OUR EIGHTEENTH VOLUME.

OUR issue of this day is the first of a new Volume. Judging from the fact of the amounts realised at the three Festivals of the year, the great body of Freemasons are in a flourishing condition. Is it too much to suggest that a little more interest might be taken by our Lodges in supporting the journals that devote themselves to the interests of the Craft? We frequently hear from brethren that they are too much engaged to find time for reading about Freemasonry; to many of these we return answer,—The loss is yours. All men who take an interest in any society they are associated with should be able to give some account of what is being done by that society. The Masonic journals of this country, we venture to assert, are conducted on broad and sound lines, and we urge for them, that they are worthy the support of the members of the Craft.

UNITED GRAND LODGE.

WE are of opinion the general body of Craftsmen have every reason to be satisfied with the result of the Special Communication of United Grand Lodge held on Friday last. It was apparent to any one in the habit of noting the state of Masonic feeling that the invasion of the prerogative of Grand Lodge—as some thought fit to express it—by the alteration of the Table of Precedence, was likely to be a theme for discussion, if not for dissension, for some considerable time to come. Most gratifying, therefore, must it have been to all well wishers of our grand Institution when it was announced by the Right Hon. the Earl of Carnarvon, the Pro Grand Master, that he had been in conference with the Most Worshipful the Grand Master on several occasions during the last few days, and that he was desired to say the G.M. did not desire to make any change that would not be acceptable to the Craft. The Pro G. Master further stated that his Royal Highness had since learned that the changes had not met with that general assent he had been led to expect. He was also aware that a question had been raised whether the Grand Master had even the power to alter the precedence, not of existing, but of future Grand Officers. The power which the Prince of Wales—acting under advice—had exercised, was precisely that which all successive Grand Masters, from the Duke of Sussex, had exercised without Grand Lodge questioning it. By direction of the Prince of Wales, inquiry had been made on the subject, and the result was to make it clear that the practice had been somewhat conflicting; at one time the Grand Master, and at another Grand Lodge, had conferred rank on brethren, and fixed their status in Grand Lodge. In the Book of Constitutions framed in 1815, shortly after the Union of the two Grand Lodges, Grand Lodge took power to propose to the Grand Master three names for each of the offices of Grand Chaplain, Grand Treasurer, and Grand Sword Bearer, for selection therefrom by him, the Grand Master having the absolute right to select the other nine Grand Officers. This, however, was found not to work satisfactorily, and Grand Lodge, by resolution of 29th July 1818, cancelled the arrangement, and the Grand Master took power to appoint to all the Grand offices except the Grand Treasurer, and this was embodied in the Book of Constitutions which was published in 1819. Since then the Grand Master had so appointed his Grand Officers, and had fixed and altered their status on more than one occasion, without complaint, let, or hindrance on the part of Grand Lodge. It might, therefore, be concluded, for the fact proved itself, that the G. Master had done this, and had continued to do it, with the sanction and approval of G. Lodge, and the custom had, in this as in many other cases, made the law, though that law had not been recorded, as it ought to have been. On the other hand, Grand Lodge had every now and again, by specific resolution, conferred rank and station on different brethren. In September 1862, it resolved to make the President of the Board of General Purposes a G. Officer; this he was not before, and his status was then fixed. The Pro Grand Master assured the members of Grand Lodge His Royal Highness had but one end in view, that was to promote the interests of Grand Lodge. Again, in June 1881, it created the appointment of Deputy Director of Ceremonies, and the First and Second Grand Standard Bearers. The Grand Master and Grand Lodge had at different times exercised concurrent authority in the matter. He exercised his powers and used his prerogative in the name and for the sake of the Grand Lodge, and on a question such as this there could arise no difference between the Grand Master and Grand Lodge. Grand Lodge was naturally jealous of its privileges, and no one would be more watchful in guarding those privileges than the Grand Master. The great end and aim of the Prince of Wales in the position of Grand Master, conferred upon him by and over this ancient, honourable, and most useful institution, was to rule it well; to promote as far as in him lay its best interests, and the welfare, content, and happiness of the brethren generally. Having received reliable information that the changes made in April were not agreeable to the large body of the Craft, and his desire being to give effect to its well-considered wishes, His Royal Highness now cancelled the instructions he then gave. As a consequence the Table of Precedence will continue to stand as in the Book of Constitutions now in force. The Earl of Carnarvon also stated that he fully concurred in what the Prince or Wales had done.

The business of the day, the consideration of the amendments and alterations in the Book of Constitutions, was then proceeded with, and some hours were spent in discussing the several points. For ourselves, we do not think any satisfactory result can accrue from these discussions. The business is of too comprehensive and important a nature to be entrusted to so large a body as Grand Lodge in conclave assembled. Indeed, we will go further; we think a great mistake was made when suggestions were asked for from the members of the several Lodges under the roll of the English Constitution. However, we have recorded our views on the proposed Revision, and the result of our efforts is before the Craft in the series of papers we published in this journal, and afterwards reprinted in pamphlet form.* We have received innumerable expressions of favourable opinion on the several points we raised, and we are told that many of our suggessions have received attention at the hands of the Revising Committee. Doubtless, when the alterations now under consideration are definitely settled, an opportunity may offer for an opinion to be given, but we feel we have already done our share, and consequently are content to leave to others any further discussion as to points of detail.

We will now merely state that satisfactory progress may be reported, inasmuch as 184 of the rules submitted for approval were passed by Grand Lodge.

THE GIRLS' SCHOOL.

AT the last meeting of the General Committee of the Royal Masonic Institution for Girls it was reported that an offer had been made to the Executive of the Institution whereby they might secure the purchase of about nine acres of freehold land immediately adjoining their own premises. It appears that the owner of this desirable plot, which forms the boundary of two sides of the present grounds owned by the Girls' Institution, has declined to divide his property, and names an amount of £4,000 per acre as the lowest sum at which he may be induced to transfer his title. Col. Creaton, with wise forethought, and with the consent of his colleagues, has obtained a promise that the said land shall not be sold until the next Quarterly Court has been held, when the views and opinions of the Governors and Subscribers as to the desirability of acquiring this property shall be elicited.

We are perfectly in accord with the Committee, who seem to have taken it into consideration that if the said land were sold to a third party it might be dealt with in a manner prejudicial to the School, and that if it be purchased by the Institution a certain portion or portions of it as may not be required for their purposes might be re-sold; and we agree with them the whole question demands and should receive careful consideration.

It will be borne in mind by many of our readers that when the purchase of Lyncombe House was projected we were strongly in opposition, from the fact that we entertained the belief that the purchase money demanded on that occasion was far in excess of the value of the property offered for sale. However, our views were not fully endorsed; in due course that purchase was effected, and we readily admit that to the present time we have seen no legitimate reason why we should say those who differed from us on that occasion were not in the right. In the present instance an undoubtedly valuable property is about to be placed on the market; that its acquirement will be of immense value to the Institution whose interests we are all anxious to advance is unquestionable, and we sincerely trust the whole question will receive careful consideration, and that if the purchase money demanded is reasonable, steps may be taken whereby the property may be secured for the use of the Institution, or for such other purposes as the Committee in their wisdom may see fit to adapt it to. The Quarterly Court where this question will be taken into consideration is to be held at Freemasons' Hall on Saturday next, the 14th inst., at twelve o'clock noon.

THE CHARITABLE AND SOCIAL ASPECTS OF FREEMASONRY.

TO the uninitiated Freemasonry has always been a subject of curiosity. The secret signs and solemn rites are stumbling blocks to the outside world; mysterious somethings, a knowledge of which is desired and sought for with a persistence and vigour rarely manifested in the merely curious. The position the Craft holds in the estimation of the world, the belief that its symbols are known to, revered, and recognised by all peoples, wheresoever scattered over land or water, invest it with an interest to that only felt for the Gospel. Men pant to know what is forbidden them except through the proper channel. They are affected by a spirit of curiosity, and seek to gratify it by means that are not always creditable, and never wholly successful. Eve's fatal spirit inspires them, they seek knowledge by illicit means, and although the acquirement of that knowledge does not entail the punishment that befel Adam, it would bring no blessing, no honest satisfaction to those who unrighteously covet other men's privileges. It would gratify the pride of most people, but it would sear the conscience. Men who choose to band themselves together in the common association of principles have a right to signify their union by whatever secret signs and ceremonies they please. No one has a right to say them nay; even the law cannot interfere unless there is reasonable suspicion that secrecy is used as a cloak for illegal practices. That such interference does not take place, that the second person in this great empire, and heir to its throne, is at the head of the Craft, are sufficient to prove that English Freemasonry, at least, is loyal, and regarded with high favour by those who owe their position to the intelligent submission of the people. The only justification, then, for prying into hidden mysteries is lacking, and those who are guilty of an improper curiosity come within another class who are regarded by honourable minds with contempt. To open other people's letters is considered a grave social offence, as a sneaking propensity which irritates and disgusts. A minister of the crown who should examine suspected documents as they pass through the post, would be looked upon with indignation, differing in degree only according to the circumstances of each case, and the position held by the person or persons outraged. There is some justification, no doubt, for a Government who resort to espionage in defence of its country—just that kind of justification by which the office of the hangman is vindicated, and the priest tolerated who proclaims the doctrine that the end justifies the means. Viewed as a question of necessity and of priestly arrogance, it may be defended upon grounds that are accepted by a certain order of minds; as a rule, however, a spy is an abomination in the sight of most Englishmen, and all honest men. There is no excuse whatever for the curious who seek to solve the mysteries of Freemasonry; it is an unholy desire, and those who attempt to gratify it court the services of blasphemers and renegades. The knowledge would be useless were they to obtain it, it would never pass with those who have been honourably received into the Craft.

This searching after hidden secrets has led to disappointments, and to the promulgation of erroneous views with regard to Freemasonry. What little information has been gained has shown the hopelessness of further striving, and has led many persons into the labyrinths of speculation. Some look upon Freemasonry as an improved Friendly Society, others as a combination of men who revel in vulgar show and empty symbolism, who sacrifice common sense to fancy. Others, again, regard Freemasons as a dangerous body, who, under a mask of social and charitable purpose, aim at political ends and the subversion of religion. The most common impression is that Freemasonry is only another name for a club, where men meet for self-indulgence, where they invest their proceedings with heathenish forms and ceremonies, and conclude with the debauch of the table and the riot of loose tongues. It is unnecessary to defend Freemasonry against the charge of disloyalty either to the throne or to God. The presence in the body of men holding the highest positions in Church and State at once gets rid of any such accusation, and nothing that could be said here would convince the Roman Catholic Priest of the innocence of the Craft. He demands implicit obedience to mother church, an obedience which Freemasonry cannot yield to any church, but which recognises in the highest degree the head of all religion. There is the faintest tinge of truth in some of the impressions that are current among cowans. There are Freemasons who do not aspire to office, and, consequently, do not take interest in the ceremonies, who become Freemasons for the sake of social position and enjoyment; men who toil not in the Lodge, but often spin the web of charity. There are others, perhaps, who prefer the knife and fork to the working or emblematical tools of the Craft. These are not much influenced by the sublimity of the ceremonies; who probably could not, if they desired, realise the beauty and truth, and, like the glorious sunshine, permeate the principles and language of the Order. They are governed by their fleshly appetites, and are as incapable of appreciating the noble spirit of Freemasonry as they would be of receiving the higher truths taught by sacred and profane poets. Happily they are not rulers; they are not numerous, and the fundamental principles of the Craft are not affected by their presence.

The main body cannot fairly be charged with the vice of over self-indulgence, while their charity is only bounded by their means. The practice of charity is not only inculcated in the ceremonies, but its exercise almost invariably forms part of the social pleasures after labour. It is then that the better part of the selfish few is displayed, and the generous many realise the duty and pleasure of giving. An appeal for help at such a time never goes unheeded, and amidst the enjoyments of the table there springs up a sense of obligation to others which has borne much grand fruit. No better illustration of noble generosity can be found anywhere than in the Institutions which Freemasons have raised for the support of the aged and distressed of their body, or for the instruction and welfare of the bereaved children of brethren who have passed to their last earthly home; and it is one of the most beautiful features of the Craft that the humblest Freemason shares the blessings provided with the highest. Misfortune is the only passport to relief, and merit the only distinction recognised. Besides these well-known Institutions, that have a world-wide reputation, every Lodge has its own means of help, and while the proceeds are dispensed in secret assembly, they are raised chiefly at the banquet table, thus affording another proof of the fact that Freemasonry is not only associated with the highest principles of morality and religion, but is constantly and essentially identified with the spirit and practice of charity. It would be imprudent to enter too closely into particulars, and it would be impertinent for outsiders to seek to know them. The broad facts are common property, and should be borne in mind when the social phase of Freemasonry is under consideration. Those who cast a slur upon it, whose minds are haunted by unworthy suspicions, would do well to make themselves acquainted with what it is permissible for them to know, and to be honest and charitable in the construction they put upon that knowledge. The result would be startling to the open mind, and certainly would be pleasant to the ignorant or wilful slanderer. It would certainly prove that Freemasonry is moved by a spirit worthy of imitation in its simple, though grand, foundation. It would not be possible to satisfy all persons, nor do Freemasons care to make the attempt. Were it not that "the world is in pain our secrets to gain," and that so many false ideas are current with regard to the Craft, no effort would be made at defence. It is gratifying, however, to know that while the means of publishing erroneous impressions has grown, side by side has sprung up the antidote to the poison, and what the Order loses by the intrusion of prying eyes it gains in the power it possesses of satisfying the vision of the righteous inquirer, and obscuring that of the idly and maliciously curious.

There is another belief abroad that Freemasonry is a costly indulgence, and that the temptations are dangerous to many, who date their misfortunes from the period of joining the Craft. This is another invention of the enemy, and one of those reckless charges so easily made, and so difficult to refute. There may be a case here and there, in which a brother is generous before he is just; whose ambition outstrips his means; but he is so in defiance, and not because of the principles he has adopted. To condemn a whole body because of a few instances of sin and folly would be just as reasonable as to charge Roman Catholics with the crimes of a few of their body; or to say there is no truth in religion because some of its professors violate its first principles. When a man joins a Lodge he knows, or might easily know, the full extent of his responsibility so far as money is concerned. Of his own position—it is assumed—he is assured. It should be remembered that he is not sought, it is an offence to solicit any one to become a Freemason; he enters of his own free will and accord, and knows beforehand what will be his monetary liability. So far the matter is one of mathematical nicety and determination. The test, it is supposed, comes afterwards. Without entering into the matter further, we, who have held most offices in Lodge, and have passed the chair, can safely say that no temptation to go beyond one's means has assailed us, and that no case presents itself to us in which Freemasonry can honestly be credited with the dangerous effects charged against it. If a brother complies with the conditions upon which he enters the Craft, however humble his position outside the doors of the Lodge, directly he enters the portal of the temple he becomes the equal of all within, and the expenditure or non-expenditure of money cannot give him either dignity or honour. These come from service, and the observance of the spirit of Freemasonry, which breathes brotherly love, charity and equality. No money can buy office, and it cannot command lasting respect in Freemasonry, so that the temptation to be reckless in expenditure has no basis.

What evils there are in Freemasonry—excrescences in form and failures in reaching the ideal—are known only to the brethren. They do not affect the outside world, nor do they seriously interfere with the equable flow of the principles of the Order. It certainly is desirable that some of the brethren should pay more attention to the signs and ceremonies than they do at present. Many enter the Lodge in the most careless manner, which fosters, if it does not beget, an indifference fatal to the development of the true Masonic spirit. This slovenliness is one of the sins of the day, and ought to be at once firmly dealt with. When a brother is unable or unwilling to give the signs properly, he should be relegated to a Lodge of Instruction, there to complete his education in the formal elements of Freemasonry. The insistance of the observance of the form of entering and leaving a Lodge would have the effect of stimulating interest in the higher virtues of the Order, and would certainly tend to the cultivation of a better taste and a purer comprehension of the great principles which underlie its forms. It is impossible, perhaps, to mix up the sections with the ordinary work of the Lodge, but it cannot be denied that a more general knowledge of them would conduce to a nobler conception of Freemasonry. Here, again, Lodges of Instruction are peculiarly valuable, and they ought to be encouraged in every possible way.

We cannot conclude without saying, that grand as are the principles of the Craft, much that is done in the work of charity, there is scope for greater efforts still. For instance, how many brethren are now languishing for the want of a helping hand? Most of them do not want money, but employment; and yet how little, comparatively speaking, is done in this direction. We do not believe in Masonic mendicancy; we do not admire the practice of trading upon the fact of membership; but it is not difficult to distinguish between the genuine Mason, who needs assistance that he might help himself, and the impostor who goes from Lodge to Lodge, abusing the confidence and kindness of the brethren. We do not speak for these men, but for that class who are eager for employment, and would be glad of the help that so many brethren have it in their power to give. We plead for those, for the greater development of the principles of the Craft, not to satisfy the world, but in order to obey the injunction laid upon all those who profess and call themselves Freemasons.

REVIEWS.

All Books intended for Review should be addressed to the Editor of The Freemason's Chronicle, Belvidere Works, Hermes Hill, Pentonville, London, N.

Surgical and Mechanical Dentistry. By Mr. Edwin Woodman, R.D.S., Surgeon Dentist, 50 Marquess Road, Canonbury, N.

We have gone through Brother Woodman's treatise with much interest, and recommend its perusal to our readers, more particularly to those who are blessed with offspring. In respect to this latter the author says: "In the minds of many there is an amount of prejudice which deters them, although they may be aware of the necessity, from availing themselves of the benefits which the Science of Dentistry affords, and which can now be so readily obtained." Some excellent hints on the management and regulation of children's teeth, to which in his business Bro. Woodman gives special attention, are here to be found, while the preservation of unsound teeth receives at the writer's hands careful consideration. Next follows advice as to when scaling and bleaching may with advantage be adopted, and then a full description of the means adopted for painless extraction. We cordially recommend this little work, which, like everything that emanates from our worthy brother's establishment, is carefully got up.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—Diseases of the most formidable and chronic characters have been cured by Holloway's remedies. Ulcerations which have proved themselves incurable by any other known means have healed kindly under the purifying and regenerating influence of this excellent Ointment. Sprains, stiff joints, contracted muscles, and glandular swellings can be most safely and effectually healed by Holloway's Ointment and Pills, which can do no harm under any circumstances. Neither of these medicaments has anything deleterious in its composition; both are essentially purifying and strengthening in their nature. The combined powers of these noble remedies enable them successfully to cope with most descriptions of impurities, and to cure, or at least relieve, most varieties of disease.

"MASONIC BLUNDERERS ONCE MORE."

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I received a letter from an esteemed brother, who still adheres to the belief that in the last century the Ancients as well as the Moderns in England had mutilated the third degree, and out of the fragments cut off was formed the R.A. degree. And also that the Moderns had changed their mode of recognition in or near 1739. My worthy correspondent is unwilling to enter into a paper warfare, but he says, you may "utilize" my remarks, or words to that effect. The word utilize, I presume, means that I may furnish further arguments or evidence upon the subject at issue, and this I shall proceed to do.

1st. I admit the possibility of a few Masons having agreed in a secret conclave to divide the M.M. degree, and to mould part thereof into a fourth degree; and thus agreeing they formed a Lodge and initiated a hundred persons, and made them believe that their system was Ancient, that it came down to them from the Holy of Holies of the first and second Temple, &c.; while another body of Masons holding Lodges in the same town were mere Moderns, pretenders, and what not. I say all this is possible, providing the dupes had not been initiated in one of the other Lodges. By saying "it is possible," I do not mean to be understood that I believe that the Ancients had altered or mutilated the third degree, this I cannot believe, but for the sake of argument I admit the possibility.

2nd. The Moderns opened a Chapter in 1765. In 1767 they adopted a series of Bye-laws, and in 1769 they transformed their Chapter into a Grand Chapter, and afterwards granted several Warrants for new R.A. Chapters. I doubt very much whether the newly fledged Royal Archers in 1769 numbered more than fifty individuals.

Now, in 1770, the English Lodge list was revised, the dead Lodges were all thrown out, and Bro. Gould's "Four Old Lodges," p 65, shows that, in 1769, the English Grand Lodge had on its roll 392 live Lodges; assuming now that they averaged twenty-five members per Lodge, then 2,744 Masons were under the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of England in 1769, the year when the Moderns formed their Grand Royal Arch Chapter. The said 392 Lodges were scattered over England, Wales, and the English Colonies, I cannot, therefore, see how those fifty London Royal Archers went to work in removing a landmark by cutting the third degree into two parts, and then depriving the 2,700 Masons, belonging to 392 Lodges (scattered over the wide world), the privilege of performing the ceremony of the M.M. degree as it was performed from time immemorial, without producing a revolution, a commotion, or a disturbance of some kind. Be it remembered that English Masons, however loyal they have been to the G.M. and to the aristocratic members of the Grand Lodge in the last century, yet, when the Grand Lodge, with the consent and approbation of the G.M. and the Deputy G.M., decided to get a Charter for the English Masons or for the Grand Lodge of England from the English Parliament, about or near the time when the Grand Chapter was formed, for some reason I never could learn, the members of about forty Lodges protested against it, denounced the plan as a violation of ancient landmarks, and what not! They petitioned Parliament not to grant the Charter, and Bro. Dillon, M.P., and D.G.M. was compelled to withdraw the Incorporation Bill from Parliament after it had already passed the first reading. How the very same English Masons could have been forced or cajoled by a few Royal Archers to give up the right of conferring in their Master Masons' Lodges all the secrets they themselves received; how they could have listened with equanimity to the request of the Royal Archers, to give up the right they had paid for of conferring certain important and valuable secrets, while those who wished to continue to assist in that part of the ceremony they were deprived of witnessing in their Master Masons' Lodges were to pay three or more guineas to the Royal Archers for the privilege of hearing, in the Chapter, what properly belonged to the Master Masons' Lodge. Britishers were always tenacious of vested rights. Assuming that in 1739 certain changes were made in the English ritual; in the first place, no vested rights were sacrificed; they merely exchanged one thing for another; and secondly, there is at least a motive given for the alleged changes; but in the case of the Masters' degree, the mere Master Masons got nothing at all in exchange for what was taken from them; nor can I conceive any motive on their part for yielding to the request of the members of the Chapter, without even a remonstrance, and without any known sanction of the Grand Lodge of England. And, more strange still, that this alleged mutilation of the third degree should have remained unknown till Dr. Oliver revealed it in the middle of this century.

Preston published the first edition of his "History of Masonry" in 1772; if such a change in the Master Masons' degree had been made three years previously, he surely would have known it, but he did not mention the change in any of his successive editions. Had Preston joined the Chapter his silence might have been imputed to his loyalty to R.A. Masonry, but Preston was not a R.A. Mason. Now, is it not strange that Bro. Preston should have felt indignant at a supposed change in the mode of recognition before he was born, and censured the Grand Lodge of England for acquiescing in those "innovations" and "novelties," and should remain perfectly quiet at a vastly greater fundamental change which is said to have taken place while he was preparing to write his "History of Freemasonry?"

It might, however, be argued that the English Constitution never specifically limited Masonry to three degrees. Hence, for some unknown reason, no one in the Grand Lodge took notice of the alleged change. But the Constitution of the Grand Lodge of Scotland does limit Masonry to three degrees—at least it did so in 1852. Now, suppose the members of the Grand Lodge of England in 1739 were all infected with a Royal Arch mania, so as to allow the alleged change to be made, the Grand Lodge of Scotland could not have been influenced by a fourth degree mania; and, consequently, in Scotland the secret or secrets which are now communicated in a R.A. Chapter in England ought to be communicated in a Master Masons' Lodge in Scotland. But is it so? Well! I believe it is not. I believe that the Scotch Master Mason learns no more Royal Archism in a Scotch Master Masons' Lodge than the English Master Mason learns in his Master Masons' Lodge. If such is the case then, the Scotch Grand Lodge must also have mutilated the Masters' ceremony; the same may be said with regard to the Irish Grand Lodge, and I venture to assert that if Bro. Charles E. Meyers, or any other prominent brother, was to write to the Grand Secretaries of Scotland and Ireland, as to when and why the Masters' degree was mutilated in their respective jurisdictions, the answers from both would be that this alleged mutilation was new to them. The fact is, the third degree was neither mutilated in England, Ireland, nor Scotland, either by Ancients or by Moderns.

Dr. Oliver states that Thomas Dunckerley introduced the Royal Arch among the Moderns. That, however, is not true; because Dunckerley did not join the Chapter until a year after it was established. The Rev. Doctor also states that Dunckerley took something out of the third degree, and made that something into the Chapter degree; which, of course, is also untrue. My correspondent, however, assures me that Brother Hughan is in possession of a Royal Arch Tracing Board of 1745; that something on that tracing board convinces him that the Chapter secrets were formerly given in the Master Masons' Lodge. I think, however, that I shall be able to solve that puzzle. "Now listen to the story of the past," as my friend Brother C. E. Meyers said.

It is well known that between 1724 and 1745 the French Masons not only added forty-two degrees to the original three which they received from England, but also altered materially the original three degrees. Now, a friend of mine who is a 33° in the said French Rite, called "Scotch Rite," who visited the so-called Scotch Rite Lodges in France, Italy, Spain, Cuba, and the Lord knows where else, informed me that in the Master Masons' degree in the Scotch Rite Lodges is conglomerated certain parts which are confined in England and in America to the Royal Arch Chapter. If my informant is correct, and I see no reason to doubt him, then Bro. Hughan's Tracing Board may furnish evidence that the Royal Arch degree was chopped off from the French Master Masons' degree. With regard to Dr. Oliver, it is possible he may have visited a Scotch Rite Lodge, or may be Bro. J. J. J. Gourgas, when he sent the rituals of the Scotch Rite degrees to London in 1844 (I believe), may have sent a genuine Scotch Rite Ritual of the three first degrees, wherein he may have read the chapter parts in the M.M. ritual, and, being infatuated with the Scotch Rite degrees, and imagining perhaps that it was of greater antiquity than the English Rite, he concluded that Dermott and Dunckerley had mutilated the English M.M. degree. And, of course, what Dr. Oliver said, no one questioned.

With regard to the question of changing the mode of recognition, I would respectfully advise all whom it may concern: first, to ascertain whether the present mode of recognition in Scotland and Ireland is the same as it is in England. If so, to ascertain from the respective Grand Secretaries of the said jurisdictions whether they ever had a different mode of recognition; and, if so, when and why did they change it?

Fraternally yours,

JACOB NORTON.

THE SPECIAL COMMUNICATION OF GRAND LODGE.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I dare say a few words from one who was an actor in the, to my mind, farcical proceedings of the Special Grand Lodge, on Friday last, may prove acceptable to your readers. I wish to point out the "how not to do it" manner in which matters of vital interest and importance to the Craft have been mismanaged by the Executive. It was my intention to have recorded an emphatic protest against both the manner and time at which the Special G. Lodge had been convened, but the gracious and honourable message from the M.W. Grand Master proved the truth of words in my last letter to you, namely, that His Royal Highness was entirely ignorant of the course taken by his advisers in attempting to alter the Table of Precedence. I was convinced the Prince of Wales could never be guilty of casting such an uncalled-for slur and slight upon those honourable men whom it had been his good pleasure to place in a position following the Grand Wardens, Nos. 11 and 12 in order of precedence, and then to lower them below the Grand and Past Grand Directors of Ceremonies, or to Nos. 25 and 26 on the list. I call the proceedings a farce advisedly. The papers containing the recommendation were dated 31st May, yet the Board of General Purposes, at the Quarterly Committee of 6th June, utterly ignored the just claims of Grand Lodge, and refused to intimate in the slightest degree their intentions, either of what they had done in the matter, or of calling a Special G. Lodge. The natural consequence followed; there was a very spare attendance, at no time were there 200 members present to discuss this all-important question.

The Executive certainly kept within the letter of the law, and sent the summonses to the Worshipful Masters of the various Lodges within the allotted ten days; but when do they send them? In the first instance, when the majority of London Lodges are in recess; when it is improbable that all those entitled to attend can receive them in time; while, even if they do, to attend would interfere with pre-arranged business. Secondly, A few days after the Boy's Festival, when all the Provincial Brethren had returned home, and would not be likely to be able to spare either time or the extra expense of coming to London again. Thirdly, What day is fixed? Friday—the day when business men have to despatch their Australian and American mails; and fourthly and lastly, at what time? just an hour and a half before the mail closes, except by payment of extra postage. These facts show upon their face a set purpose of stifling and avoiding discussion (for I can never believe these are accidental coincidences); and are unworthy of the authorities from whom they emanate, and show a contemptuous treatment of the members of Grand Lodge, who should put their foot down, and support a resolution I intend to bring forward in September next, viz.: "That notices of all Special Grand Lodge meetings, together with the agenda papers, shall be published in the two Masonic journals at least twice before the day fixed for the meeting. I am still further impressed with these opinions from the persistent obstruction indulged in by those who should be examples of courtesy and honour; but who induced others to continue speaking, so as to fill up the time and render it impossible for my notice of motion to come on; thereby Grand Lodge lost its chance of obtaining some intimation of what had been done, and when the Special Grand Lodge was likely to be held, the arrangements for which must have been known.

Again, I protest against the manner in which the alterations were presented to Grand Lodge. Instead of having the alterations suggested and approved, and suggested and not approved by the Board, printed in contiguous columns, so that they could be grasped at a glance, they were on separate papers, and one had to try to do an impossible thing, viz., read four papers at once—the Book of Constitutions, the Revise, the recommendations approved, and those disapproved—to study the clause in its entirety, an inquirer had to count the lines, look for the word or words to be left out, and those to be put in, and see what sense (if any) he could make of them. The suggested alterations, without the context, was read by the President of the Board of General Purposes, and then the Pro Grand Master asked whether the brethren agreed or disagreed? I ask, what possible chance was there of coming to a well-weighed decision? Why this haste? Why this trying to do a week's work in one day? Why this burking the question? Why this inconvenient season, day and hour, for calling the meeting? And the answers all point in one direction; the avoidance of discussion; the desire of a few to rule the many, as displayed by them, with indifference to the convenience of the Craft at large. Let those in authority show they are Masons in heart as well as in word, and that they use the power which their position gives them, not for their personal aggrandisement, but for the benefit of the Craft at large, that they are earnestly at work, in endeavouring to smooth the amenities and jealousies which too evidently exist, by studying the wishes and desires of the Craft at large, and not those of a self-appointed few; they would thus maintain one of the grandest principles of our Order,—True Brotherhood.

Yours fraternally,

GRAND LODGE OFFICERS.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I am glad to find that, at last, one worthy brother has entered the lists of what I and many others consider a wholesome controversy on the question, as he puts it, "On the Frequent Changes of Grand Officers," but, alas! I look in vain for argument why these changes should not take place in all or many of these offices, believing as I do that experience derived from Masonic service, coupled with "aptitude and ability," is not confined to the present holders, and that there are many distinguished brethren who could be found equally qualified; and especially do I conceive, in common with others, in respect of the office of Grand Secretary, that the appointment should vest in the Craft through Grand Lodge when the salary is paid by the Craft through the same channel.

I find in the letter of the P.M. of 387 only the expression of his "astonishment" at the "inexperience" of those who differ from him.

The late Mr. Daniel O'Connell is credited with having given advice to a young barrister: "When you are on the losing side," he said, "it is always safe to abuse the plaintiff's attorney." Is our esteemed Brother, or are any of his kith, on the losing side? Is the day coming when Grand Lodge will assert its rights as borne out by the Book of Constitutions? Will the Craft in general prove as a body that they have "considered every side of the question" before "venturing" to publish their opinions, or is Freemasonry to reserve its rewards and honours for the favoured few?

I am, Dear Sir and Brother,

Yours fraternally,

NOUS VERRONS.

REVISION OF THE BOOK OF CONSTITUTIONS.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—With every desire to fall in with the views of certain brethren who seem desirous of distributing Grand honours as much as possible, the proposition of "FAIR PLAY" in your last impression is, to my way of thinking, and I venture to add in the opinion of many others, going a little too far. The executive officers, such as the Grand Secretary, the Grand Registrar, and Director of Ceremonies, are scarcely to be expected to attain to a perfect mastery of their important duties in so short a period of time as your correspondent suggests. True, the G. Secretary is "a military man," and no doubt understands "the five years' system;" but whatever previous education or training a man might have had, I venture to think we have not too many competent brethren amongst us who would care to devote the whole of their services to the Craft upon the bare speculation of a five years' term of office. Neither is it desirable that such individuals should be chosen. Brethren holding these responsible positions must be experts at the business, and a matter of four or five years' experience would be scarcely sufficient to render them well up in all the various points that are brought under consideration in Grand Lodge. To incorporate fresh ideas into such debates would only be to create dissensions, and probably frequent obstacles. Referring more particularly to the office of Grand Secretary, it should be borne in mind it is no sinecure, and there is a great deal of heavy work connected with it. The present Grand Secretary has entered thoroughly into his duties, and has evidently recognised the injunction of the Grand Master, who installed him, when he gave Colonel Shadwell Clerke to understand he must devote himself entirely to the duties of his position. This the Grand Secretary has done most zealously and efficiently, and in my humble view it would be both unfair and impolitic to enforce upon him the "short service" system, which if not entirely satisfactory to the service to which he has the honour to belong, would be especially disastrous to the Institution in which we are all interested. The motto experientio docet applies in this as in all other avocations, and it would be most unwise to terminate the services of a good and zealous officer just as he has had sufficient time to grasp the true knowledge and practice of his responsible duties. I have heard many crude ideas on the subject, but not sufficient yet to convince me of any feasible reason for the ideas suggested by "FAIR PLAY," though further information on the subject would be most acceptable to,

Yours fraternally,

EQUITY.

ROYAL MASONIC INSTITUTION FOR BOYS.

[THE following comprehensive letter has just been sent by Bro. Binckes to the Stewards for the recent Festival of his Institution. It is of such general interest, however, that we readily reprint it in our columns.—ED. F.C.]

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—The unprecedented success of the recent Festival demands from the Committees and Executive the warmest possible expression of gratitude to the numerous friends by whose active and zealous co-operation, supplemented by a generous liberality, so magnificent a result was achieved.

This expression is not prompted by any undue elation, but is merely the outcome of sincere gratification at finding that the work done by the Institution is thoroughly appreciated by the Craft with which it is indissolubly united, and that the governing bodies continue to retain the confidence of the brethren to whom they from time appeal for encouragement and sympathy.

It is possible that there are some to whom the idea has presented itself, that the amount realised on the recent occasion having so greatly exceeded the most sanguine anticipations, no further effort will be needed for some time to come. This is altogether fallacious, as one glance at the financial and general position of the Institution will prove.

The permanent income is only £545 per annum, arising from dividends on invested capital of not quite £16,000.

The annual maintenance of 215 Boys, with official, educational, and domestic staff, may be taken at £10,000. This is entirely independent of the amount necessarily disbursed annually under the head of "Special Expenditure," which, whilst varying from year to year, may be estimated at £1,200, and to this will have to be added the annual cost of the new "Preparatory School," which, under the most economical system of teaching and management, cannot be taken at less than £1,500 for 50 boys.

Of the £22,500, the result of the last Festival, it must be distinctly borne in mind that a considerable portion has been contributed for a specific object—the building a New Preparatory School. This amount may be taken at £7,500, which leaves, £15,000 applicable to the general purposes of the Institution. After defraying the expenses of the year there will be a surplus to add to the invested capital, which will still contrast most unfavourably with the amount of invested funds possessed by the other Masonic Institutions.

By some, fears have been expressed that the success of the present may have been achieved at the expense of the future. I do not for one moment share in this apprehension. The wealth of the country never was greater. Commerce, though not, perhaps, in the most prosperous condition, is certainly better than it has been of late, and I believe promises further improvement. The Craft is increasing in numbers and stability, and never in its history held so high a place in the estimation of the world at large as now. This should be sufficient stimulus to its members to render the maintenance of the Institutions of all kinds associated with it in thorough efficiency a well understood obligation; and I have no doubt that such will be the case.

My personal thanks are due to the Stewards for their ready compliance with my special requests for a return of forms and lists. Of the 403 Stewards—the largest number ever associated—not more than eleven failed to return their amounts.

The energy and active interest in all that could be thought likely to conduce to the success of the Festival evinced by the acting Presidents, the Hon. Treasurer, and other members of the Board, found a fitting supplement in the able and genial Chairmanship of the R.W. Bro. Viscount Holmesdale, so numerously supported by brethren generally, especially by members of the Province over which his Lordship so efficiently presides.

The Festival of this Institution, to be held in June 1884, will be under the presidency of an illustrious Prince whose talents and ability are universally recognised, and whose services to the Order of which he is an ornament have been many and valuable—His Royal Highness the Duke of Albany, K.G., R.W. Provincial Grand Master of Oxfordshire.

I trust that each Steward of the Anniversary Festival just celebrated will feel it his duty to persuade a Brother to succeed him as representative on the forthcoming occasion.

FREDERICK BINCKES P.G.S.
Hon. Sec. Board of Stewards, V.-Patron, Secretary.

ANALYSIS OF THE SUBSCRIPTION LISTS FOR THE BOYS' SCHOOL.

BEFORE commencing our regular analysis of the Stewards' lists of the recent Festival, we have the pleasure of recording that the total subscribed now exceeds twenty-three thousand pounds, a result, as we have already remarked, far in excess of anything ever before accomplished by any Charitable Institution, and one which will long retain the first place on the roll of Charity Festival experiences. After having perused our article of last week, our readers will, in a measure, have anticipated our analysis, from the fact that we then gave a summary of the donations from each of the Provinces, but as that summary was of the briefest description, we feel sure the usual review we have been accustomed to give of the work done in each of the sections will not be uninteresting. The Provinces, as we have already recorded, contributed considerably more than two-thirds of the amount subscribed, the totals, based on the figures given in our last issue, being as follow:—Provincial, £15,947 18s 0d; London and Unattached, £7,040 5s 6d; or, together, £22,988 3s 6d.

London was represented by 121 Stewards attached to Lodges and Chapters, and by a member of the Committee Dinner Club, while the lists of 21 other Stewards, recorded as unattached, are also taken into consideration in the total given above, so that the actual number of Stewards engaged in the collection of the amount (£7,040 5s 6d) was 143, which shows an average of about £49 4s 8d to each. Bro. T. J. Robertson, of the St. Martins-le-Grand Lodge, No. 1538, and Brother J. L. Mather, the representative of the Dinner Club, each bring up lists of £200. The St. Martins-le-Grand Lodge, was represented in May last, at the Girls' School Festival, when Bro. T. Barlow's list was £25 18s 6d, so that £225 18s 6d has been contributed by this Lodge to the Charities this year, a magnificent total for a young Lodge. The Boys' Committee Dinner Club contribution is, of course, one peculiar to this Institution, so that it stands alone as the grant from this source for the year, but if the list could be analysed, we feel sure it would be found to be composed of amounts given by men who have helped, in some way or other, to swell the totals of the two Festivals which have preceded the one now under notice, but as it is only possible for us to deal with figures as we have them, we must record the total contributions of the Club to the Charities during the present year as £200, a splendid sum even without additions from the two other Festivals. The Royal Naval Lodge, No. 59, sends up £151 4s at the hands of Bro. H. W. Homann,—a very good amount, and one which stands out well as to the total of the Lodge's donations for the year. The Evening Star Lodge, No. 1719, represented by Bro. Ferrand Davies, follows with a total of £150 3s, and this after sending up £144 18s in May last for the Girls' School. We trust the "Evening Star" will always shine in our Charities as lustrously as it has done this year. The Kennington Lodge, No. 1381, appears now for the first time in this year's lists, its appearance being such as to call forth the warmest praise. Its Steward, Bro. W. P. Webb, brings up a list of £143 17s, a record which is known, by those who have tried it, to be very hard to beat. Bro. Webb is followed by Bro. Patrick McCarthy, of the Capper Lodge, No. 1076, whose list, amounting to £126, adds additional credit to the already well-known Capper reputation. Bro. F. Foxley, of the Phœnix Lodge, No. 173, brings up £122 17s, and then comes the Friends in Council Lodge, No. 1383, with contributions to the amount of £120 15s, forwarded per the Hon. Col. W. Le Poer Trench. This last-named Lodge has been represented at each of the two preceding Festivals this year—in February last by Gen. Studholme Brownrigg, C.B., whose list for the Old People amounted to £99 14s, and in May last by M. P. F. Caulfield, who collected £149 2s for the Girls. The total of the three Stewardships is therefore £369 11s, an amount exceeded by only one Lodge during the current year, and one which few others are in a position to hope to excel. We trust the Friends in Council may always so well deserve the name of "Friend." Bro. Henry H. Wells, of the Mizpah Lodge, has a list of £116 11s, while Bro. Henry Warden, of the same Lodge, also stands as Steward, and is responsible for £10 10s, thus making a total of £118 1s, contributed to the Boys' School from No 1671. The Perseverance, No. 1743, at the hands of Bro. Louis A. Leins, forwards donations to the amount of £115 5s, and is followed by Bro. C. F. Matier, on the roll of Unattached, who on this occasion figures for £115 10s. Next in order comes a total of £112 10s, collected by Bro. G. P. Festa as representative of the Montague Guest Lodge, No. 1900. We have had the pleasure of referring on more than one occasion of late to the splendid lists of Bro. Festa; this is the third time he has acted as Steward this year, and this is the fourth Stewardship in connection with the Montague Guest Lodge during the same period. In February last Bros. Festa and W. H. Gardener represented it on behalf of the Benevolent Institution, and their lists, amounting to £156 9s and £42 respectively, added £198 9s towards this year's total for the Old People. In May Bro. Festa took up £147 for the Girls, and now he finishes up the year with £112 10s for the Boys, making a total from Montague Guest Lodge during the year of £457 19s, and this sum, be it remembered, comes from a Lodge so young as to be registered No. 1900 on the books of the Grand Lodge of England. Such a result goes far to warrant the applications which are continually being made for new Lodges. The Fitzroy again supports Bro. S. J. Stohwasser in a most laudable manner. His Stewardship for the Boys has resulted in an addition of £111 6s to the coffers of that Institution, and this within a few weeks of the Girls' Festival, when Bro. W. C. Williams's list from this Lodge totalled up to £15 15s. The Prosperity Lodge, No. 65, did well in February last for the Benevolent, the total of its Steward's list then being £125, and this is creditably followed up on the present occasion, when Bro. George Schadler represents the Lodge, and succeeds in bringing in £110, giving the grand total of £235 from the Prosperity Lodge during 1883. The Royal Commemoration, No. 1585, is next, with £108 3s, per Bro. F. H. Smith. There are three lists of 100 guineas each, viz., that of Bro. George Kenning, of the Aldersgate Lodge, No. 1657, that of Bro. H. B. Marshall, of the Brixton Lodge, No. 1949, and that of Bro. A. Torkington, who is one of those on the list of "Unattached." As regards the former—the Aldersgate—great praise is due. It was represented in May, the amount of its Steward's list being given as £105 for the Girls, thus making a total of 200 guineas during 1883. Bro. Horace B. Marshall appears as a Steward in the two previous lists of this year, and in each the amount of his contribution was £105. Bro. Torkington is another whose name is well known in connection with the Institutions, his present list of £105 being a worthy follower of those which have preceded it, £10 10s in May last for the Girls being among the number. £100 16s 0d from another "Unattached" Steward is next in rotation. The total does honour to Brother Thomas Cull (to whom it is accredited), and proves that he has not yet lost the love for the Charities which, in years gone by, earned for him a reputation of which any brother might be proud. A list, only ten shillings less than that of Bro. Cull, is brought up by Bro. John Hughes, from the City of London, No. 901, and places that Lodge in the foremost rank of Charity supporters during the present year, a position which we hope it will be the desire of the members to retain. Two lists of £100 each close the three-figure totals of the London Lodges. These amounts are contributed by Bro. S. H. Goldschmidt, of the Crichton Lodge, No. 1641, and Bro. Edgar Bowyer, of the Clerkenwell Lodge, No. 1964. The latter Lodge was represented at the Benevolent Festival, and a total of £250 3s now stands to the credit of its members as contributed during 1883, while Bro. Edgar Bowyer (its present Steward) took up £94 in May for the Girls, among the Unattached. T. Hastings Miller was the brother who represented it in February for the Benevolent, when £150 3s was sent up. This is another instance of what is being done by the new Lodges. Following close on the £100 lists comes Bro. W. Hopekirk, representative of the Manchester Lodge, No. 179, whose contributions amount to £96 12s. The Lodge sent up £52 4s to the Benevolent in February, and £38 6s 6d in May to the Girls, giving a total of £187 2s 6d from its members this year. Bro. John H. Southwood, as representative of the John Hervey Lodge, No. 1260, has a list of £92 18s, which represents the total from that Lodge this year. Such a sum annually from each Lodge would make a great difference in the receipts of the Charities, and it is only when we look at the matter in some such way that we can really appreciate the splendid lists which this and the other Lodges already referred to have sent up. The St. Michael's Lodge, No. 211, has the next place of honour, with a list of £82 8s 6d (since increased by a further donation of five guineas to £87 13s 6d), brought up by Bro. W. W. Morgan. This is the first appearance of the brethren of St. Michael's in the Festival returns of the current year; still, the Lodge being a comparatively small one, this list reflects great credit on it. Bro. Dr. F. W. Ramsay, as representative of the Prince of Wales Lodge, No. 259, comes next in order with a total of £85 1s. This Lodge contributed £42 15s to the Benevolent in February, and £72 9s to the Girls in May, making the year's contribution £200 5s. The Islington Lodge, No. 1471, is represented by Bro. J. Horace Thompson, and he contributes a list of £83 9s 6d. This is the first appearance of the Lodge this year, although its namesake in R.A. Masonry was represented in February last, with a list of £125 15s. Doubtless the two totals are to a very great extent made up from the same source. Following up the £80 and upwards lists very closely comes Brother C. H. Webb, of the Sincerity Lodge, No 174, whose contribution on this occasion is £79 5s 6d. The Lodge sent up £148 in February last, when Brother James S. Fraser acted as Steward. The regularity with which the Sincerity supports our Institutions must be most gratifying to its members. It is certainly entitled to one of the most prominent positions among London Lodges in this respect. Brother Thomas Grummant, of the New Cross Lodge, No. 1559, exceeds the £75 limit by 12 shillings. With this list we bring to a conclusion our remarks on the London contributions. It was our intention to have reviewed the Provincial lists this week also, but the length to which we have already run, and the amount of space at our disposal, prevents our doing so; we must therefore hold over further consideration of the totals until next week.

BRIGHAM YOUNG DID NOT LIKE MASONRY.

BROTHER Christopher Diehl, in his report on correspondence to the Grand Lodge of Utah, tells the following anecdote of the experience of a Masonic Lodge in trying to purchase a lot of Brigham Young, upon which to erect a Masonic Hall.

"At the first annual communication of our Grand Lodge, in the month of January 1872, a charter was granted to Story Lodge, No. 4. The Lodge was and is yet located at Provo, a red-hot Mormon town, where the United States judge of the first judicial district has to hold court. At that time not a dozen gentiles resided in Provo, but the clerk of the court, Brother Ira M. Swartz, being a bright and enthusiastic Mason, and at the same time a man full of courage and enterprise, searched around and soon found Masons enough in the neighbourhood to organise a Lodge. Brother Swartz was the first Master, and under his guidance, care and skill, the Lodge prospered. Tintic, a rich mining region, thirty miles from Provo, furnished the rough ashlars, and after a year's labour the Lodge had done some good and square work, and had nearly 1,000 dols. in its Treasury. With this amount the energetic Master intended to buy a lot in Provo and raise among the brothers in Salt Lake City sufficient money to build a Masonic Hall on it. So far so good. A lot in the heart of the town just answered the purpose, and it was selected. But "there is many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip." The records were examined, and, lo, the lot was owned by Brigham Young, and he, for reasons best known to himself and every Mason in Utah as well, was not very favourably inclined to our Grand Lodge in particular and Masonry in general. This put a sort of a damper on Brother Swartz, and he had to gather up all his courage to make the final move. He came to Salt Lake City, and accompanied by Brother Andreas Mason (died in the Black Hills in 1877) Past Grand Master of Colorado, who as a genuine frontiersman and mining prospector knew no fear, repaired to the office of Brigham Young, stated the object of their calling, and bought the lot for 1,000 dols. cash. The brothers considered the bargain closed, and started to retire, but before they could do so, Brigham said: "Hold on, gentlemen; what do you want with that lot?" "Build a Masonic Hall on," said Bro. Swartz. "What, a Masonic Hall on my lot," said Brigham Young, jumping on his feet; "never can you have that lot for such a purpose, never; not if you cover it with twenty dollar gold pieces. You want to be Freemasons, and what do you know about Masonry? Nothing, nothing. What does your Grand Master (Robertson) know about Masonry? What does that Dutchman down the street, your Grand Secretary, know about Masonry? Why these fellows even don't know that King Solomon was the first Grand Master, and he had a thousand wives while I have but nineteen, and you wont let me even visit and sit in your Lodges." Bro. Mason kept as cool as a cucumber, and said: "Mr. Young, we came here to transact a legitimate business, not to talk Masonry, and you are well aware that we, as Masons in good standing, cannot hold a Masonic conversation with an expelled Mason (Brigham Young, with about 1,500 other Mormon Masons, was expelled by the Grand Lodge of Illinois, in 1844). Now will you keep the bargain or not?" This made the old man more hot, and at the top of his voice he shouted "No, never; leave my office." And they left. Our Story Lodge has no hall of its own yet, nevertheless it is one of the best Lodges in our jurisdiction."—Masonic Advocate.

A QUARTERLY GENERAL COURT of the Governors and Subscribers of this Institution will be held at the Freemasons' Hall, Great Queen-street, Lincoln's Inn Fields, London, on Saturday, the 14th day of July 1883, at Twelve o'Clock precisely, on the General Business of the Institution, to place Candidates on the List for the Election in October next, to declare the number of Girls then to be elected, to receive the following report of General Committee, and to consider Notice of Motion as under.

REPORT OF GENERAL COMMITTEE.

"The General Committee reports to the Quarterly General Court that, in consequence of an intimation conveyed to the House Committee from the owner of the freehold land adjacent to the Institution—that he was about to offer for sale nine acres, or thereabouts, bounding two sides of its grounds, and that the lowest sum he would take for the whole, which he declined to divide, was at the rate of £1,000 per acre—Col. Creaton, with the concurrence of his colleagues, had obtained from him a promise that such land should not be sold until the views and opinion of the General Court as to the advisability of acquiring the property for the Institution could be obtained.

That taking into consideration the facts that the land, if sold to a third party, might be dealt with in a manner most prejudicial to the School, and that if purchased by the Institution a very considerable and valuable portion of it could be re-sold, this Committee consider the subject is one which should receive the fullest consideration at the hands of the governing body of the Institution."

NOTICE OF MOTION BY BRO. ROBERT GREY P.G.D. Vice-Patron.

"That the Report of the General Committee with reference to the land offered for sale be received and considered, and such action taken thereon as shall be deemed advisable by the General Court."

F. R. W. HEDGES,
Secretary.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF MIDDLESEX.

THE annual meeting for this Province was held on Saturday last, the 30th ult., at the "Mitre" Hotel, Hampton Court, and although it is only nine months since the representatives of the various Lodges were last summoned, the large number of the brethren who attended on Saturday to do honour to the R.W. Prov. Grand Master Col. Sir Francis Burdett, Bart., testified to the wisdom of holding such gatherings in the "lovely month of June" in preference to "brown" October, when—

> "The hazel hangs
> With auburn branches, dipping in the stream
> That sweeps along, and threatens to o'erflow
> The leaf-strewn banks."

Amongst those present whose names we were able to ascertain were Bros. Raymond H. Thrupp D.P.G.M, James Inglis Prov. G.S.W., H. G. Buss Prov. G. Treasurer, C. Locke Smiles Prov. G. Reg., H. C. Levander Prov. G. Sec., Wm. Stephens Prov. G.S.D., R. Lonsdale Prov. G.D.C., J. H. Pearson, Prov. G. Assist. D.C., T. J. Bird Prov. G.S.B., J. W. George Prov. G.O., Charles Russ Prov. G.A. Pursuivant, J. Gilbert Prov. G. Tyler; E. Poore, W. Vincent, F. McDougall and W. G. Kentish Prov. G. Stewards. Of the Past Provincial Grand Officers there were Bros. Fred. Davison P.P.G.S.W., J. M. Stedwell P.P.G.J.W., D. W. Pearse P.P.G. Reg., Hugh M. Gordon, J. Mason, F. W. Levander and Wm. Hammond P.P. Grand Deacons; G. Hopwood P.P.G.S. Bearer, Geo. J. Dunkley P.P.G. Organist, T. W. Ockenden and F. B. Archer P. Prov. Grand Stewards. The various Lodges were represented by Bros. G. Febrenbach P.M. 382, R. Fawcett P.M. 708, R. J. S. Barton and S Larcomb P.M.'s 788, J. T. Eckstein P.M. 1196, Henry Prenton 1391, &c. The Provincial Grand Lodge was opened shortly after three o'clock, the R.W. Provincial Grand Master being supported by nearly all the brethren enumerated above. The roll of Provincial Grand Officers and Lodges having been called, the minutes of the last Provincial Grand Lodge were read and adopted. The reports of the Audit and Charity Committees were then presented, but not in extenso, as they will hereafter be printed. From the statements submitted we gather that the funds are in a satisfactory state, there being a balance in hand of £441 18s 5d against £396 18s 9d last year. On the motion of Bro. F. Davison P.P.G.S.W. the report was received and adopted, and the sum of £10 10s voted to a distressed brother from the benevolent fund. Bro. H. G. Buss Assistant Grand Secretary was again unanimously elected to fill the office of Provincial Grand Treasurer, after which the R.W. Provincial Grand Master announced that before appointing the Officers for the ensuing year, he would call upon Bro. Raymond Thrupp to take the obligation as Deputy Grand Master. The patent, dated 30th September last, having been read, Brother Thrupp was afterwards obligated, and the brethren, by command of Sir Francis, were called upon to salute him as his Deputy. The appointment and investiture of Officers then proceeded, as follows:—

The notice of motion in the name of the R.W. Provincial Grand Master, "that the following sums be granted from the Benevolent Fund, viz.—The Royal Masonic Institution for Girls £10 10s, Royal Masonic Institution for Boys £10 10s, and Royal Masonic Institution for Aged Masons £10 10s," was then put, and being seconded by the Deputy P.G.M., unanimously agreed to, after which Bro. R. A. Thrupp gave notice, that at the next meeting of Provincial Grand Lodge he should move that in future the sum annually contributed to each of the three Charities be increased to £15 15s. The business on the agenda being ended the R.W. Provincial Grand Master, before closing the Lodge, stated that he wished to take that opportunity of congratulating Provincial Grand Lodge upon the state of efficiency and manner of working of the various Lodges in the Province. He might tell them that he had been ably assisted by his Deputy Bro. Thrupp, who had spent a good deal of time in visiting different Lodges, and had only the day previously handed him a report of the result of his visits, which was very satisfactory; he should look upon him as his "inspector." However, he (the Provincial Grand Master) was much indebted to Bro. Thrupp for what he had done. As he had said before, he found it impossible personally to visit all the Lodges; but he had been much pleased with the admirable manner in which the work was conducted in some he had recently attended. Only the other day he visited the Sub-Urban Lodge, at Great Stanmore. It was no easy matter to get from Richmond to Great Stanmore; but he must tell them that he had there an opportunity of seeing the outgoing Master instal his successor, and the manner in which the ceremony was performed, and the charges delivered, he must say reflected the highest credit upon the I.P.M. He had not been to Great Stanmore for some time previously, but on his recent visit he was very much pleased with the way in which everything was conducted. This ended the business of the meeting, and Provincial Grand Lodge was duly closed.

The Right Worshipful Provincial Grand Master afterwards presided at a banquet, provided by the host of the Mitre, Bro. C. Sadler, at which upwards of fifty brethren sat down, and marked their appreciation of the viands placed before them in a manner which we think it no idle compliment to Bro. Sadler when we say, it gave universal satisfaction. Grace was sung by the musical brethren, after which the toasts of the Queen and the Craft (followed by the singing of the National Anthem), and the Most Worshipful Grand Master His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales were submitted and loyally honoured. The latter was followed by a Masonic version of "God Bless the Prince of Wales," by Bro. F. Vernon, which we should like to hear generally adopted "in all True Masons' Lodges." In proposing the toast of the Most Worshipful the Pro Grand Master the Earl of Carnarvon, K.G., the Right Worshipful the Deputy Grand Master the Earl of Lathom, and the Grand Officers present and past; the R.W. Provincial Grand Master paid a high tribute to the valuable services rendered by these brethren, and called upon all present to join him in drinking to their health, coupled with the name of the Rev. C. W. Arnold P.G. Chaplain and Deputy Grand Master for Surrey, who briefly responded. This was followed by a quartette—"Oh who will o'er the Downs so free"—admirably rendered by Bros. C. A. White, W. Sexton, J. W. George, and H. Prenton. Bro. Raymond H. Thrupp D.P.G.M. then proposed the health of the Right Worshipful the Grand Master of the Province, Colonel Sir Francis Burdett, Bart., which was followed by Bro. G. S. Graham singing an old favourite—"Let each man learn to know himself"—with chorus, a truly Masonic song without symbolic allusion, except that Charity in its widest and grandest sense which pervades the whole and bids each—

> "Improve those failings in himself
> Which he condemns so in his neighbour."

This was much applauded. Sir Francis, in response, thanked the brethren for the hearty manner in which the toast had been given and received; he was greatly obliged for the support he at all times received from his Officers, it was gratifying to see the Lodges represented year by year in such increasing numbers; anything he could do for the Lodges or the Province he should at all times be most happy to do. Many of the Lodges, as he had previously stated, had been visited by the Deputy Prov. Grand Master since his appointment; he was pleased to learn that all were in such a prosperous state. He had much pleasure in proposing the health of the Deputy Prov. Grand Master Bro. Thrupp; he had not only been able to see, but to show them how those duties should be performed. A quartette—"In this hour of softened splendour"—having been feelingly rendered, Bro. Thrupp, in acknowledging the toast, mentioned that during the nine months since his appointment he had visited eighteen Lodges and three Chapters. He should like to have visited all the others, and he hoped to do so during the next three months. This, however, was no easy matter, seeing how the Lodges were scattered about the Province. "Now or Never," having being sung by Bro. J. W. George, the Provincial Grand Master next proposed the Visitors, and called upon Brother Shadwell H. Clerke to respond. In giving the toast of the Masonic Charities upon which Sir Francis dwelt at some length, referring to the unprecedented success which had attended the recent Boys' Festival, and expressing a hope that the Girls and Aged Masons might some day attain the like result; he incidentally mentioned that Brother C. Hawksley, of the Sub-Urban Lodge, took up the sum of sixty guineas—the highest amount for the Province. He had much pleasure in coupling with the toast the name of Brother F. Binckes. Brother F. Binckes, whilst protesting that he expected to have escaped any call upon him, begged to remove any impression that he was so elated with the recent success of the Boys that he should stop at what had been done; it was a legitimate demand made and responded to, and he trusted to be spared to see the R.W. Provincial Grand Master presiding on an occasion when he should have still larger results. The heart of Freemasonry was sound, and he confidently looked forward to greater successes. Bro. J. Terry, Secretary of the R.M.B.I., said whilst he congratulated Bro. Binckes on the result of his Board of Stewards—given the Girls and Old Folks the same privileges, he had little doubt but that a like result might be obtained; competition and rivalry were alike good. The Tyler's toast brought the proceedings at the table to a close. The musical arrangements, under the direction of Bro. J. W. George, Prov. Grand Organist, were satisfactorily carried out, nor should we omit to mention that he was most ably seconded by our much esteemed Brother G. S. Graham P.P.G.O and Brother E. Burrit Lane Organist 1765.

The Provincial Grand Lodge having been opened, the D.P.G.M. announced that he had received a letter from the Provincial Grand Master (Rev. Canon Portal) expressing his regret at not being able to be present, owing to indisposition, but hoped to meet the brethren at the next meeting of the Provincial Grand Lodge. The minutes of the last meeting, held at Gosport, were read and confirmed. The accounts for the past year, duly audited, were then submitted and passed. The Provincial Grand Treasurer (Bro. Loveland) having resigned his office, a hearty vote of thanks was accorded to him for the way he had carried out the duties during the past four years. Bro. Loveland then proposed as his successor Bro. G. F. Lancaster W.M. 305, Gosport, which was seconded by Bro. Mursell, and carried unanimously. The W.M.'s of Nos. 17 and 37 were selected on the Audit Committee. The Provincial Grand Secretary (Bro. G. The ceremony of installing the W.M., Bro. Loveland, was performed by Brother G. F. Lancaster, to whom a vote of thanks was passed; also to the D.P.G.M.M. for constituting the Lodge. Bro. LODGE HISTORIES.

LODGE OF RELIEF, No. 42.

In his second chapter Bro. Evans gives some interesting information as to the internal economy of his Lodge in its earlier days. A wise system of economy prevailed, this is evidenced by the following extract:—

	s.	d.
"'St. John's Day, 27 December, 1740'
By two aprons and gloves	3	5
„ Musick	1	0
„ Candles	0	3
Expenses that night	13	3
By George Hardman, dinner	0	6

Towards the middle of the eighteenth century a lack of interest in Lodge work prevailed amongst some of the members; under date 24th June 1745 is the following:—

"Whereas it is the Ancient custom of all the Brotherhood of Free and Accepted Masons to meet on St. John's Day, to converse together, and settle the affairs of the Lodge, and the several Members hereinafter mentioned have neglected or refused to appear and perform their Duty as usual, We therefore do hereby mulct them in the following sums."

Five brethren on this occasion were fined 1s each.

In the year 1751 the Bye-Laws of 1734 were revised, and the following addition was made to Law 7:—

"That there shall be 20/- allowed out of the Fund for a Coffin of any deceased member to be made by any of the brothers whom he shall choose, and if it so happen that his share of the above fund according to the number of members that then belong the Lodge should amount to above 20 shillings he shall have a right to dispose of the overplus to whom he thinks proper, but if he does not choose it, then it shall go to the use of the Lodge, and if the Deceased has not chose the person that shall make him his Coffin the Master shall determine it."

"On the 18th January, 1752, It was agreed that the Jewels, Books, &c., are all paid for, and clear, and those that hereafter enter themselves into the Society come in for their Shares for the sd Books &c., as well as those heretofore entered."

The members of Lodge Relief seem to have taken an interest in the Masonic literature of the day, for in 1756 we find the Lodge was in possession of the following books:—

"Freemason Examined.
New Constitutions.
Two large Books of Architecture. (Price £5 5s.)
History of Masonry. (Price 3/.)
Brode Constitutions."

In 1824 the books belonging to the library were, in addition to the above, Preston's Illustrations.

Robinson's Proof of a Conspiracy.
Use and Abuse of Masonry.
History of Masonry.
Shuttleworth's Sermons.
Scientific Dialogue. (Price 15/.)
School Book.
Quarterly Freemason's Magazine. 11 vols.
Several Song books.
Bro. D. G. Goyder's works. (Price 2s.)"

After this it seems the library was somewhat neglected, but on the 28th October 1852, it was decided to resuscitate it, and Bro. Thos. B. Fishwick was appointed librarian. In 1875, however, what is often described as a "clear up" took place, and our author regrets to say "a lot of interesting and valuable relics of the craft in previous years consequently became dispersed. The compiler has been able to trace several of the relics sold, but has not succeeded in persuading the owners to restore them to the Lodge, it is, however, to be hoped that at some future time the Lodge will again have them in its possession."

The first record in the books of a Provincial Grand Lodge meeting is on the 29th September 1760, and in reference to this Bro. Newton, in his Introductory Notice, says:—"It proves that the Prov. G. Lodge of Lancashire was in working condition at that period, though I believe the Prov. G. Lodge records do not date further back than the commencement of this century. The Prov. G. Master of Lancashire in 1760 was John Smith, Esq., of Manchester. At this time, and up to 1825, the whole of Lancashire was in one Province, being divided in the latter year into two Divisions (East and West)."

Several interesting items of account are next given by Bro. Evans, but we must ask our readers to refer to the History itself for particulars. On the 24th June 1765, "It is recorded that the Lodge was visited by Bro. Archibald Gichan, this is with the exception of the Stretford brethren's visit the first recorded; according to the History of the Anchor and Hope Lodge, No. 37, previously mentioned, Bro. Gichan was a member of the Burnley Lodge, No. 305, now Silent Temple, 126, he, however, afterwards became the landlord of the 'Old Hare and Hounds,' in Bury, and joined this Lodge, 23 February, 1769."

In the year 1771 the consideration of the Bye-Laws again exercised the members, as we find that on the 24th June of that year "a committee of twelve were appointed to revise and amend them."

By these amendments the "quarterly subscriptions were raised to 3/6, and a subscription of 6d. per month was also enforced, 3d. to go to the fund, and 3d. to go towards the expenses of the meeting.

"The sum of 4/- per week was allowed to any sick member of 3 years standing, instead of as before leaving the amount to be fixed by the majoriey of the brethren.

"In the event of death, a Shroud and Sheet were to be provided in addition to an Oak Coffin."

On the same date "an Inventory of the Lodge Property was taken, the following being a copy:

Chapter III. opens with a record that the Bye Laws were again revised between January and June 1781, and then follows a copy of the same as adopted by the brethren. The books preserved contain "the whole of the minutes of the Lodge of Temperance, No. 403, which was constituted on the 23rd October, 1770, at the Red Lion, in Bury, by the R.W. Bro. John Allen, P.G.M. for Lancashire. Sometime between the 24th June, 1779, and the 24th June, 1780, this Lodge was removed from the 'Red Lion' to the 'Boars Head,' Bury, and the No. altered from 443, to 312, it afterwards amalgamated with No. 42, then No. 40, as appears from the last entry in the minutes, which is as follows:—

"At an emergency held on Sunday, the 22nd of January, 1786, it was unanimously agreed by the Master and brethren present to unite with the members of the Lodge No. 40, on the Conditions which were propos'd by the Right Worshipful Master of No. 40, on St. John's Day last. At the same time it was unanimously agreed by the Master and Brethren of No. 312, then present that the expense of registering all the Members of the Lodge, No. 312, under the Warrant No. 40 (who have been already registered under No. 312) shall be paid out of the Fund and Arrears mentioned above, and if the said Fund and arrears are not sufficient, the sum to be made up in equal Shares by the Members who have already registered."

The following interesting item we must not fail to quote:—

"The Worshipful Masters of the Lodge of Temperance were:
From the Constitution to 24 June 1771, Ralph Holt.
1771 to 1778, No information.
24 June 1778 to 24 June 1779, John Wood.
24 June 1779 to 24 June 1780, J. Schofield.
24 June 1780 to 24 June 1781, Charles Hartley.
24 June 1781 to 24 June 1783, J. Schofield.
24 June 1783 to 24 June 1784, John Wood.
24 June 1784 to 24 June 1785, J. Schofield.
24 June 1785 to 22 Jany. 1786, George Lomax.
The 16th Feby., 1786, was the first meeting of No. 42 after the amalgamation."

Our author then notes some further changes in the Bye Laws, the consideration of which seems to have been a fruitful source for discussion, and then quotes the following entry, which we consider an interesting feature:—

"Bro. John Barns; Philip Jobson and Edward Henry Bonville admitted to the 5th degree of Masonry."

With respect to this "5th degree," Bro. Hughan supposes it to mean "Super Excellent Master." About this time it is clear the Lodge had amongst its members one brother who desired to "rule the roost," for we find an entry to the effect that, "In consequence of Bro. Schofield [at the time S.W.] having not only desired but even insisted on having a Supper given to the Members as at annual custom of Beans and Bacon which no other Brother desired, and whereas the said Brother has not honoured the meeting with his company, it is looked upon as an affront to the Lodge and an injury to the House, he is therefore by the unanimous consent of the meeting fined One Shilling for the offence."

On 4th March 1790 some brethren were "entered, passed and raised" the same evening, but up to this date the business in this respect appears to have been worked with due regard to the custom now prevalent.

"On the 24 June, 1790. The Members of the Lodge walked in procession from the Lodge room to the Parish Church, where the Revd. Mr. Unsworth preached a Sermon from the 4 Chap. 1st Epistle of St. John and the 7th verse, they then returned to the Lodge room in the same order. After dinner Mr. Unsworth waited upon the Brethren and said that so long as they would continue the annual subscription of 10/6 to the Charity School he would give his Sermon gratis. The bells of the Parish Church rang out a merry peal 5/- being paid for the same and 5/- for the Organist, Clerk, &c. This custom was continued annually up to and including 25 June, 1792."

On the 11th August 1721 it was agreed the sum of 10s 6d should be sent to "Bro. John Harriott at Rochford in Essex for the losses he had received by Warter," and this transaction is entered in the Cash Accounts as towards the said brother's loss "from an inundation of the sea."

About this time it is evident that steps were being taken with a view to establishing a new Lodge, as the following reason for not signing a petition presented from Rochdale for one to be called "Perseverance" are recorded on the minutes:—

"With respect to Mr. Saul we do not know him to be a Mason. Brother Kershaw we have so lately recommended as a proper person for an officer in a petition for a new warrant which was granted that we cannot think to recommend him again. Mr. John Lyon Taylor is not a regular Mason not being of age when admitted and is from deserving our recommendation."

The spirit of good fellowship and devotion to each other's interests is evidenced by the closing extracts of this interesting chapter; we quote the following:—

"On the 17th July 1796, Nine of the Members of this Lodge attended the Funeral of a deceased Brother at Oldham, where there was about 87 of the Brotherhood present. A sermon was preached on the occasion by Bro. Miles Wrigley.

"On the 18th August, 1796, By the Unanimous Consent of this Lodge. The Lodge of Amity, No. 488, Rochdale, and the Lodge of Harmony, 511, Newchurch, a grand Festival was held here in Honour of Masonry and for the Propagation of Brotherly Love amongst us, which was conducted with the greatest Harmony and order—7 members from Rochdale and 11 from Newchurch.

"On the 27th Decr., 1790, it was agreed to subscribe annually 21/- to the Manchester Infirmary so long as the Funds of the Lodge exceeded £20; on the 1 February, 1798, the subscription was increased to £2 2s. 0d.

On the 27th Decr., 1797, Bro. George Lomax was this day apointed Lecture Master and it was unanimously resolv'd that he upon that account should be set free from the expenses of the night. Bro. George Lomax appears to have fulfilled the duties of this important position until the end of the year 1806; he was relieved with 2 Guineas on the 2 April, 1801, In consideration of his great services to the Lodge, and likewise in consideration of loss sustained by him. On the 17th January, 1807, he joined the Grand Lodge above, and as the minutes say, this Lodge sustained an irreparable Loss in his death. He was W.M. in 1786 and 1794, and for a number of years was the Secretary."

We have almost exceeded the limits prescribed for ourselves in this week's notice, but we must not overlook the annexed interesting item, which evidently refers to the anticipation of a French Invasion:—

"On the 1 March 1798 It was unanimously agreed to Contribute to Government towards the exigencies of the State the sum of Five Guineas, and on the 12th March an Emergency meeting was held for the purpose of taking into consideration what every individual member wished to contribute towards the exigencies of the State, in order that the whole might be done in the name of the Lodge; the sum of £12 1s was subscribed by the members present exclusive of the Five guineas afore mentioned."

This afternoon the M.W. Grand Master, His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, will perform the ceremony of "inaugurating" the New City of London College, Little Moorfields, when it is expected that Her Royal Highness the Princess and other members of the Royal Family will be present. The handsome pile of buildings was opened some time ago by Bro. the Lord Mayor (Alderman Knight), and the students have been some weeks in possession, but the formal opening was merely for the convenience of those engaged in the educational studies, and the inauguration to-day has been looked forward to with a vast amount of interest in the City. The new College is close by the Moorgate-street Station of the Metropolitan Railway, and the Finsbury Terminus of the North London tramways, whilst a few minutes walk only divides it from London-bridge, Cannon-street, and the Liverpool-street Stations. A very large and distinguished company is expected.

The annual summer banquet of the Lodge of Prosperity, No. 65, will be held on the 10th instant, at Oatlands Park Hotel, Walton-on-Thames. The brethren will assemble at two o'clock, under the presidency of the W.M. Brother G. Schadler. Tickets for lady visitors 10s 6d each. Gentlemen's ditto 21s. Trains leave Waterloo 10.15, 11.45, and 12.15. We congratulate the brethren of Prosperity on the happy selection—as regards locality—they have made for this year's outing, and express a fervent hope that they and their friends may have an agreeable and pleasant meeting.

The meetings of the Burdett Coutts Lodge of Instruction, No. 1278, held at the Duke's Head, Whitechapel-road, have been adjourned till the 26th of September next.

NOTICES OF MEETINGS.

LODGE OF PROSPERITY, No. 65.

THE first meeting of this Lodge since the installation of Bro. George Schadler as Worshipful Master was held on Thursday evening, at the Guildhall Tavern, Gresham-street, where there was a very respectable muster for an "off night." The W.M. was supported by Bros. Charles J. Rich S.W., J. H. Hawkins J.W., J. H. Goodwin P.M. Treasurer, G. T. Brown P.M. Secretary, H. W. Gregory S.D., W. Walker J.D., R. Dyson I.G., J. Roberts I.P.M., C. E. Ferry P.M., E. S. Cornwall P.M., C. Daniel P.M., W. Chicken P.M., B. Banks Tyler, and many other brethren. Amongst the Visitors were Bros. W. Kerr 144, G. Sherbourne 1694, and F. Searl 1107. Lodge was opened soon after five o'clock with the customary formalities, and having been advanced, Bro. Alfred Cheney was raised to the sublime degree, the ceremony being performed by the Worshipful Master in a manner which for a "first attempt" was highly creditable, and elicited many expressions of approbation. Resuming in the first degree, the ballot was opened for Mr. John Charles Stone, of Edmonton, who had been proposed by Bro. Cornwall P.M., and seconded by Bro. C. Daniel P.M., and also for Mr. George Hopkins. In each instance the voting was unanimously in favour, and Mr. Stone being in attendance was duly initiated into the mysteries and privileges of the Order, the ceremony being admirably worked by the Worshipful Master, assisted by his Officers. It was announced that the summer banquet of the Lodge would be held on Tuesday, the 10th July, at the Oatlands Park Hotel, Walton-on-Thames, and the request was made that the brethren should intimate their intention of being present or otherwise before the 3rd July, as the Committee would make their final arrangements by the replies received to that date. The hope was expressed that the excursion would be well attended, and that the result might be as satisfactory as in previous years. At the conclusion of business the brethren dined together, when the toast list was opened by the W.M. with "Loyalty to the Throne and Fidelity to the Craft," a sentiment which was enthusiastically endorsed by all present. The I.P.M. then discharged what he considered to be a pleasant task, namely, that of proposing the health of the W.M., and in doing so he spoke of the highly creditable manner in which Bro. Schadler had acquitted himself in the various offices he had held in the Lodge, and the ability which he still continued to display now that he had reached the "top of the tree." They had seen his working to-day, and would all agree that it was admirable. He congratulated Bro. Schadler upon being surrounded on this occasion by so many Past Masters, a circumstance which was rather remarkable on an "off night," and it must be especially gratifying to the Worshipful Master on the first occasion of meeting after his installation. The W.M., after thanking the brethren sincerely for the kind manner in which they had received the toast, thought he hardly deserved the flattering things that had been said of him by his Immediate Past Master, for his working was hardly yet to his satisfaction. He should like them to put him further to the test, by giving him plenty of work in order to keep him out of mischief, and that he might show what he could do. He was happy to announce that the Lodge of Prosperity had not suffered in any way under his rule, for although he had so little time to make up his list for the Boys' School, he was enabled to take up subscriptions to the amount of £110, which was far beyond what he thought he should have been able to do. He was greatly obliged to the brethren for their co-operation, and he hoped they would rally round him at the summer banquet, so that they might have a thoroughly enjoyable day. He then proposed the health of the Initiate, a task which afforded him additional pleasure from the fact of this being the first time he had had the opportunity of doing so since his accession to office. He was sure, from the attention Bro. Stone had paid to the ceremony, he would duly appreciate the value of Freemasonry, and would no doubt prove to be a worthy brother amongst them. Bro. Stone, who appeared to be agreeably surprised at the reception given to the toast, thanked the brethren for the honour they had done him that evening. He knew but little of Masonry as yet, but that little he would act up to, and promised faithfully to keep to the obligations he had taken. If his life was spared, he hoped, with the assistance he should receive, to become a worthy Mason. The Worshipful Master then extended a cordial welcome to the Visitors, for whom Bros. Kerr and Sherbourne, of Chelsea, suitably responded, the latter thanking their excellent Secretary especially for enabling him to participate in the hospitalities of the Lodge, and expressing the hope that Bro. Brown would be able to establish an off-shoot of the Lodge at the house he had just taken at Chelsea. If there was any truth in the word Prosperity, they saw it in the way this Lodge had progressed, and he was sure if a branch of it were planted at Chelsea, it would be certain to thrive and grow in equal measure. In reply to the toast of the Past Masters, the whole of the "veterans" present spoke seriatim, all expressing their unabated interest in the welfare of the Lodge. Bro. Daniel P.M. mentioned that the Chapter in connection with the Lodge of Prosperity met at that house, and a good and comely crew assembled, and worked most unitedly together. He advised all who had not yet joined the Chapter to do so as soon as they conveniently could, as the fee was nominal, and the pleasure immense. The health of the Treasurer and Secretary came next, and Bros. Goodwin and Brown suitably responded. The latter observed that he was glad to bear testimony that the Lodge was in a flourishing condition; that night he had taken more money than on any previous off-night. He had got in two or three large sums, which he did not expect to get, from members in arrear. Referring to the Masonic Charities' Association in connection with the Lodge, the term of which would now soon expire, he was pleased to say that within the four years of its existence they had been able to send up no less than 580 guineas to the Masonic Charities as a result of the brethren subscribing the nomical sum of one shilling per week each. It was one of the most pleasing duties to be Secretary of that Association, and he hoped another would be started as soon as the present one expired, which would be in about four months' time. One of their Past Masters (Bro. Chicken) had started one at his house, and he hoped to receive a goodly number of names. The amount required from members was very small, but the result was large as time went on. He little dreamt that in so short a period they would be able to forward so large an amount on behalf of the Charities; it only showed what power and weight it gave the Lodge in the event of a death, or a poor child being proposed as a candidate for one of the Institutions connected with the Craft. If they calculated the number of votes this Association had given to the Lodge they must be highly gratified and pleased. The health of the Officers of the Lodge was next given from the chair, with complimentary remarks in respect of each, and the toast was acknowledged by the Senior Warden, the official list being closed with the Tyler's toast. During the evening some excellent songs were given by the brethren and visitors, a couple of excellent pieces being rendered by Bro. Sherbourne; these elicited much genuine applause. The proceedings throughout were of an exceedingly happy and harmonious character.

New Concord Lodge of Instruction, No. 813.—The regular meeting of the above Lodge was held on Wednesday last, at the Jolly Farmers' Tavern, Southgate-road, Bro. Western in the chair, supported by Bros. Smith S.W., Chubb J.W., Powell acting Preceptor, Perl Secretary, Ferrar S.D., Allsopp J.D., Lone I.G., also Bros. Gribbell, Ockelford, Gadsby and others. The usual preliminaries having been observed in opening the Lodge, the Worshipful Master proceeded to work the initiation ceremony, Brother Gadsby acting as candidate. This brother afterwards proved himself an efficient Fellow Craft, and was entrusted. The Lodge was opened in the second degree and the ceremony of passing rehearsed, Bro. Gadsby acting as candidate. The Lodge was here resumed to the first degree. Bro. Smith was elected to fill the chair at the next meeting. The summer banquet in connection with this Lodge of Instruction will take place on Thursday, 26th July, at the Clarence Hotel, Teddington, under the presidency of Brother P.M. Cusworth Preceptor.

Tredegar Lodge of Instruction, No. 1625.—Held at the Royal Hotel, Mile End Road, on 25th June. Present—Bros. H. Marks W.M., B. Franks S.W., Oxley J.W., Stewart S.D., Hubbert J.D., Eastland I.G., D. Moss S.D. 1275 Preceptor, also Bros. Forss, Turbefield, &c. The Lodge was opened in due form, and the minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed. The ceremony of initiation was rehearsed, Bro. Eastland acting as candidate. Bro. Forss worked the first, second and third sections of the lecture, assisted by the brethren. Bro. Turbefield 1227 was unanimously elected a member of this Lodge. Bro. Stewart proposed, and Bro. Moss seconded a motion, that this Lodge should adjourn till the first Monday in September. This was carried unanimously. Nothing further offering for the good of Freemasonry the Lodge was closed in due form.

VISIT OF THE G. MASTER TO YORK.

THE arrangements made to ensure the success of the Masonic gathering at York, on Wednesday next, to our mind leave nothing to be desired. An experienced committee has been appointed to arrange all details, and this body acted wisely in securing the services of our esteemed Bro. T. B. Whytehead, who they have appointed their Chairman. All concerned have worked most zealously, and we anticipate the meeting will be more numerously attended than any previous Masonic assembly in the Provinces. The Grand Master will ascend the throne at the Guildhall of York at 10.15, when he will immediately proceed to open his Lodge. Previous to this, Provincial Grand Lodge will be opened, by the Prov. G. Master, the Earl of Zetland, at the Assembly Rooms.

ANALYSIS OF THE SUBSCRIPTION LISTS FOR THE BOYS' SCHOOL.

CONTINUING our review of the recent Festival we now come to the Provinces. First and foremost on the present occasion, is Kent, the Grand Master of which district occupied the chair at the Festival itself. He was supported by forty-one members of his Province as Stewards, and they were instrumental in collecting £2,305 15s 6d. In March last the Province was represented at the Benevolent Festival by four Stewards, three of whom took up £148 5s, while in May, at the Girls, five of the six Kentish Stewards contributed £228 8s, giving a total of £2,682 8s 6d sent up this year from Kent to the three Institutions. The principal list for the Boys was that of Brother J. S. Eastes, the Deputy Provincial Grand Master, his total being £601 16s, while six other Stewards reached three figure totals; these were Brother Henry Bond, of the Acacia Lodge, No. 1314, whose list amounted to £129 17s 6d; Bro. W. Hollis, Chislehurst Lodge, No. 1531, £121 16s; J. G. Henning, Union Lodge, No. 127, £120 15s 0d; F. W. Prescott, Peace and Harmony Lodge, No. 199, £113; J. G. Chillingworth, Saye and Sele Lodge, No. 1973, £110 5s; and Henry Mason, Pattison Lodge, No. 913, £100. Great praise is due, both to these Stewards and the brethren who supported them, for the very handsome sum collected for this Festival, which exceeds by a considerable amount anything before realised from Kent, and has only been exceeded in two instances by other Provinces during the past.

East Lancashire was represented by its Provincial Grand Master and by forty other Stewards, and between them they have collected £2,100, a grand amount, and one which will long rank among the foremost contributions to our Charities. In February last its donations to the Benevolent amounted to £212 1s 6d, and in May £89 5s was sent up to the Girls, giving a total for the year of £2,401 6s 6d.

West Yorkshire, on the present occasion, contributes £1,500, which sum follows donations of £450 to the Benevolent and £400 to the Girls, and makes a total from the district of £2,350 during the current year. The present return is one of the grandest ever known in West Yorkshire, noted as it is for large amounts, the total having been exceeded only once, viz. in 1881, when its contributions amounted to £3,560 for the Benevolent Institution.

Northumberland, not a very frequent attendant at the Festivals, comes nobly forward for the Boys this year with a total of £1,222 13s, collected by its Grand Secretary, Bro. B. J. Thompson. This is the first appearance of this district at the Charity Festivals of the present year, but the total now contributed goes far to make up for the absence of its members from the other two. We should, however, like to see a regular system of Stewardships inaugurated in the Province, and hope now that so influential an official as the Provincial Grand Secretary has taken the matter in hand that something of the sort will follow.

Cumberland and Westmoreland, another northern Province, and one which is also very uncertain as regards representation, is to the front on the present occasion with £1,050, collected by a most zealous worker for the Charities—Bro. George J. McKay. The Province was represented in May last, when the same Brother contributed twenty-five guineas towards the Girls' total.

North and East Yorkshire finishes up the Charity year with a donation of £873 7s for "Our Boys," which sum, together with £29 13s sent to the Benevolent in February, and £15 15s contributed to the Girls in May, gives a total for the year of £918 15s. The principal list on the present occasion is that of Bro. J. S. Cumberland, whose total of £541 16s is a living example of what can be accomplished through perseverance. It is not very long since that North and East Yorkshire was all but unknown in connection with our Charities, now it is possible for one of its members to collect no less a sum than £541 16s for one of the Festivals, and to be supported by other brethren with a total of £331 11s, in addition, a change which does great credit to the brethren of the district. Very much of this improvement is due to the exertions of Bro. J. S. Cumberland, and we feel sure that his present list must be as gratifying to him as to any one connected with the Province. We wish him long life to continue his exertions in the good cause.

Gloucestershire comes next, with £601 17s. It was represented at each of the preceding Festivals; in February by six Stewards, and in May by two. Its contributions this year have been £218 3s, £36 15s, and £601 17s respectively, together £851 15s, very satisfactory figures, especially when it is remembered that support from the district is regular.

Staffordshire contributed £460 9s towards the Boys' Festival, and this, together with £57 15s sent up for the Benevolent, and £272 6s contributed for the Girls' School, gives the very respectable total of £790 10s for the year. The district is one of the most regular in its attendances, and with such sums as have lately been sent up is well deserving of congratulation.

Hampshire and the Isle of Wight, accredited with £375 5s 6d on the present occasion, had previously contributed £1,456 19s, so that the district stands out well, with a total of £1,832 4s 6d for the year. Its total in February was £149 16s, and in May £1,307 3s. On the latter occasion it will be remembered its Grand Master occupied the chair. The regularity and amount of the contributions from this district renders it one of the most important in the country.

Sussex figures this year for £364 17s for the Boys, £210 for the Old People, and £363 6s for the Girls, a grand total of £938 3s contributed during 1883, and that, too, after numerous other good totals. May the brethren of this southern district ever be as mindful of the Charities as they have been in the past.

Somersetshire comes next on our list, its total being £357 10s 6d. It was represented in February by one Steward, who took up £52 10s; and in May, also by one Steward, whose list was £44 2s. The total for the year is therefore £454 2s 6d.

The Western Division of South Wales, with a level £350, shews out well, considering its limited number of Lodges. The present is its first appearance in 1883, but it is, we believe, the custom in this district to support one Charity each year, and give all attention to that alone—a very good system in small districts.

West Lancashire has been comparatively quiet this year, still its representatives have brought up £823 13s 6d for the three Institutions, viz., £244 15s for the Benevolent, £244 13s for the Girls, and £334 5s 6d for the Boys. It must not be forgotten, when comparing these figures with those of other districts, that West Lancashire, in addition to its donations to the central Charities, also supports a local Masonic Institution, as also do other of the Provinces in its neighbourhood.

Worcestershire stands out well this year, its members having contributed a total of £764 6s, viz., £218 13s to the Benevolent, £217 7s to the Girls, and £321 6s to the Boys. A splendid results if taken in connection with the number of its Lodges, which are only eleven.

Devonshire now sends up £317 6s, and with its previous totals of £74 11s for the Benevolent and £203 3s for the Girls, is deserving of praise. £595 in one year from such a Province as Devonshire is most gratifying.

Suffolk is another district worthy of especial praise. Its total for the present year being no less a sum than £653 0s 6d. Of this amount £250 17s 6d was contributed to the Benevolent in February, £136 10s to the Girls in May, and £265 13s to the Boys last month.

We have now come to the end of those Provinces whose totals on this occasion exceed £250. We propose to conclude our summary here, especially as we have already given a list shewing the amounts contributed by the remaining districts. We do not leave off at this point because we consider those which follow are undeserving of mention, on the contrary, every district that puts in an appearance is deserving of praise, but the space at our disposal being limited, we are compelled to draw a line somewhere.

GROWTH OF GRAND LODGE OF PENNSYLVANIA.

WE have lately received a copy of the "Sesqui Centennial Proceedings of Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, F. and A.M.," and from its pages we extract the following address of Bro. the Hon. Pearson Church:—

It has ever been the custom of mankind to preserve a record of any notable event in their political, their religious, or their social life.

Such an usage, having the sanction of Divine command, is the means whereby true patriotism is fostered, religious zeal encouraged, and brotherly love nourished.

In conformity with this ancient and sacred custom, the Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of Pennsylvania keeps this service. This day is unto us a memorial.

On St. John's Day, 24th June, in the year of Light 5732, there was held for the first time in the Province of Pennsylvania, and in this City of Philadelphia, a Grand Lodge of the Ancient and Honourable Society of Free and Accepted Masons; and at the same time Grand Officers for its government were duly chosen.

There had been indeed prior to that time, Masons sojourning here who used to meet together as a Lodge under the auspices of a Grand Lodge of England.

Yet this day, one hundred and fifty years ago, is to us, as Pennsylvania Masons, "the Beginning of Days." (It is a coincidence to be noticed in passing, that it was then, as it is now, the Saturday of the week.)

It does not fall within the scope of my remarks to unravel the network of intricacies which surrounds the Masonic jurisdiction of England during the last century, nor to rehearse the story of the consequent uncertainties of authority which exist in the chronicles of this earliest Grand Lodge. It is sufficient to remark that at one time there were two or more Grand Lodges in England, and two Grand Lodges at the same time claiming jurisdiction in Pennsylvania. The older Body did not long survive the political Revolution of the Colonies.

Our present Grand Lodge derives its real origin from "The Grand Lodge of the Most Ancient and Honourable Fraternity of Free and Accepted Masons, 'according to the Old Constitutions,' granted by His Royal Highness Prince Edwin, at York, in the year of our Lord 926."

The Grand Warrant of our authority was issued on the 20th of June 1764.

The Grand Lodge thus organized remained as a Provincial Grand Lodge under the authority of the Grand Lodge of England, known as the "Ancients," until, on the 25th of September 1786, it was unanimously resolved by the members that it was improper that the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania should remain any longer under the authority of any foreign Grand Lodge; and thus the old Provincial Grand Lodge became an institution of the past.

Immediately thereupon a Grand Convention was formed to take proper steps for the establishment of a truly independent Grand Lodge; and there was then adopted, with like unanimity, an ordinance that the Lodges under the jurisdiction of the Provincial Grand Lodge form themselves into a Grand Lodge, to be called "The Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania and Masonic Jurisdiction thereunto belonging."

This official title, somewhat quaint, and still unchanged, differing, as I believe it does, from that of any of our sister Grand Lodges, sufficiently indicates that this Grand Lodge claimed and exercised Masonic jurisdiction outside the Province and Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. This jurisdiction was thus exercised by the Provincial Grand Lodge in warranting subordinate Lodges in many adjoining and distant Colonies, in the Island of Hayti, in regiments of the Continental Army, and even of the British Army.

This Grand Lodge, after it attained its independence, granted warrants to subordinate Lodges in many distant States, in the West India Islands, in Mexico, in different countries in South America, and in the United States Army. Many of these Lodges became extinct, and many became subsequently attached to other Masonic jurisdictions.

The Act of Independence of our Grand Lodge was gracefully acknowledged and fraternally recognised by the Mother Grand Lodge of England. In their congratulatory letter of brotherly love and of God-speed, occurs a passage so happily freighted with "thoughts that breathe and words that burn," that I may be pardoned for quoting it: "Having perused," they say, "your Book of Constitutions, we reflect with pleasure that the Grand Lodge of England has given birth to a Grand Lodge in the Western World, whose strict adherence to the ancient and immutable landmarks of our Order, reflects honour on its original founders . . We conceive that in constituting your Grand Lodge, we necessarily communicated to it the same independent Masonic authority within your jurisdiction, which we ourselves possessed within ours; amenable to no superior jurisdiction under Heaven, and subject only to the immutable landmarks of the Order. All Grand Lodges in Masonry being necessarily free, independent, and equipollent within their respective jurisdictions, which consequently excludes the idea of subjection to any foreign authority or the establishment of an imperium in imperio."

Of this counsel, coming from our Alma Mater, this Grand Lodge has ever been mindful. As the instructive words of a prudent father sink deep into the heart and understanding of an obedient and respectful child, so did this Grand Lodge, in its youth, cherish this message of wisdom from our ancient and honourable ancestor.

The ancient and unchangeable landmarks, usages and customs of our Order, and the no less trenchant doctrines of independent jurisdictional sovereign Masonic authority, have been the Jachin and Boaz of our Masonic edifice, reared and supported as it has been in Wisdom, Strength and Beauty. They have been to this Grand Lodge the pillar of cloud by day, and the pillar of fire by night. They have kept us in the straight pathway which leads to true Masonic light and knowledge.

It would be a most interesting study to mark the many memorable epochs, and to acquaint ourselves with the many notable events in the long history of the Grand Lodge, and thus to follow its growth from infancy to maturity, but my limited time forbids me to do more than glance at one or two more promising episodes.

The Grand Lodge had its period of gloom, and for a time felt the bitter blast, and breathed the noxious vapour of madness, fanaticism and folly; but, as a laden atmosphere is purified by a violent thunderstorm, so, after its era of persecution, did our Grand Lodge, upheld and defended by its noble band of officers and members, who would not bend to the behests of illegally exercised authority, henceforth shine with renewed lustre and revived splendour. "The eyes of the Lord were open upon this House day and night, upon the place whereof He had said He would put His name there." The Ark of the Covenant had gained its resting place, and there was thereafter to be found no Uzzah to lay his unhallowed hands upon its sacred form.

There is one event in the history of the Grand Lodge which, to us as Pennsylvania Masons of the present generation, appears strange.

In the year 1780 the Grand Lodge took into consideration the propriety and necessity of appointing a Grand Master over all the Grand Lodges formed or to be formed in these United States, and after it was so resolved, that Brother who was "First in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen," was by this Grand Lodge unanimously elected Grand Master of Masons throughout the United States.

The concurrence in this movement by the several Grand Lodges of the United States was most strenuously urged by our Grand Lodge, and very persuasive arguments were used for the purpose of bringing about united action. In after years different and better counsels prevailed, for we find that, in answer to similar propositions from other Grand Lodges this Grand Lodge declared it to be inexpedient and impracticable to establish a Supreme Superintending Grand Lodge in the United States. It was, however, the sense of our Grand Lodge that a more intimate union should be formed, and a permanent intercourse established between the several Grand Lodges.

All of these projects were finally abandoned, and never, so far as I am aware, was the subject again brought forward.

Digitized by Google

Our present system of Grand Representatives between the several Grand Bodies in the United States and elsewhere, is probably the result of the impression made by these early propositions.

As is well known to the Masonic student, Ancient Masonry consisted of four degrees, and every lawfully warranted Lodge possessed and, if its ability and numbers justified, exercised the power of conferring the Royal Arch Degree. There were then no intermediate degrees, and the Royal Arch was exclusively under the control of the Grand Lodge.

In the year 1795, the Grand Lodge authorized the formation of a Grand Royal Arch Chapter under its own immediate government. The officers of the Grand Lodge were ex officio the officers of the Grand Chapter, and all working Chapters were held under the authority of a regular subsisting warrant granted by the Grand Lodge.

Thus matters remained for many years until Capitular Masonry in this State was conformed to the system as it existed in other jurisdictions.

I have not the time to enter into the details of the growth of the Grand Lodge, nor the opportunity to illustrate the paths trodden by our progenitors, and pointed out by them for our guidance, and whereby this Grand Lodge has attained its present high commanding position.

"There were giants in those days," and when they began the edifice of Freemasonry in this Commonwealth, they laid deep its foundations among the sub-strata of the ancient landmarks and Masonic tradition, and then united the superstructure with the cement of Prudence, Fortitude, Temperance and Justice, and upheld it by the columns of Brotherly Love, Relief and Truth; thus enabling it to withstand the tempests of modern innovations and puerile novelties, which ever threaten to undermine the solid principles of this Ancient and Honourable Institution.

The Pennsylvanian Mason of to-day meeting his brethren of the Grand Lodge in this building, cannot realise the wonderful advance made by the Fraternity in this jurisdiction during the past century and a-half.

Between the Tun Tavern, of Water-street, where, in a modest hired upper room, the first Grand Lodge was held in this city and Province, and the present edifice—the most magnificent dedicated to the uses of Freemasonry ever erected—there is a wide distinction; but it is a contrast far more eloquent than that afforded by the mere lapse of time, or the increased prosperity of the Craft.

The contemplation of the several steps by which this architectural summit has been reached, shows that the seed sown by our Masonic forefathers fell on good ground, and yielded "sixty and one hundredfold;" that the germs of Faith, of Hope and of Charity, planted by them, brought forth their fruit in due season.

A comparative view of the one Lodge, with its handful of Brothers, and confined to one spot in the Colony, and the three hundred and eighty thriving Lodges, with their thirty-five thousand Masons scattered through this great Commonwealth, from the River Delaware to Lake Erie, exhibits something vastly more significant than a mere contrasting of unrhetorical figures. It presents a scene more charming to the senses than that depicted by a confused mass of commonplace statistics.

It represents a compact body of free-born men under the tongue of good report, "fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners."

At this memorial service, designing to perpetuate the memory of our growth and prosperity in a spirit of justifiable self-congratulation, may we not point to our humble beginning, our past illustrious history, and our present exalted position, and, recognising in all this the munificence of the Giver of every good and perfect gift, reverentially exclaim, as it was said of the patriarch of old, "What hath God wrought?" "How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel!"

And, standing, as we are, on the threshold of another epoch, may we not resolve to forget not the past, to wisely improve the present, and "go forth to meet the shadowy future without fear, and with a manly heart?"

Wherefore, then, as a Grand Lodge, do we look back with complacency upon our historic past, congratulate ourselves upon our successful present, and confidently indulge the hope of a glorious future.

The answer is to be derived from the fact that our Order is founded upon the eternal and immutable truths of Equality and Fraternity; that the great unwritten language and laws and traditions and teachings of Freemasonry have been kept by this Grand Lodge as pure and as sacred as the fires tended by the vestal virgins; that while principalities and powers and earthly dynasties are subject to dissensions, disintegration and decay; the white-winged Dove of Peace hovers over our battlements, and our walls are resonant with the sweet songs of Harmony, and the joyful chants of Unity, which, "like as the dew of Hermon fall upon the hill of Sion."

The answer is to be further found in the fact that this Grand Lodge is panoplied in the armour of the Ancient Landmarks, and with these there is "no variableness, neither shadow of turning;" that it has ever maintained, as with a Divine faith, the absolute sovereignty and supremacy of itself in all matters within its own territorial jurisdiction; and that in determining questions of Masonic law there is nothing higher or more authoritative than its decrees, save only the Ancient Landmarks, Usages and Customs of the Order.

The answer is to be still further found in its unshaken conviction that the spirit of novelty, of unrest, of progress falsely so-called, has no foundation in the true Masonic character; in the firm belief that in Masonry whatever is ancient is true, and whatever is modern is false, and that the introduction of innovations into the body of Masonry is as full of peril to the stability of the Order as the introduction of the Trojan horse was to the city of Priam.

Finally, it is to be found in the long-established system by which the Grand Officers of this Grand Lodge are chosen, and the prevailing spirit which binds them together.

By an unwritten law of the Grand Lodge a brother who aspires to govern as Grand Master must first serve his terms of apprenticeship in the minor elective Grand Offices. He attains his high position through earned promotion, and not by intrigue and indulgence. The other elective Grand Officers serving as advisers to the Grand Master in the government of the Craft, and partaking in his responsibility as they ascend into the place of dignity and power, are in like manner served "by those who in their turn shall follow them." As a Past Grand Master, his influence is still felt as a member of one or more of the leading standing committees, which tend so strongly to shape the policy of the Grand Lodge. Thus we have at all times around the Grand East a body of diligent, faithful and experienced brethren, who guard well the portals of Freemasonry, and suffer the Grand Lodge to come under no evil imputation.

These are some of the characteristics of this Grand Lodge. Upon us have devolved the duty and responsibility of preserving its laws. Let its word be "as a lantern unto our feet, and a light unto our paths."

In a few more decades this Grand Lodge will be celebrating the two hundredth anniversary of its foundation. It is scarcely possible that any now within the sound of my voice will be here to assist in that ceremony. Those who will then be participants will have received their Masonic light from us. Let it arise and shine for the never-fading glory of pure and ancient Masonry, which may always find its sure resting place within the precincts of this, the parent Grand Lodge of America.

O venerable Mother of us all, "rich with the spoils of time."

"The Lord bless thee and keep thee!

"The Lord make His face to shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee!

"The Lord lift up His countenance upon thee, and give thee peace."

"THE SAME USAGES AND CUSTOMS."

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—At the risk of being considered pertinacious in "sticking to a favourite fad," as my attempt to secure a logical deduction and result from the very expressive clause in our present Book of Constitutions—relating to Masonic working—has been characterised by my good friend your contemporary, in a recent leaderette, I am constrained to make further endeavour to ascertain what is meant by the clause which has been substituted in the proposed revision.

The respective clauses are as follow:—

EXISTING REGULATION.	REVISED REGULATION.
"All lodges are particularly bound to observe the same usages and customs; every deviation, therefore, from the established mode of working is highly improper, and cannot be justified or countenanced. In order to preserve this uniformity, and to cultivate a good understanding among free-masons, some members of every lodge should be deputed to visit other lodges as often as may be convenient."	"The master and wardens of a lodge are enjoined to visit other lodges as often as they conviniently can, in order that the same usages and customs may be observed throughout the craft, and a good understanding cultivated among freemasons."

At the Special Grand Lodge held on the 30th ult., for the consideration of the proposed revision, when discussion was reprehended, and hasty decisions invited with a view to attain at one sitting, if possible, a result which, to be at all, or even nearly, perfect, demanded cool and matured deliberation, and the adjournments necessary for that purpose, I proposed the re-instatement of the existing regulation, as an amendment, so far victoriously as to be defeated by not more than five votes. This evidences the fact that very many more Freemasons are of my way of thinking, as to unity of working, than my opponents care to admit.

But I was defeated, and, as is only right, and until the decision then arrived at is reversed, respectfully bow to the majority. For the present at all events I must, as will all good and loyal Masons, observe the "same usages and customs" in Masonic working. It will be so easy to do this when we learn what are the "same usages and customs observed throughout the Craft." Probably the direction given to us will be supplemented by information as to the authority to whom we should apply for instruction! At present I know of none in particular, and in a general way to adopt some of the "usages and customs" of, say, Lodges in the West of England, and some others of, say, Lodges in the North, and reconcile them with the "usages and customs" of the Metropolis, would be to render "confusion worse confounded," and instead of cultivating "a good understanding among Freemasons" would almost necessitate the establishment of a fourth Masonic charity for the reception of Masonic lunatics.

Where are we drifting? The abandonment of the old regulation that "every deviation from the established mode of working is highly improper and cannot be justified or countenanced" means, if anything, that it is no longer necessary to conform to any particular mode, and that any form or ritual may be adopted at the will or caprice of any individual, "none daring to make him afraid." And again, what is the "established" mode, and when and by whom was it established? These are questions worth serious consideration. When they are answered as they should be by those who appear to direct in what manner the work of Freemasonry should be practised, without explanation of what "usages and customs" are enjoined for observance throughout the Craft, I may cease to pursue a subject which I am free to confess does not cease to pursue me.

But I fear that inability to give satisfactory replies will necessitate further communications from,

Yours very truly and fraternally,

JAMES STEVENS P.M. 1216, P.Z. &c.

MORE LAND AND THE GIRLS' SCHOOL.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—This seems to be a time of speculation in connection with our Institution. There is the Preparatory School Special Building scheme, the re-building of the Temple at Freemasons' Hall, recently destroyed by fire, and now the land question crops up at Wandsworth. I heartily approve of the movement with regard to the Boys; the rebuilding of the Temple is imperative. Care should be taken in the latter case that haste does not interfere with completeness. Now that an opportunity is afforded, all that human skill and Masonic devotion can accomplish should be taxed to the utmost to make the dwelling place of Grand Lodge, the centre and heart of Freemasonry, worthy of the noble Institution. If caution were ever necessary it is in the matter that is set down to come before the Quarterly Court to be held to-day relative to the land adjoining the Girls' School. It comprises nine acres, for which the very modest sum of £4,000 per acre is asked. I am not acquainted with the value of land in this particular spot, but I should say that the sum asked is grossly extravagant, and could only have been demanded under peculiar circumstances, the chief of which is that at least a portion of the said land is a desirable acquisition, if not an imperative necessity, to the existing School. The owner has taken in the whole case, and, with itching palm, seeks to make a market out of conditions that he himself has helped to create. No doubt part of this ground would have been purchased long ago if the School Committee had had a chance before the price of land had been inordinately swelled by the increased demand, owing to the growth of London. The owner, however, kept his counsel and his land, and now that he has made up his mind to sell he imposes the condition that the purchaser must take the whole or none. How far this condition is meant to influence the Committee of the Girls' School I know not, but it is perfectly certain that the whole matter needs the utmost skill and watchfulness. As at present advised I consider £4000 an acre a fancy price, and altogether unwarranted, except under circumstances already alluded to. But supposing the sum to be fair, according to existing conditions, then comes the other question whether the School should become the purchaser and enter into all the risks and entanglements that accompany the disposition of land for building purposes. What are the necessities of the School? Those should be first determined. It may be that some of this land is indispensable; it may be, perhaps, that it is not, but only desirable, and then only if it can be obtained at a moderate and fair rate. If indispensable, then I hold it would be better to wait events and buy only what is wanted, even at an enhanced price. If only desirable, then I should say pocket disappointment, make the best of circumstances, and bid the owner of the land go elsewhere for a customer. It is one thing to buy, and another to sell. Suppose the Committee were to buy the whole of the nine acres at a cost of £36,000, they would in all probability have to sell what they did not want at a reduced price. It is hardly likely that the whole of the nine acres is of equal value; if not it is important to ascertain the relative value of one acre to another. The reverse, of course, may be true; but I fear not, and therefore the Committee must be exceedingly careful before they enter upon a speculation that may be very disastrous. There is another view that must not be lost sight of; suppose they purchase the whole, and have to wait some time before they can resell what they do not require for their own use, how is the interest upon capital to be provided? I do not think it possible that it can accrue from increased price of resold land, for as I have already said the resale will most likely result in loss. If so, what will the cost of the acquired portion amount to? These are questions that might be asked and answered. I earnestly hope that wise counsels will prevail to-day, and that prudence in speech as well as in action, will characterise the proceedings.

Yours fraternally,

WATCHMAN.

SOME IMPORTANT MATTERS FOR CONSIDERATION.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—There are several remarks in your paper of the 7th July which require comment. In the first place you say that the general body of Craftsmen have every reason to be satisfied with the result of Special Grand Lodge, on Friday, 29th ult. Certainly the message from His Royal Highness was most gratifying, at the same time not more than half the brethren generally felt sure he would accord; but when you wind up your article with reporting satisfactory progress, inasmuch as 184 clauses have been passed, I must beg to differ in toto. Anything more unsatisfactory than the manner in which those clauses were scrambled through, could not have been. With the exception of three or four, which were well contested, the whole might have been taken as read for aught that the brethren knew what they were assenting to. Then, again, the absence of any remarks from you or the Freemason on vital points, such as the retention or not of the word "alone" in 2nd line clause 4, Revise; the arbitrary clause—No. 54—where it gives power to the Chairman of the General Committee—not, mind you, the General Committee—to omit any notice of motion from the list of business to be brought before Grand Lodge. The reporter of your contemporary had the misfortune to lose a large portion of his notes, and yours were evidently in the same boat.

Now, with regard to that little word "alone;" in the "retention" or "rejection" of that word lies the "retention" or "division" of the supreme and inherent power of Grand Lodge. By the rejection of it you create a divided authority, and it does not need a prophet to tell us the fate of a divided house or authority; it was my impression that it was retained, but I am told the contrary was the case. It behoves us as a body, loyal and true to ourselves and our ancient landmarks, to move the non-confirmation of that portion of the minutes when they are brought up for confirmation. With regard to Clause 54, I think Bro. James Stevens moved that, for the Chairman of General Committee, the words Chairman should be left out; but that is another vital point. I care not how good and excellent a brother there may be as Chairman of the General Committee, it is too arbitrary a power to place in his hands. With regard to Clause 4, I wrote to the Grand Secretary on the 8th inst:nt, asking for the information I sought for, but up to the present, the 12th, I have received no reply. It may be as well for the brethren to know that, a large proportion of the shorthand reporter's notes having been lost, there is no record of that portion of the proceedings of Special Grand Lodge extant, and certainly so much will have to be reconsidered; in fact, if the whole were gone through again, with that deliberation and sense of responsibility becoming a body of men engaged in deciding on the most important act possible, viz., framing the laws and regulations which are to govern them, instead of hurrying through, like a lot of schoolboys, anxious to get out to play, it would be more worthy of, and more consistent with, the dignity due to the noble Order to which we have the privilege of belonging. In fact, a Committee should be formed outside of the Board of General Purposes, part taken from London and part from the Provinces, to decide upon the merits of the work done by the Revise Committee. These brethren should be selected with care and judgment as to fitness for that particular work, and they should be paid for it; as, indeed, it could not possibly be properly done under a week of four hours per day.

The proposed purchase of extra land for the Girls' School is another matter requiring great care and judgment to deal with. The extortionate price put upon the land by the owner should be rejected without a doubt. I wrote to a friend of mine, a Brother Mason, who is an auctioneer and estate agent in the locality, and asked him to go and look at the place, and give me his candid opinion. This he has done, as follows:— He does not hesitate to express his opinion as to the greed of the owner, and the extravagance of his demand. He (my friend) has taken the trouble to obtain the opinion of other practical men in the same profession as himself in the locality, and will bring them with him on Saturday. He says there is no doubt as to the advantages its possession would bring to the Institution, but you can buy gold too dear. The freeholder evidently thinks to alarm the Committee with the threat of building operations, but no builder would have to do with the estate at even £3,000 per annum. There are many who would probably treat for the land at £2,500, and for one triangular piece I would rather our Committee should give after the rate of £5,000 per acre than not have it. He also expects to be prepared with details of the sale of plenty of property in the neighbourhood, in a better position, at a far less price. I trust that the brethren will muster in their strength on Saturday, and resist any attempt that may be made to squander the money which has been given for a very different purpose.

Yours faithfully and fraternally,

C. J. PERCEVAL P.M. 1607.

P.S.—In answer to my inquiry, it appears that Clause 4, page 2, of the Revised Constitutions was carried, as printed, at the Special Grand Lodge on the 29th ult.

MORE CHARITY NEEDED.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Under the heading "Our Eighteenth Volume" you last week inserted a very modest note. You are silent as to your own work in particular, and mass it with that done by Masonic journals generally. As one indebted to the CHRONICLE for much instructive and interesting information, I venture, with your permission, to urge your claims to the consideration of the Craft generally. I am not restrained by the modesty that comes of ownership or self-interest, and therefore can claim to speak boldly, and I trust effectively. Your journal, while it wisely restrains the license, encourages the liberty of free men. No one who has a grievance—real or fancied—is denied a hearing, provided that the writer keeps to the subject and deals with it in a fair, manly and Masonic spirit. I do not imply by this that no other organ or body does the same. I have no desire to raise the CHRONICLE in the estimation of the brethren at the cost of any other paper; but I think I may confidently affirm that there is no other journal that discharges its functions with a higher regard to all the essentials that make an organ of a class so welcome and useful than yours does. As you truly observe, those who do not find time to read the literature of Freemasonry sustain a loss. That is true in many senses. Grand as is the genius of the Craft, sublime as are the ceremonies, there is much left of a commoner order to learn and practise. Take the genius, inspiration, and origin of Freemasonry. How few there are who understand them, how small is the interest taken in them. This is accounted for in no small measure by the lack of libraries, by the cost of procuring necessary information, and by the solid character of the study. I can quite understand a profound knowledge of the Craft is not to be expected among the many, and only the few have the time and inclination to work out for themselves the grandeur of the philosophy of the Order, and to solve the subtleties of meaning and of history that crowd the ceremonies. There are few, however, who could not digest a lighter food, and it is just this food that journals like the CHRONICLE afford. It is a register of current events; it gives a digest of work done, and records the economic policy of the Institution. In addition, the CHRONICLE popularises abstruse works, picks out their salient features, and presents them in a form easily understood. It gives extracts from other publications—native and foreign—analyzes reports that are sometimes long, involved and weary, and gives a free platform to every brother. I need not particularise other features, and think I have fairly summarised them. I ask the brethren to try and realise all the labour and expense that the work done by the CHRONICLE involves. When they have done that, I ask them further if a little more charity is not needed in the way of appreciation and support? It should be remembered that a Masonic journal cannot go outside of the Craft for help; even if it could, it would not be prudent to do so. I believe there are what are termed general newspapers that do report Lodge meetings and otherwise deal with Masonic subjects, but whether they have the requisite sanction or not I do not pretend to say. My experience leads me to the conclusion that they have not; and even if they had the practice, ought not to be encouraged. The authorised journals devoted exclusively to the Craft cannot enter into competition with them in general news, and mongrel papers ought not to be permitted to deal with matters that are essentially the property of special journals. The clear duty, as I take it, is for Masons to support their own papers. The result would be a mutual gain, the cultivation of valuable knowledge and the development of a purer and a nobler spirit. I want to see more earnestness in the Craft, less ignorance and selfishness, and a higher regard for the essence of things. These ends can only be obtained by widening the sources of information, by protecting and supporting those sources when they are provided. While pleading for the Masonic press, I am also pleading for the whole body, and where the object is mutual and ennobling, I cannot be wrong in demanding a little charity in the direction I have pointed out.

I am, Dear Sir and Brother,

Yours fraternally,

I.P.M.

NORFOLK AND "OUR BOYS."

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—An old aphorism has it that "comparisons are odious," not odorous, Mr. Editor, as Mrs. Malaprop would have it. Doubtless they are offensive when spitefully instituted, but I can imagine nothing more beneficial when comparisons are made to wake up dormant charity, and to stimulate brethren to become worthy of themselves and the institutions to which they belong. Now, Sir, looking at the list of subscriptions for the Boys' School, the analysis of which has engaged so much of your time and attention; I find Norfolk ranks last but one, with the paltry sum of £26 5s, and this, too, in the face of a special appeal, which has worked such wonderful results in most other Provinces. How is this? I know some of the Norfolk brethren; I have visited their Lodges; and, judging from my reception, from the spirit that seemed to prevail, I certainly was not prepared for such a small outcome of large pretensions. I am not in possession of facts with regard to what they have done on other occasions, and for other branches of the charitable work of the Order: perhaps they have done so much in the immediate past that they can now rest on their oars. I trust that it is so, and would gladly believe it. I have heard of individual cases in which a noble spirit of generosity has been displayed; but these relate to those who are closely associated with them, and would have the claims of friendship to back them. What seems strange to me is, that a county like Norfolk—with its traditions, with its number of Lodges, with a personal friend of the Most Worshipful Grand Master of England as Provincial Grand Master—should be so far behind other Provinces in responding to a special appeal made to them. I do not wish to judge harshly, but the position of Norfolk is so anomalous, so opposed to the just expectations I had formed, that I deem it my duty to call attention to what appears to me to be a great failure of Masonic spirit, the first essential of which is Charity. Suffolk, the adjoining Province, is rather higher than midway on the list; even Essex far outstrips Norfolk. It is true that Cambridge does not appear to figure at all, and, so far, Norfolk has the advantage; but speaking of the many good men I know belonging to the Craft, their position certainly does not correspond with the pretensions of a few who, I fear, have ruled too long. With all the good qualities of the Norfolk brethren, I noticed in some particulars they were more given to the observance of the letter than of the spirit of Freemasonry. The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life. Possibly this fault I have pointed out may account for what appears to be a lack of interest. The observance of forms may be carried too far, red-tapeism leads to coldness and indifference, and possibly that is the condition of the Lodges in some parts of the Province. Whatever may be the cause, I am certain I shall be doing good service if I can succeed in stirring up the brethren in Norfolk. Why, Sir, the Lodges in Norwich alone ought to have redeemed the Province from its humiliating position. I believe they would have done so if they had been properly appealed to. The Lodges in the city are numerous, and contain some wealthy men, who are not regarded as stingy in other relations of life. A knowledge of this fact makes me wonder the more, and induces me to strive to awaken a better spirit than seems to find exercise at present. I know it exists, and if properly worked will act with no uncertain result.

Yours fraternally,

QUIP.

A meeting of the General Committee of the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys was held at Freemasons' Hall, on Saturday last, Brother A. F. Godson presiding. There were also present the following brethren: Raynham W. Stewart, Dr. Ramsay, D. Crombie, J. L. Mather, A. Williams, J. B. Sorrell, C. F. Matier, J. M. P. Montagu, W. H. Saunders, Frederick Adlard, George Cooper, H. Goodall, G. P. Festa, George Skeggs, A. M. Broadley, and E. C. Massey. When the minutes of the General Committee of the 2nd June, and those of the House Committee of 29th June, had been read, Bro. Raynham Stewart, referring to a recommendation of the House Committee, gave notice of the following motion to be brought forward at the Quarterly Court:—

That in accordance with the recommendation of the House Committee the sum of 100 guineas be handed to Miss Elizabeth Hall, now in the 20th year of her office as Matron, and in consideration of her valuable services during the outbreak of scarlet fever in the School last year.

Brother Binckes asked, and obtained sanction for the investment of an additional £2,000 in India four per cents. on account of the Building Fund. There were eleven petitions considered, of which two were deferred for further information—nine names being added to the list of candidates. There are now sixty-four candidates, and twenty vacancies to be filled at next election. An application was submitted from the mother of E. G. W. Taylor, a pupil about to leave the School, and Bro. Montagu, who attended from the Council of the 33°, said that it was proposed, in accordance with the desire of the boy himself, who was desirous of adopting his late father's business, to place him for a term of three years with Bro. Sugg's firm, gas engineers, and the Council of the 33° had made a grant of £60, to be paid in three annual instalments. That, however, would do little more than pay Bro. Sugg (who provided his employés with a good dinner daily at one shilling per head) for the lad's expenses under this head, and as the mother would have to provide him with clothes, and other necessaries, the Council deputed him to ask the Committee if they would supplement the Council's grant, as the power of the relatives to render further assistance was now exhausted. On the motion of Bro. Matier it was resolved to grant a sum of £10, to be handed to the Supreme Council, to be disposed of as might be arranged between Bro. Montagu and Bro. Binckes.

A grant of £20 was made towards procuring an outfit for Keddell (another boy leaving the School) who was going to sea.

Three other former pupils, whose employers had sent favourable reports of their conduct, received grants of £5 each.

The question of electing an additional Trustee was deferred.

Bro. Binckes reported that the amount announced by the Stewards of the recent Festival now amounted to £23,050.

The following notices of motion were then given by Bro Raynham Stewart:—

That, having regard to the unprecedented success of the recent Festival, which involved unusual and excessive labour, the sum of £250 be handed to the Secretary, Bro. Binckes, who has now completed twenty-two years' service.

That in consequence of the largely increased office duties, the Secretary do receive a salary of £125 per annum in addition to his present salary for the years 1883 and 1884, and the Clerk a salary of £25 in addition to his salary for the same years; to be paid out of the interest on the capital stock invested on behalf of the "Special Preparatory Building Fund."

The Installation Meeting of the High Cross Lodge of Mark Master Masons, No. 284, was held at the "Seven Sisters'" Hotel, Page Green, Tottenham, on Wednesday last, when a large gathering of Grand Officers and other brethren attended. Bro. H. V. Clements retired from the position of W.M., and Bro. E. G. Lewis was installed W.M. for the ensuing year. A full report of this interesting meeting will appear in our next.

INSTALLATION MEETINGS, &c.

CLAREMONT LODGE, No. 1861.

ONE of those clear bright summer afternoons, when the sun is not too glaring, and soft fleecy clouds fleck the skies, modulating the temperature into a refreshing coolness, tempted a goodly number of visitors from town, and from the country side also, to pay a visit to the quaint little village of Esher on Monday afternoon, to witness the installation of Bro. F. W. T. Goddard into the chair of the Claremont Lodge. The name in itself is significant, and it is unnecessary to remind our readers of the days when the Queen of the exiled Louis Philippe resided here, and received within her magnificent demesne the representative of those illustrious Frenchmen who are just now engrossing the attention of political students everywhere. For the present Claremont Park is the home of our distinguished brother the youngest son of her Majesty, and it is only to be noted that the presence of the Duke and Duchess of Albany has restored to the secluded and picturesque locality of Esher and Claremont more than all the vivacity and importance it enjoyed when the regal palace was tenanted by the ill-starred, but we venture to think esteemed, representative of the Imperial nobility of France. But we have not here to deal with politics. All institutions in the world except Freemasonry know the meaning of Sic transit gloria mundi. The accession to the chair of K.S. of the fourth Worshipful Master of this young, but exceedingly compact working Lodge, was an event of sufficient interest to stir up a considerable amount of pleasurable excitement among the brethren of the Province of Surrey, and the muster, though not so numerous as we have met on some other occasions, was nevertheless satisfactory, and what was wanting in point of numbers was made up for in bonhommie and heartiness of spirit. A cluster of brethren from town assembled on the Waterloo platform shortly before three o'clock, and left by the train, in which special accommodation was provided for them, picking up a few brethren at Surbiton, whilst others followed by a later train. The drive along by the downs, with Sandown racecourse on the one side and a stretch of beautifully-wooded country lying beyond the common, was most refreshing after the oppressive heat of the City, and was thoroughly enjoyed. Soon after four o'clock the Lodge was opened in the School Room, Park-road, the interior of the building having been adapted to the purpose by a suitable adornment of flags, &c., whilst the handsome silk banners presented by the present and former Masters of the Lodge showed to advantage beside the dais. The retiring W.M. Bro. F. A. Manning presided, supported by Bros. F. W. T. Goddard S.W. and W.M. elect, B. Williams J.W., T. Vincent P.M. Prov. G.S.B. Treasurer, H. E. Frances P.M. P. Prov. D.C. Secretary, T. Snowden S.D., S. Ward J.D., J. M. Barstone I.G.; Martin Sharp, A. Fisher, F. Woodin, W. Woodin, V. W. Morfitt, E. Pincott, T. Rucker, T. Bowler Tyler, and others. The visitors included Bros. W. H. Boswell P.M. 1686, W. T. Buck P.M. 1702, Dr. J. Best (Cripplegate Lodge), J. Tickle P.M. 1702 P.P.G.R., Charles M. Ohren W.M. 452, J. Rhodes 463 Prov. Grand Organist, F. McAlpin P.M. 229, A. J. Dickinson P.M. 452, Dr. W. Porcheron 12, W. Crossley 1702, Thomas Charlton 1702, E. Stockdale 1702, F. Tyler 1702, W. Willan 452, W. J. Russell S.D. 194, W. G. Hunter 412, H. T. Brown 27, &c. Business having been inaugurated with the customary ancient rites, and the report of the Audit Committee (which was very satisfactory) received, Brother Goddard was presented as the W.M. elect, and having assented in the usual form to the responsibilities of the office, a Board of Installed Masters was duly constituted, and the ceremony of installation was impressively performed by Brother Manning P.M. On the re-admission of the brethren, the newly-installed Worshipful Master was proclaimed and saluted in the various degrees, the processional music being admirably rendered by Bro. Rhodes Prov. Grand Organist, and Bro. H. E. Frances P.M. acting as Director of Ceremonies. In handing the warrant to the new Master, the Installing Officer observed that it had not passed through the hands of many distinguished Masons, the Lodge being only a little over three years old; but he had no doubt whatever that it would pass through the hands of Brother Goddard as unsullied as he now received it. The first of the charges was delivered by the Immediate Past Master, and that to the Wardens by Brother Vincent P.M., the third being rendered in eloquent manner by Bro. H. E. Frances. At the close of the rite, the newly-installed Master invested his Officers for the year, as follow:—Bros. F. A. Manning I.P.M., Benjamin Williams S.W., T. Snowden J.W., Thomas Vincent P.M. Treasurer, H. E. Frances P.M. Secretary, S. Ward S.D., J. M. Barstone J.D., A. Fisher I.G., T. Rucker W.S., and Thomas Bowler Tyler. In bestowing the collars, the W.M. addressed a few words to each Officer in explanation of his duties. After the investiture the W.M., addressing his Immediate Past Master, said it was his privilege, on behalf of the whole of the brethren, to present to him a jewel, as a mark of their high appreciation of the services he had rendered to the Lodge during his year of office, and of the interest he had manifested in the welfare of the Lodge. Accompanying the gift was a beautifully illuminated address in blue and gold, and enclosed in a massive gilt frame, the work having been executed by Bro. H. E. Frances P.M. The text was as follows:—

CLAREMONT LODGE, No. 1861.

This testimonial, with the jewel of the Lodge, was presented to

BRO. F. A. MANNING P.M.,

to mark the appreciation of the brethren of the efficient services he has rendered in founding the Lodge, and filling the office of Worshipful Master; and as a token of the esteem in which he is held by them.

9th July 1883.

In accepting the gifts, Bro. Manning said he thanked the brethren heartily for the very kind words which the W.M. had addressed to him in presenting him with the jewel of the Lodge. That jewel would be regarded as the memento of a very happy year of office amongst them. He thanked them also most heartily for the kind expressions with which they had accompanied the jewel, in the form of this testimonial. They had indeed appreciated his efforts in connection with the Lodge most highly—a great deal more so than he himself thought deserving. He did not, however, thank them the less on that account. He concluded by once more gratefully acknowledging the expressions of their cordial goodwill towards him. The Worshipful Master then asked the acceptance by the Lodge of a banner, bearing the name of the Lodge and his armorial bearings, genially observing that he did not know he possessed any such heraldic distinction until Bro. Frances told him. Bro. Vincent, in accepting the gift, observed that the Claremont was a banner Lodge, and as each W.M. seceded from the chair, he set an example which Bro. Goddard had just imitated. They might hope in time to see the walls of the Lodge resplendent numerous banners of the kind. He was sure the Claremont Lodge would always be looked upon by the founders, and those brethren who had the happiness of being initiated in it, as a Lodge deserving of their appreciation. If it only progressed as it had done since its formation, it would become one of the foremost in the Province of Surrey. It was on account of this Lodge that the Provincial Grand Master presented him with the purple, and he hoped the Claremont Lodge would always continue to hold the position it had gained in the estimation of Provincial Grand Lodge. The Secretary said he had been desired by the Prov. Grand Master, Bro. General Studholme Brownrigg, K.C.B., and the Dep. Prov. Grand Master, the Rev. C. W. Arnold, to express their regret at not being able to attend this meeting. After a few other matters of business, Lodge was closed in form, and the brethren then proceeded on a saunter round the pretty village, visiting the quaint old church, and the more modern structure on the hill, not forgetting the cosy looking hostelry, the Bear, the courteous proprietors of which pointed out the natural curiosities with which the hall is adorned, and otherwise entertained their guests. The perambulation of the village was much enjoyed, and at half-past six the brethren returned with sharpened appetites to the school room, where a sumptuous banquet awaited them. After dinner the customary Loyal and Masonic toasts were honoured. In responding for the Provincial Grand Officers of Surrey, Bro. Vincent remarked that the Provinces vied with each other in promoting the interests of the Craft. When they considered that at the last Festival for the Boys' School the sum of nearly £23,000 was collected, it was a matter which made them proud of belonging to Freemasonry. They could point to every Charity in the outside world, and say, though men did not know what Masonry was, and perhaps never would know, yet Masonry did this—in the six months past it had collected £23,000 for one of its Institutions, £14,000 for another, and probably £10,000 or £11,000 for the third. If that was not a matter of which Masons might be proud, he did not know what was. He could only say he never regretted having become a Mason; his only regret was that he had not done so earlier. If they continued to uphold the Craft in the manner he had indicated, people outside, who thought they had secrets which were meaningless and of no good, would be compelled to admit that in promulgating the principles of Charity and Brotherly Love Freemasonry set an example worthy of emulation by all other institutions in the universe. The Immediate Past Master then assumed the gavel, for the purpose of proposing the toast of the day, in doing which he referred to the admirable manner in which their newly-installed Worshipful Master had discharged his duties in the minor offices through which he had passed; he was sure the brethren would endorse all that he might be disposed to say in Bro. Goddard's praise. There was no brother in this or any other Lodge who had more zealously performed his duties, or evinced more active interest in promoting the welfare of the Craft in general, and of this Lodge in particular. With one or two exceptions he had been present at all the meetings since the Lodge was founded, and had done his duty well. The toast was cordially received, and the Worshipful Master, in responding, thanked the brethren most heartily for the kind manner in which they had accepted the mention of his name. It had been his endeavour to do his duty thoroughly, and if he had acquitted himself to their satisfaction their approbation was his best reward. He then proposed the Visitors, to whom he extended the heartiest welcome, and associated the name of Bro. C. Ohren with the toast. Bro. Ohren, in a few happily-chosen sentences, thanked the W.M. for the cordiality and abundance of the welcome he had offered to the Visitors. He had been much pleased and interested with the working in the Lodge, which he thought could not be excelled, and he might be permitted to say that the Claremont was a Lodge of emulation, the perfection of whose working was only equalled by the abundance of its hospitality. Bro. Frances then sent round the charity box, which he afterwards duly submitted to sale by auction, the incident provoking a considerable amount of good-humoured fun. The contents of the box were at length bought by a brother, who, after some "spirited bidding," enjoyed the privilege of adding a little to the bargain in aid of the Charities. The health of the Past Masters came next, and in proposing the toast the W.M. observed that the Lodge was vastly indebted to them, and especially to Bro. Vincent, who had been their Treasurer from the outset, and had admirably discharged the duties of that office. Bro. Collins was another able Past Master, but unfortunately he was not with them that night. They were under great obligations to their I.P.M. Bro. Manning, and all appreciated the way in which he carried out the duties of the chair last year. Personally, he was much obliged to Bro. Manning for his kindness in undertaking the installation ceremony that day, and for the able way in which he had carried it out. Bro. T. Vincent, who was heartily received, thanked the brethren for the kind way in which his health, in association with the toast of the Past Masters, had been drunk. The office he held as Treasurer was a pleasant one, and, as its first Master, he would be ungrateful indeed if he did not do all he could to enhance the best interests of the Claremont Lodge. The I.P.M. also briefly, but suitably, responded. The Worshipful Master then proposed the health of the Secretary and Treasurer, the toast being cordially received. In response Bro. Frances observed that on some future occasion he would make a speech in reply to the toast of his health, "should time permit." But as the hours were advancing, he would now content himself with thanking them most heartily for the kind manner in which they had received the toast. Other toasts followed; eventually the Tyler closed the proceedings in a befitting manner.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—Diseases of the most formidable and chronic characters have been cured by Holloway's remedies. Ulcerations which have proved themselves incurable by any other known means have healed kindly under the purifying and regenerating influence of this excellent Ointment. Sprains, stiff joints, contracted muscles, and glandular swellings can be most safely and effectually healed by Holloway's Ointment and Pills, which can do no harm under any circumstances. Neither of these medicaments has anything deleterious in its composition; both are essentially purifying and strengthening in their nature. The combined power of these noble remedies enables them successfully to cope with most descriptions of impurities, and to cure, or at least relieve, most varieties of diseases.

The General Committee of the Royal Masonic Benevolent Institution met on the 11th instant, at Freemasons' Hall, when there were present Bro. Raynham W. Stewart in the chair, Bros. J. Newton, John Bulmer, W. J. Murlis, C. A. Cottebrune, James Brett, W. H. Goodall, T. W. C. Bush, Charles Atkins, Henry Moore, R. P. Tate, C. J. Perceval, J. H. Sillitoe, G. L. Moore, and E. B. Harding. The deaths were reported of two annuitants—one male and one female. A vote of thanks to the House Committee of the Boys' School was passed, on the motion of Bro. Murlis, for allowing the Boys' Band to attend at Croydon at the recent visit of the Stewards to the Institution. The report of the Finance Committee was submitted, showing the following balances in favour of the various funds—Male Fund £1,359 6s 4d, Widows' Fund £1,604 14s 3d, and Sustentation Fund £59 16s 4d. A letter was read from the Grand Secretary, enclosing a letter from a former annuitant, addressed to the Grand Master, praying for his Royal Highness's influence with the Committee to get the annuity restored, and which appeal had been forwarded to the Grand Secretary. The Chairman explained that the brother, whose letter was before them, had, upon being convicted and imprisoned for a month for pawning Masonic jewels, which were entrusted to him as Tyler of a Lodge, been erased from the list of annuitants, and that there were other matters against him besides, in the face of large benefits received by him and his family from Grand Lodge and the Masonic Instititutions. Under these circumstances, the Committee declined to re-open the question. The Secretary said with regard to a Steward who was reported for not paying in £40 he had collected, that he had been in communication with that brother's Province, and there was a well-grounded expectation that the money would be paid forthwith. Three petitions (one brother and two widows) were considered and approved.

On and after Monday, the 16th inst., the future meetings of the Metropolitan Lodge of Instruction, No. 1507, will be held at the old quarters, "The Moorgate," 15 Finsbury Pavement, E.C. A cordial welcome is given at all times to visitors.

The fourteenth Annual Fete in aid of the Metropolitan and City Police Orphanage was held on the 5th inst., at the Crystal Palace, over 35,000 visitors being present. The admirable arrangements were under the direction of Chief Superintendent Vernon, in the absence of Brother Superintendent T. Butt, who, in consequence of an accident, was unable to be present. The attractions of the Palace were duly appreciated, and 200 children of the Orphanage were regaled with a substantial dinner and dessert, free tickets being provided for all the amusements. The chief attraction was the athletic sports, where thousands watched the contests. Brothers Sherlock and Fisher were the judges, Bro. Cutbush handicapper, and Bro. Giles starter. Mrs. Howard Vincent presented the prizes. The men were addressed in a very pertinent speech by Bro. Howard Vincent, whose remarks were supplemented by Bro. Sir John Bennett. Thirteen bands of the various divisions, including the City of London, discoursed sweet melody. Among those present were Bro. Lieut.-Colonel Labalmondiere, Bros. Superintendents Hamblin, Draper, Green, Lucas, Worrells, Brennan, Harriss, Digby, &c.

BRO. JACQUES WYNMANN WILL BE HAPPY TO TAKE THE MANAGEMENT OF MASONIC BALLS. FIRST-CLASS BANDS PROVIDED.

ARE YOU A MASON?

THE Rev. Mr. Magill, rector of St. Paul's church, Peru, Illinois, being asked the above question by a lady, responded as follows:

I am one of the band
Who will faithfully stand
In the bonds of affection and love;
I have knocked at the door,
Once wretched and poor,
And there for admission I strove.

By the help of a friend,
Who assistance did lend,
I succeeded an entrance to gain,
Was received in the West,
By command from the East,
But not without feeling some pain.

Here my conscience was taught,
With a moral quite fraught,
With sentiments holy and true;
Then onward I travelled,
To see it unravelled,
What Hiram intended to do.

Very soon to the East
I made known my request,
And "light" by command did attend,
When, lo! I perceived,
In due form revealed;
A Master, and Brother, and Friend.

Thus far I have stated,
And simply related,
What happened when I was made free,
But I've "passed" since then,
And was "raised" up again,
To a sublime and ancient degree.

Then onward I marched,
That I might be "Arch'd."
And to find out those treasures long lost;
When, behold a bright flame,
From the midst of which came
A voice which my ears did accost.

Through the "vails" I then went,
And succeeded at length
The "Sanctum Sanctorum" to find;
By the "Signet" I gained,
And quickly obtained,
Employment which suited my mind.

In the depths I then wrought,
And most carefully sought,
For treasures so long hidden there;
And by labour and toil,
I discovered rich spoil,
Which was kept by the craft with due care.

Having thus far arrived,
I further contrived,
Among valiant Knights to appear;
And as Pilgrim and Knight,
I stood ready to fight,
No recreant foe did I fear.

For the widow distressed
There's a word in my breast,
For the helpless and orphan I feel;
And my sword I could draw,
To maintain the pure law,
Which the duty of Masons reveal.

Thus have I revealed
(Yet wisely concealed),
What the "free and accepted" well know;
I am one of the band,
Who will faithfully stand,
As a brother, wherever I go.

LODGE HISTORIES.

—:o:—

LODGE OF RELIEF, No. 42.

On the 10th of March 1803 the brethren were again occupied with the revision of their Bye-Laws, seventeen in number, when it is noted by Bro. Evans that the Prov. G. Secretary seems to have had a finger in the pie. The word "Society" is altered to "Lodge," and the prefix "R.W.M." is changed to "W.M.," in addition to several other amendments. It seems, however, that though these corrections were accepted by the Lodge, the members continued to use the term R.W.M. until December 1815, while instead of having two elections of W.M. in the year, that an annual election by ballot should take place, provided for by this same revision, does not appear to have been generally adopted until December 1820. The amount of subscriptions and fees provided for by the Bye-Laws at the time were:—

"At the monthly meetings, Members present, 1/6 each, and absent members, 6d. each. At the half-yearly meetings, every member present 1/- to the Fund, and 4/- for his expenses, and every absent member 1/6 to the Fund, and 1/6 towards the expenses.

"Initiation Fees, £4 10s. The Joining Fee remained the same, viz. 10/6 and the registering fee.

On the 24 June, 1807, Bro. Samuel Clough was chosen perpetual Secretary, for which services 'he is to be free from paying any expenses in the Lodge.'

"On the 9th June, 1808, it was agreed to Patronize a Play and Farce, on the ensuing Monday, to be performed by Bro. Goldfinch's Company of Comedians then in Bury and performing in the old assembly room at the 'Hare and Hounds.'

In December 1808, Bro. James Hamer, who had had the misfortune to lose a "one pound note," received some practical sympathy from the brethren, who, in consideration of his said loss, and for "past services to the Lodge," presented him with the sum of two guineas.

The next entry we shall call attention to is one under date 23rd November 1809:—

"Bror. Robert Haworth died and was interred the Sunday following, when the Ancient Lodge from Bury Bridge attended and several Brethren from Middleton who joined us in a Procession under the direction of Joseph Heap. The procession was preceded by a Band of Music."

It appears that this Bro. Robert Haworth was W.M. in 1784, and we gather from a mallet still in the possession of the Lodge that he laid the corner stone of the first building in Union Square.

On the 2nd March 1820, "a brother was allowed to borrow £2 from the Lodge fund, he having lost a cow; previous to this date it was usual to give brethren the above sum whenever they had the misfortune to lose a cow."

On the 24th June 1824, "It was unanimously the opinion of the members present that John Coop be suspended for a certain time that is in consequence of his insanity and not again admitted until the opinion of the members should think him a sensible man."

The first record of an almoner being appointed occurs under date 9th December 1824, when Bro. Hamer was appointed to that office. This practice it appears is still continued, but at the present time in connection with the other Lodges in the town.

On the 28th of February 1826, a letter of congratulation was forwarded to Bro. John Crossley, of Scaitcliffe, Rochdale, recording the unanimous approbation of the brethren on his being appointed Prov. Grand Master for the county.

In the year 1828 some little jealousy seems to have arisen, as we find in an entry under date 23rd October that "it was decided that the W.M. should leave off Odd Fellowship."

On the 15th July, 1830. "This being the day of the Funeral of King George IV., Lodge was duly opened and closed, 35 brethren being present;" in the accounts for this day we find:—

In the year 1810 some laxity evidently prevailed, which the members exercised themselves to amend. On the 22nd March of this year three brethren were fined threepence each for leaving the room without having first obtained the permission of the "R.W.M.," while on the 19th April a brother was "expelled" for six months, after receiving a severe reprimand, for "a flagrant violation of the most sacred part of Masonry." Again, on the 27th December of the same year, S—— F—— was expelled this society for dishonest and scandalous behaviour, while two others were expelled for non-attendance.

An entry under date 4th July 1811 states that several brethren "passed the chair," and the compiler, in a footnote, explains that this ceremony of "passing the chair" was performed in order to qualify for the Royal Arch Degree. Reference is also made to an emergency meeting held on the 2nd March 1834, when the work to be done was described as "passing the chair and taking the Mark, Ark and Link." On the 13th August 1818 the W.M. Bro. James Kershaw, in addition to his regular fine, was penalised to the tune of 1s for withholding the Master's jewel and for non-attendance.

"By 40 crape rosettes, 10/-
" Mr. Selkirk 10/6
" Crape and ribbon 3/6."

On the 26th May, 1831. The Color Standard of the Lodge was altered from George IV. to William IV., cost of alteration 1/-.

On the coronation day of King William IV., 33 members of the Lodge, with three visitors, took part in a procession. The Cash Accounts, in reference to this occasion, have an entry "By music 20/-." While on this question of music we may notice another entry: "By one-half the Band, 21s.; Singers at St. John's Chapel 2/6." What would our musical brethren of the present day say to this modest remuneration?

On the 25th March 1832 the monthly subscriptions were reduced from 1/6 to 1/-, and the subscriptions at the half-yearly meetings from 5/- to 4/6; at the same time the fee for initiation was reduced from £4 10s to £4, the fee for joining members being 13/. On the 2nd May 1833 the celebration of the Centenary of the Lodge came under consideration. It was agreed

"1. That the Half-yearly Meeting on 24 June, be postponed until the 3 July, the Centenary of the Lodge.

"2. That all old members of the Lodge be invited to dinner on the occasion.

"3. That the members of the Lodge Nos. 150 and 333, be also invited to dinner, on the understanding, that each visitor together with our Members, each pay 3/6.

"4. That Bros. James Warburton, Francis Mather, John Smith, J. Kay, Thomas Hill, William Howarth, James Leech, Robert Parks, and William Hughes, form a committee of management."

In due course, on the 3rd July 1833, the brethren celebrated their Centenary. The members of Lodges Nos. 150 and 343 (now No. 128' "Prince Edwin," Bury, and No. 266, "Naphtali," Heywood) were invited to take part in Divine Service at the Parish Church, for which a dispensation had been obtained from the Grand Secretary, which dispensation is fully set out by Bro. Evans. Then follows a list of the brethren who visited on the occasion, with the numbers of their respective Lodges, and some explanatory notes as to the position these Lodges now hold on the roll of G.L. From the minutes we gather—

"The Lodge was opened in proper form and with solemn prayer at 1 o'clock, the Brethren then proceeded to Church, when Divine Service was performed by Bro. the Revd. Birkett Dawson, of Bradshaw, P. Prov. Grand Chaplain, E. Division, Lanc.; after service the brethren returned to the Lodge room and dined, then closed the Lodge at 7 o'clock, the remainder of the evening passed with the greatest conviviality, and the parties returned to their respective homes at 11 o'clock.

"From the cash book we get the expenses of the above Meeting as under:—

'Sociable' to fetch and take back Bro. the Revd. Birkett Dawson, including toll bars and glass to driver	0	14	2

The remaining portion of this chapter is devoted to matters of detail attendant on this celebration, while amongst other features of interest will be found copies of the several documents, the Hymns sung, and the lists of toasts and songs given.

We may note here, however, that to Bros. William Hughes and John Brierley (grandfather of the present W.M.) was entrusted the direction of the proceedings.

The next entry we shall take leave to quote is interesting:—

"On 10th September, 1835, two Brethren were appointed to enquire into the cause of Bro. Magrove's mysterious disappearance, (Bro. Magrove was out of employment on the 11th February, and £2 was granted him by the Lodge.) The two Brethren appointed made two journeys to Manchester to enquire after him, and also advertised for him, but evidently with no result, as on the 4th February, 1836, Mrs. Magrove was allowed his funeral money, on the understanding, that if he should at any time be traced, the money was to be refunded."

On the 24th June 1836 the Lodge took part in laying the foundation stone of Hardy's Gate Bridge, as an entry in the cash accounts give 21/- as the amount paid to musicians attending this procession.

It is gratifying to note the readiness the members of this Lodge at all times displayed to take their share in public Mason duties. In evidence of this we quote:—

"On the 27th August 1836, £5 was sent towards the repairs to the Royal Freemasons School for Girls.

"On the 27th December, 1836, £3 was sent as a subscription towards the Memorial intended to be presented to H.R.H. The Duke of Sussex, M.W.G.M.

"On the 23rd March, 1837, £3 was allowed Bro. James Pilkington, towards defraying the expenses incurred by his unjust imprisonment, and a deputation was appointed to wait on Prince Edwin and Naphtali Lodges, Nos. 150 and 333, to see if they would contribute towards the same.

"On the 28th June, 1837, a dispensation having been obtained, the Brethren of the Lodge, together with three visitors from Manchester, formed in Masonic clothing and joined the authorities of the Town in a procession and proclaimed Queen Victoria the First, Queen of England. A cold collation was afterwards served to the brethren. On the 28th June, 1838, the brethren also joined the authorities of the Town in a procession, this being the coronation day of Queen Victoria.

"On the 19th September, 1838, a deputation of seven brethren attended the Prov. Meeting held at Ladyman's Hotel, Manchester, to settle the dispute with reference to some expenses incurred at the last Provincial Meeting held in Bury, when it was agreed that three Provincial Officers and three of our Brethren should retire and arbitrate the question. The arbitrators being unable to agree, Bro. Stephen Blair was called in as umpire, who, after hearing the arguments, gave his decision in our favour, and ordered the Prov. G. Treasurer to refund to us the £7, the amount in dispute.

"On the 28th March, 1839, the Lodge went into mourning for 6 months, in consequence of the death of the Earl of Zetland, M.W.G.M.

"On the 23rd December, 1839, after the Installation of the W.M., the Lodge having obtained a dispensation, joined in a procession and took part in the opening of the Bury New Market. At this meeting it was also decided to allow the Secretary an honorarium of 20s. a year for his services."

ANTIENT AND PRIMITIVE RITE OF MASONRY.

MONDAY, the 2nd inst., was a red-letter day for this body in Scotland, for besides the always attractive ceremonial of a Masonic installation, the Grand Master General of the Order, with many of the Grand Officers, attended, with the view of giving eclat to the establishment of this the highest grade of the Rite which, under the Constitutions, can be chartered as a subordinate body—the grant of a Charter for a Grand Mystic Temple Council-General for Scotland, having all the powers of a National Grand Lodge, and with the right of supervision over all Chapters, Senates, Councils, and Mystic Temples under charter from the Antient and Primitive Rite of Masonry in Scotland. This had long been desired by the members of the Rite in Glasgow and other important cities as the fitting culmination of the enterprise and energy which characterised the working of the Rite in this country; and it was with no small amount of pride and satisfaction that the brethren assembled to witness the placing of the cope stone on the edifice which they had erected with so much labour and skill. The ceremony of consecrating the Grand Mystic Temple for Scotland took place in St. Mark's Hall, used by one of the Glasgow Chapters as their usual place of assembly, and but for its limited capacity, tested on this occasion to the uttermost, it would be difficult to find a neater or more compact little hall. Decorated with the banners and emblems of various ancient degrees, and notably the Great Banner of the Sovereign Sanctuary, the hall presented a very striking appearance; and on the Most Ill. Grand Master General ascending the throne, supported by a goodly array of the Grand Officers, the effect produced by the mass of vestments and jewels was a sight not easily to be forgotten. The ceremony, attentively followed by the brethren present, was carefully and impressively performed, and elicited many expressions of approval from brethren who for the first time witnessed it. The Grand Master of Light elect, Right Ill. Bro. Clyde Duncan, and the Grand Officers of the Grand Mystic Temple of Scotland, having been duly installed, the Most Ill. Grand Master General proceeded to give a very interesting lecture on the high grades, and their true position in the Masonic system. That the lecturer succeeded in keeping his audience interested was testified by the frequent bursts of applause which greeted him during its delivery, and at its close a hearty vote of thanks was unanimously accorded. The newly-installed Grand Master of Light then closed the first session of the Grand Mystic Temple in ample form. Subsequently, and at the request of the Saint Andrew's Grand Council No. VI., the Most Ill. Grand Master General received and consecrated Ill. Bro. D. C. Whyte 32, member of the A. and A. Rite, in the degree of P.P. S.M.G.W., 30, 90, A.P. The Grand Master and the Grand Officers were afterwards entertained at a banquet, given in honour of the occasion by the Scottish members, at M'Gregor's Hotel, St. Vincent-street—Right Ill. Bro. Clyde Duncan in the chair, and Bro. A. Holmes, 32, Croupier. The usual Loyal and Masonic toasts having been proposed and duly honoured, some interesting speeches were delivered relating to the progress of the Rite in this and other countries, its relation to the Craft, the three Grand Lodges, the Masonic Charities, and cognate matters, the speakers being the Most Ill. G.M. General Bro. Yarker, the Right Ills. Grand Expert General Bro. Dr. Davies, Grand Inspector-General Bro. C. M. Wilson, the Grand Chancellor-General Bro. Joseph Hawkins, the Grand Treasurer-General Bro. J. H. Southwood, and the Grand Secretary-General Bro. James Hill, the Very Ill. Grand Analist Bro. Colin Mackenzie, to whom in a great measure the successful position of the rite in Glasgow may be attributed; the Very Ill. Grand Conductor of the Grand Mystic Temple Bro. Robert Morrison, also an ardent supporter. Many other brethren, some contributing musically, and others by recitations, added to the enjoyment of the gathering. The repast provided was excellent in quality, abundant in quantity, and admirably served. It speaks well for the future of the Rite that so many brethren cheerfully undertook the journey from London, Manchester, Liverpool, Dublin, and Limerick to be present on this interesting occasion, clearly showing that their hearts were interested in the work, and testifying beyond a doubt that the professions of brotherly regard and good feeling are not the phrases some would have us believe. To the honour of Freemasonry, be it said, that works of charity, benevolence, and fraternal friendship ever find active, nay, enthusiastic supporters in its ranks, and whether the occasion requires money, interest, or personal support, no sooner is the want indicated than it is readily and ungrudgingly supplied.

LODGE OF PROSPERITY, No. 65.

THE Summer Festival and Ladies' Day of this flourishing Lodge took place on Tuesday, the 10th inst. The several Masters for the time being, in conjunction with energetic Committees, have for some years past striven most zealously to make these annual gatherings enjoyable. In turn, various places have been selected; amongst these we may mention the Crystal Palace, the Alexandra Palace, and the Star and Garter at Richmond; on other occasions the facilities offered by a trip in the "Maria Wood" for a day's enjoyment have been put to the test, in each case with eminently satisfactory result. In fact, so proverbially has it become recognised that a summer outing with the brethren of Prosperity is to be the very essence of comfort and enjoyment, that with pity we contemplate even the thought of any unlucky wight of a Master who should break the run of this uninterrupted course of success. The present W.M., Bro. George Schadler, brings to bear on his labours a knowledge of the traditions of his Lodge; he is an earnest worker, and has secured for himself the confidence and esteem of the members. On this occasion the Oatlands Park Hotel, Walton-on-Thames, was the spot selected. This establishment, which is admirably suited for gatherings of this nature, is most charmingly situated, while the facilities offered by its manager leave nothing to be desired. Bro. Schadler was well supported by his Wardens—Bros. C. J. Rich and J. H. Hawkins—while the I.P.M. Bro. Roberts, and Past Masters Goodwin (Treasurer), G. T. Brown (Secretary), Cornwall, Leins, Chicken, Daniel, Arnold, Gregory S.D., Walker jun. J.D., Dyson I.G., Bourne M.C., Haller, &c., &c., ably acted as a Committee to ensure the success of the meeting. On arriving at Walton, carriages were provided to convey the brethren and their ladies to the hotel. This is large and commodious—the building was originally a palace of the late Duke of York. The dining hall was artistically decorated with a profusion of flowers. 133 guests sat down to a very excellent dinner and dessert, provided by Mr. Dindlemann; music enlivening the proceedings, and after the company had enjoyed the good things supplied, which we may state here gave every satisfaction, the wines and viands being of first rate quality, the W.M. proposed the toast of the Queen and the Craft. Bro. Roberts I.P.M. next rose; as being the Immediate Past Master he had great pleasure in proposing the health of the W.M. and the Committee, who had brought them to this charming place. Under Bro. Schadler's presidency he was sure all had enjoyed a very happy day; he would couple with the toast the names of Mrs. Schadler and Master Schadler. After a most cordial reception had been given to the proposition of Bro. Roberts, the W.M. rose to reply. He thought it was pretty generally understood that they were assembled together to enjoy themselves; this he flattered himself they had done. He had no desire to indulge in a lengthy speech; he thought such a course would mar their enjoyment; but he tendered to Bro. Roberts his sincere thanks for the kind way in which he had proposed the toast, and to the ladies and brethren for the enthusiastic manner in which they had received it. In speaking to what he described as the toast of the day, "The Ladies," the W.M. said every married Mason of their party felt it his duty to do all he could to make the occasion a happy one for the ladies who had honoured them with their company. There were seventy ladies present; the largest number the brethren of Prosperity Lodge had ever had the pleasure of entertaining. He was sure the gentlemen present would do full honour to the toast. Bro. Haller ably responded, and then the W. Master paid a compliment to the Visitors, for whom Bro. H. M. Levy P.M. 188 replied; in the name of the Visitors, congratulating the W.M. on the success which had attended the gathering, and the unqualified success of the arrangements, which had so conduced to the enjoyment of the party. The gathering on board the "Maria Wood" was one to be remembered with satisfaction, but this meeting, thanks to the W.M. and Committee, eclipsed all former efforts. He trusted these gatherings would be continued for many years, and by each succeeding Master. Shortly afterwards the ladies and brethren adjourned to the grotto, and listened with attention to the guide, who gave a very interesting account of its antiquity. Dancing was then engaged in by most of those present, and, surrounded by the lovely scenery, each happy couple thoroughly enjoyed themselves. Bro. C. T. Speight efficiently acted as Toast Master. Amongst the Visitors were Bros. Marflet P.M. 217, C. Hollands 946, W. H. Wallington P.M. 860, D. Moss 1275, Haines J.W. 27, R. J. Pottle, T. Brown, and H. M. Levy P.M. 188.

Percy Lodge of Instruction, No. 198.—At Brother Langdale's, Jolly Farmers, Southgate-road, N., on Saturday last, a most enjoyable evening was spent by the members of the above Lodge, who wished to express their appreciation of the valuable services rendered by Bro. A. W. Fenner, P.M. 1227, on his retirement from the office of Secretary, which position he has occupied so ably for a number of years. Bro. Pearcy Preceptor presided, and Bro. Powell occupied the Vice-President's chair. The Chairman, in a few well chosen words, presented to Bro. Fenner a handsomely-framed testimonial, signed by a number of the brethren, together with a purse of sovereigns, and expressed the gratification it afforded him on the present occasion to present this small token of respect and esteem to so worthy a brother, who, by the assiduous manner in which he at all times worked for the benefit of the Lodge and Fraternity, had won the approbation of all with whom he had been associated. Bro. Fenner, in reply, sincerely thanked the brethren for this mark of their favour; he assured them that, although business required more of his time than usual, he should still have the interest of the Percy Lodge at heart, and attend as often as he possibly could. The toasts of the Treasurer and Secretary were respectively given, as also that of the Past Masters and present W.M. of the Kingsland Lodge (which may be described as an offshoot of the Percy Lodge of Instruction). Responses were made by Bros. Killick, Trewinnard and Hall. In the course of the evening some capital songs were rendered by Bros. Snook, Killick, Weeden, Rhodes, Hickman and Hirst. The meetings of the Percy Lodge of Instruction are now adjourned to the first Saturday in September.

United Pilgrims Lodge of Instruction, No. 507.—The usual meeting of this Lodge of instruction, was held at the Surrey Masonic Hall, Camberwell New Road, S.E., on Friday 6th July. Brother A. Jones occupied the chair for the first time, and most ably conducted the proceedings of the evening, rendering the ceremony of initiation in a manner which would have reflected credit on any Past Master of the Order. The W.M. was supported by Bros. Chapman S.W., Phillips J.W., Richardson S.D., Sarjeant J.D., Johnson I.G., James Stevens P.M. and Preceptor, Poore Sec.; also Bate, Stokes and others. After the confirmation of previous minutes, and the working of the introductory section of the first lecture, Brother Stokes acted as candidate, and the W.M. rehearsed the ceremony of initiation, in perfect manner, and impressively. The fourth section was then worked, and Lodge called off. All present joined in entry drill, by the frequent practice of which the members of this Lodge of instruction have gained confidence when entering their regular Lodges. Lodge was called on, and a hearty vote of thanks to Bro. Jones for his services as W.M. having been recorded, Brother Chapman was elected W.M. for the ensuing week, and the Lodge was closed in harmony.

William Preston Lodge of Instruction, No. 766.—On Friday, 6th inst., at the St. Andrew's Tavern, Baker-street, Manchester-square, W. Present—F. Smith W.M., T. W. Sedgwick S.W., R. D. Smith J.W., G. Tribbel S.D., H. Robinson J.D., M. J. Green I.G., G. Coop Preceptor; also Bros. Carsons, Parsons, &c. Lodge was opened in due form, and the minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed. The W.M. worked the seventh section, assisted by the brethren. Bro. Carsons, having offered himself as candidate for passing, was interrogated and entrusted. Lodge was opened in the second, and the W.M. rehearsed the ceremony in a very able manner. Lodge was closed in the second degree, and Bro. Sedgwick P.M. was unanimously elected W.M. for the ensuing week. Attention having been called to the desirability of having one Lodge of Instruction open during the summer months in the neighbourhood, it was unanimously decided to request the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE to intimate that the attendance of brethren is cordially invited. Lodge was then closed in due form, and adjourned until Friday.

ST. GEORGE'S LODGE, No. 1723.

THE ordinary meeting was held on Wednesday, 27th ult., at the Commercial Hotel, Bolton, at five o'clock in the evening. Present—Bros. Rob. Latham W.M., John Barrett S.W., E. G. Harwood J.W., N. Nicholson P.M. Secretary, E. Cosgrove S.D., Thos. Tong J.D., J. W. Taylor P. Prov. G.O. Dir. of Cers., Thomas Smith Org., W. E. Bardsley I.G., Durham and Naylor Stewards, J. W. Roiley Tyler; P.M.'s Brockbank P. Prov. S.G. Steward of Scotland, Thomas Morris, Blain, Richardson, J. H. Greenhalgh, Court; also Bros. Arden, Morris jun., Goulburn, Fogg, Bolton, Hughes, and several visiting brethren. Lodge proceeded forthwith to the third degree, when Bro. James Fogg was raised to the degree of M.M. by Bro. Nathaniel Nicholson P.M. and Secretary, who also explained the working tools of the degree. Lodge was closed to the second degree, when Bro. J. B. Bolton, who had previously passed a satisfactory examination as to his proficiency as an E.A., was introduced and passed to the degree of Fellow Craft by the Worshipful Master, and the working tools of the degree were explained by the Senior Warden. Lodge then closed to the first degree, when Messrs. Robert Gowancock, Joel Settle, and D. M. Whewell were balloted for and approved. Messrs. Settle and Whewell, who were in attendance, having signed the customary declaration and paid the necessary fees, were initinted as Entered Apprentice Masons, the former by Bro. Latham and the latter by Bro. Nicholson (brother-in-law of the initiate), the working tools of the degree being explained by the Junior Warden, and the usual Charge delivered by the oldest member of the Lodge, Bro. Brockbank, Grand Steward of Scotland. The Charity Medal of the Order was presented to the Worshipful Master on the occasion of his completing his qualification as a Life Governor to two of the Institutions, a similar compliment having been paid at the previous meeting to Brother James Heywood a P.M. of the Lodge. Lodge closed in harmony at eight a.m.

MARK MASONRY.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF MARK MASTER MASONS OF MIDDLESEX AND SURREY.

THIS Provincial Grand Lodge held its summer meeting at the Star and Garter Hotel, Richmond, on Saturday, the 7th instant, the Right Worshipful Brother Col. Sir Francis Burdett, Bart., Provincial Grand Master, presiding. The attendance of Grand Officers and brethren was not quite so numerous as on former occasions, probably owing to the many other attractions for outdoor enjoyment which the day afforded. Apologies for absence were numerous, for each and all of which, however, most sufficient reasons were given. Amongst those present were the Very Worshipful Bros. Frederic Davison Deputy Provincial Grand Master, R. Clutton Prov. G.S.W., C. Hammerton Treasurer, E. Florence Registrar, W. G. Brighten Secretary, Driver Superintendent of Works, H. Faija A.D.C., and G. J. Dunkley Organist, Officers of the Provincial Grand Lodge. Of the Past Provincial Grand Officers there were also present Very Worshipful Bros. W. S. Moses P.P.G.C. The Provincial Grand Lodge was opened at 5.30, and the minutes of the previous Provincial Grand Mark Lodge meeting, held at Teddington on the 26th July 1882, were confirmed. The roll of Lodges, numbering twenty-five, was then called, and save in four instances were found to be represented by brethren present. The Warrant of re-appointment of the Right Worshipful Brother Sir Francis Burdett, Bart., as Provincial Grand Master having been read, the Officers for the ensuing year were appointed, and those present invested in the following order, viz.:—

The Committee for General Purposes appointed and elected were the R.W. Prov. G. Master, the V.W. Prov. Dep. G.M., the Grand Wardens, Treasurer, Registrar and Secretary, and Bros. J. M. Klenck, S. W. Lambert, R. Clutton, and H. Faija.

The Treasurer's account was presented by the Auditors, and the balance in favour of the Grand Lodge being found satisfactory, it was resolved, on the proposition of the Prov. G. Sec., that the sum of seven guineas should be transferred to the Benevolent Fund.

The Banner of the Provincial Grand Lodge, voted at the previous meeting, was placed in its proper position, and was much admired by the brethren generally for its elegance and appropriate device. There being no further business before the Grand Lodge it was closed in due form, and the brethren adjourned to banquet, the Provincial Grand Master presiding. The usual Loyal and Masonic toasts were given, and, in most instances, briefly responded to, the extreme heat of the evening, and an atmosphere which presaged a coming storm, disposing the company to an avoidance of great exertion, and favouring rather a saunter through the grounds and on the balconies than a continued sitting. At an early hour the brethren separated, much gratified with the pleasurable re-union the annual meeting of their Provincial Grand Lodge had afforded them.

A MASONIC SONG.

Ho, Brother, I am a Britisher,
A chip of "heart of oak,"
That wouldn't warp or swerve or stir,
From what I thought or spoke.
And you, a blunt and honest man,
Straightforward, kind, and true—
I tell you, Brother Jonathan,
That you're a Briton too.

I know your heart's an honest heart,
I read your mind and will,
A greyhound, ever on the start,
To run for honour still.
And shrewd to scheme a likely plan,
And stout to see it done,
I tell you, Brother Jonathan,
That you and I are one.

"God save the Queen" delights you still,
And "British Grenadiers,"
The good old strains your heartstrings thrill,
And catch you by the ears.
And we, O hate us, if you can,
For we are proud of you—
We like you, Brother Jonathan,
And "Yankee Doodle" too.

What more, I touch not holier things,
A loftier strain to win,
Nor glance at prophets, priests, and kings,
Of heavenly kith or kin.
As friend with friend, and man with man,
O let our hearts be thus,
A David's love to Jonathan,
Be Jonathan's to us.

The combustion is so perfect that it deodorises the oil, and burns absolutely without smell, giving an intense pure white and beautiful light. It is unrivalled for simplicity in lighting, cleaning, and trimming, and is, in fact, the perfection of artificial light. Suitable for Cottage or Mansion, Churches, Chapels, &c.

MASONIC CEREMONIES OF THE WEEK.

TWO important ceremonies in which the Craft has taken a leading part have to be chronicled this week. The first of these was the presentation to the authorities of St. Albans Abbey of a Masonic Pulpit, which had been subscribed for by English Masons generally. Advantage was taken of the day appointed for the Annual Meeting of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Hertfordshire, which assembled under the banner of the Halsey Lodge, No. 1479, at the Town Hall, St. Albans, on Monday last, and after the regular business of Provincial Grand Lodge had been transacted, a procession was formed, and the brethren proceeded to the Abbey, where a full choral service was performed. The clergymen who took part in the proceedings were the Rev. W. Lawrance, M.A., the Rector; the Rev. P. Deedes, M.A., Prov. Grand Chaplain; the Rev. C. C. Ewbank, M.A., Prov. Grand Chaplain; and the Rev. L. Deedes, M.A., Past Prov. Grand Chaplain. The Pulpit was formally presented, on behalf of the Masonic body, by the Right Worshipful Provincial Grand Master, Bro. T. F. Halsey, M.P., after which a capital sermon was preached by the Rev. W. Oswell Thompson, M.A., Grand Chaplain.

The second event to which we desire to call attention was the ceremonial of laying the Memorial Stone of the York Institute of Art, Science and Literature, by H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, Most Worshipful Grand Master of the United Grand Lodge of England. This took place on Wednesday, when a Special Grand Lodge was held at the Guildhall, while the members of the Provincial Grand Lodge of North and East Yorkshire attended at the Assembly Rooms. The good citizens of York entered most heartily into the spirit that prompted the gathering, and the arrangements made left nothing to be desired. There was a very large number of Freemasons present, the brethren having ably responded to the desire the Provincial Grand Master, the Earl of Zetland, had expressed, that the members of his Province should support him on the occasion. The procession was formed soon after ten o'clock, and was joined by the representatives of Grand Lodge en route. The ceremony was conducted with every regard to Masonic custom, and then the brethren returned to Grand Lodge and Prov. Grand Lodge, which were respectively closed. The Lord Mayor of York afterwards entertained a select party at the Mansion House.

AN EAR OF CORN NEAR A FALL OF WATER.

SOMETIMES strange dreams are born of accidents. The title indicated above is suggestive to all who have pursued and appreciated the mysteries of the Science, and it is pregnant of ideas, which it may be well to ponder, in this "dull" season of the year, when active work is more or less relaxed in favour of what may be termed the lighter duties of the Craft. Travelling along, not many days ago, with an old and valued brother, when the skies were cloudless, and the country redolent of a thousand odours of the flowers that blossomed among the new-mown hay, we came across an ear or two of wheat. Full in the bloom they were and heavy, and speculation rose as to the promise of the harvest which is yet to come. Our brother fastened the ears in his "button hole," as gladsome as though a maiden had gathered him a bouquet, and we conversed of scenes in "ye olden time"—for we are both bordering on the sere and yellow leaf—in which we had participated, when youth gave colour to the cheek, and care had graved no furrows on the brow. On through the meadowy fields where cowslips wavered, and daisies peeped their yellow jealousies, half in anger, half in coquetry, amid the nodding crowd, where the modest clover slept until the after-math, and Nature breathed with that sublime rest of which the poets sing, we sauntered in the midst of a congenial interchange of thought and reminiscence which all men love after the absence of many years. Recalled were many memories spent in the dignified quietude of Lodge, when work was being done, and the sublime mysteries which only Masons know were in the course of active operation. Back again upon the recollection came wafted the beauteous recollections of the days when the "predominant" light first dawned upon the vision, and the sacred histories were traced upon the chequered floor. All this in fancy, but still to congenial hearts most pleasant and exhilarating. "As iron sharpeneth iron, so doth the countenance of man his friend." The old proverb has its significance, which only true friends know, and who such friends as Masons? But to the moral of the story. In the course of our perambulations, when the sun shone at its meridian, and all nature wore the livery of summer, we came across a brook, o'er whose pellucid stream a rude bridge was cast, and in the transit of it our brother chanced to lose an ear of corn. Quoth he, "I have lost mine ear of corn beside a fall of water!" What memories it recalled, what thoughts engendered! Is there any need to sermonise? The significance of the text to Masons is apparent. But there are other aspirations as the outcome of such an incident, simple as it might appear. The sowing of the seed may bring home to us the birth of that Masonic light which has brought such blessing to mankind; and the fall of water which the Great Architect of the Universe has caused to flow must blend in the unique plan of fructifying the earth and covering it with plenteous gladness. Applied in an abstract sense, the ripening of brotherly love, relief and truth, is only by the dew which is cast upon it by the tenets which the Craft begets; and over the united whole there shines the halo of a great and beneficent Creator. The incident is not without its moral. Old friends meet after a severance of many years—sweet memories are revived by the refreshing rains of retained and retaining affection. The seeds of fraternal unity, sown years ago, but long forgotten, are seen again in the full growth of re-united friendship, whilst the showers of memory fall, unexpectedly and welcome, upon a harvest of nearly unremembered things. How glibly we conversed upon recounted pleasures from the simple fact of that ear of corn being inadvertently dropped beside the fall of water! It reminded us of scenes so full of wholesome pleasure in the long, long time ago, when the heartstrings knew none of the worry and toil which come to all men of mature age. There were dreams of moments so sublime when, at the feet of our Gamaliels, we sat and learnt the lessons of our Masonic faith. How gigantic we thought they were in the Art, and think so still. How grateful for the knowledge they instilled into our untutored minds, and how revered stand the portraits of their venerable visages before us. Could we but see them now as they appeared so many years ago, how much more might they teach us? But time has fled, and we have made less use of it than we should have done. We regret it now, and we are sermonising again. Off at a tangent to the sequestered lawn where our summer banquet was held, where we first made the acquaintance of those who have since been the joy and solace of our lives. How bright were the beams of that morning sun, and how the glad birds warbled a welcome to that merry party, as the horses pranced along the flower-bespattered lanes towards the glen! The ears of corn were ripening then in a tenfold sense. Between gaps in the luxuriant foliage on every side the smiling corn sang forth its golden sonnets to enraptured ears, and hearts beat happily in tune to the universal harmony. Hard by, the rippling brooklet murmured forth its "God speed" to our way, and along the by-ways of the country side all was liquid and pellucid peace. No dangling dandies there, nor maudlin maidens; but all in the hey-day of substantial pleasure bent. Our banquet was spread upon the emerald sward, and in the full tide of contentment digestion waited on good appetite. 'Tis libel on our "social club" that gregarious instincts hold their sway, for did not the merry dance go round, and pastimes innocent prevail? The trees could never whisper over a more loving group than at our summer banquet, nor could birds chant merrier over more gladsome music. The ears of corn were never seen to dance more blithely than did our sisters in that mellow sunset; nor ever did the rivulet make happier music than was the rippling laughter through those woods. But even the reverie of the dreamer must have its close. Suffice, methinks, that in this brief adventure such pleasant thoughts must have their birth and end. It was a gleesome episode, at all events, and our friend's recovery of his ear of corn from that clear stream has awakened a crowd of happy thoughts. It reminds us of pleasant and instructive hours spent in the pursuit of the noblest and most unselfish science the world has ever seen, inasmuch as it embraces the widest and grandest scope of human benevolence and love; and with it must ever be blended a universal domain of brotherhood unequalled in the conception of man. That ears of corn may spring from the grains sown in fruitful places, well watered by the drippings of that fraternal kindness which knows no bounds amongst us, is the wish of every true and good member of the Craft. Nor can it be otherwise. The very nature and essence of the Craft are, that the germs of good fellowship and charity shall spread even as the fields produce their ever-increasing yields of fruit; and as the softening rains of heaven are needed for their maturity, so is the dew of kindly feeling and brotherly love necessary for the existence of a system in which human kindness and a divine benevolence are held in an indissoluble union.

PRECEDENCE AND REWARDS.

[COMMUNICATED.]

IT would not be wise to keep up an irritating discussion after the cause that provoked it has ceased. If the question of precedence stood alone, after the amende honorable of the Most Worshipful Grand Master further reference to the matter might be deemed questionable, if not indiscreet. But it does not stand alone; issues have been raised and reflections stimulated which the members of the Craft would do well to ponder over. There has been looseness in government, and indifference on the part of the brethren. Without going into minor details as to the general powers possessed by the Grand Master, it is quite clear that for many years there has been concurrent action on the part of the Grand Master and Grand Lodge in reference to certain matters of procedure. At one time one authority has exercised that right, at another the other, and both without the least question being raised as to the power or discretion of either. Custom makes the unwritten law, and it must be admitted that the Grand Master had reason to believe that he was acting within his right, and was convinced of the prudence of the step, when he ventured to make certain alterations with regard to precedence; and probably his act would have gone unchallenged, as others had gone before, had it not been for the agitation set up by the aggrieved few. It is astonishing what a few disappointed men can do; instances are witnessed daily, and the recent action with regard to the precedence question adds one more to the number. The opposition has succeeded in obtaining the withdrawal of the obnoxious Order, but there the matter ends. Nothing has been settled, and the Grand Master, out of respect to opinions strongly expressed, and in his desire for peace and harmony, has retreated from a position which he believed he had a right to assume. That right still remains a debateable matter, and unless now determined, may one day again arise and give trouble. Now is the time to settle the question—to define the prerogatives of the Grand Master and to place Grand Lodge on a sure footing. Were that done there could be no difficulty in the future, and as the temper of the brethren is now calm, they might approach the subject in that generous spirit so well exemplified by the Grand Master. Large discretionary powers must always accompany great responsibilities, and it would only be right that the occupant of the ruling chair of the Craft should be invested with dignity and honours. It is equally just that he should not be made the sport of circumstances, and that he should be called upon to undo an act which was urged upon him by those who ought to be well-informed on all matters relating to the general body. The Grand Master has withdrawn, at the request of the discontented; he has not said he exceeded his powers. He may not repeat the experiment, but he has set an example of caution that may be followed by his successors; that is if Grand Lodge happens to be as indifferent in the time to come as it has been in the past. To avoid such a contingency the powers of the Grand Master and Grand Lodge ought to be at once defined. It stands to reason that the G. Master cannot be placed in a worse position than the Master of a Lodge. The latter has full power over the appointment of his Officers, leaving the right of election of certain working Officers of the Lodge in the hands of the brethren. That is a wise provision, and works well. The W.M. cannot alter precedence of office or the persons after they have been appointed, but he can and does determine who his Officers shall be. Custom provides the order of succession, but the W.M. can insist upon the survival of the fittest. This authority, although possessed, is rarely exercised, and yet it is greater than that used by the Grand Master in the recent instance of precedence. In one case the assumed right of reversion is postponed, and it may be destroyed; in the other a few Officers suffer slightly in dignity. Broadly speaking, Grand Lodge should determine fundamental principles, and the Grand Master, as chief of the executive, should be endowed with every dignity and power short of that of autocrat. He should rule like a constitutional monarch among a free people; his privileges should be many and dignified; but the source of all power should come from the body whose representatives form Grand Lodge, and who alone can make laws.

In practice there is a difference in the appointment of Officers between the Grand Master and the Master of a Lodge. The Grand Master must necessarily rely upon those surrounding him for advice as to fitness. He seldom attends Grand Lodge, and cannot, if he would, discover for himself who from merit are worthy of honour. He must depend upon others, and thus a door is open to cliqueism, which at times prefers friendship to merit. In Lodges generally this evil is avoided to a large extent. The Worshipful Master springs from the ranks; he passes through grades of office; he knows the duties of each because he has discharged them, and none is better fitted than himself to select his Officers. In Provincial Grand Lodges the question assumes another character, and one not pleasant to contemplate. There money is too often the test of merit, and brethren are appointed to office who are sometimes even ignorant of the forms of the Lodge, and not unfrequently destitute of the spirit of the Craft. They take superior rank over the honest and able but poor brother, and many a P.M. is driven into scorn and indifference because the true spirit of Masonry is defiled to his dishonour. Many members join more than one Lodge for the sole purpose of being appointed Prov. Grand Officers, they are, as a rule, strangers to the Right Worshipful Provincial Grand Master, but a few wire-pullers prepare the way and ambition is gratified. There are serious objections to the loose way of appointing Provincial Grand Officers. There is at least the danger that unworthy and incompetent men may be selected, and it is certain that men whose connection with the Province is close, and whose claims should be paramount, are passed over to please new comers who happen to be blessed with money and friends at court. It would be difficult to cure this evil by law. No rules that could be framed would meet every contingency, and it would not be wise to make too many laws. They are valuable as guides to general principles; they are fetters in their application where the heart plays so large a part, and where liberty, equality and fraternity are watchwords. It is not laws then that are wanted, but a nobler conception of the spirit of Freemasonry. Less selfishness and more sacrifice, a greater honouring of principles and less regard for outward show are needed. There is plenty of scope for ambition apart from the unhealthy craving after office outside of the immediate sphere in which many brethren move, and a love of charity and fair play ought to suggest retirement rather than forwardness. Each centre has its own aspirants to office, and these have first claim to precedence; if they work, theirs should be the reward, and should not be given to those who migrate for a well understood, though not altogether honourable purpose, however rich and able they may be. Money qualification and the pretensions that are set up in consequence are the bane of Freemasonry; they are hostile to its genius, fatal to its spirit. They set up barriers, breed discontent, and sour the minds of the disappointed, and grieve the heart of the just. Living principles become dry bones, and nothing but decay can follow. There is something in the Craft nobler even than the Charities, precious jewels as they are. The Institutions which dot the outskirts of the metropolis are the outward visible signs to the brethren and to the world of some of the results of Freemasonry. They are grand in their motives and in their results. They are matchless as monuments of generosity, and yet they are as nothing to the hidden inward spirit which gives life and stability to the Craft. All else pales before the lessons taught in Lodge, inculculated in the traditions and enforced in the ceremonies. For those who realise the grand truths of the Order the best reward is the strength they gain in consequence of their knowledge and faithfulness. They are not the clamourers for office, not the slaves of a selfish ambition, not the idolaters of money. Nevertheless, they are worthy of all honour; they are the salt of the Craft, the high priests of a grand creed, the living embodiment of the true life of Freemasonry. They could not cry aloud for praise, they would scorn to purchase it if they could, but they richly deserve to be honoured for the faith that is in them. They are few in number, perhaps; too few unfortunately. They leaven the mass, nevertheless, and the object of all brethren should be to increase their ranks. The task would be easy were the tenets of Freemasonry better understood by those who hold them, and were they carried out in spirit and in truth when they are realised. The age of shoddy has affected the Craft, but it has not destroyed it, for it is founded on too sure a basis. Its influence for good is lessened, owing to the narrow views that prevail; growth is retarded, and strife is too frequently provoked. What is wanted is a higher regard for the precepts of the Craft, for the precedents that abound in the ceremonies, and all else would follow.

The Quarterly Court of the Royal Masonic Institution for Girls, held on Saturday last, was not so largely attended as it was anticipated would be the case; this, however, may be attributed to the fact that during the morning a very heavy thunderstorm passed over the metropolis, which for a time brought business matter almost to a standstill. Brother Lieutenant-Colonel Creaton Past Grand Treasurer occupied the chair, and there were also present Bros. the Rev. A. Woodford, Webb, Dubois, Binckes, H. Massey, Lovegrove, Grey, Rucker, Hammerton, Smith, Stevens, Matier, Saunders, Bowyer, Allen, Johnson, Dehane, and F. R. W. Hedges Secretary. After the minutes of last Quarterly Court had been read and confirmed, eight vacancies were declared for the October Election, for which it appears there are now thirty-two candidates. The next business was in connection with the proposed purchase of land adjoining the Institution, and to consider the following report of General Committee:—

"The General Committee reports to the Quarterly General Court that, in consequence of an intimation conveyed to the House Committee from the owner of the freehold land adjacent to the Institution—that he was about to offer for sale nine acres, or thereabouts, bounding two sides of its grounds, and that the lowest sum he would take for the whole, which he declined to divide, was at the rate of £4000 per acre—Col. Creaton, with the concurrence of his colleagues, had obtained from him a promise that such land should not be sold until the views and opinion of the General Court as to the advisability of acquiring the property for the Institution could be obtained.

That taking into consideration the facts that the land, if sold to a third party, might be dealt with in a manner most prejudicial to the School, and that if purchased by the Institution a very considerable and valuable portion of it could be re-sold, this Committee consider the subject is one which should receive the fullest consideration at the hands of the governing body of the Institution."

Bro. Hedges also read for information the following resolution passed at the last meeting of the General Committee:—

That the House Committee be authorised to obtain a report from Messrs. Clutton as to the value of Mr. Noel Whiting's land at Battersea, and the manner in which a portion of it could be disposed of, and submit the same to the General Court.

In reference to this he stated that Bro. Clutton had informed the House Committee that he could not be prepared with the report in time for that day's meeting. Col. Creaton, before entering on the discussion of the business now coming before the brethren, believed it would perhaps clear the air a little bit if he said a few words. It must not be thought that the owner of this land was forcing it upon the Institution; it was quite the contrary. When the Institution purchased half an acre of land some time ago, Mr. Whiting promised him (Col. Creaton) that whenever the land was for disposal he would give the Institution the first refusal. That had been done. Both he and the House Committee thought it would be a very improper act on their part if they decided the matter without bringing it first before the Quarterly Court. That was the position of affairs. He had seen Mr. Whiting more than once as to the price, and he had stated that what he required was £4,000 an acre; but in the event of the Institution purchasing it he would give £900 to the Institution. Bro. Letchworth thought before the matter was gone into they had better be in order, by moving that the report of the General Committee be received. After discussion Bro. Saunders moved, "That it is inexpedient to accept the offer of Mr. Noel Whiting." This was seconded by Bro. James Stevens, and carried unanimously. At the request of Bro. Col. Creaton, Bro. Hedges read a letter from Bro. Belton, land surveyor, Norfolk-street, fully bearing out the statements of Bros. Saunders and Stevens with regard to the value of the land; and, on the motion of Bro. Letchworth, duly seconded, a letter was ordered to be written to Bro. Belton, thanking him for his trouble and kindness in the matter. A vote of thanks to Col. Creaton for presiding closed the proceedings.

In reference to this question the Evening News states "that land in the best situation in the neighbourhood has been fetching only £2,100, £2,200, and £2,300, and it was very properly suggested, that if the land is worth £4,000 an acre, that on which the Institution stands had better be sold, and the School taken to a site where more reasonable prices rule; in which case, instead of having 230 girls in the School, there might be 250 or more."

The Quarterly Court of the Subscribers of the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys was held on Monday, at Freemasons' Hall, Bro. George Plucknett P.G.D., Treasurer of the Institution, in the chair. Amongst those present were:—Bros. Colonel J. Creaton, A. M. Broadley, C. F. Matier, S. J. Parkhouse, L. Ruf, G. Bolton, G. Bolton jun., J. J. Murray, B. Baker, A. E. Gladwell, D. M. Dewar, J. Moon, B. Lemere, F. Adlard, H. Massey, F. Davison, T. Cubitt, C. J. Perceval, H. Venn, H. Dicketts, D. Rolls, H. Smith, S. B. Wilson, C. H. Webb, R. W. Stewart, H. S. Goodall, A. Torkington, and F. Binckes. After the reading and confirmation of the minutes of the last Quarterly Court, vacancies were declared in the School for 20 boys, who will be elected in October next, out of a list of 64 candidates. On the motion of Bro. Raynham W. Stewart P.G.D., Vice-President of the Institution, the following resolutions were unanimously agreed to:—

1. That having regard to the unprecedented success of the recent Festival, which involved unusual and excessive labour, and in appreciation of the result, after 22 years' service, the sum of £340 be awarded to the Secretary, Bro. F. Binckes.
2. That in accordance with the recommendation of the House Committee, the sum of £105 be awarded to Miss Elizabeth Hall, now in the 20th year of her office as Matron, in consideration of her valuable services generally and during periods of sickness, especially in the outbreak of scarlatina last year.

A vote of thanks to the Chairman closed the proceedings.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF SUFFOLK.

THE annual meeting of the several Lodges in the Province of Suffolk was held at Ipswich on Friday. It is now some years since the Provincial Grand Lodge was held at Ipswich, and the four local Lodges gave to the brethren of the Province a very hearty fraternal greeting, and several members of the Craft honoured the event by displaying flags and bunting in the principal thoroughfares of the town. The Lodge was held at the Freemasons' Hall, under the Presidency of the Provincial Grand Master (Bro. Lord Waveney). There was a large number of officers and brethren present. The Lodge was opened in due form by the Provincial G.M., assisted by the V.W. Bro. the Rev. C. J. Martyn P.G. Chaplain of England D.P.G.M. The Report of the Committee of General Purposes was received and adopted, except so far as related to the Charities, the Committees' recommendations being substituted by a resolution that £10 10s be given to each of the three Masonic Charities—the Boys' School, the Girls' School, and the Benevolent Fund. The representatives of the various Lodges presented their reports, all of which were of a very satisfactory character. The P.G.M. said he had great pleasure in recognizing the great services that had been rendered to the Masonic Charities by Bro. A. J. Grimwade, Secretary to the Suffolk Masonic Charity Association, by specially appointing and investing him as P.G. Senior Warden. At the investiture of the appointed officers immediately afterwards, Bro. Grimwade vacated the chair and assumed the rank of a Past Officer. The following Officers were then appointed and invested :—

Bro. J. M. Canova	G. Senior Warden
B. P. Grimsey	G. Junior Warden
Rev. R. C. M. Rouse, Rev. P. L. Cautley	G. Chaplains
W. P. Cooper	G. Registrar
N. Tracy	G. Secretary
B. Gall	G. Senior Deacon
J. Napier	G. Junior Deacon
R. Garrard	G. Sup. of Works
W. Clarke P.G.P.	G. D. of C.
C. Emmerson	G. Assist. D. of C.
W. Mackney	G. Sword Bearer
G. A. Hardacre	G. Organist
C. H. Wood	G. Pursuivant
V. D. Colchester, J. M. Franks, E. Sparke	G. Stewards

On the motion of Bro. W. Boby, seconded by Bro. W. Clarke, Bro. E. P. Youell was unanimously re-elected Treasurer, and invested. The R.W.P.G.M. Lord Waveney expressed the great pleasure he felt at the satisfactory reports that had been made by the various Lodges, and said he observed that the same feeling ran through all, i.e., a feeling of independence—a desire to make the most of what their powers might be. He had been very much struck with the remarks of several of the brethren, who said with very proper and justifiable pride that though they were but a small Lodge, they were pleased to report that they were in a good position. The brethren then formed in procession and marched to the Tower Church to attend divine service. As the Prov. Grand Master and Prov. Grand Officers entered the Church the Organist played the National Anthem. The prayers were intoned by the Rev. J. R. Turnock, the first lesson was read by the Rev. Dr. Sedgwick, Past Grand Chaplain of England, and the second lesson by the Rev. A. Tighe Gregory P.P.G. Chap. The Anthem was taken from Psalm cxxiii., "Behold how good and joyful a thing it is, brethren, to dwell together in unity," (Clark Whitfield). By permission of the Rev. J. B. Turnock special hymns were sung. The sermon was preached by the V.W. Brother Rev. P. L. Cautley, vicar of Southwold, Prov. Grand Chaplain, who took for his text the words, "That they all may be one; as Thou, Father, art in me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that Thou hast sent me," — John xvii. 21. It was not necessary, the preacher said, to point out the advantages, the strength of union. No great work had ever been done in this world without it, and it was this lack of union that was so much to be deplored amongst Christians at the present time. When they saw the divisions that existed between man and man, and between man and God, could they, under the circumstances, be surprised at the agnosticism which was becoming so prevalent in the world. Brethren were working and fighting against each other, instead of fighting against sin. Divisions amongst brethren, however, could not destroy the unity of a family. There could be no union without order, and without full and free submission to the individual will and opinion of properly constituted authorities. The Freemasons displayed in outward form and ritual the spirit of their principles—the great spirit of common brotherhood, and while they recognised the fact that distinctions amongst men were highly necessary for the preservation of due subordination, and the reward of merit, they never forgot the fact that they were all brethren, and that the lowest was entitled to their regard equally with the highest, and that the time would come when all distinctions, except those of goodness and virtue, would cease, and death, the great leveller of all, would reduce them to the same status. These principles of brotherhood, love, rectitude, and virtue were not held merely theoretically by Masons, but were practically acted upon amongst them; and it was an interesting fact that from their Masonic Schools it was not known that one single lad had been brought before a magistrate as a delinquent, or that any girl had lost that most precious flower in her maiden wreath—her purity. The principle of Masonry was love, and God was love. He believed, as a handmaid for Christianity, there was a great future for Masonry. In conclusion, the Prov. Grand Chaplain said, as accepted Masons, they could not part without discharging one pleasure and duty of their calling. He pleaded on behalf of a charity which was not local, but which in its large-heartedness had proved itself Provincial. He pleaded for the Ipswich Nurses' Home. How many poor and afflicted ones had been blessed by this institution of love it was impossible to say. Out of 270 families supplied this year with nurses, 151 were cases of poverty in which nurses were provided without charge by the Institution, and in cases of necessity not only was the nurse provided gratuitously, but the patient's needs were also provided for by the Home. The offertory, at the conclusion of the service, amounted to £7 16s 9d. After service, the brethren re-formed in procession, and marched back to the Masonic Hall, where the Lodge business was resumed. Bro. Grimwade P.P.G.S.W. read the report of the Charity Association, which stated that the past year had been distinguished in a very marked degree by a greater liberality on the part of brethren in the Provincial Masonic Lodges, and also by most successful results in securing the election of their candidates. The Prov. Grand Master said he was glad to observe the great increase of energy and zeal that had been shown in this Province in the collection of money for Charitable purposes, and he thought this year he might say they had done largely and well. Their needs were great, but he was sure to the extent of their power they had been provided for. Bro. Roby P.P.G.S.W. laid before the Lodge a scheme for increasing the number of Life Governors of the Masonic Charities, and expressed the hope that the proposal would be very largely adopted in the Province. The Provincial Grand Master spoke in favour of the scheme, which he thought must commend itself to them all. Before proceeding further there was one matter to which he wished more particularly to allude. At an early part of the proceedings he remarked that he should find an opportunity before the close of signifying—though perhaps not in a way that was usual in this Lodge, but was customary in Masonry at large—the sense he entertained of the gratuitous and excellent and energetic services rendered by Bro. Grimwade, whom he had promoted to what might be called brevet rank, as Senior G. Warden in this Province. They were doubtless acquainted with the nature of brevet rank in military service—it conferred a distinction upon an individual who was honoured by the confidence of his Sovereign, without conferring upon him any special obligation or duty. He felt also that some reference should be made to the valuable services rendered by Bro. Pain, of the Bury Lodge, on the occasion of the lamented death of their late Provincial Grand Secretary, Bro. Lucia, which came upon them quite unexpectedly when the natural and appointed leaders of the Lodge were absent, and he thought his name should be associated in honour with that of Bro. Grimwade. His services on the melancholy occasion referred to gave him a claim to their consideration, and he recommended his name to them to be remembered as that of a good and sterling Brother. He also wished to bring before the Lodge the name of Bro. Long. A very short time had elapsed after he had received, at Lowestoft, notice of the loss they had sustained by the death of Bro. Lucia, when on the spot, almost as though he arose out of the sea, quite as unexpectedly and quite as welcome, appeared their Bro. Long, who was acquainted with the work of organisation, and assisted him materially in the discharge of the duties of the Lodge. The two brethren he had last mentioned were well entitled to the good graces of the Lodge. Bro. Casley having announced the amount of the offertory at the Tower Church, the Provincial Grand Master, with the sanction of the Lodge, ordered that it should be paid over to the Vicar, who it was understood would hand it to the Committee of the Ipswich Nurses' Home. The Provincial Grand Master said they had within the last twelve months to regret the loss of three prominent members of the Craft. One who had been withdrawn from them was for many years a useful and noble member of the profession to which he belonged; he alluded to their Bro. Freeman. They next lost their Bro. Lucia, and no person was in a position to speak more distinctly of the qualities and qualifications of the Prov. Grand Secretary than he who had the honour of guiding the Province; from the confidential relationship in which they stood no one could appreciate his qualities more then the Prov. Grand Master. He was very sensible of the merits of Brother Lucia, and personally, as he was sure did also every member of the Province, he mourned his loss. Then, again, an old an experienced Mason had been taken away from them in the person of Bro. Strathern, of the Halesworth Lodge. Many years ago, when he first made his acquaintance he was struck with the excellent manner in which he conducted his Lodge, and he found that he had brought from that country which his name suggested those habits of regularity and forethought, both in regard to the Craft and to civil life, which distinguished those who came from beyond the Tweed. The three names he had mentioned would, he was sure, long continue to be honoured amongst them. The Deputy Prov. Grand Master, Bro. Rev. C. J. Martyn, said he was only echoing the feelings of every single brother in that Grand Lodge when he said they most heartily endorsed all that had been so kindly and so eloquently put before them by the Grand Master, and they shared in the regret which he had expressed in so touching a manner at the death of those brethren. They left names behind them which it would be a long time before the Masons of Suffolk, would forget, The Deputy Prov. Grand Master spoke upon the spread of Mark Masonry in the Province, and denying that there was any rivalry between the two, expressed the hope that for many years to come Mark Masonry and Craft Masonry would work side by side. Bro. Tracy P.G.S. read a letter, which had been received from Mrs. Lucia, the widow of the late P.G.S., expressing her heartfelt thanks for the letter of condolence and sympathy sent to her on the death of her husband. A vote of thanks was accorded to the Rev. J. R. Turnock for his kindness in granting the use of St. Mary-le-Tower Church, and before closing the Lodge the P.G.M. expressed the hope that they as brethren might go on in the same spirit as had been shown that day, and he hoped and trusted, under the favour of the Great Architect of the Universe, with the same and equal results. They could only water and plant—the increase came not from them, but from a higher source. The last terrible years had sorely afflicted the district from which they mainly drew their resources, but they now felt that the time was come when compensation would be given to them, that they would reap the reward of their toil. In the meantime it behoved them to exercise that active Charity which bound up wounds and helped the weaker brethren. More he had not to say, except that he was, year after year, more and more indebted for the conscious strength which he felt to the support of those over whom he had the honour to preside. The Lodge was then closed in the usual form.

The banquet was held at the Masonic Hall in the evening, under the presidency of the Prov. Grand Master Lord Waveney, who was supported by the Deputy Grand Master Bro. the Rev. C. J. Martyn Past Grand Chaplain of England, Bro. the Rev. Dr. Sedgwick, and the Provincial Grand Officers. Bro. Holder, of the Butter Market, was the caterer. The tables were artistically laid, and the menu was admirably served. After dinner the Prov. Grand Master proposed the Queen. Song, "God Save the Queen," Bro. D. D. Steele. The Prov. Grand Master next proposed, the Grand Master of England H.R.H. the Prince of Wales. They all knew what a deep interest his Royal Highness took in Masonry, and how well he discharged the duties devolving upon him. Song, Masonic version, "God bless the Prince of Wales," Bro. George Abbott. The Prov. Grand Master proposed the Pro Grand Master Lord Carnarvon, Dep. Grand Master, and the Grand Officers Past and Present. Bro. the Rev. Dr. Sedgwick P.G. Chaplain, in response, said he need not say how heartily he felt Lord Carnarvon was the right man in the right place, and he might say the same of Lord Lathom—he did not think two better officers could have been chosen. He was quite convinced that the Grand Officers did their best to promote the interests of the Craft. Bro. the Rev. C. J. Martyn D.P.G.M. also responded, and said he was sure they were all as pleased as he was to see their Provincial Grand Master, whom they all loved and esteemed, and revered in every position in life, amongst them in restored health and strength. There were few more popular Provincial Grand Masters in England than their own. When his name was mentioned it was always received as it should be, but he wanted them to look at Lord Waveney that night from another point of view. They knew what joy and rejoicing there was in a family when a member of that family came of age. He had just been told that Lord Waveney came of age that night as Provincial Grand Master of Suffolk. Now they knew when a young man came of age they looked forward and prognosticated many years of life and happiness before him, and he was sure he was only saying what they all felt when he said that from the bottom of his heart every single soul in the room wished that that would be fulfilled. He gave them with all the honour they could put into it "The health of the Prov. Grand Master of Suffolk, Lord Waveney." Glee "The Red Cross Knight," Bros. Abbott, Steele, and Brockbank. The Prov. Grand Master, in response, said he had passed a considerable part of his time before he had the honour and the great privilege and pleasure of being associated with this Province, but he could safely say he had learnt more in the 21 years he had acted as P.G.M. than he had learnt in the 38 years previously. In the year 1829 it was the fashion at Cambridge for undergraduates to become Freemasons, and in that year he became a Mason with them. If they deducted 29 from 83 they would see what a very long period that left, and as long as he had health and strength they would both be employed as far as they could be in the service of the Craft. He thanked them for the agreeable surprise they had given him in celebrating his coming of age, and in the second place he thanked them for the reception they had given him, and for the honour they had done him that day. He only wished the trouble was greater on his part, in order that he might show how earnestly he desired to serve them. Song—"Within those sacred bowers"—Bro. Brockbank. The Prov. Grand Master proposed the health of the Deputy Prov. Grand Master Bro. C. J. Martyn. His activity and energy in the cause of Masonry were well-known, and if it were possible for any one to realise the fable of the bird that was at two places at the same time, his impression was that they would find it in the person of their Deputy Prov. Grand Master. Wherever he went he left his mark, but he passed so rapidly that they would wonder where the bird was gone. But more than that he was a bird of good omen. Year after year he found that his name was always received with the same kindly feeling and the same enthusiasm, and he now asked them to drink to the health of the D.P.G.M. Bro. the Rev. C. J. Martyn, who was well-known throughout all the Lodges in England. Bro. the Rev. C. J. Martyn, in response, expressed the great pleasure he had always experienced in working under Lord Waveney, and said he had never for one single moment had the slightest cause to regret holding office, because he had been so well supported and backed up by the Provincial Grand Master and his brethren and friends of the Province of Suffolk. Wherever he went he always found the same cordial hearty welcome, and whatever he said was taken in good part. Having acknowledged the great assistance he had received from the Prov. Grand Secretary, and expressed the wish that he could more often come amongst them, the D.P.G.M. said so far as he was able they would find him ready and willing to carry out his obligation. Song, "The Pilgrim of Love," Bro. Abbott. Bro. Boby proposed the Charities. Bro. Binckes and Bro. Terry responded. Duet, "Sound the loud trumpet," Bros. Steele and Brockbank. The Provincial Grand Master thanked the brethren of the four Ipswich Lodges for the hospitable reception given to the Provincial Grand Lodge, and the Deputy Grand Master proposed the Officers of the Provincial Grand Lodge past and present, coupled with the names of Bro. Canova, of the Southwold Lodge, and Bro. Grimsey, of the British Union. Bro. Canova having replied, Bro. Grimsey said it had been a great satisfaction to him to receive the high honour conferred upon him by the Prov. G. Master, and he hoped the badge of office would pass from him unsullied in any possible way. The Deputy Prov. Grand Master, who had now assumed the chair, Lord Waveney being obliged to leave, proposed the health of the Prov. Grand Secretary, Bro. Tracy, and spoke of the valuable assistance he rendered to the Province when they were suddenly deprived of the services of their late lamented Brother Lucia. They had paid their tribute of affection for their departed friend, and he now asked them to drink the health of his most worthy successor. Bro. Tracy P.G.S. responded. He expressed his sense of the loss the Province had sustained by the death of Brother Lucia, whom he had known for many years, and with whom he was associated as the founder of St. Edmund's Lodge. He did not wish to make any promises, because he knew they were very easily made and often fulfilled with great difficulty. They had already shown two of the great virtues of Masonry—faith and hope, and he now asked them to exercise that other virtue, charity—in dealing with his performances. He should try thoroughly to do his duty without fear or favour, and he trusted when the time came when he should be called upon to leave the office, there would be as great an earnest of good feeling amongst them as there was now on his entering upon it. The Deputy Prov. Grand Master proposed the W. Masters of the Lodges in the Province. Bros. G. Abbott (St. Luke's), A. Raphael (Prince of Wales), and Ardleigh (Stour Valley) responded. Song—"Three merry men"—Bro. Alexander. The Deputy Prov. Grand Master proposed the health of Bro. W. Clarke, Prov. Grand D.C., and said it was a great advantage to any Lodge to have so efficient a Director of Ceremonies. Brother W. Clarke, in response, alluded to the proposal for the erection of a new Temple in which to hold Grand Lodge meetings, and also to the question of the Revision of the Book of Constitutions. He hoped this matter would be very carefully watched, and that the brethren would hesitate before they attempted to alter any of the grand fundamental principles which had actuated and guided Grand Lodges in the past. The Visiting Brethren brought the toast list to a close, the other items on the musical programme being—Song, "Hybrias the Cretan," Bro. Brockbank; and glee, "Mynheer van Dunk," Bros. Abbott, Steele, and Brockbank.—East Anglian Daily Times.

PROV. GRAND LODGE OF HERTFORDSHIRE.

THE members of this Provincial Grand Lodge assembled at the Town Hall, St. Albans, on Monday, the 16th inst., under the presidency of their Right Worshipful Prov. Grand Master, Bro. Thomas Frederick Halsey, M.P. The proceedings on this occasion were rendered especially interesting as opportunity had been taken to unveil the pulpit which has been erected by the Freemasons of England as their contribution towards the work of restoration which has now been going on for some years at the Abbey of St. Albans. The erection of the pulpit was entrusted to Bro. Christopher Miskin, the W.M. of Lodge 1479, who has also carried on the work of restoration in this venerable pile, and who, by the care and attention he has displayed, has given every satisfaction to the authorities.

The business of the day commenced with the reading of the minutes of the Provincial Grand Lodge held on the 13th July 1882, which were unanimously confirmed. On calling the roll of the Provincial Grand Officers responses were made by Bros. Dr. F. H. Wilson Iles Deputy Provincial Grand Master, J. E. Cussans, W. H. Hobson, Revs. Lewis Deedes and C. C. The report of the Committee appointed to consider the subject of Charity Organisation was presented, and the rules, as printed and circulated, were adopted. The report of the Board of Finance showed that Provincial Grand Lodge had an amount invested in Consols of £89 17s 1d, and that there was a balance in hands of the Treasurer of £60 3s 4d, giving a total of £150 0s 5d. On the motion of Bro. T. S. Carter P.P.G.J.W. P.M. and Sec. Hertford Lodge, No. 403, the sum of twenty guineas was voted from the funds of Prov. Grand Lodge to the Royal Masonic Benevolent Institution, the amount to be placed on the list of W. Bro. R. B. Croft. Bro. Jas. Terry Prov. G.D.C. P.M. King Harold Lodge, No. 1327, moved, "That the sum of ten pounds be voted to the Halsey Lodge towards defraying the expenses of entertaining Provincial Grand Lodge," this was also carried unanimously. Bro. F. H. Wilson Iles Deputy Provincial Grand Master proposed, that the sum of ten guineas be voted from the funds of the Provincial Grand Lodge to the St. Albans Hospital. This received the sanction of those present, and then it was agreed that a further sum of £15 should be invested in Consols; and that the publication of the Provincial Calendar be continued. The Committee reported that since the last meeting of Provincial Grand Lodge the M.W. Grand Master had granted a warrant, dated 30th October 1882, for the Earl of Clarendon Lodge, No. 1984, to meet at the Freemasons' Hall, Watford; and that the new Lodge was duly consecrated on the 13th December 1882, by the R.W. Bro. Thomas F. Halsey, M.P., Provincial Grand Master for Hertfordshire; W. Bro. F. H. Wilson Iles, M.D., Deputy Provincial Grand Master, being installed as the first Master by the Very W. Bro. Colonel Shadwell H. Clerke Grand Secretary.

A procession was then formed by Brother Terry, Provincial Grand Director of Ceremonies, assisted by Bros. G. F. Cooke and Charles Allen, and the brethren proceeded to St. Albans Abbey, where a full Choral Service was celebrated by the Rector and the Provincial Grand Chaplains. The first lesson was read by the Rev. Brother Ewbank, and the second by the Rev. L. Deedes. After the Anthem —Blessed be Thou—preparations were made for unveiling the pulpit, the erection of which has been carried out by Brother C. Miskin, W.M. of Lodge 1479, from drawings prepared by Mr. J. O. Scott, Architect. The design of the work is of the Decorated Order, each panel being divided by a mullion, and having elaborate tracery with carved crockets. The plinth, bases, shafts, caps, and impost are all of polished Derbyshire marble; the pulpit itself being wrought out of Tisbury stone with marble shafts, and having canopied niches at each angle for the reception of figures. The cornice and the steps are also of polished Derbyshire marble, with a massive brass hand-rail. The entire cost of the pulpit will be over £600, towards which upwards of £500 has already been received. The Provincial Grand Master in making the presentation said:—It is now my duty, on behalf of the Freemasons of England, to offer for the acceptance of the authorities of this Cathedral a pulpit, which has been subscribed for by all ranks of Freemasons, from our Grand Master the Prince of Wales downwards. I will now ask you, acting on behalf of the Cathedral authorities, to accept this pulpit, in the name of the Craft, with the earnest prayer that from it may be poured forth for many generations a living stream, warning the backsliding, cheering the despondent and repenting, offering hope and salvation to sinners; and that, as the water flowed from the rock at the bidding of Moses, so from this pulpit may the word of life flow from generation to generation. The Rector, the Rev. W. J. Lawrance, M.A., said that, in the name of the authorities of the Cathedral, he accepted the pulpit, at the hands of Bro. Halsey, with thanks.

The sermon was preached by the Rev. W. O. Thompson, who took for his text "To open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light."—Acts xxvi. 18. The collection after the sermon amounted to £31 12s 8½d, which amount is to be appropriated towards building a new boys' school in the Abbey parish. The brethren then returned in procession to the Town Hall, where the business of Prov. Grand Lodge was resumed, and after a few general remarks upon the work which had just been completed, was closed in regular form.

The service of the banquet was entrusted to Bro. W. Marks, of the "Peahen," who well sustained the reputation of his hostelry. The Provincial Grand Master, on rising to propose the first toast, said it was always well received in assemblies of Freemasons—"The Queen and the Craft." In speaking to the toast of the Most Worshipful Grand Master the Prince of Wales, Bro. Halsey said he and the Provincial Grand Officers had had hopes that his Royal Highness would have been present that day, inasmuch as the Grand Master was one of the first to respond to the appeal when it was proposed to raise this fund; those present, however, were aware that the Grand Master had to attend a Masonic meeting at York this week, and to which City he had proceeded on that day; it was therefore impossible for him to be with them at St. Albans. He thought they might congratulate themselves on the advance which the Craft had made since H.R.H. had presided over them, and trusted that the Prince might long be spared to rule over the Craft. If any assurance were wanting of the interest he took in the Order, and the attention he paid to its business, it would be found in the graceful manner in which an alteration which was not quite popular with the Craft had recently been rescinded. With the next toast, the Right Hon. the Earl of Carnarvon M.W. Pro Grand Master, the Chairman associated the Health of the Right Hon. the Earl of Lathom R.W. Deputy Grand Master, and the rest of the Grand Officers Present and Past. It had been hoped that both the Earl of Carnarvon and Lord Lathom would have been there that evening. Had they been present it would have been necessary to propose these toasts separately, but as they had each expressed their great regret at being unable to attend he thought the toasts might be incorporated; he thought these Officers were right men in the right places. Any one who saw Lord Carnarvon preside at the Special Grand Lodge held recently in London could but be assured of his ability; while in Lord Lathom all felt they had an efficient worker. They all knew what careful selections the Grand Master made; none were appointed to office but such as would justify H.R.H.'s choice. They had with them that day two of the Grand Officers of the year, Bros. Edgar Bowyer and Thompson. They also had with them Bro. Havers, a Past Grand Junior Warden of England, one whose name was a household word in Freemasonry. In that Province it was unnecessary for him to say anything of their respective merits. As a Grand Chaplain of England, Brother Thompson would with credit uphold the honour of the Craft. Brother Edgar Bowyer was the founder of a Lodge, which, though the last, was by no means the least of the Lodges in the Province of Hertfordshire. He was a very active Mason, and had liberally supported the Masonic Institutions. It was some time since they had been privileged to drink a toast in honour of the Grand Officers present. He would call on Rev. Bro. Thompson G. Chaplain. Brother Thompson in a very lengthy speech replied, but as readers of the Masonic journals are well acquainted with the bearings of the several points he touched upon, we feel there is no necessity to reproduce his remarks. We may, however, add that a general feeling was prevalent that our reverend brother had left something untold; consequently, Brother John Havers, in response to a pretty general call, supplemented Brother Thompson's remarks. Brother Havers said, after an absence of five years from Grand Lodge, the welcome which had greeted his re-appearance had touched him deeply. For six or seven-and-twenty years he had enjoyed the confidence, and had been an adviser of the M.W. Grand Masters for the time being, and had spoken freely on matters coming before Grand Lodge. During a long illness, however, he thought that while he had served the brethren honestly he had not made sufficient allowance for the opinions of others, and that he had trodden rather too heavily upon the corns of some people. Yet, even now, if he saw any corns that wanted treading on in the interests of the Craft, he should doubtless be tempted to tread on them. He thought they were most fortunate in possessing such brethren as they did for their rulers. For himself he thanked them, and wished to add that he had not seen the proceedings of any Provincial Grand Lodge conducted with more regularity than those of that day. The manner in which Bro. Terry, the Provincial Grand D.C., had performed his work was beyond praise. He congratulated the brethren upon having such a Provincial Grand Master, and he congratulated the Provincial Grand Master upon having such an influential body of Masons to rule over. If he (Bro. Havers) could at any time render them any service he should be happy to do so. Bro Dr. Iles Deputy Prov. G.M. proposed the health of the R.W. Grand Master. He was sure that it was only necessary for him to name the toast he was entrusted with to secure for it the attention and cordial reception it deserved. He reminded their Provincial Grand Master that he had now entered on the tenth year of his office as ruler of the Province, and assured him that each year made him more popular, and more firmly cemented him in the hearts of the brethren. In connection with the Prov. Grand Master's remarks upon the beneficial influence of the Prince of Wales upon the Craft in general, Bro. Iles drew a parallel as to the influence the Prov. Grand Master had exercised in the Province of Herts. When he was appointed to the office there were eight Lodges, now there were twelve; these were carrying out Masonry as all could wish. The youngest of these Lodges was represented almost to a man on that occasion. Bro. Halsey, in reply, had again most cordially to thank his Deputy Prov. Grand Master for the manner in which he had proposed the toast, and the brethren for the very kind manner in which they had received it. He thought that the first ten years of his occupying his position could not have a more fitting completion than the ceremony in which they had that day participated at the grand old Minster; it augured well for the future of Freemasonry in the Province. He had an idea that when a person undertook an office it was his duty to endeavour to carry it out to the best of his ability. He had done that. He must now say—though perhaps it would come best with the next toast, but he could not resist the temptation of saying it at once—that a great deal of the success which had attended his tenure of office was due to the assistance he had received from his Grand Officers; especially from Bro. Iles, first in his capacity of Provincial Grand Secretary, and in the second half of his term as Deputy Prov. Grand Master. It was a matter of great rejoicing to know the Lodges were increasing, and that the old Lodges were improving; this he himself could testify. He had other duties to perform, which prevented his attending so many private Lodges as he could wish; but any shortcomings of his in that respect were amply made up for by Bros. Dr. Iles and Dawson; he could say, with truth, that they were in theory what they ought to be —the eyes and ears of the Provincial Grand Master. He congratulated the Province on its prosperity, and trusted that should he be called on to preside over it for another ten years, they might find themselves in a still higher position than at present. Before he sat down, he felt it due to Bro. De Keyser to say something in recognition of the part he had taken in the work of restoration at the Cathedral. Before this work was inaugurated, Brother De Keyser's zeal for the cause was well known; the arduous work he had undertaken, and the way in which he had carried it out, deserved the highest recognition at the hands of the brethren; he hoped that, with their assistance, the deficit that had been referred to in Lodge would be made up. All knew—all at least who attended Provincial Grand Lodge—must be aware how much depended upon having an efficient Director of Ceremonies; how much they owed in this respect to Brother Terry was fully recognised. He should be wrong also if he omitted to thank the Halsey Lodge for the way in which they had conducted the proceedings of the day. It was a great undertaking for a private Lodge to entertain Provincial Grand Lodge, especially so on such an occasion as that of the present. After several further remarks, the Provincial Grand Master gave the toast, which was most heartily received. Bro. Dr. Iles returned his sincere thanks for the very hearty manner in which the Prov. Grand Master had proposed the toast, and the cordial manner in which it had been received by the brethren. The Past Prov. Grand Officers had shown that they were worthy of their honours, and he was satisfied that the Officers the Prov. Grand Master had chosen that day would also justify his choice, and become ornaments to the Provincial Grand Lodge. He thanked the Prov. Grand Master for the way in which he had referred to him personally. During the past year, from illness in his house, and other causes, he had not been able to go about as much as usual, but from the little he had been able to do in that respect he could testify to the improvement in the Lodges. He hoped that this year he should be able to visit the more distant parts of the Province. He knew the brethren were doing excellent work; he might refer more especially to the Halsey Lodge, under whose banner they were that day assembled. Dr. Wilson Iles concluded by saying that, as long as he had health and strength, and the Provincial Grand Master was pleased to repose in him the same confidence he did now, he should be most happy to do his best for the welfare of the Province. The other toasts given were the R.W. Provincial Grand Masters of other Provinces; The Visitors, for whom Brother Freeman, of the Himalaya Lodge, Calcutta, replied; the Worshipful Masters of other Lodges in the Province, coupled with the name of Brother Miskin; and shortly afterwards the Tyler gave the parting toast. A selection of music was given under the direction of Brother George Gaffe, Provincial Grand Organist, who was assisted by Bros. H. J. Dutton, Selwyn Graham, Charles Beckett, and W. H. Brereton. The Visitors, of whom there was a large contingent present, were much indebted to Brother John Parrott, Secretary of the entertaining Lodge, for the way in which he looked after their comforts. Brother Parrott was here, there, and everywhere, throughout the day; he at all times kept a watchful eye on his attendants, that the brethren present should have no cause for complaint. Our esteemed brother must be congratulated on the success he achieved.

PRICKING A WINDBAG.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I yield to no one in my love of liberty and fair play. You have gone even to the border of license in the case of "C. J. Perceval P.M. 1607 and V.P. of the Three Institutions," whose freedom in the use of condemnation it would be difficult to exceed. You see, Sir, I have given our brother his full title, because it shows he is full of honours, and if not always wise, is at least generous in heart. Bro. Perceval, like most men with a grievance, is very fond of imputing motives to those who do not see eye to eye with him. He regards them with jaundiced vision, and never for a moment considers that any one can be right but himself. Were it not that actions speak louder than words, Bro. Perceval would be looked upon as a most obnoxious person; as it is, he is justly estimated to be a good-meaning, though rash and somewhat eccentric individual—a "Sir Oracle," who is jealous of any dog barking but his own.

I propose to show where Bro. Perceval's indiscretion and wordy violence would lead him, and leave it to your readers to judge for themselves. In your issue of the 16th ult., Bro. Perceval declares that the Grand Registrar, his "reputed successor," and the Grand Director of Ceremonies deliberately spun out the time of Grand Lodge at its recent sitting in order to prevent him from bringing on a motion relative to the revision of the rules. He adds that the Pro Grand Master, acting for the M.W.G.M., prolonged his summing up until the time-limit—ten o'clock—was reached, and so deterred Bro. Perceval from introducing his motion, which of course would have been regarded as new matter. Not only is obstruction clearly charged in this statement, but it involves the serious imputation of conspiracy against three Grand Officers, and the implication at least that the Pro Grand Master ignored, if he did not wink, at the offence. Such an imputation is not only a sarcasm on the theory of Charity, the brightest jewel in the crown of Freemasonry, but it involves issues of a momentous character. If such conditions be possible in one case, they may be repeated, and unless the whole thing is a joke, or the result of a heated imagination, then Bro. Perceval has no other alternative than to carry the matter further;—to formulate a charge of conspiracy, and bring it forward before Grand Lodge. On him rests the onus of proof. If he succeeds, so much the worse for the Order; if he fails, I can imagine no worse punishment than reflection would bring to a naturally warm-hearted but reckless and impulsive man.

Bro. Perceval again vents his temper in your issue of the 7th inst. In this instance it is the Executive that come within the lash of his wrath. I presume that, like Corporations, the Board of General Purposes has neither a soul to be damned nor a body to be kicked, hence the whole are immolated on the wrathful pile of Bro. Perceval's indignation. He complains that although the papers of recommendations of the Board of General Purposes were dated 31st May, and the Quarterly Communication of Grand Lodge was held on 6th June, no notice was given on the latter occasion of the forthcoming Special Communication held on the 29th ult. He assumes that the Board on 6th June had determined to hold a special meeting of Grand Lodge on the 29th, an inference by no means clear. But supposing they had so agreed, the worst that could be said of them is that they were lacking in courtesy. Upon the face of the facts there is no justification for the imputation that they were actuated by sinister motives. Whatever intimation might have been given on the 6th June must have been supplemented by a formal notice afterwards. But Brother Perceval goes further, and brings four other charges against the Board of General Purposes. He says they called the Special Communication when the London Lodges were in recess; just after the Boys' Festival; on a Friday—"the day when business men have to despatch their Australian and American mails;" and lastly, oh ye Gods, "just an hour and a half before the mail closes, except by payment of extra postage." This puerile outburst is almost laughable. Were not the London Lodges in recess on the 6th June, and therefore the regular Quarterly Communication ought not to have been held? This conclusion follows Brother Perceval's reasoning. There are other festivals besides the Boys' which Provincial brethren attend, and how would it be possible to so arrange a meeting as to meet every condition? The thing is absurd, and to charge a body of men with a "set purpose of stifling and avoiding a discussion" on such grounds as those advanced seems to me to be as rash as it is unjust. Then, imagine the Board of General Purposes having their eyes on the Australian and American mails, and fixing such a day and such an hour for the Special Communication when the brethren were likely to be engaged in making up their foreign bags. It would be interesting to know how many brethren entitled to attend Grand Lodge have such close business connections with America and the Colonies as to render it necessary for them to attend to their own private business instead of performing their Masonic duties. What astute men the Board of General Purposes must be, or rather I should say how fertile is the brain of Bro. Perceval when engaged in denouncing his brother Masons. Upon such grounds as the foregoing charges are founded which, if true, would brand the offenders as unworthy the respect of honourable men. Again, I say, if Bro. Perceval is in earnest he must carry his accusations further; put them into shape, and test the judgment of Grand Lodge.

Bro. Perceval is gratified for once. He is satisfied with the Most Worshipful Grand Master's message on the 7th inst., when he withdrew the obnoxious order of precedence; but there were a few dregs in the cup. The action of the Grand Master was anticipated by "more than half the brethren," says Bro. Perceval. Now, how does he know? Has he the power of divination? Perhaps he is in a charitable mood, and is willing to believe that half the Masonic body at least are not fools, who are ready to share the conviction with him that the Grand Master has the Craft at heart and would not force his own views against those expressed by the brethren generally. No one ever supposed he would. It is not at all certain, however, that the Grand Master has not the right he exercised, and the only way to determine the matter is by friendly counsel in Grand Lodge, and not by risking speculations and abusing those who happen to have an opinion of their own.

I shall not attempt to go through the vexed question of the Revision of the Rules. I believe in the theory of a small committee for such a purpose. There have been several mistakes no doubt. The Board of General Purposes began wrong in secretly initiating the work. I do not accuse them of any improper motive; I believe they thought they were taking the wiser course. Experience has proved that a Frankenstein has been raised that cannot easily be laid. Bro. Perceval, of course, is full of condemnation. I do not know whether his views have been consistent throughout, but he now desires to see a Committee of the purple and the blue in order to compass the mass of suggestions that has been made and to reduce the whole into shape for the acceptance of Grand Lodge. Probably that would be the better course to pursue, but where, according to Bro. Perceval, are there twelve honest men to be found? He has condemned the Board of General Purposes, and yet he would select six of their number for this delicate work. The other six are to be chosen by Grand Lodge. I confess I should not like the task of selection; I should not know what to do about Bro. Perceval to begin with. There is no doubt about his honour, but I have serious scruples about his temper and judgment. I have given some specimens of both, here is an instance of inconsistency. He complains of the paucity of attendance at the Special Communication, and says the time was fixed so as to preclude a large number of members from attending, and yet he would hand over to twelve men work he considers two hundred were not able to perform. He condemns the haste with which the latter number dealt with 184 clauses, and grumbles because more brethren were not present. If confusion reigned among two hundred what would have been the condition of things if 700 had been present? Perhaps Bro. Perceval will solve the problem. He is a "bit sarcastic like" over the Press, but he forgets that the CHRONICLE at least has dealt with the Revised Book of Constitutions in a most exhaustive manner, and at present has nothing further to add. It therefore has no cause for concealment or of slurring over anything. When what it has proposed has been considered, and the whole mass of suggestions has been reduced to a positive and final shape, then the CHRONICLE no doubt will have something to say of approval or condemnation; at the present, both Bro. Perceval and myself have reason to be thankful that we can air our opinions so freely in its columns. The same motive that permits so much liberty in our cases will, I am convinced, guide the Editor in dealing with all matters that relate to the well-being of the Craft.

Yours fraternally,

18th July 1883. WATCHMAN.

MARK MASONRY.

PROVINCIAL GRAND MARK LODGE OF DORSET.

THE annual meeting of this Provincial Grand Lodge was held on Thursday, the 12th inst., at the Masonic Hall, in the Isle of Portland, under the Banner of Portland Mark Lodge, No. 133. Provincial Grand Lodge was opened at 1 30 by the Right Worshipful the Provincial Grand Mark Master the Rev. W. Mortimer Heath, M.A., assisted by W. Bro. R. N. Howard, Mayor of Weymouth, Deputy Provincial Grand Mark Master, and the Provincial Grand Officers. After the roll of Officers and Lodges had been called over the minutes of the last Provincial Grand Lodge were read and confirmed, and the ordinary business of the Mark Province was transacted. The Treasurer's accounts were received and adopted. The Provincial Grand Master addressed the Lodge on the state and prospects of the Province, and congratulated the brethren on the steady progress which Mark Masonry was making in the Province of Dorset. A vote of thanks was passed to W. Bro. W. D. Dugdale, the Treasurer, who was now vacating that office and not eligible for re-election, in consequence of appointment to other Provincial office. A vote of thanks was also passed to the Provincial Grand Registrar of Marks, Bro. W. B. Morgan, and attention was called to the efficient manner in which the Register of the Province had been kept. Bro. S. A. Vickery was elected Treasurer. The Provincial Grand Master then appointed and invested the following brethren as Provincial Grand Officers for the ensuing year:—

After the closing of the Provincial Grand Lodge the annual banquet was held on the Lodge premises, at which the usual Loyal and Masonic toasts were given and duly honoured. It had been intended to have conveyed the brethren, in the interval between Lodge and banquet, for a marine excursion in a steamboat round the Shambles and Bill of Portland, but the inclemency of the weather prevented that part of the day's programme from being carried out.

BEVERLAC LODGE, No. 281.

THE installation meeting of the above Lodge was held at the Assembly Rooms, Norwood, Beverley, on Monday, the 9th inst. In the unavoidable absence, through illness, of the W.M. (Bro. B. E. Naylor) W. Bro. A. P. Wilson P.M. P.P.G. Supt. of Works North and East Yorkshire presided, supported by the following officers and brethren:—Bros. J. R. Ansdell W.M. Humber Lodge 182 as S.W., Eli Bryan (W.M. elect) J.W., C. Goulding M.O., T. Dixon S.O., Sydney Smith J.O., Geo. S. Highmoor Chap., T. Marshall P.G.J.G. Treasurer, F. W. Adams Secretary, M. M. Westerby S.D., Jos. Hind J.D., F. Hewson I.G., H. Adams, J. Sugdon, J. Sharp, G. H. Knight, W. Richardson. Visitors—W. Bro. Geo. Wilson P.M. 182, Bros. Jas. Scott Wilson M.O. 291, R. Pexton 182, and J. R. Shearsmith 12. The usual preliminary Lodge business having been taken, Bro. Peter Hancock J.D. Samaritan Lodge 368 was balloted for and unanimously accepted, and arrangements were made for advancing him to the degree of a M.M.M. at a Lodge of Emergency to be called at an early date. Bro. A. P. Wilson then vacated the chair, and presented Bro. Eli Bryan as W.M. for the ensuing year to the Installing Master, W. Bro. Geo. Wilson, a brother whose working was done in that careful and satisfactory manner which has on more than one occasion been so highly appreciated and warmly spoken of. The newly installed Master having been inducted into the chair of A., and duly saluted, appointed and invested his Officers as follow:—Bros. B. E. Naylor I.P.M., C. Goulding S.W., T. Dixon J.W., S. Smith M.O., M. M. Westerby S.O., J. Hind J.O., Rev. H. Adams Chaplain, T. Marshall P.M. Treasurer, F. W. Adams Secretary, John Sugdon Reg. of Marks, R. Allan S.D., F. Hewson J.D., W. Richardson I.G., G. H. Knight Steward, J. Westoby Tyler. A vote of thanks to the Installing Master, ending with a motion that Bro. Geo. Wilson should be made an honorary member of the Lodge, was moved by the W.M., seconded by P.M. A. P. Wilson, and unanimously carried. The W.M. then proceeded to close his Lodge in due form, and the parting address was given in the most perfect manner by a Visitor, Bro. Pexton M.O. 182. The brethren subsequently sat down to a réchèrche repast, served in the adjoining room, after which the usual Loyal and Mark Masonic toasts were given and responded to. Bros. A. P. Wilson and Marshall replied on behalf of the Prov. Grand Officers Present and Past, and the former then proposed the W.M., and subsequently the I.P.M., to both of which the newly installed W.M. responded in terse but aptly chosen and effective terms, and as regarded the latter toast, regretting that the I.P.M. himself (Bro. Naylor) was unable to be present, but trusting that the G.A.O.T.U. would soon enable that brother to throw off his present indisposition and regain the best of health, in which case he had no doubt the Lodge could guarantee the I.P.M.'s presence during the ensuing year. The "Retiring Officers," "Newly Installed Officers," and the "Installing Master," were each proposed from the chair, and suitably responded to by Bros. G. S. Highmore, Harry Adams, and George Wilson respectively. Bro. A. P. Wilson P.M. was then toasted, and afterwards followed "The Visitors," responded to by Bro. J. Scott Wilson 291, Pexton 182, and Shearsmith 12. The "Treasurer" and "Secretary," both of which toasts, proposed by Bros. Hind and Dixon, were well received and suitably replied to by Bros. T. Marshall and F. W. Adams. The harmony of the evening was well sustained by Bros. Ansdell, Goulding, M. M. Westerby, Knight, Shearsmith, and A. P. Wilson, and a most enjoyable evening was brought to a close with the Tyler's toast.

HIGH CROSS LODGE, No. 284.

THE installation meeting of this Lodge was held at the Seven Sisters' Hotel, Page Green, Tottenham, on Wednesday, the 13th July, and was well attended. Amongst those present were Bros. H. V. Clements W.M., W. J. Meek P.M. and W. Beasley P.M., E. G. Lewis S.W. and W.M. elect, Major Pemrose Dunbar J.W., J. D. Birkin S.O., Percy Gilling J.O., the Rev. C. H. Roberts Chaplain, A. Little Treasurer, W. Farquharson Secretary, F. Wheelhouse J.D., E. Holt I.G., John Black, J. Webb; and J. Very Tyler. Amongst hon. members and Visitors present were the Very Worshipful Bros. C. F. Matier P.G.W., D. M. Dewar P.G.M.O. and Grand Assistant Secretary, James Stevens P.G.J.O. and P. Prov. Grand Secretary Middlesex and Surrey, Thomas Poore P.G.I.G., W. G. Brighten Past Provincial G.S.W. and Provincial Grand Secretary Middlesex and Surrey, Captain Henry Stephens Provincial G.J.O., and J. K. Pitt Prov. G.A.D.C.; also Worshipful Brothers T. J. Cusworth P.M. 236, G. Powell No. 1, C. J. Eveniss 22, R. Leaman Old Kent, S. Smither 199, and others who omitted to sign the attendance book. The minutes of the preceding Lodge meeting having been confirmed, ballots were taken for Bro. A. Fowler, of Craft Lodge 754, and Charles Handley, of No. 475, which were clear, and Bro. Handley, being in attendance, was advanced in due form, the ceremony being most ably carried out by the Worshipful Master and his Officers. Bro. Thomas Poore, as Installing Master, in his usual admirable style of working, installed Bro. E. G. Lewis into the chair of K.S. The Officers for the ensuing year were appointed in the following order, viz.:—Bros. Major Dunbar S.W., J. D. Birkin J.W., A. G. Fidler M.O., Percy Gilling S.O., C. H. Roberts J.O. and Pro Chaplain, A. Little Treasurer, W. Dance Registrar, W. Farquharson Secretary, T. Wheelhouse S.D., E. Holt J.D., J. Webb I.G., Hall M.C., Handley Steward, J. Very Tyler. A very handsome P.M.'s jewel was presented to the retiring W.M. The Auditors' Report, being satisfactory, was received and adopted, and after some routine business had been transacted, the Lodge was closed. A banquet was provided in liberal style by "mine host" of the "Seven Sisters," and after the cloth had been cleared, toast and song followed in quiet succession. For the Officers of Grand Lodge, Bro. Matier returned thanks, eulogising the work of the Past Grand Masters of the Order, and the continuance thereof by the Present Grand Master, Lord Henniker, and his Officers. He congratulated the W.M. on being surrounded by Masons who had literally made their "Mark" in Masonry, and concluded a telling speech by suggesting to the W.M. that if he liked the then present sample of G.L. Officers, he might at some future time "invite the bulk." The remaining toasts were briefly given, and as briefly responded to. The excellent programme of music, evidently the result of great care and attention on the part of the Rev. C. H. Roberts, the Chaplain of the Lodge, and his musical friends, was carried throughout, and gave great satisfaction. The entire proceedings quite justified the remarks of Bro. Meek P.M., that for so young a Lodge its progress had been remarkable, and its prospects most encouraging. We congratulate our worthy Bro. Clements on the success of his year of office, and our equally worthy Bro. Lewis on the assurances given for future support.

The Province of Leicester and Rutland appeared to great advantage at the recent Festival of the Boys' School, when its representative, Bro. Captain J. G. F. Richardson, a member of the Albert Edward Lodge, No. 1560, brought up £405. The Province was represented at the Festival of the Benevolent Institution in February, when it contributed £36 15s. The contributions of the year shew a total equal £1 each from every registered Mason in the Province, a most gratifying result for any district to achieve.

VISIT OF THE M.W. THE GRAND MASTER TO YORK.

THE meeting of Craftsmen to take part in the laying of the Memorial Stone of the York Institute of Art, Science, and Literature, may certainly be designated the Masonic event of the week, if not of the year. Fair weather prevailed, and brilliant decorations enlivened the course traversed by those who participated in the ceremonial of the day. The good citizens of York, with characteristic loyalty, took advantage of this visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, and, the more effectually to testify their appreciation of his courtesy, inaugurated a general holiday for the occasion. In consequence of other pressing engagements, the Most Worshipful Grand Master was compelled to leave York early in the afternoon, and the meeting of Provincial Grand Lodge was therefore called for 10 o'clock, while the Special Grand Lodge was arranged to be opened at 10·15. This was accordingly done, at the Guildhall, by the Grand Master, who was supported by the following Officers of Grand Lodge:—Lord Milltown Grand Senior Warden, J. D. Allcroft Grand Treasurer, Æneas J. McIntyre, Q.C., G. Registrar, Sir Albert Woods (Garter) Grand Director of Ceremonies, Revs. H. G. Morse and W. O. Thompson Grand Chaplains, T. W. Tew and R. Gooding Grand Senior Deacons, F. Green and T. H. Devonshire Grand Junior Deacons, Lieut.-Colonel J. Peters Grand Sword Bearer, T. D. Bolton Deputy Grand Director of Ceremonies, R. H. Thrupp Grand Assistant Director of Ceremonies, Lieut.-Colonel A. C. F. Gough and E. Bowyer Grand Standard Bearers, W. G. Cusins Grand Organist, and W. Stephens Assist. G. Pursuivant. The Prov. Grand Lodge of North and East Yorkshire was opened at the Assembly Rooms, Blake Street, and was presided over by the Deputy Provincial Grand Master, Brother Dr. Pearson Bell. After the circular convening the meeting had been read, Dr. Bell accounted for the absence of Lord Zetland by explaining that the M.W. the Grand Master had desired that the Prov. Grand Master should attend him at the Grand Lodge. He directed attention to the interesting event they were assembled to take part in, and referred briefly to other occasions when the Masons of York had been honoured with Royal and distinguished Visitors. A procession was then formed and the brethren proceeded to the site of the projected building in the following order:—

On arriving at the entrance of the temporary erection prepared for the ceremony, the brethren opened out, and the Grand Lodge procession entered the building; the members of Grand Lodge were followed by the large body of Provincial Grand Officers present and past who attended on their Provincial Grand Master. The Grand Master was received by the very Rev. Bro. the Dean of York Past Grand Chaplain, President of the Institution, and his Committee, who conducted him to the dais. Bro. J. Sykes Rymer P.M., Sheriff of York, then addressed the Grand Master, and requested his Royal Highness to lay the Memorial Stone of the Institute. In lending his influence to a new Institute for the cultivation of science, art, and literature in that city His Royal Highness was, the Committee thought, doing that which would greatly assist in the promotion of the welfare of the country. All present were pleased to know that the country had in past times occupied a high position among nations; and with the blessing of the G.A.O.T.U. upon such institutions as that in whose interest they were met, the future of the nation would be made more glorious than it had been in the past. Many of the Prince's Royal ancestors had taken part in imposing ceremonies within the walls of that ancient city, but none had had more pleasant recollections than would attend that in which His Royal Highness was taking part on that occasion. York, in the past, had been second to no other portion of the kingdom in its loyalty to the Throne; and as Sheriff of the City he was pleased to say that the loyal feeling now possessed by it would outshine that which had distinguished it in the past. The Grand Master then proceeded with the ceremony. Men and brethren, he said, assembled to behold this ceremony, be it known unto you that we, being lawful Masons, true and faithful to the laws of our country, are engaged by solemn obligations to erect handsome buildings to be serviceable to the brethren, and to fear God, the Great Architect of the Universe. We have among us, concealed from the eyes of all men, secrets which may not be revealed, and which no man has discovered. But these secrets are lawful and honourable, and not repugnant to the laws of God or man. They have been entrusted in peace and honour to Masons of ancient times; and, having been faithfully transmitted to us, it is our duty to convey them unimpaired to the latest posterity. Unless our Craft were good and our calling honourable, we should not have lasted for so many centuries, nor should we have had so many illustrious brothers in our Order, ready to promote our laws and further our interests. We are here assembled, in the presence of you all, to erect this building to the honour and glory of the Most High, and which we pray God may prosper as it seems good to Him. As the first duty of Masons, in any undertaking, is to invoke the blessing of the Great Architect of the Universe on their work, I call upon you to unite with our Grand Chaplain in an address to the Throne of grace. The upper stone of granite was then carefully raised and the lower stone properly adjusted. The Grand Chaplain (the Rev. H. G. Morse) invoked the blessing of the Great Architect of the Universe upon the undertaking of the day. A Masonic Anthem was then sung, after which Captain N. G. Philips, who acted as Grand Secretary, read the inscription on the memorial stone; and the Grand Treasurer, Bro. J. D. Allcroft, deposited in the lower stone a phial containing coins. The acting Grand Secretary also fixed a brass plate, with an inscription relating to the ceremony, over the aperture. Cement was then spread over the upper face of the lower stone, and was adjusted with a trowel by the Grand Master. At a signal from the architect, Bro. W. Penty, the upper stone was lowered, with three distinct stops. Thereupon the Grand Master proved with plumb and rule, with level and with square, the true position of the stone, receiving the implements from the Junior Grand Warden, Colonel the Right Hon. F. L. Stanley, the Grand Senior Warden, the Earl of Milltown, and the Deputy Grand Master. The cornucopia and the golden ewers of wine and oil were next handed to the Grand Master, who strewed the corn and poured the wine and oil over the stone, with the usual Masonic declarations of Plenty, Joy, and Peace. The G. Master then examined the plans of the building, and presented them to the architect, whom he enjoined to proceed without loss of time to the completion of the work, the plans of which were now entrusted to him. The next feature in the day's proceedings was of an especially interesting character; this was the presentation of purses towards the Building Fund by a number of elegantly attired children, who we trust may for many years have occasion to remember with feelings of pride the share they took in the ceremony of this auspicious day. The Lord Mayor of York, Bro. Alderman Thomas Varey, then, in the name of the citizens, addressed the Prince. He respectfully tendered his thanks for His Royal Highness's condescension in associating himself with them on that occasion, and for laying the memorial stone of the Art and Science Institute. The visit of the heir-apparent had been looked forward to with the most pleasurable anticipation by the citizens, both collectively and individually; he begged to tender to H.R.H. an expression of their loyal and devoted affection. The Prince of Wales, in replying, said: My Lord Mayor of York and Brethren, I feel gratified at your kind words. I can assure you that it has been with great pleasure that I have laid the memorial stone of your Institute to-day. I am glad to think that I have been able to do so with Masonic honours, and with so large an assemblage of the brethren present. Most sincerely do I hope that this Institute will flourish and be a boon in every way to the inhabitants of this great city. I thank you once more for the kind welcome given me to-day. This completed the ceremony, and the G. Master immediately left the city to fulfil his other engagements. The procession was re-formed, and the brethren returned to their respective places of meeting, when Grand Lodge and Prov. Grand Lodge were soon afterwards closed. The Lord Mayor gave a luncheon at the Guildhall, where about one hundred guests were entertained. The after proceedings were of a brief, but very cordial character, and felicitations were indulged in as to the success which had attended this gathering. We hope to be able to give, next week, a full list of the brethren who were present.

THE GIRLS' SCHOOL AND THE LAND QUESTION.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—It will, doubtless, be satisfactory to all interested in the continued prosperity of our noble Institution at Wandsworth Common, except, very probably, the owner of "nine acres," that the proposal to accept the modest sum of £4,000 per acre for said land has been unanimously declined by the Quarterly General Court of the Governors and Subscribers, held on Saturday last. What might have resulted from a different decision it is now no longer necessary to consider.

My object in writing is two-fold. First, to congratulate the general body on their refusal to entertain the purchase; and, secondly, to perform an act of justice to those who are members of the House and General Committees. In common with many others I had been led to entertain the opinion that these worthy brethren really desired that the outrageous offer should be accepted, but at the very commencement of the meeting, which was one of the most business-like I have ever attended, it was apparent that such was not the case. Neither individually nor collectively was there any influence exerted to control the expression of opinions offered by the Subscribers. On the contrary, an earnest attention was given to the objections raised to the suggested sale (the question was never one of a proposed purchase), and it was readily acknowledged that the respective Committees could not properly have done other than they did in submitting the matter to the Quarterly Court just as it had come before them. To have kept the general body of Governors and Subscribers in ignorance of the offer made by the owner of the adjacent land would have been a great error on their part, and might probably have led to future complications.

We need not fear the threatened sale to a third party, or the suggested "building in." It is one thing to "offer for sale," and another thing to "find a purchaser," even at a fair value. What it will be to obtain, at this time of depression in land values and over building, a price nearly twice as great as that which a speculative builder would hesitate to give is an operation which, in the course of my professional business, I shall watch with great interest.

Yours truly and fraternally,

JAMES STEVENS, P.M. 1216 P.Z.

The monthly meeting of the Lodge of Benevolence was held on Wednesday, at Freemasons' Hall. Bro. Joshua Nunn filled the President's chair, while Bros. James Brett and Charles Atkins occupied the chairs of their respective offices. The President again announced that letters had been received by the Grand Secretary from petitioners who were relieved at the June meeting, thanking the Lodge for the assistance that was then given to them. It is only lately that this recognition has come into vogue, and we are given to understand this was first adopted by American brethren who had been enabled to get back to their country by the assistance given by the English Lodge of Benevolence. After confirming grants recommended at the June meeting, to the amount of £380, the Lodge proceeded with the new list, which contained 22 cases only, a large diminution when compared with the lists that have been before the Lodge for the last few years. The sums voted to the different cases amounted to a total of £570.

The Annual Festival in aid of the Mark Grand Lodge Benevolent Fund will be held on Wednesday next, the 25th instant, at the Crystal Palace, Sydenham. R.W. Brother Sir Pryce Pryce, Bart., Provincial Grand Master of South Wales, will preside.

A Court dinner of the Patten Makers' Company was held on Thursday, 12th inst., at the Guildhall Tavern. The Master Bro. Capt. J. A. Thornhill, F.R.G.S., Bro. Capt. G. Lambert P.G.S.B., F.S.A., Upper Warden, R. Clout Renter Warden. A sumptuous and récherché banquet was provided by Bros. Ritter and Clifford. The table was artistically decorated with the old plate of the Company, also with the dessert service, &c., presented by Bro. G. Lambert. The Loyal toasts were given. Lieut.-Colonel Scrivener responded for the Army, and Major Sewell P.G.S. for the Militia. Alderman Sir T. S. Owden responded for the Lord Mayor and Corporation. Other toasts were the Patten Makers' Company, the Metropolitan Board of Works, and the Master. Bro. G. Lambert, Upper Warden, in proposing the toast of the Liverymen, said, "all the City Companies, from the earliest times, had been foremost in the work of Charity. They had determined the poor should not want; and although they had thrown over their religious Guilds, they had a common religion which taught them to look after the poor and needy. This toast having been responded to, Bro. Brand (Controller), in proposing the Past Masters and Present Wardens, said, Bro. Lambert had spoken of the liberality of the City Companies, but he had not spoken of his liberality to this company. The health of Bro. H. F. Youle (the Clerk) was proposed in eulogistic terms. An excellent selection of music was given, under the direction of Miss Belval, assisted by Miss M. Weaver, Bro. Faulkner Leigh, and Mr. G. Bassett. Among those present were the Mayor of Rochester, Bro. W. Lambert, Bro. Charles Lambert, Major Corneford, Bro. C. W. Thompson, Captain Mends, Bro. H. M. Levy, &c.

The W.M. then presented Brother John Laverty with a Past Master's jewel, bearing a suitable inscription, subscribed for by the members of the Lodge. The brethren, to the number of about 120, then retired to the banquet-room, where a banquet had been prepared under the superintendence of Brother E. S. Main P.P.G.A.D.C. The usual loyal toasts having been given, the W.M. proposed the Provincial Grand Officers, and congratulated himself on having so many distinguished Officers present. Brother Rastrick Prov.G. Tr. responded, and congratulated the Lodge on the numerous attendance, which was larger than he had ever met at any installation ceremony. Brother G. F. Lancaster P.P.G.D. in responding for the past Officers, said he was at the constitution of the Lodge, and had attended each installation meeting in succession; he had watched with keen interest its progress as foreshadowed by the P.G. Master, Bro. W. W. B. Beach, M.P., at its first meeting. Bro. S. R. Ellis proposed the Installing Master. Other toasts followed. Several songs were contributed by Bros. G. Sylvester, C. Knott, J. Mitchell, Elverston, and others, Brother Sylvester accompanying on the piano.

United Pilgrims Lodge of Instruction, No. 507.—The usual weekly meeting of this Lodge of Instruction was held at the Surrey Masonic Hall, Camberwell New Road, S.E., on Friday, 13th inst. Bro. G. H. Chapman, who has but very lately been initiated into the Order, occupied, for the first time, the chair of K.S., and very creditably carried out the duties appertaining thereto. Amongst others present were Bros. Sarjeant S.W., Bate J.W., Pooler S.D., Hooper J.D., Johnson I.G., Stevens P.M. Preceptor, Poore Secretary. Lodge worked in the first and second degrees, the ceremony of passing being also rehearsed, and the charge in that degree given by Bro. Bate. The lecture on the second tracing board was given by the Preceptor. Lodge was closed down, and Bro. Sarjeant was elected W.M. for the ensuing week. The thanks of the Lodge were voted to Bro. Chapman for his services as W.M., for which that brother responded, thanking the members generally for the instruction he had received, through their instrumentality. Lodge was then closed, and adjourned.

Lodge was resumed to the second, and the Preceptor, assisted by the brethren, worked the third section of the lecture. Lodge was closed to the first, and Bro. Cursons was unanimously elected W.M. for the ensuing week. Lodge was then closed in ancient form, and adjourned until Friday, at 8 p.m.

The Lodge was opened in due form, and the minutes of the previous meeting read and confirmed. The ceremony of initiation was then rehearsed by the W.M., Bro. Milbourn being the candidate. The questions preparatory to passing having been answered, the Lodge was opened in the second degree, and Bro. Walker was passed to the degree of Fellow Craft, the ceremony being most ably and efficiently rehearsed, in his usual excellent style, by Bro. Topp. The Lodge was then resumed in the first degree, and the first section of the Lecture worked by Bro. Topp, assisted by the brethren. Proposed by Bro. Milbourn, seconded by Bro. Strickland, and carried unanimously, that this Lodge be adjourned until the 25th September. Nothing further offering for the good of Freemasonry, Lodge was closed in due form.

Lodge resumed to first degree, and the first and second sections were worked by the Preceptor, assisted by the brethren. Bro. Cursons was unanimously elected W.M. for next Monday. The brethren were then invited to the William Preston Lodge of Instruction, on Friday, 20th inst., to meet the Canadian Volunteers, at present at Wimbledon, who have expressed their wish to attend a Lodge of Instruction in England during their stay. The Lodge was closed in perfect harmony, and adjourned until 23rd inst. at 8 p.m. A brother joined the Benevolent Association, being No. 33 on the list.

Martyn Lodge, No. 1983.—At the Installation of officers on Friday, the 6th inst., Bro. J. M. Canova, the retiring W.M., was presented with a very handsome Past Master's jewel by the brethren of the Lodge. The jewel, which was of 18-carat gold, was a very fine specimen of the goldsmith's art, and bore the following inscription:—"Presented by the Brethren of the Martyn Lodge, 1983, to Bro. John M. Canova, the first W.M. July 6, 1883." Bro. the Rev. C. J. Martyn D.P.G.M, who spoke in highest terms of Bro. ERA CHAPTER, No. 1423.

THE installation meeting of this Chapter was held at the Albany Hotel, Twickenham, on Saturday, the 14th instant. The attendance of members was considerably lessened by the stormy weather which prevailed throughout the day; notwithstanding which, however, the Principals and Officers, with several members, were present in due time. Chapter was opened by Ex-Comps. W. Smeed P.P.G.J. M.E.Z., J. Faulkner H., and H. Higgins P.Z.J., W. J. Baldwin I.P.Z., Jas. Stevens P.Z., T. C. Walls P.Z., W. Hammond P.Z., and E. H. Thiellay P.Z. and Treasurer. The Companions below the chair having been admitted, the minutes of the former Convocation were read and confirmed. Ex Comps. J. Faulkner, D. Haslett, and Dr. J. B. Ryley were severally installed M.E.Z., H. and J. Comp. J. Goodchild was invested S.E., Comp. E. G. Wingate S.N. The investment of P.S. was deferred until next Convocation. Comp. John Gilbert, Janitor, being unavoidably absent, Comp. Lane officiated for him throughout the evening. The installation ceremony was ably rendered by Ex Comp. Smeed, to whom a vote of thanks for his services was recorded. The banquet which followed was presided over by the newly-installed M.E.Z., Ex Comp. Faulkner, who introduced the several toasts very effectively, and the responses were equally brief and to the point. On his health as I.P.Z. being cordially drank, Ex Comp. Baldwin received at the hands of the M.E.Z. a very handsome P.Z.'s jewel, with suitable inscription, recording his good services to the Chapter. The pleasures of the evening were increased by excellent songs and recitations, Comps. Smeed and Walls distinguishing themselves in respect of the former, and Comp. Stevens gratifying the company by the recital of the Masonic poem with which his name has become identified. After a well-spent hour or two the Companions sought their homeward-bound trains, and with hearty good wishes for the continued welfare of the Craft, separated.

The Provincial Grand Chapter of Kent will be held under the presidency of the Grand Superintendent, the Right Hon. Vicount Holmesdale, at the Wesleyan Schools, Dartford, on Wednesday, 1st August. A banquet will afterwards take place at the Bull Hotel, Dartford. Tickets 7s 6d each, to include dessert and attendance.

By Order of the Secretary of State for War, twenty-seven mules, that were purchased for the late Egyptian Campaign, were sold by auction on Monday last, by Mr. Briggs, at the Elephant and Castle Horse Repository, New Kent-road. These mules, which were large and well-bred, were purchased in the Mediterranean, and sold for a total of 491½ guineas, or an average of over 18 guineas. The best of these animals realised the exceptional price of 26 guineas.

MASONIC INTEREST IN PUBLIC AFFAIRS.

GLANCING at a recent issue of a non-Masonic paper published in Canada—the Quebec Weekly Chronicle—we chanced to light on a reference to the Masonic brotherhood. Although made in connection with an event that happened some eighty-four years since, and which was then carried out with Masonic ceremonial, it may justly be referred to at the present time, when recent Masonic doings, in England at least, enable us to prove that the writer in our Canadian contemporary is somewhat in error in the tone of his remarks. The article in question is headed "A Red Letter Day in Olden Times," and has reference to the laying of the corner stone of the Provincial Court House, at Quebec, on the 11th November 1799. The writer, who regrets he is not a member of the Mystic Circle, having referred to the absence of any detailed or even brief account of this "city incident of undoubted interest in its day—both from its object, as well as from the exalted rank of those who witnessed or took part in it," remarks, that "'tis possible some desirable and dainty tidbits of information might be gleaned from a perusal of the registers of the Quebec Masonic Craft—the usual and zealous attendants at all pageants of the kind in olden times." From this it will be seen that our contemporary implies that the regular and zealous attendance of the Masonic Craft at such ceremonies is only a relic of the past, whereas we, as Freemasons, think we can prove that at no time did Freemasons take more interest in such public events than at the present, and it is not necessary for us to do much more than refer to the Masonic doings of last week to confirm our assertion. On Monday, the 16th inst., a Masonic contribution, in the form of a pulpit, was formally made to what may be looked upon as a national undertaking—the restoration of St. Albans Abbey, while on Wednesday, a Special Grand Lodge was held at York, at which the M.W. G. Master presided, when the Memorial Stone of the York Institute of Art, Science and Literature was laid. These are but recent instances of the good work that Freemasons are continually doing in the present, as indeed we may say they have done for ages past, and, we trust, will ever continue to do.

It has been the peculiar privilege of Freemasons, so long as the Order has been in existence, to take a prominent part in the commencement of the principal public buildings which have been erected, and it is not very difficult to trace the origin of the custom which associates the members of the Order with such undertakings. The Freemasons of to-day are descended from the Operative Masons of the olden times, and retain the custom of inaugurating new buildings as one of the mementoes of the past. Their co-operation is also sought as giving additional importance to what is at all times an impressive work, while the lessons which are illustrated by the ceremony are of a character intended to improve us in our every day life, and may not be without effect on the general public, although, perhaps, not to the extent they are on members of the Craft.

The ceremony at York was of the most gratifying character. Connected as that city is with the earlier history of Freemasonry, a visit to it is always a matter of interest to the members of the Order, but when that visit is associated with a Masonic celebration the enjoyment becomes much greater. It has been our pleasure to visit York on more than one occasion, to take part in Masonic celebrations, and on each the Grand Old City has maintained its reputation, but on Wednesday last, the ceremony performed was of a nature capable of showing to greater advantage the doings of the Craft, and, accordingly, it seemed to make a greater impression than was previously the case. In addition to the greater display possible on the present occasion, the Grand Master and his Officers were present in their official capacity, while the popularity of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, both as a member of the Royal Family and as Grand Master of the Masonic Order, also weighed heavily in the scale of attractions. Everything seemed to combine to render this latest Masonic work one of which we may justly boast. Although a considerable distance from the homes of most of the Grand Officers, that body was very largely represented, as it generally is whenever a call is made on them, while the number of lay brethren who attended was among the largest ever known in the district. In closing our remarks in reference to this most interesting event, we cannot do better than quote the following, which appeared in the Yorkshire Gazette of Saturday last, and which we have little reason to doubt was written by one who took a most prominent part in the arrangements of the day.

Next to the Holy City itself, there is no place whose traditions are so closely mixed up with those of Freemasonry as the ancient capital of the north. Foreign members of the venerable Craft look towards York in much the same spirit as the pious Mussulman gazes in the direction of Mecca, and a Masonic pilgrimage to York is regarded as a sine qua non by every active American Mason who visits the mother country. It was in York, according to the earliest traditions, that, under the Saxon Kings, grand annual assemblies of Operative Masons were held, and by one of them a charter was granted to the guild of builders of that day, and it is at the present day in York that some of the earliest known records of Freemasonry are still preserved. At one period during the last century there was a Grand Lodge existing in York, and many of its documents and minute books are still preserved. There was a Lodge in York in existence in 1705, which is several years before the present Grand Lodge in London was formed, ruled over by Sir George Tempest, who was called "the President." When the Grand Lodge in London was formed in 1721, the Masons of York regarded the step as an infringement of their rights, and declared themselves to be "The Grand Lodge of All England," by immemorial right. The southern rival, however, was too strong for its northern sister, and after a very chequered and often feeble existence, "The Grand Lodge of All England" at York died of inanition about 1792, the Grand Master of that day being Mr. Edward Woolley, a York solicitor. In the meantime the York Masons do not seem to have entertained a very exalted opinion of their own Grand Lodge, since they sought authority for other Lodges, not from their own Grand Lodge, as might have been expected, but from the Grand Lodge in London. About 1765 there was a Lodge meeting at the Punch Bowl, in Stonegate, under a London warrant, and in 1773 there was the Apollo Lodge meeting at the George Hotel in Coney-street. Both these Lodges died out, but in 1777 the Union Lodge was founded under a London warrant, and is in existence at the present day, having changed its name to "York" Lodge in the year 1870. At no time have more than three Lodges been in working existence in York, and at the present day that number of Lodges are in full play: the York Lodge 236, the Eboracum Lodge 1611, and the Agricola Lodge 1991. When the Grand Lodge at York expired in 1792 many of its properties and documents became scattered, but at intervals the most important of these have been brought to light, and have been handed over to the custody of the York Lodge, in whose possession they now remain. It will thus be seen that at no place could a Masonic ceremony be held with greater propriety than within the walls of old Eboracum.

The last occasion on which a meeting of the Grand Lodge of England was held in York was on the 20th October 1841, when H.R.H.

the Duke of Sussex opened a Grand Lodge in the State Room of the Mansion House, the late Earl of Zetland, Prov. Grand Master North and East Yorkshire, being present as Pro Grand Master, and Bro. Timothy Hutton D.P.G.M. as Deputy Grand Master. The Grand Officers' chairs were filled by the corresponding Provincial Grand Officers. Addresses were presented to His Royal Highness by the brethren of the two Yorkshire Provinces, and a banquet was afterwards held in the Guildhall, at which the Grand Master presided, the Master of each Lodge having been previously presented, and received from the Grand Master the right hand of fellowship.

MARK MASONRY IN CANADA AND ENGLAND.

WHERE there is no canon law, no inspired record to govern an institution, there is sure to be a struggle for authority among rival claimants. In matters of religious faith, the appeal is to the law and to the testimony, but where are these to be found of such an age and weight as to become acceptable in a general or reliable sense to the Masonic body? Tradition has preserved the genius of Freemasonry; it has handed down its spirit, it may be from countless ages; but no fixed laws either for constitution or working. That there were laws in the old time there is reason to believe, that the ceremonies of to-day may be the same in character as they were two thousand years ago is also possible. What must be admitted is, that there is no proof, nothing but speculation of an imaginative character. The spirit is present; what shape it shall take, and how be controlled, has been left to the decision of those who are the children of circumstances, and who have determined according to the exigencies of each case. Hence it is that there is not one Grand Lodge only, but many Grand Lodges, each claiming equal right to its charter of independence, and each recognising a common ground of communion. That is so far as Craft Freemasonry is concerned. When a departure is made from a settled foundation to one not recognised, or regarded as doubtful, then the seeds of contention are sown, and bitterness and strife are likely to succeed. As is sown, so shall the reaping be. It is very difficult to decide between rival claims when liberty of choice is almost unbounded. Only conviction, gained by knowledge and experience, can furnish ground for decision, and time alone can consecrate custom and make it law. Unfortunately the rivalry of contending systems makes the work slower and less complete than it otherwise would be. Men neglect the Craft for a while in order to bestow time, praise, and attention on other, and as some deem them, higher degrees. The Royal Arch is now the accepted climax of English Freemasonry. The Mark Degree, against which nothing here is said, or meant to be inferred so far as its purpose is concerned, has no part or lot in the Craft. It stands alone in England, a law unto itself, the arbiter of its own faith and practice, and so far as that practice is known it has been fruitful of good work. It is well understood that Mark Masonry, although patronised by men of high estate in the realm, some of whom hold leading positions in the Craft, is not regarded as a necessary part of the fundamental system of Freemasonry that has now received the seal of time and the sanction of usage. It is not likely to become incorporated with the Craft, nor is it desirable that such a union should take place. Indeed, Mark Masons themselves disclaim any desire now to disturb the present arrangement. Those who know most of Freemasonry, who have the greatest right to speak with authority, contend that the three degrees contain all that is essential, and sure it is that he who can grasp their spirit, master their details, and act up to their teachings and requirements, is fitted to be a God among men. The Royal Arch is said to put the finishing stroke to the system; the cap to the pedestal. It supplies something that is lacking in form, and it may be in spirit, but the essential principles, the requisites for the cultivation of the noblest development of morality and true religion are contained in Craft Masonry. Still it must not be forgotten that the Royal Arch is a noble portion of the whole recognised structure, and those who have passed through its forms and ceremonies consider that their Masonic education would not be complete without acquaintance with the mysteries of the Chapter. One thing is certain, that Arch brethren are not worse Masons for their increased knowledge; on the contrary, they profit by their enlarged experience, and probably take a warmer interest in the Craft in consequence of their Arch knowledge than they otherwise would have done. The Arch is a recognised branch or outcome of the Craft, it is governed upon the same lines and is solidly founded. Even were the merits of the Arch less than they are, its position would command confidence; as it is it boasts authority and beauty, and claims completeness. Whatever advantages the Mark degree may possess, it is and must ever be considered to be something outside of the established order of Freemasonry in England. Good of itself, as no doubt it is, yet it must depend upon its own merits for sustenance, and if it flourishes at all it must be by nourishment self-contained, so far as this country is concerned.

There is so much heartiness among Freemasons in Canada and America, so much that is noble, earnest and generous, that it seems ungracious to mar the picture with dark lines and ugly features. It is the nature of the people to go ahead. They have all the energies of Englishmen quickened, and unfortunately their failings are in the same degree accentuated. They love liberty, and sometimes mistake it for license. At any rate they carry its exercise to the verge of extravagance. Less scrupulous than their English brethren, the Grand Chapters in Canada and America have taken the Mark degree under their jurisdiction, and just now a dispute is pending which has already aroused much ill blood, and which it is feared will not terminate without causing a breach that time alone can heal. Bro. Frederick Binckes asks that judgment should be suspended, and he nobly adds: "Surely, where the real spirit of Freemasonry prevails means of adjustment of any differences which do exist, or may be supposed to exist, can readily be found." The hope is worthy of Bro. Binckes, and every true Mason will be glad if it should prove to be well founded. It is not the purpose here to excite the contention that has sprung up, to add fuel to the fierce fire that burns in the breast of Bro. John H. Graham, P.G.Z.G.C. of Quebec, but only to put the facts briefly, and to illustrate the ill effects of trying to combine elements that would be best kept separate. The Grand Chapter of Quebec claims complete and absolute jurisdiction over the whole Province. A few years ago, as representatives of Mark Masonry as well as of the Chapters, they entered into amicable communion with the Grand Lodge of Mark Masons in England. Whether the rights held by each were determined at the time, or even discussed, does not appear, and up to about two months ago all was peace and goodwill between the two bodies. It transpired, however, that the Grand Lodge of Mark Masons in England in May issued a warrant for a new Lodge in Montreal, and also created a new Province. These acts were done, it is alleged, without the slightest intimation to, and in defiance of, the Grand Chapter of Quebec. The mode of carrying out the acts as well as the acts themselves have aroused a strong opposition in Canada, and Bro. Graham, who appears to be the mouthpiece of the Quebec Grand Chapter, has hurled forth an anathema worthy of the powerful days of Popedom. Assuming that his contention is right, it is scarcely warrantable on his part to indulge in the intemperate language that he has used in his letter to Bro. Lord Henniker, M.W.G.M. of the Grand Lodge of Mark Master Masons of England and Wales. His curses are likely to be as effective as they were in the case of the Jackdaw of Rheims; it is to be hoped they will not be quite so ridiculous. It is impossible to judge justly until all the facts are known; at present there is only an ex parte statement to go upon. When the Grand Lodge of Mark Masons of England has been heard in defence, it will be time enough to draw conclusions, and if necessary to take up cudgels in self-defence. Just now patience and forbearance is necessary in order that what is now considered an intemperate outburst should not degenerate into a lasting cause of severance and enmity. The Freemason points out what may prove to be a very serious evil affecting the constitution of the Grand Chapter of Quebec. It is asserted that this Chapter is not a legal institution according to the laws of Canada, and as a consequence is not entitled to recognition. That may be so, but it cannot alter the moral obligations of the Mark Grand Lodge of England. As far as the evidence goes at present, the question of legality was not in dispute when the two bodies entered into communion, and the conditions then entered into and implied hold good in the present dispute. As a matter of abstract justice it is perfectly right that Freemasons all over the world ought to set an example of obedience to the law of the country in which they reside; but when a compact is made, it is not competent for one body to draw back or screen itself under a plea that did not arise at the time of the compact, and which affects one of the bodies over which they cannot possibly have any control. The legality or otherwise of the Grand Chapter of Quebec is for the Canadian authorities to settle. This uncertainty complicates the matter in dispute, so far as the latter body is concerned, but the present contentions may lead to the clearing away of the cobwebs of the law, and to a better understanding in the future. The question as it stands must be decided upon the original terms of understanding, and the prayers of every good Mason should be in behalf of moderate and wise counsels.

RECRUITING CANDIDATES.

THERE is no principle of Masonry more clearly defined, or better understood by the Craft generally, than that which requires that all who seek admission into this time-honoured institution must come of their own free will and accord. This regulation has existed from time immemorial, not as a part of the written law of Masonry, but as an invariable rule of action, handed down from one generation to another, which every member should observe in his intercourse with those who are not Masons. The necessity of this rule is so apparent to every well informed brother that he requires no written law to compel obedience to it. He well knows that every applicant for Masonry must make a solemn declaration, upon his honour, before he can cross the threshold of a Lodge, that he comes unbiassed by friends and uninfluenced by mercenary motives. Such a declaration cannot be truthfully made if the candidate has been persuaded to present his petition through the solicitation of any one, and the Mason who asks his friend to send in his petition to a Lodge by that act compels him to make a false statement, or to answer interrogatories that precede his entrance into the Lodge in such a manner as would debar his admission. No true Mason would desire to place himself in that position toward his friend, nor could he conscientiously permit him to enter the Lodge after having brought him to the door, knowing that he had not truthfully answered the questions propounded to him in the preparation room.

There may be some ready to inquire in surprise if Masons are ever guilty of violating a rule of so great importance to Masonry. It would hardly seem possible that one could be found who would do so wilfully, and yet there have been instances in which we have been forced to that conclusion. To decide otherwise would be giving them credit for a less knowledge of Masonry than they claim for themselves. Only a few days since we were told by a young man in this city that he had been repeatedly solicited to send in his petition. In two instances blank petitions had been placed before him, and arguments used to obtain his signature. The persons mentioned by him as having presented these petitions are well known Masons, of high standing, who would be unwilling to plead ignorance in matters of Masonic law and usage.

We have cited this case to show that the practice of recruiting candidates is sometimes indulged in by Masons with more zeal than discretion. Other evidence might be presented, showing that this evil exists to a greater or less extent in quite a number of Lodges. It cannot be too soon suppressed for the good of Masonry. No Lodge can long prosper that has recruiting agents in the field to keep up a supply of work. It may do so for a time, while it is thus sowing the seeds of discord and contention that will eventually cause it to fall to pieces.

Much more might be said upon this subject, but simply calling attention to it ought to be sufficient to eradicate so apparent an evil. Think of the matter, brethren, and take heed that no charge of undue solicitation may be ever laid at your door.—Masonic Advocate.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—Notable Facts.—Summer heats augment the annoyances of skin disease and encourage the development of febrile disorders wherefore they should, as they may, be removed by these detergent and purifying preparations. In stomach complaints, liver affections, pains and spasms of the bowels, Holloway's unguent, well rubbed over the affected part, immediately gives the greatest ease, prevents congestion and inflammation, checks the threatening diarrhœa and averts incipient cholera. The poorer inhabitants of large cities will find these remedies to be their best friend when any pestilence rages, or when from unknown causes eruptions, boils, abscesses, or ulcerations, betoken the presence of taints or impurities within the system and call for instant and effective curative medicines.

THE EASTERN COUNTIES.

ONCE upon a time, within memory of the present generation, the Great Eastern Railway was said to be about the worst-managed line in England. A journey to Norwich or Yarmouth was considered quite an undertaking, and as for Cromer, that was only to be approached after a lapse of time and an expenditure of money and patience, reminding one of the old coaching days, when haste and comfort were not so much desired as in these modern times. Norfolk, like some other counties, paid the penalty of rash railway speculations. It was, and still is, too slow for the times, and but for the new life that has been imparted to the Great Eastern Railway management it would have suffered still more than it has done. It may safely be averred that the Great Eastern Railway has done more than anything else to save the Eastern Counties from the full effects of agricultural depression, and in the cases of some towns it has actually saved them from stagnation. This is particularly true of Harwich, and in a great measure of Norwich. This latter city scarcely realises the good improved railway communication has done it, but it is nevertheless a fact, and one for which the citizens should be grateful. It was scarcely possible to improve the carrying trade of the railway without opening up new places of interest to the pleasure and health seekers. As commercial centres have prospered, owing to increased facilities of locomotion, so have sea-side resorts grown, until now in number, excellence and variety the East Coast abounds in attractive spots, scarcely equalled and certainly not surpassed on any other wave-washed shores. These assertions are capable of easy proof, and in order to convince our readers we ask them to take the very excellent map that is attached to the Great Eastern Railway Time Table, which can be had for a penny, and accompany us as we go from spot to spot, pointing out the numerous places that dot the coast from Hunstanton to Maldon.

At the north-east corner of the Wash, and facing Boston on the Lincolnshire coast opposite, is Hunstanton. This is quite a new foundation, and is fast growing in size and population. It is a very cosey little watering place, quiet, pretty, and moderate in charges. The old village is a mile or two away, and the walks to it, either by the road or along the cliff, are very enjoyable. Sandringham is close by, and an easy railway journey takes the visitor to Wells, a small sleepy little town, but possessing a history and attraction worth attention. To get to Cromer, the next place on the coast, by rail, the journey must be taken by Walsingham and Fakenham to Wroxham, thence to charming Cromer, one of the most delightful places in England. Before dwelling upon this gem of the East coast, we would direct our reader's attention to Walsingham, where a stay should be made in order to see the ruins of the Chapel of our Lady of Walsingham, once the most gorgeous and richest votive shrine in the country. Visitors who make the call will thank us for the suggestion. Leaving this scene of decayed grandeur and desolate shrines, we will return to Cromer, the way of reaching which we have indicated. Those, however, who are fond of walking would find the ramble from Wells, through Holkham, the beautiful home and extensive domain of Lord Leicester, and Walsingham (a rather long detour), to Cromer very interesting. The coast is somewhat wild, yet not deserted, and the villages that are to be met with are not without their charms. Once at Cromer, all other thoughts, except those of pleasant scenes, lovely walks and drives, pure bracing air and sun-tinted sands and waves, should be forgotten. A whole paper might be written about Cromer without exhausting its beauties, and if the Great Eastern Railway had done nothing more than open up this lovely spot they would have deserved well of the public. Leaving Cromer, a railway journey to Brundall, through Acle, will lead to Yarmouth. Formerly it was necessary to go on to Whitlingham or Norwich before reaching the Yarmouth line, now the junction has been formed at Brundall. The journey is shortened, and the line passes through the very centre of the angler's Eldorado. It brings the river Bure and the Broads abounding in the locality within a new railway service, and thus adds to the advantages of visitors, especially of the disciples of Izaak Walton. We need not describe Yarmouth. Where are such sands to be found, stretching as they do from the Harbour mouth, at Gorleston, as far as the eye can reach? Here Bohemianism is seen in full force, and 'Arry and 'Arriett are as happy as their richer pleasure seekers. There is a decent observance of the laws and courtesies of life, but there is a freedom and a boisterousness that set Puritanical notions at defiance, and which claim affinity with rude Neptune himself when shaken by wind and storm. It is only a few miles to Lowestoft, and all is changed to comparative quiet and the decorum of the drawing-room. This Suffolk town is very pretty, nevertheless, and possesses attractions peculiarly its own. Lowestoft is termed the Queen of the watering places on the East coast, and certainly the Great Eastern Railway Company have done all in their power to make it worthy of the name. It is a growing place, and a few years hence it will be really worthy of the high-sounding name it now bears. As it is, it is a very pleasant resort, and one where those who desire a moderate amount of excitement can be gratified. It is a famous place for a sail, and has the advantage of communication with Oulton Broad by means of Lake Lothing. The broad is the haunt of yachts, and affords agreeable sailing as well as good sport to the angler. The walk from Lowestoft to Oulton is very pleasant, but that from Lowestoft to Corton is still more so. The fern and bracken-clad cliffs, the green dells below, and the splashing sea beyond, form an attractive picture, especially when lighted up by the sun or toned down by the sober light of the moon.

Leaving Lowestoft we plunge deeper into Suffolk and approach some places that had a history as sea-side resorts, and which had played parts in the drama of life centuries ago. Southwold is a charming little spot, full of green knolls and rich in carvings of the domestic order. It boasts a fine church, pure air, quietude and cheapness. The immediate neighbourhood is not very cheerful, owing to the presence of ruins of former prosperity, but the country beyond is pretty. Aldeburgh, the birthplace of the poet Crabbe, is another old-fashioned watering place, another relic of the glories of the past. It is more pretentious than Southwold, but lacks its verdure and country-like aspect. Aldeburgh reeks of the sea; there is a rudeness about the place which harmonises with the restless waves, and a wild eeriness that fascinates the visitor. The air is splendid, and those who want to take in a good stock of ozone, who love breezy walks, and can let the imagination of the past supply the absence of the present attractions, could not do better than go to Aldeburgh, with its quaint old Moot Hall, once surrounded by the busy haunts of man, now standing alone on the beach as a monument of far off times. Passing by Woodbridge, a dull town, washed by an arm of the sea, by means of which a large trade is carried on, we come to Felixstowe, a growing popular resort. It is just opposite Harwich harbour, and may be said to stand sentinel at its mouth. Beyond Harwich, and reached by a picturesque walk, is Dovercourt, a small bathing station. No one who goes to Harwich or Felixstowe should omit the trip up the Orwell to Ipswich. The old Suffolk town is particularly interesting, but the river that leads to it is extremely beautiful. A pleasanter journey we could hardly conceive, and in order to meet the wants of the public and to provide for their pleasures the company's steamers run to and fro frequently. To thoroughly enjoy the trip the visitor should know a little of the locality. There are plenty of guide books to be had. Those who have read "Margaret Catchpole" will find their interest increased upon visiting Ipswich, where many of the incidents recorded in that intensely interesting romance of real life occurred. Further on is Walton-on-the-Naze, a place of many natural advantages, and just suited for persons of moderate means and for school trips. Its neighbour, Clacton-on-Sea, revels in modern pretensions. Everything about it, except the everlasting sea and the cliffs, is new and fresh. It wears an air of prosperity and gentility that once blessed its now less fortunate rival. It is most favourably situated, and the owners of the land immediately adjoining the sea are enterprising as well as ambitious. The future of Clacton is full of promise, and one day it will rank among the foremost places of fashionable resort along the East coast. From Clacton it is but an easy walk to St. Osyth's Priory, the ruins of which are well worthy a visit. The journey may be continued, either by road or water, to Brightlingsea, where the oyster culture is carried on with success. There is nothing particular to see in the place itself, but as the inhabitants are chiefly fishermen, there is plenty of sport and sailing to be had. Further on still is Maldon, situated on an extreme arm of the sea, that penetrates inland a considerable distance. The town is small, but it figures in the historic page, and a visit to it would not be time ill-spent.

We commenced due north, and we have traversed the coast along the east to set south, the whole of which district is served by the Great Eastern Railway. Branching inland from the watering places are towns possessing surpassing interest. From Maldon it is easy to reach Dunmow, memorable for its old associations, and made notorious by the late Mr. Harrison Ainsworth, who revived the ceremony of presenting a flitch of bacon to the happy married couple who never knew what it was to nag at each other. Connubial bliss was perpetual, but there are some who contend that such pleasure is insipid compared with the joy of making up a quarrel. Continuing in the same direction, and not far from Saffron Walden, is Audley End, and further on still is Cambridge, with its colleges, its park-like demesnes, and river. From the other places we have mentioned between Maldon and Felixstowe, Colchester is a short journey. It is a pleasant town, and has some sights to boast of. Then there is quaint little Sudbury beyond, with the river Stour winding along through rich meadows and picturesque scenery. Both Gainsborough and Constable, celebrated landscape painters, were natives of this charming old town. It abounds in lanes and pretty nooks, from which the artists we have named drew their inspiration. Clare lies a little out of the direct route, but it should not be missed. We need say but little about Bury St. Edmunds. It is crowded with interest. Gateways and churches front the remains of an ancient Priory, that at one time was the glory of England. The remains still afford food for contemplation and admiration; art, in the shape of the Botanic Gardens, has been invoked to lend enchantment to the scene; but, after all, the chief attraction centres in the two glorious gateways, and beautiful churches. Busy, pretty, sporting Newmarket is not far away. What stories could be told of this village-town since racing was first established there, we believe in the time of one of the Charles'. What scenes of riot and regal profligacy have been witnessed. Even in modern days much takes place at Newmarket to make the judicious grieve; yet, withal, it is a very pleasant, clean, delightful little spot. Quiet, monotonous Ely lies still farther inland, among the fens that once were the strongholds of the Saxons; where Hereward the Wake held mighty sway, and defied his enemies. Framlingham, with its ruined castle and stately church, is but a short trip from Aldeburgh, and would well repay a visit. Lynn, Wisbeach, and Peterborough are all within hail of Hunstanton. Each place has attractions of its own, but the Cathedral at Peterborough possesses an especial charm. To our mind Ely Cathedral is the most beautiful of all the monuments of the devotion of a bygone age in the eastern part of England, not even excepting Lincoln Cathedral, grand as that pile is. We know of nothing approaching in chaste beauty and elegance the interior of the Lantern Tower at Ely. It is a superb work of art, and is worth a pilgrimage to see. Then there is the Lady Chapel, "a thing of beauty," but to be "a joy for ever" it needs the generosity and loving care of old times expended upon it. The palace adjoining is another choice picture that helps to fill up the canvas of charms that are presented in the otherwise dull and straggling town. An hour's ride from Cromer, Yarmouth, or Lowestoft, would take the visitor to the city of Norwich, the capital of East Anglia. The city itself is pretty, but the suburbs are delightful. Take Thorpe for instance for variety and cultivated beauty, and Mousehold Heath above it for wildness, with the sinuous river Yare winding along the valley below. Newmarket Road is a grand promenade, and from the hill westward, out by the Dereham Road, a splendid view is obtained of the city, the towers of the many churches standing out like beacons in the sky, the spire of the cathedral and the massive square battlemented castle being particularly conspicuous. The cathedral is unfortunately situated in a hollow, and can best be seen from Mousehold Heath. The gate entrances to the west are interesting monuments, notably the Erpingham Gate, which leads direct to the western door of the cathedral. Once inside the building, guides will be found to point out the many beauties that are to be seen. Visitors should take a good glass with them so as to examine the bosses in the roof. We believe they are unique. They should not forget either to turn up the seats in the choir, where they will be rewarded with the sight of some very quaint carving. Space forbids any further detail in this direction, especially as we have to deal with other matters of interest, that are to be found within the limits of the Great Eastern service. We know of no railway in the kingdom that embraces a district so rich in pleasure and health resorts, and the present managers of the line seem to be fully aware of their advantages. Their programme for the summer season meets every want, but so numerous are the details that we must refer our readers to the comprehensive time-table issued by the company for particulars. They will find pretty nearly every want anticipated, from that of the man who has but a day or two to spare and little cash at his command, to those who indulge in the usual fortnight's holiday, or who have time and money enough to enable them to extend their journeys and prolong their stay.

We have spoken of the Brundall Junction on the Great Eastern line from Norwich to Yarmouth, and of the new railway made through Acle to Yarmouth. This new line not only shortens the distance between Norwich and Yarmouth, but it leads to the district where the Broads abound, or at least to the River Bure, or North River, as it is frequently called, out of which branch the finest Broads. We shall not attempt to describe these unique expanse of waters, how they came, how they are sustained, and the history they tell. They are called lagoons by some, lakes by others; they are best known as Broads, a term, as far as we know, used nowhere else except in the Eastern Counties. These fine apparently natural wastes of waters are full of fish life, grandly endowed by nature, and are so situated as to make it a pleasure to get at them. There are two Broads close to Brundall Station on the Yare, and, although they afford happy illustrations of the rushey mazes, and wild freedom always more or less to be found in the Broads, they are but small examples of the whole, which chiefly abut on the Bure. It is only about half an hour's ride from Norwich to Wroxham, where is situated one of the most charming specimens of Norwich lake scenery to be found. Indeed, Wroxham Broad has no compeer in the county for size and beauty combined. It has wood, slopes, and seclusion, with water nearly as deep at the sides as in the middle. What that means to the yachtsman we need hardly say. It is a splendid place for a sail, for sport, and for quiet enjoyment. From Wroxham a pleasant water trip could easily be arranged, and some of the wildest and prettiest Broads visited. There are plenty of boats to be had. We found Mr. Loynes, of Elm Hill, Norwich, the best caterer for this kind of traffic. His boats are specially built for the Broads, and as he has a station at Wroxham, he offers facilities that no one else does as far as we know. Mr. Wright, King-street, Norwich, is another trustworthy guide. We mention these facts because boating arrangements are apart from railway accommodation. The Great Eastern Company take passengers to large centres, to branches and sidings; they do the main work, and leave the filling up to be provided by others. A day, or even two days, might be spent in the journey we have named. There are sleeping places to be had, and if somewhat rude, are clean and comfortable. To see certain Broads it would be necessary to go to Stalham, easily reached from Wroxham by rail; then there are others which can best be approached from Catfield, a station on the same line of railway as Stalham. There are a cluster of Broads, however, which have only one slight connection with the river, and that is by a ditch called Muck Fleet, only navigable to very small craft, and then under great difficulties. There are three Broads in one, of irregular shape; they are like the Octopus, all feelers. Once across Filby Broad and Ormsby and Rollesby Broads branch out in the most puzzling fashion. They present bays and nooks, and pretty little snatches of scenery. Wood, water, rushes, lillies and flowers unite to form a picture such as can only be seen where nature is uncontrolled by the hand of man. The best way to get to these Broads is from Yarmouth to Ormesby. A line beforehand to Mr. Mooney of the Eel's Foot (a charming little public house by the side of the water); or to Mr. Richmond, of the Sportsman's Arms, Rollesby Bridge, will command the services of a trap. The distance from the station is about three miles, a pleasant walk, but too far for some people. The Broads are breeding ponds and homes for fish; they afford excellent sport to the angler, and under certain conditions to the gunner. They are fruitful sources of wealth to the naturalist, and the artist never need despair of finding something new and beautiful for his brush or pencil. The Great Eastern Company have made these natural attractions possible to most people. They offer special facilities to anglers, for whom the Broads and rivers have such a charm. Those who desire further information about these lakes or lagoons should get Bro. Fieldson's little book, a series of articles reprinted from a Norwich paper, entitled "The Broads and Rivers of Norfolk," which can be obtained at 84 Fleet-street, or at Smith's bookstalls on the Great Eastern line.

We have hitherto confined our references to what the Great Eastern Company do for home sight-seers. They have been scarcely less successful in opening up Holland and Belgium, and speaking of Books, we commend the "Tourist Guide to the Continent," with map and numerous illustrations, issued by the authority of the Company, and published at the low price of sixpence. It is an excellent work, the cheapest and best of its kind we have seen. Those who contemplate a trip to Amsterdam or to Antwerp, and the various interesting places that are to be reached from there, should get this handy guide book. With it and the Great Eastern Time Table there would be no difficulty in arranging for the journey. Those who formerly used to go to the Continent viâ Harwich have anything but a pleasant recollection of the pier accommodation. It was of the rudest character; too small for the traffic as it grew, and altogether uncomfortable. Now all is changed. The reforming hand is seen everywhere, and in no place has it worked such wonders as at Harwich and its neighbourhood. Those who know the harbour will remember that there was no room for the extension of the landing piers on the old spot. Other ground had to be sought on another side. A swamp has been transformed, and at the present time a new pier has been erected capable of accommodating seven large steamers at one time. A new station and hotel have been built, wharves and a timber dock have been made, and shortly a town will spring up adjoining, uniting probably with Harwich and Dovercourt, the whole forming one large community little dreamt of a few years ago. Lines branch out of the main railway, which convey passengers to the new pier, now known as being situated in Parkeston, a name given to the place in honour of the chairman of the company, Mr. Parkes. The pier and station are united by a covered way; the whole is illuminated with the electric light. Every comfort has been provided for the traveller, and in order to accommodate the growing traffic two large new steamers have been built, one of which, called the "Norwich," made a trial trip last week. Seeing that this new venture has cost the company from first to last something like half a million of money, they must have large expectations to recoup them in interest alone. Their anticipations are great, and if they are realised Harwich will become one of the most important towns in the kingdom. A few years ago grass was growing in its streets; it is not very lively now, but it is gradually emerging from its stagnation, thanks to the Great Eastern Company. We have dwelt upon this subject because such enterprise as we have described is worthy of record, and it has been carried out quietly, too quietly perhaps. Now that it is complete, it is right that that the public should know what has been done for them. If we have assisted to that end, and in guiding holiday seekers to pleasant spots, we shall be amply repaid for the time we have devoted to the subject. Having dealt with the Eastern Counties, we shall in other papers treat of other and attractive localities.

Digitized by Google

"COMING OF AGE" CELEBRATION.

A VERY gratifying réunion took place a few evenings ago in connection with the coming of age of the eldest son of Bro. J. E. Fells, wine merchant, of Henry-street, Tooley-street (Immediate Past Master of the Confidence Lodge, No. 193). In anticipation of the happy event the employés of the firm had decided to give their young master a surprise, and subscribed amongst them a sum sufficient for the purchase of a handsome cabinet writing desk; and on learning of their intention Bro. Fells, with his wonted generosity, determined to add zest to the occasion by entertaining his workmen and others at dinner. Accordingly, the spacious vaults were gaily decorated with bunting and other embellishments, which gave to the usually dingy place quite the aspect of a superb dining saloon, and here a sumptuous repast was provided for the employés of Mr. Fells, and of Messrs. Spooner and Co., of Laurence Pountney-lane, numbering altogether over 120. The founder of the feast had invited several old friends to join the happy party, and amongst the guests were Bro. Robert Candlish, of Seaham, Durham, proprietor of the Londonderry Bottle Company, who remained in London specially for the ceremony; Mr. J. J. Candlish, the London representative of the Company; Mr. A. C. Hartley, of Laurence Pountney-lane; Mr. A. Goggs, Mr. Scarth, Mr. J. Macdonald, Mr. William Heath, Mr. F. L. Linkley, Mr. Thomas Stone, Mr. Llewellyn, Mr. W. Mist, of Ightham, Kent, and other gentlemen. A sumptuous repast was spread by Mr. Garrett, of Tooley-street, at the conclusion of which the customary loyal toasts were honoured. Mr. R. Candlish having spoken of his long and agreeable connection with Mr. Fells, said it afforded him great pleasure to be among their number on that auspicious occasion. In congratulating Mr. A. J. Fells on attaining his majority, he trusted that gentleman, who would now take a more active share in the responsibilities of the firm, would gain the esteem and good feeling that his father had so long enjoyed, and if he followed his father's footsteps he might reckon himself pretty certain of success. He then asked Mr. Arthur to accept the present which had been arranged for by the employés of the firm, and trusted he might be blessed with long life, happiness and prosperity. In conclusion, he said he had been desired by Mrs. Fells to express the great pleasure it afforded her to see her two sons so well respected by all who were in the employ of her husband, and hoped they might always endeavour to keep that position and do their utmost to add to the success of their then growing business. The toast was received with immense enthusiasm, and Mr. Arthur Fells, who appeared to have been much affected by the ovation given him, returned thanks in suitable terms for the handsome present which had been made to him, and the kindly expressions which had fallen from the various speakers in making the gift. He should ever esteem it a great honour, and look back upon the event with pride and gratitude. The health of the Founder of the Feast was then proposed in felicitous terms, and Bro. Fells suitably responded, extending a hearty welcome to the many visitors who had kindly assisted on that very happy occasion. Several other complimentary toasts followed, and amidst an abundance of harmony a most enjoyable evening was passed.

UNIFORMITY OF WORKING.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I have announced, by a letter to your contemporary, the Freemason, the termination, as far as I am concerned, of the lengthened controversy which has been sustained for so many year past on the above subject. An appeal, "for the sake of peace and rest to leave the matter where it is," has had much more force than any other argument could possibly have had with me; and I feel that it would ill become me as a Freemason to disregard the obvious wish of a majority that interference with "the lawful independence of Lodges" should cease.

When, in 1869 I first introduced the question of "Uniformity of Working," my proposals met with a considerable amount of support, and for a time the efforts of myself and others were crowned with success, which justified continued perseverance. Towards this result your journal greatly contributed, and throughout you have been a consistent advocate, as far as the limits of journalistic propriety would admit. To you, therefore, in this moment of farewell, I feel bound to communicate my intention, and to thank you for your assistance in the past; and I would beg of you, and through you all the brethren who have sympathised in the efforts I have made, not to misunderstand this surrender on my part. I am as much as ever in my own mind convinced that "Unity of Working," and a definite establishment of "the same usages and customs" are practicable, and the "intense difficulties" with which the movement is surrounded not altogether insurmountable. But the feelings of the brethren towards the attainment of the object I had in view in 1869-70 are not those of the Craft generally in 1883, and consequently I am in duty bound to retire, unless prepared by the sanction of my own example to raise a standard of discord and disunion. This I could not think of, and would rather appear defeated altogether than disturb the peace and harmony which belong to our Order by any fractious resentment of not having my own way.

I thought never to have done this, but my dream is over; and practical good sense teaches me that its realization, either now or in the immediate future, cannot be. So, good bye, Uniformity!

Yours faithfuly and fraternally,

JAMES STEVENS, P.M. 1216, P.Z.

HOW MOLEHILLS BECOME MOUNTAINS.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Looking down from my tower and perceiving what was in contemplation, I was among the first to sound the tocsin of alarm against the proposal to purchase the spare land adjoining the Girls' School at Battersea. Without the slightest attempt at co-operation or unity of action, there was a wonderful consensus of opinion against giving £36,000 for nine acres of land not worth above half the money. The monstrous nature of the demand was seen through, and the Quarterly Court, held on the 14th inst., dashed the hopes of the vendor, and once more proved their fitness for the trust reposed in them. Even Bro. James Stevens is complimentary. He was on the side of right, as no doubt he always desires to be, but he not unfrequently mars good intentions by some strange fatality. He did good service by giving the Court the advantage of his practical knowledge. He knows the value of land in the South of London especially, and was just the man to advise the Court. As it happened his knowledge squared with his opinions, and he approached the matter like a giant refreshed with new wine. I cannot share Bro. Stevens's thoughts about the House Committee. There was nothing in their action to warrant the conclusion that they were either favourable or unfavourable to the purchase of the land. Their duty was simply executive, and they discharged it in a manner worthy of loyal men to a great trust reposed in them.

The question is so far settled, but it is only scotched, not killed. The vendor of the land will most likely look out for other purchasers, and if he feels the sting of his recent failure he may, perhaps, consent to such conditions of sale as to make matters very unpleasant for the School. I am merely referring to a possibility. I know nothing of Mr. Whiting, and hope I may be altogether wrong in supposing for a moment that other than business ideas would influence him. But I cannot quite escape from that conclusion, because it is admitted that some of the land is necessary for the Schools, and that under certain circumstances it must be had. How far this knowledge will operate remains to be seen. The purchaser of that portion of the ground abutting on the School will not forget the necessities of the case, and it may be that the present refusal will lead to a future difficulty hardly less serious than the one now overcome. I was not particularly struck with the liberality of the discount offered, namely, £100 per acre. Sometimes these gifts are powerful bribes to the unwary; like sugared and gilded pills they conceal the poison or the purge, but they never fail to nauseate or to gripe. This principle of rebate, if I may use the term, is a valuable means sometimes of helping a charity, and if Mr. Whiting had made a more generous offer—say £250 per acre—he might have been successful. The money for the purchase in all probability would have been raised as a separate fund, and as the appeal would be for the gross sum, all beyond the absolute requirements of purchase would go to swell the general fund of the charity. The effort would have been worth while for between £2,000 and £3,000, but for £900, well, it is better to bear the ills we have than fly to others we know not of. This molehill, then, already shows signs of growing, and one of the results may be the removal of the School to some other site. I will not speak ex cathedra on this matter, but I think the remarkable facts mentioned at the Quarterly Court with regard to the price of land in other and far more beautiful localities than that of Battersea Rise cannot fail to awaken hope of the future. If the land at Battersea is so valuable, or is likely to become enhanced in value to anything like the extent of £4,000 per acre, it will become a question whether another site shall not be selected for the Girls' School, in which accommodation shall be provided for a larger number of occupants out of the profit made of the sale of the present building and ground. Matters have not yet reached this stage, but who will say that such a contingency may not occur? At any rate, recent facts teach the most important lesson of caution, and if out of the speculative present there arises a practical future, the Masonic body may thank the extravagant demands of Mr. Whiting for the opportunity afforded.

There is another matter, Sir, that is at present but a very small molehill, and yet methinks it will grow into something totally different. I allude to the Almshouses at Croydon. A brother, only a few days ago, went so far as to describe them to me as a "white elephant," and he suggested that they should be dealt with as the Government of the day dealt with Greenwich Hospital. I am inclined to believe he is right in fact, but his example was a most unfortunate one. The magnificent buildings at Greenwich were erected as a national home for our brave sailors, as a heritage to which they were entitled by virtue of service and of their wounds and scars. Greenwich Hospital was the embodiment of national sentiment, of the pride and glory of a people living in an island home, whose bulwarks were the wooden walls of old England, and whose gallant defenders were our sailors. When the Greenwich pensioners were disbanded, sentiment was cruelly wrenched, and a fatal blow was struck at national pride. The Almshouses at Croydon are associated with wrecked fortunes and troublous times. It is true they are a haven of rest for the weary world-tired wayfarer, but they are also reminders of more prosperous times. The bane is equally present with the antidote, and unfortunately the cost is out of all proportion to the good that is done. I think the time has come to consider whether it would not be kinder to our poor distressed brethren to let them keep their little homes, or reside with their friends, and while recipients of secret charity shall be free in the sight of the world from the badge of dependence. I may some day return to this subject; at present I shall content myself with saying that economy, as well as kindness, point to the change I have indicated.

I am, Dear Sir and Brother,

Yours fraternally,

WATCHMAN.

THE PRICKED WINDBAG.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I should very much like to be introduced to Brother "WATCHMAN," and to shake hands with him for giving me the dressing which, in the innocence of his mind, he thinks I deserve; and also for the little bits of sugar with which he administers the dose. I can assure Brother "WATCHMAN" that nobody will be more ready and willing to make the most ample apology that can be required if the charges that I have made are incorrect; if the brethren I have complained of, in open Lodge or by letter in the Masonic papers, where I have made my charges, state that the one brother did not purposely prolong his arguments on the New Zealand question, and that the G.D.C. did not, with watch in hand, urge the latter to continue speaking so that no new matter might be brought before the Grand Lodge that night. I am quite willing to accept their words as men and Masons, but until that be done I shall be of the same opinion still,—that it was as plain a case of obstruction as ever took place in the House of Commons or elsewhere.

With regard to the Executive, whom I blame for the manner in which they did, and did not, give notice of their intention to call a Special Grand Lodge, Bro. "WATCHMAN" uses a very mild term when he says, if they did not give proper notice; it only amounted to a want of courtesy. Let us look back a little. A Revise Committee from the Board of General Purposes took upon themselves a necessary work, unbeknown to the Craft; this evidenced, in the first instance, a great want of respect to the members of Grand Lodge; and, secondly, when the Revise was referred back to them for re-consideration, with instructions that a report was to be given at the Quarterly Communication in June last, they fail to make any report whatever, thus making a breach in the duty which the Grand Lodge had entrusted to their care. Bro. "WATCHMAN" forgets that the Provincial Brethren had, only just a short time before, been up to and had returned from the Girls' Festival, and that they had also returned home from the Boys' Festival; now, while they were attending here, the summons was awaiting them at home. Does Brother "WATCHMAN" know that there are about 310 London Lodges (putting aside the nine Time Immemorial Lodges, and those in the Home Counties, many of whose members have their business in London and their Lodges in the country), that the average age of the Matrons is 45½ years, and that in the ordinary course of events there would be some 14,000 Past Masters besides Wardens, take off half for deaths, and those who have relinquished Freemasonry, also take off another half who cannot attend from various causes, and you leave the respectable number of 3,500; once more divide that, and you will have not less than 1,750 entitled to attend Grand Lodge, and I feel certain that I am within the mark when I state that a large majority of the last are business men, to whom Friday is the most important day of the week, and the hour fixed for the meeting the most important of the day. Of course, to some fortunate individuals the amount of postage may be a perfect matter of indifference, though to others it is not. Bro. "WATCHMAN" makes facetious remarks about the sentence "half the brethren;" perhaps in his category there are no such things as printers' errors, but it so happened, I suppose, owing to the illness of our Brother Editor, I did not receive a proof of my letter, which I had asked for, and at other times have invariably received. That fact sufficiently accounts for this one error; there were others, but watchful "WATCHMAN" has been gracious enough to pass them over. As to the trouble the worthy Editor took about the Revise, I perhaps know as much, or more, than Brother "WATCHMAN," as I sent sets of manuscripts of the old and new editions, with remarks and suggestions, which the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE was good enough to return me afterwards, and I have them with me now. I also had the Revised Book of Constitutions interleaved, and I then gummed the corresponding paragraphs of the Book of Constitutions on the opposite page, so that I know pretty well what our brother had to do before he completed his task. With regard to the whole substance of my former letters, to which Bro. "WATCHMAN" has taken such exception, I am ready and willing to apologise for any incorrect statement—that shall be proved to be so—in as public a manner as I have made them; I bear no animosity to any man; the slights, errors, or whatever he may please to call them, were I consider not to me personally but to the Craft at large, and I only wish some more able writer had taken up the thankless task of exposing what may be thought faulty in the administration of affairs; but what is everybody's business is nobody's business, and unless some one makes a start, there will be no redress for grievances,—real or fancied. I think Bro. "WATCHMAN," who with such ability shows that he holds the pen of a ready writer, might very possibly, if he lent the weight of his name, do some good. At the same time, I hope he will have the good taste to choose a more euphonious, though equally expressive title to his communication, than that of "A PRICKED WINDBAG." Palmam qui meruit ferat.

Yours fraternally,

P.M. 1607.

The Provincial Grand Lodge of Essex will meet at Parkeston, near Harwich, on Wednesday next. Brethren who purpose attending can secure Return Tickets at a single fare on production of their summonses at any of the Stations of the Great Eastern Railway. Prov. Grand Lodge will be opened at One o'clock punctually.

A meeting of the North London Chapter was held at the Canonbury Tavern, St. Mary's-road, Islington, on Thursday evening last. Comps. Higgins Z., Sheffield H., R. Bird J., Edmonds S.N., Gregory P.S. Taking into consideration the season of the year, and many of the Companions enjoying their holidays, there was a fair attendance.

The ceremony will be performed by General Brownrigg, C.B., Provincial Grand Master Surrey, assisted by Rev. C. W. Arnold, M.A., P.G. Chaplain and P.D.G.M. Bro. Joseph Steele is W.M., and Bros. The Evening News says, "The fate of poor Captain Webb takes away from us a brother Mason, and Neptune Lodge, No. 22, has to mourn the loss of a brother who was initiated in it immediately after his great swimming accomplishment from Dover to Calais. On the occasion of his initiation he made a capital speech, and he became a great favourite with the brethren of his Lodge."

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR.

Ancient Ebor Preceptory, No. 101.—A special assembly of this Preceptory took place at the Masonic Hall, York, on the 24th inst. By desire of Lord Londesborough, V.E.P. Sir Knt. T. W. Tew presided, assisted by his Officers from the Province of West Yorkshire. About 100 American brethren and Templars were present, and were received with the greatest cordiality. The Lord Mayor of York afterwards received the Sir Knights in the Banquet Hall of the Mansion House, and at half-past eight a grand banquet was served in the Guildhall to about 130 Sir Knights, who were entertained in a most sumptuous manner. Many excellent speeches were made in response to the toast given in honour of the Visitors. The proceedings did not conclude till nearly midnight. The Pilgrim Sir Knights have since left York for London.

FESTIVAL OF THE MARK BENEVOLENT FUND.

TAKING into consideration the vast strides made by the Mark Master Masons of England and Wales, and the Colonies and Dependencies of the British Crown, during the last few years, and bearing in mind the popularity that attaches to this Festival—which has been over and over again described as "The most enjoyable meeting of the year"—we are not astonished to find that we have to chronicle another success as regards the gathering of Wednesday last. The Chairman whom the Executive had secured for the occasion, to use his own words, had no great stomach for making a speech, but if they would set some work before him, he felt he could show them how it could be carried out. However this may be, we are inclined to accept Bro. Matier's assertion that Sir Pryse Pryse had not been an idle man, when he stated that he left Paris on Sunday, and in the interval had attended a Masonic meeting in South Wales, whence he had to return, by the "Flying Dutchman," to keep the appointment at the Crystal Palace on Wednesday last. One source of regret was prevalent throughout the evening;—the absence of Bro. Frederick Binckes, who is endeavouring to recruit his overtaxed energies at quiet little "Clacton-on-Sea." It is not too much to say that the Mark Benevolent Fund owes much of the success that attaches to it entirely to the zeal of the Grand Secretary of the Mark Degree, and we feel no one could possibly have regretted enforced absence on such an occasion as this Annual Festival more than our esteemed brother. The Chairman of the day was supported by Bros. the Baron de Ferrieres, M.P., and Alfred Williams P.G.D., who filled the Vice-Presidents' chairs; Rev. J. Marsden D.P.G.M. South Wales, J. Moon Old Kent Lodge, W. Barkley P.M. 59 P.G. Steward, J. H. Banks P.M. 151 60 G.I.G., H. R. Hatherley G.M.O. P.G.S. Notts., C. S. Lane P.G.D., J. Jenkyn Jones W.M. 116, W. Watkins G. Std. Br. Prov. Grand Secretary Berks and Oxon, John Skinner Old Kent Lodge, William Lake P.M. 78 Provincial Grand Registrar Cornwall, H. Massey, W. W. Morgan, &c. &c. After the banquet, which gave every satisfaction, the chairman gave the Loyal toast—the Queen and Mark Masonry. Frequently as this toast is given, it never is put forward with more acclaim than among Mark Master Masons. In speaking to the second toast—the Most Worshipful Mark Master Mason, the Right Hon. Lord Henniker—the chairman said that, punctual, painstaking, thoroughly understanding his work, as Lord Henniker did, he at the same time possessed a clear perception which enabled him to win the esteem of all with whom he was associated. It was well recognised that the Grand Mark Master was untiring in his endeavours to promote the welfare of the degree. Now, if any of his Lordship's coadjutors would give him an intimation to the effect that should he at any time pay a visit to the far-off Province of South Wales, he (Sir Pryse Pryse) could assure him the brethren there would give him a cordial welcome.

Baron de Ferrieres, M.P., proposed the next toast,—The Past Grand Mark Master Masons, the Duke of Albany, Lord Leigh, the Earl of Carnarvon, Lord Holmesdale, W. W. B. Beach, M.P., Canon Portal, Earl Percy, the Earl of Limerick, and the Earl of Lathom. According to the custom of the Mark Degree the Grand Masters only presided over them for the space of three years, consequently there was a series of Past Masters on the roll of whom all Mark Masons were justly proud. In drinking their health the brethren had to remember that the Past Grand Masters had done much for Mark Masonry, and through their efforts the degree stood much higher than it did some years ago. Thanks were due to them for their zeal in the cause, and the exertions they had made in promoting its success. As to the Duke of Albany, although he was the youngest of the Past Grand Masters, yet his social rank entitled him to be placed first on the roll. He had done much for Mark Masonry, and the brethren were pleased at the position he had taken. For the other Past Grand Masters, nothing could be said of them but would redound to their credit.

Bro. Edgar Bowyer proposed the next toast—the R.W. Deputy Grand Mark Master Mason, the Earl of Kintore, and the rest of the Grand Officers Present and Past. All recognise the zeal of the Earl of Kintore, while the other Grand Officers have fully evinced the interest they take in the advancement of the Order. Bro. Matier, in responding, said this toast was one of the most comprehensive character that could possibly be proposed in Mark Masonry. It was the health of those who had carried on, and who would continue to carry on, the work of the Order from day to day, and from week to week. Lord Kintore at some future day, probably not very long distant, would be the Most Worshipful Grand Master of the English Mark Degree, and he was certain that when the brethren found his lordship in that position, they would find him the same genial, hearty, and earnest ruler that they had found him in the position of Deputy Grand Master. So far as regarded himself he could say but little, but let him call the attention of the brethren present to the services of some of the other Grand Officers who were present, and of others who were absent. He asked the ladies and the brethren to give a cordial recognition to the services of Bro. Frederick Binckes, the Grand Secretary, who, unfortunately, owing to illness, was absent for the first time since these Festivals of the Mark Benevolent Fund were established. He was sure all regretted his absence, and hoped he would be speedily restored to health and strength. He would now ask them to pay a tribute of respect, of well-deserved admiration, to one who was present, the Assistant Grand Secretary, his good friend Brother Dewar. No one knew better the attention Bro. Dewar bestowed upon the duties which devolved upon him; no one knew better than he did how faithfully and honestly those duties were discharged.

In proposing the health of the Chairman Bro. Matier recounted the heavy labour Sir Pryse Pryse had gone through in order that he might fulfil his engagement that evening. The amount of energy he had displayed demanded from the brethren the largest recognition, and he was sure they would give it. The Chairman assured the brethren that when he was asked to fill the post that he now held he consented with great reluctance; he might say at once and openly, he was a very bad hand at after dinner speeches or talking generally. In his own Province he was willing to undertake any work; but he wished to be left alone after dinner. If he had his own way he would like to have the speaking got through before dinner, as he might then not suffer from dyspepsia. He should prefer having to work all the ceremonies in the Degree than to make a speech. He trusted that the fund had not lost from any lapse on his part; indeed, he thought he might say it had not. He believed the fund would benefit to-night more than it did last year, and the result be nearer £1000 than it was last year. After a Welsh melody, tastefully rendered by Bro. the Rev. Jonathan Marsden, the Chairman proposed the toast of the evening—Prosperity to the Mark Grand Benevolent Fund. He felt some difficulty about this toast; he took great blame to himself because he thought it was essential to the duty of a Mark Master Mason, let alone one in the position he now held, to know the working of the Charities of Masonry, so that they might, at any rate, be able to answer any questions or explain any points that might be put to them about the disbursement of the funds, and any other points regarding it. The bye-laws of the fund laid down the principles on which it was distributed, and in respect to this the Assist. G. Secretary had given him some figures. The fund was instituted in 1868, and from that time the sums collected and invested with interest thereon amounted to £3,850. During that period 66 petitioners had been relieved, with grants amounting to £938, and there had been transferred to the Educational Fund a sum of £1,018, and to the Benevolent Fund £1,800. There had also been invested on account of the Benevolent Fund another sum of £900. The subscription list last year was large, but he believed this year it would be larger. Eleven boys and two girls were educated at the expense of the Educational Fund, at an annual cost of £106, and there were three more candidates for those benefits. The children were not removed from the charge of their parents, but were educated near their homes. He now came to an item which he thought spoke for itself, as it showed how economically the fund was administered. Hitherto the working expenses had been only £74. He knew something about accounts, and he was sure nothing could be worked more economically than this fund. With these few words he proposed the toast of Success to the Mark Benevolent Fund.

In responding, Bro. Dewar said he had that day received a note from Bro. Binckes, who was staying at Clacton-on-Sea, saying that he felt in such very uncertain health that he thought a few days more rest advisable. Bro. Dewar then read the list of subscriptions, which were as follows:—

Two years ago, Bro. Dewar said the subscription list amounted to £553; last year it was £557. They had not anticipated a very large increase on that amount; but it was his privilege and pleasure to announce that, under the presidency of Sir Pryse Pryse, the subscription list this year amounted to the magnificent sum of £723 1s. When the Fund was established, £100, £120, or £130 was regarded as a liberal subscription; and when they received as much as £500 it was considered they had got as much as they might expect. The contributions now exceeded their most sanguine expectations.

The other toasts were the Board of Stewards, responded to by Bro. James Moon; The Ladies, proposed by Bro. Alfred Williams, and responded to most eloquently by Bro. R. P. Spice.

PROVINCE OF HERTFORDSHIRE.

WE have pleasure in laying before our readers the full text of the sermon preached by the Rev. W. O. Thompson, G. Chaplain, at St. Alban's Abbey, on the occasion of unveiling the Memorial Pulpit presented by the Freemasons of England.

"To open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light."—Acts xxvi. 18.

We are met together to-day, my brethren, to dedicate to the honour and glory of Almighty God a necessary addition to the work of restoration that has been going on for years in this ancient sanctuary. It was thought that some distinctive portion of that work should, with the permission of those in charge of the building, be undertaken by the Freemasons of England. This time-honoured Order claims to be particularly connected with this historical Church through the person of its founder and patron saint. However that may be, I trust it is at least conceded on all hands that in seeking to associate the Craft with the restoration of this ancient Abbey we have been but trying to give public expression to our principles, and to exhibit to the Christian world our deeply-felt conviction of the importance of religious teaching and worship, as well as to create one more tie between the Order and the Cathedral churches of our country. It has fallen to my lot to speak to you from this place, and I am deeply sensible of the responsibility that has been placed upon me, while I welcome the privilege. In considering what portion of the sacred volume would best serve to point the word of exhortation to-day this divine commission given by the Lord to the Apostle of the Gentiles presented itself before me. We claim that for ourselves, as well as for St. Paul, these words were spoken. We as Masons claim that the principles of our Order are designed to produce this conversion in men's hearts, while we all as Christians admit that to preach Christ and Him crucified is the divinely-appointed means of teaching the truth that is able to open the eyes of the blind and to turn men from darkness to light; and no fitter portion of this work, I conceive, could have been proposed for us to supply than this Pulpit, whence the principles of Divine truth may be eloquently enunciated. Only here in this third recitation before the heathen Agrippa of the events of that wondrous turning of the heart of the persecutor Saul from darkness to light are these words recorded; spoken to him as they were from the centre of the light of exceeding brilliancy which outshone the light of even the midday sun. From that moment the whole current of his life was changed; an entirely new future opened out before him; that for which he was then commissioned to be the instrument of producing on other hearts was accomplished in his—he was turned from darkness to light. Of course I am not forgetful that many among you, my brethren, will recognise our own symbolical use of these words, a use justified by the whole tenour of the sacred volume, and perhaps nowhere more pointedly so than here. Let us think of this; and first we remember how remarkably Light is used in the Bible as a symbol and type of God. From the time when first the creative voice of God is heard sounding through the darkness of chaos, calling light into existence, down almost to the concluding words on the last page of the Book of Revelation, the symbolical meanings and uses of light are scattered broadcast over the sacred page. Called first out of the darkness that brooded and hung over chaos, we see light perfected at last in the city of God, the Grand Lodge above, wherein the servants of God and of the Lamb shall know no light, neither shall need any candle nor light of the sun, for their light shall proceed from the centre of that glorious temple, where everlastingly dwells in effulgent beauty the presence of the Lord God himself. And, as if to intensify this truth, we notice that the creation of light preceded in order of time the appointment of the greater light to rule the day, or the lesser light to rule the night. Science also recognises this from her deductions. When the Almighty Being willed out of the depths of his own eternity to call forth into being a world in which His own life might be manifested, He did so by bidding His own self-existent light first spread itself over the formless void; and ever since, when He would specially bring to the world He thus formed and to the human beings He then first made, the knowledge of His will, or the power of His majesty, or the sense of His love for souls, it was by a special exhibition of His own uncreated light, exceeding in power and brilliancy even the light of the created sun. We see this light in the flaming sword of the avenging Angel of light that kept the way of the tree of life at the symbolical east of the Garden of Eden; we see it when the horror of great darkness fell upon Abram in his deep sleep, when his faith was failing, and it came to pass that when the sun went down, and it was dark, behold a smoking furnace, and a burning lamp that passed between the pieces of the sacrifice; it was the condemning light of the All-holy One and All pure. One, giving warning of the punishment that should fall, as Jeremiah tells us, on those who should break the terms of the covenant made with the Most High; we see it in the burning bush and the flame of fire, when the Lord appeared to Moses, and warned him that the place whereon he stood was holy ground; we see it again, my brethren, in the dazzling light that beamed from Moses' face, when he returned to the people from the presence of God; we see it in the pillar of fire that led and protected the children of Israel in their journeys, the symbol and sign of the protecting Providence of God; we see it too, I think, in the light of the Angel ascending in the flame of the altar of Manoah's sacrifice; we see it in the translation of Elijah in the midst of the divine light alive into heaven; we see it, too, in our Lord, when those two old Testament saints, who were so signally under its powers in their time, shared also the glory of the everlasting light on the Mount of the Transfiguration; we recognise it again when the eye of the first martyr, St. Stephen, pierced straight through the cloud to the essential centre of being, and searching round the light of the Eternal Presence, fixed itself on the glory of God; and we see this special display of it, the great light from heaven, in the conversion of the persecuting Saul. Can we doubt that there is a light which essentially belongs to the being of God Himself, and that when He would in some marked way communicate with His creatures, it is by this special manifestation of His own self? Can we doubt that there is indeed for us a light far exceeding that of the sun, eternal and everlasting, which, as it has ever been, shall for ever shine forth, even though heaven and earth shall pass away, "shining more and more unto the perfect day." Yet still the word goes forth, "Let there be light." What means this? There is the thick cloud of spiritual ignorance and sin that man's sinful nature has suffered to brood over the bosom of the earth; there is the dense veil of vice and immorality that man's perverted faculties and passions have drawn between himself and the Almighty God of love; there are the chill and impenetrable mists of sorrow and of misery that yet envelope each one of the human race. To dispel and remove these has God's love ever striven; every age has had its own summons to cast off the works of darkness, and put on the armour of light. Yes, and every heart has had its own impulse to respond to those strivings within it of the Spirit of God, which would have men everywhere to repent and turn to Him. "O, House of Jacob, come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord." This, as it was Isaiah's appeal, is also the aspiration of every stricken heart in its moments of awakening, as it symbolised the expectation and the hope of every devout Jew that "the Day-spring from on high would visit him," and "the Sun of Righteousness arise with healing in his wings." You, my brethren in Masonry, know well when this was the predominant wish of your hearts; when in the darkness of ignorance, though buoyed up by hope, you stood in the centre from east to west, from north to south, on the pavement of the world, beneath the blue vault and canopy of heaven. Then your wish was for "light." You know well how, later on in your career, you were taught that by following the precepts of your noble Order, you would be inspired with a holy confidence that the Lord of Life will enable you to trample the King of Terrors beneath your feet, and lift your eyes to that bright Morning Star whose rising brings peace and salvation to the faithful and obedient of the human race. The turning from darkness to light is thus a change of the whole man from selfishness to love, from sin to God, for absence from God is darkness, presence with God is light, for God is light, and light is God. God is love, and love is God, and the life of the incarnate God is the light of men. You will perhaps ask me, therefore, do I not thus make Masonry a religion? or exalt it into the place of one? Let it be replied at once, we make no such claim for it, but, founded as all its principles are on the volume of the sacred law; being a system of morality, taught by allegory, and illustrated by symbol; we hold that in the Bible alone is the key to the interpretation of the allegories, and the clue to the right meaning of the symbols. And if I read the teachings of Masonry aright, I am bold to assert that the high moral suggestions it continually affords are calculated not only to make the man who is already a Christian look with increased veneration and love upon the truths of the Gospel, and cling to them more closely, but to make the stranger to Christianity crave that enlightenment which nothing but God's revelation in Christ can effectually give him. If there is thus, as we know and feel, a power in Masonry when conscientiously and strictly followed, to turn men from darkness to light, it is not enough to-day that I should stop there. Standing in this sacred place, and invested, however unworthily, with a sacred office, I may not hesitate in view of the special occasion that has brought us together, to point to Him who has said of Himself, "I am the light of the world," or to the gift of the spirit of God, the greatest display of God's own eternal light as the one regenerating power of humanity, better, far better, that Masonry had never existed than that the Gospel of Jesus Christ should waive any of its pretensions or be shorn of any of its glory. Masonry may be of use to the secular, moral, and social instincts of men; the Gospel alone can save souls, and provide for their eternal interests; the Holy Spirit of God can alone open our eyes and turn us from darkness to light. But this we do say, that though the brotherhood of Masonry is distinctly a human and social association, and Christianity is emphatically a divine religion, founded upon supernatural facts, having to do with eternal interests, seeking to restore fallen man from the misery and the darkness of sin, and to fit him to dwell in the happiness of the light of God for ever, they nevertheless may exist together—the human institution and the divine institution; the one immeasurably inferior to the other, it is true, yet serving as the handmaid, ministering secondary though powerful motives to induce men to lead Christian lives, affording hints by its symbolic teaching that may be helpful reminders of the love which the spiritual man professes for Christ's sake. Our blessed Lord, in his ministry on earth did both the divine and the human work, and does so still, and after his example we need not forego the spiritual work because we recognise moral and social obligations, nor need our spiritual relations to Jesus Christ take us out of the world and its bonds of labour and social usefulness. We only claim that the Masonic brotherhood may help us, as that which is inferior being made helpful to attain that which is superior, to realise the obligations and duties of the Christian brotherhood more perfectly, for "he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" One bright light kindled and shining in our homes will transmit its rays to another, and this shall reproduce itself until from heart to heart, and from home to home, the light shall spread, and the darkness be dispelled. We need more sociality in our Christian brotherhood; brother with brother striving together for each other's welfare, clinging together in mutual love, because each is imbued with the love of God in Christ, one with another working as members of one family, brethren, fellow heirs of the same grace and hope, all taking heed together that the light that is in them be not darkness. Thus may the spirit of Masonry and the spirit of Christianity be united together to turn men from the darkness of selfishness and sin to the glorious light of God's own love and salvation. And, I ask, was not this the very principle that St. Paul himself, when faithfully fulfilling this his divine commission at Athens trusted to the turn of the over-scrupulous Athenians from darkness to light? He preached to them that "God hath made of one blood all nations of men, that all should seek the Lord." Their common humanity was the very reason that they should have but one Lord and one faith, and to preach this one Lord and Him crucified, to teach this one faith, to tell of the one Spirit, is the divinely appointed means whereby men all over the world should be turned from darkness to light, and have their eyes opened to see the things that belong to their eternal peace. Preaching was St. Paul's interpretation of the commission he received when anointed with that sudden blaze of heavenly light: "Wherefore, O King Agrippa, I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision, but showed first unto them at Damascus, and at Jerusalem, and throughout all the coasts of Judea, and then to the Gentiles, that they should repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance." And this is the work that is to go on now from this place. Thankful should we be that we have been permitted to provide a pulpit more worthy of the work, more suitable from its magnificence for God's service, more appropriate to this noble building; praying at the same time that those who shall henceforth speak for God to men from this place may have strength and power given them to touch men's hearts and souls: that the word spoken by their mouths may have such success that it may never be spoken in vain; and that those who hear may have grace to profit by the word preached, and to bring forth fruit with holiness, remembering the promise of the Lord Jesus that "he that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." Yes, my brethren, there is an illumination of the heart for which all should crave, and there is this One, gentle in speech, tender in manners, loving in heart, who has declared himself the enlightener of all who come to him. He is the subject of our preaching. It matters not to what stage of the spiritual life we have yet attained, we all need that light to guide us more and more unto the perfect day. Let not year by year go by, and find us listening to the same appeals, and yet no further from the old darkness, no nearer the blessed light. If we have inducements for exertion, let the contradictions of our own nature preach to us, for what are these indeed but the broken rays of a light that once burned steadily—the imperfect reflections of a once perfect nature, linking us to the old Paradise of Eden, and to the new paradise beyond the grave and gates of death. But when the way of salvation is shown so clearly; when gospel truths are so faithfully preached, as they are in our pulpits to-day, how blameable must we all be if we refuse to hear the word of God, and decline to mould our lives by the precepts of the volume of the sacred law. Rather let Masonry and Christian teaching unite to turn men from darkness to light, for—

"Clear before us, through the darkness,
Gleams and burns the guiding light:
Brother clasps the hand of brother,
Stepping fearless through the night.

Oh, the light of God's own presence,
O'er His ransomed people shed;
Chasing far the gloom and terrors,
Brightening all the path we tread."

NOTICES OF MEETINGS.

—:o:—

GREYFRIARS' LODGE, No. 1101.

ON Tuesday, the 17th inst., the Annual Summer Outing of the brethren of the above Lodge took place at Wallingford. In years gone by there have been many of these annual trips, of which pleasant remembrances remain to this day, but the excursion on Tuesday was generally considered to be one of the most successful and enjoyable. The programme was as follows:—At 9·30 a steam launch would leave Caversham Lock for Wallingford, where several brethren from Oxford had signified their desire to meet those from Reading; dinner would be provided at Bro. Laurence's, the Lamb Hotel, at 1·30; at 3·30 the W.M. and brethren of St. Hilda Lodge, No. 1887, proposed extending to the travellers their greeting in Lodge; at the close of this short ceremony, by kind permission of Mr. Hedges, the Castle Gardens and Grounds would be thrown open to the brethren, and at 5 o'clock the launch would leave again for Reading, arriving there in due time.

Punctually at 9·30 the steam launch, "Wild Rose," was at the starting place, and a well-appointed horse and cart, the latter bearing a well-known name, was in waiting by the river side. Soon the genial W.M. of Greyfriars appeared on the scene, and directions were speedily given to transfer the contents of the aforesaid vehicle to the cabin of the "Wild Rose." Before these interesting proceedings were ended, several brethren arrived, and true Masonic greetings were exchanged all round. At length the party was complete, except one brother who was expected from London by the 9·46 train, and a move on board was made. Still anxious glances were turned towards the railway, and presently the train was seen approathing. The most melodious whistle of the "Wild Rose" sounded loud and long, and hands were waived, but no response appeared from either of the carriage windows, and so the word was given to start. The party at this time consisted of Bros. Dowsett W.M., Ridley S.W., Hawkes J.W., Stransom Treas., Ivey P.M. Secretary, Ravenscroft J.D., Hickie Organist; P.M.'s Flanagan and Pulley, and Bros. Bennett, Greenaway, Hammett, Parkes, Sparrow, &c. Visitors—Higgs 414, Brett 1436, Westall 1714, and Brinkworth 1658.

Caversham Bridge was soon passed, and the magnificent scenery on the right came into view, looking its best in the brightness of the beautiful, though rather cloudy morning. The brisk breeze was just enough to make a light overcoat acceptable, and its effect on the appetite was quick and extreme. The worthy W.M., however, was soon to the rescue and sandwiches appeared and disappeared with wonderful celerity. The welcome adjuncts were also at hand, and refreshment after labour proceeded right merrily. The "Roe Buck," in its renovated condition, one of the prettiest places on the river, was soon left behind, together with the old ferry, and Maple-durham in all its summer wealth of foliage and tints. All on board seemed to be quietly enjoying the lovely surroundings, and, indeed, the scene was eminently calculated to awaken poetic feelings in every breast. But, alas? interruptions will come and worldly incidents will break in. The "Wild Rose" was proceeding merrily on her way and calmness prevailed, when a sudden gust of wind swept across the boat, a quick cry was heard, and every eye was turned the way we had come. A moment of intense excitement ensued, for in the near distance a black object could be seen bobbing gently up and down. A glance round the boat sufficed to prove that our number was complete, but one head was bare. A hat, not a man, was overboard? It is generally considered wrong to laugh at the misfortunes of others, but on this occasion the unfortunate one laughed as loud as any, and very quickly the laugh became general. What was to be done? Dickins, in his immortal Pickwick, has given some elaborate directions as to the best way of recovering a blown-away hat, but none of these could be put to the test on the present occasion. Fortunately a small fishing boat was near, the "Wild Rose" was stopped, and after various fears had been expressed lest the hat should sink, the occupiers of the boat were hailed. Answering quickly to the summons, the gentlemen pushed off from the shore, and the hat was soon again on board with its owner; not, however, to occupy its former exalted position, but to be consigned to a space beneath the table to drain and dry. The friendly skipper came to the rescue with a straw brimmer (which had seen better days), and this, secured by a strong piece of string, adorned the brow of the unfortunate one for the remainder of the day. Shortly after this exciting episode, Mapledurham Lock hove in sight, with an immense boat waiting to go through. The gates were opened, the big craft went in and the "Wild Rose" followed. It was then seen that the other boat was occupied by a large party from Reading, among whom many familiar faces were recognised. A move on was soon made, and quickly passing our fellow passengers (who were drawn by a horse), friendly greetings were exchanged, and they were soon left far behind.

The river scene by Hardwicke House on to Pangbourne and Streatley has been written, sung and painted many times, but too much in praise of it has never yet been recorded. It would be difficult to discover a better way of spending a few days than in boating and fishing in this charming locality, and many appear to be of this opinion, if the numerous small craft flitting backwards and forwards may be taken as evidence. There is only one drawback to the straightforward trip, and that is the number of locks between Caversham and Wallingford. The whistle of the "Wild Rose" was sounded every now and then, and locks followed each other in rapid succession. But a trip on the river is not like a journey by rail, and time is of not so much importance. Shortly after noon Cleeve Lock was passed, and then the far-famed riverside hostelry, the Beetle and Wedge, came into view. Moulsford Asylum next was seen on the left, and then Wallingford Bridge was distinguished. Passing the bridge, a sharp turn brought the "Wild Rose" to the landing stage, punctually at one o'clock. Here Bros. Margrett P.M., Prickett S.D., and Creed, all of 1101, joined the party, accompanied by some brethren of the St. Hilda Lodge, No. 1887, including Bro. Captain Trollope Prov. G.S.B. Berks and Bucks, W.M., who very cordially welcomed the Reading brethren to Wallingford.

On inquiry it was found that the Oxford party, who were likewise coming by water, had not arrived, and so to wile away the time a stroll was taken through the Market place, and the very pretty church of St. Mary was visited and duly admired. The Grammar School was also looked at from the outside, and then a hint was given that the "Lamb" might be waiting to receive its guests. The distance was quickly accomplished, and the kindly host and hostess were in readiness with everything prepared for a good dinner. After the three hours' ride on the river this was most welcome, but the Oxford brethren not having arrived a further delay ensued. At length the question, that a commencement be made, was put and carried by acclamation, and a commencement was made accordingly. The usual preliminaries were scarcely over before the Oxford party arrived, and were duly welcomed to the dining-room. They were Bros. Dormer I.P.M. Alfred Lodge, 340, Lucas S.W., Ryman Hall P.M., Thompson P.M., Bowden, Domeney, Gee, Adamson, Wheeler, Badcock and Foster, Osmond P.M. 1763, Benham 723. Bro. Fisher Secretary 1887 having arrived the party was complete, and ample justice was done to the good things abundantly provided in capital style by the worthy host, Bro. Laurence. Dinner ended, Bro. Dowsett rose to propose the Queen and the Craft, which was received with all honour. A few other toasts followed, but no attempt at speechmaking was made, as time was on the wing and the brethren were due at the St. Hilda Lodge at 3.30. What was wanting in words, however, was made up in cordiality, and shortly after the time appointed a move was made to the Lodge, which having been opened in due form a cordial greeting was extended to the visiting brethren. The question of building a new Lodge-room was discussed, and various preliminaries arranged, the result of which will be that very soon the St. Hilda brethren will be in possession of an edifice supplied with all the conveniences for holding their meetings. The Lodge was then closed in accordance with ancient form, and the brethren proceeded to inspect the picturesque Castle, gardens and grounds, which were most kindly thrown open by Mr. Hedges.

Wallingford at present is not one of the most thriving towns in Berkshire. Undoubtedly it suffers from a great disadvantage through scanty railway accommodation, and blame has been attached to the powers that were, but have since passed away, for not having used their influence at the right time, to get the main line of the Great Western Railway to pass through, or at any rate, nearer the town. But notwithstanding all this, the fact remains that much interest attaches to the town, and there exists strong evidence to show that in the time of the Romans it was a place of note, strongly entrenched and probably a military station. Much interest, too, attaches to the Castle which could boast unquestionably of great antiquity, and like most other edifices of the kind first served the purpose of a fortress, then a royal residence, and in after times a State prison, which ultimately degenerated into a place of confinement for criminals of the ordinary class. As a fortress it was considered to be impregnable, and, indeed, withstood the attacks of the Parliamentary forces for sixteen weeks. Leland gives the following description as the result of his own observation in the sixteenth century:—"The castle joineth to the north gate of the town, and hath three dykes, large and deepe and well watered. About each of the two first dykes, as upon the crests of the creastes of the ground cast out of, runneth an embattled wall, now sore in ruin, and for the most part defaced. All the goodly building, with the towers and dungeon, be within the third dyke." In the beginning of the last century, the castle precincts were let by the Crown on lease to Thomas Renda, Esq., who represented the borough of Wallingford in Parliament in the years 1709 and 1712. It has since then changed hands at various times, and now the entire estate is in the possession of Mr. John Kirby Hedges, through whose kindness the gardens and grounds were thrown open on Tuesday last.

The Oxford brethren had to leave early in consequence of their journey homeward being against wind and stream, and could not therefore avail themselves of the opportunity of visiting the Castle Gardens. Farewells were exchanged, and shortly before six o'clock the landing stage was reached, where the "Wild Rose," with steam up, was in readiness. All were soon on board and the homeward journey commenced. Close to Goring Lock a boat was seen approaching, and, on its passing, the gentlemen who had so kindly recovered the lost hat were recognised, and a laugh and friendly reminder were exchanged. A short distance before Pangbourne Lock, the huge craft we had passed in the morning was seen, and the "Wild Rose" was put on at her utmost speed to pass it and reach the lock first. This proved an easy task, and again friendly greetings were exchanged, and the horse-propelled monster was again lost in the distance. At the Roebuck a halt was made, and a boat brought to land one of the party who resided near. Curiously enough here a catastrophe occurred to the head-gear of another of the passengers, but this time it was not a tall black hat, but a white helmet. The article in question was, however, quickly recovered and restored to its rightful owner, none the worse for the occurrence, and the "Wild Rose" sped on her way, arriving in Caversham Lock in safety shortly before nine. The party soon landed, the black hat, all drained and dried, again occupied its wonted position, and cordial good nights were exchanged, all admitting that a more successful outing had never taken place, and that all present had enjoyed it "like brothers every one."—Reading Observer.

William Preston Lodge of Instruction, No. 766.—Held at the St. Andrew's Tavern, Baker-street, Manchester-square, W., on Friday, 20th inst. The regular weekly meeting was rendered somewhat more interesting than usual by the attendance of Bro. Lieutenant H. Smith (I.G. Port Elgin, 350, G. Register Canada), and Bro. D. Smith (Ionic, 52, Quebec Register), both members of the Canadian team of Volunteers who have, during the last fortnight, been under canvas at Wimbledon. Bro. G. Read P.M. 511 and Sec. 1681 occupied the chair, assisted by the following officers and brethren:—Bros. Chalfont W.M. 1425 S.W., Dehane W.M 1548 P.G.S.D. Essex J.W., Jones S.D., R. E. Cursons J.D., Mote I.G., G. Coop Preceptor, H. Moore Sec., G. Tribbel P.M. 1227, Taylor W.M. 1767, Festa P.M., Sedgwick P.M., Wickens S.D. 436, Lee 511, Weatherilt, Robinson, C. Bellerby, F. Smith, A. Philips, D. Wilson, R. Parsons, B. Wilson, E. B. Cox, &c. The Lodge was opened in due form, and the minutes of the last meeting read and confirmed. The ceremony of initiation was rehearsed in a very able manner. Bro. Tribbel being candidate, Bro. Jones gave the charge. The Lodge was then called off, and on resuming labour was opened in the second degree. Bro. Tribbel being a candidate for the third, was examined and entrusted. The Lodge was opened in the third, and the ceremony of raising most admirably rehearsed, together with the traditional history. Five brethren were elected members, and honorary membership was conferred on the Canadian visitors, who expressed the pleasure it afforded them to visit the Lodge, and their cordial greetings, hearty good wishes, and best thanks to the brethren for the manner in which they had been received amongst them. A vote of thanks to the W.M. for ably fulfilling the duties of the chair was unanimously passed, and the Lodge closed in due form and perfect harmony.

PAXTON LODGE, No. 1686.

THE summer outing of the brethren of the above Lodge was held on the 21st inst. An assemblage took place at London Bridge Station, and gruesome were the glances cast at the threatening clouds as the brethren awaited the coming of their esteemed W.M., Bro. G. R. Dodd, while some doubts and fears were expressed that the threatening aspect of the morning had prevented his appearance. But, punctual to the hour he drove up, and tickets for their destination were taken for the party. Boxhill was the locus in quo, and to Boxhill the brethren were determined to go, let the weather do its worst. This was a happy determination, as the result proved.

Scarcely had the train left the platform before the clouds burst and such a deluging downpour came on that the carriages were unable to keep the wet entirely out, and for a short space a travelling shower bath was the order of the course. No rain could, however, damp the spirits of the Paxton brethren. The amount of Mark Tapleyism, good humour and harmony, which hitherto have been their distinguishing characteristics, stood them in good service now.

In the course of the journey the charming influence of old Sol again asserted its might, and the beautiful landscapes on either side of the rail, the varied scene of moving meadow, cornfield, stream, and mill in the glory of summer sunlight, had an exhilarating effect upon the party. Boxhill was in due time reached, and its summit gained, when the capricious weather again changed, and a thunder storm was witnessed, the grandeur of which was alone worth coming to see and hear. The massive piles of cumulous cloud, the sudden shaft of light and deep diapason of the thunder reverberating among the distant hills, the pleasing rain, glimpses of distant sunlight where the storm had not reached, were things to be held in memory for many a year.

Convenient shelter was found by the brethren, a well-supplied hamper was unpacked, and its contents done ample justice to. No need of bitters to sharpen appetite after that climb.

Toasts were given and responded to in a few words, for each felt there was an eloquence in the scene around him compared with which the tongue of the best orator was tame and dull. The sunlight again enlivened the scene; cigars were lit, and strolls made about the hill, dingle and rocky dell, ending a delightful afternoon, healthfully and delightfully spent. In the calm and quiet of the beautiful summer evening, a stroll was made to the station, and in due course London Bridge was again reached, the brethren declaring that the summer outing of 1686, A.D. 1883, was a thing to be remembered for ages.

IRON BOUND CLUB OF INSTRUCTION.

THE members of the above Club, which takes its title from its place of meeting, at Bro. W. Musto's Iron Works, Baker-row, Whitechapel, had a very pleasant outing on Monday last, through the kind invitation of Bro. Henry Marks 1306. The members of this Club meet every Sunday morning, and avail themselves of the opportunity thus afforded to study the Ritual of Freemasonry, and young Masons thereby are enabled to qualify themselves for the different offices they hold in the parent Lodges. The brethren took the steamer at London Bridge, and after a very pleasant run up to Eel Pie Island, Twickenham, began to indulge in various kinds of sport until 4·30, when they were summoned to the banquet which had been provided. Twenty-five guests sat down, and were very ably presided over by Bro. Marks. Bro. Myers P.M. was Vice President, and Bro. Musto supported the Chairman on his right. After a very sumptuous dinner, which did great credit to the host, Bro. Andy Anderson, the W.M. gave the usual loyal toasts. Opportunity was then taken advantage of to present Bro. Musto, P.M. 1306, with a mark of the brethren's appreciation of his services as Preceptor to the Club. This presentation consisted of a very handsome snuff box, cigar case, and fusee box, which had been subscribed for by a few members of the Club. The Chairman, in an eloquent speech, remarked how Bro. Musto had, during his Masonic career, devoted his time to teach the brethren what was required of them in their respective offices. He at all times had done so with a vast amount of patience, and good feeling; indeed, the brethren could not fail to recognise and appreciate his indefatigable services. In the name of the brethren of the Club, and at their request, he had great pleasure in presenting this slight token of their esteem. Bro. Musto, in response, said the kindness of the brethren took him entirely by surprise; until the moment of the presentation he had not the slightest idea what was about to happen. It, however, afforded him great pleasure to receive this mark of the brethren's appreciation of his services; he would strive to maintain and uphold the good opinion which the brethren now entertained for him. The health of the Chairman was duly honoured and ably ably responded to. The Visitors' toast was acknowledged by Bro. J. Capp. Bro. I. Cohen responded for the absentees, and in the name of the brethren thanked the Master for his kind invitation. The brethren then repaired to Twickenham, and took train for town, after spending a very enjoyable day.

United Pilgrims Lodge of Instruction, No. 507.—This Lodge of Instruction held its weekly meeting on Friday, the 20th inst., at the Surrey Masonic Hall, Camberwell. Brother J. B. Sarjeant W.M. The Officers were Brothers Bate S.W., Johnson J.W., Hughes S.D., Bain J.D., Looler I.G., Stevens P.M. and Preceptor, Poore Secretary, Chapman and others. The Lodge was duly opened in the three degrees, and the ceremony of raising was effectively rehearsed by Brother Sarjeant, whose progress in Masonic working is very satisfactory. Lodge was closed down, called off for entry drill, and called on. Friday the 27th being "Preceptor's" night, Brother Stevens gave place for that evening to Brother Bates, who purposes to work the three ceremonies on that occasion. Officers were appointed in rotation, and after "hearty good wishes," Lodge was closed and adjourned.

PENGE LODGE, No. 1825.

THE annual installation meeting of this popular young Lodge was held on Friday 13th instant, at the Thicket Hotel, Anerley, when there was a goodly muster of the brethren and visitors to witness the installation of Bro. A. J. Cox into the chair, in succession to Bro. J. Bird. Amongst the visitors were Bros. H. E. Frances P.P.S.D., F. Dunn P.M. 72, H. Turner P.M. 1589, F. Carter J.D. 1893, T. G. Lawton I.G. 749, E. Williams 72, J. E. Dibble 141, S. Hardiman 217, G. Barsdorf 1329, A. Kenningham 1706, and Kempton 1706. Lodge having been opened in accordance with ancient rites, and some preliminary business disposed of, Bro. Cox was duly presented as Worshipful Master elect, and the brethren below the rank of Installed Master having retired, the impressive ceremony was performed by Bro. R. Jackson, who discharged the duties in the most effective manner. On the readmission of the brethren, the newly-installed W.M. was greeted and saluted in the customary manner, and then proceeded to invest his Officers for the year, as follow:—Bros. G. Bird I.P.M., G. M. Downie S.W., R. Nunnerley J.W., H. J. Francis Treas., T. West P.M. Secretary, W. Ramsay S.D., G. W. Stevens J.D., R. Jackson P.M. M.C., W. J. Barnard I.G., G. Cook Organist, R. A. Tidman W.S., and A. B. Church Tyler. At the conclusion of the ceremony the W.M. said his first duty, and the most pleasurable one the Master of a Lodge could have to perform, was to present, on behalf of the brethren, a Past Master's jewel to Bro. Bird, as a small recognition of the valuable services he had rendered to the Lodge during his successful year of office, and for the assistance and kindly bearing he had ever extended towards the whole of the brethren. The Immediate Past Master briefly but appropriately returned thanks for the compliment paid him, and for the kindly expressions which had fallen from the lips of the Worshipful Master. Lodge was then closed in form, and the brethren adjourned to a sumptuous banquet, served in excellent style by Brother Lassam, whose catering well sustained the reputation which this well-ordered establishment has so long enjoyed. At the conclusion of the repast grace was sung by the choir, and the usual Loyal and Craft toasts were given from the chair in a few happily-chosen sentences, and duly honoured. The I.P.M., in proposing the health of the newly-installed Worshipful Master, wished him a happy and prosperous year of office, and in reply, Bro. Cox, said he felt it no easy task to follow such excellent Masters as those who had preceded him, but it should be his study and aim to maintain the prestige which the Lodge had so long enjoyed. A cordial welcome was extended to the Visitors, on whose behalf Bros. F. Dunn, G. Barsdorf and others suitably responded. Bro. H. E. Frances, who consecrated the Lodge, proposed, in felicitous terms, the health of the Installing Master, and spoke highly of the manner in which the working in Lodge had been carried out. Bro. Jackson briefly returned thanks, and other toasts followed, interspersed with music and singing. A thoroughly enjoyable evening was passed.

DEATH OF A MASONIC PATRIARCH.

A RECORD such as that of the life of the late Brother J. Whyte Melville, of Bennochy and Strathkinness, is rarely met with. The history of his career is fraught with lessons of the deepest interest, and shows how happily duty and responsibility are at times united to the honour of the subject and the well-being of mankind. Brother Melville was born with a silver spoon in his mouth, to use a familiar expression. He never knew the gnawing anxiety that attends the race for wealth, nor the terrible struggles of the poor that drain the sap of life and turn men too frequently into Ishmaelites. He was born 86 years ago, and died on the 16th inst., full of honours. Educated at Cambridge, Bro. Melville subsequently held a commission in the 9th Lancers. When twenty-two years of age he married Lady Catherine Osborne, youngest daughter of the fifth Duke of Leeds. This lady was the friend and companion of the Princess Charlotte, daughter of George IV., and must have been in possession of much information that has since found record in some recent autobiographical works. The wife as well as the issue of the marriage, predeceased the subject of our sketch. His son—Major Whyte Melville—the genial author of some stirring romances, was killed in the hunting-field in 1878. Like his father, he was very popular, and his death was mourned by all who knew him, and that was a very wide circle indeed. It would be impossible, in the limited space at our command, even to catalogue the many important functions discharged by our deceased brother. He was a keen sportsman, and shared all the honours the chase could give. He was an adept curler, and up to a late period of his life was a votary of golf. Even up to February last he played the national game of Scotland on St. Andrews Links, which were within an easy distance of his residence, at Mount Melville. He was Convener of the county of Fife, was an active member of the Episcopal congregation of St. Andrews, and took a lively interest in the University. In all his relations he was just and upright, one in reality who

"Bore without abuse
The grand old name of gentleman."

He was a kind, considerate landlord, and bestowed bounteous charity in a modest but generous manner. His Masonic career, which will have most interest for our readers, was a grand one, and deserves to be given in full. Bro. J. Whyte Melville was initiated in the Lodge Holyrood House (St. Luke), Edinburgh, in 1817, was made a member of the Royal Clarence Lodge, Brighton, in 1819, and received the appointment of Provincial Grand Master of Fife and Kinross in 1842, an office which he has ever since continued to hold. He was the oldest Provincial Grand Master in Scotland, as well as Past G. Master of the G. Lodge of Scotland, and Past G. Principal of the Supreme G. Royal Arch Chapter of Scotland. He became Junior G. Warden in 1840, Senior Grand Warden in 1841, a post which he filled until 1846, when he was elected Deputy Grand Master. This office was held by him for the long period of eighteen years under the Grand Mastership of the Duke of Athole; and, in consideration of the invaluable services rendered by him, he was elevated to the Throne in 1864, which he filled with great ability for three years. He was succeeded by Fox Maule, the eleventh Earl of Dalhousie. While Grand Master the singular coincidence occurred of Bro. Whyte Melville being at the head of all the various Masonic bodies in Scotland, and at his death he was Grand Commander of the Supreme Council for Scotland of the thirty-third and last degree of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, Grand Master of the Religious and Military Order of the Temple, and Deputy Grand Master and Governor of the Royal Order of Scotland, a post which he has held for twenty-five consecutive years, and in which he will in all likelihood be succeeded as head of the Order by the Earl of Rosslyn. He was also Hon. President of the Rosicrucian Society of Scotland. When he retired from the Mastership of the Grand Lodge its members manifested their respect for him by presenting Lady Catherine Whyte Melville with a bust of her husband, a duplicate of which was also presented to the Grand Lodge to perpetuate his connection with the Craft. The execution of this work of art was entrusted to Bro. Hutchison, R.S.A., and it still adorns, with others, the Freemasons' Hall in Edinburgh. For many years he was engaged in the work of his several offices, such as laying foundation-stones, consecrating new Lodges and presiding at Masonic gatherings. His name was always foremost in the cause of charity, and to him was due the honour of originating the Fund of Scotch Masonic Benevolence in 1846, when he was in the position of Substitute Grand Master. His last appearance in Grand Lodge was on the occasion of the election and installation of the Earl of Mar and Kellie as Grand Master of Scotland on the 30th November 1881, when Sir Michael Shaw Stewart retired from office. No wonder he was beloved by the Craft, and his name deserves to be held in lasting remembrance by all who respect faithful service loyally rendered.

ANCIENT AND ACCEPTED RITE FOR ENGLAND AND WALES.*

RARELY have we seen a work more complete than the one before us. The compiler has realised the rare combination of conciseness and fulness. The facts are marshalled with the precision of a well-drilled army, and are so arranged as to be readily found and understood. To Masons generally the work is of interest, but to those who go beyond the third degree, it is almost indispensable. The table of the designations of the several degrees is a study of itself, and this is followed by rules and regulations affecting Warrants, petitions, and consecration. Then come the by-laws of the degrees from the fourth to the twenty-ninth. Unauthorised Masonic bodies and Masonic communion are dealt with, and other details are furnished, which make the work a complete text book for all matters relating to the formation of Chapters. The description of the clothing and jewels affords some faint conception of what a Chapter would be when its members were fully equipped for the several solemn rites of different degrees. Of course, there is nothing to indicate the kind of work done, nor would it be possible for the outside world to realise the glories of the Temple during service, but there is enough to interest the Craft Mason, and all that the members of the several degrees above it desire to have at hand for ready reference. There is a schedule of fees, lists of the different Councils, distinguishing native and foreign; also of districts, of the Rose Croix Chapters, and of the members of the several Chapters, arranged according to the date of their Warrants. At the end there is a list, in alphabetical order, of the members of the various degrees, indicating the particular Chapter to which each member belongs, and the degree to which he has attained. Being official, the work can be relied upon, and having been brought up to so recent a date as the 30th ult., it has all the charm of novelty, as well as completeness. It is one of the best books of the kind we have seen, and being published at a shilling, it ought to be in the hands of every one interested, not only in the degrees to which the work refers, but in Craft Masonry as well.

* Rules and Regulations for the Government of the Degrees from the 4° to 32° inclusive, under the Supreme Council 33° of the Ancient and Accepted Rite for England and Wales, and the Dependencies of the British Crown, together with a List of Members. RANDOM NOTES AND REFLECTIONS.

WE are not in the habit of denouncing every other religious creed except that which has commanded our assent. We believe in the fullest toleration for the human conscience which can be tested by any standard of faith and morals. We are, therefore, not in accord with the Romish Church which claims to be infallible, and to sit in judgment and punish all who dare to differ from her teachings. The rulers of this church, in 1738, consigned Freemasons to the inquisition, and in consequence to a horrible and ignominious death, their houses were ordered to be destroyed, and all who harboured the brethren were exposed to fine and imprisonment. This Bull is still in force, if not with all the legal power it once possessed, at least with that bitterness of spirit which characterises the priests of Rome. We have been classed with Fenians, atheists and outcasts of society, and denounced with all the hatred of ignorant and brutal fanaticism, and yet the Craft flourishes, and does not seem to be a bit the worse for this terrible curse.

It is somewhat new to find a Protestant clergyman following the evil example of Cardinal Cullen and other bigots. A Rev. Mr. Cotter has thought proper to denounce Freemasonry in language coarse and harsh. In turn he was attacked in the Limerick Chronicle. Like the Romish priest, he preferred the monopoly of abuse, and felt so stung that he commenced an action against the offending journal. Unfortunately for the proprietor, he went beyond what the law allowed. What is permitted to be said against a body must not be uttered against an individual. Mr. Cotter may indulge in any language in regard to Freemasonry, but he must not apply it personally; the editor of the Limerick Chronicle may denounce slanderers generally in the choicest possible Billingsgate, but he must be careful of the reputations of individuals. For the offence upon Mr. Cotter the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, with one farthing damages. The law has been vindicated whatever may be said of the plaintiff.

The brethren who now enjoy the pleasures of association without let or hindrance were not always so favoured. There was a time when the Craft was viewed with suspicion, and when it was not altogether prudent to proclaim membership. Particularly was this the case in America, where the anti-Masonic feeling was carried to the point of persecution. The notorious Morgan, on whose disappearance a serious charge was preferred against Freemasons, and a person named Miller, got up an agitation against the Craft in 1826. It was begun in Batavia, a small town in the western portion of the State of New York, and was developed with great fury and rapidity. Bro. J. N. Edmonston, in a "Sketch of Anti-Masonry," delivered before Social Harmony Lodge, in Wareham, Mass., in April last, says:—

"In the autumn of that year (1826) the excitement became widespread in New York, and in the western part of the state the man who had the courage to declare himself a Mason, did it at at the peril of his life. Upon the arrival of a stranger in town, the first demand was whether he was a Mason? The business of the State and community was interrupted; churches were broken up, and Masons denied communion with them; families were divided, father against son, and mother against daughter, and it is said that the women in the western part of the state held a convention at one time, and voted that their daughters should never marry a Mason. The crusade spread so rapidly over the State that in 1827 the Anti-Masonic vote aggregated 33,000, in 1829 it reached to 70,000, and in 1830 the State of New York polled an Anti-Masonic vote of 128,000. Nor was the hostility to the Craft confined to the State of New York; it swept over Ohio, Michigan, the Middle States, and New England."

Although the bitterness of 1826 and a few succeeding years has vanished, opposition is still offered, and by none was it more constantly fostered than by the late Thurlow Weed. So strong was the feeling exhibited by him that it induced Bro. Dr. Rob Morris to alter his determination and publish the facts he had at great pains collected relative to the Morgan affair. He has lately issued a work on the subject, and, strange to relate, one whose name he frequently mentions in connection with the sufferings of that time is still alive in the person of Col. Edward Sawyer. This venerable Masonic patriarch is aged ninety-five, and has been a member of the Craft for seventy-four years! He was one of the "Morgan" martyrs, was ruined for the faith that was in him, and remains constant to his obligations even to this day. What a noble old hero he is. We hope his last days have been as happy as his earlier ones were painful, and that his home at Grand Blanc, Michigan, affords him all the rest and comfort his old bones and loyal heart demand.

SYMBOLISM.

SO much has already been said and written in favour and against Masonic symbols that it will hardly be possible to bring any new feature to bear testimony either way on this part of our ritual teaching. One thing, however, is certain: symbols are an inexhaustible fountain of truth, and form a never-failing source of meditation to the true and thoughtful Mason. Consequently we cannot too often point out to the minds of the Brotherhood their importance to Masonry in general.

Commencing with the announcement of the candidate seeking admittance into the Temple to the closing of the chain whereby he is for ever bound to our union, the symbol occupies such a predominating position in the working of the Lodge, that perhaps many an one, whose imagination is captured to a great extent by these very symbols, has seen in them the true nature of Freemasonry. Another, again, doubtingly denies their material importance; believes their time to have passed, and denies them the right of existence, as not being in accordance with the progressive spirit of the age.

However, both are wrong in their surmise, for neither does the outer rite—although venerable by age and tradition, and of profound meaning—make what we call Freemasonry; no more than the holy rite of the church is religion itself; nor is the symbol in Freemasonry without a foundation in fact, for its relation to the latter is not an optional or accidental one.

It may, therefore, not be considered superfluous to cast a look upon the teachings of Symbolism, thereby considering the general conception and value of the same.

The historic investigations of modern times have made it evident that the Order of Freemasonry emanated from the Corporations of the Steinmetzen, and for this reason it is not to be wondered at also that the greater part of Masonic symbolism is an inheritance of the mediæ-val building societies. For instance, the rough stone, the cubic stone, the drawing-board, compasses and square, the three pillars, apron, hammer, trowel, and other similar emblems.

Masonry teaches by these figures and symbols the idea that the Brotherhood is a society of real workmen, their aim being the erection of an intellectual temple. Even the symbolic name of the work we perform, which we call art—Masonry already represents this fundamental thought in a sensible manner, and directs us to work, and to build. Masonry has at all times, and in the face of all aberrations and antagonistic endeavours, invariably stuck to this original symbolic manner of teaching, so that to-day our symbols and ceremonies, with only immaterial deviations, are the same everywhere.

Our Order has no outer form of government to hold it together, but only a fundamental thought, or idea, in common, which has been expressed with different words, at different times, and at different places, but which is represented everywhere under the same symbols. If Freemasonry had fixed dogmas then a time would undoubtedly come when individual criticism by local alterations of the dogmas would at the same time also rend asunder the tie by which it is held together, as is the case with most of the societies of common life.

By her symbols alone Freemasonry unites the most heterogenous nationalities and creeds, and still speaks to every brother an intelligible language. If he is in a foreign country, among brethren speaking a strange tongue; if he does not understand what the speakers are saying, by contemplating the Masonic symbols he will nevertheless feel at home, and will feel that even there he is in his own circle, and be edified and strengthened by the mystical expressiveness of the symbols. The symbols are the universal language of Freemasonry.

These remarks will perhaps suffice to show that the symbols form an indispensable part of the Royal Art; however, there still remains the question to be answered, "Are they only externals, empty ceremonies, which have no intrinsic value?"

Perhaps only he who has not entered any deeper into the true spirit of Freemasonry will be in doubt for an answer to this question; like the profane world, who often enough condemn our symbolic teachings, the formalities of the reception and such like things, as being no longer in accordance with the progressive spirit of our century, and they are astonished because we, who call ourselves enlighteners of the mind, obstinately cling to these old and apparently useless forms, sayings, and workings, and practise them, whilst outside the Lodges time restlessly presses on.

If this often-expressed opinion were a correct one, then our exertions should be directed towards abolishing this ancient manner of teaching. Apart from this, however, it would be next to impossible to introduce new symbols at the present time; and this opinion is for all that not a correct one, for our whole modern society, also outside of the Lodge, still clings, though in a great measure unconsciously, firmly to symbolism in some form or other, as numerous examples, especially in the most important moments of life, will prove.

Is, for instance, the reception of the new-born babe into the religious community, the baptism and the benediction, the sprinkling with consecrated water, or the wounding of a certain part of the body, no symbolic action? Is there no symbolism in the change of rings before marriage, and do we not perform numerous symbolic actions in burying our dead? When the warrior, with eyes growing dim, looks upon the standard or the eagle, and, conscious of having torn them from the hand of the enemy, cheerfully dies, is not that symbolism? Take away this and the standard becomes a shred, and the eagle a piece of metal. When the priest, in pious devotion, shows the holy host to the kneeling mass, all the devout, hardly venturing to look up, lower their heads to the ground; is not that symbolism? Take away the illusion of this language of signs, and the consecrated emblem becomes a simple wafer. And when the mightiest on earth kneel in the high arched dome in order to be anointed by a drop of oil before is placed the symbol of might, the crown, upon their heads, is not that called acting symbolically?

Not only in the most important moments of our life do we willingly submit to the stimulating effect of symbolic influence, but in every day life we meet many symbols which serve as emblems or signs to remind us of, and awaken in us, the idea which originally has been more or less akin to the same.

So, for instance, the wheel, or the snake biting its own tail, as a symbol of the eternal circulation, of origin and decay in the world; the lion as the symbol of strength and courage; the bull or the grain of seed as the symbol of plenteousness; the butterfly as the symbol of sleep, of the soul and of immortality; the white lamb as symbol of innocence, enduring and suffering, the ring as symbol of eternity, constancy and fidelity; the rose as the symbol of secrecy. Is not the greeting, by the grasp of the hand, the embrace, aye even the kiss, a symbol which other nations replace by rubbing their noses together, or such like actions?

In the Christian Church the principal symbol is the cross. In Mahometanism it is the half-moon, the symbol of baptism is the water, as bread and wine are the symbols of the Lord's Supper. Are not all these symbols full of meaning? Is there not hidden an abundance of thoughts of which we instinctively become conscious on beholding them.

In affairs of state the sceptre and the crown pass for the symbols of power, the sword for the symbol of justice. It is true there exists a characteristic distinction between profane and Masonic symbolism, inasmuch as the former is forced upon us by education, whilst the Freemason has to learn his symbolism at a later period of his life; he then voluntarily places himself under the influence of the symbolic teaching, and remains under its influence as long as it agrees with his inclinations and feelings, his views and ideas, and as long as he feels its animative and improving power.

Symbols alone, however, are only the shell that hides the kernel; whoever wants to get at the latter must pierce the former. The symbol is to the word what poesy is to prose. The word exactly denotes the idea, whilst the symbol is vague, leaving a freer scope to imagination. Even as is said of the word, "The letter is dead, only the spirit gives life;" in like manner it may be said of the symbols, "The sign is dead only, the spirit gives life."

Although the symbol now appears to be without any especial virtue, it is a valuable incentive to reflection, and in this respect, serves for our Masonic improvement and perfection; it reminds us better than words can do to practise all those virtues which are a real ornament to mankind. Therefore the application of the symbols will only benefit us if in practical life we also make use of all that which we practise figuratively, and firmly impress upon our minds by reflection. So, for instance, the square, signifying the idea of right and duty, should serve as the image of the strict and always renewed self examination of our actions that we may act free from self interest and ill-will, prompted solely by an inner impulse, without any outer compulsion or reluctant necessity in full perception of right and duty.

We should never forget that we ourselves are the stones on which the temple is to be made, therefore let us always bear in mind when we are cutting and polishing the rough stone, after square and level, that we are only performing this work on ourselves.

In order to answer the question "whether and by what means the symbols can lead us the wrong way?" in the affirmative, we need only to look upon the many Masonic blunders of our predecessors.

There was a time in Masonry when the spirit was almost stifled by forms, when the correct interpretation of the symbols was misstated and falsified by carrying into, and construing out of them something which was not and could not have been their original meaning. Here lies the danger against which the history of Freemasonry cautions us in numerous dark pictures; a danger which, even at the present time, is not quite removed, and of which only one example—the Bible—shall bear testimony.

The Bible—a consecrated document of mankind—is the first of the three great lights; it is to us, like compasses and square, the symbol; thence follows that it is placed on the altar less because of its contents than because of its symbolic meaning. It signifies and represents — as Bro. Kranse expresses it, so beautifully—the idea of God.

The Bible is to Masonry not what it is to the church, the book of religion, but only the symbolism of godliness, which recognises liberty in matters of conscience and religion, leaving to each Freemason his religious conviction and his manner of worshipping God.

Now, although even our historically most important fundamental law, the Old Charges, demands of the members of our Order only "that they be good men and true and men of honour and honesty, by whatever denominations or persuasions they otherwise may be distinguished," still, on the other hand, it is asserted that Freemasonry is, and must remain, indissolubly connected with Christianity. This view, which sees in Freemasonry a kind of precise religion, is a thoroughly erroneous one, and such a view, inconsistent with the fundamental idea of Masonry, is principally supported by the misunderstood symbol of the Bible. It has been asserted that Freemasonry could have no other than a Christian foundation, because the Bible was the first great light! It has further been asserted: How can we receive Israelites and Mahometans, as we have to swear them in on the Bible? And, again, others who have endeavoured to adjust the conflict have proposed to replace the Bible by the Talmud or the Koran at the reception of Israelites, or Mahometans; or at least to place the Old Testament uppermost when they take the oath, so that the hand of the candidate only rests on that; and of late the opposition against the use of the Bible has gone so far as to place an empty cover on the altar instead. and the candidates were sworn in on this "white book," bearing the superscription "God."

Finally, owing to the circumstance that many Masonic words and customs seem to have been taken from the Bible, others again would make the latter itself a source of Masonry, in consequence of which they have explained many Masonic representations directly out of the spirit of the Bible in a purely ecclesiastical and Christian sense. However, in all these interpretations of the Bible, one has always remembered that the Bible is not, and shall not be, anything else than a symbol through which Masonic wisdom comes to us according to each one's own individual requirements, but not in precise dogmas. The Bible may have a much higher significance for most of us, but this is in no way encroached upon, for, in order to admire the value of the Bible, one need not be either a Christian or a Freemason.

Perhaps none of us, Catholic or Protestant, Israelite or Mahometan, has remained cold at the moment when his hand lay on the Bible and the blessing of the A.A. was called down upon him. Perhaps none of us have thought of the contents of this book. It was to him no book of the Christian faith, but only a holy, consecrated something—a symbol of his own belief, hope and trust, to which lamentable degenerations the excessive secretiveness—formerly practised with symbolism—has already led. This belongs to the history of the sufferings of Freemasonry, and cannot be detailed here; moreover, we may well consider such strange aberrations as vanquished at the present time.

In like manner, as there have been, and perhaps still are, Masonic visionaries, so men are to be found who cannot befriend themselves at all with a language through symbols; but on the other side there are again Masons to whom the empty form is all, and who entertain the false belief that the latter is the real spirit of Masonry.

We must always bear in mind that our knowledge and understanding, our feeling and believing is always worth only so much as it shows itself in deeds in the practical sphere of life. Not to talk and dream, but to reflect and act, we are called upon by the sign of our Order.

J. A. N.

[We have inserted Bro. "J. A. N.'s" communicated article without pledging ourselves to complete agreement with the views it contains. It is an interesting contribution to Masonic literature, a kind of essay and sermon from which faith has been eliminated. The writer believes in Symbolism, as it affects action of the highest moral character; he holds the middle course between the Christian Freemason and that followed by a number of French Lodges whose members have obliterated the name of God. It is impossible to discuss publicly all that the symbolism of Freemasonry teaches; but it may be boldly asserted that it includes a faith higher and deeper than can be demonstrated by any outward act, however noble and unselfish. Religion is one thing, and creeds and dogmas another. Freemasonry inculcates the one, and leaves the other to the conscience of every individual brother. It forms no narrow system of religious ethics and yet recognises the basis upon which all faiths rest. This accounts for its universality of brotherhood; this is the rock upon which it is established, and from which it can never be dislodged. We are violating no confidences when we state that the language and ceremonies of Freemasonry as fully symbolise the belief in the G.A.O.T.U. and the immortality of the soul as they do the theory of charity and brotherly love. The Bible, as understood by Freemasons, expresses something more than "the idea of God;" the ritual of the Lodge invests Him with attributes that cannot be measured by human laws and actions, and while it carefully avoids all offence to individual beliefs, it unites a divine philosophy with all that is good and practicable to be found in every creed under the sun. In fact, Freemasonry is religion without creeds or dogmas—"a system of morality veiled in allegory and illustrated by symbols." How much of allegory and symbolism is due to the Bible we cannot here say, but more we are inclined to believe than Bro. "J. A. N." seems to us to imply.—Ed. F.C.]

THOUGHTS ON THE NEW HISTORY.

By Bro. Jacob Norton.

LIVING American Masons well remember the Masonic orator Bro. Pompous, perched upon a church pulpit on St. John's day, looking marvellously wise and learned, who, after greeting the M.W. Grand Master, the M.W. Grand Lodge, the Brethren, the Companions, the Sir Knights, the Princes of Jerusalem, the Thrice Illustriouses, and the ladies and gentlemen, proceeded to discourse about our scientific and philosophic "ancient brethren."

Moses, Solomon, Pythagoras, Numa, and a host of other distinguished names of antiquity, were dilated upon by the learned lecturer, from every point of view; but the subject most dwelt upon was, the "Roman Collegia." Here the orator's enthusiasm rose up to a high pitch, and he emphasied "Col-le-gi-um, Fab-ro-rum," with the utmost fervour; then he made a long pause, coupled with a dignified enquiring survey of his audience, as much as to say,—"Well, now, what do you think of that?" And "well, now," his hearers supposed that the Roman Masonic Collegium was at least equal, if not superior, to the colleges of Oxford and Cambridge, and in their imagination they saw the Roman stone cutters attired in college caps and togas, and of course they applauded. But when, in winding up the next sentence, the orator eloquently said, "We see, now, that Roman Masonic Lodges were so many schools of science and philosophy," he brought down the house with a crash, in short the waving of hats, the stamping of feet, and the clapping of hands can be better imagined than described.

Nor was that kind of logic confined to the rostrum, for every Masonic writer, with any pretension to learning, furnished similar views in books and magazines about Pythagoras, Numa, and the Fabrorum Collegium. Bro. Gould's demolition of the connection of the ancient mysteries with Masonry was a hard blow for our Masonic scholars, but he now gives them an additional blow. According to his definition collegium meant a guild; they had in Rome associations of learned men, of religious men, of mechanics, &c.; and these associations were indifferently named collegia, plural; or collegium, singular. So we see that a man could be a collegiate in Rome, though he could neither read nor write.

The several topics which the old Saint John's Day orators used to indulge in were, first to prove that the aim of Freemasonry from the days of Solomon was for the purpose of teaching by allegories and symbols "the truth of the Christian religion," and King Solomon was of course a Christian. Next in order was Templarism, proving that Bro. De Molay wore a Mason's apron, and opened a Masonic Lodge in due form. The Henry VI. MS., the Charter of Cologne, and above all, the ancient mysteries and the Roman Collegium, were their most favourite topics. These grand themes having been one by one exploded, we may now say to the old St. John's Day orator, "Farewell, thy occupation's gone."

The chapters devoted to the Masons of Germany and France reminds me of an opinion I formerly ventured to give, which was received with disapprobation and ridicule by the then correspondents of the Freemason. In the third volume of that journal, p 224, I stated that the object of the operative Masons of the middle ages was merely to get "bread and butter," and added, "the then [Masonic] organisation was as much based on selfishness as those of our Trade Unions." These ideas the then writers for the Freemason could not at all relish, they sneered at Bro. Norton's "bread and butter theory." I beg therefore to inform all concerned that Bro. Gould in the said chapters vindicates very unmistakingly the said "bread and butter theory;" he also proves that the then Masons did not excel the fellows of other crafts, either in religion, morals, general information, or special respectability. Upon one subject Bro. Gould leaves us in the dark. Bro. Findel furnishes us with a Mason's short German catechism, namely—"Examination of a German Steinmetz." Bro. Speth, in the Masonic Magazine, furnished us with a long catechism of the German operative Masons, and Bro. Gould also gives extracts from Bro. Fallon of similar questions and answers. But how old these German operatives' catechisms are, neither of the said writers condescends to inform us.

The last two chapters in the new History are devoted first to the "Craft guilds of France," and the second to a combination of several guilds in France called "Companionage." In these the author confutes some of Bro. Fort's theories. It is my custom, whenever I read any thing new in a Masonic history, be it true or doubtful, to make a note thereof for future reference; fortunately, the notes on Bro. Fort's history, taken about seven years since, are still before me, and while many of his statements I have read with pleasure, some I cannot agree to. For instance, Bro. Fort says:—

"So early as the year 1254 the practice seems to have prevailed of appointing a General or Grand Master over the guilds of Masons in Paris;" and after referring to John Morow at Melrose, he says, that "Louis IX. had given the Mastership of Masons to Master William de Saint Petre." First, Bro. Fort made this Master William into a nobleman, and then he proved that a nobleman was Grand Master of Masons in Paris at that time. Now, in the first place, I doubted very much that Master William was a nobleman; and, second, I doubted that he was a Grand Master in any sense of the word. Louis IX. was a despot, and his appointee must have been a despot also. We need not therefore feel proud about the French Masons having been ruled by a despot, though he was a nobleman. Bro. Gould, however, shows that Master William was not a nobleman. About the German Lodges Bro. Fort says:—

"These Lodges originally were convened at sunrise, and the Master having invested himself with the insignia of his office, took his station in the east. While the brethren grouped before him in the form of a semi-circle. . . . Prayer was an essential point in opening the Lodge, and harmony, while assembled, was especially insisted on among the members. . . . . After the prayer of opening of a mediæval lodge was finished, each workman had his daily labour assigned . . . The Craft again assembled at the close of day, or at sunset, and the same formal arrangement of the operatives, with prayer, was repeated." To Bro. Fallon he refers as his authority. Without being able to find out who Fallon was, I marked him down as a Masonic romancer, and such is also the opinion of Bro. Gould.

"Masons' marks" formed another prolific topic for our Masonic writers. These Masons' marks were regarded by them as Masonic symbols having a Christian significance. I have more than once combated these notions. In 1828 I began to learn the furriers' trade, where each girl that sewed an article had to mark it with the needle and thread. When I came to Boston, in 1842, the girls here marked their articles with the identical marks that the girls in London did fourteen years previous. Some of the said marks are like the marks Masons made on stones many years ago, but yet no one presumes to infer therefrom that the fur sewers ever rode either a Mason's or a furrier's goat: the reason of the stone cutter and of the fur sewer marking their respective handicrafts was precisely the same. It seemed to me that the old Masons attached no more religious or moral significance to their marks than the girls in my workshop do, but yet a very gentlemanly and learned English brother, viz., S. Russell Forbes, treated our Boston Masons, about two years ago, with a lecture on Masons' marks. And here again Bro. Gould comes to my rescue. He says, p 192:—

"Amongst the police regulations of the [French] Crafts considerable importance was attached to the mark which almost every artizan was obliged to put on his work. Levasseur says goldsmiths, clothworkers, potters, coopers, and nearly every class of artizan possessed their stamp or private mark."

So here is another idol worshipped by our profound Masonic scholars smashed to atoms.

With the thermometer at 90 degrees in my room, I cannot make much progress either in reading or writing. As far as I have read the first volume, I am very much pleased with it. But still I must point out a serious defect in the work, which Bro. Gould, above all others, should not have left undone. One and the same subject is mentioned or referred to in several parts of the volume, but as neither Index, or Table of Contents is furnished with the work, every time I have to group these passages, I have to go over the whole or a large portion of the volume. Now, this ought to be mended, and "it is never too late to mend," as the saying is. I hope, therefore, that Bro. Gould will take due notice thereof, and govern himself accordingly.

Boston, 5th July 1883.

There was a meeting of the General Committee of the Royal Masonic Institution for Girls at Freemasons' Hall on Thursday, 26th ultimo, Colonel Creaton in the chair; Bros. E. C. Mather, Frank Richardson, E. Spooner, H. A. Dubois, Tattershall, and E. C. Massey were also present. The minutes of the General Committee of 28th June were read and confirmed, and the following were read for information:—House Committee, 9th and 19th July; Quarterly General Court 14th July, and Audit Committee 24th July. The Chairman was authorised to sign cheques amounting to £1,608 13s. Payments of £400 on account of sanitary works, £162 10s on account of swimming bath, and Messrs. Tarn and Co. for furniture, were authorised. Recommendations of the House Committee for further ventilation of the dormitories, for the extension of the tar-paving in the playground, and for additional lavatory accommodation in the Junior School, were adopted; and it was referred back to the House Committee to have these works carried out. Bro. Tattershall gave notice of motion for the next Quarterly Court, that he would move for an addition to the 37th Rule, to come after the word "trustee" on the third line, viz.:—

"That three of the members of the Committee who have been longest on the Board shall not be eligible for re-election until the expiration of twelve months. 26th July 1883."

HOLIDAY HAUNTS.

WESTERN COUNTIES AND WALES.

BEFORE the introduction of railways the coasts of Somersetshire and Devonshire, of Cornwall and Wales were unknown except to the dwellers near to them and the rich few who could command access to them. The Channel Islands were as a foreign country to most Englishmen, and Penzance was enveloped in a mist of tradition and remembered to a great extent only from its close proximity to the Land's End. Many are still living who remember when railways were not in existence, when the only modes of communication were the sea and the coaches. It was not until a comparatively recent period, counting time as applied to the age of nations, that many large towns first had the advantages of railways. Now the land is covered with them, and places that were fishing villages and the haunts of smugglers have sprung up into health and pleasure resorts; their natural beauties have been supplemented with the productions of art, skill and enterprise, and now hundreds of attractive spots are scattered along the coasts that line our tight little Island. The various railway companies having centres in London vie with each other in arranging tourist programmes to meet the wants and desires of the millions who now form the great Babylon of London. Thousands living in various parts of the country make the Metropolis their starting point for their pleasure trip; but as time goes on and railway schemes develop, this arrangement will become less and less necessary, and most people will be able to go direct from their own homes to the places they have determined to visit.

The Great Western, unlike the Great Eastern line, covers a vast extent of country. It serves haunts far more distant and diversified, and offers a choice which is scarcely equalled by any other service. A glance at the map which accompanies the exhaustive time table issued by this company, will best explain our meaning. One network of lines go north through all the trading centres, throwing out branches to the western counties into North Wales, to Holyhead for Dublin, and intersecting South Wales to Milford. Then through Somersetshire (branching off to Dorsetshire), Devonshire and Cornwall, to Penzance, covering in all a territory that would take volumes to describe. The difficulty is to know which district to take, which of the series of attractions to visit and enjoy. Happily the time table referred to acts as a finger-post; in some instances it adds a brief description, and in all cases it affords every information as to route, cost, and time for sojourn permitted, together with a list of places where the journeys can be broken in order to visit interesting places in the locality.

Many, no doubt, are familiar with the beauties of the Thames between London and Oxford, but there are vast numbers who seek pleasure farther off and fare worse. A week spent in exploring the district would afford enjoyment little recked of by those who pass unheeded the charms that lie almost at their very door. We are not alluding particularly to Royal Windsor, for that is a spot that every one goes, or should go, to see. It is the home of our revered Queen, the castle of our kings from the Conqueror, and the noblest royal building in the world. Windsor Castle is replete with interest, and the country all around is charming. The associations are of the most romantic character, from Herne the Hunter to the Merry Wives and Falstaff, while the historic incidents point many a moral, and adorn many a tale. We were not, however, thinking of Windsor so much as of the towns and villages which border on, or are not far from, the Thames which the great Western line serves. The country round Hayes and West Drayton is pretty, but the charms of Taplow, Maidenhead, Cookham and Great Marlow are rich beyond description. Wargrave is out of the line, but artists have discovered its attractions. Then there is Henley beyond, with its regatta associations, far more interesting than all the so-called glories of Epsom, Newmarket, or Goodwood, simply because they are purer in their character. There is Oxford, a little more remote, but only a short journey, with its noble colleges and grounds, its river and history, linked as it is with much of the fame and greatness of men of the present and past ages. Still away in the same direction are Leamington, Warwick and Coventry. The former town is pleasant, but Warwick, with its castle, old buildings and Guy's Cliff close by, is irresistibly charming. There is an old story of a bet that was made as to the most beautiful walk in England. The result was that one named that from Coventry to Warwick and the other from Warwick to Coventry. The winner remains undetermined to this day. The journey is certainly a most delightful one, and it can be varied by making a detour through Kenilworth and Leigh Park. Those who have read Sir Walter Scott's novel of Kenilworth will not need any recommendation on our part to visit the scene where Queen Elizabeth figured so conspicuously as the guest of the favourite Leicester. Continuing from Warwick, the line goes on to Birmingham, Wolverhampton and Shrewsbury, branching off to Manchester on the right, and to Chester and Birkenhead and Liverpool on the left. Before reaching Chester, at Ruabon, of coal celebrity, there is a line of railway to Llangollen, on to Bala, Dolgelly and Barmouth, in Cardigan Bay and to Blaenau Festiniog, the locality of the high range of mountains in North Wales, including Snowdon. Llangollen is but a short ride from Ruabon, through a black country that gives little indication of the beauties of the vale of which the Welsh are so justly proud. The river Dee at Llangollen is a rushing stream, over a rocky bed, with good sport for anglers. A splendid view of the valley is obtained in the walk to Chirk Castle, a visit to which should not be omitted. Castle Dina Bran—we believe that is the name of the mountain towering above the Dee—would well repay the trouble of climbing, and certainly the ruins of Vale Crucis Abbey, and the quaint home of some singular maiden ladies, with a story, not far from the village, ought to be inspected. We must not linger at Llangollen, but retrace our steps towards the south. What a field of pleasure is there opened up by the Great Western line, embracing such centres as Worcester, Hereford and Gloucester, the three cathedral towns forming a triangle on the map, and to the lover of ancient grandeur and monuments of old-world devotion, a trio of attractions rarely, if ever to be found, in such close union. Not far from Worcester on one hand is Stratford-upon-Avon, a shrine at which all the world worships; a pretty little place, and full of delightful associations connected with Shakespeare, his birthplace, and where his ashes lie buried. The Avon is very pretty just by the Church, wherein will be found the grave and sculptured counterfeit of the bard himself. There are various memorials of Shakespeare to be seen in the town, and a visit to Stratford would not only be a pleasure, but a tribute to the memory of one who has made the English tongue immortal by his genius. On the other side of Worcester is Malvern, below Cheltenham, and further down Chepstow and the River Wye. The course of this river alone is charming enough for most people, and as it extends to something like a hundred miles, it embraces the wild ruggedness of the Welsh mountains, where it rises, and the loveliness of the Hereford vales. It flows through Monmouthshire, and empties itself into the Severn. Along its course the scene is ever varying and always picturesque. In this valley are situated the ruins of Tintern Abbey, called "a dream in stone," and admired by some as the finest ecclesiastical ruins in the empire. It is a gem, despoiled by time and neglect, set in one of Nature's most glorious frames. There is enough left of it to impress the general beholder with a sense of its original grandeur, and sufficient to provoke a spirit of worship and emulation in the breasts of all lovers of art. A whole scheme of lines branch off from Gloucester to South Wales, including Newport, Cardiff, Neath, Swansea, Llanelly, Carmarthen, and Milford. The district thus covered is chiefly remarkable for trade. It may be fairly termed the commercial heart of Wales, and yet there are many beautiful places inland from the sea which the Great Western lines cover, and which would afford pleasure to the sight-seer who might be tired of more frequented spots.

Attractive as are the localities we have indicated, we believe that the West of England equals, if it does not exceed them. It is true the scenery is somewhat different. There are no mountains as in Wales, but there are hills and tors and jutting rocks. The wildness of the sea, especially on the Cornish coast, is associated with the rude, rugged and rocky shore; while in other parts are to be found calm bays with charming backgrounds of tree-clad hills, through which meander beautiful streams, and among which quiet hamlets nestle and peaceful husbandmen cultivate the rich soils of Somerset and Devon. After Oxford, Bath is perhaps the most noteworthy place. It is a beautiful city, of ancient origin, and of course with a legend. The story goes that a British Prince, named Bladud, became a leper and was banished from Court owing to the superstitions or fears that prevailed. Even his mother's love was not proof against the terror caused by her son's affliction, and she allowed him to wander forth, giving him a ring as a parting memento, and which ring afterwards served Bladud a good turn. The leper Prince concealed his birth and station, but how he managed to be equally successful with his disease we do not know. He got employment as a swineherd, and soon had the mortification to discover that he had infected the pigs with his leprosy. Not daring to risk his master's anger, Bladud, with his porcine charges, wandered into the forests that then extended over the Lansdowne Hills. There the pigs wallowed in the marshes, and became cured in a remarkable manner; Bladud found the hot springs which had wrought such marvellous results, and he too began to wallow or bathe, with the gratifying effect of being restored to health. He took the pigs back to his master, no doubt satisfactorily accounting for his absence, bade adieu to his recent calling, but inducing the herdsman to accompany him to the British Court. It happened that, on their arrival at the palace, a high festival was going on, and Bladud and his friend easily gained admission. We presume that the miraculous cure had changed his appearance, or time had obliterated his features from the memory of old servants if there were any. At any rate Bladud got near to where his mother's goblet was placed, and put into it the ring she had given him at parting. The plan succeeded. The prince was welcomed home again, and when he became king he granted the site of the springs and neighbourhood to his former master, built a palace for him, and thus laid the foundation of Bath. That is a very pretty story, without the usual accompaniment of blood and murder. Bath was undoubtedly one of the Roman stations on the great road between England and Wales, and it is equally certain that the colonists and soldiery knew of the springs and used them. That has been proved by the discovery of some baths made by the Romans during their occupancy of the country. There is another tradition, in which King Arthur routed Ella and his three sons, who had besieged the city in the far-off Anglo-Saxon times. Whatever may be the truth about this battle, there can be no doubt of the conflict that took place on Lansdowne Hill in 1643, between the Royalists and Puritans. Our space forbids us to dwell upon these particulars; it is sufficient to say that Bath is an ancient city, whose real interest began with the advent of Beau Nash, who really converted a badly-governed, dirty, dull town into a popular, clean, lively resort for those who came for pleasure and health. What Bath became under the rule of Nash we must leave our readers to gather for themselves. They will find much to amuse and shock them. The history of Bath, during the reign of Nash, is a record of the vices and follies of the rich during the middle of the last century; even Nash himself suffered in reputation, and it is feared became the companion and abettor of blacklegs. His death, in 1761, gave rise to a war of succession, in which not only the respective rivals, but ladies fought, with all the vigour of heated and bitter partizans. The battle in the Pump-room has been celebrated in rhyme, from which we take the following extract:—

"Fair nymphs achieve illustrious feats!
Off fly their tuckers, caps, and têtes;
Pins and pomatum strew the room,
Emitting many a strange perfume;
Each tender form is strangely battered,
And odd things here and there are scattered;
In heaps confused the heroines lie,
With horrid shrieks they pierce the sky;
Their charms are lost, in scratches, scars,—
Sad emblems of domestic wars."

The above is not an impossible picture, for the state of morals at the time was very low indeed. Beau Nash reigned in regal pomp, and ruled with iron sway; he laid the foundation of the creation and prosperity of modern Bath. The Brothers Wood, architects, gave it the fine appearance it now presents. We cannot go into further details, but Beckford, the eccentric author of "Vathek," built a tower on Lansdowne Hill. The author is said to have written this wonderful book at one sitting, which lasted three days and two nights, and which caused the writer a severe illness. Bristol is but a short ride from Bath, but what a change. One is all neatness and propriety, and the other dirty and busy. Bristol, however, has many attractions, the foremost of which is St. Mary Redcliffe Church, a magnificent pile. The ill-fated Chatterton's name was associated with this building, for it was among the hidden contents of some store therein that he alleged he had found those musty curious manuscripts which were afterwards accounted forgeries, and which led to his downfall, and subsequently to a mysterious death in a London garret. If Bristol itself has little but its huge trade to boast of now, it was at one time intimately associated with the slave trade in the West Indies, from which it obtained much wealth, and not a little obloquy. It has been the scene of riots, and even at the present day is not altogether without a large spice of the rowdy element. The spirit of charity as well as of party is kept alive on Colston Day, when rivals dine apart, and emulate each other in subscriptions for benevolent purposes. What Bristol proper lacks is abundantly supplied by Clifton, a suburb on a hill, whose light cannot be hid, and whose beauties cannot easily be eclipsed. It has breezy downs and rude and precipitous rocks. A bridge spans the river Avon below, which runs through a gorge 250 feet deep and 600 feet wide, and separates the counties of Gloucester and Somerset. Clifton and the opposite district of Leigh Woods and Nightingale Valley are charming retreats for the Bristol merchants, and a sight for visitors to see and enjoy. Farther away, but still within easy distance, are the Cheddar Cliffs, one of the few bits of native scenery not generally known. We are told that "nowhere in England can be found so extended a line of perpendicularly broken rock as at Cheddar. The winding road through the pass affords an exquisite variety of absolute mountain scenery * * *." Cheddar, whence comes the cheese of that name, lies close under the Mendip Hills, which are famous for their caverns. There is a stalactite cavern at Cheddar, which is not equalled for delicacy by any other cavern either in England or America. The climate is wonderfully mild, and at present the place is almost virgin ground to the tourist. Between Bristol and Exeter is Taunton, from which branches a line to Watchet and Minehead. Brendon Hills are not far from the first mentioned place, and afford a good vantage ground from which to view the country around for miles. Minehead is close to the water's edge in the Bristol Channel, and towering above it are cliffs 700 feet high. Another line branches off to Barnstaple, and coaches take the visitors to Ilfracombe. Lynton and Lynmouth are on the same coast, but we shall have to speak of these charming places in connection with another line of railway.

From Exeter the line runs down towards the English Channel past Dawlish and Teignmouth to Newton, where it diverges, a branch going on to Torquay, Paignton, Brixham, and Dartmouth. All these places are generally well known. Perhaps the most beautiful is Torquay, the gem of that part of the coast. It rises up from a magnificent bay, the houses range in terraces one above the other, and are embowered in trees. The residences in many cases are only to be discovered by search, or by the smoke which ascends above the stalwart leafy guardians that cluster thickly in every part of Torquay. There is always life in the little town or big village, and those who want a delightful sea-side retreat can go to Babbicombe Bay, with its cliffs and deep-toned sea. If a wilder spot is wanted, there is Anstey's Cove not far off, and where the only signs of civilisation are a few bathing machines and their owners. A local guide book says: "The pebbly beach offers a most lovely study of colours, the prevailing tones being rose-pink, creamy-white, and a sober olive-green (which latter creates a charming effect), together with sparsely sown pebbles of a canary yellow. To the left the jutting promontory of pale pink stone is, by a freak of nature, cut into several angular peaks, while to the right sweeps a panorama of water-worn rocks of mossy green, a tinge due to millions of tiny limpets, which cling to the boulders and soften their outlines. The whole scene is shut out from the world." Then there are Dartmouth and the river Dart, truly described as the English Rhine, the beauties of which must be seen to be realised.

Returning to Newton, the main line continues on to Plymouth, a town full of the deepest interest to Englishmen, and full of scenes that inspire pride and pleasure. Still further on the visitor is carried to New Quay, Truro, Falmouth, St. Ives and Penzance. We cannot dwell upon the almost countless attractions that abound in the district we have mentioned, it must suffice to say that among those that should be seen are Towan Head and Redruthan Steps, New Quay, Pendennis Castle, Falmouth, the Lizard Head and Lights, and Kyance Cove not far off, Tregenna Castle and St. Ives, Penzance and St. Michael's Mount, and the Land's End. If inclined for a sea trip the steamer may be taken from Penzance to the Scilly Islands. In fine weather the journey is made in about four hours. There is variety enough in what we have thus briefly summarised to satisfy the most exacting lovers of change.

Between Bridgewater and Taunton the line branches off to Yeovil, Bridport, Dorchester, Weymouth and Portland. If we are not mistaken Victor Hugo has described the latter place in lurid colours in "L'homme Qui Rit." A more dismal portrait could not well be drawn, and yet the place has its attractions of a solid and to some a very picturesque character. Weymouth is one of the most healthy spots on the coast, and furnishes excellent bathing accommodation. From here steamers run to Guernsey and Jersey, and do the distance in six and nine hours respectively. Many pleasant excursions can be made from Weymouth, and altogether it may take rank among the best of our watering places.

Those who desire to follow our remarks, and to pick out a journey for themselves should get the Great Western Time Table. They will be somewhat embarrassed in their choice, but they cannot fail to find something that would suit them. Of this we can assure our readers, that wherever they go they will secure comfort in transit not surpassed by any other line in the kingdom.

BRO. "WATCHMAN" AND HIS VIEWS.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I do not know who Bro. "WATCHMAN" is, but I am inclined to think he is a member of the House Committee of the Girls' School; because Bro. Stevens (who, by the way, cannot very well return even the complimentary compliment), in his views about the House Committee, evidently trod upon a pet corn. Bro. "WATCHMAN" knows the duties of the House Committee, how the money was to be raised to pay for the ground, and what will be the probable action of the Committee if the land at that part of Battersea Rise shall prove to be of anything like Mr. Whiting's value. As regards the proffered rebate, I am against the principle entirely, as being nothing more nor less than a bribe to pay more for a purchase than it is worth.

Bro. "WATCHMAN," in his first paragraph, lines 6 and 7, p 53, states that it was not worth above £18,000; yet in paragraphs 3 and 4, that he would not have minded giving £33,000 or £34,000 for it. Again, I do not think it a wise thing to "grease a horse's tooth;" in other words, to suggest to Mr. Whiting, or any would-be purchaser, what annoyance and mischief they can cause. If they know this, they do not require to be told it; if they do not, there is no occasion to tell them. With regard to Bro. "WATCHMAN'S" paragraph on what he miscalls "almshouses," (thereby unnecessarily hurting the feelings of the residents at the Institution, many of whom have seen as prosperous times as any of us, and do not care to be cruelly reminded of their misfortunes), I am rejoiced to think that there is only a chance some day of his returning to the subject, as between then and now he will have time to learn something about the matter on which he writes; he will know that it is perfectly optional on the part of the annuitants whether they enter the Institution or remain with their friends; he can, by personal inquiries, find out whether the inmates are happy and contented or otherwise; also whether they have any friends outside, or if they have, whether they would care to live with them always? By the word friends, I take it relations are understood, and they are not always friends—far from it, I am afraid. Now, do they not find themselves more independent in the homes which the late husbands of the widows, or the brethren themselves have, in common with the Craft at large, contributed towards building and maintaining, and for this reason the word "almshouses" is entirely out of place, and must have been used by him thoughtlessly, without thinking of the pain it might cause to those to whom it applies. Other diligent inquiry as to the "white elephant" might be of use in ascertaining—What is the annual cost? This frightful waste of money? Whether it would be true economy to dispense with it? What is the opinion of those who have visited it and watched over it? Would Bro. "WATCHMAN" like, from motives of economy and kindness, to relegate the boys and girls to their parents or friends, with a certain sum of money each, to be spent at their discretion? I trow not; and if the young are to be nurtured and cared for on their entering into life, so should the old be looked after and kindly treated in their declining years. Brother "WATCHMAN'S" friend's simile of Greenwich Hospital is unhappy in another respect; the pension allowed to our sailors is what they are entitled to by law for their services in their country's cause, and is certain, according to their term of service and behaviour, whilst our annuitants have to make many repeated efforts, and often in vain, to obtain the annuity, which is derived, not from a settled income, but entirely from voluntary contributions, which might decrease any year, thereby either lessening the amount of annuity or number of the recipients. In the one case all are entitled to what they have earned and contracted for; in the other, all cannot participate, but only the successful few. There was one remark in Bro. "WATCHMAN'S" "Pricked Windbag" of the 21st ult., "If there was confusion at the Special Grand Lodge when only 200 were present, what would it have been had there had been 700 there?" He fails, or does not choose to see, the gist of my remark, that it was not from the number present, but from the manner in which the business was conducted,—viz., the President of the Board of General Purposes merely giving the suggested alterations, approved or disapproved without the context, and then, immediately after, without any appreciable delay, the opinion of the brethren being asked; both in my estimation wrong. The context should have been given so as to gather the sense intended, and a delay of at least three minutes should be given where any alterations are contemplated. I see that the Special Grand Lodge is to meet again on the 8th inst., at 4.30 p.m. If the shorthand notes of the official reporter have not been recovered, I shall move that such portion of the minutes shall be reconsidered before being taken as correctly entered or confirmed, whichever may be the correct phrase. In point of fact, a Select Committee of twelve brethren, six from London and six from the Provinces, should be chosen and paid, for carefully and systematically going over the work done by the Revise Committee of the Board of General Purposes, and the judgment of the Select Committee should be final, and not that of the Revise Committee, only known to and chosen by the Board of General Purposes.

Yours fraternally,

P.M. 1607.

THE ALLEGED CONSPIRACY.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I am not in the habit of coating my pills with "sugar," hence Bro. Perceval's difficulty in swallowing them. Indeed, he casts them aside and makes a spurious compound for himself, which, no doubt, is pleasanter and more gratifying to his self-love. I am not anxious to prove Bro. Perceval in the wrong; I am only desirous that right should prevail, and that the business of Grand Lodge should be conducted with perfect fairness to every brother. I am content to be twitted with "innocence of mind;" it is something to be innocent in these days of sham and shoddy, and I take it as compliment to be ranked among the few. My complaint against Bro. Perceval is, that he has brought a direct charge against the Grand Registrar, his "reputed successor," and the Grand Director of Ceremonies, and by inference against the Pro Grand Master, which amounts to conspiracy. How does he meet it? He falls back upon the Pickwickian method, and says if the offending brethren will say they did not do what Bro. Perceval has accused them of doing, in the strongest possible terms, he will accept their statement. What, and eat his own words? Why should the alleged offenders do anything of the kind? Bro. Perceval has made a deliberate and offensive charge, and he is bound to formulate that charge, proceed to proof, or unconditionally withdraw his imputations. It is not for the accused, in a court of first instance, to prove their innocence; the onus of proof of guilt rests upon the accuser, and Bro. Perceval ought not to shirk the responsibility he has voluntarily taken upon himself. It is not a question of apology at present. When the charges are either proven or withdrawn, then an apology will be in order; it is possible it may have to come from the accused, and if it should be so, however much I might regret the circumstance, I should be ready to give all the credit that would be fairly due to Bro. Perceval. He would then be a patriot; he is now simply a scold.

I hardly follow Bro. Perceval's arithmetic—my "innocence of mind" again—but I suppose it is according to "Cocker." As in the case of the Officers named above, so in that of the Executive Committee, I want proof. As far as I can perceive, no arrangement could have been made that would have met the convenience of Provincial brethren who came up to London on the occasion of either of the Festivals, so that the charge, that they were purposely or wantonly ignored, has no existence except in the mind of Bro. Perceval. What object could there be in passing over the brethren from the country, and how was it possible to hold the Special Grand Lodge, according to the instructions given to the Board of General Purposes, when the London Lodges were in session? I deny that there is any proof that the General Purposes Committee were actuated by any improper motive when they secretly began the revision of the rules; I have shown that they could not possibly meet the convenience of the Provincial brethren, and that the position of the London Lodges had nothing whatever to do, either one way or the other, with the holding of Special Grand Lodge. Neither body were in any way prejudiced, and only those afflicted with chronic faultfinding could see evil motives in the course the business took. Supposing the Revise Committee were ordered—requested would be perhaps a better term—to report at the Quarterly meeting in June and failed, does it necessarily follow that they wished to stifle discussion? Is it not possible that there were good reasons for not reporting at the time mentioned, that the date for the Special Communication had not been fixed on 6th June, and that it was deemed prudent to be silent until all arrangements had been completed? Bro. Perceval permits no such charitable conclusions to enter his mind; he sees nothing but the cloven hoof and the spiked tail of the evil one, and forthwith he denounces a body of men against whom in private life he dare not lift up the finger of scorn. It might have been better to have stated at the Quarterly Communication that a Special Grand Lodge would be held, giving or omitting the date as circumstances warranted; it might have been more convenient if a night other than that of Friday had been selected for such special meeting; but what right has Bro. Perceval to conclude that the Committee were influenced by improper motives? Where is his evidence? I say nothing about charity. I can see nothing in the action of the Committee that is not consistent with the conduct of honourable men; if Bro. Perceval thinks otherwise, he is bound to prove his charges or withdraw them.

It is not enjoyable work this breaking flies on a wheel; I shall not, therefore, follow Brother Perceval into his speculations about figures. Nothing is more deceitful and misleading. I have already disposed of the inconsistency of the position as to the number of members at Special Grand Lodge and the work done. Bro. Perceval leaves my exposure untouched. I do not care to deal with trifles, and I would scorn to take advantage of a printer's error or the mistakes of a writer. I do not desire the notoriety that Bro. Perceval courts, and am content to keep my visor down; at the same time I shall not fail to guard my stronghold, relying upon my good right arm and justice, truth and charity, as the arbiters of any cause I may espouse.

Yours fraternally,

WATCHMAN.

HOLIDAY HAUNTS.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Will you allow me to point out a slight inaccuracy in your interesting article on the attractions of the Eastern Counties as a holiday resort?

Referring to Sudbury and Suffolk, you state that both the great painters—Gainsborough and Constable—"were natives of this charming old town." Sudbury can certainly boast of having produced Gainsborough, but Constable was born at the village of East Bergholt in Suffolk, situate on the Stour, opposite Manningtree.

Apologising for troubling you,

I am, Dear Sir,

Yours fraternally,

GEORGE F. BRUCE,

Metropolitan Lodge 1507.

36 Hargrave Park-road, N.
31st July 1883.

[We are much obliged to Brother Bruce for his correction. The writer of the article trusted to his memory, which on this occasion unhappily failed him. In a reprint of the article the error has been corrected.—ED. F.C.]

THE MOTHER CITY OF MASONRY IN AMERICA.

FROM THE KEYSTONE.

OUR esteemed contemporary, the New York Hebrew Leader, after quoting from our recent review of Bro. the Hon. J. Simpson Africa's excellent historical address on Freemasonry in Pennsylvania, delivered during our Seeqai-Centennial Celebration of last year, adds:—

"The above logical address of Bro. Africa is admirable, but we fail to appreciate the assumption of the term 'Mother,' by the Keystone, which implies that all the other State jurisdictions are its progeny. In this sense Pennsylvania cannot claim to be even the mother-in-law. Let us rather use a Masonic term, and say Elder Sister."

Bro. Leader, we cannot accept your amendment. Pennsylvania is neither the mother-in-law of Masonry in America, nor simply the elder sister of the other Masonic jurisdictions; neither do we recognize "Elder Sister" as a "Masonic term." We would not wish Pennsylvania to be the mother-in-law of Masonry, for mothers-in-law are sometimes thrown out of the window, sisters-in-law sometimes deserve to be, and elder sisters often assume authority simply on account of their age; while mothers are always and everywhere respected, save perhaps among the Hottentots and Fejee Islanders. Bro. Leader, you fall into error when you say we "ASSUMED" the term "MOTHER," for the Masonic jurisdiction of Pennsylvania. It is a demonstrable fact, that we hope to make clear to you before we have finished, that this same Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, meeting in Philadelphia, has introduced and successfully planted many Lodges in the present territory of nearly all of the United States of America, and that these Lodges continued under the jurisdiction of Pennsylvania, until they successively united in forming independent Grand Lodges for themselves. This, we take it, is irrefragable evidence of the fact, that Philadelphia is entitled to be styled the Mother City of Masonry in America, and Pennsylvania the Mother Jurisdiction.

Now for the proof. Nearly all of the Middle, Southern and Western States received Freemasonry by Warrant from the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, meeting at Philadelphia. We by no means confined our Masonic efforts to spreading Masonry through the State of Pennsylvania, but we also introduced it in the States of New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Louisiana, Ohio, Indiana, Missouri, North-West Territory and Indian Territory; leaving only the New England States, or rather the territory immediately adjacent to Massachusetts, to receive its Masonic light from that jurisdiction.

We will now specify a few particulars in proof of our allegation. We gather them from the authoritative "List of Lodges," appended to Part III. of the reprint of the "Early History, Constitutions, and Proceedings" compiled and published by the Library Committee of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, in 1880. Lodge No. 5 was chartered in Delaware; Lodge No. 7 in Maryland; Lodge No. 10 in New Jersey, Lodge No. 12 in Virginia, Lodge No. 20 in North Carolina, Lodge No. 27 in South Carolina, Lodge No. 42 in Georgia, Lodge No. 78 in the North-West Territory, Lodge No. 105 in Ohio, Lodge No. 107 in Indiana Territory, Lodge No. 100 in Louisiana, Lodge No. 111 in St. Louis, Louisiana Territory, &c., &c. We have given but a tithe of the Lodges warranted by the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania outside of the State of Pennsylvania, because these, and a reference to the others, are sufficient to establish the principle for which we contend. Besides these, Pennsylvania also warranted Lodges in Mexico, Cuba, Trinidad, San Domingo, and elsewhere. By these unanswerable facts we prove, and do not assume, that Philadelphia is the Mother City of Freemasonry in America.

But there are two elements which necessarily enter into this question—not only maternity, but the absolute priority of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania. This, too, is demonstrable beyond a peradventure. The earliest Deputation issued by the Grand Lodge of England for any present Masonic Jurisdiction in America, was that to Bro. Daniel Coxe, Provincial Grand Master of the Provinces of New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, dated 5th June 1730. We want no better proof of this than the fact that the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, in 1863, secured an attested copy of the same from Grand Secretary Clarke, of England, and published this Deputation in full in their Grand Lodge Proceedings for 1871. In the same Proceedings they published a communication from their own P.G. Master Heard, stating that when he visited the Grand Lodge Office in London, in 1870, he was shown by Grand Secretary Hervey an original record of the early Provincial Grand Masters of England, and at the head of these stands the name of Bro. Daniel Coxe. These speak for themselves. Lodge No. 79, at the Hoop, Water-street, Philadelphia, was warranted by Provincial Grand Master Coxe in 1730, and is recorded in the "Freemason's Pocket Companion of 1735," published at Dublin. We have the authority of so eminent and disinterested a Masonic scholar as Bro. William James Hughan for the assertion, that this Lodge in Philadelphia was "warranted as well as constituted in the latter part of the year 1730, or, in other words, nearly three years before any other Lodge has been proved to be in existence on the Continent of America." So much for the earliest Lodge. The meeting of the earliest Grand Lodge under the Coxe deputation is proved, by Bro. Benjamin Franklin's newspaper, the Pennsylvania Gazette, issued for Monday, 26th June 1732, and still preserved. It states that the Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of Pennsylvania met on 24th June 1732, and elected a Grand Master, Deputy Grand Master and Grand Wardens. So much for the earliest Grand Lodge. We have now established both the priority and the maternity of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania in relation to the Grand Lodges of America.

One word in conclusion. There are those who assert (we do not, for it is not necessary) that the alleged Deputation to Henry Price, of Boston, as Provincial Grand Master of New England, dated at London, 30th April 1732, has no valid existence. Certain it is, according to the testimony of the Proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts for 1871, where the whole question is thoroughly gone into, that no trace of the Price Deputation is on record in the Grand Lodge of England, except in the printed calendar of 1768, after the death of Provincial Grand Master Jeremy Gridley, in 1767, when Bro. Henry Price was appointed to succeed him, nor is there any mention whatever there of the name of Henry Price as Provincial Grand Master of New England in 1733; while there is a full record, as we have before stated, of the Coxe Deputation of 1730, and of the appointment of Bro. Daniel Coxe as Provincial Grand Master. The only evidence of the Price Deputation, is an alleged copy of it, in Boston, made, not in 1733 or thereabouts, but as late as 1751, when Bro. Charles Pelham, Secretary of the First or Royal Exchange Lodge, Boston, wrote up the minutes of his Lodge for the previous eighteen years, and placed the Price Deputation at the head. Price's Deputation only exists in an alleged copy, and by hearsay evidence, and of false hearsay in one important particular, as we know, when it was alleged, in the Boston prints, that Price's Deputation had been extended by the Grand Lodge of England over all North America; and it was this false assertion that led Grand Master Bro. Benjamin Franklin to write his now famous Masonic letter, under date of Nov. 28, 1734, to Bro. Henry Price.

We note also another discrepancy in the alleged Price Deputation of 1773. In the copy of that Deputation, certified to by Grand Secretary Moore, of Massachusetts, in 1871, it is stated to be signed by "J. Smythe J.G.W." This was not the name of the then Grand Junior Warden of the Grand Lodge of England, but it was "James Moore Smyth." Here is another nut for our Massachusetts brethren to crack.

We observe, finally, that not only was the earliest Prov. G. Master and Grand Lodge for America warranted in Philadelphia, by the First Grand Lodge of England, the so-called "Ancients," in 1730, but also the earliest Provincial Grand Master and Grand Lodge for America were warranted in Pennsylvania by the Second Grand Lodge of England, the so-called "Ancients," and bears date July 14, 1761. (See Part I. Reprint Pennsylvania History and Proceedings, p 27). Pennsylvania carries off all Masonic honours in this regard, and her historic position is assured.

We trust that both our esteemed contemporary the N.Y. Hebrew Leader, and all other leaders of Masonic opinion, will take note of the above facts, and govern themselves accordingly.

A meeting of the Grand Council of the Allied Masonic Degrees of England and Wales, &c., &c., of which Most Worshipful Bro. the Rev. Canon Portal P.G.M. DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I am personally interested in the undermentioned case, the applicant being related to me. The sad circumstances under which the application is made are such as to justify the most strenuous exertions on the part of those who can sympathise with misfortune, and desire to mitigate unmerited distress.

If you will help me at the ensuing Election, I shall be very greatly obliged to you. The promise of your proxies and of your interest in support of this case will be highly esteemed and remembered should occasion arise.

Yours very truly and fraternally,

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF ESSEX.

THE Annual Meeting of this Provincial Grand Lodge was held at the Railway Hotel, Parkeston (near Harwich), on Wednesday, when the Right Honourable the Lord Brooke, M.P., R.W. Provincial Grand Master, was supported by Bro. Fred. A. Philbrick, Q.C., P.G.D., Deputy Provincial Grand Master, and a large attendance of Provincial Grand Officers, Present and Past. Amongst those present were Bros. Matthew Clark P.G.D., Past Deputy Provincial Grand Master, Joshua Nunn P.G.S.B., Lord Claud Hamilton, M.P., James Terry Secretary Royal Masonic Benevolent Institution, Thomas Vincent Prov. G.S.B. Surrey, Frederick Long (Suffolk), &c. &c. Shortly after one o'clock Provincial Grand Lodge was opened in a room at the Station, kindly placed at the disposal of the entertaining Lodge by the Great Eastern Railway Company, who, it may here be stated, had entered thoroughly into the spirit of the gathering, and had rendered every possible assistance to make it a success. After the Provincial Grand Master had been saluted, the Provincial G. Secretary read the minutes of the last annual Provincial Grand Lodge meeting, held at Chingford in August last, under the presidency of the late Lord Tenterden, K.C.B.; and of the especial Grand Lodge held at Colchester in February last, on which occasion Lord Brooke, M.P., the present Prov. Grand Master, was installed by his Royal Highness the Duke of Albany, K.G., P.G.W. Several letters expressing regret at inability to attend were announced, amongst others from Bros. Lord Waveney, Lord Henniker, T. F. Halsey, M.P., Rev. C. J. Martyn, Dr. Wilson Iles, Colonel Shadwell H. Clerke Grand Secretary, &c., &c. On calling over the roll of Lodges, it was found that the twenty which comprise the Province were represented. The amount of contributions received showed a slight increase over that of the last year, while the numerical strength of membership was declared as 897 against 866 for the corresponding period of 1882. A balance of £60 9s was announced as to the credit of Provincial Grand Lodge. The report of the Auditors was unanimously received and adopted. The next feature of the day's proceedings was to receive the report of the Charity Committee, which had been prepared by Bro. Dehane, the Representative of the Province, and which was read by that worthy brother, as follows:—

Before I enter on that which the Provincial Charity Committee has done, I think the Grand Lodge might like to know the voting power of the Province for the last two years, and this year as far as can be ascertained:—

		R.M.B.I. F.	R.M.B.I. M.	Boys' School.	Girls' School.	Total.
1881	Individuals	124	105	334	194
	Lodges	25	56	96	52
	Chapters	—	—	6	4
		310		436	250	= 996
1882	Individuals	124	105	371	244
	Lodges	25	56	91	51
	Chapters	—	—	9	6
		310		471	301	= 1082
1883	Individuals	124	105	393	267
	Lodges	26	58	83	45
	Chapters	—	—	6	7
		313		482	319	= 1114

Averaging something like one-third of a vote for each of the brethren in the Province for each of the Charities. Of course these figures do not include those brethren who belong to the Province but reside in London.

Since Grand Lodge meeting in August last year the Provincial Charity Committee has given its support to only one candidate—Frederick Charles Victor Basham—a very deserving case, son of a P.P.G.S.B., Secretary and P.M. of the Star in the East Lodge, who lost his life while discharging his duties, leaving a widow and five children almost totally unprovided for.

Unfortunately I am unable to give a tabular statement of the proxies sent to the Committee by the brethren in the Province, owing to the voting papers coming to hand so short a time before the election days; in fact, many did not arrive until the elections were over, which should be obviated on future occasions. I shall therefore simply give the numbers polled on each of the three applications, namely:—

			Candidates	To be elected		Votes
April	1882	213	67	15	1st successful	3002
					15th	2050
October	1882	1134	65	12	1st	3004
					12th	2164
April	1883	1580	65	13	1st	3520
Total		2927 polled for Basham;

Bringing him in 12th on the list of successful candidates. The total number of proxies issued to the brethren in Essex for these three elections was 3278. The Committee polled 2927; of these Lord

Claud Hamilton sent	1000
And there were borrowed	613

Only 1304 being sent to the Committee, showing 1974 proxies were otherwise disposed of; in consequence, a large number—623—had to be borrowed to secure this election. I am, however, pleased to say 471 have been repaid, leaving 194 owing, which I trust the brethren by their unanimous support will enable the Committee to pay in October; and, should there be no Essex candidate, to lay the foundation of a fund of proxies which would be available and the sure means of carrying a candidate when taken up by the Committee. This being easily accomplished, by lending to other Provincial Committees, securing their confidence and keeping up the Provincial prestige.

I may mention that I could have borrowed, in the name of the Essex Committee, any number of proxies, but, with the able assistance and joint calculation of Bro. Clowes W.M. 650 P.G.S., I determined not to pledge the Province too deeply, but abide by the number we had polled. This happily resulted in the success of our candidate. There are one or two points desirable to be impressed upon the brethren of Essex. One specially is, that without their cordial and unanimous support the Committee cannot do justice to the Province, and, as every Lodge may, and probably will, each year send a new member to serve on the Committee, that point should be seriously considered on installation days, when the brother is elected. Another point is, that the proxies should be sent to the Prov. Grand Secretary in good time, and so obviate that loss of votes which has happened at each of the three last elections. It is hoped the brothers elected by the Lodges will make it convenient to attend themselves, or by deputy, at the Committee meetings.

In conclusion, the Committee trust the steps taken to secure the election of their candidate, and the happy result, will meet with the approval of Grand Lodge.

H. DEHANE W.M. 1543 P.G.S.D.
Representing the Committee at the Elections.

This report was unanimously adopted.

Lord Brooke then addressed the brethren. This being the first opportunity he had had, he would avail himself of the occasion to express his pleasure at the kindly reception given him by the Freemasons of Essex on the day of his installation as Provincial Grand Master, by the Duke of Albany. While recognising how much of the brilliancy and lustre attached to that gathering was due to the fact that the Duke of Albany had so kindly undertaken to perform the ceremony of his installation, he could but be proud of the hearty reception and cordial greeting with which, personally, he had been received. He might here state also, that the Duke of Albany had since expressed the gratification he experienced on the occasion of his first visit to Colchester, and that he hoped to revisit it on an early day. Knowing that arrangements had been made for the enjoyment of those present, he thought it would be out of place for him to make a long address; moreover, he was not a good speaker at the best of times, and when he remembered that only last year they were presided over by a Mason so eloquent as the late Lord Tenterden, he was the more reminded of his own shortcomings. With respect to the several reports they had listened to, he thought he could congratulate the members of P.G. Lodge. The falling off in the number of members referred to last year had been recovered, and they now were a little above the return made for the year 1881. He was pleased to say he had received several applications for Warrants, and had himself taken part in the inauguration of a new Lodge, the Blackwater, which was consecrated at Maldon on the 20th June last. One point in reference to Bro. Dehane's Report he thought he might call attention to, that was that the suggestion made as to the forwarding of voting papers should be more consistently followed. It was very desirable that a reserve fund of votes should be established. The Prov. Grand Master then alluded to the kindness displayed by the Great Eastern Railway Company in assisting to make the meeting a success, and remarked how gratified he was to see his friend Lord Claud Hamilton, who was so closely connected with the Company, present. This was the first important event that had taken place since his appointment as Provincial Grand Master; personally he was much indebted to Bro. Richard Clowes, the Worshipful Master of the entertaining Lodge, for the share he had taken in making the arrangements. He would reserve any further remarks he might desire to offer, as he knew careful preparation had been made by the Executive who had control of the day's arrangements for the enjoyment of those who were present. Lord Brooke then formally requested Bro. Philbrick to continue as Deputy Provincial Grand Master, and re-invested him with the collar of office. This compliment having been gracefully acknowledged by Bro. Philbrick, Bro. Andrew Durrant was re-elected Provincial Grand Treasurer, and the Officers for the year were appointed and invested, as follow:—

Some discussion followed in reference to business matters; the sum of ten guineas was voted in support of the maintenance fund of the Harwich Life Boat, and votes of thanks were passed to the Railway Company for the help they had given to promote the success of the meeting. Provincial Grand Lodge was then closed.

The brethren now went on board a steamer placed at the disposal of Prov. Grand Lodge by the Railway Company. This arrangement was made ostensibly to convey the party to Harwich, where the banquet was to be served, but, as time permitted, a run out to the German Ocean gave zest to appetite, and when the guests sat down it goes without saying that ample justice was done to the good things provided. After the cloth had been cleared, Lord Brooke proposed the first toast. This was always received in assemblages of Englishmen with enthusiasm, and certainly always with loyalty by Freemasons. Her Majesty takes a deep interest in Freemasonry, otherwise she would scarcely countenance three of her sons taking so active a part in it. In proposing the health of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, the Prov. Grand Master said probably many of those who were present had more experience of the seal shown by the Grand Master than he could boast. However, a short time ago he had the pleasure of meeting His Royal Highness, just anterior to his Visit to York, when it was evident he felt deep interest in the share he was to take in the Masonic ceremony he had engaged himself for. The toast he was sure would receive every honour at the hands of the brethren in that room. With the next toast—The Pro Grand Master, Lord Carnarvon; the Deputy Grand Master, Lord Lathom; and the Grand Officers Present and Past—was associated the name of Brother Matthew Clark P.G.D., who for so many years had been associated with the Province of Essex as Deputy Provincial Grand Master. After this toast had been replied to, Brother Philbrick, in a highly complimentary speech, proposed the health of the Prov. Grand Master. After the sudden and lamentable death of Lord Tenterden, the spirits of the Essex Masons were naturally in a state of depression, but when it became known who was to succeed, their hopes revived. Hope is the inheritance of those who make high aspirations; yet under Lord Brooke's headship the number of Lodges had been extended, and the membership of the Province had already increased. He was sure they would all join with him in the hope that this increase would be sustained. He could assure the Prov. Grand Master that the more the brethren saw him amongst them the more would their affections increase. All wished him long life and a happy reign as the ruler of the Province. In reply Lord Brooke thanked one and all most heartily for the kind reception they had given him. He felt Bro. Philbrick's too flattering remarks were undeserved. He came into the Province, now nearly twelve months ago, a comparative stranger, and he knew he fell far short of what might reasonably be expected from him. During the early part of the year he had heavy duties to perform, but the kind feeling evinced by all Masons in the Province would spur him on to make every effort for their advancement. He would strive to be with them personally, and was much gratified with the esprit de corps that seemed to exist. He had been especially happy that day in attending Provincial Grand Lodge, where the arrangements had been so well carried out under the auspices of Bro. Clowes, the W.M. of the Harwich Lodge. The entire arrangements had been of an eminently satisfactory character, while the "whiff of the sea" which they had indulged in, through the kindness of the Great Eastern Railway Company, would not be the least pleasant incident connected with the visit. Lord Brooke then briefly referred to the magnitude of the works that were now on the point of completion, and trusted that Harwich and the Harwich Lodge might continue the course of prosperity they were now fairly embarked on. In proposing the health of the Worshipful Deputy Provincial Grand Master for Essex, and the Provincial Grand Officers Present and Past, Lord Brooke stated that in Bro. Philbrick he had a most excellent supporter. For many years he had been heart and soul with the Masons of the Province; moreover, he had such frequent opportunities in joining in their meetings that he (Lord Brooke) could scarcely say a word that could commend him to their regard. Many of the other Provincial Grand Officers he should like to enumerate, but time would scarcely permit. He should, therefore, call upon the brethren to drink the toast. Brother Philbrick, acknowledged the compliment in a speech that was full of fervour, and then proposed the health of the Visitors. One of the cardinal virtues of Freemasonry is hospitality. Heart to heart, and hand to hand the host receives the guest. On the present occasion the guests entertained their hosts. The very room in which they were now assembled, and wherein they had been so hospitably entertained, was the property of the Company of whom the guest he desired to associate with the toast was the representative. He scarcely know whether Lord Claud Hamilton was a Freemason under the English Constitution, but his father, the Duke of Abercorn, is Grand Master of Ireland, and is known to Craftsmen all over the world. We here in Harwich have every reason to be proud of the Great Eastern Railway Company with which Lord Hamilton is so closely connected, and trust the efforts they are making to develop the Contental Traffic, which that day had been so prominently brought under notice, would have a speedy and beneficial result. With the toast he would couple the name of Lord Claud Hamilton. In response, Lord Hamilton expressed his satisfaction at knowing the efforts made by the Company he represented had added to the enjoyment of the day. In reference to what Bro. Philbrick had said, he might tell them he was not at present a Mason under the English Constitution, but he thought the time had arrived when he should join an English Lodge. He felt too much stress had been laid upon the small service he had been able to render towards securing the return of the Provincial candidate, whose father he might state had lost his life in the service of the Great Eastern Railway Company. In what he had done, he received valuable help from members of the Craft outside the Province, to whom personally he felt much indebted. He trusted a prosperous future was before them, and that the Provincial Grand Lodge of Essex would be second to none in England. Several other toasts followed, the entertaining Lodge coming in for a full share of praise for the success of the meeting.

An excellent selection of music was sung, under the direction of Worshipful Bro. George F. Smith P.M. 1839, who was assisted by Master Willie Hall, Master Rovy Wetenu, Bro. J. Stedman and Bro. De Lacy. We append the programme:—National Anthem—Solo, Master Willie Hall; "God Bless the Prince of Wales"—Solo, Bro. Stedman; Glee, "The Chough and Crow"—Solos by Masters Hall, Wetenu, and Bro. De Lacy; Song, "Good Company"—Bro. Stedman; Duet, "I know a Bank"—Masters Willie Hall and Rovy Wetenu; Song, "The Jester's Song"—Bro. De Lacy; Part Song, "Sweet and Low." The way in which the Glee was rendered evoked enthusiastic applause, and though the time for departure was fast approaching, and trains had to be caught, Lord Brooke said he could not but endorse the strong demand made by the brethren for an encore. We congratulate Bro. Stedman on the musical ability displayed by his talented pupils, Masters Hall and Wetenu.

DEATH AND FUNERAL OF BRO. W. H. W. R. BURRELL.

WE, together with the whole Masonic body in Sussex and elsewhere, sympathise with its Provincial Grand Master in the loss he has recently sustained by the sudden death of his second son, Brother Walter Henry Wyndham Raymond Burrell. It appears that the deceased had been to a cricket match and was returning to his father's house, at West Grinstead, on a tricycle. By some means he got upset, was pitched on to the side of the road, his head coming into violent collision with a post. This produced concussion of the brain, unconsciousness, and death on the 20th ult., two days afterwards. The circumstances of the accident, the position held by the deceased's father as a Member of Parliament, his rank and influence in the Masonic body, his generous character, and the estimation in which the deceased himself was held, invested the whole matter with a pertinent, though mournful interest. The deceased was only twenty-six years of age, but he had made many friends, who testified their affection in the only manner possible on the occasion of the funeral, which took place at the old Parish Church of Shipley, on Wednesday, 25th July. The coffin was borne to the grave by eight men employed on Sir W. W. Burrell's estate, and if the description of it had not been furnished, it would have been impossible to distinguish of what it was made and how ornamented. The coffin was literally smothered with wreaths and flowers, and the assemblage, comprising the funeral cortège and those met in the church and at the grave showed how deep and wide-spread was the respect felt for the deceased. The funeral service was ornate and more than ordinarily solemn. A communion service was held in the house where deceased's body laid in the morning; the funeral procession was met at the church porch by several clergymen and a special choir of boys, one of whom led the way, bearing a large cross. A processional hymn was sung, and the coffin was conveyed into the church and the service following was impressively conducted by the Rev. N. Andrews. Sir William Burrell desired the funeral to be kept quiet, and sent no invitations to the several Masonic bodies of which he is the local head, and of one of which the deceased was an honoured member. Nevertheless, the brethren were not debarred from attending, and many joined in paying the last sad tribute of respect to their departed brother. The Mid Sussex Lodge, No. 1141, to which we presume deceased belonged, was well represented. The Lodge sent a wreath of acacia, ferns and flowers, made up into the form of the square and compasses, in the centre of which was placed a white card printed in blue letters, "W.M. and brethren of the Mid Sussex Lodge, 1141, Horsham." The wreath had a pretty appearance, and was particularly attractive to those who are strangers to the Craft. To the initiated it told an impressive story, and brought home in reality what they had often before seen symbolised. The Lodge in question was represented by Brothers A. Pennells W.M., L. B. Henderson S.D., J. Moon P.M., D. Phillips I.G., T. Hills J.W., and — Thomas; the Brighton Lodges were represented by Bros. A. Scott D.G.M., W. T. Nell, Hughes, and J. Sayers; and the Cuckfield (Ockendean Lodge) by Bros. Byass, Burtenshaw, E. Domsday, Gallop, and Sergison, each of whom as he passed round the coffin placed a sprig of acacia upon the top. The whole ceremony was profoundly solemn, and yet the bereaved could not fail to derive some solace from the love and sympathy of those who shared in their grief, and showed by their presence, and actions how much they wished to honour real worth, and lighten the effects of the blow that had fallen.

A Meeting of the Metropolitan Council (Time Immemorial) will be held at the Mitre Hotel, Hampton Court, on Saturday, the 11th instant, at three o'clock p.m. The installation of Bro. Robert Roy, Grand Senior Deacon W.M. elect, and the appointment and investment of Officers are the principal features of the day's proceedings.

NOTICES OF MEETINGS.

ROYAL ALFRED LODGE, No. 780.

AT the summer meetings of this Lodge, held this year on Friday, the 27th ult., we naturally look for a diminished attendance. Many of the members are away, on pleasure bent, while those who are still on the "grind" can scarcely find the leisure to attend to their Masonic duties at this time of the year when nearly all business establishments are arranging for the absence of some members of their respective staffs. However, Bro. Franckel was supported by Past Masters Bros. W. Gomm (Treasurer), W. Hilton (Secretary), G. A. Littlewood, Walter Goss, B. E. Blasby, W. Gardiner, and H. Potter; Bros. J. J. Gunner S.W., W. Beckett J.W., C. Maton I.G., J. Gilbert Tyler, &c., &c. The Visitors present were Bros. T. E. Tarrant 186, E. H. Sagg P.M. 452, and W. W. Morgan S.W. 211. After Lodge had been formally opened, and the minutes of last meeting read and confirmed, Bro. Edwin Littlejohns was examined and entrusted. Lodge was then opened in the second degree, and the candidate was passed, the W.M. giving a careful rendering of the ceremony. The next business was the selection of a W.M. for the next year, and the choice of the brethren resulted in Brother J. J. Gunner being elected. Bro. Gunner is an initiate of the Lodge, and one who has identified himself with the work ever since, having passed through all the offices; we look forward to a prosperous year for him during his Mastership. Bro. Gomm P.M. was re-elected Treasurer, and Bro. Gilbert re-appointed Tyler. Bros. C. Botley, Jackson, and Sharpe were appointed Auditors. Shortly afterwards Lodge was closed. Bro. John Brill, the proprietor of this comfortable hostelry, supplied a capital banquet, and personally looked after the comfort of his guests. On removal of the cloth, the W.M. gave the Loyal toasts, which were enthusiastically received. Bro. Blasby proposed the health of the Worshipful Master. The past year had been an eventful one in the history of the Royal Alfred Lodge. Bro. Franckel had carried out the work in an eminently satisfactory way, and to the entire satisfaction of the majority of the members. He (Bro. Blasby) had great pleasure in offering the toast for the acceptation of the brethren, who he felt assured would do it full honour. After a song by Bro. Gunner, "The Last Stirrup Cup," Bro. Frankel rose to reply. After thanking the brethren for the hearty reception they had given the toast, so flatteringly introduced by Bro. Blasby, he thought it a duty he owed to Bro. Gunner to compliment him upon the services he had rendered to the Lodge, and to congratulate him upon having been unanimously elected to the highest position it was in the power of the brethren to confer upon him. For himself he had done his best to merit the good opinion of the brethren of the Royal Alfred Lodge, and he felt he had not been unsuccessful in his endeavours. In speaking to the toast of the Treasurer and Secretary, the W.M. said Bro. Gomm had been re-elected, and all felt assured the choice of the brethren could not have fallen on a better man. Bro. Hilton, the energetic Secretary, had performed the duties of that office for nearly twenty years, during which term he had brought to bear upon his labours an amount of assiduity and energy that had won for him golden opinions from all with whom he had been associated. It had been suggested to him (the W.M.) that he had taken this toast somewhat out of order, but he felt the zeal displayed by those he now sought to honour warranted what he had done. He would therefore call upon all present to drink to the toast. Brother Gomm replied; he felt proud of the confidence reposed in him. He looked forward to a successful future for the Lodge. He did not desire to occupy much of their time, consequently would conclude by thanking all for his re-election. Brother Hilton, while bowing with all deference to the ruling of the W.M. as regards the precedence of the toast of the Past Masters, wished it to be understood he did not desire to be placed before those brethren with whom he had been associated so long. He felt proud in being able to say he had always been received with cordiality. With the Worshipful Master, he regretted they were not honoured with a larger attendance of the members. Brother Hilton then offered some excellent advice with regard to the future of the Lodge, which received every attention from, and will doubtless be acted upon by, the members present. In speaking to the toast of the Past Masters Brother Franckel said doubtless he should have been more in order had he given it precedence over the one he last introduced; however, he felt they were all personal friends and would not censure him too severely. He then mentioned each of those present, and gracefully commented on the ability each had displayed. Bro. Littlewood was the first to reply; he was followed by Bros. Blasby, Walter Goss, and Gardiner. The latter brother made allusion to the death of Bro. Hale, who for many years had been associated with the Royal Alfred Lodge, where he was beloved and esteemed by all the members who knew him. For the Visitors Bros. Tarrant, Sagg and Morgan replied. The health of the Worshipful Master elect was most cordially received and drank, and after Bro. Gunner and other Officers had responded, the Tyler was summoned for the parting toast. Some capital songs enlivened the proceedings, Bros. Brill, Botley, and others exerting themselves much to the satisfaction of the company. Brother Sagg kindly accompanied on the piano.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—Never at fault.—In all irritations of the skin, sores, ulcers, burns, and scrofulous enlargements of the glands, Holloway's Ointment presents a ready and easy means of cure, which never disappoints the most favourable expectations. It manifests a potent and peculiar power in restraining inflammation, removing stagnation, cooling the heated blood, and checking all acrimonious or unhealthy discharges. Whilst thus acting locally, the Pills are no less remarkable for their power in improving the general condition and habit of body, which renders the cures complete and permanent. Under the general influence of these potent remedies, the puny infant becomes the robust child, the pale and emaciated regain colour and flesh, and the dyspeptic eats freely, without fear.

SUPREME GRAND CHAPTER.

THE Quarterly Convocation was held on Wednesday, at Freemasons' Hall. Col. Creaton acted as M.E.Z., Comp. Glaisher and Murton respectively as H. and J. As usual at this time of year there was but a small attendance. The minutes of last Convocation were read and confirmed, the Report of the Committee of General Purposes as printed by us last week was accepted, and petitions for three new warrants, also particularised by us last week, were granted. Col. Creaton gave notice of his intention, at next meeting of Grand Chapter, to propose a grant out of Grand Chapter Funds towards rebuilding the Temple.

THE INSTITUTION AT CROYDON.

The summer entertainment to the residents in the Royal Masonic Benevolent Institution's buildings at Croydon was given on Tuesday, and was, as usual, eminently successful. It is pleasant to observe, on the occasion of visits by members of the Craft to this Institution, the perfect friendly equality existing between the visitors and the residents. This, as is generally believed, is not a feature in the majority of other Charities, in which past social status, it is to be feared, is too often lost sight of, and a pitying sense of a present inferior status kept constantly in view. It is the desire of the Craft at large, and it is emphatically the constant endeavour of the Committees and the Secretary, who have the management of this Institution, to make clear to the residents themselves, as well as to all others, that these Masons and widows of Masons who in the decline of life find a refuge in the pleasant retreat at Croydon bring with them and retain their former status, that they are entitled to receive—as they do receive—the same regard as had previously come to them as a consequence of their social position. Indeed, if any difference at all is experienced, it is much more likely that some of the residents are enjoying unaccustomed consideration, than that any consideration and regard are lost. These remarks are made in consequence of a writer, signing himself "Watchman," having addressed a letter to a Masonic contemporary, in which he said, "the almshouses at Croydon are associated with wrecked fortunes and troublous times. It is true that they are a haven of rest for the weary, world-tired wayfarer, but they are reminders of more prosperous times. The bane is equally present with the antidote, and unfortunately the cost is out of all proportion to the good done." "Watchman" stigmatises the almshouses as a white elephant, and suggests that the time has come to consider whether it would not be kinder to poor and distressed brethren to let them keep their little homes, or reside with their friends, so that, while recipients of secret charity, they shall be free in the sight of the world from the badge of dependence." Surely this is the objection of a very thin-skinned or over-sensitive person, and relates rather to his own feelings than to those of the residents, upon whose behalf he must have taken up the cudgels without authority from them; because there is no compulsion upon those who accept the benefits of the Institution to go into the homes provided at Croydon—in fact, the succour afforded at that pleasant retreat forms but a very small part of the aggregate of relief granted by the Institution, and that the great majority of its bénéficiaires are annuitants who either have their little homes or do live with their friends. A great many of these annuitants would doubtless be glad to live at Croydon, if the buildings were sufficient for their accommodation. Mr. Terry, the Secretary of the Institution, referred to the subject in a short speech he had occasion to make at the close of Tuesday's entertainment, and said that if the writer would only come to see the Croydon Home he would find that the inmates had no restrictions whatever put upon them, but enjoyed to a great extent the same comforts that they would have in private apartments of their own.—Evening News.

Under the title of "Masonic Recollections," Bro. Rob Morris, LL.D., is writing a series of very interesting papers for that capital monthly, the Masonic Review, Cincinnati, Ohio. His experience has been large and varied, and during his time he has done much to further the interests of the Craft. As far back as 1853 he started the Kentucky Freemason, which changed its name afterwards to the American Freemason. Bro. Morris says, "it was strictly Masonic and strictly original," and that it met with conspicuous success for a time, but he says nothing about its subsequent career. As editor he was pestered with poetic contributions, and the difficulty of choice was probably the rock upon which he split. One instance he gives is worth quoting. He says: "I remember a 'poem' of a hundred lines or more describing a defunct Lodge. Here is a characteristic stanza:—

> Its juice of Masonry's dried up,
> Its bowels gone, its brain scooped out,
> Its heart and vitals slung about,
> Its secrets busted up!"

We need scarcely say that the writer of the above doggrel did not succeed in gaining a place in the American Freemason. He was a "pote" born to blush and write unseen, one of the unappreciated geniuses who live upon the hope that their powers will be discovered when it is too late to profit by them.

CONSECRATION OF THE GREENWOOD LODGE, No. 1982.

ANOTHER Lodge was added to the roll of the Province of Surrey on Saturday last, on which day the Right Wor. Prov. Grand Master attended at the Town Hall, Epsom, where the members of the Greenwood Lodge have arranged to hold their meetings. This Lodge derives its name from the esteemed Brother who for the last twenty-seven years has so constantly identified himself with the work of the Province, and by his courtesy and consideration won golden opinions from all with whom he has been brought into business relationship. Punctually at the time appointed, 2·15, the brethren assembled in an ante-room, and entered the Lodge room in procession, where Bro. Gen. Brownrigg was supported by the following Prov. Grand Officers:—Bros. Rev. Albert Hurt Sitwell, M.A., Prov. Grand Chaplain, Charles Greenwood P.G. Sword Bearer Prov. Grand Secretary, John G. Horsey Prov. Grand Director of Ceremonies, Thomas Vincent Prov. G. Sword Bearer, H. J. Strong, M.D., P.P.G.J.W., C. Greenwood jun. P.P.G.Sec., H. E. Frances P.P.G.S.D., A. T. Jeffery P.P.G.S.D., J. Rhodes P.P.G. Org., C. Ellis P.P.G.S.B. Cambs, Thomas Squire, James Lodges P.M. 1586, James Salmon S.D. 1339, Walter Kent 554, Samuel Lloyd W.M. 1201, G. T. Carter P.M. 382, Theodore Distin 173 T. W. Morfitt 1861, Tom Hodges W.M. 1706, James Appleton 1853, Henry Sibley J.D. 1851, W. W. Morgan S.W. 211, &c. After the Prov. Grand Master had appointed his Officers and opened the Lodge, he explained the nature of the business for which they were assembled, and directed the Provincial Grand Secretary to proceed with the formal part of the business. The petition and warrant were read, and inquiry made of the brethren whether they still approved of the Officers named. This having been answered in the affirmative, the Prov. Grand Chaplain was called upon for an address. Our Rev. Brother Sitwell eloquently pointed out the nature and principles of Freemasonry. He made some happy allusions to the charge in the first degree, and exhorted the brethren to reverence and be guided by the Volume of the Sacred Law, and to regard it as the "infallible standard of Truth and Justice"—quoting the words of Sir Walter Scott with reference to the Bible:—

> "Within this awful volume lies
> The Mystery of Mysteries.
> Happiest they of human race,
> To whom God has given grace,
> To read, to fear, to hope, to pray,
> To lift the latch and force the way;
> And, better had they ne'er been born,
> Who read to doubt, or read to scorn."

The Provincial Grand Chaplain urged upon the Brethren the necessity of caution when speaking to non-Masons, and also the importance of setting a good example to the world, concluding with these words:—"If we forget in our conduct we are men, the world with its habitual severity will always remember that we are Masons." The anthem—"Behold how good and joyful a thing it is, Brethren,"—was sung in excellent style by the musical party, and the ceremony of consecration was then completed with every regard to detail. The installation of the W.M., Brother Joseph Steele, was undertaken by Brother H. E. Frances, who carried out the ceremony with his accustomed ability. The Officers appointed were—Bros. Charles Rowland Ellis S.W., Spencer Pidcock J.W., H. E. Frances P.M. Secretary, H. J. Levett S.D., Thomas Squire J.D., and Thomas Bowler Tyler. The compliment of honorary membership was conferred on the Prov. Grand Master, Bros. Strong, Greenwood, Sitwell, and Horsey; the usual felicitations and good wishes were tendered, and Lodge was closed. After a short interval, most pleasantly spent by the brethren in revisiting spots hallowed in the memory of some of those who took part in the day's proceedings, a capital "luncheon" was supplied, but we have frequently sat down where a less bountiful repast has been served when the higher-sounding title of a "banquet" has been made use of. The efforts of the caterer (Mr. John Barnard) on this occasion gave every satisfaction, and full justice was done by those who "assisted." Bro. Steele explained the absence of General Brownrigg, who had an important engagement in town that had necessitated his leaving early; he stated he should curtail his remarks, so that the brethren might have an opportunity of listening to the musical programme that had been arranged. He should therefore at once call on the brethren to drink the first toast—The Queen and the Craft. After the National Anthem had been sung, the W.M. proposed the second toast—the Most Worshipful the Grand Master. The popularity of the Prince of Wales was undoubted, and his association with the Masonic Fraternity had endeared him to the hearts of all Craftsmen. After the toast had been fully honoured, the Masonic Ode, "Hail to thee, Albert," was sung, Bro. Carter sustaining the solo part. The next toast, the W.M. said, was always an acceptable one to Masons—the Most Worshipful the Pro Grand Master, the Right Worshipful the Deputy Grand Master, and the rest of the Grand Officers Present and Past. The growth and prosperity of the Craft was due in an eminent degree to the sustained interest taken by those distinguished noblemen—the Pro Grand Master and Deputy Grand Master. The other Grand Officers spared no labour in the fulfilment of their duties, and their worthy Brother Greenwood might be accepted as a fair sample of the august body he would now call upon them to honour. With the toast he would associate the name of Bro. Charles Greenwood Past Grand Sword Bearer. After a song by Bro Hodges—"Sweet Madoline"—Bro. Greenwood replied. On the part of the Grand Officers he thanked the W.M. for the way he had introduced the toast. He felt it must be gratifying to all Freemasons to recognise the interest taken by the Grand Officers—from the highest to the lowest—in the fulfilment of their duties; while to the Grand Officers themselves it was a source of pride to feel that their exertions were appreciated. For himself, he fully appreciated the compliment that had been paid him, at the same time he felt that the honour was conferred, through him, upon the Province with which he had been so long associated. For twenty-seven years he had held the office of Prov. Grand Secretary. In the earlier days there were but three Lodges, a very small number as compared with the twenty-seven they had now on the roll. He was extremely gratified to know that to-day the Masons of Surrey had done him another kindness in taking his name for the title of a new Lodge. He felt this was a fitting reward for his labours. He trusted the Greenwood Lodge might enjoy a career of prosperity, and that it might take a foremost position amongst the Lodges of the Province. In speaking to the next toast—the Right Worshipful the Provincial Grand Master, the Deputy Provincial Grand Master and the Provincial Grand Officers Past and Present—the W.M. said that General Brownrigg stands in the highest estimation amongst the members of his Province, while with respect to the Provincial Grand Officers, one and all felt proud in being associated with such a chief. In reply, Bro. Sitwell thanked the W.M. and members of the Lodge for the hospitality they had dispensed. He felt he was speaking the sentiments of all for whom he was replying when he wished the Lodge every prosperity. He, with the other brethren who had assisted in the ceremony of the day, appreciated the compliment paid them by making them honorary members of this new Lodge, and felt it must be a source of infinite gratification to Brother Greenwood to have his name perpetuated by this association. On Brother H. E. Frances devolved the pleasing duty of proposing the health of the Worshipful Master. He had had great pleasure in conducting the ceremony of Installation that day, though he had to make some few slight alterations in order to conform to the peculiar views Bro. Steele—who is a member of the Society of Friends—entertained. This was the first time in the course of his Masonic experience when he had to accept an affirmation in lieu of the customary obligation. However, Bro. Steele was a thoroughly honest and consistent worker, and he (Brother Frances) and all associated with the Lodge felt he would conscientiously carry out the duties of Master of this new Lodge. In acknowledging the compliment, Bro. Steele regretted he could not command the flow of language so eloquently dispensed by Bro. Frances. However, he could assure those present the position he now occupied was one he held in the highest estimation. He had felt from the time he was received as an Initate into the Brotherhood there was a something to strive for, and in his aspiration he had realised that Bro. Frances was a tower of strength. He thanked the brethren most cordially for the reception they had given him, and assured them he would strive to the utmost to advance the Lodge. For the Visitors Bro. Morgan and others replied, and then a toast was given in honour of the Claremont Lodge, the brethren of which had so kindly acted as sponsors for the Greenwood. Bro. Steele commented upon the well-ordered lines on which the Claremont Lodge was conducted, and stated it would be his desire to emulate it. Bro. Vincent replied; the little services he had been enabled to render were cordially entered upon, and he anticipated that a bright future would be the outcome of the day's work they had been engaged in. One or two other toasts followed; some capital songs and glees were given; while the Prov. Grand Chaplain played a march of his own composition that met with especial favour from the brethren. Brother Theodore Distin also won golden opinions by his rendering of a new song—"The Queen's Hussar"—for which, we may add, he claims the authority.

United Pilgrims Lodge of Instruction, No. 507.—There was a full meeting of this Lodge of Instruction at the Surrey Masonic Hall, Camberwell, on Friday, the 27th ult. Amongst those present were Bros. J. N. Bates W.M., C. H. Phillips S.W., H. H. Hughes J.W., J. B. Sarjeant S.D., C. J. Axford J.D, J. D. E Tarr I.G., James Steveds P.M. and Preceptor, Thos. Poore P.M., R. Poore Secretary, H. Hooper, A. Jones, &c. The Lodge was opened and minutes read. Bro. Bates then vacated the chair in favour of Bro. Richard Poore, who proceeded to raise the Lodge in due form, and most ably rehearsed the M.M. ceremony with traditional history and explanations. Bro. Bate then delivered the charge of the degree and resumed the chair. The Lodge was closed to the first degree, and the brethren assisted Bro. T. Poore to work the sixth section of the lecture. Bros. C. J. Axford and J. D. E. Tarr were elected members, and after a most profitably spent evening the Lodge was closed and the meeting adjourned.

Kingsland Lodge of Instruction, No. 1693.—Held at Bro. Longhurst's, Canonbury Tavern, N., on Monday, 30th July. There were present Bros. Galer W.M., Jones S.W., Marks J.W., Rhodes S.D., Wolf J.D., Cosgrove I.G., Powell acting Preceptor, Killick Treasurer, Collingridge Secretary; also several other brethren. Lodge was opened in due form, and the minutes of last meeting were read and confirmed. Bro. Bagnall, as candidate for passing, answered the usual questions. Lodge was opened in the second, and the ceremony of passing was rehearsed, Bro. Bagnall candidate. This brother also answered the questions leading to the third degree. Lodge was opened in the third degree, and the ceremony of raising was rehearsed, Bro. Aynsley acting as candidate. Lodge was resumed to the first degree and closed in due form, and adjourned to Monday, 13th inst.; Bro. Jones having been duly elected to occupy the chair on that evening, at 8.30. p.m.

THE EMPIRE LAMP.
(RIPPINGILLE'S PATENT.)
THE MOST BRILLIANT AND ECONOMICAL DOMESTIC LIGHT EXTANT.
It equals Gas for Simplicity, but surpasses it for Illuminating Power.

IT burns without a chimney, a pine-shaped globe only being required, which has never been known to break from the heat of the flame. It will give more light than any other lamp with a wick of equal size. The combustion is so perfect that it deodorises the oil, and burns absolutely without smell, giving an intense pure white and beautiful light. It is unrivalled for simplicity in lighting, cleaning, and trimming, and is, in fact, the perfection of artificial light. Suitable for Cottage or Mansion, Churches, Chapels, &c.

GRAND LODGE AND THE NEW RULES.

BY some a protracted sitting of Grand Lodge was expected on Wednesday evening, when the adjourned meeting was held to consider the Revised Book of Constitutions. This anticipation was not realised, and rarely have we seen a more business-like temper displayed than was exhibited on the occasion we refer to. About two hours and a half sufficed to get through rules from 184 to 308 inclusive, and yet there did not appear to be any undue haste, and certainly no brother was debarred from having his say. Bro. Lord Holmesdale, P.G.M. Kent, presided, and conducted the business with skill and courtesy. Bro. Rev. R. J. Simpson P.G.C., who officiated as Grand Senior Warden, was inclined to be garrulous, but he was kindly checked, and in that spirit of obedience which long acquaintance with the laws of the Craft enjoins, he submitted with grace. Bro the Rev. Ambrose W. Hall, also a P.G. Chaplain, occupied the Grand Junior Warden's chair. While giving due credit to the admirable tone that prevailed, we must add that the comparatively small attendance, and the strong element of Provincial brethren present, helped the progress of business considerably. There was no lack of interest, but the members from the country were too strongly represented to make opposition formidable, had there been a desire to contest many points. There was, however, a serious discussion on the question as to the position of Past Masters who upon leaving their own localities join other Lodges. It was stoutly contended that at present these brethren were placed at a disadvantage, that they lost rank in consequence of circumstances over which they had no control. Many brethren who had done good suit and service in their mother Lodges were deprived of the proud place they had attained by long and valuable labours, and it was held that they should, as a matter of right, take rank, under certain conditions, of P.M. of any Lodge they might join, without necessarily passing through the chair again. On the other hand, it was urged that the Constitution assigns the position of P.M. of the Lodge and of P.M. in the Lodge, and that Private Lodges had the power to give honour to any joining Brother who, being a P.M. of another Lodge, might be considered entitled to merit. This point was questioned, and the Grand Registrar was appealed to. He said it was a fact that Private Lodges had conferred positions upon joining Past Masters, and that there was no written law against the practice. He declined to go farther, and as his statement was not held to be conclusive, the discussion was continued. It was advanced that even if no such power existed Private Lodges could recognise distinctive worth by electing a joining P.M. to the chair, but the retort came that that would be unjust to those who were working up to position, by putting them back a year. Ultimately the following resolution was carried: "Every such joining member, if a Past Master, shall have the rank and position of a Past Master of the Lodge, ranking next after the then junior Past Master and the Worshipful Master of that Lodge, provided he has not ceased to subscribe to a Lodge for twelve months." There is no ambiguity about this, and if the rule is to stand, a great revolution, and we fear much heartburning will ensue. It is right that service should be recognised, but how is it to be judged? If all Past Masters were alike worthy the difficulty would not be so great. Even if that were so, it would not be wise to deprive Private Lodges of the right to determine the rank a joining P.M. of another Lodge should occupy. By the hard and fast rule now adopted by Grand Lodge a new right is created, and Private Lodges, where they consider self-defence necessary, will have no other resource than exclusion. The ballot will be called into requisition in a manner little calculated to promote peace and goodwill, and the obnoxious system of blackballing will assume a power we should sincerely regret. It is a pity that the matter was not left for Private Lodges to deal with, especially as it was recorded that they have, in some cases at least, awarded honour where they considered it was due. We cannot see in what way a Past Master is prejudiced by the present usage. He is a Past Master wherever he goes, provided he has complied with the necessary and recognised conditions of the Craft, and no subsequent honour can equal that conferred upon him by his mother Lodge. By this new rule he takes a status he has not earned. It is all very well to say that he laboured in another field; true, and he got his reward at the hands of those he so well and honourably served. It is assumed that all Past Masters are equally worthy, but that is a contention that will not hold good for a moment. Great inequalities exist, but the rule we are discussing places all on a level, and if private Lodges accept them as joining members in the future, they have no choice but to give them a rank to which they may or may not be really entitled—that is, so far as merit is concerned. Trades Unions go upon the theory of fixing the minimum wages a man shall receive; he may get more if he can, but he must not take less. This new rule is more arbitrary still, and allows no choice except the acceptance or rejection of a joining Past Master. Inequalities will be legalised, and the privileges of private Lodges seriously curtailed. Besides, there is something mean in taking a position for which nothing has been done, except the payment of a sum of money. There are many brethren who cannot afford to pay another joining fee, who keep up their connection with their mother Lodges out of affection for the home of their Masonic birth. They may have done as good service as their richer brethren, quite as worthy of honour, it may be more worthy, but they must be content with their lot. We do not say that their position could be improved by any law of Grand Lodge, but we do urge that contrasts that must be painful to them ought not to be multiplied. Were Past Masters honoured for work done in the Lodge, no such contrast would arise, and the brother removed from his Mater would not feel so acutely the distinction that the possession of money creates. We have said nothing about the opportunity for abuse that the new rule will give, but it is not the least of its faults. A brother may quarrel with his Lodge, and knowing that he will only have to pay a certain sum of money, a matter in many cases of no importance to him, he will seek another Lodge, and if accepted will obtain the rank of Past Master of that Lodge. It is making separation easy, and like the law of divorce in the case of marriage, it is calculated to lower the sanctity of Lodge ties. We deplore the decision of Grand Lodge, and fervently hope that it is not too late to prevent the consummation of what may turn out to be a grievous wrong.

We cannot help observing that the anxiety for Past Masters did not extend to the poor Tyler. Some may take this office from choice, but there are others who fill it because it is the only means they have of obtaining a livelihood. It was moved that a serving brother seeking admission to a Lodge must have ceased holding his office for two years before he would become eligible. He was to be put in quarantine in order that the taint of his former poverty should be purged from him. We always thought that Masonry knew no distinction between rich and poor, and that even a serving brother did not part with his right of equality when he put on the Tyler's collar. No doubt the mover of the amendment had other and different reasons for the course he took; we hope and believe he had no unkind or ungenerous motive, that he did not see the full effect of his proposal. Whatever causes actuated him, the effect could not have been otherwise than painful and unjust. Fortunately Grand Lodge negatived the amendment, and so prevented a great wrong from being done. This is not the time to lessen the bonds of charity; rather should they be strengthened. Money subscriptions are valuable aids; they accomplish much; but the nobler test of Freemasonry is that which springs from the higher motives, which loves the Craft for the grand lessons it teaches, not the least of which is Brotherly Love.

"TOO LATE!"

A TRUE STORY OF THE FIFTH POINT OF FELLOWSHIP.

"BRETHREN, you are too late, too late!" The earnest tones of the speaker, in which a calm despair seemed blended with resignation to an inevitable doom, sounded like the notes of a funeral dirge to the little circle who had, by appointment, assembled to discuss the matter under consideration, the emphatic answer to which seemed to banish all hope of success in the effort which was being put forward by those to whom this ominous declaration was made. The speaker was a man who had barely reached that period which we term the prime of life, a young man of fine intellect, thoroughly educated, standing in the front rank of his profession, happily wedded, and blest with interesting and loving children; there seemed really nothing lacking to complete his happiness. He had for many years been a Mason, and his heart and purse were always open to the needy brother, yet scarcely less so to all who possessed a legitimate claim upon his sympathy and charity. A prince of good fellows, he was naturally fond of lively, sociable associations, and, like too many others of his temperament and disposition, was fond of his glass only because of the social pleasures with which it was connected. Thus for a few years he drifted along in the channel of social and convivial indulgence, occasionally "making an evening of it," but never becoming absolutely drunk, and nearly always ready to attend promptly to his business duties. Some of his older and more discreet friends would shake their heads ominously when speaking of his habits, but as he was a man of a very proud, sensitive nature, they feared to wound his feelings by admonishing him, and so he drifted gradually into regular channels of dissipation, which in time began to show its inroads on his health and constitution.

At length it became evident that unless something were done promptly to arrest his career he must succumb to the relentless foe by which he was enchained, and accordingly several of his Masonic brethren awoke to a realisation of what had for years been a sacred duty, and jointly addressed him a note, couched in the most fraternal language, calling his attention to his bibulous habits, admonishing him of the danger in which he stood, and entreating him to curtail and if possible to abandon the pernicious habit before it became too late. He responded by inviting us to meet him on the following evening at his office, and, hoping that we had been successful in our effort, we all were there promptly at the time named, when after speaking of having received our note, he addressed to us the ominous words above written, "Too late." We endeavoured to reason and remonstrate against this decided opinion, when he smiled sadly, and said, "Brethren, pardon me; there are only two of you who have any right to expostulate with me. It may be and doubtless has been your duty for several years past, but had you not better remove the motes from your own eyes before offering your advice and aid as to drawing the beam from mine? Understand me, that I desire not to give offence, that I appreciate your kindness, and hence speak plainly, and beg of each of you to accept and profit by the advice which you have tendered me; for, even should you never reach my unfortunate position, you may nevertheless be the means of aiding other men to do so, by the force of your example. You are occasional tipplers, social drinkers, and thus by frequenting drinking saloons give respectability and tone to them, and by your example attract others to those places, who may in turn become drunkards. Some of you I have seen drunk. You cannot say as much of me. But, fortunately for you, you had not a strong appetite for drink, and hence could, as you boast, drink or let it alone. But some men cannot do that. Many, who never dream but that they are perfectly able to control themselves, find out their error only when it is too late. You, Brother A, are Worshipful Master of our Lodge. I have often heard you, in your earnest manner, explain the five points of fellowship, and enjoin the practice of all those virtues therein taught, especially the fifth, and yet up to this time you have witnessed my gradual but certain approach to the mælstrom of strong drink, often quaffing a social glass with me, without addressing me one word of admonition or fraternal counsel. Take this whole matter home to yourself; yes, to yourselves, all of you, and hereafter if you see a brother who needs fraternal counsel, admonition, or, if necessary, discipline, try to do your duty. Mark well, I do not complain, do not charge you with being even passively, by non-action, the authors of my unfortunate condition. I will not say that had you done your duty in time it would have averted my certain doom, nor can I say that it would not have prevented it; I leave that all to yourselves, and ask you in the name of your duties as Masons, by that fraternal regard which you are now shewing toward me, to first place yourselves in a position where you are justified in reproving others, and then, when necessary, to do your duty fearlessly, as Masons should do.

"My race is nearly run. For me there is no halting, no looking back, no escape. Before the violets bloom you will be called to deposit the acacia in a drunkard's grave, and now, brethren, I thank you each and all, and were there any possibility that I could do what you have requested, I would make the attempt, but, it cannot be done; it is now too late."

His sad apprehensions were realised, and while yet the snow lay upon the cold earth, we bore him to his final resting place. What was the result of his advice to us? you ask. Two of those to whom it was addressed—at least I can answer for one of them — drew the motes from their eyes, and have never since felt constrained to remain silent when a word of fraternal admonition was needed at their hands.

How well we as Masons perform all the duties enjoined by the fifth point of fellowship will, probably, not be a legitimate subject for boasting. We are too prone to mentally shift upon others the performance of those duties which rest equally upon all, and to place those responsibilities upon the officers of the Lodge, which may and should be performed by any and each of the brethren. Of course, as in all things, "circumstances alter cases," but no true Mason will ever resent a word of warning or admonition, given in a fraternal manner, by even the youngest or humblest member of the Lodge. And, in view of the inroads which intemperance is making in our membership, intemperance, the enemy which injures Masonry tenfold more than all the Cynosurists and Blanchardites, is it not time that the Craft, and especially those on whom its government devolves, should make the first point of entrance in practice what it is in theory. While I do not expect that Masonry will ever require total abstinence at the hands of its membership, I still hope that it may do its duty, as clearly defined in its ritual on the first point of entrance, and if this is done we shall never be compelled to hear the despairing words, "TOO LATE."—Voice of Masonry.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—Notable Facts.—Summer heats augment the annoyances of skin diseases and encourage the development of febrile disorders, wherefore they should, as they may, be removed by these detergent and purifying preparations. In stomach complaints, liver affections, pains and spasms of the bowels, Holloway's unguent, well rubbed over the affected part, immediately gives the greatest ease, prevents congestion and inflammation, checks the threatening diarrhœa and averts incipient cholera. The poorer inhabitants of large cities will find these remedies to be their best friend when any pestilence rages, or when, from unknown causes, eruptions, boils, abscesses, or ulcerations, betoken the presence of taints or impurities within the system and call for instant and effective curative medicines.

THOUGHTS ON THE NEW HISTORY.

By Bro. Jacob Norton.

SOME few weeks after my return from England, Bro. Nickerson ordered several sets of the new History—one set was for me; the volumes came slowly, by dribs and drabs. I was about to mail the first part of this series before the second volume came, and as I had not then read through the first volume, I put the second aside, without knowing about its contents. I somehow neglected reading the criticisms or comments on the new History which appeared in the Masonic papers. I, therefore, supposed that the author gave all he had to tell about the MSS. and Statutes; and as I found the ordinances by the Mayor and City of London authorities of 1356 were not mentioned I, therefore, called attention to the said ordinances I have since then, however, received a hint that the author resumed the subject of MSS. and Statutes in the second volume, and I just looked at the inside long enough to find the ordinances of 1356. If, therefore, I had known that the said ordinances would appear in the second volume, I might either have omitted mentioning the subject, or would have referred to the second volume.

It is more pleasant to agree than to differ, especially so when the party happens to be a friend whose friendship is highly prized. Without further circumlocution I am in duty bound to find fault with some of Bro. Gould's theories, and I do not mean to let him down easily either.

Bro. Gould found that the Martel legend was known to some French Masons. Thereupon he remarks, "All the English Masonic MSS. but one retained that legend" (or words somewhat like), and then proceeds to give a reason why that "one" omitted it. The above remark implies that, whereas we have over fifty MSS., consequently we have fifty witnesses testifying to one who is silent. The truth, however, is only one witness testifies, viz., the Cooke MS., and all the rest are mere repeaters.

Bro. Gould assumes that because Martel gave offence to the church, and the author of the first MS. having been a priest, he, therefore, omitted the name of Martel. I think his theory is far fetched. The poet was not at all a well-informed man; he was ignorant of Bible history, otherwise he would have known that "Nahogodonozor" did not build the Tower of Babel. The only book he specifies in the poem is "The Lives of Saints," from which he copied the legend of the four martyrs; as far as I know he may never have heard of the name of Charles Martel. I will, however, hazard a theory how the Martel legend might have found its way into the Cooke MS.

According to Bro. Woodford, the poem was written in 1390, and the Cooke MS. in 1490. During the interim Henry V. and Edward IV. invaded France; England was invaded by Edward IV., by the Queen of Henry VI., and by Henry VII. Some of the foreign troops enlisted by the invading or returning parties may have been French stonecutters, who eventually gave up soldiering, and found work in an English stonecutter's workshop, and from the said Frenchman the author of the Cooke MS. may have directly or indirectly obtained the Martel legend. If, therefore, we must have a theory, I prefer the above to Bro. Gould's theory. But I must now proceed to Bro. Gould's theory that our speculative Masonry was derived from, or was in some way at one time connected with, the French Compagnons.

"Coming events cast their shadows before." On page 58 our author casts forth the shadow of the Compagnonage: and, somehow, his reasoning thereupon failed to make an impression on me; he says, "The points of similarity are so varied and distinct, that if it be conceded that the present legends of the two bodies have been faithfully transmitted from their ancestors in the Middle Ages, the inference is irresistible, either that the Masons borrowed from the Compagnonage, or that the traditions of both associations are inherited from a common original."

Here the question suggested itself to my mind, Why could not the Compagnonage have stolen their legends from the Masons? However, as I know that a whole chapter of the book was devoted to the Compagnonage, I did not immediately trouble myself about it, but on proceeding further with the history, I came across other passages where his theories jar with each other. Thus, in the above quotation Bro. G. bases his argument upon "points of similarity" between the two bodies, but on page 11 he maintains that similitude is no proof of identity. Again, on page 148, when combating Bro. Fort's theory, the author cites with applause Mr. Hyde Clarke's remark, viz., "the doctrine of chance coincidences," and says, "we may safely infer that whatever resemblances may appear to exist between the Masonic ceremonial and the attitudes to which Fort has alluded, are as much the product of chance as the 'suppositious Masonry' of our own time, which has evoked the excellent definition of Mr. Clark." Why the similitudes between the Compagnons and our Masonry cannot also be imputed to chance coincidences is more than I can understand.

In order to make myself fully acquainted with the question at issue, I consulted the Masonic Cyclopœdias to which Bro. Gould refers. Dr. Mackey's account of the Compagnons is full and fair. It seemed, however, strange, that while Dr. Mackey, who was always prone to "magnify a molehill into a mountain," who could deduce from a book called "Long Livers," that the English Masons had high degrees in 1722, would see no Freemasonry in the Compagnonage. Our clear-headed Bro. Gould, who so cleverly drags our Fraternity out of several swamps, becomes himself fascinated with the Compagnonage swamp.

There is no evidence, says Brother Gould, of the German Masons having had mysteries (or words to that effect), while the Compagnons had mysteries, legends, symbolisms, &c. These are some of the similitudes between Freemasons and the Compagnons. Now, symbolism signifies the art of making one something mean another something; the question is, was symbolism confined to Masons and Compagnons only? Surely not. Why, the Christian Church is made up of Symbolism. Look for instance at the headings of the chapters of the Old Testament in Christian Bibles, and one is led to suppose that the writers of the Old Testament were all Christians. True, there is no direct mention in either of its books about Christianity, but our Christian commentators claim that some things therein mean other somethings. For instance, Christians believe that the picture of a lion on Judah's banner was not a real lion at all, but a representation of the founder of Christianity, and as the tribe of Judah was marshalled under a Christian banner the tribe must have consisted of Christians. Hence, while to the benighted mind of Jews the tribe of Judah was Jewish, to the mind of the profound Christian, enlightened by symbology, the said tribe was Christian.

Upon such basis of reasoning Mr. Miller, founder of the Millerite Church, in a sermon preached by him in Boston in 1844, proved from the Bible that the Hebrew prophets foresaw the coming events up to his own time; ample texts were furnished by him to show that the prophets knew all about the doings of Julius Cæsar, Pompey, Antony and Cleopatra, and of course the coming of Christ. And after proving from Bible texts the coming of every king and ruler, and what they would do, and what they did, the doings of Washington, Napoleon and so on, and so on, were all shown to have been foretold by the prophets. And I have no doubt that had Mr. Miller been alive to-day he would have proved that Isaiah foretold that General Butler would be governor of Massachusetts in the year 1883. Well, then, the Millerites are symbolisers, and Masons are symbolisers; but yet Millerites are not Masons and Masons are not Millerites. The same may be said about mysteries and legends—quite a number of secret societies have had mysteries and legends, but these did not make them into Masons.

And now for the Compagnons. Well, it was known that for many years French work people belonged to several secret factions, all were known as "Compagnons," but whenever members of opposite factions happened to meet, a battle ensued, and sometimes many of them were killed. It was also known that similar organisations were prohibited to hold meetings by Francis I. And, furthermore, in the seventeenth century, owing to a religious shoemaker having become disgusted with their mysteries, he, therefore, exposed them, which brought down upon the Compagnons the wrath of the Church, and the thunder of the doctors of Sorbonne. The said mysteries consisted in representing the crucifixion, the resurrection, the ascension, the five wounds, and other matters appertaining to Christ. They also administered baptism, the "Lord's Supper," &c. The said mysteries are not unlike the mysteries described by Hone in his work upon "Ancient Mysteries." They resemble still more strongly the mysteries of our so-called "Masonic Knight Templars," and some other so-called Christian degrees where the crucifixion, the resurrection, the ascension, the "Lord's Supper," and baptism form part, if not the whole, of the ceremonies.* Some writers supposed that the mysteries of all the factions were founded on the New Testament. But strange to say, what the mystery of the Mason Compagnon was Bro. Gould could not find out; all that he says about the Mason's mysteries is derived from conjecture and inference.

In 1841, Agricol Perdignier, a joiner by trade, and a Compagnon, in order to put a stop to this enmity among the factions, and to teach them common sense, published a small book, which furnishes a certain amount of information about the Compagnons. I must here add that with the exception of the exposé furnished by the shoemaker already referred to, Perdignier's book is the first of the kind ever published by a Compagnon, and, as far as I know, it is the last one. These organisations, though doubtless old, are not in possession as far as we know of a scrap of MS. Now Mr. Perdignier informs us, that the Compagnons are divided into three distinct parties, and are respectively known as "Sons of Solomon," "Sons of Jacques," and "Sons of Soubise." When they became so divided no one knows. Perdignier furnished a legend of the Jacquesites, but withheld the legends of Solomonites and Soubisites; he is indeed provokingly reticent about the Solomonites; he says, however, that the Sons of Solomon had a legend about Hiram or Adoniram. Now, had Perdignier claimed that the Freemasons obtained a Hiram legend from the Compagnons, even then there would be reason to doubt his assertion; had he said nothing at all about Freemasons, there would be room for conjecture. But Pedignier does say—and says to the purpose; and here is what he says:—

He says, in answer to a letter of Beau Désir Gascon:—

"As to this history of Hiram's, I regard it as a mere fable, ingenuous enough, but of which the consequences are horrible, for it tends to separate those who take it seriously.† The Bible—the only book of any real authority concerning the construction of Solomon's Temple—says nothing about Hiram's murder; and for my part, I do not believe it. The Compagnons étrangers, and those of Liberty, have no authentic details of this fable, which is quite new to them, and I fancy that the Compagnons of the other Societies are not more advanced. I look upon it, therefore, in the light of a Masonic invention, introduced into the Compagnonage by persons initiated into both of these secret societies. Freemasonry, according to the most zealous historians—and M. Bazot is of the number—was only introduced into France in 1715. The Compagnonage is indisputably anterior; nevertheless, from the day it was introduced into this country, our Compagnons frequented it, and found in its bosom useful truths, but also numerous errors." (Vol. I. p 241.)

* I was informed by a brother who had gone through the ceremony—a distinguished brother, on whose testimony I can rely; one whom we all know, but who now is no more, that the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered. (See Oration by E. Comp. J. H. Scott in Bro. Thomas Francis' "History of Freemasonry in Sussex," p 114). And I have received equally reliable information about the so-called Christian degrees as given above.

† The lines above italicised by me indicate a dissimilarity in the respective legends of the Freemasons and Compagnons.

Bro. Gould, who had already wrought himself up to a mild pitch of enthusiasm about his theory, is of course dissatisfied with the joiner's commonsense statement; and, what is worse, Perdignier was a "Son of Solomon." I shall not, however, attempt to give Bro. Gould's arguments; they are too weak for a serious rebuttal. It is indeed very difficult to deal with his arguments, because he foresaw all that could be said against his theory; but here he begs the question, and there he has an if or a but to excuse the deficiency of argument; a system well understood by gentlemen trained to the legal profession, and which they know so well how to handle when defending a weak cause. I shall, however, proceed to show the possibility of a legend being introduced into the ritual of a secret society, the origin of which, after a while, might be altogether lost and forgotten; similar to the introduction of the Hiram legend into the Compagnon ceremony—that is, if it formed part of their ceremonies at all.

In 1873 I undertook to hunt up the origin of the legend of the monument which King Solomon is said to have erected to the memory of Hiram. Well then, I went to work, examining all the American Masonic books, Monitors, Trestle Boards, and Manuals that I could lay hands on. At last I found the engraving of the monument in the first edition of "Cross's Chart." Agreeably to my theory about legends, stated in my first communication upon this subject, I became convinced that Jeremy L. Cross was the father thereof. I afterwards told it to Bro. John W. Simons, P.G.M. of New York; he, however, had something more to tell me about it. It seems that Cross, whose business was to lecture on Masonry, and to sell Webb's Monitors, aspired in 1819 to get up a manual of his own, illustrated with engravings; when he took a notion into his head that Hiram ought to have a monument erected to his memory. In vain he was reminded that Jews had no monuments in their burying grounds. But what did Bro. Cross care whether Jews had, or did not have, monuments? he was determined that Hiram, at least, should have a monument; and so he went searching in churchyards for a model; and in Trinity Churchyard, in New York, he found a monument that took his fancy, which he copied with slight variations, and had it engraved for his Chart; but he left out the legend. Even the third edition, printed in 1824, was minus the legend. In 1826 he had a legend, when the symbol and story was introduced into the New York ritual, and with the exception, perhaps, of Pennsylvania, the said legend was introduced into all the rituals of the Lodges in the United States. From 1842, when I first came to Boston, no one could inform me about the origin of the monument and its legend, and the only answer I could get was, "Tradition informs us," &c. I was the first writer who made the above facts known to our Fraternity. (See Freemason, 1873, vol. vi. p 798). I must here add that the well-known Dr. Folger, of New York, was in or about 1850 Grand Secretary of the A. and A. Rite, when Cross was the S. Grand Chaplain. Bro. Folger then received the history of the monument from Cross himself, who communicated it to Bro. Simons, who, in turn, told me about it. Bro. Folger a few years ago published the same facts in an American paper. Dr. Mackey, though prejudiced against me, in his Cyclopædia admitted that Cross was the author of the monument story. Dr. Rob Morris still believes that the legend is ancient, while the great mass of American Masons never heard that there was any doubt about its antiquity.

Now, if no Masonic books whatever had been printed in America up to the present time, and if Cross had not told to Dr. Folger what he did, the origin of the monument and its legend would have been forgotten by this time, past recovery. Now, the Compagnons, as already stated, have no kind of written or printed matter in their possession calculated to throw light upon this intricate question. The Hiram legend was most probably obtained by them, as Perdignier believes, by one or more of their members having been initiated into an early French Masonic Lodge. The difference in time between 1726 (when Masonry, according to Bro. Gould, was planted in France) and 1841 (when Perdignier published his book) is one hundred and fifteen years; and the difference between 1819 (when the monument symbol was manufactured) and now, is only sixty-four years. If, therefore, sixty-four years would have been sufficient to have obliterated all recollection of the origin of Cross's legend, why could not a hundred and fifteen years have sufficed to obliterate all recollection of the introduction of the Hiram legend into the Compagnonage.

I shall here add, that though Bro. Gould argues a great deal, he nevertheless has not irretrievably committed himself to his theory; he seems to think that we ought to have a theory, and if this one is not adopted, we cannot get another.* It is not impossible, however, that our brother may be in possession of a clue leading to some further information; and who knows whether his theory may not after all turn out "right side up." If so, I shall apologise for the hard hits I have administered; so far I am not to blame; I could judge and reason only from the statements before me. The subject is, however, likely to attract the attention of the curious. I think, therefore, that Perdignier's book should and ought to appear in an English garb. We shall then have a larger field for observation.

* "To the question, what opinions I would substitute in place of those to which I object? I answer, none. Ignorance is preferable to error: he is nearer to truth who believes nothing, than he who believes what is wrong."—(Dr. Lawrence's Lectures on Anatomy, &c., Bohn's Edition, p 10.)

A meeting of the North London Chapter of Improvement was held on Thursday, the 9th instant, at the Canonbury Tavern, St. Mary's-road. Comp. Edmonds Z., Gregory H., Killick J., Strugnell S.N., Sheffield P.S. There was a large gathering; the Companions of the Metropolitan Chapter paid a complimentary visit. The ceremony of exaltation was conducted by the Officers in a very able manner.

HOLIDAY HAUNTS.

—:o:—

MIDLANDS, ENGLISH LAKES, AND SCOTLAND.

A SOMEWHAT irregular, though pretty direct trunk line, leads from the St. Pancras Station, London, to Carlisle, where it diverges, one branch on the right going to Edinburgh, and the left to Glasgow. This line is the main artery of the Midland system, out of which spread a host of other lines leading to every part of the country. Between Trent and Clayerose, on the left, there is a loop which connects another main artery at Derby, running south through to Birmingham, Worcester, Cheltenham, Gloucester, Bath, Wimborne, Poole, and Bournemouth. Bristol is reached by a branch just before arriving at Bath. The line in the other direction from Derby goes north-west, and serves Matlock, Buxton, Stockport, Manchester, Warrington, and Liverpool. A glance at the map that is issued with the Company's time table will show that the Midland Railway main lines traverse the very heart of England and Scotland, while their branches and other lines, in direct communication, convey passengers to almost every part of the land opened up by railway connection. Broadly speaking the Midland Railway is an inland system, passing through towns and districts full of absorbing interest to Englishmen, and in some instances revealing beauties which poets and artists revel in depicting. It would be impossible in one article to embrace one-tithe of the sights that are to be seen, they are almost inexhaustible. We purpose therefore pointing out some of the more salient features, feeling sure that we shall but whet the appetite for further pleasures. The hungry will know where to fill themselves; our duty shall be to give a fillip to their desires, to satisfy some and to give zest to the remainder.

Almost at the very outset interest is awakened by the views of Hampstead and Highgate, which cannot fail to open up vistas of a long past to those who are acquainted with the history of the locality and the many persons of note who have been associated therewith. Then there is St. Alban's Abbey a few miles further on, with its long nave and gaunt appearance. Whatever the building lacks in beauty is made up by the story of its foundation, by its surroundings, and the origin of the town itself. St. Albans was a British settlement, enclosed within earthworks, the remains of which can be traced to this day. It was the stronghold of the Cassi, whose king, Cassivelaunus, offered a stout resistance to the Roman legions under Julius Cæsar. When they had subdued the natives, they erected a fortification in another part of the town, and called it Verulamium, after the river Ver, by the side of the famous Roman road known as Watling Street. The name of the town is taken from one Alban, a Roman of good family, who sheltered a persecuted Christian named Amphibalus, who succeeded in converting his protector to the new faith. Alban, in his zeal, tried to pass himself off as Amphibalus, but was detected. Declining to sacrifice to the gods, he was cruelly tortured, afterwards beheaded, and became the protomartyr of Britain. It is believed that the present Abbey is built on the site of Alban's martyrdom, and was founded towards the end of the eighth century. It was rebuilt in the time of the Conqueror, but has since undergone many alterations, until now the tower and transepts, and part of the nave alone remain of the Norman builder. St. Alban's was rich in the patronage of saints and kings, and for centuries maintained a glory that was second to none in the kingdom. The Abbey however went to decay, and it was not until about half a century ago that active steps were taken to restore this massive structure to something like its wonted character. The work has been continued ever since, and in 1875 St. Albans was made a city, and the centre of a new bishopric carved out of the sees of London and Rochester. Freemasons have done something towards the good work of restoration, which is still going on. Many romantic stories are told in connection with the Abbey and its occupants, and those of the present who wish to live in the past must bring a cultivative imagination to bear. The result would be worth the effort.

Beyond, to the left, are the Chiltern Hills, which extend from Goring in Oxfordshire through Bucks to Tring. These hills were at one time the haunts of gangs of outlaws, and an office called "Steward of the Chiltern Hundreds" was created by the Crown to put these gentry down. The office still exists, but instead of being used for its original purpose, it is now the means resorted to by Members of Parliament who wish to relinquish their seats without resigning them, hence the practice of accepting the "Chiltern Hundreds," nominally now, but at first really a paid office under the Government. Elstow Church and Village, just before entering Bedford, will remind the traveller of John Bunyan, tinker and dreamer, author of one of the finest books in the English language. As an allegory "Pilgrim's Progress" stands unrivalled; as a British classic it takes first rank for simplicity and power. Some time could be spent here and at Bedford if only in viewing the scenes connected with the career of Bunyan. Leaving the main line, a branch passes through Olney, a village linked with the name of Cowper, who is scarcely less honoured than the once reprobate of Elstow. The line continues on to Northampton, a town that has gained a kind of reputation in consequence of its modern Parliamentary history. The county is full of old-time associations, and the town itself is not without considerable interest. Returning to the main line, Kettering is next reached. It was here that British missions had their birth, and from hence a line to the right turns off to Huntingdon and Cambridge. It is impossible to sever Huntingdon from the name of Cromwell. Here the Protector was born, and in the county, at Hinchinbrook House, his progenitors lived in wealth and splendour for many years. We cannot dwell upon the incidents connected with the name of Cromwell, but it is not a little noteworthy that the elder branch were loyal to the backbone and prosperous, and that it remained for the last descendant of the elder line, and for Oliver, to depart from its traditions and sow the seeds of decay that rapidly followed the death of the Protector. Going north, another branch line leads to Manton, Melton Mowbray, and Nottingham, places associated with racing, hunting, and lace. Leicester, another venerable town, with large modern additions, is on the main line, but a link connects it with the celebrated hunting town, and no less famous for its savoury pies. From Nottingham it is easy to reach Newark and Lincoln. Nottingham is a wonderfully busy town, and the market-place is, we should say, the largest in England, covering as it does four and a half acres. There are a few ancient remains in the town, and it has a history too, that is interesting reading. At Colwick Hall lived the "Mary" Byron delighted to honour, and who inspired him to write some of his most impassioned lines. Newstead Abbey, the home of the poet, is only nine miles from Nottingham. Robin Hood, from his forest haunts close by, is said to have visited the town frequently, but that is legendary; what is real is, that among those born in, or associated with the town, were some men of sweetness and light, and include the names of Jas. Bailey, the author of "Festus," Hy Kirke White, and others. Newark is a clean little town, and had the honour of first returning Mr. Gladstone to Parliament. It has just been favoured with the gift of a free library by a native of the town, but who now resides in Suffolk. Lincoln is worth a journey to see. It has many curious sights to show, and its Cathedral ranks among the finest in England. It is nobly situated, and from the top of its massive central tower a magnificent view is commanded, almost to the sea beyond Boston. Hailing back to the main line, which we left at Leicester, we proceed to Trent. Here the loop we have referred to before commences, and takes in Derby. Going north, it divides at Ambergate, one portion going to the trunk line at Clay Cross, and the other, through most charming scenery and places that have attained a wide popularity, right on to Manchester and Liverpool. Hill, dale, and river unite, to form some glorious pictures of Nature's creation along this portion of the line, especially from Matlock to Buxton. Matlock Bath nestles in a valley; on either side huge tors rear their lofty heads, while the beautiful Derwent meanders through leafy groves that line its banks. From the High Tor, Masson, or Abraham's Heights, grand views can be obtained, embracing the valley of the Derwent. The country all around is delightful for either walking or riding, while th petrifying wells, the stalactite caverns, and the exhausted mines afford daily amusement. There are capital hotels at Matlock Bath, and all that can rejoice the hearts of those who love God's handiwork in some of its most varied and picturesque forms. Matlock Bridge, about a mile further on, is famous for its hydropathic establishments. Rowsley, four miles beyond, is the station at which visitors alight for Haddon Hall and Chatsworth. There is a quaint old tavern, called the "Peacock," at Rowsley, which is sure to detain those who love old buildings, clothed with ivy and other clinging plants. It is a fine specimen of a British inn, and dates as far back as the middle of the sixteenth century. Haddon Hall is full of weird and romantic stories. The building is the growth of centuries, and the lovely setting in which it is placed is the work of ages. Haddon Hall seems to have had a peaceful career, if we except the course of true love, which never does run smooth. Originally it belonged to William Peverill, a natural son of the Conqueror, from whom it descended to the Avenalls, and thence to the Vernons. One of the daughters of this latter family, Dorothy by name, was deeply attached to John Manners, second son of the Earl of Rutland. This love match was forbidden by the friends of the lady, and she was subjected to all kinds of restraints, but love laughs at locksmiths, and one fine night, during some festivities at the Hall, Dorothy, like Jessica, stole forth and eloped with the choice of her heart. She was afterwards forgiven, and Haddon Hall became the inheritance of her husband's family from that time to the present. Chatsworth is one of the grandest residences in England, a mansion, and not inaptly called the "Palace of the Peak." The glories of this magnificent place are beyond detailed description here; its loveliness can only be realised by seeing it. It was here that Mr. Joseph Paxton, the Duke of Devonshire's head gardener, designed the conservatory which covers an acre of ground, and from which, we believe, that noble building the Crystal Palace sprung. Like Haddon Hall, Chatsworth owes much to its situation, nature has come to art in all her charms, and has enriched it with beauties that are indeed a joy for ever. We must leave these charming resorts, and, continuing through scenes of enchanting variety, we approach Bakewell. On the right from here is Long Stone Edge, bare and cold, while on the left is Monsel Dale, rich and luxurious. Then comes Miller's Dale and some wilder scenery, including Chee Tor, the finest rock specimen in Derbyshire, and Buxton. The mineral springs here are the great attraction. They appear to have been celebrated for centuries, but the town itself is of comparatively modern date. It is situated a thousand feet above the sea, but high as it is there are still greater heights which prevent the fine bracing air from becoming bleak. The walks and rides in the vicinity are delightful, and some of the spots are romantic enough in character, and, as at Matlock, rejoice in sentimental names. We must leave the Derbyshire Dales and all their attractions with the remark that nowhere will the tourist find greater charms. They are crowded with beauties of the most diversified character, and the residences in the locality and the churches are associated with eventful times. It will not be necessary to dwell upon Manchester and Liverpool. Both towns are marvels of modern progress, and are worth a visit, if only to see how the heart of Lancashire beats in its two great centres. Many large towns have branches leading out of this western trunk, all of them of commercial interest. The other trunk going south leads to towns that possess many and varied attractions. Birmingham has features of its own, both of a trade and political character, which give it the stamp of originality at least. Worcester is adorned with a beautiful Cathedral and from the city branches out a line that takes the tourist to the glorious Malvern Hills and to Tewkesbury, when the trunk line is reached at Ashchurch just beyond. We have dealt with most of the other towns going south in a previous paper, and have only now to add that some of the attractive features of Dorset are opened up by the main line, which leads on to Wimborne with its Minster, Poole, and delightful Bournemouth.

Pursuing the trunk line northwards, from Clay Cross, we reach Chesterfield, Sheffield, and Swinton. Sheffield, like Birmingham, has made a distinct name and trade for itself, and its cutlery is known everywhere; probably the "Sheffield Whittlers" are as popular now as ever. At Swinton a loop line on the right leads to Doncaster, and another just above it goes to Pontefract, thence via Milford Junction to York, Scarborough, and Whitby. From Milford Junction the line debouches to Hull. Continuing on the main line to Leeds, a branch goes to Harrogate, divides at Northallerton for Middlesborough and Hartlepool on the one hand, and to Stockton, Durham, Newcastle and Berwick on the other. We cannot pause to dwell even upon the chief features of the districts enumerated, besides, we may have something to say about several of the places of interest that come within range in connection with another line. We may state, however, that Kirkstall Abbey ruins are worth inspection in conjunction with Leeds. York Cathedral and the vast stores of antiquarian objects contained in this ancient city will supply food enough for more than a passing visit. Indeed York might be made the headquarters from which a tour might be worked out with advantage. Then there are aristocratic Scarborough, Whitby, Richmond and Harrogate. Although widely scattered, all these places will be found very attractive by tourists. Bradford lies beyond Leeds, on a spur of the main line, before reaching which a branch takes visitors to the Valley of the Wharfe, where are situated Ilkley and Ben Rhydding, places familiar to health seekers. Again seeking the main line, Saltaire is soon seen on the right. This is a modern, and we might add a model, colony, founded by the late Sir Titus Salt. The prefix of the title comes from the name of the founder, and the affix from the river Aire close by. Saltaire is the outcome of enterprise, skill, and a wise benevolence, and we cannot imagine a more interesting treat than a visit to these works. Leaving the main line at Skipton, for Bolton Abbey and Castle, to which we shall allude in another paper, the traveller comes back, and goes on to Settle. From here to Carlisle the line passes through a district rich in valleys, and wild, picturesque scenery. The engineering difficulties of construction were of the most serious kind, and were only overcome by the exercise of that energy and pluck characteristic of Englishmen, and which seem to defy the impossible. The distance from Settle to Carlisle is seventy miles, the making of the line took seven years, and cost over three millions sterling. These figures are startling in their magnitude, and show the huge nature of the undertaking. The labour has not been in vain, especially in behalf of pleasure seekers, for the whole district is rich in romantic charms of fell and dale, of moor and river. Wildness alternates with beauty, and thus the taste is kept from palling.

On the left of the district just referred to lie the English lakes. They are bounded on the east and north-east by the trunk line, and largely embraced by Morecambe Bay on the south, the Irish Sea on the west, and the the crab-claw-like form of the Solway Firth on the North. From Settle to Lancaster, thence to Morecambe, is a short trip. Out of this short line several branches spread, going in various directions, some leading to the heart of the lakes, and others going round Morecambe Bay, skirting the coast and diverging at Workington for Penrith on the right, and Carlisle on the left. The railways take to centres, but in order to make every place of interest accessible, it is necessary to walk, to ride, and to sail and steam; by these means the following and other beautiful spots can be visited:—Kendal, Windermere, Ambleside, Coniston, Keswick, Troutbeck, Ullswater, Derwentwater, and Skiddaw. On the other side of the Bay, commencing from the treacherous sands, between Arnside and Grange, are several attractive spots. At Cark and Cartmel there is a church, originally attached to a Priory, which is stated to be "the only conventual building in Lancashire which escaped mutilation in the dissolution of the monasteries." This church, too, is said to possess some remarkable architectural features to be found nowhere else in this country. The only thing like it, says Mr. Pettit, is to be found at Rheims. A little further on is Ulverston, from whence runs a spur line to Lake Side. Beyond Ulverston is Furness Abbey, a place of considerable interest. The best way to see the Lakes is to begin as we have indicated, at the south, and work up to the north, proceeding from simple beauty to the majestic. We cannot describe the Lakes; abler pens than ours have essayed the task, but their charms are only for the eyes of visitors. A very useful little book has been issued by Messrs. Cassell and Co., with this and the Company's Time Table and Tourist Arrangements, no difficulty need be experienced in undertaking the tour of the enchanting Lake District.

What is termed the Waverley route from Carlisle to Edinburgh abounds in historic and daring interest, and the readers and admirers of Sir Walter Scott, whose names are legion, will find plenty to engage their attention as they proceed along their journey. When quite clear of Carlisle a sight is caught of the Cheviot Hills, and some distance farther on, observable from the railway, lies Netherby. It was at Netherby Hall that young Lochinvar paid his tardy visit to fair Ellen, whom he carried off under romantic circumstances. Who does not remember the following lines?

> "There was mounting 'mong Grœmes of the Netherby clan;
> Forsters, Fenwicks, and Musgraves, they rode and they ran;
> There was racing and chasing on Cannobie Lea,
> But the lost bride of Netherby ne'er did they see."

A short distance from St. Boswell's is Dryburgh Abbey, memorable as the burial place of Sir Walter Scott, and further on is the valley of the Tweed and Melrose, whose Abbey can be observed on the right. Not far off too is Abbotsford, the home of one who has stamped his name in the indelible colours of genius, and whose productions will last as long as the English language survives. Nearing Edinburgh may be seen, on the left, the ruins of Borthwick Castle, originally a fortress built in 1430. Here Mary Queen of Scots and her third husband Bothwell occupied a room when they fled to avoid the conspirators, and it was from this place that she escaped in the disguise of a page to Dunbar Castle. After passing the grounds of Dalkeith Palace, the seat of the Duke of Buccleuch, the remains of Craigmillar Castle, one of Mary's favourite resorts, some of the most prominent views of Edinburgh come into sight. The city is itself called "Caledonia's Queen," but when Sir David Wilkie avers that "What the tour of Europe was necessary to see I find congregated in this one city," we may be pardoned if we say that he has borrowed a good deal of the colour of language to paint his flattering picture. That Edinburgh is beautiful goes without saying; it possesses grand natural advantages, and then it has such a history, such thrilling associations, as to endear it to all who love their country. Before leaving Edinburgh a trip should be taken to the Trossachs. This tour involves variety in the mode of travelling as well as of scene, and such places as Linlithgow, where Queen Mary was born, Stirling and Callender are embraced in it. Lochs and glens are interspersed, rail, coach, and river are utilised, and the whole journey is one of picturesque beauty and change.

The route from Carlisle to Glasgow is not so full of historic interest as that to Edinburgh, and yet it passes through some choice bits of scenery, a great deal of it associated with Burns, Scotia's immortal bard. A few miles from Carlisle is Gretna Green, where marriage difficulties used to be settled in the most summary manner. Either along the line or not far from it are many interesting spots, notably Dumfries, where Burns spent the latter part of his life; the Ettrick Hills, where Hogg wrote and gained his inspiration; Closeburn Hall, once the seat of the Kilpatricks, from the male line of whom it is stated the ex-Empress Eugenie is descended. A capital view is obtained of Drumlanrig Castle, one of the choicest bits of scenery in Nithsdale. At Mauchline, where the Covenanters obtained a great victory, a branch line leads to Ayr, a shrine which attracts pilgrims from all parts of the world. Amid the scenes around Burns wrought as a ploughman and drank deep of nature. It is hallowed ground, sacred to genius and the memory of a great, loving, and tender heart. There is little else on the journey after Ayr to gratify the tourist. Glasgow is a busy hive, and possesses some fine buildings, among which the New University is one of the most beautiful and conspicuous objects.

From what we have written it will be gathered that the Midland line affords ample resources for the gratification of all pleasure seekers, and that it leads in some cases to spots of excelling charm.

THE PRICKED WINDBAG.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—It is evident that Brother Perceval is determined to achieve a cheap notoriety by his persistence in his somewhat reckless charges against the executive of Grand Lodge and the late Board of General Purposes, and by his not accepting the crushing defeat inflicted on him by "WATCHMAN" in the CHRONICLE of the 21st July.

There are, however, two or three points not touched on in that letter which I should ask a little space to advert to.

Brother Perceval makes four specific charges:—

1st. That the Grand Registrar and Grand Director of Ceremonies conspired together to obstruct the business of Grand Lodge of 6th June until 10 o'clock was reached, in order to prevent Brother Perceval's motion as to the Revise of the Constitutions coming on.

2nd. That the Board of General Purposes in fixing the day for the Special Grand Lodge to consider that revision, carefully selected a certain day and hour in order to stifle debate, and neglected their duty by not informing the Grand Lodge of 6th June of the fixture.

3rd. That the Board of General Purposes had officiously and improperly undertaken the Revision, thus showing great disrespect to Grand Lodge.

4th. That the Board of General Purposes having had the amendments referred to them for consideration, with instructions to report to Grand Lodge in June, had failed to make any report, thus committing a breach of their duty.

That each charge is utterly unfounded I now proceed to point out.

1st. The charge of conspiracy is so serious that Brother Perceval might fairly expect to be summoned to answer for it before a Masonic Tribunal, but I fancy the two distinguished brethren incriminated will treat it with the contempt it deserves. Those who know them—and they are legion—well know how utterly incapable they are of such conduct. But the question in all such cases is, what would the object be? the answer is, none whatever. Had Brother Perceval brought on his motion, it would, no doubt, have been at once gladly met by the President of the Board of General Purposes, stating what was the fact, that the Board had just finished their work, and that the result was ready for the consideration of Grand Lodge. As for the Grand Director of Ceremonies consulting his watch, Brother Perceval forgets that it is his duty to inform the Grand Master when the time arrives, after which no fresh business can be commenced.

2nd. Bro. Perceval sets himself up as an expert in Masonic law. May I ask him where he has ascertained that it is within the power, or any part of the duty of the Board of General Purposes, to fix the day and hour for Special Grand Lodges? Let me tell him that it is no more their business than his—but belongs to the Grand Master or Pro Grand Master alone. I have some reason for believing that in this present case the day and hour were fixed by the Pro Grand Master after the meeting of 6th June. The late Board cannot therefore take credit for the deep cunning which Bro. Perceval so charitably ascribes to them.

3rd. The Board of General Purposes (of last year) are charged with acting improperly in suggesting certain alterations in the Book of Constitutions. I refer Bro. Perceval to paragraph 21, page 113, Book of Constitutions, wherein he will find ample and clear powers given to the Board to originate such matters.

4th. As to the Board of General Purposes neglecting to comply with the order of Grand Lodge to report on the amendments to the Grand Lodge of June. This is so precise a charge that your readers have no doubt accepted it as of necessity correct, they will probably be astonished to hear that Grand Lodge, in referring the amendments to the Board, prescribed NO DATE on or before which their report was to be furnished.

I think I have now said sufficient to satisfy your readers, and even Bro. Perceval, that he has put forward charges which are entirely groundless and untrue, and I therefore call on him to fulfil the promise contained in his letter in the CHRONICLE, of the 28th July, as to making "the most ample apology that can be required."

I am,

Yours faithfully,

A MEMBER OF THE LATE BOARD OF GENERAL PURPOSES.

2nd August 1883.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—As Bro. "WATCHMAN" declines disclosing his individuality, I must decline continuing this one-sided correspondence with an unknown adversary who persists in shooting from behind the hedge. I will, therefore, leave unanswered any of the accusations he has brought against me in his last letter, which appeared in your issue of the 4th instant. I would, however, recommend him, when quoting from mine or anybody else's letters, that he do so directly; for instance, in my letter of the 16th July, "a Committee should be formed outside of the Board of General Purposes;" and yet in his of the 21st the following appears:—He (Bro. Perceval) "condemns the Board of General Purposes, and yet he would select six of their number," and other instances in which he has misrepresented the meaning of my text, though he may have nearly quoted the words correctly. I now say, good day to Bro. "WATCHMAN," and when he feels inclined to reveal himself I shall have no objection to enter the arena with him in friendly contest.

The Special Grand Lodge, with Bro. Lord Holmesdale in the chair, completed its work on Wednesday. There was not much discussion, except with regard to the status of joining Past Masters. The decision arrived at, as I understand it, is this, "That upon any P.M. of one Lodge joining another Lodge, he shall take rank immediately after the Junior or Immediate P.M." It is a very vexed question, and it is difficult to satisfy all. How this new law will work time alone can show. There are some Lodges where even the promoters, if Past Masters, are debarred from passing the chair, or where a brother belonging to two Lodges, and holding office in each, in the one in which he elects to pass the chair first he is of course a P.M.; but the other chair is forbidden ground to him. He may serve as S.W., and then be relegated to the ranks. I think that something of this kind might meet the case—that the Past Masters have a distinct status of their own in a Lodge, without interfering with the members proper, and have a distinctive title, say extra P.M. Something of this kind might be done to do away with any little acerbities or chances of P.M.'s of one Lodge being excluded by withdrawal or blackballing from others.

A large number of the clauses required slightly technical alterations; these were generally received and adopted. Many others remained without any alteration, and altogether this meeting was far more satisfactory and successful than the former; the contrast between the attendance of Provincial and London brethren was strikingly in favour of the former, and if the latter are not satisfied with what took place, they will only have themselves to blame. As it seems impossible to obtain anything like a unanimous feeling amongst them to fight their own battles, it is hopeless for one or two individuals to take upon themselves the thankless task, thus being deemed obnoxious and troublesome, causing ill-feeling amongst friends, for which no occasion ever existed.

Yours fraternally,

P.M. 1607.

THE INSTITUTION AT CROYDON.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I am not unmindful of the interest taken in Masonic matters once a week by the Evening News, a paper I read and often enjoy. I know the writer of the "column" by repute, but I have not the pleasure of his acquaintance.

It appears, Sir, I have excited the ire of the writer referred to; it may be also that I have offended Bro. Terry. I intended no such offence. There is not a word in my letter which appeared in your last issue reflecting upon the treatment of the inmates of the "Institution." I called the houses there Almshouses, and still maintain that that is a proper name for them. My argument went to show that the cost of the "Institution," meaning of course the houses in question, was in disproportion to their real value, and that it would be better to allow all the recipients of the Benevolent Fund a fixed sum of money, to enable them either to live in their own homes or with their friends, so that they might "be free in the sight of the world from the badge of dependence." I do not question for one moment the assertion that the inmates are kindly treated. I have said nothing to the contrary, nor do I wish to imply censure of any kind on the management.

Digitized by Google

Is it not a fact, however, that the inmates of the "Institution" are there because of their change from better to worse circumstances? and are they not in the eyes of the world as much recipients of charity as the inmates of any almhouses in the country? It seems to me that the writer in the Evening News takes up the position of a man without a shirt who buttons up his coat to hide his nakedness. It is nonsense to talk about charity in this case being optional; it is optional in every case—just "Hobson's choice." Necessity forces effort, and wherever and in whatever form relief is offered urgency as a rule compels acceptance. The question is, What is the best way to afford assistance to a suffering brother or his widow without openly recalling to their minds the alteration in circumstances? The Benevolent Fund does this in a way that need not be known beyond those immediately concerned; whereas almshouses are constant sign posts, pointing to the fact that they are homes for decayed people. I am not arguing against almshouses per se, only in favour of the higher mode of giving relief, which seems to be more consonant with the character and high aims of the Craft. As a further reason I have suggested that the end desired might be obtained at a less cost, not only in money, but also in self-respect, by the adoption of the practice now pursued in the case of the Benevolent Fund. God forbid that I should cast reproach upon any unfortunate Brother or those belonging to him. I would rather lift them up, and that is my object. In dealing with the question I am obliged to use plain terms, not with the idea of hurting the feelings of any brother, nor yet of casting reflections upon the management of the "Institution" at Croydon; but simply to show that the expenditure is not prudent in principle, and in that sense the Almshouses are a "white elephant."

I am, Dear Sir and Brother,

Yours fraternally,

WATCHMAN.

"PRICKING A WINDBAG."

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Attacked on two sides for what I have not said, renders it necessary that I should trouble you with a second letter this week. My first I had hoped would have appeared in your last issue, so that the misrepresentations of the writer in the Evening News might at once have been met with a counterblast. Perhaps I was too late, Mr. Editor, and that you will now grant me a hearing against my accuser, who seems to be not only thin-skinned, but to be a partizan as well.

As might have been expected, Bro. Perceval's charitable (?) mode of dealing with opponents has been applied to myself, and I am forthwith dubbed a member of the House Committee of the Girls' School. He thinks me capable of adopting the mean method, under a nom de plume, of sounding my own trumpet, and attacking my opponents behind a hedge. In the "innocence of my mind" I never thought of such a thing. How wise Bro. Perceval is—as wise as the fabled serpent, if not as innocent as the sucking dove. Unfortunately for Bro. Perceval his suspicions with regard to myself are utterly baseless; there is not a scintilla of fact to warrant them, and he stands convicted of being, in this instance at least, a leader as blind as was Bartimæus of old. I am not, nor ever was, a member of any committee or board connected with Grand Lodge or with Masonic Charitable Institutions; I am neither a member of any clique, nor the slave of any ruling person or body. I hold no brief for any person or party, nor do I consult any one when I consider I am at liberty to form my own conclusions, and I am entirely free from prejudices and personal jealousies. But supposing I did belong to the House Committee, or to any other Committee, how does that alter the force of anything I have said? Are my arguments sound? Do I speak the truth in sober earnestness? Those are the questions that Bro. Perceval has to meet; not "Who is he? What is his position? Take away the gilt of office, of wealth, of social standing, and how much dross does the remainder too often represent? If it will please Bro. Perceval, I may say that I am a P.M. of my Lodge, and at the close of my year of office I was presented with a jewel, of which I am proud, and still prouder of the esteem in which I have reason to believe I am held by the brethren of my mother Lodge, whose good I have ever sought, and the work of which I have the credit of discharging with fervency and zeal. So much for my bona fides; I shall not return to them if I can help it. I have not sought the infliction, and am sorry to be compelled to say so much of myself. The ground is clear so far as my personality is concerned, and all I ask is for a fair hearing, and no favour, for justice and Masonic equality.

I pass by Bro. Perceval's reflections about my inconsistency, and the wisdom or unwisdom of "greasing a horse's tooth," with the observation that the whole spirit of my remarks has been misrepresented. It is a matter of opinion as to the real value of the land adjoining the Girls' School, and I am not anxious to defend my own; but it is a notorious fact that it is easier to get a large sum by methods well known to the managers of Institutions than it is to get a small amount by a mere statement of fact. To give a broad illustration: how many persons unloose their purse-strings after partaking of a good dinner and generous wine who would not think of giving a farthing under ordinary circumstances? Apply this principle in the case at issue, and the inference is plain. If absolute merit determined results there would be less injustice in the world; if men were always guided by pure reason and righteousness the millennium would be at hand. As the conscience wants a spur, so does the heart want expanding, and that is often done by force of example and by other methods I need not dwell upon; legitimate enough, I dare say, but not in accordance with that high-toned morality so often aspired to but never attained.

I have disposed of the optional theory in my other letter, as well as the insinuation about the treatment of the inmates of the—well, what shall I call those buildings at Croydon so very much like other buildings called Almshouses? Suppose I call them the Asylum, I am met with this difficulty—what Asylum? For the insane or for the poor? If I call them a Home, the term implies Charity. Any name would do among the Craft, but unfortunately bricks and mortar cannot be hidden, like the Warrant of a Lodge, in a tin case; and men and women walking about are something more tangible to their neighbours, and the world generally, than the spots on the sun. Granted that the inmates of the buildings erected by the generosity of our Masonic forefathers, and kept up with such noble zeal by the present generation, are treated with all the respect and consideration due to them, as if they were still in the hey-day of prosperity; granted that everything possible is done to make their lot as happy as if no misfortune had befallen them, the fact remains clear to themselves and to the world that they are recipients of charity. My contention is, that the result is not worth the cost, and that the end of real charity could best be obtained by helping to support the distressed Brother or his widow in a real and not a sentimental independence. If it causes pain to the inmates of the buildings at Croydon to call them Almshouses, then it is quite clear that their sensitive natures can never be satisfied whatever name is used. So long as the outward sign of charity stands open to the gaze of the world, the sting will remain; and if this sign costs a large sum of money that could be used with more consideration for the feelings of the recipients of relief and with the laws of economy, then I think I am the true friend of the distressed, and not those maudlin sympathisers who would strain at a gnat and swallow a camel; who trail a red herring across the scent and arouse suspicions I am not willing either to assert or believe.

If Bro. Perceval cannot see any difference between the Schools and the Almshouses, I am afraid nothing I can say will enlighten him. If he can harmonise the position of the sailors with regard to Greenwich Hospital and that of the inmates of the Asylum at Croydon, he can do what to most people appears impossible; but perhaps Br. Perceval, like the late Earl Russell, is equal to anything, even to the command of the Channel.

Probably, on another occasion, I may trouble you with a few figures for the present,

I am, Dear Sir and Brother,

Yours fraternally,

WATCHMAN.

RANDOM NOTES AND REFLECTIONS.

AMERICA affords some striking instances of the opportunities the country gives to men who honestly and ardently labour to rise to distinction. Here is an interesting case in point. Brother Cornelius Moore was born in 1806, on the bank of the Delaware river. Until sixteen years of age he resided on a farm, and was then apprenticed to a blacksmith, until he was twenty-one. In his leisure he cultivated his mind and qualified himself for the post of teacher, which he filled at Zanesville, Ohio. While there, he studied the law, and was admitted to the bar. While practising his profession in 1844, he contracted a disease of the throat and had to desist from public speaking. In 1845, having relinquished his profession, he removed to Cincinnati, and there began the publication of the Masonic Review, which he continued to edit until 1876. The war in 1861-65 ruined his business and reduced him to poverty. The bitterness of this fact lies in the recollection that when Brother Moore died there were nearly thirty thousand dollars due to him for subscriptions to the Masonic Review, which have never been collected. A more glaring case of injustice has never come under our notice, although we know full well the difficulties attending Masonic journalism. Brother Moore died at Windsor, Ontario, on the 3rd June last, and it is satisfactory to learn that his closing days were marked by the exercise of that charity which eases the path to the grave. He was a thorough Mason, well informed in the literature and law of the Craft, and was much beloved.

Digitized by Google

—:o:—

Too much liberty invariably heralds license. Where one ends and the other begins has always been a crucial test; it is rarely, if ever, defined in such a way as to command general assent, and it cannot be determined to a mathematical nicety. Tradition and custom often supply the place of written laws, and this is particularly the case in Freemasonry. Unfortunately in America the theory of liberty enters into all the relations of life, and although the members of the Craft in that country may have an affection for the mother country in Masonry as well as in other matters, yet they carry their love of independence to the extreme. They put Masonic rights on a par with State rights, and institute Grand Lodges upon that basis. The result has been great divergence of practice, the lowering of authority, the multiplication of degrees, and the formation of clandestine Lodges. These are the necessary outcome of the principle, and so long as there is the burning desire for freedom, so long as men are impatient of control, and each man becomes a law unto himself, so long will there be the maximum of divergence of thought and action. We know it is difficult to go back, to consolidate authority; but there cannot be a doubt that the longer a remedy is deferred, the greater the evil and the risk will become. Anarchy is the result of license, and disruption the consequence. There must be a supreme authority, and the sooner that end is attained the better. We should say that the coloured Grand Lodges of the North, the Grand Lodges of Ontario and New South Wales are regarded by the Florida brethren as spurious.

By the ruling of the Grand Master of Georgia, "the loss of an eye is no impediment to being made a Mason, if the applicant is otherwise found worthy." Brother Parvin, Grand Secretary Iowa, endorses this judgment, and adds:

In our list of acquaintances we number friends who have seen more of the teaching and effects of Masonry with one eye, and to-day see further into the grand plans for the promulgation of its teachings, and the exemplifications of its practice, than a dozen Grand Masters we can name, who have decided that all such men should be cast over amongst owls and bats, as being unfit and unworthy to be made Masons. In the name of all the gods, when will this absurd doctrine be exploded? that it is body, not mind; hands, not heart; heels, rather than head; that constitutes a man a fit subject for Freemasonry?

Some of our American brethren are very much exercised as to the physical condition of candidates for Freemasonry, and an alleged infringement of the law in Pennsylvania has led to the offending—that is, the maimed—brother being expelled from the Lodge. It was also recommended that the Master of the Lodge in which the offender was initiated should be expelled the Craft, but this harsh sentence does not appear to have been carried out.

—:o:—

Differences of practice are permitted in the case of non-essentials, but where a principle is involved, then it behoves the brethren to pause before departing from what at least ought to be a landmark of the Craft. In America it is stated "that the acting Warden, in the absence of the Master, assumes all the prerogatives of the Master, and is the Master ad interim." In the absence of both Master and Senior Warden, the Junior Warden becomes the "acting Warden" for the time being, and therefore Master pro tem. In England and Canada the rule is to place a Past Master in the East, and under no circumstances to allow either Warden to act as Master. This, no doubt, is the right method; at any rate it is consistent, for a Master is in possession of secrets which the Wardens cannot know, because they have not completed the education necessary to fill the chair of King Solomon. We can understand the greater including the less, but we certainly do not approve of the reversal of this order in Freemasonry.

In these days of unbelief and utilitarianism it is refreshing to come across such a bold and manly utterance of truth as was made by Brother S. B. Dick, Most Worshipful Grand Master of Pennsylvania, which claims to be the oldest Masonic jurisdiction in the United States. At the Quarterly Communication of September last he said:

The fundamental truths of religion upon which our Fraternity was founded, and of which it was almost the sole repository in the remote past, are so far parts of its very constitution that it cannot exist without them. Masonry without God is a body without a soul; an empty casket, from which the jewel it was meant to contain has been taken away. It has no longer any reason to exist.

There is no doubt about Bro. Dick's opinions on religion and Freemasonry, and yet there is nothing narrow or bigotted in his statement. He fearlessly asserts a principle, and leaves the followers of creeds to find their own mode of worship. Brother Theodore Sutton Parvin, Grand Secretary Iowa, in his last report, says:—

It is a recognised law in Masonry that no Atheist can be made a Mason. The law should be equally established and recognised, and when a Mason professes Atheism he should be promptly expelled.

This is outspoken enough, and hints pretty clearly that when a man becomes a Mason and takes the obligation, he must have no mental reservations, and if he lapses into unbelief he must accept the penalties that follow. According to the decision of Bro. E. Anderson, Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Florida, "it is contrary to the spirit and teaching of Freemasonry to transact any business or work on the Lord's Day, except on funeral occasions, or for some charitable work which cannot be postponed." We merely quote this as another instance of the feeling that prevails among our brethren across the Atlantic.

A most interesting and affecting episode comes from Florida. When the yellow fever broke out in Pensacola, in August of last year, it made sad havoc, especially amongst new comers who were not acclimatised. Escambia Lodge, No. 15, seeing the necessity for action, began the noble work of charity, and carried on relief operations with a vigour and effect which clearly demonstrated that they had learned the true lesson of Masonry, and by their actions gave abundant evidence of the faith that was in them. The help of other Lodges, not only in Florida, but in other jurisdictions, was sought and readily accorded, and thus, by combined aid, a grand and beneficent work was accomplished. While the members of the Fraternity had first claim to the relief afforded, it was not confined to them; all classes of the community shared in the work of humanity, and many a cowan blessed the Masonic hand that came to his rescue.

It would be strange if, out of so many cases that came under the notice of the self-constituted relief board, there should not be some of a particularly striking character. There was one such at any rate at Pensacola, and we cannot do better than give the story in the Grand Master's (Bro. Anderson's) own words. He says:—

"A poor family, consisting of father, mother, and four young children, were among the sick. The father, a stranger, was a Mason from Michigan. They were faithfully cared for, but the parents both died, leaving their four little ones, aged from four to ten years, orphans. They were cared for until the epidemic was passed, and the quarantine raised, and then, provided with all that they required, they were started for their distant home in Michigan. The oldest boy was furnished with railroad tickets, and with an open letter from Escambra Lodge, stating who the little travellers were, and commending them to the care of all good men and Masons. They met with kindness and help from one end of their journey to the other, and were safely delivered to their friends. At many points they were not allowed to pay anything for their meals, and money was collected among their fellow passengers for their benefit."

At the monthly Committee meeting of the Royal Masonic Benevolent Institution, held on Wednesday last, at Freemasons' Hall, Brother Edgar Bowyer presided. Brother Terry reported that the Summer Entertainment to the inmates of the Institution at Croydon, on Tuesday week, was very successful, and that the Supreme Council, 33°, had presented the Institution with several gifts, which greatly contributed to the success of the entertainment. A letter was ordered to be written to the Supreme Council thanking them for their liberality. Half her late husband's annuity was granted to the widow of an annuitant, and seven candidates for next election were placed on the list. It was stated that a son of the late collector of the Institution, Bro. W. Lane, was a candidate for the Boys' School, and his mother trusted the Committee would assist him with their votes. Amongst those present were Bros. Everett, Bulmer, Moore, Cubitt, Maudslay, Case, Atkins, Stean, Tattershall, Jabez Hogg, Daniel, Smith, Webb, Perceval, W. Hilton, H. Massey, John J. Berry, Adlard, James Willing jun., J. Wordsworth, and R. Turtle Pigott.

PERCY LODGE OF INSTRUCTION, No. 198.*

THE following summary of the work done by the members of the Percy Lodge of Instruction, with particulars of the attendances of the Members during the years 1881-82, has been supplied us by an esteemed correspondent. It may be said of the Percy, it is the oldest Lodge of Instruction in London, it having been established some 100 years since. During its early existence it claims to have been supported by many eminent Masons. The late Brother Stephen Barton Wilson was identified with the work of this Lodge of Instruction for many years.

The average attendance of members for the year 1881-2 has been exceptionally good in comparison with others, being 20 per night of meeting. We are told this places it at the head of the list as regards attendances at Lodges of Instruction. The business transacted during the above period (38 meeting nights) was as follows:—

REHEARSALS.

Ceremony of Installation		2
,,	Raising	19
,,	Passing	12
,,	Initiation	18

The Fifteen Sections were worked twice; and sixty-one Sections were worked at various times.

Since the Lodge has been resuscitated (seven years since) the following amounts have been paid to the Institutions out of Lodge Funds:—

Royal Masonic Benevolent Institution	29	14	0
	£39	3	0

Two changes only have taken place in the Officers of the Lodge; Bro. C. Lorkin was elected Treasurer in the place of Bro. R. H. Halford, who held the office for six years; and Bro. A. W. Fenner accepted the office of Secretary four years since, on the retirement of Bro. C. K. Killick jun., who held that office three years. Bro. R. Pearcy is the Preceptor, and has held that office since the Lodge was re-formed.

The Lodge has never shifted its quarters, it having been held in the same room, where the ceremony of Consecration was rehearsed by Bro. James Terry, nearly seven years since.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF ESSEX.

OUR contemporary the Essex Standard, of Saturday last, after giving a very interesting report of the late meeting of Provincial Grand Lodge of Essex, thus describes Parkeston, the embryo township whereat the meeting was held:—

In connection with this meeting, it may not be out of place to give an idea to the large numbers who do not at present know of its existence, where and what Parkeston is. The designation of this nucleus of a town as seen upon the time tables is "Parkeston Quay," and it is situate on the Stour, somewhere about two miles from Harwich, between which there is a local service of trains every half-hour. It is at present little more than a very large station, a commodious and handsomely-fitted hotel, and a very long quay with the necessary bonded warehouses, stores, and general offices. Though slightly further from the sea, the quay is more approachable and serves as a much better point of departure than the Harwich Pier, and the tidal train is able to leave Liverpool-street half-an-hour later than when it ran to Harwich. From Harwich Pier a good view of Parkeston Quay can be obtained, and its advantageous position fully appreciated. Standing well out into the river on piles, the large quantity of land reclaimed from the bed of the Stour is better comprehended; this, we understand, amounted to about 500 acres, the greater part of which will eventually become a large township; besides the quay and warehouses, there is a perfect network of railways and sidings on what was heretofore the bed of the river. At the quay, in addition to the space required by the Company's boats, there is room alongside for three or four steamers, and these could discharge simultaneously, every appliance in the shape of steam cranes being available for the purpose of quick delivery. Railway waggons run right along the quay to the ship's side, and from thence to the main line, so that goods can be sent from the ship's hold there and then to any part of the United Kingdom. There are over five miles of siding, in which 1000 loaded trucks can stand, should it happen to suit the convenience of some consignee who was not at the moment ready to order them elsewhere. The business offices of the Company, and the Custom House, are all constructed on the most approved plan for meeting the exigencies of trade, sleeping accommodation being provided for the Government servants who have to take their turn on night duty, with reading-rooms, &c., for their use as well.

As regards the Hotel, no expense has been spared in order to make it one of the most comfortable and best appointed in the kingdom. The most approved appliances of modern science have been utilized in the lighting, heating, and ventilating; the sanitary arrangements are as near perfect as the best sanitary engineers in the world could suggest, and the general arrangements are in accordance with the plans and directions of gentlemen of vast experience in hotel construction and management. The rooms are choicely furnished, and have a splendid sight of the river on the one side, with an attractive view of country on the other, and will probably become a great favourite with continental visitors who choose this route. Passengers can alight from the train on to the platform, and proceed bag and baggage direct on board the steamer, or enter the hotel from the waiting-rooms. The principal entrances to the Hotel are those which lead directly from the pier and platform respectively. Whichever entrance the visitor takes he must pass the manager's office before he can go to any other part of the hotel. This office, by means of electric bells, speaking tubes, &c., is in direct communication with every part of the house. On the ground floor are the large dining room, the hotel bar, and smoke room, and the coffee room, all of which are elegantly fitted. On the first floor, on either side of a long concrete corridor extending the whole length of the building, are bed-rooms, suites of apartments, drawing-rooms, reading-rooms, bath-rooms, &c. The drawing-rooms are exceedingly elegant, and the bed-rooms, which are lofty, well-lighted, and ventilated on an improved principle, are furnished in one uniform style with pile carpets, walnut furniture of a special design, handsome French bedsteads, &c. The suites are very conveniently arranged for families, and are furnished with excellent taste. The bath-rooms and lavatories are well appointed, and are conveniently situated. The servants' apartments are quite distinct from the other portions of the hotel. The culinary arrangements are on a most elaborate scale, ample provision having been made, not only for the supply of the hotel, but also for the ships' cooking, which will, as far as possible, be carried on here. In the basement are the stores and an extensive range of cellarage. There is also a large boiler for the supply of steam and hot water to all parts of the house, and an engine for generating the electricity with which the Works throughout are lighted—the quay and large warehouses by the arc system, and the hotel and waiting-rooms, lavatories, &c., on the incandescent principle, the beautiful Swan lamps being employed. Electric bells are fitted to all the rooms. The best known appliances for extinguishing fire are fitted all over the premises, by Messrs. Shand and Mason, under the superintendence of Captain Shaw, chief of the London Fire Brigade. The general arrangement of the building has been carried out under the direction of Mr. Bolton, the General Superintendent of the Hotel Department of the Great Eastern Railway, a gentleman of many years' experience in the management of first-class hotels, and the practical knowledge which he has brought to bear upon the subject will, without doubt, add very considerably to the comfort of the visitors, as well as facilitate the work of the staff, and thereby tend to the economic management of the hotel.

The Station Booking Office, in which Provincial Grand Lodge was held on Wednesday, is a handsome and well-proportioned apartment, with both booking and telegraphic accommodation. On either side are the commodious waiting and refreshment rooms. To the right from the quay are the second-class rooms—and on the left are the first-class rooms: in both cases separate rooms being reserved for ladies. These are all very elegantly furnished. In the former the chairs and lounges are covered with drab horsehair, while the furniture in the first-class rooms is in real morocco leather. The floors are laid with granite linoleum and Bokhara rugs—the ladies' rooms with handsome pile carpet. A large refreshment buffet is provided in each of the general waiting rooms, and these communicate with each of the ladies' rooms by means of small sliding doors. The fittings are all on the most approved principle, and are so arranged that chops, steaks, soups, and all kinds of refreshments, hot or cold, can be had at a few minutes' notice. In connection with each waiting-room is a handsomely-fitted lavatory supplied with hot and cold water.

The magnitude of the undertaking in which the Directors of the Great Eastern Company have engaged may be inferred from the fact that upwards of £810,000 had been expended to the close of June 1883, upon docks, steamboats, and Parkeston. The great bulk of this expenditure has been made upon the Continental steamboat undertaking, and even now the return realised upon it is moderately good, the profit acquired in the six months ending 30th June having been £13,808. Moreover, the Continental traffic is improving rapidly, the gross receipts of the half-year ending 30th June 1883 having been £83,133, as compared with £71,302 in the corresponding period of 1882. If this result was attained with a limited number of steamers at work, still better things may be anticipated when the Company's enlarged Continental fleet has been brought into full operation.

The monthly meeting of the General Committee of the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys was held on Saturday last, at Freemasons' Hall, when there were present Bros. Raynham W. Stewart in the chair, Tyrrell, Joyce Murray, Dr. Ramsay, Alfred Williams, S. B. Wilson, Fredk. Adlard, E. C. Massey, C. F. Matier, W. Mann, Edward Baxter, Geo. P. Gillard, and Fredk. Binckes (Secretary). The minutes of the General Committee of the 7th ult. were read and confirmed, and those of the Quarterly Court of the 16th, and the House Committee of the 20th ult. were read for information. The report of the Audit Committee was read and adopted, and ordered to be entered on the minutes. The Chairman was authorised and requested to sign cheques. There was one petition, which was approved. A grant of £5 was voted to a late pupil of the Institution. Bro. Binckes reported that the exact financial receipts from the Festival were £23,050. He also reported that the purchase of £2000 India four per cent. stock, authorised at the last General Committee, had been made at the price of 103⅛, the outlay, including commission, being £2,075. Brother Binckes also reported that, allowing for one candidate withdrawn, there would be sixty-three applicants at next election, and that the vacancies were twenty. It was stated that the Preparatory Building Fund now amounted to £8,000. Up to the present time £16,172 had been received; of this £10,381 had been placed to the General Fund, and £5,791 to the Building Fund. Upon the motion of Brother Raynham Stewart, of which due notice was given at the last General Committee, it was unanimously resolved that the sum of £125 be added to Brother Binckes's salary, and £25 to the clerk's salary, for the years 1883 and 1884, to be paid out of the interest received from the investment of the Building Fund during that period. Brother Binckes returned thanks for himself and on behalf of his assistant for this mark of the Committee's appreciation of their services. The meeting then adjourned.

The Evening News says the Craft, as a body, will be sorry to hear that Sir Erasmus Wilson Past Grand Deacon is suffering from cataract. The services Sir E. Wilson has rendered to the Order, besides that rendered to the nation in bringing over Cleopatra's Needle, one of the very early works of Freemasonry, will ever entitle his name to a foremost place in the annals of the Craft, and it is with the very deepest regret that we have to record that such an affliction has befallen him.

The Right Hon. the Earl of Lathom, Deputy Grand Master of England, Prov. Grand Master of West Lancashire, will shortly pay another visit to Canada, and in consequence of his absence, the P.G. Lodge meeting of West Lancashire, usually held in October, will not take place until November.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF SUFFOLK.

LAYING OF A FOUNDATION STONE AT BURY.

A SPECIAL Provincial Grand Lodge of this Province was summoned to be held at Bury St. Edmunds, for the purpose of laying the corner stone of the buildings for the enlargement of the school premises attached to St. John's Church, on Thursday, the 2nd instant. The Lodge was held in the Schoolroom, Well-street, and in the absence of the Right Worshipful Provincial Grand Master Bro. Lord Waveney, was opened in ample form by the Deputy Provincial Grand Master, Bro. the Rev. Charles J. Martyn, assisted by Bro. E. J. Griffiths P.P.G.C. acting D.P.G.M., George Thompson P.G.S.D. acting P.G.S.W., Grimsey P.G.J.W., N. Tracy P.G. Secretary, W. Clarke P.G.P. and P.G.D.C., H. Wright P.P.G.P., D. Gill P.G.S.D., J. R. Thompson P.P.G.S.B., W. Armstrong P.P.G.S.D., T. F. Lucia P.P.J.W., W. Mackney P.G.S.B., and Charles Emerson P.G.A.D.C. The Presence Book was also signed by the following brethren:—A. Laughton P.M. 1589, W. Chapman W.M. P.G.S., George Guiver, Henry Mantz, Z. Cooper, Horace Lucia, W. G. Clarke J.D., and John Hewett Tyler 1592 F. W. Jennings S.W. 1224, W. Pead J.W., R. J. Symonds I.G., and C. C. Gooch Tyler 1003, and Fred. C. Atkinson 376. The Provincial Grand Secretary (Bro. Tracy) announced that letters of apology for non-attendance had been received from the Provincial Grand Senior Warden, Provincial Grand Superintendent of Works, the Rev. P. L. Cautley P.G.C., and Lord Henniker. The Acting Prov. Grand Master stated that he had also received a letter from the Prov. Grand Master, regretting his inability to attend, and asking him to kindly perform the ceremony, which, with the permission of the Lodge, he would now proceed to do. A procession was then formed in the following order:—Tylers, with drawn swords; Visiting Brethren; Lodges according to their numbers; a Corncopia with Corn and Ewers with Wine and Oil, borne by P.M.'s; P.P.G. Officers according to rank; P.G. Secretary, with Book of Constitutions; P.G. Treasurer, bearing vial containing the coins to be deposited in the stone; the Column of the P.G.J.W., with plumb rule; the Column of the P.G.S.W., borne by a P.M.; the Acting P.G.S.W. with level; the P.G. Chaplain, with the Sacred Law on a cushion; the Acting D.P.G.M., with square; the P.G.S.B.; the Wor. the acting P.G. Master. In this order the brethren, headed by the Victoria fife and drum band, marched to the site, where they were received by the Vicar of St. John's (Bro. the Rev. C. H. C Baker), who presented the acting Prov. Grand Master with a trowel, and on behalf of the Building Committee asked him to lay the stone. The acting Prov. Grand Master delivered an address, in which he called upon the "men and brethren here assembled to behold this ceremony" to know that they were "lawful Masons, true and faithful to the laws of their country, and united by solemn obligation to erect handsome buildings, and to serve God, the Great Architect of the Universe. They had among them concealed from the eyes of all men secrets which no man had discovered, but which secrets were lawful and honourable, and not repugnant to the laws of God and man. They were entrusted in peace and honour to the Masons of ancient time, and having been faithfully transmitted to them, it was their duty to convey them unimpaired to the latest posterity. Unless their calling had been good and honourable it would not have lasted for so many centuries, nor would they have had so many illustrious brethren in their Order ready to promote its interests." The Prov. Grand Chaplain, the Rev. R. C. M. Rouse, then offered prayer, after which the vessel containing the coins, and records were deposited in the receptacle provided for it, and the stone was set. As the stone was being lowered a hymn was sung by the St. John's choir. The acting Prov. Grand Master proved the stone with the plumb, rule, level and square, and having declared it well and truly laid, scattered corn and poured wine and oil over it. The Prov. Grand Chaplain then offered prayer, and the brethren re-formed procession and marched to the church, headed by the choir, singing the processional hymn, "The Church's one foundation." A special form of service was used. The lesson, taken from Prov. ii., 1-10, was read by the Rev. E. J. Griffiths. The sermon was preached by the Prov. Grand Chaplain, the Rev. R. C. M. Rouse, from the words, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." (Prov. xxii. 6). In the course of an eloquent and earnest address the Prov. Grand Chaplain said they had that day been engaged in laying the foundation-stone of a building which he hoped would be a source of great benefit to many generations. They could not have had a more suitable occasion for laying the stone with Masonic rites, because they, as Masons, were successors to those who, from time immemorial, had been associated with the erection of buildings intended for the benefit of mankind, the advancement of the world, and the honour and glory of the most High. Therefore, that they might not be unworthy successors, it behoved them heartily to respond to such a call as this, and invoke the blessing of the Great Architect of the Universe upon this work of benevolence. The high value they, as Masons, set on education, was evinced in a most practical way by the noble Masonic Schools they supported, at an annual cost of more than £25,000, and he asked them on that occasion to give further proof of it by contributing with true Masonic liberality to St. John's Infant School. At the conclusion of the service the brethren returned in procession to the Lodge-room, where the acting Prov. Grand Senior Warden proposed a vote of thanks to the Prov. Grand Chaplain for his admirable discourse. The acting Grand Master heartily seconded the proposition, which was carried and ordered to be entered on the minutes. The Prov. Grand Chaplain, Bro. the Rev. R. C. M. Rouse, in response, expressed the earnest hope that the work they had inaugurated that day might prove a great blessing and a means of usefulness for years to come. The Lodge was then closed in ancient form. A luncheon, to which ladies and non-Masons were invited, was subsequently held at the Angel Hotel, the D.P.G.M. presiding, supported on the right by Bro. the Rev. E. J. Griffiths P.P.G.C., and on the left by Mr. Cockerell, Recorder of Sudbury. Most of the brethren, whose names are recorded above, attended, and, in addition, there were also present—Bro. Major-General Cecil Ives, Bro. W. P. Eversley (South Eastern Circuit), Bro. W. A. Bowler P.M. 51, Mr. Charles Oliver, Churchwarden at St. John's, Mr. Jos. Robinson, builder and architect, &c. The D.P.G.M proposed the Queen and H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, Grand Master of England, and the Pro Grand Master (Lord Carnarvon), the Deputy Grand Master (Lord Lathom), and the Grand Officers Past and Present. He briefly alluded to the work of the Revision of the Book of Constitutions; and said, admirable as those Constitutions were, yet, like everything else, improvements in some things were necessary. He coupled with the toast the name of Bro. Clarke a Past Grand Officer. Bro. Clarke P.G.P. briefly responded. The Deputy Prov. Grand Master then proposed the health of the Right Worshipful Prov. Grand Master, Lord Waveney, whose absence they all deplored. Bro. B. P. Grimsey P.G.J.W. proposed the health of the D.P.G.M. Bro. the Rev. C. J. Martyn, which he was sure they would as heartily receive as the toast which had preceded it. However much, in every possible way, they might respect, esteem, and regard their Right Worshipful Provincial Grand Master, he was sure that not in a single instance were they lacking in esteem and respect for their D.P.G.M. The Deputy Provincial Grand Master, in responding, said he was exceedingly obliged for the kind way in which his name had been received, and if anything were wanting to stir him up to greater zeal in the cause of Freemasonry, it would be the kind reception which he invariably met in the Province of Suffolk. It was now his duty to propose what he might fairly call the toast of the day, Success and Prosperity in every sense to St. John's schools, the foundation stone of the enlargement of which they had been laying that morning. He quite endorsed the observations of the Provincial Grand Chaplain that unless a child had a thorough religious education his learning would do more harm than good—he was sent into the world a clever man, but not a man whose influence was for good throughout the world. If they only educated the head they could not expect good results to follow. Bro. the Rev. C. H. C. Baker responded, and thanked the Provincial Grand Lodge for having honoured him with its presence. The D.P.G.M. proposed the health of the Visitors, coupled with the name of Mr. Cockerell, whom he regretted to say was not a Mason, but was living in a state of darkness, and they would be only too glad if the scales should fall from his eyes, and that he should behold the light of Masonry, for then he would know what a good and practical thing it was. If he would consent to be initiated he would undertake to bring some excessively hot pokers and give him such a specimen of Masonry as he never dreamt of. Mr. Cockerell, in response, thanked the brethren for the cordial reception given to the toast of the Visitors, and, passing on to speak of the importance of religious training, said education without religion was simply educating people in crime. The D.P.G.M. next proposed the Ladies, on whose behalf Bro. Jennings replied. This concluded the toast list.—East Anglian Daily Times.

INNOVATION IN MASONRY.

THE BANQUET.

AT this season of the year, when time hangs heavily on the hands of many of us, it is not out of place to look back upon the past, to call to mind occasions when we have lost opportunities which appeared to promise well, or to think over what might have been, had events happened otherwise than they did. How many a retiring W.M. is there, who can look back upon the evenings he has spent as ruler of his Lodge, and not feel that he might have done better in this or that particular if he had had longer time at his disposal in which to elaborate a speech, or perform some task, which, by virtue of his office, fell to his lot to perform; while, on the other hand, how many brethren are there who cannot remember some well-prepared evening's entertainment being upset, in consequence of the lateness of the hour preventing the programme from being carried out, many of those who attended having been compelled to leave even before the toast list was fairly started upon? Our present object is to consider whether some innovation is not possible which will allow of an ordinary Lodge meeting being brought to a conclusion at a reasonable hour, and at the same time afford ample opportunity for the several toasts on the list to receive proper attention, while the majority of the brethren are yet present. The amount of time available for the Lodge banquet, and after proceedings in small places, is frequently governed by the arrangements of the local railway service, while in large towns numbers of the brethren having long journeys to make before reaching home, are forced to leave early on that account, and thus we find that many a meeting is broken up before the programme is completed. This breaking up of a meeting must be very discouraging to the W.M. and rulers of the Lodge, who may have prepared speeches which they hoped to give to large audiences, or it may be that a most enjoyable Masonic entertainment had been arranged for, to listen to which only a very small number of brethren remained. Visitors of distinction, Officers, and others who it was intended should be called upon to reply to special toasts had to be passed over, and altogether the meeting, which gave promise of satisfaction to all, turned out really a failure. Can this be prevented? We think it can, but it must be by a radical change being introduced into our regular system. It is very certain that the amendment cannot be secured by making the hour of meeting earlier than at present; for even now, with the great amount of work to be got through, many of the Lodges are summoned at most inconveniently early hours. We must, therefore, find some means of hurrying on the banquet or toast list. The former is really beyond the control of the Lodge officials, so that the latter course is really the one from which we must hope for relief.

We recently had occasion to give particulars of a banquet which took place in Germany (not of a Masonic character) and then found, so the report stated, that the rule in that country was to give the toasts during the progress of the banquet. We were at once struck with the idea that such a course could be most conveniently applied to Masonic gatherings, and we yet fail to see any very serious objection to it. If it were adopted it would be possible to dispose of the usual preliminary toasts, at least, before the conclusion of the banquet, and that, too, without very much additional time being occupied, as there are invariably pauses between the courses long enough to allow of the proposal of a toast, or the reply of the brother associated with it. The banquet once concluded, the home toasts could at once be started upon, and it might then be possible to get fairly through the list before any great number of the brethren had been compelled to leave. How often is it that the toast of the Charities—one of the most important on the list, and yet usually found near the end—is proposed, and responded to, when more than half of the brethren have left, while it is almost the rule for the Officers, when their turn comes, to have to reply to empty benches? This might be prevented by the adoption of what, we are told, is the custom in Germany, and much more enjoyable evenings, because not so hurried, would be possible. Another improvement might follow the introduction of this innovation; the few who are given to long speech-making might, by arrangement, be called upon for their reply at a time when their remarks would be less wearisome. At all events we think that the innovation is worthy of a trial, and we shall be very pleased to hear the result if any of our readers decide on adopting it; we shall then be in a better position to judge of its ultimate success.

ANONYMOUS AUTHORSHIP.

AS an abstract question Anonymous Authorship is a knotty point. As a matter of fact, experience has shown that the advantages of anonymity are too great to warrant a change from the practice that is almost universal in journalism. The publication of a name, in some instances, gives power to the writer; but the bearers of great reputations are few compared with the vast majority whose title to be heard is the inherent value of their thoughts and style. Many a man has gained his first step on the ladder of fame by the force of his own individuality stamped upon his productions. His personality, instead of ensuring success, would, if known, most likely be the very means of destroying his chance. No doubt there are exceptions in the cases of men of genius. Probably the late Mr. Charles Dickens needed not the aid of secrecy to insure a hearing. He thought otherwise, and adopted the plan of submitting his first literary efforts to the test of a judgment unbiassed by personal considerations. Douglas Jerrold did the same, and discovered that he had the faculty of genius. In both instances the work made the names famous. It was the same in the case of Sir Walter Scott, who produced his earlier books anonymously. The list of authors and authoresses who have adopted the same course could be multiplied, but enough is here shown to prove that a name is not necessarily essential to power in writing. It might be added that in many instances the publication of the name of a writer might be fatal to the influence that would otherwise be exercised. The disclosure of the authorship of Junius' Letters would have robbed them of nearly all their sting. Those who knew the writer would easily find motives for his action, and those who did not know him would be ready to believe any ill-natured thing that might be said of him. We are not now urging that Junius was right; it is not necessary to judge him. He wrote powerfully, and it is no unfair inference to suppose that the secrecy of authorship lent interest, if not strength, to what he wrote. It should always be remembered that between persons or parties attacked by an unknown writer stood the publisher and the law. How severe the latter was up to a very few years ago need not be discussed. The vice of scurrilty is nothing like so prevalent as it used to be. The Grub Street type of pamphleteer is almost a thing of the past, and only exists in the shape of prints that no decent man would countenance. Even the lampoons of a former generation, written, as many of them were, by men of great ability, have now no counterpart, and the excrescences that occasionally disfigure polemical life are of a comparatively mild type indeed. There is a tendency to weigh what a man says and does; there is less questioning as to who a writer may be. His title to be heard rests upon what he produces, and not so much upon his rank, his name, or his fortune. Sometimes these favour an author, but there must be merit as well to gain a wide and acceptable hearing. Men who have secured high reputations which the fickleness of public opinion cannot injure or destroy may venture to sign their names to what they write; but these are comparatively few and consist of those who hold pronounced views on the subjects upon which they descant. Until they had reached the Olympian heights upon which they now stand, they were glad of the shadow of the mountain which concealed their persons, but did not prevent their sound from going forth. Many writers who need not fear publicity prefer the secrecy of the closet; they are content with the power they wield, and desire no popular applause. They shrink from being lionised, and they certainly do not court the abuse of the vulgar or the spite of the vindictive. There is less reason for the concealment of the names of writers in magazines; as a rule the papers are academical, and where they are not they are written in a cooler mental atmosphere, and in a style of deference to and respect for an opponent that is not usually followed in polemical discussions. Even in the case of magazines it is a question whether the anonymous writer does not gain the greater advantage, however mighty his antagonist may be. Both are bound by the same laws of courtesy, and the Editor will take good care that nothing personally offensive or libellous shall appear. He is responsible for the good conduct of the work over which he presides; he has charge of its honour, and in proportion as he guards his trust and secures good workmanship, so will be his own credit and the position his charge occupies in the literary world. He knows that to publish the names of some of his contributors would perhaps be injurious in some cases; in others it would be superfluous, for few would know them outside the circle of their acquaintances. A writer loses nothing by the practice of secrecy; indeed, in the majority of cases he is the gainer, for his work, done free from the gaze of the world, and the petty jealousies and envies of rivals, has earned him a reputation which nothing but his own act can forfeit. There is a time in the career of nearly all writers when anonymity is imperative; in the majority of cases it were better that the practice should be continued. When a man can run alone, when he has gained a name, there are plenty of publishers who would be glad to place his productions before the world, so that there would be no necessity to hide his light under a bushel.

Hitherto we have treated of authorship in connection, chiefly, with books and magazines. Many of the same reasons apply to newspaper writers, but there is one great difference. The work of the latter is ephemeral, while that of the former should be of a more lasting, if not of a permanent character. The newspaper writer, too, deals with the passions of men and parties, with current events, amidst heat and excitement. The writer of books and of magazine articles is under no such necessity; he, therefore, treats matters more philosophically and certainly has less regard for personality than the man whose duty it is to deal with men and parties. The more popular writer cannot very well have power without secrecy, and as the public are amply protected by safeguards, there is no harm done to any one. In the case of correspondents to newspapers the matter assumes another form. A letter sent to a newspaper has to run the gauntlet of the editor, whose duty it is to be satisfied that it contains neither scurrilous nor libellous matter, and that the writer supplies him with his name and address. That is all the editor claims, and if the subject treated be pertinent and courteous and there is room, it is usually inserted. The editor becomes sponsor for the bonâ fides of the writer so far as they are disclosed on the surface. He may, or he may not, agree with the views expressed, that is immaterial, but by inserting a letter he implies that the writer is entitled to be heard, and if he is satisfied what right have the public to exact more? No such right exists, and it amounts to little less than impertinence on the part of our correspondent, who chooses, of his own accord to sign his letters, to condemn his opponent because he deems it convenient to write under a feigned signature. Anonymity does not imply baseness or cowardice; often it signifies self-sacrifice. Where a name can be given and it is likely to add weight to a communication, then not only is it desirable that it should be published, but it would be weakness were it withheld. The publishing or not of a name is entirely at the discretion of the writer, and this is a wise arrangement. The weak are equal with the strong, provided their case is just. Their claim to be heard does not rest merely on social position; money does not enter into the matter. Rich and poor, learned and unlearned, stand on the same footing in the Republic of newspaper correspondence. There equality is practised in its completest sense, and the humblest can air his grievance without the fear of the tyranny of the oppressor, or the scorn of the wealthy. The opportunity afforded by newspapers to the aggrieved to assert their rights, to defend their interests is one of the noblest attributes of the Press. It equalises conditions to a very great extent, and it makes intelligence, intellectual power and righteousness the arbiters of disputes. The rich man, the learned pedant, the philosopher and man of science, the wealthy merchant, the magistrate, the Member of Parliament may sign their letters to the newspapers. Their very names would be sufficient against Hodge or Giles were he to append his signature to any complaint in which his powerful neighbours were concerned. Give Giles or Hodge, however, the chance of being heard without reference to his social position, and his case will rest upon its merits. Anonymity protects just exercise of a privilege. The same reasons, although to a less degree, apply to many Freemasons. There are brethren in the Craft far abler than scores who wriggle through the chair and are dubbed Past Masters, who have not the time for the drudgery of office, nor for qualifying themselves for the high duties of the Master of a Lodge. These are little known outside of their own small circle, but the better they are known the more they are respected. They have intelligence and power, and sometimes the desire to express their views. They shrink from publicity, and yet they are entitled to be heard. It would be unjust to shut their mouths because they desired to conceal their identity; whereas the blatent man, who owes his position in the Craft more to his loud-talking and ignorant assumptions, has no such scruples; indeed, he is rather proud than otherwise of having the opportunity of proclaiming to the Masonic world, and the whole world of Cowans, too, that he has got a handle to his name, and therefore speaks with authority. It is not the name or title that gives the right to be heard.

> The gond is but a guinea stamp,
> A man's a man for a' that.

Merit, and not rank and fortune, is the natural law of superiority; it is the very basis of the Craft, and upon that principle a newspaper editor ought to act. That he does so in most cases is proof that he recognises the principle, the value of which cannot be overestimated. In these columns we recognise no higher claim to be heard than the exercise of the principles upon which Freemasonry is founded, and these are Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity.

FREEMASONRY IN PORTUGAL.

THERE is one country where Masonic light has penetrated only with the greatest difficulty; for it was the seat of ignorance and superstition. This country was the paradise of monks, who there ceased not to build convents, and exercise the exclusive privilege of directing the minds of the King, the people, and his counsellors. That country is Portugal. From the Book of Constitution first published by the Grand Lodge in 1723, and at later periods to the extent of five separate editions, the last of which was in 1855, we learn that the Grand Lodge of London instituted at Lisbon, in 1735, a Provincial Grand Lodge, by the agency of Bro. George Gordon; but the seed was sown on very barren soil. In the matter of persecution, undergone by all that attempted to disseminate Freemasonry in this country, it stands without a rival, except Spain; but this condition has of late years very much changed.

The Inquisition, under the protection of the King, tracked every person from far and near who were suspected of being Freemasons. Thus two lapidaries, one named John Custos, originally a Protestant from Berne, Switzerland, and the other named Alex. James Monton, originally a Catholic from Paris, having expressed the desire, to see a Lodge organised in Lisbon, fell into the snares set by the "holy office" and were thrown into prison. The accusation against them, charged them with seeking to introduce a Freemason's Lodge in Portugal, in violation of the bull of the Pope, which condemned their doctrines as impious and a heresy, and all Freemasons as beasts, Sodomites, &c. Under the order of the Cardinal Dacunha, grand inquisitor, they submitted nine times in three months to the most abominable torture that is possible to imagine. Subsequently they were forced to assist at an auto da fe, and finally were condemned to the galleys for life. Thanks to the aid of English Freemasons, however, they were enabled to escape and seek refuge in England. There was no doubt a vast number of our brethren that were caught in the snares of the Inquisition and who died under the torture, but it is very difficult to ascertain anything about them. The Inquisition was no less severe with the natives of the country, for we find in 1776 two Portuguese nobles, Major D'Alincourt and Don D'Ornelles Parracao, were imprisoned and tortured because they were Freemasons, although all vestage of of Masonry had disappeared for twenty-five years.

In 1802 an inquest was ordered against Freemasons in Portugal, and all who were suspected by this inquest were charged with conspiracy against the King and the Church and sentenced to the galleys for life. These measures were severe, but we find in 1805 a Grand Orient at Lisbon, with a Grand Master named Egaz-Moniz, but its ramifications were not very extended. Dissolved after the events of 1814, it was formed again in 1817 and sought to animate some Lodges; but Freemasonry continued to inspire the monks with terror, and yielding to their solicitations, King John VI. issued a decree dated at Rio Janeiro, 30th March 1818, interdicting Freemasons from assembling together under pain of death, (Findel, Leipsic). We know nothing of the lives destroyed under this decree; there must have been some. About five years afterwards it was modified by another, which, dated at Lisbon, 20th June 1823, stated that it was issued in consequence of remonstrances upon the subject having been addressed to the Government by many of the resident amassadors. By the terms of the last decree, the penalty was changed from capital punishment to five years' labour in the galleys in Africa. No proof beyond mere suspicion was necessary to cause the arrest of persons who were immediately punished under the penalties of these edicts. Foreigners, as well as natives, were proceeded against without any attempt to disguise the act; or the least attention being given to the many protests made by the agents of their respective countries.

Notwithstanding these interdictions, however, as well as the cruelties which were exercised under their authority, a Masonic body was constituted at Lisbon under the title of the Grand Orient of Lusitania, and also a Supreme Council of the Scottish Rite. The later sovereigns of Portugal, without having revoked the prohibitionary decrees of Freemasonry appear to have tolerated the Fraternity, for there has been established another authority at Oporto under the name of Pattos-Mannel, and subsequently a Provincial Grand Lodge of Ireland.

We can well understand that in such a country as Spain and Rome the clergy rule or desire to rule everything, for it is to their interest to keep the people ignorant. Of late years our beloved Fraternity has progressed to a great extent, many new Lodges having sprung into existence, and are in a flourishing condition, but we entertain hopes for a grander extension of Freemasonry in these countries. —Hebrew Leader.

DUE THOUGHT AND EXAMINATION.

IT would be every way better if the important steps in life were more carefully considered. The majority of people act too much from impulse. They do not give due thought and examination to the various enterprises in which they engage, and consequently they often meet with bitter disappointment. Failing to make due investigation, they become involved in conditions not at all to their liking, and which they would have escaped by a less rash course of procedure. It is always best to consider where any given path is likely to lead, and the nature of its surroundings as well.

A man proposing to become a Mason should give some careful thought and enquiry to the matter. He should seek information as to the aims, tendencies, plans and methods of Masonry, that having a right appreciation of its character and purposes, he may understand the measure of responsibility which he assumes by an alliance with the Institution. He should make due investigations for the purpose of forming a correct judgment as to the whether or not he will be likely to be helped in life by establishing such new relations. There is no need that he should proceed recklessly in a matter of so much importance. Books are available which give abundant information as to the principles of the organization—which clearly show within what lines it operates and what is the general order of its procedure. An intelligent enquirer has only to consult manuals and published proceedings to learn the nature of Masonic teachings and obligations; and from such sources he may also gain a good understanding of its ceremony and symbolism.

If after making such investigations, and giving due exercise to the thought, the judgment approves the taking of the step whereby one connects himself with the great Brotherhood, there is comparatively little liability to disappointment. The candidate knows in advance what to expect. He does not enter a Lodge with the idea that the object is merely to have a good time; or that he is to derive some material benefit from his new associations; or that he is to find priviliges of any sort unaccompanied by corresponding duties. The well-informed candidate will anticipate just what he will find to be the fact, that Masonry is an orderly and devout system; that it enforces grand moral principles and seeks to repress the baser passions of human nature. He will find its fellowship large and free, its ministries and helps abundant; but he will also realise the correctness of his thought at the outset that Masonry imposes obligations and sets before its members a high standard of truth and duty.

It would certainly be better for the Institution, and for all concerned, if candidates would exercise due thought and careful examination before making application for the degrees. Let them not act by impulse, but take time to reach a satisfying judgment. Let them consider whether they are fitted by temperament, opinions, and sympathies, for membership in the Masonic Fraternity—whether they are prepared to assume the duties therein imposed and conform to the standards therein established—whether they will be likely to derive any added zest of life from such associations. If, after turning the subject over in their own minds they reach an affirmative conclusion, let them go forward with a confident expectation that they will both get good and do good by their connection with the great Brotherhood. Candidates of this class—those who enter the organisation after proper reflection and inquiry, and who rightly apprehend the distinctive features of Masonry—will surely find themselves at home in the Institution, and they may be relied upon to stand by it in the storm as well as in the sunshine. Their affection for it will not be likely to diminish, but rather increase, and their faithfulness to its interests will be steadfast to the end."—Freemason's Repository.

We have pleasure in announcing that Bro. A. Simner, J.D. of the Domatic Lodge, No. 177, was admitted to the Freedom and Livery of the Worshipful Company of Loriners on the 10th of the present month. We congratulate our esteemed brother, and trust he will secure as much enjoyment from his new associations, as we have seen him derive from Freemasonry.

On Wednesday Bro. General Lord Wolseley was engaged for several hours in inspecting the School of Military Engineering. At night his Lordship was the guest of the Royal Engineers.

HOLIDAY HAUNTS.

—:o:—

WALES, THE LAKES, AND SCOTLAND.

UPON arriving at the head-quarters of the London and North Western Railway, in London, the traveller might well pause in the courtyard and admire the magnificent Doric Archway, which spans the entrance to it, and which is without a compeer. He might too, contemplate the name the station bears, and cast his mind back for a while to the house built by Lord Arlington, at Euston, in Suffolk, during the reign of Charles II. This grand estate, which came into the family of the present holder, the Duke of Grafton, through marriage of the first Duke into the Arlington family, comprises 15,000 acres, and is not less than forty miles in circuit. Robert Bloomfield, the "Farmer's Boy," writing of Euston, says—

> "Where noble Grafton spread its rich domains
> Round Euston's watered vales and sloping plains;
> Where woods and groves in solemn grandeur rise,
> Where the kite brooding unmolested flies;
> The woodcock and the painted pheasant race,
> And skulking foxes destined for the chase."

We need not dwell upon the contrast between the Euston in Suffolk, and the Station bearing the same name. It is suggestive of thought, and the study might well engage attention for a passing hour or two.

Commercial men need no advice as to how they shall travel. It is part of their business to learn all about routes and charges, times and distances. The pleasure-seeker is differently circumstanced, and has to gather his information as best he can. Fortunately Railway Companies give maps with their time tables, and these should always be consulted. They appear to be, and sometimes are, very intricate, and require no little patience to master them, but the trouble would be repaid in the knowledge gained of the geography of the country, and especially of that part of it intended to be visited. The map accompanying the London and North Western time table is perhaps one of the most difficult to understand, taking a first glance at it, but the figures attached to every branch make the references comparatively easy to those who take a little trouble. The railway line from Euston to Bletchley is tolerably free from tentacles; on passing that Junction, however, they spread out, interlace and curve in a manner suggestive of an inky fly's trail over a sheet of white paper. We shall not attempt to give a guide to the iron maze, but we shall direct attention to the salient features. Before arriving at Bletchley, just past Harrow, a spur on the right goes to St. Albans, and another on the left to Rickmansworth. Further on a branch spreads out to Aylesbury, and another on the opposite side to Dunstable and Luton, the seats of the straw-plaiting trade. At Bletchley the line goes left to Oxford and right to Cambridge. At Blisworth the branches become more intricate. On the left one long spur goes to Stratford-upon-Avon, and on the right lie Northampton, Peterborough, Market Harborough, Stamford, Leicester, Newark, Nottingham, and a host of other towns. Again at Rugby do the lines branch out, one loop taking in Leamington, Warwick, Kenilworth and Coventry, and thence on to Birmingham, Wolverhampton and Stafford. Between these loops and the main line are numerous small lines embracing what is termed the black country, to see which the journey should be taken on a dark night. The church and the village of Kenilworth are worth seeing, but the remains of the castle are the chief attraction. Here imagination must build up the picture that this place presented when Queen Elizabeth was the guest of Leicester. It is a romantic spot even now; but what must it have been when, upon the visit of the Virgin Queen, it was "gorgeously hung for her reception with the richest silken tapestry, misty with perfumes, and sounding to strains of soft and delicious music." To conjure up the figures that once graced this charming spot, to fill up the canvas with the moving spirits of the time when Kenilworth was gay, when the walls of the Castle covered seven acres, would be an interesting study, especially with the aid of Sir Walter Scott, who has done so much in investing the ruins with enchantment. A walk to Coventry would be worth the time and exertion. The country is delightful, and the distance is only about five miles. Coventry is a place of great antiquity, and the story of Lady Godiva and Peeping Tom is well known. The pageant was revived only a few days ago, when an equestrienne personated the character of Lady Godiva, wife of Leofric, to the immense delight of thousands of spectators. The people for centuries past have been fond of processions and displays, and although the shows of the present day are but tinsel compared with those of former times, the old spirit remains. The town was renowned for the costly way in which religious dramas, called Mysteries, used to be mounted and played in the days of Corpus Christi. The times have changed, the manners are altered, but the Coventry people remain true to their traditions. According to the "Abbeys, Castles, and Ancient Halls of England and Wales," a splendid work, published by Warne and Co., "one of the richest and most interesting vestiges of the domestic architecture of the fifteenth century in Coventry, and perhaps in England, is St. Mary's Hall, erected in the reign of Henry VI." It has a grotesquely carved roof of oak, a gallery for minstrels, an armoury, and chair of state, which, with the great painted window, furnish a vivid idea of the manners of the age in which Coventry was the favourite resort of princes. A tapestry, made in 1450, measuring 30 feet by 10, and containing 80 figures, is a curious and beautiful specimen of the "drawing, dyeing, and embroidering of that period." We must leave Coventry and just take a peep at Lichfield, which is on the main line before leaving Stafford. As the birthplace of Samuel Johnson the town will always be memorable; but it possesses an attraction in its Cathedral which is irresistible. It is said to be "the most perfect in form of any ecclesiastical edifice in England." It has been the scene of strange tragedies and stirring events; heretics went from the prisons in its precincts to the stake, and around the walls "Chevalier and Roundhead fought with passionate intensity." Notwithstanding the damage that was done to the structure, the munificence of the present generation, and the genius of Sir Gilbert Scott have revived its claims to admiration and reverence. From Stafford the main line continues to Crewe, which we shall reach by another route. From Stafford the line branches off to the left to Shrewsbury, thence southwards, dividing at Craven Arms, one long spur going south-west to Landilo, where it once more forms a fork leading on the left to Llanelly and Swansea, and on the right to Pembroke. The other branch from Craven Arms goes to Hereford, debouching on the right for Abergavenny, Merthyr, Cardiff, and Newport. All these places have an interest of their own, and none greater than that of Shrewsbury. It is a fine old town, rich in timbered, gabled, and overhanging houses, which are preserved with a care worthy of their age and the times and manners they in no small degree represent. Shrewsbury might be fixed upon by those who desire to see Wales; indeed, it is admirably situated for the purpose. Llandilo is also a centre of attraction, the scenery is pretty, and some good angling is to be had in the locality. Llanelly is a thriving place, but it lacks the flavour of its near neighbour, Swansea. This town is beautifully situated between two lofty hills, and notwithstanding belching chimneys and the clang of metals, there is something about Swansea which pleases the stranger and excites pride in the natives. It is an ancient town, it has a splendid maritime position, and it affords good bathing. The last feature is not likely to induce visitors to go to Swansea for the simple reason that from a village it has become a large emporium of trade, and that of a character not conducive to pleasant sights and sounds. With all its drawbacks on the score of trade, the bay of Swansea and the surroundings possess attractions worth seeing. Carmarthen is situated on the other fork of the line and is a place of great interest and importance. It is finely placed on an elevation, commanding the river Towy, which here is wide and flowing, and adds a charm to the scene around. Tenby and Pembroke are on the same line. The former town is remarkably beautiful and is a very fashionable watering place. The water is clear, the sand firm and extensive, the air pure, and the whole country around abounds in charms for the artist and the antiquarian. Pembroke is an ancient town and has a remarkable past. It has a good dockyard, where some of the finest modern ships of the British navy have been built. But the ruins of what was once a grand castle, and the country round about, are the main features of Pembroke. Then there are Milford and Milford Haven, the former a comparatively new town, which has seen many vicissitudes in its short career. The Haven is considered one of the finest in Europe, and although the shores are not particularly picturesque, there is a grandeur about the vast expanse of water which delights the eye. On the fork from Craven Arms southward we may mention Ludlow and Hereford in the first instance. The beauty of the scenery about the former is well known, some portions are unsurpassed in the country, hills, forest, river, and valleys forming a magnificent whole. The ruins of the Castle stand boldly out on their rocky foundation, and it is from them that the view we have mentioned can be obtained. We cannot dwell upon the associations which cling around Ludlow, but we may mention that it was the home of the son of Edward IV., who held mimic court there when only twelve years of age. Young Philip Sidney was a frequent visitor at the Castle; it was there that Milton's Masque of Comus was represented for the first time, in 1634. The idea prevails that it was written at Ludlow Castle, but we incline to the belief that Milton wrote it at his father's residence in Buckinghamshire. Hereford is an old city on the border of Wales, and is surrounded by rich garden scenery, a distinguishing feature of the county. The Cathedral has a very old foundation, and the present structure is chiefly Norman and early English. There are some quaint things to be seen at Hereford, and some old memories to be recalled. The theatre, for instance, was the nursery of such distingnished performers on the English stage as Clive, Siddons, and Kemble. David Garrick was born there, and Nell Gwynne, the favourite of Charles II., first saw the light in Pipe-lane, in the old city. Abergavenny, situated in an amphitheatre, and surrounded by mountains, is a few miles further south. Then there are Merthyr, Newport, and Cardiff, also well known as centres of commerce. Around Abergavenny and the locality are many scenes of interest which we cannot even pause to catalogue. Leaving South Wales, and going back to Shrewsbury, the line goes west to Pontypool, thence by diversions to Aberystwith, situated about the middle of Cardigan Bay. It is a very popular watering place, and has many and varied attractions, including walks and drives; amongst the latter may be mentioned that to the Devil's Bridge, one of the sights of this part of Wales that ought not to be missed. It is a double arched bridge, one built above the other; the lower one is said to be the work of the Evil One; the other, no doubt, had a less canny origin. They are both perched high up in the rocks, and through a fissure beneath, 114 feet above the ravine below, rushes a stream of water from its narrow confines with a roar scarcely to be expected from so small a throat. The trees and verdant growth, and the hidden pools, which from a certain point of view, become a large lake, make up a grand picture. In the same direction, but farther on, are other attractions, amongst the noblest of which are the Plinlimmon Mountains. Returning from Aberystwith northward, the line goes to Aberdovey, Towyn, and Barmouth Junction. Here a spur juts out to Dolgelly, a point from which tourists can start in search of many charming scenes, including Cader Idris—the dale of the hazels. The whole locality is full of mountain scenery, rich and varied. Along the coast is Barmouth, a flourishing, pretty seaside resort, and beyond Harlech with its ruined castle on an elevated rock, its historic and warlike associations. It was here that Margaret of Anjou took refuge after the defeat of her husband at Northampton in 1460, and during the Wars of the Roses it was held by a mighty Welchman in the interest of the house of Lancaster, and sustained a siege which gave occasion to the spirited air entitled "The March of the Men of Harlech."

Portmadoc, a harbour of considerable importance, lies beyond. The line divides at this spot, one branch hugging the coast, the other going through Festiniog, Blaenau, Bettws-y-coed, Llanrwst, to Llandudno Junction. Around this net work of railways, and reached by spurs projecting therefrom, range the very choicest scenery in Wales. The praises of the valleys of Festiniog have been sung by Lord Lyttelton, and the falls of Cynfael have been described by Mr. Roscoe with a vigour worthy of their fierce and terrible nature. Bettws-y-coed is the reverse of the scene just mentioned. It is a quiet, lovely sylvan retreat, with all the elements of grandeur around. Within itself it combines much in which the artist and the angler delight, and is a favourite haunt of both. The coast line and its spurs lead to Llanberis for Snowdon, to the Menai Straits and its wonderful bridges, to Carnarvon, and to a thousand attractions which cannot be dealt with here. The whole district is full of charms for the tourist, of the mighty works of nature, and of her beauty too. Those who desire further information should provide a good guide book, one of the best we have seen being Black's, published in 1881.

Returning to Crewe, the main line divides into three great arteries. The one on the left goes to Chester, a famous old city at which a stay should be made. The walls of the old city should be perambulated, the quaint and outwardly uninteresting Cathedral visited, and the remains of domestic architecture of centuries ago would repay inspection. The line skirts the southern shore of the Irish Sea and embraces Rhyl, with a branch direct to Llangollen. Further on is Abergele and Conway, with a spur to Llandudno, clasped between the outstretched arms of the Great Orme's Head. Onward the line continues past Bangor to Holyhead, where an admirable service of boats are provided for the conveyance of passengers to Ireland. The middle of the three arteries goes north, divides on the left to Liverpool. The third goes to Leeds. Between the three are included all the principal places in Lancashire and Yorkshire up to Preston. Here a branch on the left leads to Lytham, Blackpool, and Fleetwood for Belfast by steamer. Still going north Lancaster is passed and Carnforth is reached. At this point commence the series of lines that cover the Lake District, to which we have referred in a previous paper. No word-painting can picture the delights of Cumberland and Westmoreland, they must be seen to be appreciated. We shall, therefore, leave them to be explored by those who seek to know them, promising them a treat that will survive as long as memory lasts. We pause a moment at Carlisle, the border station of the London and North Western line, before entering Scotland. It is a grand old grey town, abounding in historical interest and ought not to be missed. Some miles farther on a line branches off to Dumfries on to Stranraer, from whence a line of steamers cross the North Channel to Larne, thus shortening the sea voyage to Belfast, nearly always a rough one by the ordinary routes. At Carstairs the line divides, from which point one branch goes to Edinburgh and the other to Glasgow and Greenock. Lanark is not far from Carstairs, from which ancient town the falls of the Clyde can be visited, and many points of great interest, in which Wallace figures as a glorious central figure. Stirling is the next point of divergence. Here one trunk goes to Oban and the other to Perth. Then it branches out again, taking in Dundee, Brechin, Montrose, Aberdeen, Peterhead, and Fraserburgh on the one hand, and on the other Blairgowrie, Blair Athole, Lossiemouth, Inverness, Dingwall, and Strome Ferry, covering in fact nearly every part of Scotland. This bare outline could be filled in with descriptions of wild scenery, of lochs and mountains and of historic events that would require volumes to record. Our object is simply to stimulate the public taste, and having done that we must leave them to other resources which are ready to hand, and which will teach them that, in the three kingdoms, there are scenes of grandeur and of beauty which should at least be seen before fresh fields and pastures new are sought in foreign climes.

A PARTING SHOT.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Just a few last words in self-defence, and then, for the present at least, I shall take leave of Bro. Perceval. There is no need for me to pursue the matter further with regard to the revision of the rules, and the proceedings arising therefrom, after the admirable letter which appeared in your last issue, signed by "A MEMBER OF THE LATE BOARD OF GENERAL PURPOSES."

In the number of the CHRONICLE for 11th August, I am accused of misquoting Bro. Perceval in one particular case, and he says there are "other instances in which he ('WATCHMAN') has misrepresented the meaning of my text, though he may have nearly quoted the words correctly." This last charge I pass by with the remark that I have learned to regard Bro. Perceval's unsupported statements with suspicion. Not that he wilfully misstates an opponent, but because he cannot believe it possible that any one can be right who differs from him, and that all who do so are more or less guilty of moral turpitude. I am not disposed to accept condemnation without proof, and it is just what Bro. Perceval rarely gives, and in this instance omits altogether. I will say nothing of his mode of retreating from a discussion he provoked, nor his reason given for that step; those are matters your readers can understand and appreciate; but I am not disposed to submit to what I think I shall prove to be an utterly groundless accusation.

It is quite true that on the 14th not 16th July, Bro. Perceval did write that "a Committee should be formed outside of the Board of General Purposes," and it is equally true that on the 21st of the same month, referring to the revision of the rules, I stated: "He (Bro. Perceval) has condemned the Board of General Purposes, and yet he would select six of their number for this delicate work." Were these quotations to stand alone, Bro. Perceval would have some reason to complain, but unfortunately for him they do not.

On the 16th June, a date probably forgotten when the letter four weeks later was penned, Bro. Perceval expresses his intention to move the following resolution in Grand Lodge at a certain time which he states: "That as the defined Rules and Regulations under which our Order is to be governed is a matter of the gravest importance to our well-being, and owing to the great delay that has hitherto taken place in bringing the matter to an issue, that a Committee should be formed, consisting of twelve members, six to be appointed by Grand Lodge, and six by the Board of General Purposes, to take in hand the reconsideration of the Revision of the Book of Constitutions, together with the suggested amendments and alterations, as soon as possible, and to lay the result thereof before Grand Lodge in December, for acceptance." The italics are mine. He closes the paragraph thus: "By these means both views of the case will be brought to bear, the purple and the blue." There is nothing in the foregoing resolution hinting a suspicion of the bona fides of the Board of General Purposes, the object, as I take it, being to facilitate the despatch of a troublesome business by a small committee, in which the Board and Grand Lodge should be equally represented. Nothing in the resolution could have prevented the Board of General Purposes from nominating six of their own number, or at least of selecting six nominees who knew and would represent their views. It is clear, beyond dispute, that on the 16th June, Bro. Perceval did not wish to go altogether outside of the General Purposes Committee, that was a conclusion arrived at later, when he became incensed at what he deemed their improper conduct. Then it occurred to him to shunt the Board, and to appoint a fresh Committee. My case therefore is abundantly vindicated. I was dealing with the whole subject. One of my charges against Bro. Perceval was inconsistency, and I venture to think that I have proved it up to the hilt out of his own mouth.

I am, Dear Sir and Brother,

Yours fraternally,

WATCHMAN.

THE PRICKED WINDBAG.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I have carefully read the letter of "A MEMBER OF THE LATE BOARD OF GENERAL PURPOSES," but besides stating that the charges he makes against me are generally incorrect, while his answers are not only incorrect, but beside the question, I can but express my surprise at the unbounded assurance of an anonymous correspondent calling for an apology from me or any one else who gives his name, not for the sake of notoriety, but that it should not be said that such charges were made behind a "nom de plume." I decline to make any further remarks until called upon by those who alone have the right to demand an explanation from me.

Yours faithfully and fraternally,

C. J. PERCEVAL, P.M. 1607.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF SOUTH WALES (WESTERN DIVISION).

THE Annual Meeting of this Provincial Grand Lodge was held on Wednesday, under the banner of St. David's Lodge, No. 366, at the New Masonic Hall, Milford Haven. Prov. Grand Lodge was opened soon after twelve o'clock by the Rt. Worshipful Prov. Grand Master, Colonel Lloyd-Philipps, who was supported by a very fair attendance of Present and Past Provincial Grand Officers. After Provincial Grand Lodge had been formally opened, Colonel Philipps expressed the pleasure he felt at meeting the brethren of his Province on this occasion, a pleasure intensified by the fact that a part of the day's work was to be the consecration of the new Masonic Hall which has recently been erected by a few of the members of No. 366. It was most gratifying to recognise the spirit of enterprise that had been the means of raising so noble an edifice. The ceremony of Consecration was then formally proceeded with and completed. The business of Prov. Grand Lodge was next taken. At an early stage of the day the roll of Lodges had been called, when it was found that all were represented. In the absence of Bro. C. Rice Williams, M.D., Prov. G. Sec., the minutes of last Prov. Grand Lodge meeting were read by Bro. J. Jenkyn Jones. The Prov. Grand Master explained that at their last meeting the sum of £26 5s had been voted for the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys, it had, however, been pointed out to him that an additional five guineas would secure an extra vote, and that it was desirable as many votes as possible should be obtained for the Province, he had therefore taken upon himself to authorise the payment by Prov. Grand Treasurer of the larger amount, viz., thirty guineas, and he now asked the members to sanction this increased outlay. This was unanimously agreed to, and with this addition the minutes were confirmed. The Prov. Grand Treasurer's accounts showed a balance in favour of Prov. Grand Lodge of £26 13s 10d. The Prov. G. Treasurer was complimented by the Prov. Grand Master for the zeal he had displayed, and the brethren passed a cordial vote of thanks to Bro. Jenkyn Jones for his past services. Bro. Jones acknowledged the compliment paid him, and on being re-elected, expressed his willingness to still further exert himself in the work of the Province. The Prov. Grand Officers were then invested, as follow:—

The following Report of the Prov. G.L. Committee was then presented:—"The Committee met at the St. Peter's Lodge, Carmarthen, on the 6th July 1883. The Committee have pleasure in stating that from the Reports sent in by the Lodges for the past year, the general state of Freemasonry in this Province is highly satisfactory, and in a prosperous condition. The Committee have pleasure in recommending Wor. Bro. J. Beavan Phillips P.M. 671 P. Prov. S.G.W. for re-election as the Charity Commissioner for the ensuing year, and Wor. Bro. Aaron Stone P.M. 671 P. Prov. J.G.W. as Assistant Charity Commissioner, and that votes of thanks be accorded them for their valuable services and the great zeal which they have displayed in the cause of Freemasonry in the Province.

That the sum of ten guineas be paid annually, commencing 1st January last, to the Charity Commissioners towards the expenses of their department.

That the most cordial thanks of the Province be given to Worshipful Bro. Aaron Stone, in recognition of his services as Steward on behalf of the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys during the past year, and congratulate him on having aided in making up the largest amount ever collected in one year for that Institution, and the Committee further recommend that the usual Gold Bar be added to Bro. Stone's Charity Jewel, and presented to him at this Provincial Grand Lodge.

That Worshipful Bro. Jonathan Marsden P.M. 476 P. Prov. Grand Chaplain be elected Steward to represent this Province at the Royal Masonic Institution for Girls for the year 1883-4.

That Lucy Smith, daughter of our late Worshipful Bro. George T. Smith P.M. 1072 P. Prov. S.G.W. be adopted by the Province as a Candidate this year for admission to the Royal Masonic Institution for Girls.

That the sum of twenty guineas be voted to the Royal Masonic Institution for Girls."

The Committee's Report was unanimously adopted en bloc. The brethren then proceeded to St. Catherine's Church, where divine service was celebrated. The sermon was preached by the Rev. J. Popkin Morgan, who selected for his text Philippians iv. 8:—

"Finally brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."

Our rev. brother proceeded as follows:—

It is to me, brethren, both as a Mason and as a Christian, a subject of much satisfaction that we, the Masons of this Province, should as a body make the public recognition of the importance of worshipping God, which is implied by our attendance here to-day.

It is no secret that in our Lodges one Supreme God is acknowledged as the object of our worship; nor is the world ignorant that we profess to point men for guidance to the law of God which prescribes charity and purity as the truest ritual of religion. Our attitude towards religion is, I repeat, no secret; but by attending at Church to-day we advertise, we blaze abroad, our recognition of God and our respect for religion. We shew that, although not necessarily a christian, still less a churchman, the Mason is one who wishes to do honour to the temples where God is worshipped and to encourage the combined efforts of mankind to offer their Maker the homage due from His reasonable creatures.

But, brethren, though your attendance here to-day does not imply that every individual Mason is a Christian and a Churchman, my place in the pulpit of this church does imply both my Christianity and my Churchmanship. I dare not therefore confine myself to-day to those parts of religion which all Masons accept as Masons, but I stand here as a minister of Christ's Church to preach the Gospel of Christ's kingdom. Masonry, though founded on Divine Laws, is a Human Institution. There is an Institution founded by God Himself upon the same Divine Laws, teaching those laws with God's authority which Masonry stamps with man's approval, and doing what Masonry can never do, giving strength from on High to perform the law of God. Masonry incites us to the imitation of good men and true; Christianity offers inspiration to make successful imitation possible. Masonry tells us of duties, and points to God as the giver of strength to perform them. Our Holy Christian Faith shows us in Christ Jesus the way to God's very presence. Yes; the strength of Christianity stands in the revelation of God's love made by Jesus Christ, the Incarnate Son of God. Here, brother Masons, you will find the best of all patterns of one faithful unto death, and that not in the interests of the good and religious, but for the sake of recovering the lost, the wicked, the rebellious, and out of love to all mankind. Such is the boundless charity we should aim at attaining to; not merely a disposition to do good to worthy men and Masons, but a determination that though some may not act as brothers towards us, we will do the brother's part to every fellow-man. Is our fellow man sinful? Charity covers the multitude of sins, overlooks his faults, and refuses to take offence. Charity consists as much in forgiveness as in almsgiving, and finds its object not only in the good and kind, not only in the poor and unfortunate; but perhaps most conspicuously of all in the enemy, whom Jesus bids us love. This is the test case of Charity. If we can forgive; if we can love our enemy, we may be sure that we have indeed obtained from God "that most excellent gift of Charity." No other test is certain. A man may give his wealth to the poor, his body to be burned for an opinion, and yet not have Charity; but surely he has Charity if he can love his enemy.

But let us now, brethren, take the advice of our text. Let us for a very few moments think on, that is let us give up our whole mind to "whatsoever things are true, honest, just, pure, lovely, of good report. If (in the teachings of Masonry) there be any virtue and any praise, let us (I say) think of these things.

And there is much instruction in virtue most worthy of praise, symbolically conveyed by our Masonic Rites. On the very day when we first saw Masonic Light we were taught most graphically the necessity of temperance and fortitude. We learnt the dangers of rashness on the one hand and timidity on the other. How many a man, forgetting the obligations of temperance, has rashly rushed upon a career of unregulated indulgence, which has pierced him through with many sorrows, and brought him, it may be, to utter destruction of Body and Soul. How many a man, on the other hand, by timidly withdrawing from the straightforward path of duty, has suffered the penalty of becoming a dead and useless member of society that might as well have been strangled at his birth! On the occasion, too—I mean the occasion of our Initiation—the virtue of a cautious prudence was inculcated, and we were reminded of the danger of entrusting our secrets to unworthy and untrustworthy persons. We learnt, also, that the true seat of Charity is the heart and not the purse; that poverty is not a thing to be ashamed of; that the richest should learn to sympathise with the most destitute by putting himself in his place. And not the least important lesson at this time imparted was the lesson of Truth. How unutterably more horrible falsehood and perjury are than the worst of all misfortunes—ay, than death itself in all its horrors, is a lesson familiar to every Mason. Let us all, brethren, strive to extend this principle of Truth into every word we utter and every statement we make, however trivial; that the yea of a Mason may be indeed yea, and his word as good as his bond. Temperance, Fortitude, Prudence, Charity, Sympathy, Truth! These are indeed precious virtues to which Masonry incites her apprentice! How shall we attain to them? Masonry and Christianity alike answer—by dependence on God, who works in us to will and to do of his good pleasure. He is the G.A.O.T.U., not only of the material, but of the moral Universe as well. In his hand the heavy gavel of adversity and the sharp chisel of pain are used not as weapons of destruction but for the perfecting of His servants. So from being, as it were, rough unhewn stones in the quarry of human nature, they become bright polished ashlars meet for the walls of God's Temple on high, the House not made with hands, eternal in the Heavens. But—mark this well—upon our Fortitude and Patience it depends whether we are perfected or shattered beneath the Master Builder's strokes, made fit for heaven, or only to be cast into the refuse-heap of the lost and ruined.

But let us pass on. Who of us brethern can truly say that he did not experience some slight sense of disappointment, at least, when be passed from his apprenticeship to the Fellow Craft Degree? Even this is not without its lesson; and the lesson of it is that life is an uphill journey, that knowledge and wisdom are but slowly acquired, that there is no royal or magic road to skill and learning, that the structure of a good and worthy life can only be built up by a fixed determination at its very outset to act honestly and "on the square," and by unceasing industry and perseverance. Only to the industrious and persevering searcher will nature yield up her secrets, and science—which is knowledge—take up her abode in our understanding. I pass still onward to the day that saw us raised to a higher degree yet. Any disappointment we may have felt when we were passed was now amply atoned for. How great the solemnity with which we were now taught the new great lessons of Faith and Hope. How much fuller an idea of Charity or Brotherly Love was set forth, extending even to the laying down of life for the brethren, the most extreme case of Christ's royal law "To do to others as we would they should do unto us." I have said we were now taught Faith. At an earlier stage we had been taught to rely and depend on God in the affairs of life; but who can go on doing so if all is dark around him, if adversity defeats all his industry, if all friends fail, and death itself looms before him? The fidelity of many a good man to God, to purity, and to his fellow-man, has brought him in this world no recompense save suffering, and even in some cases, torturing death. How, in spite of these proofs to the contrary, can he still rely on God's rewarding him? Ah! if death bounded all, and the compass of man's thoughts would open no further than the brink of the grave, this could not be Faith in God, and hope of happiness would in that case necessarily perish when death was seen approaching. But from beyond the grave God draws us towards Himself. God illumines death itself with light, "Though I pass through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me." This is the Mason's Faith. But he has more than Faith, he, like the Christian, has hope of Immortality, hope of Resurrection. Bro. Mason, this hope of a life beyond the grave, a life that will give to all who died here unrewarded, the full reward of their toils, ay! far more than any of us deserve, to those who have really learned to live in Faith in God, this hope, I say, of which Masonry and natural religion in every land teaches something, is made by the gospel of Christ into a sure and certain expectation. For Christ has risen from the grave. The Most High has thereby set His seal to all that Jesus taught. We know from Christ's own lips that He who was thus raised from the dead to His Father's right hand will take to Himself and to the Father's presence all that put their trust in Him. Amen.

The collection amounted to £5 15s 6d. A vote of thanks was passed to the Rev. James Boaden for the use of his church, and the amount collected was placed in the hands of a committee of the St. David's Lodge for disbursement. After several other matters had received consideration Provincial Grand Lodge was closed.

CLARENDON LODGE, No. 1769.

THE annual election meeting of this popular and eminently practical Lodge was held on Tuesday evening last, at the Guildhall Tavern, Gresham-street, when there was a goodly muster of members and visitors, under the presidency of Bro. John Soper, the genial Worshipful Master. Amongst those present were Bros. H. W. Mayes S.W., George Croxton J.W., J. Stanley Treasurer, James Cooper P.M. Secretary, T. B. Linscott S.D., Thomas Grove P.M., Charles Thompson I.P.M., E. Abercrombie, M. Ker, C. Thomas Prov. Grand Tyler for Herts Tyler. The Visitors included Bros. J. Farmaner P.M. 28, J. Jackson 1287, W. Grix 28, and others. Lodge having been opened in accordance with ancient rites, the minutes of last meeting were read and confirmed, after which Lodge was advanced to the second degree, and Bro. Walter Crix, of Durham, Natal, who had been initiated into the Old King's Arms Lodge, No. 28, was passed to the degree of Fellow Craft, the working being executed in masterly manner by the Worshipful Master, assisted by his Officers. The voting subsequently took place for W.M. for the ensuing year, and the choice of the brethren fell unanimously upon Bro. H. W. Mayes, whose zeal and ability in the discharge of duty in the minor chairs was suitably and deservedly acknowledged. Bro. Stanley was requested to continue in office as the Secretary of the Lodge, an office he has filled with so much satisfaction to all concerned, and Bro. Stanley accepted the renewal of confidence with a few well-expressed words of encomium which had been proffered to him for his little services. He begged the Lodge's acceptance of a case in which the books might be more conveniently kept, and this was received by the brethren with applause, with a resolution that a vote of thanks be recorded on the minutes, acknowledging the handsome present which had been made to the Lodge. Bro. C. Thomas Prov. G. Tyler Herts, was unanimously re-elected Tyler, and an Audit Committee was appointed. After the transaction of some formal business, Lodge was closed amidst an abundance of hearty good wishes, and the brethren and visitors adjourned to the banqueting-room, where a sumptuous repast was served, in a style which has made Bros. Ritter and Clifford famous at this old established City resort. The arrangements were under the personal superintendance of Brother Henry Mills, and elicited expressions of unqualified satisfaction. After dessert, the customary Loyal and Craft toasts were honoured, due recognition being given to the valuable services rendered by the Most Worshipful Grand Master the Prince of Wales, and the other rulers of the Craft. Brother C. Thompson I.P.M., in proposing the health of the Worshipful Master, said this was the last time he should have the honour of discharging that congenial duty, and in one sense he must confess he was rather sorry for it. He could only say that their excellent Worshipful Master had discharged his duties in a most able manner during the year, and that under his rule harmony and good feeling had pervaded everything appertaining to the Lodge. It was most satisfactory that the brethren had voted to him a Past Master's jewel on his retirement from the office he had so well and worthily filled, for no man more richly deserved such a recognition of services rendered to his Lodge. They all trusted that Bro. Soper might be spared many years, not only to favour the Lodge with his presence, but that he might have good health and long life to wear the jewel which had been so deservedly voted to him on his retirement from the chair. The W.M. in acknowledging the very cordial manner in which the toast had been received, said he feared at one period that he should have to go through his year of office without any work to do; but thanks to his friend, Brother Grove, who had found him some employment this evening, his fears had not been realised. Although the work was not done quite to his own satisfaction, yet he had done the best he could, and trusted the brethren would kindly overlook any little shortcomings of which he might have been guilty. He assured the brethren he had the true interest of the Clarendon Lodge closely at heart, and he should do all he could in the future, as he had done in the past, to advance its prosperity. In a small and select Lodge like this, there was a difficulty in obtaining employment sufficient to keep the Master and his Officers always in a state of ready proficiency; but he hoped his successor would have a few candidates, and that his year of office might be a happy and successful one. He then proposed the health of the Visitors, to whom he extended a most hearty and cordial welcome. The Visitors briefly responded, uniting in expressions of pleasure at the reception they had met at the hands of the brethren, and their appreciation also of the working they had witnessed in the Lodge-room. The W.M. next gave the healths of the Past Masters, thanking them for their uniform courtesy and kindness, and for the valuable assistance they had rendered him during his year of office. Bro. T. Grove P.M. in the course of a happy speech, referred to the laudable ambition which prompted every Mason to pass the chair of his Lodge, and expressed the pleasure it afforded him to stand in the ranks of the Past Masters, although he had now responded to the toast so many times that he had very little to say in relation to it. He hoped to live many years to enjoy that esteem which he felt he now possessed, and those good wishes which were so frequently expressed towards him. He could assure them he should do the best he could to deserve their good wishes, and that his interest in the well-being of the Lodge was unabated. The Immediate Past Master also replied, echoing the sentiments which had fallen from Brother Grove. To be a Past Master of the Clarendon Lodge was one of the chief pleasures of his life. The Past Masters were at all times pleased and willing to do anything in their power for the furtherance of the Lodge, and for the assistance and instruction of the brethren. They were glad to be called upon at any moment, should an Officer, through any cause, be absent from his post, and he hoped he might live to see all the brethren now present passing to the highest position to be obtained in the Lodge. The Worshipful Master then proposed the healths of the Treasurer and Secretary; in doing which he referred to the suit and service rendered by Brother Stanley as Treasurer, and joccosely expressed his belief that that brother had a wonderful amount of money now in hand. He only hoped that a considerable portion of those funds would be devoted to charity. Their Secretary was also most indefatigable in the performance of his duties, and well looked after the interests of the Lodge. Brother Stanley, in responding, said it was a pleasure to fill the post of Treasurer to the Clarendon Lodge, and he knew they would believe him when he said he was desirous of saving himself as much trouble as possible. Being one of the founders of the Lodge, he looked upon it as one of his family, and he only hoped he might live to see it crowned with every success. The W.M. then proposed the healths of the Officers of the Lodge, alluding to the zealous and useful services rendered by all those who held positions of responsibility below the chair. Bros. Hayes and Croxton responded, the latter in a characteristically humourous speech; and the official list was closed in befitting manner by the Tyler. The proceedings were interspersed with some excellent singing, and a most harmonious and enjoyable evening was passed.

RANDOM NOTES AND REFLECTIONS.

CAN Quakers be Freemasons? Most brethren would answer—No! Strictly and logically the reply would be correct, but actual practice in this, as in many other instances, shows that there is no rule without an exception, and that Quakers sometimes escape from the confines of their narrow faith. We are not aware of many Quakers of the present day being Masons, although many striking changes have taken place, in their mode of dress especially. The broad-brimmed hat of the male, and the peculiarly-shaped bonnet of the female members of the sect are often discarded, the young members of the fraternity mix more in the world and are less distinguishable than they were formally. Notwithstanding this change, we are not aware that Quakers generally have taken to Masonry, whatever Quakeresses may have done in the case of that spurious body in America yclept the Order of the Eastern Star. Bro. D. Murray Lyon relates the case of a Quaker of the name of Thomas Cumming, who was reported during the celebration of the Feast of St. John the Baptist in 1741, as being guilty of an indignity to the Lodge of Canongate-Kilwinning, and he was refused admission until he had given satisfaction for the offence he had committed. The Voice of Masonry, Chicago, gives a very interesting case. The August part says:

During those troublous times of the Anti-Masonic crusade, a Quaker leader, in one of the New England States, was not only a Mason himself, but had six sons who were members. The members of his church discovered, by some means, that he had been initiated, and sent Abraham and Joseph to advise with the erring Levi, and secure from him an assurance of fidelity to the discipline of the Society. The Committee waited upon him, explained their errand, and the spokesman said, "Levi, we understand that thou art a Freemason?"—"I have had the reputation, Abraham, of being a Freemason for these twenty years." "But, wilt thou tell us, Levi, whether thou art a Mason?"—"No, Abraham, I will not tell thee whether I am or not."—"Shall we tell the meeting, Levi, that thou dost renounce Freemasonry?"—"No, Abraham, I will not. I will see thee condemned first."

Levi's firmness triumphed, and he continued a pillar of his church, and remained faithful to the Craft. It was somewhat about the time of this anecdote that the Quakers took it into their heads to legislate against our Fraternity, and imposed a penalty of excommunication against any member who became a Mason and persisted in his affiliation. Quakers could disown, although they could not swear, but they found it difficult to classify the article they had framed under one of the heads of their testimony against sins of commission. The journal we have already referred to states that the following was a way in which they got over the difficulty:—

After a long discussion and consideration of the subject, they inserted it under the head of Gaming and Diversions. The gaming, perhaps, was in the chances of admission, and the diversion, the social pleasures of the Lodge.

—:o:—

In the foregoing we have alluded to the androgynous "Order of the Eastern Star," which, says the Keystone, proposes to erect a house for itself. Our contemporary adds:—

We sincerely trust it will be a large one, large enough, in fact, to hold the entire sisterhood, and that they may all be persuaded to enter this Home, and to assume a vow never again to enter the world. We proffer our condolence to the Grand Patrons, when they shall be deprived of the society of the Grand Matrons.

—:o:—

Masonic charity is not confined to members of the Craft. We have had many instances of the generous character of the body. We gave a very interesting specimen last week of the good work done by the brethren at Pensacola, we now quote another. The Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, at one of their Quarterly Communications, appropriated three hundred dollars to Jewish refugees in Philadelphia, and one hundred dollars to the sufferers by a recent fire at Chester, in Pennsylvania.

—:o:—

Bro. J. Ross Robinson, S.G.W. of the Grand Lodge of Canada, has presented the Lakeside Home to the Hospital for Sick Children at Toronto, Canada. It was opened in the early part of last month, and patients were removed to it at once. Attached to this handsome gift is the condition that it, as well as the hospital proper, shall be open, without any charge, to the children of Freemasons. This is another instance of the catholicity of the charity of the Brotherhood.

Last week we referred to the Annual Communication of the Grand Lodge of Florida, and quoted from the remarks of the M.W. Grand Master, Bro. W. E. Anderson. The following is worthy of being reprinted:—

"Freemasonry is increasing in numbers, but is it increasing in intelligence, in moral worth and reputation as rapidly? * * We should scrutinise our material more closely, not be content with mere negative character, but require real active worth in our candidates. * * We make Masonry too common, that is the great danger ahead of it. If it ever suffer shipwreck, that is the rock upon which it will go to pieces. It has successfully resisted all external enemies, the danger lies within its own body * * Each one of us should be his brother's keeper. Our regulations and the spirit of our Institution condemn profanity, intemperance, dishonesty, looseness of life, and every breach of the moral law. And yet we and the world know Masons who are profane, intemperate, and immoral. Those who see a brother take a step upon the downward road, and neglect to raise the voice of friendly warning and restraint, fail in their duty. He who admonishes as a Mason has behind him a mighty moral influence, of which he can scarcely estimate the weight.

—:o:—

St. John's Lodge, No. 219, of Pittsburgh, was constituted in 1846, and in recording its history and work the Keystone gives some particulars which ought to stimulate some of the brethren on this side of the water to greater vitality in good deeds. Among the many things this Lodge has done we may state a few. In 1866 it purchased a fine cemetery lot, containing 3,624 square feet, which has been handsomely improved; it now contains the remains of twenty-seven worthy Master Masons, and has cost the sum of 4,405 dollars. They also suggested a "Masonic Consolidated Charity Fund," which during the past twenty-three years has been in successful operation, and there has been paid out of it for charity, in that period, the sum of 15,606 dollars. To many local calls it responded most liberally, and when a Masonic orphans' home was proposed the Lodge voted 1,000 dollars towards it; but the plan failed at the time. During the past twenty years St. John's Lodge has dispensed in charity no less than 12,177 dollars. Our contemporary says that this Lodge "requires no affiliation fee. It limits life membership to Past Masters by election of seven years' standing, and members of twenty years' good standing."

Just a dark touch by way of contrast. Grand Secretary Hedges, of Montana, says:—"There are some Masons that haven't got a dollar's worth of Masonry in them." And, adds the Toronto Freemason:—"We know many that haven't got half-a-dollar's worth, and can produce documents to back this statement up." That is rather warm for subscribers, but we fear the implied censure is deserved.

General Tom Thumb was a universal favourite when in England, and the news of his death in the middle of last month was received with regret in this country. Charles H. Stratton, the real name of this small wonder, was a Brother Mason of noble rank and held in high esteem. We English Freemasons can hardly understand the public ceremonies that are practised in America in the name of the Order. They seem to be peculiar to the country and to be regarded with great favour, a circumstance that is somewhat curious among a people who boast the simplicity of Republicanism. The remains of Brother Stratton were taken to Bridgeport, Conn., in charge of members of the Craft, Knights Templar, and those of the Scottish Rite of the Northern Jurisdiction. The widow, née Lavinia Warren, accompanied them. The body was placed in St. John's Episcopal Church at night and guarded by the Knights Templar until morning, when the doors were thrown open to the public. The corpse was clothed in black, decorated with the jewel of the 32°, and the surrounding floral gifts were elegant and numerous, consisting of crosses, crowns, and Masonic emblems, gifts of P. T. Barnum and W. R. Higby 32°. Over ten thousand persons visited the church to see the deceased, who, although diminutive in size, was mentally and physically a true man. The cloth-covered walnut casket bore a plate inscribed: "Charles H. Stratton, aged 45 years, 6 months, and 11 days." The remains were interred in Mountain Grove Cemetery, the full Masonic services being performed by St. John's Lodge, No. 3. There was no speech-making, but the crowd was great and the interest manifested in the proceedings very keen. "A marble monument marks the resting place," says the Hebrew Leader, "the shaft being 20 feet high, and bears the name 'Stratton.'"

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—Chest and Stomach Complaints.—The source and centre of almost every ailment is impurity of the blood; dislodge this poison, and disease departs. Holloway's Pills exercise the invaluable power of thoroughly cleansing each component of the blood, and rendering the fluid fit to perform its important functions. They cope most successfully with chest diseases, stomach complaints, liver disorders, and many other maladies, which were once the besetting dangers of mankind at certain seasons in town and country. The directions for use enable everyone to regulate the operations of these Pills with the greatest nicety. Chronic invalids, valetudinarians, and all whom other treatment has failed to relieve, are respectfully invited to try Holloway's celebrated medicine, which will strengthen and cure them.

THE PROGRESS OF FREEMASONRY.

THE steady and regular advance of Freemasonry in this country cannot, perhaps, be better illustrated than by a statement shewing the number of Lodges (of those now on the list) which were warranted each year in the past. We have, therefore, much pleasure in placing before our readers the following table, which has been compiled by a well-known correspondent, and which gives the information in a plain, straightforward manner. Our correspondent has subdivided the Lodges under four distinct heads:—London, Provincial, Foreign, and Military, and gives, besides the annual total, the aggregate at the close of each year. It must, however, be distinctly understood that these figures do not, in many cases, represent the actual number of Lodges warranted in any year, as those Lodges which have ceased to exist are not taken into account, but it will give a very good idea as to how the present grand array of English Masonic Lodges has arisen, and will, we feel sure, be useful in other ways. There are doubtless many curiosities which will suggest themselves to the student of Freemasonry on a perusal of this table.

REVIEWS.

All Books intended for Review should be addressed to the Editor of The Freemason's Chronicle, Belvidere Works Hermes Hill, Pentonville, London, N.

The Fisheries of the World. London: Cassell and Co., La Belle Sauvage Yard, Ludgate Hill, E.C.

This new publication, just issued by the well-known pioneers of popular literature, whose business has now been transformed into a limited liability company, bears an ambitious title; but we are bound to admit that the promise of its opening page is most thoroughly carried out, and that it is one of the very best serials ever issued from the press of La Belle Sauvage Yard. The author knows his subject, and writes with a facile pen, while the illustrations are better than in any of Messrs. Cassell's book of the same class that we remember. We honestly recommend the work, which is full of practical and scientific information, amusing anecdotes, and pleasantly-conveyed history to all who take an interest in our great fisheries, and believe in fish as food for both body and brain. Taken in connection with the grand and honestly won success at South Kensington, it has a special value at the present time, while it must be remembered that long after the doors of the International Fisheries Exhibition are closed for ever, this publication will still be issuing in regular monthly instalments, and will keep the subject before the public. The opening pages, entitled "A Discursive Chapter," and dealing with a thousand and one subjects, are particularly good; whilst those which follow on fish and fisheries in ancient days prove a very intimate knowledge, on the part of the author, of classic lore and old-time records. A few brief extracts may be permitted here, although such "extraction" is hardly fair to the work.

"We, in England," says he truly, "looking at the matter impartially, have very little of which to complain in regard to the price or quality of fish. It is really cheaper in London and other of our cities and towns than it is in almost any capital in Europe, barring only those of the Northern nations. Order a salmon-cutlet or a sole in Paris, and the chances are very great, in respectable, though not the highest-class, restaurants that you will pay from three to five or more francs for your audacity. If it is fresh, congratulate yourself. Oysters have sold for as much as a paper rouble—as much as a shilling—a-piece in St. Petersburgh. But what are these to the prices obtained in ancient Rome! The equivalent of six pounds sterling was sometimes paid for a single pound of fish; turbots have sold for the astonishing high figures of £48, £64 and £240! Fish was half the time a luxury for millionaires only—

> Who'd for some shining scales a sum devote > Enough to buy net, fisherman, and boat.

But they would have them. Licinius Crassus, a great slave dealer, once gave a little dinner party, which is stated to have required some 10,000 tables to accommodate the guests, and "stood" unlimited oysters to the whole crowd! There is a story of one Cassidorus, who sold his slave in the morning that he might sup on a murœna, the purchase of which cost him all he got by the bargain. Martyn says of him:—

> No fish, insatiate, fills that maw of thine:
> 'Tis not on fish, but man! on man you dine!

Badham, whose classic knowledge is as great as his fish lore, speaks amusingly of the dread experienced by diners out, lest the fish should not go round. Many poets, like Chœribus, spent all their muse money on fish; the grave tragedians, like Nothippus, followed the example. Zeno, founder of the Stoics, was once dining at the house of a great fish fancier, and on a noble dish being put before him, immediately seized it, and observing his entertainer look glum (well he might, since it was the whole dinner!) "What opinion," said the philosopher, "do you think your guests here must conceive of one who cannot indulge his friend for a single day in his well-known weakness for fish?" The dithyrambic poet, Philoxenus of Syracuse, after eating part of an enormous polypus, and being seized with indigestion, called in a physician, who urged him straightway to arrange his affairs, as he would not hold out till the evening. "My affairs are long since settled," sighed the bard; "My dithyrambics, now as perfect as I could make them, I dedicate to the Muses who inspired them, and leave Venus and Bacchus my executors. But see! already Charon beckons, and bids me put into his boat whatever I may want in the transit; quick, then, as time presses, bring me the remains of my cuttle!" The Sepia (cuttle) from which we derive the pigment of the same name, is said to be very good eating.

Scarce fish then, as now, was considered a very acceptable present, and was not uncommonly, from its great value, used as a bribe. There is a story of a famous Roman epicure, whose servant learned at a fish market that a fine fish of rare quality had been sent by the dealers there as a present to the chief magistrate of the city. To the Court he hired on pretended business, but in reality all the time fishing for an invitation. There he found it had been forwarded to a great banker, to whose establishment he followed it with no better success, for it had just been presented to an eminent cardinal. He toiled painfully in the hot day to the palace of his Eminence, where he found it had again started out on its travels. At length he cornered it in the house of a lady who was too wise to give it away—introduced himself, and made himself sufficiently agreeable to receive an invitation to dinner as a reward for his perseverance.

There seems, however, to have been a considerable difference of opinion at different times in regard to which fish deserved the first rank. Turbot was generally, but by no means always, popular among the epicures; and sturgeon, which is, after all, not a delicate fish, held a very high place, which seems incomprehensible. It was often paraded through the streets at festivals, and in triumphal processions, with a crown on its head. Some fish were supposed even to improve by keeping: any one familiar with Paris might come to the conclusion that a similar idea prevailed there. The Greeks were never so nice in regard to their food as were the Romans, and seem to have been indiscriminate in their regard for fish. "Go to market, and get a fish for dinner," said an Athenian to his slave. "What kind, master?" "Why, good old fish, of course; none of your baby food for me." Sword-fish was by them considered as equal to veal.

Speaking of the middle ages, the writer continues:—Some of the fish dishes sound like good eating, and a cunningly seasoned lamprey pie or herring pasty on a fast-day might easily make one forget the absence of the game or joints. By an ancient charter, the Corporation of Yarmouth was bound to send a hundred herrings, baked in four-and-twenty pasties, annually to the King. Gloucester, a learned writer tells us, citing a number of old authorities, was long famous for its lampreys, but the Norman epicures fancied that those of Nantes had a richer flavour. This fish was scarce in the reign of King John, and the Countess of Blois could not find any in England of a flavour to suit her delicate appetite. The King, to oblige her, issued a licence, to one Sampson, to go to Nantes to purchase some for her ladyship's use. In 1231, a ship freighted with lampreys for the table of Henry III., left Nantes, and was wrecked off the Isle of Wight. The news was conveyed to the King, who dispatched a notice to the Sheriff to compel all who found any of these coveted lampreys to immediately surrender them to his majesty's use. As late as the time of Queen Elizabeth, Lord Berkeley used to send lamprey pies as presents to the judges and other distinguished persons. Among the Friday dainties may be classed the luce, a favourite fish with Edward I. He kept a store of them in a stew-pond, at Langley, and had them sent up from the country, "in bread," to keep them fresh—a common way of preserving fish in those days of tardy communication. Not that fish-eaters were always very delicate about that; if we are to credit Peter of Blois, who grumbles, in one of his chatty epistles, that the fish served up at the table of Henry Beauclerk was four days old. "Yet," says he, "its high flavour does not lessen its esteem; and as for the cooks, they care not whether the unlucky guests are sick or not!"

Many a sailor will tell you that whale-brain fritters are not to be despised, and our Arctic explorers have by no means turned up their noses at walrus. The whale was not merely eaten by the simpler Saxons, but was highly appreciated by the more fastidious Normans. In 1264 we find Henry III. ordering the purchase of a hundred pieces of whale for the royal table. Whales found on the coasts were perquisites of royalty, and those at the mouth or banks of the Thames were claimed by the Lord Mayor. Edward III. rewarded three poor sailors with a present of twenty shillings for the discovery of a whale near London Bridge. The Normans had many ways of serving it. Sometimes it was roasted and brought to table on the spit; but the favourite way was to serve it with green peas. The tongue and tail were considered delicacies. But the sea-swine of the Saxons, porco marino of the middle ages, and porpoise of ours, was of all blubber delicacies the most esteemed. It figured on royal tables, and was looked upon as the most acceptable present. In 1491, the bailiffs of Yarmouth sent a fine porpoise as a present to Lord Oxford, whose favour they desired, accompanying it with the message that if they had had any other "deyntes" they would have sent them also. At the marriage of Henry V. the guests were treated with "rostid perpes," and it was also among the dishes at the coronation feast of Henry VII. The King was probably fond of this dish, for it was served up at his table on the feast day of St. George, and my Lord Cardinal courted his majesty's favour by sending a fine porpoise to the palace. The cooks not only roasted and boiled, but made it into pies and pasties; and a learned "maister coke" gives a receipt for a delicious "puddying of purpasse," whilst another tells us how to serve it up in fermented; the wheat was to be seethed in milk, in which finely-chopped almonds had been boiled to thicken it; the porpoise was to be dished up smothered in this delicate sauce, which was also coloured with saffron. Mustard was regarded as an excellent condiment for use with porpoise. This coarse and oily fish was used by the greatest of the land till late in the sixteenth century, after which it appears to have gradually fallen into disrepute. It was found on the tables of Henry VIII. and Queen Elizabeth, and there is a little historical banquet at which Wolsey, Somerset, and other lords of the Star Chamber assisted in demolishing a porpoise which cost eight shillings. Nothing seems to come amiss; all was fish that came into their net; and the stronger and more highly flavoured, the greater was the relish. Surfeited with delicacies, they craved a novelty, from the same reason that George II., who at least lived in an age of refinement, is said to have preferred oysters stale and of strong flavour.

These are but a few brief samples of the contents of a work, which when completed will form a valuable addition to our stock of literature on natural history, incident, and adventure. Succeeding chapters contain descriptions of the great fish markets of the world; while in Part III. just issued, we are introduced to the International Fisheries Exhibition itself, in dealing with which there is an evident desire shown by the author to do full justice to its many excellent and important exhibits. A perusal of the early numbers of this work will be sufficient to place the reader on terms of intimacy with one who is evidently a traveller and a scholar, whose observation and research cover the vast area of the waters of the globe, and whose study of the nature and habits of those denizens of the vasty deep bring to light many a feature of interest and pleasure which hitherto had been obscure. We fancy in some of the pages we trace the handiwork of some other of the works of Cassell's which have made themselves famous, and none more so, perhaps than the volumes on "The Sea," so beloved by boys, and so admired by "children of larger growth." Be that as it may, there is already sufficient in the production of the first three monthly parts to whet the appetite for further instalments, and we opine that when the work is finished, an addition of no mean value will have been made to the popular and educational works which have emanated from the well-known firm whose name stands at the head of this notice.

GRAND COUNCIL OF THE ALLIED MASONIC DEGREES OF ENGLAND AND WALES, &c.

THE annual meeting of this Grand Council was held at the Mitre Hotel, Hampton Court, on Saturday, the 11th instant. Present—Bros. Charles F. Matier Deputy Grand Master, A. Williams Grand Senior Warden, G. Lambert as Grand Junior Warden, Donald M. Dewar Grand Secretary, John L. Mather as G.S.D., C. H. Driver as G.J.D., R. L. Loveland as G.I.G.; also Bros. Spice, Roebuck, Dicketts, Berridge, Spurrell, Anderson, Bywater, and many other Brethren. Grand Council having been opened in due form, the Deputy Grand Master apologised for the absence of the Most Wor. Grand Master, the Rev. Canon Portal, and the minutes of last meeting were read, verified, and signed. The following report was then read, approved, and ordered to be recorded on the minutes:—

Since the last meeting of this Grand Council the various Councils, and the Degrees, under its jurisdiction have made fair progress, and a new Council under the name of the "Four Kings" Council, No. 7, has been duly constituted and consecrated in London, with every promise of success, the first W.M. being Bro. J. L. Mather, who has fortunately secured the services of Bro. C. F. Matier, the D.G.M. of the Order, as Secretary.

The Registered number of members is 322, distributed amongst the subordinate Councils af follows:—

Metropolitan	Council	(T.I.)	London	159
Escuria	"	"	Havant	17
Matier	"	"	Manchester	18
Ebor	"	"	York	22
Portal	"	No. 1	Liverpool	6
St. Cyprian	"	No. 2	Tunis	25
SS. John and Paul	"	No. 3	Malta	36
St. George's	"	No. 4	Wigan	17
Great Orme	"	No. 5	Llandudno	8
Excelsior	"	No. 6	Calcutta
Four Kings	"	No. 7	London	14
				322

But the number is probably considerably more as returns have not yet been received from the Excelsior Council, at Calcutta, nor from the Councils at Bolton, Rochdale, or Hull.

The financial position of the Grand Council is satisfactory, as after payment of all claims and preliminary expenses, a balance of £10 10s 3d remains in the hands of the Grand Treasurer.

Recognising the services of Bro. C. F. Matier, at all times rendered with hearty good will and efficiency, the Grand Master has much pleasure in re-appointing him as D.G.M.

(Signed) DON. M. DEWAR,
Grand Secretary.

The Deputy Grand Master then appointed the following Grand Officers, by command of the Most Worshipful Grand Master, and invested those present, viz.:—

Grand Council was then closed in due form.

METROPOLITAN COUNCIL (T.I.) ALLIED MASONIC DEGREES.

THE installation meeting of this Council was held at the Mitre Hotel, Hampton Court, on Saturday, 11th inst., on which occasion Bro. George Lambert was installed as W.M. by Bro. C. Matier Deputy Grand Master, and afterwards appointed and invested his Officers as follow:—Bros. Robert Roy S.W, Henry Venn J.W., D. M. Dewar Treasurer and Secretary, Rev. W. S. Moses Chaplain, Herbert Dicketts Conductor, Thomas C. Walls S.D., Robert Berridge J.D., R. L. Loveland I.G., J. L. Mather D. of C., R. P. Spice Steward, Edward Mills Tyler. The brethren afterwards celebrated their annual Festival and passed a most enjoyable evening, under the presidency of the W.M.

United Mariners' Lodge of Instruction, No. 30.—It was our agreeable duty, on Wednesday evening last, to attend a meeting of this newly-established, but eminently popular Lodge of Instruction, held at the Lugard Tavern, Lugard-road, Peckham, when there was a goodly muster of brethren and visitors, under the presidency of Bro. J. B. Harris as W.M. There were also present Bros. P. Harvey S.W., Andrews J.W., Lean S.D., Bartlett J.D., Layland I.G., J. Rotheroe Secretary, Walter Martin Preceptor, Alfred Pusey, Shorter, Thomas, Morgan, Ledger P.M., Osborne, and many others. Lodge was opened with the customary formalities, and advanced, when the ceremony of raising was rehearsed, the working being carried out in a manner which afforded great satisfaction to, and the edification of, the brethren present. The first section of the lecture was worked by Bro. Thomas, after which a vote of thanks was unanimously accorded to the Worshipful Master for the able manner in which he had conducted the proceedings of the evening. Brethren residing in the South of London are wholesomely pleased at having such a Lodge of Instruction planted in their midst. This is evidenced by the large gathering of brethren who assemble weekly at the Lugard Tavern. Every arrangement which can possibly conduce to the comfort and enjoyment of brethren is carefully studied by Bro. Pusey, and visitors will always be cordially welcomed at this offshoot of one of the most popular Lodge of Instruction in the City of London.

Dalhousie Lodge of Instruction, No. 860.—Held at Bro. Smyth's, Sisters' Tavern, Pownall-road, Dalston, on Tuesday, 14th inst. Present—Bros. Marsh W.M., S. Clark S.W., Forss J.W., Smyth S.D., Brasted J.D., Ackhurst I.G., F. Carr Secretary, Wardell P.M. acting Preceptor; also Bros. Wilson, Christian, Lorkin, Powell, Bunker, &c. Lodge was opened in due form and the minutes of previous meeting read and confirmed. Bro. Bunker offered himself a candidate for passing, was interrogated, and entrusted. Lodge was opened in the second degree, and Bro. Bunker was passed to the Fellow Craft. Bro. Christian gave the Lecture on the tracing board. Bro. C. Lorkin worked the first and second sections of the lecture, assisted by the brethren. Bros. Ackhurst and Wilson answered the questions leading to the third degree. Lodge was resumed in the first. Bro. S. Clark was elected W.M. for the ensuing week and appointed his Officers in rotation. Lodge was closed in due form and adjourned.

Hyde Park Lodge of Instruction, No. 1425.—The usual meeting of this Lodge of Instruction was held on Monday evening, at the Fountains Abbey, Praed-street, Paddington. The muster was fair, considering the time of the year and the very oppressive state of the weather. Bro. G. Coop filled the position of W.M., and he was supported by the following brethren:—J. J. Thomas S.W., W. A. Vincent J.W., G. Read P.M. Preceptor, H. Dehane Secretary, J. Billerby jun. S.D., M. J. Green J.D, T. C. Keeble I.G., R. G. Cursons W.S.; also C. J. Craig, E. R. Taylor, H. Robinson, W. Honeyball, C. J. Fox, J. Read, W. Death, R Fairclough, W. J. Shetton 758, and W. Fieldson I.P.M. 548. The W.M. was evidently well acquainted with the duties of his office, in fact almost too well, for he somewhat hurried the work, which would have been more effective if he had been more deliberative. He rehearsed the ceremony of initiation, and afterwards worked the first section of the first lecture with skill and precision. Bro. Read worked the second and third sections of the same lecture in a quiet and impressive manner. He is familar with his work, speaks distinctly, a very necessary qualification in one who undertakes to teach others; he is courtesy itself, and if he would but raise his voice a little more he would add to the claims he already possesses as an able Preceptor. Bro. Thomas was elected to fill the chair on Monday night next. It should be mentioned that a vote of thanks was recorded on the minutes to Bro. Vincent for his able working on the occasion of occupying the chair for the first time on the preceding Monday night. A petition for relief was presented by a brother belonging to an Irish Lodge, and although the spirit of charity was manifest among the brethren, we were glad to observe that due caution was exercised in examining into the case. Relief was afforded in a manner that accorded with the circumstances of the case. This Lodge of Instruction has got a comfortable home, worthy of the purpose to which it is dedicated once a week; a willing, able, and courteous Secretary, and a Preceptor who shares in the same advantages. We were pleased with the tone of the whole of the proceedings.

Kingsland Lodge of Instruction, No. 1693.—Held at Bro. Longhurst's, Canonbury Tavern, N., on Monday, 13th Aug. Present:—Bros. Collingridge W.M., Gribbell S.W., Rhodes J.W., Fenner S.D., Marks J.D., Tillett I.G., Pearcy Acting Preceptor, also other brethren. Lodge was opened in due form, and the minutes of last Lodge meeting read and confirmed. The ceremony of initiation was rehearsed, Bro. Stretch candidate. Lodge was opened and closed in the second degree. Proposed by Bro. Pearcy, and seconded by Bro. Fenner, that a cordial vote of thanks be entered on the minutes for the manner in which Bro. Collingridge had fulfilled the duties of the chair of K.S., this being the first time. Lodge was closed in due form, and adjourned till Monday, 20th August, at 8·30.

Brixton Lodge of Instruction, No. 1949. — The usual weekly meeting was held on Tuesday evening last, the 14th inst., at Bro. Monk's, the Prince Regent, Dulwich-road, East Brixton, when there was a very good attendance, considering the great heat and the many brethren away from town. The W.M., Bro. Stephen Richardson, was supported by Bros. Hooper S.W., Jones J.W., Francis Preceptor, Williams Secretary, Harling P.M. S.D., Poore J.D., Ambrose, I.G.; also Bros. Thomas Poore P.M., Moss P.M., Edmunds, Knight, Johnson, and Hudepohl. Lodge was opened in due form, and the Secretary read the minutes of the previous meeting, which were unanimously confirmed. Lodge was opened in the second degree, and Bro. Edmunds, as candidate, being interrogated, proved his proficiency and was entrusted. Lodge was opened in the third degree, and the ceremony of raising, including the traditional history, was rehearsed by the W.M. most impressively. Lodge was regularly closed down to the first degree. Bro. Hooper was elected W.M. for the ensuing week. Bro Richardson asked the Lodge to accept from him the Rough and Perfect Ashlars, placed on the Senior and Junior Wardens' pedestals that evening, as a small mark of his esteem for the Lodge, and for the many kindnesses received from the brethren. A cordial vote of thanks was passed to Bro. Richardson for his kind present. Hearty good wishes having been expressed, Lodge was closed in due form, and adjourned in perfect harmony and brotherly love. Subsequently the monthly meeting of the Brixton Lodge of Instruction Benevolent Association was held, and Bro. George Monk and Mrs. Banks were each successful in securing on the ballot the sum of £5 5s towards the Masonic Charities.

THE

A WEEKLY RECORD OF MASONIC INTELLIGENCE.

SANCTIONED BY THE GRAND LODGE OF ENGLAND.

Registered at the G.P.O. as a Newspaper.

VOL. XVIII.—No. 450. SATURDAY, 25th AUGUST 1883. [PRICE THREEPENCE. 13s 6d per annum, post free.

STATUS OF PAST MASTERS.

THIS vexed question is far from being settled. The resolution arrived at in Grand Lodge on the 8th inst. is not final; it may be open to revision, if not to reversal. Much will depend upon the manner in which the question is approached, and no greater ill could befall the Craft than by importing the spirit of rivalry into the argument. It is not a matter of precedence or power between London and Provincial Lodges that is now in dispute, but one affecting the deepest interests of the whole body. As such it should be discussed with reverence and caution, with a due regard to the many points involved, and with a view to harmony of working. It is to be feared that certain Provincial brethren are labouring under the impression that the members of London Lodges are hostile to the proposed change, not because of the change itself so much, but because of the source whence it comes. Bro. Beach, the R.W. Provincial Grand Master of Hampshire, alluded to the subject at the recent Provincial Grand Lodge gathering, and the tone of his remarks sounds more like that of triumph than of confidence in right. The report of his speech in our contemporary is meagre and, it may be, misleading. It would be wise, therefore, not to judge too severely in the absence of the fuller text. Yet there is something in the spirit of what is recorded that should arouse thoughtful consideration and awaken the desire for a full and righteous inquiry. Bro. Beach stated that there was an idea that the Provinces were to be lessened in power, that in consequence of that idea Provincial brethren had mustered in force to show that they were not to be easily ignored, and that the result showed that they were to have greater power than heretofore. It is to be regretted that something like a challenge to the attitude assumed by the Provinces was given by our contemporary prior to the meeting of Special Grand Lodge. No doubt the idea of the writer was to impress upon the brethren generally the desirability of assembling in large numbers in order that the grave matter at issue should have the advantage of the experience and of the trained minds of the rulers of the Craft. But that fact was not clearly defined, and the impression of rivalry got abroad, much to the detriment of that calmness of judgment so necessary in dealing with a question involving nothing less than a complete revolution in practice. We are deeply interested in this question; we have formed a strong opinion upon it; but we are not so committed to finality as to refuse to listen to the other side, and we are open even to admit our error if it can be made clear to us. We repudiate any feeling of hostility to the Provincial brethren. There should be no question of party in Masonry, and the only point worthy of consideration is—What is best for the Craft at large? To depart from this rule is to let loose passion, to introduce personal feeling, and to make the determination of the question at issue a battle of parties. Discord, and not brotherly love, would be the result. No brother has a monopoly of sense, of right, or of principle; nor do these qualities necessarily reside in London in contradistinction to the provinces, and vice versa. The whole body are the seat of wisdom, and they should discuss the question in its broadest sense, and with due regard to the great responsibility they owe to the Constitution.

It cannot be said that the ground has been fairly and fully covered. The discussion on the 8th inst. was far from being exhaustive. The most serious point raised was left in an unsatisfactory condition. It was contended that a private Lodge had the power to appoint a joining member a Past Master of the Lodge provided he lawfully held a similar position in his Mother Lodge. This contention was disputed, and upon appeal to authority it was stated that some private Lodges had acted in the manner described, but that there was no written law either for or against the custom. By rule 141 it is provided that if no Past Master of the Lodge is present at a regularly constituted meeting, then the senior Past Master in attendance, being a subscribing member of a Lodge, should preside. That rule simply embodies what appears to us to be the inevitable, for we hold that only a Master or Past Master can rule in the Lodge. Under the circumstances then, there is no alternative than to ask a Past Master to preside, and courtesy suggests that it should be the oldest Past Master in rank present. The office of Master of a Lodge is one of the fundamental principles of the Order. The title of Past Master and the privileges attached thereto are conferred by the Constitution, whereas rank is regulated by the custom of the Lodges. A Lodge cannot deprive a Past Master of his title when once it has been properly obtained, but it can define the position or rank he shall hold in the Lodge. The practice, no doubt, is that of succession upon a plan well understood, but various circumstances might intervene to disturb the regular order of things. Suppose a Past Master leaves his Mother Lodge altogether for a time and returns, is it not within the province of the Lodge to determine what rank the returned prodigal shall hold? He might have passed the chair in another Lodge, and as the new law runs, the Mother Lodge would be compelled, if they readmitted him, to give him a certain and immediate rank, whether they approved or not. They might blackball him, of course, but that would intensify a practice that all good Masons would be glad were it only used on very rare and extreme occasions. The evil of the whole thing is that it interferes with the privileges of private Lodges, perpetuates native rank in a foreign home, assumes the possession of merit, and compels rewards independent of the sanction of judgment, of right, and of experience. Surely a Lodge has as much right to determine the rank of its members as it has to admit them. Both conditions can be harmonised with the fundamental principles of the Craft. There are rules for the guidance of Lodges in the admission of candidates, but they leave much to the judgment of the brethren. Essential principles are defined and protected, in other respects the largest liberty is allowed. A similar law with regard to Past Masters would meet every requirement. Let it be understood that a private Lodge has the power to regulate, not confer, rank, and all that is necessary would be yielded. The title of a Past Master is outside of the control of the Lodges, but the right to define the position he shall hold after he has gained the title, ought to be their especial right. It is so with regard to their own members, and there is no reason why a stranger should be allowed superior privileges. If the new law is to stand, then private Lodges can only exercise their right in one way. Why drive them to an unpleasant necessity? It would be more reasonable to permit of freedom in its fullest extent rather than impose conditions which in many cases at least will be found intolerable. There is all the difference in the world between permission and compulsion. A Lodge in its wisdom and generosity might desire to honour a joining brother. The pleasure of granting such honour would be the greater from the fact that it could be withheld. Take away this discretion, and mistrust and opposition follow. A right assumed in defiance of the opinion of free men in a perfect Republic is an anomaly, irritating to the members and barren in honour to the intruder.

The more the whole question is examined the more difficult does it become. As time goes on fresh points arise which demand examination. Bro. Ralph Gooding, G.S D., has raised three very pertinent questions. He asks: "Do Past Masters who joined a Lodge before this special meeting become Past Masters of that Lodge in virtue of this resolution? Can members who join a Lodge hereafter, and who are not Past Masters at the time of joining, claim the rank of Past Master of that Lodge by occupying the chair of any other Lodge? Can an initiate join another Lodge, and then by passing the chair (of that Lodge) claim the rank of a Past Master of his Mother Lodge?" These are samples of difficulties and incongruities never dreamt of by the promoters of the new law, and yet they are too important to be allowed to pass unnoticed. We shall not attempt to answer Bro. Gooding, nor do we think it possible to give a satisfactory reply to his queries. They open up grave difficulties, and point to revolutionary changes, the end of which cannot be foreseen. We implore the Craft to be watchful of this proposed change, to at least look at the question in all its bearings before finally deciding. It need not be discussed with bitterness; there need be no striving after mastery. Right, and that only, should prevail, and if the brethren will only approach the subject with an open mind and a pure heart, a happy issue will be the result.

CANADA.

THE following eloquent sermon was preached before the Freemasons of Toronto, assembled to celebrate St John's Day, by the Rev. Evan Davies, M.A., Chaplain of the Grand Lodge of Canada:—

"Verily I say unto you, among them that are born of women there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist: notwithstanding he that is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he."—Matt. xi. 11.

"Brethren, I cannot adequately express to you how glad I am today to meet with you in this house of prayer, and thus show to the world that we, as Freemasons, take a personal interest in the worship of Almighty God. I rejoice that I can take part with you today in celebrating the anniversary of John the Baptist, one of the patron saints of our illustrious and venerable Order of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and I sincerely pray that God may preserve all of us in body and in soul, and that the Supreme Governor and Architect of the Universe may vouchsafe to each of us His presence now and for ever, that we may preserve our Order by adorning ourselves with every ornament of Christian virtue. It is not necessary for me to tell you why John the Baptist was selected as the patron saint of our Order, but I shall ask you to note the character of the Baptist, and then endeavour to deal with some of the principles of Freemasonry, together with those of that religion on which our Order is founded. John the Baptist was one of the greatest apostles, and he was not only an apostle and a preacher, but a witness of the true light and a noble example for our imitation. He was faithful in the discharge of every duty, and inflexible in moral strength. He was sent to prepare the way for Christ his Master, and was a witness of Him. He was ever ready to speak the truth, and ever bold in reproving vice. History affords no finer instance of self-denial than his unfaltering discharge of duty. How beautiful from the lips of this illustrious and popular man are the words, full of deep piety and humility. "He it is who cometh after me, the latchet of whose shoe I am unworthy to unloose," and again: "He must increase, but I must decrease." These were the utterances of a true man,—a man of sterling integrity, and pre-eminently one worthy to be held up as our example. True and faithful was he in his denunciations of vice and wickedness. He spoke boldly and plainly to every man. In his teaching he was an Old Testament prophet, the preacher of a stern morality. His teaching was sharply and concisely put. What denunciation of the Old Testament is stronger than his denunciation of the Pharisees—"O generation of vipers, who hath warned ye to flee from the wrath to come?" No morality in the Old Testament is sharper than this, "Now is the axe laid to the root of the tree, and every tree that beareth not good fruit, is hewn down and cast into the fire." All these expressions show a devoted firmness in the discharge of his duties, and worthy indeed was he of our following. Nor was he more a victim to outward influence than to the influences which might arise in his own mind, but no thought of fear or favour, no desire or ambition for wealth could shake his moral courage. Wealth and honour and great possessions were in his power, but nought could touch the firm honour of this our most noble patron saint. Not for a moment did he give way to that feeling which is but too prevalent in the world to-day that the rich and powerful are not to be harshly spoken to when their conduct is contrary to the laws of God and man. If the rich are guilty of these things they should be condemned for such conduct, no matter how high their position. John the Baptist met his death because he was honest in the discharge of his duty, and refused to be turned aside by the threats of the wicked monarch. Brethren, let us learn from the noble example of our patron saint. I pray you to be unshaken in truth and right, and in act and speech against worldly things when they are evil. The temptation of the preacher of righteousness, who was suddenly made the adviser of the king, and as suddenly required to condone the crime of that king was a terrible one, and, brethren, the same temptation attacks all of us at one time or other. You may purchase the friendship of some if you will only gloss over their faults. If you will ignore the evil conduct and vices of some you will be welcome to their hearts and homes. If you will only keep what the world calls a wise silence you may be very popular with some people. But this is not the life of a true child of God, any more than it is the life of a true and honourable Freemason. The life of St. John the Baptist teaches us to stand forth as a light, reflecting as he did from the light of our Lord Jesus Christ, all the great virtues that teach us to live the life of Him who was the son of our Father which is in Heaven. The people whom John the Baptist laboured among wanted a religion that they could put on when it suited their pleasure or worldliness, and lay aside in turn when they wanted their freedom. The religion of John the Baptist was not of such a character. When the Pharisees and tax-gatherers asked them what they might do to be saved, he not alone told them to repent, for that would be easy, but called on them to bring forth fruits meet for repentance. That was too hard. The religion of John the Baptist was too difficult for them because of its stern morality. It demanded outward piety, as well as private morality. Some of my hearers may ask, what has all this to do with Freemasonry? Brethren, I make bold to say that this has much to do with it. Yes, it has much to do with Freemasonry, and the more closely we examine the principles of our Order, the more we shall see what it has to do with it; and the more closely we study the constitution of our venerable Order, we shall learn how to live in the moral precepts therein contained, and thus see how directly it bears on what I have said. These precepts teach us to follow his doctrines, and so live that we may truly repent according to his teachings. Of the principles of our ancient society, I hesitate not to say, I have the highest opinion, and I believe that he who faithfully puts them into practice will be a Christian, a man zealous in every good work and loyal to the constitution of the country in which he lives. Freemasonry shuts out as unworthy of its privileges the atheist and the infidel from its membership. With the open Bible upon its altars it demands of every candidate for its mysteries that he shall have faith in a personal Redeemer, the Creator and Governor of the universe. The foundations of Freemasonry are laid on the principles of religion. It exercises a moral influence over men, and teaches its members that the all seeing eye of God ever beholds them. It asks its members to have faith in God, hope of immortality, and charity for all mankind. It is raised on the sacred pillars of religion, faith and duty, and has, as our noble Grand Master in England, the Prince of Wales, truly said, loyalty and charity for its watchwords. It teaches us to believe in the resurrection of the body, and also in the immortality of the soul. Still I would say that Freemasonry does not take the place of religion. It cannot save a man's soul. It cannot take away the sting of death or turn it into victory. It does not claim to any such thing, but is simply a system of morality. It does not pretend to usurp the power that belongs to God, and to God's Church, but encourages its members to be faithful in the discharge of their religious duties. I am compelled to admit that some members of our Order neglect their religious duties and seldom or never attend the services of God's house. Some, too, indulge in intemperance and other evils, and neglect their wives and families. Such actions not only give the opponents an opportunity to speak evil against us, but prove to the outward world that they are unworthy men, and does a grievous injustice to our Order, as well as to ourselves, and all should condemn such hypocritical conduct, because it is wrong. If we are true Freemasons and faithful followers of John the Baptist, we will live holier and happier lives here on earth, and die in the hope of a glorious resurrection. I would to God that every man here to-day was worthy to be made a Freemason. Would to God that every Freemason would follow the principle of his Order in his daily walk and conversation, as did our noble examplar. Brethren, I would urge you to live as Freemasons, and if I did not impress on you the importance of living as sober, temperate, honest, reliable, truthful, God-fearing men, I would be unfaithful to the Master whose ambassador I am. I stand before you to-day, not only as a Freemason, but a minister of the Lord Jesus Christ to preach His everlasting gospel to perishing souls, and as such I proclaim to you that something more than mere morality is necessary in order to procure the enjoyment of heavenly life and peace. We must be true to those principles which were inculcated by John the Baptist, and I urge you, dear brethren, to be true to them in all countries and at all times. Oh, barter not truth, or moral right for any friendship of the earth, but be true to the ideal of manhood which is shown in the life of our Saviour and his disciple our patron saint. Freemasonry has for its cardinal principle the brotherhood of man, and the eternal fatherhood of God, so that while I hold as many others do, to the distinctive tearchings of the church of which I am a humble member, I meet with those who differ from me on many points, but all can stand on common ground in our Order. The citizens of all nations, and tongues and sects, meet in this brotherhood, and we have been taught to live together in one great family, true to each other as God is true to us. As some brother has well said: Brotherhood is that which the world craves for. The poor, sick heart of the world needs it. Not that fellowship which is cold and barren, nor the religion which is but too often the tool of intolerance. Not that brotherhood which seeks to advance at the expense of the civil rights of others, but that brotherhood which endeavours to relieve suffering and to make its members loyal and true men. Freemasonry teaches us our duty to our fellow-man. It teaches us to love justice and mercy and to relieve the distressed and soothe the afflicted. It likewise teaches us our duty to God. It teaches us to believe that He will reward virtue and punish vice, and that He is ever present. It teaches us never to mention His name without reverence; to seek His aid in all lawful undertakings and to pay Him that sincere and loving homage, which is due from the created to the creator. It recommends to us—as the main source of contemplation, the Bible which must be open in every Lodge while at work. It teaches us to regulate our conduct by the divine precepts which that book contains and ever to esteem God, and ever to esteem His services and religion. It teaches us our duty to ourselves, it urges us to live peaceable and well-regulated lives. It teaches us to shun every object which is wrong, and to learn from the Bible lessons of humility, faith, and charity, and to discharge every duty that may arise in the course of our life here, and that we should at all times be preparing for the great event which every moment is bringing nearer to us, so that when the silver cord be loosened, and the golden bowl be broken, and our dust be returned to its mother dust, and the spirit to the God who gave it, we shall be judged worthy to stand at the right hand of God. Freemasonry strives to stimulate virtue, and to encourage every good work. Our secrets are lawful and honourable, our objects are well known to the world, but for the sake of such among the congregation who are not Freemasons, and yet whom we gladly welcome with us to-day, I would say that there is not an obligation in Freemasonry, and I have taken more than eighteen degrees, that conflicts in any way with the duty we owe to ourselves and to the State. It impresses upon its members the necessity of so living according to the law of God, that they may fit themselves as living stones for that temple which is not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. Like every other society, it numbers among its members many whose lives are inconsistent with its precepts; many who fail to reflect any degree of its grandeur. But even among Christ's Apostles there was a Judas, and Freemasonry must not be condemned because there are some who are untrue to its principles. When there are defections I hold they should be attributed to their proper cause—our poor, weak fallen nature, instead of ascribing them to any society to which the offenders belonged. Freemasonry strives to inculcate morality, and endeavours to cast its influence into the scale of right. So far as it strives, I say, to make men truer and nobler, it is deserving, not of condemnation, but of the co-operation and earnest sympathy of all right-minded men. We are not bound to protect a brother who has been found guilty of murder, or any other offence against the laws of God and man, although such charges have been made against this venerable society. The teaching of our patron saint, John the Baptist, was earnest. He did not tolerate lukewarmness in the discharge of his duty to God, himself and his fellowmen. He received the approval of the Master in the words of the text, "Verily I say unto you, among them that are born of women there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist." So let us follow that example that we, too, at least may receive the blessing of our Father in heaven. Time forbids me to enlarge upon the lessons which are inculcated by our symbols, each of which convey a practical lesson upon our duties, which we could practise with advantage to ourselves here. But just a word with regard to the white lambskin apron. When the candidate is first introduced to the mysteries of our Order, that symbol of purity and innocence is given him. It is so susceptible of defilement that an unkind feeling toward a brother cannot be entertained by the wearer of the apron. Oh, how hard it is for poor, weak, sinful men to carry its teachings into practice, but we must aim at it so that we may triumph over our weakness. By the very same symbol we are reminded of another fact that suffering has been endured and blood has been shed in order that we might be clothed in spotless white. And we are reminded of him who died to save our souls. We are taught by it that we have been bought with a price—even the blood of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Let us strive to remember these things, and, keeping in mind the privileges and responsibilities of our calling, carefully live the mysteries which we believe, and we will be worthy members of an illustrious order. We have in our ranks men as true as steel. Men who would be ornaments to any society on earth, if we would only strive as the gavel and the chisel teach us to break off the rough corners of our characters. We must live Freemasonry as well as teach it. Wherever moral corruption shows itself, wherever want wastes the widow and the orphan, wherever evil struggles with the good, there is work for each of us to do. We cannot give back to the widow the husband for whom she mourns. But we can relieve her wants. We can wipe away the tear from the cheek of the poor orphan child. This is a Mason's work. It is a noble work—a Godlike work. I believe that there are hundreds of thousands of widows and orphans throughout the world who will heartily thank God for the work done by this grand old institution. In Canada there are many orphans who are now occupying good positions whose lives would have been blighted had it not been for the timely assistance rendered by the Masonic body in the hour of need. Society, I believe, brethren, cannot afford to dispense with any organisation that seeks to unite the sons of Adam in one great family. The report of the Grand Lodge shows that 9,536 82 dollars was expended in benefits for the families of deceased brethren during the past year. Add to this sum the amount which has been expended by the 348 local Lodges in the Province of Ontario. Take the city of Toronto and see the great work that is being done by the Masonic body here. I understand your local Board of Benefits contributes to the support of 45 widows and 75 orphans, and besides paying funeral and other expenses. For all these purposes upwards of 4,000 dollars per annum is expended. But the good work done by the private Lodges, some 13 or 14 in number, in the city and vicinity, should not be unnoticed. Each Lodge has its own benefit fund, by means of which it renders assistance to its members, and also the widows and orphans of brethers who have been members of that Lodge. In this way each Lodge will contribute about 100 dols. per annum. This makes a grand total of over 5,000 dols., which is given by the Freemasons of Toronto to assist widows and orphans, who would otherwise have been in want. There is no sin, perhaps, greater than in neglecting the performance of this duty, for which we ask your generous support. We are forcibly reminded of the peril of selfishly enjoying our wealth without attending to the wants of our poorer neighbours by that parable in Luke, in which we read of one who was cast into the torments of hell for neglecting his poorer brethren. Brethren, you have done a noble work—a Christ-like work in the past, and I trust you may persevere in it. "Be not weary in well-doing, for in due time, ye shall reap if ye faint not." I cannot describe the heartfelt gratitude of the poor widow and orphan child for the generous assistance rendered them in the hour of their sore trial. To visit the fatherless and the widow in their affliction is surely a noble work. How many widows' hearts have rejoiced, and how many orphans who are now occupying high positions, owe their present prosperity to the generous assistance given by Freemasons? As the light of its benevolence has shone in the pathway of many a poor, distressed and poverty-stricken family, they have reason to say—we thank God for this society. It requires more than degrees to make a true Freemason, and a man who joins our Order for the sake of personal gain, has an unworthy conception of the dignity of our calling. The spirit of God coming into the heart of a man can alone make a true Freemason, and in this age when terrible vices, such as gambling, intemperance, and others, assail us at every turn, it is our bounden duty to contend against them. It is pleasing to note that some of the Grand Lodges of the United States have denounced those vices as high treason against the canons of Freemasonry. The time has now come when we must assume our position before the eyes of the world, and I would say, that the Freemason who has not the moral courage to stand against these things is a moral coward, and by no means following the example of our noble patron, John the Baptist. Our religion, our faith, our ritual call us to exercise those virtues which elevate human character, and let us in the name of God leave off these vices and strive to help others to leave them. If there be one here to-day who is given to the vices of intemperance or gambling, let him dash them to the ground as the vilest enemies—enemies who are endeavouring to rob his soul of happiness here and hereafter, as well as to deprive his family of the necessaries of life. Endeavour to live as one ever under the all-seeing eye should live. Brother Masons, to do so, work on earth not as eye-servants, but like the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart. "Labour not for that which perisheth, but for that which endureth to everlasting life." We may never all meet again. Changes must, and do come, and death is certain. Life is transitory and uncertain. But there is a desire that can never fail. God grant that it may be yours and mine. There is one principle that can never fail. That principle is an intense longing love for heaven, that desire is a faith in Him who lived and died for you. God grant that you may believe Him now. My prayer is that each of us may live to accomplish our work on earth as men and Masons, and that at last it may be said unto us:—"Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." Amen.

Bro. Isaac has kindly consented to rehearse the ceremony of installation, at the Kingsland Lodge of Instruction, held at the Canonbury Tavern, N., on Monday, 3rd September, at 8.30. p.m. It is to be hoped there will be a good attendance of brethren.

A meeting of the North London Chapter of Improvement was held on 23rd inst., at the Canonbury Tavern, St. Mary's Road, Islington. Comps. Higgins M.E.Z., Dean H., Brasted J., George P.S., Sheffield S.N. This Chapter of Improvement commands good attendances throughout the year.

Brighton having been freed from the crowd that usually assembles during the race week, has now resumed its wonted aspect. We note, however, that improvements are continually being made for the comfort of visitors, while the critical eyes of the Mayor, Brother Alderman Cox, Chairman of the Brighton Aquarium, and his popular Deputy, Bro. Alderman Davey, aided by the Town Council, have been well exercised. As far as amusements are concerned, Mrs. Nye Chart, at her elegant theatre, has supplied the visitors with The Lights of London, and next week Miss Kate Santley will appear in the Merry Duchess. At the Aquarium Mr. J. Parry Cole's Drawing-room Operetta Company are drawing good houses. The artistes comprise Miss Champneys, Madame Susannah Cole, Misses Marian Stewart and Edith Stokes, and Messrs. St. Just, W. Offord, L. Tarrington, and R. Lansmere. On Tuesday the visitors had an opportunity of witnessing the feats of a celebrated swimmer, well known in America, Professor Marquis Bibbero. This gentleman claims to be a champion swimmer, and fully justifies his claim. He swam the East River, New York, tied hand and foot, and performed other marvellous feats. Great credit is due to the indefatigable manager, Mr. Wilkinson (of Crystal Palace celebrity) for his excellent catering for the patrons. The Oxford has been drawing good houses, Andy Merriles' Female Christys lately appeared at the Gaiety. The West Pier is crowded day and night, and Bro. Devine's excellent band has been greatly augmented. The selections of popular music elicit frequent plaudits and encores.

HOLIDAY HAUNTS.

—:o:—

DUE NORTH AND THE EASTERN COAST.

BATTLE Bridge, now known as King's Cross, is an historical site. Here, a thousand years ago, King Alfred defeated the Danes, hence its original name. A loyal bricklayer, in his enthusiasm, erected an octagonal tower in honour of George IV. and surmounted it with a statue of his majesty of so grotesque a character that the late George Cruikshank, the prince of caricaturists, sketched it and handed it down to posterity as "Dusty Bob in a Blanket." There is nothing "dusty" about the structure that forms the terminus of the Great Northern Railway, nor about the "Flying Scotsman," which does the distance between London and Edinburgh (close upon 400 miles), allowing half-an-hour's stay at York, in nine hours. This is perfection of modern travelling and a great triumph of enterprise.

Like all other railways, the Great Northern has running powers over other lines and is thus enabled to book passengers through to most parts of the country. The great trunk begins at King's Cross, and, strictly speaking, ends at Doncaster, but it continues on to Edinburgh and Glasgow. From the former place it branches out and covers a great part of Scotland. Out of the trunk, limbs stretch forth in various directions, both right and left, taking in all the centres of commerce and covering many places of interest to the tourist. We propose traversing some of the districts, especially those lying on the right of the line, which serve the east coast particularly. We have already dealt with that portion which embraces the coast from Essex to the extreme of Norfolk at Lynn. Inland, however, between London and Grantham, there are many spots that deserve notice. On the very threshold of departure from the southern terminus there are Hampstead and Highgate, Hornsey, Edgware, and Barnet, all possessing charms of history, scenery and associations. These places are known to Londoners, but they are not so familiar as they deserve to be to most visitors from the country. Further on there is Hatfield House, the ancestral home of the Earl of Salisbury. It was a royal residence in the time of Henry VIII., the home prison of Elizabeth when Mary reigned. It was here that Elizabeth received the news of her sister's death while seated under the shade of an aged oak, and where she held her first council prior to going to London to assume regal sway. James I. exchanged Hatfield for another palace, and Sir Robert Cecil became the owner. He was afterwards created an Earl and commenced building the present mansion which was finished in 1611. Ever since that time it has descended from father to son. It is a grand place and contains much that would delight sightseers, one thing, especially, that would excite their credulity. There is a pedigree of Queen Bess which purports to trace her to Adam. The discovery of the two strips of leather or parchment that are now exercising the minds of the learned in ancient signs, is nothing to this pedigree. On a spur line is Hertford, the scene of a siege by the Danes, the danger of which was averted by the genius of Alfred the Great. Light vessels belonging to the invaders were anchored where Ware now stands—the Ware of huge bed notoriety—and siege was laid to the town of Hertford. Alfred, with the skill of a great general, divided the stream into three channels, and left the Danish vessels high and dry, a prey to the enemy. About two miles from Hertford is Panshanger House, the family seat of Earl Cowper, and near Watford is Cassiobury House, belonging to the Earl of Essex, whose family name is Capel. The Capels originally came from Suffolk, and one of that name was a flourishing citizen of London, and Lord Mayor. Capel Court, known throughout the commercial world, derives its title from him. In addition to the beauties of Cassiobury, there are some curious relics in the library. One is the handkerchief which Lord Conningsby applied to the shoulder of William III. when he was wounded at the battle of the Boyne. There are also a piece of the velvet pall covering taken from the tomb of Charles I. when it was opened at Windsor, in 1813, and a fragment of the garter the King wore at his execution. Two miles south of Stevenage is Knebworth, the seat of Earl Lytton. The late Earl has drawn a picture of this beautiful place, and some idea of its charms may be gathered from his description, which is quoted in that admirable work, "Abbeys, Castles, and Ancient Halls of England and Wales," published by Warne and Co., Bedford Street, London. Elizabeth was a frequent visitor at Knebworth, where she slept at the time of the Spanish Armada fright. We might dwell upon the features to be seen in Herts and in the adjoining counties of Bedford, Huntingdon and Northampton, but must hasten on to Lincolnshire. At Peterborough the line branches off through Spalding, then skirting the coast opens up three watering places, two of them at least of comparatively recent growth. Skegness has become a town by the sea, and is handy for Boston; Mablethorpe is growing in size and favour, and meets the demands of South and Mid-Lincolnshire, while Cleethorpes is not far from Grimsby, one of the most important fishing towns in the kingdom. The line bears round to Doncaster. The whole of the country of the "Yellow Bellies" is covered by a network between Peterborough and Doncaster, and as Lincolnshire is perhaps less frequented by tourists than almost any county in England, it offers a wide field of pleasure and interest. Lincoln might form the centre, and from the ancient city some pleasant jaunts might be made. The antiquarian would find much to engage his attention in the city itself, from the ancient High Bridge that spans the Witham, the Stonebow, over which is the Guildhall, thence up the High Street, and the Strait, past the Jew's House of historic renown, on up the Steep Hill—a reality and not a fiction—to the Castle at the top on the left and the magnificent Cathedral on the right, rearing its grand old hoary head to the sky and dominating the valley below, at the bottom of which are situated a great portion of the city and those numerous foundries for the manufacture of agricultural implements so justly celebrated all over the globe. Midway between the Castle and the Cathedral runs the old Roman road, with Newport Arch spanning it, and carrying on its foundations the work of over eighteen centuries ago. Parts of the architecture of the Cathedral are unrivalled in England, and we believe it is Charles Knight who claims for it the first rank in the country. Its surroundings are pretty, and its position commanding. The river Witham runs through the valley below, and opposite is another hill forming part of a Common, and near which is Canwick Hall, the home of the quondam Colonel Sibthorpe who sat in Parliament for the city, whose memory is still cherished for his noble-hearted generosity. We could linger at this fine old city, but other places claim attention. We have dwelt upon it somewhat at length because possibly it is less known than most other centres, except to a few antiquarians and art enthusiasts and those engaged in trade.

We have passed by Grantham, and yet it possesses much of interest. The Town Hall is a handsome structure, and the church is a noble building with a spire 273 feet in height. Isaac Newton went to school at Grantham; and here one of Queen Eleanor's Crosses was erected. The Angel Hotel is a quaint old house, and has especial attraction for members of the Craft. The hotel was once a Preceptory of the Knights Templar, and still bears marks of its ancient use. Newark we have already dealt with; Retford has no particular claim to notice; but there is a village beyond called Scrooby, once noted as the place where the Archbishop of York had a palace, and will be remembered as the gathering place "of a little Christian community of Independents, who went from Scrooby to Boston, from Boston to Holland, from Holland, in the Mayflower, to the New World, and there founded the 'Pilgrim Father' Church of America." Doncaster is famed for its beautiful church and its races. The town and neighbourhood are worth a visit. Branching out on the left are Wakefield, Pontefract, and Ilkley, among a host of other places of interest. Shakespeare has immortalised the Battle of Wakefield in his Henry VI. third part, in which he describes the defeat of York, the cruelty of Margaret, and the vengeance of Clifford. Among other things there is a sepulchre in the chapel on Wakefield Bridge worth inspecting. "It has a figure of the Saviour rising from the tomb, with an angel kneeling on each side, their hands clasped in fervent adoration, whilst three soldiers beneath are gazing upwards in fearful astonishment." These sepulchres are found in many churches, especially in Lincolnshire, and were the outcome of the belief that the second coming of our Lord would be on Easter Eve. Pontefract Castle was an ornament and a terror for six hundred years, much that was terrible and romantic is recorded of this fortress. Little remains to tell of its former greatness, and liquorice root grows now where deeds of crime and valour were done centuries ago. Ilkley is a lovely spot in the valley of the Wharfe. About five miles from the village are the remains of Bolton Abbey, serenely and beautifully secluded. The river Wharfe reaches Ilkley through long lines of barren moorland, lofty crags, and by the margins of rich meadows, villages embowered in trees, and churches clad with ivy. At Bolton Strid the rocks almost meet and the water rushes violently down. At this spot a catastrophe took place more than seven hundred years ago which was the origin of the Abbey. The story goes that William de Meschines and Cecilia his wife founded a priory in 1121 at Embsay. At their death they left a daughter, who adopted her mother's name of Romilla. She married William Fitz Duncan, nephew of David, King of Scotland, by whom she had two sons. The elder one died, and so did the husband, leaving the younger son the joy and hope of the widow's heart. The "Boy of Egremond," as he was called, was fond of sports, and on one occasion he was "bounding over the chasm" of the Strid "with a greyhound in his leash," when "the animal hung back, and drew his unfortunate master into the foaming torrent." To perpetuate the memory of this event the priory was removed from Embsay to Bolton. Part of the ruins are used as a parish church, and the other portions are very interesting. Wordsworth has told the story of the Strid, from which we extract the two following verses:—

"He sprang in glee, for what cared he
That the river was strong, and the rocks were steep?
But the greyhound in the leash hung back,
And checked him in his leap.

"The boy is in the arms of the Wharfe,
And strangled by a merciless force;
For never more was young Romilly seen,
Till he rose a lifeless corpse."

The poet has also dealt with another incident of a romantic character in connection with the priory under the title of the "White Doe of Rhylstone." Both should be read by visitors to the Abbey. On the right of the line are Selby, Hull, and Beverley. The Minster at the latter place is the chief source of attraction, and is well worthy of a visit. Beverley was one of the three religious centres of Yorkshire, and at the present time its Minster ranks next to the grand pile at York. It seems almost superfluous to dwell upon York and its stately Cathedral. We cannot do justice to City and Minster in the space at our command. Suffice it to say that on no account should a visit to the ancient capital of the north be omitted by tourists. The Minster—for that is the name Yorkshiremen delight to call the Metropolitan Church of the Northern Province by—was founded as early as the seventh century, assumed its present form in 1171, and was completed some three hundred years afterwards. Constantine the Great was proclaimed Emperor at York, and some say he was born there. In addition to the Minster there are the Castle, the old City walls, the latter being almost perfect throughout their extent, and the fine old gates. York is full of interest, a glorious memento of the time when the Romans flourished in this country.

From York it is easy to get to Bridlington, Scarborough, and Whitby. The former is situated on an acclivity in the recess of a beautiful bay. It has fine dry sands, and beyond safe anchorage from storms. A sea fight by moonlight took place here in 1779, between a squadron under an American pirate named Paul Jones and two English ships, which is described by Cooper, in the "Pilot." There are the remains of an old priory, the nave of which is used as the parish church. It is a popular place of resort owing to its piers, sands, sea views, and chalybeate spring. Scarborough, however, bears off the palm on the east coast. It has a valley, and a hill on which stands the ruins of the castle. A bridge spans the valley and unites the north and south cliffs, which gives to the whole a unique appearance. Beyond the town the country is delightful. The bathing is good, the town charmingly situated in an amphitheatre rising from the sea, with the tower of the feudal fortress standing sentinel like a gaunt giant. It was almost impossible to storm the castle when in its strength, but it was taken in 1553 by Lord Stafford, who with his followers gained admission dressed as peasants, and then disarmed the garrison. From this circumstance has arisen the proverb "A Scarborough warning," which means "a word and a blow; but the blow first." George Fox, the Quaker, was imprisoned in the Castle in 1665, where he suffered many privations. Not much survives, but the remains are still striking and picturesque. Altogether Scarborough is a very attractive, and withal a fashionable place of resort. In the neighbourhood is Rievaux Abbey, one of the most beautiful ruins in Yorkshire. Whitby is an old fishing town, but it is also famous as a health-giving resort. It has a busy harbour, and from the beetling cliffs fine sea views can be obtained. Standing alone on a breezy height are the ruins of Whitby Priory, a very ancient foundation of the Benedictine Order. There is a story of a murdered monk and the penalty he inflicted upon his assailants, full of romance, which will be found recorded in the guide books. We should not omit to mention the jet works at Whitby, which are very celebrated. At Guisborough, near Whitby, alum was first made in England, the secret of manufacture having been obtained by means of workmen smuggled from Italy, which led to the issuing of a terrible curse by the Pope of the period. From York to Knaresborough is not a long journey. The town is memorable from the ruins of an old fortress, around which linger many stirring incidents. Here Eugene Aram committed the crime upon the story of which Bulwer Lytton has built up one of his most fascinating romances. Mother Shipton, too, it is supposed was born here, although that is disputed. Not far off, and on the way to Harrogate, is the Dropping Well, which converts everything placed under it into stone. On the branch line from Harrogate, is Ripon, prettily situated on a steep incline from the railway, with the Cathedral crowning the top. About three and a half miles from Ripon, is Studley Royal, the seat of Earl Grey, a most delightful show place. The domain includes Fountains Abbey, the ruins of which are exceedingly rich. Both places are eminently worthy of a pilgrimage. Joining the main line at Northallerton the train goes thence to Darlington. From here there is a spur line to Richmond, with its decayed castle on a hill, and the river Swale below. It is picturesque almost beyond description. Another line leads to Barnard Castle, a venerable ruin with a most interesting history. From here Rokeby is accessible. The charms of both places have been sung by Sir Walter Scott, but there is a record which, if not romantic, is certainly very peculiar. In the diary of Sir Thomas Rokeby, Justice in the Court of Common Pleas in the reign of William III., occurs the worthy valetudinarian's doctor's bill for only two months, October and November 1697:—"Purging pills 2/-, leeches 6d, aperitive ingredients 1/6, hysterick water 2/-, a purging bolus 1/6, purging pills 1/-, gascan powder 4/-, vermifuge pills, a box, 3/4, a purging bolus 1/6, purging pills 1/-, cephalick drops 2/6, a hysterick julip 3/6, hysterick pills (eighty-five) 6/8, a vomitive potion 2/6, a stomachick cordial 2/-, a cordial potion 1/8, vomitive salts (three doses) 1/6, the hysterick julip 3/6, mithridate 1/-, the vomitive potion 2/6, vomitive salts 1/6, the hysterick pills 6/8, the hysterick julip 3/6, sal ammoniac 6/-, £2 17s 10d." All this drenching did not kill the fine old limb of the law, who lived to the age of sixty-seven. On the other side from Darlington are Middlesborough, Hartlepool, Sunderland, and South Shields. The main line continues on to the city of Durham with its hanging gardens descending to the river Wear, and the venerable Cathedral towering high above. Further on is Newcastle, from which town branches spread out to various parts, including South Shields. Morpeth lies further on, and beyond that, at Bilton Junction, is a spur to Alnwick, of Percy fame. The Castle is considered "one of the most magnificent specimens of an old baronial residence in the kingdom." The interior is surpassingly beautiful, and the chapel ceiling is copied from that of King's College, Cambridge. Those who know how exquisite that work is, can form some conception of what the chapel is like in Alnwick Castle. Berwick-on-Tweed is the next halting place. Every inch of the ground in the neighbourhood has been the scene of conflict, and a history of Berwick is the record of strife for centuries. It is now the border line between England and Scotland, and possesses many attractions for visitors.

We have not space to deal with Scotland further than what we have written in other papers, except, perhaps, a word or two about the far north. The majority of tourists go no further than Dundee: a few reach Aberdeen for Balmoral, but beyond are districts traversed by the Great North of Scotland Railway which would amply repay a visit. There is a guide book published by Douglas, of Edinburgh, which gives a full account of Scotland north and west of Aberdeen, to which we refer our readers, feeling assured what is there described will excite the desire to explore for themselves.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Weary of Life.—Derangement of the liver is one of the most efficient causes of dangerous diseases, and the most prolific source of these melancholy forebodings which are worse than death itself. A few doses of these noted Pills act magically in dispelling low spirits, and repelling the covert attacks made on the nerves by excessive heat, impure atmospheres, over-indulgence, or exhausting excitement. The most shattered constitution may derive benefit from Holloway's Pills, which will regulate disordered actions, brace the nerves, increase the energy of the intellectual faculties, and revive the failing memory. By attentively studying the instructions of taking these Pills, and explicitly putting them in practice, the most despairing will soon feel confident of a perfect recovery.

The regular meeting of the Board of Benevolence was held at Freemasons' Hall, on Wednesday, 22nd inst., and was very numerously attended. Bros. Joshua Nunn, James Brett, and Charles Atkins, the President, Senior Vice-President and Junior Vice-President respectively, took the three chairs. The business paper for the next Quarterly Communication of Grand Lodge (on the 5th September) was submitted to the Board of Masters, and then the Lodge of Benevolence sanctioned those grants which required confirmation from the July meeting. The new cases were then brought on for consideration; these comprised twenty-three applications, twenty of which were relieved, with a total of £650, the three others being adjourned for further particulars. The President announced that several letters had been received from petitioners who were relieved at the former meeting, thanking the Lodge for what it had done. Another pleasing incident arose in the course of the proceedings, which is entirely novel in character, but from its peculiar nature shows how thoroughly the brethren who gave rise to it enter into the true spirit of Masonry. Among the Lodges holding warrant under the English Grand Lodge in South Africa is one called the Rising Star Lodge, No. 1022, which was consecrated in the year 1864, and has consequently not yet attained the twentieth year of its existence. Whether it is a dining Lodge or not does not appear, but, whatever it does with its money, it has accumulated in its unappropriated fund a sum of £8 17s 6d. The President of the Lodge of Benevolence informed the brethren that this Rising Star Lodge had, by its accredited officer, written a letter to the Grand Secretary, enclosing an order for the £8 17s 6d, informing him that the Lodge had come to the resolution to desire that this sum should be placed to the Fund of Benevolence. The amount was received with thanks, the act being considered a graceful one; but, independent of that, it shows the confidence of the brethren of Bloemfontein, where the Lodge is held, in the care and judgment which is exercised by the Lodge of Benevolence in the distribution of its bounty. It has been pointed out that though Colonial and foreign brethren are relieved by the English Lodge of Benevolence they do not contribute to its funds; it is catholic in the extreme in its charity; and when brethren like the Americans and South Africans recognise this catholicity, as it is seen they sometimes do, the English brethren find a reward in the acknowledgment of this feeling of universal brotherhood.

The extension of Freemasonry is well evidenced by a little book which has just been published by Grand Mark Lodge, a Grand Lodge not connected with United Grand Lodge of England, but which never would have prospered so much if it had not been that Masonry under United Grand Lodge has in the last few years made such rapid strides. The annual report of Grand Mark Lodge shows that there are now on its roll 321 Lodges, the warrant for the latest of which is dated the 4th of the present month. This Lodge is called the Elfin Lodge, and is to be held at Carnarvon. The 321 Mark Lodges are not confined to England and Wales, but are situated also in the Colonies, where their life is a successful one. The Mark Lodges are thus disposed: 21 in Devonshire, 7 in Leicestershire, 8 in Somersetshire, 28 in Bengal, 4 in British Burmah, 8 in Cornwall, 6 in South Wales, 8 in Northumberland and Durham, 2 in Bombay, 25 in Lancashire, 26 in Middlesex and Surrey (including London), 8 in West Yorkshire, 11 in Madras, 13 in Kent, 8 in Cumberland and Westmoreland, 6 in Cheshire, 11 in Hampshire and the Isle of Wight, 4 in Sussex, 6 in Lincolnshire, 2 in Bristol, 4 in South Africa, 4 in Warwickshire, 3 in Monmouthshire, 4 in Jamaica, 4 in Victoria (Australia), 5 in Dorsetshire, 3 in Gloucestershire, 4 in the Mediterranean, 6 in Berks and Oxon, 3 in North Wales, 4 in New Zealand (South Island), 6 in North and East Yorkshire, 2 in Auckland (New Zealand), 2 in North Africa, 3 in Buckinghamshire, 3 in Westland (New Zealand), 5 in Staffordshire, 3 in Quebec, 2 in Tasmania, 2 in Nottinghamshire, and 7 in East Anglia, comprising Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambridge, and Essex. And this is the result of only some twenty-five years' working. There were Mark Lodges in England before that time; but there was not then a Grand Mark Lodge. The funds of this Grand Lodge have now assumed considerable proportions. From the first they have been husbanded with great care, but nevertheless enormous donations have been made out of them to works of charity and benevolence, not the least of which is the establishment of an educational branch fund for the education of Mark Masons' sons and daughters in the neighbourhood in which they reside. The present G. Master of the Order is Lord Henniker, who entered on the third and last year of his office on the 5th June last, it being a rule of this Grand Lodge that a Grand Master shall not hold office for more than three years. On the list of its Past Grand Masters is His Royal Highness the Duke of Albany, and at the meeting in December next the same honour is to be conferred upon the Prince of Wales.—Evening News.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF SOUTH WALES (WESTERN DIVISION).

WE feel we need not offer a word of apology if we place before our readers a few additional particulars of the proceedings of the interesting meeting of this Provincial Grand Lodge, held at the New Masonic Hall, Milford Haven, on the 15th instant.

The banquet was supplied by our worthy brother Thomas Palmer, mine host of the Lord Nelson Hotel, Milford Haven, a caterer well known in connection with a large establishment in the City of London, and who for many years was proprietor of the Greyhound Hotel, Richmond. Bro. Palmer, on this occasion, well sustained his reputation. We may add, that brethren seeking repose, and desiring comfortable quarters, might with great advantage consult Bro. Palmer; his Hotel is most charmingly situated, while the accommodation provided, and the liberality of the cuisine, leave nothing to be desired. At the same time the scale of charges has been most modestly prepared. On the removal of the cloth, Col. Lloyd-Philipps, in proposing the health of Her Most Gracious Majesty, said it must be gratifying to know that the temporary indisposition under which the Queen was lately suffering had happily passed away. He had great pleasure in offering the toast for the acceptance of the brethren. After the National Anthem, the health of the Most Worshipful the Grand Master was given. This toast was most heartily greeted, and then the Pro Grand Master, the Deputy Grand Master, and the rest of the Grand Officers received full recognition. A capital song, by Bro. Videon Harding, was the next feature of the day's proceedings, and then came the toast of the R.W. Prov. Grand Master, proposed by Bro. White P.P.G.S.W. Bro. White thought the Province had reason to be proud of the zeal displayed by Col. Lloyd-Philipps. He was ever to the fore in labouring for his Province; it mattered not whether it was the work of either of the three established degrees, in all of which Col. Philipps was equally efficient, or whether it was an installation ceremony he might be called upon to perform, he was ever ready for the task. The order of the evening was for the curtailment of the speeches; he would not encroach upon their time, but at once call on the brethren to do honour to the toast. Bro. Harding here sang "Come into the garden, Maud," with excellent effect. Col. Philipps, on rising to respond, was most cordially greeted. He heartily thanked the brethren for the way in which they had received the toast. He felt it was scarcely necessary to remind them that his heart was in the work of his Province. He could not possibly attend all the meetings, but he went round as often as he could spare the time. He was not only a busy man in Masonry, but he had other duties in connection with county work which kept him occupied. However, all knew he made a point of attending his Provincial Grand Lodge meetings; at the same time he could assure them one and all he desired to see them at home in their own Lodges. He was gratified in being able to announce that an addition would shortly be made to their roll; a new Lodge was about to be consecrated. He did not desire, however, to see a large growth in the number of the Lodges, but he felt that the new one to which he referred would supply a want that had been felt for some time. The next meeting of Provincial Grand Lodge would be held at Aberystwith, under the banner of Lodge, No. 1072. Various circumstances had occurred this year to prevent Provincial Grand Lodge being held on an earlier date, but he thought it desirable that in future the month of July should be selected. In concluding Colonel Lloyd-Philipps said it had afforded him great pleasure to perform the ceremony of consecrating the new Hall to-day. He trusted other Lodges would follow the example so nobly set by the members of No. 636. In proposing the health of the Deputy Prov. Grand Master, Colonel Philipps expressed his regret that Lord Kensington was unable to be present. He was an old and esteemed member of the Province, but his Parliamentary duties occupied a great deal of his time. Bro. White acknowledged the compliment. With the toast of the Provincial Grand Officers, the Senior Warden and Prov. G. Treasurer's names were associated; while for the Past P.G. Officers, Bros. Rev. Stradling and Ellis were called on to respond. Bro. Hood Williams here sang a very humorous ditty, and then the brethren named above responded. Bro. Jenkyn Jones made some very pertinent remarks, on the functions of Secretaries of the various Lodges in particular. His suggestions were very well received, and doubtless his advice will be borne in mind and acted upon in the future. The Prov. Grand Master on again rising said, that Bro. White had referred to a previous toast as the one of the evening. He begged to differ with their worthy brother, inasmuch as the toast he now desired to bring under their notice was the one that claimed the highest honours at their hands; he referred to the Masonic Charities. They had present Bro. Binckes Secretary of the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys. Bros. J. Beavan Phillips and Aaron Stone, the Charity Commissioners of the Province, had each done good service. Bro. Stone, as had been stated in Provincial Grand Lodge, had taken upon himself some monetary responsibility in connection with his official position, but he (Colonel Philipps) felt assured the members of Provincial Grand Lodge would relieve him of this responsibility. For his own part, he was not a rich man, but he taxed himself to subscribe annually to one or other of the Masonic Institutions. This year he would subscribe an additional amount towards making up Bro. Stone's deficiency. Brother F. Binckes in reply said, on this occasion he did not appear before the brethren so much for the purpose of making an appeal, but rather as one desirous of acknowledging favours already received. It was intensely gratifying to him to know that he had two such worthy brethren associated with him in connection with the toast. He could almost realise that he was at the very door of the Temple, standing between the two pillars, Boaz and Jachin, as typified by his good friends Bros. Beavan Phillips and Aaron Stone. His present condition might be considered under two phases—the social and the depressing. In the first place all was peace and quiet around this lovely haven, and he might say, with Shakespeare:—

> "Tell me how Wales was made so happy, as > To inherit such a haven?"

This undoubtedly was the finest harbour in the world, and he had experienced the joy of being borne upon its tranquil waters. He could look back upon this with pleasure; but, oh! the treacherous deep, once let him be greeted with its frown, and the result to him was horrible to contemplate. Brother Binckes then directed attention to the amounts contributed during the past nine years by the Lodges of this Province. The Boys' School had received during that period £988 4s; the Girls' School £619 5s, while the Benevolent Institution had benefitted to the extent of £575 15s 6d. This gave a grand total of £2,183 4s 6d. This result had been achieved by Bros. J. Beavan Phillips and Aaron Stone, aided by Bros. Robert Margrave and Edwin Thomas. Bro. Binckes spoke of the labours entailed on these brethren by such an achievement, and congratulated the Provincial Grand Master on being at the head of so zealous a body of men, whom he governed so beneficently that the ruled looked up with every confidence and satisfaction to their ruler. Our worthy brother then pointed out how partial was the support given by the masses comprising the Order to its Charities; and how regularly and consistently certain sections came forward with their contributions. He then urged the needs and deserts of the Institutions, and referred with pardonable exultation to the glorious result of the recent Festival of the Boys' School. The full scheme of the proposed Preparatory School was then outlined, and a statement made of what was being done already by the three Institutions. Bro. Binckes concluded an excellent speech by thanking the brethren for the support given him, and for the cordial reception he at all times received. Bros. Phillips and Stone also replied, and then other toasts were brought on; Bro. Roberts acknowledged the compliment paid him as Master of the entertaining Lodge. Bro. Morgan replied for the Visitors.

A chapter general of the Ancient Fraternity of the Rahere Almoners, of which Bro. James Stevens is the Secretary, was held on Thursday. The Council again commemorated the anniversary of the resuscitation of the Fraternity by a supper at the Barley Mow, Long-lane, the same evening.

Bro. Alfred Best, late proprietor of the Freemasons' Tavern, Great Queen-street, Lincoln's-inn-fields, adjoining the Freemasons' Hall, has purchased the interest of Mr. Ex-Sheriff East in the Queen's Hotel, St. Martin's-le-Grand, and has taken possession.

It is stated the Court of Aldermen will press Bro. Sir Sydney Waterlow, M.P., to reconsider his decision to resign his aldermanic gown. On a previous occasion, before his mayoralty, Sir Sydney sent a letter of resignation, but was induced to withdraw it. In the event of a vacancy Bro. Sheriff Savory will present himself as a candidate for office.

The Duke of Connaught, Past Grand Senior Warden, accompanied by the Duchess, visited Norwich on Monday, and took part in the opening ceremony of the New Hospital buildings, the foundation-stone of which was laid by the Prince and Princess of Wales. Amongst those present was Prince Albert Victor of Wales. The royal party afterwards visited a bazaar held in aid of the building fund, at which many of the aticles for sale had been graciously supplied by the Prince and Princess of Wales.

The late Major-General John a A. Dix, of New York, while not a Mason, during the anti-Masonic political crusade of 1828-30, was a vigorous opponent of the selfish and hypocritical views and conduct of the anti-Masons of that day. He justly characterised them as "a body of disappointed individuals, the outcasts and remnants of party." At the same time he was far from an apologist for Masonry, or Masons. His language was: "The institution has enjoyed, in a quiet and inoffensive way, its idle mysticisms. We look upon it with no very friendly prepossessions; on the contrary, we have always deemed it a mere collection of formalities, unworthy the time expended on them. But on this point we acknowledge our profound ignorance; and in doing so we might, but for a reluctance to give pledges with regard to our future course in life, even go farther, and unite with a fallen politician in saying that we 'never shall be a Mason.' But the time, we trust, is long past, when the guilt of a few members of any society is to draw along with it the condemnation and punishment of all the others." Such was the tenour of a communication from Gen. Dix, which appeared in the Freeman's Journal, of May 1829, and is quoted in full in Dr. Morgan Dix's admirable life of his father, recently published by Messrs. Harper and Brothers, New York. Gen. Dix not long after saw anti-Masonry disappear from politics, a sphere which, doubtless, it will never successfully enter again.—Keystone.

NUMBERS VERSUS PROGRESS.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

SIR AND BROTHER.—I in common with most brethren have long felt that Masonry in England was growing by leaps and bounds, in a somewhat unhealthy fashion, but I was hardly prepared for the figures which your correspondent so kindly supplied in your last issue. What lessons they teach, and how suggestive they are! Just take certain periods in London, and mark the singular changes that have taken place. Beginning at 1721, the Metropolis was moderately active until 1798, but from that time until 1844, nearly fifty years, only one new Lodge was consecrated in London. From 1844 to 1855 nine new Lodges were added, then commenced that big flow which, in twenty-seven years, has risen to the extent of 200 new creations. Ever since the latter date the increase has been enormous, not only in London, but also in the provinces and abroad. With few exceptions, since 1721, the provinces have added one or more Lodges to the roll each year, but since 1856 the growth has been astounding. The same may be said of District Lodges. A new spirit has arisen, and although during the last three years few new Lodges have been sanctioned in London, elsewhere there is little sign of abatement.

I hardly know how to regard these figures. If numbers be the test of strength, then assuredly Masonry has grown in power immensely. I am not, however, inclined to view the modern development of the Craft as an unmixed good. I know that in some cases sufficient care has not been taken in the admission of members, and I fear the present system generally is lax in the extreme. I do not think that the intelligence of the Craft has grown with the number of its members, and I very much question whether the moral power of the body at large has not deteriorated. I know I shall be referred to the charities, and to the vast sums expended in relief. Taking into account the growth of the Order, I do not think the income is at all to be wondered at, and great as is the amount, it might and ought to be greater. Passing by the question of the luxury of certain Lodges—for that is what I mean when I speak of expenditure—I wish to call attention to the moral aspect of the question. Of course, figures cannot decide this point, for moral delinquencies are not recorded; but let any one consider the matter calmly, and I fear he will come to the conclusion that there is great room for improvement among brethren of the Craft. How that end is to be attained I must leave to those better acquainted with Masonic life than myself. I merely give my own impressions, which perhaps have a country flavour, and which may be open to the misfortune of crudeness, but not I trust to the charge of unfairness.

I am, Sir and Brother,

Fraternally yours,

A COUNTRY BROTHER.

QUAKER MASONS.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

SIR,—It will be an interesting topic for the columns of your paper if the members of the Craft will chronicle what they know about Quaker Freemasons. Let me give an example. In Lodge Sincerity 189, meeting at East Stonehouse, we had, about eight years since, as our Worshipful Master, Bro. Frederick P. Balkwill, a member of the Society of Friends. He was a most active, worthy member of the Craft; gave good heed to all his work; studied so well the charges, and the other duties of all the offices that he passed through as he ascended the Masonic ladder, that I one day asked him if he did not think that he could have learnt a language while he was "getting up" all that it became him to do. He replied that he thought he could. Still W. Bro. Balkwill did his work admirably; and he took his place at the table when the brethren adjourned from labour to refreshment.

His removal to another part of the kingdom deprived the brethren of the Three Towns of the services of an admirable exponent of the high and valued mysteries of the Craft.

Yours faithfully,

J. L., a P.M.

MASONIC LITERATURE.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—The great body of the Craft in England have no idea of the wonderful activity of our brethren in America. I know the Masons across the water move too rapidly for us in this venerable land, and that degrees have multiplied to such an excess as to excite the disapprobation of some of the chiefs of the Order. What, however, has struck me as being remarkable is the large number of journals devoted to the Craft in America. They are legion, and as a rule they are conducted with great ability. Masonic literature is cultivated there with such spirit and enthusiasm as to put us altogether in the shade. One cause of this is owing to the number of Grand Lodges which form centres of activity, stimulate zeal and emulation. Each Grand Lodge, while following the general laws laid down for the government of the Craft, retains perfect liberty on all questions where freedom of action is permissible. The same liberty is exercised in this country, but opportunity of using it is limited to one great head, the Grand Lodge. Imagine the chances for activity multiplied by twenty, and any English brother can form some idea of the Masonic spirit that prevails in America. We have no reason to complain of our own work as far as it goes; what is needed is a larger development of the desire for Masonic knowledge. We have great lights amongst us, and our journals will bear comparison with any others produced, but the number of brethren who read and patronise them is limited. The zeal for knowledge is chiefly confined to Lodges, especially Lodges of Instruction, and while I think these are valuable means of education, the proceedings in the Lodge being absolutely indispensable, yet there are matters of history, practice and government hidden away in books that would yield immense stores of power and interest were they searched and studied.

The first step towards a change should be sought in the enlargement of the circle of readers of the journals already published in this country, and the next would be the establishment of a library and museum at the headquarters of Freemasonry in London. I know the present staff have enough to do to control the work that must be done. I am aware that the facilities available are not such as to warrant immediate steps being taken to accomplish the end I have in view. But the Temple is about to be rebuilt, and now is the time to consider whether something should not be done to found a real library, a real museum at Queen-street, where brethren could go and study. At least the opportunity should be afforded, and it should no longer be a reproach to us that, except in few cases, the Freemasons of England are almost entirely ignorant of the literature of the Craft, rich as it is in ancient lore, romance, chivalry, beauty, and charity. I hope, Sir, something will be done at the next Quarterly Communication, or at least that the question will be raised.

I am, Dear Sir and Brother,

Yours fraternally,

RANDOM NOTES AND REFLECTIONS.

IT is right that the position the Craft holds in the Genesis of Freemasonry should always be kept in view. In claiming pre-eminence for the Blue, it is not necessary to disparage the other bodies. Each has its special functions, and when not in antagonism to fundamental principles, ought not to be regarded with either jealousy or disfavour. Craft Masonry comes first, the Royal Arch is akin to it; the Mark rites, if not officially recognised, are looked upon with great favour by many of the worthiest Freemasons in the world; the Knights Templar are distinct from the three in that the body is essentially Christian in its origin and genius. A Craftsman should never lose sight of the proud position he holds as the parent of all, the fountain of Masonic life, and should remember also that wherever much is given much will be required. Attached to the honour of being a Mason is the responsibility that follows as a necessary consequence, and the object of every brother should be to render himself worthy of the high privileges wherewith he has been entrusted. As a question of rank there can be no dispute as to where Craft Masonry stands, but doubts are sometimes raised as to rules of practice. Nowhere are these doubts more frequently started than in America. For instance, the editor of the Masonic Chronicle, Columbus, Ohio, criticises a brother journalist because, while deprecating "the public Masonic installation of Lodge Officers," he says "nothing against the public installation of Commandery Officers." In reply to this the editor of the Keystone, the Brother referred to, says:

True. But Knights Templar may, and do, perform many acts that propriety forbids to Ancient Craft Masons. They are, in the nature of things, our display Masons. They are a military, as well as a Masonic Order. They often appear on our streets in uniform. They are not purely and simply Masons. We draw the distinction which facts justify us in drawing. Ancient Craft Masonry is the only true and Ancient Freemasonry, Capitular Masonry is akin to it; but Templar Masons are Christian Masons, Masonic soldiers of the Cross. Blue Lodge Masonry is both ancient and universal, and the only Masonry that is so.

—:o:—

A hint for the Grand Lodge of England. The Annals of the Grand Lodge of Iowa for 1883 contains a Masonic map, also an Almanac of Full Moons for the years 1883 to 1899 inclusive.

—:o:—

There can be no doubt of the value of Provincial Lodge Calendars, but they ought to be brought out under the sanction and risk of the Provincial Grand Lodges. The point arose at the recent meeting of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Hampshire and the Isle of Wight. Two brethren had brought out a Calendar, which was admitted to be useful, but which had left a balance on the wrong side of some £6 or £7. It was not a mere speculation, and any money gained would have gone to the cause of charity. Under these circumstances it was resolved to recoup the brethren for the outlay they had already incurred, to request them to continue their labours, and that in future the Provincial Grand Lodge would bear the expense and take the profits if any. This was the proper thing to do, although it was prudent on the part of another brother to suggest that he hoped the resolution would not be cited as a precedent should any brother start a speculation of a character that might be open to doubt.

—:o:—

At the meeting referred to above, the Provincial Grand Master remarked that some of the Lodge minute books were not kept as properly as they might be. He did not say that what was recorded was not correct, but that there were omissions which amounted to slovenliness. The most serious complaint was that there was no record showing that sufficient investigation of a brother's qualification had been made before being elected as a joining member. We think that if the new rule with regard to the status of Past Masters stands good, the Right Worshipful Prov. Grand Master of Hampshire, Bro. W. W. B. Beach, will not have a similar cause of complaint in the future. Lodges are likely to become particularly careful as to whom they admit, especially if the "material"—to use an American term—be a Past Master. Possibly the investigation will be more severe than pleasant in many cases, but then if brethren will insist upon assuming honours they have never worked for they must not be surprised if Lodges determine to reject all such claims in the only way open to them.

—:o:—

When in Lodge—Private, Provincial, or Grand—is it necessary to address a brother by any title he may bear independent of the Craft. At the recent Grand Lodge meeting the Grand Master for the time being, Lord Holmesdale, was addressed as "Your Lordship." The same practice is continually being followed, and it would be as well to define what position it holds in the laws of courtesy. We are under the impression that no other earthly titles rank higher than those of Freemasonry; indeed, they do not rank so high, and therefore the Masonic title, and that only, should be used in Lodges. So thought the late Duke of Kent, father of Her Majesty, who was R.W. Grand Master of the Prov. Grand Lodge of Lower Canada. While presiding in Lodge on one occasion, a brother, in speaking upon a question, addressed him as "Your Royal Highness," whereupon the Right W. Provincial G. Master said: "Worshipful Brother, there are no Royal Highnesses here, we are all brethren." This was in perfect keeping with the Duke of Kent's character, for on another occasion, and under peculiar circumstances, during a brief address, he said: "Let there never more be heard among you the words,—'the King's old and new subjects,' 'the French and English inhabitants,' you are 'all the King's Canadian subjects.'"

—:o:—

Yankeeisms are often very puzzling, and he who would earn the gratitude of all readers of American journals in this country, and gain for himself no little credit at home and abroad, should compile a dictionary of words and phrases that may fairly be said to come within the term Yankeeisms. Without the context who would know what a "deadhead" is? It appears that at a time when Freemasonry was contending for bare life in America against one of the most insensate crusades that ever disgraced the annals of the country, or just emerging from the dark period of persecution, it was the practice to admit clergymen into Lodges free, or on the payment of partial fees, the object being, no doubt, to add to the claims of respect for the Craft. Now that the flood-tide of prosperity has set in the Grand Master of Nebraska, says the San Francisco Fraternal Record, holds that—

A minister of the Gospel cannot be initiated for a less sum than is charged others, and that the fees so received cannot be refunded. That is right. Ministers may deadhead it on railways, and receive special rates from hotels, but if they want to be Masons let them pay full rates.

The editor of the Keystone takes exception to this ruling, and contends that Masons should not be ungenerous now that they are prosperous, seeing that they sought clergymen when their company was worth paying for. He jokes the writer in the contemporary alluded to, and says that no doubt when he has a chance he is "deadheaded." That may be so, but the editor of the Keystone, in the tail of his leaderette, perceives the danger of the course he defends. He says:—

We agree that it should by no means be the rule to "pass" any class of men free into the Fraternity; to do so would be to openly invite initiates, which is un-Masonic.

Precisely, and because it is un-Masonic, because it is a bad precedent, the practice should be discarded. Necessity often leads to rash acts, and the admission of clergymen into Masonry free was one of them. The sooner it is discontinued the better. Those who were made free reaped the advantage; those who would now accept the same privilege have no title to it. Security for character is no longer needed. Sponsors of the past were rewarded, but the office is not hereditary.

—:o:—

Referring, at the recent meeting of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Hampshire, to the disposing of provincial offices, the R.W. Grand Master, Brother Beach, said, in future no brother, except an old Mason, should have office unless he had served the office of Provincial Grand Steward. We are not sure of the prudence of this resolve, although we admit that some alteration in the mode of appointing provincial officers is necessary. Without trenching upon the privileges of the R.W. Grand Master, we think it would be better to adopt a system that should become the unwritten law of the Craft, just in the same sense that officers in a private Lodge are usually but not necessarily permitted to take their places in rotation. Were that plan followed as far as is practicable, considering the differences that naturally exist between the two bodies, we should not hear of brethren being appointed who scarcely ever attend their Lodge, and who take no interest in the Craft; who are even ignorant of the proper method of giving the signs, and could not open or close the Lodge in any one of the degrees.

—:o:—

Most heartily do we reciprocate the kindly expressions of goodwill which find a prominent place in the Editorial Notes of the Canadian Craftsman of the 15th ult. Speaking of the first number of the Eighteenth Volume of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE, our esteemed contemporary says:—

We wish it all success, and only hope that it will yet endeavour to exert its influence to support the true principles of Masonry in Ontario, Quebec, and New South Wales. Heretofore it has not.

—:o:—

With the sweets is a little sourness, but no gall. We have a conscience void of offence in the matters referred to, and take this opportunity of assuring the Craftsman that we take every care to form a just judgment affecting our brethren in distant quarters of the globe. If we do not always see eye to eye with our contemporary, we at least recognize its value and integrity of purpose.

—:o:—

Bro. M. Emanuel P.M. 359 is justly regarded as an old and ardent Mason. For twenty-six years he has been a member of the Craft, and with the exception of three years he has held some office or other. Notwithstanding the increase of age, his ardour does not abate; on the contrary, his love for Freemasonry grows with time. His knowledge becomes more reverent with age, his love more mellow, and as the result of his progress he has just presented a handsome Breeches Bible to the Prov. Grand Lodge of Hampshire, which we need hardly say was received with no little pleasure. The Bible is handsomely bound in morocco, edged with brass, and the leaves gilt. It is said to be 270 years old, and is therefore valuable as well as handsome. The R.W. Prov. Grand Master promised that the precious gift should always be used in Prov. Grand Lodge.

—:o:—

Of late years newspapers and periodicals of all kinds have sprung up with mushroom-like growth, many to die almost as soon as ushered into life, while others have languished for a time only to join at last the limbo of previous failures. The residue is still large, and the development is going on. Perhaps none have suffered more in their spasmodic existence than those termed comic journals. The field for them seems small, very small indeed in London, or it may be that few possess merit worthy of a prolonged life. It is something, therefore, in favour of those now in vigorous circulation that they have withstood the test of time. One of the most popular must be considered Moonshine, which has shown a steady light from the beginning, and seems to grow in effulgence. Every now and then new, and perhaps some might call them lesser moons, appear, which attract considerable attention. Just now the Holiday number of Moonshine is before the public, and a bright and big pennyworth it is. We say nothing about politics in these columns, they are beyond our province; but it is only just to say of the journal under notice that it is no mean political organ, and, unlike Punch, is true to the party of its adoption. The "extra" number is really good and for genuine humour we commend the page entitled "A Day with a Tricyclist."

THE ROYAL SEA BATHING INFIRMARY.

A VERY brief and simple ceremony in connection with the opening of the new wing of this infirmary, which is the munificent gift of Sir Erasmus Wilson, was held on the 15th instant. The wing consists of a day room for women, four wards, named the Alexandra with 16 beds for women, the Louise with 14 beds for girls, the Victoria with 14 beds for boys, and the Maude with 16 beds for men, a covered promenade, and a sea-water swimming bath. These buildings were designed by Mr. James Knowles, editor of the Nineteenth Century, and were erected by Mr. Lawrence of London, the furnishing being entrusted to Messrs. R. Paramor and Son, of Margate. In addition to this wing, the directors have had erected, by Messrs. Paramor, a sea wall, of which Mr. Abernethy, F.R.S., was the hon. engineer. The same firm were entrusted with the erection of a porter's lodge. Several gentlemen, among whom were Sir Erasmus Wilson, Colonel Creaton (the treasurer and chairman) Captain Isacke (chairman of the local committee), Mr. A. B. Cobb, Major Webb, Mr. Hannam J.P., Mr. K. W. Wilkie J.P., Dr. Birkett (London), Dr. Rowe, Mr. Treves, Mr. Thornton J.P., the Rev. Prebendary Whittington, the Revs. E. H. Blyth, Alcock (Birchington), and H. Aldwin, Soames (the chaplain), Mr. Walters (surgeon), Mr. J. M. Paramor, &c., having walked through and inspected the new buildings, which they pronounced to be very satisfactory, a short service was held in the pretty chapel, also the gift of Sir Erasmus Wilson. Special prayers and lessons were read by the chaplains, a portion of the 25th Matthew was read, and suitable hymns were sung. In the course of the service Colonel Creaton said:—My friends, before I declare the new wing open I wish to say a few words, which I have thought it better to put to paper. We live at a period when many are the praiseworthy efforts to aid and relieve our afflicted fellow creatures. But I should not be doing my duty as your chairman upon the present occasion, or speaking my honest convictions, if I did not call your special attention to the very great—I may add munificent—provision now made in our Sea Bathing Infirmary for the relief and cure of sickness and suffering. We are connected with an institution whose object is the alleviation and extirpation, if possible, of a mysterious, an insidious, and a most afflicting malady, and which, during 92 years of its existence, has treated and cured for 40,000 cases. I know of no modern exercise of a generous and large hearted philanthropy more likely to be productive of help and healing to very many sufferers than the great and good work in which we are all engaged to-day. By the never-to-be-forgotten, and I must add the princely, liberality of Sir Erasmus Wilson, we have now four new wards, day rooms, a swimming bath, promenade over the new wing, and a beautiful chapel in active operation and ready to receive the proper number of inmates. Thanking him, as treasurer of the institution, from the bottom of my heart for you all, and for myself, privileged as I am to take part in these proceedings, for all that he has so nobly done, I think that we who have been through the building in its various parts, and beheld admiringly the remarkable provision thus made for scientific treatment of this specific malady, for which this institution is destined, will re-echo my words in the expression of the gratitude we all feel for the admirable additions made to our infirmary by Sir E. Wilson. I trust that all the benefits will accrue to others which in his great kindness he so anxiously desires; and I have now the high honour, my friends, to declare this new wing duly opened.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE AT PETERSFIELD.

THE annual Grand Lodge of the Province of Hampshire and the Isle of Wight assembled on Friday, 10th inst., at the Petersfield Corn Exchange, under the presidency of the Right Worshipful Provincial Grand Master, Bro. W. W. Beach, M.P. It is very many years since this meeting took place at Petersfield—if, indeed, it has on any occasion been held there—and the members of the Craft met with a hearty reception. There was a large attendance of brethren. The minutes of the last Prov. Grand Lodge were read and confirmed, and the Prov. Grand Treasurer's accounts, showing a balance in hand of £60 17s and assets to the amount of £800, were presented and passed. Several sums of money were voted to brethren in distress, and also to the widow of a brother. The Past Grand Secretary announced that Bro. M. Emanuel, Southampton, had presented a Bible to the Province, which he placed in the hands of the Prov. G. Master, who thanked Bro. Emanuel for his very handsome present. Bro. Emanuel briefly replied. The Bible was handsomely bound, and is 270 years old. The Prov. Grand Master subsequently appointed the following brethren as his Officers for the ensuing year:—

BEADON LODGE, No. 619.

THE annual installation meeting of this Lodge was held on Wednesday, the 15th inst., at the Greyhound, Dulwich, on which occasion Bro. R. P. Forge was regularly placed in the chair of K.S. The Lodge was well attended, the following, among other visitors, being present:—Bros. C. Greenwood P.G.S.B. England Prov. G. Sec. Surrey, &c., H. A. Dubois P.P.G.W. Middlesex, Welch 8, E. H. Dore 45, Moffatt 67, T. Hardy 190, E. J. Horne P.M. 227, Dickinson 271, J. F. Probert 340, H. P. Matthews 569, Crotteaden 779, T. J. Cusworth P.M. 813, J. Woodman 813, H. F. Elliott I.G. 1124, J. Bussey W.M. 1928, F. H. Tibbitts W.M. 1950, and E. Woodman J.W. 1950 S.D. 1897. The meeting generally was a most pleasant one, indeed, one of the most successful ever known in the Lodge, although it is now some years old. The installation addresses were very impressively rendered by Bros. J. Osborn and T. J. Cusworth. After the conclusion of Lodge business an enjoyable banquet was partaken of, and, that finished, the toasts of the evening were honoured. Bro. C. Greenwood replied on behalf of the Grand Officers, and Bros. Bussey, Bellis, Tibbitts, and Horne on behalf of the Visitors. A well-arranged selection of music, &c., was given during the evening, under the direction of Bro. W. Wright Organist 1602, 1897, and 1288, who was assisted by Bros. J. Probert, E. Woodman, G. F. Snook, H. P. Matthews, and H. E. Dawes.

HIGH CROSS LODGE, No. 754.

THE Installation meeting of this compact and well conducted Lodge was celebrated on Wednesday, the 22nd instant. The W.M., Brother W. Martin Tegg, opened his Lodge punctually at four o'clock, when there were present Bros. E. G. Lewis S.W. and Worshipful Master elect, George Rowe J.W., Past Masters W. Dance (Treasurer), James Linzell (Secretary), J. Garrod, J. Wells, J. Maller, E. Townsend, F. Cunningham, H. Stephens, T. Jones, Clements. Amongst the Visitors were Rev. Chas. H. Roberts Prov. G. Chaplain Essex, C. Handley 475, J. H. Thompson 1471, F. Eastwood 933, R. Webster 193, R. Mathison P.M. 1237, George Collier 1237, C. J. G. Evenins 1540, W. Wray Morgan Senior Warden 211, George Tegg St. James's Lodge, John E. Linder 1017, George Messenger 1624 A. Pawson 1732, A. Bryant W.M. 1237, Robert Goodall 87, James Barber 933, Robert George 1524, W. F. Green 861, J. F. Garret 178. After the minutes of last meeting had been read and confirmed, the report of the Audit Committee was presented. The financial condition of the Lodge was most satisfactory, and the Secretary, later in the evening, reported that there were no arrears worth consideration on Subscription Account, which fact alone speaks volumes for the way the business is transacted by the executive staff of the Lodge. Ballots were taken for three candidates for initiation—Mr. David Samuel Binks, aged 42, who was proposed by Bro. Lewis W.M. elect, and seconded by Bro. Tegg; Mr. Alfred Augustus Mills, aged 36, for whom the same brethren stood sponsors; and Mr. Charles Colley, aged 26, who also was introduced by Bro. Lewis, seconded by Bro. Tegg. The result was in favour of these candidates. Bro. James Garrod P.M. now took the chair as Installing Master, and the W.M. elect was introduced by Bro. James Linzell P.M., who throughout acted as Master of Ceremonies. Bro. E. G. Lewis having signified his assent to the preliminary Charges, the obligation was administered. On the retirement of the younger members a Board of Installed Masters was opened, and Bro. Lewis was inducted into the chair. The brethren re-entered Lodge, and saluted the new Master, who then appointed the following as his Officers:—George Rowe S.W., A. G. Fidler J.W., W. Dance P.M. Treasurer, James Linzell P.M. Secretary, W. S. Cooper S.D., J. D. Birkin J.D., W. J. Mack I.G., Holt M.C., Goodall Wine Steward, Arthur Fowler Assist. W.S., J. Very Tyler. Brother Garrod gave the addresses with impressive effect, and was congratulated by all present on the successful way in which he had carried out the ceremony. It was now announced that the three candidates were in attendance. This gave Brother Lewis an early opportunity of showing his capacity for office. The result was most satisfactory; Brother Lewis throughout his Masonic career has had the credit of being a painstaking and careful worker, and in conducting the ceremony of the first degree realised to the full what had been anticipated of him. Routine work followed; several letters were announced; the resignation of a member was tendered, on account of heavy business engagements which prevented him devoting the necessary time to Lodge work. This having been accepted, with regret, and testimony given as to the genial qualities of the retiring brother, Lodge was closed. An adjournment immediately took place to the Banquet Hall, where the tables were set out with great taste by Brother Oddy, to whom the members of this Lodge are indebted for the pains he invariably takes to minister to their comforts. The repast was, as usual, capitally served. After the cloth had been cleared, the Charity Box was passed round, and a substantial amount realised through its perambulation. In speaking to the toast of the Queen, the W.M. said no body of men are more loyal than Freemasons. The Queen endears herself to all classes of the community, and it was with every feeling of satisfaction he offered the toast for their acceptance. With it he would associate the sentiment Prosperity to the Craft. In proposing the health of the M.W. Grand Master, the W.M. felt it would not be needful for him to occupy much time in recounting the virtues of the Prince of Wales. Consequently, as time was getting short, he would immediately call on the brethren to honour the toast. The next on the list was the health of the Pro Grand Master the Earl of Carnarvon, the Deputy Grand Master the Earl of Lathom, and the rest of the Grand Officers. Those present were aware of the interest taken by the Pro Grand Master in all Masonic matters, and his zeal was fully recognised. The Earl of Lathom is a worthy Deputy, while the Grand Officers generally were unwearied in their efforts to advance the welfare of the Craft. He would call on all to give the toast a hearty reception. In speaking to the toast of the Initiates, the W.M. thought he might describe this as the toast of the evening, inasmuch as three gentlemen joined their ranks that night who were well known to the majority of the members, and from the new blood thus instilled into the Lodge, great result was anticipated. This toast was most cordially received, and after a humorous song by Brother Webster, Brother Binks, in reply, hoped he and his brother initiates would do honour to the brethren who had admitted them into this honourable Fraternity. Brother Mills was gratified to know that he had become a member of this grand institution. He echoed the sentiments of Brother Binks, and trusted they might prove themselves worthy members of the Order. Bro. Alfred Augustus Mills also acknowledged the compliment. Bro. Tegg proposed the health of the Worshipful Master. He could congratulate the Lodge on having secured Bro. Lewis as its ruler. Bro. Lewis had been a most zealous worker in all matters that pertained to the welfare of the Lodge; he had served as Steward for the Girls' and Boys' Schools, and had distinguished himself in that capacity. He had now undertaken a Stewardship for the Royal Masonic Benevolent Institution at its Festival for 1884, when, doubtless, he would be liberally supported by the members of his Lodge. He (Bro. Tegg) had every confidence in asking the brethren to do honour to this toast. After a song by Bro. Pinder, the W.M. rose to reply. He thanked Bro. Tegg for the kind manner in which he had proposed the toast, while the way in which the brethren had received it gave him infinite gratification. Ever since he joined the High Cross Lodge he had had but one aim in view, that was to do his duty thoroughly. If he did not realise the expectations the brethren formed of him, the fault would not be his. He should strive most ardently to deserve their approval. In proposing the health of the Immediate Past Master, the Worshipful Master said that during his year Brother Tegg had acquitted himself well. Both outside and inside the Lodge he had striven for its advancement. The candidates he had introduced were brethren who were appreciated for their sterling qualities. Bro. Tegg had performed all the ceremonies most creditably. The members of the Lodge fully recognised the earnestness with which he had conducted the business of his year, and he (Bro. Lewis) was gratified at being the medium for presenting their Immediate Past Master with a handsome jewel, which the brethren of the Lodge had voted him as a very slight recognition for his able conduct. The jewel was then formally presented. It bore the following inscription:—

Presented by the HIGH CROSS LODGE, No. 754, Tottenham,
To Brother W. M. TEGG,
As a token of esteem, for zeal and attention as Master during the years 1882-3.

After a capital rendering of "The Death of Nelson," by Brother Past Master Stephens, Brother Tegg rose to reply. He was much gratified with the reception he had received at the hands of the brethren. He should prize the jewel the brethren had presented him with, and he trusted he might have the opportunity of taking part for many years in the duties of the Lodge. In proposing the health of the Installing Master, the W.M. referred to the ability Bro. Garrod displayed in conducting the ceremonies during his term of office. His efforts on behalf of the Institutions had received full recognition, and were highly appreciated by all with whom he had been associated. Rev. Brother Roberts sang "The Powder Monkey." Brother Garrod then rose. It had given him satisfaction to perform the ceremony that evening, though he knew he had done it most inadequately. He felt it a great honour to be allowed to perform the ceremony on behalf of so esteemed a Mason as Brother Lewis, whom he congratulated on having secured his exalted position. The P.M.'s of the Lodge, with their universal good nature, had rendered him (Bro. Garrod) assistance when his shortcomings too rudely displayed themselves. For the Past Masters Bro. Wells (the senior) first replied. It was always the wish of those who had passed the chair to take an active part in the working of the Lodge. Each of the other Past Masters in turn made a few remarks. Then came the health of the Visitors, and this toast was responded to by Bros. Rev. Charles H. Roberts Prov. Grand Chaplain Essex, Thompson, Eastwood, and others. With the toast of the Charities was associated the Press, the W.M. referring to the assistance given by the conductors of the Masonic journals to the executive of the Institutions. Bro. Lewis expressed his regret that neither of the Secretaries was in attendance. In Bro. Morgan, however, they had one who would doubtless be able to say a few words in response, inasmuch as it was fully recognised that for years he had striven to advance the best interests of the Institutions, which had been consistently supported by the Masonic Press. In acknowledging the kind remarks of the W.M. Bro. Morgan said that for the last six or seven years either he or his son had regularly attended the installation meetings of the High Cross; he was fully alive to the interest shown by the members of the Lodge in the work done by the Institutions. He looked forward on these occasions to meet either Bro. Binckes or Bro. Terry, both of whom recognised the unflagging energy of the members of No. 754. With respect to Bro. Binckes he (Bro. Morgan) had spent a few hours with him during the past week. All would regret to hear he was not in such health as his friends could desire; he was now away for a few days, trying the effect of perfect quietude. Bro. Terry likewise was at the present time seeking a little relaxation. As for Brother Hedges, it was pretty well recognised his visits were few, and those far between. With respect to the wisdom of such policy, he (Bro. Morgan) had nothing whatever to do, but he was well aware that the members of this Lodge desired to have with them at their installation meetings one or other of the representatives of the Institutions. This both Bros. Binckes and Terry recognised, and one or both almost invariably attended. In their absence he felt much pleasure in having his name associated with the toast. For the benefit of some of the younger members of the Lodge, Brother Morgan then referred to the work being done by the Scholastic Institutions, and gave details of the benefits conferred by the Royal Masonic Benevolent Institution. The substantial help given by the two Charitable Associations in connection with this Lodge which had run their course was adverted to. The third Tottenham and Enfield Association had now completed a year of its establishment, and the result of its working was before him in the balance sheet he held. By this it appeared that in the twelve months ending February last no less a sum than £113 9s had been received, while 11 appropriations had been made. Reference was continually being made to the fact that funds for the Institutions were provided, not by the entire body, but simply by a fractional part. This was fully evidenced by their Lodge. We may take it with the number of Lodges on the roll of Grand Lodge England, with Chapters and other media, that there are at least 2,000 organised bodies from whom subscriptions might reasonably be expected; the High Cross Lodge, taken in comparison with many of this number, was not numerically strong in membership, yet if all would do in one year what this Lodge had carried out for some time past, a sum of over £200,000 would be the amount available for the Charities. On behalf of the Institutions Bro. Morgan thanked the brethren for the continued earnestness they displayed, and expressed his satisfaction at knowing that the Worshipful Master would do duty next year for the Benevolent Institution, while in Bro. Tegg, who would act for the Boys, Bro. Binckes would have a sturdy and consistent supporter. Bro. Morgan concluded by thanking the W.M. for his kind appreciation of the work done by the Masonic Journals. Some other toasts were given, and it was a late hour before the Tyler was summoned.

Dalhousie Lodge of Instruction, No. 860.—Held at Bro. Smyth's, Sisters' Tavern, Pownall-road, Dalston, on Tuesday, 21st inst. Present—Bros. F. Carr W.M., Forse S.W., T. Clark J.W., Smyth S.D., Cushing J.D., Ackhurst I.G., Wardell Acting Preceptor; also Bros. Hand, Finch, Christian, Lorkin, and Wilson. Lodge was opened in due form; the minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed. Lodge was opened in second degree. Bro. Hand offered himself a candidate for raising, and was interrogated and entrusted. Lodge was again advanced, and Bro. Hand was raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason. Bro. T. Clark gave the traditional history. Bro. Lorkin worked the first and third sections of the Lecture, assisted by the brethren. Lodge was regularly closed to the first degree, when Bro. Forse was elected W.M. for the ensuing week. Lodge was then closed and adjourned.

Eboracum Lodge, No. 1611.—The regular meeting of this Lodge was held on Monday, the 13th instant. Bro. M. Millington W.M. presided, and was supported by Bros. J. Blenkin S.W., G. Balmford P.M. as J.W., T. B. Whytehead P.M., J. S. Cumberland P.M., and a full attendance of brethren and visitors, amongst whom were Brother Mills S.W. 2 S.C. The business consisted of an initiation and a passing, after which Bro. Whytehead presented to the Lodge, on behalf of Bro. Buckle P.M. 236, a set of that brother's etchings of the Manor House, York, very artistically grouped in two mounts; also from Bro Evans a copy of his history of Relief Lodge, No. 42. The W.M. presented to the Lodge a seal for official use, bearing the arms of the Lodge encircled with a band with the name and number. Bro. T. Humphries Secretary, presented a curious Masonic design nearly a century old, painted by hand, figurative of a Lodge and its contents. Votes of thanks were accorded by the brethren for all these interesting and valuable gifts, and the Secretary was instructed to forward letters of thanks.

Agricola Lodge, No. 1991.—An emergency meeting of this Lodge was held on Wednesday week last, when the chairs were occupied by Bros. Major McGachen P.M. as W.M., Captain Cavenagh S.W., Harding J.W., T. B. Whytehead as I.P.M., and other brethren and visitors. The business consisted of the raising to the third degree of Bro. the Rev. D. Soames, Chaplain to the Forces, which was done by Bro. McGachen, assisted by Bro. T. B. Whytehead. Amongst the visitors was Bro. Mills, No. 2, Canongate, Kilwinning. A pleasant evening was spent, enlivened by singing and toasts.

The Portsmouth Times says a meeting has been convened at the Fremasons' Hall, Landport, to consider the advisability of petitioning for the division of the Province of Hampshire and the Isle of Wight into two Provinces, viz., North-West Hants and South-East Hants.

THE LAST HOUR WITH THE CONSISTORY.

THE brilliancy of the scene at the closing of the degree of Prince of Mercy, on 30th June, causes us to revert to the incidents that transpired. The exquisite setting of the degree still remained and produced a pleasing Masonic impression. The point within the circle, bordered by two parallel lines, surmounted by a galaxy of burning tapers massed in the East, forming a triangle enclosing the open Bible, brought the mind back to the teachings in the Apprentice Degree, which were here fully and completely exemplified by the position of the Officers and brethren surrounding the rising incense, and discussing and studying the Word of God under the brilliant reflection of all the faiths that had ever been formulated by man. The tracing back of this prominent figure in Masonry, to the times and creed of the worshippers in East India ages ago, had never struck us with such force and effect before.

In a previous issue we referred to the ovation on the above occasion paid to the Commander of the Consistory. In deference to many interested brethren and at their request, we publish the following presentation addresses of Bro. George H. Fish and others, which were made immediately subsequent to that of M.W. Bro. Roome, and yet interspersed with the music of two choirs, one in the east and the other in the west. Brother Fish advanced towards the altar and said:—

"'Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh.' Yet there are times when the breast is so filled with pleasurable emotions that the heart swells to overflowing and the tongue refuseth to give utterance. I have been requested, as a veteran friend, to supplement Bro. Roome's presentation with a few thoughts of my own, but what has he left for me to say? The salient traits of our brother's character have been both eloquently and forcibly portrayed. Yet

> "In an hundred years no land
> Shall rear you kinder heart, nor freer hand!
> Though envy strive her glories to deface
> (No generous foe, but nursed in Nature's base,
> That loves to talk this good man's praise away).
> Yet, as the sand still foils the reckoner's count,
> Such are the joys we owe him. Who shall say
> How boundless their amount?"

"Some men are born to lead. Such is he of whom I speak. Full of that generous chivalry characteristic of his Southern birth, he has added to his natural quick instincts the staid, calmer judgment of the more dispassionate North, and has in its fullest scope that suaviter in modo, fortiter in re, which at once commands respect, and at the same time elicits love. Bro. McClanachan, Time—that general adjuster of human affairs—has given me a chance to repay you in kind for your friendly utterances of the 6th inst., but General Roome, in the full love of his strong nature, and that eloquence born of honest purpose, has so voiced the sentiment of all who know you, that to add to his ringing sentences of Truth seems almost needless, but a duty I have to perform:—

> "I'll climb Song's flower prow and there recite
> Thy valorous praise. Ever doth martial might > Youthful vigour glorify. The prouder, then, thy boast,
> For not thy worth in wars alone,
> Afoot or mounted, thou hast shone!
> But riper Wisdom's renown is thine,
> Then fearless flows thy praise, and free."

"These volumes are for you; take them—they are yours—an offering of love from the Craft: The Rivers of Life. We know you want them; for you have said so, and it enhances fourfold the pleasure of this gift, for the Craft to know and feel that in their anxiety to show to you their love they are able at the same time to supply a want. You know these books to treat of the various religions of the world. You will find that charity and abnegation of self are taught in all the creeds; but above all, these volumes tell of the Masons' God, be it Brahma, Allah, or Christ. All sects recognise a source of all power, life, and being, and as above the comprehension of men. It is enough for us to know that this essence is the God whom all nations are bound to respect and revere; it matters not by what name He is known. It is the God of the Hindoo, the God of Mahomet, the God of the Jew, and the God of the Christian: that spirit which controls our being, directs our destiny, and assures our future. I believe that a perusal of this work will only strengthen you in the conviction that all men who believe in a supreme, controlling power are alike eligible to the rights of our Order.

"God bless you—friend and brother; and believe me I never before felt, as now, the true force of that trite aphorism, 'It is more blessed to give than to receive.'"

No sooner were these costly works received by, and as, the Commander, and the last notes of the choir dying away, when Bro. Charles H. Heyzer advanced, bearing a large basket of roses, banked up in three colours, resting on the tops of which were a pair of Solitaire earrings. He said:—

"Bro. McClanachan, your brethren have to-night given you a large decoction of your own medicine. I remember but a few weeks ago a very pleasant surprise of this kind was inaugurated at your place of business, and no one in that whole company was better pleased with its results than you were; but, unlike the recipient of that occasion, you are able to aptly and eloquently respond for yourself, as you have done twice this evening, your brethren, therefore, feel that it would be a relief as well as a pleasure to you to be allowed to respond for some one else. While we echo and re-echo the sentiments of our love and affection for you, as spoken here to night, still we know there are others that have a greater and deeper love for you than we possibly can. There is one in particular, sir. I refer to that God-fearing, husband-loving, motherly woman who presides over your paradise of a household. 'Tis true the lady is not personally acquainted with all the members of this organisation, but I will venture to say that there is no brother within the sound of my voice who has not heard her praises rung until he feels he has had the honour of her acquaintance for a series of years. It is this feeling that prompts them to ask you, when you go home, to present to her in their behalf these sparkling gems, and say, that while we have many times trodden with an iron heel upon her patience, in robbing her of your companionship, we have not forgotten her. Say, by way of consolation, that through the many sacrifices she has made, we have become wise and better men. As the poet hath well said:—

> 'Oh! woman—mother; woman—wife!
> The sweetest names that language knows,
> Thy breast with holy motives rife,
> With deep affection glows,
> Thou queen—thou angel of this life!'

Say to her, sir, that these two gems, embedded in this basket of beautiful flowers, are but an emblem of the high regard and esteem the members of the Scottish Rite have for that most estimable lady. Say this in substance, sir, for us."

The applause that followed this well-delivered speech was unmistakable in sentiment, and nearly demoralised the pre-arranged music, the voices of which having ceased, Bro. H. M. Gardner jun., of Brooklyn, placed a large work on the centre table, and then said:—

"My dear Brother,—It is now my pleasure, as well as my great privilege, as the Secretary of the Committee on Testimonials, and in behalf of my brethren of the Ancient Accepted Rite, to ask your acceptance of this volume. In it you will find the names of a large number of those who have contributed to this evening's scenes of surprises. That man, sir, amongst his fellows who by his own kindness and consideration for the wishes of others wins the love and admiration of his brethren, is a man indeed, and that been pre-eminently you have won, and it is yours to wear.

"This night you have been the recipient of golden jewels and literature for yourself, and precious gems for the wife of your love. I come to you in this volume with sparkling gems of thought, garnered from many and varied minds, bearing to you, on each bright page, in their own handwriting, their dearest and best benedictions. I feel, sir, that, in the swiftly oncoming years, the thoughts herein devotedly expressed, will be to you love's sweetest benison. Take it my brother—

> 'Tis a gift of love that seeks thy good alone,
> Keep it for the givers' sake, and read it for thine own.'

And may He who is the giver of every good and perfect gift have you and yours for ever in His sacred keeping."

The scene that followed was one the like of which has been witnessed but by few.—Hebrew Leader.

Freemason's Chronicle;

SANCTIONED BY THE GRAND LODGE OF ENGLAND.

Registered at the G.P.O. as a Newspaper.

VOL. XVIII.—No. 451. SATURDAY, 1st SEPTEMBER 1883. [PRICE THREEPENCE. 13s 6d per annum, post free.

UNITED GRAND LODGE.

THE principal item of business which will require attention at the regular Quarterly Communication of Grand Lodge, to be held on Wednesday next, is that relating to the rebuilding of the Masonic Temple, which will come before the brethren in the form of a report from the Special Building Committee appointed by order of Grand Lodge in June last. Briefly stated, the proposal of this Committee is to purchase Bacon's Hotel, which adjoins the present Freemasons' Tavern, and rebuild it, so as actually to form a part of the Tavern itself, the large hall of which would, however, be utilised in order to form a Temple twice the size of that destroyed by fire. The proposal appears to be the best that could have been made, although we hardly consider it satisfactory in every respect. The chief objection is that of time—we imagine that the proposals now submitted, even if approved next Wednesday, will not be confirmed until December, so that it may fairly be reckoned that work will not be commenced in earnest much before the beginning of next Spring, then the Tavern alterations have to be completed before Grand Lodge work can be entered upon, so that it is indeed a matter for speculation as to when our new Temple will be ready for occupation.

The Special Building Committee consists of eight brethren—four appointed by Grand Lodge and four elected by the Board of General Purposes. Brothers George Burt, John Gibson, W. Raynham Stewart and J. Lewis Thomas being the Grand Lodge nominees, and Brothers William Bristow, Ralph Clutton, Sir John B. Monckton and J. Ebenezer Saunders the four chosen by the Board of General Purposes. These brethren, at their first meeting, elected Bro. Sir John B. Monckton as their Chairman. The arrangement as regarded the Insurance was the first item to which attention was given, and this was settled for a total of £8,550 in cash, together with all accruing expenses as regards the buildings, and the return of the damaged carpet. With this sum the Committee consider the reinstatement of the Temple could be easily accomplished, should Grand Lodge determine on such a course, but that is not the plan recommended by the members of the Committee themselves. Special consideration was given to the proposal to remove the Masonic Temple from its old site; the Thames Embankment, as being almost, if not quite, the only alternative location, receiving particular attention; but in the result the Committee unanimously agreed "that such a step would not only seriously prejudice the value of the property of Grand Lodge in Great Queen-street, but, irrespective of this, would require an enormous expentiture, far beyond the resources of Grand Lodge to provide the multifarious items of necessary accommodation, without corresponding or proportionate benefit." We think this view will be accepted by the brethren generally, and that all idea of removing Grand Lodge buildings will, at least for the present, be abandoned. The real point of the matter then presents itself. The requirements of the Craft are now of such a nature that it is absolutely necessary the accommodation of Grand Lodge Temple should be increased; but the difficulty is to determine how, as the adjoining property (the Tavern) is let on a lease, of which twenty-two years are unexpired (at an annual rental of £1,200). It will therefore be apparent that any action to be taken must be taken jointly by the lessee and lessor, and such being the case we are pleased to learn that an amicable arrangement has been arrived at. It is proposed, as we have already said, to purchase Bacon's Hotel, and to rebuild it, so as to form a part of Freemasons' Tavern, which it is estimated will cost £21,000 (£6,000 to be paid to Mr. Bacon, and £15,000 for rebuilding expenses). Messrs. Spiers and Pond, the present lessees of the Tavern, will then give up their grand banquetting hall, and pay an increased rental of £2,000 per annum, a new lease being granted to them for a term of fifty years from the completion of the alterations. The present banquetting-hall of the Tavern and the old Masonic Temple will then be available for the construction of the new Temple, and this work, as estimated, will cost £16,400; by this it will be seen, as the insurance has realised £6,400, the actual outlay to the Craft will be £10,000. In addition to these two items, amounting to £31,000, which are required for building purposes, £5,000 is set down as the cost of removing the Tavern kitchen to the top of the new building, and converting the present kitchen into a supper room, while £4,000 is to be allowed for fittings, decorations, and contingencies, thus giving a total outlay of £30,000. For this sum Grand Lodge will have provided for their use a Temple capable of holding 1,500 persons, they will get an improved rental of £800 a year from Messrs. Spiers and Pond, but will lose £360 a year from Bacon's Hotel (that being the rental at present paid), so that their net monetary gain is £440 a-year, and as the interest on the required outlay would amount to £1,200 a-year (even at 3 per cent.), it follows that the additional cost to Grand Lodge, consequent on the enlargement of the Temple, would be £760 per annum. The amount appears to be wholly out of proportion to the benefits to be gained. Are we to understand that the cost of the Masonic Temple, for interest on construction alone (if erected twice the size of the old one as proposed) would be something like £1,520 per annum, if so, then we think Grand Lodge has to pay a most expensive rental, but of course it is at all times difficult to make additions or alterations to existing buildings. The net income of Grand Lodge is, of course, ample to allow of this increased expenditure, notwithstanding the alienation, as the Committee are pleased to call it, of a permanent grant of £800 a-year to the Benevolent Institution. We think any reference to this grant comes in very bad taste from the Committee: it is certain that Grand Lodge, as a body, would not agree to the grant being withdrawn, not even to add a yard or two to the space available for its Quarterly Communications, much as a certain class of brethren seem to desire it. The Committee had as much right to refer to any other grant of Grand Lodge during the past few years as to this, and we consider it a display of animus to even go so far as to hint that this sum of £800 a-year might have been available.

The only other items on the agenda are those relating to the confirmation of the minutes of the June meeting, and of three Special Grand Lodges (on the 29th June, 18th July, and 8th August); the consideration of the report of the Lodge of Benevolence, in which seven recommendations for grants are made; and that of the Board of General Purposes, which merely contains a statement of Grand Lodge accounts, and the disposal of two notices of motion. The grants recommended by the Lodge of Benevolence amount to £500, and comprise one of £150, one of £100, and five of £50 each. The first of the notices of motion refers to the publication, in the Masonic papers, and in three other papers, of notices of intended meetings of Grand Lodge, special or otherwise, and is intended to remove the difficulty brethren experience in discovering when anything special is to be submitted to the Craft. The second motion has reference to the minutes of the Special Grand Lodges recently held, and suggests that the minutes thereof be not confirmed until the December Communication. We fail to see how this can be of any use, as the minutes will have been confirmed, or otherwise, long before the discussion on this motion can take place.

WEARING EMBLEMS.

THE legitimate or moral right of a Mason to wear upon his person any one of the emblems of Masonry, as may best suit his fancy, in one sense can be ranked amongst the minor questions which concern the Craft, but in another it is of more importance than it would at first imply. While not condemning moderate wearing of Masonic emblems, I do object to the profuse display of them now so prevalent. I do not deny the legal right of any Mason to profusely bedeck himself with emblems of Masonry, but by so doing he violates the common law of decency and good sense. The civil law may give one the right to appear in public dressed as a clown, but good sense by no means sanctions such an appearance. I do not wish to insinuate that I have seen emblem wearers who appeared like clowns, but I have seen those who came very near it; so much so that it was but a step between the two.

It is amusing, but at the same time instructive, to note in any promiscuous assembly of people, the number and variety of emblems worn, not only by the members of the Masonic Institution, but by the "thousand and one" societies which exist at the present day. It is amusing, for it displays the vanity of the wearers, and it is instructive, for it gives one a point wherein he can the more readily read human nature.

In the majority of instances, were those who so profusely display their Masonic emblems asked to define Masonry, or to explain the meaning of the forms and ceremonies of Masonry, or even to give the symbolic illustration displayed by the emblem worn, they would be unable to do so; they know only this much, that they have passed through so many of the different degrees of Masonry, and at that point their knowledge ceases. Ask them to give an explanation of Masonry as it now exists, and they will ignominiously fail. Draw them into conversation on topics pertaining to Masonry, and they will be found ignorant as to its legal, literary or historical features. All Masons who wear emblems are by no means to be included in that category, but I do include those who put on everything they can find in the shape of emblems, regardless of sense or decency.

It matters not whether they wear the plain emblem of the Master Mason, or the more elaborate one of the Sir Knight, the more profusely the emblems worn, in the majority of instances, the greater the ignorance of the wearers. They seek to cover up their ignorance by outward display, and as far as that is concerned they succeed admirably; but by the real Mason they are looked upon with feelings akin to disgust.

With by far too many, to their shame and our sorrow it must be said, their Masonry extends no further than the wearing of the emblems of Masonry. Their Masonry is put on for the time being, and is thrown aside when the actual work of Masonry begins.

I have often seen the symbol of Faith, Hope and Charity displayed on those who called themselves Masons, when I knew that those who wore them were devoid of the true principles of either, as their everyday life proved that their faith was not in GOD; that their hope did not rest in immortality, and that they did not extend charity towards all mankind.

The square and compasses, of all the embems, perhaps are most generally worn. In many instances which have come under my observation, I know that the wearers fail to put into practice the lessons they teach, and I have my doubts of their even knowing the Masonic definition attached to them. Our ritual tells us that "the square teaches morality," while to them it is an emblem without any significant meaning. One of the principal tenets of a Mason's faith is confirmed within the two points of the compasses; while to them friendship, morality and brotherly love are meaningless words.

I have in view one who a few years ago was suspended from all of the rights and privileges of Masonry, for un-Masonic conduct, but who to this day sports a Masonic emblem on his person—a shield with the 47th problem of Euclid engraved thereon. Can that suspended Mason exclaim Eureka? No, but he has found that he is held in contempt by all good Masons. One not acquainted with him would say, "He is a Mason, or if not, why does he wear the emblems of Masonry?" When asked why he wore that emblem when knowing that he was not a Mason, he replied: "I have a legal right to wear just what I please, and I'll wear that pin just as long as I please; so help yourself, if you can." Now, he is a man that has "enough and to spare;" is a member of a church; an active worker in Sunday School affairs, and has good intellectual abilities, yet breathes a lie every day. He is honourable in all his financial dealings, as far as known, with his fellow men, yet attempts by his outward appearance to pass himself off for what he is not—a Mason.

I have another Mason in view, who is never seen without a Masonic emblem upon his person, who, I can safely say, has not seen the inside of a Lodge room ten times within as many years. He wears the emblems of Masonry, however, just as if he was one of the brightest Masons in the land. There are many Lodges which have just such members; they swarm around us, a byeword and a reproach to the Institution; their Masonry consists in the emblems worn, while they have none in their hearts. These emblem-abusers, to the unitiated, pass as true Masons, when in fact they are "sailing under false colours."

True Masonry does not consist in wearing emblems, but in deeds of philanthropy, and a full practice of Masonic tenets and principles. It is not by emblems that we should be known, but by our actions. One may wear the square and compasses upon his person, but unless he lives up to the lessons taught by them he is not a true Mason; his Masonry is purely superficial, and extends no further than outward appearances.

The practice of displaying the emblems of Masonry upon signs, business cards and advertising mediums, is the most deplorable of all. It is bad enough to flaunt those emblems upon the person, without debasing the purposes of Masonry by using them as the means to advance selfish interests, yet it is often done, without even a word of remonstrance. When one enters the Masonic Institution he affirms that he is uninfluenced by mercenary motives, yet when he uses the emblems of Masonry as a means to further selfish purposes he acts in direct violation of that affirmation. Masonic emblems are shown to draw attention to the fact that the owners are Masons, and as such entitled to the patronage and protection of the Craft. Are they not then actuated by mercenary motives? Most assuredly they are, and therefore are unworthy of the name Mason or the patronage of Masons. They bring the emblems of Masonry, which are so full of meaning, down to the mere level of advertising mediums; they are their stepping-stones for selfish purposes. Now he that will so debase himself as to abuse our emblems in that manner is unworthy of intercourse with Masons.

I do not object to brethren wearing emblems of Masonry at suitable times, or in suitable places, but I do most earnestly protest against that profuse display of them which I sometimes see. They certainly are not worn to prove the love which one has for Masonry, for deeds, not outward displays, do that.

There may, perhaps, have been instances where a recognition of a Masonic emblem has proven of benefit to the wearer, when placed in a position where he needed assistance and was unable to help himself, but they are rare. Again, one of the best arguments of the impostor is in the emblems that he wears. He applies for assistance, and many times, in the hurry of the moment, receives it, when, had time been taken and he examined more closely, he would have been shown up in his true colours.

It is not so much the use as the abuse of the wearing of Masonic emblems that I object to. I am not averse to seeing a plain simple emblem upon a brother, but I do most strenuously object to seeing emblems painted on signs, printed on business cards, and linked into advertising mediums. It is prostituting the purposes of Masonry, it is violating its first principles, and, as I view it, expulsion is not too severe a punishment for one who will use them for mercenary purposes, or who by their profuse use will advertise that he is a Mason.—Voice of Masonry.

TRANSMISSION OF MASONIC WORK.

THE Freemason should often commune with himself in the council chamber of thought. Masonry is both a science and an art, and he who would master it, and be in truth a Master Mason, must vigorously exercise his intellectual powers. In pursuance of this thought we propose to consider, first, how the ritual of Freemasonry has been transmitted through the decades of time: and next, how the individual Freemason can best qualify himself for the performance of Masonic work.

The true work of Masonry is, and always has been, strictly secret. It has never been committed to either writing or printing. Although handed down from year to year by word of mouth, it is, nevertheless, what it was in the beginning. This may seem strange, but it is true. Innumerable instances prove it, analogously in parallel cases outside of, as well as in all cases within, the Craft. It requires no extraordinary feat of memory to retain a volume of thought reduced to words, and to convey it in all its materiality from generation to generation. This has been proven again and again in the profane world. It was in this manner that the patriarchs transmitted from one to another the facts of Biblical history, before the employment of writing; it was thus that one of the most wonderful productions of the human mind, the Illiad, was for generations preserved; and likewise the famous Vedas of India, which are four times the length of the Iliad. These and other notable examples, prove that the human mind is a storehouse capable of containing a vast amount of knowledge, so that, if methodically arranged, it may be drawn upon at pleasure. When memory is the warder of the brain, the facts which have entered it may depart again at will, to re-enter, and remain in the mind subject to call for ever. Wonderful, wonderful memory! Under discipline it is God-like. It is not merely for the little events of life, but as well for the greatest. True, a courtier will remember for ever a smile from his sovereign, or an unfortunate sneer which befell him at court when taking a glass of wine; but these are paltry employments for the workshop of the brain. Memory is as necessary in the higher pursuits of life as it is in its commonest transactions. All have it, or may have it, in sufficient degree to answer every practical purpose, while some have it in extraordinary power. Many examples of this are preserved in history and biography. Seneca, by the mere effort of his natural memory, could repeat two thousand words after once hearing them, although they had no dependence upon or connection with each other. Cyrus knew every soldier in his army by name, and Scipio all of the people of Rome. In our own time we are familar with the remarkable feats of memory of the historian Macaulay, and with the linguistic powers of Mezzofanti, who spoke fifty-eight languages. But such abnormal memories as these are not requisite for the transmission of Masonic work, or the skilful mastery and delivery of the ritual. Ordinary endowments are sufficient for the purposes of the Craft, although extraordinary ones are eminently serviceable, and adorn the Freemason as they do the man.

Sage Dr. Johnson observed, that "the two offices of memory are, collection and distribution." Some are adequate to the one, without being so to the other. With some the memory is a prison-house, with others a house of entertainment, free as air, through which troop thoughts that are ever at the call of the master. The old saying, that we forget nothing, has been disproved a thousand times by Junior Wardens, aye, and by Seniors and Masters. The knowledge may all be there, but it is not always subject to beck and call. It is capricious, depending too much upon the momentary feelings. Some persons cannot always recollect at will what they know. It is only the well-balanced mind that is master of itself that can use its own riches, and send them flowing out like a river.

The intellectual manner of transmitting its work is one external feature that distinguishes Freemasonry from the cloud of secret societies that have imitated it, in some degree, but in truth followed it at an immense distance. Many of these latter were contrived by little men for little men—men of contracted powers of mind, and small ability to remember. For such there must be a printed ritual. They are not competent to burden their minds, but must depend upon the seeing of the eye rather than the hearing of the ear. We esteem it one of the glories of Freemasonry that it may boast not only a nobility of thought, but a nobility in the manner of preserving and transmitting thought. We have always deprecated the employment of any artificial aids, in the nature of keys or mnemonics, as crutches for lame minds; or the constitution of any body of conservators of the work. Freemasonry is its own conservator, and its regular officers are sufficient for conducting it. The good old way is the best way. It was good enough for the primitive Scriptures, and the Iliad, and the Vedas, and for Freemasonry through all past time, and it will be good enough throughout the future of the Craft.

Do you ask, What is the best method for a Mason to employ to qualify himself for being a Master in the Craft? If he would truly enjoy "the pleasures of memory," he must give attention to the work. There is a volume in that word, attention. It means not merely to hear, but to listen—to attend closely with a view to hear, to think while he hears. THE ACCOMPLISHED FREEMASON MUST BE A LISTENER AND A THINKER, and if he be these, he will be one of those who will aid in the transmission of the work to the rising generation of initiates, and thereby win for himself both a good report among his brethren in the present, and a reputation that shall itself be transmitted as a part of the History of Freemasonry.—Keystone.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—Notable Facts.—Summer heats augment the annoyances of skin diseases and encourage the development of febrile disorders, wherefore they should, as they may, be removed by these detergent and purifying preparations. In stomach complaints, liver affections, pains and spasms of the bowels, Holloway's unguent, well rubbed over the affected part, immediately gives the greatest ease, prevents congestion and inflammation, checks the threatening diarrhœa and averts incipient cholera. The poorer inhabitants of large cities will find these remedies to be their best friend when any pestilence rages, or when, from unknown causes, eruptions, boils, abscesses, or ulcerations, betoken the presence of taints or impurities within the system and call for instant and effective curative medicines.

HOLIDAY HAUNTS.

—:o:—

LONDON AND SOUTH WESTERN.

THIS line serves admirably for visitors who make London their headquarters and wish to explore Surrey and a part of Berkshire. It covers all the interesting spots within easy distance from London, and leads to some wild and attractive places that are known to artists but are not very generally frequented. The most familiar sights are Kew Gardens, Wimbledon Common, Richmond and its Park, Bushey Park, and Hampton Court, all these are well known and deserve the fame they have acquired. Wimbledon Common is delightful for a breezy walk, and once a year it is the centre at which assemble the crack rifle shots of the country, and sometimes also those of America and Canada. Kew Gardens has no rival, and Hampton Court is one of the finest show places in England. The Thames about Barnes loses the busy activity that characterises its waters lower down, and some beautiful spots line its banks. The view from Richmond Hill is particularly charming, taking in, as it does, the valley below, with the Thames winding along through a richly-wooded country, past pretty villages, and well-kept lawns and stately houses, disclosing many beauties in its serpentine course. One of the greatest treats to those fond of boating, fishing, and sketching, is a trip up the Thames. The river route is ever changing and picturesque, and facilities are offered which make preparations for the journey easy and pleasant. Without, however, seeking water-carriage, there are many places on the Thames that can be reached by the South Western Railway. Reference to the London District Map which accompanies the Time Table will show the positions of the various towns and villages on the banks of the river or near thereto. We shall leave the visitors to themselves to explore the country we have briefly referred to, just remarking that Osterley Park, once the residence of Sir Thomas Gresham, and where he entertained Queen Elizabeth, is not far from Isleworth, and but an easy walking distance from Kew Gardens. Outwardly there is not much to be seen, and we are not quite sure that the journey would be repaid by the chance of getting a sight of the interior of the house, now belonging to the Jersey family. There are some peculiar associations connected with Osterley that invest it with an interest its form and surroundings would not otherwise invite. On the south side of the district we are contemplating there is the very pretty country of Streatham, Tooting, Merton, Sutton, Morden, Cheam, Ewell, Epsom and Leatherhead for Boxhill, a delightful resort. At Merton Abbey Nelson lived with Lady Hamilton, but the old foundation is gone and nothing but memory remains.

Starting from Twickenham along the upper line, the Thames is again reached at Staines; here it divides, one branch going to Datchet and Windsor, the other to Reading. This little line passes through Egham, Sunningdale and Ascot, all places of interest. Egham was the scene of one of the greatest events in the history of freedom and the country. At Runnymede, a small island in the parish, and close by the Thames, King John signed Magna Charta. The place has no special attractions, but the associations that surround it, and the country round about, make a visit to Runnymede very interesting. Above Egham is Englefield Green, one of those elevated patches of scenery that seem to drop from the skies to give a charm to all around. To the right lies Windsor Castle, a fine view of which can be obtained from this height. Keeping to the line, Virginia Water Station is reached. It is situated some distance from the beautiful spot bearing its name. A day might well be spent here, and to meet the requirements of visitors there is a good hotel abutting on to the water. Virginia Water forms part of Windsor Park, and is really a charming and picturesque spot. The Park and Castle could be inspected at the same time, and a more interesting day's excursion could hardly well be planned. From Virginia Water a branch lines goes south to Weybridge; midway is the pretty town of Chertsey. There was once an abbey here, large in size and rich in treasures, but few remains are left, just sufficient to attest its age but not its grandeur. After leaving Virginia Water, the line passes through beautiful Sunningdale and Chobham Common, on to healthy and wild Ascot Heath. This latter is a grand place for the Royal sport and has a world-wide fame. The country is very picturesque all about and the air exceptionally fine. We cannot stop to trace the country between Ascot and Reading. We have already referred to this place, and those who wish for a further acquaintance with the Thames could not do better than start from the biscuit town and go to the charming little village of Wargrave, on to Henley, and even round by Taplow, Maidenhead, Bray, Eton, Windsor and Staines. Nothing can exceed the beauty of the river in the district we have sketched, as is proved by the esteem in which it is held by artists.

Starting from Long Ditton on the South side of Hampton Court we are taken to Esher, Walton, Weybridge, Woking and Frimley on the borders of Hampshire. From Woking the line branches down to Guildford, and from Frimley another branch goes to Aldershot, which is joined here by the line from Guildford, and which continues on to Winchester. The main line from Frimley goes to Salisbury, with a break on the right at Andover Junction for Marlborough and Swindon. We have alluded to the middle route that goes to Winchester, below that, from Guildford, the line passes by Godalming and Haslemere, to Petersfield, from thence a branch goes to Midhurst, where Richard Cobden lived and died. He was born at a village close by, and was the son of a Sussex farmer. From Petersfield the route is continued past Hambledon to Havant, Portsmouth and Gosport for Isle of Wight and Southampton. Harking back, notice should be taken of the very pleasant little village of Esher, where Wolsey once resided. Claremont House is contiguous, and here the Princess Charlotte died, in 1817. Here also Louis Philippe and his ex-Queen resided for ten years, and died. They were buried at Weybridge. Between Esher and Weybridge is Walton, an agreeable spot for a short excursion. The "Gossip's Bridle" in the church should teach a useful lesson to scolds. Those who are loyal to the memory of Charles I. will not like this little village any better for its being the birthplace of the regicide Bradshaw; but as a set-off we may state that Admiral Rodney, stout-hearted, gallant, and incorruptible, was born at Walton. This valiant naval hero got into pecuniary difficulties, chiefly through contesting that borough of evil repute, Northampton, and had to reside on the Continent. During the American war he was tempted by brilliant offers to enter the French service. He preferred honour and poverty to wealth and position in foreign service. His Spartan exhibition of courage and honesty came to the ears of the government, and Rodney was recalled home, afterwards to vindicate his character as a commander and his patriotism as an Englishman. Near Walton is Oatlands Park, with a history and associations worth more than a passing thought.

Leaving the comparatively near neighbourhood of London we pass along the main line to Frimley, prettily varied with hills and dales, on the borders of Surrey, on to Farnborough, with Aldershot on the left and a line on the right to Ascot. Passing Fleet and its lakes, and Winchfield on the left, are the ruins of Basing House. A very interesting history attaches to the old village of Basing. A severe battle was fought here between the Danes and the Saxons in 871, under Alfred and his brother King Ethelred, the latter being defeated. A castle was built at a very early period, which was rebuilt by Paulet, the first Marquis of Winchester. This nobleman lived during four reigns, remarkable for changes, and yet he seems to have remained in favour during the whole of them. For a man of such importance to retain his head and his property during the reigns of Henry VIII., Edward VI., and Mary and Elizabeth, showed that he was endowed with great skill as a courtier, and affords a strong illustration of his own theory of "being a willow and not an oak." He entertained Queen Elizabeth, who was so pleased with her host that she is credited with remarking: "By my troth, if my lord treasurer were but a young man, I could find in my heart to love him for a husband before any man in England." The "Virgin Queen" evidently knew how to flirt. She visited Basing House again in 1601, and was entertained right royally by the fourth Marquis. Forty-two years later the fifth Marquis fortified the House against the Parliamentary troops. For four years he maintained his position against siege and assaults, and at last Cromwell had to undertake the work of conquest. He ultimately stormed the House and took the Marquis, Sir Robert Peake, and others prisoners. The booty that was obtained amounted, it is stated, to the value of £200,000, and consisted of money, jewels, furniture, and indeed the entire contents of the house. On the recommendation of Cromwell the building was destroyed, and little now remains to tell of the fierce struggle. The line continues on to Salisbury. Here the tourist can find enough to interest him for a time. There is the Cathedral, with its noble spire 400 feet high, the loftiest in the kingdom. It stands in the centre of the city, upon a grassy platform, surrounded with trees, and is seen to great advantage. On the right of the line are the earthworks of Old Sarum, once a great city, and although not a house remained to warrant the title of a borough it returned two members to Parliament up to the time of the Reform Bill of 1832. The elm under which the elections took place is, we believe, still to be seen. Not far from Salisbury is Stonehenge, with its marvellous remains, at once a wonder to admire and a puzzle to solve. The line from Guildford passes through Farnham, where is situated an ancient castle, which has been in the possession of the See of Winchester for a thousand years. This latter city is one of the most ancient in the kingdom. It was the seat of Government, and here were built at least two castles, one being for the residence of the Bishop and the other for the use of the King. The remains now in existence formed part of the building erected by William the Conqueror. There is a tradition that King Arthur founded the castle, and the celebrated painted table of this king which hangs on the eastern wall of the County Hall is said to be "the identical board round which that monarch and his celebrated knights assembled in the fortress he had founded." This is a myth, but it is a very pretty one, the belief in which can hurt no one. In Messrs. Warne's "Abbeys, Castles, and Ancient Halls of England and Wales," a work we have before commended, the following description is given of this table:—

"It consists of a circle, divided into twenty-five green and white compartments radiating from the centre, which is a large double (Norman ?) rose. In the middle of the upper half of the circle, resting upon the rose, and extending to the double edge, is a canopied niche, in which is painted a royal figure, bearing the orb and sword, and wearing the royal crown. Around the centre rose is a circle inscribed with black letter, except where it is broken by the base of the niche and the sitting king. There are also names inscribed in six of the white compartments, as well as in the circle around the compartments, of which, however, this circle is rather a continuation, in colour and form corresponding to the several divisions, each bearing a name. . . . The table is made of very stout oak plank, and is larger than the roof and the floors of the rooms in the Eddystone Lighthouse, and considerably larger than the ground plot of the Parish Church of St. Lawrence in the Isle of Wight."

There is an ancient cross in Winchester, of the fifteenth century, of light and elegant design. Originally, no doubt, it was "one of the high crosses where the laws were declared, proclamations made, judgments delivered, corpses rested, sermons preached, and sometimes malefactors executed." The greatest attraction, of course, is the cathedral, and a wondrous work of art and devotion it is. We find it almost impossible to summarise the history of this noble pile. It has a record that is not equalled in England; its foundation recedes into the dim vista of time, and he who could grasp the facts, would realise a great part of the history of the country. Another branch line from Guildford goes through Godalming, wild and beautiful Haslemere, Hambledon, once famous as a cricket centre, on to Portsmouth. In fact, all the lines converge to this town and to Gosport and Southampton. We need not dwell upon Portsmouth and Gosport—they are famed throughout the world. Southampton is an ancient port, and is a very interesting town. It has a fine harbour, sheltered by wooded hills, and the Isle of Wight opposite acts as a natural breakwater. About three miles from the town is Netley Abbey, the ruins of which charmed the mind of Horace Walpole, who said, "they are not the ruins of Netley, but of Paradise." They certainly are delightfully situated, and ought to share in the admiration that could not fail to be evoked by a visit to Southampton and its neighbourhood.

We need scarcely dwell upon the Isle of Wight, although it is a tempting theme. History and associations are here blended with nature in rich array. The scenery and climate are delightful, and the island is a never-failing source of attraction to visitors. Taking Winchester as the starting point, we know of no district that offers so many charms of history and beauty as that embraced in the ancient city, Southampton, Portsmouth, and the Isle of Wight. As a change there are Lymington, Christchurch, and Bournemouth, the latter being remarkable as a comparatively new but beautiful growth. It is noted for the salubrity of the climate, and it is very picturesquely situated. Then there are Poole and Wimborne, with its Minster of ancient foundation. Before the Reformation this old church was said to have possessed some rare relics, such for instance as "pieces of our Lord's manger, robe and cross; some of the hairs of his beard, and a thorn of his crown; the blood of Sir Thomas à Becket, and part of St. Agatha's thigh." What became of them we do not know. Dorchester is another ancient town with monkish traditions and history. There are many other places of note in the locality, a visit to which would afford pleasure to the tourist. The line goes from Dorchester to Weymouth and Portland, to which we have referred in a previous paper. From Wimborne the line goes upwards to Evercreech Junction, where it divides, one branch going to Bath and the other to Burnham. From this latter place there is a service of steamboats to Cardiff, across the Bristol Channel. We have omitted reference to the ship services from Southampton. They go to Havre and Honfleur, to Cherbourg, to St. Malo, and to Jersey, Guernsey, and Granville. The other route to the Channel Islands from Weymouth we mentioned in another paper.

Joining the main line at Salisbury again, we go in a direct route to Exeter. Between spurs jut out—on the right to Chard, and on the left for Seaton, for Sidmouth and for Exmouth. Omnibuses run to various points along the coast, especially in Dorsetshire, embracing Swanage and Corfe Castle. The ruins of the latter are well worthy a visit, from their extent and the position in which they stand on a hill. Not far from the Castle is Smedmore House, the possession of the Clavells, an old family. The situation of the house is commanding, the family is one of the most ancient in the kingdom, and one member at least earned an unenviable notoriety. One John Clavell, educated gentleman, poet and highwayman, broke the continuity of the respectability of his family by his daring deeds as a footpad. He was caught, sentenced to be hanged, but was pardoned, and it is believed he afterwards fought gallantly in the service of Charles I., who had saved his neck and his reputation. To show the character of the man, we quote the following lines he indited "unto his majestie" after he was apprehended, but before his trial:—

"I that have robbed so oft, am now bid stand,
Death and the Law assault me, and demand
My life and meanes; I never used men so,
But having ta'en their money, let them goe;
Yet must I die? and is there no relief?
The King of kings took mercy on a thief;
So may my gracious king, in mercy, save me,
Although grim Death and Law do thus outbrave me.
God is his President, and men shall see
His Mercie is beyond Severity."

We must pass by Shaftesbury Nunnery and Sherborne Abbey and Castle; we cannot linger on the coast either, and can only say of Exeter that its Cathedral, although not ranking among the first class, is exceedingly beautiful, that the ruins of the Castle of Rougemont and the walk on the north, shaded with fine elm trees and called Northernay, are the chief lions of the city. The railway is continued on to Plymouth, with a branch spreading out to Barnstaple, where it divides for Ilfracombe and Bideford. Another branch stretches out at Okehampton for Holsworthy, where a coach-track leads on to Bude, and from thence south-west along the coast to Tintagel, Camelford, when it diverges—left to Launceston, right to Wadebridge and Padstow, and further on still to St. Colomb and New Quay. Going north from Bude another coach route leads to Hartland, where it forms a triangle, and embraces Bridport on the right, Westward Ho on the left, and Clovelly straight ahead. There are also coach tracks from Barnstaple to Combe Martin and Lynton. The district we have sketched from Exeter is full of charm. Nothing can exceed the beauty and variety of the scenery from Ilfracombe to Lynmouth. One guide book we have seen says:—"'Around are subalpine valleys, wild gloomy ridges, and precipices and crags; while near at hand are tors and torrents, hills and dales, moorland and woodland and sea." That is not an exaggerated summary; but the whole coast is rich in scenes of wild grandeur, while inland cultivation and nature add to the charms of the picture. Devon is a lovely county for the pleasure seeker; and then there is Cornwall, a county of much rude and grand beauty, that unites the tempestuous sea and rugged rock with a climate mild and beneficent. The turbulent and the peaceful, though so dissimilar, are not altogether discordant, and those who go to Cornwall would not willingly sacrifice one of its attractions.

The installation ceremony will be rehearsed by Bro. James Smith, W.M. of the Confidence Lodge, No. 193, at the Confidence Lodge of Instruction, Hercules Tavern (Bro. Maidwell's), Leadenhall-street, on Wednesday next, 5th inst., at 7 o'clock. Brethren are earnestly invited.

To the United Grand Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of England.

The Board of General Purposes beg to submit a statement of the Grand Lodge Accounts at the Meeting of the Finance Committee, held on Friday, the 17th day of August last, showing a Balance in the Bank of England of £4,165 15s 1d; and in the hands of the Grand Secretary for Petty Cash £75, and for Servants' Wages £100.

(Signed) JOHN B. MONCKTON,
President.

FREEMASONS' HALL, LONDON, W.C.
21st August 1883.

4. REPORT OF SPECIAL BUILDING COMMITTEE.

To the United Grand Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of England.

We, the undersigned, being the Special Committee appointed by and by order of Grand Lodge of the 6th June last to consider the question of reinstating, or enlarging, or removing the old Masonic Temple, recently destroyed by fire, and to obtain and submit to Grand Lodge plans and estimates for the same, and to deposit such plans and estimates in the Grand Secretary's Office or other convenient place for the inspection of the Craft, beg to report as follows:—

1. Four of our number viz., Brothers George Burt, John Gibson, W. Raynham Stewart, and J. Lewis Thomas, having been directly appointed by Grand Lodge, the remaining four were by order of Grand Lodge duly elected by the Board of General Purposes, viz., Brothers William Bristow, Ralph Clutton, Sir John B. Monckton, and J. Ebenezer Saunders.

2. At our first meeting Brother Sir John B. Monckton was unanimously elected to be Chairman of the Committee.

3. We took steps without loss of time to arrange and agree the Insurance questions arising in consequence of the fire, and after some correspondence and discussion, succeeded in so doing on the following terms, which we believe to be just and equitable:—

Buildings ... ... (together with all accruing expenses)	£6400
Furniture ... ... (with return of damaged carpet)	1050
Statue	500
Organ	100
Pictures	500

The two last items being the full amount insured.

4. We promptly proceeded to consider the following points: Whether it would be advisable simply to reinstate, or to construct an enlarged Temple on and adjacent to the present site, or to seek for another site for the purpose.

5. We especially gave our attention to the Thames Embankment as almost, if not quite the only alternative site, and beg to report our unanimous opinion, as the result of careful enquiries we have made, that such a step would not only seriously prejudice the value of the property of Grand Lodge in Great Queen Street, but, irrespective of this, would require an enormous expenditure, far beyond the resources of Grand Lodge, to provide the multifarious items of necessary accommodation, without, in our opinion, corresponding or proportionate benefit.

6. The question of reinstatement, should Grand Lodge determine on such a course, is a simple one, and would, we are advised, be covered by the amount of the Insurance.

7. Feeling, however, assured that the wishes, equally with the growing necessities of the Craft, point to considerably increased space for the meetings of Grand Lodge, we have taken steps to procure for the consideration of Grand Lodge such proposals as would, if carried into effect, bring about such an end. This has involved many meetings and much discussion and consideration, and has eventuated in the exchange of the following memorandum between ourselves and Messrs. Spiers and Pond, Limited, the lessees of Freemasons' Tavern, for an unexpired term of twenty-two years, at an annual rent of £1,200.

Digitized by Google

8. Copy memorandum of the heads of proposed agreement with the Grand Lodge respecting Freemasons' Tavern and adjoining property:

Spiers and Pond, Limited, are to—

1. Give up their Grand Banqueting Hall upon the completion of the new buildings and alterations, that the Grand Lodge may construct thereon an enlarged Masonic Temple.

2. Pay a rental of £2,000 per annum.

Grand Lodge are to:—

1. Acquire the adjoining Bacon's Hotel, rebuild it with all necessary permanent fixtures, such as kitchen apparatus, gas fittings, sun-lights, plate glass decorations, &c., as at present done, and rearrange portions of premises as necessitated by the contemplated alterations, the whole to be for Spiers and Pond's occupation.

2. Let Spiers and Pond have whole space under new Temple.

3. Remove kitchen to top of building and convert present kitchen into supper room.

4. The present Banqueting Hall and remainder of the establishment not to be interfered with more than is necessary during the alterations.

5. Grant Spiers and Pond lease for 50 years at £2,000 rental from the completion of the works, present lease then to be surrendered.

6. A back entrance to be allowed on site of present stable at rear of Board Room.

7. All plans of buildings, alterations, and communications to be agreed between the parties.

The above subject to the approval of Grand Lodge; whereupon a proper agreement shall be executed.

9. We have ascertained that Mr. Bacon, the lessee of Bacon's Hotel, for an unexpired term of five years and four months at £360 annual rental, will sell his entire interest therein with the furniture and fixtures for £6,000.

10. The carrying out of the foregoing scheme, if determined on by Grand Lodge, would furnish the Craft with a Temple of handsome proportions, capable of holding about 1500 persons, being twice the number that the late Temple would accommodate, with entrances and exits in accordance with the requirements of safety, and with the less direct but very decided benefit of immeasurable improvement in the location of the tavern kitchen.

11. On the important question of Finance we have consulted the Grand Superintendent of Works, who has submitted to us the following as an approximate estimate for carrying out the scheme:—

Purchase of Mr. Bacon's lease, goodwill, furniture, &c.	£6,000
Rebuilding Bacon's Hotel as part of Freemasons' Tavern	15,000
Removal of kitchen to top of same from basement of present Tavern and conversion of present kitchen into supper room ...	5,000
Fittings, decorations, and contingencies ...	4,000
		£30,000
Building enlarged Temple	16,400
Less insurance	6,400
		10,000
		£40,000

12. We learn that Grand Lodge now possesses some £22,000 in the Funds, the income of which is £660
*To borrow £18,000 at 3 per cent. would cost per annum ... 540
£1,200

The increased rent of the Tavern would be ...	£800
Less rent of Bacon's Hotel	360
		440
Making a nett annual cost of the enlargement of Temple on the foregoing estimates of		£760

13. The net income of Grand Lodge was reported, upwards of a year since, by a Special Committee appointed for that purpose, to be about £4,000 a year, since which time £800 a year has been alienated as a permanent grant to the Royal Masonic Benevolent Institution. The annual charge, therefore, mentioned above as the result of the works spoken of, is somewhat less than a fourth of the net available income, supposing such to remain stationary.

14. We submit the above scheme and approximate estimates for the consideration of Grand Lodge, and have, in accordance with the instructions given us, directed such plans and sketches as will inform the brethren generally of what is proposed to be done to be laid on the table of the Library in Freemasons' Hall.

Dated this 3rd day of August 1883.

(Signed) JOHN B. MONCKTON. J. LEWIS THOMAS.
RAYNHAM W. STEWART. WILLIAM BRISTOW.
JOHN GIBSON. GEORGE BURT.

* It is contemplated that the required loan might conveniently be made from the Fund of Benevolence, to the credit of which Fund between £40,000 and £50,000 stand in Consols.

Bro. Sir Erasmus Wilson never seems to be weary of well-doing. It was only last week that we reported the completion and dedication of a noble gift which our brother had made to the Royal Sea Bathing Infirmary at Margate; now we find that on Wednesday last he laid the foundation-stone of the new Church of St. Saviour, Westgate-on-Sea. His pockets are deep, but not too deep for the hands of benevolence and generosity to fathom their depths. Bro. Wilson is continually engaged in some good work, and when we read that he was suffering from an affection of the eyes, we were afraid he was going to be laid aside, at least for a time. We trust the present activity is a sign of improvement, and that our excellent brother is yet destined for years to come to exemplify in his person one of the grandest sides of Freemasonry.

At the North London Chapter of Improvement, on Thursday, 30th August, at the Canonbury Tavern, St. Mary's Road, Islington, Comp. Higgins occupied the chair of Z., Sheffield H., Carter J., Edmonds S.N., George P.S. Taking into consideration the warm weather, there was a very good attendance.

At the General Committee of the Royal Masonic Institution for Girls, held on Thursday afternoon last, at Freemasons' Hall, Colonel Creaton, Past Grand Treasurer, presided. There were present Bros. Matthews, Gladwell, Dicketts, Colonel Peters Grand Sword Bearer, Major Finney, Adlard, Hedges (Secretary), and Massey. Beyond the reading and confirmation of minutes, and the authorising the Chairman to sign cheques, there was no business before the meeting.

GRAND LODGE AND THE STATUS OF PAST MASTERS.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I very much regret that your contemporary has not adopted the same tone as yourself in dealing with the question of the status of Past Masters. As you justly observe in your last issue, no good can come of turning a fair contention into the strife of parties. It is not a battle between the Provinces and London, but a question of practice of so important a character as to demand the most serious consideration. Anything, therefore, that tends to distract the mind and turn it into other and bitter thoughts, is simply multiplying difficulties and rendering a pleasant solution well-nigh impossible. I have too much regard for our Provincial brethren to believe for one moment that they desire to create "bogus" Past Masters, or that they prefer what is termed a "fad" to the reproach of their commonsense and to the injury of the Craft. It is not pleasant for a P.M. to have to separate from his mother Lodge and lose all the honours years of labour have brought him, and it is not so very unreasonable after all that he should seek to retain his rank when he joins another Lodge. Allowance must be made for disappointment, for the feeling arising out of the loss of prestige, and for the efforts that are being made to retain some of the sweets of authority. I do not believe in the new rule; I fear it will not work for the good of Freemasonry, but in order to arrive at a judgment that shall have the sanction of justice and reason it will be necessary to show that the proposed cure is worse than the complaint. I do not think that it can be shown that there is no grievance, and it certainly has not been settled that private Lodges have the power to grant rank to joining members who come as Past Masters from other Lodges. That some Lodges have acted upon such an assumption is beyond doubt, and according to the Grand Registrar, there is no written law to forbid the practice. The uncertainty on this point is alone justification for raising the question, which cannot be settled by the use of offensive phrases. To let matters go on in the future as they have gone on in the past does not appear to me to be a statesmanlike way of meeting a vexed question. It would not be worthy of the intelligence of the Craft, and would most likely lead to much diversity of action and friction. I do not see that there would be any great harm in empowering private Lodges to deal with the question of rank, so far as joining Past Masters are concerned. It is a matter affecting themselves only, and they are the best judges of fitness and merit of those they accept as members. Such a system would destroy the necessity, even the motive of blackballing, for Lodges could accept a joining Past Master without pledging themselves to do more than grant him the rights of any other joining brother. That condition should be plainly stated, so that the joining Past Master would enter with the clear understanding that merit, and the peculiar circumstances of the case would be the determining causes as to the position he should hold in the Lodge. Such a method would give freedom to all alike; it would enable a P.M. to prefer his claim for honour, and it would give the members of the Lodge the opportunity of exercising their discretion, without which there can be no valid responsibility. To make it part of the Constitution to say that a joining P.M. shall take a certain rank only admits of the alternative of rejection. That is the inevitable consequence, and I fear it would more frequently happen than those who favour the new rule anticipate. To let matters remain as they were would not be wise, and the only other alternative would be to make it illegal to give rank to a joining P.M. unless he passed through the chair again. That would be an easy and a very direct way of getting over the difficulty, but would it be satisfactory? Would it meet the wants of those who now feel they have a grievance? If no harm would be likely to follow upon the granting of the liberty I have referred to, I think it would be the wiser course to follow, especially as there seemed to be a feeling in that direction at the recent Special Meeting of Grand Lodge.

I do not know whether the question will be raised on Wednesday night or not, but if it is, I hope the points I have mentioned will be remembered and will at least receive consideration. I shall endeavour to be present, and most assuredly I shall be prepared to deal with any well-considered plan that may be proposed without the least reference as to whether it comes from a London or a Provincial brother. I know no distinction between brethren on all matters affecting the Craft at large, and if the question is approached in that spirit there is no reason why a happy solution should not be arrived at.

I am, Dear Sir and Brother,

Yours faithfully and fraternally,

I. P. M.

THE NEW TEMPLE QUESTION.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—In looking over the agenda paper for the forthcoming Quarterly Communication of Wednesday next, I find matters of the gravest importance set down for disposal. Among other questions that will come before the brethren is that relating to the rebuilding of the Temple and certain contemplated alterations. I quite agree with the decision arrived at with regard to the site of the Temple, and I believe the scheme of the Special Building Committee as a whole to be worthy of acceptance. It contemplates uniting the banqueting hall now in existence, belonging to the hotel, with the Temple to be rebuilt, arranged to accommodate 1,500 brethren, the whole forming the Temple of the future. The space beneath is to be granted to Messrs. Spiers and Pond for their use. The kitchen is to be removed to the top of the building, and the space below used as a supper-room. Certain rights are to be purchased of Mr. Bacon, and in view of sundry improvements of the hotel Messrs. Spiers and Pond are to pay a rental of £2,000 a year upon the lease for fifty years from the completion of the alterations.

Now, although there can be no doubt that arrangements have been made for the erection of a new banqueting hall of sufficient capacity, not a word is said about it in the report of the Committee. The hall is indicated on the plans laid upon the table in the Library at Freemasons' Hall, it is true, but comparatively few will see the plans, and possibly still fewer sufficiently understand them to be able to make the matter clear to those they represent.

We never knew a building yet of any magnitude that was erected within the contract price. The estimate for the new Temple and the necessary works is £40,000; most likely that total will be increased by £10 000 or £15 000, and should this be the case, it will be set down to the erection of the new banqueting hall, and the outlay may possibly be regarded with suspicion. It would be better, therefore, that there should be no doubt on the matter, and that it should be set forth in clear and definite terms what is contemplated to be done. The estimated cost is before us—that we know; what the brethren want in addition is a simple statement in which every alteration is described in absolute terms. There should be no ambiguity now, in order that there may not be any cause of grumbling in the future.

I am, Sir,

Fraternally yours,

WATCHMAN.

MASONIC LITERATURE.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I endorse the views of your correspondent "BOOKWORM," who under the above heading, in your last issue, called attention to the utter want of facilities for studying the literature of the Craft. I know nothing about the American papers and journals. I know enough of our own to warrant me in saying that they are not supported as they ought to be. Why is this? The answer, to my mind, seems plain. There is nothing to stimulate inquiry; nothing to satisfy the fancy as well as the mind. I am convinced that if a museum and library were established at Queen Street there would soon be a disposition manifested for inquiry, and Masons would want handy references for home use which would of course be supplied by the current Masonic literature. I admit all that can be said about the generosity of the brethren, but if one fraction of what is spent over the table were applied in the manner I have described there would soon be an alteration in the character of Freemasonry in this country. I have no hesitation in saying that the Craft generally are ignorant of the elements of the history and philosophy of the Order to which they belong. They learn the ceremonies and repeat them parrot-like; they say "Amen" to words of praise that may come from the lips of those better informed than themselves, which gives encouragement to their pride. I want Masons in England to be worthy of their high calling, of their grand inheritance. I would not, upon any account, have the heart neglected, but I contend that the head sadly needs cultivation. I hope, therefore, that something definite will be done at once to provide a museum and library, and the appointment of a librarian, who shall devote his time to classifying works, making himself acquainted with their contents, and shall keep his eyes open to any desirable work that may be offered for sale. An active, intelligent man would soon get contributions to both museum and library were the matter taken up by Grand Lodge. Until that is done there is no hope for real progress. The present condition of matters is a disgrace to the Craft and a reflection upon its leading spirits.

I am, Sir and Brother,

Yours faithfully,

GRUB.

RANDOM NOTES AND REFLECTIONS.

ALBANY, Missouri, has the questionable honour of producing a curious compound of Republican cant and "high falutin" in a journal rejoicing in the name of the American Freeman. It impudently flaunts the text—"The Truth shall make you Free," and at once proceeds to exercise the privilege of liberty by denouncing Freemasonry. The Craft must look out in America. A new Daniel has arisen, and there is no mistaking his judgment—

If there's a hole in a' your coats,
Faith, he'll tent it;
A chiel's amang ye takin notes,
And faith he'll prent it.

It is not worth while to seriously parley with the American Freeman. Such vile wrath is only possible where liberty habitually becomes a coarse and lying license, and where the dollar is mightier than anything else. We refer to this scurrilous print just to give the Craft in England some idea of what their brethren in America have to endure. Our course here is smooth and pleasant; for many years Brother Jonathan had to fight against a host of foes. Now he is assailed by a few noxious parasites and the common enemy—the Romish priest. The latter is respectable but wrongheaded and tyrannical; the former is nasty and abusive.

—:o:—

It appears by the editor of the print mentioned above, that Freemasonry in America "contravenes the spirit and letter of various clauses of the Constitution of the United States." The Lodges and Chapters actually dare to give titles to the brethren, and this is held to be a shocking violation of the law against granting titles. This Republican Simon Pure has so little faith in his principles that he is afraid of the bare mention of the names of Masters and Past Masters, of Most Worshipful, Illustrious, Potent, and Sovereign Masters, while the mention of the word King sends him into fits of despair. It is nought to him that the various Lodges "are incorporated by the local legal authorities." The latter are wrong, and he wants to know how they dare go against the fundamental law of the land. Poor man, he cannot distinguish between the symbolical and the practical; if he could he would find plenty of honest work in correcting the corruption of his own government. The theory of Republicanism is the purity of the governors and the governed, but probably there is no government in the world more hopelessly corrupt than the American. The system favours dishonesty, and the love of the "Almighty Dollar" finds ready means for plying a nefarious trade. Our advice to the editor of the American Freeman is to look to matters about which there is do doubt, and not trouble himself anent things he possibly cannot understand, and certainly cannot appreciate.

—:o:—

This mock moralist goes on to say that Freemasonry abridges the right of "freedom of speech," and "freedom of the Press." What a pity it has not reached this wholesale slanderer. Then he runs a muck against the oaths, raves about "slavery and involuntary servitude," and says that Masonry is "organised swindling," and in fact "is at war with every part and parcel of the Federal Constitution and the principles of free government." How shocking. There is a good deal more, all tending to the grossest misrepresentation, and urging upon the readers of the Freeman the necessity of agitating for State crusades against Freemasonry and its members. The editor of this violent paper comes a century too late; he has no doubt adopted the congenial calling of slinging dirt, but such wordy scavengers are now only needed among the scum of the community, and among Roman Catholics, who are the sworn enemies of all liberty and progress.

If genuine, the portrait in oil of Bro. Sir Walter Scott, said to be in possession of a lady of Boston, U.S., is undoubtedly a valuable treasure. The Keystone says:—

It represents the poet in early manhood. He wears no beard; his hair is brown; his shirt collar, in something like the Byronesque style, falls away from his neck; the eyes are blue, and the features are evidently the same as in the more familiar portraits. It is supposed to have been taken from a Scotch Castle.

From the description given there ought to be no difficulty about its identification. Our contemporary says nothing about the portrait as a work of art, but if it be what it purports to be, "it is a very curious and interesting memorial."

—:o:—

With all their go-a-headism there is a limit even beyond which American Masons, or rather the best of them, are not prepared to go. A protest is made in the Freemasons' Repository against the publication of Masonic matters that relate in a delicate way to members of the Craft, and Past Grand Master King, of Maine, looks with great disfavour upon what he calls "gift enterprises." He doubts the propriety of making Masonic appeals for financial aid to those outside the Order. Bro. King says:

A Lodge is constituted by Masons, of Masons, and for Masons: it should never seek the assistance of the profane, for, by availing itself of their generosity or charity, and denying them fraternity, it would discredit its profession to act honourably by all men. Have such entertainments as you please among yourselves and families, either for instruction or amusement: "Let every Brother give according to his ability, not grudgingly nor in hope of reward, but for the glory of God and love of the Brotherhood."

We once made the experiment of asking a cowan to help; the tone of his answer as well as the answer itself were sufficient to prevent any renewal of the attempt. Many men who are not Masons are jealous of those who are, and take delight in snubbing a brother if he happens to make a slip, as we did. We agree with Bro. King—the less we have to do with the outside world the better, except in the cause of charity, when our liberality should only be bounded by our resources.

—:o:—

Every now and then instances are cropping up to show "the universality of the science," and the following is not without interest to the Fraternity. The Rev. J. J. Kelly, a Mohawk chieftain, in an address recently given at Siloam, M.E., said he was of opinion, with reference to the origin of the Aborigines of the Continent of America, that they were descended from the crews of the nine ships which Solomon sent to Ophir after gold, and which never returned. Proof of this, he considered, was in the fact that Masonry had been known amongst the Indians long before the arrival of the whites, and that there were over 700 Hebrew words in the Indian language.

People go from home to hear news, and certainly the English learn a great deal from foreigners of the "lions" of their own country. There are exceptions to this rule, and Westminster Abbey forms one of them. We are not ignorant of that grand pile, and our countrymen and countrywomen are more familiar with the Abbey probably than any other show place in the kingdom. We are always glad, however, to learn what our foreign visitors have to say about our venerable sanctum of kings and king-like men. A Mrs. Lew Wallace, hailing from the other side of the Atlantic, was delighted with the Abbey, and has expressed her admiration in print. Yankee like, her Republican notions eke out, although in the present instance they are neither obtrusive nor strong. She alludes to the desecration of Cromwell's remains after the restoration of Charles II., and says some complimentary things of the Protector, but she does not omit to state—

That the only desecration the Abbey has received in all these ages has been by Puritan soldiers quartered there in 1643. They burnt the altar rails, sat on benches round the Communion Table, drinking, smoking, singing; broke many altars, images; defaced tombs, and shattered the stained glass windows.

She might have added that the same devilish work was done in almost every sacred and noble edifice throughout the country. Nothing of art and beauty was spared by the Puritan iconoclasts, who, whatever their virtues, were Goths and Vandals with regard to symbolic architecture and art generally. We Masons must ever regret the destruction that was wrought by Cromwell and his followers. We cannot enter into the political aspect of the question, but we express the views held by all intelligent members of the Craft when we say that the Puritan devastations were a disgrace to the whole body, and a sad reflection upon the faith they undertook to defend. Returning to Mrs. Wallace, we call attention to a blot she has discovered, and which she exposes with no little force. She says:

The Abbey of Westminster . . . . is a very dirty place, the dust and grime of the monuments lie in heavy deposits, giving the impression of neglect. In time-worn grey marble the effigy of Edward Third now lies, at his head his sword and shield, carried before him to France. The sword is seven feet long, and weighs eighteen pounds; a mass of rust, in high contrast with the niceness with which the French guard the sacred relics of the Louvre. In that palace is the old sword of Charlemagne, under polished glass, not a speck of dust on the velvet scabbard. No trace of the God-like grace of Edward remains in the blackened stone which bears his name and features, carved, it may be, by skilful hands, now moulder-ing and marred by effacing fingers, busy as time itself.

We are not particularly concerned with the doings of the Jesuit Priest, Monsignor Capel, who is in America, notwithstanding the fact that he is credited with having captured the Marquis of Ripon "as a trophy for the Pope." The Keystone, dealing with Monsignor Capel, says:

We don't think we have a Marquis of Ripon among us. We feel safe in Pennsylvania, at all events, not having even a Past Grand Master that is not Jesuit proof. Return from whence you came, Monsignor Capel—go East.

—:o:—

Above we have recorded the existence of what is said to be a portrait of Bro. Sir Walter Scott; we now call attention to a relic of a no less interesting character, which is in the hands of Mr. Edward Langdon Bogert, grandson of Bro. Bogert, to whom the relic (a silver mark) originally belonged. The Freemason's Repository, published at Providence, R.I., says:

The mark is of solid silver, one-sixteenth of an inch thick, two and three quarter inches in extreme length, and one and five eight inches across the widest part, and in general form resembles the blade of a trowel; in lieu of the regular handle is a tessellated cord, looped up in the form of a crown and surrounding the plumb, square and level, and an open pair of compasses, the design of the top being the same on both sides. On the face is the usual circle of letters irradiated from the outside line, and encircling an engraved picture of the Good Samaritan, which undoubtedly was the owner's mark. The reverse bears the inscription in a bold script, "Jas. Bogert, Jun'r, Howard Mark Lodge, 29 Jan'y, 5795." It is indeed a beautiful piece of work, and bears the mark of a skilled workman, for rarely, even now-a-days, do we see so fine a piece of engraving on silver. Bro. Bogert was born in New York City in 1767, and died there in 1858, at the age of 91 years.

—:o:—

One of the noblest testimonies to Masonry we ever read was that recorded a quarter of a century ago. A venerable brother, upwards of eighty years of age, named Hosford, and residing at West Poulteney, V.T., in forwarding his subscription to a Masonic charity at Philadelphia, said:—

I am in my fiftieth year of Masonry; I am old, and cannot hear the word, or see the signs, but I can yet feel the true grip of Masonry.

There is real grit in this old man's testimony. A whole mine of treasure is unfolded in the above sentence—a sermon which every brother should take to heart.

—:o:—

While speaking of venerable brethren, we may note two records that come to us from across the Atlantic just recently. One is that of Bro. the Rev. Theodore Edson, D.D., of Lowell, Mass., who died at the age of ninety. He had been fifty-nine years in the Episcopal Ministry, and for fifty-eight years of that time he had been rector of one church. In the other case the brother is still living. It is that of Bro. the Rev. John Brown, D.D., who has been rector of St. George's, Newburgh, N.Z., for sixty-three years. His age can, therefore, be guessed. What is still more remarkable is, that he can claim 66 years continuous Lodge membership. What glorious old fathers in the Craft, how we revere their memory, and how proud we should be to sit at the feet of Bro. Brown, and gather wisdom from his experience, and strength from his example.

MYSTERY AND MASONRY.

IF the Masonic Institution, as Mackey and Oliver both admit, is descended from the ancient "Mysteries," there should be some close connection between the words "mystery" and "Masonry," even if the latter is not directly derived from the former. The word "mystery," which originally had an exclusive meaning, came, in process of time, to have three different meanings—all derived from the original one:

1. It was the name of the sacred drama which constituted the ceremony of initiation into the secret religious associations of the ancients, which were so named from the fact that the "aspirant," for initiation was blindfolded. The word "Mystery" is derived from the Latin mysterium, and from the Greek words which signify to shut the eyes.

2. In the Middle Ages it came to be applied to a different sort of "sacred drama," founded on the legends of the Christian religion. These "Mysteries," or religious dramas, were, however, performed in public, and had no element of secrecy about them.

3. Another use of the word "mystery" arose from the fact that all scientific knowledge was formerly concealed in the ancient Mysteries, and communicated only to the initiated. Great skill, therefore, in any art which required scientific knowledge, anciently implied initiation into the Mysteries. Hence, in process of time, and even after the Mysteries themselves were suppressed, the word "mystery" was applied to any art which required scientific knowledge in addition to manual dexterity. The art of architecture is one which requires not only a proficiency in geometry, but in several other sciences. In more ancient times, owing to the peculiar position and construction of temples, considerable knowledge of astronomy, even, was required by the architect. This art was, therefore, preeminently above all others denominated a "mystery," and the words "mystery" and "Masonry"—that is, architecture—became synonymous in meaning. Architecture was thus, probably, the first one of the arts called a "mystery;" this name, however, at length came to be applied to all the arts without distinction, even those wholly mechanical.

There can be no doubt that all the early architects, at least like the Tyrian artists who directed the work at the building of King Solomon's Temple, derived the scientific knowledge required for their profession from having been initiated into the Mysteries of Dionysus. The word "Masonry" has been thought to be derived from several different roots, by different writers, but it is not so far removed, either in form or meaning, from the word "mystery" but that it might have been derived either directly or indirectly from it. In fact, Hutchinson, in his "Spirit of Masonry," advances the idea that the word is derived from a corruption of the Latin mysterium, but fails to give any satisfactory reason for his opinion. The foregoing considerations, however, tend to show that his conjecture is not without some support. The derivation of the word "mason" from the French "maçon," a house, will only take us back to the Mysteries by another path, for the word "maçon" is derived from the Latin maceria, a wall or enclosure—which carries with it the idea of secrecy, and the exclusion of all who have not a right to enter. Thus all those who were not initiated into the Mysteries were called the profane—that is, pro-fano, those without the temple—and who had no right to enter. The words "temple" and "house" were also anciently synonymous.

It has, no doubt, been a puzzle to more than one, why the architects and temple-builders of antiquity should have been so intimately connected with the Mysteries, and thus have been in a position to hand down their essential secrets and philosophical teachings from generation to generation to those skilled workmen who came after them. In other words, how was it that the operative masons, or architects, became special guardians, and their guilds or associations the depositories, of these philosophical mysteries? If a good and sufficient answer to this question can be found, one great difficulty and source of scepticism will be removed. This question, we think, we can answer. The ancient Mysteries, as is well known, were celebrated in the hidden recesses of temples. In order to present the grand and impressive drama of initiation, many secret chambers, doors, and labyrinthian passages had to be constructed within the interior, also much ingenious mechanism, by which wonderful and sublime spectacular effects were produced. It was, therefore, a matter of necessity that the building of a temple—except the bare outside walls—should be entrusted only to those who had been duly initiated. Any "tattling" workman might otherwise disclose the whole secret. Such operative architects and artists, therefore, who were known and distinguished as the most cunning workmen, were initiated in all branches of the Mysteries, because their services were imperatively necessary.

Among the buildings uncovered at Pompeii is the temple of Isis, which is a tell-tale of the Mysteries of the Egyptian deity, for the secret stairs which conducted the priests unseen to an opening back of the statue of the goddess, through whose marble lips pretended oracles were given and warnings uttered, now lies open to the day, and reveals the whole imposition. ("A Day in Pompeii," "Harper's Magazine," vol. ii. ("When the sages of India conducted Apollonius to the temple of their god, singing hymns and forming sacred march, the earth, which they struck with their staves in cadence, was agitated like a boisterous sea, and raised up nearly two feet, then calmed itself and resumed its usual level. The act of striking with their sticks betrays the necessity of warning workmen, who were placed beneath, to raise a moving stage covered with earth—an operation plainly effected by the aid of mechanism, very easy to be comprehended. It is probable a similar secret existed in other temples. Travellers who visited the remains of the temple of Ceres, at Eleusis, observed that the pavement of the sanctuary was rough and unpolished, and much lower than that of the adjacent portico. It is, therefore, probable, that a wooden floor, on a level with the portico, covered the present floor, and concealed a vault designed to admit of the action of machinery beneath the sanctuary for moving the floor. In the soil of an interior vestibule they observed two deeply indented grooves, or ruts, and as no carriage could possibly be drawn into this place, the travellers conjected that these were grooves to receive the pulleys which served in the Mysteries to raise a heavy body—'perhaps,' said they, a 'moving floor.' In confirmation of this opinion, they perceived further on other grooves which might have served for the counterbalances to raise the floor; and they also detected places for wedges to fix it immovable at the desired height. These were eight holes fixed in blocks of marble, and raised above the floor, four on the right and four on the left, adapted to receive pegs of large dimensions."

Instances might be multiplied of the secrets involved in the construction of ancient temples, which make it a matter of necessity that the architects should be initiated, if allowed to live. But enough has been advanced to make it plain that the initiation of operative architects was a matter of absolute necessity. When the Mysteries were discontinued after the advent of Christianity as the state religion of the Roman Empire, it was no longer necessary for the temple-builders to belong to any such organisation, but by that time operative architects had found that the bond of union which the initiation into the Mysteries had established among them was useful and profitable. It enabled them to keep the higher secrets of their art among themselves, thus giving them a monopoly of the whole business of temple-building. They were thus also enabled to assume an independence and consequence, upon which followed the favour of princes and those high in authority, who desired their services to erect a palace or build a cathedral. The operative architects, therefore, kept up their secret organisation, and thus preserved the occult tie which originally united them in the Mysteries, of which legends, signs and emblems they became the last custodians, after the Mysteries themselves had fallen into disuse, and ceased to be celebrated either at Athens or Rome. Thus originated those mysterious "travelling Freemasons" of the Middle Ages, who left so many "massive monuments of their skill" as early as the 9th and 10th centuries. Thus, also, originated those famous guilds of operative Masons of the fifteenth sixteenth, and seventeenth centuries. No other hypothesis will satisfactorily account for the strange character and mysterious nature of those secret associations of operative architects.—Robert H. Brown in Stellar Theology.

"YE ANTIENTE FRATERNITIE OF YE RAHERE ALMONERS."

THE charitable society bearing the above quaint appellation held its third anniversary meeting on Thursday evening, the 23rd ult., at the School-rooms attached to the Church of St. Bartholomew the Great, Smithfield.

"Ye Rahere Almoners" owes its existence, as a modern society, to the initiative of Bro. James Stevens P.M. P.Z, whose happy inspiration has received most cordial support, as well from brother Masons as from gentlemen of influence connected with the district which is the scene of its operations. Foremost amongst the earnest workers on behalf of this Institution Mr. Thomas Sangster, of Long Lane, Smithfield—upon whom, as its Grand Recorder, the secretarial business devolves—merits especial mention, as it is chiefly through his exertions that its success has been secured. Another Freemason, Bro. Joseph Young, holds the third permanent office, that of Grand Chancellor (or Treasurer). For the first time, however, since the Society was instituted, a Freemason is now the presiding officer, Bro. A. C. Morton, C.C., having been unanimously elected to the position of Grand Prior.

The Chapter General, which comprises the officers of the Grand Council and the general body of subscribers, was numerously attended, and business was opened by the Grand Prior Frater Raymond Griffiths, at the appointed hour. The Auditors' Report was read and received, and gave general satisfaction. It referred to the great advantage derived at the Annual Festival, held at Cannon-street Hotel, on the 23rd October last, by the support of the late Lord Mayor (Bro. Sir John Whittaker Ellis, Bart., G.J.W.) as Chairman, of the Sheriffs of London (Bros. Alderman De Keyser and Joseph Savory) who supported him, and of other members of the Corporation who were then present.

Both financially and reputably this Festival was a great success. The details of finance were fully repeated in the course of the Grand Prior's speech at a later period of the evening. The Chapter General then proceeded to decide on suggestions made for revision of the rules, rendered necessary by practical results of working during the past three years, and these were generally adopted, and with the utmost unanimity.

The election of officers for the ensuing year was then proceeded with, and resulted as follows, viz. :—

Frater A. C. Morton, C.C.	M.W. Grand Prior
Raymond Griffiths	M.W. Past Grand Prior
J. Hollinghurst (Churchwarden)	M.W. Past Grand Prior
*James Stevens	V.W. Grand Counsellor
*Horatio Owen	V.W. Grand Hospitaller
*Thomas Sangster	V.W. Grand Recorder
*Joseph Young	V.W. Grand Chancellor
Joseph Williams	Worthy Sub-Prior
*Joseph Balderson	Worthy Remembrancer
*Harry Bennett	Worthy Warden
A. E. Emden	Worthy Proctor
Capt. C. Robertson	Worthy Chief Almoner
Joseph Covington	Worthy Assistant Almoner
C. J. Hofman	Worthy Bursar
J. W. Higgins	Worthy Warder
J. Loring (Org. St. Sepulchre's)	Grand Minstrel
W. Brew	Grand Chamberlain
J. H. Utting	Grand Deacon

* The officers marked thus are permanent appointments.

The auditors' report and balance sheet, with an address, and the list of officers for the ensuing year, and donors and subscribers, was ordered to be printed for general circulation, and the thanks of the meeting having been given to Frater Past Grand Prior Raymond Griffiths, Chapter General was closed, and the Fratres adjourned to the Barley Mow Tavern, Long-lane, where a substantial repast was provided for them by Frater Deverall. The newly elected Grand Prior Frater A. C. Morton presided, and in addition to those already named Fratres J. Lidiard, E. Homer, Sargeant, J. Smith, T. Emdin, H. R. Johnson, and others were present. After grace the usual loyal toasts were duly honoured.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF DEVONSHIRE.

THE annual meeting of this Lodge was held at Barnstaple, on Tuesday, the 29th ult. The first meeting, that of the Committee of Petitions, took place at the Masonic Hall, and there were present—V.W. and W. Bros. W. G. Rogers D.P.G. Master Chairman, J. Edward Curteis P. Prov. G.S.W. Representative in London, J B. Gover P.P G.A.D.C., L. D. Westcott P.P.G.S. Works 70, E. A. Lyons W.M. 105, W. T. Maynard P.P.G.T. 1C6, John Stocker P.P.G.T. 89, R. Orchard P.G.S. 164, F. Sanders P.M. 1284, George Davie W.M. 251. The Secretary reported that the number of votes received from the Province for the past year had been 597 boys, 397 girls, 459 men, and 443 widows, being a slight increase over the past year. There were several Lodges and Chapters who had not responded. At the last election of the R.M.B.I. the committee had succeeded in electing one widow and one aged brother. The report presented to the Provincial Grand Lodge showed the other business done in committee. The Grand Lodge was held at the Music Hall, which was tastefully decorated. The Right Worshipful the Provincial Grand Master presided, and was ably supported by R.W. Bro. Rogers D.P.G.M. The report of the P.G. Secretary showed that all the Lodges had made their returns in good time, and that the general progress of the Province was satisfactory. The report of the Treasurer showed an available balance of about £160—which was disposed of in accordance with the recommendations of the Committee of Petitions, whose report stated that their efforts had succeeded in the election of one widow, and in assisting in the election of one aged Mason. The number of votes received during the year showed a slight increase over former years. The following Lodges had not replied to repeated applications :—Nos. 489, 666, 1396, 1486, and 1855; also Chapters 159, 189, and 710. The sub-committee appointed to consider the question in reference to the claims by Bro. G. Taylor on behalf of Worcester as to the repayment to that brother by Bro. Charles Godtschalk, on behalf of Devon, decided that Bro. Godtschalk was fully justified in the action he took, and that the votes in question were repaid as stated in his report. The committee had granted various sums, details of which were given in the report. In accordance with a resolution of the Grand Lodge the committee recommended that the sum of seventy-five guineas (the available balance of the funds) be given to the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys (special fund), and that it be placed on the list of Bro. Charles Godtschalk P.P.G.D., as Steward, representing the Province. It was also resolved that this Committee recommend to the Provincial Grand Lodge the following addition :—"That a brother being a subscribing member of a Lodge in the Province, who is a Vice-President of either of the great Masonic Charities, be by virtue of such qualification a member of the Committee of Petitions, provided he undertakes to place his votes at the disposal of the Committee." The Report was received and adopted, with the exception of the last clause, which was reserved for consideration further on. The Committee for the purchase of collars and jewels reported that they had provided all that was necessary, for the sum of £38. Two brethren were proposed for the office of Treasurer, but Bro. E. T. Fulford of Lodge No. 1254 was elected. W. Bros. J. Edward Curteis and W. J. Passmore were re-elected the Auditors for the year. The P.G. Master invested the following as the Provincial Officers for the year :—

Bro. W. G. Rogers 112	D.G M.

The motion of Bro. Godtschalk, to admit as members of the Committee of Petitions brethren who were Vice-Presidents of the great Charities, was not carried. The P.G. Master stated as the reason for the Lodge being held at Barnstaple that it was the centenary of the Loyal Lodge 251. The brethren of the Lodge were congratulated on having attained their majority, and a resolution was carried to that effect. About ninety of the brethren afterwards dined at the Royal Fortescue Hotel.

The installation meeting of the Prince Leopold Lodge, No. 1445, will take place on Thursday next, the 6th inst., at the City Arms Tavern, St. Mary Axe. Brother W. McDonald is the Worshipful Master elect.

Since the last Quarterly Communication of Grand Lodge, on the 6th of June, His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales has granted warrants for seventeen new Lodges, but the mother country participates, and rightly too, in a very small proportion in that number. Wales has one—the Narberth Lodge, No. 2001, Narberth, Pembrokeshire. London and Chiswick have each one. Essex has two—The Brooke Lodge, No. 2005, Chingford and the Tilbury Docks Lodge, No. 2006, Tilbury Docks. The remainder are given abroad. There is one for Jullunder, in the Punjab; one for Wallaroo, South Australia, two for Auckland, New Zealand; one for Canterbury, New Zealand; one for Otago, New Zealand; one for Queenstown, South Africa; one for Hawthorn, Victoria; one for Colac, Victoria; one for Murtoa, Victoria; one for Canton, and one for Tôkiô, Japan. It will be seen from this that the spread of Freemasonry in the Colonies is becoming very extensive.—Evening News.

Dalhousie Lodge of Instruction, No. 860.—Held at Bro. Smyth's, Sisters' Tavern, Pownall-road, Dalston, on Tuesday, 28th ult. Present—Bros. Forss W.M., Marsh S.W., Boyce J.W., Christian S.D., Watkinson J.D., Baker I.G., F. Carr Secretary, C. Lorkin Acting Preceptor; also Bros. Powell, Wilkinson, and Wallington. Lodge was opened in due form, and the minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed. The Lodge was opened in the second and third degrees, and resumed to the second. Bro. Forss then rehearsed the ceremony of installation, installing Bro. F. Carr into the chair of King Solomon. Bro. Carr invested the Officers. The Lodge was resumed in the first degree, and the ceremony of initiation was rehearsed, Bro. Powell acting as candidate. Bro. Forss worked the first section of the lecture, assisted by the brethren. Bro. Marsh was elected W.M. for the ensuing week, and appointed his Officers in rotation. The Lodge was then closed and adjourned.

Star Lodge of Instruction, No. 1275.—This prosperous and important Lodge of Instruction, which is in session all the year round, held its usual weekly meeting at the Five Bells, New Cross-road, on Saturday evening, 25th ult., and it speaks wonders for the interest taken in the Lodge by its members that nearly forty mustered at the close of a very hot day to afford light or obtain instruction, under the Preceptorship of Bro. Wm. Andrews P.M. The Bye-laws provide for the ceremony of installation to be rehearsed on the fourth Saturday in August, a somewhat unfortunate time, we are inclined to think, since it is just at this period of the year so many brethren are dispersed over the surface of land and water; and however zealous Masons they may be, they could hardly be expected to forsake the "breezy downs" or the "sad sea wave" (if ambition, or the length of their pockets, had not taken them further a-field) for the purpose of witnessing a ceremony which could be fixed for any other month. No public announcement was made of the occasion, nor was it generally known by whom the ceremony would be rehearsed. We repeat, therefore, that it speaks well for the popularity of the Lodge and its honorary Officers. There was a numerous array of Past Masters, amongst whom the following were called upon to support our much-respected Bro. Catterson P.M. 549, who occupied the chair. Bros. Shaw 834 S.W., Bartlett 147 J.W., C. Hawksley 1702 S.D., Waterman 147 J.D., Bear 861 I.G. After the usual preliminaries, Lodge was opened in due form, Bro. Walter Martin, the indefatigable Secretary being called upon to read the minutes of the previous Lodge meeting, which were duly confirmed. The ceremony of initiation was then rehearsed in an impressive manner, Bro. Page acting as candidate; after which, the Lodge having been opened in the second degree, Bro. Catterson relinquished the chair in favour of Bro. Martin, who was about to rehearse the duties of Installing Master for the first time. Bro. Andrews, acting as M.C., introduced Bro. Shaw as W.M. elect; finally he occupied the chair, and proceeded to invest his Officers, the same brethren, with two exceptions, being again appointed. The Lodge having recently acquired an harmonium, of good tone, it is needless to say that proper use was made of the same during the ceremony, particularly in the course of the investiture. The addresses to the Master, Wardens and brethren were then delivered, after which Bro. Martin resumed his seat amidst the applause of the brethren. We congratulate Bro. Martin on his first appearance in a new character. He is but a young Mason, and has not yet passed the chair, but he is zealous, energetic, and painstaking, and the perfect and fluent manner in which he performed so much of the ceremony as was admissible well entitled him to the vote of thanks which was afterwards accorded. The Lodge was called off for a brief interval, after which it was resumed in the third degree and closed down. Three new brethren were elected members, and after the usual routine business had been disposed of, Lodge was closed in ancient form and adjourned.

In connection with this Lodge is a Charitable Association, bearing its name, and comprising something like 150 members. On this occasion it was announced that there would be only one ballot; the fortunate brother, however, was not present. We understand that, during the eight months of its existence, something like £200 has been raised towards the support of the various Masonic Institutions, so that the Star in the South of London is a jewel of no mean lustre in the "light of charity." We heartily recommend a visit; for should a brother not know any one who is a member, if he can only "prove" himself, he will meet a cordial welcome, and probably come across some friend whom he did not know to be a Mason.

THE EMPIRE LAMP.

THE MOST BRILLIANT AND ECONOMICAL DOMESTIC LIGHT EXTANT.

It equals Gas for Simplicity, but surpasses it for Illuminating Power.

IT burns without a chimney, a pine-shaped globe only being required, which has never been known to break from the heat of the flame. It will give more light than any other lamp with a wick of equal size. The combustion is so perfect that it deodorises the oil, and burns absolutely without smell, giving an intense pure white and beautiful light. It is unrivalled for simplicity in lighting, cleaning, and trimming, and is, in fact, the perfection of artificial light. Suitable for Cottage or Mansion, Churches, Chapels, &c.

Illustrated Catalogue, with full particulars, and giving valuable hints on Domestic Lighting and the Management of Lamps, free on application.

VEXED QUESTIONS.

IT is quite clear that the question as to the status of a Past Master who becomes a joining member of a Lodge separated from his Masonic birthplace and the scene of his labours and honours is a long way from being settled. At the special meeting of Grand Lodge on the 8th ultimo the Provincial brethren had it all their own way. They had been challenged, and they took up the gage of battle; they had been placed in a hostile position, and they fought and won. Through the unwisdom of a contemporary a question, difficult of itself to determine, has resolved itself into a heated contention. Hard words break no bones, but they exasperate to resistance, and not unfrequently prevent matters being clearly understood and dealt with. This is precisely the case in the instance now before us. By pooh poohing the Provincial brethren, by attributing selfish motives to them, by using the language of ridicule against them, they have been aroused to a passionate defence of their views, and to a condition of mind that is not calculated to secure sound legislation on a troublesome matter. It is unwise to threaten men who claim equal authority with their opponents, and it is the height of imprudence to endeavour to set one section of the brotherhood by the ears with another. Owing to the absence of members of the London Lodges in August, and to the large muster of the Provincial brethren, who refused to be dragooned into compliance with the dictation of any one man or clique of men, the motion was carried which places joining Past Masters in the position of Past Masters of the Lodges they join, ranking next after the I.P.M. and the W.M. in the chair. The whole question had been fully mooted, and it was not the fault of the Provincial brethren that it was brought on at a time when their London brethren were likely to be out of town. The absence of the latter, although natural, was not to operate to the exclusion of business. Besides, there was the invitation to the Metropolitan members to resist the contemplated change, and the Provinces replied by a strong muster, armed with unity of purpose and the determination to settle the question. They did their duty, and although we think their action unwise, and likely to be hurtful, we honour their pluck and perseverance, and are disposed to deal lightly with the excrescences that are hidden, but which are nevertheless working mischief. Their temper has been soured; this time alone can correct.

The meeting of Grand Lodge, on Wednesday night, was presided over by Bro. Gen. J. Studholme Brownrigg, C.B., Provincial Grand Master of Surrey. There was a large gathering of the brethren, brought together no doubt to vote upon the status question. Bro. Matthews, P.M. 109 and 143, in a temperate speech, moved—"That in order to afford the Craft sufficient time for due consideration of the amendments in the proposed Revise of the Book of Constitutions, as carried at the Special Grand Lodges of 29th June and 8th August, and the proceedings of which Special Grand Lodges could only be issued a few days before the meeting of this Grand Lodge, resolved that the confirmation of the minutes of such Special Grand Lodges be postponed until the Quarterly Communication in December next." Bro. Matthews alluded to the brethren in the Colonies under the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of England, and pointed out that it would be impossible for them to know anything officially about the great change that had been made in the Rules, and that unless delay were granted they would be entirely shut out from expressing an opinion upon a matter in which they were equally, and perhaps more, interested than the brethren at home. This argument was unanswerable, but it was met with loud cries of "No, no," and evidently there was a disposition to carry matters with a high hand. The friends of delay united with the opponents of the change, and carried Bro. Matthews' motion, and so the matter rests until December. The question has assumed several different aspects, and they may be summarised as follows:—The Conservative members of the Craft, men of experience, of knowledge, and of honour, contend for things as they were. In this they are unwise. They are too slow in recognising new claims and wants, not because they desire to encourage abuses or to perpetuate inequalities; but because they know what evils they have to bear, and hesitate to fly to those they know not of. Old form prosperity to them is too great a reality to be lightly jeopardised, hence their jealousy of innovations; and hence, it may also be stated, their somewhat narrow view of matters. In contradistinction to this class there are the extreme men, who would cast aside the traditions and customs of the past and thrust upon a Lodge two extreme courses—either to refuse admission to a would-be joining P.M., or to give him all the honours earned by a Past Master of their own Lodge without doing one bit of labour in the Lodge. They would assign him a fixed position in the Lodge of his adoption, and although this arrangement would do no injustice to those who had already obtained, or were on the eve of obtaining rank as Past Masters, it would necessarily jar upon the Wardens, especially to find an elected Past Master ranking before them. Another section of Grand Lodge favour the views of Bro. the Rev. John Studholme Brownrigg P.G.C., who proposed, at the Special Grand Lodge held in August, that a Past Master joining another Lodge should hold his title as a P.M. of that Lodge, but should always rank after the I.P.M., so that a W.M. of a Lodge would immediately upon becoming I.P.M. take his rank just in front of the joining Past Master or Masters, as the case might be. This proposition was rejected, a very unwise act on the part of the Provincial brethren, for it seems to indicate that they are not satisfied with a joining Past Master retaining his position, but demand to define the order of his rank. Possibly these two sections may combine in December, and, if so, they will stand a very fair chance of carrying their point; that is if the hard-heads yield to the compromisers. There are others again in Grand Lodge who believe it would be wise to make legal what has now only the sanction of partial custom. Bro. Havers very pertinently drew attention to the fact, at the August meeting, that he had known instances in which private Lodges had voluntarily assigned rank to joining Past Masters. Bro. Macintyre, Grand Registrar, confirmed this experience, but he declined to give an opinion upon the legality of the custom. He asserted that there was no written law either for or against. All, therefore, that need to be done is to make the custom legal, leaving the right of bestowing rank upon joining members to the Lodge that admit them. Every claim would thus stand upon its own merits, and a Lodge granting rank would have the satisfaction of conferring a favour where they felt it was deserved, and would escape the annoyance of either rejecting a brother or being forced to admit him to a rank he had obtained in foreign service. The brethren have now time before them, and we trust that those residing in the Provinces will not be irritated into resentment and injudicious action by the taunts and jibes of those who ought to guide them; and that the London Lodges will not surrender their right of judgment, nor lend themselves to any spirit of antagonism that might be provoked by pitting them against the brethren in the Provinces.

They say delays are dangerous, but the aphorism only applies in urgent cases. Whether the rebuilding of the Temple is urgent or not is a question for the brethren to decide. Grand Lodge, on Wednesday night, did not appear at all in a hurry. Indeed, the chief interest of the brethren was centred in the status question, and when the report of the Special Building Committee was reached a great number had left, and before the discussion that took place was ended, the Temple was comparatively deserted. The report was received and ordered to be entered on the minutes, and there the matter appeared likely to end. Bro. Sir John B. Monckton, chairman of the committee, briefly moved the reception of the report, and with the stoicism of a disciple of Zeno, left the whole question in the hands of Grand Lodge. Bro. Binckes moved a vote of thanks to the Committee, which was seconded and carried, but it was not very cordially accepted by those it was intended to please. He likewise moved that the report be taken into consideration at the Quarterly Communication in December, which was also carried. Perhaps this is the better course to pursue, so as to give time to the brethren to master such plans as have been prepared, and to digest the scheme laid before them. The information obtained by the Special Committee is of a most valuable character, and now the object should be to perfect a scheme that shall be worthy of the Craft in general and of English Freemasons in particular. The Temple should reflect the genius of the Order; everything else is of a secondary nature to this. Next should come the Library and Museum, and then the banquetting arrangements. Of course, the utilitarian part of the scheme should receive due consideration. We cannot expect a tenant to pay £2,000 a year rent without giving him a fair equivalent; officers must be provided with accommodation, and the conveniences for Lodges and Masonic work should be as complete as possible. All this we readily grant, but far beyond lie the questions we have intensified. Towards the solution of the most difficult question—the rebuilding of the Temple, Bro. Stevens has taken an important step. He has given notice of motion to the effect that under the direction of the Grand Superintendent of Works, architects who are members of the Craft be invited to send in plans for the new Temple and other buildings and alterations. So far so good; now it behoves some brother or brethren to take up the Library and Museum question, and so complete a work that shall be memorable in years to come and a blessing to generations yet unborn. The Banquetting Hall is sure to receive attention, and we would not have it neglected. We believe in the advantages of social intercourse, and we would make the surroundings as pleasant as possible. The banquetting room, therefore, should be rich and cheerful, not only in the interest of the brethren, but also in that of the tenants, who, to pay their rent, must please their customers and increase their trade. There is ample work for the brethren to do between this and December, and when the time comes we hope the result of reflections and labours will be unity of action and the manifestation of a brotherly spirit of emulation for the good of the Craft at large.

The brethren of the Tredegar Lodge of Instruction, No. 1625, who meet at the Royal Hotel, Mile End-road, will re-assemble on Monday next, the 10th instant. Bro. Musto P.M. 1349 has kindly promised to rehearse the ceremony of installation, and we may look forward to this popular Preceptor being well supported by his East-end brethren.

One of the lifeboats established in commemoration of the safe return of the Prince of Wales from India, the "Albert Edward," stationed at Clacton-on-Sea, succeeded, on Sunday afternoon, in rescuing the master and crew of twelve men, together with the Norwegian barque "Rome," stranded on the Gunfleet Sands.

THE BIBLE.

A BROTHER whose faith in the Bible, as a work of inspiration, had become shaken, being under the impression that he could no longer retain his Masonic affiliations, applied to me for advice. While regretting that I was a not a better adviser in such a matter, I suggested that he might "have fallen into the error of supposing that all the books which are bound up with the volume commonly called the Bible are received as the work of inspiration. There are many things in it hard to understand, some impossible of explanation, but in the main points it undoubtedly speaks the will of the Supreme Architect of the Universe. In a Masonic Lodge it is a symbol of the Divine will as revealed to man. Masons are not required to believe all its statements; indeed, but few intelligent men do. If you will read the answer given by the Law and Jurisprudence Committee to Question 10, page 56 of the Grand Lodge Proceedings for the year 1879, you will see that, by implication, at least, the Grand Lodge does not exact a belief in the Bible as a qualification for Masonry. If you believe in the existence of a God and the immortality of the soul, you are qualified for Masonry, and, of course, if qualified for initiation, to retain your connection with the Lodge. You are mistaken in the supposition that the Masonic Institution is founded upon the Bible. As a symbol, it regards it with the greatest veneration, but there are Lodges in which it is not to be found at all, the Koran or the Vedas being substituted. As a Mason I have no right to ask you to believe as I do."

In this connection I desire to call your attention to an important point which, it seems to me, must have been introduced into our ritual in modern times, without proper consideration as to its effect. It is sometimes taught that the Bible is given us as a rule and guide of our faith. The word "faith," I think, has undoubtedly been substituted for the word "conduct," a by no means synonymous term. In the Ancient Charges we read that although "in ancient times, Masons were charged in every country to be of the religion of that country or nation, wherever it was, it is now thought more expedient to obligate them to that religion in which all men agree, leaving their particular opinions to themselves, that is to be good men and true, or men of honour and honesty, by whatever denominations or persuasions they may be distinguished, whereby Masonry becomes the centre of union and the means of conciliating true friendship among persons that must have remained at a perpetual distance." In another place it is said that "hypocrisy and deceit are unknown among us" Is it not the most arrant hypocrisy for us to say to an initiate who is of the Hebrew faith, that the Bible—that is the Old and New Testament—are given to him as the rule and guide of his faith? It may be a rule and guide for his conduct, without doing violence to his faith, or the sublime lessons of morality taught by the Saviour, were not a new code, but are the essence of all that Moses and the Prophets taught. I respectfully submit that the proper teaching is that the Bible is given to Masons as the rule and guide of their conduct, and that it should nowhere be taught that it is a rule of faith in Masonry.—Frederick Speed, G.M.

At the Provincial Grand Lodge of Cornwall, which was held on Tuesday last at St. Austell, under the presidency of the Earl of Mount Edgcumbe, Provincial Grand Master, Bro. W. J. Hughan was presented with a purse of 275 sovereigns in recognition of his services to Masonry in the Province. Bro. Hughan is a Scotchman, who settled first in Devonport, where he was initiated, and then in Truro in 1866, and as a Mason with a sincere love of the Order, and an earnest desire to promote its best interests, he set himself to work to see how the Craft could be extended in that county. He worked steadily and perseveringly, and, as a result, has seen the Craft at least doubled in the county since he became a settler. Bro. Hughan is an historian, an archæologist, a well-read man, and a man who is always willing, when asked, to impart his knowledge to others. His knowledge of Masonic history and archæology is profound, and he is an excellent referee on all Masonic questions. The testimonial presented to him on Tuesday only represents the power of votes for the Masonic Charities with which he has endowed the Province of Cornwall. His merits have been acknowledged by two Grand Masters of England. In 1874 the Marquis of Ripon gave him the rank of Senior Grand Deacon, and on the 2nd of May last the Prince of Wales conferred on him the dignity of Past Grand Assistant Sojourner, on account of his services to Royal Arch Masonry. Bro. Hughan has published several Masonic works, and devoted their profits to the Charities. When he retired from the office of Provincial Grand Secretary of Cornwall a testimonial of £50 was presented to him, and this he also handed to the Charities of the Order.—Evening News.

BROTHER JACOB NORTON'S THOUGHTS ON THE MASONIC HISTORY.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Brother Norton's thoughts, whether right or wrong, must always be eminently readable, such are the fluency and strength of his pen. I am, however, of opinion that some of his thoughts on this occasion will not hold water.

He very properly ridicules the idea that because similarities may be traced in two separate organisations, therefore they must be related; but he has overlooked the fact that if these similarities are very numerous, if they consist of a close resemblance in phraseology, form, action, and symbolism, a connection becomes probable. We are not to infer that there is any community of ideas between the Compagnonage and Freemasonry because both use symbols, or because both possess mysteries, but if we find that as far as we can gather the mysteries and legends are identical, we may then surmise a relationship. Has Bro. Norton grasped the full meaning of the Shoemaker's (Paris) mystery in 1400? Mysteries and Passion plays were usually acted by the church; the mystery of St. Crispin was represented by cobblers. The church legend of St. Crispin finishes at his death. The French are born actors and artists, and the death of the hero is the natural, and only proper climax of a tragedy. Anything beyond is an inartistic anti-climax. Fancy an extra act clapped on to Hamlet, in order to show his funeral and that of all the other characters. But the Paris shoemakers did add an act on to the authorised church mystery of St. Crispin, in order to show the recovery of his body and the funeral. Bro. Norton will agree with me that this was not done for the sake of artistic effect; no Frenchman would be guilty of such a blunder; it must have quite spoilt the piece for general representation; it constituted an offence against every canon of good taste. If we bear in mind that this additional act was an artistic blunder, not necessitated by the authorised legend, but even contrary to the church version, we may well inquire why the Paris shoemakers went out of their way to log it in par les cheveux? Outsiders may wonder, but surely we know or can guess. With the legend of Maître Jacques before us as a guide we are not likely to go wrong. Is this not something more than a coincidence?

As regards the legend of Hiram, Bro. Norton has undoubtedly placed his finger on Brother Gould's weak spot. But Brother Gould has proved this fact. The societies of Jacques and Solomon were distinct from each other previously to 1640 (pp 242-243). This is no assumption, but a fact. They were sworn enemies previously to the revival of Freemasonry in 1717, for they fought in 1726, and such a battle was hardly the result of an enmity of short standing. The Jacquites had a legend; we know it. Now comes assumption No. 1. The Solomonites must have had one also. Later on they had the Hiram legend, and there is no trace of their ever having had any other. Assumption No. 2. Their legend from the very first must have been the Hiramic. I cannot see that the inference is strained; it is a legitimate conclusion; but as it is only an inference, it is open to argument.

On page 249 et seq, Brother Gould details no less than forty-one points of similarity between the Companions and Freemasonry. We find seven similarities of expression and phraseology, five of procedure previous to initiation, six as regards the form of government, one of principle or dogma, fourteen of ceremonial, and seven miscellaneous, some of which are most striking. Are these all coincidences?

Now as to Bro. Gould's theory; neither I nor Brother Norton can have the least idea of what it is, because Brother Gould has not yet formulated it. But Brother Norton appears to me to believe that Brother Gould will attempt to prove the direct descent of Freemasonry from the Compagnonage and to protest against this theory beforehand. So far Bro. Gould has confined himself to tracing a similarity between them, nothing more. I venture to think that Brother Gould will hardly do more than assert that the legends and ceremonial usages of the Companions have influenced our present system, and do not consider that the Hiramic question need be taken into consideration. The proved existence of the Jacques legend is quite sufficient. And what is there difficult of belief in this? Bro. Norton has himself shown (p 83) how French Masons may have innoculated our working forefathers with the Charles Martel legend; may they not at the same time have introduced other of their legends and customs? And if not, as Brother Norton suggests, between 1390 and 1490, why not after the repeal of the Edict of Nantes? Surely there is nothing improbable in all this. Should this really be Bro. Gould's theory, it will simply amount to this:—That Freemasonry is directly descended from the working guilds of Masons, that to those we owe our organisation and legends (not necessarily our ritual, which may be much more recent) but that they themselves derived these legends from imported French workmen.

And now I shall make Bro. Norton's hair stand on end! If this be granted, how did the French obtain the legends? Brother Gould has shown that they were possibly perversions and modifications of the old debased Roman mysteries. If so, then our legends are indirectly derived, through the French, Romans, and Greeks, from Egypt itself, and Dr. Oliver was not so very far wrong in one conclusion after all. Now, I confidently expect Brother Norton to arise in his wrath and come down on me heavily, smite me hip and thigh.

I quite sympathise in Brother Norton's exultation that his "bread and butter" theory of former days has been upheld by so able a judge as Brother Gould, and will pass on to the appeal which he constructively makes to me personally. Findel's, Fallou's, Steinbrenner's, and Gould's catechisms are all identical, copied one from the other, and are treated at length on p 489 et seq of Vol. II. The remarks there made as to their antiquity may also apply to the catechism given by me in the Masonic magazine. Their present form, in construction, and orthography is undoubtedly modern, and unless we can obtain an old MS., in order to judge by internal evidence of language, it is impossible to say how old the original version may be. But there seems no reason to doubt that they may be the modern and much more extended form of a comparatively ancient, short, and simple catechism, intended to prove that our ancient travelling craftsman had been legitimately brought up to his trade and had duly served his time. There is nothing mysterious or speculative about them; translate them properly and look at them in a 'common-sense' light and they are plain straightforward answers to workmanlike questions, somewhat encumbered by an excess of verbiage natural to an ignorant workman seeking to render the ceremony important and solemn. I could produce very similar examinations in other German crafts (vide Berlepsch and Stock).

If Brother Norton will turn to p 264 of the Masonic Monthly he will there find some remarks of mine which will inform him who Brother Fallou was. I have not there stated my opinion of his veracity, nor do I care to do so in print, but my verdict would certainly be stronger than "Masonic Romancer." Yet Findel, Fort, and others have swallowed his very curious statements without an effort.

As regards Perdignier's book, I can assure Brother Norton that Brother Gould has given us the whole historical part of it. It is only a small 12mo, and the greater part is made up of his reasons for publishing it, letters for and against between him and other prominent companions, and moral songs, which he was desirous of substituting for the bloodthirsty songs then in vogue. A translation would add simply nothing to our knowledge; I have very carefully collated it with Brother Gould's work, and believe he has absolutely omitted nothing bearing on the Compagnonage.

In your issue of the 7th July (which has only lately come under my notice), Bro. Norton inquires whether the mode of recognition in Scotland and Ireland differs from that in England. On this point I am ignorant, but I can give him some information which may be to the point. Some years ago I found myself in Hamburg, with an evening unoccupied. I wended my way to the Masonic Hall, and found a Lodge (Hamburg Constitution) in session. Requesting admittance, and being unknown, a brother came out to examine me. I had on my Past Master's apron, and when I observed that the brother was only an apprentice, I firmly but genially stood upon my dignity, and requested him to send out a M.M. This turned out very luckily, for I found out that the M.M. was not satisfied with my answers as an apprentice, stating that they were those of a Fellow Craft and vice versa. I should thus have unwittingly discovered the secrets of the Hamburg second degree to an E.A. On talking the matter over at supper with one of the Wardens I was informed that theirs was the old original mode, but that Grand Lodge in England had at some time or other reversed the order. This holds good of all the secrets, including the use of the gavel, but the grip, I think, remains the same. I am unable to answer for other German Constitutions, having only visited under the Hamburg. I have also visited in Cuba, but I underwent no examination, as I was introduced, and there was so much else to attract my attention that the difference, if any, may have escaped me. But I should always advise brethren abroad, after my little experience, to prudently require that the examiner should be a Master Mason.

I am, &c.

G. W. SPETH P.M. 183.

Clarendon Road, Margate.

A meeting of the General Committee of the Royal Masonic School for Boys was held on Saturday last, at Freemasons' Hall, under the presidency of Bro. Joyce Murray, Vice-Patron. There were also present Bros. Rich. Tyrrell, H. B. Marshall, R. W. Stewart, Dr. Ramsay, L. Ruff, J. L. Mather, Alfred Williams, C. H. Driver, Donald M. Dewar, J. H Kottari, Fredk. Adlard, W. Maple, Chas. Belton, C. P. Britten, C. F. Matier, G. P. Gillard, E. C. Massey, and Bro. F. Binckes Secretary. The minutes of the General Committee of 4th August were read and confirmed, and after the minutes of the House Committee of the 24th ult. had been read for information, one petition was considered and deferred for further medical information, as to an illness which incapacitated the father from following his employment, and keeping up his Lodge subscription, he being at the time a Mason of only two years' standing. A further purchase of £1,000 stock East India 4 per cents. was authorised, to be added to the Preparatory School Building Fund, which will then amount to £9,000. An outfit vote of £5 was granted to a former pupil at the Institution, and there being no further business on the agenda paper, a vote of thanks to the Chairman terminated the proceedings.

HOLIDAY HAUNTS.

LONDON, CHATHAM, AND DOVER RAILWAY.

NO line out of London is better adapted for the wants of all classes who, either from choice or necessity, reside in the south-eastern and south-western districts than the London, Chatham and Dover Railway. Those who travel on the line, as we have done, for any length of time consecutively can alone estimate the freight of human beings that is daily carried from Victoria, past the neighbourhood of Battersea and Wandsworth, to Clapham, Brixton, Herne Hill, Dulwich, and the Crystal Palace on the one hand; and from Holborn Viaduct, through the City and Borough to Loughborough Junction on the main line, on the other. At the Junction the line branches out to Nunhead, with an extended spur to Blackheath Hill. Not so very long ago Nunhead was a small scattered hamlet, with its sad and solemn cemetery holding sway as the only object of interest, now it is developed into a colony of bricks and mortar, forming a by no means unpleasant abiding place for the living as well as the dead. The branch goes round by Honor Oak and Lordship-lane, a very pretty locality, crosses the Main Line and reaches the Crystal Palace at Sydenham on the High Level Railway. We need not say anything about the great mountain of glass, and the grand views that are to be had from its lofty galleries and broad terraces; it is unnecessary to dwell upon the treasures within and the scenic and floral charms without; all "the world and his wife" go to the Crystal Palace to see its wonders. The Dulwich Gallery is not so well known. The history of its foundation is rather remarkable, and affords another instance of the growth of a gift made over two hundred and fifty years ago. Edward Alleyn was an actor, proprietor of a play-house in Moorfields, and keeper of the royal bear garden. He amassed wealth, and in 1614 he laid the foundation-stone of his college, and completed his work in three years, at a cost of £10,000. He endowed it with £800 per annum, for management and the maintenance of six poor women and six poor men, with twelve boys, who were to be educated till a certain age and then apprenticed. The foundation became very rich in the course of years, and now, in addition to the original "College of God's Gift," there is a splendid building devoted to educational purposes. Alleyn himself was the first master of the institution he founded, and when he died his remains were interred in the chapel attached to the college. There is a legend connected with the gift which, if not true, is romantic enough. It is said that when personating the character of Satan, the devil in reality appeared to Alleyn, and so frightened him that he quitted the stage and became serious. The Art Gallery is not large, but it contains some exquisite gems, notably the productions of Guido, Vandyke, Hobbeman, Wilson, and Murillo. The "Spanish Flower Girl," by the latter artist, is considered a masterpiece.

The country along the line is pretty. At Swanley Junction a branch goes to Sevenoaks, and stretches out at a right angle to Maidstone. We shall deal with this portion of Kent in another paper. The first object of interest on the Main Line further on is undoubtedly Rochester. The late Charles Dickens has rendered the town and neighbourhood famous. He lived and died at Gad's Hill, memorable as the scene of the exploits of Falstaff. The house is situated about three miles from Rochester, below the roadway, with charming surroundings. Who has not laughed over the scene in the first part of Shakespeare's "King Henry IV." in which Falstaff's boasting and cowardice are exposed by Prince Hal? Never were words more apt and true than the following, addressed by the Prince to Poins when he resolved to relieve Falstaff and his three companions of their ill-gotten wealth: "It would be argument for a week, laughter for a month, and a good jest for ever." Truly the jest lives, and he must be a dull dog indeed who cannot laugh over the escapade so graphically related in the play referred to. Not far from Gad's Hill is Cobham, the seat of the Earl of Darnley, and close by the pretty little village of Shorne. On the way from the latter place to Cobham Hall is the "Leather Bottle," referred to in the immortal "Pickwick." The Hall is situated in a park seven miles in circumference, and is studded with a large number of grand old trees. Nowhere have we trodden such a natural and delicate carpet as the mossy walks in this park afford, and nowhere else have we seen such a wealth of primroses and bluebells as deck the woods in the spring. The oldest part of the hall dates back three hundred years; the central part, built nearly a century afterwards, is the work of Inigo Jones. The whole presents a picturesque appearance, with its rich tones of red brick in a setting of tinted foliage of various hues. The interior is elegant, and contains valuable stores of pictures and other articles. There is one relic of great interest which the visitor sees: it is a richly painted and gilt state-coach, said to be that in which Mary Queen of Scots rode after her marriage with the Earl of Darnley. The church is worth a visit, if only for its brasses. The building itself is ancient, and, like other venerable structures, there are curious legends associated with its history.

Returning to Rochester the first and chief object of interest is the Castle. The ruins of this noble example of Anglo-Norman architecture stand on a hill, and dominate the River Medway, which flows rapidly at the base, which are fine and numerous, and adds to the conception of its former strength. There is every reason to believe that the site of this castle has been used for purposes of defence from very early times. The present structure was built about the year 1088, and has figured in many a sanguinary fray. It early lost its warlike character, but the solidity of the building, its main features, and, above all, the grandeur of its architecture, not surpassed of its kind in England, remain. A wonderful history surrounds this castle, which should be studied in order to thoroughly enjoy its examination. There are other objects of interest in the city, the chief of which is the cathedral. The See is, we believe, the second oldest in the kingdom, and the smallest. The cathedral contains some old monuments, and adjoining it are the chapter-house and cloister belonging to the priory, which exhibits a series of beautiful Norman arches and ornaments. Visitors should furbish up what Dickens has written about Rochester, and with a local guide book they could not fail to enjoy a pleasant and profitable time in the ancient city and locality. Chatham is a continuation of Rochester, and as the latter was the seat of wars centuries ago, the former is now devoted to the warlike purposes of the present day. At Sittingbourne a line branches off to the left to Queenborough and Sheerness. From the former place the royal mails go, vid Flushing, to Holland, North Germany, Belgium and the Rhine; the latter is famed for its dockyard, and is a popular seaside resort. At Faversham there is a junction where the line divides, one branch going to Ramsgate and the other to Dover and Deal. Faversham Abbey is worth a passing notice. The town was often visited by royal personages, little, however, remains except the "memory of the past." Lillo founded his tragedy of "Ardern of Faversham" upon an event that occurred in 1550, when Alice, a wanton, the wife of Thomas Ardern, murdered him in his own house. Taking the left-hand line Whitstable is reached, noted for its oysters. Further on is Herne Bay, a retired, healthy, pleasant and placid watering place. The air is salubrious, and there is a quietude about the whole that is eminently suited to old people and children. Birchington is a bathing place on the same coast, and between it and Margate an aristocratic rival has sprung up, called Westgate-on-Sea. It is but the growth of yesterday, and yet it has attained a reputation that other places of no less pretensions have hoped for in vain. It is admirably situated, and just meets the wants of those who are not satisfied with the moderate gentility of Ramsgate and who dislike the plebeian visitors of Margate.

Broadstairs is another quiet old-fashioned spot, gradually being approached by Ramsgate, which in time will swallow up its quaint and stolid neighbour. At present the fields form the background, while in front is the open sea. The village goes down to the water's edge, and so little change has taken place that the descriptions given years ago answer now. Ramsgate grows in popularity, and Pegwell Bay is still an attractive suburb. But Margate is the choice of the million, and never was a wiser one made. It has glorious sands, a beautiful country round about, and the air is pure and invigorating. In the height of the season it is perhaps a little too boisterous, but who can resist the flow of spirits and of health that the breezes inspire? An American brother was recently at Broadstairs, and writing from there, towards the latter end of July, he says, "We came to Margate, a famous seaside resort on the south-eastern coast of Kent. Like Atlantic City, Margate and Ramsgate are popular resorts, and too exciting and noisy for invalids and quiet people . . . . Ramsgate is an ideal seaside town, the visiting population of which consists chiefly of children, in charge of mothers, governesses or venerable female friends. Yet I look from the window at which I write, over the North Sea, and see boats of steamers and sailing vessels entering or leaving the Thames." There are pretty walks and drives all round, and interest never wanes as long as bright weather lasts. Margate and Ramsgate are essentially summer resorts, but an opinion is gaining ground that at Margate at least the air is not so keen in winter, on the Fort, as it is in London and many other inland towns. If it can be shown that Margate is available in winter as well as in summer, there is enterprise enough in the town to make it worthy of patronage. It is farther from London than Brighton, but modern science laughs at distance, and can overcome nearly all difficulties. A winter season at Margate, therefore, is one of the possibilities of the near future.

On the lower branch, or more strictly speaking on the main line, from Faversham, is Canterbury, the nursing mother of the religion of the country, and the home of one of its grandest monuments. As the Metropolitan Church of England the Cathedral is worthy of its grand representative character. Its history is that of the Christian religion in England, and the legends and associations connected with it are among the most interesting memorabilia of bye-gone ages. It is asserted that a Christian church, or rather two, were founded by the Romans during the time of their occupancy of the country, and that they where still standing when St. Augustine arrived as a missionary to the British Saxons at the end of the sixth century. Ethelbert, King of Kent, was a heathen, but his Queen, Bertha, daughter of the King of France, was a Christian, and to her is due the settlement of St. Augustine at Canterbury, and the protection and support he afterwards received. The King was converted to the Christian faith, and remained its patron during his lifetime. His successor, Eadbald, was a pagan, and at the beginning of his reign began to persecute the faithful. So direful was his hostility that many of the representatives of Christianity fled the country. Bishop Lawrence, successor to St. Augustine, also meditated flight. This resolve was frustrated by one of those extraordinary miracles which never seem to be absent in the time of extreme peril. While asleep on the night preceding his intended departure, the Apostle Peter appeared before him in a vision, and after upbraiding him for his cowardice, proceeded to chastise him, after a manner that must have suggested the origin of the Flagellants. The bishop only realised the fact of his scourging the next morning, and instead of departing he presented himself before the king, showed him the weals on his body, and succeeded, by this example of divine interposition, in convincing him of the truth of the Christian faith. Eadbald was converted, and Lawrence remained. The faith prospered until the advent of the ruthless Danes, who slew the archbishop and the monks, and mutilated "the cathedral-monastery," as it was termed. Canute expiated this wrong, and once more the Christian church reared its head. In the troublous times of the Conquest, however, the venerable building was burned down, and the entire collection of the bulls and privileges that had been granted to it by successive Popes and Kings was consumed in the flames. Lanfranc, the first Archbishop after the Conquest, began to rebuild the cathedral and monastery, and the work was continued by others until 1130, when it was considered finished, and dedicated in the presence of "King Henry of England, David, King of Scotland, and all the Bishops of England." Gervase says it was the most famous dedication "that had ever been heard of on the earth since that of the Temple of Solomon." Here took place the terrible scene in which Thomas à Becket was murdered, in 1170. At the time and in subsequent centuries the crime was regarded with the utmost horror by the Church. The cathedral became a shrine to which pilgrimages were made from all parts of the world. It acquired fame and wealth through the circumstance of Becket's violent death, and the monks traded upon the event to their own enrichment and popularity. Erasmus, who saw the shrine shortly after the dissolution of the monasteries, says in a chest or case of wood was "a coffin of gold, together with inestimable riches, gold being the meanest thing to be seen there; it shone all over, and sparkled and glittered with jewels of the most rare and precious kinds, and of an extraordinary size, some of them being larger than a goose's egg—most of them being the gifts of monarchs." After this period Becket was transformed from a martyr into "a presumptuous priest and audacious rebel," but in these latter days he has been reclothed, by M. Thierry and Mr. Froude, with some of his original attributes. By the Romish Church he is still regarded as a martyr and a patriot; in this latter estimate some at least of the English Church join. We shall not pursue controversial ground; it is neither our purpose nor our desire to set up or defend theories; we simply record what is written with a view of stimulating interest and further pilgrimages to one of the most ancient existing memorials in the land. The cathedral suffered much from the time of Lanfranc, and the different styles of architecture attest the periods at which the several portions were built. It exhibits, in a remarkable degree, various forms of art, and yet it is a glorious whole, a building to be proud of and to be seen. The interior is not less attractive than the outside form, and possesses charms for the devotee, for the learned in art, and for all who love the solemn and the beautiful. Augustine built an abbey in another part of the city, which played no mean part in history, but upon which we cannot dwell. After the dissolution it was converted into a royal palace. Elizabeth kept Court here in 1573, Charles I. was married here in 1625, and Charles II. slept here on his passage at the Restoration. It was a place of sepulchre for royalty and archbishops, but time and neglect have wrought many changes. The remains that are left owe their preservation to Mr. Beresford Hope, M.P., and are worth inspecting. Close by is the ruined chapel of St. Pancras, erected on the foundation said to have been laid nearly eighteen hundred years ago. It has the questionable character of having been the place of the King of Kent's idol worship, and when it was devoted to the service of Christianity the devil was so enraged at the change that he assaulted the chapel. He was unable to prevail, but he has left the print of his talons sticking in the walls of the south porch; so says tradition. There were marks, but whether caused by the uncanny beast yclept the devil, or by the encroachments of the ivy, we do not pretend to say. We have it, upon the authority of Charles Dickens, that the ivy is "a dainty plant,"—

> Creeping on, where time has been,
> A rare old plant is the Ivy green.

There are at Canterbury, too, the ruins of an old Castle, which are now private property. Chaucer has helped to immortalise the city with his tales; besides it is pleasantly situated in a valley, and the country round about is beautiful. The cricket week in August is one of the events of the year, when the city becomes gay and is thronged with the fashion and charms of the aristocracy of the county. The cricket ground of St. Lawrence is on the top of a hill and has a most picturesque setting. It is surrounded with corn fields and hop grounds, and commands a splendid view of the city below.

We must pass on to Dover, another centre of attraction. The town is situated between two cliffs, and from the sea presents a most imposing appearance. The position is naturally a strong one, and has been used for centuries past as a great stronghold. It is impossible to determine the time when Dover began to be; all records bear testimony to its importance, and its history must be read in order to justly appreciate the town and its surroundings. The castle frowns upon the East Cliff, 300 feet above the level of the sea, whilst the western height, called Shakespeare's Cliff, rises considerably higher. From both fine views can be obtained. The Castle is full of interest, and the fortifications are a sight of themselves. There is good bathing on the shore, a capacious harbour, from whence monarchs have departed and in which they have landed. The London, Chatham and Dover Railway have a boat service from here to Calais. There are also two mail services from here daily, which no doubt add to the importance of the town. The steamboats are admirably adapted for the passage, and those who desire to visit Brussels and the Field of Waterloo especially, cannot do better than consult this Company's time table and the liberal arrangements made for tourists, not only for the places mentioned, but for Paris also. In connection with the Castle we may mention the old Watch Tower built by the Romans, the remains of which are in a good state of preservation. Here, too, is St. Mary's-within-the-Castle, an ancient church with a foundation dating back to the first century. The gateway of Dover Priory remains to tell of former greatness, and part of an old wall is still standing which probably belonged to the cloisters. On the wall of a building restored in 1871, and now used as a class-room for Dover College, is a fresco representing the Lord's Supper, and what is remarkable is, that it contains fourteen figures instead of the usual thirteen. Buckland Church, a beautiful and ancient structure, is in the immediate neighbourhood. It was originally built by the monks of the Priory, so that it is consecrated by age as well as by service. A yew tree, said to be of a fabulous age, guards the western entrance, and is one of the shows of the locality. Dover and its vicinity, it will be seen from our sketch, is one of the places a tourist should not miss. Then there is Deal, with its Castle and interesting associations. Sandown Castle is a little to the north of Deal. Colonel John Hutchinson, a member of the Long Parliament and governor of Nottingham Castle during the Civil Wars, was imprisoned and died here. About a mile to the south is Walmer Castle, the official residence of the Warden of the Cinque Ports. The Duke of Wellington, the hero of Waterloo, was very fond of Walmer Castle, where he used to retire two months in the year to lead his simple life. The fitting up of the place and all its surroundings accorded with his humble, almost severe habits. Here he died, on the 14th September 1852, at a ripe old age. Those who remember his funeral will not forget the sight. All Britain mourned the loss of one of the greatest generals of this or any other age. He died, as he lived, a modern example of courage and discipline.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF CORNWALL.

THE Provincial Grand Lodge and General Communication of this Province was held on Tuesday, at the Market Hall, St. Austell, under the direction of the Right Hon. the Earl of Mount Edgcumbe R.W.P.G.M., and Sir Chas. B. Graves Sawle, D.P.G.M. Lodge was opened at eleven o'clock in the morning, by which time the brethren who attended from various districts in the province had arrived in the town. Brother G. D. Anderton, the G. Secretary, was pleased to report that the whole of the returns were sent in by the proper time. The brethren now numbered 1,471 against 1,522 in the previous year. In February last Lodge Molesworth, No. 1,954, was consecrated by the R.W.G.M., assisted by Bro. W. E. Michell S.W. and S. Hawken J.W., and other Provincial Officers, the installation of the W.M. being ably performed by Bro. Rowe Past Prov. G.D.C. The Provincial Lodge was again indebted to Bro. Hughan P.G.D. for editing the valuable Directory of the Province. The P.G. Master called attention to the diminution in the numbers from the previous year. This was explained by Bro. Anderton in a satisfactory manner. There were several brethren in the mining district and seaport towns who were returned in arrears, consequently this year they were not taken into account, which explained the apparent diminution in numbers. The report of the Secretary and Treasurer of the Cornwall Masonic Annuity and Benevolent Fund showed subscriptions and donations, £172 7s; interest on funded capital, £121 9s; balance from end of year 1882, £242 5s; total—£536 2s. Payments, £314 3s, leaving balance in hand, £221 18s; total capital invested, £3.372 10s; annual interest thereon, £149 19s. The election of an annuitant to fill the vacancy that occurred at the last annual meeting resulted in the election of a brother from Boscawen Lodge, 699, Chacewater, the only candidate. A petition on the Educational Grant to a child of a deceased member of Cornubian Lodge, 450. A grant has been made of £15 for four years. No other petition had been received. Since the last annual meeting the capital had increased £170, and there was an increase on the year of £40, as compared with the corresponding time last year. The Committee of Relief reported that, having carefully considered the four petitions, recommended £30 to be granted—£10 to a widow of a brother of Cornubian Lodge, No. 450; £10 to a brother of Lodge Providence and Honour, No. 331, Truro; and £5 to a widow of a brother of Lodge True and Faithful, No. 318, Helston; and £5 to a widow of a brother of Tregullow Lodge, No. 1006, St. Day. The manager of the Cornish votes to the Central Masonic Charities, Bro. Truscott, reported that in October 1882, for the Girls' School there were seven vacancies and 20 candidates, and for the Boys' School there were 12 vacancies and 62 candidates. In April 1883, for the Girls' School there were 22 vacancies and 28 candidates; and for the Boys' School there were 13 vacancies and 65 candidates, and in May 1 83, for the Benevolent Institution for Aged Freemasons, there were 30 vacancies and 50 candidates. For widows there were 19 vacancies and 70 candidates. Having no candidates for either the Girls' or Boys' Schools, the votes were lent in exchange for the Benevolent. They had one candidate, a widow of a brother of Druids' Lodge, No. 589, and succeeded in placing her, with 1900 votes, fourth on the list with 70 candidates. The Province had 463 votes for the men, and 313 for the widows, and owed nothing. For the 1884 election there were two candidates for the Benevolent Institution for Widows. During the year Bro. W. B. Colville P.M. No. 332 had served as Steward to both Institutions. Bro. Bake had served as Steward to the Boys' and Girls' School and Benevolent Institution. There were from that Province in the Benevolent Institution three aged Masons receiving £10 each, three widows £30 each, and one widow £20 per annum for three years, making the total received for the year £236, and one girl in the Girls' School. The Province had made a fairly good addition to its votes. But at the same time they could not help remarking that though some Lodges subscribed liberally, the greater number subscribed very little, considering the benefits they as a Province were receiving from the great Charities. He appealed to those Lodges to increase their subscriptions, and also to other Lodges, and the brethren generally. Nearly one-half of their votes came from only five subscribers, the R.W. P.G. Master, the P.G. Lodge, Bros. Anderton, Hughan, and Bake. As they were all aware, Bro. Hughan was about to leave the county, but he did not leave them in spirit, having some months since kindly pledged to them all his votes for life, the votes being—girls 18, boys 15, men 16, widows 16—in all 95 votes. At noon the brethren attending the G. Lodge were formed into a procession at the Town Hall, accompanied by the bands of the St. Austell D.C.R. Volunteers and the Charlestown D.C.A. Volunteers, playing the "Freemasons' March," and after passing through the principal streets of the town they went into the beautiful parish church of St. Austell, where the usual Divine Service was held. The service was commenced with the singing of the processional hymn, "Forward be our watchword." Prayers were said by the Rev. F. E. Coggin (curate), and the Revs. F. W. Wintle (rector of Beerferris) and F. B. Paul (rector of Lanivet) read the lessons. The sermon was preached by Bro. the Rev. R. F. Frazer-Frizell, of Millbrook. The rev. gentleman took his text from St. John ii. 19.

"Destroy this Temple, and in three days I will raise it up."

"He spake of His body," which stood to the temple in the relation of type to anti-type. Those who heard may not have understood fully the true meaning then. The hostile Jews ask in derision if he would rear again in three days that which was forty-six years in building? And this false meaning they used when they formulated their charge against the Holy One; they perverted the words in assigning to Jesus the work of destruction, which He assigns to the Jews, charging Him with saying, "I am able to destroy," or "I will destroy this Temple," while He who is the Resurrection and the Life spoke of the restoration as His work, the destruction as theirs. But that they comprehended the true meaning of the words is proved by their telling Pontius Pilate that Jesus, while yet alive, had said, "after three days I rise again." Our Lord's disciples realised the truth, "When therefore He was raised from the dead, His disciples remembered that He spake this, and they believed the Scripture and the word which Jesus said." The striking comparison of the body to a temple or tabernacle was not an unusual or undesigned simile. Hezekiah says, "My life is struck and rolled up like a wandering shepherd's tabernacle, to vanish away from where it has been." St. Paul says, "We know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved we have a building of God, a house not made with hands eternal in the Heavens," and he repeatedly speaks of the body as a temple. St. John in the first chapter of his gospel says, "The word was made flesh and dwelt (or as margin of revised version 'tabernacled') among us." Using the very word in the original for that tent or tabernacle which was erected by Moses, in accordance with Divine direction, and which afterwards proved to be the model or ground plan of that most magnificent temple built by King Solomon. As we are accustomed to realise great truths which are veiled in allegory and illustrated by symbols, let us endeavour reverently to see in what way the tabernacle and temple were symbols of the human body. To get a true view of the meaning of this symbolism we must go back to the plan and pattern the Great Architect of the Universe had before Him in the creation of man. God said, "Let us make man in our image after our likeness." This points to the Divine pattern and archetype after which man's nature was fashioned? In the Old Testament the nature of God is veiled in mystery, though it is illustrated by symbols. In the light of the Gospel we know that God is love and the Gospel teaches us also that the one love reveals itself in a threefold personality—Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. If we find this threefold personality in God, we must expect to find in man a threefold nature also. The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, breathed into his nostrils the breath of life. Man became a living soul. Father, Son and Holy Ghost were the presiding and co-equal authors of a first creation of one who was to be an image of God. God fashions the plastic clay into the form of man, and moulds those features which, given by His hand, have descended to us. Bending over the prostrate and inanimate statue, He breathes into the hollow nostrils the breath of life; rushing in, this mysterious power sets its organs into play, and as the heart begins to beat, and the current of blood to flow, Adam opens his eyes in life and on the world. But ere by this crowning act he closes the drama of Creation, addressing the Son on this hand and the Holy Spirit on that, the Father saith, "Let us make man in our image;" and man became a living soul. Man had not only a body and an animal life, but he had also that which no other animal on earth possessed—a spiritual nature which resembles God's nature. In fact, man was a compound of body, soul, and spirit (1 Thess. 5-23). The mystical sphinx in which the human countenance rises out of the form of a savage animal significantly expressed to the ancients that there was a free spirit, free, but yet linked to an animal body and a natural life. But this threefold personality of God and threefold nature of man was to be yet more significantly illustrated by a divinely appointed symbol. God said to Moses on Mount Sinai, "Let them make me a sanctuary that I may dwell among them according to all that I show thee, after the pattern of the Tabernacle." Again and again in Scripture we find the Tabernacle spoken of as having been made after the pattern God showed Moses on the Mount. The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews says, "As Moses was admonished of God when he was about to make the Tabernacle, for see, saith He, that thou make it according to the pattern showed to thee in the Mount." I remember well the present Archbishop of Canterbury, commenting on that passage, saying, "God threw into the mind of Moses the knowledge of great truths, and left him to convey and illustrate those truths to the people by symbols which they could understand." In the construction of the Tabernacle the first thing that strikes is the threefold division—1, the outer court (within that) 2, the Holy Place 3, the Holy of Holies. In comparing the Temple of King Solomon with the Tabernacle we see that all the arrangements are identical, but the dimensions are exactly double those of the preceding structure. In the Temple of Zerubbabel, and again in that of Herod, we find the same mystical and yet suggestive threefold division. Ezekiel's vision of the Temple gives us the same truths, which is also conveyed in our Christian churches by—(1) the Body of the Church; (2) the Chancel; (3) the Sanctuary. The leading thoughts suggested are:—(1) The outer court symbolises the body. In that outer court the sacrifices were offered, and it is bodily sacrifice that the great Architect of the human temple requires from us, the sacrifice of all the lusts of the flesh, the renunciation of all carnal desires of the body. See how clearly St. Paul puts this, "I beseech you, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice to God, which is your reasonable service." (2) The inner court, centre chamber, or Holy Place, symbolises the human mind or reason. In this were placed the golden candlesticks that mainly speak to us of Him who is the light of the world, but it also symbolises the light of reason by which we must let our light shine before men. The table of shewbread, which seems to tell us our mind, should be set on Him who gives our daily bread, as our Lord, in the Gospel for last Sunday, tells us, "Our Heavenly Father knows we have need of all these things. The altar of incense symbolises the pure incense of prayer and praise that we should ever be offering mentally to God. (3) Separated by a thick veil from the centre chamber, or Holy Place, lay the Holy of Holies, which combined the mercy seat, with the cherubim overshadowing it, and between the cherubim the Ark of the Covenant containing the Tables of the Law. How clearly this symbolises the Divine Spirit in the human nature within and beyond reason. That Spirit, through which we hold communion with God and that spiritual union with Christ, and so draw near to the mercy seat by Him who is the Way, the Truth, and the Life, and so coming to the Father, rest under the shadow of His Almighty wings. That Spirit, through which we see in the Law, a schoolmaster to bring us to Christ. But had I bodily strength and mental power to speak further to you, brethren, on the symbolisms of these great mysteries, I feel that I have not sufficient spiritual insight to venture further now. I can only direct your thoughts to the great truth, that in the New Creation and Redemption of our fallen nature in the second Adam, Father, Son and Holy Spirit operate together for us men and our salvation. The Father decrees Redemption, the Son procures it, the Holy Ghost applies it to individual souls. So it will be in the raising up again the Temple of the human body, the same Three in One, and One in Three will work in unison in the resurrection of our bodily Temple when it has been destroyed. The preacher then went on to show how men do destroy the human temple, body, soul and spirit. 1. The body — through intemperance and vice, or through reckless use of bodily power, as Matthew Webb. 2. The mind—by attempting to cultivate the mind without regard to the spirit (illustrating this from a clever doctor who, setting his great mental power to disprove the existence of any spirit in man, lost the reason he misused and died the death of a mad dog in a lunatic asylum). 3. The spirit by constantly grieving and finally quenching it. But destroy it as we may, this temple of our body will be raised again; either to be cast into outer darkness, or to soar upward to the Heavenly Jerusalem, "Where there will be no temple, for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it."

The collection, amounting to £9 15s 10d, was given as follows:—Two-fifths to the Annuity Fund, two-fifths to the St. Austell Local Society, and one-fifth to the Vicar, for charity. On returning to the Market Hall, the Truro Cathedral Committee's report was read by the Treasurer to the fund, Bro. W. Tweedy. Since the last meeting of P.G.L. the following sums had been received:—Twelve months dividend in Consols, £12 7s 9d; St. Austell Loan, £3 2s; Liskeard, £10 10s 10d; W. B. E. Holmes, £10 10s; donation £5; Falmouth Lodge, £9 10s 6d; making with the balance, £9 16s 1d, total £55 19s 4d, and £46 4s had been invested in the purchase of Consols, making, in the name of the Treasurer, £320, leaving them in the hands of the Treasurer £9 19s. The Prov. G.M., addressing Bro. Hughan, said he had a very pleasurable duty to perform, although it was accompanied with circumstances which all the brethren regretted; which he himself regretted. Bro. Hughan was about to leave the Province to reside elsewhere. It was generally felt on that occasion they must do something to mark their appreciation of all the work he had done for Freemasonry in the Province, as well as the regard in which they held him themselves. It had accordingly been resolved to present him with a handsome gold P.P.G. Secretary's jewel. It was one of beautiful workmanship, and there was with it a purse containing two hundred and seventy-five sovereigns. In addition to that, there would be an album, in which would be placed the names of all the subscribers to the testimonial, and presented to Bro. Hughan, with an expression of their best wishes for his welfare, and a hope that he would have a happy future at whatever place he might go to reside. His lordship then pinned the jewel on Bro. Hughan's breast, and presented him with the gold thread purse and its contents (275 sovereigns). Bro. Hughan, in reply, said he was quite unable to express what he felt under the circumstances. He would endeavour, however, to say a few words in recognition of the great kindness shown him. When he came into the Province, twenty years since, he was not known to any Mason in the Province, nor one of them to him. His only introduction to his brother Masons was his certificate. From that time to now he had received nothing but kindness from all the brethren in the Province. As long as he lived his attachment to the Province of Cornwall would never cease. He had previously received a P.M.'s jewel from Lodge Fortitude, at Truro, and with that a centenary jewel of that Lodge. He should put the present jewel given him with those, and should never forget the continued kindness thus shown him. His lordship had been pleased to speak of his merits, but he believed they were overrated. He must thank the brethren who had formed the Committee for presenting the testimonial just given him for their exertions in the matter. He believed he was much indebted to them for these exertions. It had been said, he had done much for Masonry. What little he had done he gratefully felt he was more than repaid for by the continued kindness shown him, and as long as he was able he should never cease to work for the Order. He was about to reside at Torquay, but he wished the brethren to consider that as only a change of address—they had but to write to him at Torquay instead of Truro, and he should be happy to reply to them promptly on any matter referring to their noble Institution. Freemasonry in that Province had made great advances since he first joined it. There were then only some 500 Masons in the Province. That number had now nearly trebled. The great majority of the subscribers to the testimonial must therefore have been men that he did not know nor they him. To all he would say, that they could not feel more warmly towards him nor think of him more highly than he could feel their kindness and appreciate their gift. The jewel bore the following inscription:—"Provincial Grand Lodge, Cornwall.—Presented to W. Bro. W. J. Hughan P.M. 131, and Past Senior Grand Deacon of England, and Past Provincial Grand Secretary, on his leaving the county, by the brethren of the Province, together with a purse of sovereigns, as a token of their fraternal regard."

The following brethren were elected as officers of the Cornwall Masonic and Benevolent Fund:—W. Bros. Tweedy Treasurer,

The R.W.P G. Master then closed the P.G. Lodge in ancient form, and the brethren adjourned to the Assembly Rooms, where a luncheon was provided.

Bro. Jacob Norton, the champion non-affiliate, whose motto appears to be "Do write, and fear not," and who is reputed to dream even with a pen in his hand, occasionally gets off a good thing; for example the following, the only fragment of truth in the last issue of the Masonic Truth:—

Whereas, Masonic romancers have brought our institution into disrepute by confounding Masonic history with fiction, and

Whereas, We have no objection to writers of fiction, but, on the contrary, we are proud of the honour of having had in our Brotherhood such men as Scott, Dickens, Jerrold, and other distinguished novelists, poets, &c.; therefore,

Resolved, That we enjoin and command every Brother whom nature endowed with a large bump of imagination, to confine his pen strictly to avowed works of fiction, and henceforth cease bringing discredit upon the Craft, by palming off ridiculous fables as Masonic history, under any pretence whatsoever; under no less a penalty than that of sending such a delinquent supperless to bed on those nights when, according to ancient usage, the M.W. Grand Lodge is accustomed to enjoy its GRAND FEASTS. So mote it be.

A very gratifying announcement has been made by the Manager of Drury Lane Theatre to the effect that any charge for programmes is in future prohibited in his establishment. Hitherto notices to the effect that "No Fees" are to be inflicted upon visitors to many of the London Theatres have been issued; but, in defiance of this loosely-worded edict, black mail has generally been levied. Mr. Harris has, however, given orders that the attendants in the front of his house are to receive no donations; and if the habitués of Drury-lane only second the Manager's efforts, the obnoxious system will speedily come to an end. Other managers, it is to be hoped, will follow Mr. Harris's energetic example, and let their servants know that any one of them found guilty of accepting gratuities will be dismissed. The managers of theatres, it is presumed, pay their employés fair wages for their services, and do not desire the public to surreptitiously contribute to their support; if the reprehensible habit ceases to exist in the "National" Theatre, it will rapidly cease in other theatres as well.

The Council of the National Refuge Harbours Society has decided to petition Parliament, that immediate steps may be taken to increase Harbour Accommodation on our coasts, for saving life and property, for the protection of shipping, and for the development of our fisheries. Considering the great sacrifice of life this is intended to mitigate (nearly 1,000 persons each year), which Lord Colville of Culross described, at a public meeting over which he presided at Cowes, on 17th August last, as "nothing less than a scandal to the nation," we feel certain that inland districts will gladly assist those on our sea borders. Copies of this petition will be sent to any one willing to do a little work towards saving the lives of our fishermen and sailors; also a pamphlet report, to any who may desire it, of the Inaugural Public Meeting of this Society recently held at Willis's Rooms, London, under the presidency of the Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G., on application to Mr. F. Johnson, Hon. Secretary of the Society, St. Leonards-on-Sea.

Mrs. H. B. Marshall, wife of Bro. H. B. Marshall, C.C., will, on Monday next, lay the memorial stone of a new Wesleyan Chapel at Plaistow.

REVIEWS.

—:o:—

Through Siberia. By Henry Lansdell, D.D., F.R.G.S. With Illustrations and Maps. Fourth Edition. London: Sampson Low, Marston, Searle, and Rivington. 1883.

In our issue of the 4th of March 1882, we had the pleasure of calling the attention of our readers to the above excellent work, which, as its title imports, is a narrative by the author of his experiences, whilst carrying out his self-set task of visiting the various prisons and other places of confinement and punishment in that part of the Continent known as Siberia.

We have here a faithful and graphic description of every part of interest, through which the writer passed; and besides relating his own experiences, he has, by dint of careful research, added in a certain degree to the value of his compilation, by consulting the various books previously written in relation to this—as we cannot doubt from the manner in which Bro. Lansdell tells us he was everywhere received—most hospitable of nations; and he has further pointed out the errors into which some of his predecessors have fallen, with regard to the mode of living and habits of the people of this country. We cannot but think that our readers will note with surprise and satisfaction that he was everywhere greeted with open arms, and received every assistance in the execution of his plan, which was to distribute tracts and portions of the Sacred Law amongst those unhappy beings, the exiles from their native country. Not that they are so utterly wretched, from their own point of view; for we find that card-playing and gambling are very prevalent as a means of killing time. By-the-bye, we observe that of this latter commodity the Siberians have plenty at their disposal, and cannot understand that an hour or two can make any material difference. We take as an instance the remark of a coachman, who, through his dilatory movements, had arrived with his fare at the railway station "just in time to be too late" for the train,—to use a Paddyism. As if it were of no importance at all to the unfortunate traveller, he observed, "What difference one way or other can an hour make, or, for that matter, two?" Seeing that the population consists principally of exiles from the mother country, who have been banished for the commission of some one or more of the several offences against the law for which a Russian subject may be visited with this kind of punishment, it is no wonder that as a nation the Siberians are not of a very enterprising turn of mind. Roughly speaking, as many as 17,000 individuals annually pass the border, either as exiles or as the companions of exiles, for in many instances a man's wife and family may, if they think fit, accompany him. This may, at first sight, appear a large number, but when we tell our readers that there are in all upwards of 30 crimes punishable by exile, it will at once be obvious that the offences cannot all be of a highly discreditable character; and that for comparatively speaking trivial offences this very severe reprimand is enforced, hence the apparently large number of criminals.

Everywhere the tracts and books distributed were seized with an eagerness which is astonishing, and during his visit the author disposed of upwards of 55 000 volumes of one sort and another, for many of which payment was tendered, and, acting on a suggestion made to him, in some cases accepted.

As an instance of the hospitality of the Siberians we take an incident which befell our traveller. When on his way from Tomsk to Krasnoiarsk, and still some little distance from a place called Bogotol, the vehicle in which he was seated broke down, or rather, to be correct, owing to the rapid pace at which the Jehu was forcing along his cattle, the wheels of the conveyance caught fire and compelled the narrator to rouse one of the inhabitants of Bogotol at the early hour of four a.m. Notwithstanding its being the middle of the night the worthy merchant no sooner heard what was the matter than he sent his servants, one for a wheelwright, and others to provide eatables and a comfortable fire for the unfortunate person in question, and would not think of allowing his quasi-guest to depart until he had refreshed himself, and his carriage was again in a fit state of repair.

The writer depicts with faithfulness and accuracy the numerous places he visited, and devotes a chapter to the Church ceremonies and religious institutions of the country.

One noticeable distinction between our own transported criminals and the Russian exiles, would appear to be that whereas the former are in most, if not in every instance, provided with a certain amount of labour, the latter cannot be supplied with work to do. One more fact must be brought to the notice of the public, and that is that the edition now before us is the fourth which has been published, and this of itself is a sufficient guarantee of the merit and popularity of the book; and in leaving it to the tender mercies of such of our readers as may be induced to peruse its contents on our recommendation, we will conclude by pointing out that it contains a full and complete index to the various chapters, which will enable any one at a glance to put his hand upon such parts as he may deem most calculated to please his particular fancy. The book is printed in good large type, and has evidently been prepared with great care and attention. We congratulate both author and publishers on the manner in which this work has been put before the public.

RANDOM NOTES AND REFLECTIONS.

WE deeply regret that our Notes this week open with the sad announcement of the death of Viscountess Holmesdale, the wife of Bro. Lord Holmesdale, the Provincial Grand Master of Kent. The deceased Lady Julia was daughter of the fifth Earl of Cornwallis, and was only in her thirty ninth year at the time of her death, which event occurred on Saturday last, at Linton Park, near Maidstone. Both the deceased and the bereaved husband come of a rare stock. We need not dwell upon the name of Cornwallis; it is familiar to all who have studied the martial history of England during the latter half of the eighteenth century. Charles, Marquess of Cornwallis, took part in the American War, fought and ruled in India, and signed the preliminary Treaty of Peace at Amiens. Napoleon had a very high opinion of his abilities and honesty. Lord Jeffrey Amherst, who was descended from an old Kentish family, took early to the art of war. He served at Dettingen and Fontenoy, afterwards in America, and restored British prestige in Canada. In 1876 he was created Baron Amherst of Holmesdale, and two years later he was appointed Commander-in-Chief in England. His activity and humanity were alike conspicuous in suppressing the Gordon "No Popery" riots in 1780. Owing to the change of the Ministry, he lost his military appointments for a time, but they were restored to him afterwards. He finally resigned them in 1795, when he was made a Field Marshal. The reversion of the barony, and we believe the pension of £3 000 a year, fell to his nephew, Lord William Amherst Amherst, and from this nobleman the present Earl Amherst is descended.

Bro. Lord William Archer Holmesdale is the heir to the title. He was born in 1832, and married the lady whose death he now mourns in 1862. He, too, has seen active service. He fought in the Crimea, where he was seriously wounded, and retired from the army on his marriage. He represented West Kent and Mid Kent, in the House of Commons from 1859 to 1880, when he was called to the House of Lords in his father's barony of Kent.

—:o:—

We all know the distinguished part he has taken in Freemasonry. At the request of Earl Carnarvon, Pro Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of England, he presided at the Special Grand Lodge meeting held in Freemason's Hall on the 8th of last month, and discharged the duties of that high office with tact, dignity, and zeal. No one, possibly not himself, then had the slightest apprehension of the blow that has now fallen. We are sure that the brethren will deeply sympathise with our bereaved brother, and will afford such consolation as lies in their power. There is but one true source of consolation, which is well known to the members of the Craft. May the G.A O.T.U. lighten the blow that has come upon Bro. Lord Holmesdale, and sustain him in his affliction.

—:o:—

Bangor having been fixed upon for the foundation of a College for North Wales, active steps are being taken to begin operations in January next, so as to secure the promised Government grant of £4,000 per annum. As in South Wales temporary premises will have to be secured, it is said that the first home of the new college will be the Masonic Hall, a commodious building recently erected by Major Platt.

New York boasts a Masonic Veteran Association, to which no one is admitted who has not been a Mason at least twenty-one years. The members of this body recently held their twelfth annual dinner, when about one hundred and fifty brethren participated in the bounties of the table. In recording the fact a local paper gives the following figures, which are interesting and not a little singular :—

The total of the ages of those present was 6,829 years. Total weight after dinner, 20,829 lbs. The heaviest veteran, Bro. Charles Bradley, of New Haven, Conn, tipped the beam at 389 lbs. [27 st. 11 lbs.] The lightest was only 109 lbs. [7 st. 11 lbs.], and we won't give him away. The oldest veteran was eighty-nine years and the youngest forty-two years old . . . . One of the veterans was made a Mason in 1815—truly a long time ago; and another was raised in 1819, and assisted at the reception of Gen. Lafayette on the occasion of his visit to this country in 1824.

—:o:—

Speaking of General Lafayette, it may be mentioned that during the visit mentioned above he laid the corner stone of the University of Vermont building at Burlington, in 1825. In consequence of the lapse of time a new structure has become necessary. Through the liberality of a citizen the requisite funds have been forthcoming, and the ceremony of laying the corner stone has been performed by the Grand Lodge of Vermont. The event drew a large concourse of people together, who watched the solemn proceedings with great interest. They do these things in grand style in America; in fact, they make a show of them. Phlegmatic English Masons would hardly care to follow such an example.

Perhaps it would be difficult to find a better illustration of the loyalty of the Craft to the Throne than the following, recorded at the recent annual meeting of the Grand Lodge of Canada. At the preceding Annual Communication a Committee had been formed to prepare an address to Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, which had been beautifully engrossed, and presented through the proper channel by the M.W. Bro. A. A. Stevenson P.G.M., who happened to be on a visit to England. In the report of the event it is recorded :

Since that time we have all been deeply pained to learn of the accident which occurred to Her Majesty, and from which she is now happily recovering. The painful rumours regarding the state of her health alarmed the millions of her loyal and loving subjects, who revere and love her for being the best and noblest example of what a Constitutional Sovereign should be; while the good and pure of all nations honour her for her many virtues and noble life, and will join with us in praying that God may be pleased to spare her,

"Long to reign over us,
Happy and glorious,
God save the Queen!"

With such a feeling animating our brethren in Canada, there need be no difficulty in getting rid of the soreness which now exists in reference to the action of the Grand Lodge of England.

—:o:—

Among Masonic reminiscences we take the following from the Voice of Masonry, published at Chicago, an excellent specimen of literary work and typography. It is richly printed and illustrated, and, is in all respects an excellent production. The writer, "Penchat," and his "pard," an "Old Kaintuck." were out in Northern California prospecting for gold. They had strayed away from the party they were with in search of a deer, and found themselves in the position of either having to travel with some quarrelsome Mexicans, or of seeking the hospitality of some packers. The difficulty was to make them understand, but "Penchat" undertook that task, meaning to astonish his "pard" by disclosing his knowledge of Spanish. They approached the Mexican packers, and "Penchat" began to make their wants known, when to his surprise the leader of the packers and "Old Kaintuck" fervently embraced each other. "Penchat" experienced the sensation of surprise he intended for his friend, and inquired the meaning. The answer of the Mexican was characteristic and Masonic. He said :—

"You, my friend, speak the Spanish language perfectly. I understand every word, but the old man has the universal language of the greatest Grand Master, King Solomon. We are brothers!"

We need scarcely say that there was no lack of entertainment, and the three passed a good part of the night in good fellowship, "Penchat" interpreting for the other two.

—:o:—

We presume that "Penchat" was not a Mason when the foregoing incident occurred, but we have it on his own authority that he was one in 1863. He relates a story of a man summoning him on a certain Sabbath morning to what was believed to be the bedside of a dying brother. He obeyed the call, and learned from the sick man that he was really a brother, who had been ruined by the war of Secession. He apprehended death, and could not bear the thought of dying and leaving his wife and child in poverty and want among strangers in a strange land. Having learned that "Penchat" was Master of a Lodge, he sent for him and craved his brotherly help. He told a sad story of the evils of war. He was in danger at home, although he had taken no part in the Secession movement, and sought safety in flight. He took some horses with him, but was overtaken on the way by a notorious bushwhacker and followers. He was told to leave the horses at a certain encampment, where the marauder would receive them. The poor owner was in despair, and made the sign of distress. Apparently it was not heeded, and the man was proceeding to the spot indicated, when one of the band came galloping up, and exchanging greetings told him how to escape the bushwhacker and save his cattle. The sign was seen, and the man who observed it saved his brother at the risk of his own life. From one trouble he fell into a greater one, which he feared would end with death, and it was at this point that "Penchat" saw his bodily wants were relieved, and a promise was given that his wife and children should not want, come what may. A physician was obtained, a nurse supplied, and the brethren of the Lodge vied with each other in meeting the necessary expenses. Owing to this fraternal kindness the brother recovered, and became a regular visitor to the Lodge that had succoured him. He subsequently joined the Lodge, and on one occasion he remarked, "That not until driven to it by necessity had he learned and fully realised the meaning of 'neither naked nor clad.'"

—:o:—

We have dealt with the two vexed questions that agitated the minds of the members of Grand Lodge on Wednesday night in a separate article. There were other points of interest which are worth noting. We have already stated that Bro. General Brownrigg, C.B., presided, and that he was supported on the dais by a large number of brethren high in office and the Craft Brother the Rev. H. G. Morse occupied the Senior Warden's chair, and Brother the Rev. C. J. Martyn filled the post of Junior Warden. All went smoothly until the motion was made for the confirmation of the minutes of Special Grand Lodges of the 29th June and the 8th August, when Brother Matthews moved their postponement until December. Then the signal was given for a fierce wordy warfare, in which Brother H. C. Tombs, Prov. Grand Secretary Wilts, led the attack. This called up Bro. Raynham Stewart, who afterwards apologised for the warmth of his remarks; also Bro. Binckes, who denied the statement made by Bro. Tombs respecting himself. When the Grand Master announced that Bro. Matthews' motion was carried, a loud demand was made for a division. The Rule was quoted providing for testing the opinions of the members present, but General Brownrigg pointed out that the clause referred to contained the words "provided such demand appear reasonable to the Grand Master." With soldier-like decision he said, that the demand did not appear reasonable to him, and, therefore, it was not granted. This put an end to a scene that fortunately has few parallels, and the fewer the better.

—:o:—

The report of the Board of General Purposes, which submitted the statement of the Grand Lodge accounts, was also accepted. It showed that on the 17th August there was a balance in the Bank of England of £4,165 15s 1d, and in the hands of the Grand Secretary for petty cash £75, and for servants' wages £100.

—:o:—

At the close of the sitting, and when most of the brethren were weary, not with work, but of the temper that had been exhibited, Bro. Perceval moved—"That notice shall be given of the intended meetings of all Grand Lodges, special or otherwise, by advertisement, at least once, and when practicable, twice before such day of meeting in the two Masonic issues, the Freemason and the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE, and such other paper or papers, not exceeding three, as the Grand Secretary may deem best adapted for giving publicity thereto." Bro Perceval briefly supported his motion with such arguments as appeared to us feasible and sound. Upon being seconded and put to the vote it was lost, nearly the whole of the brethren on the dais voting against it. This brought the meeting of Grand Lodge to a close, and none were sorry to escape into a cooler atmosphere.

FREEMASONRY IN VICTORIA.

WE are pleased to notice that Bro. Robert Goode Fuller, who some time since filled the office of Secretary of the Phœnix Lodge, 516, Stowmarket, Suffolk, has again taken office as Worshipful Master of a new Lodge in the country in which he is now residing. Bro. R. G. Fuller, during his Masonic career in Suffolk, was one of the most active and energetic working Masons in the Province, and his mother Lodge is very pleased to see that he still has the good of the Craft at heart, and hope he will have both a successful and happy year of office.

The opening of a new Lodge under the English Constitution at Seymour took place on Thursday, 22nd June last, in the presence of a large number of the Craft, amongst them being Bros. Blashki P.M. D.G.J.W., T. H. Lempriere D.G.S., C. H. Bayley P.M. D.G.J.D., The W.M. of the Australia Felix Lodge, Pro. Capus; the W.M. of the Kilmore Lodge, Bro. Lloyd; the W.M. of the Shepperton Lodge, Bro. Dolphin; the W.M. of the Murchison Lodge, Bro. Read; P.M.'s Bros. Simmons, Warren, Beveridge, Taylor, Hodges, and the Officers and brethren of several Lodges, to the number of about sixty. The Lodge was opened in the usual form, the various Offices being distributed as follows:—Bros. C. H. Bayley W.M., A. H. Simmons S.W., Capus J.W., Lloyd Senior Deacon, Read Junior Deacon and Past Masters Bros. Warren and Hodges Inner Guard and Tyler. The minutes of the proceedings up to the time of opening were read and confirmed, as was also the dispensation from the District Grand Lodge empowering a District Grand Lodge Officer to duly constitute the Lodge. This interesting ceremony having been ably performed by the District Grand Junior Warden, that of installation was proceeded with. Bro. R. G. Fuller, presented by P.M.'s Bayley and Taylor, was then installed into the chair of K.S., Bros. J. W. Wright and F. W. Baines, Senior and Junior Wardens respectively. The ceremony was performed by Bro. Blashki with his usual and acknowledged ability, many brethren averring that they had never heard it more impressively and effectively rendered. The Lodge being closed by the Worshipful Master, an adjournment was made by the brethren to the banquet-hall. The tables were laid by Brother Host Guild in a manner that secured encomiums of praise from the brethren, notwithstanding the fact that a professional engaged by the worthy host for this special occasion was so affected by the genial atmosphere, or some other cause, as to be unable to render any aid. The toast of the Dist. G. Lodge was responded to by the D.G.J.W., who in the course of his remarks adverted to the creation of the G. Lodge of Victoria, a proceeding which he most emphatically condemned. The remarks of Bro Blashki were enthusiastically endorsed by the brethren present. Bro. T. H. Lempriere also responded. The health of the Worshipful Master was proposed by Bro. C. H. Bayley in a neat speech, and ably responded to by the distinguished recipient, Bro. R. G. Fuller. The toast of the Installing Master was ably proposed by Bro Lempriere, who referred in very complimentary terms to the valuable assistance rendered by Bro. Blashki to the Craft generally, and the great interest he evinced in the cause of charity. It is superfluous to add that the toast was received with the utmost enthusiasm, and responded to by the distinguished brother in his usual happy and effective style. The toast of the W.M.'s was warmly proposed by the Worshipful Master, and most cordially received, being responded to by W.M. Bro. Capus, who directed attention to the publication of the Victorian Masonic Journal, and urged upon the brethren the desirability of supporting the same. The W.M.'s of the Kilmore, Murchison, Shepparton Lodges also replied, and, in the course of their remarks, intimated that their Lodges were unanimous in their resolve to remain firm to the Constitution. The health of the Visitors was proposed by the Worshipful Master, and responded to by a number of the brethren, all of whom testified to their continued allegiance and loyalty to their mother Constitution. Brother Bayley P.M. apologised for the absence of the W.M.'s of the Combermere, Collingwood, and Kent Lodges. Bro. J. W. Wright S.W. having responded on behalf of the Officers, the proceedings were brought to a most successful issue by the company enthusiastically singing the National Anthem. We congratulate our Seymour brethren on the successful result of their endeavours, as well as on the possession of an elegant Lodge room, suitable furniture, &c., and most heartily wish them a prosperous and brilliant future. It is also a matter of satisfaction to find that the movement at present being made by certain Lodges to establish a Victorian Constitution had not a single sympathiser present, and it is pleasing to note that in Seymour the Grand Lodge of England has had one more Lodge added to its Victorian register that will remain true to its obligation.

TITLES OF NOBILITY.

ARE Freemasons aware that their titles, "W.M.," "R.W.G.M.," &c., are titles of nobility? Anti-Masons are, at all events. Many thanks for their high estimate of us. Do you inquire what we mean? Simply this:—A Missouri anti Masonic sheet, of 2nd August last, before us, says, that Freemasonry, as taught and practised in the United States, is in violation of that clause of the Constitution of the United States which provides: (Art 1. Sec. 10), "No State shall grant any title of nobility." And this is the manner in which it proves its case. We quote its extraordinarily ridiculous language verbatim:

"The Masonic Grand Lodge of the United States is chartered by the legal authorities of the District of Columbia. The different State Grand Lodges and their subordinate Lodges are incorporated by the local legal authorities. How can the United States confer power they never did nor never can possess under the present Constitution? How can any court or constitutional authority, acting under our Federal Laws, do what the fundamental law of the land for ever prohibits? To guard against any such blunder it is made the duty of any men or set of persons desiring grant of charter or papers of incorporation, to set forth the objects and aims of said proposed association or organization. Where has any Masonic Lodge ever declared, in copy of Constitution and Bye-Laws filed with the authorities, that it proposed to confer titles of nobility?"

To which we reply: (1), There is no "Masonic Grand Lodge of the United States;" therefore (2), it is impossible that "the legal authorities of the District of Columbia" could have chartered it; (3) "the different State Grand Lodges and their subordinate Lodges are" not "incorporated by the local legal authorities." It is very rarely that a Masonic body seeks incorporation, and, as we stated last week, the Grand Master of Virginia recently said that he would arrest the charter of any Lodge that should apply for incorporation; and (4) the official titles used in Masonry are NOT titles of nobility under the Constitution of the United States. Anti-Masonic scribblers will have to tell far less ridiculous and palpable stories than the foregoing, if they want to persuade any sensible readers to believe their assertions.—Keystone.

LIGHT.

When o'er the seething chaos of this world
Hung the dark curtain of the awful night,
Across the brooding waters of the deep,
God said, "Let there be light."

Light that the flowers may bloom, the green grass spring;
Sunshine to gild the dew-lit path man trod;
Light to reflect in earth, and sky and sea,
The glory of our God.

Light that the glory of the Lord be seen,
In earth's glad seasons as they come and pass,
In tides that ebb and flow, in gem-lit sky,
And tiny blade of grass.

There is no pride in light, it freely shines
On stately castle, peeps through cottage door,
Creeps 'mid lone dungeon bars, and glides across
The marble palace floor:

Shines grandly on the mountain's highest top,
Kisses the white-fringed daisy at its feet,
Smiles o'er the vallevs, steals across the waste
Where foaming waters meet.

Deep in the cold heart of the silent earth
The old primeval forests darkly rest,
In some deep mine, a Queen's bright jewels once
Dark hid their rainbow crest.

In flashing diamond of a monarch's crown,
In cottage fire that gives a ruddy glow,
Shine rays of light from out the golden sun,
Of summers long ago.

Light, 'tis a grand and blessed thing to see,
It circles round our paths, it decks the skies:
After long night, how sweet the blushing morn
Dawns on our weary eyes!

Have we amid life's heaving, restless deep,
Heard o'er the darkness of a faithless night,
Far o'er the chaos of despair and doubt,
God said, "Let there be light?"

Oh, have we seen its heaven-born radiance flood
The darkened path of life we mournful trod,
Seen in the light that circled round our path
The glory of our God?

No one that stands alone—our influence falls
On some dark threshold with a cheering light;
Or else it shadows and enshrouds some life
With pestilential blight.

No one so lonely but has links that bind
Its light or darkness with some other one;
This great wide world itself is bound with links
Reaching from earth to sun.

Do we, like trees and flowers and sky and sea,
Reflect the glory of our God, and throw
One radiant gleam of light to cheer and bless
The darkness here below?

Holloway's Pills.—Pure Blood.—When the blood is pure, its circulation calm and equable, and the nerves well strung, we are well. These Pills possess a marvellous power in securing these essentials of health by purifying, regulating, and strengthening the fluids and solids. Holloway's Pills can be confidently recommended to all persons suffering from disordered digestion, or worried by nervous fancies, or neuralgic pains. They correct acidity and heartburn, dispel sick headache, quicken the action of the liver, and act as alteratives and gentle aperients The weak and delicate may take them without fear. Holloway's Pills are eminently serviceable to invalids of irritable constitution, as they raise the action of every organ to its natural standard, and universally exercise a calming and sedative influence.

FREEMAN'S CHLORODYNE.

TRADE MARK
HUNDREDS of Medical Practitioners testify to its marvellous efficacy in immediately relieving and rapidly curing Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Neuralgia, Spasms, Colic, Whooping Cough, and all Nerve Pains. It acts like a charm in Diarrhœa, and is the only specific in Cholera and Dysentery. It rapidly relieves pain, from whatever cause, soothes and strengthens the system under exhausting diseases, and gives quiet and refreshing sleep.
Lord Chancellor Selborne, Lord Justice James, Lord Justice Mellish decided in favour of FREEMAN'S ORIGINAL CHLORODYNE, and against Brown and Davenport, compelling them to pay all costs in the suits. See Times of July 24th, 1873. Bottles 1s 1½d, 2s 9d, 4s 6d, 11s, and 20s. Sold by all Chemists.
Testimonials.—Head Quarter Staff, Cabul, May 31st, 1880. Mr. R. Freeman Dear Sir,—It is with much pleasure I am able to state that your Chlorodyne has been of special service to me in alleviating the wearisome spasms of Asthma, which is here existent in an aggravated form Many of my patients now come and beg me to give them that medicine which always relieves them, and which I need hardly say is your Chlorodyne. Yours faithfully, Charles W. Owen, L.R.C.P. Lon., M.R.C.S. Eng., the Divisional Head Quarter Staff and Civil Surgeon, Cabul.
The Times, August 13th, 1877. From our own Correspondent with the Russian Army. Okoum, July 25th, 1877. The want of sanitary arrangements in the Russian Camp was dreadful, and had we remained there a few weeks longer, dysentery and typhoid fever would have played more havoc in our ranks than the bombs of the Turks. I myself acquired an unenviable reputation as a doctor, owing to my being provided with a small bottle of CHLORODYNE, with which I effected miraculous cures.

RANDOM NOTES AND REFLECTIONS.

MINUTES are the records of proceedings, and if they were nothing more all that would be necessary would be to see that they were correctly entered and order them to be signed. That they are regarded as of more importance than a mere register of facts is often forcibly manifested, and with some show of reason. The common belief is that by confirming minutes acts done at a previous meeting and duly entered are confirmed as well, which at once makes them law. The only remedy left is to rescind an objectionable act, which in some cases can only be done after a certain lapse of time, or under conditions very dissimilar to those under which the original motion was carried. The process is clumsy, and is often fraught with injustice. A resolution carried hastily, or under pressure—a snatched vote, in fact—becomes a fixed law, at least for a time, without a remedy being afforded, except such as we have indicated.

—:o:—

In the foregoing paragraph we have dwelt briefly with the general question of confirmation of minutes. We perceive that it has arisen with regard to the proceedings of Grand Lodge. An evening contemporary hardly puts the matter fairly, because something is withheld that would have weight. If we remember rightly, at the last Quarterly Communication it was stated by a brother, of good authority, that it was competent for any member of Grand Lodge to move that the minutes of a preceding meeting or meetings should be confirmed except such portion or portions as might be pointed out. That opinion seemed to prevail, for if the minutes were correctly entered there was no reason why delay in signing them should be granted. The motive for delay was evidently to obtain a wider judgment upon a certain act done, and by postponing the signing of the minutes the right to question any part or parts of them is clearly recognised. We believe it is the wiser course to pursue. We know there is the danger of provoking talk, of vexatious delays, and of irritating grumblings, but as the Grand Master has supreme power over the conduct of the Lodge, he would take good care that a high privilege should not be turned into an obstructive weapon.

Take the vexed question of the status of Past Masters, for instance. Is it not a fact that a very large number of brethren are interested in the matter who have not yet had an opportunity of expressing an opinion? Many men object to disturb an accomplished act, that is one that had not only been carried but had also been confirmed. They would, however, be glad of a chance to urge their views upon confirmation, and they see no reason why they should not have the opportunity afforded them. But is it quite certain that the minutes are regarded as being correct in the case now before us? Some one got up in Grand Lodge, we believe it was Bro. Le Feuvre, who took exception to the record. Possibly he did not wish to disturb the decision arrived at with regard to the Past Masters, but he decidedly had an objection of some kind on a point of accuracy. It is hardly fair, therefore, to assume that the minutes were even correct of themselves, and it would be simply deferring the consideration of a vexed question by forcing the confirmation of minutes which contain the record of an objectionable or doubtful act.

—:o:—

The whole matter has been very properly delayed. We are not unmindful of the high authority of Bro. McIntyre, the Grand Registrar, but better far that he be proved in the wrong, than that an injustice even in form should be done. Besides, the status question had reached an angry point, and time was required to cool down the fiery spirits on both sides. If confirmation had been forced, exasperation would have been intensified, and the prospects of a settlement of a very vexed question would have been prolonged in heartburning and strife.

What do our brethren think of this? A brother in a Minnesota Lodge is exercised in his mind as to whether it is right to tolerate a member who engages in the liquor traffic. Personally he is shocked at the idea, and writes to the editor of the Voice of Masonry for light on the matter. Our contemporary is cautious in his reply. He says there is not unanimity of opinion nor of legislation on the subject. He has not time to hunt up the rulings on the question, but he adds:—We, as a Mason, cannot engage in the liquor business, because neither our conscience nor our judgment of Masonic duty will permit it. We feel that we have no right to tempt our brethren to injure themselves, their relatives, their neighbours, and their country by becoming drunkards, and that if we did such work we would be guilty of un-Christian and un-Masonic conduct.

What about "labour and refreshment?" and of what is the latter to consist? If of intoxicating liquors, who is to supply them? We admit that there is a difference between the open sale of drink and supplying it to Lodges on special occasions, but it is only in degree and not in essence. To be consistent it should be made compulsory for every brother to become a teetotaller, or abolish all festive gatherings in which strong drink is used. We have some idea of what bar keepers are in America, and it may be that the business is essentially a low one. We have a better knowledge of the Licensed Victuallers in our own country, and we have no hesitation in saying that, as a body, they are not behind any other class of tradesmen in intelligence, probity, and charity. If the moral teaching of Freemasonry is not sufficient to regulate a brother's habits and conduct, we are quite sure that no penal law will be prohibitive of indulgence. On the contrary, it is calculated to provoke rebellion, as an improper interference with personal liberty. It is very singular that the people who boast so much of freedom should be the first to forge the fetters of tyranny. So it is, and ever has been; and we suppose ever will be. Virtue comes by self-control and not by force, and nowhere is that lesson more forcibly taught than in Freemasonry.

Only a few days ago a gentleman told us of an incident that occurred during the Crimean War, which is not only interesting, but noble and beautiful. In one of the many skirmishes that took place during that prolonged campaign a Russian officer and an English soldier came to a hand-to-hand conflict. It was death to one or both, unless some unforeseen power intervened. The English soldier, in a moment of inspiration, gave a Masonic sign, instantly the Russian officer dropped his weapon and grasped his antagonist by the hand. At the same instant another soldier, who had only observed the fierce attitude of the other two, stabbed the officer in the back with his bayonet. The wound, although severe, was not fatal, and the soldier Mason carried the Russian officer to the lines and tended him with all the care of a bosom friend. The officer recovered, but he never forgot his English brother, with whom he remained on terms of amity until the death of the English soldier, which occurred through dysentery some time afterwards.

Our esteemed and able contemporary the Keystone says, in a recent number, "Bro. the Bishop of Peterborough, who for some time past has been waging a fight with death, is well known abroad for his scintillating wit and sarcasm, no less than for his ecclesiastical accomplishments and position." We regret to say that the fight for life is not yet over, although there are signs of the flesh conquering for the present. The following is a capital story told of Dr. Magee:—

One day our brother, the Bishop, was in a railway carriage, immersed in a newspaper, when a temporal peer came along, using language of the most offensive character to a railway porter, who had mislaid some of his lordship's luggage. When he entered the carriage the peer saw the Bishop, and saw also that the Bishop must have overheard him. Profuse in his apologies, the temporal lord explained that he was righteously angry at a piece of culpable carelessness, and that in such cases he was in the habit of calling a spade a spade. "I am surprised and delighted to hear that," the Bishop grimly replied, "because from my experience I certainly was afraid you called it a shovel." The peer looked foolish and entered another carriage.

We have before remarked upon the characteristics of some of our cousins across the Atlantic. The following incident affords an apt illustration of the fact. A man noted as a good citizen, and as a Jacksonian democrat, sought admission into a Lodge. He was elected, and at the preliminary stage of initiation was asked a well known and very important question. His reply was dramatic. Raising his right hand, he answered, with great deliberation and force: "In the Great Jehovah and the Democratic party."

—:o:—

The following is not a bad companion story, taken from an American contemporary:—

Bro. Capt. L. M. Chastean, Grand Sword Bearer of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, and Captain of the Park Guard, tells this story of one of his subordinates and Attorney-General Brewster. Several years ago the Captain had in his service a guard named Smith, proverbial for his dry humour and mock dignity. One day Mr. Brewster came tearing up Belmont Avenue behind a pair of trotters. As he passed the guard, Smith frantically waved his club. In a moment Mr. Brewster reined in his horses and returned. "Well, my Lord, what is it?" raising his hat to the martinet guard. "The Duke is riding too fast," said Smith, with the utmost gravity.

Brother Knight, Lord Mayor of London, has been giving a specimen of his saltatory accomplishments in Scotland. He attended a ball in connection with the Skye gathering at Portree recently, and so expert was he in reel and strathspey that the natives were forced to admit that in the City magnate they had met their match. The "sons of the mountain" and the musicians entered into a conspiracy and thought to tire out our worthy brother, but they calculated without their host, and had to confess that his Lordship combined pluck with his agility and skill, and made a draw of the contest. The Lord Mayor kept the floor with the best of them, and when the signal for cessation was given he quietly remarked, "They little know the stuff Lord Mayor's are made of."

—:o:—

That was a capital little bit in Punch last week. "Miss Lavinia" was reading a paragraph in the Times, "The Lord Mayor's Court," when "Mrs. Ramsbotham," startled at the news, exclaimed: "Caught, my dear! I had no idea that he had run away! What on earth's he been doing?" The good old soul had not heard of his worship's doings at Portree, or perhaps we might have had an interesting and characteristic homily on dancing, especially on the Scotch methods of the art.

CALL TO LABOUR.

WHAT is that mystic sound now ringing through the Lodge rooms? For weeks past silence has prevailed. The brethren have not statedly met. No Master has commanded within, or Tyler without. But now all is changed. A throng of brethren have passed the outer door, and within is heard the mystic sound of the Gavel. It speaks with no uncertain voice. It calls on to Labour. The summer is ended, the prolonged season of refreshment is over, and from seaside, lake and mountain, from office, store and manufactory, the members of the Masonic fraternity are wending their way to their "old home," the Lodge-room. How cheerful is the welcome that even the "furniture" gives them! The Holy Bible is open, with its precious promises of a benediction to "good and faithful" brethren: the Square must be open, to teach fresh lessons of virtue; and the Compasses are likewise open, to warn against the evils incident to the sway of unbridled passions. In a word, the LODGE IS OPEN; and this phrase speaks a volume. We are "called on to Labour."

Well may Freemasons honour the Craftsmen "who first invented work." How much does it imply! A meeting upon the Square—the making of Masons—the dispensation of Charity—the enjoyment of Refreshment after Labour. But what is the introduction to the autumn and winter's work? Fraternal greetings the most hearty. We meet together after perhaps months of separation. A fresh zest is given to our labour. It has the spice of novelty. We see again in their exalted stations those whom we chose to rule over us. We are glad to greet them, and we long to see them exercising their several prerogatives in their respective positions. The Masonic triad of W.M., S.W., and J.W.,—all of them are masters in turn, and worshipful. We are proud to look to the East, for it is thence that we derive our Light.

Carlyle once said: "The true epic of our times is, not arms and the man, but tools and the man," or rather, to paraphrase it Masonically, working tools and the Mason. These teach lessons to the initiate that epitomise the instruction of the great and good of all ages, inspired and uninspired. Again, we are to strive, in friendly and noble emulation, who best can work and best agree. Theodore Parker said: "Work is the only universal currency which God accepts." Although this was not spoken of Masonic work, we may well include it. Surely the teaching of the Divine lessons of Faith, Hope and Charity, of Brotherly Love, Relief and Truth, are acceptable to the Grand Architect of the Universe. Certainly when these precepts are exemplified in practice—when the cement of Brotherly Love is so spread as to unite, as one man, all the Freemasons on all the face of the whole earth; and when the brother in distress, or his widow or little ones, are tenderly cared for by the extension of open-handed charity, the All seeing Eye of Him who inheriteth eternity, beholds and blesses both the giver and the receiver!

Neither have the Craft in the jurisdiction of Pennsylvania been idle during the months in which they have ceased to statedly meet together. In the quiet retirement of their homes, and in their intervals of vacation they have not forgotten the homeless but have been devising a plan for erecting and sustaining a Masonic Home for aged and indigent worthy Master Masons, which, when happily matured and consummated, shall gladden many a bleeding heart, banish tears from many a weeping eye, and show to the world that our actions match our principles, and we practise what we teach.

We trust, this autumn, to see the work go bravely on. An idle Lodge is an anomaly in Masonry. When its labours cease, its best energies are dormant. Not only are its powers unemployed, they are actually impaired. The Mason's mind is like a pool of water, which, if it be ruffled by the wind, stirred by the rain, shone upon by the sun, becomes a beautiful mirror, reflecting each leaf, blade of grass and cloud that overshadow it; but if it be left to itself, at rest, it becomes a stagnant pool, its beauty changed to hideousness, and instead of attracting the eye, repelling all that approach it. Those Officers are to be sympathised with, or rather, perhaps, to be inspired with new life, whose Lodges meet only to close; who call on only to call off.

Now that the Gavel has called all Freemasons on to Labour, let us, one and all, work with a will. Let us signify, by our regular and punctual attendance, that we have a personal interest in the welfare of the Lodge. Let the Officers carefully acquire and impressively render the true work. Let the petitions of the distressed meet with prompt attention. Thus let one and all work with heart and mind in the beneficent cause of Freemasonry. We believe that the epoch predicted by Isaiah will arrive, when all people "shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more;" and we believe, too, that Freemasonry will aid in this glorious consummation. Its gospel teaches peace, goodwill towards men, and it is styled truly the handmaid of religion. Its gospel says—

"Fill brightest hours with labour,
Give every flying minute
Something to keep in store;
Work, for the time is coming
When man shall work no more."

—Keystone.

GRAND MASTER OF MASONS.

THE office of Grand Master of Masons is one of great dignity and importance. There is no office in civil government more honourable, and but few that involve greater responsibilities. A Grand Master is a monarch or sovereign ruler with almost unlimited powers. Excepting while his Grand Lodge is in session, his word is law to the Craft throughout its jurisdiction, subject only to an appeal to the Grand Lodge; but such an appeal does not invalidate his rulings until they have been heard and decided by the Grand Lodge. It is a proud position for any Mason to occupy who can fill it with credit to himself and honour to the Fraternity. Unlike all civil offices there are no emoluments connected with it to excite the ambition of the avaricious, nor anything of a sordid nature to sway the judgment in the administration of affairs. There are no honours to be derived from it for personal aggrandisement, nor popularity to be gained, except by a faithful discharge of its duties in an intelligent manner.

It must be evident to every Mason, and especially to those who have held official positions in a Lodge, that the duties of a Grand Master are such as can only be successfully performed by one well versed in Masonry. They require a thorough knowledge of the ancient regulations, landmarks, ritualism and usages of Masonry; of the constitution of the Grand Lodge he represents, and of all rules and regulations adopted by it for the government of the Craft. In addition to these qualifications a Grand Master should possess executive ability of the highest order, and such moral and social qualifications as will command the respect and approval of the world at large. When installed, he becomes at once the head of the Order; the Mason of all others to whom the world will look for an exemplification of those traits of character which illustrate the principles and teachings of Freemasonry. To the Craft he becomes the source of light to which they turn on all occasions. His interpretation of the law is accepted in all cases of doubt, and his counsel and advice is sought as the proper remedy in all matters of controversy among the brethren. If worthy and well qualified for such duties and such responsibilities, peace, harmony and prosperity will reign throughout his jurisdiction; while, on the other hand, should he be found wanting, strife, confusion and misfortune may prevail. Upon the first of these conditions hangs all the honours as he surrenders the emblem of authority to his successor and takes up the permanent title of "Past Grand Master."—Masonic Advocate.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—In general debility, nervous excitation, and mental depression, these unrivalled Pills have a marvellous effect. They have won the confidence of millions in all parts of the civilised world. Constitutions shaken by sensual excesses, by long residence in unwholesome climates, by sedentary habits, overwork, worry, or anxiety, are wonderfully renovated by a course of this extraordinary medicine, which, powerful as is its action on the whole system, is perfectly harmless to the tenderest frame. The Pills are composed of rare and carefully selected balsams, without the admixture of any mineral whatever, or other deleterious substance. They operate directly, powerfully, and beneficially upon the whole mass of blood. The most sceptical cannot question the fact when we see indigestion cured, liver complaints arrested, the oppressed lungs brought into healthful play, and every physical function renewed and strengthened by their agency.

A GORGEOUS CEREMONIAL.

EARLY in July the A. and A. Rite celebrated their reunion in the Valley of Toledo, and, judging from the account we give below, taken from the Masonic Review, published at Cincinnati, it "was an impressive and brilliant exemplification of the solemn mysteries of the Rite from the 4° to the 18° inclusive." Our contemporary says the brethren in Toledo are celebrated for their "exceptionally rich interpretations of the rituals, and for their intelligent and conscientious exaltations of the symbols." We should say so, according to the following "descriptive passage from the pen of Rev. Bro. Edward Anderson 32°, of Toledo, who was an eye-witness and a helper in the Toledo work:"—

The A. and A. Rite consists of grades in Masonry from the 4° to the 32° inclusive—only from the 4° to and including the Rose Croix or 18° being conferred in the Valley of Toledo, while in the Orient of Ohio those beyond are received in Cincinnati. This is a system of Christian Masonry which culminates in the most vivid pictures of the death, resurrection and ascension of Jesus Christ, with an intensely impressive portrayal of the virtues which are intended to be resultant in each human life therefrom. To this effect every detail of the grades most tenderly leads, and for richness of accessory, solemnity in speech and act, thrilling and heart-searching thought, deep soul music adapted to the application and inspiration of the thought, depictions that rouse, under the passionate touch of the music (a high-mass for the soul), the tearful response of any one who has a heart which has accepted the beautiful lessons of the Templar, there is no service in the Church of Rome to equal it, and only in the scenes of nature, where one catches some of the finer vibrations that reveal the music of a sunbeam, scored on the staff of the rainbow, or in the tender pathos of a loving, penitent thought, can one find anything so affecting and so effective for a reaching after the divine strength that comes to a holy soul. Tears often testify to the effect of scenes of trial as of a discipline duly borne, and whether it is Zorababel before the Ark of the Captivity, or the "Eloi" of Jesus, there is the passion of heart and not only of body, and the struggle of a soul which is felt to be eternal.

So each neophyte saw it, and each breathless looker-on "who had gone this way before," felt the impress, when under the deep effect of a quivering light on the lesson of the Rose Croix, helped by the symbolic altar cloth and the hidden voice, the sense came of meaning for the inner soul, like those other voices of God which we only catch now and then and as our finer natures assume the ascendancy, when we realize that

"There's not the smallest orb which thou beholdest,
But in his motion like a cherub sings,
Still quiring to the young-eyed cherubims;
Such harmony is in immortal sounds!
But, whilst this muddy vesture of decay
Doth grossly close us in, we cannot hear it."

Some sense of this rare music of the "light which is the life of the world" was had as under the gloom of a dead earth of sin, and a dead Christ in the midst of it; while all were bowed beneath a consciousness of the penalty to wrong, and when only a horrid luminousness glared from the emblems of mortality on the cross, gently there stole on the sense a new hope, as from far away came the sweet words, "I know that my Redeemer liveth," and as the grim token of death was changed to the Rose of Sharon, under a light that we saw through our tears, and which revealed roses everywhere, what is the wonder that all flashed with joy, and every one bounded to his feet when a full chorus, with sackbut and cornet and harp, swelled the chorus of "The Marv'lous Work," and of the Benedictus, or that under the reaction all found relief in the rich harmony of Mozart's 12th mass.

Who can tell the effect to be borne through the homely lives of everyday men, as a yearning, tired and longing soul lies weeping at the sacred emblem of all that is to him his religion and his heart, when a glad hopeful voice swells the song, "Lift up thy Soul!"

Of the music, what can be said? There was in it skill and heart, and this added to all matters of adaptation to which we have alluded. Suffused eyes testified to it—and especially during the evening of Rose Croix—more than could words.

Hand to hand with the music were the flowers, which are the notes of the music of nature painted on the staff of light. The Floral Committee had shown even more of taste than of labour, and the "rose-cross" was a rose picture. Two pillars of roses flanked the cross of roses, and the background was a vast bed of roses that covered the rear of the stage, and all sent out a perfume that filled the air. The "transformation scene," with the picture of rare art in the new altar-cloth, embroidered in white satin, was a surprise and a delight which was shown in that hush of silence that tells of the breath held under charmed amazement, and which found vent in a sigh of relief as the quartette with full orchestra and piano sang the "Salva Regina."

The Great Northern Lodge of Instruction, No. 1287, will resume its weekly meetings at the "Berwick Arms," Berners-street, W., on Thursday, the 20th instant, at eight o'clock. The brethren meet under the Preceptorship of Bro. W. Cleghorn P.M. 1287.

HOLIDAY HAUNTS.

—:o:—

LONDON, BRIGHTON, AND SOUTH COAST RAILWAY.

LONDON Bridge is the great central station of the London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway. From that centre lines radiate to New Cross on the one hand, and to Kensington on the other. What may be called the home branches spread out and interlace each other in the most intricate manner. The ground covered embraces most of the places selected for suburban residences, and the facilities afforded to the public for travelling at once attest the growth of population and the development of railway enterprise. The main line goes through New Cross, and on the right lines branch off to Tulse Hill, Streatham, Wimbledon, winding round to Mitcham Junction, from whence a branch goes to Carshalton and Sutton, where it diverges, one spur going to Cheam, Ewell, Epsom Town, Leatherhead, Dorking, and Horsham, the other ending on Epsom Downs. The line continues from Mitcham Junction to Croydon, and here we propose to make our starting point. The country is very beautiful all round Tooting, Mitcham, Carshalton, Sutton, Cheam, Banstead Downs and Epsom, and would well repay the trouble of a walking tour, or a bicycle or tricycle jaunt.

Croydon, as a town, is not picturesque of itself. It is a large railway centre, and is growing in size yearly. It is only recently that it became incorporated, and now it has a Mayor and a Town Council. The suburbs of Croydon are pretty, and it possesses many associations that will attract the student of history, and one memorial at least of which the Craft has reason to be proud, for here is situated the Asylum for Decayed Freemasons and their Widows. The manor of Croydon was given to the church, and an archiepiscopal palace was founded there, around which cling many historical incidents. The foundation of the church dates from the Saxon era, but the present structure was begun at the end of the fourteenth, and completed by Archbishop Chichesley early in the fifteenth century. It contains several monuments erected to various Archbishops of Canterbury, some effigies and tombs. Among those buried in the church is Dr. Richard Phillips, the vicar, who was a Roman Catholic. On one occasion, when preaching at St. Paul's, he exclaimed: "We must root out printing, or printing will root out us!" Neither result has happened, and we are not sure that Roman Catholics would wipe out printing if they could. Dr. Clewer, who was collated by Charles II., was of a less reputable character. He was a thief, had been convicted of stealing a silver cup, and burnt in the hand at the Old Bailey. There is an amusing story told of Dr. Clewer. He was waylaid on the Acton road, but he had not a farthing of money about him. This serious failure of the footpad's purpose did not at all prevent the two men sitting down together to gamble with cards, the result being that the Doctor had to go home without his canonicals. Happily such looseness of practice and morals would not now be tolerated. The country round Box Hill, Dorking, Red Hill and Wotton is exceedingly beautiful. The latter village was the home of John Evelyn, whose diary is a rich and valuable storehouse. The writer lived long and saw many changes. He began his career in the time of Charles I. and ended it in the reign of Queen Anne. He was thus a living witness of the fall of Charles I., the Revolution, the restoration of the "Merry Monarch," the reign of James II., of the abdication of the latter, and the reign of William III., and died four years after Anne began to reign. He has given some interesting accounts of two of the most disastrous events that ever befell London—the Great Plague in 1664 and the Great Fire in 1666. He took a most prominent part in the foundation of that noble pile of buildings known as Greenwich Hospital, probably the finest in the world; he was the patron and friend of Grinling Gibbons, the eminent carver, and his works on trees are still consulted as high authorities on forestry. There are some valuable memorials of this great and good man at Wotton, now in the occupation of Mr. John Evelyn, who is styled the "Squire," not only because of his social position, but because of his liberality and kindness of heart. Guildford, as we have observed, is on a spur line from Horsham. There are the remains of an ancient castle at Guildford, but they are hardly worth a journey to see, although the building and the speculations that discoveries have given rise to invest it with much interest.

Branching downwards from Horsham, one line goes to Pulborough and the other to Shoreham. A glance at the Company's map will show that a long line from Hastings to Portsmouth almost hugs the coast of the English Channel the whole of the way, and on that line and branching out of it lie the most interesting spots with which we shall have to deal. Before, however, treating of them, we shall briefly notice some of the most prominent features that present themselves along the various routes before reaching the coast line. At Pulborough the line spreads out to Midhurst, of which we have already spoken in a previous paper. Near here are the remains of Cowdray House, once a mansion of great size and strength. It was originally founded by the Bohuns, and afterwards came into the hands of Lord John Montague, as a gift from Henry VII. Sir Anthony Brown married the heiress, and some notable events occurred at Cowdray House during his time and that of his successors. Edward VI. visited Sir Anthony in 1547, and in a letter he speaks of Cowdray as a "goodly house, where he was marvellously, yea, rather excessively banketted." Queen Elizabeth was the guest of Lord Montague, son of Sir Anthony Brown, who was half-brother of the member of the family bearing that name. Queen Bess was fond of flattery, and her host ministered to her bent by addressing her as "The Miracle of Time," "Nature's Glory," "Fortune's Empress," "The World's Wonder," and then the chronicle goes on to add that she was "most royallie feasted; the proportion of breakfast was three oxen, and one hundred and fortie geese." The mansion was destroyed by fire in 1793, which was not the only calamity that befell the family at that time, for, according to the work on "Abbeys," &c., to which we have before referred,—"A few weeks after this stately pile was destroyed the noble owner, the young Viscount Montague, during the life of his mother, and before the intelligence of the fire could reach him, was drowned, together with his fellow-traveller Mr. Sedley Burdett, brother of Sir Francis Burdett, in rashly attempting to navigate the Falls of the Rhine, at Schaffhausen, in October 1793." The history of the family is romantic and very patriotic. From Midhurst the line runs down to the coast, as does the other branch from Pulborough, but on this latter line Arundel is situated. The castle is of ancient foundation, and was given to Roger de Montmorency by William the Conqueror, who created him Earl of Arundel. There is a legend, of course, in connection with the Castle. It is stated that the Queen Dowager of France fell in love with William de Albini, Earl of Arundel and Sussex, and wanted to marry him. He refused, and the slighted lady sought revenge. She caused him to be seized, and cast into a cave containing a lion. The Earl proved himself to be a second Samson, he put his arm into the brute's mouth, and tore out its tongue. Some spiteful chronicler adds that the Earl actually reached the tail of the lion, and "turned him the wrong side outwards." A brave deed is recorded of a woman in connection with this Castle. In 1139 the Empress Maud became the guest of Adeliza, relict of Henry I. King Stephen, anxious to seize Maud, appeared before the Castle with a large army. Nothing daunted, the Queen Dowager sent the following spirited message to the King: "She had received the Empress as her friend, not as his enemy; she had no intention of interfering in their quarrels, and therefore begged the King to allow her Royal guest to quit Arundel, and try her fortune in some other part of England. But," added she, "if you are determined to besiege her here, I will endure the last extremity of war rather than give her up, or suffer the laws of hospitality to be violated." This noble message had its effect, and Maud retired to Bristol. We shall not dwell upon this old Castle; it will be enough to say that it was allowed to go to ruin, but Charles Howard, the eleventh Duke of Norfolk, restored it in 1815, at a cost of over half a million. This fact alone tells the story of its vastness and importance. It is the seat of the present Duke of Norfolk. Bramber is not far from Shoreham. It possesses a ruined Castle with a chequered history; this alone affords any attraction to the tourist. The main line to Brighton runs past Red Hill to the Three Bridges. From here a branch goes east to Tunbridge Wells, and from it spurs reach down to the coast line in several directions. The ground covered by these lines embraces some pretty bits of Sussex scenery, but we shall not dwell upon that point.

Instead of commencing the coast line track at Hastings, which, together with St. Leonards, will be dealt with in the next paper, we purpose starting at Eastbourne, situated at the terminus of a spur line, which stretches out from Pevensey and Polegate. Eastbourne is a striking example of what money and enterprise can do. The Duke of Devonshire, who holds large property here, and who has been very liberal in help, and the London and Brighton Railway Company, have made the place what it is—one of the most charming of seaside resorts. Nature has not been particularly bountiful to Eastbourne, but art has developed her resources, and the two combined have effected a wonderfully beautiful transformation. The land is somewhat flat, and the climate would be relaxing were it not for the sea breezes, which have little obstruction, and which render the air healthy and bracing. The town is well drained, and is made picturesque by the planting of trees and shrubs. Devonshire Park and buildings afford the means of recreation all the year round, the Wish Tower is one of the landmarks of the place, but the great object of attraction is Beachy Head, which reaches a height of between five and six hundred feet. A splendid view is obtained from its summit, and when the sea is rough, the visitor can watch the tempest in all its grandeur in perfect security. We are not much concerned with the past of Eastbourne. There is a small house known as Oak Cottage, near which was an oak tree in which, it is stated, Charles II. concealed himself whilst waiting a chance to escape to France. If not of much historical account itself, it has near neighbours that yield a full measure of interest. There is no doubt that William the Norman landed his army of 60,000 men, which he brought over in 900 ships, at Pevensey Bay, and that a castle was erected at Pevensey, the ruins of which form a continual source of pleasure to visitors. Professor Airey says that Cæsar also landed at Pevensey Bay in two successive invasions of this country. If that be so, what mighty interest centres round the spot. The two most important events in the history of the country began at Pevensey—events that led to the foundation of a nation that has no parallel in history. Pevensey is first mentioned in 792, but the walls of the castrum, still standing and defying time, attest the ancient character of the work, which is stated to be the finest Roman building in the country. Pevensey Castle, therefore, is a national shrine, the spot where was begun the great changes which have resulted in the foundation of a glorious empire. A few miles further inland are the ruins of Hurstmonceaux Castle. It was a brick building, and the remains show that it was a place of great strength. There are many associations connected with the Castle which should be read up before visiting the ruins. Pursuing the journey westwards, the old town of Lewes is reached. The Castle is the great point of attraction, and is worth a visit. Formerly a rich Priory existed, and at one time there were thirteen churches in the town, now reduced to about half that number. Nothing remains of the Priory except a slab forming the marble tombstone of Gundreda, daughter of William the Conqueror and wife of William of Warren, who founded the Priory. The slab is richly sculptured in bas relief; some leaden coffins were found in the neighbourhood during railway excavations, which are believed to contain the remains of others concerned in the foundation of the Priory. The whole have been deposited in a small Norman building, called "Gundreda's Chapel," built for the purpose, close to the parish church of Southover. From Lewes there is a line running down to Seaford and Newhaven. From the latter place there is a capital service of boats to Dieppe, Havre and Honfleur. Tours are arranged for France and various parts of the Continent on a most liberal scale, particulars of which are given in the Company's time tables. From Lewes the line goes to Brighton—London by the sea. This latter title indicates its character completely, with one important difference. London is cosmopolitan, and so is Brighton, but it is chiefly the "Upper Ten" who flock to the seaside town, while the poor and rich of every clime congregate in the great metropolis. Brighton is essentially aristocratic, and all that money can purchase is to be had there. It is subject to popular incursions, but the backbone of the place are the rich visitors and the residents who, owing to the railway facilities afforded, are enabled to go to and from London, transact their business, and enjoy all the advantages of good society and the pure ozone of the sea. Brighton is a marvel of progress; it is ever growing, and what it will become is almost beyond conception. Past Shoreham and Lancing, where quiet people sojourn, is Worthing. This place has some of the airs and graces of its near neighbour, Brighton, but it is quieter and cheaper. It is the children's paradise, and the beach is much frequented by them. The town lies low; behind are hills, which keep off the north and east winds. Worthing is noted for the growth of figs, which ripen properly and find a market in Brighton. There are some pretty drives and walks in the locality, some old churches worth seeing, and excellent bathing. At Ford Junction a spur line projects out to Littlehampton, and further on another one to Bognor. The first-mentioned place unites the advantages of good bathing, almost extreme quietude, and agreeable walks in the country, which is beautifully wooded. The river Arun, close by, we are told, yields good sport for the angler. Bognor is a little more lively, it is however frequented because of the quiet and innocent relaxation it affords. Between Barnham Junction and Chichester is the far-famed Goodwood, the seat of the Duke of Richmond, and the scene of the most pleasant race-meeting of the year. It is held in Goodwood Park, and being private property regulations can be enforced that would not be possible on an open racecourse. The public are only tolerated, but it is a generous toleration that is exercised, and those who go to what is termed "glorious Goodwood" are only subject to such conditions as would come naturally to all well-bred persons. Cairney's Seat, an elevated spot, commands a fine view of the surrounding country. A mile away is Rook's Hill, one of the principal summits of the South Downs; this is more than 700 feet above the level of the sea. In the house are some fine paintings by Vandyck and Gainsborough, Kneller, Reynolds, and Lily. Here also are to be seen the silver breakfast plate used by Napoleon on the morning of Waterloo, and the shirt of Charles I. This collection is incongruous, but it is nevertheless interesting. The park is always open, and the house can be viewed when the family are away. We have coupled Gainsborough's name with Vandyck's, because the great Suffolk painter almost idolised the wonderful Dutch artist. The last words that Gainsborough uttered were: "We are all going to heaven, and Vandyck is of the party."

Beyond Drayton, the station for Goodwood, is Chichester, an ancient city, clean and pleasant. The cathedral is the great attraction, but its position mars its proportions and observes its effects when approached. It shows best at a distance, with its fine spire rising about 300 feet high. The original edifice was founded during the eleventh century. It suffered twice from fire, and the restorations during the course of centuries were not wisely effected. Cromwell's Ironsides did enormous damage to the interior of the structure. They were particularly iconoclastic at Chichester, and have left the signs of their destructiveness to the present day. Still it is a grand old monument, and ought to be seen. It is nearly as broad as York Cathedral, and has two aisles on each side of the nave, a unique arrangement. The Consistory Court was founded for the trial of the Lollards, and dates from the time of Henry VI. The judge's chair is still to be seen, and a sliding panel conceals a dark room, which appears to have been used as a prison. The edifice contains some fine mural tablets by Flaxman. One represents Miss Agnes Cromwell, and is regarded as one of the finest productions of this famous sculptor. There is also one in memory of Collins, who was a native of the town. The poet is shown sitting pensively, bending over the pages of the Bible, while his lyre and his manuscripts lie neglected by his side. Collins suffered the pangs of poverty while in London, but a legacy of £2,000 succoured his later days, which were darkened by a mental malady that left him only intermittent periods for enjoyment. The choir is rich, and there are portraits of the English sovereigns from the Conquest to George I., and of the bishops down to the Reformation. Formerly a wall surrounded the city, and gates guarded the entrances thereto. The latter have been removed, but a portion of the former remain, and have been converted into a terrace walk for the palace and deanery. From Chichester the line goes on to Havant for Hayling Island, a place resorted to by those who want sea air, quiet and rest. The line continues on to Portsmouth, and from hence the Isle of Wight is reached. Here for the present we bring our peregrinations to a close.

The London brethren are about to lose an influential member of their body by his removal to a different locality. Brother Charles Atkins, the Junior Vice-President of the Lodge of Benevolence, having been advised that another winter in London might have serious results, has determined to change his locality to Torbay, where the air is more genial, and where he has taken the Queen's Hotel. The brethren of the Egyptian Lodge, No. 27, and of the John Hervey Lodge, No. 1260, will miss in Bro. Atkins a Past Master who has served those Lodges faithfully and well.

FINANCE AND THE NEW TEMPLE.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Now that the question of a new Temple is before the Craft, it would be well to consider the financial position of Grand Lodge. It is desirable that the restoration and improvements of Freemasons' Hall should be as complete as possible, even though the work has to be delayed for some time. There is no occasion to hurry to conclusions, and I trust there is no necessity for warning against favouritism or jobbery. But lest I should be accused of starting a hare and declining to hunt, to use a metaphor of Bro. Havers', I may say at once that I have too much confidence in the honour and integrity of the leading spirits of Grand Lodge to feel any doubt as to whatever action may be decided upon and carried out. What I fear is, that undue haste and financial trepidation may lead to results more costly and less satisfactory than they ought to be. I will just go back two or three years. When Bro. Raynham Stewart proposed to increase the grant to the Benevolent Institution, £800 a-year, there was much tribulation. Fears were entertained that the income of Grand Lodge would not bear the increased strain proposed to be placed upon it, and indeed there was great danger of the proposal falling through. It was then, Sir, that you came to the rescue, and I have now before me a reprint from your excellent journal of 4th March 1882, entitled "Receipts and Payments of the Fund of General Purposes from October 1879 to September 1881." That table settled the financial question, placed information before the brethren they hitherto were not in possession of, and quieted the fears of the alarmists. Bro. Stewart started a noble idea, but you made its accomplishment possible by placing the financial position of Grand Lodge before the brethren in a clear and unmistakable manner. A few figures taken from this table may not be without their value just now. The balance in hand in October 1879 was over £2,000—two years later it was more than doubled. In those two years Stock was disposed of to the value of £6,730, but during the same period no less a sum than £13,060 was invested. The improvement was very marked, and there is no doubt but that it has continued. For instance, I believe I am right in stating that at the time Brother Stewart made his proposal the actual amount invested by Grand Lodge in Government Stock was £11,150; at the present time, according to the report of the Special Building Committee, it is £22,000. This not only shows a wonderful vitality, but it also vindicates the action of Grand Lodge in making the increased grant to the Benevolent Institution. It is also suggestive as to the future, and should give confidence to those who have to deal with the question of a new Temple and the changes and improvements that have been rendered necessary by the late fire.

I am neither an optimist nor a pessimist; I would not stand still, nor would I rush wildly on. I would rather be hopeful than doubtful, and with such an example of the recuperative power of Grand Lodge as I have laid before my readers I think there need be no fear as to its being able to find ways and means to carry out any scheme that may be determined upon. It is essential, however, to have due regard to facts, and with your permission I propose to deal with the main features of the report prepared by the Special Building Committee. The first thing that strikes me is the sum of £6 000 proposed to be given to Mr. Bacon for the tail end of his lease—five years and four months—including the furniture and fixtures and "goodwill." It would be interesting to know what the goodwill represents in money, and what Messrs. Spiers and Pond are prepared to pay for it. I presume due allowance has been made for the difference between the value of the fittings to be purchased and those that will be required for the new hotel. I take it for granted, too, that the question of dilapidation formed a matter of consideration when the sum of £6,000 was fixed. It is a pertinent question to ask—How much would Mr. Bacon have to surrender at the end of his lease, and what are his responsibilities with regard to the building? I have no doubt all these points have been considered, but they have not been put before Grand Lodge, and it is necessary that they should be taken into account before the time for decision arrives. Not only is it proposed to pay £6,000 to Mr. Bacon, but the rent he now pays, £360, will be lost.

Now let us look at the case of Messrs. Spiers and Pond. At present they pay £1,200 a-year, and hold an unexpired lease of twenty-two years. It is proposed to increase the rent to £2,000 a-year, and grant a lease of fifty years from the time of the completion of the alterations. For this increase of rent it is proposed to rebuild Bacon's Hotel at a cost of £15,000. Of course a new banqueting hall will be included, although nothing is said about it in the report we are dealing with. The kitchen is to be removed to the top of the building, at a cost of £5,000. Then there would be fittings, decorations and contingencies, which are put down at £4,000. The total outlay for this portion of the scheme would be £30,000. This is only an approximate estimate; in all probability the cost will far exceed the estimate, it almost invariably does; and if that should be the case, then the return to Grand Lodge would be little, if any, more than 2 per cent. upon the outlay. That is too small, and on the face of it a bad speculation,—that is if it stands alone. According to the evidence of the Special Building Committee themselves they propose to borrow £18,000 at 3 per cent. Now take their figures, £30,000 for the hotel part of their scheme, and it will be seen that the interest upon that sum would be £900; but they only get £800 back, a clear loss of £100 a-year.

Digitized by Google

There are other features of the scheme which may justify this arrangement. Messrs. Spiers and Pond give up their present banquetting room and kitchen, but these are more than made good by removing the kithen to the top of the building, and by granting them the whole of the space under the new temple. The gain to Grand Lodge would be the present kitchen, to be used as a supper-room, and the banquetting hall. To unite the latter with the destroyed buildings so as to form a grand Temple, would cost £16,400, less insurance £6,400, leaving £10,000 to be provided. Does this sum include the restoration of the damaged statue, provide for replacing the burned pictures as far as possible, and for a new organ? What allowance has been made for loss during the work of alterations and rebuilding? I presume that Mr. Bacon's rent would cease directly the contemplated arrangement was signed; we know that Messrs. Spiers and Ponds' increased rent would not begin until all the alterations had been completed. Between the two periods a considerable time would elapse, and unless this and other contingencies have been provided for I fear the present scheme would greatly exceed the estimates put forth.

Of course Messrs. Spiers and Pond would pay any increase of rates that might occur. It is hardly likely that the parish authorities will allow such an opportunity for increasing the assessment to pass. They will naturally say an outlay of £50,000 means an increased value, and we must share in the advantage. Did the Committee take this matter into their consideration?

All these are points, Sir, which require the most thoughtful study. If I have raised some matters that have escaped notice, if I have called attention to the subject in such a way as to attract attention, my labour will not have been in vain. Like the Craft in general, I desire that the work that has become necessary should be done well and at a fair rate. I do not believe in the cheap and nasty theory; I have no sympathy with "screws," and cannot tolerate meanness. At the same time I cannot escape from the condition of prudence which the teaching of the Craft enjoins, and which is necessary in all the affairs of life. I hope the whole question will be thrashed out between this and December, and that when the work to be done has been determined upon, it will be carried out with skill and punctuality.

Yours fraternally,

WATCHMAN.

RE-BUILDING THE TEMPLE.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Publicity having been given to my intention to submit a motion for consideration at the ensuing Quarterly Communication of Grand Lodge, in relation to the rebuilding of the Temple, I think it advisable to afford further information at once, thereby placing beyond doubt before your readers what my ideas on the subject are, and probably saving valuable time, as well in the interval between this date and the 5th December next, as on the occasion of the Grand Lodge meeting of that date.

Roughly expressed, and subject to other wording, my proposition will be, that under the direction and authority of the Grand Superintendent of Works (who shall not thereby be precluded from submitting his own designs), those architects, being members of our Order, who may be desirous to compete, shall be invited to send plans and designs for the new building to the already constituted building committee. That prizes of the respective values of, say, thirty (or fifty) guineas, twenty (or thirty) guineas, and ten (or twenty) guineas, be offered for the three most approved designs. That the said designs shall be sent in under mottoes, the names of the respective architects remaining undisclosed until after selection, and the approximate cost of each design shall be stated. That they shall be exhibited for one month, and the selection of the prize designs be made, by ballot, by Master Masons (the details of the method of such ballot are of the most simple and effectual kind, and need not be explained in this letter). That the Building Committee be requested to report, at such date as may be determined, the result of such ballot, with the names of the successful competitors, and their own opinion as to the advisability or otherwise of accepting one or other of the prize designs.

In the event of this proposition, or some modification thereof, which will ensure the reception of competitive designs being accepted, it will almost, as a matter of course, follow that the designer of the plans which will be ultimately approved of by Grand Lodge will be the architect of the new building, under the direction and superintendence of our own Chief Officer of Works, should he not be himself the successful competitor. Tenders from some of the most eminent contractors should be invited in the manner customary when edifices of importance are to be erected; and so, in the result, we may hope to have a building worthy of our great English Craft as a body, and of the important work which will be carried on within its walls.

It would not become me to enter now into arguments on behalf of my proposition; at the proper time I shall be able to adduce excellent reasons for its adoption. Meanwhile, others should be free to form their opinions, and to be prepared with counter arguments if they see fit.

By the way, a question put by the Worshipful Bro. Henry Maudslay P.G.D., &c., seems to be worthy of consideration before it is finally settled upon what part of the property of Grand Lodge the New Temple shall be erected. If there are premises westward of the present ruined Temple, which can be adapted for the new building, it may be found advantageous both in respect of economy and increased convenience to utilise them. Particulars of a survey lead me strongly to believe that the loss which would result from the absorption of Bacon's Hotel, as proposed by the Building Committee, need not be incurred; and that altogether far better arrangements could be made towards the west than towards the east of the present Grand Lodge Offices and Lodge Rooms. These particulars are at the service of any brother who would care to be acquainted with them, and would see me on the subject. In conclusion, it is to be hoped that the members of Grand Lodge generally will see the propriety and policy of not too greatly hastening a decision on such an important matter as this, for it is not only in the present interests of our Order, in regard to our "home," that we should be concerned, but the probable requirements of future generations of Freemasons demand from us a dutiful and careful consideration.

Yours truly and fraternally,

JAMES STEVENS P.M. 1216, P.Z.

Clapham, S.W., 10th September 1888.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I regret that I was unable to be present at the last meeting of Grand Lodge, as I was particularly anxious to hear what was said in support of the proposal, submitted by the Special Building Committee, for the re-building of our Masonic Temple. The little experience I have had in building matters has taught me to look upon any estimate submitted by a builder as very little short of a delusion and a snare. I know the building trade has a bad name for not working to estimate, and my dealings with representatives of it has certainly induced me to think that the bad name is more than deserved. What, I ask, is the margin we are to allow on the expenditure of the £40,400 which the Committee recommend? Upwards of forty thousand pounds to be spent in building operations—and this is the proposal:—£15,000 for re-building Bacon's Hotel, £5,000 for removal of Tavern kitchen, £4,000 for fittings, &c., and £16,400 for re-building enlarged Temple! What a chance for "extras," and with a body like the Freemasons of England to find the money! Really, the question of our new Temple, and other buildings, is a most serious one, and it is to be hoped that before operations are commenced every precaution against failure will be adopted. By failure I mean to imply, not exactly failure in finishing the work, but rather, failure in finishing it at a price near what is proposed.

The question as to the advisability or otherwise—from a financial point of view—of accepting the proposed scheme, is one which must also receive serious attention. The brethren of the Craft are asked to expend £30,000 in alterations and additions to the Tavern, for which they will secure an annual improved rental of £440! That is investing money at less than one and a half per cent., and seeing that the Committee propose to pay three per cent. for their loan, it is, on the face of the proposal, a bad speculation. I suppose the brethren may look upon the work from a speculative point of view, as well as from one of convenience. I think it would be worth while considering the advisability of restoring the Temple to its former size, which could be done without any cost to the Craft, as the Insurance is said to be sufficient for the purpose. The expenditure of some £1,000, £2,000, or even £5,000 in addition, might perhaps give some further accommodation, and the Craft would be spared the great outlay now suggested, which to my mind would exceed £50,000 before the work was thoroughly completed. It is very easy to speak of an amount of forty thousand pounds, or to express it on paper, but I am of opinion that the Craft would not add lustre to its name by such a lavish outlay on a building which they only use some four or five times a-year. The proper course, to my way of thinking, would be to invite suggestions as to what could be done for, say, £3,000. An offer of a premium of £100 or £150 for the best proposal would, I think, be sufficient to call forth something of service to the Craft, and the whole subject could be easily disposed of. Of one thing I am certain,—the outlay proposed is far above what ought to be spent.

I am, Dear Sir and Brother,

Yours faithfully,

DELTA.

OFFICERS OF GRAND LODGE.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I have often wondered whether the offices of Senior and Junior Grand Wardens especially are sinecures, merely complimentary posts to be conferred upon brethren without the conditions of labour attached to every other position in Grand Lodge. I believe I am correct in saying that the 25th April last was looked forward to with great interest, that being the day fixed for the Annual Communication, when the list of Officers for the year was announced. I find at the top of that list Bro. the Earl of Milltown S.G.W., and next to him Bro. the Right Hon. Col. Stanley J.G.W. The position of the Most Worshipful Grand Master is well understood, against which no voice of complaint can fairly be raised. The Pro Grand Master, the Earl of Carnarvon, is well known for the interest he takes in the Craft and the time he devotes to the work of Grand Lodge. Other Officers of importance are usually in their places, and show by their presence that they appreciate the honour that has been conferred upon them. The Grand Wardens, however, are exceptions to the rule, why, I cannot understand. It is very well to have honours, but they entail responsibility and labour, and unless the holders of the offices I have named are equal to the demands of duty, it ought to be a question of the future whether the useful as well as the ornamental should not be a necessary qualification for the posts of S.G.W. and J.G.W. I do not think that either of the brethren I have named has attended Grand Lodge since their appointment; and while I have every respect for those brethren who have acted as deputy for them, I do not think it right that two of the most important and honourable offices in the Craft should nearly always be filled by proxies.

Truly and fraternally yours,

A P.M.

NEW DISTRICT GRAND MASTER OF VICTORIA

WE learn from the Australian papers that H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, Grand Master of England, has offered the post of District Grand Master of Victoria to Sir W. J Clarke, who is at present District Grand Master of Victoria under the Irish Constitution. It is believed that Sir William will accept the appointment, and further that the Duke of Abercorn, Grand Master of Ireland, will consent to the Irish Lodges transferring their allegiance to the Grand Lodge of England. It is also expected that the Scotch Lodges will fall in with this arrangement.

MASONIC DUTIES.

WE extract the following from the Report on Correspondence to the Grand Lodge of New York, 1883, and commend the remarks to our English brethren :—

"It is no light matter for men endowed with reason to assume obligations of the most binding character. It is still more serious when obligations thus taken upon themselves be forgotten or recklessly disregarded. It is difficult we know for men, owing to weakness of human nature, in any of their relations to their fellow men to divest themselves wholly of their selfishness; but for a Mason to be wholly selfish is at war with every principle of the Fraternity, and a violation of every duty. All associations have in view the attainment of some real or supposed benefits to their members or to the public. Generally they have but a single object. Not so with the Fraternity of Freemasons. It is not only a beneficent institution—one of mutual aid in pecuniary difficulties and distress—but there are higher and nobler duties they have undertaken to perform, in which human happiness has no less an interest. It is not sufficient that a brother fails to do violence to the person or property of another—any gentleman is as good a member of society as such. Our duties do not cease here. The Masonic virtues are not all negative. He is no Mason who confines his knowledge of Masonry to the ceremonies of initiation and the lectures, however perfect his memory serves him in their repetition. We by no means wish to undervalue these negative virtues, for we fully appreciate the vast amount of good, not only to Masonry, but to the world at large, by even these—an amount wrought which the profane cannot estimate, and to which justice is rarely ever done by the initiate. But our brother's welfare demands the exercise of greater moral excellence. Self need not be wholly ignored, but must content itself with a less prominent position. Masonry does not interfere with any of our duties to God, our neighbour, or ourselves; but while we have a sufficient portion of our time to devote to our duties to the two former, and to refreshment and sleep by the proper ruling of our time, we have enough of hours to devote to the necessities and welfare of our brethren. It will not do for men to declare on entering the door of the Lodge, that they are not induced to become Masons by selfish motives, but have an earnest desire to do good to their fellow-men, and to make themselves more useful members of society, and then make the altar but a stepping stone to their ambition, whether in or out of the Lodge. It will not do for them to acknowledge the ties of a brotherhood, with all the sacred obligations which its name implies, and then persecute, backbite or destroy by insinuation, a brother's reputation, or heap indignities upon a brother without cause or provocation other than what may have been created in the imagination of a wilful purpose to break down his good offices which have been hitherto exercised for the benefit of a Lodge."

Few, in this world, will ever be able to utter what they feel. Fewer still will be able to utter it in forms of their own. Nor is it necessary that there should be many such. But it is necessary that all should feel. It is necessary that all should understand and imagine the good; that all should begin, at least, to follow and find out God.—Macdonald.

Obituary.

By the decease of Bro. Henry Bray, which sad event took place on the 25th ult., the members of the Creaton Lodge, No. 279, have sustained the loss of a respected and genial companion. The late Bro. Bray was initiated on the 9th November 1882, consequently he had not been very long a Mason, but he had secured the friendship and esteem of his fellow workers. He was also a member of the City of London Volunteers, and held the post of Quarter Master Serjeant. In business he was known to, and respected by, a large circle of friends, and many will regret his early death. At his funeral, which took place on the 29th ult., there was a large gathering of Craftsmen and members of his Corps, who assembled to pay a last tribute of respect to an esteemed man and honourable comrade.

Recent Masonic necrology contains the names of Bro. Henry Reed and Bro. Benjamin Richman. Bro. Reed was a well-known printer and stationer of Oxford-street, who was among the first to produce Masonic printing of an attractively artistic character, and his Lodge and Chapter summonses and banquet menus obtained a high reputation for beauty of design. He was initiated in the Westbourne Lodge, No. 733, and subsequently became Master of that Lodge. He was Scribe E. of the St. James's Union Chapter, No. 180, the Westbourne Chapter, No. 733, and the Vane Chapter, No. 538. He was a Mason of great perseverance, and bore a high character. He was one of the passengers on board the Princess Alice steamboat, on the 3rd September 1878, when she was run down by the Bywell Castle, but both he and Mrs. Reed, who was with him, were rescued. Bro. Benjamin Richman, who died suddenly, on the 5th inst., was a member of the Rose of Denmark Lodge, No. 975, and at its last meeting was elected Master for the ensuing year.—Evening News.

A Committee meeting of the Royal Masonic Benevolent Institution was held on Wednesday afternoon, at Freemasons' Hall, Bro. Col. Creaton, Past Grand Treasurer, in the chair. Amongst those present were Bros. John Bulmer, A. H. Tattershall, Henry Moore, W. H. Goodall, Charles Atkins, Horace B. Marshall, Charles Belton, Charles J. Perceval, Raynham W. Stewart, J. H. Sillitoe, Charles Lacey, W. Stephens, C. A. Cottebrune, T. W. C. Bush, J. Joyce Murray, H. Massey, and James Terry Secretary. After confirmation of the minutes, the Secretary reported the death of one male and two female annuitants. The Warden's report was presented, and the Chairman was authorised to sign cheques. On the motion of Brother Raynham W. Stewart P.G.D., it was ordered that the usual quantity of coals be supplied to the inhabitants of the Asylum at Croydon. The application of two widows for half of their late husband's annuities were granted. Three petitions to be placed on the list of candidates for the election next May were examined and approved. One petition was deferred for further information with respect to an annuity the petitioner was said to be in receipt of. The usual vote to the Chairman closed the proceedings.

FREEMAN'S CHLORODYNE.

The Original and only true.

HUNDREDS of Medical Practitioners testify to its marvellous efficacy in immediately relieving and rapidly curing Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Neuralgia, Spasms, Colic, Whooping Cough, and all Nerve Pains. It acts like a charm in Diarrhœa, and is the only specific in Cholera and Dysentery. It rapidly relieves pain, from whatever cause, soothes and strengthens the system under exhausting diseases, and gives quiet and refreshing sleep.

Lord Chancellor Selborne, Lord Justice James, Lord Justice Mellish decided in favour of FREEMAN'S ORIGINAL CHLORODYNE, and against Brown and Davenport, compelling them to pay all costs in the suits. See Times of July 24th, 1873. Bottles 1s 1½d, 2s 9d, 4s 6d, 11s, and 20s. Sold by all Chemists.

TESTIMONIALS.—Head Quarter Staff, Cabul, May 31st, 1880. Mr. R Freeman Dear Sir,—It is with much pleasure I am able to state that your Chlorodyne has been of special service to me in alleviating the wearisome spasms of Asthma, which is here existent in an aggravated form. Many of my patients now come and beg me to give them that medicine which always relieves them, and which I need hardly say is your Chlorodyne. Yours faithfully, CHARLES W. OWEN, L.R.C.P. Lon., M.R.C.S. Eng., the Divisional Head Quarter Staff and Civil Surgeon, Cabul.

The Times, August 13th, 1877. From our own Correspondent with the Russian Army. Okoum, July 25th, 1877. The want of sanitary arrangements in the Russian Camp was dreadful, and had we remained there a few weeks longer, dysentery and typhoid fever would have played more havoc in our ranks than the bombs of the Turks. I myself acquired an unenviable reputation as a doctor, owing to my being provided with a small bottle of CHLORODYNE, with which I effected miraculous cures.

FREEMASONRY IN SOUTH AUSTRALIA.

WE learn from the Australian papers that a large meeting of Freemasons took place at the banqueting room of the Masonic Hall, Adelaide, South Australia, on Monday night, the 30th July, under the presidency of Brother H. C. Mais, when a subject of the gravest importance concerning the progress of Freemasonry in that Colony was discussed.

Brother H. M. Addison proposed, "That in the opinion of this meeting it is desirable that the Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of South Australia be formed, and that immediate steps be taken to that end." The subject of a Masonic Union had been a long time under discussion, and it was felt that the time had arrived when the Masons of South Australia were competent to manage their own affairs. It had been stated that steps would be taken to form a Grand Lodge in South Australia to follow up the Victorian movement, and as it was within the power of any three Lodges to form such a Lodge it had been deemed wise to call the Craft together to consider the position. Brother Addison enumerated the advantages of the proposed union. These would be self-government, freedom from taxation, the absence of distinction as to Constitutions among Masons of South Australia, and the appointment of their own ruler. The objections which could be made to the resolution would come with equal force in ten or even fifty years' time. Brother Hugh Fraser seconded the resolution, and spoke warmly on the advantage of the union in the appointment of their own rulers.

Bro. W. Barlow moved, as an amendment—"That after the word 'formed' in the resolution there should be inserted the words 'with the consent of the Grand Lodges of England, Scotland, and Ireland.'" They were bound by loyalty and courtesy to consult the Grand Lodges in the matter before taking a decided action. If they carried the resolution they would place brethren who went home in a false position. Bro. John Lee seconded the amendment, believing that the Grand Lodges would grant the request. Brother Seabrook replied to the amendment with two facts—the Grand Lodge of Scotland had intimated that they would not give such an application their consent, but if a Grand Lodge was formed in South Australia it would have their full sympathy. That was three years ago. Brother Downer when he went home received a similar answer. Brother Saint pointed out that if the amendment was carried there was no one authorised or competent to correspond with the Grand Lodges at home, and certainly the Grand Lodges here dare not do it. Bros. Skethaway, Knight, Hocken, Solomon, and Wigg supported the proposition, and after hearing Brother Addison in reply, his proposition was eventually carried by 107 votes as against 20 for the amendment.

Bro. Williams moved—"That those brethren now present undertake to use their best efforts to carry out the first resolution, and hereby form themselves into a Masonic union for that purpose, with power to add to their number." Bro. Lee seconded, and the proposition was carried.

An Executive Committee of fifteen was appointed, five each from the English, the Irish, and the Scotch Constitutions, to carry out the objects, with power to add to their number.

Votes of thanks were passed to the chairman and Bro. Addison, and the proceedings ended.

CONSECRATION OF THE NEW MASONIC TEMPLE AT GUERNSEY.

THE Freemasons, members of the three Lodges in Guernsey, "Mariners" 168, "Loyalty" 243, and "Fidelis" 1809, having decided about two years ago to obtain a suitable building for their meetings, appointed a Committee from each Lodge to carry out this object. The members nominated were Bros. T. Pengelley, A. C. Quick, and R. M. Smythson for "Mariners," F. J. Weysom, J. H. Parsons, and P. Le Page, "Loyalty," and J. S. Sneath, T. M. Bichard, and T. Le Ray, "Fidelis." These brethren formed a Board, with Bros. Sneath President, Bichard Vice-President, Pengelley Treasurer, and Le Page Secretary. These brethren made diligent search, and at length fixed on a site in Le Marchant-street, a portion of the freehold estate of the Le Marchant family, and this property was in all respects considered very eligible. A plan of the proposed structure was prepared by Mr. Thomas Le Page, of the Bouet, and being approved by the Board and the members generally, tenders were invited for the construction of the building, and several were sent in, that of Mr. Gervase F. Peek being accepted. While clearing away the old premises an important discovery was made; in an upper room over what was a blacksmith's shop, some old decorations on the walls plainly pointed out that it had been used for Masonic purposes; and further inquiry revealed the fact that about a century ago a Masonic Lodge was held here. The ground having been cleared, the corner stone was laid with befitting ceremony by Bro. Sneath, President of the Board, on the 3rd March 1882. The work progressed rapidly, the contract having to be completed in nine months, but as according to the original design the front elevation was to be of stucco, many brethren were of opinion that as Guernsey was the island of granite, such an important building as a Masonic temple should have at least a granite front. Negotiations were entered into with Bro. John Hamley, of St. Sampson's, who generously undertook to give the granite, and carry out the architect's design, the Board paying for the labour. This entailed an immense amount of labour, the carving of the pilasters and other ornamental portions in such hard material being a long and tedious work. Ultimately, however, the whole was completed, under the supervision of Bro. Thomas Le Page to the satisfaction of the Board of management. The building contains a spacious entrance hall, with offices on either side, lavatories, &c., and at the back the banqueting-room, which is forty feet long, twenty-four feet wide, and twelve feet high, with accommodation for at least one hundred brethren. On the first floor there are Committee and Dressing Rooms, and the Lodge room proper; this is a noble apartment, 40 feet long, 24 feet wide, with a covered ceiling 18 feet high. It is lighted by a sunlight in the centre, and its proportions are admirably adapted for the working of the Lodges. The furniture of this room is of a very elaborate character, and has been furnished by Messrs. Lovell and Cox, of Trinity Square. It is of solid English oak, the Officers, chairs and benches, which are of massive design, being covered in deep blue Utrecht velvet, bordered with brass nails. The chairs and pedestals are beautifully carved, the supports being in the various orders of architecture, ornamented with Masonic emblems. The floor is covered with linoleum, and the sacred pavement is of Brussels carpet, woven in a single piece, with a deep Masonic border, forming a most artistic specimen of carpet work. The walls are at present only tinted (which was kindly done by Bro. J. Helman), but will ultimately be decorated, as well as the ceiling, in appropriate style. An admirable system of ventilation has been introduced, which on the day of consecration answered remarkably well. An adjoining building, also the property of the Lodge, will shortly be restored as a hall-keeper's residence, and for other purposes of the Temple. Having been so far completed, the building was handed over to the Board, who at once took measures for its Consecration. At three o'clock in the afternoon of the 6th inst. the brethren assembled at the New Temple, in full regalia, amongst those present being Bros. Dr. Le Cronier D P.G.M. Jersey, W. H. Gulliford P.M. Covent Garden, F. J. Price Brunswick 159, Thomas J. Ainsley W.M. Yarborough 244, Thomas Baudains W.M. St. Aubins 958, Charles Naylor P.P.D.C. Jersey, J. G. Hamilton J.D. 1003 Jersey, C. Donaldson P.M. Yarborough 244, F. G. Newman S.W. Prince of Wales Jersey, W. Rousby Yarborough 244, G. C. Godfray 509 Jersey, H. M. Bartlett W.M. 1003 Jersey, B. Collenette, M.D., P.M. and P.P.G. Secretary Doyle's 84, the Officers and brethren of Mariners, Loyalty, and Fidelis Lodges, with some other visiting brethren of Doyle's Lodge, and St. Ann's, Alderney, in all numbering 110. Bro. T. Pengelley, W.M. Mariners Lodge, 168, proceeded to open the Lodge in due form, the Officers being Bros. J. S. Sneath P.M. Fidelis 1809 I.P.M., J. W. Lindsay W.M. Loyalty 243 S.W., T. M. Bichard W.M. Fidelis 1809 and P.P.G. Supt. W. Jersey J.W., W. Helman P.M. Loyalty 243 S.D., J. H. Parsons P.M. Loyalty 243 J.D., A. C. Quick P.M. Mariners 168 I.G., W. H. Courtenay P.M. Mariners 168 Steward, R. M. Smythson P.M. Loyalty 243 Sec., and Barnes Loyalty 243 Organist. The dispensation having been read, the Consecrating Officer and assistants, with other distinguished brethren were then received with befitting ceremony, and the W.M. resigned his chair to the Consecrating Officer. The Consecrating Officer was W. Bro Jas. Terry P.P.S.G.W. Northa and Hants. P.P.J.G.W. Herts and Sec. R.M B.I., assisted by W. Bro. Rev. F. H. S. Pendleton P.M. Mariners 168 and Grand Orient of Uruguay 33° Chaplain, W. Bro. R. H. Halford P.P.G.D Herts D.C, and W. Bro. J. G. Holmes P.D.G.S W. Malta. The Chaplain gave the introductory prayer, and Bro. J. S. Sneath P.M. 1809, President of the Board, invited the Consecrating Officer to consecrate the Temple to Masonry. This brother having signified his pleasure so to do, called upon the Chaplain to deliver the oration. This having been done in most eloquent terms, wherein the beauties and objects of Freemasonry were pointed out, and the duties and obligations of the brethren, to God, to their fellow men, and to each other, forcibly referred to, the anthem "Behold how good and joyful" was sung. The Consecrating Prayer being offered, the hymn "Guide me, O thou Great Jehovah," was sung, and the President of the Board delivered up the working tools, and handed in the plans of the completed structure. A procession was next formed of the Consecrating Officer and his assistants, with elements of consecration, solemn music playing, the Chaplain incensing the Temple and repeating appropriate passages of Scripture. This was done three times, the Consecrating Officer the first time halting in the East, scattering corn and dedicating the Temple to Masonry; the second time halting as before, pouring out wine, and dedicating the Temple to Virtue; the third time halting as before, pouring out oil, and dedicating the Temple to Universal Benevolence. The hymn, "When once of old in Israel," was then sung, and the Chaplain pronounced the Dedicatory Prayer. The Consecrating Officer then declared the Temple duly consecrated and dedicated according to ancient form to Masonry for all time. The anthem "I have surely built Thee an house" followed, and the final Benediction was pronounced by Bro. Terry. At the close of the ceremony Bro. Wybert Rousby presented a magnificent dress sword, formerly the property of Signor Mario, the eminent vocalist, for the use of the Tyler of the Temple, which was graciously accepted by the W.M., who also announced that a handsomely bound Bible had been presented by a brother for the services of the Temple; and that another brother had given the splendid cushion upon which the sacred volume rested. Bro. Terry presented a beautifully carved gavel, made from wood brought over from Lebanon. The ceremony was then closed in due form, but before the final dismissal the brethren sang the hymn "Now the evening shadows closing." Votes of thanks were accorded to the Consecrating Officer and his assistants, and after hearty good wishes from the visiting brethren, the Lodge was closed in due and solemn form.

In the evening a banquet was held at St. Julian's Hall, when the several distinguished brethren from a distance, and most of those present at the Consecration ceremony, with others who were not able to be there, numbering in all over 100, assembled. The chair was occupied by Bro. J. S. Sneath, President of the Board, supported on the right by Bro. Dr. Le Cronier, Bros. W.M.'s Pengelley, Bichard, were respectively Bros. G. H. Smythson and P. La Page, and other Provincial Grand Officers, and on the left by Worshipful Bros. Terry, Halford, and Pendleton,; the Vice-Chairmen The room was very tastefully decorated with flowers and evergreens, and had a very pretty effect; Brother James Mabey, of the Yacht Hotel, was caterer. Grace both before and after meat was pronounced by Bro. Chaplain. The usual Loyal, Patriotic, and Masonic toasts were then given by the President, and honoured in Masonic form. The Consecrating Officer was proposed by Brother Pengelley, and responded to by Brother Terry in eloquent terms. Our Visitors and Guests was proposed by Brother A. C. Quick, and responded to by Brother Dr. Le Cronier. Brother James Terry proposed the Board of Management, to which the President replied, giving a brief résumé of the rise and progress of the Temple. Bro. Lindsay proposed the health of Bro. Halford, as Director of Ceremonies, to which that brother responded. The Jersey and Alderney Lodges were proposed by Bro. Terry, responded to by Bros. Ainsley and Naylor, Jersey, and Bro. MacGowan, St. Ann's, Alderney. Bro. Halford proposed the Worshipful Masters of Mariners, Loyalty, and Fidelis Lodges, to which their respective W.M.'s replied. The Masonic Charities was proposed by Bro. T. M. Richard, and responded to by Bro. Terry, who pointed out that over £47,000 had been subscribed this year at the Anniversary Festivals of the Boys' and Girls' Schools, and Benevolent Institution for the Aged and Distressed. In the Girls' School there were 225 girls who were clothed, maintained and educated for seven years. In the Boys' School, 205 boys were also clothed, maintained and educated for seven years. Whilst on the funds of the Benevolent Institution, there were 350 annuitants, the men each receiving £40 per annum, and the widows £32 a year each. Bro. Palmer proposed the Past Masters; Bro. Weyson the Architect and Contractor, Bro. W. De Jersey the Organist, responded to by Bro. Barnes, and our Seafaring Brethren by Bro. Le Huray. The President then gave the final toast, and the proceedings were brought to a close in a most harmonious manner. During the evening Bro. Wybert Rousby gave a very stirring recitation entitled "The Mummy," and several of the brethren contributed songs and recitations, adding greatly to the pleasure of the entertainment.

PRINCE LEOPOLD LODGE, No. 1445.

THE installation meeting of this Lodge was held on 6th inst., at the City Arms Tavern, St. Mary Axe, where the Lodge was opened by Bro. Samuel Lewis, the W.M. Since the last regular meeting of the Lodge, held in July last, permission has been granted by the authorities for the brethren to hold their future meetings at the above address, and we congratulate the Lodge on having secured so desirable a room wherein to transact their business. After the minutes of last regular Lodge meeting and those of two emergency meetings had received confirmation, the formal authorisation of Grand Lodge for removal of the Lodge was read to the brethren, and then the report of the Audit Committee was presented. This showed the Lodge to be working on a sound basis, and a balance in favour was reported in the hands of the Treasurer. The report was unanimously adopted; Bro. W. H. Myers P.M. then took his seat as Installing Master, and the W.M. elect, Bro. William McDonald, was presented, and with due observance of ceremonial, installed into the chair of the Lodge. The brethren having saluted their new Master in the three degrees, Bro. McDonald invested the following Officers for the ensuing year:—Bros. J. Robson S.W., F. Kimbell J.W., Wm. H. Myers Treasurer, H. Winkley Secretary, H. Seymour Clarke S.D., J Chamberlain J.D., M. Smith I.G., G. C. Young Org., A. Gooch M.C, W. Toombs Steward, J. Marsh Tyler, S. Lewis I.P.M. A capital banquet was supplied by the proprietors of the City Arms Tavern, but the staff of waiters employed was not sufficient for the occasion; as a consequence, more than two hours was spent in the discussion of the good things provided, and this necessitated the after proceedings being somewhat unduly hurried over. We call attention to this little grievance, and feel assured on future occasions a remedy will be adopted. On rising to propose the health of Her Most Gracious Majesty, Bro. McDonald briefly enumerated the claim the Queen has on the loyalty of her subjects; this, by Freemasons, is always readily accorded. In speaking to the toast of H.R.H. the Grand Master, the W.M. said, the zeal the Prince of Wales displayed in everything connected with the welfare of the Craft was fully recognised. He had gained the confidence and esteem of the brethren, and it was with every satisfaction he called upon those present to honour the toast. After the 3rd toast—"The Earl of Carnarvon Pro Grand Master, the Earl of Lathom Deputy Grand Master, and the Grand Officers Present and Past"—had received full recognition, the announcement that the restraint as regards tobacco might on application be removed, was received with much enthusiasm, and the brethren immediately acted upon the suggestion. After a full fire had been established, Bro. Lewis I.P.M. rose to propose the health of the W.M. One and all must be pleased to greet as Master of the Royal Leopold so esteemed a brother as the one now called upon to rule the destinies of the Lodge. Bro. McDonald had familiarised himself to every member who had attended their Lodge of Instruction, and all appreciated the zeal he displayed in carrying out the work of Freemasonry. He (Bro. Lewis) had every confidence in offering the toast for the reception of the brethren. In reply, the W.M., after thanking them for the way in which they had received the toast, trusted that that day twelvemonths he might be able to hand over to his successor the Warrant of the Lodge with the consciousness that he passed it on in as pure and unsullied a manner as he had received it. He cordially thanked one and all for the way they had honoured the toast. In offering the toast of the Past Masters, the Worshipful Master spoke in the highest terms of the way in which Brother Lewis had conducted the duties of the Lodge. Bro. Partridge also was deserving of praise, while as regarded Bro. Myers, he was ever energetic and zealous in promoting the welfare of the brethren. Bro. Lewis was the first to reply. During his year of office he had striven to do his best, and was gratified to know he had secured the approval of the members of the Lodge. Brothers Myers and Partridge also responded. The Visitors were next complimented. The Prince Leopold Lodge was ever cordial in the reception it gave to its visitors. One of their guests had that day travelled from Nottingham in order to be present, and the Lodge could but be gratified at the honour done it by the attendance of such distinguished Masons as was embodied by the Visitors present. Some very happy and pertinent remarks were offered by several of the guests. All spoke in praise of the way in which the work of the day had been carried out; and the Lodge was congratulated on the capital quarters it had secured for the celebration of its duties. The next toast given by the Worshipful Master was that of the Initiates—the two brethren who had been introduced at the emergency meetings of the Lodge. Bro. John Hales, in a capital speech, was the first to reply. As a new member he trusted the brethren present would pardon him if he failed to speak as eloquently as those who brought to bear the experience gained by years of association with the Craft. He could assure them, however, he had no self-seeking glorification to advance. The organisation of Freemasonry was one of the oldest in existence, and all classes of society appreciated the honour of being ranked among its members. The charges he had already listened to could have but one tendency, that was to ennoble those who acted up to their teaching. The manner in which he had heard them delivered won his approval, and he had come to the conclusion he had taken a proper step when he joined the Order. He was not a young man; still, old as he was, he felt he had learned something by his association with Masons. He did not hesitate to state that he aspired to be a Master in the Craft. He was fully aware he had to serve a full term of apprenticeship; but he had aspirations, and trusted in course of time they would be realised, and that he might some day boast of being a Master of this, the oldest organisation in the world. Brother Tyson also spoke; he fully endorsed the sentiments of his brother initiate. The other toasts honoured were the Treasurer and Secretary and the Officers. Able replies were elicited, and then the Tyler gave the parting benediction. Some capital singing enlivened the proceedings, and the musical ability of Miss Thomas was exercised to the entertainment of the brethren. This young lady is a brilliant pianist, and it is always a pleasure to listen to her performances. Bro. Toombs was most zealous in the fulfilment of his duties as Wine Steward. Amongst those present as Visitors were S. M. Lazarus P.P.G.J D. Wilts, M. H. Hale S D. 27, G. F. Cook P.G.A.D.C. Herts, W. M. Cook S.D. 22, P. McCarthy 1076 P.M. 820, G. T. Holdom S.D. 1306, C. Robson 960, C. Hubbard P.M. 820, J. Cox Sec. 1766, W. J. London, F.G S., S.D. 1663, H. Medwin W.M. 1613, James Salmon S.D. 1339, T. Fox 1613, J. Archer 1613, G. Saling 205, W. W. Morgan S.W. 211.

BRUNSWICK LODGE, No. 732.

THE regular meeting of this Lodge, celebrated for its perfect working, was held on the 13th inst., at the Masonic Rooms, Royal Pavilion, Brighton, under the Presidency of the W.M Brother S. H. Soper, who was supported by Bros. Histed S.W., Nell J.W., Ridley Treasurer, Freeman Prov. G. Secretary as Secretary, Botting S.D., Denman J.D., Harker as I.G., Thomas Tyler, and F. Daniel I.P.M. P.M.'s Bros. Alderman Davey P.P.G.J.W., Bennet, Kidd, and W. Smith P.P.G.P. Visitors—Bros. F. Batts 1947, E. Medcalf 1947, T. Berry 1821, R. Pearce 1821, W. Rae P G.O. 1636, Godfree I.P.M. 1821 P.G.S. Sussex, W. T. Nell P.P.G P. Sussex, J. Sayers 1636 and 315, R. Nicholson 315, E. Mitchell 1329, Hawkes P.P.G.S B., C. Sandeman Past Prov. A.D.C. Sussex, and H. M. Levy P.M. 188. Lodge was opened, and the minutes were confirmed. A letter was read from Sir Walter Barrell, Bart., M.P., P.G.M. Sussex, thanking the brethren for their kind letter of condolence on the occasion of his sad bereavement by the death of his son. It was announced that the Provincial Grand Lodge of Sussex will be holden on the 12th October, at the Royal Pavilion, on which occasion the R.W. the Provincial Grand Master will preside. Bros. Clowser and Bowyer, having answered the usual questions in a very satisfactory manner, were duly raised to the third degree by Bro. Daniel I.P.M., who conducted the ceremony by the courtesy of the W.M. Bro. Daniel not only gave the traditional history, but also the lecture on the tracing board. Lodge was then closed until the 11th October. The brethren, twenty-eight in number, sat down to a sumptuous and récherché banquet and dessert, provided by Bros. Sayers and Marks. The elegant and artistic floral decorations were in excellent taste, while the magnificent room was lighted by the electric light. Grace having been said, the W.M., in genial and eloquent terms, proposed the Loyal toasts, which were enthusiastically received. In proposing the toast of the Right Worshipful the Earl of Lathom and the rest of the Grand Officers of the Grand Lodge of England, the W.M. regretted the absence of Bro. W. R. Wood, a G. Officer of the Province, but who is likewise Grand Pursuivant of the Grand Lodge of England. Bro. Soper had just received a telegram from him from London; he as well as every brother present regretted his absence. The W.M. next proposed the health of the R.W. Sir W. Barrell, Bart., M.P., Provincial Grand Master of the Province of Sussex. He had had the honour of attending Provincial Grand Lodge, where he had met Sir Walter on many occasions. All in the Province regretted the death of his son, who would have been a credit to the Order. Still, he has another son, who will shortly join the Craft, and then it might be said all the family would be Masons. Sir W. W. Barrell is a type of the old country gentleman, and a thorough Mason. We have present a good representative in the person of Bro. Freeman, Prov. Grand Secretary, and he should ask him to reply. Bro. Freeman, in very eloquent terms, responded. The Province of Sussex, he said, has a chief they may be proud of; no one looks after the interests of the Craft with more energy than he. May he be spared for many years to be among them. The toast of the R.W. Bro. J. H Scott P.G.J.D. Deputy P.G.M. Sussex, and the Officers of the Prov. Grand Lodge Past and Present, came next: they had seen what Bro. Scott had done for the Province, he regretted his absence,—which was owing to illness. They had, however, several Provincial Grand Officers present. Bro. Smith P.P.G.P. responded; he regretted the absence of Bro. Scott, but was pleased to respond to the toast. Bro. Daniel Immediate Past Master said, it was a privilege enjoyed by the Immediate Past Master that he had to propose the health of the W.M. This was the last occasion on which Bro. Soper would fill the chair. The brethren of the Lodge could, however, congratulate themselves upon having had a good exponent of the tenets of the Craft, and one who had worked in the true spirit of Freemasonry. The W.M. in reply had to thank Bro. Bennett P.M. for his introduction to this Lodge. They were ever a band of brothers, and the harmony of the Lodge had been well sustained during the past year. He had done his best, and thanked the Officers for their kind assistance. The W.M. then proposed the toast of the Past Masters. Bro. Daniels I P.M. responded. Bros. Freeman, Legge, Smith and Bennett also addressed the meeting. With the toast of the Visitors was coupled the names of Bros. H. M. Levy P.M. 188 and Bro. C. Sandeman, who both responded. The toasts of the Wardens and Officers followed, and Bros. Histed and Nell replied. The Tyler's toast was then given. During the evening the W.M. and Bros. Willard, Nicholson and Davies contributed some excellent songs. To Bro. Smith, who acted as M C., every credit is due for his attention to the comfort of the members and visitors. Bros. Sayers and Marks also sustained their reputation as caterers.

An emergency meeting of the Beadon Lodge, No. 619, will be held on Tuesday, the 18th inst., at the Greyhound Hotel, Dulwich, at four o'clock in the afternoon, under the Mastership of Bro. R. P. Forge.

BURRELL LODGE, No. 1829.

ON Thursday afternoon, the 6th inst., a meeting of the brethren of this Lodge was held at the Royal George Hotel, Shoreham. The W.M. Bro. J. Harrison P.M 804, P. Prov. Grand Superintendent of Works, Hants and Isle of Wight, presided, while among those present were Bros. T. Packham I.P.M. Prov. G. Steward, E. Bridges S.W., T. Hardy J.W., H. Cheal Secretary, B. B. Higham S.D., A. Gill J.D., R. B. Y. Powell I.G., K. Smith Organist, W. Swales, T. Holloway, and G. Fieldus, Stewards; T. B. Gates, R. Furzey, J. Parnell, Hughes, F. New, A. J. Carpenter, J. Parsons, E. Mitchell, and G. E. Pitt, while among the visitors were Brothers W. Harris W.M. St. Patrick's 295, D. Fegan S.D. St. Patrick's 295, R. Paige, G. Dickinson, Lansborough 1681, W. Stanton, Lebanon 1826, Thacker, Royal York 315, M. Grinberg, Atlingworth 1821, &c. In addition to the ordinary business of the meeting the following were elected Officers for the ensuing year, viz.—Brother Capt. Raymond Burrell W.M., Bros. T. Packham I.P.M. Treasurer, J. Harman Tyler. Brother T. Packham then said he had a most pleasing duty to perform on behalf of the brethren of the Burrell Lodge, in making a presentation to their esteemed W.M. Brother J. Harrison, in appreciation of his great work on behalf of the Masonic Charities. With the utmost confidence he could say that Brother Harrison possessed all the virtues of a good Mason, and he knew no one more energetic on behalf of the Masonic Charities, or who worked better in furthering the interests of any good cause. As their W.M., he was drawing near the expiry of his term of office, and while occupying the chair had not only done excellent work in the Lodge, but, during the year, had worked so hard in the cause of Masonic Charities, that the brethren had decided, at a meeting held in July, to tender him a cordial vote of thanks, the same to take the form of an illuminated address. On behalf of the Lodge, he trusted Bro. Harrison would be long spared to work amongst them, and concluded his remarks by wishing health and happiness to him and his family. The address, written by Mr. F. Curtis, was an excellent work of art, and read as follows:—

"Burrell Lodge, 1829. At a meeting of this Lodge, held at the Royal George Hotel, Shoreham, on 5th July 1883, it was proposed and unanimously resolved, 'That a cordial vote of thanks be given to Brother John Harrison W.M., of this Lodge, for his energy and continued working in the cause of the Masonic Charities, and particularly in representing this Lodge as Steward at the Annual Festival of the Boys' School on 20th June 1883, when he took up the sum of £222 12s, and that the same be recorded on vellum and presented to him.' (Signed), T. Packham I.P.M., E. Bridges S.W., T. Hardy J.W., H. Cheal Secretary. 6th September 1883."

Brother J. Harrison, on rising to respond, was warmly received. He thanked the brethren sincerely, and could assure them that he valued very highly the gratifying token of their esteem which he had just received. Reference had been made to his work on behalf of the Masonic Charities. He had been honoured by representing the Burrell Lodge, and felt great pleasure in doing his utmost to assist those who were unable to help themselves. On the motion of Bro. E. Bridges, the Lodge resolved to present Bro. Harrison with a Past Master's gold jewel on his retirement from office. The Lodge having been closed, the brethren sat down to a complimentary banquet given in honour of Brother Harrison, and served up in excellent style by Bro. Gates. Bro. T. Packham presided. The post prandial proceedings included several toasts. The Chairman gave "The Queen and the Craft," "The M.W.G.M. H.R.H. the Prince of Wales and the Officers of Grand Lodge, present and past," when Bro. Harrison gave in complimentary terms "The R.W. Bro. Sir W. W. Burrell, Bart., M.P., Prov. G.M. of Sussex, and Officers of Prov. Grand Lodge, present and past. Bro. Packham responded, and then gave what he termed the toast of the evening, "The W.M. Bro. J. Harrison P.M. 804, P. Prov. Grand Supt. of Works Hants and the Isle of Wight, and the Masonic Charities." It was gratifying to see so many present who were unable to attend the Lodge meeting—a testimony of well-deserved respect to their W.M. Alluding to Bro. Harrison's energy on behalf of the Masonic Charities, he remarked that there were Masons and Masons. There were some who took little or no interest in their Lodge work, while there were others, like Bro. Harrison, who fully carried out the principles of charity. In their W.M. they had one who could not be surpassed in his devotion to the cause of their great Masonic Charities.—Bro. Harrison, in responding, thanked the brethren for cordially receiving the toast, and associating his name with the Charities. He had for many years taken great interest in the institutions associated with the Craft, and he trusted to be able for many more years to work as heartily as he had done in the past. Their appreciation of his services would stimulate him to greater exertions, and to endeavour to keep the Burrell Lodge in the front. Since the Lodge had been opened, four years ago, the brethren, independently of the Lodge, had subscribed £229 19s to the Charities, and possessed thirty-eight votes for the Boys' School, twenty-six for the Girls', seven for the Old Men's Institution, and six for that of the Old Women. Considering the short time the Lodge had been opened, it had done more than any other in the kingdom. He himself had 33 votes for the various Charities, and he said this, not in any spirit of egotism, but to urge the brethren to work with increased zeal. He trusted next year to place before the Provincial Grand Lodge a scheme for the establishment of a Charity Organisation for Sussex, similar to those in Lancashire and Yorkshire, which would enable them to send all the children of deceased Masons (should they require it) to a school in the neighbourhood, and thus avoid breaking up the family, as was the case when one was selected and sent to the Boys' or Girls' Schools. Of late years Sussex had been singularly fortunate in not requiring the assistance of the Masonic Charities, but he knew of several deserving cases which would soon demand their careful and Masonic consideration. He should do his utmost to render what assistance was possible, and confidently relied upon the co-operation of the brethren of the Burrell Lodge. Bro. Packham gave the next toast, the W.M. elect, and congratulated the Lodge upon securing one of the family which gave its name to the Lodge as their W.M. for the ensuing year. The remaining toasts were the Visitors, the I.P.M. and P.M.'s, and the Tyler's toast. A most agreeable and harmonious evening was spent.

THE GIRLS' SCHOOL ELECTION.

THE number of applications for admission to the Royal Masonic Institution for Girls is again assuming alarming proportions in comparison with the number of declared vacancies. The ballot paper for the election to take place on Saturday, the 13th October, gives a list of thirty-two candidates, while the vacancies to be filled are but eight, or exactly one vacancy to each four candidates. This is a great difference to the state of affairs at the last election, in April of the present year, when there were twenty-two vacancies and but twenty-eight candidates, and it gives promise of a more exciting election than has been known for some time past in connection with "Our Girls'" School, which, fortunately for the applicants, has been enabled to take on greatly increased numbers in consequence of the additions made to the school buildings during the past few years.

As may be surmised from the figures given above, there are six candidates on the present list whose applications stand over from the last election, and of these two now appear for the third time, while two others are last application cases. These latter, together with three "first and last application" cases will, as usual, receive our earliest attention. No. 5, Helen Mabel Henshaw, is one of four children dependent on a widowed mother; she has 624 votes to her credit, and will doubtless receive sufficient additional support to secure a place among the successful. Her father was a member of No. 12, Fortitude and Old Cumberland, London, and subscribed thereto from the time of his initiation, in 1874, until lunacy incapacitated him. No. 6, Sylvia Mary Haworth, has 428 votes to her credit. She is one of three children left to the care of their mother, the husband of whom was a Past Master of No. 314, Peace and Unity, West Lancashire, and subscribed to his Lodge close on fourteen years. No. 10, Edith Hutton, is another of the "last" cases, she is one of six children, four of whom are wholly, and two partially, dependent on the exertions of their mother. Her father was a Past Master of No. 48, Faithful, Warwickshire, and also figures as a Steward and Life Governor of the Boys' and Girls' Institutions. No. 20, Catherine Graham, one of four fatherless children, is accredited to Cheshire, her father having some time since filled the office of Worshipful Master in the Unanimity Lodge, No. 89. Her case could hardly be in better hands than those of the Cheshire brethren, and if she is so far successful as to secure the support of the Province, there is little doubt but that she will be found among the eight at the head of the poll. No. 20, Amy Margaret Lee, is the other last application case. Her father was a member of No. 13, Union Waterloo. His widow now has four children dependent on her, notwithstanding the fact that one of her boys is an inmate of the Boys' School. This is not the only case on the present list where the child has a brother in the Boys' School; there are two others similarly circumstanced.

We have already disposed of two of the "brought forward" cases, the others are Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4. No. 1, Ellen Hayes, who headed the list of unsuccessful candidates in April last, with 697 votes, has already competed at two elections. Her father, who is still alive, joined Peace and Harmony Lodge, No. 359 (Hants and Isle of Wight), in 1863, and at the present time has five children dependent on him. No reason is given why he appeals to the Girls' School, and, as is usual in such cases, we are entirely ignorant of the special claims he has on the Craft generally. We do not wish to imply that his daughter's candidature is not quite legitimate, but why not give some reason for the appeal which is being made. No. 2, Minnie Woodward, who has also taken part in two previous elections, has a total of 333 votes to her credit. Her mother, whose husband was a Past Master of No. 153, Inhabitants Lodge, Gibraltar, has now six children dependent on her for support. We trust she may, ere long, be successful in securing the election of one of them to our Masonic Institution. No. 3, Jane Wheeler Hutchings, polled 38 votes last April. She is one of four fatherless children. Her father was a member of No. 1382, Corinthian, and is among the few who figure as supporters of the Charities, he having qualified as a Subscriber to the Benevolent Institution. No. 4, Annie Lucie Ochsenbein, has but 13 votes to her credit. She is one of three children, left to the care of a widowed mother. Her father was a member of No. 1257, Grosvenor, London, from 1875 until his death in 1879.

No. 32, Rose Ethel Vowles, last on the list, appears to be the next in order. She is one of eight fatherless children who are left dependent on their mother. Her father was a P.M., and held high office in Provincial Grand Lodge of Gloucestershire. He died during the current year, and could boast of 31 years' subscribing membership to Freemasonry—the longest time on the present list. Let us hope that this distinction will have some weight in influencing votes on behalf of his daughter. No. 7, Isabella Sophia Heastie, daughter of a member of the Royal Lebanon Lodge, Gloucestershire, is one of a family of seven children left to the care of their mother. Her father, during his lifetime was a subscriber to the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys. No. 18, Hilda Sophia Lyon, is also one of seven children left to the care of a widowed mother. Her husband was a member of No. 758, Ellesmere, Cheshire. No. 24, Maude Mary Bromley, is similarly situated, so far as family circumstances are concerned. Her father was a member of No. 871, Royal Oak, which Lodge he joined but seven months before his death, in May 1882. It may be very hard on the candidates, but we cannot help thinking that, so long as the pressure is so great, this class of case should not be approved. A child whose father joined Freemasonry but seven months before—by his death—he left her and the other members of his family destitute, ought not to have the same claims on us as the child of a brother of some ten, twenty, or even thirty years' membership. No. 26, Frances Alice Searle, is another of seven fatherless children left to a mother's care. Her father was a member of No. 1107, Cornwallis, from the time of his initiation, in 1870, until his death in 1881. The distinction earned by this Lodge for its charitable propensity is exemplified in this case, for we find the father recorded as a Life Governor of the Boys' and Girls' Institutions. Let us hope that the assistance he rendered to the Institutions in his lifetime may be the means of his child securing support in her candidature now that he is dead. No. 15, Lucy Smith, is a member of a family of whom six children are entirely, and two partially, dependent on a widowed mother. Her husband, a P.M. of No. 651, Brecknock, achieved distinction as a Prov. Grand Officer of South Wales (Western Division), and subscribed to the Craft for 16¾ years.

No. 12, Kathleen Alice Gibson, has both parents living, the father being described as "in H.M. Customs." There are six children dependent in this case, and doubtless some good reason exists why the application is approved. We think the subscribers generally should demand that the particulars be published in the ballot papers. The father is a Past Master of No. 223, Charity, Devonshire, and a Past Grand Deacon of the Province. No. 17, Mary Amelia Wheeler, is also a member of a family of six dependent, but in her case the father is dead. Her father was a Past Master of the Dalhousie Lodge, No. 865, Middlesex. No. 25, Beatrice Mary High, another in whose family there are six fatherless children dependent, is a daughter of a Past Master of the Clapton Lodge, No. 1364. During his Masonic career of 8¼ years he acted as Steward for the Girls' School, and qualified as subscriber to the three Institutions. No. 23, Amy M. Owen, hails from the Province of North Wales and Shropshire, in which district her father subscribed for 15½ years, serving the office of Worshipful Master in the St. Tudno Lodge, No. 755. There are six children left in this family, of whom five are wholly, and one partially, dependent on the mother. No. 19, Eleanor Alice Johnstone, one of five children left fatherless, comes forward from No. 65, Prosperity Lodge, London. We trust she will receive the hearty support of the members of the Prosperity Lodge, in which case her ultimate success would be all but secured. No. 28, Emily Pinder, is similarly circumstanced as regards family ties; her mother was left a widow in 1882, at which time her husband was Senior Warden of the Excelsior Lodge, No. 1042, West Yorkshire, in which district he subscribed from 187[illegible], until the time of his death. No. 31, Edith Daisy Capon, has both parents living, and is one of five dependent children. Her father is unfortunately insane, and on that account the sympathy of his brother Masons should be forthcoming, and that, too, in such a manner as to secure for his daughter an early election into the Girls' School. No. 22, Edith Ellen Betts, is one of a family of five, of whom one is partially provided for. Her father, who was Past Master of St. Peter's Lodge, No. 419, Staffordshire, died in 1881, after a Masonic career of 7½ years. Cases in which there are four dependent children next call for attention. No. 9, Ethel Haden Sutcliffe, is one of such cases. Her father was a Past Master of the Acacia Lodge, No. 1309, Middlesex, and subscribed from 1875 until his death. The girl has a brother in the Boys' School, a fact which, as we have previously said, should be taken into consideration at the day of election. No. 11, Mary Tanner, is also one of four dependent on a widowed mother. Her father, a member of the Burgoyne Lodge, No. 902, London, died in 1881, after subscribing to Freemasonry for 17 years. No. 13, Florence Ann Motion, has a brother in the Boys' School. The remarks we have previously made in such cases equally apply here. Her father shews a record of twenty-five years Masonic subscription. He was a joining member of No. 453, Chigwell, Essex, in which Province he served as Worshipful Master, and obtained Provincial honours. He was a Steward and Life Governor of the three Institutions, and, on that account, his family deserve some extra attention. No. 29, Emily Sarah Jane Hall, has both parents living, and no reason being assigned why the father is unable to provide for his family, we can only call for more detailed particulars. No. 8, Mabel Harriet Godfrey, is one of three fatherless children. Her father was a member of No. 100, Friendship, Norfolk, and died in December 1877. No. 16, Alice Garton West, daughter of an old Past Master of the Great Northern Lodge, No. 1287, London, is also one of three children looking for support to their mother, who was left a widow in April of the present year. Her husband was a Life Subscriber of the Girls' and Benevolent Institutions, and had many friends among the members of the Craft: let us hope they will unite and endeavour to provide for one of his children. No. 21, Fanny Heath, also one of three dependent on a widowed mother, is a daughter of a late J.D. of the Peace and Harmony Lodge, No. 359, Hampshire. Her father, during his lifetime, qualified as Life Subscriber to the Girls' School. No. 14, Florence Alice Weber, calls to mind a brother who must have been known to a very large number of the supporters of the Girls' School. Brother Wilhelm G. Weber for some time previous to his death occupied the position of clerk at the Institution. His early decease was a matter of great regret, and now that one of his children is appealing for the benefits of the Institution, we hope an effort will be made to practically show the respect in which her father was held. He was an annual subscriber to the Girls' School, and has left his widow with two children to provide for. No. 30, Lucy Harrison, also a member of a family of two dependent on a widowed mother, brings our review to an end. Her father was one of the P.M.'s of Shakespeare, No. 1018, West Yorkshire, and had a Masonic record of 15¼ years subscription.

We cannot close our review without a few general remarks. We have not hitherto given special prominence to those cases in which the father appears to have supported the Institutions, but in view of the very small number of the candidates whose fathers are now accredited with having contributed to the Charities, we cannot but think that those who are so accredited are entitled to some special notice. Want of such record should not be a bar to a candidate's admission, but it should count for something on the day of election. Another point we can but refer to is, the short connection many of the families now appealing had with Freemasonry at the time of the father's decease or withdrawal from membership.

We shall next week devote ourselves to the Boys' School list, which, as usual, is of much greater length than that for the Girls' Institution.

We may add, we shall be very pleased to receive the votes of any of our readers who may have no special use for them; we can assure them that any so sent will be judiciously applied.

MASONIC RECOLLECTIONS.

ONE of the most curious episodes in the Masonic history of the day is the contention which grew out of the establishment in 1860, of a society, styled "The Conservators." Never was more innocent project vilified, never more noble effort maligned. My "recollections" of it are partly sad, partly glad, and this series will indeed be incomplete unless I give a fair space to the subject.

Open before me is the register of the Conservators' Association up to the period when the civil war closed the lines between North and South. The number of registered names is 2820, but at least 500 or 1000 more Conservators were made whose names never reached us. Every State in the Union is represented, and every Territory that was organized prior to 1863. To give an idea of the universality of the movement, I see among the first twenty names the following: Rev. Thos. R. Austin, LL.D., now of Vincennes, Ind, Past Grand Master, a Mason of national fame; Geo. D. Norris, M.D., New Market, Ala, Past Grand Master, a bright light, still living; A. B. Cudworth, Pontiac, Michigan, Past Grand High Priest; Joseph Covell, Jay Bridge, Main, one of the standards of that jurisdiction in his day, died 1866; P. H. Taylor, Ionia, Michigan, Past Grand Junior Warden, possesses a poetical gift; W. B. Langridge, Muscatine, Iowa, Grand Recorder, &c., a star in the Iowan firmament; John Scott, Nevada, Iowa, Past Grand Master, &c., whose praises have been sung in another paper of this series; Edward A. Guilbert, A.M., M.D., Past Grand Master, &c., of Iowa, of whom I have several times spoken.

Now these are included in the first twenty. Glancing through the other 2800 I find that we had enrolled in this society more than one hundred Masons who were then or have since been Grand Masters.

Now, as no Masonic movement, not even in the Scotch Rite, was ever met with such a storm of slander and reproach as the Conservators, it may well be asked what was the purpose, what were the features of Conservatism? The aim was simply to produce uniformity in Blue Lodge work by laying down in cipher an accurate reproduction of the Webb work of the early part of the present century. The method was to form a Masonic brotherhood for that purpose, limiting the period to five years, and to bind the members together by the institution of a Degree styled "The Conservators' Degree."

It is no part of the present paper to publish these details, nor is it necessary, seeing that Committees in several States published in the Grand Lodge Proceedings all our circulars, and so-called "Masonic papers" published our private letters, equally violating confidence and decency. If the reader cares to see the whole movement elaborated in circular form he will find it in the old files of Grand Lodge Publications.

And when he finds it he will find a plan which had the approval, which had the cordial approbation of 3000 as bright Masons as ever our country produced. Why then the opposition?

1. Those "not invited to participate" clamoured indignantly at their exclusion. The fact that the Order of Conservators was a "wheel within a wheel" (like the Chapter System, the Commandery System, &c.) made it enemies, bitter and implacable. And yet this idea was but borrowed from that of "33rd and last Grade" of the Scotch Rite, in which the one is selected, the ninety-nine are passed by.

2. The stereotyping of the Webb Notes in what was called "Mnemonics" was made the subject of outcry. The work was called "clandestine," an "exposition," &c. and yet it was what had been written in thousands of copies by the acknowledged heads of the Order. And as to the "printing," the book was never offered for sale, and was just as private as a written copy.

3. The attempt to secure uniformity outside of Grand Lodge authority was a subject of objection. But Grand Lodge authority has been invoked in this direction for a century and has always failed.

4. Personal jealousy. Those opposed to me and my friends found this a favourable opportunity (as was openly said) "to rise upon our ruins." In every Grand Lodge there are parties, and in every Grand Lodge rivalries that run into strife and contention. Where the "Conservators" were sufficiently strong (as in Iowa, Indiana, Minnesota, Nebraska, &c.) the opposition was beaten and the quarrel ceased. Where their opponents had the advantage (as in Missouri, Kentucky, Illinois, &c.), they took the reins of Grand Lodge and forced the "Conservators" to succumb. The results of the movement upon the whole were favourable in producing uniformity of work, but our success would have been a hundred times greater had the weapons used against us been those of argument and fair debate.

Among the Masonic projects agitated from year to year with persistency, that of a General Grand Lodge is conspicuous. It was proposed in Pensylvania more than a century since, for in those days the Philadelphia brethren were not so easily alarmed at the idea of innovations as now. But although the name of George Washington was proposed as the first National Grand Master, and I suppose he was not unwilling to accept the honour, and the best talent of the day was employed to make the scheme feasible, yet it failed egregiously. Only a small number of the Grand Lodges consented to it. Two or three more promised to consider it. Three or four more quietly ignored it, and then the matter fell through. But it was resumed in after years again and again. About 1822 a convention of leading Masons was held, of which the celebrated jurist, John Marshall, was chairman. Seaton, of the National Intelligencer, took an active part in the meetings. Henry Clay was present. An appeal to the Fraternity was drafted, which shows the hand of the great Kentuckian who, it was understood, was to be the National Grand Master. But the failure was egregious. Even the Grand Lodge of Kentucky, of which Clay had been Grand Master, refused to go into it by a counter-report of great ability, showing the impracticability of the scheme.

Some thirty years later, Hon. Finlay M. King, of New York, to whom I have alluded in previous papers, took up the plan in company with Benjamin B. French and others, and for several years gave much time to its development, visiting Washington City and other cities to enlist the aid of leading Masons. At Chicago, September 1859, we had it up, with strong men like Mackey, Pierson and others to advocate it. But the idea of a National Grand Lodge is evidently distasteful to the popular mind, and I do not believe it will ever prevail. As it could not possibly produce uniformity in rituals, in legislation or in regalias, it is difficult to see what practical good it would accomplish; while the increased expense in Masonic workings, the confusion in government and the immense rush for office that would inevitably result, would neutralize any conceivable benefits to grow out of it.

In looking back thirty-six years over the Masonic field one of the most remarkable developments of Masonry is seen in the growth of the Scotch Rite. Even in 1850 it was nothing as a Masonic power. It had no influence. Nobody sought it or cared for it. A few old men claimed to be "thirty-thirds," and when they wanted to increase their numbers, one of them selected a man, took him to a private room, read to him from some poor manuscripts for an hour, and pronounced him a "thirty-second." That is exactly the way I came in. Even Brother Pike, who went one peg higher, cannot say when he was placed in his present exalted position, though no one doubts but what it was done legitimately. But no records were kept. No fees were charged. The degrees, such as they were, were "honorary." For my part, I was so disgusted with the childish and unmeaning stuff read to me by Giles F. Yates that for years the very name of Scotch Masonry called a smile to my face. I remember, in June 1856, Dr. Mackey brought his whole magazine of manuscripts to my house, and in the upper storey made "thirty-seconds" of some five or six brethren, no fees being charged and no records kept. It was a hot day in a hot climate, and I fear the good fellows found the Kentucky dinner with which my wife had endowed them rather too much for the necessary mental effort of taking in thirty-two degrees in ninety minutes! In 1858-59 I was Grand Commander of the Kentucky Grand Consistory at Louisville, and conferred the orders upon some fifty applicants, and although we did charge a fee (sixty dollars), and by the vigilance of Bro. Fred. Webber did keep a record, yet the loose and hasty communication of such varied Rituals (the whole in a single evening), was but a parody for which fifty cents would have been ample return. We had no scenery or machinery, not even candlesticks or aids of any sort.

But now, what a change! Pike put in his time and talents to reforming (better say, originating) the Rituals, and rallied around him scores of the most influential Masons in the South, and by 1860 the Scotch Rite was a power in the land. The North caught the fire, reformed their Rituals, settled (for a time) their quarrels, fitted up apartments, provided expensive and splendid accessories, and only the other day I saw that one of their leading "thirty-thirds" in New York is predicting a Napoleonic career for "the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite." To me it is marvellous. It shows what one man of intelligence, learning and zeal can do. It proves that the "equality" theory of Masonry in this country is not so popular after all as the "autocratic," and while I am not specially favourable to the system or its growth so far as it has been at the cost of Symbolical Masonry, yet I feel proud to pay my tribute to the edifice whose foundation was laid on walls built chiefly by Albert Pike.

"Chiefly by Pike," but there is a Cincinnati Mason to whom the credit of persistent and self-sacrificing devotion to the Scotch Rite is equally due, who bore the Cincinnati Consistory on his shoulders unaided for many years, whose own library of foreign and home authors upon this subject is the best in the world, a Mason whose knowledge is not limited to the Scotch Rite, but ranges through the "primality," the Blue Lodge degrees, and who knows as much of all the degrees in use in this country as any one else, a man to whom a long and intimate acquaintance has greatly endeared me—ENOCH T. CARSON.

Bro. Rob Morris, in the Masonic Review.

A meeting of the North London Chapter of Improvement was held on Thursday; Comp. Gregory, who presided, rehearsed the ceremony of exaltation. He was ably supported by Comps. Dean, Hunter, Bird, Knight, George &c. In future the meetings of this Chapter of Improvement will be held at Comp. Meekham's, the Alwyne Castle, St. Paul's Road.

The new Masonic Hall at Woolston, which is being built by Bro. Chapman for the accommodation of the brethren of the Clausentum Lodge, is rapidly approaching completion, and will be consecrated by the Provincial Grand Master for Hampshire and the Isle of Wight, Right Worshipful Bro. W. W. Beach, M.P., in November, on the tenth anniversary of the foundation of the Lodge.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—Indisputable Remedies.—In the use of these medicaments there need be no hesitation or doubt of their cooling, healing, and purifying properties. Imagination can scarcely conceive the marvellous facility with which this unguent relieves and heals the most inveterate sores and ulcers, and in cases of bad legs and bad breasts they act like a charm. The Pills are the most effectual remedy ever discovered for the cure of liver and stomach complaints, diseases most disastrous in their effects, deranging all the proper functions of the organs affected, inducing restlessness, melancholy, weariness, inability to sleep, and pain in the side, until the whole system is exhausted. These wonderful Pills, if taken according to the printed directions accompanying each box, strike at the root of the malady, stimulate the stomach and liver into a healthy action, and effect a complete cure.

HOLIDAY HAUNTS.

—:o:—

THE SOUTH EASTERN RAILWAY.

KENT is a most charming county, owing to a wonderful diversity of scenery and rich cultivation. It abounds in fruit, vegetables, cereals, and hops, and by some writers it has been designated the "Garden of England." It justly merits the title; besides, it has the additional advantage of a very attractive coast line, with numerous popular and fashionable watering places established thereon. No part of Kent is destitute of beauty, unless we except the shore of the Thames below Greenwich, and a part of the marshes, which make up in the richness of their feeding pasture for any lack of Nature's adornment. The South Eastern Railway goes through some of the most charming parts of the country. Before touching on Kent we may just observe that a branch of the line seems almost to mark the boundary between that county and Surrey. Leaving Charing Cross or Cannon-street, the line diverges at Spa-road, one division going to Deptford, and keeping as nearly as possible to the course of the river as far as Sheerness; the other going to New Cross and Lewisham, where it again divides. One branch takes in the country from Ladywell to Addiscombe-road, Croydon. Spurs also shoot out, taking in such charming spots as Bromley, Bickley, Shortlands, Hayes, West Wickham, and Eden Park. "Eden" is a very proper name for some of the places we have mentioned. From Croydon the line goes south to Redhill, west to Aldershot, and north-west to Reading, with which we have already dealt. What we may term the upper line, takes in Deptford, Greenwich and Woolwich, Abbey Wood, Belvedere, Erith, Dartford, and Gravesend. Between the latter place and Sheerness is Higham, where a branch turns sharp to the right for Strood, and joins the main line at Paddock Wood. At Lee, the next station beyond Lewisham, a loop line connects it with Dartford, passing through Eltham, Sidcup, Bexley and Crayford, all delightful localities. The other branch from Lee goes through Chislehurst, Orpington, Dunton Green (a spur-line going to Westerham), Sevenoaks to Tunbridge, a most charming country.

Among the towns and villages we have named there are some worthy of especial notice. Greenwich was once a royal borough, and although its ancient fame is somewhat dimmed, it rejoices in those matchless buildings called the Hospital, which are now alienated from their original purpose, although they still stand in all their pristine grandeur and beauty. Where for nearly two centuries our old sailors ended their days after the shocks of battle and the decay that time and disease bring, now young cadets are housed and educated, and prepared for the naval work of the future. Greenwich Hospital is one of the sights of England, and when the old sea lions were there they invested the building with a romance that was always pleasant and flattering to contemplate. Their yarns were not always true; like artists, fond of broad and striking effects, they laid on the colours thick: their habits were not always of the cleanest, yet there was something characteristic of the sea about the whole place, something which told of England's power on the ocean, and a good deal which showed that those who had won for her renown and power were well cared for by a grateful nation. All that is now changed, in accordance with the utilitarian spirit of the age; still, as we have said, the temple erected for the sons of Neptune remains as a magnificent monument of skill and gratitude. We by no means wish it to be understood that our old sailors are uncared for, but they are scattered far and wide, and no longer represent the past in a body as they did aforetime. Long before the Hospital was built there was a royal palace at Greenwich. Queen Elizabeth was born there, and many a gay gathering has been witnessed on the ground now covered with buildings, and part of which forms Greenwich Park, with the Observatory crowning its summit. The Park is still the rendezvous of the lower classes on holiday occasions, and at other times of visitors and residents, who enjoy its pleasant walks and scenery. The fair, once held on its borders, has vanished, and nobody mourns its departure. On the southern side of Greenwich Park is Blackheath—high, dry, and breezy—once the camping ground of Jack Cade, a rebel who caused much trouble in 1450, and whose character is humorously described by Shakespeare in the fourth Act, scene two, of the second part of Henry VI. The heath is now the resort of those who are fond of a healthy walk, of the few who indulge in the Scotch game of golf, and of the many who delight in cricket and football. Blackheath village lies on the far side of the heath, in a hollow, and presents a lively picture of activity set in a rustic, almost sylvan, frame. Beyond is the growing village of Lee, and further on still is Eltham, with its ruined palace, once the abode of kings, now the haunt of birds. For centuries Eltham Palace was the favoured residence of royalty. Parliaments were held there, princes and princesses were born there, and many a courtly crowd assembled within its walls. Froissart was a frequent guest at Eltham, and he has recorded some of the doings he witnessed. Now, in the words of Shakespeare, "Reproach and beggary is crept into the palace of our king"—reproach, because of decay; and beggary, because of neglect. Even now the ruins are worth visiting, especially by those who are familiar with the historical associations that surround the place, and are fond of traditions and archæological speculations. Not far from Eltham is Chislehurst Common, one of the most delightful spots in Kent. It is surrounded by noble trees and dotted here and there with villas and mansions. The church is chiefly in the Perpendicular style, and has a lofty spire. It contains some memorials of interest. Sir Francis Walsingham was born at Chislehurst, and here is Camden Place, the residence of that famous antiquary Camden; here also lived and died Napoleon III. Few who saw them will forget the scenes that were witnessed at the entrance to Camden Place when the illustrious exile laid at the very gates of death. Rich and poor clustered round the lodge to learn what they could of the patient's progress, and when at last death came, followed by the funeral obsequies, the sight was melancholy indeed. The remains of the "Man of December," whose power ceased with the defeat at Sedan, lie not far from the house where he lived, in a secluded spot, now the shrine in which are contained what were the chief hopes of the Bonapartist party. Orpington, Sidcup, the Crays, indeed the whole country round, is most charming. We need hardly dwell upon Gravesend, nor upon Sheerness; both are well known—one as a popular resort and the other as the site of a famous dockyard. Going from Higham southwards the line passes Strood and Maidstone. On the other, and what really is the main line, is Sevenoaks, beautifully situated. Near the town is Knole Park, a most enjoyable spot for a ramble. The mansion stands on high ground and is notable for its immense size and the treasures it contains. The main buildings are said to cover three acres of ground, and their contents include a large collection of pictures by Italian, Venetian, Flemish and Dutch painters, portraits of eminent poets, and other works of art. At the time of the reign of King John there was a mansion in Knole Park, the occupants of which were frequently changed. Thomas Bouchier, Archbishop of Canterbury between 1454 and 1486, bought the demesne and rebuilt the mansion. A great portion of the structure of that date is still standing. In 1603 it came into the possession of Thomas Sackville, who afterwards became Earl of Dorset, in whose family the property remains. A few miles further on is Tunbridge, an old town, which contains the ruins of a castle and some fragments of a Priory. To the west of Tunbridge is Penshurst, memorable as the home of Sir Philip Sydney, poet, scholar, soldier, and gentleman, in the highest sense of the word. His works are still read and admired, while his character is quoted as a model of what a man and an Englishman should be. One extract we quote from his writings, which is characteristic of the man. He wrote: "Let calamities be the exercise, but not the overthrow of my virtue. Let the power of my enemies prevail, but prevail not to my destruction. Let my greatness be their pretext, my pain be the sweetness of their revenge. Let them, if so it seems good unto Thee, vex me with more and more punishment; but, O Lord, let never their wickedness have such a head but that I may carry a pure mind in a pure body." It is singular, but nevertheless true, that Charles I. repeated these words shortly before his execution. There are many memorials of Sir Philip at Penshurst, but nothing so striking as the incident that occurred at the battle of Zutphen, where he received the wound that ended in death about four weeks afterwards. While lying on the field of war he was offered water to drink; he gently repulsed the kindly hand that held the welcome draught, and begged that it might be given to a soldier whose wants, he said, were greater than his own. Nearly a century later, a descendant of the family met with a very different fate. The contrast between Philip and Algernon Sydney is very great. One was loyal to the reigning monarch, the other assisted in the downfall of Charles I. He was nominated one of the King's judges, but, whatever part he may have taken in the trial, he was not present when judgment was pronounced, nor did he sign the death-warrant. He was a Republican; he fought on the side of Cromwell, but when the war was over, and "Old Noll" was appointed Protector, Sydney retired into private life. He went abroad at the Restoration, came back again and was pardoned. He was, however, suspected of being concerned in the Rye-house Plot, charged before Judge Jeffries, and like many others was illegally sentenced to death. To complete the contrast, we here quote what Bishop Burnet wrote of Algernon Sydney. He says he was "a man of the most extraordinary courage; a steady man even to obstinacy; sincere, but of a rough and boisterous temper, that could not bear contradiction, but would give foul language upon it." Penshurst is a delightful place, the house is built after many styles, and contains a rare store of historical and art treasures. In the same locality is Hever Castle, the home of Anne Boleyn, one of the wives of Henry VIII. and mother of Queen Elizabeth. What memories does the name awaken, what episodes does it recall. The castle itself presents no particular charm, it is the associations that surround its history that make it memorable. The interior contains much of interest in connection with the ill-fated Anne and her family, who attained to the zenith of their fame at her marriage, and sank rapidly into commonplace after her death. Whether she deserved her fate or not, it is not for us to contend. Henry was not the man to stick at trifles where his desires were concerned, and the fact that he put away so many of his wives from him leaves it at least open to suspicion that he himself was not guiltless. Whatever may be the truth with regard to the successor of Katherine, popular feeling went with Anne Boleyn. It is related that the latter's grandfather had an estate in Kent, on which resided a certain innkeeper. He was so indignant at the treatment of his old master's relative that he altered the sign of the house from the "Boleyne Arms" to the "Boleyne Butchered." According to "Historical Reminiscences of the City of London and its Livery Companies," by Thomas Arundell, B.D., Queen Elizabeth took every means to hush up her mother's sorrows and end, and induced the host to amend the sign into the "Bull and Butcher," which henceforth became a popular sign throughout all England.

Returning to Tunbridge, some remains will be found of an ancient castle and a priory. The history of the former is full of military exploits, while of the latter not much is recorded, and what is left of the building supplies very little information. A few miles further on is Tunbridge Wells, noted for its springs and charming scenery. The origin of the town can be traced with absolute precision. Both has its "Bladud," and the legend connected with his name. Tunbridge Wells owes its origin to Dudley Lord North, who, in 1606, was suffering from great physical exhaustion through dissipation. He was on his way to Eridge House in the neighbourhood, and was struck with the appearance of the water he saw flowing at his feet. He had a portion put into a bottle and submitted to his physicians, who pronounced it good. He drank, and was restored. Being a man of mark the place soon became famous, and continues so until this day. Lord Macaulay has limned Tunbridge Wells as it was originally, and we make no apology for quoting his description. He says:—

"When the court, soon after the Restoration, visited Tunbridge Wells, there was no town; but within a mile of the springs, rustic cottages, somewhat cleaner and neater than ordinary cottages of that time, were scattered over the heath. Some of these cabins were moveable, and were carried on sledges from one part of the common to another. To these huts men of fashion, wearied by the din and smoke o London, sometimes came in the summer to breathe fresh air, and to catch a glimpse of rural life. During the season a kind of fair was held daily near the fountain. The wives and daughters of the Kentish farmers came from the neighbouring villages with cream, cherries, wheatears, and quails. To chaff with them, to flirt with them, to praise their straw hats and tight heels, was a refreshing pastime to voluptuaries, sick of the airs of actresses and maids of honour. Milliners, toymen, and jewellers came down from London and opened a bazaar under the trees. In one booth the politician might find his coffee and the London Gazette; in another were gamblers, playing deep at basset; and on fine evenings the fiddlers were in attendance, and there were morris dances on the elastic turf of the bowling green." A wonderful change has come over the scene since that time, and now Tunbridge Wells, if not honoured with the presence of royalty, is visited by the aristocracy, for whom every provision is made. It is a fashionable town now, with its pump room, shaded streets, and beautiful walks. The common is a favourite resort, and the "grove" just the place to escape from the heat of the sun. Tunbridge Wells is said to be a modern counterpart of what Jerusalem was. Whether the comparison is correct or not, we cannot say, but the groups of houses are named after a surrounding hill, such as Mount Ephraim, Mount Zion, and Mount Pleasant. From some of these hills fine views are obtained. Although "Bladud" is absent, Tunbridge Wells is not without a legend. The water of the springs is powerfully tonic, of a steely taste, owing, it is said, to the devil having cooled his nose in it after St. Dunstan's attack with the hot tongues. Some beautiful walks and drives in the locality add to the charm of the place; there are also many gentlemen's seats round about, and the ruins of Bayham Abbey, linking the past with the present. Continuing on the line southwards, Battle is reached. Here William the Norman met Harold, King of England, and defeated him. The conflict was a bloody one, and the issue one of the most momentous in the history of the country. About a year after the battle William founded an Abbey in commemoration of his victory. The precincts of the Abbey were a mile in circuit, and the buildings were on a magnificent scale. The foundation was liberally endowed, and the exemptions and privileges granted were extraordinary. The Abbey shared the fate of other similar establishments at the time of the Dissolution of Monasteries, but the ruins still left indicate the character of the structure, and mark them as objects of profound interest to the archæologist. There is a tradition to the effect that the Roll of Battle Abbey was preserved in the crypt of what was believed to be the hall in which the tenants of the Abbey were entertained. The hall has been converted into a barn, but its Pointed windows, and the vaulted crypt beneath, with elegant pillars and arches, are sources of attraction. Authorities are divided in opinion about the Roll, some stating that when the Montagne family sold Battle Abbey they removed it to Cowdray, of which we have already spoken. When Cowdray House was destroyed by fire, in 1793, it is supposed that the Roll perished in the flames, that is, if it ever existed. Experts may speculate upon doubtful points; the ordinary tourist will find enough to interest him in the ruins of Battle Abbey without following their example. A few miles further on are St Leonards and Hastings, separately named, but joined together by bricks and mortar. The former may be considered a modern, though beautiful and aristocratic suburb of ancient Hastings. The latter place existed far back in the mists of time, which no new light has yet dispelled. Its known history, however, is sufficiently interesting to attract visitors, to keep them, and to make a repetition of their sojourn desirable. The ruins of the castle, perched hundreds of feet above the sea level, with its associations, alone command attention. In addition, there are the disposition of the houses, the walks, and sea, and country views unsurpassed on the Sussex coast. Almost any climate can be commanded at Hastings, from the warm and relaxing, to the invigorating air of the Yorkshire coast. A judicious selection of residence alone is necessary to satisfy most conditions of human life. Both St. Leonards and Hastings are protected from cold winds by hills behind, while the summits afford splendid views, and the valleys beneath rich varieties of scenery. Who that knows Hastings, has not revelled in Fairlight, with its Glen, Dropping Well, and Lovers' Seat. From the hill just beyond and above it, a sea view commands on either hand Dover Cliffs or Beachy Head, across to Boulogne Heights, and inland as many "as 10 towns, 66 churches, 70 martello towers, 5 ancient castles, 40 windmills, and 3 bays." Both Hastings and St. Leonards are charming in summer, and, according to some authorities, are equal to Torquay as winter residences. They are worthy of the fame they have acquired, as art and enterprise have been added to the charms that nature has so lavishly bestowed. From Hastings the line goes upwards again to Ashford, a spur branching out at Appledore to Lydd, and now being continued to Dungeness.

From Ashford the main line goes on to Westenhanger (where a spur shoots out to Hythe and Sandgate), on to Shorncliffe, Folkestone, and Dover. Hythe is a sleepy little place, although at one time it was an important seaport. The sea has receded, and left the ancient castle and harbour three miles in'and. The church stands on high ground, and from its tower a fine view can be obtained of Romney Marsh and the sea. Parts of the structure are Roman; the chancel, which is of rare beauty, is Early English. Underneath is a groined crypt, skilfully designed and constructed. It is of interest to the few, while to the many the enormous collection of blanched skulls, piled up in order and carefully preserved, are objects of wonder. They are said to be over a thousand years old, and to have been collected on the sea shore after some great battle between our ancient ancestors. The avenue of elms leading to the sea is another sight to be seen. Pretty, quiet little Sandgate, like Hythe, lies below Shorncliffe, a lofty eminence, on which an encampment has existed since the Crimean War. A castle was built at Sandgate by Henry VIII., to which has been added a martello tower. It is a pleasant walk from Folkestone to Sandgate along the Lees and cliffs. Inland, in the distance on the right, are the Sugar-loaf and Castle Hills, below the thriving little watering place, and to the left the open sea. The South Eastern Railway Company have redeemed Folkestone from decay, and have made it one of the pleasantest and most prosperous resorts on the coast. The town is of early date, and before the sea made encroachments it possessed some ancient monuments of piety and war. Little now remains to show of their existence. Tradition gives it that Eadbald, at the request of his pious daughter, Eanswitha, founded the first Nunnery in England, at Folkestone. "The author of New Legends of England," says Lambard, 'reporteth many wonders of this woman; and that she lengthened the beame of a building three foote, when the carpenters, missing in their, measure had made it so much too short; that she baled and drew water over the hills and rocks against nature from Swecton, a mile off, to her oratorie at the seaside; that she forbade certaine birdes the country, which before did much harm thereabouts; that she restored the blinde, cast out the devil, and healed innumerable folkes of their infirmities; and therefore, after her death, she was, by the policy of the Popish priestes, and follie of the common people, honoured for a saint." The church stands on the top of a high cliff, at the beginning of a splendid promenade, called the Lees. From this parade the visitors look down upon the harbour and beach, and far out upon the sea, even to the coast of France, to which there is a capital service of boats. The excursions to Boulogne are an attractive feature during the season, and make a pleasant change in the ordinary routine of seaside jaunts. The trains run down to the pier to put down and take up passengers to and from the Continent, and, judging from the progress made in a few years, the traffic between Folkestone and France will be a big thing ere long. The ways into the old town are steep and ragged, the streets are not attractive, but the country around is beautiful. The walk along the cliff to Dover is one of the pleasures of the place. On the way is what used to be called the "Warren," a charming bit of miniature Swiss scenery. The railway to Dover passes through it, and unfortunately landslips mar its beauty; still it used to be a wonderfully pretty spot, abounding in surprises at every turn, and presenting a different picture at every step. The difficulties of making the line to Folkestone were immense, and one of the triumphs of engineering skill is the viaduct upon entering the town. It has a very light, even elegant appearance, and when a train is passing one wonders how so airy a structure can bear the weight and resist the vibration. There are many hills round about, and in the valleys are delightful bits of scenery. Churches stand out here and there, hoary with age and full of charm for the student. At Swingfield Minnis, about four miles off, there are the remains of a Preceptory of the Knights of St. John, which formerly belonged to a Commandery of the Knights Templars. The air of Folkestone is salubrious and the bathing good. We have already spoken of Dover, Walmer, Deal, Ramsgate, and Margate, but Sandwich has been omitted. It is an ancient town, and was once one of the wealthiest parts of England. It cannot be called pretty, and yet there is a quaintness about the town which interests visitors.

On the line returning to Ashford is Minster, a little village full of legends. With a brief reference to this much-frequented spot we shall close this paper. Minster Abbey, as it is called, stands on the site of a Saxon foundation, which owed its origin to a curious expiation of a murder committed by one Thanor. A certain Princess, named Domneva, daughter of the eldest son of Eadbald, and wife to Merwadd, the son of Penda, King of Mercia, refused some presents offered to her, in consequence of the crime that had been committed, and with the sufferers in whom she was interested. Instead of the presents she asked the King to grant her as much land as her lame deer "could run over at one course." The "course" resulted in the acquirement of about ten thousand acres, and was the origin of the Abbey. This lady took the vow of chastity after she had borne her husband three children, and afterwards performed some extraordinary miracles. She was known by the name of St. Mildred, and forty years after her death her body was so pure and incorrupt that "she seemed more like a lady in her bed than one resting in her sepulchre or grave." We cannot follow all the monkish stories that are told in connection with Minster Abbey; they are nevertheless characteristic of the times in which they are said to have occurred; but tourists ought not to miss seeing it and the memorials it contains.

At a meeting of the New Forest Lodge, No. 319, held at Lymington, on the 11th inst., a P.M.'s jewel was presented to the Immediate Past Master, Bro. Horton (of Southampton, and formerly of Portsmouth), as a mark of the brethren's high appreciation of his able services throughout the past year.

Madame Franziska Ellmenreich, an eminent German actress, of whose talent report speaks in the highest terms, will make her debut on the English stage at the Gaiety Theatre, at a Special Matinée, on Wednesday, the 26th inst. Madame Ellmenreich is said to have a wonderful command of the English tongue, and has already played in our language in the United States, with the greatest possible success, in such roles as Camille, Marie Stuart, Adrienne Lecouvreur, &c. The American critics write of her as "a great actress, majestic and powerful, and at the same time subtle in portraying the most delicate shades of human passion."

THOUGHTS ON THE NEW HISTORY.

By Bro. Jacob Norton.

I MAILED three articles under the above heading: the second and third were published, and the first did not probably reach its destination. I hesitated for some time whether to rewrite it or not, but I find, like the Bourbons, our high degreers "never learn anything, and never forget anything;" that they still hanker after a Masonic "history of events which have never happened." Thus, our Boston Bro. Charles L. Woodbury has recently published an article in the Voice of Masonry which is on a par with his oration on Egyptian Masonry which was reprinted three years ago in this journal. And the Freemason of 11th August opens with a leader on Masonic archæology, in which the author begs, prays and hopes for a history of Freemasonry which will conglomorate "the mysteries, the secret societies, the Roman Collegia, the building corporations, the monastic fraternities, the mediæval guilds, the compagnage, the operative Lodges, the knightly orders, and the Hermetic association." I suppose the "secret societies" meant the Fehmgerichte, the Assassins, the Jesuits, &c. The writer says, "Neither can we safely forget * * * the fact of contemporary Hermeticians * * * of which even Ashmole was certainly a member in some form;" and because Ashmole was a member in "some form," though no one knows what form, therefore Ashmole might have Hermetised Freemasonry. What curious reasoning! Briefly then, I venture to assert, that if such a Masonic history appeared it would deservedly be called the hotch potch history of Masonry. I therefore determined to reconstruct the lost article.

Ever since the 1723 Constitutions appeared, a succession of Masonic scholars (their name is legion) continued to assert that either Freemasonry descended from the ancient mysteries, or the mysteries descended from Masonry. And after their peculiar fashion they demonstrated that every old sect—Pagan, Jewish, or Christian, who possessed a secret, were brothers of the Masonic Fraternity. And an awfully learned Boston brother came to the conclusion that because somebody said that the early Christians had a secret, therefore, not only were the two saints John Masons, but all the apostles were also Masons; and he had no doubt that the apostles shifted the Sabbath from Saturday to Sunday inside of a tyled Masonic Lodge.

It is curious that while some of our Masonic writers can reason like philosophers on some subjects, yet no sooner do they take the pen in hand to write on Masonry, when all reason and commonsense seems to forsake them. I could name a score of them, but I shall here refer only to two Masonic scholars. First, Bro. Woodbury, above referred to, who is not only a scholar and a distinguished lawyer, but he is the best read man I know of among our American Masons. But whatever he has written about Masonic history is nothing but imagination and assertion. And second, Bro. Simon Greenleaf, Past Grand Master of Maine, Professor of Law in the Harvard College, and author of "Law of Evidence," considered a standard work, not only in America but also in England. In a note on page 2 of Bro. Gould's History, the reader will find "Law of Evidence" referred to with approbation. Lawyers who have received instruction from Bro. Greenleaf, in College, speak in the highest terms of his reasoning powers. But in 1820, Bro. Greenleaf published a Masonic book; and if the reader has access to the Freemason's Chronicle of 20th of January, and will read an article headed "Crazy and Partizan Masonic Writers," he will see that Bro. Greenleaf's reasoning on Masonry was no reasoning at all.

I have read all the authors who wrote about the ancient mysteries, wherever I could lay hands on their books, including Clemense of Alexandria, and I repeatedly urged our Masonic scholars for information as to where I could find the alleged connection between Masonry and the ancient mysteries, without receiving a satisfactory answer. The truth is, Pagan writers who refer to the mysteries keep the secrets to themselves, and the early Christian writers, like our high degree lecturers, merely guessed and asserted without knowing anything about the mysteries. I have repeatedly protested against the writings of our Masonic luminaries; but what chance has one who is not classically educated when coping with a D.D., an M.D., an LL.D., or some other kind of a learned Masonic tweedledee? In answer to a commonsense argument the deluded believers exclaim:—"Have you examined the whole range of classical literature? and don't our Doctors know more than you do about ancient history?" In short, the mass of the Brotherhood who have taken the high degrees stick to their belief, because their Doctors say it is so. At last our Bro. Gould, in whom is fortunately combined great patience, scholarship, and common sense, and I have no doubt that he made a more thorough examination of the literature which treats of the ancient mysteries than all the Masonic high degree Doctors did together. Well, Bro. Gould says, "As to the real object of the mysteries nothing is certain." And again, "Of the instruction communicated in the inner mysteries no record whatever has come down to us." We see, now, that our awfully learned connectors of Freemasonry with the ancient mysteries have, for the last hundred and sixty years, made much ado about nothing.

Bro. Gould devoted fifty-six quarto pages of his history to the ancient mysteries; and besides the authorities referred to in the work itself, the two hundred and sixty-eight foot-notes will refer the reader to more authorities. I think Bro. Gould has proved himself a marvel of patience and industry. If, however, our brethren of the so-called high degrees think that Bro. Gould was unjust to their claims, then let them write a history of Freemasonry to their heart's content, or let them point out wherein Bro. Gould wrongs them, and not continue, by their wild assertions and innendoes, to hold out false hopes to their deluded dupes that the legends invented by Masonic quacks in the last century for manufacturing high degrees were based on historic facts.

In the second Chapter Bro. Gould treats on the "Old Charges." In the last paper I discussed the ages of the two oldest MSS., but finding, since then, that Bro. Gould treats upon that subject in the next volume, I shall leave that to a future consideration. That these old MSS. were a subject of interest to me for many years I beg to refer the reader to the Freemason, vol. iv. pp 378-9, of 17th June 1871, wherein I pointed out that these Old Charges were the bond fide rituals of the pre-1717 Masons; and on page 217 of the same volume I called attention to extracts made by Mr. Thomas Riley, from the old City of London Records, showing that, up to the year 1356 the London Masons had no code of laws whatever, and consequently there could have been no Masonic organisation up to that year; but, on the 2nd February 1356, in order to put a stop to fights and quarrels between the operative masons, the Mayor, Aldermen, and Sheriffs summoned twelve of the most skilful masons for consultation, who agreed to promulgate some eight or ten regulations for the government of the London Masons. Now, if the Masons of the English metropolis had no code of laws before 1356, it is highly improbable for the Masons in the provincial towns to have had any such a code; and unless positive proof is adduced to show the existence of a Masonic organisation at an earlier period we may assume that no Masonic brotherhood existed in England in 1356.

In 1360, the Statutes indicated the existence of Masonic and Carpenteric secret societies: for the Statute says—"That all alliances and covins of masons and carpenters, and congregations, chapters, ordinances, and oaths betwixt them made, or to be made, shall be from henceforth void and wholly annulled." Whether these secret congregations were confined to London, and what kind of ordinances these societies had, I know not. The series of Masonic MSS. described by Bro. Gould in the second chapter are, however, valuable to the Masonic student for several reasons. For, first, they disabuse our mind from the notions promulgated by the late Dr. Mackey and other awfully learned Masonic scholars, that "our ancient brethren were philosophers:" for the legends in those MSS. prove conclusively that our ancient brethren were a simple-minded and credulous set. True, they talked about the "seven sciences, but the mere verbiage did not make them philosophers. And, second, those MSS. prove the continuity of the Masonic organisation in England for a period of near five hundred years.

The oldest MS. is the poem, or the "Halliwell Constitution." It is probable that the original code was written in prose, and a priest who was attached to the fraternity made it into rhyme, adding thereto three legends—the seven sciences, Noah's flood, the building of the tower of Babylon by Nabogodonzor seven miles high, so that in case of another flood, the people might ascend to the upper storey, which was above the high flood mark; and he also added a genuine Roman Catholic sermon, enjoining the brethren to be shrived, to cross themselves, &c. Now, with regard to monkish legends, we all know that monks in those days were great inventors of cock and bull stories, and these stories they invariably ascribed either to an unknown old "boke," or to tradition. Hence, when these stories cannot be traced by our antiquaries, either to a boke or to an old tradition, it is safe to credit the said monks as the inventors of that story or stories. Now our poet begins his first story about how Euclid founded a Masonic fraternity in Egypt thus:

"Whose wol bothe wel rede and loke,
He may fynde wryte yn olde boke."

And his second story about the origin of the Masonic Craft in England he introduces thus:

"Thys craft com ynto Englond, as y so say, Yn tyme of good Kynge Adelstonus day."

The third story is about the four holy martyrs. This story he refers to a book called "the legent of scanctorum, the names of quatour coronotorum." The conclusion I therefore come to is, that the two first stories were manufactured by his Reverence; and the third he copied from some old book of Christian martyrs, which was probably invented by an earlier monkish writer.

The second MS. is known as the "Matthew Cooke MS." It seems, at the first glance of the two oldest MSS., that the author of No 2 had a copy of the poem before him, and would have written his book also in poetry, but, being unable to rhyme, he therefore did the next best thing he could by writing his lines in irregular lengths, and made it look like "blank verse." But, be that as it may, the author copied from the poem the Euclid and Athelstan Legends, the Seven Sciences, and took advantage of the hints given in the poem about Noah's Flood, the Tower of Babel, &c., by introducing Biblical personages into the Masonic brotherhood of whom the poet never dreamt:—thus we have in this MS. Lamech, Jabal, Jubal, Tubal, Enoch, Abraham. The MS. says, that the sciences were engraved by the antediluvians, Bros. Enoch and Co., on two stones. One of these stones could not burn, and the other could not sink; that many years after the Flood one of these stones was discovered by Bro. Pythagoras, and the other by Bro. Hermes. The fashion of giving Charges to Masons began with Bro. Nimrod, when he sent a company of Masons to Bro. Asur. When Bro. Solomon was in Egypt he taught Euclid the seven sciences, and the Euclid legend shows that Euclid was the founder of Egyptian Masonry. The Jews having learned Masonry in Egypt, David was therefore a Mason, and so was Abraham. Each of these distinguished brethren gave Charges to the Masons. The MS. also alludes to Solomon's "Master Mason" as having been the son of the King of Tyre. All these histories the author supports from authorities of some unknown old Chronicles. Next comes the legend that Charles Martel was a Bro. Mason, next Bro. St. Alban is introduced, next comes Bro. Athelstan and his son Edwin, all of whom loved Masons well and gave them Charges; and last, most strangely, the story of Euclid is repeated, only the name is changed into Englet.

Bro. Gould describes and compares forty-nine old Masonic MSS. One of the same class of MSS. has, since the publication of the new history, been discovered by Bro. Sillitoe, of Manchester. These MSS., all in all, may be compared to a family that we know; that the Halliwell poem is the great grandfather of the family, the Matthew Cooke

MS. stands next in order as No. 2, and the forty-eight remaining MSS., which Bro. Hughan called "The Old Charges," are the progeny of the Cooke MS. In what order the "Old Charges" stand to each other is immaterial, for it is certain that they were written at different times, and for different Lodges in various parts of England, and even for one or more Scotch Lodges; in short, the Cooke MS. contains some legends borrowed from the poem and the Old Charges, though with some variations and improvements, reproduced all the legends given by the author of the Matthew Cooke MS., hence the legends in the succession of the said Masonic MSS. prove the existence of a Masonic fraternity at the time when the Halliwell poem was written. As to the question of the age of the poem there is some difference of opinion, but anyhow they differ only in about forty years. One dates its age to 1390, and another, dates it 1427 or a little later. And if we further take into consideration the succession of Masonic laws:—thus, the laws enacted by the Mayor, Alderman, &c., in 1356, were absorbed as it were, and form part of the Halliwell Constitution, and the thirty laws of the Halliwell Constitution form more or less the backbone of the Constitutions given in the Old Charges, and add thereto the Statute of 1360, above quoted,—these, altogether, furnish a chain of evidence of the continuous existence of a Masonic organisation for about five hundred years.

I said, that the 17th century MSS. were copied from the Cooke MS., with "variations and improvements." I will just point out some of these improvements. Thus, the two oldest MSS. give a full account of the Athelstan assembly, but neither location nor date is mentioned, but the oldest writer of the 17th century discovered that the assembly was held in York, and of course the succeeding writers copied it. Dr. James Anderson discovered, in 1723, that the Athelstan assembly met "about A.D. 930." But in 1738 our learned author fixed the exact year, viz., 926. Similar discoveries are abundant about the other legends. I must, however, call attention to one legend in particular, viz., the author of the Cooke MS. merely says, "And the King's son of Tyre was his [Solomon's] master mason." And that is all he says about the King of Tyre and Solomon's master mason. The writer of the 17th century—"Old Charges"—discovered that the King's son of Tyre, who was Solomon's master mason, was named "Aynon." The remainder of the Old Charges repeat the name, though variously spelled. In 1723, Doctor Anderson discovered that Hiram Abif was Solomon's master mason. In 1738 a copy of the Old Charges was printed (evidently from the one engraved by Pine in 1729) in which, besides copying from Anderson the name of Hiram Abif, the writer added a discovery of his own, viz., that Hiram Abif's father was "Urias the Israelite;" and in 1819 an American Masonic luminary discovered the model of the monument which King Solomon erected to the memory of Hiram Abif.

I am, however, puzzled, first, as to whether Hiram Abif belonged to the tribe of Napthali, or to that of Dan? For the Books of Kings and of Chronicles differ about it. And second, the Bible does not say that Hiram Abif was the builder of Solomon's Temple at all. I am, however, just now too tired to speculate about it, and must, therefore, let the Hiram Abif puzzles be solved by the coming Masonic historian of the near future who, in his history, based on "Masonic Archæology," will doubtless solve all Masonic riddles.

PROVINCIAL GRAND CHAPTER OF WILTSHIRE.

THE annual meeting of this Grand Chapter was held at the Masonic Hall, Salisbury, on Friday, the 7th inst., under the presidency of the P.G. Supt. the Right Hon. Lord H. F. Thynne, the chairs of H. and J. being occupied by Companions Stokes and Wyndham respectively, the former, owing to the unavoidable absence of the P.G.H. Companion King, the latter owing to the vacancy caused by the death of Companion S. Gauntlett, who was appointed to that office at the previous P.G. Chapter, and whose loss to the Province was alluded to in feeling terms by the P.G. Superintendent.

There was no special business before the Provincial Grand Chapter, and the usual routine was quickly disposed of, the following being the appointments of the Provincial Grand Officers for the ensuing year:—

Obituary.

—:o:—

THE LATE BRO. DR. F. H. WILSON ILES.

ALTHOUGH equality is one of the cardinal points in the economy of Freemasonry, there are some who stand out conspicuously as being worthy of special honour. Even in life such brethren are marked out for preferment, but it is only when death comes that the rare virtues of some are really appreciated. 'Twas at the witching hour of night on Tuesday that Brother Dr. F. H. Wilson Iles, Deputy Provincial Grand Master for Hertfordshire, passed from life to death; we hope to a new life that shall be immortal. Bro. Iles was a devoted Mason, a laborious worker, and a generous supporter of every good movement. From our knowledge of the Province, gained by actual experience, we can say that Herts has lost a noble representative, and the Order generally a bright and shining light. The Province has stood high in the list of contributors to the Masonic Charities, owing in a great measure to Bro. Ile's indefatigable and unselfish efforts. Masonry to him was a labour of love, its lessons a gospel, and their practice a duty. How well he realised his obligations and sought to honour them, let those testify who were intimately associated with him. We knew him, and respected him for his devotion; we mourn his loss with those who, perhaps, have a still deeper sense of how great that loss is than we have. At the time of his death Bro. Iles was Master of the Clarendon Lodge, No. 1984, into which office he was installed by the Provincial Grand Master of Hertfordshire, Brother Halsey, M.P., in December last. He was an able worker, and the mode in which he invested his Officers on the occasion of his installation afforded intense pleasure to those who were privileged to hear him. The Lodges in the Province will go into mourning in memory of Bro. Iles, and it is to be hoped that the deeds he did in the flesh will long be remembered as mementoes of a noble soul. We learn that our deceased brother had the misfortune to scratch one of his fingers while performing a surgical operation. He paid no attention to what appeared to be a very simple matter, and unfortunately blood poisoning set in, which terminated in death as stated above. We may add that Brother Iles was initiated in the Watford Lodge, No. 404, at Watford, in 1859; in 1866 he filled the post of W.M. of his Mother Lodge, and afterwards became its Treasurer, an office he held until his death. In 1874, on the installation of Brother T. F. Halsey, M.P., as Provincial Grand Master of Hertfordshire, Brother Iles was appointed Prov. Grand Secretary. He subsequently, upon the resignation of Brother Sedgwick, in 1879, was selected to fill the office of Deputy Grand Master of the Province. We have already mentioned his connection with the Clarendon Lodge, and other instances of duty done in behalf of Craft Masonry might be mentioned. He was a member of the Royal Arch and Mark degrees. He was exalted in May 1861 in the Watford Chapter, No. 404, and was First Principal in 1868 and 1873. He was also a Past Grand H., Treasurer of his Chapter, and in February 1875 he consecrated the Gladsmuir Chapter, No. 1385, Barnet, of which he was elected an honorary member. Brother Iles was S.W. and Treasurer of the Watford Lodge of Mark Masters, No. 241, a P.E.C. and Treasurer of the Stuart Encampment of Knights Templar, Watford, a P.A.G.D.C. of the Great Priory of England. He was not less conspicuous in charitable movements in connection with the Order. Brother Iles was a Life Governor of the Royal Masonic Boys' School, and the Royal Masonic Benevolent Institution, and had served the office of Steward to both Charities. He was also a Life Subscriber of the Girls School, for which he intended to act as Steward at the next Festival. Such a record is rarely reached, and the loss of Brother Iles can only be approximately measured by taking into account the various movements with which he was so intimately associated. The funeral will take place to-day (Saturday) at Watford Cemetery, at 3·30 p.m.

The ceremony of installation of W.M. will be rehearsed by Bro. James Stevens, P.M. of The Great City Lodge, in the United Pilgrims Lodge of Instruction, No. 507, at the Surrey Masonic Hall, Camberwell, S.E., on Friday, the 28th inst., at 7.30. The members of the Lodge of Instruction will be pleased to welcome visitors on this occasion.

RANDOM NOTES AND REFLECTIONS.

TWO questions of the first importance are now before the Craft, and until they are finally settled there will be need of much patience and forbearance. Whatever may be the opinion of the Provinces generally, among a considerable and influential section of them strong views are held on the subject of the status of Past Masters. The brethren who carried the resolution of the 8th August did not journey up to London at the bidding of mere sentiment; a goodly number of them did not put in an appearance a second time at the Quarterly Communication in September merely to seal that sentiment The conviction, in their minds at least, was strong and fervent, and it will require something more than forcible language, or chaff and banter to move them from the position they have taken up. Among the brethren in London, who may be termed the Conservatives of the Order, there is a disposition to let matters remain as they were before the question was raised upon the revision of the rules. But this position seems almost impossible. Many anomalies have been brought to light during the discussion of the subject which it would be well to prevent in the future. If these anomalies can be swept away without making a radical change in old practice, so much the better. We believe in reward following work, and that reward should come from the body for whom the work was done. The influence of such examples is great because the motive is palpable. It is scarcely less effective when honour is voluntarily conferred upon a joining Past Master. The whole of the members of the Lodge are participators in the act, and willingly give what they can on the ground of merit alone. To make it imperative on a Past Master joining a new Lodge that he shall take rank as if he had earned the office in the Lodge is to narrow the test of worth to his admission. It is placing law above choice; it lessons the powers of a Lodge, and therefore is likely to provoke hostilities.

—:o:—

There is something in the argument that a Master's work is not only done for the Lodge to which he belongs, but for the whole Craft. That is so in the sense that it gives him a common footing in Grand Lodge. It also shows that although there are divergences in work, the result is the same. The comparison ceases here and individuality asserts itself, without which Masonry would not be the grand institution it is. It is universal in principle, it should also be universal in practice. It is undoubtedly local in working. Each centre, like the father of a family, has its children, who in turn grow up to be fathers. However widely they may be scattered, there is still the head, the principal, to whom honour and homage are given. A man may attain to the highest point of national fame, and his name may become the property of the country, yet he still retains his individuality as the member of the family to which he belongs.

—:o:—

Other conditions being satisfied, there is no reason why a joining Past Master should not retain all the privileges that his office brings outside of his own home. It cannot, on the other hand, be fairly contended that he should claim the special advantages which pertain to his own abode, except they are willingly yielded by those who have received him among them. We do not think that the right of rank is inherent in the office of Past Masters, and that it ought not to be so created by law. What is inherent is already recognised by Grand Lodge, and the only question to be settled is, that the brother who leaves his mother Lodge should not sacrifice the privileges he has gained in the Craft as a concrete body when he joins another Lodge. If these are assured to him, his local rank may very properly be left to those who elect him.

—:o:—

No fundamental law need be altered to effect the change which has been indicated. There is no necessity for any rude disturbance of old landmarks. A joining Past Master would know that merit alone would entitle him to secure the coveted position, and the local Lodges would be free agents.

—:o:—

Not less likely to cause diversity of opinion is the subject of the re-building of the Temple. Some brethren are impatient at the delay that has already taken place, and would hurry on to a decision; others, again, see in postponement the opportunity for perfecting a really good scheme. It is evident that the plan proposed by the Special Building Committee has frightened a great many of the members, who see no finality in the estimates, and who are in doubt as to the prudence of spending so much money with the prospect of a small return. We confess that this feature has struck us with considerable force. Taking the plan now before the Craft, it appears as if the chief consideration had been paid to the gastronomic arrangements. It is true that it is proposed to take in the present banqueting hall, and with the site of the late temple make one great building of the two. The contemplated outlay is great—the absolute expenditure would be enormous. Before brethren make up their minds it would be as well to consider what property could be obtained west of the existing building. At present the outward appearance of Freemasons' Hall is not uniform, is, in fact, lopsided. The acquisition of a few houses and their conversion into a wing would complete the outside character of the structure. Of course, the question of outlay should be considered as well as appearance, but there would be the advantage of possessing property that would cover all probable necessities for centuries to come.

—:o:—

The esoteric part of the scheme requires more consideration than it has received. Now is the time to see whether a museum and library, worthy of the Order, cannot be founded, whether other necessary accommodation could not be provided, so that the Freemasons' Hall of the future should be the complete home of the brethren, where they could not only participate in the celebration of the rites of the Craft, with all the accessories that art and wealth could purchase, and where they could have the inner wants supplied after the most comfortable and improved fashion, but also where those who love the archæology of Freemasonry could sip lightly of reference books, or drink deeply of the rich stores of learning that can be gathered together. Man is a composite being, and all his faculties require attention. It appears to us imperative, therefore, that not only the building scheme, but also the completion of other arrangements should engage the consideration of the brethren. A grand opportunity has been created by misfortune, we ought to make the best of it, and in no way could this spirit be better exemplified than in founding a library and museum that for ages to come should testify of the brethren of the present that they were not wholly given up to the letter of the Craft, but partook also of its spirit.

—:o:—

It is a mistake to suppose that Past Masters have no seats in Grand Lodges in the United States. At present we believe, with one exception, they have that privilege, but as the membership grows it will become a question of the near future whether the right to attend Grand Lodge should not be limited to the officers of the Lodges within the jurisdiction of the authority under which they live.

—:o:—

Amusing incidents occasionally occur in Lodges. There is one recorded in the Rough Ashlar (South Australia) It appears that the Worshipful Master of a certain Lodge appointed two lawyers to two conspicuous offices Addressing them with regard to their particular duties, he said: "If unfortunately a dispute should arise between any of the brethren, it will be your duty to endeavour to heal the breach, and to hold out to them the olive branch of peace." Professional instinct would lead these officers to disregard this advice; their obligations teach them quite another lesson. Just as they realise the spirit of duty, will be their action. If they are true to principle, their practice will be virtuous, however strongly their professional sympathies might incline them.

—:o:—

How or by what means a rumour got abroad that the number of vacancies in the Boys' and Girls' Schools was to be increased does not appear. That such a rumour was afloat we have been well assured. It turns out that the generous wish was father to the thought. Notwithstanding the economy of management and the liberality of donors, it is not at present deemed advisable to increase the number of inmates in either establishment. No one would wantonly excite hopes that cannot be realised, nor would any one, with a due sense of responsibility, give weight to mere speculations. Yet this has been done in the cases we have named, much to the annoyance of those who have taken up cases, and to the disappointment of the candidates themselves, who saw hope in the large number of vacancies. We cannot learn that there was any real ground for this hope, and we cannot protest too strongly against a practice that, however well meant, recoils with painful effect upon those who yearn for the help which both Institutions so well afford, but whose capacities are limited. We should rejoice if any additions could be made to the list of vacancies, but we should hesitate about giving currency to a rumour that only inflicts pain by raising false hopes. We are not necessarily inclined to accept the present state of things as final, nor are we inclined to let the Governors of the two Institutions now under consideration have matters all their own way. We yield to them all the credit that is their due, and we respect their opinion; but there is a time when they require a push forward. That period has not yet arrived; and before any further announcement is made, relative to the probable number of candidates, it would be more prudent as well as kinder to wait for the official decision.

MASONIC CLUB IN ADELAIDE (SOUTH AUSTRALIA).

It is announced that a scheme is on foot to build a Masonic club on the land adjoining the Masonic Hall, Flinders street. The plans, which are elaborate, were recently submitted to the trustees, and approved, except as to some minor details. If carried out, the club will make a handsome addition to the city.

The Lodge of Benevolence held its monthly meeting at Freemasons' Hall, on Wednesday; Bro. Joshua Nunn occupied the President's chair, while Bros. James Brett and Charles Atkins occupied their chairs as Senior and Junior Vice Presidents. Bro Nunn stated that several letters had been received since the August meeting from petitioners then relieved, thanking the brethren for the grants they had made. The new list of petitioners was perhaps the smallest known for years, there being only twelve names on it. The cases were carefully gone into, and a total sum of £370 was awarded. In one case a large grant was made, but the total amount will stand out as among the least the Lodge has voted in modern times at one meeting. There was a large attendance.

Many of our subscribers, both at home and abroad, will readily note that our esteemed Bro. W. J. Hughan has changed his address. Bro. Hughan has a very large number of correspondents, and he has the credit of invariably replying promptly to any communication that may be sent him. In order to facilitate this, our readers should in future address him at Grosvenor House, Warren-road, Torquay. We sincerely trust this change of locality may have a beneficial effect upon the health of our learned and enthusiastic brother.

A meeting of the Grand Master's Council, No. 1, of Royal and Select Masters of England, &c. (Bro. Thos. Charles Walls R.P.G. Ill. M., Thrice Ill. M.), will be held at the Masonic Hall, 8A Red Lion-square, on Thursday next, at 5.30 p.m. The names of a large number of brethren appear on the agenda as candidates for admission into the Rite.

The Annual Provincial Grand Lodge of Mark Masters of Berks and Oxon will be held at Reading, under the banner of the Leopold Lodge, No. 235, on the 9th prox., by command of the Right Worshipful Provincial Grand Master, Bro. the Right Hon. the Earl of Jersey.

INSTALLATION MEETINGS, &c.

YARBOROUGH LODGE, No. 811.

THE installation meeting of this numerously attended and flourishing Lodge was held on the 15th instant, at the Masonic Rooms, Royal Pavilion, Brighton. The chair was occupied by Brother V. P. Freeman P.G.S. in the absence of Bro. H. K. Cook W.M.; G. S. Godfree I.P.M., Lomax S.W., Sharp J.W., Germon P.M. 1466 Treas., De Paris P.P.G.S.D. Sec., Ardley S.D., Dr. Burrows J.D., Halford P.M. M.C., Cross Chaplain, Roworth Organist. P.M.'s Bros. W. R. Wood G. P. Grand Lodge of England, Taaffe, Lainson, Chalk P.P.G.P. Sussex, Holford, L. Lewis P.G.S. Visitors—Bros. V. P. Freeman P.G.S. Sussex, Broadbridge W.M. 1797, Thompson W.M. 56, Davis 916, Kuhe P.G.O. Grand Lodge of England, Lockyear 815, Lye 1110, Long 1726, Newcombe W.M. 1821, Creek 271, A. King W.M. 271 P.P.G.O. Sussex, H. M. Levy P.M. 188. Lodge was opened, and the minutes were confirmed. A Board of Installed Masters was opened, and Bro. B. Lomax was presented and duly installed into the chair by the retiring W.M., Bro. Cook, in a very excellent and perfect manner, in the presence of 19 W.M.'s and P.M.'s. The newly-installed W.M. then, in appropriate terms, appointed and invested his Officers:—Bros. Cook I.P.M., Sharp S.W., Ardley J.W., W. H. Germon P.M. Treasurer, De Paris Secretary, Burrows S.D., Dykins J.D. Lainson I.G., Roworth Organist, Cross Chaplain, Hughes Tyler. Bro. Freeman, in a perfect manner, gave the concluding address, and was warmly congratulated on its conclusion by the brethren and visitors. A letter was read from the Provincial Grand Master, Sir W. Barrell, M.P., thanking the brethren for the letter of condolence on the death of his second son. Bro. Wood P.G.Purs. was unanimously elected to serve on the Charities Committee of the Prov. Grand Lodge. Hearty good wishes were given, and Lodge was then closed until the ensuing month. The brethren sat down to a very sumptuous and recherché banquet, provided by Bro. Booth, that gave great satisfaction. Grace having been said, the W.M. proposed the usual Loyal and Masonic toasts, Bros. Broadbridge and Soper singing the "National Anthem," and "God Bless the Prince of Wales. The toasts of the Provincial Grand Master, the Deputy Grand Master, and the rest of the Grand Officers were given. The W.M. said we have two Grand Officers present—Bro. Wood, Grand Purs., one of the founders of the Yarborough Lodge, and Bro. Kuhe Past Grand Organist. With respect to Bro. Wood, he is well deserving of the honour conferred upon him; and all England is acquainted with the musical talent possessed by Bro. Kuhe. The Lodge might be proud of having two such brethren associated with it. Bros. Wood and Kuhe spoke at length of the distinguished brethren whose names had been mentioned in connection with the toast. Reference was also made to the recent visit of the Most Worshipful the Grand Master to York, where he was loyally supported by the members of the Craft. The toast of the Right W. Bro Sir Walter Barrell, Bart., M.P., P.G.M of Sussex, was next given by the Worshipful Master, who said Sir Walter was singularly fortunate in having so worthy an exponent in Bro. Freeman P.G. Sec, whose knowledge of Freemasonry entitles him to every respect. Brother Alderman Hallett, one of the best business men in the borough, and a thorough Mason, was always willing to assist in every cause that would advance Freemasonry in the Province; with the toast he would couple the names of these two brethren. Bro. Freeman, in one of those eloquent speeches for which he is noted in the Province, responded. He referred to the excellent qualities of the P.G.M., who, but for a domestic bereavement, would have been present. All, however, hoped to see him on the 12th October, when he had promised to preside at the Provincial Grand Lodge. Bro. Alderman Hallett followed, fully endorsing what Bro. Freeman had said in regard to the sterling qualities of the Prov. G. Master. Bro. Cook I.P.M. then proposed the health of the W.M., which toast was very warmly received. Bro. Lomax is a man well known in Brighton; he (Bro. Cook) personally had the highest respect for him, and felt proud in having had to assist in placing him in the position of Worshipful Master; he called on one and all to drink the toast with the enthusiasm it deserved. The W.M. most gracefully acknowledged the compliment paid him. He could look round the table and say there was not a brother present whom he could not rely on as a friend. He felt honoured by the confidence they had reposed in him, and would strive to become still more deserving of their confidence. In speaking to the toast of the Past Masters, the Worshipful Master said each of those who had passed the chair of the Lodge was worthy of every confidence. Brother Wood, a founder of this Lodge, was ever mindful of its welfare; in fact, he (the W.M.) scarcely knew how they could get on without him. He had an especially pleasing duty now to perform; to place on the breast of the Immediate Past Master the jewel he had so well deserved. In doing so he could only hope Bro. Cook might live many years to wear it amongst them. In connection with this toast he had also to bring under their notice the merits of Bros. Alderman Hallett and Lainson. The former brother had worthily fulfilled the functions of Mayor of Brighton, and had secured the respect of his fellow townsmen; while Bro. Lainson was equally deserving of their esteem. This toast elicited some excellent remarks from the brethren who responded, and then Bro. Kuhe gave one of his musical melanges that elicited the warmest encomiums. For the toast of the Visitors, to whom the W.M. gave a cordial greeting, Bros. King, Harrison, and Levy replied. The W.M. next proposed the newly initiated brother—John Taylor—a nephew of our respected Bro. Wood; he was initiated last July. He was a gentleman who would undoubtedly become a credit to the Order. Bro. Taylor briefly and appropriately responded, and then the other Officers were complimented; no Worshipful Master could have better Officers; he hoped in time to see each of them occupy the chair. Bro. Sharp S.W. and Bro. De Paris in appropriate terms responded, and the Tyler's toast closed the proceedings.

LOYALTY LODGE, No. 1607.

THIS Lodge, which has been in recess since April, met at the London Tavern, Fenchurch Street, E.C., on Saturday, 10th inst., when Brother T. Jones W.M., supported by his Officers, opened the Lodge, and after the usual preliminaries, proceeded to instal his successor, Brother F. Carr S.W., into the chair of K.S., with such perfection as is rarely met with. This is the more creditable as Bro. Jones was one of the initiates of the Lodge, which is but yet in its early days. The newly installed Master appointed and invested his Officers as follow:—Bros. F. Brown Treasurer, J. Newton Sec., Dr. Gaylon S.D., J. Large J.D., J. Cushing I.G., T. Clark M.C., and T. Holsworth W.S. The Senior and Junior Wardens not being present, their investment had to be deferred. A ballot was taken for Mr. H. A. Hunt, and proving unanimous, the ceremony of initiation was undertaken by the Worshipful Master, and in such a manner as to merit the praise of all present; in fact Bro. Carr, who also was an initiate of this Lodge, was perfect in his work. Upon rising for the time the W.M. offered his services, which were accepted, as Steward for the next Festival of the Benevolent Institution, whereupon the Lodge voted ten guineas to be placed on his list. It is an excellent feature in this Lodge that every Master since its consecration has served a Stewardship to the Benevolent Institution. Another praiseworthy feature is that each Master has installed his successor, a duty we should like to see carried out in all Lodges. After hearty good wishes, the Lodge was closed, and the brethren adjourned to dinner. The usual toasts followed. The Visitors and the members, altogether a numerous body, then departed, agreeing that it was one of the most enjoyable evenings they had ever spent.

New Concord Lodge of Instruction, No. 813.—A regular meeting of this Lodge was held on Wednesday last, at Bro. Langdale's, Jolly Farmers' Tavern, Southgate-road, at 8 p.m., Brother Marks presiding; he was supported by Bros. Western S.W., Ashton J.W., Trewinnard acting Preceptor, Perl Secretary, Langdale, Powell &c. The usual formalities having been observed in opening the Lodge, the W.M. proceeded to rehearse the ceremony of initiation. Bro. Langdale acting as candidate, who, after the Lodge was opened in the second degree, acted as a candidate to be passed. Lodge was then opened in the third degree, and afterwards closed down. Bro. Western was then elected to fill the chair at the ensuing meeting. This Lodge has now commenced working for the winter months, and it is to be hoped brethren will avail themselves of the opportunity of occupying the chair, which is placed at their disposal, and to assist in making this Lodge as successful as hitherto. Brethren are cordially invited.

Eboracum Lodge, No. 1611.—The regular meeting of this Lodge was held at York, on Monday, the 10th inst., when there was a capital muster of members. In the absence of the W.M., the chair was taken by Bro. T. B. Wytehead W.M., who was supported by Bros. J. S. Cumberland P.M., J. T. Seller P.M., C. G. Padel P.M., G. Balmford P.M., George Simpson P.M., Major A. H. McGachen P.M. 1991, R. W. Hollon P.M., S. Chadwick W.M. 1040, the Wardens, Officers, and a large number of brethren, amongst the Visitors being Bro. W. P. Moat P.M., Senior District Grand Warden of Auckland, New Zealand. The business consisted in a passing and a raising, which having been accomplished, the ballot was taken for the following brethren as honorary members, proposed by Bro. Whytehead, seconded by Bro. Cumberland, and supported by several other Past Masters:—Bros. Colonel Shadwell H. Clerke Grand Secretary, D. Murray Lyon Grand Secretary of Scotland, Robert F. Gould P.G.D., and Colonel W. J. B. McLeod Moore, Canada, all of whom were elected unanimously. The acting W.M. announced that the W.M. had, with his usual liberality, presented the Lodge with a series of forms of honorary certificates on parchment, and that some had already been issued. The name of a candidate was proposed, and the Lodge was closed amid "Hearty good wishes." There was a great gathering round the refreshment table, when a number of toasts were honoured and songs sung. Bro. Moat responded to The Health of the Visitors, and expressed his pleasure at having witnessed the working of the Lodge. When he left New Zealand he had made up his mind to visit York and see a Lodge so famous actually at work. He entered into many interesting particulars respecting the Craft in New Zealand, which he said was very prosperous and rapidly gaining ground. The evening passed most happily.

At a general meeting of the Committee of the Southampton Masonic Benevolent Association, held on the 13th inst., the accounts submitted were of a satisfactory character, showing assets of about £1,200. Several grants were made, and the Officers for the year elected, and it was urged by one or two brethren that the aims of the Association, which deals purely with local objects of Masonic charity, should be brought more generally under the notice of the Lodges with the view of increasing the number of annual subscribers.

ROYAL MASONIC INSTITUTION FOR BOYS.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—On my return to town this day I find copy of circular asking for votes in favour of "Edward Bramble Green" for the ensuing election, 16th October, with a note appended stating that, "through inadvertence in the OFFICE the candidate's name was omitted to be placed in the official list."

This is a very serious reflection on myself, and on the office generally, and were I to reply as I feel I should express myself in strong terms on the public circulation of so unwarrantable and baseless a statement, but I forbear.

The petition in behalf of Edward Bramble Green did not reach me until after the closure of the list for the October election,—was accepted by the Committee on Saturday, 4th August, and notice was sent to the representative of the case that the name would be included in the list of candidates for election in April 1884.

I am, Dear Sir and Brother,

Yours faithfully and fraternally,

FREDERICK BINCKES (P.G.Std.), V. Patron, Secretary.

NATIONAL SANITARIUM.—The acquisition of the extensive grounds of the Alexandra Palace by the London Corporation as a public park is at present under consideration, and is said to be favourably regarded—Lord Shaftesbury and other influential persons having urged the expediency of the purchase in the interest of the public at large, and especially in that of the great suburban district on the north of London, now being covered with houses at so rapid a rate. Some demur, we understand, has arisen in regard to the Palace itself, for which it was apprehended no remunerative use could be found, as it has failed as a place of amusement in successive hands, Mr. Bourne, C.E., the Principal of the new College of Practical Engineering at Muswell Hill, suggests that a portion of the Palace building should be converted into a great sanitarium, the residue being devoted to popular amusement and instruction as heretofore; and he reckons that by the introduction of this new feature the total receipts will be so much increased that the scale will be turned in the right direction. Certainly there is no sanitarium in England or in the world such as the Palace thus utilised would constitute. It is heated throughout by hot water pipes so that an equable temperature can easily be maintained throughout the year, while its spacious halls, conservatories, theatres, &c., would afford ample space for valetudinarians to walk about in, and take any exercise suited to their condition, or to mingle with amusements so far as they might feel disposed, enjoying all the while a genial climate without having to go abroad in search of it. The Palace is abundantly supplied with water by a water-works of its own, so that it affords all necessary facilities for hydropathic treatment. But other remedial agencies could also be put in force, and so important an establishment would, it is believed, soon become a great hygienic centre at which all the most effectual expedients of medical art, and the latest discoveries in medical science in this or other countries, would be studied and applied. As the difference between a young animal and an old one is a physical difference there is no reason to doubt that by appropriate physical means this difference may be so far abridged or extinguished as to lead to a great prolongation of life and great increase of health and vigour. This Lord Bacon long ago pointed out, but little progress has been made in the direction he indicated from the want of a fitting scientific establishment in which such research could be conducted. This want would be supplied by the establishment of a great national sanitarium conducted under the most eminent advice of all the medical schools, and putting them, in fact, in competition with one another. The introduction of such a new phalanx of remedial aids would constitute an epoch in the history of the world.

NOTICES OF MEETINGS.

STAR IN THE EAST LODGE, No. 650.

AT the monthly meeting of this Lodge, on the 11th inst, Bro. Harry G. Everard S.W. was elected W.M. for the ensuing year. A cordial vote of thanks was passed to Bro. Richard Clowes Prov. G.S.W. for his able and genial presidency over the Lodge affairs during the past year; and it was unanimously agreed to present him with a P.M.'s jewel at the installation Festival next month.

SPHINX LODGE, No. 1329.

ON Saturday afternoon last, the brethren of the above Lodge assembled at the Masonic Hall, Camberwell New Road, for the purpose of transacting important business. There were present Bros. G. S. Mansell W.M., A. Middleman S.W., J. C. Bradley acting J.W., John Hernaman Secretary, J. J. Brinton S.D., G. W. Marsden jun. J.D., Albert Hall Organist, H. Forbes and C. Gooding Stewards, R. J. Voisey I.G.; there were also present Bros. J. B. Richard Immediate Past Master; G. Bickerton, Perceval, Nairne M.C., B. B. Bryant, and G. P. Britton P.M.'s. Also Bros. T. A. Thornhill, A. Ramage, E. C. Davis, D. D. Mercer, J. N. Turney, R. Irvin, R. T. White, E. T. Jones, T. Arnold, C. Wilson, C. F. Cockle, W. Andrews, H. Chabot, J. G. White, T. E. Heller, W. L. Permewan, J. E. Knox, A. Partridge, and C. Lyre. The visitors were Bros. Bull P.M. Mount Lebanon Lodge 73, A. Bradley Royal Leopold P.M. 1669, J. Lightfoot the Selwyn 1901, and W. Tilling J.D. St. James's 765. The Lodge having been opened in due form by the W.M., the minutes were read and confirmed. Bro. B. B. Bryant P.M. then occupied the chair and raised Bro. A. Partridge to the sublime degree of Master Mason. This solemn and impressive ceremony was conducted in a manner that elicited much commendation. On its conclusion the choice of officers for the ensuing year was proceeded with, Bro. A. Middleman being elected as Master, J. C. Reynolds sen. Treas., and B. Harrison Tyler. The next business was to appoint an Audit Committee. This opened up some discussion, but eventually Bros. Webb, Woodward, and Turney were unanimously elected. These brethren will act conjointly with the Past Masters and Officers of the Lodge as heretofore, and on the same conditions. The sum of five pounds was next allotted to the retiring W.M. as a contribution to one of the Masonic Charities. A proposition was made that a Past Master's jewel should, as on previous occasions, be presented to the W.M. vacating the chair. This was opposed on the part of several brethren, for reasons assigned by them without any mental reservation whatsoever. In the end, however, the brethren who opposed were not in sufficient force to carry their point. After some other matters had been disposed of, Lodge was closed in due form, much to the relief of all the brethren, who adjourned to an adjoining room, in which Bro. C. G. Slawson, of 786 Old Kent-road, had provided a capital repast, which was served in his usual style of excellence. The W.M. of the Lodge presided, and the loyal and fraternal toasts were given and pledged. The Tyler's toast concluded the proceedings.

Lodge was then closed, and the brethren, who on this occasion were accompanied by a number of ladies, then proceeded to enjoy themselves by driving through the charming scenery for which Stanmore is celebrated, and on their return the W.M., by the kind invitation of Brother Godson, conducted a large party through the delightful and historic mansion and grounds of Bentley Priory, which being situated some 500 or 600 feet above the level of the sea commands some of the finest views to be obtained near London. After the party had partaken of a substantial banquet, the usual loyal toasts were given, during which Brothers C. S. Buck and C. Veal contributed considerably to the enjoyment of the evening by some excellent songs. The Brethren and Visitors then returned to town, after spending a very enjoyable day.

THE BOYS' SCHOOL ELECTION.

FOLLOWING our usual custom of reviewing the lists of candidates for the several elections, we once again have to devote our attention to the Boys' School list, and indoing so we can but offer our congratulations to those who are interested at the increased chances of success which all enjoy, as compared with the last election, in consequence of the number of vacancies being considerably greater, without a corresponding increase in the number of candidates. The October election will take place on Monday, the 15th, and on that occasion sixty-three candidates will compete for twenty vacancies. The number of applicants is given in the ballot paper as sixty-four, but they have been reduced by the withdrawal of No. 42, George John Simmons, so that now there are but sixty-three eligible to compete. Of this number forty-one are brought forward from previous elections—ranging in number from six downwards—and twenty-two now appear for the first time.

There are five cases of "last application," viz., Nos. 1, 2, 9, 13, and 45. No. 1, Charles Percy Liversidge, who now comes forward for the seventh time, is not much better off than when we last had his case under consideration. He then had 655 votes to the good—he can now muster 814, or an increase of 159, a number which will avail him nothing, if it is any criterion of what is in store for him next month. The widowed mother has this lad and eight other children to provide for, and, as we remarked last March, her son would, to all appearances, be a worthy subject for admission without election, were the funds of the Institution in a fit state to allow of it. The father was a member of the Sir Watkin Lodge, No. 1477 (North Wales and Salop). No. 2, William Bryant Stanford, also a seventh application case, stands a much better chance of being elected. He comes forward with a total of 2,153 votes to his credit, 280 of which were polled at the last election. He is one of three fatherless children, and provided his friends support him at the next election as well as they did at the last, is almost certain of being among the twenty successful; we hope that he may, as it would be very unfortunate for the votes already recorded on his behalf to be wasted. No. 9, Frank William Bell, comes forward for the last time, with five votes to his credit, as the result of his friends' (?) exertions at three previous elections. We have already referred to the cruelty of brethren raising hopes in the mind of a widow by promising to support the candidature of her child for one or other of the Schools, and then leaving her to shift for herself. This case is a striking example of this most un-Masonic behaviour. If only the brethren who recommended the case had supported it, the lad would be better off than he is at present. If, on the other hand, the brethren have since found that their recommendation was made in error, they should have taken steps for the case to be withdrawn from the list. We are aware that, in making these remarks, we are running the risk of being called to account, as it may be the intention of the father's Province to carry the case before it is too late; but if that is really the state of affairs (and we doubt it), we are of opinion that it would have been better to have kept the case back until the time of action actually arrived, than to have crowded the last three ballot papers with it, and at the same time creating a feeling against the lad, as frequent failures must do. No. 13, Richard Alfred Sykes, a fourth and last application, comes forward with 1,680 votes to his account, a very creditable advance on his last total, which stood, previous to the election in April, at 329 votes. He is an orphan child, father and mother being dead. His father was a member of the Province of Cheshire, which district will, we have little doubt, secure the lad's admission to the School on the 15th October. No. 45, Thomas Percy Westlake, the other last application case, is also a first application. The lad is one of two children dependent on a widowed mother, the husband of whom was a member of North and East Yorkshire, having been initiated in Old Globe, No. 200, and afterwards joining Humber, No. 57.

Parentless children come forward in five cases beyond the one already referred to, viz., Nos. 8, 25, 33, 34 and 38. No. 8, Augustine William Wyatt, has already been before the brethren at four elections, and has now 2423 votes to his credit, a total which leaves very little doubt of his success next month. He is one of four children still dependent on friends, and has a sister in the Girls' School. No. 25, Thomas Edwin Pawsey, third application, has 277 votes in hand. He is one of a family of five dependent children, who have lost both father and mother. The votes standing to his credit are the result of the last election, so that it cannot be said the lad is without friends; let us hope they will be successful, so as, ultimately, to secure his election. No. 33, Frank Alexander Herring, is the lad to whose case we directed special attention on the occasion of the last election. His candidature was brought before the members at the Quarterly Court, and its rejection moved, after considerable discussion. The proposition, however, was negatived by twenty-eight votes to twenty-four, and the lad's eligibility thus confirmed. We cannot, however, endorse the decision of the brethren, nor do we consider the conclusion they came to a wise one; they allow a lad whose personal property is ample for all modest requirements to be elected into our School to the exclusion of really destitute children. Surely it cannot be the general body of subscribers desire to provide for children who are already in a comparatively independent position? The lad is one of three so-called dependents, but as each member of this family has something between £500 and £600 in his own right—if we may accept the records of the Probate Office as correct—we cannot see but that they are capable of depending on their own incomes. 460 votes were polled for this lad in April last. No. 34, Harry Robert Graves, is likewise a second application case, and brings forward five votes. He is one of five parentless children, the father of whom was a member of the Masonic Province of Lincoln. No. 38, William Ernest Habgood, another second application case, has a sister in the Girls' School, and is himself the only child of the family now dependent. His father was a member of a Devonshire Lodge. The lad has 25 votes to his credit.

Ten dependent children in each case form the families of which Nos. 21 and 51 are members, and, strange to say, in the two instances both parents are still living. As usual, we are without any particulars of the special circumstances, which it may be assumed exist, to render these two lads eligible for election. We can but repeat our oft-expressed advice to the subscribers to demand that some more explicit particulars be in future published in such cases. As we remarked in April last, when referring to these two families, it cannot be that large numbers of children are to be considered as rendering applicants eligible. No. 21, Reginald Beaumont, now comes forward for the third time, with a total of 218 votes to his credit, exactly double the number that he brought forward in April last, so that it would appear that the power of his friends is 109 votes per election—a very poor prospect of resulting in ultimate success.

No. 51, John A. M. Bailey, is a first application case. We believe he is a brother of the candidate of the same name who took part in the last election, and who has, we presume, since been withdrawn. The latter secured 76 votes in April.

No. 39, Benjamin Meeds Hildred, is one of eight children dependent on a widowed mother. He has a sister in the Girls' School, and has had 81 votes polled on his behalf at the one election he has already taken part in.

Nos. 5, 23, 32, 35, 48 and 64 are cases in which there are seven children dependent. All the lads have lost their father, so that as regards family qualifications all appear to be equal. No. 5, Frederick F. Skelton, has 1394 votes in hand, from five previous elections in which he has taken part. He has a sister in the Girls' School, who, of course, is not reckoned as one of the seven dependent children. No. 23, Frederick F. Coleman, who has stood two previous elections, has 450 votes to his credit. His father was a member of the Province of Oxfordshire, in which district he had held Provincial rank. No. 32, James P. Seagrave, brings forward 161 votes from April last He is accredited to London, his father having subscribed both to Nos. 511 and 1791. No. 35, Ernest A. Steed, of the Province of Suffolk, secured 1794 votes last election, a result which reflects the greatest credit on his friends, and augurs well for his ultimate success. No. 48, Arthur Blunt, and No. 64, Stanley W. Gibson, are both first applications; the former from London, the latter from Northumberland.

There are three applicants who are members of families of six dependent children, Nos 7, 47 and 53. No. 7, Charles B. Cummings, has his father yet living; he now comes forward for the sixth time, with a total of 106 votes to his credit. Again we ask for a reason for this apparent departure from ordinary qualification? No. 47, Henry M. Jarvis, and No. 53, Arthur Warner, both first application cases, are each, with the other five members of their respective families, dependent on widowed mothers. Jarvis is accredited to Wiltshire, and Warner to London.

Twelve of the remaining candidates are members of families in each of which there are five children dependent. No. 3, Charles E. Stewart, has 2,542 votes to his credit, as the result of five previous elections. No. 12, Richard W. Delafons, now a candidate for the fourth time, brings forward 593 votes. His mother is fortunate in having had a daughter elected to the Girls' School, and, judging from appearances, she stands a good chance of seeing one of her sons eventually elected to the Boys.' No. 16, Harold M. Hare, brings forward 1,543 votes, from three previous attempts, a total which gives promise of his early election to the benefits of the Institution. No. 24, Reginald A. L. Mitchell, has but eight votes to his credit from the last two contests. He is accredited to the Province of Devonshire, in which district his father had occupied the position of W.M. No. 31, Herbert J. McL. Lillywhite, has both parents living, but his father is paralysed. In his days of health the latter warmly supported the three Institutions, and occupied a prominent position in the Craft. We hope, now that adversity has unfortunately overtaken him, that he may receive support from those of his brethren who are enabled to afford it. His son polled 62 votes in April last. No. 37, Frederick T. Davis, from the Eastern Division of South Wales, brings forward two votes from April last; while No. 41, Alfred E. Crutchett, after a similar experience, has not yet recorded a vote. The case is accredited to Devonshire. No. 46, William B. Lyon; 57, James C. Besley; No. 60, Thomas W. White; No. 62, Ernest H. Anderson, and No. 63, Harry P. O. Gloster; the remaining candidates in this section, are all first applications, presenting nothing specially worthy of notice beyond the fact that Besley (No. 57) has a sister in the Girls' School.

We now come to the cases in which there are four dependent children, and these number eleven. No. 4, John B. Windross, who has stood five previous elections, now comes forward with 519 votes to his credit. His father was initiated in Sun, Square and Compasses Lodge, No. 119, and also attained the rank of S.W. in No. 289. No. 19, Lionel C. Hooper, is much better situated, having 1544 votes to his credit, from three previous contests, and will, without doubt, before long gain a place among the list of successful. No. 22, John E. Walters, third application, has a sister in the Girls' School. He brings forward a total of 480 votes, but it will require strong exertions to secure his election before the age limit rule excludes him from further contests. No. 30, Samuel H. Bevis, brings forward eleven votes from April last. His father was a Dorset Mason, and is credited with ¼ of a year's subscriptions to Freemasonry, although as that extended up to the time of his death, no objection should perhaps be raised against his child on that account. No. 40, Robert H. Whiting, is better off, inasmuch as his total number of votes brought forward is 91. His father was initiated in No. 133, Harmony, Kent, and attained the rank of W.M. of his Lodge. Nos. 49, John S. B. Allan; 50, James A. Gore; 54, Lionel B. J. Manby; 55, Harold R. H. Gane; 56, Charles B. Cooper, and 61, William F. Sharland, all of whom come under this head—four dependent children—are each first application cases.

There are also eleven cases in each of which the family of dependent children consists of three. No. 10, Fras. C. A. Douglas, from the District of Hong Kong, now applies for the fourth time, and brings forward seven votes. The remarks we have previously made in reference to such cases as this, which are put on the list and then forgotten, will be fresh in the minds of our readers. Still we cannot allow this further illustration of un-Masonic behaviour to pass unnoticed. No. 11, Horace Gale, also a fourth application is better, although it is doubtful whether the advantage he possesses will be of any service to him; it certainly will not unless some radical improvement takes place in the amount of support accorded him. He now has 330 votes to his credit, an average of 110 for each election at which he has been on the list. No. 14, Arthur F. Williams, brings forward 1095 votes from his three previous attempts, evidence that he has many friends on whom to rely for assistance in this his time of need. His father was a member of No. 860, Dalhousie, London. No. 15, Alfred Pratt, has both parents living, has a sister in the Girls' School, and brings forward 1133 votes as his total from the three last elections. If a brother's donations during his days of prosperity are to be counted for anything, then this case should have special consideration. Brother Pratt's work for the Charities stands far above the record of either of the other applicants' fathers. No. 17, Frederick W. Hennah, has already polled 2040 votes, having been present at three previous elections. His father was a member of a Kentish Lodge—the Union, No. 127—a fact which will result to his child's advantage now that he is compelled to appeal to strangers for assistance. No. 18, John How, has 153 votes from a similar experience as regards number of elections is concerned. Nos. 26, 27, and 29 have each appeared once before. No. 26, Frederick W. Longman, who has both parents living, brings forward 28 votes. No. 27, Herbert W. Booker, who has lost his father, has 164 votes, while No. 29, who is also fatherless, has but one vote to his credit. No. 43, William T. Gishford, and No. 59, William G. Canty, are both first applications.

No. 20, John Shaw, is one of two children dependent on a widowed mother. He brings forward 565 votes from two previous elections. No. 28, James M. Green, from the Province of Somerset, polled four votes in April last; he also is one of two dependent children. No 44, Christopher W. G. Barber, No. 52, Walter E. Cordingley, and No. 58, Harry R. Lane, are all first application cases, and each is one of two children dependent on widowed mothers.

No. 6, George C. Willett, is an only child dependent on a widowed mother. He has already taken part in five elections, and has polled 2,576 votes, so that we may consider his admission to the Institution next month as being assured. No. 36, Emile E. P. Carre, a second application, is also an only child left to a mother's care. He hails from Jersey, and has 917 votes to his credit.

Having thus brought our review to a conclusion, we pause to look back upon the several candidates. We do not know that there is anything special to refer to if we may except the small number of children now appealing for aid whose parents figure as having supported one or other of the Institutions. Not one in four of the fathers whose boys now appeal for aid can boast of ever having done anything for the Charities of the Order.

We certainly think that some advantage should accrue to those who, in the hour of prosperity, supported the

Digitized by Google

Institutions to the best of their ability. Another point which also calls for attention here is, the short connection many of the fathers had with the Order. Should not some minimum be established which would exclude the children of Masons of some four or five months standing from taking equal advantages with those who subscribed for years?

In our analysis of the list of candidates for the Girls' School Election, in our last issue, we made a remark in reference to case No. 12, Kathleen Alice Gibson, which was based on the published particulars of the several cases. A well known brother, personally interested in Gibson's case, calls our attention to the matter, and points out that the father was formerly (twenty years ago) "in H M. Customs," but for some years, although living, has practically been dead as to family ties. From our correspondent's explanation the circumstances of the case are certainly distressful; and we regret that the absurd incompleteness of the printed list led us, and doubtless others, to a different conclusion.

THE COMMON GAVEL.

THERE is a fund of amusement to a careful observer who notes the peculiarities of character which our Institution has a tendency to develop. To be Master of a Lodge is a just and laudable ambition, provided, always, that the brother whose glances are turned to the East understands the responsibilities of official station, and is willing to assume the labour of preparation for, as well as the honours of, official position. All who succeed in reaching this point in the Masonic horizon are by no means prepared for the duties they expect to discharge, and when they commence operations there is often occasion for a quiet smile. Some of them appear to think that dignity is measured by the quantity of sound they can make when occasion calls for the use of the gavel. They grasp it with nervous energy, and switch off the end of it with astonishing celerity. Others, again, like old Billy Peters, of Beechnut Lodge, seem to approach it with awe, lift it reverently up, and apply it to the ashlar as though they were moved by clockwork, and could only sound a certain note by the nicest attention to the laws of propulsion and resistance. We know one worthy brother who invariably lifts it above his head and brings it down again with a force of sixty pounds to the square inch, making a racket to which moderate thunder is child's play; and another who invariably rises, bends forward and sharply inspects his work, as if there were a small nail to be accurately hit upon the head at each blow.

We have often been amused at these eccentricities, and have always believed them indications of character. Thus the man who breaks a gavel every time he presides we take to be a person of hasty temper; who would push toward any end he might have in view without regard to impediments in the way; who would drive a horse to death to reach a given point at a certain time when he might just as well walk at his leisure, for any practical good to be accomplished by his haste. Uncle Billy is the type of a class of easy goers who believe in doing what is to be done according to the rules in such cases made and provided; who give themselves up to the minutest detail as though a legion of spies were waiting to pounce upon the slightest omission and inflict upon their victim the direst pains and penalties. This good brother will give you the lecture and monitorial to the uttermost syllable, and gravely read you the charge at closing as though it were the last act of a long and eventful life about to be brought to a solemn and imposing end.

The brother who wields the gavel as a stalwart helper might swing a sledge hammer is evidently of a haughty and imperious temperament, filled with a sense of his own importance and dignity, and expressing in every crash of the innocent wood and stone, "I am Sir Oracle; when I speak, let no dog bark." Such a man thinks a great deal more of impressing the people with a sense of his personal dignity than of illustrating the tenets of our profession.

The careful inspector is the symbol of those who look after the tithes of mint, anise and cummin to the neglect of the weightier matters of the law. Thus we see that the lesson set down for us in the symbol of the stone hammer has a wider significance than is given in the monitorial explanation, and that there are few, if any of us, who might not apply it to our own cases with benefit to ourselves and with honour to the Craft.—Masonic Review.

SOCIETY AND SOLITUDE.

MAN was not made to dwell or walk by himself, and it is impossible for him to realize the highest good of being in a condition of isolation. He cannot keenly enjoy unless there be others to share his satisfaction; he cannot well endure the ills which enter into present experience except as he is assured of the sympathy of friendly hearts. It is through the varied relations of society that he finds the sweetest zest of life, whilst he also obtains from the same source some considerable alleviation of the ills and pains of this mortal state.

Society answers to human needs and instincts in manifold ways. It affords both mental and moral stimulus impelling men to do the best of which they are capable, by reminding them how others of their race have nobly toiled and grandly succeeded. It makes a kindredness of relation with great souls to be felt by those low down, and so these latter, regarding the examples set by their illustrious brothers, are spurred to effort in the same direction. Thus, as in other ways, it supplies the incentives to best endeavours.

Society has a refining influence. It gives a polish to the individual life. As metal plates rubbed together in the sand are brightened by the process, and their rough edges worn away by such contact, so are individuals brightened and helped by the relations which society imposes and the offices that it performs. Thus it is the angular characteristics of the personal nature are cut down, and human life presents itself in more agreeable forms of expression.

Beyond this line, however, the helpfulness of society is seen, inasmuch as it provides the field wherein the higher nature of man may be exercised in the way of a true service. It is in performing the duties of related life that the moral faculties find their best expression. Society calls upon men to recognise the ties of fellowship, to strike hands together in the spirit of sympathy and co-operation, and to help and cheer each other along the pilgrim way of earth. Only as they do this—only as they conform to the conditions of associated life, can they produce a type of character stamped with moral excellence, or garner the rich fruitage of blessings promised to those who are ruled by the law of mutual love and service.

When, however, a due presentment of man's social needs has been made, and the duties and privileges of related life have been taken into account, there yet remains a sufficient basis on which to rest a very strong plea for the occasional refreshing influences of solitude.

Human nature is very curiously compounded of diverse elements. While, therefore, the general tendencies of man's nature incline him to society, there is yet an instinct in his constitution which points to solitude—which disposes him occasionally to go apart from the multitude in his search after help, strength, and rest. One does not like always to keep step with a crowd. It is pleasant to be alone sometimes, to get away from the wearing world and indulge in a profitable self-contemplation. What saith quaint George Herbert?

> "By all means use sometimes to be alone.
> Salute thyself. See what thy soul doth wear.
> Dare to look in thy chest,—for 'tis thine own,—
> And tumble up and down what thou find'st there."

But solitude, to be pleasant and profitable, must not be sought in the spirit of the misanthrope. If one is in a morbid and unhealthy mood, and only looks for seclusion that he may get away from disagreeable people and interests, he will not be likely to be much helped by his retirement from the busy world. It has well been said that a man must love society if he wishes to enjoy solitude. We believe this proposition to be true, and we hold, therefore, that occasional periods of seclusion and meditation are most wholesome to those who realise the fact that the true life of man is in society. For a little time one may go apart from his fellows to commune with his own soul, with nature, and with God, and he shall find strength and refreshment in so doing, but if he has the true idea of life he will not long separate himself from the fellowship and the duties for which society prepares the way.—Freemasons' Repository.

A SILVER RULE.—You all know the golden rule: "Do unto others as you would wish them to do unto you." Here is a rule which is almost a part of the golden rule, but which we will put by itself, and because of its value call it the silver rule: "Think and say all you can of the good qualities of others; forget and keep silent concerning their bad qualities." You cannot conceive how much such a course will heighten your own happiness and raise you in the esteem of your companions. Did you ever think any more of a boy or girl because he or she found fault with others? Never call your schoolmates or playmates ugly or cross to their faces or behind their backs. If they are ugly, or stingy, or cross, it does not make them better for you to talk or think about it, while it makes you love to dwell upon the faults of others, and causes your own soul to grow smaller and become like the foul bird that prefers carrion for food. Rather tell all the good you can, and try to think of some good quality of your mates.—Freemasons' Repository.

MASONIC ETHICS.

I HAVE a thought in regard to the genius and character of Masonry, which I think will be interesting to the brethren. It is that the ethical character of the teachings of Masonry stands unique in the moral instruction of mankind. Through the generations of the past you will find that there have been prevalent in the world three styles of moral instruction. They represent the three great traditions of human experience; the governmental or royal tradition; the religious or priestly tradition; and the industrial or plebeian tradition. In the royal tradition the king represents the whole nation. In him should be gathered up the worth of the nation represented by him, and he should disinterestedly direct the whole nation for its best welfare. But the history of mankind shows that his position has been used by the king to pamper himself, sacrificing the people to his selfish good. The ethical teaching of the royal tradition is the sacrifice of the inferior to the superior. The commands of the king are sustained by the military power. Every deliverance of mankind from the oppressive power of kings has been won by wresting the military power from him, turning it against him, and putting a substitute in his place. Every step of relief or improvement has been taken in this direction.

In the religious tradition the priest appears in the place of the king; but he represents GOD instead of representing the nation. Now, GOD represents not only the nation, but the whole universe. Therefore His will is absolute law. But the priest, while he has always pretended to represent GOD, has, as a rule, really represented only himself and his class. He has embodied in his church and creed his own opinions and passions, and then palmed them off as the will of GOD His theory is the sacrifice of the superior for the inferior,—as GOD died for men. But his practice has been a constant attempt to subordinate the world to the church, the real power in the church being the will of the priest disguised as the will of GOD. His great artifice for sustaining himself has been the indoctrination of the human mind with superstition,—the sacrifice of this world to the next. These two are the great historic systems of ethical teaching. The royal tradition would selfishly subordinate the people to the king, the nation to the throne. The priestly tradition would rear the power of the church on the sacrifice of the present to the future, earth to heaven. From these two forms of despotism the only escape has been by turning the military force against the king and dethroning him; or by repudiating the religious creed and substituting another one in its place.

Now we come to the Masonic style of ethics. This represents the tradition of labour, the industrial order. This, in distinction from the kingly and the priestly, is the plebeian tradition of humanity, founded on industry, pervaded by faith, and crowned with honour. It is the only organised social institution on earth which really represents in one impartial whole all the classes and all the interests of our race. It neither sacrifices the inferior to the superior, nor the superior to the inferior, but reconciles all in co-operative union on the basis of universal justice and goodwill. Under this form of moral teaching and practical administration it is clear that there can never possibly be any despotism from which mankind will need to rescue themselves either by revolt against power or by change of belief. The most gifted and advanced oversee the less gifted and advanced, while all conspire to toil in the great contention as to who can best work and best agree and contribute the richest service to the collective unity. The essence of Masonic ethics, therefore, is the industrial production and distribution of the goods of life on the pure principles of justice and brotherhood. When this system of moral teaching prevails, the world will be nigh its redemption. It includes the truths of the other systems without their errors. It is a royalty; but it is a democratic royalty. It is an equality; but it is an equality broken into ranks by diversities of gifts and degrees of service. It reconciles kings and priests and workmen.

The king says to his subjects, "Obey me, that you may preserve order and keep yourselves from cutting each others' throats." But what he really means is, "Obey me, that I may draw a huge revenue from your toil, and enjoy all the luxuries of the earth."

The priest says to the laity, "Obey the church, that you may appease the anger of GOD, and save your souls from damnation." But the practical meaning of his policy is, "Obey me, that the institution with which my pride and interest are identified may flourish in supreme power."

The Mason says to his brethren, "Obey the order of nature, the intrinsic requirements of the Architect of the Universe, that we may all live happily in plenty and harmony." And so far as he is in earnest, and not a mere dilettante, his word and intent, his creed and his deed, agree.

Let me further illustrate this view by the example of one symbol used in common by all the three ethical systems, though used by each one of them in a very different sense. The symbol to which I allude is the cross.

As employed in the kingly tradition the cross surmounts a globe, and is a token of complete empire. Affixed to the end of a mace, it may be used to strike down the inferior, sacrificing the subject to the master. It is, in the governmental aspect of it, an expression of the power of the higher over the lower, as shown in the cruelest form of execution. It is reared on the world as an instrument for the destruction of offenders against the majesty of the sovereign.

In the ecclesiastical tradition the cross represents the Supreme Ruler sacrificing Himself for His subjects in the crucifixion. The true inference from this would be, that his representatives should, in kindred self-denial, subordinate themselves to their inferiors. But they have perverted it to an opposite purpose, and put the abstract theory of a theological doctrine in place of the practical application of a moral truth. If the priest truly represented GOD, ever stooping to serve those beneath him, his teachings would be absolutely valid and absolutely irresistible. But, in fact, the cross in his hands is an expression of his power to command the submission of those who see in it the condescending sacrifice of GOD. It expresses not the duty of the priest to sacrifice himself to men, but their duty to sacrifice themselves to him. The priest uses the cross not like the king to bruise the body, but to crush the mind. The Roman Catholic symbolism of the cross is, that its right limb denotes humility, its left limb chastity, its trunk obedience. But there is clearly no such significance properly belonging to the instrument. If accepted at all, it has to be accepted on the arbitrary authority of the church, bringing all minds abjectly to its footstool. Since no such threefold meaning as obedience, chastity and humility is there, except as wilfully placed there by the priest, therefore whenever the laity read therein such a purely forced and technical symbolism they submit their natural minds to be trained by the artificial mind of the priest,—which is just what he professionally desires, to keep the world in leading-strings.

Now, notice the significance of the cross in the industrial tradition of the Masonic Order. In sharp opposition to the Ethics fashioned by the symbolism of political sway and to the ethics moulded by the symbolism of priestly speculation, the ethics of Masonry are shaped and animated by the symbolism of human industry founded on natural science and reason. As to all the emblems which this natural morality employs, the meanings inhere directly in the objects, and are to be extracted thence by every untrammelled intelligence. Here the true meaning of the cross is given by geometry and duty. It is the rudest outline of the form of man, and it points in all the six directions of the creation. The bareness, accordingly, suggests at once the total directions of space. Its head points to the zenith; its foot, to the nadir; its back, to the north; its face, to the south; its left arm, to the east; its right arm, to the west. Thus it explicitly denotes universality. And when the naked wood is changed from cross to crucifix by being loaded with the universal weight of man, it expresses the surrender of individual will to universal law, or the blending of personal desire with social welfare. Scientifically interpreted, the crucifix is the expression, in human figure, of self-surrender in universality of sympathy, because the attitude of the form there outstretched is the attitude of unlimited submissiveness and love. He who is in that form or posture is unarmed and helpless. He has his breast open to receive all, his arms spread to embrace all. He commands not; he threatens not. He assails no one; he resists nothing. The cross, then, in its intrinsic meaning, denotes neither authority nor superstition, but personal surrender to universal law and power, that entire harmony which really represents GOD.

When we have that system of realistic and co-operative ethics, of which the example given is a specimen, taken out of the mere domain of the Masonic Institution, and carried over into the kingly and priestly domains as well, absorbing what is true in them, while removing what is false, and everywhere applied to the doings and dealings of society, then we shall see the redemption of the world; because the labour of men will then be regulated by justice, and their happiness be perfected in sympathy. So mote it be! Let us all say, So mote it be!

TRADE AND BENEVOLENCE.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—At the meeting of the Lodge of Benevolence, held on Wednesday night, 19th inst., it was announced that there were only twelve names on the relief list. This circumstance is remarkable from the fact that trade generally is considered to be in a languishing condition. Personally, my experience leads me to the conclusion that in London, at least, all the principal industries and professions are overcrowded with workmen and applicants for engagements. The middle aged man has no chance against the younger members of society; and as for the greybeard, beneath whose eyes the crows appear to have trod, he is simply out of the running altogether. Believing this to be a true statement of facts, so far as London is concerned, I am more than surprised that only twelve applicants laid their claims before the Board of Benevolence, and that the sum of £370 was considered sufficient to meet their several necessities.

I do not know whether to congratulate the Craft upon this condition of things or not. I fear the paucity of claimants must be put down to other causes than to the general prosperity. I know the ordinary tradesman would be very glad if money circulated more freely. I do not know how you find matters, but I cannot join in the congratulations that most people will be inclined to offer when they read the facts recorded above. I believe there is plenty of money in the country, and if I dared trespass on the domain of politics, I could show where most of it lies. Without raising controvertible points, I may say that there is less money in circulation than there ought to be, and that most tradesmen feel the pinch of long-winded credit, and many suffer grievous wrong through the selfishness and indifference of others. I fear that Masons are not exempt from this charge. A little more thoughtfulness on their part, just a trifle more liberality in the by-paths of daily life, would redound to their credit. Some rather curious cases have come under my notice of late which are calculated to stagger the faith of many brethren. I cannot reveal what I know; even if I could I should remember that excellent motto—"Silence"—while speaking of a brother. What I cannot say of individuals I may be permitted to utter with regard to a body, and I do feel that there is too little of the quiet virtues practised by many brethren.

Departing from these heart-searchings, I would return to the immediate question under consideration. I cannot believe that the fewness of the claims for relief is owing to the general prosperity of the community, and I cannot put my finger upon any one cause that shall account for the peculiar state of things. At the recent Quarterly Communication of Grand Lodge I was sitting by the side of a brother, a North countryman himself, but a member of a well-known London Lodge. When the list of grants to applicants for relief was read over, he remarked that he would rather suffer any amount of poverty than submit to the ordeal to which poor suitors are subjected. I reminded him that the Board of Benevolence were the trustees for the general body, that it was necessary to test every case before granting relief. While yielding to the proposition in general terms, he seemed to be under a strong impression that there was too much of the Mendicity Society or Charity Organisation style about the mode of dealing with cases to please him, or to be worthy the name of true charity. I do not say that this brother is right in his conclusions; I have had no experience of the Board of Benevolence. If he is only partially right, one cause why brethren, and the widows of deceased brethren, hesitate to seek Masonic help is disclosed. This opens up a very serious question, and one that needs to be considered in all its bearings, but withal in that noble, generous spirit which is inculcated in the Craft, and is so beautifully enforced in the lectures.

I do not wish to bring any charge against the Board of Benevolence. I have no doubt they discharge their duties according to the views that generally prevail, and upon the lines usually followed. I suggest, however, that what I have stated should be taken into consideration, and that if it is really necessary to constitute a life inquest into each case, that a proper officer should be appointed for the purpose; that the work should be done with all the delicacy possible; and that as few as may be should know of the misfortunes of the appealing suitors, and the relief that had been afforded to them.

I am, Dear Sir and Brother,

Yours very fraternally,

WATCHMAN.

MONEY AND THE NEW TEMPLE.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

RESPECTED SIR,—There seems to be a good deal of talk about the cost of the new Temple, and about how the money is to be got. I thought that was the last thing that we Freemasons ought to trouble ourselves about. Of course, there must be something to show for the outlay; but why haggle about one, two, or three per cent. I have my views about these matters, and one opinion is as good as another. I don't see any fun in hoarding up money. We have plenty of cash; if we haven't, we can borrow. Our credit is good, and I say, build a proper sort of Temple; and as our successors will enjoy the advantage of the outlay, let them take some of the debt as a part of the inheritance. I don't see why we want to get a lot of architects to send in designs, not that I mind a few prizes or a few hundred pounds. We have got an officer for the job, we have some officers on the Board of General Purposes and other Boards who understand all about stones and bricks and mortar; why not leave the whole thing in their hands? We should then have a new Temple in no time. If there are to be any perquisites they ought to go to the brethren, and if we are to have a splendid Hotel as well as a Temple let the cash fly and let the future take care of itself. The Craft ought not to be hungry after interest, seeing that the brethren are ready to respond to any call that may be made upon them. One thing ought not to be forgotten: that knife and fork members are among the salt of the Craft. They are good at banquets; they are, I suppose, liberal to the Charities; and every care ought to be taken to see that the inner man is properly catered for, or at any rate that there are proper conveniences for the comfort of those who, like myself, enjoy a good banquet. Many a time have I heard that good old drinking song, "Back and side go bare, go bare," and have wondered who wrote it. I should have liked to have known him. He must have been a Freemason, and a thorough boon companion. Now, Mr. Editor, you know my opinions. I hope I've not said anything wrong. I know a good many brethren act as I think, and it is no use blinking the fact. Give the Craft reasonable accommodation for business meetings, but above all pay particular attention to the epicurean side of the question, and all will go on well. Men's hearts are often got at through their stomachs.

Yours fraternally,

JUSTICE GREEDY'S SHADOW.

STATUS OF PAST MASTERS.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I have read with much interest in your contemporary a letter by Bro. H. Studholme Brownrigg, Past District G.M. Punjab, on this very vexed question. An opinion from such an authority is worthy of the utmost consideration. Briefly stated, his letter points out that during his eight years' sojourn in India he was a good deal moved about, and "was successively a Past Master in the Lodge in ten different Lodges in the district of Bengal and the Punjab." He was frequently, and for several months together, the only brother qualified to give a degree, owing to the unavoidable absence of those whose duty and privilege it was to do the work. He says he was always acknowledged a Past Master of such Lodges, and voted and acted just as if he had passed the chair in each Lodge. He adds, that he should have been much surprised if it had been otherwise. Under the circumstances the Indian Lodges did precisely what any other Lodge would have done, and no one will find fault with them. But what is the inference that Bro. Brownrigg would have us draw from his experience? This may be gathered from his closing words, in which he says:—"I am convinced that to lower the position of a Past Master in a Lodge would have a most injurious effect on Masonry in India." Just so, and were there no other way out of the difficulty than by making every Past Master in a Lodge a Past Master of the Lodge throughout the whole of the world where the Grand Lodge of England has jurisdiction, then his position would be a strong one, almost if not quite, impregnable.

To a certain extent, the new rule, No. 141, meets the case. A Past Master in a Lodge, if a subscribing member, will be authorised to take the position of W.M. or P.M. of the Lodge, in the absence of both of them, and discharge all the duties of the office of Worshipful Master for the time being. His status, however, must either be determined by the new rule, now passed, but not yet confirmed, or it must be left in the hands of each Lodge to determine for themselves. The latter method, I think, is by far the preferable one. It is the simplest and the most dignified. It recognises the inherent right of a Past Master, which qualifies him for the chair in any Lodge provided he is placed there by circumstances such as those which prevail in India, and probably in some other countries, or by the Lodge of its own freewill. The subsequent status of a Past Master in the Lodge should be left to those who welcome his services, who would be ready, as in India, to give honour as well as accept service.

Bro. Brownrigg's letter thoroughly justifies the action of Grand Lodge in delaying the confirmation of the new rule until December. If the brethren abroad desire to express an opinion on the subject they will have time to do so; indeed, their views ought to be ascertained, if possible, in order that the voice of the whole Craft should speak, which alone can give force to the radical change that has been proposed.

Now, Sir, in turning to your little work on the "Revised Book of Constitutions," I find the same difficulties referred to that Bro. Brownrigg points out, with remarks on the position of a Warden. By additional words it is now determined that "When a Warden rules the Lodge he shall not occupy the Master's chair, nor can initiations take place, or degrees be conferred unless the chair be occupied by a brother who is a Master or Past Master of the Craft." Your remark on this matter are worth quoting. They will be found on page 43 of the little work I have spoken of, and are as follows :—

"It were as well perhaps if the Rule stated authoritatively the position to be occupied by the ruling Warden, and also if, in respect of Lodges in remote districts, especially in the colonies and foreign countries, some conditional latitude were allowed for the initiation of candidates for Masonic light, and the conferring of degrees by a Warden. It must be remembered that in India, South Africa, and our Australian Colonies, for instance, there are Lodges in very out-of-the-way places, and by no means easily accessible. In such cases, in the absence of the Master and Past Masters, which might easily happen, neither initiations could take place nor degrees be conferred, and worthy men or members might be very seriously disappointed, and perhaps even disgusted, at the very outset of their career, because the Master chanced to have a sharp attack, say, of influenza or gout, and the business obligations of the Past Masters precluded them from acting in his stead. . . . Dr. Oliver . . . in his 'Jurisprudence,' remarks that in the case of such Lodges, initiation and the conferring of a degree by a Warden would not be viewed with disfavour by the authorities. Moreover, it would be easy to provide safeguards against the abuse of such relaxation."

I differ, toto cœlo, both from Dr. Oliver and yourself, and contend that to permit a Warden to confer degrees would be a lowering of the office of Master, a maiming of the Rites, and a desecration of the sanctity of the Craft. Better let the new Rule stand than introduce so destructive a custom. There is no need for either course if private Lodges are left to themselves under broad and liberal, though well defined, regulations. I should like to see the question discussed upon the lines laid down by Bro. Brownrigg, and I venture to think, Sir, that if the brethren generally were to get your pamphlet and carefully study it they would be better prepared to give an intelligent reason for the faith that is in them than they are now. I find it extremely useful for reference, and in years to come it will be cherished as one of the best landmarks used in a controversy involving such momentous issues as the alteration of the Constitutions of the noblest human institution in the world. I do not think the brethren generally realise the grandeur of the Order to which they are privileged to belong, and I very much fear that they do not study the literature of Freemasonry. This is folly, and little less than a crime. I sincerely trust that the head will not be altogether neglected while the heart is being generously cultivated and the body perhaps unduly feasted.

Yours fraternally,

AN I.P.M.

ACCOMMODATION AT THE FREEMASONS' HALL AND TAVERN.

To the Editor of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Before any contract is entered into for the re-arrangement of the hotel and cuisine department of Freemasons' Hall, would it not be well that inquiry should be made into the present accommodation, and some guarantee secured that the future prospects will be better than the present. In a future letter, with your permission, I shall deal more fully with this subject; just now, I shall content myself with asking whether it is correct that some Lodges and Committees, holding their meetings in rooms in the Hall, hired for the purpose, should feel it necessary to go elsewhere to dine, or to get such refreshment as they may deem necessary? I think this question important, because upon an answer will, I think, depend the prudence or otherwise of incurring a large expenditure of money. We might endure the receipt of a small per centage upon the outlay of our capital could we be assured the Craft would be served quite as well and as cheaply as they are elsewhere. I throw out the hint now in order that the matter should be thoroughly ventilated before the time for action comes.

Yours fraternally,

A FREQUENT VISITOR AT THE HALL.

The members of the Metropolitan Chapter of Improvement will commence the session on Tuesday, 2nd October, at the Jamaica Coffee House, St. Michael's-alley, Cornhill.

Bro. Wm. Purkiss announces the second anniversary gathering of his supporters, for the 3rd October, at the "Royal," Holborn. Since Bro. Purkiss commenced his spirited propritorship he may be congratulated on having introduced to his numerous friends and the public many novelties; hence his success. It is expected a numerous attendance will be present on the occasion referred to above.

Madame Worrell announces that her annual evening concert will take place at Brixton Hall, Acre-lane, near Brixton Church, on Thursday, 11th October. Madame Worrell has secured for this occasion the services of the following artistes :—Miss Matilda Roby and Miss Maud Cameron; Madame Osborne Williams and Miss Annie Butterworth; Mr. Henry Guy and Mr. Fred H. Cozens; Mr. Frederick Bevan and Mr. James Budd. Violoncello, Mons. Albert. Conductor, Mr. Turle Lee. Tickets may be obtained of Madame Worrell, 52 Knowle-road, Brixton-road; Mr. John Fenton, Post Office, 304 Brixton-road, or of Mr. H. Cox, Hall keeper, Brixton Hall.

The General Committee of the Royal Masonic Institution for Girls met on Thursday afternoon, at Freemasons' Hall. There were present—Col. Creaton Past Grand Treasurer (in the chair), John A. Rucker, Webb, Tattershall, Matthews, Gladwell, Colonel Peters, Massey, Perceval, Money, and Hedges (Secretary). After the reading and confirmation of the minutes of the former meeting, and the reading of the minutes of the House Committee for information, Brother J. H. Matthews moved, in accordance with a recommendation of the House Committee, that the sum of £7 10s each be granted to a pupil named Gardiner and another pupil named Meacock, to enable them to attend German classes at the Crystal Palace for one year. Brother Gladwell seconded the motion, which was carried. Brother Matthews moved that the sum of £70 a year be paid for church accommodation at the church at Clapham, for the children of the School, in lieu of the £35 a year honorarium to the chaplain hitherto paid. The Institution, he said, occupied 250 seats at the church referred to, and remarks had been made that the Institution paid very little for church accommodation. Colonel Peters seconded this motion. Brother Webb asked whether this church was a ritualistic church? Colonel Creaton said he did not think it was either high church or low church, but moderate church. The motion was agreed to. Three candidates were placed on the list for election in April next. Brother Matthews gave notice of the following motion for the next Quartery Court in October :—

"That the sum of £50 be granted to Miss Davis, the head governess, towards reinbursement of the very heavy medical and other expenses incurred by her during her late severe illness, which necessitated her absence from her duties from January to July last."

Brother Colonel Creaton said he had a small matter now to bring forward, which was nevertheless very agreeable. He had been going through the financial position of the Institution, and he found that the funds would admit of a sum of £2,000 being invested. He therefore proposed that £2,000 be now invested in Three per Cent. Reduced. Bro. Col. Peters seconded the motion, which was therefore put and carried. The proceedings closed with a vote of thanks to the chairman.

The Earl of Mar and Kellie, Grand Master Mason of Scotland, laid the foundation stone of the new Sailors' Home, at Leith, on Thursday, 20th September. Notwithstanding wet weather an immense crowd of people assembled. After the ceremony a cake and wine banquet took place in the Assembly rooms. The buildings will cost about £9,000.

With the present week the dull season of English Freemasonry terminates. The month of May sees the hardest part of the working year of Masonry through; and though there is a large amount of business done in the remaining months between that time and October, the account of labour and profit could pretty easily be then balanced as far as London is concerned. But there remain the meetings of the Provincial Grand Lodges, which usually take place in the summer and early autumn, and they, as a rule, are an important factor in the formation of the sum total of the doings of Masonry. The General Committee of the Girls' School meets this afternoon (Thursday), and beyond that there is not much to record for the last week in September: but even now some Lodges have resumed work, and they make a pretty fair show in Masonic doings, with three Lodges and one Chapter on Monday, four Lodges and a Chapter on Tuesday, five Lodges and two Chapters on Wednesday, seven Lodges and a Chapter on Thursday, and two Lodges and two Chapters on Friday. October opens on Monday with the meetings of seven Lodges and three Chapters; Tuesday's meetings are fourteen Lodges and two Chapters; Wednesday's are five Lodges and two Chapters; Thursday's are twelve Lodges and two Chapters; Friday's are six Lodges; and Saturday's, four Lodges and a Chapter, on which day also the General Committee of the Boys' School will meet. The following week's list is fuller still, and the election for the admission of children to the Girls' School closes the week's work. There is great activity just now with regard to the elections to both the Schools, and the subscribers are being reminded of the claims and the miseries of orphan and destitute children of the Fraternity. To place the merits of each case before the subscribers would be invidious; they all have claims, and, no doubt, all have merits, but almost all have strong and vigorous advocates and canvassers, who have been at work for a long time, and it is to these advocates and canvassers they must look for success. Whatever the claims and merits may be, it is to be hoped that the most deserving and the most pitiful will be elected. The season will open very well, and when May 1884 is passed, the brethren, it is to be hoped, may be congratulated on having performed more solid work than has yet been recorded in the annals of the Order.

NEW ZEALAND.

OUR Auckland correspondent sends us the following items:—

On Thursday, 12th July, there was a large and influential gathering of Royal Arch Masons assembled at the Masonic Hall to take part in the inauguration of the Remuera Chapter. At eight o'clock the Principals of the Auckland Chapter, M.E. Comps. Skinner and Nelson (M.E. Comp. Moss Levy taking the place of M.E. Comp. Dr. Dawson, unavoidably absent) opened a Chapter of Royal Arch Masonry. The procession then entered the Chapter, which was subsequently duly consecrated, dedicated, and constituted by the Most Excellent Companion, Rev. Wm. Tebbs P.Z., who, as a member of the Supreme Grand Chapter of England, acted as its deputy on the occasion. The exceedingly beautiful ritual included some well-executed music, of the execution of which Comp. Pooley had the conducting, and a well-conceived and planned oration by M.E. Comp. the Rev. C. M. Nelson, who officiated as Acting Chaplain. The duties of Master of Ceremonies were admirably performed by M.E. Comp. Wade, the acting Scribe E. The Chapter having been duly formed, the Principals were inducted and invested as follow:—M.E. Comps. W. Lodder as M.E.Z., Captain Wildman (as deputy of Comp. Moat) as H., and Cooper as J. The Chapter next elected Comp. Tebbs to be the first M.E.P.Z; a motion also being tabulated to confer upon him the honorary membership of the Chapter. The other Officers having been elected and nominated respectively, were then duly inducted and invested:—Comps. Wade Scribe E, Kitt Scribe N, La Rocha P.S., Wade Treasurer, Pooley acting Organist, and Tonge acting Janitor. There were fifteen nominations for joining on exaltation. A vote of thanks was passed to Mrs. Tebbs for the present of a veil embroidered in gold upon white satin; also a vote to those who had come out to assist in the ceremony. After the Chapter had been closed, the Companions sat down to an excellent supper, when, after the usual interrogatories, the following toasts were enthusiastically drunk:—T.T.G.M., the Queen and the Royal Craft, the Most Excellent Grand Principal H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, and the other Grand Principals (Earl Lathom and Lord de Tabley), of the Supreme Grand Chapter of England, given by the M.E.Z., and responded to by the Deputy (Companion Tebbs); The three Principals of Remuera Chapter, by Comp. Nelson, and duly responded to; the P.S. and other Officers of the Chapter, duly responded to; M.E. Companion Tebb the Consecrating and Installing Officer, by Comp. Wildman; Sister Constitutions and Chapters, responded to by M.E. Companion Levy; M.E. Companion Wade, by the First Principal. The Janitor's toast brought to a close a most enjoyable evening.

Installation Meeting of the Eden Lodge, No. 1530.—The regular monthly meeting of this Lodge was held on Tuesday evening, the 28th August. Lodge was opened by Bro. J. Carlaw P.M., and three gentlemen were ballotted for successfully. The W.M. Bro. Kitt then took the chair, and the gentlemen ballotted for were duly initiated in the first degree. There was a specially good attendance of installed Masters, including Bros. Lodder D.D.G.M. E.C. Bro. P.M. Dr. Dawson Installing Master, installed the W.M. elect, Bro. T. W. Kitt, who was re-elected to this office. The ceremony was very impressive throughout. The W.M. then invested his officers as follow:—Bros. J. Warren I.P.M., E Hewson S.W., H. Stephens J.W., T. Jones Treasurer, J. Warren Secretary, H. Smith S.D., E. Thompson J.D., T. Grey I.G., Geo. Johnson Tyler. The usual congratulations from representatives of the various Lodges represented having been received, the meeting was closed in the usual manner. A banquet was held subsequently in the large room upstairs. The spread was provided by Bro. T. McEwen, of the City Buffet, in good taste. The usual list of toasts were given, and a very pleasant recess followed the labours of the evening.

HOW AMERICANS SPEND THEIR SUMMER HOLIDAY.

HERE is the summer holiday again. What shall we do with it? It is not more than a dozen years since the hard-worked New Yorker or Philadelphian with small income made up his mind that the summer holiday, which was an indulgence to his well-to-do neighbour, was a necessity for himself—as much of a necessity in the work of the year as the hours for sleep are in the work of the day. So far so good. Now that he is convinced of that, he takes his holiday; but he is not yet used to it. He carries the luxury uneasily; it discomforts him; he does not know how to use it. Having but the one chance to be idle in the year, he is captious about the idleness, and scared lest he may not enjoy every moment of it. He knows what he wants very well. He and his wife and children are talking about that at this very moment in a hundred thousand places. He will tell you that he is not hard to please. There are certain essentials, to be sure, which he must have when he leaves home for enjoyment: sublime scenery, pure air, no mosquitoes, plenty of game, milk, fruit, and egg, congenial society, spring mattresses, well-cooked meals, and little to pay at the end of the week—give him these and he is satisfied. Where he shall go to find them, and, after he has gone, how he was cheated while he was there, afford him matter for grumbling from May until December.

Now his French and German cousin over the sea has a hundred holidays in the year. He knows how to bring the flavour out of every drop in the orange. He drifts into idleness easily, without thought. When his fête comes, he goes, for a few francs, with his sweetheart or his wife, a mile or two out of town. They joke and laugh. The sun shines, the wind blows—it is all good. It rains, it is dusty—but they joke and laugh all the same. They criticise nothing. How good it all is! But as for our American, a corn husk bed, or a mosquito in the woods, will overturn a whole summer's airy fabric of happiness. In his anxiety lest he should not seize the best chance of enjoyment, he his apt to follow the largest crowd. He goes to Niagara, to Cape May, to the Adirondacks, or to some one of the countless pasteboard mansions or hot farmhouses in the suburbs of the cities. He tells you that his object is rest and feedom, but the chances are that he leaves both behind in his house in town. There he could wear his old slippers; he chose his own companions; he held such habits and opinions as suited him; he was the MacDonald, and where he sat was the head of the table. But in every one of these summer homes society tramples him down. It is often a little clique of which he never heard before, "without father, mother, or descent." He may laugh at it as vulgar and ignorant, but it is master of the position; he is not. In the hottest months of the year, when even the beasts in the field lie down to rest, it forces upon him a hurly-burly of fashion, gossip, dress, outlay, and weariness, which at home he can manage to shut outside of his own door. He goes back, as a rule, to his shop or office, his gas-pipes and family table, unrefreshed, and glad the holiday is over. But, after all, he goes with the crowd. The history of all summering-places is alike. An adventurous artist usually ventures into a new field, and whispers his discovery to his friends. Scenery is well nigh as popular a hobby just now as household decoration. After him come pell-mell the would-be æsthetics, and later the mere fashionables, as the flock follows the tinkle of the bell-weather, and up go the mammoth hotels as fast as mushrooms spring up on a May morning on betramped sheep-walks.—REBECCA HARDING DAVIS IN Harper's Magazine for July.

Ancient Ebor Preceptory, No. 101.—The regular meeting of this Preceptory was held at York, on Tuesday, the 11th inst., when there were present E. Frater M. Millington Preceptor, T. B. Whytehead P.P. Reg., J. S. Cumberland P.P. Sub-Marshal, W. Lawton P.P. as Chap., A. T. B. Turner Marshal, Geo. Simpson P.P., W. Brown Captain of Guards, and others. Successful ballots were taken for Comps. W. P. Moat, Prince of Wales Lodge and Chapter 1338, Auckland, New Zealand, and Capt. O. J. Cavenagh, Agricola Lodge 1991, and Zealand Chapter 236, after which Comp. Moat was received and installed a knight of the Order by E. Frater T. B. Whytehead. The Registrar produced the balance-sheet of the expenses of the reception of the American visitors in July, which was regarded as showing a very satisfactory result, thanks to the liberality of the leading members of the Order. The alms having been collected, the conclave was closed and the fratres adjourned to the Queen's Hotel, where supper was served.

The meeting of the North London Chapter of Improvement, on Thursday, the 27th inst., was held at the Alwyne Castle Tavern. Comp. Dean occupied the chair of Z., Comp. Hunter H., Comp. Strugnell J. The Convocation was attended by a large number of R.A. Masons. On Thursday, the 4th October, the Principal and Companions of the Metropolitan Chapter will rehearse the ceremony of exhaltation at eight o'clock at the above address. Comp. Jas. Willing jun. has kindly consented to be present. The Companions of the North London Chapter of Improvement look forward to a large gathering on the occasion.

The Provincial Grand Lodge of Mark Masons of Berks and Oxon is to be held on the 8th of October, at Reading, under the banner of the Leopold Lodge, No. 235, the Earl of Jersey is the Provincial Grand Master.

RANDOM NOTES AND REFLECTIONS.

WHAT a contrast between the number of cases brought before the Lodge of Benevolence last week, and the number of applications for the Girls' and Boys' Schools. In another part of the Chronicle will be found a letter by "Watchman," on the meeting of the Lodge of Benevolence, to which we invite attention, as an independent judgment on a matter that is sure to cause a good deal of speculation. We do not now propose to follow our correspondent, except to say that, whatever may be the explanation as to the number of persons who applied for relief, as a fact it is gratifying of itself. We wish we could say the same of the other two admirable Institutions. When we find that only eight out of thirty-two candidates for the Girls' School and twenty out of sixty-three for the Boys' School can succeed at the following elections, we are made painfully aware of a lamentable condition of things. We deeply regret the necessity that compels brethren to seek relief from the burthen of a large family with but limited means at their command. To have to say non possumus to a large number of applicants is the most distressing feature in connection with our Charities. We regard with pardonable pride the noble generosity that characterises our Order, but we look with sorrow upon the growing demands that are made upon some of our Charities. We cannot steel our hearts against the many claims that are made. Those that exist demand our consideration, our deepest sympathy, and our most anxious and earnest labours. We may, however, suggest that it would be well to reflect upon the future look-out, to endeavour to see whether sufficient care is exercised in admitting brethren into the Craft. We should remember that Freemasonry is not a primary charitable institution, that after every precaution has been taken there is always certain to be a sufficiently large proportion of candidates for relief to call forth all the energies of the liberal-hearted supporters of the Order. We should indeed feel proud and grateful if the time arrived when none should be sent empty away, and to make that result possible prudence as well as generosity must play a prominent part.

—:o:—

It is always painful to have to discount a candidate's chance. It is a delicate task as well, and one of which we would be gladly relieved. Sometimes circumstances render that duty inevitable, and we must not shrink from discharging it when we are brought face to face with facts. Last week we printed a letter from Bro. Binckes, the able and esteemed Secretary of the R.M. Institution for Boys, in which he justly and temperately vindicates his office from what most people will consider a serious charge. It appears that a petition was presented in favour of a boy named Edward Bramble Green, but it did not arrive in time to be included in the October list. Notice of the fact was sent to the representative of the case, and also the intimation that the boy had been accepted as a candidate, and would be placed on the April list. So far the course pursued was regular; not so that adopted by the friends of the candidate. They issued an ordinary circular, to which names of brethren of the highest standing in the Craft is attached; but they added a note, in which they say that "through inadvertence in OFFICE the candidate's name was omitted to be placed on the official list." To this is added the request that votes should be forwarded for the October Election, "so that they may be made available for April 1884, as this is the only Election the candidate is eligible for."

—:o:—

To use a familiar phrase, "time is the essence of the contract." When was the circular issued? If, as appears evident on the face of it, it was after Bro. Binckes' intimation had been received, then the charge that is implied in the "note" is unpardonable. No official can go beyond the rules of his office; he is bound by them, however much he might be inclined to indulge his sympathy. We believe the officials of our Charities, one and all, are anxious that the utility of the means at their command should be as large as possible, but they cannot depart from systematic government. They have no choice as to form, and if Bro. Binckes followed the usual course in the case of the little fellow Green, and there is no reason to think otherwise, then the action of the boy's friends is not only unwise but unjust. It may have arisen through a mistake, if so they ought at once to withdraw the circular, and apologise to Bro. Binckes for the unwarrantable offence they have put upon him. So much for the justice of the case, which alone ought to determine action. But for the interest of the boy himself, it would be expedient to withdraw the circular, for the simple reason that the votes given for Green at the October election would be lost. They could not be made available in October, and they could not be carried forward to April. Probably this stubborn fact will have due weight, and result in more prudent action.

We cannot too strongly condemn the practice of printing offensive charges, or of implying them in written communications. We have had some unpleasant evidences of the latter course, in which brethren assume conclusions that are too often as uncharitable as they are untrue. If Masonry teaches anything it is the virtue of charity and forbearance. Even in the case of an erring brother we are taught to pity and not condemn, to lift up and not cast down. When, however, reproaches are made upon unfounded assumptions, the offence is increased tenfold. If certain members of the Craft cannot rise above the vice of suspicion, the selfishness and corruption of the world, then the sooner they learn the first elementary lessons of the Order, or leave it, the better. Our task in the conduct of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE is onerous enough of itself, but to have to submit to unjust innendoes, and to receive impertinent letters, is almost beyond endurance. We endeavour to be true to our calling, to be faithful to the Craft, and we have a right to expect, at least, courtesy in return. We cannot, of course, name individuals, nor do we desire to dwell unnecessarily on the subject; yet, while we gladly acknowledge the confidence placed in us by the brethren at large, and the kindness that is so frequently shown to us, we cannot too strongly denounce a practice that is degrading to the offender, to the genius of Masonry, and painful to ourselves.

Brother the Rev. John Conder, LL.D., Rector of Wendy, Royston, Chaplain to the Grand Masters' Lodge, No. 1, has taken up the question that is now agitating many fathers with respect to the future of their boys. Writing to a public print, Bro. Conder says:

> I am on the point of resigning a country living to take a British Chaplaincy at Fray Bentos, with itinerary duty among English settlers and proprietors. For the good of "Our Boys" I promise to send home particulars of the suitability of the Uruguay for English emigrants as I find it, to any parents (and particularly Brother Masons) who will favour me with their names and addresses.

Many people favour emigration as the readiest and best outlet for the surplus population, and as there seems to be a dearth of employment, and a limited chance for the young at home, trustworthy information of foreign settlements will be a boon. Bro. Conder has accepted an onerous post. We wish him health, strength, and success in the great work he has undertaken.

The Percy Lodge of Instruction, No. 198, has an honourable record. We recently printed a summary of work done and the attendances of the members during the years 1881-2, from which it was seen that not only is it now in a flourishing state, but also that for many years it has held a foremost rank among the labourers in Masonic work. The Percy Lodge of Instruction claims to be one hundred years old, or thereabouts, and to be the oldest Lodge of the kind in existence. There may be some doubt about this, but none with regard to the excellent workers who have distinguished the body. In consequence of this excellence, brethren have flocked from no fewer than 150 other Lodges to share in the advantages that the Lodge has imparted, and still continues to impart. In the summary referred to, supplied by an esteemed correspondent, it was stated that Brother the late "Stephen Barton Wilson was identified with the work of this Lodge of Instruction for many years." Bro. George Lambert, no mean authority, in a letter now before us, disputes the accuracy of that statement. He says: "Brother Stephen Barton Wilson was NEVER identified with the Percy Lodge of Instruction;" and further on he adds: "I am not aware that Bro. Wilson was ever a member, and if I remember rightly, he was so much afflicted by illness that he neither attended Lodges, or very much to any business; but I am speaking of forty years ago."

Two moot points are raised—one as to the age of the Percy Lodge of Instruction, or rather its rank as to age, and the other as to the position, if any, Bro. Wilson held in that Lodge of Instruction. Bro. Lambert confirms the statement made in the summary we published on the 11th August last, in a somewhat modified degree. He writes: "A Bro. Whittics was the first Preceptor, I think in 1802, if not during the last century." Where does Bro. Lambert get his information from? Would not the same source, if consulted, settle the matter difinitely? Perhaps he relies upon tradition, and not upon written records. The former is not so reliable as the latter, although we by no means despise the oral transmission of facts, fancies, and theories, from age to age. We owe a good deal that is esteemed of the highest value to such means. If Bro. Lambert relies upon minutes taken and recorded, it would be an easy task to search out all the facts relating to the time of which they speak. Now, with regard to Bro. Stephen Barton Wilson, we think if Bro. Lambert will take the trouble he will find that Bro. Wilson was a member of the Percy Lodge of Instruction, and that his name is recorded as having attended, if he did not superintend its working. The inference is, that interested as Bro. Wilson was in the ritual that bears his name, he would take every opportunity of visiting all the Lodges of Instruction within his reach, a task far easier in his day than now. Then the number was comparatively few, now they are many indeed. Nothing is more feasible than that he would seek to leave the impress of his own thoughts and style upon such a body of earnest workers as the Percy Lodge of Instruction. It is, therefore, more than probable that he did visit the Lodge in question, and did identify himself with its work.

—:o:—

Bro. Lambert says the real Simon Pure was Brother Peter Gilkes. He it was who founded the ritual now used in the Emulation Lodge of Improvement, of which Brother Wilson was a Preceptor. The two are thus linked together very closely. But Brother Lambert goes farther, and states that Brother Gilkes was the Preceptor of the Percy Lodge of Instruction, and adds the very gratifying piece of news that his pupils presented him with a gold jewel of the value of a hundred guineas. Still, that does not alter the claim made for Brother Wilson. Both used the same system—the latter being really the teacher of the system founded by Brother Gilkes himself. We are of course accepting Brother Lambert's statements as correct.

—:o:—

There can be no mistake about the jewel, for it is still in existence, the pride of the Percy Lodge, and the cherished inheritance of Bro. Lambert himself. He says Bro. Gilkes "willed the jewel to Bro. Geo. W. Robt. Key, who left it on his decease to me. I permit the Master of the Percy Lodge to wear it as the Master's Badge for the time being, and the jewel is now in my possession. It is the Master's and the Past Master's jewels, surrounded by a framework of brilliants, the square powdered with close set rose diamonds." We cannot tell what Bro. Lambert's intentions are with respect to the future disposal of the jewel. We are certain he is too good a Mason to allow such a splendid gift to lie idle in hidden security. It represents a system of working; it was given to a brother who was the beloved Preceptor of the Percy Lodge of Instruction; it is now permitted to adorn the breast of the W.M. of the mother Lodge, and, subject to Bro. Lambert's discretion, its home should be in the Lodge for ever.
