid on Parcels of 6lbs. and upwards

Robinson & James,

42, TRINITY SQUARE, TOWER HILL LONDON, E.C.

TOOTH-ACHE

CURED INSTANTLY BY

BUNTER'S NERVINE

Prevents Decay, Saves Extraction, Sleepless Nights Prevented.

Neuralgic Headaches and all Nerve Pains removed by BUNTER'S NERVINE. All Chemists, 1s. 1½d.

BE SURE TO CUT

10,000 RUGS GIVEN AWAY.

THIS OUT.

THIS PHENOMENAL OFFER is made to the Readers of this Journal only. On receipt of this advertisement, accompanied by Postal Order for 6/, or 74 stamps, we will forward DIRECT FROM OUR LOOMS to your address, one of our genuine SEAMLESS WOVEN REVERSIBLE CARPETS, suitable for Drawing-room, Dining-room, Bedroom, &c., handsomely bordered and woven in 30 different patterns and art colourings to suit all requirements, and LARGE ENOUGH TO COVER ANY ORDINARY SIZED ROOM. These carpets are manufactured from a material equal in wear to wool, and are undoubtedly the cheapest in the world.

With every Carpet we shall ABSOLUTELY GIVE AWAY a very handsome RUG to match, or we will send 2 CARPETS and 2 RUGS for 10/6

The Queen says: "Decidedly stouter and handsomer than any of the kind, the price being the astounding part of the matter." Schoolmistress: "For style, durability, and cheapness, they cannot be beaten." Penny Illustrated Paper: "Manufactured in every variety of colour, and is one of the most surprising bargains I have seen." Church Bells: "Truly wonderful value."

Thousands of Testimonials similar to the following, & Repeat Orders, have been received from our Customers:

"9, Bedford-row, High Wycombe, Berks.

"Gentlemen,—I have seen some of the Brusselette Carpets and Rugs sent by your firm, and think they are really a marvel.—Yours faithfully, Rev. H. MAY."

This offer is made to the Readers of this Paper only, and will not be repeated. All Orders despatched same day as received. Cheques and Postal Orders to be crossed "Union Bank." Address—

THE BRITISH CARPET WEAVING COMPANY,
31, OLD STREET, LONDON, E.C.

NOT APPEAR AGAIN.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT

FOR

PARALYSIS

J. FULLER, Jun., Esq., Whiteparish, Salisbury, Wilts, writes:—"Since wearing your Electropathic Belt I am decidedly better and stronger. I have more confidence in myself, and the pain in my back is completely gone. Your Belt is truly wonderful."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST. LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

Digitized by Google

LUNG TONIC

SAVE YOUR LIVES BY TAKING

OWBRIDGE'S LUNG TONIC

THE MIGHTY HEALER.

It has a power over disease hitherto unknown in Medicine.

Are you at all Weak-chested or inclined to be Consumptive, with just a touch of Cough now and then?

"Try this Wonderful Medicine." The Cough and Weakness will disappear as if by magic, and you will feel a strength and power you never had before.

HAVE YOU A COUGH?
A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT.
HAVE YOU A COLD?
A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL REMOVE IT!

Bronchitis & Asthma it relieves instantly

The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful in Whooping Cough become less with each dose of the medicine.

Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE Chemist Hull

Sold in bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. and 11s., by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors. Wholesale all London and Provincial Houses.

GIGANTIC SALE OF LADIES CLOTH DRESSES

100 COLOURS TO SELECT FROM

GREATEST BARGAINS EVER OFFERED

In consequence of the mild season, we have still in stock over 250,000 DRESS LENGTHS of our famous Cloths which, in order to effect a rapid clearance we have reduced to less than Manufacturers' Cost Price. 100 lovely new colours to select from. All goods are new and in perfect condition. We will gladly send patterns post free, and they need not be returned. Write to-day for patterns and Sale Price List

FULL DRESS LENGTHS OF MAGNIFICENT CLOTHS 9s.6d. CARRIAGE PAID.

GENUINE REDUCTIONS! WRITE FOR PATTERNS

LUTAS LEATHLEY & Co. ARMLEY, LEEDS.

The True and Divine Appointment for the Cure of Disease.

Send to

B. V. SCOTT, M.B.M.R.S.,

College of Health, 121, Kensington, Liverpool, for his

VOICE OF NATURE TO THE INVALID,

Post free 5 stamps.

Thousands of incurables (so-called) have proved God's own means could save when others failed.

Rev. F. Harper says of Mr. Scott's book: "It is a library in itself, and free from quackery."

Rev. Lush says: "Mr. Scott's treatment is natural, safe, reasonable, and Scriptural."

Send for the Book at once.

MASON'S EXTRACT OF HERBS FOR MAKING NON-INTOXICATING BEER

WE ALL REQUIRE SOMETHING TO DRINK

The finest, most refreshing and pleasantest beverage obtainable. One table-spoonful of this Extract makes one gallon of splendid Beer. Try it. A sample bottle, enough to make eight gallons, post free for 9 stamps.

NEWBALL & MASON, NOTTINGHAM.

AGENTS WANTED.

MASON'S WINE ESSENCES, non-intoxicating. For children's parties and social gatherings. A 6d. bottle will make one gall. of delicious wine. Post free 9 stamps. or a bottle of both Extract of Herbs and Wine Essence post free 15 stamps.

PAGE WOODCOCK'S WIND PILLS

A CLERGYMAN

Writes: "I am so convinced from my own experience and that of others of the real value of your WIND PILLS, in complaints arising from a disordered state of the STOMACH, BOWELS, or LIVER, that I wish much to promote the use of the Medicine in this parish, and I now inclose P.O. for a large box, and should be glad of some papers for circulation among my parishioners. In my own case

Page Woodcock's Wind Pills

have been of the greatest use. I have no objection to your publishing my communication, provided you divulge not my name and address, which you may give, nevertheless, to those who require such a verification."—Vicarage, near Malvern.

All Sufferers from INDIGESTION, LIVER COMPLAINTS, WIND on the STOMACH, COSTIVENESS, SICK HEADACHE, HEARTBURN, PALPITATION of the HEART, BILIOUSNESS, &c.,

should avail themselves of this most excellent medicine.

☞ The WIND PILLS being PURELY VEGETABLE, TASTELESS, and MILD and TONIC in their action, may be taken with perfect safety by the most delicate of either sex.

Of all Chemists, at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d., or Post Free for P.O. or Stamps, from PAGE WOODCOCK, LINCOLN.

NEW CATALOGUE of Works on Our Identity post free from R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

TWO BIG FAILURES IN THE WATCH TRADE.

MOST EXTRAORDINARY CHANCE.

1,000 KEYLESS WATCHES AT 6/6.

Owing to the utter stagnation in the Watch Trade, manufacturers being loaded with goods and unable to realise, there have been some heavy Bankrupt Stocks in the Market, and we have purchased largely for cash a quantity of well-made Watches, thoroughly reliable, at the Astounding Slaughtered Prices! which are only obtainable when goods must be sold and no one wants to buy. It is one thing to buy a cheap watch made to sell for the money, and quite another thing to buy a Good Watch at a Cheap Price. The most remarkable lot of all the watches we have purchased is 1,000 KEYLESS WATCHES, which we are able to offer at the astounding price of 6/6 EACH, post free. It is necessary to bear in mind also that every one of these will be personally examined by us to see that they are in perfect going order, and a guarantee will be sent with each watch. We need scarcely add that you can never in the ordinary way get a keyless watch for twice this money. A watch is a necessity of civilised life. It is always money well expended, and in this case there is a fortune to be made by those people who buy and sell again at a big profit. Real Watches, not toys. As there is only a limited number, and we expect them to be bought up at once, we stipulate that this offer is only available for 14 days (excepting from abroad). Every watch properly made with jewelled movement, crystal glass front, and seconds as well as minute hand. No reduction is possible, excepting that two can be had for 12s. 6d. Coupon must be cut out and sent with order.

"BANNER OF ISRAEL" COUPON.
Entitles holder to guaranteed Keyless Watch for 6s. 6d. Not available after March 8th.
Signed J. THEOBALD & COMPANY.

J. THEOBALD & COMPANY,

Wholesale Jewellers. Estab. 1832.
43, Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument Proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100, postage 1d.

R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

TEETH.—£1 A FULL SET

ESKELL'S.—CELEBRATED MAKE, £2 2s. Warranted and fitted in one visit. No extractions needed. HALF A MILLION SETS already supplied. The Nursing Record and Hospital World says: We recommend all who require Reliable and Good Teeth at a small cost to go to Messrs. ESKELL, 445, Strand (facing Charing Cross Station), and 58, Ludgate Hill, City, London. Also at 27, Western Road, Brighton, and 23, Mount Pleasant, Tunbridge Wells. Hours 9 till 7. Illustrated Pamphlets, explaining everything, free. Established 100 years.

PHOSPHORUS

A new process of preparing this necessary food for the Brain and Nervous System, invented by Mr. Samuel Birley, M.D., renders its therapeutic value superior to all the Phosphates, Hypophosphites, &c., usually perscribed. May be taken for years with perfect safety! Descriptive pamphlet free to enquirers (mentioning this paper), from

GORDON, MURRAY & Co., Ltd.,
10, ADAM STREET, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co. (Ltd.) 23, Paternoster-row. Wednesday, FEBRUARY 22, 1893. All Rights Reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India).

"And the Remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS OF THE EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XVII., No. 844. Entered at Stationer's Hall.] WEDNESDAY, MARCH 1, 1893. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
Government in Egypt with Rosewater	109
"For Zion's Sake I Will Not Hold My Peace." By Rev. Denis Hanan, D.D.	110
Mr. Austen Chamberlain, M.P., on the Expansion of England	111
How Matters Are Progressing in New Zealand	112
Acceptable, Upright, and Truthful Words	112
The Anglo-Saxons and the Aborigines. By F. Gass	113
The British-Israel Association Monthly Report	114
Anglo-Israel Free Distribution Fund	115
Israel's Scripture and Prayer Union	116
Correspondence	116

GOVERNMENT IN EGYPT WITH ROSEWATER.

THOSE who are watching the play of parties in Egypt must be filled with wonder that the representatives of the British Protectorate content themselves with an almost ridiculously small military force to support them in carrying on their government of the country. With their real determination to remain there to carry out their beneficent objects, they are timidly anxious to persuade the French and other Powers who resent their continuance in the Nile Valley, that they do not intend to stop very long, but only till they have quite finished the designs they formed when they entered on the occupation of the land in 1882. When Abbas Pasha, too, passed the late affront on the British Government and their Cairo representative, we condoned the affront, accepted the apology, knowing all the time that the young Khedive was not sincere, but intended before long to try again to shake off his British masters, and misrule the country himself.

But all this time, the British, though timid regarding the opinion of Europe, seem determined enough that, come what will, they will not relax their hold of Egypt. The Times, on Feb. 6, states pretty plainly what this country expects; and the Government of the day, which represents the people, must carry out the people's will. The leader's concluding words are mysterious, but quite clearly indicate that if Abbas Pasha, or anyone else, opposes us, we shall not endure it, but that we shall in that event, either remove him, or assume a "more direct responsibility for, and control over, the administration!" Bold words are these! but they really represent the actual facts, and our necessary position if we are thwarted. The words were these:—

If the difficulties created either by the Khedive's ill-advised action, or by the intervention of other Powers, should be renewed, it is obvious that this country could not continue to tolerate a state of things which undoes her work and imperils her interests. A repetition of resent troubles, would compel us to reconsider our position in Egypt, and either to take steps to secure that the ruler of that country shall be one with whom we can work, or to assume ourselves a more direct responsibility for, and control over, the administration.

Sooner or later we believe Abbas Pasha will take some more decisive steps to assert his own authority, and to get rid of Lord Cromer's. He has plenty of sympathetic Turkish and Egyptian officers about him, who are only too anxious for the return of the old days of "Baksheesh" and misrule, and there is a French and native press constantly endeavouring to urge him on. The Khedive is evidently not a man of great solid mental power, and does not rise much above the average of his Asiatic Eastern predecessors on the throne. We believe he will ere long put British endurance to the test, and force us to adopt one or the other of the two alternatives named by the Times. Then the day of shams in Egypt will have passed, and we shall stand forth what we really mean to be, the rulers of Egypt as a protected State, and one which from its strategic position in respect to Palestine, India, Australasia, and East Africa, we cannot afford to abandon to anarchy, or hand over to our real enemies, so far as our Asiatic possessions are concerned—namely, the French. We are in Egypt, and we mean to stay, because stay we must as a matter of national life and death.

In all this, we who believe in Our Identity, see the hand of God plainly at work. He placed us in Egypt, and at the bombardment of the Alexandrian Forts. He provided for the retreat of the French, and so threw the country into our hands. The battle of Tel-el-Kebir followed, and since then our sole occupation and good government of the land, to the terrible grief and disappointment of the French, has taken place. The French are always reminding us of our promise to leave the country; but we have always our valid excuse to stay, since the work we went there to do has not yet been finished. It will be finished when Egypt can stand alone, and its Government (a native Eastern Government!) has learnt the value of British methods. This seems far off at present, and the episode in Cairo, with which we are now dealing, appears to prove that Abbas Pasha and his followers, at least, will never learn the lesson!

Digitized by Google

Very few of the Indian princes have shown themselves capable of standing alone even after a century of British protection and guidance, and why men now think Egyptian rulers of the stamp of Abbas Pasha, will be more ready learners of the difficult lesson, it is hard to say.

Under any circumstances our course is clear. This nation is Israel, and our duty is to hold the ground in Egypt, and guard the strategic water-way at the Canal pending the great event to which all others are pointing—namely, the restoration in triumph of Israel, with Judah and Manasseh, to their land. "The Lord God of Israel will then go before us, and the God of Israel will be our rereward" (Isa. lii. 12). A procession such as that honoured by the presence of the Lord Jehovah Himself, just as it was at the Exodus in Moses' days, will need the security in Israel's hands, of the strategic land of Egypt; and, therefore, we shall find, as we do find to-day, that in spite of our statesmen's nervous tremors, and of the wild blustering of the French, Egypt will rest securely in our nation's grasp, a prime factor in the return of the two Houses of Israel and Judah (including Manasseh) to the land of the God-given inheritance of Palestine! To the Lord be all the praise!

"FOR ZION'S SAKE I WILL NOT HOLD MY PEACE."

By the Rev. Denis Hanan, D.D.

The appointment of Isa. lxii. as the Old Testament lesson for the third Sunday after the Epiphany is a clear indication that the Church recognises the glorious future and the fresh epiphany or manipulation of light and knowledge that will be brought to men when the now forsaken city is sought out and glorious. The speaker in this place is he who said, as in the preceding chapter, "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me"; even Israel's Messiah who adopted the words when He came to proclaim "the acceptable year of the Lord."

The Lord Jesus' longing desire is that Jerusalem should become "a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord," a place "sought out," "a city not forsaken." As surely as the actual city is now in possession of "the sons of the stranger," so surely the actual city shall be "rejoiced over" and made "a praise in the earth." The great principle of long-suffering mercy and redeeming grace which is extended to men will not be contradicted by a differing treatment of the city which the Lord chose to place His name there. Those who are the redeemed of the Lord are invited to share the Messiah's longing and pleading. He will not hold His peace for Jerusalem's sake, and we are to be the Lord's remembrancers, pleading with Him covenant and promise and prophecy—not keeping silence, but giving Him "no rest until He make Jerusalem a praise in the earth."

Yet, despite this plainly indicated duty, there are those who say that the Church (either in her collective capacity or her individual members) is to look only for a city beyond this earth and to have no interest in the accomplishment of such a future as is here portrayed for the actual city or for her "redeemed" inhabitants. Many such teachers not being able to spiritualize these chapters have to resort to the conjecture that the prophecy will be fulfilled after the Church has ceased to exist on this world; then, they say, some other "redeemed of the Lord" will occupy the literal Zion, and then "the Gentiles shall see Thy righteousness, and all kings Thy glory." Those whose theory of the Church's place and character requires this interpretation cannot be now the Lord's remembrancers.

Jerusalem's future is not their inheritance; they have mapped out for themselves an inheritance which is far superior to that which is the longing desire of the Lord Jesus! He deigns to be the glory of His people Israel; such a glory is beneath their aspirations. Evidently one practical lesson which a study of this chapter gives is this, that the redeemed of the Lord while here on earth ought to be in practical sympathy with that object—literal, actual, and earthly—which causes the great Advocate to "take no rest."

When Jerusalem is glorious, then the Gentiles shall know that God rules; but God's hand in history cannot be made plain to them until God's purpose is known to Israel. Wherefore those who endeavour to awaken Israel to the knowledge of her own place in the divine political economy, and to the guidance which has led and preserved her hitherto, are most undoubtedly preparing the way for the development which is to produce this marvellous evidence. It is necessary that Israel should know that to her, recovenanted because Christian, "the redeemed of the Lord," the future not only of Mount Zion and Jerusalem belongs, but also of the whole world, for God's faithfulness to her is to be His witness to Himself.

There are those who imagine that the Jews represent all Israel. How, we ask, is the Lord Jesus Christ to be glorified in the restoration of an unbelieving Judah? For the sake of the witness that is to be borne to Him, it is necessary that the House of Judah should, as foretold, go back under the power of recovenanted Israel, having first walked to Israel in order that "together they should return from the land of the North to the land promised to their fathers." Thus the discovery and recognition of Israel, as distinct from Judah, is necessary, if we would co-operate with the Lord in His pleading for the future of the city. If we truly desire the return of the King, who is to receive for Himself a kingdom, and then to recognize the efforts of His servants, we can have no inheritance which is in any sense separate from His when we pray, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth." We ought to plead intelligently that this should come to pass: "Say ye to the daughter of Zion, Behold, thy salvation cometh; behold, His reward is with Him and His work before Him"; and then, "They shall call them (the dwellers in Zion) the holy people, the redeemed of the Lord, and thou (Jerusalem) shall be called Sought out: a city not forsaken."

But there is another lesson to be learned, and it is this: want of interest in that which occupies the desire of the Lord is an evidence of want of sympathy with Him. As, on the one hand, super-spiritual ideals may cause the neglect of practical work, so the lower-earthly engrossments must cause the mind to take no interest in the working out of God's purposes. To such the thoughts suggested by this prophecy are calculated to be a veritable epiphany, opening their minds to the glory of that light which is yet to shine: the very possibility of its dawning causing them to see the dull commonplaces of life illuminated with the glory that is yet to be revealed.

We all need epiphanies as we pass on through life. As the angelic message to the shepherds was followed by the homage of the kings from the sun-rising, and as that gave place to the light from the life of Christ, until at the end there was an epiphany to the Greeks who sought to see

Digitized by Google

Jesus, so we require to see and know more clearly. Such epiphanies are not things of the past. The Holy Spirit reveals truth to each mind that seeks to know more of the fulness and proportion of the faith as it is in Jesus. And the same blessed Teacher, by revealing the covenant faithfulness of God to Israel, as it has been and is being worked out in the history of the world, sheds light upon events which hitherto have been apparently unconnected with the long foretold purpose of God. If we find it hard to rise above our daily engrossing cares and duties, or to picture to ourselves the glory that is yet to be revealed, we shall be helped by knowing that God is working out His purposes for Israel, and that we have a personal interest in that which is being brought about.

For well nigh 2,520 years the city has been trodden under foot. There has been no "Home Rule" in Zion, and it does not exist there to-day. The "seven times" of predicted punishment are running to an end. The last shadow of the cloud of disfavour lifted off of Israel at the close of her "seven times," and so we may hope that at the close of the same period the people of the Southern kingdom will no longer remain under the oppressive power of the sons of the stranger.

Surely it is not vain to hope for a further epiphany, that soon the unwearying cry of the Advocate will prevail, and that the time is at hand when Israel's ancient capital will again be in the possession of the covenant race, and the flag of the rightful owners wave over Mount Zion. This is necessary in order to bring in the predicted period of glory when the city shall be no more termed Forsaken, neither shall the land any more be termed Desolate, but instead it shall be married and a joy, and called by a new name which the mouth of the Lord shall name. That great epiphany awaits the Church, then her Lord's inheritance in her and in the Israel of God will be manifested, and the Gentiles shall come to His light and kings to the brightness of His rising.

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN, M.P., ON THE EXPANSION OF ENGLAND.

On Thursday, Jan. 19th, 1893, Mr. Austen Chamberlain, M.P., the President of the Sparkhill and Greet Institute, delivered his presidential address in St. John's School, Sparkhill. Mr. Chamberlain chose for the subject of his address the expansion of England, by which he meant that greater England beyond the seas, the great colonial empire of this country. From our different colonial possessions we could draw almost every article that we needed, whether for immediate consumption or for our trade and manufactures. We had the possibilities of boundless wealth, and opportunities afforded to us which it was difficult for man to measure. But the growth of the British Empire was a matter of modern history. In the time of Elizabeth England was not the great naval or colonial power she was now. On the contrary, we had no possessions beyond the seas, we had given up the earlier hope of holding part of France, and establishing ourselves as a continental power, and we had not begun to found the colonial empire. England, then, was not even the great manufacturing power she was now.

The first settlements were made in the time of the Stuarts, but it was not till the eighteenth century that the foundation of the colonial empire fairly began. Since then the colonial empire had been gradually built up, and with it our manufactures, and the trade they brought with them, had grown. Our trade and prosperity, and the work which was to be found for the great population in these islands, depended in a very great measure on the colonial empire which we had at the present time. The effect of that intercourse between England and the new world, the new ideas it had produced, the new prosperity it had created, had been to foment the great intellectual activity, and to place England in the front rank of powers which had contributed to the progress of the world's thought and civilization. (Applause.) The figures of our colonial trade were astonishing and satisfactory, and they proved with extraordinary force the truth of the old maxim that "trade follows the flag."

In spite of the protective duties which were placed on our exports by some of our colonies in 1885, half our export trade was with the colonies. Out of a total of five millions imported into the Cape in 1885, four millions came from Great Britain; out of 64 millions into Australia, 25 millions came from Great Britain; out of four millions into Hong Kong, three millions came from Great Britain; or, if they looked at it in another way, in 1884 the United States consumed 13s. 6d. per head of our goods, France 8s., Germany 9s.; whereas Canada took £2 3s. per head of its population, and the Cape Colony took £2 15s. per head. (Applause.) If they coupled those figures with the certainty of that enormous extension of the population of which he had already spoken in those colonies, they would see how important they would become to us as a trade outlet, and what a great future they afforded to our industry, and what employment they opened up for the crowded populations here at home. It was to our interest, therefore, to cultivate good relations with our colonies by binding them to us as closely as we could, and it was to our interest to develop our colonial empire as much as we fairly could. (Applause.)

A vote of thanks was accorded the president for his address.

REMARKS THEREON BY G. J. (A VICAR).

In the above extract Mr. A. Chamberlain, M.P., testifies to the truth of our Israelitish origin, for he says (1st), "We had the possibilities of boundless wealth"; (2nd) "Opportunities (privileges) afforded to us it would be difficult for man to measure"; (3rd) "The certainty of enormous extension of population in the colonies."

Why the certainty of enormous population unless to us belongs the promise, "Thy seed shall be as the stars and sand"? (Gen. xv. 5; xxxii. 17). Why should opportunities be afforded to us beyond that of other nations, unless ours is the God-set-up kingdom of Dan. ii. 44? Why have we possibilities of boundless wealth if we are not descendants of that people to whom God promised by Moses, "Thou shalt lend to many nations," &c.? (Deut. xv. 6; viii. 18). Why are we in the possession of such magnificent colonies, unless we are also in possession of the promise made to Ephraim that "his seed shall become a multitude of nations"? (Gen. xlviii. 19).

Mr. Chamberlain further shows that our colonies are our best customers. Surely, then, in the interests of our working masses at home, it would be true statesmanship to bind together in the strong cords of common blood, common interests, common faith, this somewhat disjointed but mighty empire into one grand federation for our common good—nay, more, for the benefit of the world and the glory of God. Why should our Parliament waste its time with commercial treaties with foreign states when we can get every necessary and luxury from our own people and lands? Let us have free trade in reality, not in name; let us tell the nations who close their doors to us we can do without their custom or their products, for our colonies can supply us with everything the earth brings forth, and our colonists will find work for our toilers here at home.

Digitized by Google

We have tried one-sided free trade quite long enough; the nations are becoming daily more protective to themselves, and less disposed to favour us. But God's everlasting love to Israel has stepped in, and opened a door of escape from national ruin to us, in our colonies. Are we going to despise this good gift? Let us boldly tell the nations who have raised their tariff walls against our manufactures, "Till those walls come down we have no further orders for you." We work for and trade with our colonies, and have "no connection with any other house" for the future, except under the conditions of full free trade for both sides. If the nations agree to these terms, we shall stand "chief of the nations," for who can excel a Briton, other things being equal? If the nations will not agree to these terms, let them stand aside; we neither court their friendship or fear their frown, for Britain all round the world, bound together for commerce, offence, and defence, will be more than a match for the rest of the world in arms against us, and we have also the promise to encourage any timid one among us: "No weapon that is formed against thee (Israel) shall prosper" (Isa. liv. 17), whether commercial, social, or imperial weapons. When once the nations see that the great business house of "Britain and Co." means business, they will agree to our terms rather than to no terms, and so the glorious time foretold by Isa. ii. 3, 4 would be hastened on, as it would not be to the interests of our empire to have quarrelling neighbours, neither would it be to the interest of our neighbours to quarrel with us. Praise the Lord for the power He has placed in our hands. May our statesmen have grace and strength given them to use it for the honour and glory of our covenant-keeping God.

HOW MATTERS ARE PROGRESSING IN NEW ZEALAND.

A LETTER from a British settler in the North Island of New Zealand gives a graphic account of the manner the Identity is making its way there. We are glad to see that the Handbook, as well as the BANNER OF ISRAEL, are regarded with favour, and are being used to advance the knowledge of our facts. The correspondent says that he "had had very cheering letters from the Rev. F. S., of R., to whom he had sent a Handbook some months ago. He has been discussing the matter of Our Identity," says our friend, "with all sorts, including the Bishop of Waiapu. R. Banks and Son sent me a few of the BANNER OF ISRAEL, containing Dr. Hanan's paper on 'An Unconsidered Point in our Controversy with Rome,' which I have sent, as far as they would go, to clergymen of our Church, including the Bishop of Auckland. I wrote to him very civilly in forwarding the papers, asking him not to take the trouble of writing in acknowledgment, and so I shall have the excuse of asking him what he thinks of it when I see him, as I shall soon. I heard the Rev. T. S., of Tanranga, was inquiring into the subject. I therefore sent him at once a Handbook, and some of Dr. H. Alder-Smith's and Dr. Hanan's booklets. He thanked me for them, and said he would write as soon as he had time, being engaged in another study at present. I gave him briefly a few reasons why this matter might claim priority, but begged him to take his time."

The rest of our New Zealand friend's letter is full of the most charming details regarding life in New Zealand, and as to the ways and means by which people manage to live in that part of the Queen's dominions. It appears that the frozen meat which is sent to Britain from New Zealand only brings the grower of the meat on the spot 2d. per lb. Settlers find it best to buy as little as they can of anything, and produce as varied supplies of things as possible—that is, not much more than they can use. A little money, however, goes a very long way with our correspondent, and year by year he finds unexpected ways of adding to his family comforts. His wife keeps an enormous number of hens, and these are very useful as food in summer, when they cannot get through a sheep. On the whole, life in New Zealand seems enjoyable, though, of course, settlers have many privations to encounter at first. It seems always necessary to rely as little as possible on aid from domestic servants, but to depend for comforts on personal exertions only, and on the cheap help of the settler's own family. It seems that wool always brings in money, and cattle. Nothing else pays, unless a man can do nearly all his work himself. Fruit is plentiful, but goes to waste every year, much to the settler's grief! For "jam" does not pay! Honey is an unsaleable luxury—there being, we suppose, so much of it. It cannot be used in making jam, because it ferments; but in making peach wine it is very serviceable. Peach wine seems to be a great success for domestic use. It improves by keeping. Vinegar, of good quality, is made with honey and water which has stood in open jars for six months. It is then fit to bottle off.

These details seem rather out of place in the BANNER OF ISRAEL! but they are the experiences of a zealous British-Israelite, who is working for our cause; and his experience may be valuable for intending emigrants to New Zealand, who are sure to be grateful for hints as to minute details on which much of their future happiness may depend.

ACCEPTABLE, UPRIGHT, AND TRUTHFUL WORDS.

THE last two chapters of the Book of Ecclesiastes are well-known and worthy of careful notice even from a national standpoint. They contain the words of the Preacher derived from "One Shepherd," even the Lord Jesus Christ, and they are acceptable words, upright and truthful words (chap. xii. 10). The two chapters are addressed (1) to workers, (2) to the youth, (3) to old men, and (4) to all who hear. The workers are called on in chap. xi. 1, et seqr. The youth is admonished in chap. xi. 9, 10; xii. 1, et seqr. Old men are the subject of chap. xii. 2—7; and in verse 9—14, words of wisdom suited to all are enumerated.

The "workers" represent that nation of workers, which Israel was always destined to be, bringing forth the fruits of the kingdom of God (Matt. xxi. 43), "blossoming and budding and filling the face of the world with fruit." This "national worker" is set apart to bless all nations, families, and kindreds of the earth" (Gen. xxii. 18; xxviii. 14). So successful is it in work among the nations, that all who see them acknowledge them, that they are the seed the Lord hath blessed" (Isa. lxi. 9, R.V.). The way in which their work is to be done is described in Ecclesiastes xi. 1—namely, "perseveringly," and bountifully, "to seven and to eight," in spite of all obstacles, "though the clouds be full of rain," and the winds blow strong. The sower must not stop to observe either rain or wind. Israel's work must be continuous while she looks to God for the increase; since she "knows not the works of God who maketh all" (ver. 3—5). Morning and evening, at all times and seasons, Israel must be employed for God, in order that the world may be benefited and blessed (ver. 6). The nation has to work for the Lord perseveringly, incessantly, and faithfully, looking to God for His blessing. For this purpose the Lord "formed," made, and "created" Israel, that they "might show forth His praise" (Isa. xliii. 1, 7, 21).

Digitized by Google

The world has been put in Israel's charge, like a vineyard in that of the husbandmen, with the sole object that the fruits in their seasons may be rendered to the owner thereof (Matt. xxi. 33—43). The willingness of Israel to work for Him and give Him "the fruits" He demands, is secured by the prior gift of the kingdom of God to Ephraim to qualify them and energize them, in doing acceptable, upright, and truthful service for Him. The Jews possessed no such qualification; and therefore, when "the fruits" were called for, they refused to yield them; but rather, put the Son of God to death when He came to receive them at the hands of "His own people" (John i. 11). But Israel, the other House, was drawn to serve the Lord when the call went forth: "I said, Behold Me, behold Me, unto a nation not called by My name" (Isa. lxv. 1, R.V.). "Behold, thou shalt call a nation that thou knowest not, and a nation that knew not thee shall run unto thee, because of the Lord thy God, and for the Holy One of Israel, for He hath glorified thee" (Isa. lv. 5, R.V.).

Our Lord, who came "to confirm the promises made to the Father" (Rom. xv. 8), ratified the choice when He said to His Israelite followers, who constituted His Church of that day, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature;" also, "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all nations . . . teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you; and lo! I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Amen" (Matt. xxviii. 19, 20, R.V.). The agent of the glorious Evangel has not been changed now that we have come to the end of the "latter days." Israel is still bearing fruit for the Master by preaching the Word to all the nations, and it is, moreover, the only nation so employed. These considerations are worthy of careful examination, and we commend them to those who are not yet inclined to accept Our Identity, because they have not looked yet into the evidence, or deemed it worth a moment's thought.

BLIND EVIDENCE FROM EDMUND WALLER.

"Britannia rules the waves" was sung out by our poet Thompson; but before his day the now almost forgotten though once famous and courtly Waller addressed Cromwell in one of his patriotic poems with such stanzas as these, which combine the inviolability of our island home with the dominion of the sea.

> "Whether this portion of the world was rent
> By the rude ocean from the continent,
> Or thus created, it was sure designed
> To be the sacred refuge of mankind.
> The sea's our own; and all the nations greet,
> With bending sails, each vessel of our fleet;
> Our power extends as far as winds can blow,
> Or swelling sails upon the globe may go."

—Note by S. A. M., circulated 1645.

THE ANGLO-SAXONS AND THE ABORIGINES.

(Concluded from page 101.)

By F. Gass.

PART III.

The school of physicists and anthropologists, rather than historians, led by Professor Huxley, Grant Allen, and others, consider the lineal descendants of the neolithic stone-age, or the still earlier palæolithic stone-age, prehistoric, aborigines of Britain, are largely present with the British race now. As these aborigines cannot possibly have come of the stock of Israel, it is worth while to endeavour to get at the foundation on which this opinion rests. How is it that a degraded, often conquered people, who were overrun, harried to the verge of extinction, according to historical writers, by the virile race who descended on them, under different tribal names, have impressed their blood so deeply in the British race? It is very strange; not only were they an inferior people, their numbers, at the best, were few compared to the great body of Celts, Saxons, Angles, Jutes, Danes, Frisians, Normans, and others, who continued for centuries to pour into and colonise Britain. The amount of the population of England, previous to the landing of the Anglo-Saxons, cannot be ascertained even approximately. But a rough approximation may be obtained from the estimates based upon the Domesday Book at the end of the Conqueror's reign. England contained 1,800,000 souls. In the days of Edgar, London may have had a population of some 10,000, and Winchester and York of 5,000 each. The Conqueror brought many with him. Hence the population must have been small when the Saxons landed on these shores from Hengist's keels.

The Rev. H. M. Scarth, M.A., in "Roman Britain," gives this description of England when Agricola (a Roman General about 80—81, A.D.) entered it:—"It was a land of uncleared forest, with a climate as yet not mitigated by the organised labours of mankind. The province of Britain, in course of time, became a flourishing portion of the Roman Empire, and is described as 'Britannia Felix,' from whence came corn-fleets, and where the pastures were rich in cattle, and the hills covered with flocks of sheep; but when the island fell under the Roman power it was little better than unreclaimed forest and morass, the sky stormy, the air chilly even in summer, and the sun with little power to dispel the mists. The trees gathered continual rain, the crops grew rankly and ripened slowly, and the atmosphere was overcharged with moisture. Fallen timber obstructed the rivers and streams, which were wasted in reedy morasses, and only the downs and hill-tops rose above the perpetual tracts of wood."

In this description of our dear old "realm of England," girt, as Browning says, by its surrounding "sea-wall" of safety, we can discern the prospective fulfilment of the prophecy that the wilderness of Israel's exile should be turned into "a fruitful field;" as this land has become. In the words of Mr. Elton (Origins of English History, chap. ix.)—"The work of reclaiming this wilderness began in the days of Agricola. The Romans felled the woods along the lines of military roads; they embanked the rivers and threw causeways across the morasses, and the natives complained that their bodies and hands were worn out in draining fens and extending clearings in the forest.'

It is clear that the population of the island must have been small when Cæsar landed. Its interior was un-reclaimed land, the rivers towards their mouths spread out into large estuaries and the swamps extended far inland. The forests were peopled by the boar, the beaver, the bear and the wolf, as well as by the wild ox and stag. The sparse inhabitants at the opening of the Christian Era would not exceed in number a few hundred thousands. They were Celtic by descent, the product of different invasions; first the Goidel, then the Brythons. In the midst of these invasions surely the stone-age, cave-dwelling, aborigines must have been in sore straits, and if still existing separately, numbered by thousands only. The writer of the article "England," in Chambers' Encyclopædia, thinks they must have been assimilated by their Celtic conquerors. And yet we are asked to believe that this perishing body of men, confronted antagonistically, first by the Celts, and then by the Anglo-Saxons, the master race of the world, have left a lasting physical impression on the millions now making this nation. The "skin and skull" method of arriving at the composition of the British race, is, at present, much favoured by scientific men, but historical students seem rather doubtful. The historic mode of investigation dates back to Herodotus "the father of history," and should be venerated accordingly. The new method has come in with the present generation; still it has a value, and it would be unbecoming to unduly depreciate it. But Anglo-Israelites will be content to rest satisfied with the published results of the studies of such a learned and painstaking representative of a long line of clear-headed historians, as the late Professor Freeman. We are Saxons, he says, in blood and language, and have assimilated, absorbed alike conquerors and conquered into the very essence of our national being. However, the matter is not vital to Our Identity with Israel, even if we allow there are traces amongst us that are not Semitic in origin. Such as the blood of neolithic savages, or, as some say, of Roman and Italian, French, Spanish, and German blood. Of the blood, too, of peoples long since lost to historic ken. Indeed it must be so, since we were wandering and in contact with large bodies of strangers for a thousand years before entering Britain. The great point is that we are English (or British) "to the backbone." Identical in size, appearance, language, and mode of thought with our Saxon and Scandinavian forefathers. A good simile may be taken from Palestine, the land of our origin. The Dead Sea receives the vast body of ever-flowing fresh water of the river Jordan into its broad bosom, and absorbs it without perceptible rise of level or diminution of saltness. In a similar way, British-Israel receives, and always has, the streams of foreign element into its blood, assimilating them without apparent effort, destined to remain always the unchangeable descendants of their forefather Abraham. God's elect nation, who will yet become, as His word is true, the salt of the earth.

Digitized by Google

THE BRITISH-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION MONTHLY REPORT.

CHEERING NEWS.

Some splendid meetings have been held lately. On January 24 and 25, two lectures were delivered by the General Secretary in the Foresters' Hall, Cowes; the chair was taken by the Rev. John Bailey, the Rural Dean, Vicar of Holy Trinity: the first night the Hall was filled, and the second evening (although the usual service night at the churches and chapels, and fears were entertained that not so many would be present) the attendance was even better still: the audience were most enthusiastic, and accorded the lecturer a most hearty reception, applauding continually as different marks of Identity were dealt with. The Isle of Wight County Press gave a very excellent report, speaking most favourably of the interesting nature of the two lectures. To Mr. Percy Churchman and Mr. Samson, much credit is due for the efficient way they organized these meetings, and to which much of the success was due: nor will the kindness of the Rev. Mr. Bailey be easily forgotten.

On Jan. 27th, two lectures were given in the Havergal Hall, Bournemouth, these, likewise, were well attended, a noticeable feature being that a good proportion of the well-to-do class were present. Our old friend, Colonel Senior, accompanied the General Secretary, and his well-chosen words strengthened in no small degree the lectures given. Much interest was awakened, and the offer of a drawing-room meeting was most kindly made to the Secretary after the meeting. To Mr. and Mrs. Russell Cotes the hearty thanks of all friends of the cause are due; they undertook all the trouble and expense of these meetings, and entertained the deputation most kindly. Four columns were given us in the Bournemouth Observer in reporting the lectures, and as this paper goes into the houses of hundreds who never attend our meetings, we cannot but believe that much good may result from it. I would not forget here to add that Miss Hayward, most generously came forward and insisted upon sharing part of the very heavy expenses of these lectures, the arrangements of which were carried out regardless of expense. We have heard already of several people of influence having been won over to our belief by these lectures, and doubtless there are others of whom we do not hear.

On Feb. 2, a lecture was given at the Temperance Hall, Wellingborough. The chair was taken by our old and valued friend, the Rev. Chas. Hill, Rector of Culworth, Banbury; the attendance was fair; but as Mr. Hill remarked, "Each one present made the centre of a little circle." A very accurate and good account was given in the Northampton Daily Chronicle. Miss Sharman, who got up both this and a previous lecture, writes, "Your two lectures have done more good than all my efforts these 18 years;" but we must not forget that we are reaping what this excellent friend has sown. All this our readers will admit is encouraging.

Arrangements have been made for lectures at the following places:—

Bath, February 21, The Guildhall.
Manchester, March 14, Friends' School Room, Byron-street.
Glasgow. „ 15 and 16, arrangements not yet completed.
Stourbridge (date not yet fixed).

THE BADGE.

The matter of adopting a "new badge" came before the Association in September, last year, and, after much careful consideration, the Committee, for several important reasons, could not see their way to do so. The badge adopted by the Association has been in use many years, and as the question has arisen as to the cost, the Committee have taken steps to ascertain if it cannot be made in a cheaper form; and if this can be done, they will be issued at a price within the reach of all. The Committee have no desire to disparage any efforts of their friends, but they desire me to draw attention to the notice of the "new badge" in the Banner of February 8, and to say that this is the Badge adopted by the Bath Association, and that they adhere to their decision of September last.

Our thanks are due to Philo-Israel for his kind article in Banner of Feb. 8, urging his readers to join our ranks and become members of our Association. We do trust that many will take to heart his mature judgment, that "it is sheer waste of strength to work individually for the publication of the Identity," and join our ranks. Membership is but 5s. a year, and many gladly send us much more; and associates can join for 2s. 6d. a year. Do let me beg of you, my dear readers, to add your name to our list.

There are other most cheering matters of which I should be indeed glad to speak of. I can say that at no time in the history of our Association have so great opportunities arisen of propagating the truth we hold so dear, with the probability of success, than at this present time.

There are also two or three matters which at this time

Digitized by Google

deserve, I think, special attention. One is, that there will be an attempt to pass an "Alien Bill" directed against our brethren of the House of Judah, sufferers from Russian persecution: this I sincerely hope will be frustrated, and I humbly trust that British-Israel believers will speak out decidedly upon this matter. Britain has never yet been any the poorer (but rather the reverse) from being the home of the oppressed. A second one is—that if our dear brethren of the House of Judah are to be won to believe in British-Israel Truth, is it not more likely that they will receive the truth from their own brethren of the House of Israel, than from a purely Gentile source? And a third one is this, that if our brethren of the House of Judah are to be won, the unscriptural teaching of the various societies—viz., that "when a Jew becomes a Christian, he ceases to be a Jew," must be given up; he never can, and never does, lose his nationality. These matters are, I think, deserving of special attention.

May I ask your earnest prayers that our God and Father will bless our efforts—will guide us aright in the perplexing paths of life? We need a Divine outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the nation: let us be instant in prayer. And this reminds me that our Association has now incorporated the "Israel Prayer Union," which will be placed upon a better footing. Miss A. Wilson will still continue to act as the Secretary of this branch, and letters may be addressed to her at our offices. The membership in the future will be 6d. a year, which will include card of membership, Bible reading sections, a prayer, and quarterly notice of special subject for prayer as occasions arise, together with a pamphlet. Members of the Union need not be members of the Association and vice versa. Further notice will be given when all the details are settled.

I shall be glad to hear of new openings for lectures, either in public halls or in drawing-rooms. It would be a real help to us if friends in or around London would offer us drawing-rooms. Mr. Mark Levy, a brother of the House of Judah, will accompany either myself or another lecturer, and speak on this subject from his point of view.

Yours in the hope of Israel,

FREDERICK ASTON, General Secretary.

86, St. Martin's Lane, London, W.C., Feb. 11, 1893.

ANGLO-ISRAEL FREE DISTRIBUTION FUND.

"To make known to the sons of men His mighty acts, and the glorious majesty of His kingdom" (Psa. cxlv. 12).

"Now therefore perform the doing of it; that as there was a readiness to will, so there may be a performance also out of that which ye have" (2 Cor. viii. 11).

ONE HUNDRED AND ELEVENTH MONTHLY REPORT.

THE following subscriptions and donations, received from Jan. 13th, to Feb. 10th, are very gratefully acknowledged:—

By the Treasurer: Mrs. C., Tunbridge Wells, 5s.; A Sower, Stirling, £3; W. W., Norwood, £1 1s.; S. W. C., W., and S. B, Lytham, 3s.; A. O. P., Spalding. 17s.; Coupar Angus, 2s.; Mrs. H. and Friend, Richmond, 2s.; G. H., Chislehurst (a collection, 14 subscribers), 7s. 1d.; M. H., Cheltenham, 1s.; Israelite, Anerley, 1s.; Mrs. C., Chrestleton, £1; E. S. B., Bury St. Edmunds, 5s.; J. S., Cambridge, 5s.; Mrs. B., Birkdale, 2s. 6d.; Mrs. H., Kensington, 5s.; J. F. C., Highgate, 1s. 6d.; A. M. R., Cheltenham, 1s.; L. H., Southport, 1s.; Miss W., Freshford, 1s.; C. C. M., Stockwell, 1s.; J. DeS., Shrewsbury, 1s.; Miss F., Edinburgh, 1s.; A Reader of the BANNER, Bareilly, India, 3s.; J. M., Sunderland, 2s.; H. H., Lee, 10s.

By Miss E. M. Rush: Mrs. M., Appleton, 1s.; Messrs. H. & H., Plympton, 5s.; H. A. M., 1s., Mrs. H., East Charleton, 2s.; Mrs. T., Redditch, 1s.; F. A. R. W., Georgetown, 8s. 6d.; Mrs. J., Highbury, 2s. 6d.; R. N., Birkenhead, 1s.; C. R.; Petersfield, £1 1s.; W. L. B., Sandown, 1s.; Miss S., Sandown, 1s.; F. S. M., Sandown, 2s. 6d.; O. B. M., Sandown, 1s. Sale of Books to friends at a distance, 1s. 6d.; W. T. W., Crewe, 5s.; T. L., T. W., and T. H., Birkenhead, 3s.

Total, £11 17s. 1d.

GIFT.—One thousand pamphlets (various) from the British-Israel Association are very gratefully acknowledged.

BANNER DISTRIBUTION. — From 219 to 229 BANNERS are now sent out weekly, to the places already enumerated in previous reports.

LITERATURE DISTRIBUTION.—Ninety-four parcels have been forwarded to the following places since last report: Wellingborough (3), Crewe, Northwich, Birkenhead, Brighton (5), East Charleton, Highbury, Redditch (2), Richmond, Hampton, Portsmouth, Teddington (3), E. Twickenham, W. Cowes (2), Leytonstone, Bournemouth, Devonport, Westgate-on-Sea (2), Aldershot (2), E. Grinstead, Commercial-road, E., Dover, Calne, Staplehurst, Woolwich, Chatham (2), Lewisham, Wadingham (2), Chislehurst, W. Kensington, Barnsley, Hulme, Widnes (2), Mission to Deep-Sea Fisherman (10), Passy, Paris, Malta (2), Secunderabad (2), Nellore, Bangalore (3), Poona (2), Moulmein, Rangoon, Kandy, Hankow, Honolulu, Castlemaine (2), Broughton, Victoria, Nelson's Plains, N.S.W., Auckland, Taranaki, N.Z., Launceston, Tasmania (2), Ograbeis, S.A., George Town, B.G. (2), Barbadoes (2), Cleveland, U.S., Halifax, N.S. (2), Cape Breton, Port Arthur, Morden, Canada.

CORRESPONDENCE.—One working among our soldiers writes:—During the past year I have taken two numbers of the BANNER, which I have been sowing, though I know but little of the result. Sometimes given in hospital to our soldiers, sometimes an interesting chat on the subject, as I had in one ward last Wednesday. But generally one loses sight of the men in the service, there are such frequent changes taking place among them. Sometimes I give one when visiting the families, and often send some to New Zealand to my son-in-law. He writes me that he has met with several persons out there who are interested in the subject. I have just got four New Year's numbers, these will be sent out, one to the Cape, another to India. . . I like to watch the signs of the times, and note how evidence of the truth of Our Identity accumulates, but opposition there will be to this, or any other truth, but it will only tend to strengthen and extend it, as we know it must succeed."

Another writes: "I beg to acknowledge with thanks the parcel of literature which I am so much in need of. There seems to be a thirsting for more information, after the news of the Identity is told. With the object of imparting such knowledge, I have started a Bible Class, and up to the present I may say, by God's grace, with very good results. The little class is composed of all denominations of Christians, as well as deists and atheists. I challenge discussion, but, beyond a few questions, tongues seem to be tied, and certainly the subject appears to be the only one that will effectually close the mouth of the infidel, they are not only astounded, but silent. The point I demand to know is whether the prophecies have been, or are fulfilled. To this they assent, which is a great point conceded by them."

From Malta: "I received the back numbers of the Messenger quite safely, and thank you very much for them. Some of them are already carrying the message to different parts of the globe, some to the Antipodes, some to India, and others to different parts of the Mediterranean. Scarcely a ship calls here now, but what some one knows, or has heard something about our Israelitish Origin. I think the seed sown in the Almanack is producing fruit already, I know of some that have settled down to study the subject, and also of some who are very much taken up with No. 1 study of 'Our Race.' I must also tell you that the good news is well received by several of our winter visitors."

The following are extracts from a letter from one who is sowing the seed among our soldiers abroad.

"I have the pleasure of acknowledging with the warmest expression of my sincere thanks the receipt of the weekly packets of the BANNER OF ISRAEL, and the booklets on Our Identity, as well as the Almanacks. I am not idle, although I do not correspond with you as often as I would wish. I have a large field here among the soldiers only. I always take care to give the BANNERS to those who will understand what they read. I get laughed at whenever I moot the subject, but their banter does not deter me from contending for the glorious truth. The ignorance displayed by these mockers is simply deplorable, but I do not wonder at this, since those who profess to read their Bible cannot distinguish the two Houses. I do not despair as I know the truth must always prevail to the glory of our ever faithful and covenant-keeping God. I was speaking not long ago to a devout lady on the subject, and I could not express the joy her countenance showed. She grasped the truth most eagerly. . . One thing is certain, that enquiring minds are led to search the Scriptures, like the Bereans of old, to see whether these things are so. By God's grace I will do my very best to scatter the seed, leaving the issue in the hands of Him who will do all to His glory."

Digitized by Google

Later on our correspondent tells us he was at a Bible Class, and being called upon to speak by the officer presiding, he embraced the opportunity and opened up the subject of our Israelitish Origin. It is hoped much good may result from this sudden and unlooked for call, as our sower intends to invite debate and prophetical research. In conclusion he says, "Pray for us that God's truth may have free course to the unspeakable joy and comfort of all believers. Nil desperandum is my motto, having God for my strength and wisdom."

From Devon: "Kindly accept my best thanks for your kindness in the gift of books, &c. I am beginning to preach the Truth whenever opportunity presents itself. After preaching I have had people ask me questions about what I have said, and it has given me an opportunity to explain the Word to them."

Another Sower writes:—"It is not because my interest in the Identity flags that you have not heard from me at an earlier date, but simply pressure of duties. I have been actively engaged many times during the winter combating the cause of the Identity at public meetings in connection with our Methodist Church, and not without very encouraging signs that God is watering the seed I have sown here for eight past years. A number of intelligent men stand up and boldly declare before the minister that the Identity Truth is the key to God's Word, and the only intelligent way of construing the prophecies of the Old Testament, and the mission of Christ in the New. I thank God for the success here, may it grow a hundredfold."

From Chislehurst: "Many thanks for the literature. I am happy to see with what pleasure people read it, after they once understand the Identity. There are several others here helping me to spread the good news."

Another: "So pleased you were able to send the parcel. I met Mrs. —— just now, who is simply delighted. I know this literature will do good and not a sheet be wasted."

From a lady about to sail for Cape Breton: "Thank you very much for the package of tracts and books received to-day. I shall use them on the steamer as you suggest. One gentleman here has already asked for some, as he constantly hears attacks on the Anglo-Israel Society, which he thinks unfair, and would like to be able to answer."

J. LAWRENCE, Hon. Treasurer.

Contributions to the Fund will be thankfully received and acknowledged by the Hon. Treasurer, Miss J. Lawrence, Rosslyn, Hampton-road, Upper Teddington, Middlesex; or by the Hon. Secretary, Miss E. M. Rush, 4, Westgate-road, Westgate-on-Sea. Cheques may be crossed, "London and Provincial Bank, Teddington Branch."

ISRAEL'S SCRIPTURE AND PRAYER UNION.

SINCE last report two more names have been added, making a total of 1,439 members.

The following donations were gladly received:—Mr. F. A. R. W., British Guiana, 5s., and A Friend, Southport, 1s.

Any sums would be gladly received to help to pay the cost of new stock of Monthly Comments.

New members are requested, when writing for cards, to kindly state whether their names are to be entered as Mr., Mrs., or Miss, etc.

For the convenience of those members who wish to continue the daily reading, the following list of chapters for March is appended:—

1st	2 Kings	iii.	12th	2 Kings	xiv.	23rd	2 Kings	xxv.
2nd	,,	iv.	13th	,,	xv.	24th	1 Chron.	i.
3rd	,,	v.	14th	,,	xvi.	25th	,,	ii.
4th	,,	vi.	15th	,,	xvii.	26th	,,	iii.
5th	,,	vii.	16th	,,	xviii.	27th	,,	iv.
6th	,,	viii.	17th	,,	xix.	28th	,,	v.
7th	,,	ix.	18th	,,	xx.	29th	,,	vi.
8th	,,	x.	19th	,,	xxi.	30th	,,	vii.
9th	,,	xi.	20th	,,	xxii.	31st	,,	viii.
10th	,,	xii.	21st	,,	xxiii.
11th	,,	xiii.	22nd	,,	xxiv.

The card of membership will be sent on receipt of 3 stamps.

The first and second series of Monthly Comments on the whole Bible, by Philo-Israel, may now be obtained in volume form. Price, in paper cover, 1s. 2d. each; in cloth 2s. each, post free.

The "Prayers for Daily Use," being a prayer for each day of the week, by Philo-Israel, are 1d., or 9d. per doz., postage extra. Address—Miss A. Wilson, 119, Bravington-road, St. Peter's Park, W.

Correspondence.

UBAU CHEMDOTH KOL HAGGOIYM.

Hag. ii. 7.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

SIR,—The above much-disputed passage has been variously translated. The A. V. renders it, "The desire of all nations shall come." The R. V. renders it, "The desirable things of all nations shall come." Many commentators have puzzled over it, and no two seem to agree as to the correct translation. May not this diversity have arisen in great measure from a misapprehension of the scope and meaning of the whole passage (ver. 6—9)? These verses are generally regarded as connected with the preceding portion of the chapter; but in the Hebrew Bible they are given as a totally distinct paragraph, having no immediate connection with the verses going before or following, so that they seem to contain a distinct prophecy within themselves. From overlooking this fact, commentators have fallen into the mistakes that they have made.

The common idea, which they have all shared, is this, that the prophecy was intended to be an encouragement to Zerubbabel and his companions (as no doubt it was), and that therefore it must refer to the first coming of the Messiah. They take it for granted that He is "the desire of all nations" here spoken of, and consequently they have racked their brains to extract a grammatical sense out of the passage in that sense, which they have one and all signally failed to do. Permit me to make this plain to those of your readers who are not acquainted with the original Hebrew.

The noun Chemdath, which they translate "Desire," is in the singular number, whereas the verb Bau is the third person plural, and, according to all rules of grammar, a singular noun cannot be followed by a plural verb, except in rare cases, when the noun is a noun of multitude. This is well understood. Accordingly this passage, having the verb in the plural and the noun in the singular, cannot possibly be translated, "The desire of all nations shall come" (Q. E. D.). The R. V. tries to get out of the difficulty by translating, "The desirable things." But even supposing that this had any meaning (which I cannot see), it also is grammatically wrong. To be correct, the noun should be Chemdoth, in the plural.

Abandoning then the venerable but indefensible interpretation that our Lord is spoken of here as "the Desire of all nations," let us try whether we cannot get a better, as well as a more grammatical, translation, in the light of British-Israelism.

Digitized by Google

In the first place the Lord says, "Yet once, it is a little while, and I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land, and I will shake all nations." We may be permitted to ask, When has this shaking of the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land, and all nations, taken place? We search the pages of history in vain for any record of such a terrible event. The prophecy is yet unfulfilled. At our Lord's first coming nothing of the kind occurred. The destruction of Jerusalem, after His ascension, was a fearful woe, but it was confined to a comparatively small spot of earth—South Palestine—and affected but one single nation—the Tribe of Judah. It cannot, therefore, be cited as a fulfilment of Haggai's prophecy. No; it is yet to come, and all readers of the BANNER are studying the signs of the times, so clearly pointed out in every newspaper, and looking forward to that awful convulsion which will ere long shake Europe, and perhaps other lands, to their centre. When this has come to pass, then the prophecy will be fulfilled by the restoration of Israel and Judah to Palestine. Then "the noblest of all nations shall come" (see Fuerst's Hebrew and Chaldean Lexicon, under the word Chemdah); in other words, "the most desirable of all nations" shall come, shall return to their own land.

The prophecy of Jeremiah (chap. xxxi. 7) agrees with this, where he calls Israel by a similar name—"the chief, or head of the nations." "The head, and not the tail" (Deut. xxviii. 13). If this be a correct interpretation of Hag. ii. 7, the grammatical difficulty is overcome, the words being taken as a noun of multitude, with a plural verb naturally agreeing with them. I merely mention this idea as a suggestion, and should be glad to learn the opinions of others on the subject.

I lately saw in the BANNER a suggestion that the name of "Britain" is derived from Brith (pronounced Breeth, like breed)—a covenant. In conversing with a Jewish Rabbi a few days ago, I asked him could that be the case, and he replied, "No, for the word Brith is spelt with a Tau, but when Britain is spelt in Hebrew characters we use a Teth."

I am, Sir, &c.,

HUGH S. HAMILTON

Manston Vicarage, Leeds, Feb. 6, 1893.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—In answer to your correspondent, "P. C.," in this week's BANNER, may I say that I quite agree with him that my words appear somewhat startling on page 65 in the first and second editions of the "Handbook." This was pointed out to me some months ago, and I have rectified it in the third edition, which has been out some time. In the first edition the words ran, "Awaits its fulfilment after the resurrection from the dead." Here the words, "from the dead," ought to convey to a student of prophecy my intended meaning—viz., that it was not after the final resurrection, but after the first resurrection "from among the dead," that the millennium will be. Hence, I changed the words in the third edition to, "Awaits its fulfilment after the first resurrection from among the dead," which, of course, refers to the resurrection of those "that are Christ's," just before His millennial reign (1 Cor. xv. 23).

On page 79 I think it is very clearly stated that the millennium is after the first resurrection—viz., "After the raising of 'the dead in Christ,' and the removal of those 'that are Christ's' at His coming, to reign over that kingdom, the advent of which we daily pray for in the words, 'Thy kingdom come.'"

As I have devoted some time in writing an appendix to the third edition of the "Handbook" on that most solemn and important theme, "The Second Advent of our Lord," may I suggest that those who are interested in this subject might give away the former editions and procure the third, where many points connected with the sequence of future events, "the great tribulation," the meaning of the term "the beast," and the "Gog" of Ezekiel are discussed. In this chapter (24 pages) most of the questions connected with the "rapture of the Church," the "Second Advent," and the "two resurrections," are considered, and it is shown that "British-Israelites are looking for this glorious event—the pre-millennial advent of our Lord—as well as those students of prophecy who appear to know very little of what God has foretold concerning the destiny of the Lost House of Israel during these 'latter days;' for the Second Advent is most intimately associated with the sudden conversion of Judah and the restoration of both Houses to Palestine."

As I am writing, may I also strongly urge that believers in the great truth we have at heart should join the British-Israel Association. This Association, formed by the amalgamation of the Metropolitan Anglo-Israel, with the British-Israel Conference Association, is no London or Metropolitan association, but a national one, and composed more of members outside than in London.

There must be hundreds, even thousands, who ought to be enrolled on its books. Those who have not yet joined are earnestly invited to write to the secretary at 86, St. Martin's-lane, London, W.C., and ask for the rules and a copy of the last report. If this advice be followed out, I am sure our membership would be doubled in a few weeks.

Union is strength, and those who cannot join as members might as associates.

You, sir, as Editor of the BANNER, and Chairman of the Council of the Association, will, I am sure, support me in this appeal to the readers of your paper.

Faithfully yours,

H. ALDER-SMITH

(Hon. Treasurer British-Israel Association, and Editor of the "Handbook").

Feb. 9, 1893.

P.S.—Since writing the above I have read your excellent article in this week's BANNER on the subject of believers at once joining the united Association; and, hence, need hardly ask you to endorse the above, as it is very evident to every reader of the BANNER that you do so most heartily, especially as it is "The British-Israel Association," not the London or even the Metropolitan.—H. A-S.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—I have been staying for the last few weeks at Worthing, and whilst there I attended a meeting on behalf of the London Society for Promoting Christianity amongst the Jews. There was a deputation from the Parent Society, which included a converted Rabbi, and was supported by several of the leading local clergy. Isa. xliii. was first read, and made to apply exclusively to the Jews. Then the learned ex-Rabbi, in upholding the unique importance of his race, declared that the whole of the Old Testament prophecies were written for God's ancient people, the Jews, and must all be fulfilled by the Jews. To my surprise all the other speakers followed in the same strain—one passionately insinuating, "How can these God's ancient people, the Jews, possess the Gates of their enemies, become the fulness of the nations, and evangelise the heathen, and thus be God's witnesses to the world, unless you, under God's grace, convert them to the Christian faith." I am glad I was able to hold my peace till the meeting was over. Yet after I could not refrain from expostulating with one or two friends over this grievous and misleading perversion of the Scriptures, by those whose duty and privilege it is to unfold the Word of God. I pointed out that all these promises, and a host of others, were made, not to the House of Judah at all, but most clearly and distinctly to the House of Israel, and that it was a gross perversion of the truth to state that all the prophetic Scriptures were written for, and must be fulfilled by, and through the Jews. This view of the matter afforded considerable relief of mind to those to whom I mentioned it; they being of opinion, as I myself am, that the Jews, as a race, will not be converted till they literally "look upon Him whom they have pierced." They therefore thought that many of the prophecies could not be fulfilled during the present dispensation. I recommended to their notice the Handbook, and sent to Brighton, at their reques', for several copies, all of which are now in circulation; and one at least of those for whom I obtained a Handbook has already expressed a desire to take in regularly the BANNER. I merely mention this little fact to show how sometimes the most glaring misrepresentations may be over-ruled for good.

Digitized by Google

Yours truly, H. J. F.

Brighton, February 7th, 1893.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—I thought, if you have not seen this before, you might be interested in it, as it concerns Israel and Judah so closely. At this present time we cannot say what this year may bring forth, but no doubt we are living in the very latter end of prophecy.

I expect to see a great influx of Jews to this country, according to prophecy, as they have to walk to Israel before they can go back to Palestine.

Yours in hope of Israel,

G. WELLS, JUN.

Tunbridge Wells, Feb. 10, 1893.

[Copied from the "English Churchman and St. James's Chronicle," January 26th, 1893.]

"SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

"SIR,—Permit me again to call attention to the expiration of prophetic periods. According to Scripture chronology, the seventh year of Artaxerxes (Ezra vii. 7, 8), wherein the decree to restore Jerusalem (Dan. ix. 25) was issued, was B.C. 457. Thence, to B.C. 408 was forty-nine years, or 'seven weeks'; 2,300 years from B.C. 408 terminate in A.D. 1893 (vide Dan. viii. 14).

"What does this portend? The 'cleansing of the sanctuary' is the thing predicted—that is, the emancipation of Israel and the land of Israel. Are we to witness some great steps in that direction this very year?

"The third year of Belshazzar (Dan. viii. 1) was apparently B.C. 553; thence 'seven times' lunars terminate A.D. 1893. Does this mean that the treading down of Jerusalem by Gentiles (Luke xxi. 24) is to cease this year?

"It is a singular fact that the first invasion of Syria by the Moslems took place A.D. 632-3; thence 1,260 years terminate A.D. 1893 (Dan. xii. 7; Rev. xi. 2, xvi. 12), which is also the terminus ad quem of 1,290 calendar years (Dan. xii. 11) from A.D. 622, the Hegira era.

"ALFRED PORCELLI."

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—I herewith enclose cutting, taken from the Southern Echo, Southampton, thinking you might have room, perhaps, to insert it in your valuable paper. You will perceive that it is the testimony of one of the greatest living Oriental authorities, and, as such, forms valuable "blind evidence."

I am, &c., C. E. R.

West Cowes, February 14th, 1893.

"THE GREATEST OF ALL LANGUAGES.

"Professor Vambery has been lecturing on the 'Fashion of Languages' before the Buda-Pesth English Club. English, he said, may now be called the most fashionable language in all the five parts of the world. It began to spread in the first decades of the century through English literature, and in Asia by means of accelerated communication. Steamers were the wings of the English language in the far East, and its spreading from India and the Straits Settlements to China and Japan, is simply miraculous. There is no exaggeration in saying that the number of English-speaking Asiatics amounts to-day to three millions, that of Europeans to more than a million, and these added to the 126 million Anglo-Saxons give a total of English-speaking men and women of 130 millions. Should the increase continue in the same proportion, the middle of next century will have 200 million English-speaking persons, and English will have no rival in the world besides Chinese. Phonetically English is unsuitable for the foreigner, and the lecturer declares he always suffered acute pain in the jaws when speaking publicly in England, and trying to immitate genuine English. The phonetic difficulties are, however, amply rewarded through the expressiveness, the rare precision, vigour and exactness in which English surpasses all other European tongues."

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—It seems that I have been misled in supposing that the recognised Badge of the British-Israel Association has not been a success, and now, hearing they do not wish to give it up, I shall be glad if you will allow me to correct that mistake, and say that I do not wish the badge I have designed to clash with theirs as it would be a misfortune to our cause to seem in opposition to them; but, perhaps, there is room for the two, as what we want is something cheap, and as universally worn as the Primrose League Badge.

Yours, sincerely,

F. THOMPSON,
Hon. Sec., Bath Association.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—The enclosed you might like to make use of in the pages of the BANNER OF ISRAEL. It will be a subject of deep joy and thanksgiving to me to do anything, however small, that shall help to proclaim our glorious truths. Day by day I thank the God of Israel, who has brought me to know my glorious heritage as a daughter of Ephraim-Israel. My Bible is a new book to me, like a beautiful scene new bathed in sunlight. To God be all the praise. Before closing this, I would like to say how much I owe to the BANNER—a source at once of deep delight and priceless teaching. With all hearty wishes for its continued success,

I am, J. M. H.

THE STONE OF ISRAEL.

BY MRS. J. H. JOWITT.

GOD guarded stone! through long dark ages hidden
Waiting the time appointed to be known;
God lifts the veil, and we at length are bidden,
The witness of His truth to see and own.

Through all the long dark centuries abiding,
Where e'er our father's wand'ring steps were led,
This treasured Bethel stone by God's good guiding,
Has been preserved, its witness-light to shed.

Token of covenanted blessings given
To Israel, and to us His promised seed;
Nations for multitude, as stars of heaven,
The first-born's heritage, and ours indeed.

The pilgrim stone—that rested in its stages
From our own Palestine to Britain's shore;
The sanctuary stone, brought through the ages
To rest in our chief fane, and roam no more.

Here it rests—guarding Israel's thron'd daughter,
Witnessing her descent through David's line;
Queen of the West and East, o'er land and water,
An empire that shall never know decline.

Until the day shall come, when Judah, waking
From her long sleep shall her Messiah own;
And come with Israel, all her proud heart breaking
To know her King—the long rejected One.

The Covenanted Stone, though once rejected,
A tried stone, and a precious Corner-stone;
Shepherd of Israel! come, Thou long-expected,
And gather all the Tribes to Thee, as one.

Edinburgh, Jan., 1893.

THE March Monthly Part of THE BANNER OF ISRAEL contains a Coloured Map of St. Paul's Journeys, and the places mentioned in the Acts and in the Epistles. Price 6d., by post 7d., or by order of any Bookseller.

ERRATA.—No. 480, page 63, col. 2, 21st line of article on "Foolish Nation," read 1 Samuel instead of 2 Samuel.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed "PHILO-ISRAEL," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION for the BANNER OF ISRAEL, in Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts. To any part of the United Kingdom, Canada, America, or Europe, in the postal union:—

	s.	d.		s.	d.
copy, including postage ..	7	0	Tasmania ..	7	0
New Zealand ..	7	0	South Australia ..	7	0
Cape Colony ..	7	0	Queensland ..	7	0
Victoria ..	7	0	Natal ..	7	0
Western Australia ..	7	0	New South Wales ..	7	0
Transvaal ..	7	0	India ..	7	0
			Ceylon, via Brindisi ..	7	0

All Post Office Orders, Cheques, &c., should be crossed "City BANK, Ludgate-hill, to the ac. of ROBERT BANKS AND SON." They will then only be paid to our account.

READING CASES for holding the Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts, may be had, price 2s. Sent post free on receipt of Postal Order.

THE ANNUAL VOLUMES, bound in handsome blue cth, price 8s.

THE MONTHLY PARTS, in tinted wrapper, published the last day of each month, 6d.

NEW BADGES.

Gold Brooches, 6/3 and 4/-
Scarf Pins, 4/9 and 3/9.
Pendants, large, 4/6; small, 2/9.
All Badges, Metal Gilt, 9d.

All Post Free. Applications, with Postal Order enclosed, to be sent to MRS. THOMPSON, or to MAJOR-GEN. CARLYLE BELL, St. Laurence Villa, Kingston-hill, Surrey.

NOW READY.
HANDSOME BLUE CLOTH
CASES FOR BINDING.
Price 1s. 6d., or post free, 1s. 8d.
VOLUME XVI. OF
THE BANNER OF ISRAEL,
Price 8s. Sent Post Free.
ROBERT BANKS AND SON, Racquet-ct., Fleet-st., E.C.

USEFUL BOOKS FOR BIBLE STUDENTS.
In Two Vols., about 500 pages in each, cloth bound, price 5s., originally published at 7/6.

HISTORY OF THE JEWS
In Three Concurrent Sections.

I.—Ten Books of the Antiquities of the Jews, as TRANSLATED by WHISTON, with Notes from FLAVIUS JOSEPHUS.
II.—The Bible Narrative from the Creation to the Captivity at Babylon, fully given and faithfully rendered.
III.—A Modern History of the Jews. Abridged and Offered as a Commentary on the Preceding Sections.

The Two Volumes sent post free for 5/3 nett
To be had only direct from ROBERT BANKS AND SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Price 6d. Monthly. Annual Subscription 7s.
THE MESSENGER.
Edited by "OXONIAN."

Each number contains papers by the EDITOR, and other well-known writers, a SERMON by Dr. WILD, Notes and Queries, &c

Now Ready, price 5s., post free, 5s. 4d.,
Illustrated by MAPS,
RUSSIA JAPHET;
OR, THE MUSCOVITE, THE COSSACK, AND THE MONGOL.

Being a detailed Identification of the principal peoples subject to the Czar. By "OXONIAN."
London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C.

"A WONDERFUL REMEDY."
"I WAS GIVEN UP BY ALL."
"SAVED FROM AN EARLY GRAVE."
Such are the words of grateful Patients relative to their CASES OF
CONSUMPTION
CURED BY THE TREATMENT OF
MR. GEO. T. CONGREVE.

Read his Book, "ON CONSUMPTION, &c." which may be had post free for ONE SHILLING from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.; or may be ordered of any Bookseller.

NOTE.—CONSULTATIONS FREE at Coombe Lodge, Peckham, on TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings only. No Charge except the usual charge for three weeks or six weeks' supply of medicine. All Patients should read the book first.

"I am delighted with this."—PHILO-ISRAEL.
NEW AND IMPROVED EDITION OF
ISRAEL'S WORLD,
By Rev. HENRY ROE. Price 2d.

Also "Consecration," 2d., "Going to Africa," 1s.; "West African Scenes," 2s.; "Fernando Po Mission," 1s. Also "Israel's World" and "Consecration" bound together in cloth, with Author's latest photograph portrait, 1s.

Order of ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C., or of Rev. HENRY ROE, Radstock, via Bath.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The Geography of the Gates. With Map and six full-page, and one double-page, Illustrations, printed on plate paper. 208 pages, in handsome cloth, gilt. Second Edition, Price 2s. 6d.; post free for P.O.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific. 56 pages. Price 4d.; by post 4½d.

Are the English People the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel? An Inquiry Establishing the Identity of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 4d.; by post 4½d.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d.; by post 4½d. Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters."

Historical, Ethnic, and Philological Arguments in Proof of the British Identity with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel, Clearly and Simply Stated. Price 2d.; by post 2½d.

The History of the House of Israel: How They were Lost, and How They were Found. Told for the Children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fifth Edition.

Our Identity: What it is Not; What it is; and Our Obligations To-day in Respect to it. Price 2d.; a reduction for quantities.

Philo-Israel's Leaflets. 4 pages, crown 8vo. Price 1s. 6d. per 100, postage 2d. Assorted packets, 1s. 8d. 19 different subjects.

The British Constitution. Followed by "A NECESSARY CONSEQUENCE," by L. P. Price 3d., post free 3½d.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument, Proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100, postage 6d.

Anglo-Israelism. True, Not False. Being Philo-Israel's Reply to the Rev. Canon Bell's Pamphlet, "Anglo-Israelism: True or False?" Price 1d.; 6s. 6d. per 100. 16 pages, crown 8vo.

Egypt's Place in the Bible. By PHILO-ISRAEL. A Paper read before the Clerical and Lay Association at Bristol and Clifton. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100.

London: R. BANKS & SON Racquet-court, E.C.

"THE WORLD'S PROVED REMEDY FOR ALL CHEST DISEASES."

COUGH, ASTHMA,
CHRONIC BRONCHITIS,
INFLUENZA,
THERE IS NONE TO EQUAL IT.

Rev. F. E. HEAPE, of DERBY, in a recent letter, says: "Your Medicine always puts my lungs right, and drove out the terrible INFLUENZA last May."

This Medicine has been prepared for 65 years.

CONGREVE'S BALSAMIC ELIXIR.

In Bottles, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 22s., may be had of all Chemists and Medicine Vendors.

TEA! TEA! TEA!
FROM
INDIA, CEYLON, AND CHINA.
Best Quality and Best Value.
From 1/6 to 3/6 per lb. Samples Gratis.
Carriage Paid on Parcels of 6lbs. and upwards
Robinson & James,
42, TRINITY SQUARE, TOWER HILL
LONDON, E.C.

TOOTH-ACHE
CURED INSTANTLY BY
BUNTER'S NERVINE
Prevents Decay, Saves Extraction. Sleepless Nights Prevented.
Neuralgic Headaches and all Nerve Pains removed by BUNTER'S NERVINE. All Chemists, 1s. 1½d.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.
ELECTROPATHIC BELT
FOR
LUMBAGO
Mr. J. B. CARNE, Station Master L. B. & S. C. Ry., Clapham Junction Station, S.W., writes:—"I have derived great benefit from wearing your Electropathic Belt. The Lumbago and pains in my back have both ceased."
Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.
Only Address,
52, OXFORD ST., LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)
Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

Digitized by Google

LUNG SAVE YOUR LIVES BY TAKING TONIC
LUNG OWBRIDGE'S TONIC
LUNG LUNG TONIC TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG THE MIGHTY HEALER. TONIC
LUNG It has a power over disease hitherto TONIC
LUNG unknown in Medicine. TONIC
LUNG Are you at all Weak-chested or in- TONIC
LUNG clined to be Consumptive, with just a TONIC
LUNG touch of Cough now and then? TONIC
LUNG "Try this Wonderful Medicine." The TONIC
LUNG Cough and Weakness will disappear as TONIC
LUNG if by magic, and you will feel a strength TONIC
LUNG and power you never had before. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COUGH? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COLD? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL TONIC
LUNG REMOVE IT! TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG Bronchitis & Asthma it relieves instantly TONIC
LUNG The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful TONIC
LUNG in Whooping Cough become less with TONIC
LUNG each dose of the medicine. TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE Chemist Hull TONIC
LUNG Sold in bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. TONIC
LUNG and 11s., by all Chemists and Patent TONIC
LUNG Medicine Vendors. Wholesale all TONIC
LUNG London and Provincial Houses. TONIC

The True and Divine Appointment for the Cure of Disease.
Send to
B. V. SCOTT, M.B.M.R.S.,
College of Health, 121, Kensington, Liverpool,
for his
VOICE OF NATURE TO THE INVALID.
Post free 5 stamps.

Thousands of incurables (so-called) have proved God's own means could save when others failed.

Rev. F. Harper says of Mr. Scott's book: "It is a library in itself, and free from quackery."

Rev. Lush says: "Mr. Scott's treatment is natural, safe, reasonable, and Scriptural."

Send for the Book at once.

PAGE WOODCOCK'S
WIND PILLS

It is astonishing how many people imagine they suffer from

HEART DISEASE

They experience a depressing feeling about the region of the heart, accompanied by an occasional stab of pain, nervous debility, loss of appetite and general depression. The fact is they suffer from

INDIGESTION, OR DYSPEPSIA.

The food, instead of being thoroughly digested, develops into Wind, and flies about the valves of the heart causing the symptoms named. All who suffer in this way should at once take

Page Woodcock's Wind Pills,

A world-renowned remedy for all Stomach disorders.

All Sufferers from INDIGESTION, LIVER COMPLAINTS, WIND on the STOMACH, COSTIVENESS, SICK HEADACHE, HEARTBURN, NERVOUS DEBILITY, PALPITATION of the HEART, BILIOUSNESS, &c.,

should avail themselves of this most excellent medicine.

Of all Medicine Vendors, at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d., or Post Free for P.O. or Stamps, from PAGE WOODCOCK, Lincoln.

NEW CATALOGUE of Works on Our Identity post free from R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

GIGANTIC SALE OF

100 COLOURS TO SELECT FROM

In consequence of the mild season, we have still in stock over 250,000 DRESS LENGTHS of our famous Cloths which, in order to effect a rapid clearance we have reduced to less than Manufacturers' Cost Price. 100 lovely new colours to select from. All goods are new and in perfect condition. We will gladly send patterns post free, and they need not be returned. Write to-day for patterns and Sale Price List
FULL DRESS LENGTHS OF MAGNIFICENT CLOTHS 9s.6d. CARRIAGE PAID.

GREATEST BARGAINS EVER OFFERED

LADIES CLOTH DRESSES

GENUINE REDUCTIONS! WRITE FOR PATTERNS

LUTAS LEATHLEY & Co ARMLEY, LEEDS.

MASON'S EXTRACT OF HERBS FOR MAKING NON-INTOXICATING BEER

WE ALL REQUIRE SOMETHING TO DRINK

The finest, most refreshing and pleasantest beverage obtainable. One table-spoonful of this Extract makes one gallon of splendid Beer. Try it. A sample bottle, enough to make eight gallons, post free for 9 stamps.

NEWBALL & MASON, NOTTINGHAM.

AGENTS WANTED.

MASON'S WINE ESSENCES, non-intoxicating. For children's parties and social gatherings. A 6d. bottle will make one gall. of delicious wine. Post free 9 stamps, or a bottle of both Extract of Herbs and Wine Essence post free 15 stamps.

"My Jewels." Choice Selections from Writers of Sacred Poetry, with Appropriate Texts from Holy Scripture, arranged for every day. By SARAH SHARP. Gilt lettered, 1s. 8d.; Royal edition, white calf gilt (as accepted by the Queen), 4s. 6d.

Anglo-Israel; or, The Saxon Race Proved to be the Lost Tribes of Israel. By the REV. W. H. POOLE, D.D. Large royal 8vo., of 700 pages, with illustrations, price 10s. 6d.

London: ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court Fleet-street, or by order of any bookseller.

DR. ROOKE'S SOLAR ELIXIR AND ORIENTAL PILLS

DR. ROOKE'S SOLAR ELIXIR AND ORIENTAL PILLS effect marvellous cures. 50 years reputation. Sold everywhere. Pills in boxes 1/1½, 2/9, and 4/6. The Elixir in bottles 2/9, 4/6, and 11/-

Dr. ROOKE, SCARBOROUGH, ENGLAND.

TEETH.—£1 A FULL SET

ESKELL'S.—CELEBRATED MAKE, £2 2s. Warranted and fitted in one visit. No extractions needed. HALF A MILLION SETS already supplied. The Nursing Record and Hospital World says:—We recommend all who require Reliable and Good Teeth at a small cost to go to Messrs. ESKELL, 445, Strand (facing Charing Cross Station), and 58, Ludgate Hill, City, London. Also at 27, Western Road, Brighton, and 23, Mount Pleasant, Tunbridge Wells. Hours 9 till 7. Illustrated Pamphlets, explaining everything, free. Established 100 years.

No. 26.—Price 1s. per 100, 8s. 6d. per 1,000.

THOUGHTS FOR THE BRITISH FOLK.

SUGGESTED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

OUR ISRAELITE MINERS.

London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C.

The Fulness of the Nations; or, the A B C of the Promises Given to the House of Israel Considered in Relation to the Second Advent. By Dr. H. ALDER-SMITH. Cloth gilt, price 5s.

The Lost Ten Tribes of Israel. By the Rev. JOSEPH WILD, D.D., Pastor of Bond-street Congregational Church, Toronto, Price 3s.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-ct., Fleet-st., E.C.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument Proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100, postage 1d.

R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

PHOSPHORUS

A new process of preparing this necessary food for the Brain and Nervous System, invented by Mr. Samuel Birley, M.D., renders its therapeutic value superior to all the Phosphates, Hypophosphites, &c., usually perscribed. May be taken for years with perfect safety! Descriptive pamphlet free to enquirers (mentioning this paper), from

GORDON, MURRAY & Co., Ltd.,
10, ADAM STREET, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co. (Ltd.) 23, Paternoster-row. Wednesday MARCH 1, 1893. All Rights Reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India).

"And the Remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS OF THE EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XVII., No. 845. Entered at Stationer's Hall.] WEDNESDAY, MARCH 8, 1893. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

PAGE
The Coming War with Two Fronts 121
Home, Sweet Home. By H. R. Shaw 122
"Are All Israelites Jews?" 124
The Church of God: What Is It? By W. H. Mason 125
The Coming Golden Age. By P. C. 126
Shall We Wear a Badge? By Rev. J. Idrisyn Jones 128
Random Shafts. By John Shootingham 128
Review 129
Proposed British-Israel Association for Cardiff 130
Correspondence 130

THE COMING WAR WITH TWO FRONTS.

THERE is a great war coming. The German military authorities are quite sure of that. But they also know with whom their country will have to wage it, and the character of it. It will be with Russia on the one side and France on the other. Count von Caprivi, the German Imperial Chancellor, in opening the proceedings in the Army Bills Committee of the German Legislature, plainly indicated the coming attack of Russia, and the reasons for it. He declared that one of the results of the Austro German alliance had been that Russia, which aims at the possession of the Dardanelles, and of Constantinople, sees that to attain that object she must subdue the German Empire first, represented by the "Brandenberg Gate," but not Austria, through Vienna. The full fury of the storm is sure to fall on Germany, as the strongest of the three Powers, and to enable her to meet the terrific onset she wants more men, more guns, more cavalry, and a bigger reserve. The German authorities will never, they say, sacrifice Austria-Hungary to appease the greed of Russia, but will defend their ally and themselves to the last, and, if possible, carry the war into the enemies territory, as in the Franco-German contest.

The alliance between Russia and France is more than suspected. The two Powers, which are resolved on humbling Germany once and for ever are not likely to miss their chance when once one of the two commences the attack on the Power that lies between them. "The war with two fronts," then, is before the German Empire, and the nation is painfully aware of the fact. The Chancellor's remarks on the subject plainly showed that he was under no delusion as to the coming storm. He is reported in the Times thus:—

In regard to Germany's allies, the Chancellor pointed out that the period for which the Triple Alliance had been concluded was gradually running out, and, though he hoped it would be renewed, no thorough dependence could be placed upon its renewal. The chief object of the Italian alliance was to cover the south-western frontier of Austria. There was no reason to doubt the efficiency of the Italian or of the Austro-Hungarian army, but neither of them was free from certain organic weaknesses. "Similar weaknesses," added Count von Caprivi, "exist also in the German army, especially in respect of our reserves, which can hardly be quite up to the standard of the French and Russian reserves, which are made up of a younger material. It may be difficult to estimate the quality of troops after a long period of peace, but I fully believe that the German troops are the best in the world." The statistical details into which the Chancellor then entered showed, however, that in respect of numbers Germany and her allies would be left in a serious state of inferiority, while it could hardly be doubted that the main efforts of a hostile coalition would be directed in the first place against Germany as the strongest of the three allied Powers. Germany must herself be in a position to assume the offensive, and not only to win victories, but to win them rapidly.

With regard to naval operations, the Chancellor believed that the German navy could hold its own against Russia in the Baltic, but a French fleet would unquestionably be despatched to join hands with the Russian and to establish Russian supremacy in those northern waters, with Denmark reduced to a condition of practical vassalage. In the Mediterranean Italy was dependent upon the decisive assistance of an English fleet for the means of effectual resistance to the superior naval power of France, and even with such assistance the issue must be considered problematic. In regard to Austria-Hungary, account must chiefly be taken of her land forces, which would be of special value if she were able to transfer the scene of war to the north of the Carpathians. The effectiveness of her alliances, no less than the possible action of neutral Powers, required that Germany should be in a position to strike decisive blows on the immediate outbreak of hostilities, and it was with a view to enable her to strike them and to strike them swiftly that the allied Governments, convinced of the inadequateness of her present resources, had decided to lay the new Army Bills before the Imperial Diet rather than assume the responsibility of prolonging a situation which every day rendered more unfavourable, and which might ultimately jeopardize the maintenance of Germany's legitimate position.

Digitized by Google

That God is allowing Russia to become a stupendous military Power is clear from Count Von Caprivi's speech. He said, "Russia was a growing Power, and within measurable distance of becoming the most powerful military state on the continent." She has no particular quarrel with Germany, but there is much dislike entertained by the Russian against the German people; and, besides that, Russia has always had a national policy which reckons with long periods of time but is never abandoned. For military reasons she desires to possess herself of "the Gate of all the Gates"—Constantinople. The coming war has for its object, its acquisition. Russia argues that with her power planted there, the position being impregnable, she will practically rule the world, and destroy the trade of her rival, British-Israel. She would, holding the Gate, secure Palestine, and so cut off British trade with India, Australasia, China, and Africa (East and South).

In all this she reckons without the Lord, and in ignorance, like most of our clergy and laity at home, of Our Identity with God's dominion, British-Israel (Psa. cxiv. 2). In the Word of God nothing is clearer than that the heir of all the Gates of the world is Israel, God's chosen ones, because constituted the heir of the world (Rom. iv. 13). To her, then, is the reversion of Constantinople, the "strong city" of Psa. lx. 9, when the Turk vacates; and the Russian dream of the dominion of the world will prove to be such when she receives at the Lord's hands her quietus as an empire, in the last great contest at Armageddon.

But Russia, no doubt, has a great work to perform in Europe, and so to occupy the attention of Germany, France, and Italy that Israel may, while they are involved in their last deadly struggle for national life or death, steal back to their land and occupy it, in accordance with the prophecies. In all the newspaper literature of the day it is remarkable that no writer seems to dream of our own nation being in the least degree involved in the terrific strife which will destroy "yonder ill-consolidated Europe." Our strength will then be to sit still, to shut our doors about us, to enter into such of our chambers (Palestine, to wit) which God may throw open for us, and to wait for a little moment until the Lord's indignation with the earthly Powers shall have found vent and be overpast (Isa. xxvi. 20, 21). Men smile when told of Our Identity, and ask us "Cui bono?" The good of the matter for ourselves will be acknowledged fully and freely when the opponents see that while the continent is destroying itself with the awful weapons which the nations have been so long forging for the horrid work, these islands are at peace and our people waxing stronger and richer under the immediate blessing of the Lord. To the same Lord will then be due all the praise for His faithfulness and truth to the afterseed of Abraham, whom He has so loved and protected.

"It is impossible to mistake a Semitic language, and, what is most important, it is impossible to imagine an Aryan language derived from a Semitic, or a Semitic from an Aryan language. The grammatical framework is totally distinct in these two families of speech; this does not exclude, however, the possibility that both are diverging streams from the same source: and the comparisons that have been instituted between the Semitic roots, reduced to their simple form, and the roots of the Aryan languages have made it more than probable that the material elements with which they both started were originally the same."—MAX MULLER.

HOME, SWEET HOME.

By H. R. SHAW.

THE homeliness of the Briton is proverbial; so also is his habit of isolation, whether enforced or acquired. So marked, indeed, is the latter characteristic of our race that it has furnished a proof of Our Identity with the Israel apostrophised by the wicked but inspired seer Balaam, in the memorable words (Numb. xxiii. 9), "From the hills I behold him; lo, the people shall dwell alone, and shall not be reckoned among the nations." It is true that unbelievers in Anglo-Israelism, as well as others ignorant of the Identity, have sought to find fulfilment of this prophecy in the present lonely condition of Judah, the visible Israel, but this can be only at best but an imperfect fulfilment of Balaam's vision, since the loneliness of the Jew is that of the solitary in the midst of a crowd, and therefore a state of curse, whereas we know by the testimony of the shrewd king of Moab, that Israel's loneliness was to be taken as an altogether unmixed blessing while dwelling in great multitudes under the special favour of the Almighty.

In a paper upon "Protection," in the BANNER for Jan. 13th, 1892, it was shown how this Israelitish isolation has fallen upon the British people physically, morally, and commercially, and we might have added financially, since, in fulfilment of another promise in store for Israel obedient, the nation lends to all others, but borrows from none. But now we are called upon to notice a discovery made or announced by the Daily Telegraph in its issue of Jan. 16th, 1893, that Englishmen dwell very much alone socially in their instinct of homeliness. Of course we have heard before now that no other language than the English possesses the word "home," or any exact equivalent in meaning; we have also been told how our nearest neighbours strive, more or less successfully, to prove that they have the thing in their possession, if they have not the word; but now it seems, by the latest authority to which allusion has been made, that we are indeed unique in our love of home and its associations, and the proof of this is to be found in our peculiar English receptivity to the charms of pseudo-negro minstrelsy, an art having its origin in the land of Manasseh, and being but dimly related to the negro pure and simple, although abundantly suggestive of what may be characterised as the home sentiment.

The leading article is as follows:—

Englishmen, as a rule, are not prone to analyse their motives and impulses, and it may be that many of them, if asked why England, rather than America, is the true home and "happy hunting-ground" of the professional negro minstrel, would be at a loss for a convincing answer to that question. Were it propounded to a German, on the other hand, he would probably reply with unhesitating promptitude that musical taste in this country, or the rude uncultivated instinct which passes as such, affects the simple rather than the complex, in melody and harmony alike, and finds its highest gratification in plain, easy tunes, which may be followed and remembered with a minimum of intellectual effort. The songs, choruses, and instrumental pieces performed by companies of counterfeit Ethiopians are, for the most part, characterised by an elementary simplicity of conception, design, and construction; wherefore, regarded from the German point of view, they are doubtless pre-eminently congenial to the British ear, untrained in the subtler combinations of scientific harmony, and unreceptive of the dramatic or descriptive suggestions proferred by "continuous melody." It may be frankly admitted, even by those among us who most strenuously assert the musicality of the English nation, that the unpretentious tunefulness of negro minstrelsy constitutes its chief charm and attraction to the great British public. Performances of this class, whether given within the precincts of a close concert-room or on the sands of a breezy watering-place, appeal to the sympathies rather than to the intelligence of their audiences. Probably their special and exceptional popularity in this country is as solidly founded on the fact that they interpret what may be roughly defined as the "home-sentiments," as upon their intrinsic melodiousness. The word "home," for which there is no exact synonym in any Continental tongue, has a significance for Englishmen, real or imaginary, which its foreign equivalents or paraphrases do not possess for the natives of other lands. This circumstance fully accounts for the favour by which the British public distinguishes any and every reminder, whether addressed to the eye or the ear, of the domestic associations which it holds so dear.

Digitized by Google

It is doubtless on this account that a certain well-known band of so-called "negro minstrels," the successors of a series of clever troupes of which, we believe, the "Ethiopian Serenaders" were the first, have attained so high a pitch of popularity among Londoners and their country cousins that it has been thought profitable to convert the undertaking into a limited liability company. Many private concerns on a large scale are thus dealt with now-a-days, and the process is generally a high tribute to their success. The entertainment in question has been famous for the humorous element contained in it, but it has beyond doubt secured its great popularity mainly by virtue of its cultivation of the sentimental side of the branch of art to which it belongs. English people, as we have said, like best that which appeals most to their domestic sympathies. In our picture exhibitions, as well as in our theatres and concert-rooms, the influence of this strong national predilection is conspicuously manifest. Paintings illustrating incidents of home life, or the joys and sorrows of childhood, are in steady request when the demand for historical and allegorical subjects, or even land and sea scapes, is at its slackest. The most successful plays of our time have been those the plot and action of which have most vividly and sympathetically exemplified the force and tenacity of the "home-sentiment," which may be said to specifically inspire and animate the songs and choruses forming a full moiety of the average negro minstrels' programme. To this fact, no less than to their unquestionable melodic merit, may justly be attributed the unique and enduring popularity in this country of the entertainment in question. And not only has it enjoyed a rare continuance of public favour, in which every social class has participated, but it has secured a special "clientèle" of its own, no less well-to-do than numerous, and therefore highly remunerative. There are many thousands of eminently respectable British town and country folk who profess insurmountable objections to theatres and music-halls, but see no harm in secular concerts, entertainments of the "drawing-room" class, and negro minstrelsy. By some occult mental process, inexplicable to the ordinary intellect, they include these performances in the category of harmless musical recreations that may be said to begin with oratorio and end with pianoforte recital. Professedly serious persons require amusement as well as the avowedly frivolous. Of course it must be of a kind the enjoyment of which they can reconcile with the dictates of conscience. Hence those to whom "King Lear" and "The Man who Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo" are equally repugnant will listen over and over again, and with unconcealed delight, to the amatory numbers of "I lub a lubly gal," or the sentimental strains of "'Way down upon the Swanny River."

Perhaps it is because so-called negro minstrelsy is inveterately wont to harp upon the domestic affections and the commonplace, though tender, sentiment that pervades the humblest households that it has never established a firm and lasting hold upon public favour in either France or Germany, the only Continental countries, as far as we know, in which any attempt has been made to introduce it as a special feature of the music-hall or "variety" entertainment. Into Italy and Spain, to the best of our belief, the blackened visage, banjo, and bones of the Ethiopian serenader have not as yet penetrated; nor is there the least probability that they would enable their proprietors to keep body and soul together in either of those realms. Hungary and Roumania have their own stationary and peripatetic troupes of minstrels—tsigani and laotari—chiefly addicted to the playing of dance-music and to the singing of patriotic lays, love ballads, and fantastic legends of fairies and giants, bloodthirsty dragons, and invincible brigands. Neither the broad humour of the negro comic songs and colloquies nor the simple pathos of the sentimental ditties that often moisten the eyes of an English audience with "unfamiliar brine" would elicit laughter or tears from the dwellers in those primitive semi-Eastern regions, musical as they are by nature and habit alike. Where the genuine dusky gipsy "makes music" for the people, the imitation ebony African would sing his sweetest songs and enact his wildest frolics in vain. Apart from a certain highly-cultivated class of musicians, professional and non-professional, which worships the same ideals and professes identical beliefs throughout the civilised world, people of various nationalities differ from each other in musical taste as distinctly as they do in language, manners, and dress; in some cases even more so. As far as song is concerned, for instance, the prevailing tone of German lyrics is imaginative, while in Italy the amatory passion predominates, and here, as we have already pointed out, the "home sentiment" is decidedly in the ascendant. The songs of France are redolent of the vivacious gaiety that is an enviable French national characteristic; those of Russia reflect the inborn sadness of her sorrow-laden people. We English have a sufficiently robust and masterful national music of our own; but the mingled childlike mirth and mild, homely sentimentality of the negro minstrelsy have an even firmer tenure of public favour in this country than the best of our native compositions.

It is, we here find, distinctly declared by the writer that all foreign paraphrases of our word "home" fail to possess any significance for the natives of other lands. Surely this one fact must prove us to be a homeless people, just such a people as an impartial critic might readily imagine to be a set of Lost Tribes, driven from a pleasant heritage, but not without some dim though, perhaps, despairing hope of future recovery.

And it is a remarkable fact that J. Howard Payne, the author of the world-renowned lyric, "Home, Sweet Home," who, like the negro minstrelsy, hailed from the United States, although the song was published and first sung, we believe, in London, was just a typical unfortunate of the class we have suggested, and of whom it was said by his personal friend that "he was a wanderer in life; he, whose songs were sung in every tongue, and found an echo in every heart, never had a home; he died in a foreign land." The same authority also tells us that Payne, who was twice American Consul at Tunis, was much in his company whilst sojourning at Washington, in the interval between the two appointments. Of an evening they would walk the streets. "Once in a while we would see some family circle, so happy, and forming so beautiful a group, that we would both stop, and then pass silently on. Upon such occasions he would give a history of his wanderings, his trials, and all the cares incident to his sensitive nature and poverty. 'How often,' he said once, 'have I been in the heart of Paris, Berlin, and London, or some other city, and heard persons singing, or the hand-organ playing, "Home, Sweet Home," without a shilling to buy the next meal or a place to lay my head. The world has literally sung my song until every heart is familiar with its melody. Yet I have been a wanderer from my boyhood. My country has turned me ruthlessly from my office, and in my old age I have to submit to humiliation for bread.'" Thus he would complain of his hapless lot. His only wish was to die in a foreign land, to be buried by strangers, and sleep in obscurity. His wish was realised. He shortly afterwards obtained his consulate at Tunis, in which city he died, after a long and tedious illness.

Digitized by Google

In the Protestant Cemetery there is a tomb erected to his memory, with a suitable inscription. The body of the dead singer, however, reposes, as it should, in his own native land, where it was taken after a long interval, to lie in state and be re-interred with military honours, for it appears his full title was Colonel John Howard Payne.

"ARE ALL ISRAELITES JEWS?"

OUR readers may wonder at our going back to so very elementary a point as the above, and gravely sitting down to inquire whether if in point of fact while "all Jews are Israelites" (as we freely concede to be true), that yet it is also an undoubted fact that not all the "Israelites are Jews." That is, that while the children of Israel, the Twelve-tribed people of the Exodus, were composed partly of Jews, and partly of tribes who were not of the Tribe of Judah, it is perfectly right to reckon the men of Judah (or Jews) as belonging to the children of Israel, but it is not correct to say that the other tribes, not of Judah, were "Jews" or "Judahites,"—since they were Israelites only, and belonged to that people. The problem which so puzzles our clergy to-day is the one with which they are quite familiar in respect to their own land! We are composed as a nation of the English, who are the vast majority, of the Scots, the Irish, and the Welsh. The name by which the whole people are commonly known abroad, and even among ourselves, is that of the majority—viz., "The English" nation. But if we desire to distinguish the various elements of which our nation is composed, it would be right to say that all the English, all the Scots, all Irish, and all Welshmen are British; but that not all the British are either English, or Scotch, or Welsh, or Irish. Similarly we may say "all terriers are dogs, but not all dogs are terriers." "All Jews are Israelites," because they belong to the great body called "the children of Israel," or "Israel;" but the House of Joseph, or Ephraim—that is, the Northern kingdom and majority of the Israelites after the time of Solomon—were Israelites only, but not at all identical with the House of Judah or the Jews.

Now the Jews were Israelites too, because they formed one tribe of the Israelites; and they were Jews or Judahites, because they were of that tribe. We go into these somewhat elementary and trite matters because we have received through a friend a letter of a minister of religion, in which he hopelessly stumbles at this distinction; and asks "If it is worth while to dwell on these 'hair-splitting' differences!" He confuses the matter further by the statement that "after the Babylonian captivity, the restored captives included people of all the tribes of the Hebrew race." Dr. Smith is cited as the authority for this—not the Bible; and then he adds the astounding conclusion "that the new nation thus formed was called the Jews," or "the Jewish nation!" "All Jewish historians," he tells us further, "that he has read, speak of the whole Hebrew race as Jews; and do not always draw the line between Jews and Israelites." He cites Dr. Angus (Handbook), "Stack House History of the Bible," and "Josephus' Antiquities of the Jews," as cases in point. We beg to remind our opponent that there were divinely inspired historians of the Jewish people—namely, Ezra and Nehemiah. They never confound the two Houses of Israel, but tell us that the captives who were carried to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar—viz., the House of Judah or the Jews—were those who returned (Ezra i. 1; ii. 1). The names of the returning tribes—Judah, Levy, and Benjamin—are given us by them, but they make no mention at all of the tribes of the House of Joseph or Ephraim as among those who came back under their guidance.

By desiring to reduce God's two Houses of Israelites to one people, "the Jews," our opponent is distinctly transgressing the Lord's arrangement of the two presently existing nations of Israel, which Jeremiah records in chap. xxxiii. 24 of his prophecy: "Considerest thou not what this people have spoken, saying: The two families which the Lord hath chosen He hath even cast them off? Thus they have despised My people that they should be no more a nation before them." Our opponent declares that "all Jewish historians speak of the whole Hebrew race as Jews." But there must be some mistake here! For Josephus, whom he cites, draws a very sharp distinction between the Ten and the Two Tribes in his Antiq. xi. 5, 2, a passage we recommend our opponent to study. We have also before us the title of another history, written by two Jewish ladies, "The History and Literature of the Israelites," by C. and A. de Rothschild, London, 1870, which concerns only the Ten Tribes, as distinguished from the Two, just as Josephus does, and describes them as Israel, while the Jews are called by their Scriptural name of the sister "Kingdom of Judah." The fact is, our opponent is hardly well read, either in the secular or the Scriptural history of the two Houses, and should at once try and solve the mystery which puzzles him—namely, what became of the Ten Tribes after their deportation to Assyria by the kings of that Empire, in 740 to 678 B.C.

As to Ezekiel's nomenclature, which seems to trouble the opponent, he must recollect that the Ten Tribes of Israel had already been in captivity over a century, and had ceased to be known as Israel in his day, and while he prophesied. "The House of Israel," at that period, were the Jews; though prophetically the prophet foresaw that Israel and Judah were yet to be reunited, and return to their land as one nation and one kingdom. Ezek. xxxvii., xxxviii., and xxxix. clearly show this. On what our opponent calls "hair-splitting" differences the whole of God's government of the world depends! The distinction was in his mind when the Exodus took place, as Psa. cxiv. 2 proves to us; and the political act which brought it about, was the handiwork of God Himself, as 1 Kings xii. 24 explains. Israel and Judah have never been united since that event as the opponent supposes. For if they have been, then Amos ix. 15 has been falsified, which God forbid! and the restoration of Israel and Judah together has been again cancelled, and made void contrary to the solemn promises of God, not only in that text, but in Ezek. xxxvii. 15—28, and in divers other passages of the Word.

One word more and we have done. Our opponent supposes that the restored nation when they returned from the Babylonian captivity was then first called "Jews"! Would he be surprised to find from 2 Kings xvi. 6, before Israel was carried captive to Assyria and Media at all, that the Scriptures gave that name to the subjects of Ahaz, the wicked King of Judah, so far back as B.C. 742? Verily our opponent has much to learn! and being a minister of the Gospel, it seems right that he should master this subject without much further delay. He will find it a profitable study, and a key to the Scriptures besides. We annex that part of his letter which concerns the subject, omitting names and addresses,

Digitized by Google

My Dear Friend,—After reading Mr. A.'s letter, which you enclose in yours, I immediately began to think; but after some thought I fail to see the force of Mr. A.'s objection to my calling the Israelites Jews. For though the Israelites were not called Jews by Moses, Joshua, and their contemporaries, yet, the term "Jews" has almost universally been used to designate the Hebrew race. Ezekiel did not draw a clear line between Jews and Israelites, for he addresses the captives as Israelites (chap. xxxiv. 2). Though "all Jews are Israelites," yet how are we to draw the distinction between Israelites who are not Jews, and those that are? (that is in reading Ezekiel). Isaiah again presents the same difficulty to me. To say that "all Jews are Israelites, but all Israelites are not Jews," is like saying "all Israelites are descendants of Abraham, but all descendants of Abraham are not Israelites." Is it worth while to dwell on these "hair-splitting" differences? After the Babylonian captivity the restored captives included people of all the tribes of the Hebrew race (Dr. Smith), and the new nation thus formed was called "Jews" or "the Jewish nation." All Jewish historians I have read speak of the whole Hebrew race as Jews, and do not always draw the line between Jews and Israelites (see Dr. Angus "Handbook," "Stack House History of the Bible," "Josephus' Antiquities of the Jews."

In regard to the question of the Identity of the Ten Tribes of Israel with the British, I cannot enter into that now. As far as I can judge from Mr. A.'s letter, I differ in toto from him on this matter. At the same time, I should be glad to see him some day, and hear what he has to say on the subject.

L. G.

October 27, 1892.

THE CHURCH OF GOD: WHAT IS IT?

By W. H. Mason.

Judging from the various ideas and opinions held on this subject, the question here asked is by no means superfluous or needless. Neither will an attempt to solve the question be labour in vain, if we can arrive at a solution which will be in accordance with Scripture—the whole Scripture, and at the same time a demonstration of the unity and consistency of the plans and purposes of the divine Author of the old and new covenants, the Old and New Testaments—two, but yet one perfect whole.

Our enquiry must then be—not what do men say? What is the dogma of this or that school or sect? But, what saith the Scriptures? It does not appear that the word church occurs anywhere in the Old Testament Scriptures. True, it is very frequently found in the headings of chapters in the prophetical books. These may be considered with reference to the text in a future article; at present our concern is with God's own word, by His chosen servants and messengers.

Apparently the absence of the word church from the text of the Old Testament Scriptures, together with some expressions of the New Testament writers, has led to the idea that the Church of God had no existence before the coming of Christ; that in fact the so-called Christian Church is the only Church of God the world has ever known, Christ Himself being the chief corner-stone—only laid when He appeared amongst us. If this be so, however, what did St. Stephen mean when, speaking by the Holy Ghost, he referred to "the Church in the wilderness"? Only one fair interpretation of this seems possible. By "the Church" St. Stephen evidently meant the congregation—that is, the nation,—for these words refer to the time when the people were at Sinai, not to the later period when the tabernacle was placed without the camp, and they who sought the Lord resorted unto it, and thus were in a manner separated from the whole nation. Not this select, pious portion of Israel, but the whole undivided congregation, the whole nation is denominated by St. Stephen "the Church." Since he spoke by the Spirit, doubtless he spoke the mind of God, and at Sinai the nation of Israel was the Church of God.

Was this then the origin of the Church of God? Did it begin at Sinai, or did it begin with the founder of the nation—with Abraham, the father of the faithful and the friend of God? If so, then the pious predecessors of Abraham, Noah, Enoch, Seth, Adam, had no place in the Church of God upon earth, but belonged to some other dispensation. May we not, must we not, rather say that the Church of God began upon earth when "men began to call themselves by the name of the Lord," and that all the faithful servants of God were members of it? Whether this were so or not, the chosen seed were certainly God's Church; the whole nation was holy unto Him; His peculiar—that is, His very own—people, of whom in later times He said by Isaiah, "This people have I formed for Myself; they shall show forth My praise." As He declared of Saul, "He is a chosen vessel unto Me to declare My name among the Gentiles," so He declared of Israel, "They shall declare My glory among the Gentiles." Having then chosen and called them to be His peculiar people, the messengers of His grace to the Gentiles, He gave them His laws and ordinances to instruct and train them, He established His temple among them—the only temple He ever built upon earth—and committed unto them "the oracles of God," the greatest treasure privilege, as St. Paul thought, which was or could be bestowed upon any people. To them He sent His servants the prophets with many great and precious promises—many, many of which still await fulfilment, and were evidently only intended for realization after the coming of the Messiah, of whom St. Paul says, "He was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God to confirm the promises unto the fathers, and that the Gentiles might glorify God for His mercy." Evidently, then, the Gentiles could not glorify God for His mercy until the Messiah had come and confirmed the promises unto the fathers. Evidently, also, until such confirmation was made, Israel could not declare His glory among the Gentiles or fulfil among them the promise by Micah: "The remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many peoples as a dew from the Lord, as showers upon the grass, which tarrieth not for man, nor waiteth for the sons of men." It is evident then from these and many other scriptures that Israel, the nation, was in old times the Church of God, and that it was God's purpose to make them His missionary people, to carry the glorious Gospel of Christ to the Gentiles and to be a blessing to many nations, even as dew from the Lord, or as showers upon the grass, thus realizing the promise of God to Abraham: "In thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed."

Now, St. Paul says that "Christ is the head of the body, the Church." Both body and head must perforce be engaged in any work, therefore Christ the Head and Israel the body are both required for the realization of the promise. Both are the seed of Abraham; united they form one perfect body and in the unity of the Spirit, each in his separate sphere, both as one body carry out the work assigned; Christ accomplishes the salvation: Israel proclaims it; both are necessary to the accomplishment of the purpose of God, and doubtless, as the Head accomplished His share of the work, so in accordance with the divine purpose the body would accomplish its portion of the assigned work. The work of the Head was accomplished at once, the work of the body necessarily extends over centuries, and must still be in course of fulfilment. Therefore Israel, the body of Christ, must be still the Church of God and be engaged in carrying on the work of blessing.

Digitized by Google

This seems to be the right and consistent view of the plans and purpose of God as revealed in Scripture. We read therein nothing of a substitute for Israel, but only of additions to the chosen people. Thus Isaiah says, "Yet will I gather others to him beside those that are gathered unto him"; and again, "Lift up thine eyes and, behold, all these gather themselves together and come to thee; thou shall surely clothe thee with them all as a bride doeth." The Scriptures are indeed instinct with promises of restoration and blessing to Israel in order to fit and prepare them for their future work. Even so early as Moses, we hear that great prophet declaring, "He shall make expiation for His land and for His people." David says, "He shall redeem Israel from all his sins." Hosea re-echoes the promise at the close of his prophecy, and St. Matthew declares, "He shall be called Jesus, because He shall save His people from their sins." St. Paul asserts that "God hath not cast away His people," and St. John bears witness at the very close of the canon of Scripture to the fact that the bride, the Lamb's wife, is the holy city, the New Jerusalem, upon the foundation-stones of which are written the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb. Seeing then the persistent and consistent declarations of the Scriptures on the subject, there surely can be but one answer to the query —"What is the Church?" That answer must be—the Church is the House of Israel, the chosen people of God, with all in every age and clime who through faith in Christ are admitted into membership of the Church, which is His body, the fulness of Him who filleth all in all.

This reply would seem to be more appropriate from the considerations which arise from St. Paul's words: "Christ is the Head of the body, the Church." Did this Headship only begin with the Christian Church, or was He head of the Old Testament Church as well? If not, what relation did He bear to that Church, and who was its head if He was not? If He was its Head, did He lose His first body, and, after His nativity, obtain another—a new body? Again, if He could not save His first body, how can we be sure that He can save His second, and what, too, becomes of the unity of the body? What of God's word and oath to Israel through Abraham? These questions are asked in all seriousness and reverence. It seems, however, impossible to answer them satisfactorily, consistently, and in accordance with the whole tenor of Scripture unless we admit that the Church, the body of Christ, is one, and that the Church of the Old Testament and the Church of the New are one, and that therefore the Church of God is the House of Israel. This Church had its infancy in man's earliest days; it has continued to grow with greater or less vigour until now, and will continue to grow until the day of which we read in the Revelation: "I saw the holy city, the New Jerusalem, coming down out of heaven from God, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." The bride, the Lamb's wife, the Church, then is Israel, the only people God ever chose to be His very own, the only people to whom He gave His statutes and ordinances—the oracles of God; the only nation He ever commissioned to carry the gospel of His love to the Gentiles, the only people by whom He declared He would bless all nations, the people of whom He said they should be as the dew and as the gentle rain to the nations; thus comparing them to Himself when He said by Hosea, "I will be as the dew unto Israel." Surely "God hath not cast away His people" of whom He predicted such great things? Nay, verily. He performeth His Word unto Jacob, and is faithful to His covenant with Abraham and his seed for ever, and this people whom He formed for Himself is His Church and shall show forth His praise to all the ages. Blessed be the Lord God, the God of Israel.

Sheffield.

THE COMING GOLDEN AGE.

By P. C.

THE opinion that a golden age is coming has been so widely and so persistently maintained that we may designate it a universal tradition. It was the theme of the old sibylline oracles, the inspiration of Virgil's Fourth Eclogue, Ultima Cymaei venit jam carminis aetas, the origin of the Elysian Fields, of the Isle of Atlantis, of the garden of the Hesperides, and More's Utopia; but its Alpha and Omega were the utterances of the Hebrew prophets. The true fulfilment of it is yet to come in the personal reign of Jesus Christ over all the earth. The bringing in of this golden age, which is no other than the millennium of Christianity, is so immediately connected with our British inheritance of the birthright of Ephraim, of both its privileges and its responsibilities, and has been so fully recognised in our "Handbook of British-Israel Truth," that its links and development become, not only a legitimate field of study, but almost a necessary investigation to the students of our doctrine. It will make us ask of ourselves—whence do we come, and whither are we drifting? A few suggested thoughts are herein offered in answer to these questions.

The birthright of Ephraim is the foundation of British-Israelism. The spiritual blessings of God's covenant with Abraham were entailed on his lineal descendants, but thrown open to the world by adoption. So far all are one—Jews, Christians, Scythians, bond and free—all one in Christ Jesus; and it is a calumny to tax us with exclusiveness. We hold that the very purpose of the election of a "peculiar people" is to make them the channel of universal diffusion; and special election is the predestination of a race to be witnesses and light-bearers to the rest of mankind. The Light of the world was Himself, "foreordained before its foundation" (1 Peter i. 20), and was to spring out of Judah, and no other. Benjamin was given (or lent) to be a light unto Judah. All the faithful apostles, including St. Paul, were probably of the Tribe of Benjamin. And yet neither Judah nor Benjamin had the birthright, but Ephraim was the firstborn! (Jer. xxxi. 9). Hence the temporal gifts of God's covenant with Abraham were not thrown open, but all concentrated in Ephraim. To Ephraim alone it was pledged, "His seed shall be a multitude (or fulness) of the nations" (Gen. xlviii. 19). In him Joseph's seed ran over the wall. "Judah was His sanctuary, and Ephraim His dominion." It were needless to enumerate, but it is essential to distinguish, the temporal gifts and powers of this birthright dominion, in order to understand why Judah and Ephraim are so conspicuous amongst the sons of Jacob, and how Ephraim's temporal prowess becomes helpful to Judah's spiritual mission, and the introduction of a golden age. No such age was brought in by the first advent of our Lord, nor has any such yet dawned upon the earth. "Peace on earth" was the blessed fruit of the first advent to individual souls; but to the nations it brought not peace but a sword. The early persecutions, the antagonism of Jew and Gentile, the history of empires, all show the iron more than the gold of the ages. And in this, our own day, let the magnitude and the attitude of continental armies, and the social and moral condition of the age testify whether or not we live under the reign of peace and brotherhood. If a golden age is to visit the earth, it is yet to come. And in this investigation, as well as in all others outside of the mere physical world, we must seek its solution in the Bible. From that Book we learn our guiding principle, "The Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men," and verify Tennyson's maxim, the motto of our Almanack, that "One increasing purpose through the ages runs." Its consummation is our golden age, the millennium of the Gospel. Now let us briefly trace it. We shall find it planned and mapped out from the calling of Abraham on to his resurrection in the kingdom. Amongst a multitude of notices we find these:—"In the last days . . . the mountain of the Lord's House shall be established on the top of the mountains, and all nations shall flow unto it, . . . for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem." "I have set my King upon My holy hill of Zion, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." "They shall not hurt nor destroy in all My holy mountain." "They shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning hooks: . . . nation shall not lift up sword against nation, . . . neither shall they learn war any more" (Isaiah ii. 2). "Boys and girls shall play in the streets of Jerusalem, . . . the lion shall lie down with the lamb, and the child shall play with the asp." "Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely." Is all this an allegory? Even if it were so, what would it represent? Certainly nothing ever yet seen since Adam fell. But if it were so, why all these minutiæ, ploughshares, pruning-hooks, boys and girls, no more war—are they one and all mere emblems and shadows? We, who read the Bible literally, wherever a literal meaning will stand, cannot so pervert a natural and beautiful picture of a golden age; and on the strength of God's Word we hold out the expectation of such an age to all our students and believers. In the next place, let us enquire if there is any clue as to the manner and time of its coming; and we shall find them both linked together. We are told that "the House of Judah shall walk to the House of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the north unto the land given unto their fathers for an inheritance" (Jer. iii. 18). "I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel" (Ezek. xxxvii. 22). "The isles shall wait for me, and the ships of Tarshish first to bring thy sons from far" (Isa. lx.). "Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim" (Isa. xi.). But all is not smooth yet. Ezekiel shows how their dwelling together in peace and plenty in "unwalled villages" will excite the cupidity of the northern hordes, Rosh, Meshech, Tubal, Gog, and Magog; and how they will invade the land, but utterly perish, like the hosts of Sennacherib, by the blast of the Lord. And Daniel shows how after that a blasphemous king will arise, and for a time get possession of Jerusalem and the Temple, but he also shall likewise utterly perish. Daniel, who represents this overthrow by Michael the Prince, and St. Paul, who foretells the destruction of Antichrist by the coming of the Lord, seem clearly to point to the same event, to that persecution which is described as "Jacob's trouble" in Jer. xxx., and "the great tribulation" in St. Matt. xxiv. After that final trial is over, Ezekiel, in chapter xxxix., announces that they shall dwell safely in their own land, from which Amos tells us they shall not be pulled up any more for ever! Thus evolves our problem. The order then is first the restoration of Israel and Judah into one twelve-tribed nation; secondly, the defeat of two efforts to dislodge them; and thirdly, the descent of the Lord, who plants His feet on the Mount of Olives, and thenceforth reigns "in Jerusalem gloriously!"

Digitized by Google

One enquiry more now remains. Is this golden age identical with a Christian Millennium? No doubt of it can rest in the mind of a literal interpreter. Revelation xx. is, of course, the mainstay of this belief. Commenting on this text, Dean Alford affirms that this was the unanimous belief of the early Christian Church for 300 years, and he boldly avows his own acceptance of a literal millennium as "an article of his faith and hope!" (see note in loco). It was also a universal belief in the primitive Church that a week of 7,000 years (1,000 years to a day) was to be the duration of the world from Adam to the Judgment Day; so that we should now have reached the Saturday eve of this Millennial Sabbath. Moreover, the mode of recovering the land through the multitudes of Ephraim and the ships of Tarshish, and the time being indicated by the destruction of Gog and of Antichrist—two such synchronous events can hardly fail to indicate the "epiphany of this presence," and to awaken the world to look up, for its redemption draweth nigh! The signs are visible. The fields are white for the harvest. Our sky is already overcast with gathering clouds. We hear as it were the rolling of the thunder in the "sovereignty of the people." Knowledge increases, and men run to and fro, iniquity abounds, infidelity is spreading, and men's hearts are failing them for fear of what is coming—famines, earthquakes, wars, and rumours of wars! Surely the Lord is at hand, and close upon us is Israel's return home, Jacob's trouble, the great tribulation, the reign of Christ, the golden age! And why at this moment are thousands of Jews, persecuted and evicted from Russia, pouring into our harbours for shelter and sustenance? What draws them to us? Not only British freedom and hospitality; but a magnetic impulse, an instinct, a guidance which Keble's poetic insight has caught:—

> "No distance breaks the tie of blood,
> Brothers are brothers evermore:
> Nor wrong, nor wrath of deadliest mood
> That magic may o'erpower:—
> Oft, ere the common source be known,
> The kindred drops will claim their own;
> And throbbing pulses silently
> Move heart towards heart by sympathy."

We therefore hail this appeal to us as another token of the nearness of the Millennium. Can we do better than escort these pilgrims in our "ships of Tarshish" back to our common Fatherland: "the land for the people, and the people for the land?" There the Atlantis of the west and the Eden of the east will be united in one new and lasting earthly Paradise, under one and the same dominant Empire, stretching from the Shannon to the Ganges, of which Jerusalem will be the capital, and its name be JEHOVAH-SHAMMAH.

It was at this time, or about 650 to 640 B.C. that the Cimmerians during the reign of Ardys, king of Lydia, driven from their homes by the nomads of Scythia, entered Asia, conquered Sardis, all but the citadel, held possession of the country until B.C. 628, when they were driven out of Asia, by Allyattes, king of Lydia.—Who are We?

Digitized by Google

SHALL WE WEAR A BADGE?

By Rev. J. Idrisyn Jones.

". . . and that they put upon the fringe of the borders a riband of blue; and it shall be unto you for a fringe, that ye may look upon it, and remember all the commandments of the Lord, and do them." —Num. xv. 38, 39.

From the above quotation we may learn that to wear on one's garment a visible sign, is a Divine idea; and the fact that people, like the Pharisees of old, could abuse it, warrants no impeachment of the plan. In the case of the earlier generations of our Israelitish forefathers, it is only too probable that it served a most useful purpose by oftentimes stimulating their lagging obedience; being the monitor whose voice cried unto them, "Keep the Lord's commandments."

Believers in British-Israel Truth certainly need something to catch the eye, bearing upon their distinctive creed. We think that our friends in Bath have hit the mark, and a suitable device has been prepared under the efficient supervision of Mrs. Thompson, the hon. sec. of the local association. It is prepared in three different styles, viz.: (1) as a ladies' brooch; (2) as a gentleman's scarf pin; (3) as a pendant for the chain or watch-guard, which may be worn by either ladies or gentlemen. They are made in gold and enamel, and also in gilt metal, and range from 9d. to 6s. 3d. in value. Now let us for a moment consider what the wearing of a badge may do for our cause.

(1) It will afford a medium of mutual recognition. What welcome discoveries would thus be made as we move up and down the teeming population of our land. In the railway carriage, or in the street, or in the social circle, we should come into contact, and a feeling of common interest would at once spring up between those who were heretofore strangers which would lead to a sweet interchange of thought and hopes; while if every fellow Israelite were to use it as a badge, we should probably be amazed to find how many there were who have already accepted this splendid truth; thus our hearts would be cheered by the fact that the hidden thousands were made manifest, leading us to exclaim, "Our army is marching on."

(2) It would call forth enquiry on the part of others. On the badge there is one little word legibly written whose letters spell out "Israel," and one and another would surely say to us: "Why is that name on this little ornament that you are wearing?" What an excellent opportunity would thus be given for winning fresh converts, and of sowing seed for future harvests.

(3) It would serve as a reminder to ourselves.—Forgetfulness is one of the most conspicuous faults of human nature; and the Prophet Isaiah evidently considered that such forgetfulness was found in this very direction, for he exhorted the children of Israel on the point—"Look unto the rock whence ye are hewn, and to the hole of the pit whence ye are digged; look unto Abraham your father, and unto Sarah that bare you." The badge would often send us back to the beginning of our destiny; while also it would remind us of those obligations under which we lie to spread the truth wherever we can. No one in this world receives the lamp of truth for himself alone, but also in order that he might carry its light into the all-surrounding darkness. The voice of the badge would be heard saying to us: "Spread the truth; spread the truth." The question, should we wear a badge? is then sufficiently answered; and the very next thing to do is to immediately wear one—for time flies.

Muswell Hill, London.

RANDOM SHAFTS.

The extract from a weekly magazine which appeared in the Banner of Feb. 1st (p. 65), contains a good deal of truth; but it also gives vent to a little nonsense. The writer declares that the "Scotchman in Canada looks down upon the United States very much as Britain looks upon Spain;" which implies that Canadians regard their neighbour as effete, degenerate, retrogressive, and bankrupt. This is a peculiar charge, and if the author of it had not told us that he has "traversed Canada from end to end," we might have concluded that he had never been outside his native village. Why should one brother look down on another? And why should a brother who has got on in the world look down on a brother who has got on much better? But it is unnecessary to ask these questions, because the statement will not hold water. Large numbers of Canadians admire the United States; large numbers are not unnaturally a trifle jealous of their prosperity, or at least their progress; while many are actually in favour of annexation. These facts are not symptomatic of "looking down," but rather of "looking up." And it is no wonder that Canadians are taken aback by the growth of the States, for it is unprecedented. But prophecy explains it, and we know that Manasseh has a goal to reach. Canada's day is to come. Her resources are equal to those of the Republic; her "staying powers" are superior; and when the United States have lost the vigour of their youth, she will be in her zenith. But it is absurd to suppose that any section of Israel will ever occupy the position of Spain.

* * *

There is also some confusion of thought about the "inventive faculty." America has this faculty in an eminent degree, let that be frankly admitted. But inventions, like other things, must be judged more by quality than quantity, and to test the merits of a discovery we have to look at the benefits it confers on humanity. Now sewing-machines, apple-paring machines, and automatic sweepers are well enough in their province, but what are they in comparison with spinning and weaving machinery, the steam engine, the locomotive, and the railway? These were all born here, while the telegraph was set up simultaneously on English and American soil. If we were to do away with the telephone, the electric light, and the phonograph, the world would not be much worse off, but if we did away with the steam engine, the locomotive, and the railway, the world would be brought to a standstill. Israel has to be a blessing to all the families of the earth, which duty she is fulfilling in part by her beneficent ingenuity, and it is perhaps immaterial whether the British or American branch is at "the head" in this respect. But so far America is a long distance behind the old country for inventions which are of solid value to man.

* * *

In the famous fiasco which Dr. Horatius Bonar wrote for The Sunday at Home, he argued that our names were not Hebrew or Semitic, and inferred, therefrom, that we could not be Israelites. This was a rather weak objection for one who had the reputation of being a scholar, because the doctor might have known that Hebrew names did not descend from father to son, like Smith or Shootingham, but were bestowed upon the children according to the taste or fancy of the parents. They were generally made up of two or three words, such as Azariah, the Lord keeps; and consequently, if the Ten Tribes changed their language, the complexion of their names would also be changed. There can be no doubt whatever that the Israelites changed their language, and among the Saxons we find the exact condition of affairs which the altered circumstances would produce. Their appellations may not have much surface-similarity to those of the Hebrews, but they were constructed on precisely the same principle, and what is still more remarkable they embodied the same pure and lofty sentiments. For instance, David meant "well-beloved," and so did Alwin. Jochebed means "God is honour;" Ethelwald means "maintainer of honour." Ahitub signifies "brother of goodness;" and Goderic, "rich in goodness." Thus the Saxon names were really Israelitish, and if we wish to see how widely they differed in character from those of barbarous nations, we only have to compare them with titles of the Sitting Bull type.

Digitized by Google

***

The metamorphosis wrought by time is so immense, that it is absurd for any man to try and refute the Identity on the ground of a disparity in names. The Saxons, it is said, were very un-Hebrew in that particular. Suppose we grant this. Does it prove that they were not descended from Hebrews? If so, we English cannot be descended from Saxons or Engles, for our names have not the faintest resemblance to theirs. To show the great unsettling which has taken place since the Heptarchy, I will give a list of personages who once figured in the land. I submit a number, because if I were to mention two or three it might be thought that they were unfair samples.

Oskitul	Sidroc	Ubbo	Ingwar
Amund	Ulfketul	Denulf	Ragnar
Lucumon	Withtlaf	Ealhere	Huda
Gueryr	Elphege	Wulfur	Byrhtric
Walthiofr	Willebrok	Hivita	Scoloce
Ceolmund	Cenwald	Wullaf	Sigeric
Hundbert	Sigired	Dudda	Leonric
Ridda	Wuelaf	Ealstan	Thurceles
Leonmœre	Ægelpig	Heording	Werlaf
Berdic	Selethrytha	Siward	Leofgifu
Thurcytel	Sihtric	Elfhild	Beage
Osgeat	Tostig	Hrolf	Wiggod
Copsige	Heaburge	Eadfled	Deorswyth
Bondig	Morkere	Bugega	Eadsi
Uffigeat	Uchtred	Eadburh	Lulle

***

These differ so essentially from modern nomenclature, that it is doubtful whether ninety-nine out of a hundred would be able to tell which were males and which were females, and for the benefit of the majority it may be observed that Beage and Eadburh are ladies, whereas Ridda and Dudda are the designations of gentlemen. But I think it is obvious from the above columns (which could be extended to any length) that we cannot be of Saxon lineage. The names disagree entirely with our own. In fact, there are good reasons for believing that the Jews of New Testament days were not genuine Jews. We have seen that even the blinded Saxons preserved the ancestral custom of expressing elevated ideas or aspirations through the names they gave. But as for the Jews, their patronymics were decidedly Greek, both in manner and matter—Philip, a lover of horses; Dorcas, a gazelle; Agabus, a locust; Marcus, polite; Apollos, a destroyer; Aquila, an eagle; Priscilla, ancient.

***

When the French atheists began the task of poisoning the mind of their nation, and destroying the faith of Europe, they did not scruple to spend £900,000 in a single year over literature alone. I was forcibly reminded of this on seeing the donations which have been made in response to the suggestion that a New Year's gift of 1s. towards the Free Distribution Fund would be of great service to the Identity. Deducting the ordinary monthly subscription, about eight or ten pounds have been supplied, and the amount would have come to nothing like this had not several kind friends sent a great deal beyond their share. Not a fraction of BANNER readers have contributed, which seems to show that there is more froth and less body amongst us than is desirable. This is also indicated by the support given to the noble campaign at Brighton. In December Mr. Marchant tendered his report in the BANNER, from which it appeared that during the year 50 addresses were delivered, and an immense quantity of literature disseminated, including 20,000 BANNERS and 363 copies of the "Handbook." All this was done for the modest sum of £14 18s. 11d.; four pounds of it not being forthcoming. One might have thought that the British-Israel fraternity would willingly have cleared off this debt, if it were simply to signify their appreciation of Mr. Marchant's labours, but on enquiry I learn that he has received a guinea! This is not only unjust to Mr. Marchant, but must injure the work, because, unless he is a millionnaire, he can hardly be expected to display so much energy in future. My opinion is that before buying badges or opening Tara we had better pay the printers' bills down at Brighton.

JOHN SHOOTINGHAM.

Review.

"Israel a Christian Nation at the Present Day." By Col. Wm. Carey, C.B. Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C. Price Threepence.

THE pamphlet just published by Col. Carey has an interesting title, and one which should prove very welcome, both to the believers in "Our Identity," and to those who oppose us. Many of the latter utterly deny that the Scriptures foretold for the Ten-tribed House of Ephraim-Israel, the status of a nation in the latter days, and cling fast to the delusion that Israel, when discovered, will be not a Christian nation at all, but a miserable and wretched idolatrous remnant of a people not worthy of the name of "a nation." Col. Carey comes forward to prove from the Scriptures that Israel was not only to be a nation in the present day, but a Christian nation. She was, in fact, to be "a great and mighty nation," the chief of all those upon the earth, and a Christian one as well. Let us see how the author deals with the evidence in support of his contention, and how it proves our case. He first appeals to Jer. xxxi. 35, 36, and shows that God is pledged to maintain Israel as a nation before Him, while the sun, moon, and stars exist. Israel being a nation, Col. Carey contends that she must have a country in which, as a nation, she may dwell. God promised them such "a place" in 2 Sam. vii. 10. This place must needs be occupied by Israel, between the date of their captivity and that of their return in triumph. The nation having "a place appointed" for it to live in, must have a government, and that, the monarchial (2 Sam. vii. 12—16). The following texts are quoted as supporting the views held—viz., Psa. lxxxix. 35—37; Jer. xxxiii. 17, 21, 22; Ezek. xvii. 22—24. The collection of Israel to their "appointed place" is the subject of Ezek. xxxvii. 1—14. In this passage, Col. Carey observes that God distinctly declared that He would collect Israel, and the people shall "know" (that is acknowledge) that the collection is by His hand. He, God, would then put His Spirit in them, and they should live: in other words, they should turn and worship Him as the true God. As we believe the Christian religion is the only true religion, they, the Ten Tribes, must be Christians at this time. The argument is carried on further in these words (p. 4):—

Digitized by Google

"In further proof, Isaiah li. 1—10 addresses a nation on whom the Spirit of God has been poured out in the following words: 'Hearken to me, ye that follow after righteousness, ye that seek the Lord; look unto the rock whence ye are hewn, and to the hole of the pit whence ye are digged. Look unto Abraham your father, and unto Sarah that bare you; for I called him alone, and blessed him, and increased him. For the Lord shall comfort Zion: He will comfort all her waste places; and He will make her wilderness like Eden, and her desert like the garden of the Lord; joy and gladness shall be found therein, thanksgiving, and the voice of melody. Hearken unto Me, My people: and give ear unto Me, O My nation; for a law shall proceed from Me, and I will make My judgment to rest for a light of the people. My righteousness is near; My salvation is gone forth, and Mine arms shall judge the people; the isles shall wait upon Me, and on Mine arm shall they trust," &c.

"Now, in thus addressing the nation, Isaiah declares that nation has forgotten or lost the knowledge of those they were descended from. Hence the words: 'Look unto the rock whence ye are hewn, and to the pit whence ye are digged'; in other words, look back and search history to see who your ancestors were, even 'Look unto Abraham your father, and unto Sarah that bare you.' A second declaration that on searching history you will find that you are descended from Abraham by Sarah. In fact, you are the Israelites, for Sarah had only one son, Isaac, the father of Esau and Jacob. The descendants of Esau we know and recognise in the Mahomedans of the day; while the Israelites of the twelve sons of Jacob are lost, unknown except in the Jew of the tribe of Judah and a few others of the kingdom of Judah: and these Jews declare as to the Ten Tribes we know not what has become of them, but they are somewhere. With the expression: 'Look unto Sarah that bare you,' it is evident that the prophet speaks of a literal Israel in contradistinction to the spiritual Israel, openly preached from Christian pulpits, to the effect that the Gentile Christian has taken the place of Israel, and having become children by adoption, are, therefore, the Israelitish nation spoken of or referred to.'"

Col. Carey sees, that by reference to Isaiah xviii. 1—7, a Christian nation, which must be Ephraim-Israel, will "nationalize the Jew." That nation must have command of the sea, and pitying the condition of the Jews, will send its fleets to bring them home. "There is only one nation on the earth," remarks our author, "which is in a position to do all this, and that is the British Empire."

The first chapter or section of the pamphlet with which we are dealing is generally to the tenor of what is gone before in the above. Chapter II. is of rather doubtful usefulness. It describes future events with confidence, and tells us why Constantinople must fall to the British, and the steps by which Syria and Assyria will come into our nation's actual possession! The conversion of India to Christianity, and the causes which will lead to that result are given us, with the decision of a prophet, and the exactness of one who knows. The pamphlet at last takes us to the millennium, which in duration is not a thousand years, but more probably a thousand "creation days," or a "cycle of time," and thus may, very likely, be 30 millions of ordinary years; being the "day of the period of the precession of the equinoxes, or about 30,000 years, multiplied by the millennium of 1,000 years! Such gigantic calculations as these, we do not feel competent to grasp. But Col. Carey builds up his arguments with them, and though we may personally regret the fact, there are very many persons who will like to read what the author has to say on these subjects. We invite them to do so; since, whether the Colonel be right or wrong, the discussion of the whole matter cannot but be profitable, and may besides help to throw some fresh light on Our Identity. The Colonel informs us that his pamphlet is the result of 40 years' study of the Scriptures and of political events. The crisis now at hand in Europe he thinks will culminate in the greatest political event since the Deluge. It will bring about, he imagines, the occupation of Asiatic Turkey, and the government by the British as in Egypt. He believes, as to the Jewish movement, that it will be turned into the migration of the Jews to the British flag, with the consent of all Europe. He believes that the conversion of the Jews to Christ will be accompanied by that of Hindus and Mahomedans, when they all find themselves to be united as one people—that is, as descendants of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, under Her Majesty the Queen and Empress. He sees that the British are likely to act the part of "restorers" of Israel and Judah; and that Her Majesty may live to witness the accomplishment of these prophetic wonders! He has come to the conclusion that matters are now ripe for the event.

PROPOSED BRITISH-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION FOR CARDIFF.

At a Meeting of a few believers in the Identity of the British Nation with the Lost Tribes of the House of Israel, held on Wednesday evening last, at 22, Moira-place, Cardiff, Mr. Arthur Lewis in the chair, the following resolutions were put and declared adopted:

1st. On the motion of Mr. E. C. Newby, seconded by Mr. Rowland Houghton: "That a local branch of the British-Israel Association be formed, and that the Head Association be asked for all necessary information with this object in view."

2nd. "That a circular convening a further meeting be sent to names on a list thereupon amended."

A small, but effective library of works on the Identity, which has been formed by several friends, was available, appreciated, and it is confidently hoped will do good work by being circulated on loan, amongst those who have not as yet seen the light.

The Meeting was closed, after a general and very interesting conversation, with a fervent appeal to Almighty God for help that His name might be glorified.

E. C. Newby, }
Arthur Lewis, } Joint Hon. Secs. (pro. tem.)

Cardiff, Feb. 4, 1893.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

Dear Sir,—On page 548 of the Banner, in the article by Mr. R. L. Davis, it is stated that Jerusalem was captured by Omar in A.D. 637. In a work I have consulted, the date is given as A.D. 634. I would be much obliged if you would ascertain which date is correct, also, if possible, give the month and day of the month, and publish the same in the Banner, by doing this you will much oblige.

Anglo-Israelite.

67, Yonge-street, Toronto.

[Anglo-Israelite, Toronto.—The City of Jerusalem was surrendered by the Patriarch Sophronius to the Khalif Omar, A.D. 637 (see "Hayden's Dictionary of the Bible"). The month and day of the month is not given.]

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

Dear Philo-Israel,—Why should anyone start a new Anglo-Israel Badge? The present one was designed by the Committee of the British-Israel Association long ago, and is much liked, as its design, and shape, and size all have a meaning. Miss Louisa Hope, 7, Ovington-gardens, S.W., will be happy to supply any in gold, silver, or bronze.

Yours faithfully,

Heywood Smith.

18, Harley-street, Cavendish-square, W., Feb. 20, 1893.

Digitized by Google

LUNG SAVE YOUR LIVES BY TAKING TONIC
LUNG OWBRIDGE'S TONIC
LUNG LUNG TONIC TONIC
LUNG THE MIGHTY HEALER. TONIC
LUNG It has a power over disease hitherto TONIC
LUNG unknown in Medicine. TONIC
LUNG Are you at all Weak-chested or in- TONIC
LUNG clined to be Consumptive, with just a TONIC
LUNG touch of Cough now and then? TONIC
LUNG "Try this Wonderful Medicine." The TONIC
LUNG Cough and Weakness will disappear as TONIC
LUNG if by magic, and you will feel a strength TONIC
LUNG and power you never had before. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COUGH? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COLD? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL TONIC
LUNG REMOVE IT! TONIC
LUNG Bronchitis & Asthma it relieves instantly TONIC
LUNG The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful TONIC
LUNG in Whooping Cough become less with TONIC
LUNG each dose of the medicine. TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE Chemist Hull TONIC
LUNG Sold in bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. TONIC
LUNG and 11s., by all Chemists and Patent TONIC
LUNG Medicine Vendors. Wholesale all TONIC
LUNG London and Provincial Houses. TONIC

PHOSPHORUS

A new process of preparing this necessary food for the Brain and Nervous System, invented by Mr. Samuel Birley, M.D., renders its therapeutic value superior to all the Phosphates, Hypophosphites, &c., usually perscribed. May be taken for years with perfect safety! Descriptive pamphlet free to enquirers (mentioning this paper), from

GORDON, MURRAY & Co., Ltd.,
10, ADAM STREET, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.

"A WONDERFUL REMEDY."
"I WAS GIVEN UP BY ALL."
"SAVED FROM AN EARLY GRAVE."

Such are the words of grateful Patients relative to their CASES OF

CONSUMPTION

CURED BY THE TREATMENT OF

MR. GEO. T. CONGREVE.

Read his Book, "ON CONSUMPTION, &c." which may be had post free for ONE SHILLING from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.; or may be ordered of any Bookseller.

NOTE.—CONSULTATIONS FREE at Coombe Lodge, Peckham, on TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings only. No Charge except the usual charge for three weeks or six weeks' supply of medicine. All Patients should read the book first.

TEETH.—£1 A FULL SET

ESKELL'S.—CELEBRATED MAKE, £2 2s. Warranted and fitted in one visit. No extractions needed. HALF A MILLION SETS already supplied. The Nursing Record and Hospital World says:—We recommend all who require Reliable and Good Teeth at a small cost to go to Messrs. ESKELL, 445, Strand (facing Charing Cross Station), and 58, Ludgate Hill, City, London. Also at 27, Western Road, Brighton, and 23, Mount Pleasant, Tunbridge Wells. Hours 9 till 7. Illustrated Pamphlets, explaining everything, free. Established 100 years.

"THE WORLD'S PROVED REMEDY FOR ALL CHEST DISEASES."

COUGH, ASTHMA,
CHRONIC BRONCHITIS,
INFLUENZA,
THERE IS NONE TO EQUAL IT.

Rev. F. E. HEAPE, of DERBY, in a recent letter, says: "Your Medicine always puts my lungs right, and drove out the terrible INFLUENZA last May."

This Medicine has been prepared for 65 years.

CONGREVE'S BALSAMIC ELIXIR.

In Bottles, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 22s., may be had of all Chemists and Medicine Vendors.

TEA! TEA! TEA!

FROM

INDIA, CEYLON, AND CHINA.

Best Quality and Best Value.

From 1/6 to 3/6 per lb. Samples Gratis.

Carriage Paid on Parcels of 6lbs. and upwards

Robinson & James,
42. TRINITY SQUARE, TOWER HILL
LONDON, E.C.

GIGANTIC SALE OF

100 COLOURS TO SELECT FROM

In consequence of the mild season, we have still in stock over 250,000 DRESS LENGTHS of our famous Cloths which, in order to effect a rapid clearance we have reduced to less than Manufacturers' Cost Price. 100 lovely new colours to select from. All goods are new and in perfect condition. We will gladly send patterns post free, and they need not be returned. Write to-day for patterns and Sale Price List
FULL DRESS LENGTHS OF MAGNIFICENT CLOTHS 9s.6d. CARRIAGE PAID.

GREATEST BARGAINS EVER OFFERED

LADIES CLOTH DRESSES

GENUINE REDUCTIONS! WRITE FOR PATTERNS

LUTAS LEATHLEY & Co. ARMLEY, LEEDS.

TOOTH-ACHE

CURED INSTANTLY BY

BUNTER'S NERVINE

Prevents Decay, Saves Extraction. Sleepless Nights Prevented.

Neuralgic Headaches and all Nerve Pains removed by BUNTER'S NERVINE. All Chemists, 1s. 1½d.

MASON'S EXTRACT OF HERBS FOR MAKING NON-INTOXICATING BEER

WE ALL REQUIRE SOMETHING TO DRINK

The finest, most refreshing and pleasantest beverage obtainable. One table-spoonful of this Extract makes one gallon of splendid Beer. Try it. A sample bottle, enough to make eight gallons, post free for 9 stamps.

NEWBALL & MASON, NOTTINGHAM.

AGENTS WANTED.

MASON'S WINE ESSENCES, non-intoxicating. For children's parties and social gatherings. A 6d. bottle will make one gall. of delicious wine. Post free 9 stamps, or a bottle of both Extract of Herbs and Wine Essence post free 15 stamps.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT

FOR

PARALYSIS

J. FULLER, Jun., Esq., Whiteparish, Salisbury, Wilts, writes:—"Since wearing your Electropathic Belt I am decidedly better and stronger. I have more confidence in myself, and the pain in my back is completely gone. Your Belt is truly wonderful."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST., LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

Digitized by Google

MESSRS. NEWHAM & Co.'s LINCOLNSHIRE FEATHER FACTORY.

Enlargements & Additions

LINCOLNSHIRE FEATHER BEDS.

An industry that is specially characteristic of Lincolnshire is that of the preparation of feathers for the market. No doubt this industry arose from the enormous number of geese which were kept in the fens previous to their enclosure, or of wild fowl that visited the marshes with the changing seasons. Old Fuller termed Lincolnshire the "Aviary of England." He was rapturous about the plenty, variety, and deliciousness of its birds. Michael Drayton, in his Polyolbion, describes strikingly the number of the wild birds in his day—

"My various fleets for fowl, oh, who is he can tell
The species that in me for multitude excel?
The duck and mallard first, the falconer's only sport
(Of river flights the chief, so that all other sort
They only green-fowl term), in every mere abound,
That you would think they sat upon the very ground;
Their numbers being so great, the waters cov'ring quite,
That, raised, the spacious air is darkened by the flight."

But not only were there these enormous quantities of wild fowl, so that from Friskney over 30,000 ducks were sent in a year to the London market, but huge flocks of geese were kept.

Pishley Thompson, the Boston historian, says that "instances are recorded in which a cottager, whose rental did not exceed £5, kept a flock of 1,500 breeding geese."

The geese were plucked five times a year. Now the wild birds have to a considerable extent left us, and geese are kept in yearly diminishing numbers, but the feather business remains behind, a survival from the days of swamp and ague, and Lincolnshire feather beds are known all the world over.

One of the firms doing an extensive and continually growing business from Boston is that of Newham & Co., the Lincolnshire Feather Factory.

At a time like the present, when the decadence of the agricultural interest is keenly felt in the Lincolnshire boroughs and towns, any enterprise which adds to local prosperity should command the best wishes of those in whose midst it is established. The Lincolnshire Feather Factory is an undertaking of this character; and if it continues to grow in the future as it has in the past, it will in no small measure help forward the commercial prosperity of Boston, and thus aid in bringing back to the town the good times when large harvests provided the farmers the money to spend freely with local tradesmen. Some twelve years ago Messrs. Newham & Co. established the Feather Factory at the Grand Sluice, Boston, and commenced to purify feathers by mechanical means. A few weeks served to show how successful an enterprising firm in this line of business might be; and in a short time the immense number of orders received caused an extension of plant and premises to be necessary. Two years later large premises were secured, and machinery of a new and improved character fixed, and at that time it was thought that the extensions would meet all demands for many years to come. Experience, fortunately for the firm, proved otherwise, and again it was necessary to chronicle an enlargement of the factory and an extension of plant. A new warehouse extending nearly the entire length of the factory premises, consisting of two floors, had been erected, the work being of a substantial character.

Notwithstanding the extensive additions that have been made, Messrs. Newham & Co. have found it necessary to make still further additions to their complicated and interesting machinery, and no trouble or expense has been spared in order to make the machinery perfect for the purposes intended.

The plant just laid down includes two large Cyclops for purifying and thoroughly cleaning the feathers. Hitherto one set of machines has served the purpose of dusting, cleaning, purifying, and curling, but in order, if possible, to give greater satisfaction to their customers, the firm have decided to work these by means of separate machines. A large cylinder is first charged with "raw" feathers, the dust from which is partially extracted by means of beaters. At the bottom of this cylinder is affixed a suction fan, which draws the dust away from the feathers. The difference in the feathers before and after having been through this machine is very striking, but this is only one stage in the process. Through the medium of another fan, these feathers are "sucked" into a chamber with perforated sides, in which any remaining dust is taken away. Now, however, the real work begins, as the feathers are re-collected and discharged into two new double-jacketed steel cylinders, with beaters; into the centre of this steam at high pressure is discharged for ten minutes, during which time the feathers are kept in motion, and effectually washed and purified by the moisture. The steam is then withdrawn, and a jet of live steam turned into the jacket. A great heat is thus produced inside the Cyclops and the feathers dried and curled. It is hardly necessary for us to add that any possible germ life remaining is by means of this process thoroughly destroyed. The feathers are now blown into separate chambers, and bagged up, and after being allowed to cool, are placed on the floor of another large chamber, and carefully picked by hand by a number of women specially engaged for this work. In another department there are various specimens of tick, and also the processes of tick making. Very little manual labour is here required, for with commendable regard for the employées, Messrs. Newham have fixed up a small steam engine, by means of which all the large sewing-machines are driven, one motion of the foot either setting or stopping the action of the machines. The filling of the beds, pillows, and bolsters with feathers, and the subsequent sewing up and packing of the whole consignment into large Hessian wrappers, is only the work of a few minutes. It only remains for us to add that the factory seems perfectly adapted to meet all the requirements of a large and increasing business, the stock of feathers at present being very heavy. One thing that impresses the observer is that, despite the purity and sweetness of the feathers, no chemicals whatever are used, the whole system being based upon the result of long experience that steam at high temperature is best adapted for the purpose, the tender fibres of the feathers not being destroyed, as is so often the case when other artificial means of purification are used.

The firm, we understand, are busy, but not too busy to keep their orders one day after another. Hundreds of testimonials may be examined on the premises, all very complimentary to the firm, to whom we wish increased success. This firm's business is conducted on the eight-hour day basis, and also on the profit-sharing principle.

Messrs. Newham & Co. rely on advertisements in newspapers, published all over the kingdom, to bring them into direct communication with the public, but they rely chiefly on recommendations of their friends who have themselves tried the goods, for second and repeat orders. The factory being situated in the centre of Lincolnshire, they are able to purchase feathers most extensively, and at the best prices for cash. Every feather is warranted NEW and SWEET, being hand-picked, and specially purified by steam. Formerly, and indeed now in some factories, chemicals, such as sulphur, acids, &c., are used for destroying life, and cleansing feathers; but Messrs. Newham & Co. are confident that such chemicals are highly injurious to feathers, often destroying their tender structure; whereas steam at a high temperature not only effectually destroys all life, but cleanses, and subsequently dries the feathers so purified.

For the convenience of the public, several sizes, weights, and qualities of beds are made; and as the demand for each bed is large, a stock is kept ready made, so that all orders may be executed without delay.—Boston Guardian.

FEATHER BEDS.

Insure against Cholera and Disease by Sleeping on a PURIFIED Feather Bed.

NEWHAM'S CELEBRATED DOUBLE PURIFIED AND DUSTED LINCOLNSHIRE. FEATHER BEDS.

THE CHEAPEST AND BEST FEATHER BEDS IN THE WORLD.

Over 50,000 Beds already Sold by us.

No. 1.—Single Bed, Bolster, and Pillow, 6ft. 3in. by 3ft. 6in., weighing 40lb.	40/0
No. 2.—Double Bed, Bolster, and Two Pillows, 6ft. 6in. by 4ft. 6in., weighing 50lb.	50/0
No. 3.—Double Bed, Bolster, and Two Pillows, 6ft. 6in. by 4ft. 6in., weighing 55lb.	55/0
No. 4.—Extra Size Bed, Bolster, and Two Pillows, 6ft. 6in. by 5ft., weighing 65lb.	65/0

All our Goods are Warranted New and Sweet. Any sized Bed, only 1s. per lb., including Feathers, in strong Linen (bordered) Tick, making, packing, wrapper, and Carriage Paid to any Station in the United Kingdom. Any sized Superior Bed in strong Linen Tick (bordered), 1s. per lb. A good Bed, in Union Tick (bordered), 9d. per lb. Feathers only 9d., or 1s. per lb. The trade supplied. All orders must be accompanied by Cheque or P.O.O. (which, as security to purchasers, may be post-dated ten days). Send for Samples of Feathers and Ticks, Price Lists, &c., which will be sent Post Free and need not be returned. A Great Reduction on Three or more Beds. Please mention this Paper.

B. I. NEWHAM & Co., BOSTON, LINCOLNSHIRE.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India).

"And the Remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS OF THE EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XVII., No. 846. Entered at Stationer's Hall.] WEDNESDAY, MARCH 15, 1893. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
The Home Rule Bill	133
A Nation and a Company of Nations. By John S. Anderson	134
Multiplication. By W. L. Blore	135
The Rev. C. F. Cooper's Sermon, preached in Yarmouth, Nova Scotia	136
Great Britain and Biblical Prophecy	137
America Counting the Cost. By J. G. Taylor	138
Sunday at the World's Fair	140
Correspondence	140

THE HOME RULE BILL.

WE have said nothing about Ireland yet, or respecting the intentions of the Prime Minister in the Bill he was pledged to bring in, regarding which no one knew anything, since the secret of its provisions has till now been very carefully concealed from the knowledge of the British public for seven months. The Bill has at last been published, and we are in a position to say what it purposes to do, and how far it will affect the Israelite inhabitants of these islands. The measure is a radical one indeed, and if we could conceive the possibility of its passing into law, we should have civil war in Ireland, the disruption of the United Kingdom at home, and the final break up of the Empire at large, the outlying portions of which are not likely to remain loyal to a State which is unable to keep its home subjects in loyal union to the government of the Queen.

The Bill proposes to confer on Ireland, as a people, such a degree of autonomy that the certain result will be separation in the final issue, preceded by civil war between Ulster in the north with the noisy party in the south, which has forced Mr. Gladstone to produce this absurd Bill for the practical disruption of the Empire, and to give the control of what remains of it to the Irish members, whose desire it is to place Ulster and North Ireland under their feet. It is not as if the Bill were popular with the English, Scotch, or Welsh people. The contrary is the case. There is a heavy majority of 70 or 80 members against it in England. Yet in spite of that fact, and the utter abhorrence of one-fourth of the Irish people—the people of Ulster—to change, the present Government proposes to drive a wedge into the Act (and fact) of the union of Great Britain and Ireland, and not only let Ireland become virtually independent, but with strange callousness to the wishes of the majority of the nation, to allow 80 Irish members to sit and vote on Imperial subjects at Westminster, leaving them to decide practically what are not and what are Imperial matters, wherein they may meddle. The Act of Mr. Gladstone, if he succeeds, will be known in history, said Lord Randolph Churchill, as "The Great Betrayal." We believe that expression will live in history! It would be "the great betrayal" of the nation, which united, is the greatest in the world, and God-created for that end, in order to reduce her, if possible, to the strength she had during the Heptarchy, which was none at all! Our views have been well expressed by Lord Randolph Churchill in the peroration of his grand speech on the first reading, as published in the Times, of February 17th last, to the following effect. The Bill will pass in the House of Commons very probably. It will be rejected by the Lords, and in the new election to take place about the middle of this year, we believe the will of the nation, guided by the God of Israel, will be declared, and Mr. Gladstone's attempt to frustrate His will, will be brought to nought.

Lord Randolph Churchill said:—

Here, in the House of Commons, I admit I have never counted on the Unionist party being able to defeat the measure of the right hon. gentleman. (Ministerial cheers.) I recognize that they have a majority, and I will not attempt for a moment to analyze the composition of that majority. (Cheers.) A majority of 40 is undoubtedly a majority of 40 (hear, hear), and numerical facts of that kind are rather hard to get over. I have no doubt that various motives, honourable and respectable motives—partly loyalty, partly discipline, the fear of premature dissolution and long absence from office—will induce that majority, at any rate for some time, to keep itself solid. And therefore I place the House of Commons outside of my consideration and make the right hon. gentleman a present of it. (Laughter.) But I move the issue to other courts of equal and even greater power. (Cheers.) In the House of Lords (Ministerial laughter and cheers) I think it is possible that the right hon. gentleman and his party may find a very formidable obstacle. (Laughter.) I know that the action of the House of Lords on great questions is received with derision by hon. gentlemen opposite, but of this I am perfectly certain, that the peers of England on this emergent and vital occasion will not be frightened either by ridicule or by menace. (Cheers.) What forces have they behind them? They have behind them some 320 members of the Unionist party in the House of Commons; they have behind them the immense majority in the constituencies of England. (Cheers.) They will be fighting, if as I suppose they will fight and oppose your Bill, for the best cause that the peers ever fought for, because they will not be fighting for any class interest, they will not be fighting for an illiberal object, they will not be fighting for any selfish motive, but they will be fighting for the rights of the English people. (Cheers.) I have no fear that in fighting in such a cause as that you will be able to upset and overcome the House of Lords. (Cheers.) But beyond the House of Lords there is a third tribunal, before which sooner or later all of us must appear. It is a higher tribunal than either the House of Commons or the House of Lords, and from that tribunal there is no appeal. It is before the English constituencies that the ultimate issue between us must be decided. (Cheers.) I look to the people of England as a sure support. (Cheers.) It is to the operatives of Lancashire; it is to the miners of Yorkshire and in the North; it is to the artizans of the Midlands; and it is to the tried loyalty of what I may call the almost solid South that I look to give us a majority big enough to overwhelm the party of Repeal as it exists in its composite form at the present moment. (Cheers.) These classes of the population which I have enumerated know by instinct which is unfailing that their rights are endangered, and I rely upon their determination, on their tenacity, and on their courage to refuse to surrender to a section of the Irish people English rights upon which the strength of the Empire, the maintenance of their commerce and manufacture, and the safety of their homes absolutely depend. (Cheers.) Never will the English allow any minority whatever, no matter of what nationality, to impair their existence: The Unionist are, in my sincere opinion, fighting for the life of England. (Cheers.) I know the nature of the English people, and thank God I know that this Bill cannot pass. (Loud cheers.)

Digitized by Google

Such were the burning words of one of our statesman, whose opinions on this subject, at least, are worthy of all respect.

Mr. Chamberlain's and Mr. Goschen's speeches were powerful and telling contributions to the debate. But the question remains, how is this matter to be dealt with in the light of Scripture and of the Identity? Is such a measure as that now in question, which those most experienced among our statesmen see to be of the most dangerous and critical character to our Empire, likely to be adopted by the masses of our electors, when it is deliberately put before them after its rejection by the Lords? We believe not. In Scripture, "the Isles afar off" of Jer. xxxi. 10, being the abode of Israel, are treated as one and indivisible. The kingdom must remain one; and there can be no rending asunder of "Israel of the Isles!" In 2 Sam. vii. 10, we have assigned as Israel's "place" of refuge and safety, a spot whence they shall move no more, and where the children of wickedness shall not afflict them any more, "as beforetime." This seems to preclude the possibility of invasion, or indeed, of civil war, such as is more than probable in the event of Mr. Gladstone's Bill becoming the law of the land. God "ordains peace" for Israel, while other nations are in the terrors of the great earthquake war-woe; and peace there cannot be for our nation, if the South Irish are to rule the British Parliament, as well as their own Island, by means of their own Parliament. We may be sure, however, that God has further purposes to answer, by sending His people at the present juncture the severe trial through which the nation is passing now. It may be that He is weakening our power, and reducing our strength at home, that when the great earthquake takes place we may have no temptation to meddle in the quarrels of the Continental belligerents; but for very shame and weakness, shall feel constrained to enter into our chambers, shut "our doors about us, and hide ourselves for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast" (Isa. xxvi. 20, R.V.). This suggestion has always appeared to us as a probable result of our present difficulties and trials, which are, however, really blessings in disguise. To the Lord God of Israel be all the praise!

A NATION AND A COMPANY OF NATIONS.

By John S. Anderson.

"And God said unto him, Thy name is Jacob: thy name shall not be called any more Jacob, but Israel shall be thy name: and He called his name Israel. And God said unto him, I am God Almighty: be fruitful and multiply: a nation and a company of nations shall be of thee."—Gen. xxxv. 10, 11.

It will interest the readers of the Banner of Israel to have some particulars of the report of the Special Committee of the Imperial Federation League, which has recently been issued in Imperial Federation, the journal of the Imperial Federation League, recorded by the leading Identity journal, showing how prophecy is being gradually but surely fulfilled. It represents the most important advance made in the history of the Imperial Federation movement since the league was established eight years ago, the Earl of Rosebery being president until his accession to office in the present Government, when the Right Hon. Edward Stanhope, M.P., was elected to fill his place.

In the current number of Imperal Federation an article on the past year is headed with the following appropriate quotation:—"Thou who of Thy free grace didst build up this Brittannick Empire to a glorious and enviable height, with all her Daughter Islands about her, stay us in this felicitie.—John Milton."

The report emanates from a very strong committee, than whom eleven men more competent for the work it would be difficult to find, besides being backed by all the information collected by the league, as well as the opinions of about thirty men thoroughly qualified to advise. The committee was appointed about twelve months ago, during which time the discussions were frequent and earnest; so the report is the result of the mature thought of a number of minds representing their preponderating opinion. Imperial Federation informs us that this report so arrived at was agreed upon by the committee unanimously, and has been unanimously adopted by the council in a meeting largely and influentially attended.

Before quoting the report, we think we should allude to the resolution moved by the president, Mr. Stanhope, expressing, on behalf of the committee, "its deep sense of the loss which had been sustained by all those who value the unity of the Empire in the death of Lord Tennyson, a former member of the council." The laureate's place on the council was some time previously taken by his son—then Mr. Hallam Tennyson. In acknowledging the resolution of the committee, he (the present Lord Tennyson) said, on behalf of himself and the poet's widow:—"We hope that the memory of the deep interest that my father took in the unity of the Empire may help in some measure to preserve it"; and in replying to a similar resolution passed by the council of the Royal Colonial Institute, the same hand wrote:—"One of the deepest desires of my father's life was to help the realization of the ideal of an empire by the most intimate union of every part of our British Empire. He believed that every different member so united would, with a heightening of individuality to each member, give such strength, and greatness, and stability to the whole as would make our Empire a faithful and fearless leader in all that is good throughout the world."

Digitized by Google

No words could more fitly express the ideas. "Imperial Federation," the Editor says, "is struggling to translate into realities those fine lines which our late 'Poet of Empire' wrote at the request of the heir to the throne for the opening of the Indian and Colonial Exhibition by the Queen:—

"'Sharers of our glorious past,
Brothers, must we part at last?
Shall we not thro' good and ill
Cleave to one another still?
Britain's myriad voices call,
"Sons, be welded each and all
Into one Imperial whole,
One with Britain, heart and soul,
One life, one flag, one fleet, one throne.
Britons, hold your own!"'"

The committee nominated for the purpose of drawing up the report was constituted as follows:—The Lord Brassey, K.C.B. (Chairman); James Bryce, Esq., M.P.; Sir John Colomb, K.C.M.G., M.P.; Sir Daniel Cooper, Bart., G.C.M.G.; H. O. Arnold-Forster, Esq.; the Lord Lamington; the Right Hon. Sir Lyon Playfair, K.C.B., M.P.; James Rankin, Esq., M.P.; Sir Rawson Rawson, K.C.M.G., C.B.; the Lord Reay, G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E.; Sir Charles Tupper, Bart., G.C.M.G., C.B.

The report itself is so long and exhaustive that we cannot do more than glance at its most important points. In presenting these proposals, the committee "wish it to be understood that they have proceeded on the assumption that a general desire exists for maintaining the unity of the Empire and making its organization more perfect, especially for the purpose of defence; that the defence of the Empire in war shall be the common defence of all its interests and of all its parts by the united forces and resources of all its members." . . . "It is in the maintenance of the sea communications of the Empire that the community of interests is most absolute. The primary requirements of combined defence, therefore, are a sea-going fleet and naval bases. Means should be adopted for more intimate communication and consultation between the great outlying British possessions and the Imperial Cabinet, and to that end it is proposed that when the provinces of Australasia and South Africa are each united under one government, as Canada now is, and these dominions are represented in London by a member of each government respectively, such representatives should be available for consultation with the Cabinet when matters of foreign policy affecting the colonies are under consideration.

"It may be laid down as a leading principle that as all parts of the Empire enjoy the benefits of Imperial defence they should contribute to its cost. In the case of India and the crown colonies, the United Kingdom would continue to be responsible for all matters relating to their respective contribution. . . . In proposing that the self-governing colonies should bear the enhanced cost of their own defences, and thereby share the cost of the defences of the Empire in common with the people of the United Kingdom, your committee desire to point out that by so doing those countries would be undertaking an incomparably smaller financial expenditure than would be required for their own defences if these did not form part of the general scheme of defence adopted for the Empire. . . . In order to ascertain the views of the different colonies enjoying responsible government . . . they should be invited to send representatives to a conference summoned ad hoc . . . This invitation should be accompanied by a complete statement showing the general necessities of the Empire in the matter of defence, &c. . . . It is possible that a preliminary inquiry by Royal Commission may be necessary to supply the groundwork for a comprehensive statement of the complete and authoritative character required."

After proposing measures conducive but not essential in federation, and a number more immediately practicable after federation, the following is the conclusion of the report:—"The committee having thus complied with the suggestion of the Prime Minister to furnish proposals for the consideration of Her Majesty's Government, and having definitely recommended the summoning of a conference for the purpose above referred to, desire to place on record their sense of the very grave importance of the questions involved, and their belief that it will be a matter for great regret if the Imperial Government should fail to take, at the earliest fitting opportunity, the initial step of summoning representatives of the United Kingdom, and of the self-governing colonies respectively, to meet and to discuss the best means of formulating some arrangements for the future government of the Empire which shall make satisfactory provision for the joint protection of its common interests."

It will be observed that the unity of the Empire is made indispensable to the proper development of the project, which is a very good argument to use against the Home Rule policy now being "incubated" for the sister isle. The committee in another paragraph state that "the chief inducements for keeping the Empire together spring from the identity of the population of the mother country and the self-governing colonies in all the essentials of a common nationality, and from the existence of a common danger which united defence alone can avert"—a very Identity precept, and remarkable as coming from apparently a purely secular source. (The italics are ours.)

The greater publicity given to this important question the better, especially since the committee state that the late Prime Minister said that it "involves neither more nor less than the future of the British Empire." This Empire being Israel, we have no fear for the result, as it is written in Isa. xlv. 17, "Israel shall be saved in the Lord with an everlasting salvation; ye shall not be ashamed nor confounded: world without end."

Croydon, Jan. 2, 1893.

MULTIPLICATION.

By W. L. Blore.

The Apostle Paul thus writes to Israel: "When God made promise to Abraham, because He could swear by no greater, He sware by Himself, saying, Surely blessing I will bless thee, and multiplying I will multiply thee" (Heb. vi. 13, 14); and then in ver. 17 the apostle writes, "Wherein God, willing more abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise (you, Israel) the immutability of His counsel (as to blessing and multiplication) confirmed it by an oath."

"The heirs of promise" are those mentioned in Rom. ix. 4, "Israelites, to whom pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants (plural), and the giving of the law and the service of God, and the promises (plural)." This multiplication is set forth fully in "Whitaker's Almanac." Since the year 1874 the estimated numbers of religious denominations amongst English-speaking communities throughout the world have increased by forty-two millions, or by three millions more than the entire population of the United Kingdom, and twelve millions more than the entire population of Prussia.

Digitized by Google

This number represents an advance of nearly 60 per cent. in eighteen years. It exceeds the entire population of France, and now the English-speaking population of the world exceeds the population of European Russia by fifteen millions; and if we add to the return Whitaker's return of Hindus, Mohammedans, Buddhists, and others, who read and speak English, we have one hundred and thirty-five millions as the total, which number surpasses the entire Russian Empire in Europe and Asia by twenty-six millions; whereas in 1874 Russia had an excess of seven millions, giving Israel an excess of advance in 1892 of forty-two millions beyond Russia during eighteen years But the advance of the House of Israel during these eighteen years in governing influence is equally surprising. It amounts to eighty-two millions, and, including Egypt, to ninety-three millions, or an advance in excess of the entire population of Russia in Europe, or twice the population of the German Empire minus Alsace-Lorraine with one million added. The German Empire numbers forty-three millions less than our advance in eighteen years in governing influence. The entire governing influence of the House of Israel is now fourfold that of Russia and eightfold that of Germany.

In "Public Opinion" (page 145) there is a tabulated statement by Captain Molard, Professor at St. Cyr Military College, of the armies of Europe necessary to the maintenance of Government influence, from which it appears that, whilst the continental powers have been compelled to increase their armies from six and a-half millions in 1869 to twelve and a quarter millions in 1893, Britain has reduced her forces from four hundred and fifty thousand to three hundred and forty-two thousand.

Now take (a) the increase of English-speaking population, (b) the increase of Israel's governing influence, and (c) the decrease of Israel's military array, whilst the continent have nearly doubled their forces, and then examine the prospective increase of the latter as estimated by Professor Molard within the next seven years at ten millions, making a continental total of twenty-two million men, against a then estimated total of six hundred thousand for Britain; and may we not exclaim with the prophet Isaiah, "Woe to them that stay on horses, and trust in chariots, because they are many; and in horsemen, because they are very strong; but they look not unto the Holy One of Israel, neither seek the Lord" (Isa. xxxi. 1). Then in ver. 4 we read these encouraging words, "For thus hath the Lord spoken unto me, Like as the lion and the young lion roaring on his prey, when a multitude of shepherds is called forth against him, he will not be afraid of their voice, nor abase himself for the noise (margin, multitude) of them; so shall the Lord of hosts come down to fight upon Mount Zion, and upon the hill thereof."

But we must remember the admonition in ver. 6 (N.V.), "Turn ye unto Him from whom ye have deeply revolted, O children of Israel," and then the result is described in ver. 8, "Then shall the Assyrian fall with the sword, not of man; and the sword, not of men, shall devour him." Truly "The Lord is a man of war: the Lord is His name" (Exod. xv. 5).

How encouraging is Deut. xx. 1, "When thou goest forth to battle against thine enemies, and seest horses, and chariots, and a people more than those, thou shalt not be afraid of them: for the Lord thy God is with thee, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt." And let our song be, "The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light: they that dwelt in the shadow of death (or deep darkness), upon them hath the light shined. Thou hast multiplied the nation, Thou has increased their joy: they joy before Thee according to the joy of harvest, as men rejoice when they divide the spoil."

Hill House, Sandown, Isle of Wight, Feb. 9, 1893.

THE REV. C. F. COOPER'S SERMON, PREACHED IN YARMOUTH, NOVA SCOTIA.

THE following report of the above sermon appeared in Yarmouth Light, Nova Scotia, on December 15th, last. The report does not seem to be very carefully drawn up, and in one portion of it we have been under the necessity of making a correction of an important character.

"ANGLO-ISRAELISM.

"Some notice should be taken of the question raised by 'Barrington' touching the Anglo-Israel teaching. The question of ethnology presents a real difficulty to many candid enquirers and for this reason an answer should be given whenever those difficulties are raised. It should be remembered that ethnology and kindred subjects are only in their infancy, and facts are constantly coming to light which are changing our ideas of the ancient races of Europe and Asia. That historians should accept the statements of those who wrote before them, and repeat them in their books without careful investigation is not at all surprising. This has evidently been done by many writers when referring to the early inhabitants of Europe.

"The New World was originally divided to the sons of Noah. Europe, the British Isles, and Southern Russia (Gog and Magog of Scripture) were over-spread by the descendants of Gomer, the son of Japhet; Syria, Assyria, and the countries round about by the sons of Shem. Palestine and Africa were settled by the offspring of Ham, the son of Noah.

"To these three children of the patriarch Noah were certain promises made. God was to enlarge Japheth, but was to dwell with Shem. This has always been understood to mean that the descendants of Japhet and Shem were to be friendly to each other, perhaps their blood should mingle in future ages, but Shem was to enjoy the controlling power and Divine blessing. Ham was to serve them both. These predictions are not yet fully accomplished, but no one at all acquainted with ancient history can deny that they began to be fulfilled very early.

"The Japhetic inhabitants of Europe lapsed into barbarism at the same time when the Semitic branch of the human race was developing the great civilizations of antiquity. The descendants of Canaan, the son of Ham, not only sank into savagery but developed extreme wickedness, for which they were driven out of their land by that branch of the Semitic family at whose head stands Abraham, the 'friend of God.' Thus we prove the dominance of Shem down to B.C. 600, at which time the Saxon story begins.

"At this date the Japhetic territory of Europe began to be invaded by some civilized and warlike tribes of evident Semitic origin. Sharon Turner, who is called 'The father of Anglo-Saxon history,' says these tribes followed the great rivers of Europe and finally settled on the shores of the German Ocean. He clearly proves that these people came from Assyria, and that the old Norse civilization was Semitic and not shared by the rest of Europe. Those tribes were surely our Anglo-Saxon ancestors. Now the question arises who were these strangers who came from Assyria? In answering this question I would call the attention of the reader to the date at which these people began their journey across the continent. About 600 B.C. is fixed as the time. This is about one hundred years after the Northern kingdom of Israel was carried away and settled in the very place from which the tribes invade Europe. What is more natural than to suppose that a century in Assyrian captivity (in which they would find their numbers greatly increased) would generate in them a desire to be free again, and taking advantage of the weakened condition of their conquerors at that time, make their escape in large numbers. This is what they actually did, according to apocryphal statement (2 Esdras xiii. 39—46).

Digitized by Google

"Many of these people remained in different parts of Europe, where they were found and evangelized in the early days of Christianity, but it was the high calling of those who pressed forward to their Island in the West to develop the tribal Empire.

"Other fragments of these wanderers reached the Islands of the West at different times and by different routes, as for instance the Celts of Britain. Dr. Howlet, of Philadelphia, traces this detachment of the tribes to their source: 'The Celts constitute another important link in our chain of evidence. They reached the British Isles a few centuries later than the Tuatha Danaans. They called themselves Cymory (Kimri), and named the region in which they settled Cambria, which signifies the country of the Cymbrians. They came from the Crimea, which still bears their name. They were called by the Greeks Kimmerioi, and by the Romans Cimbri. . . . Two thousand five hundred years ago their name was written on the Assyrian monuments as the Gimiri. . . . Is there any link in history, or any inscription connecting the Gimiri of the Assyrian with the Israel of Palestine?' On an obelisk found by Layard, now in the British Museum, the name Khumri is used as a designation of Jehu the King of Israel. It is thus translated:—'The tribe of Jehu the son of Kumri, silver, gold bowls, vessels, goblets and pitchers of gold, with sceptres for the King's hand, all these I have received.' Thus the Welsh of Britain are traced to their ancestors—the Israelites.

"Mr. H. L. Long says: 'The Cymory is the first wave in the tide of the human race, which, rolling continuously from Asia and the east, reached eventually the coast of Britain.'

"Yeatman, who was by no means thought of Anglo-Israelism, says: 'There is little doubt that Palestine is the home of the Gael, for amongst other divisions it contained an upper and lower Galilee and a Gaulonitis, and above to the North is Galatia.'

"The more this subject is studied the more over-powering is the conviction of our Israelitish origin. Of course, a discovery so new cannot be supposed to be absolutely free from mistakes. It is only 25 years since Mr. Hine began to write on it. He, in ploughing new ground, made some crooked furrows, as might be expected. All is not clear yet, but a great foundation has been laid. Let those who are in doubt not prejudge the case. English law does not condemn a man before he is tried. The following quotation from Frank Leslie's Weekly should describe the attitude of all undecided persons. Speaking of Professor Totten's works, he says:—

"'If Professor Totten, of Yale University, has accomplished nothing else in his popular book, entitled, "Our Race," referred to in the recent editorial contribution of the Rev. James H. Ross, he has at least succeeded in rescuing his subject from the supreme contempt with which all the efforts of those who for years have striven to identify our genealogy with "Lost Israel" have hitherto been stifled, and has certainly forced its discussion into an arena where it can confidently expect the opportunity of a fair fight, and where an audience awaits it that will demand fair play among the contestants.

"'The subject of the Identity of the Anglo-Saxon Race with the "Ten Lost Tribes of Israel" has thus, at last, passed its probationary stage, and it is now high time to call a truce to mere ridicule, and admit the hearing into the sober atmosphere of calm and deliberate investigation. Let us change the venue, therefore, and have no more sneers upon this matter; but if any man has facts which can be arrayed against the claims set up by this certainly growing school of genuine students, let him duly produce his case in the same dignified manner in which its adherents justify their own position, or let him hold his peace in the audience.

* * * * * *

"'Henceforth the question of the real origin of the Anglo-Saxons, who constitute a race indubitably destined to dominate in future ages, merits only the most earnest and searching study from the best and noblest truth-seekers of our day, and the people, whose dictum in the premises must be the final one, will no longer tolerate a sneer unjustified by reasons to which they can accord their common credence.

"'The very possibility that we have sprung from an Arcadia so lofty, and which is so strenuously maintained by all who seem to have given this subject any study worthy of the name, adds a zest and a solemnity to it which but reacts upon all who have no other condemnation to advance except their own ipse dixits. Hence one can fully appreciate the spirit of Bishop Niles, who says concerning it that, "If the case can be fairly made out, nothing so noble has crowned all the scientific, historic, or Scriptural research of these wonderful days of ours," and at the same time understand how so genuine a scholar as "Ik Marvel" has caught the writer's enthusiasm.' "YARMOUTH."

GREAT BRITAIN AND BIBLICAL PROPHECY.

ON Tuesday evening, at the Foresters' Hall, Cowes, the Rev. Frederick Aston, vicar of Bushbury, Wolverhampton, gave an interesting lecture, his subject being, "Is the Empire of Great Britain mentioned in Scripture?" The Rev. John Bailey, rural dean, vicar of Holy Trinity, Cowes, occupied the chair, and introduced the lecturer in an able and appropriate speech.

The Rev. F. Aston, addressing a large audience, in a powerful speech, which was frequently applauded, contended that prophecy was nothing more or less than events or history written beforehand by God Himself. Quoting from the Old Testament, he said that prophecy literally foretold, in the clearest possible manner, the history taking place before us to-day. How came it that a nation like our own, which had done more to ensure progress of Christian civilization than any other, which stood forth as the champion of liberty, had done more than any other nation to put down the slave trade, spent her millions in redeeming them, done more than other nations in sending her missions all over the world, in spending her money for the famine-stricken and distressed, to put down the oppressor and to gain liberty of speech and the Press, conferred the blessings of education and peaceful industry, which maintained the precepts of justice, freedom, and peace, sent out the Word of God in nearly every language, and as the chief of Protestant Powers was the first opponent of priestcraft and intolerance—how was it that such a nation, which had proved victorious in wars not of her own making, and stood forth the beacon-light to the world and a witness for God, was unmentioned in the prophetic Scriptures? What title had these people to their present greatness? Why had not the Book of God reckoned them among the nations? Whence have they come? Who are they? Answering these questions, the rev. gentleman proceeded to argue that the Israel of the Scriptures was not the Jewish race, which of all nations was assuredly the most despised and most downtrodden. He quoted numerous verses of the Bible stating the characteristics of God's favoured people—a mighty empire, an island home too small for her, a great maritime power, great in might, and, among other features, a great power to be found under the new covenant. Eloquently concluding, he said one nation, and one only, filled this great rôle, one only answered this description, one flag and one alone embraced her dominions, and one crown and one only commanded allegiance. It was the Anglo-Saxon, it was the Union Jack, it was the crown of Queen Victoria, whom might God long preserve (loud cheers).

Digitized by Google

The Chairman commented on the intense interest of the lecture; and then questions were invited, and some were put, and the rev. lecturer suggested one or two himself. In reply to these, he said the truths he had spoken of checked infidelity, because the truth of God's promises had been so clearly demonstrated; and it vitalised and amplified every Christian grace. As to Scotland and Ireland belonging to the House of Israel, he said Scotland and the North of Ireland did, but not the South. With regard to the restoration of the Jews, the House of Israel was to take the Jews back to Palestine. He had asked Jews why they did not return to Palestine, and they told him because there was no security for life and property there, but they would return to-morrow if England had a protectorate there. Replying as to the present Egyptian question, he said, again quoting Scripture, that he thought there would be a struggle for universal empire between the Great Autocrat of all the Russias and the Power of Great Britain. He was sorry to say it was a trouble in which Britain would suffer reverse and be cast into the crucible of affliction, but the Lord would rescue her.

The Rural Dean again presided at another lecture by the rev. gentleman the following night (Wednesday), when there was again a large audience, and the address was again interesting. From secular history the lecturer proceeded to show the highly exalted and influential position and wide-spreading rule of the British throne, urging that these were all the characteristics of the House of Ephraim-Israel. He hoped that the facts he had pointed out to them would excite their interest, fire their religious zeal, and awaken their minds to the destiny of the Anglo-Saxon race, to her God-given mission, her mighty privileges, and great responsibilities.

Questions were again put at the close of the lecture. One asked if Queen Victoria was a descendant of the House of David. The lecturer replied that it was so, and Her Majesty knew it. Another was, "Where is it mentioned in the Bible that Israel should possess the Gate of the world—Constantinople?" The rev. gentleman contended from Scriptural extracts that Edom was the Turk, and, he added, "God will bring us in to Edom." A gentleman in the audience thought Germany ought to have a share of the prophecies, but the lecturer replied that there was absolutely no Israel on the Continent. The same gentleman from the body of the hall wished to know why the same arguments could not be applied in their day to the great empires of Rome, Greece, &c. In response, the Rev. F. Aston said these nations did not bear the Biblical characteristics of Israel, and there was only one nation that answered her description—the Anglo-Saxon race; and it was foretold to happen in Messianic times.

The Rural Dean testified to the able and interesting character of the lectures, and expressed thanks to the lecturer, a vote which was cordially supported by Mr. J. Whitman.—Isle of Wight County Press, Jan. 28, 1893.

AMERICA COUNTING THE COST.

By J. G. Taylor.

Those who believe that the United Kingdom and the United States represent Ephraim and Manasseh, have all along held that when the population of America reached a certain height, its phenomenal increase would be arrested either by natural or artificial means. According to the prophecy, Ephraim has to be many times more numerous than his brother; but if the States were to go on doubling themselves as they have done in the past, they would soon outstrip the British Empire, as they have already outstripped the British Islands. When America is overstocked, the stream of emigrants must inevitably slacken and be turned into Canada, Australia, and Africa. But that kind of check is a long way off yet, and if a brake is to be put upon her swelling millions within the next half century, something else will have to interfere with the current. Such were our views, and recent events have shown that the expectation they contain was not the hallucination of heated imaginations. The brake is being applied, and admission into the United States is becoming surrounded with difficulties. When the States were weak in comparison with others, and the population sparse, it was natural that they should receive the crowds of new-comers with open arms, but now that they have grown into a "great people," possessing "submerged tenths" and "congested districts" of their own, it is equally natural that they should be a little more particular as to whom they entertain. They can afford to pick and choose their associates, so that instead of indiscriminate immigration being encouraged it is discouraged; and perhaps we should not be far wrong if we were to affirm that the majority of the nation, or a very large minority, would like to stop the incursion entirely if it could be done without placing the country in an invidious light or infringing those principles of liberty on which the constitution is based.

The cholera scare brought matters to a crisis, but the fact is that the question has been brewing for years. The destitution of vast numbers of the arrivals, their debased condition, and their suspicious political notions, have created an uncomfortable feeling among thoughtful Americans, not to mention the working classes, whose wages are threatened; until we have the Chairman of the Senate's Committee on Immigration publicly declaring that the "flood of undesirable immigrants" must be "driven back." But the puzzle is how to do it. One proposal is to suspend immigration altogether, which is a rather drastic remedy, although it was enforced during last September and October, and in future will probably be resorted to whenever an epidemic is raging in Europe. Another plan would give the President authority to veto immigration at his discretion; while a third is somewhat significant. There can be no doubt that a potent reason why Australia and the Cape do not entice a larger share of our surplus population, is the distance and consequent expense of the voyage. And an influential statesman contends that a tax should be levied so that it may cost as much to get to America as to Australia.

Digitized by Google

This is a hint that the land of the Southern Cross is welcome to a few stray millions, but emigrants are not influenced by hints. They know the difference between 3,000 miles of ocean buffeting and 12,000; they are also keenly alive to the difference between £4 and £15; but they are not affected by hints like those of Mr. Foster, and Americans realize that if they wish to stem the human tide it will be necessary to adopt practical measures, however much hostility it may raise in foreign quarters. That such precautionary regulations are liable to provoke awkward reprisals may be seen from what actually happened last year, when the German Shipping Companies rebelled against the stringent restrictions with which they had to cope. These restrictions touched the pocket—a very sensitive part—and the shipowners retaliated in a summary fashion, although they were careful to assure the world in general, and America in particular, that the steps they took were purely defensive, not retaliatory. But retaliative or non-retaliative they made a considerable impression on American opinion; for if the British Companies had followed the example of their German competitors the success of the Fair at Chicago might have been detracted from in no small degree. It is obvious however, from the language of America's prominent men, that they are determined to grasp their nettle. The Hon. W. E. Chandler, who is chairman of the Immigration Committee, and whom we have quoted above, contributes an article to the North American Review for January, and as he speaks with authority upon the intentions, or desires, of United States politicians, it may be of benefit if we give the following epitome of his paper :—

The writer alludes to the almost universal feeling in the United States in favour of the effective restriction of immigration, and thinks that the probability of a renewed outbreak of cholera in the coming year is alone a sufficient reason for increasing the restrictive powers of the Executive. He comes to the conclusion that total suspension for a year would be preferable to the alternative of the enforcement of stringent and costly regulations. The steamship companies would find the former expedient to their advantage, as cabin passengers intending to visit the Chicago Exhibition would refuse to risk cholera infection by sailing in vessels carrying steerage passengers, and any arrangement short of suspension would prejudicially affect the World's Fair by diminishing the number of European visitors. There need be no fear of immi gration through Canada, as the Canadian authorities would be sure to fall in with the proposals of the United States, if only to avoid the annoyance of railway quarantine on the border. Turning to the more general aspects of the question, Mr. Chandler continues:—

"It is due to frankness to say that resumed immigration would be allowed only under new conditions. Residence and citizenship in the United States are so valuable that it is highly reasonable that the persons or families in Europe who intend to come here should satisfy the United States Consul nearest their home that they are not excluded from coming by any law, and should secure the Consul's certificate enabling them to enter the United States. Nearly all the plans for the restriction of immigration embody a system of investigation on the other side of the ocean before the departure of the immigrants. The nearer this inspection is to the home of the proposed emigrant the better. A prominent objection to the consular certificate is that it will prevent emigrants getting away from their own Government, which may wish to detain them for military purposes; but this objection raises the question whether the United States wishes to take as its citizens any citizens of a foreign country whose Government is unwilling to allow them to depart. The answer is in the negative."

Among the new conditions, Mr. Chandler declares that there must be an educational and property qualification. No immigrants should be allowed to land who are unable to read and write their own language, or who are penniless, but none should have to pay a poll-tax. He then shows from statistics that from Jan. 1 to Oct. 31 of this year the numbers of degraded and illiterate immigrants from Italy, Hungary, Poland, and Russia amounted to 161,268, despite the fact that immigration was suspended during September and October.

"These evils," says Mr. Chandler in conclusion, "are trying and intolerable. We cannot safely undertake the assimilation of ignorant and debased human beings from such sources. No indiscriminate opposition to the admission of foreigners of any particular race is contemplated, but exclusion is required for the maintenance of a high order of American civilisation, and in the interest of the intelligent wage workers of the Continent. The United States is a country of high wages, and it is hoped for the sake of its prosperity that it may long remain so. But it cannot remain so unless the flood of undesirable immigrants who have been recently swarming to our shores is driven back."

Mr. Chandler's views have the merit of being well-defined, —he is no believer in half-measures. But as before shown, the application of official restraints has a tendency to create friction, and Jonathan is handling the problem with his usual cuteness. The Legislature has just passed the Quarantine Bill, which embodies one of the three suggestions previously referred to; that is, it enables the President to forbid the landing of aliens if he pleases to do so. This despotic authority is worthy of the Great Mogul, but the United States are a strange compound of democracy and autocracy. They proclaim the independence of the individual in louder tones than others, yet they are more severe with their socialists and boycotters than we are here. They hold that supreme power is the sacred property of the people, yet every five years they resign this power into the hands of a President. Their treatment of the "burning question" is therefore only in keeping with the broad lines of their policy, but it has a further advantage, because in placing so heavy a responsibility on the shoulders of the President they relieve themselves substantially of the odium which may arise in consequence of exercising prohibition. But prohibition, and all the varied plans which have been mooted, are mere human expedients, and may not be needed.

Mr. Chandler avows that during the first eight months of 1892 the "degraded and illiterate immigrants from Italy, Hungary, Poland, and Russia, amounted to 161,268," which is disagreeable. But it is quite possible that our cousins will not be troubled much longer with this barbarous invasion. A European war would dry up the muddy stream at its source, and although the prospect of such a conflict is nauseous there can be no doubt that it will come. Thirteen millions of men are not equipped and drilled to no purpose, nor can the burden be endured for ever. Years ago the Peace Society was very active, and there was talk of a universal disarmament, but the hope of attaining that desire seems to have died out. Nowadays we hear more about the massing of troops than the disbanding of them, and the predominant object of continental nations is to surpass their neighbours in the numbers of their bayonets, the quickness of their volleys, and the general excellence of slaughtering machinery. There is much truth in the argument elaborated by Lytton in his "Coming Race," that war will have to exterminate war; and the world tacitly admits that there is no chance of solid peace except through the ordeal of sanguinary strife. When people comprehend that war has developed into massacre, and that science has eliminated what chivalry it had, they will not be so eager to nourish "military glory." This is one of the results which may be confidently expected from the impending struggle, but its more immediate issue will be to release America from the plague of which she complains.

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

THE friend who forwarded the following to us remarked that the United States "were a people that keep Sabbath." "Would any other nation," he added, "sacrifice so much to principle?" The extract is from "Ashore and Afloat" for January, 1893:—

"Those who have induced the United States Congress to close the gates of the coming World's Fair on Sundays are being anathematized very freely just now by certain Chicagoans, who calculate that this interference has cost the city a cool seven million dollars. Preparations had been made to run Sunday excursions to Chicago during the Fair, and the Western Broker figures out the loss through Sunday closing in this way: 'With good weather these excursions would, with the immense turn-out of Chicago wage-earners, swell the Sunday attendance to four hundred thousand people. This, for twenty Sundays only, would make four million dollars in gate receipts alone. Reducing the other six Sundays to half that estimate for probable bad weather, it would make six hundred thousand dollars, which, for the twenty-six Sundays, would make a total of nearly five million dollars. On concessions, an official of the Ways and Means estimates that the total receipts would exceed ten million dollars. For the twenty-six largest days, or Sundays, it would reach nearly two million dollars, making a grand total for the exchequer of the Exposition, approximately seven million dollars.'"

We see here what is very remarkable—namely, that the nation in its corporate capacity acting through the United States Congress takes the right step and honours God by deciding that a great international enterprise shall in the eyes of the nations exhibit a picture of obedience to God's laws, even though such obedience should cost the promoters of the exhibition enormous losses. We see on the other hand that the parties pecuniarly interested in the matter are decidedly averse to the prohibition, by which Sunday will be a dies non in respect to "The World's Fair." God accepts the act of the Congress as the act of the responsible head of the American people, but disregards the malcontents (save in their individual character), since they do not in any wise represent the body corporate of the State.

The national observance of the Sabbath has wonderful blessings attached to it, and these our own nation as well as the American people are in a great measure enjoying. These blessings are given in detail in Isa. lviii. 13, 14 (R.V.) thus:—

"If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing My pleasure on My holy day, and call the Sabbath a delight, and the holy of the Lord honourable, and shalt honour it (or Him), not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words; then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord, and I will make thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and I will feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

The blessings are to be for the sons and afterseed of Jacob—that is, for "the children of Israel,"—and the heritage of Jacob is that cluster of blessings to be found in Deut. xxviii. 1—14, xlviii. 16—19, and those which Jacob having received handed on to his posterity in these "the last days" of the Christian dispensation (Gen. xlix. 1—27).

Correspondence.

AN IDENTITY CONTROVERSY.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—Many thanks for your courteous letter and the Protestant Observer, both of which I have read carefully and with much interest. With regard to the points of objection in your note, I think you will find some of them fully answered in a leaflet, "The One Seed, Christ," by Philo-Israel, and in a pamphlet entitled, "Israel in the New Testament," by the late Surgeon-General Grant, who was an able exponent of British-Israel Truth. (Price 4d. R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.)

As regards the House of Judah, the epithets "the Jews" and "Israelites" are synonymous terms, but with respect to the House of Israel, the titles are certainly not synonymous. The Biblical distinction between the Israelites of the House of Judah and the Israelites of the House of Israel is clearly stated in the following proposition, that "while all Jews are Israelites, all Israelites are not necessarily Jews." The non-observance of this Scriptural distinction between the two Houses of the Hebrew race has been, and still is, the source of a thousand errors and mistakes in the interpretation of various portions of the Word of God. This is a most vital point; and the individual who cannot see this distinction can never realize the truth of our Israelitish origin. On this subject I would recommend you to get a very interesting leaflet called "The Historical and Prophetical Distinction between the two Houses of Judah and Israel."

Another cause of innumerable errors is the manner in which the majority of our commentators and clerics spiritualize away the meaning of many passages, expressions, and names in Holy Writ. The present Bishop of Liverpool, Dr. Ryle, who is as you know, a sound Protestant evangelical Churchman, has most justly and emphatically condemned this principle of interpretation in his book "Coming Events and Present Duties," from which I enclose an extract, and to which I would direct your thoughtful consideration.

The following is a part of the extract forwarded: "I warn you that unless you interpret the prophetical portion of the Old Testament in the simple, literal meaning of its words, you will find it no easy matter to carry on an argument with an unconverted Jew. . . . Will you dare to tell him that Zion, Jerusalem, Jacob, Judah, Ephraim, Israel, do not mean what they seem to mean, but mean the Church of Christ? . . . Oh, reader, if you are a man of this mind, take care what you are doing! I say again, Take care! . . . I think we should remember that we must reject Protestant traditions which are not according to the Bible as much as the traditions of the Church of Rome."—"Literal versus Spiritual Israel," THE BANNER OF ISRAEL, July 1, 1891.

In a friendly conversation which I had recently on the Identity with the rector of this parish, a rev. canon, I quoted the text where it is said that Christ told His apostles to "go rather to the lost sheep of the House of Israel" (Matt. x. 6) in order to show that that House was in existence and distinct from the House of Judah in the days of our blessed Lord. But my rev. friend said that "there could be a great deal said about that passage by giving it a spiritual interpretation." I replied, "Of course there could; but what right has anyone to spiritualize away the plain meaning of the words when they will admit of a literal exposition?" Now, in my humble opinion, the Scriptural and common sense signification of the words "the House of Israel" is "the House of Israel," and not "the House of Judah," "the Church of Christ," or "spiritual Israel," which last epithet is conferred with great dignity by our divines on what they affirm to be the Gentile Church, but which is not to be found in the Bible. That the House of Israel was in separate existence from the House of Judah in the days of the Saviour is evident from the patent fact that Christ was Himself preaching in person to the House of Judah at the very time that He told His apostles to go to the House of Israel. It is, moreover, manifest, from the very nature of the commission, that Christ and His apostles knew well where the House of Israel was located. If it were otherwise, how could the apostles obey the command of the Master? or how could they go to preach to a people if they were in total ignorance of the place where they (the Israelites) resided? The fact that the apostles Paul and James have made mention of the Twelve Tribes is enough to prove that the Ten Tribes were in existence when they wrote.

Digitized by Google

But it does not follow from their statements that the Ten-tribed Israelites were nationally united or amalgamated with the Jewish nation in their day. The union and restoration of the two nations of Israel and Judah to the land of promise is a future event, as the following passages of Holy Scripture clearly prove:—Isa. xl. 11; Jer. iii. 18, xxxii. 40, l. 4; Ezek. xxxvii. 22; Amos ix. 15; Hosea i. 11, &c. Though Paul and James have not named the places where the Ten-tribed Israelites were situated, it does not necessarily follow that they did not know their abode, for the apostle Peter has addressed his first epistle to contingents of the Twelve Tribes as "the strangers scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia, elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father" (1 Peter i. 1, 2). So manifest is this that it is admitted by my rather uncourteous opponent, Mr. John Hopkins, in his letter which appeared in the September issue of The Catholic, that the apostle James, in the days of the Gospel, so far from counting the Ten Tribes of Israel as lost, addressed an epistle to the Twelve Tribes scattered abroad (James i. 1), and the great apostle of the circumcision, Peter, locates the children of the dispersion in Pontus, &c., &c.

The Jews knew well that the Ten Tribes were neither non-existent nor united with the House of Judah in the time of our blessed Lord, for when He told them that "Where I am, thither ye cannot come; then said the Jews among themselves, Whither will He go that we shall not find Him? Will He go unto the dispersed among the Gentiles?" (John vii. 34, 35). It was, doubtless, to these dispersed or scattered Israelites that the Saviour alluded when He told the Pharisees that "Other sheep I have which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear My voice" (John x. 16). These are manifestly the lost sheep of the House of Israel to which Christ said that He was sent (Matt. iv. 24), and not the Jews, who not only had rejected His ministry, but also shouted "Crucify Him! Crucify Him!" and filled up the cup of their iniquity by having killed the Prince of Life (Acts iii. 15). Josephus, the Jewish historian, has recorded that in his day the great bulk of the Ten-tribed Israelites were beyond the river Euphrates.

Of course, it is only through the advent of the blessed Redeemer—"the seed of the woman," "the one seed, Christ"—that the prophecy in Gen. xxii. 17, 18 could possibly be fulfilled, as stated by Peter in Acts iii. 25, 26; and yet, when God made the covenant with Abraham, He also swore by Himself that "I will multiply thy seed as the stars in heaven, and as the sand which is upon the seashore, and thy seed shall possess the Gate of his enemies" (Gen. xxii. 17)—temporal promises which have not been and could not be fulfilled in the person of the Saviour alone, while Isaiah has also predicted concerning the lineal descendants of the great patriarch that "all that see them shall acknowledge them that they are the seed which the Lord hath blessed" (Isa. lxi. 9).

That these predictions do not refer to the House of Judah is manifest from the notorious facts that the Jews at the present day are comparatively few in number, do not possess a single Gate or fortress in the world, but are still hunted down and persecuted by their enemies, and are still under the curse of the law. The House of Israel, therefore, must be the imperial race, and the multitudinousness and blessed seed which is pointed at in these prophecies, and which is also referred to by St. Paul in Gal. iii. 8, when he quotes a portion of the Abrahamic covenant, and declares that the Gospel was preached unto Abraham, "saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed," meaning thereby that in Christ, the one seed, and also through the chosen instrumentality of the multitudinousness and blessed seed of Abraham, the children of Israel, redeemed with the precious blood of Christ, shall all nations be blessed. "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, for He hath visited and redeemed His people" (Luke i. 68). Hence we find it declared in Hosea that "the number of the children of Israel shall be as the sand of the sea, which cannot be measured nor numbered; and it shall come to pass that in the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not My people, there it shall be said unto them, Ye are the sons of the living God," or believers in Christ, as St. John teaches.

Now, it is obvious that these passages of Scripture do not portray Israel in unbelief, or in a state of heathen darkness, but clearly predict the House of Israel as redeemed by Christ from the curse of the law, and in the enjoyment nationally of the spiritual and temporal blessings promised to the seed of Abraham under the Abrahamic and new covenants or the Gospel. Consequently it has been foretold by Isaiah that "Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit" (Isa. xxvii. 6); and subsequently by our blessed Lord Himself, when He told the Jews that "the kingdom of God shall be taken from you and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof" (Matt. xxi. 43)—statements which clearly indicate that the House of Israel should become a Christian nation during the present dispensation, in order to be a blessing to all nations by filling the face of the world with the fruits of the Gospel of the Kingdom of God.

Now it is a fact of world-wide notoriety that the British nation is blessing the world at large by maintaining the glorious principles of civil and religious liberty, by the abolition of slavery, by the dissemination of sound and healthy literature, by the establishment of the magnificent discoveries of science, such as steam power, electricity, &c., &c., and, above all, by the universal preaching of the everlasting Gospel, and the circulation of the infallible Word of God in every quarter of the globe. And these are plain, unvarnished facts, which prove beyond all dispute that the British nation, or the Anglo-Saxon race, is the Ten-tribed House of Israel.

In the light of the Scriptures which have been presented in this letter, I hope that the difficulty will be dispelled which has occurred to your mind with reference to the past heathenish condition of the House of Israel, with the prophecy of Balaam, who has affirmed that the events which he had predicted should be accomplished in the latter days (Numb. xxiv. 14), an expression which is admitted by the majority of commentators to denote the Christian or present dispensation, as in 1 Tim. iv. 1, wherein some of the distinctive characteristics of the Roman apostacy have been foretold by the apostle Paul. That statement of Balaam is alone sufficient to show that the House of Israel was not to be in a heathen state during the Christian era, but, on the contrary, a professing and powerful Christian nation, while the prediction respecting the lion and the unicorn has clearly portrayed the royal standard of Great Britain and Ireland, which is the actual banner of Israel.

This is the heraldic symbol of the British Empire, which is stamped upon every thing connected with the government of the United Kingdom, and which is affixed to every document proceeding from the supreme authorities of every British possession—an emblem commanding and obtaining respect from every British subject, and which, displayed on the breasts of our heroic kings, has struck terror and dismay into our enemies upon the battlefield. Balaam said, "Who can count the dust of Jacob, or the number of the fourth part of Israel?" (Numb. xxiii. 10) "There shall come a Star out of Jacob, and the Sceptre shall rise out of Israel, and Israel shall do valiantly" (Numb. xxiv. 17)—words which are sufficient to prove that Israel was to be a multitudinous, Christian, dominant, and mighty race in the Christian era, and not a small, obscure, barbarous, and heathen nation, as is supposed by the greater part of the individuals who fail to realize the truth of our Israelitish origin.

Digitized by Google

It is affirmed that the late Lord Beaconsfield, the Hebrew-Christian Prime Minister of England, was a firm believer in the Identity of the Anglo-Saxon race with the Lost Ten Tribes of the House of Israel, and that the light which he derived from the recognition and acceptance of that great truth had enabled him to pursue a policy in connection with the Egyptian and Eastern questions which is destined to eventuate in the permanent acquisition of Palestine by England, and the restoration of the Jews to the holy land under the protection of the Union Jack, "the meteor flag of England," as foretold in Jer. iii. 18, that "In those days the House of Judah shall walk to (margin) the House of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the north to the land that I have given for an inheritance unto your fathers"—a prediction which is now beginning to be fulfilled before our eyes, for there are thousands of Jews who have been banished from Russia now seeking refuge and settling down in Great Britain and Ireland preparatory to the union of the Two Houses of Judah and Israel, and their return together to the land of promise.

I have, like yourself, always taken a deep interest in the Jews; but since I have embraced the truth of the Identity, and have thereby discovered that they are really "my brethren, my kinsmen, according to the flesh" (Rom. ix. 3), I have felt an affection and pity for them which I had not experienced hitherto, for blood, you know, is thicker than water. It was, therefore, with great pleasure that I read the account of the recent consecration of the new synagogue in Dublin, and the beautiful sermon preached by the Very Rev. Dr. Adler, Chief Rabbi of the British Empire. I know that you will join me in the prayer that the time may be near when the children of Judah shall acknowledge the crucified Jesus as their Messiah and Saviour who will redeem them from the curse of the law, and when their sins shall be washed away in "the Fountain filled with blood," that "Fountain opened to the House of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and for uncleanness" (Zech. xiii. 1), for

> "Though Jesus died by Jewish hands,
> His blood atones for them."

I fear the perusal of this long letter will weary you. I had not intended to write so much, but as I proceeded I found that I could not express all I wished in a multum in parvo way. In conclusion I wish to remark that there may be mistakes in my expositions, as I am neither very experienced nor learned in the subject of the Identity, nor am I infallible like His Holiness the Pope. At the same time, I commend my letter to your careful and impartial consideration. I was thinking, with your permission, of sending your note to the courteous Editor of the BANNER OF ISRAEL, who, if requested, will doubtless reply satisfactorily thereto.

I am, &c.,
EDMOND IRELAND.

Mount Eland, Ballyragget, co. Kilkenny, Dec., 1892.

To John Ennis, Esq.

[Mr. John Ennis's reply to the above, and our own comments on the reply, will appear in our next.—ED.]

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—I have been asked to send you short accounts of two monthly meetings held in North London in continuation of the work began by our friend Mr. Weller, now removed to Borstal.

At the invitation of Mr. Sutton, of Anson-road, Tufnell Park, N., a large number of friends met at his house on the 19th January last to hear an address by the Rev. C. Idrisyn Jones upon "John Bunyan and British-Israelism." Allusion was made to the remarkable incident in John Bunyan's life where he anxiously questioned his father whether the English were not the descendants of the Lost Ten Tribes, but he was greatly grieved when he received no for an answer. Mr. Jones then proceeded to trace, in a clear and interesting manner, the likeness between the exiled Ten-tribed House of Israel and the "Pilgrim's Progress." A hearty vote of thanks was accorded him at the close, and a Mr. Allan Marriott, who had not before heard a lecture upon British-Israelism, cordially invited those present to hold their next meeting at his house.

Accordingly, on Feb. 16, at Mr. Marriott's residence, 6, Dalmeny-road, Tufnell Park, Mr. Barton read a paper upon Jer. iii. 18—the return of Judah and Israel to Palestine. Mr. Barton having read, for the benefit of new comers, a few of our title-deeds as Israel to the holy land, explained the connection between the above passage with others occurring in several of the prophetic books. He showed that, as foretold would be in the last days, Judah (the Jews) was greatly harassed on all sides in Europe at the present day, all the chief nations of the continent being anti-Semitic, especially the great northern kingdom Russia, called Gog in Ezek. xxxviii.

The discussion which followed the lecture turned upon the manner of Judah's return—i.e., whether a merely representative one, as in the case of Israel in Jer. iii., or whether Judah would go direct south to Palestine. The "haste" mentioned in Jer. iv. 6 was thought to imply the latter course, and that when arrived in Palestine, which Russia eagerly coveted, Judah would seek the protection of Britain-Israel already established in power in Egypt and along the whole course of the Mediterranean. Mr. Marriott could not yet accept British-Israelism, though he admitted that the slight study he had made of it had opened his eyes to passages of Scripture, the importance of which he had overlooked. Votes of thanks to the lecturer and chairman closed an interesting evening.

Truly yours, H. L. BROWETT.

New Southgate, Feb. 21, 1893.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—We know that Missionary zeal, followed by commercial activity and that acquisition of territory which alone can secure the permanence of our Christianising efforts, has been and is the glory of this Empire's interference in Africa; and the continuance of it is being marked by the gradual disappearance of slavery.

You have advocated in the BANNER the seizing of these golden opportunities afforded to a Christian Imperialism, and you have, I am sorry to say, often been twitted for drawing attention to the fact that the march forward has always been more rapid and successful under a Conservative Administration than under a Liberal one. Such critics ought to read the leading article in the Daily News of 31st January last, in which the following statement appears: "For the inclusion of Uganda within the British sphere of influence, as indeed for our whole share in the partition of Africa, the late Government are responsible."

The italics are my own.

Very faithfully yours,
H. L. BROWETT.

New Southgate, Feb. 8, 1893.

CARDIFF.—Meetings on the subject of Our Identity are held every Friday, at 8 p.m., at 120, Queen's Street, Cardiff (Davies' Temperance Hotel). All are welcome.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed "PHILO-ISRAEL," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION for the BANNER OF ISRAEL, in Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts. To any part of the United Kingdom, Canada, America, or Europe, in the postal union:—

	s.	d.		s.	d.
copy, including postage	7	0	Tasmania	7	0
New Zealand	7	0	South Australia	7	0
Cape Colony	7	0	Queensland	7	0
Victoria	7	0	Natal	7	0
Western Australia	7	0	New South Wales	7	0
Transvaal	7	0	India	7	0
			Ceylon, via Brindisi	7	0

All Post Office Orders, Cheques, &c., should be crossed "City Bank, Ludgate-hill, to the ac. of ROBERT BANKS AND SON." They will then only be paid to our account.

READING CASES for holding the Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts, may be had, price 2s. Sent post free on receipt of Postal Order.

THE ANNUAL VOLUMES, bound in handsome blue cloth, price 8s.

THE MONTHLY PARTS, in tinted wrapper, published the last day of each month, 6d.

"A WONDERFUL REMEDY."
"I WAS GIVEN UP BY ALL."
"SAVED FROM AN EARLY GRAVE."

Such are the words of grateful Patients relative to their CASES OF

CONSUMPTION

CURED BY THE TREATMENT OF

MR. GEO. T. CONGREVE.

Read his Book, "ON CONSUMPTION," &c." which may be had post free for ONE SHILLING from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.; or may be ordered of any Bookseller.

NOTE.—CONSULTATIONS FREE at Coombe Lodge, Peckham, on TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings only. No Charge except the usual charge for three weeks or six weeks' supply of medicine. All Patients should read the book first.

"THE WORLD'S PROVED REMEDY FOR ALL CHEST DISEASES."

COUGH, ASTHMA, CHRONIC BRONCHITIS, INFLUENZA,

THERE IS NONE TO EQUAL IT.

Rev. F. E. HEAPE, of DERBY, in a recent letter, says: "Your Medicine always puts my lungs right, and drove out the terrible INFLUENZA last May."

This Medicine has been prepared for 65 years.

CONGREVE'S BALSAMIC ELIXIR.

In Bottles, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 22s., may be had of all Chemists and Medicine Vendors.

NEW BADGES.

Gold Brooches, 6/3 and 4/-
Scarf Pins, 4/9 and 3/9.
Pendants, large, 4/6; small, 2/9.
All Badges, Metal Gilt, 9d.

All Post Free. Applications, with Postal Order enclosed, to be sent to MRS. THOMPSON, or to MAJOR-GEN. CARLYLE BELL, St. Laurence Villa, Kingston-hill, Surrey.

NOW READY.

Price 1s. 6d., or post free, 1s. 8d.

VOLUME XVI. OF THE BANNER OF ISRAEL,

Price 8s. Sent Post Free.

ROBERT BANKS AND SON, Racquet-ct., Fleet-st., E.C.

New Pamphlet Just Issued, price 3d., by post 3½d.; one dozen, post free, 3s.

Every Anglo-Israelite should read

ISRAEL A CHRISTIAN NATION AT THE PRESENT DAY.

BY COL. WM. CAREY. C.B.

London: ROBERT BANKS AND SON, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, or by order of any Bookseller.

NEW CATALOGUE of Works on Our Identity post free from R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

No. 26.—Price 1s. per 100, 8s. 6d. per 1,000.

THOUGHTS FOR THE BRITISH FOLK.

SUGGESTED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

OUR ISRAELITE MINERS.

London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C.

Price 6d. Monthly. Annual Subscription 7s.

THE MESSENGER.

Edited by "OXONIAN."

Each number contains papers by the EDITOR, and other well-known writers, a SERMON by Dr. WILD, Notes and Queries, &c

Now Ready, price 5s., post free, 5s. 4d., Illustrated by MAPS,

RUSSIA JAPHET;

OR, THE MUSCOVITE, THE COSSACK, AND THE MONGOL.

Being a detailed Identification of the principa peoples subject to the Czar. By "OXONIAN."

London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C.

MASON'S KILLCORN

"AN EXCELLENT THING."

You need not suffer any longer from Corns, Warts, or Bunions. "WONDERFUL KILLCORN" will cure you. This is what a postman says:—"I have been nearly crippled with corns, but am now completely cured by your wonderful 'Killcorn.' I will answer all enquiries regarding same."—DANIEL MITCHELL, Post Office, Cardenden, Scotland. 1s. per bottle. Ask for MASON'S KILLCORN and don't have any other. Sold by all Chemists, Patent Medicine Vendors, and at all stores, or sent post free for 12 stamps by the Proprietor W. B. MASON, 26 & 27, High Holborn, London, W.C., and 18, Guildford-street, Leeds.

THE WORLD'S CORN CURER

TEA! TEA! TEA!

FROM

INDIA, CEYLON, AND CHINA.

Best Quality and Best Value.

From 1/6 to 3/6 per lb. Samples Gratis.

Carriage Paid on Parcels of 6lbs. and upwards

Robinson & James,

42, TRINITY SQUARE, TOWER HILL LONDON, E.C.

TOOTH-ACHE

CURED INSTANTLY BY

BUNTER'S NERVINE

Prevents Decay, Saves Extraction, Sleepless Nights Prevented.

Neuralgic Headaches and all Nerve Pains removed by BUNTER'S NERVINE. All Chemists, 1s. 1½d.

DR. ROOKE'S SOLAR ELIXIR AND ORIENTAL PILLS

DR. ROOKE'S SOLAR ELIXIR AND ORIENTAL PILLS effect marvellous cures. 50 years reputation. Sold everywhere. Pills in boxes 1/1½, 2/9, and 4/6. The Elixir in bottles 2/9, 4/6, and 11/-

Dr. ROOKE, SCARBOROUGH, ENGLAND.

TEETH.—£1 A FULL SET

ESKELL'S.—CELEBRATED MAKE, £2 2s. Warranted and fitted in one visit. No extractions needed. HALF A MILLION SETS already supplied. The Nursing Record and Hospital World says:—We recommend all who require Reliable and Good Teeth at a small cost to go to Messrs. ESKELL, 445, Strand (facing Charing Cross Station), and 58, Ludgate Hill, City, London. Also at 27, Western Road, Brighton, and 23, Mount Pleasant, Tunbridge Wells. Hours 9 till 7. Illustrated Pamphlets, explaining everything, free. Established 100 years.

FREEMAN'S ORIGINAL CHLORODYNE.

THIS valuable medicine, discovered and invented by Mr. RICHARD FREEMAN in 1844, introduced into India and Egypt in 1850, and subsequently all over the world, maintains its supremacy as a special and specific Remedy for the Treatment and Cure of Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Cancer, Bronchitis, Asthma, Ague, Sore Throat, Influenza, Neuralgia, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Asiatic Cholera, Colic, Gout, and all Fevers.

At 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 20s. per bottle.

Sold by Patent Medicine Dealers in all parts of the world.

N.B.—Lord Chancellor Selborne, Lord Justice James, and Lord Justice Mellish, decided in favour of FREEMAN'S ORIGINAL CHLORODYNE, and against Brown and Davenport, compelling them to pay all costs in the suit.—See Times of July 24, 1873.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT FOR LUMBAGO

Mr. J. B. CARNE, Station Master L. B. & S. C. Ry., Clapham Junction Station, S.W., writes:—"I have derived great benefit from wearing your Electropathic Belt. The Lumbago and pains in my back have both ceased."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST., LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

Digitized by Google

Important Notice to the Public, Chemists, and all

Retailers of Patent Medicines:

OWBRIDGE'S LUNG TONIC does not contain any Scheduled Poison, therefore ALL persons holding Patent Medicine Licences can sell it, and no one has a right to attach "Poison" labels to the bottles.

The known superiority of Owbridge's Lung Tonic as a safe and effective remedy for Coughs, Colds, or any Lung affection, makes it important the Public should know that no difficulty exists in obtaining it.

Sold everywhere at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., & 11s., by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors.

The True and Divine Appointment for the Cure of Disease.

Send to

B. V. SCOTT, M.B.M.R.S.,

College of Health, 121, Kensington, Liverpool,

for his

VOICE OF NATURE TO THE INVALID,

Post free 5 stamps.

Thousands of incurables (so-called) have proved God's own means could save when others failed.

Rev. F. Harper says of Mr. Scott's book: "It is a library in itself, and free from quackery."

Rev. Lush says: "Mr. Scott's treatment is natural, safe, reasonable, and Scriptural."

Send for the Book at once.

PAGE WOODCOCK'S WIND PILLS

A CLERGYMAN

Writes: "I am so convinced from my own experience and that of others of the real value of your WIND PILLS, in complaints arising from a disordered state of the STOMACH, BOWELS, or LIVER, that I wish much to promote the use of the Medicine in this parish, and I now inclose P.O. for a large box, and should be glad of some papers for circulation among my parishioners. In my own case

Page Woodcock's Wind Pills

have been of the greatest use. I have no objection to your publishing my communication, provided you divulge not my name and address, which you may give, nevertheless, to those who require such a verification."—Vicarage, near Malvern.

All Sufferers from INDIGESTION, LIVER COMPLAINTS, WIND on the STOMACH, COSTIVENESS, SICK HEADACHE, HEARTBURN, PALPITATION of the HEART, BILIOUSNESS, &c.,

should avail themselves of this most excellent medicine.

☞ The WIND PILLS being PURELY VEGETABLE, TASTELESS, and MILD and TONIC in their action, may be taken with perfect safety by the most delicate of either sex.

● Of all Chemists, at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d., or Post Free for P.O. or Stamps, from PAGE WOODCOCK, LINCOLN.

GIGANTIC SALE OF LADIES CLOTH DRESSES

100 COLOURS TO SELECT FROM

GREATEST BARGAINS EVER OFFERED

In consequence of the mild season, we have still in stock over 250,000 DRESS LENGTHS of our famous Cloths which, in order to effect a rapid clearance we have reduced to less than Manufacturers' Cost Price. 100 lovely new colours to select from. All goods are new and in perfect condition. We will gladly send patterns post free, and they need not be returned. Write to-day for patterns and Sale Price List

FULL DRESS LENGTHS OF MAGNIFICENT CLOTHS 9s.6d. CARRIAGE PAID.

GENUINE REDUCTIONS! WRITE FOR PATTERNS

LUTAS LEATHLEY & Co. ARMLEY, LEEDS.

BE SURE TO CUT

10,000 RUGS GIVEN AWAY.

IT MAY THIS OUT,

THIS PHENOMENAL OFFER is made to the Readers of this Journal only.

On receipt of this advertisement, accompanied by Postal Order for 6, or 74 stamps, we will forward DIRECT FROM OUR LOOMS to your address, one of our genuine SEAMLESS WOVEN REVERSIBLE CARPETS, suitable for Drawing-room, Dining-room, Bedroom, &c., handsomely bordered and woven in 30 different patterns and art colourings to suit all requirements, and LARGE ENOUGH TO COVER ANY ORDINARY SIZED ROOM. These carpets are manufactured from a material equal in wear to wool, and are undoubtedly the cheapest in the world.

With every Carpet we shall ABSOLUTELY GIVE AWAY a very handsome RUG to match, or we will send 2 CARPETS and 2 RUGS for 10/6

The Queen says: "Decidedly stouter and handsomer than any of the kind, the price being the astounding part of the matter." Schoolmistress: "For style, durability, and cheapness, they cannot be beaten." Penny Illustrated Paper: "Manufactured in every variety of colour, and is one of the most surprising bargains I have seen." Church Bells: "Truly wonderful value."

Thousands of Testimonials similar to the following, & Re eat Orders, have been received from our Customers:

"70, Upper Sutton Street, Aston, Birmingham.—Dear Sir,—Please to forward me a Brusselette Carpet, &c. The Rugs and Carpets I purchased from you eighteen months ago have worn wonderfully well, and are good value for the money.—Yours truly, THOMAS HAWKES."

This offer is made to the Readers of this Paper only, and will not be repeated. All Orders despatched same day as received. Cheques and Postal Orders to be crossed "Union Bank." Address—

THE BRITISH CARPET WEAVING COMPANY,

31, OLD STREET, LONDON, E.C.

NOT APPEAR AGAIN.

MASON'S EXTRACT OF HERBS FOR MAKING NON-INTOXICATING BEER

WE ALL REQUIRE SOMETHING TO DRINK

The finest, most refreshing and pleasantest beverage obtainable. One table-spoonful of this Extract makes one gallon of splendid Beer. Try it. A sample bottle, enough to make eight gallons, post free for 9 stamps.

NEWBALL & MASON, NOTTINGHAM.

AGENTS WANTED.

MASON'S WINE ESSENCES, non-intoxicating. For children's parties and social gatherings. A 6d. bottle will make one gall. of delicious wine. Post free 9 stamps, or a bottle of both Extract of Herbs and Wine Essence post free 15 stamps.

PHOSPHORUS

A new process of preparing this necessary food for the Brain and Nervous System, invented by Mr. Samuel Birley, M.D., renders its therapeutic value superior to all the Phosphates, Hypophosphites, &c., usually prescribed. May be taken for years with perfect safety! Descriptive pamphlet free to enquirers (mentioning this paper), from

GORDON, MURRAY & Co., Ltd.,

10, ADAM STREET, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.

The Lost Ten Tribes of Israel.

By the Rev. JOSEPH WILD, D.D., Pastor of Bond-street Congregational Church, Toronto, Price 3s.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-ct., Fleet-st., E.C.

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co. (Ltd.) 23, Paternoster-row. Wednesday MARCH 15, 1893. All Rights Reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India).

"And the Remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORN: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS OF THE EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XVII., No. 847. Entered at Stationer's Hall.] WEDNESDAY, MARCH 22, 1893. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
Israel "Pegging Out Her Claim"	145
National Danger, and a Few of Its Lessons. By the Rev. Denis Hanan, D.D.	147
One Way of Measuring the Empire	148
The Psalms. By F. C. P. Part I.	149
"Pessimism" During the Week of Universal Prayer	150
A Sydney Controversy on Our Identity	151
Divine Strategy. By J. G. Taylor	153
Bristol and Clifton Branch of the British-Israel Association	154
Israel's Scripture and Prayer Union	154
Correspondence	154

ISRAEL "PEGGING OUT HER CLAIMS."

IT was indeed a happy expression to which Lord Rosebery gave utterance on March 1st, at the banquet given at the Royal Colonial Institute, in the Metropolis, when he described our nation as engaged at the present moment in "pegging out claims" in Africa for yet unborn "Anglo-Saxons." He declared that it was our duty to see "that the world, as far as it can be moulded by us, shall receive the Anglo-Saxon, and not another character!" These words, which are Lord Rosebery's, come very near to those we have been for years using in this journal; we, because we know that this nation is Israel, and God has made Israel "the heir of the world" (Rom. iv. 13), and has promised us in Christ "the kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven," under the sceptre of the Son of God (Dan. vii. 29, R.V.).

Lord Rosebery, on the other hand, is not aware, as far as we know, of our Israelitish origin, or, if he knows of it, gives no credit to the fact. But he avows its cardinal truths since he declared on the occasion in question that it was our nation's "heritage" and responsibility to see that the world becomes Anglo-Saxon! Being a far-sighted statesman, he sees that this is the destiny of our wonderful race. But if he were a student of the Word of God, he would know that the future which he foresees for his native land is none other than that God Himself, who cannot err and cannot lie, declared, in the oracles of truth, should be reserved to His chosen people Israel, but to no other. If our clergy and learned ones would only compare the Bible with the Times, they surely must see (unless they be blind?) that the nation which fulfils both the prophetic function and the actual history of our nation must be one and the same race, and that race lost Ephraim?

The man who has these lofty ideas of our nation's greatness, and of her duty in regard to the outward world, has yet joined himself to the party who would obliterate the Anglo-Saxon influence in Ireland, and substitute for it that of the Irish Celtic. For all that, says the Times, "Lord Rosebery is penetrated with a deep and ingrained sense of the historic greatness of the Empire. He is struck by the magnitude of its area, by the numbers of its population, by the wealth of its material resources, by the gravity of its responsibilities, and the immensity of its destinies." He takes thus broad views of public questions, and is raised far above those whose object in political life is to catch votes, and to look after the third reading of party measures, to prolong their ministerial lives! That was a fine Israelitish point in Lord Rosebery's speech in which he declared that foreign nations have awakened, too late, to the importance of colonial possessions. But why "too late"? Because they find that "almost all the most desirable lands upon the globe have been appropriated, and we are the men in possession.

This argument we have over and over used in these pages to prove our Israelitish origin, and to show that after us there can be no coming Israel. Because we have seized upon, not almost, but all, the desolate heritages, "at prairie value," as Lord Rosebery said, and erected on them splendid cities like Melbourne and Sydney. These we did not find "ready for us in the bush"! We built them, and there they stand to prove that we have taken the "desolations" of the earth, and made them into smiling gardens of the Lord, blossoming like the rose, according to the prophecies (Isa. xxxv. 1, 2, xlix. 8, R.V.).

Lord Rosebery is just one of those instruments of the Lord's choice who bring confusion upon those who stand up to oppose Him. The Prime Minister, when out of office, was all for the surrender and evacuation of Egypt. Lord Rosebery, his chosen Minister for Foreign Affairs, wiser than he, compels him to stand by Egypt, and refuses to let him give up an inch of it! The Prime Minister has no heart for Uganda; but Lord Rosebery, his Foreign Minister, resolves to hold it, and he does! So Lord Rosebery, with some pleasantry, at the banquet felt he was watched by the Lord Chancellor; but in spite of Lord Herschell's presence, he gave utterance to the words we have quoted, which can mean only universal domination, or at least the expansion of British influence and interests—everywhere! It is the duty, he tells us, of a British statesman to provide for the requirements of our unborn posterity—the generations yet to come; to whose advent his lordship looks forward, like a real Israelite; our nation being trustees, he adds, for them. We append for our readers' perusal a portion of this remarkable speech. It is an important one at the present juncture, and should make us content that if it is God's will to give us a Gladstonian Government, He has at least, in mercy, put Lord Rosebery at its Foreign Office!

Digitized by Google

Lord Rosebery said:—

Since 1868 the Empire has been growing by leaps and bounds. That is, perhaps, not a process which everybody witnesses with unmixed satisfaction. It is not always viewed with unmixed satisfaction in circles outside these islands. There are two schools who view with some apprehension the growth of our Empire. The first is composed of those nations who, coming somewhat late into the field, find that Great Britain has some of the best plots already marked out. (Laughter.) To those nations I will say that they must remember that our colonies were taken—to use a well-known expression—at prairie value (laughter), and that we have made them what they are. We may claim that whatever lands other nations may have touched and rejected, and we have cultivated and improved, are fairly parts of our Empire, which we may claim to possess by an indisputable title. (Hear, hear.) But there is another ground on which the extension of our Empire is greatly attacked, and the attack comes from a quarter nearer home. It is said that our Empire is already large enough, and does not need extension. That would be true enough if the world were elastic, but, unfortunately, it is not elastic, and we are engaged at the present moment, in the language of mining, in "pegging out claims for the future." (Laughter.) We have to consider not what we want now, but what we shall want in the future. (Hear, hear.) We have to consider what countries must be developed, either by ourselves or some other nation, and we have to remember that it is part of our responsibility and heritage to take care that the world, as far as it can be moulded by us, shall receive the Anglo-Saxon and not another character. (Hear, hear.) I think that we, as we struggle in our parties about questions which are relatively small, should remember that the task of the statesman is not merely with the present but with the future, and that the energies of politicians should not be exhausted by the mere third readings of various Bills. (Hear, hear.) We have to look forward beyond the chatter of platforms and the passions of party to the future of the race of which we are at present the trustees, and we should, in my opinion, grossly fail in the task that has been laid upon us did we shrink from responsibilities and decline to take our share in a partition of the world which we have not forced on, but which has been forced upon us. (Hear, hear.) In the moulding of such sentiments as these you of the Colonial Institute have had a prominent part, and there is not one here present, be he a pioneer, settler, or one who has come later into the field, who will not drink with gladness the toast which I now propose. (Cheers.)

Lord Knutsford's speech on the same occasion was also a memorable one, with a true (blind) Identity ring about it, and we have much pleasure in asking our friends to study it, as it contains much which, coming from such a source, an ex-Secretary of State for the Colonies, deserves marked consideration.

Lord Knutsford gave the toast of "The United Empire"—an Empire, he said, so vast in extent that it covered some nine millions of square miles, and containing a population of over 320 millions—an Empire built up by conquest, by cession, by annexation, and settlement, and, principally owing to those various modes of acquisition, containing a variety of races, religions, nationalities, laws, constitutions, and languages unparalleled in the history of any Empire, ancient or modern. (Cheers.) He knew nothing more remarkable in the long, and to us happy, reign of her Majesty than during that reign the enormous extension, not only of the area of the Empire, but of its population, its resources, and general development of trade and commerce. He would ask them to consider two continents in different hemispheres of the globe. Compare Canada in 1837, with its sparse population, its restricted trade, its grievances against the mother country, and its internal difficulties, with the great and peaceful Dominion of Canada, created in 1867, with its increasing population, enormous trade, and with the great railway running across the continent connecting the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, and opening up all the resources of the Western territories. And then let them turn to Australia, where, he thought, if anything, the progress had been even greater, whether one considered the population, the trade, or the general power and wealth of that continent. Why, it was now just 50 years ago since Mr. Lowe landed at Melbourne on his way to Sydney, and found there 100 huts on the site of which now stand the stately and beautiful edifices of the city of Melbourne. It was rather less than fifty years ago since Mr. Lowe was appointed by the Government to be a member of the Legislative Council, the only Council then throughout all Australia—the parent, he might say, of the great and powerful Legislative Assemblies on that continent. And they must not forget India, with her teeming population of over 200 millions, with her different native princes, laws, and constitutions. They of the mother country had a right to be proud of the Empire, but their brothers and fellow-subjects in the colonies had an equal, nay, a greater right to be proud of the wealth and prosperity which by their statesmanship and ability they had secured for themselves and their posterity. It had been the duty, forced upon them by necessity, of various Governments from time to time, and for various causes, to extend the dominions of her Majesty either by annexation or protection, or by declaring spheres of influence. But he would venture to say that in very few cases, if any—he was inclined to say in none—had the motive cause of those extensions been the mere desire to enlarge the boundaries of the Empire. (Cheers.) The Empire had been felt to be big enough, and, if he might say so with bated breath, it was sometimes difficult enough to manage; and he was certain that those extensions had not been in any case from the pure desire of enlargement. It might be some consolation to those few gentlemen who were opposed to the extension of the Empire at any time to remember that this had, at all events, provided a larger area for emigration. And it not only provided a larger field for trade, because trade always followed the flag, but it provided a greater security for trade, because in those places there was no chance of trade being hampered by hostile tariffs. (Cheers.) There was a time within the memory of most present when there was a want of interest and sympathy in the colonies, and when even leading men thought and talked of the separation of the colonies from the mother country with a light heart. Those times had passed away. (Cheers.) There could be no question of the interest and sympathy felt in the colonies, and as the colonies had grown up in power and wealth, they had begun to observe that a united Empire was as important to the mother country as to the colonies. The mother country with her colonies commanded the respect and admiration of all foreign nations who had not been so happy in their colonization. If we could continue to command and to secure the attachment and confidence of our colonies, we could give the very best guarantee to the world for the maintenance of peace, and also for the development of trade and commerce. (Cheers.)

Reading the above, let Israel praise the Lord and bless His holy name for His faithfulness and truth to Israel, His chosen ones. What He promised to Abraham our forefather, He verily has fulfilled to us, his afterseed, Lord Rosebery and Lord Knutsford being our witnesses!

Digitized by Google

NATIONAL DANGER, AND A FEW OF ITS LESSONS.

A Sermon Preached by the Rev. Denis Hanan, D.D.

"Joseph is without doubt rent in pieces."—Gen. xxxvii. 33.

(First Lesson, Third Sunday in Lent.)

The man to whom God had given the name "Israel," a prince with God, was stricken with a terrible woe. He had before him the blood-stained evidence that Joseph, his beloved son, was dead. All the high hopes which he had centered in him were blasted, and the dull sad sense of bereavement overwhelmed him. Joseph was dead, nay more, "rent in pieces," devoured by an evil beast, and he was denied the last sorrowful comfort of laying his body with those of his kindred. Joseph was dead; and the birthright of promise, which Israel so valued, would never have development in the son of his love, who had already, apparently, shown evidence of being a faithful inheritor of the Abrahamic blessings. No multitudinous seed should spring from him, no company of nations should be his descendants, no peoples of the earth should be blessed by him. His brethren should never now recognize the superiority of Rachael's son, or bow down to him, and he, his father, would go down to his son to the grave mourning. But Joseph was not dead; the heir of the birthright was but being fitted to exercise the functions of his office. God had sent him before "to preserve life." The bitter sorrow was overruled for good. The treachery that caused Israel to despair, but worked the accomplishment of the purpose of God, and before he died, Israel saw his son and blessed him, and also acknowledged the guidance of God, who fed him all his life long, and who redeemed him from all evil.

The experience of Israel has been constantly reproduced in the history of his descendants. Joseph's experience has been repeated in the history of his heirs, and they have had to confess again and again, "O God, we have heard with our ears, and our fathers have told us what work thou didst in their days, in the times of old." "For they got not the land in possession by their own sword, neither did their own arm save them: but Thy right hand and Thine arm, and the light of Thy countenance, because Thou hadst a favour unto them" (Psalm xliv.). As Jacob, before the close of his pilgrimage, acknowledged the care of God: as Judah in her after worship recounted her need and her restoration, so we, to whom the oracles of God have now been delivered, make use of these words in our united public worship, for we, even in modern times, have had great national redemption. But suitable as the reminder and acknowledgment is at all times, there have been periods of national anxiety when the words have been accentuated with a direct and a deeper meaning. And we remind one another, when we remind our God, that the deliverances of the past prove that the Lord's hand is not shortened that it cannot save, and that now, as of old, He works and rules.

There is always a difficulty in discerning God's providential care at the period of any great national crisis, or of family or personal trouble. Faith must sustain at all times, it is afterwards that the path is seen to have been carefully laid down. It was necessary that Joseph should have been lost, in order that he should obtain power. It was necessary that Judah should go into captivity in order that she should be purged from idolatry. And although there were faithful servants of God who suffered with those whose acts caused the chastisement—who, many of them, died seeing no deliverance—yet an absolutely necessary work was being wrought upon the people as a whole. Faith alone enabled these suffering servants to endure and to encourage their descendants. But their faith was not misplaced, and God's purpose worked, until in the one case Joseph saved his brethren from famine, and in the other case Judah was restored, in order that the Messiah should be born in Bethlehem.

So also we know that there were faithful Christian Jews, who shared in the untold woes of the dispersion when Jerusalem was destroyed by Titus. And there have been faithful members of the Church, who because of their faithfulness have suffered the loss of all things. It is when we look back over the page of history that we can see why it was necessary that the Levitical worship should cease, and Jerusalem and its temple be overthrown; and why it was necessary that the faith should have been witnessed to by the blood of martyrs.

Similarly, whenever national advance in civilization or in civilizing power has taken place, it has been built upon the anxieties, the losses, the sufferings, and the death of many. The law of progress that governs our world of sin and trouble is not set aside for any. Faith must ever sustain, when it seems to our short-sighted vision that "all things are against us." But that exercise of faith is made for us comparatively easy, when we remember that it was through the bitterness of the cross that the King of glory attained the crown. In this also He was made in all things like unto His brethren. He knows our trials. It is well and wise when anxiety press upon us, to look back upon the way by which God has led His chosen nation. For this purpose the greater part of the historical Scriptures were written, and the records of the deliverances wrought in the time of old have been preserved. If the trouble is personal or local, we ought to remember that the small is contained in the great, and that the great whole is influenced by its parts: when the nation is guided, then each unit in the nation is not overlooked or neglected.

If the trouble is national, we, the units, have to remind ourselves of previous guardianship, and of the purposes that are yet future, and to trust, and therefore to pray for their accomplishment: for national disobedience must produce chastisement and delay and loss, while national obedience will bring joy and peace, and the blessings attendant upon a fulfilled mission. The trust in national guidance will produce individual effort, and this effort will have its share in producing the final outcome.

At this time, in this land, we are in sore anxiety. For some purpose which we cannot fathom, the foes of our British Fatherland and of our faith seem to be in the ascendant. The disintegration of our national power must be the result of a measure which would give this country over into the hands of men who are disloyal to the Crown and hostile to the Church. Men, who, as said by one who knew them, "Desired to march through rapine to the dismemberment of the Empire." Our civil and religious liberties, and, it may be in many cases, our lives, are endangered by the proposed disruption of the constitutional union under which they have hitherto been preserved.

The action of political party rule is powerless to avert the danger from us, and loss to the Empire. Party aims blind many patriotic men, and there are those who would sell their brethren into slavery to-day as of old in order that their jealousy and their greed might be indulged. Have we any reason to believe that faction will not be permitted to work out our Empire's ruin, and that ultramontane efforts aided by Protestant jealousies will not be permitted to overthrow our national witness to the faith?

Digitized by Google

If, as of old, we could say that deliverance will come not by our own power, nor our own arm, but by God's right hand, and the light of His countenance, because He has a favour unto us—a favour not because of our national or personal merits, but because of a covenant promise and position; then, indeed, we would have a cause for hope and a basis for faith which will nerve our efforts, and enable us to help forward the triumph which unaided we could not obtain.

Thus it is that pressing national anxieties give a practical and very actual interest to the question—Does Holy Scripture make any mention of the British Empire, or of any Empire similar to ours, possessing its peculiar characteristics, at this particular time of the world's age?

We find predictions that have been absolutely and historically fulfilled. The Babylonian, the Medo-Persian, the Grecian, and the Roman Empires have risen and played their part in the drama of the world's history. They all have been in contact with the seed of Abraham and the land of promise, and they have as foretold passed away. The Ottoman power, the people of the Prince that should come, has risen and ravaged and stung us with scorpion's stings, and entered into the holy mountain, as foretold; and that once dreaded power is now sick unto death. The final enemy who is to come up against the mountains of Israel, the power foretold by name, even the prince of Rosh, Moscow, and Tobolsk (Rosh, Meshek, and Tubal), is year by year making itself more evident. But what of the greatest Empire of all, before which all the empires of the past dwindle into insignificance, and which, while separate from them, has grown as from a stone to a mountain size? Did no seer foresee its rise and its destiny? Is God's Word silent as to its existence and its future, or is it also to pass away as the dust of the summer threshing-floor?

To answer this question we must read the Scriptures intelligently, and, as a whole, in the light of modern circumstances, and any knowledge that we may be able to obtain ought not to be neglected. As in the case of Joseph, he had a predicted destiny to fulfil, and therefore he was not permitted to be slain. As in the case of Judah, she had a predicted destiny to fulfil, and her restoration was certain: so in the case of the witness that is to be borne to the faithfulness of God in the latter days, if we can learn the destiny and the predicted place and purpose of the final Empire, then we may know that it cannot be destroyed, and the knowledge will enable us to be, in measure, the honoured instruments in warding off a threatened woe. If we neglect the prophecies, and fail to read the signs of the times, we may well lose heart, and think that as Babylon and Persia and Greece and Rome have passed away, so also may our Empire, and with it our own and our children's liberties. But when perceiving our place in the divine purposes, we shall be able to work and to pray, and to overcome.

A great purpose has been mapped out by divine wisdom. The redemption wrought by the Lord Jesus Christ, the King of Israel, while far reaching to the aid of all mankind, has also wrought a national redemption. The land of promise is not ever to be trodden down by the non-Abrahamic peoples, and, when the Gentiles cease to tread it down, then there is to come to this world, as it were, "life from the dead." The well-marked times have nearly run their course, and modern circumstances point to an early development. On the one hand we see the predicted great Empire of Russia persecuting the Tribe of Judah and desiring to obtain possession of the Holy Land. On the other side we see the greater Empire, our own, claiming the right to protect the land and willing to aid Judah to return. Now, both these final Empires are foretold. The evidence of this is within our reach, but this is not the time to enter into it. If our Empire apostatizes, or is disintegrated because of being weakened at its very centre, then Russia can do as she desires, and a Mongol race can rise, a fifth Gentile power, to tread down Jerusalem. But it is not God's purpose that this should take place. The final Empire is to overcome, and therefore we are to overcome, and every weapon formed against us must fail, our national progress and witness to true Christianity cannot be overthrown, and although false statesmanship may work loss and sorrow for a time, the wrath of man will, as so often before, be caused to work out the great purpose, and the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ will be established over Jerusalem and the world through the instrumentality of the final Empire which His providence has formed, cut out, and caused to grow, until through it, through our instrumentality, the world will be blessed in Him. Joseph, the heir, is yet alive; he has not been, and will not be, "rent in pieces." Therefore, let us take heart, let us put forth every effort—first, by an intelligent and interested study of Holy Scripture, to ascertain for ourselves whether we have a place in prophecy, and what that place is? Secondly, to pray for deliverance and for the accomplishment of that work which the final Empire is to accomplish. Thirdly, to remember that above all personal, or national, or imperial hopes, deliverances, or possibilities, we must consider the honour and the purpose of the King of kings and Lord of lords, the coming of whose kingdom and glory ought to be our first desire. And, lastly, to thank God that every effort that we make—aye, and every suffering we endure—when endeavouring to maintain truth and justice, religion and piety, amongst us for all generations, will be but steps towards the great consummation when the kingdoms of this world will be the kingdoms of the Lord and of His anointed One; when the world's Saviour and Israel's Redeemer will see of the travail of His soul and be satisfied. "O Lord, we pray Thee, raise up Thy great power and come among us, and with great might succour us, that whereas through our sins and wickedness we are sore let and hindered in running the race that is set before us, Thy bountiful grace and mercy may speedily help and deliver us, through the satisfaction of Thy Son our Lord; to whom with Thee and the Holy Ghost be honour and glory, world without end. Amen."

ONE WAY OF MEASURING THE EMPIRE.

AT a meeting held in connection with the Tyneside Geographical Society, Sir M. E. Grant Duff made some very interesting remarks, which included a new method of stating the vast dimensions of the British Empire. The usual way of doing this is to say that it contains a certain number of millions of square miles. But this does not convey much idea of its enormous mass. Grant Duff's plan seems to be a better one, although it is a little more roundabout, and perhaps a little more difficult to remember than the square mile enigma. We take the following extract from his speech:—

"When he was on his way home from India he passed through Italy, and a gentleman, in the course of conversation, said to him, 'What is the size of this province you have been governing?' to which he replied, 'Well, it is a little larger than Italy, including the islands.' Madras was but one province, and not by any means the largest province in India. The part of British India which we governed directly, putting aside that which we governed through native rulers, might be put, now that Upper Burmah had been annexed, as something like one million square miles. But they might take that great country of India and put it down upon Western Australia, and even then it would barely, if at all, extend beyond the limits of that one colony of Western Australia. (Hear, hear.) Then, when they had put aside Western, they had other colonies in Australia, in relation to which Western Australia was only about one-third in size. Then they might take the whole of Australia and put it down upon the dominions which Her Majesty ruled over in North America and the whole of Australia would stand upon those dominions in the same relation as the cup which he held in his hand bore to its saucer. When they had done all this there remained about forty colonies ranging from small possessions like Gibraltar to countries like New Zealand, about the size of England and Wales, and to South Africa, where they might drop New Zealands about and not be able to find them. (Laughter.) That illustration he, then Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, used in 1880. It was quite true then, but when he came back six years afterwards, he found that in the meantime a process of annexation—peaceful annexation he might say—(hear, hear)—had been going on in the most astounding way, adding he knew not how many square miles."

Digitized by Google

THE PSALMS.

By F. C. P.

PART I.

PERHAPS nothing is more necessary than to remind those who are considering the question of the British nation being Israel that the first and best book to be studied is the Bible. If enquirers always "searched the Scriptures," probably a great many more would believe in Our Identity, and, at all events, they would have so many questions cleared up for them that they would have prepared themselves to believe.

If everyone really read the Bible it would be unnecessary to draw attention, as we are constantly obliged to do, to the distinction between Israel and Judah, and the difference of the fate of these two Houses; or to everyone who reads the Prophets with close attention it would not be necessary to point out the fact that Israel must be somewhere, and must be restored one day. They might fail to see the marks of Israel in England, but they could not fail to see that both Israel and Judah are to repent—to be united—and to be restored to their own land. Again, by searching the Scriptures humbly and prayerfully we must become aware that there are great blessings attached to Israel, and that it must be a privilege to belong to a nation chosen by God, and always the object of His unceasing care. If we are not all able to allow that the English are that nation, it is strange if any can still ask Cui bono? or think there is no good in belonging to such a specially favoured people.

It occurred to me to search one book—the Psalms—and see what allusions they contained to the history of the chosen people. In about half there are distinct references to Israel; sometimes merely a title as "the God of Jacob." Sometimes the whole Psalm is devoted to repeating their history, as Psa. lxxviii.; or, as in Psa. xliv., their present circumstances of distress are recorded in words which have a prophetical meaning, probably unconscious to the writer. See verses 11, 13, 14: "Thou hast scattered us among the heathen." "Thou makest us a reproach to our neighbours" —"a byword among the heathen," which applied to the whole House of Israel at one time, and now is specially applicable to the Jews.

Non-believers in Our Identity will tell us it is natural the Psalms should be full of Israel because the authors were Israelites writing in Israel and for Israelites. But here again the question confronts us, Is the Bible, which is a book for the whole world, to have its greater portion taken up with the history of a people who have been allowed to disappear utterly? Is it even reasonable that we should be required to study the history of a few thousands of people living in a country not much bigger than Wales? Having disappeared, why are we to concern ourselves with their wars and conquests, and their repeated sins which have brought upon them the punishment of extinction? They become a mere piece of ancient history fit only for students, not important enough for the general reader, who would find more to reward him among the Greeks and Romans, for even the fact that they were specially favoured by God and watched over by Him has not preserved them from destruction! Their psalms remain a monument of beauty and lyrical poetry, but how are we to believe in their inspiration if it can be proved that the seed which "He will establish for ever" (lxxxix 4) has disappeared as a nation, leaving only one tribe rejected, scorned, and despised? The Identity of the British with Israel answers these questions. When we grasp the fact that this small race was chosen by God, destined by Him to spread over the world, to become a great nation and a company of nations, to be His witness in the world and the means of preaching the Gospel to all the earth, then we see the reason why the beginnings of its history should be recorded with such care both as a valuable testimony to its past, and as affording the marks by which it shall be recognised in "the latter days." Then a book like the Psalms, with its countless allusions to "Israel," becomes not only a solace and comfort for the individual Christian, but a national book for the English race—one that shall remind us, when we are crying "out of the depths" of our own individual sorrow, misery, or affliction, that we belong to "His inheritance," and that He will never forget His covenant or forsake His people.

The title "God of Jacob," or "God of Israel," which occurs 23 times in the Psalms, has a depressing effect when it merely reminds us of a man, the greater portion of whose seed has disappeared altogether, and the small remainder wandering without a home or country; but when we think of Jacob as our forefather, "God of Jacob" becomes the title of a very personal God—one to whom we belong, not because we have believed in Him or chosen Him, but because He first chose us. "Holy One of Israel" is used three times, in each place distinctly referring to Jehovah as the God of the Israelites, therefore to non-believers having merely an historical interest. It is only Anglo-Israelites who can feel the title is just as applicable now when used in Britain or America as it was of old when used in Canaan.

Another point that ought to strike us in the Psalms is that the Israelites are spoken of 31 times as "Thy," "His," or "My people." Who can believe that after these 31 reiterations these people are utterly lost? How doubly clear does Psa. lxxxv. become to Anglo-Israelites? "Thou hast forgiven the iniquity of Thy people. . . . Wilt Thou be angry with us for ever? . . . Wilt Thou not revive us again that Thy people may rejoice in Thee?" The whole Psalm becomes possessive. It belongs to us, it applies to our condition in the past and in the present. It is no longer the history of a typical and banished race requiring to be spiritualized in order to be made applicable to the Christian of the present day. It is not, of course, intended to imply that the whole of the Psalms are addressed specially or literally to Israelites. There are many which are of an entirely personal character without any reference to nationality, such, for instance, as the long Psa. cxix., which contains the supplication of an individual with repeated promises to keep God's commandments, testimonies, and statutes. It is the personal communing of a soul with God, but has no national characteristics. It is only intended to point out that the allusions to Israel are so intimate and numerous as to make the book a really national one for Anglo-Israelites, apart from its spiritual value to every individual soul.

Digitized by Google

(To be continued.)

"PESSIMISM" DURING THE WEEK OF UNIVERSAL PRAYER.

On Wednesday, January 4th, 1893, during the "Week of Prayer," held at Clifton, the subject set out as "topics of prayer," and as the foundation of an address by the Rev. W. J. Morgan, a Nonconforming minister, was to this effect:—

"NATIONS AND THEIR RULERS.

"Prayer that all earthly rulers may acknowledge their responsibility to the Kings of kings; that all persecutions of Christians may be stayed; that anarchy, oppression, and slavery may cease; that drunkenness, impurity, and gambling may be put away; that the opium traffic may be speedily abolished; that trade disputes may yield to truth and righteousness; that the 'making haste to be rich' and the love of luxury may be arrested; and that God's Day may be nationally honoured (1 Tim. ii. 1—4; Psa. lxvii.; Rom. xiii. 1—7)."

There was depression and sadness in every line of the above! whereas, in respect to several other days of the week the subjects called for "praise and thanksgiving," there was nothing apparently to thank God for in regard to "the nations and their rulers." The speaker painted the colours in the darkest hues. The governments of the world and the nations thereof, he said, were steeped in atheism and godlessness, and the topics of the day, as described above, called only for prayer, unmingled with praise. Wherever we looked at home or abroad, the existence of God in the government of the world was ignored, Christianity was persecuted and frowned on, anarchy was threatening in all lands, oppression and the slave trade were ruining Africa, and our own country was liberating the slave with one hand while pouring the curse of strong drink in the shape of rum, brandy, and gin among the sable masses of Africa, to the ruin of body and soul. There were also the sellers of this poison, those who were making fortunes by the sale of the drink. "Drunkenness, impurity, and gambling" were rife everywhere at home, and the opium question was still flourishing in India, to the ruin of China, and also of many of our Indian fellow subjects. Trade disputes, which made no reference to God's dominion in the world, but only to man's effort to grow rich for selfish purposes, all these things, said the speaker, told of an atheistic spirit abroad which did not acknowledge God's existence but only man's purpose to live without Him. God's day, on the other hand, was being dishonoured abroad everywhere, and at home increasingly so.

Mr. Morgan having made good his object and shown that men here and elsewhere are endeavouring to put God utterly aside, and live and die without Him, left the matter thus, as if there was really nothing on the other side to urge, and no grounds existed for praise or gratitude to God on part of our own nation for blessings we are enjoying that are the gifts of His grace leading us nationally to repentance. We hardly think this is just. It drew from a Presbyterian minister present the remark made in private afterwards that the address was that of a "pessimist"—one who took only the sad and depressing side of matters, forgetting the blessings God has given us without stint for Christ's sake.

We are quite ready to admit to the full that Israel is a degenerate race—always apt to start aside like a broken bow and to forget the Lord who bought them. The disease, as Mr. Morgan described it, of all the world, is "ungodliness," a determined effort of rebellious man, including the Israelite man, to get rid of God and rule or enjoy the world without Him. This, of course, is a losing game for all who so strive to wage war against their Creator. God is stronger than man, and He may be trusted to bring to confusion every effort to set Him aside or to dethrone Him. The remedy for the ungodliness and atheism of the day is not the realization of the disease by those who are blinded by it, but the discovery and adoption of the remedy God has Himself prescribed whereby men may be persuaded that God is and that the Lord He is God. That remedy is described in Isa. xliii. 8—12 and xliv. 8, R.V. God there appeals to a miracle as great—nay, greater than any the Lord Jesus Christ performed, to prove that He was the Son of God. The Lord raised dead men, such as Lazarus, to prove that He was God the Son, and God appeals to His power in raising to political life a dead and lost nation, such as that described in Ezek. xxxvii. 1—15, to prove that He is God. "Pring forth," He says, "the blind people that have eyes and the deaf that have ears (blind Israel and deaf Judah). Let all the nations be gathered, and let the peoples be assembled. Who among them can declare this and show us former things? Let them bring their witnesses and say, 'It is truth.' Ye are My witnesses, saith the Lord, and My servants whom I have chosen, that ye may know and believe Me and understand that I am He. Before Me there was no God formed, neither shall there be after Me. I, even I, am Jehovah, and besides Me there is no Saviour. I have declared, I have saved, I have showed, and there was no strange God among you; therefore ye are My witnesses, saith the Lord, that (or, and) I am God." Here, then, is God's remedy for the world's atheism and ungodliness. Let them go and consider the past history of Israel, and see how He has raised up the lost nation of Ephraim. The stupendous miracle of the restoration and resurrection to life of a defunct nation in literal accordance with prophecy is proof of God's existence, and that He is ruling and guiding the nations of the world. Let this miracle be realized, and henceforth there can be no more ungodliness or atheism among men.

The Bible, then, becomes God's Word—a living God's living Word. Henceforth men will believe and worship Him, adore and bless Him. This remedy the clergy and ministers of our day refuse to recognize, and decline to believe. They consider it beneath contempt, and yet the pages of prophecy regarding it are open before them, and the facts of its fulfilment are the current history of the day.

Digitized by Google

Our Lord Jesus Christ came to fulfil these promises and predictions, seeing that "He was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made to the fathers" (Rom. xv. 8, R.V.). Our Identity facts are not opposed to the doctrines of grace and faith in Christ. They rather support and uphold them, since we know that Israel's restoration and resurrection from the dead are needed to carry on God's purpose of mercy towards the world. For Israel, risen from the grave, are to be God's witnesses for Christ. They and they alone are to "blossom and bud and fill the face of the world with fruit"; they are to "go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," and "in their seed all nations, families, and kindreds of the earth" are to be blessed (Isa. xliii. 9—12, lxi. 9; Mark xvi. 14; Gen. xxii. 17, xxviii. 14; Acts iii. 25). Let Israel praise the Lord for the consolation.

A SYDNEY CONTROVERSY ON OUR IDENTITY.

A SYDNEY paper, The Australian Record, of November and December last, contains quite an animated discussion in respect to Our Identity. Our two opponents, one a clergyman, we are told, commenced the attack under the names of "Colin Clout" and "James Gilbertson," our champion in defence being Mr. C. S. F. Chatfield, of Sydney. We cannot admire Colin Clout's style, which is rather of the abusive than the argumentative order, and J. Gilbertson pays scant respect to the Scriptures, but attacks our views apparently on the general grounds of ethnic difficulties.

A Mr. Zachary P. Pocock intervened in the correspondence in a sense favourable to our views. We reproduce some of the letters as they appeared, but purposely omit some of Colin Clout's disparaging remarks respecting the authors of the "Handbook." These are not arguments, but only unjust abuse. The correspondence began thus:—

Dr. Lumby is of opinion that the Anglo-Israelite theory "does harm because the devout . . . . often grasp at such an idea, and by their . . . . clinging thereto bring ridicule upon the rest of their faith, and are also led away from a reasonable and earnest study of the Word of God into fanciful interpretations whereby they strive to support their erroneous ideas," and the applying of such a text as Ezek. xvii. 22 to the Princess Tea Tephi seems to me to come at all events very near to falling under such condemnation. With all due respect to those who treat the Bible as the Cabalists did—making the meaning of their text square with their previously formed theories—it does not help on the spread of the Gospel of Christ.

COLIN CLOUT.

Australian Record, Nov. 5, 1892.

To him replied our champion, C. S. F. Chatfield, on November 12:—

COLIN CLOUT AND BRITISH-ISRAEL TRUTH.

SIR,—Will you oblige me by forwarding to your correspondent, Colin Clout (who, I think, is a clerk in holy orders) the accompanying book, "British-Israel Truth" (to be had from Messrs. Turner and Henderson), and I request that he will compare statements made by the authors with the Bible. As a believer that the British people are the Ten-tribed House of Israel, I will not refer him to Sharon Turner or any secular writer, but refer him to Moses and the prophets. I have no wish to cause your correspondent to enter into a controversy; I only request that he will publish in your columns his candid opinion after the perusal of the above-mentioned book.

I will ask Colin Clout through your paper three questions: (1) Where are the descendants of Joseph's sons, Ephraim and Manasseh? Gen. xlviii. 19, (R.V.), "Manasseh to become a great people, Ephraim to become a multitude of nations." (2) When and where did the two tribes separate and become one a great people, the other a nation and a company of nations?

Our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ (Matt. xxi. 43, R.V.) told the Jews (the Tribe of Judah) that the kingdom of God should be taken from them and given to a nation (not a Church) bringing forth the fruits thereof. I ask Colin Clout what nation in these last or latter days has the kingdom of God, or, in other words, is doing God's work on earth? 1 Chron. v. 2, the birthright was Joseph's. I suppose John Bunyan was one of the most persecuted men of his day, and our Church is not blameless in the matter; but now who outside of the Bible saints is more frequently mentioned from the pulpit. "Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hast Thou ordained praise."

I am, yours, etc.,
C. S. F. CHATFIELD.

Colin Clout's reply is decidedly objectionable. Regarding the "Handbook," he favoured the Sydney public with his opinion, thus:—

I cannot say that I have never read a more absurd book. . . . "British-Israel Truth" is written by men who can boast of the initials M.A., D.D., and F.R.C.S. Reversing a well-known title, this book might be called "Assumptions without Philosophy." If we divide it into two parts—religious and secular—the former part rests on the assumption that the word "Israel" throughout the Bible refers to the Ten Tribes only. Anybody can test the value of this assumption by finding, with the help of a Concordance, the passages where the word occurs in the New Testament. (A comical paragraph occurs on page 148, where the word "Israel," which in every other place, in defiance of reason, is said to apply only to the Ten Tribes, is twisted to mean not the Ten Tribes, and not the whole nation, but the Two-tribed Judah exclusively!)

In the secular portion the assumptions are numerous, the rule apparently being to devote the least space to the points which most need proof. The Rev. "Oxonian," M.A., who principally deals with this part of the subject, can hardly have attended either the history or the logic classes at Oxford, while his philology is worthy of "Alice in Wonderland."

[Reading the above, one doubts if C. Clout ever opened the "Handbook"? He is contradicted by pp. 9—32 and other portions of the work where the name Israel is admitted to belong to the Jews as well as to the Ten Tribes.—Editor.]

Colin Clout proceeds:—

This secular part of the book shows plainly how people who, I suppose, are not destitute of common sense as regards ordinary matters, can abandon that common sense when once they are possessed with a dominating idea. They can print on one page the sentence, "A chain of evidence is no stronger than its weakest link," and then on other pages rely on links of thread in the proof of the main points of their arguments. To use another simile, their proof is like an inverted pyramid—an enormous conclusion resting on the slightest of bases. Sometimes it rests on no solid basis whatever, as in the case of the Princess Tea Tephi, which, as Mr. James Gilbertson has shown, is based on nothing but legend. Eight pages of this "Handbook" are devoted to that incident, and it will perhaps hardly be credited that, even if the legend be accepted as a certain truth, there is no one single fact in it to warrant the conclusion that Zedekiah's daughter ever set foot in Ireland. The "proof" supposes that she would be called an Egyptian princess, although the hypothesis is that she had only resided one or two years in Egypt; the rest is philology of the "Alice in Wonderland" order. More important points, such as the position of "Arsareth" are treated in a similar fashion.

Digitized by Google

But I have omitted to answer Mr. Chatfield's questions; let me do so now. (1) I do not know where the descendants of Ephraim and Manasseh now are. I agree with "British-Israel Truth" in thinking that probably they have become incorporated into other nations; but I think that those nations are most probably Asiatic. If the book be correct, these 27,000 exiles are the foundation of the Irish, Welsh, English, and American nations, and, if so, history and logic would make them also compose the Scandinavian peoples, the Germans and the Britons; also, as the book "proves"—in other words, assumes—that the Galatians were Israelites, the French and a few other nations would also be their descendants. In fact, after a few days' reading of "British-Israel Truth" one is inclined to parody Mark Twain and suggest that the controversy might be abbreviated by admitting that the whole world is descended from the Israelite race. (2) I don't believe that Ephraim and Manasseh are now separated; the prophecy in Gen. xlviii. is just as likely to refer to the period before the captivity as is the prophecy in ver. 13 of the next chapter. (3) Mr. Chatfield assumes that these are the "latter days"—which begs the question under discussion. Speaking as a Protestant, I should say that England was doing God's work best on earth, although bad is the best. If I were a Roman Catholic, I should probably say Ireland. Either answer would support Mr. Chatfield's theory, and he is quite welcome to whatever satisfaction he can derive from that fact. COLIN CLOUT.

Mr. Chatfield replied to Colin Clout on November 26th as follows:—

COLIN CLOUT AND ANGLO-ISRAELISM.

SIR,—I thank you for sending the book to your clerical correspondent, "Colin Clout." His remarks about the titles acquired by the authors are quite uncalled for. Probably their records in school, college, and university will bear favourable comparison with your correspondent's academic career. I asked your clerical correspondent's opinion of the present condition of the descendants of Joseph's sons, Ephraim and Manasseh. He admits that he does not know, but thinks they are Asiatic nations. Bible students know that God promised Abraham that his seed should be like the stars, and the sand on the seashore, for multitude (Gen. xxii. 17), and that his seed should possess the Gate of his enemies (Gen. xxii. 17). Jacob was promised by God that a "nation and a company of nations shall be of thee, and kings shall come out of thy loins." The birthright was Joseph's (1 Chron. v. 1, 2). Ephraim, his youngest son, was preferred before his elder brother Manasseh. Hear what God says (Jer. xxxi. 35, 36): "Thus saith the Lord which giveth the sun for a light by day and the ordinances of the moon and stars for a light by night which stilleth the sea when the waves thereof roar. If these ordinances depart from before Me, saith the Lord, then the seed of Israel also shall cease from being a nation before Me for ever (Jer. xxxi. 36). . . . I am a Father to Israel, and Ephraim is My firstborn in the seventh verse. For, thus saith the Lord, sing with gladness for Jacob and shout for the chief of the nations."

I ask your readers, Does any Asiatic nation correspond with Israel according to God's Word—that is, the Bible. I asked your clerical correspondent about Israel of the present day, anticipating that I should be furnished with valuable information from his acquired and accumulated store of knowledge as a gentleman, a scholar, and a divine. I call the attention of your readers to the fact that he has not given one quotation from the Bible to prove that he is right, or that those who believe in God's promises to Abraham are wrong. He quotes freely from Mr. Clemens' works, but he has not a single quotation from his Master's Book, and naturally I suppose he is better acquainted with Mark Twain than he is with the Bible. I am, &c.,

C. S. F. CHATFIELD.

Nov. 21, 1892

On Nov. 19th, Mr. Chatfield, replying to Mr. Gilbertson, stuck close to the Bible and Book of Common Prayer:—

To the Editor of the "Australian Record."

SIR,—I do not know whether your correspondent, James Gilbertson, is a clergyman or a layman. His reference to Professor Sayce about the captivity of Israel shows gross ignorance of the Bible narrative of that event (2 Kings xvii. 18, R.V.): "Therefore the Lord was very angry with Israel, and removed them out of His sight; there was none left but the tribe of Judah only." Does your correspondent think that the statement of any professor will be regarded by people who have an open Bible to refer to in all matters concerning God's ancient people? So complete was the captivity of the Ten-tribed House of Israel, that the king of Assyria ordered one of the priests to be sent to teach the people who were located in Samaria, after the Israelites had been taken away (2 Kings xvii. 27, R.V.).

Many persons attack those who believe that the British are the Ten-tribed House of Israel, but it is evident that they have not studied the subject. In the Book of Common Prayer the British people lay claim to all that God promised to Israel. In the Liturgy, hear the people throughout the empire say, "We have erred and strayed from Thy ways like lost sheep." Again, in the "Venite," we declare we are the Lord's people, "the people of His pasture, and the sheep of His hand," and that "our fathers grieved Him in the wilderness."

In the "Benedictus" we bless Jehovah, the "Lord God of Israel," in that "He hath visited and redeemed His people . . . . and to remember His holy covenant to perform the oath which he swore to our forefather Abraham." In the "Magnificat" we magnify the Lord—for what? That He, "remembering His mercy, hath holpen His servant Israel, as He promised to our forefathers Abraham and his seed for ever."

In the "Cantate" we sing unto the Lord for remembering His mercy and truth toward the House of Israel. In the "Nunc Dimittis" we declare that our eyes have seen His salvation, "which Thou hast prepared before the face of all people, to be a light to lighten the Gentiles, and to be the glory of Thy people Israel." In the "Jubilate" we say that "the Lord He is God," and "we are His people and the sheep of His pasture." Again in the "Te Deum," "O Lord, save Thy people and bless Thine heritage. Govern them and lift them up for ever." In the Litany we pray, "Spare Thy people whom Thou hast redeemed with Thy most precious blood." We repeat the words: "We have heard with our ears, and our fathers have declared unto us the noble works that Thou didst in their days, and in the old time before them." In the Communion Service the Ten Commandments given to Israel are rehearsed, and the prayer put up that these laws may be written in our hearts. This is not merely the prayer of individuals, but of the nation, from the national prayer book; and to whom but to Israel did the Lord promise to write His law in their hearts (Jer. xxxi. 31—33, R.V.)? The Epistle for the 25th Sunday after Trinity is enjoined to be read always on the Sunday next before Advent, and it is a notable Scripture (Jer. xxxiii. 5). It sets forth the King reigning, His name, the consequence of His rule, Judah saved, and Israel dwelling safely. In the Commination Service we openly and avowedly confess ourselves to be Israelites; the minister exhorts us thus: "Make you new hearts and a new spirit. Wherefore will ye die, O ye House of Israel." Then kneeling down we pray, "O, be favourable and gracious unto Zion, build Thou the walls of Jerusalem."

In the service of the 20th June, in the prayer for the Communion Service are these words, "And that these blessings may be continued to after ages; let there never be one wanting in her house to succeed her in the government of this United Kingdom" (Jer. xxxiii. 17—22; Psalm lxxxix. 20—37, R.V.), "that our posterity may see her children's children, and peace upon Israel. So we that are Thy people and sheep of Thy pasture shall give Thee thanks for ever, and will be always showing forth Thy praise from generation to generation." Are these terms, expressions, and sentiments, put into our mouths by the National Church, to be taken literally or spiritually? Let those who deny that the British people are the Lost Ten Tribes prove it by finding them. They must be in existence, for the Jews (or tribe of Judah) have to walk to them before they return to Palestine (Jer. iii. 18), "In those days the House of Judah shall walk to the House of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the North to the land that I gave for an inheritance unto your fathers."

Digitized by Google

I am, &c., C. S F. CHATFIELD.

Nov. 12th, 1892.

On Dec. 3 Mr. Pocock appeared on the scene with the following sensible remarks:—

ANGLO-ISRAELISM.

To the Editor of the "Australian Record."

Sir,—If we did not know that it was determined by the will and foreknowledge of God that the Ten Tribes of Israel should be lost until "the time of the end"—if we did not know the almost impossibility of rooting out the settled convictions of prejudicial minds, it would seem a marvellous fact that so many who read their Bibles are incapable of understanding what they read, and do not know that "no Scripture is of private interpretation; but holy men of old spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." Even the prophet Daniel, to whom the angel of God was sent with this message, "I am come to make thee understand what shall befall thy people in the latter days," had to confess: "I heard, but I understood not," and to his enquiring prayer for more light, he received this answer, "Go thy way Daniel, for the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end" (Dan. xii. 8, 9). But "the time of the end" is drawing near, when "many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased" (v. 4).

The late Bishop Titcomb was a determined opponent of what he called "This absurd theory," and set to work to prove its absurdity. With this intention, he examined the prophecies, and compared them with history, and to his surprise, when he had done so, he had to confess, "I do but enjoy as an inheritance of reason, what was before an unresolvable riddle."

I recommend all those who look upon "Anglo-Israelism" as it is called, as an absurd theory to set to work in an honest mind to disprove it—not by rash assertions and senseless abuse of those who can see what they cannot discern; but by a careful study of God's Word, and an intelligent consideration of the plain facts of history, and if, after this, they cannot "enjoy" this "inheritance of reason," and it still remains an "unresolvable riddle," I would remind them of Lord Coke's words, "Miserable is the state of that man, and worthy of pity, who has been persuaded before he was instructed, and now will not be instructed because he will not be persuaded," and recommend them to try again.

I cannot pursue this subject any further, at present, it would occupy more space than you can spare, and more time than I can now devote to it; but, as this important subject has been referred by some of your correspondents, I ask you to oblige me by inserting this letter, and if time and opportunity will permit me to do so, I will show, in a series of papers which I will read, that Jacob knew what he was saying when he prophesied of the two sons of Joseph, Manasseh and Ephraim, "He also (i.e., Manasseh) shall become a people, and shall be great; but truly his younger brother shall be greater than he, and his seed shall become a multitude of nations" (Gen. xlviii, 15—22), and I will show, what none of those, who, like Bishop Titcomb, "never lose an opportunity of throwing ridicule upon what they consider an absurdly extravagant theory," can do,—i.e., that the prophecy of Jacob has been fulfilled—that Manasseh has become "a people great," while Ephraim, "his younger brother," is "greater than he, and his seed" has become a multitude of nations."

The fact is, those who look for the Lost Tribes of Israel are like the detectives in search of an important letter. They searched in every room, cupboard, drawer, and box in the house. They took up carpets, ripped open bed-ticks, mattresses, seats of chairs, etc., etc., but never thought to examine the papers which lay scattered loosely on the writing table before their eyes, and not finding it, reported that it was not in the house. So those in search of Israel look amongst the Afghans, North American Indians, Persians, and everywhere where they are not, and never once turn their eyes to the two countries which show forth the fulfilment of prophecy as plain as the sun, moon, and stars in the sky.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

ZACHARY PEARCE POCOCK.

On Dec. 10 Collin Clout concluded the correspondence as far as we have seen it, with the following flippancy, involving a non sequitur in regard to the necessity for finding Americans as Ephraimites, if the British were Ephraimites. C. C. has completely missed the point and floundered in the following:—

Are there not enough incredibilities in Anglo-Israelism without adding to them the impossibility implied in the idea that the British nation belongs to the tribe of Ephraim, while the American nation—which is chiefly descended from the British—is said to belong to the tribe of Manasseh? The idea rests on one text which I have already shown to apply probably to the time of the kings of Israel. It needs no examination of the theory, but simply common sense, to see that if the British are Ephraimites, their American cousins must be Ephraimites too. When a religious man endeavours to prove that two and two make five, and interprets a text of Scripture so as to support his contention, he injures both the Scriptures and religion.

COLIN CLOUT.

DIVINE STRATEGY.

BY J. G. TAYLOR.

BISHOP HURST, when acting as the representative of the Methodist Episcopal Church of the United States at a conference in England, contributed his mite towards the ever-increasing volume of blind evidence. We cite a portion of his speech not only because it shows the essential unity of Britons and Americans, but because he alludes to the reason why England and her offspring have been placed so far apart on the surface of the globe. Why England, Scotland, and Ireland were permitted in the past to be politically severed will some day be made clear enough. Why the race has been severed so widely in a geographical sense is already clear. Britain, America, Australia, and the African Cape are only separated from each other in the way that the right wing of an army is separated from the left wing. They are like so many regiments planted at various posts by the great General for the purpose of attacking the devil's kingdom on all sides.

It is evident from Bishop Hurst's observations that the Church is recognising this vital truth. But people do not grow wise all at once, and consequently they do not yet see that the overthrow of Satan's dominion on earth is THE work of Israel; nor do they appear to have the faintest apprehension that, for a Gentile race to perform the task would be utterly subversive of Revelation. The Bishop said:—

"He had always loved England, not only because his ancestry was English, but he had never loved England so much as he had within the last six months. One had to go to the ends of the world to see what England was at home, to see what England had done in North America in her efforts to rescue a continent from French Jesuitism, and to the Antipodes of India to see that Indian continent rescued from French Jesuitism. The time was coming when the

Digitized by Google

250 millions of people, and 157 languages and dialects of India would be devoted to Christianity, and no other power could arrest that progress. One Englishman to-day controlled 500 natives, whom he governed politically and taught spiritually. He thanked God for all the open doors and for working hands. The day was coming, and it would come sooner than many of them anticipated, when our Protestant Christianity would cover the face of the whole land—from the Himalayas down to Ceylon. In America they were trying to solve the problems committed to them, and they always felt the pulsation of the brother's heart in their work and in their joy and in their sorrow. When he was a boy, he was brought up to think that England was their foe for the reason that in the last century they had a little trouble. (Laughter.) But never were more burning words spoken on the American side of the Atlantic than were spoken in the English Parliament by Pitt and Burke, and others in favour of leaving America alone. He was so glad to hear the English language once more. His children said to him in Fleet-street two or three days ago, 'Don't it seem strange to hear the English language again?' He was so glad to hear it! What did it mean? It meant religion and Anglo-Saxon Christianity. It meant the belting of the world with the zone of evangelical light. On board ship he spoke to the captain in German. He shook his head and said, 'I don't understand you.' He said to him, 'Why don't you have a man in your boat who speaks a little German?' The captain replied, 'What is your language?' He said, 'English.' 'Then,' said the captain, 'talk to me in your own language.' (Laughter.) The English was the leading language of the world. Wherever he had gone and in most of his travels it was the language of the teachers, the language that meant the English Bible, the English Gospel. It meant Wycliffe and Tyndal and their successors. It meant the world for Christ. (Applause.)

BRISTOL AND CLIFTON BRANCH OF THE BRITISH-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

DR. 1892. CR.

Receipts.	£	s.	d.	Expenditure.	£	s.	d.
To Balance from 1891	15	0	7½	By Hire of rooms ...	6	6	0
„ Subscriptions ...	8	2	6	„ Gratuity to attendant	0	5	0
„ Donations	0	17	6	„ Deputation expenses	1	8	11
„ Collections at meetings	5	6	0½	„ BANNERS OF ISRAEL	1	13	5
„ Subscriptions of two members to British-Israel Association	0	10	0	„ Printing...	3	14	9
				„ Postage	0	1	1
				„ Balance in hand Dec. 31, 1892 (including 10s. for British-Israel Association)	16	7	6
	£29	16	8		£29	16	8

Audited and found correct.
H. B. O. SAVILE, Clifton.
ARTHUR B. PROWSE, M.D., Hon. Treasurer.

ISRAEL'S SCRIPTURE AND PRAYER UNION.

THIS Union is now incorporated with the British-Israel Association, and has been put upon a better footing. Miss A. Wilson still continues Secretary, and will work under the direction of the General Secretary of the Association. The object is (1) to encourage regular and consecutive Bible reading; (2) to cultivate the habit of intercessory prayer.

The card of membership (which is nicely got up) contains suggestions to members with respect to the reading of the Scriptures, prayer, and praise. Two prayers, one of which may be used either publicly at family prayer, or privately in one's chamber, are printed for use; whilst upon the back is printed the consecutive daily readings for 1893. The subscription of membership is 6d. yearly. A post-card will be issued each year, and subjects for special intercession (as circumstances arise) will be sent to the members.

All communications should be addressed to "The Secretary Israel's Scripture and Prayer Union, British-Israel Association, 86, St. Martin's-lane, London, W.C." We should be very glad to receive the names of any who desire to join.

FREDERICK ASTON, General Secretary.

86, St. Martin's Lane, London, W.C., March 7, 1893.

Correspondence.

RIDICULE.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

SIR,—After eight years of sowing, "here a little, and there a little," I am thankful to see fruits of my labours. In connection with a Methodist Church in this town, there are a number of intelligent and thoughtful men who unhesitatingly avow that the Identity is the only key to the Word of God and intelligent way of construing the prophecies of the Old Testament, and the mission of Christ in the New. There are still a few individuals who ought to know better. I had an instance of this recently. After reading a paper on "Palestine, Past, Present, and Future," in which I showed that the history in the future would coincide with that portrayed in the prophecies, one gentleman questioned the geographical capabilities of Jerusalem ever becoming a centre of population and commercial importance. Another stated that the British need not glory in being the seed of Abraham, as Christ had called these very people the "seed of the devil." After cautioning this latter individual against the practice of ridiculing plain facts of the Bible, I read a letter I received from a Wesleyan minister on this topic, who is a firm believer in the Identity. It is as follows:—

"My dear Sir,—There are plenty of ministers and laymen in all parts of the country who ridicule the Identity; but as a rule they are persons who have not studied the subject, and, therefore, their opinions are not worth much. What the Bible says of the Ten Lost Tribes can only be applied to the British nation. The restoration of the Jews to the Holy Land, is plainly taught in the Bible, and in the judgment of some of the best expositors, a large portion of the Book of Zechariah has yet to be fulfilled, and will be fulfilled, notwithstanding the ridicule of either ministers or laymen. Ministers who indulge in ridicule on this subject are rather to be pitied than commended. The subject of the Identity is a big one, and many-sided, but you are on the right lines; therefore stick to your Bible and your themes."

Mr. Editor, this is only an extract from a very instructive letter which has often comforted me, and in the case I have named was remarkably instrumental in checking the flow of ridicule from those who professed to expound the Truth to others. If it be, in your opinion, of any service by way of encouragement to workers in the cause of the Identity, kindly insert it in the BANNER.

I am, yours faithfully,
W. T. W.

Crewe.

A.B., Birmingham.—You should purchase the monthly part of the BANNER OF ISRAEL, and then you would obtain what you require.

J. B.—All editions of the Anglo-Israel Almanack for 1893 are entirely out of print.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—We are requested to state that the address of Mrs. Thompson, of Bath, is now 13, Pulteney-street, Bath—not No. 27.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed "PHILO-ISRAEL," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION for the BANNER OF ISRAEL, in Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts. To any part of the United Kingdom, Canada, America, or Europe, in the postal union:—

	s. d.		s. d.
copy, including postage	.. 7 0	Tasmania ..	.. 7 0
New Zealand	.. 7 0	South Australia	.. 7 0
Cape Colony	.. 7 0	Queensland	.. 7 0
Victoria ..	.. 7 0	Natal ..	.. 7 0
Western Australia	.. 7 0	New South Wales	.. 7 0
Transvaal ..	.. 7 0	India ..	.. 7 0
		Ceylon, via Brindisi..	7 0

All Post Office Orders, Cheques, &c., should be crossed "City Bank, Ludgate-hill, to the ac. of ROBERT BANKS AND SON." They will then only be paid to our account.

READING CASES for holding the Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts, may be had, price 2s. Sent post free on receipt of Postal Order.

THE ANNUAL VOLUMES, bound in handsome blue oth, price 8s.

THE MONTHLY PARTS, in tinted wrapper, published the last day of each month, 6d.

THE GLASGOW ISRAELITE IDENTIFICATION ASSOCIATION

Have only one Meeting Place and that is St. JOHN'S CHAMBERS, 158, GEORGE ST. All communications to be addressed to J. D. REID, 184, Trongate, or to Secretary, T. D. CRAWFORD, c.o. J. D. REID.

THE GLASGOW ISRAELITE IDENTIFICATION ASSOCIATION

Meet every Sabbath Evening in St. John's Chambers, 158, George-st., at 6.30 p.m. Syllabus for month:—

March 19.—"The Vision of Dry Bones." Mr. J. D. REID.
„ 26.—"The Kingdom of Israel & Judah." Mr. ANDERSON.
April 3.—"Jeremiah xii." Mr. PALMER.
„ 10.—"Protest against the Higher Critics." Mr. ALSTON.
„ 17.—"Faithfulness of God." Mr. LOCKHEAD

ISRAEL

NEW BADGES.

Gold Brooches, 6/3 and 4/-
Scarf Pins, 4/9 and 3/9.
Pendants, large, 4/6; small, 2/9.
All Badges, Metal Gilt, 9d.

All Post Free. Applications, with Postal Order enclosed, to be sent to MRS. THOMPSON, 13, Pultney-st., Bath, or to MAJOR-GEN. CARLYLE BELL, St. Laurence Villa, Kingston-hill, Surrey.

The Future of Israel and Judah. Being the Discourses on the Lost Ten Tribes, from "How and When the World will End." By the Rev JOSEPH WILD, D.D. With portrait of Author. Price 2s.

The Lost Ten Tribes of Israel. By the Rev. JOSEPH WILD, D.D., Pastor of Bond-street Congregational Church, Toronto. Price 3s.

The Fulness of the Nations; or, the A B C of the Promises Given to the House of Israel Considered in Relation to the Second Advent. By Dr. H. ALDER-SMITH. Cloth gilt, price 5s.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-ct., Fleet-st., E.C

Mr. E. HINE'S PUBLICATIONS

Can be obtained of ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street London; or of ISAAC LOVELAND, Shoreham, Sevenoaks.

Lost Israel Found. One handsome Demy 8vo. vol., cloth, gilt edges. 3s. 6d., post 3s. 9d.
Forty-seven Identifications. 6d., post 7d
Coming Glories. 6d., by post 7d.
Flashes of Light. 6d., by post 7d.
Oxford Wrong 4d., by post 7d.
Anglo-Saxon Riddle. 2d., by post 2½d.
The Nation Warned, &c. 6d., by post 7d.

About half a million copies of these works have been sold.

"A WONDERFUL REMEDY."
"I WAS GIVEN UP BY ALL."
"SAVED FROM AN EARLY GRAVE."

Such are the words of grateful Patients relative to their CASES OF

CONSUMPTION

CURED BY THE TREATMENT OF

MR. GEO. T. CONGREVE.

Read his Book, "ON CONSUMPTION, &c." which may be had post free for ONE SHILLING from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.; or may be ordered of any Bookseller.

NOTE.—CONSULTATIONS FREE at Coombe Lodge, Peckham, on TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings only. No Charge except the usual charge for three weeks or six weeks' supply of medicine. All Patients should read the book first.

New Pamphlet Just Issued, price 3d., by post 3½d.; one dozen, post free, 3s.

Every Anglo-Israelite should read

ISRAEL A CHRISTIAN NATION AT THE PRESENT DAY.

BY COL. WM. CAREY. C.B.

London: ROBERT BANKS AND SON, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, or by order of any Bookseller.

NEW CATALOGUE of Works on Our Identity post free from R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

MASON'S KILLCORN

"AN EXCELLENT THING."

You need not suffer any longer from Corns, Warts or Bunions. "WONDERFUL KILLCORN" will cure you. This is what a man says:—"I have been nearly crippled with corns, but am now completely cured by your wonderful 'Killcorn.' I will answer all enquiries regarding same."—DANIEL MITCHELL, Post Office, Cardenden, Scotland. 1s. per bottle. Ask for MASON'S KILLCORN and don't have any other. Sold by all Chemists Patent Medicine Vendors, and at all stores or sent post free for 12 stamps by the Proprietor W. B. MASON 26 & 27, High Holborn, London, W.C., and 18, Guildford-street, Leeds.

THE WORLD'S CORN CURER

DR. ROOKE'S SOLAR ELIXIR AND ORIENTAL PILLS

DR. ROOKE'S SOLAR ELIXIR AND ORIENTAL PILLS effect marvellous cures. 50 years reputation. Sold everywhere. Pills in boxes 1/1½, 2/9, and 4/6 The Elixir in bottles 2/9, 4/6, and 11/-
Dr. ROOKE, SCARBOROUGH, ENGLAND.

TEETH.—£1 A FULL SET

ESKELL'S.—CELEBRATED MAKE, £2 2s. Warranted and fitted in one visit. No extractions needed. HALF A MILLION SETS already supplied The Nursing Record and Hospital World says: We recommend all who require Reliable and Good Teeth at a small cost to go to Messrs. ESKELL, 445, Strand (facing Charing Cross Station), and 58, Ludgate Hill, City, London. Also at 27, Western Road, Brighton, and 23, Mount Pleasant, Tunbridge Wells. Hours 9 till 7. Illustrated Pamphlets, explaining everything, free. Established 100 years.

"THE WORLD'S PROVED REMEDY FOR ALL CHEST DISEASES."

COUGH, ASTHMA,
CHRONIC BRONCHITIS,
INFLUENZA,

THERE IS NONE TO EQUAL IT.

Rev. F. E. HEAPE, of DERBY, in a recent letter, says: "Your Medicine always puts my lungs right, and drove out the terrible INFLUENZA last May."

This Medicine has been prepared for 65 years.

CONGREVE'S BALSAMIC ELIXIR.

In Bottles, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 22s., may be had of all Chemists and Medicine Vendors.

TEA! TEA! TEA!

FROM

INDIA, CEYLON, AND CHINA.

Best Quality and Best Value.

From 1/6 to 3/6 per lb. Samples Gratis.

Carriage Paid on Parcels of 6lbs. and upwards

Robinson & James,
42, TRINITY SQUARE, TOWER HILL
LONDON, E.C.

TOOTH-ACHE

CURED INSTANTLY BY

BUNTER'S NERVINE

Prevents Decay, Saves Extraction, Sleepless Nights Prevented.

Neuralgic Headaches and all Nerve Pains removed by BUNTER'S NERVINE. All Chemists, 1s. 1½d.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.
ELECTROPATHIC BELT
FOR
PARALYSIS

J. FULLER, Jun., Esq., Whiteparish, Salisbury, Wilts, writes:—"Since wearing your Electropathic Belt I am decidedly better and stronger. I have more confidence in myself, and the pain in my back is completely gone. Your Belt is truly wonderful."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.
Only Address,
52, OXFORD ST. LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)
Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

Digitized by Google

Important Notice to the Public, Chemists, and all

Retailers of Patent Medicines:

OWBRIDGE'S LUNG TONIC does not contain any Scheduled Poison, therefore ALL persons holding Patent Medicine Licences can sell it, and no one has a right to attach "Poison" labels to the bottles.

The known superiority of Owbridge's Lung Tonic as a safe and effective remedy for Coughs, Colds, or any Lung affection, makes it important the Public should know that no difficulty exists in obtaining it.

Sold everywhere at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., & 11s., by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors

The True and Divine Appointment for the Cure of Disease.
Send to
B. V. SCOTT, M.B.M.R.S.,
College of Health, 121, Kensington, Liverpool,
for his
VOICE OF NATURE TO THE INVALID,
Post free 5 stamps.

Thousands of incurables (so-called) have proved God's own means could save when others failed.

Rev. F. Harper says of Mr. Scott's book: "It is a library in itself, and free from quackery."

Rev. Lush says: "Mr. Scott's treatment is natural, safe, reasonable, and Scriptural."

Send for the Book at once.

PAGE WOODCOCK'S
WIND PILLS

It is astonishing how many people imagine they suffer from

HEART DISEASE

They experience a depressing feeling about the region of the heart, accompanied by an occasional stab of pain, nervous debility, loss of appetite and general depression. The fact is they suffer from

INDIGESTION, OR DYSPEPSIA.

The food, instead of being thoroughly digested, develops into Wind, and flies about the valves of the heart, causing the symptoms named. All who suffer in this way should at once take

Page Woodcock's Wind Pills,

A world-renowned remedy for all Stomach disorders.

All Sufferers from INDIGESTION, LIVER COMPLAINTS, WIND on the STOMACH, COSTIVENESS, SICK HEADACHE, HEARTBURN, NERVOUS DEBILITY, PALPITATION of the HEART, BILIOUSNESS, &c., should avail themselves of this most excellent medicine.

Of all Medicine Vendors, at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d., or Post Free for P.O. or Stamps, from PAGE WOODCOCK, Lincoln.

MASON'S EXTRACT OF HERBS FOR MAKING NON-INTOXICATING BEER

WE ALL REQUIRE SOMETHING TO DRINK

The finest, most refreshing and pleasantest beverage obtainable. One table-spoonful of this Extract makes one gallon of splendid Beer. Try it. A sample bottle, enough to make eight gallons, post free for 9 stamps.

NEWBALL & MASON, NOTTINGHAM.

AGENTS WANTED.

MASON'S WINE ESSENCES, non-intoxicating. For children's parties and social gatherings. A 6d. bottle will make one gall. of delicious wine. Post free 9 stamps, or a bottle of both Extract of Herbs and Wine Essence post free 15 stamps.

Just ready, 220 Large Post 8vo. pages, in clear, readable type, price 2s. 6d., limp cloth, gilt lettered, red edges, post free to any part of the world on receipt of postal remittance.

Nineteen Centuries Ago and NOW.

BY J. C. H. MEHL.

WITH BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH,

BY E. M. RUSH.

CONTENTS. — Biographical Sketch — Nineteen Centuries Ago and Now—Letter to the Editor of the Banner of Israel — A German's Views on Our Identity—The Church of England—The Woman Arrayed with the Sun (Rev. xii.)—"Remember the Sabbath Day to Keep It Holy" "Blessed are the Meek, for They Shall Inherit the Earth"—The Spirit of Negation, and the Spirit of Prayer—"Righteousness Exalteth a Nation"—"The Dispersion Among the Greeks"—The Protracted Era of Grace—"The Power of the Holy People"—The Present Aspect of the Kingdom of Heaven—One, and Yet Many—A Great Truth Slow in its Progress—A Two-fold Alienation—On Co-operating with the Divine Purpose—A Lamp Shining in a Dark Place (2 Pet. i. 19)—Was St. Patrick an Israelite, and Was He Aware of It?

LONDON:
ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.,
or by order of any Bookseller

THIRD EDITION NOW READY.
With 38 Additional Pages.

Paper Cover, Price 1s. nett., postage 2d. extra
Limp Boards, lettered, 1s. 6d., postage 2d. extra
Cloth boards, gilt lettered, thick toned paper 2s., postage 3d. extra.

BRITISH-ISRAEL TRUTH

A Handbook for Enquirers.

EDITED BY
REV. DENIS HANAN, M.A., D.D.,
AND
H. ALDER-SMITH, M.B., F.R.C.S

WITH A CHART AND MAP.

Published by the Authority of the BRITISH-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION. (Metropolitan, Provincial and Colonial.)

"British-Israel Truth." Edited by the Rev. Denis Hanan and H. Alder-Smith (R. Banks & Son.)—The sale of the first edition of this work, and the consequent issue of a second, shows that there is a growing interest in the study of the questions of the Israelitish origin of the English speaking people. Clever, interesting, pathetic, and showing considerable research, the volume has been a success and doubtless has made some converts - THE ROCK.

London: R. BANKS & SON Racquet-court. E.C.

Anglo-Israel; or, The Saxon Race Proved to be the Lost Tribes of Israel. By the REV. W. H. POOLE, D.D. Large royal 8vo., of 700 pages, with illustrations, price 10s. 6d.

R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The Geography of the Gates. With Map and six full-page, and one double-page, Illustrations, printed on plate paper. 208 pages, in handsome cloth, gilt. Second Edition, Price 2s. 6d.; post free for P.O.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific. 56 pages. Price 4d.; by post 4½d.

Are the English People the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel? An Inquiry Establishing the Identity of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 4d.; by post 4½d.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d.; by post 4½d. Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters."

Historical, Ethnic, and Philological Arguments in Proof of the British Identity with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel, Clearly and Simply Stated. Price 2d.; by post 2½d.

The History of the House of Israel: How They were Lost, and How They were Found. Told for the Children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fifth Edition.

Our Identity: What it is Not; What it is; and Our Obligations To-day in Respect to it. Price 2d.; a reduction for quantities.

Philo-Israel's Leaflets. 4 pages, crown 8vo. Price 1s. 6d. per 100, postage 2d. Assorted packets, 1s. 8d. 19 different subjects.

The British Constitution. Followed by "A NECESSARY CONSEQUENCE," by L. P. Price 3d., post free 3½d.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument, Proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100, postage 6d.

Anglo-Israelism. True, Not False. Being Philo-Israel's Reply to the Rev. Canon Bell's Pamphlet, "Anglo-Israelism: True or False?" Price 1d.; 6s. 6d. per 100. 16 pages, crown 8vo.

Egypt's Place in the Bible. By PHILO-ISRAEL. A Paper read before the Clerical and Lay Association at Bristol and Clifton. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100.

ROBERT BANKS AND SON, Racquet-ct., Fleet-st., E.C

Cloth boards. Second Edition.

ISRAEL: A THESIS.

By the Rev. DENIS HANAN, D.D.

Price 1s. 6d.; sent post free to any address on receipt of Postal Order.

London: Robert Banks & Son Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

PHOSPHORUS

A new process of preparing this necessary food for the Brain and Nervous System, invented by Mr. Samuel Birley, M.D., renders its therapeutic value superior to all the Phosphates, Hypophosphites, &c., usually prescribed. May be taken for years with perfect safety. Descriptive pamphlet free to enquirers (mentioning this paper), from

GORDON, MURRAY & Co., Ltd.,
10, ADAM STREET, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co. (Ltd.) 23, Paternoster-row. Wednesday MARCH 22, 1893.
All Rights Reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.

"And the Remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORN with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS OF THE EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XVII., No. 843. Entered at Stationer's Hall.] WEDNESDAY, MARCH 29, 1893. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

PAGE

Queensland's Petition 157
The Head and not the Tail even in Fruit Growing 158
British Federalism 159
The Psalms. By F. C. P. Part II. 161
Israel's Religious Growth. By E. Reep 162
The "Financial News" on Egyptian Progress 164
Some Remarks Concerning the Cuneiform Records of Sargon, the Assyrian. 164
Correspondence 165

QUEENSLAND'S PETITION.

IN the leading article of the BANNER, of February 1st last, No. 840, we drew attention to the extent of our Australian tropical colony of Queensland, and pointed out its immense size, how exactly it responded to its scriptural designation—a "wilderness" and a "desolate heritage"—now happily rapidly emerging out of the wilderness condition and becoming a prosperous garden of the Lord. So prosperous and so wealthy is this late wilderness becoming that the British colonists who are occupying this vast country are becoming discontented and urgent with the British Government to give them the relief they want.

We remind our readers of the vast size of this Australian colony. In the first place, it extends from latitude 12 deg. to about 29 deg. South, having 15 deg. of territory within the tropic of Capricorn with a tropical climate and vegetation. The whole colony contains 668,224 square miles; whereas Victoria has but 87,884, and New South Wales 309,175. It is as large as France, Germany, and Spain put together, and Brisbane, the seat of Government, is as far from the most northerly point of the colony as London is from Gibraltar, and it takes in time to travel between those points as long as it takes us to go from London to the Cape of Good Hope.

The colony thus is unwieldy in its proportions, and having three distinct climatic regions within it, is divided into three parts, which yet return members to the same Parliament in the South at Brisbane. The Northern portion sends 16 members to the Parliament, the centre 11, and the South, where there is the larger population, 45. But though there is this vast disproportion between the three parts of the colony as to representation, the Northern possessing 16 members only has a larger export trade than the Southern region where the seat of Government is situated. The export trade of the North last year was £2,626,222, and that of the South only £2,032,196. The central portion exported to the value of £2,232,446. The imports of the Southern portion, on the other hand, exceeded those of the Northern and central parts of the colony.

Under these circumstances the Northern and central portions of Queensland complain that the Southern colonists are indifferent and ignorant of their wants. They object to the power given to the Southern portion in Parliament to outvote them in all matters vital to Northern interests and demand relief of our Government by a division of the colony into three parts, North, Central, and South, "giving each a separate legislature with the ordinary powers of a self-governing colony to manage its own affairs."

Sir Charles Nicholson, who represented the North in the deputation which waited on the Marquis of Ripon on Friday, February 24th, at the Colonial Office, put the case thus:—

He said that Queensland comprised an enormous territory, the area of which was equal to that of three of the largest European kingdoms—France, Germany, and Spain—united. This large territory was now under a Government which was stationed at one of the extreme corners—at Brisbane—and consequently some portions were as far from the seat of the Legislature as Gibraltar was from London. The progress of the Northern and Central divisions had been very rapid, and there had been great complaint that the revenues of those districts had been unfairly appropriated for the purposes of the Southern division. An agitation had long existed for the purpose of establishing a distinct autonomy for each of these three great divisions; but the Southern division had always shown itself to be unwilling to surrender its prerogatives. It had, therefore, been resolved to call upon the Imperial Government to constitute this one great colony into three separate colonies. Representations had been made to Lord Ripon's predecessor on the subject, and there was perfect unanimity in the Central division as to the desirability of establishing separate autonomy for themselves.

The Marquis of Ripon, in view to the coming general elections in Queensland, declined to accede to the prayer of

Digitized by Google

Northern Queensland until the result were known, and wished to have the separation effected by the united consent of the three divisions of the colony. There is not much hope of that, and in the end we suppose the British Government will have to interfere and separate the parties. The result will be that the Northern portions of Western and Central Australia will also by-and-bye ask for similar independence, thus laying the foundations of what will indeed be a large "company of nations" in the vast Australian Island Continent in union with Great Britain, which is Israel.

An instance of the way in which the peculiar interests of North Queensland are injured by the unsympathetic action of the South is thus told by the Times :—

One of the most important sources of Northern prosperity has lately been threatened with absolute ruin by a decision happily rescinded in time of the Brisbane Parliament. The cultivation of sugar is the chief industry of the Eastern side of North Queensland, and it is one which experience has proved that white men are unable to follow in a tropical climate. The difficulty was met by the importation of Kanaka labour; and this importation was prohibited in 1890. The planters would have been utterly ruined but that the prohibition was withdrawn and replaced by enactments for the proper regulation of the traffic. It can hardly be matter for surprise if the inhabitants of the North are desirous to protect themselves against similar hasty legislation in the future, and to keep their own affairs in their own hands.

The North and Central portion of Queensland when separated from the South will doubtless increase in population, wealth, and commerce, and so the mighty continent rapidly filled up, will contain a vast population of British-Israelite subjects. These, with the Empire territories of the Canadian Dominion, and the provinces of the gigantic and growing South African States, will at last fulfil the prophecy of Gen. xlviii. 19, where (comparing the greatness of Manasseh with that of the British-Ephraimite Empire) God's Word said, "He (Manasseh) shall be great, but truly his younger brother (Ephraim) shall be greater than he; and his seed shall become a fulness (marg.) of nations." The fulfilment is taking place before our eyes, and we must as in duty bound praise the Lord.

THE HEAD AND NOT THE TAIL EVEN IN FRUIT GROWING.

THE Globe newspaper of Feb. 17, has a remarkable article on the "Prospects of the British Fruit Grower," which bears upon our subject, since it shows that although foreign nations have made great efforts to take from us our supremacy in the fruits of the ground, and in fruit growing especially, their efforts have not succeeded; and that where we have put forth the exertion needed, we have beaten them in the quality, and even in the quantity of the fruit required by our home population. It seems our climate is favourable to the gradual and slow growth of healthy fruit trees. The continental nations have what men deem a finer climate than ours. But it is too warm and exciting for fruit trees, and wears them out. Already the quantity of foreign imported fruit is decreasing here, and our own is taking its place. It is hoped that in time the English grower may invade the foreigner's lands, and by the excellence of our produce force the French grower to capitulate to Israel! Ours is the promise contained in Deut. xxviii. 4 and 11, and we may be sure that God, who promised to Israel, will perform to His people only. The following, we think, shows that this is true, our witness being the London Globe, and the writer, one who clearly knows nothing of Our Identity. He does not derive his inspiration from the Word of God, or from our national fulfilment of the same. The article was as follows:—

"PROSPECTS OF THE BRITISH FRUIT GROWER.

"'The Fruit Grower's Year Book' is the title of a useful publication by the Horticultural Press Agency; styled the 'official text-book of the fruit-growing movement.' It contains the following remarks on the prospect of fruit growing:—The future of the English fruit farmer is a rosy one, in spite of the depressed condition of agriculture. Already great progress has been made in the resuscitation of an important industry, and although the increase in the area devoted to orchards and fruit gardens during the past ten years is astonishing, yet with the extra produce of over 50,000 acres of land, the prices for choice fruit to-day are as firm and lucrative as ever. At last the consumer has awoke to the fact that one pound of home-grown apples, containing thrice the quantity of pure distilled water of nature, malic acid, and sugar are worth three pounds of the woody specimens sent into this country by the Continental growers, and that from a dietetic point of view it may be possible for cheap fruit in this sense to be even extravagantly dear. Even now, the effect of this enlightenment is evidenced from the fact that we see English fruit side by side with foreign fruit, realising 25 per cent. more than could be obtained for the produce of the foreign orchard. For years it has been pointed out that it was a national shame for choice English fruits to be superseded by the inferior consignments from abroad, and to-day it is satisfactory to find that the trade in imported fruits has received a serious check, to such an extent as to justify our prediction, uttered over ten years ago, that by the utilisation of improved systems of culture it would be possible to drive imported fruits (such, of course, as can be grown in this country) out of the English markets.

"WHY NOT EXPORT BRITISH FRUIT?

"But we are not satisfied at having checkmated the foreign fruit-grower. We want to go a step further. If we can diminish our imports, we can in time dispense with them altogether, and if we can dispense with them altogether, we can take up an offensive attitude, and invade the foreign markets; nay, more, it is but a question of time before the superior products of the English hothouse and fruit gardens will be seen on sale in the shops of Paris, Berlin, Rome, St. Petersburg, Vienna, Oporto, and Madrid. Take the question of apples, pears, tomatoes, and grapes. It is utterly absurd to compare any of these fruits raised in any other country with those grown in the United Kingdom. The apples of France, of Germany, and of Spain, are very low in the scale indeed. As to their tomatoes, they are simply bags of insipid seeds and skin, and what grapes on earth are comparable to the great, luscious, blood-enriching berries raised by the Scotch grape growers? Look at the pale, watery, flavourless French strawberry, and then grow ecstatic over the British Queen or Paxton, raised in Kent or Aberdeen. Why even with new potatoes, which are sent us by the thousands of tons from the Continental growers, they have literally nothing in their favour except their price, and it should not be forgotten that the red, clayey, indigestible samples from Malta, Spain, and Algiers, have, through their soapy indigestibility, been the means of prejudicing the consumer against new potatoes of any kind; whereas, as a matter of fact, the delicately flavoured Kentish Ashleaf is one of the most easily digested vegetable dainties known. The world is governed by quality. Choice products meet an insatiable demand all the world over, and there is no practical reason why we should not have quick steamers, special trains, and preferential railway rates for British products, which will enable us to compete successfully with our foreign competitors in their own markets. Of late years forced rhubarb from Leeds has been sent into the Paris market season after season, and it is folly not to take advantage of the finest fruit and market garden climate in the world, ensuring that slow and perfect growth which is so essential to perfect and mature both the fruits and their vegetable juices, and without which they would become as watery and flatulent as the products of the Continental growers. The English fruit grower will yet cross the Channel and invade the foreign markets by the medium of the pruning hook and the spade.

Digitized by Google

"RAPID DECAY OF AMERICAN ORCHARDS.

"Another prediction is being emphatically verified. The apple cannot stand short seasons and excessive heats. The trees are enervated in a few years in the hot, dry soils, and the fruit decreases in quantity and quality at the same time, and to such a serious extent that the markets are flooded with fruit that hardly pays cost of transit. It is impossible for American, Canadian, Tasmanian, or Australian fruit growers to keep up their supplies of high-grade apples or pears. Already, during the present season, the American shippers have lost thousands of pounds on their shipments of fruit—and why? Is it because, as some assert, too many cargoes of soft early apples were sent us? Not at all; the reason is indisputable—the American apple has decreased in quality, because the climate is too vigorous, if you will, and the trees are exhausted before their time. In one sense, to reproduce an original repetition, England is the home of the apple, and there is no apple comparable to the aromatic products of our English gardens.

"WE CHECK THE ADVANCE OF THE FRENCH GROWER.

"Although at one time we used to export the produce of our market gardens to Paris and other Continental markets, yet for many years of late the tables have been turned. We are not exporters, but importers. The foreign fruit growers flood our markets from one year's end to the other with inferior products by the thousand tons. The English industrial centres have been taken possession of by Frenchmen, not at the point of the bayonet, but by the medium of the pruning hook and the spade. In France one-half, or 20,000,000 of the population, are engaged in agriculture. It is rapidly becoming one vast orchard, and yet we have it on record that actually three-quarters of the exportations of fresh fruit from France are sent to England. Though a fact for serious consideration, yet as the result simply and solely of the fruit growing revival in England, the production of English fruit has increased to an extent sufficient at least to cause the French fruit imports into this country to decline. This is highly gratifying to English fruit farmers, and yet is only what we have predicted again and again—that if such restrictions which fetter the English grower are removed, we should, in a very short space of time, be enabled to drive such imported fruits as can be raised at home out of the English markets.

"STARTLING DECREASE IN FRENCH FRUIT IMPORTS.

"The check the French fruit growers have received is due solely to the improved system of culture we introduced. The point is very easy to prove. Before its introduction the English fruit growers had taken their instruction from an incompetent horticultural press. They had followed its advice, with the result that the industry not only declined, but almost became extinct. As the fruit of ten years' persistent and unceasing labour on behalf of this industry, what results have been secured? The statistics of imports into England from the French orchards furnish us with the most emphatic reply that can be given. They show:—1884, 21,824,616fr.; 1885, 21,267,747fr.; 1886, 20,346,856fr.; 1887,13,026,012fr.; 1888,13 919,482fr.; 1889,12,725,861fr. It was quite four or five years after the agitation was commenced before any result was apparent. But from that time till the present the home production has increased to a sufficient extent to silence the cavils even of the most bigoted opponents of the movement. In 1884 the export of French fruit was equal to 21,824,616fr. In 1889, or five years later, they had fallen to 12,725,861fr., so that we have reduced the annual imports into England by quite 6,000,000fr. Surely this must tend to improve the position of the English fruit grower."

BRITISH FEDERALISM.

At a meeting of the Royal Colonial Institute on Tuesday, Mr. F. P. de Labilliere read a paper on "British Federalism: its Rise and Progress." In the absence of the Marquis of Lorne, at Osborne, the chair was occupied by Sir F. Young.

Mr. de Labilliere, in his paper, began by tracing the growth of the idea of Imperial Federation, pointing out that Edmund Burke's sympathies were all in the direction of British federation, and quoting Adam Smith as one of the earliest believers in the idea. After the loss of the American colonies it became difficult to imagine a Federated Empire of Great Britain, but the idea, he showed, was revived in the colonies themselves—in Australia by Mr. Robert Lowe (Lord Sherbrooke), in New Zealand by Mr. Godley, in 1852, and in Canada by Mr. Joseph Howe, in 1854. A little later, one of the most distinguished public men of Canada, Mr. Edward Blake, advocated Imperial federation, on behalf of which, about the same time, Sir Julius Vogel, of New Zealand, also ably wrote. After noticing the efforts of "the General Associations for the Australian Colonies" in the same direction, the lecturer said that, besides the Republic of the United States, the Empires of Germany and Austria-Hungary had, during the last two decades, been furnishing to the world striking examples of the great power-making capabilities of federalism, even when contending with difficulties and drawbacks more serious than those arising out of the circumstances of our widespread Empire. The remarkable rise and growth of the federal constitution of Canada—a mere paper constitution, as were all those of the colonies not many years back—was by itself an object-lesson for the people of the Empire, sufficient to instruct them in the advantages of federation. A little reflection would bring home the conviction that one of two things was ultimately inevitable—federation or separation. In either we must follow the example of our kinsmen of the United States; and why should the alternative for us be that most undesireable one, which the foolish policy of last century—the reverse of our present colonial policy—forced upon the Americans? When even an American like Mr. Henry George told them that the United States might even now not be independent but for the attempt "to crush the American colonies into submission"—which he said had "the effect of splitting into two what might but for that have perhaps yet been one great confederated nation"—surely none but a few short-sighted, faint-hearted, or cross-grained Britishers could be found in any part of our United Empire to believe that there must ever be any necessity for its dismemberment. Mr. de Labilliere next briefly noticed the springing up of what he called that noxious negation of a policy, the idea of disintegration, a cry which was speedily answered by many voices in every British land, and alluded to other circumstances which gave an impetus to the movement, till the formation of the league for the special advocacy of Imperial federation, which, with its many branches in this country, a very strong one in Canada, and some in Australia, was doing much to familiarize the public mind of the Empire with the question. The league had done much, and might do more, to ripen the question for practical adoption by statesmen and Parliaments; but to father any particular scheme was, he strongly insisted, outside its proper functions, and would certainly impair its usefulness. It was evident, he further showed, that the question of intercolonial federation in Australia would for a time stop the way of Imperial federation. Any failure of the Australians to federate would retard the latter policy, for it would at first be thought, erroneously however, that colonies which could not federate among themselves could not federate with the Empire, although Imperial federation would require the surrender of far less by the provincial Governments, and could be worked either with or without intercolonial federation. The adoption of Australian federation would also delay Imperial federation, for their Australian brothers would have enough to do for a time in getting their federal institutions into working order. This done, Imperial federation would come to the front, and could be more easily arranged by four great responsible Governments in the Empire—those of the British Isles, Canada, Australia, and South Africa—than by the much larger number of Governments which, without intercolonial federation, would have to deal with the question.

Digitized by Google

Lord Playfair, who opened the discussion, said that there was no reason to be discouraged because the federation of our great Empire proceeded slowly, and though there was as yet no general demand for a paper constitution to unite all its parts. At present our Empire was still held together by ties which Burke described as "light as air though as strong as links of iron." These ties depended on the close affection which grew from common names, from kindred blood, from similar privileges, and from equal protection in times of danger. But even the tie of a mother and child was weakened by time, when interests became conflicting. They ought to discuss the question by repeated Imperial conferences in times of peace, so as to be ready if the pace was forced upon us by the dangers of a general war. Since 1813 no colony had felt the brunt or dangers of war. But dark clouds were gathering over all Europe, and no one could say how soon the lightning and thunder might prevail. (Hear, hear.) In such a tumult of the general atmosphere these clouds might roll over this country, and the need of protection at home might weaken our protection of the colonies. In such an event Canada could not prevent a hostile fleet from sailing up the St. Lawrence, and Australia, with its tiny fleet, could not defend her 8,800 miles of seaboard. What we offered by federation was that the defence of our great Empire in all its parts must be by a mutual protection of all its parts through the resources of all its parts. (Hear, hear.) This was scarcely realised by the colonies and possessions of the Crown. These during the reign of Queen Victoria had enlarged from a little more than one million square miles to about 8½ millions, and the English-speaking races in them had increased five-fold. But the revenue of the United Kingdom during that time had only increased 50 per cent., while that of the colonies had increased 500 per cent. (Cheers.) It was obvious that it was a fair claim for federation to ask the colonies to join with this country in securing for them the protection that they needed. England was prepared to take upon herself the lion's share of cost in any scheme. We knew how much England had benefited by her colonies, not materially only, but also morally. (Hear, hear.) The planting of our colonies by men of our race had done much to elevate the spirit of the English people, to inspire them with courage, and to broaden the character of our insular population. It would be a calamity to England, it would be a fatality to our colonies, if our Empire broke by a strain which England alone could not bear very long.

Mr. Bryce, M.P., said that, though no distinct step had been taken towards altering the political relations of Great Britain and her colonies, a new spirit had begun to breathe over her relations, and had found its way into the Colonial Office itself, which now, he was happy to say, was anxious to show the colonies that their interests were very near and dear to us. No one was now found, no speaker, no writer, to advocate, as might have been done 20 or 30 years ago, the separation of the colonies and the mother country. (Hear, hear.) A great deal had been done at home, but a great deal had to be done also in the colonies. They had to form and quicken opinion there, and to make the colonists feel it was their interest as much as ours that political connection should be maintained. He was afraid there still existed—he knew it existed in Canada—in some of our colonies an idea that the mother country was anxious to maintain political relations rather for her own sake than for theirs, and that the first thing we should do was to ask them to submit to some kind of control, and make some kind of contribution. ("No.") He hoped that idea was mistaken, but they had to disabuse the minds of the colonists of the idea. They had to show that we were not asking the colonies to surrender any of the control which they exercised over their institutions, nor to sacrifice their own self-government, nor to give up their own legislation or their local patriotism, which he believed to be a most valuable force in developing their own life. They were asking them to make that local patriotism to coincide, as he believed it ought to be compatible, with a more extended patriotism, which takes in the whole of the British race and the whole of the Queen's dominions, and they were asking them to enter into the still larger and greater life which the whole British race was capable of sustaining. Therefore, so far from asking the colonies to give up anything, they were tendering a part and a share in that great pan-Britannic progress which he believed had a future before it no less glorious than its past. Was there, however, any practical step which at present could be taken? He thought they must bear this in mind—that the difficulties were entirely new. The difficulties which the United States had to deal with, which Canada had to deal with, which the Australasian colonies had to deal with, were all far less than those which beset British Federationists when they sought to unite in a political permanent bond dominions so widely scattered as our Australian, North American, and South African colonies. Therefore they must, as Lord Playfair had said, expect the work to be a slow one, and he thought they ought to begin at the most practical point, and that was the question of common defence. That was the most urgent of all their needs. It was a need which he earnestly hoped might not be brought more forcibly home by the outbreak of a war, but it was a need which even in times of peace could be made intelligible both to the people of this country and of the colonies. It was also one which did not require any large initial expenditure. He was persuaded that if a beginning were made, if they could induce the great colonies to agree to some scheme under which a contribution should be made for the maintenance of a common fleet, and under which a corresponding control should be given to the colonies for the common safety, so that they should be entitled to feel it was their fleet as well as our fleet, he believed that very soon the disposition to contribute to what would be felt to be an object of such common interest would increase, and he did not believe that when a beginning had once been made they should find any sort of undue parsimony on the part of the colonies. In connection with the question of common defence they had a practical proposal before them, and he thought, considering how much progress had been made within the last 10 or 15 years, that it was not at all too sanguine to hope that before many years had passed, and perhaps even before Australian confederation had been accomplished, they might have laid the foundations of a system of that kind under which they might feel that a step for which posterity would be grateful to them had been taken of keeping together the noblest political fabric which the world had seen. (Cheers.)

Digitized by Google

Other gentlemen took part in the discussion, and at the close a vote of thanks was accorded to the lecturer for his paper.—Times, January 13, 1893 (Weekly Ed.)

THE PSALMS.

By F. C. P.

PART II.

(Continued from page 150.)

The Psalms have been divided into five books. The first of these, ending with Psa. xli., we find almost exclusively composed of Psalms of personal devotion, written by David. The exception is Psa. li., where the Kingdom of God is associated with Israel, and where the heathen are promised for an inheritance. Israelite allusions are found in Psa. xiv. 7, "When the Lord bringeth back the captivity of His people, Jacob shall rejoice, and Israel shall be glad." In Psa. xviii. 43, the promise is repeated that the heathen shall be given for an inheritance, and so God will show mercy to the seed of David for evermore. We cannot prove this text is true unless we show that Israel still exists in a blessed condition. Psa. xxii. 23 especially orders the seed of Jacob and Israel to glorify God. In laying claim to the privilege of being Israel we should never forget that that privilege brings also the responsibility of glorifying the Lord, and witnessing for Him. We are those to whom much is given, and therefore of whom much will be required. Psa. xxv., after a long personal prayer, ends with "Redeem Israel, O God, out of all his troubles." Psa. xxviii. concludes with "Save Thy people, and bless Thy inheritance." We have the right to pray to Him, because we are chosen to be "His people." Psa. xxix. is descriptive of the majesty of God, and concludes with "The Lord will give strength unto His people," which means literally Israel. If any still ask what is the good of being Israel, let them read Psa. xxxiii. 12, "Blessed . . . are the people whom He hath chosen for His own inheritance." The inspired Psalmist at least thought there was some "good" in belonging to Israel. The first book ends with saying, "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel from everlasting to everlasting (Psa. xli. 13).

The second book contains Psalms of a more national character, though it begins with two of personal feeling (Psa. xlii. and xliii.), which really ought not to have been divided. Psa. xliv. is an entirely Israelite Psalm, probably written on the occasion of some national disaster. It speaks of God's past mercies, "Because Thou hadst a favour unto them" (ver. 3); of His having "scattered us amongst the heathen" (ver. 11); and then turning from his strain of lamentation, the psalmist beseeches the Lord to awake, "Cast us not off for ever . . . redeem us for Thy mercies sake" (verses 23—26). Psa. xlvii. and xlviii. are two of those Psalms in which the spiritual kingdom of God is associated with a literal kingdom of Israel, but while fully recognising the spiritual meaning of Mount Zion, and the glories of the heavenly city of the great King, we must not lose sight of its literal interpretation, nor forget that "The joy of the whole earth is Mount Zion (Psa. xlviii. 2). Those who do not believe in Anglo-Israelism must give up the literal interpretation of many passages of Scripture, and if some of the Bible is to be interpreted literally and some figuratively, we weaken the whole book. Psa. liii. is almost an exact repetition of Psa. xiv., reminding us again that He will bring back the captivity of His people. Psa. lxvii. is the alternative, sung occasionally in our churches instead of the Nunc Dimittis. It is a song of praise by the people of Israel, and speaking of all Gentile people as "the nations." The result of blessing Israel will be that the ends of the earth will fear Him. Psa. lxviii. may also be called an entirely Israelite Psalm. The end of Psa. lxix. repeats once more that "God will save Zion," and that "the seed of His servants shall inherit it." Spiritualised this may mean all who serve the Lord, but literally it applies to Israelites, and literal interpretations are not to be neglected. Psa. lxxii. concludes the second book with specially blessing God as the God of Israel.

The third book begins with the assertion that God is good to Israel in Psa. lxxiii., but continues in the strain of personal lamentation. Psa. lxxiv. is a Psalm of national lamentation, beginning "O God, why hast Thou cast us off for ever? Why doth Thy anger smoke against the sheep of Thy pasture?" Shepherd of Israel is one of the titles of the Lord (Psa. lxxx. i.), and "sheep" always refers to His people Israel. In verse 20, God is reminded of His covenant, "Have respect unto the covenant." Psa. lxxv. and lxxvi. are of the character of national triumph, breathing the spirit of Israel throughout. Psa. lxxvii. is a Psalm of personal lamentation, where comfort is drawn from reflecting on what God has done for His people (vers. 15—20). The whole of Psa. lxxviii. recounts God's dealings with Israel. Verses 5 and 8 is an admonition every Anglo-Israelite parent ought to lay to heart, "That they should make them known to their children." In verse 52 the favourite simile of the "sheep" is used as applied to Israel. The conclusion is that "He chose David . . . to feed Jacob His people, and Israel His inheritance." We cannot dwell too often on the texts which speak of "His people," and "His inheritance, for each one of them is an assurance that the people of the Lord cannot disappear. Psa. lxxix. is also of the character of national lamentation, from "Thy people the sheep of Thy pasture," because "The heathen are come into Thy inheritance" (ver. 1 and 13).

Digitized by Google

Psa. lxxx. again a prayer of national humiliation, in which Israel is spoken of under the simile of a vine (vers. 8—16), "The branch that Thou madest strong for Thyself." Psa. lxxxi. changes the tone of lamentation to a national song of triumph, but in which, from the 5th verse, it is the Lord who speaks, "Hear, O My people." "My people would not hearken to My voice." "O that My people had hearkened unto Me." Psa. lxxxiii. is a prayer for revenge upon the enemies of Israel, because "They are confederate against Thee" (ver. 5), they wish to "cut them (Israel) off from being a nation." The psalmist prays that the enemies of Israel may be confounded, "That men may know that Thou, whose name alone is Jehovah, art the most High over all the earth" (ver. 18). This last verse gives the keynote to the importance of discovering Israel—viz, that men may know Jehovah, and may understand His wonderful scheme of blessing the world through Israel. Sometimes we hear that the authors of certain Psalms anathamatize their enemies in language which is not in accordance with the later teaching of the gospel, and that one like Psa. lxxxiii. is not "charitable." In a certain sense this is true, the gospel has revealed that God is love, but in an imprecatory Psalm like the lxxxiii., another meaning is conveyed to us if we cease to think of Israel as merely one among many races, and lift her to the proper position of the one God-chosen race, then we can become imbued with the psalmist's feeling, "They are confederate against Thee," then we can understand what it would be if the name of Israel were "no more in remembrance" (ver. 4). Then such verses as "So persecute them with Thy tempest," "Let them be confounded and troubled for ever," are no longer merely the exaggerated expressions of a patriot, but they are utterances of a man who is deeply imbued with the feeling that the inheritance of his God, and the people who are to be a witness in the earth for Him are endangered by the machinations of evil. Psa. lxxxv. begins, "Lord, Thou hast been favourable unto Thy land: Thou hast brought back the captivity of Jacob." From this past experience, the psalmist prays for a continuance of favour in words which have a personal and pathetic application to us British-Israel, and our brethren the Jews, "Wilt Thou be angry with us for ever? . . . Wilt Thou not revive us again: that Thy people may rejoice in Thee" (vers. 5, 6). We are indeed "revived," but we still await the day when Judah shall revive too, and when we shall all know it is because we are Israel "His people." Psa. lxxxvii. is entirely descriptive of Zion, and becomes very enigmatical if its meaning is to be only taken in a spiritual sense. It is preceded and followed by deeply personal Psalms, but Psa. lxxxix, with which the third book concludes, is very important from an Israelite point of view from the solemn reiteration of the covenant with David (vers. 3, 4; 20—37). In these verses we have the answer to those people who say that Israel, by her sins, has forfeited the favour and the blessing of God, "If they break My statutes, and keep not My commandments, then will I visit their transgression with the rod, and their iniquity with stripes; nevertheless My lovingkindness will I not utterly take from him, nor suffer My faithfulness to fail. My covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips." Here is a distinct promise, that in spite of sin, and notwithstanding transgression, God will not break His covenant with David.

(To be continued.)

THE Monthly Part of the BANNER OF ISRAEL for April is now ready.

ISRAEL'S RELIGIOUS GROWTH.

By E. REEP.

SINCE the days when St. Paul preached in the West as well as in the East spiritual warfare has distracted Israel. That the conflict does not grow less contentious has been recently demonstrated in the Daily Chronicle under the heading "Is Christianity Played Out?" From the too voluminous correspondence on the subject the one morsel of comfort to be elicited was the disclosure that religion is of vital interest to our race, and that it is in reality the axis on which our inner national life revolves. Notwithstanding it must be said we are an adulterous generation, perverted by a miserable incredulous doubt of every doctrine demanding faith in the natural government of the world by a Providence that is divine.

Happily our Heavenly Father does not vindicate His purposes towards humanity, nor reveal them to an unbelieving world without some reverent enquiry on the part of man. A moment's reflection tells us that were He to do so not only would the faith rooted in Christianity be played out, but our interest in living at all would be played out; just as it would to a child conscious from its birth of every incident of infancy, youth, maturity, and old age. Obviously the moral pleasure of seeking to know God and the righteousness of His laws is embodied in the effort to learn of Him, and of how He may be found.

Moreover, it is apparent that it was to assist this self-effort on the part of humankind that God made clearer to us by His Son the teaching of the Holy Ghost, which had only before, says the Epistle to the Hebrews, been spoken by angels. As Clement, of Rome, told the Corinthians, who were in all probability Israelite-Corinthians, "By Him are the eyes of our hearts opened; by Him our understanding rejoiceth in knowledge." When these words were written much dissension and sedition had crept in among the Christians at Corinth to the grief and dismay of Clement, who in his epistle appeals to them to consider their venerable and renowned name and how they in the past had contended for the brotherhood of the elect, and been sincere in considering themselves responsible for their neighbours' sins and in their kindness one to another. "All honour and enlargement," he says, as if addressing Israelites, "was given unto you; and so was fulfilled that which is written, 'My beloved did eat and drink, he was enlarged and waxed fat, and he kicked'" (Deut. xxxii. 15). "Hence had come emulation and envy, strife and lawlessness."

That the Church of Corinth was largely composed of Israelites appears still more certain from Clement's further Old Testament quotations—quotations that to a purely Gentile community would have been unintelligible. After the warning that all things are seen and heard by God, he writes: "Let us therefore come to Him with holiness of heart; loving our gracious and merciful Father who has made us to partake of His election.* For so it is written, 'When the Most High divided the nations, when He separated the sons of Adam, He set the bounds of the nations, according to the number of His angels (the children of Israel, Deut. xxxii. 8): His people Jacob became the portion of the Lord, and Israel the lot of His inheritance.'" "Wherefore we being the portion of the Holy One, let us do all those things that pertain unto holiness." And as if to further impress upon the Corinthian Christians their responsibilities as Israelites, Clement finishes his letter with the

* According to Bishop Lightfoot, Clement was a Jew.

Digitized by Google

reminder that God had chosen our Lord Jesus Christ to show forth His glory, majesty, and power, and, he adds, us by Him to be His peculiar people.

This epistle of Clement's, we learn from Eusebius, was considered of such importance, that it was publicly read for common benefit in most of the churches. That it was addressed to Israelites of the dispersion is to be almost positively inferred from its recognised resemblance to that written to the Hebrews, to whom the promises of the Old Testament covenant, whether of Israel or Judah, would at that period be no occult mystery.*

If variance and diversity of thought be, according to common opinion a sign that Christianity is played out, then it died very shortly after its birth. But do antithetical conditions even breathe of dissolution? On the contrary all experience goes to show that they vitalize and quicken our search after truth, which but for some crucial test being occasionally applied would become obscure in its meaning and to posterity a dead letter.

While Israel's religious growth was unfolding itself at Corinth, in Gaul Christianity was qualifying for the discipline of persecution. Crescens, the friend and fellow-labourer of St. Paul, is named by Eusebius as the founder of the faith among the Galli. Over these, as we know from Cæsar's Commentaries, the Druids exercised supreme authority. It was not, however, from them that proceeded the ferocious cruelty of inflicting every species of reproach and torture on the Christian converts. The religion practised by the Druids was, in its internal beliefs, too nearly related to Judaism to offer any obstinate resistance to the preaching of Christ, believing as they did in the immortality of the soul and the resurrection of the dead. It is also pretty certain that the Magian priesthood, whether located in Media, in Thrace, in Gaul or Britain, anticipated and looked for the revelation of One who was to purify the earth from oppression and iniquity, and thereby establish among men the reign of peace and justice. Hence in all probability the Druids rather welcomed the preaching of the Gospel than hindered it, a possibility that may account for the rapid foundation and growth of Christianity in Britain and Ireland. To these countries many converts must have fled from Gaul to escape the insults and horrors heaped upon them by the Romans. With the fugitives would go the substance contained in the epistles, that were interchanged between the churches of Asia, Phrygia, Corinth and other distant regions. Thus the faith spread and has been spreading ever since, despite derision, infidelity and every other obstacle that could be raised against it. For we may repeat now what Tertullian said of Christianity and of Christians fifteen hundred years ago—"We are like the grass, which grows the more luxuriantly the oftener it is mown."

Among the problems of our religious growth there is, perhaps, no assertion less assailed than the oft-made statement that our forefathers were indebted to priests of Rome for their first introduction to the knowledge of Christianity. The explanation of this singular delusion is probably to be found in the fact that all learning and teaching was centralized in monasteries in the early centuries of our era. Naturally, the Romish priests, as they became more and more firmly established in Britain, desired to impress upon the people the supremacy of their own Church, and we may readily believe that in time the people came to regard such teaching as genuine history. In no other way can we account for the ignorance that existed in the centuries following the arrival of Augustine and his monks as to the real parentage of the Christian Church in the British Isles.

As we examine history more closely we can perceive that even the priests themselves had no access to documents of any historic value. Reference to Gildas, the most ancient of British authors, shows this to be no mere conjecture. In writing his account of Britain, he admits that he is not following the writings and records of his country, since they had been consumed in the fires of the enemy or had been carried away by exiled countrymen to distant lands. Whether for lack of these records he was driven to quote the most salient portions of Israel's history from the Bible, it is impossible to say, but it is certain that he considered the history of the chosen people as one that supplied a family likeness to that of the people of Britain. The denunciations of the prophets are hurled with a sad intensity against the clergy; bishops, priests, clerks, are all regarded alike as alone worthy of the hard blows of words. "Britain," he says, "hath priests, but they are very unwise; very many ministers, but many of them impudent; clerks she hath, but certain of them are deceitful raveners; pastors that are wolves prepared for the slaughter of souls, for they provide not for the good of the common people, but covet for themselves, desiring ordination and preferment for filthy lucre's sake; instructing the laity, but showing, withal, most depraved examples, vices, and evil manners; looking on the poor and the weak with stern countenances, and reverencing the rich man without any respect of shame." Then mingled with all this we read, "Too far hath the iniquity of the House of Israel and the House of Judah prevailed. . . . And all nations shall understand that the House of Israel are led captive away for their offences, because they have forsaken Me."

The admirers of Gildas, and those who listened to him, doubtless took much the same views of the progress and influence of Christianity as many of the late correspondents of the Daily Chronicle. But time has shown that Christianity is neither arrested nor very much touched in its progress forward to accomplish God's schemes of redemption, however men may think or however content they may be to set aside its necessary power and grace. Israel in Britain would have been as spiritually stunted without it as she was in Palestine; there would have been no blossoming and budding and filling the world with fruit; no witnessing for God in all lands; no thirsting and hungering on the part of thousands to minister to every work of charity; no anti-slavery societies, no opposition to idolatry, no true devotion to the paths of duty and holiness, and no real love of God. By it the thorn has withered, and there has come up the fir-tree; and instead of the briar has come up the myrtle-tree; and by it Israel shall be to the Lord a name that shall not be cut off (Isa. lv.).

* Even in the time of Eusebius, it was understood that the first Epistle of Peter was addressed to the Hebrews of exiled Northern Israel.

THE PRESENT CRISIS AND IRELAND.—A new leaflet, by Miss Pringle (the authoress of "An Englishman, an Israelite"), will be ready on March 30. The title is "NO ROME RULE." It is written in the form of a conversation, and will be found exceedingly useful for distribution amongst the working classes at the present time. The price is 1s. per 100 nett; 1,000, carriage paid to any address in the United Kingdom, for 10s. The leaflet is strongly recommended by Miss Rush, of the Free Distribution Fund. Publishers: R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

THE "FINANCIAL NEWS" ON EGYPTIAN PROGRESS.

In the issue of February 15th the Financial News published a good article on Egyptian progress, into which statistics and financial considerations largely entered. The writer of that article describes as "wonderful" the results which have been produced in Egypt by the British occupation. And so indeed they are. The revenues of the country have been largely expanded in spite of large remissions of taxation; the condition of the Fellahin has been vastly improved and the country's resources have been developed as they never were developed before. All this is directly owing to British supervision and initiation and could never have taken place without it.

The French are, of course, filled with envy and resentment that such prosperity should have followed our occupation, and they are doing their best to get us out of the Nile Valley, even though the good fruits of our labours should suddenly cease to the irreparable injury of the Egyptian people.

But, says the Financial News, Egypt cannot safely be left alone to govern itself, and therefore we must abide there; and so long as the public peace and tranquility of Egypt is in danger by our departure, we must remain to preserve it. We stay and bless the country, and while we give that proof of our beneficent rule and control, we are bound to stay. The evidence that we are doing good to Egypt are the following facts and figures:—

The public accounts show that in 1892 the revenue realized was £E. 10,370.000, the expenditure reached £E. 9,595,000; surplus, after all deductions, £E. 768,000, or £787,200 British sterling money. The Budget estimate was thus largely exceeded, and that for the second time. In 1891 the surplus was £1,127,500. In 1892 there was a large reduction of taxation (£E. 254,000), hence the smaller surplus. One of the most satisfactory points showing the benefits of our rule is that in the last three years the burdens of the people have been reduced by £760,000 a year! The Corvée was abolished too, and that is estimated to be a remission of quite half a million sterling. More remission could have been given had not the French interposed and prevented it. They refuse to allow the sum of £672,000 obtained by "the conversion savings" in Egyptian finance to be spent on the reduction of taxation, and consequently the Fellahin are more heavily burdened than they ought to be. They have to thank the French for that.

Besides all this, the railways in Egypt are paying better now than in 1891. Last year the revenue reached the highest point as far as railways are concerned. The customs and indirect taxes also showed improvement, "pointing clearly to the growing prosperity of Egypt." The revenue assigned for the payment of the public debt to the Caisse de la Dette Publique exceeded by a million sterling the amount required to pay the interest. Such has been the prosperity of the country that the surplus revenue and special reserve funds arising from the conversion savings have reached the enormous sum of £3,472,000 in hand with the Government for the good of the country. The taxation this year is going to be reduced again by the sum of £E. 123,000, and, as the Financial News justly says, these results, it is idle to pretend, would have been accomplished had it not been for the British occupation, which, while benefiting the bondholders, has been in the best interests of the land of Egypt. This is impartial testimony to the benefit Israel has brought to the suffering land of Egypt. God has employed us to smite the country and then to heal it, and both processes have been in operation within the memory of the generation now existing (Isa. xix. 20—22). God has mercy in store for Egypt because the Egyptians were once kind to Israel and offered them a peaceful domicile for two or three centuries. He means then to bless the country and to constitute the inhabitants thereof—"His people" (Isa. xix. 25).

The outcries of the French are natural, but they cannot be attended to. We have a work to do in Egypt, being Israel, which God has entrusted to us, and do it we must and shall. We have to occupy it because it is a strategic land commanding our shortest, most direct road to India and Australasia. We cannot allow the French or other possible future enemies of our race to hold it, so as to impede our route through the Canal, from the Mediterranean to the Red Sea, and vice versâ. They show by their conduct now how they resent our success in Egypt, and that they desire nothing more than to oust us and so seize the Gate of the route to the East. But God has not favoured them in India, Canada, or the Mauritius, and we confidently expect that He will prevent their interference with our occupation of the valley of the Nile. To Him be all the praise!

SOME REMARKS CONCERNING THE CUNEIFORM RECORDS OF SARGON, THE ASSYRIAN.

By H. J. F.

PART I.

Upon the death of Tiglath-pileser II. in 727 B.C., Israel (who had already become subject to the King of Assyria in consequence of the death of Pekah, when Hoshea was placed over them by Tiglath-pileser as his vassal) indulged in a forlorn hope in common with her sister kingdoms, Phœnicia and Judah, and also of Egypt and Ethiopia, that they would now be able to throw off the yoke of "the Assyrian that came down like the wolf on the fold"; but Isaiah thereupon beseeches them, "Rejoice not thou, whole Palestina, because the rod of him that smote thee is broken, for out of the serpent's root shall come forth a cockatrice, and his fruit shall be a fiery flying serpent. . . . Howl, O gate; cry, O city; thou whole Palestina art dissolved, for there shall come from the North a smoke . . . ." (xiv. 29—31). Israel disregarded this warning, and we learn Shalmaneser, Tiglath-pileser's successor, "found conspiracy in Hoshea," for he had sent messengers to So, King of Egypt, and brought no present to the King of Assyria, as he had done year by year. Therefore the King of Assyria shut him up and bound him in prison" (2 Kings xvii. 4), and he is the last independent King of Israel we read about. "Then the King of Assyria came up throughout all the land and went up to Samaria and besieged it three years (ver. 5). In the ninth year of Hosea the King of Assyria took Samaria and carried Israel away into Assyria" (ver. 6). From the Biblical account just quoted it might be thought that the King of Assyria who "besieged Samaria" (ver. 5) was the same King of Assyria who "took Samaria" (ver. 6). Shalmaneser IV. is the first king alluded to, but in the ninth year of Hoshea he was no more, and Sargon reigned in his stead, as we learn from this king's monumental inscriptions excavated at Khors-abad. One of the first events recorded thereon runs: "In the beginning of my reign I besieged; I took by the help of the god Shamash, who gives me victory over my enemies, the city of Samaria; 27,280 of its inhabitants I carried away. I took fifty chariots for my own royal share. I took them (the captives) to Assyria, and put into their places people whom my hand had conquered. I set my officers and governors over them, and laid on them a tribute as on the Assyrians."

Digitized by Google

Verses 24 and 25 of the same chapter of the Book of Kings, after mentioning the places from which Sargon transplanted the people to replace those he transported, informs us the strangers were much alarmed at the lions which doubtless, owing to the recent disturbances had been suffered to increase (royal hunts having in the meantime been unavoidably suspended), appealed to the King of Assyria to send them one of the priests whom he had taken from the land in order to teach them the manner of the God of the land, to their ignorance of whom they attributed this ill omen. The result was "that they feared the Lord, and served their own gods after the manner of the nations from among whom they had been carried away," thus creating quite a conglomeration of religions; and it is not surprising that we read that the Jews, who prided themselves upon the purity of their worship, would have no dealings with the "Samaritans." There were a great many more of these foreigners settled in Samaria than those mentioned in the Bible.

(To be continued.)

Correspondence.

MR. JOHN ENNIS' LETTER TO MR. E. IRELAND.

(See page 140.)

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—I have again to thank you for your letter and publications, all of which I have read with much interest, and not a little edification. In the discussion of theological subjects I admire honest criticism; but I do not care much for what is termed "Theological hair-splitting." In the interpretation of the Bible I can see no necessity for any such theological practice. And hence when I can consistently take the teaching of the Bible in a literal sense, I do so; because I think it lacks true wisdom, and is a handling of the Word of God deceitfully, to explain the literal statements contained in the Bible relative to either persons or things by allegorizing them so as to suit our own fancy. And while I may not be able to explain all that I am taught in the Bible relative to the House of Israel, I believe that its future history is literally foretold, although it may be, as in Ezekiel's vision of the dry bones, figuratively expressed. However, after much consideration, it appears strange to me that I can find nothing in the New Testament relative to the House of Israel as such. If the House of Israel in Matt. x. 6 does not mean the Jews, how am I to reconcile the Divine commission with the fact that there was no gospel preached to the heathen world until after the day of Pentecost (Acts x. and xi.)? And, moreover, the Saviour commanded His apostles to "Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not" (Matt. x. 5). Consequently it seems plain that the Gospel was first preached to the Jewish people as the House of Israel (Rom. i. 16; Acts xiii. 46). Peter, on the day of Pentecost, preached to the Jews as the House of Israel (Acts ii. 22, 36, 39). And in Acts iii. 12 the apostle addressed the Jews as "Men of Israel," and tells them that while they "killed the Prince of life," "they were the children of the prophets and of the covenant which God made with their fathers, saying unto Abraham, And in thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed." And hence if the promise made to Abraham is fulfilled in the House of Judah as preached in the New Testament, it cannot be fulfilled in the House of Israel, then in an heathenish state, and therefore as such the preaching of Peter and Paul could not be applicable.

Stephen, in Acts vii. 37—42, addresses the Jews as the House of Israel. Paul does the same in Acts xiii. 16, 17, and in 2 Cor. xi. 22 the apostle calls himself both a Hebrew and Israelite, both being synonymous terms (Phil. iii. 5). Jesus was made manifest to Israel, and He addresses Nathanael as an Israelite. Jesus is also called a Jew and an Israelite (John i. 49; Matt. xxvii. 37—42). Nicodemus is called a Jew and a master in Israel (John iii. 10). Jesus, in Mark xii, 29, addresses the Jews as the House of Israel. John the Baptist preached to the Jews as Israelites (Luke i. 16, 54, 55, 68, 80, ii. 34), and showed them that natural descent from Abraham was not sufficient to justify them in God's sight (Luke iii. 6), language in no sense applicable to people in a heathenish state. Jesus came to His own (John i. 11), the Jews or Israelites (Matt. xv. 24), and they put Him to death. And He found no such faith as that of the centurion in Israel or the Jews.

I would be glad to know how I am to reconcile all these New Testament statements relative to the absolute oneness of the words Jews and Israelites with the statement in the BANNER OF ISRAEL—viz., "that there is no authority in the whole of the New Testament for applying the word Israel to anyone but the nation Israel."—Q. E. D.

I am, dear Sir, yours most respectfully,

JOHN ENNIS.

Knocktopher, Thomastown, Jan. 31st, 1893.

NOTES OF THE EDITOR THEREON.

We have been requested by Mr. Edmund Ireland to reply to the difficulties raised by Mr. John Ennis in the above letter respecting the alleged New Testament description of the Jews, as "The House of Israel." Before we do so we must notice the last few lines of the writer in which he states himself unable to reconcile the New Testament passages he refers to, "relative to the absolute oneness of the words Jews and Israelites, with a statement in THE BANNER OF ISRAEL—namely, that "There is no authority in the whole of the New Testament for applying the word Israel to anyone but the Nation Israel." The quotation appears at the foot of column 2, p. 268 of the BANNER of July 1st, 1891, No. 757, Vol. XV., in an article headed, "Literal versus Spiritual Israel." The words were not our words, nor those of any other Anglo-Israelite, but those of honest John C. Ryle, now Bishop of Liverpool, who is no believer in Our Identity, and certainly does not recognise any "House of Israel" at all, as existing to-day, outside the people we know as the Jews! We quoted his words to show that the good Bishop refused to spiritualize the name "Israel" to mean the Church of Christ, and declared that the word Israel in the New Testament meant "the Nation Israel, but not the Christian Church at all." We cannot be bound, however, by the Bishop's words in this matter, though as a matter of fact we do not see, if we adopt them, that they are far wrong, since the two "Houses" now existing are both "Houses of Israel," but are destined yet according to Ezek. xxxvii. 22 to become one nation, a nation of Israelites.

The whole of Mr. J. Ennis' difficulties turn on this. He does not distinguish the Houses. The New Testament plainly tells us that in St. Paul's days the two Houses were then existing in separation, and that a grand future was before them. Thus, in Heb. viii. 10—12, the apostle quoted Jer. xxxi. 30—34, and declared that God's New Testament, or covenant, was yet to be made with the two Houses—the House of Israel and the House of Judah—the representatives of the body of Israelites in fact, who came out of Egypt, and with whom also the Lord made the first Covenant or Testament in Sinai. The New Covenant was one the Lord Jesus Christ was to establish; and it was to be made and fulfilled in the Christian dispensation by Him. Here, then, is our first splendid instance of the New Testament distinction between the two Houses, showing that the House of Israel and the Jews are not the same body of persons, but two different nations, both being Israelites. Mr. Ennis labours under the erroneous idea that because the Jews are termed Israel, Israelites, and children of Israel in the New Testament, that therefore they were and are the only body of Israelites in the world. This is a cardinal error. There was, and is, a large body of Israel extant in the world, all of them Israelites nationally viewed, but not Jews. The Twelve Tribes were divided into two Houses, the one termed "The House of Israel" being the Ten-tribed House of Joseph, Isaac, or Ephraim, and also called "Israel"; and the other, also Israelites, but called the House of Judah or Jews. Hence it is true "that all the Jews were and are Israelites," and may be called Israel; but not all the Israelites were Jews. There was, and is, in short, a large body of Israelites somewhere, who are not Jews, but Israelites only. With them the New Testament does concern itself, but they are the main subject of notice in the BANNER OF ISRAEL.

Digitized by Google

But, says Mr. Ennis, our Saviour told His disciples not to go to "The Nations" (or Gentiles), nor to the Samaritan cities, but only to the lost sheep of the House of Israel—that is to the Jews; since "the Gospel was first preached to them, and there was no Gospel preached to the heathen world until after the Day of Pentecost" (Acts x. and xi.). Our Lord's command was that His disciples should preach "to the lost sheep of the House of Israel." The Jews were not lost sheep in His day or since; and they were never once addressed or termed "the House of Israel" in the New Testament from the beginning to end! This may be a great surprise to Mr. Ennis, but we mean to show him how perfunctory was the reading of his quotations, as made by him, and how wrong he is in his facts. First, did Peter on the Day of Pentecost preach to the Jews as "the House of Israel?" Acts ii. 22, 36, 39 are the authorities quoted by Mr. Ennis. In ver. 22 the House of Israel is not even mentioned! "The men of Israel" are; and the Jews were such! In ver. 36, St. Peter addressed "all the House of Israel," a copyright term describing the House of Ephraim, Joseph, or Israel, as Ezek. xxxvii. 16, and xi. 15, proves; but he said nothing about "the House of Israel; ver. 39 makes no mention of the name at all.

In Acts iii. 12, the apostle rightly addressed the Jews as "men of Israel." They were so. But that did not constitute the Jews "the House of Israel" or justify Mr. E. in saying St. Peter so described them?

In Acts vii. 37—42, Stephen did not, pace Mr. Ennis, address the Jews as "the House of Israel"? He said nothing about it in ver. 37; and in ver. 42 he quoted to the Jews a passage in Amos v. 25, 26 (a Prophet to Israel, see chap. i. 1) addressed to the Ten Tribes, and declaring God's intention to carry them captive beyond Damascus. Stephen quoted the passage and applied it to the Jews, but changed "Damascus" into "Babylon," to suit their case. He did not thus give the Jews Israel's name, but told them God had visited them with Israel's curse, by a like distant captivity; not beyond Damascus, but beyond Babylon.

St. Paul in Acts xiii. 16, 17, says nothing about "the House of Israel," as alleged, but describes the Jews as "the men" and "people of Israel" which they were!

In 2 Cor. xi. 22, St. Paul calls himself both a Hebrew and an Israelite. He was both! and he was correct. But he did not say the Jews were "the House of Israel"? But "all Jews are Israelites," and St. Paul besides belonged to the tribe of Benjamin, which was a portion of "The House of Joseph." (2 Sam. xix. 20.)

Phil. iii. 5 takes Mr. Ennis no further and proves nothing. Nathaniel was an "Israelite" whether he belonged to the Northern House, or to the Jews; and our Lord was a Jew, and also an Israelite, because "all Jews are Israelites," and He was the King, not only of Israel, but of the Jews also (John i. 49; Matt. xxvii. 37—42). Nicodemus was "a Jew," and also "a master in Israel," since "all Jews were Israelites." In Mark xii. 29, the Lord did not address the Jews as the "House of Israel," but quoted Deut. vi. 4, and spoke to them as "Israel," which they were! (We wonder Mr. Ennis is so constantly inaccurate!)

Of course John the Baptist preached to the Jews as Israelites in Luke i. 16, 54, 55; 68—80, and ii. 34. They were Israelites; and therefore he was correct. But he did not preach to them as "The House of Israel," such being the name of the other House of Joseph. The remaining texts named by Mr. Ennis —John i. 11; Matt. xv. 24; and Luke iii. 8, do not seem to call for comment as they do not prove anything ad rem. On the whole, we fail to see what Mr. J. Ennis' difficulties are? They arise from his own want of attention to the teaching of Scripture, and from his failure to recollect that the "House of Israel" was "lost" as Isa. xxvii. 13, R.V. (margin), and the Hebrew text teaches; but that the Jews are never described anywhere in the Bible as a "lost" House in our Lord's time, or since.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

SIR,—Your article on the somewhat strange views of the Rev. A. B. C. led my thoughts to a point I believe I wrote of some years ago in the BANNER, when speaking of the drawing forth of Manasseh from the midst of the Tribes of Ephraim, when the time had arrived for them to be planted in America, to commence the building up of the prophesied "great nation." I refer now to the remarkable fact of the descendants of Jacob, when located in Egypt some three hundred years or more, not losing the knowledge as to which brother of Joseph the various families descended from. Had those who sprang from Joseph handed down from generation to generation the fact of who was their progenitor, it would not have been especially marvellous, as they might well have prided themselves on being descendants of that great man who ruled in Egypt with a power only second to the king's. But when the rest of the Israelites were dwelling together in the land of Goshen we might have expected they would by degrees have become hopelessly mixed as to their distinctive origin, after the patriarch Jacob.

We are not told that when the land of Goshen was dwelt in by them there was any tribal division of the land, allotted to each of the twelve sons. Neither does Jacob appear to have bidden his sons keep themselves and their little ones separated from each other, to prevent after confusion, when the carrying out of the especial prophecies he had uttered concerning each should be accomplished. It might well appear to us as if the distinctions between the offspring of the brothers would have become more and more entangled when they sank from their position of early prosperity in the land of Egypt into being persecuted vassals and slaves. And when flying afterwards from the Egyptians, we might have imagined that their probable ignorance as to their different origins would have increased, together with indifference as to the fact.

They were promised the land of Canaan, but what did they know, or why should they care beforehand, if the children of Dan and the children of Gad and Asher, and so on, were to have separate divisions of land allotted to them, instead of their all living en masse as sons of Jacob? Yet when ordered by Moses, under the Lord's direction (Numb. i. 1), to range themselves under their various standards, lo! they all fell into their places, without apparently any difficulty, disorder, or doubt (Numb. i. 18), and each set up the ensign of their father's house (Numb. ii. 2). Surely we may believe every family having been led to hand down, we know not how, the "pedigrees" of their family, Numb. i. 18 was an especial inspiration sent by Him who knew their end from the beginning.

I think Mr. Hine, or one of his contributors, pointed to a similarity to these tribal distinctions in the clans and the clannishness of the Highlands of Scotland, and to this being a possible outcome of their Israelitish origin. But putting aside this latter suggestion, would this clan exclusiveness have lasted had the Highlanders been three hundred years aliens in a strange land, massed together, and finally reduced to a miserable state of slavery, which is calculated to destroy all pride and self-respect and interest in what brings no alleviation to present hardship, and no distinct hope of release from a crushing bondage.

L. P.

Feb. 15th, 1893.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed "PHILO-ISRAEL," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION for the BANNER OF ISRAEL, in Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts. To any country included in the Postal Union, including the following:—United Kingdom, Canada, America, Europe, New Zealand, Cape Colony, Victoria, Western Australia, Transvaal, Tasmania, South Australia, Queensland, Natal, New South Wales, India, Ceylon via Brindisi, 7s. per year, including postage.

All Post Office Orders, Cheques, &c., should be crossed "City Bank, Ludgate-hill, to the ac. of ROBERT BANKS AND SON." They will then only be paid to our account.

READING CASES for holding the Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts, may be had, price 2s. Sent post free on receipt of Postal Order.

THE ANNUAL VOLUMES, bound in handsome blue Cloth, price 8s.

THE MONTHLY PARTS, in tinted wrapper, published the last day of each month, 6d.

NEW BADGES.

Gold Brooches, 6/3 and 4/-.
Scarf Pins, 4/9 and 3/9.
Pendants, large, 4/6; small, 2/9.
All Badges, Metal Gilt, 9d.

All Post Free. Applications, with Postal Order enclosed, to be sent to MRS. THOMPSON, 13, Pulteney-st., Bath, or to MAJOR-GEN. CARLYLE BELL, St. Laurence Villa, Kingston-hill, Surrey.

Price 8s. Sent Post Free.

No. 26.—Price 1s. per 100, 8s. 6d. per 1,000.

THOUGHTS FOR THE BRITISH FOLK.

SUGGESTED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

OUR ISRAELITE MINERS.

London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C.

"I am delighted with this."—PHILO-ISRAEL.

NEW AND IMPROVED EDITION OF

ISRAEL'S WORLD,

By Rev. HENRY ROE. Price 2d.

Also "Consecration," 2d., "Going to Africa," 1s.; "West African Scenes," 2s.; "Fernando Po Mission," 1s. Also "Israel's World" and "Consecration" bound together in cloth, with Author's latest photograph portrait, 1s.

Order of ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C., or of Rev. HENRY ROE, Radstock, via Bath.

Cloth boards. Second Edition.

ISRAEL: A THESIS.

By the Rev. DENIS HANAN, D.D.

Price 1s. 6d.; sent post free to any address on receipt of Postal Order.

London: Robert Banks & Son Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

Price 6d. Monthly. Annual Subscription 7s.

THE MESSENGER.

Edited by "OXONIAN."

Each number contains papers by the EDITOR, and other well-known writers, a SERMON by Dr. WILD, Notes and Queries, &c

Now Ready, price 5s., post free, 5s. 4d., Illustrated by MAPS,

RUSSIA JAPHET;

OR, THE MUSCOVITE, THE COSSACK, AND THE MONGOL.

Being a detailed Identification of the principal peoples subject to the Czar. By "OXONIAN."

London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C.

"A WONDERFUL REMEDY."
"I WAS GIVEN UP BY ALL."
"SAVED FROM AN EARLY GRAVE."

Such are the words of grateful Patients relative to their CASES OF

CONSUMPTION

CURED BY THE TREATMENT OF

MR. GEO. T. CONGREVE.

Read his Book, "ON CONSUMPTION, &c." which may be had post free for ONE SHILLING from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.; or may be ordered of any Bookseller.

NOTE.—CONSULTATIONS FREE at Coombe Lodge, Peckham, on TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings only. No Charge except the usual charge for three weeks or six weeks' supply of medicine. All Patients should read the book first.

New Pamphlet Just Issued, price 3d., by post 3½d.; one dozen, post free, 3s.

Every Anglo-Israelite should read

ISRAEL A CHRISTIAN NATION AT THE PRESENT DAY.

BY COL. WM. CAREY. C.B.

London: ROBERT BANKS AND SON, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, or by order of any Bookseller.

USEFUL BOOKS FOR BIBLE STUDENTS.

In Two Vols., about 500 pages in each, cloth bound, price 5s., originally published at 7/6.

HISTORY OF THE JEWS

In Three Concurrent Sections.

I.—Ten Books of the Antiquities of the Jews, as TRANSLATED by WHISTON, with Notes from FLAVIUS JOSEPHUS.

II.—The Bible Narrative from the Creation to the Captivity at Babylon, fully given and faithfully rendered.

III.—A Modern History of the Jews. Abridged and Offered as a Commentary on the Preceding Sections.

The Two Volumes sent post free for 5/3 nett To be had only direct from ROBERT BANKS AND SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

DR. ROOKE'S SOLAR ELIXIR AND ORIENTAL PILLS

DR. ROOKE'S SOLAR ELIXIR AND ORIENTAL PILLS effect marvellous cures. 50 years reputation. Sold everywhere. Pills in boxes 1 1½. 2 9, and 4/6. The Elixir in bottles 2/9, 4/6, and 11/- Dr. ROOKE, SCARBOROUGH, ENGLAND.

TEETH.—£1 A FULL SET

ESKELL'S.—CELEBRATED MAKE, £2 2s. Warranted and fitted in one visit. No extractions needed. HALF A MILLION SETS already supplied. The Nursing Record and Hospital World says:—We recommend all who require Reliable and Good Teeth at a small cost to go to Messrs. ESKELL, 445, Strand (facing Charing Cross Station), and 58, Ludgate Hill, City, London. Also at 27, Western Road, Brighton, and 23, Mount Pleasant, Tunbridge Wells. Hours 9 till 7. Illustrated Pamphlets, explaining everything, free. Established 100 years.

"THE WORLD'S PROVED REMEDY FOR ALL CHEST DISEASES."

COUGH, ASTHMA,

CHRONIC BRONCHITIS,

INFLUENZA,

THERE IS NONE TO EQUAL IT.

Rev. F. E. HEAPE, of DERBY, in a recent letter, says: "Your Medicine always puts my lungs right, and drove out the terrible INFLUENZA last May."

This Medicine has been prepared for 65 years.

CONGREVE'S BALSAMIC ELIXIR.

In Bottles, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 22s., may be had of all Chemists and Medicine Vendors.

TEA! TEA! TEA!

FROM

INDIA, CEYLON, AND CHINA.

Best Quality and Best Value.

From 1/6 to 3/6 per lb. Samples Gratis.

Carriage Paid on Parcels of 6lbs. and upwards

Robinson & James,

42, TRINITY SQUARE, TOWER HILL LONDON, E.C.

TOOTH-ACHE

CURED INSTANTLY BY

BUNTER'S NERVINE

Prevents Decay, Saves Extraction, Sleepless Nights Prevented.

Neuralgic Headaches and all Nerve Pains removed by BUNTER'S NERVINE. All Chemists. 1s. 1½d.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT FOR

LUMBAGO

Mr. J. B. CARNE, Station Master L. B. & S. C. Ry., Clapham Junction Station, S.W., writes:—"I have derived great benefit from wearing your Electropathic Belt. The Lumbago and pains in my back have both ceased."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST., LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

Digitized by Google

Important Notice to the Public, Chemists, and all

Retailers of Patent Medicines:

OWBRIDGE'S LUNG TONIC does not contain any Scheduled Poison, therefore ALL persons holding Patent Medicine Licences can sell it, and no one has a right to attach "Poison" labels to the bottles.

The known superiority of Owbridge's Lung Tonic as a safe and effective remedy for Coughs, Colds, or any Lung affection, makes it important the Public should know that no difficulty exists in obtaining it.

Sold everywhere at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., & 11s., by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors

The True and Divine Appointment for the Cure of Disease.

Send to

B. V. SCOTT, M.B.M.R.S.,

College of Health, 121, Kensington, Liverpool,

for his

VOICE OF NATURE TO THE INVALID.

Post free 5 stamps.

Thousands of incurables (so-called) have proved God's own means could save when others failed.

Rev. F. Harper says of Mr. Scott's book: "It is a library in itself, and free from quackery."

Rev. Lush says: "Mr. Scott's treatment is natural, safe, reasonable, and Scriptural."

Send for the Book at once.

PAGE WOODCOCK'S WIND PILLS

A CLERGYMAN

Writes: "I am so convinced from my own experience and that of others of the real value of your WIND PILLS, in complaints arising from a disordered state of the STOMACH, BOWELS, or LIVER, that I wish much to promote the use of the Medicine in this parish, and I now inclose P.O. for a large box, and should be glad of some papers for circulation among my parishioners. In my own case

Page Woodcock's Wind Pills

have been of the greatest use. I have no objection to your publishing my communication, provided you divulge not my name and address, which you may give, nevertheless, to those who require such a verification."—Vicarage, near Malvern.

All Sufferers from INDIGESTION, LIVER COMPLAINTS, WIND on the STOMACH, COSTIVENESS, SICK HEADACHE, HEARTBURN, PALPITATION of the HEART, BILIOUSNESS, &c.,

should avail themselves of this most excellent medicine.

☞ The WIND PILLS being PURELY VEGETABLE, TASTELESS, and MILD and TONIC in their action, may be taken with perfect safety by the most delicate of either sex.

Of all Chemists, at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d., or Post Free for P.O. or Stamps, from PAGE WOODCOCK, LINCOLN.

MASON'S EXTRACT OF HERBS FOR MAKING NON-INTOXICATING BEER

WE ALL REQUIRE SOMETHING TO DRINK

The finest, most refreshing and pleasantest beverage obtainable. One table-spoonful of this Extract makes one gallon of splendid Beer. Try it. A sample bottle, enough to make eight gallons, post free for 9 stamps.

NEWBALL & MASON, NOTTINGHAM.

AGENTS WANTED.

MASON'S WINE ESSENCES, non-intoxicating. For children's parties and social gatherings. A 6d. bottle will make one gall. of delicious wine. Post free 9 stamps, or a bottle of both Extract of Herbs and Wine Essence post free 15 stamps.

BE SURE TO CUT

10,000 RUGS GIVEN AWAY.

IT MAY THIS OUT,

THIS PHENOMENAL OFFER is made to the Readers of this Journal only. On receipt of this advertisement, accompanied by Postal Order for 6/-, or 74 stamps, we will forward DIRECT FROM OUR LOOMS to your address, one of our genuine SEAMLESS WOVEN REVERSIBLE CARPETS, suitable for Drawing-room, Dining-room, Bedroom, &c., handsomely bordered and woven in 30 different patterns and art colourings to suit all requirements, and LARGE ENOUGH TO COVER ANY ORDINARY SIZED ROOM. These carpets are manufactured from a material equal in wear to wool, and are undoubtedly the cheapest in the world.

With every Carpet we shall ABSOLUTELY GIVE AWAY a very handsome RUG to match, or we will send 2 CARPETS and 2 RUGS for 10/6

The Queen says: "Decidedly stouter and handsomer than any of the kind, the price being the astounding part of the matter." Schoolmistress: "For style, durability, and cheapness, they cannot be beaten." Penny Illustrated Paper: "Manufactured in every variety of colour, and is one of the most surprising bargains I have seen." Church Bells: "Truly wonderful value."

Thousands of Testimonials similar to the following, & Re-eat Orders, have been received from our Customers:

"2, South Grove, Brooklands.

"Dear Sir,—The Brusselette Carpet has arrived safely, and is very satisfactory. I shall recommend your Carpets wherever I can.—Your faithfully, "J. WILLCOCK."

This offer is made to the Readers of this Paper only, and will not be repeated. All Orders despatched same day as received. Cheques and Postal Orders to be crossed "Union Bank." Address—

THE BRITISH CARPET WEAVING COMPANY,

31, OLD STREET, LONDON, E.C.

NOT APPEAR AGAIN.

Just ready, 220 Large Post 8vo. pages, in clear, readable type, price 2s. 6d., limp cloth, gilt lettered, red edges, post free to any part of the world on receipt of postal remittance.

Nineteen Centuries Ago and NOW.

BY J. C. H. MEHL.

WITH BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH,

BY E. M. RUSH.

CONTENTS.—Biographical Sketch—Nineteen Centuries Ago and Now—Letter to the Editor of the Banner of Israel—A German's Views on Our Identity—The Church of England—The Woman Arrayed with the Sun (Rev. xii.)—"Remember the Sabbath Day to Keep It Holy"—"Blessed are the Meek, for They Shall Inherit the Earth"—The Spirit of Negation, and the Spirit of Prayer—"Righteousness Exalteth a Nation"—"The Dispersion Among the Greeks"—The Protracted Era of Grace—"The Power of the Holy People"—The Present Aspect of the Kingdom of Heaven—One, and Yet Many—A Great Truth Slow in its Progress—A Two-fold Alienation—On Co-operating with the Divine Purpose—A Lamp Shining in a Dark Place (2 Pet. i. 19)—Was St. Patrick an Israelite, and Was He Aware of It?

LONDON:

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., or by order of any bookseller.

Anglo-Israel; or, The Saxon Race Proved to be the Lost Tribes of Israel. By the REV. W. H. POOLE, D.D. Large royal 8vo., of 700 pages, with illustrations, price 10s. 6d.

R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Price 3/6, post free for P.O.

"Text Book for 144,000 Existing Aspirants,"

A theologian writes:—"I certainly believe there is not such a book as it is in the whole world of books, nor can there be a better exposition of the Apocalypse made; and, apart from this, there is much valuable mental and moral philosophy therein which cannot fail to edify."—See "Appendix."

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-ct., Fleet-st

"My Jewels." Choice Selections from Writers of Sacred Poetry, with Appropriate Texts from Holy Scripture, arranged for every day. By SARAH SHARP. Gilt lettered, 1s. 8d.; Royal edition, white calf gilt (as accepted by the Queen), 4s. 6d.

London: R. BANKS & SON Racquet-court, E.C.

A PRESENT.

SEND us your address, mentioning this paper, and we will make you a present of the best guide to health yet published. It is only a little book, but it is of great value to all who are ill or indisposed.—GORDON, MURRAY, & CO., LIMITED, 10, Adam Street, Strand, W.C.

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & CO. (Ltd.) 23, Paternoster-row. Wednesday MARCH 29, 1893. All Rights Reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India)

"And the Remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORN with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS OF THE EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XVII., No. 849. Entered at Stationer's Hall.] WEDNESDAY, APRIL 5, 1893. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
Israel's Colonies Compared With Those of Athens	169
The House of Judah Walking to the House of Israel	170
Some Remarks Concerning the Cuneiform Records of Sargon. By H. J. F.	171
The Psalms. By F. C. P. Part III.	171
The Yarmouth Controversy—Nova Scotia. Anglo-Israelism. Reply No. II.	173
India Under the Crown	174
British-Israel's Recent Acquisitions of Foreign Territory	175
Report of a Meeting in Edinburgh	176
Britain's Progress for Forty Years—1851-91	176
The British-Israel Association	176
Anglo-Israel Free Distribution Fund	177
Israel's Scripture and Prayer Union	178
Correspondence	178
Ode by Mr. Swinburne. Testimony of Louis Philippe. By Q. E. D.	178

ISRAEL'S COLONIES COMPARED WITH THOSE OF ATHENS.

THE Daily Telegraph of March 2 has a fine leader on Lord Rosebery's famous speech at the Royal Colonial Institute's Banquet. We have already noticed the latter in these columns; but it will be an encouragement to some to see how the Daily Telegraph views the subject, and how remarkable the contrast is between our splendid colonies, and those of Athens, which being founded, came to nought. "The nation and company of nations" was to be of Israel, according to the Divine appointment, and it was not consistent with God's will that Athens should survive as a "great and mighty" Colonial Power. It consequently died away, but the British Colonies constitute an Empire already, and are, as the Daily Telegraph allows, "a magnificent cluster of Imperial" daughters of the old "mother in the West;" being "a Pan-Anglican League of Powers," in union with Great Britain! The Daily Telegraph alluded to the Athenian Colonies in the following way, and showed why they collapsed, but we and our children exist still a united family of nations:—

The necessary connection between the Empire and its Colonies, we repeat, made Lord Rosebery a natural spokesman on behalf of the latter. It is interesting to compare the position of England in the midst of her Imperial offshoots with that of the Colonial Power which she most resembles in ancient times—Athens. The colonies of Rome were mainly military, but the "City of the Violet Crown" was like this country in the nature and origin of her over-sea dependencies, and in the solid grandeur which she derived from them. Greece, and especially Attic Greece, was not the little State overlooking the Bay of Salamis, any more than England is to be measured by the acreage of the United Kingdom. The true Hellas stretched by her settlements from Trapezus on the Black Sea to Massalia in Gaul, and from Cyrene in Africa to Byzantium. All those old wanderers from home gloried in the common name of Hellenes; they were prouder of nothing than their right to take part in the Olympic and other national games of the motherland. Yet, from the beginning they were always largely independent of their former home: the strongest tie between them and her was pride of birth and settled loyalty. They took with them abroad the sacred fire for their new altars from the Prytaneum of the city they had left, and always chose their leader or governor from among its great men. So far from imitating that foolish democratic journal in Australia, which lately announced that it would recognise no more titles conferred by our Queen, they received distinguished citizens from home with utmost deference, and if they founded a sub-colony the new leader was selected from the old stock. It was considered a gross violation of the sacred law for a colony to make war upon its motherland, and the violent act of the New England farmers in 1778 would have brought down curses from the Delphic Oracle if there had been such a thing at Boston. At the same time it was observed then, as now, that the tendency of things was to render these transmarine settlements democratic; common hardships and dangers placed the members of the new cities on a natural equality. It is curious to note that in the colonization schemes of Pericles the mother city, or "metropolis," owned all the foreign soil, whether by conquest or treaty, and gave it out in parcels called "cleruchies" to its migrating children, who retained under this system their original rights of citizenship. Pericles was a statesman who, if he could be ours, would make a notable and noble use of the waste regions "taken at prairie value," as Lord Rosebery said, by Great Britain. At one stroke he planted a thousand Athenian families in Chersonese, at another five hundred in Naxos, and two hundred and fifty more in Andros. Athens, however, committed the fault of pushing too far and too harshly her acknowledged supremacy. She lived too openly upon her colonies, drew too large a tribute from them, reinforced her fleets from their forests and their treasuries, and paid heavily in the end when the sentiment of filial piety faded out under newer circumstances, and the interest of the motherland clashed with that of its settlements.

There has been, and there can be, with us and our offspring nothing of this nature to check the natural process which ought eventually to transform the mother country and her colonies into a Pan-Anglian League of Powers. Up to the present date England has been a true parent to all her

Digitized by Google

Imperial children. She has given everything and asked for nothing. Her fleets protect the independence of her settlements; her soldiers have helped to garrison them; her Exchange has provided them with loans; her statesmen have imparted to them the art of government. If she has derived. and does still derive, great commercial benefits from their trade, this has been all in the way of ordinary business, and because the natural course of barter made mother and children constant customers. The colonies, on their side, so far as they have been free, have not shown any sentimental tenderness to England as regards tariffs, and in some cases have distinctly gone against her fiscal interests. All this is really healthier than the ancient method of bonds that vexed and duties that galled. The best foundation of that political and commercial union which all must desire, for the sake of England first, and next, for the sake of all humanity, is common interest. We shall never again coerce a colony. The possibility of the thing has passed away. As the great children of the Empire grow up to maturity they must and will stand more and more on their own feet, and what they properly ask of us towards this consummation they will have for the asking. They will not find, however, as they thus one by one come of age, the mother country senile or decrepit; they will find her full, as before, of vast and noble tasks of Empire in India, in Africa, in the Pacific and the Atlantic Seas, stronger and stouter than the best among them, and quite as desirable in the character of a friend and ally as ever she was in that of a mother. And the lighter our domination has sat upon them the deeper and more sincere is likely to become the sentiment of filial affection, which is as real a feeling with nations as with human beings. We may, therefore, hope that by patience and wisdom there will grow up between England and her magnificent cluster of Imperial offspring that best and firmest of all confederations which comes from self-interest, warmed by higher emotions—such as one sees in the parallel case of sons and daughters kindly and liberally brought up and repaying their parents in later life with an attachment all the closer for being spontaneous. In a word, like Lord Rosebery, we believe more in the slow and steady growth of the Federation which all good Britons must desire than in any sudden manufacture of it.

The journalist notices that the population of the United States is rapidly becoming a new race, by the blending of German, French, Scandinavian, Irish, Italian, and Spanish, with American blood. "It will speak English, but it will not be Anglo-Saxon." The British Colonies, on the contrary, are mainly peopled with the original British blood, and promise to retain it everywhere. The final words of the article are too good to be lost. They were these:—

There is no such breed extant for extension and progress as the British; and in the multiplication of these young Englands beyond the sea, and in the never-ceasing tap of "the Queen's drum, which beats round the world," there beams the promise of a future so secure, so peaceful, and so glorious that we can wait in patience for the formal union of the Anglo-Saxon Powers, and forgive Lord Rosebery, in view of his excellent speech, for being, by momentary exigency, and against his own good sense, led to become a Home Ruler.

The Daily Telegraph, in short, blindly writes Identity truths and facts; but is not the least aware why our Colonies have not followed the dismal fate of those of Athens; or why Athens went down into gloom, while Britain bids fair to fill the world with her sons, her Empire, and her language. "A nation and a company of nations" were to come of Israel in the latter days, according to Gen. xxxv. 11; and the race was, by her Divine destiny, to "spread abroad to the West, and to the East, and to the North, and to the South," in accomplishing it (Gen. xxviii. 14).

Facts, as dealt with by the Daily Telegraph, point to the fulfilment of the prophecy in our own Anglo-Saxon race; but no other nation since time was, not even Athens, can claim to have responded to the promises. The argument and facts furnish us with another cogent proof that the British are Israel, and that Athens was not.

In modern times certainly no nation extant can claim to be Israel but the British; since such a writer as Mr. Grant Allen, who cannot be suspected of favouring the Holy Scriptures, or appealing to their truth by the fulfilment of prophecy, wrote the following in one of the first numbers of the Westminster Gazette:—

In South Africa Dutch has got a footing, it is true, but it is fast losing it. The new-comers learn English, and though the elder Boers stick with Boer conservatism to their native tongue, young Piet and young Paul find it pays them better to know and speak the language of commerce—the language of Cape Town, of Kimberley, of the future. English is spoken by a hundred million people in Europe and America; is overrunning Africa; has annexed Australasia and the Pacific Isles; has ousted, or is ousting, Dutch at the Cape.

But the evidence, as all our readers know, is not limited to the facts of our Colonial Empire, or to the vast expansion of our British Dominions and language. Ours is the missionary nation, evangelizing the whole world, "blossoming and budding, and filling the face of it with fruit" (Isa. xxvii. 6, R.V.), as Israel was to do. Our abnormal population-increase testifies that we are Israel, and our Christian character does the same, in response to Hosea i. 10. We have the oracles of God, the Bible, in our possession, as a national heirloom, and we see it to be our duty to translate it into all languages of the earth, and disseminate it as God's message to sinful man (Mark xv. 15). To us, especially, God has nationally shown "His Words, His statutes, and His judgments," and He declared in Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20, that He would not deal so with any nation, but "His chosen ones" Israel. Judged by whatever test men may choose, it can be shown that the British are Israel; and we claim, therefore, that our clergy and our countrymen should pause and consider the evidence; that, believing the facts, they may glorify and praise the Lord!

THE HOUSE OF JUDAH WALKING TO THE HOUSE OF ISRAEL.

THE following has appeared in recent newspapers, and should be noted. While the continent and even the American States are refusing to give shelter to the Jews, our own land, greatly to its discomfort and loss, is obliged to welcome the persecuted race. The report is this:—"Our Odessa correspondent states that extensive preparations are being made for the emigration of Jews from South Russia to England during the spring. Upwards of two thousand will leave during the next fortnight. Nine hundred left last week."

The singular spectacle we are witnessing of the persecution and forced emigration of a people numbering millions of souls from Russia, and the refusal of almost all nations to give them an asylum, is striking enough. But when we also note that this hapless people of God, His ancient people, who have refused to obey Him, but have never been abandoned by Him, are forced, by a strange combination of circumstances, to come to this country, to the exclusion of all others, we are reminded of the text in Jer. iii. 18, R.V., which says, "In those days the House of Judah shall walk to the House of Israel (margin), and they shall come together out of the land of the north to the land that I gave for an inheritance to your fathers." This latter land is Palestine; the House of Judah are the Jews; and these are the days when the restoration is likely to take place. We have proved to demonstration that the British are the House of Israel, and our land is a "land of the north," "the isles afar off" from Palestine (Jer. xxxi. 10, R.V.).

Digitized by Google

We believe, then, on reasonable grounds, that the present gathering of the Jews into the British Islands, is a prophetic fulfilment, incipient it may be, of the prophecy above quoted, and that we may expect an immense immigration of Jews into Britain till the pressure will be intolerable to our own people, and then by natural causes we shall be compelled to provide for the location of the Jews in Palestine, and, by God's providential arrangement, our own nation will furnish the selected emigrants from the mingled tribes of Israel to occupy those portions of the inheritance which Ezek. xlviii. shows will be allotted to the thirteen representative tribes of the children of Israel. Whether we are right or wrong in connecting these events with the coming return of the tribes to their land, it is clear that the facts transpiring before us are remarkable and striking in the extreme. They point to the coming restoration, and if that be the case the recognition of the House of Israel must be near, and the proclamation that the British are Israel must be close at hand.

SOME REMARKS CONCERNING THE CUNEIFORM RECORDS OF SARGON, THE ASSYRIAN.

By H. J. F.

PART II. (Concluded from page 165.)

SARGON in his record says, "In the seventh year of my reign I made subject several remote Arabian tribes that dwelt in a land which no wise men and no sender of messengers knew—a land which had never paid tribute to the kings, my fathers, and the remnant of them I transported and settled in the city of Samaria."

Sargon it was who built that great city and palace of Dur-Sharrukin, the city of Sargon, the foundations of which were discovered by Botta in 1842, and for nearly all the information concerning this king, and all that he did we owe to the monumental inscriptions thereon. It is a curious fact that this mighty monarch is only once mentioned by name in the Bible (Isa. xx. 1). His own description of this city is worth quoting: "Day and night I planned to build that city, to erect dwellings for the great gods and palaces, the dwelling of my royalty, and I gave the order to begin the work. In accordance with the name I bear (Sharrukênu, "the true, faithful" king) and which the gods gave me, that I might be the guardian of right and justice, govern the powerless, not harm the weak, I paid the price for the land for the city, after the tablets appraising its value to the owners thereof, and in order to do no wrong I gave to those who did not wish to take money, field for field, wherever they chose . . . ." "The pious utterances of my lips to bless it pleased the exalted prophets, my masters, and to build the city and dig the canal they gave the command." "May Asshur bless this city and this palace! May he invest these constructions with an eternal brightness. May he grant that they shall be inhabited until the remotest days! May the sculptured bull, the guarding spirit, stand for ever before his face! May he keep watch here night and day, and may his feet never move from this threshold."

There can be little doubt that some of the captive children of Israel formed part of the first population of this mighty citadel, for Sargon further says, "People from the four quarters of the world, of foreign speech, of manifold tongues, who had dwelt in mountains and valleys . . . whom I in the name of Asshur, my lord, by the might of my arms had carried away into captivity, I commanded to speak one language and settled them therein. Sons of Asshur, of wise insight in all things, I placed over them; learned men and scribes to teach them the fear of God and the king."

Surely the lot of these captives might have been less pleasant, but it was ever the policy of Sargon to make them "one with the Assyrians," for which purpose he adopted them as natural-born subjects. In the final clause of this cuneiform inscription Sargon says, "With the chiefs of provinces the wise men, astronomers, great dignitaries, the lieutenants and governors of Assyria, I sat in my palace, and I practised justice. And may it be that I, Sharrukênu, who inhabit this palace, may be preserved by destiny during long years for the happiness of my body, for the satisfaction of my heart. . . ." But in a little over a year after he had taken up his abode in this noble residence at Khorsabad he died at the hands of an unknown assassin a violent death, after reigning gloriously over Assyria for seventeen years.

Brighton, March 2nd, 1893.

THE PSALMS.—By F. C. P.

PART III. (Concluded from page 162.)

THE fourth of the five books into which the Psalms are divided opens beautifully with trust in the Lord and adoration, but with no special allusion to Israel till we come to Psa. xciv., where we are once again reminded that the Lord will not cast off His people, neither will He forsake His inheritance (ver. 14). Psa. xcv., appointed to be sung in our morning church service, is from ver. 7 only applicable to Israel in its literal sense, and the reason we assign for our praises in the first six verses is "because He is our God and we are the sheep of His pasture;"—Sheep being, as we have seen, a title in the Psalms for Israel. Psa. xciii. to c. form a group of what may be called adoration psalms. Psa. xcviii. is appointed to be sung in our church service as an alternative, with the Magnificat, and may be said to be in the spirit of prophetical praise: "All the ends of the earth have seen the salvation of our God." The Gospel is spreading, but it has not yet been preached to all the ends of the earth. Psa. ci. and the first half of Psa. cii. are of a more personal character, but in the latter half of Psa. cii. the psalmist returns to a favourite theme—namely, mercy upon Zion. After declaring the unchangeableness of God, he concludes with, "the children of Thy servants shall continue, and their seed shall be established before Thee." Where is the proof of this unchangeableness if this seed has disappeared?

The first portion of Psa. cv. we find in 1 Chron. xvi., being part of the song of praise David caused to be sung when the ark was brought from the house of Obed-edom; Psa. xcvi. forms the latter half of this song of praise. The last part of Psa. cv. and the whole of Psa. cvi., with which the fourth book concludes, are historical; they are spoken to the "seed of Abraham His servant, the children of Jacob His chosen" (Psa. cv. 6), and are to remind them of God's past mercies, and that, notwithstanding their iniquities, He had "remembered His covenant" (Psa. cv. 8; cvi. 45). Those to whom it is a stumbling-block that we do not deserve the great blessings we claim for Israel should take note of such verses as Psa. cvi. 7, 8: "Our fathers understood not Thy wonders in Egypt . . . but provoked Him at the Red Sea. . . . Nevertheless He saved them for

Digitized by Google

His name's sake." It may be said now, with perfect truth, that we do not understand the wonders of the Lord, but one day we shall see that He has been blessing us for His name's sake.

The fifth book opens with Psa. cvii., which speaks of the Israelites as the redeemed of the Lord. The whole Psalm speaks of God's loving care for them, and how "He bringeth them out of their distresses" when they cry unto Him. Psa. cviii. is composed of the last five verses of Psa. lvii. and the last eight verses of Psa. lx., and is distinctly spoken of Israel. Psa. cx. is prophetical of Christ the King of Israel. Psa. cxi. twice reminds us that God will be mindful of His covenant, and that He will give His people the heritage of the heathen (ver. 5, 6, 9). Psa cxiii. and cxviii. form what was called the hallel or hallelujah service, and was used at the three great feasts of the Passover, weeks or Pentecost, and Tabernacles, also at the feast of Dedication. Psa. cxviii. was called the hosanna psalm, and was especially appropriated to the great national thanksgiving at the feast of Tabernacles. The six psalms form a series of praise or thanksgiving, mostly national, except Psa. cxvi., which may be characterized as personal thanksgiving, and which is fitly incorporated into our service for the churching of women. Psa. cxiii. is metaphorical of Israel. Psa. cxiv. is a short summary of the history of Israel through the wilderness when difficulties had vanished before them because they had the presence of the God of Jacob Psa. cxv. contains a beautiful appeal first to Israel then to the House of Aaron (for if the priests of a people are not righteous how can they teach righteousness), then to all who fear the Lord, to trust in the Lord . . . The Lord hath been mindful of us; He will bless us. . . . The Lord shall increase you more and more. . . Ye are blessed of the Lord (ver. 9—15), a distant allusion to the covenant with Abraham, and who but the seed of Abraham can literally sing the hallel? We ought to take to heart the verse in the hosanna psalm (cxviii. 2: "Let Israel now say that His mercy endureth for ever," for it is in order that we may proclaim His mercy that we have been chosen, preserved, and blessed.

Psa. cxix. is not a national Psalm, but, as has already been said, one of personal communing with God. With Psa. cxx. we begin a group supposed to have been sung by the pilgrims going up to the second temple after the captivity, so they became national in character and of the nature of public praise and prayer: "Behold, He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep" (Psa. cxxi. 4). Psa. cxxii. is entirely in praise of Jerusalem, where was the "house of the Lord" (ver. 1—9). These psalms of the second temple probably conclude with Psa. cxxxvi.; they abound with praise to God as the God of Israel. "Let Israel hope in the Lord . . . He shall redeem Israel from all his iniquities" (Psa. cxxx. 7, 8). Psa. cxxxii. repeats the promise to David: "The Lord hath sworn in truth unto David; He will not turn from it. Of the fruit of thy body will I set upon thy throne"; while Psa. cxxxv. 4 repeats to us the blessed assurance: "For the Lord hath chosen Jacob unto Himself, and Israel for His peculiar treasure." When we remember that at this time only Two Tribes were restored from the Babylonish captivity and that ten were lost, we must take this verse in connection with ver. 14: "For the Lord will judge His people, and He will repent Himself concerning His servants," and look upon them as prophetical of the time when He would redeem them from all their iniquities. These songs of the pilgrims close with once more giving the history of Israel being brought out of Egypt (Psa. cxxxvi.).

Psa. cxxxvii. is the touching lament of the Jews by the waters of Babylon during the captivity. Psa. cxxxviii. and cxlv. are ascribed to David, by which we see no chronological order has been observed in the arrangement of the Psalms, for they must have been written long before those we have just been considering. They are remarkable for intense personal devotion, the communing of a soul whose only desire is to know and be known of God and to be kept from evil; it is not in such that we expect to find many of the national characteristics of Israel, so it is only in Psa. cxlv. that we find an allusion to the kingdom of God: "All Thy works shall praise Thee, O Lord, and Thy saints shall bless Thee. They shall speak of the glory of Thy kingdom . . . to make known to the sons of men His mighty acts and the glorious majesty of His kingdom" (ver. 10—12). "Saints," which is used many times in the Psalms, always refers to the Israelites, and here again we have the same duty and responsibility laid upon them that we have noticed before—namely, that of "witnessing." Psa. cxlvii. repeats that "the Lord doth build up Jerusalem; He gathereth together the outcasts of Israel" (ver. 2), and ends with saying "He sheweth His word unto Jacob . . . He hath not dealt so with any nation" (ver. 19, 20). If we believe in the inspiration of the Psalms at all, how can we be indifferent to the privilege of belonging to Israel after reading such words as these?

The last three Psalms form one continuous song of praise. Psa. cxlviii. contains the significant verse, "He also exalteth the horn of His people, the praise of all His saints, even of the children of Israel, a people near unto Him (ver. 14). It is a coincidence that Plymouth Brethren commonly use "saints," meaning all believers in the Lord, though to the world in general it is one of those words which has become both limited and exalted in meaning, for we only think of applying it now to those whom even the world regards as "elected" and worthy of "selection" among believers. How it ought to fill us with joy, thankfulness, and humility when we grasp the fact that God Himself call us "His saints"! and how it ought to spur us to fresh endeavour to live worthy of the name!

In conclusion, let us notice that the covenant with Abraham is alluded to five times in the Psalms, that with David three times, and that four times it is promised that God will "gather" or bring again the captivity of Jacob. If we had no inspired book but the Psalms they ought to be sufficient to prove to us that Israel is a nation chosen, blessed, lost, to be redeemed, restored. We read these Psalms regularly in our churches every Sunday, and they are dear to the heart of every Christian, but how much dearer do they become to one who feels that it is of his own race that he is speaking, and that on that race rests the high command, "All ye the seed of Jacob, glorify Him, and fear him all ye seed of Israel" (Psa. xxii. 23). It has not been within the scope of these papers to allude to every place where Israel is mentioned nor to expound those that are metaphorical; it is simply desired to call attention to the fact that, in enquiring into the Identity question, the first and most important thing to do is to search the Scriptures, for in them will be found the marks of Israel which we claim are now only to be recognized in the Anglo-Saxon race.

THE PRESENT CRISIS.—The new Leaflet is now ready, "No Rome Rule." Price 1s. per 100 nett. 1,000 carriage paid to any address for 10s. London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

THE YARMOUTH CONTROVERSY—NOVA SCOTIA.

ANGLO-ISRAELISM.—REPLY No. II.

WHEN it is proven, as it surely has been, that the European Sythians, or the Gothic conquerors of Europe, are of Israelitish origin, controversy ought to be at an end. These people smote the image upon its feet, causing it to fall with a tremendous crash (Dan. ii. 34, 35) at the very time their kinsmen were establishing themselves in the British Isles. It was at this period the Stone Kingdom appeared as predicted by Daniel. The tribes so long lost to themselves (Hos. ii. 6; Isa. xliii. 8; Rom. xi. 25), and others now arose like a slumbering giant, wiped the sleep of centuries from his eyes, and girded himself for conflict as in the days of old. But the question of ethnology now troubles your correspondent less than the fear that Anglo-Israelism is against the spirituality of the Christian religion. I would put his mind for ever at rest on this point. No man can so truly believe in Christ as he who fully receives Him as the Redeemer of Israel, who came to "raise up the tribes of Jacob" and to be for salvation to the ends of the earth.

It was plainly revealed in the Scriptures that Judah should reject the Messiah, but Israel should receive him. If this fact is kept in mind, the reader of the Bible will not be confused by applying Scriptures to Judah which have never been fulfilled upon them, because they were not written for them. Isa. xliii., for example, tells how the royal tribe would treat the Messiah, while the prophecy of Hosea declares how the House of Israel will turn to Him and live (Hosea ii., iii., also xiv. 8, 9). These Scriptures contradict each other unless it is remembered that the House of Israel was in foreign lands, not in Palestine (Ezek. xi. 15).

Your correspondent speaks of the Rabbins as literalists of their day. Let us see if this statement is made with due regard to the facts. I have always understood that these men were charged by our Lord with having left the Scriptures to follow their traditions, and for that reason they could not see how Jesus of Nazareth was literally fulfilling the prophets.

The Saduceean party, which was in power when our Lord was rejected, had so far given up the literal interpretation of the Scriptures as to deny the resurrection of the dead. They maintained that there was no such being as an angel, and did not believe in the soul's immortality. In the face of these opinions of the Jewish leaders, it is marvellous that they should be called literalists. The Anglo-Israelite does not seek to establish the law, as the Jew did, but holds, more than any other man, that all has been done by the righteousness of faith. But does faith make the covenants of promise of no effect? It certainly does if we must spiritualize them all away; but Paul held that faith established the covenants.

The Jewish doctors expected that the Messiah would establish a glorious kingdom through His work, and in this they were quite right. No reader of the Hebrew Scriptures can escape the conclusion that the restoration of the kingdom to Israel was one of the objects of Messiah's advent. The difficulty was this: The Jews were determined that the kingdom should be given to the House of Judah, and that it should come through the old covenant of works, whereas the kingdom belonged to the House of Israel, and was to come in by faith. For teaching this truth the Jews denounced Jesus as a Samaritan.

Has "Barrington" ever observed how careful the Evangelists are to show the literal fulfilment of the Scriptures in their Lord's life? How frequently did these writers add this sentence to their accounts of His life: "That the Scriptures might be fulfilled." To what apparently trivial matters did this literal filling up of the Scriptures extend?

The Messiah must—(1) be born of a virgin; (2) be of the seed of Abraham; (3) be of the tribe of Judah; (4) be of the House of David; (5) be born in Bethlehem; (6) die on the cross; (7) come at the proper date (Dan. ii. 44); (8) be worshipped by wise men; (9) flee into Egypt; (10) work miracles (11) be sold for thirty pieces of silver (Zech. xi. 62); (12) be betrayed by a friend. These and many other things happened to our Lord in accord with the Scriptures. If the Pharisees understood the Scriptures literally, it is hard to see how they could have rejected these identities.

The truth is, they were the spiritualizers of their day, and were joined to their theology, which had its origin in the period between Malachi and our Lord, during which no prophet's voice was heard in Israel; and while Jesus was fulfilling the law and the prophets before their eyes, they were speculating as to how high the buildings in Jerusalem should be when Messias should come.

The one sided reading of the oracles of God which "Barrington" charges upon the Pharisees may with equal pertinance be charged upon the theologians of this day. Because all nations are saved by faith in Christ, without distinction of race or condition, it is affirmed that national election has no foundation in the Scriptures. The effect of this teaching is to obscure the greater part of both Testaments. It is quite evident that James and Peter each understood that Israel was yet the elect nation or they would not have so addressed them (Jas. i. 1; 1 Pet. i. 1, 2).

Now, as touching Judah, all the predictions concerning her we understand literally. Truly they are living witnesses to the inspiration of the Scriptures. They have been preserved because they are to be restored to their land from which Israel was disinherited never again to return, because their destiny was to be worked out in other lands; and the kingdom was taken from Judah and given to Israel. As it is written, "I will set his dominion in the sea." When it is said that the Jews should be "scattered and peeled," "bereft of children," "few and trembling," "without a country," "without a temple," "with no sacrifice," &c, we all understand these sayings in a literal sense.

But God has another witness. What about the birthright? Was not this given to Joseph? (1 Chron. v. 1, 2). According to God's revealed methods for the world's salvation, it is impossible to see how that end could be secured unless some nation was raised up to be the expression of the saving power of the Gospel. Hence Israel was to come into possession of the heathen; and truly to-day no land is open to the missionary of the Gospel where Anglo-Saxon power does not extend. We believe that one day our nation will awake to her high calling and put millions into the treasury of the Lord.

Did not the birthright include the "double portion"—i.e., both the spiritual and the temporal blessing? How is the House of Judah to get possession of their land? Not until Jacob possesses Esau; but how could this be done in the narrow confines of Palestine? Israel was therefore removed and made great among the nations.

According to the Scriptures Judah is to come to Israel, who will restore her to her own land. Look at the state of things now in European politics. All agree that England must possess Turkey, in which event Palestine becomes a British province—then the way will be clear for Judah's return. Is Judah not now being gathered out of the "North Country?"

Digitized by Google

The idea of your correspondent that "all Israel" will never be able to go back to Palestine seems quite absurd in the light of the prophets (see Jer. iii. 14). They go back by representation according to this passage. Furthermore, it was never promised the House of Israel that they should go back, but the House of Judah will go back and dwell there in federation with the House of Israel (Jer. iii. 12—18). At that time all such Scriptures as Zech. xiv. 17 will be literally fulfilled.

But why do we not understand the prophecies concerning the House of Israel in just the same way as those relating to the Jews are interpreted? Because and only because our spiritualizing doctors have told us that Israel means converted Gentiles.

How can we spiritualize such passages as Micah v. 8, 9, and vii. 16—20? They do not describe the Church, nor are they applicable to Judah. They do, however, describe to a hair the career of the Gothic tribes since their first entrance into Europe. But I must not make this article too long, only to add this:—We are living in the days of the preparation for Israel's manifestation, and it would be well if men would turn their thoughts towards the signs of the times. We are evidently coming near to the period of which Paul speaks when he says, "All Israel will be saved,"—i.e., when the two Houses will be reunited, and the glory of the Lord will be revealed.

Already the railroad from Joppa to Jerusalem is built, and soon the red coats of Israel will be carried across the ancient plains of Esdraelon in the flaming chariot mentioned in Nahum ii. 3, 4. That great numbers of the people are now treating the Church with indifference must be noticeable to all, but depend upon it our God will soon cause the ears of the deaf to tingle, and the heart of the stout worldling to melt with fear. One word more:—When Mr. Darwin told the world that we all descended from monkeys, the wise men all said, "So we did." But when we are told that we have descended from the chosen people of the Most High, everyone thinks that it is an indication of wisdom not to believe it. I cannot wonder that some are incredulous on the subject.

YARMOUTH.

—Yarmouth Light, January 5, 1893.

INDIA UNDER THE CROWN.

THERE was a large gathering in the hall of the Society of Arts, John-street, Adelphi, yesterday afternoon, when Sir William Wilson Hunter, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., LL.D., read an elaborate paper, abounding in statistics, on "The Progress of India under the Crown." In the absence of the Marquis of Ripon, who had been summoned to a Cabinet Council, Sir F. Forbes Adam, C.I.E., formerly chairman of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce, presided. Among those present were Lord Hobhouse, Lord Reay, Sir Mountstuart Grant Duff, General Sir Andrew Clarke, General Sir Harry Prendergast, General Sir Richard Meade, Major-General Sir Owen Tudor Burne, Sir Steuart Colvin Bayley, Sir George Birdwood, Sir Juland Danvers, Sir John Phear, Sir William Wedderburn, Surgeon-General Sir William Moore, Mr. Justice Jardine (Bombay), the Hon. Mr. Bliss, the Ven. Archdeacon Baly, General A. Ruxton MacMahon, General J. T. Walker, General Raines, Lieutenant-General Pearce, Major-General Mackesy, General J. Michael, Colonel E. T. Thackeray, Mr. Lionel Ashburner, Mr. T. H. Thornton, Dr. John Pollen, Dr. A. D. Pollen, Mr. R. N. Cust, Mr. R. B. Buckley, and Mr. S. Digby (secretary of the Indian section).

Sir William Hunter, who was cordially received, said that the thirty-five years which had elapsed since India passed to the Crown had been spent in making the British Empire of India safe, in making her peoples prosperous, and also, thank God, in making them loyal. The essential history of India during that period might be summed up in two words—defence and development. The first duty imperiously imposed by the mutiny on the governing power was to make India secure. We had disarmed the races of India, and were bound to assure the safety of the peoples from whom we had taken away the means of self-defence. A full quarter of a century of peace within India, and the absence of any serious danger from without, enabled the long task of remodelling the army to be thoroughly accomplished. But, during the twelve years which had followed 1881, the military problem in India underwent a change. The steady advance of Russia on Central Asia, and her contact with the States on our North-Western Frontier, transformed the freedom from external danger, which India had previously enjoyed, into a condition of affairs approximately to that among the great armed States of Europe. That new order rendered not only an increase in the Indian armies, but also a higher standard in their fighting efficiency, absolutely necessary for the safety of the British Empire of India. The internal safety of India had now been secured by a reconstitution of her Army, and by a widely-spread, unobtrusive system of local defence works, scientifically planned, and vigilantly inspected—a combination of living strength of control, and of physical difficulties placed in the way of revolt which not even Dalhousie would have ventured to think possible when the government passed to the Crown. In regard to material defence works, as in regard to the organization of the army, the safety of India was no longer a problem, of internal protection alone. The long land frontier of the North-West, whose difficulties were only emerging in Dalhousie's time, was now recognized to be one of the heaviest responsibilities of the British rulers of India. The whole North-Western frontier line of British India, over 800 miles in length, was now reasonably secure. The coast defences had also been placed on a sound footing. The country had been rendered not only safe, but solvent to a degree never attained under any previous government. At the beginning of the period India had to pay interest on its debt at 4 to 5½ per cent.; it could now borrow at a little over 3 per cent. One cause of the improvement in the finances was a greater economy in expenditure. Money was made to go further. The decentralization of finance, while reserving intact the control of the Government of India and of the Secretary of State, had produced two results. It had rendered that control more really effective by divesting it of ineffectual interference in petty details; it had enlisted the Provincial Governments on the side of a vigilant economy, by securing to them the gains accruing from economy and vigilance. The main cause of financial improvement in India had been the steady growth of the revenue, due, not to new taxation, but to the increase of the population, and to the still more rapid increase of material prosperity, and the means of internal development, such as roads, railways, and irrigation works. While the rent paid by the people to the Government had increased by one-third, the value of the produce of their fields had more than doubled. This was partly due to the higher local prices, and partly to the enormous increase in the area of cultivation. The whole existing system of the Indian Legislature was remodelled in 1861; and, after thirty years of careful watching, it had been expanded on a wider and more popular basis, alike for the Supreme Government of India, and for the Provincial Governments, by Lord Cross's Act of 1892. Under the Crown, also, a magnificent series of law codes had been passed, consolidating the whole Empire of India under a common system of jurisprudence. Next to sound finance, a wisely-constituted Legislature, and a clear and uniform system of law came an accessible system of Courts of justice and a vigilant police. The law Courts of India, from the highest to the lowest, had been remodelled under the Crown. But the great improvement in the actual administration of justice was due not so much to changes in system as to the growth of a highly-trained and thoroughly upright body of native Judges and magistrates. Nine-tenths of the original civil suits, and more than three-quarters of the magisterial cases, now came before the native Judges and magistrates. The police had been completely reorganized by a series of legislative enactments, since India passed to the Crown, commencing with the fundamental Police Act of 1861. As a source of security, the new system had been an unqualified success. But against the smaller class of offences the Indian police were less successful, nor had they yet purged themselves of a widespread suspicion of corruption as the Indian native Judges had done. Indian commerce had expanded to an extent which the world had scarcely ever seen, and which would have been regarded as an impossible dream in any Asiatic country thirty-five years ago. If any one would realize the industrial revolution effected, he could not do better than visit the Indian section of the Imperial Institute at South Kensington. For the first time in the history of India, her produce would be brought in a practical commercial way, and as a whole, before the Western world. The native princes had recognized by liberal donations the importance of the Institute as a means of developing the resources of their territories. It was to be hoped that the great producing interests in India, who were even more directly interested, would also now come forward. Marvellous as had been the material progress of India under the Crown, its moral and intellectual development had been still more significant. A great system of education had come into force, and a powerful native press had sprung up. A far-reaching intellectual activity was profoundly affecting both the social life and the political aspirations of important sections of the people. The ancient caste-system of India had been brought to the bar of modern Indian public opinion—from the religious obligation of child marriage to the religious prohibition against sea voyages by Hindoos. At the Chicago Exhibition this year, the most striking Indian exhibit would be, not the fibres, nor the fabrics, nor the food grains, nor the tea, nor the ironwork, nor the coals of India, but a complete ship-load of Hindoos, who, after a full and public discussion of their caste restrictions on sea voyages, had chartered a steamer for America with the public approval of leaders of the Hindoo community and of the Hindoo Press. Such an expedition would have been regarded as an impious impossibility thirty-three years ago. Nor were the political aspirations of the educated classes in India producing less striking results. Since the Act of 1861, native gentlemen had formed an important element in the Legislative Councils both of the Supreme and the Provincial Governments. Under the Act of 1892 they would form a still more important element. In the practical administration of the law, native Judges had taken their place under the Crown in all the supreme tribunals of India as High Court Judges. In the subordinate ranks of the judicial administration, the Blue-book of 1889 stated that, out of 2,588 judges and magistrates, in 1889 no fewer than 2,553 were natives of India (including 104 Eurasians) and only thirty-five were Europeans. The Covenanted Civil Service was open alike to all subjects of the Queen, and local self-government, the best preparation for public life, had made important progress. The ruling power was now strong enough to be able to listen without fear to the wishes of the people. It recognized that the loyal expression of their opinions, and their desire for an increasing share in administration and legislation were sources, not of danger, but of additional strength. Our position in India always had been, and always would be, full of difficulties, but the fundamental condition on which we held India was the courage to face and the power to conquer great difficulties. That courage and that power had never failed the British nation in the past, and so long as it remained true to itself they would not fail it in the future. (Cheers.)

Digitized by Google

In the discussion that followed, Sir Owen Burne, Sir William Wedderburn, Mr. H. Hyndman, and others took part, the first incidentally remarking that he believed that the Imperial Institute would be opened in May by the Queen.

Sir William Hunter, in reply to the vote of thanks, said it had been remarked by one of the speakers that our best reply to Russia lay in the loyalty of India. That reply had been made by the people of India themselves after Penjdeh; and it was one of the greatest ever known (Cheers.)

This brought an unusually long sitting to a close.—The Times, Feb. 17, 1893.

BRITISH-ISRAEL'S RECENT ACQUISITIONS OF FOREIGN TERRITORY.

We are indebted to a Canadian paper The Empire, of Toronto, of Feb. 22, last, for the following statistics in regard to our nation's acquisition of territory under the present Premier's Government as compared with Lord Salisbury's additions to the Dominions of the Queen. The figures relate to our expansion since 1868, and are too valuable to omit, especially to our friends who long for statistics, and write to us constantly to be furnished with them.

The acquisitions under Mr. Gladstone are few, and relate to the years 1881 and 1882; while Lord Salisbury, in 1886 and 1888, added nearly two millions of square miles to the Empire! Mr. Gladstone, however, is credited with the annexation of Egypt and its 394,240 square miles. But we all know that he had no wish to meddle with that land, and was only forced by facts to remain in it. He has often striven to escape from it, but in vain! We believe it is Lord Rosebery's influence which now compels him to retain his hold upon the Valley of the Nile, probably because he sees, too, that to relinquish it at present would cost him votes.

The Toronto editor wrote thus:—

BRITISH ACQUISITIONS OF TERRITORY.

A British Columbia reader of The Empire enquires as to the amount of territory annexed to the British Empire by the Liberal and Conservative Ministries in Great Britain since 1868. The question opens up an interesting field for information, and is worthy of a reply. Leaving out of consideration a few little islands and places of no particular consequence, such as Jelebu in the Straits Settlements, the North Somali Coast, and Negri-Sembilan; taking Egypt as an acquisition and addition to the Empire, which it really is, though that result was hardly contemplated by Mr. Gladstone; and counting Afghanistan and Zululand as independent States, although they are practically dependent Protectorates; the following will be found a correct statement of the situation, as between the two parties:—

Digitized by Google

Place	Date	Area in sq. miles.
UNDER MR. GLADSTONE.
Rotumah	1881	310
Tonga Isles	1881	385
Egypt	1882	394,240
UNDER LORD SALISBURY.
Upper Burmah	1886	180,000
Royal Niger Co.	1886	400,000
Pahang	1888	10,000
British East Africa	1888	400,000
New Guinea	1888	305,900
British South Africa	1888	500,000

The population of many of these vast territories is impossible to accurately determine at present. Sections of those in Africa are swarming with human beings, whilst other portions are decimated by the warfare and slave trade of the past. But in glancing at these tables, disproportionate as they may seem, there is a negative side to one of them. Mr. Gladstone's Government lost to England the sovereignty of the Transvaal and of Zululand, the great plains of the Soudan and other portions of Africa, which should have been guarded by Britain in the interests of Christianity, civilization, and peace.

With all mistakes considered, however, and the difficulties of England's great position duly appreciated, this is a magnificent Imperial record. It is unequalled in the modern world, as indeed the structure, size, evolution and Government of the British Empire are unparalleled in all history.

REPORT OF A MEETING IN EDINBURGH.

THE Edinburgh Israel's Identification Association held upon 25th inst.. a Conference and Social Meeting. Major-General Morgan, President of the Association, opened the conference, and Mr. J. G. Taylor, of Newcastle, Rev. Mr. Milner (Oxonian), and Vice-President Rev. P. Carlyon followed with interesting and conclusive statements. The Rev. E. Bassin, of the House of Judah, concluding with a few good words, and attention also was drawn by the chair to the claims of the British-Israel Association, and to the Tara Exploration.

Testimony as to the convincing nature of the statements made was rendered from the body of the hall; and, during the social meeting, expressions of satisfaction and pleasure derived from the meeting were general. Some at once gave in their names as members of the Association. J. J. R.

Edinburgh, Feb. 27, 1893.

ANGLO-ISRAEL FREE DISTRIBUTION FUND.—The Hon. Sec. of the Fund will be very grateful to all friends who will send donations at this time, when a grave peril overshadows the British Isles, to aid in distributing extra copies of the BANNER OF ISRAEL for March 15th (containing Philo-Israel's leading article upon the "Home Rule Bill" for Ireland), also for sending to our Sowers suitable leaflets to show that Israel's Empire should remain undivided, and independent of Papal or Jesuit rule. Donations will be gladly received by the Treasurer, Miss Lawrence, Rosslyn, Hampton-road, Upper Teddington; or by the Hon. Sec., Miss E. M. Rush, 4, Westgate-road, Westgate-on-Sea.

"MY MOTHER."—A Sermon by Rev. Archibald G. Brown, preached in the East London Tabernacle, on the occasion of the death of his mother, is one that should be read and distributed by all parents. Price 1d. Published by Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

BRITAIN'S PROGRESS FOR FORTY YEARS—1851-91.

THE following sheet of statistics was compiled by Mr. W. M. Batten, of Wolverhampton, in January last, from authentic sources. We beg our readers carefully to examine them, as evidence of the wonderful advance, literally "by leaps and bounds," of our country during the last forty years. Whether we look at the population, or foreign expansion of the Empire, the wealth or the savings of the British, our response to the picture of Israel as drawn in the Scripture, confronts us on every side. We are greatly indebted to Mr. Batten for the result of his labours, and to those who are constantly asking us for statistics on the subjects connected with Our Identity we point to those Mr. Batten has given us as corroborations of our contention.

	1851	1891	Increase or Decrease.
Population of England & Wales	17,927,609	29,001,018	Increase	11,073,409
Population of Scotland	2,888,742	4,033,103	„	1,144,361
Population of Ireland	6,552,385	4,706,162	Decrease	1,846,223
Population of Islands	143,126	147,870	Increase	4,744
Population of United Kingdom	27,511,862	37,888,153	Net increase	10,376,291
Population of Total British Possessions	246,000,000	366,000,000	Increase	120,000,000
Area in square miles of British Empire	8,500,000	11,000,000	„	2,500,000
Annual Income United Kingdom	£550,000,000	£1,250,000,000	„	£700,000,000
Revenue	£57,500,000	£96,500,000	„	£39,000,000
Imports	£110,441,000	£435,441,000	„	£325,000,000
Exports	£98,113,000	£309,113,000	„	£211,000,000
Value of Property and Profits	£257,000,000	£677,000,000	„	£420,000,000
Deposits in Savings Banks	£29,000,000	£114,000,000	„	£85,000,000
Railway Capital	£248,240,000	£919,425,000	„	£671,185,000
Traffic Receipts ...	£14,997,000	£78,361,000	„	£63,364,000
Number of Passengers ...	85,391,000	845,463,060	„	760,072,000
Miles Open ...	6,890	20,191	„	13,301
Post Office—Letters delivered ...	385,800,000	1,705,800,000	„	1,320,000,000
Telegraph Messages...	Nil.	70,000,000	„	70,000,000
Education — Government Grant ...	£200,000	£4,400,000	„	£4,200,000
No. of Children in attendance ...	2,000,000	5,000,000	„	3,000,000
No. of English - speaking People in the World	65,000,000	125,000,000	„	60,000,000
No. of Registered Electors United Kingdom ...	1,200,000	6,100,000	„	4,900,000
No. of Paupers	1,206,000	956,000	Decrease	250,000
No. of Habitual Criminals	102,000	52,000	„	50,000
Amount of National Debt	£787,000,000	£684,000,000	„	£103,000,000
No. of Sailing Vessels U.K.	25,023	13,823	„	11,200
Tonnage of „ ...	3,402,000 tons	2,971,000 tons	„	430,000 tons
No. of Steam Vessels U.K.	1,200	7,720	Increase	6,520
Tonnage of „ ...	170,000 tons	5,307,000 tons	„	5,137,000 tons
Coal Tonnage raised U.K...	30,000,000	180,000,000	„	150,000,000

THE BRITISH-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

MEETINGS.—Since writing my last report lectures have been given in Bath, and were very well attended, and ere this will be in print, lectures will (D.V.) have been given in Manchester, Glasgow, and Culworth, near Banbury. The following have been arranged: April 11, the Memorial Hall, Clifton, 3 p.m. and 8 p.m., the Rev. Fredk. Aston; May 16, meetings at Exeter Hall, 4 p.m. and 7 p.m. Seventeen lectures have already been given this year up to date, whereas last year only ten had been given. If any of our friends are desirous of having any in their own locality they must communicate with me as soon as possible, as vacant dates are fast being filled up.

THE BADGE.—A superior quality badge has now been ordered, but as we are ordering over 500 at a time they are much cheaper. Readers of the BANNER will find a description given on page 70, No. 840, Feb. 1, 1893, in Mr. Pain's letter, and they can now be supplied in good electro upon German silver foundation for one shilling each, postage one penny extra. Application must be made to the secretary at the offices of the association.

Digitized by Google

NEW MEMBERS.—We are glad to be able to report an accession of new members. We hope, however, to receive the names of many more. The association is doing good work, the committee work hard to make good progress, and we do feel that we are deserving of more support and encouragement than we get. We are deeply grateful to those who so generously and liberally aid us in many ways, giving us both time and money, but when we hear of or are told by people "that they are most enthusiastic," but whose enthusiasm does not extend to their pockets, we really wonder what it consists of. It reminds me of a person I once knew whose income at the least was £4,000 a year, and who told me she took the deepest interest in the spiritual condition of the poor, and at the same time offered me the munificent sum of one shilling. Deeds speak far more forcibly than words, and if only our friends would con our subscription list, and note how many names of enthusiastic believers are missing and call their attention to it, we might thereby benefit to a very considerable extent.

FREDK. ASTON, General Secretary.

86, St. Martin's-lane, London, W.C., March 10, 1893.

ANGLO-ISRAEL FREE DISTRIBUTION FUND.

"To make known to the sons of men His mighty acts, and the glorious majesty of His kingdom" (Psa. cxlv. 12).

'Now therefore perform the doing of it; that as there was a readiness to will, so there may be a performance also out of that which ye have" (2 Cor. viii. 11).

ONE HUNDRED AND TWELFTH MONTHLY REPORT.

THE following subscriptions and donations, received from Feb. 10th, to March 18th, are very gratefully acknowledged:—

By the Treasurer: B. N. C., Maryport, £1 1s.; Mrs. M., Peterborough, 5s.; "Bob," Bournemouth, 1s.; Miss D. and Friend, 2s.; Miss S., Bromley, 5s.; A Reader of the BANNER, per Messrs. Banks and Son, 1s.; W. I., Perth, W. Australia, per Messrs. Banks and Son, £1; Miss H., Lymington, 10s.; A. M. B., Bath, 5s.; W. B., Wolverhampton, 1s., I. I. M., S. Africa, £5; E. L. D., Launceston, Tasmania (a collection), 7s.

By Miss E. M. Rush: E. G. A., Dubbo, N.S.W., £2; J. R. B., Penryn, 1s.; P. C. (sale of books at meetings), 16s.; J. M. S., 1s.; Miss S., Wellingborough, 1s.; J. M., Malta, 1s.; J. C., Malta, 2s. 6d.; Miss P., Topsham, 5s.; Sale of books, &c., 3s. 9d.; G. W., Tunbridge Wells, 1s. 3d.; A. J., St. Albans, 5s.; J. V. B., Colon, 2s. 6d.; G. W., Barnsley, 1s.; Mr. and Mrs. H., Cheshunt, 7s.

Total, £13 6s. 0d.

BANNER DISTRIBUTION. — From 219 to 229 BANNERS are now sent weekly, to Chelmsford and the places already enumerated in previous reports.

LITERATURE DISTRIBUTION.—Sixty-nine parcels have been forwarded to the following places since last report: London (2), Claughton, Attercliffe, Stoke, Stirling, Ludlow, Southsea, Tunbridge Wells, Moreton-in-Marsh, Eastbourne, Weymouth, Shepherd's Bush, Birmingham, Barnsley (2), Kingsbridge, St. Leonard's-on-Sea, Chippenham, Dundee (2), Hull, Cardiff, Horsforth, Maesteg, Wadingham, Chelmsford, Commercial-road, E., Westgate-on-Sea (2), Loughton, Woolwich, Wellingborough, Sandown, Shrewsbury; Malta (4); Bangalore (2), Nellore (2), Secunderabad (2), Poona; Rangoon (2), Moulmien (2); Kandy (2); Dubbo, N.S.W.; Auckland, Tearoka, Kati-Kati, Thames, Taranaki, N.Z.; Demerara; Barbadoes; Detroit, U.S.; Victoria, B.C.; Halifax, Yarmouth, N.S.; Jerusalem; Cape Town; Likoma Island, B.C. Africa; Abiskuta, W. Africa; Ianduwa, Congo Free State.

CORRESPONDENCE.—Our anonymous friend, I. I. M., in South Africa, is very heartily thanked for his kind and generous gift, "towards helping the good work of our Master, Jesus Christ."

From India one writes: "I have again to tender you my best thanks for the BANNERS and packets of literature forwarded during the past year, and which has been all distributed. I have reason to believe that the seed sown has had good effect, and in three or four cases led to serious searchings of heart and reading of the Scriptures to see whether the literature circulated is in accordance with the truth of God's revealed will and Word. Quetta is a large military station, and I trust, by God's help, during my short stay to be of use, and further the Lord's work as far as lies in my power, and as He gives me grace and strength to perform the same."

One working among our soldiers says: "It is not because I am or have been ungrateful to you for so kindly supplying me so regularly with BANNERS and other literature, that I have not written to you for such a long time. I believe some interest has been taken in the reading, and those I have constantly supplied with literature are more eager than ever for it. The map of Africa has been posted up in the office of a Royal Horse Artillery Battery, and officers and men have had their attention drawn to it all the past year. Now another map will be placed by the side of it—viz., the Indian Empire. I have a little banter now and then from some, but as they cannot give me a better explanation, I tell them I cannot agree with them."

Referring to "Our Race," one says: "Herewith I return Prof. Totten's book, which I have perused with much pleasure and profit. It is written in a most fascinating style, and I should say calculated to arrest attention to a marked degree, and cannot fail to do much good in furthering the knowledge of Israelitish truth. Thank you very much for the loan of it."

Another writes: "I am sorry that Prof. Totten cannot see his way to go on publishing these studies, 'Our Race.' They have taken great hold on many here, and led them to search the Scriptures. The officers especially are very much interested, and helped thereby to realize our connection with lost Israel. I was enabled to give some almanacks to chaplains in the Royal Navy, and I must tell you that it is much respected at Masonic Hall, where it is well read, and yet treated kindly. I trust it will do good and open the eyes of some of the brethren. I cannot understand how any Freemason can help seeing Our Identity with Israel."

From South Devon: "I thank you very much for the literature. I circulate it all I can, and find many willing to read it, but no opposers. I wish sometimes I had, for then I should feel people were thinking about it. A few smile at what they call my harmless delusion. How little they know of God's glorious promises, and what a light this truth throws on His holy Word."

Another, sending a donation above the average, says: "In view of the many claims for various missions and charities, I am not able to make it more, my means being very limited. Nevertheless, I feel strongly that this truth is the master key of Biblical interpretation, and, humanly speaking, the one clue which might guide our statesmen through the perils of the present political crisis. How low must we be brought before we will acknowledge that the Lord He is God? And when shall we be emboldened again to say nationally, 'The Bishop of Rome has no jurisdiction in this realm of England,' instead of congratulating the Pope and succumbing to the priesthood in Ireland?"

From Bournemouth: "John Shootingham's 'shafts' are not so very 'random' after all. He has hit the bull's-eye in the matter of a shilling subscription to the Free Distribution Fund."

J. LAWRENCE, Hon. Treasurer.

Contributions to the Fund will be thankfully received and acknowledged by the Hon. Treasurer, Miss J. Lawrence, Rosslyn, Hampton-road, Upper Teddington, Middlesex; or by the Hon. Secretary, Miss E. M. Rush, 4, Westgate-road, Westgate-on-Sea. Cheques may be crossed, "London and Provincial Bank, Teddington Branch."

Digitized by Google

ISRAEL'S SCRIPTURE AND PRAYER UNION.

Since last report four new members have been added, making a total of 1,443.

A donation of 6d. was gladly received from Miss M., Bishop Auckland.

New members are requested, when writing for cards, to kindly state whether their names are to be entered as Mr., Mrs., or Miss, etc.

The Prayer Union has been joined with the British-Israel Association.

A new Card of Membership has been printed, which may be renewed each year. It has a list of chapters for the whole year, prayers, etc. It is of a size convenient for keeping in Bible, and will be sent on receipt of 6 stamps. It is hoped that all the members will send for one.

For the future the monthly list for daily reading will not be published in the Banner.

The first and second series of Monthly Comments on the whole Bible, by Philo-Israel, may now be obtained in volume form. Price, in paper cover, 1s. 2d. each; in cloth 2s. each, post free.

The "Prayers for Daily Use," being a prayer for each day of the week, by Philo-Israel, are 1d., or 9d. per doz., postage extra. Address — The Secretary, Israel's Scripture and Prayer Union, British-Israel Association, 86, St. Martin's-lane, London, W.C.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

Dear Philo-Israel,—I think the question as to the utility of a badge and the advisability of wearing it would be cleared a little if Miss L. Hope would inform us how many have been sold since it was first introduced. There might be something in what the Rev. J. I. Jones says if every conscious Israelite would wear it, but, as it is, his words have no weight, because we may be sure it is, and will be, adopted only by a small minority. I have never yet met any stranger wearing it. I do not know the circulation of the Banner, but say 7,000 weekly, and allowing two readers for every number, we get 14,000. (This is a mere guess, probably below the mark, and Banner readers only). Now, if we take the number of subscribers, in one year, to the British-Israel Association, or Free Distribution Fund, we shall probably get some idea as to how many will wear the badge. The subscriptions to the Free Distribution Fund last year (reckoning 14,000 readers) were rather less than fifteen in every thousand. Taking the individual subscribers, it would be less, as many sent more than once. This year, in answer to John Shootingham's appeal, rather more than eight in every thousand have responded. This seems almost too ridiculous to be true, so perhaps some one will prove that I am wrong in my calculations. Let us endeavour, if possible, to get at the truth. Perhaps the British-Israel Association will give us the number of their subscribers last year, and Messrs. Banks & Son the average circulation of the Banner?

Yours truly,

Jessie Lawrence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

My Dear Sir,—Allow me a line or two of thanks for your kind words in last week's Banner, and, also, for your kind offer of hospitality received through Col. S. To-morrow I start for America, where I hope to do something for the cause of Israel and Judah.

Hoping to have the pleasure of meeting you in future days, and that blessing may attend your efforts,

I remain, yours very sincerely,

Mark Levy.

London, N., Feb. 28, 1893.

ODE BY MR. SWINBURNE.

The following Ode, suggested by the forthcoming Chicago Exhibition, has been written by Mr. Swinburne, and set to music by Professor Stanford. It will shortly be published by Messrs. Novello, Ewer, and Co.:—

EAST TO WEST.

Sunset smiles on sunrise: east and west are one,
Face to face in heaven before the sovereign sun.
From the springs of the dawn everlasting, a glory renews and transfigures the west,
From the depths of the sunset a light as of morning enkindles the broad sea's breast, [the night's work done.
And the lands and the skies and the waters are glad of the day's and Child of dawn, and regent on the world-wide sea,
England smiles on Europe, fair as dawn and free.
Not the waters that gird her are purer, nor mightier the winds that her waters know.
But America, daughter and sister of England, is praised of them, far as they flow: [shall be.
Atlantic responds to Pacific the praise of her days that have been and
So from England westward let the watchword fly,
So for England eastward let the seas reply;
Praise, honour, and love everlasting be sent on the wind's wings, westward and east, [friends at feast,
That the pride of the past and the pride of the future may mingle as
And the sons of the lords of the world-wide seas be one till the world's life die.

A. C. Swinburne.

TESTIMONY OF LOUIS PHILIPPE, KING OF THE FRENCH, TO THE NECESSITY OF ENGLAND TO THE WORLD'S WELFARE.

By Q. E. D.

While the late Louis Philippe was the Duke of Orleans he had to seek refuge in this country about the beginning of this century, after having already been in exile for some half-a-dozen years or more. Writing from Twickenham to the late Bishop of Llandaff, in July, 1804, he said: "I quitted my native land so early that I have hardly the habits or manners of a Frenchman, and I can say with truth that I am attached to England, not only by gratitude, but by taste and inclination. In the sincerity of my heart do I pray that I may never leave this hospitable soil. But it is not from individual feeling only that I take so much interest in the success of England—it is also as a man. The safety of Europe, of the world itself, the happiness and independence of the human race, depend upon the safety and independence of England." (From "Chamber's Miscellany of Useful and Entertaining Tracts," vol. I., p. 25, 26).

The above is a remarkable testimony to the value, and even necessity, of England to the world's welfare. When Louis Phillippe wrote it, he was a young man of thirty years old, and had witnessed the awful outburst of the great French Revolution which had proved so fatal to his father and many of the royal personages of France, as well as others of a lower degree. His had already been a chequered career, but he was destined to become King of the French, and then again, after a reign of eighteen years, seek safety on England's "hospitable soil," and where he eventually died, after a life remarkable for its vicissitudes and illustrative of the instability of human greatness.

If this was the character of England and English influence nearly ninety years ago, is it any less truly so to-day? Is it not far more applicable? The power and the will of England to do good to all the human race wherever found at the present time, is a thing unique in the history of the world. No nation before was ever so circumstanced and so qualified; and we dare say no nation was ever so willing (notwithstanding all our shortcomings) to discharge faithfully the obligations thus resting upon her. The answer to the query, "Why is this?" can only be found in the Identity. Israel was to "blossom, and fill the face of the earth with fruit." England alone does this; therefore, England is Israel.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed "PHILO-ISRAEL," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION for the BANNER OF ISRAEL, in Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts. To any country included in the Postal Union, including the following:—United Kingdom, Canada, America, Europe, New Zealand, Cape Colony, Victoria, Western Australia, Transvaal, Tasmania, South Australia, Queensland, Natal, New South Wales, India, Ceylon via Brindisi, 7s. per year, including postage.

All Post Office Orders, Cheques, &c., should be crossed "City Bank, Ludgate-hill, to the ac. of ROBERT BANKS AND SON." They will then only be paid to our account.

READING CASES for holding the Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts, may be had, price 2s. Sent post free on receipt of Postal Order.

THE ANNUAL VOLUMES, bound in handsome blue Cloth, price 8s.

THE MONTHLY PARTS, in tinted wrapper, published the last day of each month, 6d.

NEW BADGES.

Gold Brooches, 6/3 and 4/-.
Scarf Pins, 4/9 and 3/9.
Pendants, large, 4/6; small, 2/9.
All Badges, Metal Gilt, 9d.

All Post Free. Applications, with Postal Order enclosed, to be sent to MRS. THOMPSON, 13, Pultney-st., Bath, or to MAJOR-GEN. CARLYLE BELL, St. Laurence Villa, Kingston-hill, Surrey.

Price 8s. Sent Post Free.

No. 26.—Price 1s. per 100, 8s. 6d. per 1,000.

THOUGHTS FOR THE BRITISH FOLK.

SUGGESTED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

OUR ISRAELITE MINERS.

London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C.

"I am delighted with this."—PHILO-ISRAEL.

NEW AND IMPROVED EDITION OF

ISRAEL'S WORLD,

By Rev. HENRY ROE. Price 2d.

Also "Consecration." 2d., "Going to Africa," 1s.; "West African Scenes," 2s.; "Fernando Po Mission." 1s. Also "Israel's World" and "Consecration" bound together in cloth, with Author's latest photograph portrait, 1s.

Order of ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street. London, E.C., or of Rev. HENRY ROE, Radstock, via Bath.

Cloth boards. Second Edition.

ISRAEL: A THESIS.

By the Rev. DENIS HANAN, D.D.

Price 1s. 6d.; sent post free to any address on receipt of Postal Order.

London: Robert Banks & Son Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

Mr. E. HINE'S PUBLICATIONS

Can be obtained of ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London; or of ISAAC LOVELAND, Shoreham, Sevenoaks.

Lost Israel Found. One handsome Demy 8vo. vol., cloth, gilt edges. 3s. 6d., post 3s. 9d.
Forty-seven Identifications. 6d., post 7d.
Coming Glories. 6d., by post 7d.
Flashes of Light. 6d., by post 7d.
Oxford Wrong 4d., by post 7d.
Anglo-Saxon Riddle. 2d., by post 2½d.
The Nation Warned, &c. 6d., by post 7d.

About half a million copies of these works have been sold.

NEW CATALOGUE of Works on Our Identity post free from R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

"A WONDERFUL REMEDY."
"I WAS GIVEN UP BY ALL."
"SAVED FROM AN EARLY GRAVE."

Such are the words of grateful Patients relative to their CASES OF

CONSUMPTION

CURED BY THE TREATMENT OF

MR. GEO. T. CONGREVE.

Read his Book, "ON CONSUMPTION, &c." which may be had post free for ONE SHILLING from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.; or may be ordered of any Bookseller.

NOTE.—CONSULTATIONS FREE at Coombe Lodge, Peckham, on TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings only. No Charge except the usual charge for three weeks or six weeks' supply of medicine. All Patients should read the book first.

New Pamphlet Just Issued, price 3d., by post 3½d.; one dozen, post free, 3s.

Every Anglo-Israelite should read

ISRAEL A CHRISTIAN NATION AT THE PRESENT DAY.

BY COL. WM. CAREY. C.B.

London: ROBERT BANKS AND SON, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, or by order of any Bookseller.

USEFUL BOOKS FOR BIBLE STUDENTS.

In Two Vols., about 500 pages in each, cloth bound, price 5s., originally published at 7/6.

HISTORY OF THE JEWS

In Three Concurrent Sections.

I.—Ten Books of the Antiquities of the Jews, as TRANSLATED by WHISTON, with Notes from FLAVIUS JOSEPHUS.

II.—The Bible Narrative from the Creation to the Captivity at Babylon, fully given and faithfully rendered.

III.—A Modern History of the Jews. Abridged and Offered as a Commentary on the Preceding Sections.

The Two Volumes sent post free for 5/3 nett To be had only direct from ROBERT BANKS AND SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

DR. ROOKE'S SOLAR ELIXIR AND ORIENTAL PILLS

DR. ROOKE'S SOLAR ELIXIR AND ORIENTAL PILLS effect marvellous cures. 50 years reputation. Sold everywhere. Pills in boxes 1/1½, 2/9, and 4/6. The Elixir in bottles 2/9, 4/6, and 11/-

Dr. ROOKE, SCARBOROUGH, ENGLAND.

TEETH.—£1 A FULL SET

ESKELL'S.—CELEBRATED MAKE, £2 2s. Warranted and fitted in one visit. No extractions needed. HALF A MILLION SETS already supplied. The Nursing Record and Hospital World says:—We recommend all who require Reliable and Good Teeth at a small cost to go to Messrs. ESKELL, 445, Strand (facing Charing Cross Station), and 58, Ludgate Hill, City, London. Also at 27, Western Road, Brighton, and 23, Mount Pleasant, Tunbridge Wells. Hours 9 till 7. Illustrated Pamphlets, explaining everything, free. Established 100 years.

"THE WORLD'S PROVED REMEDY FOR ALL CHEST DISEASES."

COUGH, ASTHMA,
CHRONIC BRONCHITIS,
INFLUENZA,

THERE IS NONE TO EQUAL IT.

Rev. F. E. HEAPE, of DERBY, in a recent letter, says: "Your Medicine always puts my lungs right, and drove out the terrible INFLUENZA last May."

This Medicine has been prepared for 65 years.

CONGREVE'S BALSAMIC ELIXIR.

In Bottles, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 22s., may be had of all Chemists and Medicine Vendors.

TEA! TEA! TEA!

FROM

INDIA, CEYLON, AND CHINA.

Best Quality and Best Value.

From 1/6 to 3/6 per lb. Samples Gratis.

Carriage Paid on Parcels of 6lbs. and upwards

Robinson & James,

42, TRINITY SQUARE, TOWER HILL LONDON, E.C.

TOOTH-ACHE

CURED INSTANTLY BY

BUNTER'S NERVINE

Prevents Decay, Saves Extraction, Sleepless Nights Prevented.

Neuralgic Headaches and all Nerve Pains removed by BUNTER'S NERVINE. All Chemists, 1s. 1½d.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT

FOR

PARALYSIS

J. FULLER, Jun., Esq., Whiteparish, Salisbury, Wilts, writes:—"Since wearing your Electropathic Belt I am decidedly better and stronger. I have more confidence in myself, and the pain in my back is completely gone. Your Belt is truly wonderful."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST. LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

Digitized by Google

Important Notice to the Public, Chemists, and all

Retailers of Patent Medicines:

OWBRIDGE'S LUNG TONIC does not contain any Scheduled Poison, therefore ALL persons holding Patent Medicine Licences can sell it, and no one has a right to attach "Poison" labels to the bottles.

The known superiority of Owbridge's Lung Tonic as a safe and effective remedy for Coughs, Colds, or any Lung affection, makes it important the Public should know that no difficulty exists in obtaining it.

Sold everywhere at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., & 11s., by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors

The True and Divine Appointment for the Cure of Disease.
Send to
B. V. SCOTT, M.B.M.R.S.,
College of Health, 121, Kensington, Liverpool,
for his
VOICE OF NATURE TO THE INVALID,
Post free 5 stamps.

Thousands of incurables (so-called) have proved God's own means could save when others failed.

Rev. F. Harper says of Mr. Scott's book: "It is a library in itself, and free from quackery."

Rev. Lush says: "Mr. Scott's treatment is natural, safe, reasonable, and Scriptural."

Send for the Book at once.

PAGE WOODCOCK'S
WIND PILLS

It is astonishing how many people imagine they suffer from

HEART DISEASE

They experience a depressing feeling about the region of the heart, accompanied by an occasional stab of pain, nervous debility, loss of appetite and general depression. The fact is they suffer from

INDIGESTION, OR DYSPEPSIA.

The food, instead of being thoroughly digested, develops into Wind, and flies about the valves of the heart, causing the symptoms named. All who suffer in this way should at once take

Page Woodcock's Wind Pills,

A world-renowned remedy for all Stomach disorders.

All Sufferers from INDIGESTION, LIVER COMPLAINTS, WIND on the STOMACH, COSTIVENESS, SICK HEADACHE, HEARTBURN, NERVOUS DEBILITY, PALPITATION of the HEART, BILIOUSNESS, &c., should avail themselves of this most excellent medicine.

Of all Medicine Vendors, at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d., or Post Free for P.O. or Stamps, from PAGE WOODCOCK, Lincoln.

MASON'S EXTRACT OF HERBS FOR MAKING NON-INTOXICATING BEER

WE ALL REQUIRE SOMETHING TO DRINK

The finest, most refreshing and pleasantest beverage obtainable. One table-spoonful of this Extract makes one gallon of splendid Beer. Try it. A sample bottle, enough to make eight gallons, post free for 9 stamps.

NEWBALL & MASON, NOTTINGHAM.

AGENTS WANTED.

MASON'S WINE ESSENCES, non-intoxicating. For children's parties and social gatherings. A 6d. bottle will make one gall. of delicious wine. Post free 9 stamps, or a bottle of both Extract of Heros and Wine Essence post free 15 stamps.

Just ready, 220 Large Post 8vo. pages, in clear, readable type, price 2s. 6d., limp cloth, gilt lettered, red edges, post free to any part of the world on receipt of postal remittance.

Nineteen Centuries Ago and NOW.

BY J. C. H. MEHL.

WITH BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH,

BY E. M. RUSH.

CONTENTS.—Biographical Sketch—Nineteen Centuries Ago and Now—Letter to the Editor of the Banner of Israel—A German's Views on Our Identity—The Church of England—The Woman Arrayed with the Sun (Rev. xii.)—"Remember the Sabbath Day to Keep It Holy"—"Blessed are the Meek, for They Shall Inherit the Earth"—The Spirit of Negation, and the Spirit of Prayer—"Righteousness Exalteth a Nation"—"The Dispersion Among the Greeks"—The Protracted Era of Grace—"The Power of the Holy People"—The Present Aspect of the Kingdom of Heaven—One, and Yet Many—A Great Truth Slow in its Progress—A Two-fold Alienation—On Co-operating with the Divine Purpose—A Lamp Shining in a Dark Place (2 Pet. i. 19)—Was St. Patrick an Israelite, and Was He Aware of It?

LONDON:
ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.,
or by order of any bookseller.

Anglo-Israel; or, The Saxon Race Proved to be the Lost Tribes of Israel. By the REV. W. H. POOLE, D.D. Large royal 8vo., of 700 pages, with illustrations, price 10s. 6d.

R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Jehovah Triumphant. The New and Complete Theology and Electric Light of the Bible, containing the History of British-Israel, compiled from the Sacred Scriptures. A handsome crown 8vo., cloth bound volume of 550 pages, with Index of Scripture references. Price 5s. (published at 10s.), post free for P.O.

London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C

MASON'S KILLCORN

"AN EXCELLENT THING."

You need not suffer any longer from Corns, Warts, or Bunions. "WONDERFUL KILLCORN" will cure you. This is what a postman says:—"I have been nearly crippled with corns, but am now completely cured by your wonderful 'Killcorn.' I will answer all enquiries regarding same."—DANIEL MITCHELL, Post Office, Cardenden, Scotland. 1s. per bottle. Ask for MASON'S KILLCORN and don't have any other. Sold by all Chemists Patent Medicine Vendors, and at all stores, or sent post free for 12 stamps by the Proprietor, W. B. MASON, 26 & 27, High Holborn, London, W.C., and 18, Guildford-street, Leeds.

THE WORLD'S CORN CURER

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The Geography of the Gates. With Map and six full-page, and one double-page, Illustrations, printed on plate paper. 208 pages, in handsome cloth, gilt. Second Edition, Price 2s. 6d.; post free for P.O.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific. 56 pages. Price 4d.; by post 4½d.

Are the English People the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel? An Inquiry Establishing the Identity of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 4d.; by post 4½d.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d.; by post 4½d. Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters."

Historical, Ethnic, and Philological Arguments in Proof of the British Identity with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel, Clearly and Simply Stated. Price 2d.; by post 2½d.

The History of the House of Israel: How They were Lost, and How They were Found. Told for the Children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fifth Edition.

Our Identity: What it is Not; What it is; and Our Obligations To-day in Respect to it. Price 2d.; a reduction for quantities.

Philo-Israel's Leaflets. 4 pages, crown 8vo. Price 1s. 6d. per 100, postage 2d. Assorted packets, 1s. 8d. 19 different subjects.

The British Constitution. Followed by "A NECESSARY CONSEQUENCE," by L. P. Price 3d., post free 3½d.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument, Proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100, postage 6d.

Anglo-Israelism. True, Not False. Being Philo-Israel's Reply to the Rev. Canon Bell's Pamphlet, "Anglo-Israelism: True or False?" Price 1d.; 6s. 6d. per 100. 16 pages, crown 8vo.

Egypt's Place in the Bible. By PHILO-ISRAEL. A Paper read before the Clerical and Lay Association at Bristol and Clifton. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100.

London: ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, or by order of any bookseller.

"My Jewels." Choice Selections from Writers of Sacred Poetry, with Appropriate Texts from Holy Scripture, arranged for every day. By SARAH SHARP. Gilt lettered, 1s. 8d.

London: R. BANKS & SON Racquet-court, E.C.

A PRESENT.

SEND us your address, mentioning this paper, and we will make you a present of the best guide to health yet published. It is only a little book, but it is of great value to all who are ill or indisposed.—GORDON, MURRAY, & Co., LIMITED, 10, Adam Street, Strand, W.C.

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co. (Ltd.) 23, Paternoster-row. Wednesday APRIL 5, 1893. All Rights Reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India).

"And the Remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORN with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS OF THE EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XVII., No. 850. Entered at Stationer's Hall.] WEDNESDAY, APRIL 12, 1893 [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

PAGE

Mr. J. Chamberlain on the Question of Uganda 181
The Tribe of Benjamin. By W. H. Larkins, Lieut.-Col. 182
The Late Rev. Dr. Duff on the Influence of the English Language in India. By Joseph Thomson 185
A Forecast in 1842. By E. M. Rush 186
To and Fro 189
Random Shafts. By John Shootingham 189

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN ON THE QUESTION OF UGANDA.

THE speech of Mr. Chamberlain in Parliament, as reported in the papers of March 21st, was a striking one, illustrating several of our points with which we are so familiar in the BANNER. The subject was—Uganda; whether it was worth our nation's while to retain it, or whether, as Mr. Labouchere maintained, it ought to be abandoned to the Germans, or to any one ready and willing to have it? Mr. Chamberlain, in reply to the plea "that we wanted no more territory, and that the Empire was too large already," said that the policy of expansion in the past had given the means of livelihood to the 40,000,000 people of this country who benefited by the vast trade such increase of dominion brought us to-day. Our ancestors did not shrink from sacrifices, and were not ashamed "to peg out claims for posterity." We must not be meaner and more selfish by refusing to do anything of like character for those to come after us. Parliament could not now review the whole policy of the country, which had been undertaken and carried out in the past, with the full consent of the vast majority of the people. We surrendered Heligoland to the Germans to secure Uganda. Was that to go for nothing? "Great Britain was, however, determined to take its full share in the disposition of the new land, and in the work of civilization." "The spirit of enterprise distinguished the Anglo-Saxon race, and has made us peculiarly fit to carry out the work of colonization."

"It was a curious fact," said the speaker, "that of all nations of the world this country was the only one able to carry out this work without absolute cost to ourselves. France had Algeria and Tunis; Italy had possessions in Abyssinia; Germany and Portugal had colonies; and all had to pay money. Only Spain and Holland had drawn money from her colonies at one time. These facts should lead them to be hopeful in undertaking this new work of colonization, which did not differ from that we had carried out successfully in the past." We see thus far that Mr. Chamberlain approves of the policy of expansion for Great Britain, which God destines for Israel. The latter have the Gates to give them world-wide supremacy, and the kingdom and dominion, finally, under the whole heaven (Gen. xii. 17; Dan. vii. 27). The speaker saw that our nation was "the head and not the tail" in respect to colonization—making it pay while no other nation now can do so—and thus he bore testimony that we were Israel (Deut. xxviii. 1 and 13). He saw that our success in the past gave us claims for the future, all men admitting that we were the seed which really has the blessing (Isa. lxi. 9, R.V.).

As to Uganda, Mr. Chamberlain saw that we could not go back if we would. We had broken up the native Governments, and, as in India, had given those African lands the Pax Britannica to benefit them. We could not leave them now to civil war and awful massacres. "This country now could not leave Uganda, whatever it cost." "Even if it cost another expedition, the Government were bound, at all cost, to fulfil the obligations of this country to the people to whom our faith had been pledged." The peace and prosperity of Uganda depended absolutely upon the continuance of Britain's hold upon those who, as citizens, occupied those lands. Our action in this matter would affect not only Uganda, but the whole of Africa, and would extend to long years after we had announced and acted on our decision.

In regard to the means needful to hold the country of Uganda, the evidence went to show that the peace of Uganda and of the neighbouring countries could be maintained at a very inconsiderable cost. Men spoke of "forts."

Did men know that a fort in Uganda was a mere stockade, constructed at the cost of a few shillings, yet was sufficient to withstand attack? He did not see the slightest reason for believing that the cost of policing Uganda would be anything more than the taxation of the country could bear. We had had the same question over and over again in every one of the barbarous regions of South Africa, and in all cases it had been found that the discretion and prudence of a few English officers had made it possible to keep the peace without one single farthing of expense to the English Exchequer. Mention had been made of the dangers from outsiders—the Mahdis and the Senoussis. Mahdism was not to be feared any more. It was a periodic outburst of fanaticism which was nearly exhausted, and in a very short time the Soudan would fall like a ripe pear into the lap of Egypt He made that prediction with confidence. Senoussi was a person of a very different character, and it was very difficult to prophesy what might be the future of the party he led. Putting aside these two impossible hypotheses, there was no reason to believe that the cost of our protectorate or rule in Uganda was likely to be anything but moderate in the first instance, and nothing at all in the course of a very few years. As to the commerce of Uganda, the late Mr. Mackay, the missionary, universally respected, had said that the climate of Uganda was excellent, that the country could produce almost anything, and that the only difficulty was the want of transport. How could they expect commerce in Uganda, when the cost per ton of traffic to and from the coast was £200? North-West Canada, fifty years ago, and until the railway was constructed, had no commerce. The prospect in Uganda at this moment was as good as had been the prospect in North-West Canada fifty years ago. That was what Lord Rosebery meant when he talked of pegging out claims for futurity. Lord Rosebery was sensible that our return could not be immediate, but he ventured to prophesy that our return at some time or another was almost certain. The policy of the Government seemed to him to be merely drifting, and they might just as well make a bold stand at once, because the result would be the same. They had committed themselves as much by sending out this mission as by facing the people of this country and saying they were going to retain Uganda and to make the best of it (hear, hear). How much time, however, were they going to waste before they made the best of it? Nothing could be made of the country unless the Government were prepared to carry out the railway, which it was said would cost two and a-half or three millions, although the present view of those who know the country best was that it would be quite sufficient to make a railway for 300 miles up to the mountains, and the traffic could be carried the rest of the way by porterage. This would cost about a million and a-half; but whether the railway cost that sum or three millions, if we were going to stop there, we should have to spend the money or, in other words, guarantee the interest upon it. He firmly believed that the country with the railway would pay, and that the railway would be a good investment. Besides, this money would be spent amongst the people of the slums and the working people of this country, as the whole of the work would be done in this country, and the line engineered by our countrymen. He believed that the chances of this railway were every bit as good as the railways which this country made thirty years ago in the Peninsula of India, which were now bringing in a good revenue. This railway would bring us into contact with 12 000,000 of people, as, besides the people of Uganda, there was the population of the conterminous States to be considered. Thus a large commerce would probably spring up. Then, with regard to the slave trade, he said that the railway would do more to suppress that abominable traffic than could be accomplished by any other expenditure of the same sum. People did not make slaves through love of cruelty or mischief, but they did so because they made their livelihood by it. The people were taken in order to carry burdens to the coast, and when they had done that they were sold. But if the slave-trading Arabs were given the means of a decent, honest, and respectable livelihood, he did not believe they enjoyed war so much that they would prefer war to peaceful opportunities which might be offered to them. They had never found a case in which it was more profitable for a nation or tribe to keep the peace that they had failed to do so. The railway would take away three-quarters, and, he believed, almost the whole, temptation which existed to carry on this trade, and as he was in earnest in his desire to suppress it, regarding the part which this country had taken in former times as one of our great glories, he thought this money should be spent. In former years we had spent as much in sending a squadron, which only increased its horrors, to put down the trade. He hoped that the Government would take this debate to heart. They got no credit from either side by taking a middle course (cheers).

Digitized by Google

Here we have, then, a patriotic statesman speaking from a secular point of view, and yet urging the Government of the day to carry out for his country an Israelitish destiny. We must hold Africa for the good of its inhabitants, and because of the power and advantage its retention will bring to our own nation. Holding Uganda we shall retain our hold on Egypt, the key or Gate of the route to India and the East. We can, holding Uganda, fulfil another of Israel's functions by killing the slave trade and benefiting lawful commerce. We spend large sums now on the maintenance of the naval squadrons for the extermination of the trade, but the result is unsatisfactory, and the hellish trade goes on. Mr. Chamberlain believes the railway from Uganda to the East Coast would cheaply destroy the trade in men, and show the Arab traders "a better way." We are glad the subject has the powerful advocacy of Mr. Chamberlain, and hope that as he is so far on the road with us, he may ere long be led to see that our nation, which is so fast occupying the earth, and adding to its own wealth while labouring for the good of the nations, can be no other than God's chosen people Israel, fulfilling their own special prophecies, "set high above all the nations of the earth," "blossoming and budding" for Christ, "and filling the face of the world" with Gospel "fruit." To Him let Israel give all the praise, and let Mr. Chamberlain also not forget to do the same!

THE TRIBE OF BENJAMIN.

By W. H. Larkins, Lieut. Col.

Joseph and Benjamin were the two youngest sons of Jacob by his wife, Rachael, who died after giving birth to the latter. She called him Benoni, the son of my sorrow; but his father called him Benjamin, the son of my right hand (Gen. xxxv. 16—19). The aged patriarch, Jacob, on his deathbed called his sons together, and told them what should befall them in the last days: "Benjamin shall ravin as a wolf: in the morning he shall devour the prey, and at night he shall divide the spoil" (Gen. xlix. 27). The exact construction to be given to these words is no very easy matter to define, but when taken in connection with the meaning of the name given to Benjamin, the son of my right hand, they might be taken as pointing to their becoming a powerful and warlike race, and this they proved themselves to be. The blessing of Moses is quite of a different character altogether, pointing to Benjamin's dwelling in safety under the cover of the Lord, "The beloved of the Lord shall dwell in safety by Him; and the Lord shall cover him all the day long, and he shall dwell between His shoulders" (Deut. xxxiii. 12).

An incident occurred in the history of Benjamin which is worthy of notice, but space would not permit of my entering into the circumstances that led to, or into the particulars of the horrible crime committed at Gibeah, within the borders of Benjamin, and the perpetrators of which they refused to surrender to the congregation of Israel assembled at Shiloh, then the central seat of Government of the Tribes of Israel. Full particulars of the incident referred to will be found in Judges xviii. 19—21, and it will be sufficient for me to say that the refusal to give up the offenders to justice, brought down upon Benjamin the united strength of Israel, and Gibeah was assailed by 400,000 men of war, and the obstinate resistance offered, and the gallant manner in which the Benjamites, with a mere handful of men (26,000), three successive days drove back the overpowering masses of their enemies, with terrific slaughter, fully testified to their valour and the warlike character of the Tribe of Benjamin, as foretold by the dying patriarch Jacob. The misfortune that befell Benjamin in this matter was a just retribution for their misconduct, and is clearly traceable to the hand of the Almighty, for on being enquired of, "The Lord said, Go up; for to-morrow I will deliver them into your hand" (Judges xx. 28), and when reduced to a skeleton of 600 men, the hand of the same merciful Lord might be seen interposing in behalf of "His beloved Tribe," and by devising means by which the possibility of the Tribe becoming extinct might be averted. Every man, woman, and child, with the exception of 600 men already referred to, were destroyed, and the men of the other Tribes had sworn not to give their daughters in marriage to Benjamin, how then was the danger to be averted was a matter of very serious consideration, but the means devised, and the remarkable manner in which they were carried out, seems to me to point to something more than human means could effect. It was discovered that none of the men of Jabesh-gilead came up before the Lord at Mizpeh, and consequently that place was destroyed, together with the whole of the inhabitants, with the exception of 400 maidens, who were brought away alive, and made over to the remnant of Benjamin for wives. This did not, however, complete the number required, and it was suggested that there was an annual feast of the Lord at Shiloh, when the maidens came out to dance, and the men of Benjamin were told by the elders of the congregation of Israel to lie in wait for them, and when they came to the dance each man was to come out and carry off his wife (Judges xxi.). This they did, and thus the whole of the remnant of Benjamin were supplied with Israelitish maidens for wives, and all fear of this Tribe being cut off from Israel was removed. In their refusal to give up the offenders to justice, the Benjamites brought a just retribution upon themselves, and as their brethren had bound themselves by an oath not to give their daughters in marriage to Benjamin, unless some means had been devised to supply the remnant of 600 with wives, the Tribe of Benjamin must have become extinct.

Digitized by Google

Up to this period of their history, the children of Israel had no king, having been ruled by judges up to the time of Samuel, but at length they asked for a king to rule over them, and Samuel was commanded to anoint Saul, the son of Kish, a Benjamite, to be king over Israel. Saul was a valiant man, and of great stature, but was subject to fits of frenzy and mental aberration. Saul disobeyed the command of the Lord in sparing the life of Agag, king of Amelek, and retaining the best of the sheep and the oxen, and the Lord rejected him from being king; and Samuel the prophet was commanded to anoint David, the son of Jesse of Bethlehem, in Judah, to be king over Israel in place of Saul, who was subsequently killed in battle with the Philistines. His body was decapitated, and the head carried away, but the body was recovered by the men of Jabesh-gilead, and buried by them. The remains were subsequently removed by King David to his native place, Zelah, in Benjamin, and there interred. The patriarch Jacob divided the rights of primogeniture between Judah and Joseph, assigning to the former the sceptre or chief ruler, from which the promised Messiah was to come; but the birthright forfeited by Reuben for misconduct was conferred upon Joseph (Gen. xlix. 10, 1 Chron. v. 1). This was the first step pointing to the future division of the Tribes into two Houses, with Joseph at the head of the Ten-tribed House of Israel, and Judah at the head of the Two-tribed House of Judah.

King Solomon had numerous wives, many of whom were daughters of the heathen nations, who turned away his heart from the worship of Jehovah to that of strange gods, and therefore the Lord said, "I will rend the kingdom from thee, and give it to thy servant (Jeroboam); not in thy days, but I will rend it out of the hand of thy son. Howbeit I will not rend the whole kingdom; but will give thy son one Tribe for My servant David's sake" (1 Kings xi. 11—13). Words to the same effect were spoken by Ahija, the Shilonite, to Jeroboam, and the reason assigned why these nine Tribes had been given to Jeroboam was "Because they have forsaken Me, and served strange gods" (1 Kings xi. 30—33), and the one out of the Ten Tribes was given to Rehoboam "in order that David My servant might have light always before Me in Jerusalem, the city which I have chosen Me to place My name there" (1 Kings xi. 36).

The kingdom was rent on the death of Solomon (B.C. 975), and divided into two Houses or kingdoms—namely, that of Israel or Joseph, and Judah. The House of Israel comprised Ten Tribes, of which Benjamin was one; and the remaining two Tribes of Judah and Levi formed the House of Judah. Beyond the fact that one of the Ten-tribed House of Israel was to be given to Rehoboam, the name of the Tribe chosen to furnish a light in Jerusalem is not given; but when Rehoboam returned to Jerusalem from Shechem, we are told "He assembled all the House of Judah with the Tribe of Benjamin to bring back the kingdom" (1 Kings xii. 20, 21), and this is the only indication we have that Benjamin was the Tribe selected for this special divine purpose. Rehoboam went to Shechem, which is in Mount Ephraim, where all Israel were come to make him king, and when he returned to Jerusalem, he assembled the men of Judah and Benjamin, thereby clearly proving that Benjamin was not present with the other Tribes of the House of Israel at Shechem, but remained at Jerusalem (1 Kings xii. 1 and 21). The reason why this Tribe in particular was selected for special duty we are not told, but there are certain circumstances connected with the history of this Tribe bearing on the question, which are worthy of notice. First of all Benjamin was "the beloved of the Lord"; second, it was a royal Tribe, having given the first king to Israel; third, they were connected by marriage with the royal Tribe of Judah; fourth, Judah and Benjamin jointly occupied Jerusalem and Mount Zion, the possession of the Jebusites; lastly, because they, the nine Tribes given to Jeroboam, had forsaken the Lord, their God, and worshipped strange gods; whereas Benjamin, we may fairly assume, was not at that time tainted with idolatry (1 Kings xi. 33); but whether any of these circumstances had anything to do with the choice of Benjamin or not I will not venture to offer an opinion.

The history of Benjamin is peculiar, as one of the Ten-tribed House of Israel, and yet separated from that House and attached to the House of Judah for upwards of 1,000 years, from B.C. 975, to within a year of the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans A.D. 70; so that the history of the House of Israel during the period just referred to affords no clue to the history of Benjamin.

Digitized by Google

Hosea began to prophecy in B.C. 785, some 200 years after the separation of Benjamin from the House of Israel, and if we turn to those prophecies contained in Hosea i. 4, 6, 9, we shall find they applied only to the nine idolatrous Tribes that constituted "the kingdom" of the House of Israel, and did not embrace Benjamin; and it seems to me that in making use of the expression, "The kingdom of the House of Israel" not to be found elsewhere, the prophet was drawing a distinction between "the kingdom of the House," and "the House of Israel," the former comprising nine Tribes and the latter Ten, for Benjamin never formed a part of that kingdom of Samaria, nor was subject to any of its rulers. It was the kingdom that was to cease to exist, that was to go into captivity, and that was to be pronounced Lo-ammi, "Not My people." None of these calamities befell the Tribe of Benjamin, clearly showing that those prophecies referred to did not apply to that Tribe, or they would most assuredly have had their fulfilment in Benjamin as in the other nine Tribes of the House of Israel; but this was not the case, for Benjamin did not go into captivity with the House of Israel, nor was this Tribe uncovenanted or divorced from the Mosaic covenant of the law.

That Benjamin formed a part of the kingdom of Judah there can be little doubt, as they were subject to its rulers, and fought side by side with Judah on all occasions, even against their own brethren in Samaria; but the position of the tribe in connection with the House of Judah is not very easy to define, for in 1 Kings xi. Benjamin is spoken of apart from Judah, but after this to the end of the two books of Kings there is no further mention of this tribe. In Jer. xxiv. 3 again they are not named, but referred to as "them that were carried away captive of Judah,"—namely, the good figs sent away out of Jerusalem to Babylon for their good, but Judah, the bad figs, for their hurt (ver. 3—9).

Jeremiah the prophet was a native of Anathoth, one of the villages assigned to the Levites in the borders of Benjamin, and consequently there is more information to be obtained regarding this tribe from Jeremiah than from any of the other prophets, as, for instance, the warning to Benjamin in chap. vi., and again in chap. xxiv., where he predicts the Babylonish captivity. No mention is made of this tribe by name, but there can be little doubt that the two baskets of figs represent the Two Tribes of Benjamin and Judah. The latter are the bad figs, so bad they could not be eaten, to be removed for their hurt (ver. 8, 9), and the former, "as these good figs, so will I acknowledge them that are carried away captive of Judah for their good" (ver. 3). "I will bring them again into this land; they shall know that I am the Lord, and they shall return unto Me with their whole heart" (ver. 6, 7). It is evident from these extracts that even in the case of the beloved tribe of Benjamin there must have been a slight turning away from the worship of Jehovah and that their hearts were not altogether perfect with the Lord their God when the prophet speaks of their returning to Him with their whole heart. This the captivity to Babylon for 70 years we may be sure effected. Ezra and Nehemiah both mention the return of Benjamin, with Judah and Levi, from Babylon in B.C. 536 to their own land, but they were no longer an independent kingdom, but subject to the Roman ruler, and from this time for the ensuing 500 odd years we know nothing about Benjamin until the first advent when John the Baptist, as the forerunner of Christ, among other duties that devolved upon him, was that of "making ready a people prepared for the Lord" (Luke i 17).

Who were the people referred to? They were not the Jews, for when they came to John's baptism he addressed them as a "generation of vipers" (Luke iii. 7). Benjamin was the only one of the Ten-tribed House of Israel present in the land at the time, and as the other tribes were far beyond the sphere of the Baptist's mission, which did not extend beyond the borders of Judea, we have good grounds for believing that the children of Benjamin were the people referred to. When Christ came they accepted Him at once as the promised Messiah, and from the moment of their conversion the law became a dead letter to them, for Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth (Rom. x. 4), and they came under the new covenant of grace promised to the House of Israel (Jer. xxxi. 31; Heb. x. 16, 17).

It would be unreasonable, under such circumstances, to suppose that Benjamin, the beloved of the Lord Jesus Christ, the pioneer of Christianity, and the first fruits of Israel unto Christ, was in any way implicated in the crucifixion, for this was the act of those whom John the Baptist stigmatized as a "generation of vipers" and our Lord termed hypocrites—namely, the Scribes and Pharisees—and had Benjamin taken any part in that cruel act we may rest assured the same punishment would have been meted out to them which befell the Jews.

The Tribe of Benjamin was given to Rehoboam to furnish light in Jerusalem during our Lord's mission and to become the lightbearers of the Gospel, when rejected by the Jews, to their brethren, the lost sheep of the House of Israel, and eventually to the Gentiles. And who were these lightbearers of the Gospel but the apostles of our Lord who were generally supposed to be Galileans from the fact of St. Peter, when in the hall of the palace of the High Priest, being recognized as one of our Lord's disciples from his Galilean tongue (Matt. xxvi. 73), but exclusive of this, with two or three exceptions, it can be shown that they were all either natives of or residents in Galilee. For instance, James the less and Jude were both of Nazareth, Simon Zelotes was of Cana in Galilee, Simon Peter, his brother Andrew, John and James, the sons of Zebedee, Philip, and Nathanael were all of Bethsaida; Matthew, also called Levi, was called when at the seat of custom in Galilee; Judas Iscariot was of Judah, and as regards Thomas nothing is known, but doubtless he was a Galilean like the rest.

That the apostles were Galileans there can be but little doubt, and although there may be an absence of proof in some few cases to show they were Israelites, yet there is ample evidence to prove that as a body they were so, including St. Paul, who himself tells us that he was an Israelite of the Tribe of Benjamin (Rom. xi. 1). James the less and Judas Iscariot were of the Tribe of Judah; Simon Zelotes was one of the sect of the Zelots who were strict observers of the rites of the Mosaic law, therefore an Israelite; Nathanael our Lord Himself addressed as an Israelite in whom there was no guile (John i. 47); St. Paul, when he met St. Peter at Antioch, addressed him as a Jew in these words, "If thou, being a Jew by nature," &c. (Gal. ii. 14). St. Paul called himself a Jew having been brought up as a Pharisee, but he was not of the tribe of Judah, but a Benjamite. It must be remembered, however, that all of the captivity on their return from Babylon came under the general denomination of Jews, but the term applied more especially to the Tribe of Judah. St. Peter was a Jew, so was his brother Andrew, and of the remaining five there is nothing to prove individually that they were Israelites, although in the case of the two sons of Zebedee, who were fishermen residing in the same village of Bethsaida as Peter and his brother, and being partners together in the same craft, there are very strong grounds for believing they were Israelitish brethren; and the same would hold good as regards Philip, also a fisherman of Bethsaida, on the sea of Galilee.

Digitized by Google

When the twelve were assembled at Jerusalem after the resurrection and the Lord appeared unto them, they asked Him, "Wilt Thou at this time restore the kingdom of Israel?" (Acts i.). If the apostles had not been Israelites why should they have concerned themselves about the restoration of the kingdom to Israel? On another occasion, when our Lord told them how hard it was for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heaven, in answer to St. Peter He said, "Verily I say unto you that ye which have followed Me in the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit on the throne of His glory, ye also shall sit on the twelve thrones judging the Twelve Tribes of Israel (Matt. xix. 1—3). The disciples on a certain occasion, while passing through the cornfields plucking corn on the Sabbath-day, the Scribes and Pharisees asked why His disciples did that which it was unlawful to do on the Sabbath-day? The Pharisees, of course, referred to the law of the ten commandments, but unless those of whom they complained were amenable to the same law their charge of a breach of the fourth commandment was futile and groundless, for that law applied only to Israel.

Other instances might be adduced—such as "that of sitting down to eat with unwashen hands, contrary to the traditions of the elders (Mark vii. 2—5), and the sitting at meat with publicans and sinners" (Luke xv. 2)—but I think sufficient has been brought forward to establish the fact that the apostles as a whole were Israelites, and with, perhaps, three exceptions of the Tribe of Benjamin. Another point that might have been advanced in favour of the assumption that the apostles were Israelites is the fact that after their return from the Babylonish captivity, Benjamin extended its borders, taking in Gilead, half of which formerly belonged to the half tribe of Manasseh and the other half to Gad, thus bringing Benjamin's borders in close proximity to the south-east side of the sea of Galilee, whilst Bethsaida is situated on the north-west shore of that sea, in Lower Galilee, which embraced Nazareth, Capernaum, Chorazin, Cana, etc. (Obed. 19).

When the divine purpose for which they had been lent to the House of Judah was accomplished, Benjamin, together with the whole of the Hebrew converts, left Jerusalem about a year or so previous to the destruction of that city by the Romans (A.D. 70). In taking this step the children of Benjamin were no doubt acting out the warning of Jeremiah (chap. vi. 1, 2), when they saw "evil appearing out of the North, and great destruction, to flee out of the midst of Jerusalem unto the mountains," and our Lord Himself repeated a similar warning to the twelve in the following words: "When ye see the abomination of desolation spoken of by the prophet Daniel standing in the holy place or where it ought not, then let every one that is in Judea flee to the mountains" (Matt. xxiv. 15; Mark xiii. 14). St. Paul later on, as the time drew nigh for the fulfilment of the judgments, denounced by our Lord against the Jews and their city, addressed an epistle to his brethren who had become converts to Christianity, warning them not so much with reference to the calamities that would soon befall the Jews, but exhorting them to make use of the time of grace —that is to say 'to-day," while they had the opportunity, and not to harden their hearts as their fathers did in the wilderness where they perished, not being permitted to enter into the promised land, lest any of them should fall short of that rest that remaineth for the people of God (Heb. iii., iv.). St. Paul's epistle to the Hebrews was addressed chiefly to his brethren of the Tribe of Benjamin who had become converts to Christianity, but there are good grounds for believing that a very large portion of the priests and Levites turned away from Judaism and joined the Church of Christ, for it is announced more than once in the acts of the apostles "that many were added to the church both of Priests and Levites," and this epistle would apply equally to them as well as to all converts to Christianity.

Up to the time of the crucifixion, by the presence of Benjamin, there was still a link binding the two Houses together, but the crucifixion severed the bands of brotherhood between Judah and Israel. When the Benjamites left Jerusalem for Pella, Judah was left in the isolated position predicted by Moses in Deut. xxxiii. 7.

Bromley, Kent, January, 1893.

THE LATE REV. DR. DUFF ON THE INFLUENCE OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE IN INDIA.

By Joseph Thomson.

The following is the testimony of the Rev. Dr. Duff, missionary of the Church of Scotland in India, respecting the influence of the English language in that country at a date now over fifty years ago. He said, "With regard to the medium of teaching in our institution, it is English, . . . the grand medium by which all our knowledge is conveyed, is the English language. This has led some to think that our scheme is to eradicate the native languages altogether, and substitute English universally in their place. No such thing was ever dreamt of; no such conspiracy against the languages of India ever entered our imagination. . . . We declare, without fear of contradiction, that the vernacular languages alone are available for imparting an elementary education to the mass of the people of Hindoostan; but insist on, as a fact, that these languages do not at present afford an adequate medium for communicating a knowledge of the higher departments of literature, science, and theology. For such a purpose these dialects do not contain a sufficient number and variety of terms; and even if they did, there are no original writings, and not enough translated, nor will be, for centuries to come. The English language, and it alone, is found to supply the necessary medium. It is accordingly employed as the only adequate instrument for conveying every branch of useful knowledge, with the view of raising up a higher order of men, who shall spread a healthful influence throughout India. The English language in India holds the same place now, which the Latin and Greek did in Europe at the Reformation. Our reformers did not obtain their information in the vernacular tongues, because these did not contain it. They had to search for it in those ancient languages. But, by degrees, some of the European languages have become so enriched by the incorporation of foreign terms, that the necessity of studying the ancient ones, as media of knowledge, is in a great measure superseded. Precisely similar is the case of India. Do we want to raise up there a class of men who shall have the stamp, and character, and energy of reformers? If so, they must be the recipients of a higher knowledge. And where is this knowledge to be acquired? Not, surely, in the native languages, which have it not; but in that modern language which has it all in highest perfection—the English. And when the former become sufficiently enriched by a copious infusion of expressive terms, the latter may, as a medium of gathering knowledge, be altogether dispensed with. Thus, for the present, must the English language in India be viewed as the medium of acquisition to the thoroughly educated few; and the vernacular dialects to the ordinarily educated many. . . . The former unseals the inexhaustible fountain of all knowledge; the latter serve as ducts to diffuse its vivifying waters over the wastes of a dry and parched land. . . . The English language is the lever which, as an instrument, is destined to move all Hindoostan. This naturally leads me to refer to a crisis in the history of India which seems now approaching. If the communication of useful knowledge will destroy the ancient Hindoo systems; and if the English language cannot be thoroughly mastered without such knowledge being acquired, what follows? The universal spread of English would prove the universal death knell of the Hindoo systems. And what next? One almost shrinks from the contemplation of it. Weigh the facts of the case. Already in Calcutta, Allahabad, Delhi, and other stations, there are government seminaries established, where English is taught without religion. And the demand for English is likely soon to increase ten-fold, if not a hundred fold. The reason is obvious. Till very recently, the language universal in India, as the language of government business, has been the Persian, whose attainment will not enlighten, though it may greatly darken the mind, and vitiate the heart. At present there is a strong disposition to abolish it, and substitute English in its place. About two years ago (i.e., about 1837) it was abolished in the political department of government. This change has already begun to work. In the great native courts, instead of a Persian, in future an English secretary must be supported: and the next step is to send for an English schoolmaster. In some instances these two offices have been conjoined, so that in several of the palaces of the rajahs there is now an English school. Owing to this substitution of the English for the Persian language, a considerable sensation has taken place. The present noble and enlightened Governor (Lord Auckland) has given intensity to this sensation. Instead of sending, as heretofore, presents of cashmere shawls, and other Oriental ornaments to the different princes, he has, with a wisdom peculiar to himself, as Governor-general of India, resolved, in most cases, to substitute something more profitable; such as globes, atlases, telescopes, microscopes, barometers, thermometers, and English spelling-books, with large pictures in them to suit Eastern taste; often accompanying them with a note to this effect—'That, having understood that such a person was aware of the great difference between the learning of the East and of the West, he wished he would, by comparison, ascertain the nature and amount of those differences, and, at his own convenience, acquaint him with the result of his enquiries.' Such requisition was admirably calculated to stimulate curiosity; and the consequence has been that, from Burmah to the Indus, there has been, more or less, a demand for English books and English teachers." (From "The Sacred Star," 1839, pp. 19—195).

Digitized by Google

Who cannot see in this testimony of the learned Dr. Duff the immense influence of the English language in India, which he could see fifty years ago looming in the near future, a great confirmation of the truth of the Identity? The history of India, and its connection with this country during the past half century, is a history of which any country might be proud—for having been made the instrument of imparting much good to a large portion of the human race. Christianity teaches us that all things are wisely directed by a beneficent and supreme Power, who delights in being called "Our Father," by His children, and whose will is that the happiness of mankind should be increased. To this end England—the English power, and the English language have been used; and now we behold, as the result, a vast increase in the temporal comfort, spiritual welfare, and ultimate destiny of many millions of our fellow men. And all this indisputable improvement has been brought about by the secondary agencies we have just mentioned. Why, and how is this? Because, as Revelation informs us, God had long ago determined that He would make of Abraham "a great nation," a promise never made to any other. This people Israel "is to blossom and bud, and fill the face of the earth with fruit"; this is the nation God has "formed" for Himself, that they, by their works, and they alone, should "show forth His praise" (Gen. xii. 1—3; xvii. 3—8; Isa. xxvii. 6; xliii. 21). God's instrument in the regeneration of the world, is His people Israel, and not a temporarily favoured Gentile power. According to the plain statements of the Bible, this is Israel's rôle, and cannot be delegated, even for a time of preparation, to any other. But we find indisputable facts showing that England is now doing this work: hence our conclusion, that the English people must be Israel, known by "another name" (Isa. lxv. 15), as God Himself is true.

A FORECAST IN 1842.

By E. M Rush.

A CORRESPONDENT has brought to light an article written fifty years ago which gives a wonderful view and forecast of "England's Destiny," which will be read no doubt with astonishment by many, seeing that the years that have elapsed witness to the coming to pass of what was then foretold. More than this is to be observed the keen appreciation which is shown by the unknown writer of the proud position and great influences for good of the highest order which had been given as a blessing to our nation.

Were it not for internal proof that will readily be detected we might surely have said, "This has been written in these days by a conscious Anglo-Israelite." An original number of the magazine in which the article appeared is in my hands, bearing unmistakeably the marks of its fifty years' service.

While introducing this article to the readers of the BANNER, I would beg them to remark the spirit in which it is written, that spirit which should animate us all in setting forth the truth of the present revelation of Israel, remembering how momentous is the question! how great our responsibility! how utterly we must fail in all our endeavours if we attempt it in our own wisdom, in our own strength, and for a lesser object than for the ultimate glory of the Lord (Col. iii. 23); for as the writer of the article truly observes, the great power we have given us is "above all, and before all [his own italics, as elsewhere in the article], for the hallowed purpose of planting the glorious standard of the cross among benighted heathens and idolaters—of inculcating, by precept and example, in Europe, Asia, Africa, and America, the supreme laws of Omniscience—and in the fulfilment of their destiny thus establishing the kingdom of Christ upon earth."

Must it not be granted assuredly by us all, that had the great and necessary work, indicated by this unknown writer,

Digitized by Google

been undertaken and prosecuted throughout the past fifty years, not for mere self interest, nor even forwarded only for the temporal good of our poorer neighbours, but for Christ's sake; if in His name we had endeavoured to go forth to blossom and bud and fill the face of the earth with fruit for Him, that long ere this greater and better results would have been achieved for our teeming population, and for the increase of righteousness amongst the peoples that should have resounded in heartfelt praise to the Lord in all the earth.

Westgate-on-Sea, Jan. 26, 1893.

"ENGLAND'S DESTINY—COLONIZATION.

"PART I.

"FROM THE 'COLONIAL MAGAZINE AND COMMERCIAL-"MARITIME JOURNAL,' VOL. VII., NO 26.

"ENGLAND! Old England!! Young England!!! There is a magic power in thy name; it involves past, present, future; it is identified with physical power, moral worth, intellectual greatness, the blessings of peace, the triumphs of civilization, the glorious progress of Christianity, are all thine; wealth unbounded is within the vast domain of thy Empire; thy fleets cover every ocean, and thy dauntless navigators penetrate the thick-ribbed icy barriers of the Poles, the strongest fortresses, the richest plains, the noblest rivers, the most beautiful islands, the securest havens in either Ind, are all beneath thy sway. In the New World and in the Old thy supremacy is acknowledged, and on the continental, insular, and peninsular shores of the four quarters of the globe, thy cross-stricken banner indicates the abode of virtue and va'our, of peace and piety, of civilization and Christianity. A thousand years have witnessed thy duration as a Christian kingdom. The first Christian emperor* drew his earliest breath within thy isle, the first Christian king† sat upon thy throne, by thee has the revealed Word of God been translated into every written language, and by thee disseminated among all the nations of the earth.

"Was this vast territorial power, this almost illimitable mental energy, this extraordinary moral influence, given thee for thy sole and temporary benefit? or was it vouchsafed to thee from on high for the grand and beneficent purpose of peopling the desert places, for reclaiming the wild savage, for enforcing peace and order where strife and discord heretofore reigned, for interchanging the products of industry between man and man, introducing art and science, bringing the most distant regions into constant, safe, and speedy communication; for establishing the foundations of civil government—above all and before all, for the hallowed purpose of planting the glorious standard of the cross among benighted heathens and idolaters—of inculcating by precept and example in Europe, Asia, Africa, and America the supreme laws of Omniscience, and in the fulfilment of thy destiny thus establishing the kingdom of Christ upon earth?

"This is a serious, solemn question. In the vain and worldly-minded it may raise emotions of pride and self-satisfaction; in the Christian it must excite thoughtful feelings, and, if responded to affirmatively, he will with humility acknowledge his own utter want of merit for the fulfilment of the sacred purposes assigned to him; with trembling distrust of himself he will endeavour to regulate all his thoughts and actions in conformity with the Almighty will, and, like David, he will then go forth confiding in that divine power, without which all human efforts are worthless, but which, when vouchsafed, converts feebleness into strength, humility into greatness, poverty into wealth, suffering into happiness, and a temporal into an eternal kingdom.

"England, then, viewed in this exalted aspect, is not merely a name; it is the representative of a principle; it is to Christianity what Jerusalem was to Judaism; it is a light set upon a hill, which the Gentile may behold from afar; it is a well, ever 'springing with the living water, of which whosoever drinketh he will never thirst again.' Her mission is to establish heaven's first law, Order,—to strike the fetter from the slave, and to bid the bond go free: 'to be fruitful, to multiply and replenish the earth' (Gen. ix. 1); to subdue evil, to proclaim peace and good-will from man to man, to make this world an educational abode for another and better stage of existence, by expounding, and if necessary enforcing, that moral and divine law, which the Creator has in mercy revealed for the guidance and the government of his creatures.

And how is England to fulfil this high behest? By means of colonization! Everything material, mental, and moral connected with her existence and position indicates that such is her destiny. "The British islands are of comparatively small extent—sufficiently distant from the adjacent continent to preserve their insularity complete, yet advantageously placed for rapid communication with different regions; their coasts are indented with capacious harbours, and yet subjected to dangers which require skill, perseverance, and courage in those who navigate the contiguous shores, the climate is extremely salubrious, well adapted for the preparation of various useful products, and even in its severity calculated to compel to provident care and industry on the part of those who would otherwise suffer from its rigours and vicissitudes; the soil in some places abundantly rewards the labours of the husbandman, in others yields a rich mine of metallic wealth, and almost everywhere furnishes an ample and cheap supply of fuel; the horse (?), ox, sheep, swine, and poultry are of the most superior breeds and extensively consumed; the rivers and adjoining seas abound with the greatest variety of fish and of the finest qualities, yielding a profitable employment to a hardy and valuable class of men. Such are a few of the material characteristics of the British islands. The mental and moral features are not less striking. The population is of great density (about three hundred mouths to the square mile) and derived from various races, including the aboriginal Britons and Celts, the Romans, Danes or Northmen, Saxons, etc.; each contributing some valuable quality for the better fulfilment of the arduous duties assigned to the nation of which they constitute a part. Among these qualities we may enumerate physical courage and indomitable perseverance—a fondness for maritime pursuits, remarkable industry, an instinctive love of order, a respect for rank and hereditary power, producing a ready obedience to law and authority; capacity for self-government, combined with a manly submission to monarchical rule which, next to theocracy, seems the best adapted for the attainment and maintenance of political liberty; a sedulous fulfilment of the duties and an enhanced appreciation of the enjoyments of domestic life; an attachment to the localities of birth, or position, or circumstances, yet conjoined with a spirit of enterprise, a desire for nautical adventure and a thirst for novelty and dangerous pursuits cherishing in a remarkable degree liberty corporeal, political, and moral,—and, as a natural consequence, reverencing truth; strongly imbued with a feeling of superiority to all other nations, yet generally exercising vast strength and immense resources for their benefit, rather than with an immediate view to personal advantage; possessing an innate selfishness, which requires the constant watchfulness of a

* The Emperor Constantine, born at York. † Egbert.

Digitized by Google

nobler principle, justice, to prevent its extreme development, and the necessarily injurious results. To these (and many other qualities, good and bad, might be enumerated) may be added an extraordinary language, which appears to be compounded of various tongues, and which is capable of receiving (and is daily receiving) new additions from almost every spoken or written dialect—a language copious, yet terse; vigorous, yet harmonious; complex, yet clear; well adapted for the Senate and the Pulpit by its majestic and solemn sonorousness, yet equally suited to the Exchange and the Theatre by its facile and flexible constructiveness; a language in fact which seems designed for being the universal medium of communication among mankind. One more quality remains to be noticed; it is one essentially conducive to the purpose for which it appears England is designed by an overruling Providence, and without this one quality all the preceding ones would but serve temporary purposes, and produce no permanent useful results.

"No nation that has ever preceded England in the history of mankind has evinced the same love of pure religion; the same ardent desire to extend its blessed influence; the same unflinching determination to preserve it from the contamination of corrupting dogmas, tenets, and examples, whether arising from within her own precincts or from her intercourse with foreign and distant lands. Typically, she may be said to be the earthly representative of the Church, whose offspring shall be nations of which kings shall be the fathers and queens the nursing mothers. Like the early Christians, she has passed through tribulation and suffering; she has had her martyrs, her temptations, and trials, but steadfast in faith, the Anglo-Saxon Church has maintained with renovated strength an undefiled spiritual worship at home, while she has preached the Gospel and sent forth the glad tidings of salvation to all other lands.

"If the truth of the foregoing statement be acknowledged, it will lead to the conclusion, that the present position of England has been designed by the Creator and Governor of the Universe for the more efficient fulfilment of her mission. The rapid augmentation of her population—the remarkable application of machinery to purposes heretofore supposed to be confined entirely to skilled manual labour, thus rendering the increase of a population of one thousand a day more and more felt in competitive efforts for self-preservation—the wonderful extension of steam-navigation, whereby Asia and America are brought within a few day's journey of Europe, thus diminishing the effect which distance has on even expansive and well-regulated minds—the imperative necessity which England now feels for acquiring new markets for the disposal of accumulating stocks of merchandise, or for the cheap and certain obtainment of the raw materials requisite for the continued employment of her manufacturing skill, the vent sought for the profitable remuneration for an abundance of dormant capital, and the impulsive instinct for the cultivation of new lands, and the growth and preparation of tropical products, all demonstrate that the most important, and the most urgent duty of England, at this moment, is colonization.

"It is unnecessary to inquire why the destiny of England should be colonization; we see that every nation, as every individual, has a destiny to fulfil—'to everything there is a season, and a time to every purpose under heaven.' Babylon, Nineveh, Tyre, Egypt, Athens, Carthage, Rome, all fulfilled some special destiny, and having completed the purpose for which they were permitted, they were swept away, to give place to other and superior powers. Thus, also, we see that noxious animals and plants perish before civilization and cultivation; and that whole races of mankind have been destroyed by reason of their idolatry, and vices, whose territories will ultimately be occupied by Christian races: "God shall enlarge Japhet" (Europe), and He shall dwell in the tents of Shem (Asia), and Canaan (Africa) shall be His servant" (Gen. ix. 27), by which we may understand that Europe (or Christianity) shall overspread Asia; and that Canaan (as the type of an idolatrous and sensual principle) shall be subjected to the doctrines of Christ, and become His servant. Foremost among the nations of Europe is England, and for the reasons before specified, her position and circumstances point her out as peculiarly the descendants of Japhet, who are to dwell in Asia, and to subdue the evil practices—slavery and idolatry—of Africa.

"It is deserving of deep consideration, that the Almighty did not permit England to commence her career of colonization until after the doctrines of the Reformation had been openly espoused by her Government, and the Bible printed into the languages used by the people. The period for the commencement of her mission had then arrived—it has continued uninterruptedly for three hundred years, and it is still in its infancy, but gathering new strength, while gradually its genial operating influence and lofty responsibility is more and more extensively felt and appreciated.

"No human efforts can ultimately retard the fulfilment of this divine mission. It will be well for those who do not oppose it—doubly, aye trebly well, will it be for those who aid forward, and with heart-felt joy accelerate, its progress. On its wings are borne glad tidings, to England we believe—'Thus saith the Lord, Listen, O isles, unto Me, and hearken, ye people from afar, in an acceptable time have I heard thee, and in a day of salvation have I helped thee; and I will preserve thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, to establish the earth, to cause to inherit the desolate heritages; that thou mayest say to the prisoners, Go forth; to them that are in darkness, Show yourselves. They shall not hunger, nor thirst; neither shall the heat or sun smite them; for he that hath mercy on them shall lead them, even by the springs of water shall he guide them. And I will make all my mountains a way, and my highways shall be exalted. Behold, these shall come from far; and lo, these from the north and from the west; and these from the land of Sinim . . . Behold, I will lift up mine hand to the Gentiles, and set up my standard to the people: and they shall bring thy sons in their arms, and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders. And kings shall be thy nursing-fathers, and their queens thy nursing-mothers; they shall bow down to thee with their face toward the earth, and lick up the dust of thy feet: and thou shalt know that I am the Lord; for they shall not be ashamed that wait for me. I will contend with him that contendeth with thee, and I will save thy children' (Isa. xlix., passim).

"Numerous and striking are the passages in Holy Writ which thus apparently point to England, and indicate her mighty mission. Why should any sane being wish it were otherwise? Why, on the contrary, ought not every Britain with a reflecting mind, humbly glorify God for making his country the instrument for advancing the welfare and happiness of mankind?

"Let each and all, in every degree, rank and class of society, from the sovereign on the throne, to the poorest peasant and mechanic, have this doctrine instilled into them by the ministers of religion. Let it sound from her pulpits, and resound through her schools and colleges. Why should not Oxford and Cambridge take the lead in this holy crusade for the extension of Christianity, accompanied by her handmaids—civilization and commerce? Why should not the younger branches of our justly exalted nobles lead forth bands of colonizing pilgrim fathers and found new Englands on the unoccupied shores of the Pacific? Why should not the paternal care of government—the embryo model of our time-honoured institution of Church and State accompany each colony, grow with its growth, and strengthen with its strength? O, that an inspired angel would breathe this vivifying, this ennobling principle of colonization in every ear throughout the land! then, indeed, would the wail of woe and the demon of discord cease to be heard and felt throughout these fair and favoured isles; then would the sound of alarm at foreign rivalry be hushed; and the advancement of France, Germany, Prussia, Russia, America, &c., in arts and commerce, be hailed with rejoicing, instead of being brooded over with envious eyes; then, indeed, would there be a cessation of that paltry, despicable, unnatural class animosity which has been so sedulously and banefully disseminated far and wide; then, indeed, the mischievous and selfish idea, that the interests of various classes in society are opposed to each other, would be removed, and each would feel rejoiced at the prosperity of his neighbour; the landlord, the manufacturer, and the merchant would find that their interests were reciprocal, and not antagonistic and that England's strength and welfare consists in her "unity," and that this unity may best be promoted by viewing her destiny as a nation to be, Colonization; and that by fulfilling that decree, her power and her glory will be preserved to her for ever."

Digitized by Google

TO AND FRO.

"In his 'Apocalyptic Scenes' article on February 9, Sir S. A. Blackwood, in agreement with ancient and modern expositors of repute, quoted Dan. xii. 4, as showing that at the time of the end many will search the prophecy of the book—'running to and fro' in its pages. A correspondent challenges this interpretation, and maintains that the verse refers to 'the increase of locomotion and the advance of science as witnessed in our day.' It is hardly needful to point out that mere human activity, whether in knowledge or travel, cannot possibly unfold or make plain predictions regarding the Kingdom of God, as the 'running to and fro' is said to do. The view taken by Sir Arthur Blackwood is that of the best lexicographers, who have set out significations not merely empirically, but also in the light of the analogy of languages."

By the above extract from the Christian of February the 23rd, it would appear that Sir Arthur Blackwood's "Ancient and Modern Expositors of Repute," and "The Best Lexicographers," are guilty of that, with which we are occasionally credited by our opponents, and can twist a scriptural passage to suit a foregone conclusion, to explain away a difficulty, or to throw doubts on circumstances that might lead to awkward conclusions—awkward according to their opinions.

The view stated in the extract, seems scarcely to be borne out by the passage (Dan. xii. 4), with which I cannot attempt to deal learnedly, but take simply as it appears in the English Bible. It strikes my ignorance as an extraordinary idea, even by the laws of spiritualizing which guide so many Bible students, that "running to and fro" should mean scanning the pages of a book which has just before, in the same verse, been stated to be "sealed to the end of time." What reason is there for supposing the expression to be used here in any other sense, than in Gen. iii. 7; 2 Kings iv. 35; Job i. 7; Isa. xxxiii. 4; Ezra xxvii. 19; Zech. vi. 7, &c. Assuredly it is a remarkable interpretation to give of a simple expression, to suppose going "to and fro" means studying a book erratically!

In the cutting from the Christian it is said "that mere human activity cannot possibly unfold or make plain predictions regarding the Kingdom of God, as the 'running to and fro' is said to do." Why not? The activity alone, if it is remarkable and exceptional as compared to all that has gone before, may very distinctly "unfold" the fulfilment of a prophecy. Also, if the running "to and fro" be that of many members of a Christian Nation, we may believe that a portion at least of this scattered people may be the means of conveying biblical knowledge throughout the world which would make plain the truths concerning the "Kingdom of God."

I may be unjustifiably suspicious, but the thought will creep in, that there is a decided disinclination on the part of the opponents of our Anglo-Israel belief to think any prophecy bears especially on our habits, blessings, privileges, or position in the world. With the Jews they would say, it is different; there is no mistaking the fact that the part they have played for centuries has been according to prophetic threats and that in the future they will enjoy foretold blessings. But for us to suppose that we British are conspicuously carrying out what was foretold of Israel is presumption or craziness!

And yet we, as a people, and including our Colonists and our American brothers, are "running to and fro," beyond, I imagine, any other people in the world. We can almost suppose that we do this to such an extent, that to exceed the frequency and rapidity of our present restless rushings would necessitate a super-human alteration of our present capabilities of heart, brain, and lungs, that we might bear without physical annihilation the perpetual excitement and fatigue!

It is remarkable that the last sentence in verse 4 refers to a notable fact in our present circumstances; for not only is scientific knowledge increasing amongst the learned, but general knowledge has made extraordinary advances in the "masses" of our countrymen, owing doubtless to compulsory education, reading rooms in towns and villages, cheap literature, attractive classes for instruction, the demand for intelligent subordinates in offices such as those for carrying on telegraphic work, scientific agriculture, and so forth.

L. P.

RANDOM SHAFTS.

The opposition to Our Identity with Israel is a Janus-faced creature, and hard to please. People who profess to cultivate a superior quality of Christianity accuse us of reviving fleshly divisions and setting up middle walls of partition; Titus iii. 9, which advises us to "avoid genealogies," being a favourite resource. But no sooner have we dispelled the delusions associated with that text than other critics, with the same expressions of elevated spirituality in their mouths, tell us that we do not make a sufficient number of divisions, and that our walls of partition are not stout enough. This is the opinion of the Rev. J. G. Gregory, Brighton; an opinion, it seems, which he has been enforcing for years, and "never heard the argument answered." I sympathize with the rev. gentleman, and can enter into his feelings, because we Israelites have a great many arguments that we have never heard answered. We are even worse off than he is, for we have heard them perverted into things of straw which a child could knock down, without the intervention of a clergyman. Sundry Brighton preachers are very good at this kind of "answer," and as the answers are confined to the pulpit there is probably a consciousness that the virtue resides in the pulpit, not the answers.

Digitized by Google

***

But what is this terrible poser by which everyone within the reach of Mr. Gregory's voice has been struck dumb? "We find that the land promised to Israel is accurately portioned out among the tribes." "The whole Twelve Tribes are to be found absolutely separate one from another, that they may be separately placed in their portions of the promised land." "A conglomerate Ephraim cannot again be divided into the Ten Tribes." Besides, the British are formed of "nearly innumerable nationalities," and "probably there is hardly a nation, except some very remote, of which we 'Anglo-Saxons' are not in a manner composed." Mr. Gregory calls this a "little argument," and I agree with the description. It is an extremely little argument, and perhaps that is the reason it has not been answered.

***

Our worthy opponent's notions of ethnology are at least half a century behind the times. He should read Freeman, for instance, where he would learn that the "nearly innumerable nationalities" of Saxons, Danes, Jutes, Angles, Frisians, and Normans, all belonged to a common stock. It is true they arrived here as separate tribes, but if I am not mistaken this is just what Mr. Gregory is asking for, and when he gets them in that shape they are "nearly innumerable nationalities." He also impugns our Israelitish origin in consequence of foreign infusions. If the objection is sound, the Tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh were not Israelites, for they sprang from an Egyptian lady; neither was the Saviour a Hebrew, for His genealogy was more than once interfered with by Gentile blood; and the Jews are not Jews, for they have mingled themselves with aliens until "there is hardly a nation of which they are not in a measure composed." If, however, Mr. Gregory admits that Christ was a Hebrew, and that the Jews are legitimate descendants of Abraham, he will need to admit that the Anglo-Saxons may be legitimate descendants of the Ten Tribes in spite of having absorbed a quantity of Germans and Huguenots.

***

The phrase "conglomerate Ephraim" evidently is intended to imply that the Ten Tribes, if in Britain, are now all mixed up together. This shows that Mr. Gregory's observation is as superficial as his knowledge of history. The North-countryman, the South-countryman, and the West-countryman can be recognized the world over, even by their speech. The Cornishman is not yet merged in the Yorkshireman, nor is the man of Kent lost in the Paisley body. No doubt there has been considerable mixture between the various sections of the population, especially on the border-lines, but the basic character of those sections remains much what it was five centuries ago, and science could easily sever the nation into ten tribal parts. There is then the further task of connecting them with their respective tribes, and if this is an insuperable difficulty it is one that will have to be met in any case, for among all the families of the earth none are at present bearing the names of Ephraim and his companions. But Mr. Gregory might explain to us Ezek. xlvii. 22 and xlviii. 29. The casting of lots cannot apply to the distribution of the land, as that is determined in chap. xlviii., and therefore we naturally infer that it has to do with the sorting of the tribes. This exhausts the contents of the "little argument," and when the rev. gentleman again brings it under the notice of the public I hope he will add, by way of a change, that it has been answered.

***

The difference of opinion on Biblical subjects is astonishing. Regarding the condition of Israel, we have seen that some are so finical as to demur to the slightest intermixture of one tribe with another. But a certain old and learned author has no scruples on this point. He says: "That they have lost their name, and the distinction of their tribes, is more than probable; for that no nation of the world are called Israel, and so divided by their tribes at this day, as anciently they were called. Neither was there cause why the distinction of their tribes should be continued. For that men might know where to look for the blessed seed it pleased God to elect one nation of all the world, and out of that nation one tribe or kindred, and out of that tribe one house or family, whereof the Messias should be born, who being now come there is no cause why the distinction of their tribes should now continue."

***

We are decidedly advancing. Perhaps it is in the wrong direction, but it cannot be denied that we are advancing. Isaiah and the bulk of the prophets having been spiritualized into "airy nothings," it has apparently occurred to an enterprising Frenchman that Daniel was being neglected, and he has operated upon "The three Hebrew children in the fiery furnace." The "moralizing" system has this advantage, that you can make the Bible teach what you please; you can paint its statements red, white, or blue. This is a great privilege, and those who possess it would scarcely be human if in their study of Scripture they failed to discover exactly what they want to discover. The said Frenchman is a metallurgist, and hence, like a wise potter with his clay—like theologians in fact—he forces the narrative into the service of his calling.

***

He avers that it is an allegory, and that it proves the Jews were familiar with the art of refining metals by cupellation. For Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego merely represented gold, silver, and electrum; while "their coats, their hosen, and their hats, and their other garments," depict the inferior substances with which the precious metals were combined for the purpose of assisting the process. Poor Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego! But the Church is responsible for these travesties. Men follow her example, whether they know it or not. She taught the French a lesson by the massacre of St. Bartholomew, and A.D. 1789 demonstrated that they had learnt it well. In similar fashion the Church has treated Revelation figuratively to suit her ends, and as it is an entertaining, nay, paying business, she has a host of ardent imitators.

***

Doubtless the printers did their best with the queer Saxon names given last month, and if errors crept in despite careful checking, it simply confirms what I was trying to establish. They were the patronymics of our fathers, but are to-day utterly obsolete—to a large extent unspellable and unpronounceable. They are so archaic that possibly none of my readers detected any flaws in them; but in view of lynx-eyed enemies they had better be rectified. Ealstan should have been Ealhstan; Ealherc, Ealher; Willebrok, Willebrod; Wuelaf, Anlaf; and Deorswyth requires a final "e."

JOHN SHOOTINGHAM.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed "PHILO-ISRAEL," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION for the BANNER OF ISRAEL, in Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts. To any country included in the Postal Union, including the following:—United Kingdom, Canada, America, Europe, New Zealand, Cape Colony, Victoria, Western Australia, Transvaal, Tasmania, South Australia, Queensland, Natal, New South Wales, India, Ceylon via Brindisi, 7s. per year, including postage.

All Post Office Orders, Cheques, &c., should be crossed "City Bank, Ludgate-hill, to the ac. of ROBERT BANKS AND SON." They will then only be paid to our account.

READING CASES for holding the Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts, may be had, price 2s. Sent post free on receipt of Postal Order.

THE ANNUAL VOLUMES, bound in handsome blue Cloth, price 8s.

THE MONTHLY PARTS, in tinted wrapper, published the last day of each month, 6d.

ISRAEL

NEW BADGES.

Gold Brooches, 6/3 and 4/-.
Scarf Pins 4/9 and 3/9.
Pendants, large, 4/6; small, 2/9.
All Badges, Metal Gilt, 9d.

All Post Free. Applications, with Postal Order enclosed, to be sent to MRS. THOMPSON, 13, Pultney-st., Bath, or to MAJOR-GEN. CARLYLE BELL, St. Laurence Villa, Kingston-hill, Surrey.

Price 8s. Sent Post Free.

No. 26.—Price 1s. per 100, 8s. 6d. per 1,000.

THOUGHTS FOR THE BRITISH FOLK.

SUGGESTED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

OUR ISRAELITE MINERS.

London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C.

"I am delighted with this."—PHILO-ISRAEL.

NEW AND IMPROVED EDITION OF

ISRAEL'S WORLD,

By Rev. HENRY ROE. Price 2d.

Also "Consecration," 2d., "Going to Africa," 1s.; "West African Scenes," 2s.; "Fernando Po Mission," 1s. Also "Israel's World" and "Consecration" bound together in cloth, with Author's latest photograph portrait, 1s.

Order of ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet street, London, E.C., or of Rev. HENRY ROE, Radstock, via Bath.

Cloth boards. Second Edition.

ISRAEL: A THESIS.

By the Rev. DENIS HANAN, D.D.

Price 1s. 6d.; sent post free to any address on receipt of Postal Order.

London: Robert Banks & Son Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

Price 6d. Monthly. Annual Subscription 7s.

THE MESSENGER.

Edited by "OXONIAN."

Each number contains papers by the EDITOR, and other well-known writers, a SERMON by Dr. WILD, Notes and Queries, &c

Now Ready, price 5s., post free, 5s. 4d., Illustrated by MAPS,

RUSSIA JAPHET;

OR, THE MUSCOVITE, THE COSSACK, AND THE MONGOL.

Being a detailed Identification of the principal peoples subject to the Czar. By "OXONIAN."

London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C.

"A WONDERFUL REMEDY."
"I WAS GIVEN UP BY ALL."
"SAVED FROM AN EARLY GRAVE."

Such are the words of grateful Patients relative to their CASES OF

CONSUMPTION

CURED BY THE TREATMENT OF

MR. GEO. T. CONGREVE.

Read his Book, "ON CONSUMPTION, &c." which may be had post free for ONE SHILLING from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.; or may be ordered of any Bookseller.

NOTE.—CONSULTATIONS FREE at Coombe Lodge, Peckham, on TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings only. No Charge except the usual charge for three weeks or six weeks' supply of medicine. All Patients should read the book first.

Just ready, 220 Large Post 8vo. pages, in clear, readable type, price 2s. 6d., limp cloth, gilt lettered, red edges, post free to any part of the world on receipt of postal remittance.

Nineteen Centuries Ago and NOW.

BY J. C. H. MEHL.

WITH BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH,

BY E. M. RUSH.

CONTENTS.—Biographical Sketch—Nineteen Centuries Ago and Now—Letter to the Editor of the Banner of Israel—A German's Views on Our Identity—The Church of England—The Woman Arrayed with the Sun (Rev. xii.)—"Remember the Sabbath Day to Keep It Holy"—"Blessed are the Meek, for They Shall Inherit the Earth" The Spirit of Negation, and the Spirit of Prayer—"Righteousness Exalteth a Nation"—"The Dispersion Among the Greeks"—The Protracted Era of Grace—"The Power of the Holy People"—The Present Aspect of the Kingdom of Heaven—One, and Yet Many—A Great Truth Slow in its Progress—A Two-fold Alienation—On Co-operating with the Divine Purpose—A Lamp Shining in a Dark Place (2 Pet. i. 19)—Was St. Patrick an Israelite, and Was He Aware of It?

LONDON:

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., or by order of any Bookseller

DR. ROOKE'S SOLAR ELIXIR AND ORIENTAL PILLS

DR. ROOKE'S SOLAR ELIXIR AND ORIENTAL PILLS effect marvellous cures. 50 years reputation. Sold everywhere. Pills in boxes 1/1½, 2/9, and 4/6. The Elixir in bottles 2/9, 4/6, and 11/-

Dr. ROOKE, SCARBOROUGH, ENGLAND.

TEETH.—£1 A FULL SET

ESKELL'S.—CELEBRATED MAKE, £2 2s. Warranted and fitted in one visit. No extractions needed. HALF A MILLION SETS already supplied. The Nursing Record and Hospital World says:—We recommend all who require Reliable and Good Teeth at a small cost to go to Messrs. ESKELL, 445, Strand (facing Charing Cross Station), and 58, Ludgate Hill, City, London. Also at 27, Western Road, Brighton, and 23, Mount Pleasant, Tunbridge Wells. Hours 9 till 7. Apply for Illustrated Pamphlet free (mention this paper). Established 100 years.

"THE WORLD'S PROVED REMEDY FOR ALL CHEST DISEASES."

COUGH, ASTHMA,

CHRONIC BRONCHITIS,

INFLUENZA,

THERE IS NONE TO EQUAL IT.

Rev. F. E. HEAPE, of DERBY, in a recent letter, says: "Your Medicine always puts my lungs right, and drove out the terrible INFLUENZA last May."

This Medicine has been prepared for 65 years.

CONGREVE'S BALSAMIC ELIXIR.

In Bottles, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 22s., may be had of all Chemists and Medicine Vendors.

TEA! TEA! TEA!

FROM

INDIA, CEYLON, AND CHINA.

Best Quality and Best Value.

From 1/6 to 3/6 per lb. Samples Gratis.

Carriage Paid on Parcels of 6lbs. and upwards

Robinson & James,

42, TRINITY SQUARE, TOWER HILL LONDON, E.C.

TOOTH-ACHE

CURED INSTANTLY BY

BUNTER'S NERVINE

Prevents Decay, Saves Extraction. Sleepless Nights Prevented.

Neuralgic Headaches and all Nerve Pains removed by BUNTER'S NERVINE. All Chemists, 1s. 1½d.

TRADE MARK

FREEMAN'S ORIGINAL CHLORODYNE.

THIS valuable medicine, discovered and invented by Mr. RICHARD FREEMAN in 1848, introduced into India and Egypt in 1850, and subsequently all over the world, maintains its supremacy as a special and specific Remedy for the Treatment and Cure of Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Cancer, Bronchitis, Asthma, Ague, Sore Throat, Influenza, Neuralgia, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Asiatic Cholera, Colic, Gout, and all Fevers.

At 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 20s. per bottle.

Sold by Patent Medicine Dealers in all parts of the world.

N.B.—Lord Chancellor Selborne, Lord Justice James, and Lord Justice Mellish, decided in favour of FREEMAN'S ORIGINAL CHLORODYNE, and against Brown and Davenport, compelling them to pay all costs in the suit.—See Times of July 24, 1873.

Digitized by Google

Important Notice to the Public, Chemists, and all

Retailers of Patent Medicines:

OWBRIDGE'S LUNG TONIC does not contain any Scheduled Poison, therefore ALL persons holding Patent Medicine Licences can sell it, and no one has a right to attach "Poison" labels to the bottles.

The known superiority of Owbridge's Lung Tonic as a safe and effective remedy for Coughs, Colds, or any Lung affection, makes it important the Public should know that no difficulty exists in obtaining it.

Sold everywhere at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., & 11s., by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors

The True and Divine Appointment for the Cure of Disease.
Send to
B. V. SCOTT, M.B.M.R.S.,
College of Health, 121, Kensington, Liverpool,
for his
VOICE OF NATURE TO THE INVALID,
Post free 5 stamps.

Thousands of incurables (so-called) have proved God's own means could save when others failed.

Rev. F. Harper says of Mr. Scott's book: "It is a library in itself, and free from quackery."

Rev. Lush says: "Mr. Scott's treatment is natural, safe, reasonable, and Scriptural."

Send for the Book at once.

PAGE WOODCOCK'S
WIND PILLS
A CLERGYMAN

Writes: "I am so convinced from my own experience and that of others of the real value of your WIND PILLS, in complaints arising from a disordered state of the STOMACH, BOWELS, or LIVER, that I wish much to promote the use of the Medicine in this parish, and I now inclose P.O. for a large box, and should be glad of some papers for circulation among my parishioners. In my own case

Page Woodcock's Wind Pills

have been of the greatest use. I have no objection to your publishing my communication, provided you divulge not my name and address, which you may give, nevertheless, to those who require such a verification."—Vicarage, near Malvern.

All Sufferers from INDIGESTION, LIVER COMPLAINTS, WIND on the STOMACH, COSTIVENESS, SICK HEADACHE, HEARTBURN, PALPITATION of the HEART, BILIOUSNESS, &c.,
should avail themselves of this most excellent medicine.

☞ The WIND PILLS being PURELY VEGETABLE, TASTELESS, and MILD and TONIC in their action, may be taken with perfect safety by the most delicate of either sex.

Of all Chemists, at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d., or Post Free for P.O. or Stamps, from PAGE WOODCOCK, LINCOLN.

MASON'S EXTRACT OF HERBS FOR MAKING NON-INTOXICATING BEER

WE ALL REQUIRE SOMETHING TO DRINK

The finest, most refreshing and pleasantest beverage obtainable. One table-spoonful of this Extract makes one gallon of splendid Beer. Try it. A sample bottle, enough to make eight gallons, post free for 9 stamps.

NEWBALL & MASON, NOTTINGHAM.

AGENTS WANTED.

MASON'S WINE ESSENCES, non-intoxicating. For children's parties and social gatherings. A 6d. bottle will make one gall. of delicious wine. Post free 9 stamps, or a bottle of both Extract of Herbs and Wine Essence post free 15 stamps.

BE SURE TO CUT

10,000 RUGS GIVEN AWAY.

IT MAY THIS OUT,

THIS PHENOMENAL OFFER is made to the Readers of this Journal only. On receipt of this advertisement, accompanied by Postal Order for 6/-, or 74 stamps, we will forward DIRECT FROM OUR LOOMS to your address, one of our genuine SEAMLESS WOVEN REVERSIBLE CARPETS, suitable for Drawing-room, Dining-room, Bedroom, &c., handsomely bordered and woven in 30 different patterns and art colourings to suit all requirements, and LARGE ENOUGH TO COVER ANY ORDINARY SIZED ROOM. These carpets are manufactured from a material equal in wear to wool, and are undoubtedly the cheapest in the world.

With every Carpet we shall ABSOLUTELY GIVE AWAY a very handsome RUG to match, or we will send 2 CARPETS and 2 RUGS for 10/6

The Queen says: "Decidedly stouter and handsomer than any of the kind, the price being the astounding part of the matter." Schoolmistress: "For style, durability, and cheapness, they cannot be beaten." Penny Illustrated Paper: "Manufactured in every variety of colour, and is one of the most surprising bargains I have seen." Church Bells: "Truly wonderful value."

Thousands of Testimonials similar to the following, & Repeat Orders, have been received from our Customers:

"Thorpe Perrow, Bedale, Yorks.

"Sir Frederick Millbank, Bart., encloses cheque for the eight Carpets received this day, and begs to add he is much pleased with them."

This offer is made to the Readers of this Paper only, and will not be repeated. All Orders despatched same day as received. Cheques and Postal Orders to be crossed "Union Bank." Address—

THE BRITISH CARPET WEAVING COMPANY,
31, OLD STREET, LONDON, E.C.

NOT APPEAR AGAIN.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN'S
IRISH
CAMBRIC HANDKERCHIEFS

ALL PURE FLAX. POST FREE.

Ladies' Hemmed—2/6, 3/3, 4/-, 4/11, 6/-, 7/2, 8/-, & 9/- per doz.

Gentlemen's Hemmed—4/-. 4/11, 5/9, 6/6, 7/5, 8/3 9/3, & 10/6 per doz.

Hemstiched Ladies and Gents (excellent value) 6/- & 7/11 per doz., various widths & hems.

A Sample of THREE of either price sent by return of post, on receipt of postal order.

Very pretty Fancy Boxes, suitable for Presents, 4½d. extra.

V. W. THOMSON,
27, Dunluce Street, BELFAST.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.
ELECTROPATHIC BELT
FOR
LUMBAGO

Mr. J. B. CARNE, Station Master L. B. & S. C. Ry., Clapham Junction Station, S.W., writes:—"I have derived great benefit from wearing your Electropathic Belt. The Lumbago and pains in my back have both ceased."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

On y Address,
52, OXFORD ST., LONDON, W.
(Corner of Rathbone Place.)
Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

USEFUL BOOKS FOR BIBLE STUDENTS.

In Two Vols., about 500 pages in each, cloth bound, price 5s., originally published at 7/6.

HISTORY OF THE JEWS

In Three Concurrent Sections.

I.—Ten Books of the Antiquities of the Jews, as TRANSLATED by WHISTON, with Notes from FLAVIUS JOSEPHUS.

II.—The Bible Narrative from the Creation to the Captivity at Babylon, fully given and faithfully rendered.

III.—A Modern History of the Jews. Abridged and Offered as a Commentary on the Preceding Sections.

The Two Volumes sent post free for 5/3 nett

To be had only direct from ROBERT BANKS AND SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

A PRESENT.

SEND us your address, mentioning this paper, and we will make you a present of the best guide to health yet published. It is only a little book, but it is of great value to all who are ill or indisposed.—GORDON, MURRAY, & CO., LIMITED, 10, Adam Street, Strand, W.C.

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & CO. (Ltd.) 23, Paternoster-row. Wednesday APRIL 12, 1893. All Rights Reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.

"And the Remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORN with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS OF THE EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XVII., No. 851. Entered at Stationer's Hall.] WEDNESDAY, APRIL 19, 1893 [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
The Race that has Girdled the Earth	193
The Empire	194
The Visigoths and Vandals Were English men	196
An Ulster Nonconformist Minister Protests Against the Home Rule Bill	197
Anglo-Israelism	197
The Blessing of Moses. By J. D. Reid	199
Newcastle Anglo-Israel Association	200
Gleanings. By J. Thomson	200
Correspondence	201
The Date of the Capture of Jerusalem by Omar	202

THE RACE THAT HAS GIRDLED THE EARTH.

A FRIEND at Tunbridge Wells has sent us a cutting from the London Echo of Dec. 31, 1892, on the subject of our race, as one which has "girdled the earth." It is a remarkable testimony to Our Identity, and one which the late Mr. E. Hine, with his acute intellect, was the first to perceive. He quoted Deut. xxxii. 7, 9, with effect as a promise to Israel, and corroborated it by references to Jer. x. 16; li. 19; Psa. lxxiv. 2, and Acts xvii. 26, showing finally that British possessions were at the coasts, the ends, and the uttermost parts of the earth, forming two grand circles, one in each hemisphere round the non-Israelite Gentile Powers of the world. The first text quoted comes in with great effect in support of this view: "When the Most High divided to the nations their inheritance, when He separated the sons of Adam He set the 'bounds' of the people according to the number of the children of Israel." The bounds of the Gentile people, in short, were fixed by Israel's bounds everywhere; thus proving the expansion and dispersion in power of Israel. Judah has no claim to this, but Israel, the chosen House, is, by the testimony of the Echo, in the tactical position of power and dominion, inseparable from the state which surrounds the others, the one which is on the borders of every other, enclosing all of them as in a circle. The Echo is addressed by one who has been a traveller; and writing on the manifest "Influence of the English Race," describes his impressions thus:—

The idea which in all the length of my travels has been at once my fellow and my guide—a key wherewith to unlock the hidden things of strange new lands—is a conception, however imperfect, of the grandeur of our race (already girdling the earth), which it is destined, perhaps, eventually to overspread. In America the peoples of the world are being fused together, but they run into an English mould: Alfred's laws and Chaucer's tongue are theirs, whether they would or no. There are men who say that Britain in her age will claim the glory of having planted greater England across the seas. They fail to perceive that she has done more than found plantations of her own—that she has imposed her institutions upon the offshoots of Germany, of Ireland, of Scandinavia, and of Spain.

The writer of the above sees the wondrous influence and grandeur of Our Race, which he concludes is likely "to overspread the earth." But why cannot he go to the Word of God and discover there what race is to be placed in the position of splendour he would assign to our own British nation? There we read that Abraham and his seed are designated "the heir of the world" (Rom. iv. 13); also that "the kingdom and dominion, and greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, is to be given to the people of the saints of the Most High,' and those saints are "the children of Israel" (Dan. vii. 27; Psa. cxlviii. 14). This is the key which unlocks the secrets of Providence—that tells us of the destiny of new and strange lands in the four corners of the earth, and reveals why God has such designs respecting a race full of sin, yet reserved for such a noble future. The writer links the present and future of America with our race and language, and finds, like Jacob of old, that our nation is even greater than the remnant of Manasseh, because we have not only founded nation daughters of our own, but that "filling up" other races in their homes, we have occupied those lands and imposed our institutions upon them. Thus our institutions are forced upon Germans, Swedes, Norwegians, Spaniards, and Irishmen in the United States, Canada, South Africa, and Australasia, showing that if Manasseh is great, which she is, Ephraim-Israel is greater than her brother Jonathan, by reason of the fact that of her has come about the Melo-hag-goim or "filling up" of the nations with Israel's colonists, laws, and institutions, according to the prophecies. To the Lord be all the praise; but none to the poor defective instrument by which God is working out all His wonders in the earth!

Digitized by Google

THE EMPIRE.

THE following remarkable paper, by an anonymous author, appeared in The Wiltshire County Mirror and Express, on Feb. 28, 1893, and will be appreciated by the readers of the BANNER. They will recognize that the writer knows nothing of the Identity, but he is a "blind witness," without doubt, of the fact that the British are Israel. He wrote thus:—

"THE EMPIRE.

"What is the Empire? The Empire consists of—

Square Miles		Population.
121,115	In Great Britain and Ireland ...	38,000,000
1,600,000	Indian possessions	286,000,000
104,441	Other Asiatic	4,169,000
3,403,305	Australia, New Zealand, &c. ...	4,200,000
3,525,000	North America...	5,200,000
76,000	South America...	285,000
295,000	Africa	4,000,000
20,343	West Indies	1,136,000
124	European	155,000
9,244,099		343,275,000

To this may be added 11,190,513 square miles of territory in Africa, which includes the much-debated territory of Uganda. It is impossible to ascertain the population as yet.

"Some of these territories were acquired by conquest, some were settled and annexed, others were bought; but, however acquired, these are the territories which form the Empire for the administration of which the Government are more or less responsible, and of which electors should think when they are voting for any particular party. It is of paramount importance to them to know who will be Secretaries of State for the Colonies and for India, and to know if they can be trusted, as it is to know who will be Prime Minister, Secretary of State for the Home Office, Chancellor of the Exchequer, with whom rests our taxation, and last, but not least, the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. For on the latter depends much of our prosperity; for if our relations as to trade and politics get strained with foreign countries, we soon feel it.

"The abilities of a Prime Minister cannot suffice for the whole, for each of these men have more on their shoulders than many a sovereign of a foreign country. In many cases the inhabitants are of every race and colour known in man, with religions and characters and laws that have to be considered and loyally treated with a view to justice, good government, and peace.

"Many a man, when he leaves his native shores and goes abroad and sees the extent of the Empire, must wonder, as he looks back at the small platform he left behind him, with men preaching and spouting about small questions, amusing a circle of admirers with their wisdom over party politics, while their fellow countrymen are doing the real work of the Empire, not in the least affected by the storms at home, and doing it chiefly by private enterprize. Generation after generation of Englishmen have been fighting and struggling for place, power, and wealth all over the world, regardless of party cries and party politics. If asked their politics they would probably reply, 'Success to Old England,' and thus they have steadily borne on the English flag.

"If an elector studies the map of the world, and then sees what a little spot on it is Great Britain, he can hardly think himself of much importance; but if he opens his eyes and recognises that he is a member of the great British Empire, then he must feel his position is a proud one, for he is one of those who help to choose the men who govern it, and then will bear in mind, perhaps, that he belongs to those who have so gallantly carried the British flag to every quarter of the globe, and will also perceive that their interests are also his, and are not bounded by the narrow platform of home affairs.

"Peers, ploughmen, soldiers, sailors, magistrates, squatters, parsons, missionaries, women, and children have fought and struggled till they have colonized America, Australia, New Zealand, as well as a great part of Africa. They have explored Africa, conquered India and much other territory; their graves are everywhere; the earth and sea are full of their dead; but the English tongue is in every climate of the world, and spreading daily, while their countrymen at home have often impeded their work—done nothing to help and often been ready to think evil of them. Freedom, liberty, and justice, such as other nations do not know, have always followed in the end, so that any of us may go and live there and forget we have left home; indeed, are still at home, only rather further from London.

"What is comprised in our Empire, however, is not all, for whatever port in the world you may enter, probably 10—20—to one of the shipping is English. If you travel on a foreign steamer you find it very likely built in England, or that the machinery is English. We have had some hand in making almost every railway in Europe—some were made with English capital. As you travel you find a canal or works of some sort that were either made by the English or belong to an English company. What does all this mean? It means that private enterprise has carried our trade into foreign countries that are not our Empire; the Government have not helped, though they can retard; party weakening the Government, and ill-considered actions of our Foreign Minister, can jeopardise our undertakings and plunge us into war.

"About 300 years ago our countrymen began to push ahead and to trade with the East by going round the Cape of Good Hope. A company was formed, called the East India Company, which got certain privileges from the Crown to secure a monopoly of the trade to enable them to protect themselves from their enemies. They required troops and ships, for, besides the struggles with the natives, they had to fight with other European natives out there, though we might be at peace at home. The company paid its own expenses, and private enterprise conquered and governed India till 1858. They had great difficulties to contend with at times, but the men who formed the Indian Council in London were men who had had experience and were well fitted for their duties. Parliament did little for them, though from time to time members of the House, who had never been to India, lectured them and told them how India ought to be governed.

'In 1858 the Government took over India from the East India Company. The army passed under the sovereignty of the Queen. The Queen's Government is carried out by a Secretary of State for India, who is a member of the Cabinet under the Prime Minister. The Secretary of State is assisted by a Council in London. There are in India an able body of men conducting the government of the country, but all expenses are defrayed out of Indian taxation; even British regiments, when in India, are paid by India. Indian wars are paid by India, and the Queen is called Empress of India because she is the head of a Government maintained by a military force, instead of being, as she is in England, the head of a limited monarchy as ordained by the constitution of Great Britain.

Digitized by Google

"About the same time, 300 years ago, men of energy, enterprise, and some of discontented mind, for political or religious reasons, took to emigrating to America. Our settlements out there prospered in a marvellous manner, and grew prodigiously, until, in the middle of the last century, a large portion of them, which is now called the United States, revolted and declared war against the mother country. It was a war—a civil war—between brothers, often in the exact sense of the word as well as in a national one. It was a sad and disgraceful war, arising from the stupidity and misgoverning of the Government at home—from sores allowed to rankle from the Government—overlooking the grievances of the settlers, which were then worked upon by agitators. There was much to regret on both sides, but it was the natural result of impatience with misgovernment by a race who had made themselves, with no help from home, by private enterprise.

"Our neighbours, the French, who have never lost an opportunity, sent the rebels men and ships to help them, and, perhaps, hoped to get something out of it; but that was not what our colonists were fighting for: they were fighting for independence, and they got it. Our ministers at the time thought they had got rid of a troublesome child. What folly! Through their mismanagement, they lost to England, and created a rival of a nation, that promises to be, if it is not now, the most powerful one in the world—not a nation like ours, spread over the whole world, but united in a magnificent territory of its own.

"An American once said, before the War of Independence, we were brothers, but since the war we have become step-brothers, and the word 'step' is spelt in capital letters. This took place more than 100 years ago, yet we feel it day by day. The evil then created crops up perpetually: it never dies in the old country, it is a perpetual cause of hindrance. A place was wanted many years ago to send convicts to, and it was decided to send them to the coast of Australia, near where Sydney now stands. It was a good way off, and no one thought it would matter; but our surplus population chose to colonize Australia, and they did it with no help from the Government. Again, by private enterprise, and in time they were strong enough to let the Home Government know that they would no longer tolerate convicts being sent there.

"Repeated efforts have been made to persuade the Home Government to annex New Zealand, but nothing was done until news arrived in Australia that the French were going to annex New Zealand; then the Australians persuaded the governor to send off the British fleet and a lot of ships, so that when the French arrived, wherever they wanted to land they found the British flag before them. So it has been all over the world. Enterprise has led the way to make the Empire; the Government then had to follow after, and we have to thank the Australians that we possess the magnificent group of colonies now called Australasia. Australia and New Zealand possess fine cities with splendid buildings, public parks, and everything that an older country may often wish for, but not get.

"We cannot do better now than allude to two men of note in our colonies as types—men who, perhaps, home-living Englishmen might in their insular pride describe as a couple of colonials. One, Sir Henry Parkes, landed in Australia 53 years ago with a wife and child. He was glad to take work at first as a daily labourer. For thirty years he has been one of the foremost men in Australia. As a statesman he has no superior in any country. He was not to the manner born, but he has proved his powers by surmounting all difficulties. He said in a speech not long ago that he was a warm colonial, but equally a loyal subject of the Queen, devoted to the old country, and no stone should be left unturned by him to secure Imperial Federation of all our colonies with the mother country. Imperial Federation means that our colonies are to unite for the mutual help of each other and to support the mother country, instead of each colony being content to play its own little game.

"When there was anarchy and revolt in Egypt against its rulers, England stepped in, and has since formed the country, and brought it from insolvency to being able to pay its way, and England is trying to secure the well-being of its inhabitants, though it is difficult—the more difficult—from the jealousy of the Sultan of Turkey, the rulers of Egypt, and French jealousy. At a critical moment India sent troops to assist the British army, for Egypt is the high road to India from England, but at the same time Australia sent troops to Egypt to assist our army, because it is the high road from Australia to home.

"This was the first symptom of Imperial Federation, and long may Australians speak and feel that England is home.

"The second man to be mentioned is Cecil Rhodes, the Premier of our Cape Colonies.

"These colonies have suffered more than any other from the cold shade of neglect. No longer on the high road to India, they were not considered of much value, but Cecil Rhodes has, by his own energy and enterprise, done more in a few years to put life and prosperity into their settlements than it would seem possible for any one man to do. He is strongly in favour of Imperial Federation, which must, if carried out, lead to assimilation of customs, and give a fairer opening for our trade with the colonies.

"There has been a talk of giving up Uganda, a portion of our Central African possessions, more recently annexed.

"Can a great nation afford to go back and let other nations step in, especially when we want outlets for our trade and rapidly increasing population? Cecil Rhodes says "no!" and promises in a few years that the Cape of Good Hope at the south, and Egypt at the north of Africa, shall be connected by a band of telegraph wire passing through Uganda, thus bringing all these almost unknown countries within a few hours' reach of London.

"What hinders the prosperity of our Empire is party. If any Minister, perhaps more foreseeing than others, takes a bold step forward, then the Opposition clamours, and tries to get credit with the electors for their prudence, while the enemies of the country rejoice.

"Surely if parties must quarrel and fight on the small platform of Parliament over home matters, patriotism should prevent them from weakening the country and the power of England to foreign nations.

"Political philosophers have in the past written and talked about the Colonies being a weakness for England, and the sooner we got rid of them the better. The result was that the loyalty of the Colonies had a great shake, which, however, some years of better judgment has been able greatly to restore. No wise parent says he wants to get rid of his children if he expects to keep their affections.

"No words are strong enough that can be written to express sufficiently and fully the importance of union being strength—of every encouragement being given to private enterprise at home and abroad—so that the nation may have strength to contend with the difficulties that arise, and not to allow party moves and party politics to interfere with the prosperity of the Empire; also for electors to learn and know something about all these questions for themselves, for they must bear in mind it is the success of our undertakings out of England that brings to our shores the money with which we buy our food and pay our wages. Without it, our large population would starve. England cannot keep them. —"FORDINGBRIDGE."

Digitized by Google

THE VISIGOTHS AND VANDALS WERE ENGLISHMEN.

ON February 16 last, the Liverpool Courier published a leading article regarding Mr. Grant Allen's paper in "Longman's Magazine," on "unsuspected Englishmen." We quote the article because the Author being quite innocent of all knowledge of Our Identity makes statements nevertheless respecting the ancestors of the British which run exactly parallel to those our best writers have published regarding the scattering of Israel and their gathering into this their "appointed place," according to Amos ix. 9; Ezek. xi. 15, 16; and 2 Sam. vii. 10. We have in reprinting the paper taken the liberty of changing Mr. Grant Allen's names "British, Englishmen," or "Briton," in many sentences, by adding "Israel" or "British-Israelites" to them, and our readers will notice how remarkably the secular author paints the portrait of Israel without in the least suspecting it. The following is the article thus dealt with:—

"Britons abroad already enjoy a fair reputation for 'arrogance.' Probably most Englishmen are, in varying degree, voluntarily possessed of a sentiment which does not come far short of the belief—to quote the author of 'Pinafore'—'that it's greatly to his credit that he is an Englishman.' The national pride may be inflated considerably if it comes to be an established axiom that 'most of the Christian names at present in use on the continent of Europe, with the trifling exception of Greece and Russia, are English by origin.' This is the startling hypothesis with which Mr. Grant Allen commences an article in 'Longman's Magazine,' to which he has given the somewhat invidious title of 'Uususpected Englishmen.' Such a phrase in itself hardly seems to imply a compliment, but there is probably no Englishman with soul so dead to the sentiment satirised by Mr. Gilbert that he will not regard the proving of this hypothesis as almost as complimentary to the foreigner as it is creditable to himself as a Briton. Mr. Grant Allen's lucubration of the subject is due to the conviction having been forced upon him that thousands of his fellow-countrymen must be daily hurrying to their graves unaware of the truly English origin of such apparently hopelessly foreign names as Alphonse, Louis, and Ferdinand. To remedy this sad state of intellectual destitution Mr. Grant Allen has exhibited some such accredited continental names 'in all their naked Anglo-Saxon awesomeness.' It requires to be premised that when Mr. Grant Allen says English he does so 'in a strictly Pickwickian sense,' meaning 'not British, but Low Dutch.' Where he finds the analogues of the prevailing continental Christian names is in the nomenclature of 'our remote ancestral paternal cousins, the Visigoths and the Vandals, who in point of fact were practically Englishmen speaking the English tongue in one of its earliest and purest dialects.'

"In a Guiseppe Garibaldi few people certainly would suspect 'a hidden British-Israelite;' but the writer establishes his identity thus:—'In early Italian history we get the name Garibaldo, which is just the Gothic or English Garbald, or Spear Prince slightly Italianised.' Again, St. Bernard, which would seem at first sight a thoroughgoing Frenchman, is nothing but a compound of two English words, the first signifying the sacred bear of the northern races, while the second is the same hard, which occurs in such indisputable old English names as Hardicanute, Gerhard, and Hardwine. From Bernhard (its primitive form) the English made Bernard, the French the same, the Italians Bernardo and Bernardino, and the Spaniards Bernardo. The sacred wolf was more prolific than even the bear in the creation of names. Eadwulf—meaning 'the noble wolf'—and Aethelwulf got Latinised into Ataulphus and Adolphus, and comes back to us at last a perfect stranger in the Italian French Adolphe and the Adolfo or Udolfo. Plain Wulf was Latinised as Guelfo, and hence originated the famous name of the Guelphs. Italian Odoardo is just English Edward—the single example of a so-called Anglo-Saxon name that survived the Norman Conquest in Britain unaltered. Even the apparently foreign Norman-French names which William and his followers brought over in their ships from St. Valery and Hastings are discerned to be, 'after all, only good old English or Low Dutch types, which returned to us in altered and half-indistinguishable shapes after their grand tour on the continent.' Henry, for example, was originally Heanric or Heinric. In France the name became Henri, in Spain Enrique or sometimes Henriquez, and in Italy Enrico, Arrigo, and Enzio. From the feminine adaptation of the name Henrietta springs 'the whole brood of Harriets, Hatties, Hetties, and Ettas, as well as the Spanish Enriquetas, and the Italian Enrighttas.' Such are a few of the examples which Mr. Grant Allen adduces in support of his assertion that mellifluous, musical, and romantic names of modern Spain and Italy, as well as the entire nomenclature of mediæval and modern Europe, are in fact derived from the uncouth names of primitive British-Israelites (Englishmen).

"Mr. Grant Allen's explanation of the basis of his doctrine although it involves the statement of a fact of which, as he remarks, 'every high school girl has heard,' must necessarily be reproduced in order to give completeness to our epitome. The great Low Dutch group of peoples who inhabited Northwestern Europe spoke on the whole a fairly uniform language, of which English, Flemish, Dutch, and Frisian are the chief direct modern descendants. This ancient language was also spoken by the northern tribes who conquered and submerged the Roman Empire (see Dan. ii. 34 and 44.) As they overran the world (Amos ix. 9), they naturally took their native names with them, and since they formed everywhere the mediæval aristocracy of Europe they found their subjects 'quite as ready to call their sons and daughters after these new masters as the Israelites in Britain were some centuries later to call theirs after Norman or Angevin, Stuart or Hanoverian. Thus the Visigoths carried these essentially English (British-Israelite), personal names in their train into Spain; the Suevi imported them into Portugal and the Asturias; the Lombards into Northern Italy; the Ostrogoths into Pannonia the Franks and Burgundians into Northern Gaul and Provence; and the English (Israelites) into Britain. This means not merely that a great many modern European names are Teutonic in origin, but that they are distinctively British-Israelitish (English) or Low Dutch, as opposed to German or High Dutch. (Let the Rev. R. Douglas note this!) This is a consideration which will doubtless increase the consciousness of empire in the average British-Israelite (Briton) (see Deut. xxviii. 1 and 13; Rom. iv. 13)."

Digitized by Google

AN ULSTER NONCONFORMIST MINISTER PROTESTS AGAINST THE HOME RULE BILL.

In the Bath papers of March 9th, the proceedings of a great meeting were reported, protesting against the Home Rule Bill. It was called "Bath's Protest." In the course of the meeting the Rev. S. D. Burnside, a Nonconformist minister, stood up and made the following appeal to his co-religionists in Great Britain not to let Mr. Gladstone's Bill pass into law. The speaker took two of his illustrations from the Old Testament, and deserves attention from the readers of the BANNER. What he said was this:—

"The Rev. S. D. Burnside, who seconded the resolution, had a cordial welcome. He said he came to Bath not as a politician, but as a suppliant to the people of England to plead with them, to interpose at this crisis on behalf of the Protestants and Loyalists of Ireland who were now in danger of being placed under the rule of their hereditary enemies (cheers). He would remind the meeting that there were virtually two Irelands (hear, hear). One consisted of the aboriginal Irish, who in political sentiments were hostile to the Queen and to Great Britain, and were more superstitiously attached to the Roman Catholic religion than any other people in the world. The other Ireland consisted of the races that emigrated from England and Scotland above two and a-half centuries ago, who were devoted to the Queen and to the interests of the British Empire, who were Protestants in religion, and who, amid a long series of sufferings held Ireland firmly linked to Great Britain (cheers). These two races had never amalgamated and hardly ever coalesced, and the majority have been ever the bitter enemies of the minority on account of their attachment to England and to the Protestant religion, and they were regarded as only an English garrison, who should if possible be expelled. It was important to note that the loyal minority had no ascendancy, and enjoyed no privilege, civil or religious, beyond what was enjoyed by the disloyal majority. The great political aim of the minority had been the unity of the kingdom; on the other hand the great political aim of the majority had been the disintegration of the kingdom and the separate independence of Ireland. Their motto has been "England's difficulty is Ireland's opportunity," and no doubt if a day of difficulty to England ever came that party would not miss its opportunity of seeking to humiliate the kingdom (cheers). During the last 95 years there had been three Irish rebellions—that of 1798, the Young Ireland rebellion in 1848, and the Fenian rising in 1867—all of which aimed at total separation from England and complete independence. They now sought to achieve by political stratagem what they could not gain by insurrection (applause). It was a saddening spectacle to see a statesman of Mr. Gladstone's experience barter the unity of the Empire for some 80 Irish votes—to see him undermine the foundations on which our glorious Empire was erected (cheers), and at the same time to deliver over to their enemies those who had been allied to England and to England's greatest worthies by lineage, by religion, and by unflinching patriotism (loud cheers). Irish Protestants did not believe the assertion that Home Rule does not involve separation, because the words of this Irish party differ according to the places where they are spoken (applause). The Protestants inferred what their future fate would be from past history (applause). With a record of blood and cruelty and treachery before their eyes the Protestants of Ireland would put no faith in the amicable professions of such a party or submit to the rule of such crime-stained legislators (cheers). He appeared on that platform to appeal to the generous, justice-loving people of England to sympathise with their own kith and kin in this crisis of peril (applause). The Protestants have never been in amity with disloyal Irish, and as the tribes of Israel became bitter enemies and had bloody wars after the kingdom was split, so if this Bill became law they might find the history of the internecine wars between Samaria and Judah repeated in Ireland. Irish Protestants now appealed to all English Protestants, whether Established Church or Nonconformist. He appealed to the Wesleyans to read the life of John Wesley, and the work he had done in Ireland. As one man the Wesleyans of Ireland were standing in the breach because they knew that Home Rule would close their chapels and stop their Christian work in three of the four provinces. He appealed to the Independents. Could they believe that if the saintly John Howe or the pious Richard Baxter were now living they would not lift their voices and cry aloud against putting the descendants of Puritan forefathers under the domination of the priests of Rome? To every variety of Nonconformist he appealed as a brother in Christ (applause). When he looked at the strange eventualities of past history he ventured to think that loyalty and Protestantism would yet emerge triumphantly from this peril. He was thinking of an almost similar position when a celebrated Prime Minister, vindictive against loyal and pious people, because he thought greatness had not been properly honoured, counselled his Sovereign to deliver this minority into the hands of their enemies. But the Queen of the country was a brave, true-hearted woman, and she determined to save them or die in the attempt. And Queen Esther took her life in her hand, and bravely declared, 'I will go into the King, and if I perish, I perish.' That is the example the Irish Protestants will follow (said Mr. Burnside). They will appeal to their fellow Protestants of England, they will appeal to the House of Commons, they will appeal to the House of Lords, they will appeal to their true and beloved Queen, and then, if they perish, they perish (loud cheers).

"The resolution was then put and carried by an overwhelming majority."

ANGLO-ISRAELISM.

TO THE EDITOR "YARMOUTH LIGHT."—Sir,—"Barrington" begins his letter in your issue of the 29th ult. with a little pleasantry about a "big brother" of mine. Let me inform your correspondent that I am happy in the possession of very many brothers—and sisters too. The army of Anglo-Israelites is large and increasing; recruits are coming in daily. And clad in the impregnable armour of truth, with the shield of faith in one hand, and our trusty sword, which is the Word of God in the other, we are valiantly and joyfully marching on to victory. I pray that one day soon "Barrington" may join our ranks. He shall receive such a welcome as only Anglo-Israelites know how to give.

I am surprised your correspondent doubts that the newly discovered supremacy of law tempts men to question the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures. That it does so tempt them I will prove by quotations from Prof. Drummond, wherein the reasons for this unbelief which, as your correspondent says, will be "interesting" to him, are given.

In his preface to "Natural Law in the Spiritual World"

Digitized by Google

the Professor says: "Religion was the one region still unpossessed by law. I saw then why men of science distrust theology; why those who have learned to look upon law as authority grow cold to it—it was the great exception." Again: "It is recognized by all that the young and able minds of the age find the most serious difficulty in accepting or retaining the ordinary forms of belief. Especially is this true of those whose culture is scientific. And the reason is palpable. No man can study modern science without a change coming over his views of truth. What impresses him about nature is its solidity. He is there standing upon actual things—upon fixed laws. And the integrity of the scientific method so seizes him that all other forms of truth begin to appear comparatively unstable." The Professor also truly says: "Theology must feel to-day that the modern world calls for further proof; nor will the best theology resent this demand; it also demands it." And Drummond, in the greatest work of this century, has given "further proof." Anglo-Israelism also comes along with additional evidence so startling and magnificent that I do not wonder men's eyes are at first dazzled and blinded before light so brilliant. We show that in the principles of God's dealings with man there is no "variableness nor shadow of turning." The methods of redemption are as fixed and consistent as are the laws of nature.

But, from whatever cause, the fact remains that of late years a vigorous attack has been made on every theory of inspiration worth defending. Professors in theological colleges and preachers in almost all denominations—even among the Presbyterians, despite the rigid "Confession of Westminster"—are teaching that the Bible is fallible; Old Testament history mainly a myth; that the Hebrew prophets were not divinely instructed to foretell future events. Every one acquainted even superficially with current literature is aware of this fact. The Rev. T. R. Howlitt says: "The fulfilment of predictive Scriptures concerning the race of Israel in its entirety is God's stamp upon the truth and supernatural origin of His word. It is precisely here that the destructive criticism is dealing its severest and most stunning blows. Professor Kuenon, writing from the most anti-supernatural staindpoint, "proposes to settle the strife between the supernatural and the naturalistic view of prophecy by the single test of its fulfilment. This is a fair test, as every believer must allow." The Professor boldly declares that of "the expectations of the prophets with regard to Israel's future not one of them has been realized." The above test Anglo-Israelites accept with alacrity. We prove that prophecy concerning Israel is being fulfilled to its minutest detail. The old spiritualizing school, to which your correspondent belongs, dare not, cannot and does not accept this test. They shelter themselves—but alas! it is in vain—behind the fragile rampart of some such meaningless phrase as that used by "Barrington,"—"Israel in a general and spiritual sense." The question is often asked, "What is the good of Anglo-Israelism even if it be true?" Let the shepherds of Israel mark the answer: It boldly accepts, and it alone dares accept, the test of inspiration with which the so-called "higher critics" are continually challenging the orthodox Christian world. We are driving this destructive criticism, which is a natural outcome of spiritualizing away the plain literal statements of Holy Writ—to an ignominious retreat, and ere long it will hide its proud head for very shame. We accept this test and prove to demonstration that the Bible is inspired, and that therefore the precious spiritual truths of the Gospel are facts upon which a reasonable man may with confidence rely. Nothing proves all this so clearly, so convincingly, so briefly as Anglo-Israelism does. Nay, further, if we be not Israel, then the "higher critics" hold a vantage ground from which all the reasoning of believing men and all the fulminations of Pope, Council, Conference, or Church can never dislodge them. Theologians are beginning to see this, and are thanking God that just in the "nick of time" God is revealing this strange but glorious truth to the Church—revealing it as HIS OWN ANSWER to the daring and impious attempts of these critics to dethrone the authority of His blessed Word. Anglo-Israelism is the most triumphant vindication of the inspiration of the Scriptures and the truth of the Gospel. This is why I delight to preach it.

Now a few words in reply to "Barrington's" criticism of my last sermon on this subject. Your correspondent is surprised that I should quote from Elliot, Stanley, Disraeli, and D'Aubigne as though they were Anglo-Israelites. He has misunderstood me. I made the quotations in question to show that authors who had probably never heard of Anglo-Israel truth, and whose testimony is therefore unimpeachable, had nevertheless been impressed with the many striking resemblances that exist between the Anglo-Saxon race and the Jews. Then your correspondent says we are "Semitic in religion." No, sir. With the exception of the Jews, the descendants of Shem for many centuries before Christ were idolaters. We do not worship idols; nor do we practice Judaism. We believe it has been superceded by Christianity. It follows, therefore, that "Barrington's" question, that "since we are Semitic in religion, how can it be otherwise that there should be affinity of disposition between us and the Jews?" is meaningless. But let us grant (for the sake of argument) that our religion is Semitic, does it therefore follow that there will be an affinity of disposition between us and the Jews? Why not between us and the Arabs? But I deny in toto that even absolute identity in religious belief begets "affinity of disposition" between different races. There are thousands of French Protestants. Do they not possess the peculiar characteristics of their race which differentiate them from the Anglo-Saxon? Is there "affinity of disposition" between us and the native Christians of Africa or the Fiji Islands? Do the Roman Catholics born of Anglo-Saxon parents in the United States possess a disposition similar to the Spaniard? Then your correspondent asks: "Does affinity of disposition imply racial affinity?" Well, if it does not exactly imply it, it certainly goes far (other proofs being given) to confirm it. And herein stands our argument. We prove in other ways that we are descended from Jacob, and then this "affinity of disposition" which so many writers remark confirms our belief.

"Barrington" says that D'Aubigne uses the term "Israel" in "its general and spiritual sense. What is the "general and spiritual sense" of Israel? I ask to be enlightened by one quotation from Scripture. I challenge your correspondent to give me a solitary text in which Israel refers to any other than the lineal descendants of Jacob. Let your readers watch for his answer. To talk of "the general and spiritual sense" of Israel is to talk "general and spiritual" nonsense. You may as well speak of the "general and spiritual sense" of the English, French, Italians, or Hottentots.

Your correspondent gives statistics to show that there are many Protestants outside Saxondom. I have no means at hand of confirming these statistics. But granting their accuracy, yet my statement was absolutely true. What I said was: "We are almost the only Protestant people in the world." I used the word "people" as synonymous with "nation." Where are the other Protestant nations? You can hardly count Germany as such, for half the Germans are Roman Catholics. You might just as accurately call it a Roman Catholic nation.

Digitized by Google

It seems that in Whittaker's Almanack for 1891 British-Israelites are given as a denomination. Your correspondent adds "a sect, which is suggestive." Sir, I am sorry to use strong language. I believe your correspondent is an honourable man. Nevertheless I must say that any one making such a statement is guilty of a cruel slander. The very thought of becoming a sect is utterly opposite to all our ideas. No Anglo-Israelite has ever hinted such a thing. We could not become a distinct denomination if we tried. The late Bishop Titcomb, of the Church of England, and the late Piazzi Smyth, Astronomer-Royal of Scotland, a Presbyterian, were Anglo-Israelites. I will mention a few representative men, of different denominations, who are Anglo-Israelites: Dr. Hanan, Episcopalian; Mark Guy Pearce, Methodist; Dr. Howlitt, Baptist; Dr. Wild, Congregationalist. Such men as these, and hundreds of others—is it likely they will form a new sect?

The last paragraph of your correspondent's letter is a long one. It is full of serious charges against Anglo-Israel teaching. Your readers will doubtless have remarked that not one proof for these reckless assertions is vouchsafed, except anent the quarrels of the various denominations. It might be enough to flatly contradict every one of these unsupported assertions. I will, however, reply to one or two of the more glaring: Anglo-Israelism "dwells on the husk and ignores the kernel." If by the term "husks" are meant blessings of temporal greatness, wealth, and influence, and by the "kernel" spiritual blessings, then this statement is the reverse of fact. No people on earth set a higher value on the Gospel than we do. We preach it, talk it, delight in it; it is the very joy of our lives. But we do not therefore cease to give praise for the temporal blessings that are ours by virtue of the Abrahamic covenant. These blessings, together with faith in Christ, have made us the chief missionary power of the world. If the days could return when to preach the Gospel at home or among the heathen meant loss, persecution or death, your correspondent would probably pray for the husks he now, as Esau of old, seems to despise. Sir, "Barrington" is like those unwise people who feed on fine flour. Anglo-Israelites prefer whole meal. We find the "husks" very enjoyable and very nutritious.

Instead of the "Jew" we put in the "Anglo-Saxon." No, sir, we never claim to be Jews. Is it possible that "Barrington" does not yet know the difference between "Israel of the Ten Tribes" and "Judah"?

Then we "localize" that which is "universal." No, we don't. Neither do we (as "Barrington" does) universalize the local.

The sad picture which "Barrington" draws of the attitude of the religious denominations towards one another should lead men to inquire why this is so. From the standpoint of an Anglo-Israelite this hostility (greatly exaggerated by your correspondent), is the direct result of calling the "Church" "Israel." The Gentiles are not Israel, but by faith in Christ they are made to share in Israel's blessings. (See Eph. ii. 12, 13, and iii. 5, 6). Will your correspondent explain the meaning of the term "commonwealth of Israel" in the former passage? Christ told the Jews that because they did not receive Him the Kingdom of God should be given to a nation, &c. (Matt. xxi. 43). Let "Barrington" decide whether the Church is a nation.

Your correspondent makes a statement which has surprised me much. He says: "Mr. Cooper's Scriptural argument has been dealt with in former letters sent to you." I have never seen one such letter. I ask in which numbers of the Light have these letters appeared?* You have been kind enough to insert abstracts of six of my sermons on this subject. Will "Barrington" kindly read them, and taking every argument I use from Scripture seriatim reply? I call your reader's attention to the fact that this has never been attempted.

Sir, if with your permission "Barrington" cares to continue this controversy it will be necessary that we understand one another's ground. My position is evident. As I do not know who your correspondent is, nor what are his views on some important points connected with the truth we are discussing, may I ask him:

1st. Does he believe that God inspired the Hebrew prophets to foretell future events?

2nd. In his opinion does the term "Israel" in the prophets refer to the descendants of Jacob, or to the Gentiles, or to both? If to both, will he give the rule by which he determines whether the literal Israel or the Gentiles are meant? A few examples wherein this rule is applied would be a considerable help to me.

Yours, &c., C. F. COOPER.

Jan. 5, 1893.

—Yarmouth Light, January 12, 1893.

THE BLESSING OF MOSES.

BY J. D. REID.

MANY of our opponents seem never to weary of pointing to Israel under the kingship of David and Solomon, as the fulfilment of all the prophecies of the future greatness, predicted to the several tribes by Jacob and Moses. To the Anglo-Israelite these partial fulfilments fall far short of what the reality will be. We remember the preface to Jacob's death-bed blessings, "Gather yourselves together, so that I may tell you what shall befall you in the latter days." We know that, from the times of the prophets down to the last of the apostles, the "latter days" were to them still in the future; we are convinced, from the signs that are abundantly evident to our eyes and ears in the present day, that we are now certainly in these "latter days." Seeing, then, that we are in that epoch we ought to bestir ourselves more and more to show from the events of daily occurrence that our cause is good, and that our readings of the prophecies are correct. The duty is incumbent on all believers to persist—in season and out of season—in giving reasons for the faith within us.

In comparing the blessings showered so profusely on the head of Joseph by Jacob, with the blessings which were considerably added to, by Moses to the same tribe, we are struck with their similarity, so much so that the ordinary reader, if he had any thoughts on the subject, would almost say that they were as nearly as possible exactly alike. On a closer examination, however, it will be observed that there is at least one point, on which they are very different. I am not aware of any one having directed the attention of the BANNER readers to that difference, consequently I purpose doing so in this article. It is an understood thing by all Bible students that the translators of our Bible took certain liberties with the text and inserted words the equivalents of which had no place in the original. Their purpose in so doing was that the passages might be better understood. These words so inserted are, in our Bibles, printed in italics; we are, therefore, at liberty to read the passage, omitting those italics if we can thus better understand what we read. At any rate, by omitting them we have only what is in the original.

* [We have received several communications on this subject which we have not as yet found opportunity for publishing.—ED. Light.]

Digitized by Google

That being so, when we read Moses' blessings on Joseph we find by omitting certain italicised words that we have thus a clear indication as to the time when these blessings were to be Joseph's. Deut. xxxiii. 16, the last clause of the verse, will read thus:—"Let the blessing come upon the head of Joseph, and upon the top of the head of him separated from his brethren." It is quite evident, then, that these blessings uttered by the inspired Moses on Joseph's head were not to fall on the tribes until they were separated from the others. Moses must have had granted him an insight into the future of Israel, and must have known more of their future than he disclosed, for independent of that statement as to their separation in the blessing of Joseph, we have a corroboration of the fact in the prayer that he puts into the mouth of Judah (verse 7 of the same chapter), "Hear, Lord, the voice of Judah, and bring him to his people."

In both, therefore, the separation is clearly pointed out to be in the future. The blessing of Joseph by Jacob was bestowed on the individual—Joseph. He was present, and he, as an individual, had been separated from his brethren. But in Deut. xxxiii. the case is different. The man Joseph was dead, and the tribes of Joseph—Ephraim and Manasseh—were blessed, and were to be, when severed from their brethren, the recipients of these benefits. We have accordingly to look to the time following the death of Solomon for the fulfilment of the prediction, and thus see that the arguments of our opponents on this subject are worthless. When they did separate under Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, did these blessings descend on them? All Bible students, I think, admit that the Ten Tribes, or House of Ephraim, went from bad to worse. True, they had times of revival; but these times were so short-lived, the gleams of righteousness were of such an evanescent character, that they only accentuated the succeeding gloom; and we fail to see any appearance of their success as agriculturists, as fishermen, as fruit-growers, as miners of metals and minerals, as cattle-rearers, as colonisers, as warriors, and, above and beyond all that, as having the "goodwill of him that dwelt in the bush," after their separation from their brethren and while in their land.

Let us follow the history of peoples and nations as we may from that time to the present, we fail to find any people—any nation—the possessors of those blessings other than the Anglo-Saxon—and the British portion in particular. Let us, therefore, pray the God of Israel, who has in these latter days given us such distinguishing marks of His favour, His goodwill, to hear the voice of Judah and restore him to his people.

NEWCASTLE ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

THE annual meeting of this Association was held on Thursday, March 23rd, at the rooms of the Bewick Club, Pilgrim-street, and brought together a goodly number of the members, not only from Newcastle, but the surrounding district. The proceedings began with tea at six o'clock, the tables being cared for by Mrs. Simpson, Mrs. Chas. Proctor, Mrs. Annandale, and Miss Simpson. At a quarter past seven the chair was taken by the Rev. J. Anderson Watt, who referred to the absence of the Rev. Henry Morton, B.A., president of the Society for many years, when a resolution was very heartily passed regretting the removal of Mr. Morton from amongst them, acknowledging his valuable services to the Association, and wishing him every prosperity in his new sphere. The following officers were then elected: President, Mr. Joseph J. Holme; Vice-presidents, Rev. J. Anderson Watt, Capt. Watkins, and Messrs. L. H. Gullachsen, George Dixon, Henry Dunn, and J. G. Taylor; Committee, Mrs. Simpson, Miss Storey, Mrs. Ochiltree, and Messrs. E. F. Reed, Geo. Lawson, C. S. Proctor, D. K. Simpson, T. S. Alder, A. Pearson, and John Wood; Treasurer, Mr. A. T. Y. Simpson; Secretary, Mr. William Dobbing, jun.

The business portion of the meeting having been concluded, the Rev. J. Anderson Watt delivered a powerful address, touching on several of the identifications, but dealing principally with the missionary one, showing what we had done in the past towards the performance of Israel's work, and emphasizing the heavy responsibilities resting on us as a nation. He declared that instead of the Identity being an unprofitable matter, it was the essentially practical nature of the question that made him an Anglo-Israelite, for when the people came to understand their origin they would fulfil their duties in a far higher degree than at present. Addresses were also given by Mr. George Dixon, Mr. J. J. Holme, and Mr. J. G. Taylor. During the evening vocal and instrumental music was kindly contributed by Mrs. Chas. Proctor, Miss Ella Simpson, Miss Young, and Master Ascough. Votes of thanks to the ladies, the chairman, and the late secretary, closed the proceedings.

GLEANINGS.

BY J. THOMSON.

19.—STONE KISTS.

IN the Wâdy Feiran—Peninsula of Sinai—"stone circles, and Kist-vaens, curiously like those of our own early Celtic period, have been discovered. In some of the latter, opened by Mr. Lord (naturalist of an expedition by the Viceroy of Egypt to explore the Peninsula); the bodies were found with the knees bent upon the chest, as was the case in all the tombs of this class examined by him throughout the Peninsula. The significance of this fact will be understood by the students of pre-historic antiquities. In and around many of the graves, flint implements have been found in considerable numbers, but none were seen in the Wâdy Feiran." See "Land of the Pharaohs," by the Rev. S. Manning, LL.D., pp. 201 and 206.—Religious Tract Society.

20.—AN ANCIENT COIN.

'Among the curious treasures of the Museum at Madras, is a golden coin of Claudius, the Emperor, struck to commemorate the conquest of Britain, and discovered in excavating a foundation near Madras. What chapters of fancy might be written about this aureus, which thus strangely links the past and present of England's history, and came, perhaps, to India in the scrip of St. Thomas! The only fact that could be mentioned by me at all to match the odd thoughts suggested by this Roman coin, with its device of ob Britannos directos—in connection with the same locality—was one regarding the famous old ship Mayflower, which bore the Pilgrim Fathers to New England. It has recently been ascertained that this vessel was chartered in 1659 (A.D.), by the East India Company, and went to Masulipatam from Gombroom for a cargo of rice and general produce. She was lost upon the voyage home; one of the ships whose history is linked with that of the birth and uprise of great nations, like the aureus in the Madras Museum."—From "India Revisited," by Edwin Arnold, M.A., C.S.I., &c. London: Trubner & Co., Ludgate Hill; 1866, pp. 260, 261.

21.—SOME ATTAINMENTS OF THE ANCIENT BRITONS.

"Long before the coming of Plautius, the Britons were well acquainted with the mechanical arts in general. They even appear to have been intimately acquainted with some of the best principles of practical architecture . . . And long before the Roman departure, they had all the arts considerably improved among them. In the 2nd and 3rd centuries they extracted a rich variety of metals from the beds of our minerals."—Whittaker's "History of Manchester," II., pp. 4, 5; ed. 1775.

Digitized by Google

22.—THE AFFINITY OF THE ENGLISH AND THE LOWLAND SCOTCH.

In his "History of England," vol. iii., chap. xviii., Froude has some interesting remarks upon Scotland, "that marvellous country, so fertile in genius and chivalry, so fertile in madness and crime, where the highest heroism co-existed with preternatural ferocity; yet where the vices were the vices of strength, and the one virtue of indomitable courage was found alike in saint and sinner. . . . Turn where we may in the story of Scotland, weakness is nowhere; power, energy, and will are everywhere. . . Experience sufficiently stern had convinced the English Government" (the historian is referring to the era of the Tudor kings), "that their northern neighbours would never stoop to the supremacy which they had inflicted upon Wales. The Welsh were Celts, a failing and inferior race The lowland Scots were Teutons, like the Saxons; and a people who showed resolutely that they would die to the last man before they would acquiesce in servitude; that they might be exterminated, but could not be subdued. After the battle of Bannockburn, the impossible task had been relinquished, and the separate existence of Scotland as an independent kingdom was no longer threatened. . . Though of the same race with the English, speaking the same language and living for the most part under the same institutions, the Scots, as a security for their freedom contracted a permanent alliance with 'the antient enemies' of their rivals across the Channel (i.e. the French), and settled into an attitude of determined, and only occasionally suspended, hostility against the 'Southrons.' For twenty miles on either side of the border there grew up a population who were trained from their cradles in licensed marauding. . . The fierce feuds of the Border moss-troopers were but an expression in its extreme form of the animosities between the two nations. The English hated Scotland, because Scotland had successfully defied them; the Scots hated England as an enemy on the watch, to make them slaves." . . . But now, in happier times, "from the meeting of the waters, as from a new fountain, the united fortunes of Great Britain flow on to their unknown destiny" (pp. 346, 347). "Unknown destiny!" Yes that is all that can be descried for our nation, apart from our Identity with the lost Ten-tribed House of Israel, whose pre-eminence, and special role among the nations and peoples of the earth, are delineated by the unerring page of Divine prophecy.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—In your issue of the 1st inst., there appears a letter from the pen of the Rev. Hugh S. Hamilton with reference to the literal meaning of the much disputed passage in Haggai ii. 7, "The desire of all nations shall come.

Haggai was especially raised up and called by God to instruct Zerubbabel and Joshua to call together the men of Judah, Benjamin, and Levi, who had then completed the term of their 70 years' captivity, to return to Jerusalem for the purpose of re-erecting the temple to the worship of the Lord God of Israel. If he refers back to Ezra iii. 12, he will find it stated that "many of the priests and Levites, and chief of the fathers, who were ancient men, that had seen the first house, when the foundation of this house was laid before their eyes, wept with a loud voice." Then the Word of the Lord came to Haggai the prophet, a most holy man or seer, saying, "Go, speak to the people, &c., who is left among you (ancient men), that saw this house, the mother house, in her first glory? and how do you see it now? is it not in your eyes in comparison of it as nothing? Yet, now, be strong O Zerubbabel! and be strong, O Joshua, the high priest, and be strong all ye people of the land; be faithful and obedient, and work with all your might: and leave the result in My hands, for I am with you, saith the Lord of hosts. According to the word that I covenanted with you when ye came out of Egypt, so My Spirit (the third person of the Trinity) remaineth among you: therefore, fear ye not. Yet once, it is but a little space, and I will shake the heavens and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land, and I will shake all nations; and the desire of all nations shall come: and I will fill this house with glory. The silver is Mine, and the gold is Mine, although it is not with you to lavish upon the lining of this building as heretofore. But the glory of this house shall be greater than the former: and in this place will I give peace." The marginal note directs our attention to Mal. iii. 1, and what does it say? "Behold, I will send My messenger (John); and he shall prepare My way before Me and the Lord whom ye seek shall come suddenly to His temple, even the Messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, He shall come."

To my mind the words are an exhortation to the people to work with a purpose, casting all their care upon God, and leaving Him to accomplish His plans, promising in a short time to fill up the apparent deficiency by crowning the work in some other and unexpected form. At the dedication of the mother temple, the glory of the Lord appeared within the most holy house in the bright shining light and the cloud; but in the second there is no such manifestation described, neither is there anything said of the restoration of the ark of the covenant and the mercy seat.

What was the desire of nations? The word nations includes twelve or thirteen nations or tribes which came out of the loins of Abraham, to whom the promise was made, that in due time a Saviour, born of a woman, to crush or bruise the head of the serpent's seed, should come to redeem Israel from their sins.

This promise of the sure Word of God creates a firm confidence and certain hope (and hope is the anchor of the soul) to spring up in the breast, that the promise made will in due time be faithfully fulfilled.

Old Simeon, taking the child Jesus in his arms, exclaimed, "Lord, now lettest Thou Thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen Thy salvation, which Thou hast prepared before the face of all people, a light to lighten the nations, and the glory of Thy people Israel."

Here, then, was the glory of the Lord, manifested in the person of the child Jesus, the accomplishment of the prophetic promise. Christ, the desire of the nations forming the House of Israel. The Prince of Peace, the Wonderful Counsellor, the mighty God, the Everlasting, the Hope, Redeemer, and Saviour of the world, who, on the day of expiation, offered Himself a willing ransom for His people, presenting His life's blood within the most holy chamber of this house, thus accomplishing the task His Father had sent Him to do. The writer takes objection to the rendering of the passage, because one word is in the singular number, whereas the other is in the third person, plural, and according to the rules of grammar, a singular noun cannot be followed by a plural verb, except in rare cases where the noun is a noun of multitude.

Now, in the case of this sort, and it may be, the only rare case of which he speaks, we have two masculine nouns in the names of Deity, and one feminine or noun of multitude.

May I remind him that when our Saviour was caught up and removed from this earth, He promised His disciples that He would not leave them comfortless, but that He would send a Comforter shortly who would show them all that He had said, even the Spirit of Truth. That Comforter did come on the Day of Pentecost; but, not in the shape and form of a man, but in the form of a tongue of fire, not singly, but in multitude, so many that they filled the House where the people were gathered together—does not this somewhat answer his objection? The Third, or Spirit of the Divine Person.

Digitized by Google

Lastly, he says that the shaking of heaven, and earth, and sea, and dry land, has not yet taken place. What? has not the preaching of Paul the aged, and his writings, shaken heathendom and all its ancient religions? the religion of the Greeks, Egyptians, Assyrians, Persians, &c., to their very foundations, and swept away their crumbling ruins, transferring their teaching into quite another form, now called Christian or one bearing the name of Christ, with Christ at its head?

Judah was unfruitful whilst she held possession of the sacred writings, but thanks to the presence of the Tribe of Benjamin, a torch bearer was raised up who was selected and brought out, henceforth to link himself with his own brother and blood relation, into whose safe keeping the oracles of God were to be sent; the offshoot of him whom Pharaoh testified that the Spirit of the Holy Gods dwelt within him; the light has been held up, the truth disclosed, and the seed sown and distributed over land and sea, to the four corners of the earth, and has increased, and is increasing rapidly.

Finally, supposing the word Brith is spelt with a Tau—Is it not worth sticking to? is it not the Tau, or cross, that raiseth us—shall I not say raiseth the nation? It is the mark of life, regenerated life—regenerated life of a nation, shall I call it, in the Western Isles.

Yours very truly, EDWARD HIDE.

March 5, 1893.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—On looking through the BANNERS of the past year, I noticed on page 142 a letter from Mr. Fox, in which he states—referring to the famous Varangian Guard—that "there is no explanation given how a body of English could be in the pay of the Greek Empire, &c.," and goes on to say that "the mystery would be satisfactorily solved, probably, however, on the Anglo-Israel hypothesis," as we find people of a similar race to that of the Anglo-Saxons and Danes not far from the Holy Land itself. Your correspondent infers from this that the Varangian Guard was composed of descendants of the former Israelitish settlers (see "Is British-Israelism True?"). Now, as an Anglo-Israelite reader of the BANNER OF ISRAEL, I should be very sorry for any errors in its valuable pages to pass unnoticed by Identity believers, lest we thereby lay ourselves open to attacks from our opponents. As no one else seems to have taken the matter up, I venture to answer your correspondent.

As all Anglo-Israelites ought to know, and as all who possess the "Handbook" do know, Odin started for the north with a great host of Scythians, his starting-point being Asgard (Kiev or the Caucasus) (see p. 122 "Handbook"). The traditions of this migration, and of ancient Asgard, long lingered among the Norsemen and Danes, who in later centuries undertook expeditions into Russia and the South for the purpose of discovering Asgard. Many of these sons of the North who engaged in these expeditions took service in Russia, others pressed on to Constantinople, where, dazzled by the wealth of the Byzantine Empire, which was truly enormous (see sec. 1, chap. iv., book I., Finlay's "Byzantine Empire"), they took service under the Greek Emperors.

The Russian Slavs chose Ruric, a Northman, for their chief, and both he and those Northmen who settled or took service in Russia were known as Waragers—a term synonymous with Varangians or Væringi (p. 275, vol. i., Minzel's "History of Germany," Bohn's Library). Under the latter names they (the Russians) invaded the Greek Empire ("Byzantine Empire," Finlay). Many of the Vikings, after ravaging the coasts of France, Spain, and Portugal, and penetrating the interiors of those countries, sailed through the Straits of Gibraltar into the Mediterranean and attacked Sicily, Naples, Spain, Africa, &c. (sec. 3, chap. iii., book I., "Byzantine Empire;" also p. 290 Wenzel's "Germany," vol. i.). Sicily formed part of the Greek Empire till about 1040 A.D., Lower Italy till 1055 A.D. Thus from these places also, to where the sea-kings had penetrated, the Norsemen may have enlisted in the Grecian service, becoming to that Empire that which Hrolf and his Normans were to France. Lord Lytton in his "Harold" styles them "The Janissaries of the Byzantine Empire."

After the Conquest of England by the Normans, numbers of Anglo-Saxon nobles, rather than submit to the conqueror's yoke, left their country, and, led away by the semi-fabulous accounts of adventures to be met with in the Eastern Empire, fled to Byzantium and formed part of the famous bodyguard of Alexius Commenus. The Normans themselves formed part of the mercenary forces of the Empire, for we read that Maniakes, Commander of the Byzantine forces in Italy, had a body of 300 Normans among his troops. Again, Hjalmar H. Boyesen, in his "History of Norway" (Sampson, Low & Co.), tells us that Harold Sigurdsson, better known perhaps as Harold Hardrada, or Hard-ruler, when a youth took service for a few years under Jaroslav of Russia; from thence he went to Constantinople, where he became chief captain of the emperor's Varangian bodyguard, which was composed of Norsemen and Danes (pp. 240—2 "History of Norway").

A good description of the Varangians is given by Scott in his "Count Robert of Paris." I think that these historical references furnish a sufficient explanation for the appearance of the outlawed Norwegians, Danes, and Anglo-Saxons as the foreign bodyguard of "Anglois and Danes" of the Byzantine Emperors; but although this refutes the theory of Mr. Fox, yet it has a bearing on the Identity, for it was these same Varangians or Væringi who upheld the Greek Empire; another testimony of the power divinely promised and given to Israel (Mic. v. 8, 9; Isa. liv. 17), having descended to the Anglo-Saxons, Danes and Normans, who therefore are Israel, His "battleaxe." These arguments also support your correspondent's contention for the supremacy of Dan and the Danes at sea, for they show that wherever these Northern sea-kings sailed—from the North Sea to the shores of Palestine itself—victory sided with them.

With reference to my work out here as a Sower of British-Israel Truth, I might mention that the coloured people from Barbadoes, with whom I am in touch, are very much interested in the subject. One of them had read Edward Hine's "Anglo-Saxon Riddle," and is a firm believer in the Anglo-Israel Identity. I myself gave in to the "Forty-seven Identifications" a few years back.

The work among the sailors does not progress as fast as I could wish, as, owing to illness, I have unfortunately hitherto been prevented from seeing the sailors on the return of the vessels from some port before its final departure from Colon. I have also, at times, had to miss them altogether. However, I trust God, that though I am unable to witness the harvest, He will bring forth the fruit from the seeds sown by means of those able leaflets "An Englishman an Israelite."

Yours very sincerely in the cause, G. VICARS BROWN.

Colon, Isthmus Panama, Jan. 10, 1893.

THE DATE OF THE CAPTURE OF JERUSALEM BY OMAR.

GIBBON does not give the exact date of the Caliph's entry into Jerusalem. He states that the battle of Yermouk, which decided the fate of Syria, was fought in November, A.D. 636. The siege of Jerusalem followed, and lasted four months. When the city capitulated, the Patriarch Sophronius obtained the admission of this clause; that the articles of security should be ratified by the authority and presence of Omar himself. This clause was debated in the council of Medina, and by the advice of Ali, accepted. The Caliph journeyed to Jerusalem with primitive simplicity, mounted on a red camel, which carried, besides his person, a bag of corn, a bag of dates, a wooden dish, and a leathern bottle of water. The delay caused by this condition was about six months, and the city was delivered up early in the autumn of the year 637, A.D. If any reader can give the exact date and reference to his authority, he will much oblige. D. H.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed "PHILO-ISRAEL," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION for the BANNER OF ISRAEL, in Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts. To any country included in the Postal Union, including the following:—United Kingdom, Canada, America, Europe, New Zealand, Cape Colony, Victoria, Western Australia, Transvaal, Tasmania, South Australia, Queensland, Natal, New South Wales, India, Ceylon via Brindisi, 7s. per year, including postage.

All Post Office Orders, Cheques, &c., should be crossed "City Bank, Ludgate-hill, to the ac. of ROBERT BANKS AND SON." They will then only be paid to our account.

READING CASES for holding the Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts, may be had, price 2s. Sent post free on receipt of Postal Order.

THE ANNUAL VOLUMES, bound in handsome blue Cloth, price 8s.

THE MONTHLY PARTS, in tinted wrapper, published the last day of each month, 6d.

Englishmen should Circulate, at the Present Crisis,

NO ROME RULE.

AN IDENTITY LEAFLET.

UNION IS STRENGTH.

Price 1s. per 100 nett. 1,000 carriage paid to any address for 10s.

London: Robert Banks & Son Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

Special arrangements have been made for supplying at REDUCED PRICE, carriage paid to any address in the United Kingdom or the Colonies, copies of the Fifth and last Edition, published at 16s.,

FOR 11s. 6d.

PROFESSOR C. PIAZZI SMYTH'S

Well-known work,

OUR INHERITANCE

IN THE

GREAT PYRAMID,

with

TWENTY-FIVE EXPLANATORY PLATES,

showing the more crucial parts of this really Anti-Egyptian and most Primeval Structure, in Plan, Elevation, and Section.

As the number of copies to be offered at this reduced price is limited, early application should be made direct to Messrs. R. Banks and Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London.

Jehovah Triumphant. The New and Complete Theology and Electric Light of the Bible, containing the History of British-Israel, compiled from the Sacred Scriptures. A handsome crown 8vo., cloth bound volume of 550 pages, with Index of Scripture references. Price 5s. (published at 10s.), post free for P.O.

London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C

NEW CATALOGUE of Works on Our Identity post free from R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

Mr. E. HINE'S PUBLICATIONS

Can be obtained of ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street London; or of ISAAC LOVELAND, Shoreham, Sevenoaks.

Lost Israel Found. One handsome Demy 8vo. vol., cloth, gilt edges. 3s. 6d., post 3s. 9d.

Forty-seven Identifications. 6d., post 7d.

Coming Glories. 6d., by post 7d.

Flashes of Light. 6d., by post 7d.

Oxford Wrong. 4d., by post 7d.

Anglo-Saxon Riddle. 2d., by post 2½d.

The Nation Warned, &c. 6d., by post 7d.

About half a million copies of these works have been sold.

"A WONDERFUL REMEDY."
"I WAS GIVEN UP BY ALL."
"SAVED FROM AN EARLY GRAVE."

Such are the words of grateful Patients relative to their CASES OF

CONSUMPTION

CURED BY THE TREATMENT OF

MR. GEO. T. CONGREVE.

Read his Book, "ON CONSUMPTION, &c." which may be had post free for ONE SHILLING from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.; or may be ordered of any Bookseller.

NOTE.—CONSULTATIONS FREE at Coombe Lodge, Peckham, on TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings only. No Charge except the usual charge for three weeks or six weeks' supply of medicine. All Patients should read the book first.

"I am delighted with this."—PHILO-ISRAEL.

NEW AND IMPROVED EDITION OF

ISRAEL'S WORLD,

By Rev. HENRY ROE. Price 2d.

Also "Consecration," 2d., "Going to Africa," 1s.; "West African Scenes," 2s.; "Fernando Po Mission," 1s. Also "Israel's World" and "Consecration" bound together in cloth, with Author's latest photograph portrait, 1s.

Order of ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C., or of Rev. HENRY ROE, Radstock, via Bath.

MASON'S KILLCORN

"AN EXCELLENT THING."

You need not suffer any longer from Corns, Warts or Bunions. "WONDERFUL KILLCORN" will cure you. This is what a postman says:—"I have been nearly crippled with corns, but am now completely cured by your wonderful 'Killcorn.' I will answer all enquiries regarding same."—DANIEL MITCHELL, Post Office, Cardenden, Scotland. 1s. per bottle. Ask for MASON'S KILLCORN and don't have any other. Sold by all Chemists Patent Medicine Vendors, and at all stores, or sent post free for 12 stamps by the Proprietor W. B. MASON, 26 & 27, High Holborn, London, W.C., and 18, Guildford-street, Leeds.

THE WORLD'S CORN CURER

DR. ROOKE'S SOLAR ELIXIR AND ORIENTAL PILLS

DR. ROOKE'S SOLAR ELIXIR AND ORIENTAL PILLS effect marvellous cures. 50 years reputation. Sold everywhere. Pills in boxes 1 1½, 2/9, and 4/6. The Elixir in bottles 2/9, 4/6, and 11/-

Dr. ROOKE, SCARBOROUGH, ENGLAND.

TEETH.—£1 A FULL SET

ESKELL'S.—CELEBRATED MAKE, £2 2s. Warranted and fitted in one visit. No extractions needed. HALF A MILLION SETS already supplied. The Nursing Record and Hospital World says:—We recommend all who require Reliable and Good Teeth at a small cost to go to Messrs. ESKELL, 445, Strand (facing Charing Cross Station), and 58, Ludgate Hill, City, London. Also at 27, Western Road, Brighton, and 23, Mount Pleasant, Tunbridge Wells. Hours 9 till 7. Apply for Illustrated Pamphlet free (mention this paper). Established 100 years.

"THE WORLD'S PROVED REMEDY FOR ALL CHEST DISEASES."

COUGH, ASTHMA,

CHRONIC BRONCHITIS,

INFLUENZA,

THERE IS NONE TO EQUAL IT.

Rev. F. E. HEAPE, of DERBY, in a recent letter, says: "Your Medicine always puts my lungs right, and drove out the terrible INFLUENZA last May."

This Medicine has been prepared for 65 years.

CONGREVE'S BALSAMIC ELIXIR.

In Bottles, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 22s., may be had of all Chemists and Medicine Vendors.

TEA! TEA! TEA!

FROM

INDIA, CEYLON, AND CHINA.

Best Quality and Best Value.

From 1/6 to 3/6 per lb. Samples Gratis.

Carriage Paid on Parcels of 6lbs. and upwards.

Robinson & James,

42, TRINITY SQUARE, TOWER HILL LONDON, E.C.

TOOTH-ACHE

CURED INSTANTLY BY

BUNTER'S NERVINE

Prevents Decay, Saves Extraction, Sleepless Nights Prevented.

Neuralgic Headaches and all Nerve Pains removed by BUNTER'S NERVINE. All Chemists, 1s. 1½d.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT

FOR

PARALYSIS

J. FULLER, Jun., Esq., Whiteparish, Salisbury, Wilts, writes:—"Since wearing your Electropathic Belt I am decidedly better and stronger. I have more confidence in myself, and the pain in my back is completely gone. Your Belt is truly wonderful."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd. Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST. LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

Digitized by Google

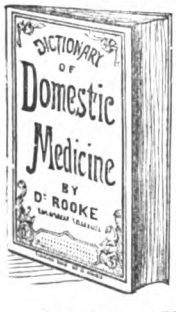
£33,000,000
LOST EVERY YEAR

By a very moderate calculation this enormous sum is lost every year (in the shape of wages) by those who, through not using

DR. ROOKE'S
ORIENTAL PILLS
AND
SOLAR ELIXIR,



become ill, and are unable to go to work or to business.

The world-wide fame of Dr. Rooke's Oriental Pills and Solar Elixir rests upon the marvellous cures which have followed their use in the most severe cases of

INDIGESTION, BRONCHITIS, LIVER COMPLAINTS,
ASTHMA,
PULMONARY CONSUMPTION,
RHEUMATISM, GOUT,
SCROFULA, POOR BLOOD,
GENERAL DEBILITY,

and all diseases of the Nervous System, from whatever cause arising. THE PILLS PURIFY THE SYSTEM, THEN THE ELIXIR BUILDS IT UP, AND LEAVES IT STRONG, ROBUST, AND HEALTHY. Those pursuing a sedentary life, or engaged in unhealthy occupations, or living in an insalubrious climate would all find DR. ROOKE'S REMEDIES invariably successful in quickly restoring health and vigour to the most shattered constitution. Hence they are a boon alike to the young, the middle-aged, and the old.

The Oriental Pills are sold in boxes at 1s 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each; and the Elixir is sold in bottles at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each. They can be obtained of all Chemists and Patent Medicine Dealers throughout the world.

Dr. Rooke's Dictionary of Domestic Medicine. A valuable work, treating of some of the most prevalent diseases of human life, and showing their rational mode of treatment. Every household should possess a copy. Gratis, of all Patent Medicine Dealers, or sent post free on receipt of penny stamp, by

DR. ROOKE,
SCARBOROUGH, ENGLAND.

MASON'S EXTRACT OF HERBS FOR MAKING NON-INTOXICATING BEER

WE ALL REQUIRE SOMETHING TO DRINK

The finest, most refreshing and pleasantest beverage obtainable. One table-spoonful of this Extract makes one gallon of splendid Beer. Try it. A sample bottle, enough to make eight gallons, post free for 9 stamps.

NEWBALL & MASON, NOTTINGHAM.

AGENTS WANTED.

MASON'S WINE ESSENCES, non-intoxicating. For children's parties and social gatherings. A 6d. bottle will make one gall. of delicious wine. Post free 9 stamps, or a bottle of both Extract of Herbs and Wine Essence post free 15 stamps.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN'S
IRISH
CAMBRIC HANDKERCHIEFS
ALL PURE FLAX. POST FREE.

Ladies' Hemmed—2/6, 3/3, 4/-, 4/11, 6/-, 7/2, 8/-, & 9/- per doz.
Gentlemen's Hemmed—4/-, 4/11, 5/9, 6/6, 7/5, 8/3 9/3, & 10/6 per doz.
Hemstiched Ladies and Gents (excellent value) 6/- & 7/11 per doz., various widths & hems.
A Sample of THREE of either price sent by return of post, on receipt of postal order.
Very pretty Fancy Boxes, suitable for Presents, 4½d. extra.

V. W. THOMSON,
27, Dunluce Street, BELFAST.

A PRESENT.

SEND us your address, mentioning this paper, and we will make you a present of the best guide to health yet published. It is only a little book, but it is of great value to all who are ill or indisposed.—GORDON, MURRAY, & CO., LIMITED, 10, Adam Street, Strand, W.C.

PAGE WOODCOCK'S
WIND PILLS

It is astonishing how many people imagine they suffer from

HEART DISEASE

They experience a depressing feeling about the region of the heart, accompanied by an occasional stab of pain, nervous debility, loss of appetite and general depression. The fact is they suffer from

INDIGESTION, OR DYSPEPSIA.

The food, instead of being thoroughly digested, develops into Wind, and flies about the valves of the heart causing the symptoms named. All who suffer in this way should at once take

Page Woodcock's Wind Pills,

A world-renowned remedy for all Stomach disorders.
All Sufferers from INDIGESTION, LIVER COMPLAINTS, WIND on the STOMACH, COSTIVENESS, SICK HEADACHE, HEARTBURN, NERVOUS DEBILITY, PALPITATION of the HEART, BILIOUSNESS, &c.,
should avail themselves of this most excellent medicine.

Of all Medicine Vendors, at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d., or Post Free for P.O. or Stamps, from PAGE WOODCOCK, Lincoln.

Important Notice to the Public, Chemists, and all

Retailers of Patent Medicines: OWBRIDGE'S LUNG TONIC does not contain any Scheduled Poison, therefore ALL persons holding Patent Medicine Licences can sell it, and no one has a right to attach "Poison" labels to the bottles.

The known superiority of Owbridge's Lung Tonic as a safe and effective remedy for Coughs, Colds, or any Lung affection, makes it important the Public should know that no difficulty exists in obtaining it.

Sold everywhere at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., & 11s., by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors

The True and Divine Appointment for the Cure of Disease.

Send to

B. V. SCOTT, M.B.M.R.S.,

College of Health, 121, Kensington, Liverpool,
for his
VOICE OF NATURE TO THE INVALID,

Post free 6 stamps.

Thousands of incurables (so-called) have proved God's own means could save when others failed.

Rev. F. Harper says of Mr. Scott's book: "It is a library in itself, and free from quackery."

Rev. Lush says: "Mr. Scott's treatment is natural, safe, reasonable, and Scriptural."

Send for the Book at once.

No. 26.—Price 1s. per 100, 8s. 6d. per 1,000.
THOUGHTS FOR THE BRITISH FOLK.
SUGGESTED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.
OUR ISRAELITE MINERS.
London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument Proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100, postage 1d.
R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & CO. (Ltd.) 23, Paternoster-row. Wednesday APRIL 19, 1893. All Rights Reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India).

"And the Remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORN with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS OF THE EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XVII., NO. 852. Entered at Stationer's Hall] WEDNESDAY, APRIL 26, 1893 [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

PAGE
Mr. Grant Allen on "England" 205
Great Britain and Russia in Central Asia 206
A Nova Scotian Objector 208
Multiplication. By W. L. Blore 209
The House of Judah Walking to the House of Israel. By J. S. Barton 210
"I Will Bring Again the Captivity of Elam" 212
The Sudden Death, at Athens, of the Rev. S. C. Adam 213
The Death of Mrs. H. Alder-Smith 213
Correspondence 213

MR. GRANT ALLEN ON "ENGLAND."

IN the Westminster Gazette of Feb. 25, last, we have some amusing and instructive remarks under the name of "Post-prandial Philosophy," in reference to the supposed decadence of "England" (meaning Britain), and giving some reasons for supposing that our Empire is not quite used up and will survive for a good while yet. Of course, Mr. Grant Allen knows nothing of Our Identity and does not allude to it. But he makes much of what we call the Gates as the sources of our wonderful power and influence in the world, and compares the history and destiny of past leading nations like the Greeks, Romans, Venice, Florence, Genoa, Pisa, France, Holland, Italy, with our own. Position, relatively to the commerce of the surrounding lands and seas determined the greatness of these nations. When new countries and oceans were discovered, the centre of influence and commerce shifted, and empire shifted with it. He goes on thus:—

Our own age brings fresh seas into the circle once more. It is no longer the Atlantic, the Mediterranean, or the Indian Ocean that alone count; the Pacific also begins to be considered. China, Japan, the Cape; Chili, Peru, the Argentine; California, British Columbia, Australia, New Zealand; all of them are parts of the system of to-day; civilisation is world-wide. Has this change of area altered the central position of England? Not at all, save to strengthen it. If you look at the hemisphere of greatest land, you will see that England occupies its exact middle. Insular herself, and therefore all made up of ports, she is nearer all ports in the world than any other country is or ever can be. I don't say that this insures for her perpetual dominion, such as Virgil prophesied for the Roman Empire; but I do say it makes her a hard country to beat in commercial competition. It accounts for Liverpool, London, Glasgow, Newcastle; it even accounts in a way for Manchester, Birmingham, Leeds, and Sheffield. England now stands at the mathematical centre of the practical world, and unless some Big Thing occurs to displace her, she must continue to stand there. It takes a great deal to upset the balance of an entire planet.

Is anything now displacing her? Well, there is the fact that railways are making land-carriage to-day more important relatively to water-carriage than at any previous period. That may, perhaps, in time shift the centre of the world from an island like England to the middle of a great land area, like Chicago or Moscow. And, no doubt, if ever the centre shifts at all, it will shift towards Western America, or rather the prairie region. But, just at present, what are the greatest commercial towns of the world? All ports to a man. And the day when it will be otherwise, if ever, seems still far distant. Look at the newest countries. What are their great focal points? Everyone of them ports. Melbourne and Sydney, Rio, Buenos Ayres, and Valparaiso, Cape Town, San Francisco, Bombay, Calcutta, Yokohama. Chicago itself, the most vital and the quickest grower among modern towns, owes half its importance to the fact that there water-carriage down the Great Lakes begins; though it owes the other half, I admit, to the converse fact that all the great trans-continental railways have to bend south at that point to avoid Lake Michigan. Still, on the whole, I think, as long as conditions remain what they are, the commercial supremacy of England is in no immediate danger. It is these great permanent geographical factors that make or mar a country, not Eight Hours Bills or petty social reconstructions. Said the Lord Mayor of London to petulant King James, when he proposed to remove the Court to Oxford, "May it please your Majesty not to take away the Thames also."

Mr. Grant Allen's point is that we occupy a country which is from its insular position made up of ports, or as we say Gates, and that she is situated at the very centre of the hemisphere of greatest land. God made Israel a promise respecting her home Gates, which will be found in Isa. lx. 11, 12. This promise fits in with the writer's argument and makes it certain that the "Big Thing" which is to displace her will never take place! Mr. Grant Allen seems to be of that opinion too; but we have Scripture to back our ideas, and he has not! But the Bible gave Israel (and "England" in consequence) a great gift in respect to our enemies or foreign ports. We are to "possess" them! Our "permanent geographical factors," then, have a new meaning attached to them, and the chief of these is, that not only are our own ports safe, but God has given us besides those of our foreign enemies to hold, and our nation's supremacy for all time is thus guaranteed.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Grant Allen concludes his remarks in the most cheery and comforting style, quite, if we may say so, in the fashion of an Anglo-Israelite who firmly believes what he professes. He thinks, for instance, that even if we apparently lose some of our trade, and other nations seem for the time to be taking some of it from us, they cannot alter geographical facts. The Gates remain! The Thames flows where it always did! London does not shrink but grows, our watering places do not collapse, but become, on the contrary, big towns and cities by the sea! The factories, mines, railways, canals and buildings, the docks and the machinery cannot be removed, and the great workshop which our country has become remains waiting its opportunities. The conclusion of the whole matter, as Mr. Grant Allen puts it, is worthy of a place in the BANNER and shall have it. He refers our position to the providence and will of God, and therein he is perfectly right. He wrote thus :—

"But our competitors? We are being driven out of our markets." Oh, yes, if that's all you mean, I don't suppose we shall always be able in everything to keep up our exclusive position. Our neighbours, who (bar the advantage of insularity, which means a coast and a port always close at hand) seem nearly as well situated as we are for access to the world markets, are beginning to wake up and take a slice of the cake from us. Germany is manufacturing; Belgium is smelting; Antwerp is exporting; America is occupying her own markets. But that's a very different thing indeed from national decadence. We may have to compete a little harder with our rivals, that's all. The Boom may be over; but the Thames remains: the geographical facts are still unaltered. And notice that all the time while there's been this vague talk about "bad times"—income-tax has been steadily increasing, London has been steadily growing, every outer and visible sign of commercial prosperity has been steadily spreading. Have our watering-places shrunk? Have our buildings been getting smaller and less luxurious? If Antwerp has grown, how about Hull and Cardiff? "Well, perhaps the past is all right; but consider the future! Eight hours are going to drive capital out of the country!" Rubbish! I'm not a political economist, thank God; I never sank quite so low as that. And I'm not speaking for or against Eight Hours, I'm only discounting some verbose nonsense. But I know enough to see that the capital of a country can no more be exported than the land or the houses. Can you drive away the London and North-Western Railway? Can you drive away the factories of Manchester, the mines of the Black Country, the canals, the buildings, the machinery, the docks, the plant, the apparatus? Impossible, on the very face of it! Most of the capital of a country is fixed in its soil, and can't be uprooted. People fall into this error about driving away capital because they know you can sell particular railway shares or a particular factory and leave the country with the proceeds, because somebody else is willing to buy; but you can't sell all the railways and all the factories in a lump, and clear out with the capital. No, no; England stands where she does, because God put her there; and until He invents a new order of things (which may, of course, happen any day—as, for example, if aerial navigation came in) she must continue, in spite of minor changes, to maintain in the main her present position.

In all this, which contains a good deal of good common sense, our author thinks nothing of the prophetic future and destiny awaiting those countries which are trying to rob us of our commerce, and in a measure are now succeeding. They are to be involved in the coming war-woe—an "earthquake such as there was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake—so great!" (Rev. xvi. 18). At that crisis our own nation, being Israel, is kept from participation in that dire calamity, and will profit, no doubt, commercially and otherwise, from God's mercy to His chosen people Israel, which people we are. If men would only realise this and all its comforting consequences, they would join us in praising the Lord for all His mercies to His blind and foolish ones.

GREAT BRITAIN AND RUSSIA IN CENTRAL ASIA.

THE Glasgow Herald a few months ago published the notes of an interesting lecture given there by Col. Browne, of the Royal Scots Fusiliers, on "Great Britain and Russia in Central Asia." The lecture is interesting to the readers of the BANNER and ourselves, because it confirms in a remarkable manner many of the views we have always expressed respecting the intentions of Russia as to India. Russia intends to make an attempt to seize India and wrest it from us, if she can. But this is only a secondary object on her part, a feint to divert attention from her real aim, which is to capture the Gate Constantinople, as an outpost of the Holy Land and of the Holy Places. These are her real objects. She knows the British mean to have both, and must have both. Therefore to divide the forces against her, Russia's tactics impel her to throw against the northern frontiers of Hindostan as large a force as she can, in order to compel the British to despatch to the East a great proportion of the army in the hope that thus sheir will have easy work in making the Great Gate her own. After that success, Palestine and the land of the inheritance of Israel she believes will fall to her, to enable her to dominate the world.

In vain! God has "given Israel the heritage of the heathen," and has thus shown His people "the power of His works" (Psa. cxi. 6, R.V.). He has besides bestowed by oath the Gates of her enemies upon the afterseed of Abraham, and in virtue of that splendid grant Constantinople must be ours! (Gen. xxii. 17). The land of Israel is God's gift to the Thirteen Tribes of Israel, and there is nothing clearer in God's Word than His resolve that His people shall be restored to their heritage, there to enjoy it for ever and for evermore under His own everlasting protection and blessing (Jer. iii. 18; Ezek. xxxvii. 15—28; Hosea i. 11; Isa. xviii. 1—7, &c.).

Col. Browne's lecture was thus reported:—

"Last night Col. Browne, of the Royal Scots Fusiliers, delivered a lecture in the Town Hall, Ayr, on 'Great Britain and Russia in Central Asia.'

"Col. Browne said the Eastern question had for the last half century or more been the very substantial ghost which had disturbed the rest of British statesmen. True it had been laid every now and again, but only to appear again in more hideously realistic and colossal proportions, and to-day it assumed a more formidable shape than ever. He divided his subject into six sections, viz.:—(1) Geographical; (2) the successive steps by which Russia has advanced eastward during the present century, including some account of the construction of the Transcaspian Railway, and a description of 'The Pamirs'; (3) the positions of Russia and Great Britain to-day; (4) military forces at the disposal of Russia, Persia, Afghanistan, and England in Central Asia; (5) probable lines of Russia's advance and proposed plans for the defence of our Indian Empire; (6) concluding remarks. Having pointed out under his first division that Central Asia was the district between the Caspian Sea on the west and the Himalayan Mountains on the east, with Persia and Afghanistan on the south, and to the north the vast dominions of Russia, he remarked that the area was inhabited by wild nomadic tribes of Turkish origin, intermixed with Tartar blood. Under the second head Col. Browne pointed out the influence which Peter the Great had on the Russian people, and narrated the continual onward movement towards India, noticing more particularly the advance to Geok Tepe in 1877, which, failing in 1877 and 1879 under General Lomakin, was successful in 1880 under General Scobeloff, and the Turcomans driven out. The occupation of Merv in 1884, and the consequent discussion in the House of Commons, was noticed, as also the construction of the railway, which from a strategic point of view was of great importance to Russia. As to what extensions Russia may think fit to make in the future must be matters of speculation. There was, however, no doubt in the minds of those who had looked into this question at all seriously that General Annankoff, who had got this job in hand, had long since matured his schemes for a further advance toward his goal—British India. There was no doubt but that the line would be prolonged to Tashkent very shortly, and that Herat would be approached, if possible, either by force or stealth. Effort would be made to induce the Afghans, for their own benefit, to sanction a line from, say, Samarkand via Bamian to Kabul; and even if these schemes should be thwarted by the British Government—and doubtless they will be—they would hear before long of a line of rail from Askabad to Meshed, with the Shah's consent. All accounts agreed in giving Russia credit for a wonderful gift of managing the natives who had lately become Russian subjects. They appeared to make common cause with the natives, and to identify their interests with them by assuming a sleepy indifference, characteristically Eastern, and even falling into their habits. As far as one could gather, they were popular in their new provinces. The Russian rule in Central Asia was a military rule pure and simple, which was perhaps best suited to such a people as these.

Digitized by Google

"In alluding to the Pamirs, Col. Browne said the word Pamir signified an elevated valley; that the district was thinly populated, and was surrounded on all sides by lofty mountain peaks clothed in perpetual snow. He then referred to Capt. Younghusband's account of his experience in this elevated region, and the action that had been taken by the Russians to claim it as their territory. As to Kashmir, he gave it as his opinion that we should set aside all foolish squeamishness and take over the entire management of this mismanaged and important country. The military forces at the disposal of those countries most deeply concerned in the Central Asian question were: Russia—peace footing, 800,000 men and 3,400 guns, and war footing, 2,151,100 men. In the Caucasus and in Asia, from which garrison troops would be drawn for any war in Central Asia, the Russians were said to have now about 380,000 men and 500 guns; but, of course, these could be rapidly reinforced from European Russia—or at any rate, more quickly than India could be reinforced from England. Great Britain in India—British troops, 69,750; native army, 150,500; total, 220,250. Afghanistan was, for the most part, a mountainous country, and unsuitable for the movements of large bodies of men in fighting formation. The standing army of the Amir was said to be 60,000, and this number could be trebled under British support. The Afghans were a wily and treacherous race of men, and in case of war with Russia could only be depended upon to array themselves on the side which they believed to be the stronger. Of late years many Afghans had enlisted in our native army in the Punjab, which was an indication of a growing spirit of goodwill towards Great Britain. Herat, on the Persian frontier, was the strongest place in the country. It was also an important strategic point, being, in fact, the key to Kandahar and Southern Afghanistan. Persia is bound to play an important part in the coming struggle between England and Russia in the East. As a military power she was dead, but from her position strategically she would not unlikely be torn to pieces in the fight. In case of war it would be impossible to state which side the Shah would take, but most probably fear of the consequences of refusal would drive him into the arms of Russia.

"Dealing with the fifth section, showing the lines of Russia's advance and the proposed plans for the defence of the Indian Empire, Col. Browne said the troops in Central Asia were divided into two districts, Transcaspia and Turkestan. In 1890 there were in the former 15,000 men with 30 guns, thus distributed—Askabad (headquarters), 2 brigades and 24 guns; Merv, 1 brigade and 1 regiment of Cossacks; outposts at Saraks and Penjdeh. Turkestan command: 39,000 men and 68 guns, thus distributed—Tashkent (headquarters), 2 brigades, 24 guns; Samarkand, 1 brigade, 32 guns, 1 regiment of Cossacks; Khokand, 2 brigades, 8 guns, 1 regiment of Cossacks; Kerki, 1 brigade, 8 guns, 1 regiment of Cossacks. At other places there were several regiments of infantry and Cossacks detached. It was only natural to suppose that the forces have been materially increased since 1890, and the latest information confirmed that. That they were pushing down from the north towards Kashmir was known. The British forces in India were stationed along the line of the Indus from the neighbourhood of Peshawur, our extreme north-western frontier, to Lukhar, the left of this defensive line being pushed forward to Quetta and Peshin, at a distance of about 100 miles from Kandahar. A division of British troops was stationed there. To the north our troops were stationed along the foot of the Himalayas from Peshawur to Umballa and Meerut. There was railway communication between all the portions of this army, except to the frontier posts.

"In proceeding to discuss the question of the probable lines of a Russian advance on India and the means proposed to meet such a contingency, Col. Browne said it was clear as light that in any attempt to solve the problem of the defence of India from a Russian invasion Afghanistan must be an important factor. Unless Russia proposed to violate Chinese territory, she was bound to confine her lines of advance on India to Afghanistan and Beluchistan, which latter province was intercepted between its southern boundary and the Arabian Sea. But it appeared to him more than probable that she would advance simultaneously in three columns—the right viâ Herat on Kandadar, the centre viâ Bamian on Kabul, while the left would endeavour to obtain possession of Kashmir by moving on Gilgit and Chitial. The natural obstacles to the advance of any considerable force from this latter direction were still by many thought to be insuperable, but recent investigations tended to show that this portion of the Hindu Koosh did not present an impassable barrier to the passage of a strong force from the north. Col. Bell, who was up to two years ago Director of Intelligence in India, was not satisfied with the line of the Indus, even although we had ensconced ourselves at Quetta,

Digitized by Google

as a bastion pushed forward from this general defensive line. He contended that at the first trump of war we must push forward through the passes and occupy their mouths, with or without the Amir's consent. We must occupy Kabul and Kandahar in strength, and even push forward our outposts to Herat. In fact, the Hindu Koosh (these words, strangely enough, signify 'the defence of India') must be our line of defence instead of the line of the Indus, or the hills which dominate the great river from north to south. With a strong British force cantoned in the grassy valleys of Kashmir and in the Hindu Koosh, we could sleep with peace in the confidence which security begets. In this position, instead of the Russians commanding us, as they would do at present, if those measures were adopted we should command them, and be in a position to checkmate them at every turn. By thus being in a position to hold them fast in the north and north-west, we should be free for an offensive movement on a large scale against an enemy advancing from Persia. They would be inclined to enquire why arrangements could not be made now, in time of peace, to thus improve our position strategically, so as to be ready and prepared for any crisis. It was here the shoe pinched. The Amir was blind to his best interests, and would not have us in his country. Time was not long ago when we had Kabul and Kandahar in our grasp. We should have held on then and faced our responsibilities. We should have had difficulties to fight against, but by this time the Afghans would be reaping the benefit of our rule. The present Amir, although friendly to Britain, was said to be against any attempt being made to enter his territory, and yet he was in dread of Russian encroachments. It was possible, however, that the coming conference which he had consented to have with the Commander-in-Chief in India, before Lord Robert's departure, might be productive of much good. Like most soldiers who have taken the trouble to go into the history of the question, without any pretence of claiming to speak with authority thereon, Col. Browne said he supposed he must submit to be called a Russophobist by those who disagreed with his views. He felt that the term did not apply, for he did not fear the result if we tried conclusions with the Russians on anything like equal terms, though he at the same time rather admired their pluck and enterprise. Col. Browne thus concluded:—Russia owes us a grudge which she intends to pay some day if she can, and for this day she can afford to wait. So we must be on our guard and not deceive ourselves. We must be strong men armed. We must lend a deaf ear to faddists and dreamers who would preach to us of Russia's goodwill. Whilst we are strong and watchful we shall have the Eastern peoples on our side. But we cannot afford to lose a battle—not even an outpost skirmish at the outset, and for this reason we must strengthen our frontier—seize on the best positions for defence and offence which command the approaches to India, and so dispose of our reserves as to be able to strengthen these outposts to meet a sudden blow. Much has been done to this end to the west, but to the north-west and north much remains undone. In my judgment the next move made by the Russians southward from their frontier north of the Pamirs should be followed by an occupation of Kashmir by British troops and the substitution of the Government of that country by a complete British administration. It must come to this, and the sooner the better. It is calculated that within two months from the outbreak of a war with Russia in Central Asia, the latter power could place 270,000 men on the Afghan frontier—all Europeans. In the whole of India we have only 70,000 Europeans, and within a month we could reinforce these with 50,000 from England. Even if we could place another 50,000 native troops of good quality on our frontier, we should still be inferior in numbers. For these reasons a scientific frontier is an indispensable necessity, and should be acquired at whatever cost while there is yet time. Here at home we hear a great deal about the ascendency of our navy, about its being our 'first line of defence' and so forth. People make this an excuse for advocating reductions, or opposing wise additions to our trained land forces. But how do these deluded people propose to defend India against Russia by means of this so-called 'first line of defence?' and the loss of India will most assuredly be followed by the downfall of the British Empire. The navy, with all its glorious traditions, has only assisted by transporting by sea, and co-operating with our land forces inland in a very small degree to build up our Eastern Empire. Now these dominions have been conquered for the most part by men fighting on foot with musket and bayonet, and they will have to be defended by no other method. It always comes to this in the end. It behoves you all—it behoves all lovers of our country whose boast is our power and influence in the world, to encourage rather than discourage young men of good physique and high courage to enter our army, while still in the flower of their youth, for we shall want all the bone and muscle and pluck which in past times has been so fortuitously manifested in the conquest and re-conquest of India, when the time shall arrive for our struggle with Russia for the Empire of the East. How far distant that time is no prophet can foretell. It may be before another year passes over our heads, or it may not be until the next century has well-nigh grown into manhood; but it will come at no very distant period most assuredly. As surely as to-morrow's sun, although perchance obscured by cloud or mist, shall pursue inexorably its appointed course across the southern sky, so surely will that day come.

"A hearty vote of thanks was awarded to Col. Browne for his lecture."

A NOVA SCOTIAN OBJECTOR.

THE following letter appeared in Yarmouth Light under date December 1st last, signed "Barrington." The objections taken therein to the subject of the Rev. C. F. Cooper's sermons are not very new, and have been met here over and over again. It is well for us to see, however, the character of the opposition to which our subject is of necessity liable, and to be reminded from time to time how best to meet such. The following was "Barrington's" argument, contra Identity:—

ANGLO-ISRAELISM.

The above subject seems to have rooted itself in the minds of many of your readers. It can scarce be called "a new thing," for in the works of the late Mr. Hine it has for many years been before the world. Apart from the somewhat remarkable Biblical interpretation of this "new school of the prophets," the question can be considered upon ethnological grounds. The facts of ethnology, race history, and race distinctions are essential factors in a just consideration of the subject.

Recently I met with the following statement in your columns:—"Israel was to become the greatest nation in the world. But the British Empire is the greatest nation, therefore the British Empire is Israel." Passing over "nation" as being used synonymously with "empire," let us look at the statement and conclusion. The statement is based on certain passages of Scripture that are supposed to predict the fact as to the "greatest nation." By Israel clearly the speaker referred to a race, a distinct people, for the language would be worse than meaningless if the spiritual Israel were meant. That such is the evident thought is confirmed by a long quotation from the the Chicago Herald as to the general greatness of "Greater Britain." That being so on ethnological grounds, it becomes a question of race. Taking the word Israel to apply to all the sons of Jacob, or distinctly to the Ten Tribes that were known as the "Kingdom of Israel," so far as ethnology is concerned it comes to the same thing, for branches of a tree are part of a tree. It is the tree that we have to do with.

Digitized by Google

It will not be questioned that the Semitic race and the Japhetic or Aryan race are distinct. The line of Shem and the line of Japheth are two separate lines, each having distinct marks and being historically separate. That the Anglo-Saxons belong to the Japhetic race, can scarce be doubted. To cite authorities would only consume space. Perhaps it would be well to give the conclusion of Rankinson in his "Origin of Nations": "Modern ethnological science, basing itself on the facts of language, lays it down as a grand discovery that one of the great families into which the human race is divided comprises the five divisions of—1. Indo-Persians or Aryans; 2. Celts; 3. Teutons; 4. Græco-Italians; 5. Slaves." "Green's English History" tells us that "Engle, Saxons and Jute all belonged to the same low German branch of the Teutonic family." Professor Max Muller confirms both Green and Rankinson. So if we belong to the Japhetic race, how we can be Israel is past finding out. On ethnological grounds the premises being wrong the conclusion is also wrong.

What became of the Ten Tribes after the captivity is another question. Whatever became of them they were of the Semitic race and we are not. The race question stands at the front. To speak of us as Israel after the flesh is to go in the face of stubborn facts.

Perhaps on other grounds space may be given to consider the claims of Anglo-Israelism.

BARRINGTON.

The argument in "Barrington's" view is narrowed to this. The Israelites are Semitic in origin, the Anglo-Saxons are Japhetic, Teutonic (i.e., Aryan). The Semitic and Japhetic (or Aryan) races, being totally distinct, the Japhetic Anglo-Saxons cannot possibly have anything to do with the Semitic Israelites. The whole distinction is based as above admitted on variations of language, and if these be explained the objections must vanish.

It is admitted that the Anglo-Saxons spoke a language in affinity with that of the Aryan-Teutonic-Japhetic races. Does that fact prove their racial origin to be one and the same? Surely not. "Affinity of language is no proof of affinity of race,' speaking generally. It is proof only of "social contact." For instance, let us suppose that at a certain period of their history large masses of the Semitic Israelites were deported to the country of the Aryan-speaking races, and compelled to live among them, largely mingled and mixed up with them for centuries.

In time the Semitic Israelites would totally forget their own language, and adopt that of their foreign alien neighbours, with their manners, customs, and possibly also their religions. Would such changes as these transform the blood of the Semitic outcasts and turn them into an Aryan, Japhetic, Indo-European race because of their change of tongue and domicile? Certainly not. But scriptural history tells us the very thing supposed took place. The Ten Tribes (being Semites) were deported into Indo-Persia and Media, were expatriated for centuries, never returned to their Semitic homes, but came away westward into Europe and at last into the British Islands speaking the Indo-European language of their fellow-travellers from Central Asia. It becomes then an open question, demanding inquiry whether the Anglo-Saxons who once were residents in Indo-Persia, Media, and Assyria were Semitic Israelites or the Aryan-Japhetic race our opponent concludes them, without inquiry, to be?

We come to the conclusion that the Anglo-Saxons, in spite of the accident of their language, were and are the Lost Tribes, because they possess and enjoy all the blessings God promised to bestow on Abraham and "his (Semitic) seed for ever," and these they would not, could not, have in enjoyment, God being true, unless they were the Israel of God. Our opponents forget that God declared in Ezek. xi. 15, 16, and Amos ix. 9, that He would mingle and scatter Israel among all nations, and that from such mingling and scattering He would Himself regather and collect them. When we search for the Lost Tribes then, as we are bound to do, we must disregard the unreliable rules of philological science and discover for ourselves the race which in these modern times exhibits all the scriptural signs of Israel, for that nation is Israel, as God is true.

Such men as "Barrington" mean well, no doubt; but they refuse to allow God's will and purposes any play in reference to the disposal of His people They are not fully informed themselves as to the statements of the Scriptures in respect to God's declarations in the matter of Israel "lost in Assyria" (Isa. xxvii. 13, R.V., marg.), but restored and recovenanted in "the isles of the West" (Isa. xxiv. 15). To allow that restoration to be possible, the facts they aver must square with the dicta of Max Muller, Green, and Rankinson; but if they do not, they are ready to add, "So much the worse for the prophecies."

MULTIPLICATION.

BY W. L. BLORE.

IN my last communication I abstained from giving the details of computation and comparison, and merely gave the results in both directions, upon the basis of what may be termed "equity," as well as upon absolute value.

I now submit some of these details illustrative of our position in this matter of multiplication, and firstly, for this purpose, I shall classify "Whitaker's" last return of English-speaking communities throughout the world as follows:—

a. European.....	107,000,000
b. Negro and Coloured.....	10,000,000
c. Asiatic.	18,000,000
Total	135,000,000

On the "equity" basis, in comparing this return with Russia in Europe, I have taken the first, or European quantity, giving us an excess of fifteen millions on this basis. The gross, or total amount has been compared with the total population of Russia in Europe and in Asia, Russian and non-Russian in speech, thus giving us an excess of twenty-six millions there, in this direction. But further on I have shown the excess of the advance of the House of Israel during the last eighteen years beyond the Russian-speaking communities to be forty-two millions; that is as to gross advance.

Our absolute increase between 1874 and 1892 is sixty millions. The absolute advance of the Russian language is represented by eighteen millions. The difference gives our excess in advance, as above stated, at forty-two millions.

Digitized by Google

It is interesting here to compare our advance with the advance of all the Continental European nations combined in this matter. That advance ranges from eighteen millions, as above stated, in Russia, to two hundred thousand in Norway during eighteen years, and the gross advance of the Continental combined languages, during that period, is fifteen millions less than the advance of the House of Israel.

For convenience sake, and future reference, I have tabulated our excess of advance, 1874—92, as follows:—

Eighteen years of advance of English in excess beyond	Russian	42,000,000
	German	50,000,000
	Austrian	54,000,000
	Italian	57,000,000
	French	58,000,000

The other states are scarcely worth mentioning; but, en passant, it may be interesting to note that neither Turkey, nor Portugal has made any advance in the matter. In fact, both show retrogression. There is one peculiarity in our progress, which is not characteristic of the advance elsewhere, and that is the voluntary adoption of our language by both Europeans and Asiatics outside of our Empire. In Russia millions are compelled, by military force, to use the Russian language. Another peculiarity is that in our return both Shem, Ham, and Japheth are fairly represented, and, judging from the present tendency in Asia, and in Africa, we may look forward to a rapid increase in the English-speaking communities throughout the world. Much speculation has been excited by our advance, and, certainly, if we apply the ratio of increase during the last eighteen years to the next hundred years, English will be the universal language; but, whatever may be the results as to this ratio in the future, the record of the past century is truly marvellous; for that record is a seven-fold advance.

In 1792 our facilities for advance as compared with those of 1892, were indeed limited. We then had but three great centres of influence for extension, India, the United Kingdom, and North America. Now, we have in addition, South Africa, Australia, New Zealand, and Egypt with extended commerce, and with wonderful facilities for communication by letter, by telegraph, by the printing press, and by railway, and steam packets, to every corner of the globe, with reduced charges as to freight, and cost of travel.

Our missionary influence is also a new feature in our progress, and, at the present time the House of Israel has, altogether, seven thousand missionaries, and thirty thousand evangelists engaged in this extension of the kingdom of God. This missionary influence, and our new colonial centres had no existence in 1792. If we then measure our increase for the next century by the last, when our facilities were fewer, we shall arrive at one thousand million as the result in 1992. And all this has been secured by a certain force of attraction that the God of Israel has given to His people; so that politically, commercially, and linguistically, the whole world seems to be drawn towards us nolentes volentes.

Here we have a fulfilment of the latter part of that remarkable prophecy to which our Saviour set His Divine seal at Nazareth (Isa. lxi. 9). "Their seed shall be known among the nations, and their offspring among the peoples; all that see them shall acknowledge them, that they are the seed which the Lord hath blessed." Known; acknowledged; blessed.

Hill House, Sandown, I. W., March 20, 1893.

THE HOUSE OF JUDAH WALKING TO THE HOUSE OF ISRAEL.

(Jer. iii. 18.)

A Paper read at a Drawing-room Meeting of the North London British-Israel Association, on February 16, 1893.

By J. S. Barton.

In endeavouring to expound prophecy it is important to bear in mind that in most cases the utterances of the prophets had two or more aspects; the one having to do with the then present circumstances of the case, and the other relating to a far distant time, and to, perhaps, different circumstances; notwithstanding which the Holy Spirit, by whom the prophets wrote and spake, so guided and watched over their words that, though a human element was necessary to deliver and record their messages, yet the truth should not suffer, but remain with its "Thus saith the Lord" as long as needed for man's salvation and instruction in righteousness. In proof of this I need only to call to your remembrance what St. Peter says in 1 Peter i. 11, 12: "Unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themselves, but unto us they did minister," &c.; and upon this point the "Speaker's Commentary" very wisely, I think, remarks:—"It was necessary that the Bible should be intelligible to the people at the time it was written, and in some sense to the writer; neither writer nor reader need know the whole meaning, but it must have had some meaning to them, though language can never rise above the ideas of the time."

These premises will, I think, account in a great measure for the very divergent views entertained and written by various good men, equally learned, pious and sincere in the search after and the elucidation of truth; and so, in the passage under consideration, many suppose it to be fulfilled in the return of the Babylonian captives, and some of the Ten Tribes with them, these commentators overlooking the fact that such a return was not Judah walking to Israel, but Israel walking to Judah; getting over this difficulty by substituting with for to, and respecting which we shall have something to say further on. "Lange's Commentary" says:—"The words treat of the participation of Judah in the prosperity promised to Israel;" and the "Speaker's Commentary" says, "that in the case of Israel's repentance, Judah must humbly seek her out, and be content henceforward to take the inferior place, as being the most guilty."

In reading the context it is evident that two distinct peoples, or Houses, are involved—"backsliding," or as Dr. Blayney gives it, "revolting Israel," and "treacherous Judah." Of course, if this prophecy has any relation to the present dispensation—and few will doubt that it has—it is necessary to identify these two peoples, to ascertain who and where they now are, before we can determine the course to be taken by them in the near future, under the providence and guiding hand of God. Judah we have no difficulty with; like the poor, the Jews are ever with us, and may therefore be at once dispensed with. But where is Israel? To elucidate this is the great object of these meetings, but to which it will be quite impossible, in the time at my disposal, to go fully into. Moreover, as most of us here are satisfied upon this point, and recognise that the British peoples of to-day are the lineal descendants and heirs of Israel of the Ten Tribes, it will not be necessary to do so; yet, for the benefit of those who are not thus satisfied, and perhaps may doubt it and call it in question, I will just point out one or two salient facts.

Previous to the Assyrian captivity, when the kingdom of

Digitized by Google

Israel was in the plenitude of its prosperity, Hosea declared that Israel should become "wanderers amongst the nations" (ix. 17), that he should be "a merchant" (xii. 7), "loving to oppress"—i.e., rule with vigour. Nevertheless, that in the third millennium after his captivity—"the children of Israel should return (xiii. 5) from idolatry and seek Jehovah their God, and fear Jehovah and His goodness in the latter days." Then it is said that when they do this, Jehovah will "be as the dew unto Israel, and he (Israel) shall grow (xiv. 5) as the lily, and cast forth his roots as Lebanon," &c. Also the prophet Micah, when foretelling what should happen in the last days (iv. 6, 7), and speaking of the two peoples, says:—"In that day, saith Jehovah, I will assemble her that halteth*—Judah—and I will gather her that is—i.e., at the time the prophet wrote, cir. 700 B.C.—her that is driven away, and her that I have afflicted, and I will make her that halted—Judah—a remnant, and her that was cast off—Israel—a strong nation, and Jehovah shall reign over them in Mount Zion from henceforth even for ever."

Again, "in the latter days," Joseph is to be a fruitful bough, a fruitful bough by a fountain, whose branches run over the wall, and thus become "a company of nations" (Gen. xlix. 22; xlviii. 19). Moreover, by Isaiah (lxii. 2; lxv. 15) Jehovah declares He will call His servants (a term pre-eminently used of Israel, as see 1 Chron. xvi. 13; Psa. cv. 6; Isa. xliv. 1, 2; xlviii. 20; xlix. 5) by another name. What shall we say this other name is to be? I think it may be one or all of these—viz., Saxon, British, or Christian. It was told Abraham that not in Ishmael, but "in Isaac (that is, I take it, by the name of Isaac) should his seed be called." Now, Dr. George Moore, who was by no means committed to British-Israelism, in his search after the "Saxons of the East and of the West," pointed out, as others have done, that the name Saxon is derived from Isaac, the initial letter of which is simply the formative of the verb in its future tense, and is no part of the root, and which, being dropped, leaves the name Saac, which, being pluralized, forms Saakai, or Saaccæ; and in the Greek histories of Herodotus, Strabo, and Diodorus Siculus, and others we meet with a people of this name, who formed the flower of Darius's army, and whom, when in contact with the Romans, were called by them Saxons, and from whom I suppose no one will dispute that Englishmen (or the bulk of them) are descended. Again, Israel is, on all hands, allowed to be "the covenant people," though that designation is generally restricted to the Jews in the present day. Well, the name of Britons is nothing else than Brit—a covenant, and Om—a people, or Anglicised, ons, or ones.† Then, as to the name Christians, I think it will not be necessary to dwell upon that. Thus, I presume, our name stamps us as being Israel called by another name, as declared by Isaiah.

Thus have I, in as small a space of time as I could command, endeavoured to prove to you that we have in the passage before us to deal with the Jews and the British, and may read the passage thus: "In the near future the Jews shall walk to the British, and they shall together return to Palestine." Hence, in accordance with the views frequently expressed in British-Israel literature, the constant influx of German, Polish, and Russian Jews into Britain is considered to be a present-day fulfilment of the prophecy under consideration. It may be so to a certain extent, but not, I contend, in the meaning of my text, and for this consideration. Notice the outcry raised against this immigration, being, as it is, about 200 on an average landing in London alone weekly. How would this outcry be increased by calling for a measure to stop the inflow, or to rise into a forcible intervention if persisted in to anything like an increase required to meet this view! It is calculated that the number of Jews in South-Eastern Europe amount to about six or seven millions of people. Suppose then that 500 per week were to emigrate from there to Britain, or Australia, or America, en route for Palestine, it would occupy about 250 years to accomplish this exodus; and are we prepared to admit this? I trow not. The Jewish emigration to America in 1891 is officially stated to be 109,515, which equals 2,106 per week, at which rate it would take about 55 years to deport them; but will either America or England allow of this influx? I doubt it.*

But I much prefer the rendering given by Rev. H. Marriott of this passage, in his "Horæ Propheticæ," Vol. II., pp. 110 and 166:—"In those days the House of Judah shall proceed or advance upon the power and prestige of," &c. (i.e, shall go under the ægis of Britain)—the House of Israel. The word "yah-lach," rendered walk, occurs nearly 1,000 times in the Old Testament, and in connection with the preposition al is rendered in Gen. vii. 8, "And the ark went upon the face of the waters"; Josh. iv. 8, "And went over all his banks"; Ezek. xxxvi. 12, "I will cause men to walk upon you (the mountains of Israel);" but I cannot find a single instance, except Jer. iii. 18, in which it is rendered with both in the A.V. and R.V. The idea is always UP (see 2 Sam. xx. 23, 24, "was over"), and we have it vividly expressed in Isa. xi. 14, "They shall fly upon the shoulders of the Philistines on the West," &c., in which it is implied that the physical power of the people should be utilised for the protection and replanting of both Israel and Judah in Palestine.

This passage Dr. Henderson, an excellent scholar and critic, but as far removed as possible from being a British-Israelite, renders, "They shall pounce upon the shoulders of the Philistines on the West;" and, commenting on it, says:—"Shoulder is here used geographically to denote the gradually rising or upper part of the country, or the heights and elevations along the coast. Compare Num. xxxiv. 11; Josh. xv. 8, 10, 11, where one of the heights is called "the shoulder of Ekron." "These regions of Philistia," proceeds Dr. Henderson, "the recovered Hebrews would attack with the velocity with which a ravenous bird darts on its prey."

"Surely the isles"—ayim, the British isles; ain, of Brit-ain (as in Ezek. xxvi. 18), I take it—"surely the isles shall wait for me, and the ships of Tarshish chiefly," especially, or, as it is rendered, foremost in Gen. xxxii. 18; xxxiii. 2; 2 Sam. xviii. 27, &c.; and again, Isa. lii. 12, "Ye (Judah) shall not go out in haste, neither shall ye go by flight, for Jehovah will go before you"—as He did in the exode from Egypt—"and the God of Israel shall be your

* From tzala, to slip aside, to slink, to lean to one side (see Gen. xxxii. 22). "He halteth upon his side" (Psa. xxxv. 15), "my slipping aside, or halting" (Psa. xxxviii. 18); "I am ready to halt," or slip aside; also Jer. xx. 10.

† We have the phrase "Brit Om—a covenant of the people," in Isa. xlii. 6; xlix. 8; and although according to Hebrew syntax, the expression, "a covenant people," would be "Om Ha Brit," yet the word "Brit," being the same in its absolute as in the construct state, and not occurring in S. S. in connection with Om in the absolute state (at I can find), I consider that "Brit Om" being already in use, th form of expression would become perpetuated.

* The destitute emigrant question is troubling our Colonies. The Premier of South Australia has invited the co-operation of the Ministries of the other Colonies in measures to resist a threatened invasion of Jewish paupers from Europe. Last month, January, 1893, 3,431 aliens arrived, from the Continent at ports in the United Kingdom. In 1892 the number for the month of January was 4,795.

Digitized by Google

rearward." All this by no means involves the emigration of Judah to Britain or any other English-speaking countries, but rather an assembling of Judah together, similar to that in the land of Egypt, and a return and "coming with singing unto Zion, and everlasting joy upon their heads."

The course of events, then, in the near future, as indicated in these and other parts of Scripture, seems to be—war in Europe imminent (Zeph. iii. 8), two against three, and three (Germany, Austria, and Italy) against two (Russia and France). This will be the signal, spoken of in Isa. xviii. 3, to Judah—My people of Rev. xviii. 4, to "come out of her"—the Babylon of Europe, and escape that they be not partakers of its plagues. And where should they flee? Should not the cry be, "Jerusalem and Palestine for the Jews"? I venture to think that this is set forth in Zech. ix. 12, where it is written (mar. R.V.), "Return you to the stronghold (Zion), ye prisoners of hope; even to-day do I declare that I will render double (of grace and goodness) to you. For I have bent Judah for Me"—note, Isaiah had said in chap. xlviii. 4 that Judah's neck was as an iron sinew, and her brow brass—"I have filled the bow with Ephraim"—i.e., thoroughly roused up Britain, dwelling carelessly in the isles, and fully equipped her for war—"and I will stir up thy sons, O Zion, against thy sons, O Ivan" (Russia, the representative of the Greek Church), "and will make thee as the sword of a mighty man. And Jehovah shall be seen over them, and His arrows shall go forth as lightning; and Adonai Jehovah shall blow the trumpet, and shall go with whirlwinds of the south," et seq. to ver. 17, "For how great is their prosperity, and how great is their beauty; corn shall make the young men flourish, and new wine the maids."

We now enter upon the time of Jacob's trouble, but he shall be (Jer. xxx. 4) saved out of it; and the day of Jehovah's controversy with the nations for the recompenses of Zion (Isa. xxxiv. 8), and I find that in dealing with prophecy it is so easy to turn prophet one's self that I feel somewhat reluctant to go further, lest I should fall into this error. I will, therefore, instead of giving my own words, piece together several portions of Scripture, giving to my own mind, the sequence of events and leave them for your earnest and careful consideration.

It will be the policy of Britain, I take it, to improve the opportunity of war in Europe, to promote the return and establishment of Judah under British protection in Palestine, seize on Constantinople and Asia Minor and Armenia (see Isa. xi. 14, R.V.; Jer. xlix. 17—22; Ezek. xxv. 14), thoroughly establishing herself there to protect her Eastern and Australian possessions, whilst Russia and the other powers of Europe are exhausting themselves with war. Then will the Ten Tribes be returned, 'taken one of a city, and two of a family, and brought again to Zion' (Jer. iii. 14), under the one appointed head (Hos. i. 11). Then during the breathing time following these struggles, the anti-Christ—"that wicked one will be manifested whom the Lord Jesus will eventually consume with the breath of His mouth, and bring to nought by the epiphany of His presence or coming." And "in that day when My people Israel dwelleth safely, shalt thou, O Gog, not know it?" Here commences the war of Armageddon, upon the mountains of Israel, as detailed in Ezek. xxxviii. and xxxix., issuing in the deliverance of Israel when upon the point of defeat, and the utter destruction of Gog and his hosts. "For behold, I will make, saith Jehovah, I will make Jerusalem"—the Eastern question—"a cup of reeling unto all the peoples round about, and against Judah shall it fall to be in the siege against Jerusalem" (Zech. xii. 2). Ver. 6:—"In that day will I make the chieftains of Judah like a pan of fire among wood, and like a torch of fire among sheaves: and they shall devour all the peoples round about, on the right hand and on the left (ch. x. 3—7). "For Jehovah of hosts hath visited His flock, the House of Judah, and shall make him as His goodly horse in the battle. From him shall come forth the corner stone, from him the nail, from him the battle bow, from him every ruler together. And they shall be as mighty men, treading down their enemies as the mire in the streets in the battle. And they shall fight because Jehovah is with them; and the riders upon horses shall be confounded. And I will strengthen the House of Judah, and I will save the House of Joseph, and I will cause them to dwell again, for I have mercy upon them, and they shall be as though I had not cast them off, for I am Jehovah their God and will hear (or regard) them. And they of Ephraim shall be as heroes." Read on to ver. 10:—"And I will bring them into the land of Gilead and Lebanon, and place shall not be found for them. And He shall pass through the sea of affliction, and shall smite the waves thereof in the sea, and all the depths of the Nile shall dry up; and the pride of Assyria shall be brought down, and the sceptre of Egypt shall pass away. And I will strengthen them in Jehovah, and they shall walk up and down in His name, saith Jehovah." Chap. xii. 7:—"Jehovah also shall save the tents of Judah beforehand (Rev. H. M., p. 169; see 2 Sam. vii. 10; 1 Chron. xv. 13), that the glory of the House of David (Is this our Royal Family?) and the glory of the inhabitants of Jerusalem be not magnified against Judah." Ver. 10:—"And I will pour upon the House of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and of supplication, and they shall look upon Him whom they pierced, and they shall mourn for Him," &c. Therefore, it is vain to suppose that Judah will return to his own land converted. "Then (xiv. 3) shall Jehovah go forth, and fight against those nations as when He fought in the day of battle. And His feet shall stand upon the Mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the East, and the Mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof. . . . And (ver. 5) Jehovah my God shall come, and all the holy ones with Him." This will usher in the last judgment, followed by the millennium. Ver. 9:—"And Jehovah shall be King over all the earth, and in that day shall Jehovah be one, and His name One"—ĕkhōd=God, in Chaldee, khod (see 1 Cor. xv. 28).

Thus shall the mystery of God be finished, and from heaven and from earth shall go up the glad shout:—"Hallelujah! for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ, and He shall reign for ever and for ever, King of kings and Lord of lords; and again they shout, Hallelujah!" Amen!

"I WILL BRING AGAIN THE CAPTIVITY OF ELAM."

A CORRESPONDENT who is well acquainted with the Scriptures is puzzled at what appears at the close of our leading article on "Russia and Persia," in BANNER No. 816, page 398. He quotes us thus: "But she (Elam) will come, we believe, safe out of the approaching troubles as a nation, since Jer. xlix. 39, tells us that for Elam there is pardon and peace." The objection is that the passage in question says nothing of the sort, but that it foretells for Elam only "captivity," meaning "bondage, confinement, or imprisonment, that is slavery." It savours, he says, of "twisting words," if we write for "captivity," "pardon, and peace." "Captivity," he says, cannot be translated to mean "pardon and peace." This perversion, he maintains, induces the opponents to declare that we make the Scriptures say or mean anything.

Digitized by Google

Our correspondent, of course, when he wrote this to us, was labouring under a mistake, and failed to see in the words of Jer. xlix. 39, a blessing, but not a curse to Elam. In the same way a blessing was promised to Moab in Jer. xlviii. 47. "Yet I will bring again the captivity of Moab in the latter days, saith the Lord." Also to Ammon in Jer. xlix. 6. "Afterwards I will bring again the captivity of the children of Ammon, saith the Lord." In Ezek. xxxix. 25, we have a stronger instance of the application of the words to the captivity of Israel, in the words, "I will bring again the captivity of Jacob, and have mercy upon the whole House of Israel, and will be jealous for My holy name." "The bringing again the captivity of Jacob," and the bringing again of the captivities of Elam, Moab and Ammon, all clearly meant blessings for Israel, and for the three last named countries, which had been under punishment, but God meant to pardon and bless.

If, as our correspondent supposes, Elam was to be led back again into captivity, then by the same reasoning God meant to bring Jacob again into captivity, when He declared that "He would bring again the captivity of Jacob, and have mercy upon the whole House of Israel."

This, of course, is absurd, and, therefore, our correspondent must see that he has made a great mistake in remarking on our words on page 398. It is said that others, probably, have fallen into the same error as our correspondent respecting the meaning of Jer. xlix. 39. If so, the above remarks may be useful to them. We have to observe further that the word "captivity" is sometimes applied in the Scriptures to "the people" led into captivity. Thus in Obed. 20 we have "the captivity of this host of the children of Israel which are among the Canaanites, shall possess even unto Zarephath; and the captivity of Jerusalem which is in Sepharad, shall possess the cities of the South." So when the Lord said, in Jer. xlix. 39, that He would, "in the latter days, bring again the captivity of Elam," He evidently meant that in these our own days He would restore Elam from captivity, and give them "pardon and peace."

Our correspondent objects to our use of these last words, because they do not occur in the verse we alluded to. But we deem it quite legitimate in quoting and commenting on a text, to give its meaning. In the case in question, we believe that Elam, Moab, Ammon, and Israel, are to be restored from a condition of captivity, to one of blessing from God. This means "pardon and peace," which is all we meant, or said. The objection is, we are aware, hardly worth answering, but we are anxious to meet all doubts, seriously and bonâ fide entertained. Our correspondent, we know, is zealously working on our side, but is very anxious that we should not be betrayed into error in our exposition of the Scriptures in the BANNER.

"THE A B C CHURCH AND CHAPEL DIRECTORY AND MAY MEETING HAND-BOOK," for 1893, has just been issued. It contains about 70 pages of useful information respecting London and Suburban Churches, clergy, and ministers of various denominations. A copy will be sent, post free, to any address, on sending two penny stamps to the publishers, Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

THE SUDDEN DEATH, AT ATHENS, OF THE REV. S. C. ADAM.

(Vicar of St. Jude's, Wolverhampton.)

OUR readers will peruse the following from The Midland Evening News of Wolverhampton, of April 15th, last, with great regret. The Rev. Mr. Adam was well-known on our platforms as an earnest, powerful speaker, and his zeal in our cause was great. He was one of the writers in "The Handbook of British-Israel Truth," and as a clergyman was well versed in our arguments. His loss will be to us very serious. The notice of this event in the Wolverhampton journal is as follows:—

"The sad news which we publish to-day of the death of the Rev. S. C. Adam, vicar of St. Jude's Church, Wolverhampton, will come as a painful shock to the town. Mr. Adam was an eloquent preacher, and a profound Biblical scholar. It was the desire of his life to visit Palestine, in order to become personally familiar with those places upon which he had so often discoursed from the pulpit. He went away on Shrove Tuesday, and letters which have been received from him from time to time show that the journey afforded him infinite pleasure. He went up to Jerusalem with all the reverent fervour of a pilgrim, and he spoke in terms of the highest rapture of the Holy City. But it is to be feared that the fatigue attending a journey through Palestine proved too much for him. For days the party travelled on horseback, and on one occasion Mr. Adam was in the saddle for eleven hours. On the way from Damascus the weather was very severe, the party being encountered by a blinding snow and a biting wind. Mr. Adam was offered a place in a diligence, which at length he gladly accepted. Yet, he seems to have had fairly good health until he reached the classic city of Athens, where he died suddenly yesterday. Mr. Adam was admired by all sections of churchmen; he was beloved by his own congregation, who knew his high qualities of head and heart. He laboured with much acceptance in St Jude's parish for over twenty years; and the pathetic circumstances under which he has gone to his rest in a strange land, far away from home and friends, intensify the regret occasioned by his death."

THE DEATH OF MRS. H. ALDER-SMITH.

WE deeply regret to record the death of Dr. H. Alder-Smith's wife, on Saturday, April 15th. We feel sure all BANNER readers will unite with us in tendering to our friend their deepest sympathy in this sad bereavement; and in the hope that the hand of the Lord which has sent the sore affliction will also bind up the broken hearts of the sorrowing husband and his motherless children.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—Will you allow me a little space in the BANNER to remind your readers of the claims which the Nestorian Christians have upon their sympathy? These people dwell in the lovely mountainous country south of Mount Ararat, the land which was anciently called Assyria, and which now goes by the name of Khurdistan, and which includes the strip of Persia west of Lake Urumiyah. It is well known among them that their ancestors were the Israelites of the Ten Tribes, carried captive to this very land, and settled by the rivers and in the mountains, whose former inhabitants, the kings of Assyria, had destroyed (Isa. xxxvii. 12; 2 Kings xvii. 6). They received the Gospel in the very earliest times from the teaching of the apostles, and for centuries kept their light bright and sent out missionaries as far as India and China. Nestorius, a leader among them in the fifth century, a fearless and godly man, stoutly resisted the encroachments and doctrines of the Church of Rome, and for many centuries his influence continued. But time wrought a deplorable change, and when American missionaries went among them fifty years ago, little of Christianity, except the name, remained among them. Only one woman, the sister of the patriarch, could read, and very few copies of the Scriptures existed. A great blessing rested on the devoted labours of the missionaries. The Scriptures were printed in their own language, the children were gathered into schools, and a large number became truly converted. The good work continues to this day.

Digitized by Google

The preservation of this interesting people in spite of sanguinary wars and the persecutions of many centuries, is due, under God, to their inaccessible mountain fastnesses in the Assyrian mountains. Their language is Syrian, the same as that spoken by our Lord, and they preserve many of the Hebrew laws and customs. For instance, they offer thanksgiving sacrifices, giving the right shoulder and breast to the officiating priest; they offer the first fruits of their fields, gardens, and vineyards to the Lord. They reverence the Sabbath and observe the preparation for the Sabbath; their churches have a holy place and a holy of holies, into which none but a consecrated priest may enter, and then only after long fasting. They observe the laws about the unclean animals, and observe the fasts and festivals. There is much in their patriarchal government which recalls that of the Hebrews; their churches answer to the cities of refuge, and the avenger of blood slays the murderer.

Many other proofs could be brought forward, but one of most interesting and least known facts is the number of English words that exist in their language. We give the following examples of words which, being in common use among the poor, are the best evidences of a common link:—

Syriac.	English.	Syriac.	English.
man,	man.	musici,	music.
nanna,	nurse.	dancigh,	dancing.
baba,	baby.	ring-a-ring,	sound of bell.
lada,	lad.	shaka,	sugar.
persopa,	person.	cant,	candy.
deva,	devil.	krabusha,	apple (crab).
catoo,	cat.	garusa,	grass.
moush,	mouse.	oaid,	weed.
sipra,	sparrow.	barg,	bark.
gaza,	goose.	aar,	air.
candela,	candle.	cari,	cry.
dush,	dish.	nala,	nail.
jara,	jar.	duzen,	dozen.
vassla,	vessel.	chany,	chin.
drum,	drum.	lapa,	lip.
minine,	money.	stomcah,	stomach.
		corneta,	corner.

So much as examples of nouns; now for verbs:—

attack,	to attack.	gapi,	to gape.
katil,	to kill.	marmur,	to murmur.
pincha,	to pinch.	bide,	to abide.
cala,	to call.	proon,	to prune.
shakish,	to shake.	lakhi,	to lick.
cuttee,	to break or cut.	balka,	black.
knackish,	to knock.	beg,	big.
		bare,	bare.

And so on. Now these, our poorer brethren, have a strong claim upon English sympathy, not only on account of their past glorious work for Christ and many sufferings, but for their present needs, their great poverty, and the unrighteous laws under which their life is passed under Persian and Turkish rule. Shall not we, who have attained the blessings of freedom and material prosperity, feel for our kindred still left to suffer in Assyria a captivity of over twenty-six centuries? An occasion at the present moment offers of helping this interesting people. Esther, the young wife of Deacon Abraham, a man well known to English Christians for his good works, has come over to England in the hope of inducing some lady to return with her as a medical missionary. The poor women of every rank in Urumiyah, where she lives, are left to suffer and die when disease attacks them, and a wonderful field of usefulness lies before any devoted lady, who would gain access thus to the Mahommedan ladies as well as minister to the Nestorian Christians.

A friend has guaranteed £20 a year. Will the readers of the BANNER guarantee another £20, and enable us to send her out with Esther in September? What object could be more worthy of prosperous Joseph than the work of giving the bread of life to his famished brethren? Promises of support will be most gladly received by me.

Faithfully yours, (MISS) L. HOPE.

7, Ovington-gardens, S.W.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—In case you should not have read "Imperial Federation," by Geo. R. Parkin, M.A., I enclose the following extracts, as unless he is a believer in Anglo-Israelism, they are interesting instances of blind evidence worth noticing:—

"Within the last century and mainly within the last half century, the United Kingdom has passed through the most strenuous period of industrial development known in the history of nations."

"The vast extension of industrial and commercial interests among British people is without any parallel in the previous history of the world."

"The amazing spread of the race has become the main fact of modern history, the one which assuredly will have the most decisive influence on the future of mankind."

"In mere mass of numbers English speaking people are destined at no distant date to surpass any other branch of the human stock."

There are other paragraphs, but these seemed some of the most striking, and read in the light of Anglo-Israel belief the book is quite doubly interesting.

I am, dear Sir, faithfully yours,

B. E. FURNIVAL.

Netley House, 28, Henrietta Street, London, W., March 1, 1893.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

SIR,—I had been reading Milner's "England in Egypt." Afterwards, when driving along a street, I read on a placard an announcement in startlingly large letters, "Israel in Egypt," an oratorio to be performed. Ah! I thought that is just it. Israel is in Egypt, but no longer as oppressed slaves, but now, after more than three thousand years, as rulers and benefactors, playing the beneficent part of Joseph of old and rescuing the land from ruin and bankruptcy.

How wonderfully this has been wrought out by Him who rules all things! After our settlement in Palestine, our disappearance from the world's ken, our wanderings, heavy discipline, and sufferings for centuries, the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob leads us back to work His will by patience, justice, and helpfulness, and thus to return good for evil to the land where our forefathers suffered injustice, wrong, and cruel hardships.

Men can think such thoughts as these are calculated to encourage national self-exaltation and pride! Rather, I should say, it increases a sense of God's power and His greatness and our utter incapability of resisting His will which we blindly carry out even when the views of politicians and the inclinations of our nation or the jealousy of other peoples are against the course we are step by step led to follow by an invisible but an invincible power. L. P.

March 8th.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—Will you kindly excuse my troubling you so far as to reply on enclosed postcard if it is anywhere recorded how long after 637 A.D., when the Saracens took Jerusalem, the mosque of Omar was built or begun to be built?

Thanking you in anticipation,

Yours truly,

JAMES WILLOUGHBY.

Erme House, Mutley, Plymouth, March 29, 1893.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed "PHILO-ISRAEL," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION for the BANNER OF ISRAEL, in Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts. To any country included in the Postal Union, including the following:—United Kingdom, Canada, America, Europe, New Zealand, Cape Colony, Victoria, Western Australia, Transvaal, Tasmania, South Australia, Queensland, Natal, New South Wales, India, Ceylon via Brindisi, 7s. per year, including postage.

All Post Office Orders, Cheques, &c., should be crossed "City Bank, Ludgate-hill, to the ac. of ROBERT BANKS AND SON." They will then only be paid to our account.

READING CASES for holding the Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts, may be had, price 2s. Sent post free on receipt of Postal Order.

THE ANNUAL VOLUMES, bound in handsome blue Cloth, price 8s.

THE MONTHLY PARTS, in tinted wrapper, published the last day of each month, 6d.

Englishmen should Circulate, at the Present Crisis,

NO ROME RULE.

AN IDENTITY LEAFLET.

UNION IS STRENGTH.

Price 1s. per 100 nett. 1,000 carriage paid to any address for 10s.

London: Robert Banks & Son Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

Special arrangements have been made for supplying at REDUCED PRICE, carriage paid to any address in the United Kingdom or the Colonies, copies of the Fifth and last Edition, published at 16s.,

FOR 11s. 6d.

PROFESSOR C. PIAZZI SMYTH'S

Well-known work,

OUR INHERITANCE

IN THE

GREAT PYRAMID,

with

TWENTY-FIVE EXPLANATORY PLATES,

showing the more crucial parts of this really Anti-Egyptian and most Primeval Structure, in Plan, Elevation, and Section.

As the number of copies to be offered at this reduced price is limited, early application should be made direct to Messrs. R. Banks and Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London.

Jehovah Triumphant. The New and Complete Theology and Electric Light of the Bible, containing the History of British-Israel, compiled from the Sacred Scriptures. A handsome crown 8vo., cloth bound volume of 550 pages, with Index of Scripture references. Price 5s. (published at 10s.), post free for P.O.

London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C

Price 6d. Monthly. Annual Subscription 7s.

THE MESSENGER.

Edited by "OXONIAN."

Each number contains papers by the EDITOR, and other well-known writers, a SERMON by Dr. WILD, Notes and Queries, &c

---

Now Ready, price 5s., post free, 5s. 4d., Illustrated by MAPS,

RUSSIA JAPHET;

OR, THE MUSCOVITE, THE COSSACK, AND THE MONGOL.

Being a detailed Identification of the principal peoples subject to the Czar. By "OXONIAN."

London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C.

"A WONDERFUL REMEDY."
"I WAS GIVEN UP BY ALL."
"SAVED FROM AN EARLY GRAVE."

Such are the words of grateful Patients relative to their CASES OF

CONSUMPTION

CURED BY THE TREATMENT OF

MR. GEO. T. CONGREVE.

Read his Book, "ON CONSUMPTION, &c." which may be had post free for ONE SHILLING from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.; or may be ordered of any Bookseller.

NOTE.—CONSULTATIONS FREE at Coombe Lodge, Peckham, on TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings only. No Charge except the usual charge for three weeks or six weeks' supply of medicine. All Patients should read the book first.

NEW BADGES.

Gold Brooches, 6/3 and 4/-.
Scarf Pins 4/9 and 3/9.
Pendants, large, 4/6; small, 2/9.
All Badges, Metal Gilt, 9d.

All Post Free. Applications, with Postal Order enclosed, to be sent to MRS. THOMPSON, 13, Pultney-st., Bath, or to MAJOR-GEN. CARLYLE BELL, St. Laurence Villa, Kingston-hill, Surrey.

NEW CATALOGUE of Works on Our Identity post free from R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

FREEMAN'S ORIGINAL CHLORODYNE.

THIS valuable medicine, discovered and invented by Mr. RICHARD FREEMAN in 1844, introduced into India and Egypt in 1850, and subsequently all over the world, maintains its supremacy as a special and specific Remedy for the Treatment and Cure of Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Cancer, Bronchitis, Asthma, Ague, Sore Throat, Influenza, Neuralgia, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Asiatic Cholera, Colic, Gout, and all Fevers.

At 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 20s. per bottle.

Sold by Patent Medicine Dealers in all parts of the world.

N.B.—Lord Chancellor Selborne, Lord Justice James, and Lord Justice Mellish, decided in favour of FREEMAN'S ORIGINAL CHLORODYNE, and against Brown and Davenport, compelling them to pay all costs in the suit.—See Times of July 24, 1873.

DR. ROOKE'S SOLAR ELIXIR AND ORIENTAL PILLS

DR. ROOKE'S SOLAR ELIXIR AND ORIENTAL PILLS effect marvellous cures. 50 years reputation. Sold everywhere. Pills in boxes 1 1½, 2/9, and 4/6. The Elixir in bottles 2/9, 4/6, and 11/-

Dr. ROOKE, SCARBOROUGH, ENGLAND.

TEETH.—£1 A FULL SET

ESKELL'S.—CELEBRATED MAKE, £2 2s. Warranted and fitted in one visit. No extractions needed. HALF A MILLION SETS already supplied. The Nursing Record and Hospital World says:—We recommend all who require Reliable and Good Teeth at a small cost to go to Messrs. ESKELL, 445, Strand (facing Charing Cross Station), and 58, Ludgate Hill, City, London. Also at 27, Western Road, Brighton, and 23, Mount Pleasant, Tunbridge Wells. Hours 9 till 7. Apply for Illustrated Pamphlet free (mention this paper). Established 100 years.

"THE WORLD'S PROVED REMEDY FOR ALL CHEST DISEASES."

COUGH, ASTHMA,

CHRONIC BRONCHITIS,

INFLUENZA,

THERE IS NONE TO EQUAL IT.

Rev. F. E. HEAPE, of DERBY, in a recent letter, says: "Your Medicine always puts my lungs right, and drove out the terrible INFLUENZA last May."

This Medicine has been prepared for 65 years.

CONGREVE'S BALSAMIC ELIXIR.

In Bottles, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 22s., may be had of all Chemists and Medicine Vendors.

TEA! TEA! TEA!

FROM

INDIA, CEYLON, AND CHINA.

Best Quality and Best Value.

From 1/6 to 3/6 per lb. Samples Gratis.

Carriage Paid on Parcels of 6lbs. and upwards.

Robinson & James,

42, TRINITY SQUARE, TOWER HILL LONDON, E.C.

TOOTH-ACHE

CURED INSTANTLY BY

BUNTER'S NERVINE

Prevents Decay, Saves Extraction, Sleepless Nights Prevented.

Neuralgic Headaches and all Nerve Pains removed by HUNTER'S NERVINE. All Chemists, 1s. 1½d.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN'S

IRISH CAMBRIC HANDKERCHIEFS

ALL PURE FLAX. POST FREE.

Ladies' Hemmed—2/6, 3/3, 4/-, 4/11, 6/-, 7/2, 8/-, & 9/- per doz.

Gentlemen's Hemmed—4/-. 4/11, 5/9, 6/6, 7/5, 8/3 9/3. & 10/6 per doz.

Hemstiched Ladies and Gents (excellent value) 6/- & 7/11 per doz., various widths & hems.

A Sample of THREE of either price sent by return of post, on receipt of postal order.

Very pretty Fancy Boxes, suitable for Presents, 4½d. extra.

V. W. THOMSON,

27, Dunluce Street, BELFAST.

Digitized by Google

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The Geography of the Gates. With Map and six full-page, and one double-page, Illustrations, printed on plate paper. 208 pages, in handsome cloth, gilt. Second Edition, Price 2s. 6d.; post free for P.O.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific. 56 pages. Price 4d.; by post 4½d.

Are the English People the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel? An Inquiry Establishing the Identity of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 4d.; by post 4½d.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d.; by post 4½d. Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters."

Historical, Ethnic, and Philological Arguments in Proof of the British Identity with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel, Clearly and Simply Stated. Price 2d.; by post 2½d.

The History of the House of Israel: How They were Lost, and How They were Found. Told for the Children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fifth Edition.

Our Identity: What it is Not; What it is; and Our Obligations To-day in Respect to it. Price 2d.; a reduction for quantities.

Philo-Israel's Leaflets. 4 pages, crown 8vo. Price 1s. 6d. per 100, postage 2d. Assorted packets, 1s. 8d. 19 different subjects.

The British Constitution. Followed by "A NECESSARY CONSEQUENCE," by L. P. Price 3d., post free 3½d.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument, Proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100, postage 6d.

Anglo-Israelism. True, Not False. Being Philo-Israel's Reply to the Rev. Canon Bell's Pamphlet, "Anglo-Israelism: True or False?" Price 1d.; 6s. 6d. per 100. 16 pages, crown 8vo.

Egypt's Place in the Bible. By PHILO-ISRAEL. A Paper read before the Clerical and Lay Association at Bristol and Clifton. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100.

London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C.

Where are the Ten Tribes? By William Greig, of Montreal, Canada. With Introduction by Philo-Israel. Published at 6d.; offered at 3d.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C

PAGE WOODCOCK'S
WIND PILLS

A CLERGYMAN

Writes: "I am so convinced from my own experience and that of others of the real value of your WIND PILLS, in complaints arising from a disordered state of the STOMACH, BOWELS, or LIVER, that I wish much to promote the use of the Medicine in this parish, and I now inclose P.O. for a large box, and should be glad of some papers for circulation among my parishioners. In my own case

Page Woodcock's Wind Pills

have been of the greatest use. I have no objection to your publishing my communication, provided you divulge not my name and address, which you may give, nevertheless, to those who require such a verification."—Vicarage, near Malvern.

All Sufferers from INDIGESTION, LIVER COMPLAINTS, WIND on the STOMACH, COSTIVENESS, SICK HEADACHE, HEARTBURN, PALPITATION of the HEART, BILIOUSNESS, &c., should avail themselves of this most excellent medicine.

☞ The WIND PILLS being PURELY VEGETABLE, TASTELESS, and MILD and TONIC in their action, may be taken with perfect safety by the most delicate of either sex.

Of all Chemists, at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d., or Post Free for P.O. or Stamps, from PAGE WOODCOCK, LINCOLN.

MASON'S EXTRACT OF HERBS FOR MAKING NON-INTOXICATING BEER

WE ALL REQUIRE SOMETHING TO DRINK

The finest, most refreshing and pleasantest beverage obtainable. One table-spoonful of this Extract makes one gallon of splendid Beer. Try it. A sample bottle, enough to make eight gallons, post free for 9 stamps.

NEWBALL & MASON, NOTTINGHAM.

AGENTS WANTED.

MASON'S WINE ESSENCES, non-intoxicating. For children's parties and social gatherings. A 6d. bottle will make one gall. of delicious wine. Post free 9 stamps, or a bottle of both Extract of Herbs and Wine Essence post free 15 stamps.

BE SURE TO CUT

IT MAY

10,000 RUGS GIVEN AWAY

THIS OUT,

THIS PHENOMENAL OFFER is made to the Readers of this Journal only. On receipt of this advertisement, accompanied by Postal Order for 6, or 74 stamps, we will forward DIRECT FROM OUR LOOMS to your address, one of our genuine SEAMLESS WOVEN REVERSIBLE CARPETS, suitable for Drawing-room, Dining-room, Bedroom, &c., handsomely bordered and woven in 30 different patterns and art colourings to suit all requirements, and LARGE ENOUGH TO COVER ANY ORDINARY SIZED ROOM. These carpets are manufactured from a material equal in wear to wool, and are undoubtedly the cheapest in the world.

With every Carpet we shall ABSOLUTELY GIVE AWAY a very handsome RUG to match, or we will send 2 CARPETS and 2 RUGS for 10/6

The Queen says: "Decidedly stouter and handsomer than any of the kind, the price being the astounding part of the matter." Schoolmistress: "For style, durability, and cheapness, they cannot be beaten." Penny Illustrated Paper: "Manufactured in every variety of colour, and is one of the most surprising bargains I have seen." Church Bells: "Truly wonderful value."

Thousands of Testimonials similar to the following, & Repeat Orders, have been received from our Customers:

"70, Upper Sutton Street, Aston, Birmingham.—Dear Sir,—Please to forward me a Brusselette Carpet, &c. The Rugs and Carpets I purchased from you eighteen months ago have worn wonderfully well, and are good value for the money.—Yours truly, THOMAS HICKS."

This offer is made to the Readers of this paper only, and will not be repeated. All Orders despatched same day as received. Cheques and Postal Orders to be crossed "Union Bank." Address—

THE BRITISH CARPET WEAVING COMPANY,
31, OLD STREET, LONDON, E.C.

NOT APPEAR AGAIN.

Price 1s. per 100, Assorted Packets 1s.2d.: 8s.6d. per 1,000
Well printed on toned paper.

Thoughts for the British Folk.

Suggested by Philo-Israel.

No. 1.—Multitudinousness.
No. 2.—The Gates.
No. 3.—The Nation and Company of Nations.
No. 4.—British Wealth.
No. 5.—The Rulers Over Many Nations.
No. 6.—The Universal Creditor.
No. 7.—The Ever-Continuing British Monarchy.
No. 8.—The Scattered People at Home in Every Climate.
No. 9.—The Queen, Lords, and Commons.
No. 10.—The Unconquerable Nation.
No. 11.—The Fatally Destructive Race.
No. 12.—The Isolated Nation.
No. 13.—The Nation Which Belts the Earth.
No. 14.—The Emancipators of the Slave.
No. 15.—The Christian Nation.
No. 16.—The Ten Commandments.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

The True and Divine Appointment for the Cure of Disease.

Send to

B. V. SCOTT, M.B.M.R.S.,

College of Health, 121, Kensington, Liverpool,

for his

VOICE OF NATURE TO THE INVALID,

Post free 5 stamps.

Thousands of incurables (so-called) have proved God's own means could save when others failed.

Rev. F. Harper says of Mr. Scott's book: "It is a library in itself, and free from quackery."

Rev. Lush says: "Mr. Scott's treatment is natural, safe, reasonable, and Scriptural."

Send for the Book at once.

A PRESENT.

SEND us your address, mentioning this paper, and we will make you a present of the best guide to health yet published. It is only a little book, but it is of great value to all who are ill or indisposed.—GORDON, MURRAY, & CO., LIMITED, 10, Adam Street, Strand, W.C.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument Proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100, postage 1d.

R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

FREE Every MAN and WOMAN in search of health

should write at once for the Medical Battery Company's 112 pp. interesting Illustrated Pamphlet, entitled "The Medical Uses of Electricity." It contains valuable advice on the symptoms and rational treatment of nervous, organic and other disorders, and will be sent under cover free by post, on application to the Manager, Medical Battery Company's Institute, 52 Oxford Street, London, W. Remember that Consultations are free, either personally or by letter.

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co. (Ltd.) 23, Paternoster-row. Wednesday APRIL 26, 1893. All Rights Reserved.

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

H.R.H. PRINCESS VICTORIA MARY OF TECK.

H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, K.G.

[From Photographs by RUSSELL AND SONS.]

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India).

"And the Remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS OF THE EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XVII., No. 853. Entered at Stationer's Hall.] WEDNESDAY, MAY 3, 1893 [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
A Motto for 1893, for All Anglo-Israelites	217
"Elect According to the Foreknowledge of God." By H. E. Olive	218
"Go Ye Into All the World and Preach the Gospel to Every Creature"	219
Who Were the Etruscans? By E. Reep	220
A Message from Singapore	221
The Rev. F. Aston's Lectures in Bournemouth	224
For and Against Truth and Error. Conducted by James Marchant	225
Anglo-Israel Free Distribution Fund	225
Israel's Scripture and Prayer Union	226
The British-Israel Association	226
Correspondence	226

A MOTTO FOR 1893, FOR ALL ANGLO-ISRAELITES.

IN the parish church of Clifton, Bristol, the vicar, the Rev. H. Nevile Sherbrooke, has selected for his parishioners a Scriptural motto, taken from Psa. xlviii. 14, which it appears to us is exactly suited to British-Israel for the new year on which we have entered, "For this God" (the God described in the Psalm) "is our God for ever and ever: He will be our Guide even unto death." The vicar thought the verse exactly suited the case of his congregation, and applying it spiritually to the facts of their condition, preached from the text, showing that "this God" was Jehovah the covenant God—the great God, and great King (ver. 1 and 2); the Lord of hosts—the loving God (ver. 8 and 9); who breaks the ships of Tarshish with His east wind, and is highly to be praised (ver. 1 and 7). This God, so great and glorious, is "our God!" Whose God? The vicar of Clifton referred the words to his congregation. They were no doubt a part of the people whose God is the great Jehovah. But the preacher had clearly no idea in his mind that there was any national aspect of the text, or that the primary reference was to the people of Israel. Yet how can there be any doubt in the matter? The Psalm was one of the songs "of the sons of Korah." The praise of Jehovah the covenant God of Israel, as a nation, was its burden (ver. 1). Zion, the city of Israel's God, was chiefly referred to in verses 2, 3, 8, 11, 12. The God of the city of David, He who dwells at Zion, was the God described in ver. 14. And "this God" is our (or Israel's) God for ever and ever. The verse has a national application which takes us back to Exod. vi. 3, where God first revealed His name of Jehovah to Moses, and in ver. 7 added, "I will take you (the children of Israel) to Me for a people, and I will be to you a God: and ye shall know that I am the Lord (Jehovah) your God, which bringeth you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians." "This God," says the song of the sons of Korah in Psa. xlviii. 14, "is our God for ever and ever, and He will be our guide for evermore," or "unto death" (R.V., margin). The verse-motto then having a primary meaning, which is national in its application, refers in the first place to the whole of the British Empire and nation, since the British are Israel. It is a most comforting text to those who realise that the Identity is true, because it gives a perpetuity to our race and nation which nothing else can confer. The Creator of the universe and the Redeemer of the world, is here represented as our own nation's "God for ever and ever"; and with this assurance another blessing is added, which corresponds with Isaiah's prophecy in chap. xlii. 16, "He will be our (nation's) guide for evermore!" In that text this promise is amplified, and the comforting assurance is given to Israel, "I will bring the blind by a way that they know not. I will lead them in paths that they have not known. I will make darkness light before them, and crooked things straight." He guided Israel during the Exodus by a pillar of fire by night to give them light, and by a pillar of cloud to lead them the way. "He took not away the pillar of the cloud by day, nor the pillar of fire by night, from before the people" (Exod. xiii. 21, 22). So He promises to guard and guide His people Israel ever after, to the end of the days; being "their God for ever and ever." Those who ignore the national reference in "the song of the sons of Korah," to the literal children of Israel, and make no mention of the British nation as the modern "remnant of Ten-tribed Israel," should recollect that throughout the Scriptures we never find the Lord calling Himself the God of the nations, or Gentiles; but that the Bible is literally full of His promises to Israel exclusively to become their God, while they should be always "His people." His Ammi, or people, are Israel, and even His Lo-ammi, or outcast ones, He recognises as His own, giving them the birthright of Joseph, as promised in Hosea i. 9, 10, and Gen. xlix. 22—26, never forgetting, in giving them the material earthly gifts, to endow them also with the spiritual blessings—namely, the Word, the Sabbaths, the laws, and the service of God, with the foreign missionary function, and the love of the souls of unsaved sinners. Viewed in this light our motto-text becomes nationally precious indeed! "This God" is the God of Israel, therefore our nation's God, our Father, Redeemer, and Friend. He will be ours now, and throughout eternity, since He will be ours "for ever and ever"; and evermore He will guide us as He has always guided our nation in times past. In periods of declension and faithless transgression, to which Israel seems always liable, the Lord will doubtless chastise and guide His sons back into the right way, but He will forsake them never! Why our divines cast this consolation and comfort from them we cannot imagine. In their heart of hearts they imagine, we believe, that our wayward, faithless people will not after all be destroyed. But for that belief they have surely no solid foundation? It is an imagination which has no Scriptural foundation apart from our nation's Identity with the Lost Tribes. If we be not the House of Israel, but only a non-Israelite Gentile nation like the rest, then there is no promise of national continuity for us, but only a certainty that sooner or later we must give place to the coming Israel, the multitudinous world-wide victors, the rulers of the whole planet, the holders of the Gates of the colonies, and of the heathen Empire of the world, as well as the missionaries for God to all the nations "lying in the wicked one," waiting for the breath of life administered by Israel in the Great Master's service. But, thank God, this cannot be! We British have already all the blessings promised by God, the Faithful One, to Israel His people, and many of these blessings testify that those who now enjoy them must be Israel, but no other nation on the face of the earth. Let Israel therefore praise the Lord.

Digitized by Google

"ELECT ACCORDING TO THE FOREKNOWLEDGE OF GOD."

By H. E. Olive.

These words contain a thought which has not sufficiently been dwelt upon in connection with the doctrine of election —i.e., that the foreknowledge of God is not necessarily the conscious knowledge of man, that a person, people, or nation may be predestined by the foreknowledge of God to carry out His purpose, with no consciousness to themselves of this fact. Election of destiny is a different thing to election of grace. Cyrus, chosen for the destruction of Babylon (Isa. xlv. 14), is an example of the former: "I have surnamed thee, though thou hast not known Me." He was fore-ordained, elected to carry out the judgment of God, as others have been elected to be the instruments of His grace and mercy.

The Jews as a nation were chosen in Abraham to inaugurate and guard the worship of the one God, to preserve the line of the generation of the Messiah, and to be the compilers and custodians of the law and the prophets, and of this they were conscious themselves. They were called in Abraham, led by Moses and by divine manifestations (Deut. iv.), warned and directed by prophets, by miracles signs, and wonders. But after the revolt of the Ten Tribes under Rehoboam their knowledge of their divine mission their comprehension of the right anticipation of the coming of the Messiah, became confused and erroneous. The scattered Ten Tribes, lapsing into the idolatry of the nations among whom they mingled, lost sight of it, and ultimately became ignorant even of their ancestry. The Two Tribes that remained behind misread the prophets and signs of the times, and when the Messiah came, they denied and crucified Him in their blindness, and rested in themselves, satisfied only with Judaism, the creed and worship from which all life had fled. While looking for their false Messiah, they had unconsciously prepared the way of the true one; they were the human agency of His birth, "the generation of Jesus Christ, the Son of David, the Son of Abraham." Their ignorance and infidelity were thus manifested and judged. They denied Jesus, and were unconsciously elected to this by the foreknowledge of God" (Acts ii. 23—36).

But God's purpose for the salvation of the world had still to be carried out. Through the history of the ages we can trace this line of continuity which is never broken. After the ascension of our Lord in the Acts of the Apostles, we first know of the election of the Gentiles. The race for the eternal victory continued; the goal was the same though the runners changed and fell out by the way, as in the Grecian games, the torch of life passed to other hands. The ministry of the apostles was "to the Jew first, and afterward to the Gentile." St. Paul, in Rom. xi. 25, 26, speaks of "the mystery of the Gentiles," the working out of the will of God by the salvation of the Gentiles (chap. v. 11). "The mystery of the Gentiles" could be only the hidden purpose of God in electing a nation, training and directing it, as unconscious as Cyrus of its divine instrumentality and destiny to preserve the faith and evangelize the world.

There is something very beautiful in the idea of the love of God brooding through the ages over the nation predestined for this service. "I have surnamed thee, though thou hast not known Me." Surely this is the fulness of the Gentiles, and this fulness of the Gentiles is to be the revelation of God's will to Israel (Rom. xi. 25, 26) and the salvation of the world. Even in apostolic times have we not a glimpse of the nation elected for this purpose? There is a house in Rome in which I think no English man or woman can stand without a deep feeling of awe and thankfulness, especially should he or she be convinced of the truth that the British nation has a divine mission, and is "elect by the foreknowledge of God" for a manifest purpose, I mean the house of Rufus Prudens and Claudia, one of those ancient relics over which there has been no discussion or dissension, and which bears upon it undoubted evidence of its identity. In words not my own I add a description of this:—

"Lastly, and somewhat rarely, temples may have been converted to Christian uses, a chief instance providentially still in existence of the domestic building thus adapted is the traditional Church in the house of Prudens, the present Church of S. Prudentiana stands in the original hall of the palace, and the outer wall of it can be seen behind the altar with the large hall windows in it of the first century, filled up with brickwork of the second, so nearly resembling the original construction, that it is not easy at once to distinguish them. The original wall and arches of the hall-windows agree perfectly with the arches in the cellars and the subterranean church

"The history of Claudia, the daughter of Cáradox, son of Bran, her marriage with Rufus Prudens, and the possible connection between St. Paul and Britain which may have existed through their means is deeply interesting, and may be studied in 'St. Paul in Britain,' by the Rev. R. W. Morgan.

Digitized by Google

"Pictures we have none, but those whom the world has not altogether deprived of the use of their imaginations may consider the earlier and the later meetings of the Church of the House of Prudens, we can really, perhaps with a little help from Piloty's, or Jèrome, or Alma Tadema's pictures, set some faint image of the scene before us. There were earlier and happier times soon over before Pompona Græcina had stood trial for the faith, and escaped death, perhaps by some long-repented lapse; there were the senators in white robes and purple stripes, and the orderly household of Umbrian slaves, everywhere white tunics and swarthy limbs and faces, the strong body of yet darker Hebrews and Oriental Greeks; the golden heads of the beautiful Brittoness and her two or three kindred, yet robed in the splendour of a senatorial house, but preparing for the trial unto death, which they must even then have apprehended, imagine all these heads, rude or fierce, lofty or lovely, bowed low to hear the good news of God; and that from one of weak bodily presence and contemptible oratory, who may have seemed to them a Syrian ready to perish like his great ancestor, and who yet bore with him that word which should not only subvert all the empire and its order, but subdue the future conquerors of Rome—Greek and Gothic."—St. John Tyrwhitt.

"GO YE INTO ALL THE WORLD AND PREACH THE GOSPEL TO EVERY CREATURE."

It is a remarkable thing that the officials of the Church Missionary Society see very clearly and proclaim to the world the responsibility of British Christians, and especially of the Church of England, to take the Gospel to all nations, families, and kindreds of the earth. In their last report, published in 1892, the following passage occurs to illustrate our remark, on page 8: "The committee do, however, observe with special thankfulness that missionary interest is undoubtedly extending and deepening. The recent February simultaneous meetings, held in the greater part of the Province of Canterbury, gave in most instances ample cause for encouragement, and a large accession of offers of service is expected consequent on the quickened sense of the Church's responsibility for the evangelization of the world. Fifteen bishops took part in those meetings." The question arises in regard to the words of the report, how can it be maintained that the Church of England, to whom the report is addressed, has a "responsibility resting on it to evangelize the world?" In the Scriptures we have distinct intimations that the responsibility to evangelize the world rests upon Israel, the Christian portion of the Twelve Tribes, which in these days must be the House of Ten-tribed Israel. There we find such promises to the Abrahamic or Israelite race as these, made to them exclusively: "In thee (Abram) shall all families of the earth be blessed" (Gen. xii. 3); "All the nations of the earth shall be blessed in him (Abraham)" (Gen. xviii. 18); "In thy seed (Abraham's) shall the nations of the earth be blessed" (Gen. xxii. 18); "In thy seed (Isaac's) shall all the nations of the earth be blessed" (Gen. xxvi. 4); "In thy seed (Jacob's) shall all the families of the earth be blessed" (Gen. xxviii. 14); "In the days to come Jacob shall take root, and Israel shall blossom and bud; and they shall fill the face of the world with fruit" (Isa. xxvii. 6, R.V.); "They (Israel) shall declare My glory among the nations" (Isa. lxvi. 19, R.V.). All these promises, and others like them, the Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, came to confirm, according to St. Paul's declaration in Rom. xv. 8: "Now I say that Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made unto the fathers." He came to carry out the promises of God to the patriarchs, and to provide that "the people whom God formed for Himself" should literally "show forth His praise," according to Isa. xliii. 21. The glory of God was to be ministered by them in the evangelization of the world, and we cannot imagine for a moment that what the Lord Jesus came to carry out in regard to the preachers of the Word among the nations, could be set aside as to the agency prescribed, or varied in the least degree. Israel was to be God's messenger to the nations—as God is true! How then can the Church Missionary Society tell us that the responsibility for the evangelization of the world rests on "the Church," that is, on the Church of England they address and also represent? The fact is the Church Missionary Society is one of the chief of this nation's agencies for the publication of the Gospel throughout the earth, but it is ignorant or sceptical regarding its identity with Israel. It asserts a patent fact, but refuses to enquire about the reason thereof —namely, why God has constituted this nation's church and people to be His missionaries to all the nations, and why this honour is ours exclusively? Our Identity explains this, and many other mysteries. The British are Israel, and thus the whole matter becomes clear. Being Israel, on the British devolves the privilege of evangelizing the nations. The Church Missionary Society, impelled by a truth they feel, but cannot explain, proclaim to the world quite correctly, that the Church and people of this land are God's messengers of mercy to the unsaved nations of the world. They seek accordingly to awaken the Church to its responsibilities, acting in the capacity of the Lord's messengers and servants, perfect in Christ's righteousness themselves, but blind nevertheless, according to Isa. xlii. 19, R.V., to the instrumentality which God has covenanted exclusively to employ. To us, to whom the Gospel appeal has come, these thoughts should bring encouragement and comfort. The nations are ready for the Gospel, and God has made ready our nation and the churches thereof to go forth equipped for the work. He has entrusted to us the custody of the "oracles of God," according to Rom. iii. 1, 2; and Matt. xxi. 43. The Jews once were in charge, but now the British nation, as Ephraim-Israel, undertakes the duty. The theatre of the evangelising enterprise is the world, and accordingly God has lately entrusted to us more and more of the heritage of the heathen, that we may preach to them "the unsearchable riches of Christ," according to the Benjamite Paul's commission (Eph. iii. 8). To carry on this work this nation needs wealth and power—the empire of the sea, and military strength—all this God promised to Israel in Deut. viii. 18, xxviii. 1 and 13; Gen. xxii. 17; and Isa. xli. 10—16. And to our nation exclusively He has given "the power to get wealth," the chief position among the nations of the earth, the power of the Gates, giving the supremacy of the sea; and as a military power continual victory. Everything needful to enable a people to carry out His will in respect to the evangelization of the nations God promised in the Scriptures to His people Israel, but He has fulfilled each iota of His promises to the British people! There is only one conclusion we can arrive at from a consideration of all these facts, and that is, that the British are Israel, as God is true! To the Lord be all the praise!

Digitized by Google

WHO WERE THE ETRUSCANS?

By E. Reep.

Professor Sayce has an interesting article in the current number of the Fortnightly Review on the discovery of an Etruscan book. This remarkable treasure had its hiding-place in the coffin of an Egyptian mummy, once the property of an Austrian traveller, but now the possession of the Museum of Agram. In 1891 an examination of the linen bands enwrapping the mummy was made by Professor Krall for the purpose of disciphering, if possible, the written characters closely inscribed on them. The result of his task is the discovery of a large portion of an ancient Etruscan book and the possibility in the near future of solving much of the mystery that has so effectually concealed from us the identity of the Etruscans. The interest attached by scholars to the history of Etruria has been mainly aroused by the very important part played by the Etruscans in the development of the Roman people. Etruscan religion, Etruscan art, and Etruscan manners were, according to Plutarch, gladly welcomed by the newly-founded communities ruled over by Romulus. On the demise, or, rather, inexplicable disappearance of this somewhat mythical ruler, Numa was by popular acclamation elected king in his stead. Numa, says Plutarch, was of Sabine extraction, and the Sabines declared themselves to have been a Lacedæmonian colony. According to another ancient authority, this Lacedæmonian community took refuge in Italy to avoid the severity of the Spartan laws.

Now, as the Lacedæmonians asserted themselves brethren of the Jews (see Josephus and Book I. of Maccabees), the Sabines, or Etruscans, as we may choose to call them, must have been descendants of Abraham. This very interesting circumstance does not make less curious a few notes made from a work on the "Cities of Etruria," by G. Dennis, pub. 1878. Rome, says this author, was indebted to Etruria for whatever tended to humanize and elevate her, before her intercourse with Greece. The Etruscans had extended commerce and intercourse with many and far distant countries. They had a great reverence for the dead, and a firm belief in a future state. Their dominion of Etruria embraced the greater part of Italy, extending over the plains of Lombardy to the Alps. Their territory was divided into twelve states, each represented by a city, as in Greece. It is certain they were of foreign origin, and became dominant by right of conquest. By Sir W. Betham they are said to have been allied to the Irish and the Hyksos or shepherd-kings of Egypt. And, continues Mr. Dennis, I know not if they have been taken for the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel, but if not a very pretty theory might be set up and supported by argument to that effect. Not to mention, he says, minor analogies, there is one of so striking a character as satisfactorily to prove, not, perhaps, a descent from Abraham, but an intercourse with the Hebrews and at least an oriental origin.

The analogy considered so remarkable occurs in the account of the cosmogony of the Etruscans. On the authority of one of their own historians, they are said to have believed that the Creator spent 12,000 years in executing His divine purposes, 6,000 of which were assigned to the work of creation and as many to the duration of the world. In the first thousand He made heaven and earth; in the second the apparent firmament, and called it heaven; in the third the sea and all the waters which are in the earth; in the fourth the great lights—sun, moon, and stars; in the fifth, every soul of birds, reptiles, and four-footed animals, in air, earth, and waters; at the end of the sixth, man.

Plutarch makes no mention of this Etruscan cosmology, but he says that Numa forbade the Romans to represent the Deity in the form either of man or beast. Nor, he adds, was there among them at that time any image or statue of the divine Being. During the first hundred and seventy years they built temples and other sacred edifices, but placed in them no figure of any kind, persuaded that it is impious to represent things divine by what is perishable, and that we can have no conception of God but by the understanding. As for Numa himself, he placed his confidence entirely in God, and taught the Romans to swear by faith as the greatest of oaths. Tacitus says of him that he managed the people by religious devices and divine law. The twelve tables of Roman law probably originated with him, as the number twelve to the Etruscans had a special significance. At his death two stone coffins were made and buried, one containing his body and the other the sacred books which he had written, these being written in the same manner as the Grecian legislators wrote their tables of law.

As the introducer of the Etruscan arts into Rome, Numa formed the people into guilds, according to their arts and trades. The growth of wealth must have been rapid, with a population devoted to handicrafts, successfully plying the vocation of goldsmiths, dyers, masons, tanners, shoemakers, potters, &c. Whence they derived their skill in working metals is a matter for conjecture. Lardner, in his "Arts of the Greeks and Romans," quotes authorities who believed that there was communication between Etruscans and Egyptians, or at any rate familiarity on the part of the Etruscans with Epypt at some point of their history. All modern historians are agreed that the greatness of Rome was due to the Greeks (see Professor Mahaffy's Problems in Greek History). Its greatness, therefore, is to be attributed to a Semitic influence, if Josephus and the first book of Maccabees be correct in affirming that the Lacedæmonians were related to the southern Hebrew kingdom of Palestine. We cannot attach too much importance to this statement, as, if it be true, it quite upsets the supposition that two opposite and totally alien schools of religion and philosophy have dominated the civilized world. The spirit of Greek civilization and Greek literature has so largely infused itself into the higher education of Englishmen that in the opinion of some scholars they are debtors not so much to Hebrew history as to Greek history.

This is quite Professor Mahaffy's opinion, who makes bold to say that prejudice in favour of the Semite has ousted the Greek from his rightful place, and thus destroyed in the Englishman a proper appreciation of his indebtedness to the intellectual culture of the (so-considered) Gentile. That we are not called upon to exhibit gratitude for the intellectual benefits we have received from a supposed Gentile race will not, of course, be a settled question until the asserted Semitic origin of the Spartan state, and therefore of the other Greek states, is thoroughly sifted. When scholars take upon themselves this task, it comes within the range of possibility that it will be conclusively proved that the two Hebrew kingdoms of Palestine, in their dispersion throughout all lands, have been the sole factors in spreading and establishing religious and intellectual civilization.

In the article by Professor Sayce it is said the excavations in the neighbourhood of Bologna have brought to light certain tombs which may be of Etruscan origin and which exhibit designs suggestive of Mykenæ. Considering how constant was the influx of colonists from Hellas, it would be strange if Hellenic forms and types of art and architecture had not been transported to Etruria and predominated in all the twelve Etruscan cities. Strabo alludes to these colonists under a variety of names. Sometimes they are Tyrrheni, at others Sabini and Tusci, as well as Etrusci and Bruttii. Each and all of these Etruscan communities bestowed their attention upon the marvellous fertility of the soil of their adopted country. Many of them sent forth exploring expeditions, and these founded colonies elsewhere. In founding Grecian cities the Greeks always had an eye to the proximity of the sea and harbour accommodation. (It has been remarked that Palestine, despite its situation on the Mediterranean Sea, offered no specially favourable harbours for the development of navigation. Israel's destiny required, therefore, that she should find room for expansion in other lands.) Not entirely with the object of maintaining their supremacy at sea, but with the more peaceful view of establishing trade routes and safe anchorage for their merchant craft.

Digitized by Google

Amber appears to have been one of their articles of commerce, although Professor Sayce does not think it quite certain that they took part in the amber trade of the Baltic. They were, however, in all probability, concerned in it, more especially as Professor Sayce tells us that Dr. Schliemann found beads of Baltic amber at Mykenæ, and that even in Southern Palestine along with objects which belong to the 18th Egyptian dynasty (B.C. 1,400) an amber bead has been found. A considerable amount of information on the Baltic amber trade appears in Elton's "Origins of English History." This author calls attention to the probability of Tacitus, in his account of the Baltic tribes, having copied passages from ancient Greek writings. It has even been suggested, he says, that the whole account of Suevia (Scandinavia), or, at least the northern portions, including the countries of the Estyi and the Anglii, with which Englishmen are most concerned, was taken direct from the "Geographica" of Eratosthenes (B.C. 276). When Tacitus and other Roman authors described the Estyi or East-men and other Scandinavian tribes as savage in their habits, it is to be understood that such descriptions are merely owing to some novel custom unknown to the historian.

To the Baltic islands, where the amber was washed up at high tide, came, we may venture to conjecture, the ships of Dan. How many Estyii or East-men (Englishmen) elected on these voyages to the Baltic to forsake the mariner's roving life for the prospect of becoming rich through the export of amber? With Britain the commerce in amber beads and various other articles made from the same product of the Baltic coast was very flourishing, and is said to have dated from the earliest times. The finds of amber in British Tumuli quite overthrow the notion that the Estyi or East-men made their first incursions into Britain in the fifth century. The Baltic tribes of Danites or Danes and the Anglii were as well acquainted with the British Isles 300 B.C. as Anglo-America is to-day. That Etruscans found a home in Britain after their expulsion from Italy is not improbable. It was the belief of Roman historians that Italian colonies had established themselves in our island, and it is from their annals that the British historian Nennius deposes that the Britons claimed their origin from the Romans as well as Greeks. The origin of the Romans with whom this relationship was claimed were of the Etruscan race, if there be any truth at all in the story. True, however, or not, it is certain that the Picts observed, like the Lacedæmonians, the custom of refusing to recognize descent through the male line. Did, therefore, the Etruscan Lacedæmonians introduce into Britain this infraction of the usual law of primogeniture? or did the Picts admit descent through the female line only before they made their settlement in Britain? This and all similar questions may some day be satisfactorily answered, and for this reason British-Israelites can but feel an interest in the future discoveries that have yet to reveal to us the solution of the problem—Who were the Etruscans?

South Norwood, Feb. 21, 1893.

A MESSAGE FROM SINGAPORE.

WE have never received, since we commenced our editorial duties in connection with the BANNER OF ISRAEL, a communication on the subject of "Our Identity" from our distant British Eastern Gate, Singapore. We have now the pleasure to record the fact that a paper, called the Malaysia Message, of February, 1893, devotes a four-page Supplement to an interesting exposition of "the Anglo-Israelite Theory," as our editor in the East terms it. The lecturer, whose words are quoted, is clearly a well-read British-Israelite. But the point we wish to notice is that even in Singapore, drawing-room meetings are held to consider our views, that a local newspaper gives large space in order to publish them, and, lastly, that the Editor of the BANNER is so well known in Singapore that forthwith a copy of the February number of the Malaysia Message is posted at Singapore to Philo-Israel, of Clifton, and duly arrives! We republish the Supplement below with much satisfaction:—

"ANGLO-ISRAELITE THEORY.

"On Monday afternoon, November 21st, 1892 at the house of Miss Cooke, Mr. E. C. Hill gave an able and interesting exposition of the Anglo-Israelite Theory, of which the following is a synopsis:—

"The chosen people of God in the early years of their nationality were governed by Judges. In the course of time came their request for a king, and like the surrounding nations the government became monarchical.

"The great split which divided the nation occurred in the reign of Rehoboam. Although we are accustomed to regard this as the great fracture of the national life, it should not be forgotten that in the reign of Saul the people of Israel and the men of Judah were numbered separately (see 1 Sam. xi. 8). It would appear that the division really took place previous to this, subsequent to entering Palestine.

"About 700 B.C. Israel went into Assyrian captivity, and has never returned, and is known to us as "the Lost Ten Tribes," and believed by many to be now found in the British and American nations. Judah continued 150 years longer and was then taken into captivity to Babylon. After seventy years of absence the people returned to Jerusalem during the reign of Cyrus. After the rejection of Messiah their country was finally seized by Rome, and the unfortunate Jews are scattered abroad all over the globe, but retain their Jewish characteristics.

"The distinction between the Jews and Israelites should be carefully borne in mind. The Jew, who is known everywhere, should not be confounded with the Israelites. Now the division of the kingdom under Rehoboam was clearly foretold. First to Solomon (1 Kings xi. 13); and second to Jeroboam by the prophet Ahijah. In accordance with these predictions, Benjamin temporarily joined the House of Judah and went with them to Babylon, but this tribe really belonged to Israel. If we consider Ephraim and Manasseh as separate tribes, we shall have Ten Tribes constituting the House of Israel, and three tribes, Judah, Levi, and Benjamin, the House of Judah, or thirteen tribes altogether.

Digitized by Google

"The Tribe of Benjamin was in Palestine at the time of our Saviour, and there are strong grounds for believing that all the apostles, excepting Judas Iscariot, were of this tribe.

"The rupture of the Twelve Tribes must be seen to have been sanctioned if not actually instigated by Jehovah. Rehoboam was plainly directed not to attempt to suppress the revolt under Jeroboam as it was of God. 'This thing is from Me, saith the Lord' (1 Kings xii. 24).

"It is generally acknowledged that Israel was in the first instance especially chosen by God and promised great blessings in order that, having themselves received knowledge of the true God, they might impart this knowledge to other nations; that being blessed themselves they might be a means of blessing to others. It is, however, usually supposed that their wickedness prevented this design being carried out, and that they have now been rejected, and the work it was intended they should do is now being done by other nations. It is quite clear, of course, that the Jews are under punishment at the present time, and certainly not inheriting the promised blessings; but the Jews constitute only two of the tribes, and there remain the other Ten Tribes of the nation of Israel, and there is no reason whatever why these should not be inheriting the blessings and carrying out the destiny intended for Israel.

"By the division of the people into two distinct nations this destiny was able to receive its accomplishment. If the nation had remained one, the other tribes might have been guilty of rejecting the Messiah and would have incurred the punishment which the Jews are now undergoing; but by the division of the nation into two, while the Jews rejected the Messiah and incurred punishment, the Ten Tribes, or the nation of Israel, had no part in so doing, and their absence from the land of Palestine made it impossible for them to take part in the rejection and crucifixion of the Messiah. That their prolonged exile from their land was not for purposes of punishment seems to be clear, for, by the prophet Jeremiah, the Almighty Himself declares that Israel's sin is less than that of Judah. If, therefore, Judah's sin, which is more grievous, is punished by an exile from their land of seventy years only, it would be unreasonable to suppose that Israel's sin should be punished by an exile which has now lasted nearly 2,500 years. It would appear clear therefore that the prolonged exile from their land was for reasons other than that of punishment only.

"A consideration of the prophecies would appear to show that far from the Ten Tribes being finally lost, as is generally supposed, some great destiny was intended for them while exiled from Palestine. This view seems also to be borne out by the New Testament. Our Lord declared that the kingdom of God was to be taken from the Jews and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof. He did not say to nations, or to a church, but to a nation. Again, to the Syrophœnician woman He said, 'I am not sent but to the lost sheep of the House of Israel.' This could not refer to the Jews, for they were in their land at the time and not lost. On the occasion of certain Greeks coming to see Him, Christ declared, 'Now is the Son of Man glorified,' and that these Greeks may have been Israelites would appear from the passage where the Jews said, 'Will He go to the dispersed among the Gentiles?' literally, among the Greeks. In the 51st and 52nd verses of John xi. the High Priest prophecies Christ came to 'gather into one the children of God who were scattered abroad.'

"The Old Testament prophecies are to the same effect. Hosea wrote under the name given to one of the prophets' children, that Israel (as distinguished from Judah, who is referred to a few verses previously) was to be divorced from the Mosaic law, 'Ye are not My people, and I will not be your God,' but in the very next verse the prophet announces, 'Yet the number of the children of Israel shall be as the sand of the sea, which cannot be measured nor numbered, and in the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not My people, it shall be said unto them, Ye are the sons of the living God.' The 14th verse of the second chapter, after Israel's sins have been described, makes the same statement: 'Behold I will allure her, and bring her into the wilderness, and speak comfortably unto her, and she shall sing there as in the days of her youth, and thou shalt call Me Ishi (my husband).' So we see Israel re-married to God. The 'Speaker's Commentary' on Hosea i. 10, is, 'What can this be but a description of Christian blessedness?' We are justified therefore in concluding that Israel in exile before their return to Palestine is to be greatly blessed, to become a multitudinous people and to embrace Christianity. It has been suggested that the Ten Tribes returned to Palestine with Judah, but they certainly did not. Ezra makes no mention of them, and his utter silence is sufficient evidence that Israel was still abroad. Josephus in two places states they did not return, and only two tribes, he tells us, became tributary to the Romans. The Apocrypha also bears this out, and it is distinctly stated in the 2nd of Esdras that the Ten Tribes went to Arsereth. A further proof that Israel may be indentified in the British nation is that some of the blessings promised are to have their fulfilment in the 'latter days,' and it is evident that the 'latter days' are the Christian Dispensation. The texts, a consideration of which show this, are the following:—Heb. i. 2; 1 Peter i. 20; 1 Tim. iv. 1; Jude xviii.; 1 John xi. 18; 2 Tim. iii. 1.

"The following texts show that some of the promises to Israel must have their fulfilment before the millennium (Gen. xlix. 24; Deut. xxxiii. 17; Micah v. 8; Isa. xli. 8—12, liv. 15—17). 'His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the horns of unicorns: with them he shall push the people together to the ends of the earth: and they are the ten thousands of Ephraim, and they are the thousands of Manasseh' (Deut. xxxiii. 17). 'And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a lion among the beasts of the forest, as a young lion among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver' (Micah v. 8).

"These texts cannot have reference to millennial times (as of course all war and disturbance must ere then cease), and must therefore receive their fulfilment before them. It is supposed by many that the Christian dispensation, 'the latter day,' is about to close. May we not reasonably enquire 'Have not the prophecies to Israel been fulfilled?'

"We now come to closer proof that the British nation really is the lost Israel. The evidence in the chain must be unbroken, all predictions regarding the future of Israel must be fulfilled, and not one wanting, or we cannot insist that our proof is sufficient. We give fifteen marks of Identification:—

"(1) 'That Israel is to be a great and mighty nation' (Gen. xii. 2, xviii. 18).

"Is not this true of the British power?

"(2) 'Israel to possess the Gates of her enemies' (Gen.

Digitized by Google

xxii. 17). England possesses the principal gateways of the world; notably: Gibraltar, Aden, Malta, Singapore, etc. Let it be observed, this must be a fulfilment pre-millennial, since these Gates will not be needed in the age of peace, and the promise would be of no use then.

"(3) 'Israel to be a nation and a company of nations' (Gen. xxxv. 11, xlviii. 19). 'And God said unto him, I am God almighty: be fruitful and multiply; a nation and a company of nations shall be of thee, and kings shall come out of thy loins' (Gen. xxxv. 11).

"If one were asked where a nation and a company of nations exist at the present time, surely the only possible answer must be Great Britain and her colonies.

"(4) Israel to be under a new covenant and therefore Christian (Hos. i. 10; Ezek. xi. 16, xx. 35—37).

"(5) Israel to be immensely populous (Gen. xxii. 17; Hos. i. 10; Gen. xxvi. 4). 'Yet the number of the children of Israel shall be as the sand of the sea, which cannot be measured nor numbered; and it shall come to pass, that in the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not My people, there it shall be said unto them, Ye are the sons of the living God' (Hos. i. 10).

"Let it be noted that the rate of increase of England and America, and their colonies, is greater than that of any other nation.

"(6) The people of Israel to be planted in a place of their own, not to be again moved, and not to be troubled by their enemies there (2 Sam. vii. 10). 'Moreover, I will appoint a place for My people Israel, and will plant them, that they may dwell in a place of their own, and move no more; neither shall the children of wickedness afflict them any more, as before time' (2 Sam. vii. 10).

"This must refer to a place outside of Palestine, as the prediction was given when the people were in Palestine. Since we have finally settled in the British Islands (1066) our enemies have ceased to afflict us, while every effort made to attack us by way of invasion has been frustrated, apparently by the Lord Himself. Can this be said of any other European nation?

"(7) Israel to be in islands of the sea, North-west of Palestine (Isa. xxiv. 15, xli. 1, xlix 1, li. 5; Jer. xxxi. 10, iii. 18, xxiii. 7, 8; Hos. xi. 10).

"(8) The place to become too limited, and they were to push the people to the ends of the earth (Deut. xxxiii. 17; Isa. xlix. 8, liv. 1—11). 'And I will preserve thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, to establish the earth, to cause to inherit the desolate heritages' (Isa. xlix. 8). 'Enlarge the place of thy tent, and let them stretch forth the curtains of thine habitations: spare not, lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes' (Isa. liv. 2).

"We have colonized everywhere, and have in places pushed out the original inhabitants, the Indians in America, and the natives of Australia, New Zealand, etc.

"(9) Israel to be a great maritime people (Numb. xxiv. 7).

"(10) Israel to become the great military power (Numb. xxiii. 24; Isa. xli. 8—12: 'They that strive with thee shall perish' (Deut. xxxiii. 17; Isa. liv. 15; Micah v. 8). 'Behold, they shall surely gather together, but not by Me: whosoever shall gather together against thee shall fall, for thy sake' (Isa. liv. 15). Note our unconquerable position, and the conquests we have effected. Surely, as predicted, we have been God's battle-axe, and weapon of war, and He has subdued the nations under us.

"(11) Israel to become a means of blessing to other nations (Micah v. 7; Gen. xii. 3; Isa. xliii. 7, xxvii. 6). 'And the remnant of Jacob shall be in the midst of many people as a dew from the Lord, as the showers upon the grass, that tarrieth not for man, nor waiteth for the sons of men' (Micah v. 7). The conquerors are not usually a blessing to the conquered. Our conquests in India, Burmah, and other parts of the world have proved a blessing to the people conquered.

"(12) Israel to be God's witness to the nations (Isa. xliii. 10, 12, 21, and xliv. 8). Is not the English-speaking race foremost in carrying the Bible and the Gospel to the ends of the earth?

"(13) Israel to possess enormous wealth, and to lend, but not to borrow (Deut. viii. 18, xv. 6). 'For the Lord thy God blesseth thee as He promised thee: and thou shalt lend unto many nations, but thou shalt not borrow; and thou shalt reign over many nations, but they shall not reign over thee' (Deut. xv. 6). The London money market rules the world.

"(14) Observance of the Sabbath (Exod. xiii. 6, xx. 8—11). It is believed that the English are the only race keeping the Sabbath.

"(15) Israel to be so highly blessed as to be known by the nations as the seed which the Lord has blessed (Isa. lxi. 9). These arguments are similar to those used by the evangelists to prove our Lord's Messiahship and resurrection. Their weight is not due to one passage only being fulfilled, but to all the references to Israel's future having their fulfilment in the British nation.

"The prediction of Gen. xlviii. 19, 'He (Manasseh) also shall become a people, and he also shall be great, but truly his younger brother (Ephraim) shall be greater than he, and shall become a multitude of nations,' has come true in the loss of America as a British possession, and thus the United States are identified as a part of the Lost Tribes. Before the millennium Israel and Judah must be re-united, according to the teaching of Ezek. xxxvii. 15, in the parable of the two sticks. The final proof is historical. Israel was always to be a nation and to have a descendant of king David ruling over it (Jer. xxxi. 35; 2 Sam. xii. 16; 2 Chron. xiii. 5; Jer. xxxiii. 20; Psa. lxxxix. 3, 4, 27—30, 36—38). 'Thy seed will I establish for ever, and build up thy throne to all generations' (Psa. lxxxix 4). 'His seed shall endure for ever, and his throne as the sun before Me' (Psa. lxxxix. 36).

"In Ezekiel xvii. we have a parable and a riddle, and judging by the interpretation of the riddle, which is given, we may assume that the interpretation of the parable is also that one of the king's (Zedekiah's) seed would be taken and planted in another land, which is called the land of Israel (ver 22, 23). 'Thus saith the Lord God: I will also take of the highest branch of the high cedar, and will set it; I will crop off from the top of his young twigs a tender one, and will plant it upon an high mountain and eminent' (Ezek. xvii. 22).

"We last hear of Jeremiah in Egypt with the daughters of Zedekiah. Is there any incident in the history of the British people which would lead one to suppose that one of these daughters came to Britain? Tara, as is well known, was for several centuries before Christ the royal residence of Ireland. The Psalter of Tara was a book of the chronicles of the Irish kingdom, originated at Tara by one called the Ollam Fola. About 583 B.C., the time of the Babylonian captivity, Ollam Fola appears on the scene and introduces various reforms and wise regulations for the government of the country.

"Heremon was the king of Ireland at the time. Associated with the great Irish legislator was an Eastern princess, who was married to Heremon. Her name was Tephi, a Hebrew word, while the word Mergech, applied to her tomb, means in Hebrew a resting-place or depository. She is described in one song as a daughter of Egypt. Tara means in Hebrew "the law of the two tables." The original name of Tara seems to have been Lothair Grofinn. Ollam Fola means in Hebrew a wonderful revealer or prophet. He established the Mur-ollomain, meaning in Hebrew the school or precincts of the prophets. The Jodhan Moran was created, being the Hebrew for Chief Justice. From Tephi there is an unbroken line to Fergus I., who went to Scotland; from Fergus I. to James I., who came to England; and from James I., to Victoria, our present Queen.

Digitized by Google

"As regards any historical link between the Israelites and the British, the only reference to them by name occurs in 2 Esdras xiii. 40—46: 'Those are the Ten Tribes which were carried away prisoners out of their own land in the time of Osea the king, whom Salmanesar, the king of Assyria, led away captive, and he carried them over the waters and so came they into another land. But they took this counsel among themselves, that they would leave the multitude of the heathen, and go forth into a far country where never mankind dwelt, that they might there keep their statutes which they never kept in their own land, and they entered into Euphrates by the narrow passages of the river, for the Most High then showed signs for them, and held still the flood till they were passed over. For through that country there was a great way to go—namely, of a year and a half—and the same region is called Arsereth. Then dwelt they there until the latter time.'

"Arsereth means in Hebrew the hill or city of Sereth. To this day one of the tributary streams flowing into the Danube, near its mouth, from the Carpathians, is the river Sereth. Near its source among the mountains is the city of Sereth. If this is the region referred to, Israel must have entered Europe about B.C. 650, as this was the time of the Median revolution against the supremacy of Assyria, which would give them an opportunity of escaping, and their first settlement would be to the north-west of the Black Sea.

"That they were settled in the region of the Crimea, through which they must have passed to get to Arsereth, is corroborated by the tomb-stones found in the Crimea, the inscriptions of some of which have been deciphered at St. Petersburgh. The dates all refer to the captivity of the Ten Tribes, some of them being as early as A.D. 6.

"According to Herodotus, about the year 650 B.C. the great Scythian nation, which had for some time previously been settled south of the Araxes, crossed that river, and penetrating the passes of the Caucasus, or skirting the often frozen Euxine shore, migrated into Europe, settling immediately in the land of the Kimmerians, on the north-west of the Black Sea. According to themselves the Scythians were one of the youngest of nations, and their national existence had only lasted about 1,000 years to the day when Darius invaded them. This was about B.C. 500. Then they were a nation about B C. 1,500, the date of the Exodus from Egypt. Can these be the Lost Ten Tribes?

"Herodotus tells us that those who lived nearest to Greece, the Getæ, were confident that their God was the true God, and that there was immortality beyond the grave. He states that they were the noblest and most just of all peoples occupying the Thracian Peninsula, and that the Scythians generally were an exception to the unpolished character of the surrounding nations. Æschylus speaks of them as ruled by good laws.

"Thucydides, writing about 420 B.C., says that in respect of military strength no single nation either in Europe or Asia could match them.

"Of the Scythian customs described by Herodotus some point plainly to a Hebrew origin. 'They never used swine in their sacrifices, nor is it their wont to breed them in any part of their country.' 'In sacrificing, after slaying the beasts, they take out all the bones and put the flesh in cauldrons, then placing the bones of the animals beneath the cauldrons they set them alight and so boil the meat.' Ezek. xxiv. 5: 'Take the choice of the flock, and burn also the bones under it, and make it boil well.'

"'Scythia has an abundance of soothsayers, who foretell the future by means of willow wands.' Reminding one of Hosea iv. 12: 'My people ask counsel of their stocks, and their staff declareth unto them.'

"They had a legend of a legislator Zamolxis, a slave, who obtained learning in Egypt and preached immortality. Zamolxis, it has been conjectured, may stand for Sar Moses, the Chief or Prince Moses."—Supplement to the Malaysia Message, Feb., 1893.

THE REV. F. ASTON'S LECTURES IN BOURNEMOUTH.

On Friday, January 27th last, the Rev. F. Aston had a fine opportunity at Bournemouth of making known the story of Our Identity before large audiences. The subject in the afternoon was, "Is the Empire of Great Britain spoken of in the Bible?" and in the evening, "Why the discovery of Lost Israel was not made sooner?" Mr. F. J. Bright took the chair in the afternoon; and in the evening, the Rev. J. E. Tunmer, of Parkstone, presided.

In regard to the first address, the lecturer remarked that Egypt, Babylon, Assyria, Medo-Persia, Greece, and Rome, had all played their parts in the history of the past, and the prophecies of God had foretold the rise and fall of each. At present we have before us two more powers—the Ottoman, and the Russian—the former dwindling away, and effete; the latter rising to power, and proposing to embrace the world in her grasp in order to dominate it. The Scriptures sketched the careers of these two powers also. The lecturer quoted Victor Hugo, Paul du Chaillu, and the Russian M. Vernadski, to show what the intelligent aliens (though Paul du Chaillu cannot be so described) thought of our country. The Russian's words were quoted some years ago by the Banner, but they will bear repetition as part of Mr Aston's argument. Vernadski wrote thus of the British people:—

Britain is a menance to Europe; she is the most aggressive power of modern times. There is no part of the world where she has not established her garrisons and her colonies. Her fleet dominates every sea. What power is there that has not suffered from her ambition? She has torn Gibraltar from Spain, Malta, India, and Canada from France, Heligoland from Denmark, the Cape of Good Hope from the Dutch, the Gold Coast from the Portuguese, and Hong Kong from China. She has built up by the sword a military power in Asia, which secures her government over 200 millions in India. At Aden she holds the Gate of the Red Sea; at Singapore she commands the road to China. From Fiji she dominates the Pacific. Her territory is vaster than that of Russia, and greater in extent than all Europe without Russia.

The lecturer then asked if the Scriptures foretold of the advent of such a power as Great Britain, fulfilling such a destiny as hers manifestly was and is? The answer, of course, was that the British nation alone among the nations answers in every point to the picture of God's chosen people Israel, as depicted in the Bible. The Scriptural description of this favoured, once lost, now discovered nation, the lecturer fully brought out.

Digitized by Google

The second lecture was of an interesting and able character, which our space forbids us to refer to now. On a future occasion we hope to quote it for our readers information and profit.

The two lectures were exceedingly well reported in the Bournemouth Observer, of February 1st, 1893.

"FOR AND AGAINST TRUTH AND ERROR."

CONDUCTED BY JAMES MARCHANT.

THE above is an excellent paper directed against the errors of unbelief and Secularism, conducted by one who is an "Evidence lecturer" in the East of London, and conducts Christian evidence classes in various parishes there. We are glad to see that he allows space for the elucidation of "Our Identity," and would draw attention with approval to the paper published in No. 2, entitled "God's Covenant with Israel," written by our friend Mr. Ernest P. Dix, of Walthamstow. This is one of a series of two or three which, with Mr. J Marchant's permission, Mr. DIX is privileged to contribute in "For and Against."

The subject of the first is "God's Covenant with Israel," wherein the matters so often mooted in the BANNER are clearly elucidated. He shows that God's covenant with Abraham in Gen. xvii. and xxii. was "unconditional and unalterable," and that we must now expect to find the House of Israel (as distinguished from the House of Judah) "a nation," with God for its Protector, Guide, and Friend.

The paper in which the above appears is ably conducted and is embellished with well-executed illustrations, and presents the reader monthly with 12½ pages of literary matter for one penny, or with the year's numbers for 1s. 6d.

ANGLO-ISRAEL FREE DISTRIBUTION FUND.

"To make known to the sons of men His mighty acts, and the glorious majesty of His kingdom" (Psa. cxlv. 12).

"Now therefore perform the doing of it; that as there was a readiness to will, so there may be a performance also out of that which ye have" (2 Cor. viii. 11).

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTEENTH MONTHLY REPORT.

THE following subscriptions and donations, received from March 18th to April 14th, are very gratefully acknowledged:—

By the Treasurer: Miss G., Topsham, 5s.; J. D., Sheffield, 2s. 6d.; A. J. S., 5s.; M. F. T. M I. I., £5; Mrs. C., Clifton (for BANNERS), 7s. 6d.; The Lady J. E., £5; W. W. (for BANNERS), £1 1s., H. E. T., Dorking, 10s.; Miss D. and Friend, 2s.

By Miss E. M. Rush: Gunner C., Malta, 1s.; J. L., Manchester, 2s. 6d.; A. C., Ogra Agrabeis, 10s.; Miss P., Andover, 2s.; J. W., Quetta, 7s. 6d.; Miss M., Loughton, 10s.; Miss D., 1s.; Miss B., 2s. 6d.; J. A., Hammersmith, 5s.; G. M. S., Chiswick, 5s.; J. M., Malta, 10s. 6d.; W. R., Cardiff, 3s.; S. R., Wilsden, 1s. 6d.

Total, £15 14s. 6d.

COLONIAL AGENTS.—The following is a list of our agents abroad, all of whom will gladly receive subscriptions, or give any information concerning the Fund:—F. A. R. Winter, Esq., George Town, British Guiana; C. F. Garland, Esq., Nelson's Plains, New South Wales; E. L. Dwyer, Esq., Sand Hill, Launceston, Tasmania; T. Craig, Esq., Graham-street, Auckland, New Zealand; Mr. J. May, 26, Piazza Miratore, Floriana, Malta.

OLD BANNERS.—In future, friends having old BANNERS to give away are particularly requested not to send them to the Hon. Secretary or Treasurer. The addresses of Sowers to whom such packets may be transmitted will be forwarded on application. The carriage should in all cases be fully paid, and the BANNERS sent should be clean and in good condition.

BANNER DISTRIBUTION. — From 219 to 229 BANNERS are now sent weekly, to the places already enumerated in previous reports.

LITERATURE DISTRIBUTION.—Two hundred and two small packets, from one to six to each, have been sent to the following places since last report: Shetland, Perranarworthal, Catford, Commercial-road, E., South Benfleet, Cockburnspath, Canterbury, Edinburgh, Aldershot, Hamilton, Birkenhead, Maesteg, Woolwich, Dublin, Carlisle, Dover, Vauxhall, S.W., Calne, Colchester, Southwold, Bow, Stoke, East Grinstead, Bexley, Lee, Fermoy, Plympton, Hull, Lowestoft, Brighton, Birmingham, Penzance, Chatham, Wadingham, Alvaston, Faversham, East Twickenham, Staplehurst, Teignmouth; Galley Wood, Attercliffe, Portsmouth, Stirling, Southsea, Ludlow, Hulme, Tunbridge Wells, Moreton-in-Marsh, Weymouth, Barnsley, Crewe, Shepherd's Bush, Kingsbridge, Wandsworth, St. Leonard's-on-Sea, Dundee, Bingley, Chippenham, Cardiff, Horsforth, Chester, Lewes, Fulham, Walthamstow, Stockport, Andover, Shrewsbury, St. Margaret's, Teddington, Hampton Hill, Cheshunt, Heaton Chapel, Loughton, Penryn, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Liverpool, Buxton, Chislehurst, London (4 districts), Wellingborough, Erkington, Couper Angus, Colbyhurst, Richmond, Wimbledon, Sheffield, Acton, Ripon, Lympstone, Appleton, Freshford, Westgate-on-Sea, Malta, Colon, Panama.

CORRESPONDENCE.—A miner in South Africa sends grateful thanks for the literature. He lends the BANNERS to others, and says that nearly all of the working class around him now believe that we are Israel.

A correspondent who sent some literature to the Secretary of the Federation League, received the following reply: "I am glad to say that wherever there is a believer in British-Israelism there we find a warm supporter of our cause, and I am grateful to you for the pains you are taking to advance it."

Another tells us that Prof. Totten has not given up the idea of publishing further volumes of "Our Race." On the contrary, "he has resigned his position in the army in order to give his whole time to this important work, and has now about completed Study No. 9."

A Sower who has started a Sunday afternoon Bible-class, says he has now 84 members, the average attendance being about two-thirds. The address, with singing from Moody and Sankey's Hymns, occupies about an hour and a half. Our friend adds: "I am short of literature, although I have spent much for leaflets, &c. I am aware that the Free Distribution Fund cannot be kept up without aid. It is therefore my intention to assist all I can when I think the time has arrived to make a special appeal to the members, and I do not think it will be long before it arrives."

Another writes: "I received the package of leaflets you so kindly sent me. They are just the thing for this Home Rule business, which would most certainly end in Rome Rule if it became law."

J. LAWRENCE, Hon. Treasurer.

Contributions to the Fund will be thankfully received and acknowledged by the Hon. Treasurer, Miss J. Lawrence, Rosslyn, Hampton-road, Upper Teddington, Middlesex; or by the Hon. Secretary, Miss E. M. Rush, 4, Westgate-road, Westgate-on-Sea. Cheques may be crossed, "London and Provincial Bank, Teddington Branch."

Digitized by Google

ISRAEL'S SCRIPTURE AND PRAYER UNION.

MEMBERS of the Prayer Union will be glad to know that the membership is steadily increasing. Since last report nine more names have been added, making a total of 1,452. Twenty new members have joined so far this year. In 1892 only 19 names were entered for the whole year.

The applications for the new card of membership by old members have not been so numerous as was expected, only four having sent for it.

Donations of 1s. were gladly received from Mr. J. R., Hull, and Mrs. N., Llanrwst.

Extracts from letters:—(a) "I have been a firm believer in this glorious truth for fourteen years. It is a great comfort to me in my declining years."

(b) "I have been a reader of the BANNER for about two years, and am much interested."

(c) "I wish to wear the badge to show that I am a great believer in this glorious truth, and have been for eleven years. I take four BANNERS weekly. We are four in number here, all believers."

The new Card of Membership has a list of chapters for the whole year, also suggestions to members, prayers, etc. It is of a size convenient for keeping in the Bible, and will be sent on receipt of 6 stamps. It is hoped that all the members will send for one.

The first and second series of Monthly Comments on the whole Bible, by Philo-Israel, may be obtained. Price, in paper cover, 1s. 2d. each; in cloth 2s. each, post free.

The "Prayers for Daily Use," being a prayer for each day of the week, by Philo-Israel, are 1d., or 9d. per doz., postage extra. Address — The Secretary, Israel's Scripture and Prayer Union, British-Israel Association, 86, St. Martin's-lane, London, W.C.

THE BRITISH-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

NEW MEMBERS.—Nine have joined "The Israel Scripture and Prayer Union," and seven the British-Israel Association, since last report. This is a beginning, we hope, and an earnest of yet larger numbers during the present month. From all parts of the country where I have lectured, I have found many believers who did not know even of the existence of a Central Association in London. I am sure that if only our friends and members would try, our list of members might be doubled.

During the last month nine lectures have been given. Those at Manchester, Glasgow, Cheltenham, and Clifton were well attended. At Glasgow we had to move from the smaller to the larger hall, and at Cheltenham the people who came in late had to stand, which many did, remaining throughout the whole meeting. Small numbers have been the exception at our lectures of late, and much more interest and enthusiasm has been shown in the subject.

The following meetings have been arranged:—Tuesday, May 16th, the annual meetings at the Rooms, at 2 p.m. May 16th, public meetings in the Lower Hall, Exeter Hall, at 4 and 7 p.m.; speakers—the Revs. A. J. Cachemaille, M.A., Denis Hanau, D.D., Colonel Senior, Philo-Israel, and others. May 17th, Ailsa Schools, St. Margaret's, East Twickenham, at 8 p.m., the Rev. F. Aston.

THE BADGES.—These at present are not in our hands, but the moment they are received they will be announced by an advertisement in the BANNER.

We hope all our members in and near London will come up to our annual meetings, and will bring their friends with them.

FREDK. ASTON, General Secretary.

86 St. Martin's-lane London, W.C.

Correspondence.

BRIGHTON BEACH WORK.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—My best thanks are due to Mr. John Shootingham for his "shaft" on behalf of my work at Brighton. On December 21st, 1892, you kindly printed my report. The amount for tracts should have been £7 10s. instead of £7 15s., therefore the balance due to me was £3 13s. 8d. The following friends have kindly cleared the above amount, W. W. (Norwood), 21s., Lady Wyatt, 20s., Dr. Dyce Brown, 10s., Mrs. E. Reep, 5s., Mr. Merch, 5s., Mr. W. E. Bennett, 5s., Miss J. R. 2s. 6d., Mr. W. T. Wardle, 2s. 6d., Miss Barton, 1s. 8d., M.A., 1s. Total, £3 13s. 8d. Thus all is clear for 1892.

Now, dear sir, I am pleased to tell you and your readers that I have not been idle all the winter, and yesterday (April 9th), I opened my campaign upon the Beach with a very successful meeting. Some visitors who had never heard of the subject before, were rejoiced to hear the glorious news. I have been greatly cheered of late at the way in which the seed is germinating. Our labour will not be in vain. May I call the attention of BANNER readers to the fact, that I have very little literature and no funds. Will those who can help in this work kindly send me any help they can afford, as soon as possible. I am anxious to leave no stone unturned. All kinds of British-Israel literature, old and new, will be acceptable (kindly pay carriage), and will every faithful believer in this truth beseech Almighty God that this year's labour may be abundantly blessed for the sake of His Son, Jesus Christ.

Dear Sir, I remain yours faithfully,

H. A. MARCHANT.

60, Upper Lewes-road, Brighton.

ODD-FELLOWS HALL WORK.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR.—During 1891 and 1892 we held fourteen meeting at the Odd-Fellow's Hall, Brighton. We commenced this work as an experiment to see if the well-to-do believers were willing to join hands with the working-class believers, in trying to bring this subject to the front. With two or three exceptions, they gave us no support, although many circulars were sent out. Our best thanks are due to Mrs. Clayton Daubeney for her kind donation for rent, and as I could not take the whole and sole responsibility of this work as well as my Beach work, &c., I thought it best to bring it to a close and wait until others are moved to do something when I shall again be willing to help. Our meetings fluctuated between twenty and fifty.

The following is an account of the Income and Expenditure. I enrolled 55 members at 1s. each, making £2 15s., besides which Mrs. Clayton Daubeney gave £3 Major Newbery, 5s., Mrs. Lingard 5s., Mr. Hanaford 3s. 6d., Miss James, 2s. 6d., Mrs. Paley, 2s. 6d., Lady Wyatt, 2s., given at meetings, £1 0s. 8d., final collection 12s. 4d. Total. £8 8s. 6d.

Rent and fire, £3 10s. 6d., Brighton Examiner account for circulars, agendas and advertisements, £2 11s.; Handbook for hallkeeper 1s. 6d., Methodist Times with Mark Guy Pearce's article, 10s. 10d., BANNERS for Mark Guy Pearce's letter, 2s. 8d., rubber stamp, 3s., railway fare for Mr. Vince, 5s., stationery, 3s., postage of circulars, agendas, and Methodist Times, &c., £1 1s. Total, £8 8s. 6d.

You will greatly oblige by printing the above as I have no other means of sending out to each and every subscriber without going to further expense.

Dear Sir, I remain yours faithfully,

H. A. MARCHANT.

60, Upper Lewes-road, Brighton, April 1893.

THE Monthly Part for May is now ready. Price sixpence, of any Bookseller.

OUR friend's letter from Madeira, enclosing the Postal Order, has been received with thanks.—PHILO-ISRAEL.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed "PHILO-ISRAEL," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION for the BANNER OF ISRAEL, in Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts. To any country included in the Postal Union, including the following:—United Kingdom, Canada, America, Europe, New Zealand, Cape Colony, Victoria, Western Australia, Transvaal, Tasmania, South Australia, Queensland, Natal, New South Wales, India, Ceylon via Brindisi, 7s. per year, including postage.

All Post Office Orders, Cheques, &c., should be crossed "City Bank, Ludgate-hill, to the ac. of ROBERT BANKS AND SON." They will then only be paid to our account.

READING CASES for holding the Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts, may be had, price 2s. Sent post free on receipt of Postal Order.

THE ANNUAL VOLUMES, bound in handsome blue Cloth, price 8s.

THE MONTHLY PARTS, in tinted wrapper, published the last day of each month, 6d.

Englishmen should Circulate, at the Present Crisis,

NO ROME RULE.

AN IDENTITY LEAFLET.

UNION IS STRENGTH.

Price 1s. per 100 nett. 1,000 carriage paid to any address for 10s.

London: Robert Banks & Son Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

Special arrangements have been made for supplying at REDUCED PRICE, carriage paid to any address in the United Kingdom or the Colonies, copies of the Fifth and last Edition, published at 16s.,

FOR 11s. 6d.

PROFESSOR C. PIAZZI SMYTH'S

Well-known work,

OUR INHERITANCE

IN THE

GREAT PYRAMID,

with

TWENTY-FIVE EXPLANATORY PLATES,

showing the more crucial parts of this really Anti-Egyptian and most Primeval Structure, in Plan, Elevation, and Section.

As the number of copies to be offered at this reduced price is limited, early application should be made direct to Messrs. R. Banks and Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London.

Jehovah Triumphant. The New and Complete Theology and Electric Light of the Bible, containing the History of British-Israel, compiled from the Sacred Scriptures. A handsome crown 8vo., cloth bound volume of 550 pages, with Index of Scripture references. Price 5s. (published at 10s.), post free for P.O.

London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C

Mr. E. HINE'S PUBLICATIONS

Can be obtained of ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street London; or of ISAAC LOVELAND, Shoreham, Sevenoaks.

Lost Israel Found. One handsome Demy 8vo. vol., cloth, gilt edges. 3s. 6d., post 3s. 9d.

Forty-seven Identifications. 6d., post 7d.

Coming Glories. 6d., by post 7d.

Flashes of Light. 6d., by post 7d.

Oxford Wrong 4d., by post 7d.

Anglo-Saxon Riddle. 2d., by post 2½d.

The Nation Warned, &c. 6d., by post 7d.

About half a million copies of these works have been sold.

"A WONDERFUL REMEDY."
"I WAS GIVEN UP BY ALL."
"SAVED FROM AN EARLY GRAVE."

Such are the words of grateful Patients relative to their CASES OF

CONSUMPTION

CURED BY THE TREATMENT OF

MR. GEO. T. CONGREVE.

Read his Book, "ON CONSUMPTION, &c." which may be had post free for ONE SHILLING from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.; or may be ordered of any Bookseller.

NOTE.—CONSULTATIONS FREE at Coombe Lodge, Peckham, on TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings only. No Charge except the usual charge for three weeks or six weeks' supply of medicine. All Patients should read the book first.

NEW BADGES.

Gold Brooches, 6/3 and 4/-.
Scarf Pins, 4/9 and 3/9.
Pendants, large, 4/6; small, 2/9.
All Badges, Metal Gilt, 9d.

All Post Free. Applications, with Postal Order enclosed, to be sent to MRS. THOMPSON, 13, Pultney-st., Bath, or to MAJOR-GEN. CARLYLE BELL, St. Laurence Villa, Kingston-hill, Surrey.

NEW CATALOGUE of Works on Our Identity post free from R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN'S

IRISH

CAMBRIC HANDKERCHIEFS

ALL PURE FLAX. POST FREE.

Ladies' Hemmed—2/6, 3/3, 4/-, 4/11, 6/-, 7/2, 8/-, & 9/- per doz.

Gentlemen's Hemmed—4/-. 4/11, 5/9, 6/6, 7/5, 8/3 9/3. & 10/6 per doz.

Hemstiched Ladies and Gents (excellent value) 6/- & 7/11 per doz., various widths & hems.

A Sample of THREE of either price sent by return of post, on receipt of postal order.

Very pretty Fancy Boxes, suitable for Presents, 4½d. extra.

V. W. THOMSON,
27, Dunluce Street, BELFAST.

DR. ROOKE'S SOLAR ELIXIR AND ORIENTAL PILLS

DR. ROOKE'S SOLAR ELIXIR AND ORIENTAL PILLS effect marvellous cures. 50 years reputation. Sold everywhere. Pills in boxes 1/1½, 2/9, and 4/6 The Elixir in bottles 2/9. 4/6, and 11/-

Dr. ROOKE, SCARBOROUGH, ENGLAND.

TEETH.—£1 A FULL SET

ESKELL'S.—CELEBRATED MAKE, £2 2s. Warranted and fitted in one visit. No extractions needed. HALF A MILLION SETS already supplied. The Nursing Record and Hospital World says: We recommend all who require Reliable and Good Teeth at a small cost to go to Messrs. ESKELL, 445, Strand (facing Charing Cross Station), and 58, Ludgate Hill, City, London. Also at 27, Western Road, Brighton, and 23, Mount Pleasant, Tunbridge Wells. Hours 9 till 7. Apply for Illustrated Pamphlet free (mention this paper). Established 100 years.

"THE WORLD'S PROVED REMEDY FOR ALL CHEST DISEASES."

COUGH, ASTHMA,

CHRONIC BRONCHITIS,

INFLUENZA,

THERE IS NONE TO EQUAL IT.

Rev. F. E. HEAPE, of DERBY, in a recent letter, says: "Your Medicine always puts my lungs right, and drove out the terrible INFLUENZA last May."

This Medicine has been prepared for 65 years.

CONGREVE'S BALSAMIC ELIXIR.

In Bottles, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 22s., may be had of all Chemists and Medicine Vendors.

TEA! TEA! TEA!

FROM

INDIA, CEYLON, AND CHINA.

Best Quality and Best Value.

From 1/6 to 3/6 per lb. Samples Gratis.

Carriage Paid on Parcels of 6lbs. and upwards.

Robinson & James,

42, TRINITY SQUARE, TOWER HILL LONDON, E.C.

TOOTH-ACHE

CURED INSTANTLY BY

BUNTER'S NERVINE

Prevents Decay. Saves Extraction. Sleepless Nights Prevented.

Neuralgic Headaches and all Nerve Pains removed by BUNTER'S NERVINE. All Chemists, 1s. 1½d.

MASON'S KILLCORN

"AN EXCELLENT THING."

You need not suffer any longer from Corns, Warts or Bunions. "WONDERFUL KILLCORN" will cure you. This is what a certificate writes:—I have been nearly crippled with corns, but am now completely cured by your wonderful Killcorn.

1s PER BOTTLE.

Ask for MASON'S KILLCORN, and do not have any other. Sold by all Chemists. Patent Medicine Vendors, and at all stores or sent post free for 1s 1d stamps by the Proprietor W. B. MASON, 26 & 27, High Holborn, London, W.C., and 18, Guildford-street, Leeds.

THE WORLD'S CORN CURER

Digitized by Google

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The Geography of the Gates. With Map and six full-page, and one double-page, Illustrations, printed on plate paper. 208 pages, in handsome cloth, gilt. Second Edition, Price 2s. 6d.; post free for P.O.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific. 58 pages. Price 4d.; by post 4½d.

Are the English People the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel? An Inquiry Establishing the Identity of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 4d.; by post 4½d.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d.; by post 4½d. Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters."

Historical, Ethnic, and Philological Arguments in Proof of the British Identity with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel, Clearly and Simply Stated. Price 2d.; by post 2½d.

The History of the House of Israel: How They were Lost, and How They were Found. Told for the Children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fifth Edition.

Our Identity: What it is Not; What it is; and Our Obligations To-day in Respect to it. Price 2d.; a reduction for quantities.

Philo-Israel's Leaflets. 4 pages, crown 8vo. Price 1s. 6d. per 100, postage 2d. Assorted packets, 1s. 8d. 19 different subjects.

The British Constitution. Followed by "A NECESSARY CONSEQUENCE," by L. P. Price 3d., post free 3½d.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument, Proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100, postage 6d.

Anglo-Israelism. True, Not False. Being Philo-Israel's Reply to the Rev. Canon Bell's Pamphlet, "Anglo-Israelism: True or False?" Price 1d.; 6s. 6d. per 100. 16 pages, crown 8vo.

Egypt's Place in the Bible. By PHILO-ISRAEL. A Paper read before the Clerical and Lay Association at Bristol and Clifton. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100.

London: R. BANKS & SON Racquet-court, E.C.

Where are the Ten Tribes? By William Greig, of Montreal, Canada. With Introduction by Philo-Israel. Published at 6d.; offered at 3d.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

PAGE WOODCOCK'S
WIND PILLS

It is astonishing how many people imagine they suffer from

HEART DISEASE

They experience a depressing feeling about the region of the heart, accompanied by an occasional stab of pain, nervous debility, loss of appetite and general depression. The fact is they suffer from

INDIGESTION, OR DYSPEPSIA.

The food, instead of being thoroughly digested, develops into Wind, and flies about the valves of the heart, causing the symptoms named. All who suffer in this way should at once take

Page Woodcock's Wind Pills,

A world-renowned remedy for all Stomach disorders.

All Sufferers from INDIGESTION, LIVER COMPLAINTS, WIND on the STOMACH, COSTIVENESS, SICK HEADACHE, HEARTBURN, NERVOUS DEBILITY, PALPITATION of the HEART, BILIOUSNESS, &c.,

should avail themselves of this most excellent medicine.

Of all Medicine Vendors, at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d., or Post Free for P.O. or Stamps, from PAGE WOODCOCK, Lincoln.

THE BRITISH-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

THE ANNUAL MEETING, 1893,

(Members only) for the Election of Officers and other Business,

Will (D.V.) be held at

THE ROOMS, 86, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON, W.C.,

On TUESDAY, MAY 16th, AT TWO P.M.

PUBLIC MEETINGS

Will be held on the SAME DAY, in the

LOWER HALL, EXETER HALL,

At 4 p.m., when ADDRESSES will be given by Rev. DENIS HANAN, D.D., Rev. J. J. CACHEMAILLE, M.A., and others; and

At 7 p.m., when Rev. DENIS HANAN, D.D.; Rev. J. J. CACHEMAILLE, M.A.; Colonel SENIOR, R.A.; and others, will address the Meeting.

The Chair will be taken at 4 p.m. by E. W. BIRD, Esq. (PHILO-ISRAEL), and at 7 p.m. by D. A. ONSLOW, Esq., J.P. Supported by Rev. J. BRITTON, M.A.; Rev. FREDK. ASTON (General Secretary); Admiral BEDINGFELD; Dr. H. ALDER-SMITH; H. H. PAIN, Esq.; and other well-known Friends of the Cause.

MASON'S EXTRACT OF HERBS FOR MAKING NON-INTOXICATING BEER

WE ALL REQUIRE SOMETHING TO DRINK

The finest, most refreshing and pleasantest beverage obtainable. One table-spoonful of this Extract makes one gallon of splendid Beer. Try it. A sample bottle, enough to make eight gallons, post free for 9 stamps.

NEWBALL & MASON, NOTTINGHAM.

AGENTS WANTED.

MASON'S WINE ESSENCES, non-intoxicating. For children's parties and social gatherings. A 6d. bottle will make one gall. of delicious wine. Post free 9 stamps, or a bottle of both Extract of Herbs and Wine Essence post free 15 stamps.

Price 1s. per 100, Assorted Packets 1s. 2d. 8s. 6d. per 1,000 Well printed on toned paper.

Thoughts for the British Folk.

Suggested by Philo-Israel.

No. 1.—Multitudinousness.
No. 2.—The Gates.
No. 3.—The Nation and Company of Nations.
No. 4.—British Wealth.
No. 5.—The Rulers Over Many Nations.
No. 6.—The Universal Creditor.
No. 7.—The Ever-Continuing British Monarchy.
No. 8.—The Scattered People at Home in Every Climate.
No. 9.—The Queen, Lords, and Commons.
No. 10.—The Unconquerable Nation.
No. 11.—The Fatally Destructive Race.
No. 12.—The Isolated Nation.
No. 13.—The Nation Which Belts the Earth.
No. 14.—The Emancipators of the Slave.
No. 15.—The Christian Nation.
No. 16.—The Ten Commandments.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

The True and Divine Appointment for the Cure of Disease.

Send to

B. V. SCOTT, M.B.M.R.S.,

College of Health, 121, Kensington, Liverpool, for his

VOICE OF NATURE TO THE INVALID.

Post free 5 stamps.

Thousands of incurables (so-called) have proved God's own means could save when others failed.

Rev. F. Harper says of Mr. Scott's book: "It is a library in itself, and free from quackery."

Rev. Lush says: "Mr. Scott's treatment is natural, safe, reasonable, and Scriptural."

Send for the Book at once.

A PRESENT.

SEND us your address, mentioning this paper, and we will make you a present of the best guide to health yet published. It is only a little book, but it is of great value to all who are ill or indisposed.—GORDON, MURRAY, & Co., LIMITED, 10, Adam Street, Strand, W.C.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument Proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100, postage 1d.

R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

HARNESS'
"ELECTROPATHIC" BELTS

MANUFACTURED BY

THE MEDICAL BATTERY CO., Ltd.,

FOR HEALTH AND STRENGTH

have been in use for many years, and have proved an inestimable blessing to suffering humanity in all parts of the world. They are guaranteed to generate mild continuous currents which convey no shock to the system. Call and avail yourself of a free personal consultation at the Company's Institute,

52 OXFORD ST., LONDON, W.

(corner of Rathbone Place), which is the largest electro-medical establishment in the world.

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co. (Ltd.) 23, Paternoster-row. Wednesday MAY 3, 1893.

All Rights Reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India)

"And the Remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver." — MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORN with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS OF THE EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XVII., No. 854. Entered at Stationer's Hall.] WEDNESDAY, MAY 10, 1893 [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

PAGE
"Who Giveth Thee Power to Get Wealth" 229
Is the Identity Favourable to the Cause of Missions to the Heathen? 230
The Lost Sheep of the House of Israel. By Robert Adcock 231
The Projected Haifa-Damascus Railway 233
The Behistun Cunieform Inscription. By James Rankin 234
The "Banner" on the Home Rule Bill 234
The Newton Stone. By P. C. 235
Gleanings. By J. Thomson 236
Random Shafts. By John Shootingham 237
Correspondence 238

"WHO GIVETH THEE POWER TO GET WEALTH."

ONE of the most remarkable indentifications of our nation as Israel is the fact that in whatever region of the earth we are established, and wherever God has given us empire or enlargement, there is sure to spring up before long some wonderful source of wealth which was never before suspected, and which God has reserved for discovery by our own race. Such were the gold mines of Victoria, the gold mines of South Africa, the diamond mines of the same region, and the fine steam coal which is spread abroad throughout the Canadian Dominion, New Zealand, parts of Australia, South Africa, and India, but was never suspected to be hidden under the soil in these regions, till they fell to our nation to discover, use, and grow rich by, through an apparent accident in each case.

The Scotsman, on August 8, last, drew attention to the fact that the conquest of Upper Burmah had enabled us to discover that the tea-plant grows and flourishes in that land with marked facility. The increase of the plant being assured, and its quality leaving nothing to be desired, our merchants have, while meeting a present loss, to look forward to a time when the sale of Burmese tea will be a source of wealth which will literally be without limit. The writer in the Scotsman reported as follows:—

By the conquest of Upper Burmah a new tea country of vast extent has been added to our Indian Empire. In the Northern or Bhamo division alone the forest officials report that the original tea plant flourishes in every Kachin village, and is cultivated for its produce. The whole of the lower ranges of hills between Bhamo and Shwegu, and even the upper defiles, are pronounced suitable for the culture. But the difficulty of a supply of labour is likely to be great. The Kachins are not likely, any more than the indigenous people of Assam, to work as coolies for Europeans. Apart from their villages this inviting land is uninhabited. The authorities accordingly recommend that the culture of both tea and coffee be first tried along the banks of the Irrawadi river, where both crops are likely to thrive. In time, undoubtedly, the tea of Burmah will take its place with that of India proper and Ceylon in the markets of the world. Meanwhile there is an opportunity for small capitalists to obtain land and attract labour from the other side of the Bay of Bengal. Those first in the field will make the fortunes of the future, as has been the case in Cachar and the Valley of the Brahmapootra. I learn that Mr. Blechynden's visit to Simla, in the interests of the Tea Association of Bengal, has resulted in a Government grant of 40,000 rupees to the Chicago Tea Fund, to which the India planters have liberally subscribed. The sum of 10,000 rupees also has been granted for the Indian Fine Arts Section of the World's Exhibition of 1893. Ceylon promises to keep its place at least in the rivalry. Its tea shipments for the past five months show an increase of a million lbs. over those of the same period in 1891, and its export for the whole year is estimated at eighty millions of lbs. of tea.

It appears, then, that in Burmah, Upper as well as Lower, there are no exceptions to the rule, as it applies to Israel. "The Lord thy God giveth thee power to get wealth, that He may establish His covenant which He sware unto thy fathers as it is this day" (Deut. viii. 18). He gave us Upper Burmah, and many thought that the gift, forced upon us by the mis-government of the cruel and misguided King Theebaw, was likely to end in a heavy pecuniary loss to the paramount power in India. But God has given us, because we are Israel, His people, "the power to get wealth," even in Upper Burmah! He has enabled us to put down there the awful crime of Dacoity by persistent effort, as well as by force of arms; and He has given us the power to cover the land with roads and railroads, which are still in progress. Ours, too, is the ability to discover the fitness of the soil of Upper Burmah for tea and coffee cultivation, and the result will surely be a vast increase of national wealth by reason of the trade in two of the commodities which have become almost the necessaries of life.

We wonder how it comes to pass that our clergy take no notice of these great facts which are happening before their eyes, on a scale, too, which certainly ought to attract their notice. Their time is not altogether occupied in their parishes, and ministerial duties, however vital and important these may be! But, we suppose that, seeing and noting these changes which are tending to the greatness and prosperity of our race, the clergy are unwilling to see and acknowledge that God can fulfil prophecy literally in the 19th century, and in respect to our very own nation. In regard to the Lord Jesus Christ, of course, as those matters occurred over 1892 years ago, it is very right we should look for literal accomplishments in His case. The Jews, too, are under a curse for putting Him to death, and it is reasonable and proper that the prophecies against them should meet with literal fulfilments. But when we come to the blessings promised to Israel, the whole aspect of matters is changed. "Prophecy cannot concern a people that have disappeared from history, and about whom nobody knows anything? We must give these predictions, therefore, to people and institutions we can see; and who can be more deserving of such blessings as the Bible gives to Israel, than the Christians of the Church of England"!

Digitized by Google

This is pretty much the train of reasoning by which our clerical friends quietly appropriate all Israel's blessings, as God bestowed them on that people, His chosen ones, and leave Judah to suffer their own maledictions and curses, because they see them literally enduring them! Not that the Church of England, or any other Church anywhere, possesses or enjoys Israel's blessings, which are of a particularly earthly, material character. The difficulty is overcome by giving to these same blessings a spiritual meaning, and thus the whole awkwardness vanishes. The Church of England is, in their eyes, regarded as "a great and mighty" (spiritual) "nation;" it has God's marked blessing; its members are "multitudinous," and will be more so in the Millennium! It possesses the spiritual "Gate" (?) "of its" (spiritual) "enemies." It is so rich in spiritual gifts that it lends of those spiritual gifts to many nations (but not to "all nations"), according to the promise! It is so powerful a body, that it "reigns" over many nations (like the Church of Rome we suppose?), but no one "reigns or rules" over it! In that Church all the nations, families, and kindreds of the earth are, or are to be, blessed! It is so great in spiritual excellencies that it has become "the heir of the world," like "Abraham and his seed for ever;" it has the reversion of Palestine as a heritage; and in alliance with unconverted Jews, it has yet "to return" there with them, contrary to the whole tenor of God's promises to our forefather, confirmed by the Divine oath! Our opponent's objections include all these and many more similar absurdities; but they hold to them with firm grasp, resolved never to listen to our too earthly views, but to hold to their own so-called spiritual interpretations in whatever follies they land them. Meanwhile God remains faithful, and by every argument is silently showing them (His blind ones), that they are wrong, and that all they want is to "see." That that time may soon arrive we most ardently desire, and meanwhile we call upon our friends, to whom God has given some measure of sight, to praise Him for His grace!

WE are sure all British-Israelites will rejoice with the Royal Family at the betrothal of H.R.H. the Duke of York to the Princess Victoria May of Teck, and earnestly desire that all happiness and prosperity may rest upon them.

IS THE IDENTITY FAVOURABLE TO THE CAUSE OF MISSIONS TO THE HEATHEN?

DURING the proceedings of the anniversary of the Church Missionary Society, at Clifton and Bristol, in March last, we had an interesting conversation with a clergyman on the subject of Our Identity, as a nation, with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel. The friend with whom we spoke was an incumbent of one of the evangelical churches of the place. Among other matters discussed, the question was seriously put to us whether we considered that foreign missions were favoured by our views? and, if they helped us to feel kindly towards missionary operations among the heathen? The reply we gave, was one, which we hope all those who read the BANNER, and think with us, would have offered without a moment's hesitation. "Our Identity, and what it involves is (we said) the very backbone of foreign missions!"

Such missions exist because of Our Identity, and our own race being Israel are engaged in conducting them among all nations, families, and kindreds of the earth, because God gave Israel this very function to perform, and placed upon us as His people the solemn obligation to carry out His purposes in respect thereto. To Abraham He promised on oath, because He had obeyed His voice, that in his seed all the nations of the earth should be blessed (Gen. xxii. 17, 18). This promise was repeated to Isaac in Gen. xxvi. 4, to Jacob in Gen. xxviii. 14, and Isaiah in later ages proclaimed in chap. xxvii. 6, R.V., that "in the days to come" (after the prophet's time) "Jacob should take root, and Israel should blossom and bud, and they should fill the face of the world with fruit." Our blessed Lord, when He was upon the earth, declared in correspondence with preceding prophecy that a portion of the seed of Abraham, being the treacherous House of Judah, should be deprived of the kingdom of God, and all that it included, and that that kingdom should be given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof."

Read in the light of God's sworn promises, above described, that "nation" could only be the House of Ephraim-Israel, which is proved by many lines of independent testimony to be the British people. God "showeth His words unto Jacob, His statutes and His judgments unto Israel, He hath not dealt so with any nation. And as for His judgments they have not known them" (Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20, R.V.). But He instructs and endows Israel (the British folk) thus, in order that they may pass on the blessing so received to others, throughout the world. They thus "show forth God's praise." He "made, formed, and created" Israel for that end (Isa. xliii. 1—7). "This people," He declared in Isa. xliii. 21, "have I formed for Myself; they shall show forth My praise!" (or as in the R.V., "that they might set forth My praise!").

Moreover, it must be noted that God has no other authorised agent besides Israel to carry out His work among "all the nations." The converted Hindus of Tinnevelly, or the Christians of the Punjab may, and do go to the neighbouring heathen in Ceylon, or the North-west provinces respectively, but they never dream of going to distant countries to convert the heathen of China or Japan, of South Africa, Europe, or America! That object the British Anglo-Saxon race sets before itself, and is doing its utmost to carry out fully. If, then, Israel's existence as a people is necessary to enable the missionary work of the world to proceed, and God deigns to employ that one agency only for the purpose of reaching the whole of the nations and families of the earth with the good news, it stands to reason that the cause of missions must be dear to the heart of all British-Israelites, because this people constitute God's sole machinery to carry out the work Christ came to fulfil upon the earth. "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have eternal life" (John iii. 16). The "whosoever" embraces the inhabitants of the globe, and to reach them God has, as we have seen, named and endowed His only messengers. These are Israelites, men not of the House of Judah, who are disqualified by unbelief; but Ephraim-Israel, the sons of the living God, therefore the Christian nation (Hosea i. 10; John i. 12), ready and willing to go forth to preach to all nations, and actually doing so at the present moment, exclusively among the nations. To make them fit for this, the sole object of their existence, God has given them vast numbers (conferring empire), wealth, a safe and secure home, the empire of the sea (such being the product of the gift of the Gates), the heathen and Colonial Empires par excellence, of the earth, the Sabbath, the Bible, the Gospel, and the love of souls. These gifts are needful to qualify the British for their world-wide missionary enterprize, and we accordingly, being Israel, possess them all, while He has not so dealt with any nation, and no nation can do, or is doing, our work, as the evangelists of the whole earth, including all nations, all families, and all kindreds of it.

Digitized by Google

As some proof that God is using our race and prospering us in our missionary efforts throughout the world let the following facts speak:—

A heathen, and a native of the Punjab, says, "The leprosy of Christianity is spreading everywhere."

In 1890 it was reported by the Rev. T. R. Wade, that the number of Christians in Amritsar and its out stations is four times what it was seven years ago. The native Christians have more than doubled in the past year.

In the church at Aneityum, in the New Hebrides, is the following tablet to John Geddie, a Presbyterian Missionary from Nova Scotia:—"When he landed here in 1848 there were no Christians, and when he left here in 1872 there were no heathen."

The London Missionary Society began its work in Madagascar in 1821, but was shortly afterwards driven out, and was excluded for twenty-five years. Most of the stations were founded later than 1860. There are now 204,000 native adherents in the island.

Samoa and the adjoining islands, which were entirely cannibal at the time when Queen Victoria came to the throne, contain 24,000 Christians.

Fiji was just as savage as Samoa. Many who were once cannibals are still living. In 1887, out of 110,000 pure-bred Fijians on the islands, 102,000 were in the habit of attending Wesleyan places of worship.

Tierra del Fuego is inhabited by a race so low in the scale of humanity that Charles Darwin, the naturalist, who visited them when voyaging with H.M.S. Beagle, pronounced it impossible to civilize them. The South American Missionary Society, following in the steps of the devoted Captain Allen Gardiner, has been so blessed in its efforts among these cannibals and thieves of the lowest mental and moral type, that many of them have become humane and honest men and true Christians. Mr. Darwin, whose religious views are well known, was so struck by the change that he became a regular subscriber to the funds of the Society, and declared, "I certainly should have predicted that not all the missionaries in the world could have done what has been done."

The above is a good report, but it merely touches the fringe of a grand subject which would require many volumes to open out, so as to do justice to the glorious narrative. To the Lord be all the praise!

THE LOST SHEEP OF THE HOUSE OF ISRAEL.

By Robert Adcock.

We beg to welcome a new writer in the ranks of our supporters. Mr. Robert Adcock, of Norwich, has issued, through S. W. Partridge & Co., 9, Paternoster-row, a small booklet, at two-pence a copy, giving a very fair and interesting account of his view of the texts which furnish him with the title to his pamphlet—namely, Matt. xv. 24, x. 6: "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the House of Israel." "Go rather to the lost sheep of the House of Israel." We are not prepared, of course, to endorse all Mr. Adcock's views, but on the whole he very nearly agrees with the teachings of the Banner.

In regard to the distinction between the Houses of Israel and Judah he is quite with us. He traces the history of Israel as we do to Samaria, and thence with the Assyrian Captivity. He adds that after that Israel never returned to its own land, but must be sought elsewhere. The Old Testament Scriptures furnish him with his authorities up to this point, and then turning to the New, he notices by way of illustrating how the House of Israel, the lost sheep are mentioned repeatedly, the frequent allusions to the exiled tribes made by our blessed Lord. Thus,— "Speaking to the woman who entreated Him, on behalf of her daughter, He answered and said, 'I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the House of Israel' (Matt. xv. 24); and in sending forth His twelve apostles, Jesus said, 'Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into the city of the Samaritans enter ye not, but go rather to the lost sheep of the House of Israel' (Matt. x. 5, 6). We observe, too, that the outcasts of Israel were not forgotten by their brethren the Jews, for when our Lord said to the Pharisees, 'Ye shall seek Me and shall not find Me, and where I am, thither ye cannot come. Then said the Jews among themselves, Whither will He go that we shall not find Him? will He go unto the dispersed among the Gentiles?' (John vii. 34, 35). Again, it is evident that the unkingdomed condition (bear with the coined word) of their brethren of Israel was not overlooked or misunderstood by the disciples, for 'When they therefore were come together, they asked of Him saying, Lord wilt Thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?' (Acts i. 6). They knew full well from the book of the prophet Hosea, that Israel was to be without a king many days, and that in the latter days their king and kingdom was to be restored to them (Hosea iii. 4, 5). They were not, however, to be informed then as to the times and seasons which the Father hath put in His own power."

Our author gives some salutary warning to those who would make their Identity with Israel their title to heaven, and begs them to remember that identification with Israel does not bring an individual into "the kingdom of God;" for "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God" (John iii. 3). "The kingdom of God is," he observes, "the coming glory!" In saying this, however, Mr. Adcock does not seem to realize that Israel of the Scriptures will finally be a nation of converted ones, "sons of the living God" (Hosea i. 10), people who are God's people, and He their God, in whose minds and hearts the laws of God will be written by God Himself, who will all know Him from the least of them to the greatest of them, and whose sins and iniquities God Himself will remember no more. Such a nation will constitute the kingdom of God upon earth, and that kingdom so honoured is to be the glory (Jer. xxxi. 33, 34; Heb. viii. 10—12). While at present it is needful to bear in mind that the British do not as a nation respond to this prediction, it is right to recollect that these things are ours by promise because we are Israel, and that the Christian believers' privilege and blessings are one day to be ours nationally because we are Israel. The second and third parts of the pamphlet are of much interest to us, and by Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.'s permission, we reprint them almost verbatim:—

Digitized by Google

"Having thus shown from the Scripture of Truth the division into two sections of God's earthly people, and traced the course of Judah and Israel up to the commencement of the present dispensation, let us proceed to notice some of the features, which in these last days were to distinguish the two Houses.

"Of Judah (or the Jews) it is unnecessary to say much, as there is no difference of opinion concerning them; they are scattered and driven amongst all nations, and have been a bye-word, a reproach, and a hissing for ages; that they are becoming less and less so, must be a matter for thankfulness, and in it the enlightened mind sees proof that the time is approaching for their restoration and reinstation in God's favour and grace.

"But the House of Israel, where are they? and under what conditions and circumstances are we to expect to find them? surely not under curse, but blessing, and in such surroundings as shall mark them out, and very plainly distinguish them from all the nations upon the face of the earth. Certain earthly blessings were promised to Abraham's seed; let us consider a few of them. First, as to numbers, in Hosea i. 10 we have a recitation of God's promise given to Abraham, quoted at the beginning of this pamphlet: 'Yet the number of the children of Israel shall be as the sand of the sea, which cannot be measured nor numbered.' Where and when? in Palestine during the Millennium? No, for then there will be no room for doubt or question as to identity, the righteous nation, having been purified by fire, shall stand out before all the world as pre-eminently the favoured nation, and in immediate sequence to this Divine reiteration we find this most remarkable statement, 'And it shall come to pass, that in the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not My people, there it shall be said unto them, Ye are the sons of the living God.' Again God said to Abraham, 'Thy seed shall possess the Gate of his enemies.' What does this mean but that at some period in their history Abraham's seed was to be so strong in dominion, as not only themselves to occupy an impregnable position, but to command also their enemies' strongholds? The gate of a city is the entrance to it, and there is no doubt that the word gate used here means a position of strength, a place of prominence. We shall be able more fully to illustrate our meaning further on but surely this promise of the possession of the Gate of their enemies cannot have its fulfilment in the Millennium. There will be no wars and fightings then, nation will not rise against nation then, but it will be a time of universal peace: no soldiers, no learning the art of war, no Woolwich infants or French mitrailleuse, but swords beaten into ploughshares and spears made into pruning hooks.

"Again, God's promise to Jacob, when his name was changed to Israel, runs thus, 'I am God Almighty: be fruitful and multiply; a nation and a company of nations shall be of thee, and kings shall come out of thy loins' (Gen. xxxv. 11). 'A nation and a company of nations.' We ask close attention to the passage and withhold further comment for the present. Moreover, the seed of Abraham was never to cease from being a nation, and this condition must be fulfilled by Israel in these last days. Judah having long ceased to be a nation with laws and a government (although miraculously preserved in scattering). In Jer. xxxi. 35, 36, we read, 'Thus saith the Lord, which giveth the sun for a light by day, and the ordinances of the moon and of the stars for a light by night, which divideth the sea when the waves thereof roar; the Lord of hosts is His name: If those ordinances depart from before Me, saith the Lord, then the seed of Israel also shall cease from being a nation before Me for ever.' And there was to be a time in Israel's national history when the land of their destruction (or exile) should be too narrow for them, and the children they should have after they have lost the other (viz., after the era of one great exodus from amongst them) should say again, 'The place is too strait for me, give place to me that I may dwell' (Isa. xlix. 19, 20).

* * * * * *

"We desire now, in conclusion, briefly to summarise the points in which one nation, and only one in the whole world, fulfils the conditions that were to distinguish redeemed Israel. Indeed this is so obvious, that we are not anxious to have demonstrated proof of identity outside the pages of Holy Writ. We admit it would be most difficult, if not impossible, to trace the wanderings of our ancestors with absolute certainty; but with the mass of evidence derivable from Scripture, we believe it will, in God's good time, be made plain, that the English nation is 'redeemed Israel,' long lost to men's sight, but, by Him who is as wonderful in counsel as He is mighty in power, gathered and blessed, and kept to be hereafter witnesses to the inspiration of the 'God-breathed' Word. In the matter of population no nation can compare with the English people, who as they increase (as God has said Abraham's seed should do) also spread abroad, and thus fulfil another prophecy, by pushing or crowding out to the very ends of the earth the aborigines of the countries into which their restless and energetic enterprise introduces them, in the accomplishment of their declared mission and destiny.

"Then as to the Gate of their enemies, what country in the world, save England, possesses the numerous coignes of vantage or strategic positions as the following, the possession of which and their value as strongholds for defensive or offensive operations can be easily established, indeed is self-evident to the most cursory observer:—Guernsey and Jersey, Gibraltar, Malta, Cyprus, Suez Canal, Perim, Aden, Peshawur, Bombay, Calcutta, Madras, Rangoon, Singapore, Malacca, Penang, Hong Kong, Sarawak, Labuan? These are some of the principal but by no means the whole of the Gates held by the all-victorious British nation, whose arms have always been found ultimately conquering against all odds, and whose history has thus far fulfilled the promise given to those against whom no weapon by whomsoever forged was to prosper. To Israel, when under blessing, was to belong the exclusive privilege of lending to all and borrowing of none, and that this has long been the case with our country is a most indubitable fact, and also that colonization is and has been our peculiar mission, accomplished too in such a way as not only to cause the waste places of the earth to be inhabited, but also to meet another requirement for indentification with Abraham's seed, for we have in the most literal sense become 'a company of nations' (Gen. xxxv. 11). Be it remembered that to Canada, Australia, New Zealand, &c., &c., must be added the United States of America, so long ruled by our sovereigns, and now and ever in close relationship with us by reason of language and unmistakable consanguinity. We have alluded to the practice which was to be adopted by Israel during their exile from Palestine of laying 'the carcases of their kings in their high places,' such practice not having Divine sanction. Could a more literal fulfilment of this prophecy be imagined than that which is found in our time-honoured form and place of sepulture for our monarchs and great men? Do we not—even in these days of non intra mural interment—still place the bodies of the 'illustrious dead' in Westminster Abbey, St. Paul's Cathedral, or St. George's Chapel, Windsor? And that this custom is held in abhorrence by the Jews is evinced by the fact that on the occasion of the public thanksgiving for the restoration to health of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, in 1872, the Chief Rabbi excused himself from participation in it because his religion forbade him to enter a building whose roof covered the remains of the dead.

Digitized by Google

"We now close, having but touched the fringe of the subject, and trust we have said enough to warn all against confusing 'Identity' with salvation, or 'Israel' with 'the Church.' May the blessing of Israel's God, and the presence of the Church's Head, through the eternal Spirit, be vouchsafed to all who desire to know God's own truth concerning

"THE LOST SHEEP OF THE HOUSE OF ISRAEL."

THE PROJECTED HAIFA-DAMASCUS RAILWAY.

THE Financial News of January 7, last, published a ravishing account of the country through which the projected Haifa-Damascus Railway is to pass, with some notice of the "far-famed Hauran." The friend who forwards it remarks that, "surely Israel should send some of her teeming multitudes to cultivate these wonderful lands. But," he adds, "I expect we shall, with the 'Jacob' spirit, wait the completion of the railway, and then step in and monopolize the chief portion as the elder brother; until 'Judah and his fellows' return to their own land aided and accompanied by their companions the Tribes of Israel, which is 'all the House of Israel' of Ezekiel's prohecy." However that may be, the following is sufficiently interesting to justify us in quoting it for the information of our readers:—

"THE PALESTINE OF TO-DAY.—A TRIP THROUGH THE COUNTRY OF THE PROJECTED HAIFA-DAMASCUS RAILWAY.

(From a Correspondent.)

"A writer on Palestine—we forget for the moment who it was—once said, 'If I ever meet a man again who says Palestine is barren I'll lick him.' The writer has just concluded a trip through that portion of the country which embraces the far-famed Hauran, and those are sentiments which he cordially endorses. Agricultural Palestine is at the present time as rich and as fertile as it ever was; but two conditions are lacking: efficient cultivation and a means of transport. So far as the first condition is concerned, the traveller through Syria becomes painfully aware of the too-crude methods of the Syrian farmer. He scratches over the soil with the rudest of rude apologies for a plough, and scatters the seed broadcast in the picturesque style with which our school-books have made us familiar. No better proof could be adduced of the fertility of the soil than that, with his rude implements, his slipshod methods, and his extreme contempt for any manner of fertilizing mediums, the native farmer can, if he will, obtain from two to four crops every year. Most of the grain he thus obtains finds its way to Italy and France, to be there transformed into compounds for the manufacture of which our English-grown grain is not sufficiently rich.

"But the native farmer is handicapped by reason of the great cost he must incur in the carriage of his product to the seaboard. Up to the present a slow and laborious system of camel-trains has served, and according as to whether his farm is more or less remote from the sea he has had to surrender a larger or smaller portion of his profit to the grain-carriers. In many cases he pays two-thirds of his product for the carriage of the other third to the coast, and, averaged generally, it will probably be found that the cost of carriage is about equal to half the value of the grain carried. It naturally follows, therefore, that the agricultural development of one of the most fertile spots on earth has been seriously retarded, and it is not a matter for surprise that the commencement of active work on the Syria Ottoman Railway should have been hailed with gladness, not only in the immediate vicinity of the line, but throughout the whole of the Ottoman Empire. We have already referred to the project, and need do no more than remind our readers that the railway, when completed, will connect Damascus with the ports of Akka and Haifa, passing through lands that have been famed for their productiveness almost since the beginning of time.

"At various times in recent years concessions have been granted for the construction of similar lines; but they have either been dropped, or, when proceeded with, found to be impracticable. The Jaffa-Jerusalem Tramway is, of course, an accomplished fact; but it is a comparatively small undertaking, and partakes of the character of a pleasure line for the convenience of the Cook tourist bent on seeing the historical rather than the commercial portions of Palestine. At no time has the question been tackled in a thoroughly practical manner until Mr. Pilling and his friends came forward, and now we are within measurable distance of the completion of a railway that cannot fail in the course of a very short time to induce emigration to the development of this very wealthy country. Active work was begun on the line a month ago, when some 15,000 or 16,000 persons assisted at an inauguration ceremony the like of which has never been witnessed in Syria in modern times. Representatives not only of His Majesty the Sultan, but of nearly all the other reigning monarchs, were present, and the greatest enthusiasm was displayed. In some cases, gentlemen holding high official positions in the country accomplished a six days' journey to be present, so great is the interest taken in the undertaking.

"As we have indicated, we have since spent eight days in a close inspection of the country through which the line will pass, and whilst we candidly confess that we expected to find a barren, stony desert, devoid of vegetation and animal life, we were agreeably surprised to discover that Palestine has been much maligned by the British tourist and the compilers of guide books. As each day's journey brought us nearer to the centre of the Hauran we were amazed at the prospect before us. Miles and miles of the richest soil in the world met our view, and this in a country where the climate is all that could possibly be desired from a grain-producing point of view, and ever and anon we met strings of camels moving slowly seawards, several thousand of whom could only carry a trainful of grain, whilst occupying five or six times longer in the journey. If the British tourist would for once forsake the beaten track, and leave stony Jerusalem and barren Nazareth, for the delightful country which has only recently been brought under notice, he would not only desire to 'lick' all who say Palestine is barren, but he would—if he were wise—try to obtain an interest in a railway which is to serve that promising land. To the investor the project offers such an opportunity as is seldom met with, and there can be little doubt that whilst there will be an immediate return for money invested, in the course of a year or two, when settlers have come in, and when the land has been intelligently farmed and developed to its utmost extent, the profits will be enormous. We shall again refer to the subject at greater length, and, in the meantime, wish Mr. Pilling and his friends all the success they deserve."

Digitized by Google

THE BEHISTUN CUNIEFORM INSCRIPTION.

By James Rankin.

The following is a tentative decipherment, through the Arabic, of the Cunieform text contained in the second column of the large inscription on the Rock of Behistun. A facsimile of the text is shown in a book published by Count A. De Gobineau, when he was first secretary to the French Embassy in Persia. The alphabet employed in this decipherment is founded on the values of the Palmyrene numerals, and was published in the Banner of Israel, in the June numbers of 1892. It is evident that the inscription was made by order of Queen Esther and Mordecai; and also evident, from the writing on the dress of one of the figures, that the picture on the Rock of Behistun merely represents the execution of Haman and his ten sons. The text is divided by De Gobineau into 37 sections, the following is a translation of the first five sections only:—

TRANSLATION.

"Great Babylon is taken captive and broken up, for proceeding jointly in violent agitation with the king of the level country in insurrection. Balar-Sharah (Daniel?) divided the inhabitants who disturbed the possessions of the Kebroi (Hebrews) in Great Babylon. The conquerors plundered Babylon, and became possessors of great wealth. Asharesar, of glorious ancestry, took the palace, visible from all parts of the city, excelling everything in Babylon, and overthrew it with that great city.

"Mordecai caused Danan, dwelling adjoining the Kimbiroi-Kibiroi, (to give) assistance.

"Great palace of Eckbatana (to) provinces contiguous to enclosed ocean (Euxine) announcing the proclamation of Queen Esther, who demonstrated and made evident the cruelty of Haman to the absolute King Darius, and the calamity (threatening) the inoffensive Kimiroi-Kibiroi (Hebrews) directs this rigorous proclamation prohibiting the judgment passed on them. In all peoples' speech the regulation is published, seeing they are ignorant, and have forgotten the small mode of writing, and are divided among the inhabitants of the kingdom.

"And said Mordecai, Dani dwelling by the Euxine Sea and adjoining Media Babylonia prevent violence, succour from trouble a divided people, a people forgetting their beginning, ignorant of the learning of the ancients extending to their condition long ago.

"As above related, the proclamation beginning at Babylon protecting and punishing, overthrowing the affliction, and accusations made in order to impoverish the beautiful Sacai was prevented by Allah from total calamity, the six parts (tribes?) were brought to absolute poverty by the voracious Haman, the tyrannical collector of taxes, who, like Babylon, its institutions and oppression, is in mercy closed for ever."

THE "BANNER" ON THE HOME RULE BILL.

Some of our friends have taken it very ill that the Banner should intrude into matters political, and pass judgment unfavourably in regard to Mr. Gladstone's proposed Home Rule Bill. Our leading article in No. 846, of March 15th last, is the one to which our attention is drawn, and we have been informed that animadversion in this Journal in respect to the Prime Minister's proceedings is likely to be offensive to those who think highly of him, and of his politics. In consequence of this, that particular number cannot, it seems, be circulated among many who otherwise might read the Banner. For the sake of such, we are requested to desist from publishing such articles again, since they are offensive to the Gladstonian Israelites. In reply to these strictures, we cannot see what could justify our silence, when a terrible peril threatens our nation, and men are so blind as not to be able to see the dangers underlying the Home Rule Bill. The burden is laid on us as the lovers of Israel, to warn those whom we can and may influence, to resist these proposals which the vast majority of our influential fellow countrymen know to be perilous to our nation's future well-being. We cannot be silent, when outspoken warning may help to deter an able, but mistaken statesman, in his rash endeavour to effect a revolution in our national condition which is opposed to the promises of God. In the article which we allude to, it is shown that the prophecies are opposed to the division of the United Kingdom in the manner which the Home Rule Bill plainly contemplates. If there are those who are enamoured of this Bill, because it is the production of one they greatly admire and love, it is advisable that with judgment and discretion such persons should, if possible, be warned of the dangerous character of their proceedings. If they can be brought to pause and reflect, the Prime Minister's projects may receive a death-blow, and his precarious majority vanish even before the next General Election, which seems close at hand. So important does this seem to be to some of us, that we observe on page 176 of the Banner of April 5th, Miss Rush, the Hon. Secretary of the Anglo-Israel Free Distribution Fund, wishes for special contributions to distribute that very number of the Banner, that as large a number of Anglo-Israelites and others may read the remarks which appear in the article objected to by friends at Colchester. We have always protested against the idea that the Banner is a colourless paper, free from all party bias. It is so in one sense, but in another it is not, and cannot be unmindful of the purposes of party and political views. For instance, Mr. Gladstone's policy goes in for the separation of the legislative union between the two Islands, and would, whatever he may profess, destroy the existing unity between the English and Irish peoples. The plain result of his operations in and out of Parliament in regard to Ulster will be civil war between the Protestant North and the Roman Catholic South and West. We cannot in the face of such prospects, which if realised would cut Our Identity down by the roots, consent to remain impassive spectators of what would be contrary to God's Word, His promises, and covenants, made and provided with and for His people in His Holy Book. To be silent would be faithlessness to Him whose cause we serve, and be the consequences what they may, we must on such questions be allowed to speak our mind. The Home Rule Bill, whichever way we regard it, is opposed to Scriptural views regarding the oneness and safety of Israel in the Isles. It would certainly lead to civil war, as before stated, in Ireland, a result which cannot be reconciled with

Digitized by Google

2 Sam. vii. 10. It would lead to the separation of Ireland from Great Britain, which would separate those whom God has made one, and means to keep united. It would lead to the impoverishment of Ireland and ruin to her industries, and this would be opposed to those promises which declare that Israel (who largely occupy the sister Isle) shall possess "the power to get wealth," and the ability "to lend to many nations," but never to borrow from such (Deut. viii. 18; xv. 6; and xxviii. 1—14). It would force the North of Ireland to defend their rights, and this would be to develop a state of things contrary to Isa. xxvi. 12, where God promised to Israel that "He would ordain peace" for them. We regard the Home Rule projects of Mr. Gladstone as distinctly within the four corners of the subject regarding which we have been busy for the last 17 or 18 years, and we cannot, because some will not bear to have their beloved statesman blamed, refrain from raising our protest, however humble it may be, against his proceedings in this respect. We have the fullest confidence, this nation, being Israel, that the Home Rule or Rome Rule Bill of the present Premier will be cast out by the nation, sooner or later, after the will of God respecting his legislative action, has been fully accomplished. It is true that the mistaken action of the present Government may lead to the eventual good of the nation, and that God rules all events. But when we see what is manifestly evil approaching, and that our earnest, prayerful, faithful, efforts may avert that evil, we do right to fight manfully against it, with whatever influence we possess, trusting to God to accept our efforts, and our prayers, and bring about the end desired.

THE NEWTON STONE.

By P. C.

In the centre of Aberdeenshire, in the district of the Garioch, in the poultry-yard of Newton House, stand two of the most remarkable of the "sculptured stones of Scotland." One of them is incised with emblems without any inscription, the other with two inscriptions without any emblem. They are natural boulders of quartzose gneiss, unhewn, and very hard, so that all the engravings, though over 2,000 years old, are well defined. In both stones the incision is scooped, not chiselled. The emblems on one have been recognised by Dr. Geo. Moore, in his "Ancient Pillar Stones of Scotland," as Buddhistic, similar to symbols he had seen in North-western India. And the characters on the other have been confidently pronounced by him to be akin to the letters of the copious ancient rock inscriptions, with which he was familiar in the same region; and, particularly in one instance, to be identical with symbols on ancient oriental coins, especially Bactrian. This second stone, which has the inscriptions, is known as "The Newton Stone," and is the subject of our notice. One of its legends consists of six transverse lines across the face of the stone which has taxed the ingenuity of antiquarians, and up to the present day defied interpretation, unless Dr. G. Moore has himself succeeded in deciphering it. The light of British-Israelism supplements his opinion, and it is strange how narrowly he missed our conclusion, to which his whole treatise bears blind but marvellous testimony.

This venerable stone, with its legends 2,000 years old, stands now in the midst of our land a pillar of witness to the truth of our doctrine. And, although the chief legend is in a character even now considered inexplicable, because so many antiquarians have tried their hands at its solution and have singularly failed; the second legend on it is in the Ogham alphabet, which, occurring in 250 examples in Ireland, 14 in Scotland, besides some others in Wales, Cornwall, and Brittany, and being regularly classed by Dr. Graves, is now fairly legible, and promises to afford the key to unlock the mystery. It should be premised, however, that Dr. Mill, the greatest Orientalist of his day pronounced the character of the more difficult inscription to be Phœnician; and several experts have assigned to it a Pâli, Lât, or Sanscrit origin. Bearing that in mind, we may, without further prelude, introduce our readers to Dr. Geo. Moore, whose authority and opinion we adopt in this article. His own account of his first acquaintance with the Newton Stone is as follows:—

"I was struck with the general resemblance of the characters to those I had seen on certain coins known as Bactrian and also to those of the so-called Arian and Pâli rock records of North-western India, and recognised as Buddhistic. I immediately read one word, evidently in the Pâli, Lât, or ancient Sanscrit character, and saw that it was associated with a symbolic monogram often seen with old Buddhistic inscriptions on rocks and coins, and which I had never found in any other connexion, except on certain antiquities in Denmark."

"Having this clue, I was naturally induced to look more closely into the matter; and being familiar with the various forms of the ancient Arian and kindred alphabets, the inscription began to lose its confused appearance to my eye, and resolved itself into readable characters and distinct words." Following out his unravelment, letter by letter and word by word, his treatise occupies nearly 50 pages of his book, and offers a solution which, to say the least, is intelligible. Dr. Moore transliterates the Pâli into Hebrew letters, and thus translates the six lines of the first legend:—

"In the tomb
With the dead (is) Aittie—
The light of the darkness of a perverted people,
Who shall be consecrated Pure Priest
To God? Like the vessel of prayer
My glory covered me."

The designation "Pure Priest" is the rendering of the letter, or rather symbol, alluded to—namely, the Poonah or Swastika afterwards known in Denmark as Thor's Hammer, and introduced into heraldry as the Fylfot. This sign is the index most dwelt upon in the whole legend, as found wherever Buddhism prevailed, eastward to China and westward to Scandinavia, and Dr. Moore says from that symbol alone, compared with its frequent occurrence on pre-Christian rock inscriptions in the East, he felt sure the authors of the mystery on the Newton Stone were Buddhists. We adopt that conclusion on the one hand. Then, on the other hand, how came the Ogham inscriptions on the same stone? Dr. Moore, with the aid of Dr. Graves' Irish Ogham Alphabet, works out each letter—transliterates it into Hebrew, and then reads the whole legend in these words: "When Baal ruled Jutland and the coast before thee Jatti was smitten" (p 67, "Pillar Stones"). The Earl of Southesk, another interpreter, also makes out the name Jaddi—the same virtually as Dr. Moore's—whilst otherwise widely apart. Enough, however, results from these divergent readers in the fact that both read the same name, and that name is identical with the Aittie of the Pâli inscription. The inference is surely warrantable, that both the Ogham and Sanscrit legends record in a Hebrew dialect the death and sepulchre of Aittie—Poonah or Priest, and probably also warrior.

Digitized by Google

Thereupon the question naturally arises, whence and how came Hebrew, Buddhism, and Baalism, all three, to meet together in Aberdeenshire? Without enlisting into our argument any of our own copious British-Israelite literature, we may support Dr. Moore by such men as Freeman, Rawlinson, Du Chaillu, and Father Smiddy, none believers and two at least of them opponents of our doctrine, as solvers of the enigma! For centuries before the Christian era, there were two regular routes from Asia to the extreme west of the known world. One was a regular overland route from Central Asia (if not from China also) to Scandinavia.

Our "Oxonian" has lucidly traced the Ten Tribes along this route in Israel's wanderings; but so before him did Herodotus, Sharon Turner, and others track, wholly or in part, the Scythians, Saxons, and other nomads. Du Chaillu will escort them to Britain and the Hebrides, in his "Viking Age." By this route would come first the Kimmerii (Cymry), followed by some of the Danai, and afterwards Sakai, who were best known eastward of Media in Persia and there identified with the Scythians. Dr. Moore proves that the Sakai were early converts to Buddhism, which spread and widened like rings on water, until it covered the whole range of the Northern nations, including all the vast territory which still owns its sway. Buddha's family name was Sakia-muni, and probably he was himself one of the race. Under the Greek Empire, extending from Thrace to the Indus, the communication between Bactria and Europe was constant. Coins of Philip of Macedon have been found at Cairnbulg in Aberdeenshire. And Dr. Moore shews that the Buddhist priests, wherever they went, carried their doctrines with them. It is clear from the rock-inscriptions of North-western India, of which Dr. Moore has translated and published many pages in another book ("The Saxons of the East and West"), that the Sakai followers of Buddha were a Hebrew-speaking people. Freeman on Sicily, Rawlinson on Phœnicia, Father Smiddy on the Druids; all confirm the fact that Celtic, Arian, and Phœnician were analogous with Hebrew. Dr. Whitely Stokes affirms that the ancient Picts also spoke a Celtic language; and authority could be produced to any extent to show that the intercourse between the East and West by the overland route is amply sufficient to account for the admixture of Hebrew and Buddhism on the Newton Stone.

Now let us turn to the Southern and more ancient route, as far as history illustrates it; for, of pre-historic migration overland we are ignorant. This southern route was maritime, and was the highway of Phœnician traffic between Syria and the "Isles of the West," before the reign of Solomon. The proof is abundant that the Phœnicians traded regularly with Cornwall and Ireland; spoke Hebrew; and carried their worship of Baal with them. Father Smiddy traces graphically, in the religious rites of the Druids, an amalgamation of Hebrew and Phœnician customs, in which human sacrifices, and other savage atrocities, strangely mingled with monotheism, artistic skill, and civilisation. Joint-traders with the Phœnicians were their neighbours the Danites; besides being adventurers in their own fleets. They are generally admitted to be the Tuatha du Dannan who conquered Ireland. The Druids were their learned priests, the inventors of the Ogham alphabet by which they taught their illiterate Canaanitish servants, and the older occupants of the land. The Danites, more than once, took to their ships; and by sea escaped the exile which the Assyrian Conquest entailed on their brethren. In the time of Ezekiel Dan and Javan were occupied in the fairs of Tyre; and no race or people spread their fame and their name more widely throughout Europe than this Tribe of Dan. From their friendship and intimacy with the Tyrians, they formed no exception to the other tribes in adopting the loathsome idolatry for which the whole Ten-tribed nation suffered divorce and exile during 1,000 years; and their Beltane fires survive to this day in Cornwall, Ireland, and Scotland. Everywhere, we may say, they have left their foot-prints. History, henceforth, becomes explicit. The Scots of Ireland crossed over and settled in Argyleshire, and rapidly spread inland, until they met a kindred race from the Eastern coast: and they also carried their Baalism with them as well as their Ogham alphabet. Thus, when Scot met Pict, Baalism met Buddhism, Ogham met Sanscrit, and Hebrew met Hebrew; and the Newton Stone stands in the land as it were still a living witness of the conflict, and a mirror of the truth of our doctrine of British-Israelism.

Edinburgh, March, 1893.

GLEANINGS.

By J. Thomson.

23.—CARLYLE ON THE ORIGIN OF THE BRITISH PEOPLE.

"Of the other Gods or Jötuns" (of the Norsemen) "I will mention, only for etymology's sake, that Sea-tempest is the Jötun Aegir, a very dangerous Jötun; and now to this day, on our river Trent, the Nottingham bargemen, when the river is in a certain flooded state (a kind of backwater or eddying swirl it has, very dangerous to them) call it 'Eager.' They cry out, 'Have a care; there is the eager coming!' Curious; that word surviving like the peak of a submerged world! The oldest Nottingham bargemen had believed in the God Aegir. Indeed, our English blood, too, in good part is Danish-Norse; or, rather, at bottom, Danish, and Norse, and Saxon have no distinction except a superficial one, as of Heathen and Christian, or the like. But all over our island we are mingled largely with Danes proper, from the incessant invasions there were; and this, of course, in a greater proportion along the east coast; and greatest of all, as I find, in the North Country. From the Humber upwards, all over Scotland, the speech of the common people is still in a singular degree Icelandic, its Germanism has still a peculiar Norse tinge. They, too, are 'Normans,'—Northmen—if that be any great beauty!"—Thomas Carlyle, in "Lectures on Heroes" (1840), Lect. I., p. 198. London: Chapman & Hall, 193, Piccadilly.

24.—WAS JOSEPH A JEW?

It is surprising how careless even good Biblical students sometimes are in the use of the word "Jew." We occasionally hear that Abraham was a "Jew," and that the wanderers in the wilderness were "Jews"; now we are told by the Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A., in the Christian, of Sept. 8, 1892, p. 10, col 2, that Joseph was a Jew by birth! This is in direct contradiction to the designation given to Joseph by Potiphar's wife (Gen. xxxix. 14—17), and the chief butler (Gen. xli. 12), who both term him correctly an "Hebrew," and he himself said "he was stolen away out of the land of the Hebrews" (Gen. xl. 15). Besides, we have no evidence that the word Jew was ever used or invented for a thousand years after the time of Joseph (see 2 Kings xviii. 28, comp. marg. dates); nor can we understand how any careful reader of Scripture should designate Joseph "a Jew by birth." Throughout the Bible the term "Jew" is applied to the descendants of Judah, or members of the kingdom of Judah as distinguished from the kingdom of Israel; and it is equally evident that the term itself is simply an abbreviation of the name "Judah."

Readers of the BANNER will please note that the Annual Meeting of the Metropolitan Association is to be held on the 16th. Full particulars are given in advt.

Digitized by Google

RANDOM SHAFTS.

SOME societies have exceptional facilities for preserving the errors of the day, and the Sunday School Union is of that number, it having the privilege of influencing the youthful mind of the country. A Sunday School Union is a Sunday-school union, but the Old Bailey institution is a publishing firm into the bargain, and supplies thousands of teachers with what they have to say. Unfortunately, although its doctrine is unimpeachable, it is not very particular about its history. Those who compile the "explanatory notes" given in its magazines are no doubt estimable people, but they have a weakness for retailing the traditions of men collected by modern commentators, instead of going to the fountain head, and studying the Bible on their own account. The same may be said of all the writers who discourse on these Sunday-school lessons in the numerous weekly denominational or undenominational journals. Nearly the whole of them appear to sip their knowledge at one source, and that source is certainly not the Scriptures. Hence, whenever the "International Lessons" arrive at the Ten Tribes, or have to make a few passing remarks upon them, an epidemic of ignorance breaks out in a particular column of the religious press.

***

A month or so ago the mission of Nehemiah had to be dealt with, and, as usual, from right and left there came a perfect avalanche of figments concerning Israel. The most laughable thing about these figments is that they are put forward with the calmest assurance, as if they were undisputed and indisputable facts. It has been contended that Sunday-school teachers should go through an examination previous to undertaking their responsible duties, and, if a really biblical examination be meant, the idea is capital; but it is quite as necessary that those who fabricate the "explanatory notes" should submit to a similar drilling. I have read bushels of "helps," "suggestions," and "hints," and cannot help suggesting, or at least hinting, that it would be better if the authors refreshed their acquaintance with the Word of God before venturing to enlighten others. Regarding the expeditions from Babylonia, one of them states "the first company was made up of representatives from the tribes of Israel as well as from Judah. The return was regarded as the return of the whole nation, and the distinction between Israel and Judah does not again appear"; while a second propounds that "the people went into captivity as Judah and Israel; when they regained their freedom after 70 years, they returned as a whole nation, no more to know the former distinctions."

***

Without asking the Sunday School Union authorities to explain all the texts which prove that Ephraim-Israel did not join with the Jews—a task they would be unable to complete in three-score years and ten—they might be petitioned to clear up a single verse in this very book of Nehemiah: "And the residue of Israel, of the priests, and Levites, were in all the cities of Judah, every one in his inheritance" (Neh. xi. 20). It will be noticed that they settled "every one in his inheritance." But the Ephraim-Israelites had no inheritance in Judah, and if the restored Hebrews recovered their ancient estates, an ordinary intellect would conclude that they must have been Judahites, pure and unmingled. "The distinction between Israel and Judah does not again appear." It does not appear in Judea for the obvious reason that Israel was not there. But the distinction between Israel and Judah remains just what it was. Fifty years after the Jews went back, Zechariah announced as future events, "I will strengthen the House of Judah, and I will save the House of Joseph, and I will bring them again to place them" (Zech. x. 6). And those familiar with the Prophets are well aware that the two nations "appear" in their separate capacities even on the eve of the final restoration.

***

The harm inflicted on religion by the use of spiritualizing methods has often been forcibly referred to. For the sake of gratifying their various theological fancies, Christians do what seemeth good in their sight with the Bible, and are simply playing into the hands of the enemy, whoever that enemy may be. Dr. Ryle is candid enough to declare that those who interpret prophecy in this fantastic style "will find it no easy matter to carry on an argument with an unconverted Jew"; and it is still more sure that they cannot carry on an argument with the rationalist, who turns Scripture history into allegory. The spiritualizer has, therefore, a heavy price to pay for his whim. The price is indeed becoming ruinous; yet he continues in his "mad career." And what is the object of it all? In plain language the wish is to Gentilize the Bible; to hide its essentially Hebrew complexion; to eliminate the Israelitish element; and present it to the world as a Book of no nationality. But this cannot be done except by filling it with incongruities and contradictions. It is impossible to expel Israel from either the Old Testament or the New, and the men who attempt it only lay themselves open to the charge of dishonesty, and bring discredit on the faith.

***

This receives further confirmation in view of a sermon by the Rev. Hugh Prices Hughes, on "The solidarity of Man"; re-produced in a late issue of The Methodist Times. In it, the cosmopolitan character of Christianity is emphasized, and the cosmopolitan character of Christ is asserted thus: "He came of the Jewish stock, yet He had no trace of the Jew in Him." We could, perhaps, smile at such folly if it was not utilized for malicious ends. I observe that an infidel paper remarks upon it as follows: "Of course not—in Christian sermons and Christian pictures, preached and painted for non-Jewish and Jew-hating nations. But there is a very decided 'trace of the Jew in Him' in the New Testament. To the Canaanite woman He said, 'I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the House of Israel.' To the twelve, He said, 'Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not: but go rather to the lost sheep of the House of Israel.'"

***

The atheistic print has quoted two passages, and it might have given a hundred. Mr. Hughes notwithstanding, the Saviour was a Jewish patriot; He "came to His own," confined His ministry to them, subjected Himself to their law, took part in their worship, expressed their emotions (as in Matt. xv. 26), and wept over Jerusalem. No heart but that of a Jew could have uttered the words of Matt. xxiii. 37. Undoubtedly His sympathy embraced the universe, but was He less of a Jew for that? It may as well be said that John Howard had no trace of a Briton in him because he wandered the earth to alleviate misery, and died on foreign soil. Christ was both a Jew and a man, and His Hebraism no more conflicts with His catholicity, than His Divinity conflicts with His humanity. But the Bible, and everything in it, must be Gentilized, and so—the Lion of the Tribe of Judah, the Redeemer of Israel, the King of the Jews, had no trace of the Jew in Him! The atheist calls Mr. Hughes an "accomplished perverter of the truth," which is strong; and the pity is that the rev. gentleman should have invited the reproach.

Digitized by Google

JOHN SHOOTINGHAM.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—In accordance with the wish of our friends, I now inform you of our last meeting, on the 17th March, at Mr. Barton's residence in Stoke Newington.

Mr. A. R. Granville read an excellent paper, entitled, "The Kingdom on Earth, its Origin, Growth, and Destiny." He argued that it began at the creation, and that it was soon disturbed by man's disobedience, which caused the sentence to be pronounced: "I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed." He showed that restitution was to be brought about by a militant and a beneficent seed, which God decreed should spring from the union of Abraham and Sarah. The blessings were to be introduced by conflict and subjugation. The militant seed was to be recognised as God's kingdom on earth by the terrestrial blessing of being a multitudinous seed, of which God said, "I am the Lord thy God;" and the beneficent seed was evidenced by the celestial blessing of redemption through Christ. The lecturer here gave, for the benefit of strangers, a brief sketch of the history of Israel and Judah. He contended that the kingdom was taken, at the destruction of Jerusalem, from the Jews, as Christ predicted; and that it was given to the other nation of Abraham's seed, which it was prophesied should bring forth the fruits thereof when redeemed by Christ, viz.: Ephraim-Israel, and under which generic title the prophets addressed the Ten-tribed House of Israel. The pre-eminent blessings of Ephraim, inherited from his grandfather Jacob, through his father Joseph, were to be realised in the latter days, and are set forth in Genesis xlviii. 14—20, and xlix. 22—26.

Israel had been taken into captivity some 700 years (B.C.) by the Assyrians because of their idolatry. Growing in numbers they escaped from their successive foes the Medo-Persians, Greeks, and Romans, and after congregating in North-west Europe they were being gradually gathered into these islands when our Lord came. They had been expatriated, and were therefore a Gentile nation, ignorant even of their own origin, and lost to the ken of the world as a race. But Christ said that He came specially to seek and to save them, and indeed the prophet had foretold that "backsliding Israel hath justified herself more than her treacherous sister Judah." The lecturer directed his hearers to Romans xi., where St. Paul says, that if the world is vitalized by the temporary fall of Israel, how much richer will it be when Israel, provoked to jealousy, recognises its responsibilities to itself and to mankind, and resumes its headship. To say that Israel is irrecoverably lost is to deny that Christ was able to accomplish His special mission.

Mr. Granville asserted that this nation alone answers to all the particular characteristics by which it was prophesied lost Israel should be recognised in the latter or last days; and that it was at the Reformation we commenced to inherit the blessings predicted in the last chapter of Hosea. We were to be a great empire, scattered all over the world, with a company of daughter nations. Our 343 millions are not massed in one place like the Russians or the Chinese. Our dominion was prophesied 4000 years ago to commence with the cry in these islands "the place is too straight (or narrow) for me." The Anglo-Saxon race is admittedly self-reliant, resourceful, and capable of ruling other races, whereas the foreigner generally fails in colonization.

We were destined to be separate from the peoples, who in their turn call us insular. We alone adopt free trade; and, as foreigners in their antagonism exclude our goods by hostile tariffs, we are forced to extend our territory in order to seek fresh markets. The Anglo-Saxon race is evidently enriching the Gentile world by its marvellous voluntary missionary enterprise; and this blessing to mankind accompanies all our colonizing efforts. Many great professors at home and abroad foresee an Anglo-Saxon future for the world, our language predominant as well as our beneficent institutions.

The lecturer concluded by stating his belief that Anti-Christ would be a real man and of great power, whose machinations, specially directed against Israel, would come to a head when we had escorted our kinsmen the Jews back to the land of Palestine, then under British domination. It was prophesied that Israel would be greatly troubled by this foe, but that God would fight for His people in their extremity. and then rule with direct authority (Ezekiel xxxix.).

At the conclusion of Mr. Granville's most interesting paper, of which the foregoing are mere hurried notes taken down at the time, questions were invited. One of these was, as to whether it was seriously contended that if the kingdom was taken from the Jews at the destruction of Jerusalem, it was not transferred to this nation until 1500 years after, viz., at the Reformation. In the discussion which ensued the Rev. I. Jones stated what was the evident belief of the majority present—namely, that the taking away and the transfer occurred at one and the same time. Mr. Jones referred to an important Welsh triad in which it is stated that Bram the Blessed, the father of Prince Caractacus, was converted by St. Paul at Rome, and that he brought away with him three Israelitish Christians to teach the British, which was the very earliest record of a king accepting Christianity.

The meeting closed with a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Granville, and to the chairman, Mr. Barton.

Mrs. Sutton having kindly offered her drawing room in Tufnell-park for the next meeting, I consented to read a paper upon the "National Prayer Book's Testimony to our Israelitish Descent." Yours faithfully,

H. L. BROWETT.

2, Cambridge Villas, New Southgate, March 25, 1893.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

SIR,—I should be glad if you would find space for a few remarks upon a subject which other readers of your valuable paper may have felt to be a necessity—viz., the advisability of writers of articles for the BANNER giving the authority from which they quote. It certainly would enhance the value of their argument if supported by a reference to or quotation from some reliable authority, and all the better if the reference should be from a disinterested source. This I felt would have been especially applicable to a portion of that very able article on page 183-5 of the BANNER, by Lieut.-Col. W. H. Larkins, where he says: "Benjamin, with the whole Hebrew converts, left Jerusalem about a year or so previous to the destruction of the city by the Romans (A.D. 70)." This statement may be true, but its value is lost as an argument when unsupported by something more definite than conclusions drawn from Jer. vi. 12, &c. Readers of the BANNER OF ISRAEL, we may look upon as earnest, unpaid missionaries, who read to obtain information and reasons to support them in advocating this great truth.

I have no desire that this should be regarded as an unfriendly criticism, but rather the expression of a want I have often felt myself, and I have no doubt many others have felt the same thing. Let us, then, have statements as bold as you please, but support them with reasons. One thing that makes H. I. Buckle's works so valuable is the fact that he gives so fully the sources from which he draws his conclusions and statements.

E. L.

Liverpool, April 18th, 1893.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed "PHILO-ISRAEL," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION for the BANNER OF ISRAEL, in Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts. To any country included in the Postal Union, including the following:—United Kingdom, Canada, America, Europe, New Zealand, Cape Colony, Victoria, Western Australia, Transvaal, Tasmania, South Australia, Queensland, Natal, New South Wales, India, Ceylon via Brindisi, 7s. per year, including postage.

All Post Office Orders, Cheques, &c., should be crossed "City Bank, Ludgate-hill, to the ac. of ROBERT BANKS AND SON." They will then only be paid to our account.

READING CASES for holding the Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts, may be had, price 2s. Sent post free on receipt of Postal Order.

THE ANNUAL VOLUMES, bound in handsome blue Cloth, price 8s.

THE MONTHLY PARTS, in tinted wrapper, published the last day of each month, 6d.

Englishmen should Circulate, at the Present Crisis,

NO ROME RULE.

AN IDENTITY LEAFLET.

UNION IS STRENGTH.

Price 1s. per 100 nett. 1,000 carriage paid to any address for 10s.

London: Robert Banks & Son Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

BRITISH-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION BADGE.

In Electro, upon German Silver Foundation.

Pendants 1/1. Brooches 1/10. Post Free.

Applications with P.O., should be sent to Mr. Lowe, British-Israel Association, 86, St. Martin's-lane, London, W.C.

Cloth boards. Second Edition.

ISRAEL: A THESIS.

By the Rev. DENIS HANAN, D.D.

Price 1s. 6d.; sent post free to any address on receipt of Postal Order.

London: ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, or by order of any bookseller.

Price 6d. Monthly. Annual Subscription 7s.

THE MESSENGER.

Edited by "OXONIAN."

Each number contains papers by the EDITOR, and other well-known writers, a SERMON by Dr. WILD, Notes and Queries, &c

Now Ready, price 5s., post free, 5s. 4d., Illustrated by MAPS,

RUSSIA JAPHET;

OR, THE MUSCOVITE, THE COSSACK, AND THE MONGOL.

Being a detailed Identification of the principal peoples subject to the Czar. By "OXONIAN."

London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C.

"A WONDERFUL REMEDY."
"I WAS GIVEN UP BY ALL."
"SAVED FROM AN EARLY GRAVE."

Such are the words of grateful Patients relative to their CASES OF

CONSUMPTION

CURED BY THE TREATMENT OF

MR. GEO. T. CONGREVE.

Read his Book, "ON CONSUMPTION, &c." which may be had post free for ONE SHILLING from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.; or may be ordered of any Bookseller.

NOTE.—CONSULTATIONS FREE at Coombe Lodge, Peckham, on TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings only. No Charge except the usual charge for three weeks or six weeks' supply of medicine. All Patients should read the book first.

ISRAEL NEW BADGES.

Gold Brooches, 6/3 and 4/-.
Scarf Pins, 4/9 and 3/9.
Pendants, large, 4/6; small, 2/9.
All Badges, Metal Gilt, 9d.

All Post Free. Applications, with Postal Order enclosed, to be sent to MRS. THOMPSON, 13, Pultney-st., Bath, or to MAJOR-GEN. CARLYLE BELL, St. Laurence Villa, Kingston-hill, Surrey.

NEW CATALOGUE of Works on Our Identity post free from R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN'S

IRISH

CAMBRIC HANDKERCHIEFS

ALL PURE FLAX. POST FREE.

Ladies' Hemmed—2/6, 3/3, 4/-, 4/11, 6/-, 7/2, 8/-, & 9/- per doz.

Gentlemen's Hemmed—4/-. 4/11, 5/9, 6/6, 7/5, 8/3. 9/3, & 10/6 per doz.

Hemstiched Ladies and Gents (excellent value) 6/- & 7/11 per doz., various widths & hems.

A Sample of THREE of either price sent by return of post, on receipt of postal order.

Very pretty Fancy Boxes, suitable for Presents, 4½d. extra.

V. W. THOMSON,
27. Dunluce Street, BELFAST.

DR. ROOKE'S SOLAR ELIXIR AND ORIENTAL PILLS

DR. ROOKE'S SOLAR ELIXIR AND ORIENTAL PILLS effect marvellous cures. 50 years reputation. Sold everywhere. Pills in boxes 1/1½, 2/9, and 4/6. The Elixir in bottles 2/9, 4/6, and 11/-

Dr. ROOKE, SCARBOROUGH, ENGLAND.

TEETH.—£1 A FULL SET

ESKELL'S.—CELEBRATED MAKE, £2 2s. Warranted and fitted in one visit. No extractions needed. HALF A MILLION SETS already supplied. The Nursing Record and Hospital World says: We recommend all who require Reliable and Good Teeth at a small cost to go to Messrs. ESKELL, 445, Strand (facing Charing Cross Station), and 58, Ludgate Hill, City, London. Also at 27, Western Road, Brighton, and 23, Mount Pleasant, Tunbridge Wells. Hours 9 till 7. Apply for Illustrated Pamphlet free (mention this paper). Established 100 years.

"THE WORLD'S PROVED REMEDY FOR ALL CHEST DISEASES."

COUGH, ASTHMA,

CHRONIC BRONCHITIS,

INFLUENZA,

THERE IS NONE TO EQUAL IT.

Rev. F. E. HEAPE, of DERBY, in a recent letter, says: "Your Medicine always puts my lungs right, and drove out the terrible INFLUENZA last May."

This Medicine has been prepared for 65 years.

CONGREVE'S BALSAMIC ELIXIR.

In Bottles, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 22s., may be had of all Chemists and Medicine Vendors.

TEA! TEA! TEA!

FROM

INDIA, CEYLON, AND CHINA.

Best Quality and Best Value.

From 1/6 to 3/6 per lb. Samples Gratis.

Carriage Paid on Parcels of 6lbs. and upwards.

Robinson & James,

42, TRINITY SQUARE, TOWER HILL LONDON, E.C.

TOOTH-ACHE

CURED INSTANTLY BY

BUNTER'S NERVINE

Prevents Decay, Saves Extraction, Sleepless Nights Prevented.

Neuralgic Headaches and all Nerve Pains removed by BUNTER'S NERVINE. All Chemists, 1s. 1½d.

FREEMAN'S ORIGINAL CHLORODYNE.

THIS valuable medicine, discovered and invented by Mr. RICHARD FREEMAN in 1844, introduced into India and Egypt in 1850, and subsequently all over the world, maintains its supremacy as a special and specific Remedy for the Treatment and Cure of Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Cancer, Bronchitis, Asthma, Ague, Sore Throat, Influenza, Neuralgia, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Asiatic Cholera, Colic, Gout, and all Fevers.

At 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 20s. per bottle.

Sold by Patent Medicine Dealers in all parts of the world.

N.B.—Lord Chancellor Selborne, Lord Justice James, and Lord Justice Mellish, decided in favour of FREEMAN'S ORIGINAL CHLORODYNE, and against Brown and Davenport, compelling them to pay all costs in the suit.—See Times of July 24, 1873.

Digitized by Google

PAGE WOODCOCK'S
WIND PILLS

A CLERGYMAN

Writes: "I am so convinced from my own experience and that of others of the real value of your WIND PILLS, in complaints arising from a disordered state of the STOMACH, BOWELS, or LIVER, that I wish much to promote the use of the Medicine in this parish, and I now inclose P.O. for a large box, and should be glad of some papers for circulation among my parishioners. In my own case

Page Woodcock's Wind Pills

have been of the greatest use. I have no objection to your publishing my communication, provided you divulge not my name and address, which you may give, nevertheless, to those who require such a verification."—Vicarage, near Malvern.

All Sufferers from INDIGESTION, LIVER COMPLAINTS, WIND on the STOMACH, COSTIVENESS, SICK HEADACHE, HEARTBURN, PALPITATION of the HEART, BILIOUSNESS, &c., should avail themselves of this most excellent medicine.

☞ The WIND PILLS being PURELY VEGETABLE, TASTELESS, and MILD and TONIC in their action, may be taken with perfect safety by the most delicate of either sex.

Of all Chemists, at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d., or Post Free for P.O. or Stamps, from PAGE WOODCOCK, LINCOLN.

Now ready, 220 Large Post 8vo. pages, in clear, readable type, price 2s. 6d., limp cloth, gilt lettered, red edges, post free to any part of the world on receipt of postal remittance.

Nineteen Centuries Ago and NOW.

BY J. C. H. MEHL.

WITH BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH,

BY E. M. RUSH.

CONTENTS.—Biographical Sketch—Nineteen Centuries Ago and Now—Letter to the Editor of the Banner of Israel—A German's Views on Our Identity—The Church of England—The Woman Arrayed with the Sun (Rev. xii.)—"Remember the Sabbath Day to Keep It Holy" "Blessed are the Meek, for They Shall Inherit the Earth" The Spirit of Negation, and the Spirit of Prayer—"Righteousness Exalteth a Nation"—"The Dispersion Among the Greeks"—The Protracted Era of Grace—"The Power of the Holy People"—The Present Aspect of the Kingdom of Heaven—One, and Yet Many—A Great Truth Slow in its Progress—A Two-fold Alienation—On Co-operating with the Divine Purpose—A Lamp Shining in a Dark Place (2 Pet. i. 19)—Was St. Patrick an Israelite, and Was He Aware of It?

London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C

APPREHENSIVE NERVOUSNESS,
Debility, Rheumatism, Gout, Sciatica, Torpid Liver, Kidney Disorders, and every form of weakness may be speedily cured by wearing HARNESS' "ELECTROPATHIC" BELT.

It generates a mild continuous current of Electricity.

Produces no Shock or Discomfort whatever.

Testimonials, Pamphlet, and Advice free, personally or by letter. Write at once to the MEDICAL BATTERY CO., Ltd.,
52 OXFORD ST. LONDON, W.
(Corner of Rathbone Place.)

THE BRITISH-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

THE ANNUAL MEETING, 1893,

(Members only) for the Election of Officers and other Business,

Will (D.V.) be held at

THE ROOMS, 86, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON, W.C.,

On TUESDAY, MAY 16th, AT TWO P.M.

PUBLIC MEETINGS

Will be held on the SAME DAY, in the

LOWER HALL, EXETER HALL,

At 4 p.m., when ADDRESSES will be given by Rev. DENIS HANAN, D.D., Rev. J. J. CACHEMAILLE, M.A., and others; and

At 7 p.m., when Rev. DENIS HANAN, D.D.; Rev. J. J. CACHEMAILLE, M.A.; Colonel SENIOR, R.A.; and others, will address the Meeting.

The Chair will be taken at 4 p.m. by E. W. BIRD, Esq. (PHILO-ISRAEL), and at 7 p.m. by D. A. ONSLOW, Esq., J.P. Supported by Rev. J. BRITTON, M.A.; Rev. FREDK. ASTON (General Secretary); Admiral BEDINGFELD; Dr. H. ALDER-SMITH; H. H. PAIN, Esq.; and other well-known Friends of the Cause.

MASON'S EXTRACT OF HERBS FOR MAKING NON-INTOXICATING BEER

WE ALL REQUIRE SOMETHING TO DRINK

The finest, most refreshing and pleasantest beverage obtainable. One table-spoonful of this Extract makes one gallon of splendid Beer. Try it. A sample bottle, enough to make eight gallons, post free for 9 stamps.

NEWBALL & MASON, NOTTINGHAM.

AGENTS WANTED.

MASON'S WINE ESSENCES, non-intoxicating. For children's parties and social gatherings. A 6d. bottle will make one gall. of delicious wine. Post free 9 stamps, or a bottle of both Extract of Herbs and Wine Essence post free 15 stamps.

BE SURE TO CUT

10,000 RUGS GIVEN AWAY

IT MAY THIS IS OUT.

THIS PHENOMENAL OFFER is made to the Readers of this Journal only. On receipt of this advertisement, accompanied by Postal Order for 6/, or 74 stamps, we will forward DIRECT FROM OUR LOOMS to your address, one of our genuine SEAMLESS WOVEN REVERSIBLE CARPETS, suitable for Drawing-room, Dining-room, Bedroom, &c., handsomely bordered and woven in 30 different patterns and art colourings to suit all requirements, and LARGE ENOUGH TO COVER ANY ORDINARY SIZED ROOM. These carpets are manufactured from a material equal in wear to wool, and are undoubtedly the cheapest in the world.

With every Carpet we shall ABSOLUTELY GIVE AWAY a very handsome RUG to match, or we will send 2 CARPETS and 2 RUGS for 10/6

The Queen says: "Decidedly stouter and handsomer than any of the kind, the price being the astounding part of the matter." Schoolmistress: "For style, durability, and cheapness, they cannot be beaten." Penny Illustrated Paper: "Manufactured in every variety of colour, and is one of the most surprising bargains I have seen." Church Bells: "Truly wonderful value."

Thousands of Testimonials similar to the following, & Re eat Orders, have been received from our Customers:

"Thorpe Perrow, Bedale, Yorks.

"Sir Frederick Millbank, Bart., encloses cheque for the eight Carpets received this day, and begs to add he is much pleased with them."

This offer is made to the Readers of this paper only, and will not be repeated. All Orders despatched same day as received. Cheques and Postal Orders to be crossed "Union Bank." Address—

THE BRITISH CARPET WEAVING COMPANY,
31, OLD STREET, LONDON, E.C.

NOT APPEAR AGAIN.

A PRESENT.

SEND us your address, mentioning this paper, and we will make you a present of the best guide to health yet published. It is only a little book, but it is of great value to all who are ill or indisposed.—GORDON, MURRAY, & CO., LIMITED, 10, Adam Street, Strand, W.C.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument Proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100, postage 1d.
R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co. (Ltd.) 23, Paternoster-row. Wednesday MAY 10, 1893. All Rights Reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India)

"And the Remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORN with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS OF THE EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XVII., No. 855. Entered at Stationer's Hall.] WEDNESDAY, MAY 17, 1893 [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

PAGE
Pessimism Rampant ... 241
"The Kingdom of God Cometh Not with Outward Show" (Luke xvii. 20, 21). By the Rev. Denis Hanan, D.D. ... 242
Professor Schaff, of New York, on the English Language ... 243
The Future of the White Races. By F. Gass ... 244
Certain Difficulties Intelligently Considered by a Vicar ... 245
The Evidence of Ethnology. By P. C. ... 246
Israel in Britain. By William Parker ... 248
Sir A. Lyall's British Dominion in India ... 249
An Orange Demonstration in Glasgow ... 249
Correspondence ... 249

PESSIMISM RAMPANT.

AN anonymous correspondent in the London Morning Post, of March 13 last, writes regarding the "judgments upon the English for their perverseness," and illustrates his statements very much to the discredit of our people, by quoting Jer. v. 29—31, also Jer. xxiii., declaring that the prophet's denunciations of the Jews, as therein contained, apply exactly to our own nation, and will issue in the same result! "Our prophets," he says, "prophesy falsely;" but by "prophets," he means Mr. Gladstone's Government! "The priests bear rule by their means;" but he does not inform us who "the priests" in question are to-day; and finally all difficulties are explained by the next sentence "the people," by keeping the present Government in power, "love to have it so"! He asks, "what we shall do in the end thereof"? We serve "strangers," it appears; for the Southern Irish, it is stated (rather truly too), are such, and the present majority of the Liberal Government is retained in power by the votes of the forty Irishmen who as aliens brought Mr. Gladstone in, and keep him at the head of the nation.

Of course, if Scripture is treated in this wise, and denunciations plainly addressed to "Jerusalem" and "Judah" of the time of Jeremiah (v. 1, 20, and 29), are wildly applied to British people living under Mr. Gladstone's Government, there is an end of all interpretation of prophecy on reasonable grounds! Besides, the signs of the times do not show that this our people love "to have it so," in respect to our Prime Minister's ideas for the "better government of Ireland"! Our English, Welsh, and Scotch constituencies show a clear majority against the new Bill. It is only the Irish Members in the South of Ireland, who have given the new Government their slender majority. Moreover, the fact is, that the Irish people are themselves rising against the Bill; Ulster is ready even to take up arms (if it be passed) against the proposed Southern Parliament; and a storm is everywhere rising against the Bill, which plainly shows to the unprejudiced, that "the people do not love to have it so," according to Mr. Gladstone's desires.

The pessimist forgets, besides, that even if the present House of Commons declares for this obnoxious Bill, the House of Lords is sure to reject it; and then the will of the constituencies must be ascertained by a fresh General Election, which will settle the question. Such letters as our pessimist's prove that men who refuse to accept Our Identity are open to terrible shocks of unfounded, nay unreasonable, alarm and terror, because they fail to realize that this nation is Israel, and with Israel God is resolved to be angry no more! We have this statement made unequivocally in Isa. liv. 9, R.V., where God promised upon His oath that "He would neither be wrath (with Israel), nor even rebuke them, more"! God's promises to His people, and the proved fact that we are His people, are of no importance to such pessimists as the writer of the Morning Post letter! All he desires is wildly to express his despair at the existing state of things, and seeing, personally, no remedy for the miserable muddle he believes to exist, he concludes forthwith, that, like the Jews, our nation is doomed to destruction. The Jews, however, are not going to be destroyed. The time of their happy restoration to God's favour is at hand, and with Israel they will ere long be basking in the golden sunshine of God's shining face (Psa. lxxx. 3, 7, 19).

Our Identity enables us to look beyond the date of our present trials. We know they will in God's time come to a happy end, and then Mr. Gladstone and his Bill will have passed on one side no longer to afflict our race for ever! Our Identity is a joyous, glorious fact, which God has graciously revealed to the present generation, because He knows that a time of trial and suffering is coming on the earth, outside Israel, such as has not been since men were upon the earth, or since the world began (Rev. xvi. 18, R.V.), and He bids us, in realizing and seeing all this "begin to come to pass," "to look up, and lift up our heads, for our redemption" (being Israel) "draweth nigh."

Digitized by Google

Pessimists, and even "conscious Anglo-Israelites" hug and nourish their fears. They distrust and dishonour the promises of God, and think it right to proclaim their forebodings; as if God could change, and our present Government's proposals were already the law of the land! But we must not be misunderstood. We do not advocate a passive waiting upon God without action; as if that were our proper attitude; or merely look for His miraculous interference, to deliver us from the disastrous objects of our present Prime Minister!

Far from that! We are not to tempt God! Paul and his company were assured of safety from the shipwreck; but for all that, when the shipmen were about to take a short cut towards safety, outside the will of God, Paul had to tell them, "Except these abide in the ship, ye cannot be saved" (Acts xxvii. 30, 31).

We must do what in us lies, like reasonable men and women, to defeat the unsanctified purposes of man; and having laid the case before God, we may joyously await the result which He has promised to bring about for Israel. This is far removed from our pessimist's despairing complaints, and from the position of those, who, desiring to be fellow-workers with the Lord in this matter, yet consider their fears of the Irish policy of the Government justified, while all the time they ought to know that the Lord is at the helm, and can, and will certainly, in His own good time, overrule all that is happening for British-Israel's final welfare and good. We properly resist the evil, but we may do it with certainty of victory, but not with slavish fears, that because of our nation's perversity and sins, we deserve destruction at the hands of the Lord, but not the glorious deliverance we know is coming, by reason of the faithfulness of our God! To Him be all the praise!

"THE KINGDOM OF GOD COMETH NOT WITH OUTWARD SHOW" (Luke xvii. 20, 21).

By the Rev. Denis Hanan, D.D.

When the Pharisees demanded of the Lord Jesus Christ when the kingdom of God should come, they very probably spoke contemptuously or ironically; but He answered them seriously. He said "the kingdom of God cometh not with observation," or as the margin of the A.V. reads, "with outward show," "the kingdom of God is within you," or, as in the margin, "among you," or "in the midst of you."

Do we understand these words. What is the kingdom of God. What is the meaning of cometh not with outward show, and of its being in the midst? I have met with those who say that such questions are not profitable, that the understanding of these and other similar statements is not necessary for our salvation, and that it is loss of time for the preacher to endeavour to explain them. These are the selfish souls, who are so intent upon their own salvation that they cannot afford to be interested in the wider purposes of Him whom they call Saviour, these are they who are so wrapt up in self that they have not been able to enter into the mind of Him who came not to seek His own glory, but the greater and nobler glory of Him who sent Him. Whether such a faith is "saving faith" it is not for me to say, but I may say that it is perilously unworthy of a professed follower of the King of kings. These words were our blessed Lord's words, they demand our attention. They contain a prophecy uttered by Him. His truthfulness is witnessed to by its fulfilment. They refer to His work, to a great part of the travail of His soul, and they are capable of imparting to His true servants a fresh and stronger Christian impulse when their full sense is comprehended.

1st. Consider the words themselves: "Outward show" does not express an idea dissimilar to "observation." The rise of empires had been "observed," the "outward show" of some royal accession or remarkable victory was sufficient to mark an era; but it was not to be so with the kingdom of God: as foretold by Daniel it was to grow slowly but surely, unnoticed, but increasing during the days of the monarchies, whose outward show occupied the minds of men. If the kingdom had then been restored to Israel by some notable political event. If the tribes which constituted "the kingdom" had been reunited to Judah, and that by force of arms, or by some supernatural portend, the rise of the kingdom had had its birthday, the earthly ambition of the Lord's questioners might have been gratified, but the world would not have been benefitted; a rude and vulgar conquest by an untrained and unfitted people would have been a curse, and not a blessing. It needed the lessons of the self-sacrifice of the cross, it needed the inspiring hope of an evidenced immortality, it needed the renewing power of the regenerating Spirit, it needed the age-long discipline of Christlike service, to form the predestined inheritors of the kingdom of God into fit servants for its work in its ultimate development, and therefore the kingdom was not to come with outward show, but it was to grow until that day when it itself and the world will be ready for its manifestation.

And here we may apply a personal lesson. There are those who desire that the establishment of the kingdom of grace in the heart should be marked by "outward show," that the day and hour of conscious conversion should be so noted that it could not be misunderstood. The principle that governs the growth of the kingdom applies to each unit. The apparently slow but steady growth, advancing as the physical and mental stature advances, strikes its roots deeper, and produces a more robust plant, a more real establishment of the obedience of faith, than if methods similar to those which the Pharisees desired became the law of the higher life.

Our blessed Lord further stated that the kingdom of God was among these Pharisaic Jews who surrounded Him. He could not have meant that the kingdom of grace was "within them"—that is, in their hearts. As stated in the "Speaker's Commentary," the following exhortations to the disciples refer to a visible coming, and thus it maintains the view that the words "in the midst of you," or "among you," give the exact meaning. In the centre of that unfriendly throng stood the King and His Galilean followers. The King by divine right, and His executive, the nucleus of the kingdom that was to fill the earth, and cause it to blossom and bud and be filled with fruit. The germ that had within it the possibilities of immense development in the line of the promises made to Abraham and his seed for ever.

The kingdom of God was then existent, it was among the Jews, it was to be taken from the Jews, and to be given to a nation, a nation prepared to receive it and to bring forth fruit; but even in this case the rule of "without outward show" was to be maintained, quietly, unostentatiously, and, as we reckon time, slowly, the work was to be done, and the divine influence of Christianity was to prepare the way, not by transferring the kingdom from Israel's heirs, and giving it to the non-Abrahamic peoples, but by preparing "the kingdom" for its entailed inheritance. What, then, is the kingdom of God that was spoken of by the Lord? Some would say, the Church Catholic; others, the Roman Church; others, Christianity in general. There is endless confusion of thought in connection with this question. But the answer is not difficult if we try to learn the whole counsel of God, and remember that no work done by Him is an afterthought which clashes with an original purpose. The kingdom of God upon earth is Christian Israel, Israel obedient, and although the Jewish portion of the seed of Abraham is yet in unbelief, God has never left Himself without an Israelite nation in whom, and through whom, His kingdom should continue, and that the very people to whom "the kingdom" belonged. When the unbelieving part of the people is grafted in again, then, doubtless, the kingdom of God will be revealed, and its true and constant relationship to the Church universal will be recognised. It will be no longer taught either in presumption or through ignorance, that the Church has stepped into Israel's place, or that the kingdom of God has a different basis in this age from that which was originally formed. For, as the apostle Paul says, "If the first fruit be holy, the lump is also holy, and if the root be holy, so are the branches." Other flour may be added to the dedicated lump of dough, other branches may be grafted in upon the holy and separated stock, and partake fully of its root and fatness, but the kingdom of God is not "left to other people" in this age, any more than in the time when the prophet Daniel lived.

Digitized by Google

Furthermore, the Church, which had its birthday on the day of Pentecost, was not among the questioning Pharisees, when the kingdom of God was present. The gift of the Holy Spirit was to call out the Church, and thereby to mould the kingdom; but not to substitute the outcalled body for the kingdom. This would not be to "confirm the promises," but to overthrow them. It would be the creating of a state of things on the day of Pentecost which would usurp the place of the kingdom of which the Lord and His Israelite apostles were the living nucleus. The Church is not the kingdom, and the kingdom is not the Church. The kingdom, apart from the Pentecostal gift, would be incapable of bringing forth fruit for Christ. But the Church, apart from the kingdom, is capable of developing into the anti-Christian apostacy. Unite "the kingdom" and "the Church," and there is no clashing of purpose, no disinheriting of Israel, no new-made Gentile root; but rather the fulfilment of all the prophecies, and the confirming of all the promises. This statement does not necessarily involve the identity of Israel with the British folk; but it makes it necessary to find Israel a Christian nation, and wherever Christian Israel may be, there she, as being nationally obedient, will be found to inherit the Ephraimic birthright, which birthright of national power will have been given to her for the purpose of enabling her to accomplish her mission. We find this Israelitish birthright in the possession of England. She has obtained it to the exclusion of every other people. She alone, of all the peoples on the earth, enables us to explain how it is that the kingdom of Israel has continued, as foretold, and has been recovenanted in Christ. There is not, we maintain, any rational explanation as to the connection between "the kingdom" and the Church, except that which is afforded by the historic fact of the identity of the Anglo-Saxon race with Israel. Admit it, and all prophecy is made plain, the old covenant develops into the new. The kingdom does not change. The redemption wrought by the Messiah has not brought about the transfer of the promises from Abraham's heirs to the Gentile peoples; but it has, as it ought to have done, and must do, confirmed the promises made to the fathers.

Just before the Lord's ascension, His disciples asked Him, "Wilt Thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" His answer implied that they were right in looking for the restoration; but that they were not to know the time, and we do not know the time or the season any more than they, but we know that Israel is existent, that she is nationally Christian, that the kingdom represented in nucleus then by our Lord and His Israelite disciples has not ceased to grow, although that growth has taken place without outward show. Before the world, or even the people themselves, knowit, the stone cut out without hands has become a mountain, and bids fair to fill the earth, and even in this troublous and perilous time we may feel assured that that development will not cease until in the fullest sense the kingdom has been restored to Israel. For, "God is not a man that He should lie, neither the Son of man that He should repent. Hath He said and shall He not do it? hath He spoken and shall He not make it good? Surely there is no enchantment against Jacob, neither is there any divination against Israel. According to this time it shall be said of Jacob, and of Israel, What hath God wrought?" And although, as in the case of the Mesopotamian seer, when the lust of power and of reward caused him to desire to undo Israel, he was forced to be the unwilling instrument for blessing, so now, by God's help, the madness of the prophet of division and dishonour will be rebuked by the controlling power, and the wrath of man will but work out the purposes of God, and arouse our race to its true position, its God-imposed responsibility, as the kingdom of God on earth, His witness that He is God. And also to the knowledge that the possession of national power is given to it in order that it may rise above the littleness of mere party aims, and devote itself to its world-wide and imperial mission, as the kingdom of God, the Messiah's executive for blessing the world.

PROFESSOR SCHAFF, OF NEW YORK, ON THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

THE Times some time ago, quoting Professor Schaff, of New York, gave us some interesting particulars respecting the marvellous spread of the English language throughout the world. The Times called it "the rapid and irresistible advance of English speech all over the globe," and remarked that "the language of Shakespeare and Milton" was likely some day to "become the universal medium for the exchange of thought." On the Continent, it is taught in the best colleges and universities as a regular branch of higher education; also in the lower grade schools of commercial cities. It is as a language rapidly gaining on the French. "In Asia," says the American Professor with a German name, "it follows the British sway, and the highways of commerce to the vast Empire of India; and the two hundred million inhabitants of that Empire exhibit a growing desire to learn the language of their rulers."

There converted Brahmins speak and preach in the purest Anglo-Saxon. We have ourselves heard the native barristers of a Provincial Court, pitted against English barristers, hold their own while addressing the Court in English. The language, according to the Professor, is growing in use in the seaport towns of China, in South Africa, on its Western coasts as well, in Australasia and Polynesia. Japan is learning English and in measure receiving Christ through English and that is becoming the Court language. "In North America every other tongue is swept away by the torrent of English!" Immigrants from Germany and Scandinavia talk their own tongue in the first generation, but in the second or third it is lost, and they become Anglo-Saxons talking English. The ocean language is moreover, according to the Professor, English. English ships are immensely more numerous on the sea than those of other races, and hence it is no wonder that the language of the ocean follows the race. At the late German-Samoan Conference, English was adopted as the language of the proceedings! In diplomacy it is thought that as Latin yielded to French, so before long French will give way to English as the medium of polite intercourse.

Digitized by Google

On the Continent where American or English travellers congregate, the language is cultivated by those who have to minister to their wants. At all hotels on these routes English is spoken, and no Anglo-Saxon traveller need learn or speak Italian, French or German. Our London and other hotels are full of foreign waiters, mostly Germans, who come here to learn English, and to go back as more useful men and so worth more pay. "English is a lingua franca," says the Times, "which carries a traveller almost everywhere." The latter writer concludes thus:—

"Some additions to a language are natural and appropriate and seem to become parts of it almost insensibly, as the sea slowly adds fresh soil to a coast-line. Many of the more common Americanisms, however, appear rather to owe their origin to an explosive and eruptive influence, and to be hurled suddenly on to the surface of a language from some back-woods volcano, to the consternation of all the habitual users of the tongue. In time we may see a language developed which will be called English, but which will differ from our own as much as ours differs from that of Chaucer. Australianisms, Americanisms, Negroisms, Pigeon English, and other dialects will help to form it; and its one recommendation will be that it is spoken in every quarter of the world."

The spread of our language implies, of course, the spread of the race before it; for no foreigner would learn an alien language, unless those to whom it is vernacular were in power and living among them. In India, for instance, English would have no chance among the natives unless the British were the rulers of the Peninsula, and the way to power and wealth lay through the English speech. It advances on the ocean because the British are the most powerful and wealthy nation using its watery highways. Japan is taking it up because the Japanese see ours has the noblest literature, and our institutions are what they desire to copy. The Scriptures give us the hint why English is so popular in the world, for Isa. lxi. 9, R.V., says regarding Israel: "Their seed shall be known among the nations and their offspring among the peoples; all that see them shall acknowledge them that they are the seed which the Lord hath blessed." Seeing how the Lord has blessed us, the nations desire to imitate, serve, and profit by us. They learn our language, therefore, and so benefit by their closer intercourse with us. The subject furnishes us with a new ground for the assurance that the British are Israel. God has promised Israel universal dominion and power. The first sign of the coming glory is the fact that already throughout the world the language of Israel (which is English), both here and through the whole of North America, is the vernacular of the main body of our teeming race! To the Lord be all the praise.

SEND to your friends a few copies of the "No Rome Rule" Leaflet.

THE FUTURE OF THE WHITE RACES.

BY F. GASS.

THE latest phrase of European civilisation is a race between the nations for the possession of colonies. This is more than a passing phenomenon, and arises from an instinctive feeling that the land of the Continent is limited, and every great nation requires an outlet for the energy of its surplus population. Farseeing statesmen note that there is a strong party forming in America, and elsewhere, against continuing the reception of the foreign element in unrestricted numbers. This, by causing a congestion of population, may seriously interfere with the prosperity of the countries over which they hold rule. Thus the want of room may become a serious matter, and a check upon the general prosperity of Europe, possibly to be followed by other unsatisfactory developments.

In his remarkable book, "National Life and Character," Mr. Charles Pearson is a prophet of such evils to come. This book is, at present, attracting considerable attention. He marshals facts in great number and variety to show that the day of the higher races of the world has reached its zenith. They are on the wane, and the future is with the yellow men and the black men. The civilisation of the lower races by the white men will render the former more and more powerful by bringing them near to an equality with the latter. The white races are indulging in that enervating luxuriousness that was the precursor of the downfall of ancient Rome. Marriages are becoming late, and large families are considered a burden. Late marriages, whatever their social convenience, are a sin against nature, which, if there is anything in heredity, will sooner or later have its revenge. Demotic state-socialism aims at reducing home to a dull level of unambitious collectivism. The persistent materialism, and insatiable appetite of the masses who have lost the moral sentiment, keeps in the very bosom of Europe the constant danger of a brutal barbarism. Legislation is causing marriage to loose its sacredness, and family ties are weakened. Talent, literary, artistic, and poetic, is becoming more diffuse and tepid, and individualism flies at less ambitious aims. In short, the civilised world is about entering its period of senility, and, like an old man, will call for its arm-chair, papers, and footstool. Of course Mr. Pearson includes the great Anglo-Saxon race in his conclusions.

This is a startling vision, and love of country would incline British-Israelites to feel very uneasy over these depressing conclusions but for their faith in the fulfilment of the sacred promises made to Israel. Let us consider this serious matter in the light of these promises. In any case North America is safe for many a day to come, as there is yet room for untold millions of men, and while there is virgin land awaiting occupation, the vital energy of the people is not likely to diminish. It is different with Europe, there is little room for expansion there, and "the coming great war," of which Europeans are always talking, will have a terrible effect when it does come, that the nations will not readily recover from. There is one important factor that Mr. Pearson appears to have overlooked, and that is the influence of Christianity on the inferior races. With the spread of Christ's teaching all may yet be well, without that it may be admitted, as some writers believe, that Great Britain will, sooner or later, lose its hold on the millions of India, which would be the signal for other disasters. The Chinese, as Lord Wolseley anticipates, may develop into a powerful, and cruel as powerful, military machine that it would task all Europe's power of resistance to keep within bounds. Who can tell that Africa has not a future before her? The introduction in America of the African to Christianity may yet have tremendously important results. The Negro character is full of intense elements of affection and emotion, from which the superstition of imperfect development may yet be cleared.

Digitized by Google

It is a remarkable fact that the great day of Israel's full religious development is connected, as St. Paul tells us, with "a fulness of the Gentiles." This "fulness" may have a fulfilment beyond that of the creation of "a company of nations" of Ephraimite origin. It may synchronise with a critical period of congestion of the white Gentile races of Europe. It certainly is the time when God will "turn away ungodliness" from Israel (Romans xi. 25). A great change will at that eventful epoch come to pass in the actions and thoughts of Israel in Britain, some few of which we may look forward, in faith, to take a course somewhat as follows:—The heritage of the heathen is Israel's by divine right. Therefore our mode of dealing with the coloured races must be above reproach. We must abandon once for all the half spiritual, half greedy, way of presenting ourselves to them, with the Bible in one hand and a bottle of whiskey in the other. The best blood of Britain, both men and women, will swarm into Africa and the East intent on bringing about a deep religious revival, conterminous only with the boundaries of the heathen world. Who can doubt Israel's pre-eminent success in such a glorious enterprise, when once the whole nation is bent on the spread of high Christian morality in the dark places of the earth. Britain will become electric with the light of the Identity; the flower of its manhood will burn with a desire to join in noble deeds, and share in elevating thoughts. The genius of great poets, kindled at the fire of Israel's regeneration, will sing in exalted verse praises to the Highest. The press will be purified and elevated, pure and high-class literature will flourish, and many a crying evil will be cast out from among us. So long as we hold to such high principles, the coloured races will look up to us for advice and guidance, and will remain locked hand-in-hand with us in the brotherhood of Christ.

The Anglo-Saxon race may not continue to multiply quite so fast as they have done hitherto, which in itself would be no disadvantage, otherwise we should swarm the world, and soon fill it to repletion. One great check upon the threatened overpopulation of the British Isles, of which we hear so much, would be the stoppage of reckless and irresponsible marriages, which would be brought about by the moral force of united opinion in the heart of a quickened nation. Such a spiritually-minded people as here described, must naturally continue to advance and strengthen their position nothing can withstand their momentum of blessing as the messengers of God's Word. But in any emergency that may be sent to try us, we have the command of the sea and the Gates of the earth, and so are safe from harm. It is noteworthy that our home possessions are small. Britain is but a little spot. If Mr. Pearson's view is correct as to the advance of the coloured races towards an equality with the white men, the East will become once more the centre of the highest life of the earth. Palestine, as the peaceful Gate of restored Israel, is incomparably situated in the midst of the three great continents forming the old world—Europe, Asia, and Africa. Should it arise that at some future time the "Isles of the West," from the exhaustion of the coal mines, or other cause, become less desirable as a central home, British-Israel could transfer her affectionate allegiance to the Holy Land, and still have before her her earth-belting Colonial possessions to choose from. The result would be expansion into a great Eastern power, practically independent of Europe. In the words of Isaiah: "In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and with Assyria, a blessing in the midst of the earth: for that the Lord of hosts hath blessed them, saying, Blessed be Egypt My people, and Assyria the work of My hands, and Israel Mine inheritance" (Isa. xix. 24, 25).

This view of the probable course of future events is built upon the hope of a comparatively early acceptance of the truths of the Identity throughout the Anglo-Saxon race in every part of the world, together with the numerous inspired promises of the coming greatness of Israel.

Since this paper was written, a paragraph, of which the following is a copy, has appeared in The Echo. As it supports the view taken of the future of China, it is well worth reproduction here:—"Mr. F. Greenwood may now be counted among those who hold that the expansion of China is destined to be one of the mightiest facts of the next century. The late Sir Henry Maine thought an overflow of the Chinese beyond their present boundaries in Asia was extremely probable. Sir Rutherford Alcock, long resident in China, entertained the same opinion, only in a stronger form. Dr. Pearson, author of 'National Life and Character,' also looks forward to the time, not very far distant, when China will have to be reckoned with as a first-class Power, like Russia or Germany, or America or France."

There is much food for thought in these opinions. Possibly Europe may not yet have seen the last great change that is to come over its inhabitants.

CERTAIN DIFFICULTIES INTELLIGENTLY CONSIDERED BY A VICAR.

A CLERGYMAN to whom our subject is as yet an unaccepted mystery asked us recently how our views provided for the acceptance of the Gospel by the heathen, and what part they held in our thoughts? Our reply was this: The "nations" as apart from Israel, having no specified portion in the covenanted promises to "Abraham and his seed for ever," were yet entitled to the whole of the spiritual blessings without exception, which the Lord Jesus Christ died to procure for His people. "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have eternal life" (John iii. 16, R.V.).

In Rom. xv. 27 St. Paul argues with reference to the poverty of the Jews of his day at Jerusalem, that if the nations or Gentiles have been made partakers of the Israelites' spiritual things, their duty, that is the Gentiles' duty, is also to minister unto them in carnal things. The Gentiles or nations therefore have a right to the spiritual gifts the Lord died to procure for the believing world; but this does not entitle the non-Israelite Christians to the temporal and material blessings which are the exclusive possessions of the chosen people of the stock of Abraham. The quotation of St. Paul in Rom. xv. 12, from Isa. xi. 1, 10, respecting the Root of Jesse, the Lord Jesus Christ, in whom or on whom the Gentiles or nations were to "trust" and "hope," points also to the same conclusion; the interest of the Gentile nations in Christ is confined to the things that accompany salvation, but they do not include the Empire, wealth, dominion, and supremacy, which were bestowed on Israel only, to arm them for their spiritual functions, to be exercised for the benefit of the world He loved so well.

Digitized by Google

The blessings which Israel were to administer to all the nations, families, and kindreds of the earth in Gen. xxii. 18 and xxviii. 14, are clearly Christian blessings, but they cannot include, otherwise than indirectly, the material gifts showered in such profusion by the Lord on "Abraham" and his posterity "for ever" in Gen. xxii. 17. "In thy seed," including the Christ and the flesh and blood progeny, "shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." Christ was to be "the blessing." Israel were to be the messengers and instruments or channel by which the blessings were to be conveyed to the world.

Israel exists to carry the knowledge of Christ's atonement by His own most precious blood to all the nations. This honour God has given to one people only—the House of Israel—now detected and recognised as the British. Other Christian non-Israelite nations such as Sweden, Germany, the Christian natives of the Punjaub, Tinnevelly, Madras, Bengal, and Burmah, may, and do, go with the Gospel to the tribes and people near them as in one or two special spots where they have missions. But the Israelite function which God gave the seed of Abraham to perform compels them (and therefore us) to go to all the nations, to all the families, and to all the kindreds of the earth, without exception, where Christ and His salvation are not known and sinners are perishing for lack of the knowledge of His glorious Atonement for the sins of the whole world (1 John ii. 2, R.V.): "He is the Propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world." Our nation is the only one which, when a part of the earth is discovered, no matter how distant and inaccessible, where Christ is not worshipped and trusted, springs forward with men and women ready to preach the Gospel to those benighted ones, to supply them with the Word of God and to bring them, besides these "good things," civilization, commerce, wealth, and the Pax Britannica.

Our explanation so far seemed satisfactory to our inquirer. He continued thus:—"But what about the growth of evil among us? the Sabbath-breaking? the sins of impurity and grasping love of gain? Are these things compatible with our Israelitish origin?" To this we replied in the following way:—

What Israel was in the olden times of Moses, the Exodus, and the wilderness, such she remains till now with some improvements due to Christian teaching and to the grace of God. Israel was always rebellious, stubborn, stiffnecked, and provoking to the Lord in Moses' days (Deut. ix. 4—8), and there is no reason to conclude that the nature of this people is changed to-day; their education and history is no doubt preparing them for their great spiritual change yet to come, when the Spirit of God will deal with them individually and so convert the nation to the Lord. God's promise in Jer xxxi. 33, 34, in Hebrew, is translated into Greek, word for word, by St. Paul in Heb. viii. 10—12, when he was addressing the same race converted to Christ, and these promises tell us that in the time, even yet future, God means to cure Israel's spiritual diseases by a remedy He Himself will apply, not depending at all on their co-operation or willing obedience. "This (He said) is the covenant I will make with the House of Israel after those days, saith the Lord, I will put My laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts, and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to Me a people; and they shall not teach every man his neighbour and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord; for all shall know Me, from the least to the greatest. For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities I will remember no more."

Here, then, is a covenant made between two parties—God Almighty on one side and the House of Israel on the other (being those who came out of Egypt, but no other). The terms of this covenant are undertaken for both the parties by the Almighty and All-Righteous One, the God of Israel. It does not depend on man's frailty and sin, which made shipwreck of the first covenant at Sinai. It is certain of success, and will do its work by converting every heart in the mighty Empire of British-Israel. Men cannot believe this, and consequently the literal and glorious statements of Jeremiah and St. Paul in the Epistle to the Hebrews go for very little and are evaporated by spiritualizing interpretations.

Our inquiring divine carried on the conversation by asking us "if our principles supported the contention that Christian people, like the men of Ulster, were justified in resistance by arms to the imperious demands of an Act of Parliament forcing Home or Rome Rule upon them against their will?"

Our reply was in the affirmative, and we find since we spoke that the Right Hon. A. J. Balfour in Belfast answered the same question in these words: "I do not come here to preach any doctrines of passive obedience or non-resistance. You have had to fight for your liberties before. I pray God you may never have to fight for them again. I do not believe that you ever will have to fight for them. I admit that the tyranny of majorities may be as bad as the tyranny of kings, and that the stupidity of majorities may be even greater than the stupidity of kings. And I will only say, and I do not think any rational or sober man will say that what is justifiable against a tyrannical king may not under certain circumstances be justified against a tyrannical majority." (Loud and continued cheering and waving of handkerchiefs, those of the audience who were seated rising to their feet.) Our space forbids us to enlarge further; but it is certain that conversations like these do good.

THE EVIDENCE OF ETHNOLOGY.

By P. C.

The great stumbling-block to the reception of British-Israelism amongst the educated classes seems to be the ethnological system taught, and still accredited in our schools and colleges. It is often asked, how can we be Israelites when all the standard authorities, from Max Müller downwards, pronounce us to be Indo-European and Japhetic? We reply, how do your authorities prove that we are Japhetic, for ethnology is in its infancy, and is yearly undergoing revolutions from new discoveries in Egypt and Assyria. Professor Sayce, in his Preface to the "Races of the Old Testament," says, "Ethnology itself is but a young science," and in p. 29 admits "language is not a test of race;" so that at present ethnology and philology are, at the best, only corroborative in the chain of our argument. The Bible and history are our mainstay; and caution is needed on both sides, pro and con, not to trust to any master in the study of our doctrine, but to be guided by the usual laws of interpretation, the concurrent testimony of reason, common-sense, and (where it may be had) the consensus of the universal Church. We are prepared for the question, can such a consensus ever be obtained? Certainly —e.g., every article of the Apostles' Creed has received it, and (what bears especially on our doctrine) belief in a future literal Millennium received it for 300 years (see Alford on Revelation): and a Christian dogma of one age cannot be repealed by a divided Church in another age. It would ignore the judicial obscuration of the Ten Tribes if any consensus were revealed on that subject: and we must appeal to the law of evidence sanctioned by our Lord, that "out of the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established" in the controversy we readily enter with our opponents. We adduce the two witnesses of reason and common-sense as being in perfect agreement in all the mass of cumulative evidence that we possess. We challenge our opponents to produce their witnesses, and remind them that the testimony of one witness is not reliable; and if reason and common-sense disagree, their evidence is neutralized. Doubtless Biblical interpretation admits of a very wide margin; and more is the need of caution. At the same time it is right to keep in mind the famous motto, "In necessariis unitas, in dubiis libertas, in omnibus caritas:" in necessary things (such as articles of faith) unity, in doubtful questions liberty, in all cases charity. We give and take the right of private judgment. We urge upon opponents not only the right but the duty.

Digitized by Google

On our part in claiming ethnology to be on our side, we do not make it a link in our chain. Let us take a familiar illustration. The blessings pronounced on Shem and Japhet, and the curse on Canaan in Gen. ix. furnish arguments on both sides for ethnological derivations. The A.V. leads many to infer that Japhet has dispossessed Shem, from the words, "And he shall dwell in the tents of Shem." But many learned men and good Hebrew scholars maintain that God, and not Japhet, is the nominative to the verb "shall dwell;" and so doubles Shem's and not Japhet's blessing. They who take the A.V., argue further that Japhet's dwelling in the tents of Shem implies that Europeans are Japhetic! But they fail to show how Europe was previously the possession and abode of Shem! Granting, however, that the A.V. is correct (and the greatest probably of modern Hebraists,—viz., Delitzsch, supports this rendering), we must bear in mind that another and a very different meaning is attached to these words by Dillmann, and by Delitzsch himself, who maintains strongly, and assigns five distinct reasons for his contention that Japhet's blessing had reference to his large extension, but Shem's was the spiritual blessing entailed on his race in which Japhet should ultimately participate. It was Jehovah who blessed Shem, but Elohim who blessed Japhet. That Japhet should dwell in the tents of Shem, according to this view, meant that Japhet should be converted to Christianity, and certainly the opinion of two such authorities as Delitzsch and Dillmann (not to name others) should carry no slight weight with it.

There is a double need, therefore, for caution in deducing any genealogical conclusion from this famous passage; the doubt whether Elohim or Japhet is the indweller; and the doubt whether conquest or conversion was the mode of incorporation. That Canaan (not Ham) was doomed to be the servant of both his brothers is not open to any doubt. As far, then, as any reasoning bears on our question from this passage, we are left quite free to abide by our belief, built upon irrefragable proofs of another kind, that the British and Scandinavian races of Europe are undoubtedly Semitic; whilst the evidence against it is nil; and as far as common-sense bears upon it, the blessing of Jehovah on Shem outweighs all thought of conquest, and kindles a better hope for Japhet. It is preposterous to assign almost universal dominion to Japhet, and to reserve only ten or twelve millions of Jews, with thrice as many Arabs, as Jehovah's blessing on His chosen race and people: preposterous to put the children of nature before the children of the covenant! From the first Shem and Japhet were at enmity, and will remain so until the warfare be accomplished, and the flesh shall be subdued to the Spirit, and Christ shall be universal King!

Now to revert to the stumbling block of ethnology, with which these remarks began, we British-Israelites prefer keeping to the generations in the Bible to all human systems; and we take our stand on the statement, "These are the three sons of Noah, and of them was the whole earth overspread" (Gen. ix. 19). And "these are the families of the sons of Noah, after their generations, in their nations: and by these were the nations divided in the earth after the flood" (Gen. x. 32). On these two quotations we take our stand! Delitzsch, in his Commentary on Gen. x., remarks that "H. Rawlinson is fully justified in regarding this table as the most authentic record we possess for the affiliation of nations;" and we derive enough from its genealogies to rest in a threefold division of the human race, Semitic, Hamite, and Japhetic; and inasmuch as by general consent the black negro family are descendants of Ham, and the yellow Mongol of Japhet, the central zone of whites must mainly consist of the Semitic race. Our three races accordingly, may be classed as black, yellow, and white. Then, again, the shape of the human skull is tripartite; and, again, we and the Jews are in the same class. Hence, colour and craniology confirm the inference from the Bible that the Briton is a descendant of Shem, for both Briton and Hebrew belong to the same Caucasian type.

So far, ethnology is on our side. Besides this, some of the greatest scientific ethnologists have divided the human race into three families. The great Cuvier made only three. His great predecessor Blumenbach made five, but Malayan, American, and Ethiopian being counted virtually reduce his five to three. Bryant, Faber, Sir W. Jones all make three. All these, and many more, nobly support us; and this is all we want of evidence from ethnology for believing ourselves to be a Semitic people! On the other hand we know no reasons for accepting the current teaching of our schools and colleges; and we conclude by challenging our opponents to show reasons for any longer blindly following the Masters to whom prejudice has attached them.

NOTE.—Delitzsch says: "Japhet, not Elohim," is the subject of "shall dwell." The fathers unanimously explain, like Irenæus (iii. 5, 3), "enlarging Japhet, and placing him in the tents of Shem." Against making God the subject, may be adduced the following reasons: (1) that as Shem is the subject of the blessing (v. 26), so also will Japhet be the subject of the blessing (v. 27); (2) that God's gracious presence with Shem is already contained in "Blessed be Jehovah the Elohim of Shem; (3) that the God of Shem, as distinguished from the God of Japheth, is called, not Elohim, but Jehovah; (4) that the plural in the tents leads us to infer a collective idea, elsewhere unconfirmed; (5) that Japheth will have free hospitable access to Shem, as in Psa. cxxxiii. 1), and (so) will the delicate filial action performed by them have their final blessing. To dwell thus with Shem is the honour and blessing of Japheth." Moreover, on referring to Irenæus (iii. 5, 3) as quoted above by Delitzsch, it will be seen that the Christian sense of tabernacling together is the meaning of "shall dwell," for He says, "Christ has united in one those that were far off, and those that were near" (Eph. ii. 17), "enlarging Japhet, and placing him in the dwelling of Shem;" and it is this Christian reading of Japhet's destiny which overthrows the argument for any geographical location of his race.

Digitized by Google

ISRAEL IN BRITAIN.

By WILLIAM PARKER.

IN reading my beloved BANNER, I occasionally come across an article rather indefinite as to the time and mode of settlement in the isles of the west, treating as though all the tribes arrived after the Christian era, whereas history only gives the Saxons and Normans (the Danes being of no account), consequently eight of the tribes must have been in England, Ireland, and Scotland before the Christian era. I will try to verify this view of the case. Forty years ago some ancient documents fell into my hands touching the dissolution of the large monastery at Bridlington, and I made extensive extracts, by which, with the aid of my British-Israel theory, I have satisfied myself that Bridlington—which is also called Burlington—was founded about six centuries before the Christian era by a race of men who came over the sea, whose sacred books told them they would find no rest until they reached a western isle (the foremost arrivals from time to time fetching the remainder ad infinitum). Those first to arrive founded their burgh a mile (now) from the sea, and at the west end thereof they dug or bored a well through chalk rock, and such was the overflow of pure water that they made a basin, the area of which at the present day is 1,400 square yards of water, "in that they thought Baal their god was propitious, and accordingly raised a conical hill in front of their burgh to his worship."

These people, who called themselves Britons from Breti, brought over with them their beauto-stone, 72 feet long, and placed it on an eminence five miles from their burgh by a water-race (called "Gipsy-race") which takes its rise in the Yorkshire Wolds and runs into the sea where they landed. This stone is there to this day, and is thirty-six feet in the ground and thirty-six feet out of the ground, and history says it was there long ages before the Roman invasion. It is, therefore, a grand evidence in stone of Israel's Identity. These Britons (or Israelites) planted a grove leading from their burgh along the gipsy-race to their beauto-stone, which was their most sacred place, and where human sacrifices were offered to Baal their God. They called their country Brigantes; their burgh, which was the capital of Brigantes, was also called Briton-town, and from these two names, Burgh-town and Briton-town, came Burlington and Bridlington, known as well by one as by the other. The present town is a little to the west of the ancient burgh, and if any of your readers should visit the quay as a fashionable seaside resort, I will venture to say (though I am sixteen thousand miles away) they will find the site of the old burgh, for beauty and scenery, one of the finest places under heaven as a resting-place and watch-tower for the sons of Jacob, who by their beacons and flameburghs were well guarded, and could communicate along the sea-coast and across the Humber with Grimsby, another capital burgh, where men from over the sea also settled. (Bridlington, Skepsea, Hornsea, Kelsea, and Grimsby—all beacons—are in a straight line.)

The gipsy-race was to the ancient Britons as springs of water in the wilderness—not that wilderness which they passed through from Egypt, but the wilderness where they should have springs of water, flocks and herds, of their captivity in their lost condition, where God cared for them and supplied all their wants. These Britons were not savages, they were only idolators, and that of an enlightened type, who had a feeling and faith in their worship, inasmuch as when men came from Jerusalem shortly after the Pentecost with the tidings of salvation through the sacrificial death of Jesus Christ (from their training and teaching as Baal-Druidic worshippers), were quick to comprehend sacrificial death as the atonement for sin, but when they were further taught by the Christian missionaries that Christ not only died but rose again and ascended into heaven to prepare for them a place, they comprehended that the religion of Jesus Christ was a superior religion to their own—it was both definite and clear, and raised their aspirations to a tangible heaven and a visible and comprehensible God and Saviour. They therefore forsook their Druidic-Baal idolatry, and turned and worshipped the true God and Saviour Jesus Christ, and built a church for worship in their new religion, the foundations of which have been found.

The Christian religion spread from various points among the Eight Tribes of Israel, then in the isles of the west, and a British-Israel National Church was founded. Many Romans who came as conquerors went back to Rome converted to the faith of Christ, and settled the then persecuted Church at Rome on a peaceable national basis, on the model of the British National Church. Several hundred years after these events, and when old acquaintance was forgot, the Romish Church sent Augustine to mission Britain, but when he found the people had a National Church, he, by his persuasive eloquence, induced them to amalgamate with the Romish Church; and when, after a while, the British Church saw they had made a mistake, they found to their sorrow that it was easier to contract a marriage with Rome than to get a divorce.

The Eight Tribes had three distinct appellations—the Hibernians, the Cymrians, and the Britons—and when Ephraim, the ninth tribe, joined his brethren after the Christian era he was called the English. Ephraim was separated from his eight brethren for eleven hundred years, and at the time of Josephus was a great multitude: It was Ephraim (probably reclaimed from idolatry by Ezekiel) who went up as men of Israel from the various nations in Europe and Asia to the Pentecost and received the Holy Ghost, saying, "What have we to do any more with idols?" And they were the Gentiles that Peter, Paul, and James were so fond of talking about.

Ephraim entered Britain as Angles, Saxons, and Jutes, and drove the Britons westward, and took possession of Brigantes (Britain) and called it England. Benjamin entered England and ravened as a wolf. In the morning he took the prey, and in the evening divided the spoil. Poor Ephraim, he was badly repaid for the affection his father bestowed on Benjamin in Egypt; nevertheless, the man with the birthright ultimately prevailed. But Benjamin, the fierce warrior for the time being, was the light-bearer. He was chosen of God to be the apostolic tribe. On landing in England he terrified Ephraim into submission, and then showed his piety by building a large monastery at Bridlington in front of the well (then of 1,700 years existence), and for the next 150 years filling England with churches and restoring those of Saxon-Ephraim. Yet nearly at the end of his dynasty Henry VIII., a Royal descendant of Benjamin, destroyed that monastery. However, out of its ashes again rose the English—or, rather, the British-Israel—National Church.

Digitized by Google

England is the Tarshish of the Bible, and there is strong presumptive evidence that the first inhabitants were removed to the Baltic, thence to Russia, and that those whom we have been in the habit of calling Ancient Britons were no other than the Eight Tribes of Israel as aforesaid, or at least those with whom I have been dealing. When Benjamin the Norman came to England he retained his kingdom in Normandy, which was eventually swallowed up by France. If, then, this people did not, from time to time, escape as Huguenots, refugees, &c., and mingle again with and become part and parcel of their own Israelitish race, how about our theory "that none are lost"? This question I leave for a more able pen than mine.

Christchurch, New Zealand.

SIR A. LYALL'S BRITISH DOMINION IN INDIA.*

CULTIVATED and superior persons who can satisfy Macaulay's test, and say offhand who won the battle of Buxar and who perpetrated the massacre of Patna, may yet read this volume with profit. It does not take the reader either through the highways or the bypaths of Indian history. Here we must not expect lengthy sieges and exhaustive campaigns. There are no ample narratives of Monson's failure and Hyder's triumphs; of wars of succession, in which French and English espoused the cause of rival claimants; no tedious operations in Nepal and Burma; no splendid captures of Sikh entrenchments at the point of the bayonet; or defeats of Mahratta hordes, when Colonel Mannering, as Scott tells us, relieved Cuddieburn, defended Chingalore, and overcame the great Mahratta chief, Ram Jolli Bundleman. True, Sir Alfred alludes to many of such startling episodes, but he brings them in by a graphic and summary process, in illustration of his principal object, which is to explain the "combination of direct effort and favourable circumstances" that gave England, if she only knew it, dominion over one of the finest dependencies in the world. Sir Alfred Lyall is determined not to ascribe the acquisition of India to a series of blind chances or lucky throws of the dice. On the contrary, he deliberately traces to their source the various events which enabled us to get rid of European rivals in Asia; to replace the Banyan and the factory by the Sepoy and the fort; to pit, for a time, one native Power against another; to avail ourselves of the readiness of Hindus in all ages to accept foreign domination; and, finally, to impose our own terms on every Rajah and Nawab, pretender, rightful claimant, or tyrant in the Greek sense, throughout the length and breadth of the Empire. He gives just prominence to the political truth that we owe India to our supremacy at sea. He comments on the fact that several times in the last century we had to fight Dutchmen or Frenchmen in India when, in Europe, we were not at war with Holland or France. And he proves that the doctrine of the Paramount Power, supposed to be an invention of latter-day politicians, was really devised by Warren Hastings, was extended by Wellesley, was vigorously asserted by Lord Dalhousie, and was ultimately established by Lord Canning as a doctrine essential to our own position as well as to the pacification of India. How we beat foreign competitors, first for commerce and then for empire; how our future ascendency was early discerned by leaders of remarkable insight: how we cancelled grievous errors by strokes of happy audacity: and how our Asiatic dominion ought not to be considered as an isolated fact in the world's history, but as having a direct bearing on the progress of the human race; is all excellently told, in a concise and nervous style; and with a combination of administrative experience and literary ability. The moral of it all may be drawn in the warning words of the late Lord Lawrence:—"We are not," he said, "in India by the Will of the People. We are there by strength of character, by the force of circumstances, and by the will of Providence." Sir Alfred Lyall has dwelt on the causes of this elevation. May it not fall to a successor of like ability and knowledge mournfully to investigate the causes of our Decline and Fall!—Pall Mall Gazette, February 10, 1893.

* "The rise of the British Dominion in India." By Sir Alfred Lyall, K.C.B., D.C.L. (London: John Murray, Albemarle-street, 1893).

AN ORANGE DEMONSTRATION IN GLASGOW.

THE Scotsman of April 3rd thus reported a part of a speech by Brother J. R. Kelly, of Glasgow, on the previous Saturday, in proposing a resolution against the Home Rule Bill. He said:—"This was a measure which was to relieve England and Scotland from the Irish incubus, and to keep its people at home. How much it would succeed in this he left it to them to ascertain. That was one of the objects, and it was the only one he would touch upon, common to both Great Britain and Ireland. Let him say a word or two as to the way the Bill affected Irish Loyalists. They had been called as a term of reproach the 'English garrison in Ireland.' He accepted the designation, not as a term of reproach, but as a compliment; for had it not been for the English garrison in Ireland the position of England in the history of the world would be at this day different from what it was. He defied anyone to point out the name of a man who stood superior to his fellows, or who had left his mark in history, with perhaps the single instance of O'Connell, who had not belonged and sprung from that much-abused and persecuted English garrison. (Cheers). Whatever progress had been made in Ireland, and whatever degree of prosperity Ireland had attained, it was due to this selfsame English garrison, and he was not now alluding to Belfast or to Ulster; but, he said, let them go to Cork, to Dublin, to Limerick, or to Waterford, and wherever they saw a flourishing industry established, employing labour and spreading far and wide its beneficent influences, there they would find that industry had been established by a member of the English garrison. (Cheers, and a voice, 'The Scottish one, too.') These gentlemen were the men whom by this Bill it was proposed to hand over to their deadliest foes. Against the fate that was in store for them, they invoked the assistance of their English and Scottish brethren, not in a craven spirit, not in a spirit of supplication, or of asking them to stand before them and be a shelter to them, against the designs of their foes. They asked for nothing which they were not prepared to do for themselves. (Cheers.) Ulster had been called upon to do its duty. Speaking in the name of Ulster, he thought he might say it had done its duty, and it was prepared to do its duty still more; but they came to them in Scotland—their own flesh and blood, and bone and sinew—to help them, and he for one believed that appeal would not be made in vain. (Loud cheers). The resolution was then carried unanimously."

Correspondence.

THE VERANGIANS.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—May I call the attention of your correspondent, G. Vicars Brown, to Lardner's History of Russia, for a comprehensive account of the Verangians or Northmanni? In that work we learn that the Verangians were not only mercenaries willing to fight for the most liberal paymaster, but that they were the real founders of the Russian Empire, and the first to introduce Christianity into that country. They established themselves in Russia under circumstances similar to those which led their Anglo-Saxon brethren to take up their abode in Britain, dispossessing the Slavi of their sovereignty, to assume themselves the reins of government, which was ultimately seated at Novgorod, that city becoming the capital of the new Verangian monarchy.

Digitized by Google

Before the Slavi invited the aid of the Verangians, as masters of the Baltic, to assist them to repel the incursions of their enemies, they had commercial intercourse with Constantinople, an intercourse still more actively maintained by the Verangians, who, as your correspondent correctly affirms, were the mainstay of the Greek Empire. The historian, Gibbon, tells how troops of these Russian Scandinavians assembled at Constantinople to perform the duty of guards, and how their strength was supplemented by Verangians from England who were anxious to escape serving their Norman conquerors. These exiles, says Gibbon, were entertained in the Byzantine Court, and they preserved till the last age of the empire, the inheritance of spotless loyalty, and the use of the Danisb or English tongue.

The most curious fact associated with the Verangians is that modern Russia lays claim through the ancient Russian Scandinavian dynasty to the right to rule at Constantinople. That right, of course, belongs to British-Israel by virtue of its Thracian origin, and it would not be going too far to say that Russia itself would not be foreign territory to British-Israelite conquerors, if it should so happen that circumstances compelled a British occupation of that country.

Yours very truly, E. REEP.

April 20, 1893.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—In to-day's issue of the BANNER, Mr. James Willoughby asks "if it is anywhere recorded how long after 637, A.D., when the Saracens took Jerusalem, the Mosque of Omar was built, or begun to be built?"

The interval was fifty-one years, according to "Tent Work in Palestine," by Major C. R. Conder. He says that "The sacred rock, recovered and purified by Omar, was enclosed by the Khalif, Abd el Melek in the year 688, A.D., as stated in the great Cufic inscription upon the outer arcade of the Mosque—or, as it is more generally named, "the Dome of the Rock." The dome does not appear to have been built by Omar, although it bears his name, but by the aforementioned Khalif. Perhaps the fact of Omar having recovered and purified the Sacred Rock, may account for the building erected over it being named after him.

Yours truly,

ARTHUR R. GRANVILLE.

12, Avenue-road, Regent's-park, N.W., April 26, 1893.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—Enclosed I send you a cutting from a city newspaper, published as a leading article in all our papers, in regard to an alleged alliance between the United States, Russia, and France—a triple alliance which, if true, is startling and important news. Such an entangling alliance seems contrary to the policy and principles of this Government, and I can hardly believe that we, of the Anglo-Saxon race and Hebrew lineage, Manasseh, can unite with the hereditary enemies of our mother country, Great Britain—Russian Gog and Gentile France. Such an unholy alliance seems to me to be monstrous and unnatural, and I do not believe it can ever come to pass.

Notwithstanding all the talk and agitation about the annexation of Canada to the United States, I do not find in prophecy, nor do I believe, that Israel (Great Britain) will ever lose any other colony, or possession, than that child spoken of in Isa. xlix. 20, clearly predicting the loss (disruption) of these United States from the mother country, Great Britain. So when I read or hear of annexing the British possessions of Canada to the United States, I simply smile and say I know that never can come to pass.

But in reading the article referred to, this question comes up to my mind: In the not far distant future, in the great and decisive battle of Armageddon, to be fought upon the Plains of Palestine (see Ezek. xxxviii. and xxxix.) between Israel (Great Britain), her young lions (colonies), and allies, opposed to Gog (Russia) and her allies, what will be the attitude or part that Manasseh (our United States) will take in this, the grandest and most decisive conflict of the ages. Surely Manasseh-Israel will not be found fighting on the side and involved in the doom and destruction of the Gentile nations of Russian Gog and her allies. So far from that, I always maintain that there will yet be an alliance, offensive and defensive, between Great Britain and the United States, both branches of the great English-speaking race, Ephraim and Manasseh, one in blood and origin. Then we can dictate to and rule the world.

Can you, dear Philo-Israel, give us any light on this very interesting question? I feel a great interest in the subject, as I have no doubt Identity believers and readers of the BANNER OF ISRAEL will have also.

Yours in the belief of the coming glories of Israel,

THOS. SANFORD.

Detroit, Michigan, U.S.A., Feb. 17th, 1893.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—Mr. J. W. Brame, of Opunake, New Zealand, in the BANNER OF ISRAEL, No. 841, Feb. 8th, 1893, asks two questions. As you did not answer them, and as possibly no one else may, I make the following remarks.

QUESTION 1.—"Will Judah recognize Israel under her new name, or will the re-occupation of the land be accomplished in blind ignorance or unbelief on the part of the majority of both Houses?"

From our friend quoting on fourth line of his letter, "known by another name," I presume he is referring to Isa. lxv. 15, which name I take to be the British name. As to their re-occupying the land in ignorance or unbelief of their origin, I think Ezek. xxxvi. 37 shows us plainly that they will not return in ignorance, because God by his prophet says that He "will yet for this" (re-occupation in purity and prosperity) "be enquired of by the House of Israel to do it for them." How could the British ask God to restore them to the land did they suppose themselves to be Gentiles? So before they can ask to be restored to their land, they must know who they are and where they came from. When restored, other nations will know them as "the seed which the Lord hath blessed" (Isa. lxi. 9).

QUESTION 2.—"Is there any reason to suppose that Israel will resume her original name, or will the new name be perpetuated in that land?"

I presume Isaiah is speaking of Israel after the return to the land when he says, in chap. lxii. 2, "And thou shalt be called by a new name, which the mouth of the Lord shall name." It is, therefore, useless for us to try to give her that name to-day from our mouths. To sum up, shall we say that Israel, when cast out of her land, was to wander through the nations to her appointed place of safety, the British Isles, where she was to be called by another name. Then by finding out her origin and destiny from the Word of God, to supplicate God to be faithful to His oath and promises, and restore them to His land, and their God-given land, where they should "be called by a new name."

If you approve of the above, and no one else happens to send a better answer to Mr. Brame's questions, you can make use of it if you like. Yours truly,

ABRAHAM HENLY.

Banner's Ash, Wootton Bassett, Feb. 12, 1893.

P.S.—In reference to the next letter to that of Mr. Brame—one by "Primrose Dame"—I would say that for about six or seven years I have worn on my watch-chain what I thought was the Anglo-Israel badge—the royal coat-of-arms with, in Hebrew, "The Holy One of Israel is our King," and on the other side the traditional signet of David with "Ye are My witnesses." For my part I am not likely to take to another unless good reason can be shown why I should. And if a new badge comes out this year perhaps another will soon, and by-and-bye they may change as often as the moon.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed "PHILO-ISRAEL," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION for the BANNER OF ISRAEL, in Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts. To any country included in the Postal Union, including the following:—United Kingdom, Canada, America, Europe, New Zealand, Cape Colony, Victoria, Western Australia, Transvaal, Tasmania, South Australia, Queensland, Natal, New South Wales, India, Ceylon via Brindisi, 7s. per year, including postage.

All Post Office Orders, Cheques, &c., should be crossed "City Bank, Ludgate-hill, to the ac. of ROBERT BANKS AND SON." They will then only be paid to our account.

READING CASES for holding the Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts, may be had, price 2s. Sent post free on receipt of Postal Order.

THE ANNUAL VOLUMES, bound in handsome blue Cloth, price 8s.

THE MONTHLY PARTS, in tinted wrapper, published the last day of each month, 6d.

Englishmen should Circulate, at the Present Crisis,

NO ROME RULE.

AN IDENTITY LEAFLET.

UNION IS STRENGTH.

Price 1s. per 100 nett. 1,000 carriage paid to any address for 10s.

London: Robert Banks & Son Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

BRITISH-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION BADGE.

In Electro, upon German Silver Foundation.

Pendants 1/1. Brooches 1/10. Post Free.

Applications with P.O., should be sent to Mr. Lowe, British-Israel Association, 86, St. Martin's-lane, London, W.C.

Cloth boards. Second Edition.

ISRAEL: A THESIS.

By the Rev. DENIS HANAN, D.D.

Price 1s. 6d.; sent post free to any address on receipt of Postal Order.

London: ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, or by order of any bookseller.

Mr. E. HINE'S PUBLICATIONS

Can be obtained of ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London; or of ISAAC LOVELAND, Shoreham, Sevenoaks.

Lost Israel Found. One handsome Demy 8vo. vol., cloth, gilt edges. 3s. 6d., post 3s. 9d.

Forty-seven Identifications. 6d., post 7d.

Coming Glories. 6d., by post 7d.

Flashes of Light. 6d., by post 7d.

Oxford Wrong. 4d., by post 7d.

Anglo-Saxon Riddle. 2d., by post 2½d.

The Nation Warned, &c. 6d., by post 7d.

About half a million copies of these works have been sold.

"A WONDERFUL REMEDY."
"I WAS GIVEN UP BY ALL."
"SAVED FROM AN EARLY GRAVE."

Such are the words of grateful Patients' relative to their CASES OF

CONSUMPTION

CURED BY THE TREATMENT OF

MR. GEO. T. CONGREVE.

Read his Book, "ON CONSUMPTION, &c." which may be had post free for ONE SHILLING from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.; or may be ordered of any Bookseller.

NOTE.—CONSULTATIONS FREE at Coombe Lodge, Peckham, on TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings only. No Charge except the usual charge for three weeks or six weeks' supply of medicine. All Patients should read the book first.

NEW BADGES.

Gold Brooches, 6/3 and 4/-.
Scarf Pins, 4/9 and 3/9.
Pendants, large, 4/6; small, 2/9.
All Badges, Metal Gilt, 9d.

All Post Free. Applications, with Postal Order enclosed, to be sent to MRS. THOMPSON, 13, Pultney-st., Bath, or to MAJOR-GEN. CARLYLE BELL, St. Laurence Villa, Kingston-hill, Surrey.

NEW CATALOGUE of Works on Our Identity post free from R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN'S
IRISH
CAMBRIC HANDKERCHIEFS

ALL PURE FLAX. POST FREE.

Ladies' Hemmed—2/6, 3/3, 4/-, 4/11, 6/-, 7/2, 8/-, & 9/- per doz.
Gentlemen's Hemmed—4/-, 4/11, 5/9, 6/6, 7/5, 8/3, 9/3, & 10/6 per doz.
Hemstiched Ladies and Gents (excellent value) 6/- & 7/11 per doz., various widths & hems.
A Sample of THREE of either price sent by return of post, on receipt of postal order.
Very pretty Fancy Boxes, suitable for Presents, 4½d. extra.

V. W. THOMSON,
27. Dunluce Street, BELFAST.

DR. ROOKE'S SOLAR ELIXIR AND ORIENTAL PILLS

DR. ROOKE'S SOLAR ELIXIR AND ORIENTAL PILLS effect marvellous cures. 50 years reputation. Sold everywhere. Pills in boxes 1/1½, 2/9, and 4/6. The Elixir in bottles 2/9, 4/6, and 11/-
Dr. ROOKE, SCARBOROUGH, ENGLAND.

TEETH.—£1 A FULL SET

ESKELL'S.—CELEBRATED MAKE, £2 2s. Warranted and fitted in one visit. No extractions needed. HALF A MILLION SETS already supplied. The Nursing Record and Hospital World says:—We recommend all who require Reliable and Good Teeth at a small cost to go to Messrs. ESKELL, 445, Strand (facing Charing Cross Station), and 58, Ludgate Hill, City, London. Also at 27, Western Road, Brighton, and 23, Mount Pleasant, Tunbridge Wells. Hours 9 till 7. Apply for Illustrated Pamphlet free (mention this paper). Established 100 years.

"THE WORLD'S PROVED REMEDY FOR ALL CHEST DISEASES."

COUGH,
ASTHMA,
CHRONIC BRONCHITIS,
INFLUENZA,

THERE IS NONE TO EQUAL IT.

REV. F. E. HEAPE, of DERBY, in a recent letter, says: "Your Medicine always puts my lungs right, and drove out the terrible INFLUENZA last May."

This Medicine has been prepared for 65 years.

CONGREVE'S
BALSAMIC
ELIXIR.

In Bottles, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 22s., may be had of all Chemists and Medicine Vendors.

TEA! TEA! TEA!
FROM
INDIA, CEYLON, AND CHINA.

Best Quality and Best Value.

From 1/6 to 3/6 per lb. Samples Gratis.

Carriage Paid on Parcels of 6lbs. and upwards.

Robinson & James,
42, TRINITY SQUARE, TOWER HILL
LONDON, E.C.

TOOTH-ACHE
CURED INSTANTLY BY
BUNTER'S NERVINE

Prevents Decay, Saves Extraction, Sleepless Nights Prevented.
Neuralgic Headaches and all Nerve Pains removed by BUNTER'S NERVINE. All Chemists, 1s. 1½d.

MASON'S KILLCORN

"AN EXCELLENT THING."

You need not suffer any longer from Corns, Warts, or Bunions. "WONDERFUL KILLCORN" will cure you. This is what a cottish Postman writes:—"I have been nearly crippled with corns, but am now completely cured by your wonderful 'Killcorn.'"

1s. PER BOTTLE.

Ask for MASON'S KILLCORN and don't have any other. Sold by all Chemists Patent Medicine Vendors, and at all stores, or sent post free for 12 stamps by the Proprietor W. B. MASON, 26 & 27, High Holborn, London, W.C., and 18, Guildford-street, Leeds.

THE WORLD'S CORN CURER

Digitized by Google

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The Geography of the Gates. With Map and six full-page, and one double-page, Illustrations, printed on plate paper. 208 pages, in handsome cloth, gilt. Second Edition, Price 2s. 6d.; post free for P.O.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific. 56 pages. Price 4d.; by post 4½d.

Are the English People the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel? An Inquiry Establishing the Identity of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 4d.; by post 4½d.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d.; by post 4½d. Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters."

Historical, Ethnic, and Philological Arguments in Proof of the British Identity with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel, Clearly and Simply Stated. Price 2d.; by post 2½d.

The History of the House of Israel: How They were Lost, and How They were Found. Told for the Children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fifth Edition.

Our Identity: What it is Not; What it is; and Our Obligations To-day in Respect to it. Price 2d.; a reduction for quantities.

Philo-Israel's Leaflets. 4 pages, crown 8vo. Price 1s. 6d. per 100, postage 2d. Assorted packets, 1s. 8d. 19 different subjects.

The British Constitution. Followed by "A NECESSARY CONSEQUENCE," by L. P. Price 3d., post free 3½d.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument, Proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100, postage 6d.

Anglo-Israelism. True, Not False. Being Philo-Israel's Reply to the Rev. Canon Bell's Pamphlet, "Anglo-Israelism: True or False?" Price 1d.; 6s. 6d. per 100. 16 pages, crown 8vo.

Egypt's Place in the Bible. By PHILO-ISRAEL. A Paper read before the Clerical and Lay Association at Bristol and Clifton. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100.

London: R. BANKS & SON Racquet-court, E.C.

WORKS BY J. LEYLAND FEILDEN, Esq.

The Word, the World, the Branch. Handsomely printed in Octavo, substantially bound, and ILLUSTRATED BY A LARGE DIAGRAM, or Chart of the Line of Time, from the Creation to the Final Destruction of the World, comprehending a Period of Fifty Thousand Four Hundred Years. Also Illustrated by Separate Diagrams of the Six Days, or Periods of Creation, and of the Seventh Day of Millennial Rest. Price 12s., sent carriage paid on receip of remittance.

Lux. "A Saint said to be a Wonderful Numberer" (Dan. viii. 13). "God hath numbered thy kingdomand finished it" (Dan. v. 26). Price 1s., post free for Postal Order

The Meeting of the Nations in the Universal Day. 1s., post free. A book for the times.

Links in the Chain of Evidence Connecting Israel and England. Price 2s. 6d., cloth, gilt, by post 2s. 9d.

Israel's Jubilee; or, 1882. Contents:—"Children of the Most High"—Four Folds: One Flock—"The Dust of Jacob"—Who Are the Gentiles?—Bethlehem and Greenwich—"The Princesses, the King's Daughters"—The Testimony of the Pyramid—Who Are the Turks?—Who Are the Russians?—Ritualism—The Three Destructions—The Site of the Temple—"The Ransomed of the Lord Shall Return"—Temple Bar—"Behold the Fig Tree"—The Lia Fail, or Fatal Stone—The Number Fifty-Two—A Dream—The Cross a Symbol of Paganism. Price 1s. 6d., 2s., and 2s. 6d.; by post 1s. 8d., 2s. 2d., and 2s. 9d.

The Gentiles and the Times of the Gentiles. Price 6d., by post 7d.

Israel Ubiquitous: A Letter to an Enquirer By "Reuben." With Diagram. Price 4d.

Genealogy of the Brigantes or Douglas A Synopsis of the Genealogy of the Most Antient and Most Noble Family of the Brigantes or Douglas. Price 6d., post free

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st And, by order, of any Bookseller.

THIRD EDITION NOW READY.
With 38 Additional Pages.

Paper Cover, Price 1s. nett., postage 2d. extra Limp Boards, lettered, 1s. 6d., postage 2d. extra. Cloth boards, gilt lettered, thick toned paper 2s., postage 3d. extra.

BRITISH-ISRAEL TRUTH

A Handbook for Enquirers.

EDITED BY

REV. DENIS HANAN, M.A., D.D.,

AND

H. ALDER-SMITH, M.B., F.R.C.S

WITH A CHART AND MAP.

"British-Israel Truth." Edited by the Rev. Denis Hanan and H. Alder-mith (R. Banks & Son.)—The sale of the first edition of this work, and the consequent issue of a second, shows that there is a growing interest in the study of the questions of the Israelitish origin of the English speaking people. Clever, interesting, pathetic, and showing considerable research, the volume has been a success, and doubtless has made some converts.—THE ROCK.

ROBERT BANKS AND SON, Racquet-ct., Fleet-st., E.C

Dr. JOSEPH WILD'S WORKS

THE LOST TEN TRIBES

Price 3s., post free 3s. 3d.

The FUTURE of ISRAEL and JUDAH,

Price 2s., post free 2s. 2d.

The Special Commissioner of the Christian World, writing of Dr. Wild, says:—"On Sunday evening I had to fight my way into the Congregational Church of which Dr. Wild is the minister. He hails from America, and is quite the sensation of the hour. There was no standing-room anywhere, and as I made to the door I met many coming away. However, I had made up my mind to hear the Doctor, and hear him I did. It seems that the subscribers have a door to themselves; I made for it, and luckily found a chair, which I wedged in under the platform. The Doctor prayed and then we had a sermon about Revelation, containing much that was very effective, if not about his text, at any rate about that mysterious part of Scripture from which the text was taken."

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

Special arrangements have been made for supplying at REDUCED PRICE, carriage paid to any address in the United Kingdom or the Colonies, copies of the Fifth and last Edition, published at 16s.,

FOR 11s. 6d.

PROFESSOR C. PIAZZI SMYTH'S

Well-known work,

OUR INHERITANCE

IN THE

GREAT PYRAMID,

with

TWENTY-FIVE EXPLANATORY PLATES,

showing the more crucial parts of this really Anti-Egyptian and most Primeval Structure, in Plan, Elevation, and Section.

As the number of copies to be offered at this reduced price is limited, early application should be made direct to Messrs. R. Banks and Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London.

AT SPECIALLY REDUCED PRICE.

Price 2s. 6d. Cheap Edition, 1s.

Bible Lessons and Reflections,

By ROBERT GAIRDNER,

OF KILMARNOCK, N.B.

"Mr. Gairdner has given us in his book a series of Bible lessons, with his own reflections added thereto, and though he has been very cautious in the latter, and has not committed himself too broadly, he has plainly let it be seen that he is an Anglo-Israelite by conviction, and that the Scriptures which he quoets at length and extensively throughout his book, are meant to teach Our Identity and God's faithfulness, from first to last, to His promises to Abraham and his seed for ever."—Banner of Israel.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C

PAGE WOODCOCK'S

WIND PILLS

It is astonishing how many people imagine they suffer from

HEART DISEASE

They experience a depressing feeling about the region of the heart, accompanied by an occasional stab of pain, nervous debility, loss of appetite and general depression. The fact is they suffer from

INDIGESTION, OR DYSPEPSIA.

The food, instead of being thoroughly digested, develops into Wind, and flies about the valves of the heart, causing the symptoms named. All who suffer in this way should at once take

Page Woodcock's Wind Pills,

A world-renowned remedy for all Stomach disorders.

All Sufferers from INDIGESTION, LIVER COMPLAINTS, WIND on the STOMACH, COSTIVENESS, SICK HEADACHE, HEARTBURN, NERVOUS DEBILITY, PALPITATION of the HEART, BILIOUSNESS, &c.,

should avail themselves of this most excellent medicine.

Of all Medicine Vendors, at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d., or Post Free for P.O. or Stamps, from PAGE WOODCOCK, Lincoln.

A PRESENT.

SEND us your address, mentioning this paper, and we will make you a present of the best guide to health yet published. It is only a little book, but it is of great value to all who are ill or indisposed.—GORDON, MURRAY, & CO., LIMITED, 10, Adam Street, Strand, W.C.

Jehovah Triumphant. The New and Complete Theology and Electric Light of the Bible, containing the History of British-Israel, compiled from the Sacred Scriptures. A handsome crown 8vo., cloth bound volume of 550 pages, with Index of Scripture references. Price 5s. (published at 10s.), post free for P.O.

Where are the Ten Tribes? By William Greig, of Montreal, Canada. With Introduction by Philo-Israel. Published at 6d.; offered at 3d.

R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

CORPULENCE.

All persons suffering from this burdensome and dangerous state of the body, and even those developing tendencies thereto, should CALL TO-DAY, IF POSSIBLE, or write at once for the Medical Battery Company's treatise on the subject.

The book contains valuable ADVICE HOW, in a simple, rational, and effective manner, without resorting either to drastic medicines, quack prescriptions, poisonous preparations, or starvation dietary,

OBESITY IS CURED, and will be sent, gratis and post free, on application to the Medical Battery Company, Limited,

52 OXFORD ST., LONDON, W.

(Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co. (Ltd.) 23, Paternoster-row. Wednesday MAY 17, 1893.

All Rights Reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India)

"And the Remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORN with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS OF THE EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XVII., No. 856. Entered at Stationer's Hall.] WEDNESDAY, MAY 24, 1893 [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

PAGE
The Integrity of the Empire of the Queen 253
"The Son of Man Came Not to be Ministered Unto, but to Minister" 254
A Nation and a Company of Nations. By John J. Anderson 255
The Witness of God: and the Witnesses to God 256
The Throne of the Lord (Exod. xvii. 16). By the Rev. Denis Hanan, D.D..... 257
The Tribe of Dan. By W. H. Larkins, Lieut.-Colonel. Part I..... 258
The Urgency of Missions in the Light of Prophecy. By Rev. H. De St. Dalmas 259
Tract Society Facts.. 261
Gleanings. By J. Thomson 261
Correspondence..... 262

THE INTEGRITY OF THE EMPIRE OF THE QUEEN.

THERE was a fine passage in the peroration of Mr. J. Chamberlain, M.P.'s, speech in the Guildhall, London, when the citizens, with the Lord Mayor at their head, met to consider the Home Rule Bill. The able member for Birmingham delivered a masterly address, which was worthy of the occasion and of the locality in which it was spoken. The procession of the members of the Stock Exchange to the Guildhall was one of the remarkable features of the meeting, and proved that the wealth of London is against Mr. Gladstone's proposals as to the future government of Ireland. Without adverting at all to the various able arguments of the speaker in opposition to the Bill before the House of Commons, we quote Mr. Chamberlain's last words on the "conditions of empire," which cannot fail to be interesting. He said:—

It is not by your numbers alone, it is not by your wealth alone, that you maintain the peace in the great territory over which floats the British flag and which owns allegiance to the Queen. Why, in India alone you have nearly 300 millions of fellow-subjects of rival and contending nations, many of them very brave and many of them very intelligent. If they were united to repel your rule, by their very breath almost they could blow you into the ocean from whence you came. How, then, is this miracle accomplished? How is this miracle to be continued? We hear now strange doctrines—doctrines of scuttle and surrender (hisses) and of self-humiliation. We are told, forsooth, that our race stands in need of discipline. We are told that we are to bow to the criticism of what is called the civilized world. (Laughter.) Not, indeed, the criticism of those who throughout the civilized world have entitled themselves to be regarded as judges; for I defy you to find one single statesman of eminence and impartiality who would not tell you that he thinks the policy of Mr. Gladstone to be suicidal to the interest of Great Britain. (Cheers.) No; the civilized world to which we are to listen is the civilized world which is made up of our competitors in the struggle for existence, of those who envy our prosperity and who would gladly assist in the decline and fall of the British Empire. (Cheers.) I ask you to consider, where should we have been if doctrines like this had prevailed in the centuries which saw the growth of our Empire? We should have been disciplined to some good purpose by the Spanish Armada. (Cheers.) We should have recoiled from the power of France. We should have been humiliated by Russia. We should have shrunk from the responsibility attending every extension of empire. We should have been cribbed, cabined, and confined within these two small islands, and we should have foregone our part and our glorious share in the civilization of Asia and Africa, and in the creation of new nations of our own blood on the continents of America and Australia. (Cheers). We have been saved from this shame, we have been saved possibly from extinction, by the capacity of our statesmen and by the courage of our people. (Cheers.) At any cost, at any sacrifice, through the long years the British people adhered to two principles of government. One was never to desert a friend. (Cheers.) The other was never to quail before a foe. (Loud cheers.) Now our turn has come. We also are called upon to meet a crisis in our national fate. Are we going to reverse the policy of our ancestors—(cries of "No")—a policy which has been approved down to the last few years by every statesman and every party in this country? (Cheers.) Are we going to scorn the example which they have set us? Are we going, in order to gain deceptive ease, to stand back after we have put our hands to the plough? (Cries of "No.") I have read that in the later days of the Roman Empire, in the decadence of its power, the Roman people did not scruple to destroy the great edifices which were the monuments of their former magnificence and pride in order to serve their own daily and petty purposes. Is that to be our case? (Cries of "No.") Are we, in order to promote personal ambition, or in order to serve party purposes, to endanger the great monuments of Imperial dominion? Because the government of Ireland is difficult, because success has not immediately followed our efforts, because it tarries long, is that a reason why we should flinch before a sordid conspiracy of political adventurers? (Loud cheers.) Is that any reason why we should abandon the task which we have undertaken, why we should desert our friends, why we should commit political suicide, why we should lose our place in the councils of the world? (Cheers.) I hope I do not presume when I say this is a historic meeting. (Cheers.) It is held here in your ancient hall, which recalls the patriotism and the resolution of the citizens of London on so many occasions of difficulty and danger. It is attended by the representative of all those forces which have made this metropolis what it is. You, my Lord Mayor, represent here the titular headship of the great municipalities of the kingdom. You are supported by the representatives of that commerce which has carried our flag to every corner of the globe, by the representatives of the finance which holds in its hands the destinies of kingdoms, by the representatives of a science which has multiplied a hundredfold the natural forces of mankind, by the representatives of an industry and enterprise which have made our position unique, among the communities of the world. (Cheers.) To this meeting, so constituted, so qualified, and so inspired, I appeal to maintain the interests of the United Kingdom, the honour of Great Britain, and the integrity of the Empire of the Queen. (Loud and continued cheers.)

Digitized by Google

Mr. Chamberlain, appealing to all the secondary agencies which in the hand of God have made our nation great, mighty, powerful, and wealthy, missed the chief cause of all—our Israelitish origin! Neither finance, nor commerce, nor science, nor industry, nor enterprise are able to maintain the interests of this nation in one single item or instance. The honour of Great Britain, the integrity of the Empire, and the interests of the United Kingdom are not really advanced by the blessings named by the speaker, but only by God's providential care of His people and by His faithfulness to His promises to Abraham and his seed for ever. He uses these means to give greatness and prosperity to His people Israel and so to prove their origin and dignity as His sole or chief agents for the blessing of the whole world. Throughout the Scriptures the Lord always represents the success and greatness of Israel as the result of His own directing and guiding hand. They are blind, but He leads them (Isa. xlii. 16, R.V.). They are poor, but He gives them the power to get wealth (Deut. viii. 18). They have in themselves no strength, but He is their fortress and deliverer (Psa. xxxi. 3). They cannot by themselves cease from rebellion and backsliding, from idolatry and departure from the living God their Father. But He can and will put His law in their mind and write it in their hearts, be to them a God, and take them to be His people, and as to their sins and their iniquities, He will remember them no more (Jer. xxxi. 33—34; Heb. viii. 10—12). They were once the fewest of all people (Deut. vii. 7), but He is resolved to make them "as the sand of the sea, which cannot be measured nor numbered" (Hosea i. 10); as the stars of heaven, and as the dust of the earth (Gen. xxii. 17; xiii. 16) —which are equally beyond all calculation.

Mr. Chamberlain evidently entertains the fear that if certain courses are pursued by the Government of the day and by this nation, the end may be national suicide, disaster, and loss of honour. Such fears, in the light of Our Identity, are vain, and dishonouring to our God. His promises to His people are unconditional, and we do not well to throw doubt upon the truth as it has been revealed to our race, or imagine that "He who keepeth Israel will either slumber or sleep" (Psa. cxxi. 4). He promised "to our forefather Abraham and his seed for ever" that because he had obeyed His voice, "blessing He would bless him, and multiplying He would multiply his seed as the stars of the heaven and as the sand which is upon the sea shore, and that his seed should possess the Gate of his enemies;" also (turning to the spiritual side of the question) "that in his" (Abraham's) "seed all the nations of the earth should be blessed" (Gen. xxii. 17, 18).

Of Abraham's seed came the Lord Jesus Christ, the Heir of all the promises, and the federal Head of the chosen race, in whose hand all the covenanted gifts were headed up to be distributed in the latter days after the First Advent, but before the Second. The British being Israel, the integrity of our Queen's Empire is safe and assured, because our King, the Lord Jesus Christ, whom she represents, seated on the throne of the House of Israel, has promised that "the kingdom and dominion, and greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High"—and this people are they (Dan. vii. 27). In the play of political parties these considerations never have place, because God is ignored, His plans and purposes are set aside, and men argue as if all events are shaped by their own actions, without reference to His providence guiding all.

Mr. Gladstone's "Home Rule Bill for Ireland," which was the subject of protest at the Guildhall, on May 3rd last, runs counter to the prophecies in several important respects which we have already pointed out in these pages, and we need not repeat them. We therefore conclude that he will not succeed, but that Ireland will not be separated from Great Britain, and the legislative separation he has set his heart upon will never be carried out. The struggles on which the nation has entered will, we suppose, conduce to the final firmer union of the two islands; and as the northern and southern states of the American Union after a fierce war became more one than before, so we believe Great Britain and Ireland, as the result of this Bill, will prove that the Scriptures are true in regard to the isles of the west, where Israel's domicile is fixed by Isa. xxiv. 15; 2 Sam. vii. 10; Jer. xxxi. 10. To the Lord let Israel give all the praise!

"THE SON OF MAN CAME NOT TO BE MINISTERED UNTO, BUT TO MINISTER."

THESE were the words of the Lord Jesus Christ Himself, as contained in Matt. xx. 28, and they teach a great and important lesson hardly understood by many. Spiritual blessings and things concerning the salvation of the soul are not received because we minister and work for the Lord, propitiating Him, as it were, by our services for His people or for Himself. Our acceptance does not depend on any such service! Our ministry for the Lord can buy nothing at His hands, for it is worthless. But it is acceptable only as the grateful return for the Lord's ministry for us, and for the sacrifice of His life, given as "a ransom for many." Ours must be the ministry of thanksgiving for salvation received through the Lord's sacrifice for us. He came not "to be ministered unto" in order that as the reward of such ministry on our part He might recompense us with His blessing. It is in vain that all false religions, without exception, teach the value of good works as meriting the things belonging to salvation. They can do nothing of the sort—of themselves they emanate from a tainted and evil source, the heart of man. But they become acceptable to God only through the merits of the God-man—who ministered to us by giving His life "a ransom for many."

This subject has a bearing on Our Identity and answers a class of objectors who say we pride ourselves on our national greatness and good works, dishonouring the Lord in proportion as we exalt our nation. But this is not our view, nor the teaching of those who glory in Our Identity. Our reading of the Word compels us to acknowledge that the lost tribes are in themselves no better than they were in Moses' days, when he wrote against the whole of the nation the terrible indictment recorded in Deut. ix. 5—24.

Digitized by Google

They were a rebellious people then in God's sight, and they remain so still. Their good works thus, since they emanate from themselves, are of no avail at all as meriting salvation and cannot receive the blessing of God. The people of God's choice, unless they be ransomed before Him, by the blood of a worthy sacrifice cannot advance one step towards "showing forth His praise," or prove that God's favour rests upon them. The Son of Man must first come to minister for them and give His life a ransom for Israel, before they can bring forth the fruits of the kingdom of God or acknowledge Him as King (Matt. xx. 28, xxi. 43). God must "form" the people, "make," "create and redeem them" before they can "show forth His praise" (Isa. xliii. 1, 7, 21). We who believe in Our Identity hold these doctrines most firmly, and know that but for the merits, death, and resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ, Israel's good fruits, even the fruits of the kingdom, cannot recommend them to God, or be meritorious in His sight in the slightest degree. Hence the vast importance of the great redemption through Christ Jesus our Lord, in Israel's case, and the necessity we are under of insisting on Christ's work as the very foundation of all our hopes respecting the British-Israelite nation. Before they can minister to Christ, to His people, or to the world at large, there must have been Christ's ministry for them, and the application of the sacrifice of His precious life-blood, to make Israel's work presentable to our Holy God. He must teach them, clothe them with the robe of His righteousness, and fill them with His Spirit before they can do acceptable service for Him. The promise that He will do so is contained in the following Scriptures: "He showeth His word unto Jacob, His statutes and His judgments unto Israel. He hath not dealt so with any nation, and as for His judgments, they have not known them. Praise ye the Lord" (Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20). "I will greatly rejoice in the Lord. My soul shall be joyful in my God. For He hath clothed me with the garments of salvation. He hath covered me with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with her jewels" (Isa. lxi. 10). "I will dwell among the children of Israel, and will be their God. And they shall know that I am the Lord their God, that brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, that I may dwell among them. I am the Lord their God" (Exodus xxix. 45, 46). "According to the Word that I covenanted with you when ye came out of Egypt; so My Spirit remaineth among you; fear ye not" (Haggai ii. 5).

It is a comfort and satisfaction to us to know that the Lord has done all these good things for our nation, and that He will never fail us to the end. He has given us a great work to do for the nations, but He has first granted us, as a people, the power, and the ability, and the sprinkling of the Blood to qualify us for His service. He has ministered to our nation first, that we may be able, in our unworthiness, to minister to Him by preaching the Gospel to the world lying in the wicked one, which He loved so greatly (John iii. 16).

To Ratepayers—A Contrast.—While the rateable value of England is £160,000,000, that of Ireland is only £14,033,594.

A NATION AND A COMPANY OF NATIONS.

By John J. Anderson.

Another step has just been taken towards the federation of the Empire, but, although there does not seem to be very much about which to boast, it is satisfactory inasmuch as it will keep the subject before the country, and when the report reaches the colonies, may bring some response from them.

An article under the above heading in the Banner of Israel, of March 15th, detailed the progress made by the Imperial Federation League up to and including a summary of the report issued by that body, at the suggestion of the Marquis of Salisbury while he was Prime Minister. We have now the pleasure of reporting that according to the Standard of this morning a deputation from the League waited upon the Prime Minister at his official residence, 10, Downing-street, yesterday. Included in the deputation were Lord Brassey, Mr. E. Stanhope, M.P., Mr. W. L. Jackson, M.P., Sir John Colomb, Mr. H. O. Arnold-Forster, M.P., Lord Lamington, Mr. James Rankin, M.P., Sir Charles Tupper, Mr. A. H. Loring (secretary), Mr. George Howell, M.P., Sir C. Pearson, M.P., Mr. H. L W. Lawson, M.P., Colonel C. E. Howard Vincent, M.P., Sir F. Young, Mr. Heneage, M.P., Captain C. Norton, M.P., Archdeacon Sinclair, Sir A. Hickman, M.P., and several ladies. Mr. Gladstone was accompanied by Professor Bryce, M.P., and Mr. S. Buxton, M.P.

Mr. Stanhope introduced a depution, and informed Mr. Gladstone that the Imperial Federation League, originally founded by Mr. Forster, has since been presided over by men of both political parties, whose endeavour it has always been to avoid any subject that approaches the domain of party politics, and that the object of the League is to take all measures possible for securing the permanent unity of the Empire. He concluded a long speech by pointing out that the desired scheme can only be arrived at by a conference with the colonies, and called upon the initiative of the Imperial Government:—

"I am not suggesting that we want to press the present moment or any moment to be selected as the right one for the conference; that must be a matter for the judgment and the decision of the Imperial Government, and the Imperial Government alone; but what we do desire to press upon you to-day is, that this important question of Imperial defence ought to be at the present time most carefully considered, with a view of being brought to the test and examination of a conference whenever you and your colleagues think that the moment is opportune. (Hear, hear.)

"Lord Brassey said: We are here to-day to submit certain tentative proposals dealing with the mutual responsibilities of the mother country and the colonies. But it is not inappropriate to insist that the task of formulating plans of such a nature is not the primary and essential purpose of the Imperial Federation League. In the view of the late Mr. Forster, its founder, in the view of his successor in the office of President, Lord Rosebery, our association has been mainly regarded as an agency for the cultivation of the warmest feelings of interest, pride, sympathy, and affection, on the part of our people at home towards their fellow-citizens in the colonies. Assured as we are that these feelings exist, we are not impatient to press the changes in the Federal relations of the Empire. . . . We wished to do something to bring home to every British subject, whether in the mother country or in the colonies, the disadvantages of separation, and the strength for defence, and the influence in preserving the peace of the world, which we should secure by remaining one people. (Hear, hear.)

Digitized by Google

"Sir John Colomb thought the present relationship of the self-governing colonies and the mother country might be described "as a profit-sharing partnership, in which we assumed unlimited liability and bore the costs of management, the other partners paying no costs and being under no liability. It was not the fault of the colonies that this state of things existed. . . . But the League believed that a conference would do much towards laying the foundations of a system of co-operation between the colonies and ourselves in defence of interests mutual and vital."

Mr. G. Howell, M.P., said they recognised that there were great difficulties in the way, but they also recognised that great statesmen were sent to us to grapple with and overcome those difficulties.

Mr. Gladstone replied in a long speech of which the following is as nearly as possible a summary. He first acknowledged the very interesting character of the speeches just made, and of the report which had been placed in his hands, but felt that he appeared more as a learner than a teacher, not that the subject of colonial relations was new to him for the first years of his Parliamentary life were mainly given to colonial subjects. He thought it quite unnecessary to be particular in disclaiming all reference to the politics of party, not having any apprehension of any such intrusion, and he made his contribution to that purpose by saying that he concurred in the declaration of Lord Salisbury made upon a very similar occasion and cited in the report which he had the satisfaction of reading. He stated that undoubtedly his end was the same as that professed by the League—namely, the consolidation and strengthening of the Empire. "And," he continued, "moreover, we frankly admit that if it can be shown that we do not tend by our proposals to that end, those proposals ought to be entirely rejected; but not only is there, I think, an agreement, but I think there is a very warm agreement upon the subject that the general purposes of your union are purposes deserving of the highest commendation . . . where it is said that you proceed upon the assumption that a general desire exists for maintaining the unity of the Empire and making its organisation more perfect, especially for the purposes of defence." He thought therefore that so far as the bases are concerned there could be no room for difference either as to the aye or no upon the propositions or as to the degree of interest attached to them. He entered into the broad proposition of unity of the Empire by all practical means, but not by reversing again the principles of our commercial legislation and introducing preferences into the terms upon which commodities imported oversea are received in the ports of the United Kingdom. He alluded to Mr. Stanhope desiring that there should be a unity of defence, and by that he understood that the defence, which has heretofore been carried on in critical times by the central authority, shall be carried on as far as possible by the united action of this country and of the self-governing colonies. While feeling that it would be attended by enormous difficulty upon every side he certainly conceded to the League that the attainment of that end would be the attainment of an end of enormous value. Before the Imperial authority could be set to work, it must largely inform itself of the condition of feeling in the colonies and what they were prepared not only to accept, but to welcome, and likewise with respect to the state of opinion in this country. Lord Salisbury wisely stated to the League that it would be necessary to lay before him a definite scheme before any conference could be called, and what he now referred to in the report shows that Lord Salisbury did not at all underrate the great importance of the preliminaries of the issuing of such an invitation.

In conclusion he said: "In truth, if I may say so, while I am sensible of the value of the suggestions that you have been good enough to address to me, I regard those suggestions, and I regard this meeting, this deputation, as having for its main object to become a contribution to that great process of drawing the public mind to the serious consideration, how far is it possible to improve the arrangements under which the defence of the Empire is to be conducted in future times and in future emergencies. You feel, and we all feel, that the public mind of this country is too largely occupied at the present moment with very great questions of Imperial interest and of domestic interest to allow us to suppose that any immediate step can be taken. You have wisely refrained from suggesting it, and I recognise your forbearance in that respect. . . . The possibility of progress is what we want to ascertain. That can only be ascertained by the working of the many minds perhaps for some time and with the aid of free inter-communication of ideas. But if that progress can be attained, undoubtedly an immense advance will be made in the consolidation of the Empire, and in the union of the vast multitudes of those who now compose it, and who in still greater numbers are likely to compose it hereafter. (Cheers.)

"Mr. Stanhope thanked Mr. Gladstone for his sympathetic speech, and the deputation then withdrew."

Every great measure involving changes of any sort must require mature consideration, and, as reforms can only be carried out gradually, we hope as time progresses the subject being kept well to the front on every possible occasion, we shall perceive a growing desire on the part of the nation to complete the project in an efficient manner. The people were told in ages past that without their co-operation God would not act for them; so we must urge on our fellow-countrymen and women the necessity of taking heed unto the promise made to Israel, for, although being Israel, there can be no doubt as to the ultimate result, God expects us to do something ourselves otherwise He will withhold the good for a season. How easy that something is will be found in Psa. lxxxi. 10, "I am the Lord thy God which brought thee out of the land of Egypt: open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it."

Croydon, April 14. 1893.

THE WITNESS OF GOD: AND THE WITNESSES TO GOD.

It is a solemn thought that God has borne witness to men, and that witness they must needs accept, or failing to do so, must lie open to the tremendous charge that refusing to believe Him they make Him a liar, because they believe not "the witness" that He "gave of His Son" (1 John v. 9, 10, R.V.). That this is the testimony of Scripture that passage proves. It runs thus: "If we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater; for the witness of God is this, that He hath borne witness concerning His Son. He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in him: he that believeth not God hath made Him a liar; because he hath not believed in the witness that God hath borne concerning His Son. And the witness is this: that God gave unto us eternal life, and this life is in His Son. He that hath the Son hath the life; he that hath not the Son of God hath not the life." Where has God given us this "witness," or testimony, which some men receive and others reject? Nowhere but in "His Word written"—that is, in the Bible! For "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness (1 Tim. iii. 16, 17). And again, "The prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" (2 Peter i. 21). This "Word written," God Himself declared in Hosea viii. 12, was "written to Ephraim" by Him, "but the words were counted as a strange thing." Here then is God's witness to men, which we reject at our peril. But wonderful to say, the Lord our God, who has His witness to give to men, requires from a certain race of men, a witness or testimony that He Himself exists. The infidel rejects God's witness regarding His Son Jesus Christ, because he has no consciousness, or evidence of the witness in himself. He disbelieves God, having no knowledge that He exists, or that He has spoken to man in His Word: "The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God" (Psa. xiv. 1, R.V.). All have gone astray! None seek after God; none understand! To such, God's witness regarding His Son goes for nothing. They do not believe in the existence of God, or of His Son; and they desire not eternal life, or care that it shall not be theirs for ever! What these persons, called "fools" in God's Word, want is some cogent proof that God exists, and that He is Omnipotent to punish and to reward. Convince them that He exists, and that He has spoken to men by His "Word written," then they will see and believe, as experience proves, that they are sinners before the Lord, and that their only hope is through the atonement by blood, of the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God. God foresaw that necessity, and has wonderfully provided for it in His lovingkindness and tender mercy towards His sinful, but weak and stubborn creatures. He has constituted a nation to be His witnesses that He is God, and bids us study Israel's history in order to see that He has foreseen it from first to last, has predicted it in His Word, and has step by step provided that it should be carried out in the nation's life according to the prophecies. In Isa. xliii. 8—12, R.V., we have the case stated by God Himself concerning Israel, thus: "Bring forth the blind people that have eyes (Israel), and the deaf that have ears (Judah). Let all the nations be gathered together, and let the people be assembled. Who among them can declare this and show us former things? Let them bring their witnesses, that they may be justified, or let them hear and say, 'It is truth.' Ye are My witnesses, saith the Lord, and My servant whom I have chosen, that ye may know and believe Me, and understand that I am He. Before Me there was no God formed: neither shall there be after Me. I, even I, am the Lord; and beside Me there is no Saviour. I have declared, and I have saved, and I have shewed, and there was no strange God among you. Therefore ye are My witnesses, saith the Lord, and (or that) I am God." While all the nations, non-Israelites by race, are assembled, and fail to show from their history any details to prove God's omniscience, Israel, God's chosen nation, have lived under distinct predictions contained in great detail in the Word; and these fulfilled in every iota, jot, and tittle, suffice to prove that God knew and marked out in prophecy every step of their historical after life, and so proved that He is God. Israel are witnesses to the fact, because God's "written Word" is attested to be true by Israel's history in correspondence with the prophecies, showing that He who wrote the latter must be the Omniscient One, even God. We have, to our personal knowledge, seen the effect of this argument on those whose eyes have been previously shut to the value of Our Identity. We have recognised the effect on those, who believing nothing as to the way of salvation by Jesus Christ the Lord, have seen that British history is Scriptural prophecy regarding the House of Israel, fulfilled to the very letter, and with that knowledge have discovered from the Word their own lost and sinful condition, but their personal salvation through the sacrifice at Calvary. "The witness of God" is essential to those who are the heirs of salvation, and by the means of it become the possessors of the life which is in God the Son. But "the witnesses of God that He exists," and is Omniscient as well as Almighty, are needful for those who cannot see the truth without objective evidence such as we offer them, and so obtain "the life," which is the gift of God through Jesus Christ our Lord. Therefore let British-Israel praise the Lord for His faithfulness and truth.

Digitized by Google

THE THRONE OF THE LORD.

(Exod. xvii. 16.)

By the Rev. Denis Hanan, D.D.

A reference to the marginal readings both in the A. V. and R. V. will show the difficulties in translating this verse. This difficulty is admitted by the "Speaker's Commentary," and the correctness of the marginal reading is acknowledged. But evidently the translators saw no connection between "the throne of the Lord" and the denunciation against Amalek, and therefore they translated the Hebrew words yad al kes "the Lord hath sworn." These words occur in no other place as far as I have been able to ascertain, and they mean "a hand lifted up upon (or against) the throne of the Lord" (see marg. R.V.). It seems to me that there is an explanation, which makes the literal translation the absolute expression of the truth, and that the difficulty which arises from the commonly-received opinion that the throne of the Lord was not in existence until the monarchy was established, will be removed by the fact that it had both its origin and its symbol long before.

When the promise of empire made to Abraham was renewed to Jacob, he vowed that the stone that had been his pillow would be God's house, and although the inspired record does not give much prominence to the later history and symbolism of the pillow, we can find out a great deal from statements which are apparently casual. We are told particularly that upon Jacob's return he was directed to go to Bethel "where Thou anointedst the pillar" or matstsebah (a thing set up). We find that he obeyed, received a further confirmation of empire, and erected another pillar, doubtless a more substantial one than the original stone, which must have been comparatively small and portable.

Thus we find two stones, one fixed at Bethel and the original stone the focus of the worship of Jehovah wherever the family of Jacob erected their altars during their wanderings. The stone of Israel was brought into Egypt, doubtless in one of the waggons that Joseph sent, and it was bequeathed to Joseph, to whom also the inheritance of empire was especially given. Wherever the stone was, there was, for the Israelite worshippers, "God's house." Wherever the stone was there was the symbolic representation of the promised regal inheritance. It was the house and the throne of the Lord. When Moses led the people out of Egypt they carried Joseph's mummy and many other heavy things, and although it is not expressly mentioned, doubtless "the stone of Israel." (See Mrs. Roger's most interesting work, "The Coronation Chair, and England's Interest In It.")

Digitized by Google

And now, for the first time since the deliverance at the Red Sea, Israel had to fight for her existence. The desert hordes, probably attracted by the rumour of a plentiful supply of water, and by a desire to obtain fresh pasture, came and attacked them. Joshua led the untrained army of Israel; Moses went to the top of the hill, doubtless the centre of the position, where the non-combatants and their possessions would be collected. The battle raged around it, and its varying fortunes could be seen. It was a day of intense anxiety. While Moses held up his hands—doubtless the visible expression of prayer—Israel prevailed; when, through weariness, he let them drop, Amalek prevailed. Aaron and Hur observing this, caused him to sit on a stone and stayed up his hands until Amalek was overcome.

Now, according to the literal statement to which I have referred, Moses lifted up a hand upon the throne of Jah, or Amalek's hand was against the throne. Is not the probability very great that the stone upon which Moses sat on that most eventful day was the stone of Israel? I submit that if it was, the marginal readings are amply explained, and the supposed need of a forced translation disappears. Grant that the stone was there, and what more symbolically expressive act could be done than to use it, and thereby to base the prayer upon the promises which were so connected with it, and that the stone was there is evidenced by sundry statements in the after history of Israel.

THE TRIBE OF DAN.

By W. H. Larkins, Lieut.-Colonel.

PART I.

In "Scriptural Researches," by the late Sir G. H. Rose written in 1830, there is a chapter on the Tribe of Dan in which the author endeavours to account for the omission in the number of those which were sealed of the Twelve Tribes of the children of Israel, enumerated in Rev. vii. 4—8, by saying that it was because Dan was the first to introduce idolatry in Israel. The incident here referred to is fully narrated in Judges xviii. This tribe, next to Judah, was numerically the largest and most powerful of all the tribes, mustering upwards of 60,000 men of war. The inheritance that fell to their lot was too small for them, and hemmed in on the north, the east, and the south by Ephraim, Benjamin, and Judah, and on the west by the sea. It was only towards the north, beyond the borders of Ephraim, that they could hope to obtain any further possessions. Consequently they sent out spies who fell in with a quiet industrious people abiding at Laish, and they immediately dispatched 600 men of war fully equipped, who smote these quiet abiding people with the edge of the sword, burnt their city and built the city of Dan where some of the families of that tribe took up their abode. On passing through Mount Ephraim, these 600 men carried off by force from the house of Micah, a graven image, an ephod, a teraphim, and a molten image, together with Micah's priest, a Levite, whom they took with them to Laish, and "Jonathan and his sons who were the priests to the Tribe of Dan until the day of the captivity of the land; they set up the graven image, which Micah made, all the time the house of God was at Shiloh" (vers. 20 and 21) In this first point the author is pretty fairly correct, for although the carved image was the private property of Micah, of Mount Ephraim, and made by him, he was forcibly dispossessed of it by the Danites, and it was openly set up in Dan by the priests of that tribe, and that too, at a time when the tabernacle of the congregation was set up in Shiloh the centre seat of government at that period.

2nd. The next point referred to is promulgated in Deut. xiii., by which anyone guilty of turning away another from the Lord his God to serve strange gods shall be put to death, as "there appears no trace of Dan having perished before the Assyrian captivity, and it is quite impossible to imagine that if it did go into captivity, this most guilty of the Tribes should have been spared any one day of the thraldom then inflicted on the other nine, and who have not hitherto emerged from it. And we may feel assured that it would be left to share all their miseries, disgrace and slavery, and to drink the last dregs of that cup of their humiliation, but that it would never be allowed to participate in that final glory and happiness which are to follow the reconciliation of the nation with God or re-enter the Land of Promise when Israel shall occupy it again. We must thus, it should seem, unavoidably arrive at the conclusion that Dan must perish at the moment at which the other tribes are about to cross the frontier of their land, in order finally to resume their possession of it." In the extract just given, the author of "Scriptural Researches" does not stand on quite such safe ground, for although the law referred to might apply in the case of Dan, would it not apply to the other Nine Tribes also who went into captivity for their apostacy?

The non-existence of Dan as a tribe is the reason assigned why the name of that tribe is omitted in the number of those sealed in the Twelve Tribes, enumerated in Rev. vii.; and for the same reason because only twelve names are given to the twelve Gates of the New Jerusalem, the author takes it for granted that Dan is omitted here also, in both instances Manasseh taking the place of Dan in order to retain the original number of the tribes at twelve (Rev. xxi. 12).

In arriving at these conclusions, however, the author of "Scriptural Researches" appears to have overlooked one material fact which upsets all his reasoning and strikes at the very root of his argument; for if Dan is to perish prior to the second return, how is it that a place is assigned to this tribe in the new Jerusalem, and one of the twelve Gates (one of the three on the east side) is named after the tribe of Dan, the name of Joseph being given to one of the Gates in place of Ephraim and Manasseh, who are left out, and thus the original names of the Twelve Tribes are maintained (Ezek. xlviii. 1 and 31).

3rd. The third point has reference to Manasseh as a Thirteenth Tribe, and the following is what the writer says on the subject: "It is to be observed here, that, as in Jacob's blessing visibly in order that but Twelve Tribes should be named, those of Ephraim and Manasseh are incorporated into one and called Joseph. An objection to these views respecting the fate of the Tribe of Dan is drawn from Ezek. xlviii., where the mention of it occurs twice. Endless difficulties will be found if that which is narrated and ordained in the vision is taken literally; but if it is to be interpreted figuratively, then it is by no means necessary to understand what is said of Dan literally, and as a future matter. So that as in the blessings declared by Jacob and Moses, whilst only twelve are specified, a thirteenth tribe is kept in reserve as if to fill up a foreseen vacancy." So far the author of "Scriptural Researches" is right in stating that on all occasions the original number of the Twelve Tribes is maintained, and where Levi is left out, or as in Rev. vii. Dan is omitted, Manasseh fills the vacancy, and the original number of the tribes remains unimpaired, but whether the Patriarch, in creating a Thirteenth Tribe, had such an object in view is impossible to say. It is nevertheless a fact that Manasseh, already under certain contingencies, was reckoned as a tribe, but when Levi was numbered with the rest of the tribes then Ephraim and Manasseh were counted as one under the head of Joseph.

Digitized by Google

When Jacob blessed the sons of Joseph, and adopted them as his own, saying, "Ephraim and Manasseh are mine, as Reuben and Simeon they shall be mine" (Gen. xlviii. 5), he put them on an equality with his own children, and moreover he gave a double portion to Joseph of his inheritance, and although he did not make a separate or thirteenth tribe of Manasseh, yet the words quoted, if they mean anything, seem to imply as much, and in Joshua the children of Joseph are said to be Two Tribes, therefore they gave no part to the Levites (Josh. xiv. 4), and in the division of the land by lot, they shared equally with the other tribes, Ephraim taking his father's place and Manasseh that of the Levites, they having no inheritance in the land.

After the close of Jacob's blessing on Benjamin it is added "these are the Twelve Tribes of Israel" (Gen. xlix. 28), including Joseph and Levi, but not Ephraim or Manasseh. 2nd. After the exodus on the march, the camp was protected by three tribes in front, three in the rear, and three on each side, thus making Twelve Tribes, Manasseh taking the place of Levi (Num. ii. 20); and the same thing occurred both in the numbering of the tribes and in sending out of the twelve spies (Numb. i. and xiii.). 3rd. In the division of the land, Levi gets no inheritance, and Manasseh takes his place to make up the Twelve Tribes (Josh. xvii.). 4th. In the genealogy of the tribes given in 1 Chron. iv. to viii., those of Dan, Zebulon, and Naphthali are omitted. So also in the disruption of the kingdom on the death of Solomon, we find Ten Tribes given to Jeroboam, of which Rehoboam is to have one, thus leaving three with the latter including Levi, and nine to the former, Ephraim and Manasseh being counted as one as the children of Joseph under that head, or we should have Thirteen Tribes. 5th. We now come to the vision of St. John: "And when he heard the number of those sealed, which were sealed of all the tribes of the children of Israel," but Dan is omitted in the tribes specified, Manasseh making up the number to twelve, in the absence of Dan (Rev. vii. 4—8), and because, in the vision of the Holy City, the New Jerusalem, St. John describes it as having twelve Gates bearing the names of the Twelve Tribes of Israel, but the names not being given, the author immediately takes it for granted that Dan is omitted here also (Rev. xxi. 12, 13), but this omission is made good in the vision of Ezekiel, where it will be seen that not only was one of the Gates of the Holy City named after Dan, but also an inheritance (Ezek. xlviii. 1 and 32), Dan, Joseph, and Benjamin giving their names to the three Gates on the east side. The vision of Ezekiel was not overlooked by the author of "Scriptural Researches," for he refers to it; but in that vision what is said of Dan, he says, is to be taken figuratively, whilst in the vision of St. John, it is to be understood literally. The endless difficulties referred to by the author are those of his own creation, for how could it be otherwise, when such expedients are resorted to in order to make good his point, that the omission of Dan in Rev. vii. is to be attributed to Dan having perished and become extinct as one of the Twelve Tribes, in consequence of their being the first to introduce idolatry into Israel?

THE URGENCY OF MISSIONS IN THE LIGHT OF PROPHECY.

By the Rev. H. de St. Dalmas
(Of Brahman-Baria, Tipperah).

We have been favoured with a copy of an able pamphlet on the above subject, by Mr. H. de St. Dalmas, now labouring in India. We reproduce the concluding pages of the pamphlet as they bear upon the subject closely, and are well worth consideration. The passages we desire to notice are the following (pp. 11—15):—

"This brings us to consider the bearing of prophecy on mission work and methods. In the light of Matt. xxviii. 19, xxiv. 14, the Church's rallying cry now heard in many quarters. 'The evangelisation of the world in the present generation' is both a recognition of the Church's duty and a startling 'sign of the times.' Never since the apostolic age has the Church of Christ set itself resolutely to the fulfilment of this command, which is at the same time the fulfilment of prophecy, for 'this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations: and then shall the end come.'

"This prediction had a germinant fulfilment in regard to the panta ta ethne or Roman world in the apostolic age, before the destruction of Jerusalem and the end of the Jewish polity (see Rom. x. 18, Col. i. 23). Paul, in his wide evangelistic tours, the Christians who were scattered by persecution and went everywhere preaching the word, and, most of all perhaps the 'Jews, devout men out of every nation under heaven' who were converted in Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost, carried the tidings of salvation to all nations of the then known world.

"The same thing is being repeated now on a larger scale, and one of the most striking features of the missionary movement at the present time is the attention which is being given to the hitherto neglected portions of the world's population. Missionaries are being fired again now with the ambition of Paul not to build on other men's foundations but 'to preach the gospel where Christ was not named.' The heroic Graham Wilmot Brooke chose the Soudan as the most neglected and needy region of the world, after a careful survey of the state of many nations and tribes. His cycle of prayer for missions was the most elaborate and detailed of any I have seen.

"Why are the Moravians trying to enter Tibet from the West and the China Inland Missionaries from the East and others again from Darjeeling? Is it not because this nation must have the Gospel witness before the end of the age? Look again at the frequent disturbances in Afghanistan and Central Asia and among our Indian frontier tribes. May not all these things be overruled for the speedy opening of these countries to the Gospel because the time is short?

"* The absent, but returning Lord has not only given to

* "It is a solemn thought that the Church's opportunity of preaching the Gospel to the nations may not extend to the end of the period spoken of as the times of the Gentiles. If that should be the time of the establishment of Christ's Kingdom, when He comes with His people, they must first have been taken up, and for the purpose He has promised to come for them. Even if it were possible to calculate chronologically the limits of the times of the Gentiles and to fix the date of the end of that period, we should still be in ignorance of the day or hour of Christ's coming, which apparently precedes by a short interval the end of the times of the Gentiles. The words paronsia presence and epiphaneia manifestation represent these two stages or aspects of Christ's coming for and with His people, and it may be especially in regard to the former we are told to watch for we know not the day or hour. 'Then shall the Kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins.' 'One shall be taken and another left.'"

Digitized by Google

His servants 'to every man his work' but He has also 'commanded the porter to watch.' The number of porters or sentinels may be very small in comparison with the great army of workers, but it is well that there are some of whom we can ask the question, when either cheered or discouraged, 'Watchman, what of the night? It may be that some watcher on the height, seeing more and more clearly than we can, might tell us of some wiser distribution of our forces for the fight, or some better methods of labour in the field.

"In the Indian Evangelical Review, of October, 1891, there is a calculation by Hudson Taylor, in his sermon preached at the opening of the Missionary Conference in Shanghai, that 'if there be 250 millions in China, there will not be more than 50,000,000 of families; and if we had 1,000 evangelists and colporteurs reaching fifty families a day, in a thousand days, or less than 3 years, an offer of the written Gospel, or of the verbal message, might be given to all—that is, within three years after that number of workers were in the field and fit to undertake the work.'

"This calculation fits India as well as China; but we ask in wonder, how can the division of the field and the combination of forces necessary to such an organized effort ever be brought to pass? Those who have read Mr. Taylor's sermon will remember that the subject was the feeding of the multitude, and that great stress is laid upon the methodical way in which the Lord provided for all—having the people divided into groups of hundreds and fifties so that there might be no risk of any being overlooked.

"It has often been said that India might be evangelized much more quickly if each mission would confine its efforts to a separate district allotted to it, instead of working in widely separated regions where other missions are also feebly attempting to occupy the field. A friend of mine once had the hardihood to suggest to a prominent member of the C. M. S. Committee that he might help towards the fulfilment of his prayer for the evangelization of India by getting the various Mission Committees to consider some plan of division and concentration. The 'division of the field' was one of the subjects discussed at the Shanghai Conference, and if this subject could be considered at the great Decennial Conference in Bombay, it might lead to some steps being taken in the desired direction.

"It has been well said that 'we are responsible for contact but not for conversion.' That is the work of the Holy Spirit, and there is a grave danger at the present time when people are moving in masses in some parts of the country towards the outward profession of Christianity of our being led to estimate spiritual progress by mere numbers. We need to 'take heed how we build upon the foundation.' 'God gave the increase' and 'every plant that my heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up.' We read in the Acts that 'The Lord added to the Church those who were being saved,' and in the Epistles Paul says, 'Him that is weak in the faith receive ye . . . for the Lord hath received him.'

"In prophecy and in history, in the Church and in Missions, we see God as the great worker, and we as 'workers together with Him' need to have 'our eyes waiting upon the Lord as the eyes of servants look unto the hand of their masters,' and to pray the prayer of Moses, the man of God, 'Let Thy work appear unto thy servants.'

"If we are looking for the conversion of the world before the return of Christ, we shall hear with joy of thousands of baptisms, and try to think that if they are not all born again of the Holy Spirit now, many of them will be after further teaching, and that their children will be true Christians. If, on the other hand, we understand the Scriptures to teach that the Lord is now gathering out of the nations a 'people for His name' (Acts xv. 14; Rev. vii. 9), and that at His coming nations will be brought in, instead of individual conversions as now, we shall be earnestly desiring that better day, and shall rejoice as we 'see these things come to pass' by which we 'know that the Kingdom of God is nigh at hand' (Luke xxi. 31). Those who look for the Lord's coming are not pessimist missionaries, as some suppose, but optimists: the outlook is full of hope for the Church and for the world, when the King comes to establish His Kingdom. Until He comes, the evangelisation of the world is the work of the Church, and 'the King's business requireth haste.' Prophecy shows the urgency of missions:—'So much the more as ye see the day approaching.'

"SUPPLEMENT.

"Since the preparation of this paper for the Indian Evangelical Review the 'Statistical Tables of Protestant Missions in India, Burma, and Ceylon' have been published, showing a total at the end of 1890 of 559,661 Native Christians in India, out of whom 182,722 are communicants, (these figures do not include Burma and Ceylon).

"The Government Census Report for India shows a population of 279,684,203 (say 280 millions). Including Europeans (army, &c.) and Roman Catholics, 2,159,781 are returned as Christians.

"Analyzing these figures we find that considerably less than one per cent. of the total population of India is in any sense called Christian—reckoning all creeds and nationalities; whilst if we compare the number of Protestant Native Christians with the total population we find that just over 1 in 500 belongs to the Native Christian Community—or is nominally a Christian, whilst scarcely 1 in 1,500 is a communicant, or church-member!

"'It is interesting and instructive to note' (says the Report) 'how small a proportion the Christians, even if the Government total be considered, form of the entire population and how infinitesimal the band of Christian workers appears by the side of the immense masses to be evangelized.'

"The published returns for 1881 show 113,325 communicants out of a Native Christian community of 417,372. A comparison of these figures with the returns for 1890 will show the progress during the past 10 (or more correctly 9) years. In the introduction to the 'Statistical Tables' we are told it had been estimated that, judging from the increase of previous decades, the present number of Native Christians would not fall short of three-quarters of a million, but the results show scarcely three-quarters of that number—say 560,000.

"The Report adds, 'Experience shows that statistics will not supply us with data for calculating in how many years, or in how many decades, the whole of India will be Christianized, but we may well thank God and take courage.'

"A paper lately read before the Calcutta Monthly United Missionary Conference, and published in the Indian Witness under the title 'Two Hundred Years 1792—1992,' gives a retrospect of the past century of Christian Missions in India and a forecast of the coming century. The writer thinks that Carey would be disappointed, if he could compare the results of missions in India to-day with his anticipations a hundred years ago.

"The forecast of the coming century is by no means a bright one; the writer is not sanguine of India's speedy conversion. The power of caste, idolatry, and Mohamedanism he does not expect to see broken, though he expects to see a large number leaving the false systems without embracing the true: these he calls 'the detached third.' The Christian Church he expects to grow in number, but to be rent asunder by false doctrine and schism. This writer bases all his calculations regarding the future on the facts of experience and history. We prefer to read the future by the 'more sure word of prophecy' . . . a light that shineth in a dark place.'

Digitized by Google

"Regarding the past, the 'Statistical Tables' show that it is 'not as though the Word of God had taken none effect.' Regarding the present, the Gospel is 'The power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth,' and regarding the future, we are told that 'the whole earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord.' When and how this will come to pass we can only learn from that same 'sure word of prophecy whereunto we do well to take heed in our hearts till the day dawn and the day-star arise.' The Lord is now taking a people for Himself out of all nations' (Acts xv. 14). When Christ returns, a nation will be born in a day, and this hope leads us, whilst we work, also to pray 'Thy Kingdom come!' . . . 'Come, Lord Jesus.'"

TRACT SOCIETY FACTS.

"The Religious Tract Society proclaims the Gospel of the Grace of God in 204 languages. It was founded 92 years ago with the object of spreading the news of God's love at Home and in Foreign lands.

"It is supported by, and aids Christians of all Evangelical Denominations. Circulated over 73 millions of publications last year, of which more than 23 millions and a quarter were tracts, granted free or at greatly reduced price.

"Does not expend one shilling of its subscriptions or donations on management or other expenses.

"Required each working day of last year for its Missionary work, nearly £126 4s., or £757 4s. per week.

"Uses all its Missionary Funds for the object for which they are subscribed, but pays all its expenses out of Trade Funds.

"The 'Pilgrim's Progress' has been issued in over 86 languages, in most of which the Society has helped.

"Has published its New Testament Commentary in eleven languages—Chinese, Arabic, Syriac, Mahrati, Bengali, Tamil, Canarese, Urdu, Hindi, Singhalese, and Karen.

"Distributes packets of healthy interesting literature to almost all the emigrant families leaving the ports of the United Kingdom.

"Provides for a very large distribution of books and tracts for sailors of all nationalities.

"Has issued more than 48,654 libraries, varying from 25 to 500 volumes, since 1832, either at very reduced rates, or for very poor districts free, at a cost to the Society of £198,163.

"Helps all the great Missionary Societies in their work of providing Gospel literature in their fields of work, but is able to do only a tithe of what is needed through want of funds.

"Maintains in all its publications a testimony to Evangelical Truth."

The above "facts" give us further evidence, if any be needed, that the British are Israel, "blossoming and budding and filling the face of the world with fruit" (Isa. xxvii. 6, R.V.). The sphere of this agency like the Bible Society's is the whole world! "Home and Foreign Lands," are the recognised theatre of its operations, and this necessarily is world-wide. It embraces sailors of all nationalities in its beneficent work, and assists all the great Missionary Societies (British and Protestant of course), by providing them with Gospel literature in their fields of work. We are sorry to see that so noble a Society is cramped by want of means in its work, and hope all Anglo-Israelites who desire to do their plain duty will speedily become subscribers—1st, to the British and Foreign Bible Society; 2nd, to the Religious Tract Society; and 3rd, to one or more of the great Missionary Societies, which at the present time are engaged in carrying the Gospel to "all the nations of the earth." Belief in "Our Identity with Israel" opens a pleasant and a glorious prospect to our nation. But it brings with it to the individuals of our nation and to our own selves certain specified duties and obligations which we cannot and must not evade. Israel exists for certain objects as we have often explained; and these objects are placed upon each of us as duties and privileges which we must accept and carry out. Their character we may guess from such texts as these: "This people have I formed for Myself. They shall show forth My praise" (Isa. xliii. 21) The R.V. has it more clearly: ". . . My people, My chosen, the people which I formed for Myself: that they might set forth My praise." "The kingdom of God shall be given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof" (Matt. xxi. 43). The work of Israelites then, as the one God gave them to do, is to do good to men. To go about doing it—but especially to take some part, some definite portion, in the great work of world-wide evangelization. Many no doubt, among us, are carrying out these aims in total ignorance of their origin, and the honour God has put upon it. But the time has come when the mystery of Israel has been cleared up, and men must now not only accept their glorious nobility but with redoubled energy prosecute the work they love so well, because it is one God declares He formed them to carry out—that thereby His praise might be set forth before men.

GLEANINGS.

By J. Thomson.

25.—THE QUEEN OF HEAVEN.

"In ancient times the moon was worshipped, as well as the sun, not merely on account of its clear and beautiful shining, but also because it was believed to be the mother of the dew-drops; and it is probable that Job xxxviii. 28 has reference to that belief, also Deut. xxxiii. 14. This goddess, called Ashtaroth, and 'the Queen of Heaven,' was worshipped by the Israelites (see Judges ii. 13; 1 Sam. xii. 10; Jer. vii. 18)." On some of the monuments of Egypt the worship of the "Queen of Heaven" is represented, and people appear in the act of offering cakes to the moon. These cakes are in shape like the sacred cakes of the Copts, or modern descendants of the ancient Egyptians; and they, again, are like the hot-cross-buns of England: thus proving that the English superstition most probably had its origin in this ancient Pagan practice adopted by the Israelites, and from which it is only one or two removes. (See Gadsby's "Wanderings," I., p. 366, 367.)

26.—"A HAIRY MAN."

In 2 Kings i. 8 Elijah is described as a "hairy man"—i.e., he wore an outer garment of hair (see Zech. xiii. 4, margin). This seems to have been the general dress of the prophets in olden times, as also it was that of the Baptist (Matt. iii. 4), and still is in Egypt of those who wish to pass as "santons," or "saints."—Ibid. p. 179.

27.—PHILOLOGICAL EVIDENCE.

We have more ancient and widely spread relics of our earliest ancestors than any MS. in the names of persons, places, things, rivers, hills, manners, and customs still existing among us. It has been too generally thought that the later comers not only dispossessed the previous residents, but killed them all off the land. This could not have been the case, for many of our commonest words may be traced to their Celtic originals; and they are (as Professor Morley pithily remarks) such as "found their way from the lips of the earlier to those of the later people"; and again, "they are not the sort of words that men learn from enemies," and "there are more words than would have been taken up in days of conflict. Such common words as glove, basket, and probably even such words as hat, coat, boots, iron, wood, leather," Professor Morley says, "may be traced to Celtic originals"; and he gives a long list showing the Celtic origin of words descriptive of the ordinary arts of life, and names of local places in Britain. Many of these words, he says, "have a rational etymology only in Celtic"; but we have good reason for tracing them to an origin still even higher in antiquity. In the northern dialects there is "rather more Celtic than in literary English; and in the common vernacular the Celtic element is strongly marked. Thus bother is good Celtic, and seriously stands for tribulation in the Irish New Testament" (Morley's "English Writers, I., pp. 162—167).

Digitized by Google

Names of places often contain a history in themselves. They indicate, more or less correctly, the occupation of the country by the various inhabitants who have successively possessed it. The names are found to be sometimes descriptive of the locality, sometimes commemorative of an event, and sometimes record customs, or ancient rites and ceremonies.

28.—THE PERFIDIOUS NATION.

In Naples, a pamphlet, supposed to have been published with the sanction or permission of the Government about forty years ago, contained the following passage:—"The world will never have peace until all the sovereigns united shall be able to destroy this plundering people (England), and wipe them away from the nations of the earth—until the English people are dispersed like the Hebrews—until London, like Jerusalem, shall be in ruins and ashes; then Europe will be safe. Let us console ourselves in God. France will do it. The time approaches." (Gadsby's "Wanderings," I., p. 572). Mr. Gadsby published his book in 1855, and it would be just about that time that this pamphlet appeared. History has evolved more of the destinies of France and this "plundering people" since then; but France has had enough to do to attend to her own concerns, rather than engage in the attempt to "wipe" us off from among the nations, and no other Power has yet seriously taken up this rôle as theirs; though we have our own suspicions.

29.—EGYPTIAN TEMPLES.

Volney asserted that the most modern temple in Egypt was older than the oldest date in the Bible, but he was unable "to find any earlier name for the country than Cham—i.e., Ham. Now, as Ham was the second son of Noah, and the Bible tells us that Egypt was peopled by Ham's descendants," Volney only confirms the truth of the Biblical history. See also Psa. lxxviii. 51. Others have asserted that one or two of the Egyptian temples were erected 10,000 years B.C., but "subsequent researches have established the fact that these very temples were not erected until the time of the Ptolemys—not 50 years B.C.—Gadsby's "Wanderings," I., p. 137.

30.—EGYPTIANS SET AGAINST EGYPTIANS.

"Shortly after the death of Sethon, who was contemporary with Hezekiah, about 720 B.C., Egypt was divided into twelve kingdoms, and Egyptians were set against Egyptians, &c. (Isa. xix. 2)."—Gadsby's "Wanderings," I., p. 139).

Correspondence.

THE GOD OF ENGLAND.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

SIR,—Two or three centuries ago some of our forefathers held the belief that God was the supreme Governor and Protector of our country as he was of Israel. They may not have understood the import of the prophecies respecting the destiny of Israel in the latter days, the fulfilment of which was then in a comparatively early stage, and may have adopted the idea of a substituted Israel, in the absence of clearer views. But in the light of "the sure word of prophecy," Christians should now see God's truth and faithfulness displayed in the discovery of the real Israel in our race and nation. "Why, seeing times are not hidden from the Almighty, do they that know Him not see His days?" (Job xxiv. 1). It seems to have been a favourite idea with Milton, says J. A. St. John, editor of the prose works (Bohn's edition), that the English were, in modern times, God's chosen people. An expression of this opinion was given from the "Arcopagitica" by a writer in the BANNER some years ago, and others might be quoted from Milton's works. The following extracts (with dates) show the belief of some who wrote in the 16th century.

BOOKWORM.

Melbourne, 1892.

LATIMER to LORD CROMWELL, Oct. 19, 1537.

"Right Hon. Salutum in Christo Jesu. And, sir, here is no less joying and rejoicing in these parts for the birth of our prince (Edward VI.), whom we hungered so long, than there was, I trow, inter vicinos, at the birth of St. John Baptist, as this bearer, Master Evance, can tell you. God give us all grace to yield due thanks to our Lord God, God of England! for verily He hath showed Himself God of England, or rather an English God, if we consider and ponder well all His proceedings with us from time to time. He hath overcome all our illness with His exceeding goodness, so that we are now more than compelled to serve Him, seek His glory, promote His Word, if the devil of all devils be not in us. . . . And thus the God of England be ever with you in all your proceedings.

"Hartlebury."

JOHN LYLY, "Eupheus and His England," 1580, after mentioning the Wars of the Roses:—

"But the living God, who was loath to oppress England, at last began to repress injuries, and to give an end by mercy, to those that could find no end of malice, nor look for any end of mischief. So tender a care hath He always had of that England as of a new Israel, His chosen and peculiar people. . . . O blessed peace, O happy prince, O fortunate people! The living God is only the English God, where He hath placed peace which bringeth all plenty, anointed a virgin queen, &c. . . . This peace hath the Lord continued with great and unspeakable goodness, among His chosen people of England."

DATE OF THE CAPTURE OF JERUSALEM, BY OMAR.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

SIR,—The British Chronological and Astronomical Association gives the date when the city was fully in the possession of the Saracens as some time between the six months of 637½ and 638 Easter. The A.D. year then began on the 21st March. But the most probable date is 638, the beginning of that year, because the date, ascertained by planetary motion, was 4636½ Easter, A.M. Our A.D. year was then 1½ years too fast, because the year 1 A.D. has never existed, and six months was jumped by beginning our year in March instead of September 20, when the sun begins it. The sun is on the equinoctial colure on the "fourth day" of every solar year, and we have equal day and night. Our A.D. year is now 1¾ years too fast, because we jumped another three months when "new style" was enacted in 1752. According to the order of Parliament that year had only nine months.

J. B. DIMBLEBY.

1, Gordon-road, Wanstead, London.

LONDON'S VASTNESS.—Ireland all told is not equal in population to London, and Wales all told is not equal in population to a third of London, and London pays in the shape of rates and taxes twice as much as Ireland and Wales put together; and London, with its teeming population and wealth, is only a small part of England. Ireland and Wales, by the might of importunity and clamour, get more attention than they are rightfully entitled to.—Manchester Evening Mail, March 8, 1893.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed "PHILO-ISRAEL," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION for the BANNER OF ISRAEL, in Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts. To any country included in the Postal Union, including the following:—United Kingdom, Canada, America, Europe, New Zealand, Cape Colony, Victoria, Western Australia, Transvaal, Tasmania, South Australia, Queensland, Natal, New South Wales, India, Ceylon via Brindisi, 7s. per year, including postage.

All Post Office Orders, Cheques, &c., should be crossed "City Bank, Ludgate-hill, to the ac. of ROBERT BANKS AND SON." They will then only be paid to our account.

READING CASES for holding the Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts, may be had, price 2s. Sent post free on receipt of Postal Order.

THE ANNUAL VOLUMES, bound in handsome blue Cloth, price 8s.

THE MONTHLY PARTS, in tinted wrapper, published the last day of each month, 6d.

Englishmen should Circulate, at the Present Crisis,

NO ROME RULE.

AN IDENTITY LEAFLET.

UNION IS STRENGTH.

Price 1s. per 100 nett. 1,000 carriage paid to any address for 10s.

London: Robert Banks & Son Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

USEFUL BOOKS FOR BIBLE STUDENTS.

In Two Vols., about 500 pages in each, cloth bound, price 5s., originally published at 7/6.

HISTORY OF THE JEWS

In Three Concurrent Sections.

I.—Ten Books of the Antiquities of the Jews, as TRANSLATED by WHISTON, with Notes from FLAVIUS JOSEPHUS.

II.—The Bible Narrative from the Creation to the Captivity at Babylon, fully given and faithfully rendered.

III.—A Modern History of the Jews. Abridged and Offered as a Commentary on the Preceding Sections.

The Two Volumes sent post free for 5/3 nett

To be had only direct from ROBERT BANKS AND SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Now ready, 220 Large Post 8vo. pages, in clear, readable type, price 2s. 6d., limp cloth, gilt lettered, red edges, post free to any part of the world on receipt of postal remittance.

Nineteen Centuries Ago and NOW.

BY J. C. H. MEHL.

WITH BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH,

BY E. M. RUSH.

CONTENTS.—Biographical Sketch—Nineteen Centuries Ago and Now—Letter to the Editor of the Banner of Israel—A German's Views on Our Identity—The Church of England—The Woman Arrayed with the Sun (Rev. xii.)—"Remember the Sabbath Day to Keep It Holy"—"Ble-sed are the Meek, for They Shall Inherit the Earth"—The Spirit of Negation, and the Spirit of Prayer—"Righteousness Exalteth a Nation"—"The Dispersion Among the Greeks"—The Protracted Era of Grace—"The Power of the Holy People"—The Present Aspect of the Kingdom of Heaven—One, and Yet Many—A Great Truth Slow in its Progress—A Two-fold Alienation—On Co-operating with the Divine Purpose—A Lamp Shining in a Dark Place (2 Pet. i. 19)—Was St. Patrick an Israelite, and Was He Aware of It?

London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C

"A WONDERFUL REMEDY."
"I WAS GIVEN UP BY ALL."
"SAVED FROM AN EARLY GRAVE."

Such are the words of grateful Patients relative to their CASES OF

CONSUMPTION

CURED BY THE TREATMENT OF

MR. GEO. T. CONGREVE.

Read his Book, "ON CONSUMPTION, &c." which may be had post free for ONE SHILLING from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.; or may be ordered of any Bookseller.

NOTE.—CONSULTATIONS FREE at Coombe Lodge, Peckham, on TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings only. No Charge except the usual charge for three weeks or six weeks' supply of medicine. All Patients should read the book first.

Price 1s. per 100, Assorted Packets 1s.2d.: 8s.6d. per 1,000 Well printed on toned paper.

Thoughts for the British Folk.

Suggested by Philo-Israel.

No. 1.—Multitudinousness.
No. 2.—The Gates.
No. 3.—The Nation and Company of Nations.
No. 4.—British Wealth.
No. 5.—The Rulers Over Many Nations.
No. 6.—The Universal Creditor.
No. 7.—The Ever-Continuing British Monarchy.
No. 8.—The Scattered People at Home in Every Climate.
No. 9.—The Queen, Lords, and Commons.
No. 10.—The Unconquerable Nation.
No. 11.—The Fatally Destructive Race.
No. 12.—The Isolated Nation.
No. 13.—The Nation Which Belts the Earth.
No. 14.—The Emancipators of the Slave.
No. 15.—The Christian Nation.
No. 16.—The Ten Commandments.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Cloth boards. Second Edition.

ISRAEL: A THESIS.

By the Rev. DENIS HANAN, D.D.

Price 1s. 6d.; sent post free to any address on receipt of Postal Order.

London: ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, or by order of any bookseller.

Price 6d. Monthly. Annual Subscription 7s.

THE MESSENGER.

Edited by "OXONIAN."

Each number contains papers by the EDITOR, and other well-known writers, a SERMON by Dr. WILD, Notes and Queries, &c

Now Ready, price 5s., post free, 5s. 4d., Illustrated by MAPS,

RUSSIA JAPHET:

OR, THE MUSCOVITE, THE COSSACK, AND THE MONGOL.

Being a detailed Identification of the principal peoples subject to the Czar. By "OXONIAN."

London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C.

TEETH.—£1 A FULL SET

ESKELL'S.—CELEBRATED MAKE, £2 2s. Warranted and fitted in one visit. No extractions needed. HALF A MILLION SETS already supplied. The Nursing Record and Hospital World says:—We recommend all who require Reliable and Good Teeth at a small cost to go to Messrs. ESKELL, 445, Strand (facing Charing Cross Station), and 58, Ludgate Hill, City, London. Also at 27, Western Road, Brighton, and 23, Mount Pleasant, Tunbridge Wells. Hours 9 till 7. Apply for Illustrated Pamphlet free (mention this paper). Established 100 years.

"THE WORLD'S PROVED REMEDY FOR ALL CHEST DISEASES."

COUGH, ASTHMA,

CHRONIC BRONCHITIS,

INFLUENZA,

THERE IS NONE TO EQUAL IT.

Rev. F. E. HEAPE, of DERBY, in a recent letter, says: "Your Medicine always puts my lungs right, and drove out the terrible INFLUENZA last May."

This Medicine has been prepared for 65 years.

CONGREVE'S BALSAMIC ELIXIR.

In Bottles, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 22s., may be had of all Chemists and Medicine Vendors.

TEA! TEA! TEA!

FROM

INDIA, CEYLON, AND CHINA.

Best Quality and Best Value.

From 1/6 to 3/6 per lb. Samples Gratis.

Carriage Paid on Parcels of 6lbs. and upwards.

Robinson & James,

42, TRINITY SQUARE, TOWER HILL LONDON, E.C.

TOOTH-ACHE

CURED INSTANTLY BY

BUNTER'S NERVINE

Prevents Decay, Saves Extraction, Sleepless Nights Prevented.

Neuralgic Headaches and all Nerve Pains removed by BUNTER'S NERVINE. All Chemists, 1s. 1½d.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN'S

IRISH CAMBRIC HANDKERCHIEFS

ALL PURE FLAX. POST FREE.

Ladies' Hemmed—2/6, 3/3, 4/-, 4/11, 6/-, 7/2, 8/-, & 9/- per doz.

Gentlemen's Hemmed—4/-, 4/11, 5/9, 6/6, 7/5, 8/3, 9/3, & 10/6 per doz.

Hemstiched Ladies and Gents (excellent value) 6/- & 7/11 per doz., various widths & hems.

A Sample of THREE of either price sent by return of post, on receipt of postal order.

Very pretty Fancy Boxes, suitable for Presents, 4½d. extra.

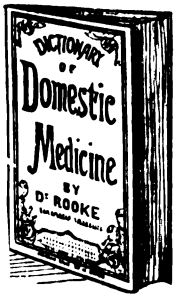
V. W. THOMSON,
27, Donluce Street, BELFAST.

Digitized by Google

£33,000,000
LOST EVERY YEAR

By a very moderate calculation this enormous sum is lost every year (in the shape of wages) by those who, through not using

DR. ROOKE'S
ORIENTAL PILLS
AND
SOLAR ELIXIR,



become ill, and are unable to go to work or to business.

The world-wide fame of Dr. Rooke's Oriental Pills and Solar Elixir rests upon the marvellous cures which have followed their use in the most severe cases of

INDIGESTION, BRONCHITIS, LIVER COMPLAINTS, ASTHMA, PULMONARY CONSUMPTION, RHEUMATISM, GOUT, SCROFULA, POOR BLOOD, GENERAL DEBILITY,

and all diseases of the Nervous System, from whatever cause arising. THE PILLS PURIFY THE SYSTEM, THEN THE ELIXIR BUILDS IT UP, AND LEAVES IT STRONG, ROBUST, AND HEALTHY. Those pursuing a sedentary life, or engaged in unhealthy occupations, or living in an insalubrious climate would all find DR. ROOKE'S REMEDIES invariably successful in quickly restoring health and vigour to the most shattered constitution. Hence they are a boon alike to the young, the middle-aged, and the old.

The Oriental Pills are sold in boxes at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each; and the Elixir is sold in bottles at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each. They can be obtained of all Chemists and Patent Medicine Dealers throughout the world.

Dr. Rooke's Dictionary of Domestic Medicine. A valuable work, treating of some of the most prevalent diseases of human life, and showing their rational mode of treatment. Every household should possess a copy. Gratis, of all Patent Medicine Dealers, or sent post free on receipt of penny stamp, by

DR. ROOKE,
SCARBOROUGH, ENGLAND.

BE SURE TO CUT

10,000 RUGS GIVEN AWAY

IT MAY THIS OUT.

THIS PHENOMENAL OFFER is made to the Readers of this Journal only. On receipt of this advertisement, accompanied by Postal Order for 6/, or 74 stamps, we will forward DIRECT FROM OUR LOOMS to your address, one of our genuine SEAMLESS WOVEN REVERSIBLE CARPETS, suitable for Drawing-room, Dining-room, Bedroom, &c., handsomely bordered and woven in 30 different patterns and art colourings to suit all requirements, and LARGE ENOUGH TO COVER ANY ORDINARY SIZED ROOM. These carpets are manufactured from a material equal in wear to wool, and are undoubtedly the cheapest in the world.

With every Carpet we shall ABSOLUTELY GIVE AWAY a very handsome RUG to match, or we will send 2 CARPETS and 2 RUGS for 10/6

The Queen says: "Decidedly stouter and handsomer than any of the kind, the price being the astounding part of the matter." Schoolmistress: "For style, durability, and cheapness, they cannot be beaten." Penny Illustrated Paper: "Manufactured in every variety of colour, and is one of the most surprising bargains I have seen." Church Bells: "Truly wonderful value."

Thousands of Testimonials similar to the following, & Repeat Orders, have been received from our Customers:

"70, Upper Sutton Street, Aston, Birmingham.—Dear Sir,—Please to forward me a Brusselette Carpet, &c. The Rugs and Carpets I purchased from you eighteen months ago have worn wonderfully well, and are good value for the money—Yours truly THOMAS HAWKES."

This offer is made to the Readers of this paper only, and will not be repeated. All Orders despatched same day as received. Cheques and Postal Orders to be crossed "Union Bank." Address—

THE BRITISH CARPET WEAVING COMPANY,
31, OLD STREET, LONDON, E.C.

NOT APPEAR AGAIN.

THIRD EDITION NOW READY.
With 38 Additional Pages.

Paper Cover, Price 1s. nett., postage 2d. extra
Limp Boards, lettered, 1s. 6d., postage 2d. extra.
Cloth boards, gilt lettered, thick toned paper 2s., postage 3d. extra.

BRITISH-ISRAEL TRUTH
A Handbook for Enquirers.

EDITED BY
REV. DENIS HANAN, M.A., D.D.,
AND
H. ALDER-SMITH, M.B., F.R.C.S
WITH A CHART AND MAP.

"British-Israel Truth." Edited by the Rev. Denis Hanan and H. Alder-mith (R. Banks & Son.)—The sale of the first edition of this work, and the consequent issue of a second, shows that there is a growing interest in the study of the questions of the Israelitish origin of the English speaking people. Clever, interesting, pathetic, and showing considerable research, the volume has been a success, and doubtless has made some converts.—THE ROCK.

ROBERT BANKS AND SON, Racquet-ct., Fleet-st., E.C

A PRESENT.

SEND us your address, mentioning this paper, and we will make you a present of the best guide to health yet published. It is only a little book, but it is of great value to all who are ill or indisposed.—GORDON, MURRAY, & CO., LIMITED, 10, Adam Street, Strand, W.C.

FREE
Every MAN and WOMAN in search of health

should write at once for the Medical Battery Company's 112 pp. interesting Illustrated Pamphlet, entitled "The Medical Uses of Electricity." It contains valuable advice on the symptoms and rational treatment of nervous, organic and other disorders, and will be sent under cover free by post, on application to the Manager, Medical Battery Company's Institute, 52 Oxford Street, London, W. Remember that Consultations are free, either personally or by letter.

PAGE WOODCOCK'S
WIND PILLS

A CLERGYMAN

Writes: "I am so convinced from my own experience and that of others of the real value of your WIND PILLS, in complaints arising from a disordered state of the STOMACH, BOWELS, or LIVER, that I wish much to promote the use of the Medicine in this parish, and I now inclose P.O. for a large box, and should be glad of some papers for circulation among my parishioners. In my own case

Page Woodcock's Wind Pills

have been of the greatest use. I have no objection to your publishing my communication, provided you divulge not my name and address, which you may give, nevertheless, to those who require such a verification."—Vicarage, near Malvern.

All Sufferers from INDIGESTION, LIVER COMPLAINTS, WIND on the STOMACH, COSTIVENESS, SICK HEADACHE, HEARTBURN, PALPITATION of the HEART, BILIOUSNESS, &c.,

should avail themselves of this most excellent medicine.

☞ The WIND PILLS being PURELY VEGETABLE, TASTELESS, and MILD and TONIC in their action, may be taken with perfect safety by the most delicate of either sex.

● Of all Chemists, at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d., or Post Free for P.O. or Stamps, from PAGE WOODCOCK, LINCOLN.

Jehovah Triumphant. The New and Complete Theology and Electric Light of the Bible, containing the History of British-Israel, compiled from the Sacred Scriptures. A handsome crown 8vo., cloth bound volume of 550 pages, with Index of Scripture references. Price 5s. (published at 10s.), post free for P.O.

Where are the Ten Tribes? By William Greig, of Montreal, Canada. With Introduction by Philo-Israel. Published at 6d.; offered at 3d.

R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co. (Ltd.) 23, Paternoster-row. Wednesday MAY 24, 1893. All Rights Reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India).

"And the Remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORN with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS OF THE EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XVII., No. 857. Entered at Stationer's Hall.] WEDNESDAY, MAY 31, 1893. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

PAGE
National Morality ... 265
The Tribe of Ephraim and the British Nation ... 266
"Blessed Are the Meek for they Shall Inherit the Earth."—Matt. v. 5. By the Rev. G. M. C. ... 267
India and Its Greatness. By F. S. Gandy ... 268
The New Covenant Made in the Blood of Christ ... 269
"One of the Greatest, Richest, and Most Powerful Nations in the World" ... 270
The Tribe of Dan. By W. H. Larkins, Lieut.-Colonel. Part II. ... 271
Presentation to the Rev. J. Idrisyn Jones. Forwarded by H. L. B. ... 272
The Anniversary of the British-Israel Association ... 273
Correspondence ... 273
Taken from "A Song of the English." By Rudyard Kipling ... 274

NATIONAL MORALITY.

AT a meeting of a Baptist Congregational Bible Class, where men in large numbers assembled to discuss the evidence in proof of Our Identity, on Sunday, April 30th last, the subject was introduced by Mr. H. E. Fryer, formerly of Pembroke, and two consecutive Sunday afternoons were given to the matter. At the second meeting many objections were brought forward of more or less cogency, which the lecturer was able to dispose of without much difficulty. The class, composed largely of young men, seemed in favour of the idea; but some who took up the case against the view stated by Mr. Fryer, brought forward, among others, the objection that the subject, as treated by him, savoured of national immorality—a coveting of the lands and possessions of alien nations who had a right to their own property, and should not be disturbed in their possession under the plea of a divine right conferred on our nation to oust them and to assume the dominion ourselves in their place. India and Burmah being chiefly in the minds of the objectors, they hazarded the charge that our Government at home held that vast military empire not so much by force of arms as by bribery of the natives there! When the objector was afterwards asked privately to explain, he said that we paid the native soldiers we employed in India to keep down the native states—and that this was "bribery." Besides that, we had never allowed a free native press, thus adding oppression to our greed for power, and resting on immoral means. We are not aware that these objections were answered in the meeting, and we venture accordingly to make some observations on them for the benefit of others, who doubtless sympathise with the opponent in the Bible Class.

In regard to our nation's progress abroad, by which the heathen world has been, in India and elsewhere, added to the British Crown, we would point out to those who say that no nation has a right to occupy the lands of another and alien race, that the objection comes rather badly out of the mouths of the Anglo-Saxons, or British nation, as now constituted. For history tells us we too were intruders here from our eastern Asiatic homes, and having driven out the Aborigines of Britain, whoever they were, we took their places, and proceeded at once, after much bloodshed and warfare, to build up the kingdom and empire as we see it now. But besides this point, there is another aspect of the case which demands consideration. Nations do not rise and fall without God's will, and certainly by His providential arrangement. Israel of the olden time were led by God Himself out of Egypt, and brought by Him to the land of their inheritance which He had bestowed on them by gift. By open war with the intruders on the soil which God claimed as His own, He caused Israel to drive them out, and then planted them in it, according to His own arrangement, as their promised possessions. In Psa. cxi. 6, R.V., the process as it affects His people Israel is fully described: "He hath showed His people the power of His works, in giving them the heritage of the nations." How the Lord, the God of Israel, warred on the side of that people and gave the lands of the heathen nations to them is narrated in ample detail in Deut. i., ii. and iii., and in the Book of Joshua. As He did for Israel of the olden times, so the Lord is working for the British-Israelites to-day, giving them a heathen empire in India, Burmah, Australasia, and Africa, which is the wonder and envy of the world, but is merely the continuous fulfilment of the prophecy of Psa. cxi. 6, above quoted.

Those who regard our world-wide possessions as the result of national greed on our part know very imperfectly the history of our Indian acquisitions. The preparations for our occupation of India were made in the first decade of the 18th century by God Himself when Gibraltar was captured by the British under Admiral Sir George Rooke, in 1704. It was the result almost of an accident, and taken without the least reference to India and the Empire of the East, which did not exist then. Malta was the next ocean stronghold or Gate which pointed in the same direction (A.D. 1800). Finally, the capture of Aden (1839), and Perim (1857), but long before those events, the acquisition of the then weak Gates at Madras (1639), Bombay (1669), and Calcutta (1700), led by imperceptible degrees to the annexation of large portions of the Peninsula, till at last the India of to-day has become a portion of the British Raj. India has literally been forced upon the British nation, and we have never really desired to acquire so huge a responsibility as now rests upon us in reference thereto. God has given us "the heritage of the heathen," according to Psa. cxi. 6, R.V., in order that the Gospel may be proclaimed by His people Israel to the ends of the earth. Israel had "to take root" in the Christian dispensation, and then after "blossoming and budding, to fill the face of the world with fruit" (Isa. xxvii. 6, R.V.). God has determined that the "kingdom and dominion, and greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High": and these are "the children of Israel" (Dan. vii. 27, and Psa. cxlviii. 14). Why should we pretend, under these circumstances, that we are wiser than He, and declare that it is immoral on our part to dispossess aliens of their country, or that God's purposes are faulty in respect to "stationary savagedom," or the "backward races," like those of New Zealand and India respectively? It was not God's will that these were always to cumber the ground without interference from advanced nations like the British-Israelites.

Digitized by Google

The charge respecting our nation's bribery of Indian races because we pay our native Sepoys or mercenary soldiery, is really absurd. We pay our Sepoys, of course, as every soldier in every land under the sun requires to be paid for his services to the Government which employs him. India is no exception to this rule. In reference to the native Press, it is so far from being suppressed by the Indian Government, that it is, in fact, the most licentious on the face of the earth! It is disloyal in its tone to the British, and a thorn in the side of the Government. Fortunately its influence on the people is not great, or it would make the government of India impossible! On the whole the objections to Our Identity were very poorly supported at the meeting, and the lecturer had far the best of it.

At the conclusion of the meeting Philo-Israel had a fair and patient hearing for a few minutes, and we trust his advocacy of the case was of use to our cause.

THE TRIBE OF EPHRAIM AND THE BRITISH NATION.

AT the meetings held at Clifton, on April 12th last, when the Rev. F. Aston delivered two lectures on subjects advertised, it was mooted by one of the speakers as his personal opinion that the British nation was the Tribe of Ephraim only. He gave as his reason for that opinion that our nation possesses the peculiar blessing of multitudinousness which was bestowed by prophecy on Ephraim, the brother of Manasseh by the patriarch Jacob, in Gen. xlix. 19, 20. This constituted the greatness of Ephraim as compared with Manasseh, and showed that this nation was the modern representative of Ephraim. The speaker probably did not know much of the Teutonic, Gothic, or "Protestant European Nation" theories, but guided by the one text quoted, came to the conclusion that as Ephraim, the head of that tribe was to be the progenitor of a fulness or multitude of nations, the modern outcome of that blessing, the British nation, must be composed of Ephraim, the tribe of that name only, to the exclusion of all the rest. This, however, assumes too much, and fails to follow the golden rule of Scriptural interpretation—namely, that Scripture explains itself. The point then is, whether according to the Divine mind the possession of the multitudes and of "the company of nations" was to be confined to the Tribe of Ephraim alone, or to Ephraim united as their head to the Ten-tribed House of Israel. In reply, we say that Hosea, a prophet of the Ten Tribes, after describing the forlorn condition of the Ten-tribed House of Israel as Jezreel, Lo-ruhamah, and Lo-ammi, in chap. i. 1—9, suddenly turns to the latter-day Christian dispensational condition of the Ten Tribes, and describes them as the possessors of the very gift tied up to Ephraim in Gen. xlviii. 19, "Yet the number of the children of Israel shall be as the sand of the sea, which cannot be measured nor numbered, and it shall come to pass that in the place where it was (shall be) said unto them, Ye are not My people, there it shall be said unto them, Ye are the sons of the living God." Here then is greatness in numbers, like the innumerable and immeasurable sand of the sea shore first bestowed by God's oath on the afterseed of Abraham in Gen. xxii. 17, afterwards granted as Ephraim's birthright blessing by Divinely-inspired Jacob, and finally in fee simple, granted by Hosea the prophet, to the Ten Tribes (or House of Israel). What explanation can there be for this? The very simple one that Ephraim was the federal head or representative of the "House of Israel," as Hosea's prophecy teaches us in chaps. iv. 17; v. 3, 9, 13, 14; vi. 4, 10; vii. 1, 8, 11; viii. 9, 11; ix. 16, 17; and so on to the very end of the prophecy. Ephraim and Israel were exchangeable names, and thus showed that Ephraim the tribe belonged to the House of Israel, and was in fact the head of it, bringing into its national enjoyment all Ephraim's (the tribe's) peculiar blessings, being those of their father Joseph, the owner, with his two sons of the birthright of Israel (1 Chron. v. 1, 2). That this view is correct is shown also by the enacted prophecy of Ezek. xxxvii. 15—28, where the stick of Joseph is described as that of Ephraim, united "to all the House of Israel his companions and his fellows" (ver. 19). The speaker at Clifton was probably not aware how weak his argument was, nor how vital our view is to the case he upheld. His has no support in the Scriptures, or in fact; and if pursued, must land him in the outer darkness of the theory upheld by the Rev. Robert Douglas. It is only just to the speaker, however, to mention that he described our nation's possession of the Gates (Gen. xxii. 17; xxiv. 60) as one of the chief grounds on which he based his belief that it was of the stock of Israel. "Wherever you look," he said, "you see our country in possession of those strategic places which may best be described as 'The Gates' of the earth. There is Gibraltar, the Gate of the Mediterranean; Malta, that of the same sea, further Eastward towards the Levant; Aden is the Gate that guards the entry into the Red Sea from the South; Singapore to the East, is the Gate to the China seas. In Australia, India, and the South of Africa, the same facts are observable. The British have certainly acquired "the Gates of the world," which secure to them the dominion thereof." In making these remarks upon the Gates the speaker forgot to notice that the gift of the Gates was made in Gen. xxii. 17 to the afterseed of Abraham, without reference to Ephraim, or to any tribe in particular. If this nation be Ephraim only (being the tribe of that name), then the latter has obtained the gift God meant for the owner of the birthright, or in other words for the House of Joseph, or Ephraim, comprising not one tribe, but Ten, of which Ephraim was the head or representative member, in temporal, worldly, gifts; also in spiritual blessing as well. The chairman at the evening meeting in Clifton, Mr. Alderman Inskip, admitted he was favourably inclined to our views, and thought there was no harm in them! Others, his friends, he told us were timidly afraid of them, and considered they were hazardous in respect of those who hold them and deplorable in themselves. He did not share that opinion. His praise was rather faint, and we fear that on the whole he deemed us harmless fanatics. His remarks respecting Mr. Aston's lecture were on the whole favourable, but he differed in respect to the distinction the lecturer drew between the Scriptural terms "the Kingdom of God" and "the Church." The lectures were well attended, that in the evening more especially so; but as usual in Clifton, the meeting was carefully avoided by the local clergy and ministers of religion—only one of the former being present, and he one long known as a believer in our views. The absence of clerical support prevents the advancement of the cause, for where the shepherds favour an idea the sheep are ready enough to listen to it; but where the teachers frown, the people naturally refuse to be troubled by what their spiritual guides deem to be suspicious, and dangerous besides, to the interests of true religion. The matter is in God's hands, and we must leave it there! It is ours to proclaim the Identity, and prove it to men's satisfaction, if we can. But if deaf ears are closed still, and blind eyes are shut to our words, there is but one remedy—namely, patience, with the prayer that God will be pleased to give His people sight, and willingness to accept the truth, for His great Name's sake!

Digitized by Google

"BLESSED ARE THE MEEK FOR THEY SHALL INHERIT THE EARTH."—MATT. v. 5.

BY THE REV. G. M. C., OF CANADA.

WE are naturally so impressed with the sublimity of the utterances of our Lord in the grand sermon on the Mount, and so accustomed to associate the characters spoken of in the first part of the discourse with individuals, that we seldom pause to enquire whether anything, other than individual excellences of character, may be alluded to. Meekness is generally associated in our minds with the gentle, pacific, unassuming disposition—not easily provoked and benevolent to enemies. But yet it is quite compatible with manliness, fortitude, and self-control, as is very apparent in the examples furnished us in God's Word; notably so by Moses and David, Peter and Paul. It is said of the musician Ole Bull, that the same arm which enabled him to lift an ox, permitted him to elicit the softest strains from his violin. So much for the characteristic of meekness.

But nations have characteristics as well as individuals, and the promise of inheriting the earth is a prediction which appears to be more capable of verification in a national than in an individual sense. It is evidently a mark of the wisdom and goodness of God that the inheritance of the earth should be entrusted to the meek. Babylon and Persia, Greece and Rome, have had their tyrannising day; too long have the wretched inhabitants of the earth groaned under their exactions. But our Saviour proclaimed the end of these despotisms, and the advent of the meek to become a blessing to the earth and to do justice to the poor and unprotected.

I.—The nation who, by the common consent of mankind, most unmistakably promised to become the literal inheritors of the earth, are, without doubt, commonly spoken of as the English. A nation with the national aim so clearly set before it, in the Catechism of the national Church, must, if true to its principles, be eminently fitted for earth inheritance.

It is true that Britons have been, and many, alas! are, "drunkards, liars, thieves," but the tree of national life must be judged of by its fruits, and not by its rotten fruits either. The knots and boles and decayed parts of the stem, the withered branches and the falling leaves, are not the material from which to form an estimate of the nature of the tree; they are but the excrescences and accidents of time. As Cowper says:—

> "A Briton knows, or if he knows it not,
> The Scriptures placed within his reach, he ought,
> That souls have no discriminating hue,
> Alike important in the Maker's view;
> That none are free from blemish since the fall,
> And love Divine has paid one price for all."

That knowledge, Divinely given, forms the radix of the national character. There is that in Britons which has enabled them, throughout the distant parts of a widespread Empire, to adhere to one another under the most unfavorable fortunes. Most other modern nations are dependent on narrow and defined territorial limits, on a uniform codification of laws, on identity of speech, on a powerful executive, for national coherency, and even with those aids often find much difficulty it maintaining a united existence, but in the case of Great Britain, there is a fraternal sympathy, an unseen cement, which does more than anything material force can accomplish to maintain union. The agreement between Great Britain and many of her colonies for instance is not only a lex inscripta but a lex ignota.

Who would undertake to expound, to define, much less to codify, the systems of jurisprudence in the vast dominions of Great Britain; and yet in spite of this multiplicity of methods and standards of justice, even handed equity is administered and unity of interest secured. Whether the Queen's writ runs or does not, Britons manage to stick together, and whether the colonies have written terms of relationship, or not, with the mother land, there is an attractive force which keeps the parts of the Empire in position. "What chiefly strikes you in the history of the English people?" asked an English clergyman of an Indian schoolboy. "Their power of forming associations," was the answer.

II.—Having taken a glance at the policy of the people, as a whole, let us from one or two other sources scan the spirit which controls them. That which a man admires is that which makes or mars him, and furnishes us with a clue to his true nature. So, with a nation, the objects of national admiration are indications of the stream of popular sentiment. As poetry may in some, not inaccurate, sense be accepted as the perfection of thought, we doubt if a more faithful index of the national aspirations can be found than in those poems which have found their way to the nation's heart.

Shakespeare, the unchallenged leader of the English muse, is emphatically styled "the gentle." As Archdeacon Farrar says, in speaking of Spenser, "In him, too, as in all our greatest, we have a steady moral purpose." "His end was," he (the poet) tells us, "to fashion a noble person, or gentleman, in gentle and virtuous discipline." Dr. Watts (who, as Montgomery says, may be reckoned among the humblest of British national poets) yet in his reception by the people, and effect upon the nation's heart, has perhaps been given more enduring honour that any of them.

Digitized by Google

Without disrespect to the sweet songs of other lands the British school has a meekness and majesty peculiarly its own, whether exemplified in the artistic perfection of Gray's elegy, the sublime simplicity of the Cottar's Saturday Night, or found again and again in any Golden Treasury or Household Book of English Verse:—

"Visions come and go;
Shapes of resplendent beauty round me throng,
From angel-lips I seem to hear the flow
Of soft and holy song.—Milton.

We should like to go from poetry to pictures, to the simple and natural taste expressed in the works of a Gainsborough, Wilkie, Landseer, Frith, and others, but we must forbear. Also we must leave the inexhaustible mine of books dealing with national traits and characteristics unsearched, and content ourselves with the citing of one or two facts, and with quoting a couple of masterly criticisms, as to the past and present character of the British race.

First, then, as to the past. In his introduction to "The Story of Burnt Njal," George Dasent very justly sums up as follows the qualities of a Northman, as they appear in the Sagas:—

"To do what lay before him openly and like a man without fear of either foes, friends, or fate . . . . to be free and daring in all his deeds, to be generous and gentle to his friends and kinsmen, to be stern and grim to his foes (those who are under the lex talionis); but even towards them to fulfil all bounden duties. To be no truce-breaker, nor tale-bearer, nor backbiter. To utter nothing against any man that he would not dare to tell him to his face. To turn no man from his door who sought for food or shelter, even though he were a foe."

"And" (says Prince Kropotkin, in the "Nineteenth Century Magazine" (January, 1892), "the same, or better, principles permeate the Welsh epic poetry and triads. To act 'according to the nature of mildness and the principles of equity,' without regard to the foes or to the friends, and to 'repair the wrong' are the highest duties of man."

"Saxon, and Norman, and Dane, are we," sang Tennyson. We trust both in blood and spirit we are akin to those who have gone before us. So much, then, for the past; let us close with this estimate from Emerson of the Englishman of the present.

"The English are rather manly than warlike—when the war is over the mask falls—from the affectionate and domestic tastes which make them women in kindness. I apply to Britannia, Queen of seas and colonies, the words in which one of her novelists portrays his heroine, 'She is mild as she is game, and game as she is mild.' The English delight in the antagonism which combines in one person the extremes of courage and tenderness. Nelson, dying at Trafalgar, sends his love to Lord Collingwood; and like an innocent schoolboy that goes to bed, says, 'Kiss me, Hardy,' and turns to sleep. Lord Collingwood, his comrade, was of a nature the most affectionate and domestic."

"Admiral Rodney's figure approached to delicacy and effeminacy, and he declared himself very sensible to fear, which he surmounted only by considerations of honour and public duty. "Clarendon says that the Duke of Buckingham was so modest and gentle, that some courtiers attempted to put affronts on him until they found that this modesty concealed the most terrible determination." Sir James Parry said of Sir John Franklin, that if he found Wellington Sound open he would explore it, for he was a man who never turned his back on a danger. "Even for their highwayman the same virtue is claimed, and Robin Hood is described as the gentlest thief."—Emerson's English Traits.

In view of what has been said and quoted, we can understand the remark of the Rev. Samuel A. Barnet, who says, "I heard from East Indians of differing views how, comparing races, they placed the British highest. They admired their devotion to principle. (But) "What puzzles me," said a young Indian barrister, "is how you English conquerors can worship a meek Christ." Knowing better than he what Jesus was and what meekness implies, and knowing the great promise attached to its possession, we cannot share the young Indian's astonishment. "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth, and shall be satisfied with the abundance of peace."

INDIA AND ITS GREATNESS.

By F. S. Gandy, of Manchester.

In your issue of March 23, 1893, there appeared a short article entitled, "One Way of Measuring the Empire." To follow up the subject, I think the annexed cutting is worth reproducing in the Banner, as it sets forth, in the clearest manner, the relative proportions of India to countries in Europe, besides giving valuable statistics of population, &c. It is taken from "The Manchester City News, Dec. 24, 1892:—

"GREATER BRITAIN.—THE IMMENSITY OF INDIA.—COMPARISONS WITH EUROPE.

"Mr. J. A. Baines, the Census Commissioner of India, made some interesting statements in a lecture on Tuesday before the London Statistical Society. The total population of India to-day is well over three hundred millions, and its increase during the last ten years is equal to the population of Italy. As many inhabitants as constitute a great European Power are the surplus of births over deaths in every decade of Indian life. If one desires to parallel by population the million-and-a-half square miles of India one must proceed somewhat as follows:—The United States roughly equal Bengal; Germany may be set off against the North-west Provinces; France matches Madras; Spain, Portugal, and Greece put together are on a level with the Punjaub; the United Kingdom may measure itself against Lower Burmah, and yet there are vast portions of the map of India unallotted in the comparison.

"In the Western world emigration is one of the greatest and most significant of national and international factors: there is a constant movement of people about their own countries and to other lands, and Governments are constantly occupied with legislation to induce or prevent this, according to their own needs and the characters of the moving population. In India, on the contrary, there is practically no migration at all. Ninety-six people out of every hundred were registered by the last census in or close to the places where they were born. With us, again, most people live in cities; in India they live in the country. In England fifty-three per cent. of the population was shown by the last census to be 'urban;' in India only four and three-quarters per cent. Two-thirds of the population of India live by agriculture.

"India, too, is a land of extremes. Of two places north of the tropics one will have a yearly rainfall of 600 inches and the other of five inches; the average density of population is 184 to the square mile, yet there are thirty-six and a-half millions of people who live at the rate of 960 to the square mile. In only one district of the whole continent has there been a decrease of population during the last ten years—the little province of Coorg. Mr. Baines follows the example of all Indian authorities in urging upon us that the phrase 'the millions of India' is a sensational one, only suited to the special pleader. India is not a unit in any conceivable ethnical respect, and the officers administering the 240 districts of 4,000 square miles each into which it is divided for purposes of government have seldom identical problems to solve. A welcome feature of the latest census is that it showed the absence of any great wave of either epidemic or famine; and in spite of the almost appalling yearly increase of the native races, Mr. Baines still reaches an optimistic conclusion upon the old-world question of population and the means of subsistence. 'India,' he declares, 'is not over-peopled; and even in the favourable circumstances of the last ten years the population has not increased in an undue proportion to the means of subsistence; whilst the rates of increase in its powers of production and purchase indicate a general rise in the well-being of the community at large.'"

Digitized by Google

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We are obliged to Mr. Gandy for forwarding to us the above. It places the subject of the overwhelming greatness and grandeur of Britain's Heathen Empire in an attractive and striking manner before the readers. India is indeed a divine gift to God's people, and is a sample of the power of God's works which He has shown to His people according to His promise made not twice nor thrice (Psa. cxi. 6, R.V.) He gave the Land of Promise (which was His own) to His chosen people, according to His covenant, and as "He showed the power of His works" on that occasion, so He has, in these our "latter days," shown again, to us His people Israel, the power of His works on an immensely larger scale, by giving us the heritage of the heathen in India and Burmah, thereby granting us enormous wealth and great prestige amongst the nations, with the command of the vast oceans which lie South, West, and East of the Peninsula itself. As in Palestine the Canaanitish nations were divided in their political views and national polities, and thus became an easy prey to the advancing hosts of Israel, under Joshua, so in our day the Ten-tribed British people have secured the heritage of the heathen in Hindostan, by the operation of two causes. First, by the fact that the Gates of India early fell into their hands; and secondly, because the peoples of India are diverse nations, mighty in population and wealth, but independent of each other, differing one from the other in religions, manners, customs, military instincts and habits, but especially in languages, having no bond of union with each other, and hostile, rather than friendly, in their feelings towards one another. They are therefore easily held in check by a powerful though beneficent nation like our own, and the military nations of North and Central India, having been subdued in open warfare, are unable longer to oppose us in the field.

The Gates, which gave us the preponderance first, were Madras, acquired in A.D. 1639, Calcutta (A.D. 1700), and Bombay (A.D. 1662). Since then Rangoon fell to our power in 1852, the Straits Settlements in 1819, and Aden in 1839. These places being the Gates of India, and of the Indian Ocean, have given us the command of the whole Indian Empire, including its ocean adjuncts, and so have fulfilled, in a miraculous manner, the prophecy of Psa. cxi. 6, R.V. So long as those Gates remain in our possession, so long will India be in subjection to our nation. In the promise of the Gates as contained in Gen. xxii. 17, there is no hint that the gift will ever be cancelled, or the possession of them once bestowed, be held again in abeyance. They are a gift purchased by the obedience of our forefather Abraham, and granted to him by the oath of God, unconditionally, because he had obeyed God's voice in the matter of the willing sacrifice of Isaac on Mount Moriah (in figure). They are also secured by the faithfulness of God, who "showed His people Israel the power of His works, in giving them the heritage of the heathen "or "nations." Verses 8 and 9 of the Psalm in question tell us that these "works" are verity and judgment, and "all His commandments are sure." "They are established for ever and ever." We hold India, then, by an everlasting title which depends not on our national deserts in the sight of God, but on His faithfulness to His oath and promises, whereby, on account of the patriarch's faith, God gave him of His grace, a purely unconditional cluster of gifts.

The possession of India has ever been the ambition of the nations, but it never occurred to the wildest imagination, either of the ancients or of the modern nations who covet the Indian Empire, to acquire and hold the whole Peninsula, from the Himalaya Range southwards, and in Burmah from the boundaries of China to the mouths of the Irrawâdi. Yet that is the extent of our British Empire, with Ceylon and the Indian clusters of Islands in the Indian Ocean thrown in! It is, verily, a vast possession, the immensity of which must strike the imagination of the dullest, and yet large though it is, the British Dominion of Canada is three times as large! If we were able to lift up the Indian Empire and place it bodily in the centre of "the Dominion," there would yet be room for two more Indias on the surface of the Dominion, which, taking India as the unit, gives one a very fair idea of the extent of the Empire of the Queen, and how grandly and rapidly it can grow to the dimensions it has already attained. Let Israel, therefore, praise the Lord for His faithfulness and truth to His chosen ones (1 Chron. xvi. 13, R.V.).

THE NEW COVENANT MADE IN THE BLOOD OF CHRIST.

THE first covenant made with the children of Israel on Sinai had mutual obligations. "Do this," said the law, "and thou shalt live." "Break this law," it continued, "and thou shalt die." The breach of that covenant came from the side of Israel. "They continued not in My covenant," is the allegation of Heb. viii. 9, R.V. "And I regarded them not," is the Divine judgment on the people's breach of the same. The nation having broken the covenant then standing, and God having cancelled it as regards Himself, there was no remedy, because no further mutual agreement would, or could be of the least use, or benefit. The people were bad and untrustworthy, unfit for covenant relationship with their offended Lord. Whence, then, could help come to them? God Himself must provide it, or they would be as hopeless as they were helpless, and perish.

We see, accordingly, that God took the matter into His own hands, and provided a testament or covenant, in which He undertook the whole of the conditions. He would trust Israel no more; but what was needful for His people's safety He undertook to find Himself. "This is the covenant I will make with the House of Israel "—the case of Judah is not mentioned here (Heb. viii. 10, R.V.). In each of the stipulations and conditions that follows, there is nothing prescribed for Israel to perform, to entitle her to the benefits. God undertakes for both sides! Each clause testifies to this gracious purpose, "After those days," saith the Lord, "I will put My laws in their mind." "On their heart will I write them." "I will be to them a God." "They shall be to Me a people." "They shall not teach every man his fellow citizen, or his brother, saying, Know the Lord." But the reason is, "They all shall know Me, from the least of them to the greatest of them;" "I will be merciful unto their iniquities." "Their sins will I remember no more."

Digitized by Google

These are great and very precious covenants, which it is clear are to be properly administered, because God Himself does it, and while He lowers man in the dust, the grace of God is exalted by fitting Israel for her future destiny. This will be done in many ways. First, the chosen ones of God will be brought in penitence to Christ. The prayer we put up in the Communion Service, "Lord have mercy upon us, and write all these Thy laws in our hearts, we beseech Thee," will be literally fulfilled. By our own power this never could take place; but in Heb. viii. 10, it is provided that God will do this great thing for Israel Himself. He will be our God. He will make us, because we are Israel, "His people." And then follows that blessing that is beyond the faith of our most exalted Christian ministers. "They shall all know Me," "from the least of them to the greatest of them;" without exception!

In the exercise of pardoning mercy all Israel's sins and iniquities will be forgiven; and God, even our own God, will remember them no more. This covenant, then, is one in which God stands for both sides. He pledges Himself, and the Lord Jesus Christ, our Mediator, stands for us; being the God-man, "Immanuel."

We see, then, that Our Identity aspires to great spiritual things, and looks to God for glorious fulfilments. Our Church, in this respect, the only Christian Church in the world, looks to God, each Sabbath day, for the fulfilment of these glorious blessings. She prays for it at the end of each of the Ten Commandments as they are repeated by the minister in the Communion Service, and she is heard because God, as we have seen, has promised that He will grant us these very gifts.

"ONE OF THE GREATEST, RICHEST, AND MOST POWERFUL NATIONS IN THE WORLD."

THE illustrious and able Duke of Devonshire, in the remarkable speech he delivered in the Drill Hall at Bristol, on the evening of April 6, protesting against the Home Rule Bill, proposed by Mr. Gladstone, for Ireland, made use of the words set out above, and described ours as "one of the greatest, richest, and most powerful nations in the world." If he meant that ours was a "great, rich, and powerful nation," he was perfectly correct. It is so. But he said it was "one of the nations" which is both "great, and rich, and powerful."

There are several great nations in the world, and there are several which are great and powerful, such as Germany, Russia, France, and America, besides our own. But the addition of the attribute of riches also rather restricts the view. For Germany is not a rich empire, though great and powerful. Russia, though great and powerful in extent and military strength, is poor. It is suspected to be nearly bankrupt, though its credit just now is good. France is great and powerful, and its wealth is also respectable. America is an Anglo-Saxon Republic which is great and powerful in numbers, and vast in wealth too.

We see, then, there are but three nations which come up to the mark of the Duke of Devonshire's description, and the British is one of these three. It would have suited the Duke's argument better still if he could have been assured from Scripture, and could have impressed on his vast audience that the determination of the Lord God of Israel was to make the British (being His people Israel) not only "one of the greatest, richest, and most powerful of the nations in the world," but literally and precisely "the greatest," "the richest," and "the most powerful of all the nations of the world!" It may seem absurd to imagine that a statesman like the Duke could ever venture to appeal thus to Scripture for his authority in addressing a multitude such as it was our privilege to see him surrounded by, on the memorable occasion in question.

Yet the Scriptures are the Word of God. The people listening to the Duke were the people of God, in the literal Israelitish sense of the words. And the Duke was one of the elders or "nobles of Israel," who should not be ashamed to rely upon the word and promises of Jehovah, the covenant God of Israel! In the Scriptures God declares of His people that if they became obedient to His commandments, hearkening diligently to the voice of the Lord their God, that then "He would set them on high above all nations of the earth" (Deut. xxviii. 1). Also that He would make them "the head, and not the tail, above only, but not beneath," if they would only hearken unto the commandments of the Lord their God (ver. 13). In Dan. vii. 27, again the promise is expressed that "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey Him." This, we presume, means that the British people, being Israel, God's chosen ones, will develop into an universal empire, having the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, for its King, who will thus become the Sovereign Ruler of the planet with a kingdom appertaining to Him which shall be, in duration, "everlasting."

The promised result has not yet been attained, but by the judgment of persons competent to decide, it is manifest that our nation is rapidly expanding in power and possessions in the four quarters of the earth, till North America and Australasia, for the most part, are in possession of the British Anglo-Saxon races. South Africa shows signs of a boundless enlargement of British power there, and other parts of that great but dark continent are yielding to British influence to the great blessing and advantage of the native races there located.

India, moreover, with Burmah, has become a British military empire of first-rate importance to the Crown, and the many ocean fortresses and coaling stations throughout the world, which we call Gates, testify at once to our world-wide ocean supremacy, and to the gradual increase of our empire till, following the Gates, it will become at last coterminous with the globe itself. This is the prospect for our nation; which prospect is, as sure as God's Word and promise can make it; the British being Israel. If that be not the case, and this is, after all, only one of the non-Israelite nations of the world, there is no future for our race, but a dismal foreboding of final ruin and decay after the manner of all nations which have yet risen to great power on the earth.

Our Identity, thank God, gives us good news for our country, which nothing else can afford us. Apart from Our Identity we never could know why we are distinguished from all other nations in respect to national greatness, national wealth, and power; or learn that it is not ephemerial, but as lasting as the sun, the moon, the stars, and the other ordinances of our God. Well may the Duke of Devonshire point to such a nation as ours and tell the Irish people that they are happy indeed in being allied to such a power as Britain, to share in all her greatness, wealth, and strength. Instead of desiring to be free from our alliance, they should recollect that union with us brings their sons all opportunities for good that heart can desire; and that Home Rule will injure, but never can benefit them, in the slightest degree. Independent of Israel, no nation can prosper. Certainly not Ireland, which is by God's providence tied to our side, a miserable, weak remnant, as compared with the population of Great Britain. The blessings of Israel are ours, and they are such that, apart from us, Ireland will find them unattainable. They comprise:—

Digitized by Google

1. The blessings of heaven above.
2. Blessings of the deep which coucheth beneath.
3. Blessings of the breast and of the womb.
4. Blessings extending to the utmost bound of the everlasting hills (Gen. xxii. 22—26, R.V.).

By another category we have a second and even fuller Scriptural description of Israel's present and future blessings in Deut. xxxiii. 13—17. They relate to blessings on Israel's land, for the dew, and for the deep, for the precious fruits of sun-growth, and for those of moon culture besides: for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the everlasting hills, also of the earth and the fulness thereof. Taken together these things constitute magnificent clusters of blessings such as no nation on earth has ever had any knowledge, but which Israel, and, therefore, Great Britain, exclusively enjoy, being the people of God. To Him be all the praise.

THE TRIBE OF DAN.

By W. H. Larkins, Lieut.-Colonel.

PART II.

(Concluded from page 259.)

Dan was the son of Bilhah, the handmaid of Rachel, who, having no children of her own, gave Bilhah unto her husband Jacob to wife, and Dan was one of the two sons she bare unto him. On the birth of Dan (which means "judging," A.V.: "he judged," R.V.), Rachel said, "God hath judged me, and hath also heard my voice.' Barrenness was considered a reproach among Israelitish women, and it was the withholding from her the fruit of the womb that Rachel here refers to, and at the same time acknowledges that her prayer had been heard, and she therefore called his name Dan (Gen. xxx. 1—6).

The author of "Scriptural Researches" gives the meaning of Dan as "judgment," and compares his case with that of his sister Dinah, having the same meaning—"judgment"—and says, as she disappeared, so will Dan from off the face of the earth, as a judgment for the first introduction of idolatry into Israel; but I cannot myself see the parallel between the case of Dan and that of Dinah, which is fully narrated in Gen. xxxiv. Dan's offence was breaking the second commandment, but Dinah's in the first instance was disobedience to God's command in going among the heathen, and being alone she fell into the hands of Shechem, the son of Hamor, a Hivite, a prince of the country, and one false step led to a more heinous offence, but it does not appear that Dinah went out to see the daughters of the land with any improper motive, nor is it by any means certain that she was a consenting party to what happened, which cost Shechem and Hamor their lives at the hands of Simeon and Levi, the brothers of Dinah, who brought her home to her father's house, and here the narrative ends.

No such fate befell Dinah as that predicted of Dan by the author of "Scriptural Researches." Our more modern writers on the Identity attribute the omission of this tribe from the number of those sealed of the tribes of the children of Israel in Rev. vii. 4—8 to the fact of Dan's having escaped being carried into captivity by taking to their ships and putting to sea. This in itself does not appear to me a sufficient reason for the forfeit of a blessing like that promised to the other tribes, unless coupled with the fact that having escaped from the penalty awarded to the tribes that constituted the kingdom of Samaria for their idolatry, Dan, the first to set up openly a carved image in her inheritance, could hardly have expected to get off unrewarded for their wickedness in breaking the second commandment, and therefore the blessing to the other tribes in Rev. vii. 4 has been withheld from the children of Dan as a judgment for their idolatry, in place of the captivity which befell the other tribes of the kingdom of Samaria.

I have always confined myself to the Scriptural study of the Identity, and have never attempted to follow the tribes in their wanderings to the isles of the west, and I cannot, therefore, throw any light upon this portion of their history. Now, the first thing to be ascertained is, when is Dan alleged to have left his inheritance for good, and then up to what date is there any trace to be found in Scripture of the presence of this tribe in Palestine? Col. Gawler, in his pamphlet on "Dan," does not state when this tribe left their inheritance for good, but referring to a passage in the song of Deborah, "Why did Dan remain in ships?" (Judges v. 17), says that whenever invasion threatened, the Danites took to their ships. Dan received their inheritance from Joshua in B.C. 1444. In 1406 they took Laish and established themselves there, and re-built the city which they called Dan, but they were clearly in the land up to B.C. 1136 to 1116, during the period that Samson, the son of Manoah, a Danite, was judge over Israel (Judges xiii., xiv.). This brings us to within twenty years of the establishment of the kingdom under Saul (B.C. 1095), when it is reasonable to assume that the whole of the Twelve Tribes were present in the land on that occasion.

We now come to difficulties, some of which will admit of explanation, but others are not so easy to get over. We have traced Dan to the establishment of the kingdom B.C. 1095, and 120 years afterwards came the disruption of that kingdom (B.C. 975) into the two minor kingdoms of Israel and Judah. Whether Dan was present in possession of the inheritance in the land at that time is the matter now for consideration. There is something to be said on both sides of the question. Col. Gawler says that when invasion threatened, the Danites took to their ships, and he points to the omission of the genealogy of this tribe in 1 Chron. i. to viii., and also their omission among the sealed (Rev. vii. 4—8) as proofs of the absence of Dan from Palestine. As regards the omission of the genealogy, it is not confined to Dan alone, for on referring to those chapters in Chronicles it will be seen that the genealogies of only nine of the tribes are given, and as regards the omission in Rev. vii. 4, that has already been disposed of by me. There was no invasion of the land of Israel that could have forced the Danites to take to their ships until that of Pul, king of Assyria, in B.C. 772 to 761, during the reign of Manahem, king of Israel, and on that occasion the invader was bought off by the payment of a heavy penalty in silver (1 Kings xv.). Then came Tiglath-pileser, in the reign of Pekah, king of Israel, B.C. 757 to 740, when he carried off the Trans-Jordanic Tribes. In the reign of Hoshea, king of Israel, B.C. 728, Tiglath-pileser again invaded the land, put the king under tribute, and carried away all the tribes in Galilee, but on neither of these occasions is their any mention of Dan or of Simeon. Three years after, owing to the non-payment of the tribute on the part of Hoshea, came Shalmaneser king of Assyria, who put the king Hosea into prison, and captured Samaria after a siege of three years, and it is said that he went up throughout all the land, and that none were left but the tribe of Judah only (2 Kings xvii.).

Digitized by Google

There is nothing in what has just been stated to prove Dan's absence from their inheritance at the time of the disruption of the kingdom, nor does there appear to be any reason why Dan should have evacuated their inheritance prior to the date of Pul's invasion of the land in B.C. 772 to 161, some 200 years after the disruption of the kingdom, which took place in B.C. 975.

We now come to the difficulties of the question, which are these:—1st, It is evident that unless Manasseh was counted as a tribe and took the place of Dan on the disruption of the kingdom, Dan must have been one of the nine tribes that constituted the kingdom of Samaria, and must therefore have been present in the land at that time; but as Manasseh had often taken the place of Levi to make up the Twelve Tribes, and had taken the place of Dan in Rev. vii., so we may conclude that on this occasion in the absence of Dan that Manasseh took her place; 2nd, as Dan did not form a part of the kingdom of Samaria against which Hosea prophesied (Hos. i. 4, 6, 9), then those prophecies did not affect that tribe, and there was no partial failure of prophecy, inasmuch as not applying to Dan, those prophecies did not require to be fulfilled in her.

So far we have got over some of the difficulties, but what are we to say to the following passages, which point in a different direction altogether, and rather to the presence, if not of the whole, of a portion of the tribe of Dan, until the day of the captivity of the land? The passages referred to are these:—1st, Jeroboam made two calves of gold, and he set up one in Bethel and the other put he in Dan, which became a sin, for the people went to worship before the one even unto Dan (1 Kings xii. 28—30); 2nd, And the children of Dan set up the graven image (in Dan or Laish), and Jonathan and his sons were the priests to the tribe of Dan until the day of the captivity of the land, and they set them up Micah's graven images (Judges xviii. 29—31).

It will be observed that both these passages quoted by me have reference to that portion of the territory captured by Dan formerly known as Laish, which they destroyed and built thereon the city of Dan, which was far the most northern point of the land of Israel, as Beersheba was the most southern, and hence the term "from Dan to Beersheba." Laish was not on the seacoast, like the lot which fell to the inheritance of Dan, for that was on the Mediterranean, with the famous port of Joppa as a part of their possession. The 600 men that captured Laish and dwelt there were but a very small portion, probably not more than a hundredth part of the tribe of Dan, and it was in this part of their borders that Micah's graven images and Jeroboam's golden calf was set up, and it was here that Jonathan and his sons, the priests to the tribe of Dan were, from the time of the setting up of Micah's images (B.C. 1406) until the day of the captivity of the land (B.C. 721).

The priests of the tribe would hardly have remained on at Laish without that portion of the Danites who had settled there, and the only plan that suggests itself to my mind to make matters harmonize is to assume that the tribe of Dan was on the seacoast some time prior to the disruption, and took to their ships, and thus escaped being carried into captivity, and that the remnant of Dan, which was settled at Laish, far to the north, and away from the seacoast, remained at Laish until the day of the captivity of the land, when they were swept away by Shalmaneser into captivity, as he left none but the tribe of Judah only.

Bromley, Kent. March, 1893.

PRESENTATION TO THE REV. J. IDRISYN JONES.

FORWARDED BY H. L. B.

THE Committee of the North London British-Israel Association met at the Central Association Rooms, on 1st May, to bid farewell to their respected chairman, the Rev. J. Idrisyn Jones, upon his removal to Welshpool.

Mr. A. R. Granville presided, and having read portions of the 3rd and 4th chapters of the Epistle of St. John, he referred in affecting terms to the many and great services Mr. Jones had rendered the cause in the North of London; to the assistance he had given the Committee in directing and encouraging their efforts; and to their deep regret, both Churchmen and Nonconformists, at losing the benefit of his Christian counsel and truly charitable spirit. Mr. Granville concluded by wishing Mr. Jones God-speed in his new sphere, and presented him, on behalf of the Committee, with a beautifully bound "Parallel" Bible, which had been specially interleaved for use in the study. It bore an appropriate inscription, signed by the members of the Committee:—Messrs. Granville, Barton, Weller, Lowe, Oliver, and Browett (Hon. Secretary).

Mr. Jones warmly thanked his friends for their gift. He never desired nor expected any outward sign of that appreciation of his services which he always felt sure they bore in their hearts. He was certain that the cause would grow, perhaps necessarily slowly, in view of the many distracting duties citizens have now to undertake in this busy metropolis, but it would be none the less surely, for it was irrefutable, and therefore true.

Mr. Jones regretted the unavoidable absence of his old friend Mr. Weller who had so greatly assisted the cause in North London, prior to his removal to Borstal; and he concluded with hearty thanks to his colleagues for their support, and asked a blessing on all their efforts.

"MUSWELL HILL UNION CHURCH.

"An interesting, sympathetic meeting was held on Monday, May 1st, at Muswell Hill Union Church to bid farewell to the Rev. J. Idrisyn Jones. A tea was provided in the chapel, at which about fifty friends were present. After tea a meeting was held, the Rev. R. Finch, of Finchley, presiding. Speeches were delivered by the Rev. G. Freeman, Rev. J. J. Hayman, Mr. B. Sinclair, and several other friends of this cause, who all spoke of the love they felt for Mr. Jones as a Christian gentleman, whom to know was to love, and their regret at his having to leave the neighbourhood. During the evening the Rev. R. Finch, in well-chosen words, in which he paid a high tribute of praise to Mr. Jones, presented him with a very handsome gold watch (suitably engraved), and a drawing-room ornament for Mrs. Jones, from the Church, as a loving testimony of their appreciation of his self-denying services and Christian life amongst them. Mr. Jones, in acknowledgment, thanked those friends who had been his helpers in the church, and thus closed a meeting that will be long remembered by the friends at Muswell Hill Union Church.—Barnet Press, 6th May, 1893."

Digitized by Google

THE ANNIVERSARY OF THE BRITISH-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

THE Annual Meeting, for members only, took place at 2 o'clock p.m., at the Office Rooms, 86, St. Martin's-lane, W.C., on May 16th, 1893, according to advertisement.

There was an average attendance. Mr. E. W. Bird (Philo-Israel) was in the chair, and we observed among those present: the Rev. Denis Hanan, D.D.; the Rev. F. Aston; Col. Senior; Douglas A. Onslow, Esq.; Messrs. Macworth, Pain, Vince, and many others.

The Rev. Secretary read the Report for the past year, and in the absence of Dr. H. Alder-Smith, unavoidably away, the audited Financial Statement. These were adopted by the meeting, and ordered to be printed. The list of the office bearers of the Association was also read and approved. The lamented death of the Rev. S. C. Adam, M.A., one of the Vice-presidents of the Association, was announced in appropriate terms by Mr. Aston, and the name of Mr. Wardlaw, of Glasgow, proposed, and adopted as his successor. After some interesting conversation in regard to the best mode of bringing the Identity before the public at large, the meeting was brought to a close.

At 4 o'clock on the same day, the meeting took place at Exeter Hall, according to the advertisement, in the smaller room. Philo-Israel was in the chair, and he was supported on the platform by the Rev. A. J. J. Cachemaille, M.A., rector of Cheriton, near Winchester, Hants; the Rev. Denis Hanan, M.A., D.D., rector of Tipperary, Ireland; Col. Senior, Bengal Army; D. Onslow, Esq.; the Rev. Secretary F. Aston; and others. The room was fairly full, and the collection at the end of the meeting amounted to a little under £6.

The meeting was addressed by the Chairman, and the Rev. Messrs. Hanan and Cachemaille, who were introduced by Philo-Israel as personal friends and fellow helpers in the BANNER OF ISRAEL for the last 16 or 17 years. The chief feature of that long friendship, he said, was that he had never had a difference with either, and both were from the first true supporters of the cause, and never more strongly and loyally than to-day. In regard to the matters which drew them together, the chairman said he wished to detain them only a few moments while he introduced the subject by a few observations respecting "the chief human instrumentality God deigned to use for the benefit and blessing of mankind." Angels were not so employed, as the Scriptures teach us, and as Acts x. 5 shows. There the Roman centurion was directed by the angel to send for an Israelite, Simon Peter, from Joppa, who was lodging by the sea side with Simon the tanner, and "he would tell him what he should do!" The Lord employs a nation to deal with the non-Israelite nations in the matter of the proclamation of the way of salvation. The nation to be so employed, in order to succeed, must needs be properly endowed with material and spiritual gifts and power to enable it to put forth efforts which must be national, to effect its purpose. To deal with mighty nations it must be itself "great and mighty." It must be "blessed of God"—"Imperial," as founded on vast population, which itself is Empire. It must be gifted with "the Gates of its enemies" to give it the supremacy of the sea, and wealthy to such a degree that it may lend to many nations (not to all), but need loans from none. Its power by land and sea must be so great that it may reign over many nations, but be under subjection to none—having three Empires, that over the sea, the colonial, and the heathen empires of the world besides. It must, to fit it for its functions, be so filled with spiritual gifts and blessings, communicating them to others, that "all who see them must acknowledge them that they are the seed that the Lord hath blessed" (Gen. xxii. 17, 18; Deut. xv. 6, viii. 18; Isa. lxi. 9). Where is this nation now? The modern state which answers to this Scriptural picture will be described to you, doubtless, said the chairman, by Dr. Hanan and Mr. Cachemaille, and you will, by the cumulative evidence that the case presents, perceive that the nation we are in search of is none other than the British!

The Rev. Mr. Cachemaille followed with an able but short address on the general subject, which we hope to present to our readers in an abstract form later on. He noted that he had not appeared on that platform for eleven years, and had not seen the chairman since they last met there then, but he felt the same warm interest in the subject as he always did, and regretted that his brethren in the ministry had only, as a small minority, been able to grasp the great truth yet.

The Rev. Dr. Hanan's encouraging address concluded the afternoon's proceedings. We hope to be in a position to publish it ere long.

In the evening, at 7 p.m., the audience at Exeter Hall was an encouraging one. We noticed the presence in the body of the room of many young and middle-aged men; not many clergymen, but a large number of ladies.

Mr. Douglas A. Onslow presided, and the chief speakers were the Rev. Dr. Hanan, Rev. A. J. J. Cachemaille, and Col. Senior. In reply to votes of thanks, Philo-Israel spoke for a few minutes, and the Chairman responded with hearty thanks for the honour done to him. The collection exceeded £6 during the evening, or over £12 for the day. Dr. Dyce Brown, Col. Sandwith, Mr. Bastard, and others were present, and Dr. Heyward Smith sent a telegraphic message of regret for his inability to appear.

We propose to publish Col. Senior's address in extenso ere long, and those of Dr. Hanan and Mr. Cachemaille, when the notes of their speeches reach us. The latter made a happy point of the fact that the Tribe of Levi was one of the Twelve, and yet set aside for ecclesiastical services and purposes as representatives of the rest. They did not cease thereby to belong to Israel or Israel to them. They were Israel's substitutes in the service of God, but not thereby separated from their brethren. So the Church and State among ourselves is one body, neither independent of the other. The Church is the member of the State set apart, like Levi, for the service of God. Both constitute one body—and the Church and State are one.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—I have been for some time considering Mr. Hide's reply in your number of April 19 to my letter to you on Hag. ii. 7, and I have felt a difficulty in answering it, not because it is unanswerable, but because there are so many points in it which need to be refuted; and I wish to do so in the mildest manner possible. He begins by quoting the whole passage contained in ver. 3—5, which he truly says "are an exhortation to the people to work with a purpose, casting all their care upon God, &c.," with which interpretation I cordially agree. But he takes no notice of the fact, which I emphasized in my letter, that ver. 6 and 7 are in a parenthesis. Certainly so in the Hebrew Bible—a fact to which I beg to direct his attention, showing, I think, that the Lord, by the prophet, breaks off from what He had been saying in the previous verses to introduce a prophecy of more distant events and of far more momentous consequence to the world at large than what was then taking place at Jerusalem among a small remnant of the tribes of Judah, Benjamin, and Levi—events yet to come to pass—events which will be seen in that awful convulsion of all nations which the signs of the times show with solemn warning are now near at hand, and which some of us may live to see: a convulsion evidently predicted by our Lord in Matt. xxiv. 29, 30, where He says, "Immediately after the tribulation of those days (the destruction of Jerusalem and the scattering of the tribe of Judah) shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken (all figurative language, referring to the kings and potentates of the world, and the final overthrow of the Gentile nations); and then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven, and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory."

Digitized by Google

Now, mark the next verse: "And He shall send His angels (messengers) with a great sound of a trumpet; and they shall gather together His elect" (who are they? who but the Twelve Tribes of Israel? His elect, His chosen people? See Isaiah, passim, especially chap. xi. 11 to end; compare Zech. x. 6 to end) "from the four winds, from the one end of heaven to the other."

Spiritualizers may deny this interpretation, but how can they do so when Ephraim and Judah are distinctly mentioned by name in these prophecies? I mention these prophecies as confirmatory of my interpretation of the Hebrew words in Hag. ii. 7, "ubau chemdath kol haggoiym," which I translate, "and the noblest, or desirable one, of all nations shall come."

Mr. Hide adheres to the rendering of the A. V., and asks, "What was the desire of nations?" and then proceeds to show that the word "nations" "includes twelve or thirteen nations or tribes, which came out of the loins of Abraham." I confess I never before heard the Twelve Tribes of Israel called "nations." My reading of Scripture informs me that up to the death of Solomon there was only one nation of Israel, and that after his decease they became two nations, respectively called "Israel" and "Judah." These two nations certainly had at times, and in the case of some individuals, a desire for the coming of the Messiah, as in the case of Abraham, their father, of whom our Lord said that "he rejoiced" or rather "earnestly desired" to see My day, and he saw it and was glad;" but I cannot see that the Gentile heathen nations had any such desire, or any knowledge of a Messiah and Redeemer to come. And no doubt if the prophet had been inspired to utter such a prophecy he would have been further inspired to write "uba" (singular) instead of "ubau" (plural).

Mr. Hide has a singular method of evading this difficulty. He says, in effect, that the three Hebrew words—"Chemdath Kol Haggoiym"—represent the three Persons in the blessed Trinity, and therefore naturally take a plural verb after them. I must confess that this savours to me more of some Jewish Cabbala than a Christian comment, and his explanation of it does not mend the matter. There is another passage in his letter which I must not pass over.

Lastly, he—i.e., "H. S. H."—says that "the shaking of heaven and earth, and the sea, and the dry land, has not yet taken place. "What!" (he exclaims) "has not the preaching of Paul, the aged, and his writings shaken heathendom and all its ancient religions? The religion of the Greeks, Egyptians, Assyrians, Persians, &c., to their very foundations and swept away their crumbling ruins, transferring their teaching into quite another form, now called Christian, or one bearing the name of Christ, with Christ at its head." Now, this is really too bad—bad in every paragraph and sentence.

What has the preaching of Paul, or of all the apostles, to do with the "shaking of the heaven, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land"? It did shake men's minds, but the minds of very few beyond the "lost Israelites," as has often been shown in your pages; and even if it were otherwise, how have the Greeks, the Assyrians, the Egyptians, and Persians profited by it? The Greek Church has long since relapsed into idolatry, and the other nations into Mahommetanism, if they ever really at any period accepted true Christianity. Is it true that the crumbling ruins of idolatrous religions have been swept away? No, they have all been revived; the ruins have been rebuilt by the Church of Rome, which has adopted and stereotyped all the ancient idolatry, adding a thin veneer of Christianity, so thin that any reader of the Bible can see through it, and detect the foul features of the ancient religions which it overlays.

If Mr. Hide doubts that assertion, let him purchase and read "Hislop's Two Babylons," and if that does not convince him I know not what will. "With Christ at its head." No, sir, Christ cannot be the head of anti-Christianity. The Pope is, but the Lord Jesus never. I believe there is no Church in the world, no visible Church, which can claim Christ as its head except the Church of Anglo-Israel and her kindred nations: so I deny that the preaching of Paul fulfils the prophecy of Haggai.

But even supposing Mr. Hide were correct in this interpretation of the passage, he makes a fatal slip, which is sufficient of itself to confute his argument. If, as he asserts, the preaching of Paul were the predicted "shaking," it came after the coming of the desire of all nations (to follow his interpretation), whereas the inspired prophet Haggai distinctly asserts that the "coming" is to follow the shaking—the convulsion of all nations first takes place—and then, and not till then, "Bau Chemdath Kol Haggoiym." The return of Israel with Judah to the ancient inheritance of the nation will not take place till after the shaking of the Gentile nations. The Turks must be removed from Palestine during the shaking of the European Gentile nations, and then the way will be opened for the ships of Tarshish (Britain) to bring God's sons from afar, and plant them, both Ephraim and Judah, in their own land.

One word more with regard to the concluding paragraph of Mr. Hide's letter. He says, "supposing the word Brith (a covenant) is spelt with a Tau, is it not worth sticking to? Is it not the Tau, or cross, that raiseth us?" No; the Hebrew Tau has no resemblance to a cross. It is formed thus—as no doubt Mr. Hide knows—ת, totally unlike the symbolical Tau of the heathen, which is formed thus . I might say much on that subject, but I refrain. Again, I say, let him read Hislop, and he will not be so enamoured of the Tau.

I am, dear sir, yours very truly,

HUGH S. HAMILTON.

Manston Vicarage, Leeds, May 7, 1893.

TAKEN FROM "A SONG OF THE ENGLISH."

BY RUDYARD KIPLING.

FAIR is our lot—O goodly is our heritage!
(Humble ye, O people, and be fearful in your mirth),
For the Lord our God Most High
He hath made the deep as dry,
He hath smote for us a pathway to the ends of all the earth!

Yea, though we sinned, and our rulers went from righteousness,
Deep in all dishonours though we stained our garments' hem.
Oh! be ye not dismayed,
Though we stumbled and we strayed,
We were led by evil counsellers, the Lord shall deal with them.

Hold ye the faith, the faith our fathers sealed us;
Whoring not with visions—otherwise and over-stale.
Except ye pay the Lord
Single heart and single sword,
Of your children in their bondage shall He ask them treble-tale.

Keep ye the law—be swift in all obedience,
Clear the land of evil, drive the road and bridge the ford;
Make ye sure to each his own
That ye reap what he has sown
By the peace among our peoples let men know we serve the Lord.

(From "The English Illustrated Magazine.")

BY-THE-BYE, it may not be generally known that the name "Welsh" means "strangers," and is little less offensive than the Chinese description of "foreign devils." The men of Wales are Kymry. The name was applied to the Britons by the English, who were "poor, benighted 'eathens, but first-class fighting-men," at the time when they had begun to arrive in formidable numbers from the eastern shores of the North Sea. However, the word is still adhered to, and its implied slight has long since been forgotten.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed "PHILO-ISRAEL," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION for the BANNER OF ISRAEL, in Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts. To any country included in the Postal Union, including the following:—United Kingdom, Canada, America, Europe, New Zealand, Cape Colony, Victoria, Western Australia, Transvaal, Tasmania, South Australia, Queensland, Natal, New South Wales, India, Ceylon via Brindisi, 7s. per year, including postage.

All Post Office Orders, Cheques, &c., should be crossed "City Bank, Ludgate-hill, to the ac. of ROBERT BANKS AND SON." They will then only be paid to our account.

READING CASES for holding the Weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts, may be had, price 2s. Sent post free on receipt of Postal Order.

THE ANNUAL VOLUMES, bound in handsome blue Cloth, price 8s.

THE MONTHLY PARTS, in tinted wrapper, published the last day of each month, 6d.

Englishmen should Circulate, at the Present Crisis,

NO ROME RULE.

AN IDENTITY LEAFLET.

UNION IS STRENGTH.

Price 1s. per 100 nett. 1,000 carriage paid to any address for 10s.

London: Robert Banks & Son Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

USEFUL BOOKS FOR BIBLE STUDENTS.

In Two Vols., about 500 pages in each, cloth bound, price 5s., originally published at 7/6.

HISTORY OF THE JEWS

In Three Concurrent Sections.

I.—Ten Books of the Antiquities of the Jews, as TRANSLATED by WHISTON, with Notes from FLAVIUS JOSEPHUS.

II.—The Bible Narrative from the Creation to the Captivity at Babylon, fully given and faithfully rendered.

III.—A Modern History of the Jews. Abridged and Offered as a Commentary on the Preceding Sections.

The Two Volumes sent post free for 5/3 nett

To be had only direct from ROBERT BANKS AND SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Now ready, 220 Large Post 8vo. pages, in clear, readable type, price 2s. 6d., limp cloth, gilt lettered, red edges, post free to any part of the world on receipt of postal remittance.

Nineteen Centuries Ago and NOW.

BY J. C. H. MEHL.

WITH BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH,

BY E. M. RUSH.

CONTENTS.—Biographical Sketch—Nineteen Centuries Ago and Now—Letter to the Editor of the Banner of Israel—A German's Views on Our Identity—The Church of England—The Woman Arrayed with the Sun (Rev. xii.)—"Remember the Sabbath Day to Keep It Holy"—"Blessed are the Meek, for They Shall Inherit the Earth"—The Spirit of Negation, and the Spirit of Prayer—"Righteousness Exalteth a Nation"—"The Dispersion Among the Greeks"—The Protracted Era of Grace—"The Power of the Holy People"—The Present Aspect of the Kingdom of Heaven—One, and Yet Many—A Great Truth Slow in its Progress—A Two-fold Alienation—On Co-operating with the Divine Purpose—A Lamp Shining in a Dark Place (2 Pet. i. 19)—Was St. Patrick an Israelite, and Was He Aware of It?

London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C.

"A WONDERFUL REMEDY."
"I WAS GIVEN UP BY ALL."
"SAVED FROM AN EARLY GRAVE."

Such are the words of grateful Patients relative to their CASES OF

CONSUMPTION

CURED BY THE TREATMENT OF

MR. GEO. T. CONGREVE.

Read his Book, "ON CONSUMPTION, &c.," which may be had post free for ONE SHILLING from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.; or may be ordered of any Bookseller.

NOTE.—CONSULTATIONS FREE at Coombe Lodge, Peckham, on TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings only. No Charge except the usual charge for three weeks or six weeks' supply of medicine. All Patients should read the book first.

NEW BADGES.

Gold Brooches, 6/3 and 4/-.
Scarf Pins, 4/9 and 3/9.
Pendants, large, 4/6; small, 2/9.
All Badges, Metal Gilt, 9d.

All Post Free. Applications, with Postal Order enclosed, to be sent to MRS. THOMPSON, 13, Pultney-st., Bath, or to MAJOR-GEN. CARLYLE BELL, St. Laurence Villa, Kingston-hill, Surrey.

NEW CATALOGUE of Works on Our Identity post free from R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

Mr. E. HINE'S PUBLICATIONS

Can be obtained of ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London; or of ISAAC LOVELAND, Shoreham, Sevenoaks.

Lost Israel Found. One handsome Demy 8vo. vol., cloth, gilt edges. 3s. 6d., post 3s. 9d.
Forty-seven Identifications. 6d., post 7d.
Coming Glories. 6d., by post 7d.
Flashes of Light. 6d., by post 7d.
Oxford Wrong. 4d., by post 7d.
Anglo-Saxon Riddle. 2d., by post 2½d.
The Nation Warned, &c. 6d., by post 7d.

About half a million copies of these works have been sold.

WEIGHTY COUNSEL to all seeking health.—If you have not got a copy of Dr. Rooke's Dictionary of Domestic Medicine, write at once for it.—The Primitive Methodist says:—"It is full of sound practical advice, and will prove of great service in cases of emergency."

Every household should possess a copy. Sent post free to all who mention this paper on receipt of penny stamp, by the proprietors of Dr. Rooke's Solar Elixir and Oriental Pills. DR. ROOKE, Scarborough, England

TEETH.—£1 A FULL SET

ESKELL'S.—CELEBRATED MAKE, £2 2s. Warranted and fitted in one visit. No extractions needed. HALF A MILLION SETS already supplied. The Nursing Record and Hospital World says:—We recommend all who require Reliable and Good Teeth at a small cost to go to Messrs. ESKELL, 445, Strand (facing Charing Cross Station), and 58, Ludgate Hill, City, London. Also at 27, Western Road, Brighton, and 23, Mount Pleasant, Tunbridge Wells. Hours 9 till 7. Apply for Illustrated Pamphlet free (mention this paper). Established 100 years.

"THE WORLD'S PROVED REMEDY FOR ALL CHEST DISEASES."

COUGH, ASTHMA,

CHRONIC BRONCHITIS,

INFLUENZA,

THERE IS NONE TO EQUAL IT.

Rev. F. E. HEAPE, of DERBY, in a recent letter, says: "Your Medicine always puts my lungs right, and drove out the terrible INFLUENZA last May."

This Medicine has been prepared for 65 years.

CONGREVE'S BALSAMIC ELIXIR.

In Bottles, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 22s., may be had of all Chemists and Medicine Vendors.

TEA! TEA! TEA!

FROM

INDIA, CEYLON, AND CHINA.

Best Quality and Best Value.

From 1/6 to 3/6 per lb. Samples Gratis.

Carriage Paid on Parcels of 6lbs. and upwards.

Robinson & James,

42, TRINITY SQUARE, TOWER HILL LONDON, E.C.

TOOTH-ACHE

CURED INSTANTLY BY

BUNTER'S NERVINE

Prevents Decay. Saves Extraction. Sleepless Nights Prevented.

Neuralgic Headaches and all Nerve Pains removed by BUNTER'S NERVINE. All Chemists, 1s. 1½d.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN'S

IRISH CAMBRIC HANDKERCHIEFS

ALL PURE FLAX. POST FREE.

Ladies' Hemmed—2/6, 3/3, 4/-, 4/11, 6/-, 7/2, 8/-, & 9/- per doz.
Gentlemen's Hemmed—4/-, 4/11, 5/9, 6/6, 7/5, 8/3, 9/3, & 10/6 per doz.
Hemstiched Ladies and Gents (excellent value) 6/- & 7/11 per doz., various widths & hems.
A Sample of THREE of either price sent by return of post, on receipt of postal order.
Very pretty Fancy Boxes, suitable for Presents, 4½d. extra.

V. W. THOMSON,
27, Dunluce Street, BELFAST.

Digitized by Google

PARCEL No. 1.

Wonderfully Cheap Parcel of Books.

Offered at considerably under cost price, in order to reduce stock, during the summer months.

This parcel will be sent Carriage paid to any address in the United Kingdom on receipt of 15s.

1 Vol. VI. of The Nation's Glory Leader. By Edward Hine. Cloth bound, gilt, published at 6s.

1 Vol. of Israel's Hope and Destiny. Edited by Douglas A. Onslow, J.P. Cloth bound, gilt lettered, published at 3s. 6d.

1 Who Are We? By the late J. Thornhill Harrison, of Ealing. Very prettily bound in cloth, gilt lettered, published at 5s.

1 The First and Last Adam. Cloth bound, gilt lettered, published at 3s. 6d.

1 Book of Hebrew Roots. By B. B. Wale. Cloth bound, published at 4s.

The History of the Jews. By Josephus. In 2 vols., containing over 500 pages each; well bound in cloth, gilt lettered, originally published at 15s.

The Two Witnesses, the Revelation of St. John the Divine. Published at 6d.

1 Cloth-bound copy of the Anglo-Israel Almanack and Diary (not for 1893, as this is entirely out of print) for back years, containing a series of valuable articles on the subject of Anglo-Israelism, and interleaved with ruled paper for notes. Published at 1s.

1 Summary of Anglo-Israelite Teaching. By the late Surgeon-General J. M. Grant. Published at 2d.

1 Present-day Problems, and How Anglo-Israel Truth Explains and Solves Them. By V. M. Cox. Published at 3d.

1 A New Light. Published at 2d.

1 Cardinal Proofs that the British are the Lost Ten Tribes. By F. W. Phillips. Published at 6d.

1 Israel a Reality. By Douglas A. Onslow. Published at 6d.

1 Where Are the Ten Tribes. By W. Greig. Published at 6d.

1 Blessings and Curses, and Their Relation to Israel and Judah. Published at 2d.

As some of these Works are nearly out of print, and will not be reprinted, we recommend intending purchasers to send in their orders at once. The cheap parcels we offered about 12 months ago gave universal satisfaction. The parcel must be obtained direct from the Publishers, as no further discount can possibly be allowed.

The Publishers have also a few odd volumes that will enable them to make up a few parcels of the value of £1; but as no two parcels can be made up of the same books, they cannot give the contents of the parcels, but will undertake to give at least corresponding value with the above.

All remittances should be sent direct to the Publishers, ROBERT BANKS & SON, 5, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Cheques and Post Office Orders to be crossed "City Bank," London.

Cloth boards. Second Edition.

ISRAEL: A THESIS.

By the Rev. DENIS HANAN, D.D.

Price 1s. 6d.; sent post free to any address on receipt of Postal Order.

London: ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, or by order of any bookseller.

THIRD EDITION NOW READY.

With 38 Additional Pages.

Paper Cover, Price 1s. nett., postage 2d. extra
Limp Boards, lettered, 1s. 6d., postage 2d. extra.
Cloth boards, gilt lettered, thick toned paper 2s., postage 3d. extra.

BRITISH-ISRAEL TRUTH

A Handbook for Enquirers.

EDITED BY

REV. DENIS HANAN, M.A., D.D.,

AND

H. ALDER-SMITH, M.B., F.R.C.S

WITH A CHART AND MAP.

"British-Israel Truth." Edited by the Rev. Denis Hanan and H. Alder-mith (R. Banks & Son.)—The sale of the first edition of this work, and the consequent issue of a second, shows that there is a growing interest in the study of the questions of the Israelitish origin of the English speaking people. Clever, interesting, pathetic, and showing considerable research, the volume has been a success, and doubtless has made some converts.—THE ROCK.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., or by order of any bookseller.

No. 26.—Price 1s. per 100, 8s. 6d. per 1,000.

THOUGHTS FOR THE BRITISH FOLK.

SUGGESTED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

OUR ISRAELITE MINERS.

London: R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, E.C

MASON'S KILLCORN

"AN EXCELLENT THING."

You need not suffer any longer from Corns, Warts, or Bunions. "WONDERFUL KILLCORN" will cure you. This is what a cottish Postman writes:—"I have been nearly crippled with corns, but am now completely cured by your wonderful 'Killcorn.'"

1s. PER BOTTLE.

Ask for MASON'S KILLCORN and don't have any other. Sold by all Chemists Patent Medicine Vendors, and at all stores, or sent post free for 12 stamps by the Proprietor W. B. MASON, 26 & 27, High Holborn, London, W.C., and 18, Guildford-street, Leeds.

THE WORLD'S CORN CURER

A PRESENT.

SEND us your address, mentioning this paper, and we will make you a present of the best guide to health yet published. It is only a little book, but it is of great value to all who are ill or indisposed.—GORDON, MURRAY, & CO., LIMITED, 10, Adam Street, Strand, W.C.

HARNESS' "ELECTROPATHIC" BELTS

MANUFACTURED BY

THE MEDICAL BATTERY CO., Ltd.,

have been in use for many years, and have proved a boon and invaluable blessing to suffering humanity in all parts of the world. They are guaranteed to generate mild continuous currents which convey no shock to the system. Call and avail yourself of a free personal consultation at the Company's Institute.

52 OXFORD ST., LONDON, W.

(corner of Rathbone Place, which is the largest electro-medical establishment in the world.

PAGE WOODCOCK'S WIND PILLS

It is astonishing how many people imagine they suffer from

HEART DISEASE

They experience a depressing feeling about the region of the heart, accompanied by an occasional stab of pain, nervous debility, loss of appetite and general depression. The fact is they suffer from

INDIGESTION, OR DYSPEPSIA.

The food, instead of being thoroughly digested, develops into Wind, and flies about the valves of the heart, causing the symptoms named. All who suffer in this way should at once take

Page Woodcock's Wind Pills,

A world-renowned remedy for all Stomach disorders.

All Sufferers from INDIGESTION, LIVER COMPLAINTS, WIND on the STOMACH, COSTIVENESS, SICK HEADACHE, HEARTBURN, NERVOUS DEBILITY, PALPITATION of the HEART, BILIOUSNESS, &c.,

should avail themselves of this most excellent medicine.

Of all Medicine Vendors, at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d., or Post Free for P.O. or Stamps, from PAGE WOODCOCK, Lincoln.

The True and Divine Appointment for the Cure of Disease.

Send to

B. V. SCOTT, M.B.M.R.S.,

College of Health:

36, FOREST ROAD WEST, NOTTINGHAM, for his

VOICE OF NATURE TO THE INVALID,

Post free 5 stamps.

Thousands of incurables (so-called) have proved God's own means could save when others failed.

Rev. F. Harper says of Mr. Scott's book: "It is a library in itself, and free from quackery."

Rev. Lush says: "Mr. Scott's treatment is natural, safe, reasonable, and Scriptural."

Send for the Book at once.

Dr. JOSEPH WILD'S WORKS

THE LOST TEN TRIBES

Price 3s., post free 3s. 3d.

The FUTURE of ISRAEL and JUDAH,

Price 2s., post free 2s. 2d.

The Special Commissioner of the Christian World, writing of Dr. Wild, says:—"On Sunday evening I had to fight my way into the Congregational Church of which Dr. Wild is the minister. He hails from America, and is quite the sensation of the hour. There was no standing-room anywhere, and as I made to the door I met many coming away. However, I had made up my mind to hear the Doctor, and hear him I did. It seems that the subscribers have a door to themselves; I made for it, and luckily found a chair, which I wedged in under the platform. The Doctor prayed and then we had a sermon about Revelation, containing much that was very effective, if not about his text, at any rate about that mysterious part of Scripture from which the text was taken."

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument Proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100, postage 1d.

R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & CO. (Ltd.) 23, Paternoster-row. Wednesday MAY 31, 1893. All Rights Reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India

"And the Remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORN with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS OF THE EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XVII., No. 858. Entered at Stationer's Hall.] WEDNESDAY, JUNE 7, 1893 [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

PAGE
The Opening of the Imperial Institute ... 277
The Welsh Suspensory Bill. By John S. Anderson ... 278
Stumbling-Blocks to the Acceptance of British Truth. By Colonel H. W. J. Senior ... 279
The Practical Aspects of Our Identity. By the Rev. Denis Hanan, D.D. ... 282
The Obligation of the Great Missionary Societies to the British and Foreign Bible Society ... 283
Gleanings. By J. Thomson ... 284
Anglo-Israel Free Distribution Fund ... 285
Israel's Scripture and Prayer Union ... 286
Correspondence ... 286
Enigma.—No. 10 ... 286

THE OPENING OF THE IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.

ON May 10, last, in the most brilliant "Queen's weather." Her Majesty the Queen opened the Imperial Institute in London, and received from her people the most splendid welcome, comparable only to that which greeted her on the occasion of the Jubilee, when she went in State to Westminster Abbey to commemorate her long and prosperous reign.

The incidents of the pageant and the loyal attitude of the vast numbers of the people who welcomed Her Majesty have been described in the public journals of the day, and are familiar to all. They need not be repeated here. We rather fix upon Her Majesty's reply to the address presented by the Prince of Wales, and repeat two sentences of it as the most important of all. "I recognize this Institute," said Her Majesty, "as a fitting symbol of the unity of the empire; and it would be a matter of profound satisfaction if this Association of the many and diverse countries under my rule, should be the means of knitting them more closely together. The Imperial Institute is intended to promote this great purpose, and I now declare it open, with an earnest prayer that it may never cease to flourish as a lasting emblem of the unity and loyalty of my empire."

"The unity and loyalty of the empire" was the subject which the building and the occasion brought to the Queen's mind, and it is the one which directly appeals to us, the readers of the BANNER, when we recall the events of the day. The objects which the Prince of Wales, and those who worked so hard with him to erect and endow the Institute, had before them, are clearly stated in the Prince's address to the Queen, and they are mostly Israelitish in their bearing. In the first place the cost of the Imperial Institute was subscribed by "every class and race, every country and colony under Her Majesty's beneficent sway, as a tribute of love and loyalty." "All parts of the British Empire have contributed as a matter of fact, to the creation and support of the huge building, as the memorial of a reign which will ever be illustrious in the annals of history." "It is an enduring emblem of the unity of the empire, and of the common bond of loyalty and affection which makes its people one." It is believed by the founders of the Institution, that "the building and Institute will be a record of the growth of the empire, and of the marvellous advance of its people in industrial and commercial prosperity during Her Majesty's reign."

The duties Her Majesty performed on the 10th May, were thus national in their object, and they pointed to the fulfilment of the prophecy which declared of Jacob's offspring in the latter day, that it should become "a nation and a company of nations," "a federation of states" such as the world has never seen before. The empire accordingly sent its various contingents to represent the diverse countries of which it consists. There was the Indian contingent, represented by Indian princes, military native officers, and Indian statesmen. To testify their great loyalty, the Government and Parliament of Victoria, Australia, sent their horse artillery, and India its native cavalry. Canada sent her mounted horsemen, and Australasia was represented. Finally, the British troops and British masses in the streets, the chief feature, then, as always, of the procession, told of the enormous size of the empire, and that in spite of its boundless extent it was one; "a nation" literally; and "a federation of nations" according to the prophecies, such as has never hitherto been known.

It is well that there should be an Institute in the Metropolis, Imperial in its character, supported by the contributions of the empire beyond the sea, to remind our Israelites at home and abroad, that the nation, though divided by vast distances of sea and land, is still one people. God's chosen ones, scattered in great power, placed throughout the globe in positions of tactical supremacy as respects the nations of the earth, in fulfilment of Deut. xxxii. 8, R.V.

"When the Most High gave to the nations their inheritance,

Digitized by Google

"When He separated the children of men,
"He set the bounds of the peoples,
"According to the number of the children of Israel."

That the Institute had its true supporters in the Colonies and India was manifest from the large number of valuable gifts which came from them to endow and build it. From India the native princes and gentlemen sent, we are told, £191,550. "An Indian gentleman erected at his own expense the Eastern Colonnade, connecting the main building with the Indian section, as a memorial to a relative." The Government of Canada sent £20,000. The Government of Victoria £5,922, and the inhabitants of the Colony subscribed and sent £5,397 more. The subsidy of the Straits Settlements was £10,080 of which the Government contributed about a moiety. Queensland sent £2,029. West Australia £2,000. Bermuda £1,000. Trinidad and Jamaica also £1,000 each. Tasmania £150. New Zealand sent as a private subscription £2,853.

The Institute thus, is thoroughly Imperial in its design and origin. The site is that on which the Colonial and Indian Exhibition was held in 1886, near the South Kensington Museum, better known as "The Colinderies." The peal of bells in the main or Queen's Tower was the gift of Mrs. Millar, of Australia, and the ground itself was a free grant to the Royal Commissioners.

The proceedings of May 10, then, were interesting to those who believe in Our Identity, and they were in their measure fulfilments of vastly important prophecies affecting our race. The Times newspaper, which always comments on current events, as if it were endowed with a belief in Our nation's Identity with Israel, wrote as follows on May 11 last:—

To what extent an intelligent and well-informed appreciation of the nature, the advantages, and the obligations of the British Empire animated the crowds who cheered the Queen and the Royal Family yesterday it would be difficult to say. That the popular feeling is entirely in favour of maintaining the empire and of drawing closer the bonds of union between its component parts is not, however, doubtful. Of zeal there is abundance, though it may not be according to knowledge. The people are proud of the visible evidence furnished by the Indian and Colonial troops which took part in yesterday's ceremonial, that the authority of the Imperial Crown extends over every quarter of the habitable globe. They realize vaguely that this majestic supremacy is organically connected with that commercial activity, and that command of free markets, which for a nation such as ours are the very breath of life. But it is too certain that in the case of the vast majority these sound convictions are not based either on an acquaintance with the facts of our empire, or on a well-reasoned theory of the principles upon which it ought to be defended, upheld, and developed. If the Imperial Institute can do something to dispel this ignorance, and to progagate clear views of an Imperial policy, it will more than fulfil the pledges contained in the address to the Queen read yesterday by the Prince of Wales. One thing, at all events, the movement has already accomplished. It has put an end to the notion that any considerable section of British politicians can afford to be indifferent about the duty of maintaining the empire. The scene in the temporary reception hall of the Institute was a striking proof of the progress that has been made since the days when Cobden and his disciples almost succeeded in getting it accepted as an article of the advanced liberal faith that to part company with the colonies and India would be to the advantage of this country. Almost every conspicuous person in the State was present, with the exception of Mr. Gladstone, who was engaged elsewhere in an attempt "to amend the provision for the Government of Ireland," which, if it were successful, would soon leave us without an empire to defend or develop. But even Mr. Gladstone is constrained to bow to a spirit with which he has no sympathy, and to aver that his policy really tends to consolidate the unity, and to increase the strength of the empire. Many of his colleagues were present at the opening of the Institute, and his Chancellor, Lord Herschell, has been a moving spirit in the undertaking. It is unnecessary to say that both sections of the Unionist party in both Houses of Parliament were well represented, and were well received. Peers and prelates, judges, generals, and admirals, the heads of the legal and medical professions, men of letters, artists, and musicians, country gentlemen, bankers, manufacturers and merchants, and the élite of rank and fashion of both sexes, presented a microcosm of British society. It is difficult to believe that such an array of support, resting upon the enthusiastic adherence of the masses, does not afford a substantial security against insidious schemes to break down the Imperial system. But, potent as these forces are, they can only be made effective by judicious use. It is for the Institute which has been thus promisingly launched on its career, to take care that the power at its disposal is not wasted in ill-directed and inadequate efforts

The empire which extends over "every quarter of the habitable globe"—that is, "majestic" in its supremacy, and brings wealth to the mother country—must be Israel's. We are thankful for the royal patronage of the function of May 10, and call on Israel to praise the Lord for the success of that day, and for His blessing which accompanied them!

THE WELSH SUSPENSORY BILL.

By John S. Anderson.

"For the Lord is our defence; the Holy One of Israel is our King."—Psa. lxxxix. 18.

The above was the text chosen this evening by a clergyman of the Church of England in this neighbourhood for a sermon on the proposed Church Suspensory Bill for Wales. He pointed out most clearly that the Church in Wales is simply part and parcel of the National Church, and that the bill in question is intended for a stepping-stone towards the disestablishment and disendowment of the English Church, against which it is a side blow most cruel and unjust. There could be no doubt, he said, that the Church is performing a great work in the land in a temporal as well as in a spiritual sense. He stated that some years ago it was feared that endowments would cease, and counsel was being taken to reduce expenditure in many ways, but since that time several new dioceses have been created and more money than ever has been subscribed by private individuals towards the maintenance of the Church. He dwelt specially upon the good being done amongst the poor and to the foreign and colonial missionary work, which had so very much increased of late years, and that the Church is by far the largest supporter of the hospitals and other charities of the country.

Throughout the whole of this discourse there was a remarkable silence in respect of the reason for all this. Would it not have warmed the hearts and infused new life and vigour into his flock had he shown them that being Israel the blessings of the Gospel have come down to us as a nation in a most special manner, together with numberless other good gifts, as promised to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and to their seed for ever and ever.

In the earlier part of the Psalm from which the text was selected, David refers to the promise made to him in ver. 4: "Thy seed will I establish for ever, and build up thy throne to all generations," which promise is now being fulfilled in the person of our beloved Queen. It may not have struck any of our brethren who have not yet come to a knowledge of Identity truth that our constitution is a reproduction of that of Israel of former days, the reigning monarch being under God the head of the Church, and the various other offices and institutions of government being very much a counterpart of those existing in early days. The Church is, in fact, the embodiment of the religion of those days as expressly taught by God, or as we have heard it otherwise expressed, "Judaism exemplified."

Digitized by Google

But so much of this has from time to time been repeated in the BANNER OF ISRAEL for the last sixteen years that it seems scarcely necessary to dwell upon it at any greater length. The state of the case is therefore this, not that the Church being first and foremost in everything has made the nation what it is, but that the nation being Israel, God has blessed us with a National Church and has given us all the advantages promised to Abraham and his seed for ever, with the obligation laid upon the apostles by our Saviour to carry His Gospel into all lands.

Croydon, April 23, 1893.

STUMBLING-BLOCKS TO THE ACCEPTANCE OF BRITISH TRUTH.*

BY COLONEL H. W. J. SENIOR.
(Author of "The British-Israelites").

"Cast ye up, cast ye up, prepare ye the way, take up the stumbling-block out of the way of My people."—Isa. lvii. 14.

THE prophet Isaiah has been addressing Ten-tribed Israel, and pointing out their iniquities, which have brought down God's judgments upon them. He declares unto them God's mercies, foretelling their redemption in chap. liii. by the death of the Messiah, and details in the next their consequent prosperity, and in chap. lv. invites them to come, hearken, and seek the Lord, to forsake their evil ways and thoughts, and to return to the Lord.

The stumbling-blocks referred to, and which have to be removed, are Sabbath-breaking, drunkenness, idolatry, and covetousness. May I not here pause and ask you to consider if these sins have not been, and are not still stumbling-blocks of our land, which, more or less hinder our obtaining the fulness of the blessings which God had promised us as His people? May we with contrite, humble hearts repent us of our national sins, and, putting our trust in the Lord, "cast up, cast up, prepare the way, and take away these stumbling-blocks from the midst of the people."

I purpose this evening, during the short time allotted to me, to consider a few difficulties which appear to me to be stumbling-blocks in the way of the progress of the fundamental truths we British-Israelites advocate. It requires more care and trouble, as a general rule, to search for and restore that which was lost than to retain that which is in possession. This is clear from Luke xv., where the shepherd leaves the ninety and nine sheep in the fold and goes after that which is lost; so also the woman who had lost one piece of silver shows no anxiety about the safety of the nine pieces she had, but lights a candle, sweeps the house, and searches diligently until she finds the lost piece. Let us, dear friends, follow her good example, and take the lamp of God's Word as the only true illuminating guide we have, and see to it that our lamp is fed by the oil of God's Holy Spirit, by prayer and faith. Then that Word will give us an understanding heart, so that the mist of ages—viz., the prejudices and errors that have so long enveloped the subject, will be penetrated by that Divine light, whereby we shall see more clearly the truth of God's Word and the faithfulness of our God. Yes, His Word alone can dispel all the gloom and darkness, the doubts and perplexities that have been occasioned by the myths and traditions of ancient, and the mistakes and misrepresentations of modern history.

I.—The first thing to bear in mind is that Ten-tribed Israel was a Shemitic race, located in captivity among an Arian-speaking people of nomadic habits, with whom they were more or less identified in the records of their political strife with adjacent peoples. The unsatisfactory nature of the records on which the history of ancient nations are based, the contradictory statements of historians, and the movements at different times and in different directions of these nomades, the various appellations by which they were spoken of, all combine to make the identification of the Lost Ten Tribes from purely historical sources anything but easy, and consequently demanding, if this course of study is pursued, a very patient and careful investigation.

An examination of the Cuneiform inscriptions of King Sargon, Tiglath-pileser, and Darius; Rawlinson's "Herodotus," Sharon Turner's "History of the Anglo-Saxons," Thierry's "History of the Norman Conquest," Strabo, Pliny, and others, will result in tracing the Celts and Saxons of Great Britain and Ireland back through Europe to the regions bordering on the Caspian Sea; so that Saca, Sakai, Sakasena, Saccassani, Saxon, Bethkhumri, Khumri, Gimiri, Cimmerioi, Cimbri, Cymri, Massagitæ, Massagadœ (i.e., Manasseh and Gad), Goths, Mæso Goths, Danai, Tuatha de Danaan (Dan), Angli, Anglo-Saxon, Scots, Scuthi, Scythians, Britains, &c., are all various terms to denote tribes whose ancestry has been traced back to the shores of the Caspian Sea in the sixth and seventh centuries B.C., people amongst whom portions, if not the whole, of Ten-tribed Israel were, and from among whom God has been, gathering out into Britain, Ireland, and America His people, as stated by Amos ix. 8, 9: "The eyes of the Lord God are upon the sinful kingdom. I will not utterly destroy the House of Jacob. I will sift the House of Israel among all nations, like as corn is sifted in a sieve; yet shall not the least grain fall upon the ground." This sifting out, gathering, and separating of Israel from the various people among whom they were mixed up could only be done by Divine providence, because God stated by Hosea (ii. 6) that He would hedge Israel's way with thorns, and raise a barrier so that they should not be able to retrace their steps from exile; they were to abide many days without king, sacrifice, or priest (Hosea iii. 4, 5); to lose their language (Isa. xxviii. 11); and their name (Hosea ii. 17; Psa. lxxxiii. 3, 4; Isa. lxv. 15). They were not to be known as God's people (Hosea i. 9). They were to be swallowed up (Hosea viii. 8); and likened to the morning cloud and the early dew, the chaff, the whirlwind, and the smoke (Hosea xiii. 3); a valley full of dry bones (Ezek. xxxvii. 1—15); a scattered sheep driven by lions (Jer. i. 17). Consequently, in searching for them we must not expect to find them in the place where they were first deported, nor at all stages of their history to recognise them as an united, organised people. We must not look for a people bearing the same name by which they were known in Palestine, nor speaking the same language that they spoke prior to their captivity. But, on the other hand, we must bear in mind God's mercies promised to them in connection with these judgments, if we would place ourselves on a satisfactory basis for the right solution of the question under enquiry.

*An address at the Annual Meeting of the British-Israel Association, May 16, 1893.

Digitized by Google

II. — History having failed to separate Ten-tribed Shemitic Israel from the Arian race among whom she was located, it has come to be generally believed that because we have come out from a Teutonic or Arian-speaking race, that we must consequently be of the same stock, and therefore a Gentile or non-Israelitish people, forgetting that language affinity can only prove contact, but not consanguinity. For instance, the English-speaking descendants of the negro slaves of America cannot be said to be of English origin because they speak English.

III. — Misunderstanding the differences between the Houses of Judah and Israel, and fostering traditional prejudices against the House of Judah—i.e., Jews under the curse, many do not like to take an interest in a subject which they think identifies them with the Jews and makes them subject to the opprobrium that has fallen upon that unfortunate people. The result is that they are ignorant of many fundamental truths concerning Israel and Judah; and while avowing themselves to be Gentiles, they appropriate, on the ground of their Christian belief, the blessings and promises which a more careful study of the Scriptures would have shown them were temporal, and exclusively pertained to Israel; and speak of Jews as if they represented the whole of the Twelve Tribes of Israel, ignoring the fact that they consist of only Two Tribes, and that the remaining Ten Tribes must be discovered before the two can be united to them, and with them be restored to the promised land (see Hosea i. 11; Jer. iii. 18; Ezek. xxxvii. 16, 17; Jer. i. 45).

IV.—Many passages of Scripture will be clear to us if we have a proper understanding of the true positions occupied by Israel and the Church. Israel was a special people chosen by God for Himself, in order that they may be the means in His hand for conveying to mankind His revealed will delivered by the inspired prophets of Israel. Through them should be born Jesus the Saviour of mankind, and through them the Gospel message of love was to be delivered to the world. He dealt with them as a nation—His nation—and every Israelite retained his place in that nation by covenant relationship to God, by which he had to observe the rituals and legal observances enjoined, but which observance could not cleanse the conscience from the guilt of sin, for it was not possible for the blood of bulls and of goats to take away sin. Nothing but the blood of Christ could do that. The defiled Israelite could only be cleansed and forgiven, as an unit of the nation, by obedience to the ritualistic law and restored to his place in the camp.

Israel was a type of the Church which is the body of Christ, and consists of all true believers in Jesus of every country, and clime, and age; redeemed by the blood of Jesus their Saviour. All Israel's promised blessings are temporal and earthly, whereas all the promises given to the Church are spiritual and heavenly. The facts and promises relating to Israel are undoubtedly literal and temporal, but by the Holy Spirit's teaching, they are illustrative of spiritual truths. See, for instance, how the expressions "kingdom of God," "kingdom of heaven," are misunderstood; one party contending that the kingdom is figurative and spiritual, another that they cannot possibly refer to the Church, but must be taken in the literal sense, and refer to Israel. Both parties bring argument and proof based on Scripture to bear on their views, whereas these expressions have decidedly a twofold meaning—one pertaining to a literal, real kingdom on the earth, the other to a spiritual, but not the less real kingdom of God in the hearts of believers. We must not accept one view to the exclusion of the other, but bear in mind that the whole history of Israel, past, present, and future, is typical and illustrative of some phase or other of the experiences of the Church.

In the second advent of Christ the Church is to reign with Him over Israel and the world—but how? They must be changed and risen in their redeemed, renewed, and glorified spiritual bodies, whereas Israel on earth will be in their natural bodies. Thus, in the millennium, there will be a mysterious union of the spiritual kingdom, the Church, with the literal carnal kingdom, Israel, the former being to the latter what the renewed spirit of a converted man is to his body, influencing it for good and bringing the body into subjection to the will of God and freeing it from the will of the flesh.

V.—A few days ago a gentleman gave a series of lectures on prophecy at Bristol, a subject which, he stated, he had studied for twenty years. One of these lectures was headed "The Ten Tribes—Where are they?" I wrote to him, apologizing that a previous engagement prevented me from attending his lecture, and asked him to briefly let me know what his answer was to the question. He very courteously called on me, and a friendly discussion ensued. We agreed on four cardinal points in respect to the restoration of Israel —viz., that the Twelve Tribes were to be restored simultaneously and unitedly, that Christ Himself was to be King over the one united nation, and lastly, that Palestine was to be the centre of all nations. But I differed in toto from him on this one point—viz., that Israel was not to enjoy any of the promised blessings outside of their land, which he based on Rom. xi. It is clear that if my opponent's theory be correct, all our argument falls to the ground; for if God never intended to give any blessing to Israel excepting when they were enjoying the possession of the land, our effort to show that we are Israelites because we have so many of those blessings which God promised to Israel would be futile, for the simple reason that we are not dominant in Palestine.

But was not possession of the land itself one of the promises, and by no means the greatest of them? Surely God's presence, His everlasting lovingkindness and salvation by Christ, are greater than all the temporal ones put together. In Christ we are told all the promises of God are, Yea, yea, and Amen; therefore, if faith in Him now was made the key for unlocking the precious promises instead of possession in the land, there would then be, I think, little ground for variance.

But let us turn to God's Word. Rom. xi. begins by St. Paul asking, "Hath God cast away His people?" God forbid! God hath not cast away His people which He foreknew. Does not ver. 17—20 state that some branches were broken off because of unbelief from the good olive-tree? and does not Jer. xi. 16 state that the Houses of Israel and Judah were called by God "a green olive-tree, fair, and of goodly fruit"? If some branches refer to the exclusion of the Jews from covenant relationship to God because of their rejection of the Christ, it follows that other branches—viz., Ten-tribed Israel—remain to continue to partake of the root and fatness of the olive-tree.

Turn to Jer. xxx., xxxi., chapters which foretell the restoration of both Israel and Judah to the promised land, and take note of the present and perfect tenses recorded therein:—"I am with thee to save thee" (xxx. 11); "I have loved thee with an everlasting love, therefore with lovingkindness have I drawn thee" (xxxi. 3); "The people which were left of the sword found grace in the wilderness, even Israel when I went to cause him to rest" (xxxi. 2); The proclamation for the return of Israel is to be made among the chief of the nations, who are to be brought from the north and gathered from the coasts of the earth a great company (xxxi. 7); and in ver. 10 this proclamation is to be made in the isles afar off; and the following verse states that God had redeemed Jacob from the hand of him that was stronger than he. In ver. 18 Ephraim is represented as acknowledging God's chastisement, repenting, and being ashamed, consequently God says, "I do remember him still; My bowels are troubled for Him."

Digitized by Google

Here let me pause and solemnly ask, Is God's presence with His people no blessing? Is His lovingkindness not a precious boon? Is His grace in the wilderness of no account? Is His redemption and ransom of His repentant people to be despised? If God was not to bless them during their absence from the land, how were they to become, at the time of the restoration, "the chief of the nations," "a great company," "inhabiting the coasts of the earth" and "the isles afar off"? Are these statements not definite marks whereby Lost Israel were to be identified at the time of her restoration when the proclamation for her return is to be made? Moses before his death blessed the tribe of Joseph (Deut. xxxiii. 17), stating that with his horns he would push the people together to the ends of the earth. This was never fulfilled, as far as Biblical records of Israel go. It cannot be fulfilled during millennial times, for pushing means aggressive warfare, and the millennium is a time of peace and not war. Therefore this pushing must take place before the millennium—that is, before Ephraim and Manasseh return to the land of Palestine; and as this is distinctly stated in the above chapter to be a blessing, it follows that Joseph was to be blessed as well out of the land as in it.

Once more turn to Ezek. xi. 15, 16. The Jews say to the House of Israel, "Get you far from the Lord; unto us is the land given in possession. Therefore say, Thus saith the Lord, Although I have cast them far off among the heathen, yet will I be to them as a little sanctuary in the countries where they shall come." The student of prophecy says, There is to be no blessing out of the land; God's word by His inspired prophet says that God will be to the House of Israel a sanctuary in the countries where they shall come. Whose word am I to accept—God's word or man's interpretation? Yea, let God be true.

Now, if we look at the past history of our nation—how God's providence has preserved us in India, China, Burmah, Africa, and other places—are we not convinced that He has fulfilled in us this promise to Israel? See also Isa. liv., where the blessing of multitudinous seed and inhabiting the desolate places of the earth by colonies is mentioned, and in chap. lx. Isaiah describes the return of Israel as a flying cloud, as doves to their windows, the isles and the ships of Tarshish waiting to bring their sons from far, their silver and their gold with them. Thus we have seen no less than fourteen blessings enjoyed by Israel out of the land, and prior to their return.

VI.—Why are we not Jewish in appearance? This oft-repeated objection seems to be a great stumbling block to many. Why have we not the peculiar hooked nose of a Jew? &c., say some. Well, the answer may be simply stated thus. We do not profess to be of Jewish descent. But if we cultivated a more intimate acquaintance with Jews of various nationalities scattered throughout the world, our ideas of Jewish physiognomy would be considerably modified from that stereotyped portrait which our minds are so accustomed to associate as an unfailing representation of a Jew. The author of "Picturesque Palestine" says that "there are three principal divisions of Jews in the Holy Land, and that nothing can be more striking than the marked difference in appearance and costume between the Sephardim and Ashkenazim."

Last June, on my journey from India to Trieste, there were on board the Imperator Jews and Jewesses from Germany, Bombay, Aden, Syria, and Jerusalem. I could not help noticing the marked difference in complexion, appearance, and dress, that existed between them, also the absence of the hooked nose. Since my return to England I have seen many Christian Jews who at first could not be distinguished from any other Britisher. It is a mistake, therefore, I humbly submit to assume that the Twelve Tribes, after more than two thousand years of dispersion, should be expected to be physiologically identical; more especially when we bear in mind that Leah and Rachel, though sisters, were very unlike each other, and that it is more than probable that their handmaids, who were in no wise related to them, were unlike either of them. Joseph, too, was married to an Egyptian woman and was not recognised by his brethren. Moses and Paul were both mistaken for Egyptians. Esther and Mordecai were not recognised as of Jewish race.

VII.—Many writers and speakers on the subject of the Identity of the British and American people with the Lost Ten Tribes have unconsciously thrown stumbling blocks in the way of the progress of the cause they so warmly and enthusiastically advocate by making positive assertions on many subjects unsupported by properly authenticated documents, statements also of wild and extravagant ideas which have little or no bearing on the subject, dogmatically asserted. Numerous Scriptural references, given without a careful examination of each in its relation to the subject and context. But this does not justify our opponents in illogically ascribing to all British-Israelites the faults of the individual whose writing or statement is criticised, or in rejecting or ignoring reasonable arguments brought forward, or well authenticated evidence adduced. Let us in future be careful not to lay undue stress on subjects that engender strife, but rather to those that administer to edification. Let us distinguish between well-authenticated and indisputable facts that bear directly on the subject, and those minor side lights which give a handle to our opponents to divert the chain of argument from its right course.

