Tells How to

Make Money Writing Short Paragraphs

Chicago Man Reveals a Short Cut to Authorship

Discloses little-known angle by which beginners often get paid five to ten times more per word than the rates paid to famous authors. Now anyone who can write a sentence in plain English can write for money without spending weary years "learning to write."

FOR years and years a relatively small number of people have had a "corner" on one of the most profitable authors' markets ever known. They've been going quietly along selling thousands and thousands of contributions. None of them have had to be trained authors. None of them have been "big name" writers. Yet, in hundreds of cases they have been paid from five to ten times as much per word as was earned by famous authors.

The successful men and women in this field had such a good thing that they kept it pretty well to themselves. Mr. Benson Barrett was one of these people. For years he enjoyed a steady income—made enough money in spare time to pay for a fine farm near Chicago.

Finally, Mr. Barrett decided to let others in on his method. Since then he has shown a number of other men and women how to write for money. He has not given them lessons in writing. He has not put them through a long course of study or practice. In fact, most of his protégés have started mailing contributions to magazines within two weeks after starting.

Mr. Barrett says that the only skill required is that the beginner be able to write a sentence in plain English. Almost anyone with a grade school education can write well enough to follow Mr. Barrett's plan, because the contributions you will send to magazines are almost never more than one short paragraph in length.

Shut-ins, housewives, folks who are retired on small incomes, even employed men and women who like to use idle hours in a constructive way—all types are making money on short paragraphs.

Mr. Barrett does not teach you to write. He shows you what to write, what form to put it in, and who to send it to. He shows you a simple method for getting ideas by the hundreds. He gives you a list of more than 200 magazines that are looking for this kind of material and will buy from beginners. In other words, he teaches you a method, an angle, a plan for starting to write right away for money.

IF you would like to see your writing in print and get paid for it—just send your name on a postcard to Mr. Barrett. He will send full information about his plan of coaching by return mail—postage prepaid. He makes no charge for this information. And, no salesman will call on you. You decide, at home, whether you'd like to try his plan. If the idea of getting paid for writing short paragraphs appeals to you, ask Mr. Barrett for this information.

No telling where it might lead. Such a small start might even open opportunities for real authorship. And, since it can't cost you anything more than a postcard, you'll certainly want to get all the facts. Address postcard to Mr. Benson Barrett, 6216 N. Clark Street, Dept. 305-Y, Chicago, Ill. 60626.

QUOTE OF THE MONTH

This writer does not believe in this type of thing but it really goes on.

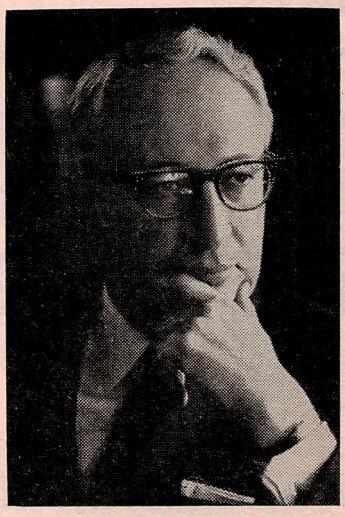

—Sgt. R. B. Pond, Jr.
Police Department
Daytona Beach, Fla.

THE ABOVE despairing words were written about a classic poltergeist case that disturbed the household of Mrs. Mary Alice Cord the latter part of May in Daytona, Fla.

The manifestations reported by many witnesses were unusual in their violence and in the direction they took. Events seem to have occurred in a chronology that goes something like this. . . .

In the early part of May Mrs. Ella Benjamin, a sister of Mrs. Cord, moved in with the Cord family which includes Mrs. Cord, two sons, Walter 11, and Bernard 8 and a 12-year-old daughter. About two weeks later, on May 21, things began to happen. And almost without exception they seemed to be directed against Mrs. Benjamin.

Lighted matches fell from the ceiling of her room. Vases, bottles and lamps were smashed; noises varied from growls "like a crazy lion" to "groans like a man." After the first outbreak on May 21, a crowd gathered to watch and investigating police heard the lion-like noises, rumbles from the house and a shaking as articles fell and broke, according to Chris Shearouse, staff member of the Orlando Sentinel.

When she arrived home a large bottle of mouthwash in the bathroom came crashing to the floor, followed by a bottle of hair oil. A mirror smashed down in another room and 40 records were strewn about the hall, neatly halved as if cut by a saw.

At one point Mrs. Cord walked down the hall past a table and saw a box of soap powder sliding across the floor. She spoke aloud, begging "the thing" not to throw the powder about because she needed it for laundry in the morning. As she said this, she reported, a bottle of bleach, an electric iron and a basket of soiled clothes tumbled to the floor.

The 12-year-old daughter reported that she watched a large can of grits and another of rice leave their shelves and wander about the kitchen, emptying themselves almost as if they were being poured by a person. A neighbor, Mrs. Rosalee Bell, was in the Cord home when glasses, jars of marmalade and peanut butter were swept off the kitchen table by a mysterious force.

Miss Leslie McMakin, a hostess at the Gourmet Restaurant, visited Mrs. Cord's home. She reported hearing the "groaning of a man" when there was no man in the house and she saw a bundle of clothes leap from the boys' room although she could see the boys sitting in chairs in their room the whole time.

For some reason, early accounts connected the events with the boys, noting that things seemed to occur when they were present together. Little attention was paid to the daughter, however, and news accounts of the events do not even give her name. This in itself may be significant.

However, there seemed little doubt that the incidents were directed against Mrs. Benjamin and were a psychic protest against her moving in with the family. Mrs. Benjamin was so sure of this that she fled the house only a week after the activities began and told her sister that "the thing" went with her and swore it would kill her.

Why Do You Have A Poor Memory?

A noted publisher in Chicago reports there is a simple technique for acquiring a powerful memory which can pay you real dividends in both business and social advancement and works like magic to give you added poise, necessary self-confidence and greater popularity.

According to this publisher, many people do not realize how much they could influence others simply by remembering accurately everything they see, hear, or read. Whether in business, at social functions or even in casual conversations with new acquaintances, there are ways in which you can dominate each situation by your ability to remember.

To acquaint the readers of this publication with the easy-to-follow rules for developing skill in remembering anything you choose to remember, the publishers have printed full details of their self-training method in a new booklet, "Adventures in Memory," which will be mailed free to anyone who requests it. No obligation. Send your name, address and zip code to: Memory Studies, 835 Diversey Parkway, Dept. 606-010, Chicago, Ill. 60614. A postcard will do.

26 issue of the Baltimore News American repeats the old story and contends that "the ghost" is still being seen. Lee Belser, a writer for the paper, states that Petty Officer Roy Vandevander says he was present when "the ghost" appeared to Seaman Recruit Wally Meeks a few weeks before.

"I didn't see him," Vandevander told Miss Belser, "but I felt a presence. I felt it again later when I went to investigate some strange noises in the hold. It was like a puff of wind brushing past me."

Another of the ghost-watchers, according to Miss Belser, "was so taken aback at the apparition that he had to be carried home."

IN THE BLOODY TOWER

JHAN AND JUNE Robbins recently reported in This Week on an interview with Gilbert Futter, one of the guards called "Beefeaters" who reside in the Tower of London. In this case Futter lives in a cosy apartment with his family.

Futter is quite matter-of-fact about the tower being haunted — not by royal personages but by quite ordinary appearing spooks. Other resident Yeomen of the Guard see them too, the Robbins report. And Mrs. Futter repeats words similar to those of Ser-

One of these spooks is a "rather pleasant-looking old lady" seen by both Futter and his youngest daughter. She wears "a dark red silk dress with a white scarf and a fluted silk bonnet. When surprised, she nods, smiles, and fades away."

Then there's an invisible ghost that bothers Mrs. Futter. Once when she was entertaining friends a vase of flowers "rose up in the air from the tea table. The flowers were rearranged — as though someone didn't fancy the way I did it — and then they were put back!"

E.S.P.?

NOW! A leading metaphysician and psychic investigator shows you how you can help yourself with the modern techniques of E.S.P.!

PSYCHIC POWERS DEMONSTRATED ON TV BEFORE MILLIONS!

A short time ago, a major TV network gave a program on Extra-Sensory Perception ("ESP") that aroused nationwide interest because of its dramatic presentation of people with amazing psychic powers—powers actually demonstrated before the eyes of millions!

Now a remarkable new book reveals exactly how you can TEST and TRAIN your astonishing ESP abilities—how to hone and perfect your ESP powers to peak performance—and how you may USE your powers to gain the rich, satisfying rewards of a healthy, prosperous, fuller and happier life.

DISCOVER AMAZING ADVANCED ESP POWERS!

In his eye-opening new book, the noted psychic investigator and ESP-authority, Dr. A. G. Manning gives you the golden fruits of a pioneering career—a voyage into the Unknown that occupied him during his 22 years of study and research into the little-known world of ESP. In this exciting book, you'll read of powers like these—

- CLAIRSENTIENCE: The power that sends psychic warnings to guard and protect you from danger (pg. 37)
- INNER VOICES that whisper messages to you that no one else can hear (pg. 39)
- "TELEPHONIC TELEPATHY"—your power to contact friends and relatives who are far away (pg. 23)
- SPIRIT PHOTOGRAPHY: the amazing power to photograph "images" of unseen beings (pg. 174)
- PSYCHOKINESIS: the power to lift and move objects by the strength of mind alone (pg. 175)
- PROPHETIC DREAMS: your amazing inborn power to "read" the future before it happens (pg. 22)
- MAKING ELECTRICITY OBEY a spoken word of command (pg. 186)

PSYCHO-HEALING AND YOUR ESP POWERS

As Dr. Manning plainly states on page 65, "a simple recognition of the vital energy-flow from the emotional body to the physical, as directed by the mental body (your mind) gives the healer more ammunition than all the scalpels and antibiotics in the country." He says that "with only a little practice, you can learn to see the energy field around yourself" or others. This energy field, called the "aura" he describes on page 66, and gives you a simple experiment to prove is exists. He shows you how to tune your aura into a halo of HEALING LIGHT. How to direct it to specific areas of the body. How to permeate your body—drenching every organ, muscle, gland and tissue in auric energy. His book gives you a "universal healing exercise" to develop and strengthen your God-given healing powers.

HOW TO USE ESP TO GAIN RICHES

On page 91, Dr. Manning says that even as air and water move in currents, so do the tides of wealth. As he puts it: "You can set up a MENTAL CURRENT to draw riches into your life in tidal waves of abundance." His techniques for utilizing the limitless energy of ESP to attract prosperity and financial plenty into your life are truly amazing. One simple ESP-building ritual takes only 10 minutes of your time, yet sets into action a fantastic psychic current that attracts wealth like a magnet.

True-life case histories prove the power of Dr. Manning's ESP-developing techniques. On page 93 you will read of E.F., a young typist who used the wealth-building ritual, "priming the pump" with a 75c "offering" according to Dr. Manning's system. Almost immediately, her psychic current attracted a raise—a promotion—and an offer of marriage from her boss. Today she is the happy wife of a wealthy and powerful executive!

EXPLORE AND USE THIS EYE-OPENING BOOK FREE FOR TEN DAYS

In this brief space, it's all but impossible to lay before you the wealth of practical visible proof with which Dr. Manning supports his techniques. Or even to adequately describe the ESP-multiplying techniques themselves. They are so simple, so easy to use—yet so astoundingly powerful—that you will be thrilled. about the courtroom, "pacing up and down with his hands behind his back, shaking his head at the court proceedings," to Dr. Gardner Murphy, president of the American Society for Psychical Research.

Asked if he could prove the existence of the soul with the money, Dr. Murphy replied:

"Prove is much too strong a word. But we could make a considerable step forward in understanding some of the material manifestations of the soul leaving the body at the point of death."

Among the other claimants was Mildred B. Probert of Denver, Colo., owner of My Wee Missie, a reputedly clairvoyant Boston Terrier.

"Missie would have proved the existence of the human soul after death," Miss Probert explained to Judge Myers. "She was in constant contact with a departed human." This in her view proves the existence of the human soul.

"When a human claims clairvoyant powers, they may suspect fraud, but when a dog has this power, nobody can say it is a fraud."

Missie supposedly could predict football results, tell the ages and birthdates of persons, predict the sex, weight and birthdate of unborn babies and generally know past and future

Why are you a Failure?

You probably aren't . . . at most things. But if you've stopped to read this, it could mean there's a problem in your life that's not been solved . . . a problem that makes you believe you have failed yourself, or those you love.

IN THE FUTURE

PREMONITIONS and premonitory dreams paradoxically are the most widely accepted type of psychic phenomena and, on reflection, the most difficult to credit. There is always the possibility that coincidence alone has brought about fulfillment of the premonition and that is why it is remembered. But there is also the chance that the future has indeed been glimpsed and the warning truly foreseen.

In Mill Valley, Calif., last March 30, 10-year-old Paul Cohen awoke from a bad dream. It so frightened him that he left his bedroom, went into another room and lay down on the davenport. An hour later Paul's bedroom was engulfed in flames that surely would have burned him to death had he remained there. The fire destroyed his family's home. Premonitory incident or sheer chance?

Lieut. Jerry Briscoe, an Air Force helicopter pilot, took a chance motorcycle trip down a little used utility road on Nellis

In New Castle, Pa., Gabriel Kozora was snapping Polaroid shots of his nine-year-old son when saucer-shaped object loomed into view. Kozora said the object, about 60 feet long, hovered overhead for 15 minutes before heading away to the northwest. UPI Photo.

Air Force Base, in Nevada, late in May. There he found Mrs. Angus F. Greene, 70, seeking aid after her car had broken down on a desert trail. All agreed that Mrs. Greene would surely have died in the 115° heat if Briscoe had not chanced upon her. He went to the base's firing range and returned with a rescue car.

So many of these cases, like most psychic phenomena, are not cut and dried. In May Mrs. James Lawson, Running Springs, Calif., who taught school in Riverside, started out for school with her two children Susan and Gerald. She ran off a cliff and into City Creek in the San Bernardino Mountains. The car overturned in icy water, Susan was pinned beneath it and Mrs. Lawson was submerged in the debris. As she died, she held two-year-old Gerald's head above water, and continued to hold him in death.

It was thus his father came upon them, eight and a half hours after the accident, as he sought to retrace his wife's route and discover what had happened to his family. He found his wife under water in a frozen position, holding Gerald, barely alive, with his head still above water.

When he first spotted the car from the mountain road, Lawson later said, "I saw the car down there and I just didn't care. I could hear my wife calling to me. I had this feeling that she was talking to me, telling me to hurry, hurry."

At our last report it seemed that Gerald would survive.

Now what did James Lawson really hear? His dead wife? Certainly his behavior from the time he was notified that she was missing suggests that he was almost led to the scene. A premonition could well be involved here. It is difficult to sort these things out.

A BRACE OF PROPHETS

THE FUTURE is clearer if we believe the claims of someone like Jeane Dixon who recently told a press conference that she had foreseen the death of our astronauts in the Apollo space ship fire a month before that tragedy. Mrs. Dixon had a vision of the fire last December 20, she says. The Apollo capsule was destroyed January 27. Mrs. Dixon revealed the facts publicly (perhaps not for the first time, however) in New Orleans last June 3.

On that date Mrs. Dixon also made the following predictions:

- The U.S. eventually will become bogged down in a Middle East war similar to the one in Viet Nam. A solution to the crisis will emerge by September with Russia the "clear victor" in the propaganda arena. Scattered clashes will continue between Jews and Arabs.
- Bloodier battles are in sight in Viet Nam with no clear end in sight.

WITH SELF-HYPNOSIS CONTROLS

SELF-HYPNOSIS — HOW TO DO IT!

1. Select position 4 feet from Synchronizer
2. Place Remote Control on lap or alongside chair
3. Select your frequency; complete and deepen trance per instructions
4. Use pre-induction or post-induction technic to give suggestions (both explained in instructions)
5. Let instrument operate 3 minutes
6. For difficult cases allow more than one session

HOW THIS INSTRUMENT WORKS

The BRAIN WAVE SYNCHRONIZER is a photo-electronic instrument that tunes to the natural frequency of the brain. When the special wave pattern of the light is adjusted to the subject's own frequency, resistance to hypnosis diminishes. Response to induction is then rapid, easy and effective.

The BRAIN WAVE SYNCHRONIZER is intended for use only as an aid to hypnotic induction; no therapeutic claim is made for it.

"HEALING HANDS"

By J. Bernard Hutton

The author, a hard-core journalist, had his sight restored after doctors had pronounced his condition as "incurable." This is a detailed study of his healer, George Chapman, and Chapman's "guide," Dr. William Lang, who died in 1937! Hutton probes Chapman's technique and looks closely at a number of his other cases in addition to exploring others in whom the power to defy or implement nature is apparent. 201 pages. Order No. 267. $3.95.

FAITH HEALING: GOD OR FRAUD?

By George Bishop. The full range of healing and healers is explored here—from Tony Agpaoa to Oral Roberts—with the penetrating pen of an active journalist. Includes a full section on the "psychic surgeons." 256 pages with index. Order No. 272. $4.95.

LIVELY GHOSTS OF IRELAND

By Hans Holzer. The latest of the Ghost Hunter's explorations. Here he travels, mostly with Sybil Leek, searching out disembodied Irish characters anxious to be sent beyond the Veil. Together, they encounter many active and amusing ghosts. 192 pages. Order No. 268. $5.00.

THE FLYING SAUCER READER

Edited by Jay David. This anthology of the "best and most authoritative writings" contains 34 separate pieces by such notables as Keyhoe, Fuller, Adamski and many others. 244 pages. Order No. 273. $4.95.

EDGAR CAYCE— THE SLEEPING PROPHET

By Jess Stearn. The author of DOOR TO THE FUTURE here brings the astounding prophecies of Edgar Cayce up to date. He recounts the seer's life and work in a fine, readable style. Order No. 265. $4.95.

ASTROLOGY'S SAY

PERHAPS ONE reason philosophers have been so involved with the problem of free will is the unconscious realization that time may be transposed. The free will dilemma has been one of the great difficulties of religious belief. It is also one reason that many Christian faiths challenge the claims of astrology.

For if the claims of astrology be true it is obvious still another occult discipline is laying claim to the ability to read the future. Such tinkering, of course, challenges free will. For if the future is foreordained how can you and I change it out of our supposed free will?

We have no answer to this problem other than to remind our readers to bear it in mind.

Recently, however, an interesting example of the benefits of astrology was called to our attention. In many countries of south and southeast Asia no one would think of taking an important trip, undertaking an important business venture, or getting married without consulting an astrologer to see if the auguries were favorable.

It seems that in India these days the influential astrologers are warning people against marriage during the 13-month period between September 14, 1967 and October 15, 1968.

"For the first time in 13 years," according to astrologers interviewed by Arthur J. Dommen of the Los Angeles Times in a dispatch from New Delhi, "Jupiter will enter the zodiac sign of Leo next September 14 at exactly eight minutes past 2:00 P.M. From then until the middle of October, 1968, it will be a bad time to get married."

There is not complete agreement of astrologers on this problem, it should be noted. The more "modern" school believes that except for a six-week period in the middle of these 13 months marriages could take place with a good chance of happiness.

For a time it appeared that India's much-needed birth control program would get a striking boost from this most unusual quarter. The matter was so serious, indeed, that a meeting of the Astrological and Astronomical Society of India was called to discuss the problem created by the entry of Jupiter into the house of Leo.

Alas for the birth control advocates, the Hindu swamis attending the meeting unanimously passed a resolution affirming that "there were no across-the-board restrictions on Hindu marriages during the coming period."

One wonders what this does to free will — and also what it does to the authority of the astrologers. Perhaps sex has overcome both.

OUT OF MIND, OUT OF BODY

ONE SCHOLARLY partisan of astral travel — or out-of-the-body experiences — is Dr. E. E. Bernard, a psychologist at North Carolina State University.

Dr. Bernard is doing research on out-of-the-body claims and says "it is like lying on a sofa, getting up and seeing your body still lying on the couch."

In one case Dr. Bernard reports that a person sitting at his desk somehow projected his mind to a distant city he never had visited. Afterwards he was able to describe in detail a street, an office building and persons he saw there. Dr. Bernard investigated these claims and confirmed the accuracy of the subject's detailed descriptions.

Separation of mind and body may last from a few seconds to a few hours. Some persons, whom Dr. Bernard calls "old Pros," can "turn this on and off and control the destination of their minds."

Don't be frightened if you experience astral travel, Dr. Bernard begs. Most persons who experience it without knowing what it is are afraid and worried. Seeing their own body, they may be afraid they are dead. Others fear they are losing their minds.

But all evidence is that mind projection causes no harm to the person experiencing it, he declares.

Dr. Bernard's aim is "to find how to produce the phenomenon, how to control it and how to put it to our most beneficial use."

These experiences definitely are not hallucinations he says. And, oh yes, do you wonder why a university scientist has admitted belief in such an unorthodox idea?

"I am convinced it is a legitimate phenomenon," he asserts. "In fact I have experienced astral projection."

George Everett Adle, Jr., is serving with an armored regiment in Viet Nam. Candy's senses are exquisitely refined and we shall leave it to you to decide whether they represent ESP or a well-developed sense of smell.

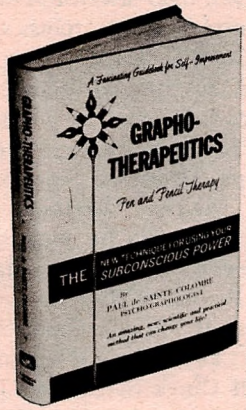

When Spec. 4 Adle (known as "Murphy") left for service last August Candy went on a hunger strike and barely ate for montns. Then she discovered the mail box.

The first time a letter came from Murphy Candy happened to be near the mail box and perked up at once. She nuzzled a number of pieces of mail and then picked out one single envelope — which had come all the way from Viet Nam. Since then Candy invariably collects from the mail box the one letter that was sent by Murphy.

It seems reasonable to conclude that Candy recognizes Murphy's letters by their scent — even though they may take weeks to arrive and may have been handled by a dozen persons and been drenched in the accumulated odors of several thousand persons.

Yet there could be a more subtle ability working here. We would like to see Murphy dictate a letter in Viet Nam and have it posted without having touched it. Do you suppose Candy could pick it out of the mail box then?

You can change your life by changing your handwriting!

OF COURSE DOGS CAN TALK!

RECENTLY Columnist Ann Landers published a letter from a woman (signed "B. Fuddled") who contended she heard a neighbor's poodle say "I want to go outside." Of course "B. Fuddled's" friends assured her she was a candidate for a mental institution.

At once Miss Landers was inundated by a flood of mail from dog owners who claim their pets also can talk. She reprinted excerpts from some of their letters in a recent column.

"Well, if she is nuts then I am, too, because we have a 13-year-old rat terrier who says 'I want out.'" — Nut Number Two.

"Our dog, Heinz, says, 'Howdy, partner,' 'Vas you der, Cholly?' and 'Good night all.' It all started when Heinz sneezed and my husband said 'Gesundheit.' We almost fell over when the dog repeated after him, 'Gesundheit.'" — Covina, Calif.

"What is so special about a dog that says, 'I want to go outside?' Our schnauzer speaks Italian. He says, 'Mamma Signora.' When he hears 'Arrivederci Roma' on the radio he puts his head between his paws and cries." — Proud of Him.

Then there is the one about the bulldog that sat on top of a piano in a bar off Clark Street in Chicago and harmonized with Pad-

$ A MONEY MIRACLE CAN COME TO YOU, TOO!! $

When you are Magnetized for Money.

Join this new Prosperity Movement! Write today for free information.

Properly magnetized, any human being can summon a Money Miracle. For of all miracles, the Money Miracle is most common. They occur every day. Money is not an artificial, man-made institution, but an abstraction of a basic energy of Nature! Prosperity begets prosperity. When your neighbor makes big money, this does not deprive you, but instead increases your chances of getting rich. The more money YOU make, the more everyone makes. There is no limit to human prosperity, save those limitations placed on it artificially by wrong thinking. An individual — you — may be energized, magnetized and polarized to attract the flow of money, for money is an energy, like electricity, and flows according to set patterns of polarity. The Midas Touch bursts upon you when you are fully magnetized. When enough Americans have learned the principles of the Midas Touch, and the techniques of controlling the energy of Nature that manifests itself through the medium of Money, a new national concept of prosperity is to begin. We are authorized now to find the first few people who will be energized, magnetized and polarized to attract the money flow. By radiant example, these trained, enlightened Money Magnets will launch this move toward Prosperity Unlimited. If you are interested in being a guinea pig for Money Miracles, and believe you can handle larger amounts of money than you have ever seen, write for details about this new Prosperity Movement right now. Write to:

IS BILLY GRAHAM RIGHT?

No! says the Rev. Paul Lambourne Higgins in this important book.

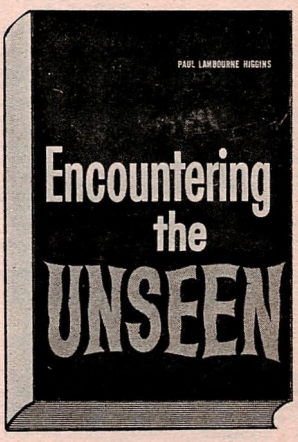

Many devout Christians have worried about the claims of some fundamentalist ministers that psychic matters should be avoided. Now the Rev. Paul Lambourne Higgins, a Methodist minister, answers:

THE CHRISTIAN BIBLE AND INDEED ALL RELIGION IS BASED ON PSYCHIC TRUTH!

Here is a must book for all Christians, pointing a pathway to the only true revival religion can have. Many ministers believe the only salvation for Christianity is to follow the ideas of such men as the Rev. Paul Higgins.

OUR LADY OF GUADALUPE

ONE OF THE world's most famous Catholic shrines is Our Lady of Guadalupe, outside Mexico City, which attracts six million pilgrims annually. The legend of Guadalupe has been told in detail in FATE — how the Virgin appeared to Juan Diego, an Indian, and told him she wished a church to be built on the site. As a sign, to convince the Bishop of the reality of his vision, Juan Diego filled his mantle with roses, freshly blooming in midwinter.

The legend further states that when he unfolded his mantle (or tilma) to show the roses, the image of Our Lady, "The Dark Virgin," was there.

Now this image, on the three-foot by six-foot tilma, is about to be scientifically investigated, according to Catholic sources. If the reports are true the tilma was woven of cactus fibers and normally should have disintegrated in about 20 years. This one shows no signs of disintegration after four centuries. Artists say they know of no way the painting could have been made on the tilma's coarse texture.

Some artists report they can see no visible brush strokes on the painting. The picture is said to be visible on both sides of the tilma and the color seems to be within the fabric. It has survived the touches and kisses of pilgrims, a bombing, and once nitric acid was spilled on it accidentally. Yet it remains triumphantly fresh and bright.

As part of the investigation of this mystery, Mexican oculists are especially anxious to study the eyes of the image. Within the irises of the painting seem to appear tiny reflections of the face and upper body of a man. Oculists who have examined the eyes include Dr. Rafael Torija Lavagnet who used an ophthalmoscope for light and magnification. He reported that he found an image of a man in each eye. "The shining reflections show effectively that the human figure is an image reflected in the cornea and not an optical illusion caused by some accident of the painting's texture," he said.

The painting itself is a life-size image of a young woman of about 15, hands clasped in adoration, standing on a sliver of moon. She wears a rose-covered, full-length tunic over which is a blue-green mantle. She is upheld by an angel and surrounded by 100 golden rays.—Curtis Fuller.

SWAMP GAS

WILL-O'-THE-WISP OR UFOs?

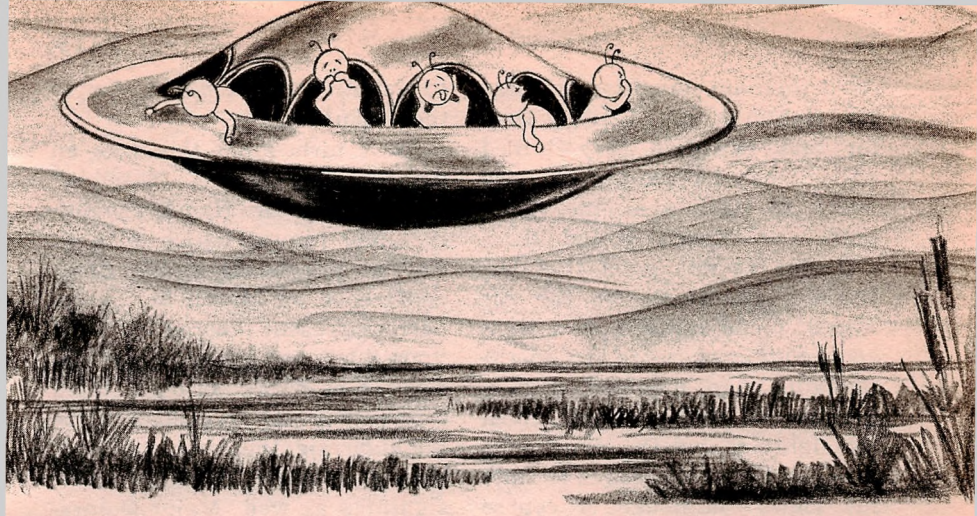

Any of the three can give mere men a merry chase. Which played the lead in Michigan's show?

EARLY IN March, 1966, strange objects began to be seen in the Michigan skies and on March 14, 17, 20 and 21 they provided the spectacular UFO show which was so well-publicized in newspapers across the country.

Act I of the show was staged on March 14 near Ann Arbor in Washtenaw County when strange lighted objects performed in the predawn sky before an audience of amazed civilians and law enforcement officers.

On March 17 other civilians and policemen watched Act II, another predawn show in the sky over another part of the same Michigan county.

Act III began on the night of March 20. The stage had shifted to a swampy area near Dexter, a small town about 10 miles west of Ann Arbor. At about eight-thirty in the evening a local farmer named Frank Manor and his son Ronald claimed they had seen a bright object, like a meteor, drop out of the sky and land about a half mile from their farm. They said they approached to within about 500 yards of an object that was flashing red, white and blue lights from where it sat just off the ground in the swamp.

After the Manors reported, a crowd of over 50 persons including police gathered quickly and watched the same object and several similar objects perform gyrations on the ground and in the skies near Dexter. Several of the elusive objects were chased by police in six separate patrol cars.

The grand finale of this UFO spectacular came on the following night, March 21, in Hillsdale, Mich., 50 miles west of Dexter. Hillsdale Civil Defense Director William Van Horn, a college dean, and 87 co-eds watched for several hours from a safe distance as a UFO alternately hovered and maneuvered over a swamp near the Hillsdale College campus.

Several minor curtain calls followed the Hillsdale sighting but the big show was over after March 21.

Unfortunately the experts arrived too late to see the performance. But Maj. Hector Quintanilla, head of Project Bluebook, Dr. J. Allen Hynek, professor of astronomy at Northwestern University and civilian consultant to the Air Force on UFOs, and several United States Air Force officers might not have arrived at all if the Dexter and Hillsdale sightings hadn't received such wide press and television coverage! Once on the scene they confined their investigation to these two sightings only. Visiting Dexter and Hillsdale they talked with many of those persons who claim to have seen the flying objects on March 20 and 21.

It was at this point that Dr. Hynek, spokesman for the Air Force, found himself in a tight spot. Public pressure for an explanation had mounted quickly because of the publicity given the sightings and Dr. Hynek was directed by the Air Force to state his views — although of course he had not seen the play!

Later he explained in an article in the December 17, 1966, Saturday Evening Post:

"In the midst of this confusion I got a message from the Air Force: There would be a press conference and I would issue a statement about the cause of the sightings. It did me no good to protest, to say that as yet I had no real idea what had caused the reported sightings in the swamps. I was to have a press conference, ready or not.

"Searching for a justifiable explanation of the sightings I remembered a phone call from a botanist at the University of Michigan who called my attention to the phenomenon of burning swamp gas . . . After learning more about swamp gas from other Michigan scientists I decided that it was a 'possible' explanation that I would offer to the reporters."

As it turned out this was an unfortunate choice of "possible" answers and Dr. Hynek promptly found himself stuck with it. For at the hastily-called press conference on March 25 the reporters present ignored his word "possible" and many of the stories the next day not only stated swamp gas was the cause of the Michigan sightings but implied it was the cause of other UFO sightings as well. Major Quintanilla further tightened Hynek's position when he publicly said the swamp gas theory satisfied him and placed the Michigan sightings in the "explained" category.

In the Saturday Evening Post article Dr. Hynek seemed to express some regret over his hastily chosen theory. But the public has shown no inclination to disassociate Dr. Hynek and swamp gas and he remains stuck with what has become a very controversial theory.

It seems the whole country is divided into three schools of thought about the swamp gas theory — pro, con and confused. Some persons have simply accepted the theory at face value and a recent Gallup poll indicated that this explanation is now one of the six most frequently given by persons who attempt to explain UFO phenomena. Others reject the theory, often violently. But most persons still don't know what to think although they tend more toward disbelief rather than belief of the explanation.

Perhaps in the end the controversy will serve a useful purpose, for the scientists may be forced to give consideration to the three questions at the heart of the controversy:

(1) Does swamp gas really exist?

(2) If swamp gas does exist what is it?

(3) Is swamp gas a logical explanation for the Michigan UFO sightings?

The third question cannot be answered without answering the first two although many persons including Air Force personnel have attempted to do just that. The problem lies in the fact that most people know very little about swamp gas and it seems almost as mysterious as the flying saucers themselves. The question becomes, what does science know about swamp gas?

DOES SWAMP GAS EXIST?

BEFORE WE CAN consider swamp gas with any knowledgeability we must stop to consider just plain gas. Webster's Seventh New Collegiate Dictionary (copyright 1965) defines gas as "a fluid (as air) that has neither independent shape nor volume but tends to expand indefinitely."

We immediately are in trouble with swamp gas as an explanation for the Michigan UFOs because the reports indicate they did have independent shape and they did not expand indefinitely. Moreover, swamp gas must be assumed to be spontaneously combustible and if this is so, how is it so?

Down the ages there have been stories of curious unearthly lights seen over bogs, swamps and graveyards. This phenomenon has been called variously will-o'-the-wisp, corpse candle, fox fire, jack-o'-lantern, friar's lantern, spunkie and ignis fatuus. The latter term comes from the Latin and means foolish fire or fool's fire.

Many legends have built up around this phenomenon in times past. In Britain it was thought that the flickering blue lights lured travelers deeper and deeper into the swamps and thus to their doom. In the folklore of many lands ignis fatuus is an omen of death. Even today the name frequently is applied to anything which is misleading.

We no longer fear the phenomenon and today the lights simply are attributed to a luminous gas emanating from the swamp. Descriptions of luminous swamp gas by those claiming to have seen it usually agree quite closely. They will tell you they saw flame-like, torch-like, balloon-shaped or mushroom-shaped lights on a windless summer or warm autumn evening. The lights were either on the ground or just above it; they were pale blue with an occasional tinge of some other color but they never are described as white. The lights usually are only a few inches in size and seldom larger than four or five feet long or in diameter. They may appear to be steady or they may flicker on and off as if extinguished and reignited. If they do not actually move they give the impression of moving if several of them flicker on and off in close proximity. Or they may actually rise into the air. But they rarely rise more than five to 10 feet off the ground before they are extinguished. No single flame or ball of swamp gas ever is described as lasting more than a minute or so before it is extinguished. The only sound ever described in connection with these lights is an occasional popping sound.

MANY SCIENTISTS are among those who over a period of hundreds of years have reported seeing luminous swamp gas. Oddly enough, however, no extensive or comprehensive scientific study of natural swamp gas ever has been undertaken. The research that has been done has been concerned with attempting to duplicate in the laboratory the process by which swamp gas may be produced in nature.

Scientists seem no longer to question the fact that swamp gas contains methane, probably in most cases as its chief component. In fact, for over 50 years methane frequently has been nicknamed marsh gas.

A French scientist, N. Grehant, analyzed a sample of natural swamp gas in 1908 and reported that he found it contained considerable quantities of methane. Several other studies of natural swamp gas also have substantiated this. And studies of synthetic swamp gas produced in the laboratory indicate the chief component is methane.

Methane also is the chief component of natural gas. One might say swamp gas is a lot like the gas that comes out of the burner on your gas stove except that the latter has had an odorant added. Swamp gas then, when it burns, obviously should look a lot like the gas flame on a stove.

Exactly how swamp gas forms and why it burns are questions the scientists cannot answer completely yet. Some scientists apparently feel they have enough information to give some satisfactory answers. They point out that methane is a common and abundant product of the bacterial decay and decomposition of practically any kind of organic or vegetable matter when that decay occurs in oxygen-free (anaerobic) conditions. The essential ingredient produced by the decay seems to be the bacteria that can exist only in the absence of oxygen. These bacteria are found extensively in black mud and decaying vegetable matter.

In nature methane forms most often when plants die and decompose under warm water. The water excludes oxygen and this favors the development of the necessary bacteria. The decay takes place for the most part in late summer and early autumn because of the heat and a swamp or marsh obviously is ideally suited for the process. In the case of a shallow swamp a sudden freeze may trap the gas until a spring thaw releases it. So swamp gas is occasionally seen in the spring.

The anaerobic bacteria that cause the decay have not been studied as extensively as most other types of bacteria because of the difficulties involved in producing them in a pure state in an oxygen-free atmosphere. Nevertheless, about eight different species have been studied in laboratories since 1937. Some scientists even have succeeded in duplicating the decay process under laboratory conditions.

As to how swamp gas ignites to become luminous, scientists can make only educated guesses. Not enough research has been conducted on swamp gas to say for sure but one theory has been around since 1850. Many scientists believe the decay probably results in the formation of impure methane. They speculate that it may be contaminated with two compounds of phosphorous and hydrogen called phosphine and diphosphine. Diphosphine always results, in lesser quantities, in any process that produces phosphine. Both are highly flammable and diphosphine will burn spontaneously when it comes in contact with air. So as the swamp gas escapes from the surface of the swamp the diphosphine present probably ignites spontaneously setting fire to the methane, much like the pilot light on a gas stove ignites the methane escaping from the burner.

Some scientists have found that methane-air mixtures will burst into flame spontaneously if they suddenly are released from high pressure and allowed to expand into the air. Swamp gas possibly may ignite in this way as it escapes from below the surface of the swamp. However, we must remember, this is only conjecture and never has been proven.

DOES SWAMP GAS EXPLAIN THE MICHIGAN UFOs?

SUPERFICIALLY, at least, Dr. Hynek's statement that the Michigan UFOs of March, 1966, were swamp gas seems quite reasonable.

Luminous swamp gas does exist and it does produce an eerie light consisting of several colors to hover over swamps. It seems possible that luminous swamp gas was released by a spring thaw at Dexter and Hillsdale and was mistaken by those who saw it for something more since people are prone to exaggerate when they are excited.

Dr. Hynek seems to have made a valid point when he said, "A dismal swamp is a most unlikely place for a visit from outer space."

On the other hand, the swamp gas theory raises more questions about the Dexter and Hillsdale sightings than it answers. It just doesn't "ring true" for three reasons:

(1) As Dr. Albert Hibbs, a scientist at the California Institute of Technology, recently said, "The characteristics of swamp gas do not accord with what was reported."

For example, the color of swamp gas is usually pale blue with tinges of other colors. It never is reported as being white. Yet both the Dexter and Hillsdale objects were described as having brilliant white lights.

Swamp gas emanations seldom get larger than four or five feet in size, yet both the Dexter and Hillsdale objects were estimated to be 20 or more feet in diameter.

Swamp gas rarely if ever rises more than 10 feet in the air, yet the Dexter object was seen to drop to the ground from high in the air then rise again to a height of about 500 feet before settling to the ground again. In the first place no ball of burning swamp gas could last that long since all gases expand quickly in the atmosphere. An odor released at one point in a room quickly fills the whole room, for example. And the tendency of a hot or burning gas to expand or disperse is greatly enhanced. There is nothing inherent in a ball or flame of methane to counter its tendency to expand and thus swamp gas flares must be short-lived — usually they are extinguished within only a minute or so. But in both the Dexter and Hillsdale sightings the object was in view for a long time — for several hours in the latter case.

Even if a ball of swamp gas were to float high in the air its speed should be limited by the speed of the wind. But the object the Manors saw was described as passing directly over them "in just an instant." And shortly after this an object seen over the nearby town of Chelsea was seen "departing at a high rate of speed."

We also must ask how four balls of swamp gas chased by six police cars at the site of the Dexter sighting could outdistance these cars.

And in all of these sightings why did the swamp gas retreat as it was approached?

How can we account for the sound described by Frank Manor as "like one of those new police sirens, kind of like shooting a bullet through a canyon?" This certainly was not the popping sound usually associated with swamp gas.

And how can we explain the higher than normal levels of radioactivity found at the site of the Hillsdale sighting by Civil Defense Director William Van Horn? Swamp gas is not radioactive and Van Horn was quite convinced the radioactivity was caused by the object seen.

These are some of the unanswered questions Hynek's theory seems to raise.

(2) Another difficulty with the swamp gas theory is that even if it explains the Dexter and Hillsdale sightings of March 20 and 21 it does not account for the sightings of March 14 and 17.

On March 14 near Dexter two deputy sheriffs witnessed four discs "flying in line formation" in the predawn hours. They reported these objects "could move at fantastic speeds, make very sharp turns, dive and climb and hover with great maneuverability." If this account is true these objects (seen in the Dexter area) obviously could not have been swamp gas.

(3) A last detractor of the swamp gas theory is the fact that those persons who saw the objects live in or near swampy areas. At least some of them must be familiar with the appearance of luminous swamp gas. And yet to a person they were convinced swamp gas is not what they saw.

Frank Manor said simply, "It was an object . . . I don't care who believes me. I believe me."

Mrs. Manor who also saw the object later remarked, "I'm no professor and I'm not as educated as him but I think Dr. Hynek was all wrong."

Dexter Police Chief Robert Taylor saw the object and said,

"I have no idea what it was but I don't think it was swamp gas."

Perhaps Patrolman Robert Hunawill best summed up the statements of the many witnesses when he said, "It's not marsh gas! My reaction to Dr. Hynek is the same as the rest of the people around here. He made us look like fools. I don't think he'll get any cooperation out of these people anymore."

REEVALUATING THE SWAMP GAS THEORY

SWAMP GAS does not seem adequately to explain the Dexter and Hillsdale sightings and does not take into account the previous sightings on March 14 and 17 in the same area.

It seems to raise more questions than it answers.

Those who saw the objects are convinced they did not see swamp gas. And at least some of these people are familiar with the phenomenon of swamp gas.

Moreover, many persons who did not see the objects but who are familiar with swamp gas also question Dr. Hynek's theory. Dr. Neil Harriman, biologist at Wisconsin State University, summed up his feelings about swamp gas as follows:

"I saw swamp gas one evening in the summer of 1950 or 1951 over a small marshy arm of a city park lake in Ferguson, St. Louis County, Mo. It was July or August and the air was very hot, humid and still. The appearance was of a bluish-white mass of vaporous material, very roughly globular or spherical, making no sound and rising very gently through the air to a height of perhaps five or six feet before going out. The light was soft and diffuse, not at all like any "mechanical" light source I have ever seen. The ignited gas did not move at all rapidly nor in any clearly defined shape — I cannot imagine that it could have been mistaken for any machine or contrivance."

NO COFFEE BREAK FOR DEATH

AS GEORGE GREEN, 59, was installing a length of pipe in a broken cesspool drain in Cold Spring Harbor, Long Island, N.Y., a half dozen of his fellow workers decided to take their morning coffee break. They invited Green to accompany them but he said he wanted to stay and finish up his end of the job. When the others returned they found the trench in which Green was working had collapsed and buried him. They dug him out quickly but their efforts to revive him failed.

The GALLUP POLL Reports:

FIVE MILLION Americans Have Seen "FLYING SAUCERS"

Extent of acceptance of credibility of "saucers" astonishes pollsters long accustomed to vagaries of public opinion.

By George H. Gallup, III, and John O. Davies, III*

LATE ONE NIGHT a Danville, Ill., housewife and her husband were driving home along a dreary stretch of highway. Suddenly a strange, glowing light above the car attracted her attention.

What the woman saw, she later told a Gallup Poll interviewer, was a "saucer-shaped object about 10 or 12 feet in diameter hovering about 50 feet above the car." The object followed them for "five or six minutes and then raised up suddenly and shot off out of view."

When asked about the feeling she had as she viewed her "saucer" she said she was too excited to be afraid. "Anyway," she pointed out, "we probably could have gotten away from anyone could get down and out of it."

What was it?

"Our government has something to do with it, I'm sure of that," she reasoned. "They've been experimenting with something like this for years."

She and her husband weren't the only ones to see the phenomenon that night. Shortly after their experience two Illinois state policemen reportedly spotted a similar object near Danville and followed it in their car for 10 miles until it vanished abruptly.

The experience of this Danville couple is not as rare as one might believe. Although as many as 11,000 sightings have been reported to the United States Air Force, the Gallup Poll has discovered that somewhere in the neighborhood of five million adults have seen what they believe to be "flying saucers"; this is four percent of the total adult population!

*Mr. Gallup is Managing Director of the Gallup Poll (American Institute of Public Opinion).
Mr. Davies is the organization's editor.

Flying saucers have gotten under people's skins as few subjects have. The public wants to know what it's all about.

"One thing I've got to find out before I get old and die," said a teacher at a New England college, "is whether these 'flying saucers' actually exist, and if they do, where they come from." She spoke humorously but with a note of real frustration in her voice.

Many Americans share her frustration over one of the great mysteries of this era. At the same time, survey data shows that nearly half of all the people in this country believe that "flying saucers" do exist. Another 25 percent do not express an opinion. This leaves only 29 percent who can be counted as "disbelievers."

The Air Force's claim that nearly all sightings easily are explained as meteors, weather balloons, swamp gas or optical illusion apparently does not find a very receptive audience in this country.

Few subjects have captivated the interest of the American people as have UFOs. This is evidenced by the fact that 96 percent of all Americans say they have heard or read about these celestial objects — one of the highest awareness figures ever recorded in the 33-year history of the Gallup Poll. Only persons such as the President and events such as wars have a higher recognition score.

Not only is awareness of the term at an incredibly high level but the speed in which this awareness grew must be close to a record. Less than three weeks after Kenneth Arnold in his private airplane spotted the first "saucer" in 1947 a Gallup Poll found that 94 percent of Americans had heard or read about unidentified flying objects.

Earlier Gallup Polls have sought to determine awareness of "flying saucers" and to find out what people thought them to be but in the latest survey we asked for the first time — just by way of experiment — how many people thought they had seen one.

We privately predicted that a half dozen or so sightings might turn up but they came flooding back on the interviewers' completed forms. Many of the experiences recorded must be considered nothing short of fantastic.

WHO ARE THESE PEOPLE?

WHO ARE these people who have seen "flying saucers?" Are they the "kooks" in the population?

Careful analysis of the backgrounds of persons interviewed clearly indicates these people are average citizens, intelligent and sincere in their opinions.

It might be assumed that persons with less formal education would be more likely to say they have seen "flying saucers." Actually, fairly similar proportions of college- and high school-educated persons and those who have not gone beyond grade school claim to have seen them.

Four percent of all men and six percent of all women say they have seen something in the sky they cannot identify. By regions of the nation the percentages divide this way: in the east five percent of the adult population believes it has seen UFO's; in the midwest six percent; in the south five percent; in the west three percent.

Are flying saucers a fantasy, a figment of the imagination?

Philip Easter of Baltimore, Md., doesn't think so. "It was dark and I had just come outside. I looked up and saw a weird object hovering in the dark sky above me. It was very bright and stayed in about the same position for several minutes. At first I thought it was a planet but I knew it couldn't be because of the way it moved," he said.

One respondent tells of the time last June when he was driving through Topeka, Kansas:

"It was very late — about 2:30 in the morning. I saw a round-shaped object in the sky ahead of me. It was extremely bright and glowed with a greenish hue. By the time I stopped the car and got out it had vanished."

A New Jersey housewife was startled by strange noises one night. "It was about three in the morning," she relates. "I was suddenly awakened by a very bright light outside. I got up and looked out the window and the whole area was lit up like a phosphorous fire. I could hear strange sounds, like the ringing of bells. I know it sounds strange but the next day several people about 20 miles away reported a similar experience occurring at the same time."

Another housewife reported, "I saw a red blinking light not moving or making any noise. Then another one came up and the first one darted away. They were both round and they glowed."

A 29-year-old electronics engineer from Cambridge, Mass., told a Gallup Poll field worker, "I saw a light move across the sky — it did not conform to anything I've ever seen. It didn't look like a normal light and it moved very rapidly."

"During a football game one night a huge white disc moved across the sky," said a Cumberland, Md., housewife. "I am sure it was something from outer space." She added, "Nobody paid much attention to the game, you can be sure. It was circular or oval in shape. It looked kind of flat and had windows and two rays of light coming out of it."

Still another respondent said, "It was a silver, shiny object and looked to be about 12 feet in diameter, high up in the sky. It's probably some secret experiment from Russia or Red China, or maybe it's our own."

The latest poll results represent quite a change in public attitudes toward the credibility of "flying saucers" since the survey conducted 20 years ago, in 1947. At that time four out of every 10 called the saucers either a hoax or the product of someone's overheated imagination. In 1950 another Gallup survey showed attitudes were changing. More persons that year held the view that the saucers were real than said they were imaginary.

The best-educated people have the most faith in the credibility of flying saucers. Fifty-one percent of adults who have been graduated from high school or college believe they are real compared with 33 percent of persons with a grade school background. Exactly half of all women in the United States believe that unidentified flying objects are real, compared with 41 percent of men.

Some people understandably are reluctant to say whether they think flying saucers are real or imaginary. "I don't know about these things — frankly, I try not to think about it," one housewife said.

But a college-trained New Jersey white-collar worker belongs to the ranks of the believers. His belief is based on his own experience of seeing two lights hovering in the sky while on one of his nightly walks.

"They've got to be one of two things," he said, "either an advanced type of vehicle from another planet or a secret type of United States military aircraft. When pilots who have seen all sorts of things see something they've never seen before you know there has to be something." He added, "I believe the government knows but it is afraid of mass hysteria if they let out the truth."

Here are some of the things people are saying about "flying saucers":

"They're people from other planets . . . reflections on clouds . . . they come from outer space and we send them too . . . some kind of northern lights . . . a secret Russian weapon . . . pieces falling off missiles . . . a mixture of light and gases . . . meteors . . . optical illusions . . . somebody trying to reach us . . . it's life from other planets . . . they're casing the joint to see us . . . spying by communist governments . . . pranks by students . . . parts of metal from aircraft . . . probes from outer space to make contact with the earth . . . swamp gas . . . secret government projects . . . weather balloons . . . "

When all responses are collected, these categories emerge most frequently: (1) experimental projects, Air Force tests; (2) actual vehicles from outer space; (3) burning gas, "swamp gas"; (4) Meteors, shooting stars; (5) weather balloons; (6) supernatural revelations.

The response of one elderly citizen of Gallipolis, Ohio, was difficult to classify. He explained flying saucers by saying, "It's God telling people to mind their own business."

A further question on the survey indicates that persons who are inclined to accept the unusual or mysterious — specifically the idea that there is life on other planets — also are more ready to believe in the phenomenon of flying saucers.

Among those persons who believe there is life on other planets opinion is two to one that flying saucers are something real and not people's imaginations. But among those who do not believe there is life on other planets opinion is divided.

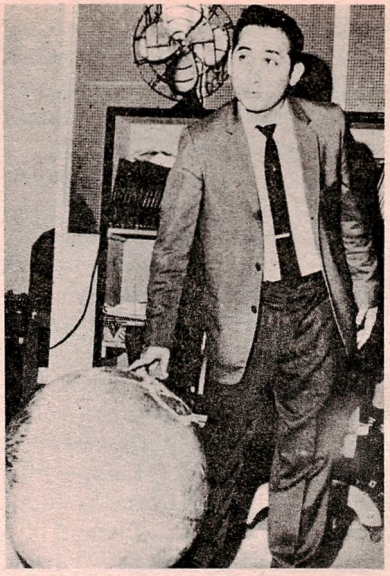

Many scientific authorities believe intelligent life must exist elsewhere in the universe because of the large statistical odds that there are millions of planets in the universe enough like our own to support life as we know it.

One person in every three (34 percent) who participated in this survey said he believes life does exist on other planets. And, to reiterate, those persons with the most education are most inclined to believe intelligent life exists on other planets.

THE FRATERNAL FREIGHTS

IN AUSTRALIA two freight trains of the Melbourne-Sydney Railroad traveling in opposite directions on the same track met in a head-on collision about 45 miles northeast of Melbourne. Neither of the engineers (whose locomotives were pulling empty boxcars) were killed. They were Stan Dixon, 30, and Brian Dixon, 28 — brothers.

Arnulfo Vela, public relations man for the Mexican state, Nuevo Leon, stands near object which fell from sky on February 7, south of Mexican-U.S. border.

What is it? Whose is it? And where did it come from? If anybody knows he's not talking . . . Even research data is hush-hush.

Satellite Without a Country

By Bill Starr

ON THE NIGHT of February 7, 1966, workers at Las Anacuitas, a Mexican communal farm about 130 miles southwest of McAllen, Tex., heard two earsplitting explosions and saw a ball wreathed in flames streak through the dark sky.

The ball, which had a diameter of about two feet and proved to be made of metal, crashed at immeasurable speed into the rocky mountainous terrain and came to rest, still smoking, without damaging itself. In this area only two or three inches of soil cover the granite-hard stone but the ball's surface was not even dented.

The terrified peasants would not touch the mysterious object nor go very near it. Not until five days later did a farmer named Reyes Perales tell a village schoolteacher, Ernesto Torres Malagon, about the incident. Malagon passed the word to Plutarco Elias Calles, the mayor of General Teran. Las Anacuitas is near the village of General Teran in the Mexican state of Nuevo Leon, 30 miles southeast of Monterrey, the state capital.

Mayor Calles sent out men to get the object and bring it to officials of the state of Nuevo Leon. They examined it closely and found a slight seam-like bulge around the middle of the ball and two threaded sockets penetrating the ball's surface to a depth of a quarter-inch. They gave its diameter as 22 inches, described the ball as made of some material resembling aluminum and said it weighed about 75 pounds.

The Nuevo Leon officials took the object to the United States Counsul in Monterrey on the theory that it had something to do with the United States space program. Strangely, the United States Consul was not interested in it.

"They said it had no identifying marks on it and did not appear to be of American origin. Then they sent it back to us," said State Prosecutor Jesus Espinosa.

Espinosa took the ball to keep in his office. "I prepared inquiries to other nations to find out whether they were missing any bits or pieces of their space probes," he said.

Meanwhile, Prof. Paul Engle, head of the astroscience department at Pan American College in Edinburg, Tex., about 140 miles to the northeast of Monterrey, said his records showed no satellite reentries on the date the farmers said the object fell to earth in flames.

"Any object of that size and weight entering the atmosphere would have created a spectacle that would have been visible for hundreds of miles," he said.

Professor Engle's astroscience department at the college maintains a satellite-tracking network which ties in with North American Aviation and the Smithsonian Institution tracking system at North Cambridge, Mass. A few miles north of Edinburg on the site of the old Moore Air Force Base, the professor and his students also maintain a NASA tracking station which reports to the Goddard Flight Center in Maryland.

Professor Engle said a military satellite, dubbed "1962 Beta Tau One" had been due to reenter February 12 and a Russian space vehicle also was due to come in that day but the latter was a huge rocket.

Officials of a military tracking station at Port Mansfield on the Gulf Coast, about 40 miles east of Edinburg, refused to comment. "Our job is not to analyze material. We just collect data and send it to Washington," a spokesman parroted.

Professor Engle ruled out the possibility that the ball was a meteorite. "Meteorites usually are jagged, not spherical. Further, a meteorite that big would weigh at least 200 pounds," he said. "Coming in it would have been extremely spectacular — brighter than a full moon. . . . Thousands of people across hundreds of miles would have seen it."

After a time the federal government of Mexico acted, sending two military chiefs from the national defense department to Monterrey to pick up the ball and all photographs and data pertaining to it.

For two months there was no word at all of the object and it probably would have been conveniently forgotten except for FATE's interest in having a photograph of the sphere and the facts about the ball's mysterious landing in Mexico.

On April 19, 1967, I telephoned the United Press International bureau office in Edinburg and set them on the trail of the sphere. Three American and three Mexican correspondents and a dozen stringers throughout the Mexican republic tried to penetrate the frozen curtain of silence and secrecy which now rang down. At first the Mexican government denied any knowledge of the sphere. I had read of other newsmen running into almost unbelievable government resistance and inertia and now I was face to face with it myself.

After a week's vigorous investigating which turned up practically nothing, the Mexico City UPI office cabled that Mexican scientists had decided to talk. They had identified the object as a titanium gas sphere.

"The Mexican national defense department, which has jurisdiction over the shiny metal sphere, declined to talk about it, treating it as if it were a highly classified military secret," the UPI message said.

My own investigation on a weekend trip to Mexico City met little success. A Mexican research team claimed it had been making studies and tests to determine something about the ball's structure, composition and content. They did not explain why, if it were merely a titanium gas sphere, so much research and study were necessary and still going on after a two-month period.

The same team of scientists brought out the news that this is not the first time a ball like this one had been recovered intact. According to them, at least two others have been found — one in Argentina and one in Africa.

"The ball's function is to direct the satellite to what is known as 'the attitude to the proper orbit,' " they "explained." The scientists said they could identify the object because of their "expert" knowledge of the United States space program and they indicated that when they finished their studies they probably would turn it over to the U.S.

All of this sounded to me like a lot of fuss over a simple gas tank. I was not permitted to photograph the object or even to see it. Neither were the six UPI correspondents.

From Mexico City I returned to Texas by way of Monterrey where through my newspaper contacts and with the help of a good Mexican friend who is also a newspaper man, I wangled out of a local photographer a print which he wisely had not mentioned to the military men from Mexico City when they came to collect the sphere and data.

Returning to Texas I called on Professor Engle and Paul Maley, a student who has distinguished himself in astroscience. For years both men have been key personnel in the college's satellite-tracking network.

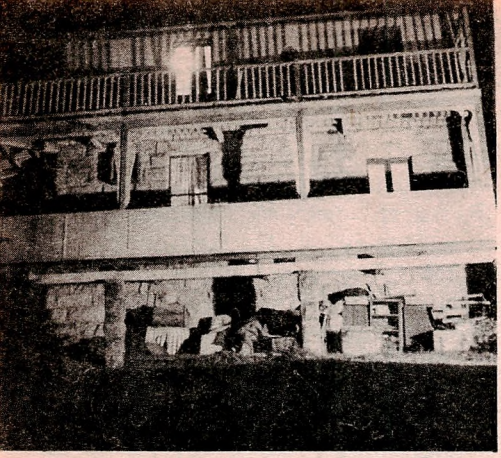

"What the Mexican scientists told you is pure bunk," Professor Engle said.

"Absolutely ridiculous," said Paul Maley. He had talked by phone with North American Aviation in California several times about the object. He quoted a bulletin of the Western Satellite Research network concerning the reentry of the object the night of February 7. "They say it was a 1967-09B, which means it was the ninth launch of 1967 of Soviet Cosmos 140 rocket body."

Maley thought it highly unlikely that an empty gas sphere could weigh 75 pounds. Both he and Professor Engle thought the object should have burned up in the atmosphere and neither could explain the lack of damage to it. The ball had struck almost solid rock at a speed fast enough to give off two sonic booms and create a fiery wreath around it.

"The space defense center of the Air Force identified it as part of a Russian space probe," Maley said. "But I just don't know. So far as I know, nobody in the United States has seen the object, not even a picture of it. How they can be so sure what it is, I don't know. I don't know how it could have landed at such a speed without tearing itself up. I don't know why the Mexicans are treating it with such secrecy and long-drawn-out study if it is as they say a simple gas tank. I don't know why they say it is ours and North American Aviation says it is the Russians'."

Neither does anybody else.

By Michael Tatlow

What occurred in this house long ago remains only rumor, but four intrepid young men today have evidence of their own senses: whatever happened left its mark.

THE GHOST of the MUSICAL MARINER

NEAR A CLIFF overlooking the Pacific Ocean in Sydney, Australia, is a lonely pile of charred timber and sandstone. Today it is all that remains of the house where I met the ghost of the musical mariner.

I first heard of this ghost in July, 1964. A bachelor friend of mine, who begs to remain anonymous, rang me at my newspaper office and self-consciously reported that a week before he had begun renting a rather ugly sandstone house at 69 Undercliffe Road in Sydney's fashionable northern seaside suburb of Harbord.

"It's nearly 100 years old," my friend said, "but it's comfortable, has two stories and gives a marvelous view of the sea. And they wanted only five pounds ($12) a week for it.

"It seemed strange that it was so cheap but I snapped it up. It even has a piano. Strange, that is, until my first night there. So help me, about two in the morning I was in the upstairs bedroom when I was waked by the sound of a piano playing.

"I went to the window wondering what stupid neighbor would be playing at that unearthly hour. Then suddenly I realized that the noise was coming from downstairs, faint but distinct. Beethoven, it was. I recognized snippets from Moonlight Sonata.

"I switched on the light and ran to the head of the stairs but as soon as I reached there the music stopped."

My friend went on to say he had found the downstairs lounge deserted; the quiet piano stood at the foot of the stairs. Finally, wondering if he had been hallucinated, he had gone back to bed only to be waked about 5:00 A.M. by a hissing sound emanating from the bedroom across the small landing at the head of the stairs.

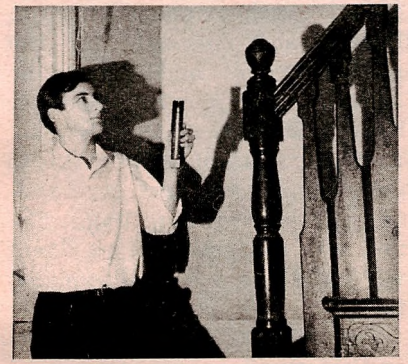

But again as soon as he turned on the light and went to his door the sound stopped. He could find nothing to account for the noise.

"Well, I'm not superstitious," he continued, "but after that I'd had enough. I didn't go back to bed and at nine that morning I packed my things and left for good."

Later that day my friend had returned the house key to the property agent and, not wishing to seem a fool, simply told the agent he had received an unexpected transfer in his work.

"Oh, not another one!" the agent, Mr. Ken Baynes, of 497 Pittwater Rd., Brookvale, Sydney, had groaned. "I can't get anyone to stay there for long. So you think it's haunted too do you?"

My friend described what had happened.

Geoffrey Kearns kept an eye on temperature, for John Heel, an experienced investigator, held that supernatural manifestation may cause sharp drop. Right, Heel, Kearns, Vagg are making one of numerous systematic searches of the entire house.

"In the last few months since the owner vacated it four different tenants have left there telling me similar stories," the agent admitted. "The word is getting around. That's why the rent is so cheap. The owner won't live there either. He's trying to sell the place."

Frankly, the story sounded too unlikely even to justify an investigation — especially by a skeptic like me.

Two weeks later I learned that the popular Sydney bandleader Roland Storm, his mother and three of his musicians had rented the house. Later when I met Roland at a party I casually asked how he had settled into his new residence.

"We didn't settle in at all," he said bluntly. "We spent one week there. Didn't like the location."

"Strange noises in the night by any chance?" I asked.

"How did you know?" he replied.

Roland had a fascinating tale to tell. All five of them had heard unexplainable hissings and groanings; doors he and others had locked evidently opened by themselves; certain rooms sometimes took on a cold eerie atmosphere; and, yes, they had heard the piano play Beethoven.

I DECIDED to solve this mystery. No doubt there was a logical explanation which, if they had not been so terrified or so superstitious, the previous occupants of the house would have discovered. And maybe there was a newspaper story in it.

Property agent Baynes soberly told me the house still was vacant and gave me permission to spend a night there.

So at 10:00 P.M. on Friday, September 14, 1964, carrying torches, food, a tape recorder, a thermometer and several spools of black cotton thread, three other investigators and I arrived at the house.

With me were: John Heel, Thornton St., Randwick, a suburb of Sydney. John, who migrated to Australia from Britain several years ago, has investigated psychic phenomena in Europe and Australia for the past 25 years and admits he believes in ghosts. Geoffrey Kearns, Wingate Ave., Eastwood, another suburb of Sydney, was to act as John's assistant. And Sydney psychologist Mac Vagg, like me, was intrigued but confident we would find a logical explanation.

The sky was overcast and despite a slight breeze it was unnervingly quiet. The only outside sound came from the waves hitting the nearby beach and the rocks below the cliff. I had to admit the house looked sinister.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

MICHAEL TATLOW is a 26-year-old journalist, born on the island of Tasmania which lies south of the mainland of Australia.

Tatlow first reported on "the ghost of the musical mariner" (a name he coined, by the way) in Sydney's Sunday Telegraph. He is now chief of staff on that newspaper.

He is married and has one daughter.

Mr. Tatlow once was a skeptic and quite cynical about supernatural doings but he now confesses that perhaps ghosts do exist.

It was sited well back from the road on an overgrown bank. Built of big sandstone blocks, it had ugly upstairs and downstairs verandas across the front and on one side. It was not a big house. Upstairs there were just two bedrooms with French windows opening onto the veranda. The stairs to these bedrooms rose from a big lounge room which was sparsely furnished with a few comfortable chairs, some cabinets and an old German piano and there was a fireplace. A door led into a smaller recreation room. At the rear of the main building a single-story addition, also of sandstone, contained a pantry, kitchen, laundry and bathroom.

John Heel had learned that the house initially was the home of a Captain James Albert O'Reilly from San Francisco, formerly the master of a whaling clipper that sailed the Pacific in the late 1870's. Local legend had it that O'Reilly, a keen pianist, had murdered his wife in the bedroom upstairs to the left of the stairway. But, alas, John could find no documentation. Several old residents of Harbord had told him the story but he could find no records.

RECENTLY I have learned much more of the legend behind the ghost of the musical mariner by searching through a Harbord lawyer's old property records which although far from complete, show that a Captain J. A. O'Reilly owned the house for 12 years from 1881.

The records carry the cryptic notation that Mrs. O'Reilly, at the age of 47, had died in February, 1882, "by drowning."

The late father of the lawyer also practiced law in the district and after some prodding the lawyer (who does not wish his name used) told me his father had told him a strange tale about O'Reilly.

By the time he was well into his 40's, the story goes, the whaling skipper had saved a considerable amount of money. His wife accompanied him on short voyages. Nonetheless O'Reilly often called at Papeete, Tahiti, and there fell in love with a beautiful blonde French girl named Maria. It was believed she was an entertainer. O'Reilly lavished expensive gifts on her and finally obtained her promise to marry him if he could get rid of his wife. O'Reilly is said to have told her he would have to kill his wife as he was positive she never would grant him a divorce.

O'Reilly recently had bought the then-new house at Harbord. Harbord was known as Freshwater at that time. He told Maria he had enough money to retire and they would make the house their love nest. He said he would return to Sydney, kill his wife then write to tell Maria to sail into his arms.

O'Reilly gave his mistress sufficient money for the voyage from Tahiti to Australia, plus plenty of extra cash. The lawyer remarked it certainly seemed O'Reilly had carried out his part of the scheme.

A few weeks after he returned from Tahiti and signed off his ship O'Reilly reported that his wife had been swept off a small rowboat from which they were fishing at night near their home.

The lawyer has only his father's word for it but the legend says O'Reilly in fact had bludgeoned his wife to death as she slept in her separate bedroom. He then rowed her body a short distance out to sea and fed it to the sharks. There is nothing to dispute this, for Mrs. O'Reilly's body never was found.

O'Reilly duly wrote to Maria. Then he began his long wait — but he never heard from the French beauty. He wrote hopefully several more times and was still waiting at the time of his death 10 years later. In vain he met every ship that came from Tahiti to the Sydney wharves. He spent countless hours pacing the upstairs veranda of his home, watching the horizon for the ship that would bring him his love.

Late into the night, forlornly, alone with his terrible secret, he played his piano — mostly the music of Beethoven. O'Reilly had no friends and eventually died a lonely heartbroken death.

No one seems to know what happened to Maria. She may have died soon after O'Reilly sailed away from Tahiti for the last time. But it seems more likely she was stringing the old boy along, getting all the money from him she could. She well may have caught a boat home to France.

ON ARRIVING at O'Reilly's former home that September evening three years ago we four intrepid investigators spent nearly an hour painstakingly searching the building, including the attic, inside and out, for loose fittings or anything movable that could explain strange noises. We found nothing.

Then we locked every door and window through which anyone — that is any earthly entity larger than a mouse — could enter the house. In addition we bound every door lock and window latch with several thicknesses of our black cotton thread so that if somehow, someone or something sneaked inside and relocked the door or window we would know it.

John Heel hung the thermometer on the lounge room wall. "Often when there is a supernatural presence in a room the temperature drops sharply," he explained.

Nearby we placed the portable tape recorder, set up ready to be turned on if we heard anything unusual.

I admit I was privately amused.

At 11:00 P.M. we switched off the lights in all the other rooms and the four of us quietly settled into chairs in the lounge to wait. By midnight we had heard nothing untoward. The wind had gone down; the thermometer registered a steady 68 degrees. Occasionally, walking softly, using torchlight and keeping conversation to a minimum we checked every room in the house but found nothing disturbed or disturbing.

When by 2:00 A.M. nothing notable had happened we all relaxed and I felt convinced the legend was another tall tale. I fell asleep on the floor.

I woke with a start at 2:50. Mac Vagg, sitting nearby, was looking uneasy. The atmosphere in the room had become electric. John Heel and Geoffrey Kearns were sitting bolt upright.

"I just heard a slight tapping sound upstairs," Mac Vagg said.

After waiting a few minutes Mac and I cautiously searched the house again but found nothing changed. All the threads were still in place, intact.

We had been back in the lounge some 15 minutes when we all heard a high-pitched hissing sound coming from inside the house. It faded for a few seconds, then resumed, sounding like a thin stream of water falling into an empty tub. The sound lasted about a minute, until Mac crossed the room to turn on the tape recorder. It had seemed to come from several different directions at the same time. All of us searched the house again and this time we turned on several lights.

We discovered there was no thread on the French window leading from the downstairs balcony to the recreation room. John Heel and Geoffrey Kearns swore they had threaded the window with about six thicknesses of thread. But now there was no sign of it.

Throughout the night Mac Vagg and I had been sitting no more than 15 feet from this French window. Not even the sneakiest cat burglar could have opened the window without our hearing him. The only other entrance to the room was through the door alongside my chair.

"It's impossible for cotton to vanish like that," I observed superfluously.

All of us together then rethreaded the window and at 4:30 A.M. we were again sitting quietly in the lounge. The temperature had dropped only one degree.

Now began the weirdest hour of my life!

At 4:40 a quite audible noise began in the room directly above us. Even John Heel who has defective hearing picked it up plainly. "It sounds like escaping gas," he said switching on the tape recorder.

Mac Vagg and I thought it sounded more like running water although there was not one pipe up there and it had not rained for days.

We ran upstairs but the noise stopped as soon as we reached the staircase. But as we entered the room from which we thought the sound had originated another noise stopped us in our tracks. A high-pitched whistle was coming from the bedroom behind us. This was the room in which Captain O'Reilly was said to have murdered his wife. This sound stopped as we opened the door.

At 4:45 we had returned to the lounge in time to hear three distinct but muffled thuds, like heavy footfalls. They made the house vibrate slightly and seemed to come from upstairs, possibly from the rickety old veranda which no man could reach quietly without climbing the stairs. The noises stopped as soon as we spoke.

At 4:50 Mac Vagg set the transistor tape recorder at the top of the stairs and turned it on.

At 5:08 we heard four muffled footsteps upstairs. At 5:16 there were three more steps. At 5:18 there was one loud stamp in the room above us. It made the house quiver. At 5:30 we heard two more loud stamps in quick succession. These were followed in a few seconds by softer thuds. At 5:31 we heard one distant thud. And at 5:39 we again heard the sound of hissing or running water for about one minute. At 5:45 we heard two more steps.

By 5:45 it was daylight and we made a careful search inside and outside the house. We could find nothing to account for the noises. The tape recorder had picked up nothing but it was not a sensitive machine and its tape had surface noise.

John Heel later told us the sound of a ghost has been recorded on tape only once so far as he knew.

"There is something very weird in that house," he said. "The only explanation I can offer is that it is a ghost. The noises could not possibly have been made by an underwater stream, faulty plumbing, mice, rats or opossums."

Because the tape was bare of sound I wondered if we had heard the noises as a result of some sort of autosuggestion. We certainly had been keyed up during those early morning hours.

So the following Wednesday night, September 19, seven of us went to the house. Heel, Vagg, Kearns and I were accompanied by Patricia Jensen, 25, of Henry Street, Guildford, Sydney; Patricia Sutherland, 20, of Binburra Avenue, Avalon Beach, Sydney; and Brian Welsh, of Stoney Creek Road, Kingsgrove, Sydney.

During the afternoon Mac Vagg and Brian Welsh again had examined the house in the sober light of day. They had paid especial attention to the small empty attic. The seven of us rechecked the house and sealed it with thread as we had before.

We had another companion — one who is inquisitive, intelligent and friendly and who has very sharp hearing — Prince, my Scotch collie. Prince trotted around the house like the regular investigator he is, looking under the beds and in dark corners. We felt if he picked up any strange noises they could not be attributed to human autosuggestion.

For our base this time we took the downstairs recreation room where the cotton had vanished. At the top of the stairs we placed a larger, more sensitive tape recorder with a lead enabling us to turn it on and off from the recreation room. It ran for three hours that night without recording one noise.

We did not hear or see anything unusual until 1:50 A.M. on the Thursday. Then five of us, including me, picked up the high-pitched hissing whistle we had heard before. It lasted about three minutes. Prince did not seem to hear it.

A few minutes later all of us heard three faint thuds upstairs. Prince immediately pricked up his ears and began to walk uneasily about the room whining.

At 2:00 A.M. John Heel, Geoffrey Kearns, Prince and I made the usual hourly torchlight search. A shock awaited us at the top of the stairs. Earlier we had shot home the latches on every door in the house. Yet the door on the left, leading to the bedroom over our base room and in which O'Reilly's wife is said to have been slain, was wide open! It was pushed right back against the wall.

There had been no key for us actually to lock the door but three of us had watched Geoffrey close it firmly an hour before. It could not be opened without turning the fairly stiff handle.

I held the door half open to see whether, if by some chance the lock had undone itself, the door would swing open. The door slowly swung shut!

Back in the base room some 20 minutes later Mac Vagg and Patricia Sutherland said they thought they heard a distant clock chiming. All of us, including the dog, heard two more slight thuds at 2:45 A.M.

We made another torchlight search of the premises at 3:00 A.M. and as we gingerly approached the top of the stairs we found the other door wide open! It too had been pushed right back — over the edge of a big carpet. I myself had made certain the door was securely closed and no one had left the base room between searches. Because they did not afford entrance to the premises none of the inside doors had been threaded with cotton.

I reclosed the door then pushed it open again to where it had been when we discovered it. It took quite an effort to push it over the carpet although the door did not squeak. No draught could have opened it that far.

After examining both bedrooms and finding nothing amiss we turned to go back downstairs. We were at a loss to explain the opening doors, one of the things the house's previous occupants had complained of.

In his usual eager manner Prince rushed ahead to lead us down. But when he reached the top of the stairs he froze. Staring down into the darkness he took several steps backward, then ran back along the landing.

By this time I was standing at the head of the stairs. I called Prince three times. Each time he came back to my side at the head of the stairs, stopped and ran back to the far wall. He began to whine mournfully.

Prince refused to go down the stairs until I started off ahead of him. I never had seen him act this way before. Nor has he acted this way since. He seemed strangely subdued for the remainder of our "ghost watch." Did he hear or sense some sinister presence not detected by the rest of us?

From 3:10 to 3:25 A.M. Mac Vagg, Brian Welsh, Prince and I sat quietly in the dark in the upstairs bedroom in which the old captain is said to have killed his wife.

We had been there only five minutes when Mac said, "Ah, now I know what it is." He walked over to the French window then added, "That's strange. I don't know after all. I heard that chiming sound again and thought it was a bell ringing in the distance. But there's no bell ringing out there. It beats me."

We ended our "watch" in the early daylight at 6:00 A.M. without hearing anything else strange.

We found no explanations for anything that occurred during the two nights we spent in that house and those of us who went there believing there are no such things as ghosts now are not so sure.

We did not hear the piano play. But those persons who claimed the piano played Beethoven by itself in the middle of the night had not previously heard the legend of the musical mariner. Did the chiming we heard explain the mysterious piano playing? And if so then what explains the chiming?

Did the high-pitched whistle from Mrs. O'Reilly's bedroom have some connection with her death? Are the footsteps those of the mariner's ghost still pacing the veranda and awaiting the arrival of a long-lost love?

I am quite certain none of these questions ever will be answered for . . .

Two weeks after we spent our second night in the "haunted" house it suddenly burst into flames and burned to the ground. The old building was unoccupied and authorities could find no cause for the fire. Even the end of the strange house is a mystery.

The property is now owned by agent Ken Baynes and it is still for sale. If you do not believe in ghosts you may have a bargain.

Critics decry parapsychologists' efforts to solidify facts while nonparapsychologists discover bits and pieces of "a theory."

By Walter J. McGraw

ARE PARAPSYCHOLOGISTS WORKING THEMSELVES OUT OF A JOB?

NOT LONG AGO a group of distinguished parapsychologists held a meeting. Afterward one of their number grumbled into his martini that the society that sponsored the gathering should be honest and change its designation to "a society for the study of para*statistics*."

This of course was only his way of echoing an often-heard complaint from many of the workers in and the observers of the field of parapsychology which its proponents like to call our newest science and its opponents refuse to dignify as a science at all. The gist of this complaint is that parapsychologists are spending so much time and effort repeating the same old quantitative experiments that no one gets around to doing the qualitative work that will have to be done if the "how" of ESP ever is to be discovered.

Dr. C. J. Ducasse, professor of philosophy emeritus of Brown University, has said, "The great lack in this field is the lack of a theory that would begin to account for all the solid facts we have." Positive critics decry the continued efforts expended to make the facts ever more solid while some nonparapsychologists seem to be coming close to bits and pieces of "a theory."

A prime example of this was treated in the September, 1967, issue of FATE ("Fingertip Vision, A Second Interim Report") in which it was reported that Dr. Richard P. Youtz of Columbia University's Barnard College Department of Psychology, has hypothesized that what others have called "extra-ocular vision" is the result of some persons (about 10 percent) being hypersensitive to temperature change.

Youtz has been interested in what he calls "aphotic digital color sensing" ever since he discovered that Mrs. Pat Stanley of Flint, Mich., can distinguish colors with her fingertips.

He found that Mrs. Stanley can distinguish colors of unseen objects when they are at room temperature and when her fingers are about 90°F. But she cannot when her fingers are down around 70°F. He theorizes that she is more than normally sensitive to temperature changes.

In tests conducted by Dr. Youtz I also was able to distinguish colors with my fingertips when the temperature differences were exaggerated. Not too many years ago if I had said I achieved a 100 percent score in distinguishing colors of objects I neither saw nor touched my abilities would have fitted neatly into what is called clairvoyance. But the secret is disappointingly simple. All that happened is that I felt a draft when I held my palm over black which absorbs heat and noted the absence of the draft when I moved my hand over to the unpainted side of the metal plate. Clairvoyance indeed!

The irony of this is that serious scientists long have said that the idea of anyone distinguishing colors they could neither see nor touch was impossible — not even worth investigating! Only the parapsychologists or "psychic investigators" bothered to continue looking into these "impossibilities" but now "orthodox" science seems to have one small answer to the puzzle.

Youtz, a firm disbeliever in ESP, states firmly that despite "the fact that Dr. J. B. Rhine has said this must be ESP" it is not. According to Rhine "ESP is nonphysical" but Dr. Youtz believes there is a physical explanation for "fingertip vision."

And if Youtz is right we may be witnessing the onset of the death, by shrinkage, of the "science" of parapsychology. This is not to say the so-called parapsychological phenomena that have plagued us for so many centuries finally will go away and leave us alone but rather that as the nature of the phenomena becomes understood, it will cease to be "parapsychological."

Innumerable cases of this already have been seen in the study of animals — bats, salmon, even the lowly ants. As we have come to understand how they avoid flying into walls, how they find their way home to spawn, how they manage to follow their leaders, we no longer speak of their "instincts" (our euphemism for animal ESP) and instead talk about supersensory (not extrasensory) powers having to do with hearing and smelling.

Now it seems to be happening in the realm of human "instinct." If Youtz's hypothesis is correct this formerly clairvoyant ability will be taken over by the orthodox sciences without even a nod to the poor cousin who has been insisting, "Look! These things do happen. Can't we please find out how they happen?"

CLAIRVOYANCE may not be the only one of the extra senses to be joining, in a minor way, the physical senses. Consider the following quotation:

"I felt as if I were outside my body. My 'ego' seemed suspended somewhere in space whereas I saw my body lying on the sofa."

This statement is taken from the laboratory journal of Dr. A. Hofmann of the Sandoz Laboratories, Basel, Switzerland. It is dated April 19, 1943, and is part of his description of the first scientific ingestion by a human being of d-lysergic acid diethylamide (LSD) which he and A. Stoll had synthesized in 1938.

Witches' sabbats were considered mere mythology until Dr. Erich-Will Peuckert of the University of Göttingen, Germany, wrote a paper describing his hallucinatory experiences after personally trying a concoction, the formula for which he found in a rare old book written in archaic Latin by Johannes Baptista Porta in 1568 and titled Magia Naturalis.* Under the influence of this ancient psychedelic he and an attorney friend whose name he refused to reveal had seemed to fly through the air for miles to participate in that wildest, most depraved of all debauches — the Witches' Sabbat. Their similar experiences included the voluptuous young ladies, the monsters and demons, the perverted sex practices and the homage to the devil described at the medieval witch trials. This formula, fortunately or unfortunately, has not become generally available but should it come to general use undoubtedly (like LSD which gained much of its earliest publicity from students of ESP) it will be taken from the hands of the parapsychologists by the psychologists and the federal Food and Drug Administration.

While the parasychologists are seeking respectability by feeding figures endlessly into computers the leaders of orthodox science are going "farther out" than the psychic investigators ever have dared.

Recently Dr. F. R. Stannard, a physicist of the University College, London, suggested we might be living concurrently with another universe where time runs backward. Then Martin Gardner who has made a reputation (and presumably a living) defending orthodox science from the claims of such men as Rhine ("a borderline scientist whose work cannot be called crank") wrote a long and fascinating article for the Scientific American showing how this anti-universe indeed might exist.

And there have been hints from microphysicists that results might precede causes when you deal with some of the tiniest particles. The immutable rule that cause must precede result has been one of the strongest arguments against precognition.

I recently attended a press conference sponsored by the American Medical Association. There the speaker repeated to a group of medical reporters what he had said in his keynote address to the Fourth AMA Congress on Environmental Health Problems.

"In a relatively short time, possibly 10 years, we will have discovered that what we call telepathy is a part of the electromagnetic spectrum," he said.

Despite the fact that in the first instance his audience had been several hundred doctors and in the second instance, representatives of the most orthodox journals imaginable, no one blinked an eye. I blinked twice and then interviewed the speaker for an upcoming series of radio programs for Group W stations of the Westinghouse Broadcasting Company.

Buckminster Fuller has been called by astronomer Harlow Shapley "the brightest man alive." He is a poet, engineer, inventor, cartographer, cosmogonist, architect, design scientist, mathematician and educator. He has invented a new type of automobile (three-wheeled with 120 miles an hour top speed and ability to turn full-circle within its own length), several new types of buildings and has designed the United States Pavilion at Montreal's "Expo 67" world fair. He is in the process of designing two new cities (in Minnesota and Japan) while writing a book on a new approach to mathematics. He was introduced in the AMA meeting as perhaps the only man who ever became a professor at Harvard despite the fact that he did not have a degree from any university and moreover, as an undergraduate, twice had been expelled from Harvard.

Fuller is not a silent man. A New Yorker profile reported that he has been known to talk continuously from eight in the morning until after midnight without a stop. This is not to say it takes him long to say something. Indeed, he says a great deal in a short time but he has much he considers important. Listening to him for an hour, which I did in answer to one question, leaves you feeling mentally as you would feel physically if at one sitting you ate everything on the menu of a very good French restaurant.

After the press conference I was introduced to him. I explained briefly that the series I was doing concerned the "far-out" aspects of science, many of which he had mentioned. I did not have a chance to say that I was most interested in that parenthetical remark about ESP he had tossed so casually into his previous talk. One barely has time to state a question before a Fuller answer flows at you, literally from all four points of the intellectual compass.

"We all have extraordinary faculties," he began. "Every child is born a genius; then we go about de-geniusing him. Our whole concept in education today is that a child is an empty little milk bottle and we take our wisdom and try to pour it into that milk bottle. It's nice and you don't blame parents for doing what they've done. They do it with love.

"But we've learned new things about the mind. Take the work of Benjamin Bloom who is professor of education at the University of Chicago. We know that a child has an innate ability to learn by virtue of chromosome design, about which we know very little. By the time a child is four years old 50 percent of his total capabilities to apprehend and comprehend are brought into play; 80 percent by the time he is seven years old; 92 percent by 15 and 100 percent by 17."

Fuller likens this chromosome-automated ability to a switchboard. The chromosomes tell the child when a certain ability will come and environment has no influence. A child will walk when it is ready and not before.

"People worry when the little boy next door walks before their child does so they try to get him to walk but he won't do it. But when he's ready the only way you can keep him down is to put a table over his head so he bumps it when he stands up."

But if, according to Fuller's analogy, the chromosomes put plugs into the switchboard, environment pulls them out. One way for a plug to be pulled out is not to immediately use the ability that the chromosomes key in.

"For instance, there have been children whose eyes were covered up when they were born. At the time when they should first have used their eyes they couldn't so they never could use their eyes."

Fuller says three things are important to a child; trust, autonomy and initiative. When these are violated plugs are pulled out.

"You have a one-year-old child lying on his bed and he hears his parents in a drunken brawl — you have a certified dropout. The trust was violated.

"Then there's some sort of a minimum domain which the child must have. Give a child his own room and his own bed, he will prosper; put two children in the same bed, the I.Q. goes down. Their autonomy has been violated.

"When we don't let the kid learn what he wants to when he wants to we violate his initiative. More plugs get pulled out. When initiative breaks down we call it 'lazy.' It simply means all the plugs have been pulled out."

One of the characteristics for which Buckminster Fuller is famous is his habit of seeming to go clear off the subject and then swinging back to his point from left field.

"You know," he now said, "approximately seven years ago there were two papers given at a scientific convention, one on anthropology and one on biology. Unknown to each other, one man was examining the case histories of all the human tribes that have become extinct and the other man was examining case histories of all biological species that have become extinct. Both were looking for some commonality of extinction. Both, separately, discovered that extinction was a consequence of overspecialization.

"Children are not born specialists; they are comprehensively interested to ask questions in every direction. But parents say 'You can't be interested in all the world. You have to learn a "one" and a "two" and a "three" and an "A" and a "B" and a "C." The only way to make a living is to develop a specialization so you will have your own little tollgate society has to go through.' So we make the kids specialize and their initiative is violated and plugs are pulled out."

But Fuller foresees that the end of the age of specialization will be brought about by, among other things, that greatest of specialists, the computer. It will put men out of the specialist business because it is so much better at the job.

Then TV, he believes, is giving the kids the type of education they really want.

"Kids are learning from the 'third parent' in every home and TV teaches comprehensively. Kids know so much more than we do because they have so much less that's false to unlearn. This is the first generation in history that is growing up with a world view."

Here of course Fuller's ideas seem close to some statements made by Rhine who has found that children do better on ESP tests than do adults and that these same children do less well as they grow older. Using Fuller's switchboard analogy, perhaps the chromosomes plug in psi ability and either it is lost from lack of use and/or the plug is pulled out by the "wisdom" that is poured into "the little milk bottles." But Fuller believes fewer and fewer plugs are being pulled out of these new "world citizens" and that the "United States is ready to take off not only into the sea and the sky but into the universe. By the 21st Century we really will be very deep in the universe not only physically but metaphysically."

Fuller points out that in 1930 Einstein had given his view of God which had to do with the orderliness and the interrelatedness of all things in the universe. He quoted Einstein as saying, "I think all the great scientists, who are considered the greatest heretics by the church, are much more imbued with a fundamental faith in God than are the people of the church." And Fuller feels that when the computer forces the scientists to give up specialization, then true intellectual integration will begin to take place.

"Nothing is more impressive," he said, "than the fact that 99.9 percent of everything we're doing is going on in the area of the electromagnetic spectrum and is not directly contacted by our senses. The only contact is, you see, through intellect."

To Fuller it seems only a short jump to tie this intellect to the electromagnetic spectrum and he says he was "only mildly surprised when someone discovered we have telepathic capability. I think it is something we really must start dealing with.

"All the people who made great scientific breakthroughs . . . examine their personal letters, their own diaries at the time they made their great discoveries and you'll find that the essence was intuition. And then they had a second intuition about what to do about it."

As for the source of that intuition Fuller points out that in ancient times when man had no tools he was forced to get along by intellect alone. He says, in ancient writings "I find, time and again, expressions which are more poetically simple and more profound than the thinking of today.

"Perhaps as you look up at the sky where there is no impedance you might have a thought and you might beam it out and it might hit a star and it might bounce and come back 100 or 1000 years from now. Many of the thoughts we have now may be thoughts that occurred in some yesterday. There could be a lot of this 'bounce-off' thinking that might be coming back now. I have had mathematical discoveries . . . really flash ones . . . and I've had a most extraordinary sense of a sort of "intellectual mustiness' — that this was known before. Even though it's not in any of the records I know that this thought has hit man before."

Fuller is fascinated with his concept of the 21st Century man. He thinks the picture Aldous Huxley painted in Brave New World was completely wrong and that Huxley just before his death came to think so too. He said Huxley felt that man was approaching an understanding of the orderliness of the universe at a much faster pace than he had ever felt was possible. Fuller thinks telepathy will have a profound effect on life in the 21st Century.

"Imagine what it will be like to know what everybody is thinking. All the hypocrisies of yesterday are going to have to change very, very greatly. Our whole way of thinking will have to change. The criteria of what is fun, etc., will be very, very different. The criteria of what is joy, of what is valuable, all that will be very, very different."

But the main thing Buckminster Fuller sees about 21st Century man is that he will live "with nothing we have today except the integrities. That is the key to our whole new relationship to the universe."

After taping almost an hour of material for an interview I had promised to keep down to 10 or 15 minutes Fuller's escorts rushed him off to his next appointment for which he already was late. As he dashed off to talk with Governor Rockefeller I compared Fuller with his own picture of 21st Century man: knowledgeable, interested in the comprehensive picture and above all, intuitive. For among the many things he touched on that morning he chose to expand his casual aside on ESP, the very thing in which I was most interested. At the very least, this was a fascinating coincidence.

Recently come from my session with Youtz, I could not help wondering about 21st Century man. If Buckminster Fuller is right (and he seems to make this a habit) man will intuitively in the 21st Century use the electromagnetic spectrum to read others' thoughts and he will have forgotten there ever was a body of research which, until it shrank out of existence, was called "parapsychology."

SPECTER AT THE STEEL PLANT

A MODERN steel plant seems an unusual habitat for a ghost but a recent report indicates that one was seen at the Edgar Thomson Works in Braddock, Pa. The story appeared in The Uniter, a publication of United Steel Workers Local 1219 at Edgar Thomson.

After midnight on February 11, 1967, one of the furnace men glanced up at the top of the stairs of No. 16 furnace at the plant and saw a strange sight. He described it as a "figure, darkish white, about five feet, 11 inches tall . . . It had no face but a sort of head resting on its shoulders and it stood about seven inches off the ground."

The furnace man summoned another steelworker who also saw the apparition. As they evidently became certain that what they witnessed was distinctly strange, they whirled in fright and ran from the building.

The account in The Uniter was mentioned by Edward Verlich in an article in The Pittsburgh Press for March 21, 1967. Verlich also mentioned a possible explanation for the blast furnace ghost.

In the 'Twenties, Verlich related, a despondent man committed suicide by throwing himself into the path of a train after his wife was murdered in the Port Perry Tunnel, also known as Hamburg Road, in Braddock. The train decapitated him. Since then stories continually circulate that many have seen the dead man in the tunnel area. He became known as the "Ghost of Hamburg Road." Now that the tunnel is closed, it is suggested, the ghost has moved his hauntings to the steel plant.

True Mystic Experiences

FATE will pay $5.00 for each true experience published. Stories should be less than 300 words and typed double-spaced on one side of the paper. They may be sent to the TME Editor, FATE Magazine, 500 Hyacinth Pl., Highland Park, Ill. 60035. They must be signed by the author and address must be shown. Manuscripts will not be returned unless accompanied by stamped self-addressed envelope.

NO MORE CARD-READING

By Esther Cristiano

AT A LITTLE gift shop in Los Angeles I found a fortune-telling game which used cards. Whenever we had guests I would get out the little game — which everyone thought was a fun thing — and "read cards" for them. Everyone was amused and fascinated by conjecturing about what the future held.

When I first began to read I would elaborate and exaggerate to amuse, even titillate my listeners. But to my amazement pictures started to come to me as I played with the little game — pictures of things to come.

Visions of accidents, illnesses and danger to children were always striking me and I would be compelled to caution my friends against driving their cars on certain days.

My friends and family began to look at me as if I were odd when I would name the person telephoning — before it rang.

I felt a certain uneasiness within myself. It seemed some force directed me every moment of the day and I knew I had never hurt anyone. But the whole thing was getting out of hand — extensive mail, phone calls and readings drained my time and energy.

Suddenly everything came to a head. After reading for my neighbor Elaine Worrell on December 27, 1964, I stopped reading cards altogether!

Esther Cristiano

Elaine had laid out the cards as everyone had to do. When pictures began to form I envisioned her son Paul strangling in the dust of the school yard. I felt sick. I had watched Paul grow from a child into a handsome teen-aged six-footer.

"I can't read anymore," I said.

Two days later Elaine called me, her voice filled with panic. "Please say a prayer for Paul! Something has happened to him in the school yard. He was playing football with his brothers . . ."

I did pray over and over, "God, please take care of Paul."

As I had seen in the cards Paul died in the school yard, strangling in the throes of a heart attack!

Alexander Pope said, "Purposely Heaven from all creatures hides the book of fate." I am not a god to hold hands with fate. I won't read cards anymore. — Anaheim, Calif.

COINCIDING DREAMS

By Raymond Bayless

WHEN I RETIRED the night of August 10, 1965, I lay sleepless in my dark bedroom for about 30 minutes. As my insomniac mind whirled, a most unpleasant obsessive thought seized my consciousness. I was sure that the rotted head of a dead old woman lay under my bed. While I naturally recognized the irrational nature of this thought I could not get rid of it.

After some minutes I turned on the light and actually desperate, I looked under the bed — of course I found nothing. I searched the house for any possible source of this unpleasant ridiculous idea. Even while engaged in my search I could not free myself of the obsession.

Then, exactly as if a switch had been turned off, the idea of the hideous head left me. It was exactly 11:00 P.M. Glad to feel free and relaxed, I returned to my bed with no thought that this curious experience was in any way paranormal.

The next morning Ceil E. Smith, a friend, visited me and as he began to talk I knew immediately that an incident paranormal in origin was unfolding. This is his statement:

"I visited Raymond Bayless on August 11, 1965, and mentioned that my sleep the night before had been disturbed by an especially unpleasant dream. I dreamed I had killed an elderly lady and carried her head around in a box. The dream was so horrible it awakened me. I noticed the time I awoke was exactly 11:00 P.M."

"Bayless then told me of his odd experience involving the head of an old woman. He remarked that his obsessive thought suddenly terminated at 11:00 P.M."

As an investigator of psychic phenomena I consider this incident doubly valuable inasmuch as it was not a tale related to me but a personal experience admitting of no doubt whatsoever. — Los Angeles, Calif.

THE REAPER

By Laura Williams

IN 1946 I LIVED with my family on Townsend Street in the small industrial town of Midland, Mich. Of the three bedrooms in our house mine was the back one and the door to the basement was in the kitchen, right outside my bedroom door.

One Sunday night in April everyone in the house was sleeping except me. I had stayed up reading and was just ready to go to bed when a rumbling, groaning sound began. It seemed to emanate from the basement but soon the horrible moaning filled the whole house. I was frozen with fear. My mind said relax, you're dreaming, but I was not convinced. The sound continued for I don't know how long, then trailed away. It was nearly dawn before I became calm enough to fall asleep.

In the morning when I told the rest of the family no one paid any attention to me. They knew made-up stories more than once had come from my vivid imagination.

A week later shortly after we all had retired the groaning and rumbling began again. Mother came to my bedroom door and asked, "Is that the noise you heard last week?"

When I said it was she asked me to go downstairs with her to investigate. When we opened the basement door the wailing was deafening. Mother slammed the door and said, "I'll make you a bed on the couch."

The next morning my mother changed our sleeping arrangements so that my brother, a veteran of 36 months' overseas duty, was to sleep in the back bedroom, for we felt sure he could handle whatever "it" was.

A few weeks later, again shortly after we had retired, the groaning and rumbling filled the house. Everyone except my father heard it.

The next morning my brother was no longer laughing about the situation. He called a friend on the police force and together they went to the basement, tapping walls and floors, searching for some clue to what was terrorizing our family. They visited the neighbors, hoping somehow to find an answer. Was there an answer?

My brother, tough as they come, put a lock on his bedroom door but he never stopped looking for the source of the noise. And he never found it.

On July 8, 1946, we were entertaining guests. About 10:00 P.M. the noise began, louder than it ever had been. The mournful wail, the agonized moaning shook the walls. This time even the neighbors heard and came from houses on either side to find out what was happening.

The men were determined to go to the basement and find out once and for all what was there. As they approached the basement door the moaning stopped. One man opened the door and started downstairs, the other men following. Silence greeted them. That was the last time the noise ever was heard.

My mother, who at 50 never had known a day's sickness in her life, quietly died in her sleep that night. What did the noise mean? What had it tried to tell us? — Houston, Tex.

A CALL IN THE WILD

By Doris J. Teddleton

A HEAVY STORM in November, 1962, brought furious swirling winds and fine misty snow down on our secluded log cabin in Central Lake, Mich. The wild fury of the storm had covered the ground with two feet of snow and frosted it with a thin coat of ice. To make the sting of the wind more painful the temperature was 20 degrees below zero.

My sister Madlyn Coseboon and I were watching the late, late show on TV, my four children were asleep and all was well except that my husband Max was late. He was a cable splicer foreman and it wasn't unusual for him to work late, especially since the severe storm had caused a near-panic and disruption of telephone service. But I was a little alarmed about him because two weeks previously he had had a nearly fatal accident on his job. The splicer's knife he was using broke and a piece of the blade slashed his left wrist. The wound required 30 stitches and still was not completely healed. This and the weather added to my concern about his lateness.

The movie simply didn't hold my attention. I must have been more nervous and anxious than I knew because I thought I heard my husband call me. The voice was far away and muffled so I laid it to imagination and again tried to concentrate on the movie.

But suddenly I jumped to my feet, turned the set down and listened intently. The insistent wind whistled around the cabin.

The voice that brought me to attention now was much louder and repeating, "Babe! Babe!" It was Max's voice and the chant was his pet name for me. My uneasiness mounted since the only means of communication was our landlord's telephone a half mile away. Even if I could reach someone, what could I say? That Max was late and I heard him calling me?

The movie was no longer a refuge from my torment so I switched off the set. Madlyn had gone to bed and was deep in slumber. The fury of the storm increased and once again I was startled by my husband's voice saying, "Oh, God, Babe, help me."

I could not ignore this plea. I quickly pulled on my boots and slipped a coat over my robe. I ran blindly down the lane not knowing what I could do or what I would find. Out of range of the porch light I could see farther. About halfway to the last cabin I saw a huddled shape lying in the lane. I struggled through the heavy snow as fast as I could and as I came closer the form moved and groaned faintly.

With a new burst of strength I reached my husband's side in minutes. He was dazed and struck out at me. I knew I couldn't lift him so I ran to the last cabin for help. Charles Hill and William Barnard, my husband's co-workers, lived there. They quickly dressed and hurried with me to where my husband lay.

"I knew you would find me," he muttered and lapsed into semiconsciousness.

The men carried him to our cabin and we finally got his frozen clothes off and put him into bed. I tried to give him some warm milk and as I did so I noticed his injured hand was swelling rapidly. He said it throbbed and he complained of the intense pain. I couldn't possibly get him to a doctor so all I could do was give him pain relievers and pray. I stood at the foot of the bed until the drugs took effect and I could see his body relax. Within an hour he was sleeping — but fitfully.

The next morning Max told me that he had been attacked by three men. Two held him while a man he had fired that day beat him, making sure most of the blows fell on his injured hand. His pain was great but when we did get to the doctor, he assured Max he would be as good as new in a few weeks.

How could I have heard him? What power was given us for a brief span of time that enabled a communication that actually saved my husband's life? It is a certainty that he would have frozen to death if I hadn't heard his plea. — Mt. Vernon, Ind.

CIVVIES BY FEBRUARY 8

By Fred Korotkin

ON CHRISTMAS EVE, 1945, two of my buddies and I, all servicemen, were invited by a Mrs. Ware and her two daughters to spend the holiday in their Los Angeles home. Another girl was invited and our kindhearted hostesses fed us well and made us feel at home.

After dinner we talked, listened to records and exchanged gifts. Then one of the girls took out her Ouija board. She said she wanted to find out when her boy friend would return from overseas duty and we could all ask questions when the Ouija board showed signs of response.

"When will Ed get back to the United States?" she asked.

"He is here now," the board spelled out.

"He can't be!" she exclaimed. "Only the other day Ed wrote that he couldn't get home until after the holidays."

Like other men in service, now that the war was over, I was eager to return to civilian life. I asked the board to give me the date I would be discharged from the Air Transport Command.

"February 8," Ouija said.

I could hardly believe it would be so soon but after all we didn't take the board too seriously — until the phone rang and it was Ed.

"Merry Christmas, honey!" he told his girl friend. "I couldn't get through to you sooner but I got back today. I'll see you tomorrow!"

It was surely a fitting end to a happy evening and I began to wonder if the board's prediction for me might prove out.

A few weeks later the men in our outfit were called into the orderly room.

"You men can be processed here . . . health and teeth checked and so on . . . before your discharge," an officer announced, "or you can have this done later at government installations near your homes. If you elect the latter course you will be discharged today."

I received my honorable discharge that day, February 8, 1946. — Minneapolis, Minn.

The VOICE that calls me ROSIE

By LaVenia Jones

My mother promised, "I'll help you all I can."
Is it her voice which summons me from danger and from death?

MY COUSIN DANNY and I were making a cave in a sand bank. I was five and Danny was four so it didn't have to be very big. A few more digs and we'd be crouching in our tiny room.

"Rosie! Come out of there. Fast! And bring Danny!" I heard these words and instinctively and instantly obeyed. A split second later the whole bank caved in.

This happened more than 50 years ago in the backyard of our Wabash Valley home so I don't know if my five-year-old mind took in the narrowness of our escape. But I did look around to see who had called. Grandfather, chopping wood, was the only person in sight. He usually called me Rosie but it had not been his gruff voice I had heard. It sounded like Aunt Annie's but she was inside the house curling her hair. Perhaps she had seen us through the window and called. Danny and I went to the shady front yard to play.

At suppertime I remembered the voice. "How come you called me Rosie this afternoon, Aunt Annie?"

"I didn't call you at all this afternoon and I never call you Rosie," she replied.

"Well, somebody called me Rosie . . . and told me to get out of our sand bank."

"And then," Danny piped up, "the whole damn bank caved in."

"Danny! You said a cuss-word," scolded Grandmother. Then, as if she had just heard what he said, she cried in alarm, "Caved in? It did?"

Leaving supper to grow cold everyone rushed to the sand bank.

"My God, they would have been buried alive." Grandfather's voice was shaky.

"Don't ever come near this place again," Grandmother commanded tearfully as she gathered us into her arms.

Aunt Annie kept asking questions about the voice. "It sounded like me? And called you Rosie?"

"Yes, I already told you." I was tired of the questions. I wanted to get supper over because I was going to stay all night with Danny whose home was one field away.

But I wasn't to get out of it so easily.

"Did you think it sounded like me, Danny?" Aunt Annie asked.

"Didn't sound like nobody . . . cause I didn't hear nothin' — not a damn thing."

"Danny, the very next time you say that word I'm going to tell your mamma and she will wash out your mouth with soap," said Grandmother sternly.

That silenced Danny but not Aunt Annie. "I know whose voice it was," she said positively. "It was your mother's voice. Hers and mine were very much alike and she always called you Rosie."

"Annie, stop that kind of talk!" said Grandmother. "You know that's not possible and you'll scare the children."

I couldn't see anything to be scared of. My mother was in heaven and had been since I was a tiny baby. But if she wanted to talk to me I guessed she could.

Paying no attention to Grandmother's forbidding looks Aunt Annie mused, "So that's what Laura meant. She said she would help me all she could."

I had heard the story many times. My mother, dying of typhoid fever, had put me in Aunt Annie's arms and whispered, "Take her home with you. Get somebody to help you drive Bessy and her calf. Fresh cow's milk will be best for her." And now I learned that she also had said, "I will help you all I can." I felt warmly secure, wrapped in loving concern.

THE DANGER AND the voice that saved us had dimmed in my mind when another incident six months later brought it sharply back into focus. Danny's mother, Aunt Joan, took me to visit my older sister Mary who worked in nearby Darwin, Ill. Danny was "helping" his father dig potatoes and didn't want to go. Aunt Joan was young and gay and rather more lenient than certain other grownups around me and I loved to be with her.

This visit turned out to be quite special. My sister Mary worked in a millinery store and she surprised me with a gorgeous gift — a lovely white leghorn hat trimmed with pink rosebuds. She let me try it on and admire myself in the large looking glass, then said firmly, "Now don't you try to wear it home. I'll put it in this pretty sack and you leave it there until you get home. Hear?"

Walking along the road beside the riverbank I fully intended to mind her. But about halfway home I thought I would just peep into the sack to see how many rosebuds were on the hat. I couldn't quite see the whole hat without taking it out of the sack . . . and then of course I just had to put it on. In an instant a puff of wind caught the brim and blew the hat off my head and into the river.

I ran pell-mell into the water after it, good shoes and all. When I had almost reached it a current caught my beautiful hat and swirled it rapidly downstream. I had been taught about the dangers of the river but I intended to follow that hat — until an urgent voice stopped me.

"Stop, Rosie! Now! Turn around so you can't see the hat."

As I reluctantly obeyed, the voice, calmer now, continued, "Mary will make you another hat. With pink rosebuds and pink chiffon."

By this time Aunt Joan had reached me. Between sobs of relief she alternately thanked the Good Lord for saving me and cursed the local custom that might have drowned us both.

"Damn their crazy ideas about keeping girls out of the river. Danny is only four and he can swim like a fish. I'm almost 20 and can't swim a stroke." It was as if she were talking to herself — but I wondered, who will wash out her mouth with soap?

I didn't intend to mention the voice to anyone this time. Aunt Annie knew though. The next day she and I walked to an apple tree in the far clearing and while we were resting in its scant shade, she said, "Now tell me what really happened at the river yesterday."

"I'll tell you but first you have to promise not to tell Grandmother. She'll think it was Aunt Joan's fault and it wasn't."

Aunt Annie readily promised. "Mamma doesn't believe you hear a voice anyway. It was your mother who saved you, wasn't it?"

"Yes, just the same as at the sand bank." Remembering the swift dark water I shivered. "Thank the dear Lord for letting my mother talk to me," I said solemnly.

"Amen," agreed Aunt Annie.

THE NEXT TIME I heard my mother's voice, not only Danny but also my girl friend Ethel had to be persuaded that danger threatened. It wasn't easy. It happened early the next spring.

Looking for spring flowers we had wandered deep into the woods. We found a whole hillside of spring beauties and as if that weren't exciting enough Danny found a mushroom. At that instant a voice told me to go home fast! Ethel was disappointed at being snatched away from the flowers but she was polite and didn't require much persuasion. But to get Danny away from a possible mushroom find I had to promise him one of my best agates.

The voice urged speed. "Run, Rosie! As fast as you can!" We raced toward home and coming over the hill we met Grandfather who hurried us into the storm cellar. "There's a storm building up fast in the southwest and I'm afraid it's a cyclone. It seems headed right this way," he explained breathlessly.

The cyclone, and a bad one it was, killed two people in the village and missed our home by a scant quarter-mile. After hitting Darwin the black whirling demon cut a wide swath through the countryside and across the hill where we had been playing.

I confided the whole truth to Aunt Annie. "Will Mother always watch over me like that?" I asked.

"Of course she will, but pray there won't be more dangers like these."

Evidently our prayers were answered because the only other time my mother spoke to me the danger was of a different kind.

IT HAPPENED years later. Aunt Annie was married and had had three little girls. Aunt Joan had given Danny a brother and sister. I was almost 16 and beginning to feel grown-up. I tried hard to follow my grandmother's rules of conduct but sometimes they seemed unnecessarily harsh . . . especially when I didn't have the privileges that some of the other girls took for granted.

Take the subject of dances. Grandmother allowed me to attend the neighborhood parties with my own teen-aged friends but she would not let me go to the Saturday night dances in town. They were weekly affairs, held in a public hall and attended by anyone who could buy a ticket. If a boy tried to make a date for one of these dances I had to refuse.

I did — until Jim, my current boy friend, got a new buggy with rubber-tired wheels and a fold-back top. To be the first girl to ride in this grand conveyance and the first girl Jim had invited to a Saturday night dance conspired against my willpower.

I never had disobeyed Grandmother and when Jim came on Saturday night she had no way of knowing we were headed for town instead of Ethel's house. She came out to admire the new buggy and said in parting, "Have fun but come home early." I nodded and waved, not trusting my voice. I hadn't lied to her in words but I was acting a lie and I felt miserable.

When we neared the end of the lane where we would turn right to go to the forbidden dance instead of left toward Ethel's house, I really wasn't surprised when my mother spoke to me again.

I obeyed instantly, almost automatically. Strangely, Jim seemed relieved instead of angry.

"I didn't really want to take you to the dance, honey. I was just trying to act big. Too big for my britches, Dad says, and I guess he's right. From now on I'm going to do what I know is right. With me, honey?"

I was . . . and still am . . . after half a century of happy married life.

UNTIL NOW I never have talked about my mother's voice with anyone but Aunt Annie. Shortly before her death a few years ago I asked her if she believed it had been my mother's voice that saved me from death on three occasions and from possible moral harm on the fourth.

"Yes, I do," she answered positively, "I never have doubted it. I don't understand it any more than I understand lightning, hurricanes, the atom bomb . . . but they are real just the same."

I agree.

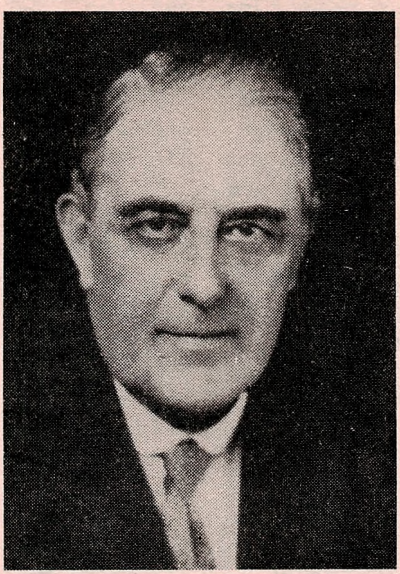

BASS NOTE FOR BANANAS

RESEARCH into growing bigger and better bananas by broadcasting music to them reportedly was being conducted by Ted Hamey and his son Ian, who set up a loudspeaker system on their plantation at Coff's Harbor in New South Wales, Australia. The "music" — a loud constant bass note — evidently is stimulating to bananas, if not to human ears, since Hamey and his son reported that one plot "serenaded" for 15 months yielded the best crop.

THE INCREDIBLE

CHEIRO

By Irwin Ross

HESITANTLY THE GIRL reporter entered the incense-laden room, a briefcase under her arm. A tall young man with heavy-lidded eyes rose to greet her. He was Cheiro, the fabulous English palm reader, center of a storm of controversy raging over two continents.

The year was 1893 and Cheiro just had arrived in New York to open offices on swank Fifth Avenue. The girl reporter had been sent by the New York World to settle the bitter debate over this mysterious palmist, who claimed to have learned his science in India from books so ancient that only a handful of scholars could read their language.

Stories of Cheiro's uncanny powers had preceded him to America. His career began in London's East End when he trapped a murderer after baffled police had failed. Cheiro had read a bloody hand print on a wall and declared it belonged to the murderer, a close relative of the victim. With this as their only clue, incredulous London police tracked down the criminal — who turned out to be the dead man's son. Nevertheless skeptics continued to scoff at Cheiro's occult powers.

The girl reporter quickly and directly stated her mission. "My newspaper has prepared a test for you," she said. "If you accept and are successful you'll get the biggest free advertisement of your life. But if you fail or refuse it you might as well take the next ship back to England."

Cheiro accepted. The "test" was to analyze 13 palm impressions taken by the World in New York. The people were unknown to the palmist but he was supposed to read their characters and then make predictions about their futures.

Cheiro glanced at the print on top of the pile. "This is the hand of an Irishman," he said casually. "I judge that by the thumb."

The girl gulped. It was the hand of Richard Croker, an Irish immigrant who had become "Boss" of Tammany Hall.

"There is a tremendous sign of strength, both physical and mental," Cheiro went on. Boss Croker had been a boxer and wrestler.

"The subject ought to be an impressive speaker and would have greater success in politics than in business." Croker had started his career as a vote-gathering ward heeler for the notorious Boss Tweed.

Cheiro picked up another print. "The owner of this hand," he said, "may not be exactly what we call a genius but there will be times in his life when he'll be considered worthy of the name. The man must be an artist, perhaps a composer."

A man no one really knew, he was called a "humbug" and a swindler — but his feats of clairvoyance titillated two continents for 20 years.

The palm print was that of Reginald De Koven, a minor composer of operettas. After one production, "Robin Hood," critics thought he had the makings of a great composer. But "Robin Hood" turned out to be his most notable work.

Cheiro continued with the World's test for more than three hours. The ninth impression, he declared, was a woman's hand. "The owner of it is almost a child of fate. The fate line indicating fame makes one magnificent sweep from beginning to end. She is talented and has enormous ambition."

Cheiro then predicted great wealth for this person in later life but failure in gaining social recognition. He saw "a great deal of unhappiness from marriage" and foretold serious ill health in the second half of her life.

The hand was Lillian Russell's. When she died 29 years later after four marriages, three of which ended in divorce, New York society never had granted her full recognition.

At the next palm print, Cheiro stopped short. "I refuse to read this hand to anyone but the owner," he said.

The reporter sat upright. "Why?" she asked.

"It is the hand of a murderer, one who may still be undetected but who will give himself away by his own self-confidence. He will die in prison after living in mental anguish under the shadow of death."

The girl was dumbfounded. It was the print of Dr. Henry C. F. Meyer, taken in Tombs Prison where he was awaiting trial for poisoning patients in order to collect insurance. A few months later he was convicted and sentenced to life imprisonment. In prison Dr. Meyer's mind broke down and he died in Matteawan, a New York state institution for the criminally insane.

Cheiro's demonstration won him a two-page write-up in the World's Sunday supplement. But not even this was enough to convince his numerous attackers that he was anything but a "humbug."

For the next 40 years Cheiro practiced his occult trade here and in Europe. He read Oscar Wilde's palm after the brilliant opening of the playwright's greatest triumph and warned him that within five years his career would be "broken and ruined" and that he would "send himself into exile." Wilde laughed derisively.

Three years later Wilde was tried and sent to prison for immoral behavior. The scandal shook Victorian England and put an end to Wilde's once-meteoric career. When released from prison he fled to France and died there in obscure poverty.

Cheiro worked out a system of mystic numbers which he combined with palmistry. The system was based on the birth date of his subject and his "fatal number." By this method Cheiro predicted the exact month and year of the death of England's King Edward VII — years before it happened. Edward kept the prediction locked in his desk.

In June, 1902, the coronation ceremonies had to be postponed because the 60-year-old Edward was seriously ill but he had already become king by proclamation. His wife Alexandra called in Cheiro to assure Edward that he would live until his 69th year, the date the palmist had predicted.

In the sickroom near the Prince's hand lay the paper on which Cheiro had made his calculations.

"Don't worry, Your Majesty," he said, "you will live to be crowned."

Edward's face brightened and he asked, "When will the coronation take place?"

"August ninth," said Cheiro — and on August 9 the jovial monarch officially became Edward VII.

While on a trip to Russia Cheiro was summoned by Czar Nicholas II who kept himself incognito. This was the occultist's written prediction: "Whoever the man is that these numbers and birth date represent will be haunted all his life by the horrors of war and bloodshed . . . His name will be bound up with some of the bloodiest wars in history and in the end — about 1917 — he will lose all he loves most by sword or strife and he himself will meet a violent death."

These predictions were made in 1897. Twenty years later the Russian Revolution toppled Nicholas from his shaky throne. The grim forecast was further borne out when Nicholas and his family were executed in the chaotic aftermath of the revolution.

Perhaps Cheiro's most startling case involved a palm print brought to him by skeptical members of New York City's detective squad. Cheiro, studying the impression, saw melancholic tendencies of an abnormal nature. "If this man isn't stopped," he said, "he will commit suicide in a matter of days or weeks."

The print had been taken an hour before from the hand of an unidentified corpse, a man who had just leaped to his death from an office building.

Despite such feats the world never could decide whether the incredible Cheiro was fraud or genius. Yet the controversy did not seem to bother him. He clothed himself in mystery, except to say he had lived in Ireland as a child, had gone to school in London and had studied palmistry under Brahman priests in India.

After his successful visit to America Cheiro returned to London and there continued his work until police banned palmistry and forced him to move to Paris. By this time his fortune totaled $250,000 for, in addition to consultation fees, he was receiving royalties from a number of books on occult subjects.

Then suddenly Cheiro decided to go into more "legitimate" callings. He purchased a vineyard near Rheims and began to turn out champagne. Next he bought a society newspaper, The American Register, and reported the doings of wealthy Americans in Europe. Finally he established a private banking house.

In 1909 two American women, both expatriate New Yorkers, accused Cheiro of misappropriating $500,000 in stock. Then it was discovered that Cheiro — or Count Louis Hamon, as he was then known — had disappeared. (Newspapers reported that his real name was John E. Warner.)

Shortly he turned up in London to defend himself. The Americans settled their suit out of court but a Hungarian nobleman pressed another suit charging that Cheiro had swindled him of 1,000,000 francs. The palmist was found guilty and sentenced to 13 months in jail.

Three years later, Cheiro was back in the United States practicing palmistry. As time passed, however, America's interest in palmistry waned and Cheiro sank into obscurity. He died in Hollywood in 1936 at the age of 70. Only his closest friends knew that he had once been Cheiro, the most remarkable palmist of modern times.

NOT AS TEACHER TAUGHT

IN SAUGUS, Calif., 15-year-old Eugene Burnside was injured fatally when the motorcycle he was riding crashed into the rear of an automobile. James Hannum, the driver of the car, had taught the boy how to drive in a traffic education course at William S. Hart High School.

JUST AS REPORTED

A MOTORIST stopped State Trooper Leslie Higgins near Lawrenceburg, Ky., and reported that he had seen a cow on the highway. Higgins investigated but found no cow. An hour later, responding to an accident call, Higgins arrived at the scene to find that an auto had struck a cow. The driver was the man who earlier had reported seeing a cow on the highway.

When MY LIFE Depended on ESP

By Brigitte Neppert Judd

Wordless rapport, thought transference, invisible bond — call it what you will. In time of great need it worked.

THAT SATURDAY MORNING in the fall of 1960 was just another Saturday for me. Our two babies — one two years old the other 10 months — were having their first nap of the day and the two dachshunds and our Siamese cat were dozing somewhere on or near the heaters. My husband Bill was snoring in his reclining chair at one end of our large living room while the television blared at the other end. I marveled at his capacity to sleep through its din.

Everything was calm when I started for the basement with a bundle of diapers and small things to be washed. Downstairs I loaded the washer and pushed the button to start it. We recently had had problems with this much-used machine so I waited to be sure it was properly filled and agitating before turning my back on it.

When I did turn to go back upstairs my eyes absentmindedly swept the floor, my thoughts already on the next task. But every sense came alert when my glance caught an almost imperceptible movement — the rhythmic in-and-out flicking tongue of a full-grown copperhead snake curled and ready to strike — not three feet from me. Its coloring blended so well with the basement floor I had almost overlooked it. Now involuntarily I tried to back away but the washer brought me up short.

Catching my breath I looked at the stairway — so near, a mere five steps away, but impossible to reach. Getting around the snake coiled in my path was impossible. Our water pump against the cinder-block wall was about two feet behind the snake. Next to the pump stood the oil tank. Behind me was the washing machine and off in the corner — certainly providing no means of escape! — some scrap lumber was roughly stacked. In despair I remembered all our garden tools had been taken from the basement and used in killing copperheads we had found around the house.

We lived about three miles from Sunbury, Pa., and our property, surrounded on three sides by dense woods, fronted a major highway. The whole area suddenly had been overrrun with these dangerous snakes and our neighbors had even talked about an all-out snake hunt, for everyone was much alarmed.

When we found and killed our first copperhead I had looked into our encyclopaedia and learned they belong to the pit viper family, that they have poor eyesight and gauge their strike by their sensitiveness to the prey's body heat. The copperhead is extremely aggressive and its poison is equal to and sometimes more lethal than that of the Texas rattler. Small dogs, cats or other small animals die instantly if bitten. Only man might have a chance if an antidote is administered in time. Accordingly we were vigilant and always prepared to kill them when we encountered them outdoors.

It was one thing to encounter these deadly reptiles outdoors where you can get away but quite another story to have one in a position to strike when it pleases. The snake had me at its mercy, regardless of any move I might make. I was trapped.

I thought of calling for help. Then I chided myself. Bill could not hear me if I yelled my loudest or banged on the washer — and what could I bang with? The usual rattle and rumble of the machine was barely audible upstairs and my bare hands hardly would be louder. Besides the dogs and cat might hear me and come down the stairs to certain death.

The snake didn't move while I sought some way to help myself. I dared to take quick stabbing glances away from it, seeking something, anything at all, to use as a weapon. All I saw was our heavy garden fork leaning on the wall next to the water heater. It was there, I remembered, because its sides were rounded and ineffective against snakes . . . but maybe if I brought it down hard enough I could smash its head or at least stun it until I found something better.

One thing was clear to me: the snake must not reach that woodpile. The animals came downstairs several times a day and I took the babies to the fenced-in part of our property this way. The back door of our basement was on even ground because our house was built on a steep hill. No one of us would be safe until this snake was dead.

I took one slow sideways step toward the fork. The snake did not move. Only its constantly-moving tongue showed it was alive at all. Its immobility did not fool me. Only too often in the last few days had I seen an apparently dead snake burst into lightning-fast action. Another step . . . not forward toward the snake . . . caution, caution was all-important. This time the copperhead turned its head, still in striking position, its pit eyes never leaving mine. Its cold stare made my skin crawl.

Now fumbling behind me against the rough wall my hands found the smooth firm handle of the fork and locked around it. In one motion I pulled the fork forward, grabbed it with both hands and swung. At that instant the snake struck.

Not reaching me, the copperhead merely stretched out on the floor and normally now would recoil for another strike. But with the strength of desperation I brought the side of the fork down across its back . . . but my fears were confirmed. The fork was not sharp enough to cut. The fork only pinned down the snake which now wound itself around and around the prongs, striking at the metal until it rang, its horrifying venom dripping.

I dared not ease my pressure on the fork. I could feel the snake straining to pull loose. My muscles screamed for relief — but if I raised the fork for another blow, the snake would drop off. What if it wound itself around the handle and reached my hands? I was trembling with the monumental effort of holding him down.

Oh, Bill! I thought, if I ever needed you, now is the time!

Wonder of wonders, I heard his footsteps on the floor above me, then descending the stairs. He looked dazed, his hair still tousled from his nap. In his hands was the hoe, the only garden tool we knew to be sharp enough to cut through a snake as if it were butter. Wordlessly he handed me the hoe. I dropped the fork and the now-free snake stretched out on the floor, this time trying to slither toward the woodpile. With my last ounce of strength I brought the sharp blade down, neatly cutting the viper in half; then I smashed its head.

Still without a word, his arms around my trembling shoulders, Bill guided me up the stairs. Only when we were comfortably seated, steaming cups of coffee in our hands, did we begin to talk.

Repeatedly Bill asked if I had called him, banged on something, or somehow awakened him. I could only say again and again I had made no noise at all, explaining my fear for our pets and telling him I had no hope of awakening him.

My questions for him were how did he know I needed him and the hoe at that particular moment? How did he know the hoe was in the garage? No garden tool ever was kept there but the night before I had used the hoe against another snake and temporarily put it in the garage. Bill had not been in the garage and could not have known it was there.

He told me, "I got up but I didn't really feel awake until I actually saw you. No feeling or thought was connected with my actions. I just knew you had a snake and I had to bring you the hoe."

This alone is remarkable but to accomplish what he did in his somnolent state is even more remarkable. He was asleep in a reclining chair in our 15 by 21-foot living room. The television set was 19 feet away from him. Next to the set was the locked door to the garage. Bill had to get up from his chair, walk the length of the living room, open the garage door, walk the entire length of the garage, pick up the hoe and retrace his steps to the living room. We calculated the hoe was 40 feet away from him. Once back in the house he turned into the kitchen, walked to the basement door and descended 12 wooden steps to hand me the hoe. While it is extremely difficult to gauge the time, it almost seems he started for the hoe at the exact moment or possibly before I first saw the poisonous snake.

We marveled at this soundless communication. Modern parapsychologists have many names for something like this, telepathy, thought transference, etc. My mother had another name. She called it "the invisible bond" between husband and wife.

THE AUTHOR

Brigitte Neppert, born, raised and educated in Berlin, was 13 years old when World War II erupted. Long before that she had determined to emigrate to the United States. In 1953 after both her parents had died (her father in a bombing raid during the war and her mother seven years later) she left Germany. After 14 months in Canada she entered the United States. Within months she met Joseph Judd who became her husband after a whirlwind courtship.

Mrs. Judd has had numerous experiences that can be explained only by the principles of extrasensory perception and strangely enough, her husband shares this sensitivity. Their rapport and acceptance of the "sixth sense" may explain this amazing story of her encounter with the copperhead.

THE UBIQUITOUS NEED FOR SALT

By Michele Carroccia

ONE OF MY horses figured in a psychic experience I shall never forget. Raised in Montana with horses I grew to love and understand them perhaps to a greater degree than most boys do. My favorite was Fox, a big roan gelding I had broken and trained, and when I married and moved to Alaska it was difficult to leave him.

Several months after we reached Alaska the sound of gnawing wakened me from a sound sleep. Right in my room I could see Fox standing frantically chewing on a fence post. Then he disappeared but the sound of gnawing lingered in the air.

The experience was so vivid and so alarming that I airmailed a letter to my father relaying my interpretation of the experience. I believed that Fox had been pleading for salt, for only a salt-hungry animal devours wood in this manner.

By return mail came my father's reply. The horses indeed had been out of salt and their health had begun to suffer from the lack.

It could have been a dream but the lingering sound of gnawing and my father's confirmation of the horses' need for salt conspire to prove that Fox appealed to me across half a continent.

Dustin R. Bergeron (photographed in his "cuttin' up" tunic in September, 1964, after five years of suffering) knew why Christ is called "Savior."

"GOD SPARED ME FOR A REASON"

One man's experience reflects the wisdom of Cowper's line: "God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform."

By Harold E. Lee

ON THE NIGHT of February 17, 1965, Dustin R. Bergeron was one of four patients in a New Orleans hospital ward. "Dusty," as his friends called him, had sustained eight major operations for cancer, four of them during January and February of 1965. This is the story of Jesus Christ's intervention as Dusty traveled the precarious road toward certain death.

His parents, Andrew and Mona Loupe Bergeron, were of French descent and Dusty, born in New Orleans on September 13, 1914, was one of two children. When they were quite young, Andrew, a barber, moved his family to Port Arthur, Tex., where they lived in modest circumstances while the boys attended public grammar and high school until their graduation.

In view of Dusty's subsequent experience it would be fitting to be able to say that he was brought up by religious parents, that he attended Sunday school and in later life became an active church member. But this is not the case. Both parents were indifferent to formal religion; however Mona Bergeron not only carefully instructed her children in God's commandments but personified the greatest teaching of all by setting a good example.

After finishing high school, Dusty held odd jobs for several years but eventually followed in his father's footsteps. Although he was later to try his hand in other fields, he became a barber.

In the spring of 1944, now married and the father of three children, Dusty moved his family from Port Arthur to New Orleans where he promptly lost most of his savings in a grocery store venture.

Taking up his clippers again he supported his family until the summer of 1951 when he decided to move to Phoenix, Ariz. There Dusty enjoyed seven years of relative prosperity, finding a measure of success as a real estate broker.

Eventually, however, love of their native city lured the family back to New Orleans where in 1958 he returned to the means of livelihood he knew best: "cuttin' up," as he called it. While Dusty attended his trade in a small shop in an uptown semi-residential section, cancer unobtrusively began its slow but steady erosion deep within his body.

One major operation in 1959, two in 1960 and one in 1963 failed to arrest the spreading malady. On January 18, 1965, now riddled with cancer, he entered the New Orleans hospital and between that day and February 12 he underwent four major operations: removal of malignant tumors, bladder, urethra and prostate. On February 17, X-rays taken to determine the cause of leakage of urinary fluids showed an unhealed incision and Dusty was scheduled for still another operation the next day.

February 17 seemed to Dusty no different from any other day. Under heavy sedation he drowsed away many of the long hours. In his lucid moments he wondered about his future, his hospital bills, his barbershop and his wife Hermonie, who so faithfully longed and prayed for his recovery.

Room 643 housed three other patients. The one in the bed nearest Dusty was Karl K. Marston, a retired petroleum engineering executive. During evening visiting hours on February 17 three men came to visit Mr. Marston.

About 7:45 while Dusty suffered in silence, Mr. Marston described in hushed tones the hopeless plight of his fellow-patient, then suggested that the four men pray for him. His guests instantly agreed and Mr. Marston invited Dusty to join them. Karl started by praying audibly in words of his own choosing for the welfare of body and soul of His potential servant, Dusty. The three visitors prayed silently, heads bowed, and Dusty prayed too, his words individually incoherent but conveying an impression of optimism, hope and faith. After only a few moments of this group prayer Dusty suddenly realized the fog of sedation had lifted. His body ached but his mind was completely alert.

The events of the next few seconds in some ways are reminiscent of the moments preceding the Crucifixion. At that time the repentant thief Dismas pleaded from his cross saying to Jesus, "Lord, remember me when Thou comest into Thy kingdom." And Jesus replied, saying, "Amen, amen, I say to you, this day thou shalt be with Me in Paradise."

Now, 2,000 years later, Dusty Bergeron and four others made a similar appeal and Jesus replied. Dusty lay on his back, his eyes focused on the ceiling. Suddenly he stared at the corner over his bed, his face registering awe and amazement. He saw in perfect clarity the head and chest of Christ, bearded and clothed in a white robe. Jesus lifted his right hand and with index finger extended toward Dusty, He said softly, "You will not need it."

As the vision disappeared, Dusty knew the Savior meant he would not need tomorrow's operation. He felt a mysterious wave of cool air pass over his body — and the pains and leakage of fluids ceased. The nurses who for several days had changed hourly the wet bedclothes were dumbfounded to find this chore no longer necessary. When the attending physician reexamined his patient the next morning he found Dusty so improved that he canceled the scheduled operation.

When news of Dusty's vision seeped through the corridors, other doctors and interns began taking an interest in the patient in Room 643. Some were familiar with the case; most were not; but all knew the case history. They asked questions, remarked the abruptly-changed condition and walked out shaking their heads in amazement.

Dusty was discharged 10 days later. Although he now was equipped with certain man-made parts he gradually recovered his strength and starting working again in his shop, first two hours a day, then four, then five. Meanwhile, as the calendar inexorably moved through 1965, Dusty's overall recuperation, so promising at first, came to a halt. In February of 1966 he began to suffer kidney pains and as they grew sharper and their duration longer, his working hours shortened. Then, on April 30, 1966, while attending a customer, he collapsed. An examination showed a malfunctioning kidney which had to be removed.

"Poor Dusty," murmured one well-meaning acquaintance, "this is the end. The vision must have been a dream."

On May 10, 1966, when he was readmitted to the hospital for the nephrectomy, the thought uppermost in Dusty's mind was the Savior's promise, "You will not need it," for he devoutly believed he would not need another operation for cancer.

On May 12, 1966, the nonmalignant but malfunctioning kidney was removed and seven days later Dusty was discharged, the doctors having assured him no trace remained of the cancer that 15 months earlier nearly had ended his life.

By autumn he was working eight hours a day, feeling like a tiger and eating like an elephant. He lived by a simple philosophy that had grown from his vision of Christ. "God spared me for some reason," he would say. "It may have been that my story will help others by regenerating hope and the love of God. Perhaps it was for some other reason. If so, when the time comes, He will tell me. Whatever it is I'll be ready to do whatever He asks of me."

Almost two years to the day after the vision of Christ had appeared on the ceiling of his hospital room, he asked me to come to see him at his home. I knew he was ill and I found him bedridden, yet cheerful. I exchanged small talk with him and Mrs. Bergeron, wondering if he had a special reason for wanting to see me. After a few minutes he spoke seriously:

"Last week my doctor told me I have about four weeks to live. Does it seem strange to you that on February 17, 1965, the Lord granted me what we now know to be two additional years of life? It seemed without logic to me then but now I understand. Yes, now I know why he is called Our Savior.

"Quite obviously He was interested in saving not my body but my soul! Before His appearance, I seldom if ever had time to pray or to direct my thoughts to Him. Since that time I have prayed daily, often constantly. And I have learned to know and to love Him as I never thought possible.

"Do I fear death? Certainly not. When I worry about the many years of my indifference to Him I am comforted by the knowledge of His forgiveness for those who seek it."

On March 14, 1967, Dusty's difficult and often sorrowful life came to a happy ending.

Belk Foundation Report on

PHILIPPINE HEALERS

There is evidence of genuine healing and of fraud in the so-called psychic surgery. What is the truth?

By James Crenshaw

AT THE MOMENT the first rumors of "psychic" surgery in the Philippines reached the United States it could have been foretold that the hard white spotlight of scientific inquiry soon would be trained on the Filipino healers. Among the first to reach the scene was William Henry Belk, head of the Belk Research Foundation for Scientific Studies in ESP Phenomena, who contends that only a plan of organized research can determine the validity of the Filipinos' spiritual healing.

Mr. Belk twice has traveled to the Philippine Islands to observe and photograph the incredible surgery.

International controversy over the nature of "psychic surgery" in the Philippines has put a few roadblocks in the way of proposed scientific studies which might determine the answers to such mystifying questions as:

Can the power of spiritual healing be measured?

Can a nonphysical force sometimes produce physical results?

Can the powers which certain Filipino and other healers apparently manifest be understood and reproduced at will?

Until a series of supposed exposures of fakery in the healings various groups of Americans had been planning comprehensive research programs to determine whether valid principles leading to duplication of the healing forces could be found.

While the phenomena, if true, are difficult for the average scientist to accept, since the healings fall into the category of "miracles," William Henry Belk, head of the Belk Research Foundation for Scientific Studies in ESP, felt after his trips to the Islands that further research would be worthwhile. He has had some second thoughts on the subject since making his original report for the Foundation but he still is convinced that a thorough investigation should be undertaken.

Belk and his Foundation — and the rest of us — want answers to these questions:

(1) What force causes human tissue to part under Dr. Tony's touch?

(2) How can the incision close "miraculously" within seconds and leave no scar?

(3) What force prevents infection under conditions medical men would consider scandalously unsanitary?

(4) Why, without anaesthesia or hypnosis, is there little or no pain, even in the most drastic procedures?

(5) How can tissue apparently pass through tissue? One reported case involved the removal of a blood clot from the heart without an incision having been made.

(6) Are there ailments or injuries that cannot be cured by spiritual healing and if so, why?

(7) Have there been reports of malpractice or deaths as normally occur in standard medical practice? (Dr. Tony's followers claim that he never has had a death resulting from his work.)

Not all of Belk's findings are sweetness and light. He makes no attempt to hide the negative side of the picture while he continues to search for answers in this intriguing mystery. The bizarre phenomena are difficult for the average scientist to accept since the healings are like miracles. Nevertheless the amazing phenomena is observable and Dr. Tony has been photographed at work.

Belk and his Foundation financed a trip from New York to Manila for Dr. Seymour Wanderman, a well-known physician and surgeon and a close friend of ESP expert Harold Sherman. Mr. Sherman accompanied Belk on his trip to the Philippines early in 1966 and it was his suggestion that Dr. Wanderman accompany them as an authoritative witness.

Dr. Wanderman was not impressed by what he saw — or did not see. For example, during two cyst operations Dr. Wanderman thought Tony held a concealed knife. In an "operation" to remove a tumor from a patient's uterus, the doctor believed that Tony did not open the abdomen but simply pulled up labile tissue to simulate surgery. Dr. Wanderman also claimed the tumor that Dr. Tony allegedly removed appeared to him to be "faked", according to the report made by the Belk Foundation.

All nose polyp operations, of which there were a number while Belk and Sherman were there, Wanderman regarded as crude — because Dr. Tony used forceps to pull and tear the polyps out. The doctor said he observed evidence of pain and he noted that Tony rejected a case of terminal tuberculosis and one involving a woman with a tumor behind the eyeball.

Undiscouraged by Dr. Wanderman's observations, Belk believes the doctor's three-day stay in the Philippines was inadequate. In the case of the surgery for the removal of a uterine tumor, Belk himself took motion pictures which appear to show a surgical incision in the abdomen.

"In conversation I discovered that the true reason Dr. Wanderman never got to see any big operations was due to the fact that he was there too short a period," Belk said. "No patients turned up during some of the time interval he was there, or the opportunity wasn't right to operate."

Belk's own experience with Dr. Tony Agpaoa led him to comment: "He didn't stage a damn thing to impress us!"

Later developments, however, disillusioned Belk on this and a number of other points. He spent some $8,000 to send a professional movie photographer to the Philippines to get more accurate views of Tony's operations. Instead of confirming the psychic nature of the surgery, this man came back to state it all was fraudulent.

Belk fired off a letter to Tony (July 29, 1966) demanding to know:

"1. Have you ever faked any operations?

"2. Do you obtain animal parts from meat shops to pass off on the gullible, or hide them in a chest under your bed?

"3. Is your interest financial gain or aid of humanity?

"4. Why so many reports of benefits to your patients? Do you stage all scenes, including patients?

"5. Is fakery the reason Tolentino put you out of the Spiritist religious group or is he part of the entire scene?

"6. Why did you send a form letter demanding money for USA passage? It is reported you collected large sums by mail from publicity on Mr. Sherman and me in FATE Magazine and Psychic News in London.

"7. Was it part of your cunning to use us for publicity to collect money from the gullible or cause needless trips for the poor, dying, helpless, incurable victims?

"8. Why do you relate fantastic stories of contact with a protector, meditations in mountains, your poor begininngs, your arrests, buying protection from medical and political authorities? Is this your idea of a joke?

"9. How can one believe in God, act so religiously and expect the heavenly Father to hide your actions without divine punishment?

"10. What are your plans next?"

Although he began the letter by saying he "never liked to accuse anyone without a chance for them to face the damaging reports" Tony did not reply although — on the positive side — the letter also stated, "Some USA people returned cured." And Belk conceded, "You aren't smart enough to fool everybody. Maybe cunning but uneducated."

Tony's answer was to fly to the States to "find out who my friends are." Reassured by a number of these, he flew back almost simultaneously with a group of Americans who were treated by him in Baguio City, Philippine Islands. Many of these came home with glowing reports of his abilities.

Meanwhile, Harold Sherman was getting out his book Wonder Healers of the Philippines (DeVorss & Co., Los Angeles, $5.98) and attempting to present a balance of views, pro and con, about the growing controversy.

Then came the "exposé" by a Los Angeles television commentator who had made a flying visit to the Philippine healing scene with a doctor posing as a photographer. He too said it all was fraud.

After reviewing other unfavorable reports, Belk demanded accusingly, "What is your game? Money? Vanity? Egotism? A childish pleasure to confuse the honest or a method to give fake hope to the hopeless sick?"

Failing to receive satisfaction from Tony, Belk wrote to Merle Gould, editor of the New Age World in California, who as an amateur magician had demonstrated on television how he thought Tony's "fakery" was performed. In this letter, Belk said he wanted to make it clear he was not vouching for the genuineness of "the supernatural healings in the Philippines. The truth is this:

"1. Tony was never a doctor. He is an uneducated country boy who never has refused money under a facade of healing.

"2. As a conjuror of magic tricks, he outdoes Houdini. Movies were taken of him using a plastic womb and inserting pellets in the nose. Please know there is evidence to support this.

"3. Did you note most of the operations are the same pattern? I feel tricks of magic. This does not mean tomorrow he cannot perform for others genuinely.

"4. The will to believe supernatural things, already presold by religions, is so strong, any objective researcher finding fraud is accused of being in league with the devil or against God! So the gullible are open to be taken.

"I do not mean to say Tony cannot heal. You may have seen what I did not . . . I did uncover some things unexplained."

While he later expressed some doubt as to what these unexplained things meant, Belk's own pictures of healings in the Philippines were presented to limited audiences in various parts of the country.

Mr. Belk brought back from the Philippines two remarkable sets of color motion pictures showing Tony at work. One was a series of scenes filmed by Belk himself with an 8mm camera. The other films were 16mm taken by a professional crew employed by Belk in Manila.

The most impressive of the scenes filmed show two abdominal operations, one for the removal of a tumor from the main part of the abdomen and the other for the excision of a uterine growth. The films show Tony's hands and fingers as the abdominal walls appear to part under his touch, leaving a cavity large enough for him to insert his hands for internal "surgery".

Also filmed were nose polyp and eye cataract operations, and closeups show the removal of a cyst from a shoulder muscle.

It is not likely that these films will be shown to the public, since they were designed to interest doctors, scientists and technicians. Further, the Belk Foundation wanted irrefutable evidence of Dr. Tony's technique as a start and a guide for future scientific studies.

Belk and Sherman had more and longer opportunity to watch Tony work than did Dr. Wanderman (who was aghast at the crude setting and unsterile conditions under which the psychic surgery was performed). For about two weeks, both Belk and Sherman made careful observations of Tony's technique.

In his original report Belk lists some of the most extraordinary characteristics of Dr. Tony's methods:

(1) Ordinarily no antiseptic was used, except that in some instances alcohol was poured into an incision to cleanse it.

(2) Tony always was completely conscious but his hands moved during the surgery as if directed by an intelligence outside himself.

(3) No knife was used for cutting, no sutures for closing incisions, and tissues "flowed back into place like putty."

(4) Sometimes the incision opened slowly, at other times rapidly, but the closing always was rapid.

(5) Dr. Tony seemed to know when to operate and when not to operate. Patients occasionally were sent away and asked to return later.

(6) No cases of death on Tony's crude operating table or as a result of his surgery are known. When he undertakes to operate Tony promises success.

(7) No pain —or in some cases very little —was noted during surgery. (In one abdominal operation a woman patient said she felt no pain but brushed a fly away from another part of her body. She felt the fly but not the abdominal opening, she said.)

(8) Tony's hands never leave the cavity while he is operating. When they do the cavity quickly closes in — that is, "heals," leaving no trace.

(9) Incisions are not like those in ordinary surgery when tissue is cut with instruments. In Tony's procedures, all layers of tissue are turned inward and show no straight cut like that made with a scalpel.

(10) The little blood that appears quickly clots and seems to be much less in quantity than in actual surgery. (Belk says, "I was not able to see blood vessels or nerves severed and then restored.")

Belk said that Tony always was very cooperative except when patients desired privacy. Thus Belk was able to observe many operations at close range. In the case of the abdominal operations, for instance, he could see that Tony's hands go into the cavity in a way that makes them invisible even to himself.

"I felt the operations were performed by a process of which he (Tony) was not conscious."

This does not mean that Tony could not name the organs or ailments he was treating but that he seemed to be directed by a higher consciousness.

"Tony is aware his power is cosmic," Belk's report states, "and he gives his invisible 'Protector' credit, even in mute prayer.

"He realizes that violation of ethics or use of the power for greedy or nonhumanitarian purposes will cause its loss."

According to the report Tony once had more power but lost it because he used it for a wrong purpose. Before that time, Tony was able to heal "by the eyes" (mental projection). This power was taken away from him after he tried to locate buried Japanese gold. His "Protector" has promised that the lost power will be restored in 1973 and that the power will reach its maximum when Tony is 39 years old (1978).

Belk continues, "The lesson Tony learned back in 1950 when he tried to find the gold bars has been deeply impressed on him. He admits his mistake, explaining that when he first arrived in the big town (Manila) he 'was taken' by city slickers."

Of Tony's "Protector" Belk said, "It appears that the Protector is a separate person outside Tony's superconscious self. The Protector as early as 1946 told Tony to go into the mountains alone to fast and meditate. This accounts for his passive attitude. It definitely is not an inferiority complex. Actually it is self-assurance.

"He believes in predestination, in God's will, in fate and, like Jesus (although he shows no observable signs of a messiah complex), acts out what any Christian should: 'not my will, but Thy will be done'."

Meditation and fasting are an important part of Tony's life. Each year, according to Belk's report, he retires to a mountain hideaway, preferably a cave, to regenerate and amplify his power in the tradition of other ascetics and mystics.

Concerning Tony's early life Belk says, "Tony had a difficult childhood, as his uneducated parents did not understand their prodigious child. He says his Protector would cause his parents to become sleepy. He is vague as to what happened to him on these occasions, but several times he found himself in a treetop with a glass of water in each hand. He never understood how he got up there — or else he didn't care to say.

"These antics caused his parents to call him a witch. So at a very tender age he left home to meditate in the lonely mountains."

Belk was able to appraise Tony's personality and character more fully when they traveled together to Tokyo in February, 1966, for Dr. Hiroshi Motoyama's testing of his psychic powers.

"Sociologically he is well-adjusted to his environment," Belk believes. "He is in control of his emotions, meditative and quiet. Tony heals as a routine affair. He is not egotistical or a showoff.

"In the 10 days on our trip from Manila to Taiwan (Formosa) and then on to Tokyo, I became convinced that his life-purpose is a healing ministry. He has not profited much — he had an old suitcase and not many personal possessions around his home.

"He was completely cooperative on all occasions. On our trip, he helped with bags, served drinks to my business guests and made a favorable impression on the Chinese and Japanese we encountered.

"He is modest, not too talkative, meditative, usually observant and shows a superior degree of intelligence.

"He dedicates himself to three missions, as best I can determine: healing the poor and needy by supernatural powers; demonstrating to our world that this power exists; and trying to improve these powers, all of which lie latent within himself.

"I was amazed he had not already been corrupted and his head turned."

Belk concentrated on Tony because of the spectacular nature of his healing — spectacular in the sense that it regularly could be observed and photographed at close range. However, both Belk and Sherman visited other healing centers, specifically those run by Espiritista groups whose practitioners also are known for miraculous healings and psychic operations. These include such well-known persons in the Espiritista movement in the Islands as Terte, Blanché and Jose Mercado, as well as some 30 others. Under the aegis of Professor G. E. Tolentino, a leading sculptor and director of propaganda for the Spirtualism Union of the Philippines, the Espiritistas follow the philosophy of the French spiritualist Allan Kardec, who also is the guiding light of the important Spiritualist movement in Brazil.

"However, the masses in the Philippines, as well as in Brazil," Belk reports, "are only partially educated and mix Kardec with grand superstitions. It tends to be a mishmash of communications with the dead, reincarnation, supernatural healing, singing and idol worship."

Belk found some indication that psychic power sometimes and in some areas depends on legerdemain and considerable gullibility. However, he also noted an atmosphere of great devotion and sincerity, and the healers refuse to profit to any extent from the demonstrations of their powers.

Belk found some lack of understanding between these other healers and Tony, who long ago broke away from the Espiritista organization. He is said to feel that the religious rites are not vital to his work.

Tony therefore is more readily available for controlled studies such as those planned by the Belk Foundation and others. Belk says that leading experts, both medical men and scientists in other fields, will be involved in various studies to determine, if possible, the nature of this healing power, whether it can be transferred, and whether it can be duplicated in the laboratory.

In the meantime, the report discloses that Belk arranged for an important preliminary experiment with Dr. Tony in the laboratory of Dr. Motoyama, who heads the Institute of Religious Psychology in Tokyo.

Belk himself took Tony to the laboratory in Tokyo for the experiment, which involved the use of the electroencephalograph (brain wave machine), the plethysmograph (which measures variations in blood flow and pulse frequency), the pneumatograph (which measures variations in respiration) and the GSR recorder (which measures galvanic skin response: variations in skin conductivity).

Dr. Motoyama, a psychologist of note, later sent a full report to the Belk Foundation, stating that the tests showed that Tony could concentrate on transmitting his nonphysical power in such a way as to cause measurable changes not only in his own body but related and simultaneous changes in the body of a "percipient", a psychic sensitive isolated from the "agent" (i.e. from Tony).

If the power is thus measurably transmitted Belk believes this goes far toward pointing the way to other, perhaps more refined, experiments with Tony.

Despite his post-report criticisms of Tony, Belk indicated he still was impressed with the Motoyama findings. While not conclusive, they seemed to deny the "100 per cent fakery" of which Tony has been accused.

Tony in turn took refuge in silence, preferring to continue what he insisted was a true "spiritual mission" which had been interrupted by all the hue and cry in the United States.

He considered filing a damage suit against the television personality who purportedly had exposed him, but the cost of such litigation and the expense of coming to this country for the purpose of carrying it on deterred him.

Current advice: Don't go to the Philippines expecting a miracle. While there apparently have been some impressive cures, there have been tragic disappointments. Although the charge of fakery is not the total answer, further study is needed before any broad practical conclusions can be reached.

A HOMESTEAD REVISITED

By Mary Starr

I WAS ONLY 10 years old but I remember a night in November, 1926, as if it were yesterday.

My father Martin Christensen had just rented the old homestead of John Hayse about 10 miles east of Paris, Tex., making the negotiations with the old man's son Will. We children first saw the large white farmhouse about sundown when Mother drove us into the yard in our old buckboard. We had to eat a cold supper because the cookstove couldn't be put up until Father went to town for additional stovepipe.

The house had three bedrooms. Mother and Father slept in one, my two brothers in another and the hired hand in the remaining bedroom. My sister Bertie Lou and I had to sleep in the front room. Here we found a huge old sandstone fireplace with a long mantel, and from this room a wide door led onto a porch which ran almost all the way around the house. The door squeaked a little when it was opened or closed.

I had suffered poliomyelitis and during my illness I had been pretty well spoiled. For one thing I would not sleep without a lighted kerosene lamp near my bed. I'm sure this annoyed my sister but she always let me have my own way.

Our first night in the new house, like all children, we could hardly wait for morning to explore the farm. I was so excited that I couldn't sleep but I could hear Bertie Lou's even breathing. I was thinking of the fun we would have in the big barn. Of course with braces on my legs I couldn't climb but I could watch my brothers and I felt this was almost as good as getting into the hayloft.

I tossed until my sister awakened. "Are you all right?" she asked.

"Yes, but I can't sleep."

She squeezed my hand and mumbled, "You're just excited. Go to sleep."

Just then the door to the porch seemed to open. I grabbed my sister's hand and we stared at the door. A little old man stood in the doorway. He was very thin and of all things he was wearing white long johns! He had white hair, a small white mustache and a trim little goatee. We both noticed the sharp curled-up points of his mustache.

He stood in the doorway a few seconds, then walked toward the fireplace. He was so small and the mantel so high his hand was above his head as he reached for the ledge. He looked down into the small fire my father had set for us.

While my sister and I clung to each other, too scared to make a sound the old man slowly turned and walked toward the foot of our bed. As he stood looking at us I thought, "He isn't really seeing us; he's looking through us!"

Now he slowly turned and surveyed the rest of the room—with a rueful expression as if he were seeing it for the last time. He hesitated a few seconds more and then with another glance at the fireplace slowly made his way toward the door. We felt that the door opened and closed but we knew this wasn't so, for we would have heard its little squeak.

With the old man's disappearance my sister and I came alive and let out terrified screams. We both were quite hysterical and we couldn't offer a believable explanation for our state. After Mother calmed us a little we flatly refused to sleep in the front room. Mother offered to let us swap rooms with the hired man which we did with alacrity.

The next morning of course we had to tell what had happened over and over again. We knew we had been awake for surely we couldn't have had a duplicate nightmare — or even a duplicate dream. As we looked back on the vision my sister and I agreed there was little excuse for our terror, for the little old man surely meant us no harm. He seemed only to be viewing a room he had known and loved.

The next day my father went to town for the stovepipe. He called at the local hardware store, owned by our landlord's son, Will Hayse. He found the store closed and a wreath on the door. Later in the morning he ran across Will and offered his condolences on learning that John Hayse had died the night before.

Something clicked in my father's mind. He suddenly was struck by Will Hayse's remarkable resemblance to the description we had given of the little old man: a mustache with pointed curled-upward ends, a goatee. Cautiously he inquired about the older man's appearance. Will volunteered the information that he bore an uncanny likeness to his father except that his father's hair had turned white.

Now my father told Mr. Hayse about our experience of the night before and asked him to come to our farm for dinner. Bertie Lou and I were taking our afternoon nap when my father and the younger Hayse arrived. My father gently awakened us and told us to come into the parlor. Because of my braces he had to carry me. Mother was in the parlor with a stranger.

"Mary," my father said, "this is Mr. Will Hayse. He wants you and your sister to tell him what happened last night."

I hardly heard his words, for I was staring at the stranger, whose resemblance to the little old white-haired man brought back the terror of the night before. He looked much younger with jet-black hair, mustache and goatee, but in size, features and bearing he seemed to be a carbon copy!

Mr. Hayse spoke first to my sister.

"Tell me, young lady, what did this old man look like?"

Bertie Lou hesitated a moment and then answered, "He looked just exactly like you, sir, but very much older — and he wore (she hesitated) a white union suit."

"Yes," I piped up, "a white union suit like Papa wears."

Before Mother could reprimand me Mr. Hayse opened a large package. As he held up its contents we all gasped. In a large frame was a picture of the little old man we had seen.

Mr. Hayse told us it was his father. Then he asked my father the time we had seen the vision and Papa said it must have been about 9:30, for we had not been in bed very long.

Will Hayse said sadly, "That was just about the time my father died and he died in the long white underwear he always slept in during the winter months." — San Luis Rey, Calif.

THE CONSIDERATE SPIRIT

By J. P. J. Chapman

ABOUT 40 YEARS ago my wife and I lived near Almhurst Road in Westbourne, Bournemouth, England. We were friendly with an elderly couple named Lyons. The husband and I shared a common hobby — photography — and Mrs. Lyons took a great interest in ghost stories, as I do, so we were a good combination.

Mrs. Cherry, a friend to all of us, dropped in one afternoon to chat with my wife. I wasn't busy and they let me join in. The discussion of course centered on our various friends and Mrs. Lyons in particular.

At about three-thirty my wife glanced at the clock and remarked, "You'll stay to tea, of course?" The invitation was accepted and at that point I suddenly remembered I had a letter that had to catch the early mail. I excused myself and started for the postbox.

It was some distance — around

"WHAT is the POWER of the SASSAFRAS ROOT?"

Why is Sassafras tea so good for you?

YOU ARE NOT ALONE

From peasant to prince, individual man is often troubled, yet spiritual awareness comes in flashes to the most humble or learned among men. History has shown us the progress of the secular society; yet, deep within themselves, men often admit that religion and philosophy seem brittle and lacking the ring of Truth which the inner sense in every man tells him exists.

The Great Master, Jesus, said, "Narrow is the Way and few there be that find it." The narrowness of the way is but the nature of the portal to Truth whose Keeper demands of each supplicant sincerity of purpose and purity of heart. When Truth is really found, It brings such a surge of Reality, Joy, Understanding and newness of Life that men can scarcely realize how they ever lived as long as they did without Its Blessings.

The true Great White Brotherhood (neither a religion nor an organization opposed to religion) numbers among its Savants the greatest Teachers of all time who have ever lived and attained self-mastery upon this Earth. These Teachers who have ascended into the Realms of Light are as near to you as your breath or heartbeat; and that without the need of spiritualistic phenomena or questionable concept.

Let these spiritual Teachers, invisible, yet possessing the power to make themselves visible to you or any man, guide you. Subtly and invisibly at first, the blazing Light of Their Reality will gradually become a part of your own life as you welcome Them into your heart. This Light that has often been denied men as they have traveled over blind alley after blind alley can be yours today.

Do as thousands have! Discover your own personal spiritual nobility through the study of Universal Law and the Teachings of the Great Masters published through The Summit Lighthouse. Join hands with them now and you will be glad that you did. two corners and down another road. On my return trip whom should I see coming toward me but Mrs. Lyons. I was surprised to see her so far from home as generally she could not get around much.

She had her own ideas about clothes and her garb was quite unconventional. I don't know exactly what she was wearing but the figure unmistakably was Mrs. Lyons. As I came closer I said, "Good afternoon, Mrs. Lyons, I'm surprised to see you so far from home. Why not come to my place now you're so near and have tea? Mrs. Cherry is with us and will be glad to see you."

She did not reply but smiled and passed by. I thought this very strange so I turned to watch her. There was no one there! The road was fairly long and open and held no place she could hide nor any gate she might have entered. Was I "seeing things"?

Back home my wife remarked, "You look as if you have had a fright. What's wrong?"

I told her and Mrs. Cherry what had happened. They thought it must have been a case of mistaken identity. I disagreed, saying I had addressed the woman by name and she had smiled in response. I also reminded them of the peculiarities in Mrs. Lyons' mode of dress.

The afternoon went on and when our guest left we still were wondering about the strange meeting.

The next morning Mrs. Cherry telephoned. She said to me, "You say you saw Mrs. Lyons yesterday? Well, I am sure you did — but possibly not in the flesh — for she was killed in a motor crash early in the afternoon!"

It makes me wonder if the people we see are all real. And why this confrontation in a public road rather than in my home? Perhaps Mrs. Lyons didn't want to frighten my wife and our friend. — J. P. J. Chapman, Poole, Dorset, England.

MY PROPHETIC DREAMS

By Olivia Gaston

MY SISTER AUDREY May was 18 years old in 1919 and one Saturday afternoon in March of that year she became desperately ill. She was taken to the Cameron Hospital, Cameron, Tex., and operated on at midnight for appendicitis but the surgeons found peritonitis had set in.

On Saturday night of the second week of her hospitalization she didn't seem any worse but my heart was heavy when I left her in the care of a special nurse who promised to call me if there were any change in her condition.

About 6:00 A.M. on Sunday, March 23, 1919, I awakened from a dream that seemed to have lasted many hours. I dreamed that my 14-year-old sister and I were standing on the side of a small hill beside the railroad track. The sun shone on a field of beautiful wild flowers waving in a light spring breeze. We could see a passenger train approaching around the curve of another hill, black smoke billowing back over the coaches. We heard the distant sound of the whistle just as the train stopped at the small depot across the tracks. We saw Audrey board the train. She turned and waved to us, looking well and happy. We called our good-byes as if we had known about her leaving and the train slowly chuffed away.

When I was awake I seemed to know something had happened at the hospital. I called and reached the special nurse.

"My sister is dying, isn't she?" I dreaded her answer but I knew what it would be.

"Yes, you are right. I was just about to call you, for there is nothing that can be done for her now. I think you and your father should come as quickly as you can."

My father and I went to her immediately. She never opened her eyes but seemed to know just where we were standing. My father, overcome by his emotions, moved away from her bedside to the large wide window where he leaned against the center of the windowsill, his shoulders shaking.

I saw Audrey's lips moving and bent down to her. I could barely make out her weak voice. "Don't worry," she said. "I must go; they've sent for me." Then she spoke to my father, "Dad, will you please move over and let the angel in? He has come for me and I must go."

My father moved back. A whiff of wind stirred the curtains and the breath left her body. Her lovely face bore a restful smile.

Strange as it seems I have had this same dream before each death in my family and all the remaining five, my mother and father, my aunt and uncle and my husband are gone. I'm the only one left. — Linthicum Heights, Md.

New Books

THE DREAM AND HUMAN SOCIETIES, Colloquium papers edited by G. E. Von Grunebaum and Roger Caillois, University of California Press, Berkeley and Los Angeles, Calif., 1966. 457 pages, indexed, $10.00.

This volume presents 25 papers or addresses given at an international conference held in Paris in 1962 but organized by the Near Eastern Center of the University of California at Los Angeles. All papers are in English, thanks to translation. The theme of the conference is contained in the title of the book and concerns the importance of dreams for understanding people and their cultures rather than just the problems peculiar to individual dreamers.

Most but not all of the papers hold rather closely to this theme. There is something, too, for readers interested from the standpoints of psychology, psychiatry (mostly Jung), the physiology of dreams and parapsychology. Emilio Servadio and Martin Ebon deal briefly with these para-aspects. Dr. William C. Dement gives a superbly clear account of the known psychophysiology.

Two papers are specifically on dreams in Indian cultures (Hopi and Ojibwa). Two are on ancient Greece, one on the ancient Near East, one on modern Mexico and surprisingly, six on Islam. Another paper deals with initiation dreams and visions among the Siberian shamans. Mohave Indians receive considerable attention in a paper on dreams that the dreamers themselves suppose to be related to illness.

This is really a volume for serious students of dreams and the social sciences rather than for the casual reader. The scholarly contributors of these papers wrote in scholarly prose for their scholarly associates. Yet many of the papers will interest lay readers who are fascinated by the study of other cultures. Some papers manage to avoid academic pedantry. The brief chapter on Mexico, by Alfonso Milàn, is a little gem.

One of the more arresting statements in the book, by Enzo Paci, is: "We should bear in mind that we are never wholly awake . . . " — Harold Steinour.

MYSTERY MAN OF MIRACLES

Who Saw Tomorrow Today

By Joseph Millard

$4.75

METAPHYSICAL CENTRE
545 Sutter Street
San Francisco, Calif. 94102

In three sections, "Earth's Glowing Ghosts," "Electro-Dynamic Man" and "Premature Cremations," the book covers a myriad of phenomena.

The first section, which begins with UFOs, will be of special interest to fans of the subject. While agreeing that some UFOs appear to be metallic craft piloted by humanoid beings Mr. Gaddis points out that many reported sightings fall into a category he calls "electro-animals." These creatures, in his view, could be a form of upper-atmospheric life, perhaps feeding on pure energy. Their increased attentions toward the "bottom-dwellers" might be explained as curiosity or perhaps a disturbance of their natural environment by our atomic experiments, orbital flights, etc.

Other portions of this section are devoted to accounts of "fire falls," ball lightning, fireballs and similar phenomena.

In section two the author recounts stories of human immunity to fire, as in the case of the famous medium, D. D. Home. The two types of fire-walks, physical and super-physical, also are covered and the difference between the two is clearly shown. A chapter also is devoted to "fire-makers," who exhibit the ability to produce fire supernormally. Luminous and electrically-charged persons as well as human magnets are discussed. The section is rounded out with a dissertation on fires associated with poltergeist manifestations.

The final section deals with the riddle of spontaneous human combustion. The case of Mrs. Mary Reeser, "The Cinder Woman," is reviewed along with numerous similar instances. The popular notion that a combination of alcoholism and obesity can be responsible for such deaths is shown to have no valid scientific basis. However, the actual cause of spontaneous human com-

CASE HISTORIES

FEBRUARY, 1964—A 39-year-old man with a large family was out of a job, hopelessly in debt, and lived in an old, rented house.
TODAY—using the Power of Money Management, he has satisfied his creditors, bought an expensive home, 2 cars and a boat!
What he did, you can do—if you act now!

EIGHT YEARS AGO an engineer, working for one of the large aerospace firms, declared bankruptcy. But, using information contained in The Power of Money Management, he was able to salvage $6,000.
TODAY—He's still an engineer, still working for the same firm. But, using the principles of The Power of Money Management, he invested $4,000. Now he has a $50,000 equity in $195,000 worth of property.

IN 12 YEARS—He'll be retired and should own $250,000 worth of income-producing property — free and clear.
HE did it. So can YOU!

bustion remains a complete mystery.

The volume and variety of the book's contents cannot be adequately summarized in a short review. Suffice it to say, the reader will find much material of interest in this volume, and probably will join this reviewer in eagerly awaiting Mr. Gaddis' next offering. — Lucius Farish.

THE WORLD'S MOST INTRIGUING TRUE MYSTERIES, by Rupert Furneaux, Arco Publishing Company, Inc., New York, N.Y., 1966. 256 pages, $3.95.

Unlike most authors of "true mystery" books Rupert Furneaux does not automatically assume that enigmas necessarily must remain enigmas. This may be a fairly healthy attitude but Mr. Furneaux will have to forgive me for my reservations about "explanations" in general. My attitude is a product of my staunch Fortean temperament.

Furneaux takes on a whole range of phenomena from the disappearance of Amelia Earhart to possible pre-Columbian voyages to America, lost treasures and cities and the identity of Barabbas, which he handles competently if sometimes uninterestingly. He is weakest where he deals with occurrences more likely to interest FATE readers: alleged hauntings, "time travel," flying saucers, etc., all of which he discounts, although in my opinion he does not always manage to do so in solid, logical fashion.

Furneaux's skepticism occasionally is well-taken, however. He discredits, successfully in my opinion, the story of two British spinsters who, while touring France in 1901, claimed to have stepped back into the gardens of Versailles as they were in 1789, as well as the already somewhat notorious "haunting" at Borley Rectory. But when he tackles the theory that the 1908 Siberian "meteorite" actually was a spaceship (which he does not believe) he fumbles clumsily, ignoring or overlooking the evidence upon which a Soviet scientist based his hypothesis.

He dismisses UFOs for the usual irrelevant reasons and he assures us that "no ghost story" ever has been substantiated. Efforts to capture, interview or photograph the ghosts have proved unavailing, for they appear only to those who are receptive to the suggestion that ghosts are real. Their absence is remarkable when skeptics and trained observers are about. (No comment!) His explanation for the Devonshire "devil's hoof-marks" is more improbable than the "hoof-marks" themselves.

It is unfortunate that Furneaux must dismiss all mysteries with "supernatural" or extramundane connotations particularly when these are the most deserving of thoughtful consideration, it seems to me. Any reader with a background in these areas is bound to be disappointed by The World's Most Intriguing True Mysteries. — Jerome Clark.

MRS. SATAN, by Johanna Johnston. G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York, N.Y., 1967. 303 pages, plus bibliography and index, $5.95.

Subtitled "The Incredible Saga of Victoria C. Woodhull," this is a fast-paced well-documented biography of a truly remarkable woman. Mrs. Woodhull claimed to have been led through her amazing many-faceted life by a spirit guide in a white toga.

Her guide served her family well when as a girl in the mid-19th Century, she was part of her father's itinerant medicine show which featured her clairvoyant talents. She met and married an officer of the St. Louis Spiritualist Association and traveled with him to New York where upon being introduced at the state Spiritualist convention she immediately was elected president.

PLANCHETTE!

THE PLANCHETTE IS A MECHANICAL MEANS FOR AUTOMATIC WRITING. IT AIDS PSYCHIC MANIFESTATIONS WHICH HAVE NO OTHER MEANS OF BECOMING CONCRETE.

The result of an exhaustive search, our authentic planchette is hand-made from a special wood — an "alive" wood that magnetizes — and will absorb YOUR vibrations. It measures about 6 inches in length. Smoothly hand-finished, it is polished to a high lustre with a resin polish which, being a wood byproduct, will not interfere with the vibrations which the operator's continued use sets up.

HOW THE PLANCHETTE WORKS:

Specially-fitted pencil forms one leg of planchette, the other two rolling free on ball bearings. These ball bearings permit the slightest indication of movement to take effect, the tiniest wisp of pressure transmitted through your hand. Only a superior product, an authentic psychic appliance, could have this expensive ballbearing feature.

Complete instructions for use of the planchette, as well as its care and protection of the vibrations, are included with this advanced psychic instrument.

From there Mrs. Woodhull went on to become a pioneer suffragette, the first woman broker on Wall Street, confidante of Commodore Vanderbilt, newspaper publisher and first woman candidate for president of the United States of America.

If this were fiction it undoubtedly would be rejected by publishers as implausible — no woman could have been so unusual. But Mrs. Woodhull's saga is fact and the book is a "must" for those interested in psychical matters in an historical context. — Henry Cole.

CYCLOMANCY: THE SECRET OF PSYCHIC POWER CONTROL, by Frank R. Young. Parker Publ. Co., West Nyack, N.Y., 1966. 210 pages, $5.95.

The unusual title of this book has its origin in the myth of Cyclops, the one-eyed giant, relating to the contrast between his invincibility when possessed of vision and his helplessness when his eye was damaged. This author discusses human psychic powers which have been allowed to degenerate through the ages but which may be renewed through described procedures.

Young describes a "Primitive Autoconscious" related to but not the same as the subconscious. This level of consciousness was predominant in primitive man permitting him to "sense" or "feel" things that were not physically evident. His highly-tuned affinity with nature is said to have been dulled and encased in a shell of intellectual limitations. These powers have been casualties of civilization but frequently reappear today when under hypnosis extreme rigidity, great strength, telepathy and other faculties have been demonstrated.

In what seems to be a new approach to development of psychic powers, author Young applies his own medical nomenclature to physiological functions and regions (primarily glands) about which medical science possesses little or no knowledge. These names include his "Primitive Autoconscious" and "Psychic Power Center" of the brain and involve the functions of the pineal, thalamus and hypothalamus.

Each chapter discusses a different psychic power. The initial physiological development sounds reasonable and scientifically valid — up to the point where that physiological activity leaves the body and continues, intact and virile, right through space to another person or object to be influenced.

Exercises are described to help you develop power to control your body temperature, to "see" with your feet, to see great distances with your "Astral Telescope," to practice psychometry with any object, to see what the future holds for you or for another person, to travel with your astral body, to see through solid walls, to destroy instantly a bad habit, to influence others with infrared rays from your eyes, to heal others at a glance, to cause your body to "light up" like a human lamp, and to subdue an assailant by psychic force.

This book, to its credit, expends a great deal of effort in developing the groundwork for practicing psychic powers. While other writings in this field empirically decree "Think it! If you can think it strongly enough it will happen," Young cautiously and with credibility leads us through the known steps of physical and psychological control of our own functions. When the wall between physiological and psychical actions is reached he encourages speculative procedures which are sufficiently simple and understandable to attract experiment. The activities described and the results promised are no more incredible than were the science fiction speculations of 20 years ago.

Master Key To Wealth

"GET RICH IN SPITE OF YOURSELF" by Louis Grafe says many people can't help getting rich. Their riches come in spite of themselves. This book contains a most astonishing formula for wealth and success which the author developed while making four fortunes. He declares anyone can use this formula to gain SUCCESS permanently. It is so simple that the book can be mastered in three hours. Over 200,000 copies have been sold and thousands of people have written the author telling of riches piled up as a result of applying the principles in this book. The entire book, containing the complete formula, is offered for only $1.00. If this book does not bring you at least $100 in extra earnings within six months, return the book for full refund of your $1.00. Send your one dollar to The Book Shop, Dept. FA-10G, Rowan, Iowa, 50470, for your copy. POSTPAID. Stock is limited . . . ORDER TODAY!

No attempt will be made here to describe any of the lengthy and detailed psychic procedures. Credibility depends to a great extent on a detailed narrative development, and to abstract one of these dissertations without breaking the thread of credibility would be presumptuous at one extreme and a disservice to the author at the other.

In each chapter the author wisely cautions that practice makes perfect and that instant results must not be expected. In several sections he suggests that you "may never realize success."

In summary, this book shows that the author has done considerable groundwork to bridge the present gap between known physical human powers and the legendary and speculative psychic powers of ancient and Eastern lore. The major criticism which might be made is that the book lacks case histories. This is a work of experimental and theoretical philosophy, projecting from a thorough background of scientifically sound principles into the as yet unknown psychic field. A student will find all the challenge he can handle between these covers and when demonstration of psychic powers achieves recognition as a laboratory science this might well prove to be the manual on fundamentals that made such progress possible. — Tom C. Lyle.

Report FROM THE Readers

THE INS AND THE OUTS

Your article, "Witches' Sabbats and Esbats," in FATE, June, 1967, is very interesting but I take issue with one point. On page 87 appears this statement: "The Horned God who is the consort of the Moon Goddess Diana, the Great Mother, has no link with the Church's Satan. . . ."

In Comparative Religion it is axiomatic that when one religion replaces another the god or gods of the former become the devil and evil spirits of the new religion. The popular representation of Satan with horns, hooves and a tail is a caricature of Pan or the "Horned God."

Of course the worship of any god but the God of the Church would be regarded as evil and the object of such worship as the embodiment of all evil. The fact that the "witches" identify the figure of their god with the devil of the Church may well have to do with the psychological phenomenon of transference. Dr. William Sargant has pretty well established the fact that the rapport existing between an interrogator and a suspect may cause the suspect to feed back to the interrogator his own suspicions, convincing him that the suspect is guilty while also convincing the suspect of his own guilt. In the same way the church's identification of the Horned God with Satan may have caused the questioned

My credentials for making these statements are six years of research and lecturing on the subjects of comparative religion and the mythological background of religion. I am familiar with and use extensively the works of Sir James G. Fraser, Dr. Margaret Murray, Joseph Campbell, Robert Graves and Dr. Carl G. Jung. Indeed I think Dr. Jung was more nearly correct about people and their needs than many other psychologists and I regret that so many religious leaders have abandoned him. — *James H. "IMAGE PROPAGATION"

I was pleased to see the excerpt from The World of Ted Serios by Dr. Jule Eisenbud in the April, 1967, issue of FATE. These are amazing revelations and Dr. Eisenbud should be highly commended both for his work in this field and for his excellent book.

Such phenomena have long been of much interest to me and we are now conducting experiments and compiling data along these lines in our Morro Bay laboratory. (The Morro Bay Company produces sonic instruments, metal detectors and anti-allergen generators, etc. — The Editors.) We have discovered that many individuals unknowingly are capable of projecting remnants of thought patterns or mental images of one kind or another directly on photographic film — although we have not yet found a subject so spectacularly successful as Mr. Serios. However, it is our opinion that there may be many people who could perform just as well if they would only try.

A few months ago in "I See by the Papers" Mr. Fuller used the story of the Irishman who when asked if he could play the violin replied that he didn't know because he'd never tried. We believe this point is apropos in

In Shinto (June, 1967, FATE) ancestor worship (ties with eternity), devotion to the state and filial piety are important precepts. In feudal times the Shintoist code became the warrior's code, stressing honor, loyalty and cleanliness. In Shintoism cleanliness is purification and ablution is a religious rite.

The Shinto temples have no images or idols. To the Shintoist the beautiful in nature and in life is the divine. No evil exists in nature; evil is lack of moderation. All natural appetites are good and they become evil only when indulged in to excess. To the Japanese Shinto is "kami-no-michi," the way of the gods.

From the union of Izanagi and Izanami were born the sun-goddess, the moon-god and the storm-god. The sun-goddess was called "Amaterasu-omi-Kami" and her grandson became the first "Tenno" (emperor or mikado) of Japan in 660 B.C.

Shinto has implanted in the Japanese a profound love of nature, especially an adoration of the Rising Sun, and for all things that grow — flowers, forests, streams, rivers. And the essence of the gods is harbored in the wind, a divine phenomenon. — K. M. Nikaido, San Francisco, Calif.

WHEN EAGLE SPEAKS . . .

Seldom do the ancient Quatahameans reveal their prophecies to non-Quatahameans but the article, "Predictions for 1967," in the June, 1967, FATE impels me to offer these to you:

- The Johnson administration must disengage itself from Southeast Asian entanglements before the First Day of the Year Seven (February 5, 1968) of the New Kingdom of the Sun.
- The Sun of Peace begins to show through the dark clouds of hate and war. Whether it is to be permanent is earthling-man's choice.
- Although the Hour Glass of Time is running out on earthling-man the War of Wars of annihilation by the Flame Throwers can be avoided, for earthlings still have 39 months from this hour (May 16, 1967) to avoid the promised holocaust.
- Not all "UFOs" and "flying saucers" are man-made and terrestrial. Many are oo-bee-gee-aah-wuh (fire ships of our brothers from the heavens) or sky canoes bringing to earth Oo-ee-cha-loh-pah'n (spirit eagles from other worlds [planets]) to sit at Big Medicine Bow Council Fires as they have for millennia before the coming of the white man and the black man to the Sacred Land now called the Americas.
- The path is open to the Republican Party to win the presidency and the congress in 1968 IF they select for their candidate one who has the spirit-power to reorient the party, the nation and the world's people toward mankind's highest potential spiritual development.

Kah-wah-koo Yoh-sheh-mee-tee: May the wonderful waters of love transport you into the garden of the goddess of peace. — Lightfoot Talking Eagle, Tamaqua, Pa.

. . . OR AN UNKNOWN

I am sending you my predictions, having just read those in your June, 1967, issue. Since I am an unknown these may not be significant to you at this time. However, as friends are beginning to notice, my predictions have a way of being right.

(1) Viet Nam: no peace for a long, long time — and also, no negotiations.

(2) President Johnson will see his presidency end in the greatest disgrace the country has ever known.

(3) Flying saucers definitely are not terrestrial! Authoritative sources will make this known by 1970.

(4) Cuba: Castro will get his reward — death at the hands of his "friends." Then Cuba will become an even greater stronghold of Russia. The United States must take steps to remedy this immediately.

(5) George Romney will be elected president in 1968 but others will give him a strong fight, among them George Wallace. This is the era of "George" leadership.

(6) Hatfield will be chosen as Romney's running mate but Richard Nixon will be a strong contender. Through this effort Richard Nixon will be chosen by Romney to help lead the nation once again.

(7) Cancer research could be greatly aided by some help from Jeane Dixon as she has the answer in her crystal ball. Researchers should consult her. Some will (secretly) this year.

(8) Jeane Dixon will rise to even greater fame upon proclamation of the world's greatest spiritual truths within a few more years — between 1967 and 1970. The exact timing depends on the world's moral and spiritual condition.

(9) The world will undergo a tremendous "shaking" by 1970. This will be of greater intensity than any earthquake ever experienced. — Barbara Wright, Houston, Tex.

THIS IS NO MALARKEY

In "I See by the Papers" (January, 1967, FATE) Curtis Fuller summarily dismissed as "malarkey" attempts by "cultists" to relate UFOs to Biblical miracles. In my view, for some of the "supernatural" events reported in and out of the Bible, the explanation that a UFO was on hand is the only reasonable one. In support of this view I submit the following three examples — one from the Old Testament, one from the New Testament and one from recent history.

From the Old Testament comes the most obvious example. Ezekiel's "wheel in the middle of a wheel" — along with other metaphorically-described objects — closely resembles the objects described in many contemporary UFO reports.

From the New Testament, take the "star" of Bethlehem. No conventional celestial object — near planet, supernova, comet, meteor, ball lightning, swamp gas, what have you — fits the reported events. Unless the three wise men traveled due east along a perfectly straight line running from themselves through Bethlehem and to the "star," and unless the "star" remained stationary near the horizon all the time they were traveling, the "star" could not guide them to Bethlehem. Nor would they know when they had arrived at the right point, since no star could be directly overhead and near the horizon simultaneously. On the other hand, a brilliantly self-illuminated something-or-other silently hovering over Bethlehem fits the reported events perfectly.

In recent history we have the Fatima "miracle." The sun is reported to have stood still, descended (or enlarged) and dazzled thousands of people with its gyrations. This phenomenon is readily explainable on the basis of the UFO hypothesis. Assume that shortly before the time of the "miracle" a supersized, discshaped UFO was hovering at high altitude near the line-of-sight between the crowd and the sun — thus invisible. At the appointed time the UFO had merely to move into the line of sight, brighten and descend. To the crowd below it would appear that the sun indeed had stood still and enlarged or descended. The spinning motions characteristic of UFOs would complete the effect.

Admittedly this is pure speculation based on the vulnerable assumption that the examples cited actually occurred as reported. Nevertheless I believe it is reasonable to assume that a pastoral culture with a primitive technology would regard UFOs as "celestial chariots" and their occupants as "angels" or even gods.— John Franklin, San Diego, Calif.

THE WEDDING RING

This experience has been called coincidence, intuition, "a spirit led you," and all manner of things but whatever label you put on it the happening cannot be explained.

My husband Gene and I took our two children to Big Bear Mountain last winter to have a picnic in the snow. We stopped the car on a pull-off site, crossed the road and started our hike in the snow (banked several feet deep).

Gene swung his arms back and forth as he walked and suddenly called out as he felt his wedding ring slipping off. We all searched but had to give up. The ring had fallen into such deep snow that every move we made must have buried it deeper.

A few months later the snow had melted and Gene said he wanted to go to Big Bear to look for his ring. We arrived at what he thought was the right pull-off site but I couldn't recognize the spot. Everything looked different with the snow gone. Gene went a few miles farther but still I didn't see a place that looked familiar.

Finally Gene said, "It was back there where we stopped first," and we drove back. We crossed the road as we had done in the winter and in less than five minutes Gene found his wedding ring. He said he knew he would find it that day and in that place. — Mrs. Gene Dye, Riverside, Calif.

SENSORY OR SPIRITUAL?

Many of your readers must be puzzled, as I am, about the use of incense, perfumed candles and perfumed oils in metaphysical practices — or more exactly, in the practice of "fortune-telling." I believe many practitioners do not know the reason or significance of the use of scents.

I was once told that candles burn up the evil elements present. While this may be true I feel their significance goes deeper. Incense, perfumed oils, etc., symbolize the soul's conscience and when they permeate the air they inhibit the physical bodies of those in the room.

It may be possible that they increase the vibrations enabling persons to achieve a "oneness" with others in the room, thus making each more sensitive to spiritual impressions.

It is my conjecture — and no doubt it would be relatively easy to prove by experiment — that the real significance of scents, metaphysically speaking, is to inhibit the physical side of man's nature in order to open the way for psychic expression. — Charles Cross, Wilmington, Calif.

THE FACE OF GOD

As ESP runs in my family, I have been wanting to write you for a long time especially since reading "In Jesus' Name" (My Proof of Survival, April, 1967, FATE). My experience is much like the one recorded there.

It happened while I was having my last child, a girl. During delivery I found myself in a vast dark void — but somehow I could see. I was nowhere on earth and I knew other persons were near me in the same state as mine. We seemed to be in a place of waiting.

I was not frightened and felt gently relaxed. Floating in this darkness, having no body that I could see, yet I felt I was whole. All at once the blackness opened and below me I saw blue sky and the great ball Earth suspended in light. Then the earth exploded into nothingness and the darkness closed in again. I still felt no fear as if I knew this is the way it was supposed to be.

Then from afar a tiny light appeared as if the sun were rising and the light came closer and grew more brilliant as it approached. I knew this was what I had been waiting for. The closer the light came the closer my unseen companions and I drifted toward it. I could hardly wait to reach the light, for I felt at last I would see the face of God — but just as I felt the light would enfold me, I awoke to find myself in my hospital bed. — Helen E. Pier, Pleasantville, N.Y.

THE LAST OF THE PLANTAGENETS

Regarding the article in June, 1967, FATE, "Witches' Sabbats and Esbats," I have two words to say: very interesting!

My family knows we have a touch of royal blood here and there but witches' blood is a new one on us. We happen to be direct descendants of three of the Plantagenet daughters, Maud, Joan and Eleanor (Alinore). My goodness, does that make me a witch? — Shirle Misterek, Post Falls, Idaho.

the necklace is of some antiquity having been in my family for generations. (We lived in India.) The beads are not set in metal but are strung through holes in their centers, and a gold clasp fastens the necklace.

Some of the beads are small balls, others pendants, bearing a resemblance to moonstones. However, moonstones are feldspar and carnelian (formerly called cornelian) is a variety of chalcedony, usually reddish in color. I was always told the white carnelian was very rare, and it may be that it is native to India. — Agnes St. George, Verona, N.J.

THE PUZZLE

I am deeply puzzled. I don't know whether or not I have ESP but the information I have received lately is astonishing, to say the least.

For a number of years I have fooled around with automatic writing. I feel I have had only moderate success. The message would always begin with the words, "Charles loves you." I had a brother Charles who died at the age of two, shortly before I was born. Is he my "guide"?

After those words the writing would be almost unreadable scribbling but more or less resembled words I expected to get so I suspected I was unconsciously furnishing the message.

One day I discovered that I could communicate in a "yes" and "no" manner with my wrist. I would relax and let my arm rest on the chair arm. Then I would mentally send out a call for Charles. Sometimes he would not respond but when he did my wrist would twitch in an up and down movement. We arranged a code: one up and down movement was "no" and two or more was "yes." But again I got the answers I expected and to me these were suspect.

Then early this year I really went after information, using a combination of writing and wrist movement. The results are astonishing — for the information I have received is contrary to my own convictions and the answers could not have come from within me.

What Charles has "revealed" to me is totally unlike what we have always believed. Charles is in a region called "Goshen." This was my first surprise. This word was carefully spelled out as was the fact that Heaven and hell do not exist. There are no angels and no Satan. There is a God but His domain is Goshen. He ignores all living people and doesn't even listen to our prayers. He did not create the universe. Our universe and Goshen are coexistent.

The flying saucers are real and come from outer space but not from any planet we know. Venus is the only one that has a trace of life and that is very primitive. A number of worlds support life, such as the saucer people, and when they die they too go to Goshen. Some are three to four feet tall and others seven to eight. They resemble earth people but with minor differences.

Perhaps most astounding is the revelation that reincarnation is a fact! My brother Charles has returned three times as the soul of a baby at intervals of about two centuries. Even the saucer people are reborn and return to their own habitat.

This "information" is so different from our most cherished beliefs that I am wondering if I have tapped a source of information that is worth looking into. I hope FATE readers will comment pro or con. — Fred Goshert, Lockport, N.Y.

Lived in a Mirror," June, 1967, FATE).

In speaking of other religions in Japan Dr. Bach included a paragraph on the "Omoto" religion. First, the adherents of this religion spell it Oomoto; each "O" is a separate syllable and the accent is on the next to last syllable, thus: O-o-mo-to.

Second, I have a somewhat different impression of the religion.

While Dr. Bach's statement, "Omoto holds 'Spirits often do not realize they have left the physical bodies,' " is true, I believe that every religious group that ever believed in the existence of discarnate spirits has held this corollary to be true.

An important distinguishing characteristic of this group is their preoccupation with world brotherhood both as an ideal and as a practice. Their hospitality may be unrivaled — at least it is unexcelled — by any group anywhere in the world. They have rituals, even dogmas, but their adherents in various parts of the world never preach. Their evangelism is restricted mostly to active brotherhood. Although their temples and all their records have been completely destroyed three times by the Japanese Imperial government, they now have a temple in Brazil as well as in Japan and claim one million adherents.

While I have had a lifelong interest in all religions, I am a writer in and teacher of Esperanto and my contact with Oomoto first came through its Esperanto motto: "Unu Dio. unu mondo, unu lingvo," meaning: "One God, one world, one language." They chose the beautiful, precise, literary, international language, Esperanto, for their communication. — Charles Lambert Mann, San Diego, Calif.

WHAT HAS FATE IN STORE FOR YOU?

. . . A chance to explore the unknown . . . truths you find nowhere else . . . articles and stories to fire your imagination— that's what FATE has in store for you. Here is Editor Mary Fuller's report on stories planned for future issues:

∞ In the hullabaloo over the Loch Ness monster, the Abominable Snowman and many undifferentiated sea serpents, one first-class monster has been overlooked. Ivan T. Sanderson reports on "Three-Toes" dubbing it "most likely to succeed."

∞ Unknown to our Western world is an ages-old method of learning life's secrets. In India and in China they believe their futures and pasts — and yours — are written on palm leaves.

∞ Edward Buller, long-time student of mysticism, writes of values that have accrued in his life since he learned how to use psychic ability. He shares with us the hard-won secrets of reaping "the psychic dividend".

∞ Ohio newspaper man relates saga of Arlington H. Mallery's discovery, 20 years ago, of Leif Ericson's Vinland. This engineer and navigator who turned archaeologist after retiring from U.S. Army at end of WW II followed three ancient Icelandic maps.

Do You Laugh Your Greatest Powers Away?

THOSE STRANGE INNER URGES

You have heard the phrase; "Laugh, clown, laugh." Well, that fits me perfectly. I'd fret, worry and try to reason my way out of difficulties—all to no avail; then I'd have a hunch, a something within that would tell me to do a certain thing. I'd laugh it off with a shrug. I knew too much, I thought, to heed these impressions. Well, it's different now—I've learned to use this inner power and I no longer make the mistakes I did, because I do the right thing at the right time.

This FREE BOOK Will Prove What Your Mind Can Do!

Here is how I got started right. I had heard about hypnosis revealing past lives. I began to think there must be some inner intelligence with which we were born. In fact, I often heard it said there was; but how could I use it, how could I make it work for me daily? That was my problem. I wanted to learn to direct this inner voice, master it if I could. Finally, I wrote to the Rosicrucians, a world-wide fraternity of progressive men and women, who offered to send me, without obligation, a free book entitled The Mastery of Life.

That book opened a new world to me. I advise you to write today and ask for your copy. It will prove to you what your mind can demonstrate. Don't go through life laughing your mental powers away. Simply write: Scribe Q.B.K.
