VIII.—One more stumbling block I must remove ere I sit down. How often are we not told, What good is it to us or to any one else if we are Israelites? We should concern ourselves about our salvation and the advancement of our spiritual life. Yes, truly, if you are unsaved and unconverted you are not only aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, but you are without God and without hope in the world, and your duty is undoubtedly to seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness; to give no rest to yourself until you have made your calling and election sure, until you know and accept Jesus as your Saviour and have been washed in His most precious blood, and been reconciled to God and saved from your sins. The knowledge that you are an Israelite will bring with it greater damnation if you trample under foot the blood of the covenant and despise and reject the accepted Son of God. But you who are truly Christ's, and inheritors of the promised spiritual blessings by faith, I ask you, Has God's glory no attraction, no charm? Are you so wrapped up in the selfish consideration of your own welfare, that you care not for the vindication of the character of your God, to declare His faithfulness unto all generations? As we believe we are heirs of the promises vouchsafed to us by the mercy and love of God, whether those promises are both temporal and spiritual, or only spiritual, are we wrong in appropriating them or acknowledging with gratitude God's gracious dealings in our behalf? What would you say if a gentleman of your acquaintance repudiated the lawful inheritance of a title and an immense fortune, on the ground that as he was a Christian man—he concerned himself only about his salvation and eternity, and did not care for all the things of time and sense? Surely his title and fortune, if taken possession of and consecrated to God, would be a blessing, not only to him but to hundreds of others that his influence would reach. Consequently, I maintain that if we, as a nation, could only realise our true relationship to God and the world, we would more faithfully and earnestly seek to promote the knowledge and glory of God throughout the world by the spreading of His precious Word and by earnestly seeking the salvation of the heathen?

God grant that we may stir one another up in all the relations of life in which we are placed, to a keener sense of our responsibilities and duties in order to promote the glory of our God and the welfare of our fellow men, so that we may indeed be, as God intended us to be, the means in His hand to be a blessing to all nations.

THE PRACTICAL ASPECTS OF OUR IDENTITY.

By the Rev. Denis Hanan, D.D.

Being Notes of his Address at Exeter Hall on May 16, 1893, during the Afternoon Meeting.

The following notes of an able address, delivered by the Rev. Dr. Hanan, on the practical aspects of our views, cannot fail to be interesting to our readers. He said:—

"The question of Our Identity is not a fanciful, visionary view, as some imagine, but a practical thing, appealing to men's reason and conduct in the affairs of life. Not that it deals especially with political or religious questions. It rather avoids them, as far as possible, but mischief, no doubt, arises from those who intrude on the subject matters which are best described as 'fads,' which appear important to those who hold them, but are in no way vital to our case. There is one hard fact which ought to be kept steadily in view, and that is, that all objections which can be made to the views we hold, have been met and fully answered. There is nothing new to be urged against us now; but those who repeat the oft-avowed objections do so in ignorance of the fact. The objections as to 'language,' and the argument founded on the distinction between 'Aryan and Semitic' races, are cases in point. These have been dwelt upon, and the objections triumphantly answered, times without number, and yet they are repeated over and over again as if they were quite new! In regard to the practical questions involved, there is first the personal view. The prevailing tendency of the times is to ignore providence and God's law as the practical rule of life. Now the effect of our British-Israel knowledge, accepted, and acted on, is the recognition of God's hand in all public and private affairs, and submission to His providence in matters spiritual and temporal. The State would, if the belief were general, respect itself; would see that it had not been fortuitously built up, but was the outcome of God's design, His purpose, and His work. The throne of this land would be seen to be the Lord's, and the State, one and indivisible. We should hear no more of Canaanite supremacy or Israel's subjection to that section of our people, according to the designs of some of our leading men.

"Then a practical point refers to the position of the Church. Its Catholicity could not be ignored if Israel's position were conceded and recognised. 'The kingdom of Heaven' became the Church, but the Church of Rome never became the kingdom.

Another practical result of the adoption of our views is this,—Noblesse oblige. Our covenant duties, and our position in consequence thereof, point to the whole world as the objective of our efforts. Missionary efforts include the whole world, not forgetting our brethren, 'the Jews first.'

Then there is the subject of the honour of God, His faithfulness to His covenant promises, which our belief greatly exalts. He has promised great and glorious things to Israel, and our nation, as Israel, enjoys those very blessings.

"Then, on behalf of Christ and His kingdom, we have to consider His need of Christian Israel. All the nations of the earth have to receive the offer of pardon and salvation; and Christian Israel is the agency by which that offer is to be communicated to them. 'Israel shall blossom and bud, and they shall fill the face of the world with fruit.'

"'The healing of the hurt of the daughter of My people,' Judah, will be slightly and imperfectly done until the practical fact of Our Identity with Ephraim-Israel, in all its bearings, is grasped by our race.

"'Progress towards this end may seem to be slow, but it is therefore sure. We are laying the wood in order, we are teaching ten thousands who do not openly profess what they know, and when in God's own good time the torch will be applied, it may be by some leader in Church or State, or it may be by advancing circumstances—the sudden beacon flame will be understood by all.'"

THE OBLIGATION OF THE GREAT MISSIONARY SOCIETIES TO THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY.

Messrs. Henry Morris and R. N. Cust, LL.D., have furnished us, in the Bible Society's Monthly Reporter for May and September respectively, with some very interesting information regarding the obligations the Church Missionary Society and the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel are under to the British and Foreign Bible Society, "which liberally and cheerfully supplies them with by far the greater part of the Scriptures necessary for carrying on their work in heathen lands. Mr. Henry Morris, in his paper, passes in review the operations of the Church Missionary Society in various lands, and points how in each their Missionaries were supplied by translations of parts, or the whole of the Scriptures in use there. He describes the work in West Africa—reviewing it in Yoruba, the Niger Mission, Eastern Equatorial Africa;—in Asia, Palestine, Persia, coming finally to India. To judge of the magnitude of the work there and the deep debt the societies owe to the British and Foreign Bible Society, in respect to the Bibles they use in the vast assemblage of nations in India among whom our missionaries labour, we quote that part of the article which relates to the great heathen empire of Her Majesty the Queen. Mr. Morris wrote thus:—

"NORTH INDIA.

"What shall we say of India, where saintly and scholarly men have, for the last century, been abundantly employed in the sacred task of translating the true Vedas? Here and there the Church Missionary Society's missionaries are aware that they owe much to the Baptist and other Societies; but, in the majority of instances, the great expense and the vast labour of organization have fallen on the Bible Society and its Auxiliaries in India. In the green and fertile plains of Bengal, Bengali is the principal language used. The whole Bible was translated into it by the indefatigible labours of William Carey and Dr. Wenger; and this version is now being revised most carefully by a Committee appointed by the Bible Society, which has also published versions in Roman character; and as there are a number of Muhammadans who speak a patois called Musulmani Bengali, peculiar to themselves, various portions have been prepared in this dialect. The New Testament has been translated in Santali, for the people of Santalistan, and portions into Malto, for the mountaineers of Rajmahali. A revision of the former is being executed and the cost of publication will be borne by the Bible Society.

"The great Aryan language Hindi is prevalent over the North-west Provinces. The whole Bible has been translated into it, and a revision has for many years been dragging its slow length along. A fresh effort to complete it is now being made, and the services of one of the Church Missionary Society's most honoured men, Dr. Hooper, have been lent to the Bible Society for this purpose. Urdu is also spoken in North India, and Church Missionary Society missionaries continually use it. There are several versions in it, and much care and pains have been taken by the Bible Society in both the translation and the revision. A revision is now in progress under its auspices, in which Dr. Weitbrecht and the Rev. H. E. Perkins are taking part in connection with the Bible Society.

"The Church Missionary Society's missionaries in the Central Provinces are labouring among the Gonds, one of the aboriginal tribes of India, and they have been supplied with the Gospels and the Book of Genesis in Gondi by the Bible Society, which has borne the expense of having them prepared and printed.

"THE PANJAB.

We now come to the country of the Sikhs—the land of the Five Rivers. Several versions have been placed by the Bible Society in the hands of the missionaries labouring in this country—in Panjabi, the language of the Sikhs, in Chambali, for use in the Kangra Hills, and in Jatki, for the district of Multan. Pashtu, the language of Afghanistan, is spoken in parts of the Panjab, Peshawar being really, though not politically, a part of that country. The whole New Testament and portions of the Old have been translated into it. A Committee of revision under the Bible Society has in recent years been working at it. This Committee was formerly under the presidency of the gifted linguist, Bishop French. In the beautiful vale of Kashmir the Rev. T. Wade has prepared the New Testament in Kashmiri, which has been published by the Bible Society. The New Testament and portions of the Old have been published in Sindhi for the province of Sindh, and one Gospel in Baluchi, and both have been prepared for the same Society.

"WESTERN INDIA.

"The principal language used in the Western India Mission is Marathi. The whole Bible has been translated into it, the Church Missionary agents, notably the late Rev. J. S. S. Robertson, being prominent in the work, and a revision is now being carried on. Much pains has been taken over this version by the Bible Society. It has likewise published a New Testament in Parsi Guzerati for the use of the Parsis, who are so numerous in Poona and Bombay, and to whom the excellent missionary the Rev. Sorabji Kharsedji once belonged.

"SOUTHERN INDIA.

"In South India, where the Lord has so graciously blessed the labours of the Church Missionary Society's agents, as well as those of other Societies, and in some parts of which the Christians belong to the third or fourth generation, that Society owes more even than elsewhere to the Bible Society. In no part of the world, perhaps, has a version been more learnedly and lovingly revised than the Tamil. Owing its origin to the Danes, it is now entirely the property of the Bible Society, which bore most of the cost of revision. One of the editions is a model of a portable and legible Bible. The whole Bible has likewise been translated into two other of great Dravidian languages employed by the Church Missionary Society's missionaries—namely, Telugu and Malayalam. Both versions are at present under revision, and have cost the Bible Society very much. The Gospel of St. Luke and the first Epistle of St. John have been translated into Koi under the superintendence of General Haig, for the use of the aboriginal tribe of this name inhabiting the jungles on the banks of the Godavery; and the New Testament has been translated into Dakhani, the southern form of Hindustani, and is in use in the mission to the Muhammadans, in Madras and elsewhere. The revision, by the Rev. E. Sell, the Rev. M. G. Goldsmith, and others, is nearly complete. Here also the cost of this translation and revision has fallen on the Bible Society.

"CEYLON.

"Crossing Palk Strait, we come to Ceylon, where the two principal languages spoken are Tamil and Sinhalese. Here, as elsewhere, the Church Missionary Society missionaries are indebted to the Bible Society, which has published the whole Bible in Sinhalese, a version also under revision by a committee, of which the Rev. S. Coles is the chairman. The Pentateuch, The Psalms, and the New Testament have been prepared in Indo-Portuguese, a patois used by the descendants of the Portuguese settlers in this island."

Dr. R. N. Cust, writing respecting the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, and the benefits they receive from the British and Foreign Bible Society, observed as follows:—

"There is another great Society, belonging to the Church of England, which has this year published its one hundred and ninetieth annual Report, and which is largely indebted to the British and Foreign Bible Society for its supply of Scriptures in all the five portions of the world: I allude to the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, which works with a double object—to convert non-Christians to Christianity, and to prevent Christians, such as emigrants, colonists, seafarers, and exiles, from falling away into heathendom.

"EUROPE.

"I.—In Europe the agents of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel supply themselves with translations, entirely, or in part, from the British and Foreign Bible Society, in the Italian, Greek, French, Spanish, Portuguese, and German languages, for the use of the congregations in connection with the permanent chaplaincies maintained by that Society in those countries. The supply may not be large, but it is important.

"ASIA.

"II.—In Asia a grander missionary work comes under our observation. For convenience I divide that continent into regions—(a) West Asia, (b) the East Indies and Indian Archipelago, (c) China and Japan. The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel has no missions in Arabic or Persian-speaking countries, but copies of translations in both those languages are required for their mission in the Bombay Province of West India. I divide the East Indies into five sub-regions—West India, North India, South India, Indo-China, and the Indian Archipelago. In Western India, amidst a population of Hindus and Mahometans translations are supplied in the Maráthi language. In North India a great demand is experienced for translations in Bangáli, Hindi, Urdu, and Mandári or Kol, the latter a Kolarian language spoken by non-Arian mountaineers, still maintaining their old Pagan and non-Hindu beliefs. The Bangáli, Hindi, and Urdu are spoken by at least one hundred millions of Hindus and Mahometans in the basin of the River Ganges, and adjoining territories. In South India translations are supplied in Telugu, Tamil, and Karnáta (vulgó Kanarese) to the flourishing Mission in that province, where there are Christians of the fourth generation. Translations are also available in the ancient dead language of North India, the Sanskrit, if required by learned inquirers. In the Island of Ceylon the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel Missions are supplied with the Bible in the Sinàli (vulgó Sinhalese) language, and a version in the Indian dialect of the Portuguese language is available if required. In the region of Indo-China the Bible Society is ready to supply the Bishop of Rangún and his missionaries with versions in the language of Burma, and of the Karèn tribe, in three dialects. In the great valley of Assam, where the River Brahmaputra emerges from the Himaláya mountains in its course to join the River Ganges, the Bible is supplied to the missionaries in the Asámi language, and if the work of evangelising the barbarous tribes on the slopes of the Himaláya extends further, translations are ready in their languages. In the Indian Archipelago translations in the Malay language are supplied to the Diocese of Singapúr.

"Passing on to the regions of the extreme orient, or China and Japan, the Bishop of North China at Pekin makes use of the translations provided by the British and Foreign Bible Society in High Wenli, the famous book-language of China, which speaks only to the eye, like the numerals in arithmetic, the easy Wenli, and the Mandarin in two dialects spoken and written by two hundred millions. In the Diocese of Japan the Bishop and his missionaries have at their disposal the newly completed translation in the language of that kingdom; and in Korea the Bishop and his clergy, as soon as they are settled, and have acquired the language, will find that the forethought of the British and Foreign Bible Society has prepared for their use the best of weapons, the Word of God, without which all their labours will be vain.

"Before we quit the shores of Asia we may record, that the languages placed at the disposal of this Society are but a fraction of the stores laid up in the great arsenal. No two Missionary Societies use precisely the same languages. The British and Foreign Bible Society keeps its eye upon the requirements of the whole world.

"AFRICA.

"III.—We pass now into the third portion of the globe, Africa. The missions of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel are all south of the River Zambési in the different Dioceses of South Africa; translations are supplied by the British and Foreign Bible Society in the Zulu, Xósa (vulgó Káfir), Chuána, and Súto, languages of the Bantu family of African languages. Of European languages there is an ample supply of English and Dutch Scriptures, which in a country with a large and increasing European population is most important. For the Chinese, Indian, and Malay immigrants provision is also made. Translations in the Nama dialect of the Hottentot or Khoi-Khoi language are also available. On the west coast of Africa, in connection with the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel is the most interesting mission, known as the Rio Pongas Mission: it is an attempt of the Christian negroes of the West Indian Islands to evangelise by the aid of negro pastors a portion of their mother Continent. The Scriptures in the Súsu, a Negro language, are supplied by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, and allusion is only made to this fact as suggestive of the great work likely to be done in the next century, when the Christian negroes in North America wake up to a sense of their duty. Within the region of Africa is the island of Madagascar, and the translation of the whole Bible has been revised by a Committee on the spot, on which the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel was represented, the expense being borne, and gladly borne, by the British and Foreign Bible Society. . . ."

Dr. Cust concludes as follows:—

"The Church of England in its entirety makes use of versions of the Scriptures in one hundred and seven languages, and by far the greater portion are supplied, often free of charge, always below cost price, by the Society, whose happy privilege it has been to be permitted to be the Lord's steward for the great work during the last ninety years. On some translations thousands of pounds have been spent and well spent, for who can estimate the value of a soul saved—saved perhaps by one single verse in the millions of copies issued annually, brought home by the Holy Spirit with power and conviction to the understanding of some doubting, hesitating, and humble-minded sinner, saved by grace. Let us reflect upon the vast void there would be in the last decade of this century in the machinery of conversion, if this new manufactory had not come into existence in the first decade. The world had seen missionary agencies in past centuries, but the conception had never been entertained of a Bible Society, a great arsenal for forging bloodless, silent and innocent weapons, which at the same time have found themselves to be sharp-cutting, outspoken, and invincible. If the mouth of the preacher has converted its thousands, the voiceless volume has saved its tens of thousands, and kept them to the end. Laus Deo. "R. N. CUST."

31.—EGYPTIAN TOOLS.

In No. 824 of the BANNER, p. 499, there is a "Gleaning" referring to the ancient Egyptian cutting-tools. Since that was published we have come across the following, the authority for which we cannot give, though it appeared in The Ashton-Under-Lyne Herald of Dec. 3rd, 1892. It has, perhaps, made the "round of the Press," and been quoted pretty freely throughout the country:—"The tools employed by the Egyptians to hew, carve, and polish the immense masses of the hardest stone which are found in the valley of the Nile, have always been food for speculation by the curious. The question has been frequently asked, and frequently answered in a more or less unsatisfactory manner, and in no instance has the explanation been supported by fact. The numerous tools found in Egypt have been, with only two or three exceptions, of soft bronze. The few exceptions are of soft iron, but not a scrap of steel is there among the lot. It has been surmised, without proof, that the Egyptians had a way of tempering bronze, although no tempered bronze had been found, and no mode of tempering bronze is known to modern metallurgists. It has been daringly imagined that the bronze tools were tipped with diamond or corundum; but there are no diamonds in Egypt, and no corundum-tipped tools have been found. It has also been alleged, in opposition to this theory, that bronze is unfit for being used as a stock to support a diamond or corundum tip, as it would get jammed in any hole into which it was inserted. Not one of the answers can be accepted as satisfactory, and the clearing up of the mystery has yet to be looked for."

It is evident that we get no more information from this than we had before, if as much. It is, however, an instance showing how off-hand a difficult matter is sometimes disposed of. We find it here asserted that except a few made of "soft iron," the "numerous tools found in Egypt have been of soft bronze." Such would certainly not "touch" marble, or granite, to say nothing of "diorite," a far harder stone. The paragraph also says "there are no diamonds in Egypt," which may be true now, but how do we know that they were not anciently at least as plentiful as they are now in this country? They could be brought as articles of commerce, and used for any purposes for which they were fit; and how do we know but that the Egyptians anciently had a method of tempering iron, and even bronze, which has long since been lost, though no instances of such tools may as yet have been discovered? But if a previous "Gleaning" be correct (as we believe it was), in BANNER No. 804, p. 261, some copper tools have been found which were "tempered in a way now utterly unknown, but which rendered them harder than steel." So much, therefore, for the above paragraph, which, however, allows that there is a difficult problem to solve in the question, How did the ancient Egyptians cut and polish such hard stones, as we see they actually did, but which moderns confess themselves unable to equal?

32.—THE PETRIFIED FOREST

in Egypt is a large desert tract in the neighbourhood of Cairo, covered with trees, and fragments of trees, all turned into flint. About the middle of this century this phenomenal tract was visited by Mr. John Gadsby, and is thus described by him in his "Wanderings" (I. pp. 305, 411):—

"Lying prostrate, and half-buried in the sand, were trees of almost all sizes, and millions of fragments, like an immense timber merchant's yard. To believe it, one must see it. At first sight I seemed almost petrified myself. I measured one tree 60 feet long, and another 40 feet, and one 3 ft. 3 in. in diameter. The trees were separated into divers lengths, yet each piece retained its own relative position, just as if the trees had contracted and snapped during the process of such contraction. Some had hollow trunks, some were straight, being palm-trees; some were crooked, and the roots of some were entire, just as if a forest of trees had been blown down at once. There they lay, all looking like rotten timber; yet all absolute flint. The grains and knots of some were as distinct as in any agate I ever saw. The sand around is full of particles, greatly resembling what we call Bristol, or Isle of Wight diamonds. This is, to me, the most inexplicable of all the wonders I ever beheld. How did these trees get there? For miles and miles there is nothing but a burning, sandy desert, without even a blade of grass. Could the trees have grown there? On the highest mountains, the Alps, the Pyrenees, Ararat, &c., shells, and skeletons of fish and sea-monsters have been found; while elephants and whales have been discovered in England, and crocodiles in the very heart of Germany. What but the FLOOD could have carried them thither? And will any man be bold enough to say that these trees were not deposited by the same awful deluge? . . . On the eastern portion the petrified forest extended as far as the eye could see. One thing which struck me as remarkable was that the trees lay thickest in the ravines."

But is it not more likely that this petrified forest owes its origin to the plague of hail, accompanied with "fire, very grievous;" running "along upon the ground," with which God smote Egypt? (Exod. ix. 22—26).

It is hardly probable that a deluge of waters would deposit a number of trees in such regular order as to look as if they had grown there, and "been blown down at once," while some active chemical agency would be necessary to change them into flint, and this may fairly be supposed due to the chemical action of the hail, thunder, and fire which constituted the principal features of this plague, smiting "every herb of the field," and breaking "every tree of the field: all that was in the field both man and beast."

ISRAEL'S SCRIPTURE AND PRAYER UNION.

THE total of members is still 1,452, none having applied for membership since last report.

Seven new cards of membership have been sent to old members, who have applied for them.

The prayers of the members are asked in behalf of open-air meetings which may be held during the summer to spread the Identity truth; also for two young men, who have been induced to read some Identity literature, that through it they may become Christians.

We are all anxious for the spread of the glorious truth, and it is hoped that during the coming month some will send for the card of membership, and thus let us know that they are joining with us in prayer.

The new Card of Membership has a list of chapters for the whole year, also suggestions to members, prayers, etc. It is of a size convenient for keeping in the Bible, and will be sent on receipt of 6 stamps. It is hoped that all the members will send for one.

The first and second series of Monthly Comments on the whole Bible, by Philo-Israel, may be obtained. Price, in paper cover, 1s. 2d. each; in cloth 2s. each, post free.

The "Prayers for Daily Use," being a prayer for each day of the week, by Philo-Israel, are 1d., or 9d. per doz., postage extra. Address — The Secretary, Israel's Scripture and Prayer Union, British-Israel Association, 86, St. Martin's-lane, London, W.C.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—In the BANNER of Oct. 12, last, page 500, John Shootingham alludes to Mr. Armonde's paper in the Newberry House Magazine claiming Israelitish origin for some of our nursery rhymes. I lately saw a copy of the Service of the second day of the Passover, written in Hebrew on one side, and English on the other. I enclose a copy of the English translation, in case you should like to publish it in the BANNER. I may add that the Jewess to whom the book belongs, says when she was a child she was pleased when the prophetic song began, for she knew the service, which was a long one, was near the end, and also she could join in singing that part.

I am yours faithfully,

J. S. AINSLIE.

PROPHETIC SONG SUNG BY THE WHOLE HOUSEHOLD AT THE END OF THE SERVICE OF THE SECOND DAY OF THE PASSOVER.

1. One kid, one kid, which my father bought for two sequins—one kid, one kid.
2. And it came a cat and devoured the kid, which my father bought for two sequins—one kid, one kid.
3. And it came a dog and bit the cat, which devoured the kid, which my father bought for two sequins—one kid, one kid.
4. And it came a stick and beat the dog, that bit the cat, that devoured the kid, which my father bought for two sequins—one kid, one kid.
5. And a fire came and burnt the stick, which smote the dog, which bit the cat, which devoured the kid, which my father bought for two sequins—one kid, one kid.
6. And a water came and extinguished the fire, which burnt the stick, which beat the dog, that bit the cat, that devoured the kid, which my father bought for two sequins—one kid, one kid.
7. And an ox came and drank the water that extinguished the fire, that burnt the stick, that smote the dog, that bit the cat, that devoured the kid, which my father bought for two sequins—one kid, one kid.
8. And the slaughterer came and slaughtered the ox, that drank the water that extinguished the fire, that burnt the stick, that beat the dog, that bit the cat, that devoured the kid, which my father bought for two sequins—one kid, one kid.
9. And the angel of death came and killed the slaughterer that slaughtered the ox, that drank the water that quenched the fire, that burnt the stick that beat the dog, that bit the cat, that devoured the kid, which my father bought for two sequins—one kid, one kid.
10. And the Holy One, blessed be He, came and killed the angel of death, that killed the slaughterer, that slaughtered the ox, that drank the water, that quenched the fire, that burnt the stick, that beat the dog, that bit the cat, that devoured the kid, which my father bought for two sequins—one kid, one kid.

1. Joseph sold, or as some say, the nation of Israel, which God acquired by giving them His law in its two tables.
2. The cat—Ishmaelites who bought Joseph, or Babylonians who destroyed the Jewish State.
3. The Persians who destroyed the Babylonian Empire.
4. Alexander of Macedon who conquered Persia.
5. The Romans made an end of Greek dominion in Asia and Europe.
6. The Turks took Roman possessions in the East.
7, 8, 9, and 10, relate to the future events which will bring about the final epoch of the age of the Messiah. The interpretation referred to of the first verses, is followed up through the whole of the poem, of which more may be seen in the Commentary to the Agada.

ENIGMA.—No. 10.

THE initials of the following names give the Greek name for the devil; and the finals one of a noted Jewish counsellor and doctor of the law:—

1. An Amalekite king whom Saul spared when God appointed him to destruction?
2. A kingdom whose prince withstood the angel of the Lord "for one and twenty days?"
3. The man from whom Joash took the vessels of God's house?
4. The city where St. Paul healed a cripple?
5. He who wrote of a virtuous woman that "her price is far above rubies"?
6. The time when the daughters of Israel went to lament Jeptha's daughter? The judge who succeeded Jeptha? (Initials of both names.)
7. The kind of leaf brought to Noah by the dove?
8. A Syrian leper who was cured of his leprosy by Elisha?

Answer.—No. 10 298

IS IRELAND A NATION?

THE way in which the Marquis of Salisbury answered this question in his great speech at the Guildhall, Derry, on the evening of May 26th last, deserves a place in the BANNER. The Irish Members in Parliament are constantly speaking of Ireland as a single nation, to be governed by themselves, and by those like them, who differ from the Protestant minority in Ulster, in every conceivable respect. Not so does Lord Salisbury regard the question. His views are very clear and no one can mistake them. He believes that Ireland is occupied by two nations, and singularly enough as the best way of illustrating his position he takes us to Canaan and its inhabitants the Canaanites, by way of showing how they and the Israelites differed. Just so do the South and West Irishmen differ from the men of Ulster! He tells us the Irishmen are now a thorn in our British sides, but he argues that that is no reason why they should be told to govern us! He declares the thing is impossible, and cannot be attempted! His words were these:

IRELAND, A NATION.

Now I am met at the outset by being told that the Irish are a nation, and that word carries with it the liberty of the majority, whatever that liberty may be, to trample upon the minority, whatever the relations to England that minority may have observed. That word nation is a powerful word to spell with. It appears to carry with it many privileges, but before we assent to the idea that it gives to a majority the right to efface all the essential privileges of men in the case of the minority—gives them the right to exercise undisputed dominion over all that civil and religious liberty rendered to them most dear—before that let us ask what "nation" means. Is it really true that those who inhabit this island are one nation? In one sense they are; they are all within the boundaries of the one sea, and they are all very proud of the beautiful and fertile island which they inhabit. But in the assertion that the use of the word "nation" gives to the followers of Archbishop Walsh and Mr. Timothy Healy (groans) the right to govern the rest of the island there is an enormous difference. I am rather afraid of making comparisons. I am always assumed to have a sinister meaning in doing so (laughter), and I hardly know to what nation I could compare you without offence, in order to show the absurdity of such a theory as is thus proposed. If you allow me to give an illustration from the children of Israel. (Laughter.) The inhabitants of the land of Canaan, I have no doubt, were very proud of it, and if they had used the jargon of modern times no doubt they would have said that they were the Israelitish nation of the land of Canaan. (Laughter.) There were the Hittites, the Perizites, the Jebusites, and the Ammonites: but the children of Israel would have been very much surprised if you had told the former to govern the land of Canaan as they pleased. (Laughter.) Well, for the Hittites, the Perizites, the Jebusites, and the Ammonites let us substitute the Walshites, the Nultyites, and the Healyites. (Great laughter.) Like the chosen people you yet have those within your borders who are a thorn in your side, but that is no reason why they should govern you. (Hear, hear.) The truth is, all this talk about Nationalist is merely a modern jargon. Whenever people have been united through a long history by common suffering and common efforts, where they have lived under the same institutions and reverenced the same objects, wherever they have been allied by a common creed and guided by common political maxims, wherever they have common heroes whom they both respect and look back to in the past, common enemies whom it is equally their interest and their duty to repel—they are in reality a nation, and you may trust the majority among them to govern the minority, because you may be quite certain that there will be no such sharp line between majority and minority as to make oppression possible. (Cheers.) But there is in this case such a sharp line. It is mere optimistic folly, it is worthy more of school girls than of men to hide from our eyes the teaching of the history of the last three centuries to go no further back. There is a dividing line. There is a deep antagonism, there are traditions which cannot be reconciled. There are mutual feelings which make it utterly impossible, consistently with common justice, that one section of the Irish inhabitants should be handed over, bound hand and foot, to be the slaves of the will of the other. (Hear, hear.) I will not rely upon my own language alone. I will appeal to a great Liberal authority, an authority whom before this wretched question came up every Liberal respected. Most of you, I think, have read the thrilling description in which Lord Macaulay has perpetuated in the most brilliant page of his history the sufferings and the heroism of the city in which I stand. (Cheers.) He closes that description in these remarkable words. He gives an account of how it was that, in spite of all difficulties and dangers, you won at last, and his reason does not rely on the existence of one Irish nationality. What he says is, "It was a contest, not between engineers, but between nations, and the victory remained with the nation (that is, the inhabitants of Londonderry), which, though inferior in numbers, was superior in civilization, in capacity for self-government, and in stubbornness of resolution." (Cheers.) Their children are not unworthy of their fathers, and these same qualities or capacities for self-government and stubbornness of resolution will still appear to baffle the calculations of all those who in this hour of need are traitors to England's greatness. (Hear, hear.)

The above put the case pretty plainly, and will, we hope, make it exceedingly difficult for Mr. Gladstone to carry his Home Rule Bill. It is noteworthy that the ex-Prime Minister tells his hearers what we do—namely, that like the Israelites in Canaan, we have the Canaanites, or a people like them, for our natural antagonists, who are, as the Canaanites of old were towards Israel, "thorns in our side" (Joshua xxiii. 13, Judges ii. 3). Lord Salisbury knows nothing, we suppose, of Our Identity, and took his illustration from Israel's history and the prophecies in question, because the parallels between the two cases are so exact. We know they are prophecies turned into current history; and it is gratifying to us to find so exalted a witness as the ex-Prime Minister testifying (blindly it may be) that we are right The Times foresees the character of the struggle between the North and South of Ireland, as clearly as Lord Salisbury does. These men who are fulfilling the ignoble function which prophecy assigns them as the "thorns in the sides of Israel," appear now under the blackened mask of the moonlighter, again under the cassock of the "patriot" priest (of Rome), "or under the frock coat of the Member of Parliament. They strike now openly, now covertly, at England, and at England's race, and England's creed. But it is the task of England to see that in these days, as in the days of our fathers, they are baffled and beaten back in the secular fray." That the Canaanite shall not always be the "thorn in our sides" mentioned in prophecy, we are taught by Zech. xiv. 21, where it is stated that the day is coming in connection, it seems, with the Lord's Second Advent, when "there shall no more be a Canaanite in the House of the Lord of hosts." Their object to-day is to drive out "the British Garrison" which has served our country faithfully for 300 years, to take its inheritance in the land and to divide its spoils. This is hardly likely, since God has decided differently; it is pleasant, therefore, to remember that the present troubles in Ireland are only ephemeral, and that they are destined to have an end favourable to what we know is the Truth and according to God's will. Ireland will not be divided off from Great Britain, and civil war will not be the result of the present complications. We have with patience to pass through a period of perplexity and trial: and efforts such as the Marquis of Salisbury and Mr. A. J. Balfour have lately made in Ulster are, humanly speaking, the very best antidotes to the poison which for the moment seems to have taken root in the sister isle. Our comfort is that the Lord is in charge of us, and of our national affairs; is guiding us, and will give us an expected end. "He will not forsake us" (Isa. xlii. 16, R.V.). Let Israel therefore praise His holy Name.

THE REV. MARK GUY PEARSE.

We have received from Melbourne three copies of The Southern Cross, of March 10, 17, and 24 respectively, commenting on the fact that the Rev. Mark Guy Pearse had announced his belief in Our Identity and had written a strong paper on the subject in Australia, giving the grounds for his change of views. The Editor, in spite of that fact, still thinks very poorly of our arguments, and evidently believes the eloquent preacher will lose rather than gain by taking up these crazy views. Mr. Annear takes up the defence of believers in Our Identity, and a so-called Gentile Christian gives some violent blows at the views we hold so dear, and declares that the best antidote against the poison we imbibe is the context of the texts we quote. We place these three extracts in consecutive order below:—

March 10, 1893.

The Anglo-Israel theory, which declares the English-speaking race to be the Lost Tribes, lies, for the most part, outside the realm of human respect, and its literature is, speaking generally, worthy only of a lunatic asylum. But the theory has gained an exceptionally respectable adherent in the person of the Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, who has accepted the position of vice-president of the British Anglo-Israel Association. Mr. Pearse, we are informed, "has been studying the subject for some years, and his opinions in favour of the Identity of the British nation with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel was confirmed as one result of his observations during his recent tour through the Australasian colonies." It would be interesting to know what was the exact feature of colonial life which convinced Mr. Mark Guy Pearse that the British race is a mere branch of the Semite family. It is difficult to decide whether the Anglo-Israel fad will gain, or Mr. Mark Guy Pearse himself lose, most of the respect of mankind by the incident here reported.

March 17, 1893.

To the Editor of "The Southern Cross."

Dear Sir,—In your last issue, announcing the acceptance by the Rev. Mark Guy Pearse of the office of vice-president of the British Anglo-Israel Association, you have spoken contemptuously of the belief held by that body, the generality of its literature being described as a product "worthy only of a lunatic asylum."

As an Anglo-Israelite, I would like to say a word by way of protest. That our belief should be deemed for the most part outside the realm of human respect, and that we should be continually asked, "Have any preachers or writers of eminence adopted your views?" troubles us little when we think of the rise and progress of all great movements, especially of a sect that was "everywhere spoken against" (Acts xxviii. 22); and the scornful question, "Have any of the rulers or the Pharisees believed on Him?" (John vii. 48).

A glance over the list of office-bearers of the British Anglo-Israel Association, embracing as it does an earl, a score of clergymen of different denominations, besides several gentlemen in the military and naval service and the legal profession, will show that it has some claim even to respectability.

And as regards the literature of the subject, no one at all acquainted with the bulk of it could truthfully speak of it as being of a "lunatic" quality. Let anyone read, for instance, "British-Israel Truth," a handbook for inquirers, where will be seen an effectual disproof of your charge, as well as irrefragable proof of the Identity of the Anglo-Saxon peoples with the Lost House of Israel.

The above work, published by authority of the association, and now in its third edition, has had a most favourable reception, many of the religious papers (The Rock and Christian Age, for example) hitherto hostile to Anglo-Israelism being unstinted in their commendation.

Mr. Mark Guy Pearse, having studied the subject, comes to the conclusion invariably arrived at by those who do so with Berean diligence, and like an honest man announced his belief in the great truth of Anglo-Israelism; there is no fear of, at least, one of the dread alternatives mentioned by you —his losing most of the respect of mankind.

Trusting that many more may have courage to follow the rev. gentleman's example, I am, yours truly,

F. J. ANNEAR.

South Yarra, March 14th, 1893.

MARCH 24, 1893.

To the Editor of "The Southern Cross."

DEAR SIR,—In your leaderette on the conversion of the Rev. Mark Guy Pearse to the Anglo-Israel theory, you have left yourself open to severe criticism from those who are identified with this modern doctrine; and already I notice one protest has been entered against your remarks. I sympathize with you, sir, for many years ago I did the same thing when writing for one of the Australasian religious papers, and brought about my ears a whole torrent of denunciation. Whilst I have always considered this theory a sort of craze, I must admit that many who hold it are truly pious Christians; and I have known several who were eminent in the Church for their learning as well as for their piety. It is more than a score of years since I was in a position to know exactly of the very large amount of Edward Hine's literature on this subject which was coming into Australia. To that seed, I believe, sir, are we indebted for the numbers in Australia who hold the doctrine that the British are the Lost Ten Tribes. I have met with many serious people in the colonies who were quite taken up with the notion, and who would hardly listen to a word in refutation.

It is a little singular that Mr. Pearse should have become confirmed in his opinions on the question while in Australia. But he has always been about as fair and square a man as I know, and I have no doubt whatever that his convictions on the point are honest and sincere. In these days we are not readily surprised at change of opinion in regard to religious doctrines and practices. I have known of a Presbyterian turning a Roman Catholic, of a Wesleyan becoming a Ritualist of the very highest order, and of a Baptist joining the Church of England and then returning to his original type, with a touch of the sacerdotal element still clinging to him. So when we find honest Mark Guy Pearse taken up with this Anglo-Israel fad, we need not be much amazed. He must have forgotten the teachings of his Mildmay friends, and especially those of his neighbour, the Rev. Mr. Wilkinson, the Mildmay missionary to the Jews, who has written so ably in refutation of this notion of Mr. Hine and others. It is not long since Mr. Wilkinson's book "Israel, My Glory," was scattered somewhat freely in Victoria, and it is to be hoped it will do something to counteract the influence of that literature of which you have written so scathingly—and for which action you should be commended rather than condemned. Probably, however, no greater condemnation of this subject has yet been given than that by Mr. Robert Roberts, a Christadelphian from Birmingham, who, about fifteen years ago, with open Bible, and on the broad platform of Exeter Hall, in the British metropolis, for three nights debated the question with Mr. Hine, utterly confuting and routing that erstwhile champion of this new-found faith. The best antidote for the craze, I believe, will be found in the reading of the context to those passages quoted and relied on by the Anglo-Israelites as the very foundation of their belief.

I must apologize for the length of my communication. For various good reasons I withhold my name from publication, but beg to enclose my card as an assurance of good faith on my part, and meanwhile subscribe myself,

A GENTILE CHRISTIAN.

In regard to the above, the editorial is certainly vicious and hostile, but Mr. Annear's defence is spirited and gallant. The nameless "Gentile Christian" does his best to damage a view of truth which he really does not attempt to refute but sends us to the contexts of the scriptural passages on which we rely, as if we do not ourselves insist on the contexts as material to the arguments we base upon our texts. For instance, Gen. xxii. 17, 18, are often quoted by us, but we always desire the whole chapter to be considered with ver. 17, 18. And so also in regard to Balaam's prophecies in Numb. xxiii., xxiv., also Deut. viii. 18, xv. 6, and xxviii. 1—15.

How our views are condemned by a Christadelphian's contest with Mr. E. Hine fifteen years ago we cannot imagine. Mr. Robert Roberts' arguments are never brought forward against us in these days, and if, as alleged, Mr. E. Hine did not shine in that gladiatorial contest it was probably owing to his inability to cope with an unscrupulous antagonist and his own inexperience in such debates. Our case is very different to anything Mr. Roberts attempted to destroy, and is founded on two facts—1st, God's promises on oath made to Abraham and his seed exclusively; and 2nd, God's performance of that oath, by the gift to the British exclusively of all those gifts He promised to grant "to Abraham and his seed for ever."

In regard to the Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, it is quite true that he has publicly professed his belief in Our Identity, and that he is also a vice-president of our British-Israel Association in London. He has taken, however, no further steps in support of our views, and evidently feels a somewhat languid interest in a matter which the Scriptures tell us occupies God's "whole heart and His whole soul" (Jer. xxxii. 42). We hope, with Mr. Annear, that many may have the courage to follow the rev. gentleman's example, but we trust they will evince an active interest in what really is already the pivot round which all contemporary and future history does, and must, revolve.

"BE YE MINDFUL ALWAYS OF HIS COVENANT."

THE covenant that God would have us, as His people, always to have in our minds, and to be "mindful" of it, is the Abrahamic covenant. He made it as we are told in 1 Chron. xvi. 16, 17, with Abraham, with Isaac, with Jacob, and finally with Israel "for an everlasting covenant." The words were repeated afterwards in Psalm cv., which was one written by the Spirit's inspiration by David himself, and given by him into the hand of Asaph and his brethren, as a song of thanks to the Lord on the occasion of the Ark being brought up to Zion from the house of Obed-edom the Gittite (1 Chron. xiii.) The covenant, as made with the patriarchs, is, as to its terms, well-known to us all. It is contained in Gen. xvii. 2, xxii. 17, 18, xxvi. 3—5, xxviii. 13—15, xlviii. 15—19, and xlix. 1—33. It concerned "a great and mighty nation," which God promised to bring forth in due time from the seed of Israel, and to endow with great power, dominion, and wealth, in order that the Gospel might by its means be ministered to all nations, families, and kindreds, outside the chosen people of Israel.

Of that nation the covenant in question provided that they should of all people be the one exclusively blessed of Him. "Blessing I will bless thee," it stated. It promised that the people in question should be noted for one of the chief ingredients of empire and greatness—namely, enormous multitudinousness. "I will multiply thy seed as the stars of the heaven, and as the sand which is upon the sea-shore," "which cannot be measured nor numbered" (Gen. xxii. 17, Hosea i. 10). "Thy seed," the covenant further added,

"shall possess the Gate of his enemies." These are important points, but more are scattered through the Scriptures which have to be kept in mind. The promise of "the power to get wealth" is a remarkable one to be found in Deut. viii. 18, and the extraordinary prediction to be found in Deut. xv. 6, was that Israel should reign over many nations, but that these nations should never reign over them!" Besides that, "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven," was, by the same covenant, promised to Israel as "the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey Him" (Dan. vii. 27).

This is the material part or earthly portion of the covenant which does not lack its spiritual ingredients. "In thy seed," it added in Gen. xxii. 18, "shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." These blessings must be Christian in character, and belong to the Christian dispensation; for no nation can be really blessed in God's sight save through the atonement of the Cross. This general blessedness brings with it the possession of the Scriptures, God's Word, His statutes, and His judgments, which in Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20, He promised to shew to Israel, exclusively, but in no wise to the non-Israelite Gentile nations of the earth. Here, then, is a wonderful covenant, made by God Himself with a nation He had chosen for His own peculiar pleasure from all eternity, and that covenant, made under the sanction of a divine oath, was described by the Lord as an "everlasting," never-ending "covenant."

The vast duration of this covenant is described in 1 Chron. xvi. 15, to suit the weakness of human intellect and discernment, as the "covenant" or "word which God commanded to a thousand generations." That is, that it would endure from the time of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Israel, for at least 35,000 years, of which, commencing with Abraham's day, barely 4,000 years have since elapsed! Of this covenant, destined to be eternal in its duration, God warns all men that "they must always be mindful" (1 Chron. xvi. 15). There is no duty so little observed as this in these our modern days! Men refuse to look for this covenant promise of the Lord at all! While God made the covenant intending it to last for ever, represented by a thousand generations, and repeated it four times over to Abraham first, to his son Isaac, to his grandson Jacob, and to Israel his great grand-children, as representatives of an everlasting generation, men now refuse to believe that the covenant can have any reference to those existing on the earth to-day, or that the Israel of the promise is a nation extant now! Can unbelief be more rank or unpardonable than this? But the case is even worse. For, godly folks, and even preachers of the Gospel, feel no scruple in claiming the promised blessings of God (entailed on Israel), for the church of the present day! The "first-fruits" of that covenant, however, as it applied to Israel, were the Land of Canaan and all that it included, as verse 18 proves:—"Unto thee will I give the Land of Canaan, the lot of your inheritance," was the stipulation of the covenant. The Church will hardly venture to claim that as their promised portion, unless it be regarded as a type of the heavenly Canaan; and Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Israel, be taken in the spiritual aspect of the case, as the souls of saved men and women, of no particular race of people! There are persons who persist in professing these views—but they can hardly persist in them long—for events are speaking loudly that Israel exists to-day and call upon all faithful men to acknowledge the fact to the praise of His faithfulness and truth. To Him be all the glory.

"ADVANCE" ALONG THE LINE.

Being Notes of his Address at Exeter Hall, on May 16, 1893, during the Evening Meeting.

There is no doubt that the knowledge of the distinction between Judah and Israel, and that Judah is not all Israel, is slowly advancing. It is true that the Jewish Chronicle, which I weekly read, and an article in the Quarterly Review, contradict these assertions. But the Jews of modern days are notoriously ignorant of their own Scriptures, for they have substituted for the original Word of God the teachings of the Talmud, and hence are not aware of the separate histories of the two Houses of Israel, or that after re-uniting they are to be restored together to their land. In spite of this, however, it is clear to the least observant among us, that there is an advance of faith in Israel's future, and that the inquiry, "When are the tribes to return?" is receiving consideration, and is preparing the way for its accomplishment. A practical reminder for us all is this—that we should never lose a chance of re-stating the A, B, C, of our contention, and of leading men to search the Scriptures in regard to this most important topic.

Another mark of advance at the present day is our increasing national realization of our Imperial position. Men begin to see that our empire, large as it is, must be enlarged still more, if our national prosperity is to advance; and this result is augmented by present events now transpiring in the world, which must work for, and work out our national education. Men are being instructed on all sides respecting the vast dimensions of the British Empire, its astounding wealth, the enormous population of the many lands which are included in the Queen's dominions, and the like. This sense of Imperial power, however, is a danger, if misdirected, but of infinite value if rightly guided. In fact, every development of our power is a misdirection unless the nation's responsibility to God is clearly recognised. This is true, moreover, for those who do not know of Our Identity. But the national responsibility, however, is fully understood only when we know "who we are"? and why we are?

No doubt there are many who understand and admit that we, as a nation, occupy Israel's place. But we must go a step further than that, and say that "we do not occupy Israel's place, to the exclusion of Israel." We do not teach this to the exclusion of other knowledge. Each section of the possessors of knowledge have to teach that part of it. No part is unimportant; but being a portion of God's purposes must be accepted and promulgated, as a reflexion of the Divine Mind.

In this subject we must admit that we are enthusiastic. But why so? Because we believe that we are dealing with the mind and providence of God, and that His honour, as God, is involved in our nation's destiny. We believe further that the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ is involved in this matter, and that the work of the Holy Ghost is also discerned therein since God employs us as a nation in preaching the Gospel, to all mankind, striving to sanctify (or separate) and make holy the nations of the world. In this glorious subject we believe our national avoidance of chastisement is involved, also that the blessing of a willing and intelligent advance towards our destined end must be the result of this knowledge.

We base this belief of ours upon facts. The case, as far as we are concerned, is complete. The Identification of the British nation with Lost Israel is also complete. No further evidence is needed! Bible statements, history, geography, ethnic science, our foretold new covenant position, all these combined, present such a mass of solid irrefutable evidence, that in the face of it our opponents must give up their antagonism unless they will do one other thing which I confess will bring all our arguments, and the belief founded on them, to the very dust—namely, that they prove to us satisfactorily that Ephraim-Israel is not in Britain and its empire, but somewhere else! Let them do that and they conquer us!

It is the duty of our friends to relax no effort to persuade men that we are right. Pecuniary help is needed, and should be given without stint. The confession of our knowledge, amongst men, is required to advance the cause. It should not be held back! Knowledge and faith united, are a cause of tranquillity, and they, besides, become a guide to action.

THE NATIONAL PRAYER-BOOK'S TESTIMONY TO OUR ISRAELITISH DESCENT.

A Paper read at a Drawing-room Meeting of the North London British-Israel Association, on 6th April, 1893.

By H. L. Browett.

PART I.

I do not propose to discuss to-night man's opinion as to the utility, or otherwise, of a National Church—i.e., a Church established or identified in a nation. In my humble opinion religious controversies and differences are a sign of the power of Satan, and will not cease until in the fulness of God's good time British-Israelism is universally acknowledged. By British-Israelism I mean the living proof of the absolute faithfulness of God in His promises to a nation in particular, and to the world in general, as revealed in His Word. He permits the blindness and hardness of heart evidenced by these controversies, until the time arrives when we shall all know Him even as He is known. Then shall we be astonished at the mountains we made out of mole-hills, and our divers interpretations of Scripture will be forgotten in the restitution of all things.

I devoutly look forward to the world-wide recognition of what is now called British-Israelism as the advent of that unity of a pure Christendom we all so much desire.

We must be thankful that at the present time this absorbing topic affords blessed opportunities for the friendly meeting of men and women of various political and Christian-religious beliefs. Therefore I do not design in any degree to establish any authority of the National Church over the faith of individuals, but I propose to shew that the National Church, as such, has in her services for centuries assumed, and does now acknowledge, that this nation is lineally descended from Abraham.

Nobody, I think, will deny that next to the Bible the national Prayer-book is directly, or indirectly, the most potent factor in the religion of the Anglo-Saxon race, and of those nations which our Church missionaries have converted. Inasmuch as all revealed religion is contained in the Bible, it is natural that the next most important book in this Christian age should possess frequent references to the source from whence it sprang—viz., the oracles of God (read Rom. iii. 1, 2, and ix. 4, 5).

But we must remember that these oracles contain the title-deeds of a race, the origin, history, and destiny of which occupy nearly the whole of its pages. The most important privilege and duty of this race, in its redeemed state, was to be the carrying of the message of salvation for all who believe in Christ.

I wish to trace, as quickly as I can, the connection between the British Christian Church and the expatriated or Gentilised Israelites. These latter, we know, were placed in captivity, because of their idolatry, in the region of the Caspian Sea; and Sharon Turner, the historian, traces the journeyings of the ancestors of the Anglo-Saxon race about 150 years after this captivity, from the place of it across to the North-west side of Europe.

The Druidical worship in these Islands and North-west countries of Europe which was in existence when the Romans landed on these shores, bore some affinity to the ritual ordered by Moses, though much debased by the cruel practices incidental to ancient idolatries. In connection with this we must remember that the tribe of Dan had escaped at the time of the Assyrian captivity of Israel, and we believe that a portion of them came over here along with their Phœnician neighbours.

As Mr. Jones told us last month, Brân, the father of Prince Caractacus, was one of the British captives taken to Rome by the Romans, and held as a hostage. During two out of the seven years of his stay at Rome, Brân could have come in contact with the Apostle Paul. The Druidic motto was, strangely enough, "Truth before the world," and Brân not only brought back Christianity, but established it in the kingdom of Wales with the aid of three converts who returned with him. They converted many Druids, and Brân was called "the blessed." It is believed he brought with him copies of the true law and the prophets of Israel. The Welsh Triads state that his three companions were Illid (an Israelite), Cyndaf, and Arwystli, which is Welsh for Aristobulus, to whom you may remember St. Paul sent salutations (see Rom. xvi. 10).

Quite early in the centuries, and long before the Bishop of Rome set up a claim to pre-eminence in the Christian Church, portions of the New Testament had been circulated in these islands, which speedily became the scene of religious activity: so that many British martyrs sealed their faith under the early persecutions of the Roman Emperors.

With the knowledge of Christianity came the ever-remarkable British enthusiasm for missionary enterprise. As the Romish Church gained in power, it desired to subordinate the British Church, insidiously recommending salvation by works, not faith; abstention from meats, worship of relics, and celibacy of the clergy. But the British Church would have none of them, and it grew in zeal and piety to such an extent that the historian says, "The missionary establishment of Iona and Bangor possessed a more lively faith than the City of the Cæsars, and Britain in the sixth century was faithful in planting the standard of Christ in the heart of Europe." This did not please Rome at all, so Pope Gregory sent the wily Augustine to England on a special mission. "Augustine found," says Bishop Barry, "various services existing in the British Church which had strong affinities with the Eastern liturgies, and differing considerably from the Roman form of his time." By the wise counsel of Gregory, Augustine refrained from rigidly enforcing ritual uniformity within the sphere of his influence, but he took, later on, a bitter and cruel revenge on the missionary establishments.

The service books were called "Uses," such as the "Bangor," "Sarum," and "York" "Uses." Many of them, up to the time of the Conqueror, being in ancient British or Anglo-Saxon. The interim between then and the Reformation proved that though Rome might seem to triumph for a time the English sovereigns and their subjects were continually objecting to its claims, and England was a veritable thorn in its side.

The Reformation in England, so far as it was a purely religious movement, had amongst its chief objects the publication of a complete English Bible, and of a uniform English service book. In the translation of the ancient liturgies many prayers were reformed, and inasmuch as the pretension of the Pope to a right to sanction the appointment of the English clergy was no longer recognised, the Sovereign was thenceforth publicly mentioned as the head of the Church, and prayers were added in accordance with the purified religion.

The responsive character of the services was made effective, complete provision was made for the systematic reading of Holy Scripture and the element of exhortation and teaching was much strengthened. The laity were plainly recognised as full members of the Church, having, under due spiritual conditions, a full indefeasible right to its services and sacraments, even as in the ancient British Church, before the errors of Rome had crept in.

It is evident, too, that the general services of the Church of England were authorised to be used nationally, and were drawn up in a spirit of charity for use by the people as a people.

A careful reading of these services in their present form cannot fail to enhance our deep respect for those holy men who *re*constituted them at the time of the Reformation. We must, as Christians, believe that they had the special guidance of the Holy Spirit in their far-reaching and momentous task, though probably as ignorant of their supreme mission and its extent as was Caiaphas. St. John writes of Caiaphas in chap. xi. 51, 52: "Now this he said, not of himself, but being high priest that year he prophesied that Jesus should die for the nation; and not for that nation only, but that He might also gather together into one the children of God that are scattered abroad." Pardon me if I digress for a moment to explain who these were. Please remember that St. Peter addressed his epistles especially to these dispersed or scattered abroad children of Israel, whom he beautifully describes in his 1st Epistle, chap. ii 9, 10, using much the same words as did Moses in Exodus xix: "Ye are an elect race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a people for God's own possession that ye may show forth the excellencies of Him who called you out of darkness into His marvellous light; which in time past were no people, but now are the people of God; which had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy." The last words proclaim the fulfilment of Hosea's prophecy of one and the same people, St. Peter using the identical words of the prophet.

St. Peter was specially commanded to tend the Lord's sheep, both those within the fold and those who had strayed —the lost sheep of the House of Israel. The Romish Church, however—the wild olive graft—seeks to appropriate him and his important mission, although he does not appear to have addressed a single epistle to the Church at Rome.

The National Church has been manifestly blessed as an agency for carrying out the will of God, and while often preceding secular efforts for the extension of this Empire, it is always to be found where the British flag is planted. Therefore it cannot be a matter of small interest to us Israelites within the camp, and to the stranger who comes in from outside and claims our protection and privileges, that there is in the National Prayer-book internal evidence of the fact that the compilers were directed, probably unwittingly, as I said before, to give expression in nearly every page to the Israelitish origin of the British.

I must here express my indebtedness to the Rev. Robert Douglas, vicar of Bredgar, for the information I have gleaned on this subject from his wonderful book, "Ephraim-England." I had lent my copy of the Association's Handbook, and was therefore unable to refer to it.

Israel's prayer and praise is directed in the order for morning and evening to be offered up daily throughout the year, and it is so offered up all over the world in an Empire on which the sun never sets. As true Israelites wrestling for unknown benedictions, the Lord Himself has taught us to pray.

In the opening sentences we are expressly addressed in the words in which the prophet Joel (chap. ii. 13) calls upon backsliding Israel to turn to the Lord, that she may receive the blessing; the words are: "Rend your hearts, and not your garments, and turn unto the Lord your God: for He is gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and repenteth him of the evil."

In the next sentence we have Daniel's beautiful confession and supplication for all Israel that are near, and that are far off, proclaiming that to Him belong mercies and forgiveness, though we have rebelled against Him (chap. ix. 7—10).

Then, again, we have the extract from the parable containing the cry of God's prodigal son, Ephraim: "I will arise and go to my father, and will say, Father, I have sinned" (Luke xv. 18, 19; Jer. xxxi. 18—20; and Hosea xiv.).

In the general confession we implore God to spare and restore us, the lost sheep of the House of Israel, to whom Christ declared He was specially sent to seek and to save. Israel alone had gone astray from God's ways, and had been divorced from the covenant.

In the "Absolution," the messenger of Christ, quoting as his authority Ezekiel's message to the House of Israel, from Him who "willeth not the death of a sinner, but rather that he should turn from his ways and live" (Ezek. xviii. 23), announces that pardon, and implores that Holy Spirit which the same prophet distinctively promised to the chosen race.

The Lord's Prayer is the response in which our Messiah taught us to plead for those blessings which are Israel's peculiar heritage according to the "covenants of promise." We say, "Our Father," because God said, "I am a Father to Israel, and Ephraim is My firstborn"; we say, "Hallowed be Thy Name," because of old we had profaned His name, and He now says to us in Christ, "I will be sanctified in you before the nations' (Ezek. xxxix. 7). We say, "Thy kingdom come," because it is His eternal purpose "to restore the kingdom to Israel" (Jer. xxxi.; Hosea xiv.; Zech. x, xiv.; and 1 Peter, ii.). We say, "Thy will be done" that we may inherit "the sworn blessings of Abraham," and "the sure mercies of David"; and also in submission to His judgments we say, "Give us this day our daily bread," because as He daily fed our fathers with manna, He has promised to feed us, and cause us to lie down on the mountains of Israel.

The Venite, "O come, let us sing unto the Lord" (Psa. xcv.), is said to be the Psalm which has been longest used in our national service; indeed Bishop Barry says it has been known from time immemorial as the invitatory Psalm, opening the service of praise. In it we say, "He is the Lord our God, and we are the people of His pasture, and the sheep of His hand." "Harden not your hearts, as in the day of temptation in the wilderness, when your fathers tempted Me forty years." It is surely wrong for us, as a nation, to appropriate to ourselves these Biblical references to the children of Israel unless we are indeed those children.

In the Psalms appointed for daily reading throughout the year we not only show our strong innate, moral, and spiritual affinity with the old Hebrew writings, but we, in using them, make requests and set up claims which are a mockery of inspired language apart from the truth for which we contend. So, too, most of our lessons have neither force nor meaning when applied to a non-Israelite nation.

The "Benedictus" joyfully proclaims, "Blessed be the Lord the God of Israel, for He hath visited and wrought redemption for His people, to remember the oath which He made to Abraham our father." But where is this national "redemption of Israel"? Where is this performance of the spiritual and temporal engagements of the Abrahamic covenant to Abraham's seed—as brought about by and in virtue of the First Advent of Christ—if we, who have the firstfruits of the promise, are not Israel indeed?

"I WILL BRING AGAIN THE CAPTIVITY OF ELAM."

By J. H. Weldon.

This is a text in explanation of which a very convincing argument appears in last Banner, inasmuch as it is shown that the expression, when applied to Jacob, is coupled with the words, "and will have mercy upon the whole House of Israel." This proves that, not only pardon and peace, but other blessings particularised elsewhere, should be bestowed on the seed of Jacob, at whatsoever time it should please the Lord to "bring again" the captivity of His people.

Accordingly the question arises, Are Israel, and Moab, and Ammon, and Elam in captivity still? To believers in the Identity of Israel with Great Britain and the United States, it is hard indeed to answer affirmatively, and declare that the chief among the nations of the present day are in what we would term a captive state. What, then, is strictly the meaning of being in captivity? Confining our observations to Israel, we know that the Ten Tribes were sent into a long and enduring captivity, from which, it cannot be said, they have yet returned or been brought back, until the fact of regaining possession of their own land proves the point, and causes their identity to be universally acknowledged. The House of Israel is therefore, according to Scripture, in captivity still; and so it is quite plain that the expression "bring again the captivity"—if it were to mean "bring into captivity"—could not possibly be applied to a people already in captivity and not yet freed from their captive state.

This argument applies equally to Elam; and so it becomes evident that the difficulty in understanding the true meaning of the text lies in the more than doubtful expression "bring again." Now what is the true meaning of "bring again"? This can be answered only by reference to the words in the original languages into which the Bible was first translated, and from which so many of our words are derived. The Septuagint uses the word apostrepso, which means to turn from, or in an opposite direction. But nothing can be plainer than the Latin, which is reverti faciam captivos Elam—I will make the captives of Elam to return. We have also, as in Ezek. xxxix. 25, reducam captivitatem, of which the literal translation is, I will lead back, or, bring again. Thus it is that our word "return" really means "turn back," or, "turn again"; and so we must not be surprised to find this very word employed throughout the Bible in those texts where the same promise of bringing back the captivity of Israel, is intended to be conveyed. In Zeph. iii. 20 we read, "At that time will I bring you again (adducam vos), even in the time that I gather you. Here the use of the word adducam seems to point to some country to which a gathering of the tribes is to take place: "For I will make you a name and a praise among all people of the earth when I turn back (convertero) your captivity before your eyes, saith the Lord." And three times in Psa. lxxx., we find the Shepherd of Israel addressed, "Turn us again, O Lord, God of Hosts, shew the light of Thy countenance, and we shall be whole." Here the Latin is converte nos. From this comes our English word conversion, which is remarkably suggestive of the way the Lord answers our prayer and turns our hearts by the operation of His Holy Spirit. In all these texts, and numberless others, we also must remark that every reference made to the turning or "bringing again" of the captivity, or of the people of the captivity, is associated with blessing.

BALAAM'S PROPHECIES.

PART I.

The Church of England prescribes that after Easter the prophecies of Balaam, the son of Beor, the heathen Mesopotamian soothsayer, shall be read in the hearing of those we know to be the children of Israel extant in these islands in "the latter days." It is fitting and right it should be so, because clearly these prophecies relate to various epochs of the history of this people, and the fourth prediction in Num. xxiv. 14—24 distinctly relates to "the latter days," or our times, after the first advent. We wonder that our clergy, who are bound to read these four prophecies once at least during the year, do not see that as they foretell the continued existence of a great, mighty, and prosperous Christian nation, warlike and terrible to the end, and always under God's special blessing and protection, it would be worth their while to try and discover where such a power is at the present moment, and what their own relation to it is?

The first Epoch regarding which Balaam spoke is recorded in Num. xxiii. 7—10, and evidently relates to the Twelve-tribed people of Israel as he saw them encamped out in the plains below Kirjath-huzoth. He regarded them then as a people God had not cursed, but resolved to bless, whom it was impossible to defy, since God had not defied them. He declared that he saw them then as "a people dwelling alone," separated from all other peoples on the face of the earth by reason of the fact that God Himself was with them, leading, guiding, and sustaining them, just as Moses regarded them on another occasion and described them then as "a people separated from all others," therefore "dwelling alone" (Exod. xxxiii. 16, R.V.). Balaam looked forward into the then future also, and declared that that was a people who should not reckon themselves to be on an equality but apart from other nations, who should be always, as then, a multitudinous race. "Who can count the dust of Jacob," he cried, "or number the fourth part of Israel?" (ver. 10, R.V.).

The first prophecy of Balaam's made no mention of any king as reigning then over Israel. It was the epoch of Israel when God was their King, and no earthly sovereign ruled over them. He saw before him a vastly numerous, conquering, peculiar people, destined to be a holy or separated nation, under a theocracy, and led by God Himself, dwelling alone in a true scriptural sense, and he blessed them in all these respects. That vision covered the history of Israel from B.C. 1452 to the time of Saul, B.C. 1095.

The second prophecy takes up the story of the people at a period subsequent to Saul's, when an earthly king did visibly rule over Israel. It ends at a period when the prosperity of the nation came to an end. The evil days began when Solomon died. The second prophecy embraced a period of successful wars and conquests. Balaam began his prophecy of that period in ver. 16, et seq, and vindicated God's truth. He had blessed Israel, and would bless them always; no idea of abeyance is possible in the matter:—"God is not a man that He should lie, neither the son of man that He should repent. Hath He said, and shall He not do it? Or hath He spoken and shall He not make it good?"

A remarkable statement is made by Balaam first in his second prophecy. He seemed desirous of cutting the ground from under the feet of those who would spiritualize these prophecies, by declaring that those he saw were the people whom God was bringing forth out of Egypt, the literal flesh-and-blood children of Israel, that he perceived the shout of a king among them now (ver. 21, 22), also that God was still with these people, for He saw no iniquity in Jacob, nor perverseness in Israel. At the epoch of Israel's history in question, that of David's reign especially, Balaam described the power and strength of the people in striking language, recalling the British standard—namely, the rampant lion whose time to lie down and rest from murderous wars had not yet come and the horns of the ox-antelope or reem, emblems pointing to the rampant lion and unicorn of the British national coat-of-arms (ver. 22—24, R.V. marg.). "At the due season (marg., or "now," which is a chronological indication) shall men say" (or, "it shall be said of Jacob and Israel"), "What had God wrought!" There was no enchantment against Jacob, nor any divination against Israel, during the various stages of that nation's life, and we need have no suspicions now in respect to the final prosperity of this God-honoured race of men, since the Lord their God is with them, and the shout (or hurrah) of a king is among them.

The third of Balaam's prophecies, delivered under circumstances differing from those which accompanied the first and second, applies, we believe, to the condition of Israel as the British Empire of to-day. Balaam saw us and our national circumstances before him 3,300 years ago. He set his face on that occasion towards the wilderness without first seeking heathen enchantments. That wilderness was the same whither the Lord allured Israel to enter when He was about to bless them, as recorded in Hos. ii. 14, R.V., and to speak "comfortably" to her heart (marg.). Balaam lifted up his eyes and saw in the wilderness a happy, powerful, prosperous, Christian, maritime, widely-dispersed people, a kingdom still, one more powerful than Russian Gog's (or Agag), a kingdom exalted by the Lord Himself. This people, under a monarchy (as is again declared) were then the same people who came out of Egypt guided by God's hand, having still the strength of the wild ox, or reem, "eating up the nations their adversaries, and breaking their bones in pieces," therefore mighty still in war.

Their wars were over at that stage of their existence, for then they were to couch or lie down like a lion and as a lioness—"Who shall rouse him up?" The prophet added, as a final touch of recognition, God's blessing on Abraham's afterseed, as recorded in Gen. xii. 1, 2, R.V.: "Blessed be every one that blesseth thee, and cursed be every one that curseth thee." In Gen. xii. 1, 2, the words are given thus: "I will bless them that bless thee, and him that curseth thee I will curse." Of no other nation than the British can all the above particulars be alleged, but of our nation they are the exact features. God has blessed those nations that bless us, and he has cursed those that have cursed us. Those that have refused to serve us are dying out like the Maories and the Red Indians; but to the Indian and African races, who consent to serve and obey us, He has given of every blessing a full share.

"WHAT DOEST THOU HERE, O ISRAEL?"

It is well that we should inquire from time to time, whether the House of Israel which has been brought into their "appointed place" in these "Islands of the West," are answering the purpose for which God designed them, and are fulfilling the functions He has given them to perform? These purposes and functions are connected with God's glory, and the proclamation of the everlasting Gospel among "the nations" or non-Israelite races, outside the land of the inheritance, according to the blessing which went before them, in Gen. xii. 2, xviii. 18, xxii. 18, and other passages of the Word. We may write bitter things against ourselves, of course, and take blame for the very recent date when missions to the heathen and Mahomedans were first seriously carried on at the end of the last and beginning of the present century. We may also reproach ourselves with the small incomes we allow to our great missionary societies now in the field, and complain that while our nation's drink bill is over 100 millions and a-half sterling a year, the missions to the whole heathen world outside the Empire cost us only one-and-a-half! No doubt "we are unprofitable servants," and the missionary work to execute which we were "made," "formed," and "created," by the Lord, that we might show forth His praise (Isa. xliii. 1, 7, 21), has not been executed with adequate zeal and self-sacrifice. Yet it is the truth, that late in time, when the call came, and the doors of the heathen and Mahomedan world were at last fully opened by the Lord, we have entered thereby, and are striving earnestly to carry on the Master's last command, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature" (Mark xvi. 15).

Our missionaries, male and female, are a great company of preachers, labouring with wonderful zeal and success in all the regions of the earth, where the heathen and Mahomedan nations may be reached, in India, Burmah, Persia, Africa, Egypt, Borneo, China, Palestine, New Zealand, and the many Islands of the sea included within the dominions of Her Majesty the Queen. The success vouchsafed to our poor efforts has been really large. In India the advance of Christianity among the nations has attracted the attention of the Indian Government, and it has expressed its satisfaction with the result. All Eastern lands, including Japan and parts of China are opening their once closed doors and inviting our Christian teachers "to come over and help them." Africa is passive in our hands, and when the British flag is recognised as that of East Central Africa, the invitation to the British missionary to evangelise that part of the dark continent will come in not from seven or eight chiefs at present, but from hundreds. Men and women adapted to do all sorts of work in the mission field are offering themselves to go out, and a large company have already gone forth to carry the Gospel to the heathen world.

All this indicates advance and success which God has given us. It behoves us to be humbly thankful. God is using us for His glory, and employing us to preach the Gospel to the nations who knew Him not. The call further is addressed not to the Christian nations, so-named, of the European Continent, for they do not go; but to the British nation alone, aided by our American brethren of Manasseh. These are going abroad with alacrity and preaching the Gospel to the nations throughout the world. Then there is the slave trade. It is Israel's work and bounden duty to liberate the slave, "to loose the bonds of wickedness, to undo the bands of the yoke, to let the oppressed go free, and that we break every yoke" (Isa. lviii. 6). This is Israel's commission, and the words exactly fit the case of the African slave gangs, which our nation has so persistently been hunting down for so long, that they might let the oppressed go free, and that every yoke might be broken that binds them. The object of the proposed railway from Mombasa to the Victoria Nyanza Lake is this very thing. The railway will put down slavery in its headquarters. Therefore the East African Company promotes the project, and the British Government helps the needful survey by advancing £20,000 from the national purse. British-Israel is in this respect again responding to her call from God, and answering the purpose for which God meant us, when He formed us.

The question of education, as imparted by our people to the subject races, is one of prime importance and on it depends a good deal respecting the determination of the matter we are considering. Do we fulfil Israel's functions in this respect and so become a blessing to all the nations with whom we are brought in contact? One fact is patent. The British schoolmaster is abroad everywhere, and the missionary schoolmaster is idle nowhere. In India, as we saw last year (BANNER, No. 774, Vol. xv., p. 425), the native Christians of the Madras Presidency are taking the lead in all departments, and are likely before another generation passes away to distance their non-Christian competitors. Between 1872 and 1881, native Christians throughout India increased by over 30 per cent., while the general population advanced by only 7 per cent. Education by Christian missionaries advances on parallel lines with native conversions, and this favourable rate of increase of the native Christian population is one of the blessed signs of the times in our Queen's Heathen Empire.

But there are the blots on our nation's fair character as God's Israel. No one denies these. The fact is too obvious that Our Identity includes bad as well as good points in the Israelite character. At home there is her tendency to sin by reason of altars many (Hosea viii. 11), and abroad the opium question, the Sabbath and Bible questions, and the general ungodliness of our representatives in the East, are all disquieting subjects leading some even to doubt our Hebrew origin, and others to ask "If so sinful a race can be those of God's choice?" Alas! Israel was ever a recreant race, and her portrait painted in Deut. ix. 4—7, is her portrait still. Yet God never forgets her but loves her to the end. God means to sanctify as well as redeem her, and the process (a slow one) has already begun. Its nature is described in Hebrews viii. 10—12, and Israel may therefore praise the Lord for His love and truth towards His people.

THE Monthly Part of the BANNER OF ISRAEL for May is now ready, containing portraits of H.R.H. the Duke of York, and H.R.H. the Princess May.

RANDOM SHAFTS.

IT is very strange, but numbers of believers in the Identity disapprove of any serious consolidation of our strength, and discourage what is called "agitation." This may help to explain why the Metropolitan British-Israel Association gets such meagre support, and no doubt it also accounts for the looseness of our organization throughout the land. The harmlessness of doves may distinguish us, but the wisdom of serpents is absent, or we would have learned the lesson taught by that great teacher, experience. Politicians find that thorough combination is essential to their existence. The temperance party would be nowhere without it, and every thriving enterprise owes its success largely to the same agency. But the friends I have referred to think this policy is too "worldly" for us, and are content with what can be done by private talks with our acquaintances. Let secular movements have their leagues and federations, but a divine revelation like the Identity has no need of them. So they say; but of course they are completely mistaken. Their plan is cheaper and lazier than a public propaganda, but it has no other virtues that I can see.

Religious institutions no less than secular ones have availed themselves, and are availing themselves, of organization. The Church did so from the first; and to-day the different sections of it are perfecting their machinery to the utmost, knowing well the enormous value of concentrated effort. If Churches, Missionary Societies, &c., appreciate the benefits of joint action, and enlist it, we should not be above using similar methods. Wherever there are three or four of the faith there ought to be an association; and where there is an association it should not be willing to live in solitary grandeur, but should sprout. The surrounding district is its parish. It ought to plant the standard in the neighbouring towns or villages, and endeavour to create a cluster of societies in union with itself, the latter in its turn being affiliated with the central office. This is the popular system, and our neglect of it has led to heavy leakage, not to speak of worse results.

I could mention a couple of towns within ten miles of each other which had vigorous associations for a while, but, in both instances, when the leading spirit was removed by death they fell to pieces, and an Anglo-Israelite lecture is now never heard in their borders. This would not have happened if they had been braced together, pledged to give mutual aid. Further, in two other places I know, the work of years was thrown away in consequence of the local Israelites failing to form associations when they had the chance. This sort of procedure is simply beating the air, and no doubt it is common all over the country. Certainly in the end the labour will not be vain. "Cast thy bread upon the waters, for thou shalt find it after many days." I admit that. But it does not release us from our duty, nor does it clear us of blame for the comparatively backward position of the cause in 1893, a quarter of a century since Edward Hine published his pamphlet.

I observe the Editor has been hauled along the coals, or something of that kind, for flaunting the Union Jack; and as a whilom (very whilom) admirer of the old gentleman at the front of affairs, I must say the complaint seems unreasonable. A journal dealing with national questions cannot avoid being mixed up at times with politics—politics, that is, in their broadest signification—and I should imagine that it would be difficult indeed for an opponent of Home Rule to write upon it at present without taking sides. Perhaps he would not be doing right if he tried. If Home Rule passed into law and the anticipated ills were to be realized, those who remained neutral against the promptings of their judgment would have a decidedly uneasy conscience, and probably even Home Rulers would have but little respect for them.

Suffer me to submit a Rowland for an Oliver. An Identity editor condemning Separation is a contingency which can at least be understood; but an Identity editor advocating Separation in its insanest shape might be reckoned a supreme impossibility. Yet the impossible has been achieved, and "Oxonian" is the hero. In the Messenger for March he quotes with approbation a letter which saw the light in a Home Rule organ, headed "Restore the Heptarchy," and only alters the plot therein propounded so as to make it more absurd than ever. I do not say anything about the hobby which "Oxonian" rides with John Gilpin-like grimness. His manœuvres may not be convincing, but at all events they are amusing. Evil, however, generally follows hard in the wake of error, and hence we have an Identity paper—a magazine with "The Church, the Throne, the Empire," conspicuously printed on its cover—proposing to dismember the kingdom and chuckling over the prospect of it. To cast dust in the eyes of his readers "Oxonian" adverts to "local government," heedless of the fact that "Ephraim," with other odds and ends of the realm, already enjoy local government, showing that his "local government" is of the Chicago type.

We have heard of the Newcastle programme, but the Messenger programme caps it. The idea of a local government for the "Northumbrian borderland" can be grasped, but a local government for "Scotland with Ulster" (a stretch of land and sea nearly as big as England) is rich, while a second "local" government for "Cornwall, contented Wales, and loyal Ireland," and a third for "The Associated Welsh Nonconformists" will be much too rich for the inward digestion of ordinary mortals. Considering the desperate necessities of the case we must make an allowance for the defects in these arrangements. I for one do so very heartily. But still it is a pity that the Identity should be fathered with such nonsense. The Colchester remonstrants fear that the Unionist leanings of the BANNER will offend Home Rulers, but touchy politicians are not the only people likely to be repelled by the Messenger's teaching. If the Free Distribution branch circulates that periodical let us hope the esteemed secretary will put a copy of Philo-Israel's anti-disruption leaflet between the pages. But then, unfortunately, there would be a lack of harmony, and the thought would occur that a trumpet giving forth so peculiar a sound must be cracked.

I am not aware how Dr. Hanan's scheme for the opening of Tara is faring, but for the guidance of those interested could he tell us definitely whether the excavations would be permitted? The late Colonel Gawler had a Tara Fund, on which occasion Lord Folkestone (now Earl of Radnor) said, "It would not do to collect some hundreds or more of pounds for a specific object, and then discover that the object was not practicable." Colonel Gawler visited Tara, and in his report he states that on inquiry both in Ireland and England, "I was assured that it would be utterly useless, not to say dangerous, to attempt an exploration of Tara, unless the project were taken up in the highest quarters, and the co-operation of the Roman Catholic hierarchy secured." It would be unpleasant if Dr. Hanan's undertaking were to go forward, and split on this rock at the last moment. Or is the slackness of the Irish Society of Antiquarians due to an apprehension of this local and religious obstruction? JOHN SHOOTINGHAM.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—The manifestation of Our Identity is becoming daily more evident. As an index merely of progress, I enclose a cutting from the last Cape Weekly Argus to hand. It is only an advertisement, but advertisements sometimes express a great deal. It is a notice of a sale of 750 "stands" at Salisbury, in Mashonaland. These are freehold. Upset price, £30; total upset, £22,500. Next we find that Salisbury has two suburbs, Greenwood and Forest Hill. Then we read of two townships, Victoria and Umtali. Then the odd numbers are reserved by the British South Africa Company. Then we find that Salisbury is the first and principal permanent township. Then we find that the output of gold is steadily increasing, also that Salisbury is in telegraphic communication with every quarter of the globe; that it has a weekly postal and passenger service to Cape Colony, and another to Beira. Then the Government have erected extensive public buildings, at considerable cost. The city (sic) is well watered. Then at Greenwood there are already several well-built villa residences. Forest Hill is beautifully wooded and picturesque, and is within five minutes' walk of the racecourse. Victoria is noted for its gold mining industry. Umtali is the terminus of the Beira Railway, and only 160 miles from Salisbury, which means one day's (24 hours) journey by stage coach, by weekly postal and passenger service. This sale is to take place in Salisbury itself. The Beira Railway will be opened in June.

What a wonderful agent God has raised up in Cecil Rhodes. There is no "Boom" in his operations. All is done steadily and quietly.

With kind regards, Yours truly,
W. BLORE.

Hill House, Sandown, Isle of Wight, May 4th, 1893.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—I have not seen the fact noticed anywhere, but it is a fact worth remembering, in relation to the two Houses of Israel and Judah, that of the twelve spies who went out to spy the land of Canaan, the two who brought the good report, and who entered into the land, were Caleb, the representative of Judah, and Joshua, the representative of Ephraim; and that Joshua, of Ephraim, the possessor of the birthright, became the captain and leader of Israel, as it was right he should be, in all its wars of conquest of the land.

Yours truly, A CONSTANT READER.

The Special Commissioner of the Christian World, writing of Dr. Wild, says:—"On Sunday evening I had to fight my way into the Congregational Church of which Dr. Wild is the minister. He hails from America, and is quite the sensation of the hour. There was no standing-room anywhere, and as I made to the door I met many coming away. However, I had made up my mind to hear the Doctor, and hear him I did. It seems that the subscribers have a door to themselves; I made for it, and luckily found a chair, which I wedged in under the platform. The Doctor prayed and then we had a sermon about Revelation, containing much that was very effective, if not about his text, at any rate about that mysterious part of Scripture from which the text was taken."

SIGNS OF PROGRESS IN ISRAEL'S DESTINY.

IT seems pretty evident that the settlement of Uganda as a British protectorate or British possession has taken place, as far as Sir Gerald Portal, the British Commissioner, is concerned. The following seems conclusive that decided action of some kind has taken place, the details of which will doubtless reach us before these lines will see the light in the BANNER. The Times, of June 2nd last, published these sentences, wired from Mombasa:—

THE SETTLEMENT OF UGANDA.

The Imperial British East African Company received yesterday the following telegram from their administrator at Mombasa:—

"Major Eric Smith, Captain W. H. Williams, arrived at Kikuyu from Uganda, on May 15, with portion of garrison not required by Sir Gerald Portal. Major Eric Smith cannot accept post of company's administrator, as Government has engaged him for transport service. Messrs. Grant, Wilson, and Reddie have entered Government service. All the company's stores, &c., in Uganda have been taken over by her Majesty's Commissioner."

Berlin, June 1.

The Vossiche Zeitung looks upon Sir Gerald Portal's action in Uganda as a matter for congratulation. The German possessions in East Africa can only derive benefit with all the surrounding regions from the substitution of order, peace, and security for life and property for the turbulence and bloodshed which have made Uganda notorious of late years.—Our Own Correspondent.

The Government of Mr. Gladstone, while professing the absence of authentic knowledge of these proceedings, declared in Parliament, through Sir E. Grey, that "the instructions given to Sir Gerald Portal by Lord Rosebery allowed him considerable latitude, but that any arrangement he might make would be provisional until the report had been considered. What Sir Gerald Portal did must be contingent on the condition of things which he found in Uganda." In spite of these cautious expressions it may be taken for granted that the country is committed to the protectorate and government of the wide tract of land, known as Uganda, and as that province is in fact the "Gate" of Central Africa, we shall soon see the commencement of the coast railway, and perhaps the establishment of the telegraphic communication from South Africa to Uganda, and in the end through Khartoum, and the Soudan, into Egypt and Alexandria, as promised us by Mr. Cecil Rhodes. God raised up Lord Rosebery at the time when Mr. Gladstone's Government came into office to carry out His purposes respecting Israel, and accordingly we see as the result, that Uganda, which at one time seemed so likely to pass from our grasp, is now finally, as we anticipated, a part of the Empire, to be followed, we may be sure, by larger and larger portions of the Dark Continent, which is still waiting for Christ's Gospel, and all the blessings of civilization and Christianity it always brings in its train. The Germans, we see, are ready to rejoice in Sir Gerald Portal's decided operations, as they are wise enough to know that a settled government on their frontier will benefit their own "sphere of influence" in East Africa and give it a double value. The British missionaries now are secured against desertion in Uganda, and the slave trade can effectually be controlled, since it is generally allowed that the slave-dealers will find it impossible to take their cargoes to the coast, with Uganda in British hands, and a railroad working between that point and Mombasa on the sea coast.

In the Times of the same date, June 2nd, as that which reported the above facts, we find the following remarkable message from New York, of June 1st, containing a truly Israelitish sentiment:—

New York, June 1.

Mr. Andrew Carnegie, in an article published in the North American Review, predicts the union of all parts of the English speaking world, and dwells upon the advantages that would result to the world at large from an Anglo-American combination, which would be unassailable by land or sea.

The writer says:—"This new nation would dominate the world, and banish from the earth its greatest stain—the murder of man by man. It would be the arbiter between nations, and enforce the peaceful settlement of all quarrels." —Reuter.

A correspondent, who noticed the above in St. James's Gazette, wonders whether Ephraim and Manasseh will ever form or combine to form "a new nation"? The new nation which is yet to come into existence is the old nation of the children of Israel, reinforced by the separated tribe of Manasseh. These, however, after all, are going to be "the English-spreading nations of the earth '—and in the result they will possess it from end to end. These things, as we state them, are regarded as incredible and crazy notions by the world; but when they appear as the anticipations of the men of science they are applauded to the echo, telegraphed from America to Europe, and to the British Colonies, also repeated by the Times and other London journals as probabilities. So, again, when we tell men that all Africa is going finally to be British, as the outcome of such a promise as Dan. vii. 27, men hold up their hands at the wicked teaching of the Anglo-Israelites. But when facts show that in spite of the opposition of Gladstonians the Nation insists on securing markets in the heart of Africa, and British missionaries are rapidly winning African millions to the cross of Christ, then the Press takes up the subject with acclamation, and rejoices that a new and splendid African province has been added to the Empire! To the Lord be all the praise for His mercies to His chosen people. His hand in these gifts to our race is never recognised by the secular writers of the day, as it ought to be in all these things. His purposes of love to the world are never acknowledged in connection with His blessings to His people Israel. But the two are tied together, and none but those who recognise our nation's Identity with Israel ever fully or properly acknowledge the fact. God's choice of Israel dated from the call of Abraham (Gen. xii. 1, 2), and to him the announcement was made that in him and his seed all the nations, families, and kindreds of the earth should be blessed. It is strange that when the promise, after the lapse of ages, is at last finding fulfilment in our own race, in the Christian dispensation, men with the Bible in their hands should be found ready to deny that there is any Israel existing at all, or that the promises to Abraham had any relation to the work of the evangelization of the heathen by the instrumentality of the Ten Tribes! May these mistakes soon be rectified!

ISRAEL KEEPETH SABBATH.

THERE was a great demonstration in Bristol on Thursday evening, April 20, last, when the friends of the Sabbath met in force in the largest hall in the City to protest against the opening of museums and public libraries in the place as advocated by a packed meeting some weeks previously. The object of the great gathering was to oppose the proposed movement, and to show it was not the desire of the citizens that the Sabbath should be so desecrated. At the meeting it appeared that the opponents of Sabbath observance had entered the hall in large numbers, and were bent on mischief. As a fact they kept up a storm of opposition right through the meeting, and produced what the reporters call "confusion" on several occasions, so rendering progress all but impossible. It was a stormy and noisy meeting, but in the end the amendment of the opponents, though moved and seconded, was rejected, and the chairman's resolution was adopted by a large majority.

As some of the arguments in favour of the observance of the Sabbath were new and forcible we reproduce some of the observations made by our friends, who quite unwittingly fought Israel's battles without knowing, or indeed caring the while, that they themselves were the people of the House of Israel, to whom the promise of the Sabbath was given exclusively by God Himself. The chairman, Alderman James Inskip, a noted solicitor, of the City, remarked as follows:—

As he entered the hall a pamphlet was thrust into his hands somewhat obstrusively. He had taken the opportunity to glance over it in the short time at his disposal. He was struck by the absence of one feature from that pamphlet, which was given for the purpose of instructing the people of Bristol. It contained, so far as he was able to discover, not the slightest reference to the Bible (cheers). And when he found people proposing to instruct their fellow-citizens ("Shame") upon a religious question without one appeal to that which most of them regarded as the Word of God, he naturally began to inquire what was the reason for the omission (cheers). The reason must be one or the other of two which, with all respect, he would venture to submit to them. It must be either that those who compiled that pamphlet were conscious of the weight of the Word of God against them (cheers and "No"); or, if that were not the reason, the pamphlet must have been compiled by those who did not care to accept the Word of God as their final court of appeal upon this question (cheers). In truth, the advocates of the opening of the museums and libraries on Sundays were divided into two camps of widely dissimilar principles, and actuated by very conflicting motives. There were in the one camp those who advocated what they termed free thought, and would throw overboard all religious restraints ("Shame," and "No, no"). And it was quite consistent, most consistent, for such of their neighbours to advocate any measure for weakening the authority of the divinely-appointed day of rest (hear, hear). He blamed them not for acting consistently with their opinions (cheers); but he would venture to quote a few words of very high authority, which taught us that "in vain is the net spread in the sight of any bird" (cheers). If they knew that those neighbours of theirs wished to accomplish such a purpose, they ought to be very careful lest they were drawn into their net (hear, hear). Secondly, there were in the other camp to which he had adverted, some of their decidedly religious neighbours (cheers) who seemed to believe that they would gain something at last by giving up everything step by step (laughter). To give up the day of rest ("Shame") was to give up a great deal (hear, hear); and if they would bear with him he would like to put the question from two points of view. Let him first of all say, whatever others around him might deem to be right, he recognised most fully and most unreservedly that this question must be settled, and ought to be settled, by the voice of those to whom the museum and libraries would belong—that was the people or ratepayers of Bristol (cheers.) As a member of the Corporation of Bristol, he put the responsibility upon his fellow-citizens, and he said that to them the appeal must be made, and eventually would be made. But then it was quite possible for multitudes sometimes to go wrong (cheers). Now they were bound to consider, those of them who believed in the Divine revelation comprised within the Bible, whether in making the change proposed they were acting according to the law there given. Now the Commandments which were given in that Book comprised one which dealt with the day of rest. Let him leave that out for one moment, because that was the one question upon which there might be a division that evening, and let him invite every intelligent person in the meeting to consider the matter in this way. There were nine other commandments, and he ventured to say there was no man or woman present who would dare to deny that the observance of every one of those commandments would immensely elevate the people, and prove most beneficial to them in every rank and station of life (cheers). Now when he found set in the midst of these commandments one other which bade him observe one day and keep it holy (cheers), he thought there were nine points to one in favour of that commandment being holy, and just, and pure, and good (cheers). But let him give them the other point of view. Look over all the countries of Christendom, and consider all the ages of the Christian era, and tell him whether prosperity, happiness, and progress, and peace, had not been largely connected with the observance of that which they rejoiced to term the Lord's-day (cheers and interruption). He was not disturbed by some one dissenting (hear, hear). Let him dissent (hear, hear). It might be that he would do as he (the chairman) had done in some matters—reconsider his position (cheers). But he would go (interruption) with them a step further (renewed interruption). If they would keep their seats he would go a step further, if they would allow him. Let them look around their own country, and their own city, and tell him, if they could, whether families or communities had been prosperous when they set at naught the day of rest. There were not three successful businesses in Bristol handed down to the third generation which were not started by men who zealously observed the Sabbath (cheers). Once more, someone might say, "We, too, are Sabbath keepers" (cheers). If so, then, he trusted that they would lend willing ears that evening to those around him who wished to help them in the better observance of that day. They were not there for the purpose of indulging in hard words against their neighbours (cheers), but they were there for the purpose of placing before their fellow citizens some of the reasons which induced them to cling to the day of rest as one of the most precious inheritances they had (cheers). And they were there for the purpose of pointing out that, however interesting museums might be, and however enchanting the books of our free libraries might be, they did not furnish material which the governing bodies, speaking for the ratepayers of this city, ought to place before their fellow-citizens as the paramount purpose of the day of rest (cheers). One word more, and he would resume his seat (hear, hear). The pamphlet which he had alluded to gave some reasons for the opening of museums, libraries, and art galleries, and his experience was that men put their chief reasons in the forefront. Now he looked at reason No. 1 in the pamphlet, and it read, "The museums of science, and collections of literature and art, are great educational and elevating institutions (cheers), and visitors obtain knowledge, instruction, and enlightenment—most useful, beneficial, and advantageous" (cheers). Now allow him to say that the Bristol Grammar School ("Oh!") was an excellent educational establishment; and the Clifton College was another (cheers, interruption, and a voice: "Not for working men"). But if he were to urge that before them as a reason for keeping that school and that college going seven days a week, they would think he was bereft of reason (cheers). A merchant's counting-house was a very instructive place, and a lawyer's office was still more instructive (laughter). But much as he valued the instruction there given, he would still think that the study of it on the day of rest would be a very unworthy use of the hours which God had given them (cheers).

The opposition came from a Baptist minister, the Rev. Moffat Logan, who proposed an amendment that the authorities be requested to allow the public libraries to be open as an experiment for at least a year during a part of the Sundays. He urged that "the Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath," and that if the command was to be literally obeyed, no work should be done by any man or woman, nor by sons or daughters, nor by men-servants, or maid-servants. The use of the libraries, he contended, could not be regarded as a desecration of the Sabbath.

The Rev. Dr. Nicolson, a Presbyterian minister, alluding to the argument that the Lord sanctioned the removal of the ox and the ass from the mud of the pit on the Sabbath as an act of mercy, said, "we had no right after removing the ox and the ass, to put others in the mud!" This elicited cheers from the majority, and "uproar" from the dissentients. In the end the amendment was lost by "a majority of 5 to 1," and the original resolution adopted by "an overwhelming majority," as the chairman decided.

So ended an important meeting, which left the matter as it found it. A noisy minority demanded liberty to desecrate the Sabbath even more than it is already profaned by the tram cars which run on part of the Sunday with the sanction of the City authorities. But as Col. Savile said, during the meeting, "two bad things did not make a good one," and it did not justify the town in doing a bad thing regarding museums and libraries, because it was doing a bad thing already by allowing trams to run during a portion of God's holy day. It was satisfactory to learn from the Rev. Henry Dening's speech, that Mr. Gladstone, the late Lord Beaconsfield, Mr. Henry Matthews the Roman Catholic Statesman, and Mr. J. Chamberlain had all written or spoken strongly on "the absolute necessity, from all points, of maintaining the Sabbath with its sanctity and its restful influence." There were also, it appeared, at least, five places in England which had adopted the opening of museums and libraries, and had, "after a trial, gone back to the old state of things and closed them." Mr. Dening concluded by these weighty words:—

He held that the desecration of the Lord's-day in any shape would lead to the demoralization of the people (cheers), and, on the other hand, that the observance of the Sabbath had a tendency to deepen the religious life, to strengthen the family and physical life, and resuscitate the mental (cheers).

There is, no doubt, a tendency among a section of our people to bring in, by some means or another, a continental Sabbath or Sunday into our country. But this cannot be, for the British are Israel, and Israel is by God's word and providence, tied to the observance of the Sabbath according of the Law of Sinai. We have by statute since the time of James I., placed the Sabbath laws upon the statute book of these realms, and there they remain to-day immovable, in spite of all efforts to set them at nought. By the law of the land Israel keepeth the Sabbath, and we are as a matter of fact (admitting some relaxations of which we must nationally repent), a Sabbath-keeping people, as every candid person must admit. We believe the efforts of those who wish to break down those laws will fail in the end, because of Our Identity with Israel, and because God has ordained that the Sabbath is "a sign between Him and the children of Israel for ever" (Exod. xxxi. 17, R.V.), and that by it He has arranged that His people shall be known among the nations to be His chosen ones. Our Identity testifies that we must be a Sabbath-keeping people, and that thus we shall know the Lord to be our Jehovah God, and we His special people (Ezek. xx. 12, 20, R.V.). The Sabbath, therefore, as we hold it, is far too important and serious a thing to be cast aside at the perverted will and desire of a few malcontents. God has got "the sign" in hand, and told us what He wills in the matter. Let Israel, therefore, praise the Lord for His faithfulness in repect to His own most holy day!

MR. FLINDERS PETRIE'S DISCOVERIES IN EGYPT.

By E. Reep.

Year by year the archæologist and the excavator are extorting from the soil of Egypt fresh evidence of the accuracy of Bible history. Inseparably associated with this labour of disinterring the past is the name of Mr. Flinders Petrie, who has recently given us in a volume, entitled "Ten Years Digging in Egypt," the result of his numerous discoveries in the land of the Pharaohs.

Among perhaps the most interesting of these is the discovery, at a place now called Defneh, of pavement or brickwork mentioned by Jeremiah (chap. xliii.) as being situated at the entry of Pharaoh's house in Tahpanhes. Mr. Flinders Petrie's own account of his visit to Defneh (Daphnæ), where he had arranged to explore, says that he there found a wide flat plain with a mound of mud-brick building in the midst of it. On asking the name of it, he was told that it was Kasr Bint el Yehudi, the palace of the Jew's daughter. This piece of information at once brought Tahpanhes to his mind, and without further ado he opened his Bible and read how Jeremiah came with Johanan, the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the armies and a numerous company of men, women, and children, and the kings' daughters, down to Tahpanhes, and dwelt there. Subsequently a remarkable connection with the account given by Jeremiah was found on clearing around the mud-brick ruins. In the side of a block of buildings projecting from the fort, and in front of it, on the opposite side of its roadway, similarly projecting from the fort, was a large platform or pavement of brickwork suitable for outdoor business, such as loading goods, pitching tents, &c. Jer. xliii. 9 (R.V.) gives an exact description of this platform, and it would be, says Mr. Flinders Petrie, the most likely place for Nebuchadnezzar to pitch his royal tent, as stated by the prophet. Even the arrangements of Pharaoh's house were found to correspond to the Bible narrative, the name of which to this day tells of the sojourn of the exiled heiresses of Judah.

Tahpanhes, it would seem, was a favourite refuge for the Jews during the Assyrian incursions into Palestine. Here they came into contact with a mixed foreign population, the Greek element preponderating.

Some of the circumstances under which Greek communities settled themselves in Egypt are described by Herodotus. One of the events that brought a colony of Ionians to Tahpanhes was the expulsion of Psammitichus I. to the Egyptian marshes for having offered a libation in his brass helmet in the Temple of Vulcan. The whole story is too long to be related here; it is enough to say that there came to the assistance of the banished Psammitichus, and that according to the prediction of the oracle of Latona, a host of "brazen men from the sea," mostly composed of Ionians and Carians. These, says Herodotus (II. 152) were clad in brass, and were bent on a privateering expedition.

Eventually, by the aid of the Greeks, Psammitichus (about 670 B.C.) subdued all Egypt, and by way of reward to the foreign mercenaries, allotted to them certain lands with the Nile flowing between. Of such distinction were these Greek colonists that, by order of Psammitichus, Egyptian children were placed under their care to learn the Greek language. How flourishing was this foreign colony may be judged by the construction of docks for their ships and the building of towns and villages, the ruins only of which remained in the time of Herodotus.

That Herodotus speaks what he knows is now proved by the discovery made by Mr. Petrie of large quantities of Greek pottery of the archaic period. The question now comes, Who were these "brazen men of the sea"? Mr. Flinders Petrie would tell us, if asked about it, that they were certainly not in any way related to the Jews who came to Tahpanhes with Jeremiah and his two royal charges. But then Mr. Petrie is an opponent to the Identity of the British with dispersed Northern Israel, and for that reason would have no patience to discuss the probability of the Ionians, &c., having affinity with the Jews and the Jews with the British. In his opinion (one marvels how he came to form it) the condition of the House of Israel before returning to Palestine is to be one of shame and bondage. They will, he admits, be a multitude of nations, ruling the earth; but wherever a date is placed to this promise, it is *when they shall be in their own land. Of course, it is easy to see what has confused Mr. Petrie's usually clear judgment. He has fallen into that common pitfall of Bible students, the confounding of what concerns the House of Judah with that which has entire reference to the House of Israel. All the sympathy we can extend to him is to say that we are sorry for his ignorance, and at the same time we should like to know how he would dispose of that significant and forcible little leaflet by the Editor of the Banner of Israel, to speak of nothing more important by its author, entitled the "Rulers Over Many Nations" (No. 5), in which he has demonstrated, as conclusively as a limited space would allow, the absolute fact that Britain is the mother of that very fulness of nations whose development Mr. Petrie believes has yet in the future to come to the birth. If a ruling race is yet to appear, what is to become of the British race now ruling, as Philo-Israel points out, over 300 millions of heathen and Mohammedan subjects, and over nearly fifty millions of Christians? Mr. Petrie may be able to furnish an answer to this query, but we venture to doubt that it would be sufficiently satisfactory. In short, we have no option but to discern in the "brazen men of the sea," now supreme under the British flag on nearly all seas, the one people destined to multiply into nations, and into a ruling multitude in the midst of the earth (Gen. xlviii.).

It is, however, not very obvious how, and in what manner, the Egyptian Ionic men of brass are to be connected with the British of to-day. To make this plain, it is necessary to collate information from various sources. Herodotus and Strabo tell us the Ionians were of the same descent as the Athenians, who with other Greeks were often hard pressed for money, and had therefore to what Xenophon calls fawn upon the barbarians as hired mercenaries.

From a diversity of causes they were, like the Galatæ or Gauls, in a perpetual state of emigration, following, as it were, fixed laws of motion, at times diverging from a rallying point, at others converging towards it, to and fro, fulfilling to the letter the rôle of Israel as wanderers among the nations (Hos. ix. 17). With this alternating backwards and forwards, as was to be expected, shoals of colonists migrated first under one name, then under another. Thus we have a people of one race and origin dispersed as Ionians, Carians,† Cimbri, Sacæ, Danaans, Lacedæmonians, Achæans, Milesians, &c. Racial affinity, as history shows, formed no bar to one tribe vexing another, and so we read of the Ionians being troubled by an invasion of the Cimbri into their country, some of whom were flourishing in Jutland,* others, according to the Welsh Triads, in Britain, and again, according to Strabo, in Black Sea regions, whence the name of Cimmerian Bosphorus. Indeed, under the generic name of Cimmerii we find our forefathers here, there, and everywhere.

*The italics are, so far as the present writer remembers, Mr. Petrie's own.

†Carian was a name sometimes applied to Phœnician colonists.

Of the Ionians under the name of Achæans we have the description of a most noble people who, taking up their abode in the country of the Danaans, gave it the name of Achæan Argos. Why they should have been desirous to lose the name of Ionians we are not told. Herodotus, however, tells us that they were ashamed of it. We may, therefore, conclude that, like the Sacæ, they had their own particular reasons for changing and acquiring new ones. Their earliest migration into Greece has been associated with the expulsion of the Tus or Jews from Egypt, with whom they were so far allied as to apply the number twelve, the number of the tribes of Israel, to their gods or heroes, and to their divisions and subdivisions of land, and communities settled thereon. Their famous underworld was no other than the Hebrew Sheol, partly confused in later times with the Egyptian Hades; their schools of poets have been thought, and no doubt were, a facsimile of the schools of the Hebrew prophets, while their metaphoric language was as common in Palestine as in Hellas.

Another important centre of Ionian or Achæan influence was Miletus, hence the Ionians bearing the further title of Milesians. It was under this appellation that they appeared in Ireland, bringing with them, it is said, the Mosaic law. In the Irish Book of Invasions, there is a prayer invoking a safe landing for them. O'Curry, in his "Manners and Customs of the Ancient Irish," thus translates the Druidic petition, which prays: That they may reach the land of Erinn in safety. That they may be distributed upon her plains, her mountains, her valleys; upon her forests; upon her rivers; upon her lakes and great waters, and upon her spring abounding hills.

Already in occupation of the island, was a colony of Tuatha de Danaan, who had emigrated from some islands of Greece, bringing with them what is known as Jacob's stone or stone of destiny, now safeguarded under the coronation chair at Westminster Abbey. Though of kindred blood and race they are alleged to have been opposed to the coming of the new arrivals, but led by a great judge and poet, the Milesians were invincible, and not to be hindered from establishing themselves rulers of the whole country under the sovereignty of two brothers named Eber and Eremon.

In a poem the virtues of the noble race of Eber are dwelt upon, and in nothing are we given reason to suppose that this colony of Ionians or Milesians direct from Egypt, presumably from Tahpanhes, were less valiant and worthy than the poets depict them. Their relationship to the Jews cannot be doubted, for they possessed a system of law so similar to the Hebrew that O'Curry could not but notice the resemblance. Nor can it be doubted that in very early days Israelites of Northern Palestine, of the House of Israel, made it their business to form colonies in Egypt and Greece. In apostolic times, when God visited the Gentiles to take out of them a people for His name (Acts xv. 14), the people mentioned in Isa. xlix. 3, Achaia and every region of Hellas formed the scene of apostolic labour as well as in the farthest northern districts of the Euxine or Black Sea, where Ionians or Achæans and Lacedæmonians together founded an Achaia near the Caucasus, in the vicinity of the Cimbri, whose supremacy in this region is manifest in the existence of the Cimmerian Bosphorus. It is in Egypt that tradition fixes the labours of St. Mark as it does Simon's in the twelve provinces of Persia, wherein were scattered multitudes of Israelites of the dispersed House of Israel. The influence of these Persian Israelites was unbounded, extending itself far and wide in the Magian or Druidic priesthood, which taught precepts we even now are not ashamed of: "To act bravely in war, that souls are immortal, and that there is another life after death."

To many of us it has not been easy to see tangible proof of the arrival of an Israelite colony in Ireland from Egypt conducted by the Prophet Jeremiah. Mr. Petrie's discovery of Tahpanhes and of the traces there of an Ionian or Milesian settlement, however, sets the matter at rest. All his facts go to prove that the Irish annals are after all correct in stating that from Egypt came the Milesians, led by a great judge and poet, who was conversant with the Mosaic law. The further circumstance that shows that the Milesians were accompanied by a party of distinguished women has clearly to do with Jeremiah's charge of King Zedekiah's fugitive daughters. If Scota be one of them, then Scotland may claim the honour of having been named after a princess of Judah, who was, as the Bible tells us, driven to sojourn for a time at Tahpanhes, in the house of an Egyptian Pharaoh, whereby she conferred upon it the title, which has lasted to this day, of the palace of the Jews daughter.*

THE KINGDOM OF GOD: ITS DUAL ASPECT.

AT a meeting of the Clerical and Lay Association (Bristol Branch), held in Clifton on May 12th, 1893, the subject above named was discussed. It was introduced by Dr. Arthur B. Prowse, a believer in "Our Identity with lost Israel." The paper opening it pretty clearly revealed the fact, and is annexed:—

"Every portion of the blessed Word of God is significant, and contains lessons for us all, if we do not refuse to maintain a receptive mind, but are willing to be ever learning. Thus, by the Holy Spirit's help, we shall gain a fuller and more perfect knowledge of His will from the inspired records, which have been 'written for our learning' (Rom. xv. 4); and of which we are told that all 'is profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness' (2 Tim. iii. 16).

"Every talent we have is given us to be used in a proper manner: therefore to blindly follow (without using our reasoning faculties) the teaching of any human being, or of any body of men, in regard to the interpretation of any portion of the Word of God is, surely, comparable to the action of that servant who made no use of the talent which his lord had lent him. Each one is bound to 'search the Scriptures,' with prayer for the guidance of the Holy Spirit, that he may be 'ready always to give answer to every man that asketh him a reason concerning the hope that is in him' (1 Pet. iii. 15).

* The Greek traveller, Pytheas, is said to have visited the peninsula and to have given it the name of the Cimbric Chersonesus. The name applied to the surrounding ocean by the Cimbri themselves was literally the Dead Sea. See Elton's "Origin of English History."

* A note is worth making of a discovery made by Prof. Mahaffy in deciphering the Petrie papyri. In Egypt, in what is called the Fayyum, were settled Greek colonists, who appear to have indulged in Semitic and Hebrew names for their towns and villages, etc., one of which they called Samaria. Prof. Sayce is said to be endeavouring to discover further light on this subject.

"Some years ago I was led to the conclusion that the references in the Bible to the kingdom of God are not invariably applicable only to that spiritual condition, well pleasing to our heavenly Father, which is defined in Rom. xiv. 17, 'For the kingdom of God is not eating and drinking, but righteousness, and peace, and joy, in the Holy Ghost.' This is the application of the term to which our attention is usually directed by our accredited teachers. It is indeed their duty; but, while doing this, ought not another aspect of the kingdom of God, which the Word seems to speak of in no uncertain terms, to be also brought to our notice, and commented on? Take, for example, Luke i. 32, 33. 'And the Lord God shall give unto Him the throne of his father David: and He shall reign over the House of Jacob for ever; and of His kingdom there shall be no end.' Also Rev. xi. 14, 'The kingdom of the world is become the kingdom of our Lord and of His Christ.' And, once again, John iii. 5, 'Except a man be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.' In this last verse not only is the new birth by the power of the Holy Spirit plainly set forth, but there seems to be also indicated some kind of natural limitation to the membership of the Kingdom, which is not required in the case of the true, invisible Church of God; for this is gathered out from every nation under heaven.

"Let us now consider the first passage quoted above—Luke i. 32, 33. The 'throne of David' was over the whole nation of Israel. This is further shown in the next phrase, 'the house of Jacob,' an inclusive term, covering, of course, both the families chosen by the Lord, which Jeremiah mentions in chap. xxxiii. 24—26, or, as they are called in Ezek. xxxvii. 15—28, the 'two nations,' whose yet future union is there foretold.

"We find that the division of the Hebrew nation into two parts is foreshadowed in the declaration in Psa. cxiv. 1, 2, 'When Israel went forth out of Egypt, the house of Jacob from a people of strange language, Judah became His sanctuary, Israel His dominion' Judah, the sanctuary whence 'the Lion of the tribe of Judah' was to come: Israel, the dominion—i.e., the kingdom, of Jehovah.

"For 400 after the Exodus (1540 to 1140 B.C.) God's chosen people had no earthly king. Then they demanded one; and it is recorded (1 Sam. viii. 7) that 'the Lord said unto Samuel, Hearken unto the voice of the people in all that they say unto thee: for they have not rejected thee, but they have rejected Me, that I should not be King over them.' Jehovah did not reject His people. Samuel is directed to tell them, 'The Lord will not forsake His people, for His great name's sake: because it hath pleased the Lord to make you a people unto Himself'; and an earthly king is given them. When he failed in obedience, Jehovah appointed David, 'a man after His own heart,' to be 'prince over His people,' and subsequently confirmed the gift of regal power, as Jehovah's ruling representatives, to David's house in perpetuity.

"Consequently we read in 1 Chron. xxix. 23, 'Then Solomon sat on the throne of the Lord as king instead of David his father.' (Refer also to 1 Chron. xxviii. 5.) These passages prove that at this date (circ. 1060 B.C.), as at the Exodus, B.C. 1540, Israel was Jehovah's dominion, or kingdom.

"We must not, therefore, lose sight of the fact that the kingdom of God had a material as well as a spiritual aspect. It was co-extensive with a nation, including both good and bad individuals. Our Lord Himself seems to me distinctly to teach this in Matt. xiii. 41, the explanation of the parable of the wheat and the tares, for we there read, 'The Son of man shall send forth His angels, and they shall gather out of His kingdom all things that cause stumbling, and them that do iniquity.' The tares, as well as the wheat, are here classed as members of the kingdom. Again, in verses 47—52 of the same chapter, our Lord likens the kingdom of heaven to a net cast into the sea, which, when drawn to the shore, was found to contain both good and bad fish, the latter being finally cast away. Is it not quite plain that in both these cases the continued existence of the material, or earthly, kingdom is implied?

"The declaration, 'My kingdom is not of this world,' is not, I think, incompatible with this view, for when Christ said of His disciples, 'They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world,' it is evident that He was not denying His own presence in the flesh, nor His disciples' material existence in the world; but that He meant that their hearts had been changed, and their natures assimilated to the heavenly mould. And so I conclude that when our Lord said, 'My kingdom is not of this world,' He intended to teach us that it is opposed in its nature to the kingdom of the prince of this world, and did not mean that it had no material existence on earth. Hence, I believe that when Christ said to the Pharisees, 'Lo, the kingdom of God is within you' (or, as it is in the margin of the A.V., 'among you,' and in the R.V., 'in the midst of you'), He referred to the presence amongst the Jews of Himself, the King of Israel, and His small band of true servants—probably all Benjamites, or Galileans—which formed the nucleus of His kingdom, though the mass of the people, led by their blind guides, discerned it not. His bitter enemies could in no sense be said to have the spiritual characteristics of the kingdom of God within their hearts.

"Agreeing with this view, I think, is the teaching of the parable of the wicked husbandmen, 'The kingdom of God shall be taken from you' (i.e., the Jews), 'and shall be given to a nation (Greek, Ethnei) bringing forth the fruits thereof.' They could not individually have had the spiritual kingdom in their hearts unless they were true followers of Christ: and, as such, they could never have been deprived of it.

"Going back now to the time of Solomon's death, 980 B.C., we read in 1 Kings xii. 20 that when the division of the nation was precipitated by Rehoboam's action, 'There was none that followed the House of David but the tribe of Judah only.' In the next verse, however, it is recorded that 'When Rehoboam was come to Jerusalem he assembled all the House of Judah, and the tribe of Benjamin.' This was in fulfilment of God's will mentioned in the previous chapter (1 Kings xi. 13), 'I will not rend away all the kingdom; but I will give one tribe to thy son'; and again, in verses 35 and 36, 'I will take the kingdom out of his son's hand, and will give it unto thee, even Ten Tribes. And unto his son will I give one Tribe, that David My servant may have a lamp always before Me in Jerusalem, the city which I have chosen Me to put My name there.' The kingdom here mentioned includes only eleven tribes; Judah apparently being not included in the term 'the kingdom;' thus agreeing exactly with Psa. cxiv. 2, quoted just now. Judah, the sanctuary of Jehovah, was now allied with Benjamin, the only tribal representative of 'the kingdom' included in the 'House of Judah.'

"When Ephraim-Israel, the Ten-tribed House, was made 'Lo-ammi' (i.e., 'not God's people), it, of course, ceased to be His kingdom. This was at the time of the Assyrian captivity. But Benjamin, 'the beloved of the Lord' (Deut. xxxiii. 12), remained with Judah, and was now the only portion of 'the kingdom' in covenant relationship with Jehovah. The kingdom, represented by Benjamin, remained for about 780 years more with the 'House of Judah,' or the Jews; but at length the time arrived for the execution of the decree, 'The kingdom of God shall be taken from you.' This was, I believe, A.D. 65 (see Josephus' 'Wars of the Jews,' book ii., chap. xix.), when, as we learn from Josephus and Epiphanius, the Christians (Benjamites and Galileans mainly) left Jerusalem and its neighbourhood in obedience to the prophecy of Jer. vi. 1, and the warnings of our Lord; the opportunity of escape from the coming desolation of Jerusalem and the nation being afforded them by the (humanly-speaking) unaccountable retreat of the Roman general Cestius from the neighbourhood of the city, which he had commenced to invest.

"In agreement with this, we find that the Jews of to-day belong to the tribe of Judah almost exclusively, with, of course, some Levites, for Levi was distributed throughout the whole of the other tribes in the promised land. Benjamin is not now with Judah.

"My conclusion, therefore, is that now, as formerly, the 'kingdom of God' is not only a spiritual rule within the hearts of true Christians, but is also specially represented, on the material side, by a nation. And, since our God is a covenant-keeping God, one who 'changes not' (Mal. iii. 6), that nation is of Israelite descent. Moreover, it must be Israel of the eleven tribes, because the kingdom was 'taken from' the Jews.

"The following will, therefore, be a summary of the history of Jehovah's kingdom in relation to the Hebrews, His 'chosen people':—

"(1) From the Exodus to Solomon's death the 'kingdom of God' was with the nation as a whole. B.C. 1540 to 980 = 560 years.

"(2) From Solomon's death to the Assyrian captivity it was divided between the two Houses, Benjamin being its representative with Judah. B.C. 980 to 721 = 259 years.

"(3) From the Assyrian captivity until A.D. 65 it was with the Jews only. B.C. 721 to A.D. 65 = 786 years.

"(4) But when the Christians (who were largely Benjamites) escaped from Jerusalem in A.D. 65, the kingdom of God was taken away from the Jews, and has since been with the long-lost House of Israel, the 'fruitful nation' of Matt. xxi. 43. A.D. 65 to 1893 = 1828 years.

"When the final re-union of Israel and Judah has been accomplished, the kingdom will once more be with the whole of the chosen Hebrew people, who throughout the ages have been God's 'witnesses' (Isa. xliii. 10—12), and who during the millennial reign of Christ upon the earth will all 'know the Lord' (Jer. xxxi. 34, and Heb. viii. 11)."

The meeting, which was not largely attended, was afterwards addressed by three gentlemen, two being clergymen, both opposed to our views, and the third Mr. E. W. Bird (Philo-Israel). The first clergyman, suspecting the tendency of Dr. Prowse's views, asked him if he meant that "the British people were the Lost Tribes?" Finding that to be the case, the rev. gentleman announced his unqualified dissent from that view, and then proceeded to explain what he believed to be "the kingdom of God" as described in the Scriptures. It was, he said, the kingdom which the Lord established in the hearts of His believing people, without reference to race, clime, or colour. All who believe are His subjects, and He becomes their King, Prince, and Saviour. The kingdom which once existed over Israel, or the Jews, has passed completely away, and is superseded by a kingdom which embraces all nations, and is one founded on faith, and exists in the hearts of men.

The second clergyman, being an opponent for some years past, concurred with the last speaker, and, addressing himself to the subject of "the British nation and lost Israel," thought there was a strong point against that view, which he had not seen discussed or refuted. It was this: that in St. Paul's Epistle to the Hebrews, which was addressed to Hebrews converted to Christ, there was no reference at all to a coming earthly kingdom of Christ to be established on the earth. This, if such a kingdom is to appear, would surely be mentioned by St. Paul, and its absence is a proof that none such was to be, or is, forthcoming. He referred to Heb. xii. 26—29 as a proof in point. In that chapter, from verses 18, et seq., he saw the nation of the Israelites described, and their experience at Sinai, but from verses 26 onwards, as a contrast, the (spiritual) kingdom yet to be established in the hearts of men for ever, was promised, showing the two are not one, but differing the one from the other. He looked not for a literal kingdom to come, as Dr. Prowse described, but for a spiritual one, which was to be everlasting, "and cannot be moved."

Mr. E. W. Bird replied to the two last speakers. He concurred, he said, with Dr. Prowse in his opening paper, though he could hardly see there was any dual aspect to "the kingdom of God" of the Old and New Testaments. The children of Israel were first, from the Exodus till Samuel's time, for nearly 400 years, under a theocracy, as God Himself declared in 1 Sam. viii. 7 and xii. 12. We never read that God resigned His right to the throne over Israel. On the contrary, in David's and Solomon's time we find He claimed both the throne and the kingdom, both connected with Israel, "for ever" (see 1 Chron. xxviii. 5, and xxix. 23). The same truth is recognised in Luke i. 32, 33. God never resigned the throne of Israel, nor His sovereignty over the kingdom of Israel. In our Lord's time that kingdom was present among the Pharisees. The Lord Jesus, the King, was there. The disciples of Galilee, or Benjamin, were mingled with them, or among them (Luke xvii. 20, 21). The kingdom of God so hidden and mingled among the Jews was to be removed, as our Lord prophesied in Matt. xxi. 43, and accordingly it appeared in A.D. 61 in a material form in the British Isles, which received the Gospel nationally the first of all the nations. Our Lord declared the kingdom of God should be taken from the Jews, and given ethnei "to a nation"—not to a Church or spiritual body, but to a political one, a nation. In the whole range of New Testament Scripture the word ethnos was never applied to any but a political, organised nation of this world; never to a spiritual entity such as the souls of believers. (This was denied by one of the opposing clergymen, and Mr. Bird asked him to point to the passage where ethnos meant anything but a material world-born "nation." There was no reply to this.)

Our Lord preached "the Gospel of the kingdom" (Matt. iv. 23; Mark i. 14). It is remarkable, said Mr. Bird, that the modern pulpit has forgotten to follow our Lord's example, and never preaches the approaching earthly kingdom of Christ, though the Lord's Prayer enjoins it, and the Church of England largely uses that prayer. In regard to Heb. xii. 26—28, Mr. Bird thought St. Paul was alluding to the everlasting, immovable kingdom promised to Israel in Dan. vii. 27, which was to grow, like the Stone Kingdom of Dan. ii. 34, 35, and 45, without man's observation or action. The shaking of the nations of Heb. xii. 27 evidently is the same as that predicted in Haggai ii. 6, as the condition precedent of the restoration of "the desirable things of the nations," or "the nation of God's choice," as the Rev. Mr. Hamilton would read that text. The passage in Rom. xiv. 17, Mr. Bird said he understood to describe the qualification or character of the coming kingdom of God and its subjects. They shall rejoice in the righteousness of Christ, also in the peace of the Gospel, and shall joy in the Holy Ghost.

Finally, Mr. Bird adverted to the facts of the present day, and submitted that they pointed to the discovery of Israel and the formation of the kingdom of God and of His Christ preparatory to the advent of the Messiah, who would reveal the fact to the world that Israel was the Lord's executive for the blessing of the inhabitants of the earth, and that they were the foremost nation thereof.

THE NATIONAL PRAYER-BOOK'S TESTIMONY TO OUR ISRAELITISH DESCENT.

Again, we say in the Jubilate, "Be ye sure that the Lord He is God, and we are His people"; and, "O Lord, save Thy people, and bless Thine inheritance." What people, we may ask, save Israel, did Jehovah "form for Himself"? and who but Jacob is the rod of His inheritance.

The glorious "Te Deum," with its joyful pæon to the Trinity for the privileges inherited by Israel through Christ their Redeemer, is believed to have been compiled by the great Bishop of Carthage, St. Cyprian, who, between the years A.D. 248—258, was a staunch opposer of the increasing claim of Rome to supremacy in the Church. The Eastern Church adopted it as its morning hymn.

The "Magnificat," or thanksgiving song of the Virgin Mary, has many resemblances to the song of Hannah on the birth of Samuel, that great prophet in Israel (1 Sam. ii. 1—10). Mary's song concludes with the prophetic declaration, "He remembering His mercy hath holpen His servant Israel, as He promised to our forefathers, Abraham, and his seed, for ever."

Again, the cantate, Psalm xcviii.—David's prophetic Psalm of the Christian era. Even Bishop Barry admits that it is a magnificent summons, first, to the House of Israel when blessed by God in the sight of the heathen, and then to the other nations themselves, to rejoice before the Lord, the Conqueror of His enemies, and the Righteous Judge of the whole earth.

Next we have the "Nunc Dimittis," the sweetest and most solemn of all the Canticles, breathing the spirit of the evening calm, the thanksgiving of the aged saint Simeon, ready to depart in peace, having seen the "Glory of Israel," and the "Light of the Gentiles."

In the Deus Misereatur, "God be merciful unto us and bless us," King David also saw, through the help of the Holy Spirit, the glorious future for Israel when redeemed by Christ, and their blessings reflected on the whole world.

What right have we—descended as we are told from Japheth and not from Shem—to apply to ourselves in the National Liturgy King David's words in Psalm xliv.: "O God, we have heard with our ears, and our fathers have declared unto us the noble works that Thou didst in their days, and in the old time before them"?

Have you noticed, too, the service of thanksgiving used each anniversary day of the accession of Her Majesty? In the prayer then used for her, as supreme governor of the National Church, occurs the remarkable petition, "And that these blessings may be continued to after-ages, let there never be one wanting in her house to succeed her in the government of this United Kingdom, that our posterity may see her children's children and peace upon Israel; so we that are Thy people and sheep of Thy pasture shall give Thee thanks for ever, and will always be shewing forth Thy praise from generation to generation." In connection with this we should read Psa. lxxxix. 19—37.

The word "Easter" is generally supposed to be derived from "Eostre," the Anglo-Saxon goddess, identical with Ashtaroth, the wife of Baal, whose worship led to the captivity of the idolatrous Israelites. At Easter we commemorate our forefathers' deliverance from Egypt through the blood of the Paschal Lamb; and the inspired history of our nation is then read by authority in all our Churches. We are reminded in the proper lessons for that day, that the resurrection of the whole House of Israel, detailed in Ezekiel's prophetic vision, is the direct result achieved by our risen Lord.

In "Whitsuntide," also an Anglo-Saxon word, we have our old Pentecost. "Seven weeks shalt thou number unto thee" is our divinely-prescribed custom. The Church's services for this feast are full of passages from Israel's history, and the literal fulfilment in Christ of pledges which God made to Israel. To take only one of the lessons (Ezek. xxxvi. 25—38), we have there the promise of a cleansing from iniquity, and the gift of a new heart and a new spirit to Israel.

The Rev. Robert Douglas is of opinion that our Christmas Festival is analogous in its decorative symbolism to the Feast of Tabernacles, varied as to time by the exigencies of our migrations, or by that policy for fanciful changes which Jeroboam introduced. The analogy, he says, is admitted by the best Christian expositors, some of whom believe that as this feast, unlike the two previous, has no exact counterpart in New Testament historical Christianity, it will have that counterpart in the Second Advent of Christ—i.e., when all Israel's wanderings shall cease, and we shall have taken possession of the land which God gave unto our forefathers.

The Collects, Epistles, and Gospels, as read in the light of Scripture, abound in tacit admissions or declarations of our Israelitish origin. Time, however, will not permit of an examination of them to-night. The central idea or sentiment of them all is that found in the third collect for Good Friday—that our own blessed Lord would "fetch all men home to His flock, that they may be saved among the remnant of the true Israelites," who are here expressly distinguished from the Jews, and identified with ourselves. (see in connection with this collect the most beautiful prophecy of Ezek. xxxvii. 19—28).

Once more, the Commination Service, ordered to be read in the National Church on the great fast of our Christian Israel year, is a plain confession of our origin. It carries out that imposing ceremony divinely prescribed in Deut. xxvii., to which direct reference is made. We believe that by the secret teaching of the Holy Spirit it is here openly, and without any qualification, declared that we are Israelites. The words are, "Make you new hearts, and a new spirit, for why will ye die, O House of Israel; turn ye then, and ye shall live." The last prayer in this service was inserted in 1549, when the nation as such abandoned bowing to images —national idolatry. In it we use the very words of repenting Ephraim-Israel, according to Jer. xxxi. 18, "Turn Thou us, and we shall be turned"; and "let not Thine heritage be brought to confusion." At the close of it the priest speaks in the language Aaron was commanded to use, "The Lord bless us, and keep us: the Lord lift up the light of His countenance upon us, and give us peace." This Commination Service, so distasteful to the proud heart of the flesh, arose from no desire, as individuals, to curse our neighbours, as is sometimes profanely said, but that by acknowledging the justice of the curse entailed upon our race and nation by the Sinaitic law, we might through Him who was wounded for our offences, and smitten for our wickedness at length "take possession of His everlasting kingdom, unto which He vouchsafes to bring us in His infinite mercy." Please note particularly that we expressly fulfil by this service the very prophecy which Joel assigns to Israel "in the latter days," as the Divine antecedent to her national restoration to the land, and to her glory. The Hebrew child was circumcised on the eighth day, and the early British Church enjoined baptism within seven days of the birth; this is the more remarkable because in the Roman Church baptism was only administered twice a year, except in cases of danger.

The Israelite boy became at 12 a "son of the law," and thenceforth went to the prescribed feasts. About the same age the rite of Church confirmation was established as an introduction to attendances at the Lord's Supper. So in the marriage service occurs the prophetic Psalm (cxxviii.), in which we read, "The Lord from out of Zion shall so bless thee that thou shalt see thy children's children, and peace upon Israel."

Did sickness becloud the home, and were Israel's true shepherds to strengthen, heal, and bind up the afflicted? So, according to the instructions given by St. James to Christian Israel, we have in the National Church an "Order for the Visitation of the Sick." And did death at last dissolve the earthly tabernacle, and the Israelite "sleep with his fathers" in their grand and sure hope of resurrection, so we still celebrating Jehovah in the words of Moses' Psalm as our dwelling-place in all generations, "Declare our assurance that our Redeemer liveth, and will stand upon the earth; yea, that in our flesh we shall see God."

And thus, from the cradle to the grave, our whole lives in the National Church are identified with the children of Abraham—that is, with a Semitic race, and not a Japhetic.

THE last phase of Israel's national life, which God directed Balaam to foretell to Balak and to us, related to times yet future, and speaks of events which are to come to pass after our present date, A.D. 1893. This prophecy was volunteered by Balaam. It was not invited by his angry, royal host. It related to "the latter days" (ver. 14), the Christian dispensation (Heb. i. 1), which is a chronological hint that the four prophecies had reference to four distinct eras, separate in time. It was the story of what "this people" Israel were to do to Balak's subjects at the end of the dispensation. Both were, therefore, to survive till "the latter days"—nay, to the dregs of the "last days."

What does the prophet see and describe again in vision and in a trance? He sees "the Day Star" arise, "the Sun of Righteousness with healing in His wings," for Israel (2 Peter i. 19; Mal. iv. 2). He sees the Hebrew King, Jesus, rising out of Israel, and he marks how the mighty Son of God" smites through the corners of Moab," "and breaks down all the sons of tumult"—i.e., of Sheth. He declares that Turkish Edom shall be a possession," and "Seir," or "Shar," or "the Gate" (Constantinople), shall also be a possession, for Edom's, or the Turk's enemies;—while Israel, the victors, shall do "valiantly." They will win the prize of power, the "lofty Gateway" of their enemies, according to the promise to Abraham in Gen. xxii. 17. "Out of Jacob," says the prophet, "shall one have dominion and shall destroy the remnant from the city" (ver. 19, R.V.). The Rev. James McIntosh once paraphrased this passage (vol. i., p. 415, BANNER) thus:—

"This is the Gate" (speaking of Constantinople) "which Israel is to possess as the Gate of his enemies, the Gate of Edom (Turkey); the Gate of Amalek (Russia)." Quoting Numbers xxiv. 18, he added, "Seir is from the same root as Shâr, 'a Gate;' so that putting Edom for its equivalent Turkey, and Seir for its synonym, we read the above verse thus:—'Turkey shall be a possession, the Gate also shall be a possession, and Israel shall do valiantly.' 'Out of Jacob shall come he that shall have dominion and shall destroy him that remaineth in the city'—Constantinople (Psa. lx. 9—12)."

If the above be correct, and if Amalek be Russia, as seems very likely, we find that her "latter end is to perish for ever," or "to come to destruction" (ver. 20, R.V.; Ezek. xxxviii. and xxxix.). It is worthy of notice that during the third, or present, colonising, flourishing, and victorious era of Israel's history she was to have a king to reign over her, and her polity was to be that of a kingdom. In the fourth or still future state of the nation, the sceptre shall rise out of Israel, and the monarchy therefore will then be flourishing still; Israel will be a victorious maritime power, then, afflicting or chastising Asshur and Eber, destroying Amalek or Russian Gog, her career being still guided and governed by God Himself, who remains Israel's God, even to the end. Balaam's prophecy respecting Israel's monarchy during the period of the Christian dispensation separates that kingdom from the Jews, who, under the terms of the prophecy of Hosea iii., are declared to be without the sceptre or the king long after their dispersion and before the Second Advent.

Balaam's portrait, as divinely drawn of Israel, then before him, fits the case of only one people on the face of the earth, that people is the British. We respond in all respects to the prophecy in its fourfold aspect; and no other nation, certainly not the Jews, responds to the details of the picture. In regard to one feature of the case a few reflections may not be out of place. In the second prophecy relating to Israel in her palmy and prosperous state as a united, conquering nation under her first kings, God declared of her that "He hath not beheld inquity in Jacob; neither hath He seen perverseness in Israel. The Lord His God is with him." A wonderful statement is this, in regard to a people who immediately after the proclamation of Balaam's four prophecies were guilty of heinous sins against God in regard to the purity of their holy religion, by nationally yielding to the impure enticements of the daughters of Moab! So general was this sin that 24,000 souls were cut off from the chosen people for it by their offended God! Yet, "He saw not iniquity in Jacob, nor perverseness in Israel!" In what sense are we to understand these words? It is clear that the sinners of His people felt the vengeance and were cut off. God saw their vileness and destroyed them. But the nation He spared. He beheld no iniquity in Jacob the nation; nor did He see that perverseness in Israel the race, which would constrain Him to annihilate them. What interposed? The blood of Jesus Christ was sprinkled on the holy seed, and His promises, covenants, and oath, formed a protection to the guilty people, which concealed the national guilt and covered their sins. The offenders in the matter of Moab were destroyed, but the nation whom the Lord had chosen He led forth to the wilderness and brought safe at last into the land of Canaan as promised. So now, too, the Lord sees us His people defiled with many a sin, and nationally foul with all manner of abominations. He punishes the rebels; but the bulk of His people He leads forward, always prospering and blessing the nation nationally; guiding them at last into that happy state when His laws will be written by Him in their hearts and minds, and He will forgive their iniquities and sins, remembering them no more (Jer. xxxi. 33, 34; Heb. viii. 10, 12). Then shall Israel bless the Lord their God and praise His name for ever and for evermore!

ISAIAH LIV. REGARDED AS A POLITICAL CHAPTER.

In the May number of the The Home Monthly, published in Perth, Scotland, the following appeared among the "Stray Notes." The writer is clearly a British-Israelite. Our Scottish friends should note the fact:—

"At their meeting on 1st April, the Perth Presbytery had under review Mr. Gladstone's Suspensory Bill. This is quite legitimate matter for their consideration, and as friends of the Established Church they have our sympathy. We demur, however, to such texts as "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper" being taken as applying to the Established Church of Scotland, or any other church for that matter. The text, as is the whole chapter (Isa. liv.), is a political one. The promises were made to the Ten-tribed Kingdom of Israel, and are being inherited by the British nation to-day."

In another part of the same paper the journalist discusses the merits of Volapük as a language for universal use, and disposes of its claim in the following fashion:—

"VOLAPUK.

"Adam Henderson, 'Professor of Volapük, and [a?] Member of the Volapük Academy,' contributes an article to a recent number of The People's Friend setting forth the advantages of Volapük, and claims for it the presumptive title of 'The Universal Language.' Of course, Professor Henderson is an enthusiast, and Volapük being his hobby, he must needs make the best case he can for its universal adoption.

"With all respect, however, we must say that his arguments and illustrations have not convinced us, and we are very doubtful of this new language ever becoming more than a petty 'accomplishment,' or of its even fulfilling so important a place in international intercourse as shorthand does in commerce with ourselves. Of this, at all events, we feel pretty confident, that it shall never outrival the English language, for as Britannia is destined to rule the waves, so in like manner is the English language destined to cover the earth as the waters cover the sea."

We are confident that the writer of the above is correct in both his conclusions. The British are in truth inheriting the blessings God promised to Ten-tribed Israel, and the British language bids fair to become the vernacular, or at least the Lingua-franca of the whole earth. These two facts should satisfy reasonable men that the British nation is "Lost Israel found." For God cannot promise to Israel exclusively those good gifts which the British exclusively enjoy, unless the British and Israel were one and the same people. Neither could the English language cover the earth, unless the English race had preceded the language and become the dominant ubiquitous race, which after all God promised that Israel alone should become.

The good gifts that God promised to Israel, and which we alone enjoy amongst the nations, are these:—

1. Greatness as a nation (Gen. xii. 1, 2; xxii. 17).
2. Multitudes, "filling up" the vacancies among the alien nations.
3. God's blessing on the nation (Gen. xxii. 17).
4. The possession of their enemies' Gate (Gen. xxii. 17).
5. Willingness to embark with zeal in the foreign missionary enterprise (Gen. xxii. 18).
6. "The power to get wealth" (Deut. viii. 18), the object being God's glory.
7. Dominion over their enemies (Deut. xv. 6).

These, and many other gifts, constitute Jacob's birthright, and these we, as a nation, enjoy to-day, which we could not do unless we were Israel of the House of Joseph.

ISRAEL'S SCRIPTURE AND PRAYER UNION.

We are glad to see that the Scripture and Prayer Union connected with the British-Israel Association in London, is now under the care and direction of the Secretary, at 86, St. Martin's-lane, W.C., London. We trust it will flourish henceforth, and attract to itself a larger number of members than has been the case heretofore. The card of membership, a copy of which has been sent to us, is a carefully prepared document. It contains a table of "daily readings" for 1893, commencing with Isa. i. for January 1st, and concluding with Acts xxvi. for December 31st. Two prayers appear also in the 2nd and 3rd pages, for use in connection with the daily readings, and we need not say they are appropriate to the subject, devotional, and carefully drawn up. The suggestions to the members of the Association relate to Bible-reading, prayer, and praise. One of the suggestions as to the method of reading God's Word is very excellent: "Read the Word of God with a definite object in view, and note the continuity of God's purpose all through your readings." The two reasons for praise to God given by the compiler of the card should be committed to memory: "Praise—for the Lord's faithfulness to Israel, notwithstanding their forgetfulness of Him; for the light he has given us on this subject, and the blessing which has attended the efforts to spread the knowledge of His great truth."

The subscription to the Association is only 6d. a year, and a new card will be issued each year to each subscriber.

The two key-notes of this card are taken from Jer. xxxi. 7, and Psa. lxxx.; "Sing with gladness for Jacob, and shout among the chief of the nations," being one text; the other is like it. "Give ear, O Shepherd of Israel, Thou that leadest Joseph like a flock. . . . Stir up Thy strength, and come and save us. Turn us again, O Lord God of hosts, cause Thy face to shine, and we shall be saved."

THE EMPIRE'S SECRETARIES OF STATE.

THE amusing speech of Lord Rosebery at the Royal Academy Banquet, on April 29, was, after all, something of an Identity speech, though his lordship was not the least aware that that was the tendency of anything he said. He spoke as the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs in Mr. Gladstone's Government. He described the offices of the chief Ministers of the Crown, not only as places of business, but also as "realms of imagination." "The Secretary for the Colonies rules over an Empire," he said, "on which the sun never sets," a statement that is true in fact, and strictly in accordance with the promise made by the Lord to Israel, that the kingdom and dominion under the whole heaven should be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, who are also declared in the Scriptures to be the children of Israel, the people near to Jehovah (Dan. vii. 27; Psa. cxlviii. 14, R.V.).

So far the Empire of the Colonies, "the nation and company of nations" literally so now, over which the Marquis of Ripon presides. But Lord Rosebery cast a glance at the Indian Empire, and told his hearers that Lord Kimberley, who superintends that mighty portion of the empire, had his mind resting on "India's coral strand," with oriental splendour, oriental luxury, and the shadow of the constantly depreciating rupee to occupy his attention. These words bring to the recollection the promise of God to Israel that God gives them ever "the power to get wealth," and that in spite of the rupee, India after all is a mine of wealth to her Western protector, being her second best commercial customer in the world, and giving her the command of the markets of the earth, with safe access to Australasia, China, South and West Africa. Even the playful hit at the unready condition of the British army to take the field in case of war, levelled against Mr. Campbell Bannerman, had a reference (not intended by the speaker) to the fact that with inadequate forces, but with God's unfailing help, the British, being Israel, conquer in all their wars, and succeed where success, humanly speaking, is unlikely (Deut. xxviii. 7; Lev. xxvi. 7, 8, R.V.).

When Lord Rosebery spoke of his own office at the banquet, he wittily described his proceedings there, but kept before his hearers the fact of the wonderful expansion of the British Empire, and the interest of our nation in the concerns of almost all nations, families, and kindreds, of the earth. Speaking of the various duties of the several Secretaries of State, he said, respecting his own avocations in the Foreign Office:—

> But when I come to my own office I transcend them all. I have only to open a red box to be possessed of that magic carpet which took its possessor wherever he would go. Perhaps sometimes it carries me a little further than that. I open it and find myself at once in those regions where a travelled monarch and an intellectual minister are endeavouring to reconcile the realms of Xerxes and Darius with the needs of nineteenth century civilization (laughter); I smell the scent of the roses, and hear the song of the bulbul. I open another box which enables me to share the sports of the fur-seal—his island loves, his boundless swims in the Pacific; I can even follow him to Paris and see him—the corpus delicti—laid on the table of the Court of Arbitration. (Laughter.) I can go still further. I can transfer myself to the Southern Pacific, where three of the greatest States in the world are endeavouring, not always with apparent success, to administer one of the smallest of islands—the island of Samoa—in close conjunction and alliance with one of our most brilliant men of letters. (Cheers and laughter.) I may go into Africa, but I will not tread within the limits of the Secretary of the Colonies, for I would not exceed my province. But I can go into other parts of Africa. I can sometimes dream that I see vast regions destined, under the Union Jack, to receive the alluvial overflowings of our Imperial race. (Laughter.) As I proceed northwards in Africa, I may find myself in Egypt, watching on the summits of the pyramids for those forty centuries which are supposed to inhabit them, sometimes wondering what the forty-first is likely to be. (Laughter and cheers.) I will not touch upon Europe, for I see their Excellencies, the representatives of the Great Powers here, and I should be chary of saying anything which might lead to diplomatic complications. But I will say this in virtue of my office—I follow every Court. Not a monarch leaves his capital on a journey but I am on the platform in the spirit, if not in the body. I am in spirit in the gallery of every Parliament. I am ready and anxious, but not always successful, to be present at the signing of every treaty. (Laughter.) I think I have laid a sufficient claim before you to insist that in future when you consider Her Majesty's Ministers you may not consider them merely as political creatures, but as persons who have also their imaginative side, as official Ariels roaming through time and space, not on broomsticks, but on boxes. (Laughter.)

These happy sentences give one an idea of the vast expansion of British-Israel's Empire, and show us where our Chief Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs is obliged to travel (in imagination), to transact the nation's business, or look after its interests. He goes to Persia because Indo-British concerns require him to watch what is going on there. He travels to Alaska to see that, in the matter of the seal fisheries, British subjects are not defrauded of their rights, and to Paris to watch the arbitrators there, and see that they have the whole British case laid before them. He has to fly to Samoa, to care for British interests in the South Pacific, since our ocean telegraphic cable from Vancouver to New Zealand must pass through Samoa, and we need good government there.

South Africa, Lord Rosebery regards as a British Colony, but as to other parts of that vast continent, he seems sanguine that he sees there "vast regions destined under the Union Jack to receive the alluvial overflowings of our Imperial race!" He was cautious as to Egypt, recollecting that Sir Charles Dilke was going to upset his policy if he could, on May 1st. How signally he failed the world now knows! His lordship's allusion to the probable character of the forty-first century to come from the summit of the pyramids where the other forty are supposed to dwell, is a covert reflection that the future of Egypt under British management is likely to be very different from the Egypt of the past; a fact which is self-evident to Anglo-Israelites who have read and believed Isaiah xix. 20—25, R.V.

Lord Rosebery, the popular Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, is, we believe, in heart a Liberal Unionist, and desires to see the Empire expanding, strong, and prosperous. He is sure to have his wishes gratified! For, whether he knows it or not, the British nation is God's chosen people Israel, and He has destined them to a great and glorious future, even the fulfilment of the will the King of Israel as regards all the nations of the world. God loves them, and has given "His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have eternal life." Israel has been chosen to carry this gracious message to the ends, the coasts, and the uttermost parts of the earth, and as God is true, she must be engaged in carrying out that her allotted function now.

Lord Rosebery treated the matter jocosely, as the circumstances of the banquet demanded; but it is a serious solemn matter nevertheless, because the whole scheme involved in "Our Identity" is the offspring of the Divine Mind, a scheme dear to the heart and soul of God Almighty Himself, as Jer. xxxii. 41, R.V., teaches us. It reaches in its splendid grandeur "all nations that on earth do dwell," and if it were the will of God, it desires to save them all! To Him be all the praise.

BRAVO, INDIA!

THE London Chamber of Commerce entertained Lord Roberts, of Candahar, at the Grand Hotel, Trafalgar-square, on May 24th, at which, following Lord Roberts' remarkable address, one of the Punjab princes, His Highness the Maharajah of Kapurthala, made a speech even more interesting still to our fellow countrymen, but especially so to the Anglo-Israelite portion of them. Some have said that we have, as a nation, failed to conciliate our Indian fellow subjects, and that they would cut our throats to-morrow if they had a chance! The Maharajah, whose speech we quote, does not leave that impression on the mind! He is loyal to the core himself, and tells us why he is so. It is interesting to see how God is dealing with our nation and giving them the wisdom to attach the vast multitudes of India to their throne, as the result of good government and self-interest. We have given peace, prosperity, and happiness to our Indian dominions, and the Indian nations begin to see that under no circumstances conceivable can they be happier or more prosperous than they are now. The Maharajah's speech, as reported in The Times of May 25, was as follows:—

"His Highness the Maharajah of Kapurthala replied as follows:—Mr. Chairmam, my Lords, and Gentlemen,—You have indeed done me a great honour in asking me to respond to the toast, which has been so warmly received, of prosperity to theIndian Empire, and, as a humble representative of that portion of her Majesty's dominions, I feel pleased and happy this evening in having heard repeated assurances of the deep interest which every Englishman takes in the well-being of my own dear country Long may our beloved Queen-Empress be spared to guide and direct us in the path of enlightenment and progress, and long may her memory live to strengthen and encourage us in all that is grand and good. (Cheers.) Believe me, my attachment and devotion to the best and wisest Sovereign in the world is no mere expression from the lips. I have studied Queen Victoria's noble acts and noble life ever since I could read, and my heart's desire has recently been gratified by having personally experienced the charm of her welcome to one who is proud to account himself amongst the most loyal and devoted of her many millions of loyal and devoted subjects. (Cheers.) I know that in this country the Queen is the beloved representative of the nation, and I feel, as a member of the splendid community of Greater Britain, that the welcome her Majesty has been pleased to extend to me is a greeting by the people of this land to the brother whose lot is cast in a distant portion of the Empire. (Cheers.) I gladly take this opportunity of publicly thanking the Englishmen of every class with whom my visit has brought me into contact for the genuine affection with which they have received me. Such kindness moves my heart to greater warmth towards the people of this land. (Cheers.) United we are by ties of loyalty to our Sovereign, of mutual friendship and good fellowship, of common interests to defend, and of great measures to push forward for the further development of the immense dominions which it has pleased God to intrust to our most gracious Queen. And with such weighty bonds holding us together we need never fear the catastrophe of disunion. (Loud cheers.) India, with which we are more immediately concerned this evening, is but a small portion of the great British Empire. Yet we in India feel that we are loved, and cherished, and cared for as favoured children of the mother country, and with this happy conviction we are moved to repay this love by loyally helping in our small way to secure her lasting prosperity. God grant the occasion may never happen when England shall need the assistance of any of her children in the distant continents. But that India will rise to a man in defence of her Majesty's dignity and dominions I can now solemnly assure you, after deeply gauging the thoughts and opinions of my countrymen of all classes. (Cheers.) Naturally, in a territory so vast the surface cannot always remain smooth, and we must occasionally experience local breezes which, when dealt with intelligently, are calmed almost before they are publicly noticed. This is the essence of good government, and I believe no country can boast of an administration more able than that of India. I think I am right in saying that in internal India not one shot has been fired in anger for the last 35 years; thanks to the admirable system of civil government, so well adapted to the requirements of the three hundred million people, of races and creeds more widely differing than in any other country in the world. (Cheers.) General Roberts' command would indeed have been one of undisturbed peace were it not for the exigencies of exterior India, which demanded military action in various directions. His deeds as a soldier are a volume in our history; they need no word of praise from me. But I must allude to one admirable consequence of his lordship's kindly nature; and that is the undying love which his personal attributes of broad sympathy have secured to him in the hearts, not only of his immediate subordinates, but of every individual in India. No commander in any country has ever attained the popularity which Lord Roberts possesses among the people of all classes. He is known to the women and children of the distant towns and villages as the kindly general whose heart beats with that of the multitude; to whom the rich and poor may turn in moments of doubt and difficulty, and receive the sympathy and support which a noble nature alone can give. (Cheers.) The magnificent farewell which he experienced at Lahore, as the outcome of the whole Punjab, is an instance of the genuine love in which the people hold him throughout India. And I am sure I am right in saying that his lordship was more touched and gratified by this spontaneous act of those who had no personal purpose to serve than by any honours officially showered upon him in recognition of his splendid services. Should it be our good fortune to have him with us in India once more in a position still more responsible than that which he has just relinquished, I make bold to assure him that his return will be welcomed as that of an old friend, whose presence brings with it the peace and prosperity which in my country we associate with warm sunshine and timely rain. (Cheers.) I thank you all most warmly for the great pleasure you have given me in asking me to join you this evening in greeting the soldier of whom India is justly proud, and in offering him the welcome he has so thoroughly earned after a glorious and honourable career in the East. As a representative of the Sikh nation, which he so warmly loves and admires, I am especially pleased to witness this splendid demonstration by his own countrymen, marking the high esteem in which he is universally held. I heartily wish him every happiness, and a long life of usefulness in the service of our Queen-Empress. (Cheers.)"

There is much in Lord Roberts' speech regarding the condition, prosperity, safety, and loyalty of the Indian races, that we feel called upon to quote, in order to furnish to our readers a few of the utterances of our late Commander-in-Chief in India. He is a great soldier and a wise administrator. Anything that he says is worth hearing and considering; what he said on the occasion we have alluded to was of immense importance to the Empire, and is as satisfactory as it was important. He said inter alia:—

"Great changes have taken place during the 41 years of my service in India. The development of communications by road and rail and the construction of canals and other public works have civilized and enriched the native population to a most remarkable extent. The aggregate value of the foreign export and import trade is now more than five times what it was 40 years ago; wages have in most cases nearly doubled, and the general standard of comfort amongst all classes is much higher than it used to be. Moreover, I am convinced that the princes and people of India are beginning to recognise the benefits they derive from the British rule, that they are sincerely attached to the Crown, and that under judicious treatment they will he ready to unite with us in the defence of our great Indian Empire. (Cheers.) On the other hand the defence of that Empire is a much more serious undertaking than it was in the middle of the present century, when internal disturbance was the chief thing to be guarded against, and the frontier complications, in which we were from time to time involved, merely brought us into contact with uncivilized tribes. Now, we are gradually being brought face to face with one of the great military powers of Europe, a contingency which unfortunately imposes on us obligations and responsibilities which necessitate a material increase in our military expenditure. But I am glad to be able to tell you that in India the strictest economy consistent with efficiency has been exercised in all matters of Army administration. (Cheers.) Allowing for the increase in the home charges, due to the depreciation of silver, and for the addition of 10,000 British soldiers to the Indian establishment which took place in 1886, the ordinary military budget is but little higher than it was seven years ago; and, though there have been extraordinary military charges for purposes of mobilization and for the defences and armaments of the principal seaports and the north-west frontier, the total cost of these precautionary measures has not exceeded 3½ millions sterling, a sum which has been provided out of revenue, and which, taking the loss by exchange into account, is considerably under the original estimate. Before vacating my command, it was extremly satisfactory to learn from the farewell addresses presented to me at Lahore, Lucknow, Calcutta, and Bombay, that the warlike races of the Punjab, the agricultural classes in Oude, and the great commercial communities of the eastern and western capitals of India were unanimous in recognising the wisdom of the defensive policy which has been followed of late years by the Government of India, and in expressing their readiness to defray the additional expenditure which the pursuance of that policy has entailed. (Cheers.) That India may continue to advance in civilization and prosperity, one thing is essential. The inhabitants of that country must be able to place implicit reliance, not only on the justice and beneficence, but on the strength and permanence of our rule. (Cheers.) Under the various dynasties which governed India previous to our occupation the people were accustomed to a rapid change of masters, and were consequently in a state of perpetual expectancy and unrest. It was the chief object of those who had accumulated wealth to conceal and hoard their savings rather than to invest them in some reproductive industry, and this unsatisfactory habit is only very gradually being overcome. At the present day the effect of centuries of misgovernment is still apparent; the people are still inclined to distrust the permanence of the paramount power; and, in spite of the peace and order which we have established, the wealthier classes, with exceptions which I am glad to say are steadily becoming more numerous, still collect and secrete as much of the precious metals as they can instead of joining hands with us in our endeavours to develop the great natural resources of India. How prevalent this feeling of uncertainty is, and what a prejudicial effect it exercises on the national progress, you can judge from the fact that, according to the estimate of Mr. O'Conor, Financial Assistant-Secretary to the Government of India, 113 millions of gold and 227 millions of silver were absorbed by India during the 30 years from 1859 to 1889, all the gold and a large proportion of the silver being withdrawn from circulation to be hoarded or converted into ornaments. You will understand, from what I have said, how important it is, from a purely commercial point of view, that the inhabitants of India should have a firm belief in the strength and stability of our rule; and this belief is at least equally desirable on political and military grounds. It thus becomes a matter of the utmost moment to convince the native population that we have the will and the power to protect them, and that we are determined to guard our own interests and to fulfil our engagements. (Cheers.) This, I think, can best be accomplished by a firm and impartial, yet sympathetic, policy in our dealings with the various races: by maintaining the Army in India, both British and Native, at the highest possible standard of efficiency; by keeping up such works of defence as may be needed to guard the points most open to attack, and to facilitate the action of our field army; and last, but certainly not least, by so organizing the naval and military forces of the Empire as not only to provide for the security of the mother country and the colonies, but to enable India to be reinforced with rapidity and certainty should circumstances demand an increase in its British garrison. (Cheers.) In again thanking you for your kind appreciation of my past services I would take the opportunity of expressing my obligations, not only while I have been Commander-in-Chief in India, but throughout my Indian career, to the civilians and soldiers with whom I have been associated for their able co-operation and friendly assistance. Now that I have severed my official connection with India I may perhaps be allowed to say that England is admirably served by the civil and military officers who attend to her interests in the East. No body of men could be more loyal, more efficient, more devoted to their duties, or more careful to perform those duties with due regard to the susceptibilities and peculiarities of the native races. (Cheers.) This is all the more creditable, because of late years, although India itself has been growing rapidly in wealth and prosperity, all classes of Europeans in the employment of the Indian Government, except the non-commissioned officers and rank and file of the British Army, who are paid in sterling, have been serving under the extremely disheartening conditions of gradually decreasing pay and gradually increasing expenses. It is true that the nominal rates of pay are the same as before, but the cost of living is much higher than it was 20 years ago, and, owing to the depreciation of silver, the obligatory home charges, which most Europeans of any standing in India are called upon to meet, are pressing more heavily on them year by year. Not only so, but during the period of my Indian service, owing to financial exigencies, the number of the higher appointments open to military men have been much reduced. The result is that it is scarcely possible for any one to save money, and it is almost equally impossible for the junior officers to live on their pay, or, if married, to maintain their wives and families in comfort and respectability. This, gentlemen, is a state of things which has a most important bearing on the future prosperity and advancement of India, for the labourer is worthy of his hire, and services which are inadequately remunerated are but seldom efficiently performed. I am sure you will agree with me in hoping that some decision will speedily be arrived at as to the best method of placing the finances of India on a satisfactory footing, in order that the Government of India and her Majesty's Government may be in a position to take such steps as may appear to them equitable and reasonable for the relief of the men who devote their abilities, their energies, and not unfrequently their lives, to the service of their country, in a trying climate, and often far removed from all that is dear to them. (Cheers.)"

We have here many points bearing on Our Identity. India's incalculable millions; our European enemy, Russian Gog, at our very borders in hostile attitude; our good government towards the native masses and their response in loyalty to us; their prosperity and hoarding propensities; the righteousness of our rule, and the honourable character of our civil and military administrators in India; all these things point to our Israelitish origin, and Our Identity with the Lost Ten-tribed House of Ephraim. We asked our readers to ponder these things, and, knowing who we are and why God has given us India, to praise Him for His faithfulness and for His lovingkindness to His chosen ones (1 Chron. xvi. 13).

THE NATIONAL PRAYER-BOOK'S TESTIMONY TO OUR ISRAELITISH DESCENT.

A Paper read at a Drawing-room Meeting of the North London British-Israel Association, on 6th April, 1893.

By H. L. Browett.

As time is drawing on apace, I will only allude to that most solemn and significant of all the words in which God's true worshippers express their deepest heart convictions. I mean the word "Amen"—a pure Hebrew word, which has been used by our race for at least 3,500 years. It is untranslatable into any other language, though many countries have created substitutes for it according to their conception of its meaning. As a response, more especially in prayer and thanksgiving, it derives its sanction from the undoubted practices and ordinances of the apostles, who themselves adopted it from the ritual of the Hebrew Church, under the immediate instructions of Him who taught them to pray. We know it occupied an important place even from the first giving of the law by God Himself.

Recall the fore-ordaining ceremony in Deut. xi. and Josh. viii., and the record of that scene, one of the most impressive which the face of heaven and earth has ever witnessed—when, upon their first entrance into the promised land, all Israel, their elders, officers, and judges, stood in two divisions upon two mountains, and the Levites read the blessings on Mount Gerizim, and the curses upon Mount Ebal, and all the people answered Amen. You remember, too, when the ark of the covenant was first brought up from the house of Obededom to Mount Zion, how King

David danced and sang before the Lord: "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel for ever and ever," and all the people said Amen. Psa. cvi., composed by David on this latter occasion, contains, as it were, the rubric of the Hebrew Liturgy, "Let all the people say, Amen."

Dr. Messing says the word reminds his co-religionists of the Jewish Trinity, a striking concession from a Jew to a Christian. He says its letters signify Tel, or God, so the word expresses faith in Jehovah; Melech, or king—"the Lord God omnipotent reigneth"; and Naamon, or trustworthy, God is faithful, keeping His covenants to thousands of generations. The word occurs about 100 times in the New Covenant, or Testament. Christ is Himself the Amen (Rev. iii. 14); so He calls Himself expressly. He is God manifest in the flesh; He is the King of Israel; and He is the Trustworthy One, "the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever." He is the answer to every prayer, the seal of the accomplishment of every promise, the Alpha and Omega of all things.

It is the expression of a Rabbi in the Jewish Talmud that whoever says Amen with all his might opens the gates of paradise.

St. Jerome, writing from Rome in the 4th century, states that the response in question was so fervent that the Amen rang again like repeated claps of thunder.

It is said of the priests, Levites, and people they sang together by course (Ezra iii. 11), and we read in Isa. vi. of the heavenly seraphim crying one unto another, and saying, "Holy, holy, holy." The early Christian Church, too, had portions of services allotted to priest and people respectively. The priest in no respect supersedes or excludes the service of the people, who are themselves, in their own degree, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people, themselves brought near by the blood of Christ, who hath made us kings and priests unto God; themselves members of one and the same body, sanctified and knit together by the same spirit of adoption, whereby we are entitled to cry "Abba Father."

I have endeavoured to show that the language and phraseology of our National Prayer-book is a remarkable instance of the public assumption of our Israelitish origin. The wonders and deliverances are assigned to our forefathers; while God is entreated to confer upon us the promises which He swore by His holy name should be theirs and their children's. So we who use these formularies are forced to constantly identify ourselves with lost Israel; and the Church governing body has, at present, no adequate reply to the charge of the increasing body of Freethinkers that the Church is acting a lie in its most solemn services.

Hear what says Mrs. Annie Besant, herself the wife, I believe, of a clergyman of the National Church. In her book, "My Path to Atheism," she attacks the National Prayer-book. She takes our beautiful prayers seriatim, and states that we English make assertions and advance claims which have nothing whatever to do with our race, if the Bible is true; unless, she says, those people—generally looked upon as amiable lunatics—are correct who assert that the English nation is descended from the Ten Lost Tribes of Israel.

On the other hand, hear what the Rev. Dr. Dalton says concerning the parable of the vineyard, in his able Commentary on the New Testament. The kingdom was to be taken from the Jews and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof. He says: "There is no nation in the world which holds the pure doctrines of the Gospel so decidedly as our own; yet we have nothing to boast of, for all is of grace. Oh, happy Englishmen! think each of you, who hear this, has God done all that was necessary, and more than you could expect, to bring you to a fruit-bearing state? Has He not sent His messengers, His holy prophets and apostles, to you, delivering all the will of God made known to them? Do you love His Word, His day, and His ordinances? If not, your greater advantages above others will turn to your greater condemnation." So wrote a good man in 1848 who had probably never heard of the good news of the finding of lost Israel, which news is now running to and fro all over the earth.

Do you not think that Mrs. Besant would have remained faithful to the National Church had God permitted the nation's eyes to be opened to its truly unique position in the Divine polity?

Thank God, the partial awakening which is going on is an indication that His time is fast approaching. In the meantime, if we realise all the blessings God is giving us nationally and individually according to His promise, we shall esteem it not only a duty but a privilege to show others what a glorious vindication it is of His faithfulness to a thousand generations. It puts the infidel to shame, for it is an earnest of the truth of salvation.

I should like to close by giving you some idea of the influences I have personally derived from the Church services since I have understood their wonderful meaning, for me and my fellow-countrymen; but it is better felt than expressed. My brother Churchmen will understand the feeling.

Is it not a favourable sign of the times that many of the beautiful prayers of the National Church are being used in an increasing number of Nonconformist places of worship? I do heartily commend them to you all as the nation's right, a part of Israel's heritage, to console and strengthen you in every condition of life, and its hymns of praise to uplift your hearts in thankfulness to the Giver of all good.

DR. WILD ON PROPHECY.

Dr. Wild recently preached a sermon from the text Isa., xliv. 6, 7: "Thus saith the Lord the King of Israel, and his Redeemer the Lord of Hosts: I am the first and I am the last; and beside Me there is no God. And who, as I, shall call, and shall declare it, and set it in order for Me, since I appointed the ancient people? And the things that are coming, and shall come, let them show unto them." He said:

Prophecy, in the sense of foretelling future events, is presented in my text as one of the proofs of an over-ruling Providence. The prophets of God were divinely inspired; they did not always understand the full meaning of their own utterances, but studied them like other men to know the nature and meaning of passing events, and so have a better idea of the future. In studying prophecy one needs to carefully guard against being biased by one's pre-conceived ideas or influenced by their environments. As I said this morning, it is only about eleven or twelve years ago since I felt myself capable of freeing myself from pre-possessed ideas and environments; prior to that this influence gave me the idea that I would try and shape the interpretation that I would gather out of the Scripture: there are very few free people in the world go on that line. Imagine that I should have lived so long without being able to abstract myself from all concerned and just study the Bible as it was, without reference to any form or theory presented, or future theory, and find what was the mind of God simply and plainly. Prophecy needs to be independently handled, and when the truth is discerned we must confidently accept the same; no matter how contrary to our notions or the seeming improbability or even impossibility of the same ever being fulfilled; that is not your business nor mine; if it is only properly presented as a thing to come to pass, it will come to pass, as sure as the sun rises. In God's appointed time things will assume shape and culminate, and the thing foretold come to pass. It is as we read in Habak. ii. 3, "For the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak and not lie; though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry." For many years I have made a specialty of studying the prophecies applying directly to the Hebrew people, both before their separation into the two nations of Judah and Israel, and after, and on to the time of the union of these two nations, in the latter day, in the land of Palestine. Of course, one could not study on this special line without in some degree studying other prophecies as applying to other races and nations. I question if any man is capable of studying more than one special line thoroughly and successfully. There is no more reason to minimize, or blot out of existence, literal Israel, than blot out literal Judah, and the prophecies applying to one people are just as sure to be fulfilled as those applying to the other.

My friend, the Rev. Dr. Meredith, of Brooklyn. N.Y., in teaching the Sunday-school lesson a few weeks ago, is reported as saying, "The Jews of to-day are composed of the descendants of all the Twelve Tribes, and all this writing of books and pamphlets about the Ten Lost Tribes of Israel is the most arrant nonsense; in my mind it is below contempt; the Ten Tribes are here among the Jews to-day." In answer, I may say that this statement lays Dr. Meredith open to easy and severe criticism. In the opinion of many who read it, it will surely put a rebate on the estimate of his reputation as a biblical scholar and teacher. If the doctor would take his concordance and trace out the oft-repeated use of the word Israel—and it is hundreds of times used—he surely would learn their mission, place, and work, and he would find that they are not the Jews of to-day. The prophecies applying to Israel in many cases are so different to those applying to the Jews; in truth they are the very opposite, sometimes so much so in many cases that the Jews could not fulfil the prophecies belonging to Israel. The word Israel in scores of places in the Scriptures stands, of course, for a literal people, and so does Judah. Without much doubt my friend Dr. Meredith, or anybody else, may read numbers of sacred Scripture passages as to when the two people shall become united and one nation. You remember that each tribe had a stick—we have translated it into "sceptre" to symbolize authority—and so had each nation this kind of a stick. In our current language we call it a "mace." Great Britain has one, so have we in the Dominion Parliament, and also in the other Provincial Parliaments. When the mace is introduced into Parliament it means the opening of the session; nor could the chapter and members open the House without the mace being placed on the centre table, and no laws could be passed except in the presence of this stick. There are several cases in history where men have assembled without the mace, but any laws passed were void. Even Manasseh. The United States have such a stick, which is present with them in their Congress. I believe, but am not sure of detail, it is composed of thirteen brass rods, tied together by silver bands, and tipped with a golden eagle. In like manner the maces in the British Empire are tipped with a crown. The prophet tells us that these two sticks of Judah and Israel are to be made one and never more separated. I will quote from Ezek. xxxvii. 17: "And join them one to another into one stick, and they shall become one in thine hand." No one will hardly deny that this has reference to Judah and Israel. And in verses 21 and 22 we read: "And say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God, Behold I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land; and I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all, and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all." Surely no one will argue that the union here spoken of has taken place. I do not know a man that would assume that. If they are to be united, then it plainly follows that they are now divided. The plain teaching of this passage, and many more, is, that when the union does take place it will be a lasting one; they are to be no more divided. This point I may seal with a quotation referring to the same union, Amos ix. 15: "And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God." It is a wonder that intelligent persons, especially a minister, will expose themselves by opposing the general facts of Anglo-Israelism; such opponents are so easily refuted, their wilfulness, indifference, or ignorance on such plain matter of facts are made so manifest. Speaking for myself, I can truly say that I have a dislike to correct them, because the correction is so easy and makes them seem as if they were careless. Imagine a statement like that from so good and intelligent a gentleman as the Rev. Dr. Meredith! We have scores of lay members in Bond-street that could correct him just as easily as blowing out a tallow candle. I suppose this state of things may be accounted for by remembering the fact that most of us ministers study only on certain lines.

When I joined the Brooklyn Congregational Association a number of years ago, the late Henry Ward Beecher said he wished to express his pleasure at my becoming a member, for I was a student on a special line of thought. He said, "I never studied prophecies and know very little about them. It is not in my line. But I am glad to welcome a new member that does." The point to guard against is not to express our approval or disapproval, and especially so in uncourteous language, on any line of thought we have not examined. Never give it a bad or a good name if you do not know anything about it. Anyway, the study of prophecy is commendable. Peter says in his second Epistle (i. 19); "We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your heart." Dr. Meredith, my acquaintance of many years ago, never mind, if we live to that day dawn, both you and I will have clearer views and more charity; and if we do not live till that glorious time, others will thank God and enjoy its greater blessings. In one sense it would be nice if we did live when the union of Judah and Israel should take place because of what is recorded in Isa. lii. 8, "Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing, for they shall see eye to eye, when the Lord shall bring again Zion." If the Ten Lost Tribes are a part of the Jews of the present day, it will make it rather hard to account for their limited number. They are reckoned to number from seven to nine millions all told. Now this is about the number of the Jews alone in our Saviour's time. If we add to them now the Ten Tribes, we can hardly evade the conclusion, but that they should be more numerous after eighteen hundred years. Anglo-Israelism can easily, and I think very reasonably, account for the fact that the Jews have not increased during all these centuries; for part of the curse pronounced against them during the years of their wanderings and exile from Palestine was that they would be persecuted and bereaved of their children; this part of the curse has been sorrowfully and most terribly fulfilled; and everyone knows, who knows the history of these people, no race's history is more replete with tales of sorrow and suffering, with sacrifice and persecution, with heroism and death, than that of the Jews. It reads like a romance of hell, although the chief persecutors were the so-called civilised and Christianised nations of the world. It will be a happy day for the world when men, nations, and churches learn truly, and with charity, that religion is an individual matter—a voluntary work; and inasmuch as God, who is all-powerful and loving and wise, does not force anyone, it is ill-becoming, out of place, and unauthorised for His professed followers to do what He will not No, no, my friends, we cannot cut religion into a man by a sword, nor burn it into him by the flames at the stake, nor pinch in by red-hot pinchers, nor starve it into him in the dark and loathsome dungeon. You cannot get religion into men by any of these devices.

The inquistion, the most perfect and complete institution known to the world, had many curious, varied and fiendish machines, instruments and measures, yet out of all, there was not one that could make a man religious. Churchianity and Christianity are, even in this enlightened day, strangely confounded, just as the true Catholic Church of God and the many so-called churches and organisations among us, My text plainly teaches us that God has a plan and purpose with respect to men and nations, and in His all-wise Providence He is ruling to accomplish the same. Nations, and sometimes individuals, are made special agents under the direction of Providence. He has had different races and nations as agents from time to time: as for instance, Egypt, Assyria, and Babylon. Take this passage referring to it, Jer. xxvii. 6, 7: "And now I have given all these lands into the hands of Nebuchadnezzar, the king of Babylon, My servant; and the beasts of the field have I given him also to serve him. And all nations shall serve him, and his son, and his son's son, until the very time of his land come; and then many nations and great kings shall serve themselves of him." The Hebrew nations were under Babylonians for a hundred years, and the Babylonians were God's servants; they ruled, and God ruled through them, and is now ruling the world through another nation. There is no preference in it except the preference that God Himself has in some nation and some people.

History informs us that what was said with regard to that limitation of time actually occurred and all this came literally to pass; and just as the Babylonians and the kingdom of Babylon were God's special agents for the accomplishment of certain things, so now I believe the Saxons are organised in Britain with Manassch, the United States, and are His agents or servants. Israel, God called His chosen and peculiar treasure, servants elect, heritage, and rod of inheritance. And I cannot but believe that the more clearly men and nations know their mission and work, the more likely are they to fulfil the same. The great trouble with many students of prophecy is, they float their own fancy notions of interpretations; Anglo-Israelism has suffered in this direction like other theories. Some attach their interpretation to their political theory, others to their theological views, such as adventism and other theories. Take for instance Lieut. Totten, of Yale University, a most prolific and voluminous writer, although a believer in the Ten Lost Tribe theory; I charged him three years ago. I said, "Doctor, I imagine you are a man of some peculiar fancies and notions; don't go hanging them on to this theory, it will only bring on it and yourself discredit." Now see how he has roused the United States and brought down the attention of the Government. And so the Roman Catholic Church has been the cause of his dismissal from the Lieutenancy. I tell you, it pays some people to keep in with the hierarchy. It is a wonder to me how long the United States and Canada will boast of their freedom when they are being made the tools of the Pope in Italy.

Men seem to get restive and impatient and unconsciously try and force providence. Take Rev. Baxter, for instance. I will read you some of his predictions. The fifteen predicted events from 1891 until the end of this age on April 11th, 1901. Coming formation of Daniel's Ten-kingdom confederacy by great wars and revolutions, 1891-2; we are past this one. Napoleon's rise as a Hellenic king in 1892-3; we will have up to May for the completion of this one. And Syrian king in 1894. His seven years' covenant with the Jews on April 21st, 1894. Sacrifices renewed in Jerusalem Nov. 8th, 1894. Christ's advent as a bridegroom to translate 144,000 watchful Christians on March 5th, 1896. Flight of many Christians between Feb., Aug., 1897, into a wilderness, and Antichrist's massacre of Christians for 1,260 days, Aug., 1897, to Jan. 26th, 1901. Woes and plagues of seals, trumpets, and vials. Ascension of all remaining Christians on April 6th, 1901. Christ's advent as a Judge at Armageddon, April 11th, 1901, and millennium. Now, there is not a single one of these events that will take place, because there are certain other things to occur before any of them. My time is gone, and will have to leave off till next Sunday.

Let us one and all remember that God rules in the heavens and that He is not in a hurry. Eternity is His dwelling-place, therefore He can afford to leisurely work and operate. The Lord bless us. Amen.—Toronto Evening News, February 27th, 1893.

THE DISCUSSION IN YARMOUTH, NOVA SCOTIA.

No. I.—Anglo-Israelism.

To the Editor of "Yarmouth Light":—Sir,—In reply to "Barrington's" remarks in the second paragraph of his last letter, I beg to say that I passed over the points mentioned therein, thus allowing him to have the last word—and I decline to reconsider those questions—for the following reasons: (1) Unless we are to confine your reader's attention to one or two points, one of us must allow the other to have the last word on every point. (2) Your readers have before them what each of us has said on the questions referred to. They are therefore in a position to decide between us. Further, I am convinced that in the judgment of all intelligent people my position has not been weakened—indeed it has hardly been touched by "Barrington." To let your opponent have the last word is not a sign of weakness in argument, but rather of conscious strength. (3) I have neither time nor space for anything but our direct and more powerful reasons for believing in the Identity of the Anglo-Saxon race with Ephraim-Israel. It must be confessed that both of us have expended too much energy in discussing minor points—mere confirmations of Anglo-Israelism. This is mainly owing to the fact that "Barrington" began at the wrong end of the argument. He commenced his discussion with me, so far as the Scriptural argument is concerned, with my sixth sermon. He should have begun with the first and gone through with them all. These sermons (which are not yet completed) contain a carefully elaborated series of arguments, every step in which is fortified with abundant Scripture references. I rest the truth of Anglo-Israelism on these arguments. To them, therefore, for the present I shall confine my attention. We must come to the main point and there stay. Now I am asked to go into the subject of ethnology. Sir, I am as eager as any man can be to cross swords with your correspondent on ethnological and historical grounds. But one thing at a time. For the present I must be allowed to develop our arguments from Scripture. This done I shall appeal to ethnology, history, and kindred subjects, and I can promise some disclosures of extraordinary beauty and interest. As I unfold the thrilling story of Israel's wanderings from Palestine until, according to prophecy, they reached the shores of Britain, your readers will be filled with wondering sympathy, and will cry aloud, "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, who keepeth covenant and mercy to a thousand generations."

I am sorry to say more about the so-called higher criticism. Two or three sentences will be enough. I affirm that Anglo-Israelism is a complete and triumphant refutation of this criticism. "Barrington" disputes this. Very well. It is useless to go on contradicting one another. Let me develop my argument and prove Anglo-Israelism; then your readers can decide which of us is right. Your correspondent still contends that the apologists accept Kuenon's test of the inspiration of prophecy concerning Israel by its fulfilment. It would be a waste of time for me to deny this contention again. I simply say: Prove it by quotations from the authors you name. I said, and still say, that the higher critics do not believe in any theory of inspiration worth defending. I ask your readers to turn again to the quotations from Cheyne in my last letter, and they will agree with me that any man who insults the holy prophets as this critic does, and yet declares his belief in inspiration, or any man who apologizes for such an one, may in all fairness be asked to tell us what he means by inspiration.

There was a misprint in my quotation from Ephes. ii. 12. It should have read, "at one time," instead of "at the time."

At last the way is clear for the real question, "Are we Israelites?" Henceforth I shall discuss nothing but this, and shall confine myself to direct arguments. The reasoning from Scripture is many sided. I will put a sentence or two in the argument as I intend to develop it. We find in the Bible that Israel of the Ten Tribes should possess in the Christian dispensation numerous, great, distinguishing marks, characteristics, or blessings. The Anglo-Saxon race, and they alone, are enjoying these blessings, etc.; in other words, they are what the prophets foretold Israel should be. Therefore, they are Israel.

The strength of this reasoning never has been and never can be broken. It is bringing over thousands and thousands of earnest souls to Anglo-Israelism, and shedding on the pages of Holy Writ a light of super-eminent beauty and glory. Now I ask the thoughtful attention of all interested.

I.—It was foretold in Gen. xlviii. that Ephraim should develop into "a multitude of nations." I can hardly take "Barrington's" reply as serious. He refers to two statements, one in Numbers and the other in Joshua, for proof that this grand and far seeing prediction was accomplished ages ago. In the first statement we are informed that Ephraim numbered in the wilderness 40,500 men; in the second that Ephraim and Manasseh combined were "a great people" in their own estimation, and perhaps in Joshua's. Now (1) according to Numb. ii. some of the other tribes were more numerous than Ephraim; (2) Manasseh was added to Ephraim in the statement of Joshua; (3) the prophecy says that Ephraim should become "a multitude of nations," whereas in Palestine they were never anything but a single tribe occupying a very small territory. This prediction, therefore, was not fulfilled in Old Testament times. (4) The Hebrew word translated "nations" is "goyim." Now this word always in the plural form refers to nations outside Palestine. So that the prediction really is, that Ephraim should become a multitude of non-Palestine nations. (5) This magnificent promise was to be fulfilled in Gospel times, as I proved in my last letter. Well then, according to Scripture, Ephraim in the Christian dispensation must be found somewhere a multitude of nations outside Palestine. Find a Christian people who have become a multitude of nations, and you find Ephraim. Where shall we look? There is only one answer. The British alone fulfil the prophecy. Therefore the British are Ephraim.

II.—In Gen. xlix. (I hope your readers will study this chapter) we are told, among other things, that Joseph was to be "a fruitful bough, whose branches run over the wall;" that he was to enjoy "the blessings of heaven above, and of the deep"—i.e., the ocean—and he was to reach "to the utmost bound of the everlasting hills." Carefully note (1) these blessings are confined to Joseph—i.e., to Ephraim and Manasseh; (2) they were to be enjoyed in the Christian dispensation (see ver. 1). Now turn to Deut. xxxiii. Moses is there blessing the children of Israel. And this is what he says (ver. 13—18) of Joseph: "Blessed of the Lord be his land, for the precious things of heaven, for the dew, and for the deep that coucheth beneath, and for the precious fruits brought forth by the sun, and for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills, and for the precious things of the earth and fulness thereof. His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the horns of unicorns; with them he shall push the people together to the ends of the earth. They are the ten thousands of Ephraim, and they are the thousands of Manasseh."

Now, putting together these prophecies of Jacob and Moses, what do we learn? That in gospel times Joseph's posterity should be wondrously prosperous, should be connected with the ocean, should be multitudinous, should possess land in all parts of the earth. How should they gain this territory? By "pushing the people to the ends of the earth," or, in other words, "by constant encroachment upon distant nations, and by the gradual attainment of their settlements." Can we find a people thus strangely blessed? If so, we have found Ephraim and Manasseh. Look over the world and you behold the Anglo-Saxon everywhere accomplishing these predictions. We are wondrously prosperous, connected with the ocean, multitudinous, and we have acquired enormous territory in every quarter of the globe by pushing out the aborigines. Of this last surely the Canadians and United States people are undeniable examples. Well, then, the Anglo-Saxon race enjoying these blessings may lay claim to the honour of descending from Joseph, or, to put it another way, we are just the people that Scripture declares Ephraim and Manasseh should become—we of all races on the earth. Therefore we are Ephraim and Manasseh.

III.—God promised Abraham that his seed should become multitudinous as the stars. This promise was repeated from time to time by the prophets. "Barrington" says that because of unbelief the chosen people have in part been rejected. This is true. The Jews are rejected, but Ephraim-Israel, according to prophecy, has been re-betrothed to God, and is now restored to the covenant. "Barrington" goes on to say: "The true Israel is of the heart and not the flesh." This is true only so far that (1) racial descent from Abraham does not save a man; (2) Gentiles by faith in Christ may lay claim to the principles of the covenant. Your correspondent does not enter into any proof of his statements on this point, but refers to Rom. ix., x., xi. Now the true view of this important matter is as follows: The racial seed of Abraham hold and possess the covenants. The Gentile races and the seed of Abraham, other than those that are in the covenant, become sharers in the terms and blessings of the covenant by adoption. Hence there are children of Abraham by racial descent and children in possession of the promises by adoption through faith.

"Barrington" would shut out the literal seed, but Paul emphatically forbids him. In Rom. ix. the apostle expressly declares, speaking of the literal Israel (see ver. 3, 4) that to them "pertaineth (note the present tense) the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises." Well, then, Israel in our era should become multitudinous as the stars. Does not the Anglo-Saxon race possess this mark of Identity? We now number over 100,000,000, and according to competent authorities in 100 years from hence there will be at the very least 1,000,000,000 Anglo-Saxons in the world. Bear in mind, we are not only increasing at an enormous rate, but in greater proportion than any other race, so that in course of time we shall outnumber the rest of the world. How strikingly, then, are we fulfilling this promise of the grand old Abrahamic covenant!

Further marks of Identity in my next.

Yours, etc., C. F. COOPER.

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—Some seven months ago while on the voyage out to Colon, I had lent to me by a Buddhist a condensation of the Buddhistic belief, entitled "A Buddhist Catechism," by Henry S. Olcott, President of the Theosophical Society, &c., revised by the high priest of Buddha, in Ceylon. From this "Catechism" I took the following, intending to wait for further data, and then to weave it into an article. However, "P. C." having forestalled me to a large extent in his article—"The Newton Stone," I think it would be unwise to keep the information back any longer. The culling I took from the "Catechism" is as follows.—

"Q.—What was Buddha's real name then?
A.—Siddartha Gautama, Prince of Kapilavastu.
Q.—Who were his father and mother?
A.—King Suddhodana and Queen Maia.
Q.—What people did this king reign over?
A.—The Sakyas; an Aryan tribe.
Q.—Where was Kapilavastu?
A.—In India, 100 miles north-east of the City of Benares, and about 40 miles from the Himalaya Mountains.
Q.—On what river?
A.—The Rohini; now called the Kohana.
Q.—When was Prince Siddartha born?
A.—623 years before the Christian Era."

It will at once be seen that the above distinctly supports "P. C's." supposition that Buddha belonged to the Sacae race His words are "Buddha's family name was Sakai-muni, and probably he was himself one of the race."

It is very remarkable that the name "Sacana" was given to Britain by the people of India, and is mentioned in the Pur'an'as named Varada and Matsya, deriving its origin from the name of the Sacs or Sacas of Sakyas, Sac-ae, Sak-ai, and Saak-ai, which last is the plural form of Saac or Isaac.

Does not this prove that a branch of the House of Isaac (Amos vii. 16) had been sifted among the Hindoo nations (ix. 9), and yet had fulfilled the prophecy of the latter part of verse 9? I submit that, when we have a record of a people occupying a part of north-east India, about 100 years after the Assyrian captivity, embracing Buddhism and bearing a name practically identical with that of (apparently) another people, who migrated to Britain some centuries later, bringing with them evident traces of Buddhism, while the Indian people themselves name the Isle of Britain after this very tribe, it is only logical to conclude that they were one and the same people. I heartily second the important suggestion of your correspondent "E. L." in the BANNER of May 10th, that contributors should give the authorities for their statements. It would certainly enhance the value of their productions, besides enabling their readers to probe the matter for themselves if they so wished. I therefore append a list of references for the above:—"The Newton Stone," by P. C. "The House of Judah walking to the House of Israel," by J. S. Barton. Dr. G. Moore and Prof. Totten, (see Study 1, "Our Race," pp. 101—111).

Just as I am about to close this letter, the BANNER of May 17th arrives, and on glancing at the correspondence pages I notice Mrs. Reep's letter on the Verangians. The latter half of the last paragraph might to a certain extent raise the question as to whether Ruric and his Waragers were Israelites of the Northmannic branch of the House of Israel, and also whether there was any connection between the dynasty of Ruric and the Cossacks, whose name the Rev. W. H. Poole derives from Goi-Isaak, the sons of Isaac.

Certainly through Odin, the British Royal Line could claim supremacy over at least the southern and western halves of European Russia. I might also remark that Prince George of Wales—and I believe Queen Victoria also—is descended through the Danish Royal Line from Ruric the Founder of the Russian Empire. Whether the British Royal Line has, from a genealogical standpoint, a better claim than any other royal line, including that of the Romanoffs, I am at present unable to say; but if Mrs. Reep or any other of your correspondents who can, would reply to these queries, they would greatly oblige Yours very sincerely,

G. VICARS BROWN.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—May I draw the attention of those of your readers interested in the account of the projected Haifa-Damascus Railway, given in the BANNER, of May 10th, to a verse in Jeremiah where that prophet, after foretelling the future of the nations in the latter days, goes on to tell of the return of Israel and Judah to their own country. "In those days and in that time, saith the Lord, the children of Israel shall come, they and the children of Judah together . . . and I will bring Israel again to his pasture, and he shall feed on Carmel and Bashan, and his soul shall be satisfied upon the hills of Ephraim and in Gilead. In those days and in that time, saith the Lord, the iniquity of Israel shall be sought for, and there shall be none: and the sins of Judah, and they shall not be found; for I will pardon them whom I leave as a remnant" (Jer. l. 4, 19, 20, R.V.).

It is curious that the first ground ceded to an English company should bring into touch with Britain these very four parts mentioned by Jeremiah. Gilead and Ezekiel's "far-famed Hauran" of Bashan are, according to Canon

Tristram and the Rev. K. L. Porter, only waiting to be occupied. Of Sulkhad (Salcah of the Bible, in Deut. iii. 10, &c.) the former, in "Bible Places," p. 330, says: "There are still perfect stone-built and roofed houses, sufficient to accommodate 300 or 400 families, houses with massive, thick walls, solid roofs and doors and window-slabs still swinging. The very fences (stone) of the farms of all the country round are as distinct as if only left last year." The Rev. K. L. Porter, in his "Giant Cities of Bashan," p. 75, says of the same place and neighbourhood: "As nearly as I could estimate, 500 of its houses are still standing, and from three to four hundred families might settle in it at any moment without laying a stone or expending an hour's labour on repairs." With a telescope from this spot he saw upwards of 30 deserted towns.

Perhaps some of your readers may think these large, ready-made homes sound and attractive enough, as the Financial Times says, to induce emigration to the development of this very wealthy country.

Believe me, yours faithfully, C. P.

May 27, 1893.

P.S.—In this week's BANNER—May 24—I see Dr. Hanan has an interesting article on Exod. xvii. 16. Professor Totten is of the same opinion, and mentions it in "Study No. 8," p. 35, 36, "a "Chronological Vindication of the Scriptures."

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—At a meeting of the committee of the Bristol and Clifton branch of the British-Israel Association, held on Feb. 20, 1893, it was decided to arrange for the purchase of or manufacture of a set of lantern slides to illustrate lectures so that some of the arguments in proof of our Israelitish descent may be presented to the public in an attractive and instructive form. This plan was briefly mentioned by me at the last annual meeting of subscribers at the society's rooms in St. Martin's-lane, London, and met with their cordial approval. Three members have very kindly responded to my appeal for help, and as I have already secured fifteen good slides I am very sanguine of being able to carry out my plan to a practical and successful issue. May I ask for the co-operation of all British-Israelites at home and abroad in the furtherance of my plan by their sending me good photographs (the larger the better) or negatives (which is preferable, and may be of any size), or transparencies, or good engravings of any of the undermentioned places, or subjects more or less connected with them:—Malta, showing grand harbour and fortifications; Cyprus, Suez, Perim, Aden, Bombay, Madras, Calcutta, Singapore, Peshawar, Rangoon, Cape of Good Hope, Natal, Cape Coast Castle, Mombasa, Uganda, Mauritius, St. Helena, Ascension, Sydney, Melbourne, Adelaide, Perth, Queensland, Hobart Town, New Zealand, Falkland Isles, Jamaica, British Guiana, Sarawak, Labuan, Constantinople, Penang and Malacca, Dunkirk and Calais, the Botallic mines, Cornwall; Druidical remains, &c. In forwarding the pictures I beg that I may be furnished with a memorandum stating whether they are presented to the Clifton British-Israel Society or whether they are to be returned or sent on approval for purchase. All communications to be addressed to me.

I am, dear sir, yours very truly,

H. SENIOR, Colonel.

Brooklyn, Osborn-road, Clifton.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—On the table before me lies a copy of "Album Illustré des Chemins de Fer et Baleaux Suisses," beautifully illustrated, and containing much historical matter.

Under the title "Saint Gall." or as Bradshaw gives it, "Saint Gallen," I read—"Saint Gall, chef lieu de canton de ce nom, a été fondée presque au commencement du quatrième Siècle (A.D. 300) par l'apôtre Islandaes Gall." Bradshaw, evidently drawing his information from history that has been tampered with by Romish monks, gives the 7th instead of the 4th century. Of course the Swiss account is the more reliable. But Bradshaw mentions that in the archives of the abbey there is a copy of Virgil of the fourth century.

It may be that this copy of Virgil of the 4th century may have been the property of the Irish apostle, Gall, of the commencement of the 4th century. It is not likely that, if the abbey (?) was founded in the 7th century, a copy of Virgil, three hundred years old, would be deposited in such an out-of-the-way place as Saint Gall was when first founded.

If then Ireland sent forth Christian apostles so far south as Switzerland in A.D. 300, it is reasonable to suppose that apostolic Christianity flourished in Ireland in A.D. 200, and that Irish missionary apostles visited Britain, and all the nearer continental states, centuries before Augustine and his idolatrous followers sought to enslave British apostolic Christianity.

There is little doubt in my mind that the British apostolic Church was planted in the Isles of the West by St. Paul, and by some of his companions during the Roman occupation. This extract from a local Swiss publication of the present day confirms this fact. So that we may say that Switzerland owes the Gospel to the House of Israel, as established in the Isles of the West in A.D. 300.

With kind regards, yours truly,

H. L. BLORE.

Pension Mallenhof, Interlaken, May 31st, 1893.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—The following is from the Christian Herald, May 4th, 1893:—

"The May Meetings in London this year are pronounced by a Methodist paper to have had absolutely no parallel in any previous period of human history. Instead of only the first week of May, as formerly, now the first two weeks of May and the last week of April are occupied every day with annual meetings in the public halls of London, of the various Christian and philanthropic societies, which are the chief glory of modern England. They represent a development of philanthropy more vast and more varied than has ever previously been witnessed on earth, and which has no parallel to-day in any other country. Home missionary organizations seeking to reach every class of the community, foreign missionary gatherings representing efforts to evangelize every people under heaven, the Bible Society, tract societies, temperance organizations of all sorts, medical and philanthropic societies to comfort the lonely, protect the friendless, welcome the stranger, and relieve the sick, asylums for every phase of mental and physical disease—in a word, institutions intended to promote the welfare of men in every conceivable direction pass before us in a long procession, which is almost bewildering by its variety, and its multitudinousness. In Exeter Hall the first five days of the opening week of May, always witness the meeting of the five societies. Wesleyan Missionary on Monday, Church Missionary on Tuesday, Bible Society on Wednesday, City Missionary on Thursday, Jews Society on Friday."

Dear Sir, is not this a proof of the Israelitish origin of this nation? and yet the Rev. Baxter declares we are one of the ten horns of the wild beast. Is it likely that one of the ten horns would be engaged in such a grand and Christ-like work as this? Facts are stubborn things.

I remain, yours in hope of Israel,

G. WELLS, JUNR.

38, Dudley-road, Tunbridge Wells, May 27th, 1893.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We would remark in reference to the above that there is no wonder in the matter, or reason for astonishment, since the British people are "lost Israel found." For what said the prophet Isaiah, our prophet, in Chap. xxvii. 6, R.V.? "In days to come, shall Jacob take root; Israel shall blossom and bud; and THEY shall fill the face of the world with fruit." Facts correspond with prophecy; but men, who are blind, cannot see it!—ED.

THE EMPIRE WHICH IS SPORADIC AND UBIQUITOUS.

A LEADING article in the Standard of May 11, 1893, contains the following, which literally might have originated in the BANNER OF ISRAEL, from the pen of its editor. Its sentiments are ours; but the writer does not know why our empire is what he tells us it is, nor the reason for the phenomena he describes:—

It requires no inconsiderable effort of the imagination, even on the part of those who are in the habit of employing that faculty, to conceive the vast extent and the varied character of the British Empire. History presents no record of a similar exercise of power by a single nation. The Roman Empire, extensive as it was, was for the most part the result of constant lateral expansion over contiguous territories inhabited by races far inferior in civilization to their conquerors. There were no gaps, so to speak, no intervals, in the area covered by the Pax Romana. It is the unprecedented peculiarity of the British Empire to be at once sporadic and ubiquitous. There is no continent into which it does not extend, no sea it has not penetrated, no territorial appellation where its name is not pronounced, and its flag does not wave. It is no presumption, but a bare statement of fact, to affirm that, in strict parlance, there is but one empire in the world, and that our own. The Rulers of other realms have arrogated to themselves the Imperial title, but the Queen-Empress is, in truth, the only Sovereign whose sway wholly corresponds with her designation. Over every sphere our authority is spread. Arctic and Antarctic alike confess our commanding presence, and whether under tropical suns, or under Hyperborean snows, both military and civil servants of the British Crown enforce obedience and vindicate law. The "gorgeous East" is little more than a theatre for our conquests, and an area for our commerce. The map of the world is studded with our possessions, our colonies, our dependencies; here in genial and productive climates, there along deadly and miasmatic coasts, and there, again, up river reaches long deemed inaccessible even to the solitary explorer. Since such is the mighty and unparalleled inheritance which has devolved upon the English people by the enterprise, the daring, and the tenacity of their progenitors, it is well that they should, from time to time, be reminded of the fact by such a ceremonial as that of yesterday. The highest reward of greatness is to be conscious of it, provided that the consciousness be borne with simple and steadfast dignity, and be accompanied by a silent but unflinching resolve to uphold it. It is of the utmost importance to the maintenance of our empire that every Englishman, and every member of that empire, should be keenly alive to the glorious privilege of belonging to it. Once the Imperial instinct is awakened in a man, he enjoys a larger and fuller vitality, and pursues his individual task in life, fortified and ennobled by the proud knowledge that he belongs to a manly, intrepid, and ruling race. Such a sentiment should stimulate him, in his own sphere and within the limits of his own opportunities, so to comport himself that he may be recognised as belonging to what Macaulay finely called "the hereditary aristocracy of mankind."

The empire which is "sporadic," or "scattered," yet "ubiquitous," or "everywhere present," is one descriptive of the British only. Colonies such as ours, which have already started as "nations" on their own account, are peculiar to ourselves. The Germans, the French, the Spanish, and Portuguese, have none such, and they are the only nations existing who have tried to emulate us in this respect.

The language of the Standard newspaper plainly points to an empire which is destined to be world-wide, and is already approaching that definition. Its sovereign is the only true "Empress" the world has seen. The language of her people is fast becoming the language of the world. Her empire is "sporadic," spread like the seed of a plant by reason of her world-wide Gates; and "ubiquitous" because the latter are situated in all zones; and in many quarters have developed into colonial nations, the centres of vast Imperial possessions, like the Dominion of Canada, Australia, and the Australasian Islands, South Africa, Central, East, West, and North Africa, including Egypt. Besides these there are the military dependencies of British India and Burmah, with Ceylon and the islands of the Indian Ocean, having Aden and Singapore as their Western and Eastern Gates, guarding them from hostile approach from Europe, and from the China Seas respectively.

God has assigned to His people Israel the duty and privilege of spreading the Gospel among "all nations, families, and kindreds of the earth." To enable us better to do this He has given our Empress-Queen a vast dominion, which has, in its "sporadic" character become coterminous with all other (alien) nations of the world they are destined to evangelize. It is "ubiquitous" to enable us to administer God's grace to every race in the world; whether in the ice-bound regions of Greenland, or in the burning plains of India, or of Central Africa, where Uganda is the most recent instance of a semi-savage African people yielding obedience, which is almost national, to Christ the King. A nation such as ours, so scattered, and yet so powerful to influence other alien races, is clearly the one best fitted to carry the Gospel to all nations, families and kindreds of the earth. God, who has been silently building up this mighty empire to carry out His work for the benefit of the world has given us, His chosen people, just the power, greatness, and influence, He promised to Israel His inheritance to fit them for this very work, according to the prophecies.

It is satisfactory to see that the Standard newspaper appreciates the modern facts connected with Great Britain and its empire at their proper value; and recognises in Her Majesty's dominion an empire unique in its character, and such as the world has never seen before. To the Lord be all the praise! Regarding this article, our friend, Mr. Anderson, writes thus:—

"Such full accounts have been published, and so much written regarding the inauguration of the Imperial Institute by Her Majesty, that we do not purpose giving any detailed account of this most interesting ceremony, which very distinctly marks an era in our national history. We wish simply to note some remarks of the Standard in a leader of May 11, as they call for special notice on the part of British-Israelites, on account of their appropriateness to the present position of affairs. After describing the surroundings, and stating that the people wished to participate with their Sovereign in the inauguration of a great work—henceforward to be regarded as one of the most notable land-marks in a long and illustrious reign—the Standard wrote as quoted above.

Regarding it Mr. Anderson further remarks as follows:—

Now we would ask our friends whether such statements as these are not identical with those promulgated in the BANNER OF ISRAEL? and whether any British-Israelite reading them would not naturally say they were written by a British-Israelite? But the Standard goes far beyond what we have been accustomed to read in the BANNER OF ISRAEL—namely, that, being Israel, we are the chief among the nations, for the Standard declares, with great truth, "There is but one empire in the world, and that our own," and declares that this is "no presumption, but a bare statement of fact" (Deut. xxviii. 1 and 13). What need of further testimony?

THE presents to the Princess May and Duke of York are said to be worth about £250,000, and include one thousand bundles of firewood, sent by poor tramps in the Church Army Labour Homes, and several type-writers.

OUR readers who may be leaving town for the sea-side, will confer a favour on the publishers if they request their bookseller or newsagent to retain to their return their usual supply of the BANNER OF ISRAEL.

IMPERIAL FEDERATION.

By B. HAILES.

IN the May number of the Religious Review of Reviews there is an article by the Rev. Arthur Finlayson, upon "Imperial Federation," which runs very much upon BANNER OF ISRAEL lines, though we must accept what the rev. gentleman says as blind evidence, for he apparently writes in ignorance of the reason why the greatness of Britain, which he so well portrays, is given to her.

That the recent opening of the Imperial Institute by our beloved Queen will, without doubt, call more attention to the important question of Imperial Federation, than has yet been given to it, is already manifest, when the query is in every mouth, what good will the Institute do? And Mr. Finlayson has done well to state in so lucid a manner the claim of Imperial Federation in a popular magazine, before the national enthusiasm called forth by the splendid opening ceremonial has time to cool, for the more widely the knowledge of what federation aims at, the more deeply will the desirability thereof sink into the national heart, and though, as Mr. Finlayson says, "Festina lente is a good motto for all advocating federation," yet it is well that the great subject should be thought about, talked about, and well-digested, over the greatest area possible.

The facts which the writer of the article referred to gives us, of the vastness of the British Empire, beside which "the powerful world-kingdoms of Assyria and Persia fade into insignificance," and the "dominions" of which "exceed fourfold those of ancient Rome," the influence which she maintains in the world, the wonderful spread of the English language, which "is fast becoming the dominant speech of the world," show, without doubt, that "British ubiquitous presence and influence are acknowledged to be factors of untold value to the world." And the binding together of the English-speaking people in a vast federation of the Empire, would have a power and influence over the whole world, of which we can hardly dream at present.

That such a federation will sooner or later take place, we who know that the promise given to Abraham by God Almighty, "a nation and a company of nations shall be of thee," is a promise to Britain, Israel of the Ten Tribes, regard as certain, though we quite recognize that God works by human means, and therefore it is well that by writing, lecturing, speaking, the subject should continually be brought forward until it assumes a "solid shape and substance."

Though Mr. Finlayson is right in saying that "it would be idle and frivolous to mention these points for the sake of vain-glorying," and we acknowledge that "let him who thinketh he standeth take heed," "has a moral for nations as for individuals," yet we cannot for a moment contemplate Prince Bismarck's pessimistic proposition, "If the British Empire were to collapse." It is just this little word if which makes all the difference. "If," saith the Lord, "these ordinances of the sun, moon, and stars, depart from before Me, then the seed of Israel also shall cease from being a nation before Me for ever."

It is God who "giveth us power to get wealth," who has made our nation great, who has fulfilled His promise to Joseph that his "daughters (colonies) should run over the wall";—who has given to Great Britain her maritime supremacy, upon whom the nation depends absolutely for its daily bread," and He will in His own good time so dispose and make ready the hearts of men," that Imperial Federation, so ably advocated by Mr. Finlayson, shall become an accomplished fact, and the "ties light as air, strong as iron," which shall bind the mother country and her daughters, "making us a great homogeneous people, knit together by the ties of blood, language, religion, literature, laws and common interest," shall enable the Anglo-Saxon race, Israel, God's covenanted people, to whom is promised "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven," to be a blessing in the midst of the world. To Israel's God be all the praise.

THE DISCUSSION IN YARMOUTH, NOVA SCOTIA.

No. II.—Anglo-Israelism.

Reply (No. IV.) to Rev. C. F. Cooper.

Mr. Cooper claims (1) that Anglo-Saxons are Israel; (2) that the theory of Anglo-Israelism alone explains certain prophecies in the Old Testament; (3) that Anglo-Israelism is the one convincing proof of the inspiration of the Scriptures; (4) that Anglo-Israelism only can meet, successfully, the attacks of the new school of "higher criticism." On the first claim the other three rest. That claim is based upon hypothetical reasoning and the assumption that Israel as Israel was to be preserved. Farrar, in his "Early Christianity," says: "The Ten Tribes had, as a body, been indistinguishably lost among the nations into whose countries they had been transplanted; but there were probably some communities, and certainly many families, which had preserved their genealogy and still took pride in the thought that they belonged to this or that tribe of ancient Israel" (page 375). In Deut. xxviii. 25, we read: "The Lord shall cause thee to be smitten before thine enemies; thou shalt go out one way against them, and flee seven ways before them; and shalt be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth." Then Jer. xv. 4: "I will cause them to be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth." Repeated in chap. xxiv. 9; chap. xxix. 18; chap. xxxiv. 17. Again, Amos ix. 9: "I will sift the House of Israel among all nations." And in Luke xxi. 24, "shall be led away captive among all nations." That general prophecy concerning the Hebrew race in the different dispersions of that race has received the seal of truth.

I.—As to the Assyrio-Babylon captivity. First the Ten Tribes were taken, then the two. What after the seventy years captivity? Our enquiry is as to Israel! Did they return? "Ye shall be gathered one by one, O ye children of Israel" (Isa. xxvii. 12). "The captivity of this host of the children of Israel shall possess that of the Canaanites" (Obadiah 20). Then Ezek. xxxvii. 16—22: "Judah and Israel to be one, gathered into their own land." Did that occur? Ezra ii. 59, "And their seed whether they were of Israel" Ezra. vi. 16, "And the children of Israel." Also, verse 17, "And for a sin-offering for all Israel, twelve he-goats, according to the number of the tribes of Israel." (See chap. viii. 35.) That many of Israel did return is beyond question. Likewise Israel ceased to be a kingdom. "Within three-score and five years shall Ephraim be broken that it be not a people" (Isa. vii. 8).

Those who returned separated themselves "from the people of the land" (Ezra x.), and set aside their unlawful marriages. Ezra knew the word Israel meant more than "lineal descendancy," it carried with it covenant relations guarded by expressed conditions. Weaned from idolatry they started anew—one people under "one head."

II.—The dispersion by Alexander the Great. By conquest of the Persian Empire: "He settled 8,000 Jews in Thebasis, and the Jews formed a third of his new city of Alexandria" ("Farrar's Life and Work of St. Paul"). Then came further dispersion after Alexander's death, when Egypt gained possession of Palestine. The extent of such dispersions may be gathered from Acts ii. 5: "And there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven" (see also verses 7—11). Philo says: "Jewish people . . . are in almost all the flourishing countries. . . . All the countries which had a fertile territory possess Jewish inhabitants." Subsequent scattering need not be noticed. Enough that to-day they are "among all nations."

How did the dispersed, after the first return, regard religion and duty? They maintained worship of the true God. Both Philo and Josephus declare that. Then the number of synagogues named in Paul's travels are witness of the fact. And the gathering at the annual feast named in Acts ii. confirms it. Then during the captivity did they let go their traditions? "For Israel hath not been forsaken nor Judah of his God" (Jer. li. 5). "By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down, yea, we wept, when we remembered Zion" (Psa. cxxxvii. 1).

Then there is the character of the proclamations of Cyrus, Darius, and Artaxerxes, as named by Ezra (see Ezra i. 2, 3; vi. 8—10; vii. 12, 13). "The strongly marked religious character is very unusual in heathen documents" ("Rawlinson's Historical Evidences," Lect. 5, page 147). That character could only arise through fidelity on the part of those "who remembered Zion."

Thus we have (1) prophecy and fulfilment as to the dispersion; (2) the union of Israel and Judah; (3) the preservation of "a seed;" (4) fidelity to traditions. That after the captivity they were free from idolatry, admits of no doubt; and that they joined in the idolatrous practices of "the strange land," as a people, cannot be maintained. The opposite, as has been shown, was true of many; and the Book of Daniel is evidence of the fact. Anglo-Israelism teaches us "that the British Isles were settled by Israelites who came there through Europe;" and that the named "Israelites" were "Anglo-Saxons." What was the nature of their early religion? "The religion of the early Germans was a crude nature worship; . . . the personification of the forces of nature" (Dr. Otto Fleiderer). "The religion of these men, Anglo-Saxons, was the same as that of the rest of the German peoples" ("Green's English History"). Thus we have no trace of the worship of the true God either in usage or custom, in these "Anglo-Saxon Israelites," but instead, a number of deities, whose names are in the names of our days of the week; and a mythology living in our current language. A mythology essentially Aryan in character as shown in Keary's "Dawn of History." Not even Assyrian or Persian. Yet it is claimed that they were not only Semitic, but Israelitish! "One of the oldest names of the Deity among the Semitic nations was El. It meant strong. It occurs in the Babylonian inscriptions as Ilu—God—and in the very name of Bab-il, the gate or temple of Il" (Professor Max Müller). That name is not found in the names of the gods of the "Anglo-Saxon Israelites." The conclusion is manifest that we are not Israel. Mr. Cooper in his last wisely removes the slain, and puts forward, arrayed in an elaborate dress, his wounded "Napoleon's guard."

Attention is called again to Gen. xlviii. 19. That promise, we are told, "was not fulfilled in Old Testament times," and "that Ephraim should become a multitude of non-Palestine nations." Is that so? "Shall be wanderers among the nations." "Ephraim is smitten, their root is dried up, they shall bear no fruit." "My God will cast them away" (Hosea ix. 16, 17). Just what was predicted in Deut. xxviii. 63, 64. Mr. Cooper's strong "reasoning" being "broken," I need not notice his strange explanation of the word "nations," nor further notice the promise.

The next is Gen. xlix. 22–26, and Deut. xxxiii. 13—18. Mr. Cooper says:—"That in Gospel times Joseph's posterity should be wondrously prosperous . . . possess land in all parts of the earth . . . multitudinous." Also, in "Gospel times" by "encroachments," i.e., war and plunder, gain "territory," and rob "nations" of their "settlements." All in "Gospel times!" Still as a race be the Israel of God! As a race the "Israel" of the "covenant" in "Gospel times!" As the Hebrew nation was the Hebrew Church, the English nation is the English Church! In "Gospel times" Christ said, "shall be led away captive into all nations," confirming "Moses and the prophets." He also said, "My kingdom is not of this world;" "they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." Paul said in the new covenant "there's neither Jew nor Gentile." The "new wine" of the kingdom cannot be put in the "old bottles" of race privileges. Paul, a "Hebrew of the Hebrews," was saved not by reason of descent, but as a man. The "Mediator of the new covenant" is for a world. "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." "Behold, I make all things new." The old in the new covenant yet the new is more, and the old is fulfilled in the new. Thus—(1) by the prophets of the old covenant; (2) by the declarations of "the Mediator of the new covenant;" (3) by the letter and spirit of the New Testament; (4) by the historic facts of race-history, we being Aryan; (5) by the historic facts herein named. Mr. Cooper's conclusions are not in accord with fact and truth.

The next is God's promise to Abraham (Gen. xxii. 17, 18), and is put by Mr. Cooper in our "era," and applied to the "Anglo-Saxon race." The "mark of identity" being "multitudinousness." Let us see what the promise is: "I will mulitiply thy seed as the stars" . . . "as the sand which is upon the sea-shore" . . . "And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." The other part of the promise has been dealt with. Mark! Mr. Cooper puts it in this dispensation, when Christ said the Hebrew race "should be led away captive into all nations;" and the prophets said they should be "scattered," "a remnant;" and historic continuity bears witness to the fact. But what does Paul tell us about the promise? "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. . . . And to thy seed, which is Christ" (Gal. iii. 16). As to the other part of the promise: "Sprang there even of one so many as the stars" . . . "as the sand" . . . "by the sea-shore innumerable" (Heb. xi. 12).

Once more Mr. Cooper's conclusions must be cast aside. Your correspondent gives us what is named as the "true view" of Rom. ix.—xii. We are told: "The racial seed of Abraham hold and possess the covenants." Paul classifies the world into two, "Jew and Gentile." Do the Jews "hold and possess the covenants?" If so, why Christian missions to them? Then did the heathen Anglo-Saxons, with their wooden worship, "hold and possess the covenants?" If not, why? Mr. Cooper says they were "Israel!" Now, in the Word the new covenant is "righteousness by faith" unto all and for all "in Christ;" for there is neither "Jew nor Greek," for "ye are all one in Christ." One as to redemption—"God so loved the world;" one as to privilege—"Whosoever will;" one as to condition—"faith in the Lord Jesus Christ." That is Paul's teaching and Gospel—that covenant is for man as man, and for a world.

As to Mr. Cooper's "100,000,000 Anglo-Saxons"—"At this moment there are fifty million speaking the English tongue throughout the world" ("Fifty Years of Progress, Imperial Federation League," 1886).—From the Yarmouth Light, March 2, 1893.

NEWS FROM AUSTRALIA.

THE following comes to us from the St. Kilda Chronicle, of Feb. 18, 1893, being a newspaper published in South Yarra, Melbourne, Victoria.

THE BRITISH-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

[BY EPSILON.]

It is matter for much regret, and serious reflection, that the people of Victoria are so little interested by intellectual entertainments of any kind whatever.

Cricket, rowing, football, or racing, may be all very well in a way—for everything there is a time and season; but Victorians so over devote themselves to these sports, that when Sunday comes they are too fatigued to attend to religious duties, or to meetings of a semi-religious character.

As regards the B.I.A. moderately attended meeting on Sunday afternoon last, it may truly be said that all who apathetically refrained from, or through other causes were prevented from attending the comprehensive and able lecture of Mr. Robson, in the Foresters' Hall, South Yarra, lost an intensely interesting and instructive treat.

A really good tale can seldom be too often told; so on some future Sunday Mr. Robson should do an "encore" to oblige the intelligent public of South Yarra, Windsor, and Prahran.

Referring incidentally to the writings of the learned historian Sharon Turner, he spoke of his having clearly traced the origin of the Teutonic Anglo-Saxon race, to the shores of the Caspian Sea, and this, too, without in his day any knowledge of the Anglo-Israelite theory, founded as it is on far earlier historical facts—viz.: that, although in the Babylonian captivity, with trifling exception, the whole race of the children of Israel, was deported from Palestine to the kingdom of the Medes and Persians, in the days of Nebuchadnezzar (Jer. l. 17), and further that the two tribes of Judah and Levi went wholly back to Jerusalem after the seventy years' captivity, yet, the so-called Lost Ten Tribes disappeared from the view of historical records, by one of the routes leading away from the shores of the Caspian Sea, doubtless a North-westerly one.

Hence the original nucleus of the all-conquering, and all-accomplishing British race, prior to its Teutonic and Saxon periods of time.

It is this race, the English, which was under God's predestined plan, to go forth girdling the globe with its possessions, carrying with them "the Gospel of the kingdom to the heathen of the uttermost parts of the earth."

After the address Mr. H. Stephens proposed a vote of thanks to the lecturer, and Mr. Espenett seconded, which was heartily carried.

I may add that if the thinking portion of the community would make an effort to attend these meetings they would often not only pass a very pleasant hour, but add to their store of knowledge respecting the past, present, and future destiny of the English race.

ENGLAND AND RUSSIA.

By E. Reep.

The invasion of India by Russia is regarded by a writer in the Nineteenth Century for May, as an inevitable coming event. This great campaign, it is said, will probably be the greatest the world is destined to see, and so far-reaching in its effects as to make it impossible at the present time to say how the world's history will be affected by it.

The result of a military conflict between England and Russia, and its influence on the history of nations, is, of course, merely a matter of uncertainty to those who have failed to discern the Identity of the British race with the House of Israel. To those whose inner consciousness has received this fact, it is quite possible to realize what the issue will be when England and Russia enter upon their mighty struggle for Asiatic supremacy as predicted in Ezek. xxxviii., ix. Prophecy has foretold what the end shall be. The prince of Rosh (Russia, see R.V.) will not, according to Scripture, prevail. Israel will prevail, and Israel is Britain.

Captain Younghusband, the author of the Nineteenth Century article, rather despises Persia as a military power, but he sees plainly enough that to Russia, at war with England, she would be an invaluable ally. Ezekiel also foresaw this circumstance, whereby we have the sure knowledge that Persia will take side with Rosh whenever the great campaign begins. Fortunately, British-Israel has nothing to fear from Persia electing to serve Russia. Her safety does not depend on the attitude of Persia, nor on any other earthly ally; her salvation depends on another source of assistance altogether. Where and whence will come the needed help is amply recorded in Ezek. xxxix.

Though in the future, for political and other reasons, Persia seems destined to act against England, at the present time the most friendly feeling is expressed in that country towards the English. Mrs. Bishop (Isabella Bird) has chronicled in "Journeys in Persia and Kurdistan," the high admiration felt by Persians for the English people. The Khan of Rustami was asked why the Bakhtiaris liked the English? "Because," was the reply, "they are brave and like fighting, and because they conquer all nations, and do them good after they have conquered them. Ah," he added, "why don't the English come and take this country? If they don't, Russia will, and we would rather have the English. We're tired of our lives. There's no rest or security." Another Khan declared that an English fleet at Basrah, with an English army on board, would be the best sight which Bakhtiari eyes could see.

The almost general opinion throughout Persia that England holds in her hands the scales of justice, moves Mrs. Bishop to remark:—"This widely diffused belief in England as the redresser of wrongs is very touching. All these people have heard of the way in which the cultivators in India have been treated, of land settlements, and English settlement officers, and they say England could make everything right for us.'

Aziz Khan echoed the oft-repeated question, "Why does not England come and give us peace? In a few years we should all be rich, and not have to fight each other."

British-Israelites are often twitted with over-estimating England's power and influence in making herself a blessing to all nations. That she inherits such power and influence by right of her Hebrew origin and Abrahamic birthright, is an assertion, when made, only to be relegated to a place where the wise and learned fear to tread. And yet he that runs may read, and sink into the depths of his mind the absolute certainty that the Persians are right in looking upon the British race as a seed in whose supreme dominion and power all the nations are to be blessed.

At the Shah's death it is expected by some Persians that Persia will be divided between Russia and England. "With the shadow of a Russian occupation," says Mrs. Bishop, "of the Northern Provinces of the empire in a not far distant future, any step in the direction of reform taken by the Shah involves difficulties of which the outer world has no conception." This circumstance no doubt accentuates the desire of the Persians that their country should fall under English rule. Hence the wonder that is expressed at England's hesitation to annex Afghanistan. Captain Younghusband forecasts that the Afghans and Herat will fall an easy prey to the Russians when the day arrives for action. It is, however, very unsafe for any non-British Israelite to settle how the coming struggle will affect either England or Russia. Notwithstanding, we may perfectly agree with Captain Younghusband in saying, "But though mountain chains, and deep and swift rivers may not form inviolable frontiers, the resuscitative power, and the vast tenacity of purpose of the British nation will form an obstacle immeasurably more potent than mountains or rivers—national attributes which, sooner or later, will now, as in the past, turn the tide, and bring back victory to her standards." Why this sure victory unless it be that the British nation is in truth that people of whom it is written, "I will heal their backsliding, I will love them freely. . . I will be as the dew unto Israel: he shall grow as the lily. . . His branches shall spread, and his beauty shall be as the olive tree. . . They that dwell under his shadow shall revive as the corn, and grow as the vine; the scent shall be as the wine of Lebanon" (Hos. xiv.)? "Who is wise, and he shall understand these things? prudent, and he shall know them."

AN ERRONEOUS CONCLUSION BASED ON FALSE PREMISES.

By V. M. Cox.

Among the meetings proceeding last month in London, the Christian World reports one of special interest which took place at the Cannon-street Hotel, on the morning of Wednesday, May 3rd, under the auspices of the Ladies' Extension Committee, and in connection with the Foreign Mission Work of the Sunday School Union. After a public breakfast, many interesting speeches were delivered, and much important information was given. But one item concerns us as Banner readers, more than any other. It is that "Deaconess Abraham, attired in Persian costume, addressed the meeting. She administered a neat rebuke to those who say they belong to the Lost Ten Tribes."

"You are not Israel," she said, "or you would pray for the real children of promise." A further quotation from her remarks is given, but it is this that chiefly calls for comment, at the present moment. Deaconess Abraham arrived at the conclusion that British Christians are not Israelites, by reliance on three distinct premises, all of which we think can be easily shown to be false—and if so, the conclusion falls of course to the ground. They are as follows:—

1. That British Christians never pray for the Jews.
2. That the Jews are alone entitled to be called children of promise.

Digitized by Google

3. That Lost Israel, wherever found, is to be recognized more by the fact of her prayerfulness on behalf of Judah, than by the marks prophetically assigned her in the Scriptures.

Now let us examine separately these propositions. Can Deaconess Abraham prove her somewhat daring implication that we, as British Christians, do not pray for the Jews? Surely not. If we mistake not, there are Missions to the Jews under the auspices of British Christians, and mainly supported by their contributions. Is it conceivable that these evangelising operations are carried on without earnest prayer to the God of Israel for their advancement? Has not a marked measure of success, indeed, been given to this especial phase of Christian work? and this being conceded, may we not suppose that this blessing has been vouchsafed in answer to the petitions of those who have this mission especially at heart? And since this "neat rebuke" is designed specifically for believers in Our Identity, what of ourselves? Does not our prayer-union exist for the purpose, among other objects, of remembering our brethren of Judah in prayer? that they may accept Jesus as their Messiah, be restored to the Divine favour, reunited with Israel, and reinstated in the Land of Promise. Surely, then, the rebuke falls pointless because unmerited, for if to pray for the Jews be a proof of Identity with Israel, this is a characteristic of Anglo-Israelites in a pre-eminent degree.

But Deaconess Abraham further implies that the term children of promise is the exclusive property of the Jewish people. It would appear that the Ten Tribes have no claim to a share in it. "If you (British) were Israel," she says, "you would pray for the real children of promise," obviously for Jews only. We should like to be informed what chapter and verse affords foundation for so extraordinary a conclusion. The promises, originally, were given to Abraham, the father of the Twelve-tribed nation; but when later on the duality of the nation came in view, it was to Joseph that the birthright pertained while Judah's was the regal dignity and the promise of becoming the progenitor of the Messiah. The promises were distinct and separate, but as each had its especial destiny to fulfil, while in some respects, such as the inheritance of the land, both had a claim, we fail to perceive why the Jews are to be termed the real children of promise to the exclusion of the other $\frac{5}{6}$ of the Hebrew family. To Joseph's House certainly pertained the multitudinous seed, the Gates, the company of nations, and in the Christian dispensation, the custody of the oracles of God; while the gift of the land is to Israel equally with Judah, nor can either permanently possess it without the other. We must therefore protest against Deaconess Abraham's action in arrogating to the Jews solely a title to which they have at the most but $\frac{1}{6}$ of a share. Children of promise they undoubtedly are, but to claim for them that they are the real children of promise, exclusive of the Ten Tribes, is to claim far more than one can find any guarantee for in Scripture.

But lastly, the Deaconess evidently regards prayerfulness on behalf of the Jews, as an indispensable characteristic of the Ten Tribes, wherever discovered. She herself says of the British, "You are not Israel;" therefore it is for her to determine by a test proposed by herself, the nation in Christendom which represents Lost Israel in A.D. 1893. We say "in Christendom," because a nation which intercedes with God on behalf of the chosen people, must necessarily be a Christian nation; and this definitely narrows the field of investigation. There are not so many professedly Christian nations, and since this lady has put Great Britain beyond the pale, her task of identification should be a simple one. But should her quest prove fruitless, as we opine it must, the conclusion is inevitable that Ten-tribed Israel is non-existant. Britain alone bears every prophetic mark, including the one which is the great sine qua non in Deaconess Abraham's opinion; and if the Ten Tribes be not found in this nation, we are compelled to believe they are defunct; and that the search for them is hopeless indeed. But if the heir of the birthright be not forthcoming, what of the covenant? If God belie His word to Israel, will He be more likely to verify His promises to Judah?

We will not, however, admit the possibility of His failing in either. We are assured that every jot and tittle is certain to be made good to all the children of promise. Such we, in conjunction with Judah, claim to be, and we cannot but pray for the hastening of that blessed time when the Jews shall walk to our island home, and when Ephraim and Judah, returning together to the land, shall become one nation on the mountains of Israel, under the sway of David's greater Son, whose tabernacle shall be in the midst of them for evermore.

It may be, that these remarks will never reach the eye of Deaconess Abraham, but it is not unlikely that they may come under the notice of some who are in sympathy with her observations. To such we desire to commend the foregoing criticism of her views; and we hope the result may be that they may see how untenable is her position, and be constrained to accept the only belief which is in perfect accordance with Scripture, with history, and with common-sense—the belief in the Identity of Britain with Ten-tribed Israel.

BRITISH-ISRAEL, THE KINGDOM OF THE "MOUNTAIN."

By the Rev. Thomas Lowe.

We cannot fail to be impressed with the grandeur and greatness of this prophetic vision. To what does it refer? What is the dominion here described whose sovereignty with more than Rome's might and majesty

> "Bestriding the world
> Like a Colossus"?—Vide Dan. ii. 35.

It is generally supposed to represent the spiritual kingdom of the Messiah, which shall yet become "a great mountain and fill the whole earth." But we question this exegesis, popular as it really is with Biblical critics and students.

After much thought and careful research, we think it applies to the world-wide dominating influence and rule of British-Israel. The dominions described in the context the Chaldean, the empire of the Medes and Persians, the kingdom of the brazen-coated Greeks, then the Roman Empire, which conquered nearly the whole world. The inevitable crash came when the Roman Empire became by a mixture of barbarous nations, Goths, Huns, and Vandals, by the incursions of whom it was torn asunder about the fourth century (A.D.) and ultimately was divided into ten kingdoms, answering to the ten toes of the colossal image.

The extent of Babylonian dominion varied from time to time according to the power of the various monarchs, in general increasing from age to age, and reaching its greatest limit nearly six centuries (B.C.). In the reign of Nebuchadnezzar it extended over Chaldea, Assyria, Arabia, Syria, Egypt, and Lybia—the "head of gold" of the great image, 'the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency.

It is worthy of note that Assur was worshipped as the great god by the Assyrians, king of the gods, and father of the gods, and, as the Assyrians conceived of him as superior to the other deities, they would not introduce him into the genealogy of the gods, but called him "the god who created himself."

Assur had a famous temple in the city of Assur, called "Sadi-matati," or the mountain of the world. Bel was the god to whom Babylon was considered to belong. We name Babylon in connection with Assyrian greatness because the two powers became inseparably associated. Latterly their fortunes were identical.

Where is all that magnificence of imperial pomp and power now? The great city which counted its population by millions, and filled the world with renown not yet forgotten, has disappeared under the dust and ruins of twenty centuries.

"Her place on earth abideth not,
Dominion she hath none;
Darkness and ruin thou may'st find,
But ne'er find Babylon."

Look at England! What of the world-dominating British Empire? By her valour, her martial prowess, her naval might, her political power, her supreme diplomacy, her untiring enterprise, her language, her skill, her literature, her Bible Society, her moral influence, her missions, her colonies, her religion, her charities, her rule, her imperial sway, the splendour of her fame, filling the whole earth with unresisted sweep! England is peerless in the insularity of her people, and yet possessing a prestige which thunders through the world, as Tennyson rightly expresses it:—

"The battle-thunder of God!"

She is growing in wealth and influence and power. Freedom, security, and happiness have spread among her people—the best of all lands in which to dwell, the glory of the nations. Her people are the most prosperous, the most favoured, the most free of all the peoples in Europe. And why? We write tentatively, not dogmatically, but firm in our belief that this imperial power, filling and dazzling the whole earth, is mainly based on one sublime fact—our Israelitish origin—and hence "the kingdom of the mountain." The regal power of David's throne remains in perpetuity: "There shall not fail thee a man in My sight to sit on the throne of Israel" (1 Kings viii. 25); "Let the whole earth be filled with His glory" (Psa. lxxii. 18, 19).

A METHODIST'S ADVICE TO THE POPE.

(Forwarded from Ireland.)

The name of Chaplain McCabe, D.D., the great Missionary Secretary, is a household word in Methodism, and no man in America is better known among Church people generally. He recently uttered the following stirring words:—

"I wonder if the Pope would receive a little counsel from a Methodist preacher? If so, here it is: Be quiet, old man! The world has slipped by you. Some nations that are free from your yoke will never put it on again, and they mean to see that all nations, and kindreds, and tribes, and tongues, shall have the same liberty they enjoy. 'Peter, put up the sword.' The Master told you that long ago. You have used that sword more against the friends than against the foes of Christ. The nations built upon the truth of God have grown too mighty for your control. You cannot convince them, for you have no argument, no logic, and no success in nation-building to enforce the sophistry of what you call argument. You cannot compel them, for the military power of the world has passed into Protestant hands. The effort to regain it for Rome has cost you dear. Remember Maximilian and the Empire of Mexico. Austria has had her Sadowa; France has had her Sedan. Buy no more wisdom at such a price. Neither France, nor Spain, nor Portugal, nor Austria, nor Mexico, nor the South American Republics, nor all combined, can restore to your hands the fallen sceptre of the Papal States. The attempt to do that will seal the doom of the Papacy in Rome itself. The causes you bless have been cursed, and the causes you curse have been blessed. Heaven fails to ratify either your anathemas or your benedictions. The stars in their course fight against you. The breath of life has been breathed into the nations. The pandemonium of Rome must give place to the 'kingdom which is not of this world.' Be quiet, therefore! Fall into line! Give the people the Bible. Ask the next Council to take back its silly decree of Papal infallibility, which every sensible man on earth ridicules. You are nothing but a man, you know it; and all the fawning flattery of the world cannot make you believe that you are anything more than a poor, ignorant mortal, like the rest of us. What is the use of keeping up this comedy any longer? Three hundred years ago, when the Armada sailed, it was high tragedy; times have changed, and it is getting to be low comedy now. Three hundred years ago there were only 7,000,000 of English-speaking people, now there are 110,000,000 of them, and as sure as the sun shines in heaven, this race will victoriously preserve civil and religious liberty for themselves, and for all mankind? Be quiet! The soul of John Huss is marching on!"

EXTRACTS FROM A NOTE-BOOK.

In Asher's blessing the terms are so spiritual that it appears as if the destiny of this tribe was to be reserved for some bright and glorious future in the Messianic age of which at present we know nothing; or are they now those whom God has selected to be best suited to be His messengers and teachers at home and to the ends of the earth?

Some of the stories found in an Egyptian papyrus a few years ago we recognise as stories familiar to us from childhood, as old nursery tales, and as stories first read in the Arabian Nights entertainments, and even some of the fables attributed to Æsop—for instance, "The Lion and the Mouse." Also the germ of the story of Cinderella. An eagle flew away with a maiden's sandal when she was bathing, and dropped it at the feet of the King of Memphis, who, struck with its beauty, sent messengers in every direction to find the owner, and when found he made her his queen. A VERDICT OF IGNORANCE.

In the London Guardian for May 24th there was a short notice of a book, entitled "Who are Israel?" by Mrs. Stevenson, in the following terms:—"A clergyman might lend this book to any parishioner who is possessed by the crazy idea that Englishmen are the Lost Tribes. It contains a careful account of the natural and spiritual Israel—past, present, and future—and shows how all the promises made to Israel are really fulfilled in the Church of God."

It does not, of course, matter much who Mrs. Stevenson is; any person is at liberty to write and publish what they think as private persons; but when a Church paper like the Guardian steps in and endorses the arguments of the writer and recommends its circulation by the clergy the matter assumes a very different and a serious aspect. One can only suppose that the reviewer of the book and the editor of the Guardian have not done more than read the titles of the various chapters of the book in the table of contents, or that they know next to nothing, and that mostly incorrectly, about Israel and God's dealings and purposes with respect to His chosen people. It seems incredible that any serious persons should entertain the views expressed by Mrs. Stevenson, and it seems not only incredible but a serious offence that any clergyman should have so little plain knowledge of the Word of God as to endorse the views of Mrs. Stevenson's book. So long as the clergy take so little trouble to ascertain what God actually says in His Word, so long also must they remain in the dark and be blind leaders of the blind. The crazy people who hold that this great British Empire is none other than that of Israel, can only feel the deepest sorrow and a very real sense of shame that men of education trained to teach others what God has plainly set forth in His Word, should decline to examine the history of Israel with the same honesty and regard to common sense that they would exercise in regard to other matters.

The force of professional bias is so strong, and the reverence for antiquity is so great and persistent with most of the clergy, that they seem incapable of realising that interpreters in the past may have been mistaken, and incapable also of realising that every year the history of the world and of mankind is revealing God's purposes, enabling us to see what our predecessors could not see, but which it is almost a crime in us not to perceive and accept.

Mrs. Stevenson's book must be condemned from first to last, because where the premisses are entirely at fault the conclusions must also be equally in error. The preface therefore which she has written will be sufficient to discredit the whole of the subsequent chapters. This is a portion of the preface verbatim:—

"Much confusion exists in the minds of many at present regarding the ancient people of God. Some talk as if the poor persecuted and hunted Jews were still the chosen people, forgetting that the former dispensation, under which fleshly descent made them so, has passed away, and that it is to Christians—whether of Jewish or Gentile origin—that the Apostle Peter says, 'Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people.' In consequence of this mistake promises are interpreted as bearing on the future of the Jews which do not apply to them at all, but belong to the Church of Christ; only they must be translated—in keeping with the Gospel dispensation—out of the typical language of the old into that of the new economy.

"If the members of 'Israel's Identification Association,' who seek to identify the British nation with Israel according to the flesh, got a grasp of the truth that faith in Christ constitutes the true Israel, they would see that the influence of Christianity, and not the imaginary descent they trace, is the secret of Britain's greatness."

"As another consequence of this mistake, we hear Palestine spoken of as still the Holy Land, whereas it was only so when the worship of the only living and true God was confined to its bounds, when it was set apart by God Himself as the seat of that worship, and when in Judah (alone) was God known.'"

* * * * *

"The following pages contain an attempt to 'search the Scriptures' on the subject of Israel, and to point out the distinction there has all along existed between the natural and the spiritual seed of Abraham, until now in the Gospel Church the former disappears and the latter comprises all Christ's believing people, of whatever race."

This is what the editor of the Guardian recommends, either seriously or in grim irony, for the study and conversion of crazy Anglo-Israelites! Either the editor of the Guardian must himself be very crazy, or else he has never met an Anglo-Israelite, and therefore does not know that Anglo-Israelites are earnest and careful Bible students who are not likely to be caught with such unutterably poor chaff, and who on their side are most anxious that their opponents should honestly meet their arguments and refute them if they can. The general rule has been that, when any one honestly and seriously took up the arguments of Anglo-Israelites to refute them, they were so convinced of the soundness and the grandeur of the position Anglo-Israelites take up, that, like Balaam, they came to curse, and went away blessing altogether.

In any case, it is fair to hear both sides; if anyone therefore takes the advice of the Guardian, and either reads or circulates Mrs. Stevenson's book, he ought also to read and circulate "British-Israel Truth," a handbook for enquirers by Denis Hanan, D.D., and H. Alder-Smith, M.B., and published by Robert Banks and Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

The members are asked to join in thanksgiving to God for the increase we have had. So far this year 27 new members have joined, as against 19 for 1892.

The Nestorian lady, "Esther," who is visiting England, has been led to see the Identity truth, and has joined us. She says, "I hope to begin this reading at home (Urumiyah), also in Persia. Please pray for us."

Extracts from letters:—(a) "The 'Monthly Comments' I have had for many years, and value much. Let us not only ask great things of the Lord, but take them, receive them by faith, and thank Him for them, then we shall have them. Mark xi. 24, R.V.; 1 John v. 15."

(b) "I enjoy the chapter every morning so much, with the 'Comments.' I feel I could not do without them. I wish there were more that would see this great and glorious truth."

(c) Another letter says that the writer "has been a believer in the Identity for more than twenty years."

The new Card of Membership has a list of chapters for the whole year, also suggestions to members, prayers, etc. It is of a size convenient for keeping in the Bible, and will be sent on receipt of 6 stamps. It is hoped that all the members will send for one.

The first and second series of Monthly Comments on the whole Bible, by Philo-Israel, may be obtained. Price, in paper cover, 1s. 2d. each; in cloth 2s. each, post free.

The "Prayers for Daily Use," being a prayer for each day of the week, by Philo-Israel, are 1d., or 9d. per doz., postage extra. Address — The Secretary, Israel's Scripture and Prayer Union, British-Israel Association, 86, St. Martin's-lane, London, W.C.

BRITISH COLONISATION.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL, — The following cutting from the Standard of this day is a very valuable piece of evidence in the light of Our Identity with Israel, and a remarkable confirmation of the views you advocate in the BANNER of ISRAEL with regard to the aptitude of our nation for, and our success in, colonisation:—

"Johannesburg, April 17.

"The officers of the German Squadron at the Cape were entertained this evening at dinner by the German community at the Gold Fields. One hundred gentlemen were present. The officers are the guests of the Transvaal Government. During the proceedings, an important tribute was paid to the British method of colonisation compared with the German method.

"Mr. Adolf Yoerz, one of the leading African financiers, in proposing the health of the guests, said during a recent visit to Berlin he found the German Government preparing to send a scientific expedition to the Transvaal to report upon the production of gold. The question of German colonisation was being considered at the German Foreign Office. It was felt that Germany should not adopt the French method of colonisation, which closes the colonies from kindly relationships with the surrounding States; but that Germany should rather follow the splendid method of Great Britain (cheers). Mr. Cecil Rhodes had told him that the Germans had splendid material for colonising, but it was not utilised owing to the action of the German Government. The Germans who were desirous to see German colonisation successful hoped that the German Foreign Office would follow English methods in future (cheers)."

I am sure it will be read by all British-Israelites with great satisfaction.

Yours sincerely,

JOHN S. ANDERSON.

Croydon, May 10, 1893.

BRITISH-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION, "BRISBANE BRANCH."

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—I have pleasure in reporting progress of the good work done in this colony since my last letter. We verily have been truly blessed by God in our work, for no sooner do we start than we find numbers who are anxious to hear the good news, then an Association is started with signal success in Maryborough, and to crown this, Mr. Lawton, of Congo Free State, instructs Messrs. Banks & Son to send us a large supply of literature, which has all arrived in first-class order, and what a boon it will be?

At our last meeting we decided to hold our meetings fortnightly, hitherto we have had monthly meetings. Hoping that, with the continued blessing of God, we may continue more and more in our successful course, and aid in spreading the glorious truth.

I am, dear sir, yours very sincerely,

HOWARD S. BLISS, Hon. Sec.

The Treasury, Brisbane, April 28, 1893.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—I continue to read the BANNER with much interest; and am frequently tempted to write you a few comments, held back, however, partly by the conviction that you are probably overwhelmed with correspondence, and partly by the many letters I have to write myself. However, this place being very much overrun by Roman Catholics, who have two or three great establishments here, my thoughts have been a good deal directed to the antagonism which seems to exist between Romish and ultra-Ritualistic, or Romanising views, and the Anglo-Israel position. It is certain that the Church Times, which may be regarded as the organ of the Romanizing theory, holds the Anglo-Israel contention in the utmost abhorrence and contempt. Necessarily, I think, for if the latter is true, there is an end to all those claims based upon Roman, or quasi-Roman views of the Church and kingdom of Christ. They regard the fifth empire as identical with the Church—meaning by the Church the Gentile Christians—i.e., Rome, Spain, France, &c., &c., or Greece. Russia, &c., as far as they are Catholic or orthodox, they would include Anglican, but only as secondary to the others, according as their proclivities were for the Roman, or the Greek Church.

I acknowledge, till I saw the comments upon it in the BANNER, or one of your publications, I never realized how strong an argument against Rome is to be found in Rom. xi., and I am surprised that more use has not been made of it in the controversy against Romish errors and assumptions of power. I give away, or send to distant parts my BANNERS when read, so cannot lay my hands on it, but I have read in your former numbers, I am sure, comments on this chapter, and whoever may be the author of them, I think it would be well to have them printed in a concise form as a paper, or leaflet, as an argument against the dominating claims of Rome, for distribution. I doubt not you have noted, within the last few days, the reports of differences and antagonisms between the emissaries of France and Siam on one hand, and on the other, the Madagascar people—and in both cases, had we a more patriotic and far-seeing Government, or if our statesmen had a suspicion of the destinies of England, we might at least intervene to secure justice for the weaker races, or challenge the right of the French intruders, and offer the protection of Great Britain to the native states. However, the present so-called Government would not lift a little finger to befriend Siam or Madagascar in their direst necessities. Far from this, it is probable that the Swazis and their territories, greatly as they desire English protection, will be thrown to the Boers to gratify them at the expense of English interests.

I have lately seen a work called "Mazzaroth" or the "Constellations," published by Rivingtons, 1862—5, it is by F. Rollestone, now dead. You may know it, if not I think you would find it well worthy of your study. The writer seems to have a great knowledge of Scripture and ancient authorities. I fear it is now out of print, and it has only been lent to me. You would find in it some things corroborative of your views; but, as far as I can see, the Anglo-Israel theory had never come before the author's mind. It is surprising, if, in her researches, it did not dawn upon her. I have sent a copy of the BANNER now and then to Lord Rosebery.

I am, yours faithfully, R.

P.S.—When anything specially relating to any particular subject occurs in the BANNER, or a quotation of their speeches or writings, I occasionally send a copy, marked, to the person in question—e.g., Lord Rosebery, Cecil Rhodes, &c. I cannot tell how many I have thus sent. They may not be read, but they may, and if not, some of the subordinates probably read them. The ideas are diffused.

Devon, May 24, 1893.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—Although I know you must be much occupied by your editorial and other labours in the grand cause of the "Identity," I venture to send a short note, as I hope it may cheer you to learn how very much the BANNERS are read and appreciated in this place, and neighbourhood. By the kindness of Miss Rush, and the aid of the Free Distribution Association, I have been able to bring the subject of the Identity to a good many persons of various denominations, and different stations in life. In most cases great interest has been taken in the subject, and more literature asked for; whilst I am glad to say that some have become firm believers and are doing all they can to spread the good news.

I am sure much of the success attending the reading of the BANNER is due (under God's blessing) to the deep earnestness of the writers, and especially the freedom from hasty conclusions with the truly Christian spirit of charity shown in all the articles. I trust, dear sir, you may long continue to conduct the magazine in the same spirit, and so continue to give the same pleasure and profit to its many readers as in the past. When first the Identity was brought to my notice, I had not the means of informing myself on all points as I now have, so in my readings I eagerly noticed anything that might throw light on the matter. An article I read in a magazine called Golden Hours, for 1877, afforded me much satisfaction, as I was looking out for historical proofs of the Saxons having come from Media and the East, a point denied by a friend who I was trying to induce to accept the Identity. The article was headed, "The English Merchants in Russia," it gave an account of three vessels being fitted out in 1553, for the Northern Seas, two were lost, but one, commanded by Capt. Richard Chancellor, arrived at the White Sea, where he landed and received an order from Ivan to proceed to Moscow. There Capt. Chancellor found an envoy from the Shah of Persia, who was anxious to open trade with England through Russia, for the Arabian and Persian chronicles showed that in the time of our Saxon kings, the Persians, and even the Hindoos, used to obtain goods from England, landed at the mouth of the Dwina, or brought to Novogorod by the Baltic, and conveyed down the Volga to Eastern markets.

Whence came this knowledge of Persia by our Saxon forefathers, unless they had had former intercourse with that nation? and they must have been friendly relations too! This is probably nothing new to you. The writer does not say from whence he got his information. There are three chapters all about the trade between England and the East through Russia. I thought it interesting myself, and perhaps it may lead some of your contributors to look the subject up, and make a good article thereon.

There is another subject I wish to mention. In a local paper there was a paragraph some time since, which said that the great work of Freemasonry was to discover the place to which the ark was carried after the taking of Jerusalem; and that the society had a tradition that it was buried at Tara, and were trying to get permission to excavate and look for it, but hitherto had been prevented! I can find no mason knowing anything of this statement, and cannot help thinking that the writer has made some blunder, or confused Anglo-Israelism and Masonry together. If you can give any further information on the subject, will you do so in the BANNER? I know of the supposed burial of the tables of stone and the story of Jeremiah and the daughter of Zedekiah, and am hopefully looking forward to Dr. Hanan being successful in his endeavours to get the hill excavated. With much appreciation of your labours,

Believe me, dear Philo-Israel,

Yours sincerely,

"POVERTY BAY."

Patutahi, Gisborne, New Zealand, April 22, 1893.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—Israel is passing through a momentous crisis. Ought we not to offer up our daily prayers that God, who has so often listened to and blessed the prayers of His people, would now guide us safely through our present dangers, and make all things work together for His people's good? Some short prayer like the subjoined might be used:—

"Almighty God, the Father of Thy people Israel, who watchest them and hearest their prayers, we beseech Thee to look down on us in this present trial, and overrule it for our real and permanent good. We ask it for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen."

Yours faithfully,

C. RAWSON.

Fern Bank, Peterfield, June 8, 1893.

A COGITATION.

BY A CLERGYMAN.

IN regard to the report of Lord Salisbury's speech at Derry on the 26th inst., it is very certain that anyone who has this knowledge as to the Canaanites, has also the further knowledge as to Israel's modern existence. Lord Salisbury's use of this example or comparison has in it (if I do not misread him), the latent sting, that under the guise of a comparison he states a fact; and if he recognises the fact as to the Phœnecian element, he is not far off from recognising the fact of Israel. Therefore the words are of great moment.

DENIS HANAN.

become ill, and are unable to go to work or to business.

The world-wide fame of Dr. Rooke's Oriental Pills and Solar Elixir rests upon the marvellous cures which have followed their use in the most severe cases of

and all diseases of the Nervous System, from whatever cause arising. THE PILLS PURIFY THE SYSTEM, THEN THE ELIXIR BUILDS IT UP, AND LEAVES IT STRONG, ROBUST, AND HEALTHY. Those pursuing a sedentary life, or engaged in unhealthy occupations, or living in an insalubrious climate, would all find DR. ROOKE'S REMEDIES invariably successful in quickly restoring health and vigour to the most shattered constitution. Hence they are a boon alike to the young, the middle-aged, and the old.

The Oriental Pills are sold in boxes at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each; and the Elixir is sold in bottles at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each. They can be obtained of all Chemists and Patent Medicine Dealers throughout the world.

THE LOSS OF H.M.S. "VICTORIA."

IT is not to be supposed that British-Israel escapes chastisement. She is constantly deserving it. Her sins seem sometimes to cry to heaven against her. When we note her ungodliness, her Sabbath-breaking, her forgetfulness of God, and the horrible crimes which her people are constantly committing—the murders, the robberies, the breaches of trust, the cruelties, and the social abominations of which we have such terrible records in the daily papers, we wonder that the people of God's choice can be so vile, and that He bears so long with them! He bears long with us, and when needs be He chastises us, that He may lead us to repentance as a nation. The stroke of sorrow and suffering He has so suddenly sent us as a nation in respect to the loss of H.M.S. the ironclad "Victoria" on Thursday, June 22nd last, we do not say was a chastisement sent us as a Father's correction for national sin; but we do say we deserve such a blow, and we do well to regard it as such. We should act wisely if we approached our Father in reference to this event, and confessing our nation's sins, implore Him to send us national repentance and amendment of national life—to comfort us in respect to the loss of our most valued ship of war, and to make up its loss to us by providing for us other and more powerful vessels to take its place, as the guardians of the Empire, the defenders of the Gates and the upholders of that supremacy of the seas which He has in His faithfulness and truth given us as His people, the sons of Jacob and Joseph.

The 80th Psalm is one which suits our case, and its prayer should be our prayer in this our hour of national sorrow. The great loss we have sustained in the deaths of Vice-Admiral Sir George Tryon, K.C.B., the commander-in-chief of the squadron, and of the 358 officers and men, who, in the short space of fifteen minutes, during a bright summer's afternoon, were suddenly swept into eternity, were solemn events. The mighty ship of war, rammed by a sister ironclad, was cut open, turned bottom upwards, and in five minutes sunk to the bottom of the Mediterranean Sea, 500 feet or 80 fathoms deep! From such a depth there can be no recovery for the ship or for its guns! Those entombed in her were killed at once. The pecuniary loss the nation has thus sustained is over a million sterling, and the loss is total. It is a sad, nay awful, tale! but one regarding which nationally we have no call to be despondent.

We deplore and grieve for the lives of those who are gone. We sorrow for the surviving relatives. We regret the national loss in money, and the time and expense it will cost and be to the nation to replace so splendid a specimen of naval power. But, after all, there is nothing connected with this pure accident for which we need nationally blame ourselves. The ship was rammed down by the sister ironclad "Camperdown" unintentionally during the progress of necessary but dangerous naval evolutions. We must accept these risks and consequent trouble, looking to the Lord to sustain us in the same: "For He will keep in perfect peace him whose mind is stayed on Him, because he trusteth in Him." The command further is, "Trust ye in the Lord for ever, for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength ("or an everlasting Rock"—(Isa. xxvi. 3, 4, A. and R.V.). He will not allow us permanently to be injured by the calamity we deplore, but will give us presently to see why our mightiest armour-clads, the "Howe," the "Victoria," and the "Camperdown," have each within a few weeks been in grievous jeopardy, and the "Victoria" a hopeless wreck.

In Isa. xxvii. 15, 16, a chapter which deals directly with the condition of the House of Israel, we have depicted her proper attitude in trouble and affliction even when God is pouring upon her His choicest blessings. The passage runs thus: "Thou hast increased the nation, O Lord, Thou hast increased the nation; Thou art glorified. Thou hast removed it far unto the ends of the earth. Lord, in trouble have they visited Thee. They poured out a prayer when Thy chastening was upon them." In the present case there has been much prayer called forth in every church and chapel of the country in connection with the appalling catastrophe which has just occurred. The first thought has been for the widows and children of Her Majesty's sailors and marines so suddenly removed in the very midst of their duty to their country, and the next that our nation may profit by the occurrence and humble themselves before God for their sins.

The gift of God to this His chosen nation of "the power to get wealth" comes very opportunely as a consolation in such a case as this. The money is the one loss we need feel the least. We can well afford to provide another "Victoria" like the last, or even more powerful vessels than she was, if we need such.

The Lord our God "giveth His people power to get wealth, that He may establish His covenant which He sware unto our fathers, as it is this day" (Deut. viii. 18, R.V.). He knows that according to His usual dealings with His chosen ones a powerful fleet is needed to enable them to subdue the earth, to command the sea and hold the Gates, in view to the spread of the Gospel among all the nations of the earth, and therefore while we sorrow for the present loss and mourn for the lives so suddenly sacrificed, we may be assured that God's favour towards us is not averted, but that He will still continue to give us all the good gifts that lie at His right hand as the purchase of the precious blood of Calvary.

The Times has some weighty remarks in reference to the necessity of such highly-dangerous evolutions as those which have cost us such a disaster. With these we conclude our notice of this event which will be felt with anguish throughout the whole of Israel's world-wide empire. The Times wrote thus :—

No countenance must be given in any authoritative or responsible quarter to the mischievous and even fatal notion that such evolutions as the Mediterranean Squadron was engaged in when the "Victoria" was destroyed, and one of the best of our staff of admirals perished nobly in his country's service, are too hazardous for ironclad squadrons to undertake. The true lesson is exactly the reverse of this. It is only by incessant practice, and by the employment of officers trained to such practice and known to be fit for it, that the hazards incidental to fleet evolutions under steam at high speed can be overcome. These evolutions have been practised constantly by our sea-going squadrons for more than a quarter of a century, and the loss of the "Victoria" is the first serious and fatal disaster they have directly entailed. It is certain that in time of war fleets must manœuvre at high speed and at close quarters, and the only way to fit them for doing this is to drill them incessantly in similar evolutions in time of peace. It may be that the disaster should teach us not to rely upon ships of the vast size and cost of the "Victoria" and her even larger consorts of later date, but that is quite a different matter. We must have battleships, our battleships must be organized in sea-going squadrons, and our sea-going squadrons must be commanded and officered by men who can manœuvre them with ease and precision in all the evolutions required to give them mobility and tactical cohesion. This is so clear and indisputable that in ordinary circumstances it would hardly need to be stated. But on the morrow of a great national loss it is more than ever imperative to insist that there must be no flinching from our naval responsibilities and no misunderstanding of what they really mean and entail. Whatever lesson the loss of the "Victoria" may have to teach us hereafter, when the facts are more fully known and the responsibilities more definitely distributed, it teaches us this lesson at once—that unless our ships and fleets were incessantly practised in such manœuvres as are adapted to give them mobility in evolution and steadiness in the line of battle, we should have to endure in time of peace not merely one, but a succession of such calamities as have cost us the lives of a great admiral and of hundreds of gallant seamen, while in time of war we should inevitably encounter constant and irreparable disaster.

"THOU SHALT NOT BORROW."

THE meeting of a Bible-class of men in a Baptist Chapel in Bristol has been already mentioned in these pages, but we have not adverted to one of the objections made on that occasion, which unfortunately met with no reply. It is impossible on such an occasion to find time to notice all that is said by way of opposition, and in the case in question it must be confessed that we gave no heed to the matter in the very short space of time allotted to us (three minutes, extended afterwards to about 15 in all!). The lecturer, quoting Deut. xv. 6, R.V., had asserted of our nation that "we had lent to many nations, but had never borrowed; and we reigned over many nations, but none of them reigned over us." The objection raised to the application of this Israelite prophecy to our nation was this, "that it was not true of the British because in 1890 we had borrowed three million sterling from France." Another, following on the same lines, declared that "if we wanted money we had borrowed it generally from the Jews, and that as we borrowed from and through them, the prophecy did not apply to us, and we could not be lost Israel."

The replies to these objections are simple enough, and are these. In the first place, even if it were true that when we borrowed money as a nation we were invariably obliged to apply to the Jews for it, the fact that the Jews are Israelites takes the sting out of the opponent's shaft. The promise was to "Israel obedient," as distinguished from the alien nations, and therefore if we obtained our money from Jews, we were supplied by our brethren, but not by the non-Israelite Gentiles. But the statement that in 1890 we nationally borrowed three millions sterling from the French people is, if true, a different matter, and one requiring explanation. The reply was forthcoming in the BANNER, on p. 484 of Vol. XIV., of Dec. 3rd, 1890. But as everybody does not read the BANNER, and the young men in Bristol on April 30, 1893, certainly had not done so, we must repeat a portion of the statement we then made in vindication of our claim to be still the ten-tribed House of Israel.

To begin with, the British nation did not on that occasion, in November, 1890, borrow three millions from the French nation! The British nation had nothing to say to that matter! But the Bank of England, a private establishment, being short of gold coins to balance its accounts, gave to the Bank of France the equivalent in Consols and received instead as a temporary accommodation the sum of three millions of gold coins, or ingots, which it placed at once in the cellars of the Bank of England. The latter Bank paid interest to the Bank of France, because the French bankers were forbidden by the terms of the contract to negotiate the deposited securities, and therefore the Bank of France was entitled to be paid something by way of compensation. This was no more a loan between the two Banks than it is a loan to produce a ten pound note in a banking-house and ask for ten sovereigns in exchange. After all, the transaction was between the two Banks, and neither found the two nations at their backs.

Mr. H. H. Pain, of the Stock Exchange, was right when he said, on Dec. 5th, 1890, in his letter published in the BANNER of Dec. 17th of that year (p. 507, Vol. XIV.), that "That was a bullion transaction, and not a loan in the usual sense of the word. Loans are contracted by nations with this country, for 60 years or more, and not days, as was the case between the two Banks on this occasion. So Anglo-Israelites may make their minds easy on this point."

While men are willing, and even eager, to find that this our nation, even on one point, is flying in the face of prophecy, and so proving it cannot be Israel, it is a remarkable fact that the public, though often informed by our friends and our writings of the cogency of our evidence, yet are ready and willing to hail any objection, however feeble, to Our Identity, but are averse to take the trouble of inquiring whether the facts be what we say they are. The fact is men in general lack faith in our arguments, and so listlessly allow the matter to pass by them. But evidence enough has been given to guide their judgments, if only they were really willing to weigh it, and so to admit that it amounts to "proof." It does so, but deaf ears cannot hear it; blind eyes cannot see it, and perverted judgments are simply unable to grasp it.

Possibly it is true, as men have stated, that the grace of God is quite as much needed to enable the average Briton to see and know that he is an Israelite as it does for a sinful man to rejoice by faith in the fact that his soul is saved by the precious blood.

THE DISCUSSION IN YARMOUTH, NOVA SCOTIA.

No. III.—ANGLO-ISRAELISM.

TO THE EDITOR OF "YARMOUTH LIGHT."—Sir,—In a former letter I expressed a hope that "Barrington" would one day join the great army of Anglo-Israelites. I now verily believe this hope will soon be realised; for half of the first ten paragraphs—occupying one and a fifth columns—and much of paragraphs twelve, thirteen, and fourteen of your correspondent's letter could hardly have contained more pronounced Anglo-Israel teaching, if Dr. Hanan himself, or Mark Guy Pearse had written them. "Barrington" believed (for of course he accepts the statements he quotes from Farrar) that although "many" (?) of the Ten Tribes returned with the Jews from captivity, yet at the time of Christ they "had as a body been indistinguishably lost among the nations into whose country they had been transplanted"—that is, that "as a body" they never returned from the Assyrian captivity. Most opponents of Anglo-Israelism knowing that this is one of the foundation stones of our argument, and discerning how much this admission means, assert the contrary. But the sheer force of truth has led "Barrington" to admit—nay, even to prove with the aid of an authority one of the strong evidences of the Anglo-Israel position. For this I thank your correspondent, and I must congratulate him upon the advance he is making. Let it then be considered a settled point between us, that the bulk of the Ten Tribes did not return from captivity.

What became of them? "Barrington" says, they "were indistinguishably lost among the nations"; also, that "Anglo-Israelism is based upon the assumption that Israel, as Israel were to be preserved." That the Ten Tribes were not lost, in the sense of ceasing to be a separate people; and that what your correspondent calls an assumption—viz., the continual preservation of Israel as Israel, is a solemn and oft-repeated statement of Holy Writ, I will now prove. Experience has taught me that the passages opponents of Anglo-Israelism quote with a view of refuting this truth are the best proof-texts for confirming it. So I shall begin by using a Scripture which "Barrington" himself partially quotes. In Amos ix. 9, we read: "I will sift the House of Israel among all nations." Why didn't your correspondent finish the sentence? The prophet goes on to say, "as corn is sifted in a sieve; yet shall not the least grain fall upon the earth." Surely the preservation of Israel as Israel is foretold here. Let it be remembered that Amos is speaking of the Ten-tribed House of Israel. Now turn to Jer. xxxi. 35—38. Here Jehovah solemnly declares that as long as sun, moon, and stars endure Israel shall never cease to be a nation. Carefully note that in this very chapter the prophet unmistakably distinguishes between Israel and Judah (ver. 6, 9, 18, 29, 31). "Barrington's" failure to observe this distinction is the cause of half his errors. Now, if, as "Barrington" fancies, Israel be mingled with Judah, this word of the Lord has failed. Anglo-Israelism comes forward and shows how marvellously and mysteriously God has been true to His promise. Here, then, are two facts students of Anglo-Israelism must always keep before them. (1) Israel never returned to Palestine. (2) They must remain a separate nation as long as sun, moon, and stars endure. Query: Where is this nation?

In the next place your correspondent labours to prove that Israel and Judah did not practice idolatry during or after captivity. He is right as regards Judah, but wrong as regards Israel. Let us go again to one of "Barrington's" own Scriptures. He refers to Deut. xxviii. 64. It does seem strange he did not see the dilemma into which he was falling. These are the words of the text: "The Lord shall scatter them among all people from one end of the earth even to the other, and there thou shalt serve other gods which neither thou nor thy fathers have known, even wood and stone." Now, if, as "Barrington" maintains, neither Israel nor Judah fell into idolatry during or after their captivity, this prophecy has never been fulfilled, and the word of the Lord again becomes void. "Barrington" cannot believe this. Will he then tell us when and where this prediction was accomplished? Anglo-Israelism answers, in our Saxon—i.e., our Israelitish forefathers. "Barrington" himself has kindly proved that they were idolaters, agreeing again with Anglo-Israel teaching. I ought, however, to add that we do not accept his "crude nature worship" theory. Well, now, is it not becoming clear that Anglo-Israelism is the best friend of the Bible, and the supreme vindicator of inspiration?

Now, I ask those interested to refer again to my last letter. They will observe that "Barrington" does not attempt to answer the strong case made out respecting the "multitude of nations" into which "Ephraim" should develop in "the latter days." All he does is to quote texts foretelling their dispersion and punishment. Here again he agrees with Anglo-Israel teaching. If your correspondent had only observed that the "re-bethrothal" of Israel to God, and consequently their enjoyment before their return to Palestine of many promises made to them is also clearly foretold again and again, he would have come out as ardent an Anglo-Israelite as I am. For instance, if he had read the whole of Hosea—from which prophecy he quotes half sentences—particularly chap. i. 8—11; ii. 14—23; xiv., he would have seen this fact clearly—it would have come as a grand revelation to him. Well, I think I may fairly claim that my argument from Gen. xlviii. 19, is as unanswered as it is unanswerable.

To my arguments from the prophecies of Jacob and Moses hardly any reply is attempted. These arguments therefore stand good. Instead of replying "Barrington" teaches again what Anglo-Israelites teach and emphasize. For instance, "Paul was saved not by reason of descent, but as a man." "The Mediator of the New Covenant is for a world." "Behold the Lamb of God," etc. Further on your correspondent speaks of "righteousness by faith unto all and for all." He quotes, "God so loved the world"; "Whosoever will"; "Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ." Why, sir, these blessed Gospel truths are the very strength and joy and life of Anglo-Israelites. On our banner is inscribed in letters of gold the glorious message, "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him might not perish, but have everlasting life."

"Barrington" waxes warm, as I expected he would, in denouncing "war, plunder, and robbery." So do we. Two facts remain, notwithstanding. (1) Moses predicted that Ephraim and Manasseh should "push the people together to the ends of the world." (2) The Anglo-Saxon race has fulfilled and is fulfilling this prediction. For what purpose? and with what results? Let Macaulay answer: "It is England's peculiar glory, not that she has ruled so widely, nor that she has conquered so splendidly, but that she has ruled only to bless, and conquered only to spare. Her mightiest empire is that of her morals, her language, and her laws; her proudest victories are those she has achieved over ferocity and ignorance; her most durable trophies are those she has erected in the hearts of civilized and liberated nations." These words are as true as they are eloquent. Such work is surely fit for "Gospel times." Israel (i.e., Britain) conquers that she may bless.

"Barrington" still contends that God's promise to Abraham of a literal seed is fulfilled in non-Israelite Christians—i.e., not fulfilled at all. Let your readers glance at the following Scriptures: Gen. xxii. 15—18; Num. xxiii. 9, 10; Zech. x. 10; Hosea i. 10; and then judge for themselves. "Barrington" makes much of the apostle's statement, "And to thy seed, which is Christ." Anglo-Israelites joyfully accept this. It proves that the Abrahamic covenant was Messianic; that only through Christ can the blessings of this covenant be enjoyed by Israel; and that all, of whatever race, who have faith in Christ may lay claim to a share of the privileges and blessings of the covenant. "Barrington" asks whether the Jews do, or our heathen forefathers did, hold and possess the covenant? No; but according to the Word of the Lord converted Israel does. Such statements as "neither Jew nor Greek, male or female," etc., refer to personal salvation, a matter which Anglo-Israelism does not directly touch. "Barrington" is wrong in his assertion that Christ said the Hebrew race "should be led away captive into all nations." Our Lord spoke of the Jews only, for according to your correspondent's own admission the Ten Tribes "as a body" did not return to Palestine, and consequently were not there in the time of Christ.

Now I come to some further identities: (1) In Gen. xxii. 17, God declares to Abraham: "Thy seed shall possess the Gate of his enemies." These Gates evidently mean strong, defensive positions taken and held by a victorious and defiant power in the land of its enemies—places of strategic importance wrested from the foe and held by military power in spite of all opposition. "Barrington" said in a former letter this prophecy was fulfilled in the time of David. Perhaps it was, partially. But the partial and the complete fulfilment of prophecy are different. Moreover, during Israel's sojourn in Canaan they were frequently and for many years under a foreign yoke, their own Gates being held by the enemy. But, above all, the Abrahamic covenant, of which this prediction forms a part, was Messianic. Therefore, in this dispensation a seed of Abraham must be found possessing this mark of the covenant. Where shall we look? Readers, take a map of the world, mark our possessions—colonies, fortifications, coaling stations, etc., and you will see—perhaps with some surprise—that we literally surround and shut in the Gentile nations. In almost every part of the world we possess the Gates of our enemies, and from thence could strike with advantage. Nor need we wonder at this, for the hand of God is in geography as well as history. Thus reads Deut. xxxii. 8, 9: "When the Most High divided to the nations their inheritance; when he separated the sons of Adam, He set the bounds of the people according to the number of the children of Israel. For the Lord's portion is His people. Israel is the lot (cord or measuring line) of His inheritance." The following are some of our Gates:—Gibraltar, Malta, the Island of Perim, Socotra, Aden, Peshawar, Bombay, Calcutta, Madras, Rangoon, Singapore, Malacca, Penang, Sarawak, Labuan, Hong Kong, Cape Coast Castle, Cape Town, Natal, Sydney, the Channel Islands, St. Helena. Add to these India and our colonies, and what a marvellous fact we have to contemplate—a fact absolutely unique in this world's long history. Why does the world allow us to hold these magnificent Gates? There is only one answer, they are God's gift according to promise to Israel, and we are Israel.

(2) It was foretold that Israel should develop into a great colonizing people. Isa. liv. 1—3: "Sing, O barren . . . enlarge the place of thy tent, and let them stretch forth the curtains of thine habitations; spare not, lengthen thy cord and strengthen thy stakes. For thou shalt break forth on the right hand and on the left; and thy seed shall inherit the Gentiles, and make the desolate cities to be inhabited." See also Isa. lviii. 12; lxi. 4—7; xlix. Our many colonies are so vast that they contain millions of square miles. Day by day we are peopling "the desolate regions of the earth. Spain tried to colonize the world but failed. Then France made an attempt, and she too failed. England alone succeeded, and that right magnificently. The Anglo-Saxon race has done in this respect exactly what God said Israel should do. England owns one-fifth or nearly so of the land surface of the globe. England and the United States together more than one-fourth. This "colonizing" is a grand mark of identity, and, added to others, ought to convince every one of our Israelitish origin.

(3) Israel was to become a powerful nation—the "chief" or "head" of the nations. In addition to the passages already referred to see Isa. xviii. 1—7; Jer. xxxi. 6—15; Micah v. 7, 8; Zech. x. 6—10. That our race possesses this mark of identity none will deny.

To sum up as far as we have gone. We have seen that Israel should become a Christian people; a multitude of nations, with an immense population; a maritime and colonizing power, possessing territory in all parts of the earth, and holding the Gates of her enemies; the "chief" or "head" of the nations, distinguished by wonderful prosperity, immense wealth, and world-wide renown. One people, and only one, exists, fulfilling in every particular this grand prophetic outline of Christian Israel. This people, therefore, must be Israel.

As this correspondence must soon close, I shall in my next write of spiritual blessings promised to Israel. I hope thereby to finish the Scriptural argument as far as I intend to carry it. If I were to attempt to place this argument before your readers in all its grand details and manifold variety I should have to write for many months. I only intended to give a few specimen-proofs of Our Identity in hope that your readers would become so interested in this fascinating study that they would get books and pursue it for themselves. It will yield them a rich harvest of intellectual, moral, and spiritual good.

"TWO NATIONS BUT ONE PEOPLE."

"THE CHRISTIAN," quoting an American paper, publishes with approval the sentiment that the Americans are discovering that the British and they themselves are "two nations but one people," preparing, together, to give to the rest of the world the law by which in future all international difficulties are to be solved. While announcing this, and rejoicing in it as one of the results of the acceptance of the Gospel by both nations, The Christian is as obdurate as ever in reference to the Identity of the British, and therefore of the Americans, with the Lost Tribes of Israel.

To Israel "obedient"—that is, we suppose, "obedient to the Gospel of Christ"—there was promised in Deut. xv. 6, and xxviii. 1—15, empire, dominion, and wealth abnormal. In Gen. xxii. 18, and xxviii. 14, there was given the promise of the evangelizing function to Israel whereby they were to become a blessing to all nations, families, and kindreds of the earth. The Scriptural description of Israel's duty and privilege in respect to the world is pretty much the same as that quoted with adhesion by The Christian, as those of the British and American peoples. In respect to this, facts tell us that the British are what Israel was to be, a company of nations, and a great and independent people as to the United States. Facts also show us that international beneficence is the leading feature of our dealings with foreign nations, and that we strive to act fairly and equitably by those with whom we are brought into connection. Our extract is as follows:—

The American Advocate of Peace says: "It is a noteworthy fact that in those parts of the country—i.e., the United States—where the dislike of England might be supposed to linger longest, and be most deeply rooted, it has most nearly disappeared. At Boston and Philadelphia, and the other cities of the East, where the memorials of the revolution are the most numerous, England is respected, and trusted, and honoured, as she is nowhere else in the land." May this not be owing in part to the close and continuous intercourse which they have had with English people on religious and moral questions? It seems to be the highest testimonial to the value of the Gospel as a power to promote peace and unity. We are thankful to be assured that "the people of the States are, with increasing seriousness, disposed to look upon their country and Great Britain as 'two nations but one people,' whose great general interests are one and the same, whose destinies are interlocked, who are foremost in creating for the world what in the future is to be the law of the peaceful adjustment of international difficulties."—The Christian.

It is a remarkable fact, one bearing too on our contention, that the Americans should be willing to allow that they have before them existing on the earth to-day "two distinct nations but only one people." The American States were of British origin, without doubt; but that after more than 100 years, and after the immense foreign immigration which has taken place, the Americans should still be "one people" with ourselves amounts almost to a miracle. Why have not the vast majority of alien immigrants changed the race, forced their languages on the Americans, and made the nation Germans, Italians, Swedes, or Dutch, but anything rather than British, as it is?

The fact that the Americans and British are Israel explains the mystery. They are God's people under covenant with Him, and destined to live for ever as such. The British-Israelite portion of the United States absorbs all other nationalities in its midst and turns them into Israelites as well. They cannot themselves, by reason of the covenant, become absorbed by the non-Israelite immigrants. These yield to the superior influence and strength of the British nucleus, and so lose their own individuality almost at once. And thus it comes to pass, that the American remaining British there are "two British nations" extant to-day, but they are only "one people," and that, according to the prophecies (Gen. xlviii. 19, R.V.).

COL. A. O. MOLESWORTH ON "OUR IDENTITY."

IN a publication called The Witness, issued for June last, Col. Molesworth has a paper (one of a series), on the subject of "The Restoration of the Jews," in which he has something to say respecting what is to him "a delusion"—namely, the alleged identity of the people of England with the Lost Ten Tribes. He believes it to be a very objectionable thing indeed for spiritually minded people to have anything to do with it. It cannot be proved, he says, in any way whatever. "It is nonsense. If you take it up the thing will rob you of your power to witness for God. Satan will use it to hinder your doing the Lord's work, and prevent you being occupied with the salvation of others." Holding these strong opinions, Col. Molesworth is still quite sure that Israel and Judah are existing now as two distinct portions of the same people, because the Bible says so, and their restoration as distinct people—Israel and Judah—is spoken of separately by different prophets, such as Zechariah and Ezekiel. We had better quote Col. Molesworth's own words, before we comment on them. What appears on pp. 89 and 90 of The Witness for June, is this:—

Now, as to the restoration, the division into two groups called Judah and Israel is very marked in the prophetic Scriptures. Where Judah is, is fairly known; where Israel is, is not known. Some go to the extreme of saying that the people of England are the Lost Ten Tribes, but there is no possible proof hereof whatever. It is a delusion of the mind, and robs those who take it up of spiritual energy to serve God in seeking the salvation of both Jew and Gentile. If the people of England were the Ten Tribes, and to be resuscitated of God, we would see their moral condition different from what it is now. Don't take up such nonsense; it will rob you of the power of witnessing for God. Anything that Satan can get us to lay hold of to take us from the beaten track and hinder us in the Lord's work, he will; and these fancies (to call them by their true name) hinder the soul from being occupied with the salvation of others, which should be the primary object of every Christian. Now, Judah and Israel are distinct, and their restoration is spoken of separately (Zech. xii.—xiv). "The Lord also shall save the tents of Judah first," &c. (Ezek. xxxvii. 15—28).

I have been drawing a sketch of this people and their ultimate blessing, leaving till next week the terrible sifting which they must pass through. Of their absolute restoration we are assured. Read Joel iii., Isa. xlix., Ezek. xx. and xxxiv., Jer. xxxi., and you will see, without the least doubt, that God must restore this people, and restore them in a condition which shall be a praise to His name for ever; for though they may come back at first politically, and in unbelief, yet God will eventually bring them into a condition which shall be a praise to His name throughout the whole earth.

And lastly, I want you to see what shall be their mission when restored. It is, to be missionaries to the whole earth. "Is this really to be the end of the Jewish nation?" you ask. Yes, they are to be God's missionaries to the whole earth, and then shall the knowledge of the Lord cover the earth as the waters cover the sea, but not till then, when God returns and builds up the Tabernacle of David which has fallen down (see Isa. lxvi., lx., Zech. viii., xiv.). In all these Scriptures you find unfoldings of what shall be.

Sic volo; sic jubeo. Col. Molesworth tells us our British Identity with Israel is a matter for which "there is no possible proof whatever." Why not? The people, he admits, have an existence now in separation from the Jews or Judah, and they are at some future time to be united, and as one people, and be restored to their land. The Jew is known; but the Israelites he admits are not known. Is it a sin to strive and discover them, when we British-Israelites are satisfied that God has work for them to do in regard to the evangelization of the world, which cannot be done without them? There is Isa. xxvii. 6, R.V., which Col. Molesworth is bound, as a candid man, to refer to Israel, but not to Judah. They were in times subsequent to Isaiah's, "to take root:" they were "to blossom and bud;" and they were "to fill the face of the world with fruit." Our Lord Himself gave them, as the "fruitful" ones, "the kingdom of God," which He took away from the Jews. Can it be wrong, or a foolish thing to try and find those people that we might join ourselves to them and begin to work for the dear Lord in their company?

Col. Molesworth says that taking up "such nonsense" will rob us of the power of witnessing for God, that "it will hinder us in the Lord's work," and prevent us being occupied with the salvation of others, which should be the primary object of every Christian.

We personally accept the challenge; and ask him, is it true of ourselves, as the editor of the BANNER? or true of those that work with us? Col. Molesworth knows us well at Clifton and Bristol. Let him testify regarding us! We have been engaged in the work of the BANNER for about seventeen years. For about, or rather longer than that period we have done all we could to further the interests of the Church Missionary Society, of the Society for the Promotion of Christianity Amongst the Jews, and of the South American Missionary Society, besides work done for the Waldensian Church Missions in Italy, and the Religious Tract Society. With what result? Has our zeal for Christ's work relaxed in respect to these Societies? They do not seem to think so themselves.

Years ago the Clerical Secretary of the Church Missionary Society, by order of the Committee, informed us that for special and valuable services to the cause, they had been pleased to add our name to the limited and select list of Life Governors, and a copy of that letter will be seen in a BANNER dated about two years ago. The Jews Society did the very same thing a few months afterwards, and a copy of their Secretary's letter we also published.

The South American Missionary Society have just sent us the following, which speaks for itself:—

"Taking into consideration your long and kind services to the Society, the Committee have been pleased to place your name in the list of Vice-Presidents. This gives you a seat at the General Committee, should you ever be able to attend. . . . I am glad Clifton and Bristol are thus represented by yourself and Mr. Inskip.

"(Signed), EDWD. POULDEN, Lay Secretary.

"1, Clifford's-inn, Fleet-street, London, June 6th."

Though we may seem to be boastful, we desire in all humility to meet Col. Molesworth's rash assertion, and in our own case to tell him he is mistaken, and that even as editor of the BANNER, working hard in a cause he calls "such nonsense," we can find time to labour diligently for those three great and two other lesser societies for the salvation of the souls of men; to pray for their glorious work, and to long for their success for Christ's sake.

We believe the Identity to be the Lord's own work, and not Satan's. It aims at God's glory, at the restoration of Christ's kingdom, the return of Israel and Judah to their land, and to the evangelization of the planet's inhabitants, to the Lord's infinite praise and satisfaction! We have times without number showed how the evidence of the Scriptures, and of facts, bear, as proofs, upon our case, and we invite Col. Molesworth to study the Handbook, which is an authorised compendium of the same, to show us wherein we seven writers in it err. It is not fair to call ours "fancies," or "nonsense," "delusions," and the like. The time for such hard words has passed. We have established our case, and we require to be dealt with like men, and not like children. Mark Guy Pearse is satisfied we are right, and so are many others who are men of ability and wisdom. Why should Col. Molesworth, who goes so far with us, refuse to look into the evidence of our case, as it regards the British people, save in so scoffing and almost insulting a way?

The men who hold our views are as zealous for the Lord Jesus as he is. Let him meet us as brethren, and let him read what we have published, and then tell us we are wrong. His verdict in The Witness is based on nothing which pretends to be evidence of any kind!

RANDOM SHAFTS.

DURING the last five or six years there has been a good deal of self-important sneering at our great truth in the religious press, but I do not remember seeing a solitary argument; and the only attempt to reason the matter in a Christian fashion was made by an infidel paper. The Christian Commonwealth, like so many "Christian" weeklies, does not seem able to express its views on the subject except in the shape of revilings. What is not by any means a singular circumstance, it is much given to lecturing other people on their lack of charity. In a recent number the editor protests "It is time that all Christian men should regard each other with courtesy and mutual esteem," enquiring "When will certain Ritualists learn to abjure the music of Billingsgate?" and then proceeds to class the Identity with "crazes," "egregious absurdities," and "the most manifest delusions."

Ritualists will perhaps abjure Billingsgate when they can secure arguments, and the same may be said of the Christian Commonwealth. If the editor was asked to favour us with a little logic for once, instead of resorting to the fish market, he would doubtless deliver the usual address—viz., that he had neither time nor space to discuss such a profitless topic. And in fact there would be an excuse for him, because in this very issue he has to deal with both American mummies and the latest fashion in bonnets; besides which, a periodical with "Christian" for its title must be careful what it admits into its columns, saving, of course, the advertisement columns. But, making every allowance for this, how is it that these serials have time and space to abuse the belief?

Having thus shown us, in words few but forcible, where the Ten Tribes are not, the Christian Commonwealth goes on to inform us where they are. Esther Abraham, a Nestorian —"amongst the most interesting representatives of an intensely interesting people," "the second and youthful wife of Deacon Abraham," a "clever and versatile young Christian lady," is at present in England collecting money. But Mrs. Abraham has intimated that she is one of the descendants of the Ten Tribes, and the quantity of gossamer which the Commonwealth spins out of this innocent statement is truly prodigious. "The question, Where are the Lost Ten Tribes? is easy to answer. But instead of accepting the obvious answer many excellent people prefer to cultivate the bewildering speciousness of Anglo-Israelism. Esther declares herself to be one of the descendants of the people of the Ten Tribes. She is undoubtedly right. The Ten Tribes have never been lost at all. A remnant of them, and a very splendid one too, remains in the grand cradle of the world—the region around Ararat. . . . Whence did they derive their Jewish customs? From their ancestors. They are called by Jewish names exactly like those of the Bible. Half a century ago, Dr. Asahel Grey (sic) spent a long period amongst this people. His book should be in every student's library. It settles the question of the Identity of the Syrian Christians and the Eastern Church round Ooroomiah and Lake Van with the Ten Tribes.

For hundreds of years the world—including the "region around Ararat"—has been diligently searched by competent explorers in the hope of tracking the Ten Tribes, and we are now assured that they were never lost. If the editor of the Christian Commonwealth had only lived a few centuries earlier he might have saved mankind a vast amount of trouble. Before deciding the problem quite so tersely he should read Isa. xxvii. 13. The original Hebrew ought to be consulted; failing that he could look at the marginal rendering of the Revised Version, and explain it to us at the first opportunity. But the cardinal feature of this effusion lies in the method by which it is "proved" that the Ten Tribes were never lost. "A remnant of them remains in the region around Ararat." According to the dictionary a "remnant" is a "scrap," and because a scrap of them is alleged to have been found near Ararat, the Ten Tribes were never lost, and the British cannot possibly be of Israel. Thus a part is equal to the whole, and a twig constitutes the tree. What a "Rupert of Debate" this gentleman would make. The next time an agitation arises in consequence of outrages on Russian Jews we shall expect him to maintain that there cannot be Jews in Russia, as "a remnant of them, and a very splendid one," dwells in London.

Esther Abraham may be correct, and so may we. The enmity between her opinions and ours is not altogether clear. Would it surprise our opponent to hear that both she and her husband acquiesce in British-Israelism? Ask them! Further, the Nestorian Pastor, George Hormizd, was in this country a year or two ago; and as he came with credentials from the highest of State authorities, he is probably a capable witness. Pastor Hormizd also considered that he was "one of the descendants of the Ten Tribes"—the tribe of Gad, but he declared, and declared publicly, that the British were the Ten-tribed nation. Nor did he learn this from the "bewildering speciousness of Anglo-Israelism," but from a study of the prophecies appertaining to Israel, and a close knowledge of English history. Those who are unacquainted with prophecy and history, or have only a smattering of each, picked up for the purpose of passing an examination, are not qualified to utter decrees on British-Israelism, and it is just these who indulge most freely in extreme phrases of the Christian Commonwealth style.

The Israelitish extraction of the Nestorians is, however, open to the gravest dispute. Our opponent would have us imagine that Dr. Grant has finally and triumphantly substantiated their claim. "His book should be in every student's library. It settles the question." Really? Well, let us refer to a leading article in the Christian Commonwealth of Aug. 11th, 1892. The Dean of Argyll and the Rev. W. H. Browne, LL.M., laboured for five years in connection with the Archbishop of Canterbury's Assyrian Mission, and they have written "An Account of the Religious and Secular Life and Opinions" of the Nestorians. In reviewing this work the writer said, "We are interested and puzzled alike at the way in which the two clergymen treat Dr. Grant. They say of him (p. 336), 'Dr. Grant, one of the first of the American Presbyterian Missionaries to this people, testifies to the absence of superstition in the Syrian's reverence for the sign of our Lord.' And on p. 277 we read the remark that 'the preponderance of Biblical names amongst the men has given Dr. Grant an argument to support his theory that the Syrians are the Ten Lost Tribes.' This is all the notice which the Dean of Argyll and Mr. Browne take of Dr. Grant and his wonderful book. How is this? Dr. Grant aimed at finding out who the Nestorians are; these two clergymen tell us what they are. But why can they not condescend to say a word on the important topic which will always possess a paramount interest? Do they believe or not that the Nestorians are descended from Ancient Israel?"

In this extract, the author of it waxes somewhat angry because the Dean of Argyll and his fellow are not so simple-minded as he could wish them to be. They have evidently got Dr. Grant's book in their libraries, and have given it their attention, yet they actually do not see that it settles the question. No marvel our editor is nettled. But perhaps they have other books on their library shelves in addition to Grant's. For instance they may have the Diary of Dr. Wolff, a Jew, and an even better judge than Grant. He ransacked Asia for the Ten Tribes, and rejected the notion that the Nestorians were their posterity. Or they may possess Mr. Athelstan Riley's essay, which contends that the Nestorians are Chaldeans. Or they may have the Rev. Charles Forster's work, which proves that the Afghans are the Ten Tribes; or Dr. Fletcher's, which proves that the Tartars are the Ten Tribes. These all settle the question in their own respective ways; and if "Jewish" names or customs are accepted as guides the Israelites can be had in almost every portion of the East. But possibly one reason why the world continues unconvinced is the drawback that Jewish names and customs are not hard to obtain when we have the Old Testament, or a perversion of it, in our hands.

I observe a remark that among our adherents there are many "excellent" people. Thanks. This is an improvement on the estimate formed by the latter-day champion of the Ooroomiah theory, who designates us "devil-inspired." But there are various descriptions of excellence. A person may be excellent in moral character, in scholastic attainments, or in mental discrimination. It is to be feared that the two last are not comprehended, or intended to be comprehended in the above allusion. "Egregious absurdities" and "manifest delusions" are compatible enough with virtuous qualities, but incompatible with soundness of intellect, and the public are therefore led to suppose that we consist of amiable fools. To call the Identity a craze is comparatively safe, but it would not do to name the victims of the craze, since the suspicion might then be aroused that they are quite as able to frame a correct judgment as any within the ranks of their critics. When the Rev. Mark G. Pearse joined us, I did not detect the slightest reference to it in the religious papers. If Mr. Pearse had gone over to the Spiritualists, or if a man like Mr. Pearse had left us, it would have provided food for numbers of leaderettes. And at the death of Dr. Titcomb, the Times gave a lengthy obituary notice of the deceased bishop, mentioning his books and labours, but it omitted to mention his books and labours on behalf of the subject which engrossed his thoughts to the very end. "Spread the light," is the motto in which the press glories. "Keep it dark," is the motto on which it is prudent to act in this case.

Review.

On the concord which exists between the Historical Law of Nations of Major R. Brück, the Chronology of the Bible and that of the Great Pyramid of Cheops; with a New Interpretation of the Prophetic plan of the Apocalypse. By Charles Lagrange, an old pupil of the Military School, Professor of the Military College, Astronomer of the Observatory, and Member of the Royal Academy of Belgium. Brussells: F. Hayez, Printer, R.A. of Sciences, 112, Rue de Louvain. 1893.

PART I.

THE above is a learned and carefully written treatise on the subject described in the title page, and has reference to the historical law of nations as illustrated by the Bible, the Great Pyramid, and by a work on the subject by Major R. Brück, a Belgian officer. We notice the book because the writer, though a learned foreigner, is nevertheless a believer in Our Identity! Not a languid believer either, who is content that the thing should be true yet deems it of no importance to himself or others. He seems to have studied the subject carefully, to be a reader of the BANNER OF ISRAEL, mentioned in a note on p. 44, and also Glover's work, described as "tres remarquable," on "England the Remnant of Judah and the Israel of Ephraim." We think the best notice we can give of M. Ch. Lagrange's work will be to furnish the reader with translations of such parts of it as relate to Our Identity and to the Great Pyramid's references to the subject. We are indebted to a zealous friend for these translations, which are on the whole very accurate; and they will enable our readers to judge of the nature of the Belgian scientist's confirmation of our views; also to wonder that while a foreigner can see the validity of our evidence, our learned ones at home cannot or will not appreciate it or own its force. Our extracts are as follows:—

THE AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE HISTORICAL LAW OF NATIONS

BY MAJOR BRÜCK.

THE CHRONOLOGY OF THE BIBLE, AND THAT OF THE GREAT PYRAMID OF CHEOPS, WITH A NEW INTERPRETATION OF THE PROPHETIC PLAN OF THE APOCALYPSE.

INTRODUCTION.

(PART I. Sec. 2.)—My facts are based on three documents. 1st. The work of a Belgian officer, Major R. Brück, who brings out the chronological law which governs the succession, the continuance and the phases of the life of nations. This law is a recognised fact.

2ndly.—The second is the Bible, which by its chronological facts, whether historical or prophetic, spreads itself over the whole of the past and future of humanity, and its spiritual dispensations appear as if incarnated in an organism where all is ruled by number, weight, and measure.

3rdly.—The third, in short, is the whole of the very exact measurements of the Great Pyramid of Gizeh, accomplished recently, first of all in 1865, by one of the most eminent astronomers of this century, Prof. Piazzi Smyth, and again in 1883, under the auspices of the Royal Society of London, by Mr. Flinders Petrie. Each of these three data encloses a metrical element and it is by this common trait that the correlation exists between them and becomes verifiable.

(Part III. Sec. 3).—My first perusal of Brück's works took place 20 years ago (1871). Since then, in spite of the preoccupation of other work, I have not ceased to think of them, and it is a considerable time since the agreement already partially undertaken by him, between his historical law and the chronology of the Hebrew text of the Old Testament, struck me as being one of the most decisive external arguments in favour of the sacred book.

This remark established from the first a correlation between the two first datas. Another correlation exists between the two last. There will be found quoted in the course of this work many numerical facts which have long been put in evidence by the measurements of the pyramids. Prof. Piazzi Smyth has been able to show, in a certain scientific order, that the Great Pyramid is a monument of Hebraic origin. Also that it is in a manner a stone book, where will be found, with a precision equal to the science of to-day, and by the aid of the unity of measurements borrowed from the terrestrial globe, the fundamental quantities of astronomy, and the physical conditions of the globe. Thirdly, that the metrical system of the Pyramid and that of the Bible are identical. And, fourthly, that very probably the chronology of the Bible, in taking for argument the Mosaic and Christian spiritual dispensations, is itself inscribed exactly in the Pyramid by the diagram of the interior passages traced in a meridional plan; the ordinate of the diagram would be a function of time. In any case the form of this diagram symbolises in a remarkable manner the dispensation of which it treats, and the dimensions agree as well as can be hoped for with the data considered to-day as uncertain with the Biblical chronology.

(Part VI. Sec. 5).—The chronology of the Pyramid is really identical with the literal chronology of the Bible. All the prophecies are there symbolised, all the numbers which it encloses are to be found there. The date of the Pyramid given by itself is 2170.

(Sec. 6).—The only possible interpretation of these facts will be henceforth that the Great Pyramid and the Bible are both the works of divine inspiration; and that if the immutable book of stone, in which are written simultaneously the highest truths of the most advanced science of to-day, and also symbolised the spiritual truth of the other book, sealed at the origin of all time, it is for the enlightening of these latter days, these days of the science of external facts, it renders this most overwhelming external testimony to these eternal truths, which misunderstood are nevertheless of vital importance.

(Part X. Sec. 10).—The putting forth of the above views has brought upon me the reproach of many friends, who consider them in opposition to the true beliefs of the Church. I regret profoundly the situation. I will ask those of whom I speak, to put themselves in my place, to decide if possessing such a proof in favour of revealed truth, it is permitted me not to make it openly known. I will ask them to transport themselves with me to this plane, where, divining the presence of God, noble minds find a bond of sympathy in the sentiment even of common misery which created their disagreements.

(Part XI. Sec. 11).—I consider actual demonstration as important to the interest of Christianity, at a period when the common view in the spirit of the teaching is that there is incompatibility between the Bible and science, and where the discredit which attends the book affects also the vital elements of which it is the depositary.

This demonstration is useful to all, and especially to those who, terminating their rapid voyage of exploration, which are called superior studies, and perceiving that there exists in science something more than geometry and mechanics, wish to tempt the discovery of this unknown world. Further reflection points out to them that in passing from the physical world to the moral world, nothing is changed in the scientific method, and that in the one as in the other, the same process leads to personal faith.

But whilst expecting this fruit of experience, the objections of a purely external science are like an iceberg against which the mind exhausts itself, and shuts the door to all further investigation.

Chapter I.

(Sec. 1).—Nations, like individuals, are born, live and die. Let us suppose that an observer, outside the globe, analyses the phenomenon of the development of humanity, that is to say, the march of civilization on the surface of the globe. He will see this phenomenon ruled by a law; this law comprehends: 1st.—A term of precession, it expresses the secular displacement of civilization of the East towards the West, from the origin of history up to known periods.

2ndly.—A periodic term, quinquasêculaire; this term affects, by a systematic succession of phases to intervals always arranged the same (1. Constitution. 2. Preorganization. 3. Organization. 4. Apogee. 5. Decadence), civilizing centres which mark the halting-places of the term of precession.

(Part XV. Sec. 2).—The term precession, or the general march of civilization from East to West during historic times, results from a single birds-eye view of the whole matter. Starting from Chaldea, then oscillating between the banks of the Nile, and those of Jordan, civilization became progressively displaced. Following the Mediterranean parallel of latitude, it has attained the backbone of Europe, has passed it, has gathered up in moving Northwards, the Western limit of Europe, the British Isles, and has touched the ocean in conquering the New World. This New World it has traversed, and, it seems, ought to crown its circular course in absorbing in the meeting of its tides, and the European reflux which it attracts, these primitive Asiatic regions of the world from which it started, bringing back to them, under a new form, after more than four thousand years, the knowledge of the principle which gave them birth. The periodic term of law has from the special point of view of this study, more compass even than the term precession. For since historic times, until the present day, nations are born, have lived, and have disappeared, is, in itself, an evident first historical theorem. Egyptian civilization preceded that of the Jews, Israelites, and the Phœnicians, and after them Greece attained her zenith, and then declined.

(Part XVIII. Sec. 2).—It will be seen that beginning with the Assyrians, history defines in order the following powers, Assyrians, Egyptians, Jews, Israelites, Phœnicians, Greeks, Romans, Franks, Papacy, and the French.

(Part XLIII. Sec. 15).—There exists a profound signification in a particular fact of which the actual study of Brück's law will prove to the reader the undeniable reality; this fact, the reason of which has been hidden hitherto from all history, is that there exists a relationship of descent between the Anglo-Saxons and the Ten Tribes of Israel, tribes of which all trace was lost shortly after their dispersion, 758, according to our literal chronology, and whose destiny, in spite of the numerous researches of which it has been the object, has remained an historical enigma. On this point it is worthy of remark that about fifteen years ago a movement, independent in its origin of all study of the Pyramid, but essentially based on the Bible, took rise in England to prove the Hebrew descent of the British people, which the historic symbolism and the chronology of the ancient monument agreeing with the Bible will put beyond doubt in this work.

(Note, page 44). See with regard to this the BANNER OF ISRAEL, a weekly journal advocating the Identity of the British nation with the Lost Tribes of Israel, and also the descent of the English Queen from the House of Judah. See upon this subject Glover's remarkable book.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel.

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—Believing a few lines from this far-off corner of our great British Empire would interest you, I have taken upon myself to write them, as they are inspired by the brotherhood of British-Israel truth. Devonport is situated on the N.W. coast of Tasmania, in early days being known as the Mersey, which river flows through it to the open sea, on either banks being the townships of Formby and Torquay, which three years since were amalgamated into the town of Devonport, west and east, and a Town Board formed as a local governing body. At the Mersey has lived for nearly 40 years a master mariner, now retired, named Captain W. Holyman, and for nearly half that time he has been a student of Anglo-Israel literature, of course by this time developed into a firm believer in the gospel of the Identity. He is the proud possessor of quite a library of Identity literature, part of which he personally bought of Messrs. Banks and Son when on a visit to the old country a few years back. He regularly receives the BANNER OF ISRAEL and the Messenger, and with his books he has them in circulation, having about 20 readers, so that our views are being spread in a quiet but, perhaps, still in an effectual manner. From the enclosed newspaper clipping you will notice that the captain fills an honourable position in our community, with the writer being a member of our Local Town Board:—

"DEVONPORT TOWN BOARD.

"The fortnightly meeting of the above was held at the Public Buildings yesterday afternoon. Present: Messrs. W. Holyman, L. Moore, G. Buck, A. J. Stokes, W. Sayer, H. A. Stephenson, and J. Luck.

"Mr. Stokes moved that Mr. Holyman be elected chairman for the ensuing year. That gentleman was the only remaining member of the old Board, and was acquainted with all the minor details, although he did not wish to imply anything derogatory to the other members.—Mr. Buck seconded.—The motion was carried unanimously.—Mr. Holyman, in returning thanks, said he would endeavour to carry on the business of the Board in a proper manner. There were several important matters under weigh, the principal being the construction of the waterworks. He had much pleasure in stating that the finances were satisfactorily arranged, and the Board would not be asked to pay anything more outside the agreement."

By his wide distribution of our literature, and his personal introduction of the subject of Our Identity with the lost House of Israel, I consider the captain has been the means of bringing many to study and then believe in the premises therein declared, so that there are many here who assent to the fact; and were a lecturer to stir the subject up, I believe a good harvest would be reaped as a result of his unostentatious efforts in our cause. The writer owes to him his interest in British-Israel truth, which has made the Bible a plainer book, and, read in the light of Identity, a more interesting volume. As a local preacher I have introduced the subject in several addresses. Only this morning, when treating Heb. xii., I referred to the covenant made with Abraham as one of the "things that cannot be shaken, that will remain," so that in my own small way I am trying to emulate the efforts of my friend who has done so much in the cause.

Having from my boyhood taken an interest in politics, both Tasmanian and English, the way in which the BANNER OF ISRAEL deals with the subject is to myself peculiarly interesting, and I trust you may long be spared to edit its columns and guide its expressions. Our local newspapers have cabled the important doings in the home-land, and last week had lengthy telegraphic reports of the brilliant opening of the Imperial Institute, and one of our papers in a leading article so expressed itself that to us it was blind evidence of our Israelitish origin, but I expect that in the BANNER you have had a more direct reference to the event. The books I have been privileged to read are the "Handbook," "Fulness of the Nations," and "Jehovah Triumphant," but the captain has plenty more when I have time to read them.

Thus far I have related what I thought would be of interest and encouragement to you, and I will close by stating my determination to use my feeble influence towards removing the "blindness in part which hath happened unto Israel," so that it will be patent to all that we are the people whom the Lord hath blessed. An acknowledgment of the receipt of this letter in the columns of the BANNER is desired. I therefore beg to subscribe myself,

Yours in the glorious hope,

A. J. STOKES.

Devonport, Tasmania, May 14th, 1893.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—I am forwarding you a copy of the Richmond and Twickenham Times, in which you will see a report of Our Identity meeting at St. Margaret's. We had a fairly well-attended meeting, considering it was a wet night. The lecture was listened to with great interest, and some literature was sold at the close. A quantity of it was given away. I am glad to say I am enabled to bring the Identity before a number of people, whom perhaps others would not reach in the ordinary course. I am working in the Thames Church Mission on the river; so I often have an opportunity of testifying to the truth of God's Word in the light of the Identity to the careless, the unbelieving and sceptics. One bargeman has become a subscriber to the BANNER, and I believe is doing a quiet, but great work in the village in which he lives, by lending his own BANNER and any back numbers that I may give him. I could give you many an instance of the effect the Identity has produced when brought before these people for the first time. The surprise and pleasure it has brought to them is shown by their looks. One case I will mention. I met a Wesleyan minister while I was out distributing the bills for our meeting. I asked him if he would kindly exhibit a bill on his church walls. He looked at it and said, "Yes, I will." I then went on to give him a brief outline of what the lecture was about, and after quoting two or three passages of Scripture, he said, "Well, I have never heard of this before; but there seems to be much in it; I will certainly try and come to the lecture." I then told him that the Rev. Mark Guy Pearse was a firm believer in it, at which he seemed greatly surprised. I then gave him one or two copies of that leaflet, "An Englishman an Israelite," and left him.

I remain, yours in the work,

A. P. VICKERS.

THE ROYAL WEDDING.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL must contribute its quota of congratulation and good wishes to the Duke and Duchess of York on the auspicious occasion which, on July 6th, 1893, united them as man and wife amid the plaudits of the vast multitudes, thousands upon thousands, who in the streets shouted with ringing British cheers to bid the happy pair "God-speed" and "God's blessing during their future married life." The day was a bright, hot, summer's day—true "Queen's weather," leaving nothing to be desired on that score. The ceremony took place in the Chapel Royal at St. James' Palace, amid the joy of the United Kingdom, the congratulations of the colonial empire, and the good wishes of all Europe. The Queen and the whole of the Royal Family were present on the occasion. "Never," says the Times reporter, "had the populace been present in larger numbers, and never have the plaudits of the people been more spontaneous and tumultuous."

Hundreds of thousands of voluntary spectators, all of them orderly and anxious to do honour to the occasion, occupied the streets. Immense numbers were country folk, who had come on purpose to see the pageant and honour it. Large parties, we know, left Great Malvern, for instance, at 3.30 that morning, arrived in London in time to see the great sight, as well as the illuminations of the night, and returned home during the small hours of the 7th July, leaving London also very early in the morning. Though the Government refused to proclaim a general holiday, the country at large attended very little to the business of the nation, but elected to have a holiday of their own, and secured it. In country villages and towns it was the same. The poor were fed, the children were amused, the local volunteers went through their parades in public, salutes were fired, and fireworks, good and indifferent, brought the glorious day to its appropriate close.

In some places the churches were opened and a short commemorative service was held, at which 800 to 1,000 children—boys and girls—were marched to their respective churches, with banners and bands accompanying, to pray God to bless the sailor prince, who that day was wedded to the sweet English princess, the beloved "May," as the people insist on calling her. The royal wedding was a red-letter day in Israel's history, and she enjoyed her holiday to the very utmost. The Vicar of Malvern, in his address to the assembled 800 children and many adults in the Priory Church, called for thanks and praise to God "for the blessings which we in His providence enjoy as a nation, and which we have enjoyed in the past under the wise sway of our Queen." "Let the prayer of every one of us to-day," he added, "be that God the Holy Spirit may send down upon us as a nation for ever the blessing of being united. Let us pray, one and all, for a united parish, for a united Empire, for a united Church. Pray, all of you, this great and solemn day, pray, amid your thanksgivings and rejoicings, that the divisions that separate Christians may be healed. God the Spirit only can do that. As to-day we all meet together as one in this grand old house of prayer, so may we indeed be one, as Christ our Lord has prayed for His people that they may be one"

These good wishes, uttered by the Rev. Dr. Gregory Smith, were almost Israelitish in their tenor. The Vicar, however, did not stop to consider, that his prayer for national unity was already being accomplished as he spoke; for the streets of London, and of the towns and villages of the United Kingdom, were testifying at the moment that ours was a true union between the throne and people, the rulers and their Israelitish subjects, such union being God's blessing to His people in giving them a dynasty to occupy the throne of the House of Israel, perpetual in its duration, such dynasty being by descent derived from the family of David according to the promises of God (1 Kings viii. 25; Jer. xxxiii. 17). The blessing of God thus rests on the throne and royal family of Israel. The Queen and her children are beloved by the great mass of her subjects, and her people take delight to honour the marriage of the eldest living son of the heir-apparent, especially because the bride of his choice is the beloved of the people, who see in her a princess of the English race, one born and bred in the land, whom they have long since resolved in their hearts should be at some time yet far distant, the occupant of the throne, with their future King George, now the Duke of York.

We feel sure that all our readers will unite with us in wishing long life, health, and happ ness to our newly-wedded prince and princess. In the well-selected words of the Times, we cannot do better than repeat that "no wedded pair can ever have entered the solemn bond with greater assurance of happiness than the sailor son of the Prince of Wales and his winsome bride." That God's blessing may henceforth follow them to their lives' end is the hearty prayer of all Anglo-Israelites and of every reader of the BANNER OF ISRAEL throughout the whole earth!

THE DISCUSSION IN YARMOUTH, NOVA SCOTIA.

No. IV.—ANGLO-ISRAELISM.

BY BARRINGTON.

THE assumption of Anglo-Israelism is that a body of people can claim a distinct name of a special origin and relation, and forget both the origin and relation; forget institutions of a national character, entwined with the name, and that mark epochs in their history; all memory effaced, and not a lingering trace of former association and race history. Forget their literature, poets, and teachers! Nay, not even remember a father of the nation, and the one name cherished by the Hebrew race, their deliverer, law-giver, and glory—Moses. More, bearing the name of that God who had separated them from all the nations, as the God of Israel, yet for hundreds of years ignorant of Him. Substituting for the true God a hero of war, and making him a god, the chief god, whose characteristics they evinced as men of war. For the feasts of historic and spiritual import, an "ale feast"; "a holy supper of horse flesh and mead" (Karl Blind); "the Jotun festival—or giant burning—when a doll was carried round and burned, after the manner of Guy Fawkes." Why that feast? Because it was believed that Jotun—giants—once held sway, and were the first inhabitants of the earth; "then came a race of gods." "The gods vanquished the giants," and the commemoration of the victory was the "Jotun festival," celebrated at Eostre—i.e., Easter, "after the goddess of Spring." Yet we are told these "hard drinkers, hard fighters," with their orgies and Saturnalias were Israel! Forgotten their literature, the glory of the race; their temple with its glory and the "divinest song," for "hearth worship" of Pagan form, and hero war songs and trivial mythological lore. Truly "the mighty have fallen!" But was there ever such a fall?

Then take their mode of life as described in Cæsar's commentaries:—"They do not pay much attention to agriculture . . . only use skins or small cloaks of deers' hides, a large portion of the body being naked. Their whole life is occupied in hunting, and in the pursuit of the military art." Then as to their character:—"The Germans were men of huge stature . . . of fierce look." Tacitus in "Germanica" alludes to the same fact. "Fierce beyond other foes, and cunning as they are fierce; the sea is their school of war and the storm their friend; they are sea wolves that prey on the pillage of the world!" (quotation from a Roman poet of the time—Green's English History).

What a contrast to this fact, as given by Dr. Kingsley Glover of the Hebrews of India, who settled in Cranganor 430 A.D. Have a continuous history, with records, as a separate and distinct people, maintaining the worship of the true God, and adhering to the paths of their fathers. It is recorded in one of their manuscripts that "There are amongst us some of the children of Israel who came from Ashkenaz, from Egypt, from Tsobo, and other places." Then mark what Professor Sayce tells us:—"So far from being illiterate the ancient civilised East was almost as full of literary activity as is the world to-day. The Israelites in Canaan were surrounded by nations who were in the enjoyment of ancient cultures, and abundant stores of books." Taking our knowledge of Israel in the Word of God, and our knowledge of the nations they were scattered amongst, is it possible that the race described by Cæsar, named by Green, can be Hebrews? Further, in the history of Israel in the Word of God, we have a gradual development in all the excellencies of national life, social, political, and religious; are excelling the nations around them; specially chosen and blessed of God; producing a continuous line of scholars, prophets, teachers, and leaders. Yet, according to Anglo-Israelism, the "Engles and Saxons," in their northern home as they have been described, "fierce"; "hard drinkers and hard fighters"; "clad in skins"; "hunting and fishing"; "the ale feast the centre of their social life"; that these are the same people! True, we have evidence of marked improvement at the close of the third century. But for hundreds of years not a scholar or teacher, whose name has come down to us. "Beowulf" is a poem of the eighth century, although the contents refer to an earlier period. Cædmon, the first poet of the Christian era, belonged to the seventh century. Bede, the first man of letters, was born 672, died 735.

But how different the Hebrew race after the captivity in Palestine! Even in Babylonia they had their schools and doctors. Then, the "Post-Talmudic Literature," by Bernhard Pick, bears witness to their intellectual power in all lands where they had been scattered. Still, for over 500 years, according to the Anglo-Israel teaching, this race in Anglo-Saxons comes to the height of glory and then sinks into the most primitive darkness, rudeness, and ignorance. Can we be surprised at Dean Plumtre's just judgment when he speaks of the Ten Tribes being preserved as a body, as "a fiction." And that the "Talmud recognizes their entire dispersion." Further, says Rabbi Akliva: "The Ten Tribes will never be restored."

Most of your readers, no doubt, treated the first half of Mr. Cooper's last attempt as a joke, and for me to think it anything else would spoil the effect designed. But, by the "twisting and turning," the effort seems to have been very trying. By a play on the word "Israel" he from end to end of his letter seems to make merry and confuse. The word "Israel" is used in three distinct senses in the Word of God. It is (1) used of all the tribes as a distinct people and the Church of God in the old dispensation; (2) of the Ten Tribes in a local sense; (3) in the N. T. of a distinct people, the Hebrew race, and of the universal Church of God. Thus (a) we have a general and spiritual sense; (b) a local and spiritual sense; (c) a particular as belonging to the Hebrew race, and a spiritual as belonging to a relation. That usage Mr. Cooper denies, but I have abundantly proved that it is of fact and truth.

That the Ten Tribes as a kingdom taking the name

Israel ceased to be, admits of no doubt; that the "body" were "indistinguishably lost" is the conclusion of our ablest scholars: That is of the Ten Tribes. "Within three-score and five years shall Ephraim be broken, that it be not a people" (Isa. vii. 8). "The spoil of Samaria shall be taken away before the King of Assyria" (Isa. viii. 4). "I will no more have mercy upon the House of Israel; but I will utterly take them away" (Hosea i. 6). "For ye are not My people and I will not be your God" (Hosea i. 9). Thus plainly as a kingdom and an united Ten-tribed people they ceased to be. But Israel in the first use of the term was preserved. That some of the Ten Tribes returned after the captivity is no "fancy," but absolute truth. Mr. Cooper wholly ignores the evidence I gave, and affirms "Israel never returned." Isaiah declares they were to be "broken" and "be not a people." That they were! Some returned and "mingled" with Judah, as declared in Ezra, and foretold by Ezekiel (chap. xxxvii.). So we will accept the Word of God in preference to Mr. Cooper's affirmation. Mr. Cooper calls attention to Jer. xxi. 35—38, to prove what? That "Israel never returned to Palestine," and that they were "to remain a separate nation." Isaiah, Hosea, and Amos declare they were not to "remain" a "separate nation," and that as a people they were to be "broken" and "utterly" taken away. Can Jeremiah contradict them? Does he do so? Let us see. "Then the seed of Israel shall cease from being a nation" (chap. xxxi. 36), "seed." Also chap. xlvi. 27: "seed." As a definite prophecy it refers to "seed." Then note this—Jer. xxxi. 37: "All the seed." But what does Paul say? "Hath God cast away His people? God forbid. For I also am an Israelite. . . . Even so; then at this present time also there is a remnant according to the election of grace. . . . Israel hath not obtained. . . . but the election hath obtained, and the rest were blinded" (Rom. xi. 1—7). "Where is this nation?" asks Mr. Cooper. Paul gives him the all-sufficient answer. Mr. Cooper's use of Deut. xxviii. 64, and false inference of what I said, shows "the nakedness of the land" and the hard straits of his Anglo-Israel fiction. He tells us that the last half of the prediction is "fulfilled in our Anglo-Saxon forefathers." There are heights of absurdity, and that statement surely reaches the climax. What king of Israel was carried captive to Great Britain? (see Deut. xxviii. 36). The prophecy was as to serving other gods fulfilled in the former dispensation.

The "strong case" as to Ephraim becoming a "multitude of nations," I have not only "attempted" to answer, but what is much better taken the citadel. How could Ephraim in this dispensation become a multitude of nations when "not a people"; "root dried up"; "few in number"; "a remnant?" Yet, Mr. Cooper will claim and continue to claim his argument is "unanswerable."

Mr. Cooper says he denounces "war, plunder, and robbery," yet he believes Israel is to "push"—i.e., gore, "the people to the ends of the earth!" Civilize them with gunpowder in the name of the Lord! Contradicts the letter and spirit of the New Testament in the interest of his exploded theory! Sets Moses in direct opposition to Christ, denounces "war," still claiming that a fulfilled prediction of another era demands "war" in this. As Christians are of "Israel"—i.e., the Church of God, they "are the children of promise" (Gal. iv. 28). That Mr. Cooper denies; once more I accept Paul, and most of your readers will do so. Mr. Cooper says only "converted Israel hold and possess the covenant." In his previous letter he said: "The racial seed of Abraham hold and possess the covenant." Now it's the "converted" who hold and possess the covenant. So we have an Israel within an Israel. But the Jewish nation was the Jewish Church; is that so as to Britain? The Israel of the nation was the Israel of the Church, and how can that be said of Britain? Mr. Cooper says we are Israel, therefore the British nation, as a nation, is the British Church. If not, why does he apply the word Israel to the nation as a nation? The "converted Israel" is the Israel of the New Testament, and that Paul says is the Church of God (Gal. vi. 16).

We are told "neither Jew nor Greek" refers to personal salvation. Yes! and more to distinctions as to race. "Race distinctions are abolished for ever" (Dr. Rankin).

"Led away captive into all nations," was, says Mr. Cooper, "spoken to Jews only." The "body" of the Ten Tribes were not there, as they had ceased to "be a people." Judah and Israel were united. Israel was there, in the Hebrew race, and the prediction belongs to no other race.

The "Gate's identity" in part fulfilled in the old dispensation is found in Christ and His Church (see Luke i. 71—74). No doubt a "map of the world" has its uses, but in this case the N. T. will best interpret Gen. xxii. 17. As to Isa. liv. 1—3, Paul applies that identity to the Church and not to Britain (Gal. iv. 25—27). The "head identity" is not in the passages named by Mr. Cooper. A "remnant" cannot either be "head or chief of the nations."

So the conclusion is, Israel is the Church of God, of every nation and clime. That Mr. Cooper begins to see, for he is "soon to close," which I regret. No doubt he realizes his limp theory is about exhausted. Hope he will not "close" till he has come to the rescue of his Anglo-Saxon Israelite forefathers, and made them Semitic. Of course Mr. Cooper's arguments will be "unanswerable." To save space, wouldn't it be best to take that for granted, with this proviso, to quote the "emphatic Syrena":—

"Because she's in the right
She's ever in the wrong?"

AN ANGLO-AMERICAN NATION.

By B. Hailes.

In the Banner of June 21st, notice is taken of Mr. Andrew Carnegie's article, "A Look Ahead," in the North American Review for the same month. Mr. Carnegie confidently believes in the future re-union of England and the American States, and though, no doubt, many, as he suggests, will call his article Utopian, and put it aside with a laugh of incredulity, yet to Anglo-Israelites this idea is neither Utopian nor new. As the Banner rightly remarks, however, this notion emanating from an Anglo-Israelite would at once be dismissed, not only as incredible, but crazy. Be it so, we can bide our time, because our "look ahead" is founded upon the Word of God, and we know that what He has purposed must come to pass, whatever human means He may employ for working out His will. When first Anglo-Israelites spoke and wrote of Imperial Federation, it was deemed a crazy notion, and there were pessimists then who cried "perish India," and proclaimed the disruption of the colonies from the mother country.

Times have changed, Imperial Federation is no longer a craze, but a statesmanlike programme, which seems now to be within almost measurable distance. So will it be with Anglo-American union, or rather we should say with the union of English speaking countries, for here we part company with Mr. Andrew Carnegie, whose ideas about this union run on very different lines to ours.

Great as the increase in population, wealth and trade is in America, we yet hold that England must always be first, "the head and not the tail." Not the headship which Mr. Carnegie would give her; a headship without domination, which would only give to her that "deference due to age and motherhood." Far different is the headship which is promised by the aged Patriarch, "he (Manasseh) also shall be great; but truly his younger brother (Ephraim) shall be greater than he."

Were England to follow the course which Mr. Carnegie points out, and "be relieved from her dangerous position" in India, allow her "colonies to develop into independent states, and form a trio of the United Kingdom, Canada, and America," how would the rest of Jacob's prophecy, "his seed shall become a multitude (or fulness) of nations, be fulfilled?" The tables drawn up in "A Look Ahead," showing the increase which has taken place in population in ten years, respectively, in the American Republic, and the members of the proposed "Imperial Federation," making the former twelve and-a-half millions, while the latter is only four and-a-quarter, and showing what the assumed increase for the two branches in the same proportion would be for the next fifty years, includes only the English-speaking parts of the Empire. Whereas, we, believing that "a nation and a company of nations," includes not only the English-speaking, but all parts of the Empire, India, and even Africa, a larger empire than we yet dream of, know that even in the matter of population, Ephraim, the younger, will be greater than Manasseh the elder.

How the re-union between the mother and her "giant child" is to be effected, we cannot say, it is not ours to prophecy, but like Mr. Carnegie we can "see it with the eye of faith." Though we do not believe, rife though democracy may seem to be, and unstable as many of our old institutions may appear, that the dictum of the Scotsman, "Democracy means, and rightly means, that privilege shall cease," applies in any way to our crown, nor do we hold with Mr. Carnegie that our beloved Queen would earn a place in the calendar as "Saint Victoria" were she to abdicate her throne in order to bring about a Republican union between the great mother and her great daughter. No, the Word of the Lord is, "David shall never want a man to sit upon the throne of the House of Israel." And however, in His own good time and purpose, our God may bring about the re-union so much to be desired, we feel sure that until He shall come, whose right it is, to sit upon the throne of His Father David, there will be no abdication of the throne of England in order that a Republican Government may be introduced.

That re-union with America would open a door to our trade, which would give "an assurance of continued prosperity," we cannot doubt, and that the "islands which cannot grow half enough of food to feed her people," would find in America "the richest soil for the production of the food she requires," is absolutely true. Nevertheless, we believe that this happy state of affairs will come to pass, though India remain the "brightest jewel in the crown," and Australasia and other colonies remain under the protectorate of the old land. Yea, though the seed of David be still crowned upon the "stone of destiny," which has so long reposed in England's noblest fane.

THE FIFTH AND LAST MONARCHY.

By J. G. Taylor.

When the mind, through habit or education, has been familiarized with certain ideas it does not seem to matter greatly whether the ideas are logical or illogical. They fit the imagination,—sometimes naturally, like hand and glove; sometimes unnaturally, in the way the famous Chinese foot fits the shoe; but in either case the partnership has come to be congenial, and any attempt to alter the state of affairs is obstinately resisted. The ideas in question may be ever so preposterous. But just as a continual flow of water will wear down even the roughnesses of a rock, one persistent train of thought will, by a species of deception, obliterate the absurdities, the difficulties, and the defects it meets with. This no doubt is why the spiritual interpretations put upon Israel's promises are adhered to so unwarrantably, and the infinitely sounder views yielded by the Identity rejected with high scorn. From the same cause, spiritual explanations of the prophecy concerning the stone kingdom are still popular, although they involve a mass of contradictions. It is true a theologian here and there has had the courage to declare that the spiritual theory is a mistake; that the Fifth Monarchy must be a literal empire no less than its forerunners; and that a "Church" will not satisfy the terms of the prediction. But they are voices crying in the wilderness, and so far as our experience goes it is a howling wilderness. To literalize the stone kingdom is to place the last straw on our opponents' back, and the choicest vials of their wrath are reserved for those who inflict that indignity. The most edifying reflection is that while they are engaged in telling us that the Fifth Monarchy cannot possibly be literal, the Fifth Monarchy is flourishing under their eyes; already bigger than four Roman Empires, and able to stow the whole image into a corner.

The incipient stages of a discussion on the Identity might have been observed a short time since in a Manchester journal, but unfortunately it did not get beyond the incipient stages. A letter was inserted advocating the spirituality of the stone kingdom, and a reply was sent by an Anglo-Israelite, but the Editor suddenly found that "a general newspaper is not the most fitting place wherein to thrash out the British-Israel theory." This is the usual trick. A "general newspaper" is too frequently the right place for attacking British-Israel sentiments and the wrong place to expect a hearing for the other side. Letters over which editors throw their protecting wing, and systems of exposition for which ecclesiastics contend so fiercely, must, one would think, have enormous merits. But we have not discovered them, and the candid inquirer will perhaps be inclined to suspect that this intolerance is due more to conscious weakness than conscious strength. Be that as it may, the epistle referred to affords us an opportunity of examining the spiritual process and contrasting it with the literal one, which we purpose doing in spite of the heavy allegation that our constructions are a "frightful perversion of the truth of God." It often happens that "God's truth" is a convenient name for man's error.

The writer makes the following propositions:—1. "The stone was a totally different thing from the image, and the Kingdom of Christ is totally different from the kingdoms of this world." 2. "The stone was cut out of the mountain without hands, and Christ's advent into this world was not attributable to ordinary human agency." 3. "The Kingdom of Christ, or the stone, was inaugurated when He was born." 4. "The stone was to smite the image upon his feet. When our Saviour appeared, the Roman power was upon its feet, in full fighting trim, not prostrate. That the stone began to smite as soon as it was cut out of the mountain is shown in the fact that, as soon as the infant Jesus was born, that crafty cruel monster Herod felt his throne tottering. The stone had started upon its irresistible course." There is nothing uncommonly foolish or uncommonly wise in this. It expresses the prevalent opinions, but we shall see that they are neither consistent with the prophecy nor supported by the events of history. A faint effort is made to justify the spiritualizing of the Fifth Monarchy, and certainly some justification is needed. Four-fifths of the vision have admittedly been accomplished in an absolutely literal manner; and if we are to take the remainder spiritually, we ought to be furnished with indisputable grounds for this arbitrary departure. The given reason is of no force whatever. "The stone was a totally different thing from the image." It was totally separate, but not totally different—it differed no more from the image than the image differed from itself, for there is a wide disparity between gold and clay. Above all, the stone was material, not spiritual, and that is the crucial point. What has separation or non-separation to do with essence? The language employed by Daniel indicates that the isolation of the stone was not innate or constitutional, but was brought about by Providence. Verse 34 says, "Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands." Reading this in connection with the previous verses leads to the inference that it was cut out of the image, for although the latter was metal we are dealing with an allegory. There is a confirmation in ver. 45: "Forasmuch as thou sawest that the stone was cut out of the mountain." A mountain is the scriptural emblem of an Empire (Jer. li. 25); hence it is said that the stone "became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth" (ver. 35); the similies clearly signifying that the stone would be detached from an Empire (necessarily the fourth) and expand into an Empire itself. The only sense in which we are entitled to suppose that the stone kingdom differed from its predecessors is revealed to us by the prophet: "It shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever." Instead of being broken it will break, and instead of collapsing to make room for a rival it will endure to the end.

But the utter inadequacy of our opponent's scheme is shown by the circumstance that in order to accommodate prophetic requirements the factor has to be changed. It is really a "coalition" of two schemes. The stone kingdom is identified with the Kingdom of Christ, which is the Church. But the Church did not begin in the fashion related of the stone, therefore he holds that Christ was the stone, and that "cut out of the mountain without hands," describes his miraculous origin. Putting aside the burlesque which compares the birth of Christ to such a transaction, it has to be noticed that the stone is the kingdom, in its diminutive form. It is the stone which grows into a mountain, and it is precisely the same object which is cut out and collides with the image. The Aggressor and the Developer are one, and if the Church will not answer to the character of the stone in every respect it simply manifests that the Church is not the kingdom. We are treated to several curious notions in the endeavour to build that silly hypothesis. "The Kingdom of Christ was inaugurated when He was born." This is affirmed so as to press the spiritual theory into agreement with Daniel's words: "In the days of these kings shall the God of Heaven set up a kingdom." But the device is a little too glaring. As before remarked, the kingdom of Christ is the "Church;" a term which our author is very careful to avoid. And the Church, with Christ in her midst, was at least in the wilderness, B.C. 1500 (Acts vii. 38).

We are further informed that the Saviour fulfilled the stone's destiny by striking the image. When He was born "the Roman power was in its full strength." "Herod felt his throne tottering," &c. Now the Roman power may have been complete, but the image was not. On consulting Dan. ii., we observe that when the stone "started upon its irresistible course" the first thing it did was to smite the image on its feet. And what were the feet? Ver. 41 acquaints us with this: "Whereas thou sawest the feet and toes, part of potter's clay and part of iron, the kingdom shall be divided." Consequently the feet and toes depict the Empire in its dismembered shape; that is, the nations among whom Rome was partitioned, so that according to the view promulgated in Manchester the stone struck the feet five centuries before the feet had any existence. It is amusing to read that "Herod felt his throne tottering," the stone having "started on its irresistible course," because we know that Herod's terror was based on a misapprehension. He had nothing to fear from the Saviour's advent. Christ declared, "My kingdom is not of this world," and if Herod and his people had embraced Christianity his throne might have been standing to-day for all that the Church would have done to it. And what is true of Herod's throne is true of every throne.

The entire method which teaches that the Church exercises the function of the predicted stone, dashing against secular communities and shattering them to fragments, is fallacious. The influence of the kingdom of Christ is the reverse of destructive, for "righteousness exalteth a nation." Let us appeal to facts and ask, What was it that subverted Rome? At the introduction of the Gospel the vigour of that dynasty was nearly exhausted. Nero, who reigned A.D. 54—68, was the embodiment of its depravity, and, we may say, the symptom of its decay. But the rapid spread of Christianity (which ought to have given it a deathblow if the spiritualizers are correct) gave it a fresh lease of life; and Constantine, who restored a measure of its fallen fortunes, was a believer in the new faith. Its Christianity, however, was not of the best type. It became more and more vitiated by paganism, and along with this there was political degeneracy. But the smiters and subsequent demolishers of the fabric were heathen tribes—Kimbri, Goths, Huns, and Vandals. The Church had no share in the catastrophe, nor is it responsible for the ruin of any nation, and this demonstrates decisively that it cannot be the stone whose office it was to "break in pieces and consume."

Having tested the spiritual version, and seen its deficiences, we have next to determine whether a literal dominion exists which accords with the foretold conditions. This should not be hard to do, as one of the conditions is that the kingdom must be of vast dimensions, and therefore conspicuous. Taking a mental survey of the globe, or looking at a map, the attention is at once arrested by the huge British Empire. Its immense size is sufficiently suggestive, but its ubiquity is even more significant. It is everywhere—in Europe, Asia, Africa, America, Australia, from China to Peru, and from Pole to Equator. There is no parallel to this on record, and when we bear in mind that the Empire is still rapidly extending, also that the American Republic belongs to the same stock, we are at no loss to find a race which will "fill the whole earth." The utterances of our prominent men during the past decade indicate that the momentous fact is at length dawning upon them.

We might indeed fancy that their ardent language was somewhat exaggerated did we not hear foreigners speaking in a similar strain and exclaiming with passion that the world was going to be a British possession.

Here, then, is the fifth universal monarchy, successor of Rome, but heir to an incomparably grander estate, and with British history in black and white we may learn whether the rise and progress of this Fifth Monarchy harmonizes with what is narrated of the stone. Daniel states (1) that the stone was cut out of the mountain without hands; (2) that the kingdom was established in the days of "these kings"; (3) that it fell on the feet of the image, crushing them, and increasing its own volume.

"These kings" must include the kings of "divided" Rome, for, when the prophet used the words, he had finished his account of the image. The nations among whom the Empire was distributed, and who are denoted by feet and toes, did not come on to the scene until A.D. 500, so it is subsequent to this that we must anticipate the organization of the stone kingdom. The Saxons arrived in this country A.D. 450—590; Egbert united the Heptarchy A.D. 800; Alfred ruled A.D. 870; and all these dates conform with the prediction. But prior to the "setting up" of the stone kingdom, the stone was "cut out without hands," and prior to the setting up of England, Britain was disjoined from Rome without a stroke. The Romans were not in the habit of surrendering the spoils of war, but in this instance they did so. Honorius stood in need of soldiers, and Britain was emptied of them. It is worth noting that the Roman troops were withdrawn from Gaul and Spain at the same critical juncture, but these lands were afterwards recovered, whereas Britain was not molested. Thus the phrase, "cut out without hands," is a strictly accurate description of the method by which we were severed, and in proportion to the Roman bulk Britain was but a "stone."

The geographical situation of Britain is another evidence that she represents the stone. The head of the image was Babylon: "Thou art this head of gold," and the territories comprised in the body travel through Asia Minor and Europe, so that the feet would correspond with Western Europe, especially France and Spain. As the stone conflicts with this nether portion of the image at the commencement of its career we can legitimately assume that it was located near the feet, and England's close proximity to them fortifies her claim to be the stone.

It is perhaps not necessary to do more than mention that Britain has undoubtedly been the arch-foe of the image's feet, comprehending Holland, France, Spain, and smaller nations occasionally in league with them. From the sea-fight of 1214 to the battle-royal of 1815 she has been at incessant strife with them; and the three hundred blows administered throughout this six hundred years drained away their vitality, and deprived them of dependencies, which went to swell the stone kingdom; and those dependencies, with our colonies, make the British Empire what it is to-day. There could not be a finer symbol of British history than that of a stone, smiting, breaking, and growing into a mountain.

But Daniel's vision apparently embraces the latest ages in its scope, and the final developments are yet to happen: "Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver and the gold, broken to pieces together." This implies a revival of the image in some form, and it is not difficult to foresee how it may be effected.

Russia, who aims at dominating the old world, contains a good deal of the image-region, and is continuously absorbing scraps of it—her ambitions drive her in that direction. With France, her Slavonian relations, and her Asiatic allies, she would be the incorporation of the image; and on the other hand it is a settled conviction that we shall have to cope with her. This encounter between the Fifth Monarchy and the Four is plainly identical with the struggle detailed in Ezek. xxxviii., xxxix. For Gog is there, from "the North parts," with all his hordes, and the commentators allow that Gog is Russia. Israel is also there to challenge him, and what is the Fifth Monarchy if it be not Israel? Daniel announced (vii. 27) that the kingdom would be "given to the people of the saints of the Most High"—not the saints, as the spiritualizers urge, but the people of the saints, who were assuredly the Hebrew people (Psa. cxlviii. 14). Besides, the stone "breaks in pieces all these kingdoms," and of Israel God says, "With thee will I break in pieces the nations, and with thee will I destroy kingdoms" (Jer. li. 20).

The stone "filled the whole earth," and Israel inherits the "ends of the earth" (Deut. xxxiii. 17). It "stands for ever," and Israel's sway will not cease until sun and moon "depart from before Me" (Jer. xxxi. 35—37). The two are one, and both are the exact duplicate of England. It can be proved that the British are inheriting the promises bestowed definitely on Israel, and their ancestors are easily traceable to the Median home. They are therefore Israel. It can likewise be proved that the British are executing the mission of the Fifth Monarchy. Again, therefore, they are Israel. In whichever way the enquiry is carried out we are led to the same conclusion. And it is not a slight privilege to know, amid the political embroilments of the present, and tragic convulsions of the near future, that the Anglo-Saxon realm will discomfit every enemy that crosses its path, replenish the earth, and last through all time.

PART II.

(Part LVIII. Sec. 25).—In the Queen's Chamber of the Great Pyramid two measurements (EX and BA) are both equal to the English yard.

(Sec. 26).—The degree of which the length BX, which commences the horizontal table of the English period, is equal to the Hebrew cubit and the English yard (and besides sub-divided into these two unities by the point E), indicating clearly that this period concerns at the same time Israel and England. But other facts prove that the horizontal passage and the Queen's Chamber bring us back also to the Anglo-Saxons.

(Part VI. Sec. 30).—To sum up, the horizontal passage and the Queen's Chamber in the Great Pyramid are the history of the Christian dispensation. This dispensation is the Reformation amongst the Anglo-Saxons and the expansion of Christianity throughout the world under their influence (this expansion is characterized by the important fact of the foundation by the Puritans of New England, the origin of the United States).

(Part LXV. Sec. 32).—The race which is the object of the dispensation of the Queen's Chamber, then of the Antichamber and the King's Chamber, is, then, Israel. But we have shown that this race is also the Anglo-Saxon race. Therefore, according to the Pyramid, the Anglo-Saxons are none other than the descendants of the dispersed Ten Tribes of the House of Israel.

(Part CVI. Sec. 73).—The edict of Cyrus is in 536. The 42 months of Rev. xi. 2, lunar months, make 1,239 years. They extend to the beginning of the eighth century, in 1,239 —536 = 703; but after this epoch Israel as well as Judah, the two witnesses (Rev. xi. 3) whom the Lord does not forget, who will be found and will be blessed again in the last days (Isa. xix. 17, 18, 25), and will begin to manifest themselves and will serve as testimony to the world which polluted the Holy City (Rev. xi. 2).

(Part CVIII. Sec. 74).—Israel and Judah will have achieved their testimony (Rev. xi. 7) at the period marked by the south degree (B, fig. iii.) of the stone, perhaps in 1,999, 825 + 23,601 = 2,023,426.

(Part CIX. Sec. 76).—But this exaltation of the testimony of Israel and Judah (which, according to Isa. xix., shows a growth of material power, provoking or accentuating the reaction of Apoc. xi. 7); ought we to understand this exaltation as referring only to the new temple? (Translation doubtful here.) This testimony, so intimately bound up with the Pyramid, does it not begin in reality to raise itself from the time that Israel claimed before the eyes of the world her position as the chosen people, in the name of her faith in the Word, and in the light which poured forth upon her the measurement of this temple (Apoc. xi. 1), or altar of stone (Isa. xix.)? If the period of the testimony finishes with the last stone of the temple it certainly began with the first measurement of it.

(Part CXXIX. Sec. 93).—These Saxons and Normans, the one persecuted, the other persecuting, are both designated as the nations of the holy alliance. This remarkable passage, inexplicable outside the theory of the Identity of Israel with the Anglo-Saxons, becomes, therefore, through it, really intelligible.

(Part CLXXIX. Sec. 117).—If all the system of ideas which makes up the substance of our researches, and which the Bible on one side and the Pyramid on the other are, up till now, the adequate expression, is really consolidated, if it is the same with our interpretation of the epistles to the Seven Churches, there must be Identity, or at least parallelism or agreement, between two of these Seven Churches, between the second and the sixth, since the former corresponds to the Reformation, or to Israel in the last times, and the latter to Israel of the dispersion, and which, according to the whole theory, the one is the result of the other.

(Part CXCV. Sec. 129).—It is shown in this study by external proof, having the force of numbers—1st, that the literal chronology of the Hebrew text of the Bible is rigorously exact, agreeing with the historic law of Brück and identical with that of the Great Pyramid. That Pyramid in conformity with the theory defended by Prof. Piazzi Smyth is a Hebrew and not an Egyptian monument, and, like the Bible, a work of Divine inspiration, that its prophecies and the prophecies of the Apocalypse take in the whole history of humanity from the deluge to these days.

2ndly, That the Anglo-Saxons are the descendants of the Ten Tribes of Israel.

3rdly, That the Reformation is based on the true Christian principle, and continues virtually the Apostolic Church, whilst Roman Catholicism is rigorously condemned by Scripture.

(Part CCXX. Chap. vii.).—The prophetic and chronological plan of the Bible belongs to an organic whole, mathematically defined, of which the measurements are borrowed from the system of the world, and which are found inscribed by geometrical methods in the Great Pyramid of Gizeh. It is a fact that science possesses to-day proofs drawn from astronomy, geodesy, and the physical condition of the globe—in short, comparing the metrical data of the Bible with other data, determined by a standard of stone, susceptible of actual verifications, and repeated as often as necessary, not only to show the truth of the Scriptures, but to fix the exact interpretation of them. But neither science, nor history, nor the Bible are any longer falsifiable; the Pyramid exists, it can be measured afresh; up to the present time it has been done with precision, under conditions which render its testimony irrefutable, first before its prophetic character was suspected and since, in a hostile spirit, under the auspices of one of the most powerful scientific societies in the world.

(Part XXXIX. Sec. 8).—The comparison between the metrology of the Great Pyramid and that of the Bible rests upon the following fundamental fact. The Egyptian cubit is not the Hebrew cubit, the latter is not four-fifths the length of the former. The cubit of the Pyramid is none other than the sacred Hebrew cubit, such as Newton decided it two centuries ago. This being so, relations can truthfully exist between the metrical facts of the Bible and those of the Pyramid data, which are characterized on either side by the multiples of five and ten. But now these relations exist; they are immediate and simple. They established through the intermediary of the Pyramid that the metrical facts of the Bible, from the Deluge to the construction of the Bible, far from being arbitrary, are founded on a profound knowledge of the constant quantities of the physics of the earth.

(Part XLVI. Sec. 16).—The comparison of the chronology of the Bible and that of the Pyramid ought to be made continuously, starting from the Christian era in the past and forward into the future.

(Sec. 17).—According to the literal chronology of the Bible, the Deluge took place in 2528 and the Exodus in 1516.

(Part XLVIII.).— . . . The chronology of the Bible has been established to the letter, that is to say, purely and simply in adding the interval of time which it points out. It is the immediate natural way, it constitutes the first solution to adopt in a methodical mode of procedure.

(Part CLXXIV.).—Prof. Piazzi Smyth makes known to the world the reason and the significance of the stone-book of the Pyramid in his book, "Life and Work on the Pyramid."

(Part CCXXIV.).—There will be found plenty of scientific minds independent enough to testify to the agreement of the facts of Biblical chronology and the "Law of Nations" (by Brück) liberal enough to go quietly into the examination of the Great Pyramid, and to declare that in fact also there is perfect harmony between Biblical chronology and that of the symbolic diagram of this monument whose ladder is borrowed from the terrestrial globe, and this chronological agreement, verifiable for all, will appear as an external overpowering proof of the truth of the Divine plan as set forth in the Scriptures.

SOWING THE SEED.

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—Will you kindly allow me to supplement our Anglo-Israel Free Distribution Fund Report for June, with some extracts from letters that our BANNER readers will, I think, be glad to see, as they afford present proof of interest excited, and of work being done in four widely distant parts of the globe? The Treasurer of our Fund regretted being obliged, on account of illness, to hastily send you the Monthly Report in an incomplete form.

Yours faithfully,
E. M. RUSH, Hon. Sec.

Westgate-on-Sea, June 26, 1893.

From the United States has come the first letter given below, and it will be noted with pleasure that the writer fully recognises the use we can, and doubtless should make of the new arguments the revelation of Israel affords in proof of the Divine inspiration of the Scriptures, which is now so constantly and strenuously denied. We may be thankful that already our Anglo-Israel library can show some definite thoughts, provided by the Rev. Denis Hanan, M.A., D.D., and the Rev. R. A. Hunter, about the boasted "Higher Criticism." We gladly send copies of the pamphlet asked for:—

"I desire to gratefully acknowledge your continual kindness in sending me the 'Anglo-Israel Almanack,' Messengers, BANNERS, and other Identity Literature. I find them a great aid and comfort to me, and trust I am doing some good by a judicious distribution of them. They have been the means, I am happy to say, of opening some blind eyes.

"Identity truth is more than ever needed at this time, as German Rationalism and distinctive criticism is being revived under the name of 'Higher Criticism' in this country. Professors of theology and leading ministers in the Presbyterian Church are pulling the Bible to pieces, and unsettling the faith of many of God's people, Israel.

"A Professor of Biblical Theology at Princeton has just been deposed from the ministry, by the general assembly of the Church, for teaching it.

"Identity truth shows the literal and exact fulfilment of Bible truth and prophecy, and the inerancy (a newly-coined word) of the Holy Scriptures, and therefore an antidote to this heretical poison. The pamphlet, 'ANGLO-ISRAELISM versus THE HIGHER CRITICISM,' is excellent for the purpose, and I wish you would send me some more of them. I will send them to some of our clergy here."

From Malta we have the following good news:—

"I wish to tell you of a seaman that no one hitherto could approach on religion. Some time ago, Mr. C—— induced him to take some BANNERS, and the other day the ship called here again, and the man said, 'I read those BANNERS, and was so delighted with them that when I got home I purchased a lot more, and I fully realise that we British are descendants of the Lost Tribes; it makes the Scriptures interesting and understandable.' Mr. C—— told him that he hoped he would not only realise that he was a lost Israelite, but that he would realise all that Christ had done for him. He said, 'I am now reading the Word of God, and find it profitable.' Some others in the ship told Mr. C—— they had known this man for a long time, but no one before could ever get him to listen to anything on religion. It appears that this man had read the Bible, but could not accept its teaching, but ridiculed it."

Will the readers of the BANNER kindly remember the thousands of our sailors who touch at Malta, passing and repassing on their way over the waters? Also those who may be seen there once, and, maybe, learn there good news of God, and of our loving Saviour; news that by faith will stay their hearts and minds in the hour of death?

From Mossel Bay, South Africa, has come the following letter of application for literature which will surely interest our readers, and many will doubtless care to note the spirit in which it is written, just that spirit of humility and thankfulness to the Almighty for His goodness, so unmerited by us, which should reign in the hearts of each one of us to whom the knowledge of our origin has been revealed:—

"It has been in my mind for some time past to write and request you to kindly send me a small parcel of Anglo-Israel literature for distribution. As far as I know, there is only one family, and one other person here in Mossel Bay, who have any knowledge of the wonderful truth of Our Identity with the Ten Tribes. I have spoken to several about this beautiful truth, and all have been surprised and much interested, and I think a little literature will help to advance the cause, which to know is to love, and fill our hearts with love to God for His favour and mercy to us, His people, although we do not deserve the least of His mercies, praise be to His name for ever!

"If you can comply with my request, I shall be glad, and very thankful to you. May God bless you, and prosper the work of His hands, and give His people peace."

A request comes from New Zealand for the BANNER OF ISRAEL, and also the "History of the House of Israel" (Philo-Israel), as it gives a "simple and clear account," to be sent to the widow of a clergyman in England, as she has great interest for our brethren of Judah, the idea of the British people being of Israel having been previously introduced to her by letter from that distant colony. Our correspondent continues:—

"Many thanks for the BANNERS which arrive so regularly. I quite look forward to them, and am so pleased when the English mail comes in, as I then have something to read which interests me greatly.

"By this, you will, I hope, have received the donation sent by the readers in this district, and my request for 'The Handbook,' and any other literature you can spare me, as there are still many more to whom I am anxious to introduce the subject. I have not a number of the BANNER or anything else in the house, so great has been the request for works to read, although my friends return them when read, unless they lend again to others, which I find most of those who believe like to do, and so the good news spreads in an ever-widening circle. The lady living with me, who has been so much enlightened by the subject of the Identity, is doing all she can to spread the knowledge to others, and last week sent all the books I could spare to a friend in the South Island. This I am sure you will be pleased to learn."

Contributions to the Anglo-Israel Free Distribution Funds, to help us to carry on our work, both at home and abroad, will be gratefully received by the Treasurer, Miss Lawrence, Rossyln, Hampton-road, Upper Teddington; or by the Hon. Sec., Miss E. M. Rush, 4, Westgate-road, Westgate-on-Sea.

INTERNATIONAL LESSONS, COMMENTS, AND THE TEN TRIBES.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—As an Anglo-Israelite, a reader of the BANNER for 10 years, also a Sunday-school teacher for 20 years, and a constant reader of the Sunday-school Union literature, especially the Sunday-school Chronicle, I wish to thank you for your remarks under "Random Shafts," in last week's BANNER, in reference to the above, and to say that I found out years ago, that when lessons bearing upon the Ten Tribes have appeared, the comments have been entirely misleading and unreliable. This has been a matter of regret to me, especially as the Sunday-school Union has such a broad field, and so many splendid opportunities of impressing the rising generation with the whole truth, which is as clear as noonday. They shun this important subject; they go round and round it as if afraid of being burnt. Surely such an intelligent Committee as the Sunday-school Union are not blinded Israelites still? From many of their comments they appear to have eyes, and see not. We must not, however, forget the fact that "blindness in part has happened unto Israel" (Rom. xi. 25, and 7, 8). After all I have a great respect for the Sunday-school Union, and believe they are in safe-keeping. "And I will bring the blind by a way that they knew not; I will lead them in paths that they have not known: I will make darkness light before them, and crooked things straight. These things will I do unto them, and not forsake them" (Isa. xlii. 16). May God speed the time for the sake of our rising race.

Yours faithfully,

GEO. BETTS.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

PHILO-ISRAEL.—DEAR SIR,—It is some years since I last had the pleasure to address you, and have to recall to your memory the fact that you sent me a copy of your "Geography of the Gates," asking my opinion of your description of this Colony, British Guiana, which was freely given of it as at that time, except that I could not see in what way it could be the key to South America as a possession of Israel; but since the discovery of the enormous deposits of gold within our boundaries and its hidden development, the possibilities of the future now begin to loom very largely in the direction you write of. I send herewith a "Hand-book" published for the Chicago Exhibition, which has the latest map of the colonies with no defined boundary on the south-west and north-west sides of the Colony, which is left open to be filled up as our future necessities may require, and in this direction leaves us open to the view, you long ago took of our potentialities as to enlargement. Hoping this may prove interesting to you.

I remain, dear Philo-Israel,

Yours in faith,

F. A. R. WINTER.

Georgetown, Demerara, May 18th, 1893.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

SIR,—I send you a copy of a letter written by me to the editor of the Church Times. In September, 1889, the editor of that paper wrote an article against "Anglo-Israelism," containing the usual fallacious arguments and displaying the usual prejudice, ignorance, and ill-feeling. To that article I wrote a reply, which was not inserted in the Church Times. The letter, of which I send you a copy, I have sent to the editor by the same post as I send this. The article referred to began as follows:—

"As some queries have been lately put to us as to the meaning and value of the theory known as 'Anglo-Israelism,' we think it well to make a brief statement upon the subject for the information of our readers, but not, it must be clearly understood, with the intention of opening our columns to a discussion on the subject."

Entrenched behind the ramparts of this "Coward's Castle" the editor proceeds to give his ideas of what Anglo-Israelism means, and then writes:—"Up to the present not one scholar of respectable note, not one competent student of the history of the races of mankind, not one theologian of admitted mark, has thought Anglo-Israelism worth so much as serious discussion, to say nothing of giving adhesion to it." Then proceeds to discuss it with the usual display of ignorance and prejudice.

After the paragraph, "That there is a little sprinkling, &c.," referred to in my letter, the editor says, in this brief statement which occupies about four columns: "Lastly, the Anglo-Israel theory is profoundly unspiritual. It is harking back to the 'beggarly elements' which drew down our Lord's rebuke; it is a deliberate abandonment of our true privilege as the Gentile successors to the forfeited glories of Israel, according to the saying of our Lord Himself, 'The kingdom of God shall be taken from you and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof' (Matt. xxi. 43)."

This is a fair specimen of the reasoning adopted throughout this cleverly-written masterpiece of misrepresentation, and contradiction of prophecy; and if you will allow me space, I will, in future letters, expose the fallacy of this article, the glaring stupidity of which can only be explained by the fact that "the words are shut up and the book sealed, until the time of the end" (Dan. xii. 4, 8, 9).

Your obedient servant,

ANGLO-ISRAEL.

New South Wales.*

[LETTER TO THE "CHURCH TIMES."]

"That there is a little sprinkling of people with some claim to education amongst its upholders, is doubtless true; but they have none of them (as their arguments plainly show) the smallest notion of what constitutes evidence of a fact; what the particular evidence is which would be necessary to prove Anglo-Israelism to be indeed a fact, and the bulk of the people who believe that it is such a fact, have simply a credulous appetite for the marvellous, and a preference for what is coarsely literal in the interpretation of Scripture over what is purely spiritual."

"'Umph!' said I, 'in a bad cause abuse the plaintiff,' 'and I wrote a reply which you did not insert, or, I should say, you did insert into the waste-paper basket. I now ask you, as an act of justice, to insert this letter in the Church Times, and let your readers judge whether or not you were justified in passing such a sentence, even though supported in your condemnation by 'scholars of respectable note,' 'competent students of the races of mankind,' and 'theologians of admitted mark.'

"The late Bishop Titcomb examined the prophecy and history in order to show that Anglo-Israelism was an 'extravagantly absurd theory,' and, having done so, he wrote to a friend, 'I have changed my opinion. . . . I do but enjoy as an inheritance of reason what before was an unresolvable riddle.' 'God is not a man that He should lie, nor the Son of Man that He should repent; hath He said, and shall He not do it, hath He spoken, and shall He not make it good?' (Numb. xxiii. 19—21). He gave a promise of a spiritual and temporal blessing to Abraham and his seed after him (Gen. xii. 2, xvii. 4—8, xxii. 12—18). Our Lord was of the tribe of Judah, 'but the birthright was Joseph's' (1 Chron. v. 1, 2), and this birthright descended to Joseph's two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh (Gen. xlviii. 15—20). It must be remembered that the Jews—Two Tribes, Judah and Levi—are Israelites, sons of Israel; but the Israelites—Ten Tribes—are not Jews. Manasseh was to become 'a people, and great,' but Ephraim was to be 'greater than he,' and his seed to become a multitude of nations. They are, then, both of them on the earth. The promise to David was, 'Thine house and thy kingdom shall be established for ever before thee, thy throne shall be established for ever' (2 Sam. vii. 16). 'If these ordinances (sun, moon, stars) depart from before Me, saith the Lord, then the seed of Israel shall cease from being a nation before Me for ever' (Jer. xxxi. 36). The house, kingdom, throne of David, Ephraim and Manasseh, and the nation of Israel, are now upon this earth. Where are they?

"Mr. Gratton Guinness says, page 32: 'By universal consent of the Churches of all ages, and of all nations, the first four kingdoms are allowed to be the Babylonian, the Persian, the Greek, and the Roman Empires, and the last is the still future kingdom of the Son of Man. The internal Scriptural and historical evidence in favour of this interpretation is so overwhelming, and the agreement of the early Church, of the Greek and Roman Catholic, and of all Protestant churches, so complete that the few who of late years have ventured to call it in question must be regarded as rash, unsafe, presumptuous guides who would destroy the very basis of all sound and solid Scriptural prophecy.'

"Such 'rash' assertions would excite surprise if we did not know that God had purposely concealed the meaning of the prophecies concerning Israel, 'closed the book and shut up the words until the time of the end' (Dan. xii. 4, 8, 9). But this being the time of the end, 'knowledge is increased' and will soon show who are 'rash, unsafe, presumptuous guides, &c.'

"The fifth, or stone kingdom, was 'set up in the days of those kings' with this assurance, 'The kingdom, and dominion, and greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey Him' (Dan. ii. 44, vii. 27). It is an earthly kingdom, given 'to the people of the saints of the Most High' —i.e., Israel, to whom the spiritual kingdom the Church has also been given, 'given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof' (Matt. xxi. 43). 'Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the House of Israel, and with the House of Judah' (Jer. xxxi. 31; Heb. viii. 8). It has been made with the House of Israel, and will be made with the House of Judah when 'the House of Judah shall walk to the House of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the north (England) to the land which I have given for an inheritance to your fathers' (Jer. iii. 18). The Anglo-Saxon fair complexion is the fair complexion of the Twelve Tribes. Sarah, the mother of Israel, was 'a fair woman,' 'very fair' (Gen. xii. 11, 14, xvii. 42). Rebecca 'was very fair to look upon' (Gen. xxiv. 16). David was 'ruddy and of a beautiful countenance,' 'of a fair countenance' (1 Sam. xvi. 12, xvii. 42). Absalom's sister, 'Tamar,' was fair (2 Sam. xiii. 1); his daughter 'was a woman of a fair countenance' (2 Sam. xiv. 27). Esther 'was fair and beautiful' (Esther ii. 7); 'And in all the land were no women found so fair as the daughters of Job' (Job xlii. 15). Job was Shem, son of Noah, and ancestor of Abraham and Israel. The Song of Solomon and Amos viii. 13 bear witness to the fair complexion of the Israelites. The Ten Tribes do not retain any Jewish laws, customs, or the religion of the Two Tribes, or Jews; if they did they would not be lost, as Hos. ii. 6 declares that they will be.

"Do 'students of the history of the races of mankind' know all this? 'The children which thou shalt have after thou hast lost the other, shall say again in thine ears, The place is too strait for me, give place to me that I may dwell' (Isa. xlix. 20). Have 'scholars,' 'students,' and 'theologians' enquired to what nation this refers? England is the only nation who has lost any children, and Americans are the children lost, and they are Manasseh, 'a people, and great.' But Ephraim (England) is greater, and is a multitude of nations, between sixty and seventy colonies. At a Church Congress Canon Farrar said, 'In this reign . . . the population of these kingdoms has increased 42 per cent. It is now increasing at the rate of over a 1,000 a day, by 370,000 a year. . . . If the present increasing rate and growth of London continues . . . there is no reason why it should not, at the end of the century, be a city of 20 or 30 millions of people, a spectacle infinitely more stupendous than has ever been seen'; I will add, than ever will be seen in a Gentile nation (Gen. xxii. 17). 'So shall thy seed be' (Gen. xv. 5; Jer. xxxiii. 22).

"Speaking at the American anniversary banquet in Sydney, 1885, and referring to England and America, the Right Hon. William Bede Dalley, P.C., then Attorney-General, said, 'Unite these stupendous forces and you will have an area of 12,600,000 square miles, a population of 363,000,000 of persons, revenues amounting to £278,000,000, a trade of £1,352,000,000 a year, armies of 1,700,000, and navies of 65,500 men, you will have a fourth part of the globe, and more than a fourth part of the human race; you will have 100,000,000 men of Anglo-Saxon descent, and you will have 42,000,000 capable of bearing arms. The imagination of the strongest is affected by such a prospect, and no words could picture such an awful amount of grandeur, of power, and authority as these few figures present to our wondering eyes.'

"And 'scholars,' 'students,' and 'theologians' ask us to believe that God, who promised all this to the seed of Abraham, has permitted a Gentile nation to usurp all this grandeur of power and authority. No, never! 'Let God be true, but every man a liar' (Rom. iii. 4, xi. 1, &c.). For about 400 years England was a tributary province of the Roman Empire. At the beginning of the fifth century Alaric led his hordes into Italy and sacked Rome A.D. 410. The Emperor Honorius being in need of all his forces, removed the soldiers which formed the Roman garrison from Britain, and England was free from that time, and ceased to be part of the Roman Empire, which came to an end A.D. 476. This separation was the voluntary act of the ruling power, and was not effected by revolution, or appeal to arms. The 'stone' was 'cut out of the mountain without hands,' and that 'stone' has been breaking in pieces the gold, silver, brass, and iron of Nebuchadnezzar's image from the night that 'Darius, the Median, took the kingdom of Babylon (Dan. v. 31) to the present day (Jer. li. 1, 18—24)."

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

MY DEAR SIR,—In the North American Review is an article by Mr. Andrew Carnegie, "Look Ahead," a vision of Britain and America united in "the Re-united States." He predicts the union of all parts of the English-speaking world, and dwells upon the advantages that would result to the world at large from an Anglo-American combination, which would be unassailable by land or sea.

The writer says, "This new nation would dominate the world, and banish from the earth its greatest stain—the murder of man by man. It would be the arbiter between nations, and enforce the peaceful settlement of all quarrels."

It is coming on! Yours truly, HEYWOOD SMITH.

HISTORY ELUCIDATING PROPHECY.

THE following quotations, one from Holy Writ and the other from an article published in the Daily News, on "the Imperial Institute," should be read together:

He (Manasseh) also shall be a people, and he also shall be great: but truly his younger brother shall be greater than he; and his seed shall become a multitude of nations.—Gen. xlviii. 19.

Beside this well-nigh endless chain of free colonies and of subject States, what is the American Union but a nice compact little place, with the advantage of enclosure in a ring-fence? The States are only about as big as Europe—a poor three and a half millions of square miles. Our total count is nearly nine millions, and in this respect Queen Victoria beats the late Darius the Great by about five to one.—Daily News, May 10th, 1893.

Comment is unnecessary. V. M. Cox.

FRENCH TESTIMONY TO BRITISH GOOD ADMINISTRATION IN EGYPT.

IN the Times of June 8, we found the translation of an article from The Figaro, of Paris, dated the 7th, on the subject of "The British in Egypt;" giving the results of its correspondent's (M. Felix Dubois) inquiry into the progress of Egyptian affairs under British auspices. The report is a splendid vindication of British administration, and a verdict against the pessimists and detractors of the British management of the country. Everything has succeeded; and instead of finding "Egyptian atrocities" to report, he found that nothing but blessing had attended our protectorate! Prosperity has been the result of our stay in Egypt, and it is increasing every day! The only grievance the Frenchman was able to conjure up, was the fact, "that the British are in Egypt," carrying all before them, but that the French are not!

If this is not a fulfilment of Isa. lxi. 9, R.V., in respect to Israel, we know not where to find one more exactly to the point! "Their seed is known among the Gentiles" (in Egypt) "and their offspring among the peoples; all that see them" (especially the French), "acknowledge them, that they are the seed which the Lord hath blessed."

The sure index to the success of British administration in Egypt, is afforded by the Stock Exchange quotations of Egyptian securities. The Unified Debt for instance, stands in the issue of the Times of the same date (June 8) as that of M. Dubois' report, at 100§ being on the level of "a first-class security," and above par! The country is paying its way, spending largely on public works, accumulating a reserve of respectable proportions, when recently it was practically insolvent! The British administration is carrying on its beneficent work so successfully, that even a Frenchman, looking and hoping for atrocities, can see nothing to find fault with, and has the honesty to tell the world that the fact is so! M. Dubois notices and allows, what is remarkable for a Frenchman—namely, that the Egyptians cannot go on alone, or manage their own affairs with hope of success. The cry for the withdrawal of English rule, but the desire to retain the English success, is treated by M. Dubois with perfect contempt. The French engineers have not been able to carry out what our own have accomplished, because they have lacked God's blessing. The power was never entrusted to the French people to execute and carry out the needful hydraulic works. God has given us the country, and has also enabled us to finish the works on which the resultant success depended. He has blessed us; but the French He has not blessed in Egypt, any more than in India, Canada, or the Mauritius. The Times hopes some day to see a race of Egyptians carrying on the government of their country "without relapsing into Oriental weaknesses." But it admits that the race does not exist at present, nor is likely to exist till a long period has elapsed. We know by our experience in India, that over a hundred years has not given the races there the ability to rule themselves, or to dispense with British protection.

We anticipate that the Egyptians will prove even weaker and less apt than the Indian races and nations, to learn such lessons, and that the termination of British rule in the Nile Valley cannot be looked for for a long and indefinite period. The quotation from M. Dubois report, is as follows:—

BRITISH ADMINISTRATION IN EGYPT.

Paris, June 7.

The Figaro to-day publishes a long article headed "The British in Egypt," and signed "Felix Dubois," in which the writer states the results of an investigation which he undertook into the administration of Egyptian affairs under British auspices.

"I frankly confess," says M. Dubois at the outset, "that I started for Egypt two months ago with the idea of bringing back something corresponding to Gladstone's Bulgarian atrocities." After referring to the political crisis which recently prompted the British Government to double the army of occupation, and to the so-called revelations of the Arabic journal El Moayad as to the tortures inflicted by British police to wring confessions from accused persons, the correspondent continues :—"I hesitated no longer. I packed my portmanteau, purposely choosing a very large one, with a view to bringing back the voluminous documents which I could not fail to collect against the British occupation. 'Egypt for the Egyptians.' Here was an opportunity to defend one of those generous causes which the Figaro loves to champion. Well, here I am back again. The portmanteau remains just as it was when I started. The space reserved for the anti-British documents has not been required."

In these circumstances the correspondent thinks it desirable to make known the real situation, however inconvenient the truth may sometimes be.

"Since the British tutelage began," he proceeds, "Egypt has incontestably, and from every point of view made notable progress. The arbitrariness which in matters of administration and government was formerly the rule has become the exception. The fellah is no longer shorn at will; if he is still subject to the corvée, he is at least paid for the tasks imposed. Order has been implanted bit by bit, notably in the finances of the country, which were formerly managed in the most absurdly eccentric manner. On this point one may be content to rely upon the eloquence of a Bourse quotation, from which it will be seen that the Unified Debt at the present moment is above par. Despite the service of that enormous debt (two-and-a-half millions of francs for five million inhabitants) it has yet been possible to create for that service a reserve fund which will soon attain one hundred million francs. Agriculture is being perfected and extended every day. The system of canalization and irrigation has been developed, and is thus distributing more and more widely the beneficent waters of the Nile. The land is yielding a return of from 8 to 12 per cent., thanks to the two annual harvests, and to the rich crops, like the sugar cane and cotton, now produced. This will suffice to show that in this country, which is wholly agricultural, prosperity is increasing day by day. This was admitted to me right away by everybody who had any authority to speak of Egyptian affairs from the French point of view. How, after this, was I going to conjure up the atrocities?"

Similarly eloquent testimony is borne by the correspondent to the perfect regularity with which the three great departments of war, finance, and public works are carried on under British control. Acts of injustice to the advantage of Englishmen are rare; scandals are non-existent; even backsheesh, which in the East is venerated as much as Allah, has been driven out of the country. In short, the real, the great, and the only grievance that the correspondent heard formulated against the British was that they are in Egypt.

M. Dubois proceeds to ask whether the French have not themselves to thank for the British occupation, and states that M. de Reverseaux, the present French Minister in Egypt, has, by his amenity, tact, and firmness, preserved the positions which the French still retained and even regained some of those which had been lost. French enterprises of various kinds are extending and prospering, while British capitalists, on the other hand, have made very few ventures in Egypt since the occupation began, Britain contenting herself with sending functionaries and not capital. In the choice of those functionaries she has been particularly happy, and at the head of the chief public services she has placed such distinguished personages as Kitchener Pasha at the Ministry of War, Colonel Scott-Moncrieff at the Ministry of Public Works, and Mr. Gorst at the Ministry of Finance. Reviewing in detail the services rendered by these officers, the correspondent remarks that Colonel Scott-Moncrieff is an extremely curious type of Quaker, who carries on irrigation works with a Bible in his hand, his motto being "God, embankments, and canals." He goes by the name of "the Gordon of Irrigation." It is only in respect of the police and of the sanitary arrangements that any complaints were heard, and the British functionaries have inspired, if not sympathy at least general respect. The correspondent declares that he found it just as difficult to detect any signs of an agitation with a rallying cry of "Egypt for the Egyptians," as to establish the existence of British tyranny and oppression.

With respect to the question of evacuation, the writer of this remarkable article scouts the idea that the Egyptians have profited by the errors and lessons of the past. He relates how he discussed the question and the future of the country with one of the most prominent members of the Egyptian Ministry, whose opinion he asked as to the probable condition of Egypt the day after the British troops evacuated the country. The Minister admitted that on this capital point he had no fixed idea. "What is the good of making projects?" he added. "Can anyone tell what will happen to-morrow?" In conclusion, the correspondent remarks that if a British Egypt is an anomaly it must none the less be acknowledged that Egypt for the Egyptians is a Utopia.—Reuter.

Nothing can be more satisfactory than the above, and as a confirmation of prophecy, nothing more comforting to our nation, not for our deserts, or for our righteousness has the Lord so distinguished us, but because he knows that we are Israel, and as Israel He bestows upon us all the good things that He promised to our forefather Abraham, and his seed for ever.

It is true that there is a lurking suspicion in the minds of British capitalists that our hold of Egypt is precarious and that while Mr. Gladstone is in power it may suddenly be abandoned according to his known principles. This explains, no doubt, the Frenchman's remark that we have done very little for Egypt in the way of expended capital, and have been content to send her our functionaries only. The capital, no doubt, will follow from our nation's wealthy ones; but it must be only when our suspicions are disarmed, and it be seen by all that in Egypt we mean to remain. Such testimony as M. Dubois' will greatly help us in respect to this; and, therefore, we praise the Lord for the consolation, and trust Him for the rest.

A NEW THEORY TO ACCOUNT FOR THE DISAPPEARANCE OF THE TEN TRIBES.

DURING a sermon preached by the Incumbent of Filey, Yorkshire, during June last, the text selected, Heb. x. 25 ("not forsaking the assembling of yourselves together, as the manner of some is") furnished the preacher, the vicar, with some curious arguments and illustrations in support of his view of the text. His idea seemed to be that St. Paul, or rather the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews, was not teaching so much that all the world converted or heathen were to be urged to come to church, but that the godly, Christian members only were to come regularly to its services. In the middle of his discourse we were rather startled at hearing him say, "We are often asked what has become of the Ten Tribes of Israel, and various explanations are offered as to what has become of them." "I can tell you what has become of them," said the preacher. "They refused to continue assembling themselves together, with the other Tribes of Israel. They lost, therefore, their influence upon their countrymen which union with them in worship would have given them; and consequently they subsided into the surrounding masses of the heathen world, were mingled with them, and so were lost. We shall hear no more of them in consequence"!

Such was the ingenious explanation of an able man and eloquent preacher, whose knowledge of the Scripture on the point in question seems on the whole to be somewhat deficient. The departure of the Ten Tribes from political union with Judah arose on a question of taxation, but not in reference to the worship of God at all! This is clear from 1 Kings xii. 16—19. Jeroboam, their king, taught them afterwards to worship idols in preference to the living God, and he found only too willing pupils and disciples. This national idolatry and departure from the worship of God in Jerusalem was indeed the political ruin of Israel and the cause of their expatriation; but it was permitted by the Lord Himself, who declared, when Israel separated from Judah, that "this thing is from Me" (1 Kings xii. 24).

The preacher concluded that the sin of Israel was unpardonable, and that it therefore ended in the everlasting ruin of the Ten Tribes, and in their absorbtion by the heathen, among whom they were finally cast out, and "swallowed up" (Hosea viii. 8). He would be surprised, we suppose, to learn that "God has not cast away His people whom He foreknew," as St. Paul, writing respecting Israel of the Ten Tribes, was careful to declare (Rom. xi. 1, 2). He reserved them for a better fate than that the Vicar of Filey would give them. He was with them indeed during their captivity and dispersion; was "a little sanctuary to them," or, "a sanctuary for a little while, in the countries where they are come" (Ezek. xi. 16, A. and R. Versions). He brought them to "the isles afar off," where they were to glorify God (Jer. xxxi. 10; Isa. xxiv. 15, R.V.); and there, blessing them, gave them, as He promised, the birthright of their father Joseph. He fulfilled the covenant which He sware unto their fathers "Abraham and his seed for ever" (Luke i. 55, R.V.). In the isles He has given these same tribes, now known as the British folk, the special gifts and blessings which under oath the Lord promised to "our forefather Abraham"—namely, the special national blessing; multitudinousness developing into empire; the Gates of their enemies; and the blessed function of Gospel evangelization, in respect to all nations, all families, and all kindreds of the earth. He has given us here, in the "appointed place" of domicile (2 Sam. vii. 10), and at the allotted time (Isa. xxvii. 6, R.V), wealth abnormal, and an empire over many nations, or parts of nations, our own nation being subject to none. All these are good things promised by God to Israel exclusively; and by our own race enjoyed exclusively now.

We ask the Vicar of Filey, then, to reconsider his position, and before he airily tells his people again that "he can tell what the fate of Ten-tribed Israel has been," to reflect upon what God in His holy Word has said about the matter. Of course, the Rev. Mr. Cooper will have the decided advantage over us in argument if he can show that God did not promise all these good things to Israel, or that the Jews, as Israel, enjoy them all now; or that there are no promises, and no birthright for Ephraim-Israel's exclusive enjoyment now, between the two Advents; or that the British do not to-day possess them in any measure at all. If this can be done, we have nothing on which to rest our case; but if Mr. Cooper fails, as fail he will, then we ask him to tell his congregation as soon as may be, that he has not yet solved the pressing question, "where Israel is!" and "What has become of the Ten-tribed body?" It is now, certainly, extant somewhere in the world, and it is just as much the Rev. Mr. Cooper's duty as it is ours to search for the lost people, and, if possible, to find them. We say it is his duty to find them because he is a minister of the Gospel, with great influence and power in Filey, and if he wishes to carry out God's will, as no doubt he does, and to recognise the nation named and described by our Lord Jesus Christ as the heir of "the kingdom of God bringing forth the fruits of it," he must be anxious to find Ephraim.

Isaiah our prophet declared that "Jacob" should, "in the days to come," future to his own era, "take root," and that "Israel should blossom and bud," and that "they should fill the face of the world with fruit." A minister of the Gospel, jealous for his Master's glory and truth, must be anxious to find His chosen servant whose duty nationally it is to minister to the nations in the things of Christ. Such a nation, blessed of the Lord, it must be a privilege to know. If we can persuade our ministers of religion, and the Rev. A. N. Cooper at the head of them, to identify the British with the Lost Tribes, we shall have done them and him a service, besides a benefit to our race, whose responsibility to serve God acceptably will then be manifest. Once the Identity is seen and gratefully acknowledged by our nation, the result must be their exhibition of an earnest desire to carry out the purposes for which God "made," "formed," and "created them," by showing forth His praise, and by carrying the Gospel to all the nations, and all the families of the earth (Isa. xliii. 1, 7, 21; Gen. xxii. 17, 18). And this must be to God's glory!

A FRESH SERIES OF OBJECTIONS FROM INDIA.

An officer in Her Majesty's military service, now in the Punjab, writing under the nom de plume of "An Inquirer," has sent to us a long list of serious objections to Our Identity which, with considerable candour, he desires us to explain, assuring us he only wishes to ascertain the truth and where he is in error, in order to accept with joy the teachings of the Banner. At present he believes we are quite wrong; and having carefully studied the "Handbook," he has come to the conclusion that our case is "not proved," even on the Scriptural evidence we adduce For instance, he deems Mrs. G. Albert Rogers' book on "The Coronation Stone" as "very pretty and very interesting," but declares that "the evidence adduced would nonsuit the case in any court of law."

We reply that no one founds our case on "the stone of destiny." To many it seems a strong point, but it is clearly outside the main evidence on which we rest the question dealt with in the "Handbook." We decline therefore to be held to its defence, for the very reason assigned by "An Inquirer"—namely, that though personally we believe the stone to be an extraordinary feature in our case, nay, Jacob's veritable pillar, we cannot yet, without further links to support its genuineness, produce it in the court to which we appeal as the identical stone upon which Jacob rested his head at Luz.

"An Inquirer" goes rather out of his way to tell us what is quite irrelevant to our case—namely, that he cannot accept the ordinary view men take of the record of the creation in Gen. i. 1, 2; also that he refuses to believe that such a flood ever took place as that described in Genesis. "An Inquirer's" frame of mind is thus difficult to deal with.

But as he professes a desire to have his doubts considered and solved, we think it best briefly to state some of them, and to offer such remarks on them as occur to us. In regard to the "Handbook" the "Inquirer" passes by chap. i., because no evidence is offered in it. It merely states the case. As regards chap. ii. and iii., and the view taken by the writers of them in reference to the phrase "latter days," "last days," "he does not agree with our definition of these words. "Take," he says, "your own quotations" (p. 45), Heb. i. 2; 1 Pet. i. 20. Such texts may mean either the time then present, as in Acts ii. 17, or they may be like other instances, such as 1 Thess. iv. 7, where St. Paul says, "We that are alive, &c."

The "Inquirer" goes on to declare that in his opinion the phrase, as used in the New Testament, may mean the time then present, or the time in the far future; while in the Old Testament it may refer to some future time, or to a period after the reunion of the two Houses of Israel. This part of the "Inquirer's" letter is hardly intelligible. The statement of St. Peter in Acts ii. 17, quoting the very words of Joel ii. 28, seem to us conclusive. The "last days," according to Joel, were obviously the days of St. Peter, and those were the days of the Christian dispensation, not yet concluded even now. St. Paul's "last days" were his own times (Heb. i. 2), and St. Peter, confirming his own words, declared in chap. i. 20 of his First Epistle that Christ was "manifested" in the "last days." Jacob's prophecy was to have fulfilment in "the last days," and we reasonably conclude therefore that Gen. xlix. 1 was intended to be recognised as "fulfilled prophecy" in the Christian dispensation, but not before—that is, now. In this and all his other objections the "Inquirer" desires to lead us off the direct facts on which we ground our case. Let him deal with them. Our failure to notice Isa. xi., the name "outcasts" given to Israel, the gathering from various places, these and such like matters do not touch the main issue which has often been stated—namely, that God promised to Israel, independently of Judah, the birthright of Joseph, and we as a nation enjoy all the blessings which are in the Scriptures described as included in that birthright. These blessings are detailed in Gen. xii 2, xviii. 18, xxii. 17, 18; Deut. xv. 6, xxviii. 1—15; Zech. x. 6—9, and other like texts. Let the "Inquirer" see if this be so or not; and if he finds it to be the fact he must admit that the British are Israel, as God is true and faithful; for the Lord cannot promise to one race and bestow the promised gifts on quite another.

"An Inquirer" founds an argument against us on Jer. xxxi. 8, where he finds that the return of united Israel and Judah is to be that of the blind, the lame, weeping and supplicating as they go. This, he says, is not like the Britain of the BANNER, going in great triumph to occupy Palestine.

We reply that the verse in question speaks of the returning tribes being accompanied by the blind, the lame, women with child, and the weeping and wailing company. The House of Israel will go back in power, but it shall be accompanied by a host of weak and wailing ones, the blind and halting ones of Judah, who return with Israel, God's firstborn. The return of the two Houses will be a united return, but Judah will be a poor and afflicted people (Zeph. iii. 12). The covenant God makes with Israel and Judah will be ratified with both Houses, but not together, as Jer. xxxi. 33, 34 plainly shows. Israel is first blessed; then, after an interval, Judah too. This is clear from Zech. x. 6—9. Ephraim is blessed first, sown among the people alone; remembers God in far countries alone; returns in blessing to the land in vast multitudes; but there will be another subsequent sowing of Israel and Judah united in their land as described in Jer. xxxi. 27.

We quite concur with "An Inquirer" that the Gospel is now being preached throughout the world "as a witness" only, but by Israel as God's chief agent. Whether Judah will afterwards join Israel in this blessed duty we are not told. Personally, we doubt the fact.

The "Inquirer" makes something of the word "outcasts," as used in Isa. xi. 12 (A. and R. V.). But it implies nothing more than the fact that Israel is "cast out" of their land to-day, though blessed supremely by the Lord while still "outcast" (see Ezek. xi. 15, 16; Amos ix. 9; Zech. x. 6—9).

The "Inquirer's" objection to the prophecies in Ezek. xl. —xlvii. have hardly anything to do with our views as propounded in the BANNER. These prophecies are in the Word of God, and they are too distant for any one yet to comment on or explain. What we have now to do is to find "Lost Israel," and, having found her, to see that we give God the glory for His faithfulness to His people, leaving the future to be worked out according to His own will.

We quote the last few pages of the "Inquirer's" letter that our readers may judge of his style and reasoning; also that any who like to do so may further enlighten him. He wrote thus:—

"Now God in all His dealings has, as far as we mortals can humbly judge, 'gone forward.' The gathering together of Judah and Israel into the covenant described in Ezekiel can only be explained on the ground that the Ten-tribed House of Israel who were divorced, and that of Judah who rejected and crucified the Messiah, must come back into reunion with God at the points at which they left Him. This is easily applied to Judah. It can also be applied to Israel if Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel are correct as describing them as outcasts among the heathen gathered in and united with Judah, and coming under a joint covenant (Jer. xxxi.). To apply this to a Christian nation already acknowledging the Saviour, and believing in His redeeming sacrifice, to revert to a Levitical priesthood and burnt and sin offerings, &c., seems to reverse God's methods, and be retrogression instead of progression.

"What does Christ say that will throw any light on the subject? See Matt. xxiv. 15—21; ver. 21 and "Jacob's trouble" are one, as there can be no two periods of unequalled tribulation. Our Lord's advice is, 'Clear out' —ahem!

"If your theory be true, it will be a mighty poor look out for John Bull and his people then. Again, how about the 'unwalled villages?' These are quite explicable with a return of 'outcasts,' lame, blind, and women with child, but a very difficult nut to crack if the British nation is to take the House of Judah back under her ægis. Doubtless Israel will be victorious in the end, but how? We are told distinctly that the Israelites in Palestine will only be saved from total annihilation by God's own direct intervention. This alone is a fatal objection to your theory that Britain in this dispensation at all events is Daniel's little stone kingdom. So far from Britain being the stone to fall on the clay feet and crumble the image to pieces, she, even if Ephraim-Israel, will only escape destruction by God's intervention. My doubts therefore you will, I am sure, see are honest. If you can solve my difficulties I shall be delighted. I have read your "Handbook" very carefully, and am unconvinced. I have not here touched on ethnic or philological difficulties—solely on the Scripture testimony. You may be right. England's part in the Eastern Question is and will remain prominent, but there is something wanting in your arguments to cancel my difficulties. Nothing would please me more than it to be proved that I am mistaken.

"Yours faithfully,

"AN INQUIRER."

THE IDENTITY AND THE NATIONAL OUT-LOOK: A STUDY FOR PESSIMISTS.

By J. Thomson.

Opponents of the Identity, chameleon like, are often changing their colours, and yet there is a striking family likeness in most of the objections that have been, and still are urged against its acceptance. Among these objections none has been used so frequently, at all times, in season and out of season, as our old friend "Cui bono?" What good is it? Again and again has it been shown that such a query is entirely beside the mark. Most certainly the query with every genuine seeker after truth, should rather be "Is it true?" because, if true, its value, or "good," cannot fail to be appreciated in due time. "Truth before the world" is ever the motto of the earnest student. He seeks for it as for hidden treasure, and when it is found, rejoiceth greatly, confident that wherever it may lead, it can only be on to the apprehension of some other phase of pure Divine truth.

But in the instance of the Identity, notwithstanding the ridicule that has been heaped upon it and its advocates, we contend that there is a real "good," or advantage, attending its acceptance. It sets at rest sceptical notions about the truth of the Bible, driving them away as the rising sun drives away the morning mist which overhangs the valley, and hides its landscape beauties from our view. It settles all anxiety respecting the future, and what will be the position and destiny of our native land. It assures us that the world is ruled by an all-wise and omnipotent Providence, and is not left a prey to "chance," or social revolutionists. And thus, whatever may be the immediate outlook, the Anglo-Israelite can afford to smile at the expressed apprehensions of evil which he hears around him.

These reflections have been suggested by the remarks made by a very old friend unto us in the last communication received from him in May last. Some of these are so striking and remarkable, that we thought they might interest some of our readers; so we quote a few as illustrative of what we mean, and to show a portion of the line we purpose taking in our reply.

We do not remember exactly what in our communication was the particular matter which appears to have arrested his attention; but it was perhaps a general reference to the present confusion which exists in the nation, not only in the body politic, but also in the ecclesiastical and commercial world. He writes: "I see you are exercised about the state of the national affairs; and indeed it is more critical than any I can remember." Our correspondent is well on in years, having about completed his three-score and ten, and not gone through the world with his eyes shut, but used the advantages of his position, as a dissenting minister, and holding an eminent literary degree. He goes on: "My own anticipations are not hopeful." This is just where the truth of Our Identity comes in to a believer thereof; but our friend is not a "believer," and for many years the Identity has been a tabooed subject between us. Imagine, therefore, our surprise to find him saying as he went on, "You know that I do not share in your ethnological views" (the italics are his own, but the question is not one of ethnology, but of "What saith the Scripture?")—"but I can go so far with you as to say that in privileges, and in Providences, the English have been to Jehovah a second Israel" (italics are his), "and they have shown themselves as little worthy as the first." But "worth" was no qualification for the divine favour in ancient Israel (see Deut. ix. 5, 6, 13; x. 15; iv. 31). Nor can we suppose that it is so now. Our correspondent goes on: "I regard the decision in the case of Bishop King, of Lincoln, as the formal renunciation and repudiation by the nation of the Protestant name and cause, and the era from which must be dated its decline and fall." We cannot here fully agree with our friend, as, in our opinion, the decision in the Lincoln case was ecclesiastical, and the Court ecclesiastical. They represented not the nation but the Church, and that particular form of it as by law established; and until Parliament has pronounced upon the whole question, the decision and its effects, however far reaching, can hardly be pronounced national. Our friend goes on, "Time only can prove the truth of this opinion, but events are moving rapidly, and the crisis cannot be long delayed. The struggle of 300 years has ended in the defeat of Evangelical truth, and the triumph of Sacerdotalism, along the whole line. Nor do I see any help for the Nonconformists, for they have forsaken the principles for which their fore-fathers suffered, and are hurrying at full speed to the wastes of Rationalism and unbelief. There are still those who hold to the old truths, but the people have no love for them; and what is to be feared is that seeing the truth is forsaken, the Lord will forsake us."

And this is all that a Christian patriot can see in the immediate future concerning his native country, apart from the Identity! But supposing the Identity is true, then we enter into the full heritage of all the glorious promises made to Israel of old. Not that we shall have no trouble, no affliction, though God has promised that He would never leave, or forsake His people (Deut. xiv. 2; 1 Sam. xii. 22; 1 Kings vi. 13; Psa. xciv. 14; Isa. xliii. 1—7; xlv. 17). But this does not exclude the idea of punishment for sin, with a view to correction, as the prophet plainly intimates, "You only have I known of all the families of the earth; therefore I will punish you for all your iniquities" (Amos iii. 2; iv. 6—13; ix. 7—10). The punishment is corrective, not destructive; and God Himself emphatically affirms: "Thou, Israel, art My servant; I have chosen thee, and not cast thee away" (Isa. xli. 8—16).

Our friend goes on to criticise severely the policy of the present Premier in his Irish policy, referring, as a confirmation of his opinions to Macaulay's "Essay on Gladstone on Church and State." The nation, he thinks, is "sick unto death of Ireland and the Irish, and would gladly be rid of them: but it cannot, and nothing short of a resolute and consistent rule will deliver it." Like all true Israelites he also looks for help from a source more than human. He says "I have long ceased to look for help but from the Lord who reigneth; and my fear is that He will cease to help a people so backward and ungrateful. Why should it not be said of England—'Thou art weighed in the balances, and found wanting. Thy kingdom is divided and given to another?'"

Thus our friend laments in his pessimism. He sees little or no hope in the future, and plaintively asks why should we be treated differently to other nations? This is just where the Identity again comes in to show the silver lining in the clouds which hang over us. If we be Israel—God's chosen people—and of that there are many infallible proofs—we may take confidence in the utmost extremity, and darkest hour; for has He not promised again and again that He will never leave, nor forsake His people, because they are His people, whom He hath chosen; because He loved their fathers—Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and not because of anything in them; for they were always, and still are, a stiff-necked people, following often after Baal, and forgetting the Most High, their Rock and Fortress, and Strong Tower in every time of trouble. The history of Israel of old, may be paralleled in its leading characteristics by the history of Britain in modern times, showing that the truth asserted by the Psalmist is equally as applicable to our nation now, as ever to ancient Israel. "He hath not dealt so with any nation, and as for His judgments they have not known them" (Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20). "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea; though the waters thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof. . . . The Lord of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge" (Psa. xlvi. 1—7).

Our friend fears that God "will cease to help a people so backward and ungrateful." His fears would vanish if He would only embrace Identity truth. He would then see that to doubt God's favour, even in the worst case, would be dishonouring Him. But, armed with the Identity, his ministrations would become more powerful in promoting Christian truth, and vindicating the ways of God to man; for on Identity lines alone can we see how God is faithful in every promise to His people; and though He afflicts, it is only to chastise in mercy.

To note the instance of Ireland very briefly. It seems at first sight that though we have succeeded wonderfully in ruling other races, in almost every country in the world, we have yet signally failed in Ireland. There we find turbulence and defiance of law are chronic; outrage and murder frequent, and a large part of the population almost always on the point of rebellion. Experiment after experiment have been tried, but all to no avail, the evil is still there; and as it seems incurable, responsible politicians have ventured upon propounding a scheme of self-government, which, however, has so many qualifications and safeguards, that no sane person expects it to be workable; but the desire is to be rid of the whole thing, and let the Irish fight it out by themselves. Such, in brief, is the present state of affairs. But the light of the Identity shows what we should do. The Canaanites in Ireland are still "thorns in the sides and pricks in the eyes" of Israel. And this will continue to be their character unless held down with a firm hand. As our correspondent puts it, "nothing short of a resolute and consistent rule" will suffice to eradicate the woes of Ireland; and this our party strife at present makes almost impossible. But we have no fear even should the Home Rule Bill become law: for in that case it may prove at once unworkable and so become a dead letter; or, the agitators may so push things on, that deadly internecine strife will result, and for the sake of humanity, as well as our own interests, we shall be compelled actively to interfere and proclaim martial law as the best thing to be done in such a chaotic social state. But however things may develop, we feel assured all will be for the best; and as it has happened often in the past, so in the future it will be seen that the hand of the Lord our God is upon us for good, and not for evil (Num. x. 29).

"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform;
He plants His footsteps in the sea,
And rides upon the storm.

Blind unbelief is sure to err
And scan His work in vain;
God is His own interpreter,
And He will make it plain.

Ye fearful saints, fresh courage take,
The clouds ye so much dread
Are big with mercy and shall break
In blessings on your head."

THOUGHTS ON THE GATHERING.

By Will Ellsworth.

THE ENSIGN.

Having seen the importance attached in the Scriptures to the lifting up of an ensign, and the world-wide revolution resulting from it involving all nations, let us consider the subject of an ensign, and learn what it is, and where to look for this sure sign of Israel's gathering.

Is the ensign a figure of speech, or is it to be a literal flag used as the standard of the new nation? I shall here affirm neither position, but point the readers to some Scriptural and historical facts which may throw some light on the subject. Let us take the first mention of the word "ensign" for a starting point. "Every man of the children of Israel shall pitch by his own standard, with the ensign of his father's house" (Num. ii. 2). Here at the beginning of our investigation we find a literal ensign associated with the very people in question, Israel in the order of their camping. Here we find the true origin of patriotism, which is but patriarchism in another form,—love of home and nation and God.

This in every land and clime finds expression in an ensign or flag which symbolizes the history or destiny of the nation.

What the several ensigns of the sons of Jacob were we may not be able to describe in detail of design. But if we consider the chief characteristic of that people, pride of ancestry, together with the language and customs of the age, we may arrive at a conclusion more definite than would at first seem possible. The language of the time was largely in pantomime, and the written language in symbols or signs. On the ensigns of Jacob, then, we would look for such symbols as pertained to the great and the good of Israel's history or foretold of his future; while evil deeds and prophecies of evil would be left out. These events and predictions would necessarily be taken from the lives of their forefathers, since the standards were set to show allegiance to them. What events, then, are prominent in the history of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Joseph?

I.—As to history, we have the offering of Isaac and the attendant prophetic blessing: "I will multiply thy seed as the stars of heaven and as the sand which is upon the sea-shore and thy seed shall possess the Gate of his enemies." It would be hard to show in symbol the world-wide blessing attending this promise (Gen. xxii. 16—18), nor could the sand be used to show the multiplication of posterity. But the stars would be very apt to be thus used. Yet far above these would be prized the promise of dominion by conquest. And, in harmony with the warlike spirit of the age, would claim first place in the flags of the armies of Israel. Passing the exaltation of Joseph, symbolized by eleven sheaves bowing down to his, and the sun and moon and eleven stars making obeisance to him, let us examine the history and prophecies of Jacob.

In blessing the sons of Joseph he crosses his hands, thus setting Ephraim before Manasseh. This would not be omitted from the emblems of the House of Joseph. And these emblems, once embodied in an ensign, would descend as a legacy to after generations, who in turn would bestow them on their children even after their meaning was forgotten.

The account of this prophetic blessing recorded in

Digitized by Google

Gen. xlviii., is followed by the separate blessing of Jacob on each of his twelve sons, prefaced by the words: "Gather yourselves together that I may tell you what shall befall you in the last days" (Gen. xlix. 1). These are afterwards repeated and enlarged upon by Moses in blessing the twelve tribes (see Deut. xxxiii.). Now consider the order of the camp of Israel,—four principal tribes camped on each side of a square, and other two tribes camped by each of these four. These four tribes were Judah on the east; and by their standard camped Issachar and Zebulun; Reuben on the south, and by them Simeon and Gad; Ephraim on the west, and with them Manasseh and Benjamin; and on the north stood the camp and standard of Dan, and by them those of Asher and Naphtali. Bearing in mind that each of these triple camps would seek to show in their standards dominion by conquest, let us choose from the blessings of Jacob and Moses the figures emblematic of the same.

JUDAH:—"Judah is a lion's whelp; . . . he couched down as an old lion and who shall rouse him up? The sceptre shall not depart from Judah"—enough. A couched lion with crown and sceptre will satisfy Judah, and on his standard such a lion would find a place.

REUBEN:—"Reuben, thou art my first-born, my might, and the beginning of my strength, the excellency of dignity, and the excellency of power." Reuben here finds man set over the rest of God's created works; hence, omitting the prophecy which follows depriving him of this dominion, he chooses the figure of a man for his standard.

EPHRAIM:—"The blessings of thy father have prevailed above the blessings of my progenitors unto the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills." This Jacob had shown under the figure of a spreading vine, as well as by an archer whose hands are strengthened against his enemies; but these figures would lack the much desired feature,—dominion by conquest. In the blessing of Moses this want is most fully met: "His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns as the horns of unicorns; and with them he shall push the people together to the ends of the earth" (Deut. xxxiii. 17). Surely Ephraim need look no further. A bull with the horns of a unicorn, long and sharp, will be set on his standard.

DAN:—and what of Dan? "Dan is a serpent by the way that biteth the horse's heels so that his rider shall fall backward." The crawling serpent with its deadly venom will never do for the standard of aggresive Dan. "Dan is a lion's whelp; he shall leap from Bashan." Yes, but Judah already has the lion. "Dan shall judge his people as one of the tribes of Israel." Very good. But how shall he show that dominion in symbol? There is one figure left which will place him above all the others. That figure is the flying eagle,—the symbol of the great Jehovah and the guide and ruler and preserver of Israel. "There is none like the God of Jeshurun that rideth on the heaven in thy help," sang Moses, and so Dan, set as judge over Israel, paints upon his standard that figure of which we read, "As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings, so the Lord his God did lead him, and there was no strange god with him" (Deut. xxxii. 11, 12).

Thus the lion appears on the standard of Judah, the man on that of Reuben, the ox on Ephraim's standard, and, on Dan's, the flying eagle. This is not all surmise, for "holy men of old" spake these blessings "as they were moved by the Holy Ghost," and one of them in after years, in his vision of Chebar's waters, was shown in vision four "living creatures" joined in one, and "they four had the face of a man, and the face of a lion on the right side (east on a map), and they four had the face of an ox on the left (west) side; they four also had the face of a flying eagle" (Ezek. i. 10). We may by these blessings in symbol, compared with the standards and royal arms of the nations, get a glimpse of Israel even to this day. But a standard set to gather Israel must stand for all Israel united, and set in order in their own land; for this is required in the prophecies of their restoration (Ezek. xlviii. 30—34). Here is order, but not the same as in the ancient camp. Yet they shall be "as the stones of a crown, lifted up as an ensign on his land" (Zech. ix. 16). Here, then, in the order of their camping we find the key to the ensign which must stand for all Israel,—twelve tribes camped about the tent of Jehovah. Let us next examine the flags and great seals of existing nations to see if we can find any trace of these Bible standards, and especially of the ensign which must be lifted up to gather Israel.—The Sabbath Advocate, Stanberry Mo., U.S.A., June 13. 1893.

TARA.

By Rev. Denis Hanan, D.D.

I AM at last able to report the result of the proposal made by me in the BANNER OF ISRAEL, published on the 8th of February. It will be remembered that knowing the difficulties to be overcome before an exploration of the Mergch could be made, I refused to receive subscriptions, but asked for a guarantee if the proposal should be entertained before March 1st, 1894. I had sixty-eight replies. They came from all parts of the world, and many of them are of great interest to me because of the kindly recognition made of my poor efforts on behalf of the British-Israel cause. This one article produced a guarantee for £200. I then communicated personally, and by letter, with the Royal Society of Antiquaries of Ireland, and after a long delay I was informed that the Hill of Tara had been vested in the Commissioners of the Board of Works as an Historical Monument, under a section of the Irish Church Act, and I was referred to that body. I applied to the Board of Works, and after a long delay, which certainly was sufficient to enable enquiries to be made, I received the following letter:

ANCIENT MONUMENTS.—9307—93.

July 8, 1893.

Sir,—Referring to your communication of the 26th ultimo., I am desired by the Commissioners of Public Works to state that after making the needful inquiries, they have satisfied themselves that they would not be authorised in granting permission sought in making proposed explorations at Tara.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

G. J. TUOHY, Sec.

Rev. D. Hanan, The Rectory, Tipperary.

Many of my correspondents suggested that the time has not yet come for the exploration, and to them I replied that the only means whereby their opinion could be proved to be right, was by an effort such as that which was being made. The time has not arrived: but it is evident that the interest in the possible confirmation or refutation of the Tara legends is very general, and I doubt not but that, in the perhaps near future, public opinion will so act upon the Antiquarian or kindred societies, that an effective influence will be brought to bear upon the Board of Public Works. Meanwhile it is well that the Hill is under the safe keeping of that board, and that whenever the exploration is attempted it will be conducted by competent authority.

The readers of the BANNER OF ISRAEL may do something towards forming public opinion by a wise and reasonable statement of their views, and the basis upon which they are founded. I have already thanked my correspondents for sending me postal orders, &c., for 1s. each, to meet preliminary expenses. The balance will be handed over to the Free Distribution Fund if no further call is made upon it before the month of March next.

"GOD SPEED THE RIGHT!"

"MARIANNE FARNINGHAM," in the Christian World of Feb. 16, has published a little hymn of five verses which may easily apply to our own nation. She writes of "The State which God has called to be great," and of the contest which this nation is waging all over the world for the "right," and prays God to "take for His own, the State He calls to be great."

Our readers can supply the Scriptural authority for the declaration that there is one State, and only one—namely, Israel, which God has called to be great (Gen. xii. 1, 2, xviii. 18; Deut. xxviii. 1 and 13), and that there is one State—and one only—which He has promised to take for His own—namely, Israel (Jer. xxxi. 33; Heb. viii. 10). Whatever were the intentions of the writer, we claim the words she wrote as applicable exclusively to the British-Israelite nation, and so present them to our readers thus:—

GOD SPEED THE RIGHT!

God, rule Thyself the State
Thou callest to be great;
Lead in the fight.
Keep from all taint of shame
The men who in Thy name
Would banish bane and blame—
God speed the right!

The side Thy soldiers take,
With pure hearts for Thy sake,
Prosper with might.
Let men be strong and leal,
Who serve the commonweal
After Thine own ideal—
God speed the right!

Thine is the people's cause;
And who shall make their laws
But men of light!
Let mean self-service die,
And Love be lifted high,
And all men swell the cry—
God speed the right!

As in the days of old,
Full many a warrior bold
And stainless knight
Goes forth for Thee to-day
Along a toilsome way
Into a strenuous fray—
God speed the right!

Let good alone be done,
And triumphs true be won,
And ills take flight.
O King! the time is late,
Take for Thine own the State
Thou callest to be great—
God speed the right!

MARIANNE FARNINGHAM.

It is remarkable that in the above the writer unites the State with those who, as its representative missionaries to the heathen, or "nations,"

"Go forth for Him to-day
Along a toilsome way
Into a strenuous fray—
God speed the right!"

God chose Israel, that Israel's sons and daughters might go forth for Him, into all the world, "preaching the Gospel to ever creature," "blossoming and budding, and filling the face of the world with fruit" (Mark xvi. 15; Isa. xxvii. 6, R.V.). We heartily echo the words of the poet, and pray that "God may speed the right!" and the praise shall all be His!

THE "SANCTUARY," AND YET "THE STONE OF STUMBLING."

THE Lord Jesus Christ, the Immanuel of Isa. vii., and Matt. i., is the Lord of Hosts of Isa. viii. 13. He is to be the fear and dread of Israel, and Him shall they sanctify. But He is to be "the sanctuary," or place of safety and protection of Israel; the sanctuary of their penal wanderings "for a little moment," according to Ezek. xi. 16, R.V., a Saviour of the lost House of Israel, who accepted Him as their Saviour when He called to them, and they responded to the call (Isa. lxv. 1, R.V.). "I am inquired of them that asked not for Me; I am found of them that sought Me not; I said, 'Behold Me, Behold Me,' unto a nation that was not called by My name"; that is Gentilized Israel, uncovenanted by God, and reduced to the condition of a "Lo-ammi" race. The difficulty of the passage in Isa. viii. 14 consists in the fact that while the Lord is described as "a sanctuary," He is also "a rock of offence" to both the Houses of Israel. We suggest that distinguishing the two Houses, He has become a sanctuary to the Christian House of Ephraim-Israel, but to Judah-Israel He remains "a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence"—"a gin and a snare" to the inhabitants of Jerusalem. The Jews have fulfilled that prophecy, and they are suffering under it still. Many of them have indeed "stumbled" on the doctrine of Christ and rejected Him. As the consequence, they have "fallen" and "been broken," both as a nation and as individuals, till their condition now is hopeless indeed. They are verily "snared" by their persecutors, and "taken" (ver. 15). If it be felt that the passage will not bear this interpretation, it remains a glorious truth that the Lord Jesus Christ has indeed become a sanctuary to every son of Israel and of Judah who will put aside his pride, and will accept His yoke—but a stone of stumbling and a rock of offence to the two Houses who have both felt the weight of the Lord's anger against those of them who refused to believe, and are stumbling, fallen, and being broken to this hour, because of their rejection of the Gospel of His grace. Both Israel and Judah need the restoring application of the precious Blood shed for them; and one of the Houses even now has nationally been blessed with the sanctuary which Christ has offered it through the Gospel. Having received Him, Israel of the House of Joseph is now qualified "to go into all the world, and to preach the Gospel to every creature," beginning with the Jew, whose claim is first (Mark xvi. 15; Rom. i. 15). Judah was the Lord's sanctuary, according to Psalm cxiv. 2, because the Lord Jesus Christ sprang from Judah, and He was born of the House of David of the House of Judah. But God Himself became the sanctuary of Ephraim-Israel, as Ezek. xi. 16 declares, and He has afforded that House comfort and protection, and grace and blessing, while they were journeying to the Isles of the West, and since their domicile there, ever since, till now.

Digitized by Google

With reference to the duty which now devolves on Christian Israel to take the Gospel "to all the nations," recognising the right of the Jew to receive it "first," we would notice, in passing, the common pulpit utterance, repeated thrice in the pulpit of the Parish Church of Clifton on May 27 last, that we British, being Gentiles, were bound to give the Gospel to the Jews. We would ask in all seriousness, Where is it stated in God's Word that it is the duty of the Gentiles (which the British are supposed by our clergy to be) to take the Gospel to the Jews, or indeed to any nation, quâ nation? We know no such text or texts in God's Word! There we read that "Israel shall blossom and bud, and that they shall fill the face of the world with fruit" (Isa. xxvii. 6, R.V.). To Abraham the promise was repeatedly made that in his seed "all the nations," families, and kindreds "of the earth should be blessed" (Gen. xii. 2, 3; xviii. 18; xxii. 18, &c.). "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature" was the Lord's command to His Israelitish (but not Jewish) disciples, and they went accordingly to all the nations then known, and preached the Gospel to them. The Jews have the priority of right to the Gospel, as St. Paul teaches us in Rom. i. and ii.; and experience shows that whereas they will not listen to non-Israelite Gentiles, their prejudices are less when their brethren of Ephraim are the messengers who approach them with the Gospel.

Review.

"Who Are You?" An Enquiry. By Lady M. L. W. Robt. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street. Price 6d., post free 7d.

THIS pamphlet is issued with a good intention by its titled authoress. It proposes to serve as a step or A B C introduction to larger publications. It hopes to give its readers a general idea of what we mean by Our Identity views, and so lead to the study of the larger works which have appeared. The authoress, following Mr. Ed. Hine's example in some of his works, has underlined her pamphlet in three colours, black ink to indicate Judah or the Two Tribes; red, the House of Israel; and blue, the Gentiles, heathen, or all other people who are non-Israelites, described in the Scriptures as "the sons of men." We hardly approve of this method of drawing attention to the teaching of the pamphlet, and think it would have been better to have left the argument to speak for itself.

There are many texts regarding which it is exceedingly difficult to discriminate, and to avoid confusion and needless controversy, it would have been better had the authoress abandoned that part of her plan, in our opinion. The pamphlet, having the best intention, is not very clearly written nor does it very obviously point to the Gentilization of Israel whereby when outcasted the Ten Tribes became for a time, and indeed in some senses are now, mingled with the non-Israelite Gentile nations, mistaken for them constantly by themselves and others, but really "the sons of the living God" all the time (Hos. i. 10). In order to enable our readers to judge of the merits of the pamphlet, we quote its last three pages, omitting the underlined colours and italics. Our authoress concludes as follows:—

"Is it not worth while to try to find out whether we are the people about whom, concerning whom, so much of the Bible is written—'His people,' 'His witnesses,' 'His servants' in the Old Testament; 'His sheep' in the New Testament, and He the 'Shepherd' and Door, and only He, —rather than remain content in our indifference, to imagine that we are just simply Gentiles? This being so, we the sheep, and He the Shepherd and Door, let us from simple faith and gratitude, try to please Him and obey Him and His commandment, to love God and our neighbour; doing what we can, in our various ways, for our fellow creatures in the small matters of daily life, as well as in the greater ones.

"It must be good to think over the wonderful promises in the Bible—made chiefly to one people—to reflect, not to doubt, but to prove; to answer the question—Who are they? It must be worth finding out. They cannot be Jews. Then, if we be they—the one people—we should overflow with happy gratitude, that we may take hold of the promises, and appropriate them; also, we incur the responsibilities attached to them. Who but the British have been the instruments for carrying out the expressed will of God, evidenced by the facts, apart from many other signs, that our nation has, within the last hundred years, done such great things in and for India, already accomplished so much in and for the good of Egypt within the short space of ten years or so, and that by only a handful of English, as well as other efforts in all parts of the world, working out the purpose of the Almighty, that they should be a great blessing to all people? Never despairing, but ever trying to please the Lord God Almighty. Let constant thankfulness be the companion of our thoughts; with such verses to remember, and cling to, as that His mercy is great as the height of heaven above earth! our transgressions removed as far from us as the east is from the west! (Psa. ciii. 1—18).

"His never-ending love surrounding us as the mountains surround Jerusalem. His pity for us, like to that of a father for his children. We may even talk, commune with Him, plead with Him like children. Let us think over how freely, constantly, children will beg of their fathers for the thing they want, they wish for.

"Every living creature, 'whosoever will' may get a blessing, forgiveness, comfort, but must go like children. He tells us how to pray, to say 'Our Father.' He calls us 'His own people' repeatedly. It is touching to remember that once, in His anger at the idol worship of the golden calf, He spoke to Moses of 'this people,' and how kindly, beautifully, Moses besought the Lord for them: continuing to intercede for them as 'Thy people,' and 'the Lord was entreated for them.'

"The compiler of this little pamphlet has arrived at the conclusion that the English people are a most favoured nation, totally irrespective of any merit on their part, but have duties cast upon them, along with the choice made of them, and the blessings vouchsafed to them; and that when calamities befall them, they arise when the nation forgets the duties and obligations which are coupled with the blessings conferred by the divine will.

"It has been difficult to epitomize so much out of so large, so vast, so important a subject, occupying so great a part of the Bible; but it is hoped that, strung together, condensed as it has been by the best efforts of the compiler, the thoughts and quotations will prove useful as a clue, and fall into the hands of at any rate some who will be induced to pursue the study for themselves; and may God grant them a blessing on it, that henceforth they may remain in no uncertainty how to answer the question, Who are you? And what should be the chief purpose of life? To do the utmost towards spreading that knowledge everywhere, and at every opportunity."

The author has our acknowledgments for the following recommendation which accompanied her pamphlet:—

"As the reader may not know what other books to procure, it is suggested that the BANNER OF ISRAEL would be excellent to take in; "Bible Reflections," by the late Robert Gairdner; "Forty-seven Identifications," and the "Handbook for Enquirers," all of which can be procured from Messrs. Banks, Racquet-court, Fleet-street."

MESSRS. ROBINSON and CLEAVER, of Belfast, were honoured with a command to supply a portion of the table-linen required for the household of the Duke and Duchess of York.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

MY DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—Your correspondent "E. L." in his letter of the 18th April, published at page 238 of BANNER, takes me to task in a friendly way, justly too, for not giving the authority on which my statement was based, "that Benjamin and the other Hebrew converts left Jerusalem a year or so prior to the siege of Jerusalem by the Romans, and went to Pella." A statement to the effect that about the time referred to by me, a very considerable body of Christian converts left Jerusalem for Pella, has more than once appeared in Identity literature, and it was on this information that my statement was made from memory, having seen them, but when, where, by whom, or on what authority, I am at a loss to explain. The statement referred to by your correspondent, was certainly not one of my own imagination, but appeared either in the BANNER or in some of the periodicals published by the late E. Hine, and I have no doubt you, Mr. Editor, would be able to give the authority asked for, and if so, perhaps you would be good enough to do so in a note at foot of this letter.

The name of Benjamin is an addition of my own, but I see the late Surgeon-Major Grant, writing on Benjamin in Vol. XV. of BANNER, at page 159, alludes to the escape of Benjamin from Jerusalem, but does not give any authority for the statement. In the absence, however, of any authority for the statement referred to by "E. L.," we may fairly assume that Benjamin, "the beloved of the Lord," the first-fruits of Christianity in Israel, was not left to the tender mercy of the Romans, but, acting in all probability on the warning of our Lord Himself, left Jerusalem prior to the arrival of the Romans, together with the other Hebrew converts, and made their way to Pella east of Jordan.

Yours truly,
W. H. LARKINS, LIEUT.-COL.

Bromley, Kent, May 15th, 1893.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—The challenge of our friend Col. Larkins has enabled us, with the help of a literary correspondent very well known to BANNER readers, to present to them the only authority extant on the point—namely, Eusebius, who quoted Epiphanius. Gibbon follows Eusebius, and their joint testimony seems to justify these conclusions.

1. That according to Christ's command, the Christians, as the siege commenced, removed to Pella, beyond Jordan.

2. That after their removal, the destruction of Jerusalem and its Jewish inhabitants took place.

3. That those who escaped were believers in Christ—called by Gibbon, "Nazarenes."

The facts seem also to justify the conclusion that these "Nazarenes" were chiefly men of Benjamin, or Galilean (so-called) "Jews." Our authorities speak thus:—

EUSEBIUS ON SIEGE OF JERUSALEM.

(Book iii., chap. v., p. 74, Bohn's edition.)

"The care of war against Jews committed by Vespasian to his son Titus; for after the ascension of our Saviour, the Jews, in addition to their own wickedness against Him, were now incessantly plotting mischief against His apostles. First they slew Stephen, etc. The whole body, however, of the Church at Jerusalem, having been commanded by a divine revelation, given to men of approved piety there before the war, removed from the city, and dwelt at a certain town beyond the Jordan, called Pella.*

Those that believed in Christ, having removed from Jerusalem . . . the divine justice, for their (Jews) crimes against Christ and His apostles, finally overtook them, totally destroying the whole generation of these evil-doers from the earth. . .

* "So says Epiphanius, to wit, that the Christians who dwelt in Jerusalem, being forewarned by Christ of the approaching siege, removed to Pella . . . afterwards, when Hadrian rebuilt Jerusalem and called it after his own name, Ælia Colonia, they returned thither."

Page 79.—"As Titus went around these (ditches) and saw them filled with the dead, and the deep gore flowing around the putrid bodies, he groaned heavily, and raising his hands, called God to witness that it was none of his work. . . Such, then, was the vengeance that followed the guilt and impiety of the Jews against the Christ of God. . .

Page 82.—"All this occurred in this manner in the 2nd year of the reign of Vespasian." (Vespasian died 79 A.D. after a reign of ten years.)

Page 119.—"Down to the invasion of (Jerusalem) the Jews under Hadrian, there were 15 successions of bishops in that Church (Jerusalem), all which they say were Hebrews from the first, and received the knowledge of Christ pure and unadulterated. For at that time the whole Church consisted of faithful Hebrews, who continued from the time of the apostles until the siege that then took place. . . The first bishop after those of the circumcision was Marcus"—(elected when the Church was collected at Jerusalem, of the Gentiles).

Gibbon says:—"The Nazarenes retired from the ruins of Jerusalem to the little town of Pella, beyond the Jordan, where that ancient church* (Jerusalem) languished above 60 years in solitude and obscurity. They still enjoyed the comfort of making frequent and devout visits to the Holy City, and the hope of being one day restored to those seats which both nature and religion taught them to love as well as to revere. . . The Nazarenes (to escape penalties imposed on the Jews by Hadrian) elected Marcus for their bishop, a prelate of the race of the Gentiles and most probably a native of Italy."

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—Along with this I send you a copy of The Witness, a publication of the Plymouth Brethren. See pages 89, 90. Please notice it in the BANNER. These many years it has been my endeavour to teach the glorious truth of Our Identity with Ten-tribed Israel—

1st. Showing how promise and prophecy are at the present moment fulfilled and in possession of our nation to-day, thereby proving the Bible to be of divine origin and its authors divinely inspired; it gives the Christian a powerful lever to overturn infidelity, and put to shame the authors of the so-called "Higher Criticism."

2nd. Having compared the Scriptures with the position of Britain at the present time, I ask, To whom did God promise to give the blessing of "the company of nations," the Gates, &c., &c.? The answer comes spontaneously,—To the seed of Abraham.

3rd. The inference drawn is, As God is true and faithful, we must be Ephraim-Israel!

I have even been instrumental in leading a number of the brethren to see and accept the truth as above stated, and notwithstanding the statements of Col. Molesworth, they still adhere to the new light shed upon the sacred page.

Yours in the good cause,
DAVID M'LAREN.

THE REV. DR. CROLY ON THE UNIVERSAL LANGUAGE.—The division of languages had completed and fixed the original dispersion. An universal language is now about to reverse the process and complete the union. That language is our own. For ages the most limited of European tongues, almost wholly excluded from the old world by the superior popularity of the native languages and from the new by that of its conquerors, it has now spread, with colonies already extending over regions to which England is but a province, colonies, by the vigour, enterprise, and liberty, which they have brought from home, destined to form the commanding population of the globe—Sermon on Matt. vi. 10. ISRAEL'S FINANCIAL CONQUEST OF THE WORLD.

A CONFIRMATION of the Scriptural prediction regarding Israel's capacity to acquire wealth comes to us in the Edinburgh Evening News of May 16, 1893. The computation, according to that journal, is, that this country, Great Britain, has financial interests in the rest of the world to the extent of £2,000,000,000! The interest of this large sum at 3½ per cent. would yield £70,000,000 as national income! If the country continues to grow in the future at the rate it has done in the past, as an international creditor, the sum owing to us by foreign countries, twenty-five years hence, will be more than double what it is now! It will be, to speak exactly, £5,000,000,000. "These figures," wrote the author of a pamphlet on "Capital and Finance in Australasia," look like the financial conquest of the world by Great Britain.

The above facts form a fine comment on the prophecy which declares that "Israel obedient to the Word of the Lord," should be blessed as He promised them. "And thou shalt lend unto many nations, but thou shalt not borrow. And thou shalt reign over many nations, but they shall not reign over thee" (Deut. xv. 6).

At the present moment the failure of many colonial banks in Australia is carrying distress and consternation into many British families. A sharp and severe lesson, it appears, was needed to show our Australian brethren that their financial condition was unsound, and that lavish borrowing of money without much thought as to the future inevitable settlement of accounts, was sure, in the end, to lead to disaster. There are 4,000,000 of people in Australia, British subjects, and they have ventured to borrow money from their British mother, which represents capital on which £17,000,000 is the yearly interest they pay us! It is clear that the security they offered us—viz., the land, has been estimated at too high a value, and consequently when the crisis came at last, the depositors of the capital found they had nothing to realize, and the vast sums lent cannot be recovered for many years, if at all!

The amount of deposit money involved in the banks is about £75,500,000, and of this £23,000,000 is British. This sum, as compared with British financial interests in the whole world, is really trifling. The sum total of such interests we have already noticed is £2,000,000,000, with a probability of the amount being more than doubled in twenty-five years! No country can produce such a record as that; and though we are bound to feel the loss sooner or later of the present disasters in Australia, we may be thankful that matters are no worse.

It was stated some time ago by the Westminster Review, that foreign countries, during thirty years, had added something like three thousand millions sterling to their debts, and there is no question that we (British) have been the great money-lenders. The Word of God foretold the remarkable rôle now played by the British races alone, as Israel's portion. "The Lord shall open unto thee His good treasure, the heaven to give the rain unto thy land in his season, and to bless all the work of thine hand; and thou shalt lend unto many nations, and thou shalt not borrow" (Deut. xxviii. 12). We have lent to our Australian children, and having done so recklessly, we have in some measure to suffer loss. But the nation eventually will be no loser, but only a gainer by learning that wisdom is required in dealing with money, and that in our case, wealth is a sacred thing, since "God uses it "to establish His covenant which He swear unto our Israelite fathers, as it is this day." Our supremacy in "the power to get wealth" is only a part of God's covenant with us, His people, and the disasters in Australia merely indicate where the people are, to whom the promises were made, who, risking the loss of eighty millions sterling, shall yet not only survive that loss, but in the latter end, be richer than they were before. An article which appeared in the BANNER, Vol. ii., p. 104, of March 27, 1878, is applicable to our present circumstances to-day, and deserves to be quoted now.

"Our wealth and national capital" (we said then) "are beyond all comparison the greatest in the world, and the British earn far more than any other nation in the world. Their annual earnings, from all sources, are so gigantic in amount, and so firmly established, that our present losses are inappreciable, and cannot in any way be counted as a permanent loss of the nation's wealth. We thank God that, being Israel, our national condition, as the most wealthy, the most prosperous, and the most highly-favoured nation on the face of the earth, is fully testified by facts; also that those learned in the intricacies of the case are able to come forward, and (as blind witnesses) place the matter before us so clearly, that none may doubt why we are blessed with "power to get wealth," and why, as a sober matter of fact, we, of all the nations of the earth, are pre-eminent in commerce, as in agriculture, "the head and not the tail, above only, and not beneath," all other races surrounding us. Our Identity with Israel is the only clue, and only secret: and it explains this, as well as all the other enigmas regarding us. To the Lord, therefore, be all the praise!"

THE PERPETUAL THRONE.

A Sermon Preached by the Rev. Denis Hanan, D.D., on Sunday, July 9th, 1893.

"Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever: the sceptre of Thy kingdom is a right sceptre."—Psa. xlv. 6.

I HAVE selected these words which we have made use of in our worship this day, because they may fitly harmonize with our thoughts and enable us to learn needful lessons from the event of the week—namely, the royal marriage. The Psalm is an epithalamic, or marriage, ode, written by the sons of Korah, upon the marriage of King Solomon. It has a distinct Messianic signification, but it is very doubtful whether the words, "Thy throne, O God," are addressed to the Messiah, or whether they are not rather spoken of the throne of God upon which, as we shall see, King Solomon sat, and which was to continue while the sun and moon endure. The stanza which commences at ver. 10 is addressed to the king's Egyptian bride. In its Messianic sense, it has been held to refer to the Christian Church, and it is so applied in the services for Christmas-day. If there are any who would say that the pulpit should concern itself only with "the Gospel," I would reply that there are many lessons with respect to the duties and responsibilities of those to whom the good news of God's mercy in Christ has come which need to be definitely impressed.

When the Lord Jesus Christ said that "the kingdom" would be taken from Judah "and given to a nation," surely the individual members of that nation were responsible, and required to understand how the fruit of the kingdom could be best brought forth. Our Christian calling never did remove, and does not now remove from us our civil right and responsibilities. It is just because the Lord our Saviour is King of kings and Lord of lords, and that His throne is for ever and ever, that we, His professed servants, should be very jealous that the "right sceptre" should be glorified by all that manifests a love of right and righteousness and a hatred of wrong and wickedness.

There are some exponents of Holy Scripture who would (as they express themselves) "spiritualize" our text and all kindred statements. By this means Christ's throne and the throne of the Lord are removed from this world and from the allegiance which can be given to an actual mundane rule. If, or when such teachers are confronted with Jer. xxxiii. 25, 26, "Thus saith the Lord, If My covenant be not with day and night, and if I have not appointed the ordinances of heaven and earth, then will I cast away the seed of Jacob and David, My servant, so that I will not take any of his seed to be rulers over the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: for I will cause their captivity to return, and have mercy on them," they endeavour to ignore that which they cannot spiritualize or explain away. If you will read chap. xxxi. and xxxiii. of the prophet Jeremiah you will find a most definite statement that a representative of the House of David would never fail, and that Israel as a nation—that is, having a national existence and polity—would never cease to exist, and, further, that this continuous nation of Israel would be perpetually ruled over by the undying House of David. These words cannot be spiritualized, and if we desire to deal honestly with Holy Scripture we shall not endeavour to explain them away, because, perhaps, we may not be able to state the manner in which they have had that historic fulfilment which alone is the vindication of their truthfulness. It is evident that they have not been fulfilled in the House of Judah, for it has no national existence and no king, and it is not an honest exposition to say the Lord Jesus Christ is David's representative, and that He rules; for He Himself said that His kingdom was not now of this world, and He has not reigned over the nation of Israel.

The throne occupied by David and Solomon was the throne of the Lord (see 1 Chron. xxix. 23): "Then Solomon sat on the throne of the Lord as king instead of David, his father." And it is this occupancy of the Lord's throne—i.e., the throne of the Three in One on earth, by one of the House of David who was the viceregent of the Lord, to which permanency is attached. Of this you may be very certain, that, as a forced and unnatural explaining away of these and many similar words of God, is absolutely dishonest: so a reverent and rational effort to manifest their literal fulfilment and historic accomplishment is a task fraught with honour and blessing.

The bringing forth link after link in the chain of evidence is a work for the honour of God. Do not ever permit a shallow and empty scoff to turn aside your interest or your research. This study is no "fad" or "craze." The ultimate solution of this historic problem will redound to the glory of God and to the honour of those who are jealous for the honour of their God.

The fact that King David occupied the throne of the Lord did not clash with that perfect representative government which was given to Israel. This monarchical government united the truth that power is from above, with the knowledge that rule is for the good of those who are governed, and that they have their rights and responsibilities. This is not exemplified in the position of the president of a republic. He sits upon the throne of the people, his power originates from below. This is not exemplified in the rule of one who has carved out for himself a throne with his sword; he rules by his own will. In the constitution of Israel only have the two great factors of rightful rule been manifested—viz., that power is from above, the throne being the Lord's, and the King occupying it one of His direct appointment by promise and by providence; while the people are free men, appointing their representatives, "the captains over tens, over hundreds, over thousands," and by their acts governing themselves, while recognizing in the Head of the nation that the power that they, the people, exercise is a power that comes to them from above and not from below, from God and not from man. This was Israel's divine constitution, and to maintain it the Northern Kingdom refused to submit to an autocratic rule.

We may remark here that the representative system, as in use in the United Kingdom, is not as reasonable or as perfect as that which Moses gave to Israel. Then the higher officers and representatives were selected from those who were captains or representatives in the smaller communities. The popular vote seems to have selected the smaller communal officers, and from these men, trained and tested in the duties of captains over tens, the higher rulers would be selected. But our highest representatives and rulers, or lawmakers, are selected at first by the universal popular vote, and are not necessarily a selection from a selection. Our Parliament would be very differently manned if we reverted to the original type.

The Bible history has been recorded in order that the fact of the rule of God amongst the kingdoms of men may be manifested, at the same time that His good-will is made known. For this purpose the destinies of the nations revolve round that of Israel (Deut. xxxii. 8, 9), "When the Most High divided to the nations their inheritance, when He separated the sons of Adam, He set the bounds of the people according to the number of the children of Israel. For the Lord's portion is His people, Israel is the cord (or measuring line) of His inheritance."

The future of the world to-day and the manifestation of the rule of God to-day is as much involved in the destinies of Israel as ever it was. That people as represented in its leading House, the House of Joseph, is God's firstborn, and the throne over that people is the throne of the Lord. This is the case wherever the people and the throne may be. That nation is in a peculiar position, and all her citizens share the responsibility that her position entails upon them, also upon all the nations of the world rests the responsibility of recognising the people of the Lord's inheritance and the existence of His throne.

Before the Lord, who is King of kings, is Himself fully manifested, the perpetual existence of His throne over Israel and the perpetual continuation of the family to whom permanence was promised must be recognised. The redemption of the nation was as much part of Christ's atoning work as the salvation of the race, and when the prophetic element in this Psalm is fulfilled, and when the King of kings is glorified, when all nations shall do Him service, then the perpetual existence hitherto of David's line on earth will enhance His glory, for that glory is His faithfulness and His truth.

Let your minds survey the world, and ask yourselves this question: Where is the perpetual nation of Israel? Where is the indestructible throne of David? the kingdom and throne which are on earth now, the throne of the Lord as truly and in the same sense as when King Solomon ruled, or as when Jeremiah prophesied. If you cannot answer, do not allow scepticism as to the truth of the Bible to fill your minds, for he who desires may learn, he who runs may read. Even if the evidence be not absolutely complete in every link, I would prefer to believe that God is true than to dishonour Him by doubt. In His own good time the link will be made plain.

There is no link wanting in the chain of evidence which proves that the firstborn nation is our own, and, if so, the throne over Israel must be the throne of David, and it will continue to wield its authority until the sceptre is again visibly in the hands of the giver. The nation rejoices now (either knowingly or unwittingly) because another step has been taken towards the continued fulfilment of the promise. I desire that you should rejoice wittingly, and therefore I speak as I have done; and also in order that our duty may be made plain, for all our efforts ought to make for righteousness, every such effort will help forward the coming of the kingdom and of the King whom our eyes shall, please God, behold in His beauty. God grant that we may not by sin, and rejection, and unbelief in His forgiving mercy, shut ourselves out from our inheritance in His glorious and ultimate reign. If we fail to serve Him now in the power of that faith which worketh by love, we cannot be willing to serve Him in the age to come. The Lord Jesus, the King of kings, has the pearl of great price in this world. He has His redeemed nation in this world; He has His chosen family ruling in this world; His is the throne of the Lord in this world, and the only direct legitimate kingly rule at present is that to which His promise of perpetuity is pledged. Loyalty to the Christ implies interest in all His purposes, and He wills that Israel shall blossom and bud and fill the face of the world with fruit. For this end Christian England must continue to maintain her civil and religious liberty, and her witness to justice, truth, and righteousness, and every effort made by faithful men and women towards the advancement of all that adorns the Christian character and maintains the Christian faith is a step towards the coming of the kingdom for which we pray, the kingdom of truth and meekness and righteousness, and of the King who is to be remembered in all generations, and whom the people will praise for ever and ever.

To-day the nation rejoices in the marriage of the heir-apparent to the British throne and Empire. Ere long we may hear the cry, "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh." May the nation, and the Church, and each member of it rejoice then in the advent of its Saviour-King.

ISRAEL ON THE MARCH.

By W. L. Blore.

The various divisions of the army of Israel are advancing against the foes of our King, and we often hear of the aggregate results of this forward movement; but seldom have placed before us the work accomplished by individual effort in this direction. The following extracts from the annual report of the Wesleyan Missionary Society speak for themselves.

The allusion by the Rev. Owen Watkins, a South African missionary, to "a broad Imperial platform," to "the children of our House of Israel," to "our Gate," to "we are going over the river whether you send us or not," to, "Ay, and some of us as we go on to the centre of the Continent will die," all tend to show of what sort of mettle these soldiers of Israel are. No feather-bed soldiers. Marching on to war where our Captain leads, until His enemies are made the footstool of His feet, these men have a courage that rises with danger, and never, trusting in Christ, will they be found wanting. In 1884 Germany took possession of Namaqualand. What has she done there for King Jesus? Nothing.

The Rev. Owen Watkins, who was received with loud cheers, said that the Transvaal was one of the most successful of the modern missions of Methodism. In 1884, when he stood there last, their missions numbered ten; in 1892 they were twenty-two. In 1884 their native agents were ninety-seven; in 1892 they were 538; the membership in 1884 was 774; in 1892 there were 3,539, an increase last year of 409, and an increase on the year before of 530. On trial they had in 1885, 385, and now 1,491. Their attendances at public worship in 1884 were 11,254 and now 25,308. These, however, did not adequately describe the work. The new mission to Mashonaland showed that they had made an advance of 700 miles towards the interior of Africa. He did not wish them to abuse the chartered companies in Africa when they knew nothing about them. He wished to say that the chartered companies had done for English influence and righteousness and trade, what England ought to have done herself. (Cheers.) They had thrown round the natives a shield of British protection, and that meant security for life, safety for property, liberty for slaves, and a closing of the open sore of the world. It meant withholding drink from the people, under heavy penalties against the men who sold the drink. It meant the uplifting of and caring for the natives, who otherwise would have been driven off the face of the earth. (Cheers.) Further, he could testify that the chartered companies assisted all Christian workers, and never asked to what Church they belonged. (Applause.) They had grasped the great truth that civilization without Christianity would not be beneficial to the people. (Cheers.) They would allow him to protest against the questions of interior Africa being made questions of party politics. (Cheers.) They ought to be settled on a broad, Imperial platform, and neither one party nor the other ought to seek to catch votes when the destiny of millions of people was hanging upon that vote. (Applause.) They had received from the Government of Mashonaland £100 a year, and three farms for mission stations, where they could gather the people together, and shield and help them as they could not do in any other way; and they had also had land given them in every town in the country. (Mr. Watkins then described the march up country.) It took us four months to do 800 miles. At last we got to Fort Salisbury, and there we saw this new town, which is 5,000 feet above the sea. It is > "A land of corn, wine, and oil;

> Favoured with God's peculiar smile,
> With every blessing blessed."

We began the work of the Lord there. We preached first to the white men, for we feel always and ever, that our message is first to the children of our House of Israel, and then, secondly, to the native people. We began the work of the Lord in Fort Salisbury, and God abundantly and graciously blessed us. To-day we have got an English church there. It cost £300, and the people at Fort Salisbury provided every penny of the money. (Applause.) Of course, it is not a grand place like City-road or Blackheath. It is of the utilitarian style of architecture. We do not waste any money on architects, and so we do not have any mistakes made by them. (Laughter.) And there are no echoes in that building. (Laughter.) It is as easy to speak there as by your mother's fireside. The glass windows are made of calico—(laughter)—and the roof is made of grass. Altogether it is a tip-top Methodist cathedral of which you might well be proud. In addition to having Mr. Shimmin there, we now have another young minister, himself the son of an African missionary, Herbert Eva. He has just succeeded in building and opening free of debt, a native church at Fort Salisbury, and the natives themselves have come out grandly in their support of the work of God in this new land. We want £10,000 for the plant of the new mission in Mashonaland, and as the gate to our mission to the great lakes. I am sure if you will only pray about it, you will see that you ought to give it, and that it will be your privilege to do it. My dear friends, our eyes are looking already to the land that is beyond the Zambesi, where there are hundreds of miles that the foot of the white man has never trodden, where there are millions of people who have never yet heard the sound of Jesu's name, and that Jesus Christ died for them. We are going over the river whether you send us or not. We are going because Christ redeemed them. (Applause.) It is their birthright, and we ask you to support us by your prayers, to support us by your sympathy, to support us by your help. It is a little thing that we ask of you in your wealth, and in your comfort, and with all your pleasant surroundings; it is a little thing I ask you to do on behalf of Africa—that you give of your money. We are giving our lives and all we have, and all we are. Ay, and some of us as we go on to the centre of the Continent will die. But what of that? "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die it abideth alone, but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit." God forgive some of you; we shall have to die before we can win Africa for Christ. (Applause.)

The spirit of this address moved the vast assembly to "cheers," "applause," and soldierly sympathy in the advance of this section of the army of the Lord—the House of Israel.

IRISH HOME RULE.

"THE BULLIONIST," of April 15th, 1893, contains the following:—

"A description of the Irish as they were in the days of Shan O'Neil, and which is to be found in the Irish MSS. Rolls House, may contain some lesson for those who are anxious to sacrifice Ulstermen and the other loyalists throughout the country to the mercy of the priests and the O'Briens. We extract a few phrases:—

"'The appearance and outward behaviour of the Irish showeth them to be fruits of no good tree, for they exercise no virtue, but think it lawful to do every man what him listeth.

"'The Sabbath-day they rest from all honest exercises, and the week-days they are not idle, but worse occupied.

"'They do not honour their father or mother so much as they do reverence strangers.

"'They do not so commonly commit adultery; not for that they profess or keep chastity, but for that they seldom or never marry.

"'They steal but from the strong, and take by violence from the poor and weak.

"'They covet not their neighbours' goods, but command all that is their neighbours' as their own.

"'Thus they live and die, and there is none to teach them better. People will not come to inhabit where there is no defence of law.'

"Mr. Chamberlain's description of the Bill at Birmingham on Wednesday was forcible, but it was true. He said:—'It is really a Bill to substitute anarchy in Ireland for peace and order, and it is, besides that, a Bill to alter in material ways the Government of England. It is a Bill to change the constitution of our ancient Parliament, to create a new class af members, a class of members with limited liability and with unlimited powers of doing mischief. It is a Bill to transfer the allegiance of more than a million of the loyal subjects of the Queen without their consent and against their will, and it is a Bill to impose upon you, the tax-payers of Great Britain, new burdens, and to change the quota and proportion of the contributions of the different parts of the United Kingdom. Now, a Bill of that kind, raising so many questions of principle and issues of such vast importance, deserves at least to be exhaustively considered by every class and every section whom it concerns.' Not one of these points can be denied, and they make up a sufficiently important list to daunt the stoutest heart from attempting to override them. But it almost seems as if the hearts of the Gladstonians are not stout, but percolatory. Every taunt, thrust, or point passes through them unfelt, and they are full of courage just because they happen to be incapable of feeling. They do not fire back, because they have nothing to shoot with; but they hold on to their Bill, not because they think it is worth keeping—for the Bill as it stands pleases neither Home Ruler, Conservative, nor Moderate—but because their fingers have become rigidly set in their grasp upon the measure and they cannot let it go if they would. 'Stick to Home Rule' seems to be the motto of the present Government, 'although we none of us like it, and wish that we were without it.'"

TWO QUESTIONS ASKED, AND ANSWERED.

A CORRESPONDENT from Cheltenham, who is "greatly desirious of believing Anglo-Israelism, if possible" (!), puts us the following two questions:—

1st. Where is it said in the Bible that Israel will be found as a Gentile nation?

2nd. Why do you think it necessary that David should have a human descendant to reign, when it is said that the promise, "David shall never want a man to reign," &c., is said to be fulfilled in Christ? (Acts ii. 29—36).

The inquirer, it seems, was asked these questions by someone, but could not give an answer, hence the reference to the BANNER! The writer admits that he (or she) has been a careful student of the BANNER, but as the numbers are given away when read, there are no copies at hand to which reference can be made to solve the difficulties specified.

In regard to the first question, if our correspondent will recollect that the Hebrew word "Goyim," and the corresponding Greek word "Ethnê," are used in the Old and New Testaments respectively (in the plural number) to designate the non-Israelite Heathen or Gentile nations, generally outside Palestine, but never a Hebrew people, known as such, then, it will be seen that the following passages speak of Israel's appearance in the world as a Gentile nation or company of nations, not, ostensibly, as a Hebrew "multitude of nations."

"He (Manasseh) shall become a people, and he also shall be great. But truly, his younger brother (Ephraim) shall be greater than he, and his seed shall become a multitude of Goyim (or non-Israelite Gentile nations)" (Gen. xlviii. 19). "Call his (Israel's) name Lo-ammi (not My people). For ye are "not My people," and I will not be your God" (Hosea i. 9); a plain intimation that "the children of Israel" of ver. 10 were to be disinherited, and reduced to the condition of the heathen non-Israelite nations. The Ten Tribes were "among the Gentiles" (Ethnê), according to 1 Peter ii. 12, and according to Hosea viii. 8, were to be "swallowed up" by them; "mingled with them" (Amos. ix. 9); "scattered" in Gentile countries, "mingled" with Gentile people (Ezek. xi. 16, 17), and therefore, ostensibly, Gentiles themselves. The Jews held that view of the Ten Tribes' condition in their day, as John vii. 35 shows. They believed they were "dispersed among the Gentiles" (Ethnê), and undistinguishable from them.

In the time of Israel's exaltation and blessing they are to be among the Goyim, "and men shall note them as specially blessed of God, a valiant and powerful people, among Gentile peoples (Isa. lxi. 9); and Micah v. 7, 8, teach us that very clearly.

The above may suffice as an answer to the first question.

The second relates to 1 Kings viii. 25: "There shall not fail thee (King David) a man (or human being, man or woman) in My sight, to sit on the throne of Israel." The promise to Christ was "the throne of David," as declared in Acts ii. 29—36, and Luke i. 32, 33. He is not now reigning on the throne of David, which is confined to Jerusalem, and over the Twelve Tribes, but on His Father's throne in heaven (Rev. iii. 21). The promise to David was that one of his race should always sit on "the throne over the House of Israel" (Jer. xxxiii. 17)—a very different thing—and relating to the whole period between the time of David and the Second Advent, during a part of which Judah would be "scattered," and the House of Israel alone exists as a monarchy for the fulfilment of the prophecy now under consideration.

BRITAIN'S GREAT NATIONAL DUTY.

SIR MONIER MONIER-WILLIAMS, the Sanscrit professor and scholar, made a speech at Nice, on February 17 last, when presiding at the annual meeting of the British and Foreign Bible Society's auxiliary, at the Riviera. His speech is of interest to us, because on that occasion he recognised it as our nation's "great national duty" to translate and disseminate the pure written Word of God to "the hundreds and millions of livings soul committed to our rule"—and he might have added, "to all nations families, and kindreds of the earth" besides, to whom God gives us access, and the power to communicate the blessed Gospel of the grace of God. We have no idea that Sir Monier-Williams has any knowledge of Our Identity, or that if he has heard of it, he is willing to receive it as a fact. Whether he does that or not, it is clear that he realises the truth that our mighty Empire is of God; that He has given it to our people that we may bless the earth's millions of inhabitants by imparting to them "the good news of the Gospel message," as presented in the Word of God written, translated into their own vernaculars. Why our Empire should be so largely composed of heathen nations, who know not Christ; why ours is the only nation which possesses the written Word as a national "heirloom," and recognises its duty to send it to all nations, families, kindreds, and languages of the earth, Sir Monier-Williams does not stop to inquire. But those are the gifts of God promised to Israel exclusively; and the professor ought to ask himself how it is that we have the Word of God as a sacred trust, when God has said of His chosen people, "He showeth His words unto Jacob, His statutes, and His judgments unto Israel; He hath not dealt so with any nation, and as for His judgments they have not known them"? Sir Monier-Williams notices the immensity of our Empire as to numbers. He does not reflect that this is one of the chief blessings God promised to Abraham and his seed for ever, both in Gen. xxii. 17 and Hosea i. 10; and as to the world-wide extent of it already, that Israel is promised in Dan. vii. 27, a dominion which seems to include the planet. The great national duty "of taking the Gospel to every creature". was confided by our Lord to His Israelite disciples, and to the Israelite nation. He also gave them "the kingdom of God," taken from the Jews (Matt. xxi. 43, and Mark xvi. 15). How does Sir Monier-Williams say it is our great national duty to minister the Gospel to the nations when God said the after-seed of Abraham should occupy that position of honour and privilege? (Gen. xxii. 18, xxviii. 14; Isa. xxvii. 6). A portion of Sir Monier-Williams' speech was to the following effect, as given in the Bible Society's Monthly Reporter for May, 1893, p. 77:—

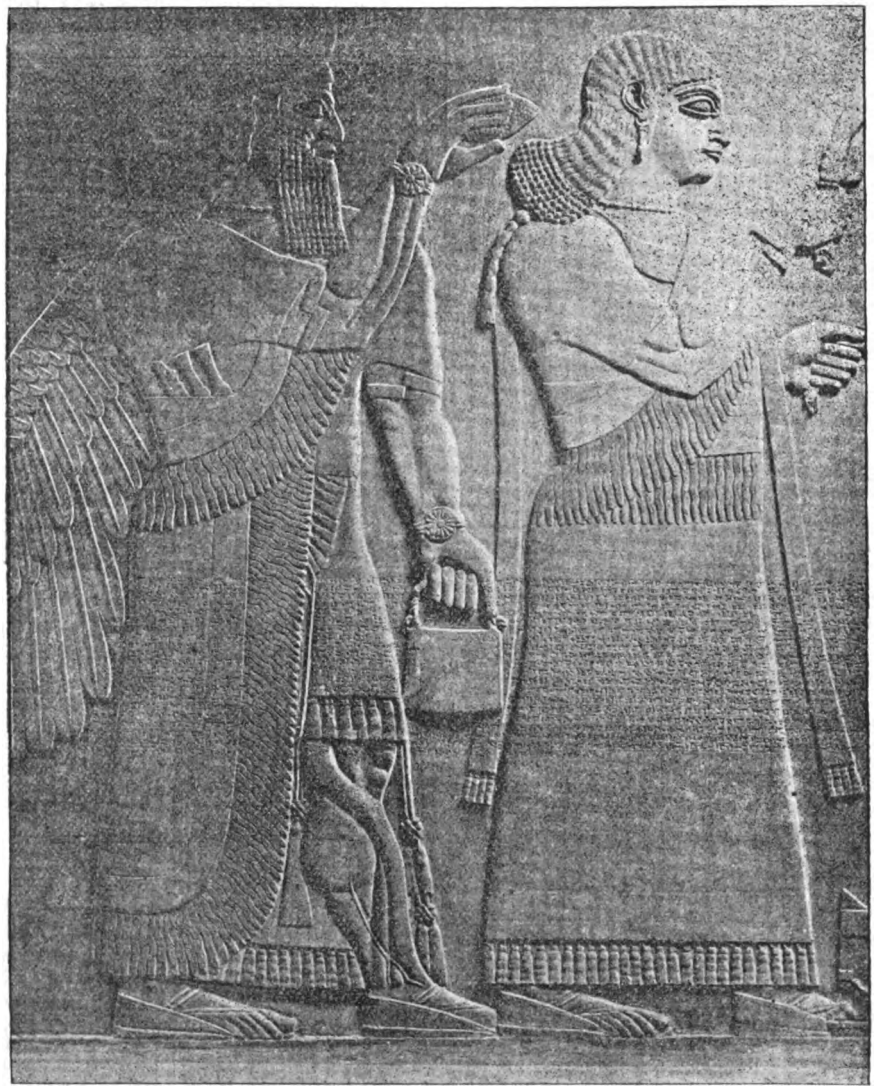
"But I must not take up your time by pursuing this interesting subject any further when so many able speakers have to follow me. There is only one other point to which I should like very briefly to draw your attention. Possibly you may have thought it strange that as chairman of a meeting convened to speak about our own Bible I should have said so much about the Veda and the Kuran. I have done so, not only because I have been a student of Indian literature for more than half a century, but because I think that we do not sufficiently realise that out of the 350 millions of human beings who constitute the Queen's subjects, only about 50 millions are even nominally believers in our own holy Bible. Yes, it is a startling fact that the Veda and the Kuran are the Bibles of nearly 300 millions of our own fellow-subjects, not to speak of the sacred books of the Buddhists of Ceylon and Burmah—two countries which are also part of our Empire.

"For what purpose, then, have so many hundred millions of living souls been committed to our rule? Not certainly for the increase of our trade, or of our wealth, or of our Imperial prestige. Is it not rather that the good news of the Gospel message may be presented to them in their own vernacular languages? And is not our noble Bible Society the chief channel for the conveyance of this message—co-operating as it does with our devoted missionaries? And shall not all of us here present rejoice in the privilege of assisting in the accomplishment of a great national duty?"

It is clear, then, from the speaker's view of the matter, that the duty of sending the Gospel to all nations of the world is not that of the Church of Christ only, nor of the Churches in the United Kingdom, nor of believers only as such, but of our nation at large. We entirely agree with Sir Monier-Williams, and are glad to know that he takes so sound a view of the matter. He is quite qualified to become an Anglo-Israelite, and we hope he will soon avow that belief.

COLONEL H. SENIOR'S ISRAELITISH TREE, AND HIS RECENT LECTURE IN BRISTOL.



Our friend Colonel Senior, of Clifton, has just given a lecture in a Baptist Chapel in Bedminster, Bristol, to a fairly large audience. The lecture was got up by a Mr. Marshall, an earnest Christian worker, and a warm advocate of Our Identity cause. Mr. Marshall's testimony is this—that he has been made the means, in connection with our subject, whereby several young men have been induced to study the Bible. Colonel Senior's text whereon to hang his lecture was Isa. xxvii. 6: "Israel shall blossom and bud, and they shall fill the face of the world with fruit." The lecturer used as the means of illustrating his remarks, an Israelite tree, which he has since issued as a lithographed sheet representing a tree, its branches, and the blessings of Israel portrayed thereon. The tree is a valuable illustration of Isa. xxvii. 6, for it shows at a glance the expansion of the British Empire, the blessings to which British-Israel of the Ten Tribes are entitled. The Lord's gifts to our people of the various Gates, lands, countries, and provinces throughout the earth which we possess, are all arranged in order, and the banners which hang from each bough of the tree, with the various blessings inscribed on them, testify to the fact that our Empire alone is endowed as Israel was to be, with all the good things that lie at the right hand of the God of Israel. Colonel Senior found this tree of great use at his lecture. He exhibted a copy four times the size of the lithographed specimen he has now prepared for sale. He sold a great number of these at the meeting for a penny a-piece, and he proposes to sell as many as possible for use by others at lectures, and for distribution, at a penny each, a shilling a dozen, six shillings a hundred, or fifty shillings for 1,000. The only objection to the lithographed copy we can see, is, the fact that the space being small, a vast amount of names and texts of Scripture have unavoidably been compressed and crowded into it, and this has rendered the writing almost too small for easy decipherment. The profits of the sale will be given, we are told by the Colonel, to the "Zenana Medical Mission." During the lecture Colonel Senior pointed out that as these were God's promises made by Him to Israel exclusively, and as these same blessings are now in possession of the people of this Empire exclusively (given to them by God's gracious hands) it follows that we must be Israel. He closed his address by pointing out to his hearers, that as God had thus far fulfilled His promises to Israel, we had the assurance that He will faithfully fulfil all His spiritual promises of blessings in eternity. He urged them to consider if they had made their "calling and election sure"? if the question of their sins had been settled by the Blood of Jesus? If they had done this, then it was theirs to bestir themselves to fulfil all the duties required of them by God for the salvation of souls, for the extension of His kingdom, and for the honour and glory of His holy name. They would thus only be Israelites, not only in name, but in deed and in truth."

EUROPEAN MILITARY PREPARATIONS FOR WAR.

Austria-Hungary has an active army of 875,000 men; a first reserve (men who have served their time "with the colours") of 290,000 men, and a second reserve of men who have served their time in the first reserve of 866,000; the grand total is 2,032,420 officers and men. France has a war force of 4,169,472 officers and men; 1,124,000 are in the active army, 910,000 in the field reserve, 956,000 in the first and 1,176,000 in the second reserve. Germany has 2,913,599 officers and men, of whom 810,000 are with the colours, 405,000 in the field reserve, and 900,000 in the first and 799,000 in the second reserve. Russia has the largest standing army, 1,698,000 men always under arms, with field reserves of 1,124,000, first reserves amounting to 1,191,300 men, 4,000,000 in the second reserve, and a total of 7,914,000. Compared with these huge armies the English force is comparatively insignificant so far as numbers go. They have a regular army of 136,842 men, a field reserve of 68,500 men, a first reserve of 750,000, a second reserve of about 224,000, and a total on paper of 1,179,350.—American Paper, Missouri, June 13th, 1893.

The monthly part of the Banner of Israel for August is now ready. A coloured map of British North America will be found exceedingly useful. May be ordered of any bookseller, price 6d., or will be sent post free direct from the publishers, Robert Banks and Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, for 7½d. Our readers having friends in Canada will find this a very acceptable part to send to them.

CAPTIVITY OF ISRAEL FROM A CUNEIFORM INSCRIPTION.

DECIPHERED BY JAMES RANKIN, F.R.A.S.

SECOND PAPER.—See BANNER OF ISRAEL, Vol. XVI., p. 295.

The text was copied from the accompanying photograph of a tablet in the British Museum.

"The men of Nineveh shall rise up in the judgment with this generation."—Luke xi. 32.

EXPLANATORY NOTES.

IT might be inferred from line 17 of the inscription that Cimiru was merely the Assyrian way of pronouncing the name Hebrew from the similarity in sound of B and M, but the Hebrew text of Deut. xxxiii. 18, 19, clearly states that Moses prophesied, when blessing Zebulon and Issachar, that their name would be called Khumimera—i.e., the peoples of the mountain—which differs but little from Cimiru or Khumeri. In line 17, as stated above, Sennacherib seized a Cimiru prophet to seek God, and in line 19 it is written he twice proclaimed that Jehovah of Jerusalem brought him to ruin. The Sacæ, also, were merely the common people—i.e., the plebeians.

It is evident from the inscription that the Assyrians conducted their captives to the Tauric Sea by way of the Euphrates, which they call Carchemish river, following it to its source, reaching Colchis by the river Lycus, but named by them the Swift Arnon.

On the principal tablets and human-headed bulls in the Assyrian galleries of the British Museum there is the same introductory sentence commencing the inscription on each one of them—namely, "Nineveh Ashur."

Line 3 evidently refers to the solar eclipse that was annular at Cabeira on the river Lycus, on B.C. 704, Oct. 19, at noon. (See "L'Art de Verifier les Dates" and "Oppolzers Canon.") Cabeira is mentioned by Strabo.

INSCRIPTION.

Line 1. Nineveh Ashur. All sojourners—Cimiru (Hebrew), the heroic—in the land of Taurica (Crimea) the great Sennacherib conducted to Chabor (Habor); Israel and the Levi prophets famous above all others.

Line 2. The beautiful Sacæ were placed in a valley; they established other branches, and order prevailed; they settled in a part called Colchis river, completed a fortified camp, and introduced holy service.

Digitized by Google

Line 3. The light became dim towards noon, when it ceased, and the sun to blackness consumed away; the vibrating branches of light ceased and joined the darkness which prevailed; objects faded away; and because of it the open country was hidden. In luxuriant Taurica.

Line 4. That year the river that flowed through the valley brought ruin, it carried away from the fortified camp the captive multitude uttering loud cries; but lives and dwellings went, were cut off, and melted in the valley.

Line 5. Among the mountains that are here they gathered, erected settlements, revolted, and were put to death amid the lamentations of their descendants; the deluded were all removed to the high mountains.

Line 6. To the source of the Carchemish river they came, consumed by sickness, the captives' tumulus (graves) extending and proceeding to the sea by the side of the swift Arnon, flowing in a fruitful watercourse to its outlet in the Tauric Sea,

Line 7. Which is the boundary in the western part around the Cimiru; further off around it the graves extend to those of the young afflicted ones, and to the grave of the prophetic, simple princess, the young, heroic Tamar, that beautiful one (gazelle), that suffered in secluded Taurica.

Line 8. The valley of the Arnon, rolling and winding, containing pits and heaps. Iron first came to be known by setting fire to these in burning the dense forest; when burned it contained iron. The forest is given up to the chief men of Dan, being strong archers.

Line 9. Promoted them, and appointed the great sea to that strong family (though) perverse, to protect, to surround, and shelter the Sacæ, in a measure to multiply sheep; all of them around here are bound together within sound of the shelter, and Line 10. To give them a rugged boundary. The exiles are within sound of the great turbulent sea, submissive, and bearing pain; great mountains without a pass, all within sound of the sea, with a high, open country rising from the river.

Line 11. The assembly gathered all in confusion; all trembled. The images in Sharon were confounded; Samaria was invaded a second time from Magdall; the conspiracy was destroyed, the hill city delivered up; their children (600,000) were cut off.

Line 12. Everywhere great heaps around, and thus shattered to pieces; the trembling, rushing river flowing clear. The river murmuring past the tumulus in the mournful valley Asher-bol (Esar-haddon?) made the high grave, enclosed them in peace, and made a full end.

Line 13. Lamenting the time that Israel, all heroic-looking, were trampled down, proceeded to gather them in, as in a drunkard's slumber death destroyed them; going to rest before oppression; a sacrifice; a sea death; their hearts grew cold.

Line 14. Dwelling by the great sea, brought from Samaria, endured sufferings from Shalmaneser, the high one now lying dead who in mad exultation drove them out, moving sixty thousand to dwell in the Caucasus.

Line 15. The king's palace in affliction; he is bowed down; his sons smote every one to death. There is wailing in the habitation of the shining Baal. In that year they seized and destroyed him in death; his wicked son was his executioner, depraved and shouting in violent rage.

Line 16. To the grave's silence (shouted) Shareser the sleep of death to them; everyone shoot; surround the vagabonds; purge out the rebels. Senacherib rich and glorious.

Line 17. Exalted that prince when worn out, lying in wait; celebrated his return here; grieved for dreadful overthrow of the princess in childhood, he multiplied offerings, seized a Cimiru (Hebrew) prophet to seek God in fear.

Line 18. To hide the rising, trembling, fearful sorrow, the fetters of ruined Samaria driven away all to the great black grave, there to consume, weighing like the burning flame of an offering to cast out (these thoughts); he observed times to spoil Nineveh; his sons prepared shame and oppression.

Line 19. Sacrificed Nineveh to them; Nineveh to subjugation; in Nineveh let captivity be extinguished. My father twice proclaimed that Jehovah of Jerusalem brought him to ruin, or Jehovah the terrible completely brought him to ruin; (therefore) oppress, seize the fugitives for captivity, tread on those lovely, hated ones, gather them to be slain.

Line 20. Depopulate, heap up, yes, empty in ruin and captivity; dissolve that hateful sea, make smooth the flowing waves; lie down, go down to that cavity humbled in shame; cry out, pour out, conceal the cup of malediction that rests and swells, that faintness of heart, the terrible trembling.

Line 21. Coming flood (an obvious reference to the prophecy of Nahum); that fearful swelling river; turn back to that waste land, thirsty and burning in encircling death, and fruitful with the spoils of time.

CORRESPONDENCE.—From Boural, New South Wales, we have the following greeting and appreciative words, directing our attention to the hymn of Wesley's given in the collection of hymns in common use: "God bless you for the work of the Identity you are so persistently employed in. I write as one of the subscribers and readers of the BANNER these eight years past, and for two years have been wishing to draw your attention to the following hymn in Wesley's Hymn-book. It is about the most glorious setting forth of the Identity I have ever read, and if the reader sets the Bible before him, the English history, and the hymn, surely if he is a candid man he will be convinced of Our Identity. Was Wesley fully inspired to write such a hymn? I believe it. I showed the hymn to an old friend, a Wesleyan, who has long admired the hymn, but looking at it with the light of Our Identity with Israel her whole countenance lighted up; it was wonderful to see. I wish every frivolous objector would consider it ere he commits himself to speech, or uses his pen any further."

Hymn 407. (Deuteronomy xxxiii.) Rev. John Wesley, M.A.

"None is like Jeshurun's God.
So great, so strong, so high;
Lo! He spreads His wings abroad,
He rides upon the sky!
Israel is His firstborn son;
God, the Almighty God, is thine;
See Him to thy help come down,
The excellence divine.

Thee the great Jehovah deigns
To succour and defend;
Thee the eternal God sustains,
Thy Maker and thy Friend.
Israel, what hast thou to dread?
Safe from all impending harms,
Round thee and beneath are spread
The everlasting arms.

God is thine; disdain to fear
The enemy within:
God shall in thy flesh appear,
And make an end of sin;
God the man of sin shall slay,
Fill thee with triumphant joy;
God shall thrust him out and say,
'Destroy them all, destroy!'

All the struggle then is o'er,
And wars and fightings cease,
Israel then shall sin no more,
But dwell in perfect peace;
All his enemies are gone;
Sin shall have in him no part:
Israel now shall dwell alone,
With Jesus in his heart.

In a land of corn and wine
His lot shall be below:
Comforts there and blessings join,
And milk and honey flow;
Jacob's well is in his soul,
Gracious dew His heavens distil,
Fill his soul, already full,
And shall for ever fill.

Blest, O Israel, art thou!
What people is like thee?
Saved from sin, by Jesus, now
Thou art, and still shalt be.
Jesus is thy sevenfold shield.
Jesus is thy flaming sword:
Earth and hell and sin shall yield
To God's almighty Word."

From Brighton comes a long and good account of the great work prosecuted there by Mr. H. A. Marchant on the beach, and off it, by lectures and speech on various occasions. He is feeling deeply now the power that the fact of the British people being the Israel of old (whose destiny is set forth for all to read in the Holy Scriptures) gives him in combatting the strange errors and statements of the Secularists, who are undertaking a regular campaign this year on Brighton beach. Mr. Marchant is reading hard, and is glad of any help friends can give him from books written by acknowledged infidels and freethinkers, that, knowing their arguments, he may prepare to meet them. In previous years he had experience which has in a measure opened the way for the special work he is now undertaking every Sunday at the request of Christian friends. That he should have the prayers of all who desire that the Word of God should prevail is very certain. Also Mr. Marchant is wanting a continual supply of literature, being thankful to receive all that our Fund can give, and what may be kindly sent by friends as heretofore. We are also glad to mention for Mr. Marchant that a little money help again for this season from friends will greatly ease him, for the purchase of books he feels he ought to read, and to meet the expense of correspondence and advertisements, which a small income necessarily feels the weight of.

From Southsea, a seaman, late of the Royal Navy, writes: "Many thanks for the leaflets you have sent lately to me. I have distributed some to my shipmates, and I find many eager to receive them, and a great many that have heard of the subject (Our Identity with Israel) before. They mostly become interested in it, and like to talk about it, which is a great pleasure to me, for I tell them it was reading 'The Lost Ten Tribes,' by Dr. Wild, that brought me to my dear Saviour. I must tell you I have been serving again in the navy as a pensioner the last two years, but have had to leave through ill-health. I find the knowledge of Our Identity has spread through the navy a great deal since I left it in 1886, which I am most happy to see. I enclose a Postal Order for 3s. for the Free Distribution Fund, and I ask our Father's blessing on all the workers, and on every effort that is being made to spread this blessed and glorious light to His faithfulness and glory."

Contributions to the Fund will be thankfully received and acknowledged by the Hon. Treasurer, Miss J. Lawrence, Rosslyn, Hampton-road, Upper Teddington, Middlesex; or by the Hon. Secretary, Miss E. M. Rush, 4, Westgate-road, Westgate-on-Sea. Cheques may be crossed, "London and Provincial Bank, Teddington Branch."

ISRAEL'S SCRIPTURE AND PRAYER UNION.

SINCE last report six more members have been added, making a total of 1,466.

Three cards have been sent out to old members.

The following donations were thankfully received:—Miss W., Hampstead, 2s. 6d.; and Miss S., Folkestone, 2s.

The Secretary wishes to thank the writer of the article describing the new Prayer Union card for the kind interest shown, and hopes that it may induce many to join.

The new Card of Membership has a list of chapters for the whole year, also suggestions to members, prayers, etc. It is of a size convenient for keeping in the Bible, and will be sent on receipt of 6 stamps. It is hoped that all the members will send for one.

The first and second series of Monthly Comments on the whole Bible, by Philo-Israel, may be obtained. Price, in paper cover, 1s. 2d. each; in cloth 2s. each, post free.

The "Prayers for Daily Use," being a prayer for each day of the week, by Philo-Israel, are 1d., or 9d. per doz., postage extra. Address — The Secretary, Israel's Scripture and Prayer Union, British-Israel Association, 86, St. Martin's-lane, London, W.C.

THE HINE MEMORIAL FUNDS.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

SIR,—Will you kindly allow me, through your columns, to inform the subscribers to the above funds, which were opened in December, 1891, that they are now closed? A list of subscribers, and balance-sheet, is being sent through the post to each subscriber. Should any subscriber, however, fail to receive one, I should be glad to supply in answer to any applications, as a difficulty arises from the fact that a number of subscriptions were sent under initials, and I have no complete list of addresses. The committee regrets the sad and sudden loss sustained through the death of Mr. Albert Smith, who undertook the duties of hon. secretary to these funds. The amount subscribed for Mrs. Hine is £47 15s. 9d., and for the Memorial Stone Fund £32 14s. 3d. as per balance-sheet, in addition to which I have also received from H. Lewis, Esq., Edenhurst, Blackburn, £2 2s., also £5 from Mrs. J. Travers. being a second donation of £5 from this lady for the Mrs. Hine Fund, and Mr. Kelsey, Rotherhithe, points out that he supplied the stone at cost price, giving his labour and the lettering on the stone gratis, the cost of lettering being £1 17s. 6d. Mr. Sadler also gave 4s. toward the Stone Fund, through Mr. Kelsey, which was deducted from the photo account.

Mrs. Hine, who is lying most dangerously ill, suffering intense pain from a cancer, at the house of her niece, at 30, South Grove, Peckham (having no home of her own) desires through the committee, to tender her sincere and grateful thanks to all subscribers. Her life hangs upon a thread, means she has none, but is dependent on the help of a few friends, her anxiety for her future necessities being great. The committee also tender their best thanks to the editors of the BANNER OF ISRAEL, and the Messenger, for free insertion of appeal, also to all subscribers, and regret the occasion for keeping the funds open so long, but feel such action was justified by the fact that subscriptions came in slowly from all parts of Israel's possessions, which being situate in all zones, took time to reach them, and the last were received so late as the 26th May, last.

Yours truly,

ARTHUR OSBORNE, Treasurer to the Fund.

77, Angell-road, Brixton, S.W., June 24, 1893.

THE following letter, not having been published in The Standard, is forwarded to us by the writer for insertion in the BANNER.—ED.

[COPY.]

To the Editor of "The Standard."

SIR,—Your admirable article on the occasion of the opening of the Imperial Institute by Her Majesty, claims a full acknowledgment by every patriotic person in the land. It is quite true, as you say, that a man will enjoy a larger and fuller vitality and pursue his individual task in life with greater energy when fortified and ennobled by the proud knowledge that he belongs to a manly, intrepid, and ruling race, and I quite enter into your statement that "in strict parlance, there is but one empire in the world, and that our own."

But I should like to ask you whether you do not think it behoves us to look further than at home for the origin of the race to which such attributes as you ascribe to our nation belong? It is a curious thing that in all matters connected with the rise and fall of nations, their origin and destiny, public writers take so little notice of the influence which providence has over everything, and that if you take the bearings, so to speak, of the course pursued by any nation, it will be found that there is some reason for it, though it may be hidden for a time. Is it not pretty generally accepted that the Bible contains the history of the world from the beginning until the end of time? This being the case, can it be denied that God chose a certain people to carry out His designs in the economy of the world, amongst which was the most important one of carrying the message of the Gospel into all lands?

The New Testament is, of course, the exemplification of the Old, where we find the promises made to our forefathers Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, that their seed should possess the Gates of their enemies, which is fulfilled in our holding nearly all the strategic places in the world; that through their seed all the families of the earth should be blessed, fulfilled independently of the advent of our Saviour, His life and death, by the various societies promulgating His Gospel in almost every language and dialect over the whole earth; that they should become a nation and a company of nations, which is now in course of fulfilment in the proposed federation of the empire, with many more too numerous to be comprised in the compass of an ordinary letter.

To make the matter short, but, I hope, plain, does not our nation fulfil the above requirements? Your own article acknowledges that it does. We are therefore Israel, and the Long-lost Ten Tribes are found!

Yours obediently, JOHN S. ANDERSON.

Croydon, June 19, 1893.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel.

DEAR SIR,—I have received a copy of the BANNER OF ISRAEL for July 12th from you, directing my attention to p. 341, which contains your comments on certain statements of mine published in the Witness for June, with reference to the Identity of the Ten Tribes with the English race. Without entering into the merits of the question, I would, with all Christian courtesy, disclaim any intention of being personal in what I said, and was far from desiring to scoff or insult. If I have wounded anyone hereby, I deeply regret it. In public utterances or in writings, one may sometimes seem, when dealing with matters concerning which strong convictions obtain, to aim at individuals holding opposite views, rather than with the principles underlying them. Such was far from my mind. And I trust I may ever learn to esteem, as better than myself, all who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and truth, even though we may differ, in part, in the interpretation of God's Word.

With Christian regard, I am, truly yours,

A. O. MOLESWORTH.

THE BIBLE.

BY E. REEP.

BOOK of the world, Book of all time,
A guide to lead in every clime;
A Book to set us in the way,
When sin doth turn our steps astray;
A Book to light the narrow road,
Conducting to our last abode;
A Book to teach of hope and love,
Of endless life in Christ above;
A Book to comfort when in grief,
A certain source of sure relief;
A Book to warn that wealth and fame
Oft bring but bitterness and pain;
A Book to silence every fear
In souls that would to Christ draw near;
A Book beyond all precious things,
A treasure-store for priests and kings;
A Book to show to child and man,
How very God the world doth span,
A Book to cheer the poor man's heart,
Called to receive the better part;
A Book to point God's chosen race
Into the fold of Gospel grace:
A Book to tell all those athirst
To come, the last is served as first;
A Book from which no man may take,
Nor add thereto till Doomsday break.

"British-Israel Truth." Edited by the Rev. Denis Hanan and H. Alder-Smith (R. Banks & Son.)—The sale of the first edition of this work, and the consequent issue of a second, shows that there is a growing interest in the study of the questions of the Israelitish origin of the English speaking people. Clever, interesting, pathetic, and showing considerable research, the volume has been a success, and doubtless has made some converts.—THE ROCK.

THE TROUBLE IN SIAM.

THAT grave trouble has arisen in Siam in consequence of misunderstandings and provocation between the Siamese and the French, there seems no reason to doubt. There are questions respecting insults offered to French subjects by Siamese which the French require to have settled; there are boundary disputes and claims for portions of Siamese lands, which the latter are not disposed to allow, and overt acts of hostility by the French in ascending the Menam River against the wishes and consent of the Siamese Government, which, taken together, present the materials of a very pretty quarrel. The worst part of it is that the French are inclined to drag our own nation into the matter, and their newspapers accordingly are ready and active in writing offensive articles, attributing to the British all sorts of evil intentions, with direct allegations that the whole difficulty arises from British instigation. The French press, in fact, is in a furious condition, forgetting that the Indian Empire is a close neighbour of, living on friendly terms with, Siam; also that it cannot afford to allow France to annex Siam, or destroy the large trade we have with it. We suppose the "difficulty" will eventually subside when Siam, as a kingdom, has been sufficiently humbled, and when a portion of her territory desired by the French has been added to their French Provinces of Annam and Tonquin. These are not profitable to the French as it is, and we question the wisdom of the latter in thus adding to their distant Eastern possessions, as if they could thus compensate for their loss of India, or make up for the removal of the Mauritius, and recently of Egypt, from their national protection. The French are somewhat like petted children. Glory is what their hearts love. Military glory and success in war is the food they live on, and they must have it to be happy. They cannot endure to think of the way we have supplanted them in India and in Egypt. Their longing, therefore, is to build up an Empire in the East as near to India as may be, whence they may also obtain some of the wealth we derive from the East; and they look to intercepting a great part of that we derive from Burmah and Siam by crippling that Power and securing some of the river openings which they imagine will lead in their hands to the same results that the command of the rivers in India does for us. In vain! In vain! God gave "the Gates," "the power to get wealth," and the dominion and power over the nations, to one people—namely, to Israel. The British being Israel, but the French an alien race, the latter cannot hope to acquire what God has reserved for Israel only, and what our nation, as Israel, exclusively enjoys to-day. This lesson has so often been taught to France and the world that we wonder the French are willing to incur the mortification of a disastrous result again. They aim too, generally, at injuring Israel, and to rob her of the blessings God has promised to her. But in attempting this they are striving after impossibilities. They cannot make void the promises of God to Israel, nor can they set aside the covenants of Jehovah, made with "Abraham and his seed for ever," respecting "the kingdom and dominion and greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven," which is to be theirs, according to the prophecies.

The present Siamese trouble will probably pass over, as the French must be aware that hostilities at the ends of the earth, with the mighty power of Britain in India, and the Red Sea intervening between Siam and their own home supports, will hardly be prudent in the face of the Eastern or European questions they will have to meet as soon as the hour to re-open them has come. These questions will have to be reckoned with by France, and she cannot afford for the sake of empty "glory" to make Britain her enemy just now. The Continent is a mere powder magazine at the present day, which any spark may ignite. The "Siam" trouble could easily draw China and Russia in to oppose and aid the French respectively in their contention, with an almost defenceless people. The Indian Empire, on the other hand, cannot afford to have a European Power like France as a neighbour to the east of Burmah, and will resist, we imagine, the French project, the object of which is, to deprive Siam of a large slice of her territory, as a compensation for some fancied wrongs of which the French complain.

The matter is now in its critical stage, and probaby a few days will show us what God has in store for us, and how He is arranging for our national deliverance from the perils which appear to surround us on all sides.

The following statistics may serve to show our readers how deeply Israel is concerned in this matter:—"The value of our British trade with Siam last year was £2,500,000, all carried on British bottoms. The Queen has over 13,000 subjects in the country. France has but 250, and the whole value of her trade in 1892 with Siam was only £8,000!" The French demand the surrender of nearly 100,000 square miles of territory, half of which we made over to Siam on the condition it was never to be transferred to any other Power. This is the point of concern to ourselves, and regarding this, Lord Dufferin must exercise all his influence to guard our interests. May the Lord preserve His people's rights!

A SERMON BY THE BISHOP OF ROCHESTER, PREACHED IN ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.

THE Bishop of Rochester preached a sermon on July 9, 1893, of which the following is a portion, reported by The Family Churchman " of the week following. The extract is sent us for the BANNER by a friend to our views, who believes that the bishop's words may be of interest to those who did not hear him. They were as follows :—

"The thought, the lesson, runs through the Bible—Old Testament as well as New. One by one the colossal empires of the ancient world—Egypt, Nineveh, Babylon, appear in its historic pages, appear and pass away. You remember how Keble describes the vision given to Balaam—

> "'Thy tranced, yet open gaze,
> Fixed on the desert haze,
> As one who deep in heaven some airy pageant sees.
> In outline dim and vast
> Their fearful shadows cast
> The giant forms of empires on their way
> To ruin: one by one
> They tower, and they are gone.'

One nation, one force, one divinely-ordered life, lasts on in spite of failure, in spite of wrong-doing, in spite of apparent discomfiture; the people of God, the people who in the main have trusted Him, who have learnt bit by bit from these successive shocks of discipline to know and do His will—they live on. Huge Eastern monoliths now blocking our museums, winged human-headed bulls and the like embodying the ideals of those who carved them out of stone, or the Egyptian conqueror whose colossal form covers half the front of a gateway tower—such were the old-world ideas of greatness and power; and among them the people of God, a little nation, in a little land lived on and grew from strength to strength as they came in contact successively with those heathen powers. At three several crises in their career, it has been said—in youth, in middle life, in old age—they came into collision with three giant Empires of the ancient world, Egypt, Babylon, Rome; each time they were crushed, almost annihilated by affliction; each time they started up into fresh and more vigorous life when it was over. The Egyptian bondage created Israel as a nation, the Babylonian captivity consolidated the nation as a church, the Roman devastation expanded the church of a nation into the church of mankind."

The above deals chiefly with the House of Judah-Israel, but takes no account of Ephraim-Israel in separation from Judah. Egypt illtreated Israel when they were united as a nation of slaves. In Babylon the Jews alone were expatriated during seventy years, and Rome destroyed the polity of the Jews after the siege and destruction of the City of Jerusalem. We hardly understand how the church of a nation (meaning, we suppose, the Christian Church of apostolic times) expanded into "the church of mankind." There is no "church of mankind" yet; but the Church of England, which is the Church of Israel, endeavours to minister to "all nations, all families, and all kindreds of the earth," according to the prophecies. The effort to omit Israel of the House of Joseph, from our calculations, is rather foolish, because the Jews do not fulfil the promises respecting Israel's everlasting kingdom; they have not trusted in God their Father, seeing they have, like the wicked husbandmen, killed the Son of God, the Lord of glory. The second item in the account, that the Jews, after they had met their destined punishment, "learnt bit by bit to know and to do His will" is hardly correct. The Jews to this hour do not know God's will, they refuse to obey Him, and in banishment from their land, have spent ages of their national life in sorrow, affliction, and misery. The people "who in the main have trusted their God," are the British people, Ephraim-Israel, the favoured House. They live on in splendour, power, and wealth—"a little nation, in a little land," growing even now daily from strength to strength.

"AS FOR US ENGLISHMEN."

BY J. THOMSON.

PART I.

"THE Pillars of Our Faith"* is a very readable volume of 312 pages, wherein the "Higher Criticism," of which we have heard so much lately, and the asserted discoveries of modern science as summarised under the term "evolution," are examined by the author, the Rev. Robert P. Downes, LL.D., in a candid and unassuming manner, and their failure to answer the problems started, fairly and clearly pointed out. Some may think that he allows too much value to the notions of the critics, as when, on p. 166, he refers to "that later prophet whose predictions are included in the book of Isaiah." But he unflinchingly exposes the erroneous tendency of the "Higher Criticism," which he avers "is but the latest exemplification of the doctrine of evolution without God." Thus, according to the higher critics, "the religion of Israel did not enter the world through Abraham or Moses in a complete and noble form, as a re-publication of the primitive faith given to man in the beginning of years, and as adumbrating redemption and a Redeemer; but it is the result of slow development from lower to higher conceptions. Like the nations around them, the tribes who settled in Canaan had their national God, and Jehovah was to them very much what Chemosh was to Moab, or Milcom to Ammon. Their religious faith and observances were very much like those of the nations around them" (p. 130). To this our author very pertinently replies, "The only evidence on which these conclusions are founded is the sacred books themselves. The critic has no other Bible than that which is in our own hands, nor has he any additional documents inaccessible to us. And yet he presumes to form a conception of Israel's religious development totally different from that contained in the Old Testament itself. We, however, boldly repudiate these assumptions as unwarrantable . . . The writings which record the work of Moses as prophet, leader, and law-giver of ancient Israel, abound with references to the covenant and the promise made to Abraham. With Abraham the history of Israel as a people begins; and the prophets were not the makers of its religion, but simply reformers and continuers, recalling the people to a Divine standard from which they had fallen, and to a holy law, which they had profaned and broken. The fact is that Israel, at the dawn of its national existence, had an exalted conception of God, and a high rule of duty, which it neither borrowed from its neighbours, nor invented for itself. . . . The religion of Israel cannot be looked upon as a merely natural formation and development; it is a new moral creation. In virtue of it Israel was to the sinful world what conscience is to the individual heart; while Jehovah towered above the gods of Egypt and Assyria, like Sinai above the desert plain" (pp. 130, 131).

We do not propose to enter upon a full or even cursory review of this remarkable and in many respects interesting book. That would far exceed our present time and limits. But we wish to direct the attention of our readers to some of his most decided and Scriptural sentiments before we proceed to the main subject of our paper, which is to adduce some evidence given by our author as, perhaps, a "blind witness" to the truth of our national Identity to the lost Ten-tribed House of Israel. In the above extract it will be seen that, according to him, ancient Israel occupied the position, so to speak, of "conscience" to the rest of the world. This we admit, for it includes the vital truths for which we contend; and the question may very fairly be asked of those who dissent from our views, where or when, having so chosen and honoured the descendants of His "friends" Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, did God ever say He would depose them wholly from that high position of being the channel of His mercies to a fallen world, and in their stead place another, a Gentile, nation through which to carry out His purposes?

Referring to the character and work of ancient Israel upon the world at large, our author observes that "there was a body of knowledge communicated to God's ancient people, beyond the reach of the subtlest investigation of the human mind, or its purest and loftiest self-development. The progress of the religious life of Israel is far ahead of that found in other nations. Other primitive peoples, and even peoples of the same Semitic race, never approached the stage reached by the Hebrews" (p. 144). The knowledge which resulted in this character was not obtained "from the priests, or the oracles of Egypt"; nor "was it the creation of the genius of the Hebrew people." But "they were slowly educated to receive it, and even after its reception exhibited a proneness to idolatry, which was the great sorrow of their prophets and teachers" (p. 145). Our author here correctly uses the term "Hebrew people," but immediately after uses the term "Jews" as an equivalent: "We are shut up, therefore, to the conviction that the Jews (!) received it from on high." This proneness of Israel to idolatry is also found in the past and present history of the British people; for, with all our knowledge and privileges vouchsafed to us by Divine Providence, there is seen again and again a falling away to superstition and error, quite remarkable to the observant student of history; while it is the distinguishing feature of our age. The "Higher Criticism" is an attempt to explain away the miraculous and the historical in the ancient record of God's revealed will to man; and evolution is an attempt to show how the universe may have been developed from an original fire-mist without a superintending Providence, if not without a Creator, to whom, however, it is allowed by some the credit of having, somehow, originated the first germs of all succeeding material and spiritual existence.

Our author's book is not only a reply to the teachings of the "Higher Criticism," but also one to the theory of evolution, which he clearly shows fails in more than one vital point (see pp. 37—44), for there are "gaps in the evolutionary sequence which science has not yet satisfactorily bridged;" and yet there are "great authorities who confidently affirm that no such gaps exist" (p. 47). Such gaps are seen in the first appearance of vegetable, and then of animal life, followed by man, who is allowed to have been an advance far "beyond the brute; . . . but the link which connects him with them is missing." Our author allows more to the evolutionists than we can. For while there is absolutely no dependable evidence in proof of the development of a higher type of existence from a lower, or of the lowest form of life from inert matter, he seems to yield all that is worth contending for in admitting that "evolution, when reduced to its last analysis, only means creation according to law" (p. 48). Notwithstanding all the special pleading to which he resorts to explain this, we cannot but think that such a doctrine of development really does "set the Almighty," as a personal Being, "on one side; and renders the belief in His existence no longer essential" by man, who is also stripped of his responsibility as a moral creature. This is the practical outcome of evolution; for man, by it, is the result of law, not the creation of the Almighty in His own image, as a moral and spiritual being. Thus our author says, "According to the record of Moses, the body of the first man was formed out of the dust of the earth." These words give us a definite idea; but how are we to understand our author's paraphrase of them, "That is, it" (the body of the first man) "came into existence as the culminating point of the evolutionary process"? (p. 207).

In his recent "Romanes" lecture on "Evolution and Ethics," delivered at Oxford, Professor Huxley has some similar "tall talk." "From very low forms up to the highest in the animal, no less than in the vegetable kingdom, the process of life presents the same appearance of cyclical evolution. . . . Natural knowledge tends more and more to the conclusion that 'all the choir of heaven and furniture of earth' are the transitory forms of parcels of cosmic substance wending along the road of evolution from nebulous potentiality, through endless (!) growth of sun, and planet, and satellite; through all varieties of matter, through infinite (!) diversities of life and thought, possibly through modes of being of which we neither have a conception, nor are we competent to form any, back to the undefinable (!) latency from which they arose. . . . The theory of evolution encourages no millennial anticipations. If for millions of years our globe has taken the upward road, yet some time the summit will be reached, and the downward route will be commenced." And men swallow all these dreamings as the teachings of science! According to Professor Huxley, all will again be resolved into "nothingness"; for that, if anything, is the meaning of "undefinable latency." It is unnecessary for us to show how such teaching destroys the moral character of man, and is utterly opposed to that of Holy Scripture. It is quite clear from this lecture that evolution destroys all foundation for ethics or true religion, and it is indeed "hard to bring the course of evolution into harmony with even the elementary requirements of the just and the good." The question may again be asked, "If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?" (Psa. xi. 3).

After yielding all to evolution, it is useless for our author to write, "But the spirit of man was from above; it was a direct inspiration from the Divine Spirit." How does he, or any other of our learned savants know this, apart from Divine revelation? and that, we see, evolution directly contradicts.

In chapter iv., section 8, our author has a few remarks on "the miracle of prophecy," which we wish he had extended, but his space did not "permit of any exhaustive treatment of this subject" (p. 164). He admits that "along with the development of the Hebrew nation" there was "the living voice of God in prophecy, and this voice is found here, and here only, amid all the religions of the world. Oracles and divination, augurs and fortune-tellers, do indeed appear among heathen peoples, but they utter dreams, and not certainties; they are powerless to pierce the future, or to declare the things to come. But the prophecies of the Old and New Testaments reveal the Divine prescience, and are miracles of knowledge, as the resurrection of Christ was a miracle of power" (p. 164); and these "Biblical prophecies relate, first, to the Jewish nation" (our author here means the Hebrew nation); "secondly, to other nations or empires; thirdly, to the coming of Christ; and fourthly, to the kingdom or Church of Christ" (p. 165). All Anglo-Israelites will agree with this; for our appeal is to Biblical prophecy, which we assert portrays as characteristics of Israel in the latter days the exact present position, character, and prospects of the British people.

In chapter ii., section 2, our author has a paragraph (b) on the mission of great men, who are a "notable feature in the progress of history. . . . Without God there is no great man, and all great gifts are but a trust from Him. It is not circumstances, or birth, or heredity, which make the truly great man. He is born from above" (not very like evolution this). "Thus the man of highest genius is of all men the least self-conscious. He is not proud of his gifts, for he knows they have been given him, and are not self-acquired. His finest thoughts come spontaneously, and are to none so wonderful as to himself. . . . Coming he knows not whence, he feels with respect to his ideas that he is a transmitter, and not a maker. The revelation of truth, or duty, or inventive power, flashes upon him swift as lightning; he passes it on to his fellows, and is again a humble suppliant at the gate of heaven. How inspiring is the procession of the divinely-gifted men who, by their teaching and their work, have proved the uplifters of the world, the creators of its liberty, the apostles of its religion, the pioneers of its progress. There is Moses, refusing to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, that he may champion the cause of his oppressed people. . . . There was St. Paul, stricken, persecuted, branded, yet singing in the dungeon the praises of Him who had caused him to triumph. . . . There is Savonarola, orator, teacher, reformer, . . . for his prophet's work receiving the prophet's wages, the gibbet and the chariot of fire. There is Columbus, feeling after a missing hemisphere, with which to complete the globe. . . . There is Luther wrestling in the arena with kings, popes, and princes, causing them one by one to bite the dust. . . . There is Newton, voyaging through strange seas of thought alone, and discovering the law which holds the worlds in leash, and makes the universe a rhythmic song. There is Washington, stainless in integrity, inflexible in justice, 'first in peace, first in war, and first in the hearts of his countrymen.' There is Wesley, facing the fury of the mob, the hatred of ecclesiastics, and the scorn of the fashionable, that he may blow in England the trumpet of a new moral resurrection.

> "'In these are found the fires of thought,
> The splendours of endeavour;
> And they shall sway the minds of men
> For ever and for ever.'

Now, whence came these men? From God! He informed their minds with wisdom. He filled their lips with thunder. He mitred their brows with pentacostal flame.

> "'Even so doth Heaven protect us'"—(p. 53—55).

THE HEBREW ORIGIN OF THE BRITISH, FOUNDED ON ANCIENT COINS, AS DISCOVERED BY A CLERGYMAN OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

By E. Reep.

PART I.

British-Israel truth still waits to be whitewashed by some renowned scholar in whom the whole world has confidence. Let there come a great man of letters to bolster up the cause and it will suffer no more disparagement and suspicion. Every one will believe in it, and in a little while feel that at no time did they doubt it. For want of this high eminence in scholarship the Rev. W. J. D. Waddilove, M.A., of St. John's College, Cambridge, is almost unknown as the author of a small but valuable work on Our Identity with Israel, published and dedicated to the Duchess of Roxburghe so long ago as 1847.

Under the title of "The Lamp in the Wilderness," Mr. Waddilove makes an examination of the symbols and traditions applicable to early British history, which are alone explicable, he affirms, by the Holy Scriptures. The bearing of the evidence afforded by the symbols upon the history of a people who were to be scattered to the four winds of heaven and sifted through all nations as corn is sifted through a sieve, and of whom the prophet says (Amos ix. 9), "Not a grain should fall upon the earth," is, he thinks, indisputable. We cannot, he says, reflect on the wonderful interpositions of Providence in the history of the British Islands, and see so many symbolic evidences centering there, without acknowledging, "This hath God wrought."

One of the symbols said to connect the British with the Hebrew nation represents the mystery of the seven stars (Rev. i. 16—20; Amos v. 8). This symbol was the emblem of the early British Church as well as of the Vaudois or Waldensic Church in the valleys of Piedmont. Its recognition by these two apostolic churches suggests that the Israel of the Alps, as the inhabitants of the Vaudois valleys have been named,* derived their common faith from the same pure source as the Church of Cornwall, Wales, and the northern part of Britain and the northern part of Ireland. It is also represented on a coin of Claudius (A.D. 41), not as the symbol of the Most High, but as emblematic of the power of Rome (where Satan's seat is) whereby we have Satan claiming to be God.

Undoubtedly to the House of Israel was promised the first acceptance of the Gospel (Isa. xlix.). They were to be the light of the world (Matt. v. 14), and, accordingly, to them was assigned the first knowledge of Him in whose right hand lay the mystery of the starry symbol and from whose mouth proceeded a message fraught with all the poignancy and force of a two-edged sword. Not to the system of Rome was the promise made that the gates of hell should not prevail against it (Matt. xvi. 18), but to that Church which sought refuge in the Isles of the West and a retreat in the mountains of the Vaudois Alps.

Another symbol to which our attention is called is the Trident, familiar to us on the English penny. That this and various other emblems, made according to the pattern of those shown Moses in the Mount, were introduced into different countries, points conclusively to the early wanderings of the Israelites and to the corruption of their Levite priests whose sacerdotal ingenuity was always manifesting itself in the endeavour to blend the worship of Jehovah with that of their Baalim and their groves. Thus we find the Trident a prominent symbol in the worship of Siva, the third person of the Indian Triad, as well as on the British penny.

A temple of Siva is stated to have been founded at no great distance from the supposed site of the Ophir of Solomon (2 Chron. ix. 10) who in the idolatrous infatuation of his old age so largely contributed to the religious perversion of the chosen people. At this time and subsequently must have happened a considerable falling away of the Levitical priesthood. Ezekiel, in the imagery of false shepherds and scattered flocks, expresses the divine indictment of their spurious sanctity and their misguidance of their sheep, whereby they were made to feed in dead pastures and to drink at polluted streams, fouled by the superstitions of their idolatrous shepherds; for such ministers of the sanctuary there is prescribed judgment. As we read, "And the Levites that are gone away from Me, when Israel went astray, which went astray away from Me after their idols; they shall even bear their iniquity" (Ezek. xliv. 10).

If then in heathen emblems we discover mysteries that belong to symbols fashioned according to the pattern of those made in the Mount we have palpable proof of the heathens' contact with the Hebrew nation and with those false Levites who, even in St. Paul's day (Acts xiii. 6, xix. 13), were noted as vagabonds and sorcerers. Nowhere is this proof of Hebrew influence more plainly verified than in the Arch of Titus, whereon is exhibited the golden candlestick with its seven symbolical branches as well as a likeness of the table placed in the tabernacle for the unleavened bread. We have also the same kind of evidence traceable in the symbols used by the Etrurians. Through these mysterious invaders of Italy there are incorporated in Roman literature pure Hebrew incidents of history. From whence they came is yet an unsettled question, nevertheless there are serious reasons for assuming that they were of those very early Hebrew colonists who, according to Philo-Judæus, spread themselves abroad from the moment the Hebrew race was originally settled as a nation.

Among the most distant regions named, as colonized by the chosen people, are Pamphylia, Cilicia, the greater part of Asia Minor, as far as Bythinia, and the furthermost corners of Pontus. And in the same way settlements were formed in Thessaly. Bœotia, Macedonia, Ætolia, and Attica, and Argos, and Corinth, and all the most fertile and wealthiest districts of Pelopennesus. Not only was Europe, asserts Philo, full of Hebrew colonies, but also all the most celebrated islands.*

This important information furnished by the Jewish historian and philosopher clears the way of all difficulty in perceiving in the people who became so dominant in the Italian peninsula a Hebrew origin. Their division of territory into twelve states, their form of government, their religious beliefs, their symbols, and their manner and customs all conclusively point to this origin. Hence it is that in Cicero's Commonwealth there are facts entirely derived from the history of the Hebrews.

About 700 B.C., as observed by Grote and Prof. Mahaffy, there was a remarkable rise of lawgivers and of codes of law. The significance of this circumstance is never by ordinary historical students associated with the dispersion abroad of the Northern House of Israel, which, occurring in the seventh century before Christ, supplied fresh life and material for the revision of the ancient codes in use in the numerous Israelite colonies. Wherefore in Sparta was produced Lycurgus, in Athens Draco and Solon, in Crete the great and wise Minos, and in Italy the divinely-favoured Romulus.

The traditions relating to the founder of the Roman Commonwealth are undoubtedly a mixed confusion of the life of Moses. Romulus, like Moses, was miraculously preserved in extreme infancy, and the circumstances of his death were as mysterious as those attending the disappearance of the founder of the Commonwealth of Israel. The Etrurian hero and lawgiver again resembles Moses in being the possessor of a staff or rod with which he divided out different districts in founding a city. In conceiving the design of establishing a new State Romulus, it is said, avoided (as did Moses in Palestine) advancing near the sea, an easy enough movement with the large forces at his command. Having formed his senate, or council, he conducted many wars with neighbouring nations and enacted that the nobles should act as elders or protectors to the inferior citizens. After these things were done and settled there occurred an event, the original story of which is written in Judges xxi. In Italy it is known as the "Rape of the Sabines," and is thus given by Cicero: "The young Sabine females (Sabines were of the same kinship as the Etruscans) of honourable birth, who had come to Rome to attend the public games and feast of Neptune (Jupiter), were suddenly carried off and given in marriage to the noblest families in Rome. On this account the Sabines declared war against Rome, but the battle being doubtful, and the Sabine matrons themselves interceding, a compact of peace was made, and the Sabines admitted to a participation in the religious ceremonies and government of the Commonwealth.

From the Sabines were descended the Bruttii, who in the opinion of the learned Bochart were well known to the Phœnicians;† they have also been numbered reasons among the progenitors of the British folk.

The effect of the Etrurian traditions on the history and on the Church of Rome is fully explained in "The Lamp in the Wilderness," wherein the author produces his proofs in his plates of ancient coins, of Rome being originally indebted for its civil and religious policy to the priesthood of Etruria and through Etruria to the Hebrews. Upon the connection, he asserts, of Spain and Etruria (the secret ecclesiastical element which supports the fabric of the Papacy) depends the working of the mystery of iniquity, mentioned by St. Paul in his Epistle to the Thessalonians. By this he means to imply that through the perversion of Mosaic and divine symbols the Church of Rome has claimed universal supremacy, thus becoming guilty of the blasphemy of them which say they are Jews (i.e., entitled to the heirship and dominion of the world) and are not.

* "Philo-Judæus," Vol. IV., p. 161 (Bohn's edition).

† Under this appellation Israelites must have traded with distant countries since Tyre, one of the chief Phœnician or Canaanite cities, belonged to the maritime tribe of Asher (Josh. xix. 29). Hiram, of Tyre, was an Israelite (1 Kings vii. 13, 14; 2 Chron. ii. 14; Josephus Antiq. VII., iii. 4).

BALAK AND BALAAM.

A FRIEND who has read the article of the Standard newspaper of June 9, in respect to M. Dubois' testimony to British work in Egypt, which we have reproduced in the BANNER (p. 361), makes the following remarks in regard to the Frenchman's evidence, that are much to the point. He says:—"The Paris Figaro newspaper certainly represents 'Balak.' The special correspondent, M. Felix Dubois, is 'Balaam.' He was sent forth by the Figaro to curse Israel, but 'Balaam-Dubois,' having gone forth with every intent to do his worst, has altogether blessed us!" The fact is curious and remarkable. M. Dubois himself told us that he went out confidently believing that he would come across ample material for a volume which should at one and the same time interest the public, expose the wiles of English perfidy, and exalt the influence of France, in the kingdom of the Pharaohs. M. Dubois found none of these things! He found a primitive people with primitive habits, instincts and ideas, "governed by an alien, upright, capable, and generous race!" On the showing of M. Dubois, we may claim to respond to the title God's Word gives to Israel, and declare that in the administration of Egypt we have shown ourselves to be "the meek" who are to inherit the earth (Matt. v. 5).

M. Dubois carries candour even to the point of endorsing the opinion we have expressed repeatedly, that if any one is to blame for the English occupation of Egypt, it is the French people themselves. We adhered with tenacious fidelity to the pre-existing arrangements known as the Dual Control, till such time as it pleased the French Government to bring them to a close by devolving on us—and on us alone—the sole responsibility for crushing the mutiny of Arabi Pacha. M. Dubois perceives this, as every fair-minded Frenchman will perceive it if he is really acquainted with the facts. We did not create the situation. All we did was to accept it. But it is idle to ask us now to comport ourselves as though we had not made special and exclusive sacrifices for Egypt. We submitted to the Dual Control because it existed, because it had grown up quite naturally, and because we had no right to decree its abolition. But when, by the chapter of accidents, it disappeared, and when France, by a deliberate decision, left us alone face to face with the Egyptian Question, England thereby became the sole guardian of the situation. Yet no one can allege that we have tried to turn it to our own special or exclusive advantage. No doubt, England was not altogether sorry to get rid of an embarrassing co-operation, for thereby friction of all kinds has been diminished. But the free hand we acquired has been used for the general good, and there is not a civilized community that can or does bring against us a charge of selfishness or self-seeking domination. Our mission is to civilize Egypt, to make it pay its way, and to be in a position to hold its own against the marauders on its confines. No community has been so much benefited by the British occupation as the French themselves. We are far from sure that we have not shown almost too much forbearance, and almost too much patience, in dealing with the resistance offered to our Western reforms by some of the native officials. But the last charge that can be brought against British administrators in Egypt is that they have been arrogant, or selfish, or self-seeking. We gladly hail this generous and unexpected testimony to our good intentions and wise conduct, lent by an intelligent Frenchman seeking enlightenment on the spot, and we can hardly doubt that, notwithstanding the reproaches addressed to M. Dubois by some of his countrymen, his revelations will produce a wholesome effect on public opinion in France. When once the purity of our intentions is fully recognised there, our task will become easier, and Egypt will be the gainer by it.

The testimony of the French writer is most valuable, since it shows that where France failed, the British-Israelites have amply succeeded, and proved that all who see us, acknowledge us, that we are "the seed the Lord hath blessed" (Isa. lxi. 9, R V.). The French themselves have benefited more largely than other people by reason of our success in the administration of Egyptian affairs. To Egypt belongs the Suez Canal, and that famous waterway for ocean ships, is the Northern Gate of the Red Sea route to India and the East. The Gates belong to Israel; and our nation, therefore, being Israel, is bound to hold the valley of the Nile, and to bless it by ruling it. God has blessed our management of the land, and like Joseph, our forefather, He makes us to enrich and give prosperity to the hitherto miserable fellaheen, as the Frenchman truly testifies. As to the fallacy (one we have always exposed), that after a given amount of British tuition and tutelage, the Egyptians will be able to stand alone and take their place among the independent nations of the world, M. Dubois tells the French people not to believe such nonsense! "There exists," he says, "no Egyptian people, much less an Egyptian nation"! Egypt is being more and more Europeanised; but the result is that the natives are being pushed out of the field by the European settlers, who "are the brains, the blood, and the vitality of Egypt"! M. Dubois, in praising British management in that country, was doing just what Balaam told Balak he was himself authorized and commissioned to do regarding the children of Israel, then spread out before him. He blessed them, because God intended him to bless, but not to curse the people.

The same race were before M. Dubois, engaged in their appointed work of "building and planting" a decaying and expiring polity, and though we have only been ten years engaged in the task, our French critic has returned to report that we are working effectively and well, in the land which France desired to have, but could not retain, because God willed otherwise. His hand was plainly seen in Alexandria Harbour, in August 1882; when the bombardment of the forts left the British masters of Egypt, and the French, the voluntary absentees, no more entitled to put their hands to plough, which we have since worked with such glorious effect. As Israel were on the Plains on Moab entirely unconscious of the blessed words of Balaam, and of the malicious intent of Balak, the king of Moab, so we now were in 1882, and ever since, quite ignorant nationally of the purposes of God respecting us, and how He intended us to abide in the land of Egypt to carry out His intentions of mercy to that hitherto down-trodden country. To Him let Israel give all the praise!

RANDOM SHAFTS.

In Identity matters it is not quite safe to judge people by the language they use, because they often talk pure "Israelism," when in reality they are opposed to us; and on the other hand I have heard the subject severely criticised by those who were secretly in sympathy with it. But surely we have a good right to conjecture that John Ellerton, who died a week or two ago, was a genuine believer. The deceased clergyman has written several fine hymns, and one of them —for national thanksgiving—is so Israelitish in tone that it cannot be sung with any degree of truthfulness except by a Hebrew stock. A couple of its verses will show that this is no exaggeration:—

"Praise to our God! the vine He set Within our coasts is fruitful yet;
On many a shore her seedlings grow;
'Neath many a sun her clusters glow.

Praise to our God, though chastening stern
Our evil dross should throughly burn!
His rod and staff, from age to age,
Shall rule and guide His heritage!

Needless to say, Israel is the only nation ever styled God's heritage in Scripture, and the only nation having the remotest claim to that title. Israel, also, is the only nation compared to a vine: "Thou hast brought a vine out of Egypt." "They (Ephraim) shall grow as the vine." "Fruitful," "seedlings," "clusters," are simply echoes of the prophetic word. Joseph is a "fruitful bough," "whose branches run over the wall," and Israel has to take root, blossom, and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit. Moreover, our singer declares that God will chasten us in order to burn out the dross, but continue to rule and guide us from age to age. If we are Gentiles, this is a bold and scarcely justifiable thought. God speaks of destroying, breaking in pieces, and cutting off Gentile dynasties, but He does not promise to discipline them until their faults are removed. That, however, is exactly what He intends to do for Israel: "I will correct thee in measure, and will not leave thee altogether unpunished;" "You only have I known of all the families of the earth; therefore I will punish you for all your iniquities."

We are accustomed to see these terms and sentiments applied to the Church, but in this hymn they are given to the British race. What is the inference? But whether John Ellerton was an Anglo-Israelite or not, he helps to prove that the Identity is a fact. For he is constrained to admit that we, as a nation, were "set" or "planted" by God Himself. It would require a decided stretch of the imagination to conceive the same of any continental people, but we have been so providentially preserved, prospered, and spread abroad through the earth, that men seem to have no hesitation in saying it about us. This is as it should be, if we are Israel. God distinctly states He would bless Israel, "that they might be called . . . the planting of the Lord" (Isa. lxi. 3). John Ellerton having called us the planting of the Lord, he has fulfilled the prediction; and shown, too, the marvellous aptness of the metaphor which Isaiah was inspired to employ.

A famous doctor of divinity lately preached a sermon which for spiritual beauty was equal to anything I have had the misfortune to hear. He took for his theme Isa. xxxii. 13—20, particularly dwelling on the following: "Upon the land of My people shall come up thorns and briers . . . until the Spirit be poured upon us from on high, and the wilderness be a fruitful field." The whole passage pictures the desolation of Palestine, consequent on God's having withdrawn His favour, and the glorious changes that will take place when His favour returns. But the doctor appeared to have entirely forgotten the existence of that country and its ancient inhabitants. He explained that the irreligious heart was practically full of briers, and that the nations which did not know or did not fear God were moral wildernesses.

He conducted us almost to London Island in search of moral wildernesses, and uttered fervent longings for their conversion into "fruitful fields"; but overlooked the Jews in these excursions, and expressed no wish at all for the regeneration of Israel. Two or three prayers were offered up, and I was going to assert that he made entreaty for "Turk, heathen, and Jew," but this would have been wrong. He certainly went far and wide for the objects of his pity, and the subjects of his petition, but Israel was left in the cold. Neither in his exposition nor his supplication was there a solitary word for the land or people of whom the prophet is treating! It is a general complaint that the ministrations of the pulpit are not so efficacious at present as they should be, but can we wonder that the Divine blessing is frequently withheld? To pervert God's message in this way, and ignore His solemn purposes, is insulting Him.

These distortions of Holy Writ are considered to originate in loftiness and refinement of soul—a refinement which cannot bear to deal with coarse literalism. Perhaps, however, they arise from a vitally different cause. To put it plainly, do the spiritualizers really believe in the reliability of the Old Testament, or are they merely pretending to do so? It may be said that this imputes dishonesty to a large body of professing Christians, but we have to remember that dishonesty is fashionable nowadays. Numbers of theological students who are no better than Romanists or agnostics subscribe the thirty-nine articles, and so obtain positions of influence in the Protestant Church of England; while scores of Presbyterian ministers and elders, who have signed the Westminster Confession of Faith, tell us that they do not and did not agree with it. Those who can act in this fraudulent fashion must have a very blunt conscience, but the facts are undeniable, and they throw light on the ethics of the nineteenth century. There is thus some ground for suspicion that the Bible is in unfriendly hands to a greater extent than commonly supposed, and, with me at least, it remains an open question whether allegorical interpretations are due to strong spirituality or watery infidelity.

A little commotion will stir up the mud at the bottom of a pool, and a lively controversy will bring to the surface much that would otherwise have lain concealed. At present America is the scene of an extremely bitter doctrinal dispute, in which Lyman Abbot, the successor to Henry Ward Beecher, has zealously joined; and his exclamations confirm the suspicion just referred to. In a discourse which is properly described as "remarkable," he observes, "The Bible, the Word of God—I beg your pardon—the Bible is not the Word of God. And repeating the words or sentiments of Dr. Horton, who lectured last year at the Union Theological Seminary, I charge any man who calls the Bible the Word of God to find that phrase, 'the Word of God,' ever employed in the Bible to designate the Bible, or ever employed in one part of the Bible to designate any other part."

Digitized by Google

Here is a shepherd apologizing to his flock for calling the Bible the "Word of God," and, it seems, he is not alone in his vicious notions. Now we can extract a crumb of comfort from this prevalence of scepticism. Professors, divines, and religious writers, condemn our views as everything that is bad;—unspiritual, unscriptural, narrow, and so on. But what is their opinion worth? The value of evidence depends on the character of the witness, although the witness may kiss the Book most profusely. And seeing that theologians are saturated with error, their rebukes need not disturb us any more than a Bull of the Pope troubles a Protestant.

JOHN SHOOTINGHAM.

THE COLONIZATION OF AFRICA.—A NEW BRITISH EXPEDITION.

AMONG the passengers on board the steamship Athenian, which left Southampton on Saturday afternoon for South Africa, was Captain L. F. Spring, Civil Commissioner and Resident Magistrate in the Mozambique Company's territory, and leader of the expedition which is being sent out to colonise a large tract of country in that region. A representative of Reuter's Agency interviewed Captain Spring on board shortly before the vessel's departure. Captain Spring spoke in glowing terms of the geographical conditions and natural resources of the country, and in reply to questions as to the attitude of the native population he said he feared no opposition whatever. The advantages accruing to the natives from the works already in progress at Manica and the construction of the Beira railway have, he said, reconciled them to the advent of the white man. The reigning potentate of the region, Gungunbana, is by no means the buffoon that many African chiefs are generally supposed to be. He is a level-headed man, though somewhat spoilt by the various conflicting parties with whom he has come in contact. Two of his children are at this moment in school at Lisbon. As to

THE IMPORTATION OF ARMS INTO AFRICA,

Captain Spring said he would sooner trust a native with a gun than with an assegai, and the better the class of gun the less likely are the natives to have suitable ammunition. Two ladies, Mrs. Spring and Mrs. Garrard, are accompanying the expedition. Mr. Claude Hamilton, who was with Captain Spring formerly in East Africa, has gone on to enrol native servants and police. After picking up this advance party at Delagoa Bay, said Captain Spring, we proceed to Beira, where we disembark on May 29. We shall want at least 300 native porters to carry our loads from the coast and our party will include a contingent of 12 native police. On arriving at Beira we may proceed up the Sabi River in our steam launch as far as possible, and then continue our journey in native canoes, or we may follow the route of the Beira Railway, or again, we may make a direct beeline from the coast; but all these arrangements can only be finally settled on our arrival on the coast. Thence we must make the best of our way to the scene of operations, and we hope in a short time to be able to tell the people of England that we have established townships, telegraphs, and railways, with their attendant advantages.—From the Ashton-under-Lyne Weekly Herald, of April 22nd, 1893.

CLOSE OF THE "TIMES OF THE GENTILES."

BY MISS BELL.

THE period called the "times of the Gentiles" commenced A.M. 3,376½, with the third Babylonian empire, under Nebuchadnezzar. "Thou art the head of gold" (Dan. ii. 38, last clause). It was to continue for "seven times"—i.e., 2,520 years—which will expire A.M. 5,896, or A.D. 1898½. A "time" in Scripture is 360 years; seven times 360 is 2,520.

The Babylonian empire lasted 90 years, the Medo-Persian 200 years, the Grecian 304 years, the Roman 666 years; total 1,260 years: "a time, times, and half a time," with which terms we are familiar in Daniel.

This brings us up to 4,363½, at which times the Saracens entered Jerusalem, and the Mahommedan power has continued ever since, but will come to an end at the close of the second half of "seven times," or 1,260 years, which will terminate the 2,520 years, in 5,896, or A.D. 1898½, when Gentile domination over Palestine will cease. "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled."

There was also a period of "seven times" (2,520 years) of punishment for the Jews (Lev. xxvi. 24, 28), which period began thirty years later than the Gentiles' "seven times" with the captivity. This Jewish "seven times" will, therefore, run on thirty years after Gentile domination ceases; and inasmuch as the heavenly messenger was commissioned to inform Daniel that there would be a further period of thirty-five years, the whole waiting time for Judah will be seventy-five years beyond 1898½ before the millennium is floated in. This is expected to be the time of the apocalyptic judgments. The whole is beautifully and clearly explained in a little pamphlet (3d.) called, "The New Era At Hand" (28, Paternoster-row).

The facts stated above are the result of the most wonderful discovery of the age, the "Eclipse Cycles," and are based on the movements of the heavenly bodies, not on the opinions of anyone. The sun, moon, and stars are Jehovah's chronometer; they have told their story, and it remains now only to spread the news far and wide, and let Israel praise the Lord that her restoration is so near at hand!

As a wish was expressed in the BANNER of the 24th for the information when the "times of the Gentiles" would end, and the desire is a very general one, Miss Bell sends the information to Philo-Israel with the hope he may be able to make some use of it. The facts and dates may be relied upon as trustworthy.

COL. A. O. MOLESWORTH ON OUR IDENTITY.

IN our article on the above subject, published on pp. 341 and 342 of the BANNER of July 12 last (No. 863), we were unable, by reason of absence from home when the paper was written and published, to give the correct dates when the letters of the secretaries of the Jews' Society and of the Church Missionary Society respectively appeared in the BANNER. We have now looked up the volumes of this journal, and are able to state that the first letter we published was from the secretary of the Jews' Society, dated June 20, 1887. It appeared in Vol. XI. of the BANNER, No. 553, Aug. 3, 1887. The second, from the Church Missionary Society secretary, the Rev. F. E. Wigram, dated May 7, 1888, was published on June 6, 1888, page 229 of the BANNER, No. 597. In the last the rev. secretary spoke of "the very essential services which we had been enabled to render to the society" as a reason for adding our name to the list of the hundred "honorary governors for life."

In regard to the Jews' Society, the Rev. W. T. Gidney was instructed by the London Society to say that our help to the cause had been "good and valuable for many years," and that, therefore, the committee had resolved to enter our name on the list of "the few life governors," "a distinction reserved for those who have rendered most essential service in the cause." We think it important to notice these testimonies, ab extra, in order to prove to lecturers and writers like Col. Molesworth that zeal for the Identity is quite consistent with zeal for the missionary cause, whether it be in respect to the conversion of the Jews or of the Gentiles. It is only for this reason we have been induced to draw attention to this matter. We hope our readers will clearly understand that our object is not that vain-glory may be gratified in our case, but that God's glory may be secured by showing that such objectors as the Colonel are wrong.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—The Southern Cross has again indulged in a little pitiful ridicule with regard to Anglo-Israelites and their literature. This led to a brief correspondence of which I send you clippings; also another letter in reply to "A Gentile Christian," which the Editor did not see fit to print. Wishing you every blessing,

I am, with much respect, yours truly,
F. J. ANNEAR.

126, Toorak-road, South Yarra, April 17, 1893.

"The Anglo-Israel theory, which declares the English-speaking race to be the 'Lost Tribes' lies, for the most part, outside the realm of human respect, and its literature is, generally speaking, worthy only of a lunatic asylum. But the theory has gained an exceptionally respectable adherent in the person of the Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, who has accepted the position of vice-president of the British Anglo-Israel Association.

"Mr. Pearse, we are informed, 'has been studying the subject for some years, and his opinions in favour of the identity of the British nation with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel was confirmed as one result of his observations during his recent tour through the Australasian colonies.' It would be interesting to know what was the exact feature of colonial life which convinced Mr. Mark Guy Pearse that the British race is a mere branch of the Semite family. It is difficult to decide whether the Anglo-Israel fad will gain, or Mr. Mark Guy Pearse himself lose, most of the respect of mankind by the incident here reported."

THE ANGLO-ISRAEL THEORY.

"To the Editor of 'The Southern Cross.'

"DEAR SIR,—The first item in your brevities in issue of 17th inst. draws attention to the above subject, in connection with the acceptance of the position of vice-president of the above society by the Rev. Mark Guy Pearse.

"It is couched in a style of language seldom seen in The Southern Cross. Moreover, it is insulting and untrue as to facts. As a large number of Christian men and women can testify that their thoughts of God and His holy Word have been deepened and intensified since they have been brought to acknowledge this truth, they now have cause to bless God for His unspeakable mercy to them as sinners, and are able to rejoice in a covenant-keeping God who has not 'cast away His people.'

"The Rev M. G. Pearse being still outside of 'a lunatic asylum,' will, no doubt, be quite able to give the writer ample reasons for his convictions touching this great truth, 'which, after some years of study,' he has been compelled to acknowledge in so public and spirited a manner. The writer may dismiss his fears about the great loss which M. G. Pearse may incur 'by this incident.' It is a libel on 'mankind' to infer a loss of 'most of the respect' previously held by the rev. gentleman as the result of the 'incident' here reported. It will certainly be a sad day for 'mankind' when our pastors and teachers are restrained from declaring the whole counsel of God because there 'is a lion in the street.'

"To conclude, we Anglo-Israelites believe the Scriptures to be God's inspired Word. We see many promises fulfilled, and know that the rest are in course of fulfilment, or are yet to be accomplished; we rejoice that we can see a literal and faithful fulfilment of the promises made to Ephraim and Manasseh (Gen. xlviii.) in the English-speaking people; we further testify to all our brethren in Christ that we go to the study of God's Word with a pleasure and receive blessing in a greater degree than ever before; and above all reasons for or against, let me say that this 'literature' has been the means of bringing some of my friends to study the Word, and to-day they are rejoicing in sins forgiven; by faith in a risen and glorified Saviour others have been made strong against doubts from within and without, being now stronger in the faith than ever before.

"I submit that such results merit a very different treatment to that given. If the writer has any error to expose by all means put it in print. The editor of the BANNER OF ISRAEL would be quite pleased to hear from someone with a good lance to break. "Yours, &c.,

"JOHN MACFARLANE.

"Petersham, N.S.W."

"ANGLO-ISRAEL TRUTH.

"To the Editor of 'The Southern Cross.'

"DEAR SIR,—In your last issue 'A Gentile Christian' being an opponent, takes up the lament over the 'falling away' of the Rev. Mark Guy Pearse to 'Anglo-Israelism'—the belief held by those who see in the Anglo-Saxon peoples the lineal descendants of the Lost Ten Tribes. Your correspondent has 'always considered this truth a sort of craze,' though he has known several Anglo-Israelites 'eminent in the Church for their learning as well as for their piety—'serious people,' moreover—Mark Guy Pearse, for instance,—being the embodiment to him of all that is 'fair, square, honest, and sincere.' As these 'truly pious' persons have come to the conclusion they have, and 'A Gentile Christian' cannot possibly have a better equipment than he credits them with the possession of—'learning, piety, honesty, sincerity,' &c.—for dealing with such a question, may not the idea be reasonably entertained that they are, after all, in the right? Your correspondent writes as if the works of Edward Hine constituted the entire literature of Anglo-Israel truth, or were the classics of the same; this is a mistake too often made. I would refer those interested to a few of the standard works on the subject—viz., 'British-Israel Truth: A Handbook,' Bishop Titcomb's 'Anglo-Israel Post-Bag' and 'A Message to the Church from the Nineteenth Century,' 'Israel: A Thesis' (by Rev. D. Hanan, D.D.), 'The Fulness of the Nations' (by Dr. H. Alder-Smith).

Regarding the 'utter confusion' of Mr. Hine by Mr. Robert Roberts, there may be differences of opinion; but, suppose we grant the truth of the statement, is anyone foolish enough to allow the 'routing' in debate of a champion (in no sense accredited) is, of necessity, the deathblow to a cause? Reasoning on this principle, Christianity itself should have been defunct long before this on account of the number of alleged death-blows dealt to it.

"With regard to the Rev. Mr. Wilkinson, his 'refutations' of Anglo-Israel truth have been dealt with over and over again, notably by Mr. Douglas Onslow in 'Israel: A Reality.' God's Word leads us to expect that Israel in the latter days should be found a great and mighty nation; a nation and company of nations; a Christian people; remarkably populous and fast increasing; possessing the Gate of his enemies; a maritime nation, dwelling in islands; a great military power; a means of blessing to all other nations, blossoming and budding and filling the face of the earth with fruit; a wealthy nation, lending to many nations but borrowing from none; ruling over many nations, but never ruled over by them; a Sabbath-keeping nation; God's witnesses, &c., &c.

"Now, Mr. Editor, almost all the features enumerated are visible in the picture you painted of Britain in your admirable 'Notes of Travel' (Southern Cross, Feb. 12 and 19, 1892) which concluded thus: 'It is a matter of visible certainty that to our race is given, by God's providence, a quite unique and lofty place in the modern world, and our Empire over so many lands and such vast races is a divine trust; it is built on the discharge of a divine duty. Our race is in its rough, unconscious, imperfect fashion, the instrument and servant of Christ's Gospel to non-Christian nations. This is the true function and explanation of what the newspapers call "Greater Britain."' Earlier in your article you said: 'All human history has a divine meaning, and the history of England, in relation to the world at large, is so striking that a thoughtful mind may well speculate as to the Divine purpose for which Great Britain has been given its present position.' Anglo-Israel truth explains that position, and is rewarded with much abuse and termed a 'craze.'

"Anglo-Israelites believing that God's purposes are being carried out by the people to whom the promises were made, claim that their teaching has made plain many portions of Scripture hitherto obscure, and made God's faithfulness manifest in a way not possible before.

"Apologising for length of letter, and thanking you for past favours, "I am, yours truly,

"F. J. ANNEAR.

"South Yarra, March 28, 1893."

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—Here I am again after my eighteenth continental trip. I was more than ever surprised at the extraordinary advance of the English language all along the line, and at the persistency of many utter strangers entering freely into conversation with me in my mother tongue, evidently with the object of improving themselves in the knowledge of English. As for the shopkeepers, servants, and railway employés, one feels quite at home, and year by year this desire to speak English seems to increase more and more.

I have to thank the British-Israel Association Council for sending me a badge. I shall value it and wear it. It is in every way a most appropriate expression of Our Identity. May we all prove faithful witnesses to the Holy One of Israel our King, and to the truthfulness of God's covenant confirmed with our father Abraham by an oath. Our relation to God is of the most intimate and loving character, and His Word is to us most precious.

With kind regards,

Yours truly, H. L. BLORE.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—In his sermon on Prophecy, re-produced on pages 317—319 of the BANNER OF ISRAEL, Dr. Wild makes the following statement with reference to Professor Totten—"And so the Roman Catholic Church has been the cause of his dismissal from the lieutenancy." This is an error on the rev. doctor's part, as will be seen by a perusal of Judge E. C. Bronaugh's letter to the editor of The Telegram, reproduced on p. 3 of "Totten's Midsummer Extra" for this year, and of which the following is an extract, which I give for the benefit of those of your readers who do not possess the "Midsummer Extra":—"The Telegram is also mistaken in stating that Professor Totten was compelled to surrender the chair of military tactics at Yale. . . . The fact is that he filled, to the entire satisfaction of the Government, the full term for which he was detailed as military instructor at Yale, was then granted a furlough of three months, at his own request, . . . and at the expiration thereof he voluntarily resigned his commission in the army, in order that he might pursue his literary studies and labours" (the italics are mine). I remember myself, seeing in the pages of the Illustrated American—a paper by no means friendly to Prof. Totten—a notice to the effect that the lieutenant had voluntarily sent in his resignation, and that it had been accepted. Would it be too much to ask you, in justice to Prof. Totten, to insert this letter in the BANNER?

Believe me, yours very sincerely,

G. VICARS BROWN.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—I am a believer in the Identity of the people of this United Kingdom, and of our company of nations, with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel; and sorry I was to see an article in your valuable paper, to say our work was of Satan. I know we get hard names; but I think Col. Molesworth has made a mistake in saying anything like that. It was said of our Lord that He worked His miracles through Beelzebub, the prince of devils. He told them this: "How can a kingdom stand divided against itself? or how can Satan cast out Satan?" If our Lord had been of Satan He must have done the works of Satan. But we know our Lord was doing His Father's work. If such things were said of our Lord, we, His servant, must expect such said of us. But we know we are doing God's work, and are sons of the living God, and are obeying our elder Brother's command in preaching the Gospel to every creature, and helping to support others doing the same. I am thankful to say I have been a believer of the Identity three years. I have to thank Mr. Marchant, well-known to you, for that. Since then I have been able to understand the Old Testament Scriptures, whereas, before, I used to get in a perfect maze over them. After this, I don't think Col. Molesworth will say our works are of Satan. Hoping you will allow this to appear in your valuable paper the BANNER,

I am, faithfully yours,

G. W. FRIEND.

DIMINISHING ELBOW ROOM.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

SIR,—The following was taken some time ago from a Manchester paper:—

"Dr. Tidy, of Islington, has enlivened his report on the reduction of the death-rate in the largest parish in the United Kingdom by some startling speculations as to what we are coming to if we go on multiplying and replenishing the earth at the present rate. At present in England each man and woman and child has an average elbow room of one and a quarter acres. That allowance decreases every year, for in place of 10,000 persons on Jan. 1st there will be 10,150 on Dec. 31st. If this rate of increase is maintained, in seven generations our population will exceed that of the entire world at the present time, and in twenty generations we shall be 27,220 millions strong—that is to say, we shall fill about twenty worlds as large as the planet in one corner of which we are crowded. Dr. Tidy wants to know where our posterity is to find standing room."

He hails from America, and is quite the sensation of the hour. There was no standing-room anywhere, and as I made to the door I met many coming away. However, I had made up my mind to hear the Doctor, and hear him I did. It seems that the subscribers have a door to themselves; I made for it, and luckily found a chair, which I wedged in under the platform. The Doctor prayed and then we had a sermon about Revelation, containing much that was very effective, if not about his text, at any rate about that mysterious part of Scripture from which the text was taken."

THE SCOURGES IN OUR SIDES AND THE THORNS IN OUR EYES.

THE disgraceful scenes which took place in the House of Commons on the night of Thursday, July 27th, have been described by many eye-witnesses, and it may safely be said have caused shame to British hearts throughout the Empire wherever the unsavoury details have become known. The Pall Mall Gazette of the 28th July published the "personal narratives of twenty-one Members of the House of Commons," each giving the view of the facts as they were themselves cognizant of them. The Irish Nationalists seem to have been the ringleaders in the "shameful scrimmage," but they brought about retaliation, and in the heat of passion others who were not Irishmen joined in the disturbance, which even the strangers in the Gallery hooted and hissed, as a "shame" to the British Parliament.

The only comfort in surveying the miserable circumstance and scene is that the Speaker's presence seemed still to overawe and bring some sort of decency into a demoralised assembly, with shame, we may hope, at the injury it has inflicted on a noble history of centuries duration. How do we account for these things? The introduction of the Irish members into the House without adequate authority to govern and guide them, added to the knowledge that they rule the head of the Government for the moment, compelling him to do their bidding whatever it may be, is the sufficient explanation of the sad spectacle that fills the nation just now with grief unutterable.

The responsibility for the state of things which we deplore is patent to every one. The public time is wasted, Parliament is degraded and demoralised, insulting speeches are made during the sittings without rebuke, followed, as in this instance, by a brawl and disgraceful fight on the floor of the House of Commons. All these things come from the weakness of one man, and he the foremost man in England. We thank God for the House of Lords which will set all this that is wrong right; and we thank God for the appeal to the suffrages of the people, which must sooner or later be made. Then what has been amiss in our Commons House must be remedied, and a firmer hand than that which now feebly grasps it must certainly take the lead among us and rule the turbulent crowd that has, to our great misfortune, been allowed to trample on our national rights and liberties by its tyrannical majority of a little over thirty.

For the misfortunes which we are now bewailing we have no reason to complain. It is part of our Israelitish lot plainly predicted for us in the Word of God. Being Israel we have an enemy left among us, close to us as our sides, exquisitely painful to us as an injury to the apple of the eye. The British being Israel, the South and West Irishmen who represent our Irish fellow-subjects there, hate us with a bitter hatred, because we are the ruling race and presume to govern Ireland. These Irishmen are Phœnician or Fenian Canaanites, and for the reasons stated in Numbers xxxiii. 53, Joshua xxiii. 18, and Judges ii. 3, they cannot cease to be "pricks in our eyes and thorns in our sides" to vex us in the land wherein we dwell." Their proceedings have vexed us in very truth, and they are as painful as "pricks in our eyes," and they are figuratively as "thorns in our sides."

They are worrying, painful, vexatious—very torments inflicted on us literally for sins committed long since but bound to be felt to-day. These vexing troubles are true proofs of our Israelitish origin, since they were predicted to happen to Israel exclusively, and the only nation on the face of the earth which has this teasing, vexing sore is our own.

The Irish are perpetually before us. They prevent the despatch of almost all public business in the House that concerns Great Britain, but insist on every hour being yielded to them for the consideration and redress of Ireland's alleged wrongs. Now they have added to a long series of insults and interruptions by the enormity of a public, disgusting brawl on the floor of the House, when blows were given and received, when members were knocked down by their fellow senators, and the august assembly became a mere bear garden, lost to self-respect.

Surely here is a literal fulfilment enacted before our eyes, of a prophecy affecting Israel and her household enemies, from which we can have no relief till the King comes in power to rid us of our vexing thraldom, and fulfil to us the promise of Zech. xiv. 27. For then in "that day," the day of the Lord's return, "every pot in Jerusalem and in Judah (two different localities be it observed) shall be holiness unto the Lord of Hosts—and all they that sacrifice shall come and take of them and seethe therein, and in that day there shall be no more the Canaanite in the house of the Lord of Hosts." The Canaanite stranger removed from the House of God will, we trust, also be expelled from the Senate of "the people of the saints of the Most High," and then there will be peace at last.

The extraordinary part of the matter is that the vast majority of the people of these islands, to wit, England, Scotland, and Wales, with the North of Ireland, are, by the results of the last general election, placed in a minority by the three and a-half millions of Irish of the South and West in respect to the demand for national separation, which has been the trouble for some years past. The slender majority of 34 enables the Prime Minister to rule this country with a rod of iron. He dispenses with the rules of Parliament, decrees the virtual independence of Ireland, and the taxation of Great Britain to enable the Irish to cast off our hated yoke. He foments our Canaanitish difficulties and sorrows, and does all in the name of liberty, freedom, and loyalty to the Crown and people whom he serves.

The times are critical and dangerous, but the Lord God of Israel reigns and will in His own good time "make darkness light before us and crooked things straight." To Him shall, then, be all the praise, for "He will not forsake us!" (Isa. xlii. 19, R.V.)

CANON BROOKE'S SERMON IN BATH ABBEY ON JULY 6TH, 1893.

THE Bath Chronicle published the following report of the sermon preached in the Abbey Church on the occasion of the late royal wedding by the Rev. Canon Brooke. It is remarkable as containing much which bears upon Our Identity, though the canon, no doubt meant no reference thereto, but merely stated regarding our Empire what is the real truth. Truth honestly stated supports our views, and on this account we deem the canon's sermon good "blind evidence" that the British are Israel. The canon spoke of the British Empire and the Queen's ancient dynasty and throne quite in the terms we should ourselves in the BANNER, and he points to our nation's corresponding responsibilities in language we can all approve. The sermon was thus reported:—

"THE SERMON.

"Canon Brooke preached an appropriate sermon from the following text:—'Give the king thy judgments, O God, and Thy righteousness unto the king's son' (Psa. lxxii. 1). 'Instead of thy fathers shall be thy children, whom thou mayest make princes in all the earth' (Psa. xlv. 16). The preacher said, 'The festal observances and your sympathetic interest of this day are national and spontaneous, and they are the expression of a right feeling and a wise instinct. National, because almost the whole nation and all orders and degrees of men and women within it share in them. Spontaneous, because they are not originated by any royal order or parliamentary action, or ecclesiastical injunction, but are the outcome of voluntary and for the most part independent and unconnected movements in all parts of the Empire. They are the expression of a right feeling of loyalty to the Sovereign who has reigned over us long and well, through whom we have received many and great blessings, and who by her example, by the untiring performance of her exalted duties, by her constant love and never-failing sympathy for all her peoples, both in prosperity and adversity, has endeared herself to all hearts and made all which concerns her, or her family, matter of interest—I had almost said of felt personal interest—to all her subjects. They are connected too with an instinctive feeling which is wise and well founded. The feeling, I mean, that the welfare of ourselves and of those who may come after us is largely bound up with that of the Sovereign to whom shall be entrusted the throne of this Empire, and that the future, political, moral, and religious, of the people of our country may be greatly influenced by the character and conduct of those who are at once the heads of the executive and legislative Government, and the embodiment of the national and social life. The event of this day is, I believe, taking it in all its aspects, unique in the history of England, indeed of nations. The young man and maiden who are this day united in marriage are destined, we hope, in the providence of God, to be in some future, though we trust distant day, the sovereigns of the greatest and most world-wide Empire the world has ever seen. In extent, in variety, in population, in wealth, as I believe, in power and influence on the destinies of many races of mankind, the British Empire exceeds now that of Rome at her greatest, and in comparison with it, all the other great empires of antiquity sink into insignificance. There have never before been heirs of such a kingdom. And more than this our Queen sits upon the throne which has been occupied by her ancestors more or less direct for more than 1,000 years. But never before has any in the long line of her predecessors, having passed the jubilee of his own reign, lived to see the marriage of a grandson in the direct line of the succession. It is right then that we should regard the marriage of this day as of no ordinary significance, and make it a matter of special celebration, and particularly we surely do well to join at this time in this religious service. It is of God alone that kings reign and princes execute judgment. It is He only who can give prosperity to any nation, wisdom to its rulers, and blessing to its people. It becomes us then to thank God for all the prosperity and blessings which He has so long bestowed according to His mercy, and not for any desert of ours, upon this kingdom and nation. It becomes us to thank Him for the Queen whom He has set over us, and for all the benefits which we receive through her or in common with her. We bowed ourselves before Him, when last year a great sorrow fell upon her and national loss, as we felt, upon our country. We rightly praise Him when a more auspicious day dawns and happier hopes arise. And we do well also to make this a time of earnest prayer. It was good advice which was given long since that 'supplications, prayers, and intercessions,' as well as 'giving of thanks' should be made 'for all men,' and specially 'for kings and for all who are in authority, that we may lead a quiet and peacable life in godliness and honesty.' It is of God that ability and grace can be in princes as in other men to do good and well in their vocation and ministry in that station to which it pleases Him to call them. It is His to fit them for their work and to guide and bless them in it. He is a hearer and answerer of prayer, certainly of united and national prayer as well as of that which is personal and private. Let us take up then, brethren, to-day the prayers which I have read as my text out of the royal Psalms of the ancient Church and people of God. The one, as I take it, an accession prayer on behalf of the king's son, who should succeed him. The other a nuptial hymn on the occasion of a royal marriage in the family of David.

"1. 'Give the king thy judgments, O God, and Thy righteousness unto the king's son.' Give to Him, i.e., that all his 'judgments,' all his decisions, and acts of government may be good and right according to Thy will, so that they may be even as Thy judgments; we pray this for the king and for the king's son. For our Queen, who now reigns, for her son who shall come after, and for her son's son for whom our prayers are special to-day. And more 'give to him also,' we pray Thee, 'Thy righteousness,' that inner mind and spirit, that wisdom, that discernment, that goodness, and love of that, and that alone, which is right and true, which is the reflex of the divine righteousness. For this righteousness within, without which none can truly serve his generation by the will of God, for these godly judgments which are the outcome of that righteousness, for these we ask from the God of all grace on behalf of this our future king.

"2. 'Instead of thy fathers shall be thy children, whom thou mayest make princes in all the earth.' Perhaps the Hebrew Psalmist turned here his aspiration into a prediction. Although the Hebrew future may generally be also taken in the imperative or vocative. Certainly we thank God that this blessing has been granted to our Queen, that she, whose succession to the long line of her fathers some of us can well remember, has now her children whom she is permitted to make princes in all lands. And we hope that the impress of her character, her wise devotion to duty, and her Christian virtues may be handed down to them and all her descendants. And we pray also that in their turn the like blessing may be theirs who are this day united, that through them there may never be wanting one of our Sovereign's royal race to sit upon the throne of England and to be the head of a Government seeking and doing that which is right and good, and promoting peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety, for and amongst the generations yet to come. We have thus prayed in our service this morning. We have invoked these and more personal blessings on the heads of these royal heirs of England's throne. And as I have already indicated, in so doing we have been praying for ourselves and our own children and children's children as well as for them. It may be that the direct political power of the Crown, and therefore its influence on the destinies of the nation, are not what they once were in England. No doubt the centre of political gravity has been shifted and now ultimately rests in us the people ourselves. It may be that the Government of the country is now conducted rather in the name than by the direct will of the Sovereign. But yet the power, and still more the influence, of the Crown is very great; for one thing it is ever present and in action; it does not change with ministries or parliaments; it is independent of party. For another there is ever in it an ultimate reserve of power for any great necessity. I believe the benefit to the nation of a wise and good Sovereign was never greater than in our day, never perhaps would the disastrous effect be more felt if (which may God avert) the Throne had ever an unwise or still worse an ungodly occupant. Our prayers then for our Sovereigns, present and future, are prayers for ourselves as a nation. But herein also we have need to pray more directly for ourselves. We have our part in the Government of which our Sovereign is the head. We are the component parts of the nation of whose corporate life the Sovereign is the expression and representative. If as a nation we are to do the great work in the world to which God has called us, our 'judgments,' our national acts must be 'righteous.' If we would have God's blessing to remain with us and our great prosperity not to be diminished (as there are not wanting signs that it may be) or even overthrown, then there must be in us that 'righteousness' which exalteth a nation. It must be ours then, everyone of us, to act conscientiously, honestly, and as in the sight of God; in political matters as members of the Commonwealth, as well as in our private lives and conduct. It must be ours to 'fear God' first and then 'honour the King.' Personal religion acted out in all things is that which needs to be universal amongst us, if indeed we are to be a people fearing God and working righteousness, if we desire that He should bless both us and our princes, and continue His blessing to our children in all the earth. For this may His grace be given to us and to our Queen's sons from generation to generation. It has been the request of the Duke of York and the Princess May themselves that any surpluses which any of the Royal Wedding Present Committees may have in hand should be added to the Mansion House Fund for the widows and orphans of those who have died so nobly, if so sadly, in the loss of the Victoria. I think it will commend itself to all our minds that our offertory to-day should be so allocated.'

INFIDELITY SILENCED.

By Rev. Idrisyn Jones.

"God a God of Truth! Why God promised to Abraham in the most solemn words; He repeated His promise; nay, this Book which reveals the attributes of Almighty God, tells us that God condescended to swear to a weak, puny man that he would establish His kingdom for ever, and that his seed should be as numerous as the sand upon the sea-shore; that promise was reiterated and sworn by God; and I ask where is that kingdom now! Where? Don't tell me that it is meant figuratively; don't tell me that it is not literal. God swore that it should be for ever; He established it, and now it is a thing of the past. You tell me that the God of the Bible always speaks the truth."—Charles Bradlaugh.*

The above quotation forms a part of a discussion between the late Charles Bradlaugh and the Rev. Brewin Grant, at Sheffield, some years ago. From a moral point of view we may rightly condemn the animus of the infidel controversialist against the Bible. He was only too pleased to think that it was an imposture and a lie; he had no sighs to breathe nor tears to drop over its supposed ignominy and disgrace; but with gleesome spirit revelled in its fancied flaws and frauds. Yet from an argumentative point of view his words are a very rampart which the biggest guns of his opponent cannot crumble. He put the case in a series of distinct points:—(1) God promised to Abraham the perpetuity of His kingdom and a prodigious posterity ; (2) He repeated the promise ; (3) He condescended to sustain it by an oath ; (4) The promise was to be literally fulfilled ; (5) He began to put it into operation ; (6) This kingdom and posterity are now things of the past ; (7) The God of the Bible does not, therefore, speak the truth ; (8) It follows that the Bible cannot be the production of the supposed God of the Christian.

Now, granting that his premises are all sound his conclusions are sound also, and the only way in which the Rev. Brewin Grant could dispose of the argument was by showing that the covenant with Abraham was still literally being fulfilled. But this he could not have done because he did not see the fulfilment of it in the history of the British people, as the lineal inheritors of that covenant. Bradlaugh, therefore, alas ! must have felt that his logic was triumphant and that his indictment against the Bible was unanswerable. What a pity ! ! How little he dreamt that the answer to his own argument was contained in his own personal history and in the history of his country ; for he saw not that the "Kingdom of God," which had its centre nineteen centuries ago in Jerusalem, had its centre now in the Isles of the Sea. his own native land ; and that in the phenomenal multiplicity of the Anglo-Saxon people the old promise was working out its sublime fulfilment.

But again we say that if Bradlaugh's premises be granted his conclusions as to the Bible are irrefutable, viz., that it is neither inspired by God or supernatural in its origin. How strange that so many Christian expositors and teachers fail to see it. Let it be remembered that the several promises of the covenant were made by God under the condition of a full foreknowledge of events, and if that covenant is now abolished He must have foreseen it, and so He would have made its duration contingent upon the obedience of the children of Israel ; but He made it by promise and oath to be for ever unconditioned. Then if, as now alleged, it is abrogated and nugatory, how can God be the God of Truth ? With reverence we so put it. But having made it unconditional and unforfeitable (Psalm lxxxix. 29—37) His integrity and honour are bound up with its perpetuity, and the very truth of the Bible is involved in its being so fulfilled. The infidel was right in his deductions but he was wrong in his premise, for Israel is to-day on the stage of earth ; Israel is still a nation, and Israel is so rapidly developing into so prodigious a multitude that we can only find a fitting illustration of the fact in the sand of the seashore and the stars of night, and the infidel is silenced.

What a pity that this precious gleam of light came not athwart his mental darkness. Who can tell what might have been the happy and stupendous issue ? Had Charles Bradlaugh been led to see that the Abrahamic covenant was still in operation, that its every jot and title was thus far being fulfilled, who can tell what the discovery might have done for him ? It would, we think, instantly have sent the Bible up in his esteem and led him to a belief in its supernatural origin ; his ears might have been opened to catch the sweet music of its old story—the story of redeeming love ; it might have led him on to see how truth sparkled in its every page, and that it was the only Book which furnished the key to the mysteries of creation, of man, of Providence, of the present and the future. It might then have spread out before his wondering eye—a Saviour ; —his Saviour in all His sublime proportions ; that Lamb of God who bore away the sin of the world—and the bold infidel might have bent in prayer at the feet of this great Christ, and another champion of the cross have then risen up to preach the Gospel he once sought to destroy: while the final scene in that death chamber of his, instead of being that of a dying infidel, might have been that of the humble Christian, closing his eyes on earthly things amid the inflowing radiance of the celestial city.

How many to-day are prejudiced against the Bible on similar grounds to that of Charles Bradlaugh ? How can they believe in the Book if, to them, it is only the shrine of a dishonoured covenant and of violated promises ? To them it can bring no tidings of salvation and immortality. Let us, then, haste to spread the truth which rescues the Bible from dishonour and from the fiery assaults of infidels. Let us not forget that the destinies of many are trembling in the balance. To such a discredited Bible is no Bible, and if there is no Bible, there is no salvation from sin and death—there is no peace now nor for ever. Oh, ye believers in the integrity of the Abrahamic covenant, haste to tell the perishing, that the Bible is found to be true—for all the promises to Abraham and his descendants are being even to-day gloriously fulfilled.

THE HEBREW ORIGIN OF THE BRITISH FOUNDED ON COINS,

As Discovered by a Clergyman of the Church of England.—By E. Reep.

PART II.

With the common belief that the Jews represent the entire Hebrew race, the Rev. W. Waddilove has no patience. In his opinion it is a supposition nowhere confirmed in the Scriptures. On the contrary, the Bible holds forth a very different truth, an exemplification of which we have in God's promise to make His chosen people the head and not the tail, above and not beneath other nations. Are we to believe, he asks, that when God sent His judgments upon Jerusalem for the cruel iniquity of a part of the descendants of Abraham He withdrew His sworn loving-kindness from the vast mass of Hebrews, among whom were devout men scattered in every nation under heaven, who had neither part nor lot in the wickedness of Calvary? No, the Holy Scriptures lead to a very different conclusion, but through traditional knowledge the Papacy has usurped the place of God's ancient people, and so blinded the world to the real and ultimate purposes of Christ's birth and his mission to Israel.

The restoration of the chosen people, of exiled Israel, to world-wide dominion, their spiritual functions as the true Church, are things, according to our author, that if they had not been hidden by a theory of Gentile supremacy and substitution, would have made vain the idolatrous efforts of the Roman hierarchy and the workings of Satan in perverting the truth. For whatever time British-Israel ignores her Hebrew identity, so long will she encourage the blasphemous system of Rome. Acknowledge that identity, and the whole corrupt organization falls to ruin. As Israel obedient, all the people of the earth shall see that she is called (not Rome) by the name of the Lord (Deut. xxviii.).

A symbol that is of marked service in tracing the wanderings of the Israelite tribes consists in the Duo Gæsa or two spears, which was also a distinguishing emblem of the inhabitants of Etruria, and is to be seen on a Judæan medal of Titus A.D. 80. Coins of Macedonia, of Thessaly, of the Bruttii, of the Dacians, of the Gauls, of the Scandinavians, of tribes in Spain as well as certain mountain tribes, who rallied to the standard of Genseric king of the Vandals, showing that the Duo Gæsa had called forth communities of kindred blood, all exhibit the self-same symbol. The universal spread of this emblem cannot, it is affirmed, be the work of accident. It must and does afford evidence of the dispersion of the Hebrew people whose general adoption of it caused the Roman hierarchy to make a mysterious use of it, thus again incurring the guilt of them who say they are Jews and are not (Rev. ii. 9).

The combination of the two spears with the triangle has been used by the Church of Rome for political purposes. Hence Irish coins from Henry II. to Edward I. portray the monarch's head enclosed in a triangle, this figure signifying the subjection of the island kingdom to the Papacy—i.e., to the occupant of the chair of St. Peter, who sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself (by the symbol of the triangle) that He is God (2 Thess. ii. 4).

The perverted use of the triangle emblem had, too, its place in India, in Siva worship, where it may have been introduced as the Rabbinical symbol of the shield of Abraham (Gen. xv. 1).

Allen's "Modern Judaism" is said to show it in perpetual use as a charm among the Jews. In Egypt, in the mysteries of Isis, in Greece, in the mysteries of Eleusis and of Delphos, it was a device associated with occult ritual, whereof St. Paul appears to speak when he says, "For the invisible things of God are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even His eternal power and Godhead, so that they who hold the truth in unrighteousness are without excuse. Because that, when they knew God, they glorified Him not as God, but became vain in their imaginations and their foolish heart was darkened. Professing themselves to be wise, they became fools (Rom. i.). "And yet for all that," is the divine promise, "when they (Israel) be in the land of their enemies, I will not cast them away to break My covenant with them, for I am the Lord their God."

The posterity of repentant Ephraim being destined to become the bulwark of Scriptural truth, and that in a place prepared for them (Hos. ii. 13—23), it is of interest to notice on ancient Celtic coins the symbol of the Branch, which also appears in the hand of Britannia on old British coins. The emblem was adopted by Charles II. at the restoration of the monarchy, and seems to have been connected with the words of Jeremiah, "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a king shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth." That the establishment of the kingdom of the Branch and the union of the two Hebrew kingdoms represented by the Duo Gæsa, or two spears (see Two Sticks of Ezekiel xxxvii.), should have figured on the emblems of the Cymry and other Celtic communities, speaks for the preservation among the Druids of an esoteric knowledge of the types intended to embalm for all time, and in all lands, the identity of a seed in whom God will be glorified and all nations blessed.

Between the North and South of Ireland there has existed always, Mr. Waddilove believes, a wide distinction not of race, for the war-cry in the two districts is a case of Manasseh ravaging Ephraim and Ephraim Manasseh;* but of religious belief and practice. How such sacerdotal differences, &c., first asserted themselves is disclosed in the Bible account of the two ecclesiastical systems that prevailed in Palestine.

At the time the Ten Tribes formed themselves into a kingdom, independent of Judah, Jeroboam, though rejecting Levites for his priests, still adhered to a part of Judah's ritual, but to maintain a distinction between the two kingdoms he altered the time for observing the ordinances he wished to imitate. As we read in 1 Kings xii., "Jeroboam ordained a feast in the eighth month (instead of the seventh), on the fifteenth day of the month, like unto the feast that is in Judah, and he offered upon the altar. So he offered upon the altar which he had made in Bethel . . . even in the month which he had devised of his own heart, and ordained a feast unto the children of Israel."

Some idea of the diversity of opinion which would be produced by such ceremonial innovations may be gathered from the denunciations passed between the British and Anglo-Saxon communities of Bede's day. It was not any racial animosity that prompted Celt and Saxon to hate each other, but a difference of conviction as to the proper time for the canonical observance of Easter and the right style of tonsure. On these two points revolved the same kind of hostility that divorced the sons of Zadok from the priests of Bethel and Dan.

Heresy and schism alone fully account for the habit of tribe vexing tribe wherever the House of Israel and the House of Judah have been scattered. But, despite their perversions of truth, the days will come—the last days, as Isaiah calls them—that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow unto it (Isa. ii. 2).

As regards the days in which we are living, Mr. Waddilove ventures to think they are described in Isa. xxix., "And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed, which men deliver to one that is learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee; and he saith, I cannot, for it is sealed. And the book is delivered to him that is not learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee; and he saith, I am not learned. Wherefore the Lord said, "Forasmuch as this people draw near Me with their mouth, and with their lips do honour Me, but have removed their heart far from Me, and their fear toward Me is taught by the precept of men: therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvellous work among this people, even a marvellous work and a wonder: for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid. Therefore thus saith the Lord, who redeemed Abraham, concerning the House of Jacob, Jacob shall not now be ashamed, neither shall his face now wax pale. But when he seeth his children, the work of Mine hands, in the midst of him, they shall sanctify My name, and sanctify the Holy One of Jacob, and shall fear the God of Israel. They also that erred in spirit shall come to understanding, and they that murmured shall learn doctrine." To each one of us these words should be taken greatly to heart, for indeed the vision is sealed through the precepts of men. We want no further proof of it than what we read of the revival of the "Anglo-Roman" hierarchy in this country. The mystery of iniquity is at work, and is as active to-day as it was when it prompted wandering Israel to make the similitude of God and name Him Father Neptune, even bringing to their service the imagery of the sacred Scriptures to make their confusion worse confounded. This is seen in the representation of Neptune seated in his chariot rising from the sea, originally designed to illustrate the imagery of the prophets: "Thou didst walk through the sea with thine horses, through the heap of great waters" (Hab. iii. 15). "Thou rulest the raging of the sea. . . . Thy way is in the sea and Thy path in the great waters" (Psa. lxxvii.). "And all the gold of the sea under Him is as an immense quantity of clay. He makes the deep boil like a brazen cauldron: He reckons the deep as His range" (Job xli. 31, 32. See Septuagint Version).

Roman Catholics are rejoicing in the religious liberty of British rule. The Roman pontiff is said to regard England as an important factor in his world-wide policy. Let him beware, and England too, for the vision is sealed, and it is not yet known who is the real heir of the world except to a few despised babes and sucklings.

THE GOLD COAST COLONY.—ITS TRADE AND RESOURCES.

THE following lecture was delivered some time ago in Liverpool, and reported in one of the local papers there. The subject is of interest to Anglo-Israelites, as proving the value and wealth of the Empire, the means God has given us, in even these unhealthy and inhospitable regions, of "getting wealth" according to the prophecies (Deut. viii. 18). There are several points in the lecture which will occur to our readers as important, especially the references made to the liquor traffic, and the satisfactory statement that British merchants and ships export but little of the poison to the Gold Coast, while the guilty nations are the United States, France, and Germany.

Again, the cry is for the "iron horse," as the sole cure (humanly speaking) for African woes. On the Gold Coast the same want is expressed as in Uganda; and Africa appeals to Israel to let her have the railways which have done so much for Europe and India, in order that she may be able to commence her upward course towards civilization, Christianity, prosperity and national happiness. The report of the lecture was to the following effect:—

"GOLD COAST COLONY.—ITS TRADE AND RESOURCES.

"At the invitation of the African Trade section of the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Hesketh J. Bell, F.R.G.S. (senior assistant treasurer at the Gold Coast), attended at the board-room of the chamber yesterday, and delivered an address on 'The History, Trade, Resources, and the Present Condition of the Gold Coast Settlement.' Mr. Ellis Edwards (chairman of the section) presided, and there was a fair attendance.

"The chairman remarked that Mr. Bell had already gained repute as an author, and during the last three or four years he had held various offices on the Gold Coast, which had given him the opportunity of acquiring much knowledge of the country. Liverpool had a large present and prospective interest in the colony, whose revenue had rapidly increased since 1889. There had been a surplus of revenue over expenditure in the last ten years of £80,000 to £90,000, and the present surplus was reckoned at about £40,000 per annum. The shipping entered and cleared in the colony had also more than doubled in the same period, and Liverpool people were therefore anxious that this improvement should be steadily maintained, which could only happen if attention were given to develop trade with the hinterlands by making roads, bridges, and railways.

"The lecturer said that the Gold Coast, on account of its great mineral and other natural wealth, was so valuable a possession that its welfare and future development were well worthy of the mother country's notice. The colony possessed a seaboard of nearly four hundred miles in extent. There was no doubt that, generally speaking, the coast line of the Gulf of Guinea was one of the most unhealthy places in the world; but, on the other hand, it had frequently been almost as much sinned against as sinning. The death-rate among Europeans, though still very high, even when compared with that of other inter-tropical countries, was not nearly so great as it used to be, and this must be attributed to the greater care and sobriety practised by the class of men who now go out to the Gold Coast. It was generally accepted that a fair estimate of the number of inhabitants of the colony with its adjacent sphere of influence was between one million and a million and-a-half. The people were a fine hardy race, but although for the most part models of muscular development, the natives of the seaboard are unfortunately lazy, and seldom willing to work, except under very strong inducement. This marked aversion to work was a great bar to the speedy development of the settlements, and notwithstanding the presence of large numbers of able-bodied unemployed natives, the factories on the coast of Guinea were obliged to import annually several thousand labourers from the Kru Coast. Missionaries of various denominations had done their best for many years to improve the condition of the people, and a great many schools had been established by them in the different districts of the Gold Coast. These worthy and self-sacrificing men had done much good, and the fruit of their labours was beginning to be apparent. Dealing with the question of trade, he defended the policy of establishing British authority in Africa. Owing to the unfavourable climate the British possessions in the Gulf of Guinea could never hope to become colonies in the usual acceptance of the term. As these countries could never be considered as a suitable field for British emigration, the only value which attached to their possession lay in the amount of trade which could be promoted and fostered, by our influence, between them and the British markets. The seaboard of the Gold Coast was the natural outlet for trade of the rich and fertile region which stretched away northward, towards the interior, for a thousand miles; this great extent of country, though not very thickly populated, nevertheless contained many millions of inhabitants who would one day become important consumers of European manufactures. At present, owing to want of proper means of communication and transport, the trade of the Gold Coast penetrated but little further than the confines of the protectorate, and the cost of carriage being so great, European manufactured goods became prohibitively dear at only a short distance from the seaboard. Notwithstanding these difficulties and the lack of proper means of transport, the trade of the Gold Coast represented an important figure. The value of the imports into the colony in 1891, was £666,463, and that of the exports £626,852, showing a grand total of over one million and-a-quarter sterling. A comparison of the figures for each of the last ten years revealed a very remarkable progress in the value of the colony's trade. In 1881 the exports from the Gold Coast were valued at £373,000 odd, while in 1891 their value was estimated at nearly double that sum. The same ratio was also to be noticed in the increased value of imports, and roughly speaking, the statistics showed that the Gold Coast trade had more than doubled itself in ten years. The principal articles imported into the Gold Coast are spirits, cotton goods, specie, tobacco, and gunpowder. The trade in spirits had increased more rapidly than that of any other article of import, and in six years had almost doubled itself. In 1886 the total quantity of gin and rum landed in the settlement amounted to 601,631 gallons, valued at £65,528; in 1891 the imports were 1,190,373 gallons, valued at £109,000. These figures had an imposing, and, perhaps, not a pleasant sound, but he showed that the quantity of spirits drunk per head of the population was less than that in Great Britain. The 1,200,000 gallons of spirits was really distributed among three or four million negroes, and it could hardly do any very great amount of harm, more especially when they considered that it took two or three times as much alcohol to inebriate a negro as it did a white man. There was far less drunkenness on the Gold Coast than there was in Great Britain, and the sight of a man in a hopelessly intoxicated condition was very rare. To get really drunk would cost a native more than he could often afford, and it was well-known on the coast that the only natives who could drink to excess were the chiefs and other men of means. He, however, did not defend the evil, but merely endeavoured to show that the evil, whatever it be, already done, was not so great as the outcries would lead one to fear and suppose. He was the less inclined to defend the liquor traffic on the Gold Coast for the reason that British trade at present derived very little benefit from it. Rum and gin were imported from foreign countries—the United States, France, and Germany; the liquor was carried mostly by foreign ships, and was principally sold on the coast by alien factories. Of the total imports of the settlement, however, about two-thirds came from the United Kingdom, the remainder being supplied by the United States, Germany, France, and Holland. There were virtually no native manufactures, and the whole exports of the colony were simply the natural products of the soil collected by the natives, without care, cultivation, or industry. The principal items were rubber, palm oil, and kernels, gold, timber, and monkey skins. Dealing with these in detail, the lecturer remarked on the extraordinary growth of the rubber trade. Unhappily, owing to the unreasoning greed of the natives of the interior, it was feared that the rubber trade had already reached its highest point of prosperity. In their eagerness to carry down a large quantity of rubber to the coast, the bush people were not satisfied by the mere process of tapping the trees and vines, but in order to obtain a larger quantity of the juice at once, the trunks themselves were often hewn down so as to produce a greater immediate yield. Palm oil was always considered as the mainstay of the trade of the coast; but it was estimated that at least 25 per cent. of its value was lost through the imperfect means used in extracting the oil from the nuts. As to the palm kernels, which mostly went to Marseilles and Hamburg, an enormous quantity was wasted owing to the great cost of carriage. At least a quarter of a million of monkeys were slaughtered every year on the coast for their skins. As to cotton the governor had done his best to encourage its cultivation, but the indolence of the population, and the lack of transport facilities, would act for some time as bars to the planting of cotton on any considerable scale. The exportation of mahogany and other timber was very large, but as in the case of rubber it would soon, owing to the greed and shortsightedness of the natives, reach its highest point. Speaking of gold, he said that the disastrous endings of many of the Gold Coast mining ventures were due rather to mismanagement than to the fact that the wealth of the country had been over-rated. The reports of every competent person who visited the districts confirmed the statement that gold was to be found in abundance. All over the country the soil was honeycombed by shallow pits dug by natives who had washed the surface soil for alluvial gold. These pits were from six to twenty feet deep, but the blacks being ignorant of the processes of tunnelling, pumping, or shoring up, were obliged to abandon them as soon as a certain depth was reached, or when water was found to filter through the soil. The climate of the gold districts rendered the usual methods of gold digging by Europeans quite impracticable. No white man could perform with impunity the hard manual labour required in working a claim on the lines followed in the South African or Australian gold fields. The only way accordingly in which the precious metal can be obtained in considerable quantities, entails the employment of negro labour by regularly organised companies. One of the reasons why such companies had failed, was that the mines were situated at considerable distances from the sea coast, in a country totally unprovided with railways, roads, or means of carriage for the transport of the heavy machinery required. All the difficulties and drawbacks connected with the trade of the coast pointed to the overwhelming necessity for the 'iron horse' in West Africa. It was quite unnecessary to enumerate all the magnificent results which followed the track of the iron rails. Pushing a line of light railway into the great oil and rubber producing districts would be like driving a shaft into the very heart of the thickest vein of a gold mine. The arid unproductive stretch of land between the coast line and the fertile districts would be crossed in a few hours, and the European factor would be placed in immediate contact with the native trader. (Applause.)

"AS FOR US ENGLISHMEN."

By J. Thomson.

PART II.

Our readers will agree with us that this is, so far, pretty good evidence from our "blind witness." It will be noticed that the majority of those he mentions in this brief list are Hebrews and British; and there can be no doubt that the greatest and most sublime figures in history will be found to belong to the same race. But our author has an even more interesting division on the mission of nations, where he remarks that "the action of divine providence in history is yet further seen in the position and destiny of nations: here also we learn how God has not forsaken us."

Our author is evidently a patriotic Englishman, and ascribes all to the good providence of God overruling all events. He says, "At first it appears strange and unlikely that the families of the earth should be separated by mountains and oceans, and still more by diversity of speech. Why, since men have common interests, and common aims, was not the earth laid out as one vast plain, and mankind gathered together in its centre? Natural separation is of divine appointment, and has fulfilled divine ends in the progress of humanity." We are somewhat surprised our author does not quote any Biblical authority for this statement. Besides the history of Babel (Gen. xi. 1—9), we have the remarkable passage in Deut. xxxii. 8, 9, which refers to the same thing—the design of God in scattering mankind, which was a part of His plan in the history of our race: "When the Most High divided to the nations their inheritance, when he separated the sons of Adam, He set the bounds of the people according to the number of the children of Israel. For the Lord's portion is His people; Jacob is the lot of His inheritance." From all this it is evident that nothing has occurred, or ever will occur at haphazard. Though unknown, and unthought-of by the ken of man, the future can bring with it nothing which has not been seen and provided for beforehand, by the Omniscient Being who sees all things, even the end from the beginning.

To proceed with our author. "A separate place has been given to each people for the free development of its own powers, and each has brought in its hand, or its head, or its heart, some necessary contribution to mankind as a whole. It would appear at the outset as if there had been a sharing-out among the nations of intellectual powers. Hence Schlegel was led to regard the loss of the divine image as consisting in the separation of the powers of the human mind; and in harmony with this idea he speaks of the Chinese as representing the pure reason; the people of India the imagination; the Egyptians the understanding; and the Jews the will; each in their distorted isolation. Now, however this may be, it is clear that the various branches of the race have contributed different elements toward the final prosperity and development of the whole. National separation seems to have been as necessary to the progress of humanity"—i.e., in its present "fallen" state, we should say—"as division of labour is to the perfection of industry. Every race has had its peculiar gift and special vocation. Egypt, building as if for eternity, gave to the world the conception of material force. India bequeathed philosophy to man, teaching the power of the imagination, and reminding man of 'that imperial palace whence he came.' Persia brought out in strong relief the mighty influence of good and evil. Chaldea, impressed by their loveliness as they globed themselves in the Eastern night, taught men the mystery and glory of the stars. Phœnicia made the sea the highway of the nations, teaching the inhabitants of distant countries to exchange their productions, and thus, through commerce, to enrich the globe. Palestine stood forth as the 'sacred school for all the world, of the knowledge of God, and of the spiritual life.' Greece taught men the beauty of the world, and of the human form, and through the love of that beauty created the artist. Rome gave to the nations social and civil law, and exemplified the assimilating power of a strong, all-subduing civilization. Italy revived letters, and taught the world the entrancing power of song. Spain led the van of discovery and conquest. Germany gave the Reformation to the world, and reinstated the long-suppressed rights of reason and conscience."

Thus far the reader's first thought would be, And where is England to come in after all these? Has there been no work for her to do? Indeed, has she not had a share, more or less, in all the work here divided among the other nations? But our author has reserved the best (like the "good wine" of the feast) to the share of the last.

Let us note carefully what our author goes on to say. Every word is pregnant with meaning, and yet he seems to feel a difficulty in finding words sufficiently expressive; almost every one which he uses points out evidence of the Identity:—"As for us Englishmen, we are the heirs of all the ages"*—but St. Paul says, "the promise that he should be the heir of the world was to Abraham" (Rom iv. 13);—"we are 'those on whom the ends of the earth are come,' and our mission seems to be to gather up into our national life all the forces which have shaped the past, and project them into the future, with special reference to distant and heathen nations." Speaking in the name of Jehovah, the prophet again and again says of Israel, "Thou art My servant in whom I will be glorified" (Isa. xliv. 1, 2, 21; xlix. 1—3, 5—12). And again, "This people have I formed for Myself, they shall show forth My praise" (xliii. 21), evidently indicating that Israel was to be foremost in every good work; thus showing forth the praise and glory of God.

Our author goes on, "It is ours, in conjunction with our brethren across the Atlantic"—i.e., with Manasseh, and not with any of the other Gentile nations above named—to teach mankind how to subdue the earth, and to develop its resources for the comfort and happiness of all." But according to the same unerring prophetic testimony, it is Israel, and not any Gentile nation, that is to "blossom and bud and fill the face of the world with fruit" (Isa. xxvii. 6). "And they shall build the old wastes, they shall raise up the former desolations, and they shall repair the waste cities, the desolations of many generations. . . . Ye shall be named the priests of the Lord; men shall call you the ministers of our God; ye shall eat the riches of the Gentiles, and in their glory shall ye boast yourselves. . . . And their seed shall be known among the Gentiles, and their offspring among the people; all that see them shall acknowledge them, that they are the seed which the Lord hath blessed" (Isa. lxi. 4, 6, 9).

Our author goes on to testify: "Like those of the Phœnicians, our merchants are princes" (Isa. xxiii. 8); "We legislate for alien races"—(it is of Israel only that prophecy says, "Thou shalt reign over many nations, but they shall not reign over thee": Deut. xv. 6); "'We hold the gorgeous East in fee,' our colonies include a dominion vaster than that on which conquering Rome imposed her laws; and wherever the Anglo-Saxon is found, he is the guide, the employer, and the king of men. Thus we spread our manners, our language, our civilization, and, above all, our Christianity, over the wide world. We have received from the past a rich spiritual inheritance, that we may be the apostles of that progress which restores in humanity the image of God. It is ours, ennobled and baptized by the Christian spirit, to enthrone Christ as the Divine King of the world; ours to reach the goal on which He fixed His radiant gaze when He uttered the sublime prayer, 'That they all may be one, even as Thou, Father, art in Me and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us'" (pp. 55—57).

Such is the eloquent testimony of our "blind witness," which is all the more valuable because, so far as his work discovers, he does not seem to have any acquaintance with the teachings of Our Identity, or if he has, he has carefully avoided all reference to it. But his idea of the high destiny, and great work of our race, is just the very same which we infer from the teaching of Holy Writ was to be Israel's rôle. The texts proving this are too numerous now to be referred to, but they are familiar to most of our readers. See Jer. xxxi. 21—37; xxxii. 36—42; xxxiii. 14—26; Ezek. xxxvi. 16—38; xxxvii. 20—28, as a few instances.

We have great pleasure in recommending "The Pillars of Our Faith" to the notice of our readers, who will have gathered from our brief notice that it is, on the whole, highly interesting, though we have ventured upon the expression of a little difference of opinion. We think, also, that our author made a mistake in not giving some "detailed references to the authorities quoted"; for while "the (very) ordinary student may be thankful for the absence of those multiplied foot-notes which so distract the attention of the reader," the few who may object, and in which minority we humbly enroll ourselves, would have appreciated them, if it was only to verify a quotation which may appear strange. There is one of this character on page 39: "Give me matter," says Kant, "and I may explain the origin of the worlds; but not give me matter, and I will explain the origin of a caterpillar." We do not understand this sentence as it stands; we suspect there is an error somewhere, but cannot verify it, having no reference.

On page 272, Tertullian is called "the noble preslyster of Carthage," evidently a misprint for "presbyter": on page 241, "imdroved," looks like a new-coined word, unless it is another printer's blunder for "improved"; as, also, is "singulary," on page 275. But these are only as spots in the sun, and detract little from the general good appearance of the book, which is clearly printed on excellent paper, and attractively got up.

OUR HANDBOOK OF "BRITISH-ISRAEL TRUTH."

PART XI.

WE look on the following as among the most valuable portions of our handbook, and should be glad to see the chapter issued as a separate handbill or pamphlet. It is from the pen of the Rev. E. J. Wemyss-Whittaker, of Bath, and is a powerful appeal to the clergy by one of themselves, which cannot but have some influence:—

In offering this volume to the public, it has been the object of the various writers to make it a simple handbook of our faith, to explain the grounds for what may appear at first sight a fanciful theory, and to prove that theory—viz., that a certain people, filling the foremost place among the various nations of this world, is Lost Israel—to be the only possible explanation of promises and prophecies, that make up nearly one-third of the whole revelation of God. Our volume, therefore, becomes an appeal to all, to examine and to see for themselves "if these things are so," by searching the Scriptures, and testing by that sure oracle every point of our argument.

St. Peter tells us that "we have also a more sure word of prophecy," or, as R.V., "the word of prophecy made more sure," "whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place." To this sure guiding we have gone, and would earnestly urge our readers to examine and study it prayerfully, seeking for that Holy Spirit's grace and power, without which the light will be darkness, without which the eye will not see what it does not wish to see, nor the intellect grasp that which appears possibly new, or somewhat different from the old ideas of truth.

We rest our belief on the sure ground of God's unchanging Word of truth, and, if we err in our conception of that Word, we are desirous of being convinced. If our view be the true view, it will stand the test of that which we claim for it—careful comparison with the revelation of God. In this chapter, which follows the general exposition of British-Israel truth, we desire to make a special appeal to the brethren in Christ Jesus, the bishops of the National Church, and pastors and guides of the flock, which the great Shepherd has committed to them, whether Conformists or Nonconformists; for this is not a party, nor a sectional question, but, if true, one of universal importance, touching every interest of the present day and forming a further elucidation of those dispensational "mysteries" which it has pleased God in His infinite wisdom to keep secret until the appointed time of their manifestation.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is operating in these "last days" as the great Revealer of His own prophetic Word for the light and guidance of God's people, who now, by the consenting opinion of nearly all interpreters of prophecy, are very sensibly nearing the goal of their brightest hopes—the manifestation of the Lord Jesus Christ in His glory—when all prophecy which relates to the "latter days" must have been fulfilled. We turn then to you, the leaders and guides of the Lord's people, the ministers of the sanctuary, the expounders of the Word, and the evangelists of this day of grace, to ask you to consider this subject.

The teaching which this volume puts forth has sounded far and wide; earnest Christian men and women have received it and are praising God for the light it has shed over the whole Word. In every part of Great and Greater Britain and America believers in the truth are multiplying, and amongst all classes. Wherever this light has come, the result is eager searching of the Word of God and a consequent strengthening of faith in His whole revelation. Along with this is a strongly increasing wonder that so few of the ministers of religion are led to inquire into it, or to take the ordinary precaution of verifying the view of Israel's prophecy they do hold, seeing they are so persistently accused of ignorance by those who thus study the Word of God. There is no doubt at all upon one point, and it is this, that our view completely upsets the hitherto generally held view that the Church of the last days is a purely Gentile Church, and that the "nation" to whom the kingdom of God was to be given was a purely Gentile nation (Matt. xxi. 43). To any one who will read the latter portion of the prophet Isaiah, from chap. xlix. to the end, with an open mind, it is very clear that the prophet is speaking of Israel (a literal Israel), who in "the latter days" shall rise and shine and be acknowledged as "the seed which the Lord hath blessed." Is it not time, seeing that the laity are beginning to see these things, and to read prophecy throughout by one common rule, that the clergy should consider by what right they spiritualize some prophecies while taking others literally, and which is very specially the case in these prophecies of Isaiah?

Delitzsch writes of the prophecy, commencing at chap. lx., thus:—"The prophecy is addressed to Israel, the servant of Jehovah . . . . the remnant of Israel. . . . This Church of the new covenant has the Spirit of God over it; for it comes down upon it from above. . . . The Church of the last days endowed with the Spirit of the Lord, and never again forsaking its calling, carries them as the evangelist of God in her apostolic mouth." If this view be correct, then the Church of Christ—for He is truly the Light of these latter days—is no Gentile Church, but, literally God's original chosen people Israel, of whom He said, "Ye shall be a peculiar people unto Me above all people; for all the earth is Mine, and ye shall be unto Me a kingdom of priests and an holy nation" (Exod. xix. 5, 6).

Now, if this was the promise of God to Israel in the days of Moses, is it an extraordinary thing that we should find the prophet declaring this as an accomplished fact in "the latter days"? . . . . .

Briefly, the divine plan was this: the spiritual salvation of mankind was to be wrought by one who is ordained of God for the purpose—"the seed of the woman." The golden thread of redemption runs distinctly through the Old Testament, ever becoming more clear and more defined, both as to the manner of working out and by whom. Thus, in Abraham we are brought to see that the spiritual blessing was not to spring from any indiscriminate nation, but a purposely divine plan of Jehovah's—one man, one seed, one people. From Abraham was to come the blessing, in Isaac was the seed to be called. From Judah shall arise the King, the glory of the Lord, the Saviour of the world, the Head of the Church, the Restorer of all things. The golden thread is never broken, continuity is preserved throughout. But spiritual blessing was not the only blessing sealed to Abraham by oath; there is another thread of promise—earthly national. The two threads are united in the one promise (Gen. xxii. 17). The reiteration of Israel's promise, in fuller detail to Isaac and Jacob, confirms the view, that Jehovah designed that in closest union with the spiritual blessing a mighty nation should spring up through which the spiritual blessing should reach the world. This is more clearly defined in the prophetic blessing of the tribes by Jacob (Gen. xlix.), in which he declares that from Judah should come the king, from Joseph the future national power. In Gen. xlviii. 19, in a prior blessing pronounced over Joseph's sons, this national greatness is promised to Ephraim.

Later, Moses contemplates a sad falling away of God's people, the dark cloud of wrath is predicted. Deut. xxviii. is full of threatening and woe; but chap. xxx. opens with promise of grace, a renewal of covenant, a restoration of promise, contingent on repentance while yet in the nations where they have been cast out. In David's reign and Solomon's we see the nation at its best, and God's word to David is final as to its end—an everlasting throne and kingdom were to be his.

After the death of Solomon, we find the kingdom rent in twain, and henceforth they are ever distinguished as the kingdom of Judah (Judah, Benjamin, and the Levites) and the kingdom of Israel. The restoration to one nation under one king, the prophets Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and Hosea tell us distinctly will take place in "the latter days." The destiny of each branch hereafter forms a separate line of prophecy. Each kingdom fell away from the pure worship of Jehovah, and each falls under that chastisement, which is ultimately to draw them back to Him, purged and purified in the hot furnace of the Great Refiner. Through all the varying trials we see the arm of strength leading on to the great and glorious end in view for each. From Judah, the Messiah; for Israel, "the kingdom." Of Judah, "the chief ruler"; but "the birthright was Joseph's" (1 Chron. v. 2).

The purging of Judah from idolatry in her seventy years' captivity restores her to Jerusalem, and out of her arose He who was the appointed Deliverer: "A light to lighten the Gentiles and the glory of His people Israel." The rejection of the Lord Jesus Christ brought upon the Jews a still longer chastisement, and under it they are still groaning. Their promised restoration spiritually, the prophet Zechariah tells us, will be when Christ returns; their national restoration probably prior to that. The prophetic forecast of the nation of Israel is the theme of most of the prophetic writings. Carried far away towards the north of Media, secular history speedily loses sight of the people; they become, as the prophet Hosea predicted, "Lo-ammi" (Hos. i. 9), or, as we have called them, the Lost Ten Tribes. Yet, where they are so accounted, there they multiply exceedingly, and ultimately are called "the sons of the living God." Sifted among all the nations, "like as corn is sifted in a sieve, yet" (says the God of Israel, by the prophet) "shall not the least grain fall upon the earth" (Amos ix. 9). Arising in the glorious shining of Christ, says Isaiah, they draw all the Gentiles to them (Isa. lx. 1—3). To them flow the riches of the nations, and they become the "ministers of our God." Their seed is known among the Gentiles, and all acknowledge them as "the seed which the Lord hath blessed."

Jeremiah tells us how the Lord led them, and caused them to walk "by the rivers of water in a straight way, wherein they shall not stumble: For I am a Father to Israel, and Ephraim is My firstborn" (Jer. xxxi. 9). In the same chapter he declares of the sun, and the moon, and the stars, that, "If those ordinances depart from before Me, saith the Lord, then the seed of Israel also shall cease from being a nation before Me for ever."

The prophet Ezekiel, in chap. xxxvii., foretells the regeneration of the whole House of Israel, and of the re-uniting of the two divisions, and their final establishment, under the one king; of the new covenant, which shall never be broken, for it is everlasting, and thus all the threads of destiny are seen united. The Church and nation one, and God's faithfulness vindicated.

If this can be pointed out as having been fulfilled, or as now fulfilling, what a reply is this to the scoffing infidelity of these last days in which we live! (2 Pet. iii. 3). What a strengthening power it would give to all the glorious promises and messages of redeeming love, which form the theme of so many earnest and devoted servants of God! What an argument for trust in the future success of our evangelistic and missionary work! To be able to look at the whole course of the history of God's chosen race and say, in the words of King Solomon, "There hath not failed one word of His good promises" (1 Kings viii. 56), must indeed prove a powerful lever with which to lift souls from the mire of sin, and place them on the Rock of Ages.

There will be some who will say, We believe in the accomplishment of all this: we believe in a glorious epoch of righteousness and of restitution of all things, of a new heaven and a new earth, of a glorious millennial kingdom when Christ shall reign in the hearts of all, and Jew and Gentile shall unite in singing His praise. We believe that, possibly, then all may be fulfilled respecting God's people, and Jerusalem shall become the joy of the whole earth. In reply to such we answer, undoubtedly, in the millennium, the people of God will be enjoying the fulness of the promised blessing; the throne of David will be exalted, and the Lord Jesus Christ will have received His kingdom, and the daily prayer of His faithful people, "Thy kingdom come," will be accomplished, while the Church of God will have been re-united to their absent Lord to reign and be with Him for ever. But because this is so, it becomes a further reason why the clergy should inquire into this prophecy of Israel.

Once let it be admitted, then, that our view of Israel's prophecy is correct, there is no difficulty whatever in arriving at the further teaching that we set forth—that the British nation is Ephraim-Israel. For the only logical inference that can be drawn is this: the Israelitish nation, fulfilling God's purpose of being a blessing to the world, must be in existence at this present time; must, wherever it may be, answer in every way to the covenant promises made to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Spiritually, by her Christian character, capable of carrying out the mission committed to her of bearing the glad tidings of a Saviour to all the world; and nationally, by her predominant position, holding the Gates of the world, and ensuring the free entrance of that life-giving Word.

Only one race fits this position at the present time, only one great nation answers to the predicted condition; nay, and so completely answers to it that, if God had in His Word applied the description of the latter-day Church and nation to Britain and her colonies, there would be few who would not agree that the picture is exact.

We appeal to you, the clergy and ministers of Christ, to look into this great question, to weigh and sift our arguments. The foundation-stones of our theory, rather, let us say, of our faith, are those sure words of God which are as a light shining out of darkness.

In the interests of truth, in consideration of the power it will give to meet the scoffs of the infidel, the impetus it must give to the Church's work at home and abroad, the increased safety of our established national Church, the strengthened position of our national heritage—the holy Sabbath; on all these, and many other grounds, we appeal to you to claim the position which every circumstance in our history and our present providential endowments prove to be ours—that we are the people whom the Lord hath blessed. To us the other House of Judah is daily flocking; by us, and by no other nation, will the Jews be restored to their own land. Socially, politically, ecclesiastically, this truth bears in it the power of solving many difficulties, and enhancing in every way the glory of God.

The seeming difficulties connected with the great history of the forefathers of the British race are daily having more light thrown upon them; preceding chapters have dealt with them, and we close this book with the earnest prayer that all who seek for light and guidance in this matter may be led by that Holy Spirit of promise into all truth.

The Special Commissioner of the Christian World, writing of Dr. Wild, says:—"On Sunday evening I had to fight my way into the Congregational Church of which Dr. Wild is the minister. He hails from America, and is quite the sensation of the hour. There was no standing-room anywhere, and as I made to the door I met many coming away. However, I had made up my mind to hear the Doctor, and hear him I did. It seems that the subscribers have a door to themselves; I made for it, and luckily found a chair, which I wedged in under the platform. The Doctor prayed and then we had a sermon about Revelation, containing much that was very effective, if not about his text, at any rate about that mysterious part of Scripture from which the text was taken."

THE FRANCO-SIAMESE SETTLEMENT.

THE Siamese difficulty has terminated in the unconditional surrender of that Power to the whole of the French demands. These included the agreement by Siam to deliver to France the bulk of the territory east of the Mekong River, the payment of a large indemnity in money, and as a further security for the payment of the latter and for the transfer of territory within a month, the delivery to the French, for the time being, of the Port of Chantaboon, on the Gulf of Siam, south-east of Bangkok, as well as an undertaking that Siam will retain no military station on the Cambodian frontier or within a certain distance west of the Mekong River.

As the German Emperor and army in 1870-71 exacted hard terms from the vanquished French army, so now the French have in their turn imposed on the defenceless Siamese, conditions which take large territories from her, inflict a heavy fine (three millions of francs), and render it easy for the victors to encroach further as time goes on upon the vanquished. The result is not satisfactory to the British or Indian Governments, for Siam is a friendly ally of India, does a large trade with Singapore, Hong Kong, and British India, and has been a good neighbour to our colossal empire in the East. The French press, of course, claims a diplomatic victory over us in these recent events, and attributes to our nation what is strictly true and according to our prophetic destiny, a desire "to possess the earth."

It is curious that the French should perceive this tendency in the British mind, the instinct which we believe God has planted in it to prepare it for the recognition of the fact that Abraham and his seed were constituted by the promise of God Himself "the heir of the world" (Rom. iv. 13; Gen. xvii. 4—7). The Paris correspondent of the Times furnished the following on this subject, quoting the Dèbats. The statement appeared in London on Aug. 3rd:—

PARIS, Aug 2.

In the dearth of fresh telegrams from Bangkok, the French Press to-night reviews the events of the last few weeks, which have ended in, at all events, a partial diplomatic victory of some importance, and it calls Great Britain to order for what it regards as her innate jealousy of the colonial successes of other nations. The London correspondent of the Debats writes:—

"The English Press is still occupied with the Siamese question, and is not quite sure what it ought to think on the question. On the one hand it is satisfied with knowing that the trade of Singapore and Hong Kong is soon to be reopened, but on the other hand it is very disagreeable for it to have to admit that French diplomacy has won a success. Of the two feelings the latter seems to be the dominant one. There is in the English temperament a constitutional vice which consists in a latent jealousy of all the colonial successes of other nations. Thus it is enough that a Power should acquire territory in Asia or Africa for the English to feel mortified just as if they had been deprived of something which belonged to them. The truth is, they regard their country as the natural heir of all barbarous and semi-civilized states whose destiny appears to be to fall sooner or later into the hands or under the influence of Europeans. The new French acquisitions in Indo-China are therefore a cause of annoyance to the English which they cannot conceal—especially as matters have advanced so rapidly and so satisfactorily."

After quoting from certain morning papers, this writer continues:—"But it is not the Press alone which is discontented. Among the public one meets with the same irritation. On every hand you hear it said that France has made an acquisition which will cost her dear, that she does not know how to colonize, and so forth—a thing which really ought to please the English if they said what they think, or rather if they thought what they say. But the truth is that all these fine reasonings are only a way of hiding real ill-humour."

It seems that under the operation of the ultimatum to which Siam has been forced to submit, that country has lost 70,000 square miles of territory, which France has forcibly acquired, and it seems only a question of time when France, if left alone, will obtain the whole of the provinces now left to the Siamese King. Such an event would, of course, cost us the valuable trade we now possess with Siam without enriching the French to any degree. Their genius does not go in the direction of colonization, nor are the French able to do much in the way of commerce with their distant Eastern possessions. They do, however, curtail the volume of British trade, where they are, nationally, in the ascendant, and their object is, doubtless, to cripple British interests without doing their own any benefit. The hostile feeling which is always latent among influential classes in France as against our countrymen has been particularly manifest in this Siamese affair, and has its origin, doubtless, in our success in Egypt and elsewhere where our interests have clashed.

The French are glad, no doubt, to score a success in Siam to balance their loss of prestige in Egypt, but they forget that in case of a breach between the two nations their interests in Siam, Tonkin, Annam, and even in Madagascar, will soon crumble into dust when they realize that the coaling stations throughout the world are not theirs, but British-Israel's, and that, like Pondichery and Chandernagore, a declaration of war would next day be followed by the obliteration of the power of France wherever it lingers now in the East. France is not strong enough to encounter Germany as she means to do by-and-bye, with Great Britain on her flank as an enemy. She has to recollect that to fight the German Empire she will require both arms free, and must on no account have a possible enemy in the British Channel, the Mediterranean, and the Indian Ocean, as well as in the China seas. We feel, therefore, no fears of the power of France either with or without the territory of Siam to affect her strength as a possible antagonist.

God rules in all our affairs, and He has this matter also in hand, as He has had our interests to defend in Egypt, in India, in the Mauritius, and elsewhere. The Rev. Mr. Baxter, in his pessimist views of our prophetic condition, rejects Our Identity, and in place of the happy prospects it offers us, bids us dolefully look out for "a frightful catastrophe," "humiliation," and "subjugation by France"! also to our becoming one of the (so-called) ten-toed kingdoms under the leadership of infidel or Romanist France, and that before April, 1894 ("or at least soon after"—a very wise reservation). We laugh at Mr. Baxter and his follies! The British are Israel, and we do not recognize in God's Word any such fate for "the chosen nation" as he rashly portrays. Let Israel therefore praise the Lord!

WHAT GOOD?

"RIMU."

DEAR FRIENDS,—Sometimes in sneering or contemptuous tones; anon, accompanied by a smile, expressive of pity for our weakness, we are asked the question, "Of what use is your Identity? the world has existed without it so far, and can well do without it in the future." True, the world has hitherto existed without many things which have been brought to light, and into daily use by the aid of science and research. Who, in the present, would dream of making preparation for a three or four months' voyage from London (England) to Auckland (New Zealand) when the journey can be made in, at the most, about forty-two days? Or, who now will wear coarse homespun clothing when softer and finer material can be procured for a moderate outlay? After enjoying the benefits derived from the thousands of inventions and improvements that fill the world in these days, who would be willing to revert to the meagreness of a hundred years ago, because the world had existed so far without them? Some say this is an age of progress in scientific and religious thought.

By progress do they mean making the best of existing things and ideas, because the world has hitherto done, and can still do, without them? The child with undeveloped intellect commences with the alphabet, and is told that when that and further rudimentary lessons are learned he will be able to read with ease the ponderous volumes which are to him a source of wonder and dismay. Why should the child learn to read? Millions in the past were born, lived, and died unable to gather knowledge from the writings of the few who, in their day, were educated, and they were none the worse off for want of that knowledge.

We are like the child in some respects, having learned our alphabet and become to some degree proficient in the art of reading, yet there are two volumes on which we look with awe, being only able to spell out their contents with great labour, and, therefore, unable to grasp the knowledge and information they contain. These volumes are the Scriptures and the signs of the times. The former, written part in plain language and part in allegory, the latter in characters marked upon the face of current history, difficult alike to pupil and professor.

The Identity is the Schoolmaster, strict attention to whose instruction will enable us to grapple with the intricacies of the volumes and to become more or less conversant with their marvellous contents.

It has been said that the Scriptures require no vindication, that they are inspired by God, and therefore vindicate themselves; but we ought not to lose sight of the fact that with modern progress there has been a marked development of scepticism, and the only possible manner in which that can be counteracted is for those parts of the Scriptures referring to the "House of Israel," past, present, and future, to be placed parallel with contemporaneous history, and the signs of the times. Thereby additional vindication of the sacred writings will be made and all ground for infidelity will be swept away by the flood of knowledge that will inundate the whole world.

The study of the Identity question can and will do this. As each incident in the history of the past bearing upon the "House of Israel" is brought prominently before the general public, together with the rapid and continuous fulfilment of prophetic forecasts concerning their future wealth and power, as the one great nation that is blessed above all other nations of the earth; so, little by little, one by one, the many errors of creed and dogma, premise and deduction, will totter and fall, in their destruction affording room for the erection of the grandest structure the religious and scientific world has ever seen, the "House of Israel" reinstated, and become the greatest of all earthly powers, with a pure religion, undefiled and unadulterated with the schisms and animosities now pervading the whole of Christendom. A religion that will be so manifest to other nations that they will one and all cast aside superstition and idolatry, accepting instead that which will be satisfying to mind and body.

Is this too much to look forward to—to hope for?

It must come when the Identists have done their work, and when that time arrives missionary endeavours will succeed, for each true Israelite will be himself a missionary.

The endeavours that have been made to teach the heathen that which their would-be teachers did not understand have proved disastrous. The number of converts are few compared with the cost in life and money expended. They are also individual conversions, not national, while the tenor of the sacred writings would lead us to expect the latter ; but until the Identist has completed his task, until the pupil has so far advanced as to be able to read without the aid of a tutor, national conversion to the religion of Israel, as it should be, cannot be expected and will not come to pass.

The work of the Identist is at present individual, and if any have cause to cry "What Good?" it is they. What good all our toil and teaching when the world passes by, or only stays to bestow one contemptuous glance? Stay, friends, although we see but little return for our labour, remember that the efforts put forth by each individual will be the means of adding to our number, and thus drawing the attention of others to our cause. Cast despondency to the wind, looking forward to the time when the fruit of our endeavours will be made apparent in the acknowledgment by the whole world that our labours were not in vain, that the truths for which we strove concerning the "House of Israel" were worthy of acceptance ; that our belief was in a substance and not the shadow, that behind the veil there was an ark of covenant. That, unlike the priests of Judah, who, from the fall of Jerusalem under Babylon, to the destruction of that city under Rome, for over five hundred years, bent the knee before an empty shrine, we have before us that which requires no deception, that which needs no rending of the veil to show forth its hollowness, but that which may be seen, heard, and believed by all who have eyes to see, ears to hear, and hearts to understand. In time past Israel practised idolatry with their idolatrous neighbours, while Judah exercised the art of deception. The early converts to Christianity fell into error. As the years rolled on leaders arose who combined the idolatry of Israel and the deception of Judah with the existing errors of Christianity. These were followed by others who, seeing that error prevailed, exerted their feeble powers with the view of reforming Christianity. They did well, but not as yet having completed their schooling, were unable to effect a thorough reformation.

There are amongst us in this day men who have passed through the rudimentary phases, and are now beginning to see a way whereby much, if not all, of the error that still exists may be overcome, and the right, the good, and the pure installed in its place That this much-to-be-desired end will be attained in our day may seem too much to hope, but we can in many a way, however humble it may seem, assist our leaders in their endeavours to make the path easier for those who follow after. The time is drawing nigh when priest and layman, statesman and street sweeper will each and all acknowledge the efforts of our leaders in this age, and the names of many will live after them honoured and revered. The study of the Identity question draws people together ; thoughts, ideas, and opinions are exchanged, fact and truth is brought to light from most unexpected places, and men are bettered morally and mentally from contact with each other.

"What Good?" Let us say Every Good! and, notwithstanding the sneer and contempt, let us continue our efforts to prove that it is so.

WHO WAS JOB?

BY MRS. G. ALBERT ROGERS,

Author of "Britain in History, Ancient and Modern"; "The Coronation Stone," &c., &c.

A SINGULAR and somewhat original theory as to the identity of the patriarch Job came to us recently from New South Wales, making him out to be none other than Shem, the son of Noah, one of the eight survivors of the deluge. Immediately after that event we read (Gen. ix. 1), "God blessed Noah and his sons, and said unto them, 'Be fruitful and multiply, and replenish the earth.'" Shem was at that time 100 years old (Gen. xi. 10), and two years after the flood his son Arphaxad was born, who lived to be 438 years old. After his birth, we are told, that Shem begat sons and daughters, and these were among the earliest inhabitants of a world which had been utterly destroyed by the flood.

Giving the names of the three sons of Noah, the Scripture expressly states "of them was the whole earth overspread" (Gen. ix. 19). But this presupposes time, and Arphaxad and his brothers and sisters would have been about a century old before the building of Babel's Tower brought down God's second great judgment upon the ungodly. The children of men in building it planned their safety, but its result was confusion of tongues, and the consequent dispersion of the builders and their divisions into nations.

How does this accord with what we read of Job's life and times?

The patriarch is depicted in the opening chapter of his book as living in wealth and opulence. Unto him were born seven sons and three daughters. Had he been Shem one of these must have been Arphaxad, yet ere the chapter closes each one of his ten children had been cut off in the morning of their days. True, Shem's life was prolonged to 600 years ; but it is impossible to read the Book of Job and not see that by one awful stroke Job was bereft of all the children he had up to that time. More conclusive still as to the impossibility of our holding Job to have been the son of Noah is the evidence that in his days, and while yet his children were about him, the world was not only well populated, but had, ere his time, been divided into nations. The armed Sabeans had fallen upon his property. The Chaldeans, in three bands, had attacked and carried off his possessions. His friends came, one from among the Temanites, another from the Shuhites, and a third from the Naamathites. Job dwelt amongst princes and nobles (chap. xxix. 7—10), who did him reverence as he went out to his place of honour in the gate.

The crowning disproof, however, as to his being the patriarch Shem, is found in the last chapter of his book, where it states that he lived to see "his sons, and his sons' sons, even four generations." Shem lived to see eleven generations. In each of these the name of the one who had the birthright is carefully given. Shem, Arphaxad, Salah, Eber, Peleg, Reu, Serug, Nahor, Terah, Abraham, and Isaac.

It is difficult to realize that Shem, who was 100 years old at the time of the Deluge, could have lived to see Isaac, in whom Abraham's seed should be called, but a reference to Scripture chronology will demonstrate this. The accepted date of the flood was 2349 B.C., when Noah was 600 years old (Gen. vii. 6), and he lived for 350 years more, or until 1999 B.C. Two years later Abraham was born, 1997 B.C. Noah's son Shem—father of the chosen race—was, as we have seen, 100 years old at the flood ; two years after this his son Arphaxad was born, after whose birth Shem lived 500 years. His death, therefore, did not take place till cir 1847 B.C., when Abraham had attained the age of 150 years, and Isaac had seen half a century. It is possible then, if not probable, that Melchizedek, King of Salem, priest of the Most High God, who met Abraham returning from the slaughter of the kings and blessed him, was none other than Abraham's own great ancestor, Shem.

But our immediate concern is with Job, and availing ourselves of the researches of a great Hebraist, Dr. Margoliouth, we think we can trace his origin. It is a question regarding which learned men have been greatly exercised. Some have argued from the first mention of Job as in the land of Uz, that he must have sprung from Nahor, Abraham's brother and the father of Uz. Others suppose him to have descended from Abraham through one of the sons of Keturah, to whom he gave gifts, sending them away into the east country. Other writers, again, consider him to be a descendant of Esau. In each of these cases Job would have been an alien from the commonwealth of Israel, and an outsider as regards the covenant made with Abraham, which was limited to the heirs of promise. Can we reconcile the character of one so placed with the description given by God Himself of the patriarch? "Hast thou considered My servant Job that there is none like him in the earth, a perfect and an upright man, one that feareth God and escheweth evil?" (Job i. 8), and the same high commendation is reiterated and enlarged upon in chap. ii. 3.

Turning from those not in covenant relationship with God, let us direct our attention to Gen. xlvi. 13, where the four sons of Issachar are mentioned by name as having gone down into Egypt with Jacob: "Tola and Phuvah and JOB and Shimron." The careful and prolonged investigations of Dr. Margoliouth have convinced him that the "perfect and upright man" who feared God and eschewed evil, was none other than a grandson or great grandson of Jacob. Received, though the Israelites were in Egypt with all honour, and the best of the land assigned them on arrival, there came a day when a king arose "who knew not Joseph." Long before open persecution befel them, the clear-sighted ones amongst them must have recognized that the extraordinary welcome bestowed on them for Joseph's sake could not last for ever. The fetters might be gilded at starting, but while the possibility of escape existed, and ere they became too closely riveted, many must have consulted their safety in flight. It was at this time, as we have elsewhere stated grounds for believing,* that Danans, Erectheus, Cecrops, Cadmus, and Phœnix quietly stole away from Egypt, and founded the Grecian colonies.

But while some might have indulged a roving disposition from love of adventure or lust of conquest, others must have realized that, as in the case of Abram and Lot, the land would not long hold the Israelites and the Egyptians. Dr. Margoliouth believes that the son or grandson of Issachar left Egypt when his pastoral wealth became too vast to be accommodated in that country without exciting the cupidity of the natives. Uz, the first-born of Nahor, was a near relative of Jacob, and in the land which he had called after his own name, Job might hope to find a hospitable reception.

This, as it seems to us, solves the enquiry—"WHO WAS JOB?"

* In "Britain in History Ancient and Modern," chap. xii., many authorities are quoted in support of the view that Israel, while yet in Egypt, furnished the leaders of the Grecian colonies.

ANOTHER BLIND WITNESS.

By J. THOMSON.

IN the correspondence columns of the Record for June 9th, 1893, is a letter from the Rev. T. E. Wilkinson, Bishop-Coadjutor of London and North and Central Europe, upon "Thanksgiving for Rain." It would seem that he understood there had been prayer for rain in this country during the recent drought; but he was "told that no thanksgiving was made." He wrote from Lyons, and his letter was dated May 31st, and he described what he had just seen during the recent very dry weather in the Rhine provinces, South Germany, Switzerland, and part of Southern France, and "the results of this most terrible spring are," he says, "almost beyond description disastrous." He had seen from Basle to Lausanne whole forests of beech and ash burnt with late frosts and parching winds as though they had been subject to a great fire: "The walnut trees have not a green leaf upon them; gardens in many places are empty, scorched to the earth;" and cattle were being sold for a fifth of their value, because "there was nothing to give them;" while "agricultural prospects for the year, in many parts, are ruined beyond hope of recovery."

Having thus described the condition of a large part of Europe, our "blind witness" goes on to say, "But England seems always blessed above all nations. Famines, pestilences, earthquakes, invasions, are unknown to her; hers is not the common lot of nations, and her immunity has begotten that carnal security that 'nothing can happen to England,' which is one of our national sins. God has wonderfully shielded us from the sorrows and sufferings that fall from time to time upon all other nations. How long will He continue to do so if we are thus ungrateful?" So much testifies this bishop. If an Anglo-Israelite had written thus he would have been smiled at and esteemed "crazy." But as it was a "bishop."—ah! well, there must be "something in it," and we flatter ourselves that we are better than other people; and so, being good, are rewarded therefor by our heavenly Father.

But the bishop does not seem to favour this idea, for he has been told that, having asked for rain, and received the desired blessing, we have not returned thanks for it. We do not care at present to question the accuracy of this information; it may be only partially true; but if it is, what then? We have here only the same characteristic of ancient Israel, who often provoked and grieved Jehovah. When He slew them, then they sought Him, "for He remembered His holy promise, and Abraham His servant" (see Psa. lxxviii., cv., cvi., cvii.).*

Our blind witness says that "England seems always blessed above all nations." Anglo-Israelites acknowledge this with thankfulness, but do not ascribe this pre-eminence as a reward for anything we are, have done, or can do. For respecting our best works we must say with the Psalmist, "We have sinned with our fathers, we have committed iniquity, we have done wickedly." No; our present blessedness we must ascribe to the faithfulness of our God, who unconditionally promised Abraham, "I will make of thee a great nation; I will bless thee, and thou shalt be a blessing: and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed; because thou hast obeyed My voice" (Gen. xii. 1—3, xvii. 1—8, xxii. 15—19). Israel alone was to be "blessed above all people" (Deut. vii. 14). Israel alone had a "place appointed" for them, where they were to be planted; "a place of their own," whence they should "move no more;" nor "shall the children of wickedness afflict them any more, as beforetime" (2 Sam. vii. 10). Israel is a "people saved by the Lord" (Deut. xxiii. 26—29); enjoying the "precious things of the earth and fulness thereof" (Deut. xxxiii. 16). No nation is its equal, much less supersedes it; for one of its kings thus fearlessly appealed to the Most High: "And what nation in the whole earth is like Thy people, even like Israel, whom God went to redeem for a people to Himself and to make Him a name, and to do for them great things, and terrible?" (2 Sam. vii. 23). Truly, "He hath not dealt so with any nation; and as for His judgments they have not known them." For "He sheweth His word unto Jacob, His statutes and His judgments unto Israel" (Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20).

* In the following issue of the Record, viz, June 16th, will be found that "at least in one church," the thanksgiving collect for rain was used after the rain had come, "the prayer for rain having been used on the previous Sunday." It is therefore evident that the bishop was somewhat hasty in his judgment. We rather like to think that, were all known, many other similar instances might be referred to. But true prayer does not make itself observed through newspaper columns any more than from house-tops.

If the British race be not God's lost people found, where is God's favoured people? And what is the position that our country now occupies in the economy of divine Providence? But the theory of Our Identity explains all our "immunities;" vindicates God's truthfulness; and justifies God's ways to man, as no other explanation of our wisest teachers hitherto have ever done, or are likely to do, judging from their present-day notions relative to Holy Scripture.

THE HEBREW ORIGIN OF THE BRITISH, FOUNDED ON COINS, AS DISCOVERED BY A CLERGYMAN OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

By E. Reep.

PART III.

We have lately been startled by an attempt on the part of the Pope of Rome to re-establish in Britain the old Israelite cult of the Queen of Heaven (Jer. xliv.). The base origin of this Queen of Heaven worship and the part it has played in the drama of Israel's wanderings, the Rev. W. Waddilove proves by his plates of coins.

Though at the present time the depths of Satan are located at the Vatican, it is quite certain that formerly Egypt was the chief domicile of vain imaginations and foolish myths. Consequently it is in Egypt we must seek for the genealogy of the Romish Mater Deum and not in Palestine. How Isis was adored by the descendants of Jacob while under the dominion of the Pharaohs is a matter of history. Ezekiel (chap. xxiii.) has delineated only too vividly their devotion to the whoredoms of the Egyptians to leave room for any mistake on the subject or any excuse for Israel returning to her former ways, let the amount of Papal dust thrown into the eyes of the Romanist be what it may. But the Church of Rome has always had certain political and sacerdotal purposes to serve in maintaining Isis worship.

She knows perfectly well its power over Israel of old and the treasures it brought into the lap of the idol. What form this took did not matter so that the Queen of Heaven fiction was kept alive. In its crudest shape it was symbolised by a stone which was invested with the same attributes of feminality as appertained to the golden calf fashioned at the foot of Horeb, and by Jeroboam for worship in Bethel and Dan.

In Greece the personification of the feminine principle germinated into the æsthetic, and through the coins we see that in the countries through which the Israelites sifted, Vesta, or the Queen of Heaven, for whom Herodotus tells us the Scythians or Scandinavians had such reverence, was portrayed crowned and comely. Pagan Rome is said to have possessed the stone emblem of her divinity, and that on this Papal Rome has built the mysteries of the Virgin Mary, blasphemously called Mother of God, Queen of Angels, Ark of the Covenant, Gate of Heaven, and seat of Wisdom.

Romanism has not only made traditional use of Israel's idolatry, but of promises made to David (Psa. lxxxix.). It has, however, derived this mode of procedure, like its spiritual authority, from the Roman Emperors, who, if the coins tell a true story, knew so well how to apply Israel's national symbols to their own honour and glory. A medal of Britannia (Claudius, A.D. 46) avows, perhaps, more unmistakably than any other how well Hebrew imagery suited Roman statecraft. The subject of the coin is borrowed from Jer. xxv. 15, and Psa. lxxv. 8, and represents Britannia standing with the cup of trembling in her hand, placed there by the sovereign power of Rome. It was of no consequence to the Roman plagiarist that Scripture affirmed the cup of affliction to be in the hand of the Lord, because Cæsar exalted himself as God. Designed, as the medal was, to indicate the sceptre by which all nations would be made to drink of the wine cup of fury, it, nevertheless, unwittingly figured Israel drinking of the cup of sorrow, which, by the word of the Lord, had been predicted she should drink, though not so deeply, to the dregs as treacherous Judah (Ezek. xxiii.).

While the Roman legions were harassing the Britons, the persecuted Druids were driven to seek refuge in North Britain and the Isle of Man. With them seems to have been established in the island the triangular symbol of three legs, to be seen there at the present day. This curious armorial device can be traced to Asia and Cilicia.

The Dorians, sometimes called Thessalians, descendants of Hercules (Samson), were known as Trichæces, probably through the use of this very emblem. Strabo is uncertain how they came to be so named, but opines that it was derived from their wearing a triple crest. On the coins of the Etruscans and the Brettii the same three legs appear, as also on a certain Celtiberian coin.

The important position which throughout Scripture is allotted to the House of Joseph is prefigured on a coin of Severus, A.D. 210, Deut. xxxiii. 17 supplying its symbolism. On this very interesting coin Britannia sits throned on a bullock horned, armed with the symbol of maritime supremacy, and grasping in the left hand a spear, as figurative of dominion on land, or of an empire on which the sun never sets. That it has distinct reference to Ephraim-Israel, or to the House of Joseph, as referred to in Scripture, is obvious: "His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the horns of unicorns: with them he shall push the people together to the ends of the earth: and they are like the ten thousands of Ephraim, and they are the thousands of Manasseh."

The expressive symbolism of the coin almost suggests that the Roman Emperors knew something of the Hebrew origin of their British subjects, that in the Island of the Blessed was the chosen gathering place of a people scattered and peeled, but, notwithstanding, destined to rule the uttermost parts of the earth. Nor is it absolutely impossible that they were instructed in the matter, seeing that Jews like King Agrippa exercised a strong personal influence in assisting to direct the political policy of the Cæsars.*

Of the origin of Mars from Exod. xv. 3, Mr. Waddilove thinks there can be no question. By his effigy was meant the representation of the Lord as a man of war, and to him, as we read in Cæsar's Commentaries, the Britons vowed everything taken in battle. "When they have conquered," says Cæsar, "they sacrifice whatever captured animals may have survived the conflict, and collect the other things into one place. In many states you may see piles of these things heaped up in their consecrated spots; nor does it often happen that anyone disregarding the sanctity of the case, dares either to secrete in his house things captured, or take away those deposited; and the most severe punishment with torture has been established for such a deed." Anyone familiar with the story of Achan (Jos. vii.) will at once recognize, like Professor Rhys in his Hibbert Lectures, that the Britons regarded the spoil of warfare in the same light as did the Hebrews.

In taking leave of the different landmarks of Israel's wanderings, the Rev. W. Waddilove would have it understood that he has by no means exhausted research on the subject, that, in fact, he leaves to others the task of a more learned investigation of the field of inquiry he has endeavoured to put before his readers. What they must, however, bear in mind is the existence of two families of the same stock, to both of whom national symbols would equally belong, with just the difference which exists between the Protestant Churches of England and Scotland and the Church of Rome. Israel, be it remembered, eschewed the Unitarian doctrines of Judaism and adopted Pantheistic views of Jehovah, the purest of which are stored in the Cabbala. From the Trinitarian Cabbalistic system it is apparent what mystical importance would be attached to Mosaic symbols, typical of Trinity in Unity, by Israel among the Gentiles. Hence the fleshhook with its three teeth being regarded as one of the most perfect emblems of a Triune God.

The widespread distribution of the fork emblem has been already alluded to. It may be of further interest to note its connection with a device of two fish and with a representation of Neptune wielding the trident in one hand and holding a fish in the other. The appropriateness of the fish symbol in the hand of a figure devised to express Divine rule upon the waters is singular when compared with the language of the prophet Amos and Ezekiel. Thus declaims Amos against Israel: "Ye kine of Bashan that are in the mountains of Samaria. . . . The Lord God hath sworn by His holiness that, lo, the days shall come upon you that He will take you away with hooks and your posterity with fishhooks." Ezekiel, employing much the same metaphor, declares: "But I (Jehovah) will put hooks in thy jaws . . . and I will bring thee up out of the midst of thy rivers. . . . And I will leave thee thrown into the wilderness, thee and all the fish of thy rivers." And, furthermore, says the prophet in another place, "It shall come to pass that everything that liveth, which moveth, whithersoever the rivers shall come shall live: and there shall be a very great multitude of fish . . . for they shall be healed . . . and they shall inherit the land according to the Twelve Tribes of Israel: Joseph shall have two portions" (xlvii.).

In concluding this somewhat feeble notice of "The Lamp (Scripture) in the Wilderness," we must not omit the author's reference to the righteous qualifications required by God in the nation He has preserved for Himself, and to whom He has committed the duty of preaching to all peoples repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ. Any neglect of this duty, we are reminded, has, since the Reformation, been checked by judgment; and every attempt within the same period to bring back Popery has been visited by some providential calamity. For the veil that has been cast over all nations shall be removed, and the seed of believing, obedient, Israel shall be known among the Gentiles as the seed which the Lord hath blessed.

MONARCHS WHO SPEAK ENGLISH.

THEY ALL KNOW IT, AND SOME LIKE IT.

I AM repeatedly asked how, when I visit this and that Court, I manage about the language. I have a sufficient smattering of European tongues to enable me to get along, but, as a matter of fact, I find my own mother tongue sufficient for all practical purposes. Some years ago, when I first made the rounds of the different European Courts, English was not nearly so much the Court language that it is now; then it was chiefly French.

For instance, the old Kaiser Wilhelm neither spoke nor understood English to any extent; a foreigner conversing with His Majesty would speak in French. In those days the menu of the Imperial dinners was written in French; but the present Kaiser on his accession to the throne immediately altered all this. French was tabooed either as a spoken or written language in Court circles. His Majesty, of course, speaks French perfectly, but it is not a language that he has any great liking for. English, which he speaks as well as he does German, is much more congenial to him; in fact, some of his smartest things—and the Kaiser can on occasions say exceedingly smart things—are said in English. All his sons are taught English, which language is fast becoming quite a second language throughout Germany, French now taking quite a back seat.

It is much the same in Vienna, where society delights in talking English more or less incorrectly. Why English has become so popular with the Austrians it is not so easy to say, for, unlike the Emperor William, the Emperor Francis Joseph is not connected by ties of blood with the English royal family. Besides, the Austrian Emperor is but indifferently acquainted with the English language, and the late Crown Prince Rudolph, although he had the command of no less than six languages, had no knowledge of English. The Crown Princess Stephanie and the Empress, however, made up for His Imperial Highness's failing in this direction, and they have probably set the fashion of talking English in Viennese society.

Now the Czar, although he speaks English remarkably well, does not like our language, and, in the midst of an English sentence will frequently burst into French. I am afraid His Majesty does not like us any more than he likes our language—but that is by the way. There is not a single member of the Russian Imperial family who does not know English; they as children, as a rule, have English governesses, and English in their youth is as much their language as their mother tongue. Taken as a whole, therefore, the Russian Imperial Highnesses speak our tongue far more correctly, and at the same time more fluently than the members of any other royal house. The Czarina, I think, likes talking English, but it is English with a decidedly foreign accent.

The King of Denmark is quite at home in English, so is every member of his family. His Majesty likes the English language and everything about us.

The King and Queen of Greece also speak English, whilst their three sons, the Duke of Sparta, the Prince George (who, by-the-bye, represents their Majesties at the wedding of our Prince George and the Princess May), and Prince Nicholas might, when they speak, be taken for Englishmen.

So fond, in fact, are the Duke and Duchess of Sparta of everything English, that our language is the language of their little Court.

The King of Roumania's English is limited—very. He can get through with, "How do you do," "Very well," and "Good-bye" admirably; but there, I think, his knowledge of our tongue ends. His nephew, the Crown Prince, has a very fair knowledge of English, and, now that he has an English princess for a wife, we may expect the English language to play an important part at the Roumanian Court. The Queen, "Carmen Sylva," is very fond of English, and will talk it whenever she gets an opportunity.

It almost goes without saying that amongst the uncrowned royalties the Comte and Comtesse de Paris and the Duke and Duchess of Cumberland have the greatest command of English.

The Queen Regent of Spain's English is by no means perfect, but it is understandable, whilst the little king, who has an English governess, knows English as well as, if not better than, Spanish. Both the Infantas, Isabella and Eulalia, have an excellent knowledge of English, but the ex-Queen Isabella is not able to deliver herself of a single word in our language, which she thinks is altogether too barbaric.

The King and Queen of Portugal know English very well, but not so well as the late King Dom Luis, who translated Shakespeare's works into Portuguese. The Dowager Queen, Maria Pia, is not a speaker of English.

The Queen Regent of Holland speaks English with a German accent, but the little Queen without any accent at all. Indeed, it is a matter of no little soreness to some of the superpatriotic Dutchmen that their Queen is fonder of speaking English than she is of speaking Dutch. Well, anyhow, English, if not a precisely musical tongue, is a more euphemistic language than Dutch.

The King of Wurtemberg speaks English as an Englishman, and the Queen is very good at our language, too.

The Sultan of Turkey doesn t know English and doesn't want to; he knows French, but will only converse direct in Turkish.

On the other hand, the Khedive, if not perfect in English, speaks and understands it remarkably well. He is altogether an excellent linguist—speaking, in addition to English, Arabic, Turkish, German, French and some Greek and Italian.

It will thus be seen that I have on the whole no difficulty in making myself directly understood in my own language with the various royalties with whom from time to time I have the honour of being brought in contact. But when I visit a Court I am invariably asked what language I prefer to speak in, and I always say English, when the King rejoins, "Then we will all speak English."

All this goes to prove that, although we English may not be greatly beloved out of our own country, the great ones of the earth find as a rule our language both useful and interesting. Indeed, the knowledge of English on the Continent is not by any means confined to the rulers, but, with the exception of France, is permeating through all classes. English, in fact, will carry a man almost anywhere. By-and-bye it will, I fancy, be difficult to find an intelligent foreigner who does not know or understand something of our language. THE BENI-ISRAEL OF BOMBAY.

"PEARSON'S SOCIETY NEWS," of June 22nd, p. 725, has a fling at our belief, and brings the Beni-Israel to bear against "the certain old women of both sexes," who according to this authority have long been exercised concerning the fate of "the lost tribes of the children of Israel." News from India is credited with settling the fate of a portion, at least, of these lost people, because near Bombay "a Jewish tribe" has been discovered bearing a name, which translated means "the children of Israel." If these Beni-Israel are "a Jewish tribe" they are not "the people wanted," because the Ten Tribes were Israelites always, but "Jewish people" never! Pearson's Society News does not know the distinction, and consequently jeers without knowledge, and rails at us without being aware of the very foundation of our belief! But supposing that the Beni-Israel of the Bombay Presidency are a remnant of the Ten Tribes of Israel, and not Jews at all, then we have to say that if they are a rift of the lost people they are cut off from the chosen and blessed remnant, separated from the covenant of their God, and bereft of the birthright blessings of the House of Israel, which was to be an imperial people in "the Isles of the West," holding the Gates of their enemies, wealthy to a degree, and occupied as a Christian nation in spreading the Gospel of Christ among all nations, families, and kindreds of the earth. Prophecy gives to the real Beni-Israel the empire of the ocean, of the heathen, and of the Hebrew Colonies; also respect for the Christian Sabbath, the Hebrew Decalogue, and the Word of God. The following texts support our statements in the order named:—Gen. xviii. 18, xxii. 17, 18; Deut. xv. 6, xxviii. 1—13; Hosea i. 10; Exod. xxxi. 13—17; Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20. Now, none of these things can be said of the Bombay Beni-Israel. They are a poor, degraded, despised people—not Christian at all. They are incapable of teaching other nations anything, for they have nothing to teach worth knowing. Their domicile is in the East, not in the Isles of the West. They have no wealth, or influence, or strength on land or sea; and as to the Hebrew birthright, they have not in possession a single ingredient of it! They may be Jewish by race, but Israelites, blessed by God, they are not! It is very remarkable that those who now undertake to ridicule our views, always manage to expose their own ignorance of the subject they oppose. They show that they have not read our literature, and under the circumstances we wonder exceedingly that they ever venture to attack us! Their punishment in debate is always exemplary, and their position ridiculous.

DO THE BRITISH ENJOY THE BLESSINGS PROMISED TO ISRAEL?

We have often wondered why our opponents, desiring as they do, to show the absurdity of our views, do not attack us in the vital point, and, point blank, deny that "the British nation enjoy the blessings promised by God to the afterseed of Abraham," as we allege they do. If they could do this with success, they would at once cut the ground from under our feet! For if we are not in possession of the good things God promised "to Abraham and his seed for ever," the evidence in support of our contention is absent, and we cannot maintain our case for a moment. If this were a weak point, then, in our armour, we may be sure that our enemies would have found it out and made us feel long ago that they had put us to shame. But it is a fact that our opponents carefully avoid this argument. They never allege that we do not possess the Abrahamic covenanted blessings, or "birthright of Joseph." They take care not to challenge us to the proof of our assertion that this nation inherits the promises bestowed by God Almighty on His people Israel. We propose now, shortly and concisely, to review the evidence on which we maintain that what God promised Abraham and his seed exclusively, He has exclusively bestowed on the British people to-day. If we succeed in doing this we have proved our case, because it stands to reason that God cannot promise to one race and perform His promises to quite another; or give His blessings, which He originally intended Israel to have (for the spiritual benefit of all the other nations, non-Israelite by race), to a different nation, Japhetic in origin, like the British. We take it for granted also that God's promises to Israel were to be fulfilled to them after the First Advent, that is, during the Christian dispensation. For they were connected with salvation through Christ. In them all nations, families, and kindreds of the earth were to be blessed. But there can be no blessing for the nations except from Christ's work as the Saviour of men; and the way of salvation was barred to the nations till after Christ suffered, and till Cornelius, the Roman centurion, proved that in Him, after the resurrection and ascension, the way of life was opened for the whole Gentile world. It is clear, then, that the House of Israel was to enjoy the birthright blessings for the benefit of the world during the Christian dispensation or our times; and it is clear that we must look for the discovery of Israel, now, in possession, too, of all that God declared on oath He would give her to qualify her for the work He set her apart to perform.

In the first place God promised to Abraham as a condition precedent to his seed becoming a blessing to all the nations of the earth, that they should develop into "a great and mighty nation." This appears quite clear from Gen. xii. 1, 2; xviii. 18; xxii. 17, 18, and other texts. But the greatness and mightiness of this Hebrew nation was distinctly to rest upon its vastly increasing population. It was to be blessed with vast multitudinousness, which we in modern times have recognised as an important ingredient of empire. We may find this stated in Gen. xiii. 16, xv. 5, xxii. 17, xxvi. 4; Hosea i. 10, &c. Then this "great and mighty" and increasing nation was to possess "the Gate of its enemies," or of those that "hate them"; a gift which clearly showed that this was to be a conquering maritime race, holding the supremacy of the seas, curbing and subduing their enemies everywhere, and growing in power and influence in the four quarters of the globe. The texts that point to and predict these things are to be found in Gen. xxii. 17, xxiv. 60; and Deut. xxxiii. 17. But this Hebrew, conquering and mighty nation was to be an island race, occupying "islands afar off from Jerusalem," to the West and yet in the North, or North country, with territory too strait for their increasing numbers. The following point to these facts: Jer. xxxi. 10; Isa. xli. 1, 5; xlii. 4, 11, 12; xlix. 1; Jer. iii. 18; Isa. xlix. 12 and 20. It was also to be a wealthy people; knowing how to get wealth, possessed of the divinely-bestowed power to get it, and that for God's own glory; able with it so acquired, to lend to many nations, but to borrow from none—to reign over many nations, but to be subservient to none (see Deut. viii. 18, xv. 6, xxviii. 12). Finally the seed of Israel were promised development into "a nation and company of nations"; also the possession of "the desolate heritages of the earth"; and the exalted privilege of being the missionaries from God and His Christ, to all the nations, all the families, and to all the kindreds of the earth, blossoming and budding, and filling the face of the world with fruit. These are promises, sui generis, described in Gen. xxviii. 14, xxii. 18, xxvi. 4, xvii. 6, and Isa. xlix. 8 The question we state for reply is, whether in this, the Christian dispensation, we can find a nation which responds to the description given in Scripture in respect to the points we have set out above. We have to find, then,—

(1) A great and mighty nation,
(2) Exhibiting as the cause of its greatness, immense and increasing population;
(3) Holding the Gates of its enemies everywhere;
(4) Supreme therefore at sea;
(5) Occupying "islands afar off from Jerusalem,"
(6) To the North and the West thereof; being
(7) A people wealthy to a degree,
(8) Lending to many nations, borrowing from none,
(9) Developing into a federation of States;
(10) Holding the desolate places of the earth, and making them like the garden of the Lord:
(11) Acting as true missionaries for Christ to all the nations;
(12) And filling the face of the world with fruit.

In reply to this challenge, we maintain that the British alone, exclusively, among the nations respond to all these signs, and that together, they constitute the "birthright of Joseph," as described in the Scriptures. For it is admitted by all that the British nation is indeed "a great and mighty" one, surpassing in size, power, wealth, and magnificence, all the great Empires which have hitherto dominated the earth. It is many times larger than were those of Egypt, Babylon, Assyria, Greece, and Rome; and no nation now existing on the earth can compare with it. Its greatness depends on its great increase of population which sends forth colonists like swarms of fishes to occupy the earth. It has also another and remarkable peculiarity. The nation has, in its expansion, seized hold of and retained just those places throughout the earth which are strategic positions, giving power to the occupants to influence and acquire foreign territory, wealth, and commerce, with military and naval preponderance, as well as national extension and dominion. This power of the Gate is unique in the history of the world, as exercised by the British nation, and it is an exclusive possession as regards the other existing Powers and States of the world. The possession of the Gate power is, in these days of steam, the possession of nearly all the coaling stations of the world, and confers, therefore, as any reflecting mind can see, the supremacy of the ocean upon the British.

The home of our race has been for generations a couple of islands, strategically placed in respect of Europe, and occupying the centre of the whole of the habitable land surface of the globe. They are the only two islands large enough for the domicile of the Ten Tribes in the direction prophetically indicated—namely, "afar off from Jerusalem," to the West and to the North of Palestine, and they are the only islands which respond to Isa. xxiv. 15, as Israel's habitation, 'the Isles of the sea." or "West" (Ii yâm). The wealth of the inhabitants of this Empire is proverbial, and it exceeds that of any other nation on the face of the earth. The income of the nation is computed to be about 2,000 millions a year; its savings 200 millions per annum! "It lends to many nations," as any newspaper of the day will prove, but it never wants to borrow, as in case of need its own children supply the money wanted. This nation presents the extraordinary aspect of a people whose many colonies and possessions to the West and to the East, to the North and to the South, in Canada, in India, in the Arctic Circle, and in Australia, and South Africa, are developing, or have already developed, into "nations." each with Parliamentary constitutions and powers of self government, but each and all, at the same time, loyal to their old mother in the West, being a "Federation of States," as observed by the Times, "such as the world has never seen before."'

Their colonies have been founded in what may truly be called real "desolations," or in the language of Scripture, "the desolate heritages," that is, countries reserved for the occupation of the Israelite heirs by God Himself, but held till their arrival by "stationary savagedom," or the "cheaper races" of the earth, such as the red men of North America, the black men of Australia, the Maori of New Zealand, the Fijian, or South Sea Islanders of Australasia, or the Kaffirs and Zulus of South Africa. It is notorious that our race has occupied these "desolate" places, and within a century and a half have converted them all into flourishing Christian communities—many of them already ranking as nations, wealthy to a degree, owners of gold, silver, diamond, and ruby mines, and of a commerce which the older nations of the European Continent can hardly match.

Finally, the British nation is a Christian, missionary nation, whose aim and object is to spread the Gospel and the Word of God among all the nations, families, and kindreds of the earth. Their British and Foreign Bible Society is first and foremost in the work as respect the Holy Scriptures; and the Church Missionary, the Jews, and the Nonconforming Missionary Societies working throughout the whole world, tell us that our own people, unlike those of the continent, are alone, with American help, doing the spiritual work God gave Israel exclusively to perform, and that, therefore, we are Israel. Here, then, is a mass and body of evidence easily accesible to everyone who can read, and who can verify from the Scriptures and from current history whether these things are so. They can see from the open Bible that the blessings we have named are all of them described there as the exclusive heirlooms of the House of Israel by the oath, promise, and covenants, of God Almighty, and they are each and all of them exclusively the possessions and blessings appertaining to our own nation and Empire to-day. What is the logical result of the foregoing facts? Surely that it is now proved by sufficient evidence, that the British are the Lost House of Israel, discovered and restored by the power of God at the time predicted, and in the place foretold, to carry out His purpose of love by their means towards all the nations. "For God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have eternal life" (John iii. 16). And according to Isa. xxvii. 6, R.V., we have the instrument God chose to carry out His will clearly depicted: "In the days to come Jacob shall take root, Israel shall blossom and bud; and they shall fill the face of the world with fruit." To the Lord let Israel give all the praise!

THE UNEMPLOYED.

By Z. P. P., of Sydney, N.S.W.

PART I.

"How to Find Work for the Increasing Number of Unemployed; How to Feed the Hungry, Clothe the Naked, and Provide Homes for the Poor."—By a Member of the Council of the Anglo-Israel Association, Sydney, N.S.W.

At a Church Congress a short time ago the Rev. Canon Farrar said, "In this reign . . . the population of these kingdoms has increased 42 per cent.; it is increasing at the rate of over 1,000 a day, by 370,000 a year. . . . If the present increasing rate and growth of London continues . . . there is no reason why it should not be, at the end of the century, a city of 20 or 30 millions of people, a spectacle infinitely greater and more stupendous than has ever been seen."

At a banquet in Sydney, on the anniversary of American Independence, in 1885, the late Right Hon. Wm. Bede Dalley, P.C., the Attorney-General of Sydney, said, "Our British Empire, at this moment embraces more than one-sixth part of all the land of the earth, and comprehends nearly one-fourth of its population, and of this population 50,000,000 are of Anglo-Saxon descent. Its area is 9,000,000 square miles, its population 313,000,000 of persons, its annual revenues are £205,000,000, and its exports and imports are £1.060,000,000 per annum. Its forces, including militia, are more than 1,500,000, and its navy consists of 60,000 men. The United States of America have an area of 3,602,900 square miles, with a population of 55,000,000. a revenue of £75,000,000, of which 30,321,630 are surplus. She has an annual trade of £292,000,000, of which fully one-half is carried on with the British Empire. She has an army of 150,000. and a navy of 8,500 men. She holds a fifteenth part of the land of the earth, and almost a twenty-third of its population. Unite these stupendous forces, and you will have an area of 12,600,000 square miles, a population of 368,000,000 persons, revenues amounting to £278,000,000, and a trade of £1,352,000,000 a year. Armies of 1,700,000 and navies of 68,500 men, you will have a fourth part of the human race, you will have 100,000,000 men of Anglo-Saxon descent, and you will have 42,000,000 capable of bearing arms. The imagination of the strongest is affected by such a prospect, and no words could picture such an awful amount of grandeur, of power, and authority, as these few figures present to our wondering eyes."

The "stupendous spectacle" of Canon Farrar, the "awful amount of grandeur, power, and authority" of the Right Hon. W. B. Dalley, can only be explained by Gen. xii. 2, xvii. 4—8, 15—16, xxii. 15—18: "A father of many nations have I made thee." "And she (Sarah) shall be a mother of nations, kings of people shall be of her." "By Myself have I sworn, saith the Lord, for because thou has done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son, that in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of heaven, and as the sand which is upon the sea-shore, and thy seed shall possess the Gate of his enemies, and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed," which last refers to our Lord Jesus Christ. Prophecies and historical facts prove beyond doubt that Anglo-Saxons are the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel. "Scholars," "students of the races of mankind," and "theologians" may sneer at Anglo-Israelism as not worthy of serious discussion, but they cannot disprove facts, and the facts are that the Anglo-Saxon race are doing the work, occupying the position, and becoming a multitude of nations, as Jacob foretold that the younger son of Joseph would become (Gen. xlviii. 19), and that the British Empire is the "stone cut out of the mountain without hands," and "is filling the whole earth" (Dan. ii. 34, 35, 45). And in doing this work as God hath commanded it to be done, the problem of how to find work for the unemployed, to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, and provide homes for the poor will be solved, and in no other way."

"Thus saith the Lord, in an acceptable time have I heard thee, and in the day of salvation have I helped thee, and I will preserve thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people to establish the earth, to cause to inherit the desolate heritages." "For thy waste, and thy desolate places, and the land of thy destruction (captivity) shall even now be too narrow by reason of its inhabitants. . . . The children which thou shalt have, after thou hast lost the other, shall say again in thine ears, The place is too strait for me; give place to me where I may dwell" (Isa. xlix. 3, 8, 19, 20). The command follows, "Enlarge thy tent, and let them stretch forth the curtains of thy habitation; spare not, lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes, for thou shalt break forth on the right hand and on the left, and thy seed shall inherit the Gentiles, and make the desolate cities to be inhabited" (Isa. liv. 2, 3).

What is this but a foretelling of what has happened and is happening in England, and a plain direction how to use the waste, desolate places—the colonies which God has given her, and which He is forcing her to use by the cry of her children, "The place is too strait for me; give place to me where I may dwell"? England is the only country that has lost children, and the "children lost" are the Americans, and they are Manasseh, "a people, and great"; but his younger brother Ephraim-Israel is "greater than he, and his seed has become a multitude of nations," between 60 and 70 colonies (Gen. xlviii. 15—20).

AN ADVERTISEMENT OF THE WORK OF THE REV. W. H. POOLE, LL.D.

In circulating the last report of the British-Israel Association, some of the copies issued by the clerk at the office, No. 86, St. Martin's-lane, S.W., were accompanied by an advertisement or handbill respecting the recent work of the Rev. W. H. Poole, LL.D., of Detroit, Mich., U.S. America. This handbill, which was not forwarded to the editor of the Banner or to the Gen. Secretary (the Rev. F. Aston), was headed thus:—

"The Germans, Danes, Swedes, and Saxons proved to be the Lost Tribes of Israel," by the Rev. W. H. Poole, LL.D. Certain "weighty opinions" expressed by various reviewers of the work followed, among whom figured the Banner of Israel, published in London, England. We are stated to have said of the work described as above, "It is commended everywhere. We can highly recommend this work. It is written clearly, carefully, and convincingly." In regard to the above some of our friends are greatly shocked to find that we had been induced to praise and highly recommend a work openly described as purely Teutonic; such a work in fact as the Rev. Robert Douglas might have written; and explanations on the subject have very naturally and properly been demanded of us.

In reply, what we have to say is this: The handbill in question is clearly the work of an enemy! Whether that enemy resides at the London office of the British-Israel Association (86, St. Martin's-lane), or whether an American "opponent" has issued a false advertisement and our London friends are circulating it in ignorance of its contents, we do not know. What we do know is this. Dr. Poole's work, as we read it, is not Teutonic in the least degree. It deals with our subject very fully and entirely on Banner lines. It refers to the Jews, and also to the Anglo-Saxons as the modern descendants of the Lost Ten Tribes, and we dealt with it accordingly in our review, giving credit to the writer for an able work, but refusing to speak of it with unqualified praise, because of certain rather grave faults, of which the chief was that it was carelessly written in some particulars. The "weighty opinions" said to be ours in the advertisement in question are not quite fairly quoted. Such being the case we should be glad to know if any other members besides one of Dr. Hanan's friends, and Mrs. G. A. Rogers have received the handbill in question from our London office? And if so, whether they can identify the handwriting of the address on their covers? We would add that our review of Dr. Poole's large work appeared in Vol. XIII., No. 669 of the Banner, page 426, on October 23, 1889.

Those who have that volume can see exactly what we said then and how far we approved of the work. No mention appears therein respecting the alleged Teutonic evidence produced by Dr. P. to show that "the Germans, Danes, Swedes, and Saxons" are the Lost Ten Tribes.

Since the above was written we have been informed on the best authority that the handbill in question was received by Mr. Lowe at our London office from Dr. Poole in America, in view to its distribution by him; and that, deeming the Teutonic theory to be one regarding which we ought all to agree to differ (!), he circulated it to some members not living in London. Mr. Lowe was once, to our knowledge, a supporter of the Teutonic theory, and he believes in it now. He has in this instance by overt action done his best to circulate a handbill which describes Dr. Poole's work as decidedly of Teutonic character, and so has compromised the positions of the editor of the Banner and of the British-Israel Association, his employers, under whose direction he is presumed to work. We have no doubt some action will be taken by the Council to set this matter right; but we hardly see how Dr. Poole can longer remain on the list of our vice-presidents if, as the handbill purports, he has, perhaps, issued from the Press some new edition of his work, adopting the theory which we have all strenuously refused to recognise for twenty years.

We leave the matter now for the consideration of the Council, and hope to be shortly in a position to declare what resolution has been adopted in regard to this serious affair.

Professor C. A. L. Totten on The Millennium.—I believe the Millennium will come because the now prevalent spirit of general expectancy exactly counterparts that which obtained in the days that preceded the first Advent. That is, all the world is poised upon the tiptoe of anticipation, and is peering forward! Others may explain this attitude as they will; to me it is merely a manifestation, among men of that familiar sub-consciousness by which the lower orders of the animal kingdom apprehend the approach of unusual phenomena in nature.

A Splendid Lockstich Sewing Machine given away to the readers of this paper for a trivial sum as a trial, and also

£1,500 in PRIZES.

You can get a thoroughly good machine for 7s., and possibly receive a sovereign as well. The most extraordinary offer ever heard of. The more sewing machines we can sell, the less they cost to make, and at this extremely quiet time of the year we are glad to sell goods without profit to keep our workpeople employed. We sell these machines at about half what they cost to make, as we have a large stock made up, and also offer the purchasers of these machines £500 in Cash Prizes, and £1,000 in other valuable prizes. We guarantee at least one prize to every ten customers, so that the facts are that you get for certain double value for your money, and, in addition, may receive a sovereign in cash. With every machine we send away, a free coupon is given, and one out of every ten coupons obtains a prize. This gigantic offer is only made to secure an immense number of orders, and such an opportunity may never occur again. There is no nonsense or catch about the machines. They are thoroughly well made, each one examined and tested, every part is finished with the greatest care. Every machine is a lockstitch, having a proper shuttle. There are over fifty parts to every machine. The working parts are silver-plated. Every machine complete, with handle, cotton, spool, &c., &c., securely packed in box and sent, carriage free, for 7s., including the free coupon which may bring you £1 in cash or a Guinea Silver Watch. Extra needles 1s. per dozen. Three extra spools for 6d. Oil can and oil, 6d. Please send at once, and if the machine does not suit you, we will take it back with pleasure.

WHAT DOES "THE UNION JACK" MEAN?

THE Daily Telegraph of December 23rd, 1892, commenting on the proposal before the London School Board "to give the young Briton some notion of the mighty heritage and glorious traditions which are his birthright," asks, "How many English schoolboys are aware what the Union Jack means"? What particular union is signified? Whether it "merely means the marriage of red, white, and blue on our bit of bunting, or is there some history behind the crossing lines?"

A friend suggests our sending a letter to the Daily Telegraph to explain this bit of history, from an Identity point of view, but we prefer to deal with the matter in our own columns rather than incur the disappointment of the rejection of our effort, with the "waste-paper basket" as the final destination thereof.

There is, of course, some history behind the Union Jack which can very easily be explained to the young people whom our board schools educate, and should inspire with patriotic ardour to keep our Empire intact. The Cross of St. George representing England was in A.D. 1707 by 5th Anne c. 8 mingled with the cross of St. Andrew, to represent "the union" of the then two kingdoms of Great Britain—England and Scotland.

The union of Great Britain and Ireland took place in 1800 by 39 and 40 George III. c. 67, and then was added to the crosses of St. George and St. Andrew, the third cross of St. Patrick to represent that the three kingdoms—England, Scotland, and Ireland—were undissolubly united, never to be parted asunder, as the Separatists in our political circles seem now to be intent upon doing. This is the information which lies upon the surface and which any good history would supply.

But what were these three separate kingdoms thus brought under one sceptre in 1707 and 1808. They were, according to our views, three great divisions of the ten-tribed body of Israelites who at various periods of past history from before 200 years B.C. to A.D. 1066 arrived in these islands from the East, whose destiny was finally to amalgamate and become subjects of the throne represented by a scion of the House of David, according to 1 Kings viii. 25 and Jer. xxxiii. 20—26.

The object of the application to the School Board is that by means of the exhibition of the Union Jack and by periodical lectures at stated intervals on the flag, the minds of our young people may as in the United States be brought to see the value of our national flag, and so their patriotism may be excited and maintained. The Daily Telegraph would cultivate "the patriotism that lies as a dormant instinct in the breasts of all English youths, to give it material on which to work and to encourage it not to be ashamed of itself."

The proceedings on the agenda paper of the School Board of December last contained the following, including a letter from the Earl of Meath, which will be read with interest:—

PATRIOTISM IN THE BOARD SCHOOLS.

The agenda paper of last week contained the following motion, in the name of Mr. Benson Clough: "That the National Flag, the Union Jack, be supplied to each of the boys' and girls' departments under the Board, and that the flag be hung over the head teacher's desk, or in some prominent position in the school." The motion was not reached until an hour, when, according to the standing orders, it could not be discussed. Yesterday's minutes contained the following letter, which has been received on the subject by Mr. Diggle from the Earl of Meath:—

"Dear Mr. Diggle,—I have received your letter of the 2nd instant, and I am pleased to hear that you 'feel with (me) the necessity for arousing a spirit of patriotism' in our schools, but regret that you do not see your way to introduce some ceremony like the American of 'saluting the flag' into the schools under your charge. Curiously enough, I read in the Times of December 12th, which arrived here yesterday, that the Bishop of Peterborough has been speaking on this very subject, and is reported to have expressed his agreement with me, though I have had no communication with him, in the following words, that 'it would really be a very good thing if we had the Union Jack, the symbol of what was great in the past, and of our hopes of united action in the future, in our schools.' I should be the very last to wish to encroach for one moment on the time devoted to religious instruction; but is that really the only opportunity which could be found during which the master could recall some inspiriting memory connected with the flag, or recite some heart-stirring passage or poem, such as Tennyson's 'Defence of Lucknow,' with its noble refrain, 'And ever aloft on the topmost tree the banner of England flew!' Might it not be possible, say, on the first Monday in each month, to spare ten minutes from secular work, after the religious instruction, to give the young Briton some notion of the mighty heritage and glorious traditions which are his birthright? I feel so encouraged by your expressed sympathy with my views, and so confident that something might be done in this direction, without materially interfering either with the religious or secular instruction, that, as an inducement to give the subject a fair trial, I would desire to make here a formal offer, through you, to the School Board of London of the sum of £50 (fifty pounds), to be expended in the purchase of Union Jacks, on condition that one be suspended permanently on the walls of the largest room in each school, so far as the money will go, and that the masters and mistresses be directed to give periodical lectures to the children of a national and patriotic character, at the completion of which the flag should be carried round the room, and be replaced in position by the scholar who has distinguished himself or herself most during the time that has elapsed since the last ceremony; the other scholars meantime singing some patriotic song, such as the 'National Anthem' or 'Rule Britannia.' Hoping that the School Board of London will consent to accept my offer, and thus set an example to the rest of the country," &c., &c.

The minutes also contained a letter which had been received by Mr. Diggle from Mr. Clough stating that the Earl of Meath's suggestions and generous offer in his letter so exactly expressed Mr. Clough's views that he should be glad to subscribe £5 towards the purchase of flags under the conditions suggested by him or arranged by the School Management Committee.

On the motion of the chairman, both letters were referred to the School Management Committee for consideration and report. The report was again reached, when only unopposed business could be taken, and accordingly stands postponed. The Board afterwards adjourned till January 26th.

The Earl of Meath writes of every young Briton's "mighty heritage" and "glorious traditions" which are his "birthright." But the birthright is that of the sons of Joseph, mentioned in 1 Chron. v. 1, 2, also in Gen. xlviii. 15—21, xlix. 22—26; and there is no nation extant save the sons of Jacob and Joseph, to whom any birthright at all is attached in God's Word or His Providence. To the two sons of Joseph, the son of Israel, the Lord gave as their birthright, dominion, and power, and wealth incredible, the custody of the stone of Israel, multitudes of population, and therefore Empire by sea and by land. These things set on high above all other races the nation so distinguished, and the Lord Jesus Christ added the spiritual gifts represented by "the kingdom of God" and all the good gifts appertaining thereto which by His divine fiat He took away from the Jews and bestowed upon Ephraim-Israel, His chosen ones.

Our object and aim is to publish these good tidings, so that they may penetrate all classes of society and be at last brought within reach of our Board School scholars. Then only will they see the enormous value of our United Kingdom from which has emanated an Empire in the four quarters of the globe—that is already "a federation of States such as the world has never seen before"—and a heathen empire so vast that it is the envy and the wonder of the nations.

If our School Board children could be taught these things, and be well grounded in them, we should hear but little, when they come to years of discretion of Separatist movements, of a desire to give up India as a worthless possession, and of querulous objections that we have no business in Africa, but should throw up all our outland possessions and confine ourselves to Great Britain only, Ireland being left to consolidate into a hostile nation at our right hand. To all this we say, God forbid. The young Briton has indeed "a mighty heritage," because he belongs to the House of Israel, and he has "a splendid birthright," which is his only, because he belongs to God's chosen covenanted people, the sons of Joseph, Ephraim-Israel. To Him be all the praise.

WHAT NAME?

By B. Hailes.

There is a spirit of unrest in the air, everyone wondering what is coming. If we turn to the money market we see "men's hearts failing them for fear," if to the House of Commons an attempt, such as has never been equalled in audacity, to disintegrate the empire—while everywhere, not only in this country but throughout the world, we hear of strikes which bring in their train untold misery and loss. Then again, our hearts are rent by appalling catastrophes, and "perplexity" well describes the state of mind in which many find themselves.

Continually one hears the pessimistic cry—England's day is over, and we are told that as Rome and Greece, when they reached the zenith of their greatness, began to fall, so must it be with England; she must lose Ireland, because she is to form one of the ten toes of Daniel's image; her trade is already slipping away from her. Russia is ready to relieve her of India, France, of Egypt, and though we build an Imperial Institute and open it with such éclat, are not the Colonies ready to throw off the mother country and fend for themselves?

To all these God-dishonouring fears, we most emphatically reply, No. God promised to Abraham "A nation and a company of nations shall be of thee," and this promise of multitudinous seed and dominion was renewed again and again to the "heir of the world" and to his descendants. We very naturally then ask those, who are so downhearted, and see nothing but evil for England in the future, to point out where "this nation and company of nations," this people of the "Most High," to whom is promised "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven," is to be found. Surely, if we are to take such a gloomy view of our own national prospect, it would be wise to search and find out where this nation, to whom throughout the Bible such glorious promises are given, is, so that in some way we might ally ourselves to her, and become partakers of her blessings.

We look around and we compare the promises in God's Word, with the state and condition of every nation which has been, or is, and doing so, how can one fail to see that in England alone have these promises been fulfilled, or help coming to the conclusion that she is the fifth or stone kingdom which is to become a great mountain which shall fill the whole earth. It is true that "we are a sinful nation, a people laden with iniquity," but was Israel chosen because of her holiness? Would the Saviour of the world have come to redeem His people had they been altogether righteous? As a father chastens the son of his love, so undoubtedly God chastens His people nationally as well as individually, and when His hand is laid upon the nation, "when His judgments are in the earth," it is well that we should "learn righteousness," but that we should cry that England's day is over, when God is so visibly still giving her "power to get wealth," and dominion and greatness, when far from the empire being disintegrated, there are very evident signs that it is the desire of the English speaking people to be drawn nearer to their mother country, is surely to show a lack of faith. Never was there a time when God's hand could be more clearly traced in over-ruling the destinies of the nation. Too apt are we, in the busy hurrying days of the present, to forget that there is a God ruling over all, that no statesman can go beyond His will, and that, however, it may seem at times, that all things are out of course, God has a distinct plan which He will cause even His enemies to work out, so that to Him shall be all the praise.

That this plan is being worked out and the way prepared for the coming of His kingdom, by the desire and the need for the drawing closer together of the ties which bind the Anglo-Saxon people, who can doubt? How this is to be accomplished is a question working in many minds, and any solution thereof is to be gladly welcomed.

Perhaps J. Astley Cooper is not far wrong when he says in his article on the "Pan-Britannic Gathering," in the Nineteenth Century Review for July: "I have often thought that the man who could invent an acceptable common name for all citizens of the empire as such, like German, would do more at a blow to solidarify, if I may coin the word, the Queen's subjects than all the federation schemes under the sun." "All-Anglian," the name which he suggests, has, without doubt, much to recommend it, but do we not know a yet better?

Perhaps the time has not yet come when we can boldly claim that All-Israel is the proper name. We should be met with the ever-recurring remonstrance "We are not Jews." We admit that, though why, even with the knowledge of all that clings to the apostate race, in these so-called enlightened days, the name which most certainly belonged to our Lord should be held by Christians in such contempt is a question difficult to answer.

Not we fear till our clergy and teachers learn to distinguish between Judah and Israel, to know that though Jews are Israelites, all Israelites are not Jews, will the knowledge of who we are become popular. And even if some do give their consent to the statement that the blessings promised to Abraham are enjoyed by the Anglo-Saxon races, the question may be asked, how can you apply the name All-Israel to the dusky sons of India, or the swarthy races of Africa? Just we reply in the same manner as we could call them All-Anglian—they belong to the empire, they are under the sway of England's sovereign and governed by her laws.

When the children of Israel made their exodus from Egypt, we read "A mixed multitude," or as the margin has it, "A great mixture," "went up also with them." And yet they were all included in the name Israel. May we not then look forward to the near approach of the time when once again the old name shall be revived, and all the ends of the empire glory in being called "Israel, a prince of God."

WHAT I SAW IN INDIA.

LET me begin by saying that the principal thing I saw in India was India! And indeed it is no light thing to see India. It is true that I saw only small fragments of that overwhelmingly vast land, with its appalling millions and millions of human beings. Still, first in one's thoughts, and above all details of heathenism or of mission work, is that great, tremendous India. If one goes to Chamonix, one sees Mont Blanc; and although one only sees a very small portion of its hugh bulk from any point of view, still the mountain itself in its grandeur is what fills the imagination and the memory, rather than this or that glacier or snow slope or jutting rock. So it is with India.

And this India, in the mysterious providence of the Most High God, has come into the possession of our remote little kingdom! It is a truly wonderful thing to travel 6,000 miles on Indian railways, as I did,—to see the multitudes of natives that crowd the long trains, joining and leaving them by hundreds at almost every small station,—to observe the enormous flat plains over which one travels, and know that the scores of groves of trees visible at any point represent each of them a village,—to watch the diversity of languages, the placards at the stations being sometimes printed in four different characters,—and then to consider that this hugh country with its teeming population belongs to our England. Then to reflect that for all these myriads the Son of God died; that they do not know it, and we do; and that we are content to let them go down to the grave at the rate of nearly 30,000 souls a day without telling them of their Saviour and ours! It is not for us to judge them. They are in the hands of Infinite Justice and Infinite Love. But it is high time that we Christians sat in judgment on ourselves. Our Master has told us in the plainest possible words to go and teach them. Are we doing it?

The answer to this question is easily given. There are in India about 850 ordained missionaries of different Protestant churches and denominations. That sounds a large number, as missionary statistics go. But it means that, on an average, each of them has to care for 340,000 souls. That is as if the town of Leeds had just one minister of the Gospel, and the county of Suffolk another. But I shall be reminded that the ordained missionaries are not the whole force: that there are also their wives, and unordained men, and single women, besides all the native teachers. Exactly so; and so it is in England—only much more so.

Does any one observe that much the same may be said regarding China and Africa, to say nothing of smaller mission fields? Quite true; but the case of India is unique, because it belongs to us. For my part, I never can plead for anything less than the whole world. "The whole world lieth in wickedness." "He is the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world." "Go ye into all the world." But yet the various fields have their special pleas. If we owe a debt to China on account of opium, and to Africa on account of the slave trade, and to Palestine as Immanuel's Land, surely we owe one to India as God's great special gift to England. Does He not seem to say to us, "Take this child and nurse it for Me"? Is not its possession a "talent" given to our nation, with which we are to "trade" (St. Luke xix. 13, R.V.)—not merly "trade" in the way of earthly commerce for our own enrichment, but "trade" for Him who is coming soon to know what every man has gained for Him by trading?

I do not know how to put into words the overwhelming sense of responsibility to the Lord which fills the heart and mind at the sight, not of this or that mission station, but of India. "Great, dark, hungry China," wrote that devoted young missionary, Harvey, whom God called away at the very threshold of what promised to be a bright missionary career; and those pregnant words of his have gone home to many a heart, in the Colonies as well as at home. And now I pray God to lay on the hearts of His people "great, dark, hungry India." Great it assuredly is; and oh, so dark!—but is it "hungry"? Well, unconscious starvation is the most dangerous kind of starvation; so that if it be true that comparatively few in India are consciously "hungering for the Gospel," that only makes the case worse. But there are a good many, too, who really are hungry, and know it. Again and again is the itinerating missionary, having spent months in journeying from village to village in some great district, greeted, as he enters one, with the words, "Oh, how long since you came! we thought you were never coming again, and we want to know more: do stay for a month"—when scores and scores of other villages are still waiting their turn for a visit. When I see the great gatherings of enthusiastic crowds at our home missionary meetings, and then think of the dear brethren and sisters wearing their lives away on those endless plains of North India, in the utterly impossible task (with such a handful) of "preaching to every creature," I wonder what the angels must think of us all—not to speak of the loving Saviour Himself, with His tender compassion yearning over those multidudes. Lord, send forth more labourers! Lord, send forth more labourers!

But they must be labourers of the right kind. Yes, indeed!—and I should like to enlarge on that subject. But this I must not do now. Only let me say that a missionary in India is of little use who has not taken as his life-motto the words, "None of self, and all of Thee." No words can tell how deeply I feel this, after my recent tour; but I should shrink from saying it, were it not that I can look back with such thankful admiration and remember the many men, and still more the many women, who seem to have adopted that motto and to be living up to it.

And indeed, if India is the thing first in one's remembrance of all one saw in India, the second place is certainly occupied by the missionaries. There was much else not to be forgotten: natural wonders, like the Himalayas and the Ganges; grand cities, ancient and modern; fine buildings, temples, and tombs, churches and hospitals; faces and figures, costumes and customs, full of variety, full of interest; glimpses of heathenism to make the heart sick; types of native Christianity to fill the heart with praise. But it is the missionaries themselves upon whom the memory most loves to dwell. I shall have occasion to mention many of them by name in future articles. Let me only now mention just a few without naming them, though it will not be hard to identify them.

I think of a white-haired and white-bearded veteran, who after more than forty years of almost unbroken labour, still conducts the affairs of one of the great divisions of the Indian field. He was the first missionary in the province; he himself began many of the now numerous stations and splendid agencies; and although he has had, and still has, many noble comrades, I do not wonder that one of the noblest of them said to me, "Take away what he has done in the province, and what remains?" Still he goes on with indomitable patience, faith that grows year by year, and an energy that few attempt to emulate, and that none can surpass. It is an inspiring example indeed. God grant our younger brethren grace to follow it.

Again, I think of a young clergyman at the head of a high school. Several hours a day is he among those hundreds of heathen and Mohammedan boys. From class to class he moves, taking his full share in the various branches of teaching which have attracted them to the school and brought them under his influence, but devoting his best energies to his Bible lessons, patiently bearing the opposition of proud human nature, the listless don't-care-ism of the thoughtless and indifferent, and the physical impossibility of one man getting at all those hundreds individually; with one consuming desire in his soul, to win some of those young hearts and lives for Christ, but with crushing disappointment again and again, as one and another passes out of the school unmoved, and yet knowing that the Lord's simple command to him is to go on testifying of Him, "whether they will hear or whether they will forbear." Who among all Christian workers needs our prayerful sympathy more? And let me ask another question: Who will go and share his labours?

Then I think of a little band of men in a populous rural district, living in the simplest way right among the people on less than £60 a year each: two of them clergymen, graduates of their University, and more than one of the laymen a man who has given up lucrative prospects at home. I think of their brightness, cheerfulness, one may say gaiety; not that they forget the solemnity of the work they are engaged in, but they realise that the Lord is with them, they know that they are conveying glad tidings to weary souls, they see that those souls are not turning a deaf ear to the message.

Again, I think of a man no longer young, formerly holding high office under the Queen-Empress, but now living with his beloved wife as a simple missionary in a little village within the very district which he formerly governed. His modest bungalow has but one large room in it, which is divided by curtains into sitting-room, dining-room, and study. Close by is a little school, and a little dispensary, and a native pastor's house; and then there is a village, partly Christian, and partly still heathen. He is not so remotely located as many others, for he is only three miles from a railway station; but then he is constantly wanted at the capital of the province for various committee meetings, and especialy as an accomplished scholar and linquist, for translation and revision of the Scriptures, &c.

And that village reminds me of other villages where devoted Christian women are the pioneers: one, in the same province, where church, mission-house, pastor's house, school, hospital, &c., have all been built by the personal liberality and energy of the dear grey-haired lady who lives there with four or five young sisters in the Lord, and no English male missionary near; and another 1,500 miles distant, where again there is no Englishman, but where I found a native pastor and three English ladies. Two of these are new recruits, but the third is a missionary of eleven years' experience, who had, before they came, lived there quite alone, and wandered over the whole country round, sometimes with a tent, and sometimes sleeping in a rest-house" (unfurnished mud hut!), attended perhaps by a native Bible-woman and by two coolies to carry her bedding and her cooking utensils—a woman still young, yet looked up to as already almost a "mother in Israel."

And it is not to villages only that my admiring memory goes back as I think of the lady missionaries. They are in the great hard cities, too, here working some delightful mission hospital with its beautiful subsidiary agencies of Christian love, there guiding the studies, and the personal lives, of clever dark-eyed girls or little orphan children, and others again going in and out of the zenanas, both Mohammedan and Hindu, patiently telling "o'er and o'er again" the message of Divine love.

Yes, thank God for the missionaries! They do need our prayers: they are not angels, but men and women of like passions as ourselves, and they are, I verily believe, the special object of the devil's subtlety and malice. But who are we that we should judge them? As Mr. Horsburgh says in "Do Not Say," if we think them inferior people, surely we superior people ought to go out and supersede them! If we long that the power of the Holy Ghost should be more fully manifested in Mr. A., or Mrs. B., or Miss C., well, the throne of grace is accessible! What a blessing there would be in India, and in China and Africa, and all the world, too, if we at home could be described in the words of Eph. vi. 18—"Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints." And assuredly each missionary brother and sister, conscious of his or her own weakness and deficiencies, would wish to add the next words—"And for me." E.S.

The above appeared in the June No. of the "Church Missionary Gleaner." Mr. Eugene Stocks' account of "What he saw in India" has a bearing on our subject which our readers will readily perceive. The article is an able one and cannot but be appreciated by British Israelites.

THE UNEMPLOYED.

The London Daily Telegraph, Sept. 30, 1892, says, "It is not too much to say that we never yet had a colonial minister of State who rose to anything like an adequate perception of the dignity, duty, and possibilities of his office. None of them . . . has ever yet shown himself aware to the full extent of the capabilities latent in the colonial portion of the Empire." Anyone who understands prophecy knows that it was not possible for them to have this "adequate perception," because Israel was to be lost, and to become "Lo-ammi"—"not My people" (Hos. ii. 9),—for a time only (ver. 11), and therefore the prophet was commanded: "Go thy way, Daniel, for the words are shut up and sealed till the time of the end" (Dan. xii. 4, 8, 9). But this is "the time of the end," and the colonial minister who makes use of the increased knowledge will confer the greatest benefit upon the Empire, and through its influence upon "all nations of the earth," and will send down his own name to posterity among the world's greatest benefactors.

The "New South Wales Soudan Contingent," as it is called here, which was sent home to aid the Imperial troops by that patriotic statesman the Right Hon. W. B. Dalley, P.C., when the policy of "scuttle" adopted by our modern "Ahitophel" abandoned it, and which we shall have to restore to Egypt, proved to the astonished countries of Europe that the young lions of Israel will be ready to fly to the help of the old lion when the time of need arrives, and will say to Gog, "Art thou come to take a spoil? Hast thou gathered thy company to take a prey? to carry away silver and gold, to take away cattle and goods, to take a great spoil?" (Ezek. xxxviii. 13, &c.).

The late Victor Hugo, a talented French writer and poet, in his "Address to England," wrote at its commencement, "Over the sea, in calm majesty, lies the grand island, whose existence consoles me for a thousand continental crimes, and vindicates for me the goodness of providence." At its conclusion he says, "It shall be thine to undo the work of Babel, and with a pardoned sigh the son of France recognizes in thy tongue the one language of the ages." The ode written by the Countess of Jersey, "One People, One Destiny," breathes the true spirit of Anglo-Israelism, and foreshadows the federation of the Anglo-Saxon race into world-wide Empire, which "Ahitophel," with his Home Rule and disestablishment and disendowment, politely so-called—may be permitted to retard, but cannot prevent:—

For proudly waves the Empire-flag,
O'er fertile valley, and mountain craig,
O'er distant nations, lands, and seas,
Serenely flutters in the breeze:
"Britannia rules the waves."
The "stone cut out," but not with "hands,"*
At home, abroad, in many lands,
A mountain, growing day by day,
While millions own its sovereign sway,
And "Britons"—never slaves—
Serenely dwell beneath that Empire-flag unfurled,
Till higher flies that Empire-flag, the mistress of the world

From flowing Ganges' sacred founts,
To Himalaya's lofty mounts,
From Afric's parched and arid sands,
And from Australia's sunny lands,
Where'er that flag shall fly;
And from New Zealand's rocky strand,
From Canada, o'er sea and land,
From north to south, from east to west,
O'er land, o'er ocean's foaming crest,
From loyal hearts, and loyal tongues, the accents fall:
"Nor Saxon, Scot, nor Celt are we, but Anglo-Israel all."

(3.)

And long that Empire-flag shall fly,
Its waving folds unfurled on high,
And British-Israel tongues shall raise
United voices in its praise.
The Unicorn and Lion,†
Our Anglo-Israel coat-of-arms,
Securely safe from war's alarms,
Beneath that Empire-flag shall rest,
With Judah's Lion as its crest,
Our God, the God of Zion.
Then praise the Lord, who ever Zion's God has been;
O Lord, defend our Empire-flag—"God save the Queen."

The following verses, from Lady Jersey's "One People, One Destiny," are prophetic:—

"Their answer is theirs—the Father who led Their sires, like Israel of yore,‡
All blessings of heaven and earth has shed
On forest, on plain, and on shore;

* Dan. ii. 34, 35, 45: "Forasmuch as thou sawest that the stone was cut out of the mountain without hands, and that it break in pieces the iron, the brass, the clay, the silver, and the gold, the Great God hath made known to the king what shall come to pass hereafter: and the dream is certain, and the interpretation thereof sure." Gen. xlix. 24: "From thence is the stone of Israel."

† Gen. xlviii: "Judah is a lion's whelp." Deut. xxxiii. 17: "His horns are like the horns of unicorns . . . they are the ten thousands of Ephraim, and the thousands of Manasseh."

‡ "Joseph is a fruitful bow . . . whose branches run over the wall (colonies). . . . And by the Almighty who shall bless thee with the blessings of heaven above, blessings of the deep that lieth under . . . unto the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills" (Gen. xlix. 22—26; Deut. xxxiii. 13—17).

Strong-limbed and true-hearted, as tyrant to grind,
No foeman to bid them beware,
To no happy race in the tale of mankind
Has arisen a vision so fair.
Let them, when heart has been knitted to heart,
The future in calmness abide;
Let them, when hand has with hand taken part,
Fear God, and fear nothing beside;
Their Queen has the keys of an empire to keep,*
Where sets and where rises the sun;
Their brothers, her wardens, are lords of the deep,
One people—their destiny one."

The house, kingdom, and throne of David, and the nation of Israel, are in existence now, and Queen Victoria is sitting on that throne, and ruling over the Ten Tribes (the kingdom of Israel), and the time will soon come when "the House of Judah shall walk to the House of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the north (England) to the land which I have given for an inheritance to your fathers" (Jer. iii. 18). "Then shall the children of Judah and the children of Israel be gathered together, and appoint themselves one head" (Hos. ii. 11). The Jews are already looking to England, walking to England, to escape from the persecution which is driving them from European countries, and their Queen has the keys of the Empire. Unlock the Gates of the Empire, and let the unemployed in, for "the place is too strait for me; give place to me where I may dwell."

"TRACED BACK TO JUDEA."

THE following paper, with the above title, appeared in The Daily Express, of San Antonio, Texas, U.S.A., on April 23, 1893. It is interesting as proving that Identity views and arguments have penetrated thus far in America, and are admitted to a place in what looks to be a large and influential journal. The article reads thus:—

"INTERESTING RECORD OF ANTHROPOLOGICAL DEVELOPMENT.—HOW THE AMERICAN AND ENGLISH RACES ARE CONNECTED WITH THE ISRAELITES—QUEEN VICTORIA A DESCENDANT OF DAVID.

To the Editor of the "Daily Express."

Sir,—In an interesting article, published in the issue of the 4th instant, there appears the following statement: 'When our ancestors were brutal barbarians, clad in skins, stripped with sharp stones from beasts scarcely less ferocious, dwelling in caves, subsisting on roots and raw meat, with no aspirations above the crudest creature comforts, no conceptions of the immortal soul, no dream of man's high destiny, Solomon was making silver as the stones in the streets of Jerusalem, the Jews were worshipping 'the Lord of hosts,' framing those laws which are to-day the basic principles of civilization; quelling semi-barbaric peoples with the sword, computing the procession of the planets, and weaving into the woof of human history those imperishable gems of poesy and philosophy which the world's wisest say transcend the genius of mortal man and must, perforce, be the gracious gift of God.

"Now I maintain that if we are descended from Anglo-Saxon, Norman, Scottish or northern Irish stock, our ancestors, far from being in a state of barbarism, were actual subjects of King Solomon, and engaged in the high callings portrayed in the article in question. If, however, we trace our descent through the pure Irish stock, our ancestors were, as subjects of Hiram, the Phœnician, king of Tyre, probably interested in the construction of Solomon's temple.

"To take the last case first: It is amply proved that Ireland was colonized at an early date by the Phœnicians, the Irish language of sixteen letters being the same as was spoken ages ago in the market places of Tyre and Sidon, and the words of the Carthagenian slave in the 'Pœnulus of Plautus' being nearly pure Irish. This I pointed out in an article on 'Language,' contributed to your paper two or three years ago.

"It is a matter of history that the Phœnicians traded as far as Cornwall for tin, and as Solomon had fleets at sea with the fleets of Hiram, king of Tyre, it is probable that the British isles were visited by Hebrews even thus early, and indeed the two oldest towns in Cornwall, the story of whose origin is lost even to tradition, so great is their antiquity, have both Hebrew names, 'Marazion' and 'Port Isaac,' while three kings mentioned in Lloyd's 'Cambria' had the Hebrew name of Solomon. Martin Haverty records, in his history of Ireland, how at a late date, the 'Tuatha de Danaan,' or tribe of Dan, settled in the north of Ireland: and Colonel Gawler, in a pamphlet entitled, 'Dan the Pioneer of Israel,' accounts for the immigration by the intimate relations existing between the tribe of Dan and the Phœnicians. At a still later date the 'Tuatha de Danaan,' under the name of Scoti, crossed over to Caledonia, and, having conquered the people, gave their name to the country, which was thenceforward called Scotland.

"As regards the Anglo-Saxons, Sharon Turner, amongst other historians, traces them back to the Saac-suni of Asia Minor, who are first known to history as inhabiting Armenia and Media about eight centuries before the Christian era, or a little later than when the Israelites (not the Jews or House of Judah) were carried to those very countries as captives by the Assyrians. That these Saacsuni were identical with the Ten Tribes of Israel is rendered more probable by the fact that our American and English common law, which is derived from the ancient common law of the Saxons (Saacsuni), is Hebrew in its character; futhermore, the system of dividing communities into 'hundreds' obtaining in the time of Alfred the Great, and existing as a relic to-day, is entirely Mosaic in character.

"Regarding the other peoples who have intermingled to make the English-speaking people of to-day, E. Reep says, in an article contributed to the Free Christian, of October, 1892: 'The British Celts were so nearly allied to the Galatians that, according to Bishop Lightfoot, the language of the southern Briton and of the Galatian were one and the same. If, then, the British Celts were of Israelitish origin, it is equally clear that Saxon, Angle, Norman, Dane, and Jute were of the same nationality, because it is now settled that the tribes bearing these different names were of the same race and blood as the Celt of Galatia and Britain.

"Now, what is all this but a more complete fulfilment of prophecy than theologians have ever before brought forward in support of the doctrime of the divine inspiration of Scripture? The House of Israel was to be 'a nation and a company of nations.' Compare England, her colonies and our own country. She was to praise God 'in the isles of the west' or in 'the isles of the sea.' Compare the British Isles which are both north and west from Palestine.

"The Isles were to 'become too strait' for her and she was to go forth and 'inherit the desolate places,' of the earth and 'possess the Gates of her enemies.' The English race has inherited nearly all the continent of North America, besides Australia, South Africa, New Zealand, Tasmania, the best part of East Africa, and many other places which were 'desolute' till its colonists turned them from deserts into gardens. England to-day possesses 'the Gates of her enemies' all over the world, and of these Suez and Gibraltar are so important, that all Europe is jealous of England's possession of the Gates of the Mediterranean Sea, but well knows that the British can hold them singled-handed against the allied navies of the whole world.

"Israel was to be a wealthy nation, lending to all nations and borrowing from none; the head of all nations and not the tail. This is what we find Anglo-Israel to-day, and if the English races are not Israel, it follows that these prophecies have never been fulfilled, and the theory of the divine inspiration of Scripture totally collapses.

"Futhermore, a promise was given that a prince of the House of David should for ever reign over the Israelites. Now, churchman say that the prince of the House of David is Christ; but as they claim that the Ten-tribed House of Israel is lost or absorbed by other nations, and as the Jews will not accept Christ as their king, how can He be said to reign over Israel? This is answered thus by the churchman: 'Israel does not mean Israel here, though the Bible says so; it means the spiritual Israel, which is the church.'

"If prophecies are to be twisted and distorted in this manner before they can be proved true they are valueless as evidence of the truth of Scripture. Anglo-Israelites, however, have a much simpler explanation of the promise, and one that is borne out by history, in the fact that Queen Victoria traces her descent through the Scottish kings to the Danite kings of Ireland, one of whom married an eastern princess, Tephi, who fled to Ireland after the Jews were carried captive to Babylon, and whom tradition says was the daughter of Zedekiah, king of Judah. Tephi was accompanied by an eastern seer, whom tradition calls Jeremiah, and they brought with them the famous 'Jacob's stone,' now built into the coronation chair at Westminster Abbey, on which Queen Victoria was crowned. Now, the Bible says that Jeremiah fled to Egypt, taking with him the daughters of Zedekiah, and it seems highly probable that he should have left Egypt for Ireland, where an Israelitish kingdom already was established. Hence it is highly probable that tradition was correct, and that, through Tephi, Queen Victoria is a lineal descendant of the poet king of Judah.

"I have not at hand a genealogical table of Her Majesty's descent in this direction, nor works of reference at hand to produce one, owing to the lamentable absence of a public library in San Antonio; but I have written to London for a copy of a genealogical tree, giving the generations from King David to Queen Victoria, who is thus of the House of Judah, though reigning over the House of Israel.

"An attempt was lately made to borrow the Blarney Stone for the Columbian Exposition, but how much greater interest is attached to Jacob's stone? It was upon this historic stone that the Danite kings of Ireland were crowned, until they conquered Scotland, and brought it with them to their new home, where it was still used for the same purpose till Edward the First of England seized it and brought it to Yorkshire, where it remained until James VI. of Scotland became James I. of England. It was then brought to Westminster for the coronation ceremony, and has been used by every succeeding British monarch as a coronation chair.

"In conclusion I will say, that the very excellent article in The Express should have been headed 'Judah as It Is,' for Israel and Judah have never been united since the time of Solomon, and that an article descriptive of Israel as it is should describe the many-sided greatness of the British Empire and the United States of America, and portray the wonderful energies of a race whose aggressiveness is controlled more by its own sense of justice than by any external opposition it may receive. GEORGE ROE.

A BLIND WITNESS ASSERTS THAT THE TEN TRIBES WERE NEVER LOST!

BY J. THOMSON.

IN the Christian Commonwealth of June 1st, 1893, there was an editorial note respecting Esther Abraham, the wife of Deacon Abraham, who is now visiting this country in the interests of the Nestorian Churches. We are informed that "this clever and versatile young Christian is a splendid specimen of her nation. She has rapidly learned to speak English, and lectures fluently, with a charming mannerism." Her husband, Deacon Abraham, came to this country some years ago to plead on behalf of the Nestorians during a time of famine and persecution. The editor of the Christian Commonwealth takes the opportunity of informing his readers that "the Nestorians have a select and precious mission before them in the complications between Turkey, Persia, and Russia, which are surely ahead. They were once a great missionary people, and will be so again in the coming age. When the time comes for the conversion of Eastern nations back to Christianity, the Nestorians will be the foremost agents in such a work. But they will themselves need some evangelising, that their Church may be purified from some accretions of superstition. This will be the easier if they receive tokens of kindness and sympathy from the West."

So far we may generally agree with the opinions thus expressed in this editorial note, and had nothing further been asserted, we should most probably never have thought of calling in question any of the sentiments expressed. But our editor goes on to write about the Syrian Church, and says, "It is simply astonishing that numbers of people delight persistently in cherishing the most manifest delusions. The time, however, seems past for indulging in such astonishment, for Positivism, Theosophy, Spiritualism and many other egregious absurdities, have proved that nothing is too ridiculous to find followers. But there are some crazes which ought to be easily cured, for the evidence to dispel them is always at hand. The question, 'Where are the Lost Ten Tribes?' is easy to answer. But instead of accepting the obvious answer, many excellent people prefer to cultivate the bewildering speciousness of Anglo-Israelism. Esther Abraham, the Nestorian now in England, declares herself to be one of the descendants of the people of the Ten Tribes. She is undoubtedly right. The Ten Tribes have never been lost at all. A remnant of them, and a very splendid one too, remains, and has always remained, in the grand cradle of the world—the region around Ararat. To the mountains of Assyria, and the country now called Koordistan, the Israelites were deported. They were early converted to Christianity. Paul and Barnabas first carried the Gospel to them. The great Syrian Church had a wonderful history. It sent missionaries to India, China, Persia, and Siberia. The Syrian Christians on this borderland of Persia and Turkey still retain Jewish customs. Whence did they derive them? From their ancestors. They are called by Jewish names, exactly like those of the Bible. Half a century ago Dr. Asahel Grey (he means Grant) spent a long period among this people. His book should be in every student's library. It settles the question of the identity of the Syrian Christians and the Eastern Church round Ooroomiah and Lake Van with the Ten Tribes."

So much says our editor. He at once "settles the question" by asserting that the Ten Tribes were "never lost at all," and that they are still where they were, when deported from Palestine. If our editor is right, it is a waste of time to inquire further. But we may reasonably ask our editor how it is that this notion of the Ten Tribes having been lost, first originated, grew up, and has occupied the attention of acute observers for a longer period of time in the past than we care now to assert; and that the interest excited by this question was never so widespread and intense as it is at the present day? We do not deny that there may be found in various parts of the East, and particularly in the neighbourhood to which they were deported, a few stragglers, "rifts and remnants" from the main body. Our editor calls the Nestorian remnant "a very splendid one." We can only say some people are easily satisfied. But he refers us to the great Syrian Church and the wonderful work in the East that it did in a former age. We may, however, ask, "But what are they doing now?" If we turn to prophecy and compare the history of the Nestorians and their present condition now with the predicted characteristics of Israel of the latter days, we find little or no similitude but rather a great contrast. They are neither multitudinous, powerful, wealthy, ruling over many nations but ruled over by none; living in a place of their own, whence they are to move no more; nor a source of blessing to all nations! But we do find these, and many other characteristics, in the history, character, present position, and prospective future of the British people; but not characteristic of the Nestorians, who are "cribbed, cabined, and confined" in a portion of the country to which they were exiled, oppressed by the "unmitigated Turk" or hardly less fierce Persian, and appealing through their representatives for sympathy and help to this country.

We desire also to acknowledge the compliment paid by our editor to Anglo-Israelites; but we must submit that, "excellent people" though we may be, we should be much more gratified if he would only descend from his eminent position and take up in a serious manner the particular teaching of Anglo-Israelites. The questions at issue admit of a positive answer, but only when compared with Scripture. To that we fearlessly appeal and not to any lower tribunal. Our editor refers us to the work of Dr. Asahel Grey. Are we to put this down as a mistake, or take it as a proof that he has not read the book he recommends, and which, he says, "should be in every student's library"? We read the work in question many years ago, before we ever heard of the Identity; and our impression then made still is that it was unsatisfactory. But when the Identity was first suggested to us by an advertisement, the idea came like a "flash of light," illuminating large portions of prophetic enigmas; and this we know has also been the experience of many others. It is only giving an honest dog a bad name to classify Anglo-Israelism with Positivism, Theosophy, and Spiritualism. Until we are shewn a "better way" of interpreting Holy Scripture, we shall "prefer to cultivate the bewildering speciousness" of Anglo-Israelism; for thereby a light is thrown upon the sacred page compared with which all other attempts are feebleness itself; and it is seen with joy how God's Word is literally true altogether, and His faithfulness endures the same throughout all generations.

THE MESSIANIC IDEAL OF THE POST-EXILIC PERIOD.

By F. Gass.

The Hibbert lectures for 1892 were delivered by Mr. Claude G. Montefiore, a Jew, and the recognised leader of a critical section amongst his own people. His description of the anticipated characteristics of the looked-for Messiah, after the return of the Jews from Babylon, is an interesting one. He says:—

"The essential element on the material side was the re-establishment of Israel's national independence, coupled with unalloyed prosperity, and sometimes with world-wide dominion. On the spiritual side, it implied the rule of righteousness and purity, the destruction of sin, the full triumph of the law and the law's religion, together with the incorporation of the heathen into the kingdom of God. Whether as vassals or allies, the survivors of every nation would recognise no other God than Yahveh. The Messianic king who wins the victory over the final efforts of the hostile heathen, and inaugurates the golden age, is not always, to observation, its most prominent feature, but rather the emblem of the era."

The wonderful fulfilment of this authorised view of the Messiah's work, will be recognised at once by the readers of the Banner. The Christian opponent of the Identity, if he happened to be the leader of an adult Bible-class, would probably tell his scholars how utterly the Jews were at fault in expecting the Messiah to inaugurate a mighty material kingdom, to arise out of Israel, who should become the rulers of the world. He would further declare that the Old Testament promises, which certainly, on the surface, had a very practical appearance, were nevertheless intended to be taken in a spiritual sense only. The result would be that his hearers would come to the conclusion that the Bible was such a wonderful book that it was not to be judged by the ordinary human standard of accepting words in their obvious sense. It is a moot point who is most at fault; the Jew, whose grasp of the prophecies bearing on the material side of the anticipated Israelitish Messianic age is so strong, or the Christian, whose view of the spiritual aspect of the same, is so absorbing, that he fails to see any material side to the future of Israel, worth consideration.

For nearly nineteen centuries past, it has been the habit to hold up the Jews to scorn as the most execrable people the world has seen. But is this really so? It is doubtful. They were the only people amongst whom Christ could have appeared, and received a serious hearing. The Greeks would have scoffed, as they did at Paul; and the Romans, if He had insisted on pressing His doctrines on them, would not have hesitated to slay Him to make a Roman holiday. The Jews' treatment of Christ, misguided as it was, was an act of religious zeal which is surely more acceptable to God than the cruelty of cold contempt. Without the death of our Lord, at the hand of his own brethren, it is difficult to see how the Christian could have conceived that ineffable love for Him which is so healing. It was most human for the downtrodden Jew to look for a Messiah who should revive the faded national glory. He leaned to the practical side of the Messianic prophecies, the side which appeared clearest to him in the books of the Old Testament. On the other hand, the Christian, who was repelled by the gross material expectation of the Jew, quite as naturally went to the opposite extreme.

In the early days of Christianity the promises of the future greatness of Israel did not appear to have the slightest prospect of fulfilment, and after the Ascension, the spiritual side of the Messianic prophecies stood out stronger than it did before. Hence undue prominence was given to this way of dealing with the Word of God. The prophecies were spiritualised, until the unreality of the method came to be lost sight of in the serenity of mind, produced by the ease with which all difficulties fell before the spiritualising scythe. An important lesson, that opponents may take to heart, is the more careful study of the Messianic ideal of the Jews, between the return and the advent. This expectation, as Mr. Montefiore shows, was, in many particulars, wonderfully near the truth. But it was brought about on a scale of grandeur, of which the Jew had no conception. His expectation was comparatively limited, and his horizon shortened. But God's way was not the Jews' way. The Jew thought of himself first, but Christ thought of the whole world. The travail of His soul could only be satisfied by the conversion of Israel in their hundreds of millions, to be followed by the gathering of the vast forces of heathendom at His feet.

The following points in the Jewish Messianic Ideal, as described at the opening of this paper, have already been accomplished in the British people (1) The firm establishment of Israel's national freedom. (2) Great material prosperity and dominion in all parts of the world. Every sea bears Britain's fleets, and her dominions belt the earth. (3) The heathen are incorporated into the British kingdom, which is God's kingdom. When Christ finally inaugurates the golden age amongst all people, the great factor in the process will be, according to present appearances, without reference to prophecy, the federated nations of British descent throughout the world. It is to Israel, led by the Messiah, that mankind at large must look, to march at the head of the battle against the sins of unrighteousness and impurity, and the breaking of moral law.

BEREAN ENQUIRY AND CORRESPONDENCE.

(The Editor disclaims all responsibility for the views expressed under this heading.)

To the Editor of "The Faith."

THE ISRAEL OF GOD—WHO ARE THEY?

A CORRESPONDENT in the June number of Faith asks the above interesting question. It certainly calls for a reply for the special reason that the Jews are understood to represent the whole Twelve Tribes of Israel. This very common error is remarkable and entirely against the teaching of Scripture. A careful study of the history of the chosen people, as given in Holy Writ, will show that the Hebrews were divided distinctly from the death of Solomon, into two families or peoples. From the time they were thus disjoined they have existed till this day as perfectly separate communities, each fulfilling a divinely allotted but perfectly separate destiny.

This severance of the chosen people into two kingdoms is so utterly neglected, or so misunderstood, that we constantly have the religious press teeming with all kinds of reflections on the approaching deliverance of the Jews from the oppression of the Gentiles, whereby is expected the fulfilment of certain promises giving to them the heathen for an inheritance, and glorious and world-wide dominion over the whole earth. But what of that other kingdom, the House of Israel, which the prophet Ezekiel tells us must be united once again to the Jews, or House of Judah, ere the Jews can enter into the enjoyment of the blessings of the new and everlasting covenant (Ezek. xxxvii.)? A brief survey of Hebrew history should make the matter plain to us.

When Jacob a short time before his death felt moved by the Spirit of God to bless his children (Gen. xlviii.), he predicted for the sons of Joseph a remarkable destiny. Ephraim was to become a nation and a company of nations, and Manasseh a great people. That such blessings should appertain to the House of Joseph particularly is a circumstance upon which light is thrown by the fact that Joseph was the inheritor of the birthright (1 Chron. v. 2) and not Reuben, the eldest son, a position that involved lordship over ten-twelfths of the Hebrew nation, as plainly evident by the tribe of Ephraim being appointed head of the Ten Tribes, whose confederation took either the title of House of Israel, or House of Ephraim-Israel.

At the time the Ten Tribes or the House of Israel separated from the House of Judah, and concerted to make Jeroboam their king (1 Kings xii.) they resolved to repudiate the Temple worship at Jerusalem, and to set in Dan and Bethel their own priesthood and their own gods. Having selected the lowest and most ignorant of the people for their priests, the whole northern kingdom became joined to idols; neither the warnings nor the expostulations of inspired prophets affecting this national demoralization. Wrecked by vicious debauchery and ravaged by war, God finally punished His people by giving them into the hands of the Assyrians, by whom they were deported to Assyria (2 Kings xv.) and placed in the cities of the Medes, on the borders of the Caspian Sea, and in other parts of the empire. From this captivity they never returned to Palestine, unless it be that from time to time a few re-migrated or escaped thither.

While the House of Israel was sinking lower and lower into the depths of idolatry and social degradation, the House of Judah was even more iniquitous and transgressing. Under the figure of two sisters Ezekiel compares the iniquities of the two sister-kingdoms (chap. xxiii.). Israel, the elder sister, had doted on the wickedness of Assyria, and defiled herself with the idolatry of that country, but Judah had done worse things, and was still more unnatural in her love of the horrible demon-like worship of Babylon. For this Judah's punishment was to be additionally painful and more prolonged than Israel's. In Israel's hand was the cup of sorrow, but from her it was to pass to Judah with the assurance that God had said, "Thou shalt drink of thy sister's cup deep and large; thou shalt be laughed to scorn and had in derision. . . . . Thou shalt be filled with drunkenness and sorrow, with the cup of astonishment and desolation. . . . . Thou shalt even drink it . . . for I have spoken it, saith the Lord God."

To this sin of Babylonish idolatry Judah added the selfish injustice of rejoicing in her sister's national humiliation. It was an open secret that she was envious of Israel's supereminence and power, and therefore anxious for the destruction of the Northern kingdom that she might come into possession of the whole land. But her thoughts were not God's thoughts, whereupon the prophet is directed to prophesy (Ezek. xi.) that God was for and not against the House of Israel. "Son of man," said the Lord God, "the inhabitants of Jerusalem have said to the House of Israel, 'Get you far from the Lord; unto us is this land given.' Therefore say, 'Thus saith the Lord God, although I have cast them (Israel) far off among the heathen, and although I have scattered them among the countries, yet will I be to them as a little sanctuary where they shall come.' Therefore say, "Thus saith the Lord God, I will even gather you from the people, and assemble you out of the countries where ye have been scattered, and I will give you the land of Israel. . . . And I will give you one heart, and I will put a new spirit within you; and I will take the stony heart out of your flesh, and will give you a heart of flesh.'"

A thoughtful study of this prophecy concerning the Ten Tribes or the House of Israel will show that we ought not to be living in expectation of the Jews or the House of Judah returning to Palestine to take possession of the land, but of the Ten-tribed House of Israel whose possession it is. Judah will only go back to the land under the protection of Israel, and will there, with the Ten Tribes become, as stated in Ezek. xxxvii., one nation, never to be divided into two kingdoms, any more at all.

From this correct view of Hebrew history we have no difficulty in understanding our Lord's references to the lost sheep of the House of Israel, for whose conversion to the faith of the new covenant He affirmed He was specially sent (Matt. xv. 24). In accordance with this mission, He commanded His disciples to "Go not into the way of the Gentiles, but rather to the lost sheep of the House of Israel" (Matt. x. 5). Where these were to be found the first Epistle of Peter gives some important information, as also the Epistle of James. By St. Peter they are mentioned as strangers, and wherefore we can easily learn by turning to the prophet Hosea.

Hosea was a prophet who dealt very distinctly with the House of Israel, and he alludes to the Ten Tribes as Lo-ammi—that is, not My people, or strangers scattered abroad, divorced from the Mosaic law. Yet, notwithstanding, the children of Lo-ammi Israel were to become as the sand of the sea which cannot be measured nor numbered; and it was also to come to pass that in the place where it was said unto them, "Ye are not My people, it shall be said unto them, Ye are the sons of the living God" (Hos. i. 10). This prophetic declaration indicates that Israel will be under the grace of the new covenant, in her home of exile, when her children are hailed as God's own sons. Where we are to look for that home of exile cannot be very briefly told, if the matter is to be conclusively proved. Scripture points us to a group of islands, wherein the people are to renew their strength (Isa. xli.). These are for a period to keep silence and to wait for the Gospel message (Isa. xlii. 4), and for that inbreathing of the Spirit which shall cause in the hearts of the nation and company of nations born of Gentilized exiled Ephraim-Israel, an interior consciousness of life from the dead (see Ezek. xxxvii., and Rom. xi.). If we gaze around the whole earth to-day and wish to identify this special people, federating into a nation and a company of nations, and to place our finger on another great people of kindred race, we must go to the Isles of the West, to Britain, to New Zealand, to Australia, to Canada, to the United States of America, where we shall find the House of Manasseh indeed a great people, enjoying already the temporal blessings promised to them through Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, inheriting them in nigh the same measure as the House of Israel in her widespread and glorious British Empire! Britain is Israel! And it is to her that the Jews—or House of Judah—must look for union before they can hope to enter the Promised Land in peace and safety. The two families are to return together representatively, according to Jer. iii. 14, as one of a city and two of a family, at which time God will bless them and feed them with all knowledge and understanding, and will not cause His anger to fall upon them any more. E. REEP.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—The above was addressed to the editor of The Faith, and appears in the July No. of that little magazine. Our BANNER friend, E. Reep, has placed the question she was dealing with in her usual clear and unanswerable light. The editor of The Faith on the other hand, dreading to be compromised by the appearance of Our Identity in his pages, is very careful to announce at the head of his correspondent's letter that "he disclaims all responsibility for the views expressed under this heading." We should be glad if he or his fellow-helpers in The Faith, would explain to us where E. Reep is wrong? also, what has become of the House of Israel, and how the fact can be explained that the British to-day are in exclusive possession and enjoyment of the Hebrew birthright which was given by God Himself to Joseph and his two sons Ephraim and Manasseh? (1 Chron. v. 1, 2).

"TROY-NOUVANT.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—In the course of some reading to-day I found that the above designation is one that was applied to the City of London, owing to the tradition that this great City was founded by a Troyan refugee whose name was Brute. Spenser adopts the legend in his Faëry Queen iii. 9—

> "For noble Britons sprung from Troyans bold,
> And Troy-Nouvant was built of old Troyes ashes cold."

It is interesting to remember that British-Israelites believe that their ancestors were the distinguished heroes of Troy. The old English poet is on our side.

Yours truly, J. IDRISYN JONES.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

THE following appears in the Daily Chronicle of June 24th:—

"The reports which are being received by the Jewish authorities in London as to renewed persecution of their brethren in Russia seem hardly credible. Tens of thousands, it is said, are congregated on the Russo-German frontier. Driven from their homes in the interior by the Russian officials, they are met on the opposite banks of the Vistula by German sentinels, who refuse to allow them passage into Germany. Permitted neither to go forward nor to return, with little means, and no way of earning a livelihood, they seem destined to perish miserably unless succour is at once sent them. Russia, indeed, is accused of having finally determined on the utter extermination of the Jews from the Empire. What truth there may be in this accusation it is difficult to say; but if half of what is stated be true, Russia is pursuing a system which is altogether unjustifiable. If she has decided on the expulsion of all Jews from her territory, time at least might be allowed them to receive assistance from their brethren in other countries."

In what a fearful position these poor people must be if this is at all correct, and there would seem to be, humanly speaking, no way out of it. It looks as though the climax were approaching more rapidly than many anticipate when will be fulfilled the prophetic words in Jer. iii. 18, "In those days the House of Judah shall walk with (in margin, "to") the House of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the North to the land that I have given for an inheritance unto your fathers."

Yours very truly,

He hails from America, and is quite the sensation of the hour. There was no standing-room anywhere, and as I made to the door I met many coming away. However, I had made up my mind to hear the Doctor, and hear him I did. It seems that the subscribers have a door to themselves; I made for it, and luckily found a chair, which I wedged in under the platform. The Doctor prayed and then we had a sermon about Revelation, containing much that was very effective, if not about his text, at any rate about that mysterious part of Scripture from which the text was taken."

THE COMING FEARFUL CONFLAGRATION.

UNDER every form of expression the public Press labours to describe the coming convulsion which men see is approaching and which God's Word in Rev. xvi. 18 (R.V.) tells us shall be like a "great earthquake, such as there was not since men were upon the earth, so great an earthquake, so mighty." The provincial newspapers are always referring to it.

The Bristol Times and Mirror, of July 17th last, described Europe as a "powder magazine." "There exists at the present moment," said the editorial, "something resembling a great powder magazine, the dreadful explosion of which may be effected by a spark. There are plenty of sparks flying about."

Germany lately craved powers of her Parliament to increase her armaments against France and Russia, and she obtained the sanction of that body. Russia, acting on that initiative, declares that if the German armies are to be increased the Russian armies must follow the example. France is sure to try to do so too if her decreasing population will allow her to make more sacrifices in that direction. The trouble regarding Siam was felt to be an indication of the unrest which is preying upon France, and driving her against her true interests to look for colonial enlargement, to prevent the people dwelling too much on the approaching conflict nearer home with their late conquerors, the Germans.

It appears that M. Barthelemy St. Hilaire, an ex-Minister of France, has lately been consulted by the Pall Mall Gazette (under its new direction) and asked to give his opinion about Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule Bill. He utterly disapproves of it. He said, "Two things astonished him and his French friends. These are the attitude of Mr. Gladstone and the state of English public opinion." As to the general condition of Europe, what he said was this, "Can England afford to ignore what is going on in the continent? The longer we live, the nearer the collision approaches. Ought any patriot to add to the complications already in face of us, an internal trouble in his own State?" International relations are, he believes, in a state of high tension; and "despite reiterated assurances, the slightest spark would arouse a fearful conflagration." "There are others who agree with M. B. St. Hilaire," said the journalist. We may tell him that all Anglo-Israelites concur with him in his anticipations without, however, in any way presuming to say when, where, and how the "earthquake war-woe is to break out upon the European "earth." That war when it comes, as come it will one day, "will settle for the next fifty years" (perhaps for ever) "all outstanding international problems at the cost, however, of treasure, blood, and anguish, incalculable."

In the midst of such a prospect it is remarkable that Mr. Gladstone, like Nero fiddling while Rome was burning, should be striving hard to dismember our Empire without, however, desiring to do so, being bent only on staying in office while his own life lasts.

We imagine, however, that our Prime Minister, little as he imagines it, has been raised up at this juncture to carry out a plan designed by the Lord Himself, by which He means us to be safeguarded, and kept aloof from the mighty and great earthquake "war-woe" approaching. To carry this out it seems to us the best plan would be to raise up violent troubles in Ireland, such as would require large military forces to watch and subdue, and thus prevent our pugnacious race from meddling in the continental troubles by reason of very weakness of military power. Deprived of our fighting strength by a too great dispersion of our forces throughout the world, we shall be unable in that case to meddle with the continental earthquake, but forced to content ourselves with holding our own and looking passively on by "entering into our chambers, shutting our doors about us, and hiding ourselves for a little moment, till the the indignation be overpast" (Isa. xxvi. 20, R.V.). "For behold, the Lord cometh out of His place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity; the earth also shall disclose their blood, and shall no more cover her slain" (ver. 21). This seems to be an ignoble and pitiful rôle for a great nation to perform; but if it be one which God sees best for us to undertake, it is not for us to regret that, like Noah in his ark, "God has ordained peace for us," lest in the coming hour of judgment we should foolishly partake of punishment like Lot's wife, by essaying to return to a wicked cluster of nations whom God has condemned, and means to overthrow.

We conclude with a few wise words from Oxonian, published in page 269 of the August Messenger, 1893, under the head of "The Distress of Nations," which he says—

Both at home and abroad is unquestionably characteristic of the current year. Israel and the Gentile world are alike passing through the crucible of afflictions. As to the first, it needs must be that judgment begin at the house of God, that the Lord should be pleading with His people. Not by the convinced Israelite alone, but by the general public as well, the present is felt to be a time of national trouble—and well it may. That politicians should seriously contemplate the dismemberment of the hitherto United Kingdom, is grave enough. Add to this a disaster so serious as the loss of H.M.S. Victoria and her complement of brave officers and men.

Further, in the words of a recent article in the Daily Telegraph, "our nation has of late been subjected to many severe trials, eminently calculated to disturb its equanimity"—a good thing, indeed, if this could be accomplished—"and strain its patience. It has been visited by financial and commercial troubles of considerable magnitude, and has suffered a long and dismal spell of trade depression, as well as a protracted drought, bringing with it ruin, or at the very least serious disaster, to many agriculturists and to those connected with them in business." The writer proceeds to hold up to admiration the British people as passing through this ordeal with stoical endurance and self-control, but more than this is surely needed ere the lesson be truly learnt. Doubtless abroad the outlook is worse. There we find, in several States, the unfortunate populace groaning under the burden of oppressive taxation entailed by the keeping up of vast armies and colossal military establishments. Descanting upon these evils, "Ouida" affirms: "The French Republic has the same corruption, the same tyrannies, and the same coercion by bayonets for which the two Empires were reviled.

Germany is a hell of despotism, persecution, and espionage. In Italy the whole people sweat, even perish, under the burdens laid upon them for the maintenance of the vast battalions of young men imprisoned in barrack-yards in enforced idleness: whilst the fruitful lands of the peninsula, from Venice to Calabria, lie untilled under the blue skies; the spade and the scythe rusting, whilst the accursed sabre and musket shine." Abroad, too, after a century of revolution, anarchy is exalting itself. Germany exhibits an alliance, in process of formation at any rate, between the Jesuits and "Social Democracy," such as pious students of Scripture prophecy have found predicted in the Revelation of St. John. The streets of Republican Paris have had to be patrolled by the representatives of law and order. It is quite on the cards that the Red Republican Revolution looked for by Mr. Baxter may be impending. Undoubtedly anarchy is to have a terrible, if brief, supremacy ere this "order changeth, giving place to new"—from war and brutality to peace and pity, the blessed change which followers of Jesus hope for, when His kingdom comes.

THOMAS ROBINSON, New Zealand. Thanks for yours received. The distribution of the BANNER OF ISRAEL must prove beneficial in the end. It is Sowing the Seed.

THE TEUTONIC THEORY.

BY THE REV. DENIS HANAN, D.D.

AN article which appeared in the number of The Messenger for December, 1892, has been brought under my notice. It is entitled "The Goths," "by an Old Disciple," and its purport is to show, that almost all the European nations (and also the Cossacks) are of Israelitish descent and are to be reckoned as Israel, because forsooth the Goths overran Europe!! The article is calculated to bring all scientific efforts to indentify the first born people of God into contempt, for ignoring the true means of discovering Israel, it is based only upon a very secondary line of evidence, and even that is not proven. The writer assumes what cannot be proved. He forgets God's method of working. He minimises what is well established, and he ignores historic facts.

The true scientific method, in proceeding to search for Israel, has ever been to study the chart of promise and prophecy; and having found the people corresponding to the predicted latter-day position of Israel, then to ascertain whether the previous history of that people is or not incompatible with their assumed origin.

But a method which rests only on the previous history of a people which does not in any sense fulfil the predicted latter-day position of Israel, is simply ridiculous. In the case made by "An Old Disciple" even his would-be historical basis is an assumption.

He assumes that the Goths who overran Europe and destroyed the Roman power were pure-blooded Israelites, whereas it is well known that all the Scythian tribes were not akin. He assumes that if these Goths were all Israelites they could not die out, or mingle amongst the nations or otherwise forfeit their racial inheritance, whether they were obedient to the faith or apostates, in the earlier or the latter times. He forgets that God has ever continued His covenant to and through a faithful nucleus, known only to Himself, and through that nucleus to all who spring from them (if nationally faithful) and to all who were joined to them. Thus the comparative fewness of the founders of the heptarchy (although much underestimated by "An Old Disciple") would not be incompatible with that heptarchy being the nucleus of the people to whom the covenants were to be fulfilled, if their more modern history demonstrated that Israel's inheritance was in the possession of the nation sprung from that nucleus; while the comparative numbers of the European Goths who have never had, and have not now a vestage of Israel's inheritance, would be no evidence of their Israelitish status, no matter what their origin may have been. Furthermore the article contradicts historic facts when it states, for instance, that the German tribes were akin to the Scandinavian peoples. The following extracts from a writer who knows nothing of this controversy are to the point. In the "Viking Age," Mr. Du Chaillu says (vol. i., page 14): "From the Roman writers who have been partially confirmed by archæology, we know that the tribes which inhabited the country to which they give the vague name of Germania were not seafaring people nor possessed of any civilization. The invaders of Britain, of the Gallic, and of the Mediterranean coasts could therefore not have been the German tribes referred to by the Roman writers, who, as we see from Julius Cæsar and other Roman historians, were very far from possessing the civilization which we know from the antiquities to have existed in the North."

Digitized by Google

Page 20: "It is an important fact that throughout the Saga literature describing the expeditions of the Northmen to England, not a single instance is mentioned of their coming in contact with a people called Saxons, which shows that such a name in Britain was unknown to the people of the North, nor is any part of England called Saxland. Page 21: "A remarkable fact not to be overlooked is that, in the time of Charlemagne, the Franks and Saxons were not a seafaring people, though their countries had an extensive coast with deep rivers, the Frankish annals never mention a Frank or Saxon fleet attacking the fleets of the Northmen or preventing them from ascending their streams, though Charlemagne ordered ships to be built in order to resist their incursions."

From these and other evidences Du Chaillu holds that the Northmen, or Vikings, were a totally different people from the Germans, yet in the face of this, and although the Germans have none of the prophetic marks of Israel, the Teutonic theorists proclaim that they are Israel!!

If there be rifts and remnants of Israelitish blood amongst the modern peoples who occupy lands which the Vikings once settled in, the mere fact of such kinship does not confer upon them Israel's position or Israel's blessings. An Englishman naturalised in Russia is a Russian to all intents and purposes. National (political and religious) union with the seed and the throne that is to be ever a nation and to endure while the sun and moon continue to exist, is the means whereby all, whether Scandinavian or Teuton, can obtain a share in Israel's inheritance.

Any effort to establish an identity with Israel which does not proceed in the first instance upon the lines of identification which the inspired record lays down, is worse than useless; it brings discredit upon reasonable investigation, and dishonour upon the faithful God who has put the marks of His covenant upon the British people only.

A WITNESS FROM BRISBANE IN ISRAEL'S FAVOUR.

WE take the following from The Anglo-Israelite, of Brisbane, of July, 1886. The journal is now defunct; its editor, whom all respected, being no more. The article contains a valuable paper by Mr. W. L. Blore, which, though it appeared in the BANNER seven years ago, has much in it of value to us now, and will bear repetition. The remarks of the vicar of Houghton, too, are to the point even now, showing that Britain was never "a toe" in the Roman portion of Daniel's metallic image (Dan. ii.), as the Rev. Mr. Baxter always endeavours to assume.

"REV. J. H. BROWN, VICAR OF HOUGHTON, NORFOLK; AS AGAINST REV. M. BAXTER, CLERGYMAN OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

"The Reverend Mr. Baxter has published in the Christian Herald and Signs of the Times the anatomical statement that Britain is to be found represented as one of the ten kingdoms that are in these latter days to arise out of the breaking up of the fourth or Roman kingdom of the great image dream of Nebuchadnezzar, and the portion that he assignes to us of that gigantic figure is a little toe—a little toe is, according to that reverend gentleman, a fit and proper type to shadow forth a power thus described by Mr. W. L. Blore, in the BANNER OF ISRAEL, for Wednesday, 7th April, 1886:—

"'BRITAIN'S GREATNESS, BY W. L. BLORE.

It is found that the greatness of the British Empire has been estimated by certain statistical returns irrespective of position, area, and religious profession. We thus find that the productiveness, wealth, and annual income of this truly greatest centre of all three, both as regards the United Kingdom in its entirety, and as to their influence upon each of its dependencies, have been scheduled with such countries as the United States, Russia, France, &c.

"'The areas of some of these "newer" countries are more extensive, and, as in North America and New Zealand, the ground is virgin soil, it is more productive than that of some of the older countries of the world. In Europe agriculture has to be conducted very carefully, and requires the application of artificial manures, and consequently the net result is not so remunerative as in newer settlements.

"'And yet we find that the wealth, production, and average income of the British people stands highest in the schedules; and hitherto such colonies as New Zealand, New South Wales, and Victoria, with their large proportionate areas, share in the proud position of the mother country in these respects.

"'When we take the limited area of the United Kingdom into consideration, and compare its population, wealth, &c., with that of the United States with its comparatively unlimited area, the United States stands far below the mother country in such comparison.

"'Then, in the United States, we find that the population has been increased in efficiency, and is in every way benefited by the annual introduction of a very large amount of the best energy and intellect of Great Britain and Germany. If we compare the United Kingdom with France, one of the "oldest" countries of the civilized world, we find that, with about the same population, and nearly twice the area, the average income of its inhabitants is one-third less than that of the Briton.

"'The United States, with twenty-five times our area, and with a population one-third more numerous than ours, has an annual income, according to Porter, but four per cent. in advance of that of the United Kingdom.

"'Germany, with an area of nearly double ours, and with a population one-fourth more numerous, has an annual income below that of France: so that the population of the British Isles produces as much annually as 62 million Germans and Frenchmen, and as much as 47 million United States' men.

"'According to Porter's tables, the commerce and industry of the British Isles equals also those of Russia, Austria, and Italy combined. These calculations do not include Colonial industries and those of our Indian Empire. The bearing of the 61st chapter of Isaiah upon Great Britain's present magnificient commercial position, as well as upon her position as a civilizing power in the world is very evident.

"'The introductory verse of this remarkable chapter was quoted by Christ as declaratory of His kingly commission; but the following eight verses have direct reference to the subject under discussion—the position of the kingdom itself in the world—the nine verses being all connected by conjunctions.

"'It is interesting then to note the position accorded to the British Empire in the world at this moment. In Peterman's meteorological map of the world, we have three zones—the torrid, comprising the regions between the Warmth Equator, and the isothermal lines, north and south, of 70 degrees Farenheit; the temperate zones, north and south between the isothermal lines of 70 degrees and 30 degrees Farenheit; the frigid zones, north and south, comprising the regions below 30 degrees Farenheit.

"'Let us take the torid zone first—the zone considered inimical to European colonization, and let us ask ourselves, Which is the pre-eminently reigning power over this zone? In the Northern Hemisphere the isothermal line of 70 degrees cuts through Mexico, the peninsular of Florida, Morocco, Beyrout in Syria, south of the sea of Aral, along the ridge of the Himalayas, the northern boundary of Burmah, and Formosa.

"'The southern 70 degr es line enters South America at 20 degrees south latitude, and leaves it at the southern limit of Brazil. It then skirts the northern limit of British South Africa, and cut Australia at the northern limit of New South Wales. Within this anti-European colonization zone Great Britain rules over 270 millions of people. After due investigation, I estimate the annual income of these collectively, as equivalent to that of the people of the United Kingdom. So that within this immense zone the Anglo-Israelitish race rules over a larger population with a larger annual income and industry than all other countries within the same zone combined.

"'In the southern temperate zone we find that in area and population our Colonial settlements equal those of the remainder of this zone, and that in productive industry and annual income they far surpass the remainder of the zone.

"'We have now but to consider the northern temperate zone, the most extensive in land area of the three zones. Let us refer to Petermann's meteorological map of the world, and we observe Great Britain as a mere dot in the very centre of this vast zone, about equidistant from eastern China and the west coast of America. But with her daughter in the west, she stands pre-eminent amongst the nations of the north in power, wealth, and social status.

"'The Anglo-Israelites of North America and the United Kingdom rule over 93 million of people in the northern temporate zone. Their productive industry within this zone equals that of Russia, Austria, Italy, Germany, and France combined, with 250 million inhabitants—i.e., one Anglo-Israelite is worth two and two-thirds of those inhabiting Russia, etc. The only countries within this zone to be accounted for are China, Spain, Portugal, Belgium, Holland, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, and Turkey; and these, all combined, are not equal in industry and wealth to Great Britain and the United States combined. So that taking the Anglo-Israelitish trade and dominion in the three zones collectively, we find that in commerce, industry, and wealth that dominion equals the remainder of the world combined in the year of grace 1886.

"'Truly this is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes.' Let us then not worship our position and the gifts of our King, but let us worship our great King Himself, and humble ourselves before Him, seeing in how far we have been unfaithful in our wonderful stewardship!

"'Let us then put forth every effort to glorify God and not ourselves in the position in which He has placed us, and cast from us all idolatry, and whatsoever worketh abomination or maketh a lie!

"'Our present position, wealth, influence, intelligence, and social status are not our own. They are our King's. Let us serve Him, honour Him, and extend His kingdom in the earth, and we shall be doubly blessed (as in Isaiah lxi. 3—9). Let the ungrateful sentence, "Perish India and the Colonies!" never again be heard within the British Empire!

"'Now let us read what the Reverend J. H. Broome has to say with reference to his little toe:—

"'Many commentators are of opinion that the ten horns of the "beast" mentioned in Dan. vii. 7—17, represent so many kingdoms of the revived ancient Roman Empire. In the prophet's time they were not in existence, but in the distant future their ten notable kings were to arise. In Rev. xvii. 12, the apostle John speaks of them as "receiving no kingdom as yet." Many attempts have been made to give an orderly classification of these especial ten kingdoms. Some think that Great Britain is or is to be one of them. Can a true and definite geographical connection mark her out as ever having been one of the Roman kingdoms? Let us consult history, which tell us that Great Britain never had a king of the entire realm till the days of Edgar of the Saxon Monarchy, three hundred and seventy-four years after the Romans had withdrawn their forces from Britain, which they had never entirely subjugated even in Agricola's time A D. 78, for the mountainous parts of Wales remained unsubdued, letting alone the northern parts of Scotland, such as Ross, Sutherland, and Caithness, with the Hebrides, which last are about one-eight of the whole kingdom. The Romans never regarded their uncertain establishment of their conquests in Britain over the petty kings of barbarous tribes of sufficient importance to style them a kingdom added to Cæsar's power, but as another province only of his vast empire gain ed at length by the military skill of Agricola. On the final abandonment of Britain by the Romans, about the year A.D. 420, after being masters of the best part of it for nearly four centuries, the historian says, "The Britons had already deposed magistrates appointed by Rome, proclaimed their independence, and taken up arms for their defence against their invaders, as the Emperor Honorius could no longer give them assistance. But the final disseverance was not accompanied by any apparent ill-will. On the contrary, a mutual friendship subsisted for some time after between the islanders and the Romans, and the Emperor, in a letter addressed to the states or cities of Britain, seemed formally to release them from their allegiance and to acknowledge their national independence." The "ten horns of the beast," signifying ten kings (Rev. xvii. 12), had not appeared when the Romans finally departed from Britain, leaving its inhabitants to be governed by their own civil laws and religious observances. Thus there appears to be no authority from Scripture, and certainly none from a rightly defined geographical connection of England with the Roman world, to form the conclusion that our beloved country is to become one of those wicked kingdoms, destined to give "their power and strength unto the beast" (Rev. xvii. 13) of the latter day, and to be found, like Balak and Balaam, warring against the "King of kings" in the last conflict, when He shall appear for His people Israel in the valley of Jehosaphat, called "the great battle of the Lord God Almighty" (Rev. xvi. 14—16).

"'There is an increasing interest shown on the part of Christians and others in the land as to the prospects and hopes of the Jewish people. More than one passage of prophetic Scripture seems to intimate that England will take a prominent part in the restoration of Israel to their own land.

"'This may be blind evidence, as Mr. Broome nowhere claims the privilege of being an Anglo-Israelite, but the Lord knows how to make His detractors speak the truth, and convince them out of their own mouths, and even out of the mouths of the asses that carry them, when they follow in the track of Balaam the son of Bosor, who "was rebuked for his iniquity, the dumb ass speaking with man's voice, forbad the madness of the prophet." And then his blind testimony becomes the more valuable, as it cannot be said to be the "twisting of history,' a favourite expression used to us by brotherly opponents—the Lord bless them—with an introduction to Balaam's ass.'"

"SALVATION IS OF THE JEWS."

The Rev. E. Theodore Hitchins, of Christ Church, Teddington, spoke at the 50th anniversary of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel Amongst the Jews, at Exeter Hall, on the 12th May last. He stoutly defended the work among the Jews as successful and encouraging, going into some details as to the reasons why we had been waiting so long for the conversion of the Jews to Christianity. He described some of the stumbling-blocks which had impeded the progress of the Gospel among them. There was first, he said, "the antipathy to the Jewish race for the last 1,800 year," which was one of the great hindrances. Another was the under estimate of Jewish ability by those who strove to win them for Christ. Both these he admitted were passing away. It is strange, however, that a Christian minister should mention these and other reasons why the Jews have failed to respond to the Christian missionary when the New Testament gives him several cogent reasons why they have remained so long outside the fold, and refused to accept the Lord who bought them. There is, to begin with, our Lord's prophecy in Matt. xxiii. 28, 29, respecting them. Because they rejected Him after all His loving solicitude for them, "Behold," He said, "your house is left unto you desolate. For I say unto you, Ye shall not see Me henceforth till ye shall say, 'Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord.'" The restoration of the Jews to Christ's favour does not depend, then, on men ceasing to regard them with antipathy, or on the world's recognition of the ability of a few specially clever Jews of quite recent times, but on the will of Him who has fixed a set time for the conversion of the Jews as a body. Before that time shall have been reached, the nation cannot and will not be melted to repentance, or accept the Lord their King. The Rev. Theodore Hitchins enumerated several reasons why we should look upon the Jews as our benefactors. "We owed the Bible to them!" he said. "We owed Christ to them!" "We owed Christianity to them!" In regard to the Bible we certainly owe the Psalms, the Proverbs, the Song of Solomon, and Ecclesiastes to men of the House of Judah. Of the prophets, Isaiah, Daniel, Amos, Micah, and probably Zechariah, were of Judah, but of the rest not one. The Gospels were not the work of the Jews. Israelites of Benjamin were probably the authors of all the Gospels and Epistles. Certainly Paul was not a Jew save by mere parlance. He was an Israelite of Benjamin, belonging to the House of Joseph (Rom. xi. 1; 2 Sam. xix. 20). Moses was a Levite, but not a Jew or man of Judah. It is true Christ sprang from Judah, and salvation, by the sacrifice of Christ, is of the Jews, because He was of Judah. How we can owe Christianity to the Jews, however, as stated by the Rev. T. Hitchins we do not see! The Jews hated it, and destroyed the Son of God its Founder. They were not likely to spread His religion? and practically they did nothing for it! The Benjamite-Israelites published the good tidings, and to them, under God, we owe Christianity. The speaker was quite wrong when he answered his own questions as to who were the first disciples? who the foremost missionaries? who wrote the Gospels and Epistles? and who founded the early Christian Churches? by replying "converted Jews!' We would correct him by saying, "They were converted Israelites, but not converted Jews!" And these same converted Israelites are to-day issuing forth afresh to convert the Jews and the unconverted Gentiles besides! The speaker at Exeter Hall said that "the converted Jews" went forth as the missionaries of the world at first; but now the Gentiles they converted are bound to go back to the Jews (who have somehow lapsed into Judaism again, and abandoned their Christianity) in order that they may convert them once more to Christ! The idea is absurd, and there is nothing to support it in the Word of God. Ephraim-Israel has, in the speaker's view, vanished from sight, but "lost Israel" (the very words he uses to describe the—Jews [!]) must be reclaimed and brought back to Jesus by the "Gentile Christians!" This bundle of errors rests upon a tremendous mi-take, which it seems is the adopted jubilee motto of the society—namely, "The world for Christ—through the Jew"; that is. the Jew is to be the missionary to the Jews, and also to the Gentiles, according to the promises of God. We do not so read the prophecies! There we see it written, "In the days to come Jacob shall take root, and Israel shall blossom and bud, and they shall fill the face of the world with fruit" (Isa. xxvii. 6, R.V.). The Jews are disqualified for this work, as our clergyman of Teddington knows full well, because of their rebellion against God, and their murder of the Son of God; and the other House, that of "Ephraim" or Joseph, is the nation to which the Lord entrusted the kingdom of God, since it proved its qualification by "bringing forth the fruits thereof" (Matt. xxi. 43). Mr. Hicthin must learn to distinguish the two Houses of Israel, and then he will see that the two differ the one from the other—Ephraim being blessed, Judah being under curse; the former being God's instrument for the evangelization of the world; but Judah, bent on self destruction by denying the Godhead, and the vicarious sufferings of Jesus of Nazareth for the remission of the sins of the whole world.

A MISSIONARY TO THE JEWS ON THE SUPREMACY OF BRITAIN.

We were favoured lately by a visit from a missionary to the Jews in North Africa. He is a German by birth, a Scandinavian by descent, a Protestant by faith, and an honoured missionary of "The Society for Promoting Christianity Amongst the Jews." He is an able man, and one who carries on his work, when at his proper station, in four languages. He preaches to the resident English and to English tourists, in English. He preaches in German to his own fellow-countrymen. He addresses the French in their own tongue every Sunday, and to the people of the land he conveys the Gospel and the words of truth in Arabic. He had much to say in favour of the French, who administer a Protectorate where he lives and labours. They are quite willing that he should teach and preach Protestant truth without let or hindrance—and this, he explained, was because they do not value God's Word as an instrument for good, but rely only on secular teaching in their systems of education for the people under them. In regard to the British people and government, he seemed full of admiration of them.

He said he was in the habit of pointing, in his teaching among the natives, to the wonderful position Great Britain occupies in the world. He alluded to our contracted home in these islands of ours,—and yet to the vast empire we have acquired, by God's gift, abroad. He explained it, he said, by the fact that the British people, as a people (with serious individual exceptions, of course), honour the day of God, set apart for His worship and for spiritual improvement—and they also undertake to take the Word of God in a great number of languages to the whole world. These two things, which were implanted in their hearts were, he believed, the reason why God had given them such extended empire and such usefulness in the world. He pointed to India, and said that the government there helped the missionary cause by inspecting and protecting their schools, by grants in aid, and by general encouragement—things the French never thought of doing, or cared to do. The missionary, who bore an honourable well-known name, knew little or nothing of Our Identity, or the reason why God had honoured our nation, not only with a vastly extended empire and great wealth, but also with a desire to keep God's holy day sacred, and to teach and preach the things concerning the kingdom of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ, to "all nations," "families," and "kindreds of the earth." When we pointed out to him how these things bore upon Our Identity with Israel, he immediately put in the claim of his German relatives to share in the honour of Israelitish descent, since they had so largely supplied the men who had helped us in the mission work. We had not time to go largely into the argument, but were glad to know that a German missionary to North Africa, under an alien government, was yet greatly impressed with the exceptional position our nation occupies in the world, as "the head and not the tail, above only and not beneath, and set high above all the nations of the earth."

In reference to the point he named, that we British were anxious to put God's Word, the Bible, into the hands of all mankind, we reminded him that this was God's promise to Israel when He gave them His word, His statutes, and His judgments. "He hath not dealt so with any nation, and as for His judgments they have not known them!" The readiness of the British to take the Gospel to all nations, proved the truth of the text (we told our friend) that "Israel shall blossom and bud, and they shall fill the face of the world with fruit" (Isa. xxvii. 6, R.V.). These Scriptural references seemed to produce no particular effect upon the missionary, though we hope the thoughts they must beget, will one day bear fruit in his candid mind. The facts are very simple, and the conclusions to which they point are obvious to one well instructed in the Old and New Testament Scriptures. Here is a nation, admitted to be wonderfully powerful, and possessing a great portion of the earth, either as colonies or as military and commercial possessions. The nation so holding these places, countries, and "Gates" is abnormally wealthy; and at the same time is a decidedly religious nation, keeping the Sabbath, as admitted by our friend, valuing the Scriptures as beyond all price, and striving hard to give it to all nations; to Jews and Gentiles, not forgetting their own home heathen as well. Who can the nation so acting and so circumstanced be? The Bible tells us plainly. Israel is tied to the Sabbath. Israel is to possess the earth. The desolate heritages, the Gates, the ends, and uttermost parts of the earth are all to be Israel's, and they are appointed "to go into all the world and preach the Gospel" to every creature, including Jews and Gentiles.

It is right that we should read the Scriptures, so that the Old shall not contradict the New Testament, nor the latter should set aside the former. In the Pentateuch, the afterseed of Abraham were set apart by God's oath to be a blessing to all the nations and families of the earth. In Isa. xxvii. 6, R.V., Israel was designated as the replanted portion of the family, which should blossom, and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit. To do that the Hebrew family so honoured must be Christian, but not otherwise. We cannot, in reading the New Testament, therefore, set aside Christian Israel, or so read our Lord's command to His infant Hebrew Church, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," as to understand by it that it gave a commission to non-Israelite Gentiles to do what Israel was set apart to do, contrary to God's oath to Abraham, and Christ's last command to His Hebrew disciples and apostles.

Our missionary to the Jews of Africa, therefore, has something to learn even yet; and we trust, will, with his rare linguistic powers, be able to tell the House of Judah that Ephraim is found—and found in the British empire, clothed with power and might, and wealth, and yet with all Christian graces to fit them to be the Lord's messengers to the nations to the praise of the glory of His grace!

THE BEHRING SEA AWARD.

On Tuesday, August 15th, 1893, at Paris, the arbitrators appointed to hear and decide the serious points of difference between ourselves and the United States, as to the fur-seal fisheries in the Behring Sea gave their award. On two separate occasions the British nation and the United States, having had serious differences to compose, resorted to arbitration, instead of going to war. On the first matter (the Alabama claims) the decision was against us, and though we have always felt that the sum adjudged against us was outrageously high, we paid the amount awarded and made no complaints. On the present occasion, the broad questions of international law raised in the case have been decided by the arbitrators wholly in our favour and against the United States.

In regard to the future, the regulations proposed by the arbitrators for the preservation of the fur seal are not quite so favourable to the Canadian fisheries, and have already provoked some dissatisfaction. But this will doubtless pass away, if it has not already done so. It was to be expected that in such a long standing dispute we should not come out of it without some losses, and these are infinitely less than they would have been had the matter been settled by the sword, instead of by the peaceful process of arbitration. "After all," said the leading journal, "it is in itself a triumph of morality and civilization to refer an international dispute to such an arbitrament. It is no small honour to a people to have appeared before such a tribunal at all. It is not the least of the many claims which the British and American branches of the great Anglo-Saxon race possess to the abiding gratitude of mankind, that they have been the first peoples to employ this peaceful method of determining grave differences between their Governments. Whether we could afford to settle all disputes in this peaceful fashion, when they affect matters vital to our nation's existence, is another question, and it is a fact that we have not been too successful in matters we have submitted to arbitration and decision by foreign judges. In the Alabama award the sum we had to pay was so large that up to the present hour it has not all been spent on the objects named. There are no claimants entitled to the balance unexpended. In the matter of Delagoa Bay, in South-East Africa, the award was against us, though the weight of evidence seemed against our opponents. In the present instance we have represented the case of all maritime nations, and stood up for their rights. It is decidedly satisfactory that we have succeeded in our contention, and that the law of nations is as we represented it before the arbitrators. There never must, or we believe, can be, war between the two great Anglo-Saxon nations, for they are the two great Houses of Ephraim and Manasseh, who are destined yet to unite and return to their land together, and occupy it in friendly union according to the prophecies (Ezek. xlviii. 1—7; Jer. iii. 18; Ezek. xxxvii. 1—28). Whether the nations who are arming to the teeth in Europe, will ever see there way to follow our example as to arbitration instead of war, is a doubtful matter. The subjects at stake between France and Germany, for instance, are embittered by a bloody war in the past, and by a defeat of France, which nothing but a fresh war and a decisive victory for the latter will satisfy. That feud never can be submitted to arbitration. So, too, the dispute, "Who is to have Constantinople?" is the last word in the Eastern Question, and it cannot be decided by anything else than armed force? The question of the holy places, too, is one for which God is preparing, and it is to be settled we know from Ezek. xxxviii. and xxxix. by a dreadful war or wars, in which the Most High will personally intervene. It appears, then, that the question of arbitration, excellent as it is for quarrels and disputes among brethren (Ephraim and Manasseh), cannot be expected to be available among the non-Israelite nations who in some cases as we know are destined to be overthrown by the shock of war, according to the prophecies (Ezek. xxxviii.—xxxix.; Luke xxi. 24—26.; Rev. xvi. 18). One of the blessings and advantages of our position as the chosen nation of our Lord Jesus Christ (Matt. xxi. 43) is, that "He will ordain peace for us" (Isa. xxvi. 12). The arbitration just brought to a close with advantage to ourselves is, then, a new proof of Our Identity to those who view it aright; and we can, in reflecting on it, praise the Lord for His goodness to us, His undeserving people Israel.

NOTES BY S. A. M.

The author of "Rule Britannia," James Thomson, the poet of "The Seasons," died at his cottage in Kew-foot-lane in 1748, nearly 150 years ago, and now a proposal is started to erect a suitable memorial for this gifted author. As a singular coincidence, we may also mention that the Earl of Meath has offered to give £50 to be applied for supplying London Board Schools with Union Jacks, on the condition that lectures of a patriotic character shall be given regularly, and that it be made one of the honours of the school, to carry round the flag while the other boys sing "Rule Britannia."

And apropos of the flag, we may allude to a sermon recently preached in St. Paul's Cathedral by the Archdeacon of London. He said: "How well it might be could we persuade the knights of St. Michael and St. George, the Order of Imperial Unity, the heroes of the victory of peace, to hang up their banners in this the cathedral of the capital of the Empire, a perpetual lesson on the responsibility and usefulness that lie before each British citizen, and before the thousands who come daily to visit this the chief glory of London, where, too, our colonies are commemorating the patriotic loyalty of their mighty dead."

Again, even more recently, St. John's Church at Penzance was full of men one Sunday afternoon to listen to an address from the bishop of the diocese, who, on ascending the pulpit, took a crown piece out of his pocket saying that one of the symbols on that coin, St. George and the Dragon, should be his text, and briefly but tersely he narrated the legend of St. George, the pure and manly, who fought for the good of others as well as for himself. Old truths were forcibly put in new form, the preacher showing how by the help of God and our own firm resolve each one of us may overcome the evil which so easily besets us, thus helping also to rid our nation from the immorality, drunkenness, and forgetfulness of God now so frightfully apparent.

Surely thus our tutelary saint, our national banner, our patriotic song, may become household words and leaders in the battle of life.

ANOTHER PROOF.

By John S. Anderson.

Truly the plot thickens! Here are some semi-editorial lines from the Daily Telegraph, taken from an article on the eve of the marriage of the Princess May describing the gala performed at the Opera last night. After commenting on the decorative magnificence of the house, comparing it with levees, drawing-rooms, garden parties, &c., &c., even when the sun is shining, the writer says there is nothing like the evening in these days of electric light to show up the beauty of women, the brilliancy of dress, the contrast of uniform, and the dazzle of priceless jewels, concluding with the following remarkable statement:—

"It is not too much to say that there is no city in the world save London where such a ceremony could be devised, instigated, and accomplished with such dignity of opulence as was observed last night. There is something in civilization after all. We may travel from Cairo to Chicago, and have a chance of seeing the barbaric splendour of the East, and of comparing it with the triumphant audacity of the West, but there was no Eastern potentate present last evening, no turbaned chief of India, no prince or Parsee, there was not one possessor of a uniform that did not belong to the military or civil forces of Her Majesty who would not have cordially owned that the often-despised England has no rival in the modern and applied art of splendour."

What more can be said about this than that it is another instance amongst so many of the fulfilment of the prophecy in Deut. xxviii. (part of 13th verse), "Thou (Israel) shalt be above only and thou shalt not be beneath."

THE GREAT EARTHQUAKE IN JAPAN.

To the Editor of the "Money Market Review."

Sir,—Every sympathizing and generous heart in this country must be stirred to its depths by the heartrending details, published this week, of the great earthquake in Japan. The bare facts speak eloquently for themselves—8,000 perished; 10,000 wounded and maimed; 89,000 houses totally destroyed; 20,000 more wrecked; and 300,000 men, women, and children suddenly rendered homeless. This calamity, of extraordinary magnitude, is intensified by happening at the beginning of winter. The Japanese are a kind and sympathetic people themselves. They will do all in their power, and willingly, but they cannot cope with such wholesale distress unaided.

The duty of helping rests largely on the English race. The Japanese are adopting our civilization, and may eventually adopt also our language and religion. Our influence is greatest, and our example highest in their land. The present is therefore a great opportunity for the English people to give the Japanese a lesson in practical Christianity by recognising them as brothers in distress, and coming quickly and generously to their help.

With this view a "Japanese Earthquake Fund" has already been opened in London, and subscriptions may be sent for it to the Japanese Consul, M. Okoshi, 84, Bishopsgate-street, E.C., or to the undersigned. They will be publicly acknowledged in the Press. The funds will be remitted by cable to Japan, and administered there by competent men in high position, who will be a guarantee that every pound subscribed will be applied judiciously and immediately in relieving the sufferers. I am, &c.,

ANGLO-ISRAEL FREE DISTRIBUTION FUND.

"To make known to the sons of men His mighty acts, and the glorious majesty of His kingdom" (Psa. cxlv. 12).

'Now therefore perform the doing of it; that as there was a readiness to will, so there may be a performance also out of that which ye have" (2 Cor. viii. 11).

ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTEENTH MONTHLY REPORT.

THE following subscriptions and donations, received from July 14th to Aug. 16th, are very gratefully acknowledged:—

By the Treasurer: Miss C., Malvern, 2s. 6d.; Miss W., Hampstead, 10s. 6d.; W. W., Norwood, £1 1s.

By Miss E. M. Rush: D. McL., Dundee, 2s.; Mrs. H., Bridge-of-Allan (a collection), 6s. 6d.; E. H., Barnwood, 2s.; J. S., 2s.; E. L., St. Leonards-on-Sea, 1s. 6d.; S. R., Bradford, 1s. 6d.; W. R., Dover, 2s.; E. M. R., Westgate (for BANNERS), 10s.

Total, £3 1s. 6d.

J. LAWRENCE, Hon. Treasurer.

OLD BANNERS.—In future, friends having old BANNERS to give away are particularly requested not to send them to the Hon. Secretary or Treasurer. The addresses of Sowers to whom such packets may be transmitted will be forwarded on application. The carriage should in all cases be fully paid, and the BANNERS sent should be clean and in good condition.

BANNER DISTRIBUTION. — The BANNER OF ISRAEL has been sent to the places now mentioned: Aldershot, Alvaston, Birkenhead, Barrow-in-Furness, Bow, Bexley, Brighton, Catford, Canterbury, Crewe, Cheetham, Carlisle, Calne, Colchester, Chatham, Chelmsford, Dover, Devonport, East Grinstead, Faversham, Harpurhey, Hull, Kirton-Lindsey, Lewisham, Lee, Lowestoft, Maesteg, Plympton, Penzance, Southwold, Stepney, Staplehurst, Teignmouth, Twickenham, Vauxhall, Wimbledon, Woolwich, Wandsworth; Edinburgh, Cockburnspath, Hamilton, Northroe (Scotland); Dublin, Fermoy (Ireland); Paris; Malta; Secunderabad Nellore, Poona, Bangalore (India); Rangoon (Burmah); Broughton (Victoria); Dubbo, Grose Vale (New South Wales); Gisborne, Taranaki (New Zealand); Launceston, (Tasmania); Mossel Bay, Port Nolloth, Vryburgh (South Africa); Barbadoes (West Indies); Detroit (United States); Port Arthur, Marsden, Manitoba (Canada).

LITERATURE DISTRIBUTION.—Fourteen packets of literature have been sent to the following places:—Camborne, St. Just, Burton, Bradstock, Catford, Ashurst Wood, Staple (Dover), Wilsden (Yorks.), Glenridding, Dundee, Bridge-of-Allan, Albion (U.S.A.), Paris, and Mauritius.

SOWING THE SEED.

The two letters quoted below as specimens for this month's report will give our readers a very clear view of the good and steady work that is being done by many of our Sowers, and they prove conclusively that the knowledge imparted is continually being set forth afresh, falling on new ground, which is oftentimes good ground, where it takes root, springs up, and brings forth fruit. It is progress again, therefore, this month that we thankfully report for the honour and glory of God.

A Sower in Scotland wrote: "I enclose 2s. in stamps for the Free Distribution Fund, with heartfelt thanks for the parcels of Identity literature you frequently send me. The distribution is doing a grand work, in a silent but very effectual way. The truth they advocate is being received by many of those I come in contact with. Besides the leaflets and pamphlets I give away, I lend books, such as 'Israel a Thesis,' 'Bible Lessons and Reflections,' 'The Anglo-Israel Post-bag,' and 'A Message to the Church from the Nineteenth Century,'' also the Handbook of 'British-Israel Truth.' The latter is getting sadly the worse for wear. I also lend my BANNERS, and afterwards send them to our non-commissioned officers of the Black Watch (42nd Highlanders), stationed in the Island of Mauritius. I also give an occasional paper on Our Identity to a Literary Society, which generally receives a favourable criticism. I also find many opportunities in addressing evangelistic mission meetings, showing from the fulfilment of the promises and the prophecies concerning Israel that the Scriptures must be of Divine origin, and therefore all the statements about sin and salvation are equally true, and will be fulfilled, both in the punishment of the sin of those who reject the Saviour, and the salvation from sin of those who receive Christ and the gift of eternal life through Him. At the same time I take care not to bring the subject of the Identity of the Anglo-Saxon with Israel prominently to the front, but I find the intelligent readers of their Bibles very soon draw the inference, and finally are persuaded that we are Israel. I hope you will excuse me troubling you with this long scrawl, but I could not help telling you what a great help in Christian work I find this great truth to be."

A Sower in a southern county in England furnishes us with the second account from our mission-field: "It is a long time since I wrote to you, not because I have forgotten you or your mission, for I am reminded of you every week, as you so kindly send the BANNERS, &c., for which I sincerely thank you. I often wish your Fund grew larger, or that those who could send much, without missing it at all, could give towards it for the benefit of many who would be glad to hear and read the good news. Those little papers, 'An Englishman an Israelite,' led a young preacher to see the truth. He is staying in a large and influential family, and comes here on Tuesdays to speak in the open air, and hold meetings in various places near by. He is rejoicing in his ancestry. I have given him several papers and books to read and so help him forward, for he is going to another part of the country at the end of this month (August). The BANNERS are read, so that all sorts of what we call 'blind evidence' in other papers and periodicals begin to be seen, and I hear from one here and another there, 'Did you see so-and-so in the paper, or in such a periodical the other day, that showed the truth? And I thought of you.' A gentleman who comes from London on Saturday night during the summer months, has come on Sundays to chapel, and heard me speak on the subject. He tells me he can see it plainly. I like to attract our busy business men, for they, when once the eye catches it—i.e., the truth that we are Israel—see it everywhere. It is a subject much more easily instilled into those who know the world, keen and sharp in business, than it is to get the poor people to see it, or decided Christians either. Christians can see that it alters the course of their teaching, and they are afraid of it and of the controversy which it would bring into the churches, and show up their ignorance. A young man has told me (since he saw this truth) that he thought me a simpleton to teach that we were all Jews; now he has been able to see the difference between a Jew and an Israelite. He has all sorts of papers at his command, and he is interested so very much that everything around him is realised in a different light, and he says to me sometimes, 'I cannot understand why our preachers do not take it up, for it would enable them to beat the sceptics hollow in a few minutes, without any trouble.' I tell him it is not the sceptic that is so hard to deal with; it is the Christian. I often talk to one near by, who, whenever he sees me, will begin to tell me of what he has heard of the wickedness of such a place. Another time it is about the number of paupers in London, &c. It is a blow at Our Identity, for he says, 'It would not be so if we were Israel.'" This does but show how ignorant are people about the condition in which Israel would be likely to be found. Surely not in a state of millennium purity and ease before the advent of that blessed time, but yet making many a brave effort, by the grace of God, to improve morally and spiritually. Our correspondent goes on to speak of some who find much in the Bible that seems so conflicting that they know not how to accept it, so they close the holy Book and lay it on a shelf as "too difficult to reconcile"; and he adds: "A lady who is now deeply interested in British-Israel truth, said to me, 'I used to think and feel sure that God must be true, but I could never see, according to His Word, how; but I would not allow myself to think God untrue upon any pretence whatever,' and she was constantly in a muddle. Many are not like her, but would be glad to get hold of something to prove Him untrue (apparently), and would point to it on all occasions. And yet with this subject how easy to prove Him true to our entire satisfaction. It enables us to walk by sight now, for His truthfulness is before our very eyes, a palpable fact."

And so we close our report, thankfully noting how, through various writings and many spoken words, our work is carried faithfully forward, and we trust that it may be more and more appreciated in all parts of the globe where British-Israel has taken root, and that we may be enabled, by help freely given, to increase knowledge concerning Israel that shall all tend to the glory of God and the salvation of souls.

Review.

The End of the World. By Joseph Grace (Sydney). Price 1s. Published by the Author, 553, George-street, Sydney, 1893.

This pamphlet is the work of Mr. Joseph Grace, of the School of Art, Sydney. He is an Anglo-Israelite, and a thorough believer in the teaching of the Great Pyramid, as expounded by Professor Piazzi Smyth, H. R. Shaw, and others. He announces in the cover of his pamphlet that he is in a position to prove the "true dates of the deluge, the exodus, the nativity, the crucifixion, and the end of this age." He derives his information, of course, from the Great Pyramid, and from the interpretation which has been put upon the different portions of the system of passages and chambers in that wonderful building. The book is a lengthy dialogue between two imaginary persons; the one "Philo," who knows all about the facts, and their meanings; and the other "Inquisito," who suggests topics for Philo, and receives his teachings with surprise, but adhesion.

The work being an Australian production, the author wishes us to make known his willingness to post the same to any address in England, on receipt of one shilling in English postage stamps. It is unnecessary to give any particular account of the author's views on the Great Pyramid, because he closely and faithfully follows all that Piazzi Smyth has written on the subject, besides much that Mr. H. R. Shaw has published.

In regard to the Identity and its teachings Mr. Grace seems to be a great admirer of the Banner and its band of writers. He terms them a "noble army of Christians," and the paper one which puts forth the truth of the Bible as few publications do!" This is satisfactory as testimony, and we hope there are many in Australia who agree with it! The book is "a pleasant gossipy tract ranging over almost all the favourite Banner subjects with more than kind words and regards for the editor and all his contributors.

But a sense of duty tells us that there is much in this publication which we wish had never been allowed to see the light! There is a tone of positive assertion throughout it, which is a decided drawback, and will tell against it with vast numbers of readers. There are subjects discussed or mooted, which have nothing to do with the Identity, and will serve rather to divide friends. For instance, what has the Salvation Army's mode of preaching and its doctrines, got to do with our subject? And why should the subject of "endless punishment" be brought in, in connection with it? Whether we are Anglo-Israelites or not, is not affected by our opinions on these matters. Then, the remarks on p. 96 regarding the alleged value of the Queen's gold plate are altogether in bad taste. They are based on hearsay evidence of the most flimsy description, and ought to be expunged in the next edition. Anglo-Israelites are not Socialists, or Communists. They are glad to know that their Sovereign is maintained in regal state, wealth, and dignity, and would refuse to reduce her to poverty that "50,000 families may be supplied with £50 each"!

We are altogether averse to such anticipations as we find on p. 69 as to the condition of the people in the millennium. It is beyond the powers of anyone to predict that there will be no lawyers then! no custom-houses, no jails, no taxation! These things have nothing to do with Our Identity, and raise questions which are sure to prejudice our subject.

These and many other statements in the volume before us, appear to us to be very objectionable, and calculated to injure our case. We wish the author had confined himself to known facts and left the future to speak for itself. It is given to none of us to prophesy from prophecy; but only to watch for coming events, and to recognise those that are past, or developing before our eyes as proofs to us that God is faithful, and His Word true. The title of Mr. Grace's pamphlet "The End of the World," strikes us as being rather misleading; for he means "the end of the Dispensation," not the end of all mundane affairs!

While we say all this, we do not desire to discourage the Australian writer of the book under review. Our object at present should be to persuade men that the Lost Ten Tribes, God's chosen people, are found, and that the British folk are they. We need care that we do not mix up with this, the main issue, matters which are highly contentious in themselves, and yet perfectly irrelevant to the chief point of our aim. We must not in any way hinder the grand work entrusted to us to perform, or retard its progress.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel.

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—Below are quotations from a book entitled "The Lamp in the Wilderness," which may interest BANNER readers, proving, as the quotations seem to do, from ancient coins, that pagan Rome and other countries derived many of their symbols and rites from Etruria and its priesthood, as well as from other Hebrew sources, and that such emblems and rites were perverted from their original signification. The book referred to is well worthy the study of all Anglo-Israelites. E. K.

"I have given instances of coins bearing the national symbol of the 'Duo Gæsa,' which we find on the Judæa Capta of Titus, and which is assigned by Livy (and proved by the tombs) to be a distinguishing mark of the Twelve Tribes which peopled Etruria, the source of the ancient Roman religious rites"—p. 98, 99.

"And upon Trajan's coin, 'Dacia Capta,' which was the region through which the wanderers would pass en route to Pomerania, &c., and from which regions, it is well known, that immediately after the death of Theodosius, A.D. 395, Alaric led his hordes to devastate the Roman Empire"—p. 99.

"In the coin of Claudius we have the Divine Being concealed under another imagery. The power which rules the waves and winds is combined with the seven stars. The readers of divine revelation would interpret this emblem by Amos v. 5—8: 'Thus saith the Lord . . . seek Him that made the seven stars and Orion . . . that calleth for the waters of the sea, and poureth them out upon the face of the earth'"—p. 105, 106.

"I recollect being much struck by meeting the seven stars on a consecratio of Faustina the elder—the empress ascending to heaven on the back of a monstrous eagle. She holds a sceptre, and the floating veil over her head is marked with stars. In Exod. xix. we read, 'How I bare you on eagle's wing's and brought you unto Myself.' Deut. xxxii. 11, 12: 'As an eagle stirreth up her nest . . . spreadeth abroad her wings . . . beareth them on her wings, so the Lord alone did lead them'"—p. 107, 108.

"The writer of Maccabees says, 'the heathen in the time of Antiochus Epiphanes turned over the books of the law to find subjects for their images.' We have here the . . . only rational mode of explaining the combination of the globe and wings and serpent, which are found over the porches of the Egyptian temples"—p. 109.

"This coin of Faustina goes far to prove the influence which was derived from Jews, which was exercised at Rome, whether Pharisaic or Sadducean, or both in turn, or whether derived to them through the priestly mysteries of Etruria or Carteia, offsets . . . at an earlier date." "Upon the authority of Ovid, Livy, and others of their own writers, Rome was originally indebted for their policy, civil and religious, to the priesthood of Etruria, and whence that was originally derived is tolerably plain to us by comparing the advice which Evander gave to Romulus, with the counsel of the chiefs and elders of Israel, in the last chapter of Judges, when there was a danger of extinction suspended over the Tribe of Benjamin"—p. 109, 110.

"According to Ovid, Evander directs Romulus to proclaim a feast to Consus, a word from a Hebrew root; others say to Mars, whence he came. We may, I think, infer, from Exod. xv. 4, 'The Lord is a man of war.' Livy tells us the feast was dedicated 'Neptunus Equestris.' We may find light thrown upon the combination of Equestris with a water deity if we have recourse to the prophet Isaiah (xliii. 15—17): 'Thus saith the Lord which maketh a way in the sea and a path in the mighty waters, which bringeth forth the chariot and horse, the army and the power'; and Hab. iii."—p. 109, 110, 111.

"A medal of Emperor Commodus bears incontestible evidence that the main symbols and imagery used by the heathen authorities and the attributes to which they refer were borrowed from the Holy Scriptures"—p. 128.

"The next emblem affords most unquestionable evidence that whatever the channel through which they were received, or however perverted to evil, the Sacred Rites, the 'Vota Publica' of Etruria and of Rome, were borrowed from the ritual of the tabernacle in the wilderness"—p. 132.

"Upon the coin, between the victim and the temple, are priests blowing with horns over the sacrifice. Turn to Num. x., which relates to the institution of the silver trumpets: 'Make thee two trumpets of silver; of a whole piece shalt thou make them, that thou mayest use them for the calling of the assembly, and for the journeyings of the camps; and when they shall blow with them, all the assembly shall assemble themselves at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation"—p. 132, 133.

"Ver. 10 refers to the very self-same subject which our medal represents. The horn or trumpet blown over the sacrifice in this 'Vota Publica' is in literal agreement with the direction to Moses; it is a double horn or two trumpets in one piece"—p. 133.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—In the BANNER of 28th ult. your correspondent (H. L. Blore) gives an interesting statement from Switzerland, showing Irish Christian teaching in that country in the fourth century, and reasonably inferring therefrom a much earlier Church in Ireland. But your correspondent's statement is specifically confirmatory of the testimony of ancient writings both in regard to the early Irish Christian teaching in Central Europe and in regard to St. Gall being a centre of Irish missionary operations. And I think we have evidence for assured belief in the existence of an Irish Church in the first century.

In the first century Clemens Romanus attests the "preaching the Gospel" in Ireland by the apostle Paul, as Nicephorus does by the same in the British Isles. In A.D. 180 Irenæus specified the churches planted in Ireland, and a good many years previous to that specification of Irenæus, Cathalgus set out from Ireland like another Paul, and after traversing Britain, did a wonderful work in evangelizing throughout Central and Southern Europe, dying in Tarentum, bishop of its church. Tertullian, somewhat later, speaks of the "places of the Britons unapproached by the Romans, but subjected to Christ," probably meaning Ireland, which—differing in this from Britain—never did allow Roman Church-rule, for that was bound upon her as fetters by Henry II.

In the subsequent centuries numerous historians exhibit their belief in the earlier testimonies to the reception in the "Holy Island"—almost at its earliest inception—of the glorious Gospel of Christ. But we may instance Gildas saying in the sixth century that Christianity was in Britain before the defeat of the British forces under Boadicea A.D. 61. And later, among others, Stillingford and Ussher may be adduced as holding like beliefs. And it should also be held in recollection that proof on this matter for Britain bears generally more strongly for Ireland. Britain's belief came principally through Ireland.

Respectfully, J. READ.

Edinburgh, July 4th, 1893.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

Sir,—Surely in this our need it should be pressed on the believers in British-Israel Identity as a duty as well as a privilege, that prayer should daily be made by all to the God of Abraham that He would deliver His chosen nation from the dangers to which they are being exposed by threatened Rome Rule, and also by the Socialistic measures to be used as bribes to carry it. Such dangers and innovations as these have never befallen us since the one man rule of Cromwell's days. Have we not a claim as the chosen race, if we only use it aright, and appeal to the God of Israel for help and deliverance from our national enemies?

Faithfully yours, HOPE.

"THE DESTINY OF ENGLAND."

A LETTER from the Right Rev. Bishop Tucker, of Eastern Equatorial Africa, from Mengo, Buganda, and dated March 13, 1893, was published in the Times on August 2, last. It is a remarkable document, describing the political and religious crisis through which Uganda was passing just at the date of Sir Gerald Portal's arrival in the place to report upon the future of Uganda. The Bishop had no information as to the Consul-General's views in regard to the fate of the country after the abdication of the Imperial British East African Company on March 31; but he felt convinced from the strong public opinion elicited in Great Britain during the early part of this year, that nothing but the permanent occupation of the country would satisfy it. "Thus," added the bishop, "in the Providence of God, the destiny of England is being wrought out, and her Christianizing and civilizing mission in the world being accomplished."

It is clear, then, to the bishop that our country has a blessed mission to carry out, and that it is "to Christianize and civilize the world." This is to be accomplished according to the bishop's views, by the permanent occupation by Great Britain of Uganda! Here, then, is an unbiassed opinion of a bishop of the Church, living in the very heart of Africa, in the centre of a wonderful Christian movement, among a lately heathen population! His opinion, which agrees with the promises of Scripture, point to the conclusion we Anglo-Israelites have long arrived at, namely, that the British, being Israel, are set apart to bless the Africans of Uganda, by giving them the Gospel, and the civilization also, which proceeds from it. The Scriptures declare that Ten-tribed Israel were to be God's agency for this gracious work. For He has said that "Israel should blossom and bud, and that they should fill the face of the world with fruit." "In thy seed shall all the nations," "all the families," "of the earth be blessed" (Gen. xxii. 18, xxviii. 14).

The bishop states the facts as they are transpiring before his eyes in Uganda, but he does not stop to reflect that while "England" is doing all this, and so fulfilling the destiny which the Providence of God assigns to her, she is literally fulfilling what God Himself promised on oath to Abraham and his seed for ever, that his afterseed exclusively should perform (Gen. xxii. 18). The bishop thus misses a vastly important and comforting point. For he does not grasp the fact that the British are therefore Israel; that they are under God's sole guidance and protection, carrying out His plans and purposes in Uganda, and will use that land sooner or later as the Gate of Central Africa. It appears clear from the bishop's testimony that "a marvellous work of grace has been carried out by the British missionaries in Uganda, in the hearts of the people there. "England," he declares, is blessing Africa, and in doing so will bless herself. How well the spiritual work of the mission is going forward in Uganda the bishop explains in the following words:—

In the meanwhile, it is most cheering to notice the progress of the work.

Every one is engaged to their very utmost. Classes for baptism—and very nearly 300 have recently offered themselves for baptism—classes for confirmation, and the daily instruction of the candidates for ordination take up the time of the whole party. Happily, all are keeping well and are cheered by the visible blessing vouchsafed by God. The work of the printing press is of the most absorbing interest. In Mr. Forster we have an able and indefatigable printer. Reading-sheets and catechisms are being worked off with the utmost speed, and yet the demand is greater than the supply. We are looking forward to the arrival of the larger press from Nassa with great hope. By its means we trust to be able to meet the demand, for reading-sheets at least. For larger work we shall have to look for the homeland to supply us.

Last Sunday (March 12) we had two remarkable sermons—one by Yairo (candidate for ordination), and the other by Nathanaeli, who, I trust, may be ordained when he is a little older; at present he is under age. The latter sermon breathed a true missionary spirit. It was based on the text "A new commandment give I unto you." The former preacher took as his subject the work of the Holy Spirit. The services were entered into by the people more heartily. As a rule, just before the commencement of the service the whole of the church elders (or council) meet the clergy in the vestry for ten minutes' prayer. First one and then another offers prayer, and the European missionary closes, so that ten minutes are rarely exceeded. I cannot help thinking that such a plan would be most fruitful at home. I am sure it is a great help out here.

What will finally be the settlement of the country in case the present Government are in power when the time comes for disposing of the matter we can hardly say. We believe Sir Gerald Portal has taken steps to assume the protectorate on the part of Great Britain; and that in the face of his proceedings it will be difficult for Mr. Gladstone's Cabinet to throw Uganda over, and to carry out once more the favourite African policy of "retreat" or "scuttle."

That, however, is impossible; since the cause of missions dear to the hearts of Englishmen, Scots, and Welsh, will not permit the work now flourishing in so many parts of Africa to be dropped. Christ and His people have their hands upon the country, and it must be His for ever. We see now why Mr. Gladstone was never allowed to abandon Egypt as he so often longed to do, and why disaster after disaster was brought about, to prevent him moving.

Israel is in Egypt, Israel is in Uganda, in the regions of the Tanganyika, the Shirè, and in Mashonaland. They thus have such a hold upon the Continent, that it scarcely needs the presence of the French, and of the Germans, by way of incitement, to witness to us that God means the African at length to hear the Gospel, and be saved; and that His people Israel must do the work of evangelization everywhere. This is what Bishop Tucker meant when he wrote of "The Destiny of England," as shown in her Christianizing and civilizing mission in the world, now under accomplishment. We close with the good bishop's final sentences, as they bear forcibly on our contention in the BANNER. He wrote thus:—

I would that I could tell you something as to the intentions of the Commission with respect to the future administration of this country. But it is impossible. Sir Gerald Portal has only been a few days in Mengo, and in so short a time it is impossible to grasp the complicated situation and pronounce upon it. One thing, however, is quite clear, and that is that the Company's rule terminates definitely on March 31. Then, of necessity some sort of Government administration will have to be formed. The only question is whether it will take a temporary or permanent form. The decision on this all-important point will no doubt rest ultimately with the English people. After the late expression of public opinion at home I personally have no doubt as to what the issue will be. The public conscience has been aroused, and nothing but the permanent occupation of the country will satisfy it. Thus, in the Providence of God, the destiny of England is being wrought out, and her Christianizing and civilizing mission in the world being accomplished. I thank God for this marvellous work of grace in the hearts of the people of Uganda, but I also thank Him for all that He has done in rousing Christian England to a sense of her duties and responsibilities. In blessing Africa she will herself be blessed. "The blessing of the Lord it maketh rich, and He addeth no sorrow with it." "When He giveth quietness, who then can make trouble?" "How great is Thy goodness which Thou hast laid up for them that fear Thee, which Thou hast wrought for them that trust in Thee before the sons of men."

ALFRED, Bishop E. Eq. Africa.

All well! thank God

THE DEMORALISING EFFECTS OF GLADSTONIAN POLITICS.

"To the Editor of the 'Manchester Courier.

"SIR,—Britishers have a world-wide name for being loyal, patriotic, truthful, honest and upright in their actions and dealings. We have inherited this from our forefathers, but I question very much whether the present generation is doing anything to maintain it. We cannot say the Court is corrupt or disseminating a retrograding influence on society, but in my humble opinion the representatives of the people, the leaders in political life and thought are doing much to undermine it. I must say I have felt pained and shocked at the downright lying, duplicity, misrepresentation, and the twofaced dealing in this Home Rule business both by our public men and the Press to serve party purposes. This must have a bad and wicked influence on the rising generation, and in particular on our young men placed in positions of trust and responsibility, and who are in turn to carry on this great commercial nation. If a bad influence is spread amongst men of trust it will soon find its way in commercial dealings with all the nations of the world. The Bishop of Manchester once said that there was a time when British goods were accepted without test in all the markets of the world. I am afraid it is not so now. We are spending an enormous amount of money on national education, and taxing ourselves up to the hilt for educational purposes, but we shall be all the worse unless it is accompanied by truth and honesty. For instance, take clerks, cashiers, municipal servants, managers, secretaries, and buyers in hundreds of our large business firms, who have entrusted to them tens of thousands of pounds. What is their principal qualification? Not high scholarship, but truth, honesty, and integrity, and tens of thousands in times past have made their way to the highest positions in the world, both in commerce and the State, who have had a meagre education, but have risen to those positions simply on their industry and honesty. If this is once shaken or underminded it will cause greater calamity and loss to the nation than any war has ever inflicted. You can scarcely take up a paper but you see some embezzlement or betrayal of trust and confidence, and by men receiving princely salaries. During the last 20 years I have known at least 100 such—nearly 100 I have known personally—who have been imprisoned or left their country in disgrace, and not one of them has had a poor education or been in straitened circumstances, except through their own wickedness and folly. So it must be patent to all right-minded and thinking and observing men if the emoluments of office and the attainment of high office cannot be attained without demoralising the people, it is better to let well alone, and not do evil that good may come. It is for want of honesty, truth, and integrity we are in Egypt, and governing about one-half the world. I believe that God has given Great Britain a mission to perform in the world, and in my humble opinion we ought not to withdraw from any of our possessions until we have leavened the whole and raised them to the standard that has made us a great nation, and renowned 'where'er the sun does his successive journeys run.' During my travels in the East I have often felt flattered by being an Englishman, also encouraged to keep up that noble character and esteem we have amongst the ancient people of the world. I have also felt ashamed of my countrymen to think how little the great mass of the people realise how highly favoured we are in being Britishers, and the awful responsibility we have in governing, influencing, directing the destinies and welfare of the great human families of the world. Not only have the people whom we govern their eyes upon us, but every nation of the world. Yet the tender regard for the susceptibilities of the Fenians and Invincibles and their friends, combined with constant insults to England has become an abiding habit with a certain class of writers in the English press and a certain class of orators on English platforms. It is sickening to find men libelling their own country on every possible occasion, merely for the purpose of getting a few hundred Irish votes to assist them to carry their own fads and measures, some of which are as insane, wicked, and unjust to the nation at large as the Home Rule Bill. You may call this patriotic if you like; but I call it in the language of Mr. Goschen, 'mischievous devilry.' Lord Randolph Churchill, Mr. Goschen, and others have called attention more than once to the evil influence it will have on our relations with foreign nations, in particular on the Continent, and every blow struck at British influence and prestige is a blow struck at British trade and commerce.

"Yours, &c., J. S. GREENHALGH.

"Summerseat House, The Park, Rochdale, June 6, 1893."

We publish the above, not to cast further obloquy upon Mr. Gladstone and his Government, but in order to show our low-spirited patriot that, after all, his pessimism is not justified or called for. In the first place we cannot be so bad (if that be relevant to the matter) as our friend paints us, because God continues to uphold our nation's power in Egypt, and allows us to govern still "over half the world." We are, then, not wholly degenerate, or we should be set aside by God, surely, in favour of some other race? But we are Israel, which Mr. Greenhalgh does not know; and therefore he does not remember, that while Israel is in herself a poor, wretched, and recreant nation, their God has promised to give them, for His oath's sake, that national repentance and change of heart which will completely transform them. He has promised to put His laws in their hearts, and write them in their minds, so that they shall all know Him, from the least of them to the greatest of them, what time He shall remember their sins and iniquities no more (Jer. xxxi. 33, 34; Heb. viii. 10, 12). It is true that the conduct of the party over which the Prime Minister rules, has been wanting lately in rectitude and straightforwardness, and that our merchants and commercial men have in some, alas! too many, instances, been lacking in honesty and rectitude. Yet, on the whole, the British name is still respected a good deal throughout the earth; and British merchants, being merchant princes, are beyond all comparison, the most successful and respected merchants in the earth!

Let our Manchester friend, then, cheer up! Mr. Gladstone's reign will not last for ever! When he ceases to hold the national reins, the Irish party, who are such a grief to our sober nation, will cease to trouble, but will find their proper level. Ireland, prosperous and happy, will cease to return such rebels as now make our parliamentary records hideous; and then, with God's blessing, we shall hear no more of what so shocks Mr. Greenhalgh to-day. Israel, further, is the selected agency which is to bless all nations, families, and kindreds of the earth (Gen. xviii. 18; xxii. 18). God's promise regarding her, to qualify her for her duties, is unconditional, and therefore certain. "He showeth His words unto Jacob; His statutes and His judgments unto Israel. He hath not so dealt with any nation. And as for His judgments, they have not known them" (Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20). If God Himself instructs Israel in her duties, by imparting to her alone the Word of life, that she may have the honour and the privilege of taking it abroad to all the nations, then is her safety assured; for she is the chosen one of God Almighty, to proclaim the Gospel of His grace to the perishing nations of the earth!

Though he writes so despondingly, our Rochdale friend seems, after all, to have a high opinion of our nation. Because other nations lack "honesty, truth, and integrity," therefore we are in possession of their countries—to wit, Egypt, and about "half the world" besides! We have, in his opinion (quite justly too!), a duty to perform towards these outside nations, and we ought not (he thinks) to retire from any one of our possessions until we have leavened the whole, and raised them to the standard that has made us a great nation, and renowned, "where'er the sun does his successive journeys run." He is proud, too, merely to belong to the British nation, and to reflect that "we govern, influence, and direct the destinies and welfare of the great human families of the world." Here is a national function which certainly God reserved for Israel exclusively; yet Mr. Greenhalgh quietly assumes that it belongs to us! In Deut. xxviii. 1, 13 it is said that "Israel obedient" should be made "the head and not the tail," "above only, but not beneath," and set high above all the nations of the earth." This is another way of expressing what our friend declares is the condition of our nation to-day. The "great human families of the earth" are invited by us to follow our example, to accept our Saviour and His holy word written, and generally to be blessed with us as God promised "Abraham and his seed for ever" that they should bless all "the families of the earth. Our despondent friend records the fulfilment of the prophecy, but does not stop to see that the people who fulfil it are the very race to whom it was originally given! Verily, Israel is "blind!"

DOES JEREMIAH PROVE THAT ISRAEL AND JUDAH RETURNED TOGETHER FROM BABYLON?

BY W. WELLER.

[A Paper read before an Anglo-Israel Investigation Society in Surrey.]

PART I.

IT will be known, I daresay, to most of you present here that, at our meeting in January, I read a paper on the question, "Were the Ten Tribes of Israel lost?" and that in that paper, after defining both terms of the question, I proceeded to lay before the meeting certain evidence that the House of Israel was lost according to my definition of the term—viz., "that that House did not return with Judah from Babylon, was not in Palestine when our Saviour was on earth, and is not now with the Jews." You also know that our last two monthly meetings have been occupied in listening to papers by my good brother F., who endeavoured to throw discredit on the evidence produced by me, and to show that the tribes in question were not lost.

To-night I am permitted to reply to Mr. F.'s two papers. But before doing so, I desire most cordially to thank him for his courtesy in placing his first paper in my hands, so that I might be quite sure of the exact terms of his criticism of my paper. I am aware that in debating societies it is not usual for disputants to give their papers into their opponent's hands; but I hope this Society will never sink to the level of a mere debating club, and will always remember that we are professedly Christian men and women in search of a truth. I hope, too, we shall never forget that we do not meet for the purpose of deciding whether Mr. F. or Mr. W. is right, but to ascertain what is right or true concerning the subject we have agreed to investigate.

Of course, then, owing to Mr. F.'s courtesy, I know exactly what he said in his first lecture, but in respect of his second I am dependent on the few notes I made and on my memory; but I trust I shall do substantial justice to his last paper and to him. I am led to confine myself this evening to replying to his last lecture, because the time at our disposal is too brief to admit of my dealing fairly with both, and because, from the fact that he asked permission to deliver this lecture on the book of the prophet Jeremiah before I answered his previous paper, I suppose he considers that in it he has offered his more weighty objections to my conclusions.

I believe the following to be a fair outline of the gentleman's second lecture. The lecturer began by stating his own view on the question, which was that both Houses, Israel and Judah, returned from captivity together under the edict of Cyrus, although he did not think they all returned—not even a majority, but only a minority—"sufficient, however," the gentleman thought, "to fulfil prophecy." The lecturer then proceeded to support his view by quotations from the prophet Jeremiah, who, we were informed, only prophesied of one captivity and one return—the return from Babylon—and "of his own and near times." Mr. F. was not sure that Jeremiah prophesied of the Messiah, but "if so, the prophet represented Him as coming to rule, and not to suffer." The lecturer then gave us a series of quotations, which I hope to deal with presently.

But, ladies and gentlemen, if I have not materially misrepresented Mr. F.'s views, the battle is ended. I hardly know whether to say the enemy has surrendered at discretion, or that he has retreated fighting. At any rate, the citadel is ours. For, dropping metaphor, let us see what Mr. F. has admitted. In this second lecture he admits that only a minority of the two Houses carried into captivity returned; and in his first lecture, when criticising my references to the book of Ezra, he said "that book only proved that the bulk of those who returned belonged to the House of Judah." So then, according to Mr. F.'s own views, those of the House of Israel who returned were but a minority of a minority—i.e., indeed, a very few. Now, unless the gentleman can tell us what became of the majority, he must further admit that, so far as he knows, they are lost. Here let us read what God said by his prophet Amos (ix. 9): "For lo, I will command, and I will sift the House of Israel among all the nations, like as corn is sifted in a sieve, yet shall not the least grain fall upon the earth." Mr. F. has already (first lecture) told us this passage refers to the House of Israel, and therefore I think he will find it necessary to accept more of the "Anglo-Israelite theories" in order to reconcile this word of God's with his own admission that only a small minority of the House of Israel returned to Palestine with Judah under the edict of Cyrus. I will leave him to meditate on this matter while I pass on.

I would next remark that if Jeremiah prophesied of the Messiah's coming "as a Ruler, and not to suffer," Mr. F.'s statement that "he only prophesied of his own and near times," is not of very much value; for we know that Christ's first coming, which was to suffer, did not take place for more than 500 years after the time of Jeremiah, and that He has not come to rule even yet.

I need not enumerate all the verses which were quoted by the gentleman to show how frequently the two Houses are spoken of together by this prophet. The quotations were made with the remark that in this book "Israel and Judah were associated in sin and in punishment," and Mr. F. by that means evidently hoped to lead us to infer that they were both to be associated in the return from Babylon. That the two Houses are frequently named together, and the sin of one compared to that of the other, I very readily admit; but when Mr. F. speaks of them being associated in punishment, what does he mean? The House of Israel was carried captive something like 130 years before that of Judah, and long before Jeremiah was born. There is no circumstance in connection with the captivities of these two Houses which would lead us to infer that they were both to return together from Babylon. The gentleman did not consider it discreet, I suppose, to refer to chap. xxv. 11, 12, of this prophet, where, while it is said Judah shall return at the end of 70 years, no mention whatever is made of Israel's return. You will observe there is no association of Israel with Judah in all this 25th chapter, and the most natural inference is that both Houses were not destined to return at the time here spoken of. That this prophet refers in many places to a return of the Houses of Israel and Judah together is obvious to the most casual reader; but I am concerned now to show that that return was not the return at the end of the 70 years' captivity in Babylon, as contended for by Mr. F.

To resume, for a moment, the simile I employed just now, the citadel having been secured, it only now remains for us to destroy the outlying fortifications on which the enemy appears to have relied.

Mr. F. says Jeremiah speaks only of one captivity and one return—the captivity in Babylon, and the return therefrom—and he quoted a number of prophecies, all referring (he says) to the same return. If, therefore, I succeed in showing that even one of these prophecies quoted by Mr. F. concerning the return of Israel and Judah together was not fulfilled on the return under the edict of Cyrus, I shall claim to have beaten him on the whole of them, because he says they all refer to the same return. But I think I shall be able to satisfy you that not one of the prophecies quoted by Mr. F. refers to the return at the end of the 70 years' captivity. I desire to speak modestly. I do not forget that Mr. F.* is a shepherd in Israel, while I am only one of the "silly" sheep.

I once heard a preacher, who did not believe himself to be an Anglo-Israelite, say that no one could tell exactly what a prophecy meant until it had been fulfilled; and I think we may also say that the only way of knowing whether a prophecy refers to a certain past event is to try to fit the details of the one to those of the other, and, if they will not agree, we may conclude the one does not refer to the other.

I will take the first passage quoted by Mr. F. in support of his statement that both Houses, Israel and Judah, returned from Babylon, Jer. iii. I shall read from the Revised Version, because Mr. F. thinks that version suits his purpose better than the Authorised Version.

Jer. iii. You will observe how well the distinction between Israel and Judah is maintained throughout this chapter. In the 11th verse we read, "Backsliding Israel hath shown herself more righteous than treacherous Judah." As Israel at the time these words were uttered had already been in captivity about a century, we cannot think the prophet was speaking of the condition of Israel at that time. He

* Mr. F. was a Nonconformist minister, who begged that, in our meetings, we would never speak of him as "the Rev."

Digitized by Google

must have been looking forward to some future time, when the people of Israel should turn to the Lord in greater numbers than the people of Judah. And so, doubtless, if this prophecy refer to the return under the edict of Cyrus, it must indicate that a larger number of that House than of Judah would then be brought back. But Mr. F. is our witness that the reverse of this was the fact. Then I say the prophecy did not refer to that event.

A REMARKABLE PROPOSAL.

"In the North American Review for June is a remarkable article on the re-union of the English-speaking people, by Mr. Andrew Carnegie, entitled: 'A Look Ahead.' It is practically an appeal to England to consent to throw in her lot with America, and will form the closing chapter of the new edition of 'Triumphant Democracy.' Mr. Carnegie does not believe that the separation can be permanent. In the first place three-fourths of the population of the United States is Anglo-Saxon in blood. Next, London is as close to New York as New York is to San Francisco. Thirdly, the telegraph is bringing the various centres more and more into touch with each other. Fourthly,' the advantages of a race confederation are so numerous and so obvious that one scarcely knows how to begin their enumeration. Consider its defensive power. A re-union of the Anglo-Americans, consisting to-day of 108,000,000, which 50 years hence will number more than 200,000,000, would be unassailable upon land by any power or combination of powers that it is possible to create. We need not, therefore, take into account attacks upon the land; as for the water, the combined fleets would sweep the seas. The new nation would dominate the world and banish from the earth its greatest stain—the murder of men by men. It would be the arbiter between nations, and enforce the peaceful settlement of all quarrels. The smaller nations, having discovered that they would not be permitted to disturb the peace of the world, would naturally disarm. There would be no use in maintaining large forces either for attack or defence when the Anglo-American had determined that no one should attack.' Fifthly: The commercial advantages of the re-union would be enormous. 'Not the most sanguine advocate of 'Imperial Federation' dares to intimate that the federation he dreams of would free the markets of all its members to each other. This question cannot even be discussed when Imperial conferences meet. If it be introduced it is judiciously shelved. But an Anglo-American re-union brings free entry of all British products as a matter of course. The richest market in the world is opened to Britain, free of all duty, by a stroke of the pen. There can be little question that nothing would so certainly ensure the permanent prosperity of Great Britain as free access to the American market, which can be effected so easily through re-union, which would also bring with it enhanced value to land as the result of prosperity in all branches of British trade and industry; and were Britain and America again one, the American would find the former the best summer home within his reach. I do not shut my eyes to the fact that re-union, bringing free entrance of British products, would cause serious disturbance to many manufacturing interests near the Atlantic coast, which have been built up under the protective system. But, sensitive as the American is said to be to the influence of the dollar, there is a chord in his nature—the patriotic—which is much more sensitive still. Judging from my knowledge of the American manufacturers, there are few who would not gladly make the necessary pecuniary sacrifices to bring about a re-union of the old home and the new."

The above forwarded to us by the Rev. Denis Hanan, D.D., appeared, we presume, in an Irish journal, in the month of June. It deals with an article which has, on several occasions, been alluded to in the BANNER, but we have here more of the reasoning by which Mr. Carnegie arrives at his conclusions. We fear the anticipation of an Anglo-American re-union is, not yet at least, within the limits of practical politics, and will hardly be realised till the restoration of Israel, Judah and Manasseh, is near at hand. The idea that the States would ever permit British commodities free entry into their markets, appears as yet a little too Utopian for us to treat the idea with seriousness. The proposal, however, is "a remarkable one," and must one day be a fact. We can only hope that it is in the close future and that some of us who are living may see the glorious realisation. Then will Israel's return be close at hand, and the reign of the Lord Jesus Christ as the King of Israel be at the doors! To Him be all the praise for the splendid future that awaits both Israel and their brother, the House of Manasseh!

BIBLE HISTORY.

By J. P. BASTARD.

DR. EDERSHEIM, in his "History of Judah and Israel," vol. v., p. 175, says:—"The dynasties that reigned there (Samaria) have long been swept away; the people over whom they ruled carried into a captivity over which the veil of impenetrable mystery lies. Only the word of the Lord has stood firm and immovable. Of Nadab, of Baasha, of Elah, of Zimri, and of Omri, Scripture has only one and the same thing to say, that they walked in the way and in the sin of Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, 'wherewith he made Israel to sin, to provoke Jehovah, the God of Israel, to anger.'"

Oh, what our learned doctors and professors miss by taking for granted the popular idea that these lost sheep, the House of Israel, have over them the veil of "impenetrable mystery." True it is that "the word of the Lord has stood firm and immovable," and always will. Then why not consult the word of the Lord? At the very time when these dynasties were passing away the prophet Hosea was writing some very interesting information about the same people. It is singular that our learned doctors generally do not refer back to contemporary history. One rev. gentleman says we should go back to the locality where they were lost to find them. Rather ingenious this; only absurd, when we consider the great and many movements of people which have taken place in and through that same locality. But although the kingdom of the House of Israel was to be destroyed, and the people sifted among all nations like as corn is sifted in a sieve, yet should not the least grain fall upon the earth (Amos ix. 9). If we consult Hosea's book we shall find not only the sin of Israel portrayed, but his redemption also, and his being brought back into favour. The divorce of Israel was real and complete, so was also to be their re-betrothal and blessing. See the latter part of chap. ii.: "I will betroth thee unto Me for ever; yea, . . . in righteousness . . . in mercies . . . in faithfulness . . . in judgment . . . in lovingkindness; and thou shalt know the Lord." In ver. 23: "I will sow her unto Me in the earth." This sowing by the Lord unto Himself must result in fruitfulness and blessing to all mankind, quite agreeing with Isaiah that "Israel shall blos-om and bud and fill the face of the world with fruit." Observe this is not the spiritual Israel, or Church of Christ, but "them that come of Jacob." Christ told the Jews that the kingdom of God should be taken from them and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof. If the kingdom had remained with the Jews, and they had received Christ, they would have brought forth the fruits of the kingdom. As it is, the kingdom is certainly with "them that come of Jacob," and with those who are bringing forth the fruits, as spoken by the prophet Isaiah. Christ said it was to be "a nation." The Church of Christ is not a nation, but composed of many nations. The nation bringing forth the fruits stands before the world to-day. All that see them acknowledge that they are "the seed which the Lord hath blessed" (Isa. lxi. 9). This fact is constantly being illustrated. A case in point, that of the Paris Figaro, which lately sent out to Egypt a Monsieur Felix Dubois on purpose to observe the doings of the British there, and to show up their perfidy. M. Dubois writes in quite another strain, and shows that none more than the French themselves have benefited by our occupation of Egypt, and everyone knows who has looked into the matter that Egypt has benefited immensely.

The popular theology of the day must be very faulty. The significance of the grand Abrahamic covenant which the Lord took upon Himself unconditionally to fulfil, seems completely ignored.

Our good friend, the Rev. Idrisyn Jones, in last week's BANNER OF ISRAEL, shows how well Mr. Charles Bradlaugh could have been met by Our Identity, and generally by the plain literal interpretation of the Bible. In the Christian of this week, under "Education and Missions," quoted from the current Missionary Review of the World, the usual spiritual interpretation of the Scriptures does not seem to make much headway against the subtlety of the Hindu Brahmin. The simple gospel commanded to be preached to all nations, Hindu or British, is, as far as I can gather from Christ's own words, the redemption of Israel and the saving of the world through the precious blood of the atonement.

Streatham, August 26th, 1893.

THE ONLY ARGUMENT IN FAVOUR OF "THE HOBBY" ACCORDING TO THE "WARRIOR SQUARE MAGAZINE."

A WRITER in the Warrior-square Magazine, of July, 1893, expresses his views on the subject of Our Identity thus:—

"ENGLISHMEN V. ISRAELITES.

"The theory that English Gentiles are Hebrews of the Hebrews which some are promoting is fanciful enough. The argument in favour of the 'hobby' is that the early settlers on these isles came from the regions where Israel had been deported. As well call the dispersed sons of the patriarchs Judeo-Egyptians, for did not a 'mixed multitude' come out of Egypt with the freed people on their exodus? It is, however, comforting to know that while in Russia the ancient people are hated and ill-treated, the Christianized and godly Gentiles here befriend them and give them their sympathy."

The "Hebrew Christian" who penned these lines ventures to write on a subject respecting which he has not read a line or given a thought. No one on our side has ever rested the case on such an absurdly slender argument as the one he names. All the nations of Europe came originally, we are told, from the same cradle of races, Central Asia, as the British did, and yet no one is foolish enough to allege that therefore the nations of Europe are Israelites as well as ourselves.

The error, moreover, is repeated respecting the existence of the Jews at the time of the exodus, for the "Hebrew Christian" asks in his simplicity why the Israelites should not be called "Judeo-Egyptians," because a "mixed multitude" came out of Egypt with the freed people on their exodus." The freed people no doubt in his estimation were called Jews in the time of Moses. If he will consult 2 Kings xvi. 6 he will find that the Scriptures first speak of the House of Judah as the Jews about B.C. 742, and that it is ridiculous for the "Hebrew Christian" to make such a blunder as to suppose the Israelites of the exodus could have been called Jews.

The grounds on which we depend who believe in "Our Identity," shortly stated, are these. They may be new to the "Hebrew Christian" and to others as little informed in the matter as he. Our British ancestors not only came into Europe from the very spot where Ephraim-Israel was cast out according to 2 Kings xvii. 1—23; but they possess to-day the whole of the blessings promised to Ephraim, the son of Joseph, as the birthright of Israel. They enjoy them all, and they enjoy them exclusively, in the very locality and at the exact time indicated in the prophecies. God sware to Abraham that his afterseed should inherit these things, and in the hand of the Mediator, the Lord Jesus Christ, they have in due course been made over to the British people who therefore we allege, quite logically, must be lost Ephraim found, in separation from Judah.

It is true, as our "Hebrew Christian" alleges, that our nation is now reckoned among the Gentiles, and he fulfils a very ignoble prophetic function when, according to Hos. i. 10, he joins the chorus of the enemies of God and declares Israel to be "not God's people." He admits apparently that the British are "sons of the living God," or true Christians, since he allows we are "Christianized and godly Gentiles," bringing forth, too, fruits of the kingdom of God, when "we befriend the Jews in their misery, and give them our sympathy." The British thus, on our opponent's own showing, have the true marks of Israel, and fulfil Hos. i. 10 to the very letter.

The Jews, indeed, at the present time are in a sad plight in every country in the world, except our own hospitable land; even in America they are not welcome. We wonder, then, that a "Hebrew Christian" should reject a plan which is divine in its origin, that gives his persecuted brethren a protector of their own race according to the prophecies, who is shortly to conduct them back, as most divines who study the subject allow, to the splendours and happiness of Palestine restored under Messiah Jesus their King.

The "Hebrew Christian" concludes his remarks on the subject of "British Gentiles" by reminding himself that "the torn kingdom shall yet be re-established under one King at the time of Messiah." He concludes by saying that "instead of seeking to Judaize Gentiles, our zealous friends had better put forth effort in the direction of Christianizing the Jews." Here we have the old error repeated, and we are supposed to be striving to prove that the British Gentiles are "Jews," and that, our efforts are not directed towards Christianizing the sons of Judah. The "Hebrew Christian" clearly does not see that while "all Jews are Israelites," the vast majority of the Israelites were never Jews. As to failure to evangelize the Jews, those efforts are being made very earnestly by a section of our people, and not without success.

Our opponent's remarks are founded in ignorance, which in one of his race is really unpardonable. If a Hebrew cannot tell the difference between a Jew and an Israelite, and does not know that the Ten Tribes are not Jews, though they are Israelites, then one cannot wonder at the ignorance of the bulk of our British folk as to this distinction which nevertheless is plainly indicated both in the Hebrew and in the Greek Scriptures.

WHY IS ANGLO-ISRAELITE TRUTH REJECTED?

An Appeal to the Church of Christ, Founded on the Grounds of Faith and Reason.

By Revertite.

When we find our Anglo-Israelite views rejected by the world we are not surprised. Most men are materialists, in practise at least, if not in theory, and for them nothing can exist beyond the material. What their understanding fails to penetrate they think it clearly their duty to deny. But when the "Church of Christ" (using the term in its most comprehensive sense, as including the whole body of believers) stedfastly denies and rejects our belief, the case is different. Why, we ask ourselves, does the Anglo-Israel belief fail to carry conviction to the hearts of true believers?

Looking at the question broadly there appear to be two reasons, either of which must form a sufficiently strong barrier against its acceptance. The first and simplest is, "Because men do not apply to it the test of human reason." The second, "That they lack that perceptive faculty or spiritual insight which is the result of simple faith."

1st. On the first of these we eagerly affirm that our belief, though it is not a mere human speculation nor a form of dogmatic systematizing—which is the product of mere logical activity—appeals to the intellect and to the reason as much as to the heart of man. We freely invite men to a fair and open criticism, and yet this is denied us, and when dealing with the average intellect we meet instead with unconcealed contempt.

Why should we so constantly have to iterate and re-iterate the evidences upon which our belief is built? Simply because men do not deign to put our proofs to the test as they would do that of any other belief. Yet in these days there is more room given, perhaps, than there ever was to speculation and inquiry, and in the rationalistic spirit of the age this keen analytic spirit of investigation is applied to even the vaguest speculations. And this is the criticism we invite;—the false belief which is founded on superstition and error, shrinks from an enquiry which will reveal its true nature, and before which it must inevitably fall.

To our belief we apply a credited method of argument, and if by intelligent inquiry and a perfectly clear method of reasoning we have arrived at conclusions resting upon a substantial basis of truth, why, we ask, should those conclusions be denied by those who have never applied to them the same test?

2nd. Men lack that perceptive faculty or spiritual insight which is the result of simple faith.

In considering, carefully, the personal relations of the Divine Being to mankind, we observe that these relations bear a two-fold aspect and are distinct one from another.

1st. The Subjective—viz., that which irrespective of historic truth all believers by reason of their adoption into Christ recognise and enjoy.

2nd. The Objective—viz., that which is only rightly comprehended by those who occupy a two-fold position of vital kinship to God.

This kinship, the knowledge of which entitles us to a careful right of precedence, is the key to all true interpretation of the Divine character, and is the special perogative of the chosen people. It is the legal claim the recognition of which we urge and concerning which the members of Christ's Church inquire "Cui bono?" This two-fold relationship throws a glorious light upon all revelation and enhances a thousand-fold the value of divine truth. The miraculous element in it is part of our heritage and forms the test of true faith. God yields His secrets to us according to the width of our perceptive powers, and it is only as we simplify our belief of a truth, that its obviousness will appear. Herein lies the mystery of the kingdom of God, involving the relations of mind to matter, of the finite to the infinite, of man to God Himself.

To all true members of the Church, who are our brethren in Christ Jesus, we commend these thoughts, trusting that they may dispose them to a more serious consideration of the Anglo-Israelite faith and with the humble hope also, that these suggestions may prove to be of some value to those of our brethren who are endeavouring to spread the Anglo-Israelite belief inside the Church of Christ and who are discouraged by the apparently slow progress made. It may be that an appeal founded afresh, on either or each of the two grounds above stated, may meet with new and more hopeful results.

RANDOM SHAFTS.

Your military "Inquirer" from the Punjab, Mr. Editor, is a most curious Berean. Not being prepared for a duel, I should not dare to deny the statement that his scruples are perfectly honest, but somehow he seems to approach the subject with a musket in one hand and a sabre in the other. If the solution of his difficulties would delight him, why does he surround them with so much steel? We can hardly get at them for guns and gunpowder. But if his letter is to be taken as a preliminary reconnaissance of the Identity, it is obvious that he has a grave defect for an officer, which will have to be remedied unless he wishes to sustain a crushing defeat. He is surveying the scene of operations with only one eye, and although one-eyed commanders have been known to win battles, that was because they gave full play to their remaining visual organ. Our soldierly critic is not doing so. He ignores prophecies which are "as plain as Harrow's steeple," and confines his attention to those which, at the least, need an intelligent use of both optics.

"The Inquirer makes something of the word outcasts." And who can blame him? There is nothing like making the most of what you've got, especially when you've got next to nothing. Of course the evident meaning of "outcasts" in this connection is "cast out of Palestine."

Digitized by Google

Inquirer, however, learns from it that the Ten Tribes must be in a condition similar to the Jews. But, happily, the Jews themselves learn from it that the Ten Tribes are in a very different condition. "Outcasts in Hebrew means cast to one place, and therefore they (the Ten Tribes) must be found in one country of the earth gathered together" (Dr. Wolff's Journal). The intimation that, when Israel is restored, "the blind, the lame, and woman with child" will be "with them," shows that not the humblest or feeblest will be excluded. But "Inquirer" skips the words "with them" as he would clear an enemy's ditch, and coolly assumes that the assemblage will be made up of lame, blind, &c.,—a sort of travelling infirmary. The wonder is, how they manage to pick their way home. True, we have read the story of a blind boy who carried a lame one, the latter performing the function of guide. By this method, perhaps, they arrive at their destination. Then comes the invasion from the North quarters. According to "Inquirer" the Hebrew race at this juncture still consists of cripples, and at the approach of Gog the terror-stricken cripples are huddling in unwalled villages.

Putting aside the Ten Tribes, let us try and fancy 6,000,000 of Jews, the richest and most enterprizing of men, living in villages. It requires an effort to imagine any person in his right mind broaching such an idea. Wherever the Jews go they buy halls, or build mansions, and if Palestine was in their hands it would be second to none for civic magnificence. But "what about the unwalled villages" is demanded. Our friend will be pleased to hear that the unwalled villages are a myth. What Gog meditates is this:—"I will go up to an open country; I will go to them that are at quiet, that dwell securely, all of them dwelling without walls, and having neither bars nor gates" (R.V.). Dwelling without walls, bars, and gates, is a conspicuous trait of the British. They do not encase their cities, or strew the soil with fortresses. They may do so in the lands they conquer, as in India; but not in the lands they inhabit—e.g., England, America, Australia.

They will act on the same principle in Syria. The Briton and (or) the Israelite disdains citadels, ramparts, and compulsory conscription. But this is not a sign of weakness, it is an indication of conscious strength, and is so expressed in Scripture: "Jacob shall return, and shall be in rest, and be quiet, and none shall make him afraid" (Jer. xxx. 10). "They shall fear no more nor be dismayed" (Jer. xxiii. 4). "Thou shalt be far from oppression, for thou shalt not fear; and from terror, for it shall not come near thee" (Isa. liv. 14). "They shall dwell safely, and none shall make them afraid" (Ezek. xxxiv. 28). These texts have also a bearing on Jacob's trouble. It has yet to be proved that "Jacob's trouble" is in the future. He cannot have greater trouble than he has had; and if Christ's advice refers to a period after the restoration, Matt. xxiv. 16—22 will have to be reconciled with the above, and dozens of other passages.

"We are told distinctly that the Israelites in Palestine will only be saved from total annihilation by God's own direct intervention." Where? I am afraid that on this matter it is we Anglo-Israelites who must sit in the seat of the enquirer and beg to be enlightened. In a sense (and a very real sense) all Israel's victories were due to God's direct intervention. She owed everything to God's favour —and so, it is said, do we. But the peculiar vision of "Inquirer" sees Israel to be a helpless mob, unable to strike a blow in self-defence. It is hard to tell where this extraordinary notion can have been contracted, because the Old Testament is largely a panegyric over Israel's superior prowess. In addition to those already quoted, the following prophecies must needs be explained. "Thine hand shall be lifted up upon thine adversaries, and all thine enemies shall be cut off" (Micah v. 9). "They shall be as mighty men which tread down their enemies in the mire of the streets in the battle, and they shall fight because the Lord is with them" (Zech. x. 5). "Thou art My battle-axe and weapons of war, for with thee will I break in pieces the nations" (Jer. li. 20). "The remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles, in the midst of many people, as a lion among the beasts of the forest. . . . who, if he go through, both treadeth down and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver" (Micah v. 8).

No doubt it would be in the last degree strange were the British to renounce Christianity for Judaism. The chances are against it. There is ground for supposing that the Jews will revert to Mosaic rites, but in all the allusions to the Ten Tribes there is not the slightest hint that they will do this. On the contrary the language employed of them is applicable to none but a Christian people (Hos. i. 10, ii. 20—23, xiv. 4—8; Zech. x. 7—9; Jer. iii. 22, xxxi. 18—20). God's plans do "go forward," without any "retrogression;" and that is a reason why we decline to allow that the Abrahamic covenant has stood still for 2,000 years. In fact the popular view is that the Hebrew has gone back to the subordinate position he occupied during the Egyptian bondage. This is retrogression, beyond controversy. God chose Israel to be His "servant," "ministers," and "witnesses," and gave them ages of severe schooling for their high post. Yet we are taught that He had to cast them off just when they were wanted, and entrust His work to wholly untrained races. Was that unbroken progress? Is it not a serious reflection on Divine wisdom?

"A Hebrew Christian," alias "P. W.," has figured more than once in the BANNER. It will be remembered that "P. W." is the writer who dealt with Anglo-Israelism in a monthly called the Warrior-square Magazine, of St. Leonards; on which occasion it transpired that he was quite unaware his forefathers indulged in human sacrifices, and he also thought it "remarkable"—as an exposure of Identity errors about the return from Babylon—that the presence of Levi was "distinctly mentioned" in the New Testament. Having thus explored the depths of history he is now investigating prophecy with the same subtle grasp, and in the August No. contributes a paper which bears the dignified heading of "A Study in Prophecy." Judging by appearances the "study" must have consumed fully five minutes of his time. But, for us, the weightiest feature of the article is a desperate wound which it inflicts on British claims to Israelitish lineage—"'As ye were a curse among the people, O House of Judah, and House of Israel, so will I save you, and ye shall be a blessing.' Both kingdoms are now defunct; but resuscitation and re-union under one leader are to be their future lot. This lays the axe to the very root of the pet theory of Our Israelitish Origin."

Deadly axe; hapless root! I presume (but am not sure) that the edge of this axe is the contention that Jews and

Digitized by Google

Israelites are "both in one boat" with regard to the curse; and that until the curse is removed from Judah it must remain on Israel. The signification of the term "a curse," is "a reviling," otherwise a "byword," "taunt," &c., and as P. W. admits that the Ten Tribes are existing separately from the Jews, will he kindly furnish us with the name or names of the countries in which they are at present "a reviling"? If they are to-day a curse among nations, like the Jews, they will be as visible and as obnoxious, but perhaps two or three times more numerous; so that we are setting "Hebrew Christian" a very easy task when we ask him to acquaint us with their abodes. The rest of the world have sought for them in vain, and albeit a few gentlemen certify that Ephraim is sojourning in the region around Ararat, his alleged descendants are so respectable that they cannot be deemed "a curse." But, singular to say, P. W. has no reluctance to confess that they are amissing, and hence his logic leads us to infer that the Ten Tribes are "a curse among the people," yet lost; "a byword," yet unknown; "a taunt," yet impossible to recognize. Dear "Hebrew Christian," much prophetic study doth make thee mixed.

RE "THE MRS. HINE RELIEF FUND."

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—Mrs. Hine wishes me to ask you to kindly acknowledge, through your columns, the receipt of the following most welcome and needed gifts, for which she tenders her warmest gratitude. Mrs. Pease, £2; Brockhurst Hill, 10s.; Oxford Street, 5s.; Whippingham, 5s.; Eastbourne, 5s.

The above amounts were sent direct to her at 30, South Grove, Peckham. Also the sum of 10s. from "Henrietta," Liverpool, and 10s. from an anonymous donor "for Mrs. Hine's use, with best wishes." The latter two amounts being sent to me I have had great pleasure in handing them to Mrs. Hine, who still remains in a very precarious state, and no hopes of possible recovery.

Prospectively thanking you for the insertion of this in an early number of the BANNER,

Very faithfully yours,

ARTHUR OSBORNE.

ISRAEL IN CANADA, THE GATES OF THE WEST.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—There is an Israel in Canada. In the bowels of the earth, where the ramiferous workings of the Nova Scotian collieries resound with incessant labour, I have heard eloquent testimony in favour of the Identity: one thousand miles away, among the low green hills of Quebec, the tiller of the soil has declared to me that we are Israel, and into whatever quarter of the vast dominion the inquirer penetrates, the truth, at times feeble, at times vigorous, lifts up its voice. This is not surprising among a people which possess the Gates of the West. There is a vast aqueous highway from the western ocean into the heart of the North American continent—i.e., the St. Lawrence. This stream at its headwater enters the Great Lake system, around the head of which all the trade of the western continent, west even of the Sierra Madre range down to the Gulf of California, is clustering. The Americans forsaw this, and Dewitt Clinton opened the Erie Canal in 1825. That diverted trade from the more economic trade route of the watercourse of the St. Lawrence into New York, which, as a glance at the map indicates, is far to the south of the direct north-eastward route of the Canadian river. In this we witnessed a temporary triumph of the American over the British, but at the present time we are witnessing the discomfiture of the former and the ultimate triumph of Israel as a nation.

The Erie Canal is being deserted: the tonnage frequenting the port of Montreal, both as to the number of craft and individual size of the vessels, is increasing at a remarkable rate. Petition after petition has been lodged by the American for equal rights over the Canadian canals into the St. Lawrence, and one eager American at least has actually deposited an application to the Dominion Parliament for special powers to construct a new chain of canals via Montreal into the Hudson river to New York (equivalent to constructing a short line of rail from Liverpool to London via Southampton). What is the explanation of this revolution in the direction of the volume of American traffic? Economy. The land of the American farmer is steadily waning in fertility; phosphate, revigorator of impoverished soil, is withheld from him through the high prices demanded of our capitalized and protected phosphate manure industries and connecting rail routes, and the extortion of protected manufacturers, plus interest on mortgages, have produced, and combine against the tiller of the land, which constrains him to deal with middlemen, who can pay a better price owing to lower export rates.

These middlemen are concentrating along the headwaters and the St. Lawrence, which affords the cheapest route to Europe. At the mouth of this great stream lies the island of Cape Breton, where some 28,000,000 dols. are employed in the prosecution of enormous coal industries—unique as the sole coal fields upon the Atlantic coast of North America from the Gulf of Mexico to Labrador—and inexpressibly blessed in the magnificent land-locked harbour of Louisburg, three days' steam from the British Isles. From this island the French surveyed their empire and possessions of Quebec. Montreal, and Frontenac strove to accomplish by force that which the merchants of Israel as a nation are doing through the evolution of trade—i.e., dominion absolute in North America.

The coal of the island of Cape Breton is beginning to dominate the peoples which dwell between the 40th and 50th parallel of north latitude—i.e., New York to Newfoundland—west up the St. Lawrence to the 90th parallel of longitude—i.e., the head of Lake Superior—and Louisburg has at length been selected as the great coal port of Eastern Canada. Trade of all description will speedily follow, and then we find Israel in possession of the great Gate of the West preparing for universal economic supremacy.

The same thing applies upon the Pacific shore. Already we have wrested from San Francisco the trade European of the Japanese archipelago; already Australasia via British Columbia is days nearer Liverpool through the fast Canada-Australia service, and the enormous collieries of Israel upon the island of Vancouver dominate the entire Pacific seaboard down to San Francisco. America has no Pacific coalfields save under our flag. Vancouver City is the great Gate of the Pacific even as Louisburg of the Atlantic sides of the continent.

In 1885 Vancouver did not exist; in February, 1886, the site was blocked out and incorporated; in June the place was devoured by fire. Now Vancouver has 70 miles of graded streets, immense churches, clubs, free libraries, six loan companies, opera houses, three hospitals, two orphanages, sugar refineries, and an annual assessment of £3,700,000; great steamship lines connecting with Japan, Hong Kong, and Australasia, and in spite of the great dulness of trade on the Pacific coast, from which even San Francisco is not exempt, she is increasing in prosperity. Into the vast interval between Louisburg and Vancouver the children of the earth are pouring in what are annually becoming human torrents in the West; population is leaping up at the rate of 148 per cent.; the region of eternal coal—north-west territories—is in process of industrial development and carloads of Americans weekly cross into Canada, shake hands with John Bull, and join with him in the construction of this omnipotent empire. Thus Canada is the tide in the affairs of men. Let youthful Israel, the young men of Israel, take it at the flood, and roll on to fortune of mind, body, and soul.

Yours truly,

C. OCHILTREE-MACDONALD

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—In the BANNER of July 26, 1893, you ably refute certain objections to British-Israelism by "An Inquirer;" and you quote a "few pages of the Inquirer's letter," that your "readers may judge of his style and reasoning: also that any who like to do so may further enlighten him." There is one specimen of his reasoning which I had hoped to have seen refuted before now by some one of your contributors, as it has a mischievous and specious look; but no one seems to have thought the foe worthy of his steel. I will venture, therefore, to offer a short and simple refutation that was transparent as I read it: in order not to allow any unwary reader to be entrapped by it. The objection is this: "God in all His dealings has 'gone forward.' The gathering together of Judah and Israel into the covenant described in Ezekiel can only be explained on the ground that they must come back into re-union with God at the points at which they left Him"! and that would "reverse God's methods and be retrogression instead of progression"! The "only" and the "must" in this piece of reasoning are innocently gratuitous. By what compulsion must Israel "go back" to Judah, instead of Judah "go forward" to Israel? Especially as the Bible teaches us Judah shall walk to Israel (Jer. iii. 18), and though the House of Judah return to their own land first as Jews, why shall they not soon be gathered together as Christians by the forward method of God's dealings with us, and according to His promise? Nothing is simpler; and "the testimony of the Lord is sure making wise the simple."

P. C.

Morecambe, Lancashire, Aug. 14, 1893.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—For twenty years I have been a believer that we English are Israel. I cannot help writing you to tell you my great joy at the really splendid and able sermon preached by the Rev. T. B. Phillips on July 30th, at St. Michael's Church, Lavender-street, Hulme. Though not a believer in Our Identity, I know at least eight of his hearers were, and many more partly so; and being such blind evidence it completely seemed to carry us away. He spoke from Jer. xxxi. 31, 32. My daughter said it only wanted three words to to make his sermon complete—"We are Israel"—and one sentence left out—"We Gentiles inherit the promises through belief in the glorious Gospel by adoption as sons, being able to call God by that gentle and tender title, Our Father."

He said, "God's promise to Israel and Judah, "one of a family and two of a city,"&c., had never been exactly fulfilled, but he was quite sure God would, in His own time and way, fulfil it. It behoves us as Christians to hold fast the blessed truths and promises." He spoke of our language being universal, and our inhabiting the desolate and waste places; also the pleasant places of the earth.

After service I made bold to send him a few copies of the BANNER. I hope he will read them, and I humbly pray that God will open his eyes that he may see the truth. Your BANNERS are so precious to me; they have taught me to love God's holy Word. I never weary of reading and speaking about the glorious tidings and the glories that await when as a nation we can see the Lost Israel found, and God's Word indeed true every word. I humbly pray that God's blessing will rest upon your efforts to speedily open the eyes of our blind shepherds.

I remain, yours truly, E. H.

Hulme, Manchester, July 31, 1893.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—Those of Dr. Hanan's friends who have promised subscriptions to aid, if permitted, in excavations at Tara, may, if they have not already seen it, be interested in an account from the now famous Major Le Carron's book (1892) showing what value the Irish place on Lia Phail even at this time. Speaking on page 244 of "Twenty-five years in the secret service," he says, in 1884:—"Of all the schemes indulged in by the dynamite men, none seems to have been more far-fetched than that of the theft of a certain stone from within the walls of Westminster Abbey. This was the famous 'stone of stones," which serves as the seat of the coronation-chair in the abbey. To an outsider the possession of such a stone as this seems of no importance whatever; yet, ludicrous as it may appear, the idea of securing it gave rise to great enthusiasm, and led to a very generous subscription with this object. According to the originators of the scheme, this 'stone of destiny' was really the property of Ireland for a thousand years before Christ, and upon it were crowned the Irish kings, for hundreds of years, on the sacred hill of Tara. Its restoration to the land of its original and only lawful owners, it was contended, would inspire confidence in the course then being pursued, and the people would be strengthened by the well-known tradition 'that so long as this stone remained in Ireland, so long would she remain a united nation,' while its loss to the English would work wonders. Elaborate preparations were made for carrying out the scheme. Men were sent from America to work in conjunction with certain Fenians in London, and it was decided that some of the conspirators should secrete themselves in the Abbey, and at night seize the police, remove the stone, and pass it out through a window to others who would be in waiting outside to take it to a place of safety. For months these men waited and waited, but the opportunity never came, for one of the group gave the whole thing away to the police, and the detectives who surrounded the sacred edifice made the seizure impossible. In the end the three principals had to leave the country for fear of arrest, and the whole affair ended in smoke—as usual!"

Thinking you may care to put this in your paper,

I remain, yours faithfully, C. P.

THE WESTERN SEA-GATE OF THE EMPIRE.

THOSE who are not acquainted with the subject and value of "the Gates" of Israel's Empire will hardly know where the "Western sea-gate of our Empire" is. And yet the expression is used in the Times newspaper as one which everyone would recognise as applicable to the spot described by the writer of the article on "The Colonies" in the issue of August 14th, 1893.

The Gates are strategic positions, giving commanding power to those that hold them, and when held in military or naval force or both, enable the possessors of these places to defy their enemies and those that hate them (Gen. xxii. 17, xxiv. 60). Esquimalt is such a gate. It is the Western Gate of the Empire abutting on the Pacific Ocean, at the Western terminus of the great Canadian Railway from the Atlantic to the North Pacific, right through British territory all the way.

The fact that so greatly adds to the importance of Esquimalt is that it is the naval station and trade emporium of the Northern Pacific. Its contiguity further to the great Russian arsenal and naval station Vladivostok made it always possible until lately that, undefended as it was, Esquimalt might be captured by a Russian fleet during a moment of weakness on the part of the British fleet in those parts. It is a satisfaction to know that after long delays during which God has defended our interests in Vancouver, the work of fortifying Esquimault is going to be undertaken in earnest by the British and Canadian Governments united. That naval station or Gate is to be made impregnable. The account given in the Times, which is almost a monograph, is to the following effect, and must find a place in the pages of the BANNER as an addition to our chapters on the British-Israelite Gates.

The despatch of the three officers and 72 men of the Marine Artillery who are to carry out the work of fortifying Esquimalt, under the superintendence of Major Muirhead, is the outcome of negotiations which have long lingered between the Imperial Government and the Government of Canada, and have only this year, under the active impulsion of Sir Charles Tupper and General Herbert, been brought to a definite conclusion. The arrangement, which is not very dissimilar from that relating to the fortification of Thursday Island and King George's Sound, is that the colonial and Imperial Government agree to share the expenses of fortification and the colonial Government bears the whole expense of the garrison. The matter has been made the subject of a great deal of discussion, and its final settlement is a subject of cordial congratulation to both Governments. The military arrangements of the Dominion of Canada differ in some important respects from those which prevail in either of the other great groups of self-governing colonies. Before the confederation of Canada and the amalgamation with it of the North-Western Provinces and British Columbia, the Imperial Government bore the burden of providing alike for defence and for the maintenance of order. The principal towns of Canada were garrisioned by Imperial troops. English artillerymen manned the guns at Quebec, English red-coats had to find their way to Winnipeg to put down the first rising of Louis Riel, and at a time when communication with Vancouver had to be carried on round Cape Horn the English War Office shared with the Admiralty all the responsibility of defending the country and protecting the fisheries of the Western coast. As many as 25,000 Imperial troops were maintained in British North America. Year by year, since confederation, Canada has made more provision for her own requirements. Her army of 38,000 men is under the command of an imperially-appointed officer, and it is provided by the colonial law that, in the event of mobilisation, it constitutes an Imperial force, and is placed under the orders of her Majesty's Commander-in-chief.

The maintenance of order in the North-West has been provided for by the creation of a local corps of mounted police, and, when there came a question of putting down the second rising of Louis Riel in 1885, the Dominion Government asked for no help from home. The only English military station now in Canada is at Halifax, where there is a garrison of 1,500 men. This garrison takes upon itself the defence of the very strongly fortified naval station which exists upon the Atlantic border of the Dominion. The other naval station at Esquimalt has hitherto been left practically to the navy to defend. It is one of the results of the development of inter-continental communication by means of the Canadian Pacific Railway, that more efficient provision for the defence of Esquimalt becomes at once desirable and feasible. So long as British Columbia was isolated from the rest of the continent by a sea voyage round the Horn, Esquimalt was valuable only as a naval station for ships navigating the Pacific Coast. Now, it is the Western outport at once of Canada and of the Empire. To hold Esquimalt is to hold the highway through the Dominion and to command all the defences of Canada in the rear. It is also to command the coaling supply of the North-western American coast.

The beds of Nanaimo, on the island of Vancouver, contain the best coal which has been found in those regions, and supply a very large part of the coal used in the Western States. In addition to these considerations, the increasing commercial importance of the town of Vancouver, on the mainland, which, from being the terminus of the railway, becomes also the emporium of the maritime trade of the Northern Pacific, has rendered the question of defence of late years always more important.

In the autumn of 1886 the town of Vancouver did not exist. It is now the port of shipment for Japan, China, and Australia. A successful Russian coup de main might, in the event of a European war, put the whole of this trade in Russian hands, and, though the coast must evidently depend for its main defence upon the ships of the naval station, it is only the more advisable that the naval station should be rendered practically impregnable by the resources of modern engineering and modern armament.

The harbour of Esquimalt is one of the most lovely situations on a lovely coast. It holds the South-western extremity of the island of Vancouver, and commands the entrance to the inland sea upon which the town of Vancouver is built. The climate of British Columbia, sheltered as it is from the severity of Canadian cold by the great triple screen of the Golden, the Selkirk, and the Rocky Mountains, and exposed to the mild airs of the Pacific, allows of the same luxuriant vegetation which renders the neighbourhood of the Alps and Pyrenees so delightful in Southern Europe. The railway connexion which has been established with the Dominion has brought the colony within little more than a fortnight's journey of London, and the great natural charms of its scenery and position are already operating, as might have been expected, to induce settlement in its fertile valleys. The current of the world's life can hardly be said to have taken it in its course until about ten years ago. Now the position in which it stands as the Western sea-gate of the Empire is so full of promise that no Englishmen who go out there on service need fear to be left long without the companionship of other settlers fresh from home.

It is remarkable that Secular writers are coming in large and increasing numbers to describe these commanding strategic outposts of the British Empire, which are also its "coaling stations," by their very appropriate Scriptural name—"The Gates." Thus Gibraltar is the Gate of the Mediterranean in the parlance of the historians and geographers of the British Empire. The Suez Canal is the Gate of the Red Sea. Egypt is the Gate of Central Africa. The Gates of India are its three metropolitan cities—Calcutta, Bombay, and Madras. The foreign coaling stations—such as Aden, Columbo, Singapore, Hong Kong, and the like—are true veritable Gates, such as God on oath promised to give "to Abraham and his seed for ever" as part of the stupendous blessings He bestowed (the central one of them all) to qualify Israel to be His messengers and missionaries to the heathen during the Christian dispensation.

The value of Esquimalt as a coaling station and as the terminus of a strategic railway, connecting the two oceans, and only fourteen days' distance from London, is well known. The writer in the Times has well described it; but he did not know that this is one of the chief of those Gates God promised to His people Israel in "the latter days," to give them power and might among the nations, and to fit them for their assigned work—the evangelization of the heathen.

The Gate in question is in the midst of a splendid coal-field of the best steam coal, which supplies the greater part even of the fuel used in the Western States. God's care of Israel thus appears plain. He has provided for them the magnificent dominion of Canada. He has given them a railroad connecting the West with the East, 3,000 miles apart; and at each terminus, as well as on places along the route, He has provided steam coal for them exclusively, denying it even to the United States (Manasseh) both on the East and on their Western seaboard.

It can be seen then that "the Western Sea-Gate of the Empire" is a valuable possession indeed. It stamps our nation as the true "Israel of God," and calls for praise on our part that He has remembered our wants now in these our "latter days," faithfully giving us what He swore to Abraham, our forefather, that He would bestow upon us. To Him be all the glory.

WHICH IS THE TRUE CHURCH?

By John R. Mitchell.

Notwithstanding the immense spread of every description of knowledge, both in history and science, there is probably no question which causes more contention and uncharitableness than the claim by different religious bodies of being the one true Church. We see the unfortunate effects of all this unseemly wrangling, by the fact that in this country alone Christianity is split up into as many different sects and divisions as there are days in the year, and, as time goes on, instead of these divisions being reduced in number they increase as one might almost say by leaps and bounds, and in their different opinions have, at the present time, reached such a stage, that he would be a bold man (humanly speaking) who dared to say they could ever be brought together again, and all this with the result that unbelievers and infidels have increased, and what is worse, continue to increase to a most alarming extent. Pointing the finger of scorn to believers of all denominations, they laugh and say, unfortunately with a great deal of truth, "See how these Christians love one another."

Then another great source of discord is to be found in the endeavour of the Church of Rome to assert her supremacy over all other Christian bodies in the universe The Greek Church again claims that it is the true Church. Imagine now, for one moment, an unbeliever in search of the true Church; let him hear the arguments for and against the supremacy which would be advanced by all this multiplicity of claimants; he would say, "Give me peace and quiet, I will remain an unbeliever still." "How is order and harmony to be made out of all this chaos? The task is simply stupendous to contemplate, one that a man would almost shrink from undertaking, and by human means it is altogether impossible. When we come to think and ponder on all this division and the evil effect it has on the minds of men, with the knowledge that the Gospel of the kingdom has been preached nearly 1,900 years, we may well be forgiven if we shudder at the prospect which lies before us.

We see now around us atheism, infidelity, and indifference in every class of society; the so-called man of means and gentlemen of culture, clever writers, and men who carry their readers with them, even more than among the working population, are to be found, not by twos and threes, but by thousands and tens of thousands. The outlook is indeed gloomy, but what is the remedy?

How are all these conflicting elements to be made to look (so to speak) through one pair of spectacles, or as Scripture has it, to see eye to eye together and worship God with one consent? What is the remedy? There is only one. We must give up man s plan, whether he be a pope, a Wesley, a Luther, or whoever he may be, and see if we can find out the plan of Him who knoweth the end, even from the beginning; not taking God's words and putting man's construction on them; that we have already done to our sorrow. Let us, therefore, endeavour to find in our grand old book God's literal plan, and apply it in a literal manner, and I think we shall succeed in our endeavour to find out which is the true Church.

To begin then, the Triune God is unchangeable in Himself, and unchangeable in His purposes, in His promises, and in His dealings. Whatsoever He ordains must be and will be. He has told us, "I am the Lord, I change not." God intended man to form His Church when He created him. The first act, therefore, of devout adoration which ascended to God in the Garden of Eden, was worship paid to Him by Adam and Eve, the first two members of His Church.

Our first parents sinned and fell from their estate, but that did not exclude them or their posterity from the Church of God, for He graciously made known to them His purpose of love and mercy. He told them the seed of the woman should bruise the head of the serpent. Believing this, their faith in the Messiah was precisely the same as ours, with this exception, their belief was prospective; ours is retrospective. They believed that Christ would come, and we believe that at the fulness of time He did come; thus we are all, at whatever period of the world's history, justified by the faith which rests on the same foundation, other than which no man can lay. Man sinned, and man fell. Sinned so fearfully that the deluge came and swallowed up a fallen world; but God left not Himself without a witness, and Noah was, in fact, the sole representative of the faith which was indispensable to constitute him a member of the Church of God. After the earth had emerged from the waters with which the Almighty in righteous judgment had engulphed a guilty world, and when men had again multiplied and increased in wickedness, the all-wise God (faithful to His promise not again to sweep away the ungodly with a flood) made a selection. He chose Abraham in order to carry out His purposes of grace to the human race and to His Church. Read all these gracious promises in Genesis, which please observe are entirely unconditional; from the 12th chapter and onwards; that which God would do to His seed, for instance, "In Thee and in Thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed;" that He should be Father to many nations, and kings should come out of Him; that the covenant should be everlasting; that He would be their God and they should be His people. The blessings to Abraham and his seed are so great that I have not space here to enumerate them, but they are plain, literal, and not to be misunderstood, and are sworn to be true by Jehovah Himself in His own great name.

Hear what Moses has to say on the matter. "For what nation is there so great and hath God so nigh unto them, as the Lord our God is in all things that we call upon Him for? And what nation is there so great that hath statutes and judgments so righteous as all this law which I set before you this day?" . . . "Did ever people hear the voice of God speaking out of the midst of the fire as thou hast heard, and live?" . . . "Unto thee it was showed that thou mightest know that the Lord He is God; there is none else beside Him. For thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God: the Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto Himself. Above all people that are upon the face of the earth. . . . Happy art thou, O Israel: who is like unto thee, O people, saved by the Lord? the shield of thy help, and the sword of thy excellency. Thine enemies shall be found liars unto thee, and thou shalt tread upon their high places."

David also, speaking of the chosen people in his time, says: "And what one nation in the earth is like Thy people, even like Israel, whom God went to redeem for a people to Himself, and to make Him a name, and to do for you great things and terrible, for Thy land, before Thy people? For Thou hast confirmed to Thyself Thy people Israel, to be a people unto Thee." For how long? For ever!! It is not my intention, neither is it my business, to preach a sermon, but I ask you in all earnestness to ponder well the words I have read; they are so plain they cannot well be misconstrued. Do they look anything like the divine formation of the true Church? Read again what the prophets say: "Ye are My witnesses and My servant whom I have chosen, saith the Lord. This people have I formed for Myself. They shall show forth My praise. He shall cause them that come out of Jacob to take root. Israel shall blossom and bud and fill the face of the world with fruit." "And the remnant of Jacob shall be in the midst of many people, as a dew from the Lord, as the showers upon the grass, that tarrieth not for man nor waiteth for the sons of men." And so I could go on with such blessed promises until I fear I should tire you, if we could possibly be tired with such a glorious outlook.

There is nothing spiritual in all this, it is all perfectly literal, and it cannot by any amount of ingenuity be made to apply to a Gentile nation or people! But, perhaps, it may be urged they are all Old Testament promises, and do not apply to us who live under the New Testament dispensation! We will consider that! First, what is a testament? or a covenant? My dictionary tells me it is an instrument in writing by which a person declares his will as to the disposal of his effects, also a mutual consent or agreement between two persons or parties, a solemn agreement between the members of a church. Now it has been said by Him who cannot err, in speaking to Israel, "Ye shall be My people, and I will be your God." Here, at one stroke of the pen, you have the true Church.

The Old Testament or covenant was made between God and the descendants through Isaac and Jacob of Abraham's seed, and the New Testament was a renewal of the old between the same contracting parties in another form. We will, therefore, turn to the New Testament writings and see what they have to say on the subject, and whether they confirm in any way the promises which were made in the Old. Gal. iii. 8 is a comment, "And the Scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the Gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." Gal. iii. 16, "Now to Abraham, and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds as of many, but as of one seed, which is Christ." The phrases "in thee,"

"in thy seed," must, standing alone, be, by the ruling of the apostle, referred to Christ. But when used conjointly, as in the blessing to Jacob, they demand a distinct consideration. The phrase "in thy seed" emphatically refers to Christ; but the phrase "in thee" must be regarded as having reference to the literal seed of Israel.

We are thus shown that, while Christ is the fount of blessing to Israel and the Gentiles alike, through the Gospel, that it is the special and ordained function of the literal seed to disseminate the knowledge of the Gospel throughout the world, and more, as Judah has fallen under the curse by the crucifixion of the Saviour, this lot must necessarily fall, as was promised, on the Ten-tribed House of Israel—who, if they were to blossom and bud, and to show forth His praise, to become as a dew from the Lord, as I have already shown, must of necessity be the one pre-eminent, Christian and missionary nation on the face of the earth.—Warrior-square Magazine, April, 1893.

DOES JEREMIAH PROVE THAT ISRAEL AND JUDAH RETURNED TOGETHER FROM BABYLON?

By W. Weller.

I will ask you to read from Jer. iii. 15—19, both inclusive, and say whether you think that passage fairly describes the condition of the people who returned from Babylon? Were their shepherds according to God's heart? Did they "feed the people with knowledge and understanding"? Did our Saviour say so when He came? Was He not rather continually warning His followers against their shepherds—i.e., their rulers, priests, scribes, and lawyers? Did the people "no more walk after the stubbornness of their evil heart?" If so, how are we to account for their treatment of the Messiah? And why did Christ call them "a wicked and adulterous generation," and tell them the kingdom of God should be taken from them?

The 18th verse shows that on the return of which the prophet is speaking the two Houses shall be as one nation. But we read in 2 Chron. x. 19, which Mr. F. has told us was written about a century after the return from Babylon, that the two Houses were then still in antagonism. Mr. F. has also told us that this verse in Chronicles teaches us that some of the Ten-tribed House, retaining their old prejudices against the family of David and tribe of Judah, preferred remaining in the land of their captivity, and he has further admitted that the "some" of the House of Israel who so remained were the great majority. Therefore as this prophecy (ver. 18) does not fit the events of the return from Babylon, I maintain the one did not refer to the other, and that the prophecy is still unfulfilled. Those who have ordinary reference Bibles or the Revised Version will see that the word "to" is placed in the margin as an alternative reading for "with." This shows that the original word is equivalent to "to," but the translators, not being able to understand the verse with the preposition "to," they took upon themselves to substitute for it the word "with"; but as honest men and scholars they were bound to admit that the original word, which alone claims to have been inspired, means "to." Hence, this text, as we have just seen, being still unfulfilled, it follows that the two Houses must yet be in existence and in separation, for how otherwise will one House be able to walk "to" the other? Mr. F. has not lost the House of Judah, but can he tell us where the House of Israel is? If not, so far as he knows, it is lost.

The next prophecy relied on by Mr. F. is found in Jer. iv. 1, 2. Here, you see, the prophet, after inviting Israel to return, tells them that if they will put away their abominations they shall not be removed. Mr. F., in his first paper, treated us poor British-Israelites to scathing sarcasm, because, he said, we put off to some future period the fulfilment of the prophecy in Ezek. xi 15—21, which he asserted was accomplished on the return from Babylon. Now Ezekiel says in ver. 18 of his prediction that the people who returned should take away all the abominations from the land; and we have just seen that Jeremiah said if they put away their abominations they should not be removed. But the people who returned have been removed and dispersed over the whole earth. So, you see, my opponent has landed himself on the horns of a dilemma; for to sustain his case he must say that one or other of these his witnesses is unworthy of credence. I think it is plain Mr. F.'s views of both passages are wrong. My method of interpretation does not impugn the truthfulness, and therefore inspiration, of either of these prophets. We will leave Mr. F. to disport himself on the horns of his dilemma while we pass on to his next quotation.

Jer. xxiii. 1—8. Mr. F. asserted, without offering any proof, that this prediction referred to the return from Babylon, and he told us that the "north country" in ver. 8 meant Babylon; but he did not tell us what was meant by the very next phrase. "and from all the countries whither I had driven them." From this phrase we see these verses refer to a return from many countries, and not merely from one country, whether Babylon or any other. If, as Mr. F. says, only a minority then returned, we would ask him, How was ver. 3 fulfilled? Who will be bold enough to say the 4th verse was fulfilled? For, from their return from Babylon up to their dispersion by the Romans, the Jews were continually, with but few and brief intervals, at war, and were never again entirely their own masters. I think it requires no argument to show that verses 5 and 6 not only were not fulfilled in times near to Jeremiah's own day, but have not been fulfilled up to the present time. So we may safely conclude that this prophecy (ver. 1—8) relates to a return still future.

Mr. F. next quoted chapters xxx. and xxxi. of this prophet. How anyone can carefully read these two chapters and fail to see that they do not apply to the return from Babylon, passes my understanding. Time alone compels me to deal with only a few of the phrases.

Chap. xxx. 1, 2. Please note that the prophet says (for the first time in his book) that God told him to write the following prophecy. Now why should he be told to write it except that it was intended to be read by future generations, because the prophecy was not to be fulfilled in Jeremiah's "own or near times"?

Ver. 3. If, as we have said, the people who returned were never again their own masters, can we reasonably say they possessed the land? It is a well-known fact they did not occupy anything like the extent of land God gave to the fathers of Israel.

Ver. 8—11. Was the stranger's yoke broken from off the neck of Jacob? Did the people "serve the Lord and David their king"? Were the people who returned "quiet and at ease"? and did "none make them afraid"?

Ver. 21. Was their prince one of themselves after their return from Babylon? What about the Persian rule, the Egyptian rule, the rule of Alexander, of Antigonus, Antiochus, and of the Romans?

Ver. 18. Mr. F. says this refers to the rebuilding of Jerusalem. So probably it does, but that does not prove that the prophecy was fulfilled by the rebuilding of the city under Nehemiah and Ezra; for I suppose the gentleman will admit Jerusalem requires rebuilding even now?

Ver. 24. Most Bible students (including, I believe, Mr. F.) consider that the term "latter days" indicates the Christian dispensation. So then the prophet seems to say by this verse that the fulfilment of the foregoing prediction is to be looked for in Christian times. This will support what I said about the word "write" in the 2nd verse.

Chap. xxxi. 1. "At that time," Mr. F. says, means the time of the rebuilding of Jerusalem on the return from Babylon. I have already shown that the prophet may have meant, and most probably did, a yet future rebuilding of Jerusalem. The time referred to, however, is most clearly indicated by the few closing words of the preceding chapter, "in the latter days." How Mr. F., as one accustomed to expound the Scriptures, can have overlooked these words I cannot say; but it seems idle, in the face of so plain a statement by the prophet, to contend that this prediction was fulfilled 500 years before the dawn of the latter days. But I will draw your attention to parts of this prophecy which you will recognise at once as not having been fulfilled since they were uttered, and therefore as having reference to some time still future.

Ver. 5 contains a prediction which has not yet been fulfilled; for even up to the time of the Messiah the Jews "would have no dealings with the Samaritans," and therefore, we may be sure, did not "plant vineyards upon the mountains of Samaria and enjoy the fruit thereof."

The 7th verse speaks of Israel at the time of their return as the "chief of the nations." At no time since the days of the prophet could these words fairly describe the people who returned from Babylon.

Ver. 9: "I am a Father to Israel, and Ephraim is My firstborn." How can Mr. F. reconcile this with his own statement that only a small minority of those who returned belonged to the House of Israel, or Ephraim, or with the well-known fact that the land which the tribe of Ephraim had formerly occupied was in the very district which was never restored to the children of Israel—Samaria. "I will cause them to walk." Mr. F. insisted on the word "walk" being taken literally. Now, supposing for a moment that this does refer to the return from Babylon, is the gentleman sure there were neither asses nor camels used on that occasion? Besides, the next (10th) verse states that the people were to be gathered from "the isles afar off." How would they "walk" from "the isles afar off"? Or, again, how could the prophet describe Babylon, an inland country not far from Palestine, as "isles afar off"? It is evident Anglo-Israelites are not the only persons who may be charged with taking some words literally which were intended to be read metaphorically.

Ver. 12: "They shall not sorrow any more at all." Was this fulfilled to the people who returned? Have they ever been free from sorrow since? Especially, what of the last 1800 years?

Ver. 35, 36. These two verses were appealed to by me in my first paper as proving that even now there must be in fact a nation of Israel, though not of necessity generally recognised as such; but Mr. F. has never made any allusion to them in either of his papers, and I really believe he has avoided doing so because, as an honest and intelligent man, he feels he cannot refute the single and simple argument I have founded upon them. For no one can maintain that the Jews are a nation now, or have been so for the last eighteen centuries. To say so would be to say that God, having promised an egg, has given a scorpion. If Mr. F. cannot identify the nation of Israel now, then, so far as he knows, it is lost. Possibly it consists of the great majority who, as he says, did not return from Babylon.

THE LOST TEN TRIBES.

THE following is from The Newcastle Chronicle of June 10, 1893, and will be interesting to our readers :—

"12,397.—THE LOST TEN TRIBES.

"'And where shall Israel lave her bleeding feet,
And when shall Zion's songs again seem sweet,
And Judah's melody once more rejoice
The hearts that leap'd before its heavenly voice.'

"Few subjects present more features of interest to the student of history than that which relates to the exile of the Ten Tribes of Israel and the complex problem involved in their subsequent history. As the circumstances which brought about and attended that exile are so familiar to the general reader, they are here passed over without lengthened detail. Briefly told, the story is as follows: "In 758 B.C., the Assyrian king, Tiglath-pileser II., invades Israel and carries the inhabitants, east of Jordan with the people of Galilee, captive to Assyria. About 37 years afterwards King Sargon makes a further invasion of the country, and transports the remnant of the Ten Tribes to Assyria and Media. The Book of Kings specifies Alah, Habor, the river Gozan and the cities of Media as the localities to which the exiles were consigned. The two first of these names indicate places north of Nineveh and south of lake Van. The river Gozan, now known by the name Ozen, rises south of lake Oroomiah, and forms approximately the northern boundary of Media. The names of the cities of Media are not stated. One of these was Rages, afterwards shortened to Rai, the ruins of which are to be seen not far from the present royal Persian city of Teheran. One of the cities, north of Nineveh, was Elkosh, the city, according to all trustworthy evidence, in which the prophet, Nahum, lived and wrote. But we can easily understand that the localities mentioned in the Book of Kings are only those to which the stream of compulsory emigration was directed in the greatest strength, as numbers may have been banished to entirely different districts of the Assyrian empire, which was then so extensive; for policy would urge the greatest possible separation of the exiles. Thus it seems highly probable that a residence was at that time assigned to many of the people in Hamath.

"The earlier exiles of Tiglath-pileser's time were doubtless for the most part scattered over Babylonia and Elam, which lay still farther to the south. When it is borne in mind that numbers preferred voluntary flight into the countries of Egypt, Asia Minor, and Europe, and that others as prisoners of war were sold into every country, it becomes clear how widely the descendants of Israel even then have been dispersed. But what became of the greater body of the people banished by the Assyrians? (vide 2 Kings xvii. 23: "So was Israel carried away out of their own land into Assyria unto this day.") According to the views of some modern biblical scholars, Jeremiah was the author of the Book of Kings, and commenced his prophetic career in the year 629 B.C, which was 92 years after the exile. Jewish traditions, however, assign the chronicle to Ezra at a much later period. Ezra came from Babylon to Jerusalem in 458 B.C., in the reign of Artaxerxes. Thus it seems highly probable the Ten Tribes occupied the localities to which they were originally assigned, nearly two centuries after their deportation.

"In the year 536 B.C., the kingdom of Babylon was by conquest absorbed into the greater monarchy of Persia, at which period we are introduced to the enlightened and tolerant rule of Cyrus, who had then located throughout his dominions the numerous exiles of both Israel and Judah. Now, when Cyrus had given the Judeans permission to return to Jerusalem and its vicinity, there seems no reason why many of the descendants of Israel should not have accomplished a similar return to the northern province. But we have no certain clue by which to trace this movement; neither have we any reason to deny that, after the great change in the political situation, individual descendants of the Ten Tribes assembled once more in the ancient fatherland. Ewald, in his 'History of Israel,' says: 'From an early period the great prophets had foretold the certainty of the final return of the captive exiles of the Ten Tribes as well as of the others, and latter ages always found a specially prominent example of this in the bold image which Isaiah had adopted of Israel returning across the Euphrates as safely and mightily as it once had come from Egypt across the sea. But, after all, it was more and more felt in the centuries following the prediction how far Israel had lagged behind in the expectation formed about it. By-and-bye the return of the captive exiles came to be considered as good as unfulfilled in the letter, and its accomplishment was, therefore, relegated to the future which still remains. Josephus, we find, mentions on one occasion, though quite incidentally, and without giving details, that the Ten Tribes still remained in his time beyond the Euphrates in countless hosts. The calmer language of the earlier Talmudists never rises above general anticipation and hopes on behalf of the Ten Tribes; but during the centuries which follow the destruction of Jerusalem, the belief took firmer and firmer hold in the nation that, somewhere in the far East, a better people of Israel was to be found living in happy union and hoping for the Messiah. Thus in the ninth century after Christ, the learned Jew Eldad, said to be descended from the tribe of Dan, undertook a fruitless journey, we are told, in search of the Ten Tribes: and other Jewish travellers also of the latter Middle Ages were fond of discoursing of them. In the last century of our era a fervent zeal was aroused among many Christians for the discovery of the lost Tribes; and since they despair of finding them again on the Euphrates—at least in the countless numbers of which Josephus speaks—many learned men have sought for them throughout the whole world. Wherever any one fancied he had detected a certain resemblance to Jewish customs or cast of features in any distant people, these he would make out descendants of the Ten Tribes; and it often happened that scattered legends, whether obscure or doubtful among such a nation, came to aid the guest; for many a Christian or Islamite tribe was ready to pride itself on such a descent on account of its sacred writings. Thus attempts have been made to re-discover them in the Afghans, in the Sinite Jews, in the Parthians and Buddhists, and even in the wandering tribes of North America. But even in the best attempt of this kind, namely, that made in 1840, to re-discover them in the Nestorian Jews and Jezids in the mountains north of Nineveh, was by no means successful. From all this we are driven to the conclusion that every one belonging to the Ten Tribes had, in the early times of their deportment and settlement in a foreign land, been so completely lost among the heathen, and had so thoroughly adopted their character, that even in the time of the liberation of Judah under Cyrus, not a single trace of them any longer remained. For at that time, if they ever were to return to their own land, the circumstances and the opportunity were the most favourable for doing so. Indeed, as we have already indicated, when Cyrus had given Judah permission to return, many descendants of the Ten Tribes might gradually come back as well. But if many of the Tribe of Judah preferred to remain in the East, doubtless more of the descendants of the Ten Tribes made the same choice. It does seem sad at this point to see quite clearly how the last remains of the kingdom of the Ten Tribes—that chief section of ancient Israel never even attempted once to constitute itself. The whole vanish entirely from history.

"Notwithstanding the mysterious cloud which for ages has shrouded the movements of the exiles, a certain class of historical investigators have recently furnished us with a full story of their several migrations from the period of deportation into Assyria down to the present day. We are told that about the time of the downfall of the Assyrian empire, political circumstances being favourable, the numerous descendants of the Ten Tribes left their home in the far East, and became merged in one or other of the great streams of migratory nations that had origin in that region, and which, prior to our era, rolled in on Asia Minor and Europe.

"Regarding the question of Identity, this is said to be clearly indicated by the respective ethnic names of Kimmerii, Gimmerrai, and Sakai, or Scyths—that the name Gimerrai (another form of Kimmerii) occurs on the cuneiform inscriptions as the Semetic equivalent of the Aryan name Sakai; also that the matter is further settled by the discovery that Kimmerii was the Assyrian name for the Ten-tribed kingdom, this having been disclosed by the Nimrod obelisk (a monument unearthed by Layard), as well as by many other records of the period dug up from the ruins of Nineveh. After entering Europe, the particular time is not determined, the descendants of the exiles formed the centres of association as circumstances indicated, constituted and established new settlements, among the principal places being the British Isles, and consequently in the natural course of things acquired new names and designations. Hence, in process of time, some of them were called Goths, some Teutons, some Celts, some Gauls, some Cimbri, some Angles, some Saxons, and some Normans. Reasoning thus, the advocates of the Identity assure us that our true Anglo-Saxon forefathers were no other than the Lost House of Israel.

"As it is impossible, in limited space, to touch the whole of the points introduced into the query of 'A Backwoodsman,' I therefore endeavour, as briefly as I can, to examine the more important aspects of the question which remain.

"1. Have we any satisfactory evidence to guide us to the conclusion that the descendants of the exiles left Assyria about the period mentioned, and can be traced to Europe under the various ethnic names of Kimmerii, Gimerrai, Sakai, &c., and that after several wanderings on the continent ultimately reached old England, and were the real founders of that most illustrious dominion? Ewald says that after their deportation into Assyria they were lost among the heathen, and then disappear entirely from history.

"2. As the exiles belonged to the Semitic branch of the human family, the ethnic names referred to could not be applied to them. but to nations of Japhetic origin. In his 'Ethnology of the Bible,' Sayce, writing of Gomer, first-born of Japheth, and father of the ancient Germans, says: 'Now Gomer is the Gimerrai of the Assyrian inscriptions, the Kimmerii of the Greeks, who represent the Sakai, or Scyths, of the Persian texts, and were almost entirely Aryans. They were driven from their seats on the Tyras, or Dniester, by the nomad Scyths, shortly before the first unsuccessful siege of Nineveh by Cyaxares.

"3. It is, however, said that the country of Denmark, or Danmark, as well as the river Danube, derived their respective names from Dan, thereby proving the early settlements of that tribe in Europe. Regarding this, Isaac Taylor, in his 'Words and Places,' says: 'Throughout Europe we find the word "march" or "mark" entering into the names of outlying or frontier provinces. Denmark was the Danish frontier. Finmark and four provinces called Lappmark show the five successive stages by which the Scandinavian invaders encroached on the territory of the Lapps.

"'The meaning of this root, Dan or Don. is obscure. In the language of the Ossetes—a tribe in the Caucasus which preserves a very primitive form of the Aryan speech—the word Don means water or river. If this be the meaning of the word, it throws light on certain primeval myths. Thus Hesiod informs us that Danaus, the grandson of Poseidon and Lybra, relieved Argos from drought. Again, we are told that the fifty Danaides, having slain their husbands, the fifty sons of Egyptus, on their wedding night, were condemned to carry water in broken urns to fill a bottomless vessel. But whatever be the significance of the root, in it are found a large number of the most ancient and important river names on the continent. We have the Danube, the Danastris, the Danaster or Dneister, &c. It thus appears that the names of almost all the larger rivers of Europe, as well as those of a very great number of smaller streams, contain one or other of the five chief Celtic words for water or river. In the British Isles this word is found in the names of the Don in Yorkshire, Aberdeen and Antrim, the Bandon in Londonderry, and the Dane in Cheshire, &c., and possibly in the Tyne in Northumberland and Haddington. The names of important rivers are everywhere the memorials of the earliest races. These river names survive when all other names have changed. They seem to possess an almost indestructible vitality. Towns may be destroyed, the sites of human habitation removed, but the ancient river names are handed down from race to race. Even the names of the eternal hills are less permanent than those of rivers. In the greater part of Europe—in Germany, France, Italy and Spain—we find villages which bear Teutonic or romance names standing on the banks of streams which still retain their ancient Celtic appellations. Throughout the whole of England there is hardly a river name that is not Celtic—these almost the sole evidence that survive of a once universal Celtic occupation of the land.

"Modern historical research has clearly established the fact, that the original home of the various races which, in succession, peopled the British Isles, was in the East. It is, therefore, reasonable to suppose that, along with the love of conquest, the invaders brought with them many a religious belief and hoary tradition. By which of the early races the worship of Baal was introduced into Britain, we cannot tell. All evidence on the subject seems to point to a Celtic origin. But as the god Baal was chiefly worshipped by the Babylonians, Carthagenians, Tyrians and Phœnicians, and as the latter people, we read, had long prior to the Roman period an important trading connection with places on the Cornwall coast, they, doubtless, while in this country, worshipped their national deity as circumstances permitted, and probably proselytized many of the native inhabitants. The symbol of Baal, however, varied at different times in different localities. Indeed, the great number of adjuncts with which the name of Baal is found is a sufficient proof of the diversity of character with which he was regarded; and there must, no doubt, have existed a corresponding diversity of worship. The more beautiful and the more spiritual side of the worship of Baal were symbolized by the sun, and as the altars to the sun-god were erected, for apparent reasons, on lofty eminences, we can understand from the Baal hills in Yorkshire and Northumberland, how widely this form of worship was at one time practised in England.

"If we have found it impossible to trace, with any degree of certainty, the movements of the descendants of the exiles beyond the confines of the Assyrian empire, we have abundant evidence that the spiritual inheritance of which they were long ago the special guardians has been faithfully distributed throughout all lands.

THE DISCUSSION IN YARMOUTH, NOVA SCOTIA.

No. V.—ANGLO-ISRAELISM.

BY THE REV. C. F. COOPER.

TO THE EDITOR "YARMOUTH LIGHT."—Sir,—In reply to "Barrington's" ungenerous taunt that I am soon to close this controversy from motives he unworthily attributes to me, I beg to say (1) that you, sir, have something to say as to how long these letters shall continue, and it was your remark to me on this point I had in view when I wrote of an early conclusion. (2) Let "Barrington" be well assured that I do not fear controversy on this subject either in the press or on the platform. Anglo-Israelism rests upon the sure foundation of Jehovah's covenant and oath; and impartial examination of its evidence infallibly leads to its joyous acceptance. (3) The longer the discussion continues the better is it for this truth; for I am receiving assurances of interest awakened, Anglo-Israelites confirmed in their most holy faith, and converts joining our ranks, as a result of these letters. Two such cheering assurances from distant parts of the Province have reached me since my last appeared.

I can understand "Barrington's" anxiety to get away from Scripture; but I shall hold him there a little while longer. Therefore I shall make no reply to the first column of his letter until we come to the ethnology, etc., to which subject the remarks in that column more properly belong. In the meantime your readers may find a sufficient reply to these remarks in Deut. xxviii. 64, and similar passages.

"Barrington" still denies that the Ten Tribes have been preserved a distinct nation. He tries to prove that they were to be for ever lost. In order to do this he quotes prophecies foretelling their captivity and dispersion, while he ignores the many promises made to them of preservation, conversion, and prosperity in the land of their exile, and of their future restoration to Palestine in great triumph and glory. Your correspondent is also in the habit of quoting half a sentence, sometimes only one word, without the slightest regard to the context. Against these methods of handling the sacred writings I most earnestly protest. It is not in this way that truth can be found. The following example will show the importance of reading the whole of the passages from which "Barrington" quotes a line or a word. In order to prove that the Ten Tribes were to be lost for ever "as a body" he quotes Hosea i. 6—9: "I will no more have mercy upon the House of Israel, but I will utterly take them away. Ye are not My people and I will not be your God." Now anyone not referring to this chapter might well think "Barrington" had proved his point. But I ask, Is it dealing fairly with this solemn subject to end here? In the next verse God declares the future restoration to favour of outcast Israel in these words: "Yet the number of the children of Israel shall be as the sand of the sea, which cannot be measured nor numbered, and it shall come to pass that in the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not My people, there it shall be said unto them, Ye are the sons of the living God." In the 2nd chapter of this prophet (ver. 14—23) the same restoration to God's favour is promised in glowing terms. Verse 23 reads: "I will sow her unto Me in the earth, and I will say unto them which were not My people, Thou art My people," etc., which is Anglo-Israelism pure and simple. Thus, as on many former occasions, "Barrington's" Scriptures fully quoted rebuke his errors.

The passages to which your correspondent refers to weaken the force of Jehovah's solemn assurance that Israel shall never cease to be a nation are grand proof-text of our position. Let your readers by all means study and mark them together with Hosea i., ii., and Jer. xxxi. Here they are: Jer. xxxiii. 26; xlvi. 27; xxxi. 37. I asked where is this nation to which God so solemnly promises perpetuity? I am told Paul gives an answer. Chapter and verse, please. One thing I am sure of—the apostle nowhere calls the Church a nation. Remember that throughout Jer. xxxi. "Israel" means the Ten Tribes; for over and over again in this chapter the prophet clearly and emphatically distinguishes between them and Judah (see ver. 6, 9, 18, 19, 23, 24, 27, 31). No promise could be made in clearer and more unmistakable language than the promise in Jer. xxxi. of the perpetual nationality of the Ten Tribes. "Sun, moon, and stars" are God's witnesses that Israel shall never cease to be a nation. The same truth is taught again and again. In Zech. x. 6 we read: "I will save the House of Joseph." Verse 7: "They of Ephraim shall be like a mighty man." Verse 9: "I will sow them among the people, and they shall remember Me in far countries." These predictions were written after the return from Babylon. Thus the posterity of Joseph were to be preserved and blessed, and to worship God in countries remote from Palestine, after the return of the Jews from Babylon. Verse 10 foretells their final return to the land of their fathers in numbers so immense that "place shall not be found for them." Israel has not yet returned in numbers so vast; therefore till that glad event takes place she must remain a distinct nation. Notice, Judah is not mentioned once in this chapter. Zech. x. then is another Scripture to study and mark. Further, Josephus tells us that in his day the Ten Tribes were distinct from the other nations, and an "immense multitude." Modern Jews say that Ephraim-Israel is not among them.

I cannot allow "Barrington" to get out of the dilemma he fell into in his letter of the 2nd inst., in the cavalier fashion he attempts. I asked when, on his own supposition, Deut. xxviii 64 was fulfilled. He replies, "In the former dispensation." This is too indefinite, as many of his statements are. I want to know the precise time and place. It will not avail again to talk of the "heights of absurdity," and so on. We require an answer to the question.

Now, sir, I have asserted and still maintain that the prophetical Scriptures cannot be understood nor inspiration defended successfully except from our standpoint. I now affirm that "Barrington" has confirmed these statements by his failure to give a clear reply to my frequent queries, "When was such and such a prophecy fulfilled?" I therefore press for answers to the following questions: (1) In Gen. xlviii. 19, it is said of Ephraim that he should become "a multitude of nations." When did Ephraim—this one tribe—accomplish this prediction? Where does or did this "multitude of nations" live? (2) Among other blessings promised to the posterity of Joseph are these: (a) The precious things of the earth and the fulness thereof, (b) blessings of the ocean, (c) power and authority to "push the people together to the ends of the earth," (d) blessings prevailing, "to the utmost bound of the everlasting hills." Now I ask when and where did the descendants of Joseph enjoy these blessings? By their very nature it was impossible they could be enjoyed in the small strip of country Ephraim and Manasseh occupied in Palestine. (3) In Isa. xlix. 19, 20 we read: "For thy waste and thy desolate places and the land of thy destruction (i.e., exile) shall be even now too narrow by reason of the inhabitants, and they that swallow thee up shall be far away. The children which thou shalt have . . . shall say again in thine ears, The place is too strait for me, give place that I may dwell." It would be impossible to describe the fact and the cause of colonisation in more accurate language than this. I ask, When did the descendants of Abraham colonise the earth? When were they numerous enough to desire to do so? How often has the Anglo-Saxon race said, "The place is too narrow for me, give place that I may dwell?" Let the United States territory, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, Cape Colony, and other places answer. (4) In reply to my arguments from the possession of the Gates "Barrington" simply says "that this promise is fulfilled in Christ and in the Church." He refers to Luke i. 71—74. Now, ver. 68 shows clearly that the literal seed of Abraham is there spoken of. I ask, then, when have the seed of Abraham possessed the Gates of their enemies in Messianic times, according to the covenant made with Abraham? (5) In the following passages: Isa. xviii. 7; Jer. xxxi. 6—15; Micah v. 7, 8; Zech. x. 6—16 we are taught that Israel before their return to the holy land should become the "chief" of the nations. When in their long history were the seed of Abraham the "chief" nation of the world?

Now, sir, these questions demand answers, and I beg those interested to mark well the answers they receive. Strong language and poetry will deceive no one. Your correspondent says: "Mr. Cooper will claim and continue to claim that his argument is unanswerable." Yes, sir, and I am therein justified so long as I seek in vain for replies to these vital inquiries. I cannot refrain here from giving one specimen of the way "Barrington" treats my questions. Several times have I inquired of him, "When and where did Ephraim become a 'multitude of nations?'" Search through all his letters, and you will find only the following poor attempts at a reply. (a) Reference is made to a passage in Numbers where we find that Ephraim's soldiers in the wilderness numbered less than those of some other tribes; (b) Ephraim and Manasseh combined in Joshua's time thought themselves "a great people"; (c) it was foretold that Ephraim for her sins should be led into captivity and punished. This is all. I ask, Have we here any reply, or any attempt at a reply to the question: "When and where did Ephraim become a 'multitude of nations?'" This is a tolerably fair specimen of the manner in which "Barrington" deals with my arguments. Well, sir, I must confess it wearies me to discuss a subject so solemn as Anglo-Israelism with an unknown writer who can make only such feeble attempts to reply to arguments, and who at the same time boasts that he has "broken" the force of Anglo-Israel reasoning, and taken the "citadel" of its strong points.

I gladly hasten on to say a few words about the spiritual blessings promised to Israel—which blessings the Anglo-Saxon race, and they alone, are to a very great extent enjoying. I must necessarily be brief. As I can only for want of space refer to Scriptural proofs, I must trouble your readers to examine for themselves the passages named. In Hosea ii. it is foretold that while in lands far away from Palestine the Ten Tribes should be "re-married" to the Lord. From the very nature of the case this must mean that they should be converted to Christianity. Moreover, the New Testament places this beyond doubt. Peter addressed his first epistle to the "sojourners of the dispersion" (R.V., i. 1)—i.e., to the Ten Tribes. In chap. ii. 10 the apostle applies Hosea i. 10, 11, 23 to their conversion to Christianity. Therefore these prophecies refer to this glad event. See also Isa. xxiv. 13—15; xxvii. 6; Hosea ii. 9, 10; Micah v. 7. Therefore if we would find the Ten Tribes we must look for them among the Christian nations.

God declares many times that the Sabbath should be a "sign" between Him and His people for ever. Now, the observance of the sacred day of rest is, as everyone knows, a distinguishing mark of the Anglo-Saxon race. No other race keeps God's day holy as we do. Should "Barrington" repeat his former statement that we do not keep the Jewish Sabbath the answer is, God does not say the "Jewish" Sabbath, but "the" or "My" Sabbath. Now, since guided by the Holy Spirit the early Church changed the day of rest from Saturday to Sunday, this latter day is now the Lord's Sabbath, and its observance an important mark of Identity.

Wherever Israel is, she must be the guardian of the "sacred oracles." Rom. ix. 4. No race loves and circulates the Scriptures as we do. The record of the British and Foreign Bible Society shows that its aggregate issues reach over 100,000,000 copies in nearly 300 languages and dialects—and this is only one of many agencies engaged in this work. We spend millions of dollars every year in the distribution of God's Word among all nations.

Now let all interested study the following passages with their context. They are only a few out of many: Isa. xliii. 10, 12, 21; xliv. 8; lxi. 6—9; xxvii. 6; Hosea i. 11; Micah v. 7. In these Scriptures the Almighty declares of Israel: "Ye are My witnesses." "Ye are My witnesses that I am God." "This people I have formed for Myself; they shall show forth My praise." "Their seed shall be known among the Gentiles, and their offspring among the people; all that see them shall acknowledge that they are the seed which the Lord hath blessed." "Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit." These precious promises of Israel's position and work among the nations are not being accomplished by the Jews. Therefore Israel is not with them. Is there any difficulty in discovering who are God's "witnesses?" What race is acknowledged everywhere as "the seed which the Lord hath blessed?" What people are filling the world with the "fruits" of righteousness? Is it not a fact that the Anglo-Saxon nations are far above every other people in every good and holy work? Our Christianity is pure, while that of other races is, for the most part, corrupt. We are the Protestants of the world. We are the chief missionary power, spending enormous sums annually, and sending our sons and daughters to the dark places of the earth to bless the nations with the revelation of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. No people equal us in missionary efforts and all kinds of work for the temporal and eternal salvation of the world. Who, as we, free the slave, liberate the oppressed, teach the ignorant, help the helpless, blessing all who come within our influence? What grand evidences of Israel's power to bless come from Egypt and India, and many places on the "dark continent."

But I must conclude. We see now the reason why God has bestowed upon us so many magnificent material blessings—population, wealth, power, colonies, the "Gates," etc. Not because of our own righteousness, for we are a stiff-necked, rebellious, and ungrateful people; but that, protected and enabled by these great blessings, we may evangelize the world. And this is the end of the whole matter. Everyone interested in missionary work should be an Anglo-Israelite. Thousands are. The Anglo-Saxon race are the evangelizers of the world. But this is Israel's appointed work. Therefore we are Israel. Is it not evident that the Anglo-Israelites are the truest friends of missions, and the most ardent lovers of mankind? Yes; and when once the eyes of our race are opened to see its noble origin, its present duties, its glorious privileges, its exalted destiny, millions will be poured into the treasury of the Lord, and tens of thousands will go forth to every land proclaiming the glad tidings that Israel is redeemed and the world saved.

The connection between the material and spiritual blessings are beautifully set forth in Micah v. 7, 8—a passage everyone should mark.

THE COMING DAY.

Oh! haste the day when Israel's land,
From Gentile bondage free,
Shall own the sway of Christ's command,
In Him Messiah see.

Oh! haste that day when Jesus' reign
Shall spread to every shore,
When kings and powers that strive in vain,
Shall strive 'gainst Him no more!

Oh! haste that day when Israel's host,
Redeemed from every clime,
No more on troubled billows tossed,
Shall hail the welcome time!

Oh! haste that day when Judah's tribe
With Ephraim shall be one,
When both to Christ shall praise ascribe,
As David's royal Son!

Oh! haste that day when God's elect
Before His throne shall stand,
No more trod down, cast off, deject,
But crowned at His right hand!

BRITISH-ISRAEL MEETING AT BEXHILL, SUSSEX.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR MR. EDITOR,—I want to give you some particulars of a meeting, or rather a series of meetings, held here for the spread of our principles, on Friday last, Sept. 1. The subject of the lectures was, "The Magnitude and Present Position of the British Empire; or, Britain's Responsibilities, Her Origin and Destiny." Mr. H. A. Marchant, of Brighton, having kindly consented to deliver addresses on the beach and in the Assembly Rooms on that date, we (my wife and self) requisitioned the aid of our good friend Miss James, of St. Leonards, and Messrs. Banks & Son, the publishers, and set about the preparation and printing of posters, handbills, and advertisements, engaging the Assembly Rooms, &c. Miss James, in ready response, undertook to distribute the handbills and posters in her neighbourhood, to provide some literature for distribution, and find some friends of our cause at Hastings to support the chair if necessary.

Messrs. Banks & Son, with their usual generosity, immediately placed 300 copies of the BANNER OF ISRAEL at our disposal, and made a kind suggestion which afterwards proved very valuable—viz., that we should paste a handbill slightly to each copy of the BANNER and distribute them from house to house in the district intended to be circularized. This course we adopted, and Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday were occupied in delivering such BANNERS, together with nearly 700 handbills and leaflets besides, so that when Mr. Marchant arrived on the evening prior to the meeting bringing more literature and handbooks with him, he found not much remained to be done in making the intended meetings known. Nevertheless, Friday morning was occupied in distributing further tracts and the remaining posters and handbills; and at half-past twelve on the beach the lecturer gave the first of his addresses. This was listened to by an audience of 30 to 40, some of whom at the close expressed the intention of attending the evening meeting.

In the afternoon at half-past three Mr. Marchant gave his second address on the green near the coastguard station to a still larger audience, who evinced their appreciation of our subject by purchasing seven of the handbooks at the close of the meeting.

One old man, in tattered garb and patched boots, who, by his appearance, one might have considered a mendicant or vagrant, was the first to put down his sixpence for the "Handbook." He listened with rapt attention to the lecturer's eloquent exposition, and on our afterwards speaking to him, announced his intention (though he lived at Ninfield, six miles distant) of being present at the evening meeting, a promise faithfully kept, for after he had had some tea at my house he put in an appearance at the room, sat out and evidently appreciated the discourse, and contributed his mite to the collection made towards expenses.

The lecture at the evening meeting (over which I presided) was well attended, some 60 to 70 people coming of their own free will and accord, and being entirely unknown to any of our own Identity folk present. One lady told me she had been so interested in the copy of the BANNER left with her that she had been constrained to attend and would not have lost the opportunity of doing so on any account. She bought a copy of "British-Israel Truth," and applied for other of our pamphlets. An old shepherd who lives at Little Common told me he had seen only that morning the announcement of the lecture which he immediately recognized as relating to our subject, and although he lived three miles distant and had to make his way thence after getting home from Bexhill he had determined on being present. It further transpired he had taken in the BANNER in monthly parts for the past twelve years, that he had lent it out to his neighbours who were seeking after knowledge, and that the Bible had never been the book it now was to him before he had read it in the light of Our Identity teachings.

The lecturer was peculiarly happy in the style of his address. Dr. Routh, of London, remarked after the meeting that the reference made in the course of the evening to "the fulness of the nations" had placed the subject before him in a new light. Altogether the day's work was one of joyful surprises; it showed us so many groping after the truth and how eventful that time will be when Ephraim shall know the Lord, accept his responsibilities, and when to the Lord of righteousness shall be born a people in a single day. The veil uplifted, the Day-Star seen, and when all men will rejoice and exclaim, "We always knew it; we are the people of the Lord—His chosen Israel." I will, if I find the local report of our meeting a good one, send you a copy of the paper in which it appears, leaving you to decide if it merit a place in your valuable columns.

Yours very truly,

JOHN R. REEP.

Bennavenna, Bexhill, Sept. 2, 1893.

Obituary.

WE take the following from the Norwood Review and Crystal Palace Reporter, of Aug. 12, 1892:—

"DEATH OF DR. ROE.

"We very much regret having to announce the death of another very old and much-esteemed resident of Norwood, Surgeon-Major P. H. Roe, whose death occurred on Sunday morning last, at his residence, Taunton House, Victoria-road, after a long and painful illness. . . . He had seen service on the West Coast of Africa, being appointed assistant staff-surgeon on the Gold Coast in 1847, surgeon to the Gold Coast Artillery in 1853, and was afterwards staff-surgeon, and principal medical officer on the West Coast of Africa. . . . He was also a member of the Executive and Legislative Councils. He was made surgeon-major in 1858, and retired in 1859. On leaving the service he spent some years in the King's County, Ireland, where he had several sharp attacks of African fever, his life being more than once despaired of. . . . For many years past he was an ardent and enthusiastic adherent of the Anglo-Israelites, and took an active part in their propaganda, until incapacitated by illness. He was at one time vice-president of the Anglo-Israelitish Association, and some ten years ago organised and took the chair at many meetings and lectures in connection with the subject in this neighbourhood."

"A LECTURE on the subject, 'Is the Empire of Great Britain spoken of in the Bible?' will be given by the Rev. Frederick Aston, Vicar of Bushbury, Wolverhampton, in the Temperance-hall, George-street, Chester, on Thursday, 28th September, 1893, at eight o'clock. Chairman, Rev. John Williams, City-road Presbyterian Church. Bring your Bibles." We hope this lecture will be well attended, and result in the addition of a large number of believers in Our Identity. The lecture has been got up quite independently of our British-Israel Association, by local friends, and deserves success.

COUNTESS OF HUNTINGDON'S CONNECTION. — An earnest appeal to the readers of the BANNER is made for funds to assist in building a new school-room in Turner's-hill, where the glorious truth of Scripture is being taught in the light of Our Identity by Mr. G. J. Vince, the evangelist, of Ashurst Wood. The chapel is too small for the increasing school, and is besides out of repair. An earnest effort is being made to erect the new school-room, and it is hoped some readers of the BANNER will help. Donations should be sent to Mrs. Vince, Ashurst Wood, East Grinstead.

THE HOUSE OF LORDS IS "TRUE TO THE EMPIRE OF ENGLAND."

THE great debate in the House of Lords has come to an end, and with it the Home Rule Bill, on which a whole year's labour in the House of Commons has been vainly spent, has come to its end as well. We cannot hear more of that disastrous and anti-Israelitish measure until an appeal has been made to the country, and the country at a future general election shall have declared that a Bill such as Mr. Gladstone desires to force upon unwilling Great Britain, it means to have. Then will the House of Lords of the future be bound to pass it, to the distress and detriment of the nation, and the falsification of prophecy, if such a catastrophe be possible.

We thank God, as we lately said, for the House of Lords, and for the opportunity for reflection it affords to the nation when, as in the House of Commons recently, a measure such as this may be forced through the House, largely without discussion, by the use of the gag, and in the teeth of the opposition of the majority of the English people represented in Parliament.

Lord Salisbury's speech was much to the point, and his peroration splendid. It must have a place in the BANNER. He said:—

I will not urge you further, but I will ask before I conclude to call back to you what the opinion in this country used to be before these terrible changes took place, when the Liberal party was still in the hands of Liberal politicians, and not in the hands of deserters who had traversed every zone of political opinion. When the Liberal party was in the hands of Liberal politicians we might distrust them and disagree with them as to local and interior questions, but we felt sure that in all Imperial questions their heart beat as true to the Empire of England as ours. (Cheers.) Let me read to you what was said by a man who was no Orangeman, by a man who lost his own seat at the most critical period of his political life because he would befriend the Roman Catholics, by a man who was armed with every instrument of historical knowledge, and whose opinion was certainly deeply pledged on the side of the Liberal party, and against those who sit on this side of the House. I will read to you what he said upon the maintenance of the Union, and I will ask you on which side he would be sitting if he had now to take part in politics. When he uttered these words he was sitting on the Liberal side and Mr. Gladstone was sitting on the Conservative side. (Laughter.) Lord Macaulay said:—

"The repeal of the Union we regard as fatal to the Empire and we will never consent to it—never, though the country should be surrounded by dangers as great as those which threatened her when her American colonies and France and Spain and Holland were leagued against her, or when the armed neutrality of the Baltic disputed her maritime rights—never, though another Buonaparte should pitch his camp in sight of Dover Castle, never till all has been staked and lost, never till the four quarters of the world have been convulsed by the last struggle of the great English people for their place among the nations."

I read that as the motto which I hope the Unionist party will adopt. If England withdraws her mandate, if England tells us she wishes that this horror should be consummated, I agree that a different state of things will have arisen. I believe that to be impossible, and that, as long as England is true to herself now or on any future occasion, if you allow this atrocious, this mean, this treacherous revolution to pass, you will be untrue to the duty which has descended to you from a splendid ancestry, you will be untrue to your highest traditions, you will be untrue to the trust that has been bequeathed to you from the past, you will be untrue to the Empire of England. (Loud cheers.)

We believe, like his Lordship, that it will be impossible for this country to consent to such a measure as that the Lords have just extinguished. It is against the promises of God and the prophecies of His servants the prophets, because it connived at the virtual transfer of Ireland to her enemies—a country strategically situated with respect to Great Britain and forming a Gate against the approach of her foes beyond the sea. The Gates are Israel's birthright, and we could not therefore, having God's promise of the Gate, be permitted by Him to give up our westerly defence to the care of our deadly enemies to please the Canaanitish opponents of Israel who have been our open foes for many centuries past.

Lord Salisbury in his speech made it very clear that Ireland is a strategic possession which acts as our protection against our enemies, and that we abandon it "to our enemies, to those that hate us," at our peril (Gen. xxii. 17, xxiv. 60). He said this:—

Supposing the effect of this Bill were to place Ireland in the hands of those who detested us, and that trouble arose with America, should we not then be in an infinitely worse position than any which a continuance of the present state of things could possibly put us into? Remember the great privilege of the position of Great Britain. On some sides our coasts lie against those of continental powers. But against the great mass of our coasts on the West and North-west we have our own territory in our own possession, and we are practically safe from any attack, and especially in these days when the neighbourhood of harbours is essential for naval action, we have no cause for fear. That is our present strategical position, and it is one of the finest strategical positions in the world. Give over Ireland to your enemies, to those who hate you; let the ordinary government of Ireland be conducted by those who are hostile to you—I do not say it need ever reach the point of civil war—then all those harbours of Ireland which lie over against the harbours of this country, would be at the mercy of the enemy who attacked you, and unless you chose to undertake the task of reconquering Ireland and shattering by mere military force the structure you are now so painfully building up, you would have no security from the sympathy which the Irish in command of their own harbours could give to the navies or privateers or cruisers by whom your trade might be threatened.

His Lordship's remarkable quotation of the two phrases used in Scripture in reference to Israel's Gates should be noted, because it seemed as if, without being aware of its bearing on Our Identity, he clearly realised that Ireland was our nation's Western Gate, our real protection from "our enemies," and from "those that hate us."

It is not likely therefore that what God has guaranteed to us as one of our most precious gifts—one of the four blessings He swore to give us as Abraham's afterseed, in Gen. xxii. 17, He will ever permit to be removed from us. The Home Rule Bill, now dead, would have deprived us before long of the possession of Ireland and its harbours, and this being contrary to God's promises to us His people, the Bill was bound to die and disappear. We are glad and thankful that it is no more, and trust that it never will be revived, either by Mr. Gladstone or by any other Statesman who may succeed him in power, in the form which has been our grief and trouble for so many months past, at least till the national voice has been heard, "content or not content," "aye or no."

Lord Salisbury's advice to the friends of the union as it exists is sound and also scriptural, "Patient continuance in well-doing" (Rom. ii. 7) is recommended to them as a motto of Mr. Gladstone's, and the advice of President A. Lincoln on one occasion, added, "Keep on pegging away." Perseverance in a good cause will be Ireland's remedy and cure, but not the dangerous prescriptions which the Home Rule Bill offers to God's distracted people.

In all our recent perplexities our friends have been nervously anxious about the results of the late Parliamentary debates, and are ready to attribute to one man the praise or blame of all that has occurred. But this surely is an erroneous way of looking at the matter. "The Lord Jehovah reigneth," not any particular statesman, however able, "and let the earth rejoice"; let "the great Isles (marg. Psa. xcvii. 1) be glad." If it be permitted us to accept the description of "the great Isles" as belonging to Israel's "appointed place" (2 Sam. vii. 10), then have we reason for great joy and gladness that He has brought us help in our time of distress in regard to the Home Rule Bill, and that He has shown us a way out of our perplexities as a proof that He reigns, not this party or that in the State. Let Israel, therefore, praise the Lord for the consolation, and because of the promise that "all the peoples have seen His glory" (Psa. xcvii. 6).

THE TELL AMARNA TABLETS.

BY F. GASS.

A REMARKABLE discovery was made in 1887, by a peasant woman, among the Tel-el-Amarna mounds in Middle Egypt. These extensive ruins are the remains of the capital of Amenopis IV., of the eighteenth Egyptian dynasty. A number of clay tablets were found, varying from two inches to a foot or more, in length. They are covered with writing in the cuneiform characters. The interpretation of these tablets shows that they are letters to the Kings of Egypt, from kings and governors of Babylon, Assyria, Mesopotamia, Phœnicia, and Palestine. Thus a correspondence in writing was carried on as early as the time of the Exodus, between these distant countries. During the last decade, it has come to be widely accepted that the Egyptian king, Rameses II., was the "Pharaoh of the Oppression," and his son Menepthah, the "Pharaoh of the Exodus," and a reference has been made before in the BANNER to this view. But it is known that there is no monumental basis for this opinion. In truth there is not known to exist in Egypt a single monumental reference to the Israelites. A writer in the Edinburgh Review, for July, 1893, founds an opinion on the Tell Amarna tablets, as to the Hebrew invasion of Palestine, which appears to be very probable; but if correct it must have taken place nearly two centuries before the time of Menepthah.

Towards the end of the eighteenth dynasty, a loss of national strength took place in Egypt, resulting in the Egyptians losing their hold of Syria for a time. In some of the tablets, dated about B.C. 1430 (the date of Amenopis IV. is fixed at about B.C. 1400), there is a reference to Jerusalem (Ursusalim). The king of Jerusalem seeks the aid of Egypt against "the people of the Abiri," or the Khabiri, by transliteration. We learn that the Abiri were a fighting tribe (or tribes) advancing on Palestine, from the direction of Mount Seir or Edom. The Reviewer considers that they were the Israelites. They overran the country surrounding Jerusalem, and apparently compelled the king of Jerusalem to flee, and it is recorded that their successes were due to the fact that there were no Egyptian soldiers in the country to oppose them.

Professor A. H. Sayce has stated that the name Abiri (or Khabiri) is identical with that of the Israelites, and Major Conder made the same suggestion as early as 1890. This brings us to something that will interest students of the Great Pyramid. If the Abiri were the Israelites, then Israel invaded Palestine about 1480 B.C. They could not have been Babylonian, or Amorite, as the Babylonians were at that time at peace with Egypt, and the Amorites were conquered by the Abiri. So that if the triumphant progress of the Abiri was in reality Joshua's conquest of Palestine, the date, about B.C. 1480—1485, agrees exactly with the length in Pyramid inches (1482 or 1485 Pyramid inches, see "Our Inheritance," 5th edition) of the floor-line of the ascending passage, commencing at the roof of the descending passage, and ending at the north wall of the Grand Gallery. I need hardly remind the reader that this wall is believed to symbolise the date of the birth of Christ. Therefore, reckoning backwards from that wall, the length of the floor of the ascending passage, at the rate of a Pyramid inch to a year, corresponds exactly in time with the fulfilment of God's promise to Moses that Israel should gain possession of the Promised Land. The Israelites found a country well advanced in civilisation, and literally full to overflowing of corn, wine, and oil. The transformation was complete, from the deserts of Edom to the plenty of a highly cultivated land.

The study of the Tell Amarna tablets results in the tracing back of civilisation in Phœnicia to B.C. 1700, and the granite statues of Telloh prove that monumental writing and sculpture were arts existing as early as the days of Abraham. There is no longer any ground for the opinion of many learned doubters, that the Old Testament accounts of these remote times are only traditional, oral, so-called history, handed down amongst uncivilised and ignorant men; and, therefore, not to be relied upon. On the contrary, we have the course of events in these early times clearly traced by the contemporary artist and practised scribe. We see, depicted for us, the traffic of the Midianite dealers with Egypt, when Joseph was carried down and sold for a price. Hebrew history may have been recorded in baked bricks of clay, or in stone, at a very early period, until such time as the invention of the alphabet and improved methods of preserving writing, superseded them. Who can say that some such imperishable records of early Hebrew history may not yet be unearthed and given to a wondering world?

What is now known to the Arabi as Tel-loh (tel "a mound"), was once a prosperous city of ancient Chaldea. Many clay cylinders have been found there, and diorite, an exceeding hard stone, was used by its sculptors. The Tell Amarna tablets show that throughout Western Asia, schools and libraries were established before the Exodus, where clay tablets were stored, and where the language and syllabary of Babylonia were taught and learned.

Professor Sayce (see "Records of the Past") says that a library of this kind must have existed in the Canaanite city of Kirjath-Sepher, or "Book-town," and if its site is ever recovered and excavated, there will, in all probability, be found there a collection of books written upon imperishable clay.

Mr. Rassam, the well-known explorer, brought a tablet from Assyria, on which the name of Sargon of Accad, appears. He was the ancient hero of the Semitic population of Chaldea, and the founder of the first Semitic empire in the country. He founded a great library in his capital city of Accad, near Sippara. Professor Sayce is known as a cautious, reverend, and sound Biblical scholar, so that the following remarks of his on a late discovery are the more remarkable. Referring to Sargon, of Accad, he says: "His date is fixed by a passage in a cylinder of Nabonidos discovered in the ruins of a temple of the Sun-God, at Sippara. The antiquarian zeal of Nabonidos lead him to excavate among the foundations of the temple, in the hope of finding the cylinder of Naram-Sin, who was known to be the founder of it. Nabonidos tells us, that at eighteen cubits deep, he found the foundation-stone of Naram-Sin, son of Sargon of Accad, which had been buried for 3,200 years. In the opinion of Nabonidos, a king who had a passion for investigating the past records of his country, Naram-Sin reigned 3,200 years before his own time, that is to say, about B.C. 3,700." In another paragraph, Professor Sayce remarks: "If Sargon of Accad, lived about B.C. 3,800, the kings of Telloh must have flourished as far back as the fourth millennium before our era." ("Records of the Past," new series, vol. i.). Sargon of Accad, must not be confused with a king of the same name, Sargon II., who reigned about B.C. 2,000. In the Hibbert Lectures for 1887, Professor Sayce carefully explains (see page 21, et seq.) that his former scepticism with regard to this statement of Nabonidos was overcome, and he felt compelled by further researches to admit the accuracy of this very distant date.

I do not intend to discuss the value of the authority of Nabonidos, who lived more than 3,000 years later than this date of Sargon I., but no motive is apparent why he should make a wilful mis-statement. The Assyrian kings, who built or restored famous temples, were in the habit, as is the custom at the present day, of depositing beneath the foundation-stone a lasting record, such as a clay cylinder, bearing the date of foundation and other interesting particulars. Nabonidos, the last king of Babylon, was very fond of restoring old temples, and had the true antiquarian zeal for recovering ancient records. It is well that all should note that the general bearing of late excavations is towards pushing back the date of the earliest dawn of civilisation in Assyria, equally as in Egypt, to a much more remote period than has hitherto been supposed possible. One consolation is, that the Church of England does not authoritatively sanction any arbitrary fixing of the earlier Biblical dates. From this, the conclusion may be drawn that she prefers to leave them open.

MANIFEST DESTINY.

By an Australian.

In "Harper's Magazine" for 1885 appeared three articles from the pen of Mr. John Fiske, the concluding one, bearing the above title, being especially worthy of notice in the Banner of Israel. Mr. Fiske, knowing nothing of Our Identity, and failing to see that Britain is Israel's appointed place where freedom from invasion is promised (2 Sam. vii. 10), has been to much unnecessary trouble to account for our immunity from foreign assaults. Our insular position is credited with doing "goodly service in maintaining our liberties," and what he calls the "good fortune of our Teutonic (?) ancestors in securing a territorial position so readily defensible against the assaults of despotic powers" fills him with admiration.

In contrasting the fortunes of England and France as colonizing nations (much to the latter's disfavour), our author has the following passage:—"It is to the self-government of England, and to no lesser cause, that we are to look for the secret of that boundless vitality which has given to men of English speech the uttermost parts of the earth for an inheritance." Though, as Anglo-Israelites, we assign a much higher cause for this secret, it is pleasing to have this blind witness to our possession of the inheritance; it is not so long since that our claim to it was spoken of by some of our opponents as "a delusion, robbing Christ to give to England" and "showing ignorance, irreverence, and blasphemy."

A few years ago our "only general," Sir Garnet Wolseley, was great on the "manifest destiny" of the Chinese, proclaiming them as inevitably the coming race, before which all others must bow. Mr. Fiske has also heard this asserted seemingly before Sir Garnet became afflicted with the idea, and says, "If the Chinese are ever going to try anything of the sort, they cannot afford to wait very long, for within another century their very numbers will be surpassed by those of the English race alone. By that time all the elements of military predominance on earth, including that of simple numerical superiority, will have been gathered into the hands not merely of Europeans generally, but more specifically into the hands of the offspring of the Teutonic tribes who conquered Britain in the fifth century. Where once the barbarous races threatened the very continuance of civilization, they now exist only on sufferance."

Anglo-Israelites knowing the promise, "Thy seed shall possess the Gate of his enemies" (Gen. xxii. 17), point to its fulfilment in the British as one of the most convincing proofs of our Hebrew origin. Our secular writers, ignorant of the matter, are at a loss to account for this peculiar national gift, and are apt to speak, as did Capt. Colomb, of "a sort of destiny" that has possessed us of these Gates. Mr. Fiske says:—"Endowed with maritime supremacy. England has with an unerring instinct proceeded to seize upon the keys of empire in all parts of the world—Gibraltar, Malta, the Isthmus of Suez, Aden, Ceylon, the coasts of Australia, island after island in the Pacific—every station, in short, that commands the pathways of maritime commerce or guards the approaches to the barbarous countries which she is beginning to regard as in some way her natural heritage." It is enough to turn one's head to look over her colonial blue-books. The natural outcome of all this overflowing vitality it is not difficult to foresee. No one can carefully watch what is going on in Africa to-day without recognizing it as the same sort of thing which was going on in North America in the seventeenth century; and it cannot fail to bring forth similar results in course of time. Who can doubt that within two or three centuries the African continent will be occupied by a mighty nation of English descent, and covered with populous cities and flourishing farms, with railroads and telegraphs and free schools and other devices of civilization as yet undreamed of? If we look next to Australia we find a country of more than two-thirds the area of the United States, with a temperate climate and immense resources, agricultural and mineral, a country sparsely peopled by a race of irredeemable savages hardly above the level of brutes. Here England, within the present century, has planted five great thriving states, concerning which I have not time to say much.

"Then there is New Zealand with its climate of perpetual spring, where the English race is now multiplying faster than anywhere else in the world, unless it be in Texas and Minnesota. And there are in the Pacific Ocean many rich and fertile spots where we shall very soon see the same thing going on. It is not necessary to dwell on such considerations as these. It is enough to point to the general conclusion that the work which the English race began when it colonized North America is destined to grow until every land on the earth's surface that is not already the seat of an old civilization shall become English in its language, in its religion, in its political habits and traditions, and to a predominant extent in the blood of its people. The day is at hand when four-fifths of the human race will trace its pedigree to English forefathers, as four-fifths of the white people in the United States trace their pedigree to-day. The race thus spread over both hemispheres, and from the rising to the setting sun, will not fail to keep that sovereignty of the sea and that commercial supremacy which it began to acquire when England first stretched its arm across the Atlantic to the shores of Virginia and Massachussets.

"The world's business will be transacted by English speaking people to so great an extent that whatever language any man may have learned in his infancy, he will find it necessary sooner or later to learn to express his thoughts in English. And in this way it is by no means improbable that, as Jacob Grimm long since predicted, the language of Shakespeare will ultimately become the language of mankind."

Verily Mr. Fiske is an excellent though blind witness to the truth of our contention—that the British are Israel—and seems to have alluded, directly or indirectly, to almost all the identities on which we rest our case.

THE DISCUSSION IN YARMOUTH, NOVA SCOTIA.

No. VI.—Anglo-Israelism.

Reply to the Rev. C. F. Cooper.

By Barrington.

In the nature of language we have evidence that we are not Semitic, but Aryan. "Kelts, Gaels, Teutons—Aryan" (Keary's "Dawn of History," chap. iv., page 377). "The names of our rivers . . . are Keltic—i.e., British, as Thames, Ouse, Severn, Wye; those of our towns are Teutonic, Saxon, or Norse, some few Roman" (Keary). "The names of almost all animals alive . . . Saxon. The great features of nature, the simpler emotions of the mind, all the prime social relations (father, mother, husband, wife, son, daughter) are Saxon; also house, home, roof, and hearth—Saxon" (Trench "On the Study of Words," page 316).

Then Dr. Schaff names as belonging to the Aryan family of languages "the Celtic family embraces the old British, Irish, Welsh, and Gælic. The Germanic or Teutonic family: Gothic, Anglo-Saxon, German, Dutch, Danish, Swedish" ("Theological Propædeutic," page 104). As to the groundwork of language: "In Aryan languages the essential root is made up of vowels and consonants, and the variations upon the root idea are generally expressed by additions to the root and not by internal changes in it. But in Semitic languages the root consists of consonants only, and the inflections are produced by internal changes, changes of the vowels which belong to a consonant. In the Aryan tongues the radical remains almost unchanged, and the inflections are made ab extra, but in the Semitic language the inflections are made by changes of vowel sounds within the framework of the root consonants" ("Dawn of History," page 443).

Dr. Schaff: In the Semitic languages, "the consonants constitute the solid body of the words, animated by vowels, and determine the signification. The stem-words are triliteral (consisting of three consonants) and dissyllabic" (work above named, page 105). Thus, both in nature and form of our mother tongue the evidence is conclusive that we are not Semitic, but Aryan. The incorporation of Arabic and Hebrew words into our language is one thing, and the essential character and structural form another, and entirely different. Let that be clearly understood,

Digitized by Google

Another evidence that we are not Semitic in origin is religion. "While all nations over the earth have developed a religious tendency which acknowledged a higher than human power in the universe, Israel is the only one which has risen to the grandeur of conceiving this power as the one, only, living God" (Max Muller, "Chips from a German Workshop," vol. i., page 372). The great truth of the Old Testament and of the breadth of Hebrew history. Now in the Aryan race of antiquity all were polytheistic! True, some branches of the Semitic race were also polytheistic; but their polytheism was radically different from that of the Aryan race. The Anglo-Saxon never in race relation until Christianized "worshipped the one, only, living God." "The supreme God (Keary) to the Semitic nations"—Hebrews excepted—was the sun, whereas to the Aryans the supreme god was the "Sky-God,"—i.e., Dyaus, the "Zeus of the Greeks, the Jupiter of the Romans, and the Zio, Tew, or Tyr of the Germans" ("Dawn of History," page 408). Among the Anglo-Saxons Tew holds a place, but Woden is chief, and is remembered in our Tuesday. So in the names of Anglo-Saxon gods we find we are not Semitic. Further, the race history of the Hebrews is worship of the one God, but the race history of Kelts, Gauls, and Teutons in Asia and Europe in antiquity is paganism.

Again, is not the conception of death and the funeral rites of the Gauls and Celts evidence we are not Semitic? "The Druids held the transmigration of souls. They buried or burned with the dead, arms, utensils, slaves, and whatever might be judged useful to them, as if they were to be removed into a separate state" ("English History," Edmund Burke, vol. iii., page 494). "The funerals among the Gauls . . . they cast into the fire all things, including living creatures, which they suppose to have been dear to them when alive; and a little before this period, slaves and dependents, who were ascertained to have been beloved by them were, after the regular funeral rites were completed, burnt together with them" (Cæsar's Commentaries, book G. VI., chap. xix.). "Before the Roman conquest the British Celts succeeded in only developing a low type of civilization. Their religion was a debased and gloomy superstition, a subjection to priest caste requiring the continuous sacrifice by fire of numerous human beings for the appeasing of the divine anger" (Rawlinson's "Origin of Nations," chap. viii.). How can we link such people with the Israelites of Hebrew history? To do so is a travesty of that history.

Mr. Cooper, in his letter (9th inst.), maintains that the promise to Abraham is not fulfilled in the Christian Church. "The original promises and predictions never included all the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. From the beginning they pertained to a spiritual rather than a literal seed" (Dr. Rankin). Proof: "For they are not all Israel which are of Israel, neither because they are the seed of Abraham are they all children, but in Isaac shall thy seed be called." That is, they which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God, but the children of the promise are counted for the seed (Rom. ix. 6—8). "Now we, brethren—i.e., all Christians—as Isaac was, are the children of promise" (Gal. iv. 28). "For the promise that he should be heir of the world was not to Abraham or his seed through the law, but through the righteousness of faith" (Rom. iv. 13). "If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise" (Gal. iii. 29).

Thus the promise "had reference to a spiritual seed, and that seed is first Christ (Gal. iii. 16) and then all that are Christ's" (Dr. Rankin): and they are, to use Mr. Cooper's words, "Christian Israel"—i.e., the Christian Church. Paul's "Israel of God" (Gal. vi. 16), declared to be so by universal consent and agreement of Christendom, outside a handful of Anglo-Israelites.

Glad Mr. Cooper's courage has revived. That veiled challenge as to the platform is no surprise, but it can "bide a wee" till we see if the feeble remains of his Anglo-Israelism call for further dissection. My information is from some of Mr. Cooper's friends that that most holy faith is about used up. To which I devoutly say, Amen!

Mr Cooper says: "He ('Barrington') tries to prove that they (the Ten Tribes) were to be for ever lost." I did nothing so foolish! That's Mr. Cooper's misrepresentation. For ever lost is one thing, and the "body indistinguishably lost" another. "That it be not a people" (Isa. vii. 8), and to be "broken," "root dried up," is not saying for ever lost. As a kingdom, as a Ten-tribed nation, they ceased to be. Some returned after the captivity, and under one head, as foretold (Ezek. xxxvii.). Judah and Israel became one. No doubt Mr. Cooper understands all that, but I repeat it to remind him of the fact.

Attention is called to Hosea i. 10. That promise I have explained in a previous letter. Paul gives it an authority unfriendly to Anglo-Israelism (Rom. ix. 24—27). Mr. Cooper says: "One thing I am sure of; the apostle nowhere calls the Church a nation." 1 Peter ii. 9: "But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation." Perhaps Mr. Cooper will try to get away under the cover of "the apostle." Mr. Cooper's sureness is a very uncertain quantity.

The chapter and verse once more are given (Rom. ix. 24—27, xi. 1—7; Gal. vi. 16): "The Israel of God." Doubtless Mr. Cooper will continue to repeat his questions. He tells us Zech. x. and Jer. xxxi. were written after the return from Babylon. This is not so as to Jeremiah, and barely half the truth as to Zechariah. Only a part of those who did return had returned. In ver. 5, "They shall fight because the Lord is with them"; ver. 10, "I will bring them again also out of the land of Egypt, and gather them out of Assyria"; ver. 11, "And the pride of Assyria shall be brought down, and the sceptre of Egypt shall depart."

That, according to Mr. Cooper, refers to this dispensation. "To fight in the name of the Lord!" As Israel take the sword forbidden by Christ, set at nought the angel's song, and "Blessed are the peacemakers!" Assyria to be brought down, long since perished; to be gathered out of an empire that doesn't exist. Still Anglo-Israelism, that most holy faith, is the true light of prophecy, and the supreme defence of inspiration. If fiction can take the place of fact such absurdities may have some use.

Mr. Cooper's "dilemma" myth arises from his twist of my reference to idolatry in reply No. IV. If he had dealt justly with the argument his imperious question would have been needless.

Again, Mr. Cooper goes over ground thrashed out, sandwiched with divers melancholy lamentations. When it is said "shall not be a people," "be broken up," "root dried up," how in this dispensation can Israel after the flesh become a multitude of nations? Of the Israel of God (Gal. vi. 16) it is true. That I have shown, and hope further to prove in my main argument. Mr. Cooper, through starting at the wrong end, reads his Anglo-Israelism in the Word of of God. Mr. Cooper's plaint about weariness is not surprising. Such an absurdity as Anglo-Israelism must be an elephant, troublesome and wearisome. When he wrote "unknown writer" he must have been napping. If the writer is not known to him one of his letters is a conundrum, and his request to a propagandist of Anglo-Israelism a mystery.

Will Mr. Cooper oblige with book and page for that Josephus quotation? Also authority for the statement as to "modern Jews and Ephraim-Israel"?

"Spiritual blessings" are next named; Hos. i. 10, ii. 23 are explained by Paul (Rom. ix. 24—26); even us Jews and Gentiles. No Anglo-Israelism in Paul's explanation!

We are told that Peter addressed his first letter to the Ten Tribes.

"The Churches which he addressed were composed of Jewish and Gentile converts" ("Early Days of Christianity," Farrar). Endorsed by Scott, Barnes, Eadie, and Dr. Robinson. Then what about chap. iv. 3, "For the time past of our life . . . and abominable idolatries"? Was that true of the Hebrews Peter knew? Further, Peter wrote in Greek to the Churches known to him. Did those "fierce, hard drinkers, clad in skins," in their northern home know Greek? Were they a royal priesthood with their Woden worship? Were they in Christ? (chap. v. 14).

"The Sabbath identity." Mr. Cooper again tries to put back the Christian Sabbath into the Jewish candlestick. The effort is its own condemnation. Israel, the Israel of God, is the guardian of the sacred oracles. "Unto them were committed the oracles of God" (Rom. iii. 2). Who? The Jew (see ver. 1). To-day they are as they have been in the past with the Israel of God. Not Mr. Cooper's fiction, but the New Testament Church, that doesn't, if true to Christ, gore people to the ends of the earth.

As to God's witnesses, Paul tells who they are: "As God hath said, I will dwell in them and walk in them, and I will be their God and they shall be My people" (2 Cor. vi. 16). "Having these promises," etc. (chap. vii. 1). Who? The Christian Church at Corinth, made up of Hebrews and Gentiles! promises made to Israel by Jeremiah (xxxi. 33). The Christian nations, to Mr. Cooper, are within the range of Anglo-Saxon Israelites. The Latin and Greek Churches are outside his theory. Heaven's favourites are Israel—i.e., the British race. That is the bottom assumption of his entire argument. A caricature of divine truth, and a travesty of Christian teaching. He tells us that we are a stiff-necked, rebellious, and ungrateful people; yet we are Israel! the Israel of God (Gal vi. 16), the New Testament Israel, the Church of the living God, stiff-necked and rebellious! And that is "the most holy faith"!

He also informs us that "Israel is redeemed and the world saved." Israel—i.e., Anglo-Saxons—redeemed and the world saved! That most holy faith must have received a bad shake. As Mr. Cooper is soon to quit the Scriptural argument, I will once more call his attention to a few of the many unanswered questions he has overlooked. Are we a by-word among all nations? Was the Jewish Church the Jewish nation? What king of Israel was carried captive to Great Britain? (Deut. xxviii. 36). Did or did not some of the Ten Tribes return to Palestine after the captivity? Is it true that we are wanderers among the nations? Did Israel of the Ten Tribes cease to be a kingdom? Were Judah and Israel to unite in Palestine under one head? If so, when? If in this dispensation, then why was a sin offering made for all Israel after the captivity? (Ezra viii. 35).

DOES JEREMIAH PROVE THAT ISRAEL AND JUDAH RETURNED TOGETHER FROM BABYLON?

BY W. WELLER.

PART III.

JER. xxxii. 26—44, the passage next quoted by Mr. F. If you read this chapter carefully, you will see it refers only to the House of Judah. The children of Israel are mentioned, but not the House of Israel. By the children of Israel probably the Benjamites are meant, as that tribe appears to be the one which, while forming part of the House of Israel, was lent to Judah for David's sake (compare 1 Kings xi. 11—13, 29—36 with xii. 20—24). That there is a difference made in prophecy between the children of Israel and the House of Israel is evident from Ezek. xxxvii. 16, which reads thus: "And thou, son of man, take thee one stick, and write upon it, For Judah, and for the children of Israel his companions: then take another stick, and write upon it, For Joseph, the stick of Ephraim, and all the House of Israel his companions."

Notwithstanding that this prophecy (Jer. xxxii. 26—44) refers only to Judah, and therefore is no evidence as to the return of Israel, I shall show you that it was not accomplished on the return under the edict of Cyrus, and so still awaits fulfilment. You will see this if you read from ver. 37 to ver. 42 and mark these predictions, "I will cause them to dwell safely," "that they may fear Me for ever"; "I will make an everlasting covenant with them"; "I will not turn away from them to do them good." It cannot be said these promises were fulfilled to the people who returned from Babylon.

Jer. xxxiii. was next referred to by Mr. F. to show that both Houses returned together at the end of the seventy years' captivity. Please read verses 7, 8, and 9. Let me ask you if, on the return from Babylon, the people were "built as at the first"? Did they possess the same extent of land, or were they independent, or their own masters, "as at the first"? Did the surrounding nations "fear and tremble" for all the good which God had done to those who had returned? You must answer, Certainly not. The fact, then, that these details of the prediction do not agree with those of the return from Babylon, proves that the prophecy did not refer to that event, and must refer to a return yet future. Hence this prophecy, like each of the others I have dealt with, is no proof that both Houses returned from Babylon together.

Chaps. l. and li. These two long chapters were referred to by Mr. F. with the remark that they "settle the whole question," and in this I heartily agree with him: but you will see they settle it entirely in my favour. For I shall show you very clearly that there is nothing in these chapters to prove that both Houses returned together from Babylon, but that, on the contrary, the prophecies herein contained concerning the House of Israel were not accomplished in the people who returned, and therefore they either did not refer to them, or they relate to events still future. Mind, I do not say that in these chapters there are no predictions relating to the first return.

Mr. F. says—and again I have the pleasure of agreeing with him—that there are two sets of prophecies running through these chapters—one set referring to Babylon, the other set to the Hebrews. These sets of prophecies seem to intertwine each other; that is to say, we have a few verses of one, and then some verses of the other, and so on to the end.

Now, please note that the House of Israel (as such) is not once named, but the children of Israel and of Judah are mentioned together twice, in verses 4 and 33 of chap. l. I have already shown that prophecy recognises a difference between children of Israel and House of Israel. So, should this prophecy have been fulfilled when Mr. F. says it was, it would not follow that the House of Israel returned then.

Next please look at vers. 5, 19, and 20 of chap. l., and vers. 19—23 of chap. li. Here, you will see, are predictions which certainly were not fulfilled in the people who returned. Therefore we must look for the accomplishment of these prophecies either in another section of the Hebrews, or at some future period. That in these chapters the prophet does address some Hebrews who should return and some who should not, is evident from a comparison of chap. l. 28 with chap. li. 50. Some, then, were to escape from Babylon to Zion, while others who should escape the sword were admonished to "remember the Lord from afar," and to "let Jerusalem come into their minds."

Chap. l. 17: "Israel is a scattered sheep; the lions have driven him away: first the king of Assyria hath devoured him; and last this Nebuchadrezzar hath broken his bones." In this verse, no doubt, the word Israel includes both Houses, but please mark the difference in the terms employed to say what had happened to each. This difference of figure, I consider, supports my contention that the House of Israel was lost, for, having been devoured (by Assyria), it was hidden, lost to view, while Judah, who had only had his bones broken (by Nebuchadrezzar), was not lost to view, and might so far recover as to return home in a short time, though probably crippled for the rest of his life. As a matter of fact, Judah has never since the time of Nebuchadrezzar been able to stand entirely alone and independent.

Chap. l. 6: "My people hath been lost sheep: their shepherds have caused them to go astray, they have turned them away on the mountains: they have gone from mountain to hill, they have forgotten their resting-place." In this verse there are two terms which are easily understood if we give a moment's thought to them. The first of these is mountain. By looking at the 25th verse of the next chapter we learn that this word is used figuratively for nation, or kingdom. The other term is resting-place. The resting-place of sheep is a fold. So sheep who forgot their resting-place would be those who forgot the fold they left, or to what flock they belonged. Mr. F. says 'his verse proves that both Houses were lost sheep. I think not, for evidently it refers, not to the Jews, the House of Judah, who returned to Jerusalem, and have not yet forgotten their resting-place, or to what fold or flock they belong; but it refers to a people who should wander among the nations, and absolutely forget their resting-place, their origin, their identity, and so can only be understood of the other House—Israel—the great majority who, as Mr. F. says, did not return. Thus we see this verse agrees with Amos ix. 9, a passage which I may again remind you Mr. F. has admitted was spoken to the Ten-tribed House of Israel.

To avoid a possible charge of inconsistency, I must not omit to draw your attention to the different adjectives used in the two verses of this chapter where the Israelites are called sheep. In ver. 17, where both Houses are included, they are scattered sheep, while in this 6th verse, the House of Israel only being intended, they are lost sheep. In Mr. F.'s former paper he challenged me to produce "one single text of Scripture which should distinctly state that the House of Israel should be lost." Now, here it is, in one of the very two chapters which he says settle the whole question. No doubt you feel as much surprised as I do that he did not find this when preparing his last paper, but I think we may say this sixth verse of the fiftieth chapter of Jeremiah alone, when properly understood, settles the matter, and settles it in favour of my contention that the House of Israel is lost.

I have now met, I think fairly, all Mr. F.'s arguments drawn from the book of Jeremiah, and I claim to have done this in a direct manner, without "hedging." I have not tried to lead you round the point at issue. I have given you, as I think, incontestable proofs drawn from a comparison of the prophecies themselves with the inexorable logic of events, that the House of Israel did not return with that of Judah from Babylon. Nay, more, I have shown you that if the prophet be true, as we all believe him to be, the two Houses must be not only in existence but in separation from each other at the present time. Therefore I have proved my case, which is that the House of Israel did not return from Babylon with Judah, was not amalgamated with the Jews when our Saviour and His apostles were on earth, and is not with the Jews now. In this sense, then, the House of Israel is lost.

Here I conclude my criticism of, and reply to, Mr. F.'s second paper, and in doing so I venture to hope I have said nothing to cause my brother pain. I hope I have not used one uncivil expression, or made one uncharitable insinuation. I have employed no epithets. I have not called anybody a "credulous fanatic," or said any persons were "prepared to swallow all the pretensions and absurdities of Rome." I have accused no one of inventing an interpretation of Scripture. I have offered no opinions of my own, except those for which I have endeavoured to show you what I believe to be sound Scriptural warrant. I have honestly tried, and think I have not failed, to place before you the truth regarding the matter in question. Whether you participate in my conclusion or not, I am only responsible for showing you the truth so far as I am able. The result I leave to a higher power.

THE BRITISH-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

THE holidays over, the lecture-work of the Association is re-commencing, and the secretary would be glad to hear from friends desiring lectures as soon as possible. A new opening has presented itself at Chester, but the account of the meeting will have to be deferred to next report.

Meetings will be held in Bath on Oct. 19, when it is hoped that Philo-Israel, Col. Senior, the Rev. E. J. Wemyss-Whittaker, and the general secretary will take part. Lectures are also being arranged for in Leicester and Hull, but the secretary has not yet received information as to date from the local secretaries.

The matter of the sending out circulars from the office, in the association's report, without the knowledge and approval of the council, came before the committee at their last meeting, and the clerk expressed regret for the same, assuring the committee that such should not occur again.

The funds of the association are at the present time very low, and we shall be glad to receive members' subscriptions or donations to the Special Donation Fund, which would be very acceptable.

"HOLY" AND "HOLINESS."

THE following is an extract from a little book called "The Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation," which cannot fail to be interesting to our readers. Our friend "J. B.," who forwarded it to us, says that herein appears proof of a peculiar blessing granted to us as a nation of a spiritual character:—

"The Hebrew word 'quadhosh,' was used to express the idea of purity as originated by the tabernacle service. The literal definition is pure, to be pure, to be purified for sacred uses. The word thus originated and conveying this meaning is employed in the Scriptures to express the moral purity or holiness of God. In the New Testament this word is translated by the Greek term 'hagios,' but the Hebrew idea is connected with the Greek word. In King James' version this Greek word is rendered by the Saxon term 'holy,' the Saxon word losing its original import (whole, wholly), and taking that of the Hebrew, derived through the Greek; so that our idea of the holiness of God is the same which was originated by the Levitical ceremonies, and there is no other word, so far as I have been able to examine, in any language which conveys this idea. Nor is there any idea among any people that approximates closely to the Scripture idea of holiness, unless the word received some shades of its signification from the Bible. Here, then, the idea of God's moral purity was conveyed by the Mosaic economy in a manner in accordance with the constitution and condition of the Jewish mind. This same idea has descended from the Hebrew through the Greek to our own language, and there is, so far as known, no other word in the world which conveys to the mind the true idea of God's moral purity, but that originated by the institution which God prescribed to Moses upon the mount."

ENIGMA—No. 6.

A TITLE of Christ can be obtained from the initials of the following names:—

1. What St. Peter told the "men of Israel" they had done to the "Prince of Life."
2. What St. Paul told the Corinthians to flee from.
3. The prophet sent to tell David that his son should build God's house instead of himself.
4. He to whom these words were spoken, "Surely I will be with thee, and thou shalt smite the Midianites as one man."
5. A village of Benjamin, spoken of as "the valley of craftsmen."
6. What Jesus promised to make His disciples.
7. An ancient river mentioned in Judges.
8. A judge of Israel who had 30 sons and 30 daughters.
9. "A preacher of righteousness" before the flood.
10. A place to which Jesus resorted for prayer.
11. An Egyptian king, with whom Hoshea conspired against an Assyrian king.
12. One of the gods of Sepharvaim.
13. The name given by Hezekiah to the brazen serpent.
14. The plain where a golden image was set up for worship.
15. A city near "the Fair Havens."
16. What the foolish virgins omitted to take with them.
17. What St. Paul says followed the Israelites through the wilderness.
18. A woman noted for her good works.
19. What stood on either side of the bowl on the top of the golden candlestick?
20. That to which our Saviour compared the world in one of His parables.
21. Christ's promise to His disciples just before His departure.
22. One whom St. Paul says he has begotten in his bonds.
23. She who "refused to be comforted for her children."
24. The enemy who sowed tares in the field.
25. St. Paul's companion when confirming the Churches of Syria and Silicia.

Review.

"The Lord's Declaration Confirmed by Oath to Two, and to Daniel." Thoughts as to 1897. By J. W. London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street. 1893.

This is a pamphlet of only 44 pages, on a subject not exactly corresponding with that which occupies our attention in the BANNER, written by one who, as far as we may judge from the pamphlet itself, makes no reference to the Identity of the British with Israel. We notice the paper, however, because the subject is of considerable importance to us all, as pointing to a period only four years ahead of us to-day, as likely to be that of the Lord's Second Advent, "the deliverance of the Jews from their enemies, and the beginning of the reign of Christ on earth." These things are mentioned by the author on p. 13 of his pamphlet, and they invite consideration. The author does not dogmatically assert the truth of his statements, but rather puts them forward in a somewhat tentative manner, which no doubt is satisfactory. What we miss is much special notice of the Ten Tribes, while the calculations nearly all relate to the restoration and future blessedness of the Jews. We now proceed to quote some passages from J. W.'s pamphlet, which will indicate the character of his work, leaving the reader to procure and read it, since it is sure to be interesting. Concerning A.D. 1897 he writes thus (he has much to urge beside of an original kind respecting the 1,290 and 1,335 days of Daniel's vision):—

"The signs of the coming of our Lord are to many persons so apparent that we may, I think, with profit follow out the suggestion made that A.D. 1897 may possibly prove an important year in the history of God's holy people. Let us search in the revelations made to Daniel, where are found special references to the continuance and end of sorrows and desolations which had befallen and would continue to befall the holy people.

"We have in Daniel viii. such a revelation. Not only is a vision recorded, but also its meaning, as given by the angel Gabriel. In ver. 17 it is said: 'At the time of the end shall be the vision'—that is, that the evils set forth as touching the Jews would continue right through to the end. In verses 13 and 14 the duration of time from the starting-point given in the vision to the end, when 'then shall the sanctuary be cleansed,' is given as 2,300 days.

"Now, as to what is meant by the 'sanctuary being cleansed,' can there be other than one answer? and that answer, that the holy people will have then restored to them the temple area, on which to worship Jehovah, and that their city (Jerusalem) and their country (Palestine) will be for ever free from Gentile domination. The time given is 2,300 days. Now, as in the ordinary reckoning of days this would be a period of between six and seven years only, and as the sanctuary is still defiled by the tread of the Turk, while the holy people have to weep and wail in Jerusalem, kissing the stones outside the temple area, it is clear that the period indicated by this time (2,300 days) has not yet run out.

"Some writers tell us that these days have expired, and so, to make good their scheme of interpretation, they add to these days portions of the periods mentioned in verses 11 and 12 of chapter xii. How strange it is that these visions are not allowed to answer for themselves. The word is, 'How long the vision, the daily, and the transgression of desolation to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot? And he said unto me, Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed' (chap. viii. 13, 14).

"The commencing date of the 2,300 days must be sought in the vision, and not because some notable event in Jewish or other affairs in late years has happened, that event be seized upon and 2,300 years reckoned back, and so a fictitious date set up. Bible-readers have a right to expect, and do expect, that the Word of God will unfold itself so clearly that when the sanctuary is cleansed all the world will know it. All the world knows that the Turk holds Palestine now, also that the Russian would like to hold it next; but, however that may be, we have God's word that at the end of 2,300 days from some starting-point shown in this vision neither Turk nor Russian, nor anyone else but the holy people and their brethren the Ten Tribes, will hold it, for 'Then shall the Lord go forth and fight against those nations' (not against some impossible personal Antichrist), 'as when He fought in the day of battle; and His feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives.' 'And the Lord shall be King over all the earth; in that day shall there be one Lord, and His name one' (Zech. xiv. 3, 4, 9). . . .

"What period of time, then, is intended by 2,300 days? If we accept what is allowed by all, or nearly all, students of prophecy, that a prophetic day is a year of actual time, then 2,300 days mean 2,300 years, and as these are Jewish matters, 2,300 Jewish years are equivalent to 2,231 of our years. Now, where in the vision can we reckon from? In verses 5—7 we read of the 'he-goat' advancing upon and trampling down the ram of verses 3, 4. In verses 20, 21 we have the angel Gabriel explaining to Daniel what the 'he-goat' and 'ram' represent. The ram, 'Media and Persia'; the rough goat, 'Grecia.' The great horn that is between the eyes of the goat is the first king.

"Now turn to history, and find when the first king, Alexander I., entered upon his swift trampling down of Media and Persia. It was B.C. 334. Now reckon 2,300 Jewish years from this date, and we reach A.D. 1897!!

"Can it be that the words of the Lord in Dan. xii. 7, 'All these things shall be finished,' coincide as to the time when, with the words of the 'wonderful numberer' of chap. viii., 'unto 2,300 days, then shall the sanctuary be cleansed'? Does it not appear so?

"Let us now refer to another of Daniel's visions—that recorded in the 2nd chapter. Not only is the vision recorded, but the interpretation is given us also.

"The things therein shown are mostly passed into history, and as respects the four kingdoms are nearly ended. We will deal only with the duration of these Gentile powers, to which powers our Lord Jesus Christ referred when He said, 'Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles shall be fulfilled.' The starting kingdom was the Babylonish (ver. 36—38). The fourth and last Gentile kingdom is that represented by the lower part of the image and ending with the feet and toes, and which kingdom, it is taught, shall be in the latter days (verse 28).

"Three out of the four divisions are of small importance now, and the fourth division, representing the once mighty Roman Empire, is now so conditioned that it is well represented as 'feet and toes,' part of iron and part of clay—a very significant description of the present-day state of the countries; some ruled by kings with people, some by the people alone, and all more or less in a disturbed condition by reason of the difficulty as to how to meet the desires of the people.

"But does the image vision point out to us the number of years these four Gentile kingdoms shall run through? The beginning of their duration we are told in the vision. Daniel said to the king (ver. 36—38), 'Thou art this head of gold'—that is, the kingdom over which thou reignest is the head of gold. He was not the first king, and after him were others before the head of gold disappeared and the next empire ruled. But there is no time limit given in the vision as to the continuance of the four empires—these Gentile powers. And yet we who live in the latter days, and are in the time of the feet and toes, know that the term of existence is nearly ended, both from our Lord's words and also from reference to Old Testament writings.

"Now if we ask, Why were these Gentile powers permitted to rule over and tread down the 'holy people'? the answer comes to us at once, It was because of sin on the part of the 'holy people' (Dan. ix. 11—14). Refer to Lev. xxvi., read it through, and you will see at once into the meaning of the trouble and sorrow which overtook the people, and which trouble and sorrow are, we hope, so soon to be ended. We find there: "If you will not be reformed by Me, by these things, but will walk contrary unto Me, then will I walk contrary unto you, and will punish you yet seven times for your sins.' May we, then, conclude that the period of punishment under these Gentile powers is to be seven times?

"The reader will now say, Having begun by taking the 3½ times of chap. xii. as dating from A.D. 637 and ending 1897, then another 3½ times should date back from A.D. 637, and so give us a total of seven times and a starting-point for the head of gold. Well, so they do! From A.D. 1897 back seven times, or 2,520 years, we reach the year B.C. 624, the year of Nabopolassar, the father of Nebuchadnezzar. This Nabopolassar was a Babylonian by birth, a general of his army, and had usurped part of the Assyrian Empire, and had reigned over it 21 years. To maintain his usurped sovereignty, he formed alliance with the Medes, and with their joint forces besieged and took Nineveh, killed the king, and utterly destroyed the great city. From this time forward the city of Babylon became the only capital of the Assyrian Empire, and the Babylonian Empire was developed. It was in the reign of this Nobopolassar, the father of Nebuchadnezzar, that the seventy years of captivity of Judah began.

"At the time of the end of the fourth image-kingdom—that is, at the end of the seven times of punishment for the Jews—we are told, 'In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed' (ver. 44). Is not this what Jesus taught His disciples to pray for, 'Thy kingdom come'? . . ."

AN ARGUMENT FOR OUR ROMAN CATHOLIC FRIENDS TO ELUCIDATE.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

PHILO-ISRAEL.—DEAR SIR,—Your correspondent, "R.," of Devon (BANNER 862, July 5, 1893), writes in reference to some remarks of mine on Romans xi., see BANNER 750, May 13, 1891, in which it is shown that St. Paul classes all nations outside Israel as Gentiles; "Israel being represented by the good olive (ver. 11—17), all other nations as the wild olive (ver. 17).

Clearly, then, the Church of Rome must either be Israel the good olive, or Gentile the wild olive. If she claims to be the former, then our friends are bound to elucidate their position by explaining to us, who the "natural branches" are that were in St. Paul's days "broken off" (from their Church) for unbelief? (ver. 20) but who are to be "grafted in again" (ver. 24), and who are the wild olive branch that "were grafted into their Church at Rome also at that time."

If they cannot produce the required evidence, then the Church of Rome must be the wild olive branch, that was grafted on to the good olive, on sufferance (ver. 18) and contrary to nature (ver. 24), consequently dependent on the root and fatness of the good olive (ver. 17).

The Church of Rome has done exactly what St. Paul foresaw and warned them against—i.e., boasted of her superiority (ver. 18—21); ergo, the Church of Rome is not the true Catholic Church, but only the Gentile boastful wild olive branch. The nation of Israel (Britain) is the true Catholic Church, which was planted in the wilderness 1,500 years before Christ.

Identity believers are able to prove that the branches broken off from us, the good olive, for unbelief in Christ, were our brethren the Jews, but they will be regrafted at the union of the two sticks (see Ezek. xxxvii.) and that the wild olive is the Church of Rome.

The foregoing at once relegates the Church of Rome to its proper position, and must at least silence, if not convince, any reasonable thinking Roman Catholic that, according to his own Bible, his Church has no ground for her unwarrantable and dominating claims.

Yours truly,
C. R. C.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—I should be obliged if any one of your readers could recommend a good 1d. or 2d. weekly paper healthy in tone and giving reliable political news of a Liberal-Unionist character which I for one might take in for the purpose of lending to a working man's family. The Daily Graphic or St. James's Gazette would be very suitable, but (1st) a penny a day becomes rather expensive; 2nd, it is difficult to be regular in the daily distribution; and (3rd) working families have not always the time for regular daily reading.

Men, it is true, can get papers at reading-rooms. but it is very seldom that women at home have any; and if we could once introduce the taste and habit among them of reading a weekly paper, they would in turn teach their children. For how is it that our upper classes first get their education in politics? Is it not by taking up the papers they find lying about, and which they are accustomed to see their elders read? If we could get something of the same sort among our lower classes we should begin the much-needed political education.

We have no more valuable papers in our BANNER than the political editorials and extracts from newspapers, which bring subjects to our notice, we might not otherwise see or read. It has often occurred to me how much the editors of such popular papers as The Family Friend, Home Words, and Life and Work, which are largely taken by the poor, might extend the usefulness of their magazine by devoting a page to extracts from good papers on the news and events of the week or month, thereby familiarizing the working mother with her nation's present history.

Every thinking person agrees that the days in which we live are very serious, and that our whole Constitution is being threatened by those whom the people have returned to govern us. It has been done ignorantly, not wantonly, and the only remedy against its repetition lies in that often-abused word "education"—not merely school board, but political education. Every one who has a vote, and every child who is going to have a vote, must be gradually taught the responsibility this gives him, and the issues which are at stake, according as he uses it, rightly or wrongly. Of course, there are newspapers obtainable by all which would give the required teaching, but anyone visiting among the poor cannot fail to be struck with the fact that very few penetrate to the homes, and those that do are not always desirable. At every election we are accustomed to hear amusing stories, showing the ignorance of the voters. For instance, the man who declined to vote for the Conservative member because he confused him with the conservators of the salmon, and, being a salmon fisherman on the Severn, he did not like the conservators. This gives us the two guiding principles of our elections—ignorance and selfishness.

It is no uncommon thing for a man to vote for the largest employer of labour in his town quite regardless of what his politics may be or which way he will vote in the House of Commons upon Home Rule or any other Imperial question. To Anglo-Israelites especially this is all intensely sad. To us who know our nation to be God-chosen it is humiliating and grievous that our Government should be entrusted to those whose aims are narrow and selfish, for in proportion as we realize that we are the chosen nation our views become broad and imperial, our aims free from selfishness, and patriotism a duty to our God.

We are very anxious to see our Israelite views spread more rapidly, perhaps a little too anxious, for it only concerns us to sow the seed. We have no right to ask to see the harvest. It will come abundantly in God's good time. But perhaps we might indirectly help the work a little more if we strove to make our masses first understand the privileges and duties of being Britons. Until they are roused to care more about the worldly interests of our nation, how can they care about its spiritual?

I am led thus to write to you, sir, because I feel that in spite of speeches, pamphlets, and leaflets thrown broadcast among the people their ignorance and selfishness is still gross, though, thank God, there are many brilliant exceptions. We do not yet seem to have got to the root of the matter. Perhaps we have expected too much. We must be content to go slowly, to leaven gradually, and to work individually. It seems especially the duty of Anglo-Israelites to work, in however small a circle, because it is we who above all men ought to realize that mistakes in our Government and laws must not only bring inconvenience and trouble upon us temporarily, but they must hinder and retard the work which God would fulfil in our nation. Many might cease to ask Cui bono? if we could only show that Anglo-Israelism leads to the practical good of a true and unselfish patriotism.

I am, yours faithfully,

F. C. P.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—The above deals with an important matter which our readers should take into consideration and assist. The idea started by "F. C. P." is a good one, and must some day be carried out into practice. The difficulties lie in the direction of education, and the cost of it. There are several weekly papers which are doing good work, and for lack of them there are the small monthlies, like Home Words, which could be improved and rendered suitable for the purpose required. We are glad our BANNER editorials and extracts from current periodical literature are doing good. They deal with the ordinary events of the day and strive to make the reader realize that they are our own nation's fulfilment of the Scriptural destiny of the House of Israel, as promised by the God of the Bible. In all these things, the great object is to make our common people think correctly, and then act, as God would have them act, according to His will.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—Can any of your readers give me chapter and verse for the following, which I have read somewhere, as quoted either from some Assyrian monument, or from some ancient writer:—"We call them Saccaseni, but they call themselves Beth-Isaac"? A half-convinced friend said the other day that these words, if verified, would supply the missing link wanted to connect absolutely the Saccaseni with the Israelites.

Yours truly,

A. E. M.

THE Standard's Beyrout correspondent, who telegraphs about the French Ambassador in Constantinople demanding a concession for a railway connecting Beyrout, Damascus, and Aleppo, with a right to prolong it to Bagdad, sees ghosts at midday. He seems to ignore the fact that the "Syria Ottoman Railway Company," an English company carrying out at present the construction of a line between Haifa and Damascus has, according to its concession, practically a monopoly of the lines he sees already in French possession. The concession, in fact, grants for a period of 99 years' preferential rights to all lines starting from the coast between Haifa and Beyrout (inclusive of both towns), and proceeding in the direction of Damascus and Nawa, and to the east or the south of the company's railway from Akka to Damascus—that is to say, these preferential rights apply to that portion of the Ottoman Empire extending from the coast between and including Haifa and Beyrout eastwards to Bagdad and the Persian Gulf, and southwards to the Indian Ocean and Egypt, including the lower Euphrates-Tigris Valley, Arabia, Moab, Gilead, and Palestine.—The Rialto, March 11th, 1893.

PROFESSOR A. VAMBERY ON BRITISH RULE IN INDIA.

IN the answer of Professor A. Vambèry, dated Budapest University, August 19, which appeared in the Times of August 29 last, we have an independent and foreign opinion as to our nation's achievements in the East as compared with those of Russia and France in those quarters. His object in writing was to reply to General Adye's letter in opposition to the Hon. George Curzon's regarding the now much-debated question, "India between two fires"—namely, the fire of Russia on the north and north-west frontier, and that of the French in their approach to British territory on the side of Burmah and the Malayan Peninsula from Siam. General Adye made light of the matter. The professor, agreeing with the Hon. George Curzon, considers the case to be critical, and requires all the vigilance which our rulers have spent on the subject, and must yet exercise to check these two restless powers. What we particularly desire to notice is the professor's estimate of the British conquests in India, regarded from a moral point of view, compared with those of her two rivals. His remarks, which must appear in his own words, were these :—

But, apart from this, there is one point of view in the Asiatic conquests of European Powers which must not be lost sight of with politicians who are neither English, nor French, nor Russian, but simply Europeans interested in the progress of our Western civilization in the East. I beg to allude to the hitherto proved capacity of the aforesaid three European agents of our culture, and to examine which of them has done most towards the introduction of order and security in the ancient Asiatic haunts of despotism and misrule, and which of them has contributed most towards the enlightenment of the subjects submitted to their care. As long as General Adye cannot show to us hundreds of Mahomedan Algerians, either Arabs or Kabyls, who write scientific books in French, who publish French papers, and who occupy eminent positions in the political, municipal, and judicial administration of Algeria; as long as he cannot convince us of the fact that pax Gallica has wrought the same wonders in the north of Africa as pax Britannica in India; and, finally, as long as he cannot point to Mahomedan Algerians anxious to retain French rule, as a set-off to the hundreds of influential Indians who have proved their desire to retain the rule of Great Britain, so long will the ordinary European be unable to share the gallant General's opinion about the equal right of interference of European Powers in Asia.

The professor, in short, sees that the British conquerors of India have been beneficent rulers of the Hindu and Mahomedan races they have subjugated there, and that thus all who see them "must acknowledge them that they are the seed the Lord hath blessed" (Isa. lxi. 9, R.V.). We have given our subjects an education which has trained them to be able scientists and politicians. This the French in Algeria and elsewhere have failed to do. We have given India the blessings that accompany the pax Britannica, but the pax Gallica has done nothing for North Africa and its races. We have made India and its 300 millions contented with our rule and anxious to retain it, but the French to this hour have not conciliated their African subjects, but hold them down still with the sword. The professor concludes by deprecating the French advance towards Siam, if the object be in conjunction with Russia on the Pamirs to stop Britain's work of beneficence in the Peninsula of India. So doing, he declares, "the French will commit the gravest crime against the sacred cause of civilization and humanity in the East. They will hinder England from accomplishing the work so gloriously begun and splendidly continued, without being able to replace her." The conclusion arrived at by the Hungarian professor is dignified and very damaging to France while just towards our British conduct in the East. He says:—

You see, sir, the policy of France in Siam does not touch merely Anglo-French politics, but also the interests of European civilization in general; and for this reason I, who am neither English nor French, fully concur in the views enounced by Mr. Curzon in his above-mentioned paper, and

I cannot allow to pass without protest the suggestion that his political conclusions are shallow and unjust.

The British being Israel, the government of the world is eventually to be committed to their hands. The important advances we are making in acquiring dominion over the earth just now, chiefly in the East and in Africa, attracts the notice and opposition of those who hate us. The French have, we are persuaded, no love for us as a nation, since we have supplanted them, not twice nor thrice, in India for example, and now quite recently, in Egypt. They are glad to have the opportunity of recovering their lost ground in Indian territories by weakening a native ally of the British Raj, and interrupting some of our trade with Siam. The opportunity afforded at present when Russia is stealthily advancing near the northern frontiers of India, and when the Gladstone Government is in power at home, is too good to be neglected. Hence we see France straining every nerve to secure her position in Siam in order that perchance she may oust us from some portion of our splendid Empire, even though the Gates, and telegraph lines, and coaling stations throughout the East are all in British hands, and Siam lies 7,000 miles at least away from the headquarters of French power in Europe. We have no fears nationally that either France or Russia will do our nation harm as the result of the present complications. Our interests are in God's hands, who has already decided that Abraham and his seed shall be "heirs of the world," and that "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey Him" (Dan. vii. 27). We thank God then for the consolation, and though France and Russia may in collusion resolve to destroy the power of Israel in the East we trust in the living God, who has promised "to show to His people the power of His works, in giving them the heritage of the nations" (Psa. cxi. 6, R.V.). Let Israel therefore praise the Lord!

THE REV. JOHN WILKINSON ON THE RESTORATION OF ISRAEL AND JUDAH.

THE Rev. John Wilkinson, the real Philo-Israel, as he wishes to be known, spoke at the Mildmay Conference, as reported in The Christian, of July 13, last, on the last evening of its meeting. His subject was the "Restoration of Israel and Universal Blessing." If we imagine that Mr. J. Wilkinson, being one of our persistent opponents, meant by "Israel," the Jews only, we should be mistaken. He meant the restoration of Israel and Judah too. We hardly know how to understand our opponents. Most of them speaking and writing about Israel and their future glories, mean the Jews only. But Mr. Wilkinson really has wider and more comprehensive and Scriptural views. He appeals to Scripture and tells us that the restoration is to include the two Houses, Israel of the Ten Tribes, and Judah of the two, being Twelve Tribes. How near Mr. Wilkinson comes to our views as founded on the Bible, the following extract from The Christian's report will show. He said:—

Some say that Israel's mission is fulfilled, so that future restoration to Palestine is neither desirable nor possible. "Israel must be understood spiritually of the Church." This, however, holds only in the case of blessings promised. "The curses under Israel's name for Israel's many sins are still to be understood in a literal sense!" Is this kind of interpretation just? Others say that all the promises of restoration to Palestine were fulfilled on restoration from Babylon.

Let us carefully notice that we can know nothing about the restoration of the Jews or their future mission beyond or apart from

WHAT GOD HAS TOLD US.

All we can know is inside the Bible, and is God's revelation. All that is outside the Bible on these subjects is human speculation. Then, to the simple Word of God, five points in proof of a future restoration:—

1. Israel (the whole twelve tribes) is to be restored a second time. "The Lord shall set His hand again the second time to restore," etc.

2. "From the four corners of the earth" (Isaiah xi. 11, 12).

3. "No more scattered" (Amos ix. 15).

4. The promised land is still the Land of Promise. 30,000 square miles—Dan to Beersheba—was actually possessed; but 300,000 miles are within the boundaries of the land promised—i.e., twice and a-half as large as Great Britain and Ireland.

5. The land is to be differently distributed, and the tribes differently located, according to the latter chapters of Ezekiel, than was the case in any part of Israel's past history.

In regard to the following, which deals with the blessings God means to bestow upon the world by the agency of "Israel," we suppose Mr. Wilkinson had in his mind the united Twelve Tribes as the instruments God will use in the coming future, for the glorious work. At any rate what he said was this:—

Israel will be the channel and instrument of universal blessing. "I will bless thee": "Thou shalt be a blessing." To what extent? "In thee, and in thy seed, shall all the families of the earth be blessed." What is the blessing? The Gospel. "The Scripture foreseeing that God would justify the Gentiles by faith, preached beforehand the Gospel to Abraham, saying, 'In thee shall all nations be blessed.'" "Happy art thou, O Israel, who is like unto thee, a people saved by Jehovah?" (Deut. xxxiii. 29). Psa. lxvii. opens in prayer and closes in faith with reference to the blessing of the world through Israel. "Thou shalt arise and have mercy upon Zion. . . So the nations shall fear thy name, and all the kings of the earth thy glory" (Psa. cii.). The Word of God is just flooded with and of blessing to the world through Israel. Isa. ii. and Mic. iv., tell of Israel restored, the rebuilt temple, universal peace, the house of Jacob walking in the light of the Lord, and all nations flowing to Jerusalem for blessing, and from Jerusalem with blessing. "Israel shall blossom and bud and fill the face of the world with fruit" (Isa. xxvii. 6). "Moreover, the light of the moon shall be as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun shall be sevenfold, as the light of seven days; when the Lord bindeth up the breach of His people, and healeth the stroke of their wound" (Isa. xxx 26). "Break forth into joy, sing together, ye waste places of Jerusalem, for the Lord hath comforted His people, He hath redeemed Jerusalem." Now see the next verse: "The Lord hath made bare His holy arm in the eyes of all the nations, and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God" (Isa. lii. 9, 10). "For thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will extend peace to her (Jerusalem) like a river, and the glory of the Gentiles like a flowing stream" (Isa. lxvi. 12). "In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and with Assyria, even a blessing in the midst of the earth: Whom the Lord of hosts shall bless, saying, Blessed be Egypt My people, and Assyria the work of My hands, and Israel Mine inheritance" (Isa. xix. 24, 25).

The Rev. Mr. Wilkinson applies all these texts to the times of the Millennium, but we say with truth (because facts support us) that at this moment the British people are doing all these very things, before the Millennium, and, therefore, we must be Israel, otherwise called Ephraim, whose existence to-day Mr. Wilkinson does not deny. These other nations are at this very time receiving blessings universally at our hands. The Gospel and the Word of God are being, even now, spread abroad by us, among "all nations," "families," and "kindreds of the earth." We are further (to the exclusion of the Jews) enjoying all those 'floods of blessings" which the Scriptures describe as Israel's portion. Besides, Mr. Wilkinson forgets that till the Jews be restored to God's favour (which even he must admit they are not yet) "the kingdom of God was to be removed from them, and bestowed upon another nation, Ephraim by nature, and Ephraim also by name (Matt. xxi. 43; Gen. xli. 52), because that nation would bring forth fruits meet for the kingdom in question.

The following passage in the report is almost word for word the scriptural description of God's blessing reserved for Ephraim-Israel, according to our views; but Mr. Wilkinson applies all our texts to "Israel," by whom he means we are confident not the Ten Tribes, but the two represented by the Jew! The last paragraph of the extract we now give, is the cue to Mr. Wilkinson's teaching and meaning! By Israel he really means the heir of all the blessings, "The Jew."

This address opened with the words of Isa. xliii. 21, "This people have I formed for Myself; they shall show forth My praise," intimating the Divine purpose in the election and preservation of Israel. Instalments of that purpose had already been given, as (1) a knowledge of God—"Ye are My witnesses, saith Jehovah"; (2) A Bible—"He showed His word unto Jacob, His statutes and His judgments unto Israel; He hath not dealt so with any nation." And "To them were committed the oracles of God"; (3) A Saviour—"Of them, as concerning the flesh, Christ came." These precious instalments of the purpose of God in Israel were now historic facts. The purpose of God in Israel is not yet completed, for Israel is preserved at the cost of miraculous power, and God does not waste miraculous power. So we infer there must be for Israel in the future some mission commensurate in its importance with the magnitude of the miracle exercised in their preservation. That mission is that Israel shall be a channel and an instrument of blessing to the whole world.

The Gentiles can neither absorb nor annihilate Israel; but in seeking to crush Israel they not only fail, but they bring down the mischief intended for the Jew directly on their own heads, as witness Egypt, Babylon, Persia, Russia. "I will curse him that curseth thee"; "I will punish all that oppress them"; "I will take the cup out of thy hand, and will put it into the hand of them that afflicted thee"; "His mischief shall return upon his own head."

The answer to Mr. Wilkinson is this:—

1. Do the Jews show forth God's praise by exalting Him whom He sent to save them? They murdered Him on the contrary, and reject Him still!

2. Have they the knowledge of God? or witness to Him, as God their Saviour? They refuse God's remedy, and have incurred His curse!

3. "The Bible." Are the oracles of God entrusted to the Jews to-day? Has God showed them His Word, His statutes, and His judgments, as they relate to His only begotten Son? They repudiate Him and the New Testament alike to-day, and Mr. Wilkinson knows that that is the very fact!

4. "A Saviour." Christ came of the Jews, and He "came to His own." But what of that? They refused Him who came to them, and slew Him! They have for 1800 years past felt the weight of God's just punishment for that impious deed! Is God about to reward them for all this, by giving them Ephraim-Israel's work to do, the work that the British are actually doing now, and so making instead, the Jews "a channel and an instrument of blessing to the whole world"? That is not the testimony of God's Word! There we find that an Israelitish people are to "bless the nations," "blossoming and budding, and filling the face of the world with fruit," without reference to the Millennium, but before it, in the Christian Dispensation (Mark xvi. 15; Gen. xxii. 18; Isa. xxvii. 6). The Jews are disqualified for this work to-day, as they were when they slew the Lord of glory; and would not do it, even if they were fitted, and qualified by faith, in Jesus, for the work; for the kingdom of God, and all connected with it, have been taken out of their hands, and entrusted to another nation who bear all the signs of being Ephraim-Israel.

On the whole the Rev. J. Wilkinson is an extraordinary opponent. He goes a long way with us, far further than scores of our other opponents; and he sees distinctly the scriptural distinction between Israel and Judah. One thing he cannot see. He fails to discern, that having now all the birthright blessings promised to the House of Israel exclusively, we British must be Ephraim-Israel, to whom empire, power, and consecrated wealth were guaranteed, that they might be the blessing God deigned to employ for the benefit and salvation of the whole world. To Him be all the praise!

THE ISRAEL OF GOD—WHO ARE THEY?

By E. Reep.

The above question is frequently asked and put forward in the religious press. Its purport is so important that it is worthy something less vague than a mere speculative answer. At all events it calls for an intelligent reply for the special reason that the Jews are generally understood to represent the whole Twelve Tribes of Israel. This very common error is remarkable and entirely against the teaching of Scripture. A careful study of the history of the chosen people as given in Holy Writ, will show that the Hebrews were divided distinctly, from the death of Solomon, into two families or peoples. From the time they were thus disjoined they have existed to this day as perfectly separate communities, each fulfilling a divinely-alloted but perfectly separate destiny. This severance of the chosen people into two kingdoms is so utterly neglected, or so misunderstood, that we constantly have prophetic students promulgating all kinds of reflections on the approaching deliverance of the Jews from the oppression of the Gentiles, whereby is expected the fulfilment of certain promises bequeathing to them the heathen for an inheritance, and glorious and world-wide dominion over the whole earth.

But what of that other kingdom, the House of Israel, which the prophet Ezekiel tells us must be united once again to the Jews or House of Judah ere the Jews can enter into the enjoyment of the blessings of the new and everlasting covenant? (Ezek. xxxvii.). A brief survey of Hebrew history should make the matter plain to us.

When Jacob, a short time before his death, felt moved by the Spirit of God to bless his children (Gen. xlviii.) he predicted for the sons of Joseph a remarkable destiny. Ephraim was to become a nation and a company of nations, and Manasseh a great people. That such blessings should appertain to the House of Joseph particularly is a circumstance upon which light is thrown by the fact that Joseph was the inheritor of the birthright (1 Chron. v. 2) and not Reuben the eldest son, a position that involved lordship over ten-twelfths of the Hebrew nation, as demonstrated by the tribe of Ephraim being appointed head of the Ten Tribes, whose confederation took either the title of House of Israel or House of Ephraim-Israel. At the time the Ten Tribes or the House of Israel separated from the House of Judah and concerted to make Jeroboam their king (1 Kings xii.) they resolved to repudiate the temple worship at Jerusalem, and to set up in Dan and Bethel their own priesthood and their own gods. Having selected the lowest and most ignorant of the people for their priests the whole northern kingdom became joined to idols, neither the warnings nor the expostulations of inspired prophets affecting this national demoralization. Wrecked by vicious debauchery and ravaged by war, God finally punished His people by giving them into the hands of the Assyrians by whom they were deported to Assyria (2 Kings xv.) and placed in the cities of the Medes, on the borders of the Caspian Sea, and in other parts of the Empire. From this captivity they never returned to Palestine, unless it be that from time to time a few re-migrated or escaped thither.

While the House of Israel was sinking lower and lower into the depths of idolatry and social degradation, the House of Judah was even more iniquitous and transgressing. Under the figure of two sisters Ezekiel compared the iniquities of the two sister kingdoms (chap. xxiii.). Israel, the elder sister, had doted on the wickedness of Assyria and defiled herself with the idolatry of that country, but Judah had done worse things and was still more unnatural in her love of the horrible demon-like worship of Babylon. For this Judah's punishment was to be additionally painful and more prolonged than Israel's. In Israel's hand was the cup of sorrow, but from her it was to pass to Judah with the assurance that God had said, "Thou shalt drink of thy sister's cup deep and large; thou shalt be laughed to scorn and had in derision. . . . Thou shalt be filled with drunkenness and sorrow, with the cup of astonishment and desolation. . . . Thou shalt even drink it . . . for I have spoken it saith the Lord God."

To this sin of Babylonish idolatry, Judah added the selfish injustice of rejoicing in her sister's national humiliation. It was an open secret that she was envious of Israel's super-eminence and power, and therefore anxious for the destruction of the northern kingdom that she might come into possession of the whole land. But her thoughts were not God's thoughts, whereupon the prophet is directed to prophesy (Ezek. xi.) that God was for and not against the House of Israel. "Son of man," saith the Lord God, "the inhabitants of Jerusalem have said to the House of Israel, Get you far from the Lord; unto us is this land given. Therefore say, Thus saith the Lord God, although I have cast them (Israel) far off among the heathen, and although I have scattered them among the countries, yet will I be to them as a little sanctuary where they shall come. Therefore say, Thus saith the Lord God, I will even gather you from the people, and assemble you out of the countries where ye have been scattered, and I will give you the land of Israel . . . and I will give you one heart, and I will put a new spirit within you; and I will take the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you an heart of flesh."

A thoughtful study of this prophecy concerning the Ten Tribes or the House of Israel will show that we ought not to be living in expectation of the Jews or the House of Judah returning to Palestine to take possession of the land, but of the Ten-tribed House of Israel whose possession it is. Judah will only go back to the land under the protection of Israel and will there, with the Ten Tribes, become, as stated in Ezek. xxxvii., one nation, never to be divided into two kingdoms any more at all.

From this correct view of Hebrew history we have no difficulty in understanding our Lord's references to the lost sheep of the House of Israel, for whose conversion to the faith of the new covenant He affirmed He was specially sent (Matt. xv. 24). In accordance with this mission He commanded His disciples to "go not into the way of the Gentiles, but rather to the lost sheep of the House of Israel" (Matt. x. 5). Where these were to be found the first Epistle of Peter gives some important information as also the Epistle of James. By St. Peter they are mentioned as strangers, and wherefore we can easily learn by turning to the prophet Hosea.

Hosea was a prophet who dealt very distinctly with the House of Israel, and he alludes to the Ten Tribes as Lo-ammi, that is, not My people or strangers scattered abroad, divorced from the Mosaic law. Yet, notwithstanding, the children of Lo-ammi-Israel were to become as the sand of the sea which cannot be measured nor numbered; and it was also to come to pass that in the place where it was said unto them, "Ye are not My people, it shall be said unto them, Ye are the sons of the living God" (Hosea i. 10). This prophetic declaration indicates that Israel will be under the grace of the new covenant, in her home of exile, when her children are hailed as God's own sons. Where we are to look for that home of exile cannot be very briefly told if the matter is to be convincingly proved. Scripture points us to a group of islands, wherein the people are to renew their strength (Isa. xli.). These are for a period to keep silence, and to wait for the gospel message (Isa. xlii. 4) and for that inbreathing of the spirit which shall cause in the hearts of the nation and company of nations, born of Gentilized exiled Ephraim-Israel, an interior consciousness of life from the dead (see Ezek. xxxvii.; Rom. xi.). If we gaze around the whole earth to-day and wish to identify this special people, federating into a nation and a company of nations, and to place our finger on another great people of kindred race, we must go to the Isles of the West, to Britain, to New Zealand, to Australia, to Canada, to the United States of America, where we shall find the House of Manasseh indeed a great people, enjoying already the temporal blessings promised to them through Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, inheriting them in nearly the same measure as the House of Israel in her wide-spread and glorious British Empire. Britain is Israel! and it is to her that the Jews or House of Judah must look for union before they can hope to enter the promised land in peace and safety. The two families are to return together representatively, according to Jer. iii. 14, as one of a city and two of a family, at which time God will bless them and feed them with all knowledge and understanding, and will not cause His anger to fall upon them any more.—From The Sabbath Advocate, Standberry, Missouri, U.S.A., August 1, 1893.

THE DISCUSSION IN YARMOUTH, NOVA SCOTIA.

No. VII.—Anglo-Israelism.

CLOSE OF THE ARGUMENT FROM SCRIPTURE.

To the Editor of "Yarmouth Light."

Sir,—I shall begin by answering "Barrington's" questions.

(1.) "Are we a bye-word among all nations?" Certainly not, because we are "re-betrothed" to God, and thus brought within the covenant of blessing.

(2.) "Was the Jewish Church the Jewish nation?" Perhaps "Barrington" will say what he means by "the Jewish Church."

(3.) "What king of Israel was carried captive to Great Britain?" I do not know of any. Hosea, their last king before the descendants of David ascended the throne of Israel, died centuries before the wandering tribes arrived on the shores of Great Britain.

(4.) "Are we wanderers among the nations?" Our fathers were for centuries until God in mercy led them to the appointed place, even the British Isles, where they renewed their strength, and where the Empire of Israel was established never to be removed thence till it is transferred to Palestine according to prophecy.

(5.) "Did Israel of the Ten Tribes cease to be a kingdom?" Certainly for a time, for so it was foretold; but they never ceased to be a nation, and cannot, while sun, moon, and stars endure (Jer. xxxi. 35—38).

(6.) "Did not some of the Ten Tribes return to Palestine after the captivity?" History informs us (Ezra ii. 1) that the returned exiles were those which had been carried away, whom Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon had carried away unto Babylon. This statement would seem to exclude the Ten Tribes who were not taken to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar, but to Assyria by others. I have not discussed this subject with "Barrington" because it is of no importance, since, as he himself admits, Israel as a body remained among the nations.

(7.) "Were Judah and Israel to unite in Palestine under one head?" Not exactly; they were to unite just before their return. "When?" At some future time—soon, I believe. I am hoping to live to see their final triumphant return and to join in the grand procession so graphically described by Isa. xi. By-the-bye, was this prophecy fulfilled on their return from Babylon?

(8.) "Why was a sin offering made for all Israel after the captivity?" It was the custom of the Hebrews thus to remember their absent brethren. It by no means proves that any of the Ten Tribes were present, for on Mount Carmel, when Judah, Benjamin, and Levi were absent, the same thing took place.

The passages your correspondent quotes from Romans and Galatians prove that Gentile Christians are counted for a seed of Abraham not the seed (see Revised Version). They do not teach that the promises of material greatness and spiritual blessings, made to God's chosen people, have been revoked; for the apostle, in Rom. ix. 4, expressly declares the contrary. "Who are Israelites, to whom 'pertaineth' (present tense) the adoption and the glory and the giving of the covenants and the promises." Remember the Epistle to the Romans was written about twenty-five years after the establishment of Christianity. Moreover, there is a most important passage in this epistle, a passage which every Anglo-Israelite knows by heart, which settles the matter beyond dispute (chap. xv. 8, 9). "Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made to the fathers and that the Gentiles might glorify God for His mercy."

"Barrington" would persuade us that the object of Christ's coming had nothing to do with the promises made concerning Israel, except, indeed, to set them aside. Paul, however, asserts that the advent of our Lord had a two-fold object: first, to confirm the promises made to God's people Israel; and, secondly, to bring mercy to the Gentiles. Ver. 10 reads: "Rejoice, ye Gentiles, with His people." "Barrington" would reverse this divine order and bid God's ancient people rejoice with the Gentiles. He would invite poor, forsaken Israel to join the Gentile Church and share her blessings. But nowhere in Scripture is such a commission given to Gentiles. On the contrary, it is Israel who is to extend the offer of Gospel gifts and privileges to every other race under heaven, which, in fact, Anglo-Saxons are doing to-day. Thus again we see the Scriptures supporting Anglo-Israelism.

The Bible does, however, plainly teach that although the glorious promises made to Israel were never revoked; they were held in abeyance until she could lay claim to their fulfilment through faith in her Redeemer. Now, thank God, since Israel has accepted Christ, she is enjoying the promised blessings.

Again: The Church of Christ being a spiritual body, composed of every nationality, a body whose functions are spiritual, cannot possibly fulfil the destiny of national greatness promised to the one nation of Israel. Your readers have only to remember the nature of these temporary blessings to see the absurdity of supposing that the Church, as a Church, could enjoy them. Moreover, it is expressly declared that in the Christian dispensation Israel should work out the grand national destiny involved in the enjoyment of the blessings in question.

"Barrington" tells us that the Churches Peter addressed in his first epistle were composed of Jewish and Gentile converts. The very first verse of that epistle flatly contradicts him. (Read Revised Version.) Further, if Bishop Titcomb, a divine of reputation and learning, may be trusted, so do Calvin, Grotius, Bengal, Petrich, and Lowth, and others. The fact which "Barrington" points out that these Christians were formerly guilty of abominable idolatries is just what we should have expected, for so it had been expressly foretold in Deut. xxviii. 64; Hos. iv. 17 ("Ephraim is joined to his idols; let him alone"); and other passages.

Let me add an important confirmation of this view. Dr. Lightfoot, in his "Treatise on a Fresh Revision of the New Testament," shows that in the original Greek there are two words for "people," one to denote "the people of a heathen city," the other "used especially of the chosen people in contradistinction to the Gentiles." And the synonym employed by Peter, in chap. ii. 10, is, as the bishop states, of the latter character. Thus scholars are often on our side. Indeed, had I cared to follow your correspondent's example, I could have filled my letters with quotations from learned writers; but I preferred to confine myself to Scripture and reasoning.

Now, the point to be remembered is this: Peter, writing to the Ten Tribes, quotes passages from Hosea and applies them to their conversion to Christianity; consequently the Divine Spirit intended to teach, through the prophet, that whatever the Jews might do, Israel would accept the Messiah, which is what Anglo-Israelites contend for.

I forbear to expose further "Barrington's" misinterpretations and misapplications of the prophetical Scriptures; the task is becoming wearisome. Your readers have only to read Zech. x. 9, 10, and Ezek. xxxvii; 10, 11, 22, 24—28, to convince themselves that your correspondent's statement that these prophecies of a grand and triumphant return of God's people to the Holy Land were fulfilled by the small and humiliating return from Babylon, is opposed to fact.

Digitized by Google

Now, sir, in bringing the Scriptural argument to a close, permit me to make the following remarks:—

I have been unable for want of space to place before your readers a tithe of the arguments from Scripture in support of our position. To present this argument in all its fulness, I should require the whole of your first page for more than a year. Yet I believe I have made out a case sufficiently strong to convince every unprejudiced enquirer that we are indeed the "Lost Ten Tribes."

Your readers cannot but perceive that "Barrington" has passed over in silence most of the arguments in my last letter. It will be remembered that I asked him for answers to several questions of vital importance, and that I urged your readers to mark well any answers he might give. He has not even attempted to give one reply. There can be only one reason for this: Your correspondent cannot answer these questions. Why? His letters show that he is a man of ability, and of some learning, to say the least; and so far as that goes, it has been a pleasure to argue with him. But he has been defending error, and attacking truth; he has been fighting—albeit unconsciously—against the Word of God. Thus it comes to pass that the Word of God has silenced him. This explains why "Barrington" persists in occupying so much space in the discussion of subjects connected with ethnology—when, as he well knows, I have promised by-and-bye to meet him on ethnological grounds. It also accounts for too many of his remarks, which I do not care to characterize, but which I cannot help believing, if I am right in my conjecture as to his identity, are unworthy of him. This, then, seems a most fitting time to close the argument from Scripture. Sir, no man living, who is not an Anglo-Israelite, can answer the questions contained in my last letter. Should any one doubt this statement, let him take these questions to any theologian he knows and put it to the test. Now, what does all this prove? It proves that by Anglo-Israelism only does the Bible—in many of its parts—become clear, consistent and capable of a rational interpretation. Hence the Anglo-Israel "hypothesis" must be true.

Your correspondent declares that "the bottom assumption" of "my entire argument" is the "theory" that "Heaven's favourites are Israel, i.e., the British race." Let us substitute "Anglo-Saxon" for "British," and let us use this word "favourites" not in the sinister sense in which it is now often understood, viz., of those whose interests are unduly regarded to the neglect of the interests of others, but in its original unobjectionable meaning as gathered, for instance, from such passages as 1 Sam. ii. 26, Psalm xxx. 5, Psalm cvi. 4; and then let us examine this statement. I am writing for those who believe in Providence. At the annual meeting of the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade, in 1884, the late Cardinal Manning said: "I believe that above all the tumultuous currents of human will which are conflicting upon earth there is one sovereign Will reigning supreme. An empire is not built by the hands or by the skill of man. The great British Empire has been built up, not by us, but for us. We have been instruments in another Hand, and have been governed by another Will." Again, in 1880, His Eminence said in Liverpool: "When God raised up a great empire in the world, He did it for a purpose." After describing the greatness of the British Empire the speaker asked: "Was this without a Divine purpose?"

The Rev. H. Read, an American clergyman, in "The Hand of God in History," writes: "The disposition of nations is purely providential. As King of nations, God has at the present time, and for purposes we can hardly mistake, given an almost unlimited supremacy to the two most enlightened and Christian nations. England and America give laws to almost the whole world. I would rather say the Anglo-Saxon race are extending an all-controlling influence over the entire earth." After describing this supremacy and influence, the writer says: "We cannot but discern the hand of God which has given such a decided supremacy. England is the Rome of the day."

And thus spoke Canon Farrar, one of "Barrington's" favourite authors, while preaching before the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society: "Never since the world began has any nation been more splendidly equipped than Great Britain is at the present moment." Again: "The duty (of spreading the kingdom of God) arises first from the imperial position which God has bestowed upon us, and the illimitable prospects of the future which open before us." Having spoken of the spread of the English language, which he said "before another half century had passed away would probably be the language of one-third of the human race;" having said that English institutions, English speech, English thought would become the main feature of the political, the social, the intellectual history of mankind, and having glanced at the enormous wealth of Britain, which "had advanced by leaps and bounds," the Canon asked: "Having received these inestimable blessings from a knowledge of the Gospel, have we any right to keep them to ourselves?"

Sir, these great men acknowledge that our blessings do come from God; that stiff-necked and rebellious though we be, we are "Heaven's favourites," and that all these distinguishing marks of divine benediction are bestowed upon us, that with their aid we may bless mankind. This is exactly what Anglo-Israelites teach. So that our position is based, not upon "assumption" or "theory," but upon facts, which are acknowledged by all good men,—I venture to say even by "Barrington" himself, when he is not arguing against Anglo-Israelism. Now the Anglo-Saxon race having received such manifest tokens of divine favour, why get angry with us when we say: "All this was foretold in God's Word thousands of years ago? God has been faithful to His promises. He has blessed His people Israel as He said He would, and He is making them a blessing to the world." This, sir, is our only offence. Is it a great one? Do we not thus glorify God and honour His Word, and can we not with these truths press home with tremendous force the responsibility of His people?

I had hoped to close this letter by giving an account—which I am sure would be interesting—of my conversion to Anglo-Israelism. But space forbids. I will, however very briefly state some of the blessings this truth has brought to me. I am never angry, as my letters testify, with those who do not see as I do on this subject; I am only sorry for them, and pray that God may vouchsafe to them the same blessings I enjoy. I have found Anglo-Israelism a power in the pulpit; a power in social life; a source of inexpressible comfort and strength in the history of my own soul. It has made me fearless in the presence of every kind of infidelity, particularly of the subtle, poisonous scepticism of some whose profound knowledge of material nature, closes their eyes to all other truth.

Digitized by Google

It has taken from me all anxiety as to the results of the so-called "higher criticism," though it is difficult to preserve one's equanimity and patience when the "Son of man" is "betrayed with a kiss," and the Church wounded in "the house of her friends." In short, Anglo-Israelism has enlarged my mind, teaching me many things in the Bible and history I should not otherwise have known. It has given me a keen but restful interest in all that is taking place in every part of the world. Best of all, it has deepened my reverence for Jehovah, the "Holy One of Israel;" it has increased my love towards the Lord Jesus—Israel's Redeemer and the world's Saviour; it has established my faith in the Scriptures, and given me unbounded confidence in the Providential dealings of the universal Father. Is it any wonder that I wish others to share these grand blessings, and that I am sometimes enthusiastic in telling the good news that the "prodigal" has come home—that the "lost" and "wandering" one is "found?"

Yours, &c. C. F. COOPER.

From Yarmouth Light, April 6th, 1893.

LET THE CHILDREN FIRST BE FILLED.

THERE seems to be a remarkable connection between the miracles described in Mark vi. 34—44 and in ver. 47—54. In the first the Lord showed His power in feeding the multitudes, who, 5,000 in number, were "as sheep not having a shepherd," fed indeed with the Word of Life, but hungry and fainting for the lack of material sustenance. The Lord worked a miracle to feed them, and gave them the abounding earthly blessing which they needed. He thus showed His almighty power to provide them with the bread that perishes; and having done that to strengthen them for labour, He showed His disciples that having first been filled as His children, He expected them at once to work in His cause, to encounter storms and peril, contrary winds and toil, in rowing against it, apart from Him. But the Lord's compassions failed not. He was cognizant of their trials all through the night, till the fourth watch of it, towards the morning, and then miraculously came to their help, walking on the troubled surface of the lake. Even then, so weak was their faith in Him, so little did they "consider" His past miracle of the loaves (ver. 52) that they cried out for fear, supposing they had seen a spirit (ver. 49).

Here was a sin of omission, one to which Israel was always prone. They saw an exhibition of divine power in the multiplication of the five loaves and two fishes, but did not remember that He who could do that could, as God, walk on the surface of the waves as they then saw Him do before He stilled the storm and tempest. The Lord fed His people first and strengthened them. Afterwards He sent them to toil and labour that He might show them what He meant them to do; also that without Him, His presence and His help, their toil was simply vain and useless. The Lord's treatment of His servants and messengers in spiritual things is similar to this. He has work for them to do—toiling, struggling, disheartening work apart from Him, while His face seems to be averted from them. Therefore to strengthen them He feeds them first. He gives them the birthright blessings of Joseph, Ephraim, and Manasseh, to qualify them to labour for Him. He gives them population, Empire (colonial and heathen), wealth abnormal, the Gates, and therefore the supremacy of the sea, the love of souls, the evangelising function, the Bible, the Sabbath, and the laws of God, such abundance, in short, of all earthly material things that we can do nothing but humbly thank Him for His goodness to His chosen ones, and praise Him for His faithfulness to Abraham and his seed for ever. But the Lord's purposes must be carried out. He gives us—being Israel—power and ability to work, and then He points to the world lying in the wicked one, and tells us to go and labour there by preaching to them the Word of life. One by one the doors are thrown open for us to enter and to labour in foreign lands for Christ. Country after country beckons us, like the man of Macedon, to come over and help them. We go accordingly, and already there are few portions of the world where our missionaries have not penetrated, and where the Gospel has not been preached "as a witness" before the Master's advent.

It is interesting to notice how the Lord has loaded this nation with benefits and blessings to qualify them for their spiritual work, and how He has given them the birthright blessings of Joseph, which He could not have faithfully and righteously granted to us unless we were in truth "the remnant of Jacob," or the lost Ten Tribes. To Him be all the praise.

THE SABBATH AND THE WORLD'S FAIR.

THE keen discussion, prolonged for months, about the opening of the World's Fair at Chicago on the Lord's-day, has drawn attention almost universally to the Sabbath question in relation to States and other public bodies. A vast sum was voted by the Congress of the United States toward the expenses on the Exhibition Buildings, but on the express condition that the gates of the Fair would be closed on the Sabbath. This agreement, conservative of the law of the Sabbath as a divine institution, was subscribed by the United States Senate and President, and was hailed with extreme satisfaction by all Christians in America and elsewhere. But the Directors of the World's Fair, after receiving the grant from the Treasury, commenced an agitation to set aside the condition on which the "appropriation" was made. The infidelity and Romanism of Chicago united their forces in support of the agitation, which was eventually successful. One special argument was that the Sabbath revenue would be the largest of all the days of the week, and another that the closing of the gates on that day was an intolerance to all who did not acknowledge the Sabbath.

Accordingly, the gates of the Fair were opened on the Lord's-day, amid a flourish of trumpets, in honour of "liberty" and "toleration," and against "tyranny" and "bigotry." The Chicago Herald gloried in the opening as "a new declaration of independence for the rights of conscience and for religious liberty;" and the Times Democrat gloried in it as "a triumph over a narrow Puritanism, which has no place in a country as broad, liberal, and enlightened as the United States." But now, in the face of all this fanfarade to "toleration," the Directors of the Fair have recalled their decision and shut the gates on the Sabbath once more. Why? Because the opening on the Sabbath was not followed by the profitable results anticipated. The toleration "idol" has not produced a sufficient number of "Almighty Dollars" to warrant the continuation of the change. The worshippers have cast off their calf, and now they are supporters of the policy of a "narrow Puritanism" and the foes of "rights of conscience and religious liberty."

Digitized by Google

Are the Sauls of the Infidels and Romanists of Chicago among the Puritan prophets and bigoted Sabbatarians? Nay, verily. They were serving the Dollar deity all the while, and are still, for they have shut the gates because their craft was in danger. What if they now lose their lofty character as lovers of "liberty," and their craft also? A more withering exposure of hypocritical regard for "toleration" and "breadth" has seldom been brought to light.

The Protestant Churches of the States took a noble stand on the question throughout. They were satisfied that the opening of the gates on the Sabbath would be a violation of the law of God and a defiance of His authority, and they resisted the movement in every possible way. The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church resolved that the opening would be a "gross affront to the Christian conscience, and a flagrant breach of faith," called upon their people not to countenance the Fair by their presence, and decided to withdraw their own denominational exhibit. The General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church resolved that "to attend the World's Fair, in case the gates are open on the Lord's-day, would be a sin against our risen Lord, and a compromise of our Christian testimony." On the Sabbaths on which the Fair was opened, the United States official exhibits, the British, and several others were covered. All honour to those exhibitors who did reverence thus to the Son of Man who is Lord also of the Sabbath-day.

This whole discussion, with its accompanying incidents, offers salutary lessons to both churchmen and legislators. The cry of "liberty" at the expense of the observance of the law of God is hollow, and the policy that embodies it is ruinous. True liberty in Church and State can only be secured by obedience to that law which comes from the God of liberty. His throne and sceptre must be permitted to control the thrones and assemblies of the world. Otherwise, Churches and Parliaments cannot but come under Jehovah's frown. In accepting His law they take the upward path to light, liberty, and prosperity, and not the downward path to disorder and decay. "Open ye the gates that the righteous nation that keepeth the truth may enter in."—From The Bulwark, August, 1893.

Reading the above we may thank God that, after all, "Israel keepeth Sabbath," according to the prophecies, and that from whatever motive, God's will is done as declared in Exod. xxxi. 13—17, and Ezek. xx. 20.

THE OUTLOOK FOR RUSSIA AND INDIA.

FORWARDED BY J. THOMSOM.

AN article in the Nineteenth Century, for May, by Captain Younghusband, discusses the probabilities of an invasion of India by a Russian army, from a strategic and geographical point of view, and is thus summarised by the Christian Commonwealth in its issue for June 1, 1893:—

"He (i.e., Captain Y.) thinks Persia would not stand much in the way. In the friendship between England and Afghanistan he has no belief. Russia would try to turn the 'buffer' into a battering ram. The allegiance of the mountain tribes is doubtful. 'No reliance can be laid on the stability of a single one of the tribes for a single day.' The Sikhs and Ghoorkhas in the Indian army, however, are above suspicion, and the races are so mingled together as to render spontaneous desertion impossible. The Punjaub Mohammedans Pathans) are the only uncertain element. While discussing the situation with evident knowledge, no absolute conclusion is ventured on. But considering the writer's standpoint, it is satisfactory to learn that England, after securing India's internal safety, can provide 100,000 men to protect her North-western frontier. Russians are surprised to find that we can place more troops on this frontier than they can bring to its attack, or at least as many. The fatal thing would be to lower England's prestige in India by defeat or false policy. 'Neither through affection, nor by policy, but by the sword, do the English maintain their hold on India.' But, whatever the immediate result, England would win in the end. 'The resuscitative power, and the vast tenacity of purpose of the British nation will form an obstacle immeasurably more potent than mountains or rivers' against Russian advance. These 'natural attributes, sooner or later, will now, as in the past, turn the tide, and bring back victory to her (England's) standards.' Britain gave up the American struggle because of its domestic and racial character; but this will be a 'savage, sustained, unflinching conflict between two deadly antagonists, the prize being no less than the sovereignty of Asia.' This is rather cold comfort for Russia in her dream of Indian conquest, but may prove somewhat reassuring to our politicians and military authorities who are affected by Russophobia."

If this is rather "cold comfort" for Russia, does it not confirm the truth of Holy Writ, which describes Israel as a "lion," and a "young lion" (Micah v. 8): the "thousands of Manasseh, and the ten thousands of Ephraim, as pushing the people to the ends of the earth" (Deut. xxxiii. 17): while the fate of Russia is portrayed in the complete overthrow of Gog? (Ezek. xxxviii., xxxix.).

BLIND EVIDENCE FOR BRITISH-ISRAEL TRUTH FROM DELITZSCH.

THE "Behold" of Isa. xli. 29 is followed here (chap. xlii. 1) by a second one. With the former Jehovah passed judgment on idol worshippers and idols; with the latter He introduces His servant. *So Israel is called in chap. xli. 8 as a people chosen to be Jehovah's servant. The servant of Jehovah here set before us has too pronounced individual characteristics to allow it to be taken as a personified collective. Nor can it be the author of these prophecies; for what is said of this servant of Jehovah goes far beyond all within the range of a prophet's call or man's power. It is, therefore, an ideal picture of the future—the future Christ. The Sargum opens the translation of this discourse with ha avdi meshiahh—i.e., "Behold My servant Messiah." But yet a connection must exist between the national sense in which "Servant of Jehovah"† was used in chap. xli. 8, and the personal one here. The future Saviour is not described as the Son of David, as in chaps. vii.—xii. and elsewhere, but appears as the embodied idea of Israel—i.e., as its truth and reality in person. The idea of servant of Jehovah, to speak figuratively, is a pyramid. The lowermost basis is the whole of Israel; the middle section Israel, not merely after the flesh, but after the Spirit; the summit is the person of the Mediator of salvation arising out of Israel. This Mediator is the centre (1) in the circle of the kingdom of promise—the second David; (2) in the circle of the people of salvation—the true Israel; (3) in the circle of humanity—the second Adam. In these discourses, chaps. xl.—lxvi. the doctrine of salvation reaches its second stage. Israel's character as God's servant rooted in Jehovah's choice and call, and exhibited in bearing and action which harmonise with that call, is concentrated in Him, in Him alone, as its ripest fruit. God's gracious purpose in reference to humanity, which was the governing force in Israel's election, is carried by Him to full accomplishment.

THE WONDER OF BIBLE WORK.

Is not the Bible Society a wonderful fact? A great philosopher, many years ago, who was president at one of its meetings, gave a very remarkable address, in which he showed the importance of the Bible Society; he said that in the Bible Society the principles of the Reformation were, as it were, embodied before all nations—that this book is the property of all men, that in the Church of Christ all members are in direct communication with God Himself, and that it is easy for all to understand it. This Bible Society has published more than 132,000,000 copies of the Bible, and translated it into 300 languages, and seventy of these—and this a remarkable fact—languages which at the beginning of this century possessed no alphabet, and not the slightest vestige of literature. We can scarcely measure the importance of giving to a people letters, the possibility of a literature, and, to begin that literature, the Book of books. To have done this seventy times is a wonderful achievement. While the Church of Rome boasts that among all nations of the earth she is continually repeating the Mass in the dead Latin language, which appeals to no human heart, evangelical Christianity has gone forth, renewing the Pentecostal miracle, and showing the all-embracing philanthropy of our great God and Saviour.—Adolph Saphir, D.D. *

The weekly distribution of the Banner of Israel has been continued as usual, 208 copies having been sent throughout the British Empire to the places mentioned in the report last month.

Sowing the Seed.

Doubtless all who care that the knowledge of Our Identity with Israel should make good progress throughout the British dominions would be glad to read a letter lately received from one of our southern colonies, particularly as it shows more clearly than can always be possible, the necessity for Bible students and teachers, who are ignorant of Israel's existence, to be more careful in their rendering of Scripture, that their mistakes may not hinder their teaching from having the full and true influence which they desire. Also this letter shows how valuable may be our Free Distribution Fund in providing ready help when specially needed. Contributors to, and the distributors of the Fund do well to bear in mind that at any time news may come of the good seed having fallen on good ground, and a request may be in our hands to furnish at once a further supply of a variety of our literature, that as little time as possible shall be wasted before every new opportunity can be fully taken up. This makes it so necessary that our Fund should never run short. I would ask our friends everywhere to kindly try to remember this for us, and contribute as they are able. Our readers will care to know that our correspondent from whose letter I will quote is one of "a number of young men who have consecrated their lives and all their spare time to the work of the Master," and that the formation of this band of workers "is the outcome of a Revival Mission that took place over eighteen months ago" in the district where our friend resides. The time that has elapsed since the Mission was held makes us appreciate the strength of the desire that had been excited, and the reality of the faith that preserves it. And thus we see what an opening there is for all of us who will help to furnish the supplies for our Fund, that we may give to our correspondent all that he may find will be necessary to meet his requirements, for there are many whom he may be able to influence and to interest directly, and through these there will be, we may hope, others to reach, for he says, "Now there must be well on for 100 young fellows who are ready to go where they are sent to preach the gospel."

The following further quotations from the letter are worth thinking over. "Of course there are systematic classes for teaching these young men, and pointing out to them the way to study their Bible. I mention all this because I see, with the light I have got from 'Our Identity,' a great many mistakes they make. The common mistake they make is, that while God is yet going to work with Israel, He is at present choosing out a peculiar people for Himself—viz., the Church, His Bride. This way of explaining the work of the present dispensation is, I take it, dishonouring to God, and is doing a good deal of harm among the churchmen here. I have quite a number of young men in hand just now, trying to get them to see that God long ago chose His peculiar people, His Church, and that He is not now working with a new people, but with the ancient people Israel under the new name, British people. This parcel of literature has reached me at a very favourable moment. I pray that God's blessing may rest on the words of the little messengers, and that many here may ere long see who they are, and give the covenant-keeping God the glory."

There is much more of personal matter, and incidents that tell of mission work, and the value and benefit of the knowledge of Our Identity with Israel, but the space allotted for our report will not allow of further quotations; and there is one item of news for our readers this month that I am thankful to give, which is that we have the pleasure of placing on our list two missionaries of the Church Missionary Society, who, while in England last year, learned the fact of the British being Israel, and on returning to the West Coast of Africa took with them some Anglo-Israel literature. We hope now to send to them regularly copies of the BANNER OF ISRAEL, and other publications from time to time. One great hope we have in our work is, that by the better understanding of the plans of the Almighty as revealed in His Word, which are becoming clearer to our minds, there may be shown one firm ground that all Christians may rest upon, and one bond of union that shall be of power to frustrate the evil that must be present to the minds of the heathen, as they become educated and Christianized, and detect the differences and jealousies that divide the various Christian bodies and rend the Church of Christ.

E. M. RUSH, Hon. Sec.

Donations to the Anglo-Israel Free Distribution Fund will be gratefully received by the Hon. Treasurer, Miss Lawrence, Rosslyn, Hampton-road, Upper Teddington; and by the Hon. Sec., Miss E. M. ISRAEL'S SCRIPTURE AND PRAYER UNION.

THE total number of members is still 1,472, none having joined since last month.

One new card has been sent to an old member.

Miss K., of Wandsworth, has kindly sent 2s. 6d. towards the funds, also Mr. R., Hull, 1s.

It is hoped that during this month some will join us, and that all will pray for God's guidance during this time of trouble for our nation.

The new Card of Membership has a list of chapters for the whole year, also suggestions to members, prayers, etc. It is of a size convenient for keeping in the Bible, and will be sent on receipt of 6 stamps. It is hoped that all the members will send for one.

The first and second series of Monthly Comments on the whole Bible, by Philo-Israel, may be obtained. Price, in paper cover, 1s. 2d. each; in cloth 2s. each, post free.

The "Prayers for Daily Use," being a prayer for each day of the week, by Philo-Israel, are 1d., or 9d. per doz., postage extra. Address — The Secretary, Israel's Scripture and Prayer Union, British-Israel Association, 86, St. Martin's-lane, London, W.C.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel.

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—I enclose a slip from the local paper, Bay of Plenty Times, describing a movement that is perhaps worthy of our attention. The dissatisfied emigrants from Sydney to South America are, unless I wrong them unintentionally, some of those who were engaged in a very fierce strike some months ago, almost amounting to armed insurrection. Three or four of the leaders got sent to prison, hence the dissatisfaction.

The noteworthy part is the quiet tide which seems to be flowing into South America from our folk. I constantly hear of well-to-do young men going there to farm, and then there are the Welsh colonies in Patagonia, and now these New South Welshmen going to Paraguay. On the whole, it looks as if the "Monroe doctrine" would shortly put on a new aspect; for, if anything like a community of our race should be established in South America, we know that Spaniards cannot bear rule over them.

The 12th of July, that day of great deliverance two hundred years ago, finds us now in sore perplexity and humiliation. I earnestly wish I felt as sure as you do that the Fenians are Canaanites. Yours truly, HUGH STEWART.

P.S.—Please note for information of Secretary of Free Distribution Fund that the town in New Zealand, sometimes printed Te Aroka, should be Te Aroha. I believe it means "love." Many Maori names are untranslated.

"THE NEW UTOPIA.

"The scheme for founding a new settlement in Paraguay by discontented Australians is beginning to assume practical proportions. Fifteen hundred persons have already enrolled themselves, and three times that number are expected to follow suit. The promised land is on the South American plateau in the Dominion of Paraguay. Its nearest point is within fourteen miles of a railway, and its seaport is Buenos Ayres. According to report, the climate is paradisaical; it is never too hot and never too cold; it is never too dry and never too wet. The people who are embarking their fortunes and their future in the enterprise have already served an apprenticeship to hard work, and some of them have had the discipline of disappointment under the Australian order of things; therefore they are not children in the business. We have had a good deal of experience now of colonization in Australia, and it all goes to show that every attempt to establish a new and detached settlement meets with its greatest difficulties at about the end of the first year, at which time the imported capital has usually become exhausted, while the productive powers of the soil have not been sufficiently developed to maintain the population. Our greatest successes have been by the expansion of existing settlement; and the easiest, quickest, and most profitable method of exploiting mother earth has been by pastoral occupation. The foundation of Victoria and Queensland illustrate our successes; South Australia and West Australia, which were both detached settlements, blundered into difficulty at first, and then through difficulty struggled into success. The promoters of New Australia put their principal faith in the new theory of colonization which they hope to illustrate. It is a semi-socialistic scheme, and, as it is to be worked out by the patient labour of the co-partners without confiscating the property of any persons or classes, and without violence or any revolutionary procedure, there are not a few who will wish it every possible success. Even those who do not believe in it will watch its unfolding history with the keenest attention. Old Australia will feel quite a paternal interest in New Australia, and will not be wanting in congratulation if the child adds fresh renown to the ancestral name. Many schemes of the kind, though they have been failures at first, have been made successful by indomitable energy in spite of the defects of the initial theory; but in this case the prospects will depend to an unusual extent on the moral quality of the co-partners. The district to which the emigrants are going belongs to what may be considered the revolutionary area; but, as the New Australians will have 700 square miles all to themselves, they will perhaps be able to keep out of these disturbances or count in just as they like.

"In connection with the above from our Australian contemporary, we gather the following from the New Zealand Herald:—The New South Wales built barque Royal Tar has been critically surveyed at Sydney by Captain John Vine Hall, surveyor to the Emigration Department, and Mr. M. Ritchie, shipwright surveyor to the Marine Board. The vessel was found to be sound and good in the hull. As has been stated, she is to take the first batch of emigrants to Monte Video under the New Australian scheme. Before she can leave, however, extensive alterations will have to be made to her to meet the requirements of the Emigration Passengers' Act. A number of workmen belonging to the New Australian Association are at work on board, under the direction of a master shipwright from Mort's dock. Between decks have to be laid, cabins erected, and all the details incidental to the requirements of passengers carried out. These alterations will be pushed ahead, though of course they will necessarily take a good deal of time. Captain Logan, formerly of the ship Riversdale, has been appointed to the command of the Royal Tar.

"THE FRIGHTFUL CATASTROPHE."

THE Standard newspaper of August 1st, and no doubt previous and subsequent issues also, contains under the head of "Personal" advertisements an alarming one as what is in store for ourselves as part of this recreant nation in the near future. There is going to be "a frightful catastrophe for England." It is to be "a dire calamity." The authority for the anticipation is Daniel's prophecy of the ten kingdoms, of which Britain is to be one. But the worst of the matter is that in spite of all the history of the past, France is going to "subjugate" the British people and "humiliate" us, and then, after our subjugation, France is to become our leader (?).

The ten kingdom alliance under France is to obliterate the present triple alliance of Germany, Austria, and Italy, and all this is to happen before April, 1894 ("or at least soon after"!), and will be the outcome of a great victory France is to gain over the European kingdoms. Within six months, therefore, from the present month of October, 1893, we may expect stirring times and to see the assumption by the French of dominion over Great Britain, besides the loss of Ireland, India, the colonies, and we suppose the Gates too, and, in fact, the complete effacement of all the signs by which we have hitherto been enabled to prove to the world that the British are Lost Israel. It is satisfactory that less than a year will suffice to put us out of our misery and to prove to the world that the British are not Israel, but that (we suppose) the French are.

But this is not all. The advertiser in the Times, whose doctrines are the doctrines of the Rev. M. Baxter, of the Christian Herald, proceeds to tell us even the amount of the indemnity which the conquering French will kindly put upon us to seal our degradation and stamp us beneath their feet. We shall be called on to pay over to France 100 or 200 million pounds stirling. Why the figure is not put down at 500 millions we cannot imagine. The reasoning is this: As the French had to pay conquering Germany 200 millions in 1871, so we must pay France—a larger sum? No, perhaps a smaller, but not a larger. This is a kindness unexpected from the Frenchman who really has no cause to love us. We are to come to these conclusions respecting France because not one person in ten thousand Englishmen realises that "the French navy is nearly equal to the English," and that while we have in these islands only 100,000 regular soldiers, the French Government have three millions, and that only a few hours' voyage from Britain. Then follow the other reasons we always have paraded for our discomfiture—namely, that our commerce is in all the seas, that two-thirds of our food and raw material comes to us from abroad, and therefore we are "defenceless and vulnerable to the last degree."

The wonder, of course, is that at this moment we can call our souls our own, and that even now a French Government has not superseded that of Mr. Gladstone in St. Stephen's; also that we are resting "carelessly and confidently" in our isles. The advertisements in the Standard are to the following effect:—

"A FRIGHTFUL CATASTROPHE overhangs England, a dire calamity is impending over the British Isles Daniel's prophecies dictinctly show that Britain is soon to be humiliated and subjugated by France and to be one of Ten Allied Kingdoms under the leadership of France as prefigured by the ten-horned Wildbeast and ten-toed Image in Dan. vii. 24 and ii. 31—the ten kingdoms being FRANCE, BRITAIN, SPAIN, ITALY, AUSTRIA, GREECE, EGYPT, SYRIA, TURKEY, AND THE BALKAN STATES. This decuple or ten-kingdomed Alliance will entirely obliterate the present Triple Alliance of Germany, Austria, and Italy. To produce this predestined ten-kingdomed Confederacy before April, 1894 (or at least soon after), which is the time apparently indicated by Daniel's dates, there must soon be a great European conflict in which France is to gain the victory, and annex the left bank of the Rhine (just as it is now annexing the left bank of the Mekong River in Siam), and produce great changes in the map of Europe. Daniel's prophecies point to the probable accomplishment of such a European war before April, 1894.

"SUCH a CONQUEST of BRITAIN would result in the practical independence of Ireland, and the levying of a payment by Britain to France of an indemnity of one or two hundred million pounds, just as France paid two hundred million pounds in 1871 to Germany. English people, of course, laugh at such predictions as these; but not one in ten thousand Englishmen understands that the French navy is nearly equal to the English, and that only 100,000 regular soldiers are in the British Isles, while three million French soldiers are in France, only a few hours' voyage from Britain. England's commerce scattered all over the seas, and its dependence upon foreign lands for two-thirds of its food supplies and raw material for its manufactures, render it defenceless and vulnerable to the last degree."

This unpatriotic and wild scheme proceeds on several assumptions which have no basis in fact or history. It ignores the existence of the stone kingdom of Israel, which both in Dan. ii. 34 and vii. 24—27 is represented as existing while the ten-horned or ten-toed kingdoms came into prominence. In declaring that Britain is one of the ten kingdoms, the facts of history are set aside. These ten kingdoms were to come into view when the Roman Empire broke up. It did so about A.D. 410 to 530, and we ought to be able to recognise Britain at that period as a "kingdom." It was not a kingdom till the time of Egbert in A.D. 827 or 300 years after the fall of the Roman Empire, and it had not received its final Norman contingent till A.D. 1066, or five centuries after Rome collapsed. It is certain, then, that Britain was not a Roman "toe" or "horn kingdom," and whatever nations were such, Britain was outside the fatal body politic.

Mr. Baxter's scheme of prophetic explanation being thus founded on error, need occasion us no anxiety. There will be no "frightful catastrophe" for our nation in the near future. France can and will do us no harm. She will not conquer or humiliate this nation. Two hundred millions of our money will never be paid to France as the price of our degradation. She will never lead us to destruction as one of the ten-kingdomed confederacy; and as to our navy, the French have a very respectable dread of its power to venture on hostilities with us. If the disparity were greater than it is between our navies and hers, or our soldiers and hers, let Mr. Baxter know that we trust not to the men, the money, or the ships which God has given us in such great abundance, but in Israel's God alone. Being Israel, "the stone kingdom," we know that universal dominion is reserved for us, and so far from putting us under the feet of France, God has given us assurance in Dan. vii. 27, the very chapter Mr. Baxter quotes, that "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven (being God's gift to whomsoever He assigns it), will be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom and all dominions shall serve and obey Him."

The French are not that people, but the British, as we have often proved, are. To them, but not to the French, is assigned the glorious destiny of being "the head and not the tail," "above only, but not beneath," "set on high by God Himself," "above all the nations of the earth, as declared in Deut. xxviii. 1, 13, because they are Israel, "obedient" in Christ Jesus to all the commandments of the Lord their God. To Him be all the praise.

THE BIBLE AT GIBRALTAR.*

THE port of Gibraltar is a place of call for ships of all sorts, and sizes, and nationalities, and the total number of vessels which put in here in the way of trade, and owing to mishaps and disasters, is very large indeed. Hither come the magnificent floating palaces of the Peninsular and Oriental and the Orient lines, carrying their hundreds of passengers who travel surrounded by all the refinements and luxuries of first class hotels; the fine vessels of the Anchor line, together with passenger steamers of all grades; here, too, are to be seen the black and grimy colliers, which bring the fuel necessary for the multitude of ships that come here to renew their stocks; and here, too, gathers a vast fleet of what are called ocean tramps, to receive the orders which shall send them flying in various directions for the supply of man's many wants. Riding side by side to some mammoth steamer is seen the adventurous little schooner, laden with salt fish, that has found its daring way from the inhospitable shores of Labrador or Newfoundland, and the tiny felucha which scours the coasts of Spain and Morocco. Here, too, shelter is found for the trim built yacht with its party of pleasure or health seekers bound for a jaunt in the Mediterranean, and the little ketch that comes here to exchange French, or Jersey potatoes, with maize, or beans from Morocco. And as with ships so with men. Men of all nations and ranks and characters. The prince and the empress, the duke and the merchant, the millionaire and the pauper; the man from the slums and the man from the country fields. The student of human nature has a wide field of observation open to him in visiting and working amongst the heterogeneous crowds that come and go to and from this port, engaged in the pursuit of pleasure, or of business, or in the work of manning these many ships.

Here, indeed, you have an omnium gatherum of all nations and kindreds and tongues, and you may listen to the accents of most of the languages of the world. Now and then, chiefly in sailing ships, is found a man who after fifty years of salt water, begins to think he has had enough of it, but still dreads the idea of being laid up like a sheer hulk, and next to him perhaps is a lad who has scarcely got to know blue water. Here are men who have worked their way up from before the mast to command their vessels; men who have come down in the world, and taken to the sea as a last resource; men who have never been high enough to sink much, and men who hope to rise in the world; white men and black men, and men of no particular colour jostle each other, men who have had hair-breadth escapes, who have known what it is to have their ship founder under them, who have seen their ship beaten to pieces on rocky shores, who have had to make a sudden moonlight flitting, and leave their ship to escape the inexorable waves, and men who have been going the same round voyage for years with scarcely an adventure.

My work here as chaplain to the seamen in the Port of Gibraltar has brought me face to face with a very large number of men of very many nationalities and of very various characters. I have visited in the course of the year considerably over 1,700 ships, and have addressed the crews to the number of over 10,000 men, British, Americans, Scandinavian, Spanish, French, German, Italian, and Greek, with a fine sprinkling of Dutch. I have distributed amongst

* During most of the past year the Society has had a colporteur, an old soldier, at Gibraltar. He reports a cordial reception from many. His morning work has been generally at the Kiosk; in the afternoon in the barracks and the married quarters.

them a large quantity of literature in the shape of illustrated tracts, and papers of various kinds, and have given or sold many Bibles and portions of the Holy Scriptures in all these languages.

Many seamen are great readers. In fine weather they often have a good deal of time on their hands, and reading forms a valuable resource for many of them, and if they are not supplied with wholesome literature they are apt to fall back upon such as is, to say the least not wholly unobjectionable. From my experience amongst them I am disposed to think that they are a very teachable body of men, very grateful for any little attention shown to them, often, it must be confessed, very thoughtless and careless about religious matters in their daily life, and yet willing to lend a ready ear when these matters are pressed upon them. Their indifference, perhaps, is due more to the harassing conditions of their life and the anxious and precarious nature of their calling than to settled unbelief.

Many of them make a point of bringing their Bible to sea with them, and are ready to ask explanations of passages which appear to present difficulties. Sometimes they are disposed to start objections—some want to know why a new Bible, as they term it, referring to the R.V., should be required, and a new light has dawned on them when I have explained to them the reasons which made a revision advisable. Some are anxious to impress upon me the fact that they have a Bible of their own, but for some cause or other—and a cause may too often be found in the condition in which they are when they go on board—have left it at home; many have their Bibles with them and use it; others have it with them, but keep it stowed away in their boxes. I have met with ships, but few, the captains of which are in the habit of holding prayer meetings on board when at sea. If more captains could be induced to observe this salutary custom I am sure it would prove beneficial both to the captains themselves and their crews. Difficulties there are, of course, in the way, but none that a little tact could not overcome.

An incident which happened to me here soon after I came to take up the work impressed me with a sense of how important the work might be made. A ship came into port with several of her crew ill with malarial fever; they had buried at sea one of the officers a day or two before they arrived, and some of the crew found their way to my room and asked me to give them a Bible, for they had none on board and had to bury their shipmate in silence. This seemed to affect them greatly; they had been content to live without it, but could not bear the thought of burying their comrade without it.

On board some of the coal-hulks the master lives with his family, and I found them anxious to be supplied with copies of the Holy Scriptures, and diligent in reading them.

Sometimes, but not often, one meets on board ship a man who has taken up with the doctrines, or rather the ignorance—the negation of all doctrine—of the Atheists, Agnostics, and so on, and who have a few of the stock phrases at command, but these men do not readily find sympathy with their fellows, and are themselves capable generally of being reasoned into a better mind. I remember, in particular, a man plying me with quite a number of quotations, which he evidently thought were quite unanswerable, but he seemed to be quite taken aback when I took his objections seriatim and answered him from the common sense point of view, and showed him that most of the objections had been answered over and over again and been proved to be fallacious. Another man boasting of his exploits among his comrades, and how he had been successful in darkening counsel, I was able to convince and made him acknowledge that there were other aspects of the question which he had lost sight of.

But as a rule seamen are very impressionable and not without the religious instinct, though with very many of them it is little more than an instinct, and has been but little cultivated owing to the conditions of their lives, but still it remains true of seamen in general now-a-days, as in the times of the Psalmist, that they see the works of the Lord and His wonders in the deep, and that they cry unto the Lord in their trouble, as many landsmen content themselves with doing, and if they are not very regular and constant in their religious exercises, I have seen displayed amongst them conspicuous examples of the manly virtues of honesty and straightforwardness, and unselfish consideration for others. THE ANTIQUITY OF MASONRY

AN article by Rev. W. M. Porteus, in the Freemason of August 27th, 1892, calls attention to the antiquity and ubiquity of Masonry. The principles of Masonic Order, he observes, emanated from the Eternal, at the same time stating that amongst the oldest Grand Masters or interpreters of these principles, figures Khufu, the Cheops of the Greeks, the builder of the Great Pyramid.

But who was Khufu that to him should have been entrusted the construction of what is believed to be the most remarkable building in the world? By some it is deemed to have been built in the days of Seth, in which case Masonry must indeed be of venerable antiquity. This hypothesis is supported on a fairly satisfactory basis.

First, we have what must have been an oral tradition, and which is recorded by Josephus (Antiq. I. ii. 3), of the building of two pillars in the Sethite epoch, one of stone, the other of brick, the one of stone being designed to hand down to future ages the mysteries and symbolism of the science of geometry.

Secondly, we have evidence to be derived from an Egyptian source, viz., the Book of the Dead. In this very ancient ritual of the Egyptians Seth is the great enemy of Osiris and the persecutor of his worshippers. This bitter enmity of Seth against the Osirian cult is in agreement with the account given by Herodotus of the conduct of Cheops while superintending the work of building the Pyramid associated with his name. All the temples, according to Herodotus, were closed, and sacrifice to Egyptian gods forbidden; but if we take Brugsch as an authority, Khufu or Cheops was by no means the monster Herodotus has painted him. Curiously enough, in Egyptian mythology Seth is shortened to Set. This is interesting and moreover significant, the word set being said to mean in Hebrew, as well as Egyptian, pillar, and in addition that the name Seth written phonetically was ST, with a stone or flint as the determinative of the sound.

As the Pyramid of Cheops is regarded as one of the oldest works of man, and as a structure containing in its measures of capacity the monumental history of the world, great interest attaches to the opinion that in all probability it is the pillar of witness referred to by Isaiah (chap. xix. 19, 20). From this chapter it would appear that not until the so-called latter days was the true and full significance of this stone memorial to be understood as a sign and duplicate of the love and wisdom of the Great Eternal. This revelation of what was obviously a pre-determined mystery also seems to depend upon the regeneration of Egypt and the Egyptians. With this healing of afflicted, down-trodden Egypt is associated chosen Israel, whose mission is to make herself a blessing in the midst of the land. Wherefore many devout students of Cheops' masterpiece are to be numbered among those who believe in the lineal descent of the British race from the seed of Joseph, upon whom was conferred the birthright blessing, first promised to Abraham, of multiplying into a nation and a company of nations, just as the British are doing to-day in their colonial expansion to the uttermost parts of the earth (Gen. xlviii. 19; xvii. 6).

The imperial federation of the British peoples into a group of nations is very remarkable, and is a subject calling upon British Masons for investigation. At the same time, they will do well to give their attention to Prof. Piazzi Smyth's important work—"Our Inheritance in the Great Pyramid"—a production that fully confirms the belief that in the very heart of Egypt is preserved the foundation of the rights and privileges of the ancient order of Masonry.

THE DISCUSSION IN YARMOUTH, NOVA SCOTIA.

No. VIII.—ANGLO-ISRAELISM.

REPLY TO THE REV. C. F. COOPER.

BY BARRINGTON.

To sum up the argument already presented—(1) the evidence of ethnology, so conclusive, so indisputable in its ablest, universally accepted authorities, declares that we are of the Aryan race; then (2) the evidence as to language, civilization, and religion of our earliest history, both in Asia and Europe, make it manifest that we cannot be Israel, but are Aryan; and (3) the evidence of authentic historic records declares that we are not and cannot be Israel after the flesh. All of which most conclusively prove that Anglo-Israelism is :—

"The extravagancy
And delusion of vain fancy."

One more of the many delusive, exploded theories, of fancy bred, as to the Lost Tribes, to perish of inherent weakness, as rootless fictions.

There is further evidence to show the falsity of Mr. Cooper's fad.

I.—The Jewish nation was the Jewish Church. "A kingdom of priests, and an holy nation" (Exod. xix. 6). "Called by the name of the Lord" (Deut. xxviii. 10). "Jacob is the lot of his inheritance" (Deut. xxxii. 9). "His peculiar treasure" (Psa. cxxxv. 4). "My chosen" (Psa. lxxxix. 3). "This is he, that was in the Church in the wilderness" (Acts vii. 38). The Israel of the State was the Israel of the Church. Being so: "I have made a covenant with My chosen" (Psa. lxxxix. 3). "He hath not dealt so with any nation" (Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20). "Unto them were committed the oracles of God" (Rom. iii. 2). Who? "The Lord's portion," the "Church in the wilderness." A nation, a Church! Is that true of Britain? If not, why does Mr. Cooper apply the word Israel to the nation, and ignore the relation that gives the word meaning? Empty the word of its Scriptural and spiritual contents! Israel is not only a name but expresses a relation; and that relation does not exist when used of the British nation as a nation!

II.—The predictions and promises of the old covenant, "pertained to a spiritual rather than a literal seed" (Dr. Rankin). "The children of the promise are counted for the seed" (Rom. xi. 4—8). Who are they? "Now, we brethen—i.e., all Christians—as Isaac was, are the children of the promise" (Gal. iv. 28). "If ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise" (Gal. iii. 29). "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed" (Gen. xxii. 18). "And to thy seed which is Christ" (Gal. iii. 16). "They which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham" (Gal. iii. 7). "In thee shall all nations be blessed. So, then, they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham" (Gal. iii. 8, 9). "Fellow citizens;" "fellow heirs of the same body;" "partakers of his promise in Christ by the Gospel" (Eph. ii. 19, iii. 6). Thus (1) the promises pertained to a spiritual seed; (2) "believers are the heirs;" (3) "the Christian Church is Israel, and is heir of the promises" (Dr. Rankin). "The Church is the Israel of God" (Dr. Schaff). "The true Israel of God" (Professor A. B. Bruce). Conclusion: Anglo-Israelism may be classed with the stuff that dreams are made of.

III.—The old economy was preparatory to and superseded by the new and better covenant. "Behold, the days come . . . that I will make a new covenant with the House of Israel, and with the House of Judah" (Jer. xxxi. 31—33). "In that He saith a new covenant He hath made the first old" (Heb. viii. 8—13). The old covenant was embedded in material blessings, conditioned upon obedience" (Deut. xxviii. 1—14). That to "a chosen people," "a special people unto Himself above all people that are on the face of the earth" (Deut. vii. 6). The new covenant is of a kingdom of "grace and truth," "spirit and life." An inward law and rule; with its principles of love, truth, and righteousness. "Universal," "everlasting" (Dan. vii. 14). Its essential condition, "Righteousness:" "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness" (Matt. vi. 33). The King on "David's throne" (Luke i. 32; Acts ii. 30) is the "Mediator of the new covenant" (Heb. xii. 24). "For a world" (John iii. 16). "There's neither Jew nor Greek" . . . "for ye are all one in Christ Jesus" (Gal. iii. 28). "The work of Christ was not for the children of Abraham but the children of Adam" (Dr. Stalker's "Life of Paul," page 58). "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself" (2 Cor. v. 19).

"He is Lord of all" (Acts x. 36). "Hath the key of David" (Rev. iii. 7). "Head over all things to the Church which is His body" (Eph. i. 22). Possessing "all judgment, to administer the affairs of nations as well as the Church" (John v. 22—27). The subjects of His kingdom, "saints" (Col. i. 12). His "Israel of faith" (Dr. Liddon), the "Church of God;" the Israel of Christ. "I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel" (Matt. viii. 10); the Israel of Paul (Gal. vi. 16). Of whom Christ is Head (Eph. i. 22).

Thus—(a) the old covenant is fulfilled in the new; (b) the Israel of old, i.e., the Church, is perpetuated in the Israel of the new covenant, under new conditions, wider relations; (c) all race privileges and distinctions are abolished; (d) the "Mediator of the new covenant" is King on "David's throne," and "righteousness" is the foundation and glory of His kingdom; an "everlasting kingdom;" spiritual, eternal; (e) a kingdom "of whosoever will," "unto all," for "there's neither Jew nor Greek." Why? "For ye are all one in Christ Jesus." All of which sets at naught Mr. Cooper's impotent and decrepit theory.

IV.—"The kingdom" was established among the "lost sheep of the House of Israel." "Christ's own ministry almost entirely, and that of the apostles for years was limited to them" (Dr. Rankin). "But go rather to the lost sheep of the House of Israel" (Matt. x. 6). Did they "go and preach the kingdom of heaven is at hand" to those barbarians (Tacitus), of the "Jotun-festival," clad in skins, in their northern home? Or to those "Phœnicians of the south of Ireland?" Or to those "Celts of Britain?" Were they at Jerusalem by representation, when Peter said: "Ye men of Israel?" (Acts ii. 22). When "three thousand accepted the kingdom," were they of the clad in skins, sea-wolves House of Israel (?) that Paul said: "It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you; but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles?" If Mr. Cooper's answer be, that was said to the Jews, then Israel must be in the Gentiles!" Mr. Cooper's Israel must be in either Jews or Gentiles! "Is He the God of the Jews only? is He not also of the Gentiles?" (Rom. iii. 29). "Jews first and also to the Gentile" (Rom. ii. 9). "Whether we be Jews or Gentiles" (1 Cor. xii. 13). That's Paul's classification. Mr. Cooper has a choice. He can place his Israel in either Jews or Gentiles. Paul puts himself as an Israelite with the Jews (Rom. ix. 24). Rom. xi. 1, calls them his brethren, also "my kinsmen according to the flesh" (Rom. ix. 3). His prayer for them, Israel, being "that they might be saved" (Rom. x. 1). Brethren, Jews, Israelite. That's plain, but Mr. Cooper will deny it. Be it so. Paul is against him, and that is sufficient. Well! among Paul's brethren Christ first established His kingdom (John ii. 23; iv. 39—41; vii. 31; viii. 30; x. 42; xi. 45; xii. 11; xix. 42; Acts ii. 41—47; iv. 4, 32; v. 14; vi. 7; xi. 21; xii. 24; xiii. 43; xiv. 1). They with all who believed were the Israel of God.

Mr. Cooper's last is just to hand (Friday, 7th), of nearly three columns, and to go over it point by point is out of the question, if this is to be published in your next issue; but, happily, there is little that calls for an answer. For the sake of brevity and on account of little space, I will classify Mr. Cooper's last.

I.—His experience. "I am never angry." Neither is a Mahomedan, if true to the teaching of the Koran; therefore Mahomedanism is true! Count Tolstoi: "Resist not evil, I am never angry"; therefore my theory of Christianity is true! Joseph Barker, secularist, "I am never angry, therefore my secularism is true!" Queer logic! "Some of the blessings this truth has brought me. I am never angry," &c. Ergo: Anglo-Israelism is true! That's a fair example of Mr. Cooper's position. The modesty of his statement, "I am never angry," &c., calls for no comment.

II.—His answers. Question asked: (1) "Are we a bye-word among all nations?" His answer: "Certainly not." We are re-betrothed to God. Paul says of Israel: "Blindness hath happened in part." Where's the betrothal? "A bye-word among all nations." That was not fulfilled in the Babylonian captivity! Then as we are Israel after the flesh according to Mr. Cooper, and we were to be scattered, is it true of Anglo-Saxons?

Then question 2: "Was the Jewish Church the Jewish nation? Answer: "Perhaps Barrington will say what he means by the Jewish Church." Reply: "The Church in the wilderness" (Acts vii. 38).

Question 3: "What king of Israel was carried captive to Great Britain?" Answer: Says Mr. Cooper, "I do not know of any." Then does Deut. xxviii. 36, refer to the first dispersion? If so, how was ver. 37 fulfilled in that dispersion? And ver. 59, "plagues of long continuance!"

Question 4: "Are we wanderers among the nations?" Reply: "Our fathers were," &c. The fathers, those "sea-wolves, clad in skins, fierce, hard drinkers, and Woden-worshippers." God led them to the appointed place, i.e., British Isles. Christ said: "led away captive into all nations" (Luke xxi. 24).

Question 5: "Did Israel of the Ten Tribes cease to be a kingdom?" Mr. Cooper's answer: "Certainly, for a time," &c. "They never ceased to be a nation." Reply: "And within threescore and five years shall Ephraim be broken that it be not a people" (Isa. vii. 8). "Ephraim is smitten, their root is dried up . . . My God will cast them away . . . and they shall be wanderers among the nations" (Hosea ix. 16, 17).

Question 6: "Did not some of the Ten Tribes return to Palestine after the captivity?" Answer: Mr. Cooper's explanations and answer, if they mean anything, mean No! "And their seed whether they were of Israel" (Ezra ii. 59); "And the children of Israel" (vi. 16). "Ye shall be gathered one by one, O ye children of Israel" (Isa. xxvii. 12). "I will gather the remnant of Israel" (Micah ii. 12).

Question 7: "Were Judah and Israel to unite in Palestine under one head?" Answer: "Not exactly; they were to unite just before their return." That's Mr. Cooper's answer. That return as a united people he puts in the future; "soon, I believe." That is after Israel has stolen Palestine and gored the nations. A procession of war and plunder in the name of the Lord! But "two" the word! "No more two nations" (Ezek. xxxvii. 16—22). "In those days the House of Judah shall walk with the House of Israel," &c. (Jer. iii. 18). "Appoint themselves one head" (Hosea i. 11). That they did. Mr. Cooper says, "the sin offering made for all Israel after the captivity does not prove any of the Ten Tribes were present." "And the children of Israel, the priests," &c. (Ezra vi. 16). The ideal Israel is understood, but Ezra tells us they were present! So we shall, with all respect to Mr. Cooper, accept once again the Word of God.

III.—Mr. Cooper's replies. The reference to seed was to prove that the promises had reference to "a spiritual rather than a literal seed," and that seed was (1) Christ; then (2) all who accepted and believed in Him. And the conclusion is the Church is Israel. Mr. Cooper confounds God's providential relations with the nature and spirit of the kingdom. He tries hard to run race privileges into a kingdom of a world. Hence his confusion.

Mr. Cooper claimed 1st Peter was addressed to the Ten Tribes. My answer is it was "addressed to Churches composed of Jewish and Gentile converts." He says the first verse flatly contradicts me. Yes! I read the Revised Version before writing. Now what about it? Were not proselytes Gentiles? Were they not elect? Were they not of the dispersion? Were they not sojourners, i.e., pilgrims? Mr. Cooper knows full well that Grotius wrote Jews.

As to Calvin, Bengel, and Lowth, I question if they sustain Mr. Cooper's contention. If it were written to Anglo-Israelites, our fathers, either in Asia or Europe, were they a holy nation of the Woden-worshippers? could it be said: "Peace be with you all that are in Christ Jesus?"

Barnes, Scott, Wetstein, Eadie, Michaelis, and Professor A. B. Bruce, all with Farrar, declare that Peter addressed his letter to believers of Jewish and Gentile origin.

Dr. Lightfoot's explanation proves nothing as to the Ten Tribes as Ten Tribes; and certainly nothing as to Anglo-Israelism. There are four words in Greek translated people in the New Testament. The sense of the passage gives the meaning in its connection. In 1 Peter ii. 10 the meaning is evident: "In time past were not a people." Paul in Rom. ix. 24, 25, cites the same passage (Hosea ii. 23), and writes Gentiles.

IV.—Mr. Cooper's vain and reckless assertions. The Gibraltar of Anglo-Israelism is in certain questions. Mr. Cooper in divers forms has run them through all his letters. He says, "I have not even attempted one reply." He must have winked hard at that! That I cannot answer them, no man living can, except in Mr. Cooper's way. Also that the Word of God has silenced him, i.e., Mr. Cooper's misinterpretation. What silenced him? As Mr. Cooper very modestly assumes both judge and jury, his self-glorification is but a natural conclusion. Your readers are the jury and to them I bow, without either parade or claim for some learning.

Selden said: "Great men are not always wise." Every question of Mr. Cooper's has not only been answered, but his untenable position been made manifest. His questions are based upon the assumption we are Israel; that the Ten Tribes were as Ten Tribes preserved; that the conditions of a covenant fulfilled are in the new covenant, of a kingdom and a world, in which all distinctions of race are abolished. That is the ground of his entire position, which is one of pure assumption. Prove that as a race we are not Israel; that Israel were not as a Ten-tribed nation preserved; that the new covenant of the kingdom has abolished the local and preparatory; that Israel after the flesh are the Jews; that the Church is the true Israel of God, and what then? The ground of Mr. Cooper's questions taken. And that has been done. Further, in the dialect of Anglo-Israelism, the vital questions are called identities, and your readers know the worth of Mr. Cooper's reckless assertion.

I am kindly informed that "unconsciously I am fighting against the Word of God." In other words, on account of ignorance, I am fighting against God; and, therefore, all who reject Anglo-Israelism are ignorant fighters against God. Dr. Schaff, Canon Farrar, Dr. McLaren, Dr. Geikie, and the leading scholars of our age, ignorant and fighters against God! That's Anglo-Israel light and sweetness! The genial fruit of Mr. Cooper's most holy faith, which is such a comfort to his soul.

We are told all good men acknowledge the deemed facts of Anglo-Israelism. Therefore, not to do so in Mr. Cooper's judgment is not to be a good man! Dr. Schaff, Dr. McLaren, Professor Willis Beecher, Professor A. B. Bruce, according to Mr. Cooper's logic, are not good men! Such wisdom and charity are some of the grand blessings of that most holy faith.

As to the supremacy of the Anglo-Saxon race in many particulars, that is unquestionable. And as to God's hand in history that is the faith of Christendom; but to tack on to all the delusive theory of Anglo-Israelism, that is the absurdity. "The legs of the lame are unequal."

WHICH IS THE TRUE CHURCH?

By JOHN R. MITCHELL.

GOD says of Israel, This people have I formed for Myself, so that in the original meaning of the word Israel is the Church, and the Church is Israel, that is conclusive! It is true that in Old Testament times as now, there were appointed ministers to conduct the religious services, but neither the priests under the law, nor the clergy under the Gospel, with their immediate followers can be exclusively called "The Church," and although the religion established by the law of the land must be the religion of Christ, the nation being Israel it does not follow (I speak as an unworthy member of the Church of England)—it does not follow that the religion of Christ is confined to the body known as the Church of England or to any other body. The true apostolic succession about which there has been so much dispute is national, not sectarian, and what is more, a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof.

In order to continue the thread of our enquiry, we have now to look around us and pass through our minds the different nations and their religions, to see which of them has taken up the position that was assigned to Israel to fulfil; and if we find one that answers to the description, that one must of necessity be the one we are in search of. The two-tribed House of Judah, although acting as one of the witnesses under the law, is as a matter of history ruled out of the argument, being still under the curse, which I trust will be removed in the near future. The descendants of Abraham through Keturah, although not idolaters, do not fulfil the necessary requirements, neither do the Turks or any of the Asiatic or African nations, therefore we must look to Europe, and if the tree is to be known by its fruits, endeavour to find it in this quarter of the earth. Russia comes first. What is the fruit of that Church? Ignorance, superstition, and picture worship; a people whose condition is only a little above slavery, under the rule of a despot, and is so little in accordance with the blessed promises to Abraham, that we can pass it by without further comment. The next on the list, and the most formidable claimant, is the Gentile Church of Rome, that mixture of iron and clay which in time will be broken up and blown away as chaff from the threshing floor, but which although dead as to political power, yet exerts a baneful, and I regret to say, an increasing influence in religious life. Can it be possible that this powerful body is, as the Romanists claim it to be, the one true Church? Look at its antiquity! it claims to have been founded by St. Peter!

Rome is stated to have been the headquarters of Christianity from the beginning of Gospel preaching! Its popes and its cardinals have ruled kingdoms, and kings, and peoples, from its beginning even unto now. Romish convents, monasteries, churches, and schools are springing up even in this Protestant England in all directions. Its teachers work with unflinching energy, and spare neither time nor money in their endeavours to overthrow their only successful opponent, the grand old Church of England. Which, then, of these two rival claimants is the true Church of God? I have already given you the answer from the Word of God, which is truth, and if these two Churches are both Gentile Churches, the answer is, Neither of them. The reply may not be flattering nor acceptable, but it is true! God hath not cast away His people, He is still God, His word still stands, and Israel still exists, and if we are only Gentile, the inevitable result is, we must wane and pale before that people whom He who is Truth has said shall be His people and He will be their God. There is a time to speak and a time to be silent, and I speak these words, however unpalatable they may be, because I have within me that conviction which tells me they are true, and that however we may dislike or rebel against that which does not always coincide with our own wishes, truth will stand notwithstanding.

Let us, however, pass in short review the actions of these rival churches. And where is Rome at the outset? It claims, I believe, that St. Peter founded the Church at Rome, but the Church Christian was founded at Jerusalem, and I have my own doubts if St. Peter ever was at Rome. Again, there is no freedom in that Church, only an unbearable system of intolerance. Who shed the blood of the early Christian martyrs from the very beginning? Christians who, as I have already shewn, were principally Israelites in the reign of Nero, A.D. 64, were looked upon with suspicion and dislike byall classes of society; they were seized, tortured, and executed, they were torn to pieces by dogs, were affixed to crosses to be burned and used as lights to dispel the darkness of night when daylight had departed. The torture of the burning shirt to which the Christians were subjected is mentioned by several classical writers. It was besmeared and interwoven with pitch and other combustible materials, and the poor wretches stood burning in their own flame and smoke, their heads propped up by stakes fixed under the chin, till death relieved them from their agonies. In A.D. 258 Valerian issued the Edict: Let all Christian bishops, presbyters, and deacons be put to death by the sword, while all Christians in the service of the palace were compelled to labour in chains on the Imperial Estate. In Syria and Egypt they were chained to a stake, a moderate flame was applied to the soles of their feet till the contracting muscles were torn from the bones; lighted torches were applied to their legs, while water was dashed over their heads and shoulders to prevent their dying too soon; yet with all this the liberty of the soul was maintained by these martyrs in spite of torture and death.

Look at the actions of Rome in Spain, with its horrible Inquisition, and the auto da fe's, the massacres in France and Germany, the martyrdoms in England—but why continue these horrors? What is the condition of the countries at the present moment who are under the "spiritual" power of Rome? Spain, once at the height of power, now only a fifth rate power, abounding in ignorance, darkness, and idolatry; Mexico worse; Italy idolatrous and superstitious to the core; France nearly infidel; and unhappy Ireland in rebellion; while in this land, wherever the baneful influence of the pope is felt, is seen bigotry and ignorance hand in hand, with the priest the king of the family. Yet although they have denuded the decalogue of one commandment, worship the virgin and bow down to idols, and dishonour God by the infallibility of the pope, they claim to be the one true Church, and place their traditions by the side of a distorted Gospel to prove it. Truly they will have to go to the Lord and say, "Our fathers have inherited lies and vanities, and things wherein there is no profit."

Then as to the so-called continental Protestant Churches. What are they as Churches, and where is the show of their fruit? With their Sunday theatres, games, and pastimes for the people, is not their religion a hollow mockery and a sham? We Gentile Saxons, as we have been taught to think we are, come to this conclusion: But who are we as Gentiles that we should extend our pity to, or judge the actions of our continental Gentile brethren, if, as is written of us, we are to be found liars unto Israel? At the least we might well practice the modesty of silence, for, if Gentiles, we have a common lot—viz., decline, failure, and obscurity. In these arguments, please understand I am dealing only with nations, and not touching on any man's safety as an individual. Thank God there are thousands and thousands even in the Church of Rome whose faith in the blessed Redeemer has saved them. It does not yet follow that because a man is an Israelite that that fact saves his soul, for in the old days, when they were the chosen nation and their own kings reigned over them, they were known as a stiff-necked and rebellious people. But the time will come when they will be all righteous from the least to the greatest of them, and they will have no occasion to teach their children to know the Lord, for they will all know Him when that happy day arrives; then also will many and strong nations be joined to the Lord, and peace will reign supreme. How necessary, then, it is for us to use our utmost endeavours to forward the advent of these events, and to identify the people who will be the means of bringing them to pass. Oh, say some, God will do it in His own good time. Yes, He will; but He says He will be enquired of before He does so; and we are expressly commanded to give Him no peace, day or night, till He make Jerusalem a praise upon the earth. I confidently challenge any man, be he who he may, who can show me from the Bible that universal peace will ever reign on the earth till after Israel is acknowledged.

RANDOM SHAFTS.

THE books of Ezra and Nehemiah are thought to be "dry," but I have found them very instructive, and specially luminous on one particular point. The Ten Tribes have been entirely out of touch with Mosaic influences for two or three thousand years, yet it is considered supreme folly to suppose that they could have relinquished so many of their Israelitish characteristics even in that length of time. Of course, there are plenty of cases in which nations have abandoned their own habits and adopted those of foreigners. But then they were Gentiles, and we are told that Jews do not act thus. It is here that the chroniclers supply a want. The Jews proper were severed from their native land (though not from their priesthood) for seventy years; and the narrative of their re-settlement in Palestine shows clearly that they had forsaken much of their Hebraism during this short time. That they had lost their language, as well as some of their customs, has often been exhibited, and Neh. xiii. 1—3 indicates that they were beginning to forget their history.

"On that day they read in the book of Moses in the audience of the people, and therein was found written that the Ammonite and the Moabite should not come into the congregation of God for ever, because they met not the children of Israel with bread and with water, but hired Balaam against them, that he should curse them. . . . Now it came to pass, when they had heard the law, that they separated from Israel all the mixed multitude." This passage does not raise the inference that the Jews were wilfully disobeying God's injunction, but suggests that the conduct of Ammon and the divine command which followed it had faded from their memory. Seventy years is a mere fraction in comparison with two thousand five hundred, and seeing that the Ten Tribes were virtual pagans at the date of the captivity, there is little room for expressions of amazement or amusement at the changed exterior of the British.

Another instance of Jewish fickleness is revealed in ver. 23, 24: "In those days also saw I Jews that had married wives of Ashdod, of Ammon, and of Moab: and their children spake half in the speech of Ashdod, and could not speak in the Jews' language, but according to the language of each people." This aroused the indignation of Nehemiah, who "contended with them, and cursed them, and smote certain of them, and plucked off their hair, and made them swear by God." The Jews went to Babylon speaking Hebrew; they came back speaking Chaldee; and in a brief space they were on the verge of assuming the tongue of their hated enemies the Philistines. And the Jews are represented to us as a people who cannot be torn from their Hebrew groove!

Those who dispute Our Identity with Israel on ethnological grounds put childlike faith in the statements of ancient authors, always provided that the statements are against us. They seem to think that a sentence from a Greek or Roman writer about the origin of nations is something which nobody has the right to doubt, evidently unaware that the classical fraternity are often very far astray in their notions. It would do these opponents good were they to read Tacitus on the derivation of the Jewish race and name. We have to remember, also, that Tacitus was not a third-rate but a first-rate historian; esteemed learned, accurate, and conscientious. "His 'Annals' were the most important of his works. . . . The treatise on the manners of the Germans and the life of his father-in-law Agricola, are perfect, and cannot be too highly admired, but his history of the reign of Tiberius may be considered as his master-piece" (Beeton's Encyclopædia). "It is as an historian that he has acquired immortality" (Ibid).

Having satisfied ourselves as to the standing of Tacitus, let us mark what he relates of the Jews,—a community who dwelt in every city, and whom he might easily have consulted had he chosen. "The Jews, we are told, escaping from the island of Crete at the time when Saturn was driven from his home by the violence of Jupiter, settled at the extreme parts of Libya. Their name is adduced as a proof. Ida, it is alleged, is a well-known mountain in Crete, and the neighbouring Idæans, by an addition to the name to adapt it to the language of Barbarians, are ordinarily called Judæans. Many state that they are the progeny of the Ethiopians, who were impelled by fear and detestation to change their abode in the reign of King Cepheus. It is alleged their religious institutes were handed down by the Idæans who were expelled from their country with Saturn and were the founders of the nation" (Lassalle, 391). There is the usual grain of truth in this disquisition, along with a mass of error, and if historians could make such gross mistakes respecting a people so notorious as the Jews, why should they be reckoned infallible when dealing with races of which they knew nothing except by legend or rumour?

The Christian Commonwealth's Special Logician has been again discoursing upon the lost but never lost at all Ten Tribes. In August there appeared the result of an interview with Esther the Nestorian, which was prefaced by a few pregnant remarks on the matter in hand, one of them being that if the Nestorians are descended from Israel the Ten Tribes were never lost at all. The Editor is plainly rather proud of this wise saw, and he should be sure that the copyright of it is secure, as editors of a similar calibre may wish to pirate it. Proceeding, the eye is arrested by a line in big type, "The Lost Ten Tribes Found." It is impossible to disregard the cheering news, but on perusing the paragraph we learn that it has to do with the Israelitish paternity of the Nestorians.

This is really a disappointment, because our Special Logician has already told us that if the Nestorians are Israelites the Ten Tribes were never lost at all, and how are they to be found until they are lost? Besides, the Nestorian "find" is as old as the hills, and it is wrong of the Christian Commonwealth to play with our feelings in this way. But every journal tries to have a strong feature of its own, through which it may triumph over its rivals, and perhaps the distinctive feature of the Christian Commonwealth is to discover what never was lost, and to discover it regularly. The line in big type, however, is one of many symptoms that, while our critics pretend to treat the Identity with superior indifference, they are eager to parade the slightest incident which in their opinion may help to stem its progress.

The information drawn from Esther Abraham is interesting, and it will be doubly interesting to those who are acquainted with what has gone before. A couple of months earlier the Commonwealth gave swift publicity to her declared belief that the Nestorians were sprung from Israel, and its editorial columns trumpeted the idea that this claim was a sort of death-blow to the British claim. My dull comprehension did not see it, and I invited our opponent to ask the lady whether she was or was not herself in favour of Anglo-Israelism, an invitation which I happen to know was brought under the Commonwealth's notice. Now, the interviewer did not spare his curiosity, for he obtained her age, but he carefully avoided putting the question he was solicited to put. It may indeed be rash to assert positively that the question was not propounded, for if it was, and the reply did not suit, we can be certain that it would remain in modest obscurity. But he has either omitted to make the enquiry or suppressed the answer. We must not fail to observe that the paper's printed motive is 'for the advocacy of good and right and truth." A fine, broad phylactery, well fitted for the market-place. But, as of yore, unless the truth is sweet to the taste, it will receive an extremely cold welcome from bawling professors of good and right.

JOHN SHOOTINGHAM.

LEICESTER BRITISH-ISRAEL IDENTITY ASSOCIATION.

THE winter series of lectures, &c., held in connection with this association every season commenced on Tuesday, Sept. 12, when we were favoured with a visit from Col. H. Senior, of Clifton, who gave a couple of most interesting and convincing lectures. In the afternoon a meeting was held in No. 3 room, Temperance Hall. Mr. J. Norman presided, and the attendance was good, the subject of the lecture being, "The Restoration of Israel and the Second Advent." Col. Senior dealt with it in a very able manner, and was listened to with marked attention throughout. Several questions were asked and satisfactorily answered, and a hearty vote of thanks accorded for the lecture.

In the evening the meeting was held in the Holy Trinity parish room, kindly placed at our disposal by the vicar, the Rev. E. Grose Hodge. The chair was taken by Mr. H. Beckwith, president of the association, who briefly stated the position assumed by British-Israelites, and introduced the lecturer. Col. Senior alluded to the exceptional interest attached to the lecture from the fact of its being the first time that an illustrated lecture had been given upon the Identity. The subject selected was, "Lost Israel Found on British Ground; or, Some Evidences of the Fulfilment of God's Precious Promises to Israel." It was illustrated by numerous excellent limelight views. The pictures were exceedingly good, and added very materially to the interest of the lecture, which contained quite a fund of information with regard to the various parts of the British Empire. Apart altogether from the Identity, the lecture is an admirable one, presenting to Englishmen in a most striking manner something of the magnitude, the position, the power, and the influence exerted by the "empire upon which the sun never sets." It was highly appreciated by the large audience assembled, and we would heartily recommend kindred associations to secure the services of Col. Senior to give a repetition of the lecture. A vote of thanks was accorded by acclamation, and the meeting closed with the doxology and benediction.

It should be mentioned that valuable assistance was rendered by Mr. T. Palmer, who kindly manipulated the lantern. That gentleman has had large experience in that direction, and we were fortunate in securing his friendly help on the occasion. Col. Senior also expressed, through the president and secretary, his indebtedness for the help rendered by Mr. Palmer.

Taking advantage of Col. Senior's visit, local friends, Mrs. Donesthorpe and family kindly arranged for a drawing-room meeting at their residence on the Wednesday afternoon. Seventy invitations were sent out, and a fair number responded. The Rev. Carnegie presided, and a very lucid and practical address was given by Col. Senior, which elicited many enquiries, and a general discussion ensued, calculated to create investigation into British-Israel truth.

The officers and members of the Leicester association have been much encouraged by the unqualified success of Col. Senior's visit. They feel sure the spirit of inquiry is aroused, and they are looking forward hopefully to one of the most successful seasons they have had.

ENIGMA No. 7.

INITIALS of the names, &c., referred to below, give a descriptive title of Israel, alluded to by St. Peter, showing that they differed from the Gentiles amongst whom they then dwelt.

1. A city where St. Paul found an altar "to the unknown God."
2. The man who put Jeremiah, the prophet, in the stocks.
3. A man from whom Abraham bought a field and cave for a burying place.
4. That from which Christ redeemed His people Israel.
5. That which the "Deliverer" was to turn away from Jacob.
6. What St. Paul says is the fulfilling of the law.
7. The last named of the places from which Isaiah says God will recover Israel.
8. A city of Benjamin where the priests dwelt.
9. The damsel who recognised Peter's voice when he knocked at the "door of the gate."
10. A religious observance amongst the Jews in commemoration of their deliverance from the slaughter ordered by Haman.
11. A people greatly addicted to drunkenness.
12. The residence of the Nethinims, in the days of Nehemiah.
13. The father of Asenath, Joseph's wife.
14. The place from which Solomon obtained cedar and other woods for the temple.
15. One spoken of as "profane" for despising his birthright.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—I have taken the liberty of enclosing you a slip from the Canterbury Times (printed at Christchurch, New Zealand) of June 22, last. It is the Canterbury Times' London correspondent's remarks on "A Song of the English," by Rudyard Kipling, celebrating the opening of the Imperial Institute. The lines which I wish to draw your attention to, I have marked, and are:—

> In the day of Armageddon, at the last great fight of all,
> That our House stand together and the pillars do not fall.

Is Mr. Kipling an Anglo-Israelite? Would one be wrong in supposing that he is. I think you will be pleased to know that there are many believers (in this district) in the British and Americans being the Lost Tribes of Israel. Two of us joined together, and have been subscribers to the BANNER OF ISRAEL for some four or five years. I sent to London for Dr. Wild's two works, and I have lent them to my neighbours, Mr. Scott, and Mr. Lloyd; two of my neighbours did the same with other works. And Mr. Lloyd, I think, never misses an opportunity of speaking about the Identity, especially to the clergy. We are no believers in Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule Bill, and we hope it will not become law, indeed, I do not think it is God's purpose for it to become the law of the land. You would be surprised to know with what interest the question is watched here, indeed in New Zealand generally. I am sure my own neighbourhood would not hear of the Bill at all; it would have no show.

We are having a great deal of wet weather in this part of the colony just at present, and in some parts it is making the stock suffer very much. Wishing you God's blessing.

I remain, yours truly,

JOHN A. GUY.
An Anglo-Israelite.

A SONG OF THE ENGLISH.—RUDYARD KIPLING'S NEW PATRIOTIC POEM.

[From our London Correspondent.]

London, April 28.

The "Song of the English," with which Mr. Rudyard Kipling celebrates the opening of the Imperial Institute, appears in the current English Illustrated Magazine, which has greatly improved under the Arnolds' management. It is a stirring and spirited poem, written with the almost arrogant national pride which pulsates through every line of "The Flag of England" in "Barrack Room Ballads." The publishers warn newspapers not to outrage copyright by annexing the "The Song of the English" entire, but do not object to extracts. The poem opens with five stanzas in italics in the following manner:—

> Hear now a song—a song of broken interludes—
> A song of little cunning: of a singer nothing worth.
> Through the naked words and mean
> May ye see the truth between
> As the singer knew and touched it in the ends of all the earth!

Then come six verses in characteristic Kiplingese, called

THE COASTWISE LIGHTS.

> Our brows are bound with spendrift and the weed is on our knees;
> Our loins are battered 'neath us by the swinging, smoking seas.
> From reef, and rock, and skerry—over headland, ness, and voe—
> The Coastwise Lights of England watch the ships of England go.

* * * * * * * *

Come up, come in from Eastward, from the guard-ports of the Beat up, beat in from Southerly, O gipsies of the Horn! [Dawn!
Swift shuttles of an Empire's loom that weave us main to main,
The Coastwise Lights of England give you welcome back again!

THE SONG OF THE DEAD

which follows is introduced thus, in italics:—

Hear now the Song of the Dead—in the North by the torn berg-edges—
They that smile still to the Pole, asleep by the hide-stripped sledges
Song of the Dead in the South—in the sun by their skeleton horses,
Where the warrigal whimpers, and bays through the dust of the sere river-courses.

Song of the Dead in the East—in the heat-rotted jungle hollows,
Where the dog-ape barks in the kloof—in the forake of the buffalo-wallows.
Song of the Dead in the West—in the Burrens, the pass that betrayed them,
Where the wolverine tumbles their packs from the camp and the grave-mound they made them,
Hear now the Song of the Dead!

The dead English describe the struggles of the pioneers, explorers and settlers—

I.

As the deer breaks, as the steer breaks, from the herd where they graze
In the faith of little children we went on our ways.
Then the wood failed; then the food failed; then the last water dried—
In the faith of little children we lay down and died,
On the sand-drift—on the veldt-side—on the fern-scrub we lay,
That our sons might follow after by the bones on the way.

Follow after—follow after, we have watered the root,
And the bud has come to blossom that ripens for fruit!
Follow after, we are waiting by the trails that we lost
For the sound of many footsteps, for the tread of a host.
Follow after—follow after, for the harvest is sown:
By the bones about the wayside ye shall come to your own!

and dilate on the cost of our admiralty of the sea.

II.

We have fed our sea for a thousand years
And she hails us still unfed,
Though there's never a wave of all her waves
But marks our English dead.

We have strawed our best to the weed's unrest,
To the shark and the sheering gull.
If blood be the price of admiralty
Good God, we ha' paid in full!

After this come twelve strong lines in praise of

THE DEEP-SEA CABLES.

The wrecks dissolve above us; their dust drops down from afar—
Down to the dark, to the utter dark, where the blind white sea-snakes are
There is no sound, no echo of sound, in the deserts of the deep,
Or the great grey level plains of ooze where the shell-burred cables creep.

Here in the womb of the world—here on the tie-ribs of earth
Words and the words of men flicker and flutter and beat—
Warning, sorrow and gain, salutation and mirth—
For a Power troubles the Still that has neither voice nor feet.

They have wakened the timeless Things; they have killed their father Time,
Joining hands in the gloom, a league from the last of the sun.
Hush! Men talk to-day o'er the waste of the ultimate slime,
And a new Word runs between; whispering, "Let us be one!"

The "Song of the Sons," calling on the Mother Country to hear them speak, is followed by voices from the chief Indian and Colonial cities—

THE SONG OF THE CITIES.

Melbourne—

Greeting! Not fear nor favour won us place,
Got between greed of gold and dread of drouth,
Loud-voiced and feckless as the wild-tide race
That whips our harbour-mouth!

Sydney—

Greeting! My birth-stain have I turned to good;
Forcing strong wills perverse to steadfastness;
The first flush of the tropics in my blood,
And at my feet Success!

Brisbane—

Me the flood ruined. Let me clear my eyes
And shake from gown and hair the spate-borne weed.
Patience! I turn me and my land shall rise
Richer than theirs indeed.

Hobart—

Man's love first found me; man's hate made me Hell;
For my babes' sake I cleansed those infamies.
Fighting for leave to live and labour well,
God flung me peace and ease.

Auckland—

Last, loneliest, loveliest, exquisite, apart—
On us, on us, the unswerving season smiles,
Who wonder 'mid our fern why men depart
To seek the Happy Isles.

Finally comes

ENGLAND'S ANSWER.

Truly ye come of The Blood; slower to bless than to ban;
Little used to lie down at the bidding of any man.
Flesh of the flesh that I bred, bone of the bone that I bare;
Stark as your sons shall be—stern as your fathers were.
Deeper than speech our love, stronger than life our tether,
But we do not fall on the neck, nor kiss when we come together.
My arm is nothing weak, my strength is not gone by;
Sons, I have borne many sons, but my dugs are not dry.
Look, I have made ye a place and opened wide the doors,
That ye may talk together, your Barons and Councillors—
Wards of the Outer March, Lords of the Lower Seas,
Ay, talk to your grey mother that bore you on her knees!
That ye may talk together, brother to brother's face—
Thus for the good of your peoples—thus for the Pride of the Race.
Also, we will make promise. So long as The Blood endures,
I shall know that your good is mine: ye shall feel that my strength is yours:
In the day of Armageddon, at the last great fight of all,
That Our House stand together and the pillars do not fall.
Draw now the three-fold knot firm on the nine-fold bands,
And the Law that ye make shall be law after the rule of your lands.
This for the waxen Heath, and that for the Wattle-bloom,
This for the Maple-leaf and that for the Southern Broom.
The Law that ye make shall be law and I shall not press my will,
Because ye are sons of The Blood and call me Mother still.
Now ye must speak to your kinsmen and they must speak to you
After the use of the English in straight-flung words and few.
Stand to your work and be strong, halting not in your ways,
Baulking the end half-won for an instant dole of praise.
Stand to your work and be wise—certain of sword and pen,
Who are neither children nor gods, but men in a world of men!

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—May I ask, through the BANNER, your correspondent "E. H." in your last issue, if he is correct in the "initials" of the Christian name of Mr. Phillips, who he says preached, on July 30, a splendid (what I call) blind Identity sermon. Is it T. B, or J. B.? The reason I ask is, there used to be a J. B. Phillips, who was some years curate at Christ's Church, Pennington, Leigh, near Manchester, and whom I have heard preach some splendid "blind Identity sermons." The Rev. J. B. Phillips was, a short time since, at St. Michael's Hulme, Manchester. I think, "curate-in-charge." If it be the same clergyman, I shall have further remarks to make.

Faithfully yours in Israel,
JAMES COYLE.

BELUCHISTAN, THE WESTERN GATE OF BRITISH INDIA.

UNDER the above title we have an article in the Scotsman of August 19th last, which we were glad to read. We hardly see, however, how Beluchistan can be the Western Gate of the whole peninsula, when Bombay is already in that position. The province may be described as the Western Gate of Northern India, or the North-western Gate of the British Indian Empire. It is remarkable that this secular writer describes a strategic country like Beluchistan by the Scriptural term, "a Gate," and adds to the Western Gate the names of three other spots which he terms the Eastern Gates of our mighty Empire in the East. "The Gates of his enemies" was the gift of God to Israel; but it is wonderful that even our blind witnesses in the secular press of the day can find no better word than this to describe the frontier defensive positions, which enable us to hold our Indian Empire against all intruders and to consolidate our power in the peninsula itself. The Scotsman's article was as follows:—

The telegram from Simla which announces the enforced abdication of the Khan of Khelat, and the accession of his eldest son, whom he hates, brings to an end a long career of cruelty and misrule in a manner honourable to the clemency and self-restraint of the British Government. Beluchistan, of which Khelat is the capital, is the hilly and desert region, the size of Prussia, which is encircled by India, Afghanistan, and Persia, and is open on the south to the Arabian Sea. Alexander the Great, on his return from the Punjab, marched through the land, while his admiral, Nearchus, coasted it from the Indus, right up the Persian Gulf, to the Euphrates. To the Greeks it was the country of ethyophagi and date-eaters, memorable for sand and thirst and misery, and ever to be shunned. But they pierced it, because it affords the shortest route between India and the north. For the same reason, the territory is of such value to Great Britain that it has been made a commissionership, or protectorate, to complete with Afghanistan the ring-fence of our Eastern Empire, the "buffer" between us and Russia. The line of Indo-European telegraph runs through it, protected by treaty, and we have connected its principal fort of Quetta by two railways with our Indian system, lines to which a third loop is about to be added, while all converge at Chaman, some sixty miles south of Kandahar. Beluchistan is the western, as Chilas, Gilgit, and Cashmere form the eastern, Gate of India. Arrested by the second Afghan war and the diplomacy at Penjdeh, so that she meanwhile leaves the western approach to the south alone, Russia is busy on the eastern line from the Pamirs southward, and her position there is still the subject of negotiations.

When the Crimean War was threatening in 1854, Lord Dalhousie, the Governor-General, made a new treaty with the Khan of Khelat to strengthen our influence on that frontier. Nusseer Khan renewed his obligations to oppose all the enemies of the British Government, to act in subordination to it, to enter into no negotiations without its consent, and to receive British troops into his country whenever we should deem that to be necessary. On condition, further, that he would keep the peace internally and on our Sind and Punjab frontier, would protect merchants and prevent trade exactions beyond certain specified duties, Lord Dalhousie guaranteed His Highness an annual gift of 50,000 rupees. During our troubles in the Mutiny this able Khan was poisoned, and he was succeeded by his half-brother, Khodudad Khan, then an imbecile youth. The cruelty and the crime which marked his accession to power have attended his whole career. Suspended for a time under the personal influence of the late Sir Robert Sandeman, who kept him in power from the wrath of his chiefs, the mad bloodthirstiness of the Khan burst out again on Sir Robert's death. Asiatic annals, from Constantinople to Kabul and Peking, may be described as records of cruelty tempered by assassination and revolution. We doubt if any Asiatic State at any time can show such a series of murders and murderous outrages as those by which the deposed Khan has made away with wives and children, ministers and servants. The facts will never see the light out of the records of the Calcutta Foreign Office. The half-million of people who maintain a conflict with nature in the pastures and deserts of Beluchistan, and carry its very considerable trade to and from our Karachi port with patient toil, are to be congratulated on the brief announcement that Meer Mahmood, Khodadad's eldest son, has been recognised by the Viceroy of India as his successor, while "the position of the State remains otherwise unaffected." They are Mohammedans of the orthodox type. One half are Beluchees, over whom the shepherd tribe of Brahoocees—"people of the waste"—have long been dominant. Before the days of railways they used to carry the produce of the hills on long strings of camels as far south as Bombay, and even Calcutta.

The new ruler begins his feudatory administration with brighter prospects than any of his predecessors. By the Treaty of 1877 the Government of India doubled the annual subsidy, and as the country yields the Khan a revenue of only £50,000, the Viceroy allows a further sum for effecting such internal improvements as he sanctions. For this the British have the right to occupy the chief towns with troops, to erect forts, and to construct railways and telegraphs. From Khelat or Quetta, as his headquarters, the Governor-General's agent for Beluchistan has military control of the whole country, which is pacified and is beginning to prosper under four administrative divisions. In the first Afghan war the British representative at Khelat was murdered. The happy result of the second was to add Sibi and Pisheen to the new province, and to open it up by the Bolan railway, which Sir Richard Temple pushed on when he was Governor of Bombay. No better bit of work has been done in this generation than the pacification and development of Beluchistan, just completed by the abdication of the only chief who obstructed the humane reforms. It has been due to one man, the Perthshire Sir Robert Sandeman, K.C.S.I., but at the cost of his life, which constant toil and care cut short last year at the comparatively early age of 57. What that officer did from the civil and political side, Lord Roberts supplemented from the military. For all imperial purposes Beluchistan is a British province. From Quetta, now the strongest military position on the north of our Indian Empire, with a force of British and native troops larger than it is desirable to detail, almost in sight of Kandahar, we keep back the wave from the north, and guard the Bolan approach to the Indus.

The above is an interesting account of British connection with and occupation of a veritable Western Gate of North-western India. It is the Gate of approach to India for Russia, if she could find an entrance by that short route, as it was from India, to Alexander the Great, on his return journey towards the Euphrates. But Russia does not hold this Gate, or key, of the route to India from Persia, because God gave to Israel exclusively the right to hold the Gates of her enemies and of those that hate her. All the Gates, therefore, that surround the great Asiatic peninsula lie in the hollow of our hands, and we retain them to enable us to safeguard our glorious inheritance in India, as well as to keep Russia out of it when the hour of trial may come upon us all in connection with her approaching onslaught upon the British Empire. In that day the value of the Gates will be appreciated, and Beluchistan will be recognised as the strategic province which will lock the door against Russia's approach to India from the North-west, and prevent her attempting the conquest of Hindostan from that quarter at least. Not that Russia hopes or intends to burden herself with a conflict having for its object the expulsion of the British from India. That would be a hopeless task even for her! She means to throw a vast force against the Gates of North and North-west India, and so draw to the East a large portion of our too scanty British Army, while she makes her real assault upon the mountains of Israel, in order that with the conquest of Palestine she may prevent the access of the British to the East by the Suez Canal. Palestine and Syria are the keys of the trade route to India from the West; and with these in her possession (she is destined to conquer them for a moment!) she hopes to dominate the world! God's Word tells us, in Ezek. xxxviii. and xxxix., what the result of that conflict and conquest is to be; and that Russia will, as a Power, collapse under the blows inflicted on her by the mighty hand of God! Meanwhile we see progressing about us the events which are at last to bring to pass the will of God in respect to His people's enemies, as declared in the Hebrew prophecies.

God works by means; and as an end to those works which He is going to show us by the exhibition of His power (Psa cxi. 6, R.V.), He is giving us one after another the strategic positions of the world, mostly in the lands and oceans of our enemies, that by means of them He may safeguard us His people, and bring to nought His own enemies and ours. Let Israel therefore praise the Lord for His goodness and mercy to His chosen ones!

ISRAEL-ENGLAND MUST HOLD ON TO HER COLONIES.

Dr. Wild's Sermon at Toronto, on April 23, 1893.

WE take the following from the Toronto Evening News of April 24, 1893:—

"HOW THE MEN OF ULSTER BECAME HEROIC—THE TRIBE OF DAN SETTLED IN THE NORTH OF IRELAND—THE ORIGIN OF THE BRITISH THRONE.

"Rev. Dr. Wild preached in Bond-street Congregational Church last night, and took for his text, Joshua xiv. 4: 'For the children of Joseph were two tribes, Manasseh and Ephraim: therefore they gave no part unto the Levites in the land, save cities to dwell in, with their suburbs for their cattle and for their substance.'

"'The literal meaning of my text,' said Dr. Wild, 'is that the two sons of Joseph were to be heads of tribes. Ephraim was to take the place of his father Joseph; and Manasseh was to take the place of the tribe of Levi. For this tribe of Levi was selected and set apart to attend to the spiritual, educational, and law matters; in other words, they were to be priests, teachers, and judges for the whole people; hence their possessions were scattered among the other tribes, and therefore was not generally reckoned as a distinct tribe; but Ephraim taking the place of his father Joseph, and Manasseh the place of Levi, the number of the tribes still remained twelve. If we turn to Gen. xlviii. 5, we read what the patriarch said to Joseph; we find that Jacob was sick near the end of his earth-life, and Joseph, accompanied by his two sons, paid his honoured father a visit, and Jacob said, 'Thy two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh, which were born unto thee in the land of Egypt, before I came unto thee in Egypt, are mine, as Reuben and Simeon they are mine.' The meaning of which I take to be that these two sons were installed into that is, made members of the Hebrew nation prospectively. Their descendants were to constitute separate tribes, and be heirs of the covenants, promises, and history, as assigned to the whole of the tribes. In the same chapter referred to we find that Jacob ratifies the adoption of these two sons by a benediction and laying on of hands; in this act we find he puts the right hand, which signifies power and preference, on the head of Ephraim, who was the youngest of the two brothers; and his left hand on the head of Manasseh. This seemed to have displeased Joseph, and he sought to change the position of his father's hand, thinking no doubt that because his father was nearly blind that he had made a mistake; but the father answered No, as we read in ver. 18, "I know it, my son; I know it." Then he gave the prophetic future of Manasseh, saying, 'He also shall become a people, and he also shall become great; but truly his younger brother shall be greater than he, and his seed shall become a multitude of nations.'

"Now we all know that Reuben was the oldest of the twelve sons of Jacob, and to him and his tribe would naturally belong the headship, but this headship he lost, as we read in 1 Chron. v. 1: 'Now the sons of Reuben the firstborn of Israel, for he was the firstborn; but, forasmuch as he defileth his father's bed, his birthright was given unto the sons of Joseph the son of Israel: and the genealogy is not to be reckoned after the birthright.' Now from the tribe of Judah was to come the chief ruler, both temporal and spiritual; so it came to pass that Christ, the Chief of chief rulers, was born according to the flesh of the tribe of Judah. Christ was literally on the human side a Jew; and it also came to pass that when they came to have a line of kings, the true and divinely recognised ones had to be out of, or to belong to, Judah; they could not have a king or queen from any other tribe. The legitimate and lawful heirs of Jacob came to be the Hebrew people; we may reckon their firstborn nationality to have come into existence, and taken place in the land of Palestine, for there they established states and general governments; but Moses, Jacob, and other prophets of God foretold that in the course of the ages these people would be all of which we know has come to pass.

"When Rehoboam succeeded to the throne of Solomon, his father, we read in 1 Kings xii. that the tribes divided, two of the four parts then parted and became two nations—two kingdoms, Judah and Israel, after lasting hundreds of years, and living side by side. It came to pass 725 B.C., the nation of Israel was broken up, and the people carried captive. Unhappy Israel. About 154 years after the destruction of Israel, the kingdom of Judah was destroyed, and the people carried as captives into Babylon. In 70 years they returned, not to be an independent nation; since their captivity they had never been an independent nation, nor had they a government or kingdom of their own. The only kingless, governmentless, nationless people on the earth. The Jew nowhere, at the present time, has a national form of existence. They are a race, but not a nation: and here nine people out of ten make a mistake. Where is the Jewish nation? Everybody knows there is not one on the face of the earth as was prophesied; but God promised, and through His prophets said that the kingdom of Israel should never cease to be a nation to the end of the world; and there should never be wanting a ruler from the divinely-selected line to sit upon the throne. Now, seeing that both kingdoms are banished from Palestine, is there not a vacuum? We may reasonably ask, Have these prophecies and promises been fulfilled? I answer, Yes, to the very letter. These facts have I proved to you time upon time, hence I pass on with the mere statement this evening.

"Before the captivity of the people of the kingdom of Israel, a large portion of the tribe of Dan, no doubt supplemented by individuals from other tribes, had settled in the North of Ireland, and had a government and a kingdom. When the kingdom of Judah was broken up, and Zedekiah, their last king, was slain, and all the royal seed so far as they knew, too, we learn that some did escape, at least two daughters of Zedekiah were saved, and that they fled into Egypt, we learn from Scripture, under the protection of the prophet Jeremiah. Here the prophet Jeremiah disappears from Scripture. We never hear any word of him as to where he went, or what become of the two daughters; but profane history comes in and helps us to know where he did go to, and what he did after he left Egypt. We Anglo-Israelites believe that Jeremiah took those daughters, and found his way to the North of Ireland, where one was married to the king of Ulster. You see what makes the Ulsterites so heroic to-day. And then and there was founded that famous line of 124 kings and queens called the ancient line of Tara, from which King James VI. of Scotland, who became King James I. of England, proudly boasted, and claimed his authority and right to be crowned in England, because he was the literal descendant of the king of Tara. Thus do we know that this Tara line progressed, for it gave to Scotland its first king in the name of Fergus, who was the first king of Argyleshire, and through him to Kenneth, through him to Bruce, through him to Mary, through her to James,

"THROUGH HIM TO QUEEN VICTORIA.

This is the line of descendants nobody can dispute. These things I have often proved to you in detail; the simple statement is, that Queen Victoria came to the throne of England through the title of King James: King James got his from the Scottish line; the Scottish from the line of Tara, and the Tara line began somewhere; it began with the beautiful Tea-Tephi, the daughter of Zedekiah. There is the continuance of the throne, a continuance of national existence. There has never been a moment in this world that Israel has ceased to be a nation! God's Word has literally been fulfilled. I hope you now see three of the parties out of the four I have referred to; you will see them in the Ten Lost Tribes, now found to be Britain-organised, or in the royal family ruling over and in Israel, and in the Jews. But who, and where is the fourth party, I ask? And I simply answer, the United States; this is the great people; this is the nationality, the separate identity promised to this one tribe of Manasseh, the only tribe that was to have a separate existence and a separate nationality; and, therefore, if we are the Ten Lost Tribes, of necessity there must have left us some time a people that shall have formed a distinct nationality of their own. Out of the 68 colonies belonging to Britain, the United States is the only one that ever did leave us, therefore they are Manasseh. This tribe had a future separate national existence promised, and so in the light of prophecy it was reasonable that the colonies should leave Britain. The only time that ever Israel-Britain was ever defeated in the world was when she went to fight the tribe of Manasseh. There is no human reason to account for such a thing, but there is a divine one. Divine reason is often above human comprehension. It is exactly like the case of Rehoboam, who when the tribes seceded, he wanted to go to work and force them back, and got his army ready and on the way, as we read in 1 Kings xii. 24: 'Thus saith the Lord, Ye shall not go and fight against your brethren, the children of Israel; return every man to his house; for this thing is from Me.' The colonies, after they became organised, made the same blunder as did the Mother Country, for in the American Revolution which broke out in 1775 they thought to carry Canada, and fight against their brethren; three millions came to do battle against seventy thousand. Probably you will say they will win. No, no; and though we had so few the three millions could make no headway, and had to return every man to his house. You cannot fight successfully against God, no matter what your number may be. There is no human reason for such things, but there is a divine one.

Digitized by Google

"Again, in 1812, the nation

six million people came to do battle against two hundred and eighty thousand; again they had to retire to their own beloved home. What passage do these events remind you of? It is this: 'It is not by might nor by power, saith the Lord, but by My Spirit.' No, no; number has nothing to do with it. Why could not six million Americans wipe out two hundred and eighty thousand Canadians? Because it was against God and against their brethren. There is nothing more delusive than to argue with these men on annexation, when you look at these things in a proper light you can never get an intelligent answer from them.

"Again, in 1837, some of our own Canadians took in hand to force themselves and the rest into annexation; three times has these things been tried with sad failures. A few individuals annex themselves to the other side; some annex themselves to jail, and some annex themselves to the gallows, that was the result of the last efforts to annex. My friends, past events should at least tend to make men cautious when they go into the dangerous business of annexation. You are on dangerous ground, and to the young men of Canada I would say, we are under the most solemn obligations to judge carefully, and weigh well the meaning of our words, especially so in a country like ours, where the political partizan temperament is so sensitive, race feeling so prominent, and sectarianism so conceited and jealous.

"This sermon was given rise to by a correspondent in one of our public journals that many of you, I have no doubt, saw, anticipating what my lecture on 'Annexation or what?' would be. The correspondent is very generous, faithful, and kind. I respect him very much. He argued that because the United States were Manasseh and of the same people as ourselves, therefore annexation would be natural; but by the theory of Anglo-Israelism I never favour annexation. It is Israel that is to bud, blossom, and fill the earth. Nobody else. Everybody will be Britons in the Millennium. Why one quarter of this country is German in descent, and their children are as purely Briton as you and I, and it is the same with every country in the world under British rule, it is only a matter of time for them to become Britons. Look at her growth; she keeps getting more and more territory, and now her aggregate area is over eleven million square miles of this round earth.

"Now, to you that have any inclination towards annexation, let me ask, is it likely that she will let go the largest and the most loyal, and by far the most promising colony in her Empire? No, she don't intend to lose such a vast territory as Canada. Why has she her eyes open all over the world? To try and steal more ground. And then an annexationist will be so foolish as to actually think she will let go the biggest and best country she has. I wonder if these men just argue for fun. From my friend Goldwin Smith down to the other man, they are foolish to think that a promising country like this would ever go out of her grasp. Will Great Britain allow the great highway across the continent, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, to go, which she fostered in building this railway, and which is a gateway for her as well as a swift and sure way to her Eastern possessions? Do you mean to say she is willing to give up this great gateway to a foreign nation, even though a friendly one? No, no—never! It is strange that we do not see that after she has lavished so much money in the upbuilding of this country, that any man should conceive the idea that she would let it go.

"WILL GREAT BRITAIN FORGET HER OWN PAST

sacrifices of men and of money in earlier days? Tens of thousands of brave Britishers have lost their lives in winning this country for themselves, and in protecting it from that moment till this; in facilitating emigration, in protecting the emigrants, and now men will rise up and say, we want to forget her benefits; we want to live with a spirit of ingratitude, and leave the mother when she has done so much for us.

"Some people talk about the fear of war; we are so much exposed. Why we are the safest country in the world, and there is no country could be so well protected. Place a few British men-of-war on either oceans, and our American friends to the south are bound to protect us by the Munro doctrine; and it is hardly likely any one will trouble us from the direction of the North Pole. There is no other country that requires as small an army as we do; and it will be a long time before a foreign army will get to Toronto, so you can keep your real estate booming. And then again I heard some men talk about the independence of Canada the other day, while I was riding on the cars, and grumbling at the expense. The conversation arose from an item in the newspaper. There was apportioned 150,000 dollars for militia service. One said, 'What is the use of that?' I listened for a few moments, and thinking to myself at the same time that I was thankful I was a Christian, I said, 'You strike me as having a funny idea. Why, you are talking about independence which would cost you millions; you could not get a gunboat that is worth going on the high seas under four million dollars, and here 150,000 dollars has been appropriated to men who will volunteer their time and services.' Now is their any consistency in such talk? Great Britain is doing the nine parts out of the ten in protecting this country, when it really ought to be us that should be doing the nine parts and Britain the one.

"I consider it the duty of every citizen, of whatever political party, especially Christians, and most of all, ministers, to advocate and preach the gospel of peace, and to take notice of these disturbances at their very beginning. I consider it strictly within my province as a minister to forewarn, and so help us to be forearmed, under the conviction that by doing so we might save our country from confusion, rebellion, or from war. The world has got to be filled up as the centuries roll by; let us not waste our heritage. Canada will be full some day. God always reserves some country for His multiplying children of all nations, and we don't want to be in a hurry to part with ours.

"I think I cannot do better than close with the following verses:—

"HURRAH FOR CANADA!

"Hurrah, hurrah, for Canada,
Her woods and valleys green;
Hurrah for dear old England,
Hurrah for England's Queen;
Good ships be on her waters,
Firm friends on her shores;
Peace, peace, within her borders,
And plenty in her stores.

Right royally we're singing.
To all nations make it known,
That we love the land we live in,
And our Queen upon her throne.
Long may the sons of Canada
Continue as they've been,
True to their native country,
And faithful to their Queen.

"The Lord bless us. Amen."

BRITAIN'S RESPONSIBILITIES: HER ORIGIN AND DESTINY.

Lecture by Mr. Marchant at Bexhill.

A lecture was recently given at the Assembly Rooms, Bexhill, on the above subject. Mr. J. Robertson Reep occupied the chair, and in introducing the lecturer (Mr. Marchant) said that he was going to speak upon a very important subject, one which dealt with the greatness of the British Empire, and which had reference to certain facts which would be put forward by the lecturer. He thought the subject deserved their most careful attention, as it would enable them to form a better acquaintance with the Scriptures. He hoped that the lecture would induce them to read the Scriptures in order that they might discover for themselves their peculiar application to British history. Before calling on Mr. Marchant to deliver his address he would draw attention to some statements made by the Rev. Canon Farrar and the late Right Hon. Wm. Bede Dalley, Q.C., the Attorney-General of Sydney, showing some figures relative to the present position and importance of this great Empire. They were as follows:—'In this reign . . . the population of these kingdoms has increased 42 per cent.; it is increasing at the rate of over 1,000 a day, by 370,000 a year. If the present increasing rate and growth of London continues there is no reason why it should not be, at the end of the century, a spectacle infinitely greater and more stupendous than has ever been seen. Our British Empire at this moment embraces more than one-sixth part of all the land of the earth, and comprehends nearly one-fourth of its population, and of this population 50,000,000 are of Anglo-Saxon descent. Its area is 9,000,000 square miles, its population 313,000,000 of persons, its annual revenues are £205,000,000, and its exports and imports are 1,060,000,000 per annum. Its forces, including militia, are more than 1,500,000, and its navy consists of 60,000 men.'

"Mr. Marchant, in commencing his address, thanked the chairman for calling the attention of the meeting to the statements of Canon Farrar and the Hon. Mr. Dalley. That the British nation was a great and mighty nation, occupying the most powerful position in the policy of nations, there could be no doubt. The lecturer proposed to inquire into the antecedents of this great and mighty nation. Seeing that a great many, if not all, of the great powers of the earth were alluded to or dealt with in some way in Holy Writ he proposed at the outset to direct his hearers' attention to the Book of books, as he believed, and it was a faith that had grown with him for years, that the Bible contained allusions and evidence which would make it plain to every thinking Christian that the British nation at the present day, the latter days, constituted and were composed of the House of Israel. He (the lecturer) used the term Christian advisedly, because he would have his audience understand that he was not there to say anything against any individual creed in particular. All might carry away with them that evening something touching the promises made to Abraham, after Abraham to Jacob, and after Jacob to the two sons of Joseph, Joseph being the heir of the birthright (1 Chron. v. 1). The lecturer then proceeded to explain the nature of the birthright and instanced his remarks by stating that in dealing with Abraham God entered into a covenant with him relating to earthly blessings as a sign and forecast of things that were to come instead of, as some supposed, spiritual types and blessings. Turning to the Bible, the lecturer drew attention to Gen. xiii., wherein God promises Abraham to make his seed as the dust of the earth, then should his seed also be numbered. At this time Abraham had no son, and in Gen. xv. Abraham pleads with God and points out that Eliezer of Damascus would be his heir. The Lord did not answer this protest with a spiritual promise, but brought him forth abroad and said, "Look now toward heaven and tell the stars, if thou be able to number them: So shall thy seed be." The lecturer pointed out that this was not the spiritual seed, the one seed Christ, but was in direct answer to Abraham's doubt because he had no natural and legitimate heir. Tracing the history onward in Gen. xxvii., the birthright blessings were further considered. In this chapter we behold Isaac with his two sons, Esau and Jacob. Esau had set so little value on his birthright inheritance as to prove himself incapable of bearing its responsibilities. Hence God took it from Him and gave it to Jacob, his younger brother. The blessing bestowed upon Jacob was as follows: 'God give thee of the dew of heaven and the fatness of the earth, and plenty of corn and wine: let people serve thee, and nations bow down to thee: be lord over thy brethren, and let thy mother's sons bow down to thee: cursed be every one that curseth thee, and blessed be he that blesseth thee.' Proceeding, the lecturer next dealt with Jacob's blessing of his twelve sons. In Gen. xlviii. we have Joseph presenting his two sons to his dying father, who blesses them thus: 'The angel which redeemed me from all evil bless the lads, and let my name be named on them, and the name of my fathers Abraham and Isaac, and let them grow into a multitude in the midst of the earth.' Of Manasseh he said, 'He also shall become a people and he also shall be great, but truly his younger brother (Ephraim) shall be greater than he, and his seed shall become a multitude (or fulness) of nations.' The lecturer next drew attention to the history of the Twelve Tribes, giving an outline of their division into two kingdoms after the death of Solomon. From the time of this severance the chosen people remained two distinct peoples, each kingdom having its own separate line of monarchy and priesthood. The Jews, or kingdom of Judah, can be easily identified, for they are with us now, but in no sense are they in possession of the birthright promises appertaining to the House of Joseph or Ephraim-Israel. The Jews are scattered abroad, a people oppressed and persecuted in almost every land. They possess no kingdom of their own, but are the subjects of the rulers of the countries in which they may happen to dwell. In a word, they possess none of the covenant blessings promised to Abraham as embodied in the birthright inheritance given to Joseph, and through him to Ephraim and Manasseh. How the House of Israel, or Ephraim-Israel, was deported out of Palestine and lost—i.e., divorced from the land, thus becoming Lo-ammi—not God's people, the lecturer vividly described. Isa. liv. was referred to as portraying the latter-day position of the exiled tribes, whose disappearance from history as the kingdom of Israel, has led to the belief that the Jews represent the whole of the chosen people, whereas they only represent a small proportion of the elect race. In order to identify the House of Israel, dwelling among the Gentiles, we must look for certain marks of identification. First they must be a multitudinous people, spread to the North, to the South, to the East, and the West, inheriting the desolate heritages or waste places, and in these developing into a nation and a company of nations, according to the birthright covenant (Gen. xlviii. 19). Secondly, they must be in possession of the gates or ports of their enemies, as Britain is to-day. Other marks of identification may be summed up in such peculiarities as a national observance of the Sabbath, commercial prosperity, enabling the nation to lend unto many nations and having need to borrow of none, zeal for missionary work among the heathen as God's chosen witnesses, world-wide supremacy on land and sea, and as an island people chief of the nations. Britain presenting all these signs of identification, with many others unmentioned, must be no other than that House of Israel to whom was promised in the latter days an inheritance which should embrace the heritage of the heathen, and a just and kindly rule over the uttermost parts of the earth. For this reason, it is the bounden duty of Britain to realize her origin, destiny, and stupendous responsibilities."

The above interesting account of Mr. Marchant's lecture appeared in The Hastings and St. Leonards' News of September 15th, 1893.

WHICH IS THE TRUE CHURCH?

By John R. Mitchell.

PART III.

(Concluded from p. 499)

But now what of the claims of Great Britain and her people to be the only true Church. The Romans begin their faith with tradition, and twist history to their own ends. Suppose we try the first plan without the last, and see what we can find, for we have many traditions, some of which are not known away from their localities. During my holidays last year, I was walking from Wymering to Porchester, and about a mile from the latter place I saw a very pretty villa, almost hidden in a cluster of trees, and I enquired of my brother, who was with me, the name of it. "Oh," he said, "that is Paul's Grove, and the local tradition is, that is the very spot where St. Paul landed in Britain." Another: The legend of Glastonbury dates from a period shortly preceding the time of King Arthur. The story runs thus: Joseph of Arimathea being in constant danger of his life from the enmity of the Jewish priests, owing to his testimony of the resurrection of Christ, was advised by St. Philip to take refuge in the island of Britain, then one of the most distant parts of the Roman Empire, and where the Gospel might be freely preached. Joseph, therefore, set off with his friends who were Christians. They landed on what was then the island of Avolon, off the coast of Somersetshire. This is now a valley formed by the Avolonian Hills, but at that time the sea ran up into the land, and at high tides surrounded the elevated portion. On ascending the hill, Joseph struck his staff into the ground as a sign of his having claimed the country for the kingdom of Jesus Christ. The staff, which was of thorn, took root, and ever afterwards it put forth its blossoms at Christmastide. These first preachers of the Gospel were favourably received, were allowed to teach the people, and to build on the island a little chapel for the worship of God. This was said to be the first Christian place of worship erected in Britain. On the death of Joseph he was buried in the little chapel he had built, and on this spot was afterwards erected the Abbey of Glastonbury, where a splendid tomb was raised over his remains, and called St. Joseph's tomb. From this legend we can receive as thoroughly reliable the fact that a thorn brought from some southern climate at a very remote period, was planted on one of the Avalonian Hills, called the Wirral Hill, close to Glastonbury, and that the thorn has the peculiarity of blossoming in the winter. The stump of the original old tree was visible as late as 1750, it having been cut down in the reign of Charles 1st, but a cutting taken from it was planted in 1600, near St. John's Church, where it still stands and continues to blossom, if the weather be not too severe, about the time of Christmas. Another fact is that Christianity was probably introduced at a very early period into the island of Avalon. Shut out from the world, a small community of Christians may have long made this sequestered valley a kind of Eden, and vague stories of its peace and beauty would reach the bards, and become introduced into their songs, and passed on to later ages. So much for only two traditions; now for history.

What could Perranzabuloe and Iona tell us if the stones could speak? The first planters of the Gospel in Britain never were in Rome at all, but came straight from Jerusalem. My space is too short to give full details. From the Welsh Triads it is possible that even Lazarus, after he was raised from the dead, came to this island, accompanied by Joseph of Arimathea. Nicephorus states that Simon Zelotes carried the doctrine of the Gospel unto the Western Sea and to the Britannic Islands, so that we have proof that the Gospel was preached here as early as A.D., 38, not more than five years after the crucifixion. Now I ask, for what reason did the disciples of our Lord visit these distant portions of the earth at that early date, when they had so much more to do in the nearer neighbourhood of Palestine. If our ancestors were purely a Gentile people, they surely had no business here under those circumstances, because they were expressly told to go not into the way of the Gentiles, and by coming here they would be altogether disregarding the commands which were laid upon them by the Lord Himself, which is a thing they were not at all likely to do. Their orders were to go to the lost sheep of the House of Israel, and to no one else, that through Israel, salvation might afterwards be brought to the Gentiles. This is also in accord with the prophecies, "Israel shall blossom and bud," but I cannot find from Scripture that this promise was ever transferred from them to some other purely Gentile race. It would therefore appear that the inhabitants of these islands at that time were Israelites, and therefore ready to accept the truth when it was brought to them. That portions at least of the tribes of Dan and Simeon were here even then, there can be no doubt; but my time will not permit of going into this now, as I must confine myself to the subject before us. I merely mention it to prove my position that the Gospel was being preached here to the people for whom it was intended from the beginning.

Again, the third planter was Aristobulus, one of the seventy, and father-in-law of St. Peter. This disciple of Christ was set apart by St. Paul, and commissioned by the great apostle of the Gentiles, the first Bishop of Britain. The scene of his martyrdom is marked to-day in Montgomeryshire; and known by the name of Arwystli, that being the Welsh for Aristobulus. Rome was the capital of the Gentile world, and the centre from which those who travelled further would have to start on their journeys. Many of the disciples would flock there, and Aristobulus was one of them. On coming to Britain he left his family there, and when Paul sent his salutations to the Christians at Rome, he, knowing that Aristobulus was in Britain, simply says, "Salute them which are of Aristobulus's household" (Rom. xvi. 10).

I give one more proof out of the many which could be produced that we were never, as a nation, indebted to the Romans or the Roman Catholics for our faith. It is this: Among the first converts of Joseph and his fellow-missionaries, were Linus and Claudia, the son and daughter of Caractacus, the British Prince who, with his family, were afterwards carried prisoners to Rome. The young Prince Linus, who was converted in Britain before his captivity, made, when in Rome, such progress in Scriptural knowledge, and the science of Church government under the teaching of St. Paul, that he actually made him the first Bishop of the Christian Church in Rome, and his name is mentioned in the 2nd Epistle to Timothy, iv. 21. Eusebius, the father of Church history, states that Linus was the first Bishop of Rome. Thus, instead of the British Church being indebted to Rome for her apostolic succession, Rome is indebted to Britain for her first Bishop. If the Christians in Rome had followed the teachings of Paul and Linus, they never would have become Romish at all.

I think I have now fairly shown the claims of the different known churches to be the one true Church, and given some intimation of my own idea as to which is the true one; so far as Rome is concerned she can be dismissed in a few words. The Israel of God is the nation of God, the nation He has made for Himself, therefore the Church of God. Rome is a conglomeration, not a nation at all, and her claims are simply worthless, for the rise of Israel is the fall of Rome. There is no other true church but the nation to whom Christ gave the promise, and to whom He primarily came, the kingdom of Israel, and the same people to whom God gave the gospel mission. "In Thee and in Thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed," to this last comprehensive promise how do we respond? Do we bless any of the families of the earth? We bear all the signs, not one are wanting, we have, especially together with Judah, the great sign of the Sabbath, to which no other people can lay claim. Our missionary labours are the only ones that bear lasting fruit, and are spread over the remotest portions of the earth's surface. What other country has spent over twenty millions of money to free the slave and the oppressed? Our home institutions excite the wonder and praise of the world, the amount of money spent in charitable purposes in this land in one year is out of all count, while our commerce, race and language, accompanied by our laws and the Bible, are to be found increasing and spreading till we bid fair before many years of almost filling the earth. Although individually, we, like Israel of old, are far from being all righteous, yet as a nation even now we are the righteous nation when compared with surrounding countries. Our laws, as Disraeli has justly said, are based on the laws of Sinai, and we not only bring forth the fruits of righteousness, but all other people acknowledge it. Is it possible that this can be all a sham? that God has taken away Israel's position and given it to us? After His promises repeated over and over again, that He has written them on the palms of His hands that He would never leave them nor forsake them, are we not dishonouring Him in even thinking He would do so? for if He did our salvation might also be transferred and become nullified. But He has said, "I am the Lord, I change not;" and knowing and believing this, we who boast so much of our faith should be careful that, like Esau of old, we do not throw away our birthright. God is still God, Israel is still Israel, the covenants between the two still hold good; to Israel God has said, "Ye are My witnesses, and you only have I known of all the families of the earth." These words being true, Israel only of all the nations must be the one true Church, and the Holy One of Israel is their King.

THE DISCUSSION IN YARMOUTH, NOVA SCOTIA.

No. IX.—Anglo-Israelism.

The Rev. C. F. Cooper continues:—

HINTS TO STUDENTS.

Sir,—In his last letter "Barrington" calls Anglo-Israelism a delusive, exploded theory, doomed to perish of inherent weakness; a fad; stuff that dreams are made of; an impotent, decrepit theory. Now, sir, let me ask why then does he labour so long and so hard with this theory? What can we think of the wisdom of a man who spends week after week and month after month trying to kill an exploded, impotent, and a decrepit thing, doomed of its own inherent weakness to perish?

An exploded theory! Sir, no truth discovered within the present century has spread so rapidly as Anglo-Israelism has. "Barrington" does not know that there are over 200 works published on this subject, some of them by men of high eminence for piety, and scholarship in almost every department of learning. He does not know that in the beginning of last year a "Handbook on Anglo-Israelism" was published by authority of the British-Israel Association, and already a fourth edition is being prepared. He does not know that that book alone is winning over very many to our side; that Anglo-Israelism is being discussed in gatherings of the clergy; that lectures are delivered all the year round and drawing-room meetings held throughout England; that the colonies are rapidly accepting this truth; that hundreds of dollars are spent yearly in freely distributing our literature; some, I am glad to say, finding its way to Nova Scotia. I shall be glad to send some to anyone interested. Let me add that I have been asked to start a class for this study. Sir, please allow me in response to this request to announce that a class for the study of Anglo-Israelism and prophecy in general will be held the 2nd, 4th, and 5th Mondays in the month, beginning the 2nd Monday in May, at the house of Mr. Arthur Van Horn, William-street. All who believe the Bible are cordially invited.

A considerable portion of "Barrington's" last consists of a string of quotations from Scripture—quarter and half sentences—detached from the contexts, and often having no connection with one another. Sir, this stopping in the middle of a sentence, and piecing together passages which have little or no connection, is not the way to arrive at truth. Again, your correspondent's conclusions are generally stated dogmatically instead of being reasoned out. Furthermore, "Barrington's" letter is mainly a repetition of former statements and a re-quotation of Scriptures used before. Moreover, as in all your correspondent's letters, he labours hard to prove by quotations from divines and from Scripture facts we both believe. Indeed, leaving out his dogmatic conclusions, paragraphs 5 to 10 contain sound teachings, and some of his conclusions too are correct. Why parade the proofs of what he knows Anglo-Israelites believe as fully as he himself does?

Now, sir, under these circumstances I shall not follow your correspondent point by point as on former occasions. I shall adopt a more profitable course. I shall directly address those who are beginning to study this subject, giving a few hints which will guide and assist them. I shall consider one or two of "Barrington's" arguments as illustrations of the importance of attending to the points about to be mentioned. With these hints any student can readily detect for himself the errors and fallacies in all "Barrington's" letters, and indeed in the arguments of any opponent of Anglo-Israelism.

Now, I ask you who are studying this subject to read, mark, and learn the following:—

(1.) The term "Israel" is used in Scripture in several different senses—in the following at least (a) of the patriarch Jacob, whose name was changed to Israel; (b) of the Twelve Tribes; (c) of the Ten Tribes; (d) of Judah, or Judah and Levi, or Judah, Levi, and Benjamin. The precise meaning may always be gathered from the context. After the division of the Twelve Tribes into two kingdoms, Israel, the House of Israel, etc., generally means the Ten Tribes. In such passages as Jer. iii., xxxi., xxxiii., Ezek. xxxvii., Isa. xi., Hos. i., ii., etc., passages which must be carefully studied, the context places it beyond doubt that the Ten Tribes are meant. When, for example, you read in Jer. xxxi. 35—38, that Israel is always to be a nation you know that the Ten Tribes are meant because Judah is distinguished from them over and over again throughout the chapter. "Barrington's" refusal to see this leads him into confusion and error. In Ezra the children of Israel means Judah, Levi, and Benjamin, who alone returned from captivity. This is proved by Ezra ii. 1, where we read, "Now these are the children of the province that went up out of captivity, of those which had been carried away, whom Nebuchadnezzar, the king of Babylon, had carried away into Babylon." Now, none of these could be of the Ten Tribes because they were not taken to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar but to Assyria by other monarchs.

Again, in Ezra iv. 1, the adversaries of the returned people are called the adversaries of Judah and Benjamin. Levi, we know, returned.

Now, at the division of Israel into two kingdoms, Judah, Levi, and Benjamin formed the southern kingdom. They and they alone were carried away to Babylon; they and they only, as the history plainly informs us, returned; so that when Ezra calls the returned exiles the children of Israel, he could only mean Judah, Levi, and Benjamin. Of course, it is perfectly accurate to call the descendants of Judah "Israel," because they were descended from Jacob or Israel, who was the father of Judah.

"Barrington" says, "The Jewish Church was the Church in the wilderness." How flagrantly inaccurate this is will be seen at once when we remember that the word "Jews" is an abbreviation of "Judahites"—i.e., the children of the patriarch Judah, and that the Church in the wilderness consisted of the Twelve Tribes. It would be just as accurate to speak of the Danite or the Gadite Church in the wilderness or the conquest of Canaan by Manasseh or Issachar. You will not study this subject long before you cease to wonder that men who use terms so carelessly and so strangely fail to distinguish between things that differ, get their minds so confused that they are unable to see the truth. Always speak of the nation before the disruption as Israel. In New Testament times all who were politically united to Judah were generally called Jews. In this sense only was Paul a Jew. By descent, as he tells us, he was a Benjamite. Unless we observe these distinctions, Scripture becomes confusing, obscure, and contradictory. They should cause no difficulty since the context invariably makes the correct meaning as clear as daylight.

Anglo-Israelites, for the sake of clearness, often speak of the Ten Tribes as Ephraim-Israel and of the Two as Judah-Israel. We say Ephraim-Israel because Ephraim became the leading tribe of the Northern kingdom, and inherited the birthright. After the dispersion God says, "Ephraim is My firstborn" (Jer. xxxi. 9). Ephraim is sometimes put in Scripture for all the Ten Tribes for these reasons, and also because the remaining nine tribes are always to share Ephraim's birthright blessings. It is an excellent plan to mark with different coloured pencils the passages referring to the Israel of the Ten Tribes, Judah and the Gentiles. Say, for example, the Ten Tribes red, the Jews blue, and the Gentiles black. By this method the Bible becomes comprehensible and beautifully clear, confusion and mistakes are avoided.

(2.) Carefully distinguish between the nation of Israel and the Church universal. The nation is, of course, the literal posterity of Jacob—the Church comprises all of whatever race who are saved through faith in Christ. Now, please follow me in a little critical analysis in order that you may see by a further example how important it is to understand and use words accurately. "Barrington" tries to build an argument based upon the following statement: "The Jewish nation was the Jewish Church." He means by the Jewish nation the whole Twelve Tribes, which is like calling all of twelve brothers by the name of one of them. But this could be true only down to the division of all Israel into two kingdoms; for after that event the Twelve Tribes were divided not only into two nations, but into two Churches also.

Now, remember, we are not concerned with Judah, but with Ephraim-Israel only. This latter kingdom, after the revolt under Rehoboam, seceded from the Church established by Moses. The Ten Tribes set up an independent and apostate Church. They ceased to worship in the place chosen by Jehovah—viz., Jerusalem; they chose for priests other than Levites—that is, they chose men who could not be priests of Jehovah; they changed the dates of their festivals; they set up idols in Bethel and Dan, and many other places. Now these facts, which are of tremendous import, "Barrington" ignores, showing how confused was his mind when he wrote the above sentence. You can see at once that this confusion arises from the vague, inaccurate, and contradictory use of the term "Jewish." Well, then, the Church of the Ten Tribes was not the true Church of God: the most that can be said of it is that it was an heretical, apostate, idolatrous Church.

What, then, becomes of "Barrington's" argument that because the British nation, as a nation, is not the Church of God, therefore the British people cannot be Ten-tribed Israel? It is utterly destroyed. Yet this is the first point in "Barrington's" main argument. One can hardly help asking, almost in despair, when will men whose duty it is to expound the Scriptures, distinguish between Israel and Judah? Until they do so they never can arrive at the truth. Well, in the light of the sad fact that the Ten Tribes were an idolatrous and apostate Church, we can see the fallacy of the following conclusion of "Barrington": "The Israel of old—i.e., the Church—is perpetuated in the Israel of the new covenant," which really means, "The Israel of old—i.e., the apostate Church—is perpetuated in the Israel of the new covenant"—i.e., according to "Barrington," in the Church of saved believers. Should "Barrington" say he meant the Jewish Church after the return from captivity, then his whole argument is irrelevant, since we are concerned not with the Jews, but with Ephraim-Israel or the Ten Tribes. Further, should he contend that after the captivity the Jews were all the tribes (which is untrue) it will not help him, for the majority of that unhappy people were not in the Church in the sense in which "Barrington" uses that word when he says, "Israel is the Church of God"—i.e., the Church of true believers.

How could the Jewish Church, composed of a majority of unsaved souls, be perpetuated in a Church in which all are saved? If "Barrington's" argument were put into the form of a syllogism, it would be found that in the major premises he uses the term "church" in one sense—viz., that of an ecclesiastical body; and in the conclusion in another sense—viz., that of saved believers in every ecclesiastical body. This, of course, by the rule of logic, destroys the argument at once. Let me add, if, as "Barrington" teaches, Israel and Jews are synonymous terms in the New Testament, and Israel means the Church, then, of course, Christians are not only Israelites, they are also Jews. I little thought my opponent could be called a Jew. As such I greet him as a brother, though let it be understood I claim to be of Ephraim.

"Barrington's" fourth point is for the most part good Anglo-Israel teaching. "The kingdom," he says, "was established among the lost sheep of the House of Israel." I have still hopes of him.

(3.) Be careful to distinguish between the Abrahamic covenant and the Mosaic. The former was unconditional. It was also Messianic—i.e., to be fulfilled mainly after the coming of Christ, and therefore it was never to be done away with. The latter was conditional upon obedience and only lasted for a time—until Christ came. The new covenant, prophesied of in the Old Testament and spoken of in the New Testament, was new in respect to the Mosaic, and was made with the House of Israel and the House of Judah, for all mankind. "Barrington" confuses the Abrahamic covenant with the Mosaic.

When "Barrington" says (this is the third point of his main argument), "The old economy (the Mosaic) was preparatory to and superseded by the new and better covenant," we agree with him. We agree also that the work of Christ was for all the children of Adam; that God was in Christ reconciling the world to Himself. "Barrington" knows we teach these blessed truths.

(5.) Be very careful to distinguish between the material blessings promised in the Abrahamic covenant, enlarged upon in the prophets and promised to the literal seed, and the spiritual blessings. The latter were from the time of Christ onward for all the world. Thus we teach with Paul that all believers are counted for a seed of Abraham, are his children and heirs according to promise—all of which proves that so far as salvation is concerned there are no race privileges and distinctions. Indeed, there never were. On the other hand, the temporal promises of the Abrahamic covenant as well as the spiritual are assured to Israel, that they may be enabled to spread the Gospel among all mankind. God must have some agents to do His work; He has chosen and equipped Israel for this purpose. During the millennium all mankind will share not only the spiritual but also the material blessings promised to the seed of Abraham. All this disposes of "Barrington's" second point. There are other points of importance, but these must suffice now. Let me add:—

(6.) You will need the guidance and help of the Holy Spirit, who will lead you into all truth. The further you progress the more fascinating will this study become, the more absorbing will your interest in foreign missionary work grow, and the greater will be your love for all mankind, and soon you will discover what an intimate connection there is between Anglo-Israelism and the glorious millennium era which is so soon to dawn. You will be able to look upon mankind with its crushing sorrows, its weary tumults, its delusive hopes, its empty joys, its hollow shams, its appalling sins with an ever-brightening hope, knowing that by-and-bye a new age will begin, when Satan will be cast out, the Lord reign, righteousness flourish, and peace, plenty, and joy abound everywhere. These cheery views will cause you to thank God for the revelation of the holy prophets and will make you active, hopeful workers in the vineyard of the Lord.

Sir, let me add one word more. "Barrington" begins his letter by stating that ethnology, language, civilization, religion, and history are all opposed to Anglo-Israelism. This is pretty cool, considering two facts—(1) Your correspondent has not attempted one proof from ethnology, as distinct from language, &c., nor one argument from history; (2) I have not yet replied to his remarks on language, &c. In my next I hope to show the worthlessness of all he has so far written on these points, and then I shall unfold a chapter or two in history, which I feel sure will interest and convince your readers.

Yours, &c.

C. F. Cooper.

CONFERENCE AT EDINBURGH.

Official Report.

On Sept. 11, a conference of representatives from various parts of the North, was held at Edinburgh, to consider the present position of the Identity movement, and discuss plans for a more thorough prosecution of the work. The meeting took place at the Bible Society's Rooms from 11 a.m.; those present being: Rev. E. Bassein, Mrs. Green, Jos. J. Read, and J. S. Bayne (Edinburgh); Dr. Spreull, Jas. D. Reid, and G. Alston (Glasgow); J. Leyland Feilden and R. M. Dalzell (Stirling); P. Marshall (Strathblane); J. H. Bowe (Dunbar); and J. G. Taylor (Newcastle). The Rev. P. Carlyon, Edinburgh; Major-General Morgan, Elie; and Mr. Wm. Dobbing, Newcastle, were unavoidably absent. Mr. Feilden presided, and Rev. E. Bassein opened with prayer.

The discussions which ensued were of a spirited character, and dealt with such subjects as our literature; a travelling agent; the need of more union and co-operation; how to secure successful meetings; and the lack of opportunities for exchanging views upon our methods of action and other matters touching the progress of the Cause. It was the general conviction that we were not aggressive enough, and that believers all over the country should get together for purposes of deliberation. There was also a feeling that our societies were too small to be individually effective, and that something was wanted in the nature of a diocese, which should include larger numbers, and command more power in their districts. With regard to the shape which meetings should take so as to make them a success, there was a disagreement, one speaker having found a Babylonian brick more alluring than anything or anybody. But the prevailing opinion seemed to be that public meetings would be all the better for a little of the social element, and that private meetings were best when conducted on the lines of Bible readings. The theme which perhaps occupied most attention was, the "invisibility" of our books. Shops did not have them in stock, and our periodicals were kept in the background, so that British-Israelites must look after their own selves. It was held that those who are interested in the Identity would buy literature if it was accessible, while those who have never heard of the question would at least have their curiosity stimulated if they saw the publications, and every town should therefore have an Identity Depôt, or, failing that, an agency. Surprise was expressed that even in London there was no Depôt, and it was shown that where the sale of Identity literature alone would not support depôts, they could easily be made to pay by combining an ordinary stationery business with them.

During the proceedings the following resolutions were passed unanimously:—

"That this conference records its great dissatisfaction at the obscure position given to Identity publications, and urges each Association to appoint an agency, or open a Depôt in their respective towns, which shall afford the fullest publicity to our literature, and offer every facility for its purchase."

"That steps should everywhere be taken to have an Identity periodical placed in Free Libraries and other public institutions."

"That there is room for a greater variety of popular and attractive articles, including illuminated Identity texts, ornamental cards, booklets for envelopes, and a sheet almanack."

"That this conference is of opinion that there is a necessity for closer union, and recommends meetings of believers in the various counties or other broad divisions of the kingdom for the purposes of mutual advice and assistance."

It was also agreed to form a Northern Council, and the gentlemen elected were: Rev. P. Carlyon, Rev. E. Bassein, Dr. Spreull, and Messrs. J. J. Read, J. L. Feilden, J. D. Reid and J. G. Taylor. Until a different arrangement may be necessary, this council will embrace in its scope the North of England, and South of Scotland, and it was authorized to consider the feasibility of having a travelling organizer to work that area. Mr. J. J. Read, 14, Craigmillar Park, Edinburgh, accepted the post of Hon. Secretary, and those who would like to be associated with the above scheme should communicate with him at that address.

THE PRESENT NEED.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—Who of us that at the present time glances up and down our favoured land, through the medium of the daily papers, can fail to realise with sorrow and concern that there is a terrible amount of distress and suffering through absolute poverty, brought about by various causes, and it is as evident that the weighing down of one class acts upon others, and reacts again and again.

In the face of the winter now approaching, which ever gives many an additional pinch to the poverty-stricken, one shrinks when considering what it may bring forth in additional misery and discontent, and this may seriously affect others who now appear to ride securely at anchor through the storms that shipwrecked their fellows. It may be lightly asked, What has the BANNER OF ISRAEL particularly to do with this? Well, 1st, the BANNER penetrates many a home in Great Britain where means are small and life is often hard. The BANNER also, be it remembered, speaks to many a mind in distant lands, where that which concerns the weal or woe of the mother country is watched over with true regard, and doubtless it stirs many a heart to pray for the welfare and increase of righteousness of the nation. 2nd, it directs us to the Word of God. And while the BANNER shows us much concerning Israel, the Word shows us much more, and gives British-Israel direction under all circumstances. If we will ponder prayerfully over Matt. vi., we shall surely be the gainers, and especially let us note ver. 33: "But seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." Is not the BANNER helping us to seek that kingdom, and shall we not stir one another up to seek that righteousness? And should any who seek be found faithless, fearing lest their needs should not be supplied? Surely it is for all conscious Israelites, who have money free in their hands, to be foremost in supplying the wants of those in distress. Let us remember our Lord's words, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these My brethren, ye have done it unto Me" (Matt. xxv. 40), and think of the honourable, loving work they put upon us. Let us abstain from laying up a store for ourselves beyond the need for our own "rainy day," and for those who may necessarily depend upon us. There are hundreds of channels through which our gifts may run to those who sorely need them.

I plead for the bodies of those who suffer want, and I would also plead for the welfare of souls. I would that not one should leave this life in despair. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness." So must I plead that whatever direction, strength, and comfort, by the grace of God, our BANNER OF ISRAEL may supply, shall also be, if possible, freely afforded. That this paper is looked for eagerly by many, and that it is helpful in leading us to truths that induce us to trust more implicitly the covenant-keeping God, the God of Israel, I have had many and many a proof. No doubt now, as usual in times of special difficulty, all religious Societies and many Charities find their income being reduced, and our Anglo-Israel Free Distribution Fund is not the last to suffer; consequently this week, to the very great regret of the Distributors of the Fund, we find that we must stop the regular issue of the BANNER OF ISRAEL, for to attempt to work on in debt is what we may not conscientiously do. Our receipts for September were very small, but I am thankful to say that a generous gift from "Hawaiian Islands," the second this year, has come to enable us to discharge the publisher's monthly account. And now we wait, so far as the issue of BANNERS is concerned, having still some stock of other literature, waiting to see what may be. And I put this matter before the many readers of the BANNER OF ISRAEL, and ask all who really value the paper, and therefore the light to which it leads, to keep us working, if possible. The stoppage of the distribution of over two hundred copies weekly means far more than I can express, and it means no little to the publisher and his staff. This alone shows how one work crippled acts on others, takes work from their hands. Yet I would not in any case that one should "rob Peter to pay Paul," which can but change the locality of distress; but I would say, when we can give, and what we may give, let us give, and with thankfulness to be enabled to do so for the good of others, and, far beyond that, for the love of God and of His Son, our Redeemer. ISRAEL DWELLING CONFIDENTLY IN THE ISLES.

IT is a remarkable feature of our national existence that in many respects we seem nationally to set at naught all prudence and precaution and live as if we had no enemies abroad who wish us harm or who would take advantage of us if they had the chance. We saw that to be the case in respect to the British navy a few years ago, when we suddenly realized the fact that we were by no means as strong as we ought to be at sea in comparison with some combinations of foreign navies which might be formed against us. We have on all occasions of sudden emergency been forced to prepare for war, in hot haste and at vast expense, because we have never seemed to realise that we are vulnerable, but live confidently and carelessly in our isles, just as God said Israel would do (in Ezek. xxxviii. 11, xxxix. 6, R.V.) at about the time when the Russian invasion of Palestine should draw near.

An illustration of this habit of carelessness, amounting to hardihood and presumption, occurred in the matter of the fortification of Esquimault in Vancouver. That place being of vital importance to the Empire, has been left to the mere chapter of accidents, if there be accidents in human affairs. No one thought it necessary to fortify or safeguard it till now, when the British and Canadian Governments have suddenly realized the fact that the Russian arsenal of Vladivostock is in the close vicinity of the important Gate of Esquimault, and that confidence and carelessness are misplaced when we defy our enemies but take no precautions to defend our property from their molestation. On Sept. 2 last there appeared in the Times of that date a letter signed by H. O. Arnold-Foster, dated Aug. 30, making many extraordinary statements regarding the present condition of Gibraltar, our national coaling station and naval rendezvous just at the entrance of the Mediterranean from the west. The writer of the letter to the Times declares three things respecting our chief coaling station and ocean fortress: 1st, that the rock is now no longer of use to us in a naval point of view except as a coaling station and a naval base, but there is no dock there, and no means at all to repair a crippled man-of-war; 2nd, that there is great need of some protection to vessels in the anchorage at Gibraltar, and to afford that a new mole is required. Everyone knows this, but the money is never forthcoming to construct one, and the new mole will never be built; 3rd, that the only use of the rock is as a first-class coaling station, but this strangely is disregarded, for it is strongly suspected, nay, certain, that there is not coal enough in the naval stores there to coal two-thirds of the Mediterranean fleet once!

These three allegations of the writer in the Times, supported by a long array of arguments and facts, are depressing and startling enough. They go to prove, however, that the Bible description of Israel before the close of this dispensation corresponds exactly with ours. We live carelessly, or confidently trusting in the chapter of accidents to bring us through in case of war; but certainly not, as respects the bulk of the nation in the God of Israel! The last words of H. O. Arnold-Foster, in the letter in question, are so important and startling that we venture to quote them. They give a vivid idea of a people living in a fool's paradise, regardless of the value of such a possession as Gibraltar, and confident that with it or without it they will somehow or other come out right in the end. He wrote thus:—

Sir Edward Harland has pointed out that the new battleships could only just reach Gibraltar at full speed with the coal they carry in their bunkers, and the same is true of nearly every other ship in the navy. Every ship sent to the Mediterranean, nearly every ship sent to the West Coast of Africa, the Cape, and Australia, would have to coal at Gibraltar, or become helpless. To imagine that, in the event of war, coal can be freely sent to the threatened fortress is an idle supposition. We must rely upon what we have got when the first gun is fired, and thank heaven, not the Admiralty, for everything which by a happy chance we may obtain afterwards.

Such are a few, and a few only, of the facts which the public ought to know about the so-called fortress of Gibraltar. I am quite aware that there are other points of view from which this whole question may be regarded. There are many things relating to our tenure of Gibraltar which have to be taken into account in any discussion as to the work which ought to be done there. I am not unimpressed by these considerations. I have received a very large amount of information bearing upon them. Meanwhile, I contend that as long as we rely upon Gibraltar to play a particular and most important part in our scheme of national defence, we ought to insist upon its being put into a position to fill that place. If the game is not worth the candle let us say so. It may be a good thing to have no mole, but to tinker away for fifteen years upon an insufficient mole must be wrong. It may be a good thing to have no dockyard, but a dockyard without a dock is a manifest absurdity. It may be desirable to give up Gibraltar as a coaling station, but to pretend it is a coaling station and not to supply it with coal is a fault which anyone can appreciate.

I trust, sir, that the importance and, I may add, the urgency of this subject may be held to excuse the length of this letter. I may repeat that in what I have said I am expressing not my own opinion merely, but that of persons who have an unrivalled knowledge and experience of all matters connected with national defence, and whose authority would, I am certain, be recognized by men of every party.

If a tithe of the above be correct, our nation is in a bad way in regard to the safety and utility of Gibraltar as a God-given Gate. But we may take comfort from this fact: that as God, according to His covenant with Abraham, has given His people the possession of the Gates, so He will, in due time, rouse us to our danger and compel us, as in the case of Esquimault and other places, where we have been almost criminally negligent, to take the proper steps to keep the Gates entrusted to us and prepare them for the purposes God gave them to us to serve. The whole of the other Gates, including those of India, were some time ago badly neglected; but the facts were published, as by H. O. Arnold-Foster in regard to Gibraltar, and the very publication of the danger leads the nation to see its duty, and do it.

If what we read be true, Gibraltar needs a dock as well as a dockyard. It needs a new mole to protect the shipping in the harbour, and it needs vast stores of coals which in case of war must be ready for use, unless we are to be taken at a disadvantage. God knows our want of faith, and our national backwardness to safeguard the interests He has given us to defend. He will in His own good time and way force us to attend to this matter, as well as to many other things wherein we are His servants and messengers responsible to Him for the proper use of them, but remiss, as it appears, to act for Him as He would have us according to the prophecies. It is a consolation to know that in all our blindness He is our Guide, and that whatever our folly and shortcomings and backslidings, there is one thing He never will do: "He will never leave us, nor forsake us!" To Him let Israel therefore give all the praise! (Isa. xlii. 16, 19, 20, R.V.; 2 Sam. vii. 24, R.V.).

"RETURN, O LORD, TO THE MANY THOUSANDS OF ISRAEL!"

THE above prayer, taken from Numbers x. 36, was that chosen by the Rev. Canon Edmonds when he preached at Exeter Cathedral on Sunday, July 9th, to a large congregation, in reference to the recent royal wedding. The sermon is remarkable because the rev. canon not only chose a text which showed God's love to Israel of old during her journeyings, but applied it repeatedly to the condition of the British people:—Doubtless he applied the name of Israel to our nation figuratively. But however he meant it to be understood, it is clear that he compared our race with God's chosen people, and found the parallel exact. He deemed the prayer of the text to be one which might "run to-day with exceeding fitness," as applied to the British nation, in every aspect that we might choose to regard it. All this is very remarkable, when we reflect that this sort of language is applauded to the echo by our religious journals, and quoted with adhesion by all of them, when uttered on such solemn occasions as the above by our clergy; but is deemed crazy folly, and the drivelling of madmen, when we maintain that the words are literally true of our people! The canon's sermon was thus reported in The Devon and Exeter Daily Gazette of July 11, 1893:—

CANON EDMONDS ON THE ROYAL WEDDING.

At Exeter Cathedral on Sunday morning Canon Edmonds preached to a large congregation from the text, "Return, O Lord, to the many thousands of Israel" (Numbers x. 36). He proceeded to show that the great characteristic of Moses as leader of the Israelites was his confidence that God would deliver them. "God by me, will do this great thing." He was devoted to the people, and was prepared to sacrifice his life for them. In all troubles and at all times he went to God. He brought the wisdom of God to their service, and spent, and was spent, for them. Continuing, the canon said:—Brethren, what can we wish for our kings, our princes, our governors more fervently than this very spirit? Surely such a spirit can adjust itself to modern conditions, can contract itself within modern limits and serve this generation by the will of God. The events of the last week are pleasant, are bracing, are hopeful. By more than 50 years of public service, a half century of singular devotion to her country, the gracious lady who rules over us wins from her people a splendid loyalty which extends to her children's children. It is a goodly spectacle. Something of it has touched the life of our own city and carried joy into every home. It has found expression in the services of our own cathedral; we have seen it and heard it in our streets. The hearts of the citizens have been open to the poor, to the aged, to the sick. Private generosity has overflowed upon the children. It is a great tribute to the power over us of the institutions under which we live. It proves once more, if further proof were needed, that under them the best instincts of the nation find expression, find scope, find consecration. England is free, and she is loyal. God send that she continue both. Return, O Lord, to the many thousands of Israel. So may our prayer run to-day with exceeding fitness. That which it is suitable that our leaders, our princes, our statesmen, our shepherds should pray, it is also suitable that we ourselves should pray. The bishop of a diocese, the mayor of a city, the parson of a parish, the father of a family, the head of a school, every man who sees marching on before him the flock of believing Christians, the multitude of citizens, the body of parishioners, the full tale of his children, the long files of his scholars, at every place where for a moment the ark of God seems to rest, may borrow the words of Moses, and pray, "Return, O Lord, to the many thousands of Israel." Especially may we do so at such a time as this, when the nation is drawn together by the bonds of a common interest. Three times—twice in sorrow, once in joy—have we within a fortnight been made to feel how our lives are bound up together. Other things are impending over us, within whose shadow the blood is chilled, the national spirit depressed. Oh, brethren, we are many here in England, and our power to suffer is incalculable. God has not promised to us perpetual prosperity. Changes and chances we shall have, we must have. It is as true of a nation as of individuals that whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth. Yes, He may even scourge. Chastening is no proof that we are out of the grace of God, but rather that we are in it. We can weep, we can feel acutely, we can look with advantage into one another's faces and see the common sorrow expressed there when a great national calamity occurs. We plant ourselves in sympathy at the engulphing Maelstrom or at the top of the mine-shaft, and weep with those that weep. And the same law winds us round with gracious bonds in days of national joy, such as that of the royal wedding last week, unity, wholeness, completeness, perfectness, one body, one body in Christ, whose incarnation sums up in one—this life and the life to come, visible things and things invisible, His completeness round our incompleteness, round our restlessness His rest. It is more and more coming home to us that this sense of solidarity, as men call it, is a revelation of the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning us. But nothing can hinder the weight of this truth from being a burden upon the imagination, from being a heavy yoke upon the neck, but one thing only—a deeper sense of the overshadowing protection of God, a more vivid and close realisation of His presence, of His presence in power protecting our weakness, of His presence in pity pardoning our sins. Thou has given us the shield of Thy salvation. Thou wilt compass us about with Thy favour like as with a shield Under the shadow of Thy wings shall be our refuge. The King shall rejoice in Thy strength, O Lord: exceeding glad shall He be of Thy salvation. The glorious Lord will be unto us a place of broad rivers and streams, or, as we should say, a silver streak. The Lord is our King, ruling in the conscience of our rulers; the Lord is our law-giver, ruling in the righteousness of our laws. Return, O Lord, after every national sorrow, return, and after every outburst of national joy. Return after every time of perplexity, of confusion, of divided counsels; after every hour of misgiving, of rashness, of bold experiment; in every moment of national tenderness; in every season of national anxiety. Return to dry roots and withered leaves, and scorching pastures, and sinking rivers, and failing springs. Return in mercy to the cattle. Return in compassion to men Return to the many thousands of Israel in sobriety of habits, in simplicity of tastes. Return in feeling heart and open hand, and chastened intellect and bended knee. Return in the sense of sin, in moral self-discernment, in the temper that cries I have sinned, in the resolution that brings the prodigal home. Return in power to the pulpit, in peace at the cross of Christ, in vital energy at the table of the Lord. Return in stronger confidence, in deeper self-distrust. Return in godly hatred of all things evil, in stronger moral instincts, in the single eye that sees the truth, the unswerving purpose which applies it. O, brethren, are our hearts ready—are they ready? Draw nigh to God, and He will draw nigh to you. Let God arise, and let His enemies be scattered; but let the many thousands of His people pitch their moving tents around the ark of God. Trust in Him at all times, ye people. Pour out your hearts before Him; then shall we offer not only united, but prevailing prayer. Return, O Lord, to the many thousands of Israel. Arise, O Lord, into Thy resting place, in the hearts of Thy people, Thou and the ark of Thy strength.

There is hardly a sentence of the above which does not illustrate some phrase of our evidence, as it establishes the literal identity of the British with the Lost Ten Tribes. The preacher never seemed to tire of reiterating his belief that our nation was "the many thousands of Israel," needing God's blessing in the midst of drought, as recently experienced by us, in respect of sobriety of habits, simplicity of tastes, and need of national repentance. He described ours, as God's people, "those for whom God fights; who calls on them "to trust Him," and to trust Him at all times, according to the teaching of Psa. lxii. 8, "Trust in Him at all times; ye people, pour out your hearts before Him. God is a refuge for us."

It is clear, according to Canon Edmonds, that our nation is blessed as Israel was to be; and may claim, at the hand of God, all that He promised to grant to Israel exclusively. If that be the case (and our preacher virtually said so), then it is manifest that the British must be Israel. Semitic in origin, the heir of all the promises, and destined to be the heir and inheritor of the whole world as well as its chief God-appointed benefactor. For the Lord cannot promise to Israel and yet perform to a Gentile non-Israelite race, to whom no such promises were ever offered? A deputation from the British and Foreign Bible Society, the Rev. Aston Binns, in a fine sermon preached in Christ Church, Clifton, on Sunday, July 23rd last, took up another phrase of our subject (unwittingly or "blindly" we suppose), and declared that the text from which he preached (Luke ix. 13), "Give ye them to eat," applied to our own nation the Anglo-Saxon race! He founded this conclusion on the fact that this race from the very first had been selected by God to be the Christian reformers of Europe, its bibliographers; and just now, the only agency for world-wide Bible circulation; that the great Reformation of he 16th century was chiefly carried on by them; that within the last 10 years more had been done by our race for the evangelization of the world, than had been effected during 18 centuries by all the Christian communities of the earth put together, and that it had manifestly been selected by the Lord for this gracious, glorious, function. But we know that God's word assigns to Israel the afterseed of Abraham, the duty of taking Christian blessings "to all the nations, families, and kindreds of the earth" (Gen. xxii. 18, xxviii. 14; Acts iii. 25), and therefore if Mr. Aston Binns be correct (which he was no doubt), then our Anglo-Saxon, British folk are the afterseed of Abraham, the House of Israel, the heir of the world, and of all the blessings God promised on His oath to give to that race. To the Lord let Israel give all the praise for these stupendous mercies.

ASSYRIA AND THE BIBLE.

The Inquirer, a Unitarian journal, we believe, on Aug. 5th last, published a short Review, signed "Geo. St. Clair," dealing with a work by Chilperic Edwards on "The Witness of Assyria, or the Bible Contrasted with the Monuments." The Bible in the hands of the writer comes out by far the worst. The monuments are more to be trusted than the Bible! For "the Genesis legends" came from Babylon originally! The first chapter of Genesis was a Jewish compilation of what was thought of the origin of the universe. The story of the confusion of tongues is only a garbled version of an Akkadian legend. The monuments never mention Abraham. We conclude that therefore there "never was such a person as Abraham!" They mention Joseph, but the monuments say he was originally a Semitic Deity. Some incidents in his life as stated in the Bible are only borrowed from an Egyptian fairy tale. As to the story of Moses and the ark of bulrushes, that really was a Babylonian legend of 2000 years older date than Moses' time! It is doubtful, according to the author, whether the Israelites ever were in Egypt at all! As to the story of the Hebrew conquest of Palestine, history refuses us permission to believe there was any such conquest before 1250 B.C. The reviewer considers some of these things true (he does not tell us which), others are too much for even him. Still they are "open to question." But beside this the author of the book maintains that "the Jews" (meaning the Twelve Tribes!) were not a "peculiar people" at all! They were not monotheists at first, but like the Assyrians they had their own special God, Jehovah, or Yahuh. If the Hebrews had an ark, so had the Assyrians; if they offered sacrifices, so did the Assyrians; and if their priests wore a breastplate with twelve precious stones adorning it, so did the Assyrians. The latter had their weekly Sabbath just like the Hebrews. The ritual, religious ideas, and hell of the Hebrews were like those of their neighbours. Moab's theology was the same as Israel's, and it is thus untrue to call the latter a "peculiar" or "a special people"! Further, Daniel's alleged prophecy is only a book of romance, and as to the Ten Tribes, they were never carried wholly away, as the Bible states. The monuments only speak of 27,250 deported, which must be preferred to the Bible statements. The writer sometimes goes beyond his reviewer, and the latter is unable to support him. The former doubts if the Israelites spoke Hebrew at all! He also declares the Hebrews did not excel their neighbours in morals or humanity, a sentiment which the reviewer rebukes by saying that in these respects "they did not fall below their neighbours."

The tendency of all this on the part of the paper and the writers in it is to depreciate the Holy Scriptures, to degrade its authority to the level or below that of the heathen monuments, and to minimise our respect for the teachings of a book which points to the Lord Jesus Christ as the God-Man, or "God the Son." Coming to the comparison of the monuments with the Bible, which is the author's point, we ask, What do the monuments teach which is of the slightest moral benefit to mankind? Do they testify to the Saviour and Redeemer of the world? or show that "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have eternal life"? The monuments teach us nothing of this sort! Their only value is, we suppose, to corroborate the fact that the Bible is of God, and the writings those He inspired and authorised to be written on His behalf by His own designated agents. How do we prove this claim? Not by asserting our belief of their authority as God's own message to man, but by a test which He Himself suggested as the touchstone to be applied to them to prove their divine inspiration. The Bible is, as regards three-quarters of its contents, a book or series of books which deal with the future events of the world, and the future destiny particularly of a chosen people, chosen by God Himself for a particular work described by the prophets themselves. What are the tests God puts forward by which we may ascertain whether the writings are of God or not? They are two. First, "When a prophet speaketh in the name of the Lord (Jehovah), if the thing follow not, nor come to pass, that is the thing which the Lord (Jehovah) hath not spoken; but the prophet hath spoken it presumptuously. Thou shalt not be afraid of him" (Deut. xviii. 22, R.V.). The second is like the first: "The prophet which prophesieth of peace, when the word of the prophet shall come to pass, then shall the prophet be known that the Lord (Jehovah) hath truly sent him" (Jer. xxviii. 9, R.V.). The exact fulfilment of a prophet's prediction is the only true test of the message that it is from God. A prophet's credentials are to be gathered exclusively from the results, whether his prophecies have proved true or false. If true, he is of God. If false, he and his writings are not to be believed.

This is the Bible's only claim, and by this test it demands to be judged, to stand or fall. The monuments have nothing to offer to prove that they are of divine origin. Manifestly they are of the earth earthy. The books purport from end to end to be divine. We are invited by the book itself to test its divine origin, as a whole, by the fact whether its prophetic portions have, as far as time will allow, been fulfilled in history, right down to the present day, or not. If there has been a failure, we may reject the books. If there has been exact fulfilment, we reject the books at our own peril, since they have met the test triumphantly and proved their divine origin. We may proceed to place the books on their trial by comparing their predictions as to the Lord Jesus Christ, and the history of the Son of God. We shall find them exactly correspond. Then as to the history of the children of Israel, the Twelve Tribes, their divergent histories after the separation into two kingdoms, and during and after the three captivities to the present hour. We shall find the books harmonise and exactly correspond with the facts of history as far as these are known. We see the Jews present with us to-day, a standing witness to the present hour that the Bible is true, and we see the Ten Tribes represented in our "last days" by the British answering in every jot and tittle to the Biblical prophecies as to their future condition during the Christian dispensation. The books, tried by the reasonable tests God Himself has proposed, prove their divine inspiration, and their survival to the present hour is no mean proof that they are God's words, His statutes and His judgments, and must be accepted to bring us blessing, or rejected to our eternal loss. The monuments are crumbling into dust, and have no witness to bear against the Word. And as to the test which God proposes, they make no pretence to divine origin, and cannot therefore set aside what bears the imprimatur of God Almighty, whose "words" the book purports to contain.

THE GREAT KING OVER ALL THE EARTH.

THE forty-seventh is an Israelite Psalm, wherein the praises of God, the Lord Jehovah, the Most High, are sung by the chief musician and the sons of Korah. The view which spiritualizes the whole and takes Israel out of it entirely is surely not one which we can approve when the text itself points to the Lord Jehovah, the covenant God of Israel, who subdues the peoples under them, and the nations under our feet (ver. 3, R.V.). The peoples of the earth are called upon to clap their hands and shout unto God with the voice of triumph, because Israel assures them that the Lord Jehovah is "most high and terrible," "a great King over all the earth." To Israel the consolation and cause for joy is of a different kind. As regards the nations, the Lord is a subduing God. He shall subdue them under Israel, and put the nations under their feet. This interpretation of the plain words used in ver. 3 is usually repudiated by most of our preachers, who spiritualize the passage, and, according to Bishop Horne, declare that ver. 9 describes the kings of the Gentiles as acceding to the Church, and as becoming with their subjects through faith the people of the God of Abraham and a part of the sacred flock.

He has also chosen us (according to Ostervald) to be His people and His inheritance, in supercession, of course, of His originally chosen ones, the afterseed of Abraham, or

Digitized by Google

Israel. We cannot see that this adaptation of the text can be its primary or full meaning. He literally subdueth, or shall subdue—that is, always will subdue—the peoples and nations under Israel's feet, since to the people of the saints of the Most High He has promised, as to the heirs of the world, the kingdom and dominion and greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, which is Christ the Lord's kingdom, an everlasting one; and "all dominions shall serve and obey Him" (Deut. v. 27; Rom. iv. 13).

The Lord Most High, then, is to us as Israel a subduing God. He subdues our enemies under us; He gives us the Gates as one of the implements by which He effects this; He has subdued the sixteen or twenty nations in India and Burmah under our feet; He has given us Australasia as a vast possession; and now He is preparing for a great British-Israelite empire in Africa, of which the firstfruits are the Cape Colonies, Natal, East and Central Africa, the West Coast territories and Egypt, to be followed, one day, we believe, by the Soudan. Then to us as His people He is a choosing God. He chooses for us, and will always choose for us, our inheritance—not only in Palestine in the future, but in the colonial and heathen empires and the Gates which give us the empire of the oceans of the earth. He is, besides, to us, a reigning God. He reigns over the nations—that is over the Goyim, or Gentile races—and He is seated as King upon the throne of His holiness.

The end of His purposes is to gather the nations under the banners of Israel, that they may, as to many of them, become, by amalgamation with Israel, the people of the God of Abraham, in accordance with Isa. xix. 25, which promotes Egypt to that honour, and with Zech. ii. 11, R.V., where many nations, it is declared, shall join themselves to the Lord in that day, "and shall be My people; and I will dwell in the midst of them, and thou shalt know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me unto thee."

In choosing for us as Israel His people, He has given us not only the gifts we have named, but, as stated in ver. 4, the excellency of Jacob whom He loved or loveth perpetually. This expression occurs in Amos. vi. 8 and viii. 7, and appears to represent the glory and pride, the greatness and grandeur of Jacob's people according to the prophecies of the Old Testament. Some of these we have named already. Another cluster of their rich blessings occurs in Isa. lviii. 14 as God's reward to them for observing the Sabbath rightly. It is reserved for them to "ride upon the high places of the earth and to feed on the heritage of Jacob thy father, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." The heritage of Jacob, no doubt, includes the birthright of Joseph and his sons, involving national supremacy, wealth, power, expansion, influence, godliness, Christian beneficence, evangelistic enterprise, love of the Lord's Sabbaths, laws, and word. These united constitute the excellency of Jacob, whom the Lord ever loveth. Him whom God loveth He loveth for ever. "I the Lord Jehovah change not" (Mal. iii. 6, R.V.), "therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed."

One thought twice repeated in Psa. xlvii. must not be passed by. In ver. 2, 7, the words appear, "God is the King of all the earth; He is a great King over all the earth." Christ's claim is to the planet. Satan has usurped the throne at present; but this is only for a time. Christ the Lord is the real King. He is a great King, and He rules even now over all the earth. The Lord Jesus Christ is coming, ere long, to establish His kingdom, with Ephraim-Israel for His people, and then will God reign over the nations, while sitting in the person of God the Son, on the throne of His holiness (ver 8). To Him let Israel give all the praise.

"GO, AND TELL THEM."

THE story of the Lord's cure of the demoniac, as told in Matt. viii. 28; Mark v. 1—20; and Luke viii. 26—39, has a message for us all. The raving demoniac, driven from his family, his house and city, went forth into the wilderness among the tombs, and there, a misery to himself and a terror to the people of the country-side, he was haunted by evil spirits and separated from his God. Like Israel, he was joined to his idols: and God let Him alone (Hos. iv. 17). The condition of that people, indeed, fell from bad to worse. But divine grace followed them, as it did the demoniac. Though let alone by their angry God, and allowed to taste the bitterness of the fruits of sin and idolatry, there was mercy for them yet in the extremity of their woe. The words of compassion for them in their banishment from God were these: "Return, thou backsliding Israel, saith the Lord; I will not cause My anger to fall upon you, for I am merciful, saith the Lord, and I will not keep My anger for ever. . . . Turn, O backsliding children, saith the Lord; for I am married unto you, and I will take you one of a city and two of a family and bring you to Zion" (Jer. iii. 12).

Hos. xi. 8, 9 also gives us a comforting picture of the Lord's compassion for His afflicted people. "I will not return to destroy Ephraim," was the keynote of the repentings of Him who was God and not man—the Holy One in the midst of Israel. He accordingly cured the House of Israel, restored them to His favour, and brought them to their appointed place of blessing and enlargement (2 Sam. vii. 10), meaning to give them once more the land of Israel, since it was the land which He hath given to their fathers for an inheritance (Jer. iii. 18). But meanwhile before the return takes place, what does the Lord do for His people after He has saved them and before He returns to reign over them in Mount Zion? Like the demoniac seated at the feet of Jesus, clothed, and in his right mind, they would fain be with Jesus, and rest contented to sit idly by, enjoying the bright shining of His face and the safety of His presence. There they would, like him, be secure from the future attacks of their demon foes. The demoniac, impelled by fear, perhaps, of this dreaded fate, prayed Him that he might be with Him, but Jesus sent him away, and his prayer was refused. But yet it was answered in the manner best suited for the true benefit of the sufferer. The Lord gave him this command when He told him to go. "Return," He said, "to thy house," or "Go home to thy friends," according to St Mark, "and declare how great things God hath done for thee." And he went his way, publishing not only in his house and among his family and friends, but throughout the whole city, nay, in the open country of Decapolis, how great things God (Jesus and God being identical in his mind) had done for him" (Luke viii. 39).

The Lord's command to redeemed Israel was similar to that given to the cured demoniac. Saved by His grace, they must act henceforth as true servants for the Master. Theirs', too, was the command, "Go ye therefore into all the world, and preach the Gospel (or good news) to every creature"; "Go ye therefore and make disciples of all the nations . . . teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you" (Matt. xxviii. 19; Mark xvi. 15). Witnessing for Jesus is best accomplished by preaching the good news or Gospel to all the nations and families of the earth, and the universality of the occupation being the sign by which the witnessing nation, the Israel of God, may best be identified and known. The kingdom of God was taken from the Jews by the direct judgment and command of the Lord Jesus Christ, and it was given by Him to a nation (Ephraim-Israel) bringing forth the fruits thereof (Matt. xxi. 43).

If we desire, then, to know where that nation is "sitting, clothed, and in its right mind," at the feet of Jesus, we must look for a Christian people who pre-eminently are known as "the sons of the living God," or "the Christian nation" (Hos. i. 10), who are a blessing to all the nations, families, and kindreds of the earth (Gen. xxii. 18, xxviii. 14; Acts iii. 25). That nation is the one entrusted to-day with the oracles of God (Rom. iii. 2, R.V.), and yet is anxious to distribute the Word to all the nations. It has for its tried agency for this purpose the British and Foreign Bible Society. We have to find a nation whose missionary auxiliaries avowedly embrace the whole world, and whose aim and effort is to evangelize all mankind. Such a nation must needs be powerful on land and sea to be able to carry out its destiny, and its riches built on commerce must be adequate for such mighty enterprizes as these embrace. It must have as the theatre of its operations a grand and unique heathen empire, besides a company of nation colonies in the four quarters of the earth—west, and east, and north, and south—whither they must have successively spread abroad according to the prophecies (Gen. xxviii. 14). A nation answering to all these marks we find, as most men if candid will allow, in the British nation planted in the isles of the west, and yet in the north country, where Israel was to be settled afar off from Palestine (Isa. xxiv. 15; Jer. iii. 18, xxxi. 10).

THE FEDERATION OF THE EMPIRE.

We have received an official copy of the debates in the Queensland Parliament, of July 18 and 19, 1893, in which the speech of Mr. Macfarlane, one of the Members of the Legislative Assembly, on the subject of the Federation of the Colonies, and of the Empire as well, is sure to be interesting to our readers. His appreciation of the greatness of Great Britain is in accordance with God's promises to Israel. The statesman considers ours to be the "greatest nation in the world";—a position God assigned to "Israel obedient" in Deut. xxviii. 1, 13. She was to be set high above all the nation, "the head and not the tail, above only and not beneath." Accordingly Mr. Macfarlane, speaking as a colonist, declares that the British are "the leading nation now." His words were as follows:—

Mr. Macfarlane: I am very much pleased with this discussion, because I am one of those who think that federation is by no means dead. It is only sleeping or resting. It may have come a little before its time; but in a struggle between life and death, when men are in want of even the necessaries of life, we cannot blame them for forgetting federation in the meantime and thinking of more serious things. The federation of these colonies must come sooner or later, and there is no use in arguing that we must wait until all the colonies are equal in importance and population. That will never happen and the real question is: Is federation likely to do us any good? Would we be better off federated than without federation? As the Premier put it: "What are we to expect from federation?" I expect very great things indeed from it. We will never be a nation until federation takes place. Look at Great Britain, the greatest nation in the world! Is there any other nation in the world that has such colonies? Look to what has been taking place within the last three or four months in the desire of Canada for a kind of federation with Queensland. It is a massing together of races sprung from the same race for the purposes of general protection; and look to what we might expect from a federation, first of all, of these colonies, and then of the colonies with the Imperial nation. No doubt we could do a great deal by combining to protect ourselves, but we have to look at the world as a whole in these matters, and such things are taking place as are likely to lead to a crisis such as has never taken place in the world before. To men who have studied the question it is evident that a great crisis is before the nations, and I say we shall be bound to federate together, and to federate with Great Britain. Only fancy all the British-speaking peoples of the world being federated, and what would they become? They are the leading nation now; but they might become a nation that would subdue all the other nations of the earth. Hon. members may laugh, but this is no new idea. It is the feeling which has taken possession of the hearts and minds of the people—that some great crisis is coming, and what can we do better than to federate, and bring about strength in the nation? I do not think money has been wasted in connection with the Federal Council, for the seed has been well sown and will bring forth fruit. It is just possible that we commenced too soon with federation, and that New South Wales will prove the medium to keep us back until the proper time when, all things being ready, federation will take place. I believe the time will not be very long, and I have great pleasure in expressing my concurrence with the resolutions.

MORE BLIND EVIDENCE RESPECTING BRITISH-ISRAEL TRUTH.

(Extracted from C. von Orelli's "Old Testament Prophecy on Isa. xlii. 1 concerning the Servant of Jehovah.")

By J. S. B.

He asks, "Who is God's instrument in affecting this deliverance?" This question takes us to the main idea of the book. The outward deliverance indeed Cyrus will accomplish, but the incomparably greater and more difficult work of spiritual redemption another must perform—the servant of Jehovah, whose form here emerges more and more out of obscurity in new and mysterious dignity.

The nation of Israel had been designed by the Mosaic covenant to serve God (Exod. iv. 23), to be His peculiar people, obediently rendering Him the service He desired on earth. Hence the great distinction is for God to call Israel "His servant," as in Jer. xxx. 10, where it is said that it shall belong to no other master but its rightful lord. On this broad national basis stands the Isaianic idea of the servant of the Lord, as xli. 8 ff. (cf. xliv. 1) proves. There the Lord with tender good-will addresses Israel-Jacob, the seed of His friend Abraham, as His chosen servant, and assures it of His assistance in all weakness (chap. xli. 14). By this means it will rise victorious above its foes, and crush to pieces the proud mountains and hills of the world, after God has redeemed and refreshed His poor, desponding people. Chap. xliv. 1 ff., xlviii. 20, return to the same breadth of conception. "Servant of the Lord' is Israel's official name, stamped on it by God's love as a character indelible. Hence it not only bears the name where in the light of God's grace it appears as His actual instrument, but even where its unfitness for such an office comes out most strikingly (chap. xlii. 19). The italics here are ours.

But just as little ought it to be overlooked that in Old Testament usage this title of honour is usually assigned to individuals—namely, to the greatest instruments selected by

Digitized by Google

God for His service (compare the way in which in the New Testament the apostles assume the title as the highest distinction, Jas. i. 1; Jude v. 1; Rom. i. 1, &c.). And, indeed Moses . . . . is called "servant of Jehovah" far the oftenest and the Lord calls David with special preference "My servant" (see also Isaiah xxxvii. 28; Jer. xxxii. 21, f. 26; Ezek. xxiv. 23; xxxvii. 25). This idea, like that of Son of God, originally given to the whole nation, and first fully developed in the Lord's Anointed, tends towards a personal consummation. Such is the case in Isaiah in a striking manner. Although he starts from the vocation of the entire nation to be God's servant, and recurs to it as an inalienable office of Jacob-Israel, yet in his view, as soon as he begins to speak more precisely of the work of spiritual redemption and the instrument chosen for its accomplishment, the bearer of this office assumes a personal definiteness—"Behold My Servant"—i.e., Christ.

SOLOMON AND THE BRITISH MILE.

In a late issue of the Eastern Province Herald paper, Port Elizabeth, the following was given :—

"Engineering is reviving the discussion on the metric system, and the change from our solid inch to the metre and its divisions, is being advocated very strenuously by some manufacturers. No doubt a uniform system would be a great advantage, and so would a universal language. But Sir John Herschell settled the matter four-and-twenty years ago, as far as England was concerned, against the metric system of France. This system fixes the metre as a ten-millionth part of a quadrant of the earth's surface, but it is now known that the earth's equator is not a circle, and has different lengths of equatorial diameters, and has, therefore, different lengths of quadrants in different longitudes. Consequently this system is scientifically incorrect, whereas the old English inch is the very essence of science, being the five hundred-millionth part of the polar diameter of the earth. England and the United States have rejected the metric system, because 'it is clumsy, inaccurate, artificial, and unscientific.'"

To the above I sent:—

"Sir,—Upon reading your paragraph, 'The Metric System,' I feel induced to send the following:—'Since 1879 I have been engaged upon the subject of geometry, &c., of the Bible with the result, so to say, of finding it the most scientific book in existence. Confining these remarks to your heading, I find that taking the solid contents of the Temple built by King Solomon, according to the measures given, with the cubit as the sacred cubit of 25-inches length, the total cubic contents of the Holy of Holies, and the house of the Temple taken conjointly, amount to 500,000,000 (five hundred million) of cubic inches. And as such could represent a line of that length, then, as shewn by Sir John Herschell, the polar diameter of the earth is represented by the same figures. These figures, reduced to miles, give 7,891·412 miles of the polar diameter of the earth. There are many other points of like character connected with the Temple in reference to earth measures.'

"Yours, &c., N. Cooper.

"Graaff Reinet, S. Africa, Aug. 8, 1893."

Note by H. R. Shaw.

The foregoing statement of Mr. Cooper as to the dimensions of the Temple of Solomon, although somewhat startling, will be found upon examination to be strictly accurate as regards what may be termed the nett capacity of the Temple-house and the oracle conjoined, which do, undoubtedly, produce together 500 million cubic inches, if we allow that a "cubit of the first measure" means 25 inches, and that the inches are of the true geometrical value as ascertained by Sir John Herschell, equal to 1·001 British inches. But we believe that beyond this nett capacity there was a gross capacity which produces a number of cubic inches even more interesting to us British people. In 1 Kings vi. 2, we read that the house which King Solomon built for the Lord, the length, breadth, and height thereof, were respectively 60, 20, and 30 cubits. This length and breadth is confirmed by the chronicler who, however, says nothing about the height, but does inform us that the cubits were after the first measure (or sacred cubits). Now, it may be easily computed that these cubits multiplied together and reduced to inches, say, $60 \times 20 \times 30 \times 15{,}625$, produce 562,500,000 cubic inches, a number sufficient when laid end to end to measure the earth's polar axis and one-eighth portion besides; although it is true that the oracle portion of the building being, according to verse 20, contracted in height to 20 cubits, so as to give a cube of 20 cubits, we must subtract 62,500,000 cubic inches (say, $20 \times 20 \times 10 \times 15{,}625$) to obtain the nett capacity as found by Mr. Cooper. But it nevertheless seems to be a fair assumption upon reading verses 16 and 17 that this contraction of the oracle was made from within, and that therefore the empty shell of the building really gave a gross capacity of one-eighth part more than 500 million inches. Should this much be granted, we perceive at once a most important connection and harmony indeed between the Great Pyramid in Egypt, shewn in the Banner, January to April, 1890, to be the very pattern given by the Lord to David for this Temple, and the inches value of our statute British mile. For, as fully explained in the papers just alluded to, the most just determination of the capacity of the celebrated Coffer in the King's Chamber of the Great Pyramid is that made by Mr. Simpson—viz., 71,280 cubic inches of the geometrical pattern produced by Sir John Herschell, and which furthermore agrees to within two inches of the value, 71,282, previously assigned by Piazzi Smyth to the capacity of the Ark of the Covenant, and also to the number of linear inches which go to measure the arris lines, or external boundaries of the Great Pyramid building. And if the British mile be allowed to consist of 63,360 of these inches, which differ only microscopically from its own inches, then it may easily be perceived, as was pointed out by the present writer in Banner, February 1, 1882, that not only does the Great Pyramid measure $1\frac{1}{8}$ miles, or a mile with a furlong in outline, but that if this outline were formed, say, of a rope one inch in square section, it would just fill its own Coffer, or the Ark of the Covenant, or sundry other sacred vessels known to Biblical history.

Now, it will have been noticed that by the foregoing argument, while the contents of the Ark or Coffer may be spread out into nine-eighths of a mile, the gross contents of the Temple building may be spread out into nine-eighths of the earth's polar axis. Whence it follows, that as the Ark was to the Temple of Solomon, so is the mile to the earth's polar axis, for $\frac{500{,}000{,}000}{63{,}360} = \frac{562{,}500{,}000}{71{,}280} = 7891{\cdot}414 +$ times. And so it would seem that Solomon, like Moses and Cheops, was well acquainted with the British mile and its component inches, and has memorialised them together with the earth's polar diameter in the capacity of his Temple building. For, whereas the Coffer of Cheops and the Ark of Moses were each capable of containing accurately a mile and its eighth part, or furlong, coiled up as it were in cubic inches, so Solomon goes further, and constructs a house capable of containing the earth's polar diameter and its eighth part coiled up in like manner as cubic inches, and therefore capable of containing the measure of the Coffer or of the Ark as many times as the earth's polar diameter will contain the (restored) British mile—viz., 7891·414.

It should be added, that as the inch has deteriorated through the ages by its thousandth part, of course the statute mile has become thereby shortened by about five feet.

LIEUT.-COL. ALBERT E. GOLDSMID ON THE COLONIZATION OF PALESTINE.

THE Manchester Guardian published the following speech by Lieut.-Col. Albert E. Goldsmid, on August 5th last. The subject was "The Colonization of Palestine," and the conveners of the meeting were "the lovers of Zion" belonging to the Camp of "The Chovevi Zion" Col. Albert Goldsmid having recently held the post of Director-General of Baron Hirsch's Agricultural Colonies in Argentina, his address was listened to by a crowded assembly of local celebrities and Jews. The speech will be interesting also to our readers, and therefore we reproduce it:—

Lieut-Col. Goldsmid (who was received with loud cheers) said he had been deeply interested for many years in the colonzation of Palestine, and he determined to go himself and see how far this was practicable. It was in the spring of 1883 he went there, going through Egypt. When off Jaffa, and from half-a-mile to three-quarters of a mile from shore, they could smell the scent of the orange blossom, which showed what an immense quantity of orange trees there must be in that district. The sight was indeed truly grand. In the first colony he visited he found an intelligent lot of people, but they had not enough money to go on with their work. They lived in little huts, and it did not seem as if they could exist much longer unless aid was sent them. He next passed through the beautiful valley of Jezreel, which was one of the most beautiful valleys in the world. Palestine was not the unfertile country that most people represented to them, because along the valley from Sharon to Jaffa the land was most fertile, but money was needed to cultivate the land. To ensure success in colonization anywhere two or three things were absolutely necessary. The chief cause of failure was the selection of the colonists. It was useless to send out people physically and morally unfit, or who had not sufficiently strong families to give promise of success; but when the pioneer was established then they might introduce those who were physically fit and let them learn. It was equally necessary to select suitable sites for colonies—suitable for the produce to be grown, and suitable for market purposes. Having established a colony, its management was best if worked on an administrative system; self-government was utterly impossible. If one thing was more likely than any other to sink a colony, unless a very firm hand was held over the colonists, it was the quarrels and jealousies that frequently arose. Unity was absolutely necessary to success. As regards the Chovevi Zion, the Sultan had given his consent to its work being progressed with, and they had now 2,400 acres of land in Gilead, which would probably be one of the granaries of the world when the colonization scheme was completed. It was proposed to send out there 50 families. In the Argentina 125 acres of land was the least quantity given to a family. Two hundred thousand tons of grain had been sent from Gilead on camels to the sea. In that country, which included part of the Jordan Valley, cotton and tobacco could be grown, and there was no reason why indigo, the palm, and the sugar cane—which were all very valuable—should not be cultivated. But they must be very careful and not take a leap in the dark. It was no use sending out fifty families unless they knew that fifty families could earn their livelihood. In some countries less land was wanted than in others. For instance, half-a-dozen acres of land in the neighbourhood of Manchester would be a great deal more valuable than ten times that amount of land in the wilds of Cumberland or Yorkshire. One great concession which had been granted them was the construction of a railway from Hyfa to Damascus. (Applause.) That was a great piece of work, and the probability was that when the railway was finished it would not only double but treble the value of land. They knew the work he (the speaker) had been doing for the last 1½ years. (Applause.) Before he went out to the Argentina the work of their society was the one thing he loved best of anything else in the world. (Applause.) So long as he was doing right according to his own conscience, he cared not what the world thought of him. (Applause.) He determined to go to school, and he had learned more in the 1½ years he had been away than he could have learned in twenty years in England by studying Blue Books. They had a great task before them, and it was the duty of every Jew throughout the world to be looking about him. Until they had a political centre the Jewish race would always suffer. He thoroughly believed that the Jewish question would continue to exist until the objects of the Chovevi Zion were carried out. One of the greatest causes of the persecution of the Jews had been the neglecting of the national idea, and the want of a political centre. The question was not one to be settled by them, but by the Governments of Europe, which could not quietly sit down and see five millions of people practically extirpated. It could not be expected that England or France, or even America, should receive the whole lot, and it was absolutely necessary, in order to stop the process of persecution, that they should be heard in the councils of the nations. (Applause.) The speaker concluded, amidst cheers, by moving the following resolution:—

"That this meeting very cordially approves of the objects of the Chovevi Zion 'Lovers of Zion' Association, and pledges itself to use its best efforts to assist in sending out the first colonists and establishing them on the land already purchased by the association in Eastern Palestine."

Such are Col. Goldsmid's plans and purposes for training the Jews to become fit occupants of Palestine when the nations of Europe will allow them to go back. Of course, if compared with God's purposes which are declared clearly in Jer. iii. 18, and Ezek. xxxvii. 15—28, there is a good deal of difference between the two plans. God's are that the Jews having proceeded to the House of Israel, the two Houses will journey together from the land of the North to the land of Palestine which He gave as an inheritance to their fathers. Col. Goldsmid, ignoring the House of Israel altogether as unworthy (apparently) of consideration, would prepare the Jews for an agricultural life, in view to their taking possession of Palestine in due course of time. We quite see that Col. Goldsmid's project may be a very good preparation for the Divine restoration of His at present divided people. But of one thing we are sure—namely, that it will take place strictly in accordance with the prophecies, and that under any circumstances there can be no successful return of the tribes to their own land without the direct cooperation of the House of Israel, who are the British people. It is, however, a very hopeful sign of the times that at this period of our history the practical effort is being made in many directions to assist the return of the Jews to their land. In regard to the coming troubles in Palestine which must attend the "break up" of the Turkish Empire, we cannot see that it would be kind or thoughtful on our part nationally to encourage any large return of the House of Judah exclusively to Palestine. We should personally stand aside from any active cooperation in such a movement, believing it to be contrary to God's purposes as revealed in the Word. But we regard the efforts so many are making in this direction as a plain indication of the great movement towards Palestine which we hope and believe to be near at hand. It will benefit the Jews no doubt and be to the glory of God. But it will include the restoration of British-Israel also, whose will be ten-twelfths of the Holy Land, as the great, powerful and preponderating portion of the seed of Abraham. When the Word of God has so clearly intimated what the programme of the return is to be, and when the division of the land is prophetically recorded in chapter xlviii. of the prophecy of Ezekiel, we wonder that men like Col. Goldsmid, who are devoting their lives to the accomplishment of the restoration of the Jews, do not first try and ascertain what God's mind on the subject may be? They would find, if they looked, that the Jews in their return must first of all seek the companionship of Ephraim or the House of Israel (Jer. iii. 18); that the two Houses will then unite, and appoint themselves one head; and finally that they, so united, will set out, together, to go to the land "which the Lord hath given to their fathers for an inheritance." That land is Palestine (Hosea i, 11; Jer. iii. 18). On that occasion Israel is destined to take Judah to the Lord in Mount Zion as "a present." Divided as two separate sticks just now, the two Houses of Israel, Ephraim and Judah, will in that coming day be united as one stick in the hand of the Lord; and so united, will ever remain "one nation and one kingdom" "on the mountains of Israel," under the direct guidance and sovereignty of the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, His people, "for ever" and "for evermore" (Ezek. xxxvii. 15—28, R.V.). How these events are to fit in with the efforts Col. Goldsmid is making for the colonization of Palestine by means of the Jews alone we hardly know? But the plans do not seem to be identical; nor while Scripture is ignored can they be so, as far as we can judge.

THE MERCHANT SHIPPING OF THE WORLD AND WHAT ISRAEL'S SHARE OF IT IS.

A FRENCH semi-official institution which deals with the subject has just issued a statement showing the number of vessels, steamers, and sailing ships together, and separately, which the world's mercantile marine possesses, and what share of each falls to the British flag. The statement which follows cannot be laid to our charge as an attempt to glorify the British nation, because the information comes from a source which cannot be suspected. It is the published account of a foreign—that is, a French—authority, and must be accepted, not as the crazy Anglo-Israelite's partial version of a great fact, but as the truth which a Frenchman finds and publishes to the world.

The Lancashire Evening Express, of Sept. 21, in publishing the figures, like many other papers—to wit, the London Daily Chronicle and others—declares that Great Britain is "well to the front," which is indeed the case. We have no wish to boast of the fact. We well know that all our national blessings are from the hand of the Lord, and that whatever we possess we receive from Him, because we are His people Israel. The Lancashire Journal wrote as follows:—

"The new issue of the Bureau Veritas's Répertoire Général de la Marine Marchande states that of 12,801 steamers above 100 tons that exist in the world to-day, 5,694 are British. Great Britain also possesses nearly one-third of the existing sailing ships, and more than one-third of the sailing tonnage. Her ships, steam and sailing, number 14,971 out of a total of 42,557. Next to Great Britain come the United States, with 3,794 ships; Norway, with 3,768 ships; Germany, with 2,165 ships; Italy, with 2,122 ships; and Russia, with 2,001 ships. But, omitting sailing vessels, and counting steamers only, Great Britain, with her 5,694 steamers, is followed by Germany, which comes next, and which owns only 779, France which owns 500, and Norway which owns 490. It is computed that if placed end to end the British merchant vessels now afloat would stretch for a distance of 570 miles, or from Cape Clear to Corunna, and that if placed side to side they would more than suffice to bridge the mouth of the channel between Falmouth and Brest. Their present value is estimated at not less than £220,000,000 sterling, and, making only seven voyages, they could without much difficulty transport all the inhabitants of the United Kingdom with their personal luggage to the United States or elsewhere. The shipping company that possesses the largest amount of tonnage is the famous P. and O. Of fourteen merchant steamers of 8,000 tons and upwards nine are British, the largest of them being the Cunarders, Campania and Lucania, each of 12,950 tons. The largest American vessels are, of course, the Paris and New York (10,800 tons), which, however, were built in England; the largest German vessel is the First Bismarck (8,874 tons); and the largest French vessel is the Touraine (8,863 tons)."

The order of shipowning when steam and sailing vessels are reckoned together puts Great Britain far ahead of the rest. Then come in order the United States, Norway, Germany, Italy, and Russia. "The most astonishing fact of all, however," says the Daily Chronicle, "is the enormous gap which intervenes between the number of steamers only owned by Great Britain and by her nearest rival which in this case is Germany. We have 5,694, Germany 779, as stated above, with France a bad third of 500." Flattering indeed is this to the nation's pride as a commercial power; but our risks and responsibilities are also greatly increased and the knowledge that all we have is the gift of God to His people Israel should sober our elation and induce us to give thanks and praise to the Redeemer of Israel for His lovingkindness to us His chosen people.

With nearly as many steamers as the whole of the rest of the nations throughout the world possess, it can be imagined what enormous power we have acquired under God "to get wealth," and we have thus disclosed to us the mode whereby God has fulfilled His promise to us, made in Deut. viii. 18, by the mouth of His prophet Moses: "Thou shalt remember the Lord thy God, for it is He who giveth thee power to get wealth, that He may establish His covenant which He sware unto thy fathers as it is this day."

In case of war with one of the maritime powers of Europe then, if such were possible in the face of the promise to Israel in Isa. xxvi. 12, we may rest assured that "the power to get wealth" is a gift of God bestowed upon His people by Him, and that what He has given for His own glory He can be trusted to preserve and guard for His people's benefit. Our merchant shipping, whether steam or sailing, then, is under God's protection, and we may safely leave it there, after taking all the precautions in our power, in respect to the increase and maintenance of our fighting navy, to protect it upon the seas, in going out and coming home with its precious freights of British imports and exports. In Isa. lx. 11 (R.V.) we have another national promise of security for our sea-borne commerce in the words, "Thy Gates shall be open continually; they shall not be shut day nor night; that men may bring unto thee the wealth of the nations and their kings led with them." This seems to imply that peace will be ordained for us and for our wealth-bringing commercial navies: "For the nation and kingdom that will not" serve us is doomed to perish and be "utterly wasted." In short, peace and national progress will be ours as the result of God's blessing on us, His people, and those nations who would desire to oppose us will be brought to nought as a punishment for resisting God's will. Let Israel therefore praise the Lord for His goodness to His chosen nation—British-Israel.

REPORT OF THE ANGLO-ISRAEL FREE DISTRIBUTION FUND FOR 1893.

THOSE who have not yet obtained a copy of the above report should do so, as it is an able, chatty, and cheering résumé of the work of the year. The plan followed by the Free Distribution Fund is "to give liberally to those who cannot buy for themselves, but of whom there is well-grounded expectation that they will read and try to induce others to do so. Sowers are requested to refrain from giving to people who have received the fact of the revelation of Israel and who have the means to purchase literature for themselves."

The publications of the Association are further lent to parties who cannot afford to purchase expensive books, and so they pass from hand to hand; those who can contributing to the Fund as they are able, in thankfulness for what they have received, and to deepen the assurance that God is faithful, that the Gospel of our salvation is true, and that God is a God of love.

Miss Rush believes very justly that ours is missionary work. She believes that the seed-sowing in which she and we all are engaged as subscribers to the Fund, is the preaching of the Gospel of the kingdom to the whole world for a testimony unto all the nations. "To make known this Gospel of the kingdom is the object of our mission." The writer of the report notices the fact that in the present day little attention is paid to "the kingdom," "the kingdom of heaven," and the kingdom of God, which was the text of so many of our Lord's sayings. He spoke of "an earthly kingdom, and not only of a spiritual one." In preaching this Gospel of the kingdom, the Gospel of salvation must be included. "The Gospel of salvation preached alone does not and cannot include that of the kingdom." The report has much to say on the subject of the kingdom, and informs us of a surprising opening for Identity literature in the Hawaii Islands. The long list of places to which the Free Distribution Fund sends its literature is a striking testimony to the world-wide interest in the subject which the Association has been mainly instrumental in creating.

During 1892 the Fund received larger contributions than ever before; more sowers than previously were employed, and a larger sphere of territory for seed-sowing occupied. The report closes as it ought to do, with the chorus of thanks to the Lord. A balance-sheet shows that a little over £129 has been received and spent during 1892. We are thankful that the Fund has so able and zealous an honorary secretary as Miss Rush, and so careful a treasurer as Miss Jessie Lawrence. We beg our readers to support it.

THE IDENTITY AT CHESTER.

A GOOD audience, containing a large proportion of Bible students, assembled in the Temperance Hall, Chester, on the evening of September 28th, to hear a lecture by the Rev. F. Aston, of Wolverhampton, on the subject, "Is the Empire of Great Britain spoken of in the Bible?"

After quoting the sayings of eminent foreigners concerning the British Empire and people and the English language, the reverend lecturer, without once deviating from the sacred writings, demonstrated that in the latter days Israel must be a nation and company of nations, occupying isles north-west of Palestine, under a king or queen of David's line, and blessed of God in things temporal and spiritual, above all the nations of the earth, so as to be correctly described as the head and not the tail; then pointing to the British nation as the only one answering this description, his hearers were irresistibly led to the conclusion that the British are Israel, and that the British Empire is spoken of in the Bible. The lecture was listened to with marked attention, and at its close several questions in writing were put to the lecturer which he had no difficulty in answering satisfactorily. The questions were, Why make a distinction between Judah and Israel, and what is the distinction? Would you explain a little more clearly how the throne of David is perpetuated? What bearing has the identity on Roman Catholicism? One gentleman, on leaving the hall, said, "We must read our Bibles over again."

The chairman was the Rev. John Williams, and his fairness and courtesy in that position were recognised by the audience in a very hearty vote of thanks. A vote of thanks was also accorded to Rev. F. Aston. The meeting closed with the benediction. A remarkable feature of this meeting was that it was almost exclusivel composed of the male element.

THE WORD OF GOD.

IN our "Random Shafts" of Aug. 9, No. 867, "John Shootingham" refers us to a statement of an American divine that "the Bible is not the Word of God," and to the challenge of Dr. Horton to the effect that no one can find those words "the Word of God" used in the Bible to designate the Bible or employed in one part to designate any other part of it.

In John x. 34—36 the Lord Jesus Christ Himself replied to the Jews in respect to their accusation that, being a man, He made Himself God, when He claimed that He and His Father were one (ver. 30). He said this: "Is it not written in your law, I said ye are gods? If He called them gods to whom the Word of God came (and the Scripture cannot be broken), say ye of Him whom the Father sanctified and sent into the world, Thou blaspheme th, because I said, I am the Son of God." The Lord here referred to Psa. lxxxii. 6, and quoted it. It was part of the Jews' law, and was "the Word of God," which He told them came to the Jews. It was, He said, part of "the Scriptures which cannot be broken"—those writings which testify of the Lord Jesus Christ (John v. 39). Here was a part of the Bible included in the law of the Jews—a portion they have handed on to us as "the Scriptures," described by the Lord Himself as "the Word of God," which came to them.

St. Paul, during his visit to Thessalonica, mentioned in Acts xvii. 1, reasoned with the Jews in their synagogue "as his manner was," out of the Scriptures." At Berea also he preached "the Word" to them, such being the Word of God," and again the appeal was to "the Scriptures" which were those of our Old Testament portion of the Bible. These and many other lines of proof testify that the term "Word," or "Word of God," is often used in the Scriptures to signify the Bible, or a part of the Bible which is our nation's heirloom.

RECENT PUBLIC NOTICES RESPECTING "OUR IDENTITY."

WE believe that our Anglo-Israelites' presistence in their belief, and the untiring energy with which we are all urging it on the attention of the world, is at last producing some effect. We do not mean that people are accepting our views. It has not yet come to that! But they are beginning to find us troublesome, and they are making an effort to get rid of us. For instance, we saw in a recent number of the BANNER how exercised Col. A. O. Molesworth is by our teaching. On page 341 we found he called our ideas "such nonsense," and he went on to describe the evil effects of our teaching in all sorts of erroneous ways, which happily laid him open to attack from our not unwilling pen. We have now to notice another rather malicious opponent, one who, writing in a paper called The Free Christian, goes by the name of H. A. Cookson, M.R.C.S. He was writing on "Ecclesiastical Parallels," and enlarged on "the signs indicative of the time of the end," and of the return of the Jews to the Holy Land. He openly declares, in the commencement of his article, that he uses the term "Jew" to denote a descendant of the Twelve Tribes of Israel. That is, he holds that the Jews are representatives of the whole nation. He believes proof of this idea is contained in St. James' Epistle, chap. i. 1, addressed to the Twelve Tribes scattered abroad throughout the Roman Empire. "This," he says, with total unconsciousness of the glaring non sequitur he was putting forward, "abundantly proves that at the time of the apostles the Jews were regarded as the whole of the Israelitish people, but not merely the Two Tribes of Judah and Benjamin as the Anglo-Israelites suppose."

But the Anglo-Israelites can read the New Testament Scriptures as well as H. A. Cookson. Consulting St. Paul's writing they find in Rom. xi. 1 that the false idea had got abroad then that God had cast away His people the Israelites. This did not look like the Jews being regarded as the whole of the Israelitish people! People thought they had been cast away by their God for ever! St. Paul indignantly denied the fact. "God forbid!" he answered, "God hath not cast away His people which He foreknew."

We Anglo-Israelites also can read St. Paul's Epistle to the Hebrews (chap. viii. 8, 10, 12), wherein we find that so far from the Jews representing the whole of the Israelitish people, St. Paul speaks of the work of Christ for the two Houses of Israel and Judah, separately dealt with, and tells us that Israel's covenant will come first. We allude to Mr. Cookson's paper, however, not so much on account of the above as to point to what he says respecting our views in the matter of the Identity of the British with Israel. He writes thus: "That the Ten Tribes are nowhere to be found, because they are spoken of as lost sheep in a figurative sense is an egregious error, equalled only by the vain conceit that the English-speaking people are the Lost Tribes. History attests the fact that the English are a mixture of various races. The Jews are a perfectly distinct race, and though unable to trace their pedigree to any particular tribe, they believe themselves to be the representatives of the whole nation."

The above really bristles with errors! In the first place the Jews do not believe themselves to be the representatives of the Twelve Tribes, because they are well aware that the House of Ephraim or Joseph is away from them now, and every Sabbath-day in their synagogues they pray that Ephraim may be discovered and restored to them, and that united they may return to their land, according to the prophecies. The Jews' prayers in their synagogues, as published, fully attest this fact, and show Mr. Cookson to be in error.

Again, we do not say that the English-speaking people are the Lost Tribes. The slaves of the Southern States in America are English-speaking people, but no one dreams of calling them a part of the Ten Tribes. We British, we believe, are the Ten-tribed House of Israel, and the United States of America represent the Tribe of Manasseh. But we cannot accept our opponent's definition. It is merely begging the question to say that "the Jews are a perfectly distinct race." That is a point for proof, and the burden of it, after the evidence we have adduced on our side, now rests with Mr. Cookson.

That the Jews could not have been regarded in our Lord's time as the representatives of the whole Israelitish people is clear from the fact that the Jews themselves strongly resented the idea that the Lord Jesus should go to the diaspora, or dispersion, among the Gentiles, or Greeks, and so teach the latter. To the same effect is John xi. 50, where the Jews are spoken of as a nation in separation from the children of God (Hos. i. 10), scattered abroad, as the diaspora, and still at the date of Caiaphus' prophecy in dispersion (the verb is in the Aorist).

We now leave Mr. Cookson and refer to the Daily Chronicle of January 26, 1893, where a review of a work called "The Kelt or Gael," by T. de Courcy Atkins, M.A. (London: T. Fisher Unwin) appeared. The reviewer finds great fault with the book as related to a class of authors who have become "the unconscious founders and compilers of text-books for that most extraordinary hallucination of modern times, the Anglo-Israel hypothesis." We are not told why our views are an hallucination, or the most extraordinary one of modern times. We suppose it is because of the so-called philological difficulties? We cannot reply because there is nothing given us on which a reply can be framed.

We come, lastly, to our third quotation, one from The Christian Commonwealth (July 1, 1893). It is certainly a remarkable addition to the reasons to be assigned for the alleged fact that Judah-Israelites, when they adopt our views, take to the Church of England in preference to some other body of Christians. The writer said:—

How is it that converted Israelites seem more naturally to take to the Church of England than to any other body? The reason is easy to divine. The services of the Church of England are exceedingly Jewish, and the worship of the modern Jewish synagogue is very ceremonious in respect to vestments, and very liturgical in respect to the participation of the people audibly. The Hebrews universally delight in church millinery and in canticles and responses. A visit on any Saturday to the nearest synagogue will enlighten anyone who is in doubt on this point. When Anglicans appeal to Hebrew inquirers they find tastes and sympathies cultured in readiness for response. The Church of England is one of those communions in which worship is arranged on the fundamental system of the Jewish temple. When a Jew becomes a Christian, the shock of his conversion must be definitely eased by the ceremonialism of Anglicanism.

We think we must leave the above without comment for the consideration of our friends. Begging them to note that the converted Judah-Israelite is alleged to adopt the Church of England because its ritual is Jewish!! When we read such remarks as these we think of the Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, of the Rev. Henry Roe, of the Rev. J. Idrisyn Jones, and of the Rev. Mr. Billington, and ask if they now belong to the Church of England, much less to its ritualistic portion? Also whether the Editor of the BANNER, who is an evangelical and very low Churchman indeed, is going after the pronounced high Churchism of the day, and that because the latter is Jewish? Finally, whether it is true or false that the Jews, when they see the semi-popery of some of the churches of the English communion, and the worship of the bread and wine therein, are not repelled rather than attracted by the idolatry?

One point raised by the writer in the Daily Chronicle we have omitted to notice. It deserves a parting glance. The reviewer says that history attests the fact that the English are a mixture of races, whereas the Jews are not. But is the testimony of history true as read by our modern school of historians? They declare that the Angles, the Saxons, the Jutes, the Danes, and the Northmen were not diverse races of men, but men of one single stock in their Asiatic home. There are others who deem the Celtic sections or original occupants of these islands before the advent of the Anglo-Saxons (in the fifth and sixth centuries) to be identical with the selfsame race in their Median sojourn in Central Asia, so that it comes to this, that if Rawlinson and the other savans be correct, the British people came from the same original stock. They were dispersed originally among many nations as wanderers, according to Hosea ix. 17 and Ezek. xi. 16, 17, and they have been gathered from many sources or peoples and formed into one nation again in "the isles of the west" or sea (Isa. xxiv. 15) in the place appointed for them by God Himself as a sanctuary of safety, according to 2 Sam. vii. 10.

THE BRITISH EMPIRE.

THE following sermon, by the Rev. W. Gray Dixon, M.A., appeared in the Warrnambool Echo (Melbourne, Australia), on June 22, 1893:—

"THE QUEEN'S ACCESSION ANNIVERSARY.

"On Sunday, parades of the local artillery (under command of Major Helpman) and cadets (under Lieutenant Caffin) were held, at which there were good attendances. In the morning the troops went to Christ Church of England, where the Ven. Archdeacon Beamish preached an appropriate sermon. In the evening the militia marched to St. John's Presbyterian Church, where the Rev. W. Gray Dixon, M.A., delivered an eloquent address. The rev. gentleman took for his text the well-known verse (2 Sam. xxiii. 4), which says:—'And it shall be as the light of the morning, when the sun riseth, a morning without clouds; when the tender grass springeth out of the earth, through clear shining after rain.'

"This morning I spoke of the ideal Ruler whose advent David in vision forsaw, and while identifying this Ruler with none but Jesus Christ, the King of kings, sought to find reflections of His glory in the character of our honoured and beloved Queen. This evening let me speak of the blessings which result from the sway of the ideal Ruler Jesus Christ, and more especially of such of these blessings as have appeared during the fifty-six years reign of Queen Victoria.

"The imagery under which the beneficent reign is presented to us is, as we noted this morning, very beautiful and suggestive—that of the fresh and luxuriant growth which arises when the kindly morning light of the sun streams down upon the fields and pastures that are still moist with the soft, refreshing showers of the night. When the righteous Ruler is on the throne, there shall be seen in the world of men a state of matters answering to this in the world of plants. The Ruler Himself shall be the sun, and the influence which radiates from Him into every department of His empire shall be the light; the events that have prepared His subjects for His advent shall be the showers; and the tender grass that springeth out of the earth shall be the development, mental, moral, political, and religious, that shall be the outcome of His government. 'It shall be as the light of the morning, when the sun riseth, a morning without clouds; when the tender grass springeth out of the earth, through clear shining after rain.'

"To David this glorious epoch was in the indefinite future. Where is it to us? It is our privilege to have been born in the midst of it. We do not yet see it fully realised, but we see it in process of realisation. It is potentially, if not actually realised. By that I mean that the power necessary to realise it has already been made manifest, and is now increasingly at work. That power is the kingly power of Christ, who more than eighteen centuries ago began His Messianic reign by causing the light of His countenance to shine upon the holy fields of Palestine, fields which had long been refreshed by showers of prophecy, and were now to become green with the verdure of the full-grown (Divine) graces. For these long centuries the Messianic fruits have been in process of development over different lands, and at different rates of increase. Sometimes the rate and extent of the development have been alike disheartening; but we must remember that the process has been invisible even more than visible; hidden within the sacred confines of human spirits even more than manifest in the outward features of human society. A time has now come, however—and great is our privilege to see it—when the morning light is bright and effective as never before, and the blessings of the reign of Christ are springing up with a luxuriance such as has never before gladdened human eyes. Citizens of the latter half of the 19th century, look around you if you would see the amplest fulfilment yet given of the ideal reign foretold by David. In sight of all who choose to look a world-wide horizon lies open to the view. The remotest ends of the earth are in perpetual touch. Unless it be at the Poles, where Nature herself has forged a lock which it is hard for human hands to open, the world no longer contains any chamber sealed against foreign entrance. From east to west, and north to south, Christ's 19th century sun is revealing and transfiguring the earth, dispelling the fog-banks of mutual ignorance which have so long divided the nations, and with these the prejudice which this ignorance has bred, and bringing forth on every side in all the hearts that are alive to it, wider sympathies, and larger hopes, and deeper gratitude to the Lord and to His Christ.

"Think of all that this unprecedented intercourse among the former by scattered nations involves:—Inventions to facilitate and accelerate travelling, such as the steamship and the locomotive, which have reduced hours to minutes, and months to weeks; inventions to facilitate and accelerate verbal communication, such as the telegraph and the telephone, which have well-nigh obliterated time and space altogether; an interchange of thought which has borne fruit in inventions and contrivances of the most ingenious kind for the more effective cultivation and ingathering of crops, and the more effective manufacture of all sorts of commodities, and the more effective dispatch of the crops ingathered and the goods manufactured to other lands where there is a demand for them; interchange of thought, which has brought truth into ever clearer light, and wrought continual transformations in the spheres of social science, politics, and religion, bettering the condition of nations which have long known the true faith, and carrying this faith widespread over the world, so as to make the epoch the most remarkable for missionary effort since the days of the apostles, the most remarkable, indeed, in the whole history of the Church, if we have regard to the outstanding feature of its missions—viz., the extent of their diffusion. Brethren, our eyes have seen and are seeing marvellous things. It would be difficult to over-estimate the goodliness and the greatness of the heritage into which, as citizens of this 19th century of Christ, we have been born. The chief marvel of the whole revelation is perhaps the fact that we marvel so little at it. Our sense of the marvellous seems to have been deadened by the frequent strains which, within the past few decades, have been put upon it; familiarity has tended to lessen respect, and we pass our lives with comparative indifference amid wonders which our grandfathers could no more have conceived than we can conceive the conditions of life in the planet Mars, if such there be. It is well, therefore, to take an opportunity such as is presented, to seriously consider the marvels of our age, to recognise their nature, discover their cause, and render due thanks for them to the Giver of all good.

"The ultimate cause of all the blessings, the Christian has no difficulty in finding. The cry is everywhere 'Forward!' Why is it 'Forward?' Because, 'with the broad sunlight there is hope,' and the sunlight is nothing else than the light of that day of Christ which David, uttering his last words, saw afar off, and was glad.

"The reasonableness, the inevitableness, of this conclusion will be all the more manifest when we observe that it is in Christendom that this marvellous development has had its impulse, and in Christendom predominantly in those countries which are most Christian. Imagine the influence of Britain extracted from the world-movements of the last fifty years, and how comparatively insignificant the progress that remains possible! And if with Britain you imagine her sister America to be excluded, the ship of the world's progress appears like one of our mail steamers whose engines have broken down, leaving her to proceed as best she may under sail. Now, Britain and America are undoubtedly the most Christian countries in the world. They are at this moment doing more by the direct preaching of the Gospel for the salvation of mankind than all other nations put together. They are undoubtedly the chosen people of these last days; and their exaltation is a conspicuous fulfilment of the Divine law that it is righteousness that exalteth a nation.

"But to confine our attention to our own Empire. We shall find that nowhere in the world, not even in America, has there been such progress within the last fifty-six years as there has been under the beneficent sway of the great and good Queen Victoria. It may be said that this progress has little or nothing to do with any personal influence of the Queen; that it would have gone on all the same independently of her. Well, this is true so far, but only so far. No doubt the increase of science and art, of commerce and industry, might have taken place under any ruler. But our social and moral progress have been largely due to the direct influence of the Queen, to her wisdom, her sympathy, and the noble example of her daily life. And even for our material progress we are more indebted to our Queen than we might at first be inclined to admit. The mere fact of one monarch having been on the throne for an unbroken period of fifty-six years has itself given a stability to the State that has operated beneficially all round; and this stability has been rendered doubly secure by the excellence of the monarch; for Her Majesty's conscientiousness and discretion in the discharge of her duties, and the sympathy she has ever shown with her people, have greatly intensified the confidence which the constitution of the monarchy was itself fitted to inspire, and therefore encouraged the people to invest their capital more freely to keep going with the greater energy and scope their commercial and industrial machinery. In proposing the Queen's health at a grand banquet in the palace of Bruhl, the late King of Prussia, thus happily spoke:—'There is a word of inexpressible sweetness to British, as well as to German, hearts. Thirty years ago it echoed on the heights of Waterloo from British and German tongues, after days of hot and desperate fighting, to mark the glorious triumph of our brotherhood in arms. This day, after a peace of thirty years' duration—the fruit of those arduous days—it resounds in the lands of Germany, on the banks of our noble Rhine. That word is Victoria.' Yes, brethren, and that is the word that re-echoes this day over the whole globe, from every corner of the Empire on which the sun never sets. Not least from Australia; not least from this colony, which in re-echoing it pronounces its own name—Victoria! It is of the glory of Queen Victoria that, under God, we will chiefly think of this day, as we look back upon those past fifty-six years of blessing; for it is her reign they have constituted, a reign, as the late Earl of Carlisle has nobly described it, of 'The glories of peace, of industry, of commerce, and of genius; of justice made more accessible; of education made more universal; of virtue more honoured; of religion more beloved; of holding forth the earliest Gospel light to the unawakened nations; the glories that arise from gratitude for benefits conferred; and the blessings of a loyal and chivalrous, because a contented people.'

"Let us note some statistics, which show what remarkable progress our nation has made in various departments since Her Majesty's accession.

"The population of the United Kingdom has risen from twenty-six to forty millions, and that in spite of the loss of over nine millions from emigration. The rate of natural increase has been greater than that of any other country in Europe. The increase of wealth has been three times as great as that of population; and, what is still better, the wealth of the nation has year by year been more equally distributed, so that each succeeding year has found the rich less rich, and more numerous, and the poor more rich, and less numerous. The trade of the United Kingdom has grown five-fold, and the combined trade of the mother country and the colonies is now nearly one-third of the trade of the world. Indeed, the trade of Australia alone is now greater than was that of Great Britain at the Queen's accession, while her revenue is three times as much as was that of George III., during the American war. In textile manufacture so great has been the improvement of machinery that two operatives now produce as much work as three did at the time of the Queen's accession. Machinery has not been an unmixed boon as a substitute for the living human hand. We will admit that there is at least a considerable element of truth in Ruskin's strictures upon it; but that it has in certain directions brought immense benefit, appears from such a fact as this—That a girl, twelve years old, in a Lancashire mill, can, by its means, turn out daily thirty-five yards of printed calico, her work in one year sufficing to clothe 1,200 persons, and representing as much benefit to mankind as a year's toil by five able-bodied Russian peasants.

"In mining and metallurgy the most notable development has been in economy, due to scientific improvements, which have made it possible for three tons of coal to go as far as five tons went formerly. The use of steam has been so extended and improved, that an Englishman of to-day can do as much work in three hours as would have taken nine hours in 1840. The amount of coined money turned out by the British Mint during Her Majesty's reign has exceeded the total amount turned out from the time of William the Conqueror, until her accession. In agriculture, while there has been a slight decrease in the amount of grain produced, the methods of production have been so improved, that the labour of three persons goes as far now as did that of five fifty years ago.

"If we look now at the domestic comforts of the people, we shall be encouraged by facts such as these:—The people are better fed, and their food costs them less in proportion to their earnings; the value of the furniture in the houses is per inhabitant just five times what it was at the beginning of her reign; and the consumption of paper, which is of course used chiefly for the circulation of information, has in the same period grown twelve-fold, being now twelve pounds per inhabitant, against ten in the United States, nine in Germany, eight in France, and four in Italy; the death rate has declined 10 per cent., with the effect of adding three years to the average span of life.

"Public morality has much improved. Crime, judging from the average number of committals now as compared with the average number fifty years ago in proportion to population, has decreased as much as 70 per cent.; and the percentage of paupers also has greatly fallen, being only one-third of what it then was. There has also been a decline in illegitimacy. But drunkenness, in spite of all the noble efforts of Temperance Societies, actually appears worse, unless it be that the increased number of committals for this offence is due to increased vigilance in punishing it. This is probably the case; and certainly there is less drunkenness than formerly among the respectable classes. There can be no doubt, however, of certain other unpromising indications which stand out unenviably against the general signs of improvement—viz., the increase of nervous diseases, of insanity, of divorces, and of suicide.

"The progress during the reign in the diffusion of education appears from the record of the percentage of persons able to write their names in the marriage register. This is now, in Ireland, 67, as against 48; in England, 84, as against 57; and in Scotland, 88, as against 78.

"It is interesting to remember that it was in the first year of Her Majesty's reign that the first two steamers crossed the Atlantic, and that the electric telegraph was invented; so that the marvellous history of development in ocean navigation and in the use of electricity belongs to the period which the reign of the Queen embraces. To the same period belong such inventions for reducing pain and saving life as Sir James Simpson's chloroform and Professor Lister's antiseptic treatment, the latter of which alone has caused a reduction of 50 per cent. in the number of deaths after amputation. Then thousands of lives that would otherwise have perished have been saved by the multiplication of lighthouses and lifeboats along the coasts. The National Lifeboat Association, with its 12,000 volunteer boatmen, has rescued 31,000 persons from drowning during the present reign. All sorts of philanthropic institutions have multiplied as never before, while, instead of building new prisons, we have recently seen eleven sold by auction. We have been diligent in establishing hospitals, reformatories, and homes for the friendless and destitute.

"It would take too long even to name the most striking of the measures that have during the Victorian epoch quite reformed the British system of legislation. It is interesting to note that the Queen was the first member of the royal family to be vaccinated, and that one of the early acts of her reign was that which made vaccination compulsory. Other humane measures which date since her accession are the abolition of the pillory, the reduction of the number of capital offences, the act for the protection of chimney-sweeping boys, and the acts for the prevention of overwork and ill-treatment of operatives, especially as regards women and children. Then we should not forget that the free-trade policy, which has so contributed to the progress of Great Britain, belongs to the Victorian epoch, as well as the abolition of the stupid taxes on windows, on soap, and on knowledge, and the throwing open of the civil service to all classes by competitive examination.

"Side by side with all this material progress there has been a no less remarkable religious progress—progress which has shown itself in a development of tolerance as of zeal, and in the propagation of the truth to the ends of the earth as in the multiplication of Churches at home. The Victorian epoch has been conspicuously an epoch of Christian missions; this is certainly the characteristic which must invest it with the most enduring lustre. Who can say that it has not also been the secret of the best part of the other forms of prosperity.

"But time bids us bring our hasty survey to an end. More than enough has surely been seen in these fifty-six years of progress to awaken within us a deep sense at once of gratitude and of responsibility. Who are we British that the God of all the earth should have favoured us so highly? Verily we may, like Moses, feel inclined to shrink from the stupendous mission which has been imposed upon us, but to shrink would be traitorous weakness. It is a fact, as clear as any fact can be, that the Governor of mankind has in these last days blessed and honoured our nation beyond all the other nations; and to all whose eyes are open He has done this for a purpose. What is that purpose? What, but that we may carry forth His light and truth into all lands? What, but that we may be in the highest sense a great civilizing power—a power to organize the world, even as did ancient Rome, only that our organizing principle is not law, but love, a power of such Christian magnetism as shall bind together the hitherto discordant peoples in the brotherhood of Christ? Such is undoubtedly the raison d'être of our predominance among the peoples. Our mission is nothing less than of this character,—high as heaven and wide as the world. If we shrink from it, or fail in it, then God will raise up some other nation to do the work, for the work must be done. What a glorious blessing it would be if the Spirit of God were so poured out upon the hearts of the widespread citizens of our empire at this time as to bind them shoulder to shoulder and heart to heart in the accomplishment of this great national mission! The sun of the millennium would have risen upon our weary world almost before it had time to note the dawn. The great lesson of this epoch is a call to persevering national enterprise as an important part of the great Christian enterprise, which is increasingly binding the nations with golden chains about the feet of Christ. As we say 'Long live Victoria,' we think of the person of our beloved Queen indeed, but we also think of that Victoria, that victory which can only come from the reign of Christ, and it is the empire of the King of kings that we have in mind even more than the British Empire when we pray—'God save the Queen.'"

The Rev. Gray Dixon asked a question, as above shown, which he could not answer! But we can! "Who are we British," he cries, "that the God of all the earth should have favoured us so highly?" He sees we are blessed and honoured by God, high above all other nations. and he perceives that the object was to carry forth God's light and truth—that is, the Gospel—into all lands. Surely Mr. Dixon, with the Bible in his hands, could with the clues he names have answered his own query? The nation set high above all the nations by God Himself, and destined to bless all nations, families, and kindreds of the earth, was distinctly the afterseed of Abraham (Gen. xxii. 18, xxviii. 14; Deut. xxviii. 1, 13; Acts iii. 25). Mr. Dixon declares we are, under the Lord's guidance, doing these very things. The logical inference is, we must nationally be the afterseed of Abraham, and, as we are not Jews, we must be Ephraim of the Ten Tribes.

EXTRACTS FROM "AN HISTORICAL ACCOUNT OF THE TEN TRIBES SETTLED BEYOND THE RIVER SAMBATYON, IN THE EAST," BY THE REV. DR. M. EDREHI, 1836.

By Jashub.

Having had a copy of the above work put into our hands to read, we have thought that a few extracts from it, accompanied with some remarks, would be acceptable to readers of the Banner, as showing the entire futility of the argument so frequently used in this matter, that the Ten Tribes are now extinct (vide Dr. Parker on Judges xii. 1, "Are the Ephraimites dead? Why concern ourselves about an extinct tribe?"), and Mr. Wilkinson's contention that the great bulk of the Ten Tribes returned to Palestine with those of Judah, under the edicts of Cyrus and Darius. But they equally show how interested the House of Judah has ever been in endeavouring to discover the whereabouts of the Ten Tribes and the ease with which they have been deceived, in company with others, it supposing them still to be in Central Asia, or, as Mr. W. puts it, "expecting to find them where they were lost"; for at the end of the book a list of more than 1,000 names is given of subscribers to the work.

The Rev. Dr. Edrehi entitles the great body of his work "A Book of Miracles," in giving "an account of the Ten Tribes of Israel, their residence beyond the River Sambatyon, in the East, and other parts of the world; and likewise an account of the wonderful River Sambatyon." These "miracles" are, for the most part, puerile in the extreme. In describing the origin of the name given to the river—Sambatyon—he quotes Josephus as saying: "The Emperor Thetus, returning from Paras and Maday (that is, Persia and India) met with the Jews (!) on the other side of the River Sambatyon, and it being Sabbath he rested, and then crossed with his army, and was received by the Jews with honour and respect; and when he left he gave the name of Sabatino to this river, which means reposing on the Sabbath day." We are, however, unable to verify his quotation, which he gives as "The History of the Wars of the Jews, last book, thirty-fifth chapter. He then goes on to say, "This author—Josephus—(speaking of the tribes on the other side of the River Sambatyon) adds that there are many millions of Jews; that they have their kings, princes, and governors as formerly when they were in the Holy Land; that the only thing wanting is the sacrifice, which they cannot have until the temple is built for the third time, as will happen, with Divine assistance, according to the prophecies of Ezekiel and others."

Our author then proceeds: "No person can approach them [i.e., the supposed Ten Tribes, whom he persistently calls Jews], they live so retired, far from the borders of Cus; and the River Sambatyon separates them. Of them the prophet Isaiah says, chap. xlix. 9, 'Let those who are in bondage come forth; let those who are in darkness appear.' They have much gold and many manufactories of curious textures and articles; they make beautiful dresses. They are many millions in numbers, ten times as many as those that left Egypt; and of them, says the prophet Isaiah, chap. xviii. 1, 'A land quivering, or rustling, as wings.' The breadth of the River Sambatyon is full 220 yards; and contains sand and stones, and the noise of these stones makes it like thunder and hurricanes; they rise up and go down, the noise whereof at night may be heard at half a league distance. The stones which make so much noise, and move up and down, repose from the setting in to the going down of the Sabbath; and around the river there is a fire, which descends every day in the week and remains there except Sabbath, so that no person can approach the river, for the fire burns everything within its reach. Beyond the river dwell the four tribes [Dan, Naphtali, Gad, and Asher], who come near with their flocks and herds to shear them, it being an excellent country for pasturage."

He also quotes a declaration of an Israelite of the tribe of Dan, named Eldad Hadani, who came from those parts in the year of the world 5543 [= A.D. 1775]. This person records as a great miracle the manner in which they were led there, and what happened; that when the temple was destroyed and the Israelites (!) carried to Babylon, the Chaldees came and said to them, "Sing unto us the songs of Zion," meaning the songs of the Levites, which are accompanied by music, before the holy palace of God. The moment the Chaldees said it they began to weep and cut their fingers off, and they prayed to the God of Israel and said, "Oh! God, rather than sing and play Thy songs before the heathen we will sever our fingers from our hands"; and so they did: but the merciful God, taking compassion on them, heard their prayers, and sent a cloud and carried them and their tents and their cattle to a place called Hauela, and He set them down that very night in the land of Hauela. He proceeds, "It has been told us that our fathers related that the night of their being put down there they heard many extraordinary noises; and on the morrow they saw a great fleet approach, and by one of God's miracles they escaped; and afterwards they were encircled by a river in a place where there had been no river before. This river, which is of sand and stones, is called Sabatyon, and exists at the present day. The sand and stones move about with such noise and violence that were there a mountain of iron situated near, it would be broken in pieces. This noise continues until the coming in of Sabbath; also when this time comes there descends from heaven a cloud which covers the river till Sabbath is over."

Further on he quotes the account of another traveller, who assured him that the river in some places is seventeen miles broad, and all the week the stones are thrown as high as a lofty house, but that on Friday, two hours before Sabbath, they remain undisturbed.

In the second part of the book the author recapitulates a considerable amount of Scripture evidence regarding a future return of the Ten Tribes to their own land in company with the House of Judah, but adds nothing that throws any light upon British-Israel truth. This result is very disappointing.

WHO SO BLIND AS THE LORD'S SERVANT?

By E. Reep.

Last week, at the Birmingham Church Congress, Archdeacon Farrar preached a remarkable sermon, and for aught one could tell to the contrary a vigorous British-Israel sermon. He very properly exhorted his congregation not to understand the word church as meaning only the clergy; the whole people are to be regarded as the Church, as possessing a sacred right to a universal priesthood. "Never, never," said the archdeacon, "forget that the clergy form but a small fraction of the Church; they are 20,000, you are 20,000,000." And then, as if preaching from the British-Israel standpoint, the preacher declaimed: "You, you are the Church. You, you have been made kings and priests unto our God. Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people."

Readers of the Banner of Israel neither want chapter nor verse to show how the archdeacon's phraseology applies to Israel and to no other people. Yet, notwithstanding, it is pretty certain that Archdeacon Farrar knows nothing about the British-Israel question, nor, strange to say, of the existence of the House of Israel as a people distinct from the Jews or House of Judah. This curious fact is unmistakably apparent in a work entitled "Social and Present-Day Questions," wherein the archdeacon discourses on the Jews as alone representing the whole chosen race. "No historical inference," he says, "is more obvious than this: that the God of all the earth did choose out, did set apart, this people (the Jews) to preserve His truth, to teach His law, to be an evidence of His dealings with mankind. The torch of revelation which He intrusted to them often burned very low, but they did in some sort hold it aloof for four thousand years and, though for two thousand years since then the same torch, kindled to a far intenser brightness, has been placed in the hands of Christian nations, the voice of prophecy declares that the Jews shall once more share in its splendour, and help to spread its illumination even to the ends of the world."

The statement here set forth that God has transferred from the chosen people the torch of revelation to the care of alien nations is the old unwarrantable notion that God has forsworn His promises to Abraham's descendants and adopted Gentiles pure and simple in their stead. The bare thought of such a dereliction of duty being possible on the part of Abraham's God—for to repudiate the everlasting promises and covenants made only and alone with the chosen people, even for a season, would be a dereliction of duty—is monstrous and not to be entertained for a moment. Monstrous however as the suggestion of such a possibility is, it is one that must have floated in the air in the far back ages of Hebrew history. It needs no master-mind to imagine how grieved and scandalized was the prophet Jeremiah when the word of the Lord came to him saying: "Considerest thou not what this people have spoken, saying, The two families which the Lord hath chosen, He hath even cast them off? thus they have despised My people, that they should be no more a nation before them. Thus saith the Lord: If My covenant be not with day and night, and if I have not appointed the ordinances of heaven and earth, then will I cast away the seed of Jacob, and David My servant, so that I will not take any of his seed to be rulers over the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob."

The important fact underlying this quotation from Holy Writ is the division of the chosen people into two families, wherefore it is to be inferred that the fulfilment of prophecy is not limited to the national situation and circumstances of the Jews or House of Judah, but that it embraces also the national functions and history of the Northern Israelites or Ten-tribed House of Israel. Archdeacon Farrar utterly oblivious of this divinely ordered division of the Hebrew race, endeavours to prove that in the Jews has been fulfilled the greater part of prophecy. "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper" is a prophecy that to his mind has been beautifully fulfilled in the history of the Jews. "The nations," he asserts, "have raged about Israel (i.e., the Jews), as the waves surge around a rock in the rushing march of some stormy sea. Again and again the rock is lashed by the billows, and wrapped in sheets of foam, and overwhelmed beneath the masses of the advancing tide. But look again! It is the waves which have been shattered; the waves that have been dashed into spray upon the wind and ebbed away in bubbles upon the shore; the rock still stands immovable, and with the gleam of sunshine on its head. There is much force in this delightful illustration of fulfilled prophecy, but in the main it is hardly applicable to the Jews. Apply it to the House of Israel as identified in the British nation and its appropriateness is palpably demonstrated.

Another prophecy with which the archdeacon deals is not elucidated less fancifully. "Though I make a full end of the nations whither I have driven thee, yet will I not make a full end of thee." "Could any prophecy," he asks, "have been more rigidly fulfilled? Nation after nation, once the world-rulers of this darkness, have ceased to exist even in dishonour; have been wiped out of human existence, as when one wipeth a dish, wiping it and turning it upside down. But the river of Jewish life is still flowing on; and it may be that, when London and Petersburgh have in their turn fallen to ruins, the waters of Siloa, which flow so softly, shall still refresh the world." Were Archdeacon Farrar conversant with the teachings of British-Israelism he would look for the fulfilment of this prophecy in two Hebrew families and not in the one single stream of Jewish experience. In such a case he would not anticipate the destruction of London, or rather the wiping out of the British Empire, but with all zeal would be hastening to declare that despite the "alienation of the working classes from the sacred ordinances of religion," that notwithstanding the "indifference of the wealthier classes to Sunday observance and the awful contrasts between stupendous wealth and starving poverty," God is at hand ordering health and cure and the promised abundance of peace and truth which, according to the sure word of prophecy (Jer. xxxiii.), are blessings that will not fail to fall in due season upon God's chosen people. Then will it be that God will cause to return the captivity of Judah and the captivity of Israel and will build them as at the first. But doubtless it will be that before either of these two chosen families (British-Israel and Jewish-Judah) can enter upon the inheritance of their future blessings both will have to do what Archdeacon Farrar demands of the Church of England, if she is in truth to earn the eulogy "I know thy works, and love and service, and faith, and thy patience and thy works, and the last to be more than the first," to lay down in the dust and implore God from the valley of dry bones that the breath may come from the four winds and breathe upon these slain that they may live.

Archdeacon Farrar thinks that backsliding England and America should aim at the Jews' ideal of righteousness. Unfortunately the ancient Jews or House of Judah were not remarkable for equity or for a pure moral religious system. Demoralized as was the House of Israel the Jews or House of Judah surpassed their Ten-tribed brethren in making light darkness and straight things crooked. Of course the ideal of righteousness the archdeacon is anxions that England and America should keep before their eyes is that of the inspired prophets, but it would be well that he should make this matter more plain. In the meantime he is, like the Church he represents, blind and deaf. Seeing many things but observing not; opening the ears but hearing not. And so it is written, 'Who is blind as My servant? or deaf as My messenger? who is blind as he that is perfect and blind as the Lord's servant?

CREDO.

NOTES BY S. A. M.

REVERTING to the BANNER of Sept. 13, 1893, I read in the "Appeal to the Church of Christ," that when we find our Anglo-Israelite views rejected by the world we are not surprised. Most men are materialists, in practice at least, if not in theory; and for them nothing can exist beyond the material. What their understanding fails to penetrate they think it their duty to deny. The materialist, therefore, not actually hearing the messages as delivered with the solemn words, "Thus saith the Lord," does practically disbelieve them, and ignore that "whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning." Rather would I follow Latimer, who preaching from the same text "in the shrouds of St. Paul's Church, London, on the 18th day of January, A.D. 1518," reiterates, as deeply feeling the truth himself and desiring to imprint it as deeply on the heart of others, that "all things that are written in God's Book, in the Bible-book, in the book of the Holy Scripture, are written to be our doctrine, our erudition and knowledge." And, coming nearer to our own time, we find the Bishop of Chester (1675) preaching to his parishioners, of St. Clement's, Eastcheap, London, on the restoration of their parish church, enforcing their full belief in the truths believed by God, who, he reminded them, "at sundry times and in divers manners spake in times past with the fathers by the prophets." And the good bishop strenuously also inculcates the necessity of the literal confession of belief; for as this may confirm and edify the faith of another, so the mere concealing or not acknowledging that belief which we are supposed to hold, is casting tacit contumely on the Author of it, as though He had revealed that which we are ashamed to avow.

Thus there is a necessity for literally professing our belief in the literal promises of God, as is implied by the Psalmist when he says, "I believed, and therefore have I spoken." For as there is no truth which is not ancient, as delivered in both the Old and the New Testaments, the written Word and revelation of God; and it being the nature of truth not to hide itself but to desire the light that it may be made manifest, so our belief, that intellectual, invisible power which actuates and is known only to the heart that believes, must find its expression in the outward signification of speech.

Another of our old "divines," commenting on the first Psalm, taking up the beautiful simile of the good man as "a tree planted by the streams of water, whose leaf does not wither," compares his words to the leaves of a tree, innumerable, immeasurable, even as the sand of the sea, or as corn in a sieve, sifted, yet not one grain allowed to be lost, but all saved for future use, to be sown in due season in the soil which shall be best suited to bring forth its fruit after its kind; even as leaves scattered around wherever the winds of heaven shall drive them, though they fall they do not perish, though buried and lost to the memory of man, yet are they enriching the soil on which they fell, springing up again in the course of ages to fructify the earth and make it fruitful.

Now let us gather up a few more of the words of the good Bishop of Chester, whose "Restoration sermon" was, in 1676, printed at the Crown in Cross Keys Court, in Little Britain, as we find by its "Fourth Edition." He reminds us that Joshua, the great leader of the children of Israel, was a type of Jesus, and his name had the same signification as that of the Lord Jesus—viz, "a Saviour." The fall of the walls of Jericho at the blast of the trumpets, may also be well-likened to the downfall of the strongholds of infidelity and scepticism, which crumble away at "the word of the Lord," for surely that leaf "shall not wither." Above all, the stupendous miracle wrought by the word of Joshua—"for the Lord fought for Israel" (Josh. x. 14)—the sun and the moon standing still to lengthen the day for his great work, may be considered a type of the light vouchsafed to us now in the evening of this dispensation by the many demonstrative "marks," written words and proofs of Our Identity with the chosen people of God, "lost" for ages whilst they worked His sovereign will, even as the dew on the face of the earth, but now "found," with all the marks He graciously set upon them, that they in the fulness of time might again be recognised as His people; marked by many signs, not one of which is wanting to prove that we are "the sheep of His pasture," marked even as a shepherd marks His sheep before casting them adrift to feed in the wilderness; marked so as to be seen and known of all men, raised up from their "cast off" condition to be again His faithful witnesses as we this day are to all the ends of the earth.

It is indeed true that great promises are made unto faith, and glorious things are spoken of it. The purity of its doctrine persuades to such holiness of life. It describes God as so infinitely glorious, so marvellous in His works, so transcendently gracious, so true in the fulfilment of His word, even to the minutest tittle, that the mere confession of it is a glorifying of God's majesty. And although those things which I, individually, may affirm be not apparent to my senses so that I may see them, although they be not of themselves evident to my understanding, nor appear to me true by any natural and necessary cause, so that I may say that I have any proper knowledge of them, yet they are certainly contained in the Scriptures; and Moses, the prophets, and the apostles having been immediately inspired by the Holy Ghost, we know that what they delivered was not the word of man, but of God Himself, who cannot lie. It must necessarily and infallibly be true; therefore with the heart I lift up my voice and say, "I believe."

THE question for the moment, in reference to the magnificent reception given to the Russian fleet by the French, is which nation is likely to be most affected and influenced? There was rivalry at Marseilles in the cheering between the French which greeted the Russian Hymn, and that of the Russians which greeted the Marseillaise. It was something for M. Carnot to toast in eulogistic language the Czar; it was more for the Czar in equal, if not more eulogistic, language to respond.—Echo.

ERRATUM.—Page 522, col. 2, line 35, read "effecting" not "affecting."

PALESTINE, AND SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

WE see prophecy fulfilling in our days, and before our eyes in the two-fold aspects of the land preparing, by the regular return of the latter rains, and consequent greater fertility to sustain a larger population than it has actually, on the one hand; and on the other of the Jews returning to the land, either voluntarily or by the compulsion of persecution, in large numbers,—a writer says at the rate of 10,000 per annum; and their return is facilitated by a constantly increasing number of steamers from all quarters; and the railway just opened will render their return easier and quicker. When the lines from Jaffa to Jerusalem and Nablous—the ancient Shechem—and from Haifa to Damascus, are achieved, they are pretty sure to be speedily connected with the growing net of railways in Egypt and Asia Minor, and ere long, by the Euphrates valley, with India and the far East. And then the Jews of Russia, Poland, Germany, and all Europe will be able to travel over land all the way to Palestine, except the Bosphorus.

Yet another pleasing sign. Never before was so lively and deep an interest taken in the exploration of the land of Israel as in our days. The work of the Palestine Exploration Fund, with its quarterly statements, maps, plans, and frequent volumes,—every fresh discovery, identification of Scripture sites, or rectification of current errors,—is watched and followed with thrilling interest by the whole Christian world.

Then, again, the number of travellers is growing apace, thanks to the great facilities offered by Cook & Son's matured, excellent tourist arrangements, with intelligent and trustworthy agents and dragomen at every place, Swiss landaus, and now even relays of horses; and the commodious hotels where their travellers put up—the grand new hotel of Jerusalem, capable of housing nearly one hundred visitors, comparing favourably with the best in Europe, if not in extravagant luxury, at least in cleanliness, quiet, order, and the most obliging attentions. A large proportion of these increasing annual visitors to the Holy Land from both hemispheres, are clergy and ministers. The Psalmist's words, "For Thy servants take pleasure in her stones, and favour the dust thereof," are now literally true with thousands of Christian men from all lands.—The Faithful Witness, Toronto, Canada, June, 1893.

MORE BLIND EVIDENCE.

IN the editorial "Notes and Comments" of The Christian, of June 15, 1893, referring to Dr. Pierson's address on Matt. xxiv. 14, at the China Inland anniversary, we read, "We did not understand the doctor as setting aside the plain meaning of the prophecy, which we take to be that when this gospel of the kingdom (the good tidings of the reign of God, which is the only gospel, and which includes every exceeding great and precious promise), shall have been preached for a testimony among all the nations, the end of this age will come. Oh, Church of Christ, do you love His appearing? Preach the Gospel to every creature, and He will come. 'Ye are My witnesses, to Jerusalem and all Judea, and Samaria, and Galilee, and to the uttermost parts of the earth.' London is your Jerusalem, Great Britain is your Judea, Ireland is your Samaria, Europe is your Galilee; the Regions beyond are the uttermost parts of the earth."

This is only another way of saying that the evangelization of the whole earth is committed to the hands of British Christians, as their particular work to which they are called, and for which they are specially qualified by divine providence. But divine prophecy not very indistinctly points out Israel as the channel by which blessings from on high are to be conveyed unto other nations. Of Israel only is it said, "He (i.e., God) hath not beheld iniquity in Jacob; neither hath He seen perverseness in Israel. . . . How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel. . .

Blessed is he that blesseth thee, and cursed is he that curseth thee" (Num. xxiii. 7—24, xxiv. 3—9); "Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the earth with fruit" (Isa. xxvii. 6).

God Himself emphatically denominates Israel as His "servant . . . I have chosen thee, and not cast thee away" (Isa. xli. 8, 9), so the substitution of a Gentile people in their place, to do their work, is quite excluded, seeing that God again emphatically asserts, "This people have I formed for Myself; they shall shew forth My praise" (Isa. xliii. 21). We must allow that the Omniscient can see the end from the beginning, and choose His agents accordingly, without risk of choosing wrong.

FORGOTTEN!

THE following hymn was sung at a meeting in the Royal Pavilion, Brighton:—

PART I.

Forgotten! no, that cannot be;
All other names may pass away,
But thine, My Israel, shall remain
In everlasting memory.

Forgotten! no, that cannot be;
Inscribed upon My palms thou art;
The name I gave in days of old
Is graven still upon My heart.

Forgotten! no, that cannot be;
Beloved of thy God art thou,
His crown for ever on thy head,
His name for ever on thy brow.

Forgotten! no, that cannot be;
He who upon thee named His name
Assures thee of eternal love,
A love for evermore the same.

PART II.

Forgotten! no, that cannot be;
The oath of Him who cannot lie
Is on thy city and thy land,
An oath to all eternity.

Forgotten! no, that cannot be;
The grace of ages deep and broad,
Is grace without decay, the grace
O Israel, of the Lord thy God.

Forgotten! no, that cannot be;
Sun, moon, and stars may cease to shine,
But thou shalt be remembered still,
For thou art His, and He is thine.

Forgotten of the Lord thy God!
No, Israel, no, that cannot be;
He chose thee in the days of old,
And still His favour rests on thee.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL AND LITERATURE DISTRIBUTION.—The BANNER or other British-Israel literature packets, or both, have been sent to the places mentioned below. The BANNERS, from 217 to 225 weekly, having been despatched up to the second week only in October, at which time the free distribution had to be stopped, to our very great regret, on account of want of funds, as referred to already in a previous issue of the BANNER. The number of literature packets amounted to sixty-one. Distribution in England and Wales: Aldershot, Ashurst Wood, Alvaston, Birmingham, Birkenhead, Bradford, Barnsley, Barrow-in-Furness, Bexley, Brighton, Cardiff, Canterbury, Calne, Carlisle, Chatham, Chester, Cheetham, Chelmsford, Chippenham, Colchester, Devonport, Dover, East Grinstead, East Twickenham, Faversham, Fulham, Harpurhey, Hull, Hulme, Kingsbridge, Kirton-Lindsey, London and suburbs (Bow, Catford, Lee, Lewisham, Shepherd's-bush, Stepney, Wandsworth, Walthamstow, Wimbledon, Vauxhall), Leeds, Lowestoft, Ludlow, Maesteg, Moreton-in-Marsh, Penzance, Plympton, Porthgwarra, Portsmouth, St. Leonards-on-Sea, Southsea, Southwold, Staplehurst, Teignmouth, Twickenham, Woolwich. Scotland: Cockburnspath, Edinburgh, Dundee, Hamilton, Leith, Northroe. Ireland: Dublin, Fermoy. Abroad—Paris. Malta. India: Bangalore, Poona Secunderabad. Burmah: Rangoon. Victoria: Broughton New South Wales: Dubbo, Grose Vale. New Zealand: Gisborne, Taranaki. Tasmania: Launceston. South Africa: Mossel Bay, Port Nolloth, Vryburgh. West Indies: Barbadoes. United States: Detroit. Canada: Manitoba, Marsden, Port Arthur.

SOWING THE SEED.

Our report for this month again shows that a goodly number of Seed packets have been despatched. Considering the many grave questions that are before the public mind, the uncertainty that prevails, and the fears and doubts that are induced, we have desired to make special efforts to put the fact of Our Identity with Israel before the people, and endeavour to influence, if it may be, the thought and life of the nation. It is of course but a very little, comparatively speaking, that we can do, but in faith and hope we work, knowing that many a time, by the grace and blessing of God, the little seed can be carried to good ground and rooted, and prove in His own good time the glory and power of the life within, and in turn bear seed abundantly.

To aid our Sowers and quickly attract the attention of readers to the fundamental truth we would teach the people, we have had upwards of 30,000 leaflets during the last few months, mainly Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4 of "An Englishman an Israelite," and Philo-Israel's "Thoughts," the former to proclaim the fact that the British people are the literal Israel, the latter to touch and give light upon many subjects of the day that must be in men's minds. The first four leaflets mentioned, with four different "Thoughts" and a "Cui Bono?" or other suitable leaflet, have been folded together, so that Sowers could with ease have them ready for distribution. These little packets having been sent out in numbers proportionate to the sphere of work of our home Sowers, so far as we are able to supply each need, and each one has received two or more copies of Col. Senior's excellent and suggestive little Tree, showing British-Israel's Empire, which is very highly appreciated. We shall be glad to send an increased supply of the little Seed packets referred to, and of the Tree, wherever the demand arises, as soon as our Fund can afford to lay in another stock of many of the leaflets which we have entirely disposed of. But it would not do to be content with merely home work, for questions that touch us here touch those far away now, or will do later on, as the daughter Nations grow and need to meet many of the same difficulties, and share, perhaps, even still more than now, in what affects the living centre of the Empire. Therefore similar Seed packets have been, or are about to be, despatched with, in some cases, other literature that has been due to go to the Sowers abroad. We very gratefully acknowledge help, kindly given by friends, in the work of folding the leaflets.

Our correspondence this month gives a noteworthy piece of "blind evidence," sent by a Missionary to Seamen. Bad as we know ourselves to be, it is cheering to be assured that the sign of the blessing of God is upon us. Pessimists may well read, take comfort, and be thankful. The missionary wrote as follows: "A missionary has abundance of opportunities both for speaking and distributing works upon the teaching of the Identity of the Lost Ten Tribes, and it is wonderful, when one considers how ready men are to listen to a conversation upon such a subject; but there is something which is more wonderful still—viz., to listen to the amount of blind evidence given by men who do not give a moment's thought as to where our English people come from, or anything else connected with the teaching of the prophets. Let me give one such evidence. A few weeks ago I lent a man a book, 'Specific Unbelief.' He read it carefully, and returned it to me, saying, 'I think the author is too hard upon England. I have been over a large portion of the globe—in America, Canada, Africa, Palestine, Egypt—but wherever I have been I have always seen the evidence of England's Christianity. Who is it that is sending forth the missionaries to all parts of the world? Why England. Who is it that is opening up trade with the interior of Africa? Why England. Who is it that is lifting Egypt out of the slough into which she had fallen? Why England. And yet some people will tell us England is full of unbelief. I am not an Englishman, as you know, but I tell you I have witnessed too much of England's good work to believe she is full of sin, as some people try to make us believe she is. Yea, I go further than that, and say she must be urged on by a higher power than that of man. God is with her, and making her a blessing to other nations. America is helping as a sister ought to do, and I am persuaded these two nations will stand.'" The Missionary naturally asked, "But do you believe we are the Lost Tribes of Israel?" And the reply was, "I cannot say. I have never thought much about that, therefore will not venture an opinion."

I thankfully close the report this month with the information that not a few amongst us are seeing more clearly the particular force there is in the revelation of Israel for drawing out stings from sceptical assertions, and clearing the way for the acceptance of the truths of the Gospel. It is the great requirement of the age, and so we rest in hope that our work may be abundantly helped forward for the guidance of many, through the blessing of the Holy Spirit of God.

Donations will be thankfully received by the Hon. Treasurer, Miss Lawrence, Rosslyn, Hampton-road, Upper Teddington; and by Miss E. M. Rush, Hon. Sec., 4, Westgate-road, Westgate-on-Sea.

ISRAEL'S SCRIPTURE AND PRAYER UNION.

Since last month two members have been added, making a total of 1,474.

The New Cards for 1894 will be ready in November. It will be a very good time for Identity believers to join our Union who have not already done so.

A letter received says: "I am much interested in the Banner, and very thankful for its teaching."

The Card of Membership has a list of chapters for the whole year, also suggestions for reading, prayers, etc. It is of a size convenient for keeping in the Bible, and will be sent on receipt of 6 stamps.

The first and second series of Monthly Comments on the whole Bible, by Philo-Israel, may be obtained. Price, in paper cover, 1s. 2d. each; in cloth 2s. each, post free.

The "Prayers for Daily Use," being a prayer for each day of the week, by Philo-Israel, are 1d., or 9d. per doz., postage extra. Address — The Secretary, Israel's Scripture and Prayer Union, British-Israel Association, 86, St. Martin's-lane, London, W.C.

IDENTITY MUSIC.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

Dear Sir,—It is a convincing proof of the silent but sure growth of Our Identity that composers are finding it worth while to devote their genius to wedding the glorious prophetic words of Holy Scripture to stirring and most tuneful and well-written music, thoroughly appropriate and in keeping with the wonderful themes set forth.

I have just enjoyed a run through Mr. Jno. M. W. Young's "Sacred Cantata: for Solo Voices, Chorus, Band, and Organ" (now in the third edition), as published by Novello, and a finer work I never examined, speaking as a musician. I am sure all our friends ought to possess this work. The opening March alone is worth the small cost of the work—2s. 6d. in paper and 3s. in boards.

I have also just obtained from Novello a sacred, recitative air and chorus (ad. lib), "The Lord shall comfort Zion," by Jean Charles (2s. nett), which I saw advertised in last week's Banner; this is also a most delightful composition. I do not personally know these composers, though, of course, Mr. Young, the well-known organist of Lincoln Cathedral, has a very wide reputation.

Yours faithfully,

Theodore S. Hill.

Birkenhead, Oct. 5, 1893.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

Sir,—I saw in last week's Banner of Israel a correspondent's enquiry for a weekly paper suitable for lending to working men, and as I think very highly of The News, a National Fireside Journal and Review, 1d. weekly, by Rev. C. Bullock, I am glad to recommend it, for I have found it much appreciated by the class mentioned. The politics are sound, sensible, and Conservative. The religious views, Evangelical Church of England. There are anecdotes, and a serial tale, besides notices of passing events; and the type is good. I consider it a wonderful production for 1d.

I should like to become a member of the Anglo-Israel Association, if the subscription necessary does not exceed 1s. per annum, but I cannot afford more, as my income is small and limited, and I cannot give up my subscriptions to charities in which I have been interested for years. The Banner I have taken in and read for ten years, and have persuaded others to take it also. Some numbers I wish to keep for reference, but others I should be glad to send for free distribution in a short time.

Believe me, yours truly,

L. E. M. Richards.

Wessex Lodge, Winchester, Oct. 10th.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

Dear Mr. Philo-Israel,—I am sending you by this post the Newcastle-on-Tyne Chronicle, which contains an address delivered in that city, a little more than a week ago, by Col. Goldsmid, upon Jewish Colonisation. You may probably have seen the address previously; if not, I feel sure it will interest you, knowing the deep interest you take in the welfare of children of Israel as well as in many of the distressed Jews of the present day in Russia and other parts.

I have been a regular reader of your Banner of Israel for many years, probably from almost its first publication, and have taken much interest in the subject it advocates. From the great influx of Judah into Palestine, it would appear to me, as I know it does to many others, that the final return of Judah to their own land cannot be very far distant, and therefore the prophecy of Isa. xl. 1—11 may be near at hand. God grant it for Jesu's sake.

Yours faithfully,

James Gaunt.

MATABELELAND AND MASHONALAND.

THE country which just now is absorbing our nation's interest lies well in the South Central portion of Africa. It is situated to the north of Bechuanaland and our native ally, Khama's country. Buluwayo is the chief station of our enemies, the Matabele, and our British occupation extends from Fort Salisbury to the north and west of Matabeleland to Fort Charter, south of Salisbury, and proceeding southward still to Fort Victoria, Fort Tuli, and Fort Elebe in Bechuanaland. Lobengula, the Zulu chief, now our open enemy, has, it is said, 12,000 to 20,000 men wherewith to oppose us, while the British forces, in three columns, which have started to encounter him are but a slender body of 1,400 men, well equipped it is true, 1,000 being mounted. Here then Israel proceeds out to join battle against a foe thirsting for her blood, cut off from all retreat, and with no hope of succour in case of disaster, with 20 to 1 against them! The prospect seems terrifying and awful! But our cause is a righteous one, and the God of Israel is our defence on our right hand and on our left.

It has been suggested in the Times of Oct. 7th that with the rains approaching, if they have not already set in, there are three courses open to our colonists and miners in Mashonaland, and only three—namely:—

1st. To retire to the British Forts for five months, and then, after the rains, to attack the enemy; or,

2nd. To leave the country at once, bag and baggage, and return after the rains to re-conquer it; or,

3rd. To fight Lobengula and his Matabeles at once, and conquer him.

The third course has been decided on, and we wait the result of the conflict. The news of it may arrive before these lines are ready for the press, and may God defend the right! It is believed, from past experience, that "600 or 1,000 well armed and well mounted men, who are good rifle shots, can overcome the most formidable Matabele 'impis,' or armies." The latter fight on foot. They have few rifles, and depend on their assegais, or javelins, and on their axes for offensive operations.

There is one portion of the Times correspondent's article which we desire to present to our readers, because it vindicates our British settlers' character as to their treatment of the native labourers in the Mashonaland mines and works. It is important that we should be in a position to prove that wherever Israel are located, whether in India, Australia, or Central Africa, our people are so conducting themselves as to be a "blessing" to the natives among whom they dwell, and "that all who see them acknowledge them to be the seed that the Lord hath blessed" (Isa. lxi. 9, R.V.). The annexed proves this point very satisfactorily, to our mind:—

The Matabele and their seven decades of unrestrained butcheries and ferocity I will deal with shortly; but on behalf of English occupation in South Africa it seems only fair that the native estimate of British fair dealing and British methods should be more widely known at home than at present. It is impossible to give a better idea of the estimation in which the English are held by all South African races desirous to work and live in peace than by a glance at the labour markets of the gold and diamond fields of the Transvaal and Kimberley. To supply the immense labour now required by these industries, native races throng from every corner of South and South-Central Africa. Hundreds, nay thousands, of these labourers start from their kraals knowing nothing more of the English than by the reports brought by fellow-tribesmen who have returned rich from work in the mines. In the remotest kraals and villages the belief in the honour and good faith of the British paymaster is so strong among people naturally suspicious that, month after month, year by year, raw, untutored natives from the wildest districts set forth on the long journey southward. I have met many parties of natives on the Zambesi road thus marching southward; men and boys from the far Barotse valley, some of whom had never set eyes on the white man before. The journey is long indeed, and the passage through remote and waterless deserts very trying before their El Dorado is reached. Yet hunger, thirst, not seldom death itself, are braved by these poor South Africans so that they may reach the Englishman's mines and touch his gold. Of all South African sights, and they are strange and many, none is more pathetic or more striking than the sublime confidence of these starving Zambesi wayfarers in British honesty and British truth. Such a testimony speaks volumes for the progress of the English in South Africa—progress that cannot be stayed even by the miserable muddlings of the past, by the shock of the Majuba surrender, or by the assaults of those at home whose motto seems to be that no one can do wrong except the Englishman!

In regard to the Matabele themselves, and their power to resist the attacks of Europeans, it must be remembered that the Boers in the Transvaal had to make good their position in the country against them. On their arrival, the Matabele quickly attacked them. Several desperate engagements took place, with doubtful success for either side. When the Boer numbers increased and they could bring more horses to the front against their active enemies, it was found that the assegai was no match against well mounted armed men moving rapidly about the country and inflicting severe defeats upon the Matabele. Since 1840 the latter have never encountered a European force; for they retreated then from the Transvaal, across the Limpopo River, and occupied the country where they have settled now. They have harried their native neighbours, the Mashonas and Makalakas, who never resist their murderers. The Times computes that "the butcher's bill of these inhuman savages upon the Mashonas alone must since 1840 have amounted to tens of thousands of lives." Things have now come to a crisis, and for our countrymen it is a question of life or death, whether they shall succumb to the Matabele spearmen, or by one campaign subdue and drive them out of the country across the Zambesi, where it is believed it is Lobengula's intention to retreat in case of defeat. The present aspect of the matter is well described by the special correspondent's account, and we quote it:—

In any case the next few months must inevitably be full of anxiety to all interested in the welfare of South Africa. The Matabele are now absolutely the only menacers of a general peace among the tribes and peoples south of the Zambesi; it is neither reasonable nor tolerable that they and their fiendish courses should be longer suffered. Mr. Rhodes is, or will be very shortly, upon the spot, but it is scarcely likely that he will be able now to bring about a peaceful solution of affairs. The Matabele are out of hand, out of Lobengula's control, and they mean, as they have meant for years past, to try once for all whether they or the white men are the stronger. For the peace and welfare of South Africa it is to be hoped that their lesson may be short and salutary.

What the result of the present complications will be we cannot venture to predict. But we think that as the position is the exact counterpart of that described in Micah v. 8, R.V., and as this nation is Israel, we may soon hear that a blow has been delivered by the British, small as is their numbers, which will inflict such loss upon Lobengula and his impies that they will be forced to cross the Zambesi, and settle down there as friendly neighbours of their lately powerful enemies. Under any circumstances the event cannot long be delayed. The rainy season has already begun, and before long the roads and rivers will be impassable, supplies will be cut short, the deadly horse sickness will have appeared, and the period of malarious fevers among white men will have set in.

We know that God's hand has arranged everything for us in Mashonaland as yet, and we look to Him so to guide us now, in our time of anxiety and peril, that we may be able at last to thank Him for His faithfulness and goodness to us, His people Israel.

Since the above was written news has reached this country of two or three encounters between the British forces and Lobengula's impis, also of the final victory of the British handful of troops over the Matabele at Buluwayo on Oct. 31. God has thus fulfilled Micah v. 8 for us to the very letter. Let Israel therefore praise the Lord from the very heart!

"A FRESH SERIES OF OBJECTIONS FROM "INDIA" (See "Banner," No. 865, July 26th, "1893).

Our friend, the military officer in the Punjab who desires to be known as "An Inquirer," has returned to the charge again and has sent us the following, which at his request we publish in extenso. The letter is long and contains hardly anything which has not been answered before. We are unable to find room for long papers, as a general rule, but to oblige our distant friend, who pronounces his opinions adversely to our views with some decision, and without much reference to his reasons for them, we place the whole before our readers. The replies to the major's objections we shall defer to future numbers, giving time to all our friends thoroughly to digest the arguments produced against us before they see the replies:—

"To the Editor of the 'Banner of Israel.'

"Sir,—I am much obliged for your notice in the Banner of July 26th. If you will do me the honour of considering my difficulties I shall be glad if you will publish this letter in extenso. Your readers, then, I think, will have a better and fairer opportunity of judging what my views are, than they may have gained from the extracts selected by you from my first letter.

"From the 'Handbook' and articles in the Banner I was impressed with the idea that you quoted, in support of your theory, such chapters as Isa. xi., Jer. xxxi., Ezek. xxxvii., &c. As, however, in your notice in July 26th, you concede that these chapters do refer to the final gathering in of Israel and Judah, that clears away the ground. We are agreed that there is to be a reunion of the Houses of Israel and Judah in Palestine (or their own land) into one nation under one head. This is shortly before the end of this age, literally in the 'last days' thereof. This being agreed upon, the following chapters and passages which plainly refer to events immediately preceding that union—that union itself—and events subsequent thereto may be eliminated as not affecting the point at issue:—

"Isa. ii., iv., v. 26—30, xi., lx., lxv.

"Jer. iii. 14—18, xxiii. 3—8, xxx. 3—7, xxxi., xxxii. 36—41, xxxiii. 7, 14, 15.

"Ezek. xx. 33—49, xxxiv. to end of book.

"Hos. i.—iii.

"Joel ii. 27—32.

"Amos ix. 14, 15.

"The question is, Are there any passages to show that the ten divorced tribes of Israel are to be gathered together as one nation prior to their collection for union with Judah? How long a period is their sifting among all nations (Amos ix. 9) to occupy? Your theory is that there are, on the grounds that Joseph was granted the birthright, and that 'we as a nation enjoy all the blessings which are in the Scriptures described as included in that birthright,' and in support of this you quote 'Gen. xii. 2, xviii. 18, xxii. 17, 18; Deut. xv. 6, xxviii. 1—15; Zech. x. 6—9.' These passages will all be dealt with in the following paragraphs, except Zech. x., which is inapplicable (see supra).

"Abrahamic covenant (Gen. xii. 2, xvii. 2—9, xviii. 18, xxii. 16—18; Rom. iv.; Gal. iii.). From the above passages we find that God's covenant with Abraham consisted of two clauses—one, multiplicity of natural descendants, temporal greatness, possession of Canaan, &c., conditional on the fulfilment by his natural descendants of the covenant of the law (Gen. xvii. 6—10); the second: multiplicity of his spiritual seed and their inheritance of the world (Gen. xxii. 16—18) on the condition of 'faith.' The following extracts from 'Hodge's Commentary' expound St. Paul's views better than I can (Rom. iv. 13): 'This verse has been variously explained. 1. Some understand the apostle to refer to the promise that Abraham should be the father of many nations (Gen. xvii. 5), and his posterity be as numerous as the stars of heaven (Gen. xv. 5); promises which they limit to his natural descendants, who, being widely scattered, may be said, in a limited sense, to possess the world. But this interpretation is irreconcilable with ver. 16. 2. Besides the promises already referred to, it was also said that in him all the nations of the earth should be blessed. This, as St. Paul's explains it (Gal. iii. 16, &c.), had direct reference to the blessings of redemption through Jesus Christ, who was the Seed of Abraham. And here, too, he speaks of blessings of which all believers partake. The possession of the world, therefore, here intended must be understood in a manner consistent with these passages. It may mean a general promise of blessedness to all believers, the happiness consequent on religion and the blessings of redemption. 3. Or the promises in question may have reference to the actual possession of the world by the spiritual seed of Abraham, and Christ their Head. The declaration that Abraham should be the father of many nations, and that his seed should be as the stars of heaven for multitude, included far more than that his natural descendants should be very numerous. If those who are of faith 'are the seed of Abraham, and heirs of the promise' (Gal. iii. 9, 29), then will the promise, as stated by the apostle, have its literal accomplishment, when the kingdoms of the world are given to the saints of the Most High God (Dan. vii. 27), and when the uttermost parts of the earth become the possession of Christ In this sense the promise includes the universal prevalence of the true religion, involving, of course, the advent of Christ, the establishment of His kingdom, and all its consequent blessings.' I know you lay great stress on Gen. xvii. 7, last clause, but read by the light of St. Paul's exegesis, and combined with the fact that Israel as a nation failed to fulfil the first part of the covenant (the law), and lost the temporal superiority attached thereto, I can see nothing in the phrase, 'the Gate of his enemies,' that is any valid evidence in support of your views. As far as the Abrahamic covenant is concerned, the growth, and spread, and dominance of the Israelites in Canaan, &c., quite fulfil the promise of temporal blessings till they deliberately forfeited them, and what was to happen to them after that was subsequently foretold. The ultimate reunion of both Houses is one, but in the passages considered I can see no evidence of the Anglo-Israel theory.

"The Mosaic covenant. I will begin with Gen. xlix. You conclude that the 'last days' in ver. 1 are intended to be recognised as 'fulfilled peophecy' in the Christian dispensation, but not before—that is now. Will you kindly reconcile this view with the following? Long before this dispensation began Ephraim had ceased to be a nation, and was being sifted among all nations. its tribes becoming so untraceable that on their restoration Ezekiel tells us they shall be picked out by lot (Ezek. xlvii. 22). It will surely be worthy of some consideration if other passages show that there was a fulfilment of prophecies during that age of Mosaic covenant, and also that another person, prophesying, throws light on the meaning of the words. I have not seen any attempt in the 'Handbook' or the BANNER to trace the fulfilment in this age of the prophecies applied to each son, and yet, if this cannot be done, much of the force of your reading of ver. 1 is lost. Let us take some of these sons.

Simeon and Levi. Do you maintain that they were not divided in Jacob and scattered in Israel before this dispensation? Josh. xix. 1, xxi. 3—9, 1 Chron. xxiv. 24—42, are among the passages that might be quoted to show that this prophecy was fulfilled at an early date.

"Zebulun. Ver. 13 seems clearly fulfilled in Josh. xix. 10, et seq.

"Dan. Josh. xix. 47; Judges xviii. 1, 2, 11—31; Jer. iv. 14, viii. 16, are among passages pointing to early fulfilment of ver. 16, 17.

"Benjamin. Judges xx. and others fulfil ver. 27.

"Judah. Ver. 9 had several fulfilments before this age in which indeed this verse would be inapplicable. Ver. 10 is a very difficult passage. Zedekiah was the last king of Judah. Where was the sceptre and the law-giver during, and indeed after, the Babylonian captivity? How do you propose to establish that this verse was literally fulfilled? What does the last clause mean? If it refers to the final gathering prior to the millennium, it means literally 'last days'—the last of this age, not the whole of it.

Joseph. Ver. 22—24 relate to the hostility of his brethren and his preservation by God. The last clause (ver. 24) is another very obscure one on which your own writers in the BANNER do not agree, so I may be pardoned for passing it by. Ver. 25, 26, contain general blessings extending to his descendants. So that out of the whole chapter I can only find one clause (the last of ver. 10) which must apply to this age, while I find fulfilments of the prophecies indicated at an early date. But Moses explains the phrase. In Deut. xxxi. 29 he tells the children of Israel that after his death they would corrupt themselves and evil befall them (?) when in the latter days. We know the evil which befell both Houses long antecedent to this dispensation. In Gen. xlix. 1 and Deut. xxxi. 29 'last days' and 'latter days' can, in my opinion, mean only in the future time, and I find nothing in Gen. xlix. which is evidence to support your theory. Deut. xv. 6, xxviii. 1—68, Moses was speaking to Israel under a covenant which they themselves had accepted ('all that the Lord hath spoken we will do'). There were blessings which would follow on their adherence, there were curses which would follow on their falling away. I can see no ground in these passages for building up a theory such as that of Anglo-Israelism. Isa. xlii. 9 seems to me conclusive as pointing to the fulfilment of prophecies such as the above during the existence of the Mosaic covenant—indeed, that the sins and corruptions of both Houses were so great as to call for a fresh set of prophecies to meet their case long before the period of the covenant had expired. The blessings of Moses in Deut. xxxiii. to the tribes individually are not fixed by him for fulfilment in the latter days, but plainly a general and, according to internal evidence, an early future.

A great deal has been made of ver. 17. 'The earth': I have no means here of ascertaining whether the same Hebrew word is used here as in Gen. vii. In that chapter 'the earth' certainly did not mean the world as we now know it (that is, ground abandoned fifty years ago). In Luke ii. 1, 'All the world' is used to designate the Roman Empire. There is nothing in the phrase, 'he shall push the people together to the ends of the earth,' which from the context requires further fulfilment than the building up of the kingdom in Canaan, &c. (see 1 Kings xxii. 11), and the removal of the nations which stood then in their way. Compare ver. 28 with Balaam's prophecy in Num. xxiii. 9 which you explain as being fulfilled in Canaan, in the BANNER, and I see no real evidence in this verse for Anglo-Israelism.

"Tarshish. I have read that you expound the Ships of Tarshish to be those of Great Britain. Will you please reconcile this for me with the following? In Gen. x. Tarshish is the son of Javan, the son of Japheth. You allow that Gomer, Tubal, and Meshech are Germany and Russia. Tarshish then, at the first at all events, was also peopled by Japhethites. If subsequently ousted or replanted by Semites, it is curious to find no record of it. Isa. xxiii. connects Tarshish with Tyre. Isa. lxvi. 19 mentions Tarshish, as separate to the isles afar off, among the places to which the Gospel is to be carried after the reunion of Israel and Judah. How you make out Tarshish to be Great Britain I cannot follow.

"Turning to the New Testament, I see you quote Matt. x. 6. I can only say your view is opposed to the whole passage when it is compared with Mark vi. 7—14, Luke ix. 1—6, Isa. liii. 6, Jer. l. 6, 1 Pet. ii. 25.

"The whole of Romans is against your theory. Take chap. xi. 17. If St. Paul were addressing any of Ephraim-Israel, why should he call them 'a wild olive tree'? You translate Ethnon as Ephraim-Israel. Please substitute Ephraim-Israel for Gentiles in the whole of Rom. xi. and Luke xxi. 24, and see if it makes sense?

I can find no prophecies or promises of national greatness, &c., assured to any of Abraham's descendants apart from the Mosaic covenant, while those conditional only on faith belong to the seed of Christ. Rom. ix. 6 (last clause) has no meaning unless Israel is used once in a spiritual sense and Isa. lxv. 1 confirms this.

In regard to my first letter, you have not solved my difficulty as to Isa. xi. 11, 12, or Ezek. xl. onwards. These latter are to me a great difficulty, and no explanation commends itself unless it is in harmony with the whole of Scripture. If the ten Ephraim-Israel tribes prove in the end to be still being sifted among the nations and collected therefrom for union with Judah, the above chapters harmonize. Again, the little stone kingdom of Daniel is not in harmony with what seems to me your laboured efforts to dovetail it into your theory.

I have not seen the following historical event noted by you, and it may be an acceptable extract from 'The Jews' by J. K. Hosmer: 'The first attack on Jerusalem was under Florus, who withdrew. It was repeated by Vespasian under whom Galilee was attacked. After forty-seven days it was carried by a final assault, led by Titus, son of Vespasian and Dominicus Sabinus, centurion. Josephus and one other left alone of a band surrendered. Galilee was subjugated after the fall of Jotapata.' Galilee was thus the first part attacked and does away with any idea of Benjaminites having been exempt from the slaughter. After the subjugation of Galilee the Romans withdrew again before the final siege, and it was in this interim that those who remembered Christ's warning fled.

"Subsequent events later on may provide more convincing evidence in support of your theory, and fit it in to harmonize with much Scripture that now appears to be against it. At present, solely on scriptural grounds, I can see no sufficient evidence to make me accept Anglo-Israelism.

"Yours faithfully,

No. X.—ANGLO-ISRAEL FICTION.

REPLY TO THE REV. C. F. COOPER.

BY BARRINGTON.

REV. C. F. COOPER has been free to choose his own methods, and to present his case in accordance with his own judgment. I have used the same liberty. That is surprising to Mr. Cooper. If not, why his unwearied complaints? He has closed his Scriptural argument; that is his business and not mine. He will not notice any main Scriptural argument; I cannot help that. He will tell your readers he has closed up that branch, and once more repeat that I have not answered him. Possibly he will instruct me how "this, that and the other" should be done. As Mr. Cooper has chosen his own methods, I have done the same. Your readers are the jury, and the verdict is outside us both. Two purposes are in this controversy, one to expose error, the other to establish truth. The one issue is the truth as to Israel.

I.—Israel as a kingdom ceased to be, as a Ten-tribed nation. Proof: "Lost as an independent people" (Dr. Robinson). "As a body indistinguishably lost" (Canon Farrar). "As for the deportation of Israel by Assyria there is no evidence, and no reason to suppose that the Ten Tribes, as a body, ever returned to Palestine. Nor did they maintain a distinct existence anywhere" (Dr. Chambers). "The ruin of Israel was complete" (Dr. Louis Menard). "And within three-score-and-five years shall Ephraim be broken, that it be not a people" (Isa. vii. 8). "As for Ephraim their glory shall fly away like a bird . . . Ephraim is smitten, their root is dried up . . . and they shall be wanderers among the nations" (Hosea ix. 11—17). "And will cause to cease the kingdom of the House of Israel" (Hosea i. 4). "The end has come upon My people of Israel; I will not again pass by them any more" (Amos viii. 2). "Yet will I leave a remnant" (Ezek. vi. 8). "The remnant of Israel" (Zeph. iii. 13). "The remnant of Israel" (Jer. xxxi. 7). "The remnant shall return" (Isa. x. 20, 21). "I will surely gather the remnant of Israel" (Micah ii. 12). Historic fact: "The remnant that are left of the captivity" (Neh. i. 3). "The remnant of their brethren" (Ezra iii. 8). Prophecy and fulfilment complete. The kingdom of Israel perished. A remnant was saved. The remnant of the captivity. After the captivity what? The children of Israel and Judah to be one nation (Ezek. xxxvii. 18—22). Historic fact: "And there went up some of the children of Israel" (Ezra vii. 7). "And the children of Israel . . . and the rest of the children of the captivity" (Ezra vi. 16). Also Ezra ii. 59. What became of this one nation? "Shall be led away captive into all nations" (Luke xxi. 24). Are so to-day! The Anglo-Saxon race is not! Conclusion: We are not, cannot be Israel.

II.—The Israel of God is the Church. "The Christian Church is a continuation of the Jewish" (J. H. Newman). "Christian and Jewish (Church) differed only in degree and not in kind" (Dean French). "But at the call of Israel the Gentiles did flock to the standard set up in Zion from far and near" (Bishop Lightfoot). "And as many as walk according to this rule, peace be on them, and mercy, and upon the Israel of God" (Gal. vi. 16). "If ye be Christ's, then are ye of Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise" (Gal. iii. 29). Believers, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, the Israel of God, i.e., "the Church of the living God." That is the judgment of Bishop Westcott, Dr. J. A. Hort, Dean Church, Dr. Fairbairn, Dr. E. B. Pusey, and Dr. McLaren. The Church being the Israel of God, Anglo-Israelism is outside fact and truth.

III.—Israel after the flesh are the Jews. "The people of Israel . . . a living historical miracle" (Professor Christlieb). "On hearing the word Jewish many of you smile . . . the intelligent Israelite" (Professor Gobet). "People of Israel . . . the Jews" (Dr. Schenkel). "Israel . . . the Jews" (Dr. Cox). "Israelites . . . Jews" (Professor Cheyne). "Israel . . . Jew" (Professor Sunday). "Israelites . . . Jews" (Dr. Hodge). Dr. McLaren, Dr. Dale, Dr. Marcus Dods, Dr. Bernhard Pick, Dr. Edershiem, Dr. Kellogg, Henry Ward Beecher, Dr. Lyman Abbott, Aubigne, Dean Stanley, all with Jewish writers agree, in harmony with the Word of God, in declaring that Israel after the flesh are the Jews. But to the word and the testimony. "We who are Jews by nature" (Gal. ii. 15).

"I also am an Israelite by the seed of Abraham" (Rom. xi. 1). "Which am a Jew" (Acts xxii. 3). "Are they Israelites? So am I. Are they the seed of Abraham? So am I" (2 Cor. xi. 22). "Behold Israel after the flesh" (1 Cor. x. 18). Who but Jews? "Give none offence, neither to the Jews, nor to the Gentiles, nor to the Church of God" (1 Cor. x. 32). "Art Thou the King of the Jews? And Jesus said unto him, Thou sayest" (Matt. xxvii. 11). "If He be the King of Israel" (Matt. xxvii. 42). "The Jews which were of Asia . . . men of Israel, help" (Acts xxi. 27, 28). Who were the men of Israel, if not Jews? According to Mr. Cooper's theory, the Woden worshipping Israel were not there! Men of Israel, i.e., Jews, were! "For these causes the Jews caught me in the temple" (Acts xxvi. 21). Christ calls the Jews Israel. Paul calls the Jews Israel after the flesh. That being so, truth demands the rejection of Anglo-Israelism, the Israel of descent being the Jews.

IV.—The future of Israel after the flesh. "The destinies of this wonderful people, as of all mankind, are in the hands of the All-Wise Ruler of the universe. His decrees will be accomplished, His truth, His goodness and His wisdom vindicated" (Dean Milman). His decrees, what are they? "Removed into all kingdoms of the earth" (Deut. xxviii. 25). "Scatter the power of the holy people" (Dan. xii. 7). "Led away captive into all nations . . . until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled" (Luke xxi. 24). "Scattered yet preserved" (Lev. xxvi. 44). "Subsist as a distinct people by themselves" (Dr. Ryland). "The preservation of the Jews is one of the most illustrious acts of divine providence" (Bishop Newton). "Near to absolute extinction again and again, yet survived" (Bishop Lightfoot).

To-day numbering more than at any period of their history. Time of Solomon, 5,000,000 (Conder). In the year 1700, 3,000,000 (Bernage); to-day from 7,000,000 to 8,000,000. "Ye are My witnesses," living evidence of the truth of God's word! Salvation is of the Jews, the Christian Church began with them. The kingdom was founded in Israel; not Mr. Cooper's Israel, but Paul's Israel after the flesh. But blindness in part is happened to Israel; because of unbelief they were broken off. Yet "God hath not cast away His people" (Rom. xi. 2). In this century, "130,000 Jewish converts have been baptized. In Israel the word of the Lord does not return void" (Dr. Dalmar's Gospel work in Israel).

And the promise is: "All Israel shall be saved" (Rom. xi. 26). When? When "the fulness of the Gentiles be come in" (Rom. xi. 25). "Until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled" (Luke xxi. 24). That time no man knoweth. In the meantime between 20 and 30 distinct societies are at work gathering Israel into the kingdom. The hope of Israel is restoration to the land of their fathers. How? and when? and why? cast us on a broad sea of divergent opinions. Enough to know the fact that there is a kingdom and a restoration for Israel, and all Israel shall be saved.

Did not Mr. Cooper make a mistake in the heading of his last? Should it not have been, "A Confession of Weakness?" That truthfully would have expressed the contents. Those wonderful things as to ethnology, history, &c., are a long time on the way! Hints to Students, special pleadings, feeble instructions, may do duty for the nakedness of the land, but the wonderful are long past due. Hope after the mouse we shall have the mountain.

I.—Mr. Cooper's strange statements. "No truth," says Mr. Cooper, "discovered within the present century has spread so rapidly as Anglo-Israelism has." No truth is begging the question! But, taking his statement as it stands, what is the evidence produced?

(1) Two hundred works are named, whether tracts or books we are not told, nor given any names of those great writers.

(2) A handbook, which has passed through three editions, the editions if 25 or 50, not mentioned.

(3) The handbook won many, &c.

(4) Lectures all the year round. I suppose, like Dickens' "All the Year Round," but once a week.

(5) Hundreds of dollars spent distributing literature.

(6) Mr. Cooper has been asked to form a class, of course in the rink or his Church. Such is the formidable and conclusive evidence! The recital is a sufficient answer. All that Mr. Cooper has said could be said in a greater degree of spiritualism and secularism. But as a statement as it stands it is not true! Evolution in the Christian sense is taught from the chairs of eminent schools of learning! Is that true of Anglo-Israelism? Is it endorsed by such leading Christian journals as the Christian World and Christian Union? is that true of Anglo-Israelism? Then take Christology distinctively in its comprehensiveness a truth of this century! Also, social science, as now expounded from hundreds of Christian pulpits, all of this century! Mr. Cooper is again astray!

II.—Mr. Cooper's continued complaints. Varied and copious. Misuse of Scriptures, dogmatism, confusion of mind, lack of wisdom, flagrantly inaccurate, &c. What's the meaning of it all? I am not Mr. Cooper, simply that and nothing more. Moreover, as in all your correspondent's letters, he labours hard to prove by quotations from divines . . . facts we both believe. In my last, to which Mr. Cooper refers, I quoted as follows: "The Christian Church is Israel, and is heir of the promises" (Dr. Rankin). "The Church is the Israel of God" (Dr.

Digitized by Google

Schaff). "The true Israel of God" (Prof. A. B. Bruce). Mr. Cooper says those quotations are facts, and he believes them. Good! Hope he will rehearse them to that class.

III.—Mr. Cooper's catechumen instructions. First, as to the meaning and use of the word Israel. He has omitted one important sense, namely, "the Israel of God," i.e., the Church (Gal. vi. 16). He also, of course inadvertently, has overlooked the fact that the term in the Old Testament stands for not only lineage, nationality, but a distinct spiritual relation, as God's chosen people. The people to whom were committed the oracles of God. And if the Israel of Ezra had them not, where were they? The Woden Worshippers had not them!" Jer. xxi. 35—38, Mr. Cooper tells us, refers to the Israel of the Ten Tribes, i.e., the kingdom of Israel. How can that be when both Isaiah and Hosea tells us Ephraim shall be not a people; and cease to be as a kingdom?

How can the Ten-tribed nation, root dried up and broken, continue a nation? But what does Jeremiah say? Seed of Israel. Exactly! Is the British nation to exist for ever? The fleshly-Israel, the Jews, are a separate people to-day; and the Israel of relation, i.e., the Church of God, a spiritual seed, abides; and in the restoration all Israel shall be saved. Further, the kingdom was founded by Christ and His apostles in Israel. Mr. Cooper says there never were any race privileges and distinctions. "Have separated you from other people" (Lev. xx. 24). "An holy people unto the Lord . . . hath chosen thee . . . A special people unto Himself, above all people that are on the face of the earth" (Deut. vii. 6). The catechumens must wonder what can have happened to their mentor! So accurate and so free from confusion; all clear as daylight. Still, withal, the strange blunderer. Yes. Homer nods.

IV.—Mr. Cooper's perversions. He tells us that: "In Ezra the children of Israel means Judah, Levi, and Benjamin, who alone returned from captivity." Proof given, Ezra ii. 1. That passage tells us that Nebuchadnezzar carried them away to Babylon. And it is true the Ten Tribes were taken to Assyria; what of that? Mr. Cooper says none of these could be of the Ten Tribes. Why? did not the Babylonian empire succeed the Assyrian? And was not the proclamation sent by Cyrus throughout the kingdom? But Ezra ii. 59, tells us directly some who were not of Israel, and what was demanded. Then Ezra vi. 16, mentions the children of Israel and the rest of the children of the captivity. Who were they? Why the distinction if some of the seed of Israel were not present? Then when did Israel "tremble . . . as a dove out of the land of Assyria, and I will place them in their houses, saith the Lord" (Hosea xi. 11). Is Great Britain Assyria? "I will bring My people Israel from their captivity" (Amos ix. 14). Are we in captivity? And when was Ezek. xxxvii. 16, fulfilled? Mr. Cooper will say it is yet to be fulfilled in the near future.

Then what did Paul mean when he said: "Unto which promise our Twelve Tribes, instantly serving God day and night hope to come" (Acts xxvi. 7). Were those hard drinkers instantly serving God?" Also, Luke ii. 36, a prophetess, the daughter of Phanuel, of the tribe of Aser. Will Mr. Cooper explain how the "3023 Jews carried away by Nebuchadnezzar" (Dr. Robinson) had grown to nearly 50,000 upon their return?

Mr. Cooper's tangle as to the term Jewish Church, calls to mind the saying of the "fly and wheel." "What a dust we do kick up." The "horse chestnut" logic awakens early memories. Paul, when a child, "thought—reasoned—as a child," but when he "became a man" he "put away childish things" (1 Cor. xiii. 2). Doubtless, there is a difference, to use Mr. Cooper's customary superlative of tremendous importance, between tweedledee and tweedledum, but life is too short to get at it. The term Jewish, as applying to the Hebrew race, is well established by such scholars as Bishop Westcott, Dr. McLaren, and the late Dean Stanley and Bishop Lightfoot. The company is good. The Church of the circumcision was of the Hebrew race and one of law (Dr. Edersheim). A "separate people, a nation, a Church—the Jewish Church" (Stanley). To whom were committed the oracles of God.

For long years idolatry clung to both Israel and Judah. The purification took place and a remnant was saved. The new nation of some of both Judah and Israel, under one head, constituted the Israel of God. That I have fully shown to be the fact. Also, that the Israel of the covenant, i.e., the Jewish Church, is perpetuated in the New Testament Church, the Israel of God. The Israel of God in the former dispensation was of a race, and a relation as the Church of the circumcision, and that for declared and special purposes. Great Britain is not; the British Empire is not; the Anglo-Saxon race is not; the relation does not exist, therefore, we are not Israel after the flesh.

Mr. Cooper's twist to get his Jew, and his claim to be of Ephraim, are pardonable when we remember what the prophet says of Ephraim: "Ephraim feedeth on wind," and "is joined to idols."

OUR HUGE EMPIRE, AND THE FRENCH MOANS THEREAT.

One who has been a believer in Our Identity for some years, and a reader of the Banner for a considerable period, forwards to us a cutting from The Bradford Daily Argus, of August 21 last, being of opinion that its contents would prove interesting to our readers. He considers that they furnish remarkable "blind evidence" on the part of foreigners to the truth of our contention. We do not wonder that foreign nations are perplexed at the remarkable manner in which our Empire has expanded in all parts of the earth during the last 50 or 100 years. The process began a century ago, but the expansion has literally been by leaps and bounds, during the Queen's reign of 50 years. Nothing has been known like it since the world began!

We have a vast Colonial Empire in all zones: a splendid Heathen Empire in Asia, strategically placed in the Indian Ocean, including nearly 300 millions of Hindoo and Mahomedan souls acknowledging Britain as the paramount Power of the Peninsula. We have, besides, all the important Gates of the world in our grasp; also the chief coaling stations, and ocean fortresses added to our world-wide Empire. Our language is becoming the language of the East, and of the ocean too; and a very large proportion of the telegraphic cables, which connect the continents and distant portions of our own and of our neighbours' Empires, is in the possession of our own race! No wonder the French, for example, look on these facts with despair, and ask where these things are to end? They know nothing of Our Identity with Israel, and consequently are puzzled to account for a state of things which must seem to them simply disastrous. Our cutting is this:

OUR GREAT EMPIRE.

The Figaro (Paris) reviews the progess of the British Empire, which it characterises as "stupefying." At the beginning of last century Britain possessed 60,000 square miles of territory, now she has 10,015,437 square miles, against the 2,354,646 of France. She has extended her rule over 298,205,767 human beings, whilst France governs, outside her own borders, only 29,248,173. In little more than a century, Britain has built up an Empire greater than any in history. The Figaro divides the process into two epochs, one dating from the Battle of Plassey, and the other from the beginning of the present reign. In the first of these conquest was made par masse; in the second par petits points—islets, rocks, scattered over the world, which is now studded with strongholds on which float the British flag. Our contemporary, more in sorrow than in anger, compares this with the time when Britain contented herself with Hudson's Bay, whilst France was mistress of the whole basin of the St. Lawrence. Holland, Portugal, France, and Spain were the great colonial nations of the first half of last century. It was only towards 1760 that England woke up to the necessity of colonies, and set herself to the task which she has persisted in without once looking back. The loss of the United States, although a political disaster, has been economically a gain to Britain, her trade with the republic representing a third of her entire commerce. The Figaro rather blames than envies England. "We shall have to take many a Mekong ere we overtake England on the road in which we were once before her."

It is needless for us henceforth to repeat the facts concerning the growth, extent, and grandeur of Her Majesty's dominions. Our foreign rivals attest the truth with sorrow and regret, declaring that the recital "stupifies" them. Well it may! For it is unique in the history of the world, as they candidly admit, and the Empire, they allow, is greater than any which has ever been seen before! We are asked, sometimes, what security there is that our vast Empire will not follow in the downward course which Spain, Portugal, France, and Holland have traversed; and in its turn give way to some other coming nation, which may, after all, be the true Israel depicted in God's Word. Our reply to this is, that we possess the birthright of Joseph, item for item, blessing for blessing, and therefore can be none other than Israel herself! None of the nations just named inherited these blessings in their entirety, or, in fact, in any degree at all! They never obtained the Gates throughout the world; nor did they develop into "a nation and company of nations." Vast multitudinousness was not theirs wherewith to colonize the earth, and the privilege of Gospel propagation wherewith to bless all nations, families, and kindreds of the earth, was not theirs to give to others; since three out of these four nations knew not the truth, as it is in Jesus, and therefore had no Gospel to proclaim to the nations lying in the wicked one! The fourth was a Protestant nation, powerful at sea, and doing something at one time by way of a commencement of a Colonial Empire. But Holland never became an evangelizing state. Its power soon dwindled away and whatever it once possessed it never had any part or lot in "the birthright of Joseph." It lacked multitudes; it lacked God's blessing; it never held the Gates or a vast heathen empire, and thus proved that it was not Israel. None of these nations was so rich that it lent to many nations but never borrowed. None were so powerful that they reigned over many nations, but were not brought under by some. Spain and Portugal were subjugated by the French under Napoleon Buonaparte. France was defeated by the Germans and forced to make a shameful peace with them on French soil. Holland was a weak power, which had no chance of universal dominion, or vast wealth, or redundant population. All these, even the French, are declining states showing the signs of declension and retrogression very unlike the forward expanding progress promised to "Israel of the Isles." The loss of the United States was a benefit to British-Israel since the separation ministered to the wealth of both these Israelitish states. Separated, and each possessing enormous power, multitudes, and wealth, they will, in the end, be able, when re-united, to rule the world with ease. All that confounds the foreigner, in the exalted position of Great Britain and its Empire, is merely the fulfilment of God's promises to Abraham and his seed, through Joseph and his two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh (Gen. xlviii. 19). The Frenchman admits that once his countrymen were before us as to the magnitude of our respective empires; but now he testifies with sorrow, that Deut. xxviii. 1, 13 are true, and that we are "set high above all the nations," "the head and not the tail," "above only, not beneath," according to the prophecies. Let Israel therefore praise the Lord, the Giver of all their good gifts.

THE HEBREW QUESTION.

Britain Must Have Room for Her Millions of Subjects.

Dr. Wild preached from the text, Jer. xxxi. 27, 28, "Behold the day is come, saith the Lord, that I will sow the House of Israel and the House of Judah with the seed of man and with the seed of beasts. And it shall come to pass that like as I have watched over them to pluck up, and to break down, and to throw down, and to destroy, and to afflict, so will I watch over them, to build and to plant, saith the Lord."

The House of Israel and the House of Judah mentioned in my text stand for two literal peoples, who once on a time had each a national existence, dwelling by the side of each other in the land of Palestine. All this is a matter of fact sustained by sacred and profane history. These same historical authorities plainly prove that these peoples lost their nationalities so far as the land of Palestine is concerned; anyone at all familiar with history will freely acknowledge that they were plucked up and destroyed and afflicted in a national sense. This much of prophecy concerning these houses have been fulfilled, and with me a firm believer in this inspired volume, I can easily believe that the other prophetic parts of my text will receive a fulfilment. God has watched over these houses and will most assuredly build and plant them again; for though the people were cast off and out of Palestine, they were not cast outside of God's watchful care and providential rule and intention. To an Anglo-Israelite, I mean one who believes in so-called as well as the Jews, in fact one who believes in both houses, it seems queer that some persons only believe in one house and one people; with them all is Jewish, and real and literal prophecies applying to the Jews are a matter of fact, and have been, and are, and will be fulfilled; but Israel, by far the larger house and people, are reckoned as nothing, and prophecies referring to them are not literal but spiritual. I find it very difficult to account for such a style of reasoning and, how these persons dare take such liberty in accepting a part and rejecting the best of God's plain teaching; how they can have such a one-sided faith and limited views in this enlightened day. I can live in all good charity with such folks, because I can persuade myself that

Digitized by Google

GOD CAN WINK AT THEIR IGNORANCE.

We read He did of some in olden times (Acts xvii. 30): "And the times of this ignorance God winked at." Such critics remind me of some of the same kind in the prophet's day, as we read in Jer. xxxiii. 24, "Considerest thou not what this people have spoken, saying the two families which the Lord hath chosen, He hath even cast them off? Thus they have despised My people, that they should be no more a nation before them." Then he goes on to say, as sure as the ordinances of heaven and day and night, these two families would be preserved and in due time restored to their own land again, though the critics seem to think because these two families were removed, and their national form of existence destroyed in Palestine, they must for ever remain so; and that the nationality could not be planted in some other place or country; yet long before this time God had made known through the prophet Nathan to David that He would transplant Israel, and with Israel the rightful sovereignty, as promised and confirmed by a divine oath to David and his seed for ever. This is frequently referred to by others of the sacred writers after the promise was made. Take the following as a passage to the point (2 Chron. xiii. 5): "Ought ye not to know that the Lord God of Israel gave the kingdom over Israel to David for ever, even to him and to his sons by a covenant of salt." And by a covenant of salt is meant the most sacred kind of an oath, and now let me read the following verse from 2 Sam. vii. 10, "Moreover I will appoint a place for My people Israel, and will plant them, that they may dwell in a place of their own." We will all agree that this was said at the time Israel was quietly settled in Palestine, so it could not refer to that country. This, of course, is further confirmed by the fact that they were moved from there. Such promise was never made for the House of Judah, for since the days of Jeremiah and the dethronement of Zedekiah, they have been without king, government, and country. The Jews can never have a country and nationality but in Palestine. To the land of Canaan they are to be restored in due time by their brethren of the House of Israel, which House of Israel in this day is Great Britain. In those islands was Israel finally planted and will indeed move no more for ever till the world ends, but when the times come; in fact, in Scripture language, it is time upon time repeated that these two houses shall jointly possess Palestine. It is there they are again to be made one family, one house, one people, and one nation, as we read in Ezek. xxxvii. 22: "And they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all." In ver. 35 and 36 following my text you see national continuity vouched for through Israel. I will read these verses: "Thus saith the Lord, which giveth us the sun for a light by day and the ordinances of the moon and of the stars for a light by night, which divideth the sea when the waves thereof roar; the Lord of hosts is His name. If these ordinances depart from before Me, saith the Lord, then the seed of Israel also shall cease from being a nation before Me for ever." Language could not be plainer or more strongly confirmed.

MANY ISRAELITES WILL JOIN THE JEWS

For the sake of any new hearers, or new readers of this sermon, you will let me say what now over and over to you, my regular congregation; in fact, you are so well posted on this subject that I cannot preach it as frequently as I used to do. I often wish somebody would raise some new objection to the theory, and so give me a chance to preach on the matter. Well, this is what I want to say, that the building and planting spoken of in the text was done through the prophet Jeremiah as the divine agent. He took the daughter of king Zedekiah, the last king of the Jews, to Ireland, where had settled a portion of the tribe of Dan, and there he planted this Davidic sovereignty in Israel, and so the title and authority descended through Irish kings to the Scottish, and from Scotland's kings through king James to the English, so her Majesty Queen Victoria is a liberal successor of David of Israel, Great Britain being literal Israel organized, the United States being the one tribe of Manasseh that was to have a separate existing nationality outside of Israel.

The origin, growth, place, and power of these two nations is in perfect harmony with prophecy, as much so as the Jews and their place and conditions, and just as I can prove some prophecies to be fulfilled by the Jews, and the Jews to be the very people, so by the fulfilment of some prophecies I can prove Great Britain to be Israel. For instance, the prophetic promise in my text, "To sow the House of Israel and the House of Judah with the seed of man and with the seed of beast," is now in course of fulfilment. Some of the other prophecies on this same point add to that of man and beast that of fruits; and when the promise sets in we were to have no more famine. They may have famines in Russia, China, and other countries, but with Israel a famine is now a thing of the past. Naturally, we are increasing faster than any other race or people in the world, and more, this natural increase is in a most wonderful and open manner being supplemented by additions from all other nations by immigration,

BY ANNEXATION AND BY CONQUESTS.

Over against these promises it is but reasonable that we look for a natural co-relative in room—that is, new country; for if we are to specially increase in these things and receive the overflowing millions of other nations, we must have room. Now, if you will look you will see this co-relative territorially.

Britain is growing rapidly, and is now an enormous size; she has added millions of square miles within the last few years; her enemies keep predicting her downfall and prophecy and Providence proclaim her growth and increase. Think of it, if we included the United States, more than one-fourth of the earth is under the control of Israel, and

but the greatest in measurement of all the prophetic federated states of Israel. Excepting Siberia, we are the largest country in the world under one government, measuring, as Canada does, 3,610,257 square miles, but in spite of the vast extent of territory the Empire of British-Israel continues to grow. Her last addition (I say last although there may be another before next Sunday) is a fine and valuable piece of country, measuring 30,000 square miles.

TAKEN FROM THE UNITED STATES OF VENEZUELA

in South America and annexed to British Guiana. This new addition is known to be very rich in gold and silver and valuable woods; the present inhabitants, though made up of mixed races, prefer British rule and protection, and poor, unsettled Venezuela, though protesting, can do nothing effectual to change the course of events, for as usual she is in a state of widespread insurrection, and if she were at peace, her two million people divided into twenty states, and of territory scattered over some four hundred thousand square miles, could do little to force the seceders back against their will, or unlock the jaws of the British bulldog, for this dog, when it does bite, generally bites hard and holds on. Whether this providential permissive steal be justifiable or not I know not, but this I do believe, the people annexed will be better off under British rule and protection than under Venezuela. It probably will be better for the world and all concerned, and sure I am that the latent wealth will be sooner and better developed and caused to circulate in the arteries of the world's commerce. "It's an ill wind that blows nobody any good," so we are in the habit of saying. I imagine this little breeze will help the ship of State on towards the millennium sea of universal liberty and peace.

British Guiana with this new addition will measure about one hundred and thirty thousand square miles and have a population of over two hundred thousand. In 1669 the British exchanged Guiana with the Dutch for the province of New York. In the colonial war for independence the Province of New York was one of the thirteen colonies, hence was lost to Britain on the formation of the United States.

In the beginning of this century the British for some reason or another took back Guiana, and will likely keep it now till judgment day.

The Anglo-Israel theory, I have often said and will repeat it, gives a beauty, and a light, and a unity that no other theory does to the Scriptures, Providence, and history. In the presence of the growth and the expansion of British-Israel, how easily and forcibly some of the sayings of the prophets are applied, as for instance in Isa. xlix. 8, when speaking of Israel in the isles, it says: "And I will preserve thee and give thee for a covenant of the people to establish the earth, to cause to inherit the desolate heritages," and, in real oriental languages and style, Israel's growth is expressed in Isa. liv. 2, 3: "Enlarge the place of thy tent, and let them stretch forth the curtains of thine habitations; spare not, lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes; for thou shalt break forth on the right hand and on the left, and thy seed shall inherit the Gentiles and make the desolate cities to be inhabited." I do like to see into shape by an unseen hand, and politicians change and yield to the trend of coming events, and governments controlled by a power behind the throne. Providence is more of a factor in public events than many seem to think; we have had some remarkable illustrations on these points the last twenty years in the United States, Great Britain, Russia, France, and Egypt; for while men and nations swaggered forth in great pomp proclaiming they were their own masters and would do this and that when they were but unconscious and unwilling servants of a higher power that moves on and over the Monroe doctrine, that humiliates France and Egypt and turns to defeat the British army in the Soudan, and checks the march of Russia at the gates of Constantinople. Scores of these events I have in the years past called your attention to both before they came to a pass and after.

A few months ago Lord Salisbury, in one of his speeches, warned the Roman Catholic hierarchy to mind their spiritual and keep their hands off the political wheel. It was a bold, independent, brave, and needed warning, and, though now they are near a general election in Britain, Lord Salisbury made a grand and fearless speech at a meeting of the Primrose League last week. I will quote a few words he said: "He had been accused of attacking the Roman Catholic religion, but nothing was further from his thoughts. What Ulster had to dread was being submitted to the despotism of her foes. While Parliament had a right to govern Ulster, it had no right to sell the province into slavery. Any attempt to use the English military to subject Ulster to Archbishop Walsh would rend society in two.

HOME RULE WAS NOT A MESSAGE OF PEACE.

but of civil and religious war." That is the way to talk whatever political party a man belongs to. In another part of his speech he said: "We have to deal with a proposal for a great organic change; the conflicts of classes are shutting out from men's eyes the great issue, which is the great integrity of the Empire." Here the noble statesman is falling into line with the prophetic destiny of Great Britain, as pointed out by the Word of God, and very clearly expounded by Anglo-Israelism.

Imperial federation is forcing its way. It is of God, and therefore must prevail. The line of policy for the British Empire to pursue because she is Israel is not disintegration, but federation and consolidation. Who would have thought a year ago even that a motion like that made by Colonel McNeill, M.P., in the Dominion Parliament would have called forth so much enthusiasm and sympathy in Canada, and especially in Great Britain, for I suppose the motion may be interpreted to be an offer from Canada to Britain of some degree of trade reciprocity, thanks to the colonel; for as sure as the heavens above us the colonies and Great Britain will have to get closer together and help and stand by each other. Once they do so they can have all they want in this world and be independent of all outside nations.

I am pleased to see the prophetic light getting clearer and our ideas and policies falling into the line of and it must be pleasing to you, my regular hearers, to see how these things are conforming themselves to this theory; and the ideas I have advanced to you before. I could tell you, if time permitted, what Great Britain will be and will do; suffice it to say she is God's Israel, she must work the work of Israel to serve God, and you must serve God, for if you do not you can take the consequences. How many others are serving Him? What shall I say to you then? I say to you to-night, let no man take your crown. If Great Britain does not do God's work God will punish her as He has done many times before; and if you do not please to be the servant of God He will punish you.

Dear friends, let us pray that our faith and hope may be strengthened in His holy Word, so that it may bring us into conformity with His will and pleasure. The Lord bless us. Amen.—The Evening News, Toronto, May 9, 1892.

HISTORICAL GLEANINGS.

FORWARDED BY E. REEP.

No. 1.

"ACROSS the kingdom from Dorsetshire to Norfolk there abound British barrows. For the Britons delighting exceedingly in horses aud chariots (a manner which they brought with them from the eastern countries of Egypt and Phœnicia) frequented these downs" (Palægraphia Britannica. By W. Stukely, 1743.

"Druids readily adopted Christianity and preached it. Columbanus was a Druid, and the apostle of Ireland and Cornwall. Druids came soon after the time of Abraham, hence were of Abraham's religion.

"Druid edifices, and all other works of this nature in our island, are erected by that most ancient measure called a cubit, which we read of in the Holy Scriptures. 'Tis the same that the pyramids of Egypt are projected upon; the same as that of Moses tabernacle and Solomon's temple. Altars were at first made of unhewn stone (according to Exod. xx. 25) but the Druids hearing probably of the glories of Solomon's temple, began to square their stones. The sacrificial feast of Druids, like those of Jews, and as described by Homer, Iliad I." (Stukeley's Stonehenge).

"It may be maintained that the organization of society in Gaul, and in Britain, before the dawn of the Christian era, was substantially the same as in Germany; that all the fundamental principles of Anglo-Saxon law existed among the Britons and Irish; Hengist and Horsa on their arrival effected only territorial changes. In very old copies of the Book of Invasions it is stated that the Milesians brought with them the Mosaic law. It is said to have been learned and received from Moses in Egypt, by Cae, who was himself an Israelite. This was the law of Erinn at the coming of St. Patrick in 432. The similarity of the ancient Milesian to the Hebrew law is observable in that of contracts" (O'Curry's "Manners and Customs of Ancient Irish." Published 1873).

"The Irish Scots are said to be the posterity of the Scots of Scythia. The name of Scots is originally the same as that of the Scyths; in Celtic it signifies restless wanderers ['And they (Israel) shall be wanderers among the nations.' —Hos. ix. 17]. The origin of the name is said to be not from the Scots themselves, but is a name given them by the Britons, from their being originally Scyths. It is again said that the ancient Scots were colonists from Spain, and colonized Ireland a thousand years before the Christian era. Josephus says the Celts or Gauls are descended from Gomer, eldest son of Japhet. This origin of the Celts is denied by one historian as a fiction of the East. At what particular period the Celts migrated into Europe it is not possible to say, it is certain, however, that the early inhabitants were of high antiquity, as shown by the antiquity of the language of the original Irish, the same as the ancient Celtic. The old Celtic tongue bears so great an affinity to ancient Hebrew, that to those who are masters of both, they appear plainly to be only dialects of the same tongue; or to speak properly, the Celtic a dialect of the Hebrew. If language be ancient, the people must be as old. The best Irish historians affirm that Ireland was invaded by the Scythians out of Spain about the same time as David reigned in Palestine."

Much has been lost through the Druids neglecting to commit their polity to writing. This much, however, seems pretty clear, not only from Irish history, but from the testimony of foreign authors, that the early Celtic religion was the same as that of the old patriarchs. Rough unhewn stones formed altars for sacrifice, according to the commandment, "If thou wilt make Me an altar of stone, thou shalt not build it of hewn stone." Some of these ancient altars still exist, and would seem to be similar to those used according to the ancient Mosaic law. Near these altars were pillar-stones, supposed to be like those mentioned in Scripture, and to have been erected as memorials of some great transaction. There are also heaps of coped stones dispersed about the country, some of them large, some of them small. The latter are supposed to have been originally the graves of men, according to a custom which prevailed among the Israelites mentioned in the Book of Joshua; the larger stones may have established covenants like that between Laban and Jacob. These patriarchal observances lasted only till the arrival of the Spanish Celts who introduced the heathen worship of other nations" (Warner's "History of Ireland," 1763).

GREAT BRITAIN IN SOUTH AFRICA.

FORWARDED BY A NEW YORK ANGLO-ISRAELITE.

ENGLAND has come forward in South Africa with a Roland for France's Siamese Oliver. Mr. Cecil J. Rhodes, the Prime Minister of Cape Colony, is well known to be one of the ablest and most successful of those who are seeking to extend the dominions of the Queen, and much weight must be attached to his utterances on imperial affairs. He has just been making a speech on British policy in Africa, in which he explicitly declares his intention to make the Zambesi instead of the Orange River the northern boundary of Cape Colony. This means the absorption of the Orange Free State and the Transvaal Republic, which are now independent, besides Mashonaland and Matabeleland, which are already under British protection, and threatens Gazaland, which makes half of Portuguese East Africa. No doubt Mr. Rhodes means what he says, and will presently set out to do it. The Orange State and the Transvaal will have to be secured by treaty, and that should not be a difficult task, since those states owe about all the progress and enterprise they have to England. Matabeleland may have to be won by hard fighting, but it is doubtless worth it, for it is one of the choicest regions in all the continent. Mashonaland is already famous for the wealth of its gold mines. In these advances England will have practically a free hand, for she will come into conflict with the interests or desires of no other European Power save Portugal, and Portugal scarcely counts.—From the New York Daily Tribune, Aug. 29, 1893.

RUSSIA AND FRANCE VERSUS THE TRIPLE ALLIANCE; BUT ISRAEL IN HIDING.

THE French to-day are in high spirits by reason of the visit of the Russian squadron to Toulon, and because of the demonstration in favour of the Russian alliance in Paris. The enthusiasm in behalf of the Russians is extravagantly high, and if we did not see the aim and object of it all, it would appear to be truly absurd. But it has its sober aspect, and really means that France sees her hour of national revenge for Sedan has arrived, and with Russia to support her, she can hope to reconquer Germany in the approaching war of Titans, and win back her lost provinces. The Russians, who look more soberly at affairs, will never go to the help of the French merely to aid them in their purposes of revenge against Germany. But they have designs of their own against Constantinople, the Dardanelles, and the Hellespont, which, when the time comes, will be much helped by the French armies on the Western frontiers of Germany. Consequently there are practially two camps in Europe just now, with three powers arrayed against two, and two against three; combatants to the number of 16,000,000 men with powerful fleets, being ready to help in the work of destroying each other. The Westminster Gazette, of October 20th asks what our British position will be, when that day of ill-omen arrives, what time these powers close for the conflict, which is sure to come? "England is neutral," says the writer, "in other words, isolated." These words recall to mind the command of Israel's God when He bade us, in Isa. xxvi. 20, 21. R.V., "Come, My people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee. Hide thyself for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast. For, behold, the Lord cometh forth out of His place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity. The earth, also, shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her slain."

It is remarkable that the writer in the Westminster Gazette, while admitting that, in "the coming war," our best position and policy would be neutrality, doubts if we shall be able to keep out of the conflagration, since "we may ourselves be the cause of the war"! This is singularly in accord with the prophecy of Ezek. xxv. 14, where in dealing with Edom's punishment (Turkey's ?) the announcement is made, "I will lay My vengeance upon Edom by the hand of My people Israel, and they shall do in Edom according to Mine anger, and according to My fury, and they shall know My vengeance, saith the Lord." If Turkey be Edom, as we believe, then Israel's hold upon Egypt, a part of Turkey at the present hour, is one of those facts which is likely, as any other, to precipitate a general war, without our being involved in it. The writer we have quoted looks to the occupation of Egypt as a weak point, and hangs upon it the following pessimistic anticipations:—

> As a fact, Europe is now divided into two camps, with some 16,000,000 of soldiers and with large fleets, all, we are assured, meaning and making for peace, but certain some day, and any day, to end in war. France and Russia are on the sea stronger than the Triple Alliance, and few will be found to deny may be a match for Germany, Austria, and Italy on land. England is neutral, or in other words isolated. Whatever Lord Salisbury's management of foreign affairs may have led Europe to believe, we in England know that he has not, could not, probably never wished, or tried to pledge England to the Triple Alliance. The best position for England in the coming war would be neutrality, but it is very doubtful whether we shall be able to preserve neutrality; we may ourselves be the cause of the war. So long as we retain Egypt, so long are we vulnerable all those miles and days from our base; Herat is part of Afghanistan. Surely that old "key of India," though no longer a key that could open the Gate, may be attacked: the one would bring us into collision with France, the other with Russia, and the combined fleets of Russia and France are as strong as or stronger than that of England.

No disaster can be avoided by our country if the Identity and all its guaranteed blessings are carefully put out of consideration. But this nation is Israel, entitled to the possession of the Gates (Gen. xxii. 17) and to Egypt as one of them, as God is true. We are therefore not the least alarmed at the frowns of France or afraid of the combined fleets of France and Russia; God can prevent their union, and, as He has ordained peace for us (Isa. xxvi. 12), He can find occupation for their united forces in other directions than ours while He hides us in our chambers and, like Noah, shuts our doors or Gates upon us, causing us to be "isolated" in our Empire and driven to confederate with our own colonial possessions as we never have yet united before. The Westminster Gazette advises "a complete and satisfactory settlement with France respecting "Egypt, Madagascar, Newfoundland, and Siam," and even with Russia regarding the "Pamirs, Persia, and Afghanistan." But as no settlement will satisfy these powers but our complete surrender of all these countries to their keeping, and the evacuation of them ourselves, it is hardly likely that this truly Radical and Gladstonian remedy for our ills will be acceptible to our proud nation. Egypt we have secured by great sacrifices, and it is the Gate of the route to India. We cannot abandon it for any compensation. Newfoundland and Siam are in some respects vital to our position in the West and East. Afghanistan as a buffer state we must defend with our full strength. On the whole the policy of scuttle and abandonment will never have a chance with our race; but as the journalist truly says, "an offensive and defensive alliance of all English-speaking peoples is the best policy for England, failing which comes neutrality." This last seems to be God's appointment for us during the pendency of the mighty war-woe now approaching. The prospect of the coming troubles, no doubt, is terrifying and disturbing to British minds in the extreme, especially as our social relations at home, and our commercial classes generally, are in a disturbed and discordant condition. But these things are only temporary incidents of our progress as a nation; the "darkness" and the "crooked things," which beset our paths, wherein God Himself undertakes to guide us, making "darkness light, and our crooked things straight before us"; never leaving us, or "forsaking" us, "because of the anointing" (Isa. xlii. 16, x. 27, R.V.). These considerations are "foolishness" to our public writers, and even to our ministers of religion; but the facts are patent around us; and even the journalists of the day are forced to admit that a time of unparalleled war and desolation is at the doors, and that for our nation there seems no hope of escape, unless the very things occur to us which God promised should be the means of Israel's deliverance at the supreme moment of crisis—namely, complete isolation and obliteration from the scene of the coming destruction, combined with a federation of the English-speaking nations of the Anglo-Saxon race, constituting "a federation of States such as the world has not yet seen" (Isa. xxvi. 20, 21; Gen. xxxv. 11, xlviii. 19). These things add proof to proof that we are God's people Ephraim-Israel, or the House of Joseph; and we rejoice and thank God for the gracious consolation! Oh, let Israel join us in the praise!

"THE FULNESS OF THE GENTILES."

BY REV. F. ASTON.

(Address at the Bath Conversazione, October 19th, 1893.)

THE subject upon which I have been asked to address you is one so large and comprehensive that Dr. Alder-Smith has written 250 pages upon it. I have been asked to perform the impossible feat of putting clearly before you my own views, and dealing with the views and opinions of others, in the allotted time of fifteen minutes. The person who allotted that time had, I should think, a microscopic view of the subject. The term, "fulness of the Gentiles," occurs in Rom. xi. 25: "For I would not, brethren, that you should be ignorant of this mystery [this veiled, hidden, or concealed truth], lest you should be wise in your own conceits [that is, lest they should attribute it to their own superior wisdom, that they had accepted what Judah had rejected, and be vainly puffed up] that blindness or hardness in part is happened unto Israel until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in: and so, all Israel shall be saved: as it is written, There shall come out of Zion the deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob."

Now, this term, "fulness of the Gentiles," is in almost every commentary connected with another term, "the times of the Gentiles." Luke xxi. 24, where we read that "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled," and upon these two terms, "the fulness of the Gentiles" and "the times of the Gentiles," has been built up a man-devised theory called, "the Gentile dispensation" or "Gentile parenthesis," terms we hear much of in this present day. "The times of the Gentiles" have been variously interpreted to mean the seasons or opportunities of the Gentiles, the day accorded to them of turning to God, or the period during which the Gentiles are permitted to occupy Jerusalem. The former interpretation has obtained most adherents; the latter, however, accords best with the Greek text. "The times of the Gentiles" is, to my mind, a term which embraces the whole period of Gentile rule, and stretches over the whole period of the great Gentile world-ruling powers—Egypt, Assyria, Babylonia, Medo-Persia, Grecia, Rome, Moslem, and in the future Russia—all of whom in turn dominate over Jerusalem; and in the passage before us the Saviour states that Jerusalem shall be trodden down until the times of her enemies are fulfilled. This view, to my mind, fits entirely in accordance with Old Testament Scripture. The times of the Gentiles cannot mean "the times or dispensation of Gentile blessing;" for if it be so, it speaks of their fulfilment taking place when Jerusalem ceases to be trodden under foot: these blessings are then to cease with Israel's restoration. Now, anyone familiar with Old Testament Scripture knows that the fact is just the reverse—viz., that with the restoration the time of Gentile blessing really begins. "All nations shall flow unto the mountain of the Lord's house; many peoples shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob, and He will teach us of His ways," and so on (Isaiah ii. 3, 4). The term, "the times of the Gentiles," therefore, gives no warrant for the use of such phrases as "the calling of the Gentiles," "the Gentile dispensation," but refers exclusively to the Gentile tenure of the Holy Land. But then there is the other passage where it is said that blindness is happened unto Israel until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in. If blindness (hardness) is happened unto Israel as a whole, then, of course, this would be a Gentile dispensation; but Holy Scripture is particular to tell us that the hardening was only in part, that some of the branches of the good olive-tree were broken off—not all; that God hath not cast away all His people, but that at that present time there was a remnant according to the election of grace. And yet, notwithstanding these declarations, divines speak as though all Israel were blind, broken off, and cast away; and interpret this term, "the fulness of the Gentiles," to mean the ingathering to the Church of the Gentile element. If this be a right interpretation of the clause before us, then we must understand the apostle to say that, before Israel's return, the fulness of the Gentile converts (or, in other words, all mankind) shall be come in; but then let me ask, To whom can Israel's return be "life from the dead," seeing, in that case, that all will be already alive before her return? If the fulness of the Gentiles is their ingathering to the Church of God, the gathering will have been completed previous to Israel's conversion, and nothing will remain for Israel, therefore, to do.

The real fact is, neither the terms, "the fulness" nor "the times" of the Gentiles, give the slightest countenance to the idea that this dispensation is a Gentile dispensation, a Gentile parenthesis, during which Israel is cast off, and the Gentiles in their place received into favour; on the contrary, they go to prove that this is not a Gentile dispensation at all, for St. Paul distinctly tells us, in this very Epistle to the Romans, that Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision, for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made unto the fathers, and that the Gentiles might glorify God for His mercy, and so he says, it is written, "Rejoice, ye Gentiles, with His people;" it is not, Rejoice, ye Gentiles, in the place of His people, but with His people. If, then, this term, "fulness of the Gentiles," has no reference to a Gentile dispensation, to what does it refer?

Well, commentators seem to have been oblivious to the fact that, in alluding to the fulness of the Gentiles, St. Paul was quoting Genesis xlviii. 19, where it is foretold that Ephraim should become a multitude (margin R.V., fulness) of nations. The Hebrew word used for "nations" is that of Goyim, and that word has a very significant meaning: it is never once used to mean tribes, but the revisers say the Hebrew word Goyim (nations) is applied by the Hebrews to the nations living outside Palestine, called heathen, and which is rendered in the Authorized Version by the word "Gentiles." Well, in the latter days Ephraim's literal seed were to become a multitude or fulness of Goyim or so-called Gentile nations. Joseph was to be a fruitful bough, whose branches were to run over the wall. He was to enjoy a prosperity and populousness extending to the remote ends of the earth, but it was as Goyim or as Gentile nations that Israel was thus to develop. The importance of this fact cannot be over-rated—viz., that Ephraim or the Ten-tribed kingdom were to be Gentilized, and as Gentile nations were to spread and develop into "a nation and a company of nations;" "his horns are the horns of the wild ox, with them he shall push the peoples—all of them—even to the ends of the earth," and as this pushing is inconsistent with millennium times, when all war is to cease, it follows that Ephraim is to attain to his dominion and sovereignty in this Christian dispensation, in this Christian dispensation be found a fulness of Goyim or Gentile nations; and this fulness of Gentilized Israel must come in before the House of Judah, the Israel in part, are converted, and acknowledge their Messiah. Jerome observes on this passage: "This is the blindness that happened to Israel in part, that the fulness of the Gentiles (or, as we should say, the fulness of the nations—the fulness of Goyim) should come in, and all Israel be saved. This blindness or hardening was not a mere chance. Our blessed Master said to His disciples, who were Galileans, "To you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them, the Jews, in parables; that seeing they might see and not perceive, and hearing they might hear and not understand" (Matt. xiii.). The casting away of the Jew was for a purpose—viz., that the fulness of the Gentiles, or fulness of Goyim, might come in; indeed, the whole of Romans ix., x., and xi., go to prove this. In chapter ix. 23, St. Paul says that God might make known the riches of His glory on the vessels of mercy, which He had afore prepared unto glory, even us, whom He hath called, not of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles, as He saith also in Hosea, "I will call them My people, which were Lo-ammi, not My people; and her beloved, which was not beloved." Here he tells us of the call of the cast-off House of Israel, not the call of the heathen world. Again, in speaking of the fall of the Jew in chapter x., he says in verse 19, "Moses saith, I will provoke you to jealousy by them that are no people (Lo-ammi again) and by a foolish nation I will anger you." It does not say by foolish nations, but by a foolish nation. Our blessed Lord said to the Jews (Matt. xxi. 43): "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof:" He did not say it should be given to the heathen nations, but to a nation—a single nation; and the apostle in Romans xi. shows, under the figure of the good olive-tree, its natural branches, its broken branches, and its wild graft, that that nation producing the fruits of the kingdom of God is Israel still. There is the root which is termed "holy." Now Abraham, the father of the faithful, together with Isaac and Jacob, are, I take it, the stem, springing up out of Christ the root, whose day they saw afar off but rejoiced in, and in whom all the promises are fulfilled. Jacob's twelve sons are the branches; the Roman Church, the wild graft, and representative of heathen Christendom; some of the branches (the House of Judah) were broken off, and the wild graft was grafted in among the natural branches, and with them partakers of the root and of the fatness of the olive-tree. Who these natural branches were it is not difficult to surmise. Isaiah liv., a chapter immediately succeeding the Messianic, tells the barren woman to sing, rejoice, and break forth into singing, declaring that she shall have many more children than the married wife Judah; so that we find the barren woman, the House of Israel, blessed, and Judah rejected. We know that Christ's mission was peculiarly one to the lost sheep of the House of Israel; we know that Judah rejected Christ, and that the Galileans, who were a part and parcel of Israel, received Him; we know that Christ's mission was to build again the house of David, which had fallen down—that is, to bring once more all the tribes under his rule; we know that the kingdom of God was taken from the House of Judah, and was given to the House of Israel; that he that halted (Judah) was made a remnant, whilst he that was cast off (Lo-ammi of Hos. i., and 1 Pet. ii. 9, 10) was to be made a strong nation; and so, though blindness in part is happened unto Israel, it is only in part—viz., in the House of Judah—and this blindness is only to last until Ephraim's fulness be an accomplished fact: then, will Christian Israel be blessed to Judah's blindness, and all Israel will be brought in under one rule and governance, and there shall be one flock and one shepherd.

Where, then, is your Gentile or heathen dispensation—

your Gentile parenthesis? for Israel's work has continued in unbroken continuity. So far from this being a Gentile dispensation, in the general use of the term, it is the dispensation of Israel's blessings; the period of her acceptance of Christ, of her national prosperity, spread, and development; the period in which, as Christ's servant, she evangelizes the heathen, bears witness for God, buds and blossoms and brings forth much fruit in the earth; waiting, watching, and praying for the return of her absent King, who, as King of Israel, is yet to sit upon the throne of His father David, and to reign over the house of Jacob for ever, and of whose kingdom there is to be no end.

For this fulness of Goyim, or fulness of Gentile nations, then, we have to look not among the Jews, but among the Gentiles; not in millennial times, but in the latter days or Christian dispensation before wars cease; not in its early days, but at that time when Judah is about to return to his own land. If we are upon the eve of that event; if, from the signs of the times, the hardening of Judah seems about to be relaxed, and the blindness to be giving way to sight; if, from general expectation, the coming of the Lord draws nigh,—then can there be no possible doubt but that Ephraim's fulness of Goyim has been realized, and that those promises made unto the fathers have been literally fulfilled; and the thought must arise in your hearts—"O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and the knowledge of God! How unsearchable are His judgments, and His ways past finding out!" When I see how God has led us by a way which we knew not, has fulfilled in us His almighty purposes, and made us witnesses for Him unto the ends of the world, I would say, as one believing, that God's purposes have been fulfilled in us, and that we are the long-lost and hidden House of Israel. "O let Israel now confess that He is gracious and that His mercy endureth for ever."

A FRESH SERIES OF OBJECTIONS FROM INDIA.

Replies by the Editor.

PART II.

It is a satisfaction to us to know that our gallant inquirer sees with us in regard to some foundation points.

1. He believes that the Houses of Israel and Judah are two separate bodies now.

2. That at a future date these two Houses will be reunited in their own land into one nation under one Head.

3. This is to occur "shortly before the end of this age, in the last days thereof."

What he does not see is that the tribes of Israel were to be gathered together as one nation prior to their collection for union with Judah. He is doubtful how long a period their sifting among all nations was to occupy (Amos ix. 9).

The argument that the British enjoy all the blessings of the Hebrew birthright, reserved only for Joseph's and his sons' birthright is put aside on grounds that we consider are quite inadmissable. He contends that God's covenants with Abraham were conditional; that the covenant respecting temporal blessings depended on the faithful observance of circumcision as "the covenant of the law" (Gen. xvii. 6—10), and the second respecting the spiritual gifts on the condition of "faith." We are referred to Gen. xvii. 6—10, xxii. 16—18 for authority for these opinions. We have referred to these Scriptures (not for the first or fiftieth time) and find no support for An Inquirer's statement. The first class of gifts, "natural descendants, temporal greatness, Canaan," &c., in no wise depended on future conditions. None appear in all those texts where these were promised! Neither in Gen. xii. 1, 2, xviii. 18, xxii. 17, 18, xxvi. 4, xxviii. 11, xlviii. 16—19, do any such conditions appear at all. When God bound Himself by an oath (Gen. xxii. 16—18), where, if anywhere, a condition of future deprivation might be expected, we find mention of none such; but a remarkable fact is noted that Abraham had obeyed God, and therefore, as the reward of obedience he and his posterity were to be rewarded by the Lord. The conditions attached to circumcision, and the penalty for failure could not operate further than what is stated in Gen. xvii. 2—14, as belonging to the sinning individual. It did not cancel God's promises to the nation to spring from Abraham. When the whole people of Israel neglected the circumcision of their children for forty years in the wilderness, as narrated in Joshua v. 1—9, the penalty was not exacted. The people sinning were not outcasted as they were, when having afterwards lapsed into idolatry, while occupying the Northern territory of Palestine, they ceased to obey God, refrained from circumcision (as no doubt they did), and were cast out of their territory as Lo-ammi Gentiles.

Even thus, they did not forfeit the Abrahamic blessings, as Gal. iii. 17 might have taught An Inquirer. "The covenant that was confirmed "before of God, in Christ, the law which was 430 years after, cannot disannul that it should make the promise of none effect." Israel's failure to fulfil the law could not cancel God's unconditional promises made on oath "to Abraham and his seed for ever."

Another mistake into which An Inquirer has fallen is the idea that the promise of temporal blessing to the Israelites in "Canaan, &c., was quite fulfilled by their growth and spread in Canaan, and by their dominance there." When did they there "possess the Gate of their enemies"? When did they develop into "a nation or company of nations," or Goyim, outside Palestine? When did they lend to many nations and never borrow? or reign over many nations and never submit to them? When did they, during that period, prove a "blessing" to all nations, which could only be after the First Advent, and when Christ's Gospel was being preached? As to their "deliberately forfeiting" these gifts by disobedience, we are not shown that the Israelites in Canaan ever enjoyed them, or even one of them, still less that for disobedience, God could, as a faithful God, cancel His unconditional oaths and covenants made in Abraham with His chosen people.

The Inquirer's argument regarding the "last" days is specious but without real value. The need for the use of the lot in Ezek. xlvii. 22, in distributing the land for its final settlement arises from the fact that Ephraim and the tribes, "his fellows," are now in a state of fusion as a House, and because the land, being limited in area, has to be divided among a multitude of people sprung from Ephraim, who cannot all obviously possess it (Jer. iii. 14). "The one of a city, and two of a family," must of course be selected somehow, and "the lot" is a divine expedient, as we all know (see Acts i. 26).

An Inquirer contends that all the tribal blessings save some regarding Judah and Joseph in Gen. xlix. 24, have already received fulfilment before "these last days" (so-called) and, therefore, Jacob's "last days" are not our days! But if, as our opponent allows, ver. 10 must be inapplicable to times prior to the First Advent, but does refer to "the last days of this age, not to the whole of it," we have an important admission which cuts the ground from under the argument he uses. If one tribe's history refers to the last part of our "last days," why not the rest? Some writers on our side have ventured to identify our United Kingdom as the scene of the present day fulfilments of Gen. xlix., and have seen in various parts of our country qualities exhibited by our British folks, corresponding to the tribal blessiugs named in that chapter. The fact, at any rate, shows that our Inquirer is at fault, and that his argument is not convincing.

The prophecy of Moses in Deut. xxxiii., which our Inquirer regards as fulfilled in Canaan in patriarchal and Mosaic times, certainly cannot so be understood, as to Joseph's blessings. His sons did not fulfil ver. 17 in those times? Judah was not in such a piteous case then as that described in ver. 7. The return from Babylon did not restore that tribe "to His people"? Benjamin, before the First Advent, had not peculiar prosperity, such as that described in ver. 12? And as to ver. 28, Israel never "dwelt in safety alone" till the British Islands afforded the "appointed place" of safety "alone," as it is this day, since A.D. 450. Further remarks on An Inquirer's objections we reserve for a future issue.

HOME RULE FOR IRELAND.

WE did not intend to revert to the subject of "Home Rule for Ireland," which we dealt with in our leader in No. 874, page 469, of September 27th last. But we are compelled to do so with reference to a rebuke administered to us by a Wesleyan minister, the Rev. Thomas Richards, of St. Ives, Cornwall, who for reasons stated below, considers our article "altogether out of place," and one that seems to indicate that we are "very shaky" in respect to "the Identification question," and are "doing our best to prevent the measure passing." In reply, we have to say that our opponent—(who it will be seen is a real antagonist, and does not believe a word of our contention, but is, on the contrary, an aider and abetter of the views of the Rev. John Wilkinson, the real "friend of Israel")—is strangely concerned about our consistency in this matter! But he must see, however, that we, like Lord Salisbury, were convinced that it was impossible the measure could pass into law, and were glad it was extinguished by the vote of the House of Lords. After the fate of the Bill was declared, we were justified in pointing out what would have been the effect of the Bill had it become law—humanly speaking. If it be, indeed, the innocent measure that Mr. Richards declares (against the evidence) that it is, then there will be nothing easier than that appeal to the country which the Liberal Unionists demand, to secure and obtain for Mr. Gladstone "the mandate" of the United Kingdom, that he and our reverend opponent, we believe, deem so certain he will secure. Mr. Gladstone will not attempt it! The Prime Minister knows well that the country, if he submits the question to them now, will put him out of office, and we shall, therefore, have no appeal made, until the Irish and Welsh members in despair abandon him in the coming session to the defeat which awaits him. Mr. Richards does not realise the difference between the position of Ireland with Home Rule demanded by the leaders of the Nationalist party, and the Home Rule which the loyal colonies, as British confederated nations enjoy, according to the Scriptures. Home Rule granted to Ireland will lead at the very outset to civil war between Protestant Ulster and Rome-ridden Fenianists. We, therefore, cannot ignore those dangers of which Mr. Richards make so light. Lord Macaulay appreciated them at their true value, as does Lord Salisbury, and as do many of the worthiest and ablest in our land. We cannot in the BANNER fight that weary battle over again. We had enough of it in the Parliamentary debates of the year, and are thankful that the Lords have thrown out the whole measure, till at least the country's voice shall have been heard, and a true mandate be delivered by it, "Yea, or Nay!" In passing, we would deny Mr. Richards statement that the Canadian and Cape Colonists, as believers in Our Identity, could, under any circumstances, have ceased to be Israelites. Ephraim-Israel was to become "a nation and a company of nations," and accordingly with their semi-independence we see the wondrous spectacle of a number of British colonies raised to the status of nations, and yet, one and all, declaring that as nations, they will still remain the dutiful, loyal daughters of their old mother in the West! Such is not the condition of the South and South-west of Ireland. There are two races in Ireland—one, the majority in the South and West harbouring deadly hatred and enmity against the people of Great Britain, and the other in the North are one in race with ourselves. We could not entrust those enemies of our nation with the independence they demand, and therefore in self-defence we shall deny it to them, according to the Scriptures. The "Isles of the West" must be Israel's, according to Isa. xxiv. 15, and the Fenians are not Israel, but Israel's foes. In regard to the Rev. J. Wilkinson's writings and views we have no desire to go over that ground again. We devoted three columns of the BANNER to the refutation of his extraordinary opinions, in pp. 482 and 483 of this year's volume (No. 875), and Mr. Douglas A. Onslow gave much labour with the same object in his able pamphlet, entitled, "Israel a Reality, and Still Favoured of God," a reply to John Wilkinson's pamphlet, "The Ten Tribes—where they are NOT? and where are they?" To these writings we refer Mr. Richards for the reply to his favourite author's fallacies. In regard to Mr. Richards wonderful statement, wonderful as emanating from a well-instructed Protestant minister, that "by the same process we could identify the Zulus and Hottentots to be Israelites as that we employ to identify the British," the idea is indeed surprising, and makes it certain that Mr. Richards has read our literature in a very perfunctory way. To put forward only a few of our leading arguments. Are the Hottentots or Zulus—

1. Multitudinous to a degree? (Hosea i. 10).
2. Are they wealthy beyond imagination, lending to many nations, borrowing from none? (Deut. xv. 6).
3. Do they reign over many nations, and do no nations reign over them? (Deut. xv. 6).
4. Are they Christians by national religion? (Hosea i. 10).
5. Have they at heart God's words, His statutes, and His judgments? (Psa. clxvii. 19, 20).
6. Have they "spread abroad to the West (first), to the East, to the North, and to the South?" (Gen. xxviii. 14).
7. Are they a blessing to all nations and families of the earth? (Gen. xxii. 18, xxviii. 14).
8. Have they respect to the Sabbath, and to the ten true laws of God? (Exod. xxxi. 13, 17; Deut. vi. 4—9)
9. Are they the Christian evangelists of our God to every creature? (Mark xvi. 15).

Digitized by Google

10. Are they endowed with the kingdom of God bringing forth the fruits thereof, and admitted by all who see them, that they are the seed the Lord hath blessed? (Matt. xxi. 43; Isa. lxi. 9).

To none of these questions can an affirmative answer be given in respect to either the Zulus or the Hottentots! To all of them such may be truly given as respects the British folk! We think, then, Mr. Richards has his answer, and we need add no more. In regard to the last argument our opponent uses—namely, that our ancestors lacked circumcision, the possession of parts of the Samaritan (!) Scriptures, and the parody of the Levitical priesthood, whereby we might identify them, we remark that God intended to "lose" Israel and constitute them a "lost" people, as Isa. xxvii. 13 (R.V., margin) really shows. Mr. F. Richards objects to that proceeding, and demands that God should have left them with clear tangible marks of His own selection, by which all might recognise them to be Israelites. Valid marks of God's choice they have, indeed, stamped on them, as those who can see with their eyes have universally allowed. The "birthright of Joseph" is theirs, and all those signs which God's Word declares shall show themselves on His people in these "latter days." Grand clusters of these appear in Gen. xlviii. 15—19, xlix. 22—26; Deut. xv. 6, xxviii. 1—15, xxxiii. 13—17; Hosea i. 10, 11, and many another Scripture, which all find fulfilment in the Anglo-Saxon race, but not at all in the Zulu savages, or among the Hottentots of South Africa, who are mostly Pagans still. We now invite attention to the rev. opponent's remarks, being satisfied to leave them side by side with ours for the judgment of our readers:—

DEAR SIR,—I am in receipt of a copy of BANNER OF ISRAEL, of which you are editor, please accept my thanks for same. I find an article on "Home Rule," strongly protesting against the measure. Of course if you do not approve of the measure you have a perfect right to protest against it on its merits, but from your standpoint it is altogether out of place, and seems to indicate that you are very shaky on the Identification question. If, as you say, in us you have discovered the Ten Tribes, and it is contrary to God's purpose that we should be separated (and the Scripture cannot be broken) would it not have been sufficient to say the measure is contrary to God's will, and it won't pass; but to argue and fulminate indicates a secret fear lest the measure might pass, and you are doing your best to prevent it.

But why should the passing of the Home Rule Bill for Ireland interfere with the Identification theory? The powers given to the Irish only relate to local matters, but all imperial matters will still be controlled at Westminster, and the monarch at Windsor would still be the ruler of Ireland, and there would still be the same commercial intercourse. I believe there are some in Canada, and some few at the Cape that believe in the theory; have they ceased to be Israelites because they have separated themselves from Great Britain? It seems to me the same arguments that are raised against Home Rule in this direction might have been raised against emigration from England and with greater force, and so millions now in affluence would have been eating up one another, and our magnificent colonies would never have been founded. I know Mr. Wilkinson personally, a man, as you know, in full sympathy with the Jewish people, and well read in Jewish lore. He strongly opposed the theory, and said it had no foundation in truth. He even felt so strongly that he wrote against it, and sent me the revise sheets before publication. I am not aware that he ever altered his views.

I have read the Identifications with some care, and it seems to me that by the same process we could identify the Zulus or the Hottentots. If we came from the Israelites it seems strange we should have lost all trace of the facts in our traditions and ceremonies. Among savages and pagans there are traditions of creation and the fall, and the flood, events far, far away; but here we have an event comparatively modern, happening to a people of intelligence, if not of education, and yet there is no reliable tracing of the fact. It is strange, to say the least of it. If we had circumcision, and fragments of the Samaritan Scripts, and a deformed degenerate Levitical priesthood there would be something to advance, to say the least. It is unfortunate it is not so.

I did not intend to say all this when I began, I simply intended to point out your unsatisfactory position in reference to "Home Rule."

I am, dear sir, yours very truly,
THOMAS RICHARDS,
Wesleyan Minister.

THE DISCUSSION IN YARMOUTH, NOVA SCOTIA.

No. XI.—ANGLO-ISRAELISM.

THE REV. C. F. COOPER CONTINUES.

THE ETHNOLOGICAL ARGUMENT.

TO THE EDITOR OF "YARMOUTH LIGHT."—SIR,—Before proceeding to the ethnological argument for our Israelitish origin, I wish to make two remarks: (1) Each of the three editions of the "Handbook" mentioned in my last, the first of which editions was published in 1891 (not 1892), consisted of 2,000 copies instead of the 25 or 50 "Barrington" would fain suppose. So that 6,000 copies of this excellent work have been bought and read in two years, and a fourth edition is already being prepared. (2) The Scriptures, as we have seen, prove clearly that Ephraim-Israel could never be annihilated or absorbed. The Ten Tribes must be somewhere The portrait of what they should become is clearly drawn for us in the Bible; the corresponding reality is found in the Anglo-Saxon race. Let me add: (a) Josephus affirms that the Ten Tribes existed as a separate people—"an immense multitude"—in his day. (b) I have it on the authority of a Jewish friend—or to be strictly accurate, one of the Tribe of Levi—that the Jews do not believe any of the Ten Tribes are with them; also that the majority of the Jews in the United States believe the Anglo-Saxon race are Israel.

I must now briefly discuss our origin from an ethnological point of view. First, I will reply to "Barrington's" objections.

In his letter of March 16, your correspondent says: "In the history of Israel in the Word of God we have a gradual development in all the excellencies of national life, social, political, and religious." Turn to 2 Kings and read chapter xvii. I will quote a few verses: "They hardened their necks like the necks of their forefathers, that did not believe in the Lord their God. And they rejected His statutes and His covenants and His testimonies, and they followed vanity and went after the heathen that were round about them. And they left all the commandments of the Lord their God, and made them molten images, even two calves, and made a grove and worshipped all the hosts of heaven, and served Baal. And caused their sons and their daughters to pass through the fire, and used divinations and enchantments, and sold themselves to do evil in the sight of the Lord." Thus does Scripture teach that instead of a "gradual development in all the excellencies of national life, social, political, and religious," there was a gradual degeneration, until Jehovah in His anger banished Israel from the land of their fathers, and sent them wandering among the nations, a poor, forsaken, sin-cursed people for centuries.

Again your correspondent writes: "Forgotten their literature, the glory of their race; their temple, with its glory, and the divinest song, for hearth worship of Pagan form and hero war-songs and trivial mythological lore!" "Barrington" cannot believe that fallen Israel could forget their temple, their divine songs, etc., as they wandered among the heathen. Does he not know that for centuries before they were driven from Palestine they had forsaken the chosen sanctuary, having set up a rival religion and erected substitutes for the temple; that even in the Holy Land itself they ceased to sing the praises of Jehovah, and chanted hymns in honour of Baal! and even on that sacred soil taught their children "trivial, mythological lore"?

Now "Barrington" argues thus: "Our Saxon forefathers were terribly wicked, fierce, warlike, idolaters, and hard drinkers; therefore they could not be Israel." Read again 2 Kings xvii., and contemplate once more to what depths of depravity these people had fallen before their dispersion. Then turn to the following Scriptures: Isa. v. 11, 12, 22, xxviii. 1, 3; Hosea i. 6, 11; Ezek. xxiii. 33, etc., where you will find that in Palestine drunkenness was one of their crying sins, a national vice. Now, ask yourself what would such a people, put away, divorced, forsaken by God, without one prophet among them, probably become during centuries of wandering among a heathen population? Is it strange if they forgot their "literature, poets, and teachers"—nay, may be, the very name of their God? For this was the time when, according to Deut. xxviii. 64, Israel was given over to worship of wood and stone, and learned the ways of the heathen. The terrible decree has gone forth, "Ephraim is joined to his idols, let him alone." In what state, I ask again, should we expect to find these apostate people after being for centuries left to themselves in the heathen world? "Barrington" would expect to find them developing "all the excellencies of national life, social, political, and religious." But, sir, unless the laws which govern human nature were reversed, every other man would be surprised if when discovered they were not idolaters and "hard drinkers." The wonder is not that they forgot, but that they remembered so much—not that they were so wicked, but that they were no worse. That they did remember much of their former religion, customs, etc., I hope to prove by-and-bye.

But, sir, notwithstanding their sins, I claim justice even for our Saxon fathers, or which is the same thing, for poor, distressed, and fallen Israel. That they were nothing like so vile and uncultured as "Barrington" makes out, the following extracts from that renowned work, "The Viking Age," by M. Du Chaillu, bear witness. This book contains the latest utterance of scientific history on the origin of the Saxon people. "This northern civilization [the Saxon] was peculiar to itself, having nothing in common with the Roman world. The North was separated from Rome by the forests and swamps of Germania—a vague term given to a country N. and N.E. of Italy, a land without boundaries and inhabited by a great number of warlike, wild, uncivilized tribes." (These "Barrington" confuses with the Saxons.) "According to the accounts of Roman writers, these people were very unlike those of the North. They were distinct. One was comparatively civilized; the other was not. The manly civilization the Northerns [Saxons] possessed was their own." This writer then gives remarkable evidence of their culture and civilization, from works of art which have survived from times of remote antiquity. The weapons found with this peculiar Northern ornamentation, and the superb ring coats of mail show the skill of these people in working iron. The remnants of articles of clothing which have fortunately escaped entire destruction show the existence of great skill in weaving; beautiful vessels of silver and gold also testify to the taste and luxury of those early times. The knowledge of the art of writing and gilding is clearly demonstrated." In contradistinction to these facts which the latest utterances of scientific history affirm, "Barrington" would have us believe our Saxon ancestors were uncivilized barbarians. He says they were fierce, cunning, etc., and were clothed "only in skins or small cloaks of deers' hides, a large portion of the body being naked." Your correspondent gives us this information from Cæsar.

Passing by the question as to whether the people Cæsar is describing were our Saxon fathers, I ask your readers to refer to the "Commentaries," Book VI., chap. xxi., xxiv., where they will find that your correspondent has told us the bad things the writer says of these people, and omitted even to mention the good things. Cæsar speaks of their devotion to fatigue and hardships, of their chastity, and of their efforts to avoid the desire of wealth. He says, "To injure guests they regard as impious; they defend from wrong those who have come to them for any purpose whatever, and esteem them inviolable; to them the houses of all are open and maintenance is freely supplied." Now I ask "Barrington" if he thinks it fair to lay before your readers the imperfections and sins of these people, at the same time omitting all mention of the r excellent qualities? Is it just? Can we in this matter correctly estimate their character? Sir, our conclusion is that on the whole our Saxon fathers, with their manly civilization, their warlike character, their "hard drinking," and their idolatry, were just the kind of people we should expect Israel to become under all the circumstances.

LANGUAGE.

"Barring on's" argument from language is as follows: "Language is always an evidence of race; the Anglo-Saxon tongue is Aryan; Israel's tongue was Semitic. Therefore the Anglo-Saxon race cannot be Israel." Waiving for a moment the accuracy of the statement that our language can be truly described as Aryan, let us enquire whether language is a test of race. Is it not possible for a people to forget their own tongue and speak another? Let us take a journey to the West Indies, where we shall find that the majority of the population are of African origin. Do they speak an African tongue? The Rev. Robert Douglas, referring to these people, writes: "In the Fortnightly Review a few years ago, Mr. Grant Allen stated that it took him three years to find out a single word of African origin, so completely has the original mother tongue of these people been obliterated in a comparatively short period." If "Barrington's" test be a good one these Africans are proved to be Anglo-Saxons.

Now go with me on a voyage across the Atlantic, and let us visit the continent of Europe. We there hear the French, Spanish, Portuguese, and others speaking languages derived from the Latin—corrupt, modernized forms of the old Roman tongue. Yet these people are admittedly not descended from the Romans, but are of Keltic, Teutonic, or Slavonic origin. Here again your correspondent's test fails. Now let us in imagination take a flight through bygone ages and land on the sacred soil of Palestine, and let us listen to the words of our brethren the Jews just after their return from Babylon. What language are they speaking? Not Hebrew, but the language of Babylon. Dean Prideaux (Book VIII.) says: "Common people, by having so long conversed with the Babylonians, learned that language and forgot their own." And yet the Ten Tribes, after centuries of intercourse with other nations, are expected to be found talking pure Hebrew, or something very much like it.

Now, sir, these examples prove an universally admitted maxim of modern philology, that "Language is not a test of race at all, but only of social contact." Now let me tell your readers that ethnologists and historians do not state that they can prove that we are Japhetic. They have been wont to take it for granted as the most probable supposition, and that they have based their classification principally upon language. At length the cases I have mentioned—viz., those of the French, Spaniards, etc.—have led them tardily to admit that this test is unreliable. Thus objections to our Israelitish origin on the ground of language have not the weight of the lightest feather.

Now let us on the other hand enquire whether philology has anything to say to confirm our Israelitish origin. I think we shall find it has much to say. According to Sharon Turner (Book I., pp. 234—257), the Saxons were acquainted with the Runic characters. The Rev. W. H. Milner, in "Israel's Wanderings," says: "Haigh, in his 'Conquest of Britain,' pp. 32, 66, 68, 88, 106, 107, notices numerous points of resemblance between the Runic alphabet and those of the ancient Phœnicians and Hebrews. The futhorc or Runic alphabet originated clearly in times of primitive antiquity. The nomenclature of the Phœnician-Hebrew alphabet is admitted to indicate its having originated in a primitive state of society, and that of the futhorc has precisely the same character. Indeed, it is remarkable how many of the objects named are common to both, how identical was the feeling which dictated in each case the choice of the symbols . . . the remarkable coincidences in both systems, commencing with the names of domestic cattle!"

The author gives several of these symbols, which space forbids me to copy. He adds: "It must be remembered that the regular Hebrew type was a comparatively late growth, and that the early Phœnician-Hebrew forms would be those with which the Israelites prior to 700 B.C. were acquainted. A careful comparison of these old alphabets with the Runic seems irresistibly to suggest the impression that the latter—i.e, the alphabet of our Saxon fathers—consisted of the old Hebrew letters, as nearly as permitted by the break-up of traditions during the centuries of war and migration."

This surely is a weighty fact. Can "Barrington" explain it? Again, there are remarkable resemblances in the structure of the Hebrew and of the English. Tyndall, in the preface to his translation of the Bible, says: "The properties of the Hebrew tongue agree a thousand times more with the English than with the Latin." The Rev. Jacob Tomlin, in his "Comparatively Vocabulary of Forty-eight Languages," asserts that about a quarter of the words in Saxon bear an affinity to Hebrew. He adds: "Not only in words does this close affinity exist between our original mother tongue and the Hebrew, but in the arrangement of ideas, and in the simple structure of sentences it has also a near agreement." Again, in his "Nineteenth Century Revelation of the Fruits of History," chap. xi., the Rev. Robert Douglas says: "Old Saxon words are found side by side with Hebrew words in translation of the New Testament for the Mæso-Goths, A.D. 360."

Much more might be advanced, but space forbids. In my next I hope to give some account of the interesting story of Dan's wanderings.

Yours, etc., C. F. COOPER.

RANDOM SHAFTS.

THE letter taken from the Newcastle Chronicle, and published in the BANNER for September 20th, is couched in a very commendable spirit. The writer of it is an opponent, or at least a doubter, with whom it would be an actual pleasure to discuss our subject, for he is clearly neither an ignoramus nor a bigot, and in that sense he is a rarity. Of the three objecting clauses put forward by him only the second seems to need a reply. It is there urged that the tribes of Israel were Semitic, whereas, according to Sayce, the Gimerrai and Sakai are descended from Gomer, who was a son of Japheth. This argument is made up of two links—a strong one and a weak one. We do not deny that Gomer was of Japheth, but we deny that the British Cymry, or Saxons, are derived from Gomer. Professor Sayce may be of the opinion that they are, and he can doubtless refer us to scores of others who entertain the same opinion. But we want proof, not opinions. We have been begging the scholars for years now to favour us with this, but they are singularly slow in doing so. They will smile, and scold, and fume, but they decline to prove. Of course we suspect the reason why.

Professor Sayce, for instance, is a laborious student of Eastern remains, and where the value of cuneiform characters is concerned we must listen to him attentively. But on the origin of the British he is no better qualified to judge than any rational person who reads history. And history contributes no real evidence of our Japhetic extraction. Doctors have come at last to differ on the point. It is, perhaps, of little consequence whether they differ or not so long as they are unable to substantiate their view, but there is some satisfaction in seeing that they do differ. Lysons, in "Our British Ancestors," observes that he would class the Britons with Semites, "but for the universal tradition which assigns our descent to Japheth." Higgins, also, in his "Celtic Druids," considers them to be of a Semitic stock. And although these two authors may not have furnished material strong enough to convince ethnologists, they would not have mooted the Semitic theory if the Japhetic theory had been an established fact. As Lysons properly says, it is merely a "tradition." The circumstances of the case will not admit of proof, and where there is no proof the professors should not be so positive.

After all, the wise men are not quite sure of their ground. In the extract given from Sayce's "Ethnology of the Bible" there is a slip, but I do not know who is responsible for it. The portion runs: "Gomer is the Gimerrai of the Assyrian inscriptions, the Kimmerii of the Greeks, who represent the Sakai or Scyths of the Persian texts, and were almost entirely Aryans." Sayce, however, does not say "almost entirely Aryans," but "almost certainly Aryans." He is not, then, perfectly certain? Again, Rawlinson has this: "We may say, therefore, that Gomer probably represents the Celtic race under one of their best known and most widely-extended names ("Toldoth Beni Noah"). And this: "Probably, therefore, the author of Genesis meant to include the Scyths of Europe among the races whose descent he traced to the youngest of the sons of Noah" (Ibid). What a wealth of meaning there is in these words "almost" and "probably"! The savants here concede as much as we can expect them to concede. They make no such dangerous admissions when handling Anglo-Israelism. On these occasions they wax dogmatic and dictatorial, and lead the public to suppose that there is not the faintest possibility of error in their Japhetic, Gomeric, or Aryan notions.

As far as can be gathered, there are two pretexts for attaching us to the Japhetic stem. 1. Our language and customs are Japhetic, not Semitic. Allowing this to be so—which we are not compelled to do—it can easily be explained, for the Ten Tribes were transplanted to a Japhetic country, and our contention is that they have associated with Japhetites ever since. 2. Gimerrai, we are told, is a form of Gomer. And a most peculiar form, too. There is a similarity, but it is remote, and we may believe the idea or disbelieve it. We should remember, however, that the Britons were not Gimerrai or Kimmerii, but Kymry; and on the Assyrian monuments another name may be found which is a great deal more closely related to Kymry than to Gomer,—Khumri or Kumri. Kumri and Kymry are not simply alike: they are identical; and, as the Kumri were the Ten Tribes, those who build their ethnology on resemblances of this kind should not ask for any further evidence that the Britons were Israelites.

Mr. Marchant's lecture at Bexhill was reported sensibly in the Hastings and St. Leonard's News, but the Bexhill Chronicle, as if determined at all costs to be original, gave a very different version, and a very astonishing one. I have myself at times experienced emotions of a spiteful nature against the man with the note-book, but cannot imagine what Mr. Marchant's feelings must have been when he first read the account of his address in the Bexhill organ. Its defects are the more regrettable because the paper has the appearance of wishing to do the lecturer justice. It devotes a couple of columns to him, with the result that the public would have to conclude that either the reporter or the speaker was deranged; and unfortunately, it being commonly rumoured that we are all slightly insane, the stigma would fall upon the latter. A few selections from this brilliant combination of grammar and eloquence will be interesting, and may help some of us to bear our lighter injuries with composure.

It appears that Mr. Marchant began by declaring "They were also under a great responsibility to themselves, and their responsibility extended to their rising generation which God has placed under the Queen"; and went on to affirm that "he had never yet heard a man who was not a believer in the British-Israel question give good reasons for his unbelief. There was not one reason advanced which would not be equally applicable to Spain, or any other country. They had hungered, and food had been dropped into their mouths. There are even hundreds of people who would be glad to be filled in that way." With that sentiment I agree, but not with this: "Some people did not know how it was they were so dominant at the present time. That was easily accounted for. When men had to stand up against Papacy did they not shed their blood and die in order that the present generation might become a noble and free people. They were men who were prepared to die for the hope that was in them. Were they not the English people? He supposed He was right in concluding that Spain, Holland, and Germany never furnished any martyrs." I'm surprised, Mr. Marchant.

If the Bexhill oracle is correct the lecturer proceeded to avow that "the fulfilment of miracles was still going on," and acknowledged that "he had been asked to let Ephraim alone, he is joined to his idols. He did not wish to say he was infallible in his statements, but they had a gospel ring about them. The gospel was clear." Further, "In some places prejudice had begun to break down. They must be silent, and not oppose the gospel. It would not do to take up a position and not face it." But the pressman (or boy) left his best wine until the finish. "If they displeased Him they should not come to fulness as a nation. These words occurred but twice in the whole Bible—once in the Hebrew and once in the Greek. Had the twelve apostles not been permitted to know the Old Testament they wouldn't never have known anything about the fulness of nations. The Ten Tribes never came back from that captivity. For a man to suppose that the tribes would repent just to get back to Jerusalem would be wrong. Rather he thought it was because they feared all men's hands. They hoped to have a sanctuary of their own in the country where they should go. Were these people the Jews? If so, we have had them before us during all these years. If they joined the House of Israel it was a moral certainty that they never wanted to sink back."

On reaching "sink back" we feel instinctively that our scribe is nearing his climax, and are not disappointed. "If people tried to make out the biblical language, either Ephraim repented, or he did not, and if he did not there was an end of it, but if he did that was the beginning of it. Jeremiah said that Ephraim did not repent. God had said He would caress, and bring the nation back to Himself." Perhaps to accentuate the above-mentioned "gospel ring," the lecturer finishes, or is alleged to have finished, by stating that "if they thought the matter worthy of investigation he would ask them to contribute towards the expenses of carrying on the work of the promotion of the gospel." Well may the Christian assert that we call the Identity a gospel. It should get into communication with this reporter, whose elastic pen and accommodating memory will be of valuable assistance on a pinch.

The question which occurs to me is, Was this burlesque inserted with malicious intent? It is possible. The Rev. J. Wilkinson prints and reprints the falsehold that we hold the Jews are not Israelites, in spite of repudiations on our part. And I have a distinct recollection of an influential daily journal "quoting," in a leading article, the exact reverse of what was said at a meeting; yet it refused to publish a letter in defence. We must impute some measure of intelligence to the editor of the Bexhill Chronicle, and the smallest amount of that quality would enable him to appreciate the absurdity of this hotch-potch. So we cannot fairly be blamed if we suspect that it is a deliberate caricature, designed to bring discredit on the subject; but, whether or not, the editor owes an apology to Mr. Marchant for such a shameful perversion of the truth.

HISTORICAL GLEANINGS.

FORWARDED BY E. REEP.

No. II.

"ENGLISH history is the joint graft of Anglo-Saxon history and Norman history. The history of Normandy is as essential a section of English history as the history of Wessex. The Norman dynasty is entirely ours. However fierce the mutual or internal dissensions of the Northmen or Danes—the terms are used as synonymous—they acted steadily in concert abroad. Danes, Northmen, Frieslanders, Angles, Jutes, Saxons were all shipmates together. The Normans scarcely retained a feature of their Danish parentage. The Danish spirit settled in Normandy was supported by fresh accessions from Scandinavia, yet the Duchy of Normandy became as French as Paris. The Normans and the Anglo-Saxons intermarried long before the Conquest."

"However plausible the supposition that the Conqueror introduced Norman jurisprudence, Norman forms of government, and Norman tenures into this country, it is a supposition not supported by evidence—nay, contradicted by evidence; and as we have no monument whatever of Norman jurisprudence it is an inference drawn without premises. Later the laws of Normandy were slightly introduced; but Duke William practised in Normandy the stern and orderly jurisprudence of the Saxon king. In a word Norman laws were founded on Anglo-Saxon laws. With respect to what is called Anglo-Norman jurisprudence it is a system which appeared with certain modifications in England, Scotland, and Normandy simultaneously."

"Our old British annals always preface their histories with the annals of the world. Through age after age the historians travel down. These chronicles present evidence of the sedulous study of the Bible. They thought in Scripture language.

"It was a wonderful ruling of Providence that the pure Scandinavian and Jutish tribes did not conquer South as well as North America. These Northmen established a flourishing republic in Iceland, braved the eternal snows in Greenland, and explored the shores of the Pilgrim Fathers. The queen of the Adriatic was established by the Northmen [the Veneti]. Even as the Galatians of Gaul became the Asiatic Galatians, so did the Gaulish Veneti become the Veneti of Italy."—"History of Normandy and England." By Sir Francis Palgrave.

"For lo, I will command, and I will sift the House of Israel among all nations, like as corn is sifted in a sieve, yet shall not the least grain fall upon the earth" (Amos ix. 9). "For Israel slideth back" as a backsliding heifer: now the Lord will feed them as a lamb in a large place" (Hos. iv.16).

THE Cunard steamer, Campania, has returned to the Mersey, having performed the voyage to America and back in 11 days, 1 hour and 30 minutes, which was the quickest passage. The Lucania has since accomplished the voyage from Queenstown to New York in 5 days, 12 hours, and 47 minutes, beating the Campania's outward voyage by 36 minutes.

FATHER OHRVALDER'S OPINION OF ENGLAND.

BY F. C. P.

THE September number of Blackwood's Magazine contains a most interesting article on Father Ohrvalder, whose book giving an account of his ten years captivity and escape from the Soudan is doubtless familiar to many of us. Some sentences from that article have already appeared on page of the BANNER, and will prove useful to those who may not have read them; for there could not be a stronger witness than Father Ohrvalder to the power of England in the Soudan. It sounds so wonderful, that one can only explain it by saying that it is because we are Israel, and therefore God intends to bless us, and to make us a blessing in the land of Egypt. Father Ohrvalder commenced his labours as a missionary in the Soudan in 1881, but the following year, September, 1882, he was taken prisoner by one of the Mahdi's officers, and for ten years remained a prisoner in the Mahdi's camp. It was not till November, 1891, that he and two nuns escaped from Omdurman under the guidance of the faithful Ahmed Hassan, who brought them safely through many dangers and hardships to Cairo.

The quotations from "A Talk with Father Ohrvalder," we do not repeat, but the article in Blackwood concludes with the following remarks:—

"It is not improbable that such a testimony may be of the utmost importance before long, for the state of affairs in Egypt and the Soudan, must soon reach a critical point. Then England will have to determine once for all whether she is prepared to abandon the position which she has already taken up, or to follow it out to its logical end. The decision at which she arrives will, in either case, be irrevocable, and upon it will depend an issue as momentous as any that has ever been submitted to our country."

As Anglo-Israelites we feel that God will overrule our decision, and oblige us to stay, and to be a blessing to both Egypt and the Soudan. But it is our duty to work with God, and as we see that the present Government does everything that is possible to oppose Israelite aims and an Imperial policy, we ought to make every effort to return men to Parliament whose policy is vide, Imperial, and in favour of retaining the large tracts of Africa, which seem literally falling into our hands in spite of the Government's anxious desire to avoid receiving them. As Anglo-Israelites we do not wish to identify ourselves with any party in Church or State. Our one desire is to see God's work in Israel accomplished, but this forces us to side with those parties who will help, and not hinder, the progress, extension, consolidation and prosperity of His people Israel. Let us not shut our eyes to the fact that by remaining in Egypt and protecting the Soudan, we have it in our power to deal the death-blow to that terrible slave-market in Omdurman. God gives us the opportunities to carry out His purposes, if we neglect to use them, on us will be the responsibility. As a nation as well as individuals, we are to double our talents, and in the extreme anxiety which we at present display, to contract instead of extend our Empire, are we not in danger of behaving like the man who hid his in a napkin?

However, I had made up my mind to hear the Doctor, and hear him I did. It seems that the subscribers have a door to themselves; I made for it, and luckily found a chair, which I wedged in under the platform. The Doctor prayed and then we had a sermon about Revelation, containing much that was very effective, if not about his text, at any rate about that mysterious part of Scripture from which the text was taken."

THE EXPANSION OF ISRAEL AND THE NECESSARY COST IN BLOOD.

The Westminster Gazette, of October 21st, published a leader on "The Kid-glove Fallacy," showing the absurdity of expecting the Empire to expand in savage lands without coming at last face to face with their savage inhabitants who mean to "smash" you if you do not succeed first in "smashing" them. In these operations blood must be shed on one side or the other, or on both.

In the case of the Matabele and Lobengula, their king, the facts are very clear and conclusive. Mashonaland belonging to Lobengula is full of gold. British settlers, supported also by the Cape Government, desired to proceed to the spot and dig for it. The native king was willing and agreeable. He accepted a money payment for the privilege and assigned the white men a portion of his country to settle in. Meanwhile, his young warriors—a bloodthirsty and cruel people—objected to the white men and desired to drive them back. The white men objected to go at the desire of the Matabele warriors, and it is a question for speedy decision whether the Matabele will succeed in exterminating us or be themselves exterminated or driven beyond the Zambesi, north-westward. The Westminster Gazette took a reasonable view of the matter, and wrote thus:—

The history of the expansion of England is conclusive refutation of the idea that you can colonize savage countries in kid-gloves. So long as the colonizing power meets with no native tribe of aggressive spirit, the kid-glove can be worn; but otherwise it is bound sooner or later to be discarded. Much dialectical ingenuity has been and doubtless will yet be expended on discussing whether Lobengula or Mr. Rhodes is really responsible for the present conflict. The question is futile; the real answer being both or neither. When the colonizing power meets a warlike native tribe, a conflict is inevitable. Mr. Rhodes could not allow his friendlies to be raided. Lobengula could not allow his raiders to be driven back. In the long run there are only two alternatives for a colonizing power such as England; it must either smash the native power or be smashed. Those who are shocked at the painful nature of the former alternative forget what the latter would be. In previous South African wars we have run quite enough risks of being smashed. In the Matabele war we must confess to an entire preference to smashing the enemy.

For an instance of the sheer muddle-headedness into which inconsistent thinking of this sort betrays its victims commend us to some editorial notes in to-day's issue of a contemporary which generally knows its own mind better—the Speaker. The Speaker has apparently swallowed in all good faith Mr. Labouchere's discovery that the real reason of the present campaign is a secret discovery by emissaries of the Chartered Company of certain paying gold in the immediate neighbourhood of Lobengula's kraal. Having assumed that, it further follows Mr. Labouchere in the assumption that Mr. Rhodes has so far falsified everything hitherto known of his financial ability and common sense as to pitch on a war as the handiest and most economical method of "putting the Matabeleland gold reefs upon the money market."

In order to get rid of the facts which decline to square with this theory—facts which have made it perfectly obvious that the company's choice is only between smashing and being smashed—the Speaker gives a version of the recent Matabele aggression on Fort Salisbury, which is flagrantly at variance with the evidence in the recent Blue-book, and disposes of the assembling of Matabele impis on the border, and their firing on white scouts, by airily "attaching no credit" to them. Then comes the following extraordinary concatenation of sentences:—

"War is an expensive undertaking, but the position of the company is desperate, and the calculation is that the Imperial Government will come forward and do the heavy fighting, if there is to be heavy fighting, and bear the worst of the expense. We have repeatedly pointed out that if the Imperial Government comes in . . . . it must be the signal for the disappearance of the company."

In other words, the company is hard up just now, therefore it naturally selects this moment for a heavy tax on capital; it was part of the scheme that the Home Government should bear the brunt of expense, therefore it is employing its own forces and paying the piper itself; if the Government does take the war off the company's hands, the charter will be taken away, therefore it wishes that very thing to happen. Could anything be more bewilderingly self-contradictory? This is what comes of not looking plain facts in the face.

The second instance of the kid-glove fallacy is the idea that you can fight without shedding blood. There are a number of excellent people who have nothing to say against a war, but are aghast when anyone is killed or wounded. This humanitarianism should come earlier or not at all. For when a war is started the most humane course is to get it over as quickly as possible, and the quickest way is unfortunately to draw blood. Certainly we should prefer to capture without hurting, if we could, and when that is not possible to wound without killing. But unfortunately most enemies do not leave us the choice of methods, and war when there is an enemy to fight is still horrid war. If there is comfort in the thought, we may as well remember that the horrors are not all on one side. The kid-glove people are fond of using a phrase about "potting natives," as if the man who potted natives did not stand a very good chance of being potted himself, to say nothing of the innumerable other risks which a white force runs in a tropical climate. The danger of this way of looking at it is that for fear of being cruel we should be ineffective—like a surgeon who uses a blunt knife for fear of hurting his patient. When we have once decided on war we must set our teeth and do our worst. That the worst is very bad is a good argument for being careful about going to war, but not for wearing kid-gloves when we are in it.

The question, of course, arises why our countrymen find it necessary to go into foreign lands at all and seek for settlements in places where they must fight to stay, and cannot remain without "smashing or being smashed." In reply we have to say that behind our nation there are some facts which must be recognised and allowed for before we can properly answer such questions as are now under consideration. This nation is Israel, and to Israel many blessings were promised by the Lord which are comprised in the gift of "the power to get wealth" mentioned in Deut. viii. 18. The things that bring wealth are "the precious things of the everlasting hills, the precious things of the earth and the fulness thereof, the chief things of the ancient mountains," which comprise, we believe, gold and silver mines, coal and asbestos mines, diamond and ruby mines, the possession of all which makes the owners rich. We have these in possession almost everywhere in Australia, Burmah, and India, in the Cape Colonies, and North America. The chosen race is in great power and affluence in South Africa, and now that Mashonaland is found like the Transvaal to be a great and rich goldfield, it is natural that we should find our countrymen swarming in their masses to the neighbourhood of Matabeleland, bent on digging for the gold and resolved to grow rich, and found a new state in Mashonaland, which in regard to climate is also unexceptionable. There is, besides the above, the further Israelitish blessing, which has been largely bestowed on our nation, and that is, a vast and exuberant population which is already too large for the island home of the race, and demands a place to live (Hos. i. 10; Isa. xlix. 20).

The rush for gold, followed by the British desire for a new outlet for trade and for the traders as well, has caused Mashonaland to be occupied by some thousands of Anglo-Saxon men who will not now easily be dislodged unless the Matabele assegais prove too deadly and too strong for British rifles and the Maxim guns. The odds, however, are terribly against us as to numbers; but these are the very circumstances contemplated in the Scriptures in regard to Israel's expansion.

In Lev. xxvi. 1—7 it is clearly promised as the reward for Israel's faithful obedience to God's laws that "they should chase their enemies and that the latter should fall before them by the sword." "Five of you shall chase an hundred, and an hundred of you shall put ten thousand to flight, and your enemies shall fall before you by the sword." God's providence thus recognises Israel's expansion by conquest, and the submission of her enemies to her "pushing" propensities, exhibited at "the ends of the earth," according to Deut. xxxiii. 17. As it is now in South Central Africa, so it has been in India and Burmah everywhere—in Canada in days gone by, in the Mauritius when we captured the island from the French in A.D. 1810. In all these instances the pushing race met with stern resistance, but in each case the God of Israel fought for His people, and they prevailed. Carnage attended all these military operations, and without it they cannot take place at all. The enemies of Israel must fall by the sword since they refuse to give up the earth to the heirs thereof, but require it to be forced from their possession by superior military power.

If we would only view the hand of God in all these current events, if we would only remember our nation's origin, and what our final destiny is to be, we would not regret the way that God is dealing with and guiding us; for we are His people and He our God. Our consolation is that He has promised that He will never leave us nor forsake us, because we are His inheritance and heritage, and He a Father to Israel, who calls Ephraim His firstborn. To Him be all the praise. (See Isa. xlii. 16; Jer. xxxi. 9; Deut. ix. 29, R.V.).

WHO ARE ISRAEL?

UNDER the above title, the Methodist Recorder of August 17th last, has a fling at the believers in Our Identity, sheltering himself, however, under the authority of a Mrs. Stevenson, whose book against our views we noticed some time ago. The writer in the Methodist Recorder seems quite refreshed and revived at the thought that at last an opponent has come forward who has "pulverised" by logic and sound interpretation all the arguments we and others usually advance to prove British Identity with the lost House of Israel. We cannot present the case against us better than our Methodist opponent has done; and we accordingly quote his words that there may be no mistake or misunderstanding, from our presentation of the matter. The words are these:—

WHO ARE ISRAEL?

"So many books and pamphlets have been written to prove that the Ten Tribes of Israel did not return to their own land after the captivity, but can now be identified with the British nation, and that the Jews will one day be restored to Palestine and the temple rebuilt, that it is quite refreshing to read a book presenting the other side. And this book, by Mrs. Stevenson, unmistakably pulverises by force of logic and a sound interpretation all the arguments usually urged in favour of these views. Mrs. Stevenson clearly shows that the so-called lost Ten Tribes are nowhere to be found as a separate people, and quotes Dr. Neubauer, as saying that the theory of their being the inhabitants of the United Kingdom is contrary to ethnology, history, philology, and common-sense. She shows also most conclusively that the prophecies referring to the restoration of the Jews to their own land were all given before the return from the captivity, and that, therefore, the promised return is past. In these days, when a superficial interpretation of the prophecies and an utter disregard to their chronology have led to the vaguest theories with respect to the future of God's ancient people, this book of Mrs. Stevenson's, dealing with the natural and spiritual Israel of the past, the present, and the future, will be heartily welcomed. We recommend it with confidence to all who hold the views she so ably refutes. It is issued in good style by Messrs. Jas. Nisbet & Co."

The whole case rests, it will be seen, upon what Mrs. Stevenson says, and if our readers will consider her pleas, it will be found that they are these—no new points to us!

1st. The Ten Lost Tribes are nowhere to be found now as a separate people. Dr. Neubauer says so and it must be so. The plea that the British are they is "contrary to ethnology, history, philology, and common-sense!"

2nd. There is no return in store for the Jews in future, according to prophecy. The latter related to the return from Babylon; and the Scriptures are *ful*filled by that return, entirely. There is no other return to be expected.

It is consequently absurd to look for any coming Israel to join Judah in a Restoration, which is never going to take place. Here we have, according to Mrs. Stevenson, the complete destruction of all our views—and we may add, the sweeping away of numberless Scriptures, which declare over and over again that Israel and Judah are yet to be united, and in power, are to return, together, to the land of their inheritance—Palestine.

In regard first to the allegation that the Ten Tribes are nowhere now existing as a separate nation, we may safely put aside Dr. Neubauer as a judge in this matter. He cannot see the Lord of glory in the lowly form of the Son of Mary; and his eyes refusing to turn to that light by reason of spiritual blindness, cannot be trusted to guide us in interpreting that other mass of Scriptural prophecy concerning the Lord's people, the House of Israel. In regard to the appeal to ethnic science, history, philology, and common-sense, we have to remark in the absence of particular statements on the other side, that Oxonian has proved that "History is on our side." Ethnology and philology have often been shown in these pages to present no insuperable difficulties. They cannot, unassisted, prove our case, which depends on Scripture only; but they stand on one side and confess that they have nothing to advance of a decisive nature to oppose us.

In regard to the restoration of the Jews to their own land, and to the idea that these prophecies were all fulfilled, when the Jews returned from their Babylonian captivity, we would remark that the Scriptures never contemplate the restoration of the Jews alone to the Holy Land; but that in every instance the divine arrangement predicted the union of the House of Israel with Judah and their return, united under one head; as Joseph and the Tribes of Israel his fellows, with Judah, the solitary tribe living apart from his powerful brethren now (see Jer. iii. 18; Isa. xviii. 1—7; Hosea i. 10, 11; Ezek. xxxvii. 1—28). Nothing of this sort occurred when the captivity of Judah returned from Babylon, under Ezra and Zerubbabel. Besides which, the promise is distinct that when Israel returns, and are once settled in their land, they will never be uprooted, or "pulled up" again. This is stated in Amos ix. 15. But it is clear that the Jews were sent out of Palestine after the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, and that, therefore, the House of Israel did not return with Judah from Babylon, in A.D. 535; and that prophecy yet awaits fulfilment. Israel, consequently, is somewhere now in separation from Judah as "the House of Israel," in a particular locality, as stated in Jer. iii. 18 and xxxiii. 6—8; awaiting the advent of the time when the Jews "shall walk to the House of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the north to the land which the Lord hath given to their fathers for an inheritance."

It is necessary, in order that the Scriptures may be fulfilled, that Israel be found now existing as a nation in enjoyment of the birthright of Joseph, described in Gen. xlix. 22—26 and Deut. xxxiii. 13—17, xv. 6, and other Scriptures. This birthright was never enjoyed by Joseph or his sons, before the first advent of the Lord Jesus, and it is obvious it cannot be enjoyed after the second advent; for then, the two Houses will "share and share alike," in all the blessings. It consequently follows that as the Jews or Judah are not in possession of the birthright, and never were entitled to it, the House of Israel or the Lost Tribes must be somewhere in the world, a "mighty" and "great nation," enjoying the whole of the birthright blessings now in the period between the two advents, or during the Christian dispensation. We see thus that Mrs. Stevenson's argument is not as strong as the Methodist Recorder imagines, and that she has not yet pulverised us!

Our nation having been proved by sufficient evidence to be indeed the Lost House of Israel, are blessed with gifts and blessings innumerable, for which we are called upon to be deeply grateful, and also to praise the Lord.

"THE AXE AT THE VERY ROOT OF THE PET THEORY."

THE "Hebrew Christian," writing his comment on Isa. lii., on "Israel and the Ends of the Earth," in The Warrior Square Magazine of August, 1893, comes to the conclusion that an argument he draws from Zech. viii. 13, proves that "both kingdoms," Israel as well as Judah, "are now defunct, but that resuscitation and reunion under one leader are to be their future lot." This, he triumphantly adds, "lays the axe to the very root of the pet theory of our Israelitish origin." It is as well to see what the text is that is said to be the death of our views,—but which none of our opponents have yet discovered to be a weapon wherewith we might be slain. Zech. viii., 13 R.V., is the one in question. After a promise in vers. 11 and 12 that the Lord will not be to the remnant of His people as in former days, for He will give them "the seed of peace," "the vine shall give her fruit," and "the heavens shall give her dew"; and that He would cause the remnant of this people to inherit all these things. "And it shall come to pass (says ver. 13) that as ye were a curse among the nations (that is in times past before the prosperity), O House of Judah, and House of Israel; so will I save you, and ye shall be a blessing. Fear not, but let your hands be strong." The "Hebrew Christian" draws a tremendous inference from these verses, which they will not enable him to sustain. For he takes them to prove that up to the present hour both Israel and Judah as Houses are "a curse among the heathen," and neither of them are yet "a blessing," or have yet received the salvation which the House of Israel by Jer. xxxi. 33, 34 is distinctly promised, apart from and prior to, the House of Judah. We cannot so interpret Scripture and prophecy, but must allow Scripture to explain Scripture, where doubt exists, or is said to exist, regarding any part thereof. It is admitted that in time past both Houses were mingled with the heathen, and both have been a curse among them. In a sense this is the case even now with the greatly-blessed House of British-Israel, for in India and other heathen lands some of our sons do bring a reproach upon the Gospel by their intemperate, unchaste lives, and so are a curse among certain sections of the heathen. But the Lord has begun to bless the House of Israel or Ephraim in Britain with the blessings promised in Zech. x. 6—9. "He has saved the House of Joseph" (apart from Judah) and "has had mercy on them." He has been to them "as though He had not cast them off." He has "become their God," and has heard them. He has gathered them and redeemed them, and they have increased as they have increased. He has sown them among the peoples, and they have remembered Him in far countries, in their colonies, and there they live with their children, and shall yet "return." The "Hebrew Christian" clings to Zech. viii. 13 as a decisive prophecy in favour of his views, but strangely fails to look at, quote, or even explain the context, Zech. x. 6—9, which is the best comment on chap. viii. 13, since it shows that Ephraim, apart and separated from Judah, has to receive great and glorious blessings, of population increase, national power, strength, spiritual Christian blessings, colonial possessions in distant regions, gladness of heart and rejoicing as a people, redemption by the Lord Jesus, strength by Him, "walking up and down in His name," and that quite independently of the House of Judah, whose promise is confined to "strengthening" after grievous weakness and trouble. The "Hebrew Christian" consoles himself for Judah's misery by declaring that "Ephraim is still a wanderer among the nations" (quoting Hos. ix. 17, R.V.), but he forgets that that prophecy does not declare how long the "wandering" condition was to last, nor how soon Ezek. xi. 15—17 was to be fulfilled. We argue, and correctly too, that Israel must already have been gathered into her "appointed place," in national power and strength, according to 2 Sam. vii. 10, and Hos. i. 10, because we see a nation (the British) exactly answering to the picture of the House of Israel, in possession of the birthright of Joseph and his sons, and located in the Isles of the West (or sea) where she is destined by Isa. xxiv. 15 to be found praising the Lord Jehovah, ba urim, in testimony of her Israelitish origin. If the "Hebrew Christian" would meet these statements of ours, and not diverge into the doubtful views he enunciates, supported by his own reading of a single text, we should have hopes of his "seeing" the truth of this matter. As it is, he is wedded to the idea that Israel, apart from Judah, will never appear to the world as "a great and mighty" Christian "nation," before the Second Advent of the Lord, whereas it is the testimony of Scripture that Joseph must enjoy his birthright in separation from Judah, after the First, but before the Second Advent. The covenants could not come into force before Christ appeared, and there can be no separate enjoyment of the Hebrew birthright by Joseph after the Second Advent, because then the tribes will be united and share and share alike. These considerations have no weight with the "Hebrew Christian," because he has a fixed plan of his own, and prefers it to the scriptural scheme which is God's.

We conclude with a reproduction of the "Hebrew Christians'" words, that our friends may read for themselves, and judge between us whether he is correct or we are. He wrote thus:—

"3. And now as to the Channel of Salvation. It pleased God that Israel should be made the channel: for, 'salvation is of the Jews.' According to the promise Christ came from the patriarchal stock. For, 'He took not upon Him the nature of angels, but the seed of Abraham,' as it is written: 'In thee and in thy seed all the families of the earth shall be blessed.' The apostle comments upon that passage: 'It says not seeds—i.e., children, as of many, but seed, as of one—which is Christ.

"The Jews, however, while enriching the world with the greatest of all blessings, have, by the rejection of their Messiah, alas! empoverished themselves. This is a mystery; but it is solved by: 'blindness in part is happened to Israel.' 'Now,' argues the apostle, 'if the fall of them be the riches of the world . . . how much more their fulness?' 'For, if the casting away of them (for a time) be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be—but life from the dead!' This is in perfect harmony with the teaching of Ezek. xxxvii. anent Israel's restoration, by the vision of the valley of dry bones.

"The blessing which is to accrue to the world through the Israelitish channel is further indicated in Zech. viii. 13: 'As ye were a curse among (not to) the people, O House of Judah, and House of Israel! so will I save you, and ye shall be a blessing.' Both kingdoms are now defunct: but resuscitation and re-union under one leader are to be their future lot. This lays the axe to the very root of the pet theory of 'Our Israelitish origin!'

"Although Judah's harp is now, as of yore, by the rivers of Babylon, suspended on the willows, refusing to sound her sweet melody on foreign soil, and Ephraim is still 'a wanderer among the nations'; yet the day will come, yea, is coming, when 'an ensign shall be set up for the nations, and the outcasts of Israel shall be assembled, and the dispersed of Judah shall be gathered from the four corners of the earth' (Isa. xi. 12)."

The "Hebrew Christian" in some respects is on our side; but in all that concerns "British" identity with Israel he is as far from us as yet as the East is from the West! And yet he is entirely in the wrong! His views discredit the Scripture and dishonour the truth of the faithful God of Israel.

PROGRESS IN AUSTRALIA.

Annual Meeting of the British-Israel Association, Victoria Branch, South Yarra, Melbourne, Australia, held September, 1893.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

Your Committee have to report that during the past year progress has been the order of the day, inasmuch that our monthly Sunday afternoon meetings at the Foresters' Hall, Chapel-street, South Yarra, have been fairly attended by audiences who have expressed great satisfaction with the addresses delivered by Messrs. Baldry, Robson, and Stephens—these gentlemen have kept up the interest, and have been listened to with marked attention—they have discharged their duties gratuitously, ably, and caused much enquiry as to our principles. New members have been enrolled, literature in demand, and Banners having an increased sale. Catalogues are being sent post free on application.

During the year evening meetings have been held with good results—one conducted by Mr. Stock, the other by Miss Williams—these, we hope, will increase in number, and produce lasting impression.

Your Committee are much pleased to hear that there is every prospect of having a visit from the celebrated and popular Dr. Joseph Wild, who, when on tour round the world, will be accorded a hearty welcome in Australia.

The Officers and Committee elected are composed of good workers, being as follows:—President, Mr. Joseph Stock, residing at No. 1, Garden-street, South Yarra, Melbourne, Victoria; Secretary, Mr. R. Robertson; Assistant Secretary, Mr. H. Stephens; Treasurer, Mrs. Stock. Committee: Messrs. Ayers, Thompson, Marchant, Robson, Snell, and Major R. E. E. Plimpton.

HISTORICAL GLEANINGS.

FORWARDED BY E. REEP.

No. 3.

"THE Danes bear a prominent part in the history of ancient Germany. As early as a century before Christ they appeared on the other side of the Pyrenees and Alps, under the denomination of Cimbri, and at a later date sent forth the hardy Longobardi. Invincible in their own country, they spread their conquering arms, at different periods, over the whole of the north. In the beginning of the second century B.C. the Cimbri descended from the Danube to the Styrian Alps, giving out that a flood had driven them from the North Sea, and that they were in search of a country wherein to settle. During their advance they were joined by other tribes, among others by the Bolii [a Celtic tribe who established themselves near to Bologna; Bohemia also derived its name from the Bolii occupying that country]. Their progress was extremely slow, owing to their being accompanied by women and children, cattle, and an immense number of waggons laden with booty. The armed men alone mustered 300,000. The Cimbri had 15,000 horsemen, clad in polished steel armour, and armed with broad swords and long lances, their helmets ornamented with plumes of feathers. The Romans, panic-struck at their approach, despatched an army to oppose the passage of the strangers through the Alps, and to secure the allegiance of their newly-acquired Alpine subjects. The wanderers received the Roman deputation peacefully, and said that they were only going into Gaul. But being treacherously misled by Carbo, the Roman general, who suddenly fell upon them during the night, whilst they were engaged in a narrow mountain pass, a dreadful conflict took place, which terminated in the total discomfiture of the whole Roman army. After this event the wanderers remained for several years in the Alps, slowly advancing towards Gaul."—Menzel's "History of Germany," Bohn's edition.

"It is not ascertained whether the Cimbri gave to Wales its modern name. The historical Triads record that the first colonists of Britain were Cymry, who originally came from Defrobani Gwlad Yr Hav, the summer land, or Tauric Chersonesus (Crimea or Scythica). There they have left many traces of their name preserved by ancient authors, among which we may instance the Cimmerian Bosphorus."—See "Chronicle of Richard of Cirencester," in "Six Old English Chronicles," pub. by Bohn.

"The Cymry were the first settlers in Britain, and they came from where Constantinople now stands. This assertion would not be so constantly made had there not existed some authority for making it. The Triads affirm that they came from the land of Hav, and that they passed over the German Ocean to Britain. ['A river went out of Eden to water the garden, and from thence it was parted, and became into four heads. The name of the first is Pison: that is it which compasseth the whole land of Havilah, where there is gold' Gen. ii. 11.] Hav Defrobani may mean Thrace in general. ['Thracia was in earlier times the name of the vast space of country bounded on the north by the Danube, on the south by the Ægaean, on the east by the Pontus Euxinus—Black Sea—and on the west by the river Strymon and the eastern-most of the Illyrian Tribes.'—Smith's Classical Dic.]"*—Davies' "Celtic Researches," 1804.

"The emigration of the Cimbri and other kindred races from their native territory was gradual, and by no means a sudden movement. Some of the accounts which we receive of the Cimbri are not worthy of credit. As we have before stated, the northern-most of the Germans inhabit a country bordering on the ocean; but we are only acquainted with those situated between the mouths of the Rhine and the Elbe, of which the Sicambri and the Cimbri (Danes) are the most generally known; those dwelling beyond the Elbe are entirely unknown to us; for none of the ancients with whom I am acquainted have prosecuted this voyage towards the east as far as the mouth of the Caspian Sea, neither have the Romans as yet sailed coastwise beyond the Elbe, nor has any one travelling on foot penetrated further into this country.'—Strabo.

"The Cimbri are a small state at present, but great in renown. Of their past grandeur extensive vestiges still remain in encampments and lines on either shore—[this is supposed to relate to Cimbric Chersonesus, which included Jutland, Sleswig, and Holstein]—from the compass of which the strength and numbers of the nation may still be computed."—Tacitus.

"Danes and Jutes (Cimbri) may from their very names be presumed to have been Jews of the Tribe of Dan."—An opinion quoted by Sharon Turner in his "Anglo-Saxons."

THE KINGDOM OF CHRIST.

THE Methodist Times of July 20, 1893, gave in extenso a sermon preached by the Rev. H. Price Hughes, M.P., in St. James's Hall, London, on Sunday evening, June 18, on the subject of "Christ's Everlasting Kingdom." His text was Dan. vii. 13, 14—a much disputed passage; and the burden of his discourse was "The kingdom of Christ," regarding which modern preaching says so little, but Christ said so much. Our clerical friends of course tell us that they do make much of the kingdom, recognizing it as the spiritual kingdom of the Lord established in the hearts of true believers. The preacher, however, does not take that view, but believes that the kingdom as our Lord taught it was not the Church, or the work of grace in the heart of a converted sinner, but a real, tangible earthly kingdom, forfeited by the Jews for national sin, an earthly kingdom, having Christ for its King, and for its subjects Christian men. Mr. Hughes had hardly grasped the idea that this kingdom was an existing nation, but he came very near to it while missing it. Anyhow his views confirm our conviction that the modern pulpit ignores the claim the Lord always made to an earthly Israelite kingdom, and promised one day to set it up and rule the earth through it. The House of Joseph or Israel was that kingdom, as a comparison of 1 Kings xi. 35 with Acts i. 6 will show. The Rev. Mr. Hughes stated a good deal which will surprise the readers of the BANNER, and we gladly quote his words on the present occasion. He said, among other things, what follows:—

* The three first communities invading Britain are described as the three pillars (tribes) of the race of the island of Britain. In Exod. xxvi. 4 we read that Moses represented the Twelve Tribes of Israel by twelve pillars.—E. R.

"I should like to ask you whether you have ever seriously pondered the fact that Jesus Christ was always talking about the kingdom, and that He was not only always talking about the kingdom, but that He told us to do what we have been doing to-night, to pray that His kingdom should come. In that prayer there is no reference to the Church at all, the only reference is to the kingdom. It is a striking contrast between the writings of the apostles, for example, and the teaching of our Lord that while they, especially in the later Epistles of St. Paul, refer continually to the Church, and rarely to the kingdom, Christ mentions the Church only twice, while He spake no less than 112 times of the kingdom. One of the most mischievous and fatal mistakes ever made in Christian history was the mistake of St. Augustine, who identified the kingdom of God with the Church of God. The Church exists for the sake of the kingdom, and is no more the kingdom than the British army is the British Empire. There is no opportunity to-night to consider why the apostles did not refer as frequently to the kingdom as Christ did. It is high time, however, for all Christians to ponder the long-lost doctrine of Christ with respect to the kingdom of God.

"CHRIST AND THE BOOK OF DANIEL.

"I think there can be no doubt where, humanly speaking, Jesus Christ found and nourished His doctrine of the kingdom. He found it in the book of Daniel, from which I have read to-night, and He found it especially in the chapter before us. There are many evidences in the New Testament that the book of Daniel was one of the favourite books of Jesus Christ, one of those books which He spent years of obscurity in diligently studying. He makes many references to it. When the Book of Daniel is once understood it throws quite a flood of light upon the numerous parables which our Lord uttered with respect to the kingdom, which parables refer primarily not to the individual soul, much less to the Church, but to the kingdom which Jesus Christ again and again declared it was the first object of His life to establish, and which He declared ought to be the first object of your life to promote. He said, 'Seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness.' Now what is the kingdom? We may learn from the book of Daniel. When we take up this book we find it is very different from any other in the Old Testament. There is nothing parochial, nothing provincial, nothing peculiarly Jewish. We find ourselves in the great world, in the main stream of world history—the true philosophy of history, indeed, is written in this wonderful book. For Daniel was the great statesman of a world-empire as well as a great saint. Now the main doctrine of this glorious book, which refers not to any one nation or age but to all nations and all ages, is clearly taught in the vision which I read as a lesson, and from which I have taken my text. That vision was the first of the great prophetic and historic visions of this inspired prophet. It began, as you may remember, with the statement that the four winds of heaven brake forth upon the great sea, the breath of God agitated the multitudinous ocean of human life, and out of that seething mass of apparent confusion arose in succession four great world-empires, symbolised successively by (1) a lion with eagle's wings, (2) a bear, (3) a leopard, and (4) a yet more terrible beast, 'diverse from all the beasts that were before it.' From the second century of the Christian era until now these four powerful and savage beasts have been supposed to symbolise the Babylonian, the Medo-Persian, the Greek, and the Roman Empires. In our own day, however, a more exact criticism has contended that this particular vision, for reasons into which I need not enter, does not specifically refer to the Roman Empire at all. It is generally supposed now that this vision is a vision of the four ancient empires which had their seat on the banks of the Euphrates. In that case the four empires would be represented by Nebuchadnezzar the Assyrian, Darius the Mede, Cyrus the Persian, and Alexander the Greek. But it really does not matter at all which of these interpretations we accept, for the particular interpretation which you may put upon this vision does not in the least degree affect its significance, which is, that the kingdoms of this world, characterised by much animal cruelty and ferocity, are all destined to be superseded by a kingdom of God, characterised by humanity.

"THE DOCTRINE OF EVOLUTION.

"As Professor Drummond has been lately pointing out, the modern doctrine of evolution has thrown a flood of light upon the doctrine of original sin. We seem to inherit from the animal world passions and appetites which it is the object of Christianity to transform or destroy. We have long been accustomed to say of some people that they are as cruel as a tiger, as obstinate as a mule, as remorseless as a shark, as proud as a peacock, as mean as a worm, as cunning as a serpent. There may be more literal truth in this than we have anticipated. On the other hand it is evident that governments in their collective capacity exhibit the same animal passions and repulsive qualities which are witnessed in individuals, but on a gigantic scale. This is still true of the semi-heathen governments of the so-called civilised world. It is not without some propriety that England is represented as a lion or a bulldog, and Russia as a bear, and that most of the peoples are allegorically represented by animals. Some of the qualities of these animals they reproduce in their foreign policy. No one who has studied universal history can doubt that history is for the most part a record of cruelty and misery. I know nothing that has done more to fill the minds of men with falsehood, and to hinder the progress of the kingdom of God than the untruths diligently perpetuated by historians who try to gloss over the infamies of the rulers of the past, and to throw over their cruelties a halo of glory. The history of the world is a very pitiable business indeed. All the great heathen governments which preceded the kingdom of Christ are not unfitly represented by lions, bears, leopards, and other cruel, bloodthirsty, and ferocious beasts. But the peculiarity of the new kingdom which is to supersede them all and last for ever is that the representative of it is a man, 'A Son of Man.' The symbolism of the vision before us is simply intended to teach what so few Churches yet realise, that Christ came to establish in this world a kingdom founded not upon force or cunning or cruelty, founded not in the spirit of the lion, or the bear, or the leopard, but founded upon humanity by a Son of Man, the incarnation of brotherly love. Hence when the representative of the ferocious Empire of Rome said, with cynical and curling lip, to Christ, 'Art thou a King, then?' 'Yes,' said Christ, 'I am a King.' But a very different king from any of whom Herod or Pilate had any conception. They thought that this was such an exquisite joke that they put it up upon His cross—'Jesus of Nazareth, King of the Jews.' The King! This miserable carpenter, without one solitary soldier or policeman to clear the ground before Him! But the clergy did not see the joke, and said that it was carrying pleasantry too far. 'Say that He said I am King of the Jews!' they cried. But it stood as it was first written—in Latin, Hebrew, and Greek, in the three languages spoken in the Roman Empire. Though written in mockery and ridicule it was perfectly true. Pilate was a prophet that day. Christ, indeed, was a King. His kingdom will last for ever. A very different king from Nebuchadnezzar, or Cyrus, or Alexander, or Cæsar. Even to-day, nineteen centuries after, only a small minority of Christians seem to be sufficiently instructed in the Word of Life to grasp the glorious idea. Jesus of Nazareth, the King who has come to establish in this world a kingdom, founded not upon force or ferocity, but upon declared that the first duty of every citizen of that kingdom —and every Christian must be a citizen of the kingdom—is to seek that kingdom, to pray for the coming of that kingdom, to extend that kingdom; in other words, to expel the wild beast from foreign politics, and to bring in the Man of Nazareth. We had a beautiful illustration in the House of Commons last Friday night of the way in which this kingdom is extending. As Christ Himself said in the parable of the kingdom, it is like the secret leaven. It is seldom recorded in the newspapers until the deed is done. But in the House of Commons an event took place which would have been impossible at any previous period of human history, and which is a glorious evidence of the rapidly increasing power of Jesus of Nazareth. God forbid that I should be so negligent as to fail to call your prompt attention to the fact that the vision of Daniel is being rapidly fulfilled. I do not know whether you are aware of what took place. The House of Commons, although divided on many questions, presented a rare illustration of absolute unanimity. Last Friday night a resolution, actually moved by the Prime Minister with all the responsibilities of office, was passed without a dissentient voice. And what was the nature of that resolution? It was originally suggested by Mr. Cremer, a noble representative of the best sentiment of the Democracy, who had pleaded for that very resolution at our Sunday Afternoon Conference. To the eternal credit of our kinsmen beyond the Atlantic, the President of the United States, at the request of both Houses of Congress, suggested a permanent treaty of arbitration with all civilised powers willing to enter into such. Surely we, who are their kinsmen, ought to be the first, and I trust we shall be the first, for the House of Commons has now agreed by a unanimous vote to welcome with the greatest delight any overture of that sort from our kinsmen in the States. Happily, we are settling a difficulty in Paris now by arbitration. But it is proposed to establish a permanent court of arbitration, so that any difference in the future may be instantly referred to arbitration and settled honourably, nobly, and in a Christian way. So that from this time forward anything like war between the English-speaking world will become a moral impossibility.

"HUMANITY AND BROTHERLY LOVE,

"A PERSONAL MATTER.

"But let me remind you of the intensely personal interest which every man and every woman in this hall has in this great issue. The doctrine of the kingdom springs out of the Fatherhood of God. God does not wish us to fight with one another, because He loves us all. He wishes the older and younger brother to be friendly. This tender-hearted God is ours. Think of Jesus Christ now. There is one thing we can do to-night. We can pray God to establish this kingdom of peace in our own hearts. The nation reproduces on a large scale the character of the citizens who make up the nation. And so long as the citizens are bears and lions, and other ferocious beasts, the nations are menageries of such creatures. When the prophecy of Isaiah is fulfilled, when everything that is vicious is cast out of our hearts, when our hearts are changed and renewed in the image of Christ and filled with love, we shall soon begin to reproduce that love on a large scale in public and national life. Is your heart now full of love to God and to man? The two cannot be separated. Some of you have tried the way of pride and selfishness. It is not a very successful programme, is it? You are not an enviable person if you are bad tempered or selfish. That policy is always a suicidal one. It is the case with nations. Those who use the sword shall perish by the sword. All the empires to which Daniel refers, where are they? They have perished in the blood which they shed. It is the same in the individual life. If you are indifferent to God, what a miserable wretch you become. If on the other hand you humble yourself before God, if you realise that God is love and put your trust in Him He will change your heart. You may say it is impossible. I am selfish, bad tempered, love money; I am the victim of lust, drink, and gambling. God also knows that. It may be impossible with man, but with God all things are possible. If God is able to influence the House of Commons to do what the House of Commons has refused for 500 years even to think about, God can influence you to bow your knees to Christ. Why not bow your knee now? What do you gain by fighting against Christ, and being selfish? Perhaps your difficulty is a different one. Perhaps you feel unworthy. Perhaps you know nothing about religion. My brother, no words that I can use are strong enough to describe the intense personal love of God to you. Do you know that God cannot help loving you. He loves you because He is love. Even Isaiah knew it. 'I, even I, am He that blotteth your transgressions for My own sake.' Because He cannot help it. When will men trust God? The work of the devil is to make them distrust Him, to make them think that He will have nothing to do with them. Christ could find no words strong enough to describe the love of God to every one of us, however far away, however much we have sinned against the light. His kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and His love is equally everlasting. There are but two things that any of us can do to please God. The first is to believe that He loves us and everybody else, and then to go and tell everybody else. Will you come to this God to-night? Will you? Will you become a citizen of this glorious kingdom, and fight against everything that fills the world with misery? What a glorious programme for every one! How entirely free from meanness, selfishness, and degradation. How it ought to stir your blood and to fill you with enthusiasm! God has not brought you into existence to eat and drink and squander your days in folly. God has created you that you may share His own joy, and the whole of the joy of God is in giving love and in blessing. I beseech you come to this gracious God. Trust now. Now, while I am yet speaking. He loves you. He yearns for you. He died for you as though you were the only one who needed His mercy. In the name of Christ I beseech you return to your Father."

It seems to us, that by his references to our own country, the preacher suspected that ours was the kingdom of Christ which was already bearing fruit in testimony of its heavenly origin. He had no suspicion, however, that ours is an Israelite kingdom, exactly answering to "the people of the saints of the Most High" mentioned in Dan. vii. 27, and endowed with Joseph's birthright. Also, that to qualify the kingdom, and all its individual parts, for this glorious destiny, it is promised them in Jer. xxxi. 33, 34, that the true change of heart needed shall also be theirs to fit them for the position.

THE ARYAN BUBBLE.

By J. G. Taylor.

Of late years, nothing has done more to show the limitations of scientific enquiry than the rise and fall of Aryanism. The fate of that interesting person, the Aryan, on whom ethnologists have lavished their choicest verbiage, has a dual importance to those who are concerned with the progress of Identity principles. The Aryan, or Indo-Germanic, or Indo-European theory, was at best only a shadow, with no substance behind it. But shadows often inspire greater dread than realities, just as men who have gone bravely through battles and sieges will listen uneasily to a ghost story. And the bare supposition of a huge kinsfolk, reaching from India to America, and clutching in its talons almost every tribe within that area, was sufficient to prejudice the world against a belief in our Semitic lineage. With this stumbling-block in the path it was no wonder that people received Anglo-Israelism with absolute incredulity, nor was it surprising that our opponents interlarded their speeches and pamphlets with appeals to "the three broad divisions of humanity: Semites, Aryans, and Turanians,"—which is the modern mode of spelling Shem, Ham, and Japheth. Probably the said opponents had never studied the movements of a single Eastern clan, but it was safe to echo the opinions of authorities, and so the cry of the parrot was heard in the land. While such conceptions held despotic sway it was hardly possible to convert the trained judgment, unless it had the faculty of throwing off its training, and that is not a common endowment. But the dispersion of the Indo-Germanic fable has cleared the air, and left room for the growth of sounder historical doctrines.

An equally weighty advantage gained by this breakdown of Aryanism is the seasonable rebuff it gives to college lore and university decrees. The established ideas in astronomy, philology, botany, theology, and other learned schemes, have all been overturned in their day, and have had to undergo the ordeal of a complete revision. But Professors are apt to forget this. They are quite willing to confess the faults of their predecessors, but seem to think that they themselves are infallible. They cannot deny that the scholastic systems of a few centuries ago were fallacious to their core, yet they argue as if their own systems were incapable of possessing a flaw worth mentioning. It is well, therefore, that they should have received a reminder of their liability to err; and it is likewise fortunate that we can point the general public to so recent an example of scientific skill, arrogance, and frailty.

We have to remember that the mere existence of an Indo-European or Caucasian race is no bar whatever to our Israelitish descent. For, granted that it subsists, we have then to ask—From whom did it spring? Also—Who belong to the original stock, and which nations are simply accretions? The first question is universally answered by naming Japhet, indeed, "Japhetic" is one of the numerous titles bestowed upon the genus. But this assertion is not entirely in harmony with Rawlinson's pronunciations or the disclosures of Eastern monuments. In his "Ancient Monarchies," Rawlinson observes: "The Persians and Medes, together with a few other tribes of less celebrity, formed a special branch of the Indo-European family, known to ethnologists as Arian" (vol. iii., p. 164). The Ten Tribes were settled among the Medes, and would not be distinguishable from them by Greek annalists. Consequently, if history indicates that the Arians consisted of Medes, Persians, and their neighbours, there is no essential reason why we should regard them as wholly Japhetic. Besides, the engraving of "Arian Physiognomy," from Persepolis, proves that their features were Semitic, or Jewish (vol. ii., p. 308). Physiognomy is a valued weapon of our critics, and will they allow us to conclude from this that we are Semitic?

But, admitting for sake of argument that the Caucasian stem was Japhetic, we have to unravel this further difficulty: Who and who are not members of the primitive body? The ethnologists, or philologists, cut the Gordian knot by declaring that all who spoke an Indo-Germanic dialect were of Indo-Germanic blood; and, by this means, they imagined that they had bound the British with indestructible links to Indian, Persian, Russian, and Latin. It is strange that so poor an hypothesis should have gained acceptance, but it was advocated with the utmost assurance, and that, no doubt, was half the victory. Max Muller, who invented the term Aryan, discoursed thus, some years since, at the Royal Institution: "It is enough to know that our ancestors, and the ancestors of the Hindus, had once a common home, that they lived in the same pastures, spoke the same language, and worshipped the same God. Their blood may have been mixed, and, by mixture, may, we hope, have been improved. But stronger than the affinity of mere blood, is the affinity of language and thought which makes Englishmen and Hindus brothers indeed. The ring that was broken thousands of years ago is now being welded together again. The world is becoming Indo-European. The young men whom England sends to India should greet the Aryan inhabitants not as conquerors meet the conquered, but as brothers meet brothers." In his lectures on the "Science of Language," the same philologist speaks of a time when "the first ancestors of the Indians, the Persians, the Greeks, the Romans, the Slaves, the Celts, and the Germans, were living together in the same enclosures, nay, under the same roof;" and is even more emphatic in his "Survey of guages," where he maintains that "there is not an English jury, now-a-days, which after examining the hoary documents of language, would reject the claim of a common descent, and a legitimate relationship between Hindu, Greek, and Teuton" (p. 29).

Commenting on this and similar flights of fancy, Isaac Taylor remarks: "It will be admitted that the language spoken by the negro, in Alabama, resembles the language spoken by the New Englander of Massachusetts, far more nearly than the language spoken by the English soldier resembles that of the Bengal sepoy with whom he is brigaded; and the evidence derived from the documents of language—in this case not hoary—which might be put before an English jury as to a 'common descent' and a 'legitimate relationship' between the negro and the Yankee would be far more intelligible to the twelve English tradesmen in the box than the more obscure evidence which applies to the case of the Teuton and the Hindu' ('Origin of the Aryans,' p. 6)." "It cannot be insisted on too strongly that identity of speech does not imply identity of race, any more than diversity of speech implies diversity of race" (p. 5).

It is unnecessary to quote at length from either this or other writer, as none can dispute that the foregoing extracts correctly express the newest teaching, Max Muller being the only scientist of repute who clings to the "one roof" notion. Aryanism is at an end; and the end of Aryanism awaits Japhetism, for the materials on which the former was based are precisely the same as those which continue to be used in favour of the latter. Enquirers who want to get at the root of the matter find its root lying in that fertile soil—the imagination. They consult, perhaps, the book of an erudite ethnologist, who ventures to put forward a "probability," and, on the next page, this probability reappears in the shape of a certainty. For confirmation, he refers his readers to a "great philologist," who refers them to a "cautious historian"; and the cautious historian sends them back to the erudite ethnologist. This circle of mutual approbation may be widened, but it always remains a circle. The theory of our derivation from Japheth does not owe its existence to knowledge but to ignorance. It was founded on assumption, and is defended by prejudice, both of which must succumb to the Israelitish contention. In the encounter between ethnology and philology over the Indo-Germanic myth, ethnology gained the victory because it produced the most plausible proof, and is it likely that a pure speculation will be able to stand against an array of prophetic and historical facts? The dictum of a professor is not science any more than popery is religion, and the attempt to bolster up a genealogical figment by the mention of big names or cherished traditions is an introduction of priestcraft into the secular domain. But a world that would not yield to popes with Inquisitions, will not submit to popes without Inquisitions; and if ethnologists wish to preserve their venerable fiction they will have to offer something better in its behalf than supercilious or abusive paragraphs.

THE CONVERSAZIONE AT BATH ON OCT. 19TH.

ON Oct. 19th last our Bath Anglo-Israel friends held their annual conversazione and tea, when a large number of the association, with strangers invited for the occasion, met at the Jubilee Hall, Broad-street. The room was very tastefully decorated by the zealous secretary, Mrs. Colonel Thompson, and tea served in the usual hospitable style. The room was a well lighted, cheerful one, very well adapted for the purpose. It contrasts favourably with any Bristol or Clifton can produce. The president of the association, the Rev. E. J. Wemyss-Whittaker, presided after the tea, and the business of the anniversary then commenced.

The president led in prayer, after which he delivered an address, introductory in character, on the subject of "The Chain Unbroken; or, Israel, Christ's Church." It was satisfactory to note the grasp Mr. Whittaker has of his subject, and how well he realized the continuity of the purposes of God in using His people Israel in the Old and in the New Testament times to carry out His plans of mercy to the fallen world.

After his address Mr. E. W. Bird (Philo-Israel) was called on to speak. His subject was, "The Evangelist to all the Nations," 1st, according to prophecy; and 2nd, according to facts. The first two addresses unfortunately occupied so long that the two following speakers were rather hampered by the want of time in doing justice to their subjects.

The Rev. F. Aston, of Wolverhampton, dealt with "The Fulness of the Gentiles," and Col. Senior, of Clifton, spoke on "Israel in relation to the Second Advent." Mr. Aston's address will shortly appear in the BANNER OF ISRAEL, and therefore we need make no further allusion to it, except to say that it was an able outline of the subject, and was appreciated by the audience.

It had been proposed that a discussion should take place after the conclusion of the four addresses, but though friends were invited to ask questions and to state difficulties none were proposed on account of the lateness of the hour when Col. Senior had reached the close of his subject.

The Bath Association doubtless has some zealous and very active friends who keep up the local interest of Our Identity, and the consequence is that their meetings are always successful, always well attended, and always interesting—given a well-served tea, a warm and brilliantly lighted room, comfortable chairs and tables, without the uncomfortableness of the wretched seats and straight-backed forms one is accustomed to use at most places of public assembly, and the result must be a satisfactory meeting, to be remembered during the coming winter months with pleasure. Such an anniversary was the late conversazione at Bath, one we hope others enjoyed as much as we did.

BATH ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

A CONVERSAZIONE was held, under the auspices of this organization, at the Jubilee Hall, on Thursday afternoon. Half-an-hour or so was spent in tea and social converse, and this was followed by a meeting, at which several addresses were delivered. The Rev. E. J. Wemyss-Whittaker, who, as president of the association, was in the chair, took as his subject, "The Chain Unbroken; or, Israel, Christ's Church." It was, he pointed out, a subject akin to one discussed at the Protestant Congress, "The Unity and Continuity of the Church of Christ," and he emphasized the fact that what was said at that congress as to Christ being the life and soul of the Church they agreed with, and it was contradicted by none of the Anglo-Israel theories. Whether it was an Israel Church or a Gentile Church, its intimate union with Christ was the same. Nor did they for a moment deny the spiritual aspect of the Church, that the Church was a body whose members were spiritually united with Christ. But what they did assert was that the Church thus regarded was as it were a kingdom within a kingdom, that it had a channel in which it runs, a location in which it acts, that it is a Church for time as well as for eternity. The spiritual Church was located in a visible, material habitation, as the soul of man was located in his body; it was as the river, which was ever passing on towards the sea, never the same two minutes at a time, and yet between banks that changed not. So, changeless, he held to be the visible Church of Christ, and it was here, at this point, that the Anglo-Israel adherents diverged from the ordinary view. Taking their stand on the Word of God, as was laid down at the Protestant Congress, they held that according to the eight unconditional promises made to Abraham the descendants of Abraham had throughout been the special channel of divine grace, the visible, as distinct from the spiritual, Church on earth. The rev. gentleman gave at length the reasons upon which this belief is based, and declared with emphasis that he believed there never was a time when the continuity of the Church through Israel was broken.

Mr. E. W. Bird (Philo-Israel) took as his subject "The Evangelist to all Nations." It was, he held, the special privilege of Israel that through her all the nations of the earth should be blessed, and that promise was being literally fulfilled in England to-day. Other nations took the Gospel to parts of the world, but England alone took in the whole planet in her missionary operations. People sometimes said that in this respect God would not favour one nation more than another; but was that so? Would the Queen pick out haphazard any young men wandering about the streets of London and send them out as civil servants to India? Did she not rather have them selected and trained for the special work? So Israel had been selected from the beginning; it was no mere partiality on the part of God, but He had chosen His servants for the work, given them power and wealth to do it, and the heathen for a heritage.

The Rev. F. Aston spoke on "The Fulness of the Gentiles," and Col. Senior on "Israel in relation to the Second Advent." Questions were invited at the close.—Bath and Cheltenham Gazette, Oct 25, 1893.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—I venture to send you a few words concerning one now at rest, who for years found the greatest comfort in the study of the BANNER, and the doctrines which it inculcates. Perhaps you may deem them worthy of a place in its pages. Believe me,

Yours very truly, A. J. S.

Lichfield, Oct. 30th, 1893.

IN MEMORIAM.

The cause of Anglo-Israelism has sustained a great loss in the death of Col. Charles Joseph Hadfield, who passed peacefully away at his residence in Lichfield on the 19th inst. For years before he became acquainted with Anglo-Israel truths the late colonel was an earnest student of the Bible, especially of its prophetical parts. Few possess such a knowledge as he had of the books of Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, and the minor prophets. It was a constant remark of his that "leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ" we ought to "go on unto perfection," and no one could be in his society for long without finding out that his knowledge of the deep things of God as they are revealed in Holy Scripture was almost unique.

Therefore, when, fifteen or sixteen years ago, the truths of our Israelitish origin were first brought before Col. Hadfield's notice, by means of a lecture given in Derby by the late Mr. Edward Hine, it was the mind of no novice uninstructed in Biblical research which grasped those truths, but that of a deeply versed student, who, like the Bereans of old, "searched the Scriptures daily whether these things were so." And with ever deepening and widening grip these truths were held, forming, as they did, one of the greatest comforts of the colonel's later years.

It was his firm belief often expressed, and so recently as when speaking of the late Church Congress in Birmingham, that the universal acceptance of the truths of Anglo-Israelism would in time form the link so earnestly sought for to unite the many differing sects into which English Christianity is divided. The papers in the BANNER OF ISRAEL were a source of great pleasure to Col. Hadfield. One of his first questions on Wednesday morning almost invariably was, "Is the BANNER come?" and he often said when speaking of its Editor, "I could wish that it had been granted me to do the work which Philo-Israel has done. I believe it to be a most important work, and that he will one day meet with his reward."

Much more might be said on this subject, which for years formed a principal topic of Col. Hadfield's conversation and engrossed a deal of his thought; let it suffice, however, here to say that he has passed now beyond the range of enquiry and theory and reached the land where faith vanishes into sight, and where we find the solution of those many problems which perplex us here.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—I enclose a composition paper by a girl pupil teacher of the Llanduff Deaf and Dumb School, which I am sure will be perused with great interest by the readers of the BANNER, if you should think it worth your while to put it in. This paper contains an account of my lecture delivered in Cardiff on October 4. I feel deeply indebted to the committee and members of the Cardiff British-Israel Association, for the opportunity they gave me of lecturing on that day at 3 o'clock, on the "Gospel in the Wilderness," illustrated by my models of the Tabernacle, &c., and in the evening on "Israel Lost and Israel Found," illustrated by magic lantern pictures of various parts of the British Empire. And also to Mrs. E. Wilson Melville, the Principal of the Institution above named, for bringing to the St. John's Hall a good number of children, who were either deaf, or dumb, or both deaf and dumb. It was most interesting to notice how rapidly and successfully the teachers, by signs and words spelt by the movement of the fingers, were enabled to convey the meaning of my address as fast as I spoke. I shall never forget the earnest look and the happy faces of all, nor the sweet and hearty singing of those who could do so. Owing to the very heavy rain that fell, the attendance at the Tabernacle lecture was not good, but was made up greatly by the interest taken by the chairman, J. Cory, Esq., and the audience present.

Perhaps all your readers do not know, but will, I am sure, be interested in knowing that the daughter of the late John Wilson (the gifted author of the "Title-deeds of the Holy Land," and many other works bearing on the Identity, the pioneer writer of British-Israel truths), is at the head of this Llanduff Deaf and Dumb School.

I remain, dear Philo-Israel,

Yours very truly,

H. SENIOR.

Brooklyn, Osborn-road, Clifton, Oct. 20, 1893.

"On Wednesday afternoon, Oct. 4, there was a lecture at St. John's Hall, Cardiff. All the teachers and children of this school went. It was very wet. The boys walked there, but the girls and their teachers rode in two cabs. When we got to the place we got out of the cabs and went upstairs to the hall. It is rather a large room. There were not many people that afternoon. The lecture was a very nice one. The gentleman told us about the tabernacle. He showed us the different parts of the tabernacle—namely, the altar, the golden candlestick, the laver, the ark of the covenant, and different things which were very interesting. He showed us the tabernacle and the coverings of it. First was the black covering, which he told us was like our sins, then the second was red, which showed us that Jesus' blood covered all our sins, then thirdly came the white cover to show us that we were made quite pure and holy, then the last covering was all different sorts of colours, which showed us what we should be in our glorious state after the resurrection of the body. He told us that the laver was made from mirrors, and that the priests who went into the tabernacle every day, used to look at this so that they could see if their feet and hands were dirty. He showed us a picture of a priest washing his feet and hands before he went into the tabernacle. All round the tabernacle were sixty pillars with white linen stretched between. There was only one door by which to enter. When the priest was inside the door, he went to the altar, and there offered a sacrifice. Then he passed on to the laver, and there washed himself, and then he passed into the tabernacle to offer up incense. Only once a year did the high priest go into the holy of holies. The priest used to take the oil and trim the golden candlesticks every morning and evening. On the mercy-seat in the holy of holies, God said to Moses, 'There will I be with thee, there will I commune with thee,' and in the same place God sent a pillar of cloud to guide them, so that the Israelites could see it and remember God. On the day of atonement, when the high priest went into the holy of holies, he put on a white garment and took a basin of blood and sprinkled it upon the mercy-seat. That was a type of Jesus, who shed His blood only once.

"GEORGINA SIMMONS."

Oct. 11, 1893.

THE ANGLO-ISRAEL ALMANACK for 1894 will be ready the first week in December. We understand the frontispiece will be an excellent portrait of the Rev. J. Idrisyn Jones, specially engraved for this annual. There will also be a series of useful articles on Our Identity and the Great Pyramid. Further particulars will be given in a future number.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We regret that by a mistake the paper by F. C. P., on "Father Ohrvalder's Opinion of England," was published on p. 562, instead of being reserved for next week's BANNER (Nov. 29). The "opinions" of Father Ohrvalder will be found in the Leading Article of No. 883.—ED.

"ALL THAT SEE THEM SHALL ACKNOWLEDGE THEM, THAT THEY ARE THE SEED WHICH THE LORD HATH BLESSED."

(Isa. lxi. 9, R.V.)

We are reminded very forcibly of the above text by the quotation made in the "Review of Reviews" of Sept. 15, from an article in "Blackwood," regarding the opinions of Father Ohrwalder concerning the British nation and its duty to the people of the Soudan. The Father is an Austrian Roman Catholic priest, and has been many years in the Soudan himself. He was interviewed by the writer of the article as to the condition of the Soudan and how its misery was likely to be alleviated. His reply is very flattering to our nation, but it indicates a literal fulfilment of a prophecy which the "holy father" probably never thought of, and does not understand now. What he said was this (the comments on the state of things being worthy of our serious consideration):—

"England, my friends, I tell you England is the only possible condition! Ah, if you in England did but know the power of your name in the heart of the Soudan! I speak of what I know, and I bid you believe me, there is but one chance for those poor millions of slave-bound, crushed, and helpless beings—one and one only, the protection of England. Until England, as a nation, awakes to the consciousness of the power of her name and the gravity of her responsibility in the Soudan, there is nothing on earth that can bring a ray of hope to that poor country."

"But," we suggested, "surely the destruction of Hicks Pasha's army, the fall of Khartoum, the murder of Gordon, and the failure of the Nile expedition for his relief, must have irretrievably shattered the prestige of England in the Soudan?"

"Not in the least," he emphatically replied."

Father Ohrwalder proceeded to explain that, notwithstanding the injury that had been done to our prestige by our disasters, they had been fully retrieved, and at this moment the Khalifa was filled with an overpowering sense of the power in England.

The interviewer remarked that there was very little chance of England intervening in the Soudan at present; whereupon—but I had better quote textually what he says:—

"Ah, well!" observed Father Ohrwalder; "it may be as you say. But unless I am greatly mistaken, it will not be very long before the force of circumstances will compel your country to conquer the Soudan; unless, indeed, you are prepared to sacrifice all that you have done in and for Egypt, and intend to retire from your present position."

"And supposing England did so?" we inquired.

The Father shrugged his shoulders as he smilingly replied—"Oh, then, of course, her influence is for ever destroyed in Egypt and the Soudan, and she will never again be able to interfere. But," he added, with a sudden burst of vehemence, "it is not possible—England never can prove so false to herself. It would be a crime—a crime in the sight of God and of this African humanity—of which England could never be guilty."

"You speak strongly," we said, "and yet you are not an Englishman yourself. Are there no other nations who could achieve in the Soudan what you expect from England? What about France, Germany, Italy, or even Austria, your own country?"

"None," was the emphatic reply. "If you had lived in those distant regions of the Soudan so long as I have, if you had mingled in the daily life of the natives, listened to their conversation, and become acquainted with their ideas, you would know that the name of England is with them an almost magical spell, and that England is synonymous in their minds, with freedom, prosperity, and civilization. They scarcely even know the name of any other European country—I am speaking, of course, of the ordinary Soudanese peasants; and if any nation has a call from heaven itself to release these wretched people from slavery and oppression, to restore the distracted country to peace and security, and to lay the foundations of its future greatness and prosperity, that nation is England. Ah! would that I had the opportunity and power of stirring up your great country to a sense of its might and of its responsibility! Would that I could make every Englishman feel that he has a solemn mission from God in this matter! Would that I were able to impress upon his conscience the misery which the Mahdi and the Khalifa have spread throughout the Soudan! The accursed slave traffic was never so rampant in Africa as it is at this present moment. The slave market at Omdurman is one of the largest and most frequented of any that have ever been known. It is no uncommon thing to see a thousand women and girls exposed for sale in one day.

"A solemn mission from God" in the matter of the suppression of the slave trade! Of course, we British have such a mandate being Israel, and our charter is the famous passage in Isa. lviii. 6, R.V., words addressed to Israel of the Ten Tribes, a powerful Christian nation in these last days, a people clothed with the righteousness of God, with the glory of the Lord following as a rereward. This, then, is the charter of Israel. "Is not this the fast that I have chosen? to loose the bonds of wickedness, to undo the bands of the yoke, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke? Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house? and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh? Then shall thy light break forth as the morning, and thy healing shall spring forth speedily; and thy righteousness shall go before thee, the glory of the Lord shall be thy rereward." Here we have a picture drawn by a divine pen of a people described by Father Ohrwalder as destined to destroy slavery, with a call from heaven to do it. Theirs, he says, almost in the words of Isaiah, is to release these wretched people from slavery and oppression, to restore the distracted country to peace and security. . . . That nation is England!"

The Roman Catholic priest and Austrian alien looks to this nation to fulfil what the Lord declared by the mouth of Isaiah our prophet should be done by Israel alone. The identity of the two nations is proved by such a disinterested witness as the one before us, who, true to Scripture, calls ours "a great nation" (Gen. xii. 1, 2, xviii. 18), "with a mission from God" in this matter of the slave. We have no reason to feel proud and self-conceited when we read such words as the Roman Catholic father used. The fact is, being Israel, we respond to the character God has impressed upon us as a nation, for we are His creation, and He has made and formed us, as He says in Isa. xliii. 1, 7, 21, to show forth His own praise and glory. It would be strange, then, if we were not what we are, and our character were not as described by the "Review of Reviews" respecting the testimony of Father Ohrwalder, whose witness is that we are Israel.

If neither France, Germany, Italy, or Austria are capable of putting down the slave trade in the Soudan, there can be only one race able to do the work, and that race is Israel. Is it not a glorious thought that our own country is that of Israel, the chosen people of God, and that by our hands He means to work out the deliverance of the oppressed men, women, and children of poor, unhappy Africa. To no other nation is that work committed, and no one dare affirm that any nation but our own has really done anything worthy of the name to put an end to this awful sin, which Livingstone called "the open sore of the world." Reading such a passage as that we have quoted, we wonder that our clergy, for instance, are not earnestly desirous to find Our Identity to be true, and that they are not doing all they can to promote inquiry into the matter! On the contrary, lethargy reigns among them respecting our views, and indifference as to its truth or falsehood. Cui bono is still their cry; but Father Ohrwalder, Romanist and Austrian as he is, tells them how infatuated they are, and how unworthy their conduct is of a wise and learned section of Israel's body politic.

The awful fact that sometimes a thousand women and girls may be seen exposed for sale in the great slave-market of Omdurman, near Khartoum, and the glorious one that that vile shame could never be repeated if Israel's strong arm, nerved by the God of Abraham, ruled in that spot, should teach our nation's shepherds that the world's sins and miseries need the discovery of Israel to alleviate the latter and to make known the divine remedy for the former in the dark and cruel habitations of the accursed slave-drivers and their wicked gangs. Lost Israel must be found and acknowledged that men may see the remedy for this grievous blot, and Christian men and our teachers in the pulpit should not be the last to welcome back the children of weeping Rachael "coming again to their own border." Our Identity has good news to tell even to our scoffing clergy if they would but listen. In the name of the Lord we invite them to do so!

THE COLONISATION OF PALESTINE.

BY F. GASS.

A REMARKABLE article was published in the Jewish Chronicle, of September 15th, 1893, by a Christian Correspondent, on "The Hebrew Colonisation of Palestine." The writer observes that the vast spread in our day of European dominion in Asia and Africa, has placed Egypt and Palestine in a position of unequalled importance. The Suez Canal, which he calls "the Gate of the east and the south," is largely occupied with British ships, engaged in commerce, and the Imperial affairs of Great Britain. While Turkey, which is weak, is at peace and holds Palestine, our nation can afford to let matters remain as they are. Should, however, complications arise there, as they arose in Egypt in 1882, Great Britain could not permit any European Power to possess Jerusalem, and thus become a powerful rival to British enterprise and dominion. The possibility of such an event occurring, would compel Great Britain to establish herself at Jerusalem, and throw her protection over the sea-coast to Egypt. The present position is precarious, because Turkey is impecunious, and the reins of dominion are, through decay of power, slipping from her grasp. Under these circumstances, the policy of Turkey is to prevent any of the great European powers colonising Palestine to any considerable extent, so that none of them shall hold an important position in the country, which might justify it in active intervention.

Palestine is sparsely inhabited, and almost without cultivation. It has a magnificent climate, a rich soil, and is "a land which would delight the heart of a true colonist." Let the Sultan invite the Jews, the "Financial Race" of the world, to colonise and develop the splendid resources of the country. What is now "a desolate land," would soon become a centre of wealth and prosperity, and Turkish finances would quickly be placed upon a sound basis. The Jews desire is to return once more to the land of their forefathers. Circumstances may easily arise amid the conflicting interests of the European Powers, when the re-settlement of the Jewish race in Syria would be hailed as a happy arrangement of a dangerous open question. Herein, the writer considers, rests Israel's opportunity. Her hour is at hand, and the propitious moment must be improved to the utmost. Arrangements should be entered into with Turkey for the permanent restoration of the Hebrew race to the Holy Land. Israel (i.e., the Jews) should organise a confederation of her scattered forces, now numbering nine millions, and prove her earnestness by a display of willingness, and capacity, to colonise and develop the country. It is at this point that the writer in the Jewish Chronicle misses an important factor in the situation. The wealthy representative Jews of Great Britain, and continental Europe, have the matter at heart; but they have a strong objection to urging the most enterprising sons and daughters of the race to colonise Palestine while it remains, in any degree, under the rule of the unspeakable Turk. Islamism and Judaism are influenced by friendly feelings towards one another, and the Sultan, who is enlightened, holds out a hand to the Jew. But the real difficulty lies in the shrewd doubts of the Jews as to the capacity of Turkey to successfully carry out any arrangement she might be willing to enter into with them.

If Great Britain had a hold on Syria it would be another matter. The apparent indifference of the Jew would quickly vanish. He would turn his face Zionward with eager expectation, and the colonisation of Palestine would proceed apace. Palestine will never become a neutral zone, between the West and the East, under the great European Powers, as the Jewish Chronicle hopes it may. Failing this, the writer of the article considers that ere many years are past, European complications will arise, followed by British occupation of Syria, and final overthrow of the Ottoman Empire, amidst greater war-struggles than the world has ever seen. This is the view that British-Israelites have held for years. Their hold of the key to the situation led them long ago to foresee the probable course that events would take in the near future. The British nation will never permit any European Power, or coalition of Powers, to bar their way to India, and shut them out of the Gate of Suez. When the time comes, Great Britain will probably place a gentle, perhaps even a reluctant, hand upon Palestine, but her hold once taken will tighten imperceptibly, yet surely, and never under any pressure of circumstances will she consent to relax it again. It will be discovered as time proceeds, that the course of political events has rendered withdrawal impossible, and the conscience of the British people will arouse to the fact that we cannot desert a land, and people, that so urgently need our protection and advice. Reflecting men of all shades of opinion are constantly associating the English people with Bible prophecy in relation to Israel. The clergy often speak as though the nation was a spiritual Israel fulfilling literally the promises made only to God's peculiar people. Some of them seem glad to lay hold on the thought, as offering a satisfactory fulfilment of prophecies that otherwise appear ever to recede, farther and farther, into the unknown and the impossible. The press, religious and secular, Christian and Jewish, keep record of the advantage to Egypt of the British protectorate. And, as in the instance of the Jewish Chronicle, eagerly discuss every fresh phase of the Eastern Question, and particularly as regards the great Gate of Constantinople, the command of the Mediterranean Sea, and the Suez Canal. No movement of Russia, southward, or westward, escapes their watchful attention. The result is an almost universal agreement as to the impossibility of the Imperial British nation allowing the possession of Palestine to pass out of the hands of the Turk into that of any Power but their own. Yet with all this cloud of witnesses ever gathering closer around them, the leaders of the religious and secular wisdom of the great British people; her clergy, ministers, and her many nimble-minded pressmen, can see nothing in the cry of "Israel in Britain," but fanciful mis-interpretation of the Biblical promises. This proves the reality of the familiar saying that: "Truth is stranger than fiction." So strange do many find the grand fact of the Identity, that they place it to the account of a too fertile imagination.

THE REV. M. F. O. BRIDGMAN'S LECTURE IN SOUTHPORT.

THE following report of an interesting lecture, delivered in Southport, by the Rev. M. F. O. Bridgman, appeared in The Southport Guardian of Oct. 4, 1893. We are sorry that no report is given of the character of the discussion that followed the address. Mr. Bridgman, it will be seen, only noticed the following points of identity between Israel and the British races, showing that we enjoyed them all, but that the Jews had not inherited one of them. They were (1st) multitudinousness; (2nd) our occupation of the isles of the sea, to the north and the west of Palestine; (3rd) that we were a nation of nations; and (4th) that we are the possessors and heirs of the keys or Gates of the world. The last point he took up was the Jewish origin of the Queen, the sovereign of Israel. A word or two respecting the Cui bono question seems to have brought an excellent lecture to a close. It was reported thus:—

"ANGLO-ISRAELISM.—LECTURE BY THE REV. M. F. O. BRIDGMAN.

"The whereabouts and identification of the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel will ever be a source of interest to speculative minds, but more especially so to theologians and Biblical students, and it was therefore by no means inappropriate that it should form the subject of the opening lecture of the St. Andrew's Literary and Debating Society, in St. Andrew's Hall, Part-street. The lecturer was the Rev. M. F. O. Bridgman, curate, but before he entered upon his subject the chairman, Mr. T. Phillips, jun., expressed his pleasure at seeing so large a number present on the opening of their eleventh session. He urged the members to stick to the society, to attend regularly, and to do their best to make the session successful.

"The Rev. F. M. O. Bridgman then delivered his lecture, which proved a most interesting one. He took up the ground that the British race are the true descendants of the Lost Ten Tribes, and said there were about fifty points of identity, but he would only deal with some of the chief. First of all, the promise to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob was that their seed should be like the sand of the sea-shore for multitude. That could not be said of the Jews at the present day, for they numbered in all parts of the world only about six million souls—rather more than the population of Ireland. It certainly could not be said of France, for there the population was decreasing, nor could it be said of any of the other nations of the continent, and it only needed a little arithmetic to show that the time must come when the British race would be masters of the world because of their superabundant population. Then they were the only people who answered the description of Israel before returning to Palestine as occupying the isles of the sea in the north and in the west, the Hebrew expression of northwest. Next they read that Israel should be a nation of nations, or a company of nations, and the British were the only people who answered to that description. They could not say it of the Jews, for they were still as distinct as a nation as ever they were. Neither could they say it of France, Germany, or Russia, but that it described their own case exactly could not be doubted when they turned to the United States, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and other colonies where the people, although generally owning some sort of allegiance to the English throne, were to all intents and purposes separate nations. Another interesting prophecy relative to Israel was that they should possess the Gates of their enemies. That did not mean that Israel should possess their enemies' countries, but rather the openings, the keys of those countries. They found such keys in the hands of England in the Channel Islands, Gibraltar, Malta, Cyprus, Aden, Hong Kong, and at different points along the African coast from Zanzibar to Sierra Leone. In fact, there was scarcely a country save Russia to which they did not hold a key. The last point of identification might seem very strange and even startling, but it was one which he believed to be true. They read the promise in the Bible that Israel should never want for one of David's descendants to rule over her, and in Queen Victoria he believed they had a lineal descendant of King David. This he demonstrated on the supposition that Jeremiah and two of the daughters of King Zedekiah took refuge in the north of Ireland after having fled to Egypt from Palestine; it was a matter of history that two eastern princesses, accompanied by a 'revealer of secrets,' or prophet, came to the north of Ireland about the year of Jeremiah's flight into Egypt, and that several Hebrew institutions were then introduced into the country. One of the two princesses was married to the reigning monarch, from whom Fergus I. descended, from whom King James the 6th of Scotland and 1st of England claimed descent, and who in turn had as a descendant her Majesty Queen Victoria. The benefit of that identity with the Ten Tribes was not only that the spiritual blessings promised to Israel should belong to them, though not exclusively so; but they were the inheritors of the temporal blessings promised to Abraham and his seed for ever. They were in the vanguard of civilization, progress, and all that was good and noble, and he could look forward to the time when their power would not only extend over their own islands and colonies, but that they would be an example to the rest of the world. (Applause.)

"An interesting discussion followed the delivery of the lecture."

Within the limits of a short address, of course, many of the points we are accustomed to notice in respect to our likeness to Israel were omitted. There are some points which our lecturers would do well to insist on in future, because they are absolutely unique in the history of the world and peculiar to our own nation. Such points predicted in the Scriptures as Israel's portion are these: Their extraordinary wealth, conferring on them the ability "to lend to many nations," but the need to borrow from none. Our nation's history is the exact counterpart and fulfilment of this. We lend to many nations, as any newspaper of the day will testify, but there is no nation existing, or which has existed, from whom our nation has needed to borrow. Coupled with that promise, Deut. xv. 6 has another of a peculiar character, to the effect that Israel obedient was to reign over many nations (not over all nations), "but they shall not reign over thee." This can be stated with truth of the British people only, and the two coupled blessings point with wonderful accuracy and exactness to our own nation, but are not true of any other.

The other spiritual blessings promised to Israel, but enjoyed only by our own nation, are connected with the Sabbath, the ten true laws of God, the Bible and the evangelizing function, which last was to be world-wide, and include all nations, all families, and all kindreds of the earth (Gen. xxii. 18; xxviii. 14; Acts iii. 25). The prophecy finds its fulfilment only in our own race. The Sabbath is a British institution by law, and is a marked feature in our body politic. The ten laws given on Sinai to Israel by the Lord their God are the foundation of British jurisprudence. The Bible is the great heirloom of our nation, and our missionary enterprize, embracing the whole world and its inhabitants, is peculiar only to our nation. The British and Foreign Bible Society embraces the planet in its operations; our missionary societies, a legion in number, have the whole of the nations as the theatre of their exertions.

These points, in conjunction with those noticed by the Rev. Mr. Bridgman, lead to the only conclusion possible, namely, that the British and the Lost Ten Tribes are one.

Since the above was written, we have had much pleasure in learning that the lecturer at Southport was the son of our correspondent, the Rev. A. A. Bridgman, of Lezayre Vicarage, in the Isle of Man. We are glad to know that the son follows in the footsteps of a worthy father, and being a clergyman is so well grounded in the subject of Our Identity that he has been able to aid the cause by platform advocacy. We have now been informed of the character of the discussion which followed the lecture. It appears that several persons present declared that they quite received the Anglo-Israel views, and were searching into the truth of it. There were but two individuals who spoke in opposition, but these only said that they were unable to accept it as yet; they admitted, however, that they were not aware of anything that could be said against it. The objectors were avowed socialists. We are indeed glad to hear that new ground is being broken up and fresh seed sown. We are aware that at Southport we have some warm supporters of our grand truths, but we had no idea that the vicar of Lezayre, in the Isle of Man, had a son in orders ready and willing to advocate them on the platform. We hail the omen as good. We therefore thank God and take fresh courage for our work as regards the future.

LANGUAGE AND RACE.

"WHEN a language is admitted to be the same, it not unfrequently differs almost as much in two of its stages as if it were two languages. The English tongue has become composite in its vocabulary. The words in common use in speaking and writing are about 10,000 in number, of which probably half are pure English. Irish and Welsh are opposed in structure to English. It has, however, been asserted that the Welsh tongue is one of the fountains of the English. One school of philologists has maintained that full a third of our existing English words are Welsh. Every language that has come to be written has existed in an unwritten state. Herodotus mentions some northern races of his day who were all familiar with Greek as well as with their own barbaric speech. The language first to find its way from the East into Europe was apparently the Celtic, afterwards driven on to the farthest west; after which followed, in succession, the Latin, the Gothic, and the Slavonic, passing upon and urging one another like so many waves. What is now called the German tongue belongs to a different branch to our own. We are more nearly akin to the Dutch than to the modern German people. The greatest communities of the future, whether they be seated beyond the Atlantic or beyond the Pacific, promise to be communities of English blood and English speech."—Craik's "History of English Literature and Language." 1864.

"The common language of Palestine during the Herodian age was Aramaic—the speech of Assyria—which had come westwards with the colonists planted by Sargon and other kings in Syria. The Mishna is the latest work written in Hebrew by the Jews. It was written out by Judah the Holy, and completed about 180—220 A.D. The Talmud of Babylon dates only from 500 A.D.; the Jerusalem 300 A.D., and is penned in the barbarous Aramaic jargon which developed from the common dialect of the Herodian age. The Babylonians had encountered the Medes as early as 810 B.C., near the Caspian; the regions of Kurdistan appear at this time to have had a mixed Turanian and Aryan population. The languages of the subjects of Darius showed their mixed nationality, and the religion of the empire was as mixed as the people. The language of the Hebrews was closely akin to the Phœnician. On the shores of the Mediterranean from the days of Hezekiah, and probably from those of Solomon, we find that same intercourse of nations, Aryan, Turanian, and Semitic, which continued without interruption through Persian, Greek, and Roman times. The ancients were by no means ignorant of their neighbours, a fact we are too apt to forget in the idea that nations of old lived in isolation in their own countries. It appears to have been a Jewish belief, about the Christian era, that the Ten Tribes had wandered east under a great leader, crossing over some river in the direction of Central Asia. It is remarkable that a similar story of migration is preserved in Persian legends. Those who would trace the Lost Tribes in Europe must first prove that they ever were lost at all."—"Syrian Stone Lore." By Major Conder.

"Language is characteristic of man as a whole and not of any particular section of the human family. It separates him from the lower animals; it does not serve to separate one race of mankind from another. In other words, language is not a test of race. The fact has to be kept well in view from the very outset of our ethnological researches. The confusion between language and race which marked the earlier history of the sciences of philology and ethnology has been productive of infinite injury to both. Amateur ethnologists are still prone to argue from similarity or identity of race, and to discover a relationship in blood between the dark-skinned populations of Bengal and the white races of Europe because the languages they now speak can be traced back to a common source. It does not require an extensive knowledge of history to learn how utterly fallacious such an argument is. . . . Under the Roman Empire the various races of the West had not only to obey one law, but also to learn the language of the imperial city, so that when the empire fell Latin was the common speech alike of Northern Africa, of Spain, and Italy, of Gaul and Britain. The Teutonic barbarians who poured into the devastated provinces soon adapted their speech to that of the subject populations and the modern languages of France and Spain and Italy were the ultimate result. At a later date the Northmen in Normandy and Southern Italy quickly forgot the language they had brought with them and adopted that of their conquered vassals; while in Britain, on the contrary, the natives accustomed their lips to the speech of the Saxon or Scandinavian invader, or even of the French-speaking Norman who followed him. In the East, Hebrew and Phœnician, Assyrian and Babylonian, were all supplanted by the dialect of the Aramean tribes of Syria and Northern Arabia, and Aramaic, in its turn, was supplanted by the Arabic of Mecca after the triumph of Mohammedanism. . . Language, then, is no characteristic or test of race. What it indicates is not racial descent but social contact. The fact that the Kelts of Cornwall speak English like the Jews of London or Manchester proves that the population with which they have been brought into daily contact for a long number of years is one that speaks English. Commerce has a potent influence, and if English is destined to become the language of the world, as is thought by some, it will be in large measure the effect of English trade. We can change our language, we cannot change our race. The English child born in China and ignorant of any other language than Chinese, nevertheless remains an Englishman. Let him marry a Chinese wife; his children will inherit the racial characteristics either of himself or of their mother; they will not originate a third race which is a cross between the two."—"The Races of the Old Testament." OUR NATIONAL FORGETFULNESS OF GOD AND MISUSE OF WEALTH.

THE Right Rev. Bishop Wilkinson, late of South Africa, preached in Christ Church, Great Malvern, on Sunday, July 9th last, and in the course of a sermon on 2 Sam. i. 3, 4, he made some remarkable observations on the subject of the present condition of the British nation. He attributed the critical state of the children of Israel at the time of the death of Saul and the accession to the throne of David, the son of Jesse, to two facts: first to the desire to ignore God's sovereignty, His word, and His works; and next to the people's misuse of the wealth God had given them, by lavishing it on themselves and not on His objects and purposes. He then went on to declare that our own national state and condition to-day was exactly similar. We as a nation were in all ways endeavouring to do without God, to ignore Him in matters political and social; to put aside His will in respect to His holy day and His holy laws, both as to our daily, national, and our family life.

The Bishop, of course, did not claim for us that the British are Israel, but he painted our portrait as black as that of Israel in Saul's days and predicted for our nation that if we did not repent and reform, our national destruction was as certain as that of the many defunct nations who have gone before us. He evidently implied that as Israel had as a nation been ruined for sin, so should we be ruined for the same cause, and that before long. In regard to our misuse of our wonderful accumulated wealth and prosperity he bade us remember how God treated Israel in this matter and how first the Egyptians and then the Syrians, followed by the Chaldeans, robbed the kings of Judah of all their gold and silver stored up in the House of the Lord (2 Chron. xii. 9; 2 Kings xii. 18, xxv. 13—17). He predicted the same miserable end of all our splendid wealth, if we squandered it on our own pleasures and on luxury, instead of spending it on the service of God according to His will. The Bishop came to the town to plead the cause of the Church Army in its emigration scheme, whereby a hundred lads a year, taken from the class for whom Dr. Barnardo does so much, are to be trained and then sent to the colonies (Canada especially) and there transformed into useful British citizens. He advocated this outlet for our surplus wealth, asking for £4,500 to start with, for which sum the preacher had made himself responsible.

Such was the Bishop's sermon. We have nothing to say against its object, nor against the low estimate he took of British deserts. We are a degenerate race, as Israel always was, and the standing wonder of our times is that God has borne so long with us as He has. The puzzle is beyond solution to those who fail to see Our Identity, and therefore fail to recognise the faithfulness of God which guarantees our safety because we are Israel, and because God has sworn that "He would never leave us nor forsake us." The Bishop knew nothing of all this; but seeing how the nations of the past have one and all been cut off, and how Israel herself has been "lost" and Judah banished in disgrace among the nations of the whole world, he is ready to write grievous things against our race and to predict that if we do not repent we British shall have an ending nationally like theirs and disappear, not to be heard of again, among the third-rate nations of the earth.

It is clear that Bishop Wilkinson has no comfort because he fails to recognise that the British are Israel. If he were aware of that fact, such a text as Isa. xlii. 16 (R.V.) would occur to him, and it would give him comfort. There, writing of Israel, the Lord described our position now: "I will bring the blind by a way they knew not; I will lead them in paths that they have not known. I will make darkness light before them and crooked things straight. These things will I do unto them and not forsake them." For lack of this consolation, the Bishop's views were pessimistic throughout, and we hardly think he can have much hope of us if he is sincere. But if he could bring himself to entertain Our Identity view of things he would see that, like the repentant sinner of the pulpit, the fact of our Israelitish origin changes the whole aspect of the case and brings to bear influences on our nation such as none other ever had, or will have. In the first place, God promises never to leave us nor forsake us, but will give us His Spirit to change the nation's heart and will forgive our iniquities and sins (Ezek. xxxvii. 1—15; Jer. xxxi. 33, 34). He will show us His words, and statutes, and judgments, after a manner He has not dealt with other nations (Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20). He will give us, as He is already doing, "the power to get wealth," not to spend on luxury and self, but that "He may establish His covenant which He sware unto our fathers as it is this day" (Deut. viii. 18). He has "made" and created and "formed" our nation, that "it may show forth His praise" (Isa. xliii. 21), and He may surely be trusted to carry out His plans and never to confess before the universe that what He has essayed to do He has failed to perform. God forbid! It were blasphemy to entertain that thought! God will surely carry out all the plans and purposes He formed for Israel, and Israel therefore should praise His glorious name.

THE SUNDAY NEXT BEFORE ADVENT.

SUNDAY, November 26th, 1893, is the twenty-sixth Sunday after Trinity, and it is also the Sunday next before Advent this year. On Sunday, November 26th, the Church of England brings her ecclesiastical year to a close, and on December 3rd, Advent Sunday, the new year of the Church opens afresh. On Advent Sunday we are reminded of the second coming of the Lord Jesus, who on the "last day, when He shall come again in His glorious majesty to judge both the quick and dead," will cause us "to rise to the life immortal by His divine power, as believers are instructed by the collect appointed for the day.

Articles have appeared in the BANNER OF ISRAEL on several occasions pointing out the peculiarity of the services appointed for Pre-Advent Sunday, in respect to the collect, epistle, and gospel selected for the date. That there is something very special in the day may be learnt from the fact that a rubric at the close of the Gospel directs that "this last collect, epistle, and gospel shall always be used upon the Sunday next before Advent." Why should that have been prescribed? and has the matter any bearing upon Our Identity? In BANNER, vol. vi., p. 539, on December 27th, 1882, eleven years ago, we published an article on the subject in No. 313, to which we beg our readers to refer. The Rev. Dr. Hanan the next year, in vol. vii., p. 559, and again in vol. x., p. 490, in 1883 and 1886 respectively, gave us some very lucid and valuable instruction on the facts which will bear repetition now. The direction contained in the Rubric referred to is peculiar to the liturgies which may be described as Anglo-Saxon. The English, Scotch, Irish, American, and Irvingite liturgies prescribe the use of the collect, epistle, and gospel in question on the Sunday next before Advent. What, then, is there peculiar in these selected portions which require remark?

In the first place, the collect asks the Lord "to stir up the wills of His faithful people." God's people are Israel, as the Scriptures abundantly prove (Deut. ix. 26, 29, &c., &c.), and that they were to be His faithful people is shown by Hos. ii. 20. The next petition is that God's faithful people (Israel) "may plenteously bring forth the fruit of good works" which Israel was to do (Isa. xxvii. 6, R.V., and Matt. xxi. 43), and of the Lord "be plenteously rewarded," which was to be Israel's destiny as Jer. xxxiii. 9 and Deut. xxviii. 1—13 declare. The collect, then, is one which Israel only could use, and it was put into the mouths of the British folk by the compilers of our Book of Common Prayer in A.D. 1552 and 1662 (Dr. Hanan, BANNER, vol. x., p. 490). So much for the collect which appeared in the Sarum Missal, and dates from the time of Augustine.

The epistle next requires notice. The passage selected is not from the New Testament epistles at all, but from Jer. xxiii. 5, an Old Testament prophecy. It is the only instance the Prayer Book furnishes us of the selection of an Old Testament prophecy as a substitute for a new New Testament epistle during a Sunday service. And as before stated, this particular collect, and prophecy substituted "for the epistle," is prescribed to be used by the congregations of the Church just before Advent. The prophecy in question points out to the British people before whom it is read prior to Advent Sunday that the days are coming when Israel, as separate from Judah, will be discovered, and that this seed of the House of Israel shall, like a second Exodus, be brought out of the North country (not out of Egypt this time) and out of all the countries whither the Lord had driven them, and "that they shall dwell in their own land."

The compilers of the Prayer Book seem to have suspected that the British had an interest in the matter and bid them recollect always just before Advent Sunday that ere the Lord returns Israel and Judah will be united, and that He will restore the Lost Ten Tribes of the House of Israel from their Northern habitations to their inheritance in Palestine. The prescribed gospel, taken from John vi. 5, gives the British a hint as to their evangelizing functions throughout the world. They are fearlessly to break the bread of life to the whole world, sure that the Lord who sends them will make what they dispense sufficient for the spiritual wants of the famishing nations; for Jesus took the loaves and gave them to the disciples, who, accepting what they received from Him, found the supply far more than that which the necessities of the people required at their hands. Here, then, we find in pre-Advent Sunday a collect, epistle, and gospel prescribed for use by the Church of England for her congregations which clearly are suited only for a Hebrew people, being a portion of the children of Israel distinct from the Jews. These Scriptures and prayer bid the British remember their origin and to look for their restoration with Judah to their land in the days closely approaching when the Lord, their Redeemer, shall appear in His glory and reinstate His people in the land of their inheritance according to the promises (Jer. iii. 18; Ezek. xxxvii. 1—28).

THE EVANGELISTS TO ALL THE NATIONS.

1.—According to Prophecy.

2.—According to Facts.

Being Philo-Israel's Address at the Bath Conversazione, Oct. 19, 1893.

The subject should be deeply interesting to a Bath audience, for it deals with the privilege we enjoy as a nation, as well as British-Israelites, of carrying "the glorious Gospel of the blessed God," which is also "the Gospel of the kingdom," to all nations and families of the earth; not to a few here or there, but to ALL. This is the point—this the distinction between our position and that of other races. The nations are blessed with the Gospel by our instrumentality. We, being Israel, are their ministers, to bless them with the words of life according to the Scriptures.

At a recent meeting, the subject of Our Identity being under discussion, we quoted the promises to Israel in Gen. xxii. 18, and xxviii. 14, which declare that all nations should be blessed in the afterseed of the faithful Abraham, "our forefather." A discussion arose as to the limits of the duties of nations outside our own, who accepted Christ as their Saviour. "Have they none?" it was asked. No doubt every man and woman, every family, and every nation not being Israel, is bound, when accepting Christ as their Redeemer, to make known the good news further afield, as far, in fact, as possible. What, it was asked, will prevent such Christians going with the gracious message to the world's end, and embracing every creature? The chairman of the meeting, who had no sympathy with our views, supplied the answer: "Ah, poor things," he said, "they have no money!" The sentiment was repudiated by one of those present, but in truth the chairman was right! Money is the very backbone of the subject. Its possession is necessary to enable Israel to carry the Gospel to the ends of the earth. They require it for the maintenance and equipment of their missions, to pay for their mighty ships of war to acquire and hold the empire of the sea; to maintain their myriad of servants who go forth and govern the ends of the earth, and to administer Israel's forty-five to fifty governments, colonies, and dependencies. The other nations of the earth professing Christ's religion, are not blessed with "the power to get wealth," as is Israel, and consequently, however much they desire to proclaim the Gospel among the nations, they are not able, for lack of money, to take the Gospel where God means it should go by the instrumentality of His people. The Lord knew this when He said to His people by the mouth of Moses His servant, "Thou shalt remember the Lord Thy God who giveth thee power to get wealth, that He may establish His covenant which He sware unto Thy Fathers, as it is this day" (Deut. viii. 18).

It is sometimes objected to our views that they involve favouritism, and unjust selection of Israel, in preference to the other nations. But there is no such partiality in the Lord! God had a great work to carry out, even the evangelisation of all the nations, and He had a right to choose His agents, endow and fit them for the work, and send them forth to effect it. We all act on these principles ourselves, and also in matters affecting our nation's interests. God, when He tried Abraham, and before that, when He selected him and His seed for ever, chose His agents for the work, and abides by His choice to-day! He selected Israel, but as Judah, a portion of the children of Israel, failed to obey, they have been now set aside, and God is blessing the House of Israel, or Ephraim-Israel, to carry out the work on which He has set His heart. "For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Having chosen Ephraim, God has enabled him to do the work by giving this nation (His servants) wealth and power, the heathen for their stage of operations, with all the blessings that lie at His right hand, to cause them "to take root, and to blossom and bud, and to fill the face of the world with fruit" (Isa. xxvii. 6, R.V.). Wherever, then, we find a nation so endowed, and so acting for the Lord, we may be sure we have found Israel.

It is a remarkable thing that God sets such high store by the work of the missionary evangelist, that in Rom. x. 13—16, we have salvation as the end of God's purposes, but the foundation of the road that leads to it is the missionary. Thus we have there the statement that "God is rich unto all that call upon Him," and, as a consequence, "whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved!" But now come the difficulties in the way of him who would reach to the glorious salvation, and these are unsolvable by man. How shall anyone "call" on Him on whom they have not believed? Impossible! How shall anyone believe in Him of whom they have not heard? Impossible! How shall anyone hear without a preacher? Equally impossible! And lastly, how shall anyone preach except they be "sent," or are "mission"-aries? The problem begins on earth with the glorious missionary enterprise and agency. But its final goal is salvation for the world by the rich grace of God through the blood of Calvary! God has given to the House of Israel the unspeakable honour of being His missionaries to the whole world, lying in the wicked one. But is this the only honour He designs to confer upon His chosen people and nation? Nay, there is more to come!

The Lord Jesus Christ is a King, and He needs a kingdom on this earth. That kingdom embraces the whole world, as Dan. vii. 27 teaches us. The kingdom is composed of "men." That appears from Ezek. xxxiv. 29—31, where God describes "His flock," "the flock of His pasture," who are the House of Israel, His people, as "men," and He "their God." As King He has, as before stated, chosen His subjects. Matt. xxi. 43 tells us who those subjects are, in supercession of the Jews. They are "a nation," "fruitbearers" before God; Ephraim by name and nature (Gen. xli. 52). That empire is to be "the greatness of the kingdom, under the whole heaven." That kingdom is the one we are praying for daily: "Thy kingdom come," "on earth;" and its King is the Lord Jesus Christ! This is "the glorious Gospel of the blessed God"; this, the Gospel of the kingdom," which is to be preached to all nations as a witness "before the end comes" (1 Tim. i. 11; Matt. xxiv 14). Our Lord, when on earth, was constantly speaking of this kingdom, and mentioned it 112 times, while of His Church He spake but twice! "The kingdom of God," and "of His Christ," then, is not the Church of God, but the latter ministers to and for the former. When He spoke of the kingdom of God, the Lord in Matt. xxi. 43, associated it with "a nation," not with a Church; and that nation is now before us in the British folk. Behold its greatness, power, influence, wealth, and universal beneficence! It is unique in the history of the world! It occupies one-fifth of the habitable globe. Its population one-fourth. It is five times larger than Darius' empire; four times bigger than Rome at its best! It is sixteen times larger than France to-day, forty times larger than Germany; three times larger than the United States. Its wealth is represented by an annual income of 2,000 millions sterling, and a saving of 200 millions yearly. Its population increases at the rate of 1,000 persons a day for the whole Kingdom, and about 80,000 every year for London only.

The Church Missionary Society now constantly urges upon our attention, our present duty to take the Gospel to all the nations, and, as a fact, we are doing this very thing. The Church Missionary Society, the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, the Jews' Societies, the South American Missionary Society, and the countless other agencies at work among ourselves are employed in evangelizing all mankind. Our British and Foreign Bible Society, Religious Tract Society, and other like agencies are engaged in the glorious work at the ends of the earth, in the uttermost parts of it, and in its coasts; but there is no nation but our own which does the like.

These things, taken together, constitute a mass of strong evidence that the British are Israel of the House of Joseph, and we have many proofs from independent sources that our nation is described by the current literature of the day, as a people who, being engaged in Israel's work, must, as God is true, be Israel herself!

WHO ENCIRCLES THE GLOBE WITH THE IRON NET OF THE SUBMARINE CABLES?

FORWARDED BY AN AMERICAN ANGLO-ISRAELITE.

"GREAT excitement prevails in France owing to the discovery that, of the twenty-eight companies which own the various submarine cables which encircle the globe as with an iron net, no less than nineteen are English, and that during the recent troubles in connection with Siam the dispatches addressed to the French Government from the far east were read and known at the English Foreign Office several hours before their delivery in Paris. France is, in fact, entirely dependent upon English companies for cable communication with her various colonial dependencies, including even Tunis, and actually goes so far as to grant a State subsidy of 60,000 dollars per annum to the English 'African Direct Telegraph Company,' whose lines she is obliged to use in order to reach her possessions on the west coast of Africa. Of the twenty-eight cable companies only two are French, one Danish, three North American and three South American. Indeed, of the 125,000 miles of submarine cable which constitute the submarine telegraphic system of the world, more than three-quarters are in the hands of the English, who are placed thereby in a singularly advantageous position with respect to other nationalities."—New York Tribune, August 29, 1893.

The following, in reference to the above, appeared in The Messenger, of September, 1893, page 307:—

"'THE HEAD AND NOT THE TAIL.'

"The French are very angry because 'perfidious Albion' has been first and foremost in the laying of electric cables, and the Figaro has expressed its dissatisfaction in an article entitled 'A National Peril,' mainly directed to exposing the short-sightedness of the French Chamber in throwing out projects for the extension of French cables. It seems that out of twenty-eight cable companies, nineteen are English. Out of a length of 125,000 miles of submarine cable, three-quarters are in English hands. Says the Figaro: 'A nation we would like to call a friendly one, if it were possible to do so without making ourselves ridiculous, holds the key of our submarine telegraph communications everywhere. There is nothing to hinder the secrets of our despatches being known in London before they are known to us. It is well known, and Jules Ferry more than once reminded his friends of the fact, that the first message announcing the Lang-Son incidents, was read at the Foreign Office twenty hours before it reached the Quai d'Orsay. This extraordinary and now almost irreparable defect in our system of national defence is entirely our own fault. England understood before we did, and better than we did, the capital importance of this supremacy. All over the globe she has encouraged the laying of cables, and little by little, without taking heed, we have allowed ourselves to be enlaced in the meshes of this formidable net of steel. There is not one of our colonial possessions in which our official despatches are not at the mercy of an English company—not one of our own cables touches English territory. English cables touch ours almost everywhere. It was the Eastern Telegraph Company that put France into communication with Tunis a few weeks ago. The same line joins Marseilles to Bone, and Bone to Malta. England has thus, in the middle of the Mediterranean, a telegraphic observatory on which we are dependent. On the west coast of Africa we are beholden to the good offices of the African Direct Telegraph Company, which we subvention to the tune of 300,000f. a year. At Tonquin and Obock we pay other companies to serve (?) us. Saint Louis, Dakar, Saigon, and Haiphong all have recourse to English wires. The system we own in our West Indian possessions depends on an English cable for communication with Europe.' This has been a great cable-laying age, and England has done the lion's share of the work; but surely there is nothing to hinder France from laying cables of her own, if she is persuaded that she would increase her security by doing so.'"

THE education of Iceland is entirely domestic. There is no public school in the country except a college in the capital. The laws and customs of the country merely require that the parents or guardians under the direction of the parish pastor shall teach the children reading, writing, and arithmetic.

BISHOP LIGHTFOOT ON THE CELTIC CHURCH.

By F. C. P.

The following extracts from the Durham sermons of Bishop Lightfoot will, I think, be interesting to all Banner readers, for they show how plainly that great and good man attributed the earliest evangelization of England to Celtic and not Romish influence. Though for many hundred years our Church was subject to the dominion of Rome, it is always our object to prove that we did not receive our religion from her but from our own Israel ancestors from Ireland, and that at the Reformation we were not rooting up the original Church of our land, but merely casting out the errors that Rome had engrafted upon our true Church of Israel.

Bishop Lightfoot himself tells us that the connection with Rome in the first instance did good because she supplied what the Celtic Church lacked—namely, unity and organization, and unity was of paramount importance in those days, also the great errors of the Romish Church, celibacy of the priests, confession, transubstantiation, indulgencies, and the immaculate conception of the Virgin (I put them in the order in which they arose) sprang up many hundreds of years later than the seventh century. The religion that Augustine brought to Kent only differed in a few forms and ceremonials from that which Columba and his successors preached in the North.

From the time that the Popes began to assume undue authority, and that errors crept into their teaching. English kings and people began to protest till their resistance culminated in the Reformation. Henry VIII.'s desire to divorce Catherine of Aragon and marry Anne Boleyn was the mere accident which set light to the fuel which had been long preparing. The following is from the first chapter of the late Bishop Lightfoot's book entitled, "Leaders in the Northern Church":—

"It was in the year 635—a little more than seventy years after Columba landed in Iona, just thirty years after the death of Augustine—that Aidan commenced his work . . . not Augustine, but Aidan is the true apostle of England. Before I pass away from this Celtic period—the most attractive and (in a spiritual aspect) the most splendid in the annals of our Church—and proceed to speak of the Roman submission, let me dwell for a moment on the two great facts which this history reveals. These are the success of the Celtic preachers and the independence of these Celtic missions. Of the triumphs of the Celtic evangelists something has been said already. If we desire to know the secret of their success it is soon told. It was the power of earnest, simple, self-denying lives, pleading with a force which no eloquence of words can command. But whatever may be the explanation, the fact remains. Iona succeeded where Rome had failed. . . . 'From the cloisters of Lindisfarne,' writes Montalembert, 'and from the heart of those districts in which the popularity of ascetic pontiffs, such as Aidan, and martyr kings, such as Oswald and Osirn, took day by day a deeper root, Northumbrian Christianity spread over the Southern kingdoms. What is distinctly visible is the influence of Celtic priests and missionaries everywhere replacing and seconding Roman missionaries and reaching districts which their predccessors had never been able to enter.'"

Again, at the close of the chapter, of which these are the opening words, he writes:—

"Of the eight kingdoms of the Anglo-Israel confederation, that of Kent alone was exclusively won and retained by the Roman monks, whose first attempts among the East Saxons and Northumbrians ended in failure. In Wessex and in East Anglia the Saxons of the West and the Angles of the East were converted by the combined action of continental missionaries and Celtic monks. As to the two Northumbrian kingdoms, and those of Essex and Mercia, which comprehended in themselves more than two-thirds of the territory occupied by the German conquerors, these four countries owed their final conversion exclusively to the peaceful invasion of the Celtic monks who not only rivalled the zeal of the Roman monks, but who, the first obstacle once surmounted, showed much more perseverance and gained much more success. . . . Augustine was the apostle of Kent, but Aidan was the apostle of England. . . . The independence of the Celtic missionary again is a patent fact, and stands out in strong contrast to later evangelistic movements in Western Europe. Rome neither initiated nor controlled these Celtic missions. The missionaries owed allegiance not to the Bishop of Rome, but to the Presbyter-Abbot of Iona. There is no evidence that they sought or accepted any authoritative directions from the Roman mission in the South of England. Their usages were different in many respects from the usages of Rome. When these came under discussion and it was a question between allegiance to Iona and allegiance to Rome, they unhesitatingly chose the former. . . . Roman direction is treated as absolutely valueless by them; Roman wishes are disregarded. Sooner than abandon the traditions and customs of Iona for those of Rome, they retire altogether from the field, leaving the rich fruit of their labours to others at the very moment when the harvest is full ripe. The Abbot of Iona—the successor of Columba—is their acknowledged ruler, the ruler even of bishops, though only a simple Presbyter, their superior in ecclesiastical office, though their inferior in spiritual functions. From him they receive their commission, though not their consecration, and to him they render their account. The Bishop of Rome is in no sense their master."

These are powerful words from a man like the late Bishop Lightfoot, and show clearly that Britain was not christianized by Rome. The wild olive (Rome) was simply graffed in among the true branches which still survived under the name of the Celtic Church.

"YOM KIPPUR."

By B. Hailes.

All Anglo-Israelites must have their attention occupied at present, more or less, in watching the movements of Russia, which we know from Ezek. xxxviii. and xxxix. is to be Israel's enemy in the last days, and the announcement that a Russian squadron is about to visit Toulon cannot fail to awaken thought and make the daily journals intensely interesting. What may be the outcome who shall say? or who knows what may be the spark which sooner or later shall set the continent of Europe ablaze?

But perhaps the chief interest at present centres in Russia's treatment of our brethren the Jews. What heart but must feel touched when reading of their sufferings and the fact that all those dwelling in Russia will be driven into the dreadful cities of the Pale by June next unless they can give some valid excuse for being allowed a longer time to effect their exodus, fills the mind with horror, and causes to rise to the lips the enquiry, "When will the House of Judah walk to the House of Israel, so that they may come together out of the land of the north to the land that God has given for an inheritance unto our fathers?" Perhaps already that question is being answered.

It is not for us to be dogmatic, but when we read Jer. iii. 21, "A voice was heard upon the high places, weeping and supplications of the children of Israel, for they have perverted their way, and they have forgotten the Lord their God"; and then turning to the daily paper we read how upon the 20th of this month of September was kept for the first time in England, if not in Europe, the "Yom Kippur," or Day of Atonement, when not less than five thousand Jews—mostly English, Polish, and Russian—collected at the Assembly Hall, Mile-end-road, to keep the great fast, smiting their breasts, wailing and swaying mournfully to and fro, we may ask, "Has the time already come when we, the children of Joseph, shall take the children of Judah by the hand and say, 'Verily in the Lord our God is the salvation of Israel'?"

To see the great hall densely packed by men and women for twenty-six hours, remaining the whole time devout and attentive listeners, must have been a moving sight, and to know that many of that vast congregation had walked from the horrors of their life in Russia to the hospitable shores of their brother Ephraim, should fill the heart of every Anglo-Israelite with praise, and more than ever cause us to cry, "Hear, Lord, the voice of Judah and bring him unto his people, and unto Thyself, Lord God of Israel, Jesus our Redeemer."

Review.

Our Race: Its Origin and Destiny. Third series. Nos. 9 and 10, June 21, 1893, and September 22, 1893. By Professor C. A. L. Totten, New Haven, Conn. 2s. 6d. per volume. R. Banks, 5, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

THESE are two of the three series of volumes issued by Professor Totten, Nos. 9 and 10, on the subject of "Our Race: its Origin and Destiny." No. 9 is a very useful and valuable contribution, and is described by the author as "The Answer of History" respecting our Israelitish origin. The volume is devoted to "the objections" raised by the best of our opponents to our views, and to a collection of the most successful answers which from time to time have appeared in the BANNER OF ISRAEL and other publications.

The attack commences (in Professor Totten's work) with Dr. Bickersteth's objections, answered by the late John Wilson. The Teutonic theory towards which Wilson unfortunately gave the support of his fine powers, brings out Totten's condemnation of that view, and the declaration which he makes on page 79, conclusive on the subject, that the necessity of the case demands the finding of "the Tribes, Ephraim's fellows, both to-day and always heretofore, in close bonds of dynastic union with him (Ephraim), so as to shut out the remotest possibility that the continental nations are the ones implied." "The modern relations between Ephraim and his fellows must be similar to—must counterpart—that which obtained in Palestine. There they were never separated, were always under one government, of which Ephraim was the distinctive head, and to which his own name was applied as generic. No such relation as this exists between Great Britain and the Continental nations! Rather the reverse: for Great Britain pre-eminently 'dwells alone,' and is not even numbered among them!" As a presentation of the case against the Teutonic theory, our own answer in chapter vi., "British-Israel Truth (A Handbook)" is quoted in extenso by the author of "Our Race." For this appreciation and for the other instances of his kindly notice of our literary efforts to serve this cause so dear to his and our hearts, we desire to offer Professor Totten our grateful thanks. The BANNER has received but scant recognition from the leaders of our current literature, whether inside or outside our ranks; and therefore, the encouragement given to us in our author's pages, is really valuable and sustaining. Next in order, on page 94, our author quotes the objections of Professor Rawlinson, M.A., to our views, and then gives us in full Mr. John Wilkinson's arguments, contra, in his well-known pamphlet, "The Ten Tribes: where they are not, and where are they?" The caustic remarks of the editor of "Our Race" on Mr. J. Wilkinson's treatise plainly show what he thinks of it. He condemns it in toto as "a travesty on argument" (page 136), "special pleading, sophistry, misrepresentation, and downright ignorance," &c. We have so much of Mr. J. Wilkinson on this side the water, that we are glad to see him meet with some deserved discipline from the American point of view! So much for the attack: now for the defence.

This is the burden of Part II. of "The Answer of History," under the heading, "The other side of the question." The writings of "Philo-Israel," the Rev. J. Idrisyn Jones, the late "David," Dr. W. H. Poole, the Rev. Archibald Alison, "Revertite," E. Reep, the Rev. Denis Hanan, D.D., the Rev. Eliezer Bassin, Mr. H. S. Icke, Mr. J. Carrick, of Exeter, Ont., Canada, the Rev. E. Tullidge, M.A., of the U.S., Mr. A. Henley, "F. C. P." (a BANNER writer), with some others, are quoted as part of the army of defence. The collection of writings on our side is very good, and amply shows that the defence was, according to Professor Totten, stronger than the attack, also victorious along the whole line. The publishing company of "Our Race" give us at the end of volume ix. a useful list of works on Our Identity, which they have made arrangement to supply to all enquirers on request.

We conclude with some extracts from Professor Totten's editorial remarks on pages 358 and 359, which seem pertinent to the case, and highly recommend the series to our readers' notice. The professor wrote as follows:—

"None of those who have followed the historical development of Identity literature, since the days of John Wilson, can have failed to notice the persistency with which the same old set of oft-defeated 'Objections' have been trumped up against each new effort to awaken Our Race to a realization of its Origin and Destiny in 'Israel.' These objections are by no means strong, nor is their name 'Legion'; quite the contrary, for in reality they are very few in number, and are generally such as arise from mere misinformation as to the facts adduced in rebuttal, and from a misappreciation of the subject-matter presented by the Identity itself.

"Of course some of them are born in the soil of prejudice, of wilful ignorance, and of malignant opposition, but from the attacks of all such the genuine searcher after truth is protected instinctively in that their very spirit raises at once a corresponding determination to investigate the matter for one's self. The chief difficulty experienced in dealing with these 'Objections' resides in the fact that they are found in every one's cartridge-box. They are all armed with the same weapons and fight with the same tactics, and it seems that for each one defeated, a dozen more, with ears that have not heard the battle, and eyes that will not see a predecessor's discomfiture, are ready to renew the almost hopeless controversy! But we must not lose heart nor leave the field; no weapon formed against 'Israel' shall prosper, no argument can fence us from our position. The Answer of History is unanswerable, and the Judge has charged the Jury to find a verdict for the affirmative.

"Few of our constituents can have failed to encounter many of these 'Stock' Objections to our Identity with Israel which are so constantly thrown at us by the enemy. It is therefore high time to point out that these attacks are harmless in so far as truth is concerned—mere 'shells' without 'charges'! They make a noise just because they are empty. Even the 'fuse hole' is not plugged, and so of course they 'shriek,' as soldiers say. But they should not cause an 'Israelite' even to dodge! They are lighter than vanity itself, for when the heart is truly armed, they simply fan the ears with harmless breezes, and die out before they strike. The arguments in rebuttal which we cite in the present Study are parts of the universal armour against all the darts our Objectors have. We ask our constituents to clothe themselves therewith and to go out and extend our lines!"

"THE subject is purely non-sectarian—we are all of Israel:—and it is grandly worthy of devout Anglo-Saxon study. If it be true, it is of GOD, and He will bring the increase; if it be false, then those who shall investigate it will still be on the Lord's side, for will He not show plainly why so false a guide is clothed with light and furnished with such bright credentials?"—Charles A. L. Totten, M.A., in "Our Race."

"IF HE GO THROUGH . . . HE TEARETH IN PIECES."

THE splendid achievement of Major Forbes' column from Fort Charter and Fort Victoria in its march towards Buluwayo, on October 27th, deserves a special notice at our hands. The advancing troops were those of the Chartered Company. No Imperial troops were with this body, which numbered, we suppose, only 450 Europeans or whites. It was Israel's little handful, "the remnant of Jacob," of Micah v. 8, who were then literally in the midst of the African nations or Gentiles, cut off from their fellow countrymen by enormous stretches of difficult country, and forced in a righteous quarrel with their powerful native neighbours the Matabele, to stand up for their lives, and conquer or die. But Israel resolved "to go through." They were on ground yielded to them by solemn compact with Lobengula, and he and his fighting men treacherously meant to fall upon the handful of God's people and destroy them. But they know not God's promises, or His power to defend His own people. The promise was clear. We find it in Micah v. 8, R.V., which we have referred to. It runs thus:—"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the nations, in the midst of many peoples, as a lion among the beasts of the forest, as a young lion among the flocks of sheep, who, if he go through, treadeth down and teareth in pieces, and there is none to deliver. Let thine hand be lifted up above thine adversaries, and let all thine enemies be cut off." In another Scripture we have the promise as to the vast disproportion of numbers against which Israel should usually fight her battles, and the aid which God engaged to give them. In Lev. xxvi. 7, 8, R.V., we read thus:—"Ye shall chase your enemies, and they shall fall before you by the sword. And five of you shall chase an hundred, and an hundred of you shall chase ten thousand, and your enemies shall fall before you by the sword." That is, that the enemy should be, compared to Israel, in the ratio of twenty to one, and even of 100 to one, but the result should be always the same. Israel shall triumph and destroy her foes, while the latter, shamefully defeated, shall fall by the sword before their enemies, the British-Israelites. How exactly all this was fulfilled in Matabeleland the following facts, taken from the field of battle near Buluwayo, and published in The Times of November 3rd, will clearly show.

In the first place Major Forbes set out from Forts Charter and Victoria to take the field against, and to meet Israel's enemies. He resolved "to go through," and destroy them and their power once for all. He did not go alone! He went backed by the power of God, which Solomon, in 1 Kings viii. 44, R.V., besought Him to give His people in just such circumstances as these; God heard the prayer, and now, as heretofore, has faithfully kept His word, and answered His people according to the petition of the king. "If Thy people go out to battle against their enemy, by whatsoever way Thou shalt send them, and they pray unto the Lord, toward the city which Thou has chosen, and toward the house which I have built for Thy name, then hear Thou in heaven their prayer and their supplication, and maintain their cause." The facts are given us in The Times. After describing the departure of the Charter and Victoria Forts contingents westward, the story is told us thus:—

After the columns had crossed the River Shangani, they entered a country infested with Matabele, and advanced with circumspection, burning several large military kraals which were found deserted. All the way bodies of Matabele were hovering about the flanks and front of the British, but there was no fighting beyond some desultory shooting. This went on for four days. At length, on the 31st (27th?) ult., the long-impending battle took place. An impi, whose strength is estimated at fully 5,000 men, attacked the British column while it was in laager. The time was well-chosen, so far as the British were concerned, for they were fully prepared and on the defensive. In the first great rush the Matabele swept past the line of pickets, and got well within range of the fire from the laager. Then the rush stopped. A deadly fire was poured into the midst of the thick ranks, and before they could make any impression at all on the laager the Matabele broke and fled to cover in the bush. Forthwith the mounted troopers were sent to clear them out, and the whole impi was soon in full flight. The stony nature of the ground prevented the cavalry from doing much execution, or from following up the pursuit with effect. Although the fighting did not last long, the losses of the Matabele were severe. Five hundred warriors killed or wounded were left on the field. The loss of the Chartered force was two killed—a white named Walters and a coloured man—and six wounded. Throughout the march and in the fighting all the men of the Chartered force behaved admirably. When the fight was over and the troopers had ascertained that the road was clear, the columns broke up the laager and moved on towards Buluwayo, which was thirty-five miles distant from the scene of the encounter.

The advance on Buluwayo followed, and after further conflicts, the Matabele, with their king, fled north-westward. Further news must tell us what the end of the matter has been. But what we learn already shows us that Israel, having resolved "to go through," went forth from their forts. They were in the midst of raging enemies, but they were in an impregnable position, defended by the promises of God, and nerved by the power of the Lord Himself. They were, to look at, "a feeble folk," as compared to their enemies, the 5,000 men of Lobengula. But having advanced to the fight, and stood up in the name of God, they trod their foes underfoot, they tore them in pieces with their Maxim guns and their rifle bullets; and there was none to deliver the Matabele from their vengeance! The British horsemen mowed down the armed savages, and God lifted up His people's hands above those of the disappointed Africans. The 450 whites withstood the 5,000 Matabele, and laid 500 (?) of them dead or wounded upon the field. It is not likely that the engagements we have heard of up to the present date (November 4th) will prove the last, for the Matabele impis will hardly lose all hope with the punishment they have already received; but we venture to anticipate that in the result God will give us the final victory, according to His promises to Israel. And to Him must be all the praise!

No. 5.

"Two nations only have left permanent impressions of their laws, civil polity, social arrangements, spirit and character, on the civilised communities of modern times—the Romans, and the handful of northern people from the countries beyond the Elbe which had never submitted to the Roman yoke, who issuing in small piratical bands from the fifth to the tenth century, under the name of Saxons, Danes, Northmen, plundered, conquered, and settled on every European coast from the White Sea (an inlet of the Arctic Ocean) to Sicily. Under whatever name, Goths, Visigoths, Franks, Anglo-Saxons, Danes, or Northmen, these tribes appear to have been all of one original stock—to have been one people in the spirit of their religion, laws, institutions, manners, and languages, only in different stages of civilisation. Wheresoever this people from beyond the pale and influence of the old Roman empire, and of the later church empire of Rome, either settled, mingled, or marauded, they have left permanent traces in society of their laws, institutions, character, and spirit. Pagan and barbarian as they were, they seem to have carried with them something more natural, something more suitable to the social wants of man, than the laws and institutions formed under the Roman power. The moral power of this people—the Anglo-Saxons and Northmen being essentially the same people—has left deeper impressions on society, and of a nobler character than the despotic material power of the Romans. It is in activity at the present hour in European society, introducing into every country more just ideas than those which grew up amidst the ruins of the Roman empire, of the social relations of the governing and the governed. ["Seeing that Abraham shall surely become a great and mighty nation, and all the nations of the earth shall be blessed in him."—Gen. xviii. 18.] The history of modern civilisation resolves itself, in reality, into the history of the moral influences of these two nations. All would have been Roman in Europe at this day in principle and social arrangement—Europe would have been, like Russia or Turkey, one vast den of slaves, if three boats from the north of the Elbe had not landed at Ebbsfleet in the Isle of Thanet 1,400 years ago, and been followed by a succession of similar boat expeditions of the same people, marauding, conquering, and settling, during six hundred years—viz., from 449 to 1066. All that men hope for of good government and future improvement . . . all that is or has been of value to man in modern times as a member of society, either in Europe or in the New World, may be traced to the spark left burning upon our shores by these northern barbarians.

"The race of men who under Odin established themselves in the countries north of the Baltic were undoubtedly of Asiatic origin. The date of this inundation may have been 400 years before or 400 years after the Christian era, or there may have been different Odins, or the name may have been generic and applied to all great conquerors. Sweden had a strong attraction for the warlike tribes from the interior of Asia who were pressing upon the population of Europe south of the Baltic. Sweden had iron and copper for arms and utensils close to the surface of the earth, and, from the richness of the ores, to be obtained by the simplest processes of smelting. This natural advantage must have made Sweden a rallying point for the Asiatic populations coming into Europe from the north of Asia, and from countries destitute of the useful metals in any abundant or easily obtained supply.

"An hereditary priesthood descended from the twelve diar, or priests, or godar, who accompanied Odin from Asia, were judges as well as priests. The only practices connected with religion mentioned in the sagas, at which a priesthood may have officiated, are sacrifices, at the three great festivals, of cattle, which were killed and feasted upon. The door-post, floor, and people are stated to have been sprinkled with the blood of the sacrifice by a brush. The material remains of the religion of Odin are surprisingly few. We find in the North very few remains of temples; no statues, emblems, images, symbols. Was it actually more spiritual than other systems of paganism, and therefore less material in its outward expression?

"Historians tell us that when Charlemagne, in the ninth century, saw the Northmen cruising at a distance in the Mediterranean, he turned away from the window and burst into tears. Was it the barbarism of these pirates, or their civilisation, their comparative superiority in the art of navigation, and of all belonging to it, that moved him? None of the countries under his sway, none of the Christian populations of Europe in the seventh, eighth, or ninth centuries, had ships and men capable of such a voyage. We may fairly doubt of their gross ignorance and want of civilisation in their pagan state when we find they had a literature of their own, and laws and institutions, and social arrangements, and were in advance of all the Christian nations in one branch at least of the useful arts—the building, fitting out, and navigating large vessels."—Introduction to the "Heimskringla or the Sagas of the Norse Kings." FRENCH AND ENGLISH FEELINGS.

By Rev. W. McNaughton, B.A.

A perusal of some of the leading journals of English life and thought like The Spectator very often reveals some very interesting bits, seemingly hidden away in some unlooked for corner, that go a long way to confirm, in a remarkable manner, the rote of British-Israel in the mundane affairs of the world. For instance, in a very concise and terse form of expression the editor of The Spectator, of date Oct. 7, 1893, in dealing with the now historic visit of M. Zola to our great Imperial city of London (regarding which the latter expressed himself not only pleased with, but much instructed by his visit to this city, where his mind seems to have become happily disabused of preconceived prejudices against England), says :—

"In a word, M. Zola was positive that we liked France, and equally positive that France hated us. It is a curious situation, and produces a new phase of what is perhaps the most curious problem in the politics of the world,—the problem of national animosities. Why should the French hate us, while we do not hate but rather like them? There are many reasons; but the chief is, we expect, that the French in almost every quarter of the globe fancy themselves what the man in the street calls "bested" by us—i.e., not actually swindled, but still got the better of in a way which suggests to them oppressive dealing, and gives an excuse for soreness. The French feel that they had a great career before them in America and in India, and yet somehow we, and not they, rule at Madras and in Quebec. It is the same in the Pacific, and in Africa; and in Egypt the feeling is especially acute, for there the ousting only took place yesterday. It is no good to say that it was either the fate of war, or else the direct fault of the French, that they did not do better. They care nothing for that, but only feel the rankling fact that it is we, not they, who are in possession. Nor is this all; in neutral countries, the trade is always slipping away from French into English hands, and this in spite of the fact that the French often start under specially favourable conditions and enjoy Government help."

The above excellent paragraph most decidedly reveals the characteristics of Jacob as "a supplanter," and the forcible influence of his descendants as a "pushing horn to the ends of the earth."

Viewed through the mind of the editor of this very influential journal, this species of "blind evidence" shows up British-Israel's position, success, and power.

A FIFTH OF NOVEMBER SERMON.

By G. Vicars Brown.

Through the kindness of the Rev. H. J. Perkins, pastor of the Clifton Congregational Church, Asylum-road, Peckham S.E., I am enabled to give to Banner readers his notes of an admirable sermon—"National Deliverences"—preached at the above church on the morning of Sunday, November 5th, in response to a request of the London Protestant Alliance. His text was taken from Psa. xxxiii. 12: "Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord, and the people whom He hath chosen for His own inheritance." All bracketed references, and all italics in the following are my own.

The providence of God is seen in the histories of nations, quite as much as in the lives of individuals. If it is true of us as individuals that it is quite as true that God shapes the destinies of nations and overrules them all (see Deut. xxxii. 8).

> "There's a Divinity that shapes our ends, > Rough hew them how we will,"

This is one of the great lessons of the Old Testament. In the historical books, as well as in most of the Prophets, one of the great lessons God seeks to teach us is this: that nations as well as individuals are under His righteous moral government; that for a nation to do well is to prosper, and that to do ill is to suffer; that communities which perpetuate crimes against God suffer just as surely as does the individual, whilst righteousness will always "exalt a nation" (cf. Prov. xiv. 34 with Isa. xxvi. 1, 2). But more than this is true. God has His own gracious plans and purposes in connection with nations, just as He has with individuals, and is ever seeking to carry them out (Jer. xxx. 24, read also the whole of chap. xxxi.).

God singles out nations, calls them into being, watches over their development, and makes them the recipients of His bounties and favours—not for their own sakes only, but that they may become His channels of blessing to others (Isa. xix. 23—25). God did so with His ancient people Israel. He called them out of Egypt, led them into their own land, drove out before them the nations whose cup of iniquity was full to overflowing, and gave to them the knowledge of His will and the revelations of Himself that are blessing the world to this day, and which will continue to bless it to the very end of time—all that they might be His medium of blessing to others (Isa. xxvii. 6; chap. xliii. 10).

What God did for the Jews of old He has done for England, as well as for other nations. When we remember what Britain was when Christ died on Calvary, and what it is to-day, we feel that what Moses said to Israel of old is equally true of ourselves: "The Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto Himself, above all the people that are upon the face of the earth; yet the Lord did not set His love upon you, nor choose you, because ye were more in number than any people; for ye were the fewest of all the people; but because the Lord loved you" (see Deut. vii. 7). They were His by free sovereign choice, and because He wanted them to become His channel of blessing to the world. So, in later ages, God chose our nation, and set His love upon us, and singled us out, that He might make of us a great nation, and use us for His glory. (Refer to comments on Jer. xxx., ver. 18 to end.)

When we were at school we were all taught the facts of English history, but we were not taught to trace the hand of God in it. We were not taught to trace the hand of God in all the changes, crises, and developments of our national life; yet there was not an event that God did not overrule for good, not a defeat that He did not make a stepping-stone to greater things, not a seeming curse that He did not change into a blessing. This is seen in the influences of the Romans, the Anglo-Saxons, the Danes, and the Normans, upon our national life and character. Each of these crises and conquests was made a stepping-stone to the present-day greatness and influence of England. But we are chiefly concerned, at present, with the way in which God has used us as a nation for the spread of His kingdom and glory (Matt. xxi. 43).

The great event to which we naturally turn is that of the Reformation. For centuries the Romish Church had been the dominant power in England, but better days were in store. God raised up men like Wycliffe and Tyndale, who translated and circulated the Scriptures. The art of printing was discovered, and was used to spread the Scriptures far and wide. At the same time the great work of the Reformation, begun in Germany, had made its influence felt in England, so that in 1534 England broke away from the allegiance to the Church of Rome. Since that day more than 350 years have passed, but during the whole of that time the Romish Church has never ceased to insist upon her claim to the allegiance of England, and has never ceased to pray for it, work for it, and plot for it (see Isa. xiv. 13, and Rev. ii. 12, 13). Some of her methods have been foul and base—as, for example, the Spanish Armada, with all the instruments of torture on board, with which to crush out the religious liberties of the people. But God interposed in a marvellous way to save England from so terrible a fate as that, and to preserve her for the carrying out of His own gracious purposes.

There are two events of which we are specially reminded to-day, in both of which we see the hand of God, and gratefully recognise that it was because He, in His Providence, was watching over the life and liberties of the nation, that they resulted as they did.

The former of the two events—and the lesser in importance—was the discovery of the base attempt, made by bigoted and infatuated Catholics, to destroy the king and his counsellors, in the year 1605, by what is known as the gunpowder plot. What the result would have been, had the plot been successful, no one can say; but it was a wicked and dastardly attempt to terrorize the nation, and a wicked outrage upon the freedom of a free people, which was averted by "the good hand of our God upon us" (Isa. xli. 11, and chap. liv. 17).

The other event commemorated to-day—and one which proved of far greater importance—is the landing of the Prince of Orange, in the year 1688. One does not need to know much about James II. to know that he was a weak, unprincipled monarch, who, in open violation of all his oaths and promises, endeavoured to betray his country into the hands of the Church of Rome. But so strong was the dread of that Church in the minds of the English people, and so strong was their attachment to Protestant principles, that all these efforts on the part of the king only served to alienate their affections and destroy their confidence in him. To such an extent was this the case that when William of Orange landed at Torbay, and marched to London, the revolution was accomplished with scarcely the lifting of a sword or the shedding of a drop of blood. He was everywhere hailed as a God-sent deliverer, whilst the wretched king, deserted and forsaken by all his subjects, made good his escape from the land.

Who does not see in all this "the good hand of our God upon us"? And as we do so we exclaim in the words of our text, "Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord, and the people whom He hath chosen for His own inheritance!" But why is it that as Englishmen we have such a dread of Romanism and of its power? The answer is a two-fold one:—

1—Because "Rome Rule" means the loss of liberty, both political and religious.

2—Because the doctrines and teachings of the Romish Church are opposed to the pure and simple Gospel of Jesus Christ.

Love of liberty is as natural to man as to breathe. He feels that God made him to be free and to breathe the air of freedom. So strong is his love of liberty that he will fight for it, if it be denied him, till death. Says Emerson—

> "For He that worketh high and wise,
> Nor pauses in His plan,
> Will take the sun out of the skies
> Ere freedom out of man."

But the whole spirit and genius of Romanism is opposed to the enjoyment of this God-given freedom. (How different from Israel's duties set forth in Isa. xlix. 9!) It lays claim to temporal as well as spiritual sovereignty; it claims the right to be above kings and parliaments, and to override the representatives of the people in all matters of government and religion alike. If you want to know the influence of Romanism upon nations over whom it has been supreme, read the histories of such nations as France, Italy, Spain, and Portugal. Look even at Ireland! and what an object lesson it affords us! Ireland's bondage to Rome has been her greatest curse, and not till the power of the priest is broken will she enter upon a career of prosperity. The difference between Catholic Ireland and Protestant Ireland is as great as the difference between darkness and light, and where Romanism is strongest the darkness is thickest. As Englishmen, we can never forget such spots as Smithfield; we can never forget the rack and the thumbscrew, the wheel and the burning irons; nor do we forget that the spirit of the Romish Church is the same still. It is her boast that she is "always the same," and if she does not persecute to-day it is only because she dare not. As for many of her doctrines, we believe that they are most unscriptural, and opposed to the pure and simple Gospel of Christ Jesus—e.g., her doctrine of Purgatory, her worship of the Virgin Mary, the sacrifice of the Mass, the way in which she treats the Bible, and her teaching respecting the priest and his power.

So we think it well to look back sometimes, that we may see what God has done for us as a nation, and to be reminded of our present-day responsibilities and obligations. Whilst we thank God for the past, let us trust Him for the future, and ever seek to keep our national life pure and good, remembering that "The Lord of Hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge."

Such were the notes of his sermon, which Mr. Perkins very kindly wrote out, at my special request, for the BANNER OF ISRAEL. Though they need but little comment, I wish to make a few remarks on one or two portions of the sermon. From the paragraph which I have italicised in full it is evident that Mr. Perkins is not an Anglo-Israelite. How simple and logical it would have been to have connected that paragraph with the preceding one, and to have proclaimed "Israel of old" and "our nation" to be one and the same. One could not help observing how in every special address given on Nov. 5th, almost every preacher used texts portraying Israel blessed, as the best means of describing England's greatness at the present time.

The words of Jeremiah contained in chap. xxx. 18 to the end, form one of the most splendid revelations in the whole of his book of prophecies, and would of themselves be a sufficient reason for connecting the two above-mentioned paragraphs with the link "Israel-Britain." Even the authors of the chapter-headings (A.V.) have admitted that the whole of the chapter in question refers to literal Israel! What else could they do in the face of verses 3 and 4? Let us compare the words of the sermon with those of Jeremiah.

"So in later ages	". . . in the latter days ye shall consider it" (verse 24).
God chose our nation, and set His love upon us, and singled us out,	"Behold, I will bring again the captivity of Jacob's tents (verse 18). . . and their congregation shall be established before Me, and I will punish all that oppress them (verse 20).
that He might make of us a great nation, and use us for His glory."	. . . I will multiply them. . . . I will also glorify them [i.e., that His glory may be made manifest] (verse 19). . . And ye shall be My people, and I will be your God" (verse 22).

One might also notice that in verse 21 the original custom of our Anglo-Saxon forefathers in choosing their king by national (or tribal) approbation, is prophecied. Compare the choosing of Saul (1 Sam. x. 24) with that of Harold and William the Conqueror. Thus, as all are constrained to admit the fulfilment of Israel's promised blessings in our English nation, we, for the honour of Jehovah, must be Israel.

THE GREAT CHARTER.

By James Rankin, F.R.A.S.

The Hebrew text of Deut. xxxiii. 13, and four following verses, in which the then future greatness of the tribe of Joseph was foretold, indicates among other things that they would be engaged in the smelting and forging of iron; for, according to Parkhurst, the Hebrew word metal, translated "dew" in the A.V., has not that meaning in Arabic, but signifies, according to Johnson's Arabic Lexicon, melting, casting, forging, or hammering iron; and from it is derived, according to Parkhurst, metal, metallic, metalline, in Greek, Latin, and English.

There is, however, no record, either in the Bible or Josephus, that iron had been smelted during the residence of the Hebrews in Palestine; on the contrary, it is stated in 1st Samuel that there was no smith in Israel in the reign of Saul. The prophecy, therefore, would obviously point to a future still more remote, when the manufacture of iron would become their chief industry, distinguishing them from the nations of the earth. As such an industry distinguishes the Anglo-Saxons of to-day, it is conclusive that they and the Hebrews are the same people, it being the outward mark by which others see them. In proof of this take the report of the Japanese ambassadors to their Government after their first visit to England, which they summed up in the words—"These barbarians are great workers in iron."

There is another substance mentioned in the 19th verse of the same chapter (Deut. xxxiii.) named "chol," translated "sand," but the primary meaning of the word is, to excavate, to bring forth, and may be the origin of the English word "coal." The substance was to be found in the territory of Zebulon and Issachar. In the 19th verse it was also predicted that they would be called mountaineers, or the peoples of the mountain. The Hebrew words, as they appear in Walton's Polyglot Bible, were obviously to become the national name. Kumim-hari or Kemim-hari, are obviously the Kimmerii, and Kimbri of the Greeks and Romans, and the Kumri of the Welsh. The Hebrew verb Yakerau follows Kumim-hari in the original, and is translated, "They shall be called," in fifteen different passages in the A.V., which can be referred to in any concordance of the Bible. The K sound of the Hebrew Ghine, the initial letter beginning the word "peoples," is preserved in the name Jacob, which is pronounced Ya*k*-kob by the Bombay Jews, and Ya*k*-ub by the Arabs.

Parkhurst has some wonderful thoughts on two of the words, "samin" and "regel," made use of by Moses in the blessing of Asher. "Samin," translated "oil" in the A.V. He says of this word that it is spelled "saminit" in the titles of Psalms vi. and xii., and refers to the Man Christ Jesus, "the Anointed One." "Samin" is rendered "mashacha" in the Syriac, and "mashach" in the Samaritan version. "Mashach," translated "anointed," is applied by our Lord to Himself in Isa. lxi. 1, and Luke iv. 18, to designate His Messianic office.

Again, of the word "regelu," translated "his foot," mention is made of watering the land of Egypt with the foot; but the meaning (according to Parkhurst) is an hydraulic machine worked by the feet. Accordingly, we may thus paraphrase the 24th and 25th verses, relating to "Asher, let him be acceptable to his brethren, and be dipt (baptised) in the Anointed One, (having) hydraulic machines of iron and brass stopping the flowing waters or seas."

At no period during the thirty-four centuries that have intervened between the time of Moses and the first quarter of the present century, could his words, as thus understood, be applied to the people of Israel. They were to be Christians, baptized in the Anointed One, and were to be workers in metal, iron, and brass, making use of water-power (steam ?) for driving machinery used in mining and pumping, and possibly in ships.

Guided by the marks outlined in Deut. xxxiii., it may be inferred that Joseph and Asher are located in the iron country—that is, in the Midland counties and Clydesdale; Issachar, in Cornwall, Wales, Cumberland, the mining districts to the North, and the Highlands, as the name implies; Zebulon and Naphtali, in the havens of ships on the South and West coasts, and in Ulster; Dan, on the East coast and in Leinster; Reuben and Simeon, in Munster and Connaught; Gad appears to be largely represented in the aristocracy, the governing classes, and those that follow the science of jurisprudence; Benjamin has been recognised in the Normans, but it is difficult to fix their location apart from Levi, on account of the words of the 12th verse, "The beloved of the Lord shall dwell in safety by him." Both are probably located along the valley of the Thames; nor is it possible to escape from the conclusion that a vast number of the tribe of Judah are settled in Middlesex, who now exercise that regal controlling power over the world's affairs that only belonged to Judah.

The Anglo-Israel Almanack and Diary for 1894 is now ready. Full particulars given in enclosed advertisement.

REPLY TO A CORRESPONDENT.

Our American fellow-worker, Dr. A. K. B., who encloses an appeal to the kings and rulers of the earth, not forgetting the Pope of Rome, to mend their ways, and so escape from the destruction to come, must excuse us if we state our inabilty to publish his well-meaning address to them. The Banner of Israel is not intended for the rulers of the earth so much as for the people of Israel assembled in these isles. We want them to see who they are and whence derived. But our function as a journalist is not to call upon the non-Israelite Gentile kings and governors to repent and be saved, in order to escape the destruction that is ready to devour them. There are organizations in existence which are able and willing to proclaim the Gospel to the nations and their rulers; but it hardly falls within our duty, while endeavouring to prove to the world that the British are lost Israel, to undertake also the work of an evangelist to the kings and sovereigns of the Gentile nations. The "appeal," however, is an admirable one; but its publication in the Banner of Israel would not bring it before the eyes of the Pope of Rome, or of the other rulers of Christendom whose interest in British Identity with Lost Israel must be of the slenderest description.

EXTRACT FROM A SERMON.

By the Late Rev. P. J. F. Ewing.

(Presbyterian Minister of Toorak, the fashionable suburb of Melbourne).

"To the Anglo-Saxon race of the later times has been committed the function of advancing material civilization over the world, and of amassing wealth. I believe that this function has been committed to our race by God, because to me any philosophy of history which ignores the Divine purpose is unintelligible. In that astonishing material progress of the last forty or fifty years, your city and State have eclipsed, in point of rapidity, any other part of the Empire. Melbourne has become the symbol on English lips of wealth rapidly acquired, and, to some extent at least, nobly expended. We must not, however, forget two things, my friends. We must not forget that in the acquiring and possession of wealth there lurk dangers and temptations. It is hard for a rich state or city to enter into the kingdom of God. And we must not forget that high as is the function assigned to the Anglo-Saxon race in the world's material progress, a function yet higher has been granted it. The Anglo-Saxons are, to a large extent, the chosen people of this later epoch. While the eyes of other nations have been more or less holden that they cannot see spiritual truth, to us still have been given the prophet's eye to discern these hidden realities, and the prophet's tongue to proclaim them."

BRITISH-ISRAEL ILLUSTRATED.

Forwarded by A. Lewis, Hon. Secretary, Cardiff.

Under the auspices of the Cardiff British-Israel Association, Colonel Senior, of Clifton, delivered a lecture at St. John's Hall, St. John's-square, Cardiff (kindly lent by Solomon Andrews, Esq.), on Wednesday, October 4th, the lecture being entitled, "Lost Israel Found." There was a crowded room, notwithstanding that it rained in torrents nearly the whole of the day.

The lecture was illustrated with limelight dissolving views, showing the "Gates of our enemies," and as they were thrown rapidly, one after the other, upon the sheet, an idea of Israel's greatness could be realized in a thoroughly practical manner. This mode of procedure is better and more powerful than any speech could be. The places being, so to speak, brought to our doors, our eyes beheld them. The Colonel also had views showing the people in some of the places; how they appeared when we found them, and how they are now, the change of the people from the one view showing barbarity, to the other with civilisation depicted on them produced by Christianity, caused a sensation. It would be well if more of these plates were obtained in order that the public might see that we are the nation bringing forth the fruits of the kingdom of God. Could but a majority of our countrymen see the matter in our light, would not these islands ring with joy, and more energy and liberality be shown in doing the work allotted to us? These views will most assuredly help on the work by influencing many to believe in Our Identity.

In this essentially practical age Colonel Senior has provided by his dissolving views "that which meets the times." Therefore his labour in producing them will surely be well rewarded in the future. A hearty vote of thanks was given to the lecturer.

The Cardiff Association propose to hold a series of these lectures during the coming winter, and several prominent exponents of Identity principles are expected to attend. The light is certainly spreading in Cardiff.

Total, £37 13s. 4d.

J. Lawrence, Hon. Treasurer.

Miss E. M. Rush has also received 5s. from M. C. F. (post mark Hanley), stated to be "for fund for British-Israel Association." This has been forwarded to the Secretary of that Association, 86, St. Martin's-lane, London, and a receipt for the amount has come to hand.

Old Banners of Israel, &c.—Friends having back numbers of the Banner of Israel and other good literature of the sort to give away, are requested to communicate with the Hon. Secretary, who will give names and addresses of Sowers who are able to distribute such to advantage. Banners that are several years old, or not in good condition, it is hardly worth while to send. In all cases we would ask friends to be kind enough to fully pay carriage, as these parcels would go to Sowers who have not the means to defray any extra expense connected with them.

Banner of Israel and Literature Distribution.—The full number of Banners are again being sent out, in all 220 weekly. These and 80 packets of Literature have been despatched to the following places:—England: Aldershot,

SOWING THE SEED.

Our first desire, in preparing the report for the last month, is to give thanks. It will be remembered that a special request appeared in the BANNER OF ISRAEL for help, in money, to enable the free distribution to be continued. The God of Israel has worked for us, putting into the hearts of many of His servants the inclination to give aid, and enabling them to do so. To Him, therefore, let us give heartfelt, grateful thanks. Our friends who responded to the Divine influence have worked, according to the will of the Lord, with Him (1 Cor. iii. 9), and their earnest desire to help, and pleasure in doing so, has been abundantly shown by many a good and kind word accompanying their gifts. So we who distribute the ANGLO-ISRAEL FREE DISTRIBUTION FUND, and have received that which has been thus willingly contributed, desire to thank one and all at this time. Not everyone has furnished name and address. We are deeply grateful to those who have so confidently put their trust in us, not giving us even the opportunity of sending a receipt, as usual, which we would always gladly do.

By reference to the Treasurer's report, everyone will see that we have had sufficient to start again with ease the full complement of BANNERS, and we can but hope that the check which had to be given to the issue has not been entirely without an element of good, just as not seldom we realise more truly the value of what we do really care for, when we suffer deprivation. But on the other hand, there is no doubt that the expressions of real appreciation of the BANNER OF ISRAEL that have reached us from certain correspondents point directly and truly to its value and helpfulness. That there will be further response to the plea for our needs from friends farther afield who have not subscribed this year, and whose action could not take effect so quickly, we look for with hope, in due time, and also from those who could not now give, but who would had it been possible. We would not wish for an instant to appear discontented, nor unsatisfied. For the present we are amply provided, but the months run by, and it is the disbursing hand that realises that each one of those passing months draws steadily from our money-bag, and the bankers who take charge for us have no invested monies for our account, as we have often longed for. It may be that our faith still needs the stimulus of looking upward continually to the Lord of all. And so, when "the rainy days come, as come we sadly feel they must to many during this winter, we doubtless shall again be grateful for aid, as a little exercise of thought shews us that continuous work can only be kept going by a continuous supply of just that which, by the blessing of God, sets the machine in motion.

The number of Literature parcels sent out give a fair idea of the increasing number of people who will have the fact of Our Identity with Israel put before them. Doubtless some will accept the good news, realising the blessing of it, and many will hear of our Hebrew origin, and will await the vital spark that alone kindles the flame of enthusiasm, and renders thanks to our Almighty Father, who has called and reserved us to work for Him, to be His "witnesses" throughout the world. How needful is it that all of us who have been shewn the great truth of the revelation of Israel should pray that the light of the Holy Spirit may quickly illumine all hearts and minds to which this truth has been and shall be presented! We push on slowly, perhaps, in comparison with many big undertakings before the world, but surely. A close watcher of our reports will notice how the creeping, incoming tide reaches another and another spot, and will note the use of giving the monthly list of places supplied with BANNERS and other literature, as our Sowers and others who may move to some fresh town or village, will look to see if there be any conscious Israelites already leavening their new district. And sometimes, when consent has been gained, we are able to introduce to each other those who may gladly prove themselves harmonious fellow-workers.

An English Sower and subscriber shews his activity and zeal in a letter lately received: "I send you these few lines to let you know I have changed my residence, and am very thankful that the Lord of Israel opened many of the people's eyes at —— to see Our Identity. I have left a lot of books scattered about the village and in the reading-room, and as I am only about two miles from them I shall be often there to speak. I cannot say if you will have any subscription from these people, as they are very poor. I spoke to some of the young men about it, and told them if they write to you, you would lend them books." This, of course, we will gladly do. Our correspondent goes on to say: "I had a long talk with the minister. He did not oppose it (i.e., the claim that we are Israel). Said he had not studied it, but had many friends, clergymen, who believed in it. I lent him the 'Fifty Reasons' and 'Nineteen Centuries Ago and Now.' I have not seen him since, but hope to soon, and if I can, will get him to take the 'Handbook' and some BANNERS. I am glad to see there has been a parcel sent to ——, as I have spoken to some people there, and being now close to that place I shall scatter the seed all I can. I believe the Lord is opening the people's minds and eyes for some great change coming. I scarcely speak to one about it, but they say, 'Oh yes! I believe there is something in it,' or, 'Why! that is what our Church teaches.'" Truly indeed our Church of England teaches in her Book of Common Prayer that we are the Lord's people and "the sheep of His pasture."

And now we turn to a spot far away in the United States, where a comparatively new and a very earnest Sower has received the light concerning Israel with joy, and is reaching out to those near and far off to tell the good news of the visible evidence of Divine love and faithfulness by the revelation of Israel, which lifts up many a heart in the midst of hard work and in troublous times, when man finds it only too easy to forget God, and deny the Lord who redeemed us. Here is a glimpse of what is going on. She writes: "I met a lady this summer who is a thorough student, highly cultivated, and president of a large literary club in her own city, near the Pacific, almost a thousand miles from here, and who had never seen any of the Anglo-Israel literature, and knew nothing of the theory. She was very much interested, and eagerly read all I lent and gave her, and said she would try to interest her reading club, and would take a catalogue of English and American books on the subject. Another, whose home is about forty miles from here, took some of the tracts and a catalogue of books, and said she would send for some for winter reading, and get her friends and neighbours interested by forming circles for study." And our Sower continues: "I received a letter from a friend to whom I sent some BANNERS. I will enclose the letter, feeling sure you will be pleased to know of one who feels so thoroughly the advantage of knowing she belongs to the ancient people of God." And the letter proves to be written in pencil, by one recovering from an illness, and delighting to have her Bible at hand and papers around her on her bed, and she exclaims, "Oh how grand a thing it is to be an Israelite, and know it; the light of that knowledge illumines every page of the Bible, opening the hidden things thereof, and making its secrets plain."

With these words before us, let no one jump to any hasty conclusion, and misjudge the writer's appreciation of Christian truth, but remember that the Gospel of salvation has been given to us simply and plainly so that all may read it and understand, and has been preached for nigh two thousand years, and there are many who scorn and reject it and our Saviour to-day, crying for evidence of the truth of the Divine Word. Shall we not then rejoice with great thankfulness that, through Divine love and power, magnificent, positive evidence is put into our hands, wherewith to prove that the great God Almighty reigneth, and that our loving Saviour desires to draw all men unto Himself. Let us, each one, work with renewed effort, remembering these things.

Nov. 18th, 1893.

A Word to Sowers.—Sowers will kindly gain as many new readers as possible for the extra Banners sent to them, for which a special donation has been received since closing the report. The Anglo-Israel Almanac is late in printing. Copies will be sent (D.V.) to Sowers abroad with little further delay when they come to hand.

Contributions to the Anglo-Israel Free Distribution Fund will be gratefully received by the Hon. Treasurer, Miss Lawrence, Rosslyn, Hampton-road, Upper Teddington; and by the Hon. Sec., Miss E. M. Rush, 4, Westgate-road, Westgate-on-Sea.

ISRAEL'S SCRIPTURE AND PRAYER UNION.

Since last report four more members have been added, making a total of 1,478. Three members have already renewed their membership for 1894.

The New Cards, for 1894, are ready. It is a very good time for Identity believers to join our Union who have not already done so.

One member says: "I feel glad the numbers are increasing, though slowly, but it may be surely."

The Card of Membership has a list of chapters for the whole year, also suggestions for reading, prayers, etc. It is of a size convenient for keeping in the Bible, and will be sent on receipt of 6 stamps.

The first and second series of Monthly Comments on the whole Bible, by Philo-Israel, may be obtained. Price, in paper cover, 1s. 2d. each; in cloth 2s. each, post free.

The "Prayers for Daily Use," being a prayer for each day of the week, by Philo-Israel, are 1d., or 9d. per doz., postage extra. Address — The Secretary, Israel's Scripture and Prayer Union, British-Israel Association, 86, St. Martin's-lane, London, W.C.

Review.

Israel's World. Origin and Destiny of the British Race, Colonies, and Empire. By the Rev. H. Roe. Fourth Edition. Price 2d., post free 2½d. R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

We are glad to greet the Rev. H. Roe's useful little work in its fourth edition. It is much improved since we last saw it. It is printed on better paper, and in clearer type. There are increased references to Scripture, bearing on our British Identity with lost Israel (see p. 7), and a new preface has been written for the last or fourth edition. It seems our Scotch and Welsh Israelites objected to the use by Mr. Roe, in his previous editions, of such words as "Anglo-Israel," "England," and "the English." He has, in the present edition, eschewed all these terms, and substituted for them the word "British," which includes them all. He hopes thereby to conciliate his ministerial friends in Scotland and Wales, who at present will have little or nothing to do with his book. We have often before quoted Mr. Roe's work, and commented on its excellencies. We still consider his effort a remarkable one, well suited for circulation and distribution to the ends of the earth. The tract has had a large circulation already, and we hope it may still be distributed far and wide. It is calculated to penetrate and persuade where larger and more pretentious works will fail to gain an entry. Mr. Roe thoroughly appreciates the subject of the British Gates, and asks if Israel ever, in the Bible times, possessed the Gates of their enemies, who were the Egyptians, Assyrians, Babylonians, and Romans, chiefly. The answer of course is, "Never!" but those enemies possessed Israel's Gates, and worked their ruin by means of them. He shows, then, that the British possess the Gates of their enemies all over the world, while no other nation under the sun does the same. He tells us the possession of the Gates saves us the expense of six millions of soldiers. "That is, we could not keep so many and so rich possessions spread over nearly all the earth, without an army of 6,000,000 of men, if we did not possess such wonderful places of strategy, or 'Gates of our enemies.'" We again recommend Mr. Roe's little essay to the reading public, and hope our Free Distribution Fund will take it up, and send it to the ends of the earth in hundreds. Mr. Roe would like to dispose of the work by hundreds at a time. The price at which he can let his friends have it can be learnt, by application, of the Rev. H. Roe, Radstock, near Bath.

A WORKING-MAN'S OUTLOOK.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

Dear Philo-Israel,—Probably the readers of the Banner of Israel will like to see the following extracts from a letter received from an intelligent and thoughtful working-man living in the Midlands, who has constant opportunity for meeting many men of his own class in various places. These extracts were sent to one of our leading statesmen, with an earnest plea for their due consideration, and with a request for information as to the correctness of the assertion, referred to in the letter, that there is so much unclaimed money lying unappropriated, and also asking if it would be possible for this money to be utilised in the way suggested, could an Act of Parliament be passed for that purpose. The letter was acknowledged, with courtesy of course, but no information was given. It seems good, however, for the matter to be ventilated, so I hope you will put it before our British-Israel public; it is possible that it may meet the eyes of some who can make a move, so greatly needed, for the benefit of the many poverty-stricken men and women and helpless children amongst our teeming population The great Coal Strike, for the present, is happily over, but it leaves behind it the marks of its devastating trail—weakened bodies, saddened hearts, long scores of debt heavily handicapping the impoverished people. At the same time, nothing is attempted for the removal of the cause of the difficulties which must recur again and again, and prove the constant foundation of troubles affecting all trades, and the well-being of the whole country. God grant we may all be willing to learn the lessons He would teach His people through the trials that afflict us.

Yours truly,

E. M. Rush.

[A very few minor verbal alterations have been made, and a few words added here and there merely to clear the sense.]

"This strike is not altogether understood by the mass of our people. It arises from two causes: the first is over-production—this was the cause of 'short time' at most pits; the second is owing to the master's contracting at low prices, cutting each other down, and so they ask the men to take lower wages. This strike fully shows up what is Trade Unionism, which is directed (in effect) against our own people, and directly opposite to Free Trade. This is ruining our country to-day, and the workers, in robbing them of their work, and so taking the bread from the wives and children; as all that is spent in the purchase of foreign goods, without the power to sell in the importing market, robs our workers of their work. I am rather at a difference with some of our Anglo-Israel writers, as to the way they put it, to have our ports open day and night. This could be applied better, and, to my way of thinking, bear the same construction, and still be 'sucking the riches of the Gentiles.' With Protection we are doing that with a vengeance, seeing that the income on the loans brings to the coffers of the lenders about £100,000,000.* Were this not (i.e., 'sucking the riches of the Gentiles') in great measure, we could not, at the present crisis, keep to Free Trade as we are doing, as it gives a great spending power to our monied class, so reacting to the good of our masses. Just in imagination blot this out, say for two years, and think what would be the effect upon our toilers.

"I now turn to another side of the present subject—i.e., the condition of the people. What are we to do with our ever-increasing masses? This is only to be met, I believe, by a system of State-aided and State-supervised emigration. If you could bring out a leaflet, and show our heritage over the sea to our people, and the method of taking it up, it would bring out Our Identity with Israel in a strong and new light; the people would grasp it, I believe, as the hungry and out-of-employment man would and could grasp what it would mean. Emigration without State aid would only mean making the workers in our colonies poorer by cheaper labour going there. This I have seen, so I can speak by my own experience. The people want putting on the land, and not exactly a free gift of land, but spread the cost of this, and of assisting each one, over 20 years, at about 2½ per cent. interest.

"Now, where can the State get the money from? It is reported that £50,000,000* are lying unclaimed in the Bank. A short Act of Parliament could be passed, (i.e., to enable it to be made use of), and the after claim to any monies could be so secured that anyone could get their money on a just claim. This would give funds, to enable districts needing help, to assist cases of distress during the coming winter.

"I am sure the place is too small for our increasing masses, and in this I am enabled, I believe, to see the hand, so to speak, of God in the present condition of our workers. If everyone had enough and to spare, where would our colonies be to-day? Hunger is used to make the Israelite go forth, that the 'heritage' may be taken up, so the people are compelled to leave. Let the State-aided emigration be taken up, as it would save what must come, rioting and disturbance, if we have a hard winter, and if trade does not revive in the early part of next year. T. D."

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—We are glad to report that the Hull British-Israel Identity Society still continues its work. There are good reasons to believe that the cause is progressing, as there is much interest manifested and inquiry made. It is a long time since you have heard from this corner of "the appointed place." We are glad to tell you that we have a noble band of constant workers, both men and women; and hundreds have been spoken to on the Identity question in Hull. We are glad to say that we are about to try to extend our operations here. All being well we shall have a lecture at Brough, on October 26th, on the Great Pyramid, by Mr. R. Wilson, of Hull; and on November 9th, the Rev. D. Tilsley, of Hull, gives a lecture on the Identity, in the Holborn Hall, Holderness-road. We are hoping also to have lectures given by the same gentleman at Brough, Bridlington, and Howden. We are hoping that other places will also open out. We should like to have a lecturer from a distance next year if our funds will allow, or if we are able to arrange with some other society near. We are glad to see from the BANNER that our Scottish friends are about to make a start. We hope to do likewise in the South. Hull would be glad to join in such an enterprise as far as possible. We have several brethren of the House of Judah in Hull who see Israel in the British people. The day verily dawneth! Yours, &c.,

R. WILSON.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—I was pleased to see the account of the Conference at Edinburgh, and cordially agree with the conclusions arrived at. It is a misfortune that Identity literature is not exposed in the windows of the booksellers of every town in Great Britain, especially where there are any believers. Some years ago I adopted the plan of ordering two BANNERS—one of which I took, and the other was prominently displayed for sale. If special terms could be offered to booksellers they might be disposed to become agents, not only for the BANNER, but the "Handbook," and other popular and forcible treatises on the Identity. Another matter I heartily coincide with is the necessity for improved organization and facilities for holding, say quarterly meetings in central districts. Large associations are preferable to small ones, and more likely to gain the ear of the public. It is a cause for regret that there are scores of believers who are not enrolled in any association, small or great. I would respectfully again suggest that the address of two or three believers, where no association exists, be entered in the almanac to facilitate communications, and for mutual intercourse.

Yours, &c., W. T. W.

QUESTION 2136. ANNO DOMINI 1881-2.—Can anyone inform me what the British-Israelites and Pyramidalists say now about their date, 1881-2, which they anticipated should bring about the return of British-Israel to Palestine, according to the Great Pyramid and British-Israel theory? As that return has not yet taken place, have their hopes expired? Or have they fallen back on the fact that Jesus Christ was really born in the year B.C. 4, and that our era being thus four years behind time, 1881-2 was 1877-8? It was then that the Berlin Congress arrested Russia in her advance, and that the Turkish Convention gave Britain the Island of Cyprus and the protectorate over the Holy Land, &c.—J. J. BROWN.—From the "Glasgow Weekly Herald" for Oct. 14th, 1893.

The following reply to the above was given in the Glasgow Weekly Herald of Nov. 4th, 1893, by Dr. C. Piazzi Smyth:—

"DOCTOR C. PIAZZI SMYTH AND THE DIVINELY PREDESTINED "EGYPTIAN EVENT OF 1882 (?) A.D.

"To the Editor of the 'Glasgow Weekly Herald.'

"SIR,—A rather long so-called 'Question,' which was launched before the public as No. 2136 in the Glasgow Weekly Herald of October 14, by Mr. J. J. Brown, has been sent on to me by the more widely-known Mr. James D. Reid, of 184, Trongate, Glasgow—with not only a request that I would answer it, but with an earnestly-put argument that it was no less than a duty for me so to do. Wherefore, although at this moment I am far from written or printed references, I am happy to try to oblige him; except in this, that the answer to so extensive a question and allied theory, as contained in the above, if it is to prove satisfactory, can hardly but be more extended than laconic.

* These figures may require testing.

Digitized by Google

"In the course of his 'question' and something more, Mr. Brown seems to assume that all British-Israelites and Pyramidalists believed that at a pyramid-marked date, meaning about the end of 1882 A.D.—'the return of British-Israel to Palestine' would publicly take place. But as this has not yet occurred up to the autumn of 1893, 'are they,' he asks, 'overwhelmed with confusion, or have they perhaps adopted the theory of many of the learned, that our Lord Jesus Christ was not born in the year 0, but in the year 4 B.C. of our era? In which case any miraculously to be promoted movements of British-Israel are to be looked for in the events which took place earlier in modern times by four years than the epoch 1882.' And then, or in 1878 A.D., 'we have,' says Mr. Brown, 'the very valuable historical facts to quote, that it was then that the Berlin Congress arrested Russia in her advance, and that the Turkish Convention gave Britain both the Island of Cyprus and the Protectorate over the Holy Land.'

"These circumstances are well to be remembered by Mr. Brown, are alluded to by him in the best spirit and plainly with good intentions, and are of characteristic importance in themselves. Yet are they wanting in something to be able to stand as being all that the Great Pyramid in Egypt was prophetically meant to typify, either for 1878 A.D., or any other time, and the time in this case was further, not 1878, but 1882.

"Now, that date having been monumentally marked in the interior of the Great Pyramid 4,000 years ago, cannot be swerved from by us. And though some development of Christian life in Egypt was for a long time before either 1878 or 1882 A.D. hoped to be foreshadowed by that latter recognised mark, and many guesses were ventured as to what it would turn out to be; yet they each and everyone proved, when the time for fulfilment came, to be, like all merely human inventions for the future, absolutely and grievously wrong.

"What then was, if there was such at all, the great event of specially local bearing, as well as Divine significance, which took place in Egypt at that pyramid-certified date of 1882 (?) A.D.

"By the safe method of looking back from a still later date, and noting what did occur at that time, there is nothing easier now than to say. The only mystery is, why almost all men have been so strangely slow to see, and even reluctant to confess, it; for none of these things were done in a corner. On the contrary, it was openly before all the world that the downfall of Mahomedan rule in Egypt was then brought about; and the erection in its place came forth of a supreme British-Christian Government without any partnership with, or any let or hindrance from, any other nation whatever. And that system of British-Israel Government in Egypt still continues, after twelve years' experience, to the astonishment of all those other nations who have since then attempted diplomatically or otherwise to upset it—continues, I say, to grow and fructify, to the immediate and inestimable advantage of Egypt, and not less of Great Britain as well.*

"This, too, is exactly the view of all those circumstances taken by an eminent savant in Belgium, M. Chas. Lagrange, in a valuable little book published by him during the present year, under the title of—

"'On the concordance which exists between the Law of History of Brück, the Chronology of the Hebrew version of the Bible, and the Chronology of the Great Pyramid in Egypt; with new translations of the time-prophecies of Daniel and St. John.'

"This testimony, as issuing from a foreign, and independent, but most intellectual nation, is so exceedingly important in all its admissions, findings, and teachings, that it is a misfortune for the British people that it is published as yet only at Brussels, and in the French language.

"Very recently, however, I hear that communications have been opened up with Mr. W. Isbister (the publisher of my own various Pyramid books from 1864 to 1890) for producing rapidly and faithfully during this autumn an English translation of M. Lagrange's work; and Mr. Isbister is all the more enthusiastic therein because he has additional reasons, from his own business points of view, for seeing the very finger of God in those surprising events that were carried out so successfully, though unexpectedly, in Egypt, in 1882, and are growing, rather than declining, in national importance with every additional year.

"For, says Mr. Isbister, just look at the state of Europe now; every country, except Britain and her protegé Egypt, is running itself into irretrievable debt and certain eventual ruin. Britain and Egypt are the only two who are paying their way, and have a profit at the end of the year; and that was not the case even with Egypt until British-Christian rule began there in the latter end of 1882.—I am, &c.,

THE ANGLO-ISRAELITE IN CANADA.—The Rev. Dr. Wild, of Toronto, is anxious to obtain a seat in the Dominion Parliament, and he is already at work endeavouring to popularize himself and his doctrines among the people of Haldimand. Should the reverend doctor secure his election, he would undoubtedly be one of the most original men in the House, and his eloquence, combined with his erratic way would at once be the admiration and the regret of his friends. Dr. Wild is best known as a preacher in both the Methodist and Congregational Churches, and as an authority on the subject of Oriental languages. His main object in life is to convince all men of British descent that they are descended from the Ten Lost Tribes of Israel. So strong is the doctor's feeling on this point that he means, if he can, to establish a third party in Canadian politics, which he is to lead as an Anglo-Israelite. It is probable that Canadians will not look upon him with favour, as there are more urgent matters to be attended to than the deportation of Jews to the Holy Land. —The Critic (Halifax, N.S.).

A SIXTH edition of "The Wealth and Progress of New South Wales, 1892," has been published. It is compiled by Mr. T. A. Coghlan, the Government statistician, and the aim has been to make the information contained in the work interesting to persons outside the colony who are not concerned in its purely local affairs, whilst making the book useful to those people who cannot well do without such details.

BRITISH-ISRAEL'S NAVAL STRENGTH AT SEA.

A VERY important and earnest discussion is taking place in the public journals of the day regarding the rapid increase of the French and Russian navies at the present moment, the result being that in the Mediterranean the French are equal in power and number of ships of war to our own fleet stationed there; but if the Russian squadron be taken into account with the French, then the combined fleets are stronger than our own! This is regarded, and justly so, as a very serious matter for a nation that claims the supremacy of the sea by reason of the power of her navy; and that, tried by the maxim that our navy ought to be equal in strength to any two of the maritime nations of Europe, we are in a condition of much danger. Matters are made much worse by the fact that Mr. Gladstone has lately said that the strength of the British navy in the Mediterranean is sufficient for all that we require from it as a nation. If it be true, and no one doubts it, that our strength in that sea is barely that of the French alone, but that if the French and Russian fleets were to be united, we should certainly be overmatched, then it is a question whether our supremacy of the sea has not already passed away, and, like Samson, our strength is gone! It is altogether a matter of expenditure. The opposition of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir W. Harcourt, backed by the Prime Minister's infatuation, that we are strong enough for anything, is what we have to dread. The French are spending £2,800,000 a year in building new ships for their navy; the Russians, £2,674,000: or, £5,474,000 together. Our own outlay for the year 1893-4 is only £3,179,928, while the average for the last five years has been £4,570,919. It can be seen that if these figures are maintained the supremacy of the sea will have left us, if we make no effort to regain our position, and that already our strength is relatively weaker than it was, and is bound in future to grow worse and worse, till our naval supremacy will disappear, and with it our Empire. The able papers of The Times correspondent, whose third article on "The Strength of the Navy" was published on Nov. 17, should be attentively perused by all our readers, who are patriots first and politicians afterwards. The Times correspondent concludes his argument thus:—

But we are brought back once more to the inexorable and primordial necessity of largely and courageously increasing the funds devoted to the maintenance of our naval armaments in full sufficiency and efficiency. There is no honourable escape from this necessity. The alternative is national self-effacement. Surely such an alternative only needs to be bluntly stated for it to be instantly and unanimously repudiated by the countrymen of Nelson and the heirs of his immortal deeds. Maritime supremacy, undisputed and indisputable, is the immediate jewel of every British soul. We are not to be cozened into bartering it for a few paltry millions.

We hope the "few paltry millions" will be found speedily, in order that the ocean may not be wrested from our grasp by the ambition of France and Russia combined to transfer it to themselves. God works by means, and though we firmly believe He can continue to give us the supremacy of the sea by means quite apart from our own exertions, yet we see and know that He has hitherto acted by human instrumentality. Our Empire has been built up by active exertions on our part, and by battles with our foes who opposed us, in which God gave us the victory against terrible odds in most cases. We can trust Him, now that our danger is exposed, to make us as a nation to take the necessary steps to recover the strength needful to resume the supremacy of the sea if we have lost it, or to keep it safeguarded if it is threatened by our enemies who covet its possession.

But beside and beyond that, there are the promises of God to His people Israel, who we know are the British people. He has promised them, as the after-seed of Abraham, His continuous blessing as a nation. "Blessing, I will bless thee," He said, in Gen. xxii. 17, on oath! Population is empire, and He promised them that: "Multiplying, I will multiply thy seed as the stars of heaven, and as the sand which is upon the sea-shore." He gave them the coaling stations of the world, which are "the Gates of their enemies," in "possession," thus providing for their hold of the ocean highways of the globe, equal, as an American estimate once made it, to the addition of six millions of soldiers to her armies.

Finally, God has put such high honour on them, that He has entrusted to them the Gospel message, and made them His powerful messengers to all the nations, families, and kindreds of the earth, in order that thereby they may bless the non-Israelite Gentile races of the world (Gen. xxii. 17, 18). With so glorious a commission, and armed by such powers already conferred upon this people to a very large extent, we may be sure that God will provide (since we are Israel) for the continuance of our nation's material strength, and will arrange for our future ability to fulfil His purposes, in spite of the designs of France and Russia, of Mr. Gladstone's infatuated indifference, and Sir William Harcourt's fears for the equilibrium of his coming Budget. The present difficulties may be needed to teach our people that the nerveless grasp of the present Prime Minister is not suited for our times, but that we want a resolute leader, in whom the nation trusts to meet the tremendous complications which Russian and French ambition are preparing for our national undoing. The remedy, under God, is in our own hands, but it involves, as we all know, a larger expenditure of money than our Government is inclined to incur to restore our numerical strength in ships of war of all descriptions, to enable us to maintain our supremacy, not only in the Baltic, but in the Mediterranean; not only in the Red Sea, but in the Indian Ocean as well. The route to India viâ Gibraltar and Malta must be maintained at any cost. Perhaps this scare, regarding our rapidly diminishing relative sea-strength, has been suddenly revealed to us that we may take instant steps to place Gibraltar, one of our leading Gates, in a properly defensible position, that we may be prepared to hold it against all comers, as well as to furnish it with a new mole, docks, and dockyard, for the necessary repairs of our own ironclads in time of war.

Our Identity tells us why we need be under no alarm in regard to the schemes of France and Russia, since we know God is on our side, and that He will fight on our behalf against them. This, however, is no justification for supineness. The danger has been shown to us. We must be up and resolved to supply our deficiencies, cost us what it may; and to praise the Lord for His mercy to us, His people, who trust to His promises to bring us safely through, according to the prophecies (see Isa. xvii. 12—14; liv. 17; xli. 10—16; xlii. 16; Micah v. 8, &c.).

RUSSIA AND ISRAEL.

By John S. Anderson.

In a letter from the Berlin correspondent of the Standard, of October 30, we read statements which should make people, who have any knowledge of the Scriptures, see immediately the wonderful correspondence existing between prophecy and events which are daily passing on the Continent of Europe. With, no doubt, the recent news of the Emperor of Russia's determination to augment the strength of his army by 150,000, which is tantamount to putting it on its full war footing, still ringing in his ears, this correspondent advances the proposition that "the Czar being now the arbiter of the destinies of Europe and of peace and war, his well-known disposition in favour of peace serves to encourage in some quarters very optimist views as to the immediate future. Others argue that his love of peace may be suddenly overcome by some untoward event. The Berlin and Vienna semi-official organs have been publishing soothing assurances as to the meaning and prospects of the Franco-Russian entente, but not many persons here are disposed to put much faith in these optimist views."

Now, let us turn to the Bible and make a few extracts from Ezek. xxxviii., which bear very strongly on this point:—

"1 And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

"2 Son of man, set thy face against Gog, the land of Magog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal, and prophesy against him,

"3 And say, Thus saith the Lord God: Behold I am against thee, O Gog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal. (Can anyone doubt that this refers to Russia?) . . .

"5 Persia, Ethiopia, and Libya with them; all of them with shield and helmet.

"6 Gomer and all his bands. . . .

"8 After many days thou shalt be visited: in the latter years thou shalt come into the land that is brought back from the sword, and is gathered out of many people, against the mountains of Israel, which have been always waste: but it is brought forth out of the nations, and they shall dwell safely all of them. . . .

"10 Thus saith the Lord God: It shall also come to pass, that at the same time shall things come into thy mind, and thou shalt think an evil thought.

"11 And thou shalt say, I will go up to the land of unwalled villages; I will go to them that are at rest, that dwell safely, all of them dwelling without walls, and having neither bars nor gates.

"12 To take a spoil, and to take a prey; to turn thine hand upon the desolate places that are now inhabited, and upon the people that are gathered out of the nations, which have gotten cattle and goods, that dwell in the midst of the land.

"13 Sheba, and Dedan, and the merchants of Tarshish, with all the young lions thereof, shall say unto thee, Art thou come to take a spoil?"

The "evil thought" is so mixed up with the result of it, that the foregoing quotations have rather anticipated the following concluding remarks from the Berlin correspondent's letter:—

"The Norddeutsche," he says, "admits that 'Russia can now count with certainty on France wherever her real or supposed interests may demand an appeal to arms.'

"The Hamburger Nachrichten also contains an article on the Franco-Russian entente. It repeats the long-refuted assertions that the relations between Russia and Germany have grown worse since Prince Bismarck's resignation; that Russia regards England in the first place and Austria only in the second as her most serious adversaries; that Italy has secured Russia's mediation in Paris in case of need, as she does not trust England, and other statements, all breathing enemity to England."

It is singular how these views confirm each other. On the one hand we have the sacred writings of about 2470 years ago showing that Russia will in the latter years, which we think most people admit refers to the present time, unite with France, called Gomer by the prophet, and other nations against a people described in such a manner as to point unmistakably to us as Israel; while the secular writers of the present day—continental as well as our own—judging from surrounding circumstances, have no hesitation in openly affirming the existence of the same antagonism; a fact which undoubtedly ought to be evident to all.

Croydon Nov. 1, 1893.

"A NATION" AND "THE STONE."

By the Rev. Denis Hanan.

The question, "What is signified by the stone which our blessed Lord mentioned when making prophetic application of the parable of the wicked husbandman" (Matt. xxi. 33; Mark xii. 1; Luke xx. 9), has often been answered in this paper, but yet, perhaps, there may be room for a further study and for corroborations which may be shown in a different way; and if what I write is but a repetition, it may be excused because of the great and general misconception which exists and of the difficulties which are admitted by our best commentators more by their silence than by express acknowledgment.

Take, for example, the very valuable commentary by the Rev. F. M. Sadler, recently published. He passes by Matt. xxi. 43 altogether, and thus recognises no connection between it and the verse immediately preceding. The "Speaker's Commentary" at the same place passes by the words, "a nation," and does not see the connection between the stone and that nation. Archbishop Trench in his "Notes on the Parables" (to whom the distinction between Israel and Judah is as if it did not exist) does not seem to see any difficulty in the express words, "a nation," meaning all who accepted Christ's Gospel from among the nations. And he, quoted also by the "Speaker's Commentary," makes Christ the crushing stone. This interpretation is supported by a reference to Isa. viii. 15, where the Lord of hosts is mentioned as a stone of stumbling to both the Houses of Israel; but any reference to the frequent use of the symbolic stone in connection with the nation is ignored. This application which makes the Lord Jesus Christ to be the stone is fraught with difficulties, for it presents Him in a character which is directly opposite to that which He has ever manifested. He who would not break the bruised reed or quench the smoking flax, and who has never done so, is represented by this interpretation as breaking those who fall upon him and utterly crushing those upon whom he falls, and that not in the age or period of final judgment, but now in this age of grace during which the kingdom of God forfeited by Judah is in the possession of those who now bring forth fruit. The incongruity and untruthfulness of this exposition has produced the spiritualizing gloss, that a breaking of the rebel will in the individual is that which is here meant by the Lord. But to whatsoever extent this application may be allowable, it cannot be acknowledged that it takes away the primary meaning of the words and of their context.

A closer study of the Lord's words has convinced many that the reference to the stone is not a reference to Himself, but to the nation which is the subject of His immediately preceding words. In this paper I propose to show that this the obvious grammatical sense is borne out by all the previous references to the stone in Holy Scripture. The words of our Lord are admitted by all to be an exact quotation from the lxx. version of Psa. cxviii. 22. There we find a prophetical outburst of praise because of the goodness of the Lord in His dealing with Israel, with the House of Aaron, and with all who joined with the author in fearing God. The experiences of the writer were as part of the experiences of the nation; he had been at death's door, but he is able to say, "I shall not die, but live," so also the nation shall revive. He was despised and cast out, but was restored to the place of honour, so would it be with the nation: the stone-like kingdom which chastened, despised, and rejected, was to be raised up by the power of God.

The gates of righteousness here mentioned (ver. 19) are referred to by a later writer, Isaiah, and his comment upon those who enter by them is this, "The righteous nation that keepeth the truth shall enter in" (Isa. xxvi. 2). The nation was to enter the open gates, the stone was to become the head of the corner, and in Daniel's interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's vision the kingdom of God is again symbolized by a stone which would ultimately grow and fill the earth. Our Lord's reference to the stone in immediate connection with the kingdom must have been governed by the thought expressed by the Scriptures that He quoted, and they referred to the stone which was symbolical of the kingdom and not to the Lord of hosts as a stone of stumbling and rock of offence. But what was it that made the reference to the stone as symbolical of Israel's national fortunes, proverbial? Where did the poets of Israel find the simile? Was it an expression originated by the writer of Psa. cxviii? By no means. We find earlier references, and these are even more directly in connection with the nation. Thus to Joseph, the heir of the national part of the Abrahamic birthright—viz., numbers, empire, power, and wealth—the stone of Israel was expressly bequeathed, that stone doubtless which the inspired record mentions particularly in connection with the re-conveyance of the heirship of the world to Jacob.

The stone dedicated by Jacob was to be God's house—i.e., symbolical of the kingdom and Church of God on earth, which, as explained by Daniel, was to grow and become a nation and fill the whole earth, after it has fallen upon the latter-day development of the image of Gentile supremacy, and made it as the dust of the summer threshing-floor; the very same idea, be it observed, that lies in our Lord's words, "Upon whomsoever it shall fall it will grind him to powder." Thus, the view that has been frequently maintained in Banner of Israel is, I venture I say, when tested by Holy Scripture, found to be in exact correspondence with all its teaching. It removes the terrible exposition which makes our long-suffering and sympathizing High Priest a veritable Moloch of destruction: it shows that He whose mind grasped all the teaching of the inspired records neither introduced a new symbolism nor invested the old symbol with a new signification. The stone in His teaching symbolized that which it always symbolized—viz., the kingdom and church of Israel, which, although once cast out, is, when recovenanted and obedient, the veritable kingdom of God on earth; it is the earthly rule which is to make ready the world for the coming of the King and to which is attached the peculiar promise, "I will bless him that blesseth thee, and curse him that curseth thee," or, in other words, whosoever falleth upon the nation that inherits this promise will be broken, but on whomsoever it shall fall will be ground to powder by its God-given irresistible might, until the stone cut out without hands becomes a mountain and fills the earth.

The nation, the kingdom, and the King are, of course, united. Messiah, the King of Israel, will rule through and by the unconquerable kingdom. But it is a very different thing to say that the kingdom is to be overwhelming in power, that its allies will be blessed and its enemies overcome, and to say that He who is our long-suffering Saviour and our sympathizing High Priest, removed the stone symbolism from Israel and adopted it for Himself.

The history of the kingdom of Israel since it became Christian has been concurrent with the work of the Saviour of mankind, and yet the development of the kingdom and the work of the Lord are not to be confused. The nation has sinned and the Church has erred, but to Him ever belongs the unchangeable character of long-suffering, mercy, and grace. He is the Salvation of Israel, and, because of this, to the recovenanted heirs of Abraham after the flesh belongs the divinely-acknowledged character of the kingdom of the stone, "This is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes."

THE RETURN FROM BABYLON.

By A. W. J. Johnston.

I.—Opponents of Britain's identity with Israel of the Ten Tribes frequently assert with great confidence that the whole of the twelve tribes of Israel were represented in the return from Babylon. But while they have no evidence to support that assertion we can bring direct and very ancient testimony to show that the only tribes which returned from the Babylonian captivity were Judah, Benjamin, and Levi. In the first book of Esdras v. 1, we read, "After this were the principal men of the families chosen according to their tribes, to go up," &c. The names and number of these are then given, and a description of the rebuilding of the temple amid the rejoicings of the people. Verse 66. "Wherefore when the enemies of the tribe of Judah and Benjamin heard it, they came to know what that noise of trumpets should mean." Chapter viii., ver. 42, et seq., tell how the absence of Levites was observed and 220 of that tribe were sent to join the others. In chap. ix. 3 we read, "And there was a proclamation in all Jewry and Judea to all them that were of the captivity, that they should be gathered together at Jerusalem: (ver. 4) and that whosoever met not there within two or three days, according as the elders that bare rule appointed, their cattle should be seized to the use of the temple, and himself cast out (margin, utterly destroyed) from them that were of the captivity. (Ver. 5) And in three days were all they of the tribe of Judah and Benjamin gathered together at Jerusalem."

Who can read this and believe that any tribes other than those named were then present in Jerusalem? Even without this conclusive proof it would not be rational to accept our opponents' assertion in face of the witness of the Jews themselves, who have always known and acknowledged that none of the Ten Tribes came back with them from Babylon.

II.—Another argument brought against us is that we could not so completely have forgotten our origin and history and lost all traces of our descent. Yet we read in Esdras v. 37, that 652 of those who wished to return to Jerusalem could neither show their families nor their stock, how they were of Israel. If this could happen in seventy years, how much more in 700, or in 2,500 years? It is very easy to forget a language. I have known Englishmen, one of them a missionary, who, from long association with foreigners, could only make a speech in English by first thinking it in the foreign tongue they were accustomed to, and then translating it into the less frequently used English. I have occasionally caught myself doing the same thing, though I have never been long isolated among foreigners, and I think it would be almost impossible for a people, captive among strangers, to retain their own language for more than two or three generations. By a special effort it might be done by a few, but the many would certainly forget and after a few years would speak only the language of their masters, as do the American negroes of the present day. The argument of our opponents is therefore untenable and worthless, even if we had not the sure proof that we who now speak English, eight hundred years ago spoke French, Saxon, and a number of other tongues, which we as a nation have now utterly forgotten.

III.—Is there any other royal family but our own that can trace an unbroken descent from the time of the Babylonian captivity? If not, then Britain must be the Fifth Kingdom, which was to be "set up in the days of these kings"—that is, of Nebuchadnezzar and his successors. For we know that the Coronation Stone, "the stone of destiny," has been in the possession of Her Majesty's ancestors from remoter ages than history, or even tradition, gives any definite account of. Failing any other of equal antiquity, our royal family is the only claimant for the throne of Daniel's fifth kingdom, and, in any case, it is the only one with a comprehensible title to the position.

IV.—From most of the prophecies of the final return of Judah and Israel it is clear that Israel shall never nationally recognise that she really is Israel, until she has taken Judah home. Then only, in the land from which they have so long been cast out, "on the mountains of Israel," they shall know that they are God's people and that He is their God. We can therefore understand why they are slow and stubborn now, and why they are so firmly persuaded that they are not Israel, and will be until the time appointed. That time may be soon—perhaps even before this senile century passes away—then "in the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not My people, there it shall be said unto them, Ye are the sons of the living God."

THE DISCUSSION IN YARMOUTH, NOVA SCOTIA.

No. XII.—Anglo-Israelism.

Our readers will, we believe, approve of our decision to omit further reference to "Barrington's" portion of the above controversy. His offensive tone and mode of argument are not approved on this side the water. He has descended to violence of language, and this shall find no place in our columns. We shall publish the Rev. C. F. Cooper's temperate and courteous statements of our case, and of these there are but four remaining. The following appeared in Yarmouth Light on May 25 last:—

"THE STORY OF DAN. WHO ARE THE SCOTCH?

"Sir,—A writer says, 'It is generally admitted that in all controversies, especially those of a theological nature, violence of language, in place of calmness of reason, is a tolerably sure acknowledgment of virtual defeat.' I am sure your readers will heartily endorse this sentiment. I shall therefore pass by as unworthy of notice the many, many hard names 'Barrington' calls Anglo-Israelism in his last letter; and I commend to his consideration the words Mr. Gladstone wrote when asked by the Rev. B. W. Savile to consider our ethnological argument. Mr. Gladstone said: 'On ethnographical grounds the theory you mention is a fair subject for discussion; and I should read with interest any tract so treating it. I can conceive no reason why hard words should be introduced.'

Digitized by Google

"Paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5 of 'Barrington's' last shall be passed over in kindly silence.

"Whether our method of interpreting prophecy be reasonable or otherwise let your readers judge. We believe the Bible means just what it says—nothing more, nothing less. Judah means Judah; Babylon, Babylon; Tyre, Tyre, etc.; and Israel means Israel. Material blessings are material blessings, and spiritual blessings spiritual. Now everyone interprets prophecy concerning the Jews and every other nation except Israel literally. We make no exception. We ask for proof that Israel does not mean Israel, and that magnificent promises of material greatness ought to be spiritualized away. Will 'Barrington' tell us by what authority he understands that the material curses pronounced against the Jews were to be literally endured by them, while the promises of material blessings made to Israel are to be spiritually fulfilled in the Gentiles? Our method everyone can see is clear, consistent, and reasonable. It is but the application in all cases of the same method others adopt in every case but one. A reason for making a solitary exception has never been given.

"It has become necessary for me to say a word or two about war. Sir, war is a terrible evil. It is always a crime on one side, often on both. The Bible foretells many wars, but it does not thereby justify them. England, in building up her great Empire, has sometimes, but not often, been unjust; sometimes, but rarely, cruel. Occasional acts of oppression and wrong no more prove that we are not Israel than the unjust and cruel deeds of God's people of old prove that they were not Israel. It is nowhere foretold that Israel should be perfect in the present dispensation. Yet we may truthfully say that on the whole our wars and conquests have been for the benefit of mankind—witness India for example. England conquers that she may bless. No patriot need be ashamed for the beneficent rule of the British people. Anglo-Saxon conquests, trade, commerce, arts, science, civilization, and religion have been the mightiest factor for good in the history of the world.

"I will now ask 'Barrington' a question or two. (a) He has so often rung the changes on that favourite word of his, 'goring,' that I want him to explain the prediction that the descendants of Joseph should push the people together to the ends of the earth. Was this prophecy ever accomplished? Was it just that it ever should be? (b) Will he explain these words? Micah v. 8: 'The remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles, in the midst of many people, as a lion among the beasts of the forests, as a young lion among the flocks of the sheep, who if he go through, both treadeth down and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver.' I know 'Barrington' will not answer these questions; but I ask them to show that the difficulty, if there be any, in such predictions, confronts every believer in inspiration as much as it does Anglo-Israelites.

"Now, sir, I am sorry to have to say that when your correspondent writes, 'Some of the foulest blots in British history Mr. Cooper endorses to prop up a theory which, if true, casts upon God the endorsements of cruelty, plunder, oppression, corruption, and wrong'—when he says, 'Mr. Cooper justifies in the interest of a theory the goring of the British nation in the past with all its cruelty, plunder, and wickedness,' I must tell him that he is uttering, I feel sure thoughtlessly, a slander with which no gentleman who weighs his words would charge another—a slander for which every true man, who should inadvertently circulate it, would without loss of time express sincere regret. Sir, Anglo-Israelism does not justify oppression or wrong of any kind or in any degree. Anglo-Israelites hate injustice and cruelty as much as anyone can hate them. Our hearts are as true and kind and tender as the hearts of any men. Nay, further, we are doing—we believe in God's appointed way—more to bring about the universal reign of peace than any other people; and doing it too, sometimes, in the face of scorn and ridicule and cruel misrepresentation.

"In reply to the rest of 'Barrington's' last the following will suffice: (1) 'Barrington' does not touch my argument from language, which is, that inasmuch as several nations have forgotten their mother tongue and learned another, Israel may have done the same. Language is not a test of race. (2) Neh. viii. proves that the returned exiles had forgotten their own tongue. Ver. 8: 'They read in the book of the law distinctly, and gave the sense.' The Pulpit Commentary thus explains the words in italics: 'Translated the Hebrew words into the popular Aramaic or Chaldee.' (3) The opinion that our ancestors were uncivilised barbarians is fast declining under the light of deeper research. I call upon 'Barrington' to prove that the tribes described by Cæsar in the passages he quotes were our forefathers. Du Chaillu is accepted as an eminent authority, and he most certainly refers to our Saxon ancestors. (4) Does 'Barrington' mean to assert that all the European nations of antiquity had the same alphabet, and that this was the Phœnician-Hebrew? (5) By silently passing by some of your correspondent's statements, etc., I concede nothing. Much that he writes I can safely leave to the unaided judgment of your readers.

"THE STORY OF DAN.

"Among the predictions concerning the tribe of Dan occurs the following: 'Dan shall leap from Bashan' (Deut. xxxiii. 22). But Bashan was not in Dan's territory. How then could Dan leap from Bashan? The answer is that Bashan on account of its beauty and fertility is spoken of as a synonym for Palestine (Psa. lxviii. 15, 16). So that the above prediction really means, 'Dan shall leap from Palestine.' But did Dan leave Palestine? Undoubtedly: for in 1 Chron. v.—viii. the genealogy of every tribe is given except this one, which fact can only be accounted for by supposing that in fulfilment of prophecy it had emigrated. That this tribe had not become extinct is certain because it once more appears upon the page of prophecy in the account of the final ingathering of the tribes at the great restoration (Ezek. xlviii. 32). It is probable the Danites escaped during some one or more of the many periods of invasion from which Israel suffered on account of her sins. The means for escape were always at hand. Dan was a maritime power possessing a fleet (Judges v. 17), and he often shared the adventures of the Phœnician sailors. We are certain that for a long time close friendship existed between the Phœnicians and Israel. Well, Dan having emigrated, where in this wide world shall we look for him? The prophet Ezekiel gives us a hint. In chap. xxvii. 19, of his prophecy he associates Dan with Javan. Now Javan is the Biblical word for Greece. This tribe, then, after they had left Palestine, were connected in some way with Greece; and we have abundant evidence of a most reliable character that they took up their abode there. 'Contemporary with the Phœnicians, another very important seafaring people were the Danaans or Danai, who came from a point south of Phœnicia, and took possession of the Greek Peloponnesus at a very early period. They figure largely in the early days of Greek history, and seem to have become exceedingly smart in manœuvres of maritime warfare. As merchantmen and traders they were by no means unimportant; and although much of their history is dressed up in the fashionable garb of Greek lore, we can learn that for length of voyages they were not behind the prowess of their Phœnician examplers.' ('Great Britain's Rank Among the Nations,' by R. N. Adams, pp. 33, 34). Who were these Danai? The name itself suggests the Tribe of Dan. Professor Rawlinson says: 'Identity of name, even alone, is an argument that requires to be met, and which unless met by positive objections establishes a presumption in favour of a connection of race.' The following is the testimony of Latham in his 'Ethnology of Europe,' p. 157: 'I think that the eponymous of the Argive Danai was no other than the Israelite Tribe of Dan. Only we are so used to confine ourselves to the soil of Palestine in our consideration of the Israelites that we treat them as if they were adscripti glebæ, and ignore the share they may have taken in the ordinary history of the world. The seaports between Tyre and Ascalon of Dan, Ephraim and Asher, must have followed the history of seaports generally, and not have stood on the coast for nothing. What a light would be thrown on the name Pelopennesus and the history of the Pelop-id family if a bona-fide Pelop nation with unequivocal affinities and contemporary annals had existed on the sea coast of Asia. Who would have hesitated to connect the two? Yet with the Danai and the Tribe of Dan this is the case and no one connects them.'

"Now it will be admitted that the Danai and the Lacedæmonians were of the same origin. Here is further evidence that they were Israelites. Two interesting letters are preserved by the author of Maccabees and by Josephus. The first reads thus: 'Areus, king of the Lacedæmonians, to Onias sendeth greeting. We have met with a certain writing whereby we have discovered that both the Jews and the Lacedæmonians are of one stock, are derived from the kindred of Abraham . . . . It is but just therefore that you who are our brethren should send to us about any of your concerns, as you please. We will also do the same thing and esteem your concerns as our own.' Some years afterwards the following was sent to Sparta: "Jonathan, the High Priest of the Jewish nation, and the Senate, and the body of the people of the Jews, to the Ephori, the Senate, and body of the people of the Lacedæmonians, send greeting. If you are well and both your public and private affairs be agreeable to your minds, it is according to our wishes. When in former times an epistle was brought to Onias, who was then our High Priest, . . . we were well satisfied about it from the sacred writing. . . . It is a long time since this relation of ours to you has been renewed; and when we upon holy and festival days offer sacrifices to God, we pray to Him for your prosperity and victory.' Josephus adds: 'So the Lacedæmonians received the ambassadors kindly and made a decree for friendship and mutual assistance' (Antiquities, bk. xii., chap. iv. 10 and xiii. v. 8). It seems, then, impossible to doubt that the inhabitants of the Greek Peloponnesus were Israelites of the Tribe of Dan.

"A little further research, and we shall find this tribe appearing in Ireland. R. N. Adams, pp. 41, 42, quotes from A. M. Sullivan's 'The Story of Ireland.' 'The first settlers (in Ireland) are severally known as the Partholanians, the Memedians, the Firbolgs and the Tuatha de Danaans. These latter possessed a civilization and a knowledge of the arts and sciences which, limited as we may be sure it was, greatly amazed the early settlers—whom they had subjected—by the results it produced.' 'Tuatha de Danaans' means 'The Tribe of Dan.' Surely these people are the same we found in Greece. It is probable they escaped from Greece, when they were so sorely pressed during the internecine strife in that country, that they might seek more peaceful abodes. Be this as it may, if the names of people are any indication of their origin, these colonizers were of the tribe of Dan. They could easily escape, since 'the members of the Greek community carried their trading adventures to many distant countries between the eastern shores of the Black Sea and the British Isles' (Adams, p. 42). Well, after the Tuatha de Danaans came the Milesians. Who were these? They came from Spain, but they were not Spaniards. Professor O'Curry, in his work on 'The Manners and Customs of the Ancient Irish,' quotes from A. M. Sullivan the following words: 'The Tuatha de Danaans and the Milesians both belonged to the same race.' The following information is gathered from Professor O'Curry. The Milesians were at one time in Egypt, from which country they wandered to different places until they arrived in Ireland. 'Eber' was one of the leaders of the first Milesian colony. The law these people brought with them was the Hebrew law. On this point the author says: 'It is stated in very old copies of "The Book of Invasions" and other ancient documents, that it was the Mosaic law that the Milesians brought into Erinn at their coming' ('The Manners and Customs,' etc., pp. 3, 4, 20, 24, 29, 51). We must remember that Dan emigrated long before the fall of Israel. According to the old Irish traditions the Milesians carried with them during all their wanderings a sacred banner, on which were inscribed a dead serpent and the rod of Moses, a device to commemorate for ever the miracle by which the life of their ancestor, Gadelius, was saved.

"Further, Dr. Pinnock, in his 'Catechism of the History of Ireland,' says: 'The language spoken by the natives of Ireland was one of great antiquity, which General Vallancy paid particular attention to the examination of. It appears to be a compound of Phœnician and Hebrew, as that learned linguist and antiquarian has published several thousands of words which are alike in Hebrew and Irish. In suggesting the best course of study to be pursued in order to obtain a correct knowledge of the ancient Irish language, the same writer placed an acquaintance with Hebrew first. He, moreover, quotes with approval from an author who wrote a small treatise on 'The Precursory Proofs that Israelites came from Egypt into Ireland' (this treatise was published long before Anglo-Israelism was heard of). 'This author states that some of the Hebrew family were separated from the rest at a very early period; that they were heirs to singular blessings promised to them in the "latter days."'

"Once more. In Ireland and Scotland (to leave out England and Wales) there are considerably over 350 places whose names are derived from Hebrew. These names are found in Keith Johnson's Royal Atlas. It will be understood that the same Hebrew words and roots occur, some of them, many times over. (See 'Israel's Wanderings,' by the Rev. W. H. Milner, pp. 21, 22.)

"Let me add that Professor Sullivan calls the Milesians Scots—a name by which they were widely known. They were called Milesians after their leader, and Scuit, Scoti, or Scots, probably because they were 'wanderers.'

Digitized by Google

"Now it is well-known that the present Scotch and the Ulstermen of Ireland are of the same origin. The Scotch, therefore, are Israelites. All honour to them and to the men of Ulster. Very many of them know their noble lineage. Would that all did. They will by-and-bye. I trust this letter will bring many of them to praise the God of Israel, who is the God of their fathers.

I ought to state that I have not, for want of space, given a tithe of the evidence that could be given. I may further add that many of the old traditions of Ireland are brimful of the Israelitish origin of the early settlers.

"In my next I shall try to close the ethnological argument by exhibiting four links which connect the Anglo-Saxon race with Ephraim-Israel.

"Yours, etc.,
"C. F. COOPER.

RANDOM SHAFTS.

THE resolutions passed at the conference lately held in Edinburgh, and reported in the BANNER for Oct. 18, ought to have the serious consideration of adherents throughout the country. Take the first. It is surprising that we should stand by and allow our publications to be suffocated in the fashion they are. In many towns, aye, in many broad counties, Diogenes with his lantern would be unable to discover a book on the Identity if he searched from January to December. The most to be said is that some stationers will get what you want if you like to order it; and they will carefully cover it up until you call again as though it was an illicit production. But only those who take an interest in the subject will put themselves to trouble, and I presume we wish to reach those who at present take no interest whatever in it—never heard of it even? If so, the public should have at least a little facility given them for the purchase of literature, and it is clearly the duty of our various associations to look after this. The smallest of them could afford to advance five shillings, and five shillings' worth of pamphlets placed where they can be seen would do for a beginning. Respecting depôts, if London was to lead the way with a central emporium, and act as distributing agent, it would simplify matters and encourage the formation of provincial branches.

In recommending district meetings and unions on the model of a diocese, the conference touched the weak spot in our organization. Our great need is—frequent consultation between the kindred spirits "scattered abroad,' for by this means our necessities would be voiced and efforts would be made to supply them. We used to have a "Conference Association," without the conferences. Under its wing a number of lectures or addresses were delivered, but it is impossible to transact committee-work on such occasions, and we must have conferences of a genuine kind. None of our societies are destitute of a "zealot" or two, and there are zealots who belong to no society, but individually they cannot do more than cry now and then in the wilderness. For want of proper guidance much energy is often misapplied, and, just as often, much energy lies dormant. But if all the ardent believers in, say, Yorkshire or Lancashire, were brought together once a quarter for mutual direction and support there would be fewer Sleepy Hollows than there are. Of course, we have a strong alliance in the British-Israel Association, but that, on the other hand, is too extensive. It may not be convenient for people to go so far as London at short intervals, however willing. What we should do is to "localise" the Metropolitan Council. The election of a Northern Council is a right step, and it is to be hoped we shall soon have a Western, an Eastern, and a Midland Council as well.

On page 530 of the BANNER, reference is made to a book emanating from a Mr. Chilperic Edwards, called, "The Witness of Assyria; or, The Bible contrasted with the Monuments," in which the former is sadly knocked about by the latter. I have been wondering whether this Chilperic Edwards is the "Chilperic" who attacked Anglo-Israelism in the now defunct National Reformer, and was answered in these columns (Vol. XII., No. 612). There seems to be no doubt that they are the same, for his criticism of the Identity was based almost wholly on Assyrian remains, and the fiction that they limit the Israelitish captives to 27,250 was one of the objections raised by him. But he has evidently elaborated his argument and widened the scope of his operations. Those who apprehend that the cuneiform inscriptions may damage the reputation of Scripture will have their fears removed if they read George Smith's "Assyrian Eponym Canon," particularly pp. 179 and 193. The article already alluded to (which is entitled "Freethought Liketh it Not") gives extracts from the "Canon," showing that the Assyrian tablets, &c., are not to be relied on in their details, and Mr. Chilperic Edwards had better try to refute that fact before venturing to test the Bible by them.

The complaint lodged by the London Chronicle against the author of "Kelt or Gael" is verily a demonstration of the depths to which prejudice will sink one. Mr. Atkins probably—more than probably—expended the greatest pains on his topic, yet because he puts the case as he finds it he is "punished" by being classed with writers who are alleged to have become the "unconscious founders and compilers of text-books for that most extraordinary hallucination of modern times, the Anglo-Israel hypothesis." This is tantamount to saying, "Hush! for the sake of truth don't speak the truth." The Chronicle should go a trifle further, and advise ethnologists to print falsehoods. If the reviewer is himself an historian, what are we to expect from his pen? Not an ungarbled story, certainly. And, unfortunately, a similar temper has crept into the pulpit. When in a state of innocence as regards the Identity, some clergymen make admissions which are marvellous to the ears; but when they gain an inkling of its wicked pretensions they close up and practice the fine art of equivocation. They would gladly retract their previous confessions; and I am afraid that if the authors from whom we commonly quote could with decency revise their works they would expunge enough to satisfy even the Chronicle. Perhaps that paper's fury and scurrility over the Matabele war springs from a kindred motive. Does it feel that Mr. Rhodes has joined the "unconscious founders" of our hallucination and must be slandered for the sake of truth?

Col. Senior's scheme for illustrating lectures with lantern views is a valuable and thoroughly practical idea, as by their aid a meeting held under the most unfavourable circumstances can be made attractive. The apparatus may be hired for a few shillings, and nowadays there are multitudes who can manipulate it, but much, if not everything, will depend on the nature of the slides. I do not know what Col. Senior's own views depict, but should think that representations of Assyrian scenes or of distant parts of the Empire would suit. The executive of the British-Israel Association would be doing a service if they prepared or procured a good assortment and lent them at a moderate cost. It is not quite correct that Col. Senior's Leicester lecture is the first at which the lantern has been enlisted, as our absent friend, the Rev. James Billington, employed it in conjunction with his addresses on "The Homes and Haunts of the British People." Can any reader tell what were the subjects of Mr. Billington's slides?

It may be remembered that, a while back, attention was paid to the moanings of "A Sorrowful Briton," who, among other jeremiads, lamented that the inventive faculty was passing from us to America. The Editor had a word to say on this, and so had I, but a point was omitted which recent events have brought to the front. The grandest device usually credited to America is the electric light, and the Electrician of Nov. 10th reminds us that it is not American but British. We can all recollect the day when it was announced that Edison had constructed an electric lamp—the stir that was made and the panic in gas shares. But we may have forgotten that his contrivance was an utter failure, and earned him a great deal of ridicule. At this time, or just prior to it, Mr. Lane Fox (English) patented a lamp which was a real lamp, and immediately afterwards Mr. Swan (also English) actually exhibited one, and lectured on it. But "the less scrupulous Mr. Edison" gradually appropriated the features of these lamps, and by substituting different names, such as "filament" for "wire," he successfully registered a patent in this country. Swan naturally fought for his property, but in the end it was decided to combine. Hence the Edison-Swan Company.

The monopoly of this company expired on Nov. 10th, when the Electrician declared:—"To-day the least vestige of a connection between Mr. Edison and the invention of the carbon glow lamp is swept away." "To Joseph Wilson Swan belongs the honour of having invented the carbon incandescent lamp, as well as of having perfected the process of its manufacture, although he unfortunately delayed in applying for a patent, and was thus for legal purposes forestalled by Mr. Edison." It should be added that on the continent the authorities declined to grant Mr. Edison any claim for precedence over Mr. Swan, while France recognized the English inventor by creating him a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—I am sending with this a newspaper cutting dealing with the Indian census. The writer, and all like him, who look at the matter in a purely secular light, can do nothing but marvel at the vastness of our Indian Empire. With Anglo-Israelites the case is different; we see in it all the fulfilment of God's promises (contained in Psa. cxi. 6; Deut. xv. 6; Isa. lxi. 9, and many like passages), and praise Him whose "truth endureth to all generations" (Psa. c. 6).

You might suppose the late Mr. Ewing, from whose sermon I send an extract, to have been an Anglo-Israelite; however, his is purely blind evidence. Another minister to whom I lent some Identity works, returned them unconvinced, and, seemingly, much strengthened in his decision by Mr. Ewing having told him "there was nothing in it." And yet in his sermon, the deceased gentleman went much nearer to Anglo-Israelism than anyone has a right to go without actually accepting that great truth.

With much respect, yours truly,

F. J. ANNEAR.

126, Toorak-road, S. Yarra, Melbourne, Aug. 28, 1893.

P.S.—I venture to make a suggestion with the thought of increasing the usefulness of the BANNER. Would it not be a good thing to have in each week's number, either on first or last page, a short summary of Anglo-Israel teaching? By this addition, would not our beloved magazine (over which, dear sir, may you be long spared to preside) be made more suitable for distribution among those entirely unacquainted with our belief? A little matter on cover of BANNER requires attention; in list of colonial agents, South Yarra reads as if in South Australia, whereas (of course you know) it is a suburb of Melbourne, Victoria.—F. J. A.

"What is probably the most stupendous 'count of heads' the planet has ever witnessed, has just been brought to a close in India. The figures of the Indian census are something more than surprising; and, since the alien, babel tongued, many tinted millions they record, share citizenship in the Empire with ourselves, they deserve something more than a passing notice. British India includes some 450 separate States in a more or less advanced stage of political digestion; and the census just closed shows that the populations under the Queen's Government in India number roughly 288,000,000, or more than the population of all the great Powers of Europe, with that of the United States thrown into the bargain. This single province of the Queen's Empire, that is, holds within its borders one-fifth of the entire human race. The net increase of population betwixt 1881—91 is 27,991,000; the gross increase, including new territory, is 33,555,784. In a single decade, that is, there has been added to the Queen's subjects in India, mainly by natural growth, a population only slightly less than that of France, and much greater than that of either Austria or Turkey. This shows that in India we evolve a new nation half as great as the population of the United States every ten years.

"In nations, of course, heads have to be weighed as well as counted, and quality is more than mere quantity, but it is idle to disparage the value of these fast growing and historic races, which constitute the Eastern wing of our Empire. Sikh and Ghoorka, and Belochee, are amongst the best fighters of the human race; the Brahmin caste of India is one of the oldest cultivated classes known to history, while Guelph, and Bourbon, and Hohenzollern, are mere mushrooms in point of antiquity compared with many of the princely houses of India. Imagination, especially of the historical sort, is not a characteristic English gift. The Anglo-Saxon can do a great thing more easily than he can either conceive it or describe it; but it may be doubted whether any achievement recorded in history can compare for scale or splendour with the Empire which, in the dogged and only half articulate fashion of our race, has been built up in India. Napoleon described us as 'a nation of shop-keepers;' there was no

'imperial' or soldierly fibre, he declared, in our make, and yet this 'nation of shop-keepers' possesses, somehow, as one only of its provinces, a population probably twice as great as that of the Roman Empire under the Cæsars. India has been the field of great conquests from Alexander the Great to Aurungzebe, from Genghis Khan to Tamerlane; but Greek and Arab, Mogul and Tartar, have come and gone like shadows, while only the domestic shop-keeping Anglo-Saxon has built up an all-including and stable government, which promises to last through centuries. Good government is the rarest thing in the history of the planet; but that the English government in India is good is proved by the amazing growth of the population, beneath its steadfast equity and beneficence. The form of that government is indeed sufficiently surprising. It is not in the least 'democratic;' it rejects, indeed, the political ideas which are the very postulates of Parliamentary government. It is 'absolute' in a degree which might satisfy the temper of a Czar, or the imagination of a Carlyle. A Secretary of State in London, a Governor-General at Calcutta, with a Cabinet of half-a-dozen officials, and as many Governors or Lieutenant-Governors scattered at remote points throughout India—some twenty men, that is, not one of them elected—and three-fourths of them almost unknown—practically govern a population double that of the Roman Empire of Augustus. It is a literal fact that a drop of ink on the pen of an elderly and gouty Englishman in Whitehall, has power to affect, for good or ill, one-fifth of the human race. The British Empire, it is plain, is the most eclectic political organism known to history. It affords hospitality to the most opposite political ideas and methods. It is sturdily democratic at Westminster or Ottawa, or Melbourne; it is sternly despotic at Calcutta and Benares. A recent Canadian writer has been sighing over the multiplicity of legislators which afflicts the Dominion. 'It is doubtful,' says the Montreal Daily Witness, 'whether any other people in the world have as many legislators in proportion to their number as the people of Canada have. We have nine deputy sovereigns, each and all entitled to wear cocked hats and robes, wield swords of state, occupy vice-regal thrones surrounded by aides-de-camp and courtiers, and to open, with more or less pomp and display of civil and military power, nine Parliaments, five of which have imitation Houses of Lords. We are ruled by one Governor-General, eight Lieutenant-Governors, 75 Cabinet Ministers, 154 Legislative Councillors and Senators, and 581 Members of Parliament.' In Canada it takes 735 legislators to make the laws for something less than five million people. In India a perfectly effective and beneficent government is maintained over nearly 60 Canadas without the help of any 'legislators' at all. British India, with all the stains on its history, is a magnificent demonstration at least of the capacity of the Anglo-Saxon to rule inferior races. And who can tell what a reserve of warlike force for the Empire lies in the numberless multitudes of that tropical and historic land? Lord Beaconsfield was a political charlatan with some rare flashes of genius; and it was surely an impulse of genius that made him in 1878 despatch a contingent of Indian troops to occupy Cyprus, and give the Great Powers of the West a hint of the reserve of military force England has in her vast Indian possessions.

"The religious figures included in the Indian census are of curious significance. The returns, according to religions, are:—Hindoos, 207,654,407; Mussulmans, 57,365,204; Christians, 2,284,191; Jains, 1,416,109; Sikhs, 1,907,836; Buddhists, 7,101,057; Parsees, 89,887; Jews, 17,180; forest tribes (animal worshippers), 9,302 083; atheists, agnostics, &c., 289. The British Empire, according to these figures, is much more Mohammedan than Christian, and much more Hindoo than either. It is by far the greatest Mohammedan Power in the world, since the Queen rules over more believers in the Koran than the Sultan of Turkey himself. It is curious to reflect that amongst the subjects of 'Christian' England are as many 'animal worshippers' as the entire populations of Australia and Canada put together. India is the home of 'faith,' though the type of 'faith' ranges from the worship of the monkey to the worship of Buddha. But amongst its 288,000,000 there are only 289 'atheists, agnostics, &c.' The Christian garrison of India, after a hundred years of missionary efforts, is a little over 2,000,000, a fact which may well give all missionary societies occasion for much perplexed meditation. How intense, however, must be the energy and capacity of the governing race when 2,000,000 are able to hold in peaceful subjection 288,000,000. Measured by any test the British Empire in India is, we repeat, the most remarkable monument of human energy, statesmanship, and courage known to history."

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

SIR,—It is one of the weak points in human nature that it so often seeks to strengthen a lame argument by the well-known device "No cause; abuse the plaintiff." The editor of the Church Times, when advancing the usual stock arguments against the prophecies relating to God's ancient people Israel, adopts this line of argument; but protects himself by refusing to allow those he attacks the right to defend themselves. He describes those who believe the "sure word of prophecy," which he does not believe, "as a little sprinkling of people with some claim to education," and "simply a credulous appetite for the marvellous, and a preference for what is coarsely literal in the interpretation of Scripture over what is purely spiritual"; and following this "purely spiritual interpretation" he maintains, with Mr. Grattan Guinness, that the fifth kingdom described in Dan. ii. 44, vii. 18—27, is "the future kingdom of the Son of Man." As the editor of the Church Times refuses to insert any reply to his remarks I have referred him to the BANNER OF ISRAEL, and that is my reason for asking you to oblige me by inserting my defence in your pages, if you can find room for it.

The fifth or Stone Kingdom is "the stone of Israel" (Gen. xlix. 24), not the "chief stone of the corner," our Lord Jesus Christ. It is a temporal kingdom, set up "in the days of those kings which shall never be destroyed; nor shall the sovereignty thereof be left to another people; but it shall break in pieces and consume all those kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever" (Dan. ii. 44, R.V.; vii. 18—27). This is a temporal kingdom. It is not "the future kingdom of the Son of Man," whose "kingdom is not of this world" (John xviii. 36). No Gentile nation shall inherit "the forfeited glory of Israel," for the simple reason that the "glory of Israel has not been forfeited," and never will be. "Thus saith the Lord God: Although I have cast them far off among the heathen, and although I have scattered them among the countries, yet will I be to them a little sanctuary in the countries where they shall come" (Ezek. xi. 16). "For, lo, I will sift the House of Israel among all nations like as corn is sifted in a sieve, yet shall not the least grain fall upon the earth" (Amos ix. 9). "Yet the number of the children of Israel shall be as the sand of the sea, which cannot be measured nor numbered; and it shall come to pass that in the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not My people, there shall it be said unto them, Ye are the sons of the living God" (Hos. i. 10). Ezek. xi. 15, Hos. i. 11, Amos ix. 8 show that this is spoken of Israel, and not of Judah. "If these ordinances (sun, moon, and stars) depart from before Me, saith the Lord, then the seed of Israel shall cease from being a nation before Me for ever" (Jer. xxxi. 35—37). This refers to Israel, not Judah. "For Judah prevailed among his brethren, and of him came the chief ruler; but the birthright was Joseph's" (1 Chron. v. 1, 2); but the time will come when "the House of Judah shall walk to the House of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the north (England) to the land which I have given to your fathers for an inheritance" (Jer. iii. 18).

In 2 Sam. vii. 13—16, a perpetual house, kingdom, and throne is promised to David. In Ezek. xvii. 15—21 we read of the destruction of Jerusalem and its temple, the captivity of Zedekiah, the last King of Judah, the death of his sons, and the overthrow of David's throne. How does this agree with the promise, "Thine house and thy kingdom shall be established for ever before thee, thy throne shall be established for ever"? (2 Sam. vii. 16); and with this other promise (Jer. xxxi. 35—37), which declares that Israel shall be a nation while the sun, moon, and stars exist? "Thus saith the Lord God, I will also take of the highest branch of the high cedar, and will set it; I will crop off from the top of his young twigs, a tender one, and will plant it upon an high mountain and eminent, in the mountain of the height of Israel will I plant it," &c. "And thou profane and wicked prince of Israel, whose day is come. . . . Thus saith the Lord God, Remove the diadem, and take off the crown: this shall not be the same, exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it, and it shall be no more, until He come whose right is, and I will give it Him." Not all the "eminent scholars, students of the history of the races of mankind, and theologians of mark," who have not "thought Anglo-Israelism worthy" of "serious discussion" can give an intelligent explanation of these prophecies apart from Anglo-Israelism. But once see, and admit that the Anglo-Saxons are the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel—that Queen Victoria is a lineal descendant of King David—of the House of David—sitting upon the throne of David, and ruling over the kingdom and nation of Israel, and the interpretation and explanation becomes easier than the easiest problem of Euclid. But as time and space will not allow me to do this now, I propose to return to the subject in my next letter. Yours faithfully, ANGLO-ISRAEL.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—In case your attention may not have been already called to it I have pleasure in enclosing a cutting from The Scotsman of November 19th, which will interest, and possibly may be of use to you. Mr. Parkin may already be a believer in the Identity. At any rate he strikes the key-note of it when he says "that if we could get a vivid conception of our national position it would quicken and intensify every other form of Christian activity among us." If Mr. Parkin is not an Anglo-Israelite to what agency, I wonder, does he attribute "the amazing impulse of our commercial and industrial instincts?" and how account for the "astonishing combinations of widespread dominion, commercial energy," etc., he refers to, and which he suggests may be "instruments in the hands of providence in working out its high ends? We are glad to see the fact of our national greatness recognised and acknowledged. It is striking enough, but how much more so when the study of Christian truth leads us to realize our true origin, and to recognize the vast importance of the part we play in the Divine programme of the world's history!

I remain, yours truly, K. A. WARDROP ("REVERTITE").

49, Eaton-terrace, London, S.W., November 22nd, 1893.

"MR. G. R. PARKIN ON THE CHRISTIAN RESPONSIBILITIES OF EMPIRE.

"Yesterday evening Mr. G. R. Parkin (from Canada) delivered a lecture, under the auspices of the St. Cuthbert's Young Men's Christian Association, in St. George's Parish Church, Edinburgh. The subject was 'The Christian Responsibilities of Empire'; and in the course of his lecture, Mr. Parkin said that pressing as were the problems that seemed more immediately to surround us in social life, he was yet satisfied that there was an urgent necessity for our applying the tests of Christianity to the wider scope of a national life—to measuring the ground on which we stood as Christian citizens of a mighty Empire. Of this, too, he was thoroughly convinced that if we could thus get a vivid conception of our national position, it would quicken and intensify every other form of Christian activity among us. Mr. Parkin went on to discuss our responsibilities as Christians, and at the same time as citizens of the British Empire, saying that the amazing impulse of our commercial and industrial instincts sent us to every country and every climate, making the range of our influence infinitely greater than that of our actual rule. Who would say that this astonishing combination of widespread dominion, of commercial energy, of all the appliances of modern civilization, might not be as much instruments in the hands of Providence for working out its high ends as was that in the early days of Christianity? The safety of the missionary under the British flag to-day meant as much as did the domination of Rome, and the privileges of its citizenship in the days of St. Paul. We must always remember that to the weaker races with which we dealt we sent both our best and our worst—not all Livingstones and Gordons, not all Outrams and Havelocks, but the mercenary trader, the reckless adventurer, the profligate 'ne'er do well' as well. This country ought to strive so to strengthen its Christian life at home and its Christian influence abroad that the mighty power won by national unity might be wielded on behalf of what we know to be right. Each in his own circle, great or small, ought to strive to bring the race to a consciousness of the Christian responsibilities which Empire laid upon us."

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—I beg to thank you for the instructive and interesting articles which usually constitute the leaders in the BANNER, and amongst them I am specially impressed with your remarks on the expansion of our Empire in Africa in the current number (November 22nd). Will you permit me to supplement your conclusions, and to refer you and (if you please) your readers to one or two other Scripture texts which appear to have a very distinct bearing on the subject. Not only do our restless energies, and our swarming population, compel us to work out our destined mission in the world, but it seems to me that in our divinely-ordered extensions and expansions, we are fulfilling other and most important functions—we are (I consider), in the hands of Almighty God, the executants of His righteous retribution. When Joshua got possession of the land for the children of Israel (our ancestors) the former inhabitants were displaced and dispossessed because of their abounding wickedness, and thus the people of God executed God's vengeance on the Canaanites, the Hivites, and the Perrizites; and in these latter days history repeats itself. In Ezek. xxv. 14 God says, "I will lay My vengeance upon Edom by the hand of My people Israel"; and in Jer. li. 20, we read, "Thou art My battle-axe and weapons of war: for with (or by) thee will I break in pieces the nations, and with (or by) thee will I destroy kingdoms."

Now, obviously, the Lord is visiting the bloodthirsty Matabeles with retributive justice by the hand of His people Israel, and this is, I submit, the plain teaching of Holy Scripture; for although, thank God, this is the day of grace, the nations are not as yet under the regime of grace, the time for the nations to "learn war no more" is as yet in the future. The Prince of Peace sways His blessed sceptre in the hearts of His regenerated people, but even they are conscious of their dual responsibilities (heavenly and earthly), and they are out of harmony with their heavenly Father's purposes if they do not recognise the governmental functions of His earthly people. To my mind, in the light of the Identity there is a peculiar force and adaptation to us (nationally) in the inspired and inspiring assurance in Psa. xlvi. 11, "The Lord of Hosts is with us, the God of Jacob is our refuge."

I remain, dear sir, faithfully yours in love and service,

ROBERT ADCOCK.

DEAR SIR,—I have two addresses to give on the 10th, at a mission church, and then my work for 1893 is over; but as I am very busy I cannot send my report until January. You will greatly oblige by inserting this in the BANNER, so that all the kind helpers may know I have not forgotten. My expenditure for the year will be £9 16s. I require £1 16s. 6d. to send in my report free of balance. It would save trouble if any kind friends who would like to help would send at once what they can afford.

Yours faithfully, H. A. MARCHANT.

MR. W. E. H. LECKY'S INAUGURAL LECTURE AT THE IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.

THE Winter Session at the Imperial Institute was inaugurated by the lecture of the historian, Mr. W. E. H. Lecky, on the Imperial Idea. The Prince of Wales presided, and there was a brilliant audience to listen to the address. The lecturer, no less than the various public journalists who have written on his utterances with adhesion and approval in the Times and Morning Post, are loud in their praise and admiration of the British Empire, its growth, wealth, extension, and splendour; but no one ventures to hint that the God of Israel, who is the God of nations, has had any hand in making, forming, or creating this empire, as we see it before us to-day! They speak of its wonders and its marvellous position, but can find no cause for its existence but "good fortune," its supremacy at sea, the daring, enterprise, resource, energy, and dogged, stubborn perseverance of its sons, who built it up during generations of manly effort. But not a word is said of the God of this nation, who gave our race the qualities named, and by their energies caused this wonderful empire to exist. We know better than the journalist, and even better than Mr. Lecky! We know that this glorious empire could not have existed, or risen to its present height without God's will, power, and help, making its citizens such as they are, and have been for a thousand years.

Herein, however, is a wonderful thing; that learned men, supported by royalty, can see the truth of what the lecturer described in such eloquent terms, and never think for an instant of connecting the mighty fabric of the British nation with the builder of empires, even with the God of all the earth! Men are unwilling even to think that He has the least influence upon affairs; but seize on the idea that accident, the peculiarities of race, a wonderful unaccountable succession of capable governors, civil servants, and military commanders, have directed the history of our nation, and caused it to attain the glorious eminence it has reached to-day! The lecturer at the Imperial Institute, spoke in the following style when he contemplated the Empire of Britain:—

England in the past periods of her history has on the whole been singularly successful in adapting her different administrations to widely different national circumstances and characters, and governments of the most various types have arisen under her rule. Nothing in the history of the world is more wonderful than that under the flag of these two little islands there should have grown up the greatest and most beneficent despotism in the world, comprising nearly 230 millions of inhabitants under direct British rule, and more than 50 millions under British Protectorates; while at the same time British colonies and settlements that are scattered throughout the globe number not less than 56 distinct subordinate Governments. This system would have been less successful if it had not been for two important facts. The original stuff of which our Colonial Empire was formed was singularly good. Some of the most important of our colonies were founded in the days of religious war, and the early settlers consisted largely of religious refugees, a class of men who are usually superior to the average of men in intellectual and industrial qualities, and are nearly always greatly superior to them in strength of conviction, and in those high moral qualities which play so great a part in the well-being of nations. Besides this, in those distant days the difficulties of emigration were so great that they were rarely voluntarily encountered except by men of much more than average courage, enterprise, and resource. These early adventurers were certainly often of no saintly type, but they were largely endowed with the robuster qualities that are most needed for grappling with new circumstances and carving out the empires of the future. The second fact is the high standard of patriotism and honour which we may, I think, truly say has nearly always prevailed among English public servants. It is not an easy thing to secure honest and faithful administration in remote countries, far from the supervision and practical control of the central Government. I think we may boast, with truth, that England has attained this end, not indeed perfectly, but at least to a greater degree than most other nations. The history of Indian and colonial Governors has never been written as a whole, but it is well worthy of study. In the appointment of these men party has always counted for something, and family has counted for something, but these have never been the only considerations, and on the whole I believe it will be found, if we consider the three elements of character, capacity, and experience, that our Indian and Colonial Governors represent a higher level of ruling qualities than has been attained by any line of hereditary sovereigns, or by any line of elected Presidents.

The concluding sentences of the lecturer, as reported by The Times, were, we think, peculiarly objectionable, as they assumed that the rise and progress of our nation had been entirely the work of its own sons, and in a sense denied that God had any influence in the matter. He said this :—

What may be the future place of these islands in the government of the world, no human being can foretell. Nations, as history but too plainly shows, have their periods of decay, as well as their periods of growth. The balance of power in the world is constantly shifting. Maxims and influences very different from those which made England what she is, are in the ascendant, and the clouds upon the horizon are neither few nor slight. But whatever fate may be in store for these islands, we may at least confidently predict that no revolution in human affairs can now destroy the future ascendancy of the English language, and of the Imperial race. Whatever misfortunes, whatever humiliations, the future may reserve to us, they cannot deprive England of the glory of having created this mighty empire.

> "Not heaven itself upon the past has power;
> That which has been, has been—and we have had our hour."

"England created this mighty empire!" Not England, but God, the God of Israel, the Lord Jehovah, did so! "This people," He declared in Isa. xliii. 21, R.V., "have I formed for Myself. They shall show forth My praise." He describes them at best as a "blind people;" and as "blind" He has led them hitherto, and will yet lead them to the end. In Isa. xlii. 16, R.V., their condition and His merciful pity towards them are graphically depicted; and it shows that so far from "England" having created its own empire, God has been the Author and Finisher of it; all their greatness, power, and usefulness being the result of His forethought and guidance. Whatever the British have to qualify them for the task of Empire-making has been the gift of God to them, to qualify them for a work He has carried out by their hands.

"A continuous succession of capable administrators" we have had no doubt, and they have been "animated by the highest public spirit." But God has created the men in the first place, endowed them with the proper qualifications, and sent them forth to do the work Great Britain has done in our Colonial and Indian Empires.

Mr. Lecky was not free from the spirit of pessimism, as we see from his lecture. But had he been an Anglo-Israelite he would have recognised the fact, "He who has begun a good work in us will perform it unto the end." God has promised to make us, being the seed of Abraham, "the heir of the world," and the possessors of "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven" (Dan. vii. 27; Rom. iv. 13). He has promised that our empire should become at last "a company of nations," with a central "nation" attached to it, and it is accordingly already a "grand Federation of States," such as has not been seen since the world began.

All these gifts our historian cannot but have seen and noticed for many years past in the history of our nation. But if he will compare the promises of God to His people Israel with our possessions he will find them all recorded there as His gifts to His chosen ones; but in enjoyment of the British by reason of their Identity with the Ten Lost Tribes. At the present moment a scare is passing over the land regarding the naval supremacy of the French and Russian fleets combined, in the Mediterranean, as compared with our own. The alarm is leading to its natural and expected result. The nation will probably, by a wise expenditure of 18 millions sterling or so, recover the lost ground; and with it their naval superiority, which, for the moment, seems to be in danger. God will act by means of the qualities of our race, which He has Himself implanted, and force our rulers to provide the money and the ships required to correct the balance, which is against us now. We wait the result with calmness! With the difficulty, He will find the cure, and Israel His people will praise His holy name!

DR. PEARSON'S "FORECAST."

By the Rev. Denis Hanan, D.D.

Speculations as to the future of this world, such as that published by Dr. Pearson, possess a twofold interest; firstly, with respect to the thoughts themselves, and the basis of truth or error upon which they are founded; and secondly, with respect to the way in which they are received and criticised.

"National Life and Character: a Forecast," by Charles H. Pearson, LL.D., has attracted much attention. It has decided merits of style and scholarly treatment, and his facts, based upon statistics, seem to fortify his views. The work has been reviewed in The Quarterly Review, and it has been made the theme of essays and addresses in many places. I do not intend to review the book or to follow the essayists. My present object is to note one most important element in any forecast of the future which has been utterly ignored by the writer, by reviewers, by essayists, and by speakers, both clerical and lay, and which I am almost safe in saying has not been mentioned in the many answers to Dr. Pearson's book which I have not seen.

Dr. Pearson's forecast is that of a pessimist. He thinks that the yellow and black races will multiply so much faster than the white that within a measurable period they will, by force of numbers, pen the Aryans into a comparatively narrow belt of temperate zone: and that, by making their expansion by emigration impossible, will so depress them that the enterprising spirit, which is the characteristic of the colonising nations, will die for want of exercise.

The day will come, and perhaps is not far distant, when the European observer will look round to see the globe girdled with a continuous zone of the black and yellow races, no longer too weak for aggression, or under tutilage, but independent, or practically so, in government, monopolizing the trade of their own regions, and circumscribing the industry of the European; when Chinamen and the natives of Hindostan, the states of Central and South America, by that time predominantly Indian, and it may be the African natives of the Congo and the Zambesi, under a dominant caste of foreign rulers, are represented by fleets in the European seas, invited to international conferences, and welcomed as allies in the quarrels of the civilized world. The citizens of these countries will then be taken up into the social relations of the white races, will throng the English turf, or the saloons of Paris, and will be admitted to intermarriage. It is idle to say that, if all this should come to pass our pride of place will not be humiliated. We were struggling among ourselves for supremacy in a world which we thought of as destined to belong to Aryan races and to the Christian faith: to the letters and arts and charm of social manners which we have inherited from the best times of the past. We shall wake to find ourselves elbowed and hustled, and perhaps even thrust aside, by peoples whom we looked down upon as servile, and thought of as bound always to minister to our needs.

If her people appear to be losing the impulse to better themselves outside England, or are denied the opportunity, we may surely assume that these changes will be accompanied by a transformation of character. Let us conceive the leading European nations to be stationary, while the Black and Yellow belt including China, Malaysia, India, Central Africa, and Tropical America, is all teeming with life, developed by industrial enterprise, fairly well administered by native governments, and owning the better part of the carrying trade of the world, can anyone suppose that, in such a condition of political society, the habitual temper of mind in Europe would not be profoundly changed? Depression, hopelessness, a disregard of invention and improvement would replace the sanguine confidence of races that at present are always panting for new worlds to conquer.

Dr. Pearson writes with the idea that Christianity is played out, and will, in the future, cease to produce a civilising influence. His conception of Christianity seems to be taken from the standard of a Neapolitan peasant, or of an English Salvation Army convert. The reviewers, essayists, and speakers meet him here, and shew that there is a living power in the religion of Jesus Christ, of which neither ignorance and superstition, nor parody, can take account. But all fail to see that the heirship of the world has already been bestowed, and that it has not been given either to the yellow or black races, nor yet to the white or Aryan, as a race. It is the alone inheritance of Abraham's heirs in the line of Isaac, of Jacob, and of Joseph; and no matter how sceptical men may be, the development of Ephraim-Israel, as a Christian people, is a present-day fact, which is a pledge of the ultimate and complete grant of the promised heirship. According to Dr. Pearson's forecast, England will feel the narrowing of the world more than any other Aryan nation, because she is increasing and multiplying far more quickly than they are. But this phenomenal increase is the means whereby the ultimate heirship will be given, and the pledge of it. All the races of men are to be blessed by Israel, by Israel in power and ruling. This world is to be ruled over by the Messiah, and, therefore, the heathen are to be His, Israel's, inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth her possession for Him.

What ever apparent or real tendency there may be towards the multiplication of the inferior races, the supremacy of Ephraim-Israel is secured. The prediction, "Blessed is he that blesseth thee, and cursed is he that curseth thee," holds good; whosoever falls upon that nation will be broken. On whomsoever it shall fall it will grind to powder, and Israel's modern existence, and her growth hitherto is a fact which, when recognised, will silence the scepticism which now ignores God's firstborn people. It is not strange that sceptics should err, when Christian ministers and leading laymen, who are not ashamed to profess the faith that is in them, should yet exhibit an utter ignorance of the frequently repeated statements made in Holy Scripture concerning the heirship of the world. This ignorance of God's declared purpose explains men's apathy as to Israel's existence, and their incapacity to perceive her marks of identity. And yet such forecasts as this of Dr. Pearson, and the interest that they cause, must tend towards the awakening of men's minds to that which is the true remedy for the downward trend of human development, to that which will be as life from the dead to the world; a world which, but for the assured future of Israel, might, as Dr. Pearson's statistics shew, lapse backward into the gloom of a semi-civilization, or into the darkness of pagan night. The true lesson to be learned from the volume is, that British-Israel's work is needed to overthrow the unbelief of many, and to avert the hopelessness of a world without a witness to the truth of the Faithful Promiser, the power of the Omnipotent Ruler, and the redeeming grace of Him in whom all the covenants were confirmed.

"Let all the nations be gathered together, and let the people be assembled . . . let them bring forth their witnesses. . . . Ye are My witnesses, saith the Lord and My servant whom I have chosen, that ye may know and believe, and understand that I am He. . . . Ye are My witnesses, saith the Lord that I am God. . . . I am the Lord your Holy One, the Creator of Israel, your King."

BRITISH CENTRAL AFRICA.

The following article appeared in The Times of Sept. 30, 1893, and will be perused with much interest by our readers:—

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

Fort Johnston, Nyassaland, June 21, 1893.

"For the first time in history the British ensign, flying in a British man-of-war, has floated above the waters of Lake Nyassa. It may be recollected that some time ago the Admiraty determined to put a gun-vessel on the Upper Shiré, and two other gunboats on the lake. The construction of these craft was intrusted to Messrs. Yarrow, of Poplar, who had previously built the stern-wheel gunboats Herald and Mosquito, which are now doing duty on the Zambesi. It was decided that the gun-vessel for the Upper Shiré should be a paddle steamer. She is of 20 ton displacement and 50-horse power, measures 60 feet long by 16 feet broad, draws 16 inches of water, carries one two-barrelled Nordenfelt gun, has a speed of eight knots, and is named the Dove. It was also decided that the boats for Lake Nyassa should be stern-wheelers like the Herald and Mosquito. They are named the Adventure and the Pioneer and are vessels of 35 tons displacement, 80-horse power, and 12 knots speed. The three boats, after having been put together and tried, were taken to pieces again, and sent out in a great number of transverse sections to Chindé, on the Chindé mouth of the Zambesi. It was there found that there were great difficulties in the way of obtaining water transport up the river for the sections: but fortunately, the German Anti-Slavery Society was at the time engaged in sending a large expedition under Major von Wissmann to place a German gunboat on Lake Nyassa. This expedition, a very well equipped one, was, when the British boats reached Chindé in October, 1892, delayed owing to the fact that the only German gunboat then on the Zambesi was unable to tow up against the stream the two large steel lighters in which were stowed Von Wissmann's stores and the materials for his boat. This condition of affairs enabled Lieutenant Robertson, R.N., of the Herald, to conclude an advantageous bargain with the Germans. He volunteered to permit the Herald and Mosquito to tow up the lighters, upon the understanding that he should then have the use of the lighters for the transport of the materials for the British boats, and his terms were gladly agreed to. So well did he manage that on November 7 the first portions of the British boats left Chindé, and by January 20 all the sections were stored at Ishikwawa, on the Shiré, about 300 miles up river. The loads had to be carried by land from Ishikwawa to Mpimbe, on the Upper Shiré, a distance of 80 miles, over a hilly country. Much difficulty was experienced in engaging porters, but the first loads were despatched about March 15, and by April 15 all were at Mpimbe. There is a particularly formidable piece of road between Ishikwawa and Blantyre. Within a distance of only four miles the tract ascends 4,000 feet, and although each waggon load was pulled by 90 Angoni, the task of moving heavy sections of steel gunboats over such a country proved well nigh insuperable. On April 25 the reconstruction of the Dove was begun, and on May 30 the vessel was launched. The reconstruction of the Pioneer was begun on May 22, and she will probably be launched on June 30, after which date she will be brought up to Fort Johnston to be fitted out. I ought not to omit to mention that in the rebuilding of these vessels Lieutenant Robertson is aided by only eight whites—viz., six naval artificers and two artificers who were sent out by Messrs. Yarrow. He has, however, six Indian riveters. In the meantime Major von Wissmann's expedition has collapsed. It did nothing, except, I fear, exasperate the natives, and it is about to return to Europe. Its surplus stores have been sold to the African Lakes Company, and its gunboat, which was to have patrolled Lake Nyassa, and which will not be completed until September, has been sold to the German East African Administration, and will be employed as an armed cargo-boat.

"The Dove, after her trials, came up to Fort Johnston, which is built upon a sandbank on the Upper Shiré, immediately opposite Mponda's Town, and which is surrounded by a marsh that has been bridged over. On June 17 Lieutenant Robertson, R.N., in command, with Lieutenant Charles Edwards, 35th Sikhs, commander of the fort, Mr. Nicoll, Collector of the South Nyassa district, and Baron von Eltz, second in command of Von Wissmann's ill-fated expedition, went on board, and set out for Port Maguire, on the south shores of Nyassa. A run of little more than five miles brought the Dove to Port Maguire, where the bank descends so precipitously into the lake that the gunboat was taken close along side, and the party was able to step ashore. The Germans have erected a strong stockaded fort at that place, and they hospitably entertained the British visitors. In a direct line Fort Maguire is only about three miles from Fort Johnston. The Germans are about to utilize it for the fitting out of gunboat Hermann von Wissmann, which has already been towed up to Fort Johnston by the Dove, and which is now waiting here for her boilers to be hoisted in. Moreover, a couple of trading firms acquired land for storehouses, &c., at the Port, and there is every probability that the spot will be chosen as the German naval headquarters on the Lake. As the Dove returned in a dead calm, those on board were able to judge of the extraordinary clearness of the water. At a depth of 15ft. the colours of shells lying on the bottom could be clearly distinguished. There is a bar at the exit of the Shiré, but across it in one place was found a channel which has a minimum depth of 6ft., so that there is absolutely nothing to impede the passage of light draught steamers.

"I have reason to believe that both the commissioner, Mr. H. H, Johnston, and Lieutenant Robertson are of opinion that one British gunboat, the Pioneer, will suffice for Nyassa, and that the Adventure should be sent on to Lake Tanganyika. The sections could be carried by the Pioneer to the north end of Nyassa, and near Karonga plenty of porters can be obtained. The transit thence to Tanganyika would occupy only 18 days. Representations to this effect have been sent home, and I trust that they will bear fruit. We have been the first to put a gunboat on Nyassa. We can, if we choose, be the first to put one on Tanganyika: and the doing so would be a feather in the national cap. The Arabs are ready to welcome us, as they admit that we always treat them fairly, while they refuse to say as much either of the Germans or of the Congo State officials, who, they declare, 'break all their promises.' The tension between the Arabs and the Belgians is such that I have grave fears for the fate of the Belgian expedition which is about to proceed by this route to Tanganyika to relieve M. Jacques. The expedition has already reached Chiromo, on the Lower Shiré. The possibly hostile Arabs can put 10,000 guns and rifles into the field, and are really formidable as foes.

"With some minor items of news I will bring this letter to an end. The first consignment of plant for the telegraph line from Mashonaland to Uganda has arrived at Beira and Chindé, and some of it is coming up country immediately. The line is to be laid simultaneously in Mashonaland and in the Shiré Highlands. It will probably cross the Shiré river near Ishikwawa, about two miles above Katunga. Captain Johnson, with 80 Sikhs, is engaged in building a strong fort at the Chesa pass, which crosses the Mlanji mountains and which constitutes the only possible slave route between the Shiré Highlands and Portuguese territory. Lieutenant Robertson has taken the Dove down to Mpimbe, and in the first week in July will, it is expected, return with the Pioneer in tow. He purposes to set up a sort of dockyard and to fit her out here. Rear Admiral Bedford is to pay us a visit in August, and I suspect that he will then decide whether or not Fort Johnston shall be the future naval headquarters in British Central Africa."

July 8.

"Since I last wrote we have received news which cannot but have an important bearing upon the future development of British Central Africa. Two years ago, as many of your readers will recollect, Captain Maguire, the gallant and very brilliant officer who was in command of the troops here, was killed in a fight with the Chief Makanjira, who has ever since been very hostile to the British, and who has, no doubt, been perfectly aware that we did not intend to let that matter, and his murder of the two Envoys, pass into oblivion. On the night of June 25 Makanjia and his son Zarafi were drinking pombé together and talking over the coming war with the British. Zarafi pointed out that many of Makanjira's people were leaving their villages and settling down on the other side of Nyassa, and even on the Shiré, and that, for his part, he intended to submit and to make terms with Commissioner Johnston. Makanjira angrily replied that he would shoot Zarafi if the latter did anything of the kind, whereupon Zarafi, having a gun at his side, promptly shot his father, and assumed the chieftainship. This makes very much for peace, for, even if Zarafi should not come in directly, he will certainly do so as soon as we deal decisively with Koingha, the truculent chief near Zomba, and then all will be quiet from the Ruo to the north of Lake Nyassa.

"I ought to add something about Wissmann's expedition, the Europeans of which, as I have already told you, are to return to Europe. Last January, having left Baron von Eltz to build the Hermann von Wissmann at Mpimbe, Wissmann went with his Soudanese and Abyssinians to the north end of Nyassa, and formed a station there near the river Lubisa. Since that time he has been fighting with a tribe of the Wanyika in some mountainous country north of the Stevenson Road and south of Lake Rukwa. According to latest accounts, he had thrice assaulted a stockaded village, and on the third occasion had carried it with a loss of three killed and 14 wounded. The Hermann von Wissmann, now belonging to the German East Africa Company, is fitting at Port Maguire, and will be completed in September."

"THE ETHICS OF EMPIRE."

A Lecture by Mr. Alfred Milner.

The following report of a lecture in Edinburgh by Mr. A. Milner, of the Egyptian Civil Service, will be perused with great interest by the readers of the Banner. We propose to offer a few words of comment on the lecturer's views, when our readers have digested them. The report appeared in The Scotsman, of November 6, 1893, and was as follows:—

Mr. Alfred Milner, late Under Secretary for Finance in Egypt, delivered last evening the first of a course of lectures in the Synod Hall, Castle-terrace, Edinburgh, in connection with St. Cuthbert's Young Men's Christian Association. Having as his subject "The Ethics of Empire," Mr. Milner began by remarking that when, some months ago, he undertook to address them, he naturally could not foresee that the problems which confronted them with regard to the black races of South Africa, would at this moment have entered a phase of acute crisis, or that names like those of Khama and Lobengula would be on the lips of all men. What induced him to choose his subject was rather the fact that he was fresh from some years' experience of Egypt, in which, though in a very different form, a problem somewhat similar was presented for solution. It was a long cry from the Cape to Cairo, from Cairo to Calcutta, or from any of these to the islands of the Carribean Sea, or to those which studded the vast expanse of the Pacific Ocean. Yet distant as these regions were, and different in climate, in population, in physical and social condition, they saw in them all this common spectacle—a number, here greater, there less, in each case comparatively small, of their own countrymen placed in a position of command, virtual or avowed, over a vastly greater mass of men of another race and colour. What he asked them to consider was the reason of this predominance, its justification if it had one, and its consequences—its consequences more especially in regard of the duties it imposed upon, the qualities it demanded in the ruling people.

Mr. Milner then proceeded to show how the empire of Great Britain was only an illustration, though so far the most conspicuous in history, of the general principle that close intercourse between races of widely different degrees of civilization tended to end in the subjection of the lower to the higher race. If they asked why it should have fallen to their own country rather than to France, rather than to Germany, rather than to any of their great Continental rivals, to be the classical instance of this principle, the answer was doubtless to be found in Great Britain's mastery of the sea. Time did not permit him to enter into the history of the process by which Britain's over-sea dominion had been acquired. He only called attention to its involuntary character, to the fact that they had empire thrust upon them. He did not say that this had invariably been the case. Of late days, following the example set by other nations, they had joined in what had been aptly described as the "Scramble for Africa," and annexed enormous territories of the Dark Continent, not so much because they wanted to own them themselves, as because they feared to be excluded from them altogether if they came to be owned by rivals. But this was not the manner in which they acquired their earlier, and what was still vastly the most important of their foreign dominions, the Empire of India. Proceeding to direct attention to the problems which the existence of Britain's great foreign dominion involved, Mr. Milner said, that undoubtedly the Briton of to-day regarded these questions in a much more anxious and self-examining spirit than he formerly did. The thought that he was inheritor of an empire on which the sun never set was no longer the old simple satisfaction to him. The ambition which lusted for more territory, the commercial acquisitiveness which ranged the world in search of fresh markets—these old and potent forces making for extension had now to reckon much more than formerly with the influences of philanthropy and religion, with a growing sensitiveness of the popular conscience as to the methods by which they extended, the objects for which they exercised their authority over weaker races. Let them take, for instance, the question, still hanging in the balance, of the retention of Uganda. If they decided to retain that country, it was humanitarian considerations which would have turned the scale. Every patriotic and right-minded man would rejoice at this increasing sensitiveness of the national conscience with regard to the conduct of Imperial affairs. But while they might feel a legitimate pride at the existence and strength of the sentiment, which made for a humane treatment of the weaker races, for the government of the empire in the interests of the governed, it would surely require a very thick-skinned optimism to be satisfied with all its manifestations. It was impossible not to wish that that sensitive national conscience should be a little more practical and consistent, that it should be less irregular in its appearance, and less erratic in its dictates—above all that it should show itself in a steady constant pressure towards the discharge of permanent duties, not in spasmodic and often hysterical outbursts of moral reprobation at particular acts of cruelty or wrong. For long spaces of time the public conscience was practically asleep with regard to Imperial questions. When it did wake up, it sometimes seemed as if it would atone for the length and profundity of its past neglect by the unreasoning violence of its momentary activity. What were the times when as a nation they began to have qualms as to the righteousness of extending their dominions? Was it not generally when they were face to face with the burdensome consequences of such extension? When did they begin to question the justice of the annexation of the Transvaal? It was after Majuba. Since when had they been feeling doubts as to the morality of the proceedings of the British South African Company, and the desirableness of leaving the administration of a vast territory in the hands of a commercial corporation? Since the Company had become involved, and had involved the country, in a war with the Matabele. Whether that war was right or wrong—he for his part thought it was sooner or later inevitable—it seemed to be very generally felt now that as a nation they were in a false position with regard to it. The original mistake was made of abdicating to a commercial company the proper functions of the Imperial Government. Yet this was done, when it was done, not indeed without isolated protests, but with general public approval. As a nation they wanted the vast expanse of Southern Africa up to the Zambesi, with all its possibilities of latent wealth; but they did not want the trouble of taking it, or the expense of governing it as it should be governed. What a strange light it threw upon their sensitive national conscience, upon their boasted humanitarianism, upon the high morality which by fits and starts was invoked to decide delicate questions of Imperial policy, that they should have been so anxious, as a nation, to acquire territories for which they were equally anxious not to be responsible. If there was one sure, clear, and indisputable principle in these matters, if there was one axiom in the ethics of empire, it was that no civilized nation was justified in grasping more territory than it was capable or willing to govern in accordance with civilized principles. In nothing that he said did he wish to attack or in any way asperse the two great Chartered Companies of recent creation—the South African and the East African Company. So far from blaming them, he admired the spirit and the patriotism which induced them to step in and fill the blank left by unwillingness of the nation to pay for what it yet wanted to have. It was impossible not to hope that, now that they were waking up to their national obligations to the African races within their sphere of influence, this rousing of the public conscience might take the form, not of impotent criticism, of weak ululation over the inevitable consequences of their past policy, but of a resolute determination to take upon themselves in the future the burden of the administration, while leaving the companies their proper business of the development of the trade. Whatever might be the ultimate political destiny of those countries, it was surely clear that they could not, unless they repudiated their national obligations altogether, withdraw the control of Imperial authority until some permanent modus vivendi had been arrived at between the settlers and the aborigines, and those among the latter who were capable of some sort of civilization, had had allotted to them definate territories and rights. Such a settlement was no doubt a delicate task, especially in view of the exasperation of colonial feeling, and the extraordinary jealousy which their fellow-countrymen in South Africa felt of any interference from home. But in this, as in other cases, it would be far easier for them to discharge their Imperial duties, if they did not seek to shirk the corresponding responsibilities. It was fair to remember that if the South African colonists sometimes appeared unmanageable, it was those at home who had made them so by their eternal shilly-shallying with the native question. First they did their best to get rid of the burden of that question, and to throw it entirely upon the colonists. But as soon as the colonists dealt with it in any way which did not commend itself to their notions of justice and humanity, they began to intervene. That was an impossible policy, and it was no wonder that the colonists resented it. If they wished to control the action of the colonists, and to shape the future of the country on lines which they at home considered morally justifiable, they must be prepared to take upon themselves the burden of seeing the colonists through their troubles with the native tribes. They could not expect the colonists to bear the burden of Government, and themselves at home to exercise the power.

In the above Mr. Milner asked some remarkable questions, which nothing can answer correctly except the scriptural promises bearing on Our Identity.

1. Why, throughout the wide world, do the British, invariably, in greater or smaller numbers, bear rule in the vast majority of cases, over masses of men of an alien race and colour?

2. Since the rule is, that the higher and more civilized race in contact with a lower, invariably dominates over the latter, why is the dominant power throughout the heathen world, not France or Germany, or some other Continental nation, but the British; even ourselves? The lecturer answered by declaring that it was so "because of Great Britain's mastery of the sea!"

Here, then, is a chain of reasoning which can only be reconciled with facts by reference to God's promises "to Abraham and his seed for ever." Find a race in which these things are true, then you have found lost Israel—i.e., Ephraim-Israel. For in Deut. xxviii. 1 and 13, we have God's promise to Israel-obedient (that is, obedient to Christ's commands), that He would "set them on high above all nations of the earth," for "the Lord would make them," He says, "the head and not the tail, above only and not beneath." The dominant power according to the Bible, is one only—namely, Israel. To them is promised in Dan. vii. 27, "the kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven," as "the people of the saints of the Most High." For they, with Abraham, are "the heirs of the world" (Rom. iv. 13).

When Mr. Milner tells us, however, that all this greatness and goodness has accrued to this nation by reason of their "mastery of the sea," we are quite ready to acquiesce if he will allow to us that the British are Israel. "The mastery of the sea," in our modern times, is given to the power which possesses the coaling stations of the world, in these days of steam. These are "the Gates" of the ocean highways of the world, and according to God's Word, "the Gates of Israel's enemies." The British is the only race to whom is given the possession of the Gates as a matter of fact, and we possess them by one title only—namely, that we are Israel, and heirs thereof according to the sworn promise of the Most High. By means of the Gates we have always acquired the mastery of the seas, and of the lands of our enemies, and they are the foundation of all our national greatness according to the Scriptures. It comes, then, to this, that our nation is dominant in the earth because they are Israel, and because of God's promises to them. Also that as a means to that end, God has given to them the mastery of the seas, since He has given to us, being Israel, the possession of the Gates of our enemies, which makes us mistress of the oceans, and of the lands of those that hate us.

A fine point is made by Mr. Milner in regard to the involuntary character of the over-sea possessions of our race. We did not want or covet them. They were mostly forced upon us by circumstances beyond our control. Our occupation of Egypt in and since 1882 is an instance of this. So was our acquisition of India, of Burmah, of the Cape Colonies, Central Africa, and even of Canada and the Mauritius. God has forced us to occupy them all, and made us wealthy and powerful by reason of the riches these countries bring us. "He giveth us power to get wealth, that He may establish His covenant which He sware unto our fathers as it is this day" (Deut. viii. 18).

In God's selection of us as a people for so grand a future, our nation had no cause for self-exaltation and conceit. In ourselves we have no merit; but God chose the afterseed of Abraham to bless the world, its nations, and its families; and we are now carrying out our destiny, because God is faithful, and true, and just. To fit us for the work of world-wide evangelization, He gives us the needful powers, and qualifications; and to Him shall be all the praise!

LITERAL v. SPIRITUAL.

By John S. Anderson.

It would appear that there really is some sort of a desire on the part of our clergy to approach the subject of our Israelitish origin, but advances are made in such a curious manner that we are afraid little good will result for some time to come.

Many do not seem to be able to clearly distinguish between Israel and Judah, while others deliberately tell us that we are Gentiles pure and simple, and to get over sundry difficulties fall back upon the spiritualising system so manifestly un-Biblical.

Not long since we heard a sermon on the concluding chapters of the prophet Ezekiel, commencing at chap. xl. We were informed that the prophecies of Ezekiel were pretty well understood up to this, but that it was different with regard to the vision, contained in the chapters under consideration, which was very obscure.

Amongst other comments it seemed to the preacher that the measurements of the city were so large that there was nothing to be done but to take them in a spiritual sense, and, in fact, call it the Church.

Curiously enough in the midst of this intensely interesting prophecy, after God had appointed the division of the land, in chap. xlvii. ver. 22, 23, it is written, (22) "And it shall come to pass that ye shall divide it by lot for an inheritance unto you, and to the strangers that sojourn among you, which shall beget children among you: and they shall be unto you as born in the country among the children of Israel; they shall have inheritance with you among the tribes of Israel."

Ver. 23, "And it shall come to pass, that in what tribe the stranger sojourneth, there shall ye give him his inheritance, saith the Lord God."

In what manner would the rev. gentleman explain this part of the vision? Here we have in the Word of God a distinct statement that the land, real actual land, is to be divided by lot amongst the tribes of Israel for an inheritance, why then should not another part of the same prophecy be taken in its actual literal sense?

We think a clearer instance of the fallacy of substituting spiritual for literal interpretation of the Bible could hardly be found.

"THE SCRIPTURE CANNOT BE BROKEN"

(John x. 35.)

By A. Henly.

Our Lord in uttering these solemn words, "The Scripture cannot be broken," referred of course to the Old Testament Scriptures, Moses and the prophets, with the Psalms, as at the time He spoke none of the books of the New Testament had been written. Our Lord by His teaching, was laying the foundation in the apostles' minds, upon which they in the future should build up as it were the New Testament. It is very clear that His intention was that the New Testament should in no wise contradict the Old, but in every particular be in agreement with it. The Scriptures, old and new, as we have them, are, we believe, the revelation of the mind and will of God to man, in so far as He has seen fit to make them known, and must of necessity be in agreement one with the other, for "Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" (2 Peter i. 21), and the Spirit who taught man could make no mistake, because "the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God" (1 Cor. ii. 10). Those Scriptures inform us that God changes not (Mal. iii. 6). That we may have confidence that the Scriptures are true He tells us that "God is not a man that He should lie" (Num. xxiii. 19); and to give us assurance that what He promises He will perform He tells us that He is not a "Son of man that He should repent" of any promises He has made, as so many of our race repent when they have made promises they either are unable or unwilling to perform. Our Lord, then, who is one with the Father, was so confident that whatever God had bound Himself to in the Scriptures that He fully intended to perform, so that there was no possibility of the Scripture being broken, and He uttered the very definite assurance that the Scriptures cannot be broken, as a moral impossibility.

We do not lay sufficient stress on these important words, and we scarcely realise the absolute fact, that of all the promises God has made by the mouth of His holy prophets since the world began, He fully intends to fulfil them all. We are so accustomed to see that the promises mankind make to one another are so often broken that we can scarcely understand that there should be one source of eternal truth, which shall never falter nor waver, but shall always fulfil His promises to the jot and tittle. Could it be otherwise, Where would eternal truth be? There could be then no such thing, and on what could man fall back in his inmost desire to know "What is truth?" So we see from necessity this assurance that "the Scripture cannot be broken," is only the expression of eternal truth that had already existed through eternity with the Deity. True, there were others who had no conception of truth, or at least no love for it; for the Scripture informs us that in the devil "there is no truth," and that when he speaketh a lie he speaketh of his own, for he is a liar, and the father of it" (John viii. 44). God will never learn in Satan's school to lie by repudiating His own word and promises.

We shall do well, then, to take more heed to the promises of God, and take notice more particularly to whom He has made them. We should learn, too, to apply the promises to the individual, or people, to whom God made them, for when He makes a promise to one He does not intend fulfilling it to another, whether it be to an individual or a nation. When He promises temporal blessings or curses, they are both and alike intended to take effect in temporal matters. He makes temporal promises, and eternal promises. He does not confound one with the other, nor give one instead of the other. The word when once gone out of His mouth will never be altered, but fully accomplished. Although we may have been accustomed to think (as, alas! we have been too often taught) that it is impossible that many of the promises can now be fulfilled, yet we may be sure that God is able to perform, when our unbelief has so blinded our eyes that we cannot see the possibility of their accomplishment. Although we may say that it is quite impossible that many of God's promises can be fulfilled to the people to whom they were made, or if we assert that they have not been fulfilled when the time of their fulfilment has passed, yet that statement does not do away with the fact that the promise was made by God, and that in all fairness and justice and right, He is bound to fulfil it, as He spake it. If not, where is the faithfulness of God of which ye speak?

Alas! that so many Bible students have got it into their minds that God is not only going to perjure His sacred Word and promises, but that He actually has done so, and they point to the fact that the Jews do not possess the blessings promised to Israel. Again, in referring to the promises, they can see that the Anglo-Saxon race (including, of course, the United States of America), which they call a Gentile race, are now in actual possession of many, nay, most of the splendid temporal, and some of the spiritual blessings promised exclusively to Israel, and that they possess them to the exclusion of other nationalties. The pains these people are at in twisting the Scriptures so as to make believe that the Church of Christ is the recipient of the blessings promised to temporal Israel is painful. It is of the nature of the act of Uzza, who "put forth his hand to hold the ark because the oxen stumbled"; because they think, that God having broken His promise to Israel, must have His character for faithfulness propped up by a subterfuge of some kind.

I am not now going to bring any argument to bear upon the subject as to whether the Anglo-Saxon race are in fact really the descendants of the Ten Tribes of Israel that separated from the tribe of Judah in the reign of Rehoboam, under Jeroboam, or not (although I believe, without a doubt, that they are); but I want it to be understood that in the Scriptures (which cannot be broken, remember) God promised certain blessings to Israel, and He is bound to perform them to the same people, and at the same time that His word indicates they were to be fulfilled.

It becomes all Bible students not thus to handle the Word of God deceitfully any longer, but to seek for truth by the light of the Spirit of God, who will not lead them into a bungling maze, but will make the Scriptures plain before them, and will set them at liberty from the tradition of the elders, and settle them on the "sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place" (2 Pet. i. 19).

SIR COLIN MONCRIEFF ON "THE NILE."

THE lecturer at Toynbee Hall, Whitechapel, London, on Saturday evening, was Sir Colin Scott Moncrieff, who addressed a large audience on the subject of "The Nile, and what it is to Egypt." Mr. Ernest Aves, M.A., took the chair. Before speaking on the irrigation question, Sir Colin called attention to what he termed two striking facts. The first was the size, compared with the great importance of Egypt. In estimating its size one took the valley of the Nile only, and the area of that tract of country was found to be one and a half times that of Wales, so that Egypt proper would have to be expanded eight-fold to make it as large as Great Britain. Its importance was due largely to its fertility, and also to its value as a military position. The second fact was the extreme antiquity of the country, which he might illustrate by saying that when Moses looked upon the Pyramids they were as old then as the Acropolis of Athens was now. Herodotus had said truly that Egypt was the gift of the Nile. The fact that the river overflowed its banks each year with such beneficial results was common knowledge, but it was not so generally known how advantage was taken of the flood, and how it was controlled. The system of irrigation that had, as there was reason to believe, been practised from the earliest times, and which in Upper Egypt was practised to this day, was as follows:—Along each side of the river was constructed an earthern embankment, so high that it could not be covered by the highest flood. Beyond, running right across the valley, were constructed a series of embankments. Between the embankments were sluices, through which, as the Nile rose, in August and September, the water ran into the channels, where it remained for about six weeks, during which time a considerable quantity of mud was deposited. In this mud the Egyptian, in due course, sowed his seed and reaped an abundant crop. This system it was which made Egypt the granary of the ancient world. During the present century a great deal had been done towards improving the mode of irrigation in Egypt. It occurred to the French engineer Manjian to build a great dam or barage, which would stop the onward flow of the river and permit of its being diverted into canals, and he put his plan into execution. Its construction dragged on for a number of years, but it was opened at last with great ceremony in 1861. In 1863 it began to crack. In 1869 there took place an alarming settlement of the whole work, resulting in its abandonment. When he (Sir Colin) and others from India went to Egypt in 1883 they found the work of irrigation being carried on by corvee, or forced labour, and the first thing that struck him was the wretched manner in which the work was turned out. The question arose—What ought to be done? It was out of the question to increase the taxation. He himself thought they might create an improvement if they gave the men a chance of redeeming themselves. Ultimately they fixed 6s. per head as the redemption price, and they succeeded in collecting £116,535. With this sum they invited tenders for dredging the canals, and got three companies to start the work. In the meantime our rule was beginning to tell in many ways, and money was coming in without burdening the people, and Nubar Pasha managed, in spite of great opposition, to make over a grant to the Irrigation Department of £250,000 to redeem the corvee. In 1890 they got it abolished. Of course, they had to deal with the barage, which was a somewhat difficult matter. They examined its foundations, which consisted of nothing more substantial than alternate layers of mud and sand. They widened the floor, and covered it with a layer of concrete and stone masonry four feet thick. Altogether, including the cost of 1,000 miles of drains, they had spent £460,000, and the result had been an annual increase of the crops by 70,000 tons, or an annual increase of the revenue by £2,555,000. He would add, in conclusion, that since Cheops built his pyramid the working classes in Egypt had not been so well off as they were at the present day.—The Scotsman, Nov. 13th, 1893.

"ISRAEL PRE-ORDAINED TO BE THE CHIEF NATION IN CHRISTIAN TIMES."

ON November 20th last, the Rev. J. Idrisyn Jones, of Welshpool, delivered a lecture on the above subject, at a meeting of the British-Israel Association, in the Memorial Hall, Clifton. Dr. Arthur B. Prowse was in the chair, and Col. Senior and Philo-Israel supported the lecturer on the platform. The address was to the following effect:—

Our solar system is constructed on a plan which provides a governing body, called the sun, round which all the planets circulate, and from which all derive life, and light, and motion. The watch which we carry about us to tell us of the progress of time, has its main-spring, which is the centre of the mechanism, and regulates and gives motion to the rest. So God has always carried on the Government of the world by using the instrumentality of one race or nation which He has recognised as the greatest or chief of all. This has obtained in times past, is so now, and will be to the end. The Scriptures tell us that this is the Divine arrangement, and that the nation which He has designed to be the chief of all, to carry out His plans for all the rest of mankind, is Israel. We may ask then, judging from experience, what sort of a nation would God select to be the chief among the rest at the present hour, to carry out His will in regard to the nations of the earth? Let us suppose the Chinese were selected. Its inhabitants are steeped in barbarism and would never fulfil God's designs! Suppose the French were the chosen race. That people are infidel to the core, totally unfitted to do the work of a holy God. Supposing the Russians were the people. They are but half-civilized and could not but fail to do the Lord's work. Egypt? She is only half emerged from semi-barbarism, and cannot even help herself. The Egyptians would never be fit for the duty. But if, after exhausting the list of the nations, we ask at last, Supposing the British were the chosen nation?

then in truth we should have a people exactly fitted for the design proposed by the Most High! They would, as experience proves, be qualified to bless the nations, and have the will and power to benefit them in temporal and spiritual concerns as well, and to embrace, in their beneficent operations, all nations, all families, and all kindreds of the earth. But this was exactly and precisely Israel's destiny as described in the Word of God! Israel's mission was to be the chief of the nations, and as such, to bless them all. This is apparent from such a text as Deut. xxxii. 8. There Israel is described as the main-spring of the watch. "The bounds of the nations" were fixed by the God of nations "according to the number of the children of Israel," who were thus made the dominant factor among them. In Deut. xxviii. 1—13 again we have a sublime description of Israel, obedient to God's law in Christ Jesus, showing them to be a nation "set high above all the nations of the earth;" "the head and not the tail," above only, "but not beneath;" so the supreme race—the chief among all the rest! Another passage to the like purport is found in Micah v. 8, when Israel, compared with the other nations (in a figure) is represented "as a lion among the beasts of the forest," as a young lion among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, treadeth down, teareth in pieces, and there is none to deliver." As a lion! The chief, therefore, of the nations. The king of beasts;—the first of the powers of earth! But, besides this, the chieftainship of Israel was secured to them by covenant from God! The appointment, therefore, cannot change or vary! The promise of God to Israel was that she should greatly multiply, that she should Colonize the earth, and go out and possess it. She must, therefore, have been designed by God for greatness as a nation. She must be able, therefore, to overawe and control the other surrounding peoples. She was to have great wealth, immense influence, and vast power to enable her to protect her colonial sons, and her missionary agents working for her or settled in foreign lands. There was, besides, God's direct appointment of Abraham to be "the heir of the world;" and whatever combinations of powers were ever formed against him or his seed, the Lord undertook to enable Israel to override them all, and to conquer. Such was Israel's destiny as revealed in Scripture.

But it may be asked here, how does all this prove that Israel was to be "the chief nation in Christian times?" Many in the present day—the Christian Church being especially forward in the matter—declare that so far from Israel being destined to be a great nation in the Christian dispensation, she long since died as a nation and was buried out of sight! This they say was proved by our Lord Himself when He addressed His people the Jews thus: "Oh! Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not? Behold your house is left unto you desolate!" But we would ask, Is it Scriptural to describe the House of Israel as "dead and buried," extinct and never to be seen again? It was, to begin with, as a matter of probability, exceedingly unlikely that Israel should be extinct when the Lord came to suffer. Her promises had not been fulfilled. To destroy her before her promises were given her to enjoy would be as unreasonable as to pluck a pear not yet ripe. We ought not, then, to cease to look for Israel in the present Christian dispensation. The Mosaic dispensation overlapped into the Christian dispensation and the religion of Christ was a development, or new storey, added to the existing Mosaic building or dispensation. God's covenant made with Abraham was expressly given, as described in Gen. xvii. 7, as an "everlasting one." The Adamic covenant failed. The covenant made with Noah failed. The covenant with Israel was God's last proposal; and it cannot fail, for it is "everlasting." The prophecies of Jacob, of Balaam, and of Daniel carried Israel's history into the "last" or "latter days," and they are our own times. Reference to Gen. xlix. 1, Numb. xxiv. 14, and Dan. ii. 28, will prove this assertion.

There were, in the next place, portions of God's covenant with Abraham, which clearly belong and refer to the Christian dispensation. Thus Israel's vast population, and the boundaries assigned to her in Deut. xxxii. 8 (already alluded to) were never true of her in times prior to the first advent, but they are true of her as British-Israel to-day in the Christian dispensation. "The nation and a company of nations" promised to Israel has become a unique British fact to-day for the first time in the Christian dispensation. Not Abraham only, but Sarah also shared in the promises as conveyed to her in Gen. xvii. 16. These promises are only under fulfilment now. Israel was to be the missionary people to all nations; but the fulfilment could only take place after the first advent of Christ. After it the first messengers of grace to go forth were Israelites, as distinguished from Jews; thus showing by actual historical facts that Christianity was the development of Judaism. Christ's Church was built upon the Jewish Church, and the one was the outcome of the other. Is the chief nation of our Christian times either Babylon, Rome, Egypt, France, Russia, or Germany? No! None of these can be reckoned as being the chief of all the nations, but Great Britain and her vast Empire do constitute the great and mighty chief of the nations according to the prophecies. In proof of this position the lecturer quoted Victor Hugo's and the Russian Vernadski's wonderful remarks regarding the British Empire and people, their greatness and their supremacy among the nations. (See Poole's "Anglo-Israel," pp. 290 and 291:—these passages have appeared in the BANNER, and also in other works). As Napoleon I. admitted, we "dwell alone." But so was Israel to "dwell alone." On these and other grounds the lecturer concluded that Israel was preordained to be the chief nation in Christian times, and that the British people were abundantly proved to be they.

COL. SENIOR'S LIMELIGHT LANTERN LECTURE IN BRISTOL.

ON Monday evening, November 27, last, Col. Senior delivered his limelight lecture at Old King-street, Baptist Chapel, Philo-Israel being in the chair. The subject was, "Israel Lost and Israel Found." The attendance was not encouraging; but the lecture and the dissolving views illustrating "The Gates," and the general subject of "Our Identity" was very successful and deeply interesting. The pictures included the Channel Islands, Gibraltar, Malta, Cyprus, Constantinople, Egypt, Aden, various scenes and stations in India, the Islands of Hong Kong, the Mauritius, Ceylon, Burmah; Singapore, the chief cities of Australia, Tasmania, and New Zealand; with views taken in Africa, Canada, the West Indies, the Falklands, and some views of spots in the Pacific Ocean; not omitting also the Suez Canal, and some of our most magnificent metropolitan buildings, such as the Royal Exchange, &c.

We hope Col. Senior may be invited to take his slides and his lantern to all parts of the kingdom, and under the auspices of the various associations put before our little-travelled fellow-countrymen the views he has obtained of so large a portion of Israel's Empire, with evidences, not to be put aside, of its vast wealth, immense size, and world-wide importance. The lecture abounds with statistical information as to the wealth and naval power of this nation, and the whole from first to last is an "Identity" address, which we believe, from its limelight illustrations, is sure to make our subject popular, and disseminate valuable information in respect to it among the people. We recommend our friends, when they have a chance, to attend one of Col. Senior's lectures, and to take other friends with them too.—Editor of the BANNER and Chairman of the Meeting.

NOTES BY S. A. M.

To call drunkenness our "national sin" is a misapprehension of the adjective "national," which properly pertains to a nation in its corporate capacity. Lamentable and prevalent as is drunkenness among thousands of individuals in our guilty nation, laws enforcing inebriation would be necessary to constitute it a "national sin;" as well might we so term lies and all sins, many of fraud and iniquity, to which man is prone.

The old English custom of throwing a shoe after a newly-wedded pair may be regarded as suggestive of our Israelitish foregatherings, if we refer to the ceremony on the occasion of the important wedding recorded in chapter iv. of Ruth.

BRITISH-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—It is with pleasure I have to report on the work done in this town in spreading the great Truth. The association holds a meeting on the fourth Tuesday of every month for formal business, and on the second Tuesday they hold an advertised public meeting for the expounding of the Truth. On Tuesday, October 10, the Rev. William Bradley, one of our vice-presidents, gave a public lecture as per enclosed handbill, and although the night was unpropitious, a storm breaking over the city at the time, we were gratified by having a good attendance. Had the night been fine we believe the hall would have been filled. After the lecture a number of questions were asked, and the replies elicited gave evident satisfaction. I notice from the BANNER that the Rev. Dr. Wild is about to make a tour of the world. We do so hope he will visit us, in which case, we will, I think, so far tax his good nature as to ask him to give us a lecture or two. With every hope of God's blessing upon all the workers in the good and glorious cause.

I am, dear sir, yours very sincerely,

HOWARD S. BLISS.

"BRITISH-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION. — President: Mr. T. W. Connah; Vice-Presidents: Rev. William Bradley, and Mr. S. Grimley; Treasurer: Mr. D. McClay; Secretary: Mr. Howard S. Bliss. British-Israel Lecture! By Rev. William Bradley, in the Young Men's Christian Association Hall, Elizabeth-street, on Tuesday, Oct. 10, 1893. Subject: 'The Ten Tribes are now in Existence as a Nation, doing Active and Efficient Work in the Interests of Christianity.' Chair to be taken by the President. Commence at 8 p.m. Admission free.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—Staying for a few days in the city of Carlisle, I went on Sunday to the Parish Church of my temporary dwelling, and there found a kind of decoration, or architectural adornment which I have never observed before in any church, ancient or modern; but, which to me, was of a very interesting character. The church is of the style of architecture prevalent about 100 years ago, plain, but good of its kind, and had been beautified and put into thorough repair about eight years ago. The ornamentation, therefore, dates from 1884 or 1885, though the church stands on the site of a very ancient edifice dedicated to St. Cuthbert. Well-proportioned pillars support the roof, and all round the cornice, above the capital of each column is a representation of the tribal emblem, or symbol of each of the Twelve Tribes of Israel—with the name of the tribe in plain characters above, and enclosed in ornamental scroll-work—all (I was told) painted by hand.

On enquiry I was told that a church at Wigan, decorated by the same artist, is adorned in a similar manner with the signs of the Twelve Tribes of Israel. It was the idea of the decorator, not of the clergyman of the church, or of any of the congregation. As you walk down the nave of the church, you cannot fail to be struck by these designs, and on my noticing them and making enquiries, they of course afforded me the opportunity of introducing the subject of our nation's being descended from Israel, and calling forth interest and curiosity on the question, in those persons to whom I spoke. For the nave of a church some persons may think these symbolical designs,* at least as suitable as some others that we commonly find in ecclesiastical buildings. Perhaps some of your readers may be able to inform me whether they know any other churches possessing such designs.

I am, sir, yours faithfully,

E. U.

ENGLAND'S SABBATH.

By J. D. W.

O LOVELY Isle! retired from continental noise
And strife! thanks for that channel deep and wide between;
O may no desecrated Sabbaths link it with
The lands whose people reverence not those holy days.
Hail Sabbath morn in Britain, where our laws protect Devotion's sons! Thrice happy scene where aged sires
With hoary locks and staff in hand are wending on
In company with sons and daughters, prime in age
And strength, and children's children too, joyous and young,
To God's own sacred Temple! angels look and gaze,
Yea, gaze with joy on thrice ten thousand scenes like this!
In every town, in quiet streets—not there alone—
In every village, in the primrose lanes and verdant fields,
The worshippers are seen, who with the Psalmist say,
"We'll gladly go unto the House of God." Blest day!
God's gift to man—the emblem of eternal rest
Above! O shall a boon so precious to our land
Be ever tarnished by the worldling's touch, or grasped
From us by hands as vile as the destroyer's? Nay!
A million voices echo Nay! Our sacred rights
We will retain, and hand it down inviolate
To our posterity. As stars once fought against
The foe of Israel, so will God in righteous wrath
Smite those, who in their pride and puerile strength would rob
Him of His honour, or our Isle of holy rest.

THE REPORT OF THE LORD'S WATCHMEN.

THE close of the year 1893 has come upon us, and it is right that those who have to deal with the subject of the discovery of Israel should tell us how the matter progresses, and what has been done by the watchmen during the time that has elapsed since the year was born. It has been a period of preparation for the coming of the Lord—a time of national expansion, and of waiting for the signs of His appearing. At the commencement of the autumn a cloud was gathering in South Africa which threatened to be serious. Our countrymen, by treaty right, had settled in large numbers in Mashonaland, a part of the territory of Lobengula, the king of Matabeleland, and were following in peace their avocation of gold-diggers in that auriferous region. The native soldiery of the chief resented our appearance there, and provoked a breach of the peace which demanded decided action. We were forced either to fight or to quit the country. Our countrymen, being a mere handful of about 1,400 men, decided to resist, and awaited the attack. They went out to meet their enemies in the field, and on October 25 they crushed the assault which the Matabele impis delivered, and forced Lobengula and his braves to vacate his royal kraal and fly to the country in the neighbourhood of Buluwayo, where he will be followed, and, if God will, be forced to submit to his victors.

It is probable that the whole territory of Matabeleland, including Mashonaland, will henceforth be administered by Israel's representatives at the Cape, or by the Queen's Government directly. An enormous accession of territory will thus be added to the Queen's dominions, according to the promises of God to Israel, as contained in the Scriptures.

The subject of the disposal of Uganda has been under anxious consideration during the year. Sir Gerald Portal was sent by the Liberal Government now in power to investigate on the spot, and to report on his return what should be done with the province. It is presumed that Sir Gerald has reported favourably in respect to the British Protectorate; but, as no final orders have appeared, this matter too is in abeyance, and awaits decision. We believe that, according to the prophecies, Israel is to expand throughout the earth; and, as no nation has so patent a right as ours to the retention of the country, it will eventually be annexed to the Empire.

The Home Rule Bill for Ireland has occupied the House of Commons for the whole of the sessions during the year; but the Bill, which was driven through the House by novel and unheard of means, was summarily dismissed by the House of Lords, to the relief of the nation. The legislative separation of Ireland from Great Britain, therefore, will not take place yet, and, according to our firm belief, never will at all. It is only the alien and disloyal element in the south of Ireland which desires the Bill, intending to use it for the final disruption of the Empire, and the erection of Ireland into a separate and hostile nation on the side of Great Britain. But the Isles of the West are Israel's inheritance, the place appointed by the Lord for Israel's refuge and sanctuary. The rupture of the Union will never, therefore, we believe, be effected, as God is true.

The royal wedding on July 6, when the Duke of York wedded the Princess May of Teck, was a joyous event, which was celebrated heartily by the nation. The Duchess of York is highly popular with the people, and the Duke has won golden opinions. They deserve the congratulations of the House of Israel, and have received them.

On June 22 the nation was plunged into grief at a great catastrophe which befell it. H.M.S. "Victoria," by a pure, but alas! avoidable accident, was rammed by H.M.S. "Camperdown" during some naval evolutions off the coast of Syria, and in fifteen minutes went down into deep water, carrying to the bottom Vice-Admiral Sir George Tryon, K.C.B., the Commander-in-Chief, and 358 officers and men. The thoughts of Anglo-Israelites on this sad subject will be found expressed, however feebly, on p. 337 of the BANNER for this year.

We have dealt on various occasions during the year with the persistent pessimism of some of our public men and writers. On May 17, No. 855, we drew attention to the subject, and stated some reasons why we should rebuke this spirit, and believe in the faithfulness of God to cure all that is wrong in our body politic at home and abroad. In the Times of November 6, Mr. H. Rider Haggard published a powerful letter on the subject of "The New Sentiment," which is his description of the pessimism of the modern detractor of his country and his people:—

"What," he asked, "can be said of the acts and views of that class which makes a parade of sentiment the cloak of unceasing and subtle attack on our national interests and the greatness of our country; of the men and women who are ever on the side of the foe, be he Russian or Boer, rebel Irishman or Matabele soldier; of those ill-conditioned children who would continually belittle and betray the mother that bore them? Singularly one-sided is their sentimentality, for when a Gordon is to be abandoned at Khartoum, or women and animals are tormented in Ireland, it is dumb, or speaks only to justify the desertion and excuse the torturers. When ruined loyalists, whose crime is fidelity to their Queen and country, are hooted from the Transvaal by the victorious Boers, it is not stirred; and when Mashonas are slaughtered and enslaved beneath the shadow of the English flag, still it sleeps on and takes its rest. But let treason be stamped upon with the foot of authority, or an enemy of our own and of our countrymen come to an untimely end through the accidents of war, then it awakes indeed, and we learn how catholic and beautiful a thing is that odd development of the modern mind, the New Sentiment."

Mr. Rider Haggard's concluding words are important, and we would commend them to our pessimists:—

"Let us hope," he wrote," that in face of Mr. Rhodes' victory adverse criticism will lessen, and charges, bitter as they are for the most part untrue, will be abandoned; and meanwhile let us congratulate ourselves upon the fact that, even should the Company go bankrupt or otherwise break up and vanish to-morrow—a catastrophe there is no reason to expect—it has laid the foundation stones of another chamber in the great house of this Empire wherein our children may dwell at ease, an achievement that no efforts of the New Sentiment can undo, rage it never so madly."

We heartily thank those friends who have helped us with their literary efforts during the year. Our supporters Messrs. J. G. Taylor, E. Reep, J. Thomson, John Shootingham, our doughty champion the Rev. Dr. D. Hanan, F. Gass, H. Shaw, and many others, must accept our sincere acknowledgments for invaluable aid. The kind helper who prepares our Index must not be forgotten. Without his co-operation the BANNER volume would lose half its value. Our Nova Scotian Goliath, the Rev. C. F. Cooper, has done yeoman's service in demolishing the public attacks of "Barrington," the self-sufficient and opinionated foe. To him and all who have fought for the truth we offer our best acknowledgments, and praise God for their timely aid. We thank Him indeed, and go on our way for the future with courage renewed.

THE ANNUAL VOLUME of the BANNER OF ISRAEL for 1893, bound in blue cloth, gilt lettered, will be ready early in January. In the Volume will be given the Coloured Maps that have been issued with the Monthly Parts. The price will be 8s. as usual.

THE Title-page and Index to the Volume for 1893 will be ready on January 1, price 1d., or by post from the Publishers for 1½d. Persons who desire to obtain the Maps that have been issued during the year with the Monthly Parts, can do so by sending 6d. in stamps to the Publishers.

THE THRONE OF THE LORD.

(SECOND PAPER.)

BY THE REV. DENIS HANAN, D.D.

IN No. 856 of the BANNER OF ISRAEL, published May 24th, 1893, I endeavoured to show that the literal translation of Exod. xvii. 16 (which is given in the marginal reading of both A.V. and R.V., and is supported in the "Speaker's Commentary"), would be explained and present no difficulties, if "the stone of Israel" was then recognised as "the throne of the Lord," upon which the Lord stood, against which Amalek warred, and upon which Moses lifted up his hand, as the literal statement records. I concluded that short paper with the words, "that the stone was there is evidenced by sundry statements in the after history of Israel. When I now invite attention to other probable records of the stone, I desire to remind my readers that, although research into the more minute statements and coincidences that we find in Holy Scripture is, or ought to be, both interesting and profitable, yet that we must distinguish between the indirect and the direct, between a revelation distinctly given, e.g., "By Myself have I sworn, saith the Lord," or a distinct prophetic announcement, and an indirectly recorded coincidence. The inspiration that made one unmistakable, has caused the other to be obscure. And if we can only draw probable conclusions from the latter, either friends or opponents must not suppose that the former can yield doubtful results. I mention this as there have been persons who assume that the proofs of the Identity of Britain with Israel are no better than what we can be shown with reference to very secondary although collateral subjects.

What was the rock which Moses was commanded to strike, and which then became the source of the supply of water? (Exod. xvii. 6). And what was the rock which was wrongly smitten again instead of being spoken to, and which again supplied the people's want? (Num. xx. 11). Apparently the account would lead us to think that the second supply was given forth from the same rock, and that Moses' error lay in smiting it again. And yet Rephidim was hundreds of miles distant from Kadesh, and the greater number of the years in the desert intervened between the two events. St. Paul gives a clue to an explanation. He says (1 Cor. x. iv.) that the rock followed them, and he must have known of the constant rabbinical tradition that it did so. Although the accretions to the tradition, as to the method in which the rock followed, may safely be disregarded, yet the apostles' words and the narrative require an admission of the fact, and a rejection of the suggestion that during the wilderness wanderings "many rocks and cliffs must have been hallowed and vivified." There was a miraculous supply during all the years while such a supply was needed, and until a natural supply was reached. This is in accordance with the manifestation of God's providence when feeding the people; the manna ceased on the day that the natural supply of corn became available. There is nothing in the account to make us suppose that the stream of water continued to rise in the original place at Rephidim, and followed the people without a channel, up and down over the inequalities of ground, for hundreds of miles through a sandy desert. The marginal reading at 1 Cor. x. 4, the rock that went with them, gives a sufficient explanation of the means whereby the water was provided at each resting place. The supply from the rock must have ceased for some time before it became necessary, upon their arrival in another waterless tract, to apply again for the miraculous gift. Similarly after they journeyed from Kadesh their wants were supplied by the brooks of Arnon, and the supply from the rock ceased, until again at Beer water was given. When at Kadesh the people murmured for want of water, it is evident that they had not for a long time received a supply from the rock, for Moses had to wait the command of God, and to take the rod from before the Lord, where it evidently had been laid up reverently in the Tabernacle, and he was then told to speak to the rock. After the supply had ceased and the need again arose, it was to be spoken to, and the typical meaning—viz., that the Christ was once to be smitten, and that His sacrifice once made was not to be repeated, but that His grace was ever to flow when He is spoken to, would have been altogether lost to us if another and different rock was struck by Moses at Kadesh. The rock went with these people, it was portable, and when it rested and was spoken to, water sprang forth, and although mentioned as the rock (tsur) at Rephidim, and the cliff (sela) at Kadesh; yet the words "speak to the rock" point to an identity between the two, while the Hebrew words are applied with reference to shape and position, and do not support the idea of different rocks or cliffs. The rabbinical tradition, and the apostle's inspired confirmation of it, are further supported if we find that "the stone of Israel" accompanied the people to the land of their inheritance.

My suggestion in the former paper, that Moses may have been supported upon "the stone of Israel" during the battle with Amalek, need not clash with the idea that the stone was at the same time the source of supply. There is nothing incongruous in the scene in the apocalyptic vision, where St. John was shown "a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God, and of the Lamb." Indeed, I might almost claim this statement as corroborative of the two ideas—viz., as in the first paper, that Moses sat upon the typical throne of the Lord, and as in this paper, that it was the source of supply. If, as is most probable, Amalek made the onslaught in order to obtain possession of the water, and that when so doing fought against the throne of the Lord (which was the material pledge of Israel's continued existence, as well as the source of the water which was her life), surely nothing could have been more fitting and expressive than that Moses prayer should have been visibly connected with that pledge and source. And as when moving from place to place the stone was lifted, then the supply would cease, so it may have ceased for a time if it was placed under the lawgiver.

The next mention of water given by God is sometimes supposed to be an uprising of a spring from the soil, and a cessation of the application to the rock. It seems to me that the evidence is all the other way. After removing from the waterless Kadesh the people were supplied by the brooks of Arnon, and then God told Moses to bring them to Beer where He would give them water (Num. xxi. 16, &c.). There under the sceptre or direction of the lawgiver—Moses—the princes of the people publicly and officially obtained water, by doing what Moses had failed to do at Kadesh—namely, they spoke to the source of supply, and then the water sprang up. What is there in this account to justify the assumption that the rock was absent? It was rather an official acknowledgment of the error of striking it, by the doing of that which was commanded—viz., speaking to it. The staves or sceptres of office were in the princes' hands, but not for the purpose of striking, and they were but of little use as spades. The "Speaker's Commentary" renders "with the lawgiver's sceptre." Moses' sceptre or symbol of authority was his rod. God again gave the people water, and there seems to be no reason to suppose that He set aside the once smitten rock, but rather that by His express direction, now at the last time that the miraculous supply would be required, an impressive ceremony manifested the validity of speaking to it. There is but One who is the source of living water, even He who was mystically represented by the smitten rock, "that rock was Christ," and I can see nothing in the gift of water at Beer which would symbolically imply that the living water flowed in the absence of the once smitten rock.

In a paper in an early number of the new volume I hope to trace the further references to the symbolic throne.

JUDAH'S ENVY AND JEALOUSY OF BRITISH ISRAEL.

THE Jew of modern days, who sees with his eyes the wonderful prosperity, wealth, and power of this country, is secretly opposed to the idea of Our Identity with his lost brethren the Ten Tribes, because he well knows that our blessings are just those which were promised to the afterseed of Abraham, and he cannot bear the idea that we have them all, but his people have none of them. This is the actual fact of which we have had personal experience. We remember on one occasion at a public meeting of one of our British-Israel associations, we had on the platform with us a converted Jew who believed, and spoke in favour of, Our Identity. In the body of the room was another Christian Judah-Israelite, who showed by his manner that he had no sympathy with the proceedings, but was only there to satisfy his curiosity in regard to the arguments we employed to make good our claim to be British and yet Israelites. We inquired of our friend the cause of the difference between himself and his fellow Jew. The answer was a remarkable one.

"That man in the body of the room is consumed with jealousy of the British people, because they have all the blessings God promised to the seed of Abraham, and the Jews his countrymen have no enjoyment of even one of them. He will not entertain the thought that the British are Ephraim, and therefore heirs of the promises, because he resents the idea that he and his people should be stript of all the promises, and that they should be bestowed on a Gentile race he will not believe can be Israel. His jealousy prevents him even stopping to inquire."

"But," we rejoined, "you are a converted Jew. How is it you are on our side speaking on this platform while he, your friend, is yonder near the door?"

"Ah," replied our fellow helper, "I was myself for many years in his case! I too was kept away from you by sheer jealousy of you and your national privileges. But now I have examined the evidence I see that the British are Ephraim, and therefore enjoying the birthright blessings, and so I am able, by God's grace, to cease indulging in jealous feelings and stand up openly on your side."

Another instance of the same state of things is known to us. This Christian-Israelite is a man of parts, but an opponent of our views, of so violent a kind, that he refuses even to discuss the question lest he should lose his temper while he did so! He knows that we British-Christians have all the good things, and he resents it, that as Anglo-Israelites "we aspire also to possessing Judah's future!" He adds to his opposition the allegation that the Jews are the only existing representatives of Israel! "There are and can be no others!" He is not very clear about his Scriptures, however, where they speak about the united return of the two Houses, and probably never noticed such texts as Jer. iii. 18, and xxxi. 36. This Jewish opponent is somewhat hazy as regards the proceedings of the return of the Tribes to the land and imagines that our object is to go to Palestine and take possession of it on our own account! When assured that we mean to go back with Judah under our protection, and establish that tribe in their own allotment according to Ezek. xlviii., and enjoy the ten parts ourselves, the idea seemed to gratify him and he became more favourable to our views.

The Jews of this mode of thinking, only look to the restoration of their race for their own glory, but not from the standpoint of God's truth and faithfulness! They cannot bear the idea that divorced Ephraim exists, with "the kingdom of God" already in possession, in affluence, and great power, while the Jews are politically nowhere! Jealousy is naturally excited when they see the British exalted so high, and they are ready to gnash their teeth with vexation and jealousy to see all the Abrahamic blessings in our enjoyment, while they are absolutely without one of them themselves! Of course, if we look to the Scriptures we can see that the Jews have always been envious of Ephraim, and have desired nothing better than to see them disinherited and outcasted for ever. Thus, in Ezek. xi. 15, R.V., we find this state of feeling between the two Houses, clearly described in these words: "The word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of Man, thy brethren, even thy brethren, the men of thy kindred, and all the House of Israel, all of them, are they unto whom the inhabitants of Jerusalem have said, Get you far from the Lord; unto us is this land given for a possession." The Ten Tribes were "all the House of Israel, all of them," and they were the prophet's kindred, being also outcast Judah-Israelites. To them Judah of Jerusalem sent the ambitious, grasping message, "Go far off!" "This land is ours, not yours!" The succeeding context shows how the Lord rebuked this evil spirit, and assured absent Ephraim that favour and restoration and blessing were in store for them. But the time is coming, though not come even yet, when the envy of Ephraim shall depart, and they that vex Judah shall be cut off; Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim." (Isa. xi. 13, R.V.). The envy felt by Ephraim against Judah, which compels Judah to vex Ephraim, arose, we suppose, in consequence of the sceptre being prophetically reserved for Judah (Gen. xlix. 10, R.V.). When the House of Ephraim-Israel shall discover that their own beloved Sovereign is of the House of Judah after all, it may be expected that the envy will give place to love, and Judah's desire to vex Israel will also vanish away.

A New Testament illustration of the fact that the Jews (or Judah) were jealous of outcast Israel in our Lord's days is furnished us in John vii. 35, R.V., where it is recorded that the Jews said among themselves regarding the Lord Jesus Christ, "Whither will this man go that we shall not find Him? Will He go unto the Dispersion among the Greeks, and teach the Greeks?" They resented the idea that He would go to the outcast House of Israel in Greece and so teach the Greeks. The same spirit is still actuating the Jews, and they will not for a moment entertain the idea that a people reckoned to be Gentiles can possibly be their brethren of Ephraim. But it s quite possible as a matter of fact. Joseph was a son of Jacob, yet his own brethren did not know him as the ruler of Egypt, surrounded with all the power of Pharaoh's Prime Minister! The British are Israel, and they are appointed to bless the House of Judah, to bring them to Christ, and to restore them to their land. To the Lord be all the praise!

THE SECRET OF THE IMPORTANCE OF LONDON ACCORDING TO M. ZOLA.

THE Daily Graphic, of September 30th last, published the results of an interview with the celebrated French author, M. Zola, on his departure from England for Paris. The latter gave his interviewer his views of London, and why it was "the mainspring of England's greatness." It is satisfactory to find that after all, the sea, the ships it carries, and the wealth they bring to this land, appeared to the famous Frenchman as the foundation and secret of our national greatness. It was to foster this chief ingredient in the power of Britain, otherwise known as Israel, that God gave our nation the birthright of Joseph, including the Gates, the vast commerce of the world, and the wealth it brings. The report of the interview was to the following effect:—

"M. Zola said in respect to

"THE MAINSPRING OF ENGLAND'S GREATNESS.

"And now I must tell you about my journey to Greenwich yesterday. I went there by river steamer, and what I saw impressed me more than anything else I have seen in London. As I passed eastward of London Bridge the secret of the importance of London, of the greatness of England, seemed to be laid bare to me. This immense water-way, with its endless life and traffic, with its wonderful quays and wharfs, in direct touch with every part of the world, explains everything to those who marvel at the power of the British Empire. I find this scene de toute beauté. C'est grande, c'est admirable, colossale! There you have London. Between London Bridge and the sea is the stomach, the heart of England. There is the mainspring of the life of your Empire, perhaps of the world. I came back from Greenwich by tramway to Westminster, and thence by the Underground Railway to the Temple. The Underground Railway is, no doubt, useful, but there is much room for improvement. Resumons! London is a house of many remarkable mansions—the City is its kitchen, the West End is its salon, the faubourgs and suburbs, with their teeming life, are so many pieces in an edifice I shall never forget.'

"'A TOWN MADE FOR ME.

"'But there are other aspects of our English life which you have glanced at during your short stay with me?' I said interrogatively.

"'Yes, at the Guildhall and at Hatfield I got glimpses of your historic position. I find that your nation is in a peculiar situation. You progress without losing your hold on the past, and this is a guarantee of stability and tranquillity for you. The antique ceremonies and surroundings at the Guildhall, and the chateau of Lord Salisbury at Hatfield, are to me emblems of this significant fact in your national life. We have nothing of the kind in France. Our seignoral castles are monuments, and nothing more. The only relic of old France that we possess is the Academy. We have a good many larger and more imposing chateaux than Hatfield, but I see a distinction between them. Ours are more feudal, more rugged. Their windows are narrower, if their staircases are broader. They are memorials of a past when the grand seigneur was an oppressor of the people, and their survival in this condition shows how unbending were their masters in their attitude of class superiority. They are a standing justification of the Revolution. Hatfield, however, with its great windows, its progressive architecture, its domestic comforts, is a picture of the approximation of your classes; of the mutual trust of nobles and peasants; of the wise concessions which have spared you a great political convulsion. The contrast is an eloquent one.'

After a pause M. Zolo returned to the immensity of London, upon which he seemed never-tired of harping, and in connection with it made an interesting revelation.

"'Londres est une ville faite pour moi!' he exclaimed, 'In France they say that my besetting sin is exaggeration. I reminded my wife of it only this morning, and we were amused when we thought that here at any rate was something I could not exaggerate. I shall be happy if I can produce a picture of your tumultuous, your virile life. At any rate, I shall make the attempt. I intend coming back when I have got rid of the work I have in hand to study you at my leisure. I shall live incognito among you, only revealing my presence to a few friends."

TRADE PROSPECTS AND REVIVALS.

PEOPLE are just now looking and feeling depressed about the state of the nation, and as to its trade prospects in particular. When matters look dark, and our friends the pessimists take very gloomy and desponding views of our national affairs, there is a tendency to turn the deaf ear to "Identity talk" and all the cheerful national prospects it holds out to the British-Israelite believer. "How can these things be true if the nation is going to the dogs, as is palpably the case?" "It is no use to tell us of coming prosperity when the coal strikers are ruining half the trade of the country by their determination to prevent the supply of fuel being forthcoming, and our exports are suffering grievously from this and other fatal causes?" Such are the feelings and expressions of many who refuse now to look at our arguments, and who only see continuous disaster before our nation, and no prospect of recovery. These live by sight and not by faith, and prefer to revel in their despair, though, if one pushes them with the past history of the nation, they will often admit, in a half-hearted way, that we have come well out of times even worse than the present, and that we shall possibly, even now, somehow struggle through our trials to-day, though they fail to see how! A great deal of this is constitutional with our murmuring Israelites. It was so in Egypt, and afterwards at the Exodus and in the wilderness. They grumbled, and desponded, and always thought the past times in Egypt were far the best times, forgetting the miseries of their slave life there, and being ready to despise God's presence and promises if the least appearance of troubles arose. The Israelites murmur to-day just as badly as ever: and when they can find nothing else to grumble at, they abuse our island home, its "vile climate," and its uncertainties, forgetting that as to climate and weather we are absolutely in the hands of God, who, hearing our complaint regarding it, knows that this wayward people, ungrateful as ever, is still murmuring against Him! In regard to our nation's trade we have some comfort to offer to our wayward pessimists! Let them read the following, which we take from St. James' Gazette, of September 28th ast, and cheer up!

"NOTES.

"Sir Courtenay Boyle, the Permanent Secretary of the Board of Trade, may be thanked for cheering us all up a little as to the trade prospects. He spoke at the meeting of the Chambers of Commerce yesterday, and announced that he had a mission from Mr. Mundella to combat the prevailing feeling of despondency. Trade, just now, is in a period of contraction; but these periods tend to recur like the swings of a pendulum. From 1864 to 1883 contraction and expansion came at regular intervals; and at the present moment "everything in the Board of Trade Returns tends to show that the trade of the country is steadily and strongly progressive." This is good news. And as progress depends a good deal on maintaining a cheerful and hopeful temper, Sir Courtenay Boyle did well to remind us how far we have got already. Between 1854 and 1892 the export tonnage has gone up from 9½ millions to 38½, import tonnage from 9 millions to 37, savings banks deposits from 33 millions to 118, the value of export merchandise from 116 millions to 291, and of import from 152 millions to 424."

The above is comforting, and should cause those who are desponding, to recover their spirits as to this nation's future prosperity. It is when we turn to the Scriptures, however, and see what promises God gives us there of national benefits and blessings, to arise from our Israelitish descent, that we discover how glorious our prospects are, and how independent we should be of these mere temporary vicissitudes, which, for a moment only, obscure the light that streams from our God's shining face, the source of all our happiness. There is a splendid cluster of these blessings in Deut. xxviii. 1—13, promised to "Israel obedient." Every variety of language, and expression is used to describe the people's glories, if only they will "obey." They were to be set high above all the nations of the earth, being the head and not the tail, above only and not beneath them. They were to be blessed in the city, in the field, in their children, in their ground, in their cattle, in their kine, and in their flocks, in the basket, and in the kneading-trough, in going out and in coming in; in their battles with their foes, in their barns and in their manufactures, in the harvests, and in their rainy seasons, and in their wealth, enabling them to lend to many nations, but never to borrow from them. In other Scriptures the Lord gave His obedient people, when they renounced idolatry and worshipped Him alone, the power to reign over many nations, but the privilege of never submitting to them. He made them a blessing to all nations, families, and kindreds of the earth, and gave them the power to get wealth, sanctifying the gift by the assurance that it would be used by the Lord Himself to establish His covenant which He sware unto their (Israelite) fathers, as it is (in fact) this day (Deut. viii. 18). Spiritual gifts He has also granted to us as His people, since He has given us the custody of His holy word, and promised (in Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20) to teach us His word, His statutes, and His judgments, as He hath taught no other nation on the face of the earth. Besides all this He has given to our nation (being Israel) His Sabbaths for a perpetual gift (Exod. xxxi. 13—17, Ezek. xx. 20), His laws to guide us always (Deut. vi. 4—9), and the privilege and duty of taking "the glorious gospel of the blessed God" to all the nations (1 Tim. i. 11, Gen. xxii. 18).

Such masses of blessing, undeserved by us, but secured for us by the grace of God, through Christ Jesus our Lord, make it sure and certain that God, who promised, will never leave us nor forsake us, but will, in the end, give us those blessings, unparalleled in greatness and value, described in Jer. xxxiii. 9. Our nation's prosperity will be God's gift to our race, and so excellent will it be in the eyes of all the nations, that it shall be to the Most High God "a name of joy, a praise and an honour" before them all! Let our pessimists only get hold of and believe these things, and the result must surely be that they will cast aside their depression and praise the Lord for all His goodness to us His people Israel!

NOTES BY S. A. M.

THE literal definition of "holy" and "holiness," given in the BANNER of September 27, 1893, offers a fair proof of that peculiar blessing of a spiritual character granted to the Hebrews as a nation. The Hebrew word made use of conveys the idea of purity, as originated for sacred uses in the services of the tabernacle, to express the moral purity or holiness of God, and this signification has descended from the Hebrew through the Greek to our own language, being rendered by the term "holy" in what is known as "King James' Version of the Bible."

We are apt to mistake the signification of the words holy and holiness, too often imputing a certain goodness or virtue to persons to whom they may be applied; whereas not once in the Old Testament is either of the two employed to signify human goodness or purity. In common parlance the term "Holy Scriptures" marks the writings devoted, or set apart for the things concerning God and His dealings with His people ever since the world began. In Exodus we first find this definition, God Himself calling the spot on Mount Horeb, where He first appeared to Moses, "holy ground," and onward throughout the Old Testament the word "holy" bears the meaning of "separateness" from what is evil or profane; not once therein is it employed to designate individual righteousness, the national holiness of Israel being its separateness from the idolatry and uncleanness in which the nations of the world were sunk. God having chosen them to be a peculiar people unto Himself, as we read in Deut. xxvii., where Moses reminds the people of this fact in words which cannot be misunderstood; for he says to them, "Thou hast avouched the Lord this day to be thy God," and the Lord hath avouched thee this day to be His peculiar people, as He hath promised thee, that thou shouldest keep all His commandments, and to make thee high above all nations which He hath made, in praise and in name and in honour; and that thou mayest be an holy people unto the Lord thy God as He hath spoken."

We might quote innumerable allusions to holy places, holy garments, holy convocations, holy offerings in connection with God's "holy people," though they sinned so grievously against the Holy One of Israel. Jerusalem was styled "The Holy City." Zion "the holy mountain;" the high-priest himself was not called "holy," only was he marked by the inscribed golden band on his forehead as "Holiness to the Lord."

Thus by many such outward signs did God make Himself known as He promised by the prophet Ezekiel (xxxix. 7) "saying, So will I make My holy name known in the midst of My people Israel; neither will I suffer My holy name to be polluted any more, and the nations shall know that I am the Lord, the Holy One in Israel."

Isaiah (lxiii and lxiv.) (the very "prophet of Israel"), in pleading for the rebellious, idolatrous people, can impute no righteousness to them: his pathetic pleading can be understood only in the unabridged words of the Holy Scripture, but following the example of Isaiah we may put up a daily prayer to the Lord God of Israel. We can take with us words, as He enjoins us, and in fellowship with "Israel's Scripture and Prayer Union"* plead emphatically for this our guilty nation, that, brought by the blood of Jesus into the bond of the covenant again and reconciled to our Father, we may be faithful witnesses for His truth, knowing (as St. Peter tells us in his first epistle) that we, "sojourners of the dispersion, are an elect race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a people for God's own possession, that we may show forth the excellencies of Him who called us out of darkness into His marvellous light." BISHOP POTTER, OF NEW YORK, GIVES EVIDENCE AT QUEBEC.

WE are favoured by a friend at Lewisham-road, S.E., with a copy of The Mission Field for October, 1893, containing a report of the Bishop of New York's sermon at the Quebec Diocesan Centenary. Our friend rightly states that "the opening portion of the Bishop's discourse is undoubtedly an unwritten testimony to the Identity." And yet we are confident that, if Dr. Potter should ever see this article, he will be utterly surprised, that any one could discover, in the words and illustrations he used, any evidence that the British people are the Lost Ten Tribes, the afterseed of Abraham, through Joseph and Ephraim, the head of the House of Israel. He compared the British Empire with Joseph's "fruitful branches running over the wall" leaving her image wherever she settles, and all that is good, which she has inherited. He remarks on British world-wide expansion, Britain's mighty conquests, and her wonderful evangelising enterprise. Her conquests were followed by her missionaries, and she has always been ready to provide her colonists abroad with the consolations of religion she herself has enjoyed at home so long. The following is only a part of the reported sermon, but it touches our own arguments in respect to the British-Israelite question, and we gladly reproduce it here:—

"A FRUITFUL BOUGH BY A WELL.

"The Sermon Preached by BISHOP POTTER, of New York, at the Quebec Diocesan Centenary

"'Joseph is a fruitful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well; whose branches run over the wall.'—Gen. xlix. 22.

"This was the greatness of Joseph, and it would have made him great anywhere. Run your mind back over those twelve blessings of Jacob's, which were prophecies as well as blessings, and you will see that they are, all the rest of them, lacking in this attribute—the power that at once enriches and expands. But this gift or grace was characteristic of Joseph from the beginning. First of all, his imagination bursts its bounds, and dreams great dreams, overleaps the narrow wall of its surroundings, and pushes forth into regions beyond; and when the envy of his brethren has punished the ardour of the young dreamer, and he finds himself sold as a bondsman into Egypt, straightway there his circumstances cannot imprison him. His heart is too great, and his brain is too busy to be dwarfed or paralysed, even by a woman's devilish malice; and the young Hebrew captive climbs by swift but sure stages up out of his prison cell till he stands, at last, in the high places of the world. This is one type of greatness. I do not say that there are not others; but this, when placed beside any of them, is pre-eminently noble and engaging. There are men who are great, as Simeon and Levi were great, because, 'instruments of cruelty are in there habitation.' They grow to be men of power, by wresting that which stands for power—wealth, fame, strength, reputation—whatever it may be, from other men, without scruple and without remorse. And as with Simeon and Levi, so with the rest of Joseph's brethren. Judah was to be a conqueror and bow the necks of men; Zebulon a mariner or a trader; Isaachar a servant; Dan a judge; Gad a warrior; Asher, and Naphtali, and Benjamin each successful in his way; but Joseph not alone achieving but imparting an overflowing soul. No 'Spring shut up nor fountain sealed,' he was to be a goodly bough by a well, whose branches leap over the wall. We have all known such men—not many, alas! but enough to make us recognise this description of one of them, and to be glad that they have lived. They irradiate the world by their presence, and they enrich it by their influence. Whenever we come within the circle of that influence we are conscious not alone of the largeness of their gifts, but of their overflowing quality. They are not shut up within themselves. They are not only used for themselves. No circumstances can wall them in. They 'leap over the wall,' and day by day the world is brighter and richer, because of that unconscious ministry of theirs, which reaches up and reaches out. Was there ever anything finer or more significant of essential nobleness and generosity of nature, than that scene where Joseph risen to be Viceroy of all Egypt and dispenser of all its riches, discloses himself to his terrified brethren, not to chide nor upbraid, but to tell them, 'God sent me before you to preserve you a posterity in the earth, and to save your lives by a great deliverance.' No wrongs could embitter so royal a nature, or shut it up in selfish and unforgiving resentment. That hardest thing—who of us does not know it—to forgive a kinsman's injustice or outrage—this with him is easy and instinctive. His brethren had built between him and them a wall, high, and seemingly unyielding; but the goodly bough straightway leaped over the wall, and blessed and enriched those who were, to Pharaoh's governor, doubly 'strangers and foreigners.' We have all known such men, I say. Yes: and nations as well as men. The moment that you begin to compare the races that have dominated the world you are struck, just here, with their unlikeliness.

"Dismissing out of the discussion those barbarous peoples who have nothing to impart, and with whom life is little more than a bare struggle for existence, it is impossible to remind ourselves of those greater civilizations, which have been the chief factors in human history, without being reminded also of their unlikeliness in what may be called their expansive or out-populating power. China is not the only empire that has surrounded itself with a wall. There are other nations whose fixed habit it has seemed to be to shut up their gifts and activities mainly, if not exclusively, within themselves. Commerce has won from them only reluctant and meagre exchanges. Colonization has had to them only a slender and spasmodic interest. Least of all would it seem to have occurred to them that nations, like men, are stewards, and that no people has a right to shut up its riches, whether they are material, or intellectual, or spiritual treasures, within itself. And so the grand procession of human achievements has left them, like so many of the Oriental peoples, and like some Western empires which are thus, it would seem, akin to them, substantially where they were—maintaining, it may be, their own greatness, and successfully defending their own territory, but out of the vast area of barbarism and paganism redeeming nothing for a Christian civilization and a Christian State. It is this, as surely one may venture to declare who is not of her, which is the glory of that mighty empire on whose soil we are gathered this morning. Whatever the future historian may write of England and of her achievements, this must needs be acknowedged—that, developing in her island-home the highest and finest type of national and domestic life which has ever adorned the world (I appeal to a great Frenchman, Hyppolite Taine, as my authority for the statement), she has transplanted it wherever she has gone.

"An American traveller—and if an American traveller, then doubtless still more a traveller of any other nation, is fain to remark, wherever he goes in foreign lands, the traces of English habits. There is no land in which an Englishman has ever tarried, where you will not find the clear and unmistakable tokens of his stay. The rest of us come and go, and adjust ourselves, more or less readily, to the conditions of which we find ourselves; but the Englishman sets about altering these conditions, and that not merely because they are personally distasteful to him, but also because, in the interests of other people as well as his own, he believes they can be bettered. And generally, it must be owned, he is right. He has been much ridiculed because of what those who do not live on his particular island call his 'insularity;' and sometimes such fault-finding is not unjust; but when you take the story of such men as Lawrence in India, and Livingstone in Africa, and the men who laid foundations here in America, one cannot but own that there was in them the soul of Joseph the great and beneficent, whose 'branches leaped over the wall.' It was our own Webster you remember—the great Daniel—in the United States of America still its most commanding and majestic figure among the statesmen of the Republic, who, using what is surely one of the finest figures in all the history of forensic oratory, said of your motherland, 'Whose morning drum-beat, following the sun, and keeping company with the hours, circles the earth with one continuous and unbroken strain of the martial airs of England.' (Speech in the United States Senate, May 7, 1834.) That, indeed, is a picture of conquest; but we may not forget how largely it is the story of peaceful conquests, nor yet how widely there have been diffused by means of such conquests the blessings of light and knowledge in places once dark and degraded. And that brings me to that which we who are here may well remember with pre-eminent joy and gratitude. It would be idle to say of any great Christian nation, that the advances of its armies or its commerce have always been distinguished by the graces of justice and beneficence. There is no great people that has not to mourn deeds of rapine and violence which have equally discredited its civilisation and its Christianity.

"Across the border which divides your territory from ours we are much engaged just now, you know, in commemorating the 400th anniversary of the arrival of Columbus on these American shores, and there has been much picturesque illustration of the way in which the Caravels of the Genoese Voyager brought with them the religion of Jesus Christ.

They did; but, alas, they brought much else that was evil and bad, as all other conquests have done. But no one can turn from such an instance and contrast what is called a Christian civilisation in Mexico and South America (which was after all the civilisation which Columbus brought) with what England has done for heathen lands wherever they have become a part of her Colonial possessions without owning how cheering is the contrast. And this has been true especially in instances of which we are reminded this morning. When this territory passed out of the control of a foreign power and came under that of the Government of Great Britain, there was not much here either to invite the immigrant or to attract interest or capital. And so, as one turns and looks back to-day, there is something greatly affecting, I cannot but think, in the story of the Church. There have been great nations that have illustrated the genius of conquest, and have nurtured many and brave sons who went forth to foreign lands. But in no case, I imagine, has there been a more consistent and generous endeavour to follow the wandering children with the immortal consolations of their Father's house. Joseph is a goodly bough, a goodly bough by a well. Ah, yes! it was because that 'well' was in England a well of living water, that a great host of her sons, nurtured at her knees in her Universities, her parsonages, her homes, have gone forth with such joyous faith and self-sacrifice to carry their Master's gospel to the regions which were beyond.

"It is indeed true, as an American thinker has said, that over the first roads which the Roman Empire built there marched the Roman armies; but after the armies came the apostles, quick to bear to heathendom the heavenly learning of the Cross. And so it has ever been. No sooner is a continent discovered or reclaimed, no sooner is a way made through the forest, than, swiftly, the feet of the missionary have followed hard upon those of the trader, and the voices of the Christian priest and teacher are heard speaking to men of God. We are here to-day to recall some of these. A hundred years—how swiftly they have come and gone, and how soon their memories fade! But we look a little closer—more slowly we turn the pages that tell of what has happened in them, and, one after another there start forth the figures of men, each one of them a goodly 'bough whose branches leaped over the wall.' The soil on which we are gathered to-day passed from under French control to that of the British Crown as long ago as A.D. 1713. But it was a long time after that—nearly forty years—before English settlers turned their faces this way, and then only in small and infrequent companies. Yet it will always be to the honour of the English Crown that as early as 1749 the Government, in taking measures to found six townships in Nova Scotia, made coincident provision through the agency of the venerable Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, for the erection of a church in each township and of a grant of land to each minister in charge of these churches. This verily was the act, and illustrated the spirit of a true mother—a mother who prized pre-eminently the light and the knowledge of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and who, wheresoever her children might go into any remotest land, would not suffer them to wander out of the reach of her tender and loving care. I may not pursue here the story of that maternal watchfulness as it reached out, through the agency of the same venerable society, to all her colonies, northward and southward, in all this vast continent."

THE "GLASGOW WEEKLY HERALD" OF NOVEMBER 18, 1893.

THE following appeared in the above paper on the date mentioned, in reference to Mr. J. J. Brown's question, and the answer thereto by Professor Piazzi Smyth, published on p. 597 of the BANNER:—

"2136.—The question asked by Mr. J. J. Brown, in your issue of October 14 (No. 2136) has been answered at length by Dr. C. Piazzi Smyth in yours of November 4, and seems to require only a few words from me. I am not aware that any one anticipated that the return of Israel and Judah to their land would take place exactly in 1882. I am one of those who believe that the events to which Professor Piazzi Smyth points as having occurred in the land of Egypt in 1882 have much to do with the triumphant return of the tribes as described in Jer. iii. 18, Ezek. xxxvii., and other Scriptures. These events were a necessary condition precedent to the return; and the year itself was one of the terminal dates pointing to the great consummation. The matter strikes me thus:—The return of Israel and Judah to Palestine must be by two routes—along the Mediterranean from Israel's "Isles of the West," i.e., Great Britain, eastward through the Levant to "The land of the inheritance"; and via the Red Sea from Australasia, India, and South Africa, where Israel's magnificent and vast possessions are situated, to the Holy Land. In each case the route must skirt the land of Egypt; and that territory, with the Suez Canal, is the "key" or "Gate" of the route, without the possession of which the journey eastward and northward by the tribes, escorted by British-Israel, could not be conducted in peace and safety. God gave us that Gate in 1882, and, in spite of all opposition from without and from our own people, has compelled us to retain "the Gate" to facilitate the coming return. All events now taking place in the world have reference to this coming event; and those of 1882 were important factors in the matter. The Gates of the world are pretty nearly all in British hands to-day; because the British are Israel, and to Israel "the Gates" were promised by God Himself, in Gen. xxii. 17. Egypt is ours, India, Australasia, Canada, South, Central, Western and Eastern Africa, are all ours; because the dominion of the world is promised to its heir "Abraham" and his "after-seed" (Dan. vii. 27 and Rom. iv. 13); and one of the chief means by which the world will fall to the occupation of the heir is the possession of "the Gate."—PHILO-ISRAEL (Editor of the BANNER OF ISRAEL).

CHARING-CROSS TO INDIA.

A DINNER was given at the Savoy Hotel, to a number of gentlemen interested in the Syrian Ottoman Railway to meet the engineer-in-chief, Sir Douglas Fox, and the contractors, who are about to proceed to Syria to continue the construction of the railway from Acre to Damascus. Mr. Sutherst said the railway would be 150 miles long. At one end was a fine port in the Mediterranean, at the other Damascus, the oldest city in the world, with a population of upwards of 250,000 people. The intervening country was probably one of the most fertile regions in the world, with a soil capable of producing all kinds of fruit and cereals. Only a comparatively small area of these rich lands was at present cultivated, and yet the harvest of cereals is upwards of 200,000 tons annually, with an export of 125,000 tons. The contractors have undertaken to reach Damascus within two years. The construction of the line is steadily progressing, and the first five miles are on the point of completion, and the section of fifty miles to the river Jordan is expected to be finished by April next. "If," remarked the chairman, "the same wise policy is pursued which prompted the purchase of the Suez Canal shares, and which is now steadily covering India with railways, I see no reason why, within a reasonable time, we should not be able to go right through by rail from Charing-cross to India in eight days."—Daily Telegraph, Oct. 12, 1893.

FACTS PROVING PROGRESS.

We have received two letters, parts of which we feel at liberty to transcribe for our readers' encouragement and our own, the first from apparently one in humble life, the other from a highly-educated and well-read Anglo-Israelite. The former says:—

"I have felt proud and happy since I have believed that I was one of God's chosen people. I have taken the Banner for three months, and read Dr. Wild's "Lost Ten Tribes," and a few other works on the Identity question. They have opened my eyes to the truth, and I can see the distinction between Jews and Israelites, that the Jews are Israelites, but that all Israelites are not Jews. I can also understand the glorious Book far better than before. It shall be my aim as opportunity offers, to try and enlighten some of my friends and neighbours. . . . I do not now feel afraid of French or Russians, or of any other nation, because I see we are Israel, and we shall win all fights in all countries, because the Lord is on our side. Apologies for writing thus to you are due, but I feel as if you were a brother to me, because we both see by the same light."

The other correspondent reports progress thus:—"We managed to secure a subscriber to the Banner yesterday, in a friend staying with us. Another friend to whom we lent the 'Handbook' some time ago, has expressed the great pleasure he has derived from the study of Our Identity. He says the subject has revealed a new world of ideas to him, and that for the future the Banner will be a source of instructive delight to him. I am much pleased at this, because he was once far gone in agnosticism. He is now sure of one thing; and that is, that if the Bible be true, the British must be Israel."

RESULTS OF ENGLISH OCCUPATION OF EGYPT.

In a letter from Mr. Henry Harper, the eminent artist and traveller, he says, "When at Luxor, Upper Egypt, last year I met one day a native whom I had known and employed to carry my portfolio twenty years ago. I greeted him with, 'Well, and how are you getting on now?' For answer he thrust his hand into his vest, pulled out a handful of silver money, and said, 'Want change for a sovereign, sir?' I laughed, and said, 'What do you mean?' He said, 'All this my own money now. When you here before, when you pay me, Pasha beat me till I give the money up to him. Now thanks to you English, no man dare beat me; you English good people!' It is 'the Pashas,' not 'the people,' who wish to see the English 'scuttle out of Egypt,' and who stir up the jealous and interested hostility of France."—Extract from The Leisure Hour for May, 1893, p. 504.

Reviews.

The Anglo-Israel Almanack and Diary for 1894. Robert Banks and Son, London. Price 3d.; interleaved with ruled paper, 5d.; interleaved and in cloth, 1s.

This annual, which may now with some reason be termed a hardy annual, is again here, and is quite equal to its forerunners. The whole Identity circle will welcome the portraits of such staunch advocates as the Rev. J. Idrisyn Jones and Lieutenant Totten. The workmanship, also, is excellent, being a great improvement on woodcuts. The first item in the literary section is a short poem by Mr. J. G. Taylor, on "Faith confirmed" through a contemplation of God's fulfilled covenant; and next is a paper by Rev. Denis Hanan, D.D., called "Patience," which enforces a much to be remembered truth. Dr. Hanan easily distinguishes between patience and laziness. He admits that patience is a virtue even in Identity affairs, but considers it out of place when it leads people to fold their arms, patiently allowing others to do the work and spend their cash. His closing sentence is: "The invariable characteristic of true patience is steady effort," and this should be taken to heart by all. The Rev. Philip Carlyon, M.A., has a contribution entitled "Circumstantial Evidence," and submits that when there is direct evidence in favour of any lawsuit, circumstantial evidence acquires vast importance. Applying this to Anglo-Israelism, he holds that the Bible is full of direct evidence, while the circumstantial evidence abounds in history, antiquities, &c.; and by way of example he refers to the tin mines of Cornwall and Tor altars of Dartmoor. Following this is an article from the prolific and unwearied pen of Philo-Israel on "The God-given 'Power to Get Wealth.'" It is suggested by the immense wealth of Britain on the one hand, and bad times on the other—dull trade, financial losses, and labour struggles, which cause pessimists to indulge gloomy thoughts concerning their country's future. But these misfortunes do not so affect us, and Philo-Israel shows why. "It is a consolation that in this, and in all other things connected with the prosperity of our nation and empire, God, our God, is a party to the matter. He has permitted the evil to teach a lesson, or to bring about a better state of things ere long than now exists. But the promise of 'the power to get wealth' made to Israel in Deut. viii. 18 by God Himself had a purpose and an object. It was not connected so much with the worldly prosperity of the race as with the honour and faithfulness of God to His covenants and oath made with Abraham our forefather." This contains the pith of Philo-Israel's reasoning; indeed it contains the pith of the Identity, for all we are or have arises from God's "purpose and object," and as the latter are unalterable, our national supremacy is the same. But God works by visible methods, and Philo-Israel points to our mineral resources, skilled mechanics, banking operations, and steadily increasing subscriptions to missions as tokens of stability. Mr. H. R. Shaw, whose mind is distinctly of a geometrical trend, deals with "A Grain of Salt," and anticipates our question, "What can a grain of salt have to do with us British people and Our Identity with the Lost Tribes of Israel?" But as poets see books in brooks, and scientists read sermons in stones, so Mr. Shaw finds a quantity of valuable teaching in a grain of salt. "Israel Dominant" (Isaiah lx. 12) is the theme of Mr. Douglas A. Onslow, and he relates how he tackled a misguided vicar, who courteously declined to tackle him, thus proving both polite and politic. Mr. Onslow forcibly exposes the absurdity of spiritualizing that text. He is one of our best writers, and it is a pity he does not vent his views more frequently. His pen is too powerful to lie a-rusting. The Rev. J. Idrisyn Jones, of whom there is a brief biography on p. 62, expounds Heb. xi. 21, which he rightly names "Jacob's Vision of the Nineteenth Century," for "Jacob then saw in prospect what we see in accomplishment"—that is, "two peoples dominating the earth:" "Manasseh, a great nation"; and "Ephraim outstripping Manasseh." Mr. Jones is another of those who appear far too seldom in the columns of the Banner, and he ought to come out once a month, like myself; not once a year, like the Almanack. Lieut.-Col. W. H. Larkins discourses upon "Our Opponents and the Parable of the Two Olive Trees," showing that this parable refutes the idea that the Jews are the sole representatives of Israel. Mr. Marchant is better known on the platform than in the press. This is the first time within my recollection that he has acted the part of scribe; but need it be the last? His topic is, "Seeming Wise; or, What's the Good of It?" and he draws attention to the prejudice we meet with, as well as to the irrational instruction in Sunday-school literature. Mr. Arthur R. Granville treats of "The Sacred Character of the Great Pyramid," and his concise account is elucidated by a diagram. In conclusion, under the heading of "What the Clergy, &c., Say," there are apposite extracts from Bishop Titcomb, Rev. G. Albert Rogers, Rev. Denis Hanan, Rev. W. H. Milner, Rev. Joseph Wild, Dr. H. Alder-Smith, Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, Rev. R. A. Hunter, and Rev. E. Bassin. In addition to these attractions there is, of course, plenty of miscellaneous information, and an event for each day of the year, a list of British-Israel Associations, with their officers, and an engraving of Suez Harbour, &c., from a sketch by Philo-Israel. A well-advised feature of this issue is that the articles are varied, not lengthy; and I can say with confidence that there is no more judicious means of introducing our subject to a sensible person than by giving him or her a copy of the Almanack.—JOHN SHOOTINGHAM.

A NEW IDENTITY SONG.

"The Lord Shall Comfort Zion." By Jean Charles. Novello Ewer & Co., London and New York. Post free 2s. 1d. Chorus parts 3d. each.

THE above is the work of an Anglo-Israelite, and is described as an "Identity Song." The connection is not held to be self-evident; for some who have examined the work can see no relationship at all to British-Israel belief in it. However that may be, it is held by those who understand music, to be in point of merit "fairly good." Our own judgment in respect to this point enables us to concur in the favourable decision. It is a pleasing composition suitable for a drawing-room or church. Those who have used it in church as an anthem, are well-pleased with it. Mr. Theodore S. Hill, of Birkenhead, a musician of some merit, speaks of it as a "most delightful composition." On the whole we are justified in recommending Jean Charles "Identity Song" to those who love good music. The passage from which the song takes its title (Isa. li. 3) is addressed to Ten-tribed Christian-Israel "who follow after righteousness, who seek the Lord, and look unto the rock whence they are hewn," and that is their Israelitish origin (ver. 1).

The chorus, taken from Isa. li. 3, is an accurate picture of the British Empire to-day, when this chosen people have, by God's grace been comforted with the Gospel, and their waste places, or desolate heritages have become, as their colonies, the gardens of the Lord, and as Eden for splendour and prosperity. The well-read, conscious Anglo-Israelite will enjoy this song, and though to one ignorant of our views it will convey but little light, it is a song to be encouraged as going in the right direction. We hope it will meet with much success, and be largely circulated.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—In referring to the letter of E. H., in your issue of Sept. 13, I noticed a statement referring us to (what we Identity believers call) a blind Identity sermon, preached by the Rev. T., I think, should be J. B. Phillips, of St. Michael's, Hulme, Manchester, a former curate, for some years, of Christ's Church, Pennington, Leigh, near Manchester, and whom I have heard, myself, preach some splendid "blind Identity sermons" at the latter church. We have had conversations together on the subject, and about ten or eleven years ago, when he was curate at Pennington, I lent him a few numbers of the "Nation's Glory Leader." Of course he could not, and did not, say anything against the Truth. I also showed him those passages in the second book of Esdras, chap. xiii. (Apocrypha) which proves distinctly, that the Ten Tribes did not return with Judah from the Babylonish captivity, but went further away into a country where never mankind dwelt. The passages are very seldom referred to by your correspondents; but with your kind permission, sir, I will give them once more, as they make our case very strong. The chapter contains an interpretation by an angel of a vision, as seen by Esdras in a dream, and as ver. 12 says, "Afterward saw I the same man come down from the mountain, and call unto Him another peaceable multitude." Ver. 39 begins the angel's interpretation, "And whereas thou sawest that he gathered another peaceable multitude unto him." Then the angel goes on to say:

Ver. 40. "These are the Ten Tribes which were carried away prisoners out of their own land in the time of Osea the king, whom Talmanasar, the king of Assyria, led away captive, and he carried them over the waters, and so came they into another land."

Ver. 41. "But they took this counsel among themselves, that they would leave the multitude of the heathen, and go forth into a further country, where never mankind dwelt."

Ver. 42. "That they might there keep their statutes, which they never kept in their own land."

Ver. 43. "And they entered into Euphrates by the narrow passage of the river."

Ver. 44. "For the 'Most High' then showed signs for them, and held still the flood till they were passed over."

Ver. 45. "For through that country there was a great way to go, namely, of a year and-a-half: and the same region is called Arsareth."

Ver. 46. "Then dwelt they there until the latter time; and now when they shall begin to come."

Ver. 47. "The highest shall stay the springs of the stream again, that they may go through: therefore sawest thou the multitude with peace."

In the face of the above, how can any man say that the Ten Tribes returned with Judah from Babylon? The 6th Article of the Church of England says, concerning the books of the Apocrypha, that the "Church doth read them for example of life, and instruction of manners; but yet doth it not apply them to establish any doctrine." The Church does not say that they are not to be believed. I may add, that a few months ago, I purchased a book from a second-hand bookstall, entitled "Survey of the Holy Land," by Bannister, published in 1843, 18 years before Edward Hine published his first edition of "Lost Israel Found." The work is divided into three parts. The first deals with the geography of the Holy Land. The first three chapters of the second part deal with the revolt of the Ten Tribes, their captivity, their "lost" condition, and the author distinctly proves that they have not yet returned. The third part deals exclusively with Scripture, showing the distinction between the two Houses, and their restoration. The above work being published, as I have shown, so many years before the first work of Mr. Hine was issued, has made me a stronger believer in Our Identity than I was before.

Yours in Israel,

JAMES COYLE.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

FRIEND,—Those who remember my name in connection with the Great Pyramid department, and especially of the Anglo-Israelite subject, on which I have now written an exhaustive work with many plates and discoveries (which it is beyond my ability to publish), may note that I have left Martock, and now reside at Cowbridge, South Wales. It was previously mentioned, here, that I feel a freedom to lecture publicly or privately, if in health, where requested, to spread this admirable truth.

CIRCULATION OF THE BIBLE.—The sale of the Bible has gone on through the ages, and over the religious world. Besides the circulation of private parties, the distribution of the Bible by the forty or fifty Bible Societies is immense. Since 1804 the leading societies of England and America have distributed 203,000,000 copies of the whole Bible or parts of it. The American Bible Society alone has distributed 55,500,000 copies. The distribution last year ran up to 400,900 Bibles, besides 370,700 Testaments, and 141,000 separate books. The issues of British and foreign are still larger. The American Society prints in fifty languages and dialects, and the British in two hundred.—Zion's Herald.

CORRECTION.—In BANNER No. 882, article, "The Aryan Bubble," p. 572, second column, fifth line from end of second paragraph, for "guages" read "languages."

THE GEOGRAPHY OF THE GATES

With Map and six full-page, and one double-page, Illustrations, printed on plate paper. 208 pages, in handsome cloth, gilt.

By Philo-Israel.

"The Geography of the Gates" is a golden chain of irresistible evidence that the divinely-preserved remnant of the Lost Ten Tribes is to be found in the midst of the British people, and that we are the representative nation of ancient Ten-Tribed Israel. In short interesting chapters the author has condensed an amount of valuable information which is worthy of the highest eulogium. The evidence advanced, which is supported by Scriptural proofs, is simply overwhelming, and every candid reader must feel constrained to admit that the author's conclusions are correct.—JOHN T. The Special Commissioner of the Christian World, writing of Dr. Wild, says:—"On Sunday evening I had to fight my way into the Congregational Church of which Dr. Wild is the minister. He hails from America, and is quite the sensation of the hour. There was no standing-room anywhere, and as I made to the door I met many coming away. However, I had made up my mind to hear the Doctor, and hear him I did. It seems that the subscribers have a door to themselves; I made for it, and luckily found a chair, which I wedged in under the platform. The Doctor prayed and then we had a sermon about Revelation, containing much that was very effective, if not about his text, at any rate about that mysterious part of Scripture from which the text was taken."
