HARVARD COLLEGE LIBRARY
INGRAHAM FUND
Nov. 29, '20

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

Vol. X.—No. 1.] SUNDAY, JANUARY 5, 1890. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

ANOTHER MURDERER GONE TO GLORY.

WILL DUKES, the murderer, just hung at Manchester, was a very commonplace villain. He killed his employer like a beast, and tried to conceal the crime like a fool. During the trial he imitated the unhappy example of Mrs. Maybrick, and made a voluntary statement, in which the jury showed their disbelief by bringing in a verdict of wilful murder. But before paying the penalty of the law he was prepared for kingdom-come by the professional soul-saver of the gaol, and so efficacious were this gentleman's services, that Dukes went to the scaffold with the sure and certain hope of a glorious passage to heaven. At any rate he "died happy," to use his own last words, and it is to be presumed he is now in glory, twanging his hallelujah harp, blowing his hallelujah trumpet, joining in the chorus of all the menagerie of the Apocalypse, and consorting with all the hung and unhung scoundrels who have left the earth for a more genial locality where their characters are better appreciated. May God, if there be a God, forbid we should ever join their holy crew, for we would rather take a villa or a flat in Hell than be for ever disgusted with such neighbors in Heaven.

Like all the rest of us, Dukes was what he was because he was constructed that way. When a man has the sense of a fool and the savagery of a beast, it is no wonder that he commits a murder; just as a tender-hearted man might weep that such creatures ever existed for their own misery and the world's affliction. We do not intend, therefore, to waste our time in denouncing the poor devil. Our object is to show the beautiful effect of the Christian doctrine of repentance, particularly on the very natures for which it was especially designed.

Cardinal Newman, in his marvellously eloquent lectures on the Difficulties of Anglicans, gives his whole genius to a picture of a murderer and his execution. The affair is the talk of the town. There is an hourly bulletin of the culprit's spiritual state. Some say he is obdurate, some that he has yielded. The women cry out that Jesus and Mary will see to it. The excitement is at its height, the suspense is intolerable. At last the news is circulated that the culprit has confessed, asked pardon of God, and made up his mind for a long spell of purgatory. Then arises a shout of joy and thanksgiving for "the grace vouchsafed to one so near eternity."

This is very interesting, but not very edifying. Such pious resignation on the part of the condemned murderer does not sensibly affect the statistics of crime. Throats are still cut, property is still unsafe. The dying may profit, but it brings little benefit to the living. The fact is, religion makes death an opportunity of appealing to the imagination. The criminal is "near eternity," but so are hundreds of others in every great city. He will not die alone. Some other life will expire at the same moment; not that of a murderer, but perhaps of a father who has toiled hard, and brought up his children honorably; or a poor widow who has worn herself to death to find her little ones bread. No excited crowd is making a fuss about them. Such exits from life are common and do not inflame the imagination, and of course religion is a matter of imagination from beginning to end.

The culprit himself is simply appealed to on his selfish side. What is to become of him? Where will he go? His victim is entirely lost sight of. Yet, if a man's heart were touched, that is the only thing he would think about. What of the man I wronged, robbed, murdered, and hurried into the next life? What is his fate? What will become of his widow and children? What can I do, slight as it may be, to ease their burden or lighten their grief? Such are the questions he should ask, but such questions do not trouble the scoundrels who walk to the scaffold and swing into heaven. Religion says to them "Look after your immortal soul," and they look after it, just as they formerly looked after silver spoons, cash boxes, and other unconsidered trifles. They repent; that is to say, they are sorry—in the circumstances. A reprieve would damp their piety, a pardon would extinguish it. They square it with God because they think he has power to plague them. Their repentance is only a desire to escape the lash.

Dukes made an edifying end. He died happy. Heaven opened as earth slipped from his feet. The night before he exchanged the prison cap for a crown of immortality he wrote a longish letter to a friend, full of maudlin self-pity and unctuous cant. He recommends "religion and temperance," quotes Scripture, believes he can suffer hanging as Jesus Christ suffered crucifixion, reproaches the friends who had not called upon him in prison, but magnanimously forgives them, though with a warning to "be careful." Not a word about poor Gordon whom he murdered Not a word or a sigh of regret, except for his own plight and the sorrow of his own wife. Such "repentance" is detestable, and the religion which inspires it is accursed.

"I feel prepared for my doom," he said, "through the mercy of my Lord Jesus Christ." Poor Gordon was less lucky. He was not prepared for his doom. Dukes murdered him without warning; did not even send him a coffin and cross-bones as a gentle reminder. Poor Gordon had so little of the "mercy of my Lord Jesus Christ" that he had to leave the world in too great a hurry to settle his spiritual accounts. While bashing his head with the hammer, Dukes might have cried with Gloucester, "Down, down to hell, and say I sent thee thither." But Dukes himself was more fortunate. He had ample room and verge enough to prepare to meet his God. The chance denied to his victim was given to him. And if there is any truth in the parable of Dives and Lazarus, Dukes may sit and see Gordon cooking in Hades. "A mad world, my masters," where men believe such things. This Christian superstition is fit for knaves and fools. Honest, sensible men should hiss it out of the world.

G. W. FOOTE.

Digitized by Google

SACRIFICE.*

PROF. ROBERTSON SMITH'S new book is decidedly the best he has yet put forward. It contains more genuine learning and far less truckling to the orthodox than his Old Testament in the Jewish Church. Prof. Smith has not quite got rid of his fear of the kirk and we continually come across passages in which he softens down the result of his own researches. When we remember how even Prof. Huxley demolished the Genesis account of creation under the name of the Miltonic hypothesis, and how Prof. Smith was hunted out of the Free Kirk for his heresy, we may pass over his timidity and express for ourselves the conclusions to which his investigations lead us.

There is very much in the volume well worthy of discussion. Indeed, it is likely we shall return to certain items in regard to totemism and taboo, for they strongly corroborate a thesis we have upheld in these pages, viz., that the early Jews were savages. But the chief interest of the book centres round the fundamental institution of sacrifice. The origin and meaning of sacrifice constitute a central problem of ancient religion. That question connects the stronghold of Christianity, its doctrine of the Atonement, with the most barbarous customs of primitive savages. Much has been written upon it, and certainly Professor Smith's contribution is one of the most remarkable.

At the outset Prof. Smith has some noteworthy remarks on the fact that ancient religion was more largely concerned with practices than beliefs, and that with them mythology took the place of dogma, the myths being derived from the ritual, the latter being fixed, but the myths being variable. Prof. Smith very properly illustrates the religious practices of the Jews by those of the Arabs and other Semitic nations. There is a double advantage in this, for not only is the one illustrated by the other, but the nature of such a practice as that of sacrifice is much more clearly seen by the Christian reader when exhibited by other nations than as it appears among God's chosen people. The sacrifice of the first-born appears in its true light when related of the King of Moab (2 Kings iii., 27), but when told of Abraham or of God the Father himself, the horrible character of the proceeding is veiled in all sorts of disguises.

To understand early customs, we must study early Sociology and it is exactly because Professor Smith has given so much of his attention here that his book is a distinct advance upon any previous one upon the subject. It is not hard to understand how sacrifices arose. The Hindoos who placed upon the grave of an English officer the brandy and cheroots which he loved in life in order to propitiate his spirit illustrated a prominent aspect. Just as men were appeased with gifts, usually of substances which minister to life, so were spirits supposed to be, and the general form which the offering took, was something in the shape of what the Americans call a square meal. The Romans never sat down to eat without placing a portion aside for the Lares and Penates, and Prof. Smith gives abundant evidence that the early sacrifices of the Semitic people were animals offered at a meal partaken by the worshippers. The sacrifice, he holds, was originally a nourishing of the common life of the kindred and their god by a common meal. Eating and drinking together were primarily a sign of fraternity. Only to his own kin did early man own duty, and his god was always of his own kin. Jehovah was as we are often told, the god of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. He was their father and their king. When Ruth said to Naomi "Thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God," the exclamation showed that taking up new kindred involved a change of worship. Prof. Smith says. "It cannot be too strongly insisted on that the idea of kinship between gods and men was originally taken in a purely physical sense." The Christian's explanations of Biblical anthropomorphisms may be dismissed as unfounded assumptions. The story in Genesis of the sons of God going with the daughters of men is one of the remnants of early myths unexplained by later editors.

The primitive tie being one of blood kinship, the offering of blood was thought to peculiarly cement the unity between the deity and his people. Herbert Spencer points out in his "Ceremonial Institutions," how blood offerings over the dead may be explained from the practice of establishing a sacred bond between living persons by partaking of each other's blood. The derived conception being that those who give some of their blood to the ghost, effect with it a union, which on the one side implies submission, and on the other side friendliness. Hence the worshippers of Baal, gashed themselver with knives (1 Kings xviii., 20).† Hence too, the frequent employment of blood in sorcery. The blood being the natural sign of life, or as it is called in Gen. ix., 4, and Deut. xii., 23 the life itself, it was reserved for Jahveh; as with the ancient Mexican and Central American gods, to whom was continually offered up the blood alike of sacrificed men and animals.

The notion that communion with the deity is effected by means of a meal in which blood—be it only the blood of the grape—forms an element, shows a survival in the Christian rite of Communion. The story that Jesus offered bread and wine saying this is my flesh and this is my blood, is an evident myth founded on the rite in which the sacred meal was supposed to cement the kinship with the deity. Prof. Smith says throughout the Semitic field the fundamental idea of sacrifice is that of communion between the god and his worshippers by joint participation in the living flesh and blood of the "sacred victim." The term communion is misleading if likely to give rise to thoughts of ideal devotion for it is abundantly clear that the only communion with deity dreamt of by early man was communion of food and consequent communion of blood and kinship. To the barbarous notion that deities are to be appeased by a blood communion, Christianity has added the absurdity that Christ was God, thus making God, in the famous phrase of Diderot, "sacrifice himself in order to appease himself."

We should have liked Prof. Smith to have entered more fully into the subject of substitutionary sacrifice and to have traced the steps which connect the primitive sacrifice of the mess with the sacrament of the mass, the supper where the deity eats with that where he is eaten. But this would be too much to expect even from this heterodox professor, whose work we heartily commend to our readers as a courageous and learned introduction to the study of the Semitic faiths, which, it has been boasted, have supplied the world with its principal religions.

J. M. WHEELER.

Theology is but ignorance of natural causes reduced to a system.—D'Holbach.

I do not believe that any two men, on what are called doctrinal points, think alike who think at all. It is only those who have not thought that appear to agree.—Paine.

The church that does not allow investigation, that teaches that all doubts are wicked, attains unity through tyranny, that is, monotony by repression. The boast of unity is the confession of tyranny.—Ingersoll.

There is in childhood a period measured by six, or at most by ten years, when any well-inculcated dogma, no matter how extravagantly absurd, is sure to retain its hold for life.—Schopenhauer.

The progress from deepest ignorance to highest enlightenment is a progress from entire unconsciousness of law to the conviction that law is universal and inevitable.—Spencer.

---

* "Lectures on the Religion of the Semites;" First series "The Fundamental Institutions," by W. Robertson Smith, M.A., LL.D. Edinburgh, Adam and Charles Black, 1889.

† Prof. Smith points out that the Syriac word ethkashaf "make supplication," literally means "cut oneself."

Digitized by Google

LETTERS TO THE CLERGY.—VIII.

On "Prayer."

To the Rev. T. Teignmouth Shore, M.A.
Chaplain-in-ordinary to the Queen.

(CONCLUDED.)

INSTEAD of skulking behind ambiguous illustrations, I invite you to take a simple one, and see whether it confirms or contradicts your theory. Let us go to the Prayer Book of your Church. In the "Forms of Prayer to be Used at Sea" I find a special prayer against storms, containing the following ejaculation: "O send thy word of command to rebuke the raging winds and the roaring sea; that we, being delivered from this distress, may live to serve thee, and to glorify thy name all the days of our life."

Let me ask you to explain how God's acting upon "the physical world indirectly, through his action upon human thought and will," is likely to make a storm subside. It seems to me that human volition cannot break or bend a single law of nature, and that human thought has no effect on the weather. The only way to save a ship in a storm is to handle her well, and throw overboard a few gallons of oil, which can be done by Atheists as well as by Christians. Superstition says that the will of God can control the winds and waves by some mysterious process. The doctrine is, of course, unintelligible, but you have undertaken to teach it. Yet you did not undertake to explain or defend it, and you are ill advised in attempting to do either. Your safest course is to say, "God does still storms in answer to prayer, but I do not know how he does it."

Not only does your theory of God's control of the physical world by human agency break down, but you connect it with a metaphysical theory which has been repudiated by the greatest doctors of your own faith. Your argument stands or falls with the doctrine of Free Will. You perceive unchanging law in the external world, but you declare that the internal world of man's nature is "another department where God governs, not by Law, but through the freedom of the human Will."

I will not discuss Free Will. There is no need to do so. You are defending Prayer as a Christian, and are not entitled to assume what many of the greatest Christians have denied. A theory of Christian prayer which would necessarily be rejected by Saint Augustine, Martin Luther, John Calvin, and Jonathan Edwards; a theory which flies in the face of the plainest teaching of Saint Paul; a theory which is explicitly condemned by the tenth and seventeenth Articles of your own Church; such a theory, I say, is totally inadmissible, unless you prove it in opposition to these preponderant authorities; and as you make no attempt to prove it, but simply postulate it as though it were a Christian axiom, I am justified in declining to accept it as a basis of discussion.

The only question which is worth discussing, after all, is this—Does God answer Prayer? Or, in other words—Is Prayer answered? Now this is a question of objective fact, for I have contended, and you tacitly admit, that every one who prays asks for something that would not happen in the ordinary course of nature. It is idle to say that the lives of praying men prove the efficacy of prayer. You yourself furnish the answer to this sophism, before attempting a singularly feeble reply. It is downright folly to assert that "Christianity as a whole is the true explanation, and the strongest defence of Christian Prayer," for that is assuming everything at first, and proving it afterwards in detail by means of the general assumption. The question is not whether God might, could, would, or should answer Prayer, but, in your own words, Does he do so? Now the only way to answer this question is to appeal to evidence. It has been proposed by Professor Tyndall, on the suggestion, I believe, of Sir Henry Thompson, that an experiment should be made in some hospital, by specially praying for the patients in one ward, and seeing whether it affords a greater percentage of cures. Such a proposal is alarming to the professors of mystery; for all religions die of being found out. and experiment is fatal to their pretensions. Accordingly you declare that this "so-called experiment would, as a matter of religion, be a blasphemy," and that "Prayer made under such conditions could not have in it the esssentials of Prayer." But of course you carefully refrain from suggesting an experiment which would conform to the true conditions, and which would, at the same time, be a real experiment. Nor do you explain why God should regard as "blasphemy" an endeavor to ascertain the truth or falsity of a doctrine taught by priests. It is only religion that cries "blasphemy!" in the presence of investigation.

While waiting for your experiment, I look abroad in the world, and find no practical recognition of the efficacy of Prayer. No Life Assurance Company would calculate a sovereign's life policy on the ground that her subjects asked God to "grant her in health and wealth long to live." No Fire Insurance Company would grant a policy on a House of Prayer unless a lightning conductor were run up to prevent the Deity from making mistakes in a thunderstorm. Underwriters never think of asking whether the captain prays or swears, or whether he carries rum or missionaries. And when the Peculiar People use prayer, without mixing it with medicine, they are browbeaten by Christian coroners and jurymen.

You give only two answers to Prayer, and they are extremely ancient. Nay more, they are selected from the Bible! O sancta simplicitas! Moses prayed to see "the good land beyond Jordan," and died without seeing it; but fifteen hundred years or so afterwards he saw it from "the summit of Tabor" when Christ was transfigured. What a precious "help to belief!" Paul also prayed God to remove his "thorn in the flesh"—whatever that was; and, although the thorn was not removed, God "gave the grace to bear it." Well, if there be a God, let us hope he will give us grace to bear the logic of theologians.

In the little sermon with which you conclude, you picture Christ standing "amid the surging, weeping throng of agonised humanity"—all created by the God of love—and hearing their cries for help from "sin." But is it not a fact that all the alleged miracles of Christ were physical? Where in the whole of the Gospels, did he make a single bad man good? "I have chosen you twelve," he said, "and one of you is a devil." He had, therefore, in Judas a fine subject for one of his "spiritual" miracles. But did he work it? No, the "devil" betrayed him, and Judas has been cursed by Christians ever since.

Here I take leave of your volume. You have not "helped" my "belief." You have said nothing to convince a doubter of the efficacy of Prayer. But you have shown me, once more, that Christianity has in its service a number of intelligent, accomplished, and well-paid men, who juggle and chop straw for a living. If I prayed at all, I would pray that they might despise the wretched business, and earn even a scantier allowance of bread in a more honest avocation.

G. W. FOOTE.

Some cattle at Banbury nearly drove in Mr. Bunton's window. He wrote to the local Guardian advocating the improvement of the street, and is replied to by a good Christian, Y. Z., who thinks it would have been a great blessing "not only if those erratic cattle had smashed his window and destroyed his Freethinkers, but that it had involved the whole building with its enlightening literature, and that it could never be replaced." Y. Z. is truly pious in his wishes, but they will not hurt Mr. Bunton.

Digitized by Google

HELP FOR THE SWEDISH MARTYR.

VIKTOR LENNSTRAND, the gallant young Swedish Freethinker, is in gaol again. He is serving two terms of three months' imprisonment, and one of six, and, as other sentences are pending, it is possible that he will be doomed to linger for two years in the place which Swedish Christianity reserves for bold and honest sceptics. Fortunately Mr. Lennstrand is in good spirits. He is provided with writing materials, and is contributing to his journal the Fritankaren (Freethinker). Captain Otto Thomson has left his home and gone to Stockholm for the purpose of conducting the paper during his friend's imprisonment, and he will keep the flag flying or fall beneath it. The darker side of the matter is this The Swedish Freethinkers are poor, and they are overwhelmed by the difficulty of maintaining the paper, which does not yet pay its way, and providing Mr. Lennstrand with decent food during his incarceration. Of course it scarcely need be said that prison fare is Sweden is very hard, and might seriously injure a delicately-bred gentleman. In these circumstances the Executive of the National Secular Society has voted £2 10s., and decided to appeal to the Freethinkers of Great Britain and Ireland for assistance for their Swedish brethren. A Swedish Prisoners' Fund is therefore open, and subscriptions are urgently requested. They can be sent to Mr. R. Forder, 28, Stonecutter-street, E.C., or to the editors of the Freethinker and the National Reformer.

A FISH, A PROPHET, AND A GOD.

"BREATHES there a man with soul so dead,"
Who will not weep when he has read
How Jonah from his God had fled,

How Jonah strove to get away.
How Jonah's God would have him stay,
How with a fish God barr'd his way?

"O fish!" cried God, "hold Jonah down,
The indolent, disobedient clown,
And bring him back, not far from town."

So back he comes; oh, sad to see!
A sicker fish there could not be,
I wot none ever swam the sea.

"Thou fish," roared God, "heave Jonah out!"
"I must," quoth fish, "beyond a doubt;"
Where'pon the whale began to spout.

"Aha," quoth God, "you're back, I see;
Now skin out straight for Nineveh;
And don't run off and go to sea.

"You lazy, worthless, roving clown,
Cry out like mad through all the town
That you and God will burn it down.

"Sure pop, old man, now git, I say;
You surely ought to find the way;
So don't you dare to go astray."

So Jonah got, as git he must,
God scarce could see him for the dust;
He sped as though his gall he'd bust.

And Jonah cried his false alarm,
Not doubting God would make it warm
For Nineveh in a fiery storm.

He bawled, he yelled, his Thus God saith;
He raved and stormed till out of breath,
And scared some Ninnies half to death.

"Yet forty days," great Jonah cries,
"We'll bake you up in brimstone pies,
On Jonah's God you'll find no flies."

The forty days their course had run,
Still Jonah sweltering in the sun;
"Alas!" quoth he, "where's all the fun?"

In this sad fix Jonah went to bed,
Growled about God, and finally said:
"Darn all Nineveh! I wish I was dead!"

So thus he died, and has gone to sleep
With his father and mother. Oh, weep,
All ye who would God's vigil keep!

NELSON HUNT.

ACID DROPS.

After endorsing the Catholic and High Church doctrine of the indissolubility of marriage, Mr. Gladstone now reprints an old article of his, written in 1844, eulogising the Confessional as an agency of spiritual culture. The Tablet, of course, is in high spirits, and those who have always asserted that Mr. Gladstone was a Catholic at heart are shaking their heads more ominously than ever.

Mr. Gladstone speaks of Confession as "making clean the inner chambers of the heart." But those who know the Confessional practically, in countries where the churches are whispering galleries, say that the priest too often leaves more dirt in the penitent's mind than he found there. How often is the young girl's mind poisoned by the lascivious suggestions of a priestly mud-raker. How often does the priest carry on a kind of spiritual adultery with the wife while the husband is toiling for her maintenance. And how often does the priest, who is for ever listening to confessions of frailty, become a volcano of morbid passion, that sometimes finds a vent in the beastliness for which the clerical tribe are only too famous.

Mr. Gladstone says he gave no permission for the republication of this old article. The editor of Merry England says he did, and flourishes one of the Grand Old Man's postcards. All this is a very trivial matter—to the public. The only important question is, Does Mr. Gladstone still endorse his old view of confession? If so, let him read again Michelet's Priests, Women, and Families.

Canon Liddon must be singularly behind date if he meant what he said about the late Bishop of Durham. According to the eloquent Canon, Bishop Lightfoot rolled back the worst attack on the Scriptures since the days of the early Church. But every out-ider knows he did nothing of the sort. He spent all his time in wiping off the spray, while the tide flowed on unimpeded. Even the Athenæum, which is not an heretical journal, is obliged to admit that "He was timid. He clung strongly to tradition. He disliked to be disturbed in any of the beliefs that prevailed within his Church." It adds that "he saw little truth outside of the beliefs which he deemed the essentials of Christianity. Accordingly, he has struck out no original path. He has done little with which his name will be permanently associated."

The Bishop of Bedford advises the clergy to take the lead in cricket clubs. He says "there is plenty of 'go' among the young fellows." Yes, in the legs. What they want is a little more "go" in their heads.

The Australian pietists have brought a Bill before the Victoria Parliament to prohibit the sale of newspapers on Sunday. The parsons want to have the monopoly of the day. It seems likely that the Bill may become law, but Mr. Symes promises to fight the question and continue at all costs the sale of the Liberator on Sunday. No doubt the parsons here dislike the competition of the Sunday newspaper, but they are not strong enough to attempt their forcible suppression.

The United States Court at Utah has decided against the Mormons being allowed to vote on account of their prior allegiance to the Church. If this judgment were applied to the Roman Catholics, it would disfranchise every one of them.

The Theosophists explain why they claim Edison. He joined the Theosophical Society in 1878, and as he has not publicly withdrawn, they still claim him as a member. Capital! Now note the subtlety of these people. When they ask you to join the Theosophical Society they tell you that you can do so without becoming a Theosophist; but, judging by Edison's case, the moment they book you they claim you as a Theosophist for ever.

Reluctance to pay up is found even among the Theosophists, despite their spiritual culture, which is so superior to that of ordinary beings. The difficulty in getting in subscriptions led to the appointment of "commissioners" in July last, and the result is a recommendation to substitute a system of voluntary contributions for the old method of definite subscriptions, which were so indefinitely received.

Digitized by Google

Prayer doesn't seem very efficacious in Spurgeon's case. His health does not improve, and his voice is almost completely gone. It is really too bad of Jehovah to make such fine promises and break them so shamelessly.

Spurgeon has a new view of persecution. "If any one," he says, "would see a persecutor in full flower, let him listen to a gentleman of 'advanced views' when he is delivering his gentle soul in relation to a Calvinist." Here, surely, says the Christian World, we have the wolf scolding the lamb to perfection.

The Rev. E. P. Downman has got the Bishop of London to relieve him from the vows (we suppose of poverty and chastity) he took some years ago when founding the Order of the Sacred Redeemer in the City-road. The reverend gentleman will now be able to pile up money and marry a wife—two things for which the English clergy have a sneaking fondness.

An evening paper calls this City-road fraternity "a brotherhood for men." Did it ever hear of a brotherhood for women?

There is a proposal to marry people "free, gratis, for nothing" in the State churches at Derby. The object is to draw people away from the Nonconformist chapels and the registry office. Should the scheme succeed it will no doubt be tried elsewhere. The churches, we suppose, will have notices outside to this effect:—"Be ye fruitful and multiply and replenish the earth. Come and be married for nothing. Splendid chance for the poor, the helpless, and the unemployed. Christenings at the same price, with a present of five shillings for each baby, whether single or in twins or triplets."

Canon Eyre, reading a paper on the press at a clerical conference, lamented the power of the press for evil. There were no fewer than three weekly publications of a Freethinking character, and in addition to this there were 57,700 tracts of the same nature. Where does the Canon get his figures? We can assure him that the London Secular Federation issue far more than this number in the course of a year. He then, of course, went on to speak of penny dreadful and other "poisonous and filthy literature" in a way to associate in the minds of his hearers the serious Freethought propaganda with all that is low and detestable. It is the old game of the clericals to seek to blacken their opponents. We can afford to smile and live it down.

Among the "timely topics" submitted for discussion at a recent London Ministers' Meeting were these:—What is a London minister's duty in respect to the alarming increasing debt of the London Methodist Mission? What can be done to save the collapse of the Methodist Day School systems in London? Questions like these show that there is a sombre obverse to the pretty picture of the "Forward Movement."

How funny! The Ceylon Friend, a Methodist paper in the isle of spices, ridicules the Singhalese for their belief in demons, when almost every page of the Christian gospels is saturated with the same superstition.

The Medium, which took no notice of the Fox sisters when they published their exposure of Spirtism, now gives prominence to a recantation by Maggie Fox Kane, in which she repudiates all she said against Spiritualism as false, and hints that she was suborned thereto by Catholics high in position. She says she had a letter from Cardinal Manning advising her to abandon this "wicked work of the Devil." To us this second recantation of Mrs. Fox Kane only makes it clear that her evidence on any point is thoroughly untrustworthy; and from the way in which she herself speaks of her hopes of emolument from lecturing, one need not look far for a motive for her perversions, conversions, and re-conversions.

The good Christians of New York do not permit the directions of the New Testament to be carried out to the public danger. The police raided a faith cure establishment at Brooklyn and arrested three persons who had endangered the public health by going from a house infected with diphtheria and scarlet fever, which they had sought to remove by the prayer of faith, to a place of public meeting without taking the ordinary precautions to prevent the spread of the disease.

The New York Presbyterians, and a good number of Scotch ones too, are getting ashamed of their Westminster Confession of Faith. The Presbytery has reported certain changes which it desires with a view of toning down reprobation, election, and damnation. Meanwhile the orthodox are crying out that hell is just as hot though changed to Hades, and that, as the Scotch beadle said, a kirk without a hell isna' worth a damn.

Canon Shuttleworth is a pleasant gentleman, and we are not surprised at his bursting out into "poetry" on his Christmas cards. But why on earth should a daily paper chronicle such very small beer? Fortunately we are spared six lines out of eight. The two given refer to Robert Browning and Bishop Lightfoot, and are as follows:

Story-singer of earth's hope, man's life, God's love,
Wise pastor, sweet as deep and true of soul.

Lines like these could be turned out by the thousand by any educated man. Preach away, dear Canon, but spare us your "poetry."

Everybody has heard the story of the Quaker sailing in a ship which was attempted to be boarded by a privateer. Seizing a hatchet, he cried out to a fellow with his hand on the bulwark, "Friend, take away thy hand; I am going to chop that wood." A pendant to this story is told by an evening contemporary. An Irish priest was walking in Rome. A "rude fellow of the baser sort" struck him in the face as he was going along the street. "My friend," said he, "smite me on the other cheek also." Nothing loth, the rough administered a sounding blow on the other side of the priest's face. "Now, my friend," said the priest, "I have obeyed the command of the Gospel—it is my turn now." Whereupon he doubled his fists and gave the man as sound a thrashing as ever he had in his life.

Lord Brougham said you could drive a coach and six through any act of parliament, and evidently you could drive Barnum's show through any maxim of Jesus Christ. When the little boy called his sister a fool, and was reminded that whoso calleth his brother a fool is in danger of hell fire, he retorted "She ain't my brother."

The St. James's Gazette gives a very interesting account of the Coronoca Nera, the Black Chronicle, which has been started at Rome as an organ of the lower clergy, and already enjoys a circulation of 38,000 daily. The higher clergy are denounced as avaricious and profligate, and the vices of some are described under pseudonyms that do not disguise their identity. One sells indulgences, another intrigues with his fair penitents, and another carries on an amour with the wife of a brigand whom he shields from the law. Naturally the Cardinals are in a great rage, but the obnoxious paper goes on with its exposures, and demands the abolition of clerical celibacy.

The late Mr. Kavanagh, formerly an M.P., had neither legs nor arms, and the peasantry of his district believe it happened in this way. His mother, a strong Protestant, was offered a plaster model of the Virgin in Paris. She bought it and broke off its arms and legs, and her next child was born with the same defects. Such is superstition in the land of potatoes, pigs, and priests.

A Mr. W. Shepherd opposed Mr. Foote at Nottingham. His remarks were so rambling that the chairman took the sense of the meeting as to whether he should be allowed another speech, and the meeting decided against him. Mr. Shepherd has since eased his mind in a four-paged tract. It seems impossible for him to be accurate. He says he only had five minutes on the platform, when he had fully ten, like other speakers. Being very dull and offensive, Mr. Shepherd complains of Mr. Foote's "sarcasm and ridicule." Another time he is likely to get rather more than less.

The proprietors of St. George's Hall, Plymouth, wouldn't stand a lecture by Mr. Moss on "The Devil's Doom," but they made no objection to "Inspired Nonsense." Christians in that part won't have the Devil played with, but don't mind being called fools.

Digitized by Google

The Bishop of London preaching at Fulham Parish Church on Christmas day, gave utterance to some remarkable theology. Alluding to the connection of Christ with domestic life he was reported in the Evening Standard as saying "this domestic relation had a counterpart in the very essence of God himself. Enough was revealed to them to show that the tie which bound parent to child and child to parent did not spring from the creation of things that they saw, but sprang from a deeper foundation, and had its origin and source in things which were far beyond the possibility of comprehension by our human intellects." If this means anything within the comprehension of human intellects it refers to God the Father and God the Son, and if the domestic relation has a counterpart in the very essence of God himself it must imply there is also a God the Mother who, judging from the analogy of human relations, should be the most important member of the whole concern.

The Rev. Dr. McCann, of St. Cuthbert's, Winson Green, has discontinued the week-day services. He does not feel the utility of discoursing to empty benches, and the people don't see the use of filling them.

The Government inquiry into the management of the Kilkhampton Home, which appears to be conducted by Canon Thynne, a Mother Superior, and sisters, reveals facts by no means creditable to these pious people. Some of the girl inmates testified that they were half starved, that they were punished by putting stinging nettles on their mouths and hands, and that though they went in well, they came out with bad places on neck, arms, and legs.

Several girls declared they did not get enough to eat, but they seem to have had a pretty bellyfull of religion. In the morning they said the Lord's Prayer, sung the hymn "Gentle Jesus," and said a prayer asking God's blessing on Canon Thynne and the Mother. They also had to pray for the sisters and all the others, and in the evening, service was held in the chapel by the Mother.

The birthday of his Savior proved too much for one of the Salvation Army. He appeared to be the leader of a band that caused annoyance near Holborn, and, on being asked to go away, struck a constable in the chest. He was taken to Bow Street and fined 20s.

Dr. Joseph Parker thought it proper at Christmas to warn religious editors, "lest in an unguarded moment ye bite and devour one another." Dr. Parker has edited a Christian paper himself, and knows it would never do to allow the editor of the English Churchman to come near the boss of the Church Times unless both were muzzled.

The Rev. John McNeill, of Regent Square Presbyterian Church, preaching on the Rich Man and Lazarus, denounced the innovators who sought to put out the fires of hell. "This was no mere parable Christ was narrating. . . . The Pharisees denied Christ for his teaching, and he flashed up the lurid light of one of themselves being in hell." The Scotch Spurgeon, after the manner of his kind, makes of the narrative what he pleases. It says nothing of the rich man being a Pharisee, and his torments in hell appear not to have been the result of any sin, but simply a revolution of position, because in his lifetime he received good things and Lazarus evil things.

Mr. C. Raleigh Chichester is struck with a good idea, which he ventilates in the journals. It is to further open up trade with Africa and at the same time to Christianise the Dark Continent. He proposes the formation of a Christian Trading Co., a prominent item of whose operations will be to allow and establish at every station of 300 miles lands for churches, schools and a dwelling-house, which the company will make over to a minister of religion.

The idea is by no means novel. Many travellers have observed how well Christianity and trade go together, and that whenever Christianising begins, the lands and commodities soon—by the divine blessing, of course—find their way into the hands of the Christians.

Here is Mr. William Harris, for instance, who has just put out a book on Morocco. He says that missionaries are invariably accompanied by drink, and is emphatic in his belief that the inhabitants are healthier and better when unchristianised.

The dear old Daily News came out on Tuesday with a rattling blood-and-thunder article on the Bishop of Salisbury and his rigging of the educational supply of the city, by which he practically forces Nonconformists to send their children to Church schools, and have Church religion taught them or none at all Now, Nonconformists play the same game with Freethinkers, and call it fair play. They squeal to the very stars when they are hit themselves, but cannot see that they have no right to beat others. By and bye, perhaps, they will learn that secular education, pure and simple, is the only solution of the difficulty.

Hating every form of persecution, we share the indignation of the Crewe Radidals who have suffered from the bigotry of the Tory railway officials. But while they are smarting they should remember that one kind of persecution is as bad as another. There are several Freethinkers among the railway servants at Crewe, enough to form a good strong Branch of the N. S. S., but they dare not move for the bigotry of Nonconformist foremen. Those who cry out against persecution should be very careful not to indulge in the sport themselves.

A newsagent of the feminine gender, not many miles from the Euston Road, sells the Freethinker. She also sells the War Cry and other religious periodicals, and conducts her business in a spirit of impartiality. This annoys a bigoted sky-pilot, who tells her she ought not to sell this journal. She replies, "I have to get a living, and why shouldn't I make a penny out of one paper as well as another?" He rejoins, "Oh, you shouldn't." "Well," says the shopkeeper, "will you make up my loss if I stop selling it?" Oh dear no! Not he! Bigots like to gratify their bigotry at other people's expense.

The South African Methodist reports a speech of the Rev. J. T. Lloyd at a meeting of the Wesleyan Missionary Society at Port Elizabeth, in which that missionary, while glorifying Christianity, said "The natives come among us and we teach them vices, and they return to their native countries degraded and vitiated from their contact with Christian people." Strange testimony to the triumph of the one divine religion.

PARSONS AND GYPSIES.

ENGAGED in philological research, I became acquainted with the Gypsies and their Oriental language. The designing nomads are no strangers to the Christian religion, for they spoke of duvel (god), duvelesko charo (Jesus), mi-duvelesko mauromengri (the Jews, i.e., god-slayers), and posed as believers, mistaking me for a — parson. It reminds me of the ancient lie they told, when first they appeared in Europe, making their dupes believe that they had been banished from Egypt, as devout followers of the ranter, Jesus; hence Egypcions, Gypcions, Gypsies, (vide Andrew Boorde, 1547). On closer acquaintance, however, they dropped the mask, and frankly acknowledged that their real religion is the acquisition of valuables,—chiefly coin, which they worship like—their Christian brethren. I twitted them with being bengesko folki (the devil's people). An old Romany chal retorted: Aava Aatcheni Romany chalaw see sor nashedé." (Yes, all true Gypsies are lost), which proved to me that the rashei (parson) had not made a lasting impression upon them. Yet the man of god is told by the swarthy would-be penitent (by way of gammon): "Tinova, pal, sor Kon Koovah too pookeras mandi see tatcho.' (I know, brother, everything thou tellest me is true;) —adding with a sly look: "Meero duvel see mere bokorengro, Keknannei wanta sova." (My god is my shepherd: I shall want nothing at all;)—sotto voce, "for I help myself!"—There is a difference between them and the parsons. Gypsies make things pleasant by telling our good fortune (bonne fortune), for which they, poor devils, often suffer imprisonment; whilst parsons make things very unpleasant, by telling our bad fortune (mauvaise fortune), for which they are well paid. Gypsies and parsons carry on a strange game. They delude mankind as to a future state, of which neither can know anything. Yet, instead of being subjected to the same treatment, the former go to jail, whilst the latter are honoured by Court and Government whom they help in duping the people.

CHS. KROLL LAPORTE.

Digitized by Google

MR. FOOTE'S ENGAGEMENTS.

Sunday, January 5, Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, E.C., at 7, "Mr. Gladstone on Marriage and Divorce: a Freethinker's Reply."

Jan. 12, Hall of Science, London; 13, Reading; 19, Liverpool; 23, West Ham; 26, Camberwell.

Feb. 2, Hall of Science, London; 9, Blackburn; 16, Milton Hall, London; 23, Hall of Science, London.

March 2, Manchester; 9, Camberwell; 23 and 30, Hall of Science, London.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

LITERARY communications to be addressed to the Editor, 14 Clerkenwell Green, London, E.C. All business communications to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C.

THE Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the office, post free to any part of Europe, America, Canada and Egypt, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 6s. 6d.; Half Year, 3s. 3d.; Three Months, 1s. 7½d. Australia, China and Africa:—One Year, 8s. 8d.; Half Year, 4s. 4d.; Three Months, 2s. 2d. India:—One Year, 10s. 10d.; Half Year, 5s. 5d.; Three Months, 2s. 8½d.

SCALE OF ADVERTISEMENTS.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 3s.; Half Column, 15s.; Column, £1 10s. Special terms for repetitions.

IT being contrary to post office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will in future receive the number when their subscription expires in a colored wrapper.

A. N. S.—Thanks for the cutting, which may be useful on some future occasion.

"IMMOTUS" writes an interesting letter from South London. We regret it is too long to reproduce. Twelve months ago he first saw a copy of the Freethinker, which was handed to him in the train. He shrank from it with horror, but could not get the picture out of his mind. He avoided the shop where he knew it was exhibited, but at last he purchased a copy and became a regular subscriber, and gradually a Freethinker. He has suffered a good deal of petty persecution, but he does not regret his conversion to Freethought.

A. POMEROY.—We hope you wont be puzzled again by our irony or facetiousness. Of course Sunday Closing is a rank piece of humbug, got up in the interest of the sky-pilots.

J. KING.—We used the word determined in a purely scientific sense, meaning no more than caused; just as we might say that the earth's orbit is determined by the centripetal and centrifugal forces. Foreordained is quite another matter. That means consciously determined by a volition. So, you see, you are in the mess, and not we.

W. INCHES.—Mr. Forder showed us your letter. Some day or other there ought to be a Freethought propaganda in Dublin. When it arrives Mr. Foote will no doubt pay the Irish capital a visit.

R. E. WILCOCKS.—Thanks for the cutting. See "Acid Drops."

T. JENKINS.—Your adventure with the parson was amusing. These black gentry should be tackled whenever possible. Glad to hear you so appreciate our Christmas Number. We have still a supply left for those who would like to purchase further copies for distribution.

JAMES GRAY.—There is no Freethought magazine published in England.

JOSEPH BROWN.—Paragraph inserted.

E. GOTTHEIL.—Thanks. It may be useful.

J. SAUNDERS.—It is hardly fair to make public use of the reverend gentlemen's letters without their permission, and what they write is very nebulous.

C. J. RUSE.—Capital!

TYPO.—Thanks for the paper. Mr. Foote has not visited Bury for many years. There are so many places that want his services, and only fifty-two Sundays in the year. We can still supply the Christmas Number, and shall be glad to be eased of what remains.

G. STEWART.—Thanks. See "Acid Drops."

G. L.—We certainly agree with you that the Salvation Yahoos have no right to howl and blare and drum in public at every hour of the day and night. But if they couldn't make a noise their business would soon expire. The "walk up, walk up" is indispensable to the show.

H. T. BAILEY offers to take 1,000 copies of our last week's article on "Jesus Christ's Birthday" if reprinted as a Tract. What do others say? This correspondent asks the meaning of "sacrosanct." It is (in short) double-holy.

L. STANLEY.—Cuttings are always welcome.

J. BRUMAGE.—Glad to hear your health is improving. It is the best bit of news from the south of England this week.

W. R.—(1) Cobbett was a strong partizan, but worth reading. Both he and Hume are superseded now. Froude, Gardiner, Hallam, and Stubbs are more valuable. (2) The act of Jesus was that of a maniac. The money-changers were doing a legitimate business, changing the current Roman money for the old Jewish money, which alone the priests would accept in the sanctuary. If they cheated they must have been devilish sharp, for all their customers were Jews.

INCOG.—The thing was merely a joke, and the figure was put down at hazard.

PAPERS RECEIVED.—Mumbles Observer—Western Figaro—St. Helens Advertiser—Weekly Telegraph—Devon Evening Express—Westminster News—Banbury Guardian—Rushden Argus—Truthseeker—Surrey Times—Printer's and Stationer's Circular—Twentieth Century—Progressive Idea—South African Methodist—Grocotts—Grahamstown Penny Mail—Evening Standard—Liberator—Freethought—Secular Thought—Open Court—Bulletin des Sommaires—Boston Investigator—Jewish World—Bury Times—Star—New York Herald—Anti Infidel.

FRIENDS who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish our attention directed.

CORRESPONDENCE should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

TO ALL WHOM IT CONCERNS.

A GENTLEMAN asked us at Nottingham if the invitation we printed early in the year was still open. We replied that it was. Our resources are not adequate to carry on our Freethought business properly, and they are diminished from time to time by investors requiring to withdraw their money. We have indeed to repay a good deal of money during the new year, and we shall be glad to hear from any friends who have spare cash to entrust us with. Every investment bears five per cent. interest, and the investor receives a legal document entitling him to recall his amount by six months' notice. We intend, if possible, to be very active in publishing during the next year or two. There is a certain market for all we produce, and a reasonable, if not handsome, profit on sales. It will be borne in mind that the Freethinker brings us no direct return for our labor, at least for the present, though the prospect is slowly improving. We have, therefore, to rely upon what is yielded by the publishing business, which, besides lecturing work, is our only source of income. Our stock of publications is a large one, and some idea of the resources needed may be gathered from the fact that the Dictionary of Freethinkers alone has cost £150 to produce, exclusive of the binding, the expense of which is incurred gradually as the work sells. Those who cannot afford to invest are not desired to inconvenience themselves; we only appeal to those who can; and they who respond quickly will be doing us the greatest service.

G. W. FOOTE.

P.S.—Two friends, one in London and the other in Lancashire, have responded to this appeal. We shall be glad to hear from others forthwith. Any sums from £5 upwards will be acceptable on the foregoing conditions.

SPECIAL.

MR. FOOTE is writing a reply to the Bishop of Peterborough's extraordinary article on Christianity. It will take the form of an open letter, and will be published in pamphlet form early next week, price twopence. The title is not yet settled. Orders can be sent in on Tuesday.

SUGAR PLUMS.

OH the fog! What the deuce is Providence thinking about—putting men in a place to live, and surrounding them with an atmosphere as thick as pea-soup and as black as a priest's face when he sees a heretic? On Sunday evening it was horrid in the vicinity of Old Street, and the three hundred people who found their way to the Hall of Science deserved a medal each in honor of the event. Mr. Foote lectured on the Star of Bethlehem, and really if there be such a luminary about he missed a good opportunity of shining.

THIS evening (Jan. 5) Mr. Foote lectures again at the Hall of Science. His subject will be "Mr. Gladstone on Marriage and Divorce: a Freethinker's Reply." Mr.

Digitized by Google

Gladstone's article on this subject has just appeared in the North American Review.

NEXT Tuesday evening the second annual dinner of the London Secular Federation takes place at the Bridge House Hotel, London Bridge. The dinner will be served punctually at eight. Mr. Foote presides, and there will be toast speeches by many prominent Freethinkers, with musical interludes. This gathering is looked forward to by those who were present on the last occasion, and a very large company is expected. Indeed, the annual dinner may now be regarded as an institution.

SECRETARIES of Branches will please advise Mr. Seago, 209 Hill Street, Walworth, at the latest by Monday morning, how many tickets they have sold, as a definite order as to the number of diners will have to be given on Monday evening.

JANUARY 29 being the anniversary of the birth of the author of the Age of Reason, a Thomas Paine Birthday Party will be held at the London Hall of Science, under the auspices of the Secular Federation, and the profits will be handed over to the Freethinkers' Benevolent Fund. The tickets are on sale, and can be obtained of any Branch secretary, of Mr. G. Standring, 7 Finsbury Street, E.C., at the Hall, or at 28 Stonecutter Street. Messrs. R. O. Smith and G. Standring have all the arrangements in their hands. The programme will include a musical and elocutionary entertainment, a brief speech or two by Mr. Foote and others on Thomas Paine, and dancing until a fairly unreasonable hour in the morning. There ought to be a good party in honor of the great reformer.

MR. FORDER, secretary of the N. S. S., will be glad to receive subscriptions forthwith for the annual Children's Party at the Hall of Science. He is being assisted in the arrangements by many of the ladies and gentlemen who have given their services before. As to the subscriptions, we venture to think they will flow in readily. Anyone who has ever witnessed the riotous glee of four or five hundred little demons—we beg pardon, little darlings—on the floor of the Hall of Science, will need no incentive to dip his hand in his pocket. For weeks afterwards the laughter of the children echoes about the building. Some of the kindliest elders can hear them still in the corners of the galleries. Ladies and gentlemen, shell out. Provide a long evening's innocent enjoyment to hundreds of little ones, some of whom don't get too much of it. And as example is better than precept we pull out our own lean purse and extract—bless us! how light the draft has left it!—the sum of ten and sixpence. There you are now. Who's next?

MR. FORDER has since sent us the following list of subscriptions for acknowledgment:—Per J. Anderson: A. C., 2s.; S. Stalder, 2s.; F. Maitland, 2. 6d.; Miss Allen, 2. 6d.; Rayment, 6d.; per R. Forder: R. H. Side, 2s. 6d.; Mr. Temple, 1s.; B. A. Marks, 5s.; R. A. Cole, 1s.; H. Seal, 10s.; F. Rutt, 1s.; per Mrs. Santem: T. Moses, 1s. 6d.; Mr. Harrison, 6d.; Mary, 6d.; J Young, 6d.; H. Kelsey, 6d.; small sums, 1s. 5d.; E. Truelove, 5s.

IT is all very well to laugh at "tea-fights and muffin struggles," but the Camberwell party on Dec. 8 resulted in a profit of £6 to the London Secular Federation. That's no laughing matter anyhow.

NEXT Monday, Jan. 6, the North Eastern Secular Federation's tea, concert, and ball takes place at the Arcade Assembly Rooms, Newcastle. The tickets are 1s. 6d., and can be obtained from Mr. Joseph Brown, 86 Durham Street, Bentinck, Newcastle: Mr. Peter Weston, newsagent, 77 Newgate Street, or Mr. Tullen, 137 Burt Terrace, Gateshead.

THE Committee of "scientists and philosophers," Italian and foreign, has met at Milan with the object of instituting a new "National church." Their first step has been to draw up a catechism, and to invite adherents through a manifesto addressed to parents, students, and public officers. The manifesto declares that its promulgators wish to found "a fresh church in a free State, unfettered by the ideas, prejudices or dogmas of other creeds, and having for sole guide the books of Nature, with the eternal truths taught therein."

DR. RICHARD H. CLARKE of New York, an eminent writer among the Roman Catholics, makes the statement that the Roman Church in America has lost far more by the falling away of Catholic immigrants from their ancestral faith than it had gained by conversions. The New York Sun thinks the Catholics have lost more than half their immigrant population or their descendants, and adds that "Infidelity is more dangerous to the Church than ever before."

WE see from the Fritänkaren that Mr. H. V. Berghell continues to hold forth from the Freethought platform at Stockholm. The same number contains a translation of Mr. Wheeler's recent article on the "Opponents of Christianity," reproduced from our pages by our esteemed friend Captain Otto Thomson.

THE Truthseeker, which we notice is inclined to drop its cartoons on account of their extra expense, has a very good one entitled "When Womanhood awakes: A new Shakesperian Cipher." It depicts womanhood as Titania awakening, while beside her lies a figure with an ass's head labelled Christianity. The well-known lines from "Midsummer Night's Dream" are given below. Womanhood as Titania: "O Oberon! What visions have I seen! Methought I was enamored of an ass." Manhood as Oberon: "There lies your love!" Titania: "How came these things to pass? O; how mine eyes do loathe his vision now."

Secular Thought reports some very successful lectures by Mr. C. Watts in Canada. Mr. Watts is doing a good work over there, and is winning a first-rate reputation. His paper is well conducted, and often gives a paragraph on the progress of Freethought in England.

THE Freethinkers of California meet in Convention at San Francisco on Saturday and Sunday, January 25 and 26 with the special object of discussing the issues forced upon the people by ecclesiastical encroachments, and preparing measures for the establishment of a purely Secular government in the State.

MRS. MARGARET DELAND, authoress of John Ward, Preacher, has begun a new novel entitled "Sidney" in the Atlantic Monthly.

AT their quarterly meeting next Sunday, the Camberwell Branch present Mr. R. S. Seago with a testimonial, together with a handsomely bound copy of Mr. Wheeler's Biographical Dictionary of Freethinkers as a "send off" before his voyage to South Africa. By his untiring energy Mr. Seago has done much to make the Camberwell Branch an undoubted success, and he will be greatly missed both there and at the Council of the London Secular Federation. We have the consolation, however, of knowing that wherever he goes his services will be enlisted in the Freethought cause.

WE have been considering how we might accede to the request to insert reports of N.S.S., Branch meetings. Up to the present we have been unable to come to a decision. We have decided, however, to insert a list of forthcoming lectures. Notices must reach us not later than Tuesday morning. Lecturers can also have their lists of engagements inserted free of charge. But we can only give this privilege to those who have been long enough in the field to be regarded as "solid." New comers will have to win their spurs before wearing them, and we must be on our guard against enthusiastic young men who, finding they cannot climb to the top of the tree in a month or two, begin to ask whether they are in the right camp.

WE remarked the other day that the special numbers of the Freethinker seldom did more than recoup us for the investment. The present Christmas Number, having a new cover, has been extra costly; the great expense being, of course, entailed by the illustrations. Making up the account to date we find ourselves slightly out of pocket. There is a small supply still left, and if these are cleared off we shall just make both ends meet. Such is the colossal fortune to be made in running a Freethought paper. Never mind, we didn't expect anything, and that's the way not to be disappointed.

Digitized by Google

"WHAT magazine writer seems most popular among the contributors of the great heavy magazines?" was asked recently at one of the news-stands in a Boston depot. "Pagan Bob," came the quick reply; "and," continued the newsdealer, "to illustrate the fact, we usually sell fifteen or sixteen North American Reviews a month; when Mr. Ingersoll writes, we sell from fifty to a hundred, and one month last winter when he contributed we sold one hundred and sixty copies over this counter."

WE have just issued a splendid new pamphlet by Colonel Ingersoll on the great and grave question of Marriage and Divorce. Portions of it were reprinted in our columns from the American papers, but we have, in the pamphlet, reproduced the Colonel's article verbatim from the North American Review. Hardly anything so just, beautiful, and eloquent has been written on the subject since the days of Milton. Like the noble gentleman he is, the Colonel is the sworn friend of women and children, and he teaches men that love is higher than authority. The pamphlet should be circulated by the ten thousand.

MR. BRADLAUGH seems to have had a splendid reception at Bombay. His health is reported to be nearly recovered. This will be good news to his many admirers.

THE CORROBORATION OF PROFESSOR HUXLEY.

BY JOHN BURROUGHS.

From the "North American Review."

DR. LYMAN ABBOTT, in criticising Professor Huxley in a recent number of this Review, loses sight of a very important distinction—a distinction which Professor Huxley keeps constantly before him in the articles referred to; namely, the distinction between objective and subjective truth, between a statement or a proposition which rests upon outward, independent, logical evidence, and is addressed to the reason and the understanding, and one which is purely personal and subjective, involving the taste, the emotions, the hopes, the aspirations, and which is true or false according to the temper and experience of the person to whom it is addressed. When our theological doctors talk of the evidence of Christianity, they lay great stress upon the historical evidences; the root of the matter is here; these are real, objective, positive, and are matters of logical and scientific inquiry. The subjective evidences—that is, those which are furnished by the mental or spiritual experience of the individual and beget a feeling of certainty and security in his mind—these are of quite a different nature, and our logical faculties can have little to do with them.

Professor Huxley in his Nineteenth Century articles referred to, applies the scientific method of inquiry to certain alleged occurrences in the New Testament—occurrences which must rest upon objective evidence, if upon any, and in which the appeal of credibility is made, not to our faculty of spiritual insight, but to our reason and understanding. Is the story of the Gadarene swine probable? is it reasonable? does it agree with the rest of our knowlege? "The Gadarene miracle either happened, or it did not. Whether the Gadarene 'question' is moral or religious, or not, has nothing to do with the fact that it is a purely historical question whether the demons said what they are declared to have said, and the devil-possessed pigs did or did not rush over the cliffs of the Lake of Gennesaret on a certain day of a certain year," etc; "If that is not a matter about which evidence ought to be required, and not only legal but strict scientific proof demanded by sane men who are asked to believe the story—what is it?" Professor Huxley thinks a man who believes such a story without logical evidence is guilty of an immoral act. And so generally with the miracles recorded in the New Testament, and with demonology and possessions. These things are alleged occurrences in the outward physical world, and they are not supported by adequate objective evidence.

Men reason upon the subject of the soul's immortality, but the answer which reason gives is mainly in the negative. There is nothing that could be called evidence that man continues to live after the dissolution of his body. Yet Dr. Abbott is convinced that he does so exist; he realises in himself "a nature superior to disease, decay, mortality;" and who shall gainsay him? who shall say he is illogical? The evidence he has upon this point is personal and subjective, and cannot be imparted to another. It has no logical or scientific validity, because it begins and ends with himself. It is not a question of reason, but of religious conviction, But all the questions in dispute between Professor Huxley and Dr. Wace are questions of reason and of evidence. They pertain to the outward, visible, concrete world of history and of experience, and can be settled in no court but the court of reason.

Dr. Abbott says (and he assumes to speak for "the great mass of Christian believers") "that there are propositions which men ought to believe without logically-satisfying evidence." This is what the old Mother Church used to say, and used to back it up with the stake and the rack. "Ought to believe"—that is, it is a man's duty to believe certain propositions addressed to his rational faculties, without rationally-satisfying evidence. It is to be regretted that the good doctor did not cite some theological or religious proposition, or some article from the creeds, that it is a man's duty thus to believe. Would he say that a man ought to believe any of the points in dispute between Professor Huxley and Dr. Wace without "logically-satisfying evidence"?—the swine story, the authorship of the Gospels, that Jesus said what he is reported to have said, that demonology is true, etc., etc.?

Professor Huxley, I imagine, would be the last man in the world to deny Dr. Abbott's proposition that there is such a thing as spiritual insight, or the religious sense, and that certainties, or at least assurances and satisfaction, reach the soul through these avenues. The religious nature or the poetic and artistic nature is not occupied with logical processes or the reasons of things, but with impressions, attractions, intuitions, emotional processes, the divine, the beautiful, the enjoyable. We do not ask of a poem, or a work of art, or any work of pure literature, Is it true? as we would ask of a proposition of science, or the statement of a witness upon the stand, or the declaration of a creed, Is it true? but, Is it good? is it powerful? is it satisfying? does it move and nourish us? A poem must have poetic truth, but how different is this from mathematical or scientific truth, and by what different faculties apprehended! Neither do we ask of purely religious utterances like the Sermon on the Mount or Paul's Epistles, Are they true? but, Do they stimulate and exalt our religious sense? do they quicken and purify the spirit? Paul's theology may be true or false: what is forever true and real is his fervid piety, his spiritual power, his eloquent humility, and his love for mankind. His logical faculties may have been weak; the things which he believed, which lay in his understanding and satisfied his reason, may have been utterly inadequate to stand rigid tests, but for all that the power and value of his writings are beyond question. The same may be said of some of the fathers of the Church, weak in reason, but strong in the spirit. Professor Huxley is strong in reason; his logic is a chain hard to break; but highly spiritual and imaginative natures would perhaps find little satisfaction in his writings. He is occupied with objective truth, not with subjective impressions. His mind is strictly scientific, and the results of his method of inquiry are hard to controvert.

He does not deny the moral sense, or the æsthetic sense, or the religious sense, as Dr. Abbott would seem to imply; he is not discussing questions that lie in either of these realms, but questions that come within the scope of reason and are matters of evidence. The questions of right and wrong in human conduct, of lying, of stealing, of murder, etc., which Dr. Abbott introduces, belong to quite a different sphere from the question of the authorship of the Gospels or of the credibility of the miracles.

There is the appeal to conscience, the appeal to taste, the appeal to our sense of the fitness of things, and there is also the appeal to reason, to the judgment, to our power to weigh and sift evidence. It seems to me that Dr. Abbott confounds these things, and in his reply to Huxley sets up a man of straw. If the great scientist had said that all truth and certainty comes through the logical faculties, he would have laid himself open to the doctor's criticism. What he did say or imply was that all scientific, all objective truth comes through our logical faculties. These are his words: "It is wrong for a man to say that he is certain of the objective truth of any proposition unless he can produce evidence which logically justifies that certainty."

Digitized by Google

In the outward objective world a fact is always a fact. It is always pertinent to inquire into the truth of any alleged occurrence. St. Augustine says that the flesh of the peacock never decays. Is this a fact? If it was a fact in his day, it must be a fact in ours. Do miracles happen? Have they ever happened? Is there a personal devil? Are we surrounded by a multitude of good and bad spirits who are seeking to influence our lives? Any objective evidence of the truth and reality of these things must hold good at all times and in all places. Two and two always make four, and doubtless always will. But when we enter the region of morals, we are in a world where all is plastic, indefinite, relative. Right and wrong are so only under certain conditions. It may be right to lie and steal and murder under certain extraordinary circumstances. "The certainties of the moral and spiritual realm." to which Dr. Abbott refers, and upon which he says "all æsthetic, all domestic, all political and national life are based," are not outward demonstrable certainties, like those of science, but inward personal certainties, which involve our constitution and our temporary relations to the universe and to each other.

(To be concluded.)

INGERSOLL ON IMMORTALITY.

THE following letter from Colonel Ingersoll has just been published in America. It was addressed to Mr. E. R. Johnes, the author of Circumstantial Evidence of a Future Life :—

45, Wall Street, New York, June 25, 1889.

Dear Sir,—Accept my thanks for your essay on "Immortality." It is very beautifully written, and you have brought forward in support of your doctrine all the argument there is, and you have stated your case with much force and clearness.

In addition to this you have abandoned many positions that cannot, in this age of the world, be maintained. You admit that the hope of immortality cannot, with safety, rest upon the inspiration of the Old and New Testament, or upon any form of superstition. If we admit the existence of a God of infinite wisdom and compassion, we may say that there must be a world better than this; but how do we account for one worse than that, that is to say, for this? If injustice triumphs here, why not there? If honesty goes without bread in this world, why not in another? Certainly God will be no better then than now. Still, it may be possible that a God of infinite love and compassion will so reward those who suffer, through suffering itself, that all that happens will be consistent with wisdom and compassion.

I do not see any evidence in this world that it was created by either wisdom or compassion. Neither do I see what right we have to say that man has a spiritual body, any more than trees have. The tree springs from a seed, so does man. The trees produce others and then perish from the earth; the same is true of the human race. You have had the courage to accept the logic of your position and give to all life the immortality that Christians give to man.

I hardly know the meaning of the words "spiritualist" and "materialist." I do not see that it makes the slightest difference with the argument to admit that everything is "spiritual," or to assert that everything is "material." He who asserts that all is "spiritual," admits the existence of everything that another calls "material"; and he who insists that all is "material," admits the existence of everything that is by the other called "spiritual." Call it what you will, it remains beyond the grasp of our mind.

The weakest parts of your essay are the quotations from others. What Greenleaf says upon the subject seems to me a non sequitur. If man had believed only in his own experience, why could the world "be neither governed nor improved"? The first man obtained something by experience which he could convey to another, to which the other might add by his own exertions, his own experience, and so on from generation to generation, until there would be a vast and splendid capital of human experience. So, what Mr. Drummond has to say may be more ingenious, but is equally without foundation. Of all the men who have written upon this subject, I know of no one so shallow and insincere as Dr. Young.

I congratulate you on what you have said concerning the "wax figures" of Milton. If anyone is open to the charge of barren Materialism, it is Milton. His "heaven" was simply another England — with a government somewhat worse. You have endeavored to establish your doctrine by reason—by something universal—and you have wisely left out the provincialisms, the prejudices, and the puerilities of Christianity. Love and hope are universal. As long as men love and as long as they hope, there will probably be in heart and brain the splendid dream of immortality. It may be that we live no more—that we go back to the unconscious dust, and yet the heart will always say, "Perhaps there is another life." But whether there is or not, let us all paint on the canvas of the future the pictures that delight and satisfy the soul. We know that in this world after joy comes grief, as after day comes night; and it may be there is some world where after grief comes joy, as after night comes day.

Thanking you again for your beautiful and poetical essay,

I remain, sincerely yours,

R. G. INGERSOLL.

"DAGONET" ON DR. PARKER.

Dr. Parker, who has been put in the shade lately by the superior business abilities of the American gentleman at Olympia, has made another wild attempt to atract a little attention. This time he has introduced a kind of burlesque opening to his Christmas pantomime by sending messages from the pulpit to the celebrities of the day. This sort of thing is the latest .—"To the Queen.—God bless your Majesty. Why do you not recognise your Nonconformist subjects?" "To Mr. Balfour.—The Lord have mercy on you," etc., etc.

The pulpit pranks of the mountebank minister are not unknown in this country. The Nonconformist merry andrew —for whom a better name than a Nonconformist would be a Dambadformist—has before now caused the judicious to grieve, and there are not wanting clergymen of the Church of England, who have degraded the pulpit to the level of the political platform; but this new departure of the City Temple Tabarin is so grossly offensive that to dismiss it with the contempt it deserves would be a mistake. The Brothers Harris should compete for him for next Christmas, before Barnum secures him for a side show.—Referee.

THE CHRISTIAN HEAVEN.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE FREETHINKER."

Sir,—On Tuesday morning last, a man named Dukes was hanged in this city for the murder of a Mr. Gordon, his employer. Gordon had a shop in a neighbouring town managed by Dukes, and one day he went over to inquire into the accounts, which had gone wrong, when Dukes smashed his skull with a hammer, thrust the body into a wardrobe, and locked it in. Gordon's brother went over before the body could be disposed of, found Dukes on the premises, and he was captured, tried, and executed. Dukes was a dissipated drunken villian who after his conviction paid great attention to the exhortations of the prison chaplain, and when he stood on the scaffold, with the rope round his neck, he said to the reporters, "Tell my wife that I die happy."

A few years ago, a notorious scoundrel named Peace, who had murdered three or four people, was hanged on the same spot as Dukes. Peace, too, became touchingly pious under the hands of the gaol parson, and when he stood on the scaffold he said, addressing the reporters, doctors and prison officials, "Oh, my friends, I hope that your end may be like mine, for in less than two minutes I shall be safe in the arms of Jesus."

Now, I presume it cannot be denied that according to the christian scheme of redemption, both these men would go straight to heaven. Each had repented, had been washed in the blood of Christ, had received absolution at the hands of the parson, and had had no opportunity of relapsing into sin. After having their necks broken, they would be received into the heavenly kingdom, be presented with a regulation harp, and are now—and will be to all eternity—tramping over golden pavements and singing one monotonous song.

This is the christian heaven, filled almost entirely with such wretches as Dukes and Peace, who would be welcomed with yells of delight, whilst Darwin, Huxley, Herbert Spencer and millions of the best and wisest who have appeared on earth will be consigned to a hell of literal fire and brimstone. It may be, but I do not think it is posible to imagine more hideous trash than this, and I rejoice at having lived to see the Christian mythology in its death flurry. It has sat like an incubus on the hnman mind for ages, and though superstition dies slowly, this one is doomed to follow many others into the limbo of contempt.

(Manchester). AN AGNOSTIC.

Digitized by Google

THE "STAR" ON BISHOP MAGEE.

It is useful to hear from the Bishop of Peterborough in the new Fortnightly what, in his opinion, Christianity may not and cannot do. It seems that it cannot put down war, it cannot put down poverty, it cannot teach us to forgive public enemies, and that in short the State that tried to live up to the Sermon on the Mount would be ruined in a week. The Gallio may very well be inclined to ask, if it can't do these things what on earth is the good of talking about it any longer, unless for the sake of filling fat sees with gentlemen of the cut of Bishop Magee? But the Bishop is no way discomposed by such possible questionings as these. True, he says, it can't put down war; but then it can teach us that our enemies (whom we are preparing to exterminate with bullets that make a little hole when they enter their bowels and a large one when they come out) are "our brethren!" So with the poor, Christianity has not said there shall be no poor "nor has it in any way enlarged the poor man's right as a citizen!" But still it teaches him that he is "our brother"—especially after we have given him skilly and stone-breaking because he has no work—or three months' hard labor for trying to keep up his scanty wage. So with the starving tramp to whom the Christian magistrate has given five years for picking a Christian pocket on a Christian highway. He, too, is to learn from Christianity that he is "a man and a brother."

Well, this is Cant, and Cant that no man—be he learned bishop or drivelling curate—would dare to utter if he were not steeped to the very lips in class vulgarity and selfishness, disguised as the most unselfish of religions. The article in the Fortnightly is worth to Mr. Foote or Colonel Ingersoll five yearly issues of the Freethinker, and five hundred editions of the most sceptical pamphlet that ever was penned.

PROFANE JOKES.

Minister: "And do you like to go to church with your papa and mamma, Bobby?' Bobby (inclined to non-committal): "Well, I guess I like it as well as pa does.'

Nervous Curate: "I am requested to intimate that the new hymn-books will be used for the first time next Sunday. There will also on the same afternoon be a public christening, when members of the congregation are invited to bring their children. Those who are not already provided can purchase them in the vestry at one shilling each, or with stiff backs for eighteenpence."

PROGRESSIVE PUBLISHING CO.'S LIST.

All orders to be sent, with remittance, to R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C. Rate of postage—Orders under 3d., one halfpenny; orders under 6d. one penny. Orders over 6d. post free.

G. W. FOOTE.

	s.	d.
PRISONER FOR BLASPHEMY. Cloth ... ... A Full History of his Three Trials and Twelve Months' Imprisonment. Copies in paper covers, soiled, 6d.	2	6
IS SOCIALISM SOUND? ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant.	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
CHRISTIANITY AND SECULARISM ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. In paper covers.	1	0
Superior edition in cloth		6
INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS ... ... Second edition, enlarged.	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0
DARWIN ON GOD	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0

CONTENTS:—Darwin's Grandfather—Darwin's Father—Darwin's Early Piety—Almost a Clergyman—On Board the "Beagle"—Settling at Down—Death and Burial—Purpose of Pamphlet—Some Objections—Darwin Abandons Christianity—Deism—Creation—Origin of Life—Origin of Man—Animism—A Personal God—Design—Divine Beneficence—Religion and Morality—Agnosticism and Atheism.

DEFENCE OF FREE SPEECH ... ... Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes.	0	4
LETTERS TO JESUS CHRIST	0	4
PHILOSOPHY OF SECULARISM	0	2
THE BIBLE GOD	0	2
THE FOLLY OF PRAYER	0	2
CHRISTIANITY AND PROGRESS ... ... A Reply to Mr. Gladstone.	0	2
WHAT WAS CHRIST? ... ... A Reply to J. S. Mill.	0	2
THE DYING ATHEIST. A Story	0
WAS JESUS INSANE? ... ... A searching inquiry into the mental condition of the Prophet of Nazareth.	0	1
THE SHADOW OF THE SWORD ... ... A moral and statistical Essay on War.	0	2
ROYAL PAUPERS ... ... Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty.	0	2
BIBLE HEROES—First Series, in elegant wrapper ... (1) Mr. Adam, (2) Captain Noah, (3) Father Abraham, (4) Juggling Jacob, (5) Master Joseph, (6) Joseph's Brethren, (7) Holy Moses I., (8) Holy Moses II., (9) Parson Aaron, (10) General Joshua, (11) Jephthah and Co., (12) Professor Samson. One Penny each singly.	1	0
BIBLE HEROES—Second Series. (13) Prophet Samuel, (14) King Saul, (15) Saint David I., (16) Saint David II., (17) Sultan Solomon, (18) Poor Job, (19) Hairy Elijah (20) Bald Elisha, (21) General Jehu, (22) Doctor Daniel, (23) The Prophets (Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Hosea).
MRS. BESANT'S THEOSOPHY ... ... A Candid Criticism.	0	2
THEOSOPHY AND SECULARISM ... ... A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant.	0	2
THE NEW CAGLIOSTRO ... ... An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky.	0	2

COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

MISTAKES OF MOSES	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth ... ... Only Complete Edition published in England	1	6
DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT ... ... Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy.	0	6
REPLY TO GLADSTONE ... ... With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler.	0	4
ROME OR REASON? Reply to Cardinal Manning	0	4
FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Rev. Dr. Field ...	0	2
GOD AND MAN. Second Reply to Dr. Field	0	2
THE DYING CREED	0	2
THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH	0	2
THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION ... ... A Discussion with Hon. F. D. Courdert and Gov. S. L. Woodford.	0	2
ART AND MORALITY	0	2
DO I BLASPHEME?	0	2
THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE	0	2
THE GREAT MISTAKE	0	1
LIVE TOPICS		1
MYTH AND MIRACLE	0	1
REAL BLASPHEMY	0	1
SOCIAL SALVATION	0	2

G. W. FOOTE and J. M. WHEELER.

CRIMES OF CHRISTIANITY. Vol. I. Cloth ... Hundred of exact References to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.	2	6
THE JEWISH LIFE OF CHRIST ... ... With voluminous footnotes. An extraordinary work.	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0

G. W. FOOTE and W. P. BALL.

BIBLE HANDBOOK FOR FREETHINKERS AND INQUIRING CHRISTIANS	1	4
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0

Sold also in separate parts as follows—

1. Bible Contradictions ... ... The Contradictions are printed in parallel columns.	0
2. Bible Absurdities ... ... All the chief Absurdities from Genesis to Revelation, conveniently and strikingly arranged, with appropriate headlines, giving the point of each absurdity in a sentence.	0	4
3. Bible Atrocities ... ... Containing all the godly wickedness from Genesis to Revelation. Each infamy has a separate headline for easy reference	0	4
4. Bible Immoralities, Indecencies, Obscenities, Broken Promises, and Unfulfilled Prophecies ...	0	4

J. M. WHEELER.

LETTERS FROM HEAVEN	0	1
LETTERS FROM HELL	0	1

DR. E. B. AVELING.

DARWIN MADE EASY. 144pp., cloth ... ... Best Popular Exposition of Darwinism extant.	1	0

GIORDANO BRUNO.

Picture of the Statue of Rome	0	2
Post free in Lett's case	0	3

Digitized by Google

NOW READY.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE

AN AGNOSTIC'S VIEW.

By COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

Reprinted Verbatim from the "North American Review."

Price Twopence. Price Twopence.

Every Freethinker, Radical or Socialist should read it and circulate it amongst his friends.

NOW READY

BIOGRAPICAL DICTIONARY OF FREETHINKERS

OF

ALL AGES AND NATIONS.

BY J. M. WHEELER.

Handsomely Bound in Cloth. Price Seven Shillings and Sixpence.

Should be in every Freethinker's Library.

THE

CHRISTMAS NUMBER

OF THE

"FREETHINKER."

CONTENTS.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

An Old Christmas
A Virgin's Family
Leading Them On Christian Godhead
Creation and Fall
(Twelve Sketches)
Holy Arson
Obeying the Bible
Samson and Sandow Eclipsed
Castles in the Air
Curious Twins
Raising the Wind

ARTICLES.

Satan and Michael Deity Interviewed
Religious Idiots
Babyhood of Christ
Ninnies of Nineveh
Last Will of Jahveh
Barnum Outrivalled, etc.

VERSE.

Three Wise Men
Holy Young Working Man
Good God Almighty O!
Rib Ticklers, Profane Anecdotes, etc.

Price 3d., post free 4d. IN HANDSOME WRAPPER. Price 3d., post free 4d.

W. J. Rendell's

"WIFE'S FRIEND."

Recommended in "Law of Population," and "Wife's Hand Book." Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell Street Clerkenwell, and supplied per post, 2s. dozen. For particulars of this Malthusian discovery send stamped envelope. Higginson's Syringe, with vertical and reverse current, 3s. 6d. and 4. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. All other Malthusian Appliances. All prices post free.

LIMITED FAMILIES.—Allbutt, posted, 6½d.; Besant, 7d.; Owen, 7d. Malthus, 1s. 1d. Lists (Literature and Appliances), 1d. VOLUNTARY TAXATION, Fisher, 32pp., 1½d. Old Testament, 1d. Darwin's Hypocrisy, Dawson, 4½d.—Fisher, Progressive Publisher, Koburg, Leeds.

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each, upper or lower set, £1. Best quality, 4s. each, upper or lower, £2, completed in four hours when required, repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18c. gold 15s.; stopping, 2s. 6d.; extraction, 1s. painless by gas, 5s.

GRATIS.

AN ILLUSTRATED 16-PAGE PAMPHLET, containing extracts from the utterances of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Manchester; the Revs. T. R. Malthus, A. E. Whatham, M. J. Savage, Leonard Dawson, — Lawton, H. R. Haweis; the following Doctors:—Allbutt, Allinson, Armstrong, Drysdale, Pye Chavasse, E. B. Foote, Nicholls, Wilder, Raciborski, Napheys and Reamy. Also Plato, Aristotle, Sismondi, Huxley, Mill, and numerous others. Should be read by every married and marriageable person. Sent on receipt of stamped addressed envelope by J. R. HOLMES, Hanney, Wantage, Berks.

TESTIMONIALS (Extracts from).

"The one you sent me some months since is

Quite Worn Out

with being lent to so many friends."

"Some of us have paid five shillings for less than one-tenth of the information."

TO MARRIED PEOPLE

Or Those Contemplating Marriage.

Send 1d. Stamp to
DAVIES, CHEMIST, 101 PARK LANE, LEEDS,
And you'll receive an Illustrated List of most useful Malthusian Appliances by return of post.

WANTED, Bed-room in North London, with or without board.—Address, stating terms, A. Tarn, 39 Newhall Street, Birmingham.

HARTNOLL,

ENGLISH AND FOREIGN CHEMIST,

1A PICCADILLY

(Under the London Pavilion Music Hall),

LONDON, W.

Hartnoll's Specialities, Appliances and Medicated Preparations are world-renowned.

Spiral, Douche and Latest Improved Syringes.

ESTABLISHED OVER 50 YEARS.

Dyed with Ireton's Ink, no hope of ever changing my Color.

IRETON'S

INDELIBLE JET BLACK MARKING INK

(NO HEATING REQUIRED)

For Rubber Stamps, Stencil, Type or Pen,

PRICE 6d. 1/- and 2/6 per Bottle.

Sample bottle 4d. post free.

IRETON & Co., 92, Gracechurch St., LONDON, E.C.

The largest makers of Rubber Stamps.

Special terms to the Trade.

Printed and Published by G. W. Foote, at 28 Stonecutter Street Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

Vol. X.—No. 2.] SUNDAY, JANUARY 12, 1890. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

NOTICE.

"Letters to the Clergy" will be resumed next week. The ninth will be addressed to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

PROVIDENCE.

LONDON awoke on New Year's morning to find that a frightful tragedy had happened during the night. A fire broke out at the Forest Gate Industrial Schools, and twenty-six boys were burnt or suffocated in their dormitories. Heroic exertions were made to rescue the little fellows; without them, indeed, the death-roll would have been far more appalling. Some of the boys showed more courage than soldiers on the battle-field. One who was himself rescued, went back to save a small comrade, and perished in the attempt.

The youngsters had gone to bed looking forward with pleasure to the morrow. They were to have had a whole day's enjoyment, but, according to an evening newspaper, "Providence designed it otherwise." No doubt this shocking language made but little, if any, impression on the minds of ordinary readers. There is a stock phraseology of religion which is so hackneyed as to be almost meaningless. Otherwise it is difficult to conceive the state of mind of a man, in this humane and enlightened age, who could deliberately write such words. They imply that Providence resolved to frustrate the boys' hopes in the most cruel manner; that Providence arranged the fire, so that they might wake amidst flame and smoke, instead of in the dawn of a happy day; that Providence wilfully burnt or smothered twenty-six lads, just in order to show the power of the great designer, whose ways are not as our ways, nor his thoughts as our thoughts.

Such a God would be a colossal devil. The worst criminal that ever cursed the earth would look pure beside him. Human criminals are tempted by gain, and impelled by sudden passion. But God has nothing to gain, and is supposed to act deliberately, with perfect forethought and unerring aim. If he murdered those twenty-six poor little fellows—that is, if he "designed it otherwise"—the dictionary has no words strong enough to describe him.

Suppose a wise and merciful God ruled the world. Suppose he saw fit to terminate the earthly life of those lads and call them "home." Could he not have called them in their sleep? Could he not have ordered the Angel of Death to fan them gently with his wings, so that in the morning their faces might lie pale upon the pillows, without a sign of terror or pain?

Why rouse them with the hoarse cry of "Fire?" Why choke them with the blinding smoke? Why lick their limbs and faces with tongues of flame? Why unveil the face of the King of Terrors to the gaze of shrieking children?

Would the worst man in London have been capable of such a deed? Jack the Ripper would probably have shrunk from the infamy. He has a mania for killing middle-aged unfortunates, and perhaps he has suffered from them. But who has suffered from youth and innocence? Who, maddened with wrong, would torture and kill a crowd of children? Who would turn a boys' bedroom into a slaughter-house, only to show that events may not happen according to expectation.

The victims of this tragedy were buried on Monday, and religion gave it another touch of irony. A hymn was sung by the surviving boys and girls of the schools, the first line of which was this:—

"There's a friend for little children."

What a kind friend! And what sickening humbug to hymn and slaver the "kind friend" who slaughtered twenty-six objects of his attachment!

Right under the report of the funeral in the Evening News was the heading, "Prize Fight at Leeds," and the next column was devoted to the "West End Scandals." Surely the "designer" of the universe is in a dreadful muddle. He would be far better engaged in stopping prize fights, and reforming dirty aristocrats, than in burning innocent children in their beds. Cowper tells us that "God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform." If he exist the line is undoubtedly true. But what if God be a dream of ignorance? What if Providence be a fiction of theology? Are we not then relieved from the intolerable burden of belief in an Almighty Devil.

G. W. FOOTE.

TYNDALL ON CARLYLE.*

NEARLY nine years have rolled their course since the literary Colossus of the century passed away, yet the stream of Carlyle literature still flows on. Few men indeed are so well known, known not only, as even eminent men usually are, merely from the outside, but turned inside out, exposing the seamy side. Few have borne so fierce a light. If, as the upshot, Carlyle remains a very human man—with the keenest of eyes for the demerits of others and tragical blindness—until too late, for the merits of the one who should have been first and dearest, it is better that the truth should be known. Better a true man than a false God.

The cloud of detraction which followed the publication of Carlyle's Reminiscences, written in age, ill-health and grief at the loss of his wife, has lifted since the publication of the numerous letters exhibiting his tender great-heartedness in many varied

* "Personal Recollections of Thomas Carlyle," Fortnightly Review, January, 1890.

Digitized by Google

relations. They reveal him, to use his own fine comparison, as "a rock of unsubduable granite, piercing fast wide into the heavens, yet in the clefts of it beautiful green valleys with flowers." He has been judged as in the judgement hall of Osiris, where every little action is weighed; yet he takes his place among the lofty in character as well as among the great in intellect. Gold, though alloyed with bronze, is more valuable than silver and above comparison with tin.

Professor Tyndall's "Reminiscences of Thomas Carlyle," though they do not throw any new light upon his character or opinions, are yet of interest, as exhibiting him in relation to modern science. It has been thought that Carlyle showed an ignorant impatience of science, or, at any rate, of its conclusions. Professor Tyndall does something to modify this judgment. Impatient, he undoubtedly was, of those who he fancied denied reality to all that could not be tested in a laboratory. As Prof. Tyndall remarks—"With such Carlyle had little sympathy. He was a Freethinker of wiser and nobler mould. The miracles of orthodoxy were to him, as to his friend Emerson, 'Monsters,' To both of them the blowing clover and the falling rain were the true miracles." Froude indeed, says in so many words, "the special miraculous occurrences of Sacred History were not credible to him."

The first meeting of Carlyle and Tyndall appears to have taken place at the Royal Institution when Tyndall was experimenting on the subject of the origin of life. The result of his researches, the conclusion that there is no spontaneous generation (a conclusion, we must remark in passing, which is after all only an inference founded on human failure) fell in with Carlyle's own notions. They appear often to have discussed, and the Professor remarks that "in matters of science, I was always able, in the long run, to make prejudice yield to reason." Carlyle's love of truth amounted to a passion, but although he had long made the "exodus from Houdsditch," "the peeling off of fetid Jewhood, "as he called his revolt from orthodox Bibliolatry†" and though he was well away from all metaphysics," the grim Calvinism of his youth, and the transcendentalism of his early manhood left their traces to the last. The doctrine of evolution came too late to find acceptance.

Professor Tyndall often expressed the wish that Carlyle and Darwin might meet—The wish was fulfilled—and he afterwards said to Tyndall: "Yes, I have been to see him, and a more charming man I have never met in my life." Could they both have known each other more intimately, Carlyle would scarcely have given utterance to some savage gibes which are apt to rankle in the minds of Evolutionists.

Carlyle, on one occasion, deplored the collapse of religious feeling in England, upon which Professor Tyndall remarked "As regards the most earnest and the most capable of the men of a generation younger than your own; if one writer more than another, has been influenced in loosing them from their theological moorings, thou art the man." And the observation was just. The writings of Carlyle, no less than those of Mill, were a powerful solvent of orthodoxy, not by direct attack, but by showing how wide a world existed outside. On the occasion we have mentioned—Tyndall said:—

"Despite all the losses you deplore, there is one great gain. We have extinguished that horrible spectre which darkened with its death-wings so many brave and pious lives. It is something to have abolished Hell-fire!" "Yes," he replied, "that is a distinct and an enormous gain. My own father was a brave man, and, though poor, unaccustomed to cower before the face of man; but the Almighty God was a different matter. You and I do not believe that Melchet Court exists, and that we shall return thither. more firmly than he believed that, after his death, he would have to face a judge who would lift him into everlasting bliss or doom him to eternal woe. I could notice that for three years before he died, this rugged, honest soul trembled to its depths at even the possible prospect of hell-fire. It surely is a great gain to have abolished this Terror."

The power of Carlyle, however, did not depend upon his opinions so much as upon his personality, the intense vigor and earnestness which he threw into an unwearying battle against cant and quackery of all kinds, and which he imparts to his readers. His power of enlarging the imagination and stimulating the emotions places him beside the highest poets, and for this reason those who sometimes fancy they have got beyond Carlyle may do well to turn again and yet again to one who always makes his readers feel the weight and importance of life and the vanity of systems of philosophy or religious institutions not in harmony with the fact of things.

J. M. WHEELER.

† Carlyle, in a letter to Emerson states that he once thought of writing this, "Exodus from Houndsditch." The following passage from Latter Day Pamphlets may give some hint as to what the work would have been like. "The Jews' old clothes, having now grown fairly pestilential, a poisonous encumbrance in the path of man! burn them up with revolutionary fire as you like and can."

HOW TO HELP US.

(1) Get your newsagent to exhibit the Freethinker in his window.
(2) Get your newsagent to take a few copies of the Freethinker and try to sell them, guaranteeing to take the copies that may remain unsold.
(3) Take an extra copy (or more), and circulate it among your acquaintances.
(4) Display, or get displayed, one of our contents-sheets, which are of a convenient size for the purpose. Mr. Forder will send them on application.
(5) Leave a copy of the Freethinker now and then in the train, the car, or the omnibus.
(6) Distribute some of our cheap tracts in your walks abroad, at public meetings, or among the audiences around street-corner preachers.

GOD AS A STONE.

IN an interesting and important article on "Sacred Stones," in the current number of the Fortnightly Review, Mr. Grant Allen notices the wide-spread practice of stone-worship, and does not scruple to apply the argument to the religion of the Jews, since the early Semites were notoriously stone-worshippers. He notices how the Jewish God was carried in the ark, and how David "danced before Jahweh," and compares his place in the temple with the fetish stones in the holy of holies of the temples of Greece. Mr. Allen says, "That Jahweh himself in the most ancient traditions of the race, was similarly concealed within his chest or ark, in the holy of holies, is evident I think to any attentive reader." He points out that the later Jehovistic glosses of Exodus and Deuteronomy, do their best to darken the comprehension of the matter. Mr. Allen thus concludes:—

Not to push the argument too far, then, we may say this much is fairly certain. The children of Israel in early times carried about with them a tribal god, Jahweh, whose presence in their midst was intimately connected with a certain ark or chest, containing a stone object or objects. This chest was readibly portable, and could be carried to the front in case of warfare. They did not know the origin of the object in the ark with certainty, but they regarded it emphatically as "Jahweh their god, which led them out of the land of Egypt." Even after its true nature had been spiritualised away into a great national deity, the most unlimited and incorporeal the world has ever known (as we get him in the best and purest work of the prophets), the imageary of later times constantly returns to the old idea of stone and menhir. In the embellished account of the exodus from Egypt, Jahweh goes before the Israelites as a pillar or monolith of cloud by day, and fire by night. According to Levitical law his altar must be built of unhewn stone, "for if thou lift up thy tool upon it, thou has polluted it." It is as a Rock that the prophets often figuratively describe Jahweh, using the half-forgotten language of an earlier day to clothe their own sublimer and more purified conception. It is to the Rock of Israel—the sacred stone of the tribe—that they look for succour. Nay, even when Josiah accepted the forged roll of the law, and promised to abide by it, "the king stood by a pillar (a menhir) and made a covenant before Jahweh." Even to the last we see in vague glimpses the real original nature of the worship of that jealous god, who caused Dagon to break in pieces before him, and would allow no other sacred stones to remain undemolished within his tribal boundaries.

Digitized by Google

I don't see, therefore, how we can easily avoid the obvious inference that Jahweh, the god of the Hebrews, the god of Abraham, and of Isaac and of Jacob, the god who later became sublimated and etherialised into the God of Christianity, was in his origin nothing more nor less than the ancestral fetish-stone of the people of Israel, however sculptured, and perhaps in the very last resort of all, the monumental pillar of some early Semitic sheikh or chieftain.

IT WASN'T ANGELS.

(The main incident of the verse is a fact).

'Twas midnight, and within the stately church
The congregation prayed; a solemn hush
Fell like an angel's pinions, who, in search
Of Truth, did pause and blush

With pleasure there to find his heart's desire.
Without the sleeping earth was wrapt in night,
And bells in turrets grey and lofty spire
Hung silent in the night.

The great church clock was pointing to the hour;
The roseate lamps a glimmering radiance shed,
As though an unseen hand did blessings shower
On each bowed quiet head.

The worshippers were still: each bosom felt
The awe-inspiring death-throes of the year,
When on the night-wind rose, as low they knelt,
A murmur faint but clear.

Was it an angel choir with joy aglow,
Returned unto this world of pain and sin
To tell to man their song of long ago
And sing it o'er again?

The hush grew deeper, and that sound afar
Drew near and nearer as the seconds sped;
Expectant hearts beat 'gainst their prison bar
To hear the seraphs' tread.

Then suddenly from every belfry-tower,
With one glad burst, the midnight chimes rang out,
As though to greet the New Year's dawning hour—
The very stars did shout.

And as the night wind lulled, with wond'rous glee,
Now near and loud, once more that sound awoke:
"We're all gone drunk; oh, wot a jolly spree"—
The mystic spell was broke.

Alfred Lovett.

OBITUARY.

Percy Greg, who has recently died, never achieved the eminence of his father, Mr. William Rathbone Greg. It is not generally known that he was for several years a contributor to the Reasoner. Under the name of Lionel Holdreth he wrote "Why should an Atheist fear to die?" and many other verses of promise. He was, however, somewhat erratic, and after the Civil War in America became politically a Conservative. His Devil's Advocate and other works contain food for thought rather than well reasoned conclusions.

Miss Constance Naden, the author of two volumes of verse, and we believe also of the Agnostic pamphlet What is Religion? to which Dr. Lewins contributed a preface, died also last week at the age of thirty-one.

Died at Glasgow, on 3rd of January, Mr. John Fisher, aged 73. Mr. Fisher was a sturdy Freethinker, whose advanced views dated from the days of Robert Owen. He was one of the leading supporters of the old Glasgow Eclectic Institute, and was respected for his earnestness and thoroughness by all who knew him.

SHOCKING BLASPHEMY.

A New Year's Story.

At the beginning of the present year a long hatchet-faced sky-pilot, whom we will call the Rev. Zephaniah I. Ena, felt it his duty to pay a ministerial visit to the house of a Freethinker, whom we will call Mr. Sturdy. Of course the dispenser of the gospel of brimstone and treacle came when Mrs. Sturdy's husband was out. Rapping briskly at the door, he stepped boldly in as soon as it was opened, saying, with his smirkiest of smiles, "A happy new year to you." "The same to you, and many of them, sir," said Mrs. Sturdy. Now Mrs. Sturdy, it must be premised, was the daughter of a Freethinker, who had felt it his duty to to bring up his family in absolute ignorance of religion, and as while still young she married a Freethinking husband, her spiritual condition, at any rate as far as an intimate acquaintance with the dogmas of theology was concerned, was one of almost utter destitution. It was probably hearing something of this that induced the Rev. Mr. I. Ena to make his call.

"This is a happy season for those who love the Lord."

Mrs. Sturdy thought of the landlord, but said nothing.

"I fear you have never felt the sweet, comforting influence of the Holy Ghost."

"Oh yes I have, sir," said Mrs. Sturdy, blushing. "At least, sir, that's what my husband calls it."

The Rev. Mr. I. Ena looked shocked, and his ashy face turned purple when Mrs. Sturdy added: "Mr. Sturdy is very fond of the Holy Ghost, and I have to keep him in hot water."

Suddenly it flashed upon the mind of the reverend gentleman that Mrs. Sturdy must mean spirits; unholy spirits—gin, rum, or whisky.

"You mean he is addicted to the bottle."

"Well, sir, he is fond of it these cold nights. He always calls it the Holy Ghost."

"He ought to be ashamed of himself."

Mrs. Sturdy pulled herself up sudden.

"If you've got anything to say against my husband you'd better come when he is at home. And I know he doesn't care for gentlemen of your cloth coming when he is out; so as I am busy ——," and here she looked significantly towards the door, to which Mr. Ena felt constrained to move.

"Well," said he, "I'll call and see him in a day or two, for your sake."

"Oh, you needn't come on my account," said she, "I am as fond of the Holy Ghost as he is," and she banged the door almost in the face of the man of God.

It soon was circulated throughout the neighborhood that Mr. Sturdy and his wife were given to drink, and although no one ever saw them intoxicated and their intimate friends declared they were strictly temperate, the story was credited because it was known they never attended church or chapel, and the tale came on the unimpeachable authority of the Rev. Z. I. Ena.

The matter remained on the mind of the minister. With the woman, poor ignorant creature, it might be as with the disciples of St. John mentioned in Acts xix., 2, who had "not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost," but with the man it was a clear case of deliberate blasphemy. Blasphemy, too, of a kind for which there was never forgiveness, neither in this world nor the world to come. He felt he must call and warn, or, since warning was too late, at any rate, denounce the sinner.

"I feel it my duty to warn you of the wrath to come," said he as he entered the house one evening in response to Mr. Sturdy's invitation.

"Why, sir, do you think I have come to my time of life without thinking of religious matters for myself?"

"But you are a drunkard and a blasphemer."

"You may call me a blasphemer if you like, though I do not see how I can blaspheme a God I don't believe in. The title seems more appropriate to you who believe in the God of the Westminster Faith, who elects some to heaven and some to hell, all for his glory. But assuredly I am no drunkard, and have never been intoxicated since I was married."

"But your wife declared you are addicted to the bottle, and blasphemously call it the Holy Ghost."

"Oh, that is it, is it?" said Mr. Sturdy smiling. "Well, I confess I do like to take the article to bed with me these cold winter nights."

Digitized by Google

"Whatever do you mean?"

"Here, wifie, show the gentleman our Holy Ghost. You see, sir," continued he, as his wife held up an earthenware foot-warmer, "that is what we call it, because it is the Comforter." LUCIANUS.

"GENTLE JESUS, MEEK AND MILD."

AT this season of the year, when the celebration of the birthday of the above-named individual is made the excuse for so much drunkenness, waste, and excess, is it too much for one to ask—Who was this Jesus, whom, in order to be orthodox and accounted "respectable," he must profess to believe in and worship? All history, even modern, is to a certain extent unreliable; but the Bible, the Christians tell us, is "inspired," and of course must be truthful and infallible. Let us, therefore, go to the Bible for the information we require.

Jesus was, we find, the illegitimate son of Mary, the affianced wife of one Joseph, a carpenter by trade. From his birth and circumcision to his thirtieth year, one, and only one, incident in his life is recorded (Luke ii., 41-51). And what was this solitary, wonderful episode that his friend Luke thought worth preserving? A very homely tale. It is the custom of Jesus and Mary to go to Jerusalem every year, there to attend the Jewish feast of Passover; and when Jesus comes to be twelve years old they give him a treat and take him with them. The ceremonies over, they return home with their friends and neighbors, but Jesus gives them the slip and "tarries behind." When they have gone a day's journey they, to use a Hibernianism, find the boy missing, and anxiously retrace their steps. Right back to Jerusalem they go, and at last find this precocious youth in the Temple, slily chaffing the senile wiseacres there assembled. Considering the trouble and anxiety he has caused, his mother decidedly errs on the side of leniency in the matter of admonishing him; but what is his reply? Does he say, "I am very sorry, mother, I have given you so much trouble, but will come home now and try to make amends"? Nothing of the sort. "Why have ye sought me?" he cries. "Don't you know I have other things to see after than dance attendance on you?" A bright pattern for our sons of twelve to follow. It was enough to make Mary regret she had not exercised a little more of old Solomon's philosophy in regard to the rearing of children. However, it is natural to suppose that his stepfather had something to say in the matter, for we are told in the same chapter that he "went down with them and came to Nazareth, and was there subject to them," which was all very satisfactory.

For the eighteen years subsequent to the above exhibition of filial tenderness, we know literally nothing of Jesus' life and adventures, but at the age of thirty, finding perhaps his father's honest calling irksome or distasteful, the idea evidently struck him to take upon himself the character of the "Messiah" long before prophesied. With this end in view he engages the services of an eccentric hermit-like individual named John (who "was clothed in camel's hair, with a girdle of skin about his loins, and who did eat locusts and wild honey," Mark i., 6) to perform the rite of Baptism. On the various supernatural phenomena and atmospheric disturbances said to have taken place at this ceremony it is useless to comment further than mentioning the fact that the said Jesus and John were the sole witnesses thereof, between whom there was evidently a friendly understanding, both before and after this event. (Luke iii., 16.; Matt. iii., 11 12; xi., 11.; Mark i., 7). And here, by way of parenthesis, and let us pause to inquire why these strange things are said to have taken place at all? "Truth is great and will prevail" without any supernatural corroboration. But mystery is the sheet anchor of the charlatan. When we find a man habitually trying to mystify us, we should beware of him, and mystery was throughout the prevailing characteristic of Jesus' utterances, e.g., "In my father's house are many mansions," "I will destroy this temple, and in three days raise it up again," and other innumerable instances.

Well, after having been baptised to the aforesaid phenomenal accompaniments, Jesus retires into seclusion for about six weeks, during which period the story of the wonderful baptism becomes public property, in a manner which would no doubt puzzle Mr. Vincent Crummles, and lo! at the end of six weeks Jesus emerges from his retirement to find himself famous (Luke iv, 14), and forthwith proceeds to collect a dozen lieutenants to enable him to carry on the war, as General Booth would express it.

With such a send off as this, one would think any man of even ordinary intelligence and capacity, would at least earn a reputation for gentle, saintly and upright living, but was this the case with Jesus? The Christians with their usual absence of argument say "Yes;" but let us go to the Bible, and we will find him of the earth earthy.

Almost his first public appearance was at a fashionable wedding, at Cana, in Galilee. To this festive occasion was invited his mother and disciples (John ii. 1-4). During the banquet, his mother looking forward to her son performing a preconcerted piece of legerdemain, sought to hurry him up: but how she must have repented her impatience, when this Gentle Jesus, Meek and Mild, retorted "Woman! what have I to do with thee? mine hour is not yet come." And this in no whisper, or how could it afterwards be related? We can picture to ourselves this little family jar; the old lady naturally impatient to see her favorite son distinguish himself, offering a gentle reminder, and for her pains getting a brutal snub in presence of all. This was not only a fracture of the fifth commandment, but a sad breach of manners into the bargain.

(To be concluded.)

CHRIST SAVE ME.

How sad and solemn to witness a funeral on a new-year's day, and the chief centre of sympathy, an old friend. As the mournful cortege passed by and the coffin shone through the glass panels of the hearse, I pictured my friend in all his health and strength on Saturday evening going to meet a most horrible death at his work. I also wondered as I looked at the many faces around, if there was one in that crowd who gave a thought to the hollowness of the talk about the Christian God. Poor John Moorhead of Flint, was a man in his prime. Full of health and vigor, he posted a letter to his wife and family on Saturday evening to tell them he would be with them on New Year's day. He went to his work and at five o'clock on Sunday morning—one hour before he would finish work—he fell into a large pot of boiling caustic up to his neck. He got out, and in stripping off his clothes, his flesh came off also, while buckets of water were thrown on his raw and bleeding body. But to no purpose; his flesh kept dropping off, and in four hours he was dead. John Moorhead was a total abstainer, never cursed or swore, and attended his chapel regularly; loved his wife and children, with whom he promised to spend a few days, two hundred miles away from the scene of his death. What had poor John done to bring the thunders of the Christian God down on him? Was it because he was so anxious to go home, or was it ill will to his poor wife, who was making preparations for the return of the absent one? or was it towards the children, who were looking for a sight of their father coming along the road, that they might run in and say, "Mother, he's coming"? Truly, the ways of J—— C—— are wonderful.

Flint. W. GIBSON.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE BLOOD, THE LIFE AND THE SOUL.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE FREETHINKER."

MR. WHEELER in his notice of Professor Robertson Smith's new book, points out that the blood was considered by the ancient Jews as being identical with the life itself. He might have gone further and have said that it was identified with the soul, for it is the very same word, nephesh, which is usually translated soul, is rendered as life in Gen. ix., 4, Lev. xvii., 14, Deut xii., 23, and other passages which speak of the blood as being the life. I think it is clear that the blood was considered of the very essence of life, and no doubt this view throws light upon the nature of bloody sacrifices. DETHABAR.

Twentieth Century, of New York, is evidently succeeding under the editorship of ex-Rev. Hugh. O. Pentecost. It begins the new year by enlarging its pages, in which is given a story by Miss Helen H. Gardener, the talented young American Freethought lecturess. Twentieth Century is a capital paper and well deserves its success.

Digitized by Google

ACID DROPS.

Archdeacon Farrar is preaching at Westminster Abbey on "Missions." He admits that we have decimated, degraded, and exterminated, by the vices of our character and the diseases of our civilisation, whole races of the heathen. Well then, why not leave the poor devils alone? Oh, says the Archdeacon, we owe them an act of reparation, and having sent them the curses of our scepticism, we must now send them the blessings of our Christianity. Indeed! Are rum, rifles and gunpowder the "curses of scepticism"? Are they not manufactured and supplied by Christians? It is a cunning stroke to make "scepticism" a present of all your own rottenness, but the gift is declined without thanks. Shoot the rubbish in your own dustbin.

Sir Michael Hicks-Beach says it is "the duty of Conservative clubs" to show "the Socialists and Secularists" that "in hereditary rank or hereditary legislation there is a kind of necessity for noble thoughts and noble deeds." The Conservative clubs have a tough job before them, and a long one too. Few Secularists are likely to believe in hereditary legislation before the day of judgment. What a pity it is that Sir Michael did not get off his little joke near Cleveland Street instead of at Leamington.

The "week of prayer" has been in full blast, yet the epidemic of influenza is more widely spread and malignant than ever. For the first time since its foundation the Seminary of Saint Sulpice, Paris, has been broken up, its infirmary being overcrowded and the healthy students being in danger of falling victims to the plague. This is the greatest school of Catholic Theology in France, or perhaps in the world, and Father Hyacinthe and M. Renan were educated there.

Negrophobia in the United States is getting serious. Collisions between the whites and blacks are becoming frequent, and a recent telegram announcing that the Rev. T. M. Joiner, an English clergyman of North Carolina, who had been mobbed and badly beaten for preaching to the negroes unable to obtain redress from the State, has appealed to the British Government.

The London cat's-meat men are going in for Sunday rest. We are glad to hear it. Perhaps a few of them will go to church in the morning and cry "Meat." If well executed it would excite a sleepy congregation. But how about poor pussie? Will she get her double supply unfailingly on Saturday, or will her miouwing render the Sabbath calm more hideous than a whole chorus of cat's-meat men?

The Rev. John McNeill has been preaching a special sermon to his brither Scots in London. Dealing with the temptations that beset them, he spoke especially on the decline in church-going. The church-going belle keeps at it, but the sterner metal stays at home. N.B.—This is our little joke, not the Scotch Spurgeon's.

"Preachers," said Mr. McNeill, "deserve all that has been said about them, but, nevertheless, to refuse to hear the gospel is a dangerous game." Bravo! You must patronise the gospel-shop whether the pious doctor is skilful or stupid, or whether his medicine gives you relief or the stomach-ache. An excellent doctrine for quacks!

The following item is from an American paper. The comment is our own:—"Living a short distance from Perkinsville is a lady almost forty years of age, who has been a widow for some ten or fifteen years. A few days ago she was placed in a somewhat embarrassing position by giving birth to a boy baby. Since her husband's death she has become a great believer in spiritualism, and she now stoutly maintains that the father of her child is her spirit husband, who returned one night to her something less than a year ago. She refuses to give any information other than that given above, and there are some people who believe it." A somewhat similar story is said to have happened in Palestine almost nineteen hundred years ago, and is credited by millions who would scout the story of the widow lady near Perkinsville.

Captain Dawson wants to save the souls of the Bournemouth cabbies. He tempts them to sing hymns and listen to amateur sermons with a supper and a pair of socks. He appeals to their stomach and feet instead of their heads. It is the best move for his creed.

A Catholic Priest supplies the Colne and Nelson Times with tables to prove that the percentage of illegitimate births is greatest in countries without priestly confession. His tables, however, only show that this is, so taking the countries he enumerates on the whole, for confession prevails both in the country which stands highest on the list, Austria, as well as in that which stands lowest, Ireland. This fact must induce the suspicion that it is something else than religion which influences the number of illegitimate births. Besides, we must dissent from measuring the total morality of a country or a district by this one item.

The Catholic Priest says, for instance, "Banffshire, where they have no confession, is sixteen times more immoral than Mayo, where everyone goes to confession." The statement is itself sufficient to show the misuse of the term immoral. Banffshire is one of the counties of Scotland where the fashion of courting by night still prevails, and this has far more to do with the returns of illegitimacy than any item in the religious creed or practice of the inhabitants.

We do not deny that the influence of the priest may count to some extent in Ireland and other places in getting unchaste girls married. But whether that result is well purchased by their spiritual debauchery, and whether the moral status of a nation is to be judged by this one particular, are quite different questions.

The Rev. H. B. Chapman, of St. Luke's, Camberwell, has given his clerical blessing to the new Theatre of Varieties at Leicester. Mr. Lovejoy, the proprietor, sent the reverend gentleman a box of cigars at Christmas. Mr. Chapman had the best of the bargain.

Two Theosophists write to the Portsmouth Evening News on the subject of Mr. Foote's recent lecture on "The Follies of Theosophy." But as one hails from London and the other from Great Malvern, we venture to think they never heard the lecture they criticise. The Great Malvern gentleman thinks that it is impossible for a gross Materialist like Mr. Foote to appreciate the great truths of Theosophy. We quite agree with him. Blavatsky, Sinnett and Olcott are too lofty for Mr. Foote. He prefers such poor creatures as Descartes, Spinoza, Hobbes, Locke, Mill, Bain, Spencer and Darwin.

The Rev. C. A. Davis, of Reading, has just made the discovery that the military system of Christendom is a scandal and a crime. Freethinkers have been saying this for a long time. Mr. Davis has just found it out. However, better late than never.

Judging from Mr. Davis's figures and quotations, he might have based his sermon on Mr. Foote's Shadow of the Sword. There is enough in that pamphlet to keep the clergy going for fifty years.

The movement for marrying gratis, begun at Derby, is advocated in some of the Church journals, and is likely to spread. This is a device to give apparent strength to the Church of England by citing how large a proportion of the population resort to it for consecration of unions. Of course such returns have little value, and will have less if the parsons agree to the proposal.

The Rev. Mr. Gunter, of Abberton, Essex, is bankrupt. Although his stipend is only £250, he incurred debts last year to the tune of over £700, and his only assets are £180 worth of furniture unpaid for. The man of God should ponder the text which enjoins, owe no man anything.

The Record makes much of the reported discovery of a MS. of the New Testament, said to have been made in some Turkish library at Damascus by Bishop Byrennius, the discoverer of the Teaching of the Twelve Apostles. The Record surmises that the event will prove as important as the unearthing of the Sinaitic MS., which it is said to resemble, at any rate in including the Epistle of Barnabas and the Shepherd of Hermas, which is a pretty sure sign those documents were also considered "Scripture" at the time when the manuscript was written. Of course, we must wait and see what light the alleged discovery throws on Christian evidences.

Digitized by Google

As the Shepherd of Hermas after the fourth century fell from the high repute in which it was doubtless held in the previous century, there is no doubt its inclusion would indicate that the MS. is an early one. On the other hand, a forger who wished to give his manuscript an appearance of antiquity would be likely to adopt some such device as this. It is little likely that any new MS. will throw very much light on the process by which the Christian books got compiled. Tischendorf himself made the noteworthy statement in his Introduction to the Tauchnitz New Testament, "I have no doubt that very shortly after the books of the New Testament were written, and before they were protected by the authority of the Church, many arbitrary alterations and additions were made in them."

God doesn't seem to have been very careful of the manuscripts of his divine revelation. If he really wanted to do a turn for the Christian Evidence people, he ought to unearth the originals of the Gospels, with the autographs of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, and the sworn attestations of unimpeachable witnesses.

The Rev. J. T. Owens, of Grimsby, objects to any rival entertainment to his own. He stigmatised the "waits" as "cadgers," "midnight brawlers," and declared their carols were little short of profanity. As it happens that some of the "waits" at Grimsby devote the proceeds of the "cadging" to the hospital, Mr. Owen's utterance has met some strong criticism. If ministers were not sheltered behind their coward's castle, how meek and mild they would become; but whenever the fear of the daily press is not before their eyes, the old Adam, the sense of being God's elect, is apt to break out.

Yet another murderer gone to join St. David and all the rest of Jehovah's favorites in Heaven. Close on the heels of Will Dukes, Thomas Hood was jerked to Jesus at Maidstone for murdering his wife at Gravesend. Shortly before his pious exit he expressed a hope that the Lord had forgiven her and himself also. His two little boys visited him in prison and repeated the Lord's Prayer. The last letter of this saved sinner expressed a hope that "We shall all meet again in heaven." Oh what must it be to be there!

Dukes and Hood have been joined in glory by Charles Higginbottom, the Birmingham murderer of his paramour, who was swung from Warwick gaol straight into Abraham's bosom on Tuesday morning. Since his committal Higginbottom had been most penitent, and paid great attention to the ministrations of the prison chaplain.

Another sudden death in church. Mr. John Harris, a well-known citizen of Chester, falling down dead in Christ Church just after having, as sidesman, taken up a collection.

The Rev. Francis Holland Adams, a retired clergyman, formerly of Salisbury, committed suicide by blowing his brains out. He had of late shown signs of weakness of intellect, though there was nothing in his manner to suggest that he contemplated suicide. He was put in Digby's Asylum, Exeter, but was only there a week, the authorities certifying that there was nothing the matter with him. If Talmage would only collect the cases of clerical suicides it might modify his opinion of its being the result of scepticism.

The New York Herald gives an account of a new spiritist work which has just been issued, and which professes to have been written at the dictation of the Bible heroes and writers. All the old patriarchs, from Adam onwards, give their views on affairs. Noah tells how he was thirty years building the ark, and there is a host of similar drivel.

Sir Edward Clarke has been telling his constituents at Plymouth that Church and State must stand up for each other; in other words, the parson and the squire must back each other up. Sir Edward is in some fear as to the result, however; for he prophesies evil days if the nobility go on prize-fighting and Cleveland-streeting, and the bishops cling with tremulous hands to their posts long after they are incapable. Altogether the prospect is mixed, and we fancy that men like Sir Edward Clarke are hoping against hope—and know it!

The Bishop of Ripon protests in the Contemporary Review against the projects of forming Brotherhoods in the Church. He apparently thinks that the Brothers would be dangerous rivals to the priests. But the bishop is fighting a shadow. The Occult Brothers of Thibet are about as forthcoming as those of the Church of England.

"A Lay Preacher" writes to the Portsmouth Chat declaring that "Dancing is the Devil's loadstone," and that "We shall soon have dancing on a Sunday like they indulge in at the Secular Hall in Wellington Place." "Next," says this libellous preacher, "We shall have this party's representative on the School Board [our good friend Mr. John Brumage] proposing that our schools be turned into Sunday dancing saloons." Now they do not have dancing on Sunday at the Secular Hall in Wellington Street, thinking, very properly, that the work of Freethought propaganda is more needed than amusement. A Lay Preacher is evidently full of the charity and loving-kindness of his tribe.

Five local preachers, over whom the Lord had momentarily forgotten to cast an eye, were pitched out of a waggonette on the journey from Dunstable to Luton, and one of them seriously injured.

The Dean of Manchester (Dr. Oakley) preached last Sunday evening in the cathedral on Positivism. He besought his hearers not to worship an ideal, posthumous humanity, but a present living humanity. If they believed in the future of the race, then let them have up in every room a picture of Mary and her child, and let there be the dear and blessed crucifix on every wall.

Very pretty, no doubt, in a church. But not so very pretty outside. The Virgin Mother and her holy child are a standing—or sitting—insult to mothers that are not virgins and children that have fathers. As for the crucifix, it is not an elegant object, especially with a naked man upon it, with blood running down his head and side. We prefer a portrait of Paine, Voltaire, or Ingersoll, or even the Grand Old Man.

The discovery of the earliest known will shows that in Egypt, 2550 B.C., women possessed the right of inheriting property—a right which there is no hint of her possessing according to the divine law of Jehovah.

POOR old Thomas Crofts, of Winsover Road, Spalding, got troubled about his soul, and the ministrations of his pious visitors only made him worse. He often remarked that he was bound to go to hell, but if "they" had left him alone on his "old cow pad" he might have been all right. Unable to stand it any longer, he tried to hang himself, but the rope broke, and poor old Thomas Crofts is now in the County Lunatic Asylum.

The clergy are falling more and more into contempt In a recent number of The Hawk we noticed the term. "sky-pilot." True, it was printed in inverted commas, but by and bye the quotation marks will be dropped.

The Hawk finds the following explanation of how Theosophy captures an Atheist and a clergyman in the same net:—"It contains some germs of every faith, and restless souls seize upon this portion or that as suitable to themselves, and the absence of dogma produces a comfortable state of things, under which each devotee gives his own definition of his belief."

"There is the money somewhere," says the Bishop of Rochester. So they are trying to get it, to the tune of £5,300, to repair Christ Church, Southwark. The population is stated on the begging circular to be "twelve thousand, chiefly of the poorest class." Very likely the "poorest class" would take it as a favor if the £5,300 were spent on their bodies instead of their souls.

Digitized by Google

MR. FOOTE'S ENGAGEMENTS.

Sunday, January 12, Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, E.C., at 7, "Christ and Humanity: a Reply to the Archbishop of Canterbury."

Monday, January 13, Assembly Rooms, Friar Street, Reading, at 8, "Christianity and Secularism: a False Creed and a True One."

Jan. 19, Liverpool; 23, West Ham; 26, Camberwell.

Feb. 2, Hall of Science, London; 9, Blackburn; 16, Milton Hall, London; 23, Hall of Science, London.

March 2, Manchester; 9, Camberwell; 23 and 30, Hall of Science, London.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

LITERARY communications to be addressed to the Editor, 14 Clerkenwell Green, London, E.C. All business communications to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C.

THE Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the office, post free to any part of Europe, America, Canada and Egypt, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 6s. 6d.; Half Year, 3s. 3d.; Three Months, 1s. 7½d. Australia, China and Africa:—One Year, 8s. 8d.; Half Year, 4s. 4d.; Three Months, 2s. 2d. India:—One Year, 10s. 10d.; Half Year, 5s. 5d.; Three Months, 2s. 8½d.

SCALE OF ADVERTISEMENTS.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 3s.; Half Column, 15s.; Column, £1 10s. Special terms for repetitions.

IT being contrary to post office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will in future receive the number when their subscription expires in a colored wrapper.

F. MORRIS.—The date is booked for you.

"FREETHINKER" CIRCULATION FUND.—A Friend, £5; J. Crabtree, £1; Student, 2s.

F. PELHAM.—Thanks for your good wishes.

YOUNG N. S. S.—Glad to hear from you, as one of our converts and a recent recruit to the N. S. S. Your letter to the parson ought to receive an answer, but we doubt if you will get one.

W. H SPIVEY.—Mr. Foote's dates are all booked up to June. It is impossible to visit any place frequently. The Freethought party is in want of a dozen good lecturers.

J. G. B.—Your parody is good, but not good enough. There is said to have been an old canal from the Mediterranean to the Red Sea, but how on earth could a whale go through such a channel? It is a deep sea traveller, and soon gets stranded in shallows.

H. G. SHEPHERD.—Thanks. See "Acid Drops."

P. WRIGHT.—That the Bible wines were intoxicating is evident from the example of Noah and Lot. Paul also refers to the Corinthians as being drunken at the Lord's Supper, (1 Cor. xi. 21.) Though strong drink is called "raging" (Prov. xx, 1.)—Prov. xxxi., 6, says: "Give strong drink unto him that is ready to perish, and wine unto those that be of heavy heart. Let him drink and forget his poverty, and remember his misery no more." Deut. xiv, 26, permits the purchase of wine, strong drink or "whatsoever thy soul desireth." See the Freethinker tract on The Bible and Teetotalism.

LEP (Dundee)—Part XI finishes the Dictionary of Freethinkers.

E. CLARKE.—We are preparing some such advertisements, but they take time.

STUDENT.—Thanks. The verse shall appear.

INQUIRER.—(1,) Mr. Foote spoke of "advanced Unitarians." There is only a sheet of tissue between some of these and more pronounced Freethinkers. You must remember that there are Unitarians and Unitarians. (2.) We did not know that Tylor's Primitive Culture was out of print. It is in the publisher's recent lists. Perhaps your bookseller is mistaken. Clodd's Myths and Dreams is a good book and much cheaper, but get Tylor if you can.

A. DUNKLEY.—Your letter interested us. We are always glad to hear from converts.

BONES.—Doctors will cant about religion while it pays.

E. GOTTHEIL, Thanks.

J. C.—All right. Our office boy adds "keep your hair on."

J. KING.—You continue in the fallacy, and you will not understand the argument until you get clear of it. Read the first volumn of Buckle's Civilization.

J. BRIMAGE.—Delighted to hear of the continued improvement in your health.

F. C., (Bournmouth), in sending Mr. Forder a subscription to the Freethinker, says:—"I have only recently commenced taking in this paper, and it has awakened a deep interest in me. I have been a sceptic since I was 17 or 18, but never felt so sure of my ground as I do now, after reading only a few weeks' numbers of the Freethinker, which ought to have a large circulation."

SALFORD.—We can't explain it. Ask the tradesman.

J. CRABTREE.—Your good wishes are reciprocated. You will see that we are reprinting the Articles on Hugh Price Hughes, with additions.

H. BARRATT reports that, after a long struggle, the friends of the Freethinker have succeeded in getting it placed in the reading room of the Kilburn Liberal Club. The chief obstructionist has since been seen devouring the Christmas Number.

MUSICIAN.—Thanks, but the subject will need to be dealt with more completely before very long.

JOSEPH BROWN, sec. N. E. Secular Federation, acknowledges the following subscriptions:—J. Brown, 2s.; Selkirk, 4s. 6d.; Tullin, 2s. 6d.; Bell, 8s.; W. Reed, 2s.; J. Bowend, 2s.; J. H. Creswell, 2s. 6d.; F. Cresswell, 2s. 6d.; A Friend, 2s. 6d.; P. Weston, 7s.; Storer, 6s.; Merry, 1s.; Greenwell, 2s. 6d.; Oxhill Branch, 6s.; Saunderson, 2s. 6d.; Glennie 1s. 3d.

Correspondents are requested, begged, implored, etc., not to send orders for literature to Mr. Foote, but to Mr. Forder. Disregard of this rule always causes delay and sometimes loss.

PAPERS RECEIVED.—Reading Observer—Menschenthum—Colne and Nelson Times—Echo—County of Middlesex Independent—Women's Suffrage Journal—Neues Freireligioses Sonntags-Blatt—Freidenker—Ironclad Age—Western Figaro—Open Court—Evening Standard—Star—Consett Guardian—Der Arme Teufel—Progressive Thinker—Church Reformer—Western American—Grimsby News—Chat—Freethought—Liberator—Ironclad Age—Blackburn Times—Boston Investigator.

FRIENDS who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish our attention directed.

CORRESPONDENCE should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

TO ALL WHOM IT CONCERNS.

A GENTLEMAN asked us at Nottingham if the invitation we printed early in the year was still open. We replied that it was. Our resources are not adequate to carry on our Freethought business properly, and they are diminished from time to time by investors requiring to withdraw their money. We have indeed to repay a good deal of money during the new year, and we shall be glad to hear from any friends who have spare cash to entrust us with. Every investment bears five per cent. interest, and the investor receives a legal document entitling him to recall his amount by six months' notice. We intend, if possible, to be very active in publishing during the next year or two. There is a certain market for all we produce, and a reasonable, if not handsome, profit on sales. It will be borne in mind that the Freethinker brings us no direct return for our labor, at least for the present, though the prospect is slowly improving. We have, therefore, to rely upon what is yielded by the publishing business, which, besides lecturing work, is our only source of income. Our stock of publications is a large one, and some idea of the resources needed may be gathered from the fact that the Dictionary of Freethinkers alone has cost £150 to produce, exclusive of the binding, the expense of which is incurred gradually as the work sells. Those who cannot afford to invest are not desired to inconvenience themselves; we only appeal to those who can; and they who respond quickly will be doing us the greatest service.

G. W. FOOTE.

P.S.—Five friends have now responded to this appeal. We shall be glad to hear from others forthwith. Any sums from £5 upwards will be acceptable on the foregoing conditions.

SPECIAL.

The Rev. Hugh Price Hughes has reprinted his lying story of the Converted Atheist from the Methodist Times, and is selling it at the modest price of eighteen-pence. We feel it necessary, therefore, to reprint our exposure of this infamous concoction, with some additions, and a postscript dealing with the reverend gentleman's absolute silence on being challenged to produce a single scrap of proof. It will make a sixteen-paged pamphlet, and will be issued at the lowest possible price of one penny, and this without using inferior paper. Our object is to get the exposure widely circulated. Every Freethinker who despises pious liars should aid us in the task by purchasing and circulating copies. Mr. Forder will supply parcels of two dozen and upwards at trade price—that is, ninepence per dozen of thirteen copies. The pamphlet will be ready next Tuesday.

Digitized by Google

SUGAR PLUMS.

The Impossible Creed is the title of Mr. Foote's open letter to the Bishop of Peterborough on his remarkable article in the Fortnightly Review. The pamphlet is now on sale. Of course a copy has been forwarded (under cover) to the Bishop.

Christ and His Times is the title of a new volume of addresses by the Archbishop of Canterbury. Mr. Foote will lecture upon it this evening (Jan. 12) at the London Hall of Science. The volume has caused a good deal of pleasant excitement in religious circles.

ON Monday evening Mr. Foote lectures at Reading, and the chair will be taken by Mr. R. Forder. After the lecture a Branch of the N. S. S. will be started. Reading has been stirred up of late by Christian lecturers under the auspices of a local clergyman.

ON Thursday, Jan. 23, Mr. Foote lectures in aid of the funds of the West Ham Branch. The subject is "How to Get Saved." The tickets are sixpence each, and the Branch hopes to crowd the hall.

THE quarterly meeting of the Camberwell Branch was held last Sunday. About one hundred sat down to tea and a most pleasant evening was spent by the company. The chief feature was the farewell to the energetic secretary, Mr. R. S. Seago, who was presented with a handsomely framed testimonial and bound copy of the Dictionary of Freethinkers. The few words spoken on the occasion were applauded to the echo, all present wishing Mr. Seago prosperity.

THE Poet Laureate (of the Branch!) wrote as follows:—

SUCCESS TO SEAGO.

"The best of friends must part" we're told,
Though tried and trusted, true as gold,
But since our friend will o'er the Sea-go,
We wish he'd leave with us his Ego;
We also wish, with much sincerity,
Success to him and all prosperity.

Mr. Seago promised to advance the cause of Freethought as far as possible in his new home. His place as secretary will be undertaken by Mr. Leppage, who will we trust prove the alter ego of his predecessor.

THE North Eastern Secular Federation held its first annual social party at Newcastle on Monday evening. The attendance exceeded the most sanguine expectations. Members came as far as from Middlesborough. The tea was sumptuous, dancing was kept up till a late hour, and several friends contributed to the amusement of the party. Everybody pronounced the evening to have been a most delightful one.

THE South Shields Branch held its third annual tea and concert on New Year's Day. The tea was admirably served by ladies—Mrs. Moir, Mrs. Chapman, Miss Foley, and Miss Moir. Mr. S. M. Peacock, the president, was obliged to be absent, but his place was filled by Mr. Thompson, of North Shields. The event of the evening was the presentation of a silver teapot, cruet, and jelly-dish to the secretary (R. Chapman) and his newly wedded wife. Mrs. S. Black supervised a Dramatic Sketch, which was followed by dancing. In point of numbers, and otherwise, the gathering was most successful.

Freethought, of San Francisco, inserts an interesting letter from Captain Otto Thomson, describing the position of affairs in Sweden. There are a large number of Swedes in the United States, and as many as possible should be induced to subscribe to Fritankaren.

SWEDISH PRISONER'S FUND.—J. Brumage, 2s. 6d.; G. W. Foote, 10s. There should be a large list next week. Every N. S. S. Branch ought to make a collection immediately.

THE annual dinner of the Oxhill Branch of the N. S. S. is reported in the Consett Guardian. Mr. J. White, the president, occupied the chair, and the gathering seems to have afforded satisfaction to all present.

The Jewish Times, commenting on Bishop Magee's article in the Fortnightly, says, "It shows that an appreciation of the radical weakness of Christianity, which Jews have indicated for centuries, is beginning to dawn on the thinking Christian World."

Secular Thought is going to begin the new year and its seventh volume by reprinting the discussion on "Christianity and Secularism, Which is True?" between Mr. Foote and Dr. Mc Cann. This debate is still in print, and is useful to put before those who like to see both sides of a question.

MR. SYMES gives long extracts in the Liberator from The New Cagliostro, Mr. Foote's open letter to Madame Blavatsky. We expect there will be a good demand for the pamphlet among the Australian Freethinkers.

THE Society of Freethinkers of Liége, Belgium, send us their Almanac for 1890. The publication is in its ninth year. The price is only 15 centimes or three half-pence, and among the contents are choice extracts from numerous foreign Freethought writers.

We notice that the Rationalist Federation of Charleroi has issued a new edition of the complete works of Jean Meslier, the priest who died a Freethinker and left a will declaring his disbelief in all supernaturalism.

THE Bulletin des Sommaires notices Le Calendrier Républican et de la Libre Pensée, compiled by M. C. Cilwa, which, we are glad to see, has reached a second edition.

THE LONDON SECULAR FEDERATION DINNER.

THE second annual dinner of this Federation, held on Tuesday at the Bridge House Hotel under the presidency of Mr. G. W. Foote, was an even greater success than the first. The diners exceeded two hundred, and, thanks to the straightforward appeal for the sinews of war from the president in his address, about twenty-five pounds were donated to the funds of the Federation. The toast of "Success to the London Secular Federation" was proposed by Mr. J. Clarke, M.A., who dwelt on the service of the Federation in upholding the lecturers, and was responded to by Mr. Standring, the secretary, who looked with pride on what the infant of two years old had already done, mentioning the withdrawal of the Christian Evidence lecturers at the Hall of Science as one result of their organised opposition. The toast of "The National Secular Society," proposed by Mr. Moss, was fittingly responded to by Mr. Forder. Our "Speakers and Writers," gracefully proposed by Mr. J. H. Ellis, who congratulated the Freethought party upon having speakers and writers of whom any cause might be proud, was responded to by Mr. J. M. Robertson, who expressed his sense of the goodwill invariably shown by the party for its workers. The retirement of Mr. Bradlaugh should only cement the bonds of union, and induce those, without his strength, to each do their best for the cause he would still have at heart. The toast of "Our Comrades in Other Lands," was proposed by Mr. J. M. Wheeler, who rapidly ran over the position of Freethought in other countries, ending with asking sympathy for the Swedish hero who was suffering in Stockholm for propagating our opinions. The toast, which like the rest, was drunk with enthusiasm, was responded to by the chairman, Mr. Foote, who, having in his opening address, alluded to the loss of the Camberwell Branch by the departure of Mr. Seago for South Africa, now referred to the fact that Mr. Bradlaugh might be classed among our comrades in other lands. His name must always be held in honor in the Freethought ranks. No doubt his large experience, sound judgment, and wise counsel, would long be at the service of those who led the Freethought party on his official retirement. Mr. Foote finished by a glowing tribute to the sturdy character of Mr. Victor Lennstrand, now in prison perhaps for two years, and to Captain Otto Thompson, who had taken his place on the Freethought paper. English Freethinkers should see to it that the prisoner should not have his constitution wrecked by coarse prison fare, and that the paper should be sustained.

Digitized by Google

The speeches were interspersed by songs and recitals ably rendered Madame Burgwitz, Miss Williams, Mr. Moss and Mr. Barnes. Mrs. Wheeler presided at the piano, and the gathering broke up after singing "Auld Lang Syne," all expressing satisfaction that the dinner has now become an institution. Great credit is due to the sub-committee, especially Mr. Angus Thomas and Miss Vance, for the arrangement of the programme.

THE CORROBORATION OF PROFESSOR HUXLEY.

BY JOHN BURROUGHS.

From the "North American Review."

[CONCLUDED.]

DR. ABBOTT says he feels but a languid interest in the critical discussion as to the authorship of the four Gospels. This may well be. It may be because Dr. Abbott is not primarily interested in questions of evidence,or in logical and reasoning processes. He is a moralist and preacher, and seeks the springs of conduct. not the sources of logical conviction. I believe he accepts the doctrine of demoniacal possession: it seems to suit his emotional and imaginative type of mind. But a man of science, as such could no more accept such an explanation of any form of insanity than he could attribute crystallization to the work of fairies, or the wind and the storm to furies. The authorship of the four Gospels may not be a vital question to the religious mind, but, as a question, it is a matter of evidence, and not at all of personal impression.

If Christianity really rested upon evidence, if its vitality was solely dependent upon verifiable facts and considerations, like a work of science, it would have perished from the earth long ago. But it does not live by its so-called evidences. Christianity is largely a matter of the heart, of the feelings and the emotions. It has not rested upon logical evidences; its main hold in the first instance has not been upon men's scientific faculties, but upon their hopes, fears, aspirations, and spiritual cravings. Paul says: "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord but by the Holy Ghost." Neither can he. To talk about the reasonableness of Christianity is like talking about the reasonableness of magic or witchcraft. The human faculties are utterly powerless before its main tenets. Christianity has the vitality of literature, of poetry and art. The Gospel records have wonderful, even magical, power as literature. They are true, not as history, but as poetry.

The myth of the resurrection will be kept alive for ages to come notwithstanding all that has or can be urged against it, because mankind have such a profound interest in believing it.

Christianity does not offer a system of philosophy, but a religious incentive. When it attempts to play the rôle of interpreter of the visible order of the universe, or to satisfy our rational faculties, its failure is pathetic; its proofs are childish; its science is essentially pagan; its story of the fall as an explanation of the origin of evil, and its "plan of salvation" as a means of escape from that evil, as science, do not rise above any of the delusions of the pagan world. The story of the Chaldee god, Bel, who cut off his own head. moistened the clay with his blood, and then made man out of it, is just as rational an explanation of the origin of man as the one the Christian Church has always adhered to. In fact, the whole basis of our theology, the conception of Jesus, as a supernatural person who had no earthly father, and who rose from the dead and ascended bodily up into heaven, etc., is essentially pagan, and belongs to an order of things that has long since passed away. The power of Christianity is a spiritual power; it is in its appeals to the ideal of the gentle, the merciful, the meek, the forgiving, the pure in heart—an ideal which has such an attraction for the European nations; and also to the love of reward and fear of punishment which materialistic ages foster. In one is its charm for fine natures; in the other its power over the multitude.

Theological writers are in general prone to magnify subjective certitude at the expense of objective proof; to place faith above reason, in the domain of reason. They sneer at science and logic as if in their sphere they could be dispensed with and something else be substituted in their place. Thus Professor Blackie, in that vituperative book of his, "The Natural History of Atheism,"—a book the style of which is like a man going through a house and banging the doors behind him,—says, as a finishing stroke to the "drivel" of our "boastful science" that the "highest cognitions are never reached by the mere exercise of the knowing faculties, on whatever subject exercised." Not even, I suppose, when exercised upon the multiplication table! "Instinct and aspiration," he goes on to say, "are higher than knowledge; and the pretensions of the merely scientific man to assume the dictatorship of things that are not founded on nature. Many things can be known only by being felt; all vital forces are fundamentally unknowable; but they exist not the less because would-be philosopher B or would-be philosopher C has no machinery with which to measure or control them." Are instinct and aspiration "cognitions"? Do they belong to the sphere of knowledge? Do they even point to any certain and demonstrable conclusions? They may or they may not be higher than knowledge; it is certain that they cannot take the place of knowledge. Instinct and aspiration enlightened by knowledge is the desirable order, is it not? The only thing the scientific man assumes is that the scientific method is the only proper one with which to deal with the objective world of fact and experience. If the professor meant to say that some things are to be felt and not known, he is near the truth. The facts of science are to be known; we may know Kepler's laws; we can hardly feel them, since they are not personal. But truths of art, of poetry, of religion are to be felt whether we know them or not. They come to us by a synthetical, not by an analytical process.

I have no disposition to overrate our mere knowing faculties; I only want to say that what we know we know through them. What we feel, or fancy, or hope, forms no part of our true knowledge, and may come through other avenues. The perception of the beautiful is not a part of our knowledge; neither is the perception of the moral or the spiritual. These things are from within; they are subjective and not objective, and not within the range of the scientific faculties. They are real, just as pleasure and pain are real; they are experiences of the mind. The whole sphere of religion lies here; the kingdom of heaven is within you, not in some outward relation or condition.

Neither do I not wish to imply that there is any feud between science and true religion, between that part of man's nature which thirsts for exact knowledge—The red rays of the spectrum, so to speak—and that part of his nature which we call the spiritual, and which fades off in the vast unknown—the violet rays, at the other extreme; nor between either of these and his æsthetic nature, his love of beautiful forms, though in different individuals these different parts will not be equally developed, nor will they be equally active in different races and times. The feud is between true science and false science; between the conception of an order that is rational, and one that is irrational, between modern pathology and Indian "medicine."

Exact science deals with, and can only deal with the objective, the rigid. inexorable world of law. With the subjective, the world within us, the world of personality, whence comes all we call literature, art, religion, philosophy, etc., it cannot deal. Here exact demonstration is not possible; all is plastic, growing, conflicting, aspiring, intermediate. The personal element modifies everything. The laws by which insensate bodies act and re-act upon each other may be determined, but the laws by which persons act and re-act upon each other are quite another matter. In the subjective world truth is relative, but in the world of science truth is absolute. Chemical elements always combine in the same proportions; moisture is always precipitated from the air under the same conditions, and the same results always follow. Doubtless the same results always follow the same conditions in the world of mind and personality also, but here the conditions are more obscure and more fluctuating, and science cannot grasp them.

Every original mind may have, and usually does have, a philosophy of its own, a religion of its own, a political creed of its own, literary preferences of its own; but every mind cannot have a science of its own. The personal element is alien to science. How many systems of philosophies have there been from Aristotle down to Spencer? How many times have the old problems been explained? But one man's science must be another man's science; all science is a whole—a pushing farther and farther of the lines of knowledge into nature.

The hostility between the scientific and the spiritual, or the truly religious, may well cease, if, indeed, there ever has been, or ever can be, real hostility. We are bound to give the reason and the understanding full sway in their own proper fields. In subduing and in utilizing this world, or adjusting ourselves to it, we have no guide but science. Yet science is not the main part of life, notwithstanding all the noise it is making in the world. Science is making a great noise in the world because it is doing a great work. Literature, art, religion, speculation, have had their day; that is, the highest achievements of which they are capable are undoubtedly of the past. But science is young; it is now probably only in the heat of its forenoon work. It is a little curious that man's knowing faculties, the first to be appealed to, should be the latest in maturing; that he should worship so profoundly, admire so justly, act so wisely and heroically, while he yet knew so little of the world in which he was placed. Does not this fact point to the conclusion that science is the main part of life? It is probably the main part of our material civilization, of that by which we are clothed and fed and warmed and transported, defended in war and housed in peace; but of an intrinsic civilization it forms a less part. The old Greek had little or no material civilisation in the modern sense; his civilization was personal and mental. What distinguishes the modern man is not his personal superiority, but the enormous engines and deft appliances with which he is fended and armed, and the greatness of his material triumphs.

Digitized by Google

Yet knowledge is not discredited, reason is not supplanted. We can no more dispense with them than we can dispense with the bones in our bodies. They furnish the framework by which our lives are upheld, All the certainty we have of the order of the objective world comes through our rational faculties.

The Agnostic does not merely say that all knowledge is imperfect and fragmentary, nor that all certainty is based on the logical faculty; but simply that the understanding goes upon evidence; that in this world we have no guide to objective truth but our rational faculties. He finds no room for what our religious brethren call faith, because faith, as commonly understood, is a fatal undertow that swamps and drowns reason. He finds many things and enjoys many things which he cannot understand; he is not a stranger to the thrill of awe and reverence in the presence of the great mystery of the universe; but all propositions relative to the plans, ways, and nature of that mystery that are not verifiable, he fights shy of.

JOHN BURROUGHS.

A MIDNIGHT SCENE.

How proud was Philistia! How festive her day,
With clash of the cymbals and trumpets' loud bray,
And revelling wild and hilarious!
For Dagon's proud temple was Jove's resting-place,
And he with his rival now stood face to face;
But the two eyed each other with such a bad grace,
That 'tis certain no gods are gregarious.

Now the sexton has snuffed out the last altar light,
And the temple is wrapped in the darkness of night,
When there comes a loud roar from the basement,
And up springs the lid of the "Lord's" sacred box,
And in such vulgar language the fish-god he mocks
That his ichthyic optic on Jahveh he "cocks,"
Expressive of utter amazement.

While ever more insolent, stinging and strong,
The stream of invective comes rolling along,
Till Dagon his wrath cannot smother:
"His Joss-house invaded by that Jewish guy!
"Be flouted and 'cheeked,' and then given the lie!
"And stand it all meekly? He'd like to know why!—"
Here the deities went for each other.

Oh! would that poor I, with a Homeric pen,
This "Mill" of the gods could describe unto men
In the "Ring's" own sublime terminology!
But no human eye saw this beautiful sight;
So who "got well home" with his left or his right,
Or "tapped claret" first in this heavenly fight,
Is debateable ground for theology.

But 'tis said when the priests of the fish-god came round,
That Philistine's champion lay prone on the ground,
Defeated, yet covered with glory.
But I'd not like to swear that this version was true
Unless both the "sloggers" were open to view,
Or, at least, till I heard what the Philistines, too,
Had to say on this wonderful story.

And I think you may find, if his conduct you test,
That Jehovah, perhaps, had come off second best,
And took vengeance a deity befitting;
For the "sacred" account its inquirers will tell
How to Ashdod's brave habitants strangely it fell,
That, although for some days they by no means felt well,
They preferred any posture to sitting.

SPHINX.

REVIEWS.

"A Reply to Dr. Lightfoot's Essays." By the author of Supernatural Religion. London: Longmans and Co.—This is a volume for scholars, and will be caviare to the general. Dr. Lightfoot has made up a volume of his old attacks on Supernatural Religion, and the author of that work follows with a volume containing his replies. Dr. Lightfoot is learned but so is his adversary, and no whit inferior to him as a controversialist. The victory undoubtedly lies with the champion of rationalism. All the Bishop's criticisms merely affect the fringe of the subject. Here and there, among thousands of references, he finds an inaccuracy, but he never approaches the real point in dispute. As our author remarks, "The eagerness with which Dr. Lightfoot and others rush up all the side issues and turn their backs upon the more important central proposition is in the highest degree remarkable." The volume concludes with a powerful chapter, entitled "Conclusions," dealing with miracles and the supernatural, and level to the intelligence and information of the ordinary reader. Answering the absurd old question of "What will you give us in its place?" he writes: "To discover that a former belief is unfounded is to change nothing of the realities of existence. The sun will descend as it passes the meridian whether we believe it to be noon or not. It is idle and foolish, if human, to repine because the truth is not precisely what we thought it, and at least we shall not change reality by childishly clinging to a dream." Thus the author's tone is as manly as his arguments are powerful, and his learning solid and comprehensive. The volume should be procured by every reader who has Supernatural Religion on his library shelves.

"The Theology of the Bible." The Claims of Inspiration Examined by the Light of Reason. By Charles Theodore Perry. London: Printed for the author by William Reeves, 185 Fleet Street, E.C. Price 4d.—Mr. Perry is sceptical of orthodox theology, but says, "I believe in the religion of the Bible." As much of his pamphlet is devoted to showing that the Bible God is barbarous and that the Old Testament contains a good deal of bad morality, it is possible he draws some subtle distinction between the contents of the Bible and its religion, or it is possible his desire not to be irreverent has led him to use orthodox phrases with heterodox meanings.

"The Faith, Facts, and Frauds of Religious History." By Emma Hardinge Britten. John Heywood, London, 1889.—This work represents the views of a talented Spiritist lecturess on the religions of the past. And certainly heterodox they are. Mrs. Britten holds that the Christian story is mythical, and that in substance it was borrowed from India, where she finds the origin of all religions. The value of her production is greatly lessened by the weight she places on such works as Kersey Graves's Sixteen Crucified Saviors. There are, however, many good points in the volume, but they will probably be familiar to our readers. Certainly such Spiritists as Mrs. Britten are doing something to break down the exclusive claims of Christianity, though we question the worth of that which they would substitute in its place.

"Parsimony." Belfast, 1889.—This is not, as some rash speculator might hastily suppose, an exhortation against niggardliness at Christmas or any other time. It is a truly philosophic little brochure, and a very able one, on the law of parsimony in logic—the rule that neither more, nor more onerous causes are to be assumed than are necessary to account for phenomena. It is this simple rule which entirely puts out of court all supernaturalism, and which sets aside the idea of design as an anthropomorphism. The able author says, "to introduce any cause of the universe that is superior to Nature is to act contrary to the law of Parsimony by introducing a cause that is unknown, and disordering all accurate reasonings. Therefore the doctrine which teaches that all or any species of plants or animals existing on this earth were or was produced through an act of creation, performed by a supernatural Power of any kind, is a doctrine which must be relegated to the mythical limbo supposed to contain the paradise of fools, and all other miracles."

Science ascribes to natural causes, what theology ascribes to supernatural ones.—Buckle's History of Civilization.

Every religion has for its foundation a misconception of the cause of phenomena.—Ingersoll.

Digitized by Google

FORTHCOMING MEETINGS.

LONDON.

Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, E.C., 7, Mr. G. W. Foote, "Christ and Humanity: a Reply to the Archbishop of Canterbury."

Camberwell—61 New Church Road, S.E., 7.30, Mr. B. Hyatt, "Can Man by Searching Find Out God?" Recitals.

Milton Hall, Kentish Town Road, N.W., 7.30, Mrs. Besant, "The Inspiration of the Bible: What Does it Mean?"

Battersea—The Shed of Truth, Prince of Wales's Road, 11.15, Debate; 7.15, Mr. S. Soldy, "The Testimony of the Rocks." Jan. 17, 7.30, Discussion.

Edmonton—7, S. Standring, "The Fight for Freethought, from Luther to Bradlaugh."

Old Southgate—3.30, Annual Conference (important); 5, Tea in Hall, 6d. each; 7, Public Meeting, Mr. J. M. Robertson and other speakers.

Wood Green—11, Mr. S. Standring, "Our Past Year's Work in North Middlesex."

East London—Swaby Coffee House, 103 Mile End Road, E., 7.45, Mr. E. T Garner, "The Dying Creed." Free.

West Ham—131 Broadway, Plaistow, 11.30, Mr. Watts, a Lecture; 7, Mrs. Thornton Smith, "Creation Stories."

COUNTRY.

Liverpool—Camden Hall, Camden Street, 11, Mr. J. W. Mahoney, "Are Preachers Failures?"; 3, "What is Man, and can he Survive Physical Death?"; 7, "Will Suicide become General?"

Cardiff—Small Hall, Queen Street Arcade, 6.30, Mr. Parr, "Land Nationalisation."

Huddersfield—Littlewood Bridges, Upperhead Row, 3 and 6.30, Dramatic Recitals.

Heckmondwike—Mr. John Rothera's, Bottoms, 2.30, a Reading.

Nottingham—Secular Hall, Beck Street, 11, Mr. H. Bland, "The Philosophic Revolt against Individualism; 7 "Where the Old Radicalism Failed."

Glasgow—Ramsbottom Hall, 122 Ingram Street, 6.30, J. S. Maxwell, "Ethics of Co-operation."

PROFANE JOKES.

Minister: "I'm glad, Bertie, to see that you kept your promise to me and came to church to-day instead of going fishing." Bertie: "Yes, sir." Minister: "Don't you feel better than if you had gone to the creek?" Bertie: "Yes, sir; 'cos pa said if I follered him to-day he'd lick me."

"John," said the minister to the sexton, "that pulpit cushion is worn out. I wish you would see that a new cover is put on it." "Yes, sir," said John, grimly; "I know it's worn out, an' its the third in six months. It ain't my place to make remarks, sir; but in my opinion there's such a thing as carrying religion a leetle too far."

PROGRESSIVE PUBLISHING CO.'S LIST.

All orders to be sent, with remittance, to R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C. Rate of postage—Orders under 3d., one halfpenny; orders under 6d. one penny. Orders over 6d. post free.

G. W. FOOTE.

	s.	d.
PRISONER FOR BLASPHEMY. Cloth ... ... A Full History of his Three Trials and Twelve Months' Imprisonment. Copies in paper covers, soiled, 6d.	2	6
IS SOCIALISM SOUND? ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant.	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
CHRISTIANITY AND SECULARISM ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. In paper covers.	1	0
Superior edition in cloth		6
INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS ... ... Second edition, enlarged.	0	8
Superior edition, in cloth	1	3
DARWIN ON GOD	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0

CONTENTS:—Darwin's Grandfather—Darwin's Father—Darwin's Early Piety—Almost a Clergyman—On Board the "Beagle"—Settling at Down—Death and Burial—Purpose of Pamphlet—Some Objections—Darwin Abandons Christianity—Deism—Creation—Origin of Life—Origin of Man—Animism—A Personal God—Design—Divine Beneficence—Religion and Morality—Agnosticism and Atheism.

DEFENCE OF FREE SPEECH ... ... Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes.	0	4
LETTERS TO JESUS CHRIST	0	4
PHILOSOPHY OF SECULARISM	0	3
THE BIBLE GOD	0	2
THE FOLLY OF PRAYER	0	2
CHRISTIANITY AND PROGRESS ... ... A Reply to Mr. Gladstone.	0	2
WHAT WAS CHRIST? ... ... A Reply to J. S. Mill.	0	2
THE DYING ATHEIST. A Story	0	1
WAS JESUS INSANE? ... ... A searching inquiry into the mental condition of the Prophet of Nazareth.	0	1
THE SHADOW OF THE SWORD ... ... A moral and statistical Essay on War.	0	2
ROYAL PAUPERS ... ... Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty.
BIBLE HEROES—First Series, in elegant wrapper ... (1) Mr. Adam, (2) Captain Noah, (3) Father Abraham, (4) Juggling Jacob, (5) Master Joseph, (6) Joseph's Brethren, (7) Holy Moses I., (8) Holy Moses II., (9) Parson Aaron, (10) General Joshua, (11) Jephthah and Co., (12) Professor Samson. One Penny each singly.	1
BIBLE HEROES—Second Series. (13) Prophet Samuel, (14) King Saul, (15) Saint David I., (16) Saint David II., (17) Sultan Solomon, (18) Poor Job, (19) Hairy Elijah (20) Bald Elisha, (21) General Jehu, (22) Doctor Daniel, (23) The Prophets (Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Hosea).
MRS. BESANT'S THEOSOPHY ... ... A Candid Criticism.	0	2
THEOSOPHY AND SECULARISM ... ... A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant.	0	2
THE NEW CAGLIOSTRO ... ... An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky.	0	2

COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

MISTAKES OF MOSES	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth ... ... Only Complete Edition published in England	1	6
DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT ... ... Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy.	0	6
REPLY TO GLADSTONE ... ... With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler.	0	4
ROME OR REASON? Reply to Cardinal Manning	0	4
FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Rev. Dr. Field ...	0	2
GOD AND MAN. Second Reply to Dr. Field	0	2
THE DYING CREED	0	2
THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH	0	2
THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION ... ... A Discussion with Hon. F. D. Courdert and Gov. S. L. Woodford.	0	2
ART AND MORALITY	0	2
DO I BLASPHEME?	0	2
THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE	0	2
THE GREAT MISTAKE	0	1
LIVE TOPICS	0	1
MYTH AND MIRACLE	0	1
REAL BLASPHEMY	0	1
SOCIAL SALVATION	0	2

G. W. FOOTE and J. M. WHEELER.

CRIMES OF CHRISTIANITY. Vol. I. Cloth ... Hundred of exact References to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.	2	6
THE JEWISH LIFE OF CHRIST ... ... With voluminous footnotes. An extraordinary work.	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0

G. W. FOOTE and W. P. BALL.

BIBLE HANDBOOK FOR FREETHINKERS AND INQUIRING CHRISTIANS	1	4
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
Sold also in separate parts as follows—
1. Bible Contradictions ... ... The Contradictions are printed in parallel columns.	0
2. Bible Absurdities ... ... All the chief Absurdities from Genesis to Revelation, conveniently and strikingly arranged, with appropriate headlines, giving the point of each absurdity in a sentence.	0	4
3. Bible Atrocities ... ... Containing all the godly wickedness from Genesis to Revelation. Each infamy has a separate headline for easy reference.	0	4
4. Bible Immoralities, Indecencies, Obscenities, Broken Promises, and Unfulfilled Prophecies ...	0	4

J. M. WHEELER.

LETTERS FROM HEAVEN	0	1
LETTERS FROM HELL	0	1

DR. E. B. AVELING.

DARWIN MADE EASY. 44pp., cloth ... ... Best Popular Exposition of Darwinism extant.	1	0

GIORDANO BRUNO.

Picture of the Statue of Rome	0	2
Post free in Lett's case	0	3

Digitized by Google

THE IMPOSSIBLE CREED

An Open Letter to the

BISHOP OF PETERBOROUGH.

BY

G. W. FOOTE.

Price Twopence. Price Twopence.

NOW READY.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE

AN AGNOSTIC'S VIEW.

By COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

Reprinted Verbatim from the "North American Review."

Price Twopence. Price Twopence.

Every Freethinker, Radical or Socialist should read it and circulate it amongst his friends.

NOW READY

BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY OF FREETHINKERS

OF

ALL AGES AND NATIONS.

BY J. M. WHEELER.

Handsomely Bound in Cloth. Price Seven Shillings and Sixpence.

Should be in every Freethinker's Library.

THE

CHRISTMAS NUMBER

OF THE

"FREETHINKER."

Price 3d., post free 4d. IN HANDSOME WRAPPER. Price 3d., post free 4d.

W. J. Rendell's

"WIFE'S FRIEND."

Recommended in "Law of Population," and "Wife's Hand Book." Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell Street Clerkenwell, and supplied per post, 2s. dozen. For particulars of this Malthusian discovery send stamped envelope. Higginson's Syringe, with vertical and reverse current, 3s. 6d. and 4. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. All other Malthusian Appliances. All prices post free.

LIMITED FAMILIES.—Allbutt, posted, 6½d.; Besant, 7d.; Owen, 7d. Malthus, 1s. 1d. Lists (Literature and Appliances), 1d. VOLUNTARY TAXATION. Fisher, 32pp., 1½d. Old Testament, 1d. Darwin's Hypocrisy, Dawson, 4½d.—Fisher, Progressive Publisher, Koburg, Leeds.

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each, upper or lower set, £1. Best quality, 4s. each, upper or lower, £2, completed in four hours when required, repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18c. gold 15s.; stopping, 2s. 6d.; extraction, 1s. painless by gas, 5s. ... ...

GRATIS.

AN ILLUSTRATED 16-PAGE PAMPHLET, containing extracts from the utterances of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Manchester; the Revs. T. R. Malthus, A. E. Whatham, M. J. Savage, Leonard Dawson, — Lawton, H. R. Haweis; the following Doctors:—Allbutt, Allinson, Armstrong, Drysdale, Pye Chavasse, E. B. Foote, Nicholls, Wilder, Raciborski, Napheys and Reamy. Also Plato, Aristotle, Sismondi, Huxley, Mill, and numerous others. Should be read by every married and marriageable person. Sent on receipt of stamped addressed envelope by J. R. HOLMES, Hanney, Wantage, Berks.

TESTIMONIALS (Extracts from).

"The one you sent me some months since is

Quite Worn Out

with being lent to so many friends."

"Some of us have paid five shillings for less than one-tenth of the information."

TO MARRIED PEOPLE

Or Those Contemplating Marriage.

Send 1d Stamp to

DAVIES, CHEMIST, 101 PARK LANE, LEEDS,

And you'll receive an Illustrated List of most useful Malthusian Appliances by return of post.

NORTH MIDDLESEX SECULAR FEDERATION, Cromwell Hall, Old Southgate.—Jan. 12, 3.30, Annual Conference and Tea. John M. Robertson, Esq., will preside. 7, Public Meeting.—Sam. Standring, Sec.

HARTNOLL,

ENGLISH AND FOREIGN CHEMIST,

1A PICCADILLY

(Under the London Pavilion Music Hall),

LONDON, W.

Hartnoll's Specialities, Appliances and Medicated Preparations are world-renowned.

Spiral, Douche and Latest Improved Syringes.

ESTABLISHED OVER 50 YEARS.

CAMBERWELL BRANCH N. S. S., 61 New Church Road, S.E.—Three Rooms to Let, at a low rental. Apply to Hall-keeper.

IRETON'S

INDELIBLE JET BLACK MARKING INK

(NO HEATING REQUIRED)

For Rubber Stamps, Stencil, Type or Pen.

PRICE 6d. 1/- and 2/6 per Bottle.

Sample bottle 4d. post free.

Dyed with Ireton's Ink, no hope of ever changing my Color.

IRETON & Co., 92, Gracechurch St., LONDON, E.C.

The largest makers of Rubber Stamps.

Special terms to the Trade.

Printed and Published by G. W. Foote, at 28 Stonecutter Street Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

Vol. X.—No. 3.] SUNDAY, JANUARY 19, 1890. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

MR. FOOTE is unable to write his Freethinker article this week. The influenza had been grappling with him for some days, and on Tuesday it overcame him. He hopes to be well enough to travel on Saturday, as it is very important that he should be in Liverpool on Sunday.

EPIDEMICS.

THEOLOGIANS have given many most excellent reasons for the existence of diseases, plagues, and epidemics of all kinds. I must confess there is, just now, one little circumstance which may hinder my appreciation of their arguments. I am suffering from the so-called Russian influenza, after nursing my wife with the same disease. Eyes sore with watery flux may not be able to discern the beauty of the divine arrangement which makes disease contagious instead of health. Limbs racked with aches are apt to hinder the impartial study of a theological problem. But, freely using the pocket-handkerchief and clapping a warm poultice on my wheezing chest, let us look at the matter of epidemics as dispassionately as possible.

The old view that diseases and plagues were the work of evil spirits was a very natural one in superstitious times. Evident evils, dreaded and avoided by all, were logically ascribed to evil beings. But since theologians have felt the difficulty of there being two or more warring and independent beings, the doctrine of diseases being the work of evil spirits, though endorsed by Jesus Christ, has been given up. Satan is superannuated. Even those who keep a devil put him to no use.

Theologians now seek to evade the difficulty by representing evil as not really evil, but a special form of good, inasmuch as its issues are good. But is this so? Notoriously it is not. My present pain is just as real, while it lasts, even if I am better afterwards instead of being permanently injured. Is it the method of omnibenevolence to do evil that good may come? Is omnipotence under the necessity of acting thus? Such arguments sound strange from those who tell us of a land, reserved for them and their like, where there is no evil.

Then we are told of the moral and spiritual blessings of disease. It abates vain pride, shows how dependant we are, affords an opportunity for repentance, etc. In short, disease is often an excellent auxillary to the priest. The moral benefit of ill-health is very dubious. The recognised historic effects of plagues have been a lowering of morals and a heightening of superstition. We do not go so far as the epigrammist who said a sick man is always a scoundrel, but there is no doubt ill-health generates selfishness and irritation, which fly away when normal health returns.

The Theist who adopts evolution now draws an argument for the divine use of disease from the survival of the fittest. But the fittest does not mean the best. It may be better for society that a feeble Blaise Pascal should live rather than one endowed with the strength of Milo of Crotona. But in the case of the present epidemic, we are told the danger is with the strong and spirited, who instead of taking to their bed and warm drinks, say, "Oh, we will fight it out." They stand a graver chance of being called to a sudden halt with inflammation of the lungs, than the more feeble spirited. Altogether the theistic arguments upon epidemics do not seem quite satisfactory.

Paley, who always made the best case possible for any cause he took in hand, seems to anticipate the modern germ view of disease. He says in his Natural Theology, (Chap. xxvi.) "What we call blights, are oftentimes, legions of animated beings, claiming their portions in the bounty of nature. What corrupts the produce of the earth to us, prepares it for them. And it is by means of their rapid multiplication, that they take possession of their pasture: a slow propagation would not meet the opportunity." So man, the boasted crown of creation, must perish, that myriads of microbes may claim "their portions in the bounty of nature," and take possession of their pasture. This is an admission that there is not room enough for all, but the theologian can still argue that disease is designed for the greatest happiness of the greatest number. If the Buddhist permits himself to be infested with vermin, since they are indeed, but more or less distant relations, should not the genuine believer in Providence have faith that not a single disease germ finds its way to the throat unobserved by our Heavenly Father? According to some authorities, the microbes which propagate the prevalent disorder are ever present in man, only waiting their chance to have a high old time and breed at our expense. Now without troubling ourselves with any subtleties as to whether man was designed for the microbes, or the microbes designed for man, it is evidently flying in the face of Providence to resort to drugs or any other form of interference with his handiwork. Those whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and our light affliction may work for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory!

As I said at the outset, I am too shaky to give these fine arguments the treatment they richly merit. I can only say that in sickness and suffering I find no benefit from the contemplation of nature, where I find every form of butchery perpetrated with the utmost callousness. In human care, human science, and human sympathy, there alone is hope, and one grain of these is worth a ton of theology.

J. M. WHEELER.

The Northampton Reporter heads its account of a lecture by one of the clerical secretaries of the Christian Evidence Society, "A Clergyman Condemns Persecution." Viewed historically this is no doubt important, but the fact that the clergy dare not now advocate persecution in no way erases the fact that their Church employed it just as long as it dared.

Digitized by Google

THREATENED ATTACK ON FREETHOUGHT IN LIVERPOOL.

DURING the last session of Parliament an Act was passed for the borough of Liverpool ostensibly for the purpose of controlling, in the interests of public order, places used for music, singing, or dancing, and being open to the public, whether on licensed or unlicensed premises, and whether a charge was made for admission or not. Under the provisions of this Act the city magistrates sat for several days last week to hear applications for licenses, and with reference to an application for a license for the Gaiety Theatre and Music Hall, made by Mr. Quilliam on behalf of Mr. De Freece, the following is reported by the local press to have taken place:—Mr. Matheson asked "if literature of a very objectionable character was not distributed there? Mr. Quilliam: Not from our place. It is from a place underneath the hall. The people are not our tenants. A magistrate: What society uses the place? Mr. Quilliam: It is an Atheistical society. The place was formerly a temperance hall, and I have spoken in it many a time. It has fallen, perhaps, upon evil days. The literature Mr. Matheson has spoken about is circulated there, and we would stop it if we could because it is injurious to our place."

With reference to the above, it may be well to explain that Camden Hall, where the local Branch meets, is under the same roof as the Gaiety Theatre, but has a separate entrance, and there is no interior communication, the building being owned by the Liverpool Co-operative Society. The theatre is open on week-days and Camden Hall on Sundays. Mr. De Freece is of Hebrew extraction, and Mr. Quilliam president of the local Mohammedan Society—a small body, fortunately. Mr. De Freece's objection to the Secular Society dates from the time when they discontinued hiring his theatre for Mr. Bradlaugh's lectures. On January 16, 1885, £15, with £2 additional charges, were paid for the theatre for Mr. Bradlaugh's Sunday lectures, and a smaller rent was charged when Mrs. Besant lectured there. The offer of further reductions has not induced the Branch to engage the theatre of late. Mr. Matheson, who gave his opinion on hearsay on a matter not before him, takes a leading part in religious movements. Act two of this drama opened on Sunday morning, when the small audience assembled to hear Mr. J. W. Mahony's lecture were surprised by the appearance of a sergeant and two constables in the hall, and the information that several others were in the neighborhood, both in uniform and plain clothes. None were seen during the afternoon, but during both morning and evening lectures policemen entered and left, and were succeeded by others.

These proceedings upset the equilibrum, for a time, of some of our members, but the lectures were duly delivered. I took the chair, morning and afternoon, and for a short time took money; Mr. Newcomb took the chair in the evening. Mr. Mahony's lectures were really excellent and fluently delivered. It is due to Mr. Wise of the C. E. S., who opposed morning and evening, to say that he emphatically denounced the course taken by the authorities. What these proceedings may portend I know not, but I appeal for moral and financial support from those who should help the Branch in what promises to be a crisis.

CHAS. DOEG,

9 Cromwell Terrace, Liverpool, N. Sec. Liverpool Branch, N.S.S.

AT THE GATE OF HEAVEN.

St. Peter: Who comes here?—An editor from Chicago.

How long did you work at your business?—About eleven-and-a-half years.

Did you think you were the best man in your line?—No.

Never lied about your circulation?—No.

Did you ever act the hypocrite?—No.

Never told an advertiser that he was doing more business than his neighbor?—No.

Was fully satisfied the world would revolve if you should decide to die?—Yes.

Did you ever try to "scoop" anybody?—No.

Never circulated false reports about your contemporary's circulation?—No; I nev———.

Here, take my keys; you are a rare specimen of your race. Make yourself at home.

THE LATE DR. DOLLINGER.

HAD Dr. Döllinger united to his great learning and thorough conscientiousness an untrammelled mind and a bold spirit of inquiry he would have been one of the first religious reformers of the century. As it is, his influence will, we believe, decline, and be represented rather in his books than in the Old Catholic Church, which, if it is to progress at all, will have to go much further in the course of reform than was contemplated by its founder. Dr. Döllinger was in truth a university professor rather than a leader of men. Even when he discovered that his opposition to the dogma of Papal infallibility, promulgated at the Vatican Council on April 24, 1870, led to his own excommunication, he was loth to set up a new organisation, and, although events compelled this, he always insisted that he and his followers held fast to the true Catholic faith and practice. He never saw the true issue of the question Rome v Reason, and his learned mind was largely stored with the lumber of the past. None the less he did bravely in making and adhering to his protest against Papal usurpations, and his reply to recent attempts to induce him to recant, "I will not sully my old age with a lie," entitles him to the respect which must ever be accorded to honest convictions.

HOLY MEN OF GOD.

A correspondent sends us some statistics relative to crime and lunacy in professors of religion. He says that during the latter half of the past year, from notes made by him in his casual reading of newspapers, and without any special search, he discovered that thirty-seven ministers of religion have been dealt with by the law for various crimes. Classified, the delinquencies were as follows: 8 for robbery, 8 for sexual crimes, 6 elopements, 4 drunks, 3 assaults, 3 murders, 1 burglary and attempted murder, 1 cruelty, 1 bigamy, 1 threat to murder and adultery, 1 elopement and attempted murder. Of these 18 were foreign and the remainder British cases. Twenty pious lunatics were either dealt with in police courts or placed themselves out of reach of restraint by suicide. Of the latter 3 were clergymen. Our correspondent points out that these cases only represent those which have come under his notice in an indiscriminate way, and not as showing a complete picture of the relation of piety to crime and madness.

"THE ANGELIC DOCTOR."

Such is the title accorded to Thomas Aquinas by the Catholic Church. We give here a brief specimen of his doctrines as quoted in the recent controversy, Is Killing Heretics Murder? "Heretics may not only be excommunicated, but justly killed: such the Church consigns to the secular arm to be exterminated from the world by death," are the words of Aquinas (Summa, 3 vol., page 48, and vol. iv. page 91). "Though the heretics who repent, must always be accepted to penance, as often as they have fallen; they must not in consequence of that, always be permitted to enjoy the benefits of this life . . . when they fall again they are permitted to repent . . . but the sentence of death must not be removed" The Church boasts itself ever the same, but deems it prudent to cover up a little these utterances of its greatest theologian.

BRAIN FOOD.

A Stanhope quarryman received a pastoral visit the other evening, just as he came home, tired and hungry, from work. He was, to use a Weardale phrase, "warsh"—did not know what to eat; he wanted something relishable and tasty to whet his appetite, so he had a two-eyed steak in the shape of a bloater, or, in pure Saxon, a red herring. The pastor's wife put in an appearance just as he was having his savory dish. She scented the oderiferous aroma of the two-eyed steak, and snuffing up her nose said, "So you are having a herring for supper." "Yes," said the blue diamond smasher, "I'm having a tasty bite." "Well," said she, "a herring's very nice for a working man," "Yes," said he waggishly, "bloaters are very strengthening." "Well, they are very tasty," remarked the visitor. "Yes," said the wag, "they're just the thing for quarrymen, very nutritious." Said she, "They contain phosphorus, and that is brain-forming matter." "That's why we quarrymen eat them to become intelligent." "I don't often see you at our place of worship." "No," said the wag, "I don't think you will either." "Why?" inquired his fair interrogator. "Because your husband doesn't eat herring." She saw the point, and at once made tracks for home.—Consett Guardian.

Digitized by Google

THE PRESBYTERIAN DILEMMA.

By Hugh O. Pentecost,

Delivered at New York, Sunday, December 15, 1889.

When I lived out West I used to see what was called the chain gang. It was a number of male human beings working at street cleaning, each of whom had a large iron ball attached to one of his ankles by about six feet of heavy chain. These persons were taken from the gaol every morning. They were prisoners for minor offences, such as drunkenness or small disturbances of the peace. The balls and chains were attached to them to prevent them from running away. They could move about and do their work, but, of course, the balls and chains were a heavy drag upon them.

The chain gang is a fine illustration of things as they are. The men represent the human race. The balls and the chains represent the Church and the State. The human race would move forward in thought and accomplishment. But upon one ankle is the ball and chain of superstition, and upon the other is the ball and chain of repressive government by force. The human race is moving forward. But it cannot move very rapidly because the priest pulls it backward by one leg and the politician pulls it backward by the other. It is an unequal contest, because the human mind is so restless, so disposed to ask questions and so determined to have answers to those questions—the force of evolution is so strong—that nothing can prevent it, not even the ghostly terrors of the hereafter, nor the clubs, handcuffs, prison cells and gallowses of this material world. The priest and the politician are doomed. The day is coming when there will be no Church with its supernatural terrors and no State with its gunpowder and gibbets. The mind will some day be free to think unfrightened by blackrobed sycophants of wealth and power. The body will some day be free to move about untouched by uniformed ruffians.

One indication of the dawning of that better day, in which even the menial priest and the self-loathing politician will rejoice when it comes, is the ferment that is now going on in the Presbyterian church. That church is the last stronghold of the most monstrous and revolting system of supernaturalism that ever cast its poisonous shadow upon an unfortunate world. I have studied, somewhat closely, the birth, growth and development of religions from the earliest days of human history until now. I have familiarized myself, somewhat fully, with the religious beliefs of the people whom we call savages and of those who represent whatever of civilization the world has yet known, and it is my deliberate opinion that the Westminster confession of faith embodies the most horrible theories of the character of God and the destiny of man ever devised or even remotely dreamed of in the human brain. The science of devilolatry and the philosophy of the infernal regions reached its climax in the Westminster catechism. If you do not own a copy of that document I advise you to buy one at once before it is suppressed as something of which the world is ashamed. And when you have bought it find one of the most repulsive idols that heathenism ever produced, place them side by side and observe how handsome the idol is by contrast.

But Presbyterians are becoming ashamed of Presbyterianism. Young candidates for the ministry are beginning to avoid the Presbyterian Church as an intellectual smallpox hospital. And many of the older clergy, who ceased to believe in Calvinism long ago, but were too dishonest, too cowardly to say so, are now coming together, timidly, and cautiously suggesting that perhaps the Presbyterian God is just a little disagreeable, and that, possibly, the Presbyterian hell is not the best place that might be thought of in which to place the tender infants whom a God, whose mouth foams with wrath, snatches from their devoted mothers' breasts.

It does not appear that these concessions are making because the ministerial mind is shrinking from the logic of Calvinism. That is no doubt true in many cases. But as long as Calvinism could be profitably worked nothing was said about modifying the creed. But it is now being observed that the number of students in theological seminaries is falling off, and that there is a disposition among the people to leave Presbyterian churches for others less logical but more amiable. And as there is nothing that the average minister dislikes so much as to play a losing game, to be on the unpopular side of any question, there comes about this timid effort to get a new photograph of God and to slow down the fires of hell. Every other Church has yielded to the popular clamor, and now quite a large and growing number of the Presbyterian clergy are coming to see that their Church will have to fall into the line of surrender, or be left a wreck upon the beach of conservatism.

The delay of Presbyterianism in submitting to the inevitable has no doubt arisen from the more or less conscious recognition by her ministers that, unlike other Churches, Presbyterianism has a perfectly logical creed which cannot be tinkered with. The Westminster Confession of Faith begins with a premise, and goes fearlessly on to a conclusion that logically grows out of that premise. Each part of the creed dovetails into every other part, and you cannot alter it in any part without ultimately destroying the whole. The Presbyterians cannot revise their creed. They must either write a new one, beginning with other premises, or they must keep the one they have. And this constitutes their dilemma. They must change their creed, or enlightened public will pass them by and leave them, as an organization, to crumble into the dust of death. But if they begin to alter their creed there is no logical stopping place for them but in the abandonment of the idea of a personal God with a purposive will.

Very few see it, but there is, in fact, no logical stopping place between Calvinism and Agnosticism. If you believe in a personal God, you must, logically, become a Calvinist. If you are not a Calvinist you must, logically, become an Agnostic. The only reason why all persons, in the present religious situation, are not either Calvinists or Agnostics is simply because all persons are not logical. Calvinists and Agnostics are the only persons who can answer all your questions upon the subject of religion? If you ask an Agnostic any questions about God or the supernatural he will tell you that he knows nothing about either. That answer is perfectly truthful, and it puts an end to the subject. If you ask a Calvinist a question about religion he will tell you that you must assume the existence of a personal God. Why? There is no reason. You must just assume it. Having assumed the existence of a personal God all else is easy. If you are one of his elect to heaven you go, no matter how wicked you are. If you are one of the non-elect to hell you go, no matter how good you are.

All other Christians except Calvinists hem and haw and evade you, because their sentiments destroy their logic. But a Calvinist has a perfect system.

I am an admirer of the Westminster confession as a system of thought. It is horrible, but it is honest. It is cruel, but it is brave. It cannot stand the light of to-day, but it is consistent. And when the Church gives up Calvinism she confesses herself beaten in the battle of opinions, because with Calvinism goes the Bible as an authority, and with the Bible goes the Church, and with the Church goes the ball and chain that now drags upon the human mind. When the Presbyterian Church takes one brick out of the structure of Calvinism the beginning of the end has come.

Let us see, now, what Calvinism is.

The basis of Calvinism is the idea of a personal God. Given that idea and it follows, of necessity, that he must exist for himself alone—for his own glory. There can be nothing outside of God. He can have no objects outside of himself. Having assumed the existence of a personal God all goes merrily or horribly on. He creates the world out of nothing. It is absurd and impossible, of course, but it goes. God can do anything and, therefore, he can do impossibilities. He creates man for the purpose of having him sin. He creates hell in which to punish man, in soul and body, throughout eternity for doing what he, God, meant that he should do, and therefore, which he, man, could not help doing. He creates himself in the person of Jesus Christ, who is entirely God, himself, and is yet somebody else at the same time, for the purpose of receiving upon his devoted head all the phials of divine anger against sin which he, God, brought into the world, and thus become the savior of enough persons, previously foreordained to be saved, to make manifest his glory. But as his glory shines more brightly in the light of the flames of hell than anywhere else the redeemed are to have the exquisite joy of looking over the railings of heaven at the ceaseless agonies of their own parents and children, who were created for the purpose of being damned.

There is a lot more to it in detail to which I need not refer. You know the whole story of foreknowledge and foreordination; of election and non-election; of the shameful hell and the far more shameful heaven—a heaven in which no decent person could possibly consent to live. You know the story of Calvinism, based squarely as it is upon the Bible, and some of you will agree with me that the never ending wonder is that the Christian world was not turned into a madhouse by it. How could people who believe it ever dare to have children; How could anyone ever smile when he knew there was no means of knowing but what he and his friends were foreordained by this unspeakable God to spend all eternity in the unphraseable horrors of hell, or in the base meanness of heaven? The only reasonable answer to these questions is that nobody ever could have believed the horrible doctrines except those who did go crazy, or succeeded in mentally dehumanising themselves, as did John Calvin and Jonathan Edwards.

Digitized by Google

(To be concluded.)

MR. SYMES ON MRS. BESANT'S CONVERSION.

I HAVE said (in my first note on this pamphlet of Mrs. Besant's) that that lady had brought a scandal upon our movement. The scandal consists in two things. 1st. It is a sort of breach of discipline. 2nd. It is a gross insult to tell our people that Theosophy or Pantheism is part and parcel of Secularism.

As to the first. I admit at once that we have no rigid discipline. But Secularism is an organised movement; whoever enters it as a worker and undertakes to battle in company with others for right and liberty must, in the nature of the case, be expected to give up some measure of his individual right and liberty. Without this no organisation can exist. No person in a voluntary united movement can have all his own way. If everyone claims the right, and practically exercises it, to push or preach his own private fads, anarchy at once ensues, the organisation is dissolved.

I have met with many people who claim to be Freethinkers; but they believe in Spiritualism, in Theism, in popery, in monarchy, etc. Now let us suppose lecturers and leaders of each of those types meeting to spread Freethought, uniting in a crusade against priests, parsons, and all pretended revelation, divine government, etc. Could anything be more absurd? They may be all good men, earnest, sincere, able. But they cannot unite except upon neutral matters. This needs no illustration for it is patent to all.

And if people unite and agree at first, and afterwards develop different beliefs, the dissolution of the union must follow. Let Mr. Bradlaugh accept and preach, as part of Secularism, the immortality of the soul; let Mr. Foote adopt and teach the doctrine of Purgatory and the efficacy of prayers and masses for the dead; let Mrs. Besant do as she is doing; let me adopt Spiritualism and pit it against Theosophy—Is it possible for us henceforth to work together for what we have all along considered to be Secularism? Let Mrs. Besant answer..

Not by any vows we have taken or promises or pledges given are we bound to be true to Secularism; but by the position we have taken up and held so long, a position in which we have been trusted and honored for so many years—and no one more than Mrs. Besant—we are bound by the most sacred obligations to be true to our people and our movement,

If Mrs. Besant has lost faith in Secularism, her course is clear, to leave it openly. To still cling to it and retain her position in it, after adopting a superstition as gross as can be found, and which, on the face of it, is plainly not Secularism, is a scandal.

Far be it from me to limit the range of freedom of thought. I know no subject that ought to be forbidden to a Freethinker or a Secularist! I am not aware that any subject exists, any creed, philosophy or doctrine that a Freethinker ought not to follow if his convictions bid him do so. That is the only course open to him. But I do not see how a Freethinker can be bound to swallow contradictory systems or doctrines. Secularism repudiates miracles; Mrs. Besant adopts them. It is idle to say it is not a miracle to send letters by disembodied brothers, to project your soul from the body and travel with the speed of thought to the most distant lands, often transporting material things with you. To believe this is not Secularism, unless some remarkably good evidence be forthcoming to support it. Mrs. Besant gives no evidence yet that might not support the resurrection or the miraculous birth of Jesus. And henceforth she can no more denounce miracles, whether those of Jerusalem, Rome or Knock, while holding to the gospel by Blavatsky.

I maintain then that Mrs. Besant, by accepting Theosophy, reverses the whole of her life for the last fourteen or fifteen years. She may be right or wrong in doing this. All I say is that it is a scandal to Secularism to say that her new departure is no departure, to pretend that she still acts as a consistent Secularist, while professing her faith in miracles.

I cannot believe that she herself would admit that I was doing justice to myself or Secularism if I re-embraced Wesleyanism, and preached the old evangelical doctrines from our platform, as a genuine part of Secularism, legitimately and logically within the purview of Freethought.

To accept a god, though he be pantheistic, and miracles, though we are assured they are not superhuman, are not the acts of an unbeliever, a Freethinker, a Secularist, however deeply Mrs. Besant may be convinced of their truth. It is plain to everyone else that when she became a Theosophist she became a believer. And really, it would have grieved me less to see her joining the Roman Catholic communion than to see her bow her intellect to the transparent imposture of Mrs. Blavatsky.

I have written strongly. I hope Mrs. Besant won't rush away to the conclusion that I feel any personal enmity towards her. I am sure I do not. But I am profoundly grieved to think that so able and earnest an advocate of Secularism, and so fearless a defender, should have turned her back upon it and gone over to the enemy. She must pardon me if I can see it in no other light. I am absolutely sure that Pantheism and Theosophy are no part of Secularism, and never will be until recommended by better evidence than has ever yet been offered for either.

One painful fact is apparent in reading Mrs. Besant's pamphlet, and that is, that not her intellect has led her into theosophy, but its negation. Mrs. Besant is one of the most intellectual persons of the day; and yet her reasons for adopt- Theosophy are just on a par with those persons immeasurably her inferiors have given for removing from Freethought to Christianity. Many years ago I read the recantation of John Henry Gordon, who left the Secularists and became "pastor" Gordon, Baptist. Well, and I say it with pain, Mrs. Besant's pamphlet, though far better written, is equally flimsy, inconsequential and disappointing with that! It is simply provoking to find an intellectual person so absolutely wrong-headed. She has published her pamphlet to show her reasons for adopting theosophy; the reasons have been omitted, and paltry excuses take their place—that is, she has evidently adopted theosophy first and then looked about for something to excuse her conduct. And no more flimsy excuses were ever yet offered for a change of front.—Liberator.

"COME OFF THE FENCE."

LEND us a hand! We are weary of striving;
Straining each nerve to win popular sense;
Why do you, when we need your assistance,
Placidly neutral, still sit on the fence.

Inwardly sure of the right of our pleading,
Secretly hoping success to our fight,
Step from your outlook, your neutral position,
Bravely and openly join us outright.

Deep in your hearts you approve of our wishes,
'Tis but a question of time, as you know.
Openly come to us, say you are with us,
Now is the time to encourage us so.

Are we not pleading for right and for justice?
Dare not deny it; it is no pretence,
Come with your influence, eloquence, wisdom,
Come down and help us! "Come down off the fence!"

THE Rev. Mr. Roach, editor of the Windsor Weekly Waterspout, went fishing a few Sundays ago and broke his leg. The Rev. Mr. Dace heard of the accident, and in his Sunday evening sermon said: "Here we have a striking example of the retribution following the violation of the Sabbath. If Mr. Roach had been at church he would not have broken his leg." The following Sunday, as the Rev. Mr. Dace was ascending the steps of the pulpit, he trod on a piece of orange peel (dropped by a child of the Sunday-school), slipped, fell, and broke his leg. The next issue of the Waterspout contained the following: "Here we have a striking instance of the retribution that waits on self-appointed censorship. If the Rev. Mr. Dace had been fishing he would not have broken his leg."

Digitized by Google

ACID DROPS.

We congratulate the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. It has made a discovery, like the blind man who found the haystack with his stick. In one of its tracts, "Earnest Words to Working Men," it chirrups as follows:—"It is said that some heathen think that their women have no souls, but it seems in Christian England as if it were rather the men who doubt their own immortality; for whilst many of them think it right that their wives and children should attend to the outward ordinances of religion and go to church or chapel, how do they themselves spend the Lord's Day? How few of them are ever seen in the house of God!" Amen.

That mysterious individual Providence seems very remiss in looking after God's own houses. Compared to churches and chapels, public-houses and gambling clubs have a perfect immunity from fires and lightning. No doubt the steeples of churches are tempting to electricity, but lightning, controlled by omnipotence, ought to be able to strike a coal mine as readily as a church spire. Fires, too, may be occasionally looked for in stove-heated buildings, but it should be a little thing for God Almighty to show the sacredness of his edifices my making them as incombustible as heaven itself.

Last Sunday morning when the parishioners of Lewannich, six miles from Launceston, went to their church, they found it a mass of flames. The minister will have to preach from the text "Our God is a consuming fire."

Lives of Christ are as common as the influenza. The latest announcement is that Joaquin Miller, the American author of The Ship in the Desert, etc., has been for some time engaged on a versified account of the Judean gentleman, upon which he pins his hopes of fame. Here again it seems to be a case of Buddha before Christ, for it is whispered that Mr. Miller has been instigated by the success of Sir E. Arnold's Light of Asia.

A Hungarian shoemaker named Szaknay, living at Limehouse, was taken ill and went to see his minister at St. John's-wood. This did not improve him, and his landlady, seeing he was almost too ill to speak, asked him if she should call in a doctor. He got into a rage, and said he did not believe in doctors, but in anointing. Praying and oiling, however, did not effect a cure. Poor Szaknay died under the faith-healing treatment, and a coroner's inquest had to be held over his remains. If he leaves any friends to erect a tombstone upon his grave, they should not fail to record his devotion to St. James. Speaking ill of the dead is of course to be avoided, and his epitaph might be therefore, not "A Pious Fool," but "A True Christian."

"A new commandment I give unto you that ye love one another." Bosh! says Parson Wilson, of Rochdale, who, having quarrelled with the master of the Birtle National Schools, has locked up the premises and excluded the children.

"Suffer little children to come unto me," said Jesus in one of his amiable moods. Parson Wilson endorses this with a reservation. "Let them come," he says, "if I like the schoolmaster; if I don't, let them go to ——" well, a good many miles from Rochdale.

The Ensign, Y.M.C.A. Nottingham organ, states that the Melbourne Y.M.C.A. has secured the Secularists' "Hall of Science" as their headquarters at a cost of £30,500, and have made it a centre of Gospel effort. We do not know what truth there is in this, but we know that the Melbourne Secularists have a New Hall of Science, 456 Bourke Street, where Mr. Symes has large audiences.

All the sky-pilots in the neighborhood of Uxbridge have signed a memorial to the Petty Sessions complaining of the growing practice of Sunday trading as exhibited in a few cigar and sweetstuff shops, and calling on the magistrates to suppress it. Their motto evidently is "No competition. Our shop or none."

The New York Press of Dec. 31st, announces the death of an old lady while kneeling in prayer. Apoplexy has no regard for piety.

It was the London lounger out for his holiday, and, as he tucked himself into his little bed at the New Inn at Sideford, his eye fell on a beautifully luminated text, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." "Not while the money holds out," murmured the L.L., as he sank into slumber, and the landlord, who was listening at the keyhole, rushed downstairs and made his bill out "to be sent up with his shirts."

According to the Methodist Times—Hugh Price Hughes's paper—"There are two wings of the Liberal party—one agnostic, positivist, atheist, and somewhat apt to take lax views of social morality. This wing is preternaturally blatant in London, especially in journalistic circles. But in the provinces it is absolutely insignificant. The leaders, the organisers, and all the most valuable members of the rank and file of provincial Liberalism are hearty believers in Christian morality, are very often pronounced Christians, and as a rule evangelical Nonconformists."

We are glad to see Mr. Hughes recognising a fact, if only once in a way. The Freethinking side of London Radicalism can no longer be ignored. As to its being "preternaturally blatant," that is only Mr. Hughes's way of saying that it will not truckle to the Christians.

Mr. Hughes is very much mistaken, however, about provincial Radicalism. If he looks a little closer and deeper he will find Freethinkers on political committees here, there, and everywhere. In season and out of season they are hard workers for all kinds of progress. No doubt there is a greater leaven of Freethought in London, but it is far from absent in the provinces.

Mr. Hugh Price Hughes took the Pall Mall tip and devoted last Sunday afternoon to Mr. Gladstone's praise of confession. The reverend gentleman now finds that "Mr. Gladstone, although great, wise, and good, has not taken the trouble to inquire what are the real sentiments of a far larger section of the Christian Church than his own, and practically he is ignorant of the religious opinions of the great masses of the people." Poor G. O. M.! He had better go to St. James's Hall and get converted.

At the same meeting Mr. Hughes said that 500 people had been converted at St. James's Hall since the opening of the Mission. We wonder how many of them are as sound as the Atheist Shoemaker.

After praying to vacuity for every possible blessing during the "universal week of prayer" the Evangelicals wound up with a thanksgiving for the privilege of being permitted to lay our requests before God during this week of prayer. Our modern Pharisees are almost as humble as the man who continually thanked space for giving him elbow room.

God's method of settling the love affairs of animals was illustrated by the deadly battle between two fine bucks, who were recently found in a dry ditch in Bushey Park, dead, and firmly locked together in a most remarkable manner. The right horn of the uppermost animal was firmly fixed in the mouth of the lower; the left horn of the lower one was as firmly fixed in the mouth of the upper, while the other horns were tightly clasped together. The battle that ended so fatally had evidently been a long and stubborn one, both animals having sustained severe bodily wounds. They had evidently died in great agony, and the jaw of the undermost animal was broken to splinters.

Major Evered Poole is asking for subscriptions to send Mr. H. L. Hastings' lecture on the Inspiration of the Bible and other productions of the Anti-Infidel Library throughout the army. He hopes to circulate over 150,000 copies before the end of February. We wish some of our wealthy friends would give Tommy Atkins a chance of seeing the other side.

A trashy orthodox pamphlet, entitled Theosophy the New Religion, has been sent to us. It appears to emanate from a party who trades upon other people's names, and one of its most significant sentences is the following: "Surely the Rev. Z. B. Woffendale cannot know what Theosophy really is if he imagines that, in embracing the same, Mrs. Besant has taken a step in the right direction."

Digitized by Google

The agent of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners attempted a sale at Amlwch, Anglesey, of stock distrained upon at several farms for arrears of tithe. The attitude of the persons assembled became so threatening that the sale had to be adjourned.

Whatever is Mr. Yates thinking about to publish that silly story of Browning in the World? "One Sunday afternoon," runs the yarn, "about twelve years ago, he was crossing Hyde Park, walking homewards, and he stood a few minutes listening to the address of one of the pestilent atheistic lecturers in those parts. He waited till the fellow had finished, and then sprang on to the vacated chair, saying, 'now my friends, you have heard him; listen to me!' He held the attention of his strange audience for some ten minutes, the 'rapt oration flowing free' with such extraordinary effect that the 'populace' turned upon orator No. 1, and literally chased him from the neighbourhood of his exploits."

About twelve years ago! Very precise and a long way off! The World forgets to tell us how the story has slumbered all the while. It forgets, too, that it is a poor compliment to Robert Browning to say that he excited a mob to violence against a lecturer who invited discussion. Browning, it appears, like many other men, might have cried "save me from my friends."

Curiously enough, in the very preceding paragraph, the World describes George Meredith's as "the finest head and face" in the Westminster Abbey crowd at Browning's funeral. If the writer of the paragraph will read Mr. Meredith's poems—supposing him equal to the task—he will find the possessor of "the finest head and face" a pronounced Freethinker.

There is consternation in the ranks of the clergy, more general and more sincere even than that caused by the inroads of infidelity. There is a still further decline in the value of livings for 1890. Every £100 will have to be estimated as only £78 1s. 3¼d. Within the past six years there has been a fall of twenty per cent., and the parsons are all swearing that their business is going to the dogs.

All through Italy there are pictures in which the Deity is depicted throwing wreaths upon the heads of the Medici, Farnese, and other aristocratic families. Again, at Versailles, on a canvas representing one of Napoleon's victories, the Supreme Being is limned in the skies ordering the destruction of the enemy!

The Rev. J. McNeill says that "David was a splendid fellow—an all round man." Yes, especially when he lived as a thief. He requisitioned east, west, north and south, and cut the throats of those who thought they had any right to their own. He was the Jack the Ripper of the district, and as an "all round man" at the business it would be hard to find his rival.

A wolf burst into a Russian hut and attacked a boy in the absence of his parents. The house-dog defended the child, and was nearly torn to pieces before relief came. That dog had no soul. The Christian men who, a few years ago, were afraid to help a little girl struggling in three feet of water in Kensington Gardens, had souls. Let us pray.

Mr. Voysey seems to have set himself to the task of answering an objection as to what can be known of God apart from his inspired manifestations, and this he does by asserting that the inspired manifestation cannot tell us anything more than we already know. We beg pardon. They can tell a great deal, as that he exposed his back parts to Moses, had a son by a virgin, and much other curious information not to be gathered by unassisted reason.

It is rather curious to find, centuries after the statue to the Unknown God at Athens has tumbled into oblivion, the Rev. Christopher J. Street saying at the Theistic Church that God must ever be the Unknown God. It is a curious proceeding to talk Sunday after Sunday on a subject that must ever be unknown. We should think the time might be more profitably occupied.

Mr. Stead gives us his Trinity in his new Review. It is—God, England, and Humanity. In other words, Religion, Jingoism, and Imperialism. Cock-a-doodle-do!

The Tablet bestows some mild banter on that good man Mr. W. T. Stead for offering to set up a kind of journalistic confessional in the Review of Reviews. It wishes him to know that good Catholics go to confession not to find a confidant but to obtain forgiveness of sins. It does not think Mr. Stead will undertake to dispense this. Give him time.

The sorrowful and heavy laden were long exhorted to cast their burdens on the Lord. Mr. Stead, who evidently deems it one of the missions of the new journalism to take the place of the old Methodist pulpit and class-room, offers to play the rôle of Jesus Christ himself. He asks all who want the consolation of pouring out their soul's grief, to communicate with him. He has an unfailing supply of the true balm of Gilead to be disposed of on reasonable terms.

Do you seek for comfort?
Turn your thoughts to Stead.
Does your husband come home late?
Refuge find in Stead.
Are you weary of your sins?
Confide them all to Stead.
But please enclose remittance
Should you write to Stead.

The Established Church of Scotland is making an effort to form a Defence Fund for the Church. The sum modestly asked for is £10,000 but ten times that amount would prove wofully insufficient for the purpose.

A full and searching inquiry into the management of the Church Missionary Society has often been talked about, even Canon Taylor was unable to bring it about. The income of the Church Missionary Society last year was nearly £222,000. It is stated that of this enormous sum nearly a fourth!—that is to say, close upon £50,000—is spent before any of the money is paid out for mission work.

The millenium is coming. According to the Rev. W. Webb-Peploe, all the world is to be converted to Christ, and then war and strife will cease. And when will that be? Ah, as the song says, wait a little longer.

Mr. George Harwood, M.A., has been telling an audience in the Bolton Co-operative Hall that the Bible is the best book in the world to "teach manners." Well, let us take a case. David, the man after God's own heart, had an interview with a lady called Abigail. In the course of conversation he told her that he had meant to kill all the males of her husband's house. But did he say males? Oh dear no. What did he say, then? Well, we dare not repeat it. It may be read in 1 Samuel xxv., 34. Read it with a pair of blue spectacles on, and then swear that the Bible is a text-book of manners.

Can it be true? We hear that the new Secular hall at Edmonton is next door to the residence of Sir Henry Tyler, the pious guinea-pig who first prosecuted the Freethinker. The Christians of that neighborhood should take precautions against earthquakes.

The newspapers report a shocking case of cruelty by the nuns at the Franciscan convent at Schönbrun. They beat and starved a poor half-witted girl in their charge till she was a skeleton covered with a mass of sores, "In consideration of their calling," the magistrate inflicted slight fines, but the public showed by hooting that a heavier sentence was demanded.

Sarah Hannah Calender, who is charged with cutting the throat of her grand niece and child aged one year, and with setting fire to the house, seems to have been very pious. She asked for the Bible a little before committing the atrocity, and perhaps derived inspiration from the volume.

Digitized by Google

MR. FOOTE'S ENGAGEMENTS.

Sunday, January 19, Camden Hall, Camden-street, Liverpool, at 11, 3 and 7 o'clock.

Thursday, Jan. 23, Secular Hall, 131 Broadway, Plaistow, at 8 "How to get Saved." For the Branch funds.

Jan. 26, Camberwell.

Feb. 2, Hall of Science, London; 9, Blackburn; 16, Milton Hall, London; 23, Hall of Science, London.

March 2, Manchester; 9, Camberwell; 16, Cardiff; 23 and 30, Hall of Science, London.

April 6, Milton Hall; 13, Portsmouth; 20, Hall of Science; 27, Hall of Science.

May 4, Newcastle; 11, South Shields.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

LITERARY communications to be addressed to the Editor, 14 Clerkenwell Green, London, E.C. All business communications to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C.

THE Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the office, post free to any part of Europe, America, Canada and Egypt, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 6s. 6d.; Half Year, 3s. 3d.; Three Months, 1s. 7½d. Australia, China and Africa:—One Year, 8s. 8d.; Half Year, 4s. 4d.; Three Months, 2s. 2d. India:—One Year, 10s. 10d.; Half Year, 5s. 5d.; Three Months, 2s. 8½d.

SCALE OF ADVERTISEMENTS.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 3s.; Half Column, 15s.; Column, £1 10s. Special terms for repetitions.

IT being contrary to post office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will in future receive the number when their subscription expires in a colored wrapper.

G. JACOB.—(1) It doesn't pretend to be a literal quotation, being obviously a paraphrase. (2) We had no special information, and there was no use in repeating what every one had seen in the newspapers.

ANTI-HUMBUG.—Thanks. See "Acid Drops."

J. B.—Renan's Vie de Jesus is a sentimental work, we had almost written romance, but it serves as an introduction to rational criticism of the gospels.

"AMANA."—Papers and cuttings always welcome.

F. GILES.—Yes, Viktor Lennstrand must and will be supported.

F. COULTHARD.—Will say when we see them.

DOUBTER.—You have our sympathy. It goes out to every struggling, earnest mind. For our part, we regard it as a duty to be true to oneself, never to countenance a falsehood for the sake of peace, or to imagine that the human race can be elevated by it, however, it may have been inevitable in man's upward march. Truth is after all the highest thing, and every virtue ultimately rests upon it. If you are not a Christian, in any fairly understood sense of the word, you had better come out. It may be hard at first, but you will find the road soften and the sky clear, if you keep facing the dawn.

A. GUEST.—Thanks. Glad to hear you tackled Prophet Baxter at Darlington.

A. FRIEND.—Mr. Foote was forty on January, 11th. At the present he is carrying about a bad cold, which was exasperated by Monday evening's rush to Reading. Mr. Wheeler is also affected. Editor and "sub" both hope the chill hasn't got into the paper.

F. HAMPSON.—See "Acid Drops." Sorry the Bolton press is so little fond of fair play.

JOSEPH CLOSE.—We think of publishing some more good portraits shortly. Glad to have your opinion that Letters to Jesus Christ, which "every one who wants to know the leading specialities of the Jesus of the Gospels would do well to obtain."

W. OWEN says that "heart-felt" sympathy with our gallant Swedish comrades must mean "pocket-felt." True.

F. H. M. CHASE.—Under consideration.

E. SIMS.—No doubt a good subscription will be raised for the Swedish martyr.

H. CALASCA.—Your cuttings are always welcome.

LONDON SECULAR FEDERATION.—W. J. Birch, £1.

A. HINDLEY.—Thanks. May be useful.

J. BRUMAGE.—Such letters in Chat or any local paper do the cause good. Hope to see you hale again next month.

E. T. GARNER.—Your lecture list is the first sent in. It shows you are wide awake, anyhow; and that is at least one merit.

JNO. DEAN.—Suit your convenience.

PAPERS RECEIVED.—Liberty—Fair Play—Freidenker—Open Court—Freedom—Der Arme Teufel—Consett Guardian—Neues Freireligioses Sonntags Blatt—Boston Investigator—Secular Thought—Freethought—Ironclad Age—Bulletin des Sommaires—Uxbridge Gazette—Bournemouth Guardian—Western American—Progressive Thinker—New York Press—Evening Standard—Health Resorts—Bulletin des Sommaires—Western Figaro—Anti-Infidel—Weekly News and Chronicle—New York Herald—Menschenthum—Liberator—The Ensign Irish Y.M.C.A's Bulletin—Northampton Daily Reporter.

FRIENDS who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish our attention directed.

CORRESPONDENCE should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

TO ALL WHOM IT CONCERNS.

A GENTLEMAN asked us at Nottingham if the invitation we printed early in the year was still open. We replied that it was. Our resources are not adequate to carry on our Freethought business properly, and they are diminished from time to time by investors requiring to withdraw their money. We have indeed to repay a good deal of money during the new year, and we shall be glad to hear from any friends who have spare cash to entrust us with. Every investment bears five per cent. interest, and the investor receives a legal document entitling him to recall his amount by six months' notice. We intend, if possible, to be very active in publishing during the next year or two. There is a certain market for all we produce, and a reasonable, if not handsome, profit on sales. It will be borne in mind that the Freethinker brings us no direct return for our labor, at least for the present, though the prospect is slowly improving. We have, therefore, to rely upon what is yielded by the publishing business, which, besides lecturing work, is our only source of income. Our stock of publications is a large one, and some idea of the resources needed may be gathered from the fact that the Dictionary of Freethinkers alone has cost £150 to produce, exclusive of the binding, the expense of which is incurred gradually as the work sells. Those who cannot afford to invest are not desired to inconvenience themselves; we only appeal to those who can; and they who respond quickly will be doing us the greatest service.

G. W. FOOTE.

P.S.—Eight friends have now responded to this appeal. We shall be glad to hear from others forthwith. Any sums from £5 upwards will be acceptable on the foregoing conditions. This is the last week the invitation will appear.

SUGAR PLUMS.

THERE was an improved audience at the London Hall of Science on Sunday evening to hear Mr. Foote's reply to the Archbishop of Canterbury. To-day (Jan. 19) Mr. Foote lectures at Liverpool, where he will be glad to see any friends from South Lancashire who are anxious to see a better organisation of Freethought in that district. The letter we publish elsewhere from the Branch secretary should bring every Liverpool Freethinker to the hall. The bigots must be faced, fought, and beaten.

SINCE the preceding paragraph was in print we have heard from Mr. Doeg that he and Mr. Newcomb are to be summoned. Lectures are, if possible, to be treated as entertainments. Mr. Doeg says "I will fight it out." Surely there will be a big rally to-day (Jan. 19). Whoever holds back in a crisis is a traitor to the cause.

MR. BRADLAUGH is on his way home, very much improved in health and spirits. He will meet the members of the National Secular Society at the Hall of Science, London, on Sunday, February 16, and give a full statement of his reasons for resigning the presidency. No person will be admitted to the meeting who is not a member. Those who have not yet joined, but wish to be present, should enrol themselves at once. The meeting will elect Mr. Bradlaugh's successor.

MESSRS FOOTE AND FORDER made a descent on Reading on Monday evening. Mr. Butler and a few other "saints" had resolved to form a Branch of the N. S. S. in this thriving town, and as a local clergyman had been stirring up the public mind on the subject, Mr. Foote undertook to lecture on "Christianity and Secularism: a False System and a True One," and Mr. Forder to officiate as chairman on behalf of the Organisation Committee. A small hall had been engaged, capable of seating about two hundred persons; but somehow the hallkeeper let it afterwards for the same night to a dancing party. The only way out of the difficulty was for the Secularists to have the large hall in the same block at the same price. Now the mistake was a slice of good fortune, for a large audience assembled that could not have been squeezed by a hydraulic press into the smaller room.

Digitized by Google

NOT only was the audience large, but very courteous and intelligent, and there was a good sprinkling of ladies. Another noteworthy feature was the presence of two local reporters taking notes industriously. Mr Forder had a capital reception and made a neat little speech from the chair. Mr. Foote was greeted with several rounds of applause, and throughout the lecture there could be little doubt that he commanded the sympathies of more than half the audience. This augurs well for the prosperity of the new Branch. Reading has more than enough Freethinkers to make it a first-rate success.

AFTER the lecture many questions were asked, and answered. Three gentlemen made set speeches. One was a Reading curate; another an old business man, who does a little evangelising. This amiable old Christian told how he was converted fifty-four years ago; he thumped the lecturer on the back as a man and a brother; and left the platform with a fervent prayer for the Atheist's conversion. Mr. Foote laughed and the audience laughed. Everybody laughed but the aged Christian. He was in deadly earnest.

AMONG the audience was the great Barber of Northampton. This person has been very quiet since Mr. Bradlaugh threatened to answer his scurrility with a thrashing. Now he is on the war-path again. Barber mounted the platform, holding in his hand the regulation book of extracts. Mr. Forder offered him a seat, kept him sitting and waiting for his turn, and finally told him there was no time for more speeches, as the occupancy of the hall was terminating, and the keeper was going to turn out the gas. It was cleverly done, and Barber was wild, especially as he wanted a good advertisement for his own lecture the next evening. Most of the audience were evidently glad that Reading men had taken up the time, instead of an imported stranger. But there was a considerable knot of Barber's lambs at the back, and they baa'd most lustily. That was an old stager's opportunity. Rising to answer the curate, Mr. Foote was baa'd and baa'd; but he fairly shouted them down in two minutes, and the meeting finally broke up in perfect order.

ALTOGETHER the visit to Reading was a great success, and the Organisation Committee will no doubt organise descents on other towns within easy reach of London.

MR. R. FORDER acknowledges the following subscriptions to the Swedish Prisoners' Fund:—Grant from Funds of N. S. S., £2 10s.; Miss Vance, 2s. 6d.; R. Forder, 2s. 6d.; J. Chamberlain, 1s.; G. R., per E. Truelove, £1; E. Truelove, £1; J. Sterry, 4½d.; W. Langley, 5s.; Jupiter Ammon, 5s.; J. Moffat, 1s.; H. Seymour, 1s.; J. Hemingway, 10s.; J. H. Ellis, 5s.; Mrs. Palmer, 6d.; Daylight, 2s. 6d.; K. Hunt, 5s.; J. Robinson, 1s.; Alpha Rho, 10s.; B. Millichamp, 1s.—R. Forder, secretary.

SWEDISH PRISONER FUND.—We have received the following:—F. Giles, 2s.; R. Ross, 1s.; W. Owen, 2s. 6d.; E. Sims, 10s.; W. J. Birch, £1; J. M. Wheeler, 5s.; F. B., 2s. 6d.

THE Rev. A. E. Clark, curate of St. Mark's Preston, finds himself unable to agree with the Prayer Book, and announces his intention of quitting the Church.

WALT WHITMAN thinks the Brazil Republic "More shining than the Cross."

Freedom says the New Cagliostro is "severely caustic," and hopes it "will have an extensive sale." It is having it.

THE Bradlaugh-Gibson debate still echoes along Tyneside. The Rev. Mr. Walsh has engaged the Nelson Street Lecture Hall for four Sunday afternoons. He intends to deal with the difficulties of Christianity, and has courteously invited the members of the Newcastle Branch, who have accepted the invitation on condition of free discussion, being allowed. Mr. Joseph Brown, the Branch secretary, has arranged to preside at one of the meetings. Mr. Walsh writes like a gentleman, and the proceedings will no doubt be marked by good feeling. The first lecture is fixed for to-day (Jan. 19).

CANON TALBOT is carrying on a series of Monday evening lectures in the Central Hall, Newcastle. In a printed circular to working-men, he says "I know what Mr. Bradlaugh and Mr. Foote have to say about the Bible." Well, if he answers what they say he will do wonders, for a clergyman.

MR. R. O. SMITH, honorary treasurer of the London Secular Federation, asks us to print the following list as the result of the chairman's appeal at the recent dinner:—Subscriptions Received—G. Burton, 10s.; Captain Cross, £1 10s.; W. Hunt, £1 1s.; James Rowney, 10s.; Jules Magny, 2s 6d.; H. A. Taylor, 5s.; J. Taylor, 10s.; Miss Emily Johnson, 2s. 6d.; C. H. Culliford. 2s. 6d.; W. Wheeler, 2s. 6d.; R. Malster, 2s. 6d.; C. Kingston, 5s.; Mr. Hillier, 10s.; T. V. Pearce, 10s.; Daylight, 5s.; H. L. Strong, 2s. 6d.; J. Tomkins, 5s.; J. Umpleby, £5; Mrs. Foote, 10s. 6d. Subscriptions Promised—R. Forder, 10s.; Mr. Trummel, 2s. 6d.; A. Reichert, 2s. 6d.; G. Lodge, 5s.; D. Colville, £2; R. McKirdy, 10s. 6d.; Mrs. McMillen, 10s.; G. A. Henning, 10s.; R. Bell, 5s.; G. Rutland, 10s. 6d.; J. Robertson, £1 1s.; Miss M. A. Robin, 5s.; R. Miller, 5s.; G. Ward, £1; A. Moss, 2s. 6d.; J. F. Henley, 5s.; S. Hartman, 5s.

THE headquarters of the American Secular Union are now at Philadelphia, where an office has been taken at 930 N. 17th Street. Miss Ira C. Craddock is the secretary.

A MISS VIRGINIA E. VANCE is among the writers in Freethought of San Francisco. No relative we presume to the lady who is so actively known in connection with Milton Hall.

THE Sunday visitors for a year at the People's Palace including the library are estimated at 92 927. Only twelve or fourteen attendants are paid, and there are no policemen kept on the premises. Of course the pious are wild that any should work on Sunday, but the men who are engaged are those who have not been working during the week. Hypocritical Sabbatarians prefer to overwork attendants on Saturday rather than have a fresh relay for Sunday.

WE see that Mr. B. F. Underwood was elected an honorary member of the Nineteenth Century Club of New York, in recognition of his ability as a thinker and of his work as a liberal advocate.

Freedom, of Sydney, Australia, presents its readers with a view of the design which has been accepted for the New Sydney Freethought Hall. It suggests a handsome structure, and one reflecting great credit on the Freethinkers of Sydney. It will be situated in Campbell Street, a fine road some 66 feet wide.

WE are pleased to notice that over 650 dollars have been already subscribed for a monument to the late Horace Seaver, who for above fifty years conducted the Boston Investigator.

THE South London Press and Southwark Recorder both gave good notices of the London Secular Federation dinner.

IT must have been some shrewd sceptic who sent the following queries to the Bournemouth Guardian:—"How is it that the Gospels are translated from the original Greek, whereas the founder of Christianity and his apostles must have spoken Hebrew?" "Are the originals of the Gospels in existence?" The answers given are not very satisfactory. All the early fathers spoke of Matthew as being written in Hebrew, yet our version has little evidence of being a translation. The last uestion is answered by a reference to the alleged recent discovery of M.S. of about the middle of the fourth century, or something over three hundred years after the time of the originals. Such evidence of a human testament would not satisfy a pettifogging attorney in search of a case.

Digitized by Google

DR. J. L. YORK, American Freethought lecturer, whose health recently broke down, after the strain of twelve years' hard work, has now recovered and hopes soon to take to the platform again. He says that what the movement wants in America is more speakers and papers.

God and the State is the title of a new pamphlet by Colonel Ingersoll. It should be in the hands of all political reformers, and circulated broadcast by those who desire to see a complete severance between politics and religion. It is one of the Colonel's best efforts, and written under a grave sense of responsibility, for the churches in America are trying hard to subvert the grand old Declaration of Independence.

The Converted Atheist—Mr. Foote's exposure of the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes's story—is now on sale. The price is one penny. Parcels of fifty copies and upwards can be had at trade price. Freethinkers should circulate the pamphlet widely.

WE understand that a set debate between Mr. Joseph Symes and a clergyman has been arranged. We hope to give fuller particulars shortly.

THE "Humboldt" Freethought Union at Leipsic appears to have a number of capable members. Menschenthum, the organ of the German Freethought Union, reports a capital discourse delivered by Walther May.

"GENTLE JESUS, MEEK AND MILD."

(CONCLUDED.)

After giving his disciples the self-same advice which in later years Uriah Heep received from his father, namely, to be 'umble, we find Jesus going up again to the Jewish Passover at Jerusalem, though why does not seem very clear, seeing he had renounced his faith by his baptism, and struck out a new religion of his own. On his way, an unforseen difficulty occurs; it has come to Jesus' knowledge that a certain celebrity of the name of Zechariah, in days of old prophesied that the Messiah would ride into Jerusalem upon an ass and a colt the foal of an ass (Zech. ix. 9), though how this feat was to be accomplished is a mystery. Well, here is Jesus nearing Jerusalem with no ass, no colt, nor the wherewithal to purchase these indispensibles. But Jesus was a man of resource, he had been that way before, and knew that in the adjacent village of Bethphage there were both these necessaries. Ha! a happy thought! said Jesus to his disciples. "Go into yonder village, and straight ahead you will find an ass tied and a colt, the foal of an ass with her, loose them and bring them to me." But, supposing they are caught in the act! What then? In this extremity, observe the deliciously ambiguous message which they are to deliver. "The Lord hath need of them" (Mark xi, 13); not "Jesus requires them," or Jesus would be obliged if you would lend them for a short time," but "The Lord hath need of them!" perhaps the poor man thought it was the landlord, to whom perchance, he owed a quarter's rent, perhaps, and what is more likely when he saw twelve great hungry fellows making off with his asinine property, he discreetly gave way to superior force, and inwardly rejoiced that they left him his ox and his wife, his man-servant and his maid-servant and everything else that was his. Any way they captured the ass, and very lucky they were to do so. I fancy one of our London costers would be very loth to part with his moke under such circumstances.

Well, we are told that Jesus, with the aid of the confiscated donkey, made his entry into Jerusalem with great éclat, but presently we are treated to a piece of ruffianism the reverse of godly. At these periodical festivals it was customary for the courtyards of the Temple to be thronged with money changers, purveyors of objects for the purpose of sacrifice, and others on the look out for the chance of turning an honest shekel. Jesus falls foul of these gentry, he does not like to see them there, but instead of reproving them gently and shewing them they were committing a trespass, Jesus, not having heard the famous dictum of John Bright, that "force is not remedy," proceeds to make a "scourge of small cords," (John ii., 15.,) and execute a pantomime rally, upsetting the tables of the money changers and driving the others out with their sheep, oxen, doves, &c. Very strange conduct this, for "Gentle Jesus, Meek and Mild"! and what a dignified part to play for the founder of Christianity! Engaging with his disciples in a general scrimmage with a crowd of spiritless hawkers!

Now with just one more incident I will close the list, for after this the evangelists speak not so much of the acts of Jesus as his words and teachings, to the mystifying character of which I have already alluded, and shall presently refer to the deplorable effects of his doctrines.

The morning after his little brawl in the Temple, Jesus was returning to Jerusalem with his disciples from Bethany, where they had passed the night, when the cravings of the inner man reminded him he had come out without his breakfast, so he very naturally looked about for the wherewithal to appease his hunger, and soon he espied, afar off, a fig tree. Jesus, (was, the Christians tell us, perfect God, and perfect Man: i.e.—in his capacity as God, he could accurately foretell the future, of which as Man he must at the same time be entirely ignorant! Now were he God, he must have known there were no figs on this tree. Were he as a man cognisant of even the rudiments of arboriculture, he must have known it; but he did not, for Luke tells us (xi., 13) that he went up to it "if haply he might find anything thereon;" but finds himself sold instead. "Blast the fig tree" cries "Gentle Jesus meek and mild." I do not profess to be able to judge if this was god-like, but it certainly showed a great deal of human nature.

Now these episodes in Jesus' life are not the unimportant incidents of his career, but those very acts which are so glorified by the Christians. What a false faith must that be which converts such a career of bunkum, brag and bullying into "a godly, righteous and sober life"! Is it not time we cast off this tyrannical yoke which prompts a man to say "I am a Christian" when asked his religion, knowing in his own heart that Christianity, as taught and practised by Christ, is a most hellish creed. Truly he was right when he prophesied the effect of his teaching upon generations to come—here are a few of them—think of them ye recipients of Xmas cards, with "Peace on earth and goodwill towards men" printed thereon.

Matt. x., 34, 35:—"Think not that I am come to send peace on earth, I came not to send peace but a sword. For I am come to set a man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law."

Luke xii., 51-53:—"Suppose ye that I come to give peace on earth? I tell ye Nay, but rather division. The father shall be divided against his son, and the son against the father. The mother against the daughter, and the daughter against the mother. The mother-in-law against the daughter-in-law, and the daughter-in-law against the mother-in-law."

Luke xiv, 25:—"If any man come to me and hate not his father and mother, and wife and children, and brethren and sisters, he cannot be my disciple."

Truly these terrible prophecies have been fulfilled to the letter, and well may Shakespeare tell us that "The evil that men do lives after them, the good is oft interred with their bones." Is it not time that we dethroned this Jesus Christ as an object of faith and worship, as Wodin, Thor, Friga and Saturn have been dethroned? I do not advocate abolishing the feast of Christmas which comes at the proper time at the end of the year for rest and recreation after twelve months labors, but hope for the time when Christmas shall have no more connection with Christ or Christianity than Saturday has now with that other heathen God, Saturn, who devoured his own children.

F. P.

The close alliance of religion and insanity is illustrated in the letter of a suicide read at his inquest at Chester on Jan. 9:—"My time is at hand. I have finished my course. My life is hid with Christ in God. It is better to fall into the hands of God than the hands of men. Lord Jesus, receive my spirit, and lay not this sin to my charge. Lord Jesus open the kingdom of heaven to all believers. God will certainly visit England with a sword because of her Sabbath breaking. The sword is God's peacemaker—the Bible follows. Adieu." The jury brought in the usual verdict, making no mention of the fact that religion was evidently largely responsible for the calamity,

Digitized by Google

CORRESPONDENCE.

OUR DIFFICULTIES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE FREETHINKER."

SIR,—I have persuaded one of our local newsagents to exhibit the Freethinker in his window and also to display the contents-sheet outside. He is willing to do so every week providing he can obtain a supply, but his wholesale agent refuses to supply it. He had one dozen sent him for two or three weeks direct from Stonecutter Street, but the postage swallows all the profit. I have promised to take all copies that may remain unsold, but he naturally does not like the idea of pushing the sale of a paper without having any remuneration for it. That the paper will sell in time I have not the slightest doubt as everyone in town knows something of Freethought now. Can you suggest a remedy? Ever since I have been a Freethinker (and that is since you uttered the memorable words, "Thank you, my lord, it is worthy of your creed") I have done my best for the good old cause. I should like to see your little "blasphemer" selling like wildfire and yourself with as large an income as the Archbishop of Canterbury. I have had the great pleasure of listening to three lectures by you—twice in Cardiff and once in London. They were the only Freethought lectures I ever heard and I enjoyed them immensely. Hoping you will be able to suggest some way out of this difficulty, I remain yours faithfully, THOS. WILLIAMS.

A JOSEPH COME TO JUDGMENT.

The lecture which our clever countryman Joseph Thomson, the explorer, delivered in Edinburgh last night, is intellectually worth a whole decade of Spurgeon's sermons, and of more suggestive value than all the Sunday sensationalism of all the John Robertsons that have ever shocked Scottish propriety. But the truths he tells us of European influences in Africa are not palatable. Our intercourse with the natives is, he says, an unmitigated curse, because with our missionaries we introduce guns, gunpowder, and gin. Our trading stations, instead of being centres of beneficence and elevating influence, have been in the past disease-breeding spots, which have infected with demoralising poison the whole country. The Christian missionary, propagating a creed of a delicately exotic character, and having too little of that elasticity and adaptability to the stage of development reached by the people who are to be converted, has been, in fact, a failure, and Mohammedanism has beaten Christianity all along the line. Mr. Thomson sees the cure for this in a total revolution in the method of work—in the proper equipment of missionaries under professors. Only by men having the spirit, the enterprise, and true Christianity of Livingstone can the negro be effectually attacked, and the Cross be reared above the Crescent.—Glasgow Evening News.

VISITATIONS OF GOD.

Evidence is accumulating that our heavenly father no longer approves of churches or church going. Here are two instances of divine visitation on the same day, and both in church:

Hopkinville, Ky., Nov. 13.—During service at the colored methodist church last evening, Hannah Gibson suddenly fell dead. She was shouting at the time, when she fell on her face and instantly expired.

Millersburg, O., Nov. 13.—David Love, aged 76 years, of Mechanic township, was stricken with paralysis on Sunday morning while at church, and died this morning.—Ironclad Age.

HE WAS PREPARED.—A travelling missionary had been through a very rough country, and his meek spirit had been sorely tried. He had found a spirit of irreverence and disbelief all over the land, and the ground was very stony. But he left in despair when he struck an old man at a railway station in Texas. They were both waiting for the train. They discussed various things, and finally the missionary asked—"Are you prepared to die." "I guess you've always got to be prepared in this country. Yes, I'm prepared to die or get the drop on the other fellow." "I don't mean that. Are you prepared for a hereafter?" "A hereafter! Look here, stranger, I was brought up in Arkansaw, an' I went from there to Missouri, an' from there I came to Texas, an' I've lived here ten years. I guess I can stand any hereafter as may be."

THE LATE SIR HARDINGE GIFFARD, BRADLAUGH-BAITER AND FOOTE-PROSECUTOR.

At Sudbury, an addition was required to the Bench of Magistrates in 1886. The Corporation sent up to the Lord Chancellor three names—a Conservative, a Liberal-Unionist, and a Liberal. The latter (Mr. Mattingly) had served as Mayor for three successive years. The Lord Chancellor only appointed the two former, on which the Town Council earnestly requested him to reconsider his decision. The only reply was an acknowledgment of the memorial. A year ago the Bench again required strengthening, owing to deaths and the illness of its members. The Corporation sent up three names—Mr. Grover (C.), Mr. Mattingly (L.), and Mr. Joy, Mayor (L) The Lord Chancellor entirely ignored these recommendations, and appointed Mr. Salter (L. U.) and Dr. Mason (C.) Mr. Mattingly has now been re-elected mayor, and actually presides over the bench on which the Lord Chancellor considers that he is unworthy to serve. It really is full time that a Parliamentary Committee should investigate the magisterial appointments of Lord Chancellor Halsbury. What has taken place at Sudbury is only an exemplification of what takes place in other towns. A more gross and impudent jobber never sat on the Woolsack. He never loses a chance to prostitute his high office to political wire-pulling. It is full time that he should cease to disgrace the ermine.—Truth.

CLERICAL SHINDY.—The vicar and the curate, in the village where we were raised, were not on the best of terms—in fact, the former lost no opportunity in snubbing the latter. A parishioner, one of the oldest and most respectable of the inhabitants, lay dead, and had to buried. The curate was on the spot, the vicar was not; he was absent—as usual, he was late. The curate waited: no vicar appeared, so he began to read the burial service. He had just arrived at the words, "I am the resurrection," when the vicar rushed up, breathless with haste, snatched the book from his hand, and said, in a tone of contempt, "You the resurrection? I am the resurrection!" and, as if nothing had happened, he continued the service.

THEY were only just engaged, and had gone to church for the first time after plighting their troth. And the good old grey-headed sky pilot weighed in with the Ten Commandments, and Algernon wondered within himself whether, if he pinched his loved one's arm about the time that the theft clause came on, whether she would rightly interpret his meaning, that she had stolen his heart. He knew she knew them well, so he chanced it. But whether it was that he was too previous, or had got them in his head by the wrong numbers, deponent sayeth not; anyway, he pinched her arm and said, "Now bear this one in mind." Just before the reading of the seventh, and before the eighth came up on the tape, she had indignantly left the church.

DISCORD prevails in the African Methodist Episcopal church of Fairview, Cumberland county, N. J. Deacon Moore heard a noise in his hennery a night or two ago. Instinct told him what it meant. Seizing the loose leg of a three cornered stool he marched boldly out. This exclamatton startled the night: "Brer Tappey. I'se amazed. Don't 'pear to me possible dat you, a deacon in de church——" "Why, bress yo' heart, Brer Moo'," broke in the trembling figure that crouched in the henhouse, "I done cum in heah outen de rain——" "Git out niggah, I'se done clean mad (kerwhack)!). You, a deacon in de church (whack!), comin' roun' a brudder's hennery (bang). Git out!" Deacon Tappey's face looked like a gerry-mandered assembly district map when Deacon Moore got through with him. There is now a division in the church.—Philadelphia Record.

HALL OF SCIENCE CHILDREN'S PARTY.—J. Chapman, 2s. 6d.; Mr. Trevillion, 1s.; Dick Edwards, 1s.; Mr. and Mrs. Burton, 5s.; G. W. Foote, 10s. 6d.; Mrs. Doran, 1s.; Mrs. Hunt, 6d.; J. Austin, 1s.; Mr. Searle, 1s.; Mr. Banks, 6d.; W. Bullimore, 6d.; J. Allen, 1s.; R. Carr, 2s. 6d.; J. Chamberlain, 1s.; E. P., 2s. 6d.; J. Hemingway, 2s. 2d.; C. Bently, 1s.; J. B., 3d.; F. Lane, 6d.; F. Woolnough, 6d.; W. Chambers, 6d.; Daylight, 2s. 6d.; W. Hunt, 5s.; A. Mills, 6d.; Jim, 6d.: Miss Barnard, 1s.; Mr. Lyons, 6d.; Mrs. Hill, 1s.; Mrs. Richardson, 1s.; J. Robertson, 5s.; G. Fowler, 2s. 6d.; Mr. Doran. 1s. 6d.; Croughan, 6d.; Friend, 1s.; C. Williams, 1s.; Mr. and Mrs. Billot, 2s.; J. Robertson, 5s.; R. Rossetti, 6d.; J. Neate, 6d; Miss Simpson, 3d.; Fielding, 6d.; A Friend, 1s.; B. Fuller, 1s.; Solur, 1s.; Turkington, 1s.; Milroy, 6d; H. F. S., 1s.; C. Irons, 6d.; Harris, 1s.; J. Fagan, 1s.; C. Cousins, 2s. 6d.; A. Lemaitre, 1s.; Mr. Martin, 1s.; Mr. Moore, 1s.; R. Isherwood, 1s.; J. G., 1s.; W. Henny, 6d.; S. Blunt, 1s.; Mrs. Blunt, 1s.; Per Mr. Cousins, 10s. 6d.; G. S., 2s.; W. H. Reynolds, 2s.; L. Baxter, 6d.; J. Searle, 6d; L. Swift, 6d.; H. Coward, 2d.; A. Masters, 2d.; G. Chapman, 2d.; Earley, 6d.; W. Jones, 1s.; Cresswell, 1s.; Hettrick, 6d.; Mrs. Farr, 2d.; J. A., 6d.; C. Muller, 6d.; C. Haggar, 1s.; N. Harris, 6d.; B. Santon, 6d.; M. Mullem, 4d.; M. J. M., 6d.; H. Symes, 6d.; W. J. Birch, £1.—R. FORDER, Secretary.

Digitized by Google

FORTHCOMING MEETINGS.

LONDON.

Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, E.C., 7, Mr. T. Parris, "How I Became a Freethinker."

Camberwell—61 New Church Road, S.E., 7.30, Mr. F Millar, "Mahomet and Islam."

Milton Hall, Kentish Town Road, N.W., 7.30, Capt. Pfoundes, "Buddhism."

Battersea—The Shed of Truth, Prince of Wales's Road, 11, Debate; 3.15, General Meeting of Members: 7.15, a lecture.

Ball's Pond Secular Hall, 7, Harold Cox, B.A., "The Eight Hours Bill."

Bethnal Green—2 Railway Place, Cambridge Road (temporary premises), 3, Mr. C. Bentley will open a public discussion on "Socialism" Admission free.

Woolwich—"Sussex Arms," Assembly Room, 60 Plumstead Road, 7.30, Mr. C. Johnson, "Why I am Not a Christian."

COUNTRY.

Birmingham—Baskerville Hall, Crescent, Mr C. C. Cattell, 7, "The Man of the Past: His Natural Origin, and Great Antiquity."

Chester Le Street—Important meeting at Mr. Gray's, Old Pilton, 6.30, to hear Report from Secretary, etc.

Glasgow—Ramsbottom Hall, 122 Ingram Street, 6.30, Mr. R. M. Ritchie (Edinburgh), "Artemus Ward" (illustrated with readings).

Huddersfield—Littlewood Bridges, Upperhead Row, Mr. Sam Standring, 11, "Better Men than Jesus: Socrates, Plato, etc": 3, "The Fight for Freethought from Luther to Bradlaugh"; 6.30, "Why We are Secularists"

Newcastle-on-Tyne—Lecture Hall, Nelson Street, 8, the Rev. Walter Walsh will lecture on "Bible Inspiration," Mr. Thomas Burt, M.P., in the chair. All Secularists are earnestly invited to attend.

Nottingham—Secular Hall, Beck Street, 7, Mr. A. Lord, "Was Jesus Christ a Socialist?"

LECTURERS' ENGAGEMENTS.

E. Tolefan Garner, 8 Heyworth Street, Stratford, London, E.—Jan. 19, Portsmouth; 26, Woolwich. Feb. 23, Woolwich. March 9, Woolwich; 23, Woolwich: 30, Westminster.

PROFANE JOKES.

A Michigan paper recently closed an obituary notice with the misquotation, "Though dead, he yet squeaketh." The printer apparently wasn't minding his p's and q's.

A Illinois minister announced on his Sunday night bulletin: "The funeral of Judas Iscariot." To which an obliging friend added: "Friends of the deceased are cordially invited

PROGRESSIVE PUBLISHING CO.'S LIST.

All orders to be sent, with remittance, to R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C. Rate of postage—Orders under 3d., one halfpenny; orders under 6d. one penny. Orders over 6d. post free.

G. W. FOOTE.

	s.	d.
PRISONER FOR BLASPHEMY. Cloth ... ... A Full History of his Three Trials and Twelve Months' Imprisonment. Copies in paper covers, soiled, 6d.	2	6
IS SOCIALISM SOUND? ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant.	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
CHRISTIANITY AND SECULARISM ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. In paper covers.	1	0
Superior edition in cloth	1	6
INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS ... ... Second edition, enlarged.	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	3
DARWIN ON GOD	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0

Contents:—Darwin's Grandfather—Darwin's Father—Darwin's Early Piety—Almost a Clergyman—On Board the "Beagle"—Settling at Down—Death and Burial—Purpose of Pamphlet—Some Objections—Darwin Abandons Christianity—Deism—Creation—Origin of Life—Origin of Man—Animism—A Personal God—Design—Divine Beneficence—Religion and Morality—Agnosticism and Atheism.

DEFENCE OF FREE SPEECH ... ... Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes.	0	4
LETTERS TO JESUS CHRIST	0	4
PHILOSOPHY OF SECULARISM	0	8
THE BIBLE GOD	0	2
THE FOLLY OF PRAYER	0	2
CHRISTIANITY AND PROGRESS ... ... A Reply to Mr. Gladstone.	0	2
WHAT WAS CHRIST? ... ... A Reply to J. S. Mill.	0	2
THE DYING ATHEIST. A Story	0	1
WAS JESUS INSANE? ... ... A searching inquiry into the mental condition of the Prophet of Nazareth.	0	1
THE SHADOW OF THE SWORD ... ... A moral and statistical Essay on War.	0	2
ROYAL PAUPERS ... ... Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty.	0	2
BIBLE HEROES—First Series, in elegant wrapper ... (1) Mr. Adam, (2) Captain Noah, (3) Father Abraham, (4) Juggling Jacob, (5) Master Joseph, (6) Joseph's Brethren, (7) Holy Moses I., (8) Holy Moses II., (9) Parson Aaron, (10) General Joshua, (11) Jephthah and Co., (12) Professor Samson. One Penny each singly.	1	0
BIBLE HEROES—Second Series. (13) Prophet Samuel, (14) King Saul, (15) Saint David I., (16) Saint David II., (17) Sultan Solomon, (18) Poor Job, (19) Hairy Elijah (20) Bald Elisha, (21) General Jehu, (22) Doctor Daniel, (23) The Prophets (Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Hosea).
MRS. BESANT'S THEOSOPHY ... ... A Candid Criticism.	0	2
THEOSOPHY AND SECULARISM ... ... A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant.	0	2
THE NEW CAGLIOSTRO ... ... An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky.	0	2

COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

MISTAKES OF MOSES	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth ... ... Only Complete Edition published in England	1	6
DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT ... ... Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy.	0	6
REPLY TO GLADSTONE ... ... With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler.	0	4
ROME OR REASON? Reply to Cardinal Manning	0	4
FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Rev. Dr. Field ...	0	2
GOD AND MAN. Second Reply to Dr. Field	0	2
THE DYING CREED	0	2
THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH	0	2
THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION ... ... A Discussion with Hon. F. D. Courdert and Gov. S. L. Woodford.	0	2
ART AND MORALITY	0	2
DO I BLASPHEME?	0	2
THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE	0	2
THE GREAT MISTAKE	0	1
LIVE TOPICS		1
MYTH AND MIRACLE	0	1
REAL BLASPHEMY	0	1
SOCIAL SALVATION	0	2

G. W. FOOTE and J. M. WHEELER.

CRIMES OF CHRISTIANITY. Vol. I. Cloth ... Hundred of exact References to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.	2	6
THE JEWISH LIFE OF CHRIST ... ... With voluminous footnotes. An extraordinary work.	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0

G. W. FOOTE and W. P. BALL.

BIBLE HANDBOOK FOR FREETHINKERS AND INQUIRING CHRISTIANS	1	4
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0

Sold also in separate parts as follows—

1. Bible Contradictions ... ... The Contradictions are printed in parallel columns.	0	4
2. Bible Absurdities ... ... All the chief Absurdities from Genesis to Revelation, conveniently and strikingly arranged, with appropriate headlines, giving the point of each absurdity in a sentence.	0	4
3. Bible Atrocities ... ... Containing all the godly wickedness from Genesis to Revelation. Each infamy has a separate headline for easy reference	0	4
4. Bible Immoralities, Indecencies, Obscenities, Broken Promises, and Unfulfilled Prophecies ...	0	4

J. M. WHEELER.

LETTERS FROM HEAVEN	0	1
LETTERS FROM HELL	0	1

DR. E. B. AVELING.

DARWIN MADE EASY. 44pp., cloth ... ... Best Popular Exposition of Darwinism extant.	1	0

GIORDANO BRUNO.

Picture of the Statue of Rome	0	2
Post free in Leti's case	0	3

Digitized by Google

PRICE 2d. PRICE 2D.

GOD AND THE STATE

A New Pamphlet by

COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

THE IMPOSSIBLE CREED

An Open Letter to the

BISHOP OF PETERBOROUGH.

BY

G. W. FOOTE.

Price Twopence. Price Twopence.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE

AN AGNOSTIC'S VIEW.

By COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

Reprinted Verbatim from the "North American Review."

Price Twopence. Price Twopence.

Every Freethinker, Radical or Socialist should read it and circulate it amongst his friends.

BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY OF FREETHINKERS

OF

ALL AGES AND NATIONS.

By J. M. WHEELER.

Handsomely Bound in Cloth. Price Seven Shillings and Sixpence.

Should be in every Freethinker's Library.

THE

CHRISTMAS NUMBER

OF THE

"FREETHINKER."

Price 3d., post free 4d. IN HANDSOME WRAPPER. Price 3d., post free 4d.

W. J. Rendell's

"WIFE'S FRIEND."

Recommended in "Law of Population," and "Wife's Hand Book." Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell Street Clerkenwell, and supplied per post, 2s. dozen. For particulars of this Malthusian discovery send stamped envelope. Higginson's Syringe, with vertical and reverse current, 3s. 6d. and 4 . 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. All other Malthusian Appliances. All prices post free.

LIMITED FAMILIES.—Allbutt, posted, 6½d.; Besant, 7d.; Owen, 7d. Malthus, 1s. 1d. Lists (Literature and Appliances), 1d. VOLUNTARY TAXATION. Fisher, 32pp., 1½d. Old Testament, 1d. Darwin's Hypocrisy, Dawson, 4½d.—Fisher, Progressive Publisher, Koburg, Leeds.

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each, upper or lower set, £1. Best quality, 4s. each, upper or lower, £2, completed in four hours when required, repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18c. gold 15s.; stopping, 2s. 6d.; extraction, 1s. painless by gas, 5s.

GRATIS.

AN ILLUSTRATED 16-PAGE PAMPHLET, containing extracts from the utterances of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Manchester; the Revs. T. R. Malthus, A. E. Whatham, M. J. Savage, Leonard Dawson, —Lawton, H. R. Haweis; the following Doctors:—Allbutt, Allinson, Armstrong, Drysdale, Pye Chavasse, E. B. Foote, Nicholls, Wilder, Raciborski, Napheys and Reamy. Also Plato, Aristotle, Sismondi, Huxley, Mill, and numerous others. Should be read by every married and marriageable person. Sent on receipt of stamped addressed envelope by J. R. HOLMES, Hanney, Wantage, Berks.

TESTIMONIALS (Extracts from).

"The one you sent me some months since is

Quite Worn Out

with being lent to so many friends."

"Some of us have paid five shillings for less than one-tenth of the information."

TO MARRIED PEOPLE

Or Those Contemplating Marriage.

Send 1d. Stamp to

DAVIES, CHEMIST, 101 PARK LANE, LEEDS,

And you'll receive an Illustrated List of most useful Malthusian Appliances by return of post.

LIGHTNING CARTOONS.—Twelve 34 by 18 Likenesses, Parliamentary, Military and Royal Celebrities, and simple instructions by which anyone can sketch them. Post free, 2s. 6d. F. Coulthard, East Cliff Terrace, Bournemouth.

HARTNOLL,

ENGLISH AND FOREIGN CHEMIST,

1A PICCADILLY

(Under the London Pavilion Music Hall),

LONDON, W.

Hartnoll's Specialities, Appliances and Medicated Preparations are world-renowned.

Spiral, Douche and Latest Improved Syringes.

ESTABLISHED OVER 50 YEARS.

CAMBERWELL BRANCH N. S. S., 61 New Church Road, S.E.—Three Rooms to Let, at a low rental. Apply to Hall-keeper.

IRETON'S

INDELIBLE JET BLACK MARKING INK

(NO HEATING REQUIRED)

For Rubber Stamps, Stencil, Type or Pen.

PRICE 6d. 1/- and 2/6 per Bottle.

Sample bottle 4d. post free.

Dyed with Ireton's Ink, no hope of ever changing my Color.

IRETON & Co., 92, Gracechurch St., LONDON, E.C.

The largest makers of Rubber Stamps.

Special terms to the Trade.

Printed and Published by G. W. Foote, at 28 Stonecutter Street Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

Vol. X.—No. 4.] SUNDAY, JANUARY 26, 1890. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

LETTERS TO THE CLERGY.—IX.

ON "CHRIST AND HUMANITY."

To the Rt. Rev. Edward White Benson, Archbishop of Canterbury.

MY LORD,—

I have carefully read your new volume on Christ and His Times, and I propose to make it the theme of this letter. When I first saw the volume advertised I thought it would be an historical work, and my curiosity was keenly whetted. A book on such a subject by the head (under the Queen) of the English Church, of which I am by law a member, promised a rare treat to a prowling sceptic. So vast, and so important, is the literature accumulated on this subject since the days of Paley, that I was anxious to see what would now be said upon it by the Archbishop of Canterbury. But, on purchasing your volume, I discovered that you had undertaken a more modest task. Your title was only meant to imply that these are the days of Jesus Christ as well as those in which he lived "in the flesh," and under cover of this pious truism you have merely published some recent charges to the clergy of your diocese.

The volume is beautifully got-up by a high-class publisher. A thin rivulet of type meanders through broad margins of hot pressed paper, and the price of six-shillings for what might have made a shilling brochure, is a proof that your exhortations are not intended for common mortals. Indeed, I am puzzled to understand how the poorer clergy of the diocese of Canterbury are to obtain this high-priced wisdom. I would fain hope that your Grace will pity their poverty, and present the poorest of them with a copy of the volume. The gift will make a very minute hole in your income, and the poor clergyman who receives it will no doubt experience a very disproportionate pleasure. He will be able to place it on the parlor table, show it to all his visitors, and even carry it round to the aged and infirm. The possession of such a sumptuous little volume, written by a live Archbishop, will be among the crowning glories of his life.

This is an age of social progress and social speculation, and your Grace is anxious to push the Church to the front as the Social Reformer. How the terrible problems that beset us are to be settled is the perplexity, and sometimes the despair, of many earnest thinkers. Your Grace's panacea for all evils is a simple one. We are not to look for the cure in rash political reform. That might wind up with Disestablishment, and send Archbishops with £15,000 a year into the limbo of archæology. Nor should we look for it in socialistic proposals. The idea of such "equality" is enough to send a shudder along the whole bench of Bishops. Your Grace invokes the Church as the good angel of humanity. She is to arrange the conditions between the poor and the rich, out of pure love and holy disinterestedness. And who will refuse to listen to her sweet persuasive voice, the timbre of which is maintained by ten million pounds' worth of lozenges per year? She is to flit between the desperate combatants, telling the poor not to be envious and uncharitable, and the rich not to be hard upon their unfortunate brethren. It is an idyllic picture, your Grace, and may commend itself to the rural clergy. But as a remedy for the grievous ills and injustices of modern life its efficacy is equal to that of rose-water for ulcers, or pills for earthquakes.

After reciting a number of social reforms, which have no more to do with religion than with the nebular hypothesis or the integral calculus, you exclaim that "Only the Church can supply the soul of the work." Elsewhere you say that "The English Church rejoices in the light of History, its investigations, its independent tests. She knows that 'Whatever record leap to light she never shall be shamed.'"

It is very good of you to appropriate Tennyson's fine praise of the Duke of Wellington, but I cannot find any independent historian to keep you in countenance. Macaulay's terrific impeachment of your Church, as the steady handmaid of tyranny, who only once raised her voice on behalf of the popular side, namely, in the reign of James II., when she herself was threatened—is too well-known to necessitate my quoting it. I will content myself, and I dare say more than satisfy you, by examining the list of the Bishops' votes in the House of Lords during the present century. When I have done, I am deceived if every candid reader does not allow that the Church has acted in a very extraordinary manner as "the soul" of reform.

In the early part of the century our jusisprudence was a scandal to civilisation. The death penalty was inflicted for trivial offences, and every Monday morning saw men and women hung in batches. Well, in 1810, a Shop-lifting Bill was before the House of Lords. Its object was to abolish capital punishment for stealing property to the value of five shillings from shops. It was defeated by 31 to 11 votes on the second reading. And how did the Bishops vote? Not one of them supported the Bill, and seven of them voted against it. The right reverend fathers in God declared that, so far as they were concerned, hanging should go on wholesale.

Seventy-three years later, in 1883, the Cruelty to Animals Acts Amendment Bill was before the House of Lords. Its object was to abolish the infamous aristocratic sport of pigeon shooting. It was defeated on the second reading by an overwhelming majority. And how did the Bishops act on this occasion? Did they listen to the cry of humanity? Did they show the Church to be "the soul" of reform? Not a bit of it. They acted like knaves and cowards. They were afraid to vote one way or the other, and not a single one of them spoke or took part in the division. They pleased their autocratic friends as far as they could afford to do so, without raising a storm of popular indignation, and helped to perpetuate an unspeakably brutal and degrading form of "sport."

G. W. FOOTE.

(To be continued.)

Digitized by Goo

PRIESTCRAFT AND RELIGION.

"The prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear and rule by their means; and my people love to have it so." JEREMIAH, v. 31.

SOME of the eighteenth century Deists, carried somewhat too far the argument that religion was at bottom to be identified with priestcraft. Religion has other and far deeper foundations than the self-interest of any particular class. It springs from the deepest wishes and emotions of the human mind. Fear and hope are alike its incentives; but, on the other hand, those who have insisted upon the natural foundations of religion, have often lost sight of, we might say, hid away from view, the fact that priestcraft has had a considerable share in fostering and developing the religious sentiments and making them subservient to its ends.

Toland was perhaps not quite right in summarising the matter in the four following lines:

> Natural Religion was easy first and plain,
> Tales made it Mystery, Offerings made it Gain,
> Sacrifices and Shows were at length prepar'd,
> The Priests ate Roast meat and the People stared.

But those most assuredly are equally wrong who study the phenomena of religion entirely oblivious that the self interest of those who live by it had any share in its maintenance.

As long as a savage pow-wows to his own fetish he suffers from superstition, but not from priestcraft. It is not long, however, before some medicine man persuades him that he has some more potent charm to drive away evil spirits, which he is ready to employ for a consideration. Here we see in simple shape how the very objects of faith may be modified through the action of cunning and self-interest.

Among primitive men the chief of a family or tribe usually has priestly functions, but with increase of territory and tribe comes accumulation of business, and the delegation of religious concerns to another. A priesthood thus established soon takes care to endow and perpetuate itself at the expense of the rest of the community. Wars, plagues and famines give the opportunity. If a battle is lost it is because the gods have been offended; the sacrifices have been insufficient; proper respect has not been shown to the men of God. The priestly caste is a leisured caste, and leisure enables them to cement its power. They are among the first historians and writers; and such stories as those of the deaths of Korah, Dathan and Abihu, for objecting to the authority of Moses and Aaron, and of the forty-two children torn by bears for reviling a prophet, show the sort of moral with which they inclined to adorn their tales. Some share of civil government too they usually contrived to obtain, of which we may find a remnant in the bishops in the House of Peers, and the clerical justices of the peace. Ecclesiastical courts, beginning as tribunals enforcing the discipline of superior priests over inferior priests, soon seek jurisdiction in all cases in which the clergy are concerned, and claim authority above that of any civil court. The history of law, no less than the history of science, is a record of the restraints put on priestly power.

It is to be hoped that the young brides who believe that the clergyman is entitled to the first kiss after they are married, do not know the original meaning of that custom. Herbert Spencer, Ecclesiastical Institutions, §646, says:

"On finding 'among the Friendly Islanders the chief priest was considered too holy to be married, but he had the right to take as many concubines as he pleased'—that among the Caribs, 'the bride was obliged to pass the first night with the priest, as a form essentially necessary to constitute the legality of the marriage'—that among some Brizilian tribes 'the Paje (priest), like the feudal lord of former times in some parts of England, enjoys the jus primæ noctis;' or again on being reminded of the extent to which prostitution in emples was a religious observance among Eastern people; we are shown, in yet another way, that there is no necessary connection between priestly guidance and right action."

It is difficult to contemplate the wide spread system of "taboo," upon which, as Prof. Robertson Smith in his recent Religion of the Semites, shows, the very notion of "holiness" is founded, without seeing how it subserved the interests of the priesthood. No one dared enter the holy of holies save the high priest, to touch the ark, even accidentally was certain death. It was even death to imitate the priestly ointment.

Take again the great central feature of all ancient religious, sacrifices. Who can suppose such an institution would have become so all important but that the priests found their account in the food sacrificed? This was not only always of an edible kind, but that of the very choicest quality. We are, indeed, told in plain terms that the sin offering was eaten by the priests (Lev. vii., 6), who even had its skin (vii., 8). Nor is this all. It is clear from Num. xviii,, 12-21, the priests had the right to pick the best of everything, "all the best of the oil, and all the best of the wine and of the wheat, the firstfruits of them which they shall offer unto the Lord, them have I given thee."

In the books of the Apocrypha, which according to the sixth Article of the Church of England, are to be read for example of life and instruction of manners, there is an amusing story of Bel and the Dragon, cut off, it is said, from the end of Daniel, because only found in the Greek. The story tells how the Babylonian priests had an idol called Bel, upon whom was spent every day twelve great measures of fine flour, forty sheep and six vessels of wine, which the god was supposed to consume. Daniel got the king's servants to strew ashes in the temple, and though the seals upon the doors were intact, showed him the footsteps of men, women and children, who of course came into the temple by a private way and consumed the provender supposed to be devoured by the god. This story, be it said, not only illustrates the custom in the temple of Bel, but also doubtless that in the temple of Jahveh, where a table of shew-bread was always kept and large holocausts often slaughtered.

No one can look at all carefully over the religious ground—it matters not at what time or in what country—without seeing the "footsteps of men, women and children." We suppose none can be so simple as to suppose the essential situation is changed, because priests prefer offerings in money to offerings in kind.

Just consider the question of tithes, how they have been preached as an essential part of religion from the time of Aaron until now. Think of the denunciations of those who dare to refuse these offerings and are thus guilty of robbery of God. Has not the Archdeacon of Montgomery quite recently told of the awful deaths of those who in Wales have dared to commit this blasphemy. Who can suppose that Christianity would be so stoutly defended by so many learned volumes were there not prizes in the shape of rich emoluments attached? Did we not know how men can juggle with themselves and from being called ministers of God come to identify their own interests with those of God, might we not be tempted to suppose that instead of priests being subsidiary to religion, religion in reality is subsidiary to priests.

J. M. WHEELER.

Bishop Fava, of Grenoble, having refused to permit the church to take part in the obsequies of the prefet of l'Isère, on the ground that he was a Freemason, has given rise to a discussion on the relation of the Church to the State; since the Church, whilst continuing to take State pay, consults only itself as to how its duties shall be performed. Sensible people see that if the Church wants liberty, it must at the same time resign its emoluments.

Digitized by Google

A BIBLE DISEASE.

WHEN one is an invalid confined to his room, doubtful as to his escape therefrom, he naturally, after taking the advice of the medicine man, is prone to consider whether there may or may not be remedies of a more recondite nature that will ease the sufferer and appease the disease. Those who are acquainted with the ideas of uncivilised, semi-civilised, and even of races fairly advanced in material prosperity such as the Italian, Russian and Irish peasantry, but who are mere children in mental progress, know that other means than scientific are resorted to when their bodies and minds are afflicted with disease. In the religions of antiquity it was a practice to offer in the temples gold, silver, or wax, and even wood models of the organs that had been affected after a cure, such care being attributed to the god to whom the fane was dedicated, and the ex voti were exhibited and preserved there to the god's or goddess's credit and power. Such offerings, with others, were of course a splendid source of revenue, and could be used by the priests when other means failed them. Christianity imitated these follies and all others of the ancient superstitions, extending them to an almost unlimited degree; at all events, limiting them only to their knowledge of the various diseases that flesh is heir to. They improved on the pagan practice, and assigned to each country, city, town, and village its patron saint. Churches, seas, rivers, hills, dales, markets, trades, and professions were in like manner provided with one or more of the saints in the calendar. When one had the epilepsy, what doctor was equal to St. Valentine? if the gout, what leech could cure it like St. Maur? St. Martin was invoked for the itch, St. Clara against sore eyes, St. Lucy against the toothache, St. Fiage against nameless diseases, St. John against poison, St. Quintan against coughs, St. Ruffin against madness, St. Romanus against devils, and a hundred others. When a cure was effected a present was made to the saint and deposited at his or her shrine. Every visitor to Catholic countries notes these offerings in every church. How many stop to think what size the churches would require to be if a part was set aside for an offering from those that had invoked the saints and died? Protestant Christians, or at least some of them, condemn these practices, it is true, generally on the ground that there is no warranty for them in the Bible; and if the Catholic join issue with them on this score they fall back on corrupted text or mistranslation.

But our object in this paper is to examine a Bible disease, and the peculiar remedy that removed it. In Deut. xxviii., 27, says "The Lord will smite thee with the botch of Egypt, and with the emerods, and with the scab, and with the itch, whereof thou canst not be healed."

The revised version has "boil" for botch, and "scurvy" for scab. Samuel Sharpe, in his version renders it thus. "Jehovah will smite thee with the ulcerous inflammation of Egypt, and with the piles, and with the scab, and with the itch, of which thou canst not be healed." Is Sharp justified in translating the Hebrew ophelim as piles? We shall see in the sequel. The French Bible gives d'hémorroides, and the Douay "The Lord strike thee with the ulcer of Egypt, and the part of thy body, by which the dung is cast out, with the scab, and with the itch, so that thou canst not be healed." The whole of this chapter of sixty-eight verses is devoted to the blessings and evils promised to the Jews, fourteen to blessings, and fifty-four to curses, ending with the enigmatical curse "and the Lord shall bring thee into Egypt again with ships, by the way whereof I spake unto thee. Thou shall see it no more again: and there ye shall be sold unto your enemies for bondmen and bond women, and no man shall buy you." With this preponderance of evil predicted against his own people one might exclaim

> "Add not unto thy cruel hate,
> Thy still more cruel love."

Let us see how this threat of the infliction of emerods (whatever they were) was carried out. When Eli judged the Jews, the Philistines, long after the settlement of the former in Canaan and notwithstanding God's oath that this land should be theirs for ever, were engaged in one of their frequent wars with them. The heathens were victorious; the sons of Eli, Hophni and Phineas were slain, together with thirty thousand footmen of the Jews, and the ark in which Jahveh was kept fell into the hands of the victorious Philistines. Eli, when he heard of the latter calamity, fell off his seat and broke his neck. His daughter-in-law, Phineas' wife, gave birth to Ichabod, and fell down dead. The ark was taken by the victors to Ashdod. This city, according to Joshua xv., 47, had been given to the tribe of Judah three hundred years before; and seven hundred years later, according to Nehemiah, it was still in the hands of the aboriginals, and had its own language, which the Jews could not understand; thus are Jahveh's promises fulfilled. Being at Ashdod, the Philistines put the ark in their temple with their god Dagon. But two of a trade seldom agree. During the night there was evidently a row between Jahveh and Dagon, for the next morning Dagon was laying flat on his face. To give their deity a chance, they set him up again, but unwisely left no seconds to see fair play, for the next morning there lay poor Dagon again with his head severed from his body and the palms of his hands cut off. Having given Dagon his quietus, Jahveh turned his attention to Dagon's worshippers, and killed some, and others were smitten with emerods. They naturally were anxious to get rid of it, but instead of sending it back to the Jews, they passed it on to another Philistine city, Gath, with the result that Jahveh again went at it, "and he smote the men of the city, both small and great, and they had emerods in their secret parts." The people of Gath sent it on to Ekron with the same result—emerods, more emerods. For seven months this went on, no one thinking or hinting that it would be wise to smash up this fatal box and its contents and burn the lot. Strange to say the priests and diviners of Dagon were called in and consulted, and their advice was that it would not do to send it back as they had captured it, but recommended the making of five golden mice and five golden emerods to send with it. This was done, put on a new cart yoked with two milch kine and sent on to Bethshemish. We will pass over the golden mice, but ye gods and little fishes! what were golden emerods? Ye Bible believers from Genesis to Revelation, enlighten us on this marvellous construction. What became of them afterwards? Did Samuel have the care of them. Did they pass as heirlooms to Saul and David, or did Solomon use them for the decoration of the temple? Golden emerods!! Why not try for the prevailing epidemic half a dozen golden influenzas and send them to prophet Baxter or St. Paul's Cathedral. And, now supposing Sharpe's translation is the correct one as given above, will the Christian Evidence Society take immediate steps to verify God's blessed word from the cavilings and revilings of ignorant sceptics, by at once requesting the Goldsmiths Company, (who I believe have aforetime given it a donation, "to stem the infidelity of the streets,") to make fine golden piles which might be sent for careful preservation to to the museum of the Royal College of Surgeons.

R. FORDER.

Mother: "Do you know, Bobby, who wrote the story of the loaves and fishes I've been telling you about?" Bobby: "No; but it sounds a good deal like pa's funny yarns."

Digitized by Google

WERE THE JEWS IN EGYPT?

Professor Albert Leighton Rawson, LL.D., who writes in the current number of the Freethinkers' Magazine, on "The Pharaoh of the Exodus," is one of the greatest of American travellers. He has spent many years in the East, and written on the Antiquities of the Orient, the Chorography of Palestine, etc. Like our own Freethinking traveller, Captain Richard F. Burton, he penetrated to Mecca disguised as a Mahommedan. It is worthy of note that this person, who has studied the questions on the spot, holds that the alleged twelve tribes of Israel, never had any definite historical existence as twelve tribes, the two known as Judah and Israel alone having historic reality. He also holds that there is no proof that the Jews were ever in Egypt, and justly remarks that "Apion, a Greek in the first century of our era, attacked Josephus for advocating what he considered an absurd claim of the Hebrews to a remote antiquity, and of which no one had ever heard of before, and Josephus was unable to offer one word of real evidence in support of the claim."

Prof. Rawson addresses himself to the task of replying to a paper in the Century Magazine, in which the Rev. John A. Paine seeks to identify Seti-Menephtah of the Egyptian Monuments, a first-born son of Pharaoh who sat on a throne, with the Pharaoh of the Exodus. Prof. Rawson says "This absolute identity, if it were true, would only prove that the writer of the story of the Exodus knew the inscription on the monument, for in the absence of any reference to the Hebrews, anywhere in Egypt, the story cannot be connected with history." But Prof. Rawson gives good reason to show that Seti-Menephtah cannot be so identified, since there is no word of any of his people being slaughtered with him, and he is honored in a way not bestowed on any who died a violent and untimely death.

Professor Rawson mentions that the Jews were unknown to ancient historians as Herodotus, Ctesias, Thucydides or Xenophon, and they were unknown to Pharaoh Shishak when he conquered Palestine and mapped it in 960 B.C. (Turin Papyrus). After showing the different dates assigned for the Exodus, varying from 1866 B.C. to 1283, he says:—

"The Exodus has no place in time. Have the scholars located it on the maps? No. From the earliest to the latest in the Christian era, we read of guesses and arbitrary assignments of localities, but of no proof to any one out of four or five routes or localities, had any claim above those of another site. The mythical Israelites are made to cross the Red Sea a few miles south of Suez, where the water is from fifty to seventy feet deep for eight miles across from Jebel Atakah to the shore near the so-called Wells of Moses; or to march around north of Suez, where for three or four miles the water is shallow enough to admit of wading, as Napoleon attempted to do; or they are assigned to a route by the Bitter Lakes, to which place the Red Sea is supposed to have extended at that time: and finally, Dr. Brugsch would have the route through or near the marshes by the shore of the Mediterranean Sea, which are filled with reeds, for the Hebrew name of Red Sea is Reedy Sea (Yam Suf).

In neither of these localities is there a stone or any monument, whatever, or any inscription, or anything that can be offered as evidence of the alleged Exodus. Some very sanguine Christians once proposed to explore the Red Sea, near Suez, for the wheels of Pharaoh's chariots, but no discoveries have been reported.

Of course there is a possibility that some fact underlay the Jewish traditions of Egyptian bondage, but Christian advocates are compelled to fall back on their imaginations for anything in the way of actual evidence.

At present bull-fights are usually performed on festal days, and form part of most great religious festivals, especially those in honor of the Virgin.—Lecky, "History Rationalism," vol. i., p. 303.

CHURCH AND SCHOOL.

The rumor that some of Mr. Goschen's surplus will be used to "assist" elementary schools in the Tory fashion has stirred up the Nonconformists, who loudly declare their intention to fight to the death against the disguised endowment of Church schools with the taxpayer's money. For that is what the Government is said to be contemplating. "Free education" is to be carried by giving Church schools all the cash they need, and freeing them from all control by the people's representatives.

A Pall Mall Gazette man has interviewed some of the Nonconformist leaders. Dr. Clifford proclaims himself a supporter of the "Secularist plank." He is for ending these wretched intrigues, and this constant struggle, by excluding all religion—even the reading of the Bible—from our public schools. But he confesses to a fear that the general body of Nonconformists will not accept this view.

The Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, of course, wants to keep the Nonconformist religion at the expense of Jews and Freethinkers. He thinks the conscience cause is quite good enough for them, but his blood boils at the idea of Nonconformist children experiencing the tender mercies of the conscience clause in Church schools. He is for keeping religious education in the curriculum, but there should be nothing sectarian; that is, there should be just as much Christianity taught as the sects can agree upon. Poor Hugh Price Hughes! He has as much logic in him as a donkey. He does not see that the Church will beat Dissent hollow on this wretched no-principle of self-interested compromise.

Dr. Parker is more sagacious. With all his faults he is no fool. He speaks out very clearly:—"I would get rid of all priestism, ecclesiasticism, and religious teaching of every sort and kind from rate-aided schools; all schools should become Board schools, and personally I would give no public aid where any religion is taught, whether Papal, Anglican, or Nonconformist, during school hours. Secularism pure and simple is my motto in day-school education."

It is thus apparent that the Dissenters are divided, and unless the division is healed the Church will win an easy victory. The duty of Freethinkers is clear. They must uphold the flag of secular education, and they must do so in loyal co-operation with such of the Nonconformists as accept and support the principle. A big battle is looming before us. If the Church wins, priestcraft and dogma will secure a new lease of life. If the Church is beaten, we shall be within measurable distance of a public school system without a tincture of religion. The priest will then be relegated to the pulpit, and the child's mind will be freed from his cramping influence.

ACID DROPS.

Dr. Sisley, in the current number of the Universal Review, gives some remarkable reputed cures for influenza. Sir Monier Williams, for example, tells a story of the cure of a whole village by a Hindoo doctor, who assembled the people, and solemnly let loose a pair of scapegoats into a neighboring wood which was supposed to be infested by demons. This method is exactly equivalent to the one ordered by God in Leviticus xvi. for getting rid of sin. Yet the one would doubtless be ridiculed by Sir Monier Williams as an absurd superstition, while the other is extolled as divine.

The Oberammergau Passion Play, which is performed every ten years in commemoration of the village being spared from a pestilence, will be produced on Whit-Monday next, and already great preparations are being made for the influx of visitors which the event brings to the Tyrol. Joseph Mayer again plays the character of J. C., and is in Vienna to have his photo taken in a number of positions. What a pity it is the original J. C. cannot favor his admirers with a faithfully executed photograph

Digitized by Google

They would be probably considerably astonished to find he was a swarthy hook-nosed Jew.

The important character of Judas will this year be taken by a person, Johann Zwink by name, whose capable representation of St. John ten years ago shows his fitness for the more difficult, if not higher, rôle of the red-haired disciple. Mary the Virgin will be taken by Rosa Leng, and Magdalene by Amalia Deschlam, both new to their respective parts.

The Vicar of Clewer St. Stephen says "If a Bible accidentally falls, we always kiss it on picking it up." All the reverend gentleman has now to do is to sit and talk to the Bible. Then he might give daily performances in public, so that the world might learn the glorious upshot of a State Church, and the perfection to which Bibliolatry may be carried.

Modern Society is a little out in its reckoning. It finds that one shilling per day was allowed for the expenses of the Archbishop of St. Andrews, who was a prisoner at Winchester in 1307. This amount included the cost of a man servant and a boy, with a daily mass by the chaplain. Of course it could not have been done for a shilling at the present purchasing-power of money. Multiply the shilling by twenty, and we shall be much nearer the right figure. Still there is a big chasm between £365 a year and the £15,000 which it takes to keep the Archbishop of Canterbury out of heaven.

A minister once said he would have a good time in this world were he not afraid of going to hell. He was asked "Do you live an honest life simply because there are gaols"?

A man called on an artist the other day and inquired if he could paint him a picture of his father. "Yes" said the artist. "Where is your father?" "Why" replied the man "he's been dead this ten years." "Dead ten years! How can I paint him then?" "Well!" said the visitor "I thought there would be no difficulty about that, seeing as you have just painted a picture of Moses who died some thousands of years ago." The artist, seeing the sort of customer with whom he had to deal, agreed for a certain sum to paint the required picture, and when completed a a day was fixed for its inspection. Uncovering the painting the artist showed his client what purported to be a likeness of his deceased parent. After mutely gazing a few minutes he asked "And is that my father?" "Yes" replied the painter. "Well, here's your money, but I never should 'a believed ten years would have made such a wonderful change."

The British Weekly is now discussing the question, "Does Christianity Forbid War?" Eighteen hundred years have not sufficed to unite Christendom on such a fundamental question as this, the truth being that texts can be found to suit either side of this or almost any other question. On the one hand J. C. is alleged to have said, "Resist not evil"; and on the other, "Let him that hath no sword sell his garment and buy one."

The Golden Gate thus reviews the most recent joint production of the Theosophists at Landsdowne Road. "If there is any Atma-Buddhi, Manasic, eidolon among our readers, whose Kama-Rupa has not yet assimilated sufficiently with the higher triads to understand all about the Devachanic state, we advise him to come up out of Kama-loka, impregnate his Ego with the ideal efflorescence of the abstract and read the book."

The Bishop of Lincoln officiated on Sunday morning at St. Agnes Church, Kennington Park. There was a fine display of pious trumpery. Decorations were on an extensive scale, and six enormous fir trees occupied the arches of the three bays of the nave. A richly-gilded screen was also on view. There was incense, orientation at the "Glorias," and kneeling in the middle of the Creed, with ceremonial processions at the opening and the close of the service, the bishop and his clergy perambulating the Bethel accompanied by a retinue of acolytes, thurifers, crucifers and banner-bearers. If Bishop King goes on at this rate he will soon eclipse Barnum.

Fancy all this addle-headed nonsense being thought conducive to the salvation of souls! Fancy a God who feels pleased at seeing a grave, elderly episcopus gallivanting about a church like a master of the ceremonies at a Foresters' Feast! Still, we don't at all object to Bishop King carrying on in this fashion. On the contrary, we rather like it. It helps to bring the Church into discredit, and that helps on the cause of Disestablishment—and Disendowment!

The Ecclesiastical Chronicle is responsible for the statement that the Bishop of Newcastle sometimes goes about in disguise in order the better to oversee the souls of his diocese. Recently while travelling third class in somewhat seedy clerical garb he was accosted by a pitman. "'Ise suppose ye're a poor curate noo, travelling wi the likes o' us." "I once was" replied the bishop, "but——" "Oh ay," cried the other "I understand; that cursed drink. It brings many down of all sorts."

Some of our contemporaries must have learnt their arithmetic from the Bible instead of Colenso. They gravely tell us—even the Speaker does—that we have just entered on the last decade of the nineteenth century. Now 1891 begins the last decade, not 1890; just as 1901, not 1900, begins the twentieth century.

A story is appearing in the papers of two reverend gentlemen, both canons, riding in a third-class carriage in Wales. Finding a poor hawker of stockings in their compartment, they call a porter to turn him out, as they want a private conversation. The porter, of course, declines to do anything of the kind, and says the hawker has as much right there as the parsons. But the poor hawker, being much the finest gentleman of the three, offers to go to another compartment, and does so, leaving the sky-pilots to have their talk out and feel themselves a mean and contemptible brace of prigs.

The legal adviser of the Salvation Army is a blind man. What a pity it is that Booth can follow Jesus in nothing but hauling in the shekels. If he could only do the clay-and-spittle ointment trick, Dr. Ranger might soon have a pair of sound optics.

"Should the Clergy Smoke?" Such is the momentous question discussed in Answers. Cannon Farrar and Mr. Talmage are emphatic against the "noxious weed." On the other hand Mr. Spurgeon smokes the very best cigars that money can buy, and it is confidently remarked that if a poll of the parsons were taken, the immense majority would like to "go and do likewise." Some think the clergy are quite right to smoke at home, but that they weaken their influence if they appear smoking in public. Just fancy Jesus Christ puffing an Havannah while descending from the mountain, or whiffing at a churchwarden while ascending up to heaven.

Sarah Hawkridge, a charwoman, put forward her little daughter, something over six, as a witness in her favor at Bow Street Police Court. Being asked "What book do you call the Bible?" the child answered "The Prayer-book." Mr. Bridge then asked her "Who will punish you if you tell an untruth?" and the child answered "No one." The reply was perfectly accurate, in all probability, but the child's evidence was refused. Had she told a long, lying, silly rigmarole about Hell and the Devil, the magistrate would have treated her as a competent witness.

A Nottinghamshire parson, at a local Conservative dinner, has delivered himself in response to the toast of the "Bishop and Clergy" as follows:—If they looked back at what had been done during the past year they would find that nearly everything had improved except the Grand Old Man, and he was afraid he would never improve, for he had just received the following telegram from Hades:

Says the Devil, "This place is as full as can be,"
But I would like to make room if I can;
So he let Ananias and Judas go free,
And took in the Grand Old Man.

We do not presume to question the statement that this political parson is in direct communication with the locality in question, only he has forgotten that it is supposed to be ruled by the father of lies.—Echo.

Digitized by Google

We don't wonder at a parson's receiving telegrams from Hades, for the Devil and the clergy have always been good friends, at least under the rose. What we should like to see the parsons able to boast is a telegram from Heaven. They haven't had a message from that quarter for nearly two thousand years.

Rev. Dr. Alexander Whyte has been lecturing at Edinburgh on Imagination. Among other things, he said that the first and the last pages of the Bible were the fruit of imagination. Whoever penned the first chapter of Genesis, containing the account of Creation, it was from his imagination that he copied it. And this in Scotland, the land of orthodoxy and heresy-hunts! What is the world coming to?

There was no mistake about Talmage having the influenza when in London. He got friends to offer him a good round sum and to put out big bills announcing his sermon at Holborn Central Hall, and was then unable to put in an appearance.

Talmage when in the East was forced to give his testimony to the devoutness of Mohammedans. He says that not one in a hundred thousand Christians would venture in public places to demonstrate his religious faith in the manners customary to the followers of the false prophet.

The Rev. Walter Walsh of Rye Hill Baptist Chapel, seems to be one of the shuffling Christians, who try to preach a brand new doctrine under guise of the old faith. "Lecturing on "Some Mistakes of Unbelief," he is reported as saying "They might say, too, that, Darwin knew more of science than did Moses, and Herbert Spencer was a better preacher of ethics than was Jacob, and with that he agreed. But unbelievers did not attack so much the theology of to-day as that of a past age." Christian Theology, he wished unbelievers to notice, has been moving on. Yes it has, simply because science and criticism have been at its heels, and it has moved so rapidly with Mr. Walsh, that Jesus Christ himself would not recognise it. "He that believeth not shall be damned" was disingenuously explained by Mr. Walsh as meaning only condemned or judged, irrespective of the other passages in the gospels which prove the belief in everlasting fire. But Mr. Walsh preaches the gospel of treacle with all the brimstone left out.

This is what the Reporter's Magazine says:—"If you want to make journalism pay, have nothing whatever to do with any of the religious papers if you can help it, as the majority of them pay very niggardly, whilst one or two are downright frauds."

The Rev. C. Lloyd Engstrom at the clerical meeting at Islington said of the cursing Psalms. "They need not be supposed to express any personal vindictiveness, but rather the sense of outraged justice." When the man after God's own heart says of his enemy "Let there be none to extend mercy unto him: neither let there be any to favor his fatherless children. Let his posterity be cut off," etc. We must suppose this pious wish towards fatherless children is the outcome of the sense of outraged justice. What greater outrages are there on justice than these defences of the Christian Evidence advocates?

Another Atheist didn't commit suicide, or rather another Christian did. His name was Moses Glass, and he dwelt at Frome. In a letter to a friend, Mr. Rawlings, he wrote—"Good bye, God bless you, as I hope he will forgive me." Talmage please note.

"Lay not up to yourself treasures upon earth" was hardly the motto of the late Rev. Hy. G. Watkins, vicar of St. John's, Potter's Bar, the value of whose estate amounts to upwards of £251,000.

Signor Baldacchino, secretary to the Congregation of Charity, Rome, has disappeared, leaving defalcations amounting to about 15,000 francs. He was very pious and was chosen by good people as the means of distributing their benefactions.

Who's Griffiths? Well, she advertises in the Church Times for a girl's school where the birch is laid on well. Fancy such an advertisement in the Freethinker! It is the Christians who cling like limpets to every form of stupid brutality.

The Jewish World seeks to show that modern scientific views upon life and death can be made to fit in with the Genesis story, as thus. In the earliest epoch of history, when life was manifested in unicellular organisms, death was unknown. The simple creatures of those days propagated their kind, much as Adam before the fall, by painless division. At last an ambitious amœba yearned for a more complex structure, and with it came death and the struggle with natural selection. The result of this reconciliation of science and Genesis is, of course, to make Adam a unicellular organism. But this need trouble no lover of his Bible.

The North West London Gazette reports a smart attack by Mrs. Besant on the inspiration of the Bible in a lecture delivered at Milton Hall. The reporter finds one thing in her favor—she does not, like Mr. Foote, go "out of her way to revile the Creator." The reporter forgets that Mrs. Besant has now got a God, while Mr. Foote has none.

The reporter asks how it is, if Freethought is spreading, that our meeting-places are so few. He should remember that, under the existing law, Secularism cannot receive a legacy. If a legacy is left it—as in the case of Mr. Spencer of Manchester—the Christian law sets the legacy aside. Surely, after robbing us of what we should possess, it is rather hard to ask us where are the places we have built with it.

Mr. Bradlaugh asked the House of Commons to abolish this infamous law, but an overwhelming majority refused to do so. It is high time that Christians ceased robbing us. If they treated us with common honesty we could smile at their impertinent questions.

Chief Rabbi Adler died at Brighton on Tuesday morning. He was a tough specimen of his race, but he was not distinguished by any special service in the cause of progress. We believe the poor East-end Jews, who made a fight against sweating, did not succeed in gaining any of his sympathy. There is a more distinguished Dr. Adler in America, a man of liberal ideas and character, with whom the deceased Rabbi was sometimes confused in the public mind.

The Philistines have a hard grip on poor Ernest Parke, who is doing twelve months' imprisonment for "libelling" Lord Euston. No one acquainted with Mr. Parke will doubt his being animated by a high sense of duty, and we hope the agitation for a shortening or a mitigation of his sentence will be successful. We feel a special interest in Mr. Parke for he is a Secularist. He was down for a toast at both annual dinners of the London Secular Federation, although his press duties prevented his fulfilling the engagement.

Enterprising burglars broke into the Oratory of St. Philip Neri, Birmingham, on Monday night and rifled the poor box. We don't know what Cardinal Newman thinks of it but, in our opinion, the crime of the burglars was less in breaking into a church than in robbing the poor. We hope the rascals will be captured.

Cardinal Newman's last days ought not to be disturbed by such a miserable incident. He is the only Catholic dignitary for whom we have very much respect, and we have spent many an hour over his exquisite pages. We can imagine his lofty disdain of mere ecclesiasiastics like Manning. When that bigoted priest was shouting damnation at Mr. Bradlaugh, the great Cardinal at Birmingham refused to sign a petition against the admission of an Atheist to Parliament; saying, in his quiet, dignified way that he did not understand the fuss that was being made; he only knew of one oath, the Christian oath, and that was abolished when Jews were admitted to the House of Commons.

Digitized by Google

MR. FOOTE'S ENGAGEMENTS.

Sunday, January 26, Secular Hall, New Church Road, Camberwell, 7.30, "An Hour with the Devil."

Feb. 2, Hall of Science, London; 9, Blackburn; 16, Milton Hall, London; 23, Hall of Science, London.

March 2, Manchester; 9, Camberwell; 16, Cardiff; 23 and 30, Hall of Science, London.

April 6, Milton Hall; 13, Portsmouth; 20, Hall of Science; 27, Hall of Science.

May 4, Newcastle; 11, South Shields.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

LITERARY communications to be addressed to the Editor, 14 Clerkenwell Green, London, E.C. All business communications to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C.

THE Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the office, post free to any part of Europe, America, Canada and Egypt, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 6s. 6d.; Half Year, 3s. 3d.; Three Months, 1s. 7½d. Australia, China and Africa:—One Year, 8s. 8d.; Half Year, 4s. 4d.; Three Months, 2s. 2d. India:—One Year, 10s. 10d.; Half Year, 5s. 5d. Three Months, 2s. 8½d.

SCALE OF ADVERTISEMENTS.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 3s.; Half Column, 15s.; Column, £1 10s. Special terms for repetitions.

IT being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will in future receive the number when their subscription expires in a colored wrapper.

J. B. P.—Cuttings are always welcome.

PETER.—Your verse is hardly up to the mark.

"FREETHINKER" CIRCULATION FUND.—A. Anderson, 5s.; J Murray, 1s.; G. J. Judd, 1s.; J. Mosenthal, £1 1s.; C. H., £1. J. Crabtree, £1.

NORTH DEVON.—Yes, the second series of Bible Heroes will be bound up like the first. There was a break-down with the last two numbers, but we hope to have them ready again some time next week.

P. BRABAZON.—Thanks. Extracts are always welcome.

A. B. MOSS.—Always pleased to hear from you. We know the younger lecturers require encouragement, and we have always done our best to give it, without being very cordially seconded.

G. H. JUDD.—Glad to hear the Freethinker is selling well in your district. We have dealt with H. L. Hasting's lecture before. His footnote about Thomas Paine's deathbed is a lie, and his statement that Paine crawled into a drunkard's grave would be best answered, perhaps, by a blow on the mouth.

J. KEAST.—We thank you for your efforts to promote our sale. So long as newsagents are too timid or bigoted to do justice to this journal, we have a claim on the good offices of our readers, who, by lending the Freethinker about, are able to materially promote our circulation.

J. BURRELL.—See paragraph.

AMICUS says: "I have read your open letter to the Bishop of Peterborough with great satisfaction, and am circulating the pamphlet amongst my friends. I hope many other readers will go and do likewise."

C. H. KELF (Newcastle).—Canon Talbot's answer is disingenuous. The Jews at the time of Christ are supposed to have spoken a Syrian dialect, such as we have a fragment or two of in the Gospels. That they spoke Greek is an absurd statement. Josephus says his countrymen in Palestine were averse to learning any language but their own, and he himself—an educated man of leisure—mastered Greek with great difficulty.

JAMES HOOPER.—It would be impertinent to question the solidity of a veteran like yourself. We know what gallant work you did in the stormy days of old.

A. DOEG, secretary of the Liverpool Branch, writes:—"I hope to see in next week's Freethinker that you have suffered no ill effects from your journey here. On behalf of the Branch I beg to thank you for your valuable counsel, and sacrifice of personal comfort, in what seemed to us a moment of danger."

W. ELDER (Paisley).—Pleased to see your "fist" again. We don't know of any good book against Swedenborgianism. White's Life of Swedenborg is very plain-spoken on the subject of his madness.

A. HINDLEY.—Cuttings are always welcome.

IGNORAMUS.—(1) Mr. Holyoake's works in print can be ordered through Mr. Forder. (2) Yes. (3) Of course. (4) We don't know, unless the herding of children away from home breeds mischief. (5) Perhaps so. (6) Read the account of Socrates by Xenophon. (7) Jesus apparently meant that those who are interested in the things of this life are careless about the things of the next. (8) Yes. (9) Competitions without prizes are apt to be dull.

C. B. HYDE.—If you wish to join the N.W. London Branch you can do so any Sunday evening at Milton Hall. The general Secretary is Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, E.C. We hope to see a large accession of members this year.

G. STANDRING acknowledges receipt of 2s. 6d. from C. Williams for the London Secular Federation.

C. H.—We shall be happy to receive your "occasional donation," and beg to thank you for helping to lighten the burden of conducting this journal.

STUPID AWE.—The lady's explanation of the barren fig-tree business is sheer nonsense. Besides, Scripture says "the time of figs was not yet." Anyhow, cursing a barren fig-tree is a queer game for a wise man to play, much more an all-wise God. If that young lady ever gets married, and has no children, she would hardly recognise the Lord's right to curse her for it.

SHANKS.—You ought to be happy with thirty Freethinkers on board your ship. Don't quarrel with the pious folk who come on board to convert you. They are deuced malicious when crossed, and poor Jack has few rights. When you have a collar round your neck you must go easy. Kick out now and then, when it is safe.

PAPERS RECEIVED.—Reading Observer—North-Western Gazette—Menschenthum—Western Figaro—Evening Standard—Neues Freireligioses Sonntags-Blatt—La Verité—Bulletin des Sommaires—Fritankaren—Jewish World—Der Arme Teufel—Liberator—Leicester Daily Post—Referee—Newcastle Daily Leader—Child of the English Savage—Manchester Guardian—Philadelphia Sunday Item—Freethinkers' Magazine—Der Lichtfreund.

FRIENDS who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish our attention directed.

CORRESPONDENCE should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

SUGAR PLUMS.

SIR DAVID WEDDERBURN, who presided over the National Congress in Bombay, has arrived in England. He gives a very encouraging account of Mr. Bradlaugh's health, describing him as quite a changed man. We hope Mr. Bradlaugh's presence will soon corroborate this good news.

INSTEAD of being at home nursing himself, Mr. Foote was lecturing at Liverpool on Sunday. The afternoon audience was far from large, but the morning lecture was well attended, and in the evening the hall was very unpleasantly crowded. Mr. Foote did his best to re-assure the Branch. There does not appear the least danger of a prosecution at present. The police appear to see that they far exceeded their duty, and the idea of treating Freethought lectures as "entertainments" under the local Act of 1889 is simply preposterous. But whatever follies the authorities may commit, the Branch will assert its rights, and will be supported by the whole Freethought party. Mr. Foote's remarks on this point were lustily applauded.

THERE are some able young men connected with the Liverpool Branch, well fitted to occupy the platform. Mr. Foote urged upon them, as well as upon the older members, the advisability of forming a South Lancashire Secular Federation for local purposes. It is to be hoped that this project will be matured during the summer, and carried into effect in the autumn. Mr. Foote promises all the help in his power, and ample publicity shall be afforded in our columns.

THOMAS PAINE'S birthday will be celebrated next Wednesday evening at the London Hall of Science. Messrs R. O. Smith and G. Standring, on behalf of the Secular Federation, have provided a good entertainment, and Mr. Foote will deliver a brief address on the author of the Age of Reason and the Rights of Man. Dancing will begin at 11 o'clock. The tickets are one shilling each, and the profits will accrue to the Freethinkers' Benevolent Fund, which is in a sad state of depletion. There ought to be a big gathering.

OUR readers are again invited to circulate Mr. Foote's exposure of the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes's "Converted Atheist." The articles that appeared in the Freethinker are reprinted, with a Prologue and an Epilogue, at the lowest possible price of one penny. One gentleman, living near the headquarters of the Wesleyan Sisterhood, has taken five dozen copies for distribution. Mr. Forder will supply quantities at trade price to private purchasers.

SWEDISH PRISONER FUND.—We have received the following—A. Anderson, 5s.; Lover of Liberty, £1 10s.; H. E. L., £1; A Friend, 10s.; A Radical, £2.

Digitized by Google

MR. R. FORDER acknowledges receipt of the following—J. Mosenthal, £1 1s.; F. Goodwin, 2s. 6d.; J. H. Powe, 2s. 6d.; H. Abbott, 1s.; J. Roos, 1s.; F. Roos, 1s.; J. Robinson, 1s.; C. H. G., 6d.; A. C. G., 6d.; S. Hartman, 5s.; A. Watts, 2s. 6d.

WE have just received a long letter from Captain Otto Thomson. He thanks us for keeping the Swedish persecutions before the Freethinkers of England, and says that the help we are sending is putting new courage into the veins of the gallant little band of heroes who are holding up the flag of the Fritankeren. Already their cause is attracting the quiet support of some influential people in Sweden, and letters of sympathy are coming in from the leading Freethinkers of America.

The Reading Observer gives a very admirable report of Mr. Foote's recent lecture in the Assembly Room. It also reports a lecture on the following evening by the great Barber of Northampton. This worthy could not help seeing that Mr. Foote had spoken like a gentleman to everybody's satisfaction; so he explained it on the ground that Mr. Foote was "feeling his way." "Wait till he is successful here," said Barber, "and then you will hear some terribly strong language." Well, if Mr. Foote tempered the wind to the shorn lamb, he showed himself a dexterous propagandist.

WHO on earth employed this ignoramus of a Barber to hold forth at Reading? According to the Observer report he opened his mouth as follows:—"The New Testament could not have been written in any other age than the first century, because the language of the New Testament ceased to be spoken after the destruction of Jerusalem." Gods and little fishes! What does the man mean?

MR. FOOTE'S lecture at Reading resulted in the formation of a Branch of the National Secular Society, which was started on Sunday evening with seventeen members. We believe the Branch will double its strength in a month or two.

J. MORISON DAVIDSON is contributing a series of "Apostles of Democracy" to the Weekly Dispatch. The second, which appeared last week, was on Thomas Paine. Mr. Davidson deals fairly with Paine's religious views, and denounces the humbugs who tried to convert him on his death-bed, and who, having failed to do so, bespattered his memory with slander. A generous tribute is also paid to gallant old Edward Truelove.

A CORRESPONDENCE has been taking place in the Wigan Examiner on the contentions between Papists and Protestants on the true Catholic religion, the Immaculate Conception, etc. We are pleased to notice that J. K. Tomlinson has struck in, and in smiting the old Romish Church he aims some pretty severe blows at Christianity itself.

VOLUME II. of The Life, Labors, and Times of Robert Owen, by the late Lloyd Jones, brought out under the superintendence of Mr. Malcolm Lloyd Jones, will shortly be published by Swan Sonnenschien and Co.

MR. J. CLARKE, our latest recruit on the platform, is to lecture at Liverpool on February 23, and he is anxious to spend a fortnight lecturing in the neighborhood. The South Lancashire towns would do well to engage his services. Mr. Clarke is not exorbitant. He only wants to live, in order to work.

MR. A. B. MOSS lectures in Baskerville Hall, Birmingham, to-day (Jan. 26). He will be happy to see old friends and meet new ones. Mr. Moss is a zealous propagandist and deserves support.

THE Rev. W. Walsh delivered the first of his course of lectures on Sunday afternoon in the Nelson Street Lecture Hall, Newcastle. There was over an hour's discussion, and the Secularists are delighted with the result. The Branch is trying to bring about a debate between Mr. Foote and Canon Talbot.

LONDON SECULAR FEDERATION.—We have received the following: A. Cooper, 2s. 6d.; Amicus, 2s. 6d.; R. Bell, 5s.

HALL OF SCIENCE CHILDREN'S PARTY:—Mr. Ely, 6d.; W. T. Leekey, 3s.; W. J. Woillaume, 5s. and box of sweets; a box of sweets from R. A. Cooper, Norwich.—R. Forder.

THE Camberwell Branch is going to have a Children's Party on February 12. Subscriptions and donations of articles for the Christmas Tree will be gratefully received by the new secretary, Mr. W. Lappage.

A NEW and fine crematorium has been erected at Zurich, where we learn the cost of five burials will only be ten shillings. The movement does not progress so rapidly in France as we should fancy, judging from a list of only twenty-one, eleven men and ten women, who were cremated from January to October last year. It takes time to break down old customs, and no doubt a change of feeling upon the subject of burial is going on both in England and on the Continent.

I HAVE seen bodies cremated at the crematorium at Milan, and there is absolutely nothing repulsive in the process. I made up my mind to be cremated directly I had seen "how it was done." One can look forward with a certain amount of pleasure to spending one's time till the day of the trumpet-call as a nice little parcel of clean white ashes in a nice clean urn, but there is something repellent in the idea of passing a few centuries in a damp vault—merely a packing-case of corruption. "Tinned corpse" is an abomination, and the time has come to say so. We can only hurry cremation on by ceasing to mince our words about the present loathsome and pestilential system of human interment.—G. R. Sims in Referee.

WE read that the Rev. F. H. Stead, a congregational minister of Leicester, brother to the editor of The Review of Reviews, has resigned in order to devote a year to systematic reading and research. But for the fact that his modesty has been so well advertised, we should have a word of praise for Mr. Stead. We hope his study will be thorough, and that we shall henceforth congratulate him upon the result as we do now upon having escaped the shackles of the ministry.

THE Freidenker of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, issues an almanac with its number for Jan. 7. The Freidenker can be commended to all readers of German as full of interesting readable matter.

WE are glad to notice that the portrait of Mr. H. L. Green, the editor, adorns the January number of the Freethinkers' Magazine. Mr. Green is a long bearded man with a good head and keen, thoughtful, American face. There are also portraits of Miss Helen H. Gardener, the lecturess, and Miss Ira C. Craddock, the new secretary of the American Secular Union. Views of the medallion portraits of Palearia, Sarpi, Vanini, and Campanella, which adorn the Bruno monument, are also given. The literary contents include a lecture by Col. Ingersoll; "Religion or no Religion?", an open letter to H. O. Pentecost by A. B. Bradford; an able article on "The Pharaoh of the Exodus," by Prof. A. L. Rawson, who holds there is no proof the Jews were ever in Egypt, Reminiscences by Lucy Colman, and other interesting articles.

THE San Francisco Freethought Publishing Company is fairly started. Freethought has removed to new and larger premises, No. 838 Howard Street, San Francisco.

MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, editor of the "Children's Corner" of the New York Truthseeker and a writer in the Boston Investigator, has recently been elected to the School Board of Fall River, Massachusetts, her opponent being a popular Episcopal minister.

MR. SYMES has begun in the Liberator what promise to be important articles on "The Roman Catacombs." He points out the absurdity of supposing that a persecuted people, as the early Christians are said to have been, being allowed to excavate 350 miles of galleries, and shows that the symbols found in the Catacombs are rather Pagan than peculiarly Christian.

Digitized by Google

WE are delighted to hear from the Liberator that our Sydney friends will lay the foundation stone of their handsome new hall in Campbell Street in the present month of January. Mr. Collins and the Sydney friends are to be congratulated. There is no doubt Secularism has a large future before it in all the colonies.

THE French Federation of Freethinkers have started a monthly Bulletin, which may be obtained from the Secretary, 6 Rue de Jarente. We notice that the full report of the Paris International Conference, Sept. 15—20, 1889, is now in the press. It will consist of a volume of 320 pages and be published at two francs.

WE are glad to notice from La Verité that there is a decided improvement in the organisation of French Freethinkers, owing to the impulsion given by the Congress of September last.

MR. SAM STANDRING debated on Monday and Tuesday at Liverpool with Mr. George Wise of the Christian Evidence Society. The subject was Atheism, there were good audiences, and we hear that Mr. Standring gave great satisfaction to the Secular side.

PARSONS PULL THE STRINGS.

According to the codes issued by the Education Department, the religious opinions of any candidate for the post of a school teacher under a School Board are not to be inquired into when seeking employment. Yet the following advertisements appear in an educational contemporary :—

EMBERTON SCHOOL BOARD. — WANTED, 25th of March or earlier, a Certificated MASTER. Member of Church of England preferred.

GADDESBY SCHOOL BOARD.—WANTED immediately, for a Small Mixed School, a First Class Certificated MISTRESS. Must be Musical and able to play a small Organ in Church.

This shows how the Churchmen abuse their positions as Board School Managers.—Star.

WHAT DID HE DO WITH THEM?

A stranger in clerical garb, after looking in the window of Mr. Bunton, Banbury, walked into the shop and inquired how many copies of the Christmas Number of the Freethinker (some of which were exhibited in the window) he had. Mr. Bunton replied, "About forty." "How much are they?" inquired the priest. "They are threepence per copy," was the reply. "I will take them," said the priest. No sooner said than done; the window was cleared of the three copies there were in it, and after muttering a few words, in which "Ought to be burnt" were clearly distinguishable, the priest walked off with his good-sized parcel of Freethinkers, and Mr. Bunton had the money to send for a fresh supply. He hopes to find a few more customers like this one.

OBITUARY.

It is my painful duty to record the death of Mr. William Perry, member of the Westminster Branch, N. S. S. He contracted Influenza which turned to rapid consumption. His end was very peaceful. His wish was that the Secular Service should be read at his grave. The interment took place on Tuesday afternoon the 14th. inst. at Kensal Green Cemetery. Mr. F. Haslam conducted the funeral service and read the beautiful words of the oration for the dead in an impressive and solemn manner. There were present members of the Branch, also from the political club of which the deceased was a member. The late Mr. Perry was a most zealous and earnest worker, always endeavoring to further the cause at every opportunity, and won the respect of all he came in contact with. For the last two years he had travelled with the Home Rule Van having visited every county in England. He leaves a widow (equally earnest) and two daughters to mourn his loss.—J. BURRELL.

I have just received a notification of the death of a staunch Atheist, Mr. Andrew Feeny, of Stranraer. He was one of the promoters of the Ulster Branch of the National Secular Society, and has been a steady member and supporter since its formation He was originally a Roman Catholic, and he left that creed through becoming convinced by earnest thought that it was not the friend of truth and humanity, and that its promises were greater than their hopes of realisation. Mr. Feeney had been ailing for a considerable time before his decease, but his convictions were in no way shaken, and he died an Atheist.—W. KNOX (Sec. Ulster Branch N. S. S.)

WHERE IS HE?

Where is the God of tradition,
Who rules the whole world by his will,
And calms the storm and the tempest?
Is he here? Alive? Is he real?

What does he—this God you worship?
Does he soothe your sorrow and fear?
Are the wrongs and ills all righted?
When you pray, is he quick to hear?

Where is he?—God, who loves justice?
Is not nature shamed by the name?
Are the honest e'er successful?
Aren't intrigue and scheming the game?

Is he not found in the dollar,
Whose impress the people adore?
By which some are highly favored,
Though vile in their hearts, to the core?

Has he gone to some mystic land?
Has he left this world and its care?
Or is he a name; no person?
A delusive belief, a snare?

In name we call all men brothers,
Yet rob them on every hand;
Keep from them nature's endowment:
A right to the use of the land.

Our laws are made for the robbers,
Who plunder and legally steal;
Live on the earth's best fruition—
Do naught for humanity's weal.

Oh, Thought! Thou mighty exponent!
Oh, Mind! Thy good work has begun!
Some wrongs e'en now thou hast righted,
But yet remains, much to be done.

HENRY BIRD.

THOSE POOR MISSIONARIES.

From the West End Review we extract the following :—Harrowing pictures are drawn of the perils and sacrifices which fall to the foreign missionary's lot. There is no class of self-denying divines which should have such a claim on our pennies as those evangelists who are without script or purse. Here is a deserving case :—

Preliminary Notice.—We are instructed by the Rev. H. R. Pigott (who is leaving the island) to sell at his residence, Baptist Mission House, Maradana, on Saturday, 7 Dec., 1889, all his excellent household furniture, mostly in nandun and satinwood, made to order. Handsome lamps, glass and china ware, rattan matting, cooking-stove, and general effects. Choice ferns and flowers in pots, several fine milch cows, bulls, and calves; a light pony dogcart, English and other choice poultry, &c. Also (if not previously sold) a large American organ (Mason and Hamlin's) fit for a church.—J. Auwardt and Co., Auctioneers.—Advertisement from a Ceylon newspaper.

AN INNOCENT.

Ever since the occasion on which the late Lord Beaconsfield wrote an important letter and dated it "Holy Thursday," there has been a craze for adopting this ecclesiastical nomenclature. A properly-brought-up parson, therefore, when he writes to one of his flock, heads his letter say, "Feast of Saint Port Winus," and the docile sheep commences his reply with, say, "Feast of Saint Barebones the Martyr." So thoroughly has this habit become ingrained, that it showed itself quite unexpectedly at the close of a recent watch night service, when a young and heavily moustached pastor was bidding good-bye to the tender ewe lambs of his fold. "Yes," said the pastor, "we have had a glorious Advent, a bright and happy Christmas Day, and now I wish you a happy New Year." "Thanks, thanks," exclaimed the gushingest of his young lady adorers. "And I'm sure we all hope you will have a jovial Circumcision—and many of them." The curate trembled violently; but he was equal to the occasion, for he replied, "Ah, you have forgotten the Innocents' Day, and (aside) I fancy you're one of them."

Fanny Emma Harvey, a lady residing at Marlborough Cresent, Bedford Park, when charged with using threats to the Rev. Ernest Kevill Davies of Longridge Road, Earl's Court, stated that the prosecutor's father the Rev. Kevill Davies seduced her while preparing her for confirmation.

Digitized by Google

THE PRESBYTERIAN DILEMMA.

By Hugh O. Pentecost.

Delivered at New York, Sunday, December 15, 1889.

(Concluded from p 28)

A great deal is said against long-faced Presbyterian ministers, but I declare to you that a Presbyterian minister who is not long-faced shows that he does not believe in his creed, in which case he is a deceiver and a humbug; or else that he does believe it and can still be jolly, in which case he is a loathsome monster.

Calvinism is a horrible doctrine, but it grows out of the belief in a personal God by logical necessity. Because it is horrible Presbyterians are beginning to shrink from it, but because it is logical they do not know what to do with it. And this is their dilemma.

If you will have a personal God he must be a devil. It was the logical necessity of this that led to the invention of the devil, who is simply a bad God upon whom all the ugly things may be blamed. But I leave it to any thinking person to decide whether the devil isn't a gentleman beside the Presbyterian God. It is no use to talk about putting a God of love in place of Calvin's God. The theory will not work. It does not fit the facts. There is no use to talk about there being a good God while popes and archbishops live in palaces, supported by servant girls and sewer cleaners; while Christian villains are in office and good Atheists are in prisons; while rotten men are millionaires and pure women are paupers. There may be a bad God, but there is certainly not a good one. The question that is up for decision is whether there is a Calvinist God or none. There is no logical middle ground. The great thought battle is on, and if the world gives up its Divine Monster it must go on to Agnosticism.

But the funniest thing imaginable is to observe how the Presbyterians are going to settle this question about their creed. They are going to settle it by majority vote. A number of doctors of divinity—the thing is sick enough, in all conscience, to need doctoring—are going to come together and decide whether there are any non-elect infants in hell or not. And they are going to decide it by vote! If ninety-nine Presbyterians say the infants are in hell and a hundred say they are not, why, then they are not. Facts manufactured by a vote of the majority! If I owned a marble statue that couldn't see the fun of that, I'd break it all up.

I can understand how a majority can make a minority do something. Because they possess the necessary power. But I cannot understand how a thing that is not true becomes true by a majority vote, or how a thing that is true becomes not true by a majority vote. How perfectly absurd the whole thing is. Some two hundred and fifty years ago the Holy Spirit, who leads the Church into all truth, taught the Westminster divines all that is in the famous confession. And now the same Holy Spirit is about to tell the Presbyterians of to-day that he was only joking then in what he said about heathens and infants being damned. Why, one of the Presbyteries has already decided, by vote, that only non-elect adults go to hell—that there are no non-elect infants. They say nothing about the exact age at which the non-elect person is in danger. But that was, no doubt, an oversight. They might have specified, as well as not. All they need is a majority vote to decide it. And now the interesting query arises as to whether the vote of this Presbytery settles the question or whether we shall have to wait for more returns.

I suppose it is not in very good taste to joke about such things, but, really, if there were not a funny side to it, I should lose my temper, or else burst into tears, over what seems to me to be one of two things: hopeless idiocy or shameless hypocrisy. And yet I suppose there are persons among the Presbyterians to whom it appears quite possible to create facts by a majority vote.

But there is one thing this voting does. It offers the tangible evidence that what I am always telling you is true. It shows you at a glance that every church is simply a machine for the management of religious politics. A creed is not meant to be a declaration of what is true. It is the formulation of a number of compromise statements upon which the religious politicians are willing to agree, and it is therefore, necessarily, not true. The Westminster Confession was framed for the purpose of uniting several parties in the Church. Every other creed is formed for the same purpose. A creed is to the Church exactly what a platform is to a political party. The Church is nothing more nor less than a religious political party. In the Catholic Church things are settled in the star chamber, because that Church is a monarchy. In the Protestant Church things are prepared in a caucus and settled in a convention, because that Church is a republic. The Church has its office holders chosen from among the clergy, and the clergy constitute a set of politicians, as ambitious, as scheming, as timeserving, as dishonest, as tricky, as any other set of politicians in the world.

Look at them as they sat in the Metropolitan Opera House a few evenings ago, almost within arm's length of the suffering poor, spending two hours over a course dinner, talking and laughing gaily, while an orchestra gave them music, and strains from the German opera in the main room of the building floated in upon them. After such a dinner, in such a place, the reverend politicians arose and began to discuss, in witty speeches, whether the heathen and non-elect infants are really damned through all eternity or not. And by and by they will decide that the Church has been teaching lies for two hundred and fifty years, and will start out with a fresh political platform, and declare that everybody will be damned who believes the old and does not believe the new creed.

How can sensible people have any reverence for such an institution? How can you fail to see that it was against such hypocrisy, such Phariseeism, that noble Jesus flung himself in scorn and hatred? How can you fail to see that one of the things that makes life worth living is the privilege of fighting against this organised hypocrisy, this infamous debaser of the mind, that has created a God who is the scandal of the world and will not give him up, if by any skill of platform making he can be kept upon his cruel throne?—Twentieth Century.

THE DEVIL HAS THE BEST OF IT.

A writer in the New York Sun has been figuring up an approximate estimate of the population of hell. He finds in round numbers the earth has a population of 1,300,000,000, of whom 300,000,000 are professed Christians, the other 1,000,000,000 being Mohammedans, Buddhists, Jews, pagans, and heathen. The whole race was condemned to eternal punishment for the sin of Adam, from the consequences of which there is no redemption save in the blood of Christ. Biblical chronology gives the earth a period of 6,000 years. From Adam's time to Christ was 4,000 years, during which period no human souls were saved. The population may then have averaged 1,000,000,000. Three generations, or 3,000,000,000, pass away in each centnry. Forty centuries, therefore, consigned 120,000,000,000 of men to eternal fire, and, for all we know, they are there now. In the 1,900 years which have elapsed since the birth of Christ 57,000,000,000 more of human beings have lived and died. If all the Christians, nominal and real, who have ever lived on the face of the earth have been saved, they would not number more than eighteen thousand millions. Now, if we deduct this latter number from the grand total of one hunded and seventy-seven thousand millions, we find one hundred and fifty-nine thousand millions of souls who are suffering the torments of hell fire, as against the eighteen thousand milions who have escaped. But this is not the whole truth. Nobody believes that more than ten per cent. of the professed Christians are saved. Calvinists themselves say that the elect are few. If this is a fact, heaven contains but eighteen hundred millions, against a population in hell of one hundred and seventy-five thousand millions. But what a horrible scheme of theology it is that thus crowds a place of eternal torment!

PROFANE JOKES.

Rev. Mr. Poser: "I defy you to give me a single reason why the Apostles should not be believed." Mr. Incredulous: "They were fishermen."

"Eh, mon," exclaimed an elder, in a tone of pathetic recollection, "our late minister was the man! He was a poorful preacher, for in the short time he delivered the word amang us, he knocked three pulpits to pieces and danged the guts out o' five Bibles!"

The judgment of Solomon was attempted by a Transatlantic judge recently. Two women claimed the same negro baby. The puzzled judge seized the baby, pulled the bowie-knife from his belt, and proposed to halve the child, with the unexpected result that both claimants rushed forward, exclaiming, "Boss, don't kill him; you may have him yourself."

Digitized by Google

FORTHCOMING MEETINGS.

LONDON.

Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, E.C., 7, Mr. G. J. Holyoake, "Proposal of a Society for the Reformation of the Upper Classes."

Camberwell—61 New Church Road, S.E., 7.30, Mr. G W. Foote, "An Hour with the Devil.'

Milton Hall, Kentish Town Road N.W., 7.30, Mr. B. Hyatt, "Three Bible Stories Astronomically Ex lained."

Battersea—The Shed of Truth, Prince of Wales's Road, 11.15, W. Heaford, "The Bishop of Peterborough's Repudiation of Christianity"; 7.15, Capt Pfou des, "Buddhism." Social evenings every Tuesday. Debates every Friday at 7.30.

Ball's Pond Secular Hall, 86 Newington Green Road, N, 7, Mr. J. B. Coppock, "The Origin of the Present Phase of the Universe."

Bethnal Green—2 Railway Place, Cambridge Road (temporary premises), 8.15, Mr. A. Eagle will open a public discussion on "Christ's Sermon on the Mount.' Admission free; all are invited.

Edmonton Assembly Rooms, Silver Street, 7, S. Standring, "The Present Crisis in the N S S."

Old Southgate—Cromwell Hal', 7, J. Rowney, "The Resurrection."

Wood Green—Jolly Butchers' Hill, 11, Mr. S. Standring, "The Salvation Army."

Woolwich—"Sussex Arms," Assembly Room, 60 Plumstead Road, 7.30, Mr. E. T. Garner, "The Lord's Prayer."

West Ham—121 Broadway, Plaistow, 11.30, G. Cave-Hill, "Monism;' 7, Robert Forder, "Signs of the Zodiac, Part II."

COUNTRY.

Birmingham—Baskerville Hall, Crescent, Mr. A. B. Moss, 11, "What do Christians Believe?"; 3, "Old Souls in New Bodies;" 7, "The Mission of Freethought."

Derby.—Meeting at British Oak, Carrington Street, for Report and return of tickets of Paine Anniversary.

Glasgow—Ramshorn Hall, 122 Ingram Street, 2, Annual Meeting to receive Report, elect office-bearers, etc.: 6.30, Soiree and Concert in memory of Robert Burns.

Heckmondwike—Mr. John Rothera's, Bottoms, 3, Mr. Henderson, "Pygmalion and Galatea;" to be followed by a tea and social evening

Liverpool—Camden Hall, Camden Street, 11, Committee Meeting Tontine Society; 7, Mr. E. Stanley Jones, "Nature and Law."

Newcastle-on-Tyne—Lecture Hall, Nelson Street, 8, the Rev. Walter Walsh, "The Bible, and How to Read it." Society's rooms, 4 Hall's Court, 11. Meeting of Sunday Music League; 7, an important business meeting of Members.

Nottingham—Secular Hall, Beck Street, Graham Wallas, 11, "The Historical Abandonment of Laissez Faire;" 7, "The True Radical Policy."

LECTURERS' ENGAGEMENTS.

MR. A. B. MOSS, 44 Credon Road, London, S.E.—Jan. 26, Birmingham. Feb. 2, Manchester; March 2, Woolwich. April 12, Camberwell. May 25, Regent's Park.

E. TOLEMAN GARNER, 8 Heyworth Street, Stratford, London, E.—Jan. 26, Woolwich. Feb. 23, Woolwich. March 9, Woolwich; 28, Woolwich: 30, Westminster.

MR. JAMES HOOPER, 11 Upper Eldon Street, Sneinton, Nottingham.—Feb 2, Hull; 16, Birmingham.

E. STANLEY JONES, 54 Park Street, Toxteth, Liverpool—Feb. 9, Sheffield; 28, Huddersfield.

PROGRESSIVE PUBLISHING CO.'S LIST.

All orders to be sent, with remittance, to R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C. Rate of postage—Orders under 3d., one halfpenny; orders under 6d. one penny. Orders over 6d. post free.

G. W. FOOTE.

	s.	d.
PRISONER FOR BLASPHEMY. Cloth ... ... A Full History of his Three Trials and Twelve Months' Imprisonment. Copies in paper covers, soiled, 6d.	2	6
IS SOCIALISM SOUND? ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant.	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
CHRISTIANITY AND SECULARISM ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. In paper covers.	1	0
Superior edition in cloth	1	6
INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS ... ... Second edition, enlarged.	0	8
Superior edition, in cloth	1	3
DARWIN ON GOD	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0
Contents:—Darwin's Grandfather—Darwin's Father—Darwin's Early Piety—Almost a Clergyman—On Board the "Beagle"—Settling at Down—Death and Burial—Purpose of Pamphlet—Some Objections—Darwin Abandons Christianity—Deism—Creation—Origin of Life—Origin of Man—Animism—A Personal God—Design—Divine Beneficence—Religion and Morality—Agnosticism and Atheism.
DEFENCE OF FREE SPEECH ... ... Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes.	0	4
LETTERS TO JESUS CHRIST	0	4
PHILOSOPHY OF SECULARISM	0	3
THE BIBLE GOD	0	2
THE FOLLY OF PRAYER	0	2
CHRISTIANITY AND PROGRESS ... ... A Reply to Mr. Gladstone.	0	2
WHAT WAS CHRIST? ... ... A Reply to J. S. Mill.	0	2
THE DYING ATHEIST. A Story	0	1
WAS JESUS INSANE? ... ... A searching inquiry into the mental condition of the Prophet of Nazareth.	0	1
THE SHADOW OF THE SWORD ... ... A moral and statistical Essay on War.	0	2
ROYAL PAUPERS ... ... Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty.	0	2
BIBLE HEROES—First Series, in elegant wrapper ... (1) Mr. Adam, (2) Captain Noah, (3) Father Abraham, (4) Juggling Jacob, (5) Master Joseph, (6) Joseph's Brethren, (7) Holy Moses I., (8) Holy Moses II., (9) Parson Aaron, (10) General Joshua, (11) Jephthah and Co., (12) Professor Samson. One Penny each singly.	1	0
BIBLE HEROES—Second Series. (13) Prophet Samuel, (14) King Saul, (15) Saint David I., (16) Saint David II., (17) Sultan Solomon, (18) Poor Job, (19) Hairy Elijah (20) Bald Elisha, (21) General Jehu, (22) Doctor Daniel, (23) The Prophets (Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Hosea).
MRS. BESANT'S THEOSOPHY ... ... A Candid Criticism.	0	2
THEOSOPHY AND SECULARISM ... ... A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant.	0	2
THE NEW CAGLIOSTRO ... ... An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky.	0	2

COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

MISTAKES OF MOSES	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth	1	6
Only Complete Edition published in England
DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT ... ... Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy.	0	6
REPLY TO GLADSTONE ... ... With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler.	0	4
ROME OR REASON? Reply to Cardinal Manning	0	4
FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Rev. Dr. Field ...	0	2
GOD AND MAN. Second Reply to Dr. Field	0	2
THE DYING CREED	0	2
THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH	0	2
THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION ... ... A Discussion with Hon. F. D. Courdert and Gov. S. L. Woodford.	0	2
ART AND MORALITY	0	2
DO I BLASPHEME?	0
THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE	0	2
THE GREAT MISTAKE	0	1
LIVE TOPICS	0	1
MYTH AND MIRACLE	0	1
REAL BLASPHEMY	0	1
SOCIAL SALVATION	0	2

G. W. FOOTE and J. M. WHEELER.

CRIMES OF CHRISTIANITY. Vol. I. Cloth ... Hundred of exact References to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.	2	6
THE JEWISH LIFE OF CHRIST ... ... With voluminous footnotes. An extraordinary work.	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0

G. W. FOOTE and W. P. BALL.

BIBLE HANDBOOK FOR FREETHINKERS AND INQUIRING CHRISTIANS	1	4
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
Sold also in separate parts as follows—
1. Bible Contradictions ... ... The Contradictions are printed in parallel columns.	0	4
2. Bible Absurdities ... ... All the chief Absurdities from Genesis to Revelation, conveniently and strikingly arranged, with appropriate headlines, giving the point of each absurdity in a sentence.	0	4
3. Bible Atrocities ... ... Containing all the godly wickedness from Genesis to Revelation. Each infamy has a separate headline for easy reference	0	4
4. Bible Immoralities, Indecencies, Obscenities, Broken Promises, and Unfulfilled Prophecies ...	0	4

J. M. WHEELER.

LETTERS FROM HEAVEN	0	1
LETTERS FROM HELL	0	1

DR. E. B. AVELING.

DARWIN MADE EASY. 44pp., cloth .. ... Best Popular Exposition of Darwinism extant.	1	0

GIORDANO BRUNO.

Picture of the Statue of Rome	0	2
Post free in Lett's case	0	3

Digitized by Google

PRICE 2d. PRICE 2D.

GOD AND THE STATE

A New Pamphlet by

COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

THE IMPOSSIBLE CREED

An Open Letter to the

BISHOP OF PETERBOROUGH.

BY

G. W. FOOTE.

Price Twopence. Price Twopence.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE

AN AGNOSTIC'S VIEW.

By COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

Reprinted Verbatim from the "North American Review."

Price Twopence. Price Twopence.

Every Freethinker, Radical or Socialist should read it and circulate it amongst his friends.

BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY OF FREETHINKERS

OF

ALL AGES AND NATIONS.

BY J. M. WHEELER.

Handsomely Bound in Cloth. Price Seven Shillings and Sixpence.

Should be in every Freethinker's Library.

1d. A LIE IN FIVE CHAPTERS? 1d.

THE

REV. HUGH PRICE HUGHES'S

CONVERTED ATHEIST

By G. W. FOOTE.

Should be circulated by Freethinkers who desire to see this pious fraud exposed as widely as possible.

W. J. Rendell's

"WIFE'S FRIEND."

Recommended in "Law of Population," and "Wife's Hand Book." Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell Street Clerkenwell, and supplied per post, 2s. dozen. For particulars of this Malthusian discovery send stamped envelope. Higginson's Syringe, with vertical and reverse current, 3s. 6d. and 4. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. All other Malthusian Appliances. All prices post free.

LIMITED FAMILIES.—Allbutt, posted, 6½d.; Besant, 7d.; Owen, 7d. Malthus, 1s. 1d. Lists (Literature and Appliances), 1d. VOLUNTARY TAXATION. Fisher, 32pp., 1½d. Old Testament, 1d. Darwin's Hypocrisy, Dawson, 4½d.—Fisher, Progressive Publisher, Koburg, Leeds.

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each, upper or lower set, £1. Best quality, 4s. each, upper or lower, £2, completed in four hours when required, repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18c. gold 15s.; stopping, 2s. 6d. extraction, 1s. painless by gas, 5s.

GRATIS.

AN ILLUSTRATED 16-PAGE PAMPHLET, containing extracts from the utterances of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Manchester; the Revs. T. R. Malthus, A. E. Whatham, M. J. Savage, Leonard Dawson, — Lawton, H. R. Haweis; the following Doctors:—Allbutt, Allinson, Armstrong, Drysdale, Pye Chavasse, E. B. Foote, Nicholls, Wilder, Raciborski, Napheys and Reamy. Also Plato, Aristotle, Sismondi, Huxley, Mill, and numerous others. Should be read by every married and marriageable person. Sent on receipt of stamped addressed envelope by J. R. HOLMES, Hanney, Wantage, Berks.

TESTIMONIALS (Extracts from).

"The one you sent me some months since is

Quite Worn Out

with being lent to so many friends."

"Some of us have paid five shillings for less than one-tenth of the information."

TO MARRIED PEOPLE

Or Those Contemplating Marriage.

Send 1d. Stamp to

DAVIES, CHEMIST, 101 PARK LANE, LEEDS,

And you'll receive an Illustrated List of most useful Malthusian Appliances by return of post.

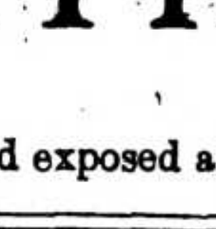
LIGHTNING CARTOONS.—Twelve 34 by 18 Likenesses, Parliamentary, Military and Royal Celebrities, and simple instructions by which anyone can sketch them. Post free, 2s. 6d. F. Coulthard, Ea Cliff Terrace, Bournemouth.

HARTNOLL,

ENGLISH AND FOREIGN CHEMIST,

1A PICCADILLY

(Under the London Pavilion Music Hall),



LONDON, W.

Hartnoll's Specialities, Appliances and Medicated Preparations are world-renowned.

Spiral, Douche and Latest Improved Syringes.

ESTABLISHED OVER 50 YEARS.

CAMBERWELL BRANCH N.S.S., 61 New Church Road, S.E.—Three Rooms to Let, at a low rental. Apply to Hall-keeper.

Dyed with Ireton's Ink, no hope of ever changing my Color.

IRETON'S

INDELIBLE JET BLACK MARKING INK

(NO HEATING REQUIRED)

For Rubber Stamps, Stencil, Type or Pen.

PRICE 6d. 1/- and 2/6 per Bottle.

Sample bottle 4d. post free.

IRETON & Co., 92, Gracechurch St., LONDON, E.C.

The largest makers of Rubber Stamps.

Special terms to the Trade.

Printed and Published by G. W. Foote, at 28 Stonecutter Street Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

Vol. X.—No. 5] SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1890. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

MR. BRADLAUGH HOME AGAIN.

Mr. BRADLAUGH is home again. He is looking decidedly better and has put on some flesh. But he is far from being his old self. It is a pity he could not take a three months' instead of a six weeks' trip. He has his reasons for returning just now to the land of liberty—and rain and fog; but it will be a dreadful pity if he goes to work and overtaxes his strength. He has the temperament of a man of action, and it must be hard for him to lie idle; yet his life is far too precious to waste, and we earnestly hope he will champ the bit, however impatiently, instead of starting off for the racecourse. Let him run when his strength comes back, and he will take many a prize before he retires from the field.

What struck us as most hopeful was the genial animation of Mr. Bradlaugh's face as he greeted us in his library on Tuesday. He was in good spirits, and that is half the battle. His trip had been a pleasant one, his reception in India was magnificent and touching, and he was naturally proud of the mementoes of his visit to dusky Ind. A beautiful rug lay on the floor; a fine shawl for Mrs. Bonner, sent by an Indian in memory of his own mother, hung from the back of a chair; and near by was a splendid silk turban, meant to give the "member for India" the appearance of a full-blown oriental. But these are only trifles. The principal things—caskets and other articles in silver and gold—had not yet arrived. They were being cleared, happily at the expense of the Indian Agency, and were coming on in a day or two. Mr. Bradlaugh has arranged to have them on view in the minor hall, upstairs, on February 16. Judging from the inventory, made out by Parsees in a good clerkly hand, they will be well worth seeing. They will afterwards go to Northampton for inspection by Mr. Bradlaugh's constituents.

Now Mr. Bradlaugh has, for the first time in his life, a collection of plate, he will feel a new anxiety. Burglars don't go for books, but plate!—there is a fascination in the very word. Oh the lumpy feel of the swag, and the joys of the melting pot! Mr. Bradlaugh will have to keep a good strong safe, and sometimes down at the House, about two-o'clock in the morning, he will say to himself "I hope the plate's all right"

Lecturing is out of the question with Mr. Bradlaugh for some time—no one knows how long. He has managed to cancel everything but an engagement at St. James's Hall, Manchester, which he will therefore fulfil. It is a mistake, however, if Mr. Bradlaugh will pardon our saying so. He ought not to go through the ordeal of three lectures in a monster hall in one day. If the engagement must be kept, we hope the lectures will be reduced to two.

Freethinkers will be pleased to see "the plate" on February 16, but ever so much more pleased to see Mr. Bradlaugh. Hearing about him is all very well, but they want to see him face to face. And it will be an eventful meeting. The old general—old in service at least—will bid farewell to the army. Fate beckons him away, and he must lay down the leadership. Would that it might be otherwise, but "there is no struggling against fate." The parting will be pathetic to both sides. Let it not be supposed, however, that Mr. Bradlaugh leaves us in any other sense than as our active leader. His sympathies will be with us, he will share our convictions, he will rejoice in our success, he will remain a member of our Society, he will advise us in our difficulties, and he will stand by us in any dark hour of persecution. This mitigates the pang of separation. We lose our leader, but only as a leader; not as a friend, not as a comrade, not as a counsellor; and though he cannot, alas, ride at our head, we can still say, "He is ours."

SACRED STONES.

THE essay of Mr. Grant Allen, in the January number of the Fortnightly Review, on "Sacred Stones" deserves more attention than has hitherto been accorded it, as an attempt to illustrate a large and important chapter in the history of early religion, and especially as a theory of the origin of Jehovah the God of the Jews.

One fault we find at the outset. By refusing to discuss the phallic theory Mr. Allen spoils his own case. He not only loses the powerful support of the rite of circumcision, but leaves it unexplained how the worship of a stone became one of the most advanced cults of antiquity. But Mr. Allen has before now expressed his disinclination for martyrdom. We appreciate his reserve, and allow his right to refuse to enter into the question, but deny his reason given that it is "not cognate to our present inquiry."

We can understand how a stone, or a cairn set up simply as a memorial of a burial place might on that account be invested with sacred character and be supposed to be the peculiar residence of the departed spirit and the proper place to make it offerings. No doubt this is sufficient explanation of a large part of stone-worship. On the other hand, there is abundant evidence of conical stones being worshipped as creative and considered as presiding over generation. The stone pillars of Baal and the wooden Asherah cones, the chief objects of adoration among the Phœnicians are usually held to be of phallic character. It is unquestionable that the Jews at one time worshipped Baal (see Hosea ii., 16; Jud. vi., 32), the substitution bosheth—in the names of Ishbosheth, Jerubbosheth, and Mephibosheth for Eshbaal, Meribaal, and Jerubbaal—signifying sexual shame. The place where the ark stood was indeed called Baale, or place of Bâal (2 Sam. vi., 2; 1 Chron., xiii., 6.)

That the early Semites were, in part, stone worshippers, will not be denied by any competent scholar. It is indeed admitted by a reviewer in the Jewish World, who, nevertheless, terms Mr. Allen's attempt to trace Jahveh to the ancestral fetish stone of the people of Israel "mental myopoea."

This worship, in fact, lay so deep that Mohammed was unable to eradicate it, as every year's pilgrimage to the Kaaba or black stone at Mecca testifies. The denunciations of the Jewish prophets, and the rectifications of the Jewish scribes were unable to erase it. In the story of Jacob's pillar we have an evident trace of stone-worship. The pillar itself was anointed by the patriarch (Gen. xxviii., 18), and the pillar itself, not the spot on which it stood, is called Bethel "the house of God." The very name shows that the stone was supposed to be the residence of a creative spirit. Dr. Robertson Smith's Religion of the Semites, p. 187, says, "it seems clear that the altar is a differentiated form of the primitive rude stone pillar." A similar practice of anointing stones, known as Baetylia, prevailed in Phœnicia according to Philo Byblius, and exactly the same anointing of the Linga is performed in India at the present day.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Allen points out that:—

"Samuel judged Israel every year at Bethel, the place of Jacob's sacred pillar; at Gilgal, the place where Joshua's twelve stones were set up; and at Mizpeh, where stood the cairn surmounted by the pillars of Laban's covenant. He, himself, 'took a stone and set it up between Mizpeh and Shen;' and its very name, Ebenezer, 'the stone of help,' shows that it was originally worshipped before proceeding on an expedition, though the Jehovistic gloss, 'saying Hitherto the Lord hath helped us,' does its best, of course, to obscure the real meaning. It was to the stone circle of Gilgal that Samuel directed Saul to go down, saying 'I will come down unto thee, to offer burnt offerings, and to sacrifice sacrifices of peace offerings.' It was at the cairn of Mizpeh that Saul was chosen king; and after the victory over the Ammonites, Saul went once more to the great Stonehenge at Gilgal to 'review the kingdom,' and 'There they made Saul king before Jahveh in Gilgal; and there they sacrificed sacrifices of peace-offerings before Jahveh.'"

This last passage, as Mr. Allen points out, is very instructive, as showing that in the opinion of the writer, Jahveh was then domiciled at Gilgal.

There is no doubt the wandering Jews, like other nomads, carried their god about with them. Sometimes he was set up at Shiloh, sometimes at Baale. But the ark of the testimony (Eduth or significant thing) was his peculiar abode. This ark or travelling box of the Jewish god was taboo. It was taken into battle and relied upon for victory. When the Philistines saw it they said "A God is come into the camp" (1 Samuel iv., 7) When they captured the ark it gave them a secret disease. Although the scribes, as Mr. Allen says, evidently ashamed of the early worship they had outlived, protest somewhat vehemently more than once "There was nothing in the ark save the two tables of stone which Moses put there at Horeb, when Jahveh made a covenant with the children of Israel, when they came out of the land of Egypt;" yet this much at least even they admit, that the object or objects concealed in the ark consisted of a sculptured stone or stones; and that to dance or sing before this stone or these stones was equivalent to dancing or singing before the face of Jahveh.

When Jahveh, from being carried about in a box, got a house of his own, all its distinctive features were Phœnician.* What the Phœnician temples were like, Lucian tells us in his treatise on the goddess of Syria. The great pillars, the ornamentation of palm trees, pomegranites, and the lotus work of Solomon's joss-house were all Phœnician and all phallic.† Solomon himself "went after Ashtoreth" (1 Kings xi., 5) and built the mount of corruption for that "abomination of the Zidonians" (2 Kings xxiii., 13). We know how continually, despite the maledictions of the prophets, the people resorted to Baal and Asherah worship. We read (1 Kings xv., 13, Revised Version) that Maachah, the queen mother of Asa, "made an abominable image for an Asherah." This the Vulgate translated Priape.

Isaiah lvii., 6, referred to the custom of worshipping stones, and Jeremiah plainly indicates the phallic view, saying, "the people said to a stock (pillar) Thou art my father, and to a stone (cteis) Thou hast brought me forth" (ii., 27), and further that they defiled the land and committed adultery with stones and with stocks (iii., 9), (see too Ezek. xvi., 17). In the old hymn, known as the song of Moses, embodied in Deuteronomy xxxii, God is frequently called Tsur, "The Rock which begat thee, etc." Professor Robertson Smith allows that the two pillars Jachin and Boaz, "The Stablisher" and "In him is strength," "were doubtless symbols of Jehovah," (Religion of the Semites, p. 191.) Taking these things in conjunction with the rite of circumcision and the evidence that the bull was a symbol of Jahveh, that he presided over the opening of the womb, and that sacred prostitution was practised by Jews as well as by the Phœnicians and Babylonians, we think there is some reason for concluding not only that the original object of worship by the Jews was a sacred stone, but also that that stone partook of a phallic character.

J. M. Wheeler.

* See article "Temple" in Encyclopædia Britannica.

† The Rev. T. Wilson, in his Archæological Dictionary, article "Sanctum," observes that "the Ark of the Covenent, which was the greatest ornament of the first temple, was wanting in the second, but a stone of three inches thick, it is said supplied its place, which they [the Jews] further assert is still in the Mahommedan mosque called The Temple of the Stone, which is erected where the Temple of Jerusalem stood."

AN OLD TALE

WHICH HAS BEEN TOLD BEFORE.

Mary had a little lamb, such lambs have been before,
But this one, so says sacred history,
(The first often is) was quite a mystery.
A mystery, "not too deep," indeed,
"Just deep enough" to start a creed,
Which being opposed to sense and reason,
To doubt it is most awful treason. Such creeds have been before.

The babe was born, as babies are, much as they were before,
And Herod sent his men of war,
To "scrag" the bairnies near and far,
And though so very well connected,
As this one could not be protected,
Warned by an angel to decamp,
Joe and "the missis" went on tramp. Such tramps have been before.

The child grew up. Its nothing new. Small boys grew up before.
Little is known of good or bad
About the simple village lad.
The youth, too, was kept from public view,
Biding his time to "fetch" the Jew.
The man cured fits, healed blind and lame,
In fact went through "the same old game" all prophets played before.

He cursed a fig-tree, branch and root. No one did that before—
But no one, save a daft "galoot,"
At the wrong time would look for fruit.
He turned the water into wine,
And turned the devils into swine;
He stole a "moke" to meet his need,
He rode the fiery untamed steed, which no man rode before.

Leading a mob, a rabble rout, such mobs have been before,
He gave them, once! a good blow out,
That they might stay to hear him "spout"
Of Justice, which never interferes,
Mercy, which strikes through endless years,
Love, which unpitying marks our tears,
Love, that sees hunger, anguish, gloom,
Love, that relentless fixed his doom, thousands of years before.

He died! 'Twas a pious, savage age. It won't occur again.
Fanatics may prate, and priests may rage,
The growing years have turned that page. It won't occur again.
Above cruel superstition's tomb
The flowers of human peace shall bloom,
Reason and science no more dumb,
Have hailed the light. The dawn has come. It won't occur again.

Aitch Jai Aitch.

Digitized by Google

LETTERS TO THE CLERGY.—IX.

On "Christ and Humanity."

To the Rt. Rev. Edward White Benson, Archbishop of Canterbury.

You assert that the Church "has always been the pioneer, the first beginner of every advance in systematic education." Again I turn to the episcopal voting list. I find that in 1839 the Parochial Schools Bill was before the House of Lords, authorising magistrates to provide schools where they were wanted, out of the rates. It was rejected in a full house by a majority of two to one. The Bishops, however, showed a still greater disproportion. Their majority against the Bill was five to one. Three voted for it and fifteen against.

The Reform Bill of 1831 was supported by two Bishops and opposed by twenty-one. Next year the Bill was carried in the House of Lords by a small majority. But the Bishops still showed a majority against it, their vote being twelve to fifteen.

Against every proposal in favor of religious liberty the Bishops have been in overwhelming opposition. By twenty-five to two they helped to reject the first Bill for enabling Catholics to sit in Parliament; and even when the Bill was finally carried in the Lords by a majority of two to one, the Bishops were still recalcitrant, twelve voting for the Bill and fifteen against.

For the admission of Jews to Parliament the bench of bishops gave three votes, and twenty against it. Two bishops voted for the admission of Dissenters to the universities, and twenty-two against it. They never gave a single vote in favor of the Church Rate Abolition Bill. In short, they have opposed every progressive measure, and even when they saw it must be carried they had not the grace to go with the stream. Thus, my lord, has the Church been "the soul" of reform.

Your Grace finds that the motive power of the Church's energies is threefold—"Knowledge of God, the Memory of a Self Dedication, the reception of a Supernatural Gift."

What knowledge of God do the clergy possess beyond laymen? Revelation, as you call it, is accessible to both; and it has yet to be proved that clergymen possess any special organ of spirituality. What knowledge, my lord, has any man of God? There is speculation, conjecture, and dogma; but how much real information? All religions, all sects, claim a definite knowledge of God; and some of their votaries—to borrow Matthew Arnold's language—speak of him as familiarly as though he were a gentleman living in the next street. But the religions and sects contradict, and often vilify, each other; and their only absolute agreement is a common disagreement. Poll them all, and there would be an overwhelming majority against each; and Atheists would vote with the majority in every division.

You and I, my lord, are both men. I know nothing of God, and I believe you know as little. Multiply your ignorance by the number of the clergy, and the result is still ignorance. Upon this subject the philosopher and the fool, the poet and the dullard, are on the same level. Differences of wisdom and faculty only relate to this world. With regard to the supernatural every man's intellect is a blank. He may pretend otherwise, but he is able to produce nothing but the scribblings and sketches of fancy on the canvass of the unknowable.

Knowing nothing of God, the clergy presume to be his oracles. Knowing nothing of futurity, they pretend to disclose its secrets. They trade upon the ignorance of their fellow men. Their business is mystery. From the savage sorcerer to the civilised Archbishop there are many gradations, but no change in the profession. There is a difference of persons in a unity of essence. The priest dogmatises for a living, and we must die to find out his truth or falsity; and as dead men tell no tales, the well-feed prophet has no dread of detection. He goes on with his craft until men see that he knows no more than they.

By the Memory of a Self-Dedication I presume you mean that the clergy are in a special sense devoted to their calling. I do not believe it. I believe they go into the Church, as other men go into the army or the navy, the law or medicine, tailoring or shoemaking, farming or shopkeeping—for a living. I believe thousands of them know that the "call of the Holy Ghost" is arrant humbug. They take on the Church doctrines like the fixtures of a business. It was a clergyman, the Reverend Sidney Smith, that told the story of the young man asked to sign the Thirty-Nine Articles, who replied "Forty if you like."

The clergy's "reception of a supernatural Gift" can mean nothing but their reception of the Holy Ghost. They claim to derive it by apostolic succession, which is one of the greatest in the long list of Church frauds. Bishops impart the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands. Placing them on the head of a young man who is being inducted into holy orders, the Bishop sends a discharge of the Spirit through the kneeler's skull, and the current is strong enough to penetrate the thickest. When the kneeler rises to his feet he looks a trifle sillier than before. He has no more sense, no more character, no more courage—but he is full of the Holy Ghost, and millions of dupes have the folly to believe this impudent imposture.

Bishops hawk about the Holy Ghost as a trade commodity. When a church is to be consecrated, a Bishop enters the edifice as the builder leaves it. The stones, mortar, and woodwork are exactly like those of any other structure. But the Bishop—for a consideration—fills the place with the requisite amount of the Holy Ghost. Henceforth the building is sacred. Stealing from it is not only robbery but sacrilege. Yet it is not at all safer from accident, and no Insurance Company would grant a policy upon the church unless a lightning conductor were placed above it, to prevent the first person of the Trinity from making mistakes in a thunderstorm.

For a consideration, again, a Bishop will consecrate a cemetery. An arbitrary line is made with a tape and chalk; the Bishop stands on one side of it, discharges some Holy Ghost, like a clerical torpedo, and that portion of the cemetery is fit for the reception of Church corpses. But there is no discoverable difference between the two soils, and the corpses on either side of the line of consecration rot with equal celerity, unless the Church has the elevated ground, and all the drainage runs into the Dissenting graves.

Another use to which the clergy put their "supernatural Gift" is the manufacture of holy water. Aqueous fluid, supplied by an oirdinary Water Company, is put into a stone basin. Tried by chemical tests, it is precisely the same water as what flows from the domestic tap. But it is consecrated. There is a mysterious change. A little of the holy water, sprinkled on a baby's face, makes it a child of grace; and the price is only seven-and-sixpence. Henceforth God loves it, instead of hating it; and should it die, it will go to Heaven instead of Hell. No doubt the operation is worth the money if it does what you pretend. But I defy you to prove that it does anything of the kind. I maintain that baptism is on a level with fortune-telling, and one business is as disreputable as the other.

G. W. FOOTE.

(To be continued.)

MR. SYMES is continuing his articles on "The Roman Catacombs," quoting from the works of the Rev. J. S. Northcote, the Rev. W. B. Marriott, and Rev. J. P. Lundy, in proof that the symbols in the Catacombs were originally Pagan, and that no new doctrine can be found in the Christian creed.

Digitized by Google

ACID DROPS.

God has been up and doing of late, and the list of casualties in this best of all possible worlds is a long one. Here are a few items. Terrific gale in the Atlantic, several wrecks, and fatal fire on a steamship; Knowstone Vicarage, North Devon, the residence of the Rev. Prebendary Matthew, burnt down; a Catholic church destroyed by an avalanche at Sierra City; five persons killed at a funeral at Chicago; a train on fire, and one person burnt to death in Russia; trains blocked up on the Union Pacific Railroad and passengers dying of exhaustion; lighthouse keepers at Fastnet Rock hoisting flag of distress, and unable to be communicated with. These are all found in one copy of a paper, and afford sufficient material for thought to suffice Theists for the rest of their lives.

The south wall of the new Throop Avenue Presbyterian Church in course of erection at Brooklyn was blown down by the wind and killed six persons. Such is the Lord's care over his buildings and people.

The publication of Mr. Justin McCarthy's second volume of the History of the Four Georges recalls the old story of the dying Queen's appeal to her husband to take a new wife after her death, and the King's earnest disclaimer of any such purpose; the assurance that he would have mistresses, and then the Queen's cry of cruel conviction from hard experience, "Oh, mon Dieu, cela n'empeche pas!"

But there is another and equally significant story of Sir Robert Walpole, in connection with the Queen's death. When they brought the Archbishop of Canterbury to pray with her, it was for no better reason, according to Sir Robert, who recommended the step, than that it would do neither harm nor good. "It will satisfy all the wise and good fools, who will call us Atheists if we don't pretend to be as great fools as they are." This shows that Sir Robert Walpole, like his son Horace, was of what the first Earl of Shaftesbury called the religion of all sensible men. When asked what religion that was, Shaftesbury replied, "sensible men never tell."

Mrs. Alexander Ireland lectured on Sunday evening at Toynbee Hall on "Browning as a Teacher." With Browning, she said, there was no "perhaps" or "possibly." Now this is only saying that Browning was cocksure where he was ignorant. It is a poor compliment to his judgment, but these rabid Christians are so anxious to make the most of Browning as to run the risk of disgusting sober people. Could there be a sillier notion than this—that because Browning was a great poet, he was a special authority on the gospels and the divinity of Christ? Shelley and Byron were great poets and they rejected the gospels and the divinity of Christ. But Christians must rest on "authority" of some sort, and they are treating Browning as their sheet anchor. Why not make a new Christ of him? He had more brains than the old one. Still, there was a sappy spot in them, where the cells generated "religion."

After reading Shakespeare through again, a few years before his death, Browning said he was struck by the perfect ease with which the great dramatist mounted the throne of poesy, while the rest of the tribe climbed with difficulty to their lower positions on the steps. Well, it is impossible to make out that Shakespeare was a Christian at all. He seems to have been a thorough Pagan. And we believe he would have smiled at the religious stuff which Browning thrust into the least enduring part of his work.

Tennyson sings—

Our little systems have their day,
They have their day and cease to be.

Yes, the creeds come and go, but MAN remains, and the poet that lives is the one who takes man for his theme. Homer's gods and goddesses are now but fantastic fictions, but Hector holding in his arms the boy who is frightened by his helmet, and Achilles weeping over the dead body of Patroclus—these are immortal, the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever.

Talmage went to Jericho. What a pity he didn't stop there.

Talmage carries to America a block of marble from Mars Hill and a piece of stone from Calvary. They are to be built into his new Tabernacle. But why not put them into a quarter-dollar side-show?

Before leaving Liverpool the great, grand, magnificent Talmage went to Hawarden and saw the Grand Old Man. We don't suppose Gladstone would ever think of inviting Ingersoll to the castle, but he might do a great deal worse, for "Pagan Bob" would probably be the best company he ever had. Gladstone admits that Ingersoll writes with "a rare and enviable brilliancy," and that is a great deal more than any man in his senses could say of Talmage.

Talmage was interviewed after his Hawarden visit by a Pall Mall Gazette man. The Yankee preacher said "I am writing a Life of Christ, and I have been to Palestine with that object in view." Talmage is like the gentleman who knew the truth of Noah's Flood, for he had just visited the part of the world where it happened, and actually went half way up Mount Ararat.

Good God! Another Life of Christ! Every popular preacher takes a turn at it. Poor old Matthew, Mark, Luke and John didn't understand the business, although they were inspired; and, although nobody knows anything of the life of Christ except what they tell us, dozens of divines try to set them right. There really ought to be a tax on Lives of Christ—a pound a page at the very least.

Mr. Gladstone was asked by Talmage whether his faith in Christianity had wavered in his old age. It was a silly question, for old age is not the time when faith wavers. Mr. Gladstone replied "The longer I live the stronger grows my faith in God, and my only hope for the world is that the human race will be brought more into contact with Divine revelation." Very interesting, of course; but Mr. Gladstone's "faith" proves nothing. When he condescends to reason, as in the tilts with Huxley and Ingersoll, he makes a very poor show for his creed.

The London Star, reporting an interview with Talmage, describes him as follows:—"There is nothing of the smug piety look about Dr. Talmage. He does not clasp his hands, or show the whites of his eyes, or speak in a tone of intellectual agony, or do anything in that style. He is a practical religionist, and he looks it. He is a tall, spare man, with a keen, shrewd, practical face, thin hair, turning grey over the temples, and an unmistakable Yankee accent. His clothes have no clerical cut, his manner has no clerical flavor, his voice has no clerical intonation. He stands before you looking and speaking like a clever and exceedingly practical man of the world. He gives you the impression that if he had been born a New Englander, and had been thrown by circumstances into the nutmeg business, he would have been the smartest and the biggest man in the trade."

The full text of the Papal Encyclical Letter is now published in the Tablet. It shows that the old Pope is still hankering after his temporalities, and yearning to reorganise society under the sway of a crushing absolution. He says God—that is, the Pope—must be put before man—that is, the King. Yet everyone must remain in their appointed places, and the bishops must be obeyed, not only in matters of dogma, but (so the Letter implies) in everything else they may choose to command. The Letter shows that Pecci is more under the influence of the Jesuits than ever.

The Catholic journals have explained to their own satisfaction why the late learned Dr. Döllinger was not reconciled to the Church before he died. He was deficient in prayer. He said the mass, but laid aside the breviary. Hence his departure for l.

The Catholics are getting up a big pilgrimage to Jerusalem for the ensuing spring. It will have the Papal blessing and is expected to bring a pile of money into the Church coffers.

Dr. Parker is writing a story in Great Thoughts. It is a kind of antidote to Robert Elsmere. The last instalment contains some passages on "the comical side of God." That is a side with which Dr. Parker should be familiar. The Bible gives a lot of "the comical side of God," and a good deal of his savage side as well.

Digitized by Google

Hugh Price Hughes has recently published a book on The Philanthropy of God. It seems to us that God's philanthropy is very old-fashioned. For instance, he has sent us the influenza, and the microbes' butcher's bill is worse than that of a big campaign. This may be a blessing, but if so, it is a blessing in disguise.

Said Mr. Dashwood, at a public meeting of the Lady Havelock Branch of the Young Women's Christian Association—"I have never known a Christian young woman to wear a fringe, or a Christian young man to part his hair in the middle." Well now, if you look at the pictures of Jesus Christ, you will always see his hair parted in the middle. What is Mr. Dashwood thinking about? He will spend a bad quarter of an hour when J. C. gets hold of him.

NOT A CHRISTIAN YOUNG MAN.

He always was good to his ma and his dad,
And he played Sankey's hymns on the fiddle;
He looked on the Stage as the road to the bad—
But he parted his hair in the middle.

He never was known to descend to untruth,
And no man of a copper he'd diddle;
In all things he was a respectable youth—
But he parted his hair in the middle.

When a victim to praying and fasting as well
He gave up life's difficult riddle,
Old Charon remarked, as he labelled him "Hell,"
"He parted his hair in the middle."

—"Dagonet" in Referee.

Mr. Dashwood would have St. Paul's authority for a crusade against ladies' short hair. We advise him to go on that "lay" instead, if he has the courage to face the hornets' nest he would raise.

A good deal of correspondence on the subject of tithes has been going on in the Conservative Standard. The clergy say they can't get their dues, and the farmers say the tithes are ruining them. It some places it appears that the tithes actually exceed the rental of the land. Each party thinks of itself, and seems to forget the important fact that tithes, like all other Church property, is national property, and, whether enforced or remitted, it must be in accordance with the national will, and not in the interest of any particular class, whether farmers or clergy.

The heresy hunt after Dr. Marcus Dods continues to gather volume in Scotland. Several of the Presbyteries, alarmed at the prospect of students being educated by one unsound in the faith, have sent in petitions to have the matter inquired into.

A Mr. Nevins, who defends the plenary inspiration of the old Testament, says, in the Church Times, that there is no contradiction between 2 Sam. xxiv., 24, which says that David bought the threshing floor and oxen for fifty shekels of silver, and 1 Chron., xxi., 25, which says he gave for the place six hundred shekels of gold, since, says he, they were two different transactions. This is a pure assumption. Precisely the same things are referred to in both chapters. But Christians will resort to any subterfuge rather than admit the existence of any flaw in their fetish book.

There must be an awful lot of Sunday school teachers in Portsmouth. According to a newspaper paragraph a thousand of them have signed a memorial to the mayor, protesting against the hawking in the streets on the Lord's day. They declare that the noise greatly interferes with the training of the young in the laws of God and mars the solemnity of divine worship They predict that the desecration will bring down the Lord's displeasure upon the town, and call upon the mayor to put an immediate stop to these lamentable violations of the fourth commandment.

We presume the poor hawkers are trying to get an honest living and keep out of the gaol and workhouse. Perhaps they make an unnecessary noise, but after all they may be less selfish than the godly folk who are so scandalised by their behavior. When we were last at Portsmouth we had to pass a gospel-shop on the road from the lecture-hall. Outside the door there was a gang of "respectable" worshippers—men and women—who monopolised the pavement right to the kerbstone. and every passer-by had to step into the muddy road. Yet we dare say they had been listening inside to "the glorious gospel of love."

The Rev. J. Bar-Pollock, of Gateshead, has been setting Darwin, Huxley, and Haeckel right on Evolution. He has his own ideas of evolution—obviously enough—and he draws them, not from Nature, but from the Bible. Poor Bar-Pollock!

The reverend gentleman said, amidst immense applause, that he didn't believe in an ape becoming the man who built the Forth Bridge. Well, now, it strikes us that if an ape and Mr. Bar-Pollock began building the Forth Bridge a mile apart from each other, they would get on at pretty much the same rate, and get finished about the same time.

Chu-Fong, who in New York has been known as the Chinese Napoleon of finance, has been arrested for forgery. He proves to have been even more of a gay Lothario than was reported. He was found in a house on Fifteenth Street, in the midst of a circle of pretty American girls whom he was supporting, one of whom was his former Sunday School teacher. The pious have now discovered that his Christianity was a sham. But Chu-Fong had doubtless been taught that all good things were for those who love the Lord.

Episcopal Bishop Huntington, of New York, thinks these two prayers should be put in the liturgy of the Episcopalian church:

Incline the hearts of employers and of those whom they employ to mutual forbearance, fairness and good will.

Suffer not the hire of the laborers to be kept back by fraud?

What for? To inform God that capitalists and laborers are not getting along together very well? To persuade God to do what he would not otherwise do? Or are they two new planks in the Church's religio-political platform? They certainly resemble such planks in that they mean nothing.—Twentieth Century.

Canon Talbot, in his course of lectures on "The Bible: How we got it, and how we should use it," after stating that English Christians had to wait 900 years before the Hebrew and Greek manuscripts were translated into our own tongue—a very curious circumstance, if God was desirous of people reading his revelation—insisted on the great inferiority there must be between a translation and the original. This seems to us another reason why revelation should be direct. But, apart from this, we deliberately hold that much of the beauty of the English Bible has been given to it by the noble language of its translators. In truth, we yet want a literal translation of God's barbarous Hebrew and canine Geeek, and when that is made we predict that all the gilt will be off the gingerbread, the glamor of the Bible will be gone.

Advices from San Francisco report the collapse of a Chinese temple at Shantung and the loss of about two hundred and fifty lives. The people were witnessing a theatrical performance, which in China sometimes partakes of a religious character.

A youth at Bedford hanged himself on Monday morning in a barn adjoining his home, after attending a Christadelphian service on Sunday evening.

A religious crank named Robert Alexander shot at the Bishop of Philadelphia while he was conducting service at St. John's Church in that city. He probably felt himself inspired.

The Theosophical Society in India seems in danger of being eclipsed by a rival Psycho-religious Society, which has lately held a meeting in Calcutta, under the presidency of Dr. Salzer. From the address of this gentleman we learn that a great object of the society is to discover "how psychic energy may be employed to rule a person from a distance of many miles." Well India has been ruled from a distance of very many miles and we do not wonder that Hindoos are anxious to learn the secret. But we fancy they will discover little through the Psycho Religious Society.

Digitized by Google

The editor of Great Thoughts is chairman of the Jerusalem Cyclorama Company (Limited), which proposes to raise £28,000 to buy a cyclorama picture of Jerusalem and the crucifixion, which, having failed to draw in America, will, it is hoped, just suit the religious-minded people of England.

"Rector" writing in the Church Times objects to the assertion that it was a shark that swallowed Jonah as a contradiction to our blessed Savior, who in Matt. xii., 40, affirms it was a whale. Rector says that the spermaceti whale sixty feet long, has a throat wide enough to swallow a man. Pity J. C., did not inform us it was a spermaceti whale while he was about it.

Mr. Joseph English is demolishing Atheism at Wigan, but the Observer devotes all its report to the speech of his chairman, Mr. Thomas Freeman. We learn from this that the great English not only annihilated Atheism, but completely refuted Darwinism, to the entire satisfaction of an audience that probably knew as much about the subject as their anthropoid progenitors.

Poor Darwin! He spent fifty years in deep research and hard thinking, and never foresaw that his theories would all be exploded in ten minutes by English.

The Manchester City News remarks that the lay nurses in the Paris hospitals are more expensive than the sisters of mercy. Very likely. The sisters took a small salary in consideration of being allowed to proselytise the dying. They pestered those who did not want their attentions, and made themselves a nuisance. On the whole it is always best to pay properly for service. Those who render it for nothing, or next to nothing, have usually an ulterior end in view.

Complaint is also made that the Paris Municipal Council has removed all emblems of religion from the hospitals. And why not? Why should a sick Freethinker, or a sick Jew, be obliged to lie in bed and look at a crucifix? Any sick Christian who wants such an article can cuddle it in bed with him. But somehow the Christian never thinks he has fair play unless he rules the roost.

By way of being all things to all men, the Bishop of Exeter is visiting the factories in the city and addressing meetings of the men. Very democratic, no doubt; but, at the end, the Bishop returns to his palace and his big episcopal salary. It will be a long time before he imitates St. Paul so far as to make a decent living by sail-making.

"Muscular Christianity" flourishes at Fulham. The Rev. P. S. G. Propert has established a St. Andrew's Athletic Club, and the other evening the muscular Christians gave a public performance. There was plenty of boxing, and one of the winners got a very sanguinary nose. We should like to have seen J. C. at this entertainment.

There is one Rev. James, a Methodist divine and man of God, whom the wicked have been persecuting in Los Angeles, California. Ungodly L. S. Baisly sends here a lengthy newspaper report of the sore tribulations of this good man. Mr. B. says Los Angeles is "infested with preachers and other dead-beats." But this doesn't justify the ungodly in putting the wife of good Rev. James up to sue her divine spouse with all her might for a divorce, and to go on to the witness stand and tell how the man of God turned her and his home into a Turkish seraglio. It seems that the ungodly will never permit the messengers of the Most High to harvest their perquisites in peace. The holy men of God know the good book allows them all the wives and deputy wives they want. But just let one of them live in accordance with the divine law and see how quick man's law will yank him before the judge! It is a shame. We havn't heard what was done with the Rev. James, but have no doubt he was juggled out of all his women and gaoled!—Ironclad Age.

An astonishing number of people claim to have been Darwinians before Darwin. Professor Max Muller, in an article on "Thought Thicker than Blood" in The Open Court, enrols himself among the number. His claims are about as groundless as the rest, being based simply on the fact that in 1854 he believed in the unity of mankind, and said that "the common origin of the negro and the Greek admits of as little doubt as that of the poodle and greyhound."

We are glad to see the stand which Mr. Hopwood, Q.C., is making against our prison system. He says it is cruel, torturing and degrading; yet "we are fools enough, or hypocritical enough, to believe that this sort of régime can do good, can elevate, can reform!" The fact is, our prison system is based on the stupid and brutal Christian idea of punishment, and it will only be reformed as that idea perishes.

The Bishop of St. Davids, preaching on Sunday in Westminster Abbey, was good enough to say that he feared Dissenters did not always pay sufficient attention to moral teaching. Of course the Church does. Hence the number of clergy who get into trouble.

Alas poor ghosts! They can't get a recognition in the courts. Mr. Kinney, of Drogheda, found he had taken a haunted house, where the ghost not only made objectionable noises, but actually flung the furniture on the family when in bed. Mr. Kinney left the place and declined to pay "rint" like a true-born Irishman. But the magistrate said that ghosts were no excuse for non-payment, and made an order in favor of the landlord.

Mark this, dear reader. Mr. Smith, the defendant's solicitor, was prepared with plenty of witnesses to prove that the house was haunted, but the magistrate snapped his finger at their evidence. No quantity of witnesses would fix up the ghost. Just carry this reasoning a little further, and what becomes of all the Bible ghosts, for whom no witnesses can be produced? Not a single one of them would be able to make out a case in a law court—not even the great Jerusalem ghost, no nor the Holy Ghost.

Dr. Dale does not countenance the attempt to get rid of the good old orthodox theory of the Atonement. The Church through all ages, he says, has held the doctrine of atonement and substitution; Christ himself declared that he came into the world to give his life a ransom for many. This is at least honest. We like to see a Christian stand up for his creed, instead of crying "Please sir, I didn't mean it."

Dr. Parker is appealing to the world at large to support his Temple. But there is one sort of supporter he doesn't want—"the man who exhausts the patience and tries the Christian temper of members of the staff by his particularity in the selection of a sitting, who omits to pay the subscription at the time, and is never again heard of." "Such instances," adds the Doctor, "are by no means infrequent." Sad confession! There ought to be more honor among—Christians.

A sad story was that of the poor, forlorn Terra del Fuego woman who died in St. George's Union Infirmary. Separated from her savage companions who were exhibited at the Aquarium, she was for some time unable to eat, as the doctors didn't understand that she wanted raw horseflesh. Her dirt came off in layers, and she gibbered a protest against being washed. Still, she had a sense of religion. Go down as far as you will you find that. Father Herbert found she would pray and kiss a crucifix; so she made quite an edifying end, and no doubt she is now in "the happy land, far, far away." Anyhow she is far, far away from Father Herbert's fellow Christians who brought her over on show, as a kind of prize beast, and left her to die in a strange land.

Writing in the Signal, Mrs. M. Baxter, the wife of Prophet Baxter, says: "It is no great credit to our English Christianity that the native Hindoos believe that in order to be Christians they must also become drunkards."

Digitized by Google

MR. FOOTE'S ENGAGEMENTS.

Sunday, Feb. 2, Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, London; at 7, "Why I am an Atheist."

Feb. 9, Blackburn; 16, Milton Hall, London; 23, Hall of Science, London.

March 2, Manchester; 9, Camberwell; 16, Cardiff; 23 and 30, Hall of Science, London.

April 6, Milton Hall; 13, Portsmouth; 20, Hall of Science; 27, Hall of Science.

May 4, Newcastle; 11, South Shields.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

LITERARY communications to be addressed to the Editor, 14 Clerkenwell Green, London, E.C. All business communications to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C.

THE Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the office, post free to any part of Europe, America, Canada and Egypt, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 6s. 6d.; Half Year, 3s. 3d.; Three Months, 1s. 7½d. Australia, China and Africa:—One Year, 8s. 8d.; Half Year, 4s. 4d.; Three Months, 2s. 2d. India:—One Year, 10s. 10d.; Half Year, 5s. 5d. Three Months, 2s. 8½d.

SCALE OF ADVERTISEMENTS.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 3s.; Half Column, 15s.; Column, £1 10s. Special terms for repetitions.

IT being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will in future receive the number when their subscription expires in a colored wrapper.

E. H.—We do not know the name of a bookseller or newsagent in Chester who sells the Freethinker. Perhaps some of our readers in that city can inform our correspondent.

J. H. S.—Mr. Foote is recovering, but the after-effects of the influenza are still troublesome. Thanks for the cuttings.

GREY-HEADED ATHEIST.—It was dealt with last week, and we cannot reprint the verse, otherwise yours should have followed it. This correspondent wishes to know of any newsagent at or near Walham Green who supplies the Freethinker.

A. DARTON.—Thanks. There are hundreds of good Voltaire stories, and some day we may make a collection of them.

R. E. W. (Liverpool).—Look at the difficulties. It is hard to obtain halls at all, and when we can obtain one, like the Lord Nelson Street Hall, the proprietor insists on charging us three times as much as he charges the religious bodies. Further, all religious bodies are more or less endowed, and the law does not permit Freethought to receive a legacy.

H. P.—Your letter is interesting, and your efforts at self-culture do you great credit. We advise you to read the following works:—Greg's Creed of Christendom, Giles's Christian and Hebrew Records, Meredith's Prophet of Nazareth, Havet's Le Christianisme et ses Origines, Tylor's Primitive Cuture. Lecky's Rationalism, Gibbon's Decline and Fall and Supernatural Religion.

A. HINDLEY.—Yes, there is a third Freethought journal, the Agnostic Journal.

A RECRUIT.—Always glad to receive cuttings, but the one you send appeared in the Freethinker—in substance—several weeks ago.

W. L. W.—Of the Prisoner for Blasphemy there are only shilling and sixpenny copies left. The latter are water-stained. Thanks for the cuttings.

W. H. BROWN.—Our readers do us, and other readers, a real service by sending us cuttings.

G. NAEWIGER, 5 Hull Place, Osborne Street, Hull, will be glad to receive any Freethought literature for distribution.

S. STANDRING.—One side has as much right to be heard as the other, and many of Mr. Symes's friends in England were anxious to know his view of Mrs. Besant's conversion to Theosophy. Mr. Symes doesn't mince matters, but we don't like him the less for that.

A. SWINNEY.—See "Sugar Plums." Your Sick Society seems extremely well managed.

No. 12.—Glad to hear you are still spreading the light.

ABDERITE says: "When, for the philanthropic purpose of helping some poor Christian to get the superstition out of his head, a Freethinker is left in some public place, it is a very good plan to first write on it the address of the nearest newsagent where it can be procured. I have recommended this plan to several friends of Freethought who had never thought of it before." This correspondent asks us to publish a complete list of newsagents who sell the Freethinker. We shall be happy to do so. Will the newsagents who see this paragraph send us their names and addresses?

H. O. THOMAS.—The address of the Freethinker's Magazine is 143 Main Street, Buffalo, New York, U.S.A. Its price is twenty cents a single number, or two dollars per year. Dr. Brown, in his Oriental Researches, published at Rockford, Illinois, goes further than Prof. Rawson in the same direction. He holds there is no proof of a Jewish nation before the Babylonian captivity.

R. CHAPMAN.—We are still considering the feasibility of inserting reports.

W. B. THOMPSON.—There is a half-crown edition of Marlowe published by Vizetelly in the "Mermaid Series." Mr. Rogers must have a strange pair of eyes not to see that Marlowe was far from a Christian.

W. HOLLAND.—Mr. Foote is gradually improving. Thanks for the cutting.

E. SMEDLEY.—(1) Faith is belief beyond reason. It is not primarily an intellectual, but an emotional function. (2) The debate between Mrs. Besant and Mr. Foote was on Socialism. (3) David King's pamphlet is addressed to believers. There is nothing in it for a Freethinker to answer or consider.

W. MITCHELL.—The verse is meritorious in sentiment but defective in workmanship.

C. B. HYDE.—No thanks are necessary. We desire to see the N. S. S. include every reader of the Freethinker.

ADMIRER.—You don't seem to have much religion left. Thanks for the cuttings, but there are so many "converted Atheist" stories afloat that we can't deal with all of them. We want the Hugh Price Hughes one settled first.

PAPERS RECEIVED.—Der Arme Teufel — Ironclad Age—Freidenker — Neues Freireligioses Sonntags-Blatt — Liberator—Fritankaren—Freethought—Secular Thought—Open Court—Evening Standard—Western Figaro—Western American—Newcastle Daily Chronicle—Leeds Daily News—Twentieth Century—Devon Evening Express—Argonaut—Essex County Chronicle—Golden Perhaps.

FRIENDS who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish our attention directed.

CORRESPONDENCE should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

SUGAR PLUMS.

DESPITE the blusterous weather there was a fine audience at Camberwell on Sunday to hear Mr. Foote's lecture on the Devil. One old lady, eighty-three years of age, was brought by a grandson to hear a Freethought lecture for the first time. She was accommodated with a front seat, but even then her deafness prevented her from hearing very much. Perhaps this was fortunate, for at such an age the shock of such a lecture might have been disastrous. The people who did hear were apparently delighted.

THERE was one exception, however. Mr. Morden was in a dreadful temper. He mounted the platform, and was so uncivil and objurgatory that he soon communicated his ill temper to the audience. The poor man was awfully solemn too. He complained, for about the fiftieth time, of Mr. Foote's jocularity. In especial he denounced the saying that "people were rarely treacled but generally brimstoned into religion." Such facetiousness was beneath the dignity of the awful subject. Poor Mr. Morden! He is really to be pitied. A grain of humor would be a saving ingredient in his constitution.

THIS evening (Feb. 2) Mr. Foote lectures at the London Hall of Science. His subject is "Why I am an Atheist."

DR. T. R. ALLINSON, the famous medical reformer, has invested £50 in our publishing business, and gives us leave to announce the fact pour encourager les autres. It is a brave thing for Dr. Allinson to do, and it entitles him to our admiration even more than our gratitude.

WE beg to repeat that only members of the National Secular Society will be admitted to the meeting at the Hall of Science on Feburary 16, when Mr. Bradlaugh will formally resign the presidency and his successor will be appointed. Those who are not members, but wish to be present, should qualify themselves at once. Mr. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, will be happy to enrol them.

THE Metrcpolitan Radical Federation holds its annual dinner at St. Paul's Café, St. Paul's Churchyard, on Monday, February 10. The N.S.S. is represented on this organisation which is full of Freethinkers. Tickets for the dinner (3s.) can be had of the hon. sec., James Tims, C.C., 6 Queen Anne Terrace, Battersea, S. W.

THE first series of Letters to the Clergy, including all that appeared in the Freethinker during 1889, is in the binder's hands and will be ready in a week or so. Considerable additions have been made to the letter on Prayer, and a Preface has been written for the whole collection. The second series will be paged on from the first, so that those who wish to bind will have a proper volume. The price of the first series is one shilling for 128 pages of type.

Digitized by Google

AMONG the Sunday Society's lecturers at St. George's Hall, London, during the ensuing months of the season, we notice Mr. H. L. Brækstad. It is pleasant to see that some very pronounced Freethinkers are creeping into the list. Mr. J. M. Robertson crept in some time ago.

MR. FOOTE has undertaken to read a paper before the Shelley Society in March on the poet's Religious Opinions.

MATILDA JOSLYN GAGE, the co-editress with Elizabeth Cady Stanton and Susan B. Anthony of the History of Woman's Suffrage, announces in the American papers that arrangements have been perfected for organising a Woman's Freethought Association of a national character. Mrs. Gage says: "Woman's political enfranchisement does not advance because women themselves are no longer progressive. The tendency in existing societies towards conservatism, apparent for some time, has now reached the point when it has become imperative that a new society should be formed of women brave enough to say of her own slavery, as the old abolitionists did of negro slavery, that the American church is its bulwark."

MRS. GAGE further points out that the Christian party in politics, both Catholics and Protestants, whose aim is union of Church and State, is vastly helped by women, and it is thus high time advanced women united in work for their own enfranchisement, and to arouse public thonght to a sense of the impending danger. A convention on the subject will be held at Washington, U.S., Feb. 24 and 25, 1890.

SWEDISH PRISONER FUND.—We have received the following subscriptions:—Angus Thomas, 10s.; W. Gregory, 5s.

SWEDISH PRISONER FUND.—J. A. Lampard, 1s. 6d.; J. Barnes, 1s.; A. F. W., 2s. 6d.; J. Gompertz, 2s.; H. M. Ridgway, 2s. 6d.; O. Bonser, per E. Truelove, 10s.; G. Corner, 2s. 6d.; S. Jenson, 1s.; T. Wand, 1s.; R. Weightman, 1s.—R. Forder, secretary.

Fritankaren translates into Swedish a recent letter from Mr. Foote to Mr. Lennstrand in Stockholm prison. We are pleased to notice that Mr. H. V. Berghell and others are worthily upholding the Freethought cause upon the platform during Mr. Lennstrand's enforced absence.

THE London, England, Freethinker issued an extra paper for Christmas. It is elegantly illustrated for the benefit and enlightenment of the pious followers of our Lord and Savior. Our heavenly father appears in his tripple god-ship—Father, Son and Ghost—one in three and three in one. The faithful would be greatly edified by religiously studying the special Christmas issue of the Freethinker. But just as likely as not they won't do it. It is shocking to observe how stubbornly they resist the efforts of benevolent heathens in all parts of the world to familiarise them with their Maker and his works and ways. —Ironclad Age.

UNDER the title "An Ancient Freethinker," the veteran Dr. L. Büchner is contributing a series of articles upon the Roman poet Lucretius to the Freidenker, of Milwaukee.

THE Golden Perhaps is a lively little paper of pronounced atheistic opinions edited by Dr. C. W. McCormik, and published at 912 Twentieth Street, Denver, Colorado.

A CREMATION SOCIETY has been established at Hamburg, with a capital of 80,000 marks.

PAINE'S birthday has been celebrated in America by a Freethought Convention at Seattle, Washington. Mr. C. B. Reynolds seems to have been the presiding genius.

THE Rev. J. P. Hopps, of Leicester, has written some plain words on the approaching Education struggle in the London Echo. "The Nonconformists," he says, "delivered themselves into the hands of the Philistines when they consented to the introduction of so-called 'religious instruction' into Board Schools, and thought they found salvation in merely excluding any formulary or catechism distinctive of any sect; or in that inane failure—a Conscience Clause." Mr. Hopps points out that the Conscience Clause throws all the odium and persecution upon the children who are withdrawn from the religious instruction, and heretical parents shrink from making their little ones targets for bigotry to shoot at. National education and religious education, Mr. Hopps contends, are quite incompatible; and he calls upon the Nonconformists to fight their battle upon the only principle that gives them a chance of victory—pure secular education.

MR. HOPPS concludes, "There is really no alternative. We must give in to the clericals, who will take public money and use it to the uttermost farthing for Church purposes, if we will let them; or we must grasp the real meaning of national education, which, when properly understood, will be sharply severed from priest and parson, church and chapel, catechism and creed, and put within the reach of every child an education given for its own sake, and worthy of the name of 'National,' because it steadfastly refuses to admit anything that could interfere with common interests and the common good. Let them 'paint an inch thick,' 'to this favor' they must come at last."

ENERGETIC Mr. Sam Standring debated on Tuesday evening at Plaistow with Mr. James Marchant on "Is Secularism Reasonable and Beneficial to Mankind?" The chair was taken by a live clergyman, the Rev. T. Given-Wilson. On Sunday morning Mr. Standring debated at Wood Green with a staff-captain of the Salvation Army.

THE third annual balance sheet of the Ball's Pond Secular Sick and Tontine Society is a modest but healthy document. Other Societies might go and do likewise.

LAST Sunday the Liverpool Branch considered our suggestion as to forming a South Lancashire Secular Federation. It was resolved to make the attempt, and the preliminary arrangements were entrusted to Mr. H. Smith, 3 Breck Place, Breck Road, Liverpool, who will be happy to hear from the secretaries of other Branches. We print a letter from Mr. Smith in another column.

WE have received a copy of the San Francisco Argonaut which contains a very broad article on Christianity. It says, "We do not learn from heathen writers whether Jesus ever lived at all. Jewish historians, contemporaneous with the age in which He is claimed to have existed, afford but little proof of the fact. We search the pages of Tacitus, Suetonius, the elder Pliny, Herodotus, and all the Hebrew writers, and we are still in scholastic clouds whether the life and history of the incomparable author of the Christian faith and founder of the Christian church is not a legend." It is curious that an omnipotent God should leave the revolution of his incomparable Son in such an unauthenticated state.

IT was announced at a conference of trade and other societies convened by the National Sunday League, that one of the vice-presidents of the League was ready to bear the cost of the opening of the National Gallery, and the Bethnal Green and Kensington Museums on Sundays for one year, to test whether the people desire to attend or not. We trust the gentleman's generous offer will be accepted, and feel sure his money could not be better laid out. But, after all, the matter of the Sunday opening of the people's property is a matter of right and ought not to depend upon the generosity of individuals.

RESOLUTIONS were passed at the meeting, which represented twenty-eight trade societies and sixty clubs, declaring that the vast majority of the working classes desire the opening of museums and art galleries on Sunday.

IT was on the 17th December, 1876, that Mr. Symes delivered his first distinctively Freethought lecture. The subject was, "The Biography and Character of Jehovah, the Jewish and Christian God." Thirteen years form a good slice of a man's life-time. They have been spent in the service of Man, and their effects will surely appear in the future course of the race. An earnest life flowing into the great river of human existence is not lost; it may be hidden; but it tells; and the river is never again the same as before that affluent lapsed into it. The eddies such an inflow makes may constitute no storm; but they stir the surrounding waters; and in that stir things come to light that would otherwise have remained hidden; and the particles around swing and flow in curves they never could have taken but for this one life. Life is a serious fact, short as it is: its possibilities are simply tremendous. And an earnest life may change the destiny of a whole people. The man who treats life as a joke, or a thing to be trifled away, is a fool, and may be a criminal. Secularists should be in earnest, as this is their only life, and it is a short one—long enough perhaps, if properly used, too long if not.—Liberator.

Digitized by Google

HALL OF SCIENCE CHILDRENS' PARTY.—Per H. Courtney, 3s.; per G. J. Warren, 4s. 7d.; per W. Davey, 3s.; per Mrs. Forder, 1s. 6d.; per Mr. Sunderland, 3s.; per Mr. Bater, 5s. 3d.; per Mrs. Sunderland, 3s. 6d.; per Mr. Dumville, 1s. 3d.; G. Anderson, £3 3s.; A. Lewis, 2s.; J. Cobley, 2s.—R. Forder, secretary.

THE Rev. W. Walsh's lectures at Newcastle are pleasing the Secularists immensely. They find the discussion very profitable. Last Sunday afternoon Mr. Joseph Brown presided, and to-day the chair will be taken by another Secularist, Mr. Creswell.

THE Newcastle Branch is going ahead, making progress with the Sunday agitation, and keeping the city more or less alive. A deputation of the Branch interviewed Canon Talbot and invited him to a public discussion with Mr. Foote. But the wily Canon declined. He did not believe in discussion. Subsequently he wrote that his Bishop agreed with him as to "the unprofitableness of debate." But he had the Bishop's sanction for an offer to address the Secular Society. Of course the Branch declined this offer, and Mr. Joseph Brown wrote a careful reply which has appeared in the local papers. Canon Talbot appears desirous to win his laurels cheaply. He doesn't want to meet a "professional" champion of Freethought, forgetting that he himself is a professional champion of Christianity.

A SHERIFF'S SALE IN PARADISE.

BY HUGHES LE ROUX. TRANSLATED BY BENJ. R. TUCKER.

ON the morning of which I speak, Sheriff Leloucheur, of Paris, assuming for the occasion the function of auctioneer, in company with his crier and several acolytes, climbed the path to Paradise.

On account of the lateness of the season, white clouds creaked beneath their feet like snow, and covered, to right and left, as far as the eye could see, the perspectives of the sky. And Sheriff Leloucheur, heated by the ascent, said as he wiped his brow:

"It's a pity that this sale comes in winter. When I came here the first time, in spring, there was an enchanting view from the gate of Paradise; the earth was as green as my table-cloth. Ah! the situation was well chosen for a summer resort. But in winter it must be a little dreary, and communication is not easy."

They were beginning to see the end of the path, and at the top the walls of Paradise crowned with embattlements, the gate in pure Romanesque, sacrilegiously restored in the Jesuit style of the end of the last century. Two green placards were fastened to the panels.

On them was the announcement:

Sale of Furniture by Order of the Law.

And the word PARADISE was conspicuous on the placards, in big, ironical, impious letters, calculated to catch the eye of passers-by and fill with melancholy the souls of those who have kept a tenderness for the past and grow sad over ruins.

Sheriff Leloucheur was past the influence of these emotions. He approached the gate with a deliberate step, and raised his hand to knock, solemnly, like an actor.

At first there was no stir; then he heard a murmur of voices, the jingling of a rosary striking against a bunch of keys; then a hesitating approach; then a slow unbolting of the gate.

Finally the gate half opened, and an old man's face, with lashes falling over his eyes and a beard hanging like his lashes, peered out timidly.

It was the first time that the crier had accompanied his employer; yet he recognised Saint Peter at once, having seen his portrait on stained-glass windows in his youth.

"What can I do for you?" asked the door keeper in an agitated voice.

Sheriff Leloucheur answered:

"I come to verify the inventory. It is an indispensable formality before the sale."

At these words Saint Peter's chin trembled. He lifted his thin hands with a movement that caused the large sleeves of his surplice to fall back to his elbows.

"What!" said he. "We have got as far as that?"

The sheriff made a gesture of impatience:

"Come, Monsieur Saint Peter, we do not take you by surprise. The sale has been advertised, and you have been made keeper."

The saint shook his head.

"Excuse me," said he; "all this is so new to us.

Then, in a tone of gentle resignation, he added:

"Can you not save Our Lord this last humiliation? You know very well that we have removed nothing. We do not know yet where we shall go to seek refuge."

Sheriff Leloucheur's pantomime indicated that they were trying his patience too far.

"What! you expect me to fail in my duty! I suppose, however, that I must be contented with God's oath; upon what shall I swear him?"

"On himself," answered Saint Peter, with dignity; "I suppose you do not doubt his word?"

The crier insinuated:

"The word of an insolvent debtor. . . ."

But the saint's face expressed such indignation that, distrustful though he was, Sheriff Leloucheur yielded.

"All right," he grumbled, as he turned his back. "We will pass that part of it. This whole proceeding has been irregular to a degree. . . ."

Then, coming back to Saint Peter, he added:

"Get me a table, some chairs for my men, and some benches for the audience; the sale is advertised for half-past nine, and I see the people coming yonder."

In fact, dark and swarming groups were approaching the gate from the path. Already the murmur of voices could be distinguished. There were old-clothes dealers, women with baskets, hyena jaws, Jew noses, the whole army of unclean brokers, "fences," and corpse-devourers that follow the scent of suburban sales. In front and apart were some personages of importance, with new high hats and fur cloaks, talking familiarly.

The crier pointed them out to Sheriff Leloucheur. Immediately that functionary left his table.

"You here, gentlemen? . . . What good luck! Then I am to have the honor of selling to you?"

"To whom is he talking?" asked a dealer of his neighbor in the crowd.

"It seems that they are theatrical managers: M. Rochard, of the Ambigu; M. Duquesnel, of the Porte-Saint-Martin; MM. Clèves and Floury, of the Chatelet."

"And the little dark man yonder, who has such an amiable air and is biting the head of his cane?"

"That is M. Koning, of the Gymnase."

"Why do they come here?"

"They see the stage-setting, like everybody else, and buy properties."

"The bidding will be warm."

"Hush! they are about to begin."

Sheriff Leloucheur was standing on a chair behind his table. In his most emphatic voice and with a gesture on a level with the occasion, he pronounced the words:

"Gentlemen, the sale is opened."

Immediately the crier, facing the public, announced in a shrill voice:

"The first lot that we sell consists of domestic and wild animals: the ox and the ass of the stable, the eagle and the lion of St. Mark. And first the ox."

"Two hundred francs is bid."

"Two hundred fifteen!"

"No one says a word? Sold to M. Rochard!"

"What are you going to do with that quadruped?" asked M. Koning of his fellow-manager.

"I want him for an understudy to my cow in the play of 'La Fermière,'" answered the sympathetic manager, "in case of an epizootic. You cannot imagine how difficult it is to find horned beasts that are not afraid of the footlights. This one must be used to noise and light."

Digitized by Google

Meanwhile the crier had disposed of the four evangelical animals. Amid silence he announced :

"A lot of white robes and halos, thrones and dominions, crowns, palms, gold, silver, white metal, zinc, angels' surplices, martyrs' tunics." . . .

"Thirty thousand francs!" shouted MM. Clèves and Floury as one man.

A syndicate of dealers in religious articles disputed valiantly for this lot. It was knocked off, however, at seventy thousand. And Rochard, bending over, whispered in in Koning's ear :

"I'll bet you the Chatelet is going to mount a mystic fairy spectacle."

"A bad scheme," said Koning. "I wouldn't risk a thousand louis on it."

But the sheriff had risen, and he repe after his subordinate in an emphatic voice :

"Do you hear, gentlemen? We are going to sell the thunder."

A religious silence ensued, amid which a bantering voice suggested :

"Suppose you try it in our presence, to see if it is still in working order?"

Immediately—by the will of God—the thunder roared.

It roared tremendously, like a faithful old thunderbolt bursting for the last time in the service of a master long obeyed. The effect was such that it terrified the irreverent audience. A few persons fainted, and M. Koning thought to himself :

"I should like to have it for my storm in 'L'Abbé Constantin.' It is much better than the tempest of 'Le Roi S'Amuse,' in which Claretie imitates the thunder with a wheelbarrow."

So he acquired this old instrument for frightening men while the sheriff's falsetto proclaimed the next item :

"We will now sell a lot of musical instruments—harps, harmoniums, lutes, æolian harps. I hear a bid of fifteen hundred francs."

"Sixteen hundred!"

"Sixteen hundred fifty!"

"Seventeen hundred!"

"Twenty-five!"

They turned around to look at the bidder. He was a handsome fellow with an engaging face, a light colored beard, and a seductive smile. The sheriff winked as he quickly let fall his hammer.

"Sold to M. Colonne!"

The managers turned around.

"You too? You here?"

"Yes, I came to get all this old trumpery, and then to engage some choruses of virgins. It is so difficult to find disciplined chorus-singers."

This transaction closed the sale. Sheriff Leloucheur was adjusting his collar, when the crier whispered in his ear.

Immediately he exclaimed :

"Pardon me, gentlemen! I had forgotten! The jewel of the collection! The pride of the amateurs!"

And swelling his voice till it was audible in the very last row, he shouted :

"Saint Peter's key!"

On the instant the groups pressed forward, moved not by the merchant's scent for a bargain, but for curiosity.

"We have an offer of ten thousand francs, signed Alphonse de Rothschild," declared the crier, placing his hand to his mouth in the form of a shell.

Before the hammer could fall again, some one responded :

"Twelve thousand!"

The size of the bid was a severe shock to the expert dealers, used to haggling over five-franc pieces.

The man who had ventured it wore a large-checked overcoat and a soft brown felt hat. Previous to this he had not opened his mouth.

When the bidding reached twenty thousand francs, his voice showed not the slightest agitation. At fifty thousand he was as phlegmatic as ever. At one hundred and ten thousand his opponent's fire was extinguished.

"One hundred and ten thousand, gentlemen; let us hurry. One hundred and ten thousand, the bid is from the second row. There is no error. Come, it is worth more than that. A historic curiosity! One hundred and ten thousand! No new bid?"

He raised and lowered his hammer with jerky little movements—the nervous beats of an orchestra leader who wants to put life into his musicians.

A last pause suspended the ivory instrument; then, as if overcome by a sudden resolution, the sheriff concluded :

"Once, twice, three times! One hundred and ten thousand? Sold at one hundred and ten thousand!"

The man with an overcoat nodded his head, and the admiring crowd whispered as they moved away :

"He is an Englishman!"

. . . An hour later.

The gate of Paradise is swinging. the auctioneer's table abandoned. Along the again deserted path an august personage glides, borne on the clouds. Rays of light, obscured as if by ground glass, shine upon his face and the straight folds of his tunic. And at a respectful distance in the rear the mass of faithful seraphim, angels, saints, martyrs, virgins, follow the dethroned Lord in the road of exile.

Suddenly he whose sight is piercing sees in the road, ascending from earth, an aged man in a hurry. He is dressed in a green coat, with an opera-hat under his arm and a sword at his side. His smooth and chubby face, slightly inclined in an attitude of benevolent attention, betrays a sentiment of becoming condolence.

"Why, it is Ernest Renan," says the Lord to himself in surprise. "Why is he coming to meet me?"

The Academician is soon within speaking distance. And controlling the fit of asthma that stifles his words and makes his speech spasmodic, he says :

"Ah, my God! I arrive too late! . . . How sorry I am! . . . I should have so much liked to soften your painful moments! . . . I know these law people! . . . they are in a hurry to go ahead. . . . they do not delay . . . hence a lamentable brutality. . . . And toward a person like you! . . . so respectable! . . . of such ancient consideration."

The Lord lifts his hands in a gesture of sovereign pardon and oblivion.

"They have not left me," he says, "where to lay my head."

Then the illustrious expounder bows and bends in deploring reverence, and asks indulgence for the ingratitude of men.

"These are deplorable excesses. . . . But we will repair them. A pious person has just built, in the heart of Paris, opposite the Exposition, a retreat for Gods in exile. You were not expected so soon. But I am on good terms with the keeper. I will see that he reserves for you an honorable place, the lodging to which you are entitled in the Museum of Religions."

A SOUTH LANCASHIRE FEDERATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE FREETHINKER."

THE note in last Sunday's Freethinker referring to the formation of a Federation of Lancashire Secular Societies, is indeed a "Sugar Plum." If full advantage of Mr. Foote's generous offer of assistance, in the work of constructing such a Federation, is not taken by Lancashire Societies, the neglect will reflect upon them and also upon individual Secularists, the deepest disgrace. Surely there can be no doubt as to the necessity of such an organization; and as to the utility of such, the success of the Tyneside Federation, and that of London, is sufficient demonstration. By means of a number of societies acting in concert, much more work, more solid work, more satisfactory work, can be accomplished. New societies, in towns hitherto strangers to freethought lectures, would spring into existence. The best lecturers in the ranks of Secularism, and possibly able speakers not attached to our party, might be engaged to make a tour of the federated and neighboring towns, without the waste of time, labor and money now expended in travelling long distances for every engagement. The first-class lecturers, and even new aspirants to the platform, would have a better chance of a fair return for their labors. There are many towns in Lancashire, at comparatively short distances from each other, where priestcraft is working mischief, and freethought opposition unknown. An effort ought to be made by the existing societies to establish branches there. Halls are now more easily obtainable than formerly, and even where halls are not to be had open-air lectures (on fine days) could be given, (and would be, willingly no doubt) by some of the branch lecturers.

The above being but a rough outline of the programme of work for the proposed Federation, Societies are invited to communicate with Mr. H. Smith, 3 Breck Place, Breck Road, Liverpool, for further information.

Mr. L. Small, 27 Churchill Street, Liverpool, and the writer of this note, are willing to lecture for local societies, or in towns where no organization exists.—H. SMITH.

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY MEETINGS.

LONDON.

Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, E.C., 7, Mr. G. W. Foote, "Why I am an Atheist."

Camberwell—61 New Church Road, S.E., 7.30, Mr. T. Parris, "The Son of God."

Milton Hall, Kentish Town Road, N.W., 7.30, Musical evening, orchestral band, etc.

Ball's Pond Secular Hall, 36 Newington Green Road, N, 7, Mr. J. Hunt, "Pagan Origin of Christianity."

Bethnal Green—2 Railway Place, Cambridge Road (temporary premises), 3.15, Mr. J. Cooke will open a debate on "God is," being a reply to Mr James Marchant. Discussion invited; admission free.

Edmonton Assembly Rooms, Silver Street, 7, Mr. R Forder "Did Jesus Christ ever Live?"

Old Southgate—Cromwell Hall, 7, Mr. L. Keen, "The Christian God."

Wood Green—Jolly Butchers' Hill, 11, Mr. S. Standring, "Secularism and Socialism Compared"

Woolwich—"Sussex Arms," Assembly Room, 60 Plumstead Road, 7.30, Mr. W. Heaford, "Bible Miracles."

Westminster.—Liberal and Radical Club, Chapter Street, 7, Mr. G. V. Roger, "Objections to Housing of the People."

COUNTRY.

Birmingham—Baskerville Hall, Crescent, Mrs. A. Besant, 11, "Socialism in Theory and Practice;" 3, "What Is Theosophy?" 7, "The Inspiration of the Bible."

Liverpool—Camden Hall, Camden Street, 11, Committee Meeting; 7, Mr. Gowland, "Christianity an Impediment to Progress."

Newcastle-on-Tyne—Society's Rooms, 4 Hall's Court, 3. Meeting of Council of North Eastern Secular Federation. Tea will be provided in Rooms at sixpence each. In the Lecture Hall, Nelson Street, the Rev. Walter Walsh, 2.30, "The Origin of the Bible."

Nottingham—Secular Hall, Beck Street, 7, Miss E. A. Hawksley, "An Hour with the Ancient Philosophers."

Huddersfield — Littlewoods Buildings, Upperhead Row, Mr. J. Grange (Farsley), 2, "Is the Bible a Book of Truth?"; 6.30, "The Life and Writings of Thomas Paine."

Hull—Cobden Hall Waltham Street, Mr. J. Hooper, 10.30 "Heroes and Martyrs of Freethought;" 2.30, "Concessions of Theology to Science;" 6.30, "The Ten Commandments, and how they are kept."

LECTURERS' ENGAGEMENTS.

MR. A. B. MOSS, 44 Credon Road, London, S.E.—Feb. 2, Manchester; March 2, Woolwich; 30, Woolwich. April 12, Camberwell. May 25, Regent's Park.

TOLEMAN GARNER, 8 Heyworth Street, Stratford, London, E.—Feb. 23, Woolwich. March 9, Woolwich; 23, Woolwich: 30, Westminster. May 11, Clerkenwell Green; 18, Regent's Park.

MR. JAMES HOOPER, 11 Upper Eldon Street, Sneinton, Nottingham.—Feb. 2, Hull; 16, Birmingham.

E. STANLEY JONES, 53 Park Street, Toxteth, Liverpool—Feb. 9, Sheffield; 23, Huddersfield.

PROGRESSIVE PUBLISHING CO.'S LIST.

All orders to be sent, with remittance, to R. FORDER, 23 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C. Rate of postage—Orders under 3d., one halfpenny; orders under 6d. one penny. Orders over 6d. post free.

G. W. FOOTE.

	s.	d.
PRISONER FOR BLASPHEMY. Cloth ... ... A Full History of his Three Trials and Twelve Months' Imprisonment. Copies in paper covers, soiled, 6d.	2	6
IS SOCIALISM SOUND? ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant.	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
CHRISTIANITY AND SECULARISM ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. In paper covers.	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth	1	6
INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS ... ... Second edition, enlarged.	0	8
Superior edition, in cloth	1	8
DARWIN ON GOD	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0
CONTENTS:—Darwin's Grandfather—Darwin's Father—Darwin's Early Piety—Almost a Clergyman—On Board the "Beagle"—Settling at Down—Death and Burial—Purpose of Pamphlet—Some Objections—Darwin Abandons Christianity—Deism—Creation—Origin of Life—Origin of Man—Animism—A Personal God—Design—Divine Beneficence—Religion and Morality—Agnosticism and Atheism.
DEFENCE OF FREE SPEECH ... ... Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes.	0	4
LETTERS TO JESUS CHRIST	0	4
PHILOSOPHY OF SECULARISM	0	8
THE BIBLE GOD	0	2
THE FOLLY OF PRAYER	0	2
CHRISTIANITY AND PROGRESS ... ... A Reply to Mr Gladstone.	0	2
WHAT WAS CHRIST? ... ... A Reply to J. S. Mill.	0	2
THE DYING ATHEIST. A Story	0	1
WAS JESUS INSANE? ... ... A searching inquiry into the mental condition of the Prophet of Nazareth.	0	1
THE SHADOW OF THE SWORD ... ... A moral and statistical Essay on War.	0	2
ROYAL PAUPERS ... ... Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty.	0	2
BIBLE HEROES—First Series, in elegant wrapper ... (1) Mr. Adam, (2) Captain Noah, (3) Father Abraham, (4) Juggling Jacob, (5) Master Joseph, (6) Joseph's Brethren, (7) Holy Moses I., (8) Holy Moses II., (9) Parson Aaron, (10) General Joshua, (11) Jephthah and Co., (12) Professor Samson. One Penny each singly.	1	0
BIBLE HEROES—Second Series. (13) Prophet Samuel, (14) King Saul, (15) Saint David I., (16) Saint David II., (17) Sultan Solomon, (18) Poor Job, (19) Hairy Elijah (20) Bald Elisha, (21) General Jehu, (22) Doctor Daniel, (23) The Prophets (Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Hosea).
MRS. BESANT'S THEOSOPHY ... ... A Candid Criticism.	0	2
THEOSOPHY AND SECULARISM ... ... A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant.	0	2
THE NEW CAGLIOSTRO ... ... An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky.	0	2

COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

MISTAKES OF MOSES	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth ... ... Only Complete Edition published in England	1	6
DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT ... ... Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy.	0	6
REPLY TO GLADSTONE ... ... With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler.	0	4
ROME OR REASON? Reply to Cardinal Manning	0	2
FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Rev. Dr. Field ...	0	2
GOD AND MAN. Second Reply to Dr. Field	0	2
THE DYING CREED	0	4
THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH	0	2
THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION ... ... A Discussion with Hon. F. D. Courdert and Gov. S. L. Woodford.	0	2
ART AND MORALITY	0	2
DO I BLASPHEME?	0	2
THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE	0	2
THE GREAT MISTAKE	0	1
LIVE TOPICS		1
MYTH AND MIRACLE	0	1
REAL BLASPHEMY	0	1
SOCIAL SALVATION	0	2

G. W. FOOTE and J. M. WHEELER.

CRIMES OF CHRISTIANITY. Vol. I. Cloth ... Hundred of exact References to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.	2	6
THE JEWISH LIFE OF CHRIST ... ... With voluminous footnotes. An extraordinary work.	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0

G. W. FOOTE and W. P. BALL.

BIBLE HANDBOOK FOR FREETHINKERS AND INQUIRING CHRISTIANS	1	4
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
Sold also in separate parts as follows—
1. Bible Contradictions ... ... The Contradictions are printed in parallel columns.	0	4
2. Bible Absurdities ... ... All the chief Absurdities from Genesis to Revelation, conveniently and strikingly arranged, with appropriate headlines, giving the point of each absurdity in a sentence.	0	4
3. Bible Atrocities ... ... Containing all the godly wickedness from Genesis to Revelation. Each infamy has a separate headline for easy reference	0	4
4. Bible Immoralities, Indecencies, Obscenities, Broken Promises, and Unfulfilled Prophecies. ...	0	4

J. M. WHEELER.

LETTERS FROM HEAVEN	0	1
LETTERS FROM HELL	0	1

DR. E. B. AVELING.

DARWIN MADE EASY. 44pp., cloth ... ... Best Popular Exposition of Darwinism extant.	1	0

GIORDANO BRUNO.

Picture of the Statue of Rome	0	2
Post free in Lett's case	0	3

Digitized by Google

GOD AND THE STATE

A New Pamphlet by

2d. COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL. 2d.

2d. # THE IMPOSSIBLE CREED 2d.

An Open Letter to the

BISHOP OF PETERBOROUGH.

BY

G. W. FOOTE.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE

AN AGNOSTIC'S VIEW.

By COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

TWOPENCE. Reprinted Verbatim from the "North American Review." TWOPENCE.

Every Freethinker, Radical or Socialist should read it and circulate it amongst his friends.

BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY OF FREETHINKERS

OF ALL AGES AND NATIONS.

BY J. M. WHEELER.

Handsomely Bound in Cloth. Price Seven Shillings and Sixpence.

1d. A LIE IN FIVE CHAPTERS? 1d.

THE

REV. HUGH PRICE HUGHES'S

CONVERTED ATHEIST

By G. W. FOOTE.

Should be circulated by Freethinkers who desire to see this pious fraud exposed as widely as possible.

W. J. Rendell's

"WIFE'S FRIEND."

Recommended in "Law of Population," and "Wife's Hand Book." Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell Street Clerkenwell, and supplied per post, 2s. dozen. For particulars of this Malthusian discovery send stamped envelope. Higginson's Syringe, with vertical and reverse current, 3s. 6d. and 4. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. All other Malthusian Appliances. All prices post free.

LIMITED FAMILIES.—Allbutt, posted, 6½d.; Besant, 7d.; Owen, 7d. Malthus, 1s. 1d. Lists (Literature and Appliances), 1d. VOLUNTARY TAXATION. Fisher, 32pp., 1½d. Old Testament, 1d. Darwin's Hypocrisy, Dawson, 4½d.—Fisher, Progressive Publisher, Koburg, Leeds.

GRATIS.

AN ILLUSTRATED 16-PAGE PAMPHLET, containing extracts from the utterances of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Manchester; the Revs. T. R. Malthus, A. E. Whatham, M. J. Savage, Leonard Dawson, — Lawton, H. R. Haweis; the following Doctors—Allbutt, Allinson, Armstrong, Drysdale, Pye Chavasse, E. B. Foote, Nicholls, Wilder, Raciborski, Napheys and Reamy. Also Plato, Aristotle, Sismondi, Huxley, Mill, and numerous others. Should be read by every married and marriageable person. Sent on receipt of stamped addressed envelope by J. R. HOLMES, Hanney, Wantage, Berks.

TESTIMONIALS (Extracts from).

"The one you sent me some months since is

Quite Worn Out

with being lent to so many friends."

"Some of us have paid five shillings for less than one-tenth of the information."

MEDICAL ESSAYS. VOL. I.
By Dr. T. R. ALLINSON,
4 SPANISH PLACE, MANCHESTER SQUARE, LONDON, W.
Of the Author, for Postal Order for 1s 2d.

It contains Articles on: Management of Infancy; Health; Longevity; The Teeth; Brown Bread; Bread Making; Food; Vegetarianism; Tobacco; The Drink Question; Fruit; Fresh Air; Exercise; Bathing; Light; Holidays; &c. Also the cause and cure of Disease; Constipation; Biliousness; Eczema; Blackheads and Pimples; Nervousness; Coughs and Colds; Chest Complaints; Deafness; Thread Worms; Long Worms; Tape Worms; The Itch, &c.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. VOL II.
Of the Author, for Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Containing Articles on: The Healing Power of Nature; Clothing; Electricity in Disease; Apparent Health; Vegetarian Experiments; The Pig as Human Food; Popular Fallacies about Flesh; The Beef Tea Delusion; Salt; Saline Starvation; Tea Drinking; The Hair and its Management; Sleep and Sleeplessness; Want of Energy, &c.; Health Hints for Workers, for Shop Assistants, and for Servants; Advice for the Thin; for the Stout; and on the Proper Treatment of Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, &c.

No House is Complete without these Works.
When ordering the Essays, be sure and state which Volume you require.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE;
OR, THE ONLY RATIONAL WAY OF TREATING DISEASE.
Everybody likes it who reads it.
Of the Author, for Postal-order for 1s. 1d.

RHEUMATISM ITS CAUSE & CURE
Post free for Seven Stamps

CONSUMPTION; ITS CAUSE, SYMPTOMS, AND CURE
Post Free for Seven Stamps.

THREE PAMPHLETS TO YOUNG MEN
Post Free for Thirteen Stamps.

TO MARRIED PEOPLE
Or Those Contemplating Marriage.
Send 1d Stamp to
DAVIES, CHEMIST, 101 PARK LANE, LEEDS,
And you'll receive an Illustrated List of most useful Malthusian Appliances by return of post.

HARTNOLL,

ENGLISH AND FOREIGN CHEMIST,
1A PICCADILLY
(Under the London Pavilion Music Hall),
LONDON, W.

Hartnoll's Specialities, Appliances and Medicated Preparations are world-renowned.

Spiral, Douche and Latest Improved Syringes.

ESTABLISHED OVER 50 YEARS.

CAMBERWELL BRANCH N. S. S., 61 New Church Road, S.E.—Three Rooms to Let, at a low rental. Apply to Hall-keeper.

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each, upper or lower set, £1. Best quality, 4s. each, upper or lower, £2, completed in four hours when required, repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18c. gold 15s.; stopping, 2s. 6d. extraction, 1s. painless by gas, 5s.

LIGHTNING CARTOONS.—Twelve 34 by 18 Likenesses. Parliamentary, Military and Royal Celebrities, and simple instructions by which anyone can sketch them. Post free, 2s. 6d. F. Coulthard, East Cliff Terrace, Bournemouth.

IRETON'S
INDELIBLE JET BLACK MARKING INK
(NO HEATING REQUIRED)
For Rubber Stamps, Stencil, Type or Pen.
PRICE 6d. 1/- and 2/6 per Bottle.
Sample bottle 4d. post free.
IRETON & Co., 92, Gracechurch St., LONDON, E.C.
The largest makers of Rubber Stamps.
Special terms to the Trade.

Dyed with Ireton's Ink, no hope of ever changing my Color.

Printed and Published by G. W. Foote, at 28 Stonecutter Street Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

Vol. X.—No. 6.] SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1890. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

SALVATION BY SIMILARS; OR RELIGIOUS HOMŒOPATHY.

MR. FORDER'S article on "A Bible Disease," in which he refers to the curious statement that the Philistines when smitten with emerods made golden images of the disease, reminded me of an old intention to write upon this subject. Few persons of those who read this story or the similar one in Numbers of how when the Jews were bitten by serpents Moses set up a brazen serpent which had the effect of curing the wounds, are aware of the large part played by this doctrine of Salvation by similars among the superstitions of mankind, or suspect that it had any share in forming Christian theology.

Some one has called the homœopathic doctrine similia similibus curantur, like things are cured by like, "a pleasantry founded on an hypothesis." Be this as it may, the hypothesis extends back to the very beginnings of thought. To connect things similar is, we may say, the first step in philosophy. It is a recognised principle in savage thought that things like each other, however superficially, affect each other in a mystic manner. Thus in Melanesia, according to Mr. Codrington, "a stone in the shape of a pig, of a bread-fruit, of a yam, was a most valuable find because it made pigs prolific and fertilised bread-fruit trees and yam plots."

Many curious customs and superstitions may be traced to this belief. In old medical works one may still read that to eat of a lion's heart is a specific to ensure courage, while other organs and certain bulbous plants are a remedy for sterility. This notion, which largely affected the early history of medicine, is known as the doctrine of signatures.

Certain plants and other natural objects were believed to be so marked or stamped that they presented visibly the indications of the diseases, or diseased organs, for which they were specifics; these were their signatures. Hence a large portion of the ancient art of medicine consisted in ascertaining what plants were analogous to the symptoms of disease, or to the organ diseased. To this doctrine we owe some popular names of plants, such as eye-bright, liver-wort, spleen-wort, etc. The mandrake, from its supposed resemblance to the human form, was credited with marvellous powers, and anyone who will take the trouble to inquire into the folk-lore concerning plants and disease will find that much depends upon the appearance of the remedy. The custom of sorcerers making a waxen image of the person they desired to affect is founded on a similar notion.

But what has this to do with Christian theology? More than one would think, as we shall perhaps find if we examine the ideas of the people among whom it arose. One of the most curious peculiarities of Christianity is its doctrine of a God crucified for sinners. So strange, so repugnant to reason as such a doctrine is, it was quite consonant to the thought of those who held the belief in salvation by similars. If Paul said since by man came death by man came also the resurrection of the dead, the development of the doctrine necessitated that if it is God who damns it is also God who saves. Any casual reader of Paul must have been struck by the antithesis which he constantly draws between the law and the Gospel, works and faith, the fall of man and the redemption through "the second Adam." The very phrase, "second Adam," implies this doctrine, which is summed up in the statement that "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us" (Gal. iii., 13). It is the old toper's doctrine "you must take a hair of the dog that bit you."

God in order to redeem man had to take on sinful flesh and be himself the curse in order to be the cure. Hence we read in the Teaching of the Twelve Apostles, chap. xvi., that "they who endure in their faith shall be saved by the very curse." Thus may we understand that which modern Christians find so difficult of explanation, viz., that the whole Christian world for the first thousand years from St. Justin to St. Anselm believed that Christ paid the ransom for sinners to the devil, their natural owner. Christ in order to become the Savior had to become the curse, had to die and had to descend to hell, though of course, being God, he could not stay there. Hence his being likened to the brazen serpent, that remnant of early Jewish fetichism which was smashed by Hezekiah (2 Kings xviii., 4). John makes Jesus himself teach that "as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness [as a cure for serpent bites] even so must the Son of man be lifted up, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have eternal life."

So Irenæus says (Bk. iv., chap. 2), "men can be saved in no other way from the old wound of the serpent than by believing in Him, who in the likeness of sinful flesh, is lifted up from the earth on the tree of martyrdom, and draws all things to Himself and verified the dead." That is, Christ was made sinful flesh to be the curse itself, just as the innocent brass appeared a serpent because the form of the curse was necessary to the cure. Paul dwells on the passage of the law "Cursed is he that hangeth on a tree," with the very object of showing that Christ, cursed under the law, was a blessing under his glad tidings. The Fathers were never tired of saying that man was lost by a tree (in Eden) and saved by a tree (on Calvary); that as the curse came in child-birth* and thorns, so the world was saved by the birth of Christ and his crown of thorns. Justin says, "As the curse came by a Virgin, so by a Virgin the salvation," and this antithesis between Eve and Mary has been carried on by Catholic writers down to our own day.

As the Christian doctrine of salvation through the blood of Christ has certainly no more foundation in fact than the efficacy of liver-wort in liver diseases, we suggest it may have no better foundation than the ancient superstition of salvation by similars.

J. M. WHEELER.

* Notice too 1 Tim. ii., 15, where women are said to be saved by child-birth, their curse.

Digitized by Google

LETTERS TO THE CLERGY.—IX.

On "Christ and Humanity."

To the Rt. Rev. Edward White Benson, Archbishop of Canterbury.

[CONTINUED.]

The clerical gentlemen with their "supernatural gift"—in other words, with the assistance of the Holy Ghost—have carried on the great work of Salvation. They have prepared men and women for Heaven, booked passages for them on board the ship of Faith, and guaranteed them a safe voyage over the sea of Death into the port of Felicity.

Doing good for men and women in this life was a mere accident of their profession. Morality itself they despised and derided unless it wore their colors. They taught that there was no Salvation outside the Church, nor any goodness apart from its dogmas. "We have no power to do good works pleasant and acceptable to God," says your tenth Article, "without the grace of God by Christ preventing us." Nor is this all. "Works done before the grace of Christ, and the inspiration of his Spirit, are not pleasant to God," says your thirteenth Article, "and we doubt not but they have the nature of sin." The best man on earth was sure of damnation if he stood outside the Church pale. "They also are to be held accursed," says your eighteenth Article, "that presume to say, that every man shall be saved by the Law or Sect which he professeth, so that he be diligent to frame his life according to the Law, and the light of Nature."

But now that people will no longer be damned for nothing, and even doubt your ability to send them to Heaven or keep them out of Hell, the wiser clergy see that a new move is necessary. The meaning of Salvation must be enlarged. It must include "the Salvation of Society," and "the Salvation of the Individual" in this world. The clergy are to be the savers of bodies as well as the savers of souls. They are to take up "the Social Problem." Socialism and Individualism are to be mastered, Henry George is to be read and digested, the better housing of the poor is to be tackled, and all the intricate problems of industrial life are to be solved by clerical brains. "No young man," you say, "can be considered as fully equipped for Ordination until he has some knowledge of these subjects."

How pretty, my lord! But do you think the brains of an ordinary curate will stand such a strain? Remember that the Church does not get the pick of young intellects. For the most part it gets the refuse. And is it possible, with such material, to make the Church a dominant force in the evolution of Society?

Religion, my lord, at the very best, cannot head the march of progress. When it is not the principle of retrogression, it is only the principle of order. It is the chief Conservative influence, sanctifying vested interests and inherited ideas. This is its particular rôle, and you can no more alter it than you can stop the motion of the earth or make it revolve from east to west.

Let me also remark that when the Church "gives herself to social problems and moral duties" she is descending from her throne and mixing with the crowd. Becoming the handmaid of morality, she admits that ethics are higher than religion, and acknowledges her old servant as her present mistress. She signs her own death warrant and rings her own knell. Like the lion tamer, she found safety in her imperious look. When she softens it into a pleading gaze her spell is broken. The moment she waits upon Morality she abdicates her crown for ever. She admits that she was only a usurper, or at best a regent, and gives place to the lawful sovereign. For awhile she may be tolerated at Court, but she will fall into disfavor, and finally be banished, as Morality learns to sway the golden sceptre.

I do not expect you to admit this, and I therefore return to the clergy and their labor of Salvation. You protest that they will still maintain their Doctrines, and not lose them in the Service of Men. And what are their doctrines? Some of them you enumerate—such as the Inspiration of the Bible, the Trinity, the Incarnation, and the Resurrection of the Body. It is a terrible cargo, my lord, which will sink you to perdition. You see that the Church is in troubled waters, and that the force of scepticism is very great. You admit that "at present there is something like a balance of currents," but you declare "there can be no doubt which will prevail." You have no doubt which will prevail, nor have I. But there we part company. You believe the Church will triumph, and I believe she will be overthrown.

You recognise the spread of Atheism among the French workmen, and you are apparently not blind to the fact that it is permeating the English workmen also, but you seek to dispose of it by a mixture of prophecy and false explanation.

> "Atheism only comes to hand as a weapon, since the wish to exaspera'e the masses leads leaders ignorant of the true spirit of Christianity to think that a religious patience here, and the hope of glory hereafter, must make men acquiesce in injustice and a low standard of daily existence. We shall hear little of Atheism when they know what Christianity does teach."

My lord, you are mistaken. Atheists are not ignorant of "the true spirit of Christianity." They have learnt it in the school of history and experience. They are not to be deceived by the plausible pretences of its modern apologists. They judge Christianity by what it did, and what it does, when unchecked. In the days of its supremacy it opposed science, kept the masses in ignorance, sanctified the robbery and oppression of kings and nobles, persecuted heretics, drenched the earth with blood and tears, built dungeons for honest thinkers, invented and applied the most diabolical instruments of torture, illuminated the black night of its despotism with the fires of a myriad stakes, where it burnt the best of men for the crime of being men, and lifted up the crucifix over their agony as a symbol of the loving-kindness of Christ.

Still in holy Russia, in Spain, and other countries where it is supreme, we see its inevitable fruit. And by that fruit the Atheist judges it; not by what it produces after many grafts of science and civilisation. Freethinkers in Spain have recently been condemned to six years' imprisonment for "insulting the Church," that is, for approving the erection of a statue to Giordano Bruno at Rome. Viktor Lennstrand is suffering two years' imprisonment in Sweden for lecturing against Christianity. Even in England, where you mouth about "the immense benefit of allowing free discussion," the Blasphemy Laws are in full force. Six years ago I was imprisoned for "blasphemy" like any common felon, and I have yet to learn that your voice was raised against the iniquity. No bequest to a Freethought Society is legal. Four years ago an Atheist left £500 to enable the Manchester Secularists to obtain their own premises, and the money was intercepted by a Christian legatee on the order of a legal tribunal. More recently still Mr. Bradlaugh brought in a Bill to redress these grievous wrongs, and it was rejected by an overwhelming majority in the House of Commons.

So much, my lord, for your Christian love of "free discussion." Atheists see it is a platonic affection, not meant for practice, but to inspire an elegant composition. They know that Christianity always persecutes to the full extent of its power, and is always as wicked as the moral sense of the community will tolerate.

Digitized by Google

"What Christianity does teach" is as open to an Atheist as to an Archbishop. Read the Sermon on the Mount, my lord, and see whether it does not offer "future glory," recommend "religious patience," and bid men to "acquiesce in injustice, and a low standard of daily existence." When the Atheist proclaims these facts he points to chapter and verse. He also points to the long record of popular misery under the sway of the Church. He does not "wish to exasperate the masses." He only preaches the divine gospel of discontent with evil and revolt against injustice. He tells the people to think for themselves, to throw off the fetters of superstition, to beware of a creed which once blighted the world and would do so again if it had the power, to study the problem of their secular welfare, to make the most of earth instead of dreaming of heaven, to build up the Republic of Man instead of the Kingdom of God. This is not "exasperating the masses." It is urging them on the path of wise and durable progress.

G. W. FOOTE.

(To be continued.)

"ABOVE THE CLOUDS."

A few days ago death destroyed a poor woman's only child, and the mother having wrung her hands piteously and bewailed her sad loss until her heart seemed almost breaking, was at last consoled by a Scripture reader, who informed her that the "dear little one" had been called "above the clouds" to the home of its Heavenly father, where the mother would ultimately join her offspring if she would but trust implicity in Christ. The poor creature seemed satisfied for awile, but at length burst into tears again, as though to demonstrate that human affection is stronger than superstition.

This sad incident set me athinking. "Above the clouds" I said! How far above them? Then I thought of the suns and stars that stud the universe. How many billions of miles of space separate some of the stars from our earth, and whether it was possible that somewhere in the illimitable universe, there could be a place where the souls of children as well as those of grown persons could be located, eagerly awaiting through untold ages the sound of the heavenly trumpet, which should announce that the earthly career of all men was at an end. Then I remember that I had a sister once who died in her childhood, and who a few moments before her life ebbed away, expressed the hope that she might meet her brothers and sisters in the "realms above!"

She was only eight, when her young soul, according to the theologians, was wafted to heaven. It would, indeed, be a great joy to me to see her beautiful face again. Have souls in heaven a materialised form? Maybe I shall live till I am sixty. Will the young soul of my sister remain young in heaven? or will years spent in heaven make any appreciable change in the appearance of her soul? How will she recog-my "old soul" when I arrive there?—a preposterous idea, I imagine my Christian friends to say, as though I should ever go "above" while there's the slightest possible room "below!" But if I have an immortal soul, unbelief will not kill it; and if all mankind are summoned to heaven on the Day of Judgment, we shall all at least have a glance at the heavenly throne, and probably meet the souls of a few relatives and friends before our own trial comes on.

Suppose while I am lingering outside the heavenly court of justice I should meet the soul of my dear young sister, what means will one spirit have of identifying another? Suppose my soul were to come within reasonable distance of that of Socrates, how would it be possible for me to converse with him? Do all souls speak one language? or is there a heavenly college where linguistic difficulties may be overcome? Souls are to sing in heaven, but without mouths or tongues. Some earthly hen-pecked husbands will be glad of this. They will be perfectly satisfied to do without the tongue of their wives' spirit. Some of the male souls will be glad also to be relieved of feet, as it will remove all doubts as to there being any heavenly corns or bunnions to trouble them as they pace the golden pavements above.

Then again, we shall have to consider the climate of these heavenly regions. If it is hot it will not suit Esquimaux souls, unless they should like a change after so many years of snow. If the climate is cold the number of "perishing souls" will be enormous. Hindoos, Chinese, Italians, Spaniards, will assuredly go in search of the "realms below." But enough! What do scripture readers know about heaven above! Nothing. And the parson knows just as much; but these charlatans for ages have played upon the hopes and fears of the ignorant as upon a stringed instrument; and thus the minds of the poor are perpetually filled with wild chimeras, which drive them into actions whose effects are detrimental alike to the happiness and progress of the race.

Arthur B. Moss.

HOW THE CHINESE REGARD CHRISTIANITY

In the numbers of the Freethinker from Aug. 28 to Sept. 25, 1887, appeared "Why I am a Heathen," by a Chinaman. Wong Chin Foo, the writer, had been a resident in Christian countries and knew the character of the Christians around him as well as the weak points of their religion. In China arguments against Christianity naturally partake more of an appeal to Chinese prejudices, especially to their moral sense of filial piety. To the Chinese the injunctions to "Let the dead bury the dead," and "if any man come unto me and hate not his father," etc., "he cannot be my disciple," appear perfectly unnatural.

Mr. Medhurst notices a tract written against him by a Chinaman, in which it is argued that "it was monstrous in barbarians to attempt to improve the inhabitants of the Celestial Empire when they were so miserably deficient themselves. Thus, introducing among the Chinese a poisonous drug, for their own benefit to the injuries of others, they were deficient in benevolence; sending their fleets and armies to rob other nations, they could make no pretensions to rectitude; allowing men and women to mix in society showed they were deficient in propriety, and rejecting the maxims of the ancients showed them wanting in wisdom. Truth was the only good quality to which they could make the least claim. Deficient therefore in four out of the five cardinal Virtues how could they expect to renovate others." The Chinese also resent the notion that a dead Jew was superior to their moral teacher Confucius. They point to the immoral lives of Christians, and especially to their deficiency in filial piety, and they do not forget to notice that among the followers of the dead Jew offices are accorded to the rich and noble, while among the followers of Confucius all positions are open to competitive examination.

Was it a slip or ironical? The Daily Telegraph, after stating that Earl Sydney's illness had become acute, and that prayers were offered on his behalf at several churches and chapels, added—"Lord Sydney, however, yesterday appeared much improved."

If parsons would but shorter preach,
How thankful we should be!
And practise half of what they teach,
How thankful we should be!
If Church and State were joined no more,
If all paid tax, both church and store,
And free schools flourished evermore,
How thankful we should be!

Digitized by Google

ACID DROPS.

The Pall Mall Gazette discovers another gross case of persecution in France. It appears that M. Saboraud, elected for La Vendée, has been unseated on the ground of clerical influence. A protest was made in the Chamber by Bishop Freppel, who claimed that the clergy had a perfect right to warn their flocks against voting for candidates hostile to religion. The Bishop was replied to by M. Ribot, a moderate Republican, who declared that the clergy had absolutely no right to busy themselves with politics, whether in or outside the Church. This rule was too often forgotten; but the Republicans would not permit the clergy to direct the consciences of their parishioners against the laws and institutions of the country; a declaration which was loudly applauded by the Left.

"Cannot these French Republicans," says the Pall Mall, "see that they do far too much honor to the sacredotal theory by forbidding the priest to do anything a man and a citizen is free to do? Surely the true Liberal is against sacredotalism equally when it is invoked as a claim for privilege or as a pretext for proscription." But this is all nonsense. The Pall Mall forgets one thing—the French priests are state-paid. Is it likely that a Republican government is going to pay the priests to fulminate against Republican candidates? Of course the clergy can secure the same freedom as other citizens by ceasing to take the cash of the State. But their claim to have the money and the freedom too is simply preposterous.

The Queen's printer is not devoid of "cheek." As a memento of the Exhibition he presented President Carnot with a handsomely-bound Bible, of the pattern used in English cathedrals. Considering that M. Carnot is a Freethinker, this is a piece of exquisite taste. Of course he accepted the gift, in a polite gentlemanly way, but instead of keeping it he passed it on to the National Library, where it will be kept merely as a specimen of printing and binding.

There was a terrible fire at Washington on Monday morning. Mr. Tracey the Secretary of the Naval Department, nearly lost his life, and his wife and an unmarried daughter perished in the flames. Miss Tracey occupied a front bedroom on the third floor. According to the Daily News correspondent, "she could be seen at the window in the light that flickered in between the blinding smoke and flames, clad in white, her hands in an attitude of prayer, and her face uplifted. The flames gradually hemmed her in, and she finally perished."

How many who read this fearful story will learn its lesson? Here is a woman burnt to death in the attitude of prayer. The only answer she heard was the hiss of the flames as they hemmed her in. Yet the incident will be quietly forgotten, and the clergy will go on preaching their lies—for a living.

The list of English publications the prohibition of whose sales has been decreed by the imperial censorship in Russia has just been printed in London. It includes Ingersoll's Social Salvation and his Household of Faith.

Hardly a week passes without some instances of clerical bigotry endeavoring to obstruct the Burials Act. A correspondent of the Daily News writes: "Will the State-appointed religious teachers ever all learn obedience to the law? The devices for rendering funerals under the Burial Act of 1880 most difficult, or for attaching to them a social stigma, are many and various. In the case of a funeral in a parish in the diocese of Gloucester, on Tuesday, the procession, on arrival at the churchyard, found the main gates closed and locked against it, and it was intimated to the officiating Nonconformist minister that a side entrance some distance off was open."

As that was not the usual entrance for funerals, the minister very properly declined to go to it. After a search the sexton was found, and the gates were unlocked, but not until the mourners had been kept long waiting in the roadway in front of the churchyard gates. At the service itself the sexton, whose special duty it is to assist at burials, declined to sprinkle earth on the coffin as it was lowered into the grave, saying that he had been instructed not to do so. It does not seem to have occurred to him that there may be risk in obeying instructions which are illegal.

Mr. Joseph Brown's letter to the Newcastle papers on Canon Talbot's avoidance of debate with a representative Secularist has evoked articles from both the Leader and the Chronicle. They speak of Mr. Brown and the Newcastle Branch of the National Secular Society with respect, but between the lines you can see they regard the Freethinkers as infernal nuisances, who will not let the city live in peace; which, of course, means leaving Christianity in undi-puted possession.

The Leader professes to love discussion, and says "let it be free, vigorous, honest, unrestricted." But a platform debate is "palpably ridiculous." Of course it is—if you feel you are on the wrong side. No doubt the Leader will frown at this suggestion, but when the frown subsides it might just ask itself this question—Why is it that the Secularists are so eager for discussion and the Christians so reluctant?

The Chronicle goes to the length of saying that the attempt of the Secularists to force Canon Talbot into a discussion is "unseemly." Hoity-toity! What airs the Christians give themselves! Then the Canon's offer to address the Secularists in a quiet way—that is, his way—is described as "generous." More airs! And more food for Secular mirth.

Lord Randolph Churchill and other persons of influence have signed a memorial, urging the danger of the accumulation of decomposing human remains near great populations They do not, however, point out that the true remedy is cremation, which might be made cheaper than earth burial

Madame Blavatsky takes her title of "The New Cagliostro" as a honor. At least we judge so from finding the initials H. P. B. appended to an article in the last number of Lucifer, entitled "Was Cagliostro a Charlatan?" H. P. B. contends that the so-called impostor was really a hero and martyr of Theosophy, one instructed by the Adepts to astonish the world and partially reveal the secret doctrine. H. P. B. casts doubt on "Cagliostro" having died in prison, and even hints that he may be still alive and on the earth! Cagliostro's character is not of transcendant importance nowadays, but as his career illustrates human gullibility, we shall give a short account of him next week.

"Economist" writes to the papers that he "recently met with a collection instituted by a Bishop which, on the face of it, cost as much to the public as the amount contributed." This is nothing unusual. The appeals for the heathen would be not so frequent, if the heathen got all the cash and there was nothing for the middlemen.

Archdeacon's Farrar's "eloquent discourses" on Christian missions have been as barren as the east wind. Concluding his last discourse, he said that he thought some of his listeners would have found their hearts stirred-up to render financial help, and he had announced that he would be pleased to receive donations, but he had not received a single sixpence.

According to a pious contemporary a minister at Beccles has been presented with a copy of Farrar's "Early Days of Christianity in Morocco."

Mr. C. R. Haines has published, through the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, a kind of answer to Canon Taylor in the form of a volume entitled Islam as a Missionary Religion. Reviewing this work, the Academy says he doesn't understand the subject, and laughs at his talk about Mohammedanism spreading itself by the sword, as though Christianity hadn't done the same thing. "Moslems," says the Academy, "are so passionately attached to their religion because they believe it to be not only the best religion, but the only true religion. They appeal to the lofty morality which the Koran inculcates as the chief evidence of the divine mission of its founder. They attribute the marvellous spread of Islam, and the hold it has on its disciples, to its own intrinsic excellence; and they are unable to understand how any heathen tribe if offered the choice between Islam and Christianity, could possibly fail to choose the former."

Digitized by Google

Flora Trinder, a domestic servant and a Salvationist, was charged on Monday at Bow Street with stealing a cheque for £10 and forging the endorsement. She was arrested at a Salvation Army meeting in Tottenham Court Road. Of course the affair is a small one. But just imagine how the religious and "anti-infidel" papers would shout if the police went into a Freethought meeting and arrested a Freethinker for theft.

Another suicide from religious melancholia. Mrs. Knight, of Rushden, after going to the Old Baptist Church and partaking of the sacrament, went home and cut her throat. The doctor had previously attended her for religious monomania. Oh, the blessedness of religion!

Eleanor Martin, of Plymouth, suffered from religious mania, which drove her to commit suicide. The jury returned the usual verdict of insanity, but forgot to add a rider, "brought on by religion."

In the Queen's Bench a farm bailiff named Carpenter, aged 70, was awarded £150 and £50 damages against the Rev. F. J. Aldrich Blake, rector of Welsh Becknor, Herefordshire, his late employer, for five alleged false and malicious prosecutions, and also for libel. Mr. Steward, a cattle dealer, who was charged with conspiracy with plaintiff in the previous case, also recovered £50 damages against the same defendant. The defendant conducted his case in person, as his counsel returned their briefs in consequence of not being able to agree with defendant as to the conduct of the case.

The Bishop of Bangor has had to prosecute the Rev. John Williams Meyrick, rector of Llandegfan, for wilful contumacy in refusing to perform divine service at the church, or to allow a curate to officiate in his stead. Finding no service conducted there, the bishop sent a curate, but the rector considered the church as his own property, and he was not permitted to enter the building.

Mr. Wm. M. F. Round writes in the American Forum on "Immigration and Crime." Mr. Round finds that the Irish contribute to the American criminal classes out of all proportion to their numbers. He shows that while the Irish are 3·6 of the foreign population, they furnish 9·2 per cent. of the prison population. We believe we do no injustice to their religion in largely holding it accountable for this. Without taking into account its doctrine of absolution, Catholicism, by encouraging its adherents to "increase and multiply," is a direct cause of their poverty, and so of the vice and misery which always follow in poverty's train.

An American murderer, Thomas J. Cole, who killed a friend with a hatchet while he was sleeping, will shortly take his place in glory. He is very devout and is constantly attended by Father Daley, of the Church of the Annunciation, Philadelphia.

Bishop Barry has addressed a West-end meeting on behalf of the Christian Evidence Society. His remarks on "unbelief"—which means, of course, unbelief in his religion—were worthy of his cloth as well as the Society for whose funds he was pleading. He said that the chief root of unbelief is "sheer ignorance." Well now, we have a pretty large stock of unbelief, and if Bishop Barry thinks it is all the result of ignorance, we shall be happy to give him an opportunity of exposing it in public. His knowledge ought to settle our ignorance in a single evening's debate. Let him smash up the Editor of the Freethinker, and he will do a good deal of damage to Freethought; and, for our part, we are ready to be smashed up, if Bishop Barry is disposed to try his holy hand at the business.

The second root of unbelief, according to Bishop Barry, is "moral evil, whether vice, crime, or sin." Now if we were to say what this sort of nonsense invites, we should call Bishop Barry a libellous humbug. But we won't say it. We simply remark that if moral evil is a cause of unbelief, the Bishop will find plenty of preventive work in his own Church without going outside.

Fancy a man being prompted by "moral evil" to disbelieve the Hebrew yarn about the first woman being manufactured out of a spare rib! Fancy a man being moved by "vice" to suppose that Darwin knew far more about biology than Moses! Fancy a man being impelled by "crime" to smile at the story of a missionary taking a three days' trip inside a whale! Fancy a man being instigated by "sin" to think that miracles are the offspring of ignorance and credulity! Really, when you reduce the Bishop's little argument to the concrete, its bigotry and vulgarity are lost in its infinite absurdity.

Bishop Barry complained, too, that unbelief shows "an impatience of anything like mystery" And then he went on to juggle about "mystery," like a professional purveyor of the article. There was the "mystery of matter," the "mystery of life," and so on. Everywhere you come to mystery at last. Very true, but that kind of mystery is simply ignorance. We see no further because the light fails us. But your mystery, O right reverend father in God, is artificial. It is not natural darkness, but smoke. Or, to drop metaphor, while natural mystery marks the end of knowledge, religious mystery marks the end of sense. A mystery of nature is something we don't understand; merely this, and nothing more. A theological mystery is something very different. It is a flat contradiction between the priests' doctrines and the facts of life.

Take an illustration. You go to church and hear the preacher say that God is infinitely good and loving, as well as infinitely powerful. You come home and find your house on fire and your children mere smoking masses of charred flesh. In your agony you ask why the infinitely loving and all-powerful God allowed such a tragedy to happen. "Ah, my brother," says the priest, "it is a mystery." In other words, it is a fact giving the lie direct to his hollow mouthings.

We have just a parting word for Bishop Barry, and it is this—Let him quote from the Bible with a little less looseness. We are well supplied with "sheer ignorance," but we know whether a text is right or wrong when we see it. The Bishop advised his audience "to follow the Apostolic injunction to give a reason for the faith which is in them." Now the Apostolic injunction (1 Peter iii., 15) is to "give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear." Of course we don't expect meekness and fear from a Bishop, or any other Christian controversialist, for their religion "bosses the show" now, whereas it sang very small in the days of Saint Peter. But we do expect them to quote correctly from their own fetish, the inspired Word of God. Nor is this a small point; for the "hope" spoken of by Peter is a very different thing from "faith," as may be seen from Paul's famous panegyric on charity. The Christian's faith is retrospective. It means his belief in the miraculous career, death, resurrection, ascension, and teaching of Jesus Christ. His hope is prospective. It means his expectation of a reserved seat in heaven.

The Young Women's Christian Association is going in for a "Universal Week of Prayer." What will they pray for? Good-looking husbands, says the cynic.

Baptism by total immersion—which is undoubtedly the rule of the English Church, sprinkling being the exception—will, I hear, in future be insisted on at all public christenings at the Chapel of Ease, High Street, Ilford, where the infant of one of the clergy was triply immersed a Sunday or two ago as a start. I hope the youthful clergy, who generally hold babies as if they feared the children might tumble to pieces, will be careful if this immersion practice increases. No one but a parent knows how slippery a wet baby is; and just imagine the declension in female favor of a favorite curate who let an infant—before it was quite regenerate, perhaps—tumble into a deep font and get drowned, or even catch cold!—Weekly Times.

The Bournemouth Guardian publishes a curious letter from a Baptist missionary at Stanley Pool, Central Africa. He says "The people here buy slaves, and fatten up and kill and eat them." But he is glad to say he is on good terms with them, and concludes by saying "I am quite happy"—there being no chance, we presume, of the missionary being treated like the slaves.

Digitized by Google

The Lyons judges have a queer law-suit to settle. A pious lady had the lower jaw of a saint, Jean Soanen, Bishop of Senez, who flourished in the reign of Louis the Fifteenth. A broker introduced her to a lumber-shopkeeper, who had the holy man's skull to dispose of. The purchase was effected, but the lady refused to pay the broker's commission, and he sues her for his little bill. No doubt the Court will fight shy of discussing the authenticity of the relic, but it may turn out that the lower and upper jaws don't fit.

A want of aggression in the Church was complained of by the Rev. T. Green at the annual meeting of the Congregational Churches in the Manchester district. We hope the complaint will stir the Church up, if only to defend itself. Fighting a Church that doesn't hit back is like punching a feather-bed.

Hugh Price Hughes has been addressing a big meeting at Bolton in behalf of "the great London Mission." "Oh help us," he exclaimed, "and every nation under heaven shall share our joy." He then resumed his seat "amidst a burst of enthusiastic applause." Somehow he forgot to say anything about his "Converted Atheist. We hope to make him wish he never had said anything about that wretched imposture.

The Rev. R. S. Blair told a recent meeting of the London Primitive Methodist Ministers that during the last six years there had been a great development of antipathy towards the Churches. He attributed it to the Sunday meetings of workmen for the discussion of social questions. But the Rev. Thomas Guttery said it was owing to the want of sympathy shown by the clergy to the workmen in their labor troubles. Anyhow the fact is admitted, and it is a growing fact. All the Churches are becoming more and more mere middle-class organisations.

The trashy paper that rejoices in the title of Anti-Infidel says of Mr. H. L. Hastings, the American Christian advocate "his teaching is unscriptural, and consequently productive of infidelity." Does the reader want to know whence comes this recrimination among the Lord's defenders. Both lay claim for their publication to the same title of Anti-Infidel Library. Hence these war-whoops.

Pious frauds are ubiquitous. When they cannot take hold at home they slip off to the other side of the world, and try to catch on there. We gather from Freedom, of Sydney, Australia, that certain Christian advocates in that city are circulating with much detail the statement that Mr. Bradlaugh, during his late illness, embraced the Christian religion and renounced his connection with Freethought. Possibly the pious bigots who circulated the tale trusted to Providence to settle Mr. Bradlaugh outright, so that the lie might go the round unrefuted.

Christ lived and died (perhaps!) more than eighteen hundred years ago. He left the Holy Ghost with his Apostles to enlighten them. They preached and made converts, and by-and-bye the New Testament came into existence as the infallible Word of God. Churches arose, sects abounded, quarrels prevailed, and in the course of time Christians butchered each other by the million to settle disputed points of faith. But still the matter is as unsettled as ever, and the Christian World is inviting ministers to say "What is a Christian?" Reading their answers is a beautiful lesson in Christian harmony.

Ten years ago, while passing through Stratford-on-Avon, Mr. Toole, the English comedian, saw a rustic sitting on a fence. "That's Shakespeare's house, isn't it?" he asked, pointing to the building. "Yes." "Ever been there?" "No." "How long has he been dead?" "Don't know." "Brought up here?" "Yes." "Did he write anything like the Family Herald, or anything of that sort?" "Oh, yes, he writ!" "What was it?" "Well," said the rustic, "I think he wrote for the Bible."

A pious yarn went the rounds of the American press telling how one John Chana, of Pottsville, became a hopeless paralytic, and died after cursing his Maker in a terrible manner. An inquirer wrote to the local paper to ascertain the truth of the story. He was told that certainly the man, a Hungarian, had died in a paralytic fit, but from natural causes, the chief one being the constant use of whiskey. There was no truth whatever in the story that he had cursed his Maker, or, as some others said, the Virgin Mary. No doubt other cases of wicked blasphemers suddenly punished, if similarly examined, would prove similarly groundless.

Converting the converted is a very old form of missionary enterprise. We do not wonder, therefore, that three English clergymen, Messrs. Pitman, Dickenson, and Knight, are going out to labor as missionaries in Canada. It is stated that they propose "to work in one of the large Canadian towns." "Imagine," says the Toronto Mail, "missionaries leaving all, bidding farewell to friends, and starting out fully equipped to work in Toronto, where there are thirty Anglican churches already." We fear the Toronto Mail doesn't allow for the glutted condition of the clerical market in England.

When Stanley returns to England he should go about preaching. He is constantly talking about Providence, which he appears to have discovered in Africa. Speaking at the Cairo banquet, he gave an account of poor Emin's tumbling into the street, and then added: "There upon the ground was the most pitiable sight it was possible for me to witness. Man proposes, but God disposes. Over and over again have I seen that a mysterious power guides human affairs, and here was a signal proof of it." Surely this is rough on Emin. It looks hard, at any rate, that poor Emin should be battered about, and half killed, to furnish Stanley with a fresh lesson in theology.

In an article on the London Clubs, the Echo complains of "the hard, narrow, bitter Secularism" which dominates so many of them, and which is "as superficial as it is unlovely." All these epithets only show that the Echo doesn't understand the Secularists of the Clubs. They are not on the look-out for a "lovely" creed. They are honest enough to want a true one.

The Echo thinks this "hard" Secularism might be "softened by the best poetry and music." We venture to say there are more readers—and lovers—of true poetry among Freethinkers than among any other section of the community. The Echo makes the usual orthodox mistake of supposing that a hard head means a hard heart. It generally means the reverse.

The Buffalo gals have been going it. Two thouand Polish ladies in that city mobbed a Catholic priest appointed to suceeed their favorite pastor. Two hundred policemen had to protect him, and the Buffalo gals fusilladed them with salt and pepper. Twenty guardians of law and order were put hors de combat. We are not informed what became of the priest.

Weep, weep for our darling priest!
They've packed him off to another living.
Curse, curse the horrible beast
The Holy Church in his stead is giving!

O the darling eyes and the kissable mouth
Of the beautiful priest we're grieving after!
This one's the ugliest, north or south.
Greet him, girls, with shouts of laughter.

Pinch him, punch him, scratch him, tear him;
Give him the ten commandments galore.
Ugly wretch! we can't abear him;
Buffalo gals will have his gore.

Bobbies round him! Give them pepper,
Right in the eyes, and salt as well.
And as for him, the dirty leper,
Give it him, gals, as hot as hell.

A coffin and grave for the ugly creature!
But oh for the darling that's gone away!
The grace of God was in every feature.
Honey come back, and come to stay.

Digitized by Google

MR. FOOTE'S ENGAGEMENTS.

Sunday, Feb. 9, Oddfellows' Hall, King Street, Blackburn, at 10.30, "Is the Bible Inspired?" at 2.30, "Defence of Atheism—in reply to the Rev. J. Ogmore Davies"; at 6.30, "An Hour with the Devil."

Feb. 16, Milton Hall, London; 23, Hall of Science, London.
March 2, Manchester; 9, Camberwell; 16, Cardiff; 23 and 30, Hall of Science, London.
April 6, Milton Hall; 13, Portsmouth; 20, Hall of Science; 27, Hall of Science.
May 4, Newcastle; 11, South Shields.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

LITERARY communications to be addressed to the Editor, 14 Clerkenwell Green, London, E.C. All business communications to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C.

THE Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the office, post free to any part of Europe, America, Canada and Egypt, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 6s. 6d.; Half Year, 3s. 3d.; Three Months, 1s. 7½d. Australia, China and Africa:—One Year, 8s. 8d.; Half Year, 4s. 4d.; Three Months, 2s. 2d. India:—One Year, 10s. 10d.; Half Year, 5s. 5d. Three Months, 2s. 8½d.

SCALE OF ADVERTISEMENTS.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 3s.; Half Column, 15s.; Column, £1 10s. Special terms for repetitions.

IT being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will in future receive the number when their subscription expires in a colored wrapper.

A. BRITON.—2 Chron. xxi., 20, and xxii., 1 and 2, say that Ahaziah, the youngest son of Jehoram, was forty-two when he began to reign, and he was made king instead of his father, who died at forty. But that was in the days of miracles.

T. CARVER.—Yes, Mr. Foote will be nominated for the Presidency of the N. S. S., and if elected he will accept the office. He has not asked anyone to nominate or second him, nor has he made the slightest canvas, or even mentioned the subject at all until now, when he is pointedly asked and feels it an honorable thing to answer. Branches have written to Mr. Foote on the subject weeks ago, but he preferred to say nothing publicly, so that the meeting on the 16th inst. might act with spontaneity.

F. TOWNSEND, 11 Leather Lane, E.C., supplies the Freethinker and exhibits a bill.

AMICUS.—Our invitation for capital is still open, but we do not intend to give any more prominence to it at present.

GLASGOW SECRETARY—Your Guide Notice was sent to Stonecutter Street, and reached us too late for insertion last week. Our editorial address is 14 Clerkenwell Green.

H. J. BARTER.—Thanks. See "Acid Drops."

No. 12.—Glad to hear from you. Peg away.

P. BRABAZON.—There is truth in what you say. But if we find room for reports, in the sweet by-and-bye, it will involve a new departure for the reporters. Glad to hear the West Ham children's party was a success

A. WHEELER sends us the annual balance-sheet of the Finsbury Branch. The income is small, but the Branch only does open-air work and pays its way. We congratulate the few working men who hold up the Freethought flag on Clerkenwell Green.

J. CASPAR.—Thanks.

H. COURTNEY.—Mr. Foote is nearly quite well again. See "Acid Drops."

J. C. B.—There is no Secular hall in Swansea. Sorry to hear that, in shifting about, you have such trouble in getting the Freethinker.

H. J. S.—It is uphill work, as you say. But those who know you respect you, and that is the great thing after all.

JOSEPH BROWN.—You are doing a splendid work in Newcastle. The Branch should be proud of such an able and energetic secretary.

H. PORTER.—Under consideration.

J. RAWLINSON says Freethinkers should be on their guard against the Mr. English referred to in one of our last week's paragraphs.

BATH FRIEND.—Shall be dealt with in our next.

PAPERS RECEIVED.—Newcastle Daily Leader—Chat—Newcastle Daily Chronicle—Echo—Bulletin des Sommaires—Freidenker—Der Arme Teufel—Ironclad Age—Independent Pulpit—Yorkshire Chronicle—Truthseeker—Freedom—Liberty—Our Journal—Church Reformer—War Cry—Der Lichtfreund—Echo—Gravesend and Dartford Reporter—Sunday Chronicle—Boston Investigator—Bournemouth Guardian—Menschenthum—Evening Standard—Kensington Churchman—Progressive thinker.

FRIENDS who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish our attention directed.

CORRESPONDENCE should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

SUGAR PLUMS.

THE influenza having abated, and the evening being fine, there was a great improvement in the attendance at the London Hall of Science on Sunday evening, when Mr. Foote lectured on "Why I am an Atheist." The audience was both large and enthusiastic. Mr. Standring enrolled a dozen new members of the National Secular Society.

MR. FOOTE lectures to-day (Feb. 9) at Blackburn. The afternoon lecture, a "Defence of Atheism," is in reply to a local minister whose discourses on the subject have been reported in the Blackburn press. As few Freethought lectures are delivered in this town (at present; it will be better by and bye), it is to be hoped that the Freethinkers in the district will not only attend themselves, but try to bring some orthodox friends with them.

THE London Secular Federation will organise courses of week-night free lectures—followed by discussion—in several districts of the metropolis. A beginning is to be made at the Hall of Science on Thursday evenings, February 20 and 27, and March 6 and 13. The lectures and subjects will be as follows:—(1) G. W. Foote, "Freethought and God." (2) J. M. Robertson, "Freethought and the Bible." (3) G. Standring, "The Church and the People." (4) G. W. Foote, "Freethought and Christ."

AS we have said, the admission to these lectures will be free, but there will be a box at the door for the donations of Freethinkers inclined to assist the experiment. We may add that the Christian Evidence Society has been invited to send representatives.

LONDON SECULAR FEDERATION.—R. O. Smith, hon. treasurer, acknowledges £1 from W. H. Reynolds.

CAPTAIN OTTO THOMPSON has been elected chairman of the Stockholm Branch of the Utilistiska Samfundet, and puts a great deal of energy into the organisation. We cannot sufficiently admire the bravery of this good captain, who has broke up his home at Eskilstuna in order to be in the position of danger at Stockholm. We notice that already the typographical appearance of Fritankaren is much improved. But money is needed to assist it, and thereby sustain the organisation and maintain the prisoner. We trust a good share will be forthcoming from English sympathisers.

CAPTAIN OTTO THOMSON writes us that the "Gotha Hofrath," the court before which two prosecutions against Mr. Lennstrand were pending, has declared him "Not Guilty." This, accompanied with a pointed judicial explanation directed against the Court of King's Bench in Stockholm for its former sentences against Lennstrand, has delighted all friends of freedom in the northern peninsular. It is another item showing the decline of the power of bigotry.

SO far so good, but unfortunately this is not all. The prosecutors have appealed to the Higher Court of King's Bench, and that court, it is only too likely, in its customary subserviency to Church and State, will add some months' imprisonment to our brave young friend, who, Captain Thompson assures us, is cheerful and stout hearted as ever and fully worthy of the sympathy he receives from all quarters.

MORE money is wanted for the Swedish Prisoners' Fund. Every Branch should make a collection at once. Mr. Forder holds over a further list of acknowledgments till next week.

OUR exposure of the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes's "Converted Atheist" is being well circulated. A Lancashire friend has paid for six dozen to be distributed among Wesleyan ministers. The Chatham Secular Society has bought a parcel for distribution. When the present supply—a good one—is exhausted we shall be happy to print more.

Digitized by Google

– THE Rev. W. Walsh has concluded his pleasant addresses on unbelief, and the Newcastle Branch is delighted. It has gained six new members by the discussion. If other ministers will follow Mr. Walsh's excellent example the city will soon be converted to Freethought.

LAST Sunday's council meeting of the North Eastern Secular Federation was the best attended since the first start. It was decided to engage Mr. Clarke for a fortnight's tour. Other useful business was transacted.

Good Friday is to be commemorated by a social gathering of Secularists in the Arcade Assembly Rooms, Newcastle. Those who mean to attend should write to Mr. Joseph Brown, 86 Durham Street, Bentinck, Newcastle.

MR. A. B. MOSS gave great satisfaction at Manchester on Sunday, and his evening lecture on "The Mission of Freethought" drew a capital audience.

MRS. ELIZABETH H. CHURCH, of San Francisco, died a staunch Freethinker, and left one hundred dollars each to Mr. S. P. Putnam, of Freethought, Mr. H. O. Pentecost, of the Twentieth Century, Mr. H. L. Green, of the Freethinkers' Magazine, and Chas. Watts, of Secular Thought. By her wish Mr. Putnam conducted the funeral service, and her nephew, an Irvingite clergyman, had the grace to express his "sincere appreciation" of the manner in which her wishes were carried out.

"ACCOMPANYING the regular issue of the London Freethinker comes a Christmas number. It contains sixteen pages, neatly covered, and profusely illustrated with comic pictures. The reading matter is varied all the way from sober reasoning to humorous joking. The Freethinker is one of the ablest papers in the Liberal ranks. It is edited by Mr. G. W. Foote, who has no superior as a controversial writer. He can find more weak places in the armor of sanctity, or rather Christian hypocrisy, than any one we are accustomed to read after. He never writes a dull sentence, and invariably hits the mark aimed at. Mr. Foote is happily aided by two splendid writers, Messrs. J. M. Wheeler and W. P. Ball; besides, Mr. Forder is an admirable business manager. There are no dull, heavy and pointless papers in the Liberal field that we know of, and the Freethinker is abreast with the ablest and liveliest of them all."—Independent Pulpit (Texas).

THE Independent Pulpit also congratulates Mr. Wheeler on the completion of his Biographical Dictionary of Freethinkers, and says he has "performed a noble service to Freethought." It hopes "some Liberal publisher and bookseller in America will arrange to put the work on sale." So do we.

MR. WHEELER'S work has not yet reached America in the bound form. Copies have been sent, however, and we may soon expect reviews in the Freethought papers.

MR. W. W. COLLINS will leave Sydney on a lecturing tour in New Zealand immediately after the laying of the foundation stone of the new Sydney Freethought Hall. There is a large Feethought population scattered in New Zealand, which we trust Mr. Collins will do something to unite in an effective organisation.

THE Newcastle Daily Chronicle has a very good letter from Mr. Chas. H. Kelf in answer to Canon Talbot on the question "Did the Jews at the time of Christ understand Greek?" Mr. Kelf quotes from Josephus, bk. i., against Apion, to show that even this eminent and learned man did not learn Greek until after he was taken captive in the war with the Romans. How preposterous is it then to suppose that Jewish fishermen understood and wrote in pot language.

"No.

"Brou SAM STANDRING says the North Middlesex open- like the Is will resume operations in March. He will be yes, he writ from a few volunteer lecturers.

"I think he w

naster versus the sky pilot again. The

A pious yarn Dartford Reporter gives in extenso an telling how one J uments used by Mr. R. A. Brown, head- er Grade School, Gravesend, in favor of Evolution, which are to be replied to by the Rev. W. Tucker, who argues in favor of "Special Creation." The schoolmaster has put a strong case for the sky pilot to answer.

THE London School Board, on the motion of Mrs. Besant amended by Mr. Stanley, has decided in favor of Free Education. We congratulate London on the vote, and hope it will powerfully assist the rational re-organisation of our public school system.

"ALASTOR," whose name often appears in Secular Thought (Toronto), turns out to be the financial pillar of the paper. He has been making up the weekly deficit for some time. But unfortunately he is unable to bear the strain, and he is obliged to ask the Freethought party in Canada to do more for their only journal, unless they want to see it drop. We earnestly hope the appeal will elicit a generous response. Secular Thought ought to be maintained.

WE have received from New York the Truthseeker's Annual, which has now become a permanent American institution. It gives as frontispiece a photographed bas-relief illustrating Bruno's martyrdom, and an account of the inauguration of Bruno's statue (the event of 1889) by T. B. Wakeman. The Annual gives a Freethinker's Almanac, but there are also many other attractive features. An account of Freethought in the United States informs us that the progress of the movement, though quiet, is satisfactory. One of the most attractive pieces is a story by Miss Helen H. Gardener entitled "The Boler House Mystery," and one of the most telling is The Inventions of Science and The Inventions of Christianity in which illustrations of the principal scientific instruments are given side by side with the instruments of torture invented and used by the Church. An article on "Why I left the Church" by H. O. Pentecost is so interesting that we shall reprint it for the benefit of our own readers. The Annual is capitally got up and reflects great credit on the publishers.

NEXT Sunday (Feb. 16) the long-expected, eventful meeting will be held at the London Hall of Science. Mr. Bradlaugh will formally resign the presidency of the National Secular Society, and state his reasons for doing so. Should his resignation be accepted—and it is hard to see how it can be rejected—his successor will be appointed. Only members of the N. S. S. can be present, and we repeat (for the last time) that present non-members who wish to attend, and see and hear Mr. Bradlaugh, must enrol themselves without delay. If they leave it till the last minute they will find themselves too late.

MR. BRADLAUGH has kindly arranged for his Indian presents to be on exhibition in the minor hall, upstairs, before and after the meeting. By the way, the meeting commences punctually at eleven.

THE N. S. S. Executive has instructed Mr. Forder to arrange for a luncheon at the Manchester Hotel, in Aldersgate Street. London is a dreadful place for obtaining refreshments on Sunday, and friends from the country, as well as some from the suburbs, will be glad to have a certain meal in front of them. Mr. Forder should be informed during the week by those who desire tickets.

THE TRUE RELIGION IN BOARD SCHOOLS.

A correspondent of the Midland Counties Express gives the following dialogue as a sample of what goes on in a State-aided school not far from Wolverhampton:

Q. "Children, you know which is the True Church, don't you?"—A. "Yes, sir."

Q. "You know that there is only one True Church?"—A. "Yes, sir."

"Yes," says he, "the Lord Jesus Christ made our Church, you know. He had nothing to do with the making of these little petty chapels that are about, did he?"—A. "No, sir."

"Now, you children that belong to the True Church, put up your hands."

Up goes a forest of hands.

"Now, you that go to the chapels, put yours up."

Only a few are held up.

Digitized by Google

AN INTERRUPTED SABBATH CALM.

(Founded on fact. A childish recollection.)

'Twas in the parlor's sacred shade
We sat, in Sunday clothes arrayed—
A little band of scholars small,
Who learned their creed and knowledge all,
And morals too, by book and rule,
At good, dear Madame Blobbs' high school.
The Sabbath twilight shadows fell,
As to the organ's solemn swell
We sang in clear and ringing tones
From some hymn-book of "Mary Jones."*
At least, they sang, my school-mates dear,
But I, less mindful or sincere,
Was sitting in a corner dark
Where none my sinful deed might mark;
And with my handkerchief at play,
A drama sweet did there essay,
Enacting, as head bobbed to head,
What Francis unto Sarah said.
But short my sport, for Madame dear
Did chance to draw my corner near
As my dramatis personæ
Had dropped from high civility;
And, like the Tuscan spears at Rome,
Would drive the morning kiss well home.

"You bad, you naughty, wicked child,"
Cries Madame Blobbs in accents mild,
"To mar this holy Sabbath calm
With such vain sport," and grasps my arm.
My childish soul rebels within
Against this awful charge of sin.
And loud protests with stamps and sobs.
"Obstreperous," says Madame Blobbs.

The cane, at least three inches broad,
Was kept upon a smooth sideboard
Behind a set of polished trays
That held good cheer on festive days.
She snatched the cane, and jogged the trays—
They slide, and naught their progress stays;
Then clatter down upon the floor,
Clang, clang, ter bang; a roar-r-r-r-r.

O, what a crash and jar and din!
The scholars shriek and teachers grin,
And governess staid with "Sabbath joys,"
Does bravely strive to drown the noise;
But all in vain. Some laughed, some ran,
While danced my feet a wild can-can;
And loud and fast upon my back
The cane came down thwack, thwack.

'Tis done, that great chastisement's done;
The noise subsides, so, too, the fun;
The organ once again doth peal,
And voices sweet the twilight thrill.
But I'm a bed, choke-full of woe
And sin. Ah me! 'twas long ago,
And I am still a wayward child—
An Atheist in the "desert" wild;
But, strange to say, no rude alarm
Now mars my Sabbath evening's calm.

ALFRED LOVETT.

COL. INGERSOLL has been delivering a discourse in New York on "Crimes against Criminals." He thinks the American treatment of them not humane enough. Habitual criminals are beings with a mental twist. They are so to speak morally deformed. Punishment in the ordinary sense he deems useless. The worst criminals he would keep apart from the community just as we treat lunatics. Less depraved criminals should have a chance of cure by kindness. Col. Ingersoll would have prisoners paid for their work, that is what they earn beyond their cost placed to their credit, and paid them when discharged. No doubt this would give them a better chance of starting an honest life, and as to the objection, where would the money come from, we think it would be such a stimulus to perfunctory prison labors, that it might make those institutions self-supporting.

* "Mary Jones and Her Bible," Services of Sacred Songs," Sunday School Union.

POETRY IN LAW.

LAST week Colonel Ingersoll was defending a man in a breach of promise case. Here are some of the little bits of poetry that appear in his address to the jury:

When a man gets to a point where he'll lie, there isn't much choice of subjects.

You must take it for granted that men of ordinary sense do not act like extraordinary fools.

I'll go as far as anyone to whip naked through the world the man who deceives a good, pure, and confiding woman.

A marriage without love is immoral. I don't care how many forms you go through, I don't care if all the churches in the world, united beneath the dome of heaven, filling all the air with incense, pronounce them wedded, if that sweet perfume called love does not arise there is no marriage.

The woman who marries a man because he is rich, for a title, or for office, place, or power, is not a virtuous woman, and the man who marries a woman for any such reason is not a virtuous man, but a contemptible wretch.

She knew that he could obtain a divorce only by perjury and fraud, yet she was willing to marry him, and be divorced only by papers and perjuries, and not by facts.

Epithets are so cheap that you can make money on lies at fifty cents a hundred.

People who are fond of music are sometimes dangerous.

There is no evidence that her heart was ever quickened one-hundredth part as much as it would have been by the sudden appearance of a mouse.

If I got such love letters as hers, I'd keep 'em until summer and then carry 'em in my pockets hot days.

Oh, what an orator is love! What honeyed words run over the rose of his lips.

When another commits a fault it is a great dead tree half decayed, bare and hideous, but when we do it ourselves, oh, my God! think of the reasons, climbing around it like a thousand clinging vines, covering with soft loveliness every branch and twig, turning it into a beautiful object.

His love letters are sincere and good; who would have thought there was so much blood in the old man?

She was coldly and placidly correct, as correct as a crystal pane upon a frosted window.

I think any woman in the world is repaid for an ordinary breach of promise by being taken to hear Wagner's music.

"Tristan," that Mississippi of melody, flowing deep and strong, with hundreds of little tributaries bursting over the rocks into flowers of foam.

Every heart is like a theatre in one respect; there are certain effects produced, but you don't want everyone to see all the ropes and pulleys.

A VOICE FROM CARLILE'S COUNTY.

I WISH to make a few hasty remarks on the Freethinker, and to express approval of the general ability with which it is conducted. Whoever writes the short paragraphs on passing events, comments on assertions in orthodox periodicals, etc., does his work with admirable skill, with wit, sarcasm, humor, "sapping a solemn creed with solemn sneer," and accomplishing in eight or a dozen lines as much destructiveness as could be accomplished by a column of close logical reasoning. I have mentioned the "solemn sneer" of Gibbon, of which Carlyle says, "As soon as I had read the twelve volumes in as many days, I put down the books, and never afterwards believed in miracles." The finer the wit, the keener the edge of the instrument, and the absence of even a tinge of vulgarity, the more effective the remarks become. I could give numerous instances, if I had time to refer to the pile of Freethinkers, as I put a pencil-mark against the best. The leaders are good and instructive, both Mr. Foote's and Mr. Wheeler's. "Letters to the Clergy" are able and argumentative, and have a value as a book of reference, as I see they are to be published in book form. Ingersoll's oration on the death of Horace Seaver, ought to be published as a pamphlet—his turning to the corpse and addressing it is startling and has fine dramatic effect.—DELTA (Plymouth).

["Delta" is informed that the Freethinker paragraphs are all written by Messrs. Foote and Wheeler. Ingersoll's oration on the death of Horace Seaver may be included in a little collection of his funeral addresses.—EDITOR.]

Digitized by Google

REVIEWS.

The Psychology of Attention. By T. Ribot (Authorised Translation). "Open Court" Publishing Co., Chicago. Price 75 cents.—Dr. Ribot occupies the chair of comparative and experimental psychology at the Collège de France. He enjoys a European reputation, and apparantly an American reputation also, for the present volume is one of a series with which the "Open Court" Publishing Co. is enriching the philosophical literature of the United States. The translation seems admirably done: indeed, except for the title page, the reader would imagine himself perusing an English work. As for the study itself, we have no hesitation in pronouncing it a very important contribution to positive psychology. Space does not permit of a lengthy critique, and a thinker of Dr. Ribot's eminence is not to be dealt with superficially or piecemeal. We content ourselves, therefore, with heartily recommending the volume to all our readers who are interested in the deeper problems of life and mind, and who desire to see them treated in a purely scientific spirit.

Religious Systems of the World. London: Sonnenschein and Co.—This is a collection of the Sunday afternoon lectures delivered at South Place Institute in 1888—89. We venture to hope it will have a wide circulation. A few of the lectures are unimportant, but the rest are well wortny of attention, and it would be difficult, if not impossible, to find elsewhere such a bird's-eye view of religions, sects and philosophic systems. The writers include Elward Clodd, Canon Rawlinson, Dr. James Legge, Professor Beal, Sir Alfred Lyall, Arthur Lillie, Oscar Browning, Rev. Elward White, Rev. John Clifford, Sir F. Pollock, Frederic Harrison, Dr. Stanton Coit, etc. Two writers specially known to the Freethought party are J. M. Robertson, who contributes an able and learned paper on Mithraism, and G. W. Foote, who writes on the Gospel of Secularism.

Will Shakespeare, Tom Paine, Bob Ingersoll, and Charlie Bradlaugh. London: R. Forder, (6d.)—This pamphlet is from the pen of a veteran Freethought scholar, and is very good reading. The author's object is to show that "Will," "Tom," and other diminutives were no marks of disrespect, but a sign that the man was "a jolly good fellow." We believe this is about the truth. But it won't do to turn it upside down, for some names can't be diminished at all, nor some without vulgarity; and of course we don't choose our own names. It appears pretty certain that "Tom" was applied to Paine by his contemporaries without a tinge of insult. That is entirely posthumous—a bit of retrospective Christian charity.

Horrors of the French Revolution. By Charles Watts. "Secular Thought" Office: Toronto (10 cents.)—An excellent reply to the orthodox libellers of the Atheists of the Revolution. Mr. Watts reduces the "horrors" to their proper proportions, shows how small they were in comparison with the horrors of kingcraft and priestcraft, and finds their causes in the brutal oppression of the French people in previous centuries.

Christianity, Defective and Unnecessary. By Kate Eunice Watts. "Secular Thought" Office: Toronto (10 cents.)—A spirited, well-written pamphlet, that ought to be circulated among women.

Our want of halls is often cast in our teeth by those who uphold the laws which prevent the endowment of Freethought. They should turn to Gregory's Christian Church, vol i., p. 118, where he says of the Christians, "They met in private houses, and only in the third century did they become respectable and were permitted to erect places of worship."

Obituary.—I have the painful duty of recording the death on January 30, aged 33, of Mr. Samuel Pratt. The interment took place on Saturday, the 1st inst., at West Hartlepool Cemetery. By his death the members of this Branch have lost a consistent advocate. He was deeply respected by his fellow workmen, who came to his grave in large numbers. At his request I read A. Holyoake's service at his grave. Every word was listened to by all present with due decorum, and no truer description of his aims and aspirations through life can be given than the perusal of that service conveys. —James McNamee.

BLASPHEMY AND BLASPHEMY.

Well, and so the Bolton Guardians of the Poor have decided to accept Mr. Elliston's invitation to his pantomime on behalf of the workhouse children, after all—but not until one, a Mr. Ramsden, who said he had never been to a theatre in his life, had spoken of "the baneful influence of such entertainments on the young," and another, a Mr. Dutton, had said that "he could not ask God's blessing on a child whom he took to the theatre." Why, if he can't, he can't—and there's an end of that. It is still conceivable that the Creator of the Bolton Workhouse children may know whether they should be blessed or cursed without waiting for instructions from Mr. Dutton. Nay, when you come to think of it, what monstrous, amazing blasphemy is this, that a bombastic, inflated, self-sufficient, prosperous prig should dare to pretend that the relations of the Deity towards the poor castaways of his creation require to be arranged and directed by Mr. Dutton's officious intercession!

And what is to be said of the self-righteous ignoramus who, having never been in a theatre himself, presumes to pronounce damnatory judgment on a pleasure which unquestionably brightens the work-a-day life of thousands, and of which he, by his own confession, can know nothing? Just think of the delight which the bright and tinselled glories and wondrous unaccustomed drolleries of a pantomime must produce in the preternaturally staid and gloomy mind of a child innured to the bleak hospitality of the workhouse! Then think of the Jack-in-office who, having never seen a theatrical performance in his life, assumes the responsibily of meeting with a churlish and slanderous denial the kindness of the man who would gratuitously provide this rare delight for a whole legion of hapless waifs! And then they dare to prate of how they shall dispose of "God's blessing"! Faugh! Foote was sent to prison for blasphemy. Are there no laws to punish the audacious and revolting impiety of these blasphemers of Bolton?—"Dangle" in Sunday Chronicle.

WAS COMTE AN ATHEIST?

Mr. Alfred W. Benn writing in the Spectator in reply to Mr. F. Harrison, says, "Comte was beyond all doubt an atheist." Mr. Benn gives several citations in which Comte speaks of the substitution of the love of humanity for the love of God, and other passages incompatible with a belief in theism.

But Comte said "the atheist is the most irrational of theologians." To us it is evident he meant the person who spends his time in seeking to prove a negative. There is no doubt that Comte was anti-Christian, and as Mr. Benn points out, he says that the founder of Christianity exhibited "a mixture of hypocrisy and fascination always incompatible with a true superiority of heart and mind."

The parishioners of St. George's, Southwark, have been paying £180 a year to the rector in accordance with an Act passed in 1807. They have, however, through their vestry, made a protest by taking a poll upon the subject as to whether the rate should be continued or not; 905 persons voted against it, and only 78 in favor. As, however, the discontinuance will involve the parish in heavy penalties, the next step must be a proposal in Parliament to repeal the Act under which the impost is levied, and this, we trust, will be taken up in earnest.

Robert Burns' literature is very extensive and mixed. Some of it shows how ninnies can be inflated. Some is a combination of cant and unction, and when a Scotchman goes in for that sort of thing he licks creation. The Rev. Andrew Douglas, we notice, has been holding forth at Arbroath on "The Influence of Robert Burns on Religious Thought in Scotland." The reverend gentleman's poetical faculty may be estimated from his extravagant praise of the "Cottar's Saturday Night," which is one of the least poetical of Burns's pieces, and not a distinctively Burns piece at all. Then the Douglas claims Burns as "the first" who had the courage to protest against the dreadful doctrine of everlasting future torment. Now this is simple nonsense. Burns did indeed, like a true great poet, fling the Greek-fire of his sarcasm at the Church Creed of his time. He did revolt against the teaching of a burning hell. But he was not "the first" to do so. The protest was made by Freethinkers before him.

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY MEETINGS.

LONDON.

Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, E.C., 7, Mrs. Annie Besant "Deluges: Biblical and Other."

Camberwell—61 New Church Road, S.E., 7.30, Mrs. Thornton Smith, "The Uselessness of Prayer."

Claremont Hall, 7, J. M. Robertson, "How the Bible was Made."

Ball's Pond Secular Hall, 88 Newington Green Road, N, 7, Mr. F. Millar, "The Gospel of Evolution."

Bethnal Green—2 Railway Place, Cambridge Road (temporary premises), 3.15, A members' special meeting; important business.

East London—Swaby's Coffee House, 103 Mile End Road, E, 7.45, Mr. W. Heaford, "The Mission, Character, and Teachings of Christ."

Edmonton Assembly Rooms, Silver Street, 7, Mr. C. J. Hunt, "God: Where and What is it?"

Milton Hall, Kentish Town Road, N.W., 7.30, Mr. R. Forder, "A Night with Old Nick."

Old Southgate—Cromwell Hall, 7, Adam Taylor, "Things as they Are and should Be."

Wood Green—Jolly Butchers' Hill, 11, Mr. S. Standring, "Secularism: the Socialists' John the Baptist."

Westminster.—Liberal and Radical Club, Chapter Street, 7, Mr. F. Haslam, "David the Royal Psalmist."

Woolwich—"Sussex Arms," Assembly Room, 60 Plumstead Road, 7.30, Mr. L. Keen, "Holy Matrimony."

COUNTRY.

Birmingham—Baskerville Hall, Crescent, 7, Mr. R. S. Bransby, "Is it Rational to Believe in Theosophy?"

Cardiff—Queen Street, large hall (entrance from Working Street). Mr. J. Clarke, 11, "The Absurdity of Prayer;" 3, "The Progress of Secularism;" 6.30, "Is the Bible Inspired?" Tickets at door.

Derby—British Oak, Carrington Street, 6.30, Mr. H. McGuinness, "Half an Hour with Colonel Ingersoll;" after which an important business meeting to organise an open-air propaganda for the coming spring.

Glasgow—Ramshorn Hall, 127 Ingram Street, 5.30, Special meeting of the members of the N. S. S.; 6.30, Open discussion, "The single Tax."

Heckmondwike—Mr. John Rothera's, Bottoms, 2.30, a Meeting and Reading.

Huddersfield — Littlewood's Buildings, Upperhead Row, Mr. J. Spencer, the popular Lancashire Reciter; 3 and 6.30, "Humorous and Dramatic Recitals from the Best Authors."

Hull—Cobden Hall, Waltham Street, First Anniversary of Branch, Musical Entertainment. Quarter's subscription due; members please note.

Liverpool—Camden Hall, Camden Street, 7, Mr. Bergmann, "Noah's Deluge."

Manchester—Rusholm Road, Oxford Road, All Saints. Social Evening and Entertainment at 6.30.

Newcastle-on-Tyne—11, Meeting on the Sand Hill of Sunday Music League to collect signatures to petition; 2.30, Lecture Hall, Nelson Street, the Rev. Walter Walsh, "On the Origin of the Idea of God and Creation;" 7.30, Society's Rooms, fortnightly financial meeting.

Nottingham — Secular Hall, Beck Street, 7, Mr Sydney Oliver, B.A., 11, "The Moral Basis of Socialism;" 7, "Practical Municipal Socialism."

Sheffield—Hall of Science, Rockingham Street, Mr. E. Stanley Jones, 3, "Evolution and the Origin of Life;" 7, "Mind and Body."

LECTURERS' ENGAGEMENTS.

Mr. A. B. Moss, 44 Credon Road, London, S.E.—March 2, Woolwich; 30, Woolwich. April 13, Camberwell. May 25, Regent's Park.

Toleman-Garner, 8 Heyworth Street, Stratford, London, E.—Feb. 23, Woolwich. March 9, Woolwich; 16 (morning), West Ham; 23, Woolwich: 30, Westminster. May 11, Clerkenwell Green; 18, Regent's Park.

Mr. James Hooper, 11 Upper Eldon Street, Sneinton, Nottingham.—Feb. 16, Birmingham.

E. Stanley Jones, 53 Park Street, Toxteth, Liverpool—Feb. 9, Sheffield; 23, Huddersfield.

PROGRESSIVE PUBLISHING CO.'S LIST.

All orders to be sent, with remittance, to R. Forder, 23 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C. Rate of postage—Orders under 3d., one halfpenny; orders under 6d. one penny. Orders over 6d. post free.

G. W. FOOTE.

	s.	d.
PRISONER FOR BLASPHEMY. Cloth ... ... A Full History of his Three Trials and Twelve Months' Imprisonment. Copies in paper covers, soiled, 6d.	2	6
IS SOCIALISM SOUND? ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant.	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
CHRISTIANITY AND SECULARISM ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. In paper covers.	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth	1	6
INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS ... ... Second edition, enlarged.	0	8
Superior edition, in cloth	1	3
DARWIN ON GOD ... ... Superior edition, in cloth ... ... Contents:—Darwin's Grandfather—Darwin's Father—Darwin's Early Piety—Almost a Clergyman—On Board the "Beagle"—Settling at Down—Death and Burial—Purpose of Pamphlet—Some Objections—Darwin Abandons Christianity—Deism—Creation—Origin of Life—Origin of Man—Animism—A Personal God—Design—Divine Beneficence—Religion and Morality—Agnosticism and Atheism.	0 1	6 0
DEFENCE OF FREE SPEECH ... ... Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes.	0	4
LETTERS TO JESUS CHRIST	0	4
PHILOSOPHY OF SECULARISM	0	3
THE BIBLE GOD	0	2
THE FOLLY OF PRAYER	0	2
CHRISTIANITY AND PROGRESS ... ... A Reply to Mr. Gladstone.	0	2
WHAT WAS CHRIST? ... ... A Reply to J. S. Mill.	0	1
THE DYING ATHEIST. A Story	0	1
WAS JESUS INSANE? ... ... A searching inquiry into the mental condition of the Prophet of Nazareth.	0	2
THE SHADOW OF THE SWORD ... ... A moral and statistical Essay on War.	0	2
ROYAL PAUPERS ... ... Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty.	0	2
BIBLE HEROES—First Series, in elegant wrapper ... (1) Mr. Adam, (2) Captain Noah, (3) Father Abraham, (4) Juggling Jacob, (5) Master Joseph, (6) Joseph's Brethren, (7) Holy Moses I., (8) Holy Moses II., (9) Parson Aaron, (10) General Joshua, (11) Jephthah and Co., (12) Professor Samson. One Penny each singly.	1	0
BIBLE HEROES—Second Series. (13) Prophet Samuel, (14) King Saul, (15) Saint David I., (16) Saint David II., (17) Sultan Solomon, (18) Poor Job, (19) Hairy Elijah (20) Bald Elisha, (21) General Jehu, (22) Doctor Daniel, (23) The Prophets (Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Hosea).
MRS. BESANT'S THEOSOPHY ... ... A Candid Criticism.	0	2
THEOSOPHY AND SECULARISM ... ... A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant.	0	2
THE NEW CAGLIOSTRO ... ... An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky.	0	2

COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

MISTAKES OF MOSES	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth ... ... Only Complete Edition published in England	1	6
DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT ... ... Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy.	0	6
REPLY TO GLADSTONE ... ... With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler.	0	4
ROME OR REASON? Reply to Cardinal Manning	0	2
FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Rev. Dr. Field ...	0	2
GOD AND MAN. Second Reply to Dr. Field	0	2
THE DYING CREED	0	4
THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH	0	2
THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION ... ... A Discussion with Hon. F. D. Courdert and Gov. S. L. Woodford.	0	2
ART AND MORALITY	0	2
DO I BLASPHEME?	0	2
THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE	0	2
THE GREAT MISTAKE	0	1
LIVE TOPICS	0	1
MYTH AND MIRACLE	0	1
REAL BLASPHEMY	0	1
SOCIAL SALVATION	0	2

G. W. FOOTE and J. M. WHEELER.

CRIMES OF CHRISTIANITY. Vol. I. Cloth ... Hundred of exact References to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.	2	6
THE JEWISH LIFE OF CHRIST ... ... With voluminous footnotes. An extraordinary work.	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0

G. W. FOOTE and W. P. BALL.

BIBLE HANDBOOK FOR FREETHINKERS AND INQUIRING CHRISTIANS	1	4
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
Sold also in separate parts as follows—
1. Bible Contradictions ... ... The Contradictions are printed in parallel columns.	0	4
2. Bible Absurdities ... ... All the chief Absurdities from Genesis to Revelation, conveniently and strikingly arranged, with appropriate headlines, giving the point of each absurdity in a sentence.	0	4
3. Bible Atrocities ... ... Containing all the godly wickedness from Genesis to Revelation. Each infamy has a separate headline for easy reference	0	4
4. Bible Immoralities, Indecencies, Obscenities, Broken Promises, and Unfulfilled Prophecies ...	0	4

J. M. WHEELER.

LETTERS FROM HEAVEN	0	1
LETTERS FROM HELL	0	1

DR. E. B. AVELING.

DARWIN MADE EASY. 44pp., cloth ... ... Best Popular Exposition of Darwinism extant.	1	0

Digitized by Google

GOD AND THE STATE

A New Pamphlet by

2d. COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL. 2d.

2d. # THE IMPOSSIBLE CREED 2d.

An Open Letter to the

BISHOP OF PETERBOROUGH.

BY

G. W. FOOTE.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE

AN AGNOSTIC'S VIEW.

By COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

TWOPENCE. Reprinted Verbatim from the "North American Review." TWOPENCE.

Every Freethinker, Radical or Socialist should read it and circulate it amongst his friends.

Biographical Dictionary of Freethinkers

OF ALL AGES AND NATIONS.

BY J. M. WHEELER.

Handsomely Bound in Cloth. Price Seven Shillings and Sixpence.

1d. A LIE IN FIVE CHAPTERS? 1d.

THE

REV. HUGH PRICE HUGHES'S

CONVERTED ATHEIST

By G. W. FOOTE.

Should be circulated by Freethinkers who desire to see this pious fraud exposed as widely as possible.

W. J. Rendell's

"WIFE'S FRIEND."

Recommended in "Law of Population," and "Wife's Hand Book." Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell Street Clerkenwell, and supplied per post, 2s. dozen. For particulars of this Malthusian discovery send stamped envelope. Higginson's Syringe, with vertical and reverse current, 3s. 6d. and 4s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. All other Malthusian Appliances. All prices post free.

HARTNOLL,

ENGLISH AND FOREIGN CHEMIST,

1A PICCADILLY

(Under the London Pavilion Music Hall),

LONDON, W.

Hartnoll's Specialities, Appliances and Medicated Preparations are world-renowned.

Spiral, Douche and Latest Improved Syringes.

ESTABLISHED OVER 50 YEARS.

IRETON'S

INDELIBLE JET BLACK MARKING INK

(NO HEATING REQUIRED)

For Rubber Stamps, Stencil, Type or Pen.

PRICE 6d. 1/- and 2/6 per Bottle.

Sample bottle 4d. post free.

IRETON & Co., 92, Gracechurch St., LONDON, E.C.

The largest makers of Rubber Stamps.

Special terms to the Trade.

Dyed with Ireton's Ink, no hope of ever changing my Color.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. VOL. I.

By Dr. T. R. ALLINSON,

4 SPANISH PLACE, MANCHESTER SQUARE, LONDON, W.

Of the Author, for Postal Order for 1s 2d.

It contains Articles on: Management of Infancy; Health; Longevity; The Teeth; Brown Bread; Bread Making; Food; Vegetarianism; Tobacco; The Drink Question; Fruit; Fresh Air; Exercise; Bathing; Light; Holidays; &c. Also the cause and cure of Disease; Constipation; Biliousness; Eczema; Blackheads and Pimples; Nervousness; Coughs and Colds; Chest Complaints; Deafness; Thread Worms; Long Worms; Tape Worms; The Itch, &c.

MEDICAL ESSAYS, VOL. II.

Of the Author, for Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Containing Articles on: The Healing Power of Nature; Clothing; Electricity in Disease; Apparent Health; Vegetarian Experiments; The Pig as Human Food; Popular Fallacies about Flesh; The Beef Tea Delusion; Salt; Saliva Starvation; Tea Drinking; The Hair and its Management; Sleep and Sleeplessness; Want of Energy, &c.; Health Hints for Workers, for Shop Assistants, and for Servants; Advice for the Thin; for the Stout; and on the Proper Treatment of Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, &c.

No House is Complete without these Works.

When ordering the Essays, be sure and state which Volume you require.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE;

OR, THE ONLY RATIONAL WAY OF TREATING DISEASE.

Everybody likes it who reads it.

Of the Author, for Postal order for 1s. 1d.

RHEUMATISM ITS CAUSE & CURE

Post free for Seven Stamps.

CONSUMPTION; ITS CAUSE, SYMPTOMS, AND CURE

Post Free for Seven Stamps.

THREE PAMPHLETS TO YOUNG MEN

Post Free for Thirteen Stamps.

TO MARRIED PEOPLE

Or Those Contemplating Marriage.

Send 1d. Stamp to

DAVIES, CHEMIST, 10A PARK LANE, LEEDS,

And you'll receive an Illustrated List of most useful Malthusian Appliances by return of post.

THE FAMILY LIMIT,

OR,

THE QUININE TABLOID,

1s. 6d. per doz. post free.

For further Particulars send stamped directed envelope to

A. MOSS, 36 Upper Park Street,

ISLINGTON, LONDON, N.

GRATIS.

AN ILLUSTRATED 16-PAGE PAMPHLET, containing extracts from the utterances of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Manchester; the Revs T. R. Malthus, A. E. Whatham, M. J. Savage, Leonard Dawson, — Lawton, H. R. Haweis; the following Doctors —Allbutt, Allinson, Armstrong, Drysdale, Pye Chavasse, E. B. Foote, Nicholls, Wilder, Raciborski, Napheys and Reamy. Also Plato, Aristotle, Sismondi, Huxley, Mill, and numerous others. Should be read by every married and marriageable person. Sent on receipt of stamped addressed envelope by J. R. HOLMES, Hanney, Wantage, Berks.

TESTIMONIALS (Extracts from).

"The one you sent me some months since is

Quite Worn Out

with being lent to so many friends."

"Some of us have paid five shillings for less than one-tenth of the information."

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each, upper or lower set, £1. Best quality, 4s. each, upper or lower, £2, completed in four hours when required, repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18c. gold 15s.; stopping, 2s. 6d. extraction, 1s. painless by gas, 5s.

Printed and Published by G. W. Foote, at 28 Bouverie Street Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

Vol. X.—No. 7.] SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1890. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

LETTERS TO THE CLERGY.—IX.

ON "CHRIST AND HUMANITY."

To the Rt. Rev. Edward White Benson, Archbishop of Canterbury.

[CONTINUED.]

I DO not think, my lord, that you will find Atheism so easy to dispose of; nor do I believe that the beautiful spectacle of Church Union will assist the consummation. You beseech the Church of England to "silence bickerings and postpone controversies," which you are "ashamed to name," to "devote her energies" to social problems, and to "strike out agencies for their solving." Meanwhile you are presiding at the trial of the Bishop of Lincoln for ritualistic practices, and adjudicating on the momentous questions of whether he looked this way or that, stood on this leg or the other, or burnt candles when he could see without them. The prosecution and the defence of Dr. King will probably cost fifty thousand pounds: a sum of money that might have established a large co-operative enterprise among industrious artisans, and helped to solve the great "Social Problem."

I will follow you, however, in your mapping of the "social work of the Church," and see whether Christianity has the promise of human elevation. You refer to Slavery, and its abolition, for an illustration of how Christianity "writes itself down in the Morals of the community."

> "To the slave, in all their epistles, the Apostles speak most tenderly. Of him Christianity was most careful. Not in preaching against the institution a crusade which would have endlessly multiplied their miseries, but by instilling such views as would first ameliorate the system, and make it at last impossible."

This is the usual clerical method of claiming for Christianity every moral reform since the days of Christ, on the same principle that made Tenterden steeple the cause of the Goodwin Sands. You admit that Christianity did not preach against Slavery; indeed it is not condemned by a single text in the New Testament. Jesus does not seem to have given it a thought, and Paul and Peter took it for granted as a permanent social institution. After the accession of Christianity to power, under Constantine, the position of the slave was actually rendered more odious and degrading. Century after century the Church passed ecclesiastical laws for slaves, and lived upon their forced labor like their secular exploiters. These facts are undeniable, and all the rest is mere private opinion. According to your view, it took Christianity ever so many centuries to "ameliorate the system," and nearly two thousand years to "make it at last impossible." This is a frightful time to be required by a divine faith to abolish the most flagrant of injustices. Surely the ordinary progress of civilisation and humanity might have abolished it unaided in such a tremendous period of time.

You make another remark on Slavery in a subsequent chapter, which evinces the same priestly prepossession.

> "From the beginning of the world slavery was an institute of Humanity, until in our fathers' days, in our own vale of Keston, a servant of Christ resolved that the world must know it no more. And now a great nation would sooner suffer a dire war than tolerate slavery in its borders."

As an Evolutionist, I regard this as a childish view of the abolition of slavery. No single man, whether a "servant of Christ" or of any other master, could have overthrown such an institution. But if you insist on discussing individuals, I must point out that slavery was branded before the days of your "servant of Christ" by the sceptical Montesquieu with exquisite irony, and by the arch-heretic Voltaire with mingled wit and passionate indignation. Thomas Paine cried out in 1789, "I despair of seeing an abolition of the infernal traffic in negroes"; but soon after—in the language of Professor Newman—"the first public act against slavery came from republican France, in the madness of Atheistic enthusiasm." Christian England did not abolish slavery in her West Indian colonies for another generation.

Let me ask you, my lord, if Christianity is to be as long in abolishing poverty as it was in abolishing slavery. What a lively prospect it opens to the "suffering population"!

Intellectually speaking, you are alive to their misery, and as a man I dare say you would like to diminish it. "The Apostle," you say, "spoke of a suffering population. We know of one which can only just exist, hanging on a sharp edge of illness, hunger, uncleanness physical and moral, incapacity mental and bodily, in full sight of abundance, luxury, and waste."

Admirably expressed! but what a commentary on Christianity and its methods! If after all these centuries of preaching and soul-saving, a multitude of our people "only just exist" in such dreadful, degrading circumstances, is it not high time that we tried another system than the one which has so wasted its opportunities? For Christianity is not a new, untried thing; it is hoary with age, and colossal it its pretensions. During half the period of definite human history it has held sovereign sway over the Caucasian race, and for many centuries its supremacy was despotic. Yet now, after its use of unlimited power and wealth, the shameful confession has to be made by an Archbishop of the Church of England, that poverty, drink, prostitution, gambling, and other vices are specially rampant in Christian countries.

It is hard to "only just exist," always "hanging on a sharp edge of illness and hunger," to say nothing of intellectual and moral frustration, in "full sight of abundance, luxury and waste." As a man your Grace must feel it, but as an Archbishop it does not seem to disturb your equanimity. Your eloquent words are not corroborated by a still more eloquent example. During the London season your Grace may be seen in Rotten Row, riding a splendid horse, and followed by a mounted groom. Your clerical appearance might attract the attention of a poor wretch, who had left his squalid home, and wandered into the Park, to see for a moment the pride and pomp of the world in which he was an outcast, and to brood over his inexplicable misery "in full sight of abundance, luxury and waste." He might ask a bystander "Who is that parson on horseback?" and be informed, "That is the great Dr. Benson, Archbishop of Canterbury." Your grace would be an object-lesson in practical Christianity. And as the poor wretch on foot watched you and your groom riding among the wealth and fashion of London, and looked down at his own rags and tattered boots; as he thought of your palace and of his own garret; as he contrasted your magnificent salary of fifteen thousand pounds a year with his own miserable pittance; as he dreamed of what your wife and children might be in their luxurious home, and then felt more keenly than ever the pinched and bloodless faces of his own dear ones; I fancy there would surge up within him the elements of a sermon that, if it found fit utterance in burning words, would drive the cavaliers and amazons pell-mell to their homes, and put shameful fire on your lordship's face. Nay, such a sermon, if preached with "the throat of the whirlwind," would blast the bench of Bishops, rock and rend the Churches, fill the people with a passionate, unconquerable hatred of Christianity, and make them see and feel that dogma and priestcraft are the parents of nearly all the evils over which the Church sheds hypocritical tears; and thenceforth they would know Christianity as the Janus of civilisation, with a face of pretended pity to the suffering poor, and a face of sleek connivance to the spoliators and oppressors of mankind.

Digitized by Google

G. W. FOOTE.

(To be continued.)

CAGLIOSTRO.

The annals of occultism know no more famous name than that of Cagliostro. While all else advances human folly remains almost stationary. The pretensions and career of all miracle-mongers and those who trade on human gullibility are remarkably similar, and in exposing the life of this notorious impostor we can hardly fail to throw some little light both upon his predecessors and successors.

Anyone who desires to closely study the character of the cleverest charlatan of last century—we cannot say of modern times, for we fancy a living rival outdoes him—may be safely referred to Carlyle's admirable essay, written, as it is, with all the sympathy a detester of quacks can bestow upon a charlatan. A writer coming after Carlyle gleans but a stubble ground. Yet in this case that powerful genius did not quite cover the whole field. Two important English studies of Cagliostro have since been written, one in the Dublin University Magazine (1871), and the other by an occultist, Mr. A. E. Waite, in his recent Lives of Alchemystical Philosophers. Since Carlyle's essay, moreover, two attempts have been made to whitewash Cagliostro, one by Charles Sotheran in a little tract published by D. M. Bennett in New York in 1875; and the other by Madame Blavatsky in the last number of Lucifer. We do not wonder at Madame Blavatsky having made a close study of her predecessor in occult arts. Cagliostro whitewashed, there might be some chance of his successor shining as an angel of light. But the lady's exculpation simply consists in setting down all that he tells against her hero as inventions of the Jesuits, unmindful that a pretty full report of his career can be gathered, apart from that published from his own confession and that of his wife, when finally arrested at Rome.

Cagliostro, like Jesus Christ, seems to have cast doubts on his own parentage, and of course Madame Blavatsky also seeks to make him a child of mystery. Giuseppe Balsamo, as Mr. Waite, another Theosophist, candidly says, "whatever has been advanced to the contrary by himself or his admirers, was the son of Peter [Pietro] Balsamo and Felicia Bracconieri, both of humble extraction." He was born at Palermo, Sicily, June 8, 1743.

His father died a few months after his birth. Left to the inadequate control of his widowed mother, he betrayed even in his earliest years a selfish and indolent disposition. He was sent by an uncle to the Seminary of the St. Roch, where he proved his aversion to discipline by running away. Then placed in a Benedictine Convent he came under the tuition of the convent apothecary, from whom he learnt the first principles of chemistry and medicine. Even then it was remarked that he seemed eager to discover those secrets which could be turned to account by charlatans. After several escapades, scandalous to the fathers, this black sheep escaped from the convent and returned to the maternal fold. Here he is said to have employed his talents, first in forging tickets for the theatre, and afterwards in forging a will; and it is even said he killed a man in one of the many brawls in which he had a share.

After cheating a credulous goldsmith named Marano out of sixty ounces of gold, under pretext of finding a hidden treasure, he fled to Messina, where he is said to have met the adept Althotas, who is said to have been an Armenian, with whom he went to Egypt, there to be instructed in the occult sciences, Egypt then playing the part which has since been assigned to Thibet. Possibly this adventure with the adept and the visit to Egypt is entirely mythical. Certainly he found out a method of making gold, by setting up a gaming house in Naples, for the benefit, that is the bleeding, of wealthy foreigners who visited the city.

At Rome he pretended to piety, and found many illustrious dupes. Here he married the young and beautiful Lorenza Feliciani, in whose charms he saw the pathway to fortune. Balsamo was no beauty. On the contrary, a most dusky, bull-necked, mastiff-faced, sinister-looking individual. Thus is he pictured by Carlyle, from engravings executed for admirers: "A most portentous face of scoundrelism; a fat, snub, abominable face; dewlapped, flat nosed, greedy, full of greediness, sensuality, ox-like obstinacy; a forehead impudent, refusing to be ashamed." Like many another ill-looking man, he gained a pretty wife, chiefly, we may suppose, by his brazen impudence. All his biographers concur in describing Lorenza as a charming person; slight in figure, of graceful bearing and with captivating eyes.

Madame Blavatsky ascribes her hero's misfortunes and ill repute to a bad wife, but his other whitewasher Mr. Sotheran says "Through changing fortunes, in evil and in good report, she remained a true and faithful wife." Certain it is that Balsamo made his wife the principle instrument of his fortune. Henceforth he was known under various aliases, as the Marquis Pellegrini, Don Tischio, Count Melina. Belmonte, Fenix, Anna and Harat were other of his aliases before he finally took to theosophy, and the title of Count Alessandro di Cagliostro. Balsamo sought without scruple to undermine his wife's notions of honor and to make her beauty the means of advancing his own fortunes. They travelled from place to place, he living on her prostitution, setting his honor at the highest price obtainable. But the course of scoundrelism does not always run smooth, and if at one time we find them riding with postillions, at another they are begging on a pilgrimage. Cagliostro, after a brief practice as doctor at Madrid, comes to London—

> "The needy villain's general home
> The common sewer of Paris and of Rome."

But here he got landed in the King's Bench prison at the suit of his landlord. From this retreat he was rescued by the charity of Sir Edward Hales. Soon after we find him decorating the summer-house of Doctor Benamore, not however to his satisfaction, and it is also said that he repaid his employer's kindness by seducing his daughter.

Digitized by Google

Giuseppe and Lorenza, once more friendless and in poverty, decided to return to the Continent. At Dover they met a certain Monsieur Duplaisir, and with him they journeyed to Paris, Madame la Comtesse in the postchaise with Duplaisir, whilst the complaisant count jogged behind on horseback. At Paris, Lorenza became the mistress of Duplaisir, and the three lived together some months, but Balsamo, seeking too much money, Duplaisir proposed to Madame that she should commence business on her own account. What was not sufficient for three, and one of them Count Cagliostro, would amply suffice for two alone. The fair Lorenza agreed. But the Count was not to be shaken off so easily. He obtained an order for her arrest, and she was imprisoned for several months in Sainte Pélagie. Figuier in his History of the Marvellous in Modern Times says that at a later period when Cagliostro, uplifted by notoriety and fortune, returned to Paris with a superb equipage, he strenuously denied his first sojourn in the capital and the disgraceful episode of Sainte Pélagie. He maintained that his wife, to whom he now gave the name of Seraphina, had no connection with the imprisoned Lorenza Feliciani, nor he, the Count Cagliostro, with the quack who had been prohibited from continuing his rogueries. But certain legal documents of irrefutable authenticity substantiate the contrary assertion of his enemies.

J. M. Wheeler.

(To be concluded.)

WHY I LEFT THE CHURCH.

By the ex-Rev. H. O. Pentecost.

From the "Truthseeker" Annual.

In 1871, I think, I was ordained as the pastor of a small mission Baptist church down on Long Island, in a neighborhood in which the people were divided into two classes—those who dug clams for a living and those who didn't. Or perhaps I might say those who could read and write and those who couldn't. Being in the bivalve mollusk region, the church over which I was called to preside was naturally of the hardshell variety.

I came very near not being ordained. It happened in this way. I had immersed some new converts in the brook down by an old mill while I was simply a licentiate. In the Baptist church a young man intending to preach is first licensed by some local church and afterward ordained by a council of ministers, and it is supposed that he will neither baptise converts nor administer the "Lord's supper" until after he has been ordained. When I was up before the ordaining council I was quizzed about baptising those people in the brook. I told the small magnates assembled that I thought I was called by God to preach, and therefore had my authority from him to baptise as well as to administer the communion. One of them asked what I thought was the good of their coming all the way down on Long Island to ordain me if I considered myself ordained already. I told him that I thought there was no good in it. Then he wanted to know what I would do if they refused to ordain me, and I told him that I would go on just the same. It was like the firing of a bomb among the members of the council, and I was told afterward that if it had not been for my brother, who was one of the leading ministers in that association, I would not have been ordained.

I mention this circumstance to show that from the first moment of my entering the Christian ministry I had no respect for the machinery of the church. I knew even then that ordaining councils and all that sort of thing, mean simply that the parsons already manufactured wish to control the market—wish to impress each incoming member of the profession with the fact that he is created by them, and, therefore, to a greater or less extent, amenable to their authority. The regularly ordained clergy of each denomination constitute a Parson Trust, and even in my callow days I saw and understood it.

I said that "my" church (that is the way ministers habitually speak of the churches of which they are pastors—"my" church) was a hardshell Baptist church. That means, for one thing, that it was a close-communion church—one that would not allow members of any but regular Baptist churches to sit with them at the "Lord's table" and eat a small piece of bread or cracker and sip a few drops of wine in commemoration of the death of their savior. Well, I got into trouble over that doctrine, in which I never did and never could believe.

There was a Congregationalist, whose summer residence was in the neighborhood, who gave almost all the money that built the church edifice. One Sunday this man and his family remained to the communion service, I saw one of the deacons omit to offer him the bread and wine. I knew these deacons and the whole church were mightily glad to get his money, and I thought if they were so ready to establish and maintain financial fellowship with him, they might as well indulge in a little spiritual fellowship as well. And so I took the bread and wine over to the man and his family myself. That was too much. A council of ministers was called and my resignation was accepted on the spot. It looks all very picayune to me now, but it was a large-sized trouble then.

I mention this circumstance, also, to show again that, although I was a firm believer in what are called the fundamental doctrines of Christianity, I never was a "churchman."

Now let us have done with details.

My first disappointment with and grievance against the church was that she was so far away from the teaching of Jesus. He taught plainly (supposing the gospels to be true) that we cannot enter the kingdom of heaven unless we are poor; but the church teaches that we should save money and accumulate, so as to be able to do good with it. He taught that we should lay up treasures only in heaven, but the church loves the man with a bank account. He taught that we should live without anxiety from day to day, as the birds and the flowers, but the church despises those who follow his teaching. He taught that we should give to those who ask of us, but the church turns such persons over to the Charity Organisation Society or has them arrested. He taught that we should love our enemies, and turn the left cheek to him who strikes us on the right, but the church upholds the shooting of burglars, the hanging of murderers, and war. He associated with the kind of persons with whom the church will have nothing to do, except at incalculably long range, through its Howard and Florence missions—as one who holds his nose and lifts a filthy rag on the end of a long stick. He preached no system of doctrine, and said that they who love God and their fellow-men shall enter the kingdom of heaven. But the church has long creeds, full of doctrines that Jesus never dreamed of, and distinctly declares that those who think they can be saved by simply loving God and serving their fellow-men are heretics. In short, I saw that the church is worshipping Jesus as God, but declining to follow his teachings, on the ground that they are visionary, impracticable and false.

(To be continued.)

Mr. Hugh Price Hughes advocates Methodist Sisterhoods and asks for £1,000 a year for the experiment. He hopes to to hear some day "hundreds of sisters who at their own cost, without receiving one penny from our churches, will do the kind of work we have indicated," and become cheap advertising touts of the gospel shop run by the author of The Atheist Shoemaker.

Charles Lamb was once persuaded to attend a Methodist "Experience" meeting in company with a friend. The friend spoke with great fervor and self-abasement, and finally Lamb himself was called upon to address the meeting. He rose and stuttered out, "I have nothing to say as to myself, but I can quite c-c-confirm what my friend has said as to his being a m-m-miserable sinner."

Digitized by Google

ACID DROPS.

The last blessed Sabbath was Hospital Sunday in Manchester. Three special services were held in the cathedral, and the total of the day's collections reached the magnificent, sublime, unprecedented figure of £39 7s. After this wonderful effort, it is far from surprising to hear that the evening preacher, the Rev. John Henn, claimed hospitals and dispensaries as entirely due to Christianity. Prior to the Christian era, he said, such institutions were unknown. Now, this reverend Henn is hatching a chalk egg. He may deceive ignorant spectators, but people who know what's what are not so easily taken in. Why, even in a little volume published by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge (Buddhism, by Professor T. W. Rhys Davids), it may be read how King Asoka, long before the days of Jesus Christ, established hospitals not only for men, but also for beasts. Then again, if Mr. Henn will turn to Mr. Walter Pater's beautiful Marius the Epicurean, he will read that the Grecian temples of Æsculapius —the god of healing—were "really also a kind of hospitals for the sick, administered in a full conviction of the religiousness, the refined and sacred happiness, of a life spent in the relieving of pain."

O thou Henn, hatching the chalk egg, do get off it and incubate a real one. Cease cackling sectarian bigotry, and perhaps you'll draw a bigger collection for the hospitals. The sum of £39 7s. for a whole day's begging in Manchester cathedral shows you are on the wrong tack. Anyhow, don't lie in the pulpit gratuitously. You have to do a certain amount of lying professionally, but for God's sake—or your own—don't do it con amore and give such full measure, pressed down, and running over. Give the truth a chance now and then, and you'll feel the better for it the next morning.

The only item in the Queen's Speech especially interesting to us as Freethinkers is the promise of "A Bill for improving the procedure by which tithe is now levied, and for facilitating its redemption." Should not this last clause read "and for handing over permanently to the Church of England national property, to which its right of use becomes year by year more imperilled"?

The silly young glutton who is now playing "the young Pretender" in Paris, is very pious as well as a lover of costly wines and recherché repasts. After polishing off his sumptuous breakfast on Sunday morning he asked to be allowed to go to mass; but the keeper told him that nobody at the Conciergerie ever made such a request except disorderly women, and that his presence amongst them would give rise to hilarity. So a chaplain was brought in to minister to the young man's spiritual wants, and it is to be hoped that the Body of God, which he no doubt swallowed, mixed up well with the food from the restaurant.

We have often told people to laugh and grow wise. Now we find the Christian World siding with the blasphemer. Its advice is "Love God and laugh," but it pleads for "fun," and in the long run the bright spirit of laughter will vanquish all the solemn ghosts of mystery and imposture.

The Rev. Bernard J. Snell preached—we beg pardon, lectured—at Manchester on Sunday afternoon on "The New Democracy." But although the subject was political he gave the lecture a pious twang. For instance, he said that out of mistakes came progress, as out of chaos came cosmos. Out of chaos! Fancy an "educated" man, at this time of day, talking such nonsense! Science knows nothing of chaos; can't indeed conceive chaos; and doubts if it ever existed except in the heads of theologians.

Mr. Snell wound up by declaring that politics and religion must go hand in hand, otherwise religion would not be real and politics would not be unselfish. How pretty! But let us work it out. Religion is to borrow reality from politics, and certainly it wants it. In return religion is to lend politics unselfishness. But how is it to lend what it hasn't got? The fact is, that while religion has been prating about what it would do, political reform has gone and done it; and while religion has been canting about unselfishness, political reform has been carrying out that big instalment of it known as Justice.

Our parsons are always imitating the sacerdotalism of Rome, and while it only consists in putting on gorgeous vestments and other histrionic accessories, churchgoers are content with it as part of a well-got-up show supplying them with a respectable Sunday entertainment. But how would they like the genuine article as expounded by Priest Harrington to his dupes? He is reported as saying there is as much difference between a priest and a layman as there is between God Almighty and the Devil himself. This is priestism pure and simple, and though our High Church clergy would not venture to say it, there are not a few of them who would like to.

The demand for an Abridged Bible was exemplified lately by the rebuff a colporteur got from a Scotch fisherwoman —"Na, na. We're for nae Bibles here. Bairns hiv nae business t' ken aboot sic things." She had probably read some of the stories in Genesis with considerable disgust.

Sky-pilots are always supposed to have a call from the Holy Ghost before entering on any particular office. Such advertisements as the following from the Church Times seem to indicate that there may possibly be in some cases other inducements of a more temporal character:—"Advowson for sale, beautifully situated in Berkshire, near the river; net income about £300; excellent house and grounds; small pop.; near a station. Incumbent aged nearly 80.—Mr. Corbett, etc." Such advertisements may be found in any issue of the Church papers, notwithstanding the existence of a Society for Abolishing Purchase in the Church.

Hynoptism threatens to be held responsible for most of the crimes and all the miracles. An American hynoptiser who calls himself "Prof." Seymour, explains the miracles of Christ by his own performances. Instead of feeding five thousand, J. C. "psychologised" them into the belief that they had a good square meal, and also we suppose into the belief that twelve baskets full of fragments were left over. We suppose, too, the death on the cross and the ascent into heaven were equally "psychologised." Our impression is the early Christians were so credulous they did not need much psychologising.

When at the British Museum hunting up the true history of Cagliostro our sub. had twice the fortune to meet Madame Blavatsky, with her arms glittering with golden bangles and her fingers sparkling with diamonds. It may surprise some that a lady who claims to have access to occult knowledge, and to libraries far vaster than the British Museum, should seek for material for Lucifer in that library. It is also curious that the learned lady should twice leave her umbrella behind her. But her head is filled with more important things than umbrellas.

Over nineteen tons of embalmed cats have been landed from Egypt at Liverpool. These were once the divinities of the Egyptians, and a large find of their remains being recently discovered, they were sold for manure at £3 13s. 9d. per ton. When the Christian pantheon is emptied there will not be the shade of a phantom of a ghost of any divinity. Not enough will be realised to manure a single crocus in a flower-pot.

Some people may have wondered what the conferences of sky-pilots on the Lord's second coming are carried on for. An answer comes from America, where a conference of twenty preachers, presided over by the Rev. Israel Hollock, was held at Brusby Mountain. Wilkes County These worthies meant business. They did not fall at loggerheads about the interpretation of scripture. No. They solemnly agreed that J. C. was due this very year, and that they would preach he was coming. As a consequence much excitement prevails, which it is said will even affect the crops, farmers who believe the holy message concluding it is no use to make any provision ahead. What should people want with crops if they have Christ?

Dr. Kirker, giving at the Portsmouth Literary and Scientific Society "Sanitary Notes on Egypt and Palestine," expressed his belief that the plagues of Egypt might be accoun'ed for by natural phenomena. Thus the plague of boils was probably an epidemic preceded by an unhealthy season. The darkness which might be felt was very likely a dense fog. The apparent turning of pools of water into blood might have been caused by stagnant water being discolored by the surrounding soil. The plague of frogs would be a natural result of the destruction of fish in contaminated waters, for the frogs would then be sure to assert themselves.

Digitized by Google

Dr. Kirker forgets that the plagues were given as signs of the miraculous power of Jahveh, but we fancy from what he says of the plague of lice in which the Egyptians saw the finger of God, that he is somewhat sceptical as to that finger. He is reported as saying: "With regard to the development of insect life, he did not think it necessary to dwell on those two plagues, for everyone who had visited Egypt would be inclined to feel that the troubles of the ancient Egyptians and the Israelites were shared by the inhabitants in the present day." Dr. Kirker did not venture to refer the destruction of the first-born to any known natural phenomena, and seems indeed to hold loose-minded rationalistic views quite inconsistent with the inspiration of the Bible.

What a modicum of logic and common sense goes to the making of a minister! Here is the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes boasting of an "answer to prayer." He besought the Lord for £500 by a certain date, but he also took the precaution to inform the St. James's Hall congregation of the fact on two successive Sundays. Luckily the cash arrived on the very evening it was wanted, as it always does in these stories; and Mr. Hughes asks Professors Huxley and Tyndall what they think of it. Well now, if he asked our opinion, we should say that he is either a clever humbug or an awful fool. Fancy keeping a secret by telling three thousand people! Mr. Hughes should pray for what he wants in secret, taking care to let nobody but God know, and see if the money comes then.

The Rev. Wm. Frederick Gover, of Oaksey Rectory, Wilts, is a muscular Christian. He is said to be more familiar with prize-fighting than preaching. This clerical prop of the Primrose League recently interrupted the speakers at a Liberal van meeting, and has since been committed for trial for aiding and abetting in a drunken brawl and prize-fight.

It was a moonlight fight. Mr. Gover acted as second to one of the pugilists, picked up his man five or six times, called out "Time," and used language showing he was more in his element there than in preaching that if struck on the right cheek one should turn the left also.

The Abbé Martin, who insured his brother's life for a heavy sum and then endeavored to strangle him in his sleep, has been sentenced by the Allier Assize Court to penal servitude for life.

While Mrs. Roberts was worshipping in a chapel at Plasynddod, Wales, she was suddenly seized with paralysis, and died before relief could be obtained.

Thomas Hesketh, confectioner and lay preacher, of Heavily, is charged with the wilful murder of the infant child of Elizabeth Parker, with whom he is said to have cohabited for more than two years. The body was exhumed by order of the Home Secretary. Hesketh is committed for trial.

There have been "scenes" at Rotterdam over the opera "Falka," in which a drunken monk appears on the stage. Of course there have been plenty of drunken monks off the stage, but a drunken monk on the stage the Catholics regard as blasphemy. The police have had great difficulty in quelling the riot inside the theatre, and a big fight took place outside, the police having to use their sabres. All the rumpus seems to have been got up by the Catholic papers: so true it is that religion always encourages peace and goodwill.

The "Strict Baptist Church" in Highbury Place made a mistake. It admitted into fellowship a lady who had not gone through the process of dipping. But she was physically deformed, and this was held to render the ceremony impossible. The "London Association of Strict Baptist Churches," however, held the plea to be invalid, and excluded the church at Highbury. This brought the elders and the congregation to a sense of their awful position. They caved in, found they had been hasty, and made arrangements for giving the deformed lady a dipping. She was seated in a chair, wearing a specially designed dress, and was properly soused in the baptismal tank. Thus all's well that ends well. The Church is received back into the Association, and the deformed lady has had the holy bath which is indispensable to all emigrants to heaven.

For absurdity The Reaper, an Evangelical paper emanating from Glasgow, beats the comic papers all to fits. Among the gems we have culled from the February number of this magazine are the "China Inland Mission is praying for 1,000 additional workers." "Spain, France and Italy debased and down-trodden by the papacy, or cheated and misguided by infidelity, have great demands upon Christian sympathies, prayers and efforts. The one great desideratum is that the Lord's people be anointed and filled with the holy spirit." "The beast from the sea s unquestionably the same with Daniel's weakened iron and clay condition of the Roman Empire." Of Mr. Bradlaugh "to rank such a man with Mr. Bright and Mr. Gladstone is a crime against humanity."

The Reaper falls into ecstacy of admiration at an Irish lady in Africa who is "the terror of the wife-beaters in her district." Directly she hears a woman's cry, divining the reason, she starts forth to the rescue, and whether it is the moral influence she has acquired over them, or her tall imposing presence, that produces the desired effect, the irate husbands desist immediately at her word of command. This lady need not have gone to Africa to quell wife beaters. She would have made a good missionary in our own black country.

The Rev. M. Baxter, editor of the Christian Herald and author of Louis Napoleon: the Destined Monarch of the World, shifted his date for the final winding up of creation from year to year. 1890 for the past few years had been his favorite date for the beginning of the end, but he now shows symptoms of placing it a little further off. Perhaps some one has offered him seven years' purchase for his house and other property, which must be very considerable in amount. To prey on human credulity is a better paying game than to expose it, and Mr. Baxter must have netted something considerable by his prophecies of the near approach of the end of the world.

The Echo says: "The Prophet Baxter is still starring in the provinces, and frightening many worthy old ladies of both sexes with his predictions of a multitude of coming horrors. Meanwhile some correspondent with a memory has recalled the fact that in the spring of 1888 the prophet advertised 'wars and troubles and revolutions between 1888 and 1891.' This period being now more than half over, it is really high time that the wars and revolutions commenced."

Preaching on Sunday at St. Margaret's Church, Archdeacon Farrar said he feared the corruption of the Church from within rather than from the infidel or sceptic from without. Well, so long as the Church goes to bits, it doesn't matter whether the explosion happens inside or outside. We rather fancy it will be a double explosion—inside and out at the same time, and Dr. Farrar may be alive to weep over the rubbish.

"If the Jews," says the Echo, "did nothing else for mankind but institute the Sunday, they would entitle themselves to everlasting honor." Such is the kind of ignorance that passes for knowledge in anonymous journalism. Every scholar is aware that a day of rest was known before the time of the Jews, and that the Jews themselves derived it from the civilisation of Babylon.

We did not join in the general laudation of sister Rose Gertrude who went out to take charge of the leper hospital on the island of Molokai. The newspapers were very hysterical, and it was difficult to discover the young lady's real motives. No doubt there was a feeling of natural disinterestedness in her, but she may also have been instigated by her religious advisers, and this does not seem improbable in the light of a recent letter by her father. This gentleman, a Devonshire clergyman, says that she was "both beguiled and received into the Roman Church secretly, when quite a girl." He also says that she "preferred to receive doctrines on authority, without having to inquire and decide for herself." This is the kind of nature that priests find it very easy to sacrifice.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Gladstone will begin in April a series of articles on "The Old Testament" in one of the monthlies. We hope he will be more lucid than he was in the article that Ingersoll replied to. We shall deal with Mr. Gladstone's articles as they appear, and we hope he will give us something to criticise.

Mr. Gladstone's articles, reprinted as a pamphlet, should sell well in the streets, especially outside churches. "Here you are, sir, the Grand Old Man on the Grand Old Book—sixpence!" Sounds well, doesn't it?

The Rev. Walter Walsh, who has been enlightening the Newcastle Secularists on four Sunday afternoons, has a "Monthly Messenger" in connection with his Church. The February number devotes a corner to the "young folks," for whom it prints "a Biblical puzzle." Here it is:

"A Young Student was asked:—'How many boys are there in your class?' He replied:—'If you multiply the number of Jacob's Sons, by the number of times the Israelites compassed Jericho, and add to the product the number of measures of Barley which Boaz gave Ruth, divide this by the number of Haman's Sons, subtract the number of each kind of clean beasts that went into the Ark, multiply by the number of men that went to seek Elijah after he was taken to heaven, subtract from this Joseph's age at the time he stood before Pharaoh, add the number of stones in David s Bag when he killed Goliath, subtract the number of furlongs that Bethany was distant from Jerusalem, divide by the number of Anchors cast out when Paul was shipwrecked, and subtract the number of persons saved in the Ark, the remainder will be the answer.'"

Here you are, ladies and gentlemen; this is the sort of stuff they offer your children! Why, a child had better be engaged in "mischief" than occupied with such imbecility.

Mr. Walsh sometimes writes as though he superintended that children's corner. For instance, he says—"The Creator adapts all things to the natural wants of his creatures. If there is an eye, there is a flower to gratify it; if an ear, music to please it. If there is a bird, there is an atmosphere for flight; if an animal, a solid globe for it to tread on." He might have added that, if there is a parson, there is a pulpit for him to preach from. Mr. Walsh's theology (and science) is like that of the divine who found a mark of Providence in the fact that large navigable rivers generally flow by capital cities.

Mrs. Parmley has been conducting "a week's gospel mission" at Chester-le-Street. Her concluding discourse dealt considerably with the Freethinker, which the lady said, had recently published "a series of obnoxious and hideous figures" on the book of Ruth. Mrs. Parmley is evidently as accurate as others in her line of business. We should like her to tell us when we printed a series of illustrations on Miss Ruth and her adventures in the barn.

Mrs. Parmley chose a queer text from a queer book for her discourse on Ruth.—"A bundle of myrrh is my well beloved unto me." This is the first half of the thirteenth verse of the first chapter of the Song. The second half we dare not print, but of course Mrs. Parmley knows it. The ladies—especially Catholic ladies—have a wonderful fondness for that old Song of Songs which isn't Solomon's. But they ought to drop it when they mount the rostrum and address mixed audiences of men and women, and boys and girls.

Among recent records of divine beneficence we note the terrible colliery disaster near Pontypool, Monmouth, resulting in the loss of over 170 lives; a fatal fire at Southampton, where two children were burnt to death, while their frantic mother, blinded and scorched by the fire, vainly endeavored to save them; influenza in Mexico so fatal that there are not hearses enough to convey the bodies of the dead; avalanches and floods in America, occasioning loss of life and enormous destruction of property.

The Oldham Evening Chronicle has an amusing account of a "marriage" at the Salvationist Temple. The smartly written report was appropriately headed Salvationist Burlesques, for the marriage was, of course, only a dodge to raise coin, the legal ceremony having taken place previously.

A divinity student named E. Q. Coles has been charged with an indecent assault upon a young lad in the vestry of St. Stephen's Church, Kensington.

"Supplied for the Service" is stamped on copies of H. L. Hastings' lecture on the Bible, which are being circulated on board Her Majesty's ships off Portsmouth. Surely there is nothing to equal the impudence of these religious zealots. Some pious jack-in-office must have permitted this manœuvre, and if religious equality were a fact, as it will be some day, he would be brought to book for his impertinence.

Mr. Moody, the American revivalist, thinks Christ will soon put in a second appearance. When he comes Chicago won't be ready. Won't it, though? We guess it would ask him to repeat that wave-walking performance on Lake Michigan, and some enterprising caterer would offer him half the gate money.

Moody says the infidels can keep on barking at Christ. He just keeps on shining like the moon. Precisely so. Most of his teaching is moonshine, especially the parts that Moody isn't fool enough to obey.

"Love not the world nor the things of the world," says the Holy Ghost. But the Rev. John McNeill differs from the Paraclete, ay, from the whole blessed Trinity. He advises a young man to fall in love with a young woman. No doubt his advice will be extensively followed.

Courtship and Marriage were the subject of a recent sermon by Prebendary Harry Jones. He said they were of divine origin, and perhaps this is true. Anyhow, there is a God the Father and a God the Son, and perhaps God the Holy Ghost is the wife of the one and the mother of the other. Will Prebendary Jones preach a sermon on Jehovah's courtship? It would draw—especially with magic lantern illustrations.

Stands Scotland where it did? Hardly. A ship was launched at Govan on Sunday afternoon, a monster of 8,500 tons, and 500 feet long; and what was worse, thousands of Scotties watched the performance. Guid God, mon! What's auld Scotland comin' tae?

The first step has been taken in the proceedings against Dr. Marcus Dods for heresy. The case is likely to prove a lively one, and is sure to make the heresies complained of more familiar to theologically backward Scotsmen.

A Jewish woman in Philadelphia made complaint recently before a magistrate that she had been taken by her husband before a rabbi and constrained to accede to a decree of divorce under the Hebrew law. The couple had lived together for fourteen years, and the husband's only motive for his course was that he desired to marry their servant girl, Dora Goldbeck, with whom he had already been living on terms of intimacy. The man's contention that he was acting strictly in accordance with the divine law received little attention from the Christian officials of the United States.

It is stated that the custom of granting divorces without regard to the laws of the commonwealth prevails especially among the Russian Jews, of whom large numbers have in recent years emigrated to America. In Russia the rabbis are granted legal jurisdiction over this subject, and when they emigrate the rabbis still continue to exercise this jurisdiction. The decree is written in Hebrew, and a copy given to each of the parties, who suppose it to be a valid and absolute divorce. Like other religionists, the Jews put their religion above their allegiance to civil law.

At the Golden Gate, St. Peter—"Who are you?"
Applicant—"I was the manager of a London syndicate."
St. Peter—"Well, you go to—the other place. This place is not for sale."

Digitized by Google

MR. FOOTE'S ENGAGEMENTS.

Sunday, Feb. 16, Milton Hall, Hawley Crescent, Kentish Town Road; at 7.30, "An Hour with the Devil."

Thursday, Feb. 20, Hall of Science, Old Street, E.C., at 8 "Freethought and God." Free Lecture, with unlimited discussion."

Feb. 23, Hall of Science, London.

March 2, Manchester; 9, Camberwell; 16, Cardiff; 23 and 30, Hall of Science, London.

April 6, Milton Hall; 13, Portsmouth; 20, Hall of Science; 27, Hall of Science.

May 4, Newcastle; 11, South Shields.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

LITERARY communications to be addressed to the Editor, 14 Clerkenwell Green, London, E.C. All business communications to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C.

THE Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the office, post free to any part of Europe, America, Canada and Egypt, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 6s. 6d.; Half Year, 3s. 3d.; Three Months, 1s. 7½d. Australia, China and Africa:—One Year, 8s. 8d.; Half Year, 4s. 4d.; Three Months, 2s. 2d. India:—One Year, 10s. 10d.; Half Year, 5s. 5d. Three Months, 2s. 8½d.

SCALE OF ADVERTISEMENTS.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 3s.; Half Column, 15s.; Column, £1 10s. Special terms for repetitions.

IT being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will in future receive the number when their subscription expires in a colored wrapper.

C. GORDON.—Mary Ann Girling, the so called Shakeress, died at the community she founded called "The People of God," on Sept. 18th, 1886. She claimed to be an incarnation of Christ The sect, after suffering great hardship near Hordle, Lymington, Hants, disbanded.

JOHN STOKES, a bricklayer's laborer, sends us a subscription of nine shillings, acknowledged in another column, for the Swedish Prisoner's Fund. If handsome is as handsome does, John Stokes should be an Apollo. Several better-off readers might take a lesson from him.

W. CARTER.—Thanks for the cutting. No wonder Canon Talbot shirks a debate with Mr. Foote. His lecture on the Gospels is a tissue of assumptions and misrepresentations, apparently designed to bamboozle an ignorant Christian audience, and the disingenuous reference to Matthew Arnold is simply disgraceful.

C. G. SPENCER.—Thanks. Cuttings are always welcome.

M. CLAY.—Many thanks for cuttings.

D. WOODHOUSE.—Much obliged for the papers.

WILLIAM SIMONS.—Cuttings are always welcome.

B. INGHAM writes that he got his newsagent to expose the Freethinker and take a few copies for sale, guaranteeing him against loss from unsold copies. The result is that he disposes of half a dozen extra copies already. Other readers might go and do likewise.

J. EVANS.—See "Acid Drops."

D. MCINTYRE.—Of course there are good as well as bad things in the Bible; otherwise it would have been kicked out of the world long ago. The Koran—the Bible of the Mohammedans—can be obtained at almost any book-shop.

H. CHAPMAN.—Greatly pleased with your letter. We are glad to know that Freethought is spreading in the Navy, and that our publications are doing such good work there.

W. STRAKER.—We are much obliged for the copy you send us of Il Secolo Tartufo by Mantegazza.

G. WISE.—Haven't you some friend who could prevent you from making such ghastly mistakes? Here you are, only a fortnight after your two nights' public debate with Mr. S. Standring, complaining that the Secularists are shy of discussion. By the way, unless you want your letters disregarded, you had better couch them in language of ordinary politeness in future.

J. H. THOMAS.—It is a long subject, and we have had our say. Thanks for the cutting.

H. SANDERSON.—Thanks for your good wishes. We hope we shall always have your respect.

W. TENCH.—We don't think there is any Branch at Norwich. There ought to be though.

A. D.—Green's History would be more serviceable to you than Hume's or Smollett's. The early Fathers can only be obtained complete in the Ante-Nicene Library, an expensive collection. Supernatural Religion is in three volumes at 36s. All Dr. Bain's books are good. Darwin's chief works are in seven-and-sixpenny volumes. Never mind Christian insults.

H. G. SHEPHERD.—Some of them might be useful.

W. LAPPAGE.—The report question is still open.

H. COURTNEY.—We will deal with the matter next week.

J. ROBINSON.—There is no biography of Huxley or Spencer. Write to Mr. Forder for the others, enclosing stamp for reply as to volumes and prices.

J. F. HAMPSON.—Your cuttings are always welcome.

J. S.—Thanks.

PAPERS RECEIVED.—Cambria Daily Leader—Liberator—Liberty—Western Figaro—Menschenthum—Western American—Neues Freireligioses Sonntags-Blatt—Open Court—Eastern Evening News—The Reaper—Portsmouth Evening News—Freethinkers' Magazine—Lichtfreund—Dundalk Democrat—Manchester Guardian—Der Arme Teufel—Chester-le-Street Advertiser—Lucifer—Bulletin des Sommaires—Southampton Times—Wiltshire Times—Tit-Bits—Swindon Advertiser—Oldham Evening News—Answers—Consett Guardian—Devon Evening News—Bristol Mercury—Kensington Churchman—Weekly Dispatch.

FRIENDS who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish our attention directed.

CORRESPONDENCE should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

SUGAR PLUMS.

MR. FOOTE'S lectures on Sunday at Blackburn were delivered in the Oddfellow's Hall, the lessee of the theatre having declined to let it again for fear of losing his license. The hall appears to have seen better days, and the audiences were only middling; but there was plenty of questioning and discussion after the lectures, and two reporters took notes of the afternoon lecture in reply to the Rev. J. Ogmore Davies's sermon on Atheism. The Blackburn Branch consists almost exclusively of working men, and it lost its financial pillar when Mr. Umpleby removed to London. We hope, however, that last Sunday's meetings will bring the Branch a few new members.

THE meeting of the National Secular Society at the Hall of Science, London, to-day (Feb. 16) will commence at 11.15 instead of 11 as previously announced. The change has been made to accommodate many members from the country.

THOSE who want to view Mr. Bradlaugh's presents from India will find them in the minor hall, upstairs, before or after the meeting. A luncheon will be provided at the Manchester Hotel at one o'clock. Tickets can be obtained of Mr. Forder before the morning's business begins.

NEXT Thursday evening a special course of four Free Lectures will open at the London Hall of Science under the auspices of the Secular Federation. Mr. Foote will speak on "Freethought and God." The subsequent lecturers are Mr. J. M. Robertson and Mr. G. Standring. Discussion is courted, and the Christian Evidence Society has promised to send representatives.

THESE lectures will all be free; that is, there will be no charge for admission. But there will be a few reserved seats for which tickets can be purchased. Some Freethinkers will no doubt take this method of contributing to the expenses of the enterprise.

ON Sunday afternoon, at 4 p.m., our good friend Mr. H. L. Braekstad lectures for the Sunday Lecture Society at St. George's Hall, Langham Place, on "Norway, its Scenery and its People." The lecture will be illustrated with oxy-hydrogen lantern views.

ON Saturday evening, Feb. 1, the Swindon Branch put themselves en evidence by holding a dinner at the Golden Lion Hotel. The tickets announced the dinner at another place, but the proprietor funked at the last moment; the repast proved, however, that nothing was lost by the enforced change. Mr. Carrien, the president of the Branch, was, through illness, unable to be present, but Mr. Richards was equal to the occasion. Good speeches were made by Mr. Dawe and Mr. Jones, and Mr. Forder, who went down from London, responded to the toast of the N. S. S. Excellent singing and music by Messrs. Weight, Spratt, Richards and Lawrence contributed to make the evening a most enjoyable one.

MR. FORDER impressed on the members and friends present the urgent necessity of attempting propagandist work in their district, promising the assistance of the Organisation Committee if needed. Most of the members are employed by the G. W. R Company, and it seems that there is an impression that it would be bad for any of them to attempt aggressive work. There are some, however, brave enough to attempt this, and although no hall can be hired for a Freethought lecture it is likely ere long that Swindon will be awakened from its long sleep.

Digitized by Google

MRS. BESANT has been elected president of the "Blavatsky Lodge" of the Theosophical Society. Sic itur ad astra.

PROF. ANDREW T. WHITE, of Cornell University, author of the Warfare of Science, shows up "The Myth of Lot's Wife" in the February number of the Popular Science Monthly.

The Freethinker's Magazine for February gives a cut representing "Christians burning Bruno at the Stake." The magazine is enlarged and is full of good readable matter and well deserving of support.

DR. E. ABBOTT, author of Philochristus, The Kernel, and the Husk, and other rationalistic works, is using the leisure gained by his enforced retirement from the City of London School in preparing a commentary on the epistles of St. Paul.

LESLIE STEPHEN, in his Memoir of Gibbon, in the last published volume of the Dictionary of National Biography, says: "In accuracy, thoroughness, lucidity, and comprehensive grasp of a vast subject, the 'History' is unsurpassable. It is the one English history which may be regarded as definitive. The philosophy is, of course, that of the age of Voltaire, and implies a deficient insight into the great social forces. The style, though variously judged, has at least the cardinal merit of admirable clearness, and of pompous is always animated. Whatever its shortcomings, the book is artistically imposing as well as historically unimpeachable as a vast panorama of a great period. Gibbon's fortunate choice of a subject enables him to write the one book in which the clearness of his own age is combined with a thoroughness of research, which has made it a standard for his successors."

THE Devon Evening Express (Exeter) is rough on the Bishops who are begging for the poor curates. It prints a little cartoon, showing their lordships of Exeter, London, and Canterbury in the front, holding collection-boxes and tickets showing their own big salaries, and a lean curate in the background, with a sort of "Don't I wish I may get it" look on his emaciated countenance.

SWEDISH PRISONER'S FUND.—We have received the following: J. C. (Blackburn), 10s.; John Stokes, 9s.; (Jarrow), H. Sanderson, 2s. 6d.; John Dickson, 2s. 6d.; W. Plumpton, 2s.; T. Price, 1s.; J. Sanderson, 2s.; H. Richardson, 2s. 6d.

SWEDISH PRISONERS' FUND.—H. J. M., 2s.; A. W. T., 2s.; J. K., 1s.; F. F., 2s. 6d.; J. Knapp, 1s.; W. Cabbell, 5s. 6d.; Hartlepool Branch N.S.S., 10s.; Manchester Branch N.S.S., £1 8s.; C. Roos, 1s. H. Pearse, 1s. Stalybridge Branch N.S.S. 5s.; H. Symes, 1s.—R. Forder, Secretary.

HALL OF SCIENCE CHILDREN'S PARTY.—W. Cabbell, 5s.; per Mrs. Fisher, 2s. 4d.; Per Mr. Powell, 11d.; Collected at Hall of Science, £1 12s. 3½d.; per Miss Vance, 2s. 6d.; per Mr. Larkin, 5s.—R. Forder, Secretary.

MRS. THORNTON SMITH had a large audience at Camberwell on Sunday evening, and her lecture gave great satisfaction.

ACCORDING to the biography of James McDonnell, the ate eminent journalist, he told an Aberdeen lady that he did not know a single journalist in London, except G. A. Sala, who believed in Christianity, or who ever mentioned lit but as an object of ridicule.

THE Freethinker ran out of print early last week, and we fear that some of our regular subscribers must have been disappointed, but they will be able to obtain copies out of the returns if they desire to complete a file. We generally print in excess of the sale, but it is not always possible to calculate exactly.

THE first series of Letters to the Clergy, including all that have appeared up to date, will be on sale next week in a little volume of 128 pages. The letter on Prayer has been much amplified, and Mr. Foote has written a Preface to the collection. The price is one shilling.

A NORTHAMPTON VETERAN.

Mr. Bradlaugh has lost one of his oldest and warmest supporters in Alderman Thomas Adams, who has just died at Northampton. We remember Mr. Adams of old when we were down at Northampton helping to fight Mr. Bradlaugh's election during his absence in America, and he dwells in our recollection as a genial gentleman, as well as a sturdy Radical and an earnest Freethinker. Those were the days that tried men's souls. Mr. Bradlaugh's seat is safe enough now, but he had to battle hard for it for ten years—before he engaged the House of Commons—and among the gallant band of reformers who stood around him at Northampton none was truer or more helpful than Thomas Adams. One by one the Old Guard goes. May the new soldiers of progress be as stedfast and courageous as those who fought around the standard when Balaclava Charges were everyday occurrences.

MR. VOYSEY AND THE GOSPELS.

MR. VOYSEY having been accused by writers in the Unitarian Inquirer of unfairness in blaming Unitarians for picking out of the Gospels only such passages as commend themselves, while he himself only picks from the Old Testament certain passages, he replies "I accept as good and true whatever I find in the Old Testament which commends itself to my reason, conscience and love. But I do not, therefore, claim any reverence for the Old Testament as a whole, nor do I deny that the parts of it which I reject belong to it likewise. Some Unitarians, however, not only accept as good and true whatever words, attributed to Jesus in the Gospels, commend themselves to their reason, conscience and love, but they go on to deny that all the rest which they reject was ever spoken by him at all." Mr. Voysey quotes the recent utterance of Dr. Marcus Dods: "The claim of Jesus to be Divine, if not true, was wicked and mad. They had but one alternative either to admit the claim, or to suppose him to be instead of the wisest, the foolishest, and instead of the best, the wickedest of men." Mr. Voysey vehemently protests against the imputation of wickedness, and says it is preposterous to say Christ, in claiming to be God, was wicked and mad too. Mr. Voysey's argument is plausible, but will he apply it to Mohammed's claim to inspiration?

HOW TO HELP US.

(1) Get your newsagent to exhibit the Freethinker in his window.

(2) Get your newsagent to take a few copies of the Freethinker and try to sell them, guaranteeing to take the copies that may remain unsold.

(3) Take an extra copy (or more), and circulate it among your acquaintances.

(4) Display, or get displayed, one of our contents-sheets, which are of a convenient size for the purpose. Mr. Forder will send them on application.

(5) Leave a copy of the Freethinker now and then in the train, the car, or the omnibus.

(6) Distribute some of our cheap tracts in your walks abroad, at public meetings, or among the audiences around street-corner preachers.

A clergyman, going the rounds of his country parish in the south of Ireland, met a farmer who, though residing ing in a neighboring parish, was a regular attendant at his church. Said Pat, "Af ye please, yer riverence, would ye mind prayin' for a wee drap o' rain next Sunday, for sorra a thing'll grow in me little garden wid the present hate o' the weather?" "Sorry to hear that, Pat," replied the divine; "but you ought to ask your own parson, not me." "Ah, shure," was the reply, "that's just it; what's the good in axin' him to pray for rain wid them cocks o' hay a-standing on his lawn?"

Digitized by Google

A MATTER OF ARITHMETIC.

It is one of the finest constituents of human nature that when a man is convinced of some important truth, or, even, of what he may erroneously believe to be an important truth, he desires to convince others of it; and it may be said that just in proportion to his earnestness in spreading his new conviction may his love of truth as a principle be measured.

Were it not for this quality, which may be considered an essential part of every man's character, although some have it much less than others, and some so very slightly that its existence betrays but few signs, there could be no advance; every new opinion would be jealously guarded within the mind of him who had conceived it—for fear of exciting prejudice—and humanity would swelter for ever and a day in a stagnant ocean of stale sentiment.

Whether the belief may conduce to happiness or otherwise is generally a matter of indifference to the one who believes it. What he wants is to convince others of that of which he is convinced himself. That the majority of the human race will be burnt in a lake of fire during all eternity, and poisoned with the fumes of brimstone at the same time; that agonising tortures are predestined for people before they are even born; that hell is paved with the skulls of unbaptised infants; that God and the Lamb and the elect will gloat with infinite joy over the excruciating sufferings of the damned, and similar cruel and nonsensical beliefs have been preached with as much gusto and energy as though they were good and pleasant and true.

When, on the other hand, the belief is one which is grounded on the same mode of reasoning which enables us to tell the hour at which the sun will rise or set, and is one which might be supposed to benefit one's fellow men, as, for instance, when a man is sufficiently enlightened to perceive clearly that the ideas of the childhood of his race are based on dreams, fancies, and illusions; that God, Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Heaven, Hell, and other theological terms are mere words representive of nothing but confused and contradictory notions, symbolising no external entities, and thus that most people are living under the influence of tremendous delusions, his enthusiasm to spread this belief ought to be in proportion to its philanthropic import.

If Freethinkers were in as much earnest in demolishing the cobwebs of priests as some of the old Christians were in spinning them the number of God's elect would speedily decrease.

Were every reader of this paper to give his weekly copy, after reading it himself, to some Christian, or, failing this—as the chance of receiving a sanctimonious "No, thank you" to the polite request of "Will you accept a paper?" does not tend in the direction of philosophical equanimity—to leave it in some public place for some meek and lowly disciple to pick up, it would be a strange thing indeed if in the course of six months his twenty-six copies had not secured at least one recruit. Thus even this comparatively small amount of enthusiasm would, at the lowest computation, double the circulation of the Freethinker every six months, Starting somewhere, say at two thousand, and doubling this number every six months for only six years, and nearly every man in the United Kingdom, or rather the civilised parts of it, would be a subscriber and consequently a converted Christian.

The means are simple by which a consummation so devoutly to be wished could be reached—only dropping a paper once a week—and the man who would not do this much for a belief he considers true and vitally important, must, to say the least, be possessed of but an infinitesimal amount of what was before described as one of the finest constituents of human nature.

J. E. Roose.

I F ?

An anxious inquirer sends the following question to the editor of the Ironclad Age: If there is a God—but there isn't—and this god had a son—but he hadn't—through the assistance of a virgin—but she couldn't—and this son—his own pa—was murdered by god—his other pa—because Eve—our first ma—took some apples and things—which was proper—and this god-kill-god business is my only chance to escape hell—this is hell, isn't it? And the blood of the lamb—Hi Yoop! big injun god! much blood; heap scalps!—is all redeeming and all atoning, am I not saved just the same whether I believe this stuff or not?

MORE PERSECUTION.

Dr. Monroe is unwearied in his defence of poor maligned ministers. Here is his latest:

"In Virginia one would think the ministers might have some chance, but they haven't. A malicious paragraph is going the rounds, which is inserted here so that indignation may have vent:

"'Rev. J. R. Sturgis, pastor of a church at Richmond, Va., was suspended for writing an improper letter to a married lady of that city.'

"An improper letter! But who says it was improper? Not the friends, but the enemies of Christ. And isn't a moral guide's sacred character something? Shouldn't it outweigh a ton of letters, half of them forgeries? And if a woman is married—does that divorce her from the bridegroom Christ? Does that imply that her soul needs no more saving? Left out of the promises in the good book it takes a great deal of hard work on the part of the clergy to save the women. And this work is performed under a fire of wicked suspicions. Still, though many fall, the holy messengers bravely prosecute the work. Verily such martyrdom merits its reward."

A DEATH BED CONVERSION.

The London Correspondent of the Liverpool Post tells this story concerning the Rev. H. White, the new chaplain of the House of Commons:—Many years ago he was a curate at the East-end, with respect to which epoch in his career he has a gruesome story to tell. One night, after he had gone to bed in his humble lodging, there came an imperative rapping at the street door. On inquiry he found a poorly-dressed woman, who besought him without a moment's delay to go and see her husband, who was dying. She had by chance heard Mr. White preach, and had induced her husband to accept the benefit of his ministration. Mr. White at once dressed, and accompanied his guide through the purlieus of what he recognised as the lowest quarter in his parish. Arrived at a house, he was, after some parley between the woman and the custodian of the door, admitted, and followed the wife into the sick room. Here he found a still young man lying on the bed, evidently close at the gates of death. It was a squalid room, but Mr. White noticed that the thin candles were set in massive silver candlesticks, whilst about the room were strewed many articles of portable property of a character strangely diverse from the ordinary poverty of the apartment. He spoke to the sick man some words of comfort, and finally promised to pray with him. As he spoke he observed a gleam in the sick man's eye, and following his glance, saw that it rested on the light gold watchchain that hung from the pocket of his waistcoat. Leaning over the man he prayed for him, the wife sobbing bitterly. Where "Amen" should have come in he heard the death rattle in the man's throat, and moved away. Then he discovered that the dead man's fingers were entwined in his watchchain, and as he quickly started back the watch came out and fell on the bed. The man was a noted burglar and pickpocket, and even in the throes of death had been unable to resist the temptation unconsciously put in his way.

The Rev. William Binns, in the Inquirer, welcomes Mrs. Besant as an "addition to the advocates of fundamental religious ideas." Mr. Binns also expresses an opinion as to the editor of this journal, but as it comes from a minister of religion it is hardly worth troubling about. We don't fish for clerical compliments, and are very glad to be without them.

Mr. Binns talks downright nonsense when he says "there is a bitter orthodoxy among Secularists." Every person who is not a lunatic must see the necessity of some understood principles in every voluntary society; and to insist on those principles, in the face of opposition from within or without, is simply to fulfil the object for which the society exists. It is idle to suppose that all opinions are possible in a single society. This is all we have asserted, and if this is "bitter orthodoxy" it is time to revise the dictionary.

The inhabitants of Peckham have been amused with a new entertainment. A procession of youths, apparently in nightgowns, parading the streets with banners and lamps, was in danger of being taken for a form of religious penance or a novel advertising dodge. And it was the latter; the surpliced choir being the touts to draw an audience to the mission services at the parish church.

Digitized by Google

A CHRISTIAN SCIENTIST.

It may not be generally known that the Rev. John Jasper, the colored theologian of Virginia, is now in San Francisco; and I am not certain of it myself, but I met a man the other day who answers his description, and I think his name must be Jasper. He was discussing religion with Newton Parnell in front of the Sentry Box on Market Street. Said he:

"You gentlemen" (including myself) "are all go'n to hell and burn forever suah, an' doan you make no mistake."

Parnell said: "How do you know?"

"Bible says so."

"Do you believe it?"

Every word on it, sah! Bible's all the authority I want for faith or works."

"Do you accept its astronomy?"

"Stronomy, geometry, barometry—all on it. Bible's good nuff for me."

"You think Joshua knew more than Copernicus, eh?"

"Never heard of Coterminus. Some fool, I suppose. Used ter be er fool myself, but got over it."

"Are you sure you got over it?"

"Huh?"

"Do you think the Bible is authority in all branches of science—better authority than Darwin, for instance?"

"Darnin, Darrun—oh, Darwin—nevah heerd of him, sah. What fool thing does he say?"

"He holds that men are descended from the lower forms of animal life."

"Well, he must be a fool, wuss'n old Tom Paine. Live in San Francisker, does he?"

"No; he died several year ago."

"Well, that's the curusest think I ever heerd on, and I've heerd a good deal of curus preaching'. So they's some folks believes that, is they? Hi, yi, yah, yah—wow!"

The Rev. Mr. Jasper was so happy at Darwin's expense that we withdrew and left him enjoying himself. He expects to attend the meetings of the Freethought Society this winter and refute the sophistries of Infidelity. Meanwhile he will instruct a local colored congregation in the truths of religion and science.

G. MACDONALD in "Freethought."

AN INSTANCE OF DESIGN.

A child born in West Manchester, New Hampshire, the other day, looked (so the Philadelphia Ledger says) more like a frog than a human being. It had no neck, and the eyes, of which there were six, were so located as to look skyward. The arms and hands were formed precisely like those of a frog. It had a double spine, and died soon after birth. When Theists explain how monstrosities are born which are incapable of life, they will have solved one of their many difficulties.

THE DEATH PENALTY!

Humanitarians are questioning the efficacy of the punishment of death as the deterrent of crime, and they point to the fact that there has been a decrease of crime where the punishment has been remitted. Do they not believe that God is the author of the Bible, and that his laws are just? Here are a few of the crimes for which God adjudged the penalty to be death:—Eating leavened bread during passover, Exodus xii, 5; Kidnapping, xxi, 16; Witchcraft, xxii, 18; Idolatry, xxii, 20, Compounding holy ointment, xxii, 33; Working on the Sabbath, xxxi, 16; Eating the fat of sacrifices, Leviticus vii, 29; Eating any manner of blood, vii, 27; Eating a sacrifice of peace offering, xix, 8; Going after familiar spirits, xx, 6; Blasphemy, xxiv, 16.

CHRISTIANITY IN SOUTH AMERICA.

As one of the first cares of the Spanish sovereigns was to propagate the Catholic faith in their immense provinces, they established tribunals of the Inquisition successively in the cities of Mexico, Lima, and Cartagena. But in the latter part of the reign of Charles IV. this formidable tribunal was not much feared. Its influence was exercised chiefly to watch and keep out of the country all free literary productions, by them styled philosophical books. In the year 1826 a bookseller sent from New York to Cartagena various boxes of valuable Spanish books. Among them were some copies of Voltaire's famous Dictionnaire Philosophique. The boxes were opened, and by the influence of some priests the greater part of the books, among which was the dictionary. were refused admittance, and sent back to New York. I have this fact from the bookseller himself.—Ducoudray Holstein's "Memoirs of Bolivar."

ST. JAMES ON TRIAL.

It is claimed that all civil law is based upon the Bible. Every Christian minister makes that statement, and regards it as an argument in favor of retaining the Bible in the public schools and making it the supreme law of the land. We notice, however, that when civil law and so-called divine law come in conflict, the Bible is thrown out. A case in point is at hand. Some days since a man was arrested in Brooklyn, N.Y., charged with having caused the death of his child through neglect. He was a firm believer in the prayer cure, and had refused to administer to his sick child the medicines prescribed for her relief. The laws of New York make such neglect a criminal offence, and, when death results, attach the penalty of manslaughter. But when the accused was brought into court he pleaded the duty he owed to the higher law which he found in the Epistle of St. James, as follows: "Is any sick among you? Let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up, and if he have committed sins they shall be forgiven him."

Now, what do the Christian judges intend to do about this case? The "divine" law prescribes one thing, and the civil law another. It is of course very easy to tell what ought to be done. The man should be set at liberty and informed that he is merely a victim of popular religious superstition. He should be instructed that the epistle of James was written by some fanatic who was governed by his imagination instead of his knowledge. All the judges, lawyers, and most of the ministers know that the prayer of faith will not heal anybody who is really sick. It may in some cases quiet the nerves of the one who does the praying, but it can have no permanent effect on another person. Common sense teaches all but religious people that the healing of sickness requires the administering of such material remedies as experience with similar cases has shown to be efficacious; and intelligent clergymen adopt this method until health is restored, when they again begin preaching the efficacy of prayer, which they have not sufficient faith in to give it a trial in their own cases. This incongruity is so conspicuous that everybody ought to be able to see it. Probably the fact that it is an every-day occurrence is the reason why it does not excite comment. People long habituated to humbugs accept them at last as truths until they reach the point of putting them in practice, when, unless fanaticism has supervened, as in the case of the Brooklyn man, they quietly ignore their faith and rely upon knowledge and experience.

The Brooklyn father who permitted his daughter to die for want of medical treatment has acted consistently with his belief; and for a Christian community to condemn him would be like a father administering liquor to a child and then punishing him for being intoxicated. In this case it is not the poor fanatic but the Christian religion that is on trial.—Freethought.

THOSE BOYS.

"Did I not give you a flogging the other day?" said a schoolmaster to a trembling boy. "Yes, sir," answered the boy. "Well, what do the Scriptures say upon the subject?" "I don't know, sir," said the boy; "except it is, 'It's more blessed to give than to receive'"

"You were a nice, quiet little boy in Sunday school this morning, Bobby," said the minister. "I was very much pleased." "Yes," replied Bobby, "pa said that if I'd behave myself in Sunday school I needn't go to church."

A Sunday School teacher told his infants to ask any questions they had in their minds, and a little one asked, "When is the circus coming?"

Teacher: "Now, children, I am going to tell you about the prophet Daniel, who, though cast into a den of lions——" New scholar: "Have you only just got onto that here?"

Old lady (to wicked little boys who are playing marbles on Sunday): "Little boys. what are you playing marbles on Sunday for?" Little boys: "We're playing for keeps."

Willie was on a visit to his aunt in the country. It was bedtime, and he had gone upstairs to the little room set apart for him. "Auntie," he called out, "where's the prayer-rug?" "The prayer-rug, Willie? Isn't the carpet good enough?" "Not by a jugful. The best people all use prayer-rugs. If you haven't got any, I'll just be doggoned if I'm going to say my prayers to-night, that's all!"

Sunday-School Superintendent: "I am pained to learn that two of the little boys of the school have absented themselves to-day, in order to go fishing. You wouldn't go, would you, Master Norton?" Master Norton: "No, sir." Sunday-school Superintendent: "Now, tell the rest of the scholars why you wouldn't go fishing Sunday." Master Norton; "'Cause it's too cold yet to catch anything."

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY MEETINGS.

LONDON.

Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, E.C., 7, Mrs. Annie Besant, "The Inspiration of the Bible: what is it?"

Ball's Pond Secular Hall, 86 Newington Green Road, N., 7, Mr. A. T. Dipper, "Modern Moralists."

Battersea—The Shed of Truth, Prince of Wales's Road, 7.30 Dr. A. Vickery, "Over Population and its Remedies. Small families versus Strikes."

Camberwell—61 New Church Road, S.E., 7.30, J. B. Coppock, "The Age of the Earth."

Claremont Hall, 7, Sam Standring, "Jehovah, the God of the Jews."

Edmonton Assembly Rooms, Silver Street, 7, Mr. L Keen, "Suffer Little Children," etc.

Milton Hall, Kentish Town Road, N.W., 7.30, Mr. G. W. Foote, "An Hour with the Devil."

Old Southgate—Cromwell Hall, 7, Mr. Snow, "A Few Plain Words to Working Men."

Westminster—Liberal and Radical Club, Chapter Street, 7, Mr. F. Millar, "The Struggle for Existence."

Wood Green—Jolly Butchers' Hill, 11, Mr. S. Standring, "Christ on the Labor Question."

Woolwich—"Sussex Arms," Assembly Room, 60 Plumstead Road, 7.30, Mr. E. Calvert, "The Philosophy of Materialism."

COUNTRY.

Birmingham—Baskerville Hall, Crescent, 11, Mr. J. Hooper, "Remarkable Dreams of Holy Men:" 7, "Why Should an Atheist Fear to Die?"

Glasgow—Ramshorn Hall, 122 Ingram Street, 6.30, Mr. John Gentles, "The Moon Theory."

Huddersfield — Littlewood's Buildings, Upperhead Row, Mr. R. Lan, F.G.S., 3, "The Work that has been done by Glaciers and Icebergs in Former Ages of the World;" 6.30, "How the Rocks which contain Coal Were Formed."

Liverpool—Camden Hall, Camden Street, 8, Discussion Class, "The Duty of the Rich to the Poor," Mr. Beer to open; 7, Mr. Doeg, "A Reply to Dr. Sexton."

Manchester—Rusholme Road, Oxford Road, 6.30, Mr. Ernest Evans, "Science in the Service of Man."

Newcastle-on-Tyne—4 Hall's Court, Newgate Street, 11, Important meeting of Sunday Music League: Wednesday, 7.45, Mr. Penny will read a paper on the "Advantages Accruing from a Knowledge of the Elements of Chemistry."

Nottingham — Secular Hall, Beck Street, 7, Mr J. Hyder, "The Case against Landlordism."

South Shields—Captain Duncan's Navigation Schools, King Street, 7, Mr. S. M. Peacock, "The Technical Instruction Act, 1889: Its Object and Scope."

LECTURERS' ENGAGEMENTS.

MR. A. B. MOSS, 44 Credon Road, London, S.E.—March 2, Woolwich; 23, Milton Hall; 30, Woolwich. April 6 (morning), Kingsland Green (evening), Ball's Pond; 13, Camberwell. May 18 (morning), Clerkenwell Green, (evening), Ball's Pond; 25, Regent's Park.

TOLEMAN-GARNER, 8 Heyworth Street, Stratford, London, E.—Feb. 23, Woolwich. March 9, Woolwich; 16 (morning), West Ham; 23, Woolwich: 30, Westminster. May 11, Clerkenwell Green; 18, Regent's Park.

MR. JAMES HOOPER, 11 Upper Eldon Street, Sneinton, Nottingham.—Feb. 16, Birmingham.

E. STANLEY JONES, 53 Park Street, Toxteth, Liverpool—Feb. 23, Huddersfield.

PROGRESSIVE PUBLISHING CO.'S LIST.

All orders to be sent, with remittance, to R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C. Rate of postage—Orders under 3d., one halfpenny; orders under 6d. one penny. Orders over 6d. post free.

G. W. FOOTE.

	s.	d.
PRISONER FOR BLASPHEMY. Cloth ... ... A Full History of his Three Trials and Twelve Months' Imprisonment. Copies in paper covers, soiled, 6d.	2	6
IS SOCIALISM SOUND? ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant.	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
CHRISTIANITY AND SECULARISM ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. In paper covers.	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth	1	6
INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS ... ... Second edition, enlarged.	0	3
Superior edition, in cloth	1	3
DARWIN ON GOD	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0

Ancestry—Darwin's Grandfather—Darwin's Father—Darwin's Early Piety—Almost a Clergyman—On Board the "Beagle"—Settling at Down—Death and Burial—Purpose of Pamphlet—Some Objections—Darwin Abandons Christianity—Deism—Creation—Origin of Life—Origin of Man—Animism—A Personal God—Design—Divine Beneficence—Religion and Morality—Agnosticism and Atheism.

DEFENCE OF FREE SPEECH ... ... Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes.	0	4
LETTERS TO JESUS CHRIST	0	1
PHILOSOPHY OF SECULARISM	0	2
THE BIBLE GOD	0	2
THE FOLLY OF PRAYER	0	2
CHRISTIANITY AND PROGRESS ... ... A Reply to Mr. Gladstone.	0	2
WHAT WAS CHRIST? ... ... A Reply to J. S. Mill.	0	1
THE DYING ATHEIST. A Story	0	1
WAS JESUS INSANE? ... ... A searching inquiry into the mental condition of the Prophet of Nazareth.	0	2
THE SHADOW OF THE SWORD ... ... A moral and statistical Essay on War.	0	2
ROYAL PAUPERS ... ... Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty.	0	2
BIBLE HEROES—First Series, in elegant wrapper ... (1) Mr. Adam, (2) Captain Noah, (3) Father Abraham, (4) Juggling Jacob, (5) Master Joseph, (6) Joseph's Brethren, (7) Holy Moses I., (8) Holy Moses II., (9) Parson Aaron, (10) General Joshua, (11) Jephthah and Co., (12) Professor Samson. One Penny each singly.	1	0
BIBLE HEROES—Second Series, in elegant wrapper... (13) Prophet Samuel, (14) King Saul, (15) Saint David I., (16) Saint David II., (17) Sultan Solomon, (18) Poor Job, (19) Hairy Elijah (20) Bald Elisha, (21) General Jehu, (22) Doctor Daniel, (23) The Prophets (Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Hosea); (24) St. Peter, (25) St. Paul	1	0
MRS. BESANT'S THEOSOPHY ... ... A Candid Criticism.	0	2
THEOSOPHY AND SECULARISM.. ... ... A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant.	0	2
THE NEW CAGLIOSTRO ... ... An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky.	0	2

COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

MISTAKES OF MOSES	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth ... ... Only Complete Edition published in England	1	6
DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT ... ... Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy.	0	6
REPLY TO GLADSTONE ... ... With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler.	0	4
ROME OR REASON? Reply to Cardinal Manning	0	2
FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Rev. Dr. Field ...	0	2
GOD AND MAN. Second Reply to Dr. Field	0	2
THE DYING CREED	0	4
THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH	0	2
THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION ... ... A Discussion with Hon. F. D. Courdert and Gov. S. L. Woodford.	0	2
ART AND MORALITY	0	2
DO I BLASPHEME?	0	2
THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE	0	2
THE GREAT MISTAKE	0	1
LIVE TOPICS		1
MYTH AND MIRACLE		1
REAL BLASPHEMY	0	1
SOCIAL SALVATION		2

G. W. FOOTE and J. M. WHEELER.

CRIMES OF CHRISTIANITY. Vol. I. Cloth ... Hundred of exact References to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.	2	6
THE JEWISH LIFE OF CHRIST ... ... With voluminous footnotes. An extraordinary work.	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0

G. W. FOOTE and W. P. BALL.

BIBLE HANDBOOK FOR FREETHINKERS AND INQUIRING CHRISTIANS	1	4
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
Sold also in separate parts as follows—
1. Bible Contradictions ... ... The Contradictions are printed in parallel columns.	0	4
2. Bible Absurdities ... ... All the chief Absurdities from Genesis to Revelation, conveniently and strikingly arranged, with appropriate headlines, giving the point of each absurdity in a sentence.	0	4
3. Bible Atrocities ... ... Containing all the godly wickedness from Genesis to Revelation. Each infamy has a separate headline for easy reference	0	4
4. Bible Immoralities, Indecencies, Obscenities, Broken Promises, and Unfulfilled Prophecies ...	0	4

J. M. WHEELER.

LETTERS FROM HEAVEN	0	1
LETTERS FROM HELL	0	1

DR. E. B. AVELING.

DARWIN MADE EASY. 44pp., cloth .. ... Best Popular Exposition of Darwinism extant.	1	0

GIORDANO BRUNO.

Picture of the Statue of Rome	0	2
Post free in Lett's case	0	3

Digitized by Google

READY NEXT WEEK.

LETTERS TO THE CLERGY

FIRST SERIES.

1.—CREATION
To the Bishop of Carlisle.

2.—THE BELIEVING THIEF
To the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

3.—THE ATONEMENT
To the Bishop of Peterborough.

4.—OLD TESTAMENT MORALITY
To the Rev. E. R. Conder, D.D.

5.—INSPIRATION
To the Rev. R. F. Horton, M.A.

6.—CREDENTIALS OF THE GOSPEL
To the Rev. Prof. J. A. Beet.

7.—MIRACLES
To the Rev. Brownlow Maitland, M.A.

8.—PRAYER
To the Rev. T. Teignmouth Shore, M.A.

By G. W. FOOTE.

128pp., in Wrapper. ONE SHILLING.

2d. THE IMPOSSIBLE CREED 2d.

An Open Letter to the
BISHOP OF PETERBOROUGH.
BY
G. W. FOOTE.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE

AN AGNOSTIC'S VIEW.

By COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

TWOPENCE. Reprinted Verbatim from the "North American Review." TWOPENCE.

Every Freethinker, Radical or Socialist should read it and circulate it amongst his friends.

1d. A LIE IN FIVE CHAPTERS? 1d.

THE
REV. HUGH PRICE HUGHES'S
CONVERTED ATHEIST
By G. W. FOOTE.

Should be circulated by Freethinkers who desire to see this pious fraud exposed as widely as possible.

W. J. Rendell's
"WIFE'S FRIEND."

Recommended in "Law of Population," and "Wife's Hand Book." Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell Street Clerkenwell, and supplied per post, 2s. dozen. For particulars of this Malthusian discovery send stamped envelope. Higginson's Syringe, with vertical and reverse current, 3s. 6d. and 4s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. All other Malthusian Appliances. All prices post free.

HARTNOLL,
ENGLISH AND FOREIGN CHEMIST,
1A PICCADILLY
(Under the London Pavilion Music Hall),
LONDON, W.
Hartnoll's Specialities, Appliances and Medicated Preparations are world-renowned.
Spiral, Douche and Latest Improved Syringes.
ESTABLISHED OVER 50 YEARS.

IRETON'S
INDELIBLE JET BLACK MARKING INK
(NO HEATING REQUIRED)
For Rubber Stamps, Stencil, Type or Pen.
PRICE 6d. 1/- and 2/6 per Bottle.
Sample bottle 4d. post free.
Dyed with Ireton's Ink, no hope of ever changing my Color.
IRETON & Co., 92, Gracechurch St., LONDON, E.C.
The largest makers of Rubber Stamps.
Special terms to the Trade.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. VOL. I.
By Dr. T. R. ALLINSON,
4 SPANISH PLACE, MANCHESTER SQUARE, LONDON, W.
Of the Author, for Postal Order for 1s 2d.
It contains Articles on: Management of Infancy; Health; Longevity; The Teeth; Brown Bread; Bread Making; Food, Vegetarianism; Tobacco; The Drink Question; Fruit; Fresh Air; Exercise; Bathing; Light; Holidays; &c. Also the cause and cure of Disease; Constipation; Biliousness; Eczema; Blackheads and Pimples; Nervousness; Coughs and Colds; Chest Complaints; Deafness; Thread Worms; Long Worms; Tape Worms; The Itch, &c.

MANCHESTER BRANCH OF THE N.S.S.,
Rusholme Road, Oxford Road All saints.
On March 30th and 31st
A SALE OF WORK will be held for the purpose of Re-Furnishing the Hall with more comfortable Seats. Donations, either in money or articles, will be thankfully received by the Committee or Secretary, A. Hemingway, 25 Higher Chatham Street, C.-on-M., Manchester.

THE BIBLE & DARWINISM. 6d
By ARTHUR B. MOSS.
Same Author—
GOD'S FAVORITES ... ... 6d.
DESIGN AND NATURAL SELECTION ... 1d.
MAN AND LOWER ANIMALS ... ... 1d.
Ready in a few weeks a New Work by Arthur B. Moss entitled THE BIBLE AND EVOLUTION, handsomely bound in cloth, 2s. 6d. Should be read by people of every shade of belief and disbelief. Argument, ridicule, wit, and common sense abound in every page. Order at once. Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court; Progressive Publishing Co.; or of the author.

TO MARRIED PEOPLE
Or Those Contemplating Marriage.
Send 1d. Stamp to
DAVIES, CHEMIST, 101 PARK LANE, LEEDS,
And you'll receive an Illustrated List of most useful Malthusian Appliances by return of post.

THE FAMILY LIMIT,
OR,
THE QUININE TABLOID,
1s. 6d. per doz. post free.
For further Particulars send stamped directed envelope to
A. OSS, 36 Upper P rk Street,
ISLINGTON, LONDON, N.

GRATIS.

AN ILLUSTRATED 16-PAGE PAMPHLET, containing extracts from the utterances of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Manchester; the Revs T. R. Malthus, A. E. Whatham, M. J. Savage, Leonard Dawson, —Lawton, H. R. Haweis; the following Doctors—Allbutt, Allinson, Armstrong, Drysdale, Pye Chavasse, E. B. Foote, Nicholls, Wilder, Raciborski, Napheys and Reamy. Also Plato, Aristotle, Sismondi, Huxley, Mill, and numerous others. Should be read by every married and marriageable person. Sent on receipt of stamped addressed envelope by J. R. HOLMES, Hanney, Wantage, Berks.
TESTIMONIALS (Extracts from).
"The one you sent me some months since is
Quite Worn Out
with being lent to so many friends."
"Some of us have paid five shillings for less than one-tenth of the information."

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE-2s. 6d. each, upper or lower set, £1. Best quality, 4s. each, upper or lower, £2, completed in four hours when required, repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18c. gold 15s.; stopping, 2s. 6d. extraction, 1s. painless by gas, 5s.

Printed and Published by G. W. Foote, at 28 Stonecutter Street Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

Vol. X.—No. 8.] SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1890. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE NATIONAL SECULAR SOCIETY.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,—You have conferred upon me a great honor and laid upon me a heavy duty. I thank you for the one and I will try to fulfil the other.

The Presidency of your Society is a post of which any man might be proud. You are banded together, not for the promotion of merely material interests, but for the spread of ideas. You aim at moulding opinion, which in the long run determines everything else. You strive to infuse into society those great, subtle, and far-reaching principles, which are the source of all durable progress. And as the attachment to leaders is always in proportion to the depth of the interests they espouse, you show a striking affection for those who serve your cause loyally; above all, for the one whom you appoint the chief director of your forces, who must undertake the weightiest labors and bear the worst brunt of danger.

Mr. Bradlaugh has been a mighty leader, and it is hard for any man to follow him. But I will do my best, and in turn I shall claim your indulgence. Do not expect too much from me. The heroic period of Freethought is well-nigh over. Wars are no longer decided by single-handed combat. Every one of us must do his share of the work, and we must be content to toil steadily like good husbandmen, who plough the ground, sow the seed, and finally reap the harvest.

Happily Mr. Bradlaugh has promised to advise me in all legal difficulties, and to give me at any time the benefit of his long and varied experience. For this I am very grateful, and it will give you an added sense of security.

Every leader of a movement has his ideas and tries to realise them. I shall endeavor to carry out the projects I have long cherished. Their character may be inferred from the work of the Organisation Committee, appointed at the last Conference, and of which I have been chairman. It is to organisation, chiefly, that we must now look for the success of our movement.

But I do not intend to be hasty. Innovations must be made unless a Society is to stagnate and decay, but they should be made gently. One foot should be planted firmly before the other is lifted. Eager spirits must have a fresh prospect, yet the moderate must not be alarmed, nor the very laggards frightened away. An army has its pioneers, its main body, its rear, and even its stragglers, all moving forward to the self-same goal.

I have no intention of being pig-headed. I do not believe I have any such disposition. I like firmness, but I dislike arbitrariness and despotic methods. My ear will be open to advice. Everyone who has an honest complaint to make, or a new idea to broach, will find me a ready listener. But I must be pardoned if I act upon my own judgment where I am solely responsible. My office, it will be remembered, is a constitutional one; I am limited by the rules of the Society and the decisions of its Executive; and it is only within a very definite limit that I have a special power.

Pardon me for not saying much at this moment. For many reasons I cannot present you with an elaborate programme. What I desire to see carried out will be proposed gradually; and at my age, and with my experience, I am too wary to map out a quantity of work that I may never be able to accomplish. Besides, I am but a temporary president as yet, being only elected until your annual Conference in May. Should you re-elect me, I shall then venture to indicate what, in my opinion, our Society should attempt in the immediate future.

There is one matter, however, which demands your prompt attention. You have generously responded to Mr. Bradlaugh's appeal, and cancelled the bond under which he paid five guineas per month into the General Fund. This will involve a serious diminution of your financial resources, and steps should be taken at once to repair the loss. At the next meeting of your Executive, a few days hence, I shall submit a proposal to that effect, with a practical scheme which I trust will not only sustain but increase the annual income of the Society.

And now, ladies and gentleman, I must conclude with a personal observation. I have served the Freethought party for more than twenty years, in various degrees, and I dare say with various success; and now, at the age of forty, I am rewarded with the highest mark of your esteem. I am past the heats and effervescences of youth, but not old enough to be useless. My life is wholly devoted to your cause. Whatever abilities I possess are consecrated to its service. As long as I may I shall work with pen and tongue, and on practical committees, for the welfare of your Society and the propagation of its principles. That is all I promise, and that I will try to fulfil. The rest must be left to time and destiny.

Yours faithfully,

G. W. FOOTE.

Digitized by Google

CAGLIOSTRO.—II.

BELIEVERS in alchemy, the transmutation of metals, the philosopher's stone, the elixir of life, etc., are by no means extinct, and at the end of last century they appear to have been pretty numerous. Cagliostro was an adept in the charlatan's art of changing his own brass into gold, and in his pretences to be able to confer wealth and long life to others found numerous dupes. Alchemistical processes were, however, tedious and costly. Advances were required from believers before the magnum opus could be completed. Art is long and time fleeting. When patrons got too impatient for results, Cagliostro, to avoid their reproaches, sought fresh clients in another country, sometimes passing for an Italian nobleman, at others for a Prussian officer of high rank. We hear of him at Naples in 1773 and afterwards at Barcelona, where Secchi, the surgeon, affirms he decorated the pillory of the city. Cagliostro had many strings to his bow. For ladies he had "Beautifying Water"; for men canthardic "Wine of Egypt," capable of restoring youthful vigor to the old. In this pretence he has admirably seconded by the fair Lorenza, who, only about twenty, declared she was sixty and had a son a veteran in the Dutch service.

It was a second visit to England that laid the foundation of Cagliostro's future greatness. An English Life of the Count Cagliostro, dedicated in 1787, when he was in the heyday of his fortunes, to Madame la Comtesse, and written in the interests of the charlatan, gives an account of his misfortunes in London. It appears that through one Madame Blavary he got associated with gamblers and blacklegs, who robbed him and made him glad to return to the Continent. In England, however, he acquired a manuscript on Egyptian Freemasonry said to be by one George Coston. Here were the elements of mummery, mystification and lofty pretence in which the soul of Balsamo delighted. He determined to be the head of a new sect, the founder of a fresh faith. From the Polish Jew who called himself the "Count St. Germain," (that conte pour rire, as Voltaire wittily called the pretender to immortality who, like Cagliostro, asserted he lived at the time of Jesus Christ); from J. F. Borri, Bombastes Paracelsus, and others he acquired a theosophic jargon, such a deal of skimble skamble stuff as can only be equalled in the book of Dzyan. Mr. W. E. A. Axon, the writer in the Dublin University Magazine, says "He had an abridgement of Egyptian masonry, ready for his disciples, as curt and as decisive as the creed of Mohammed. 'Live as you please, and only believe in me and in Egyptian Masonry.'" The initiates of this higher grade of masonry, which was said to be founded, not by Egyptians but by Enoch and Elias, were supposed to be on the path both of moral and physical regeneration. The former appears to have implied getting beyond human law and conventionally, while the latter power, as Carlyle inimitably puts it, was "not to be accomplished without a forty days course of medicine, purgation, sweating baths, fainting fits, soot, dust, phlebotomy, starvation, and desperation, more perhaps than it is all worth." In admitting a candidate to Egyptian Masonry this formula was used:—"In virtue of the power which I have received from the Grand Cophte [Cagliostro], the founder of our order, and by the particular grace of God, I hereby confer upon you the honor of being admitted into our lodge, in the names of Helios, Mené, Tetragammation."

The Egyptian Order was, indeed, a superior grade of Freemasonry in that it admitted ladies to the order. This department, under the presidency of Lorenza, the Grand Cophtess, was apparently the most popular. At Paris many ladies of high rank joined the "Isis" lodge. The fair neophytes were required to contribute each the sum of one hundred louis, to abstain from carnal intercourse, and to give "the blindest submission to the rules and codes of our ritual, such as they may be communicated to me by the Grand Mistress." The ceremonies, as described by Figuier from the Essai sur les Illuminis of the Marquis Du Luchet, were highly indecent. The ladies were by the example of the high priestess induced to disrobe until they were "as naked as truth itself."

Cagliostro seems to have taken a genuine delight in his business of charlatanry and to have fooled his dupes to the top of their bent. He amassed a deal of money, which he spent lavishly, and his renown spread through every country in Europe. In Germany, he for a time duped the mystical Countess Elise von der Recke by his pretended evocation of spirits, for which he had been counted among the originators of modern spiritism, but that fair saint came to see through him and has left her testimony to his roguery. In Russia, the supposed restoring of a nobleman's infant to health, brought him wealth and fortune, but the combined result of an amour between Lorenza and Prince Potemkin, prime minster and favorite of the Empress Catherine, and the discovery that the nobleman's child had been apparently changed, caused them to depart hastily with immense spoil towards the German frontier. "Scarcely is he gone," says Carlyle, "till the Prussian Ambassador appears with a complaint that he has falsely assumed the Prussian uniform at Rome; the Spanish Ambassador, with a still graver complaint, that he has forged bills at Cadiz. However, he is safe over the marches; let them complain their fill."

In Poland Cagliostro had the fortune to meet a prince who wished to obtain command of a devil. Cagliostro puffed him up for a long while with expectations of gratifying this laudable ambition, and actually procured presents from him to the amount of several thousand crowns. Being exposed by Count Moczinski, Cagliostro came westward and at Strassburg made great noise with his wondrous cures and bounty to the poor. Among his disciples Prince Cardinal de Rohan believed with a robust faith that he could make both gold and diamonds. The cardinal's credulity led to his own ruin and that of Cagliostro. Both seemed to have been deftly duped by the Countess La Motte in the famous matter of the Diamond Necklace, that farcical tragi-comedy so admirably described by Carlyle. Cagliostro and his fair Countess were both landed in the Bastille, and even when acquitted of having stolen the necklace, which Countess La Motte insinuated had been obtained for the chemical experiments of Cagliostro, were ordered summarily out of France (May 31, 1786). It was not long before the rascal's whirling fortunes culminated in a rapid descent. Induced by his wife to visit Rome, he attempted there to found a lodge of Egyptian masonry, was betrayed by one of his associates, arrested by an officer (Dec. 2, 1879), and lodged in the Castle of St. Angelo. Here, if we may believe the officers of the Inquisition, he and his wife both confessed. He was reconciled to the Church under the promise of being saved from the capital forfeit. Madame Blavatsky tells a curious story how a mysterious stranger called at the Vatican, sent not his name but a word to the Pope and was instantly admitted. As soon as he departed, the sentence on Cagliostro was commuted from death to imprisonment. As the lady gives no authority for this tale, it only suggests that the publisher knew his business who offered her a handsome sum to write romances.

Cagliostro died in the prison of St. Leo, Aug. 26, 1795. Madame Blavatsky seeks to throw doubt upon this, and hints that he may still be living. If the common argument that all men are mortal fails in the case of such a consummate adept as Cagliostro, there is another argument that should have force with Theosophists. Death is necessary for re-incarnation. As good Buddhist women expect to become men in another life, so the great magician may, in these latter days, have changed his sex. But for the career of Cagliostro should we have had the new Theosophy?

Digitized by Google

J. M. WHEELER.

WHY I LEFT THE CHURCH.

BY THE EX-REV. H. O. PENTECOST.

From the "Truthseeker" Annual.

(Continued from last week.)

I am not now discussing whether Jesus or the church is right. I merely say that my first grievance against the church at a time when I was a firm believer in the divinity of Jesus, was that while she worships him she does not obey him, she does not try to obey him; she openly and scandalously opposes his teaching and manner of life as those of what we now call a "crank." Thus, while I was in the church, I saw what a shameless humbug she is as an organised institution. I saw that everything that Jesus said to and against the loathsome hypocrites of his day—the scribes and Pharisees—is applicable, in the last detail, to those persons—popes, archbishops, bishops, monseigneurs, ministers, vestrymen, elders, deacons, trustees—who manage the machinery of the church to-day. I saw that all the priests and ministers as a class (among whom there are noble exceptions, in their way) are time-servers, place-hunters and politicians. I saw that all gatherings of the church for legislative purposes—all councils and conventions—are exactly like similar civil gatherings; doctrines being formulated as are planks in a political platform, on the cowardly compromise plan, and men being elected or appointed to office on the same principles that govern in the trickiest political primaries or conventions.

I do not go into the question of motives here. I only report the facts. I do not say what these church dignitaries mean to do. I only say what they do. I do not say they mean to be hypocrites, I only say they are hypocrites. They pretend to love and to at least try to obey Jesus, but they do neither.

All this became clear in my mind while I was still a firm believer in the divinity of Jesus and the inspiration of the Bible, and the effect was to drive me to certain logical conclusions, which banged me at first against the solid wall of supernaturalism with all its hardness and horror, and then flung me, by a great and fortunate rebound, out into the boundless plains of Rationalism, where, at present, I enjoy the peculiar satisfaction of knowing that I am ignorant of a lot of things that I used to think I knew.

What I mean is, that when I became convinced that the church as an organisation is wrong, I determined to find the right road if I could. I started with the premise that the Bible is the word of God, and therefore must be true from end to end. It is not a book from which we may pick and choose. Historically, for example, if one event it relates is true they all must be. The withered fig-tree, the demon-dazed pigs, the arrested sun—all these and more must be swallowed as the great fish swallowed Jonah, and not be spewed forth, as Jonah was, because they do not comport with facts as things now go. I still think this is a correct premise. If the Bible, as the creeds say, is the word of God and "the only infallible guide of faith and practice," it must be true, and it must mean what it says from end to end. Any other conclusion is logically absurd.

Well, I determined to test the truthfulness of the book, not as a doubter, but as a believer. I picked out certain promises concerning the healing of physical infirmities, and as Gideon laid his fleece before Jehovah, I went upon my knees before the God in whom I believed and held up those promises before him for days and weeks fully expecting them to be honored. The promises are unequivocal and unqualified, and I was intensely in earnest. It is something for many of the readers of this Annual to laugh about, but those weeks and months when I put the Bible to the test became weeks and months of mental agony to me, during which sleep fled from my eyes and flesh shrunk from my bones.

When nothing happened, as of course nothing did, the doubt that may have been the unconscious motive of my testing work (as one becomes more attentive to his sweetheart when he unconsciously knows that he is beginning to love her less) began to grow and fret me. I then began to read. I read Robertson Smith, the Age of Reason, all of Colonel Ingersoll's published writings that I could find, Volney's Ruins, and a lot of works of that sort. But I wanted to get at the root of the matter. I read James Freeman Clarke's Ten Great Religions, The Bible for Learners, and a number of works of the Dutch school, some of them many times, and a lot of other books along that line that I need not mention particularly, and some of which I have at this moment forgotten. But I wanted to go clear down to the bottom. I read Clodd's Childhood of the World, Childhood of Religion, Birth and Growth of Myth. I went into the whole subject of man's early thinking, reading a class of books of which Dorman's Origin of Primitive Superstitions and Tylor's Early History of Mankind and Primitive Culture are splendid examples. It need not be said, I hope, that I read Darwin, Spencer, Huxley and their interpreters. I dug down to the roots of things through five or six years of such mental pains and anguish as I hope to spare my children. To pull out a religion from a man who has been a thorough believer is incalculably more wrenching and tearing than the pulling of his teeth.

The result of all this reading, studying and thinking was that the whole process of religion planting, growing and training was laid bare before me, and I saw, as in the fair sunlight, that man has made all his religions just as he has made everything else that he has.

Of course it was a long time before I could bring myself to admit that there is not the slightest evidence of the existence of a God or of the likelihood of a future life—that there is no evidence of the existence of life or "spirit" (whatever that may be) except in apparently integral conjunction with matter, but having determined to go to the bottom of the subject when I once started, I could not honestly stop until I stood upon the outer edge of matter, and was obliged to declare that I could see neither God nor soul beyond.

This failure to find God and the way to a future life scared me for a time. But while I was agitated upon the religious question I also became interested to discover the reason why some men are political rulers and others are ruled; why I am compelled to give up my money to the politicians whether I wish to or not; why policemen prevent me from doing many things that I might do without injuring anybody else; why some persons who never do any work are fabulously rich and those who work all the time when they are not asleep are horribly poor. In studying this question of the political enslavement of the minority by the majority and the industrial enslavement of the majority by the minority, I discovered how neither of these things could be done except by the use of the belief in God and a future life. I then saw that whether there is any God or not, and whether there is any future life or not, it is a very unfortunate thing for the world that anybody believes there is.

I do not know whether it would be good for us to have a God or not, but I think not. I do not know whether it would be good for us to live after death or not, but I am inclined to think not. But I do know that kings, emperors, czars, presidents, popes and priests could not sit upon their tyrannical and unjust thrones another year if all the people would stop believing in God and a future life. Those two beliefs for the benumbing of the intellect, and a skilful use of clubs, guns, prisons and gallowses for the subduing of the body, form the groundwork upon which every tyranny over the mind and oppressive robbery of the poor are established.

Every ruler on earth to-day, from the cruel Czar to the pale Presbyterian in the White House, occupies his position because the people have been humbugged into the belief that it is the will of God that he should be where he is. And the great mass of poor people are kept poor because petticoated liars and white-necktied deceivers have succeeded in making them believe that it is God's will that they should be poor, and that if they will quietly submit to being robbed on earth they will, by and bye, enjoy equal privileges with the robbers in heaven—both saved by grace. A prominent Newark, N.J., clergyman said not long ago in his pulpit to a congregation of rich and well-to-do persons that it would never do to lose faith in immortality, because that belief is necessary to keep the poor quiet and contented. He told the truth. The idea of God and the belief in a future life are two doctrines that stand squarely across the road of progress, and the human race will never be truly civilised until they are eradicated from the mind. We are not here to worship a hypothetical God, but to study the facts of the universe. We are not here to pray for help, but to help ourselves. We are not here to hope for another life, but to use this one for our highest happiness, which will be found in promoting the happiness of others.

Digitized by Google

This is the outline of the story of my escape from orthodoxy, told in this personal. face-to-face fashion, because the editor of the Annual thought it would be most acceptable in that form. It has been a very interesting and exciting journey for me—as from the depths of a mine full of pinchbeck into sunlight, pure air, green fields and all that makes life worth living.

I am sometimes asked the question if I am as happy now as when I was in the church. Yes; incalculably happier. Why should I not be? I am FREE! My mind works now. My morals are better, because springing from higher motives. Happier? Yes. But not happy. No thinking person who cares for his fellows can be happy while a political ruler or religious guide remains on earth. Government by force and superstition are incompatible with happiness. Poverty and happiness cannot exist in the same world. No one ought to be happy while there is a policeman or a priest, a prison, a poorhouse, or a church on earth.

ACID DROPS.

Canon Talbot—the gentleman who declined to discus with Mr. Foote or any other leading Freethinker—has been treating the Tyneside folk to a number of amazing lectures; and after reading reports in the local press we can quite appreciate his aversion to a public debate. One of his lectures was on "The Bible and Science," and Canon Talbot made it evident that he sits upon the fence with a leg on each side. He does not deny that the "letter" of Genesis is queer in the light of modern science, but he says that the "spirit" of Genesis is in harmony with all our discoveries. On the oher hand, it would be foolish to expect the writers of the Bible to be abreast with the scientific knowledge of to-day. Precisely so! But is it not just as foolish to expect them to be abreast with the morality of to-day?

Canon Talbot's position is this. God taught the Jews morality but he couldn't teach them science. Our position is that God taught them neither the one nor the other.

"A Churchman" writes to the Newcastle Chronicle that Canon Talbot is really giving up the inspiration of the Bible. "I remember," says the writer, "that, in a letter sent to the press, he stated that if the Secularists would invite him to lecture to them, they would find there was very little difference between them. Truly he is right, for if his lecture means anything, it means conceding every point of sceptical attack."

"A Churchman" is answered by a "beneficed English clergyman of twenty-four years' standing." He allows that the Bible abounds with mistakes, but for all that we have in it "a heavenly treasure in an earthen vessel." Well, the earthen vessel is pretty obvious. The "heavenly treasure" is more obscure. Perhaps the "advanced clergy" will be good enough to tell us where the clay ends and the treasure begins; or, better still, smelt down the lot, and give us the treasure for weighing and testing.

Sarah Bernhardt's impersonation of Joan of Arc has led to a revival of the controversies that surround that famous name. M. Ernest Lesigne, a French Positivist, has written a book entitled Fin d'une Legende, end of a legend, with a view of proving that Joan of Arc was but a very insignificant factor in the expulsion of the English from France. M. Lesigne must be a very sanguine man if he fancies legends will evaporate simply because shown not to have sufficient evidence. Their very life consists in appealing to sentiment instead of to reason. His book, like Dr. Milner's End of Controversy, is likely to prove the beginning of a new controversy.

Devout Hindus of Madras have had a shock to their faith. The High Priest of the Temple of Tripati has been convicted of stealing certain treasure committed to his holy keeping. The true theory of religion is everywhere the same (1) The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof. (2) The Lord has given the dominion of the earth to his saints. (3) We are the saints.

After Sunday's meeting at the Hall of Science a brief report of the proceedings was left by Mr. Wheeler at the offices of the five principal daily papers—the Times, Daily News, Standard, Chronicle, and Telegraph. But his trouble was nearly wasted. Only one of the papers inserted the paragraph.

Freethinkers may see from this what to expect. They are to be treated, as of old, with a conspiracy of silence. Mr. Bradlaugh himself is only to be recognised as a politician, and even so important an event as his resignation of the presidency of the National Secular Society is quietly ignored.

Never mind. The Freethought party has made its way despite the boycotting of the press, and it will continue to do so. Ideas operate under the surface of life, with which alone the press is concerned. Our lectures have their effect whether they are reported or not, and the writings of our various penmen produce abiding results in the minds of thousands.

The New York Herald reports ghostly pranks at Ottawa, Canada, far better attested than any of the pranks of the Holy Ghost in olden times. The ghost pulled off the bedclothes and indulged in many other tricks. Milk pans were emptied, butter was taken from the crocks, filth was strewn on the floor, and, no matter in what inaccessible places these articles were placed, the tricky spirit was able to get at them and exhibit his malevolence. Finally two boys and a girl testified to having seen a beautiful old man dressed in shining garments, who had addressed endearing words to the little ones, and then bidding them good-bye, had mounted into the air leaving behind him what the children described as a "line of blaze," and so vanished, à la Jesus Christ.

Muscular Christianity also flourishes in America, judging by the following telegram:—The pastor of a church in the vicinity of Sparta, North Carolina, made from the pulpit some remarks condemning the manner in which one of the church members treated his wife. The clergyman's comments evoked great uproar, which led to a furious fight, in which two persons were killed and several more were injured.

A "Pentecost band" of faith-healers in Illinois are in trouble, the citizens living in the vicinity where they hold forth having become provoked by their boisterous manner of holding meetings, which continue up to two o'clock in the mornings. Warrants were issued for the arrest of some twenty, including the Rev. Vivian A. Dake, the originator and founder of the Pentecost band; the Rev. Thomas Nelson, another high priest; the Rev. I. A Ullness, the Rev. Charles Bryant, the Rev. Frederick Osborn and a number of the young women who travel with them. Over fifty witnesses have been summoned on the side of the prosecution. Evidently the Salvation Army can take more licence here than abroad.

The Rev. Walter Walsh, who has been lecturing to the Newcastle Freethinkers, is possessed of considerable coolness. In his last lecture on God he inquired, "Who asked them to worship the God of the Hebrews?" We reply, nine-tenths of all the Christian teachers in the world.

Digitized by Google

And they are logical. If the God of the Old Testament is a mistake, the God of the New Testament may also fall into the same category. In fact, the God of the New Testament is the God of the Old Testament, somewhat improved, and also somewhat worse, with age and emigration.

Mr. Walsh has advanced beyond the God of the Old Testament. Good. But Freethinkers have advanced beyond the God of the New Testament. That is a point that does not appear to have dawned on Mr. Walsh's imagination; so that, in a certain sense, his lectures have been a waste of time and energy.

General Gordon, though an admirable man in many ways, seems to have been quite soft on the subject of religion. Among his many curious beliefs was one that an island of the Seychelles must be the site of the Garden of Eden. Mr. H. W. Estridge, late Receiver-General, British Bechuanaland, writes: "I was at Seychelles, in the Colonial Service, when General Gordon came there from Mauritius. I saw him very often. He dined with us, and on one occasion (as I have stated in my small book, Six Years in Seychelles, published 1885), he said he thought 'Parslin must have been the Garden of Eden.' When I suggested that if so the coco de mer could not have been the apple (the husk being some four inches thick before one arrives at the shell of the nut), as Eve could not have bitten it, he remarked 'I never thought of that.'"

What bunkum bishops will talk when they know it is not likely they will be contradicted. Here is the Bishop of Salford declaring: "The Church had from its earliest days always been against slavery; it had stood up against kings and princes, and opened out a better life for the poorest classes by education and other means. It had protected the oppressed and taught the rich to love their neighbors, to do to others as they would be done by. As early as Saxon days, when the poor formed guilds to protect themselves from the oppressions of the lords in the country, the Church aided them, and so when the craft guilds, which began in England in the eleventh century were first formed they received such countenance from the Church that, in great part by its aid, they covered all England in the fifteenth." The Bishop reads history upside down. But this is always the policy of the Church; for long ages it has opposed every improvement; then when the improvement is effected and a new generation has arisen, it turns round and calmly declares, "We did it."

The Daily Chronicle points out that the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes has got into a fix over his story of "The Atheist Shoemaker." The reverend gentleman is beginning to experience the truth of the text, "Be sure your sins will find you out." But of course his policy is silence, for anything he could say would only make a bad matter worse. Mr. Foote's pamphlet is being widely circulated, and we trust that the remaining copies will be placed in the hands of persons who have heard of Mr. Hughes's little story.

The Chronicle says that many of Mr. Hughes's Wesleyan brethren "are much annoyed at the obstinacy of the rev. gentleman in declining to publish all particulars about this reputed conversion, which, if authenticated, would, they say, be a source of strength to the mission," and "some among them will probably demand that the proofs which are alleged to be in his possession should be produced."

The Echo says "there is nothing improbable in the conversion of a Secularist to Christianity," but at the same time it regards Mr. Hughes's refusal to give the name of his convert as "a mystery." "Unless he does so," the Echo says, "the whole story will be regarded as fabulous."

"Apropos of the Rev. H. P. Hughes's prayer for £500," says our correspondent "D. W.", who encloses his card, "I beg to make him the following offer. Let him and all his congregation, if they think fit, offer up a prayer to the Lord that I may present £100 to their mission—which I am in a position to do—within the next twelve months; and should the Lord answer it, the reverend gentleman will have gained £100, proved the efficacy of prayer, and really converted an Atheist."

The Rev. T. L. Davies, curate at Merthyr, is a very zealous Christian. In company with a sister of mercy, without being asked for, and in spite of being told by the master and the nurse that it was not convenient for them to visit, he made his way through the infirmary and administered the sacrament to a man who, according to the master's report, was not seriously ill. The curate probably believed he was doing something to save a soul from perdition by his intrusion, but the Board of Guardians took a different view of the matter and ordered that the rector's attention should be strongly drawn to his curate's conduct, and that in future sisters of mercy should not be admitted unless at the express wish of a patient.

The Poles and Lithuanians at Plymouth, America, have been illustrating the beauty of religion in rival faction fights. Members of the Polish Church went to the cemetery and dug up the bodies of the Lithuanians, opened the coffins, and threw the bodies over the fence. Armed Lithuanians appeared and the Poles fled. The dissension at bottom is understood to be all about religion.

"Send him to God," shouted Stanley, as he ordered the hanging of "a traitor." The man went, but nobody knows whether he has arrived at the destination. Apparently the great explorer looks upon the Deity as a sort of midden.—"N.B. Rubbish shot here." Yet Stanley would call us "Blasphemer!"

God's tender mercies are over all his works. Last year the snakes killed 1,165 persons in India, and 65 were killed by wild animals.

God v. Humanity again. At an inquest held upon an infant aged two years, who died at Birmingham, it transpired that the mother took it to the Medical Mission in Floodgate Street. Here they had to wait and hear the Bible and Divine Service and sing psalms before they got their medicine. The medical evidence showed the child died from bronchitis, accelerated probably through exposure to the cold air. God must be very exacting for praise if he cannot dispense with it in such cases as this. How would it do if the Medical Mission held its service of praise for those who were restored after taking the medicine? Probably the attendance would be smaller, but the devotion more genuine.

We have been sent a card of St. Anthony's Altar Society, which shows how the priests work the oracle. Subscribers to the Society are to have "The Holy Sacrifice of the Mass" offered twice a month for their spiritual and temporal welfare, no one to enjoy this benefit unless his or her subscription has been paid regularly.

The Mormon party has been routed in the recent Utah elections. While the voting register was being made up the Liberals objected to the votes of those who had passed through the Mormon Endowment House. It was alleged that in the ceremony of initiation they swear to avenge the blood of Joseph Smith, to recognise the authority of the Mormon priesthood as superior to that of the United States, and never to divulge the secrets of the Endowment House on pain of having their throats cut, their tongues cut out, and their hearts torn from their bodies. A reputable witness was produced who swore that in 1862 he had actually seen a Mormon so treated; the corpse, after being disembowled, having been thrown to the wolves.

The Rev. John Hunter has been preaching at Glasgow on Intolerance. He had a good deal to say on the subject, and we give him credit for denouncing all kinds of persecution. But his illustrations were rather ancient. Servetus was butchered some centuries ago. Far more recent was the prosecution of poor old Ferguson for selling the Freethinker in Glasgow. Nor did Mr. Hunter advert to Mr. Bradlaugh's ill-treatment or Mr. Foote's imprisonment. Still, we hope his sermon will do good, and we like the ring of his closing remark that the only real and damnable heresy is wrong-doing. That is what Colonel Ingersoll tried to impress on the New Jersey jury, but they gave a verdict of Guilty against Mr. Reynolds, and the judge fined him twenty-five dollars for "blasphemy."

Mr. Hunter spoke out very freely on the Christian press.

Digitized by Google

"Where," he asked, says the Christian World, "do you find more unfairness, meanness, and bitterness than in the pages of the religious newspapers and magazines?" Rather warm, eh?

Here in the same paper which reports Mr. Hunter's sermon (the Christian World) is the Rev. J. I. Jones, who argues that Christians should have no intercourse with Unitarians on the ground of the injunction of St. John, "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed." Mr. Jones is quite consistent, and endeavors to act up to the teachings of the book. Fortunately there are Christians who have got beyond its level, and are better than their creed.

The Northern Advance, an organ of the Nonconformist Church, discusses the question "Are the Churches Losing their Seriousness?" It calls attention to a church announcement that Mr. D., "the Manchester humorist," and "a troupe of minstrels" will appear, along with the parochial choir and a famous woman preacher. There is no doubt the parochial choir and the famous woman preacher would take a back seat while the funny man or the minstrels were on. The churches are losing their seriousness. The Devil is in a decline, and hell is cooling fast. Without these gruesome elements Christianity becomes a farce. Brimstone gives place to treacle.

The Vicar of Paul, Cornwall, the Rev. R. W. Aitken, lecturing on the Forward Movement, said the principles which would serve the rising generation were: First and greatest, the acknowledgment of the Fatherhood of God; second, the brotherhood of man, a brotherhood not based on French ideas or "liberty, equality, fraternity," but on the recognition by every man of his obligation to do his duty in the state of life to which he was called. That is, the Forward Movement consists in giving a new label to the old and tarnished goods, the brotherhood of man implying the Archbishop in Lambeth Palace with £15,000 a year and Dick outside in the gutter wondering how he can get bread for his children.

There are ever so many millions of fools in this world, and their stupidities are infinite. But is there, or was there, ever a greater stupidity than giving an ordinary custom-house officer the right of deciding what literature a country shall import? Over in Canada the Age of Reason has been seized at Toronto and Montreal as "immoral and obscene." The importer of one lot entered a suit against the collector of the port of Montreal, but lost on a technicality. Then the Montreal Pioneer Freethought Club decided to test the question. A number of copies were ordered from the United States, but the censorship was relaxed, and the copies were entered at the custom house, and duty paid on them, without a word of comment from the officials.

Some time ago Ingersoll's works were seized by the custom house as "immoral and obscene," although the Colonel is one of the purest writers and speakers on this planet. What a roaring farce, to be sure! If the Canadians stand this they will stand anything.

Ely and Peterborough are both blessed with bishops, and we read in the Lynn News that the first-named city has to follow the example of the latter in passing bye-laws to suppress "the filthy language in the streets."

Truth says that the "Bishop of Peterborough is one of the few prelates with a grain of sense in his head." That isn't saying much. But it is all true. Bishop Magee knows what's what. Hence his dexterous article on the Sermon on the Mount, which is dealt with in Mr. Foote's Impossible Creed.

What a foolish people we are! Fancy paying thousands a year to a lot of Bishops, most of whom are devoid of "a single grain of sense"! We must be bigger fools than the Bishops, for they have sense enough to make us pay them handsomely.

The Young Men's Christian Association is in a bad way at Portsmouth. A meeting of members has been held for the purpose of disposing of its effects, and there was recrimination enough to show what a happy family they are. When another meeting of the same kind is held, the Association should hire a steamer, and take care that no reporters are on board.

Talmage wanted to buy Calvary. But he was unable to strike the bargain. Part of it is used as a Mohammedan burial ground, and all the gold in America would not persuade the Moslems to sell their dead.

"There was a moderate attendance." And no wonder. When Mr. George Harwood, M.A., discourses to the Bolton Young Men's Christian Association on Christianity and Science, and stands up for the Flood, the Adam and Eve story, and all the rest of the Bible outfit, it is surprising that the room wasn't empty. Even the chairman must have had iron nerves to stand it at this time of day.

The Consett Guardian twitted the Ox Hill Branch of the N. S. S. with holding its annual meeting in a public-house, and not publishing the names of its elected officers. "A Secularist" replies that Christian bigotry allowed the Branch no other place of meeting, that Christians steal any money left to build Freethought halls, and that many members of the N. S. S. have to remain "passive" because they would lose their bread if their employers knew their opinions. We dare say the Guardian wishes it had let the subject alone.

"Six days shalt thou labor and do all that thou hast to do," says the commandment, but Christians go on lying seven days in the week. Here is a tract before us about "converted infidels," issued from Drummond's Tract Depot, and apparently circulated by a Wesleyan chapel in Leeds. It informs us that the London infidels have "one hall and three lecturers," and the rest of the tract is on a par with this for accuracy.

"Lord, how the world is given to lying!" said Jack Falstaff. Yet he lived before the age of tracts and West-end missions.

The Vegetarian is a curious mixture of vegetables and Christianity. The vegetables we understand. They are wholesome and necessary. But what has Christianity to do with dietetic reform? Jesus Christ was neither a vegetarian nor a teetotaller, and no doubt the Galilean trawlers would have smoked but for the want of pipes and tobacco. Jehovah himself, the head of the firm, was quite carnivorous. He accepted Abel's mutton, and turned up his nose at Cain's turnips. Yet Mr. Hills, the editor of the Vegetarian, fills the paper with Christian gush, and refuses to insert anything by Freethinkers, although Dr. Allinson is well known to be a pronounced sceptic, and Mr. F. Smallman, a member of the Manchester Branch of the N.S.S., has done as much practical work for vegetarianism as any man in England.

The most curious part of the business is that the Vegetarian professes the principles of universal brotherhood, independent of race and creed. But somehow a Christian doesn't understand working with other people unless he bosses the show.

OBITUARY.

On Saturday, Feb. 15th., the remains of Mr. William Russell Ord, of South Shields, were interred at Preston Cemetery, near North Shields, in the presence of a large number of Freethinkers. The Secular service was delivered by Captain W. B. Duncan, Vice-president of the South Shields Branch. Mr. Ord, who was for some time President of the North Shields Branch of the N. S. S., was accidentally killed while following his employment as a boat-builder at the Wallsend Slipway.—R. CHAPMAN.

Died, on the 12th. inst., Mary, the wife of John Tomkins (N. S. S.) of Nottingham Road, Wandsworth Common. aged 54. The interment took place at the Necropolis, Woking, with Secular Service composed and read by Mr. J. H. Ellis. (N. S. S.)

Digitized by Google

MR. FOOTE'S ENGAGEMENTS.

Sunday, Feb 23, Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, London, E.C., at 7, "The Future of Freethought."

March 2, Manchester; 7, Chatham; 9, Camberwell; 16, Cardiff; 19, Southwark Radical Club; 23 and 30, Hall of Science, London.

April 6, Milton Hall; 9, Shelley Society 13, Portsmouth; 20, Hall of Science; 27, Hall of Science, London.

May 4, Newcastle; 11, South Shields; 18, Hall of Science, London; 25, N. S. S. Conference.

June 1, Hall of Science London; 8, Gladstone Radical Club and Hall of Science, London.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

LITERARY communications to be addressed to the Editor, 14 Clerkenwell Green, London, E.C. All business communications to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C.

THE Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the office, post free to any part of Europe, America, Canada and Egypt, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 6s. 6d.; Half Year, 3s. 3d.; Three Months, 1s. 7½d. Australia, China and Africa:—One Year, 8s. 8d.; Half Year, 4s. 4d.; Three Months, 2s. 2d. India:—One Year, 10s. 10d.; Half Year, 5s. 5d. Three Months, 2s. 8½d.

SCALE OF ADVERTISEMENTS.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 3s.; Half Column, 15s.; Column, £1 10s. Special terms for repetitions.

IT being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will in future receive the number when their subscription expires in a colored wrapper.

L. L. COCKS.—Thanks for your congratulations. It was too late for us to attend or send a representative to the Rev. H. Bevan's lecture on Freethought.

SPIRITUAL FREETHINKER.—You appeal to our faith in the unknown and we have little of that article in stock. What you say about "sudden death" has some force with respect to the dead person, but you forget the shock to his relatives; a shock that sometimes ruins a promising life. You may find some benefit to the race from a colliery accident. We cannot.

J. S.—Thanks. See "Sugar Plums."

L. MACFORM (Bombay).—Father Lambert's reply to Ingersoll was analysed by Mr. Ball some three years ago in the Freethinker. Ingersoll doesn't think Lambert worth answering. The subject of Christianity and Slavery will be fully dealt with in a future chapter of Crimes of Christianity. The "heathen" testimony to the darkness at the Crucifixion is an admitted forgery. You are misinformed as to the miracles of Christ in the Talmud. See the Jewish Life of Christ.

J. HAMPSON.—Thanks for cuttings.

J. H. ADAMS, 23 Burton-Street, Leicester, asks us to "pause." We did, for twelve months, in Holloway Gaol. We thought our position out carefully, and our correspondent is wasting his time—and still worse, ours. He says he was trying to get people to come to church, and one of them gave him a copy of the Freethinker. We are glad to hear it, and we hope our correspondent will show it about as a sample of infidel wickedness. We can give a good commission on new subscribers.

A. J. FIELD.—Delighted to hear from you as "one of Mr. Foote's converted Christians." Such letters as yours cheer us in the midst of work and worry.

C. C. CATTELL, Snow Hill, Birmingham, offers to send his volume of collected Essays and Lectures (240 pp.) post free to any reader of the Freethinker on receipt of seven stamps.

IGNORAMUS.—Thanks for the parcel of Positivist literature. Mr. Truelove, 256 High Holborn, may be able to tell you of some print bearing Bentham's motto, "Maximise morals and minimise religion." There are some good works on morality by evolutionists. Would they meet your wish? If so, we will give you a list. Sorry to hear you are a permanent invalid, but glad that you are able to find some relief in good reading.

LOUISA SAMSON.—The matter is under consideration, and we will keep your letter beside us. We appreciate the congratulations of an intelligent woman.

G. NAEWIGER.—Delighted to hear of your success in Hull.

J. D. LEGGETT.—Never fear. We don't intend to leave Mr. Hughes in peace.

J. E. A.—There was a "high hill" for the Devil to take Jesus up, but no mountain in the vicinity. Of course the whole Roman empire wasn't visible from the top of the highest mountain, and had they gone a million miles high they could not have seen more than half of a globe at once.

H. READE.—See "Acid Drops." Pater's Marius the Epicurean is published in 2 vols. at 12s. It should be in the Manchester Free Library.

H. T. BAILEY.—Cuttings should arrive by Tuesday morning to be of use for the number in preparation. We hope your propaganda will be successful.

C. DOEG.—We quite approve of what you are doing. You would be foolish to run off from your own Sunday evening meetings, to furnish Mr. Wise with an audience.

J. B.—Mrs. Gaskell was a Unitarian, George Eliot a Positivist Charlotte Bronte Broad Evangelical, Mrs. Humphrey Ward a Theist, Miss Olive Schreiner and Mrs. E. Lynn Linton Agnostics.

H. PALMER.—Sceptic comes from a Greek word signifying to view or look carefully. Blind scepticism is therefore a contradiction in terms

H. NORRMEN (Helsingfors).—Many thanks. We are rejoiced to hear there are a party of Freethinkers who read our writings as far north as Finland.

C. W.—Thanks for cuttings and congratulations. George Eliot's verdict on Byron is extreme, but it has a certain amount of truth.

S. R. S.—The tract ought to be placed among the chief curiosities of the British Museum. If Joseph and Moses "accepted Christ" they were in advance of his offer. But both were Jews and the Jews have always been keen in business.

SAM STANDRING.—Your good, cheerful, letter is much appreciated. It may be, however, as you say, that the bigots may attack us more fiercely now that Mr. Bradlaugh's powerful leadership is gone; but there are no immediate signs of an outbreak, and if it comes the Freethought party will fight as one man for the common cause.

D. W.—Thanks. See "Acid Drops."

PAPERS RECEIVED.—Boston Investigator—Progressive Thinker—Liberator—Der Arme Tuefel—Secular Thought—Liberator—Truthseeker—Market Rasen Mail—Bulletin des Sommaires—Methyr Express—Western Mail—Boston Sunday Herald—Northern Advance—Western American—Polytechnic Journal—La Verità—The Vegetarian—Ironclad Age—Reading Observer.

FRIENDS who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish our attention directed.

CORRESPONDENCE should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

SUGAR PLUMS.

THIS evening (Feb. 23) Mr. Foote will deliver a lecture of special importance on "The Future of Freethought." What he has to say will be very carefully prepared, and will be a kind of manifesto to the party which has just elected him President. All who are interested in the future of the National Secular Society should attend.

MR. BRADLAUGH'S great personality is appreciated by the Freethinkers of Australia. Mr. Symes appeals to him to remain among his "old and tried friends" to the last; to continue as President even if others do all the work, and he only looks on. Ah, Joseph, you let your heart speak instead of your head. You ought to know that Mr. Bradlaugh is not the man to fill an ornamental office. But you will be glad to know that he does remain—as a Life Member. This gives him a right to step forward whenever he chooses, and it keeps him—to use your words—OUR OWN BRADLAUGH, though not exactly in the old sense.

"NOWADAYS," says the Speaker, "Mr. Bradlaugh stands almost alone as a successful amateur lawgiver." This refers to Mr. Bradlaugh's way of piloting his Bills through the House of Commons.

MR. SYMES pays a just tribute of admiration to Mrs. Besant for her splendid speech against Parson Hoskyns and in defence of the Malthusian principles which she so nobly maintained.

VIKTOR LENNSTRAND sends us a bright letter from his Swedish prison. He says that English sympathy is helping him and his friends in their struggle. The quashing of two prosecutions, already referred to in our columns, has caused a profound sensation, the case having been fully reported in the principal daily papers. Two distinguished members of the Council of State have openly rebuked the bigotry from which Mr. Lennstrand is suffering. Captain Otto Thomson, despite his years, is working with a youthful energy. Two intelligent young men, Messrs Berghell and Mentzer, have joined the Society. The former is on a lecturing tour in the provinces, and establishing Branches in various towns. Mr. Lennstrand says he shall work with redoubled vigor when he is a free man again. Meanwhile he sends greetings to the Freethinkers of England. "We will show us," he says in his imperfect, touching English, "worthy of their warm sympathies." We are sure they will.

Digitized by Google

SWEDISH PRISONER'S FUND.—D. W., 10s.; Dr. T. R. Allinson, £1 1s.

NORWICH is a cathedral city, but the Town Council is enlightened enough to open the Free Library on Sundays. The experiment is so far successful. The rooms are well occupied, and the visitors behave like ladies and gentlemen.

WE stated last week that our invitation of capital for our publishing business is still open, though we do not care to give it the prominence in our columns which it occupied some weeks ago. During the present month we have repaid £100 to an investor in Devonshire, and we have to repay him another £100 shortly. We have also repaid £50 to a London investor this week, besides some smaller amounts to other investors. Our publishing business cannot be conducted as efficiently as it should be without more capital. We pay five per cent on all deposits, and they are withdrawable on six months' notice. Any sums, from £5 upwards, will be acceptable.

MR. FOOTE'S letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury will be concluded in our next. The final portion is crowded out this week.

THE Blackburn Times gives a long and excellent report of Mr. Foote's lecture on Atheism in reply to the Rev. J. Ogmore Davies. It is so good that we are sorry we have not space to reproduce it.

A MEETING of Freethinkers from Leeds, Farsley, Hipperholme, Bradford, and other places was held last Sunday at Laycock's Temperance Hotel, Kirkgate, Bradford, to consider the advisability of trying to resuscitate the Freethought party in the West Riding of Yorkshire. It was decided to convene (by circular) a meeting for March 2nd, which will be held at above address, and Aurelis B. Wakefield, The Green, Hipperholme, will be pleased to hear from anyone interested in the movement.

ABOUT a year ago we inserted two appeals to the Hull Freethinkers to meet at Mr. Naewiger's house and form a Branch of the N. S. S. Some of our readers took the hint, and a Branch was formed there and then. A large hall was engaged and fortnightly meetings have been held ever since, the place being sometimes very inconveniently crowded. The Branch now numbers forty-five financial members all paid up; it has a fair balance in hand and no debts. At the outset the croakers foretold a failure, but Hull has shown what earnest Freethinkers can do if they will but try. There are fifty towns in England that ought to be encouraged by the example of Hull to start Branches immediately.

THE Reading Branch is making good progress. Mr. Forder lectures for it to-day (Feb. 23) at the Assembly Room, Friar Street. His subjects are—morning, "The Exodus from Egypt"; evening, "The Gospel History."

THE Camberwell Branch had a very successful Childrens' Party on Feb. 12. All the donors are thanked for their contributions. They are too numerous to catalogue.

IN most parts Secularists find a difficulty in obtaining competent opposition. The Portsmouth Branch of the N. S. S. insert in the local Evening News an advertisement, a challenge to debate the fundamental principles of Christianity with any minister of any denomination. Good for Portsmouth.

FREETHOUGHT is evidently spreading among the troops at Dum Dum, Calcutta, for the little magazine run by the Methodist chaplain is stuffed with answers to "infidelity." Ingersoll is crushed, and will no doubt retire into obscurity for the rest of his days. Yes, the Rev. J. A. Macdonald is a great man. But why does he appropriate wholesale from H. L. Hastings?

THE Rev. D. Amos, of the Unitarian Free Church, Reading, has been lecturing against the inspiration of the Bible. According to the report he acquitted himself manfully, and demanded that the Bible should be treate as a human production. His remarks were greeted wit loud applause. One of his critics, Major Liebenrood said that Mr. Amos's lecture was only a repetition of Mr. Foote's. There was some truth in this, of course, for every lecture on the inspiration of the Bible must of necessity traverse the same ground. For the rest, the observation was only the Mayor's way of being offensive.

"INFIDELITY" is attracting attention on all sides. During the past week four lectures on its modern phases have been delivered at Gresham College by the Rev. H. E. J. Bevan, Gresham Professor of Divinity and vicar of St. Andrew's, Stoke Newington. The first lecture was on "Freethought."

AT the Second Annual Convention of the Californian State Liberal (i.e. Freethought) Union Mr. S. P. Putnam was re-elected President. He is supported by an executive council of ten, and no less than ninety vice-presidents. There must be a large number of Freethinkers of importance in the state, or is it that in American organisations vice-presidents are as plentiful as colonels?

A SYMPOSIUM on the subject "Is there an Affirmative, Positive, Constructive, side to Freethought" is commenced in the Truthseeker for Feb. 8 by a letter from Col. Ingersoll, which we shall reprint in our next issue. Mr. Westbrook, the president of the American Secular Union, Captain Robert C. Adams, the president of the Canadian Secular Union, and others, contribute their various opinions on the affirmations of Freethought.

THE TESTIMONY OF A GREAT POET.

Charles Marie Leconte de Lisle, of the French Academy, is unquestionably at the head of French poetry. His Freethought, which is strikingly exhibited in his poem on Cain, is pronounced in a popular brief prose Histoire du Christianisme, which he published in 1871. At the end of that work he says, "Christianity, and by this term must be understood all the Christian communions from Roman Catholicism to the smallest Protestant sects or schismatics, has never exercised other than a deplorable influence on intelligence and on morals. It condemns thought, it annihilates reason, it has perpetually denied and combatted all the truths successively acquired by science. It is unintelligible in its dogmas, arbitrary, variable, indifferent in its morality. Humanity has lost her faith in it, and it no longer inspires other respect than that accorded to old things which have been long used. It is an object of art, powerfully conceived, venerable by its antiquity, whose place is marked in the religious museum of history."

THEOLOGICAL ITEM.

Reverend Eli Soote, a colored parson, has considerable trouble in collecting his salary from the delinquent members of his flock. Jim Crow, in particular, shows a great deal of delicacy in paying his pew rent. Not long since Soote met Jim and tackled him on the subject.

"See heah, Jim, you hasn,t paid up fur two munfs. Doesn't yer know dat dose who serbs at de altar mus' lib by de altar?"

"Dat's so, my berlubbed pasture, but dar am ernudder text in der Bible what am in conflic wid dat ar."

"Whar did yer find 'em?"

"I sarched the Scripters an' found 'em. I'se one ob de sheep ob yo' flock, ain't I?"

"You is, Mr. Crow, but I feels you am one ob de black sheep."

"Kinder strikes me yer ain't no strawberry blonde yerse'f but ain't de commandment gibben ter de shepherds and pastures ob de flock, 'Feed my sheep!' an' heah yer comes to me—one ob de sheep—an wants ter be fed, you ole blackened sepulchum. Ef yer means ter bide by de Bible, why doan yer lead dis heah sheep inter er iceter saloon an' set up er dozen on de half shell? De good book say 'feed de sheep;' but you do nuffin' but shear 'em. Whar did yer read 'shear my sheep?' Go home, ole man, an' sarch de Scripters, 'stead ob nosin' erbout fer money whut I'se earned by de swet ob my brow."

Digitized by Google

MR. BRADLAUGH RESIGNS.

ELECTION OF A NEW PRESIDENT.

We doubt if in all the churches in London combined there was anything like the enthusiasm and warm feeling which prevailed at the Hall of Science last Sunday. The meeting was called for 11.15, and long before that time the hall was filled with an expectant audience, many having come early to obtain a good inspection of the Indian presents, which were on view in the minor hall, among which we specially noticed a handsome gold casket containing an address from the Freethinkers of Bombay.

The proceedings commenced punctually by Mr. Forder reading Mr. Bradlaugh's letter of Nov. 5 desiring the meeting, and the resolution of the Executive Council that it should be called.

Mr. Bradlaugh, who on rising, as upon entering the hall, was received with rounds of applause, could for some moments scarcely speak from emotion and appeared as though he would actually break down. Old men, many of whom had come from various parts of the Kingdom, were also observed to be overcome by their feelings during the proceedings and furtively wipe away the welling tears. Mr. Bradlaugh, who spoke throughout with the deepest feeling, said: With a very slight break I have led this movement for over thirty years—a fairly long period in any life. I have been President of this Society almost since it has existed, and I am very sorry to resign. Unfortunately, while my work has never been easy, it grew much harder during my parliamentary struggle and the litigation which that struggle involved. I have felt the last three or four years that the pressure on me was becoming so great that a breakdown might be at any time possible. Last October it came, and the wonder is I am here to tender my resignation at all. I was brought then face to face with the fact that I could no longer do the whole of my work, and I am now advised that the resumption of my old work would mean another illness which might be fatal. Some kind friends have suggested I might continue to hold the office nominally. But I could not do that. I must be a real President or none. The fault found with me has been that I have been too real in times that are gone. I think I am entitled to say we are stronger now than we were when you first put me in the presidential chair. I don't want to leave you. (Cheers.) I could not take any other office; but if you like to make me a life member I should be grateful to you to do it. (Cheers.) I have another request. I have never held any paid office in this Society, and I have never refused aid to any branch of the Society, which I thought fairly justified in demanding help. There has not been a day of my life in which five or six people have not brought their trouble to me, and I have done my best for them. In 1879 a sum of £1050 was given by a Mr. Thomson, which he wished invested in the Freethought Publishing Company for which five guineas per month was to be paid to the National Secular Society. A sum of £630 has already been paid, and I want to ask you to release me from the responsibility of the remainder. (Cheers). I think I am entitled to ask this. I would not ask this if I could lecture. I do not know at present how I am going to live. I used to think my tongue would always bring my living, but I know now it may also bring death. I hold a number of shares in various Freethought building companies in Great Britain, some of them of value, some probably worth nothing. I am willing to transfer the whole of them to the Executive. They are all paid up except two or three shares. I think I have given away £3000 during my time. I am not putting this as any credit to myself, only to show I am not making a request unduly. I ask you to accept my resignation. I should like to be your President still, but I could not do the work, and I could not hold the office as a sham. Some may say why not wait until the annual Conference. I always like to go to the Conference with a budget of work. I could not do this, so thought it best to resign now. I do not say we part friends for we are not parting at all. (Much applause.) The movement is to me what it has ever been, and I see some old faces in this hall of those who have known what it has been to me for over forty years. I hope I will always remain your trusted counseller. (Applause.) I lay down the wand of office, which I hope I have held untarnished; I give back the trust you gave me. (Prolonged applause.)

Mr. Smith (Kingston-on-Thames) wished to know if the original gift had gone.

Mr. Bradlaugh: There was no gift beyond the five guineas per month to the N. S. S.

Mr. Brumage (Portsmouth): Ladies and gentlemen, I am sure you will pardon me if I speak rather low, for, like my friend Mr. Bradlaugh, I have been suffering from illness for the last three months, and this is my first outing since my recovery. I am happy to say I have known Mr. Bradlaugh from my boyhood, and have watched his career from then till now when he occupies a position we are all proud of. You will excuse my making any further remarks. I will conclude by proposing the following resolution: "That this meeting of the members of the National Secular Society accepts Mr. Bradlaugh's resignation with the profoundest regret; it thanks him for his many years of unwearied and gratuitous service; it records its admiration of the ability and courage with which he had led the practical forces of English Freethought; and it hopes that he may long live as an honored and distinguished figure in the public life of our country and empire." (Much applause.)

Mr. H. Gee (Woolwich) said he had been a follower of Mr. Bradlaugh over twenty years, and he seconded the resolution, not with pleasure, but as the inevitable.

The resolution was put to the meeting and was carried unanimously.

Mr. Foote moved that Mr. Bradlaugh continue in the chair for the rest of the meeting. Carried.

Mr. Bradlaugh: Now with regard to my request that you cancel the bond and make me a life member.

Mr. Newcomb (Liverpool) said that city would be proud of the honor of proposing Mr. Bradlaugh as a life member.

Mr. Moon (Southampton), who described his city as the Liverpool of the south, seconded the resolution.

A member wished to propose that Mr. Bradlaugh be made a life member of the council, but Mr. Bradlaugh said he would not like to be a member without being able to attend. The original motion was carried with applause.

Mr. Soddy (Camberwell): With regard to the payment of five guineas per month, I am sure Mr. Bradlaugh would not have asked us to release him from payment if he had not some good reason for doing so. The Freethought Publishing Company we have gathered is not in a very flourishing condition. After thirty years work the least we can do is to release him. No doubt his illness has been a great strain on his resources. He moved that this meeting of the National Secular Society release Mr. Bradlaugh and Mrs. Besant from paying the £5 5s. per month, and thank them for their services in the past.

Mr. Forder said he did not second the resolution in his capacity as secretary, the only paid officer in the Society, but as delegate of several Branches. He read a letter from the Hull Branch warmly eulogising Mr. Bradlaugh. He had also important letters from various places, including Sweden. On behalf of these societies he seconded the resolution that the bond be cancelled.

Mr. Bradlaugh: Would any one like to ask any question?

Mr. Deane asked if it was necessary to cancel the bond.

Mr. Bradlaugh said he would prefer it that way. The responsibility is a moral one, because your Society has possibly no right to exist at all. He wished them to cancel his moral liability and what ought to be his legal liability if the law was just. The resolution was then put and carried unanimously.

Mr. Bradlaugh: The next business is the election of a new President, and upon that I have a motion to make. I have considered very gravely what would be for the best interests of the movement, and I trust I will have your unanimous support. Whoever takes this office it will put upon him or her great labors. I'll take off the new President's hands all the legal questions, but there are often questions of conscience, domestic difficulties, cases in which people lay their hearts bare, and which require the greatest thought. The duty of the President in a movement like ours requires constant watchfulness; it often requires as much courage to do nothing as to do much. Sometimes you may land poor people in a struggle they are unequal for. The meeting that morning was proof that he had done his best. He now begged to propose that Mr. George William Foote —(cheers)— be the President until the next annual Conference. We have no power to elect him for longer.

Mr. Fisher (Battersea) seconded the resolution.

Mr. A. B. Moss: I have much pleasure in supporting the resolution. Having known Mr. Foote a considerable number of years, and the assiduity with which he has taken in hand the Freethought propaganda, and knowing also his business ability, I think he will be the most suitable one we could select. We know he has the interests of Freethoug[illegible] at heart, that he has suffered for his convictions and showed heroism in the hour of danger. In view of his tact and ability, he is the best man for the office.

Digitized by Google

Mr. CARTER (West Ham) said some prophets of evil are saying that when Mr. Bradlaugh leaves, the Society will fall to pieces.

Mr. BRADLAUGH asked if the speaker had an amendment.

Mr. CARTER answered "Yes," and proposed that Mr. J. M. Robertson be elected President. He had heard members say they would decline to be led by Mr. Foote. (No, no.)

Mr. BRADLAUGH: If you have any personal reason against Mr. Foote, it would be well to say it.

Mr. CARTER disclaimed other than a personal interest in the welfare of the Society. Unfortunately there are some who regard Mr. Foote's method of advocacy as an awful example of retrograde metamorphosis.

Mr. L. KEEN (Wood Green) urged that no one could find a better man to take the place of our late President than Mr. Foote.

Mr. STUART: The very fact of our late President recommending Mr. Foote shows he is the best man we could have. It is impossible to please all. Many in the past had held aloof because they would not be led by Mr. Bradlaugh. There might be one or two who disapproved of Mr. Foote's style of propaganda, but they were few and far between.

Mr. NEWCOMB (delegate for Liverpool) stated how recently Mr. Foote had gone to that city in answer to the attempt of the police to stop their meetings. That in itself was a sufficient recommendation.

The resolution was then put and carried unanimously amidst loud applause.

Mr. BRADLAUGH (turning to Mr. Foote): I tender the only emblem of office we have. This hammer, presented to us by the widow of James Watson, was used in the old Rotunda, in days when such freedom as we now enjoy was impossible. Carlile has often used it. I give it you joyfully, Foote, and trust you will hand it on to your successor.

Mr. FOOTE (who was received with prolonged applause): Fellow members of the National Secular Society, the office, temporary as it, till the next Conference, which you have entrusted to me I reckon as a high distinction, and I value it all the more because Mr. Bradlaugh, despite some past differences of opinion, has had the magnanimity to propose me as his temporary successor. It is quite impossible for any man to please everybody. Mr. Bradlaugh knows he has never succeeded in doing that. Any person with positive opinions is likely to rouse some antipathy, but this I did not expect from any member of the West Ham Branch. No one could know this morning who would be elected, and I confess I did not come with a cut and dried speech in my pocket. What I have to say to the party they will soon know. For the present I want to say just this. I am in a position to ask and to claim your indulgence. (Applause.) Mr. Bradlaugh, as you all know, is a man in a million. Anyone who comes immediately after him is judged by a severe standard. No one can tell precisely what he himself is going to do, but one knows what one has done. I have been connected with the Secular party for over twenty years, and during all that time Mr. Bradlaugh has seemed to be a fixture of the Society. As he has said, we do not really part, and that makes my task the easier. Mr. Bradlaugh knows my feet have not frequently trod the road to St. John's Wood, but if I have to take counsel with him, which he offers to give, it is likely that St. John's Wood will see me more frequently. I hardly know how, taking the presidency of an illegal society, one could feel comfortable or even sleep easy in bed at night unless one had the advice of the best lawyer in England. (Applause.) Mr. Bradlaugh has been a brilliant leader. He has not only led the Freethought party, but occupied a high position in the public mind. We shall have to find some compensation for the loss of his brilliance. I confess I see no alternative but in the perfecting of the organisation of our Society. We feel his loss and must feel the necessity of each doing his utmost to make up for it. There are thousands of Freethinkers in this country outside the Freethought societies. (Hear, hear.) Hundreds who do but little, and a few who do nearly all. If we can make the apathetic more active; if we can induce more Freethinkers to join us, then great as is Mr. Bradlaugh's loss, by forcing us to do more and to work to the best of our ability, we shall find some compensation. When we meet again at the next Conference no one knows what may happen. I occupy this office till then. If it should be my good fortune to be re-elected as President of this Society—which I consider the most important in the country, because its purpose is to promote and sustain those principles which lie at the root of all political and social reform—(applause)—I trust that when I lay down the office, whatever others may think, I myself may feel, in the sanctuary of my own heart, that I have tried to hold it with something of the courage, sincerity, and enduring enthusiasm of my great predecessor. Mr. Bradlaugh occupies a lofty position in the public mind to which I dare not aspire, but I look up to where he is, and I say to him, I recognise your example and I will try to follow it. (Loud applause.)

Mr. BRADLAUGH, in closing the meeting, said it was no light burden that was laid on the President of the Society. He thought he discerned several growing causes of difficulty. There was tne anti-Jewish agitation which, unless he was mistaken, would spring up in this country after the publication of the report of the Sweating Commission. There was the lower strata of the Salvation Army who could scarcely be expected to accord a quiet hearing to opponents of their faith, and there was the great danger to Europe in the endeavor of the Church of Rome to secure the suffrages of the democracy. He could not believe the skunk had changed its smell. (Applause.) He asked them to unite against the great danger. He had taught that the struggle in the future in England is not so much with the Church of England, not so much with the Dissenters as with the Church of Rome. Any man standing in Mr. Foote's position had a right to indulgence. With the responsibility of the position there would be a sense of duty higher and graver than when fighting for one's own hand and with one's own arm. [Then turning to Mr. Foote, he said]: I hope yet to meet you and thank you for what you have done, not for my sake, but for the history of the movement of which we are common soldiers. I believe you will do the best that man can do. (Applause.)

The meeting then dispersed, many crowding again to see the presents from India. Some London and more country friends adjourned to the Manchester Hotel and partook of an excellent luncheon.

A DOUBLE?

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE FREETHINKER."

SIR,—As your "Sub." is a gentleman known for accuracy, and as one would fain hope that he is not emulating the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, would he be good enough to state in your columns the precise date on which Madame Blavatsky appeared in the British Museum, glittering with gold and gems? Mr. Wheeler could not have invented the story of her presence there, merely for the sake of pointing a sneer? Yet Madame Blavatsky has been for several weeks more than fifty miles away from London, and for many weeks before she left she had been confined to the house by her doctor's orders, and was so feeble that she could only walk across her room with difficulty. Her friends did not know that her remarkable powers extended to being in two places in the body at the same time, and they are naturally eager for the evidence which will doubtless be furnished by a man of such unimpeachable veracity as Mr. Wheeler. It would be lamentable if his story should be untrue, and so doubts should be thrown on his other equally well-founded assertions about the same lady. ANNIE BESANT.

[My belief that I saw Mdme. Blavatsky at the British Museum on Feb. 5th and 6th, was founded upon a fancied resemblance between a photograph of the lady, which I saw at 63 Fleet Street, and a lady whom I saw on those dates with copies of Lucifer and an American work on Reincarnation. I was mistaken. I unreservedly withdraw my statement, and tender my sincere apology to Mdme. Blavatsky for the error, and for having thus aspersed her occult knowledge. I have read in Isis Unveiled (vol. i., p. 360—I like to be accurate, if possible) that a medium "may be entranced in his cabinet, while his astral body (double) or doppelganger is walking about the room moved by another intelligence." But as a Theosophist who knows her assures me that Mdme. Blavatsky is unable to go to the Museum, I must express my regret for having made the statement, and conclude that I saw another lady, though who that lady is I should much like to discover. I have been mistaken as to ladies before this, but fail to see that a mistake as to identity has any connection with what I have quoted from published works on Mdme. Blavatsky or with my criticism upon her writings. The logic seems to me lamentable, but Theosophy may perhaps explain it. It is right to add that I am informed Mdme. Blavatsky does not wear gold and gems, but dresses "in rags." Such was the expression of my informant.—J. M. W.

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY MEETINGS.

LONDON.

Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, E.C., 7, Mr. G. W. Foote "The Future of Freethought."

Ball's Pond Secular Hall, 36 Newington Green Road, N., 7, G. Bernard Shaw, "Socialism and Secularism."

Battersea—The Shed of Truth, Prince of Wales's Road, 11.15, "Modern Moralists"; 7.30, Orientalist, "Obsequies on Theosophy."

Bethnal Green—2 Railway Place, Cambridge Road (temporary premises), 3.15, Mr. Gouke, "God is,"

Camberwell—61 New Church Road, S.E., 7.30, Mr. F. Millar, "The Struggle for Existence—Darwinism."

Claremont Hall, 7, J. M. Robertson, "The truth about Jews and Judaism."

Edmonton Assembly Rooms, Silver Street, 7, Mr. S Standring "Who wants to go to Heaven?"

Milton Hall, Kentish Town Road N.W., 7.30, Mrs. Annie Besant "Blind and Open-eyed Scepticism."

Old Southgate Cromwell Hall, 7, Mr. Cooke, "The Unemployed and Low Wages: a Remedy."

Westminster—Liberal and Radical Club, Chapter Street, 7, Mr. C. J. Hunt, "History of Priestcraft."

Wood Green—Jolly Butchers' Hill, 11, Mr. S. Standring, "Jesus and the Vineyard Laborers."

Woolwich—"Essex Arms," Assembly Room, 60 Plumstead Road, 7.30, Mr. T. Garner, "Modern Irreligion, for Good or Evil."

COUNTRY.

Birmingham—Baskerville Hall, Crescent, 11, Mr. J. W. Mahony, at 11, "Social Utopias:" 7, "Are our Sundays Failures?"

Huddersfield — Littlewood's Buildings, Upperhead Row, Mr. E. S. Jones (Fellow of Liverpool University), at 3, "Evolution and the Origin of Life"; at 6.30, "Mind and Body."

Heckmondwike—Mr. John Rothera's, Bottoms, 2.30, a business Meeting.

Hull Branch—No. 2 Room, Friendly Societies' Hall, Albion Street, at 6.30, Mr. Anyan, "Marriage: a Law of Heaven and Earth."

Liverpool—Camden Hall, Camden Street, Mr. J. Clarke, at 11, "The Advance of Secularism"; at 3, "Inspiration of the Bible"; at 7, "Miracles."

Manchester—Rusholme Road, Oxford Road, 6.30, Mr. W. K. Hall, "Monarchy: its Influence on the People."

Newcastle-on-Tyne—4 Hall's Court, Newgate Street, 11, Important meeting of Sunday Music League; at 7.30, monthly business meeting of members. Wednesday, 8.45, Mr. Kelf, "Our Indian Empire."

Nottingham—Secular Hall, Beck Street, Mr. W. Clarke, M.A., at 11, "The Industrial Development towards Socialism"; at 7, "A Practical Labor Programme."

Sheffield Hall of Science, Rockingham Street, Mr. Thomas Slater, 3, "What is Agnosticism?"; 7, "The Future Outlook;" Tea at 5.

South Shields—Captain Duncan's Navigation Schools, King Street, 7, Usual weekly meeting.

LECTURERS' ENGAGEMENTS.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Credon Road, London, S.E.—March 2, Woolwich; 23, Milton Hall; 30, Woolwich. April 6 (morning), Kingsland Green (evening), Ball's Pond; 13, Camberwell. May 18 (morning), Clerkenwell Green, (evening), Ball's Pond; 25, Regent's Park. June 15, Ball's Pond; 29, Mile End. July 13, Mile End.

TOLEMAN-GARNER, 8 Heyworth Street, Stratford, London, E.—Feb. 23, Woolwich. March 9, Woolwich; 16 (morning), West Ham; 23, Woolwich: 30, Westminster. May 11, Clerkenwell Green; 18, Regent's Park.

JAMES HOOPER, 11 Upper Eldon Street, Sneinton, Nottingham.—Feb. 16, Birmingham.

E. STANLEY JONES, 53 Park Street, Toxteth, Liverpool—Feb. 23, Huddersfield.

T. THURLOW, 7 Dickson's Villas, Rutland Road, East Ham—March 9, Hyde Park. April 13 (evening), Plaistow; 27, Hyde Park.

PROGRESSIVE PUBLISHING CO.'S LIST.

All orders to be sent, with remittance, to R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C. Rate of postage—Orders under 3d., one halfpenny; orders under 6d. one penny. Orders over 6d. post free.

G. W. FOOTE.

	s.	d.
PRISONER FOR BLASPHEMY. Cloth ... ... A Full History of his Three Trials and Twelve Months' Imprisonment. Copies in paper covers, soiled, 6d.	2	6
IS SOCIALISM SOUND? ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant.	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
CHRISTIANITY AND SECULARISM ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. In paper covers.	1	0
Superior edition in cloth	1	6
INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS ... ... Second edition, enlarged.	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	3
DARWIN ON GOD ... ... Contents:—Darwin's Grandfather—Darwin's Father—Darwin's Early Piety—Almost a Clergyman—On Board the "Beagle"—Settling at Down—Death and Burial—Purpose of Pamphlet—Some Objections—Darwin Abandons Christianity—Deism—Creation—Origin of Life—Origin of Man—Animism—A Personal God—Design—Divine Beneficence—Religion and Morality—Agnosticism and Atheism.	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0
DEFENCE OF FREE SPEECH ... ... Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes.	0	2
LETTERS TO JESUS CHRIST	0	4
PHILOSOPHY OF SECULARISM	0	8
THE BIBLE GOD	0	2
THE FOLLY OF PRAYER	0	2
CHRISTIANITY AND PROGRESS ... ... A Reply to Mr Gladstone.	0	2
WHAT WAS CHRIST? ... ... A Reply to J. S. Mill.	0	1
THE DYING ATHEIST. A Story	0	1
WAS JESUS INSANE? ... ... A searching inquiry into the mental condition of the Prophet of Nazareth.	0	2
THE SHADOW OF THE SWORD ... ... A moral and statistical Essay on War.	0	2
ROYAL PAUPERS ... ... Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty.	0	2
BIBLE HEROES—First Series, in elegant wrapper ... (1) Mr. Adam, (2) Captain Noah, (3) Father Abraham, (4) Juggling Jacob, (5) Master Joseph, (6) Joseph's Brethren, (7) Holy Moses I., (8) Holy Moses II., (9) Parson Aaron, (10) General Joshua, (11) Jephthah and Co., (12) Professor Samson. One Penny each singly.	1	0
BIBLE HEROES—Second Series, in elegant wrapper... (13) Prophet Samuel, (14) King Saul, (15) Saint David I., (16) Saint David II., (17) Sultan Solomon, (18) Poor Job, (19) Hairy Elijah, (20) Bald Elisha, (21) General Jehu, (22) Doctor Daniel, (23) The Prophets (Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Hosea); (24) St. Peter, (25) St. Paul	1	0
MRS. BESANT'S THEOSOPHY ... ... A Candid Criticism.	0	2
THEOSOPHY AND SECULARISM.. ... ... A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant.	0	2
THE NEW CAGLIOSTRO ... ... An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky.	0	2

COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

MISTAKES OF MOSES	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth ... ... Only Complete Edition published in England	1	6
DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT ... ... Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy.	0	6
REPLY TO GLADSTONE ... ... With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler.	0	4
ROME OR REASON? Reply to Cardinal Manning	0	2
FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Rev. Dr. Field ...	0	2
GOD AND MAN. Second Reply to Dr. Field	0	2
THE DYING CREED	0	4
THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH	0	2
THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION ... ... A Discussion with Hon. F. D. Courdert and Gov. S. L. Woodford.	0	2
ART AND MORALITY	0	2
DO I BLASPHEME?	0	2
THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE	0	2
THE GREAT MISTAKE	0	1
LIVE TOPICS	0	1
MYTH AND MIRACLE	0	1
REAL BLASPHEMY	0	1
SOCIAL SALVATION	0	2

G. W. FOOTE and J. M. WHEELER.

CRIMES OF CHRISTIANITY. Vol. I. Cloth ... Hundred of exact References to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.	2	6
THE JEWISH LIFE OF CHRIST ... ... With voluminous footnotes. An extraordinary work.	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0

G. W. FOOTE and W. P. BALL.

BIBLE HANDBOOK FOR FREETHINKERS AND INQUIRING CHRISTIANS	1	4
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
Sold also in separate parts as follows—
1. Bible Contradictions ... ... The Contradictions are printed in parallel columns.	0	4
2. Bible Absurdities ... ... All the chief Absurdities from Genesis to Revelation, conveniently and strikingly arranged, with appropriate headlines, giving the point of each absurdity in a sentence.	0	4
3. Bible Atrocities ... ... Containing all the godly wickedness from Genesis to Revelation. Each infamy has a separate headline for easy reference	0	4
4. Bible Immoralities, Indecencies, Obscenities, Broken Promises, and Unfulfilled Prophecies ...	0	4

J. M. WHEELER.

LETTERS FROM HEAVEN	0	1
LETTERS FROM HELL	0	1

Digitized by Google

NOW READY.

LETTERS TO THE CLERGY

FIRST SERIES.

1.—CREATION
To the Bishop of Carlisle.

2.—THE BELIEVING THIEF
To the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

3.—THE ATONEMENT
To the Bishop of Peterborough.

4.—OLD TESTAMENT MORALITY
To the Rev. E. R. Conder, D.D.

5.—INSPIRATION
To the Rev. R. F. Horton, M.A.

6.—CREDENTIALS OF THE GOSPEL
To the Rev. Prof. J. A. Beet.

7.—MIRACLES
To the Rev. Brownlow Maitland, M.A.

8.—PRAYER
To the Rev. T. Teignmouth Shore, M.A.

By G. W. FOOTE.

128pp., in Wrapper. ONE SHILLING.

2d. THE IMPOSSIBLE CREED 2d.

An Open Letter to the
BISHOP OF PETERBOROUGH.
BY
G. W. FOOTE.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE

AN AGNOSTIC'S VIEW.

By COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

TWOPENCE. Reprinted Verbatim from the "North American Review." TWOPENCE.

Every Freethinker, Radical or Socialist should read it and circulate it amongst his friends.

1d. A LIE IN FIVE CHAPTERS? 1d.

THE
REV. HUGH PRICE HUGHES'S
CONVERTED ATHEIST

By G. W. FOOTE.

Should be circulated by Freethinkers who desire to see this pious fraud exposed as widely as possible.

W. J. Rendell's
"WIFE'S FRIEND."

Recommended in "Law of Population," and "Wife's Hand Book." Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell Street Clerkenwell, and supplied per post, 2s. dozen. For particulars of this Malthusian discovery send stamped envelope. Higginson's Syringe, with vertical and reverse current, 3s. 6d. and 4s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. All other Malthusian Appliances. All prices post free.

HARTNOLL,
ENGLISH AND FOREIGN CHEMIST,
1A PICCADILLY
(Under the London Pavilion Music Hall),
LONDON, W.

Hartnoll's Specialities, Appliances and Medicated Preparations are world-renowned.

Spiral, Douche and Latest Improved Syringes.

ESTABLISHED OVER 50 YEARS.

IRETON'S
INDELIBLE JET BLACK MARKING INK
(NO HEATING REQUIRED)
For Rubber Stamps, Stencil, Type or Pen.
PRICE 6d. 1/- and 2/6 per Bottle.
Sample bottle 4d. post free.
IRETON & Co., 92, Gracechurch St., LONDON, E.C.
The largest makers of Rubber Stamps.
Special terms to the Trade.

Dyed with Ireton's Ink, no hope of ever changing my Color.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. VOL. I.
By Dr. T. R. ALLINSON,
4 SPANISH PLACE, MANCHESTER SQUARE, LONDON, W.
Of the Author, for Postal Order for 1s 2d.
It contains Articles on: Management of Infancy; Health; Longevity; The Teeth; Brown Bread; Bread Making; Food: Vegetarianism; Tobacco; The Drink Question; Fruit; Fresh Air; Exercise; Bathing; Light; Holidays; &c. Also the cause and cure of Disease; Constipation; Biliousness; Eczema; Blackheads and Pimples; Nervousness; Coughs and Colds; Chest Complaints; Deafness; Thread Worms; Long Worms; Tape Worms; The Itch, &c.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. VOL. II.
Of the Author, for Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Containing Articles on: The Healing Power of Nature; Clothing; Electricity in Disease; Apparent Health; Vegetarian Experiments; The Pig as Human Food; Popular Fallacies about Flesh; The Beef Tea Delusion; Salt; Saline Starvation; Tea Drinking; The Hair and its Management; Sleep and Sleeplessness; Want of Energy, &c.; Health Hints for Workers, for Shop Assistants, and for Servants; Advice for the Thin; for the Stout; and on the Proper Treatment of Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, &c.
No House is Complete without these Works.
When ordering the Essays, be sure and state which Volume you require.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE;
OR, THE ONLY RATIONAL WAY OF TREATING DISEASE.
Everybody likes it who reads it.
Of the Author, for Postal-order for 1s. 1d.

MANCHESTER BRANCH OF THE N.S.S.,
Rusholme Road, Oxford Road, All Saints.
On March 30th and 31st.
A SALE OF WORK will be held for the purpose of Re-Furnishing the Hall with more comfortable Seats. Donations, either in money or articles, will be thankfully received by the Committee or Secretary, A. Hemingway, 25 Higher Chatham Street, C.-on-M., Manchester.

WANTED immediately, a thorough General Servant, not under 25, in a middle-aged bachelor's house. Apply, in first instance by letter, to "M.D.," 13 Defoe Road, Tooting Common, S.W.

THE FAMILY LIMIT,
OR,
THE QUININE TABLOID,
1s. 6d. per doz., post free.
For further Particulars send stamped directed envelope to
A. MOSS, 36 Upper Park Street,
ISLINGTON, LONDON, N.

GRATIS.

AN ILLUSTRATED 16-PAGE PAMPHLET, containing extracts from the utterances of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Manchester; the Revs T. R. Malthus, A. E. Whatham, M. J. Savage, Leonard Dawson, — Lawton, H. R. Haweis; the following Doctors—Allbutt, Allinson, Armstrong, Drysdale, Pye Chavasse, E. B. Foote, Nicholls, Wilder, Raciborski, Napheys and Reamy. Also Plato, Aristotle, Sismondi, Huxley, Mill, and numerous others. Should be read by every married and marriageable person. Sent on receipt of stamped addressed envelope by J. R. HOLMES, Hanney, Wantage, Berks.
TESTIMONIALS (Extracts from).
"The one you sent me some months since is
Quite Worn Out
with being lent to so many friends."
"Some of us have paid five shillings for less than one-tenth of the information."

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each, upper or lower set, £1. Best quality, 4s. each, upper or lower, £2, completed in four hours when required, repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18c. gold 15s.; stopping, 2s. 6d. extraction, 1s. painless by gas, 5s.

Printed and Published by G. W. Foote, at 28 Stonecutter Street Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

Vol. X.—No. 9.] SUNDAY, MARCH 2, 1890. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

THE CONVERTED ATHEIST.

"For if the truth of God hath more abounded through my lie unto his glory; why yet am I also judged as a sinner?" — ROMANS III., 7.

THE Rev. Hugh Price Hughes is one of the "artful dodger" species. Challenged by Mr. Bradlaugh, challenged by Mr. Foote, and challenged by Mr. Forder, he held his tongue and let the pious fraud do its dirty work. His story of the Converted Atheist Shoemaker was reprinted from the Methodist Times without a word of explanation or defence. He had not the honesty or decency to state that the truth of the story had been questioned by the leaders of the Atheist party. His policy was, tell a lie and stick to it, and when proof is demanded stand upon your dignity, put on an air of injured innocence, and decline to say a word. So the prisoner in the dock of the Old Bailey maintains a sullen silence, but it does not prevent the trial from going on. The jury returns its verdict and the judge pronounces the sentence.

Mr. Hughes's thick skin has however been pierced, and he has been stung into speech. He could afford to laugh at "the infidels," for his story was intended for simple minded Methodists, who would never trouble themselves about its exposure. But it was quite another matter when an influential newspaper like the Daily Chronicle suggested that Mr. Hughes should lay his cards upon the table, and broadly hinted that some of his clerical colleagues were as anxious for evidence as any Atheist in London. Mr. Hughes saw that it was time to speak. Dead silence would no longer pay, and besides it looked too utterly farcical. Accordingly he devoted a couple of paragraphs to the subject in the Methodist Times. The first paragraph deals with "the motive and animus" of the writer in the Chronicle, as though it had anything to do with the case, or as though a matter of public interest and importance could be treated as a mere matter of personality. The second paragraph runs as follows:—

"But we are at a loss to understand what right either Mr. Bradlaugh or the Secretary of the National Secular Society has to demand the name of 'The Atheist Shoemaker,' which is suppressed for the reason given in the preface to the book The narrative makes no attack whatever, either on Mr. Bradlaugh or on the National Secular Society. The Secretary of that Society says no professional Atheist lecturer in London has died during the last ten years in the way described in 'The Atheist Shoemaker.' Mr. Price Hughes never said that 'The Atheist Shoemaker' was a professional lecturer of the National Secular Society. He simply said that he had frequently spoken in advocacy of Atheism in public halls and in the open air, and that he had spoken with great eloquence and effect."

First of all, let it be observed that Mr. Hughes does not say a word about our challenge. No, he takes the easiest course. We dissected his story point by point, and showed its utter absurdity, as well as its self-contradictions. But about all this he is mum. Foolish man! Does he suppose our pamphlet is as good as non-existent because he does not recognise it? Will he fare any better than the proverbial ostrich? Our pamphlet is circulating by the thousand. And it will continue to circulate. Yes, and it will make Mr. Hughes, in the opinion of many honorable men and women, stand as a convicted liar.

A wretched lie is implied in Mr. Hughes's explanation. It is true he did not say the converted Atheist was a professional lecturer of the National Secular Society. But who asserted that he did? What he said was that the young man was a lecturer at the Hall of Science. Upon that point he has been directly challenged. He has been furnished with a list of the lecturers there during the past ten years, and requested to name one of them who was a working shoemaker, who was converted last winter, and died last spring at the age of thirty. All this he conceals from the readers of the Methodist Times, and instead of answering the question at issue he replies to another which has never been raised.

Mr. Hughes forgets that his story is in print. It is not like the Bible in Luther's simile, a wax nose which can be twisted into any shape. It is all very well to assert "I simply said this" or "I simply said that." We possess, in black on white, what Mr. Hughes did say, and we can read it for ourselves. Nor will the trick succeed of whittling down Clerkenwell Green and the Hall of Science into "public halls" and "the open air." The language of the story was precise, and upon it Mr. Hughes must be judged. Of course the precision was a mistake, as we told him; he overreached himself in making his story realistic, and thus delivered himself into the hands of the enemy.

The questioning of Mr. Bradlaugh's right, or the right of the Secretary of the National Secular Society, to ask for the real name of the converted Atheist, is a piece of shocking indecency. Mr. Bradlaugh's name was artfully dragged into the story to spice it up for the Methodist readers. That at least is our opinion. But whatever the reason, is there any man outside Bedlam with a spark of honor who would deny Mr. Bradlaugh's right to ask for further details of a story in which his name was frequently introduced? Nor is it easy to see how the right of the National Secular Society can be challenged. There is no other Society, at any rate in London, under whose auspices the converted Atheist could have lectured. Whether one of its "professional lecturers" or not, he must have stood upon its platform. Certainly he must have done so at the Hall of Science. What humbug it is, then, to affirm that the N. S. S. is not concerned in Mr. Hughes's story.

Equally idle is the statement that "the narrative makes no attack whatever, either on Mr. Bradlaugh or on the National Secular Society." Again we ask, who said it did? The object of the narrative was not to attack Secularists, but to show them a rancid sympathy which they are far from desiring; and, secondly, to show the superior converting power of the West End Mission and the Methodist Sisterhood.

Here, for the present, we take our leave of Mr. Hughes, his fabulous story, and his shuffling vindication. He is only an amateur as yet in the business of forgery, but he will progress with age and experience, and he may some day be able to lie like truth. Meanwhile his first effort is in print against him, and so is our exposure. Both may be a warning to future tyros in fraud, and induce them to practise their art carefully before inviting a public inspection; for the age grows more and more exacting, and will not tolerate such simple frauds as those which imposed on the credulity of the primitive Christians.

Digitized by Google

G. W. FOOTE.

ROME IN ENGLAND.

Mr. Bradlaugh in his valedictory address to the members of the National Secular Society thought well to allude to three perils to the Freethought movement which he believes loom in the near future, an anti-Jewish agitation, the Salvation Army, and the spread of the Romish Church and its appeal to the democracy. Of these dangers there can be little question that the last, if the least pressing, is the most formidable. We are neither of those who are constantly scared by the spread of Popery nor of those who pooh pooh its power. We hold, with Mr. Bradlaugh, that the enemy which we oppose has its real citadel at Rome. Catholicism is the one consistent antagonist to Freethought. Between the two there can be neither treaty nor truce. The various forms of Protestantism are so many efforts at compromise. Though built on the right of private judgment, each sect has had in imitation of Rome to set up its creed as a restraint upon the exercise of this right. And the creeds of Protestantism, even when not identical with those of Catholicism, are scarcely less opposed to reason. There was profound wisdom in the reply of Bishop Talleyrand to a Protestant who asked him how Catholics could believe in such an evident contradiction of their senses as is implied in the doctrine of transubstantiation. "Oh," said the Bishop, "the thing is quite simple; we first teach them the doctrine of the Trinity." Protestantism sets out with premises which lead to conclusions embodied in Catholicism. An infallible Bible needs an infallible interpreter. Three hundred and fifty years of Protestantism has only shown that no harmonious teaching can be drawn from its fetish book. If God authenticated his church with miracles once, why should he not do so now? Salvation through faith is no more reasonable than priestly forgiveness of sins.

Catholicism has great power in its consistency. Priests there find their instinct for sacerdotal sway embodied. Laymen content to rest on authority are relieved of the burden of thought, the anxious duty of truth seeking. Rome has vast resources, and the movement of thought which drives many outside of the Protestant Churches, sends others to seek shelter in the great Mother Church from which the Protestant Churches have sprung. As the belief in hell declines, many are prepared to accept the doctrine of Purgatory. Since dogmas no longer rouse devotion, the churches perforce must have recourse to peacock Ritualism, parodying the rites of Rome, if only to attract their audiences. The Ritualist party is fast becoming the strongest party in the Church of England. Its ultimate and consistent end is Romanism, though those who are upon a path do not always discern where it is leading them. The many disciples of Dr. Pusey who have gone on this track give sufficient warning. Since the prosecution of the Bishop of Lincoln for Ritualism, a dozen Anglican clergymen have been received into the Church of Rome, and although none of these are such important proselytes as Newman, Manning, Dalgairns, Ward, and Faber, whose perversion to Rome aroused such attention between forty and fifty years ago, it is an open secret that if the verdict goes against Bishop King the seceders from the Church of England would be more numerous and important than they have been since that period. Should political events precipitate Disestablishment it is likely that Rome would receive nearly a tenth of the English clergy.

Since 1850 the Romish Church in England has increased vastly. Its bishops have increased from 8 to 17, its priests and churches have multiplied threefold, while religious houses have increased from 17 to nearly 600, and Roman Catholic school children from 24,000 to nearly 300,000. Its proselytes have mostly been drawn from the wealthy classes. To this end the efforts of the Jesuits have been directed. In this respect there is a great contrast with Freethought. Our proselytes are mostly drawn from the poor, and though we may boast the elite of the working classes, we have few indeed who could endow our halls, even if the law permitted them to do so, and none who could place the sums of money for the support of Freethought which the Marquis of Bute and the Duke of Norfolk devote to the Church.

But it is not only among the wealthy that its efforts are directed. In every large town and district in England the Roman Catholics are now establishing societies of men and women called Ransomers, White Cross Ransomers and Red Cross Ransomers, whose main object is to bring back England to "the faith of our fathers." In view of a significant fact like this it surely behoves Freethinkers to close up their ranks and be prepared to fight superstition not simply as free lances, but in strong organisation. These Ransomers are being trained to operate upon the weak points of Protestantism, and already we see in the provincial press that they have trained pens in their service.

It is not only on proselytism that Roman Catholics rely to revive "the faith of our fathers." If they did we might be well content, since we can show at least as good a set off as our enemies. But the Church relies on two other weapons, immigration and increase of population. It is undeniable that the bulk of the increase of the Catholic population can be traced to Irish and continental immigrants. We cannot count the influence of our foreign friends on the greater freedom of Sunday observances as any sufficient set off to this. The other factor, if more subtle, is still more important. While Freethinkers are everywhere voluntarily restraining their numbers, and thereby slowly improving their social position, the Catholic Church through the means of the Confessional is inculcating on its votaries "to increase and multiply." A few generations of this would result in a vast numerical difference even were the parties equal at the outset. As it is Mr. St. George Mivart has confessed that the Church can rely on this alone for victory. But as the Church becomes more numerous by this means it is bound to become more democratic. At any rate it must be so to the extent of claiming every political privilege for its supporters, and seeing they have their full shares of public offices. Indeed by their discipline of obedience, and voting together, they will, as the experience of America shows, be able to do far more than this, and secure to their institutions large sums of money as the condition of securing the support of a united party. The recent elections in Protestant Germany, where the Ultramontane party have come out far ahead of all their divided opponents, show what a political force the Catholic Church still remains. It warns England to be on her guard and Freethinkers to prepare themselves for the coming fight. They are grossly mistaken who fancy the days of struggle are over.

J. M. Wheeler.

An Irish girl, looking at a large picture of the "Cherubs," asked her mistress, "And what is that?" "These, Mary, are the Cherubs from the foot of the Throne in the Madonna St. Sistine." "There now!" says Mary, "And here was Bridget declarin' they wuz hens—but I sez they wuz bats."

Digitized by Google

THE BRAIN AND THE BIBLE.

THOUSANDS of very estimable people in this country, who one might reasonably suppose were possessed of good brains, fail to use them on some of the most vital questions of the day. Ask their opinion on business matters and they will give you very intelligent answers; question them on politics, or inquire their views on the great social problems that engage the thought of reformers and philanthropists, and if they cannot give a decided answer they will acknowledge that these matters deserve the most serious consideration; but ask their opinion on the Bible and the view of modern thought in relation to it, and they will answer that they believe the Bible because they have been taught to do so; that it is "a good old book, and will stand when all infidel objections to it have passed into the limbo of forgetfulness." This shows how little they know of the subject, for if they would only inquire even superficially into the matter they would find that infidel objections have played such havoc with the Bible that it has effected a complete change in the aspect of its teachings. The clergy themselves recognise this fact so far that they do not now regard the Bible as an inspired record of God's views in the same sense as they did a few years ago. Many of them claim that it is inspired only in the same sense as every grand literary production is inspired. They acknowledge, indeed, that much of it is unscientific; much unhistoric; much mythical; and that some of it is incompatible with what we now regard as a high standard of morality. But while they make all these admissions when they are talking to persons who know something about the subject, they are less candid to their congregations. Indeed, they are careful above all things to cling tenaciously to the story of the Fall; for they perceive—and in this they are more logical than the late Dr. Colenso—that if this, the foundation of the Christian religion, be removed, the whole edifice must tumble about them like a house of cards.

Man, therefore, they maintain, fell in the Garden of Eden some six thousand years ago—fell spiritually, if in no other sense. After the Fall man became sinful by nature. As Dr. Parker once put it, "At the Fall man not only went down physically but intellectually. Since then he has been incapable of himself, not only of doing a good deed, but of thinking a good thought." No doubt the conceited pastor of the City Temple excludes himself from this sweeping charge, and would feel insulted if some member of his congregation told him that he had a wicked thought in his mind while he was delivering his last sermon.

If, however, the story of the Fall of Man was the only biblical statement that was opposed to reason, the clergy would long ago have set up another theory to account for the original introduction of sin into the world. The Bible, fortunately for humanity, is full of incredibly absurd statements; and any attempt to reconcile them with the "common sense" of the intelligent portion of the community must end in ignominious failure.

If the first chapter of Genesis is correct, God made a lot of men and women at the start, and Adam and Eve may not have been included among them. On the other hand, if the second chapter is right, Adam and Eve were our first parents, and the human race was propagated by an incestuous mode horrible to contemplate. And when Cain went into the Land of Nod—that's where the Lord sleeps—and got married he must have wedded his sister or his mother, for no other persons of the feminine gender were in existence, unless perhaps a few fine specimens of anthropoid apes, such as the chimpanzee and the ourang outang. Is it not insulting to people with brains to ask them to believe such biblical stories? A highly intelligent ape would grin at the mention of such fables.

Then, who that knows anything of history believes in a universal flood?—a flood that never touched China, and quite overlooked America and Australia. Some of the clergy suggest a local flood. But if it were only a local flood what was the use of Noah's Ark? Why should all the animals come into the ark "just to get out of the rain" if it only rained over a very limited area? If Jahveh wanted to save Noah and his family, why didn't he tell them to emigrate? Too much water would not then have provoked Noah to drunkenness, and his children might have been spared a disgusting sight.

Then we have the story of the Tower of Babel; how the people to frustrate the purpose of an omniscient and omnipotent God thought to make a side entrance to heaven while Jahveh's back was turned; and how Jahveh came down and confused their tongues—so that the man who spoke Hebrew last night woke up and spoke French. I daresay the language that would be used under such circumstances would be very confusing. But who believes in such a story? Nobody with brains. I have no hesitation in saying that any man who believes such a monstrous story must be classed among the majority of persons so forcibly referred to by Carlyle when he declared emphatically that Great Britain contained thirty millions of people, mostly fools.

Balaam and his intelligent moke, Samson and his poetical jawbone, Jonah's lodging in a whale's interior—such stories as these may be thrown in as make-weight, and thus constitute a fair load for the Christian to carry about with him, and in respect to which he might exclaim "I believe" when he is asked to unburden himself in regard to his "Great Faith."

Yet thousands of estimable people say they believe this nonsense. I dare not say they are knaves, though I often am candid enough to declare that they are not the wisest among their fellows. But if they are foolish in their belief now, there is no reason why they should remain so. How can we bring them to their senses? Many of them would not listen to a Freethought lecture. Yet it is our duty to save them from intellectual suicide. How can it be done? There are many ways of doing it. Let me suggest a few. Plenty of these unreasoning Christians belong to Young Men's Institutes. Freethinkers should join and give them a mild dose of Freethought in their speeches in the discussion class. That will open the ball. These Christians, too, come to business by tram in the morning. Freethinkers should give them the Freethought aspect of every question that comes on the tapis.

Many Christians are total abstainers; Freethinkers should show them by chapter and verse that the Bible is in favor of strong drink. Many Christians are interested in politics; Freethinkers should point out that Mr. Bradlaugh is just to the Irish people and will vote for Home Rule, notwithstanding the fact that the Irish members tried to keep him out of his seat; that Mr. John Morley—another Freethinker—does not ask whether a man is a Catholic or a Protestant before he consents to remove a grievance. Get the Christians to discuss with you, the Bible question is sure to come up before long. And depend upon it if it does come up brains will get the best of it in the end.

Men cannot believe what they like. Absurdities cannot always pass as profound truths. Common sense will count for something, and in the long run the dignity of people with brains will not allow them to say they believe that which the wisest of mankind now regard in the light either of ancient ignorance or arrant nonsense.

ARTHUR B. MOSS.

"Here's the devil to pay," said the printer when his office boy presented himself on Saturday.

Digitized by Google

ACID DROPS.

"From Bradlaugh to Foote," says the Rock, "is from worse to worst, for even in Secularism there are deeper depths." We tender the Rock our sincere condolence and hope it will soon recover.

There is a wag in the Star composing room. In last Saturday's issue a Sunday lecture was announced by the "Rev. G. W. Foote." As a first offence it is overlooked, but a repetition would justify an action for libel.

Slaves are generally fond of their chains. This may account for Margaret Lee's effusion on Divorce in the North American Review. Apparently she understands the subject as much as the proverbial cow understands musketry. Her remedy for the low morality of society is simple—"Let divorce be abolished." But—too lady-like alas!—she exclaims in the very next breath, "Let sceptics have their own system. A civil contract, elastic as necessary, could be drawn by each State. This would satisfy couples who do not care to face poverty, sickness, or trouble together."

The last sentence puts the lady out of court. How Ingersoll must smile at the notion that sceptical husbands and wives want a divorce law to enable them to part company when baby has the measles, or money is scarce, or either of them falls ill! Ingersoll's home is known to be one of the happiest and noblest in America. He would tell the lady, with a beaming face, that people who love each other are more likely to quarrel in prosperity than in adversity, and that two human beings who have shared the same sorrow are faster friends than two who have only shared the same pleasure. He might even ask her to take the trouble to read what he had written—not with her eyes only, but with her mind. He might also ask her to explain her proposal. Is the State to have two marriage laws, one for Christians and one for Freethinkers? Is any arrangement to be made for Christian husbands and wives who become converted to Freethought? And if so, what is to prevent Christians who want to be divorced from registering themselves as Freethinkers? It appears to us that the lady's scheme is as impracticable as her knowledge of human nature is superficial.

By the way, it would be interesting to ascertain the proportion of Freethinkers among divorced couples. Our impression is that the overwhelming majority are Christians. Anyhow we don't know a single Freethinker in England who has been divorced. We know one Freethinker, at any rate, whose wife turned Roman Catholic, and left him and her children to gallivant about the world in search of her own poor, miserable salvation. But he is too much of a man to wash his family linen in public, and would probably bear his burden to the end rather than be freed on any other terms than those of justice and delicacy.

It is amusing to see the theological warp in Christian minds on this subject. Only the other day we read a withering rebuke of "the sin" of George Eliot and George Henry Lewes. They offended against "religion" in their domestic arrangements, and hence all these tears. But the pious rebukers of "sin" never think of inquiring into the morality of the case. If they did they would find, we believe, that Lewes might have legally freed himself from his first wife if he had not been too magnanimous to drag her into a public pillory. This little fact lets all the gas out of the bubble that is so successfully floated in orthodox meetings. Lewes obeyed a higher law than his traducers are able to appreciate.

It is curious that the Vegetarian should be so given to pious goody-goody utterances. Nothing is more certain than that bloody sacrifices were the prominent features of the Old Testament, and that "Rise Peter, kill and eat" is the doctrine of the New. Orthodox Christianity is founded on salvation through blood. Yet the organ of dietetic reform laments the blindness of the Freethinker and continually talks of vegetarianism as an ordinance of God—the God who has made nature a vast system of prey, one animal living on another's life blood.

Out in Kansas a new sect called the Samaritans has started near the Blue river, founded by one Silas Wilcox. Ostensibly devoted to the welfare of the sick, they are found to be devoted to horrible practices. Wilcox openly advocates the drinking of blood as cure for all diseases, giving as his authority the fact that the Bible teaches that "the blood is the life."

At the home of John Wrinkle were found two emaciated children. On the bed lay Wrinkle, who was apparently in the last stages of consumption. When questioned about drinking the blood of the children he strenuously denied having done so. The children also denied it. Their bloodless appearance, however, excited the suspicion of the officer, and he compelled them to show their arms. Their limbs were in a terrible condition, being covered with scars around the inside of the elbow joint, showing plainly the effects of the bleeding. When confronted with this evidence of the truth of the accusation, Wrinkle acknowledged that he had availed himself of the opportunity, and asserted that the children had willingly given their blood to restore him to health. Another instance of the folly of founding practice on the word of God.

A pious baker, at The Hague, absolutely refuses to fill up the Census for himself and his family. He refers as his reason for refusal to the narrative in 2 Sam. xxiv., which relates how the Lord sent a pestilence because David numbered the children of Israel. He declares that the Russian influenza epidemic is similarly sent by the Lord as a punishment for taking the Census.

Father J. Murphy supports the right of priests to mix in politics, and says that to deny it "is to hand over the government of the world—which is God's—to Satan and his satellites." The priest always stands in his own eyes for God himself, and his adversaries appear as devils.

The Rev. John Campbell, of Buccleuch Parish Church, has brought down an avalanche on his head. He preached a teetotal sermon and pretended that the Bible, from beginning to end, taught abstinence from strong drink. Thereupon two gentlemen wrote to the Edinburgh Evening Dispatch, giving chapter and verse, and completely smashing the reverend gentleman's position. We have not seen Mr. Campbell's answer, and we never expect to.

That erratic politician, Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., preached a temperance sermon last Sunday in the Congregational Church at Anerley. He called for a new party, pledged against the drink traffic, whose leader should be neither Gladstone nor Salisbury, but Jesus Christ. Well now, that is good. Fancy the teetotal party led by the gentleman who turned seventy-five gallons of water into wine to keep the spree going at a nuptial feast! After that Lord Churchill might lead the Liberal party, Mr. Labouchere preside over the Primrose League, and Mr. Bradlaugh fill the Archbishopric of Canterbury.

Mr. Foote's visit to Reading has stirred up the place like an earthquake. The orthodox party has had Mr. Barber there several times displaying his wonderful ignorance. One of his discourses was on the Bible and Science, and Max Müller was cited against Darwin as to the origin of man. Now, if Mr. Barber will read Max Müller instead of using the stock quotations of the Christian Evidence Society, he will find that the great philologist is a far less strenuous opponent of Darwinism than he used to be. He might also reflect, or some of his audience might, that Darwin is a supreme authority in matters of biology and Max Müller none at all. There never was a more ludicrous idea than that of advancing a mere scholar, however eminent, as an authority on the question of the origin of the human race.

Mr. Barber showed his imbecile misconception of Darwinism by asking for a monkey that could produce a man now. Such nonsense is really beneath contempt. Monkeys do not produce men, but sometimes men produce something very little superior to monkeys.

Quite ignorant of the writings of Churchmen like Canon Cheyne and Dr. Driver, the worthy Barber told his ignorant audience, who received the statement with applause, that

Digitized by Google

"the Bible was written by a number of men ranging over a period of 2,000 years." Taking the Old Testament and the New, this is just a thousand years too much. Mr. Barber is either very ignorant of ordinary Biblical criticism or he requires a little elementary instruction in arithmetic.

After Barber's tribute to the holiness of the Bible it was amusing to see the treatment of a sceptic who mounted the platform and wanted the lecturer's candid opinion on the fifth chapter of Numbers. Directly he began to read this specimen of "holiness" the Christians made an uproar, and he had to leave the platform exclaiming, "You're afraid of your holy book."

Mr. Amos, the Unitarian minister, has been opposing Barber and lecturing himself against the inspiration of the Bible. No wonder, therefore, that the Reading Branch is gathering fresh strength every week.

There has been talk of a public debate at Reading. Mr. Foote has told the Branch that he is ready to discuss with any representative Christian in the town. Surely there is some minister able and willing to champion his faith in debate.

Norristown is, we believe, the place where the ex-Rev. C. B. Reynolds was tried for blasphemy. They appear to draw the color line pretty fine there. An entertainer, who is assisted by a choir of thirty girls, was engaged to give a concert in the Mount Zion Colored Church. Only ten of the girls put in an appearance, the others declining to appear before a colored audience.

Talmage went to Albany to preach upon the Ten Plagues of New York, upon which the Sun observed that he forgot that in his absence there were only nine.

The old joke that Christianity bore traces of its having been originated by fishermen, from the interdiction of meat during Lent, will lose its force this year, since the Pope gives indulgence to non-fasters on account of the influenza. This shows that secular prudence overrides ordinances even at Rome.

Mr. John Williams, a Welsh preacher at Ynysddu, evidently holds with Paul that God does not care for oxen and such animals. It was proved against him that he worked his horse while covered with sores on its back and shoulders, and with sand cracks in its feet. He was let off with a fine of £5, and at the same time we read of a man sentenced to one month's imprisonment with hard labor for stealing two oranges.

We have yet to find the crime or offence which cannot find its support in Scripture. Read the following from Birmingham, Alabama:—Rev. John B. Reese, of Girard, in this State, has fled from the country to escape the wrath excited by the story of his daughter Ella, who avers that she was assaulted by her father some years ago and has since been forced to submit to his unnatural conduct. He had quoted Scripture to ease her conscience, but her condition has rendered further concealment impossible. Reese is the father of two married daughters and his wife is still living.

The Rev. Peter Thomas McCallum seems to be a clergyman out of a job. From "The Hermitage," Barnes, he sends a proposal to the Richmond Board of Guardians, offering to act as chaplain to the workhouse without salary, if he is paid fourpence per head for every addition to the present number regularly attending the chapel. He proposes to attract them by a full choral service. He says: "This I could make easy, as one of my sons plays the oboe and the other the fife, while my daughters are proficient in the 'cello, the cornet, and the double bass. I can also do a little on the trombone, and I would willingly undertake the conductorship. I do not doubt that in a very little time, with bright and cheerful services, I could bring the whole of the inmates to chapel regularly." The rev. gentleman can evidently tootle his own trumpet as well as do a little on the trombone, and his offer was declined with thanks.

The Rev. Marmaduke Cheyne Richardson, curate of St. James's, Plumstead, figured the other day in the Woolwich County Court. He engaged furnished apartments in Blandon Terrace, with the use of linen and plate, at thirty shillings a week. But he failed to pay the rent, and also damaged the furniture by putting his feet on the couch and chairs. The trial of the case lasted two or three hours, and resulted in a verdict for the landlady. Next time she takes a clerical lodger she will probably want the rent in advance.

Margaret Hearn wanted to go to heaven, so she climbed up the Endell Street fire-escape and refused to descend her Jacob's ladder. Eventually she was taken before the Bow Street magistrate, who remanded her for the needless purpose of inquiring as to her sanity.

William Webb, of Orpington, Kent, is described as "of good position and associated with the Church." But he came up to London, and his conduct with a boy in St. James's Park brought him before magistrate Bridge, who would not take less than two bail of £500 each.

Ripon Congregational Church broke out in flames through some defect in the heating apparatus, and narrowly escaped total destruction. From the number of cases of fire on the Lord's premises we should recommend the insurance companies to charge heavy premiums.

Converting Jews is a costly process. A hairdresser in a very long road in South London lost his assistant. The young man was converted by the Jew Conversion Society, which paid him £15 down, and he used the money to go abroad with. Since then the master has got into low water. He also wants to go abroad, and talks of securing another £15 for himself.

From what Jesus Christ said we judge that the sparrows are the peculiar favorites of heaven. It is estimated that they do about £5,000,000 worth of damage to the crops in England.

Archdeacon Farrar and his friends have carried their point, and the Church of England is to ape the monastic system of Rome. It is enough to make some of the old "Reformers" turn in their graves. Able-bodied young fellows are to form Brotherhoods and take "dispensable vows" of chastity and poverty. But it appears that the "poverty" is not to be inconsistent with a secure maintenance. As for the "chastity," we shall see what we do see. Some of the clergy look as chaste as he-goats, while others look as cold and sheepish as Joseph. Perhaps it would be as well to establish the reality of the vow by making the Protestant "brothers" undergo the medical examination to which the candidates for the Romish priesthood are submitted, in order to prove that although they are to be chaste they might be otherwise. Better still, perhaps, the chastity of the "brothers" might be secured by infibulation.

The Brothers of the Cross exist in Paris to establish "the reign of God on earth." The Daily Telegraph says that "nobody knows whether they are pious lunatics or practical persons who want to make money by running an original kind of religion." Probably they are a mixture of both.

Is it true that thirty members of the West Southwark Liberal and Radical Club were chaperoned over Lambeth Palace by the Archbishop, who wound up by leading them in the Lord's Prayer? If so, we can only wonder that some of them did not see the farce of Dr. Benson's praying "Give us this day our daily bread" in a palace whose occupant is blessed with fifteen thousand a year. Why didn't they ask him for a subscription for the George Harrison fund?

Edison says, according to a writer in Harper, that the existence of a personal God can almost be proved from chemistry. Such a remark is more wonderful than the telephone. Perhaps the day is coming when theologians will be furnished with chemical apparatus, and lectures in divinity will be illustrated with hydro-oxygen light.

How true is Ingersoll's remark that with respect to the existence of God the idiot and the philosopher are on the same level. It is all a matter of imagination. There is plenty of conjecture and no knowledge. Let a man be trained to believe in God and he will see him everywhere; just as the horse, who was provided with green spectacles, ate shavings for grass.

Digitized by Google

Barnum's farewell to the British public is characteristic. The genial (and prosperous) old showman alludes to the time when he will have "joined the great, and as I believe, happy majority." This implies that Barnum has cast away the good old doctrine of hell and damnation, and accepted a heaven where everybody will be happy for ever and ever. But the boss of the greatest show on earth does not tell us why the happiness we are destined to enjoy in another life is not a little more evenly distributed in the present. Nor does he tell us how he himself could be happy in a world where there are no shows—and no gate-money.

A member of the Pall Mall Gazette staff has spent seven months in the United States as a working journalist. One of the "three great ideas" he was impressed with is this, that "the Pope has far more power in the States than in any Catholic country in the old World. The papers are afraid to print a word to which the priests take exception, and any Catholic who goes to hear Dr. M. Glynn lecture is excommunicated." This confirms what we read in the Freethought papers that reach us from the States. The Catholic Church is a growing danger to the Republic, and the day seems approaching when Catholicism and Liberalism will engage in a life-and-death struggle.

Two years ago the mystical Mrs. Dr. Anna Kingsford departed from her "earth-life" and went, as the saying is, God knows where. Last Saturday was the anniversary of her exit, and Steinway Hall was occupied by a number of persons who met to celebrate the event. It was a motley assemblage of clergymen, Theosophists, Parsees, society ladies, and politicians in search of "soul-rest." The high-priest of the occasion was Mr. George Chainey, a gentleman who was once a Unitarian, then a Freethought lecturer, then a Spiritualist, and now as mad as a hatter. America and Australia have had enough of him, and we understand he is at present seeking the means to go to Palestine and keep an appointment with the Holy Ghost, who is to make him the medium of a new revelation.

We wish Mr. Chainey no harm. He is not a dangerous lunatic, and a Freethinker might say to him, as Uncle Toby said to the fly, "Surely the world is wide enough for thee and me." But we regret to hear that he is being recommended as a lecturer to the N. S. S. Branches. Of course the Branches will do as they please. There is no authority over their choice of lecturers. But a great many Freethinkers will object to our platform being turned into a refuge for cranks, and protest that we do not "seek for truth" so minutely as to search for it in asylums.

Mr. G. Naewiger, of the Hull Branch, writes to a local paper about the tactics of the Salvation Army. He was out for a stroll with his wife and they went into the Army "barracks" in Cambridge Street. At the end of twenty minutes they found they had had enough, and wanted to retire. But a stalwart gentleman of the "chucker out" species planted his back against the door and told them they could not leave till eight o'clock. A policeman was appealed to, but this legal luminary appeared to think the British people had no right of egress from a public meeting. At length, however, the Secularist presented the doorkeeper in the house of the Lord with his card, and intimated his intention of getting out; and as he looked as if he meant business the door was reluctantly opened.

The cheek of these Salvation gentry is amazing. They appear to think the world was made for them. Were they in a majority their "General" would be the autocrat of England. The reign of the saints would begin in earnest, and everybody with a spark of independence would be glad to emigrate; though the treatment of Mr. Naewiger renders their being able to do so somewhat doubtful.

General Booth forbids his followers to go to theatre, to play cards or billiards, or even to dance. The only game he allows is walking backward in the street for the men, and jerking tambourines for the women.

There is a good story about that walking backward. An Army procession was passing down a certain street, led by a captain who faced his awkward squad and gave the public an a posteriori view of his elegant person. Seeing a rough fellow looking on, and smoking a short pipe, the captain shouted, "Why don't you drop that pipe, man? Don't you think, if the Lord meant you to smoke, he would have made your mouth a funnel?" "Well," said the smoker, "you needn't talk. Don't you think, if the Lord meant you to walk backward, he'd have turned your feet the other way about?"

Presbyterianism is the vilest, and most logical, creed ever devised. No wonder that the denunciations of men like Ingersoll and Pentecost are making the votaries of this ghastly faith ashamed. A movement in favor of "Revision" is sweeping over the States. The New York Presbytery appointed a committee to report on the question, and the result is a recommendation to omit the doctrines of Reprobation, the Damnation of Infants, and the Damnation of the Heathen. Should the recommendation be generally adopted Presbyterianism will have nearly all the damnation taken out of it, and be like a toothless old man-eating tiger.

Canon Talbot's lectures at Newcastle have, apparently been delivered in connection with the University Extension Scheme. This is a fact that should be remembered, since it shows the sectarian character of institutions that should be for the benefit of citizens of all schools of thought.

The Newcastle Chronicle devotes a leader to Canon Talbot, lauding him to the skies. "So far as we have observed," it remarks, "there has been no successful assault of his position." Now, for our part, we scarcely know whether to call this impudence or hypocrisy. Canon Talbot is ready to fence with amateur swordsmen, but he positively declines to cross weapons with any leader of scepticism. His victory, therefore, is remarkably cheap, and the Chronicle sings a pean over a laughable triumph.

The Newcastle Leader devotes an article to the subject of "Workmen and Church Going." It appears that the Wesleyan Convention held in that city complained that the working classes do not attend the gospel-shops, and the remedy they proposed was short prayers and sermons and lively music. The Leader thinks the evil lies deeper than this. It points out that churches are to a large extent social institutions. The middle classes go there to see and talk to each other, to display their dresses, and to form those little acquaintances that lead to marriage. But the working man is very little interested in these things, and as the Church doesn't appeal to him he leaves the gospel-shop severely alone. The Leader seems to propose the preaching of morality instead of doctrine; that is, the preaching of Secularism under the disguise of Christianity.

Messrs. Kegan, Paul, and Co. have published a book by a Mr. Gough entitled The Bible True from the Beginning. Mr Gough takes a funny way of proving its truth. Like Mr. Ignatius Donnelly, who finds a cipher in Shakespeare's plays showing Shakespeare was not the author, Mr. Gough finds "grade words" in the Bible showing it has an allegorical interpretation, so that the Bible as it stands is not literally true at all, but only Mr. Gough's interpretation. Before he discovered the "grade words" people were deriving hopelessly false notions of the Bible by supposing it to contain literal history.

SARAH BERNARDT AND THE VIRGIN MARY.

Sarah Bernhardt doesn't see why a Passion play should not be produced in Paris as well as at Oberammergau. She considers the character of the Virgin Mary eminently dramatic and suited to her own genius, and proposes to impersonate the B. V. M. in a play specially written by M. Haraucourt. M. Garnier, who accompanied Madame Bernhardt to America, will undertake the trying rôle of the Virgin's eldest son.

Madame Bernhardt is a public favorite in France, and will probably have her own way, but the religious papers view the prospect with horror and alarm. The Passion play may be very reverential, but who knows how soon it may lead to a burlesque. Jupiter, Apollo, and other heathen gods have often been brought upon the English stage, and there are plenty who think the Christian deities quite as well suited to the purposes of farce or travesty.

Digitized by Google

MR. FOOTE'S ENGAGEMENTS.

Sunday, March 2, Secular Hall, Rusholme Boad, All Saints, Manchester, at 11, 3, and 6.30.

Friday, March 7, Gladstone Hall, Military Road, Chatham, at 8, "What has Christianity done?"

March 9, Camberwell; 16, Cardiff; 19, Southwark Radical Club; 23 and 30, Hall of Science, London.

April 6, Milton Hall; 9, Shelley Society 13, Portsmouth; 20, Hall of Science; 27, Hall of Science, London.

May 4, Newcastle; 11, South Shields; 18, Hall of Science, London; 25, N. S. S. Conference.

June 1, Hall of Science London; 8, Gladstone Radical Club and Hall of Science, London.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

LITERARY communications to be addressed to the Editor, 14 Clerkenwell Green, London, E.C. All business communications to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C.

THE Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the office, post free to any part of Europe, America, Canada and Egypt, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 6s. 6d.; Half Year, 3s. 3d.; Three Months, 1s. 7½d. Australia, China and Africa:—One Year, 8s. 8d.; Half Year, 4s. 4d.; Three Months, 2s. 2d. India:—One Year, 10s. 10d.; Half Year, 5s.. 5d. Three Months. 2s. 8½d.

SCALE OF ADVERTISEMENTS.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 3s; Half Column, 15s.; Column, £1 10s. Special terms for repetitions

IT being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will in future receive the number when their subscription expires in a colored wrapper.

A SOLDIER.—We do not know of any newsagent at York who sells the Freethinker. Should this meet the eye of any reader who knows of one, we shall be obliged if he will kindly send us the address.

G. NAEWIGER (Hull) acknowledges receipt of parcels of literature from Hull, Berlin, London and Glasgow.—Answer to question, No.

Freethinker Circulation Fund.—E. Day, 1s.; J. T., 2s. 6d.

W. M. B.—If you reject the Bible as an inspired book we have much in common. Pleased to learn that, although a Unitarian, you find the Freethinker so interesting and useful.

E. D.—Glad to hear you thought the first of the course of free lectures at the Hall of Science a "magnificent success' We believe the course will entail very little cost to the Federation. There was a good collection the first night, although the box arrangements were so inadequate.

T. WILLETT.—Thanks See "Acid Drops."

W. LAPPAGE.—Mr. Foote acknowledges with thanks the "hearty congratulations' of the Camberwell Branch on his election to the Presidency.

PERSONNE.—Yes, we have since seen that it was not quite so bad as we thought.

E. HOLLAND.—Sorry to hear the agents are so bigoted. Your newsagent should have insisted on being supplied. Your order and cheque are passed to Mr. Forder.

T. THURLOW.—We are never offended by honest frankness. The West Ham Branch is of course not implicated by what Mr. Carter said, but he certainly spoke as though his sentiments were shared by some members; and, if that be a fact, those members should have protested when Mr. Foote was invited to give a benefit lecture We are glad to learn that Mr. Carter only spoke for himself; and, in any case, we should not forget that your Branch includes some of the best workers in our party. Your worthy president, for instance, would be an honor to any cause.

D. GOW.—Thanks. See "Acid Drops."

W. KNIGHT.—Mr Foote will do his best, and that is all that any man can promise. See "Acid Drops."

J. KEAST.—We fear you estimate our services and ability too highly. Mr. Foote is coming to Bristol with Mr. Forder to establish a bonâ-fide working Branch

SCRUTATOR.—Thanks for the paper. We dare say there are printer's errors now and then in the Freethinker, but we cannot afford to pay a special proof-reader. The wonder is that the work is done so well

T. WILLIAMS.—Write to F. Morris, 21 Stacey Road, Cardiff.

W. H. T.—Get our Bible Contradictions (4d.), and you will find plenty.

C. FRAKE.—We are not surprised. The clergy hate discussion, and for an excellent reason. You will have to send the Guide Notices weekly, as we cannot keep monthly lists.

H. ROWDEN.—1879, p. 86, line 20 from bottom, should be 1789. Thanks for pointing out the error.

E. S. JONES.—We would rather be spared. Mr. Wise has yet to learn the common amenities of civilised correspondence.

OLDHAM.—The Freethinker can be bought at 172 Manchester Street.

A. CLAY.—We are much obliged. See "Sugar Plums."

D. BAKER.—Very glad to have the approval and support of a veteran like yourself There is much to be said about the future, and the Conference in May will be vastly important.

SPIRITUAL FREETHINKER.—You seem to be arguing in a circle. However, we are pleased to hear you are circulating our exposure of the Price Hughes story.

G. CROOKSON. newsagent, Hoyland Common, Barnsley, says "I have got several new subscribers to the Freethinker since I exhibited the placard." This correspondent inquires about the man Lee, who could not be hung because the apparatus would not act. The man was reprieved, but he is still in prison. The story of his being released, in consequence of the death-bed confession of the real murderer, is a recent fiction. The Home Office contradicted the newspaper yarns about a year ago.

W. SIMONS.—Cuttings are always welcome.

E. PINDER.—Glad to hear you are now going to join the N. S S. Apply to Mr. Forder, secretary, at 28 Stonecutter Street, E. C. The subscription is 4s. per year, or 1s. per quarter Freethought does not seem in a lively way at Leicester. Why not see Mr. Forder on Sunday evening?

A B WAKEFIELD.—See "Sugar Plums." The Farsley project fell through. Glad to see you are moving.

W. T. LEEKEY.—You are mistaken. Mr Broadhurst M. P. is a very good Christian. We remember his look of horror when we sat next him on the St. James's Hall platform and he suddenly learnt who was his right-hand neighbor.

C. DOEG.—The Liverpool friends should mix their congratulations with pity. The Presidency is anything but a bed of roses.

MILTON HALL.—The reverse is nearer the truth. Mrs. Besant has not attended an N. S. S. executive meeting for many months.

JAMES HOOPER.—If more life can be infused into the party there will be more work for the lecturers.

PAPERS RECEIVED.—Boston Investigator—Progressive Thinker — Liberator — Der Arme Teufel — Secular Thought — Liberator—Truthseeker—Market Rasen Mail Bulletin des Sommaires — Open Court — Liberty — Overland Ceylon Observer — Leeds Daily News — Freethought — Evening Standard—The Brooklyn World—Hull Daily News—Freidenker—Neues Freireligioses Sonntags-Blatt—Menschenthum —Philadelphia Inquirer—Standard—Blackburn Times—The Christian—The Catholic Educator—Newcastle Daily Leader —Dundee People's Journal—Daily Graphic—Shields Daily Gazette—Weekly Dispatch—Swindon Advertiser—Western Mail—La Raison—Echo—Edinburgh Evening News—Islington Gazette—Ironclad Age—Reading Observer.

FRIENDS who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish our attention directed.

CORRESPONDENCE should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

SUGAR PLUMS.

THE course of Thursday evening free lectures at the London Hall of Science, under the auspices of the Secular Federation, began with éclat on Feb. 20. There was a splendid audience when Mr. R. O. Smith took the chair, and the people came streaming in while he was speaking. Mr. Foote, who was in good form, lectured on "Freethought and God." After the lecture there was an hour's discussion, carried on, on the Christian side, by the Rev. C. L. Engstrom, the secretary of the Christian Evidence Society.

THE second lecture on "Freethought and the Bible" will be delivered by Mr. J. M. Robertson, and Mr. Foote will take the chair. This number of the Freethinker will be in the hands of many of our London readers before the lecture takes place. May we beg of them to bring their orthodox friends if at all possible? Those are the folk we want to reach. Mr. Robertson is able and scholarly; his lecture is sure to be interesting and instructive; and he is well able to hold his own in discussion.

MR. G. STANDRING delivers the third lecture on "The Church and the People" next Thursday evening (March 6). He will also be opposed by a representative of the Christian Evidence Society, and will probably take a good deal of confuting. The last lecture will be by Mr. Foote on March 13, the subject being "Freethought and Christ."

SHOULD this experiment prove as successful as it promises, the London Secular Federation will organise courses of week-night free lectures, with discussion, in other parts of the metropolis. Freethinkers who can give financial assistance should send donations to the hon.

Digitized by Google

treasurer, R. O. Smith, 142 Old Street, E.C., or direct to ourselves. Every penny received will be acknowledged—and accounted for. The lecturers, by the way, are giving their services gratuitously, so that the expenses—at least for the present—are confined to rent, printing, and advertising.

AT Baskerville Hall, Birmingham, on Sunday, the following resolution was carried and ordered to be signed by the chairman, Mr. Daniel Baker:—"That this meeting of members and friends of the N. S. S., while deploring the necessity for Mr. Bradlaugh's resignation, desires to record its satisfaction at the election of Mr. G. W. Foote, and promises the new President as true and loyal a following as was accorded to his predecessor."

THERE was a large audience at the Camberwell Secular Hall on Sunday evening, Mr. F. Millar being the lecturer. After the lecture the following resolution was proposed by Mr. W. Lappage, seconded by Mr. Hartman, and carried unanimously:—"That this meeting congratulates Mr. Foote on his becoming the President of the National Secular Society, and heartily approves his advocacy of Freethought and the persistent manner in which he opposes the dogmas of the Christian Church."

AS the editor of this journal has his duties increased by his election as President of the N. S. S., we venture to appeal to our readers for assistance in the shape of promoting our circulation. A great deal can be done by getting newsagents to sell and if possible display the Freethinker. Here is a case in point. One of our Oldham friends induced a newsagent to put the Freethinker in his window, and told him, if he ordered half a dozen copies, that the unsold copies should be paid for. The result was that every copy was sold between Thursday night and Saturday morning.

MANY of our readers, who would pay twopence for the Freethinker sooner than lose it, might help us by taking an extra weekly copy and circulating it amongst their acquaintances. Were a thousand readers to do this (as they might) the editor would be in receipt of journeyman's wages for his work on the paper, whereas it is all a labor of love at present.

WE have just issued Ingersoll's new article "Why am I an Agnostic?" in pamphlet form. It should have a good circulation.

THE Manchester Secular Hall, we are glad to hear, is to be refurnished with more comfortable seats. In order to raise the wherewithal a bazaar will be held on the last two days in March. Mr. Hemingway, the hon. secretary, 25 Higher Chatham Street, will be glad to receive any articles for sale on that occasion. Those who prefer it can send money instead. Five-pound notes will be acceptable, and shillings will not be refused.

WE see from the Blackburn Times that Mr. Foote's lecture on Atheism is still a topic of discussion. The last number of that journal contains a short letter by G. Watts, and a long letter by W. E. Coller, on the subject. Mr. Coller "invites Mr. Foote" to explain this, that, and the other difficulty. Mr. Foote replies that his lecture was an answer to the Rev. J. O. Davies. If that gentleman makes a public rejoinder Mr. Foote will take the trouble to pen a reply. But he is far too busy to discuss in all the local papers of England with all the persons who forget to avail themselves of the opportunity of discussion which is always afforded at the close of his lectures.

FOR years the Derby Branch has been looking out for premises. At length it is able to procure a hall suitable for lectures. But the place requires furnishing, and it has been decided to form a Furnishing Company, with 200 shares at 5s. each, bearing 5 per cent. interest, the Company to have the privilege of buying from the shareholders willing to sell at any time in favor of the Branch. All who wish to aid in this good work should communicate with Mr. H. McGuinness, hon. sec., 20 Newland Street, Derby.

THE Portsmouth Branch is to have a set debate to-day (March 2) on Vegetarianism. Both disputants are members, both have been secretary, and both president. Mr. Hore is an ardent vegetarian, and Mr. Lush has been one but is now of the opposite persuasion. Both gentlemen are good speakers and the debate should be interesting.

AN effort is being made to revive the Freethought organisation and propaganda in the West Riding of Yorkshire. A Conference is to be held to-day (March 2) at Laycock's Temperance Hotel, Kirkgate, Bradford, at 3 p.m. prompt. The conveners are H. Smith (Farsley), John Grange (Farsley), W. Kay (Bradford), and J. G. Fisher (Leeds). Mr. A. B. Wakefield is acting as secretary pro tem. It is to be hoped that the Conference will be well attended and animated by a practical spirit.

THE annual report of the Glasgow Branch is not too cheerful. The balance-sheet is all right, but some of the members are cool in the cause. The worst is that the hall has been "inadvertently" let over their heads by the agent, and the Branch will have to find fresh quarters in May. We hope the crisis will unite the members and put them all on their mettle.

MR. W. CLARK lectured at Liverpool on Sunday and gave great satisfaction. The secretary reports him as an acquisition to our platform.

THE Church papers have been vehemently urging that Her Majesty should put her veto on the Victorian Divorce Bill, which accepts as grounds of divorce for either man or woman desertion for three years; habitual drunkenness with cruelty, or with neglect of household duties in the case of the wife; and sentence for crime or violent assaults. Lord Knutsford has, however, wisely advised the Queen to let the colonies have home rule in this matter.

MR. LESLIE M. JOHNSON, a member of the North Shields School Board, and also a member of the South Shields Branch of the N. S. S., contributes an excellent letter to the Shields Daily Gazette in reply to the Rev. J. Morris on the subject of Canon Talbot's lectures. Such letters in the local press are a great aid to our movement.

MR. FREDERICK HARRISON lectured at Newton Hall on Sunday afternoon, his subject being some great books of History. Referring to Carlyle's magnum opus, he said that Frederick was, of course, the greatest man of his century. We add that Frederick the Great was a Freethinker.

THE secretary of the Chatham Secular Society has posted four dozen copies of Mr. Foote's exposure of the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes's conversion story to 19 Church of England clergymen, 14 Nonconformist ministers, 17 laymen, and 2 local papers.

SWEDISH PRISONER'S FUND.—Mr. and Mrs. Hampson, 5s.; T. Holstead, 1s.; J. Doughty, 1s.; J. Scarrott, 10s.; F. E. (Reading), 5s.—R. Forder, Secretary.

"DEMOS," says Grant Allen, "is breaking away fast from the old teachers and the old faiths, and is listening to new guides who directly or indirectly will lead him to places little dreamt of in Dr. Joseph Parker's smug City Temple philosophy."

"A SOLDIER" of the Duke of Wellington's Own, now stationed at York, tells us that many of his comrades, who have recently returned from India, are very sceptical and generally use the religious tracts given to them for pipe lights. One of the men says his eyes were first opened in India. At the first Church Parade he attended there a collection was made for "the starving poor of London," and the thought struck him that it was a gigantic system of humbug to collect money in England to convert the Hindoos, and then to collect money in India for "the starving poor of London."

DR. G. W. BROWN'S Oriental Researches, in which he gives many facts showing the origin of Jewish and Christian legends, has now reached a second edition.

WE notice in El Liberal that Senor Odon de Buen, the representative of Barcelona at the International Conference of Freethinkers at Paris, was one of the leading speakers at an important Republican assembly. Senor O. de Buen is professor of natural history at the University of Barcelona, and a Darwinian as well as Republican and Freethinker.

Digitized by Google

"SIXTY Years of an Agitator's Life" is the title which Mr. G. J. Holyoake has given to his interesting autobiographical reminiscences which are now appearing in the Newcastle Weekly Chronicle. Mr. Holyoake warns his readers that among his acquaintances have been sixty persons who have been imprisoned, hung, or beheaded.

BABU KALIPRASANNA KAVYABISHARAD, who some years ago edited The Anti-Christian at Calcutta, has now started a monthly Freethought journal entitled The Cosmopolitan. We wish the new venture all success. It is published by the editor at the Secular Press, Bhowanipore.

THE Annual Congress of the Belgian Freethought Societies will be held on Easter Sunday and Easter Monday (April 6 and 7) at Joliment. M. Emile Feron, the able president of the Libre Pensée, of Brussels has had to resign from over-work, and our sympathetic friend Leon Furnemont has been elected in his place.

CELESTINE EDWARDS, the black preacher, held forth at Shoreditch Town Hall on Tuesday evening. His nominal subject was the Tactics of Atheism. His actual subject was anything and everything. He showed his white teeth over a feeble little joke about Mr. Foote being now the head of the movement; but the audience, which was a large one, could not muster a laugh to keep him company. Mr. Sam Standring, who opposed, remarked that Mr. Bradlaugh knew Mr. Foote would keep the Freethought flag unfurled, and so long as he did so the party would fight around him. This was greeted with prolonged cheering, which rather disconcerted the colored gentleman. Mr. Standring pinned him neatly also over the Hall of Science free lectures, and Edwards' reply fell flat on the meeting.

MR. C. J. HUNT, one of our energetic open-air lecturers, has been made responsible for the debts of the defunct Bruno Club. In order to help him out of the difficulty his friends are organising a concert in the Dauntless Hall, Lisson Grove. It will take place next Tuesday evening, and the tickets (1s. each) can be obtained of Mr. Forder. Persons who cannot go may buy tickets and help Mr. Hunt in this emergency.

MR. FOOTE'S letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury is again crowded out. The conclusion will take precedence of other articles in our next.

INGERSOLL ON FREETHOUGHT.

[A symposium on the subject of the affirmative side of Freethought is now appearing in the New York Truthseeker. It opens with the following contribution from Colonel Ingersoll.]

"Is there an affirmative, positive, constructive side to Freethought?"

The object of the Freethinker is to ascertain the truth—the conditions of well-being—to the end that this life will be made of value. This is the affirmative, positive, and constructive side.

Without liberty there is no such thing as real happiness. There may be the contentment of the slave—of one who is glad that he has passed the day without a beating—one who is happy because he has had enough to eat—but the highest possible idea of happiness exists only with freedom.

All religious systems enslave the mind. Certain things are demanded—certain things must be believed—certain things must be done—and the man who becomes the subject or servant of this superstition must give up all idea of individuality or hope of intellectual growth and progress.

The religionist informs us that there is somewhere in the universe an orthodox God, who is endeavoring to govern the world, and who for this purpose resorts to famine and flood—to earthquake and pestilence—and who, as a last resort, gets up a revival of religion. That is called "affirmative and positive."

The man of sense knows that no such God exists, and thereupon he affirms that the orthodox doctrine is infinitely absurd. This is called a "negation." But to my mind it is an affirmation, and is a part of the positive side of Freethought.

A man who compels this Deity to abdicate his throne renders a vast and splendid service to the human race.

As long as men believe in tyranny in heaven they will practice tyranny on earth. Most people are exceedingly imitative, and nothing is so gratifying to the average orthodox man as to be like his God.

These same Christians tell us that nearly everybody is to be punished forever, while a few fortunate Christians who were elected and selected billions of ages before the world was created, are to be happy. This they call "the tidings of great joy." The Freethinker denounces this doctrine as infamous beyond the power of words to express. He says, and says clearly, that a God who would create a human being knowing that that being was to be eternally miserable, must of necessity be an infinite fiend.

The free man, into whose brain the serpent of superstition has not crept, knows that the dogma of eternal pain is an infinite falsehood. He also knows—if the dogma be true—that every decent human being should hate, with every drop of his blood, the creator of the universe. He also knows—if he knows anything—that no decent human being could be happy in heaven with a majority of the human race in hell. He knows that a mother could not enjoy the society of Christ with her children in perdition; and if she could, he knows that such a mother is simply a wild beast. The free man knows that the angelic hosts, under such circumstances, could not enjoy themselves, unless they had the hearts of boa constrictors.

It will thus be seen that there is an affirmative, a positive a constructive side to Freethought. What is the positive side

First. A denial of all orthodox falsehoods—an exposure o all superstitions. This is simply clearing the gronnd, to the end that seeds of value may be planted. It is necessary, first, to fell the trees, to destroy the poisonous vines, to drive out the wild beasts. Then comes another phase—another kind of work. The Freethinker knows that the universe is natural—that there is no room, even in infinite space, for the miraculous, for the impossible. The Freethinker knows, or feels that he knows, that there is no sovereign of the universe who, like some petty king or tyrant, delights in showing his authority. He feels that all in the universe are conditioned beings, and that only those are happy who live in accordance with the conditions of happiness, and that this fact or truth or philosophy embraces all men and all gods—if there be gods.

The positive side is this: That every good action has good consequences—that it bears good fruit forever—and that every bad action has evil consequences, and bears bad fruit. The Freethinker also asserts that every man must bear the consequences of his actions—that he must reap what he sows, and that he cannot be justified by the goodness of another, or damned for the wickedness of another.

There is still another side, and that is this: The Free thinker knows that all the priests and cardinals and popes know nothing of the supernatural—they know nothing about gods or angels or heavens or hells—nothing about inspired books or Holy Ghosts, or incarnations or atonements. He knows that all this is superstition pure and simple. He knows also that these people—from pope to priest, from bishop to parson, do not the slightest good in this world—that they live upon the labor of others—that they earn nothing themselves—that they contribute nothing towards the happiness, or the well-being, or the wealth, of mankind. He knows that they trade and traffic in ignorance and fear, that they make merchandise of hope and grief—and he also knows that in every religion the priest insists on five things: First: There is a God; Second: He has made known his will; Third: He has selected me to explain this message; Fourth: We will now take up a collection; and Fifth: Those who fail to subscribe will certainly be damned.

The positive side of Freethought is to find out the truth—the facts of nature—to the end that we may take advantage of those truths, of those facts, for the purpose of feeding and clothing and educating mankind.

In the first place, we wish to find that which will lengthen human life—that which will prevent or kill disease—that which will do away with pain—that which will preserve or give us health.

We also want to go in partnership with these forces of nature,

Digitized by Google

to the end that we may be well fed and clothed—that we may have good houses that protect us from heat and cold. And beyond this—beyond these simple necessities—there are still wants and aspirations, and Freethought will give us the highest possible in art—the most wonderful and thrilling in music—the greatest paintings, the most marvellous sculpture—in other words, Freethought will develope the brain to its utmost capacity. Freethought is the mother of art and science, of morality and happiness.

It is charged by the worshippers of the Jewish myth, that we destroy, that we do not build.

What have we destroyed? We have destroyed the idea that a monster created and governs this world—the declaration that a God of infinite mercy and compassion upheld slavery and polygamy, and commanded the destruction of men, women, and babes. We have destroyed the idea that this monster created a few of his children for eternal joy, and the vast majority for everlasting pain. We have destroyed the infinite absurdity that salvation depends upon belief, that investigation is dangerous, and that the torch of reason lights only the way to hell. We have taken a grinning devil from every grave, and the curse from death—and in the place of these dogmas, of these infamies, we have put that which is natural and that which commends itself to the heart and brain.

Instead of loving God, we love each other. Instead of the religion of the sky—the religion of this world—the religion of the family—the love of husband for wife, of wife for husband—the love of all for children. So that now the real religion is: Let us live for each other; let us live for this world, without regard for the past and without fear for the future. Let us use our faculties and our powers for the benefit of ourselves and others, knowing that if there be another world, the same philosophy that gives us joy here will make us happy here.

Nothing can be more absurd than the idea that we can do something to please or displease an infinite being. If our thoughts and actions can lessen or increase the happiness of God, then to that extent God is the slave and victim of man.

The energies of the world have been wasted in the service of a phantom; millions of priests have lived on the industry of others, and no effort has been spared to prevent the intellectual freedom of mankind.

We know, if we know anything, that supernatural religion has no foundation except falsehood and mistake. To expose these falsehoods—to correct these mistakes—to build the fabric of civilisation on the foundation of demonstrated truth—is the task of the Freethinker. To destroy guideboards that point in the wrong direction—to correct charts that lure to reef and wreck—to drive the fiend of fear from the mind—to protect the cradle from the serpent of superstition, and dispel the darkness of ignorance with the sun of science, is the task of the Freethinker.

What constructive work has been done by the Church? Christianity gave us a flat world a few thousand years old—a heaven above it where Jehovah dwells, and a hell below it where most people will dwell. Christianity took the ground that a certain belief was necessary to salvation, and that this belief was far better and of more importance than the practice of all the virtues. It became the enemy of investigation—the bitter and relentless foe of reason and the liberty of thought. It committed every crime and practised every cruelty in the propagation of its creed. It drew the sword against the freedom of the world. It established schools and universities for the preservation of ignorance. It claimed to have within its keeping the source and standard of all truth. If the Church had succeeded the sciences could not have existed.

Freethought has given us all that we have of value. It has been the great constructive force. It is the only discoverer, and every science is its child.

DR. HUTCHINSON STIRLING, the Scotch Hegelian, holds, and we think rightly, that Darwinism is fatal to natural theology. Giving one of the Gifford lectures at the Edinburgh University he observed that to the design argument Darwin's theory was fatal, and Darwin himself was not only aware of that, but in express terms acknowledged it. The result of his theory was that if natural selection were true, design was false, and that if that were right there was an end of all natural theology. Dr. Stirling is, of course, a Theist and an anti-Darwinian, but he sees that those only bamboozle themselves who seek to reconcile evolution with natural theology.

JOB.

An authentic account of the origin of his tribulations; from an old Celestial betting-book now in the Museum of Religions.

One evening King Jahveh contentedly sat
Enjoying his "wine from the wood,"
When there came to his portal a smart rat-tat-tat,
Jumping up he exclaimed "who the dickens is that
Who thus boldly dares to intrude?"

But Jeames soon assuaged his Majesty's ire
By announcing an elderly gent—
Hook-nosed, long-eared, dressed in sable attire—
God knew him, 'twas Satan the champion liar,
Whom to hell for his glory he'd sent.

"From whence comest thou," said he with a smile,
As he motioned his guest to a seat;
"From going to and fro in the earth to beguile
Those fools you've created, and many a mile
I have walked up and down on the beat."

Then he drank to his host in a cup of champagne.
And sat himself down for the night,
And through pledging each other again and again
I think from what followed it seems pretty plain
That they both got infernally tight.

For they soon commenced bragging of what they had done
And what they were able to do;
Said the Devil, "the Jews are all mine, every one—
Aye, the whole human race—there's none under the sun
What cares a brass farthing for you."

Cried Jahveh, "I'm King of the earth and the skies,—
In fact, I am monarch of space
And all it contains; I'm exceedingly wise!
Yet within mine own house the vile father of lies
Dares cheek me like this to my face."

"Hold hard," said the Devil, "your anger restrain—
Your temper seems out of repair—
From such exhibitions the wise should refrain,
Come fill up the tankards, let's liquor again
I think we can soon put this square.

"I've considered old Job, your particular pet,
And I find him choke-full of your grace,
But, although he's withstood all my cunning as yet,
If you'll let me get at him, a gallon I'll bet
That I'll make him curse you to your face."

"Done" said King Jahveh, "go do what you will,
Only spare the old gentleman's life;
The blood of his children you truly may spill,
His flocks and his herds you are welcome to kill,
And—do what you like with his wife."

Thus did Satan the sinful, and Jahveh the just,
Their little transaction record,
And he whom the sequel might interest, must
Read the life of the man who put implicit trust
In the demon nick-named the "Good Lord."

T. CLARK.

THE EDDICATED PARSON.

It was Elder Buzzell who called on a worthy deacon to open a meeting with prayer, and was surprised when the good man began his petition with: "O, thou great, insignificent God."

"Omnipotent, brother; you mean omnipotent God," whispered the horrified pastor.

"Huh!" ejaculated the surprised supplicant; "what's that you say?"

The preacher repeated the correction, whereupon the deacon continued his prayer to a great length and concluded as follows:

"Finally, Lord, bless our eddicated parson. Stuff him with religion as well as with words; break him of the habit of fault-findin', and, if possible, at the 'leventh hour gather him with the saints in thy kingdom."

OBITUARY.—The last dying request of Robert Wardle, of West Hartlepool, was that the Secularist burial service might be read at his funeral Although not a member of the Secularist Society his wish was acceded to by Mr. James McNamee, who read the burial service composed by Austin Holyoake. A good report appears in the Northern Daily Mail, which gives some portions of the address.

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY MEETINGS.

LONDON.

Ball's Pond Secular Hall, 86 Newington Green Road, N., 7, Mr. John B. Coppock, "The Age of the Earth."

Battersea—The Shed of Truth, Prince of Wales's Road, 7.30, G. Bernard Shaw, "Socialism v. Secularism."

Bethnal Green—2 Railway Place, Cambridge Road (temporary premises), 8.15, Mr. Charles Bentley, "The Earth's place in the Universe." Admisson free.

Camberwell—61 New Church Road, S.E., 7.30, Mrs. Annie Besant, "Deluges, Biblical and Real."

Claremont Hall, Penton Street, Pentonville Road, N., at 7, Mr. S. Standring, "God's Paradox: Jesus."

Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, E.C., 7. Mr. Geo. Chainey, "Episodes in a Life of Religious Adventure."

Hyde Park, near Marble Arch; 11.15, Mr. C. J. Hunt, "Theism and Atheism."

Milton Hall, Kentish Town Road, N.W., 7.30, Mr. T. Parris, "Why I became a Freethinker."

New Southgate, Betstyle Bridge, 11.30, Mr. S. Standring, "God's Comical Ways."

Old Southgate—Cromwell Hall, 7, Mr. H. Courtney, "The Apostles' Creed."

Westminster—Liberal and Radical Club, Chapter Street, 7, Mrs. Thornton Smith, "Has Man a Soul?"

Wood Green—Jolly Butchers' Hill, 11, various speakers.

Woolwich—"Sussex Arms," Assembly Room, 60 Plumstead Road, 7.30, Mr. A. B. Moss, "A Freethinker's Bible."

COUNTRY.

Birmingham—Baskerville Hall, Crescent, at 7, orchestral and miscellaneous entertainment.

Derby Branch, 20 Newland Street; at 6.30, an important meeting of members.

Glasgow—Ramshorn Hall, 122 Ingram Street; at 6.30, Mr. J. P. Gilmour, "Central Africa." With lantern illustrations.

Heckmondwike—at Mr. J. Parker's, Oxford Street, at 6.15, a musical evening.

Liverpool—Camden Hall, Camden Street, at 11, committee meeting; at 3, "Emotionalism, a Factor in the World's Progress;" at 7, Mr. D. S. Collins (a Christian), "Has Christianity been Tried?"

Portsmouth Branch, Wellington Hall, Southsea; at 7, debate on Vegetarianism between Messrs. Hore and Lush.

Sheffield—Hall of Science, Rockingham Street; at 7, special musical evening, instrumental and vocal, recitations. March 5, at 8, members and friends' dance.

South Shields—Captain Duncan's Navigation Schools, King Street, 7, Mr. Waddington, "The Second Advent of Christ, Critically Examined in the Light of Reason and Science."

LECTURERS' ENGAGEMENTS.

Arthur B. Moss, 44 Credon Road, London, S.E.—March 2, Woolwich; 23, Milton Hall; 30, Woolwich. April 6 (morning), Kingsland Green (evening), Ball's Pond; 13, Camberwell. May 18 (morning), Clerkenwell Green, (evening), Ball's Pond; 25, Regent's Park. June 15, Ball's Pond; 29, Mile End. July 13, Mile End.

Tolman-Garner, 8 Heyworth Road, Stratford, London, E.—March 9, Woolwich; 16 (morning), West Ham; 23, Woolwich; 30, Westminster. May 4 (morning), Mile End Waste; 11, Clerkenwell Green; 18 (afternoon), Regent's Park; 25 (morning), Hyde Park. June 1 (morning), Mile End Waste; 8 (morning), Clerkwell Green.

James Hooper, 11 Upper Eldon Street, Sneinton, Nottingham.—March 2, Grimsby; 9, Nottingham. April 13, Nottingham.

E. Stanley Jones, 53 Park Street, Toxteth, Liverpool—March 16, Liverpool.

T. Thurlow, 7 Dickson's Villas, Rutland Road, East Ham.—March 9, Hyde Park. April 13 (evening), Plaistow; 27, Hyde Park.

H. Smith, 3 Breck Place, Breck Road, Everton Road, Liverpool—March 9, Liverpool. April 6, Liverpool.

PROGRESSIVE PUBLISHING CO.'S LIST.

All orders to be sent, with remittance, to R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C. Rate of postage—Orders under 3d., one halfpenny; orders under 6d. one penny. Orders over 6d. post free.

G. W. FOOTE.

	s.	d.
PRISONER FOR BLASPHEMY. Cloth	2	6
A Full History of his Three Trials and Twelve Months' Imprisonment. Copies in paper covers, soiled, 6d.
IS SOCIALISM SOUND?	1	0
Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant.
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
CHRISTIANITY AND SECULARISM	1	0
Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. In paper covers.
Superior edition, in cloth	1	6
INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS	0	6
Second edition, enlarged.
Superior edition, in cloth	1	3
DARWIN ON GOD	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0
Contents:—Darwin's Grandfather—Darwin's Father—Darwin's Early Piety—Almost a Clergyman—On Board the "Beagle"—Settling at Down—Death and Burial—Purpose of Pamphlet—Some Objections—Darwin Abandons Christianity—Deism—Creation—Origin of Life—Origin of Man—Animism—A Personal God—Design—Divine Beneficence—Religion and Morality—Agnosticism and Atheism.
DEFENCE OF FREE SPEECH	0	4
Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes.
LETTERS TO JESUS CHRIST	0	4
PHILOSOPHY OF SECULARISM	0	3
THE BIBLE GOD	0	2
THE FOLLY OF PRAYER	0	2
CHRISTIANITY AND PROGRESS	0	2
A Reply to Mr Gladstone.
WHAT WAS CHRIST?	0	2
A Reply to J. S. Mill.
THE DYING ATHEIST. A Story	0	1
WAS JESUS INSANE?	0	1
A searching inquiry into the mental condition of the Prophet of Nazareth.
THE SHADOW OF THE SWORD	0	2
A moral and statistical Essay on War.
ROYAL PAUPERS	0	2
Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty.
BIBLE HEROES—First Series, in elegant wrapper ...	1	0
(1) Mr. Adam, (2) Captain Noah, (3) Father Abraham, (4) Juggling Jacob, (5) Master Joseph, (6) Joseph's Brethren, (7) Holy Moses I., (8) Holy Moses II., (9) Parson Aaron, (10) General Joshua, (11) Jephthah and Co., (12) Professor Samson. One Penny each singly.
BIBLE HEROES—Second Series, in elegant wrapper...	1	0
(13) Prophet Samuel, (14) King Saul, (15) Saint David I., (16) Saint David II., (17) Sultan Solomon, (18) Poor Job, (19) Hairy Elijah, (20) Bald Elisha, (21) General Jehu, (22) Doctor Daniel, (23) The Prophets (Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Hosea); (24) St. Peter, (25) St. Paul
MRS. BESANT'S THEOSOPHY	0	2
A Candid Criticism.
THEOSOPHY AND SECULARISM..	0	2
A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant.
THE NEW CAGLIOSTRO	0	2
An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky.

COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

MISTAKES OF MOSES	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth	1	6
Only Complete Edition published in England
DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT	0	6
Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy.
REPLY TO GLADSTONE	0	4
With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler.
ROME OR REASON? Reply to Cardinal Manning	0	4
FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Rev. Dr. Field ...	0	2
GOD AND MAN. Second Reply to Dr. Field	0	2
THE DYING CREED	0	2
THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH	0	2
THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION	0	2
A Discussion with Hon. F. D. Courdert and Gov. S. L. Woodford.
ART AND MORALITY	0	2
DO I BLASPHEME?	0	2
THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE	0	2
THE GREAT MISTAKE	0	1
LIVE TOPICS	0	1
MYTH AND MIRACLE	0	1
REAL BLASPHEMY	0	1
SOCIAL SALVATION	0	2

G. W. FOOTE and J. M. WHEELER.

CRIMES OF CHRISTIANITY. Vol. I. Cloth ...	2	6
Hundred of exact References to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.
THE JEWISH LIFE OF CHRIST	0	6
With voluminous footnotes. An extraordinary work.
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0

G. W. FOOTE and W. P. BALL.

BIBLE HANDBOOK FOR FREETHINKERS AND INQUIRING CHRISTIANS	1	4
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
Sold also in separate parts as follows—
1. Bible Contradictions	0	4
The Contradictions are printed in parallel columns.
2. Bible Absurdities	0	4
All the chief Absurdities from Genesis to Revelation, conveniently and strikingly arranged, with appropriate headlines, giving the point of each absurdity in a sentence.
3. Bible Atrocities	0	4
Containing all the godly wickedness from Genesis to Revelation. Each infamy has a separate headline for easy reference.
4. Bible Immoralities, Indecencies, Obscenities, Broken Promises, and Unfulfilled Prophecies ...	0	4

J. M. WHEELER.

LETTERS FROM HEAVEN	0	1
LETTERS FROM HELL	0	1

Digitized by Google

NOW READY.

LETTERS TO THE CLERGY

FIRST SERIES.

1.—CREATION
To the Bishop of Carlisle.

2.—THE BELIEVING THIEF
To the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

3.—THE ATONEMENT
To the Bishop of Peterborough.

4.—OLD TESTAMENT MORALITY
To the Rev. E. R. Conder, D.D.

5.—INSPIRATION
To the Rev. R. F. Horton, M.A.

6.—CREDENTIALS OF THE GOSPEL
To the Rev. Prof. J. A. Beet.

7.—MIRACLES
To the Rev. Brownlow Maitland, M.A.

8.—PRAYER
To the Rev. T. Teignmouth Shore, M.A.

By G. W. FOOTE.

128pp., in Wrapper. ONE SHILLING.

2d. Now Ready. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC?

A NEW PAMPHLET BY

COLONEL. R. G. INGERSOLL.

A

BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY

OF

FREETHINKERS

OF

ALL AGES AND NATIONS.

BY

J. M. WHEELER.

Price 7/6 Handsomely bound in cloth. Price 7/6

THE IMPOSSIBLE CREED

An Open Letter to the

BISHOP OF PETERBOROUGH

By G. W. FOOTE.

Price 2d. Price 2d.

Price 1d. Price 1d.

A LIE IN FIVE CHAPTERS.

THE REV. HUGH PRICE HUGHES'S

CONVERTED ATHEIST

By G. W. FOOTE.

Should be circulated by Freethinkers who desire to see this pious fraud exposed as widely as possible.

MARRIAGE & DIVORCE

AN AGNOSTIC'S VIEW.

By COL. R. G. INGERSOLL.

2d.] Reprinted from the "North American Review." [2d

Everh Freethinker, Radical or Socialist should read it and circulate it amongst his friends.

W. J. Rendell's

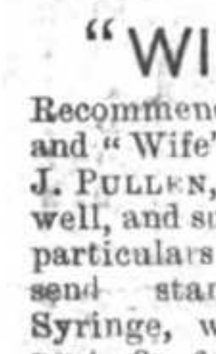
"WIFE'S FRIEND."

Recommended in "Law of Population," and "Wife's Hand Book." Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell Street Clerkenwell, and supplied per post, 2s. dozen. For particulars of this Malthusian discovery send stamped envelope. Higginson's Syringe, with vertical and reverse current, 3s. 6d. and 4s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. All other Malthusian Appliances. All prices post free.

HARTNOLL,

ENGLISH AND FOREIGN CHEMIST,

1A PICCADILLY



(Under the London Pavilion Music Hall),

LONDON, W.

Hartnoll's Specialities, Appliances and Medicated Preparations are world-renowned.

Spiral, Douche and Latest Improved Syringes.

ESTABLISHED OVER 50 YEARS.

IRETON'S

INDELIBLE JET BLACK MARKING INK

(NO HEATING REQUIRED)

For Rubber Stamps, Stencil, Type or Pen.

PRICE 6d. 1/- and 2/6 per Bottle.

Sample bottle 4d. post free.

Dyed with Ireton's Ink, no hope of ever changing my Color.

IRETON & Co., 92, Gracechurch St., LONDON, E.C.

The largest makers of Rubber Stamps.

Special terms to the Trade.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. VOL. I.

By Dr. T. R. ALLINSON,

4 SPANISH PLACE, MANCHESTER SQUARE, LONDON, W.

Of the Author, for Postal Order for 1s 2d.

It contains Articles on: Management of Infancy; Health; Longevity; The Teeth; Brown Bread; Bread Making; Food; Vegetarianism; Tobacco; The Drink Question; Fruit; Fresh Air; Exercise; Bathing; Light; Holidays; &c. Also the cause and cure of Disease; Constipation; Biliousness; Eczema; Blackheads and Pimples; Nervousness; Coughs and Colds; Chest Complaints; Deafness; Thread Worms; Long Worms; Tape Worms; The Itch, &c.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. VOL II.

Of th Author, for Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Containing Articles on: The Healing Power of Nature; Clothing; Electricity in Disease; Apparent Health; Vegetarian Experiments; The Pig as Human Food; Popular Fallacies about Flesh; The Beef Tea Delusion; Salt; Saline Starvation; Tea Drinking; The Hair and its Management; Sleep and Sleeplessness; Want of Energy, &c.; Health Hints for Workers for Shop Assistants, and for Servants; Advice for the Thin; for the Stout; and on the Proper Treatment of Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, &c.,

No House is Complete without these Works.

When ordering the Essays, be sure and state which Volume you require.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE;

OR, THE ONLY RATIONAL WAY OF TREATING DISEASE.

Everybody likes it who reads it.

Of the Author, for Postal Order for 1s. 1d.

MANCHESTER BRANCH OF THE N.S.S.,

Rusholme Road, Oxford Road All Saints,

On March 30th and 31st

A SALE OF WORK will be held for the purpose of Re-Furnishing the Hall with more comfortable Seats. Donations, either in money or articles, will be thankfully received by the Committee or Secretary, A. Hemingway, 25 Higher Chatham Street, C.-on-M., Manchester.

WANTED immediately, a thorough General Servant, not under 25, in a middle-aged bachelor's house. Apply in first instance by letter, to "M.D.," 13 Defoe Road, Tooting Common, S.W.

THE FAMILY LIMIT,

OR,

THE QUININE TABLOID,

1s. 6d. per doz. post free.

For further Particulars send stamped directed envelope to

A. MOSS, 36 Upper Park Street,

ISLINGTON, LONDON, N.

GRATIS.

AN ILLUSTRATED 16-PAGE PAMPHLET, containing extracts from the utterances of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Manchester; the Revs T. R. Malthus, A. E. Whatham, M. J. Savage, Leonard Dawson, — Lawton, H. R. Haweis; the following Doctors:—Allbutt, Allinson, Armstrong, Drysdale, Pye Chavasse, E. B. Foote, Nicholls, Wilder, Raciborski, Napheys and Reamy. Also Plato, Aristotle, Sismondi, Huxley, Mill, and numerous others. Should be read by every married and marriageable person. Sent on receipt of stamped addressed envelope by J. R. HOLMES, Hanney, Wantage, Berks.

TESTIMONIALS (Extracts from).

"The one you sent me some months since is

Quite Worn Out

with being lent to so many friends."

"Some of us have paid five shillings for less than one-tenth of the information."

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each, upper or lower set, £1. Best quality, 4s. each, upper or lower, £2, completed in four hours when required, repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18c. gold 15s.; stopping, 2s. 6d. extraction, 1s. painless by gas, 5s.

Printed and Published by G. W. Foote, at 28 Stonecutter Street Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

Vol. X.—No. 10.] SUNDAY, MARCH 9, 1890. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

CHRISTIANITY A FAILURE.

CONSIDERED as a human institution, Christianity is doubtless a remarkable phenomenon, and much may be said as to its being suited to mankind in a certain stage of its culture. But as a divine revelation—which is what it claims to be—it must be pronounced a failure. After eighteen hundred years it is not even known to a majority of the human race, and multitudes know it only to reject it. The number of the inhabitants of countries nominally Christian are not one quarter of the world's inhabitants.

Some nations have doubled their population in twenty-five years. Supposing Christianity to have progressed but half as fast as this, starting with the 5,000 men mentioned in the veracious Acts of Apostles, iv., 4 (about A.D. 34), at the rate of doubling its numbers in fifty years (surely not much to expect from a divinely-inspired faith!) there should be in the world now six hundred and eighty-seven billions, one hundred and thirty-five thousand, seven hundred and three millions, and forty thousand (687,135,703,040,000), or about 450,000 times more Christians than there are human beings of all creeds or no creed put together. That is, by this slow process there would have been two million times more Christians than there are at present. Even if they had doubled their numbers once a century they would now have numbered 1,975,680,000; far more than all the people in the world.

Christ is reported to have said he was sent only to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. From that day to this his own people, the chosen race, those best able to judge of his merits as the promised Messiah, have rejected him. His own brethren did not believe on him (John vii., 5). The Jews, despite enormous sums lavished in vain efforts at their conversion, continue to reject Christianity. They know it and despise it.

The same may be said of educated Mohammedans. Canon Isaac Taylor, in his Leaves from an Egyptian Note-book, states that more persons were converted from Christianity to Islam in Cairo than from Islam to Christianity. Mohammedanism to this day holds the sacred places of Christendom, and Turkish soldiers have to keep the peace between the rival Christian sects, who dispute each other's claims to show the holy sepulchre.

Mohammedanism not only ousted Christianity from its sacred places; it still, in Africa, has greater success than the rival faith. Hear the testimony of Mr. Joseph Thomson, the African traveller, given in this month's Contemporary Review:

> "As compared with the progress of Mohammedanism in Africa, Christianity in these lands has been practically at a standstill. Wherever Mohammedan seed has been sown, there it has taken root, and there it has remained to flourish with a vigorous grip of the soil which nothing can destroy. The same cannot be said of Christian seed: it has ever been as a delicate exotic, difficult to plant, more difficult to rear, and ever requiring outside support and watering."

It is the same in India. Christianity is only embraced by the outcastes and aboriginal hill tribes, anxious for rice and easier living. By the educated, whether Brahmans or Mohammedans, it is rejected. Missionaries have gone there, it is said, since the days of St. Thomas, and certainly since the time of St. Francis Xavier; but that vast country, though under the sway of Christian England, remains "heathen."

But it is when we look at the results of Christianity—always, be it borne in mind, considered as a divine and supernaturally-instituted religion—that its failure is most patent. The nominal adherence given to Christianity in "Christian" nations is altogether deceptive. Emerson asks "In Christendom where is the Christian?" Echo answers, Where?

The condition of the masses in every Christian country affords proof palpable that Christianity, instead of being a divinely elevating power, has rather, by centreing thought upon another world, hindered the improvement of this. Seeing how barbarous and degraded are the inhabitants of Abyssinia, where Christianity has existed since the days of Constantine, it is evident that whatever progress has been made is due to other elements than those found in religion.

The Bishop of Peterborough has lately admitted that the conduct of the State cannot be regulated by the precepts of the Sermon on the Mount. Standing armies in Christian countries of over six millions of men are a striking comment on the gospel of non-resistance. Nor is there any more attempt to carry out Christianity into individual lives. Society is based on principles directly antagonistic to those which lie at the root of Christianity. Its adherents only give it a lip homage, while their hearts are far away, concerned with the things of this world. The real gospel of the age is Secularism, and the fact is an evidence of the failure of Christianity.

J. M. WHEELER.

LETTERS TO THE CLERGY.—IX.

ON "CHRIST AND HUMANITY."

To the Rt. Rev. Edward White Benson, Archbishop of Canterbury.

[CONTINUED.]

LET us now see what are your remedies for the poverty of large masses of the people. Beyond vague talk about co-operation, which is not the product of Church influences; and profit-sharing, which sprang up in the sceptical soil of France; I cannot find that your Grace has anything to propose. You do, indeed, allude to the population question, but you shirk its thorny points. You denounce the "infamous suggestions" of the Malthusian reformers, and assert that "early marriages are one great source of misery.' You also add that "any marriage is too early of which the offspring cannot be reasonably expected to be nurtured and brought up decently," although "marriage at marriageable age is not too early if there is reasonable prospect of children's maintenance in the condition of their parents."

Digitized by Google

For a curious commentary on the first half of this teaching I would refer your Grace to Mr. Arnold White's Problems of a Great City, where you may find a graphic account of a famous red church in the East of London, built and endowed by a wealthy lady, in order that poor young couples might be married gratuitously. The place is a direct encouragement to scandalous improvidence. Young people out of work are known to take the opportunity of getting married, and the levity of behavior and the freedom of conversation would often shock the "heathen" whom your missionaries are engaged in converting. I am not aware that you have ever sought to suppress this centre of social debauchery, and I am sure it is a fair specimen of Christian influence on the problems of sex and population.

The second half of your teaching is worthy of an Archbishop. You profess a great sympathy with the poor, but you put upon them the whole burden of your recipe. Population is to be restricted by the cessation of early marriages; those who cannot support whatever offspring Nature may send are not to marry at all; while those who have the means may marry as early as they please. And this is your social gospel for the poor! My lord, it is foredoomed to futility. You might as well shout against the northern blast, or push back the ocean with your feet. Nature has associated the chief and most durable pleasures of life with the rational gratification of the sexual instincts. The love of man and woman, and the love of both for their children, is at once the perennial source of pure joy and the pivot of civilisation. Yet from this paradise—not of idle enjoyment, but of labor and love—you would exclude all the men and women who cannot see their way to support an unlimited offspring. While the well-to-do know the comforts of a home, its blessings and its discipline, these poor brothers and sisters are to toil and wait until the bloom of life has fled, and the vital springs are impaired, and the glad strength that would have laughed at obstacles and adversities is gone, and the very apples of Paradise taste like Dead Sea fruit.

Such a gospel is a mockery. It is the old story repeated. Unto him that hath shall be given, and from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath. I have said it is worthy of an Archbishop, and I add that it could only be preached by courtiers to flunkeys or the hirelings of tyrants to slaves.

An unsophisticated poor Christian, fresh from reading the Gospels and the Acts of the Apostles, might suggest to your Grace that the divine solution of the problem of poverty is to share and share alike. Indeed, you are acute enough to anticipate the suggestion. Referring to the advice of Christ to the young lawyer—"sell that thou hast and give it to the poor"—you doubt whether it is "a rule of wide obligation." But, on the other hand, you declare that "such sacrifice falls within the scope of Christian ethics and in certain cases is a positive duty." Certain cases! Not your case, my lord; nor any other bishop's case; nor the case of any assignable rich man on earth; but only, perhaps, the case of some rich man in the moon. Thus you hedge and trim, so as to save the credit of Christ and your own £15,000 a year.

Following the teaching of their Master, the primitive Christians had all things in common, and if you followed them you would share your princely income with bricklayers and crossing-sweepers. This would never do. Consequently the practice of the Apostles, like the teaching of Jesus, must be explained away. You assert that "the public fund formed by a surrender of fortunes at Jerusalem was no instance of Communism." Begging your pardon, it was. There was never a clearer case of Communism in human history. It is indisputable that the primitive Christians, like the Essenes, were a body of Communists. You pretend that their Collectivism was "an extraordinary effort to meet the sudden emergency." My lord, it is easy to assert. If you assert one thing, I have the right to assert another. Where is the proof? I defy you to produce it. The Communistic experiment at Jerusalem came to grief in the natural way. It was opposed to human nature. Bickerings and jealousies arose, and eventually the institution of private property re-asserted itself. Yet the spirit of that early Communism survived in the writings of the Fathers, who again and again denounce the possessors of wealth as recreants to the primitive faith. And whenever a sincere Christian, like Law the author of the Serious Call, deals with the subject, he is constrained to admit that the Christianity of the New Testament involves the holding of all things in common.

G. W. FOOTE.

(To be concluded.)

SACRED TEXTS AND SECULAR COMMENTS.

I am come to send fire on the earth—Luke xii., 49.

Our God is a consuming fire.—Heb. xii., 29.

"Another church was destroyed last Sunday through overheated flues."—Morning Paper.

And thou shalt see my back parts: but my face shall not be seen.—Exod. xxxiii., 23.

"The Power which the Universe manifests to us is utterly inscrutable."—Herbert Spencer "First Principles" § 14.

The heavens declare the glory of God.—Psalm xix., 1.

"The heavens declare the glory of Kepler."—Auguste Comte.

The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge.—Prov. i. 7.

"The fear of the Lord is the beginning of Superstition." Lucianus.

The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God.—Psalm xiv., 1.

"Children and fools speak the truth.'—Popular Proverb.

Follow me and let the dead bury their dead.—Matt. viii., 22.

"To insult the dead is cruel and unjust."—Homer's Odyssey xxii., l. 450.

The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin.—1 John i., 7.

"By oneself the evil is done, by oneself one suffers; by oneself evil is l-ft undone, by oneself one is purified. Purity and impurity belong to oneself, no one can purify another."—Buddha Dhammapada cxii., v. 165.

Think not I am come to send peace on earth. I came not to send peace but a sword.—Matt. x., 34.

"Curs'd is the man and void of law and right
Unworthy property, unworthy light,
Unfit for public rule, or private care;
That wretch, that monster who delights in war."
Homer's Iliad, bk. ix., l. 87. Pope.

Take therefore no thought for the morrow.—Matt. vi., 34.

"If a man will take no thought about what is distant, he will find sorrow near at hand."—Confucius, Lun-Yu, bk. xv., c. 11.

It must needs be that offences come, but woe to that man by whom the offence cometh.—Matt. xviii., 7.

"Hath a man erred unwillingly. He meets with pardon instead of punishment. Justice requires that instead of reproaching and reviling such a man, we should condole with him." Demosthenes, "On the Crown."

Suppose ye that I am come to give peace on earth? I tell you, "Nay," but rather division.—Luke xii., 51.

"More blood has been shed on account of the Christian Religion than from any other cause."—Voltaire.

The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God. 2 Thess i. 7, 8.

"Can heavenly minds such high resentment show,
Or exercise their spite in human woe?"—
Virgil, Æneid I., l. 17.

He that believeth not shall be damned.—Matt. xvi., 16.

"No one who hath done good goeth to an evil place.—Krishna, Bhagvat-Gita, chap. vi.

If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother and wife and children, and brethren and sisters, yea, and his own life also he cannot be my disciple.—Luke xiv., 26.

"There are no duties comparable to these we owe to our parents. Our parents are very divine."—Buddha, Singala-Vada Sutta.

He that believeth and is baptised shall be saved.—Matt. xvi., 16.

"Away with those who preach to us the washing off of sin,
Thine own self is the stream for thee to make ablutions in.
In self-restraint it rises pure—flows clear in tide of truth,
By widening banks of wisdom, in waves of peace and ruth.
Bathe there thou son of Pandu, with reverence and rite,
For never yet was water wet could wash the spirit white.
—Hitopadesa ch. iv. § 91. (Sir E. Arnold's translation.)

LEGRANGE.

Digitized by Google

FREETHOUGHT IN YORKSHIRE.

The following were the delegates who attended at Laycock's Temperance Hotel, Kirkgate, Bradford, last Sunday afternoon, to consider "the most efficient manner of propagating Freethought" in the West Riding of Yorkshire: Stanningly—Messrs. Benjamin Briggs, Joseph Guy and Thomas Taylor; Huddersfield—Wm. Cliffe and John George Dobson; Leeds—J. Greevz-Fisher, H. W. Riley and H. Hardcastle; Bramley—J. Parkinson; Bradford—H. Brooksbank, James White, W. J. Fawcett and J. W. Gott; Hipperholme—A. B. Wakefield; Farsley—H. Smith and John Grange; Halifax—J. W. Crowther and another person. In addition to the foregoing there were friends to the number of about a score, making a gathering in all to the number of nearly forty.

The meeting having elected Mr. H. Smith chairman, he submitted, in a few well-chosen words, the following two resolutions as preliminary matter to the business for which the conference had specifically been assembled:—(1) Moved by H. Brooksbank, Bradford; seconded by J. W. Crowther, Halifax: "That this meeting of Secular representatives and friends in Conference assembled desire to convey to Mr. Charles Bradlaugh their best thanks for his past services as President of the National Secular Society, begs to congratulate him on his restoration to health, and hopes he will long live to use his unusual ability and influence in the cause of freedom." (2) Moved by J. Greevz-Fisher, Leeds, seconded by A. B. Wakefield, Hipperholme: "That this meeting of Secular representatives and friends in Conference assembled begs to tender Mr. George William Foote its most hearty and sincere congratulations on his elevation to the position of President of the National Secular Society of Great Britain and Ireland, and trusts, as in the past, so in the future, it (the cause of Freethought) will receive from him his unswerving adherence and devotion." Both resolutions were passed nem. dis.

Passing to the question, What would be the best method of effectively propagating Freethought? the decision arrived at was that an executive council of thirteen, with treasurer and secretary, be elected, with power to add to their number, to consider and report what appeared to them the most practical course to pursue. The advisability or otherwise of holding a Freethought demonstration some Sunday during the summer months on Shipley Glen was also left for the executive to consider. The idea of issuing a "monthly record" did not receive much recognition, it being regarded more as a matter of individual enterprise than the work of a collective body.

The above is a summary of the proceedings transacted, which was followed by a good plain tea, of which between thirty and forty partook, and the proceedings of the first meeting of the West Riding (Yorkshire) Freethought Propaganda Association were brought to a close.

CORRESPONDENCE.

LANCASHIRE SECULAR FEDERATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE FREETHINKER."

Dear Sir,—On February 13 I sent to every Secular Society in Lancashire a circular, inviting co-operation with Liverpool in an attempt to found the above organisation. Although we have not received replies from every society (the committees of some meeting once only each month), we feel satisfied that we can make a start. Several societies promise hearty assistance, and, though the labor of effecting a start will be great, we shall push on as fast as possible. I would earnestly invite Freethinkers in St. Helens, Warrington, Clitheroe, Leigh, Bury, Preston, Southport and Stockport to make an endeavour to give a helping hand. If societies cannot be immediately formed there, it is almost certain that, by means of correspondence in the Freethinker, a number of friends of Secular progress could be introduced to each other, and if halls can be secured in those towns I shall be glad to render every assistance in bringing down from London a special lecturer now and then. Freethinkers in the above-mentioned towns will please understand that it is not necessary to get halls for Sunday—any other day will do; indeed, week nights would sometimes be preferable. I hope some earnest friends will respond at once.

H. Smith, Hon. Sec. pro tem. L. S. F.

3 Breck Place, Breck Road, Liverpool.

AN ATHEIST'S PRAYER.

Translated for "Liberty" by B. R. Tucker.

Who then are you? Speak out at last. The hour is come.
You can not always keep your tongue within your head.
Appealed to you have all men, wept and wailed have some,
Why have you nothing said?

Why stay you in the sky, huge bronze of livid hue,
With mocking smile on lips that all speech else avoid?
Impenetrable face and phantom form, are you
Of brain and heart devoid?

Why do you nothing say? Why do we see described
No wrinkle, stubborn spectre, on your brow austere?
Why that stupid air and aspect circumscribed?
Are you too deaf to hear?

If you speak not, then try at least to understand.
Despise me, if you will, but let me see, I pray,
Your face relax to show that I may lift a hand
And you know what I say.

To transform into faith the doubt that me o'erpowers
You need but put a yes into those eyes I spy.
You need but make a sign; my hate no longer towers;
It at your feet will die.

O Mystery proud, wrapped in your dismal veils,
He whom men call father should be one indeed.
If you are my creator, in the shades and vales
How can you see me bleed?

How can you see me humbly kneeling on the stone,
My arms stretched toward you, drowned my voice in accents wild,
And yet no tear beneath your eyelid trickling down?
Am I, then, not your child?

Alms give, in pity's name! So poor am I and weak!
I am not wicked. Good be thou, and look at me.
My poor love-laden heart has naught that it can seek
But to exhale to thee.

But no! I still see on your face that stupid smile,
My cries, my tears, my insults bear no fruit, I fear.
No, you do not speak; you have no thoughts the while;
You have no ears to hear.

Then, after all, do you exist? When I sound space,
Within the infinite depths your shape I never miss.
Is what I see, perchance, the reflex of my face,
Mirrored in that abyss?

Is it my soul that lends a soul unto the world?
Were my heart's dream no more an object of my thought,
Would you in vain, like image on the wild waves whirled
When sun goes down be sought?

Yes, yes, your haughty silence now is solved for aye.
But I too long have suffered; revenge is now my share.
These lips henceforth shall be of blasphemy the way,
Never again of prayer.

O God, thou floating fog above a field of lies!
O God, thou vain mirage of wishes here below!
Thy glory and thy pride but from our dreams arise,
Without us, thou must go.

From the French of Jean Richepin.

AN IRRELIGIOUS INSTRUMENT.

A negro boy having secured a thermometer, took it home to astonish his father.

"What you got dar?" the old man asked.

"Got er 'mometer."

"What's dat?"

"W'y, it's one o' deze yere things whut yer tells how col' ur hot it is wid."

"Tells how col' ur hot it is?"

"Yes, sah?"

"Look yere, is you sich er fool dat yer kain't tell how col' or hot it is? Is yer dun los' dat 'bility whut you 'herited from yo' mudder and daddy—mos'ly yo' daddy?"

"W'y, o' co'se I ken tell how col' it is, but dis yere gins yer de figgers—how many 'grees it is."

"Whut's 'grees got to do wid it? W'en it's col' it's col', and dat's all dar is erbout it. Men gittin' mighty brash dose days er gittin' up mersheens ter fool wid de Lawd's erfairs. Reckon after w'le da'll git sunthin' ter figger out how much 'ligion er man's got. Put dat blame 'mometer dar 'hind de fire."

Digitized by Google

ACID DROPS.

Surely the Archbishop of Canterbury is a subtle humorist. Last Sunday evening he preached at the old "Vic." to a crowded audience—or should we say congregation?—of the poor people of South London. His grace wore his full robes to gratify their love of a bit of show, and addressed them familiarly as "dear people." But the cream of the joke was his text—"Give us this day our daily bread." His Grace forgot to dwell on the fact that he had £7,500 a year for bread, and another £7,500 for butter—every penny of which is wrung from the industry of the poor. Instead of this, he maundered and drivelled about the good God sending bread to his dear working men by giving them the means of working for it; although, almost in the same breath, he admitted that thousands of men were able and willing to work, but unable to find it. What wretched mockery! It is just like saying that God looks after their eating by giving them jaws to eat with. Some of them get very little bread between their teeth, but then, look at their splendid jaws! You can't expect the Lord to give a man every blessing at once. By and bye, when the poor man's jaws are tired of biting nothing, he will go to the blessed land of compensation, where those who have hungered shall be filled; and then—ah yes, then!—he will champ the manna of paradise free, gratis, for nothing, ad libitum, while bishops and archbishops preach to him for nothing a year, paid quarterly in advance.

After the Archbishop of Canterbury the bishopric of Durham is the best living in the Church. Ten thousand a year, a fine palace, and enough livings to dispose of to content all one's cousins to the third and fourth generations is a higher prize than any held out to a Cabinet Minister. No wonder there has been some speculation why the good berth has not been filled up. Rumor has it that Lord Salisbury wants to appoint Canon Liddon, but the Queen objects to more Ritualistic bishops and wants to put in a man of her own.

The great Mr. Conybeare, with five more Cornish members out of the total seven, is sponsor for a Bill prohibiting the sale of liquor in Cornwall on Sundays. But why Sundays? Why not Mondays or Saturdays? Some day or other a Bill may be brought in for the suppression of humbug, but Mr. Conybeare will never back that.

An attempt is being made to raise £30,000 to superannuate the poor, hard-working, and meritorious clergy of the diocese of Manchester. But why on earth should the "teachers" of the people require to be relieved of the ordinary duty of providing against old age or disablement. There are many good Provident Societies, and the clergy should put by for a rainy day like other people.

This superannuation fund was preached up at a special meeting in the Manchester Town Hall. The Mayor presided, with Canons to right of him and Canons to left of him, and there was a large attendance of the clergy—to see what the laymen were going to do for them. One reason for public charity, in the Mayor's opinion, was this—the clergy were very often blessed with large families! Yes, and they beget those large families; and then, having deliberately brought into the world more children than they can maintain, they make their imprudence a plea for charity. And these are the "teachers" of the people. Then God help the people.

Talking about clerical families, here is a paragraph from the Christian World—"Rev. James McNeil, of Drumbo, a minister much beloved and esteemed, has died at the early age of forty-nine, leaving a widow and a young family of eleven children." Eleven children, and all young! And now the Rev. Jas. McNeil is gone to glory, leaving his eleven young children to pull through their troubles with all the assistance that Jahveh sends them.

More division among the Theosophists. A new affair has been started in London, the Christo-Theosophical Society, its object being to show that Christian truth is in harmony with reason and intuition. This society has a big task before it.

The Christian World points out the danger to religious liberty in Mr. John Morley's proposal to endow all sectarian schools out of the public taxes. This is merely the endowment of religion in disguise, and is hardly worthy of "Honest John." Fortunately the Liberals are not in a position to carry out the proposal. Let us hope that by the time they are they will dismiss it with scorn.

Mr. John Morley is curiously slack about doing anything in the House of Commons to redress the wrongs of Freethinkers, among whom, we presume, he is still to be reckoned. He bears with remarkable equanimity the fact that they are, as a body, outside the pale of the law. But, on the other hand, he is distressed because Roman Catholics are deprived of the privilege of ever becoming Lord Chancellor of England or Lord Lieutenant of Ireland; and he has backed a Bill whose object is to remedy this dreadful wrong. We hope the Bill will be passed, but we also hope that Mr. Morley will some day or other show a little practical sympathy with those who are treated as outlaws because they happen to share his religious convictions.

The Protestant Alliance is up in arms against this Bill as "mischievous and menacing." What an illustration of Christian fraternity! Mutual hatred is the most striking characteristic of the many sects of the true religion.

The Hospital is a very decent little paper, but its number for Feb. 8 gives currency to the old mistake as to the Christian origin of hospitals. The writer ought to know that there are no injunctions to erect hospitals in the New Testament, and that the only directions in regard to the sick are that they should be anointed with oil and prayed over. He ought, moreover, to know that in the eleventh century B.C. there was in Egypt a College of Physicians in receipt of public pay; that the Egyptian and many of the Greek temples, notably those of Æsculapius, were virtually hospitals; and that in India, Asoka, in the third century B.C., established hospitals both for men and animals in various parts of his dominions.

So far from the world being indebted to Christianity for hospitals, they were not found among Christians until the fourth century. The writer of the article, "The Christian Origin of Hospitals" in The Hospital, says: "The first complete establishment for the reception of the sick was built by Basil the Great, in Cappadocia (Asia Minor), soon after he became archbishop of that see (A.D. 370)." Yet before this the Emperor Julian (died A.D. 363), who gave up Christianity for Paganism, had, as the writer ungraciously admits, established hospitals. With true Christian niggardliness of appreciation of good deeds done by those not of the faith, he says: "It was doubtless as much with the desire of excelling the clergy in their own work as of benefiting his subjects, that Julian decreed the establishment in various places of hospitals for the reception of the sick, and hospices for the entertainment of travellers." Julian certainly did excel the clergy, since their authorised method of restoring the sick, as we have said, consisted in sacred oil and holy prayers.

A scoundrel at Plymouth went to the Salvation Army Barracks, set light to a copy of the War Cry, flung it into the meeting, shouted "Fire!" and decamped. The fiery organ of Blood and Fire ignited a female Salvationist's best gingham, and a terrible scene ensued. No one being anxious to go to the "beautiful land, wonderful land, wonderful land, ab-o-o-ove," the Salvationists bolted for the door. Women were knocked down and trampled on, dresses were torn, and bonnets crumpled up like brown paper. Such is the beautiful sense of repose which religion gives us in the presence of danger.

Mr. John Moss, farmer of Loughborough, has obtained a verdict of £80 damages for slander against the Rev. E. Smythies, rector of Hathern.

A medical friend of ours has a patient who is troubled with nervous attacks and very bad dreams. The other night this patient dreamed of Hell, and wrote out a circumstantial account of what he saw there. Carriages were driving along a splendid broad road, like the Queen's Road at Brighton. Then he came to a noble iron gateway, blackleaded all over, so that it dazzled the eyes. This led to a long road extending for miles, and roofed in like the Crystal Palace. About every four feet there was a cell, but the dreamer did not look inside. Thousands of attendants flitted about, but all was silent as the grave. Accosting one of these attendants, the dreamer was asked "How long have you been dead?" "I am not dead at all," he replied. Thereupon the ghostly gentleman sneered as if meaning "Then you have no business here."

Digitized by Google

The Theosophists would look upon this patient's dreams as very significant. We should advise him to eat moderately, take plenty of outdoor exercise, avoid stimulants and narcotics, and, if necessary, take a rhubarb pill once a week. An occasional aperient is a great enemy of devils, whether black or blue.

Mr. Joseph Thomson writes on "The Results of European Intercourse with the African" in the March number of the Contemporary Review, and affirms, despite all the missionary reports that "so far, our intercourse with African races instead of being a blessing, has been little better than an unmitigated curse to them."

Theophilus Edwards, a London City missionary for over twenty years, whose wife stated he had no domestic or monetary troubles, was found lying in bed with his throat cut. A knife was lying close by, also a Bible with several passages marked. Probably another case of religious mania.

Buffalo Bill and the Pope met at Rome on Monday. Bill is a big showman, and so is Barnum, but the Pope is the biggest showman on earth. Bill himself seems to have recognised this, for on Monday, when the anniversary of Papa Pecci's coronation was celebrated, he played a second fiddle in the performance. He and his troupe stationed themselves in the Grand Ducal Hall of the Vatican, and dropped on their knees for the Holy Father's blessing as he was carried along on his papal chair. Of course they got the blessing, and Buffalo Bill presented the Greatest Showman on Earth with a beautiful cushion, which will no doubt be appreciated by the bony nether parts of the aged Leo.

The Catholic Church is the final support of every despotism. Bismarck finds he must rely on the Ultramontane party for a majority in the New Reichstag.

The Rev. R. F. Horton says it is an impossible theory that the universe is the result of blind chance. Now if Mr. Horton will define chance, blind or seeing, and show how it could be the cause of anything, the matter will be open to discussion. Meanwhile the Materialist may think that the "blind chance" hypothesis is no more impossible than the theory that an Omniscient God could turn out beings who reason like Mr. Horton.

Bishop Walker, of North Dakota, has a "scattered" diocese. He is therefore fitting up a holy car, to be attached to ordinary trains, and switched on to a siding when a service is to be held. He will baptise and confirm on board, and perhaps administer the sacrament and perform swell weddings. Was there ever such a travelling joss-house since old Jahveh perigrinated in his trunk?

"The Bible is the Word of God." That is a plain sentence. Everybody can understand it, and believe it or reject it. But plain dealing is no longer the cue of the Churches. They are going in for round-the-corner business, like Hamlet's politician—"one who would circumvent God." Even the Presbyterians are adopting the compromise that "The Word of God is contained in the Bible." Aye, and so is the needle contained in the haystack; but 'tis a devil of a job to find it.

The Rev. W. Gelley has been replying to Mr. Foote's recent lecture at Blackburn. One half of his sermon was a wretched waste of words. Mr. Foote, holding a copy of Bacon's Essays in his hand, quoted from the essay on Superstition the passage that "Atheism leaves a man to sense," etc. The press reporter wrote leads for leaves—a very easy mistake. Yet upon this simple blunder Mr. Gelley based a half of his sermon! Surely a very little common sense might have suggested that leads was a misprint for leaves; and that a public speaker who wished to misquote would hardly be so foolish as to misquote from such a popular volume as Bacon's Essays. Perhaps Mr. Gelley will be more considerate in future when he sees how the reporter has reproduced his extracts from Bacon, the opening sentence of the essay on Atheism being printed in a fashion that would make every hair on Bacon's head stand on end like quills upon the fretful porcupine.

Mr. Gelley is deceived if he fancies (not having heard the lecture) that Mr. Foote quoted from Bacon as a favorer of Atheism. The Rev. J. O. Davies had asserted that Atheism tended to immorality, and Mr. Foote simply quoted a famous passage from Bacon, among other writers, to show that Atheism left a man to sense, philosophy, and other influences, all of which are guides to moral conduct "though religion were not." Bacon's opinion as to the philosophy of Atheism is quite another matter.

The proposition to have Sunday concerts in St. Andrew's Hall, Norwich, was, of course, opposed by the Rev. G. S. Barrett on behalf of his brother sky-pilots, who desire the monopoly of business on the people's leisure day. Of course Mr. Barrett's chief dread is lest such sacred concerts be held during the hours of divine service and thus prove a rival show to his own.

Still more blasphemy. Here is a firm of distillers advertising their whiskey as "the purest spirit known." This dangerously approaches the confines of blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, which hath never forgiveness neither in this world nor in the world to come.

It has been calculated that, from first to last, not fewer than 9,000,000 persons have been burned for witchcraft under the Christian régime. For these cruel murders, perpetrated with the accompaniment of torture for the most part on poor old women, God's holy word, "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live," must be held largely responsible.

Prebendary Anderson says there is nothing like Christianity to afford happiness. Absolutely nothing. What can make a Christian so happy as the thought of a jealous God who damns the great mass of his creatures to everlasting torment, and was only appeased by the blood of his own innocent son? When a Christian thinks of his friends and relations roasting in eternal fire, how can he be other than happy?

The Banner of Faith is one of those journals which, put into other covers, circulates as the parish magazine for many different places. The kind of hog's-wash with which the parishioners are supplied may be guessed from the following argument directed against marriage by the registrar: "If you'd call yourself married without a clergyman to marry you, and do it all in that godless way, you might do anything." The sentiment is, appropriately enough, put in the mouth of an old woman.

According to the New York World Mr. Pentecost says "If the priests are to be believed the devil has been more active than Jehovah, and more powerful too. He always gets there. Jehovah builds churches, and the devil not only occupies the pews but very often the pulpit."

The Rev. E. Sydney Savage, vicar of St. Marks, Barrow, is savage at dancing prevailing in his parish. He denounces it in a letter to a local paper quite unmindful of the dancing of Miriam or the pranks of David before the ark.

How to reach the masses is the problem continually put forward in our religious papers when they are not considering the question of money for foreign missions. We commend to their attention the utterance of a Natal paper which proposes to send over to England a few educated Kaffirs as missionaries and civilising agents among the poor heathen dwelling in Ratcliffe Highway, the Seven Dials, and other similar localities in our large towns. It confesses they would do little good unless they brought over also a cargo of mealies to feed the poor, starving English wretches. Thus provided, the writer considers the educated Kaffir would prove more successful than the missionaries we send abroad, and he says: "I am sure he would extend the hand of pity to his poor, unfortunate white brother, who has not the same blessed advantages he himself is able to obtain."

Digitized by Google

William Nicholson was charged at Hull police court with disorderly conduct. William had got intoxicated upon the worst kind of spirit, the Holy Ghost. He raved and shouted "Glory Hallelujah, Jesus for ever," and when asked to desist he replied "I shall not go away. I'm sent by the Lord, and am the master of all policemen." William declared that by God's grace he would continue to do it all his life. In court he protested his readiness to die for God. William is seemingly of the fanatical stuff of which the Christian martyrs were made.

Another exhibition of the beauties of religion was afforded by two brothers named John and Thomas Price, living at Pistyll Farm, Llandrindod, Wales, who have become insane through religion, and, after frightening several people by attempts to convert them, have been committed to the asylum at Abergavenny.

"God moves in a mysterious way!" Floods and storms are showing his anger in the Western States of America. A cyclone on the coast of Japan has drifted away fishing-boats with a loss of two thousand lives, and wrecks and railway collisions are thrown in as other instances of the supreme benevolence of our heavenly father.

A sample missionary is the Rev. C. B. Cahusac, who having left a wife and three children in England, went to Chicago, where, under pretence of being engaged in missionary work among young girls, he succeeded in bringing several of them to ruin. He has been arrested, and has confessed his guilt.

Canon Westcott, who is probably the most learned writer in the Church of England, has published an edition of the Epistle to the Hebrews with Notes and Essays. Dr. Westcott says, "The Epistle cannot be the work of St. Paul, and still less the work of Clement. It may have been written by Barnabus, if the Epistle of Barnabus is apocryphal." So, for the superscription in the Bible "The Epistle of Paul the Apostle to the Hebrews," we are given a "may-be." Will Dr. Westcott propose the removal of this false heading in our English Bibles? Not a bit of it. Such facts, though the merest commonplaces to theologians, are carefully kept from the general public.

Who is the W. Rodger Smyth who writes on "Converted Atheists" in the Inquirer, that organ of "reverent free thought"? He professes to have in his pocket a list of twenty "leaders of Secularism" who have been converted to Christianity. Leaders, mind. Will Mr., Mrs., or Miss Smyth kindly produce them? We suspect not, for he or she has the indecency to refer to Price Hughes's story as "a piece of fiction" which is "much too ideal for the exceedingly realistic mind of the editor of the Freethinker." According to W. Rodger Smyth it is "idealism" to print a fiction as though it were a fact, and "realism" to ask for evidence. Even Unitarians seem unable to escape the great historic vice of Christianity, its absolute want of the sense of veracity.

A well-known Manchester Freethinker has received a cadging letter, stereotyped, from the Rev. Sutton Patterson, who hails from No. 1 The Sanctuary, Westminster Abbey, London. An attempt is being made to raise £12,000 to give a free education to clergymen's children, in connection with the St. John's Foundation School, and the cadging letters seem to be dispatched at random. The game must be very profitable to pay for so much powder and shot.

The Rev. A. Gwatkin, who is said to be a personal friend of the Archbi-hop of Canterbury, says that amid all the Primate's business he finds time to address letters to working men who have felt their faith tottering. We hope his Grace will devote a spare hour or so to answering Mr. Foote's recent letters. The columns of the Freethinker will be gladly placed at his disposal.

A firm of Roman Catholic publishers had the coolness to refuse to fulfil a contract with a customer who ordered a complete set of Victor Hugo's works. The ground of refusal was that the works were "immoral," the reason for this extraordinary view being the fact that they are placed on the Romish Index expurgatorius. The customer sued the firm for damages for breach of contract, and the Supreme Court at Montreal will decide the case. Of course Catholicism is a great power in Canada as well as in the United States, but the Court can hardly be so slavish to Rome as to decide that every little bigot has a right to bark and bite at the readers of the greatest French genius of the nineteenth century.

The Rev. W. H. Farnell, of Wellington, says he once heard the editor of the Freethinker deny that a whale could swallow a man. Mr. Farnell admits the impossibility, but urges that the Greek word translated "whale" means a sea monster of an unknown description. Perhaps it was a shark, says Mr. Farnell. But this is jumping out of the frying-pan into the fire. No doubt a shark could dispose of Jonah, but imagine the poor prophet's condition after running the gauntlet of the shark's rows of frightful teeth! On the whole he would do better with the whale.

Christian apologists are always ready to boast how their faith has elevated woman, although if allowing her legal justice is any part of the "elevation" it is clear that Christianity has done nothing of the kind. It might do some of these apologists good to read the extract in the Pall Mall of Tuesday from the diary of Nawàb Mehdi Hassan, the Chief Justice of Hyderabad. This gentleman thought the Mohammedan marriage law fairer to women than the law of England, and gave many excellent reasons for the opinion.

The Rev. Canon Robert Baynes was charged with being drunk and disorderly. He failed to put in an appearance, and has been summoned to show cause why his bail should not be estreated.

Blessed be ye poor. One number of the Daily Telegraph mentions the wills of the Rev. Folliot Baugh, formerly rector of Chelsford, Kent, who has left behind him £26,000, and of the Rev. John Fenwick, late of Thurnery Rectory, Norfolk, whose personal estate amounts to over £25,000. These men of God must have a tough job to pass through Peter's wicket gate if there is any truth in the utterance of their professed master.

ONE OF THE GOOD OLD SORT.

We sympathise with the Rev. Dr. Duncan of Islington. He is one of the good old sort, and we should be sorry to see the species extinguished, for a few of them, at least, should be preserved for the public amusement. The reverend gentleman has delivered a special discourse on "infidelity," of which he has a remarkably profound knowledge. He referred in withering language to the "fees" of Secular lecturers. What an excellent joke! Mr. Duncan is welcome to all Mr. Foote's lecturing "fees" for 1890 in exchange for his annual salary. This is a fair offer, made in downright earnest, and we await the reverend gentleman's answer.

Mr. Duncan found four causes of infidelity—"conceit, ignorance, uncleanness, and folly." Well, we neither know nor want to know anything about Mr. Duncan's "cleanness," but we are bound to say that if conceit, ignorance and folly are the causes of infidelity, Mr. Duncan should be the biggest infidel in England.

"Infidelity," said Mr. Duncan, "has done nothing for literature. If all the books written and published by infidels were burned we should not miss them." Of course not, dear Duncan: you would not miss them. But other people would. There is a very small number of readers who would regard Duncan's Sermons as a fair exchange for the works of Voltaire, Paine, Bradlaugh, and Ingersoll, to say nothing of Shelley, Byron, Swinburne, Mill, Clifford, Darwin, and Huxley. And now, dear Duncan, let us pray!

The Rev. H. G. Watt, of Dundee, finds no fault with football, except that it keeps young men who play Saturday matches from coming to the kirk on Sunday mornings. He would even prefer to see matches held on Sunday afternoons, so long as he was sure the players had first had their weekly dose of sermonising. But what would godly Scotland say to this?

Digitized by Google

MR. FOOTE'S ENGAGEMENTS.

Sunday, March 9, Secular Hall, 61 New Church Road, Camberwell Road, S.E., at 7.30, "Why I am an Atheist."

Thursday, March 13, Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, E.C., at 8, "Freethought and Christ." Free admission. Discussion.

March 16, Cardiff; 19, Southwark Radical Club; 23 and 30, Hall of Science, London.

April 6, Milton Hall; 9, Shelley Society 13, Portsmouth; 20, Hall of Science; 27, Hall of Science, London.

May 4, Newcastle; 11, South Shields; 18, Hall of Science, London; 25, N. S. S. Conference.

June 1, Hall of Science London; 8, Gladstone Radical Club and Hall of Science, London.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

LITERARY communications to be addressed to the Editor, 14 Clerkenwell Green, London, E.C. All business communications to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C.

THE Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the office, post free to any part of Europe, America, Canada and Egypt, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 6s. 6d.; Half Year, 3s. 3d.; Three Months, 1s. 7½d. Australia, China and Africa:—One Year, 8s. 8d.; Half Year, 4s. 4d.; Three Months, 2s. 2d. India:—One Year, 10s. 10d.; Half Year, 5s. 5d. Three Months, 2s. 8½d.

SCALE OF ADVERTISEMENTS.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 3s.; Half Column, 15s.; Column, £1 10s. Special terms for repetitions.

IT being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will in future receive the number when their subscription expires in a colored wrapper.

S. P. GODFREY.—Letters to the Clergy forwarded. All orders should be sent to Mr. Forder as above.

F. MORRIS (Cardiff).—Bill to hand. You shall be advised as to Mr. Foote's train.

ON THE WAR PATH.—(1) An Agnostic who has a God is an anomaly. Such a person is a Theist, and should call himself so. However, as you approve our assault on Christianity there is that point of agreement between us and you had better leave the rest alone, for our convictions are the result of much thought and research, and are not likely to be affected by occasional correspondence. (2) Your proposal as to a shop for the sale of Freethought literature in the centre of every large town would be a boon if it could be carried out. Certainly a town like Birmingham ought to boast some newsagent willing to display the Freethinker.

J. MILLER.—The subject is far too large to be discussed in a paragraph, and we are unable at present to give it the space it would require.

E. S. JONES.—(1) Mr. Wise seems to be developing his faculty for misrepresentation, and if the Liverpool Freethinkers mean to correct him in every case they will have enough to do. Mr. Foote's debate with the Rev. A. J. Harrison took place at Newcastle more than thirteen years ago. Mr. Harrison made no arrangements for a report. Mr. Foote did. But the reporter, who obtained £2 on account, turned out to be a drunken scoundrel, and never supplied a line of copy. The facts were stated in the Secularist at the time. You must pardon us if we give no further attention to Mr. Wise or his statements. (2) Thomas Cooper's opinions we only know from his writings, and they are accessible to those who wish to consult them.

W. BUSSEY.—He is a brother (by blood) of the Mr. Bradlaugh. The name keeps him going. As Smith, Jones, Brown or Robinson he would be unheard of. Thanks for your good wishes.

J. CLARKE.—Sorry for the misprint in chronicling your success at Liverpool. We will remember your initial is J., not W., n future.

H. NICHOLSON.—We must not expect perfect fairness from the press. It is something to get a few lines inserted in reply to editorial calumnies. We hope the Ox Hill Branch will not be discouraged.

YOUNG FREETHINKER.—It shall be seen what can be done in your direction.

F. SMALLMAN.—We value your congratulations.

A. B. WAKEFIELD hopes that Mr. Moss's advice will be followed He has himself opened debates at local Young Men's Mutual Improvement Societies and administered doses of Freethought.

J. DONALD.—Hardly up to the mark.

GREY-HEADED ATHEIST.—Thanks for your offer to stand surety to your newsagent for twenty copies of the Freethinker. To obtain a weekly contents-sheet post free it is only necessary to send us the name and address.

C. BENTLEY.—Your letter is not a word too long. Many thanks for that chapter in the history of Secularism. We hope the Bethnal Green Branch will flourish. The London Federation will have to do a bold stroke in the East End.

W. H. TAYLOR.—Pleased to learn you joined as an active member of the N. S. S. on Sunday night. We wish all our readers, especially the younger ones, would join the real Salvation Army. Send us your experiences in regard to leaving copies of the Freethinker in public conveyances.

J. DOWIE.—The Free-Lovers, as an American sect, were started by Christians in America. The most noted community was that founded at Oneida by Father Noyes, who, after diligently studying Paul's doctrines, came to the conclusion that they inculcated Free-Love. A full description of the sect was given in Progress, March, 1886, under the title "A Bible community."

C. THOMSON.—A full account of the Crusades is found in Crimes of Christianity.

M. STITT.—Glad to hear you are going to join the N. S. S. Thanks for papers. See "Acid Drops."

A. SCIARONI.—Thanks for the Italian papers. We have glanced through Dr. Manzoni's papers, and they are rather interesting; but the Paris Exhibition is now a matter of history. Thanks also for your good wishes.

B. HARRIS.—You are mistaken in supposing that we have not studied "both sides." For the rest, we must agree to differ.

FIAT LUX.—Your letter is no reply whatever to Mr. Wheeler's articles. Your statement that Newton's Principia is jargon to the non-mathematical is a good specimen of false analogy.

ALEX MCINNES, 204 Dumbarton Road, Glasgow, writes:—"I send you an account of my conversion from Atheism to Christianity 33 years ago. Will you have the honesty to make known my case to your readers?" Well, we have had the honesty to do so. We are also prepared to insert—as a prepaid advertisement—an announcement of the death of Queen Anne.

A. LOVETT.—Your congratulations are welcome. Glad to hear that, although you are more than half dead and blind, Freethought has given you a cheerfulness that you once thought it impossible to attain to. As you say, selp-help is the only practical gospel It is well that we should try to help each other, but such help is futile unless it helps us to help ourselves.

INCOG.—The incident was amusing. Mr. Foote will do his best as President.

H. BRYCESON.—(1) The 9,000,000 killed for witchcraft is Sprenger's calculation, and probably under the mark. (2) Yes, it would be a good thing to have some large posters for the Freethought lectures in London.

JOSEPH BROWN, 86 Durham Street, Bentinck, Newcastle-on-Tyne, acknowledges the following subscriptions for the N. E. Secular Federation:—A. B., 5s.; Darlington Branch, 3s.; Mr. Wharrier, 10s.; J. Humble, 1s.; Mr. Collinson, 1s.; F. Humble, 1s.; T. Humble, 1s.; J. H., 1s.: Bedlington Branch, 4s. 6d.; Mr. Sanderson, 2s. 6d.

PAPERS RECEIVED.—Boston Investigator—Progressive Thinker — Liberator — Der Arme Teufel — Secular Thought — Echo — Truthseeker — Market Rasen Mail — Bulletin des Sommaires — Open Court — Liberty — Overland Ceylon Observer — Leeds Daily News — Freethought — Evening Standard—The Brooklyn World—Hull Daily News—Freidenker—Neues Freireligioses Sonntags-Blatt—Menschenthum —Consett Guardian—Eastern Evening News—Belfast Evening Star — Manchester Courier — Western Figaro — Blackburn Times — Fair Play — Echo — Western Figaro — Woman's Suffrage Journal—Inquirer—La Riforma—Il Dovere—Manchester Guardian—Liberty—Loughborough Herald—Crook Wesleyan Magazine—Sunday Chronicle—Retford Times—Twentieth Century—Bishop Auckland Methodist Messenger—Newcastle Chronicle—Shields' Gazette—South Wales Echo—Laughter—Marlow Parish Magazine—Banner of Faith—The Coming Man.

FRIENDS who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish our attention directed.

CORRESPONDENCE should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

PERSONAL.

EVER since my attack of influenza I have been more or less unwell; chiefly, I suspect, through not allowing myself an interval of rest. On Thursday night I took the chair for Mr. J. M. Robertson at the Hall of Science. I see now it was a foolish thing to do, but I was anxious about the success of this enterprise, and disinclined to break an engagement. I had a troublesome cough, but I contrived to minimise it to appearance by coughing during the outbursts of applause. On Friday I felt worse, and during the night I was the victim of severe bronchitis and inflammation of the lungs. On Saturday morning Mr. Wheeler did his best to find a substitute for me at Manchester, but his efforts were fruitless, and Mr. Forder had to telegraph to the secretary of the Manchester Branch that I was unable to fulfil my engagement. Seven years ago, also on the first Sunday in March, I was unable to keep a lecturing engagement at Manchester because Judge North locked me up in Newgate. Since then I believe I have been able to keep all my Sunday engagements until now. I am very sorry I could not let the Manchester friends know earlier, but I quite meant to go—cough or no cough—until I found on Friday night that I could not move without being half suffocated.

Digitized by Google

I am writing this with pencil in bed on Monday afternoon. I am rapidly improving, but I must be very careful. For some time I fear I have been overworking myself. As soon as possible I must cast my work aside and spend a few days on the south coast. Meanwhile I find that editing a paper is like turning a wheel. You cannot miss a single revolution. So I am sitting up in bed, pencil in hand, scrawling away, "Copy, copy, copy" for the Freethinker.

P.S. (Tuesday evening).—My improvement continues, but on my doctor's advice I have postponed my visit to Chatham, which was fixed for Friday. There is little doubt but I shall be able to lecture, more or less efficiently, at Camberwell on Sunday evening.

SUGAR PLUMS.

MR. J. CLARKE, of London, took Mr. Foote's place at Manchester on Sunday at very short notice. He was at Oldham and came over on learning the state of affairs. He gave great satisfaction and was heartily applauded. All's well that ends well.

THE circulation of the Freethinker is steadily improving, though less rapidly than we could wish. Will those who are interested in its welfare do their level best to push it among their friends and acquaintances, or otherwise during the next few months?

AT the last Executive meeting of the N. S. S. Mr. Foote took the chair for the first time as President. Before the meeting broke up he submitted a scheme for augmenting the Society's revenues. It was unanimously approved, and Mr. Foote was authorised to draw up a circular on the subject.

Mr. J. M. ROBERTSON'S lecture at the London Hall of Science on "Freethought and the Bible" was a great success. There was a capital audience, and the lecture was skilfully conceived and delivered with fluency and force. Mr. Robertson's opponent, representing the Christian Evidence Society, was the Rev. Mr. Tinling, who did not prove a good debater. The lecturer's replies were very satisfactory, and elici ed great applause from the Freethinking portion of the audience.

MR. G. STANDRING is down for the third lecture of this free course, his subject being "The Church and the People." This number of the Freethinker will be in the hands of its London readers before the lecture takes place, and we hope they will bring some of their orthodox friends to hear Mr. Standring. Next Thursday, March 13, Mr. Foote will wind up this course of Free Lectures with an address on "Freethought and Christ." He will be opposed by the Secretary of the Christian Evidence Society.

IMMEDIATE steps will be taken to carry on this Free Lecture movement, on week-nights, in other parts of London. Freethought will make no conquests by going to sleep. Our cry must be a double one, "Agitate, agitate, agitate! and Organise, organise, organise!"

De Dageraad devotes over a page to a review of Mr. Wheeler's Biographical Dictionary of Freethinkers, which it highly praises and characterises as the most important Freethought work published during the past year.

The Secretary of the Oxley Branch of the N. S. S. has utilised his copy of Mr. Wheeler's Biographical Dictionary of Freethinkers, by adducing it in evidence against a writer in the Consett Guardian, who looks on Freethinkers as obnoxious people of no account.

SWEDISH PRISONER'S FUND:—F. A. Sutton, 1s.; Amicus, 2s. 6d.

THE Truthseeker (Feb. 22) gives portraits of Viktor E. Lennstrand and Captain Otto Thomson with a sketch of their labors for Freethought in Sweden.

WE urgently press upon our Derby readers the necessity of responding promptly to the appeal we made last week. Mr. H. McGuinness, who is only a working man, has taken the responsibility of the rent of the hall, which is £10 per annum, and the place will be useless for meetings without furniture. Up to the present only nine shares have been taken up in the Furnishing Company, and they are only 5s. each. Some persons might like to give a subscription instead of taking shares. Mr. McGuinness's address is 20 Newland Street, Derby.

PROFESSOR MAX MULLER, in the fourth of his second course of Gifford lectures, helped to smash another Christian idol. It is taught in the Churches that the Bible is the oldest book in the world. But not a scrap of it can be carried beyond the ninth century before Christ; while the Vedas, according to Max Müller, could not have been collected before B.C. 1,000 at the very latest, and a long time before that is necessary to account for their growth.

WE have received the monthly bulletin of the French Freethought Federation which was decided to be formed at the last International Congress. The annual subscription to the Federation is only four francs, and entitles the subscriber to the receipt of the Bulletin.

WHILE the New York Presbytery was discussing the proposed revision of the Confession of Faith, the Rev. D. G. Wylie said: "Mr. Ingersoll has been quoted in this debate. We are to give up the Confession, because we cannot answer his arguments against the doctrines of the Confession. Can we answer his arguments against the Bible and the character of God? If we cannot, shall we give up the Scriptures and God? The arguments of infidels cannot be answered on the grounds of pure reason."

A METHODIST at Hull having thanked God "for having raised up such men as the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes," Mr. Billany sends a well-timed letter to the Hull Daily News exposing that person's inventive genius in his story of "The Converted Atheist Shoemaker," and his subterfuges for refusing to give his name.

WE are glad to give news from the Secularists of Australia. The Freethinkers of Sydney have now a fine edifice of their own, and Mr. Symes reports that the Melbourne Hall of Science is quite a success, and is becoming more and more a centre of influence and power in these colonies. The literature department also, including the Liberator, is flourishing as it never did before. Scarcely a day passes without the enrolment of new subscribers to the Liberator, mostly in the country districts; and the amount of literature now sent constantly out into the colonies is something astonishing—though not a tenth of what it should be.

MR. SYMES continues, "Still our work is just beginning. Hitherto we have had to do soldier work, sapper, and miner work; we have had to fight for the right to live. We must push ahead. There must be a Secular College for the training of young men and women to cope with the priests and parsons, especially to deal with their dupes. This is where our greatest conquests must be won. The priests and parsons are too wide-awake to subject themselves to the humiliation of a defeat by entering upon argument with us. They leave that to their hangers-on, who have no idea of the merits of the case, and who are too stupid to know how to attack us or to know when they are beaten. Our people must get at the dupes of superstition; not by way of attack; but in friendly conversation they must point out the absurdity of the Christian superstition."

MR. JOSEPH SYMES has been on a visit to Tasmania and preaching the gospel of Freethought in that island. At Launceston in the open air the Christians showed by rowdyism how little they relished an attack on their faith. His chairman was thrown down but not injured.

Digitized by Google

MR. SYMES gives his readers over a column of items from the Freethinker and says of our Christmas Number, "The illustrations are very telling. Why don't the hypocrites once more prosecute the paper as they did seven years ago? Have they learned a lesson? Did they burn their poor fingers?"

THE lively, philosophic, and we must add poetic "Nunquam," once more girds at the Sabbatarians in his "As You Like It" columns of the Manchester Sunday Chronicle. A sacred concert was given in Manchester on a Sunday on behalf of the widow and children of a respected citizen, whereupon the secretary of the Lord's Day Observance Society wrote that this was in contravention of the commandment of God and Act 21, George III. No wonder "Nunquam" was roused.

THE Belfast Secularists give their Society bold advertisement in the Evening Star. A Christian lady wrote to that paper objecting to its inserting such an advertisement, but the letter only produced a better advertisement in the shape of an editorial stating that the Belfast Secularists have always shown a love of fair play. They allow the opposition view to be presented at their meetings. Arguments should be met by arguments and not by boycotting.

IN a case of marriage with a deceased wife's sister one of the parties said they could find nothing in Scripture against it, whereupon Mr. Justice Stephen remarked, "The sooner people learn that religious belief has nothing to do with the law of marriage the better."

THE Affirmation Bill doesn't work quite smoothly. At Newcastle, a Mr. Sadler called as a juror desired to affirm as he was of no religious belief. When the form was read over he stopped short at the words "contrary to my religious belief," and Mr. Justice Day rather peremptorily dismissed him. If this is the treatment meted to sceptics the chances are they will be found more numerous than ever in the jury-box.

AN International Conference of Cremationists will be held at Berlin on 4, 5, and 6 of August. Many questions affecting the spread of the movement will be considered.

HOW TO HELP US.

(1) Get your newsagent to exhibit the Freethinker in his window.
(2) Get your newsagent to take a few copies of the Freethinker and try to sell them, guaranteeing to take the copies that may remain unsold.
(3) Take an extra copy (or more), and circulate it among your acquaintances.
(4) Display, or get displayed, one of our contents-sheets, which are of a convenient size for the purpose. Mr. Forder will send them on application.
(5) Leave a copy of the Freethinker now and then in the train, the car, or the omnibus.
(6) Distribute some of our cheap tracts in your walks abroad, at public meetings, or among the audiences around street-corner preachers.

OBITUARY.

We regret to announce the death of Baron Ferdinando Swift, president of the Workmen's Society of Venice, and one of the leading Italian Freethinkers, who died at Venice on Feb. 22. Baron Swift was some few years ago prosecuted for being president of an atheistical society, and he retained his sentiments till the last. He was distinguished both as a political economist, an individualist, and as a public and private benefactor.

We regret also to notice the death of Photius Fisk, a wealthy and benevolent American Freethinker, of Greek birth, who leaves a large fortune to the poor of Boston.

WHY I AM NOT AN AGNOSTIC.

AN Agnostic is one who is in doubt concerning the existence of a God. But, to be candid, I am compelled to say that I am no more in doubt concerning such a hypothesis than I am in doubt concerning devils, dragons, and other chimeras. An infinite good being is precisely as great an impossibility as an infinite bad being, a heaven as absolutely impossible as a hell.

I not only believe, but I know, there is no God—simply because I do not know there is one. Neither does anyone else know that there is one. No one ever has proved it, no one does now or ever can prove it. God himself, if there were one, has not proved and does not now prove it. There is absolutely no evidence, directly or indirectly; no logic, reason, sense, or analogy, to prove it.

If there were a God I should know it, because I have anxiously sought. But I have sought in vain. And if the Theist insists that I should not know God, then I, in turn, insist that, for like reasons, no one else has known or now knows God. And what I cannot know, what nobody else can know, and no one has ever known, is, of course, unknowable, and therefore we should not believe it.

Therefore my honest denial and fearless assertion, There is no God, is tantamount to absolute proof that there is no such being.

Upon those affirming devolves the proof. Should one say, There is a devil, it is not necessary that we should explore the world and sweep ethereal space with our telescopes in search of his satanic majesty. Oh, no; we simply say, No, there is no devil, and this denial is equivalent to proof that such a being does not exist. Those affirming must do the searching, produce the evidence, and submit it to the world, or their bald assertion falls to the ground as so much nonsense.

But the God-idea positively conflicts with all that we know, directly or indirectly. When closely analysed and considered in the light of modern science, it becomes a nursery tale, and the time is near at hand when millions of our best men and women will stand aghast at the thought that at one time they actually entertained the notion.

When we can prove that twice two are five; that two cannon-balls can occupy the same space at the same time; that two locomotives can pass on the same track; that a receptable already full can be filled again; that a finite body can be everywhere at the same time; that nothing can produce everything; that miracles are the order of the day, then, and not till then, may it be reasonably affirmed that there is a God.

Like Colonel Ingersoll, I have subjected my belief to the full scope of freethought, the methods of science and closest reasoning. The freedom of thought and the right of expressing such thought, vouchsafed to us by the genius of our glorious republic, has led me on, even beyond Mr. Ingersoll's Agnosticism; beyond the conservative "perhaps," beyond the equivocating "I don't know;" beyond Spencer's "Unknowable;" beyond the compromising attitude of an unbeliever, to the more aggressive one of an outspoken Atheist and Materialist.

An absolutely authoritative and infallible gospel once questioned, once subjected to human tests and reason, once doubted in its minutest detail, there is no stopping-place until the goal of Atheism and Materialism is reached.

Theology is miracle. Based upon miracle, it must always remain miracle, and, consequently, must be accepted without human understanding or reason. It is emphatically non-progressive, to-day precisely as and what it was two or four thousand years ago. It means to-day what it did then, and one word taken from or added to it destroys its authoritative character. It is either a gospel according to Moses and the prophets, and Peter, Luke, and John, or it is simply a human affair, a fraud, a gospel according to Tom, Dick, and Harry. Until new revelations "from on high" are given to the world, all attempts to evolute religion or to substitute a "new theology" will but tend to destroy the old.

But how many honest, thinking minds to-day remain true to the old theology and all it implies? None! It is to-day upheld only by the unthinking but honest masses, who resignedly accept it without thought or reason, and those conventional Christians who go for popularity and to please their good wives. All better and progressive minds within the Church are to-day free to confess their unbelief in many of the most important events and doctrines recorded in the Bible. The six days creation, the personality of God, the doctrine of the Fall of Man, the scheme of redemption, infant and heathen damnation. a literal hell, etc., all are alike repudiated. Yet the plain language of the Bible on these things cannot be misunderstood. "And the morning and the evening were the first day," etc., proves beyond doubt that the writers of Genesis meant six literal days of twenty-four hours each, for the creation of the universe! "In the image of God created he them;" "God walking in the garden in the cool of the day;" "Moses spoke to God face to face"—all these expressions clearly indicate beyond cavil that the God of the Bible was supposed to be a person, "very like" a man. Of course "walking in the garden" clearly implies that he could not have been anywhere else in the universe or upon the face of the earth at that particular time. In fact he did not even occupy all the garden, or it would not have been necessary for him to walk or to search for Adam. So much to establish the very limited personality of a God to-day still believed by millions of Christians to be the creator and ruler of an unlimited universe!

Digitized by Google

Again, the doctrines of man's fall, of total depravity, of infant and heathen damnation to an eternal and literal hell are all recorded there as plain as the rule of three in mathematics. And all are essential to the survival of the Christian religion. If there is no hell there is no Christianity, the mission of Christ was a lamentable failure and his death worse than butchery. If man through Adam's sin is not damned, if man must not be "born again," if the heathen may be saved without Christ, would it not be infinitely preferable if all the human race died in infancy, or if all were born Hottentots and Laplanders and thus saved, than to have them live to see "the light of Christianity" and, perchance, for this reason be damned to eternal perdition? Would not Christ in such a case have been and still be the cause of millions being damned, instead of being the savior of the race?

Being one of the many who by methods of reason have discarded a blind faith in the ancient Bible, I can neither consistently embrace the inconsistencies of the so-ealled "new theology" as revealed according to Beecher, Swing, Barrows, and others, finding no foothold for such a belief, but discover a correct solution for all existing problems in nature, its law and order.

Theism and Spiritism imply miracle and impossibility. These theories divest everything tangible of all potencies to do anything, then invest some imaginary nothing with supernatural powers to do everything. But we know twice two is four and cannot possibly be five. So we know that the universe fills all space at the same time, therefore, all space being occupied by matter—solid, fluid, or aeriform—no other body, person, or thing can occupy the same space.

All objects of knowledge are natural. All we see on the earth, in the earth, over and under the earth, beyond in ethereal space, among suns, moons, planets, stars and systems; all the revelations of our strongest lenses reveal but natural things and causes, never a God.

All causes, powers, and agencies operating within the vast realms of nature are natural; if we can trace any effect to its cause or causes we shall always find a natural, never a supernatural cause.

The universe is eternal. It had no beginning, can never have an end. It is infinite—having no limit, centre, or circumference. Its existing now, absolutely proves that it has always existed—not, indeed, in its present form, but as an infinite aggregation of living, potent, elementary particles, combining (yes, fortuitously) in ever changing form. A beginning implies an eternity of time when it did not exist, when all was infinite vaccuum—eternal nothingness. But if this at any one time had been the actual state of space, nothing would exist now, as from nothing nothing can come. Possessing no attributes or potencies, nothing would for ever remain nothing, and consequently the universe could not exist to-day.

A God postulated as existing before any imaginary "beginning," miraculously creating it from nothing, is still more absurd, as a God existing in infinite vacuity during an infinite period of time, before this imaginary beginning, who would or could not create the universe at least ten millions of years multiplied by this number ad infinitum, before the time it is said he created it, loses at once all attributes of an "omniscient" being and vanishes. Because if it was consistent with "divine wisdom" to omit the creative act during all these ages and cycles of beginningless time, he of course would never have consummated it, because if it was consistent with his wisdom to create it six thousand or six millions of years ago, then it must have been very foolish to leave the creative act undone during the eternity preceding this time, and in this case, God again loses his divine attributes.

I insist that it is utterly irreconcilable with reason that an eternal God, who is supposed to be perfect, omniscient, and unchangeable, who existed in infinite dark vacuity voluntarily, and of choice, during all eternity, without relations or conditions surrounding him, could have suddenly conceived of a motive for the creative act never experienced or thought of before; and that after being content in absolute idleness and stagnation in his dark and cheerless abode during eternity, he should all at once so radically change in his manner and tastes as to create a universe, which would henceforth entirely change his relations, conditions, and mode of life, and to say the least, keep him pretty busy making human beings and other animals, listening to the countless prayers of the different denominations, counting hairs, permitting sparrows to fall, and at the same time whirling countless millions of planets through the immensity of space.

But, God or none, any beginning implies a miracle—a creation from nothing—which childish notion must be abandoned.

Again: God, if real, must be a person, a living organic being, otherwise he cannot be a God and all it implies. And surely the personal pronouns and appellations, "he," "his," "him," "our heavenly father" (still indulged in by Professor Swing), etc., would be anomalous if he is not a being or person of some kind. But here again we find it very difficult to retain a God. A personality implies limit, outline, form; necessitates animal organism, nervous system, digestive and respiratory organs, and circulating processes. "What does not breathe does not live." This postulate of science consigns God to oblivion unless he has lungs. Thought necessitates brain; sight, eyes; sound, ears; and speech, physical organs to produce it. All these processes are simply functions of living beings, in the absence of which they have no existence in nature.

Exterminate all animal organism from the face of the earth, and thought, wisdom, love, sight, etc., would vanish also. Science recognises no manifestation of wisdom, love, etc., in inorganic matter, in air, in etheral space, between the earth and moon or sun, simply because it is occupied only by inorganic matter, and this never contains such attributes. Matter, moved by its own physical and chemical potencies, must first evolve into organic forms before any manifestations of intellect and consciousness become possible.

Therefore, if God is a thinking, living reality, he must be an organic, breathing being, or he cannot possibly be a God and all it implies.

But now the problem stares us in the face—and which the church must solve, or Atheism will soon take its place—how can an organic, limited, living God be a God and all it implies and at the same time occupy the relation of creator and ruler of an unlimited universe? How can the limited be related to the unlimited as a controlling power? It is all childish talk to talk about an "infinite God" when we know of only one infinite reality and that is the universe. It is likewise absurd to talk about a God being here and there and everywhere when the universe monopolises every point of space.

It is either all God and no universe, or it is all universe and no God.

Unless the church can intelligently solve the problem how a God with a brain can be infinite, or how a God without a brain can be a God, it will be but a few years before it will come to an ignoble end.

Therefore I am not an Agnostic. The God-idea—in spite of its hoary traditions and venerable associations—never having been duly established by logic, science, and reason, and being utterly unthinkable, and, when properly analysed, childish and absurd, I do not put my reasonable unbelief on a par with an unreasonable belief and say "I don't know," but insist that upon those affirming devolves the proof; and unless the idea can be logically demonstrated as consistent with truth and sense, my fearless and simple denial absolutely proves and establishes the fact, startling though it be to the unthinking millions, that there is no God!

And the world will be infinitely better without one.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

Truthseeker (New York).

Outside man is no salvation.—Feuerbach.

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY MEETINGS.

LONDON.

Ball's Pond Secular Hall, 86 Newington Green Road, N., 7 Mr. F. Millar, "The Struggle for Existence."

Battersea—The Shed of Truth, Prince of Wales's Road, 7.30, Mrs. Thornton Smith, "Remedies for Poverty"

Bethnal Green—2 Railway Place, Cambridge Road (temporary premises), 3.15, a members' special meeting; important business.

Camberwell—61 New Church Road, S.E., 7.30, Mr. G. W. Foote, "Why I am an Atheist."

Claremont Hall, Penton Street, Pentonville Road, N., at 7, Mr. J. M. Robertson, "Christianity versus Paganism."

East London—Swaby's Coffee House, 103 Mile End Road, E., 7.45, Mr. C J. Hunt, "Life and Death."

Edmonton Assembly Rooms, Silver Street, 7, a lecture,

Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, E.C., 7, Mrs. Annie Besant, "Christianity and Woman."

Hyde Park, near Marble Arch; 11.15, Mr. T. Thurlow, "An Hour with Rénan's 'Life of Jesus.'"

Milton Hall, Kentish Town Road. N.W., 7.30, Mr. B. Hyatt, "Can Man by Searching Find God?" preceded by a recital from "Macbeth."

New Southgate, Betstyle Bridge, 11, Mr. S. Standring, "Who Wants to Go to Heaven?"

Old Southgate—Opposite Cherry Tree, 7, Sam Standring, "God's Wicked Ways."

West Ham—121 Broadway, Plaistow, 11.30, G. Cave-Hill, "Monism"; 7, Capt. C. Pfoundes, R.G.S., "Theosophy, its Follies and Failings"; 8.30, music and recitations.

Westminster—Liberal and Radical Club, Chapter Street, 7, Mr. R. Forder, a lecture.

Wood Green—Jolly Butchers' Hill, 11, various speakers.

Woolwich—"Sussex Arms," Assembly Room, 60 Plumstead Road, 7.30, Mr. Tolman Garner, "The Dying Creed."

COUNTRY.

Birmingham—Baskerville Hall, Crescent, 7, Major-General A. Phelps, "Vaccination at Work," with lime light views.

Glasgow—Ramshorn Hall, 122 Ingram Street; at 6.30, Soiree.

Hanley—Secular Hall, 51 John Street, 7, Mr. A. Hall will give a reading: Morality of Atheism.

Huddersfield — Littlewood's Buildings, Upperhead Row, 6.30, special important general meeting.

Hull Branch—No. 2 Room, Friendly Societies' Hall, Albion Street, 6.30, Mr. G. Franks, "Are Foreign Missionaries Successful?"

Liverpool — Camden Hall, Camden Street, at 11, Tontine Society; 3, discussion: "Purified Christianity: its effects on Humanity," Mr. Batricksen to open; 7, Mr. Harry Smith, secular sermon, "Unto the Greek's Foolishness."

Manchester—Rusholme Road, Oxford Road, 6.30, an entertainment or social evening will be given.

Newcastle-on-Tyne — 4 Hall's Court, Newgate Street, 11.30, meeting of Sunday Music League; 7.30, important business meeting of members; on Wednesday, Mr. J. Sadler will open a debate on "Socialism."

Sheffield—Hall of Science, Rockingham Street, Mr. Edward Carpenter, 3, "Musical Vibrations" (with experiments); 7, "Foreign Competition." Tea at 5.

South Shields—Captain Duncan's Navigation Schools, King 7, Mr. Waddington, "The Second Advent of Christ Critically Examined in the Light of Reason and Science."

LECTURERS' ENGAGEMENTS.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Credon Road, London, S.E.—March 23, Milton Hall; 30, Woolwich. April 6 (morning), Kingsland Green (evening), Ball's Pond; 13, Camberwell. May 18 (morning), Clerkenwell Green, (evening), Ball's Pond; 25, Regent's Park. June 15, Ball's Pond; 29, Mile End. July 13, Mile End.

TOLEMAN-GARNER, 8 Heyworth Road, Stratford, London, E.—March 9, Woolwich; 16 (morning), West Ham; 23, Woolwich; 30, Westminster. May 4 (morning), Mile End Waste; 11, Clerkenwell Green; 18 (afternoon), Regent's Park; 25 (morning), Hyde Park. June 1 (morning), Mile End Waste; 8 (morning), Clerkwell Green.

JAMES HOOPER, 11 Upper Eldon Street, Sneinton, Nottingham.—March 9, Nottingham. April 13, Nottingham.

E. STANLEY JONES, 53 Park Street, Toxteth, Liverpool—March 16, Liverpool.

T. THURLOW, 7 Dickson's Villas, Rutland Road, East Ham.—March 9, Hyde Park. April 13 (evening), Plaistow; 27, Hyde Park.

H. SMITH, 3 Breck Place Breck Road, Everton Road, Liverpool.—March 9, Liverpool. April 6, Liverpool.

PROGRESSIVE PUBLISHING CO.'S LIST.

All orders to be sent, with remittance, to R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C. Rate of postage—Orders under 3d., one halfpenny; orders under 6d. one penny. Orders over 6d. post free.

G. W. FOOTE.

	s.	d.
PRISONER FOR BLASPHEMY. Cloth	2	6
A Full History of his Three Trials and Twelve Months' Imprisonment. Copies in paper covers, soiled, 6d.
IS SOCIALISM SOUND?	1	0
Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant.
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
CHRISTIANITY AND SECULARISM	1	0
Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. In paper covers.
Superior edition in cloth	1	6
INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS	0	3
Second edition, enlarged.
Superior edition, in cloth	1	3
DARWIN ON GOD	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0
CONTENTS:—Darwin's Grandfather—Darwin's Father—Darwin's Early Piety—Almost a Clergyman—On Board the "Beagle"—Settling at Down—Death and Burial—Purpose of Pamphlet—Some Objections—Darwin Abandons Christianity—Deism—Creation—Origin of Life—Origin of Man—Animism—A Personal God—Design—Divine Beneficence—Religion and Morality—Agnosticism and Atheism.
DEFENCE OF FREE SPEECH	0	4
Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes.
LETTERS TO JESUS CHRIST	0	4
PHILOSOPHY OF SECULARISM	0	3
THE BIBLE GOD	0	2
THE FOLLY OF PRAYER	0	2
CHRISTIANITY AND PROGRESS	0	2
A Reply to Mr Gladstone.
WHAT WAS CHRIST?	0	2
A Reply to J. S. Mill.
THE DYING ATHEIST. A Story	0	1
WAS JESUS INSANE?	0	1
A searching inquiry into the mental condition of the Prophet of Nazareth.
THE SHADOW OF THE SWORD	0	2
A moral and statistical Essay on War.
ROYAL PAUPERS	0	2
Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty.
BIBLE HEROES—First Series, in elegant wrapper ...	1	0
(1) Mr. Adam, (2) Captain Noah, (3) Father Abraham, (4) Juggling Jacob, (5) Master Joseph, (6) Joseph's Brethren, (7) Holy Moses I., (8) Holy Moses II., (9) Parson Aaron, (10) General Joshua, (11) Jephthah and Co., (12) Professor Samson. One Penny each singly.
BIBLE HEROES—Second Series, in elegant wrapper...	1	0
(13) Prophet Samuel, (14) King Saul, (15) Saint David I., (16) Saint David II., (17) Sultan Solomon, (18) Poor Job, (19) Hairy Elijah, (20) Bald Elisha, (21) General Jehu, (22) Doctor Daniel, (23) The Prophets (Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Hosea); (24) St. Peter, (25) St. Paul
MRS. BESANT'S THEOSOPHY	0	2
A Candid Criticism.
THEOSOPHY AND SECULARISM..	0	2
A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant.
THE NEW CAGLIOSTRO	0	2
An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky.

COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

MISTAKES OF MOSES	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth	1	6
Only Complete Edition published in England
DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT	0	6
Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy.
REPLY TO GLADSTONE	0	4
With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler.
ROME OR REASON? Reply to Cardinal Manning	0	4
FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Rev. Dr. Field ...	0	2
GOD AND MAN. Second Reply to Dr. Field	0	2
THE DYING CREED	0	2
THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH	0	2
THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION	0	2
A Discussion with Hon. F. D. Courdert and Gov. S. L. Woodford.
ART AND MORALITY	0	2
DO I BLASPHEME?	0	2
THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE	0	2
THE GREAT MISTAKE	0	1
LIVE TOPICS	0	1
MYTH AND MIRACLE	0	1
REAL BLASPHEMY	0	1
SOCIAL SALVATION	0	2

G. W. FOOTE and J. M. WHEELER.

CRIMES OF CHRISTIANITY. Vol. I. Cloth ...	2	6
Hundred of exact References to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.
THE JEWISH LIFE OF CHRIST	0	6
With voluminous footnotes. An extraordinary work.
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0

G. W. FOOTE and W. P. BALL.

BIBLE HANDBOOK FOR FREETHINKERS AND INQUIRING CHRISTIANS	1	4
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
Sold also in separate parts as follows—
Bible Contradictions	0	4
The Contradictions are printed in parallel columns.
2. Bible Absurdities	0	4
All the chief Absurdities from Genesis to Revelation, conveniently and strikingly arranged, with appropriate headlines, giving the point of each absurdity in a sentence.
3. Bible Atrocities	0	4
Containing all the godly wickedness from Genesis to Revelation. Each infamy has a separate headline for easy reference
4. Bible Immoralities, Indecencies, Obscenities, Broken Promises, and Unfulfilled Prophecies ...	0	4

Digitized by Google

NOW READY.

LETTERS TO THE CLERGY

FIRST SERIES.

1.—CREATION
To the Bishop of Carlisle.

2.—THE BELIEVING THIEF
To the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

3.—THE ATONEMENT
To the Bishop of Peterborough.

4.—OLD TESTAMENT MORALITY
To the Rev. E. R. Conder, D.D.

5.—INSPIRATION
To the Rev. R. F. Horton, M.A.

6.—CREDENTIALS OF THE GOSPEL
To the Rev. Prof. J. A. Beet.

7.—MIRACLES
To the Rev. Brownlow Maitland, M.A.

8.—PRAYER
To the Rev. T. Teignmouth Shore, M.A.

By G. W. FOOTE.
128pp., in Wrapper. ONE SHILLING.

2d. Now Ready. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC?

A NEW PAMPHLET BY

COLONEL. R. G. INGERSOLL.

A

BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY

OF

FREETHINKERS

OF

ALL AGES AND NATIONS.

BY

J. M. WHEELER.

Price 7/6 Handsomely bound in cloth. Price 7/6

THE IMPOSSIBLE CREED

An Open Letter to the

BISHOP OF PETERBOROUGH

By G. W. FOOTE.

Price 2d. Price 2d.

Price 1d. Price 1d.

A LIE IN FIVE CHAPTERS.

THE REV. HUGH PRICE HUGHES'S

CONVERTED ATHEIST

By G. W. FOOTE.

Should be circulated by Freethinkers who desire to see this pious fraud exposed as widely as possible.

MARRIAGE & DIVORCE

AN AGNOSTIC'S VIEW.

By COL. R. G. INGERSOLL.

2d.] Reprinted from the "North American Review." [2d

Everh Freethinker, Radical or Socialist should read it and circulate it amongst his friends.

W. J. Rendell's

"WIFE'S FRIEND."

Recommended in "Law of Population," and "Wife's Hand Book." Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell Street Clerkenwell, and supplied per post, 2s. dozen. For particulars of this Malthusian discovery send stamped envelope. Higginson's Syringe, with vertical and reverse current, 3s. 6d. and 4s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. All other Malthusian Appliances. All prices post free.

HARTNOLL,

ENGLISH AND FOREIGN CHEMIST,

1A PICCADILLY

(Under the London Pavilion Music Hall),

LONDON, W.

Hartnoll's Specialities, Appliances and Medicated Preparations are world-renowned.

Spiral, Douche and Latest Improved Syringes.

ESTABLISHED OVER 50 YEARS.

IRETON'S

INDELIBLE JET BLACK MARKING INK

(NO HEATING REQUIRED)

For Rubber Stamps, Stencil, Type or Pen.

PRICE 6d. 1/- and 2/6 per Bottle.

Sample bottle 4d. post free.

IRETON & Co., 92, Gracechurch St., LONDON, E.C.

The largest makers of Rubber Stamps.

Special terms to the Trade.

Dyed with Ireton's Ink, no hope of ever changing my Color.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. VOL. I.
By Dr. T. R. ALLINSON.
4 SPANISH PLACE, MANCHESTER SQUARE, LONDON, W.
Of the Author, for Postal Order for 1s 2d.

It contains Articles on: Management of Infancy; Health; Longevity; The Teeth; Brown Bread; Bread Making; Food: Vegetarianism; Tobacco; The Drink Question; Fruit; Fresh Air; Exercise; Bathing; Light; Holidays; &c. Also the cause and cure of Disease; Constipation; Biliousness; Eczema; Blackheads and Pimples; Nervousness; Coughs and Colds; Chest Complaints; Deafness; Thread Worms; Long Worms; Tape Worms; The Itch, &c.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. VOL II.
Of the Author, for Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Containing Articles on: The Healing Power of Nature; Clothing; Electricity in Disease; Apparent Health; Vegetarian Experiments; The Pig as Human Food; Popular Fallacies about Flesh; The Beef Tea Delusion; Salt; Saline Starvation; Tea Drinking; The Hair and its Management; Sleep and Sleeplessness; Want of Energy, &c.; Health Hints for Workers, for Shop Assistants, and for Servants; Advice for the Thin; for the Stout; and on the Proper Treatment of Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, &c.

No House is Complete without these Works.
When ordering the Essays, be sure and state which Volume you require.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE;
OR, THE ONLY RATIONAL WAY OF TREATING DISEASE.
Everybody likes it who reads it.
Of the Author, for Postal-order for 1s. 1d.

MANCHESTER BRANCH OF THE N.S.S.,
Rusholme Road, Oxford Road All Saints.
On March 30th and 31st

A SALE OF WORK will be held for the purpose of Re-Furnishing the Hall with more comfortable Seats. Donations, either in money or articles, will be thankfully received by the Committee or Secretary, A. Hemingway, 25 Higher Chatham Street, C.-on-M., Manchester.

APARTMENTS.—Two Rooms Unfurnished; suit couple; pleasant outlook; 9s. 6 Napier Terrace, Upper Street, N. Eight minutes from Angel.

THE FAMILY LIMIT,
OR,
THE QUININE TABLOID,
1s. 6d. per doz. post free.

For further Particulars send stamped directed envelope to

A. MOSS, 36 Upper Park Street,
ISLINGTON, LONDON, N.

GRATIS.

AN ILLUSTRATED 16-PAGE PAMPHLET, containing extracts from the utterances of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Manchester; the Revs T. R. Malthus, A. E. Whatham, M. J. Savage, Leonard Dawson, —Lawton, H. R. Haweis; the following Doctors.—Allbutt, Allinson, Armstrong, Drysdale, Pye Chavasse, E. B. Foote, Nicholls, Wilder, Raciborski, Napheys and Reamy. Also Plato, Aristotle, Sismondi, Huxley, Mill, and numerous others. Should be read by every married and marriageable person. Sent on receipt of stamped addressed envelope by J. R. HOLMES, Hanney, Wantage, Berks.

TESTIMONIALS (Extracts from).

"The one you sent me some months since is

Quite Worn Out

with being lent to so many friends."

"Some of us have paid five shillings for less than one-tenth of the information."

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each, upper or lower set, £1. Best quality, 4s. each, upper or lower, £2, completed in four hours when required, repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18c. gold 15s.; stopping, 2s. 6d. extraction, 1s. painless by gas, 5s.

Printed and Published by G. W. Foote, at 28 Stonecutter Street Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

Vol. X.—No. 11.] SUNDAY, MARCH 16, 1890. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

THE QUEEN AND THE BIBLE.

FOR a whole generation the religious press used the famous story of the Queen being asked by an African chief what was the secret of England's greatness, and replying, with the Bible in her hand, "This is the secret of England's greatness." The story was not only told and retold, but illustrated in the pictorial organs of piety. There stood the African chief, and there the Queen, grasping the blessed volume in her royal hand. But, alas, it was all a fable, one of those pious frauds in which the Christians have ever excelled, from the days of the Apostolic Fathers to the age of the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes. Some time ago it was officially contradicted by the Queen's private secretary, and the poor old thing that bore such a burden of imposture went off to the knacker's yard for ever and aye.

Notwithstanding her seclusion, the Queen has seen a good deal of the world, for she has been brought into contact with all sorts of men, and taken part in all sorts of business. She knows very well, therefore, that the Bible is not the secret of England's greatness, but that it consists in our metal and mineral resources, our science, our geographical advantages as a commercial country, our naval enterprise, our migratory spirit derived from far-off ancestors, and the physical vigor born of a climate hard enough to eliminate weaklings yet temperate enough to admit of continuous industry. These are the influences that have made England strong, peopled such large tracts of the world with her stock, and given her an empire wider than that of Rome. Of course the Bible is kept as our great Protestant fetish, but when our secular welfare conflicts with its teachings they are quietly ignored, or else the hirelings of the Churches receive the hint to explain them away. A spasmodic protest may be made by a few honest conservatives, yet it attracts but little attention, and the reign of religious hypocrisy is practically undisturbed.

A recent case in point is furnished by the Victoria Divorce Bill, which allows the absolute separation of husband and wife for other reasons than adultery. Desertion by the husband, for instance, is rationally held to be a sufficient ground for freeing the wife. The colony resolved to have the Bill, and Lord Salisbury's government could not advise the Queen to exercise her veto. Yet she is Queen dei gratia—by the grace of God, as may be read on our coinage; she is Defender of the Faith; she is the head of the Church of England; she reigns over a nation whose laws declare the Bible to be the Word of God, and subject those who bring it into "disbelief and contempt" to imprisonment as blasphemers. Now it is perfectly clear that the Victoria Divorce Bill flies in the very face of the "inspired" teaching, and the Guardian—that sixpenny organ of sober orthodoxy—utters a justifiable complaint against its being allowed to pass into law. "Of the provisions of the Bill," the Guardian writes, "it is enough to say that they allow divorce for causes which cannot by any conceivable ingenuity be brought under the principle definitely laid down by our Lord, even on the laxest interpretation of his words." It may, of course, be argued by astute clerics like the Bishop of Peterborough, that the Sermon on the Mount applies to public and not to private life; but, as the Guardian observes, "divorce is a matter of private life, closely affecting personal conduct." Curiously enough, also, as the Guardian farther remarks, "the law of marriage is almost the only subject on which our Lord has laid down a definite practical rule, and the Victoria Divorce Bill openly contradicts that rule." We agree with our pious contemporary that "the Christianity that leads to such a result as this is a very nominal affair."

What is the "definite practical rule" of divorce laid down by Jesus Christ? It is to be found in Matthew v., 31, 32.

> "It hath been said, Whosoever shall put away his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement: But I say unto you, That whosoever shall put away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery: and whosoever marrieth her that is divorced committeth adultery."

This rule is one-sided. It does not contemplate the wife's having any rights against the husband. Her adultery frees him, but his adultery does not free her. She is his, under all circumstances, as long as he chooses to keep her. But, one-sided as the rule is, it is perfectly clear. Fornication, which in married persons is adultery, is the only ground of divorce. This fact was insisted on in Mr. Gladstone's recent article in the North American Review. Yet the colony whose Attorney-General prosecuted Mr. Joseph Symes passes a Bill in the teeth of Christ's teaching, a Bill allowing other causes of divorce than the incarnate God permitted, thus showing the most practical contempt for the very Scripture which Mr. Symes impeaches. The Tory Government, led by that Christian nobleman, Lord Salisbury, accepts it without a protest. The Liberal opposition, led by that Christian statesman, Mr. Gladstone, utters not a word of complaint. And our Christian sovereign, Queen Victoria, gives her consent to the Bill becoming law in the most important colony of her empire.

Surely we may repeat the Guardian's observation that such a Christianity is "a very nominal affair." The present age abounds with unctuous cant about the Christianity of the Sermon on the Mount. That sermon, we are told, contains the moral charter of morality, the everlasting foundation of righteousness. Yet we see a Christian colony setting the moral charter aside, and shifting off the everlasting foundation, for its own social convenience; the Christian statesmen of the mother country conniving at the blasphemous defiance of God Almighty; and the royal Defender of the Faith letting it be flagrantly flouted under her very eyes. At the same time Freethinkers are treated with contumely, and subjected to legal penalties, for openly disputing the divinity of teachings to which their persecutors and oppressors show a lip homage in religious worship and a practical contempt in the business and pleasure of life. Could there be a grosser instance of hypocrisy? Is such a creed, and are such votaries, to be criticised gingerly? Can it be wrong, in such a case, to let the stern voice of truth take an accent of derision. When men are honest, and practise what they profess, even at their own cost, their very bigotry is in a measure respectable. But when they profess one thing and practise another, and at the same time uphold laws to gag the mouths of self-denying sceptics, they invite the sharpest rebuke, and have no right to protest if denunciation is mingled with disdain.

Digitized by Google

G. W. FOOTE.

THE SOCIETY OF JESUS.

JOSEPH DE MAISTRE, one of the shrewdest of Catholic controversialists, made the remark that "nothing accords so well with the religious as the military spirit." Both are essentially founded on arbitrary despotism. General Booth no less than General Ignatius Loyola has seen the advantage of combining soldierly discipline with fanatical zeal. Alike, both in their aims and in their organisation, there is this difference between the Jesuits and the Salvation Army, that the one is virtually a secret society, working in unobtrusive silence, while the other obtains its effects by show and noise. It is this which makes the former the more dangerous enemy, for, though the power of a secret society is usually overrated, and never more so than in the case of the Jesuits, one is always less certain as to the issue of grappling a foe in the dark.

Protestants may be astounded at the statement that the aims of the Jesuits and of the Salvation Army are the same. But ostensibly, at any rate, this is so. Both seek to establish the kingdom of Christ, the reign of religion. Both regard Jesus as the great captain of their salvation and themselves as pre-eminently his followers, gladly enduring contumely and persecution for his sake. That they interpret the religion of Jesus differently does not alter this fact.

No one will ever understand the Jesuits who does not admit that not only are they Christians, but Christians of the most consistent and devoted type. Dedicated to the greater glory of God their object is to carry the name of Jesus over the world. Placing God before man and the interests of religion above everything else, they are consistent in deliberately subordinating all the interests of the world to making paramount the will of God. What Macaulay calls their "unscrupulous laxity and versatility in the choice of means" is warranted to them by the great object they have in view. It is just the thoroughness of their religion which has made their name a byeword of consecrated fraud in the vocabulary of every Christian nation.

Carlyle's Scotch Protestant prejudices prevented his seeing this. By identifying "Unsaint Ignatius and his black militia" with cant and insincerity his powerful pen aided popular misjudgments. The Jesuit may be, usually is, deceitful, becoming like Paul "all things to all men," to save some, but he is in deadly earnest. What else could support him in his warfare with society or in his personal trials?

The process of becoming a Jesuit Father occupies at least seventeen years, during which he is under constant supervision. All this time his individual will is subordinated and his mind and spirit trained to the purposes of the Society of Jesus. As a novice he first endures thirty days solitude and perpetual silence. His mind is directed to thoughts of God and Eternal Life, and especially to the horrors of Judgment and Eternal Hell, pictures of which are placed in his cell. Not till he realises the horror of eternal misery and that he must be crucified to the world to escape it, is he permitted to go on. He must then show his ability to bear the cross and perform menial offices for his superiors. A Jesuit novice must carry the slops as though it were a sacred chalice. He must put off the old man, Adam, and put on the new man, Christ. Father, mother, home, country, and kindred are renounced to follow Jesus—that is his superiors who are the chosen body-guard of the faith. "Not my will but thine" becomes his motto.

Implicit, unquestioning obedience to orders is the cement of the whole fabric of Jesuitism. In the Constitutions of the order it is written: "Let all be convinced, that those who live under obedience are bound to let themselves be set in motion and directed by Divine Providence through the medium of their Superiors, exactly as if they were dead bodies."

Father Anderledy, the Black Pope, has as much power as any commander-in-chief in time of war. Every member of the black militia is at his absolute disposal. To speak, as many writers do, of secret assassinations and other crimes being the work of over zealous Jesuits betrays insufficient knowledge. The corporate body must be held innocent or guilty for the action of the whole of its members. The entire purpose of the society is to make itself everything, and the individual nothing, but an instrument to carry out its objects.

The faculties given to the General of the Jesuits specifically extend to his employing any person in its service who is not a member of the order. It is this which has given rise to so much controversy about Crypto Jesuits, Jesuits of the short robe, etc. Jesuits may without much mental reservation deny that those are Jesuits who have not passed through the process and taken the vows of the order. But they cannot deny that others are affiliated to their ranks and working in their service who are not technically Jesuits. Men like Mr. W. S. Lilly and Mr. St. George Mivart are in this category. Judged by their writings I should guess they were working with the Jesuits, though I could no more determine their exact relations to that order than they could mine to the Sat Bhai.

J. M. WHEELER

(To be concluded.)

LETTERS TO THE CLERGY.—IX.

ON "CHRIST AND HUMANITY."

To the Rt. Rev. Edward White Benson, Archbishop of Canterbury.

[CONCLUDED.]

PRACTICALLY, my lord, you have no remedy for poverty. When you talk vaguely about co-operation and profit-sharing you are not speaking as an Archbishop. Such things have no conceivable relation to your Scriptures or your Church. All you recommend, as an Archbishop, is that the clergy shall take an intelligent interest in social questions; and, apparently, that laymen, whether employers or workmen, shall look up to them as divinely appointed guides. But the clergy have been the people's "guides" for ever so many centuries; indeed, for a long while, the people had no other guides; yet the result of their leading is the deplorable state of things which your Grace sees to be fraught with peril of social revolution.

Christ himself, your blessed Lord and Master, never dreamed of abolishing poverty. He looked upon it as a perennial institution—"The poor ye have always with you." Nay, if the words of the Sermon on the Mount are to be taken in their plain, honest sense, like the words of any other preacher, he looked upon poverty as a blessing. "Blessed be ye poor," he exclaimed, and "Woe unto you rich." I cannot conceive, therefore, why you wish to see poverty eliminated. It is making yourself wiser than the Scripture, it is setting yourself up against the teaching of God. I must admit, however, that your practice—one sense—is more orthodox than your profession. You take and spend, or save for yourself, a princely income of £15,000 a year, and do your utmost to inflict poverty upon all who produce what you consume. I do not doubt, indeed, that you would cheerfully take a much larger salary, and still further qualify your "dearly beloved" paymasters, the people, to receive all the blessings that are promised in the next world to those who have been poor and miserable in this.

Digitized by Google

Your Grace devotes a whole chapter to the subject of Purity. You do not expend much eloquence on the vices of idleness and luxury, and it is natural that as an Archbishop, sprung from the privileged classes, you should declare that "Aristocratical institutions in themselves tend to the substantial preservation of 'the Family' as the ground of society." Such a statement, however, is belied by history. Every social student is well aware that family life is most real, durable, and pure among the masses of the people who come into close contact with nature, and whose busy lives prevent the perversion of their instincts.

Speaking as the clerical head of the English Church, it is also natural that you should reprobate the Romish practice of Confession, which the High Church party is trying to re-introduce. Before the Revolution the Catholic Church "had absolute command of all education and of every official rank, and worked through the confessor's access to every home." And with what result?

> "Memoirs of the time make one feel the influence of religion striking every vein of the body—and not the slightest rapprochement between it and morals. It was not à la mode then, to be a good father or a good husband, wrote a keen observer who had been through it all. Great men went from a mass to an orgy, and numbered great clergy among their intimates. A famous courtesan boarded in a convent, and astonished no one."

The picture might have been painted in far darker colors, but it will suffice as it is. Your Grace thinks it a condemnation of Confession. But is it not a condemnation of Christianity? The roués, courtesans, and priestly and titled scoundrels of that age were intensely pious; and their conduct is one of the many proofs that the ages of faith are the ages of filth.

Society is far purer now than it was in the days of Christianity's unquestioned ascendancy. The only cure for sensuality is thought, and this is a thinking age. Still, there are large classes of thoughtless persons, both among the rich and the poor, and you give us, in flying touches, a shocking picture of their depravity. You refer to the dreadful evil of prostitution, and although syphilis is too bold a word for an Archbishop, you speak of "a river of poison flowing into the blood of this nation." But why does prostitution exist in Christendom after all the preaching, all the religious publications, and all the religious training of the young in Sunday schools? What is the use of a religion that cannot abolish the most flagrant social evils? Is there not something radically wrong in Christian methods of reform? I assert that there is, and history bears out my contention. Diseases cannot be treated successfully without a proper diagnosis, and your diagnosis is wrong. The causes of such evils as prostitution must be studied. They are more physical and economical than moral. No woman, except a phenomenal Messalina, would sell herself nightly to the first man willing to pay her price. Any girl may be led astray by her animalism, but she is driven into the brothel by the hypocrisy of Christian society and the difficulty of earning an honorable livelihood in an overcrowded labor market. You may preach till doomsday, but you will never diminish prostitution to any serious extent while its causes are in full operation; and all your rescue work is merely the drawing out, for filtration, of a few bucketsful of water from a muddy stream.

Purity is a large subject, my lord, and there is an aspect of it that escapes your attention. It does not occur to you that the Church, by placing the Bible unreservedly in the hands of boys and girls, is the cause of more corruption than it will ever cure. There are portions of the Old Testament which the Jews would not allow their sons to read before the age of thirty; yet those very portions are thrust into the hands of Christian children as soon as they are able to read. Downright, brutal, gratuitous filth is forced upon them as the Word of God. What wonder, then, that the impurity of adults should be the constant theme of pulpit eloquence? There is an old adage which I read in your Scriptures—Physician heal thyself! And I tell you it is idle—nay, worse than idle; the veriest hypocrisy—to preach against impurity to men and women, while you force every successive generation of children to read, ay and to reverence, a volume which contains some of the most libidinous, and some of the most disgusting passages in the whole range of human literature.

There is another evil on which you touch—Drink. You admit that "Intemperance is in far greater rage and ravage" among us than it was among "those Gentiles" referred to by Saint Peter. Alluding to Africa, you say that "the earth's long-sealed dark continent, stored with her grandest products, is being developed for the wealth of the world through the application of intoxication to its innumerable tribes by civilised traders and Christian merchants." What a shameful confession! Drink-sodden populations at home, and the drink-curse carried abroad for the desolation of the heathen! Mohammedanism puts down Drink among its myriads of African converts, while the converts of your missionaries—according to the testimony of Joseph Thompson, the famous traveller—include all the drunkards and loose livers on the continent.

Christianity has had a grand opportunity, and has failed for the simple reason that it could not succeed. In the atmosphere of the church or the cloister it may flourish, but in the free air of life it withers away. Its only legitimate province is to prepare men's hypothetical souls for a dubious future life. When it meddles with the affairs of this life it betrays its hopeless incapacity. Happily the world is turning to other agencies for relief and advancement. Science is taking the place of Faith, and Humanity the place of Christ.

G. W. FOOTE.

SOLD BUT NOT BOUGHT.

Chief Rabbi Adler had a humor of his own. He was pestered once by a miserable fellow who, finding his plaints unavailing, said he would go off and enrol himself as a "converted Jew." The Rabbi bade him go, and be a better Christian than he had been a Jew. The man slunk away, but was soon surprised at being summoned again to the Rabbi's presence. "For fear you should change your mind whilst walking, I have ordered a cab to take you to the office of the Society you want to join," said he. The "convert" did not wait for the cab.

THE small kid had been taught to pray for all the family, and she had a list of "God bless ——" that was much longer than the usual prayer. It was "God bless papa, and God bless mamma, and God bless Uncle George," and so on. She had got it all so perfectly that nobody paid much attention to the names she put in. The grown-up sister happened to come into the nursery while she was saying her prayer, and that seemed to recall the child to a mistake she had made. She stopped a moment and then said: "Please God I made a mistake. Don't bless George Smith, 'cos Kittie went to the theatre to-night with Mr. Simpson, and I guess he's her new beau."

A conceited young parson once said: "This morning I preached to a congregation of donkeys!" "I thought so," retorted a lady, "when you called them your beloved brethren?"

Digitized by Google

GREAT EVENTS.

[Extracts from the Diary of a Gentleman at Hanwell, dated April 1, 1901.]

It is all true! Baxter is a real prophet and Jesus Christ is just about to appear. All has happened just as predicted by Daniel, the Revelation of St. John and the Prophet Baxter. First the French and Germans went to war, then Boulanger, whose name bears the mark of the beast, united twenty-three kingdoms into a ten kingdomed confederacy as prophesied in Daniel and the Christian Herald. It was a rare good thing for the stockbrokers and speculators and newspapers. What a rush there was for the last editions containing full particulars of the battle of Armageddon. And then what excitement at the reported capture of Gog and Magog. When the front doors of heaven were opened the great red dragon appeared in the sky and with his tail drew down a third part of the stars, and the Scarlet Woman seated on the scarlet wild beast with seven heads and ten horns—every one declared they had seen nothing like it at Barnum's Show. When a new Napoleon arose and became king of Syria and made a seven years' covenant with the Jews, all Christians saw plainly that the end was coming. Bishops began to give more away in charity; thousands gave up work and took to preaching; special correspondents were sent to all parts of the world to watch for the appearance of Anti-Christ, and the midnight cry arose "Behold the Bridegroom cometh."

What a great day was that when 144,000 male virgins, "not defiled with women," were collected from all parts of the earth, and ascended bodily into heaven, darkening the air as they flew upward. People then expected that the graves would give up their dead, and large prices were demanded for skulls and other portions of skeletons. And then the monstrous locusts with men's faces, women's hair, and lion's teeth, which came up out of the bottomless pit, and defied all the traps that were set to catch them, spread consternation everywhere. Everyone gave up their customary avocations except the author of Louis Napoleon the Destined Monarch of the World. Earthquakes, voices, thunders, and lightnings in the skies abounded, and hail and fire mingled with blood, fell on the earth, and a third part of the trees and all green grass was burnt up between Oct. 2 and 20, 1896, as predicted in The Great Crisis of the Rev. M. Baxter. After that there was war in heaven, the downfall of Satan to the earth, the flight of Christians to the wilderness of Sinai, and one third of the sea turned into blood. This was followed by the advent of Demons, Lion-headed Horses, Famine, Pestilence, Martyrdom, and General Smash.

Hallelujah the Lord has come! At last, on this fateful day, April the 1st, 1901, watchful Christians have assembled from all parts, most of them provided with clean nightdresses, Jew's harps, and parachutes. Mr. Baxter, attired in a long white robe, was the first to ascend, in order to meet the Lord in the air. And the Lord did descend, with a shout. Poor Baxter heard it, and endeavored to get ont of the way; but, alas! it was too late. The Lord came down all the way from heaven and fell on poor Baxter with such velocity that the crust of the earth gave way, and both fell through into the bottomless pit, where they were received by the Devil and his angels. We are now anxiously awaiting their reappearance.

LUCIANUS.

AUNTIE, did the angels carry Mrs. Jones up to Heaven?" "Why, Charlie, I think so. Mrs. Jones was a good woman." "She was an awfully fat woman. The angels must be strong." Passengers in the train from Woodlawn turned to look at the six-year-old boy who was bent on getting information. He was a manly little fellow, with a bright, pretty face that showed intelligence beyond his years. His young aunt seemed to be anxious to stop the flow of questions, but he was bound to know something more about angels then and there. "How do you know there are angels, auntie?" "Because we read about them. Wait until you can read and then you will know more about them." "But why—why don't we see the angels? Did you ever see an angel?" "Hush! don't talk so loud, Charlie. Of course we don't see them, but we see their pictures. Don't you remember the angels in the pretty book that Uncle John sent you?" "Yes, but—but where do the angels get their pictures taken, auntie? Is there a gallery where they take pictures of angels—only just of angels?" "Perhaps so. I don't know." "Then why don't the angels put on more clothes when they have their pictures taken."

ACID DROPS.

Hugh Price Hughes is a good liar, but he is far from monopolising the virtue. The Christian imagination, like old Jahveh in the Book of Genesis, broods upon the chaos of ignorance and credulity, and hatches a cosmos of falsehood. There are as many species and specimens of Christian lies as there are of organisms on the face of the earth. One variety is associated with the name of Thomas Paine. Stories of this famous "infidel" are produced every year. It is really wonderful how the Christians keep it up. Now and then one fancies the limit of invention is reached, when up starts a fresh stock, and one is left wondering at the fertility of the Christian mind.

From Dr. Monroe's Ironclad Age we see that a Campbellite preacher at Dexter, in Missouri, has been retailing a new yarn about Thomas Paine. When the "infidel" was on his death-bed his daughter said to him, "My mother is a Christian and you are an infidel. Now which shall I follow during life?" And Paine answered, "Follow your mother." How pretty! The only defect in the story is this—Thomas Paine had no children!

Another new Paine story reaches us from Redditch, where it was retailed by the Rev. Earl Gray. It appears that Thomas Paine—God knows where and God knows when—was "once journeying to a distant city." Being a man of considerable means, he naturally went on foot. A waggon boy offered him a ride, and of course Paine accepted it. Of course, also, that youth had read the Age of Reason. The interest of the story requires it, and Christian invention is not to be baulked by mere accuracy and common sense. Well, they began talking about religion, and Paine told the boy that the Bible was undoubtedly the Word of God. He reasoned against his own Age of Reason and "removed all sceptical impressions from the young man's mind."

Charles Lamb wanted to "feel his bumps" when a dreadful fool was boring the company. We should like to feel the Rev. Earl Gray's bumps. His head must be fearfully and wonderfully made, and we hope the skull, at least, will be secured for a phrenological museum. What the brain is like we can hardly imagine. Unless we had seen this Paine story in print we should have hesitated to believe that there was anything in the shape of a man silly enough to relate it, or any audience, even of Christians, silly enough to listen to it.

This Rev. Earl Gray described Paine as "dissolute," and for some mysterious reason, compared him to Judas Iscariot. He forgot to say what cause Paine ever betrayed. This reverend gentleman reminds us of the person who saw a striking resemblance between peacocks and comets. They both had tails. Similarly, Thomas Paine and Judas Iscariot were both human beings, and there the analogy ends.

It will be observed that when the Rev. Earl Gray wishes to damnify an infidel he compares him to Judas Iscariot. What does this show? Why that the Christians have a prize villain of their own with which they measure others.

We have no patience to follow the Rev. Earl Gray in his stupidities about the "last dying speech and confession" of eminent Freethinkers. The real facts are given in Infidel Death-Beds. If Mr. Gray is able to impugn the truth of that little volume we will give him the use of our columns.

It is no wonder that belief in witchcraft survives in places where the chief mental pabulum is drawn from the Book which says "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live." At Penzance, two brothers named Jilbart have been bound over to keep the peace, they having threatened to carry out the Bible command on an old woman named Mrs. Clarke, who they believed had bewitched their horses.

An American Sunday paper says the preacher in denouncing Sunday papers is simply sticking up for his trade. Let people do as they please on Sunday and his occupation would be gone. It is simply a struggle for trade between the preacher and the Sunday paper.

Digitized by Google

Talmage says he has a friend in his family who prevents his reading any unfavorable comments upon himself. He says this accounts for his cheerfulness. We also suspect it accounts for his vanity. But what a task the friend must have and how curtailed must Talmage's reading be.

A big book entitled Woman's Suffrage Wrong has recently been put out by Mr. J. McGrigor Allan. One of its chief arguments is that the Bible is opposed to woman's suffrage. There is no doubt that this eccentric controversialist is correct here. Paul is as flatly opposed to woman's emancipation as the spirit of the age is opposed to Paul.

A lecture delivered on behalf of the Church Association at the Town Hall, Cardiff. by the Rev. C. H. Wainwright on the subject "Is the Church of England Protestant?" resulted in a free fight between the contending factions of High and Low Church. Both the lecturer and chairman were continually interrupted, and the noise was deafening. Policemen were called in but without avail. The religious spirit was roused, blows followed words, and a free fight ensued in which feet, fists and sticks played prominent parts. The hatred displayed by Christians towards each other is scarcely exceeded by that which they bear to the infidel.

Nine of the clergy attached to St. Swithin's, Leeds, have gone over to Rome. It was founded by the late E. B. Pusey, and a recent circular issued on its behalf says it has well fulfilled the object for which it was built.

The Rev. Hugh Price Hughes keeps on energetically touting in the Methodist Times for contributions for Methodist Sisterhoods, but takes no further notice of the challenges sent him as to the Atheist Shoemaker.

The Birmingham Gazette reports a rare old shindy in a Wesleyan chapel in the Black Country. The organist and the choirmaster had a misunderstanding, which led to a scuffle in the gallery and an exchange of blows. Prayers were disturbed, and the music went to the dogs, the choirmaster starting one tune and the organist playing another. At length the preacher was obliged to terminate the quarrel by pronouncing the Benediction. But the quarrel was not really terminated; it was only adjourned; for the partisans of the organist and the choirmaster breathed out slaughter against each other outside the gospel-shop. How these Christians love one another!

On the 21st of Feb. the Rev. Henry Duncan ascended to heaven from Ozark, Alabama, where he was then hanged for the murder of his wife.

Thousands of pilgrims are visiting the "miraculous" wells at Miklostolek in Hungary, but if they crowd like worshippers they fight like fanatics, and the military have had to be called out to quiet their dissensions.

A young man named Clark has gone wrong at Plaistow. For two years he has been a regular attendant at St. John's Free Church, and on Sunday evening the spirit of the Lord fell upon him and he prophesied. "The end of the world is at hand," he shrieked, "prepare to meet your God. Listen not to false teachers, wolves in sheep's clothing, but repent! To-morrow sees the end of all things. Prepare, prepare, prepare!" And they did prepare. Six men collared him and chucked him out, but it took them all their time, for the spirit of the Lord wrought powerfully within him.

George Lambert cut Grace Lloyd's throat at Lurg, near Greta, Victoria. He cut his own throat with the same razor. According to an entry in his diary, God told him to do it, and the murderer and his victim were going to heaven together. Religion has a curious effect on some minds.

A boy named West drowned himself in a pond at Great Malvern. On the bank was found a piece of paper, containing the following in his handwriting:—"Oh, Lord, give me a new heart, and the Holy Spirit. Pardon all my sins for Christ's sake, amen!" Talmage please note.

George Edward Conyers shot himself on Newcastle Town Moor. He hoped "God would pardon the rash act." Another for Talmage. It is really getting monotonous.

The new Tithe Bill of the Government seeks to release the Church from scandal by abolishing distress for tithes, and making the action for recovery against the landlord. So far there is little objection, but in also seeking to redeem tithes and making over the redemption to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners it is helping permanently to divert money which though now devoted to religion may some day be required for other objects.

Nothing is more certain than that tithes were originally in part devoted to the maintenance of the poor. To use them again for this purpose, or for promoting free education and recreation, would not only be legitimate but just.

Judging from some advertisements in the Catholic Times the confidence trick flourishes in religious circles like a green bay tree. One priest advertises for cash for a poor Mission dedicated to Our Lady of Lourdes. He will say Mass every Sunday for benefactors, and send on some water from the Lourdes grotto—very likely obtained from the domestic tap. Another, who rejoices in the suggestive name of Fazakerley, advertises a long list of prayers to be sold for twelve pence. You begin any week, renew yearly, and are sure of the holy man's prayers as an offset to your peccadilloes. So universal is the holy man's charity that he will enrol the living or the dead on his prayer list, the only stipulation being that if he prays for a dead man the all-important shilling shall be paid by a living one.

The Rev. R. R. Dolling, late missioner of St. Agatha's Landport, appears to be, mirabile dictu, a honest man He permitted Mr. Headlam and others to give Sunday afternoon lectures on Christian Socialism in his church, whereupon his spiritual chief, the bishop of Winchester, drops on him and Mr. Headlam like a thousand of bricks, and as head of the mission, threatened to sever his connection if Mr. Dolling continued missioner, whereupon Mr. Dolling sent in his resignation, to the great grief, it is said, of his congregation.

Much nonsense has been talked about there being room in the church for all parties. The treatment of Mr. Dolling, who, according to his own account, has been driven from place to place, and of Mr. Headlam, who is prohibited from preaching in London, is a sufficient comment on the liberality of the Church.

The Rev. Mr. Mayrick, vicar of Landegfan-cum-Beaumaris, having failed to conduct public worship in his church for some time and having refused to allow the curate appointed by the Bishop of Bangor to do so, has been suspended for two years and has to pay the cost of the proceedings.

The writer of "Powder and Shot" in The Weekly Times and Echo wants to know if the prophet Jeremiah took his tot of absinthe daily. The question is suggested by the passage "He hath made me drunken with wormwood" (Lam. iii., 15). The "he" is usually taken to mean Jehovah. As the same lugubrious prophet says, in language more forcible than polite, "Thus saith the Lord of Hosts, the God of Israel: Drink ye, and be drunken, and spue and fall and rise no more" (Jer. xxv., 27). We can hardly think that the liquors of Palestine were so innocuous as they are sometimes represented by our Christian Temperance friends.

More thorough humbug than this gospel temperance business can scarcely be found unless it is with those who find vegetarianism in the Bible. The fact is the Church is forced by outside pressure to take up questions of secular interest, and hopes to regain lost ground by patronising "temperance" despite the example of its founder at Cana in Galilee.

The Rev. E. Bigoe Bagot, in introducing the claims of the Christian Evidence Society to the Manchester Ruridiaconal Conference, spoke of "the restless and ubiquitous propaganda of Infidelity under the name of Secularism." The Rev. Bagoe Bigot accused his opponents of "fallacies,"

Digitized by Google

"misrepresentations," and "mendacious assertions." "Fibs and sophistry," "dirty work," and "blood poison of scepticism" were among the "choice derrangement of epitaphs" which he hurled at Secularists, to make good the claims of the C. E. S.

The Bishop of Rochester, preaching in St. Paul's Catheral on Sunday, said that "Christianity distinctly declines to be proved first and practised afterwards. Its practice and its proof go hand in hand, and its real evidence with its power." This is a pompous variation on the old tune of "Open your mouth, and shut your eyes, and take what the parson gives you."

Dr. Thorold also said that for such questions as that relating to the origin of evil "science properly so-called has nothing but unspeakable disdain and religion a solemn indignation." But of course "science properly so-called" and "religion" are the same thing in the mouth of a Bishop. Real science sees no difficulty in the origin of evil. "There's nothing good or ill, but thinking makes it so." The difficulty about toothache, for instance, doesn't come in until you say it is an ingenious device of Almighty Goodness. Then the joke is enough to shake an elephant.

The Bishop of Ripon, preaching at Bradford, admitted that modern criticism had played havoc with old ideas about the Bible. Things that were thought to have been written by Moses and Isaiah were really written by other persons. But what did it matter? Whoever wrote them, there they were. The grand old Book stood firm all the same. In other words the Christian will stick to his fetish, and priests will still earn a good living by looking after the joss-house.

"One who knows" writes in the Daily News that "we have more genuine cases of boycotting in Herts than in all Ireland," and he gives cases illustrating the pressure and injustice brought to bear on chapel goers by the church party.

It was elicited by a question in the House of Commons that children attending the Fisherton National School, Salisbury, had received religious instruction contrary to the express wish of their parents, and it was stated that others who had been exempted have been, in winter, shut up in a porch between the inner and outer doors in darkness and cold and without instruction. Salisbury is a most pious city, where School Boards are detested. This treatment of the rights of nonconformists indicates what the Church party would do if it only dared.

Who is the Philip Childs, cabinet maker, of Islington, whose name appears in the papers as the prosecutor of a poor old man for embezzlement? The jury acquitted the prisoner, and on the whole rightly, for, although the old man seems to have helped himself, he had apparently been badly used by his employer who was actually in his debt to the tune of £6. According to the evidence the prosecutor was a Freethinker and the prisoner a Christian. If this be true we are sorry for it. Meanness and unkindness are always hateful, and we detest them all the more when they are displayed by those who profess to share our convictions.

The superintendent of the Christian Lad's Society at Finsbury Park, is accused of indecent conduct with one of the Christian lads, and has been remanded.

The Pope is said to be preparing yet another Encyclical letter on the subject of Socialism. Poor Pecci! The world's course will hardly be altered by letter writing.

The Rev. C. Friskin, a Presbyterian minister at Spennymoor, recently died in his pulpit. The event was natural enough, for the reverend gentleman's heart was affected. But what a lot of trashy sermons would be preached on the event if a Freethought lecturer fell dead upon the platform in the midst of an "infidel" discourse. Heart disease or no heart disease, such a death would be treated as "a judgment."

The Vicar of All Soul's, Brighton, got chronicled in the papers what he calls a remarkable answer to prayer. For some time past the schools connected with the Church had been in financial difficulty. On Friday public prayers were offered for help, and Saturday's post brought the rev. gentleman a cheque of £50 from an unknown friend. Wonderful. Almost as wonderful and astounding as Muller's Orphanage supported entirely by prayer and advertising. If the vicar wishes to test the value of prayer he should not express his wants publicly but obey the precept of Jesus, retire to his closet and pray in secret, and then see if his father, who sees in secret, will reward him openly.

The Presbyterians of America are much exercised upon a revision of the Westminster Confession of Faith, which has been proposed by the Presbyteries of New York and Chicago, and the question is being put to the vote, as though the decrees of an immutable deity could be affected by the opinions of Presbyteries. The parsons take care that hell is always as hot as the people will stand it, and it is only because they show signs they will not stand it that the sky-pilots now hint that the temperature has been reduced.

By a vote of 22 to 18 the Presbytery of Cincinnati have declared that "infants dying in infancy are saved." What a narrow escape for the poor babes! Three more votes would have damned them forever.

The Archbishop of Paris has issued a blast against Cremation, which he describes as an outrage on Catholic doctrine, tradition, and sentiment. It is, he declares, one of the devices of the atheistic Municipal Council of Paris to destroy religion. Poor Archbishop! We half pity him. The time was when his Church could murder Freethinkers. Now it can only scream at them.

M. Rénan takes a peculiar view of Cremation. Like Voltaire, he says that anyone can have his body when he has done with it, and he does not care whether he is burnt, buried, or dissected. But he thinks the survivors have an interest in the matter. Burying the dead is sad enough, but burning them is still sadder. We fail to see why, however. It is custom that counts most in these things.

Mrs. Humphrey Ward, the author of Robert Elsmere, is trying to set up an imitation of Toynbee Hall on the lines of the experiment suggested in her novel. The circular of the "University Hall" scheme is a very lengthy document, but the Pall Mall Gazette thought it good copy, and printed it in full on Monday evening. University Hall is to be "a fresh rallying point for all those to whom Christianity, whether by inheritance or process of thought, has become a system of practical conduct, based on faith in God, and on the inspiring memory of a great teacher, rather than a system of dogmas based on a unique revelation." Like other schemes, it will require cash. £700 a year will be needed for three years, and we have no doubt it will be raised. But we have also no doubt that the scheme will finally fail. There is no logicality in the principle it embodies. Christianity without doctrine, the worship of Christ without a belief in his deity, a special veneration and study of the Bible without regarding it as inspired; such things are sentimental compromises, doomed to extinction in the mighty struggle of opposites like Catholicism and Freethought, each of which has a vital idea that acts upon every study and every department of practice.

"Nunquam," of the Manchester Sunday Chronicle, replies as follows to a correspondent who complains of his hostility to the Church, and says that a Christian, who has a heaven in prospect, is better off than the unbeliever:—"But I don't object to the Christian consoling himself with the hope of a heaven to come. What I object to is the bishop drawing ten thousand a year for telling me that I shall be damned if I don't agree with him."

An African clergyman, in preaching from the text: "And multitudes came unto Him, and He healed them of divers diseases," said: "This is a terrible text, my dying congregation. Disease is in the world. The small-pox slays its hundreds, the cholera its thousands, and yellow fever its tens of thousands, but in the language of our text, if you take the divers, you are gone. These earthly doctors can cure small-pox, cholera, and yellow fever, if they get there in time, but nobody but the good Lord can cure the divers."

Digitized by Google

MR. FOOTE'S ENGAGEMENTS.

Sunday, March 16, Public Hall, Queen Street Arcade, Cardiff: at 11, "After Death—What?"; at 3, "The Gospel of Secularism"; at 6.30, "Heaven and Hell."

Friday, March 21, Gladstone Hall, Military Road, Chatham, at 8, "What has Christianity Done?"

March 23 and 30, Hall of Science London.

April 6, Milton Hall; 9, Shelley Society 13, Portsmouth; 20, Hall of Science; 27, Hall of Science, London.

May 4, Newcastle; 11, South Shields; 18, Hall of Science, London; 25, N. S. S. Conference.

June 1, Hall of Science London; 8, Gladstone Radical Club and Hall of Science, London.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

LITERARY communications to be addressed to the Editor, 14 Clerkenwell Green, London, E.C. All business communications to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C.

THE Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the office, post free to any part of Europe, America, Canada and Egypt, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 6s. 6d.; Half Year, 3s. 3d.; Three Months, 1s. 7½d. Australia, China and Africa:—One Year, 8s. 8d.; Half Year, 4s. 4d.; Three Months, 2s. 2d. India:—One Year, 10s. 10d.; Half Year, 5s. 5d. Three Months, 2s. 8½d.

SCALE OF ADVERTISEMENTS.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 3s.; Half Column, 15s.; Column, £1 10s. Special terms for repetitions.

IT being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will in future receive the number when their subscription expires in a colored wrapper.

R. FENN.—We cannot insert business notices in this column.

J. M. HYSLOP.—We will devote an article to Archdeacon Farrar's seven silly questions.

FREETHINKING POLICE OFFICER.—Thanks. See "Acid Drops."

MISS MCINNES, Goodram Gate, York, supplies the Freethinker and other secular publications.

A. R. WILSON.—We respect your right to differ on some points. Very likely the Siamese twins differed about some things.

W. GODWIN.—For the circumstances of Darwin's death see Infidel Death-Beds, under his name, and Darwin on God, pp. 21, 22. There are no material advantages attached to membership of the N. S. S. except the possibility of assistance in distress.

R. D. WILLIAMS.—Mr. Foote appreciates the flattering resolution of the Swindon Branch, and hopes to merit its "steadfast support."

K. A. G.—Joseph Cook is not a biologist, except in the amateur sense of the word. Huxley is not likely to waste his time in discussing biological problems with anyone but a specialist.

QUIZ.—The explanation is absurd. There is not the slightest evidence of the existence of any Christians at Damascus before the Ascension. Besides, Paul says that Jesus was seen of 500 of the brethren at once. How could this be if 120 were at Jerusalem and 380 at Damascus? And why so many at Damascus (a foreign city) and so few in Jerusalem?

W. GUISE (Redditch) writes: "For a long time I was the only one in the town who regularly took in your admirable paper, but with some little trouble I have increased its local circulation to nearly twenty copies." Other dear readers, as the Christian editor would say, might go and do likewise.

L. BROWN.—Mr. Foote would have brought the matter before the N. S. S Executive, but Mr. Bradlaugh is averse to the idea of a testimonial or a banquet.

C. K. LAPORTE.—We never heard of Philip Childs before. He is not a member of the N. S. S.

C. TOMLINSON.—Improvements can only be made gradually, if they are to last. Besides, general advice is of little use; it is necessary to suggest something definite and practicable. Mr. Foote will gladly listen to anything of that kind. Meanwhile, if you take an active interest in the work of some Branch, you will see in what direction it is possible to move.

J. O'DONOVAN.—Received. Shall appear in our next.

J. H. S.—No worker in the cause "intrudes" in writing to us. We are always glad to hear from such. Thanks for your efforts to promote our circulation. It is pleasant to learn that some of your Christian friends find the Freethinker "interesting" though it does not reflect their ideas.

G. WISE.—We give publicity to your statement that you have made no such reference to Mr. Foote's debate with the Rev. A. J. Harrison. Our correspondent said he heard you refer to the debate in a manner which justified his writing.

T. BOX.—Mr. Forder has been desired to attend to your complaint. Thanks for the cutting.

H. COURTNEY says he went to hear George Chainey at the Zepher Hall on "Revelation Revealed," and left in disgust because the lecturer had "conscientious objections to discussion." The chairman described him (Chainey) as "lately the Bradlaugh of America." Gods and fishes, what a Bradlaugh! Enough about poor George.

J. W. WITTERING.—Thanks for your congratulations. We should feel a good deal more thankful if the Grimsby Branch could be more active in propaganda. Is it not possible to make an effort?

J. D. LEGGET.—Cuttings are always welcome.

G. J. WARREN.—Mr. Foote is very uncertain about any open-air lecturing this year.

J. W.—We don't understand the extract. Could you send us the magazine?

A. GUEST.—Mount Olivet is about half a mile from Jerusalem, Bethany two miles. The supposition that the eastern declivity of the mount was called Bethany is only a plausible conjecture to avoid the difficulty of Luke saying he went "as far as Bethany." Why should there be even an apparent discrepancy in the word of God? As the Ascension is not mentioned by either of the apostles Matthew or John a slight discrepancy begets suspicion. Moreover it appears from Matthew xxviii., 16, that the last appearance of Jesus to his disciples and his charge to set on a mission to the Gentiles was given in Galilee.

F. SOUTHWELL, Ivy Lane, Paternoster Row, will supply the Freethinker wholesale to newsagents.

HARRY ROSE.—Apply to the Liberation Society, Serjeant's Inn, Fleet St., E.C. We have no special work on the Church and Education.

HARRY LONG.—"Colonel R. G. Ingersoll, New York, U. S. A." is sufficient.

LAURET.—There is no verbatim report of Mr. Foote's speech on his election as President, but a pretty full one appeared in the Freethinker for Feb. 23.

C. EMMET.—Received with thanks.

W. WAKEFIELD.—Pleased to have the good wishes of such a veteran. You are right in saying that something should be done at Leeds. The present state of the Branch is a perfect scandal. If the recently-formed Federation does not improve matters in Leeds, the Organisation Committee will have to take the business in hand.

K. K.—The Truthseeker Publishing Co., 28 Lafayette Place, New York.

R. D. WILLIAMS.—Mr. Foote is uncertain as to the train.

G. H. WILSON.—The N. S. S. does not insist on Atheism, but it opposes all theology Perhaps you have perused an old copy of its Principles. They were revised two or three years ago. Mr. Forder, or the Branch secretary, will supply you with current copies.

FREETHINKER'S BENEVOLENT FUND.—D. Baker, £2.

"FREETHINKER" CIRCULATION FUND.—D. Baker, £2.

L. STANLEY.—Thanks for the cuttings.

J. BRUMAGE.—Glad to hear your health improves. Mr. Foote is getting better.

T. R. FOX.—The Sunderland Branch would have done well—in fact it was doing well—if it had not been driven from pillar to post. The bigots went to the proprietors of halls, and every placed was closed to them. Still, we should like to see a fresh effort in the town, where there are many Freethinkers. Perhaps the N.E. Secular Federation will see what can be done.

G. RUTLAND.—The Christians must be thankful for small mercies to crow over such a case. The man is not a member of the N. S. S.

QUID NUNC.—Conscience is an ambiguous term. It sometimes means the perception of right and wrong, sometimes the shrinking from the wrong, and sometimes remorse for having committed it. But the subject is too big for a paragraph.

T. CLARK.—Contents sheet shall be sent. Thanks.

R. E. HOLDING.—Yes, the presidency means work, but someone must do it. The Wiggans' sheet seems to us beneath contempt. We can't make paragraphs out of sheer idiocy. There must be something to catch hold of.

FREETHOUGHT.—We do not know of any statistics as to the percentage of crime among the various religious sects in England.

J. HOUNSTONE.—The subscription to the N. S. S. is 4s. per year, payable quarterly or annually. To be enrolled you require to write your name and address at the foot of the Principles. Mr. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, will supply you with the necessary form on application. Or you might join the Camberwell Branch any Sunday evening.

H. CALASCA.—Thanks for cuttings.

PAPERS RECEIVED.—Boston Investigator—Progressive Thinker—Liberator—Der Arme Teufel—Secular Thought—Echo—Truthseeker—Market Rasen Mail—Bulletin des Sommaires—Liberty—Ironclad Age—Menschenthum—Freidenker—Freethinker's Magazine—Freethought—The Hindu—Life Lore—Knowledge—Star—Rochester and Chatham Standard—Western Mail—Ashford Express—East Anglican Daily Times—Birkenhead News—Yorkshire Daily Chronicle—Eastern Evening News—Evening Standard—Devon Evening Express—Portsmouth Evening News—Fair Play—Gravesend and Dartford Reporter—Bradford Observer—Swindon Advertiser—Ashton-under-Lyne Reporter—L'Eclair—La Lanterne—La Battaille—Mot d'Ordre—Le Rappel—Petit Parisien—Western Figaro.

FRIENDS who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish our attention directed.

Digitized by Google

SUGAR PLUMS.

MR. FOOTE had a splendid audience at Camberwell on Sunday evening. He was in improved though by no means in perfect health, and managed to get through his work to the obvious satisfaction of the meeting. But the effort told on him the next morning. Happily, however, it produced no serious evil, and with proper care Mr. Foote will no doubt be soon himself again.

AFTER Mr. Foote's lecture, and a moving appeal for the Swedish prisoner by the chairman, Mr. Angus Thomas, a collection was taken up on behalf of Viktor Lennstrand and his gallant colleagues. A fair sum has been subscribed to this Fund, but up to the present very little has been done by the Branches.

MR. FOOTE lectures at Cardiff to-day. His subjects will be found in another column. We draw attention in this place to his visit, as it may meet the eyes of readers in the district who might regret to lose the opportunity of hearing the lectures.

MR. STANDRING'S free lecture on the "Church and the People" at the Hall of Science was well attended, and the discussion with the Rev. F. W. Ford, who appeared on behalf of the Christian Evidence Society, was satisfactory from the Freethought point of view. On the 13th, Mr. Foote concludes this series with a lecture on "Freethought and Christ," being opposed by Mr. Engstrom. These free lectures have been a great success and arrangements are being made for courses to be given at Milton Hall, Camberwell, and elsewhere.

WE are glad to report that Mr. Forder, the Secretary of the National Secular Society, is somewhat improved in health. He has been seriously unwell, and some of his friends were alarmed; but the milder weather is in his favor, and we hope he will speedily recover. Meanwhile he would do well to refrain from entering into any fresh lecturing engagements; indeed, we are of opinion that, with his chronic weakness of the chest, he ought not to lecture at all in the winter.

BY the way, there was a queer mistake in Mr. Forder's official report of the last N. S. S. Executive meeting, and Mr. Foote has desired him to correct it immediately in the National Reformer. The seconder of the resolution on Mrs. Besant's letter was not Mr. Foote but Mr. Truelove. Presidents are not in the habit of seconding resolutions.

SWEDISH PRISONER FUND.—D. Baker £1; Collected at Camberwell after Mr. Foote's lecture £1 7s 0d.

SWEDISH PRISONER'S FUND.—This fund will be closed on March 31. Friends having money to remit are requested to do so before that date. Twenty-five pounds have been forwarded to Sweden and the balance will be sent on April 1. I have to acknowledge the following sums:—R. Green, 5s.; W. Dexter, 1s.; W. Murton, 1s.; W. Putz, 1s.; J. Unsworth, 2s. 6d.; R. B. M., £1.—R. Forder, Secretary.

"WE have received from J. M. Wheeler, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C., England, a copy of his Biographical Dictionary of Freethinkers, just out. It is a handsome cloth bound volume, costing about 1.50 dols., or 1.25 dols., for we never could readily reduce Brother Bull's pounds and shillings into good sound understandable money of the U.S. of A. The book fills a long-felt want, and every unbeliever wants it, and wants it bad and now. So write a letter to the above address and find out all about it."—Ironclad Age.

"J. M. WHEELER, associate editor of the London Freethinker, has done a good work in compiling and publishing a Biographical Dictionary of Freethinkers. The book will, as the author hopes, "do something to show how many of the world's worthiest men and women have been Freethinkers." With the exception that many Freethinkers who combined Spiritualism with Freethought are omitted, the book is as inclusive as could be desired. The price of the Dictionary in England is about $2, but the United States puts a tariff of 25 cents on each copy, presumably to encourage its republication in this country."—Freethought.

NEXT Sunday (March 23) the Battersea Branch will have a Tea and Soiree after the quarterly meeting. The tea will begin at 5.30, and it is hoped there will be a large muster.

A SPECIAL meeting of the Swindon Branch takes place to-day (March 16) at the Golden Lion, Bridge Street, at 7 o'clock. Members and friends are earnestly invited to attend.

A SPECIAL meeting of the Three Towns' Branch will be held this evening (March 16) at 7, at 100 Union Street, Plymouth. Very important business has to be transacted, and every member should attend.

THE Bethnal Green Branch is raising a little assistance for John Dell, a Freethinker eighty years of age, who is unable to earn anything. For fifty years he has been a helper of good causes, and now he needs a friendly hand. The secretary's address is Mr. J. Neate, 385 Bethnal Green Road, E. Donations will be thankfully received.

OUR veteran friend, Mr. Daniel Baker of Birmingham, has just celebrated his seventy-fifth birthday in an original manner which we should like to see become common. He sends us £5 to be divided amongst three Funds—the Freethinker, the Benevolent, and the Swedish Prisoner—in the proportions indicated elsewhere. Mr. Baker calls it a thank-offering. We presume he is grateful to Freethought for giving him a vivid interest in life at such an advanced age. May the snows fall gently on his honored head.

The Hindu, a large-sized journal published at Madras, prints a letter from its London correspondent on the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes and his comments on the educational part of the missionary movement in India. Incidentally the "converted Atheist shoe-maker" is referred to. The writer says he knows a gentlemen who is neither a Wesleyan nor a Secularist, and who, after reading Mr. Foote's pamphlet, said: "Mr. Foote has the best of it. Mr. Hughes is nowhere."

WE are pleased to notice signs of increased activity among the Freethinkers of Paris. M. Clemetshaw of La Verité sends us papers announcing various re-unions, among which we notice discourses by citizen Schacre and Julien Vinson. Anti-clerical banquets for Good Friday are also being organised.

THE proposal to have Sunday concerts at Norwich has led to a wordy warfare in the columns of the papers, and people's eyes are being opened to see that the clerical opposition is just an attempt to prevent any rivalry to their own trade. At Swindon also the Sunday question is arousing attention, and letters from Freethinkers have been inserted in the local Advertiser.

SUNDAY football is being played in a field near "The Pig and Whistle," in the parish of High Laver. A correspondent of the Essex County Chronicle draws attention to this abominable outrage, and hopes it will be put a stop to. We fear it will take a very large quantity of hope to stop the ball from rolling. Another correspondent states that the clergyman of the parish church was hooted and groaned at for denouncing Sunday football in the name of the Lord. How dreadful! Poor old England is going to the dogs.

A SELECTION of the writings of Karl Heinzen, will be published at the Freidenker office, Milwaukee, under the title "German Radicalism in America."

A MISSIONARY states that in Japan only 7,000 children go to school where religious knowledge is part of the curriculum, but over 3,000,000 attend where the teaching is purely agnostic.

A JOURNAL for Freethinking women has been started in America by Matilda Joslyn Gage. It is entitled the Liberal Thinker and published by Josephine Cables Aldrich, Syracuse, New York.

Digitized by Google

THE Freethinkers' Magazine for March is to hand. In addition to its usual varied contents it gives a portrait of A. T. Lilly, who has recently died, and a view of an institution which he has founded at Northampton, Mass., for teaching science to women without superstition.

MRS. LUCY COLMAN'S Reminiscences, which have been coming out in the Freethinkers' Magazine, are to be published in book-form.

A NEW Freethinker's Union has been established at Breslau in Germany.

THE Truthseeker gives its readers a cartoon, "Marriage as a Sacrament." A man with a whip is chained by the neck, with a big padlock, to a woman he is ill-using. The priest stands by with a key labelled "whom God hath joined let no man put asunder."

MR. GEORGE MEREDITH'S admirers will be glad to learn that a new novel from his pen may soon be expected.

THE Edmonton Liberal and Radical Club, which in 1886 refused the Freethinker admission to its reading-room, has by a full committee rescinded that resolution.

A PIOUS DODGE.

CHARLES HILL, of 13 Bedford Row, London, W.C., is the paid Secretary of the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association. How many working men the Society boasts we are unable to say, but not a single one is to be found in the printed list of Vice-Presidents, who are all baronets, M.Ps., or esquires. Anyhow Mr. Hill has to earn his living, and to do this he must kick up a fuss. We are not aware that he has instituted any prosecution against the Gas Companies or other concerns that employ Sunday labor, although one would think it fell within the scope of his Society's action. But, on the other hand, Mr. Hill appears to be very anxious about Freethought meetings. Perhaps he deplores that working men should desecrate the Sabbath by walking to a Secular hall. May be he thinks it a violation of the "day of rest" to deliver a lecture or take part in a discussion, although preaching and praying fall into a different category. Whatever the reason, the fact is certain, that Mr. Hill is anxious about Freethought meetings. Still, he knows that Freethinkers are not easily frightened. Accordingly he tries a little judicious pressure on the proprietors of meeting-places. Here is a case in point.

The Woolwich Branch of the N. S. S. was started last summer after one of Mr. Foote's open-air lectures. Now it numbers nearly fifty members. Its Sunday evening meetings are held at the Assembly Rooms connected with the "Sussex Arms." A modest charge is made for admission to cover the expenses, the costliest seat being obtainable for threepence. The proceedings have been orderly, not even the timidest inhabitant has complained, and the Branch would, if left alone, go on quietly spreading its principles by the force of persuasion. But the soul of Mr. Hill is perturbed. He lives six miles or so away, but his piety (or his bigotry) is far-reaching, and he has addressed the following letter to the proprietor of the Assembly Rooms:—

Sir,—A copy of a bill has been sent to me announcing lectures at the Sussex Arms on Sundays to which a charge of 2d. for admission is made. Allow me to inform you that such Lectures are illegal under heavy penalties and that you incur risk of prosecution. The statute under which the charges are illegal is 21 George III. c. 49. Several companies have incurred heavy pecuniary losses under the statute, and you would be wise to consult a respectable solicitor on the subject. The Act is by no means dead.—I am, sir, your obedient servant, CHARLES HILL.

The Act in question certainly exists, but the rest of Mr. Hill's statements are imagination or dogmatism. It is impossible to say what view the judges would take if some common informer—say Mr. Hill—were to set the Act in motion. Anyhow, if Mr. Hill's Sabbatarian soul is exercised about Sunday meetings, it is difficult to see why he should bestow his attentions upon Woolwich. There are Freethought meeting-places like the Hall of Science that are far more notorious. They have existed for years, and the old Act of George III. is defied in them every Sunday. Mr. Hill does not seem to mean business. His letter is probably an attempt to put an end to a series of Freethought meetings by frightening the proprietor of the building in which they are held.

Should Mr. Hill, however, really mean business, we shall have to do two things. First—waiving the question of what the Woolwich meetings have to do with Sunday labor—we shall have to ask some of the Vice-Presidents of Mr. Hill's Society whether they approve of this underhand way of trying to suppress Freethought. There is Mr. Arnold Morley, the Liberal whip; there is Mr. W. Abraham, the representative of the Welsh miners; there is Mr. Benjamin Picard, another labor member of Parliament. These gentlemen will have to be tackled upon the subject, and compelled to hold their Secretary in check, or else to take the responsibility of his bigotry. Secondly, the Secular party will have to take steps to defend its very right of existence. For the old Act of George III.—if not obsolete, as it has been called in the House of Commons—applies to every Sunday lecture-room in the country, where money is taken, either by charge or collection, and where any questions are debated.

Meanwhile we wait to see the result of Mr. Hill's bombastic letter. If it leads to anything serious, the agitation it will give rise to will involve a good many more things than the old Act of George III.

G. W. FOOTE.

HOW TO HELP US.

(1) Get your newsagent to exhibit the Freethinker in his window.
(2) Get your newsagent to take a few copies of the Freethinker and try to sell them, guaranteeing to take the copies that may remain unsold.
(3) Take an extra copy (or more), and circulate it among your acquaintances.
(4) Display, or get displayed, one of our contents-sheets, which are of a convenient size for the purpose. Mr. Forder will send them on application.
(5) Leave a copy of the Freethinker now and then in the train, the car, or the omnibus.
(6) Distribute some of our cheap tracts in your walks abroad, at public meetings, or among the audiences around street-corner preachers.

HEATHEN JAPAN AND CHRISTIAN ENGLAND.

Mr. H. W. Hawkes, who is sojourning in Japan, has sent to our contemporary, The Inquirer, a remarkable description of his impressions of life as seen in the streets of the capital city of Tokyo, where the children everywhere look happy and well cared for, and are clean and mannerly, and "the frightful contrasts between rich and poor" which we are accustomed to, are "nowhere to be seen." Mr. Hawkes finds himself constantly asking "Where are the street-corner roughs, and where the droves of ragged boys and girls, wolfish of face, begging under pretence of selling matches and papers; and where "the bloodless, starved, cowed, disheartened wrecks of humanity which daily confront one in our large cities?" The absence of anything corresponding to our flaring gin palaces is also noteworthy. As to the drunkard reeling home to abuse his wife and curse his children, "Japan knows him not." Let us hope the jolly Japanese in their passion for absorbing occidental civilisation will not take to beer and Bible or gin and Gospel.

"What is the greatest miracle in the Bible?" Saphir asked a young lady at a party. Without giving her time to reply, a forward coxcomb answered: "That Elijah was not burned when he went to Heaven in a chariot of fire." "No," returned Saphir: "That Balaam's ass spoke before it was questioned."

Digitized by Google

GOD'S CURSE.

One cold winter evening, as I was comfortably seated before a blazing fire, trying to forget the discomfort outdoors, a knock came to my door. In a minute the jovial, burly form of my friend Doctor C—— appeared in my sanctum, shaking the frozen snow off his overcoat like some big retriever dog. Having removed his wraps, and seated himself by the fireside, he, after some preliminary conversation, began telling me about a most distressing case he had just come from.

"You know," he began, "that most of my practice lies among the poorer part of the population of our city, so I was not surprised when, last evening, I received a call from a patient who was lying in the 'Traveller's Rest,' one of the lowest of our common lodging-houses in the Grassmarket. Speedily I made my way there. and, in one of the darkest corners of a most wretched room, I saw, stretched upon a shake-down, a man, or rather the mere semblance of one, who, I afterward learned, had held a high position in this, our Modern Athens.

"'Are you the doctor?' he asked, in almost a whisper, as I approached his bedside.

"I replied in the affirmative, when, he continued, I did not want to send for you, knowing that I was past all medical aid, but the people of the house desired it—I suppose, to save them the trouble of a coroner's unwelcome visit. But since you are here I should like to tell you my tale—I will be dead ere morning—a curious tale, from which, since you are a doctor, you may draw a moral that may prove of some benefit to the people.' Here a fit of coughing intervened, so violent that it seemed to rend his frame in twain.

"His disease was simply alcholism—a frame weakened by excessive drinking and insufficient food to such an extent that recovery seemed impossible.

"Having recovered himself from his fit of coughing, he turned his large, dark eyes upon me and said, 'Doctor, do you believe in heredity?'

"As I had never given the subject much thought, I simply replied, 'Sometimes.'

"'I do,' returned he almost savagely, 'and that the vices of our parents more often descend to us than their virtues. Why, I cannot say, only that vice is a most infectious disease. At least, it was proved so in my case, for all that my father bequeathed me was an inordinate desire for liquor. Nor could that desire be satiated. I prayed and struggled and fought against the black demon without avail. My prayer was unheard, or if heard, the comedy was too good, too pleasing to that loving God to end so soon. Yet, I ought to have known that one might as well have cried to the purring wind as to have addressed his supplications to that almighty fiend. But I was a Christian then and thought God was the loving father the priests described him to be. How easily men are gulled!

"'Then in my misery, I came to the conclusion that God could not exist, else he could not be so cruel as to punish me in such a manner for the fancied slight put upon his name by some of my ancestors. Why should I be punished for my father's sins? Is it only to satisfy an innate fiendishness in the almighty's nature? If so, he is the devil masquerading in the good God's robes. Can there be any love in the nature of a God who damns the better portion of his children to eternal torment only to enjoy their agony? O God of stone! I have worn my knees in prayer, I have pleaded, and rent the air with my cries for help, all in vain. He cared not nor answered.

"'O beneficent father, divest thyself of thy sheep's clothing and appear to the world in thy true form. I have said enough. Speaking hurts me. But I detest that God who, though he could, would not save me.' He sank back on his pillow exhausted. I watched by him until early this morning, when, about three o'clock, he opened his eyes, which shone with an unwonted brilliancy. I saw at once by his appearance that it was merely a question of minutes.

"'Good-bye, doctor,' he said in a low whisper, and as I shook his hand a smile came over his face as he said, 'Don't—let—God—f-o-ol—you.' He closed his eyes again, sighing wearily, as the shadow of the angel's wings passed over him and this poor half-maddened soul crept unto the great unknown."

Such was the doctor's tale. The tale of a life wrecked amidst the breakers of dissipation, of a madman, dying, yet breathing his defiance at the supposed author of his misery.

A. Buton.

(From the New York "Truthseeker.")

THE PERSONALLY CONDUCTED TOUR OF THE ISRAELITES IN THE DESERT.

And thou shalt remember all the way the Lord thy God hath led thee these forty years in the wilderness. Thy raiment waxed not old upon thee, neither did thy foot swell, these forty years.—Deut. viii.

The following interesting account of the longest walking feat on record has come into our hands, through an indefatigable member of our staff, who is digging up the whole of Palestine in his thirst for genuine, front seat, 24-carat, hall marked, records.

"THE MOUNT SINAI EXPRESS."

Special Extra Edition.

From our Special Correspondent.

The forty years having elapsed, your own correspondent was on the spot to faithfully report for the paper that has the largest circulation in the world. And your readers will no doubt be affected to tears when they read the state the Israelites were in at the end of their long wandering about the sterile plains led by Moses himself, although I never could make out why he kept them prancing around that desert so long, as I in my search for news have gone across it in about ten days. But to return to our Ba Baas. I placed myself in a situation of advantage and saw the first man issue from those regions, which must have had such terrible experiences to all that host of the Israelitish people. The sight caused many manly eyes to feel damp and many a manly nose to sniff, for big, brawny men, forty-one or forty-two years of age, who had gone into that desert as babes in open-worked frocks, appeared now in the same identical clothes, fitting skin tight, not having grown quite so quickly as the human being—great muscular limbs encased in fancy drawers coming only down to the knee with soiled lace round the bottom, the colossal brown legs seeming to be about to burst from their infantile bondage.

Other Israelitish warriors, with truculent looking faces, appeared with their shock heads encased in fantastic baby caps, fitting so tightly that the wearers seemed unable to shut their eyes; others, from habit I suppose, still wore their tooth-persuaders or rubber dental pads hanging at their none too slender waists. Great feet appeared in tender delicate wollen bootekins tied in front with neat pink bows making all us spectators think of the time when these burly warriors were thrown in the air by their fond mothers to the jubilant cry of "Ketcher Ketcher."

The babes of only a few weeks old had utilised their progenitors feeding bottles, but seemed liberal with their lacteal nourishment; ever and anon offering their swash-buckling parents a pull at the rubber nipple, thinking no doubt by the similarity of their dress that their proclivities tended that way.

The most heartrending sights were of those who had gone into that desert as boys in skeleton suits. The trousers buttoning over the jacket, and Jehovah having been remiss in not making the clothes grow with the same celerity as the human being. The consequence was the poor fellows looked like bloated aristocrats or human pincushions stuffed to repletion. It seemed an accident with a pin would have the same effect as an incision in an air ball.

Great big-limbed women, termagantly inclined, still in the habiliments of sweet dimpled childhood, some not having been short coated when Moses entered the desert, now appearing still wearing their first long clothes with gaudy ribbons tying up the fleecy sleeves, showing now, alas, an arm that would make the strongest husband tremble. These forty-year-old mothers, dressed in the trappings of babyhood, nursing their babies, similarly accoutred to themselves, was a sight inclined to raise a smile, were you not made sad by the looks of evident pain on the faces of those stout Jews who seemed to desire to burst from their too tight knickerbocker suits and bound along in the costume of Nature.

[Here the fragment ends, and by the ring on the manuscript, seemingly caused by a pint vessel having been placed thereon, the correspondent seems to have devoted some of his energies to producing a vacuum in the pewter.]

A certain politician holding office now in Washington comes from Gilead,——, and he is proud of his native town. It is told of him that on one occasion a visiting clergyman preached in the village church, and during the course of his remarks, he exclaimed: "Is there no balm in Gilead?" Mr. Blank jumped to his feet at once. "Of course there is," he sung out, to the horror of the congregation, "but you can't get it on Sunday."

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY MEETINGS.

LONDON.

Ball's Pond Secular Hall, 36 Newington Green Road, N., 7 "Buddhism or Enlightenment: its Gospel and Doctrines."

Battersea—The Shed of Truth, Prince of Wales's Road, 7.30, a lecture.

Bethnal Green—2 Railway Place, Cambridge Road (temporary premises), 3.15, adjourned special members' meeting; important.

Camberwell—61 New Church Road, S.E., 7.30, "The Most Comfortable Sacrament." Preceded by Shakesperian recital.

Claremont Hall, Penton Street, Pentonville Road, N., at 7, Mr. S. Standring, "How and What did Jesus Teach?"

Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, E.C., 7, Mr. T. Parris, "Why I became a Freethinker."

Hyde Park, near Marble Arch; 11.15, Mr. George Standring, "Christian Apologists Examined."

Milton Hall, Kentish Town Road. N.W., 7.30, Mrs. Annie Besant, "Can Christ Atone for the Sins of Men?"

New Southgate, Betstyle Bridge, 11, Mr. S. Standring, "Good Old Satan."

West Ham—121 Broadway, Plaistow, 10.30, committee meeting; at 11.30, Mr. Toleman-Garner, "Phases of Freethought—The Aggressive"; at 7, Mr. Heaford, "Dr. Magee v. Jesus." At 8.30, music, etc

Westminster—Liberal and Radical Club, Chapter Street, 7, Mr. F. Millar, "Man in the light of Darwinism."

Wood Green—Jolly Butchers' Hill, 11, various speakers.

Woolwich—"Sussex Arms," Assembly Room, 60 Plumstead Road, 7.30, Mrs. Thornton Smith, "Salvation."

COUNTRY.

Birmingham—Baskerville Hall, Crescent, 7, Mr. Forder

Cardiff—Queen Street, large hall (entrance from Working Street)—Mr. G. W. Foote, at 11, "After Death, what?" at 3, "The Gospel of Secularism"; at 6.30, "Heaven and Hell." Tickets at the door.

Chester-le-Street Branch, Old Pelton; monthly meeting at 6.30; discussion, "Secularism v. Spiritualism."

Derby Branch, 20 Newland Street; at 6.30, members' meeting, important.

Glasgow Secular Society and Branch of N. S. S, 122 Ingram Stree.—5 30, committee meeting; 6.30, Mr. J. B. Glazier, "Prof. Huxley and Natural Rights."

Hanley—Secular Hall, 51 John Street, 7, Mr. A. Hall will give a reading: "Mistakes of Moses," by Colonel Ingersoll.

Huddersfield — Littlewood's Buildings, Upperhead Row, 6.30, Mr. Owen Balmforth, MS. lecture by the Hon. Auberon Herbert, "A Liberty Creed."

Liverpool Branch N.S S., Camden Hall, Camden Street—at 3, discussion class, "The Comparison of Ancient and Modern Civilisation"; at 7, "Mr Samuel Laing's Philosophy"—Mr. Doeg.

Manchester—Rusholme Road, Oxford Road, 6.30, Mr. Henry, "The Malthusian Question."

Sheffield—Hall of Science, Rockingham Street, at 7, Mr. Lill, "Is the Bible a True Book?"

South Shields—Captain Duncan's Navigation Schools, King Street; at 7, business meeting.

LECTURERS' ENGAGEMENTS.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Oredon Road, London, S.E.—March 23, Milton Hall; 30, Woolwich. April 6 (morning), Kingsland Green (evening), Ball's Pond; 13, Camberwell. May 18 (morning), Clerkenwell Green, (evening), Ball's Pond; 25, Regent's Park. June 15, Ball's Pond; 29, Mile End. July 13, Mile End.

TOLEMAN-GARNER, 8 Heyworth Road, Stratford, London, E.—March 16 (morning), West Ham; 23, Woolwich; 30, Westminster. May 4 (morning), Mile End Waste; 11, Clerkenwell Green; 18 (afternoon), Regent's Park; 25 (morning), Hyde Park. June 1 (morning), Mile End Waste; 8 (morning), Clerkwell Green.

JAMES HOOPER, 11 Upper Eldon Street, Sneinton, Nottingham.—April 13, Nottingham.

E. STANLEY JONES, 53 Park Street, Toxteth, Liverpool—March 16, Liverpool.

T. THURLOW, 7 Dickson's Villas, Rutland Road, East Ham.—April 13 (evening), Plaistow; 27, Hyde Park.

H. SMITH, 3 Breck Place, Breck Road, Everton Road, Liverpool.—April 6, Liverpool.

PROGRESSIVE PUBLISHING CO.'S LIST.

All orders to be sent, with remittance, to R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C. Rate of postage—Orders under 3d., one halfpenny; orders under 6d. one penny. Orders over 6d. post free.

G. W. FOOTE.

	s.	d.
PRISONER FOR BLASPHEMY. Cloth	2	6
A Full History of his Three Trials and Twelve Months' Imprisonment. Copies in paper covers, soiled, 6d.
IS SOCIALISM SOUND?	1	0
Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant.
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
CHRISTIANITY AND SECULARISM	1	0
Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. In paper covers.
Superior edition in cloth	1	6
INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS	0	8
Second edition, enlarged.
Superior edition, in cloth	1	8
DARWIN ON GOD	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0
CONTENTS:—Darwin's Grandfather—Darwin's Father—Darwin's Early Piety—Almost a Clergyman—On Board the "Beagle"—Settling at Down—Death and Burial—Purpose of Pamphlet—Some Objections—Darwin Abandons Christianity—Deism—Creation—Origin of Life—Origin of Man—Animism—A Personal God—Design—Divine Beneficence—Religion and Morality—Agnosticism and Atheism.
DEFENCE OF FREE SPEECH	0	4
Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes.
LETTERS TO JESUS CHRIST	0	4
PHILOSOPHY OF SECULARISM	0	3
THE BIBLE GOD	0	2
THE FOLLY OF PRAYER	0	2
CHRISTIANITY AND PROGRESS	0	2
A Reply to Mr. Gladstone.
WHAT WAS CHRIST?	0	2
A Reply to J. S. Mill.
THE DYING ATHEIST. A Story	0	1
WAS JESUS INSANE?	0	1
A searching inquiry into the mental condition of the Prophet of Nazareth.
THE SHADOW OF THE SWORD	0	2
A moral and statistical Essay on War.
ROYAL PAUPERS	0	2
Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty.
BIBLE HEROES—First Series, in elegant wrapper ...	1	0
(1) Mr. Adam, (2) Captain Noah, (3) Father Abraham, (4) Juggling Jacob, (5) Master Joseph, (6) Joseph's Brethren, (7) Holy Moses I., (8) Holy Moses II., (9) Parson Aaron, (10) General Joshua, (11) Jephthah and Co., (12) Professor Samson. One Penny each singly.
BIBLE HEROES—Second Series, in elegant wrapper...	1	0
(13) Prophet Samuel, (14) King Saul, (15) Saint David I., (16) Saint David II., (17) Sultan Solomon, (18) Poor Job, (19) Hairy Elijah, (20) Bald Elisha, (21) General Jehu, (22) Doctor Daniel, (23) The Prophets (Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Hosea); (24) St. Peter, (25) St. Paul
MRS. BESANT'S THEOSOPHY	0	2
A Candid Criticism.
THEOSOPHY AND SECULARISM..	0	2
A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant.
THE NEW CAGLIOSTRO	0	2
An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky.

COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

MISTAKES OF MOSES	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth	1	6
Only Complete Edition published in England
DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT	0	6
Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy.
REPLY TO GLADSTONE	0	4
With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler.
ROME OR REASON? Reply to Cardinal Manning	0	4
FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Rev. Dr. Field ...	0	2
GOD AND MAN. Second Reply to Dr. Field	0	2
THE DYING CREED	0	2
THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH	0	2
THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION	0	2
A Discussion with Hon. F. D. Courdert and Gov. S. L. Woodford.
ART AND MORALITY	0	2
DO I BLASPHEME?	0	2
THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE	0	2
THE GREAT MISTAKE	0	1
LIVE TOPICS	0	1
MYTH AND MIRACLE	0	1
REAL BLASPHEMY	0	1
SOCIAL SALVATION	0	2

G. W. FOOTE and J. M. WHEELER.

CRIMES OF CHRISTIANITY. Vol. I. Cloth ...	2	6
Hundred of exact References to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.
THE JEWISH LIFE OF CHRIST	0	6
With voluminous footnotes. An extraordinary work.
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0

G. W. FOOTE and W. P. BALL.

BIBLE HANDBOOK FOR FREETHINKERS AND INQUIRING CHRISTIANS	1	4
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
Sold also in separate parts as follows—
Bible Contradictions	0	4
The Contradictions are printed in parallel columns.
2. Bible Absurdities	0	4
All the chief Absurdities from Genesis to Revelation, conveniently and strikingly arranged, with appropriate headlines, giving the point of each absurdity in a sentence.
3. Bible Atrocities	0	4
Containing all the godly wickedness from Genesis to Revelation. Each infamy has a separate headline for easy reference.
4. Bible Immoralities, Indecencies, Obscenities, Broken Promises, and Unfulfilled Prophecies ...	0	4

Digitized by Google

NOW READY.

LETTERS TO THE CLERGY

FIRST SERIES.

1.—CREATION
To the Bishop of Carlisle.

2.—THE BELIEVING THIEF
To the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

3.—THE ATONEMENT
To the Bishop of Peterborough.

4.—OLD TESTAMENT MORALITY
To the Rev. E. R. Conder, D.D.

5.—INSPIRATION
To the Rev. R. F. Horton, M.A.

6.—CREDENTIALS OF THE GOSPEL
To the Rev. Prof. J. A. Beet.

7.—MIRACLES
To the Rev. Brownlow Maitland, M.A.

8.—PRAYER
To the Rev. T. Teignmouth Shore, M.A.

By G. W. FOOTE.

128pp., in Wrapper. ONE SHILLING.

2d. Now Ready. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC?

A NEW PAMPHLET BY

COLONEL. R. G. INGERSOLL.

A

BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY

OF

FREETHINKERS

OF

ALL AGES AND NATIONS.

BY

J. M. WHEELER.

Price 7/6 Handsomely bound in cloth. Price 7/6

THE IMPOSSIBLE CREED

An Open Letter to the

BISHOP OF PETERBOROUGH

By G. W. FOOTE.

Price 2d. Price 2d.

Price 1d. Price 1d.

A LIE IN FIVE CHAPTERS.

THE REV. HUGH PRICE HUGHES'S

CONVERTED ATHEIST

By G. W. FOOTE.

Should be circulated by Freethinkers who desire to see this pious fraud exposed as widely as possible.

MARRIAGE & DIVORCE

AN AGNOSTIC'S VIEW.

By COL. R. G. INGERSOLL.

2d.] Reprinted from the "North American Review." [2d

Everh Freethinker, Radical or Socialist should read it and circulate it amongst his friends.

W. J. Rendell's

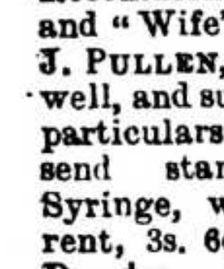
"WIFE'S FRIEND."

Recommended in "Law of Population," and "Wife's Hand Book." Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell Street Clerkenwell, and supplied per post, 2s. dozen. For particulars of this Malthusian discovery send stamped envelope. Higginson's Syringe, with vertical and reverse current, 3s. 6d. and 4s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. All other Malthusian Appliances. All prices post free.

HARTNOLL,

ENGLISH AND FOREIGN CHEMIST,

1A PICCADILLY



(Under the London Pavilion Music Hall),

LONDON, W.

Hartnoll's Specialities, Appliances and Medicated Preparations are world-renowned.

Spiral, Douche and Latest Improved Syringes.

ESTABLISHED OVER 50 YEARS.

IRETON'S

INDELIBLE JET BLACK MARKING INK

(NO HEATING REQUIRED)

For Rubber Stamps, Stencil, Type or Pen,

PRICE 6d. 1/- and 2/6 per Bottle.

Sample bottle 4d. post free.

Dyed with Ireton's Ink, no hope of ever changing my Colour.

IRETON & Co., 92, Gracechurch St., LONDON, E.C.

The largest makers of Rubber Stamps.

Special terms to the Trade.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. VOL. I.

By Dr. T. R. ALLINSON,

4 SPANISH PLACE, MANCHESTER SQUARE, LONDON, W.

Of the Author, for Postal Order for 1s 2d.

It contains Articles on: Management of Infancy; Health; Longevity; The Teeth; Brown Bread; Bread Making; Food; Vegetarianism; Tobacco; The Drink Question; Fruit; Fresh Air; Exercise; Bathing; Light; Holidays; &c. Also the cause and cure of Disease; Constipation; Biliousness; Eczema; Blackheads and Pimples; Nervousness; Coughs and Colds; Chest Complaints; Deafness; Thread Worms; Long Worms; Tape Worms; The Itch, &c.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE;

OR, THE ONLY RATIONAL WAY OF TREATING DISEASE.

Everybody likes it who reads it.

Of the Author, for Postal order for 1s. 1d.

MANCHESTER BRANCH OF THE N.S.S.,

Rusholme Road, Oxford Road, All Saints.

On March 30th and 31st

A SALE OF WORK will be held for the purpose of Re-Furnishing the Hall with more comfortable Seats. Donations, either in money or articles, will be thankfully received by the Committee or Secretary, A. Hemingway, 25 Higher Chatham Street, C.-on-M., Manchester.

WORKS BY ARTHUR B. MOSS

which every Freethinker should possess.

The Bible and Darwinism 6d.
(Six pamphlets bound together.)

The Yorkshire Chronicle says: "Mr. Moss, as a controversial essayist and student of science and philosophy, is gaining distinction. His essays are not unworthy the attention of the scientific student, though written for the uninitiated."

God's Favorites - - - 6d.
(Six pamphlets bound together.)

Two Revelations - - - 1d.

Man and the Lower Animals 1d.

Progressive Publishing Co. Watts & Co.

FOR SALE.—MICROSCOPE in capital condition. Very cheap, 17s.; worth double. To be seen any time, 109 Commercial Road, E.

THE FAMILY LIMIT,

OR,

THE QUININE TABLOID,

1s. 6d. per doz. post free.

For further Particulars send stamped directed envelope to

A. MOSS, 36 Upper Park Street,

ISLINGTON, LONDON, N.

GRATIS.

AN ILLUSTRATED 16-PAGE PAMPHLET, containing extracts from the utterances of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Manchester; the Revs. T. R. Malthus, A. E. Whatham, M. J. Savage, Leonard Dawson, — Lawton, H. R. Haweis; the following Doctors:—Allbutt, Allinson, Armstrong, Drysdale, Pye Chavasse, E. B. Foote, Nicholls, Wilder, Raciborski, Napheys and Reamy. Also Plato, Aristotle, Sismondi, Huxley, Mill, and numerous others. Should be read by every married and marriageable person. Sent on receipt of stamped addressed envelope by J. R. HOLMES, Hanney, Wantage, Berks.

TESTIMONIALS (Extracts from).

"The one you sent me some months since is

Quite Worn Out

with being lent to so many friends."

"Some of us have paid five shillings for less than one-tenth of the information."

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each, upper or lower set, £1. Best quality, 4s. each, upper or lower, £2, completed in four hours when required, repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18c. gold 15s.; stopping, 2s. 6d. extraction, 1s. painless by gas, 5s.

Printed and Published by G. W. Foote, at 28 Stonecutter Street Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

Vol. X.—No. 12.] SUNDAY, MARCH 23, 1890. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

GOD IN A COAL PIT.

THE Morfa disaster will of course be inquired into and we have no desire to anticipate the result of the investigation. Nor will any proceedings bring the dead to life again and repair the ruin of scores of homes. The butcher's bill of the catastrophe is appalling. It brings home to us the fact that the miner's occupation is more dangerous than that of the soldier. Only now and then are military men called upon to face the death-dealing cannon and rifles of an enemy, but the brave fellows who dig in the bowels of the earth for one of the prime necessaries of our civilisation are always in peril. They go down into the mine, carrying their lives in their hands, to earn the daily bread for their wives and families. Yet their simple, unostentatious courage is overlooked by the poets, who celebrate in glowing strains the hectic courage of battlefields. The epic of war has been sung, but when shall we have the grander epic of battle with the forces of nature for the well-being of man?

It is impossible to rate too highly the heroism of the relief parties who risked death for the mere chance of rescuing their comrades. One gallant fellow fell a martyr to the enterprise. Godly men and women were praying at the pit's mouth, but the cruel gas is no respecter of persons or beliefs, and it slew a hero who died to save his fellows in a more real sense than some of those whose names are on the lips of religionists. No aid was vouchsafed from heaven. The prayers of faith fell upon the deaf ears of the great Sphinx. Yet that was an occasion when help might have been expected. The veriest Devil might have stretched out a hand to save one who, as truly as Hercules in the grand old Greek story, was filled with unselfish love, and fighting with Death for the sake of those who had stirred the pity of his heroic heart.

Saturday witnessed the burial of many of the victims of the explosion, and there were heart-rending scenes at the grave-sides. Women and children cried and wailed, and strong men melted with grief. The fine promises of the officiating ministers were powerless to staunch those bleeding hearts. Heaven was so dim and distant, the future meeting to part no more was so shadowy. The poor mourners yearned for the touch of the vanished hand and the sound of the voice that was still. They wanted their loved ones by their side again. Their sorrow was not to be assuaged by priestly words. In the grim presence of death they felt the reality of their loss. They grieved for their dead like Atheists, and every sob and tear belied the teachings of their creed.

During Sunday the preachers in the many churches and chapels of the district were engaged in justifying the ways of God to man. They are in the habit of talking freely about Providence, and the occasion demanded a little explanation. We have waded through several columns of their eloquence, and the upshot seems to be this. The survivors of the catastrophe are congratulated on their escape, while those who perished are said to have gained by the transaction. In short, it was a mercy either way! Of course the logic of the argument is beneath contempt, but it serves its purpose all the same. Religion is not a matter of reason, but a matter of feeling. The survivors feel they are lucky, and the ministers assure them that the dead are in God's good keeping; so "all's well that ends well," and the men of God pull through the difficulty on the famous old plan of "Heads we win and tails you lose."

Judging by the reports, every one of the preachers took it for granted that God allowed the explosion to happen; that is, he could have helped it, but did not. According to the principles of English law he is responsible for the disaster. Yet he is a God of love. How, then, is the contradiction to be explained? Finite men, full of brave compassion, tried to save their fellows; and infinite God, whose love is boundless and unspeakable, winked at the slaughter. No wonder that the lines of Cowper were quoted—

> God moves in a mysterious way
> His wonders to perform.

But the same preacher told his hearers that God "doeth all things well." He did not see, however, in that case, that the rescuers were presumptuously trying to frustrate God's purposes. If Almighty Wisdom caused the explosion, the poor fellows in the pit should have been left to their fate. But the logic of theology is too hard for flesh and blood. God's worshippers did their utmost to minimise the effects of his act of providence, and bowed their heads submissively when they could do no more to check his "tender mercies."

Perhaps the most thorough-going theologian was a Baptist preacher, the Rev. J. Dyfan Davies. Seeing the Lord's hand in everything, he discerned a moral significance in the Morfa disaster. The Bible said "Let the people tremble." God liked them to tremble; he expected it of them, and would not stand a disappointment. But the people were very firm nowadays; they had strong nerves; and some "extraordinary vibration" was needed to startle them. God therefore sent his "special servants" sometimes "to rouse up and shake their neighborhoods"; and when people went "after their own devices" he "startled them into solemnity by disasters." It would appear, then, that the Lord deliberately got up the Morfa explosion to show the people of England that he has his eye upon them; although he might have demonstrated the fact far better, and more beneficially, by feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, and healing the diseased. Were he to suddenly cure, in the selfsame night, all the patients in our hospitals, he would arrest our attention as surely as if he burnt down a city or decimated the population with pestilence. Nay, more surely; for we are used to accidents and disasters, and a slice of good luck from above would be unusual, and would set everybody thinking.

G. W. FOOTE.

Digitized by Google

THE SOCIETY OF JESUS.

(Concluded from p. 122.)

SOME reptiles take a deal of killing. The cohorts of Jesus are of this order. They have defied Cromwell and Gustavus, Pombal and Pascal, Bismarck and Bert. They are now as numerous, as powerful, and as unscrupulous as ever. Their web-like meshes extend in all directions, and their ability to focus all their forces at once with unerring accuracy upon any given point gives them power out of all proportion to their numbers. Their system crushes out individuality, and few individuals of eminence are to be found among them. It is said they rejected Cardinal Newman when, many years ago, he applied for admission to the order. If this is true—and the statement was made in the Quarterly Review—the decision was doubtless a wise one. The subtle and original mind of Newman could not be easily enough manipulated by Jesuit casuistry. Men of marked ability cannot be expected to submit to the relentless crushing out of their individuality which is the essence of the Jesuit novitiate. But training and discipline give them cunning and ability, if not wisdom.

Little as individuals, their corporate power is great. Jesuits have instead of individual ambition an intense esprit de corps. They believe themselves to be the salt of the earth, destined to redeem it. Devoted Ad Majorem Dei Gloriam, to God's greater glory, they esteem themselves the true soldiers of Jesus, having, in obedience to his orders, given up friends, family, and home to establish his kingdom; and they declare that "His honor is concerned in the Society called by His name." They believe their order to be as lasting as religion itself. "That which is risen from the dead is immortal," said Father Burke, one of their great orators. Many thought the brief of Clement XIV., suppressing the order in 1773, had killed Jesuitism for ever. Clement died, whether from poison or remorse, soon after. But as Redemptionists, the Society of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, Fathers of the Faith, and under other titles, the Jesuits lived on. If the order died in 1773, it rose from the dead in 1814, and ascended into power in 1886. It now sits on the right hand of the Pope, whose brother, Cardinal Pecci, in dying recently, left all his money to the Jesuits, by whom he had been educated.

In England they have more collegiate establishments than ever before. Forty years ago Carlyle wrote: "The Jesuits proper have long since got their final mitimus from England." Jesuits proper never laugh, but a semblance of a snigger must appear on their faces at Stoneyhurst and Windsor when they read this passage.

The expulsion of the order from Germany in 1872, and from France in 1880, largely increased their ranks in England as well as in Ireland and America. The brief of the Pope in their favor dated July 13th, 1886,* has given them new standing. This was followed by the beatification, as religious martyrs, of Jesuits imprisoned and executed in England as political traitors convicted of conspiring against the life of Elizabeth and asserting the deposing power of the Pope. English is taught in all their schools, and there are abundant signs that the reconversion of England is the subject of their earliest orisons and their latest vespers. As we pointed out recently, three divisions of "Ransomers" are being trained to operate on High, Low and Broad Church. Although it is certain that Disestablishment would lead many to embrace Romanism, the Establishment is to be defended as against Dissenters, with the view of ultimately making it their own. Their aim is, in the words of Cardinal Manning, "to subjugate and rule an imperial race," and their boast is that they alone are able to do it. Ridiculous enough it may seem if we compare the paucity of their numbers with the grandeur of their aims, but it would be more ridiculous were not so many High Churchmen playing into the Jesuits' hands, and had we not historical examples of what the order have been able to effect in other countries.

Certain it is that the Jesuits have made the Catholic Church Ultramontane, and now have their reward in being received into the bosom of the Papacy. We may expect, as the result of their re-establishment, to find the Vatican more astute and more political. The Pope, indeed, is little more than the puppet of the Jesuits. If they no longer stand behind thrones and use the confessional of kings as an instrument of their order, they find that plutocrats now serve their turn, and the confessional is as ever the key of the money-chest.

Is it not monstrous that a secret society, whose advent in every country has been attended by conspiracies and disasters, who have been expelled for proved crimes from almost every civilised state, may by death-bed terrifying, receive endowments of land and money, while any bequest to a Freethought Society or the endowment of a hall where Freethought is propagated is at once nullified? Does it not show that almost anything can be done in the name of religion? We are not of those who wish to suppress the Jesuits. We seek to meet these hereditary enemies of liberty with no other weapons those supplied by liberty itself. Freethinkers are the natural opponents of Jesuitism. Give us fair play. Place us on an equality before the law, permit our propaganda to receive bequests and endowments, and we undertake that Jesuit efforts for the reconversion of England shall be fruitless. J. M. WHEELER

* Issued after a severe illness said to have been due to poison.

"BEAUTY LIVES WITH KINDNESS."

BY HUGH O. PENTECOST.

From the "Twentieth Century."

EVEN Shakespeare never compacted more sturdy truth and wholesome sentiment into four words than when he wrote: "Beauty lives with kindness." Justness and right doing are the foundation of social amenity and civilised happiness; but kindness is the superstructure. Goodness is the root of character, but kindness is the stem and flower. Kindness can never take the place of justice, right and goodness, nor do the work that must and can only be done by these alone; but it can wonderfully smooth the way for the accomplishment of that work.

I like this word kindness. I am glad Shakespeare did not say: "Beauty lives with love." Love means so many different things. One must always be defining it. What do we mean by love? Almost everyone has a definition of his own. What does Paul mean when he says: "There are faith, hope and love, but the greatest of these is love"? What does Jesus mean when he says: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and thy neighbor as thyself"? What did he mean when he said: "Thou shalt love thine enemy"? In what way are we to love our enemies and where are we to draw the line? Are we to love the Devil? And how can we love neighbors whom we do not like?

I know all sorts of answers are given to these questions, no two of which are alike. That is what I say. When you speak of love you have to explain what you mean, and in many instances nobody knows what you mean after you have explained. Did any one ever explain to your satisfaction how you can love your enemy? Or even how can you perform the duty of loving anybody that you do not happen to even like?

Digitized by Google

Can we learn what this Pauline and Jesus-taught love is by watching the practice of the Church or the majority of individual Christians? It looks to me as if the Christian world had given up the problem as to what love means as a hopeless conundrum, and were trying to make it quite plain that they know how to practice what it does not mean. I am sure it does not mean anything that calls for such a large use of guns and locust clubs and hempen ropes as we are accustomed to, nor such contempt for the poor; but I do not pretend to know what it does mean, except in a general way.

The apostle John says: "God is love." What does it mean? Are cancers and poverty, and floods and famines, and a Presbyterian hell the expressions of his love? When I consider that God is almighty, which means that he can do just as he likes and have things just as he wants them, and look abroad upon the way he has fixed things, I can see plenty of evidence of hate, and if God hates he cannot be, in his essence, love. I can believe anything about God except that he is love. I can believe that he is bad, or that he is weak and that some other power gets the best of him. But in that case he is not God. I do not know what is meant when it is said that God is love.

I am glad that Shakespeare said kindness and not love. It is easy to understand what kindness means. It is easy to be kind to people whom we do not love. I know how to treat my neighbor or even my enemy kindly, though I do not always know how to love either of them. There is not a relation in life wherein kindness is not a duty and is not possible. And there is nothing that oils the machinery of society like kindness. Whoever is kind is handsome. Whoever is kind is lovely. For "beauty lives with kindness."

It is barely possible that some of you who are accustomed to hear me speak always upon questions of public interest wonder why I have chosen such a theme as this, a theme that leads the mind so directly to our personal relation with each other. I will tell you. When I look at you from week to week I think of you in your home life, in your friendships, in your stores and workshops. And I wonder how you live in these relations. And I fain would say something that may be of use to you in working out your problem of personal happiness.

We are interested in great public questions of religious and social regeneration. I am convinced that personal character depends for most persons more largely upon the conditions under which they live than upon hereditary or any other influence in life. But it may be very long before the minds of all the people are free from degrading religious and political superstitions and the bodies of all the people are free from industrial bondage. It is possible, however, for very many of us to largely solve the problem of our personal goodness and happiness under our present uncivilised conditions, and to this end I have introduced this personal subject. The key to the mansion of personal happiness under any conditions is kindness.

We rub against our fellows everywhere—in the streets, horse cars, railroad trains, ferry boats, places of assembly. Two courses of conduct are always possible for us. We may be ill-natured, grumpy, always out of temper; or we may be kind. We are always bumping into one another, stepping on each others' corns, pushing for an advantage, and whether you get home or to your place of business in a happy frame of mind will largely depend upon how you have behaved yourself on the way. If you have been kind on the way you will be beautiful when you get home or to your place of business. If you have been surly, standing punctiliously upon all your petty rights, you will be a nuisance to all your companions when you reach the end of your daily journey.

We are always having small squabbles and misunderstandings with persons with whom we do business. It is possible to magnify these mole hills into mountains by irritation and small pride and vindictiveness. It is also possible to smooth out such difficulties by kindness that costs no loss of self-respect—that adds, rather, to one's wealth of self-respect.

There are persons who pooh-pooh the idea that we can go through this world without fighting for our rights, without demanding an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth. But I know from constant daily experience that if some one smites you upon the right cheek without you having deserved to be smitten, the surest way to avoid being smitten on the left cheek is to turn it to the smiter. People say that if you do not stand up, pugnaciously, for your rights you will be run over and trampled under foot. That is true if you have a craven spirit and bow before injustice with slave-like humiliation, but it is not true if you are brave enough to clearly point out wherein you have been wronged and also brave enough not to fight for your rights except with argnments tempered and made strong by kindness.

Three times have editors of daily papers retracted false statements about me (almost a miracle), one of them writing me a personal apology (quite a miracle), because I simply pointed out to them wherein they had wronged me, but made no bullying threats nor bombastic demands.

(To be concluded.)

HOW TO HELP US.

(1) Get your newsagent to exhibit the Freethinker in his window.

(2) Get your newsagent to take a few copies of the Freethinker and try to sell them, guaranteeing to take the copies that may remain unsold.

(3) Take an extra copy (or more), and circulate it among your acquaintances.

(4) Display, or get displayed, one of our contents-sheets, which are of a convenient size for the purpose. Mr. Forder will send them on application.

(5) Leave a copy of the Freethinker now and then in the train, the car, or the omnibus.

(6) Distribute some of our cheap tracts in your walks abroad, at public meetings, or among the audiences around street-corner preachers.

A SCEPTIC'S VIEW OF THE CREATION,

As given in Genesis.

A God awoke in darkness
Six thousand years ago,
And looked around on nothing,
To see what he could do.

He'd never had beginning—
Not born like you and me,
But always had existed
From all eternity.

But what he had been doing
Through all these countless years
No priest has ever told us,
It in no book appears.

Perhaps he had been sleeping
With nothing for a bed,
With nothing for a pillow
And nothing in his head,

Digitized by Google

With nothing for companion
Through all that dreary night,
And only boundless nothing
On which to feast his sight.

He now arose to action
Like one aroused from sleep,
But of his six day's labor
The tale is rather steep.

He took a pinch of nothing
And made this glorious earth;
Another pinch of nothing
And oceans had their birth.

A little lump of nothing
Produced the powerful sun,
And so he worked on nothing
Till sky and stars were done.

And when the world was finished,
Of dust he made a man,
By mixing it with nothing
On some mysterious plan;

Then took a rib from Adam,
With nothing for a knife,
And, mixing it with nothing,
He made a full-grown wife.

ACID DROPS.

Providence has been multiplying the rats in Lincolnshire, and they have become a perfect pest. Farmers are killing them by hundreds, but the cry is "still they come." They are actually running over the patients lying in the fever wards at Spalding. Several were seen the other evening in the Exchange Hall while Canon Barker was addressing a temperance meeting. There is evidently room for a little temperance on the part of Providence in the production of rats.

Price's Patent Candle Company maintains a gospel-shop for its employees. At the last meeting of the Company the Chairman moved that £565 should be voted to pay the balance of the cost of erection. It would be interesting to know if the men are properly grateful to the Company for its solicitude about their immortal souls. For our part, we venture to think it probable that they would prefer to receive the Company's philanthropy in the form of increased wages.

Is it true that attendance at the Candle Company's gospel-shop is compulsory? Or has it ever been so? And have boys been fined sixpence for not gracing the place with their presence?

What a lot of humbug is talked on British platforms about the noble way in which Christianity liberated the negro slaves in America. That the slaves were liberated we know, but the act was a strategic move in the midst of the civil war between the North and South. And what has been the result? Ever since the "emancipation" the Christian whites have treated the blacks with insult and injustice. So flagrant has the infamy become—the very Young Men's Christian Associations refusing to admit a colored member—that the negro Bishop of Georgia, the Rt. Rev. H. M. Turner, has written a letter advocating the adoption of Senator Butler's Bill for sending the American negroes to Africa. "No court in America," he says, "has given a decision in favor of a negro in twelve years. The Supreme Court is an organised mob against him." He predicts that Africa, leavened by the American negroes, will become "the sanitary, commercial, and evangelical heart of the globe." And the last part of the prediction may be realised, unless Mohammedanism forestalls Christianity, for the religion of the Bible is more suitable to Africans than to Europeans.

Dean Lefroy is a fine, ripe bigot. The other evening he addressed the Young Men's Christian Association at Exeter Hall, and he pathetically warned them against scepticism. He said he had been thirty years a minister, and he had come to the conclusion that the cause of scepticism was more moral than intellectual. Yes, scepticism was a defect in the morals! Thus the great Lefroy drivelled on, and the report says that he created a "profound impression," which we can well believe when we remember the audience he was addressing.

David said that all sceptics were fools. Dean Lefroy says they are rogues. We say they are neither. It is impossible to debate the point with David, but we are willing to debate it with Dean Lefroy. We defy him to prove that scepticism, including all varieties of it, furnishes an appreciable portion of the crime and vice of England. If he accepts our challenge he may find, before we have done with him, that one sceptic, at least is no fool. That will dispose of David, and the discussion would probably dispose of Lefroy.

John Henry Thompson, alias John Henry Jones, is now serving a term of five years' penal servitude. His professional occupation was "burgling," and in pursuit of it he entered a church, lit a fire in the vestry, had a good nap, and finally went off with the communion plate. We daresay, also, he made inroads upon the bottled Blood of Christ, and, considering the awful sacrilege he committed, he should be thankful that the holy liquid did not poison and kill him after a long agony. The deity must have been in a placable mood on that occasion.

Toronto has a "godly" university, which was established in pious rivalry with the one that was recently burnt down. Its object is "the education of youth in the doctrines and duties of the Christian religon" as well as in secular matters. Thousands of pounds were collected for it in England, the Society for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge voting £3,000 at one swoop. But it appears from an article in the Speaker that this "godly" university resorts to very mean tricks to replenish its exchequer. It sells degrees in music for £16 a-piece. The trade is a bad one, but it pays, the proceeds being nearly all profit; and, as the Speaker says, "the holy men of Toronto will maintain, no doubt, that what they are doing is for the good of their Church."

Sir Edwin Arnold, in his letters from Japan, describes the Japanese woman as the most free and at the same time "the most modest and most self-respecting woman, after her own fashion, in the whole world." Christian missionaries with the Pauline gospel of woman's subjection in all things to her master, are energetically seeking to alter this, and the Pope, to be early in the field, has appointed an Archbishop of Tokio with four bishops under him.

Madame Blavatsky is very thin-skinned considering the beautiful abandon of speech in which she sometimes indulges. Tuesday's Pall Mall Gazette apologised for inserting "some very offensive expressions about Dr. Elliott Cones" in the report of an interview between one of its representatives and Mme. Blavatsky in October. The expressions "appeared by inadvertence in one edition."

Accuracy is not a Christian virtue. The Rev. T. Given-Wilson, vicar of Plaistow, writes an introduction to the professed recantation of James Marchant, a piece of writing which appears to have come, in whole or in part, from some other pen than that of its reputed author. According to Mr. Given-Wilson, James Marchant has returned to "the belief of his childhood." That is true enough, but other statements show less exactitude. For instance, Mr. Given-Wilson says he learned that "Mr. James Marchant, president of the West Ham Branch of the National Secular Society, had resigned his position, and renounced his infidel views." This is absolutely false. James Marchant did not resign his position. He was not at that time president of the West Ham Branch, an office which he only held for three months, and which he was not able to retain. Again, Mr. Given-Wilson writes so as to suggest that the West Ham Branch was ruined by the fall of the Cromwell Club. He says that "the old members clung together, and from time to time they have made their appearance in the neighborhood, lecturing in public-houses and debating on Plaistow Green." This is worthy of Hughes Price Hughes. The West Ham Branch has its own premises, not connected with any public-house, and a fair-sized lecture hall, in which Sunday meetings are held regularly. We advise Mr. Given-Wilson to request the prayers of his congregation for their pastor, that he may profit by a study of Revelations xxi., 8.

Digitized by Google

The religious conscience is a curious study. Douglas Green, of the New York Stock Exchange, left his wife and eloped to Europe with Mrs. Alice Snell McCree, who insisted on first being married by a minister to Green. She had no objection to taking her husband from his lawful wife provided she could obtain the consecration of a man of God, which she did. Her scruples were as truly pious as those of the Catholic burglar who refused to steal meat because it was Friday.

There are twenty-three Jewish convicts in England, all of them being assembled at Portsea prison, where a small synagogue has been erected. No necessity has yet arisen to build a little Hall of Science in connection with some penal establishment for Secularists, Atheists and Agnostics.

By the way, the Jews furnish a much smaller percentage of criminals than the Christians, although one would think that the "new dispensation" should produce a higher morality than the "old." Judging the tree by its fruit, Christianity is anything but an improvement on Judaism, and one is at a loss to understand why the second person of the Trinity took the trouble to be crucified for such a questionable result.

The London editor of the Detroit Free Press has been fishing for advertisements from the leading bishops and clergy. He has sent them the following conundrum, accompanied with the opening chapter of a story of the time of Christ, by Dr. E. S. Brooks. "Ought the characters of the New Testament, including the central character, to be introduced into works of fiction?" Most of the bishops decline to commit themselves, but from the clergy the editor got a majority in the affirmative, "provided the story teller writes in a reverent spirit." A reverent spirit is always the desideratum in dealing with solemn humbug. The question we would ask is, Are not the characters of the New Testament, including the central character, themselves works of fiction?

Lecturing in a Primitive Methodist chapel at Bolton, Mr. George Harwood, M.A., remarked that "Religion had done more to civilise, purify, and regenerate the world than anything else, but they must also say that it had caused more misery, more destruction, more bloodshed, isolations and separations than all the other causes." We dissent from the ffrst half of Mr. Harwood's remark, but we cordially endorse the second half.

Instances of clerical bigotry and intolerance towards Dissenters are continually cropping up. According to the Rev. John Luke, a Bible Christian minister, a member of his congregation, who had lost his father, desired him to be buried with his mother in the parish churchyard, and that the service should be conducted by Mr. Luke. Upon expressing this wish to the Rev. Franklin Tonkin, vicar of Madron, that worthy told the son that such a funeral was "an insult to Christ and his Church," and put every possible obstacle in the way of its being carried out as desired.

Another burial scandal has taken place at St. Erth, Cornwall, where the vicar—because the funeral party of a poor person which came a long distance was ten minutes late—went off in a huff, and the mourners were kept waiting in the churchyard for more than two hours, until a clergyman was brought from a distance of six or seven miles, who conducted the funeral rites by the light of the moon.

Hospitals invariably, and most properly, invite subscriptions from all sections of the community, yet it is by no means unusual to find that the nurses are chosen only from the Church of England. An advertisement of the Royal United Hospital, Bath, for a Lady Superintendent enumerates among other qualifications "member of the Church of England." A few years ago a hospital at York issued a similar advertisement, and the result was a local agitation and indignation meeting of subscribers.

The superintendent of the Christian Lads' Society, Finsbury Park, has been committed for trial on the charge mentioned in our last. The prisoner asked a lad who appeared as witness against him why he did not complain to Mr. Stone, saying, "You and I have always rested on his teaching of the Bible." Probably the sacred volume was the means used of debauching the minds of these Christian lads.

The result of the German election being that the Government requires the support of the Catholic party, it is said they will demand, as one of their conditions, that the Jesuits be permitted to return to Germany. To this, it is believed, the young Emperor will never accede.

Dr. Pigou, Dean of Chichester, preaching on Sunday in Rochester Cathedral, made some curious observations. He referred, for instance, to the telescope which enables us to see distant objects, and from which he derived "a fine argument for a future state, which he did not think an Atheist would attempt to falsify." Unfortunately Dr. Pigou did not work out the argument, and we are therefore unable to "falsify" it. Our intellect is not subtle enough to find the connexion between telescopes and immortality.

Dr. Pigou said he "remembered once speaking to a celebrated controversialist whom Bradlaugh would not meet." Name, please. We should like to see the controversialist whom "Bradlaugh" would not meet. It looks as though Hugh Price Hughesism were spreading.

At the New York congress of Presbyterians on the subject of the revision of the Westminster Confession of Faith, Dr. McIlvaine said: "I say here solemnly that if God is as he is here represented I will take refuge in materialism, and there is no other help for me." This statement made a sensation which was intensified by what he related subsequently. He said he knew of a young lady who had been taken to a lunatic asylum, being afflicted with religious mania. "Does she belong to the Presbyterian Church?" inquired the doctor. She did; and then the doctor said they had more patients laboring under that form of mental disease from the Presbyterian Church than from all the other churches put together.

Dr. McIlvaine may well be ashamed of the creed of which he is a sworn defender. But after all, the Westminster Confession of Faith, with its doctrines of election and reprobation, is founded on the Bible, and is the logical result of Theism. It is Paul who says we are as clay in the hands of a potter, and that God has mercy on whom he will have mercy. If there is an almighty omniscient God he must have foreseen and foreordained the fate of everyone who frizzles in the everlasting bonfire.

The Rock says of the Elsemerian Institute promoted by Mrs. Humphrey Ward, the Rev. Stopford Brooke and others—"This new anti-Christian sect is too like existing bodies to be dangerous." Religionists are not afraid of half and half measures that appeal only to the respectable and treat humbug with reverence. A West-end Hall of Science would stir them more than any amount of vague Christian Theism.

H. L. Hastings, the Yankee infidel-slayer, who is now wooing Fortune in England, seems to be completely pumped out. Every now and then we receive a fresh pamphlet from his pen, but although the title varies we always find on looking within that it is the good old "Is the Bible Inspired?" in a new cover. Then it goes into the waste-basket.

Professor Blackie says that the Atheists are "mostly crotchet-mongers." This is very much like painting his own portrait.

The Rev. James Brighton, rector of North Piddle, has been paying insufficient attention to the Sermon on the Mount. He lodged at the house of Mrs. Jane Newman, who had to sue him for the balance of rent, obtaining judgment for £6. Thereupon the reverend gentleman wrote a letter, describing her claim as unjust, and accusing her of perjury; and as this libel prevented Mrs. Newman from letting her rooms, she brought another action against him for slander, and obtained a verdict for £15 damages, with costs. Poor Parson Brighton! How are the godly persecuted!

Digitized by Google

D. M. Ross—whoever he may be—is writing a series of letters to a Scotch paper on "Life in Australia." He appears to have seen Joseph Symes on board a steamer. Who else, indeed, can be the "notorious infidel lecturer of Melbourne"? D. M. Ross seems to be a sky-pilot, and he very naturally chuckles over the fact that the infidel was treated with violence at Launceston. Just as naturally he refers to Joseph Symes's "propaganda of infidelity and dirt." What a beautiful thing Christian charity is, to be sure, especially when it gets a chance of displaying itself to "infidels." St. Paul said that charity "thinketh no evil." "Bah!" says the noble Ross. "charity, as I understand it, is best shown in blackguarding sceptics."

The Clericals in Austria, as in England, have attempted a reaction upon the education question. A Commission of High Churchmen was appointed to discuss the principles of instruction in national schools, and their protocol, signed by three archbishops, seeks to recall the condition of schools two hundred years ago. It demands the establishment of purely Catholic schools, so that Catholic children shall not be "contaminated" by intercourse with children of other confessions; the children must be taught by the principles of their faith alone; all teachers at Catholic schools must belong to the Catholic faith; the appointment of teachers must be ratified by the Church; the plans of instruction books and other materials for instruction must not contain a word that offends the Catholic faith; and finally, the schools must be placed under the control and supervision of the Catholic Church and its organs. This is what the clericals seek everywhere, but they are too wary in this country to ask for it all at once.

The vicar of Blackpool convened a meeting to establish a Branch of the Protestant League. He was told by Dr. Kingsbury that the Catholics were succeeding because he, the vicar, neglected his duty of visiting his parishioners.

The Baptists, too, at Blackpool, have been having a split, and their late minister, the Rev. Mr. Pilling, characterises those in his church as "treacherous sneaks" whom not so long ago he described as good angels. Christian charity soon flies to the winds in the event of a dispute.

Canon Liddon is down on the Lux Mundi volume. Mr. Gore, the head of Pusey House and the chief of the little band of writers in that volume, supposes that Deuteronomy is a republication of the law "put dramatically" into the mouth of Moses. But Canon Liddon declares that "such a representation is irreconcilable with the veracity of the book." Mr. Gore judiciously looks upon the books of Jonah and Daniel "as dramatic compositions." But Canon Liddon remarks that "our Lord Jesus Christ set the seal of his infallible sanction" on both those Hebrew romances. Thus the battle goes on, inside the Church now as well as outside; and Rationalists may expect the clergy to imitate the performance of the Kilkenny cats; only the last parson need not devour himself, for there will be a Freethinker ready to save him the trouble.

Canon Shuttleworth held forth the other evening at the National Liberal Club on the blessings of a State Church. He wishes to see the clergyman elected by the parishioners, and the only qualification should be that he is a Christian. This of course excludes all Freethinkers and Jews, but as the Christians are in the majority they are entitled to have their own way, and apparently to use the money of the minority to propagate what is hostile to their convictions. Such is Christian Socialism as understood by a prominent member of the Guild of St. Matthew.

Under the Canon's "democratic" scheme the clergy would be "a teaching body, holding up to men standards of truth and morality for the guidance of human life." What a pretty picture! But is a white-chokered gentleman elected by the parish, after a heated contest, likely to have any special standard of truth or any special guidance for his fellow mortals? Is not the scheme, at bottom, an ingenious little device for sharing the Church funds with Dissenters rather than losing them altogether?

Canon Shuttleworth seems to have no idea of the strength of other people's convictions. He starts the ridiculous theory that as the State runs a parcel post, it may as well run a religion. Surely this is confounding convenience and principle. The State may carry our parcels and letters, more or less efficiently, but it has no qualification for deciding the battle of ideas in religion and ethics. Besides, as Leopardi points out, while the majority is nearly always right in practical matters, it is nearly always wrong in matters of speculation.

Succi has started on his forty days' fast (why forty if not in emulation of J. C.?) at the Aquarium. He took in a good cargo of provender before commencing, not expecting any angels to minister unto him after the trial is over.

The Sultan has only given permission to the Palestine Exploration Fund to go on digging on the express condition that all objects found during the excavations shall be transmitted to the Imperial Museum at Constantinople. Should they discover the tomb of Moses or the cross of Jesus Christ himself, it will have to be handed over to Mohammedan keeping.

The article on "Benighted Ireland," from the pen of an Irish patriot, which we print in another column, throws light on a phase of the Irish question which is often overlooked. Unjust legislation is responsible for many of the woes of Ireland, but while the priest, whose interest lies in the ignorance of the people, is all-powerful, even just legislation will be unable to raise Ireland to the rank of nations where mental liberty prevails.

"The Evil Eye" was the subject of a paper read before the Scottish Antiquarian Society at Edinburgh by the Rev. Dr. Stewart. The reverend gentleman gave some interesting stories of this superstition, which still lurks in sequestered parts of Scotland. He does not appear to have added, however, that the evil eye is a part of witchcraft, and that witchcraft is taught as an actuality in the Bible.

Mr. Labouchere paid the Almighty a strange compliment in addressing an Irish audience on St. Patrick's Day in the Birmingham Town Hall. Dealing with the Tory friends of the late lamented Pigott, the senior member for Northampton said he would not be too hard upon them, for they were no doubt as God had made them, selfish, callous and unscrupulous. This is rather rough on God.

Truths to Live by is the title of Archdeacon Farrar's new book. Substitute "doctrines" for "truths," and the volume need comprise no more than the Thirty-Nine Articles. And instead of "Finis" the volume might end with the text (Revised Version)—"For the man of God doth not live by bread alone, but by every yellow-boy that cometh out of the pocket of John Bull."

In 1836 Essex made a bargain to pay a tithe rent charge of £250,278, to have in return the monopoly of the corn trade of the district. By the abolition of the Corn Laws Essex lost this monopoly, but still has to pay the same tithe, which exceeds even that of Yorkshire.

Lord Bramwell, dealing in the Nineteenth Century with the familiar assertion of Henry George that God made the land for all, asks the pertinent question, "Are the landlords too much for Him?"

GROWTH OF CATHOLICISM IN ENGLAND.

The following figures illustrate Mr. Wheeler's recent article on this subject:

	1845.	1851.	1870.	1890.
Priests	776	958	1727	2811
Churches.....	622	683	1354	1651
Nunneries	8	17	69	231
Religious Houses...	34	53	233	447
Colleges	2	12	20	35

The total number of Catholics in England and Wales is close on 1,500,000.

Digitized by Google

MR. FOOTE'S ENGAGEMENTS.

Sunday, March 23, Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, London, at 7, "Good without God."

March 30, Hall of Science, London.

April 6, Milton Hall; 9, Shelley Society 13, Portsmouth; 20, Hall of Science; 27, Hall of Science, London.

May 4, Newcastle; 11, South Shields; 18, Hall of Science, London; 25, N. S. S. Conference.

June 1, Hall of Science London; 8, Gladstone Radical Club and Hall of Science, London.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

LITERARY communications to be addressed to the Editor, 14 Clerkenwell Green, London, E.C. All business communications to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C.

THE Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the office, post free to any part of Europe, America, Canada and Egypt, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 6s. 6d.; Half Year, 3s. 3d.; Three Months, 1s. 7½d. Australia, China and Africa:—One Year, 8s. 8d.; Half Year, 4s. 4d; Three Months, 2s. 2d. India:—One Year, 10s. 10d.; Half Year, 5s. 5d. Three Months, 2s. 8½d.

SCALE OF ADVERTISEMENTS.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 3s; Half Column, 15s.; Column, £1 10s. Special terms for repetitions

IT being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will in future receive the number when their subscription expires in a colored wrapper.

A HEARER.—You should bear a little with the infirmity of our Christian opponents. No doubt the speaker wandered a good deal from the point, but he spoke courteously, and it was best to let him use the time in his own way.

H. J. RICHARDSON.—We can quite understand why the Rev. J. J. Goundrig does not mean to "debate with the infidel." He finds discretion the better part of valor, and makes a virtue of necessity.

S. S.—We dealt with the Rev. Sutton Patterson's circular a fortnight ago. Glad to hear you sent him a copy of our letter to the Archbishop. Thanks for the enclosure. Mr. Foote intends to take a brief holiday as soon as he has cleared off his arrears of work.

J. F. HAMPSON.—Cuttings received with thanks.

E. ANDERSON.—See "Sugar Plums." Thanks for your good wishes.

L. C.—Thanks. See "Acid Drops."

L. STANLEY.—Cuttings are always welcome

W. H. TAYLOR.—We are obliged for your report as to the results of leaving the Freethinker in public places. Evidently a great deal of good is done in this way.

J. NEATE.—Mr. Foote acknowledges the "hearty congratulations" of the Bethnal Green Branch.

H. BROOKSBANK, 40 Drewton Street, Bradford, will be glad to hear from any persons wishing to join the National Secular Society in that town.

T. BIRTLEY.—Pleased to hear you think the Freethinker is improving every week. There is a lot of work put into it anyhow. Our compliments and thanks to the Branch.

FREISINNIGER.—The reverend gentleman blows his own trumpet very lustily, but we don't feel inclined to procure him an audience. Shall be glad to receive the document you refer to.

G. DICKINSON.—Always glad of cuttings.

R. FENN, 109 Commercial Road, E., would like to meet or correspond with a Freethinker who understands plain sugar boiling.

BUDDHIST PROPAGATION SOCIETY.—We cannot see our way to insert your meetings in our Guide.

A. HUBBARD.—Thanks for the cuttings. Our circulation is slowly but surely improving.

HARRY BENSON.—You take no "liberty" in writing to us. We are always pleased to be able to assist our readers in their studies. Glad to hear you have found Darwin on God so useful. Darwin's Origin of Species and Descent of Man are 7s. 6d. We cannot say where you could get second-hand copies of the works of Mr. Bradlaugh and Mrs. Besant. You would find Reade's Martyrdom of Man very interesting and serviceable.

JOHN CHICK sends us 7s. 6d. for the "Freethinker" Circulation Fund; 7s. 6d. for the Benevolent Fund; 3s. for the Swedish Prisoner Fund; and 3s. for the John Dell Fund.

PAPERS RECEIVED.—Lucifer—Open Court—Bulletin des Sommaires—Secular Thought—Cornish Telegraph—Freethought—Islington Gazette Neues Freireligioses Sonntags Blatt—Boston Investigator—Newsagent—Lambert's Monthly—South American Journal—Freidenker—Progressive Thinker—Evening Standard—Echo—Rochester and Chatham Journal—Argonant—Sheldrake's Aldershot and Sandhurst Military Gazette—Fritankaren—Ironclad Age—Freedom—Blackpool Herald—Liberator—La Verité—La Lanterne—L'Estafette.

FRIENDS who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish our attention directed.

CORRESPONDENCE should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

SUGAR PLUMS.

MR. FOOTE lectures at the London Hall of Science this evening (March 23) on a new subject, "Good without God."

THE South Wales Daily News gave a brief report of Mr. Foote's lectures at Cardiff on Sunday. The morning audience was excellent, and promised well for the day, but the rain poured down spitefully after dinner and interfered with the success of the other two meetings. Those who did brave the weather were very enthusiastic. Freethought is being reorganised in Cardiff, and the movement is fortunate in possessing some active new blood. Mr. F. Morris is a very capable secretary. We look for good things from Cardiff.

THE concluding lecture of the free course at the London Hall of Science was delivered by Mr. Foote to a magnificent audience. Opposition was offered in two speeches by the Rev. C. L. Engstrom, secretary to the Christian Evidence Society. The meeting broke up soon after ten o'clock, but groups remained for sometime discussing. There can be no doubt as to the success of the experiment, and it is gratifying to know that the sale of a few reserved seat tickets and the box collections have nearly covered the expenses.

AT a Council meeting on Friday, March 14, the London Secular Federation decided to have a course of free lectures with discussión at Camberwell on Fridays, April 11, 18, 25 and May 2; also another course at Milton Hall on Tuesdays, April 15, 22, 29 and May 6. It was likewise resolved to have a course of free lectures in the East-end of London. Metropolitan Freethinkers with a little cash to spare might send a subscription in aid of this good work.

STIMULATED by the examples of the L.S.F., the Christian Evidence Society hurriedly arranged for two Thursday evening free lectures at the Hall of Science, the dates being March 20 and 27. Just as hurriedly, of course, the L.S.F., was invited to send representatives to oppose. Arrangements were made at the Council meeting for Mr. J. M. Robertson to oppose Mr. Engstrom on March 20 and Mr. A. B. Moss on March 27.

A PUBLIC debate will take place at the London Hall of Science on Thursday, April 3. The disputants are to be Mr. Robertson and the Rev. J. Tinling. The subject is a curious one at this time a day—"Did Moses write the Pentateuch?"

MR. T. BIRTLEY, of Chester-le-Street, writes as follows:—"I was the first to get the Freethinker here. The other night when I inquired of my newsagent I found that he now sells twenty copies weekly. There are other newsagents in the town and district who sell a good quantity. Our Branch posts the weekly contents-sheet in prominent places." This is excellent news, and we should like to hear a similar report from scores of other places. A little judicious pushing on the part of our friends would greatly increase our circulation.

"MR. WHEELER deserves the thanks and support of every Freethinker and Secularist for undertaking the heavy task involved in the production of this volume. When we find orthodox champions of to-day attempting to steal the name of such a man as Darwin as a believer in revelation, it shows how easy it may be for them to confound their opponents with the great names of a generation or two ago, about whom comparatively little is generally known. Mr. Wheeler's work places it in the power of Liberals to answer most of the claims of this sort. The work is the most valuable contribution to Freethought literature of recent years. It is not a mere dry list of names and dates, but contains sufficent facts to substantiate the right to place all the names inserted in the book in the ranks of the Freethought army. Every Freethinker should possess this work."—Secular Thought.

Digitized by Google

The West Ham Branch inaugurates a new departure this morning (March 23) in the shape of a Children's Service. Secular Hymns will be sung, and Mr. G. Cave-Hill will address the children on "Little Things," which he will illustrate with the microscope. We wish the experiment success, and we shall watch the result with interest.

The Hull Branch had a very successful social gathering on Wednesday, March 12. The proceedings included a tea, concert, and ball, with speeches by Mr. S. Thompson and Mr. N. B. Billany. All who took part in the concert were Secularists, and the financial result was highly gratifying. The Hull Branch will repeat the experiment at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Foote and Mr. Forder intend to visit Bristol shortly to establish a Branch of the National Secular Society. Meanwhile Mr. Forder will be glad to hear from any friends in the city who are willing to carry out the local arrangements for a meeting of Freethinkers.

The Newcastle Branch has done good work in starting and promoting the Sunday Music League. The question of Sunday music in the Public Parks is now being made a test for the approaching elections in three of the wards. The League is issuing addresses to the electors, interviewing candidates, pushing the interests of those who are considered sound, and strenuously opposing the return of the other candidates.

The Plymouth, Devonport and Stonehouse Branch of the N. S. S. held a largely attended meeting of members on Sunday evening. It was decided to rent and furnish two large rooms at 100 Union Street. The sum of £4 6s. was collected on the spot, and the members resolved to raise the necessary balance as quickly as possible. The rooms will be used for club purposes as well as for meetings.

Lippincott's Magazine contains a chatty article on the salons of New York, and enumerates certain well-known entertainers of the metropolis who are famous for their success in attracting the intellectual element—now rapidly growing to large dimensions—to their receptions. Among the number the writer includes Colonel Ingersoll. He says: "Many people, too, can testify to the attractiveness of the Sunday evening receptions of Robert Ingersoll, whether it be due to the genial magnetism of the host or to the grace and—one must say it—the beauty of his daughters." The writer also gives a favorable notice of the work of the "Nineteenth Century Club," describing it as "enterprising, aggressive and cosmopolitan."

Colonel Ingersoll denies that he is out with President Harrison. "No; oh, no!" he explains. "I am about like the woman at the revival meeting. She sat there, prim and demure, with her little handkerchief folded up and laying in her lap, when some one came up to her and said: 'Sister, do you love Jesus?' She straightened up a little, and after a minute replied: 'Well, that's a strong expression to use, but I can say this—I've nothing ag'in him."

We are glad to see that a fund of three thousand dollars is being raised to recoup Mr. J. D. Shaw for his loss by the burning of Liberal Hall at Waco, Texas, and to enable him to continue his Freethought monthly, the Independent Pulpit. Mr. Shaw, a converted minister, has been a good worker, and his Pulpit is an excellent magazine, well deserving of support.

Mrs. E. D. Slenker, who has long conducted the Children's Corner of the Truthseeker, is now also editing a new paper called the Plaindealer, of Hastings, Michigan.

The Grand Orient of Italian Freemasons, presided over by the Grand Master, Adriano Lemmi, has determined to raise a sum of twenty thousand lire to erect a monument to Mazzini at Rome. The Tablet sneeringly says it is fitting that the arch-rebel of modern Italy should go beside the arch-heretic of the Renaissance, Bruno. Catholics evidently do not relish the proposed further "desecration" of the Holy City.

A conference for the organisation of the French Freethought Federation will be held at Paris on April 20.

Despite the counterblast of the Archbishop of Paris and the sentimental objections of M. Réman, cremation is making progress in France. Altogether 735 bodies were cremated at Père la Chaise up to the end of last year. The Cremation Society includes men like Victor Schoelcher, Yves Guyot and Dr. Chassaizu, and these proposed to establish crematories in all the large provincial towns of France.

The Svea Salen, one of the finest halls in Stockholm, was filled on Sunday March 9th, by a gathering of over 1,500 persons who attended to protest against the imprisonment of Mr. V. E. Lennstrand, and to vindicate the right of free speech and free assembly attacked in his person and that of the Socialist leaders in Sweden. The meeting was addressed by Dr. Nils Holst, an eminent geologist, by Dr. Anton Nystrom, author of an able History of Civilisation, and by our good friend Captain Thomson, whose warm attack on the bigots was well received. Many petitions asking for Mr. Lennstrand's release are being forwarded to the King of Sweden. Is that Monarch so under the clericals that he is indifferent to the opinion of civilised Europe and to the most enlightened of his own countrymen?

Fritankaren is now excellently printed, and is a credit to the Freethinkers of Sweden. No. 6 which lies before us gives a report of the election of Mr. Foote to the presidency of the N.S.S., and also notices of Mr. Wheeler's Biographical Dictionary, which it describes as a most valuable work.

The Republic of Brazil has not only decreed the separation of Church and State, but has ordered that civil marriage shall in every case precede or succeed the religious ceremony, which is left optional.

The Transvaal Daily News, which is sent to us from Johannesberg by Mr. E. B. Rose, shows there is considerable freethought in South Africa. One of its own leaders is entitled "The Sky Pilot Again," and its remarks on that "critter" are pretty severe.

Over a thousand dollars have been already raised for a memorial to Horace Seaver, and it is now proposed that, in addition to a granite monument to be placed over his grave, there shall be a Horace Seaver fund for the support of free lectures in the Paine Memorial Hall, Boston.

The good old Boston Investigator, founded by Abner Kneeland and edited for so many years by Horace Seaver, enters upon its sixtieth volume. Under the conduct of Mr. L. K. Washburn, it upholds the cause of Universal Mental Liberty in the same strenuous fashion it has done for so many years.

Freedom publishes a portrait of its editor. It is not well printed, but it serves to show that Mr. Collins has not lost his good looks. The same number of Freedom contains a full report of the laying of the foundation stone of the new Secular Hall at Sydney. There was a very large gathering, and Mr. Collins received an ovation. Mr. Symes was over from Melbourne to assist at the ceremony, and met with a most enthusiastic reception. Amongst the other speakers was Mr. Llorando Jones, the last prisoner for blasphemy in the southern hemisphere.

Dr. Carson, the leader of the Liverpool Positivists, who died recently, was buried by Dr. Congreve with the rites of the Church of humanity. Every non-Christian funeral is an eye-opener to the orthodox.

Mr. Bradlaugh is active with his pen. He has lately contributed political articles to some of the magazines, and an article of his appeared in the last number of the Speaker on "Judgments of the House of Commons."

AN EASY TIME OF IT.

"It seems to me," observed Jo Cose, "that the recording angel must have a pretty easy time of it now-a-days."

"Why so?" asked his wife.

"Simply because if a man does anything good or bad it gets into the newspapers."

"Well, what of that?"

"Why, all the angel has to do is to go over his exchanges with a pair of shears."

Digitized by Google

BENIGHTED IRELAND.

In the world of Freethought, as in the world of politics, Ireland "blocks the way" to the utmost limit of her ability. Freethought has invaded every civilised land; but in Celtic Ireland militant Freethought can scarcely be said to have an existence. It is the invariable boast of clergymen of all denominations that infidelity has never made its appearance in their happy hunting ground of disunited and benighted Ireland. The absence of infidelity has left our numerous clerics ample time for abusing each other, and full opportunity for hating each other without interruption, in the name of Christ. The common people, equally with their self-elected "spiritual directors." think that the absence of anything like Atheism is the greatest of blessings, while only the very few think that this so-called blessing is in reality a curse, and these few have hitherto been either unwilling or afraid to openly declare their beliefs, or rather disbeliefs.

The Irishman, educated or ignorant, is a willing mental slave. Paradoxical as it may seem, he is passionately fond of political freedom, while he detests religious freedom, and actually loves his mental slavery. Impulsive and unreasoning, he blindly adheres to the faith of his ancestors, and looks upon it as the greatest of disgraces to depart from it. Argument and reason do not sway him as they do the children of other countries. His poetic Celtic spirit delights in the marvellous and the miraculous, and distorts the most degrading superstitions into the highest forms of truth. The descendant of a race which practised the art of god-making in olden times, and which turned its dead chiefs into deities, by the process of evolution the Irishman's mind has become hopelessly clouded, and from the religious point of view no absurdity and no superstition is too much for him. He wallows in religious ignorance, and, like a pig wallowing in the mire, he delights in it. Old institutions die hard in Ireland—superstition will live there when it has disappeared for ever from every civilised land.

To this mental slavery the misery and the poverty of Ireland can be traced. History and experience tells us so much, at any rate, and teach us that Colonel Ingersoll spoke the truth when he attributed Irish wretchedness to the influence of the priests. For seven hundred years Ireland has been a scene of bickering, of war, and of bloodshed. Her sons have waded knee-deep in blood, all for the sake of the Lord! The steadfast faithfulness and obstinacy of the Irish—for which even as a Freethinker I cannot help having a slight feeling of admiration—kept persecution alive long after it had died out in England. Both sides in the struggle were fanatics; but the manliness and the steadfastness was unquestionably on the side of the Celt. But when persecution died out from pure shame, Ireland found herself so deeply sunk in the mire of religious slavery that the task of throwing off the shackles was hopeless. The priests who supported the people through the struggle in the name of "liberty of conscience," labored for "liberty of conscience" from the tyranny of everybody but their own.

When persecution died the priests were no longer the ardent patriots they were previously. They got what they wanted—liberty to tyrannise over their dupes without interference. That was a liberty they have upheld these hundred years, jealously and successfully. They have practised a milk-and-water patriotism, which has saved them from the reproach of being enemies to their fatherland, and at the same time hindered the people from breaking loose from their control and influence. At the time of the Union they deliberately sold their country to England for a promise of fuller emancipation than they then enjoyed. The significance of this fact has never been insisted on strongly enough. After the Union, when the revolutionary spirit was abroad in Ireland, and when there were fair enough chances of ameliorating the unhappy lot of the country by a fair, stand-up fight, the priests succeeded in killing the manly spirit that had taken possession of the people's hearts. They feared to allow the people to do anything without themselves, knowing very well that if it was seen that things could be done without priestly aid, the day of their tyranny would soon be over. In 1848, when the people had done enough of dying on their hill-sides, in fighting against the power that produced starvation—landlord ascendancy—the priests told them that any of them who shot down soldiers in the projected insurrection would go straight to hell if they fell in the struggle! The poor hungry wretches believed this, and as John Mitchell put it, they went home "to save their paltry old souls" and left the rebel leaders to their fate. In Fenian times the very same thing happened. Every Fenian was excommunicated and promised a very warm place hereafter for daring to love his country better than his priest.

At this day Ireland is as priest-ridden as ever it was. Nobody dares do anything that the priests oppose. The man who opposes the clergy is held up to execration, and ruin awaits him in business. Not long ago I was on a visit to a city in the south of Ireland. I observed a magnificent hotel lying idle, and inquiring the cause, I was informed that the hotel-proprietor was compelled to leave the town for allowing her Catholic daughter to marry a Protestant! The hotel was a favorite resort of Catholics, lay and clerical; and when the Bishop denounced the "mixed marriage" the place was boycotted.

Over three-fourths of Ireland the priest is all-powerful. He can do just as he pleases. His support of all persons seeking office—such as Parliamentary candidates, and candidates for municipal and poor law offices—means success, while his opposition means defeat. To people unaccustomed to priestly tyranny this may seem strange; but it is a very stern fact. People dare not oppose the priest. The man who does is looked upon by ninety-nine out of every hundred Catholics to be a scoundrel and a criminal. Nor is this strange when we know how the priests are regarded by the people. All Catholics must believe that priests have supernatural power, and they do believe it implicitly. I know plenty of Catholics in the country who believe that priests have power to kill their cattle or to destroy their crops, and with this fear before them they would not dream of opposing the "clergy." The priests, by hints and vague threats, endeavor to make the people understand that they possess supernatural power. I know of a bishop who announced from the pulpit that "he shook the dust off his feet" at a local paper, which said some plain things, politically, about him. The people thought that this meant something awful, and ceased buying the contumacious rag. I could fill the Freethinker with somewhat similar instances of which I have personal experience.

In the eyes of an Irish Catholic a priest is divinely inspired and infallible. The peasant boy who leaves the plough, ceases making love to his neighbour's daughter, and goes to college, becomes at once a man of great importance, and when he has a few words mumbled over him. and is sprinkled with a mixture of salt and water in the ceremony called "Ordination," he is henceforth an "Inspired" being with a license to lord it over every man and woman who is a Catholic. He sees nothing wrong in acting as slave-master over the minds of his flock, for he himself is a mental slave to the powers of Rome. This does not so much matter, however, while it pays so well to be a "devil dodger." Ireland may be poor, but the priest never knows what want is. During his "holy mission" he lives like a prince, he amasses a fortune, he portions his sisters, his cousins and aunts, he has shares in joint-stock companies, and he dies leaving behind him many legacies to pay for prayers for his soul, even though that soul was supposed to be "inspired"! To give him his due, however, he rarely does anything more scandalous than to get drunk. As to his living he has "gospel authority" to justify his sponging on the toil of others, and it is taught by Rome that it is a "mortal sin" to refuse paying him his "dues."

When I say that Irishmen are mental slaves and the dupes of superstition, and of money grabbing priests, I say nothing that is not perfectly true. I do not say so for the purpose of reviling my countrymen, for I love my country, and some of those mental slaves are my dearest friends, though many of them may have less tolerance for my Atheism than I have for their superstition. I cannot despise them for their benighted condition; but I pity them from the bottom of my heart, and wish for nothing more strongly than to see them emancipated. For the poor slaves I have nothing but compassion while I despise and abhor the surpliced impostors who have managed to keep the country in ignorance and poverty, while the world has been progressing. They preach the utility of poverty, and live in luxury and ease. They preach charity and forgiveness and practise them only when it suits them? They preach equality, and are themselves more implacable tyrants than Russian despots. In short, they pose as ministers of light, while they are in reality messengers of darkness and living obstacles to their unfortunate country's freedom and progress.

J. O'Donovan.

Digitized by Google

THE PARSON AND THE ASS:

Or, the Donkey that Praised the Lord.

Time: a sultry
Sabbath noon;
All creation
Seems to swoon.

Scene: a country
House of prayer;
All good people
Gathered there.

Parson preaching,
Doors flung wide—
Man and donkey
Just outside.

Coster stretched on Load of greens,
Donkey munching
Heap of beans.

Parson's subject:
Balaam's ass,
And the angels
In the pass.

Coster listens,
So does moke;
Plainly heard is
Each word spoke.

Says the parson,
"O, my friends,
Humblest vessels
Serve God's ends.

"Even an ass can Praise the Lord."
All assent with
Sweet accord.

"Once an ass an Angel saw."
Coster's donkey
Says "Hee-haw."

"And at once her
Lord she knew.
Oh, that we were
Asses too!"

Coster whistles—
"Think we'll hook";
Sentimental's
Donkey's look.

"Oh that we had Asses' eyes,"
In his fervor
Parson cries.

"Asses' eyes and Asses' ears";
Moke outside his
Tail uprears.

Waxing warmer,
Parson bawls,
"Be we asses!"—
Moke hee-haws.

Wildly parson's
Accents ring,
As he shouteth
"Let us sing."

Meeting rises,
Organ peals,
Coster's donkey
Kicks up heels.

Shouts the parson,
"Happy day.
Now, dear brethren —"
Moke does bray.

Parson gasps and Stands aghast;
Voice is heard to Say, "Avast!"

Congregation
Shakes with dread;
Hoarse voice roareth,
"Gee woa, Ned."

Alfred Lovett.

TRADITIONS OF PALESTINE.

These gifted Latin monks never do anything by halves. If they were to show you the Brazen Serpent that was elevated in the wilderness, you could depend upon it that they had on hand the pole it was elevated on also, and even the hole it stood in. They have got the "Grotto" of the Annunciation here; and just as convenient to it as one's throat is to his mouth, they have also the Virgin's kitchen, and even her sitting-room, where she and Joseph watched the infant Savior play with Hebrew toys eighteen hundred years ago. All under one roof, and all clean, spacious, comfortable "grottoes." It seems curious that personages intimately connected with the Holy Family always lived in grottoes—in Nazareth, in Bethlehem, in imperial Ephesus—and yet nobody else in their day and generation thought of doing anything of the kind. If they ever did, their grottoes are all gone, and I suppose we ought to wonder at the peculiar marvel of the preservation of these I speak of. When the Virgin fled from Herod's wrath she hid in a grotto in Bethlehem, and the same is there to this day. The slaughter of the innocents in Bethlehem was done in a grotto; the Savior was born in a grotto—both are shown to pilgrims yet. It is exceedingly strange that these tremendous events all happened in grottoes—and exceedingly fortunate, likewise, because the strongest houses must crumble to ruin in time, but a grotto in the living rock will last for ever. It is an imposture—this grotto stuff—but it is one that all men ought to thank the Catholics for. Wherever they ferret out a lost locality made holy by some Scriptural event, they straightway build a massive—almost imperishable—Church there, and preserve the memory of that locality for the gratification of future generations. If it had been left to Protestants to do this most worthy work, we would not even know where Jerusalem is to-day, and the man who could go and put his finger on Nazareth would be wise for this world. The world owes the Catholics its goodwill even for the happy rascality of hewing out these bogus grottoes in the rock; for it is infinitely more satisfactory to look at a grotto, where people have faithfully believed for centuries that the Virgin once lived, than to have to imagine a dwelling-place for her somewhere, anywhere, nowhere, loose and at large all over this town of Nazareth. There is too large a scope of country. The imagination cannot work. There is no one particular spot to chain your eye, rivet your interest, and make you think. The memory of the Pilgrims cannot perish while Plymouth Rock remains to us. The old monks are wise. They know how to drive a stake through a pleasant tradition that will hold it to its place for ever.

Mark Twain's "New Pilgrim's Progress."

WILL THE HEATHEN BE SAVED?

Evidently not if we take the words of Scripture. He that believeth not shall be damned. For there is none other name under heaven whereby we must be saved. Christians are slowly becoming too humane to hold this view of the perdition of the heathen, which was held by all Christians in the palmy days of Christianity, and as a consequence missionary fervor is dying. The Rev. Principal Simon preaching at Edinburgh declared that interest in foreign missions was no longer what it should be. It was spoilt by the modern views of "the larger hope." Within the memory of most of them it was customary, almost imperative, for those who advocated missions to lay emphasis on the eternal ruin, the quenchless fires, towards which the heathen were passing every day. Nowadays it was becoming the opinion that all men would ultimately be saved. Principal Simon deprecated the effect this view has on missions. But if the heathen can be saved without Christianity why should it be sent to them at great trouble and expense? This is only giving them a better chance of damnation by rejecting the Blessed Gospel. For they do reject it.

PROUD OF HIS WIFE'S PIETY.

I have a friend who doesn't go to church himself, but sends his wife regularly. I dined with him last Sunday, and he took advantage of the circumstances to display her devotional tendencies before company.

"What was the text, Sue?" he asked.

"Oh, something somewhere in Generations; I've forgotten the chapter and verse. Mrs. Hughes sat right in front of me, wearing the worst looking bonnet I ever saw on a woman's head."

"How did you like the new minister?"

"Oh, he was simply superb! And Kate Selwin was there in a sealskin that never cost a cent less than 100 dols."

"Did he say anything about the new mission fund?"

"No; and the Jones girls were rigged out in their old silks made over. You would have died laughing to have seen them."

"It seems to me you didn't hear much of the sermon"

"The fact is, George, the new minister has a lovely voice; it almost put me to sleep.

A long silence followed, during which George absently helped me to pickles and mustard, while his wife sat looking as demure as a saint at a circus. Suddenly she exclaimed:

"There! I knew I'd forgot to tell you something! The fringe on Mrs. Brown's cape is an inch deeper than mine, and twice as heavy!"

My friend changed the conversation to the last new novel.

Infidel: "Well, what did you have for dinner Christmas?" Baptist: "I had a cold duck."

"Papa, how old was Methuselah when he died?"
"Nine hundred sixty-nine years, Rollo."
"And what was his business?"
"Boy preacher."

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY MEETINGS.

LONDON.

Ball's Pond Secular Hall, 86 Newington Green Road, N., 7 Mrs. Thornton Smith, "And yet it Moves."

Battersea—The Shed of Truth, Prince of Wales's Road, 11.15, Mr. Heaford, "Intellectual Difficulties of Christianity"; 5.30, Tea and Soiree.

Bethnal Green—2 Railway Place, Cambridge Road (temporary premises), 3.15, adjourned members' meeting.

Camberwell—61 New Church Road, S.E., 7.30, Mr. T. Parris, "How I Became a Freethinker."

Claremont Hall, Penton Street, Pentonville Road, N., at 7, Mr. J. M. Robertson, "The Gospel Myths."

Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, E.C., 7, Mr. G. W. Foote, "Good Without God."

Hyde Park, near Marble Arch; 11.15, Mr. E. Calvert, "History of the New Testament Canon."

Milton Hall, Kentish Town Road, N.W., 7.30, Mr. A. B. Moss, "The Shams and Delusions of Theology."

New Southgate, Betstyle Bridge, 11, Mr. S. Standring, "What was the Use of Christ's Coming?"

Old Southgate—Opposite Cherry Tree, 7, Sam Standring, "Satan, God and Man's Best Friend."

West Ham—121 Broadway, Plaistow, 11.30, children's service, address by Mr. G. Cave-Hill on "Little Things"; 7, Mr. P. Coppock, A.N.U.C., "Evolution in the Domain of Chemistry."

Westminster—Liberal and Radical Club, Chapter Street, 7, Mr. F. Haslam, "Miracles of the Bible: Are they True?"

Wood Green—Jolly Butchers' Hill, 11, Socialist speakers.

Woolwich—"Sussex Arms," Assembly Room, 60 Plumstead Road (entrance, Masey Road), 7.30, Mr. Toleman-Garner, "God's Word."

COUNTRY.

Birmingham—Baskerville Hall, Crescent, 7, Mr. H. Mutch, "Nature and the Idea of God."

Glasgow Secular Society and Branch of N. S. S, 122 Ingram Street.—6.30, Mr. William Cassels, "Free Trade."

Huddersfield — Littlewood's Buildings, Upperhead Row, 6.30, special meeting; members' subscriptions are now due.

Liverpool Branch N.S.S., Camden Hall, Camden Street—at 3, discussion class; 7, Mr. W. A Newcomb, "Imperial Federation."

Heckmondwike—at Mr. John Rothera's, Bottoms, 2.30, a meeting.

Hull Branch—No. 2 Room, Friendly Societies' Hall, Albion Street, Mr. G. Vickers, "The Bible and its Authors."

Manchester—Rusholme Road, Oxford Road, 3, annual meeting of members; 6.30, Mr. Joseph Spencer (of Rochdale), Selection of Humorous and Dramatic Recitals. Free.

Newcastle-on-Tyne — 4 Hall's Court, Newgate Street, 11.30, meeting of Sunday Music League; 7.30, monthly business meeting of members.

Nottingham—Secular Hall, Beck Street, Mr. Frederick Millar, 11, "Individualism and Property"; 7, "The Politics of Individualism."

Sheffield—Hall of Science, Rockingham Street, at 3, Mr. Robert Law, F.G.S., "The Birth and Death of Worlds"; 7, "How the Rocks which Contain Coal were Formed."

South Shields—Captain Duncan's Navigation Schools, King Street; at 7, business meeting.

LECTURERS' ENGAGEMENTS.

Arthur B. Moss, 44 Credon Road, London, S.E.—March 23, Milton Hall; 30, Woolwich. April 6 (morning), Kingsland Green (evening), Ball's Pond; 18, (morning) Pimlico (evening) Camberwell. May 18 (morning), Clerkenwell Green, (evening), Ball's Pond; 25, (afternoon) Regent's Park. June 1 (morning), Pimlico; 15, Ball's Pond; 29, Mile End. July 13, Mile End.

Toleman-Garner, 8 Heyworth Road, Stratford, London, E.—March 23, Woolwich; 30, Westminster. May 4 (morning), Mile End Waste; 11, Clerkenwell Green; 18 (afternoon), Regent's Park; 25 (morning), Hyde Park. June 1 (morning), Mile End Waste; 8 (morning), Clerkenwell Green.

James Hooper, 11 Upper Eldon Street, Sneinton, Nottingham.—April 13, Nottingham.

T. Thurlow, 7 Dickson's Villas, Rutland Road, East Ham.—April 13 (evening), Plaistow; 27, Hyde Park.

H. Smith, 3 Breck Place, Breck Road, Everton Road, Liverpool.—April 6, Liverpool; 13, Manchester. May 4, Birmingham.

PROGRESSIVE PUBLISHING CO.'S LIST.

All orders to be sent, with remittance, to R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C. Rate of postage—Orders under 3d., one halfpenny; orders under 6d. one penny. Orders over 6d. post free.

G. W. FOOTE.

	s.	d.
PRISONER FOR BLASPHEMY. Cloth ... ... A Full History of his Three Trials and Twelve Months' Imprisonment. Copies in paper covers, soiled, 6d.	2	6
IS SOCIALISM SOUND? ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant.	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
CHRISTIANITY AND SECULARISM ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. In paper covers.	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth	1	6
INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS ... ... Second edition, enlarged.	0	3
Superior edition, in cloth	1	3
DARWIN ON GOD	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth ... ... Contents:—Darwin's Grandfather—Darwin's Father—Darwin's Early Piety—Almost a Clergyman—On Board the "Beagle"—Settling at Down—Death and Burial—Purpose of Pamphlet—Some Objections—Darwin Abandons Christianity—Deism—Creation—Origin of Life—Origin of Man—Animism—A Personal God—Design—Divine Beneficence—Religion and Morality—Agnosticism and Atheism.	1	0
DEFENCE OF FREE SPEECH ... ... Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes.	0	4
LETTERS TO JESUS CHRIST	0	4
PHILOSOPHY OF SECULARISM	0	3
THE BIBLE GOD	0	2
THE FOLLY OF PRAYER	0	2
CHRISTIANITY AND PROGRESS ... ... A Reply to Mr. Gladstone.	0	2
WHAT WAS CHRIST? ... ... A Reply to J. S. Mill.	0	2
THE DYING ATHEIST. A Story	0	1
WAS JESUS INSANE? ... ... A searching inquiry into the mental condition of the Prophet of Nazareth.	0	1
THE SHADOW OF THE SWORD ... ... A moral and statistical Essay on War.	0	2
ROYAL PAUPERS ... ... Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty.	0	2
BIBLE HEROES—First Series, in elegant wrapper ... (1) Mr. Adam, (2) Captain Noah, (3) Father Abraham, (4) Juggling Jacob, (5) Master Joseph, (6) Joseph's Brethren, (7) Holy Moses I., (8) Holy Moses II., (9) Parson Aaron, (10) General Joshua, (11) Jephthah and Co., (12) Professor Samson. One Penny each singly.	1	0
BIBLE HEROES—Second Series, in elegant wrapper... (13) Prophet Samuel, (14) King Saul, (15) Saint David I., (16) Saint David II., (17) Sultan Solomon, (18) Poor Job, (19) Hairy Elijah, (20) Bald Elisha, (21) General Jehu, (22) Doctor Daniel, (23) The Prophets (Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Hosea); (24) St. Peter, (25) St. Paul	1	0
MRS. BESANT'S THEOSOPHY ... ... A Candid Criticism.	0	2
THEOSOPHY AND SECULARISM.. ... ... A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant.	0	2
THE NEW CAGLIOSTRO ... ... An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky.	0	2

COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

MISTAKES OF MOSES	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth ... ... Only Complete Edition published in England	1	6
DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT ... ... Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy.	0	6
REPLY TO GLADSTONE ... ... With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler.	0	4
ROME OR REASON? Reply to Cardinal Manning	0	4
FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Rev. Dr. Field ...	0	2
GOD AND MAN. Second Reply to Dr. Field	0	2
THE DYING CREED	0	2
THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH	0	2
THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION ... ... A Discussion with Hon. F. D. Courdert and Gov. S. L. Woodford.	0	2
ART AND MORALITY	0	2
DO I BLASPHEME?	0	2
THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE	0	2
THE GREAT MISTAKE	0	1
LIVE TOPICS		1
MYTH AND MIRACLE	0	1
REAL BLASPHEMY	0	1
SOCIAL SALVATION	0	2

G. W. FOOTE and J. M. WHEELER.

CRIMES OF CHRISTIANITY. Vol. I. Cloth ... Hundred of exact References to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.	2	6
THE JEWISH LIFE OF CHRIST ... ... With voluminous footnotes. An extraordinary work.	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0

G. W. FOOTE and W. P. BALL.

BIBLE HANDBOOK FOR FREETHINKERS AND INQUIRING CHRISTIANS	1	4
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
Sold also in separate parts as follows—
Bible Contradictions ... ... The Contradictions are printed in parallel columns.	0	4
2. Bible Absurdities ... ... All the chief Absurdities from Genesis to Revelation, conveniently and strikingly arranged, with appropriate headlines, giving the point of each absurdity in a sentence.	0	4
3. Bible Atrocities ... ... Containing all the godly wickedness from Genesis to Revelation. Each infamy has a separate headline for easy reference.	0	4
4. Bible Immoralities, Indecencies, Obscenities, Broken Promises, and Unfulfilled Prophecies ...	0	4

Digitized by Google

NOW READY.

LETTERS TO THE CLERGY

FIRST SERIES.

1.—CREATION
To the Bishop of Carlisle.

2.—THE BELIEVING THIEF
To the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

3.—THE ATONEMENT
To the Bishop of Peterborough.

4.—OLD TESTAMENT MORALITY
To the Rev. E. R. Conder, D.D.

5.—INSPIRATION
To the Rev. R. F. Horton, M.A.

6.—CREDENTIALS OF THE GOSPEL
To the Rev. Prof. J. A. Beet.

7.—MIRACLES
To the Rev. Brownlow Maitland, M.A.

8.—PRAYER
To the Rev. T. Teignmouth Shore, M.A.

By G. W. FOOTE.
128pp., in Wrapper. ONE SHILLING.

2d. Now Ready. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC?

A NEW PAMPHLET BY

COLONEL. R. G. INGERSOLL.

A

BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY

OF

FREETHINKERS

OF

ALL AGES AND NATIONS.

BY

J. M. WHEELER.

Price 7/6 Handsomely bound in cloth. Price 7/6

THE IMPOSSIBLE CREED

An Open Letter to the

BISHOP OF PETERBOROUGH

By G. W. FOOTE.

Price 2d. Price 2d.

Price 1d. Price 1d.

A LIE IN FIVE CHAPTERS.

THE REV. HUGH PRICE HUGHES'S

CONVERTED ATHEIST

By G. W. FOOTE.

Should be circulated by Freethinkers who desire to see this pious fraud exposed as widely as possible.

MARRIAGE & DIVORCE.

AN AGNOSTIC'S VIEW.

By COL. R. G. INGERSOLL.

2d.] Repriated from the "North American Review." [2d

Everh Freethinker, Radical or Socialist should read it and circulate it amongst his friends.

W. J. Rendell's

"WIFE'S FRIEND."

Recommended in "Law of Population," and "Wife's Hand Book." Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell Street Clerkenwell, and supplied per post, 2s. dozen. For particulars of this Malthusian discovery send stamped envelope. Higginson's Syringe, with vertical and reverse current, 3s. 6d. and 4s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. All other Malthusian Appliances. All prices post free.

HARTNOLL,

ENGLISH AND FOREIGN CHEMIST,

1A PICCADILLY

(Under the London Pavilion Music Hall),

LONDON, W.

Hartnoll's Specialities, Appliances and Medicated Preparations are world-renowned.

Spiral, Douche and Latest Improved Syringes.

ESTABLISHED OVER 50 YEARS.

IRETON'S

INDELIBLE JET BLACK MARKING INK

(NO HEATING REQUIRED)

For Rubber Stamps, Stencil, Type or Pen,

PRICE 6d. 1/- and 2/6 per Bottle.

Sample bottle 4d. post free.

IRETON & Co., 92, Gracechurch St., LONDON, E.C.

The largest makers of Rubber Stamps.

Special terms to the Trade.

Dyed with Ireton's Ink, no hope of ever changing my Color.

THE BIBLE AND EVOLUTION.

By ARTHUR B. MOSS.

Handsomely Bound in Cloth 2s. 6d.

A book every Freethinker should possess. A hard subject made easy. The style is simplicity itself. Argument, ridicule and wit in every page. Goes over a wide field. Read and judge for yourselves. Watts and Co., 17 Johnson's Court; Progressive Publishing Co

Now Ready. Price Sixpence

Will Shakespeare, Tom Paine, Bob Ingersoll and Charlie Bradlaugh.

"The object is to show that the nicknames used by orthodoxy to slur and belittle the immortal men it so hates, are really pet names—names of endearment and not of reproach. This is another instance where pious malice maims its own carcase—cuts off its own nose, as it were—in its efforts to carve the ungodly. The author makes out his case.—"Iron-clad Age"

"The work shows considerable research, and will be found interesting."—"Secular Thought."

"This pamphlet is from the pen of a veteran Freethought scholar, and is very good reading."—"Freethinker."

R Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C.

VEGETERIAN FALLACIES. By Dr. C. R. DRYSDALE. A paper read at the Health Congress Hastings, 1889; with opinions of Sir Edwin Chadwick and several Doctors, in course of discussion. Price 2d.; post free 2½d. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, E.C.

READING BOY WANTED.—Apply at "Freethinker" Office, 14 Clerkenwell Green, E.C., between 10 and 4. Second floor.

WANTED, Board and Lodging by a Foreign Allinsonian lady. Terms moderate or exchange of services: teaching German or French, or translating. D., 21 Crowther Road, South Norwood.

MANCHESTER BRANCH OF THE N.S.S., Rusholme Road, Oxford Road All saints.

On March 30th and 31st

A SALE OF WORK will be held for the purpose of Re-Furnishing the Hall with more comfortable Seats. Donations, either in money or articles, will be thankfully received by the Committee or Secretary, A. Hemingway, 25 Higher Chatham Street, O.-on-M., Manchester.

THE FAMILY LIMIT,

OR,

THE QUININE TABLOID,

1s. 6d. per doz. post free.

For further Particulars send stamped directed envelope to

A. MOSS, 36 Upper Park Street,

ISLINGTON, LONDON, N.

GRATIS.

AN ILLUSTRATED 16-PAGE PAMPHLET, containing extracts from the utterances of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Manchester; the Revs. T. R. Malthus, A. E. Whatham, M. J. Savage, Leonard Dawson, — Lawton, H. R. Haweis; the following Doctors:—Allbutt, Allinson, Armstrong, Drysdale, Pye Chavasse, E. B. Foote, Nicholls, Wilder, Raciborski, Napheys and Reamy. Also Plato, Aristotle, Sismondi, Huxley, Mill, and numerous others. Should be read by every married and marriageable person. Sent on receipt of stamped addressed envelope by J. R. HOLMES, Hanney, Wantage, Berks.

TESTIMONIALS (Extracts from).

"The one you sent me some months since is

Quite Worn Out

with being lent to so many friends."

"Some of us have paid five shillings for less than one-tenth of the information."

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each, upper or lower set, £1. Best quality, 4s. each, upper or lower, £2, completed in four hours when required, repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18c. gold 15s.; stopping, 2s. 6d. extraction, 1s. painless by gas, 5s.

Printed and Published by G. W. Foote, at 28 Stonecutter Street Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

Vol. X.—No. 13.] SUNDAY, MARCH 30, 1890. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

ARCHDEACON FARRAR'S SEVEN SILLY QUESTIONS.

"ARCHDEACON FARRAR'S Seven Questions" is the title of a paragraph in the current number of The Young Man, a paper which is proving the certitude of Christian truth, after nearly two thousand years of preaching, by carrying on a symposium on "What is it to be a Christian?" We have interpolated the word "Silly," which is quite accurate, and for which we owe Dr. Farrar no apology, since he does not shrink from applying the description of "stupendous nonsense" to the belief of his opponents.

Our method of criticism shall be honest. We shall give the whole of the paragraph, and then answer the seven silly questions seriatim.

"If you meet with an Atheist, do not let him entangle you into the discussion of side issues. As to many points which he raises, you must make the Rabbi's answer: 'I do not know.' But ask him these seven questions: 1. Ask him, What did matter come from? Can a dead thing create itself? 2. Ask him, Where did motion come from? 3. Ask him, Where life came from save the finger tip of Omnipotence? 4. Ask him, Whence came the exquisite order and design in nature? If one told you that millions of printers' types should fortuitously shape themselves into the divine comedy of Dante, or the plays of Shakespeare, would you not think him a madman? 5. Ask him, Whence came consciousness? 6. Ask him, Who gave you free will? 7. Ask him, Whence came conscience? He who says there is no God, in the face of these questions, talks simply stupendous nonsense."

These questions, be it observed, are put with great deliberation. With regard to many points, not one of which is specified, Dr. Farrar admits that he can only say "I do not know." But on these particular points he is cocksure. His mind is not troubled with a scintillation of doubt. He has no hesitation in saying that those who differ from him are guilty of "stupendous nonsense." It is a matter for regret, however, that he did not answer the questions himself. By so doing he would have saved Christian young men the trouble of hunting up an Atheist, good at answering queries, in order to get the conundrums solved; while, as the case now stands, the Christian young men may go on for ever with a search as weary as that of Diogenes, unless they happen to light on this number of the Freethinker.

First (a) Question (we leave out "Silly" to avoid repetition): What did matter come from?—First prove that matter ever came, and we will then discuss what (or where) it came from. Matter exists, and for all that anyone knows to the contrary, it always existed. Its beginning to be and its ceasing to be are alike inconceivable. The question is like the old catch query, "When did you leave off beating your father?" the proper answer to which is, "When did I begin to beat my father?"

First (b) Question: Can a dead thing create itself?—The question is paradoxical. "Create itself" is a self-contradiction. Creation, however defined, is an act, and an act implies an actor. To create, a thing must first exist; and self-creation is therefore an absurdity. The question is consequently meaningless.

Second Question: Where did motion come from?—Another nonsensical question. Motion does not "come" as a special change. Motion is universal and incessant. Molecular movement is constantly going on even in what appear stable masses. The presumption is that this was always so in the past, and will be always so in the future.

Third Question: Where did life come from save the finger tip of Omnipotence?—Why not the big toe of Omnipotence? Life is not an entity, but a condition. Its coming from anywhere is therefore nonsensical. A living thing might "come," because its position in space can be changed. Then come fresh difficulties. Can any man conceive the finger of an infinite being, or form a mental picture of life, as a something, flowing from the tip of that finger? The question of the origin of life pertains to the science of biology. When biology answers it, as it has answered other perplexed questions, Dr. Farrar will be enlightened. Meanwhile his ignorance is no excuse for his dogmatism.

Fourth (a) Question: Whence came the exquisite order and design in nature?—This is tautology. Design in nature includes order in nature. And the question invites a Scotch reply. Is there design in nature? No one disputes that there is adaptation, but this is explained by Natural Selection. The fit, that is the adapted, survives. But the unfit is produced in greater abundance than the fit. Theologians look at the result and blink the process. Darwin, who studied both, said, "Where one would most expect design, namely, in the structure of a sentient being, the more I think the less I can see proof of design." Dr. Farrar must catch his hare before he cooks it. He must prove design before he requires the Atheist to explain it. Perhaps he will begin with idiots, cripples, deaf mutes, fleas, bugs, lice, eczema, cancers, tumors, and tapeworms.

Fourth (b) Question: Could millions of printers' types fortuitously shape themselves into the works of Dante or Shakespeare?—No, nor even into the works of Dr. Farrar. But who ever said they could? Why not ask Atheists whether the moon could be made of green cheese. Dr. Farrar is no doubt alluding to what is called Chance. But Atheists do not recognise chance as a cause. Chance is contingency, and contingency is ignorance. The term denotes a condition of our minds, not an operation of external nature.

Fifth Question: Whence came consciousness?—This is a very silly or a very fraudulent question. Putting the problem in this way insinuates a theological answer. Consciousness, like life, is not an entity, and did not come from anywhere. The only proper question is, What is the origin of consciousness? This is an extremely difficult and intricate problem. It will be solved, if at all, by the Darwins of physio-psychology, not by the Farrars of the pulpit. The worthy Archdeacon and the Christian young men must wait until their betters have explained the development of consciousness. The supposition that they understand it is simply ludicrous. Nor is any theory to be built on the bog of their ignorance.

Digitized by Google

Sixth Question: Who gave you free will?—Ay, who? Has man a free will, in the metaphysical sense of the words? Martin Luther replied in the negative. He would have laughed, or snorted, at Dr. Farrar's question. Atheists are all with Martin Luther on this point; although, of course, they reject his theory that God and the Devil are always contending for the rulership of the human will. They hold that the will is determined by natural causes, like everything else in the universe. To ask an Atheist, therefore, who gave him free will, is asking him who gave him what he does not possess.

Seventh Question: Whence came conscience?—This, again, is stupidly expressed. Conscience did not "come" from anywhere. Further, before the Atheist answers Dr. Farrar's question, even in an amended form, he requires a definition. What is meant by Conscience? If it means the perception of right and wrong, it is an intellectual faculty, which varies in individuals and societies, some having greater discrimination than others. If it means the recognition of distinct, settled categories of right and wrong, it depends on social and religious training. In a high state of civilisation these categories approximate to the laws of social welfare and disease; in a low state of civilisation they are fantastic and fearfully distorted by superstition. There is hardly a single vice that has not been practised as a virtue under a religious sanction. Finally, if conscience means the feeling of obligation, the sense of "I ought," it is a product of social evolution. It is necessarily generated among gregarious beings, and in the course of time Natural Selection weeds out the individuals in whom it is lacking or deficient. Social types of feeling survive, and the anti-social perish. And this is the whole "mystery" of conscience.

G. W. FOOTE.

THE OLDEST BOOK IN THE WORLD.

MANY people are of opinion that the Bible is the most ancient work in existence. So far, however, from that being the case, the earliest portions of that miscellany of sixty-six documents cannot be traced before the ninth century B.C.—that is, after the date assigned to Homer. Much, indeed, of the writings ascribed to Moses is now considered to date only from the time of Ezra, or later than Herodotus. Beside the earliest sacred classics of China, the Rig Veda of the Hindus, the Babylonian inscriptions, or the Gathas of the Zoroastrian Avesta, the writings ascribed to Moses are quite modern. Even if we allow them the date ascribed to them by Christians, they are modern compared with the holy book of the Egyptians, the Book of the Dead. This is the oldest of sacred books. Ancient portions of this Egyptian Bible have been found on tombs dating before 3000 B.C. The earliest preserved papyrus of it, however, only dates from the eighteenth dynasty, or about 1600 B.C. But the work itself is of far greater antiquity, probably preceding the Pyramids. In this work, to which I shall further allude on some future occasion, there is none of that obscenity and bloodshed which disgusts us in the Bible. And Chabas, a writer of the highest authority, tells us—what any reader of the Records of the Past may discover for himself—that "None of the Christian virtues is there forgotten—piety, charity, gentleness, chastity, protection of the weak, kind watching over the humble, deference to superiors, respect for property in its least details."

Putting aside the Book of the Dead as of undetermined date, the actually oldest known manuscript in the world is the Papyrus Prisse,* having been discovered by M. Prisse, who published a fac-simile in 1847. The papyrus, which is now in the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris, came from a tomb belonging to the eleventh dynasty, nearly 3000 B.C. It consists of two portions, the brief Book of Kakimna and the Lessons of Ptah-Hotep. The composition of the works, as appears from internal evidence, must be dated earlier, the first portion belonging to the time of King Senefern of the third dynasty and the last portion to that of king Assa of the fifth dynasty. No contemporary records being known, it is not easy to assign exact dates for the works, but it is quite safe to say they were written before 3000 B.C. or 1600 years before the alleged times of Moses. In his Hibbert lecture, M. Le Page Renouf, keeper of Egyptian antiquities at the British Museum, who we gladly quote as the President of the Society of Biblical Archæology, says: "It is undoubtedly, as Chabas called it in the title of the memorable essay in which its contents were first made known, 'The Most Ancient Book of the Work'; the manuscript at Paris, which contains it was written centuries before the Hebrew law-giver was born, but the author lived as far back as the reign of king Assa Tatkara of the fifth dynasty." He goes on to say of these maxims "They inculcate the study of Wisdom, the duty of parents and superiors, respect for property, the advantages of charitableness, peaceableness and content, of liberality, humility, chastity and sobriety, of truthfulness and justice; and they show the wickedness and folly of disobedience, strife, arrogance and pride, of slothfulness, intemperance, unchastity and other vices." It is only, adds this devout Catholic, who is always a Christian first and a scholar afterwards, "through a lamentable misunderstanding of the text that some scholars have discovered anti-religious, epicurean, or sceptical expressions."

A French translation has been made by M. Philippe Virey, who devoted six years to the elucidation of eighteen pages, and the reader will desire to know something of the contents of the work. That of Kakimna is only a short fragment on civility. It enjoins against gluttony, and contains at least one sentence "Do not harden the hearts of thy children," fully equal to any in the Bible. Compare this with the saying of Solomon—"He that spareth his rod hateth his son" (Prov. xiii., 24) and "Chasten thy son while there is hope, and let not thy soul spare for his crying," and then say whether the truest wisdom and humanity is not to be found in the more ancient precept of the heathen.

The precepts of Ptah-Hotep give us a fuller view of Egytian life and civilisation. The work shows the mind of one accustomed to a well-ordered society, wherein he respects the authority of those above him, and in return is respected by those beneath. He refers to well-defined classes of society, from the prince to the policeman, and the peasant with well-marked limits to his property. He was not only civilised: he saw the root of the matter, as witness the following:

"If thou art wise, take care of thy house. Love thy wife purely. Feed her, clothe her; these are the cares to give to her body. Caress her, fulfil her desire. Be not brutal; kindness will lead her better than force. Love is her breath. This establishes her in thy house. If thou repellest her, it is an abyss. Open thine arms to her for her arms call her; show her thy love."

Some refinement, too, is shown in this:

"Do not repeat an excess of language. Do not hear it. It is something which has escaped a heated soul. If it is repeated, look, without hearing it, towards the ground; say nothing about it.

"If thou hast to do with a disputer while he is in his heat, do not treat him with contempt because thou art not of the same opinion. Do not be provoked with him when he is wrong; away with that! He is fighting against his very self; do not ask him to flatter thy views."

One passage in Ptah-Hotep is very similar to one of the Proverbs ascribed to Solomon. Ptah-Hotep

* There are inscriptions older than this, but no papyri.

Digitized by Google

says: "If thou art among persons who are sitting down to eat at the house of one greater than thyself, take what he gives thee, bowing low. Look at what is before thee, bowing profoundly." The wisest of all mankind, according to the Jews, said, "When thou sittest to eat with a ruler, consider diligently what is before thee; And put a knife to thy throat, if thou be a man given to appetite" (Prov. xxiii., 1, 2). Again we prefer the ancient profane to the modern sacred writer. Temperance people may rejoice to know that in this old work is the maxim "Do not warm thyself in the house where intoxicating liquors are drunk," and may contrast it with the precepts given in Deut. xiv., 26, and Prov. xxxi., 7.

Ptah-Hotep mentions Osiris and a divinity who may be a form of Osiris, yet speaks of God in the singular number, saying in one passage "Love for the work they do brings men near to God." He looks forward to the future of humanity and says: "If thou hast the position of leader prosecuting plans according to thy will, do the best things which after days will remember; so that the word which multiplies flatteries, excites pride and produces vanity, shall not succeed with thee." Among the positive injunctions of Ptah-Hotep are: "Love thy people; Treat dependents well. Return a gentle answer. The gentle man overcometh obstacles. Forget the wrong. Be just. Inspire men with confidence in you. Be kind to all. Be companiable. Be cheerful." Any one who thinks must be certain that a considerable development of morality existed among the people who put up the pyramids. But Christians, who claim a moral monopoly, usually do not think and are unaware that a sufficient refutation of their claims can be found in the oldest known book in the world.

J. M. Wheeler.

THE RISE AND PROGRESS OF FREETHOUGHT IN SPAIN.

Spain has been, and still is to a certain extent, a sort of terra incognita to the rest of the civilised world. Very scanty indeed is the number of travellers who have penetrated her interior regions with a view of studying them; scantier still the number of those who possess a knowledge of the nature of the Spanish mind. Of Spanish literature, which is extensive and not unworthy of the language, with the exception of the immortal hero of Lepanto—i.e., Cervantes—and some writers of the seventeenth century, hardly anything is known to foreigners, notwithstanding that littérateurs like Shack, Ticknor, Baret, Phil. Chasles and numerous other critics have devoted many years of labor to the study of that literature. Of the number of clever and intellectual men that the Peninsula produced, many of whom were highly gifted and possessed of genius, with the exception of the names of a few painters, not a single one has ever crossed the Pyrenees or drifted to the hospitable shores of Albion.

A priest-ridden country like Spain, lost in a fog of fanaticism and childish credulity, could never have offered a peaceful abode to philosophers. It is not astonishing, then, if in her soil no philosophic school arose or took root. The scholastic philosophy alone succeeded in gathering a few disciples, and since its origin in the eighth century up till to-day its influence has only slightly slackened. It would be useless to seek in Spain for that power of abstraction, that boldness of system inherent in Teutonic thought, or for those brilliant essays, full of temerity, which issue at times from the pens of English and French writers. Spain always was too impregnated with the Catholic faith to pass easily to rationalism; and nothing has she abhorred so much (until recently) as doctrines bordering on scepticism or tinged by materialism. Her philosophy has been an ensemble of mysticism and spiritualism. A brief perusal of the works of Raymundus Lullus, Vives, Feijoo, Caramuel, and, in the nineteenth century, Balmés and Donoso Cortes, will confirm the above assertion.

Little has been written concerning the intellectual development of Spain. Buckle, in his admirable History of Civilisation, consecrates a fair chapter to this subject, but as his book was written quite thirty years ago, and it is in the last quarter of a century that Spain has experienced a complete metamorphosis (which we shall eventually show), the statements in that well-known work cannot be applied to the present state of Spain, and would convey but an unfair—even false—impression of the mental condition of that country.

Spain is no longer that "huge and torpid mass at the further extremity of the continent." She is no longer that fanatic and ignorant country, which baffled for centuries the efforts of heretics to deliver it from the grasp of clericalism. Spain has awakened at last. Confused and ashamed at finding herself the most backward country in Europe, she has laid aside her ancient pride and infatuation, and is working with undaunted enthusiasm towards the realisation of a grand and radical reform. She progresses slowly, we grant; but, to borrow a comparison from Prof. Tyndall, "it is with the steady and irresistible movement of an avalanche." In her task Spain will do well to look forward towards free and brave Old England. Spain will find that by following England's footsteps she will reach the path which leads to honor, glory and prosperity. Let us hope that there always will be an eternal bond of brotherhood and friendship between English and Spanish Freethinkers, so that by mutually assisting each other, they may be able to fight for and advance the cause they both deeply cherish!

Let us briefly examine the causes which prevented Freethought from spreading in the Peninsula. "Spain," wrote an eminent English historian, "seems to have been designated by nature to be the seat and refuge of superstition." Among the most important physical causes of superstition are earthquakes, epidemics and famines. It is curious to remark that the said calamities have not elsewhere been so prominent as in Spain. "When we moreover add," continues Buckle, "that in the Peninsula, including Portugal, earthquakes have been extremely disastrous, and have excited all those superstitious feelings which they naturally provoke, we may form some idea of the insecurity of life, and of the ease with which an artful and ambitious priesthood could turn such insecurity into an engine for the advancement of their own power."

In no country has the Church dominated so widely and for such a length of time as in Spain. Since the middle of the seventh century the clergy have been holding kings in bondage by the confessional, and the people by their naif and blind credulity. The clergy were always exempt from charges towards the State, and all their work was merely reduced to absorb public wealth by their benefices, by tithes, taxes on perquisites, and by the encroachments they made on the property of the weak, and by the confiscation of the goods of Jews and heretics. All these sources made the revenues of the clergy swell to the enormous sum of one million yearly. Every attempt to liberate the human mind was smothered in blood. Before a book was allowed to be printed it had to receive the approbation of the Grand Inquisitor. Priests alone were allowed to teach, but in their bigotry and egotism they thought it would be better to leave the people in absolute ignorance. The following examples will show how severely the Inquisition behaved even towards those who formed part of that tribunal:—

Juan de Vergara, the celebrated Hebrew scholar, was imprisoned for having pointed out some mistakes in the translation of the Vulgate. Several learned theologians who were present at the Council of Trent were persecuted because in their discourses they showed a spirit of independence and were suspected of holding heretical opinions. The Benedictine father Virues, preacher to Charles V., was arrested and incarcerated during four years on mere suspicion of favoring Lutheran doctrines. Even the bigoted Charles V. himself was suspected of heresy, and after his death assaults are said to have been committed upon his body. Augustin Cazalla, chaplain of Salamanca, on account of his liberal sermons, was strangled and burnt with all their relatives. Ponce de Leon, a monk by profession, underwent an imprisonment of five years for translating the Song of Solomon. A long list of Protestants, Freemasons and Jews could be added to the above names, who were either burnt or banished on the mere charge of having become obnoxious to the Inquisition.*

F. Malibran.

(To be concluded.)

"On human evidence the miracles of St. Theresa and St. Francis of Assiai are as well established as those of the New Testament.—J. A. Froude, "Short Studies."

* The reader who wishes for further information on this subject will do well to consult F. D. Mocatta, The Jews and the Inquisition, 1877; and E. La Rigaudiere, Persécutions en Espagne, 1860.

Digitized by Google

ACID DROPS.

Even the Christian Life, a Unitarian paper, is sceptical as to Mrs. Humphrey Ward's scheme. It "extremely regrets" the negation of miracle in the basis of the movement. "Had the first teachers of Christianity," it says, "planted themselves on the basis Mrs. Ward proposes, Christianity would not have been heard of out of Palestine." This is true enough. Fiction and miracle were the chief agencies in the spread of Christianity, and they will always be the chief agencies in its maintenance.

This is how Mr. George Barlow tries to satirise Mr. Herbert Spencer.

"God, when he shut heaven's door, took care to lock it,
Glanced round, then set to work upon the sun;
But Spencer drew his latch-key from his pocket,
And entered heaven, and saw the whole thing done.

Hence all our thoughts are changed—a light intenser
Now beams upon the paths creation took.
Had Moses had the help of Herbert Spencer
He would have written a far abler book."

The last line has a sort of cart-wheel melody, but it contains a good deal of truth. Moses may have been skilled in all the learning of the Egyptians. Very likely he was the only Jew of that age who had a day's schooling. But he didn't know much about astronomy, and the nebular theory never dawned on his imagination. He saw some divine (and funny) sights up Mount Sinai, but he never saw the law of gravitation. But the best of the joke is, he didn't write a book at all, so Herbert Spencer couldn't have helped him to write "a far abler" one. Mr. Barlow should not meddle with his betters. Let him stick to his last. He is good enough at passable echoes of Swinburne, but he hasn't brains enough for effective satire.

Parson Hoskyns, rector of Stepney, will not have to defend himself again. Mrs. Besant has decided to abandon her action against him, and entered into an agreement not to bring any fresh action in respect of the same matter. The reverend gentleman is still impenitent, but perhaps he will be a little more scrupulous in future.

Dean Lefroy's tirade against Scepticism, to which we devoted a paragraph last week, is reported at greater length in the Christian World. We cull the following choice passages from his "able and eloquent address": "After twenty-five years of close study, I must impress on you my conclusion that the causes of scepticism are more moral than intellectual. People begin to sin, they give up religion, take to drink, impurity and foul language, and then they try to bribe themselves into the belief that there is no Being to whom they are responsible. There is real, honest doubt when men are in conscientious agony, and their whole lives are saddened by their inability to see with the same definiteness that others can see, and for these I have great pity; but your poor, shallow, silly rattlebrain, that strokes his eyebrows and feels insanely for the down on his cheek, for him to talk to me about scepticism is to make me pray not to lose my temper."

If this is the result of Dean Lefroy's "twenty-five years of close study" he must be singularly foolish or he must have worn the spectacles of prejudice. This is the first time we ever heard that sceptics were to be known by their stroking their eyebrows and caressing their nascent beards. So far the Dean's discovery has the merit of novelty. But the part which describes the sceptic as a person who first takes to drink, impurity and foul language, is extremely ancient. It is a Pigottism that any candid investigator would see through in less than "twenty-five years." A few evenings' research would show that it is not the Freethinkers, but a very different class of persons, who congregate in the haunts of drink and lechery. Dean Lefroy has mistaken his friends for his foes.

Is it old age or the dowager duchess? Anyhow Professor Tyndall is not the man he was. His recent appearances at Belfast are in singular contrast to the visit of 1874, when he delivered that famous Address, which was such a splendid resumé of the history and philosophy of Evolution. His lectures are now patronised by the clergy who were then his severest critics. But they have not changed. The change is in himself.

Mr. Hugh Price Hughes's organ, the Methodist Times, says "We would much rather see a good Conservative who is a Methodist in Parliament than a bad Liberal." The syntax of this sentence is as bad as its sense. What is meant at bottom is this, that the chief question about any man is, Is he a Methodist? Perhaps it should be added, "Does he subscribe to the West-end Mission?"

Dr. Tylor asserts very justly, in his magnificent work on Primitive Culture, that at first religion and morality have no connection with each other. This is now admitted in reality by Professor Max Müller, although he paradoxically affirms that religion does influence man's moral nature even if it only tells him to do immoral things! In his tenth Gifford lecture the following passage is worth quoting: "We are told, for instance, that the pre-historic Hebrews killed their first-born in sacrifice to their god. Abraham came very near doing the same thing. Jephtha killed his daughter, and David killed the seven sons of Saul, and kept them hanging in the air all the summer long, to remind his God that Ishbosheth was avenged. If you catch a Yezidee in the act of stealing, he will tell you that murder is to him a religious rite. If you reprove the Todas of the Nilgheri Hills for living in polyandry, they will tell you that this is the very ground-work of their religion. If you reprove the Mormons for living in polygamy, they will remind you that this is the Biblical chart of their faith."

Real Christianity always runs into a contempt for the flesh and a hatred of the world. It expresses the views of Jesus and Paul as to the evil of earthly life and the inconvenience, if not the sinfulness, of all sexual relations. We are not surprised, therefore, at Mr. Dillon's account of Tolstoi's new novel, which is still in manuscript, its publication being prohibited in Russia. "It aims at enforcing the lesson," says the Christian World, "which Tolstoi professes to derive from the Gospel, that it is not good to marry, and,. following as a corollary upon this, that the race should be allowed to become extinct." Properly speaking, this is the upshot of every spiritual theory, for if the soul is an independent entity the body is only a clog.

The Vicar of Burton-on-Trent desires to be a martyr to the sacred cause of sectarian education. He objects to pay the School Board rate because the School Boards do not teach the dogmas of his church, and says he will only stump up on compulsion, thereby proclaiming his opposition to what the mass of his fellow-countrymen deem a prime element of social welfare. The man of God has been summoned to the police court, and ordered to pay.

In Tasmania, where Mr. Symes was recently mobbed, the spirit of bigotry is aroused, and Mr. Walker, a prominent Freethinker in Launceston, has been charged with blasphemy and committed for trial. A fund has been raised for his defence, and the result will surely be an accession of strength to the Freethought cause.

Archbishop Denison says: "'The New Criticism,' of which Mr. Gore, in the book called Lux Mundi, is the apologist, proceeds upon the assumption that our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ did not know in his time upon earth what is the historic value of the Scriptures (John v., 39-47), but that 'The New Criticism' does know, and is therefore able to accept or to reject."

The Archdeacon is quite right. To discredit Daniel is to discredit Jesus, who referred to him. To deny that Moses wrote the Pentateuch is to repudiate Jesus, who said that Moses wrote of him, though, of course, Moses did nothing of the kind, even if he was the author of the documents ascribed to him.

Quite a number of sky-pilots are prepared to pitch overboard the Old Testament if they can only save the New. It is necessary to show them the two volumes are bound together. Others, especially the Romanisers, would pitch over the Bible entirely if they could only save the Church and their positions therein. It is necessary to show them that the Old and New Testaments are the pillars of the Church, which once destroyed, down comes the entire edifice.

Digitized by Google

There were "ructions" at the Sunfield Men's Bible Class. A paper was read on "Christ's Religion as the Best National Security," and when question time came Mr. Henry Smith arose and asked, "Seeing that the Sermon on the Mount is the principal teaching of Christ, how is it that Christians don't carry it out?" This innocent question fell like a bombshell, and it was found advisable to decline to have the question answered on the ground that Mr. Smith was not a member; but, after he had left in disgust, one humbug after another protested that he would have had a satisfactory answer if he had only remained.

According to Modern Society, the children of a National school at the seaside were being paraded preparatory to a march to church for a Lenten week-day service, and one little fellow whose father does not approve of sectarian teaching, contrived to make his escape and run home, as he had received instructions to do. When he appeared at school next morning he was not merely punished for playing truant, but so severely thrashed by the master, that when he got home his little clothes were covered with blood, and he presented such a woeful appearance that the police, to whom his father took him, asked if the "child had been mauled by a sow?"

A summons was taken out against the master, but the said pedagogue went to the father privately and persuaded him to take compensation in money! It seems to us very strange that any parent should consent to have such a case kept out of court; but it is alleged that the father, who is only a poor fisherman, was afraid that the rector's influence with the local magistrates of the neighborhood would prevent his cause from getting a fair hearing in any case.

Prophet Baxter is superseded. Gabriel Michael St. Patrick Hops says "The end of the world is now." He has sent us a copy of his vaticination, which has the double advantage of being very ungrammatical and three times as mad as Baxter's. We have read it from left to right, and from right to left, and upside down, and we can't understand it any way. However, it is intelligible on one point. Gabriel Michael St. Patrick Hops solicits the public to buy his portraits at a shilling each "to help him to bring the reality of the world"—whatever that means. And to show it is all square he sends us one of his counterfeit presentments, taken by Beattie, of Praed Street. It represents a gentleman with a largish mouth, and very small eyes, which seem to behold a lot of things that ordinary people never see. Underneath is a printed slip, enough to horrify the poor photographer, bearing the words—"Gabriel Michael St. Patrick Hops, First and Seventh Angel, Alpha and Omega, Christ the Second, M.S.S." But surely the "M" is a misprint for A.

Gabriel Michael St. Patrick Hops writes us a fearful scrawl. Encouraged, perhaps, by some recent references to the N. S. S. motto "We seek for Truth," and regarding it as an open invitation to all the cranks of the universe, he exclaims, "You seek for truth, and the truth is come." He says he has joined the N. S. S.—goodness knows under what name—and declares it is from the platform of the London Hall of Science that he is destined to "open the Fourth Kingdom."

This Christ the Second is apparently a great deal madder than Christ the First. But if the N. S. S. is to take in everybody on the look-out for truth, we don't see how he is to be excluded. Who knows whether he is not what he pretends? According to Mr. Sinnett it is possible for the ego to be reincarnated after a lapse of fifteen hundred years in Devachan. Now Christ the First has been dead—supposing he ever lived—a margin of three centuries over the minimum; and it may be that "Gabriel Michael St. Patrick Hops"—whose carnal patronymic is Hopkings—is really the Prophet of Nazareth once more on the track. For our part, however, we have no means of solving the problem. It requires those spiritual faculties which Madame Blavatsky very truly says we do not possess. We shall therefore have to submit the case to a committee of Theosophists.

The Roman Catholic Bishop of Birmingham in his Mid-Lent Pastoral calls for more aspirants to the priesthood. He says the number of students falls short of those needed to supply the vacancies.

The Dean of Windsor says that side by side with the increase of scepticism the world is witnessing an increase of faith. Yes, but the scepticism is developing among the intelligent and the faith among the illiterate.

Mr. Moncure D. Conway has been to Rome and seen the Pope, who he says reminded him of certain Hindu deities he has seen in their temples. Mr. Conway thinks the Church has gained nothing and lost much by its irreconcileable attitude towards the State, and says: "To-day, freedom is even less liable to be harmed by Catholicism than by Protestantism; and apart from political freedom, where is the advantage? Why should I prefer Jehovah to Mary, or the bottomless pit to purgatory?"

Cardinal Parrocchi, the Vicar-General to the Pope, said to Mr. Stead of England, "There is no country that is so near to my heart." He has shown the sincerity of his words by issuing an order "canonically erecting the Confraternity, which has for its end to promote the conversion of England, and apostates and those in danger of apostacy." The order will be under the patronage of "Our Lady of Ransom and the Blessed English Martyrs," and the Church of the English Convent of the Poor Servants of the Mother of God Incarnate in the Via San Sebastiano, Rome, will be a centre for prayers for the conversion of England.

The Papists know well enough that prayers won't do without work, and they are showing more activity than ever. In Poplar, Father Lawless—good name—has instituted processions with a big crucifix, and other Catholic priests are holding services in the bye-lanes and streets of Southwark.

The New York Press heads another account of a victim to the faith cure, "Prayer Did Not Save." A child, whose parents are members of the Faith Cure Society, died without medical attendance. The father, who said he put his trust in God only, is to be put on trial for following the injunction of the apostle James.

Richard Davies, one of the Crewe murderers, has written a long letter to a friend. It is full of pious expressions. He is sure the Lord will forgive him, and take him through, and bring him out on the other side to Heaven. He admits that he went "wrong," but he evinces no sense whatever of the enormity of his crime, nor does he give a thought to the father whom he hurried out of life, and who is probably (on Christian principles) burning in Hell. Granted that the father was a wicked, cruel man; still, it would be thought that one who was looking for pardon himself would extend a little sympathy to his sinful father. But no, the father's fate does not occur to the murderer's mind; and it appears that both brothers were without a sense of the gravity of their crime until the death sentence was passed upon them. Yet the mouth of Richard Davies is full of pious expressions, and he spends his time in reading religious books. Could anything show more clearly the selfish character of religion?

Frank Brealey, the murderer of a child at Burton, was apparently afflicted with religious mania. Mrs. Peabody, who struggled with him at the time of the murder, says "he talked with me about heaven, and said he wished he could realise that the Savior was his. He wanted to pray, and sent for the Rev. Mr. Edwards, of All Saints."

"Mr. H. Barratt (Kilburn Liberal) writes us a very indignant letter on the intolerance of a 'noisy few' at his club, who have banished the Freethinker from the reading room. He protests against any body of men dictating as to what the members should read. He considers if the Government allows the paper to be sold it cannot be a very dreadful production. Many in the club desire to read it, and are barred by a tyrannical few! We think our friend has cause for complaint, for working men's clubs are not supposed to be young men's Christian societies or Wesleyan chapels. If the members' religious feelings are so keen on the literature of Atheists they are not obliged to read the Freethinker, even if it lies on the library table. They should be more liberal in their ideas, and if they wish to counteract the evil effects of the Freethinker let them supply the Christian Million or the War Cry as an antidote."—Club and Institute Journal.

Digitized by Google

This is what a working man said, according to the Rev. G. W. McCree:—"Look here, governor, when yon 'ere chapel was full of swells and their wives, we were never asked to come in and take a seat; but when the swells left and went outside London, and the pews were empty, the folks began to send out bills to get us in. Look here, we're wanted now to fill up empty seats—that's it. Yes, that's your dodge, it is. Well, we ain't a-coming, that's all."—London Echo.

The newspapers report that a monkey at Bellie, Fochabers, escaped and went to the parish church, where he mounted to the gallery and joined in religious worship. But the restless nature of the animal would not permit him to observe the usual rules, and during the singing of the psalm he walked along the seat rails and grinned at the congregation. He was subsequently captured, and that single Sunday at church will probably have to last him for a lifetime.

Mr. Handel-Cossham, M.P., as an advanced Radical by profession, was very much out of place at the recent annual meeting of the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association in Exeter Hall. After a nauseous, canting speech by Sir R. N. Fowler on the awful amount of Sunday labor involved in the opening of museums and art galleries, Mr. Handel-Cossham gave a fine specimen of fluent nonsense. He appears to belong to that Radical school which is sound on popular ideas that have a lumping majority behind them, but utterly bigoted on every open question, and obstructive to every measure of rational freedom until it becomes a big party cry.

Mr. Handel-Cossham is a Home Ruler. We believe he has been so ever since the Liberal party shifted on the Irish question. Well, then, we invite him to answer this question. If it is right for the majority, who don't wish to go to museums and art galleries on Sunday, to close them on the minority, who do wish to go, how is it wrong for the English majority to coerce the Irish minority?

More religious love in Germany! Pastor Stoecker is on the rampage again, breathing out Christian fire and slaughter against the Jews. He has formed a Christian league of merchants who positively refuse to have any business dealings with the Jews. In Saxony, Hesse-Cassel and Wesphalia the Jews are denied the right of acting as jurors.

The death is reported of Noah Drew, another leader of the Jezreelites. He was formerly a prosperous farmer at Michigan, in the United States, with a well-stocked holding of 100 acres, his own freehold. But Jezreel having convinced him that he was one of the 144,000 elect who were to sail up to heaven at the approaching second coming of Chri-t, he converted his farm into hard cash, every penny of which was, by Jezreel's order, handed over to the "treasury." Now Jezreel and his wife are dead, and Noah Drew is dead, but Christ hasn't come; and as the "money's all gone and spent," Noah Drew's widow is left penniless, and charitable persons are trying to find her a passage back to her native country.

Jezreel's little game was exactly like that of Peter and the other Apostles. Both little enterprises traded on the second coming of Christ, and both flourishsd on the property of converts. The Jezreel affair is a dismal "sell," and we should doubtless have a similar tale of the Peter affair if the poor dupes had left their account of it.

An American crank having prophesied the destruction of San Francisco and New York on April 14, a number of infatuated followers are selling off their goods at an alarming sacrifice, and holding daily prayer-meetings to avert the disaster. If the cities are spared it will doubtless be owing to these good men's prayers.

Some time ago the Christian World questioned the value of Sunday-schools, and pointed out what an overwhelming majority of our gaol birds have graduated in those institutions. Curiously enough, the same fact is admitted in America. It is not those wicked Freethinkers who fill the prisons, but old Sunday-school scholars. We see that the Christian Advocate, a Methodist paper in New York, edited by Dr. Buckley, is asking for subscriptions to defray the cost of sending that journal to the inmates of Sing Sing prison; and in doing so it makes the following candid admission: "Of all those fifteen hundred and fifteen men, fifty-five per cent. are nominally Roman Catholics, and forty-five per cent. nominally Protestants. Of the whole number, ninety per cent. went to Sunday-school when boys."

Fifty-five per cent. Catholics, and forty-five per cent. Protestants! As the man in the street says, that is "the whole blooming lot"—one hundred per cent. Not a fractional percentage is left for the vicious, sinful, degraded, hardened, corrupt Freethinkers. Surely the illogicality of these creatures is incredible. According to the most faultless Christian logic they ought to go to gaol, but they don't. The Christians go there instead.

According to the rector of Rettersdon, the largest class of tramps in Essex is recruited from the ranks of broken-down clergymen and schoolmasters with an unmistakable religious snivel. They use Greek and mathematical signs. The Greek Theta, the first letter of Theos ("God") is, it appears, put on the gates of religious people's houses, where the aforesaid religious snivel is of course introduced.

Dr. B. W. Richardson has been seeking to convert the Jews' College Literary Society to teetotalism. He ascribed the vitality of the Jews to their knowing that wine was a mocker. But the Jews as a race, though temperate, are not teetotalers. As with the Christians, wine forms an item of religious service, and that the wines of Palestine were intoxicating there is evidence in the awful examples of Noah and Lot, and indeed in the very passage upon which Dr. Richardson built his discourse. Yet Deutoronomy permits money to be used for "whatsover thy soul lusteth after; for oxen or for sheep, or for wine, or for strong drink, or for whatsoever thy soul desireth."

Dr. Vaughan, the Catholic Bishop of Salford, has been inveighing against cremation. He points out that the Italian cremation societies are animated by hostility to the Christian religion, and he calls upon the faithful to stand up for the orthodox practice of rotting in the grave. Like a thorough-paced bigot, he congratulates the Manchester Corporation on its refusal to allow of a crematorium in its public cemeteries. That is, the Bishop says "We don't mean to be cremated, and we won't let anybody else be cremated." But as the heretics who wish to be burnt will all burn everlastingly in hell, it is difficult to see why their wish should be interfered with.

One of Dr. Vaughan's remarks was simply silly. After denouncing cremation as though it were a grave danger to Catholicism, he wound up by saying it was but a small fad in England, where only forty-six persons had been cremated in 1889. He forgets the early history of his own Church. After all the miracles of Jesus Christ, including the Resurrection and Ascension, there were only a hundred and twenty Christians all told. Cremation has no supernatural assistance, but it has made greater progress than that.

The Salvation Army has a "Fire Insurance Branch" in the "Property Department." At first the Army only insured against fire in the next world; now it insures against fire in both worlds; but, with a fine financial instinct, it makes the premiums for both payable in the present life.

CERTAINTY OF THE GOSPELS.—We cannot even rely upon the statement as to the age of Jesus at the commencement of his public career, that he was just thirty years old; this is a deduction from the date of registry of Cyrenius, a date adopted for the birth as affording a sort of excuse, far-fetched and improbable enough, for transferring Mary for the nonce from Nazareth to Bethlehem, the city of David, and so getting a fulfilment of a repeated prophecy.—W. Watkiss Lloyd, "Christianity in the Cartoons, p. 70.

Digitized by Google

MR. FOOTE'S ENGAGEMENTS.

Sunday, March 23, Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, London, at 7, "Mr. Gladstone's Rock of Ages."

April 6, Milton Hall; 9, Shelley Society 13, Portsmouth; 20, Hall of Science; 27, Hall of Science, London.

May 4, Newcastle; 11, South Shields; 18, Hall of Science, London; 25, N. S. S. Conference.

June 1, Hall of Science London; 8, Gladstone Radical Club and Hall of Science, London.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

LITERARY communications to be addressed to the Editor, 14 Clerkenwell Green, London, E.C. All business communications to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C.

THE Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the office, post free to any part of Europe, America, Canada and Egypt, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 6s. 6d.; Half Year, 3s. 3d.; Three Months, 1s. 7½d. Australia, China and Africa:—One Year, 8s. 8d.; Half Year, 4s. 4d.; Three Months, 2s. 2d. India:—One Year, 10s. 10d.; Half Year, 5s. 5d. Three Months, 2s. 8½d.

SCALE OF ADVERTISEMENTS.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 3s.; Half Column, 15s.; Column, £1 10s. Special terms for repetitions.

IT being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will in future receive the number when their subscription expires in a colored wrapper.

P. C.—We cannot waste further space over H. L. Hastings's libels on Thomas Paine and Colonel Ingersoll. The man who prints in England what he dares not print in America, namely that Ingersoll got on by "managing swindling whiskey rings," is simply a cowardly liar.

G. BARLOW, 148 Falcon Road, Clapham Junction, has agreed to supply the Freethinker retail. He will exhibit a contents-sheet, and try to push the sale of the paper. Readers in the neighborhood will please note the address.

SCRUTATOR.—The document you send us from Spare Moments, purporting to be the actual sentence passed upon Jesus Christ, has gone the round of the newspapers. It is a shameless fraud, which every scholar, even within the Church, would treat with scorn. The papers that have inserted the fraudulent rigmarole have only evinced the usual gross ignorance, even on the part of the "educated" people, of the history and evidence of Christianity.

SENEX.—It certainly was a funny mistake. Thanks for your efforts to promote our circulation. We shall be glad to see you if you will write and make an appointment. Or, if you will send your own address, we will make an appointment with you. Your questions are answered as follows:—(1) Yes. It could be arranged at the interview. (2) Yes, contents-sheets shall be sent. (3). It was a slip on the writer's part. Of course the Ober Ammergau mystery play is not acted yearly.

C. TURNER.—The London Secular Federation will do something of the kind before long. A Christian Evidence Class was to have been started at Christmas, but Mr. Foote and Mr. Wheeler were both too busy to conduct it.

W. CARTER.—You must really pardon us for not going into such a personal matter. Let it suffice that we bear the correspondence in mind.

J. SIMS (Glasgow) endorses the opinion that this journal improves every week. He is greatly pleased with the article on "Benighted Ireland," which expresses what he has experienced as a frequent visitor to the land of St. Patrick during the past forty years.

H. RICHARDSON (Jarrow) sends us £1 1s. for the London Secular Federation's free lecture movement. He advises Freethought lecturers to speak more frequently on the Evolution Theory.

H. C. JACQUES.—Pleased to hear that, as a reader of all kinds of literature, you find our pennyworth the best of the week, and that you push it wherever you can. Sorry to hear, however, that Burton-on-Trent is such a gospel-ridden place. Is the fact due to the fumes of the beer?

J. E. (Newcastle) thinks the whole Freethinker is too much for the nerves of the bigots, and recommends the cutting out and pasting up of good Acid Drops and Sugar Plums.

QUIXOTE.—Cuttings are always welcome.

C. D.—Father Burke may have been a Dominican, but the passage Mr. Wheeler quoted was one in which he spoke of Jesuits as if himself of the order.

"FREETHINKER" CIRCULATION FUND.—R. Mayer, 1s.; W. Grant, 1s. 6d.

THORNTON SMITH.—Many thanks for the extract.

R. O. SMITH, hon. treasurer, London Secular Federation, acknowledges the receipt of a £3 subscription from the Hall of Science Club and Institute.

C. K. LAPORTE.—We have one or two of your pieces in type waiting for space.

W. T. (Preston).—It seems a purely domestic squabble. We "tackled" Mr. Spurgeon in one of our Letters to the Clergy, which will shortly be resumed.

ON THE WAR-PATH.—We fear you will never be happy till you go to church.

WALTER MANN, 21 Bermondsey Square, Grange Road, S.E., has opened a second-hand book shop at this address, and means to keep a stock of Freethought literature. He displays a Freethinker contents-sheet, and has already had some lively experience of local bigotry. No doubt our friends in the neighborhood will remember Mr. Mann's shop.

RECRUIT writes from a Tyneside town—"About three months ago a fresh newsagent commenced business in this town. In order to help him I told him to supply me with the Freethinker. For the first few weeks he only got the one I ordered, but I induced him to get a few more on speculation. He did so and is now selling half a dozen every week. The other evening he said to me, pointing to the Christian Herald, 'This paper has gone down fifty per cent. since I began to sell the Freethinker.'"

"STUPID AWE."—Judges i., 19, reads: "And the Lord was with Judah; and he drave out the inhabitants of the mountain; but could not drive out the inhabitants of the valley, because they had chariots of iron." Thanks for cuttings.

W. H. J. P.—Nahum i., 7, may be compared with Isaiah xlv., 7, where the Lord says he creates evil. John v., 24, with 1 Tim. vi., 16, "Who only hath immortality." More palpable contradictions may be found in The Bible Handbook. Cannot answer the second question.

PAPERS RECEIVED.—Neues Freireligioses Sonntags Blatt—Der Arme Teufel—Western Figaro—Liberator—Truthseeker—Ironclad Age—Bulletin des Sommaires—Menschenthum—Echo—Owl—People's Press—Club and Institute Journal—Cosmopolitan—New York Press—Twentieth Century—Open Court—Burton Evening Gazette—Golden Perhaps—Liberty—Western Chronicle—Modern Society—Star—Redditch Indicator—Pudsey District Advertiser—Sussex Daily News—Hull Express—Northern Ensign—Leicester Daily Mercury—Newcastle Daily Chronicle—Wesleyan Methodist Magazine—Daily Chronicle.

FRIENDS who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish our attention directed.

CORRESPONDENCE should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

SUGAR PLUMS.

Considering the unfavorable weather there was a good audience at the Hall of Science on Sunday evening. The lecture was followed by discussion, in which the Rev. Mr. Brennan took a courteous part. This evening (March 30) Mr. Foote lectures there again. His subject, however, will not be as previously announced. He will discourse on a live topic—"Mr. Gladstone's Defence of the Bible," dealing of course with the Liberal leader's article on the Impregnable Rock of Scripture in the April number of Good Words. It would be well if Freethinkers would make the lecture known among their orthodox friends.

Mr. Foote's lecture at Chatham was greatly enjoyed by the Freethinkers. Several Christians asked questions, and three offered opposition. The proceedings terminated at ten o'clock, after which the lecturer walked two miles to Strood Station, caught the 10.30 slow train to London Bridge, arrived there at 12, and reached home by the aid of a cab some time before one in the morning. Such is the lazy life of a Freethought lecturer.

The Chatham Society has obtained the freehold of a plot of ground, and is raising £150 to erect an iron structure upon it for a regular meeting-place. As the Society consists almost exclusively of working men and women, the enterprise is a remarkable one, and we wish it a speedy success.

Our next number will contain an article on "Mr. Gladstone and the Bible" from the editor's pen. It would have appeared this week, but we were not favored with an advance copy, and the April number of Good Words was not published till Wednesday, the day on which we go to press.

Some friend hath done this. The Freethinker is advertised in the Western Chronicle as "the raciest weekly pennyworth" and on sale at Mrs. Sevior's, 3 Silver Street, Yeovil. And he said unto them, "Go ye and do likewise."

Our circulation is steadily improving, and before long the editor will be able to stand the staff—the "sub." and the office-boy—a supper on the first week's profit. Meanwhile we beg to impress upon some of our friends who can afford it that they might take two copies instead of one, circulating the second copy amongst their friends and acquaintances, or laying it in the way of the British public.

Digitized by Google

The great meeting at St. James's Hall, convened by the National Sunday League, proves that the Free Sunday movement has made immense progress. What a change since the old days when the League boasted but a few hard workers, most of them Secularists, who fought for its principle against overwhelming odds!

One of the League's Vice-Presidents has offered to pay £3,000 for the expenses of a year's trial of the Sunday opening of museums and art galleries in London. Good! There's money in the movement now. In the old days it was hard to make both ends meet.

The journeyman hatters of London have been polled on the Sunday question. In response to a circular issued by the National Sunday League they have decided in favor of opening museums and art galleries on the "Lord's Day." The numbers were—for Sunday opening, 532; against, 52.

The Yorkshire Secularists are making a forward movement. A lecture by Mr. J. Greeve Fisher, of Leeds, on "Will Atheists go to Hell?" given at the Pudsey Mechanics' Institute, is well reported in the Pudsey Advertiser. The meeting was crowded, and there was much opposition, apparently of a farcical character, one worthy asking the lecturer what he made of the death-bed scenes of Christians in which they had seen heaven opened, and of Atheists in which hell appeared as if waiting to receive them. Another gentleman wished to know if the lecturer ever knew a beast dream a dream that came true. Altogether, Pudsey seems to have had an intellectual stir, and to need it.

Captain Robert C. Adams, of Montreal, President of the Canadian Secular Union, has taken action to secure, if possible, the passage of a new Oath and Affirmation Bill in the Dominion Parliament. The text of the Bill allows everyone to swear or affirm at pleasure without any declaration. If it is carried in this form it will be superior to the English Act. But there's many a slip betwixt the cup and the lip, and the Bill, even if it passes at all, may be altered a good deal in discussion. However, we hope for the best, and we congratulate the Canadian Secular Union on having an energetic President.

The Canadian Secular Union has done another good stroke. Some time ago copies of Paine's Age of Reason were impounded at the Custom House as "immoral," and it was decided that the legality of such action should be tested. Mr. J. A. Risser, the Union secretary, ordered a copy of the "immoral" book, and the authorities were duly informed that the parcel would be cleared; but on this occasion, after some fencing correspondence, the books were delivered, and so, as Mr. Risser expresses it, the Government has eaten the leek.

The National Living Society is quite free from the religious sectarianism of the old Vegetarian Society, and should attract the support of vegetarian Freethinkers. Its president is Dr. T. R. Allinson, and the Society's address is 4 Spanish Place, Manchester Square, London, W.

Mr. J. M. Robertson's debate with the Rev. J. Tinling on "Was the Pentateuch written by Moses?" takes place at the London Hall of Science on Thursday April 10, not April 3, as we wrongly announced in our previous issue.

Puck, of New York, has the pluck to tackle religious humbugs. A recent cartoon depicts wide-mouthed Talmage returning to America with relics from the Holy Land, such as the cradle of Moses, Joseph's coat of many colors, Delilah's shears, nails from the ark, and the jawbone used by Samson. By the way, if Samson had only got hold of the jawbone of Talmage, what havoc he would have played.

The quarrel between Church and State in Italy has become accentuated. The Pope is much incensed at King Humbert having subscribed 1,000 lire for the monument to Mazzini in Rome, and also at the removal of the obligation of students in the royal military colleges and schools to attend church on Sundays.

The Sunday Music League has scored a victory at Newcastle. The candidate it supported in South Saint Andrew's Ward was returned by fifty votes above the Church and Tory candidate. Mr. Scott the chapel candidate, who had the support of the Liberal Association was at bottom of the poll. In the North Saint Andrew's Ward, which is a great Tory stronghold, the League candidate was only beaten by forty-four votes.

Mr. Swinburne Hanham delivered an interesting lecture on Cremation to a large audience at Brixton, the chair being occupied by Dr. Farquharson, M.P. His plea for incineration instead of burial was very favorably received. Mr. Swinburne Hanham's father and mother were both cremated.

There is some sense knocking about in Wisconsin. The State Supreme Court has decided that the reading of the Bible in the public schools is unconstitutional, as certain passages are made the foundation for conflicting creeds, and this is really sectarian instruction. Such a decision is too much for the Glasgow Evening News, which devotes a groggy leader to the subject, and goes to the fatuous length of saying that "rejection of the doctrinal teachings of the Bible deprives its ethical precepts of their inherent value." When the writer reflects on this sentence in a sober frame of mind he will probably wonder how anything can be deprived of its inherent value.

The Truthseeker's cartoon "Some of the Ordinances of God," depicts the Emperor of Russia, surrounded by scenes in Siberian prisons, a women being knouted, and a prisoner shot by a soldier; Liberty lies strangled beneath, and above are the texts "Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake" (1 Peter ii., 13). "For there is no power but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God." (Rom. xiii., 1.)"

The Swedish Freethinkers have the right spirit. Many branches of the Utilistiska Samfundet, have sent addresses to Mr. Lennstrand in prison, declaring that they will openly testify that they fully agree with him and "will to a man demand the legal and spiritual authorities, the true guardians of superstition and falsehood, shall either punish us with you or else desist from persecuting you." This brave, determined spirit gives assurances of success despite the bigotry of the Swedish royal family.

Swedish Prisoner's Fund.—Per Mr. Bradlaugh, 10s.; E. Goodwin, 2s. 6d.; J. Temple, 2s.; Hyde Park Branch, 4s. 7½d.; J. Marsh, 1s.; W. Inches, 1s.; H. Alexander, 1s.; H. Pope, 1s.; J. Spurgin, 6d.; J. C., 1s.; D. Richardson, 6d.; N. Remard, 6d.; H. Gibson, 6d.; The Fitter, 6d.; M. Dawson, 1s.; J. Firth, 6d.; J. Lees, 6d.; W. Boocock, 3d.; W. Sugden, 3d.; J. Howarth, 3d.; T. Dobson, 3d.; W. Ward, 6d.—R. Forder, Secretary.

We are glad to notice that, undeterred by his recent loss by fire, Mr. J. D. Shaw has purchased a new site for the Freethought Hall and Independent Pulpit publishing house at Waco, Texas. The Pulpit is now in its eight volume, and is as outspoken and well-conducted as ever.

We are pleased to notice that the Cosmopolitan, a new Hindu Freethought paper, published at Bhowanipore, Calcutta, devotes some of its attention to preachers of mongrel Hinduism who attempt to make a cross between their old superstitions and the Christian ones.

Mr. Sam. Standring was lecturing at Brighton on Sunday, and on the Saturday evening he addressed a meeting of railway men in the Town Hall. He spoke warmly in favor of shorter hours of labor, and gave the meeting a taste of Freethought sentiment before sitting down amidst enthusiastic applause. Mr. Gill, another sound Secularist and member of the N.S.S., was also a well received speaker. It is mainly through Mr. Gill that the Brighton Town Hall was obtained for such a meeting.

The Battersea Branch's social gathering on Sunday evening was a brilliant success. The hall was well filled, and the services of the ladies and gentlemen who sang and recited were highly appreciated. Miss Palmer, Miss Dew, Mrs. Hinton, Mrs. Hubbles, amd Messrs. Martin, Fisher, and Dipper deserve special mention.

Digitized by Google

The recent free lectures at the London Hall of Science have excited the attention of The Rock, which writes as follows:—"Lately at the Hall of Science there have been discussions to which the Christian Evidence Society has sent representatives, and in which the new President of the Secularists, Mr. Foote, has taken part, and these delegates bring back word that large assemblies in which they were the only Christians accorded them respectful hearing."

The Methodist Magazine for March is down upon the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes who talks in his cock-and-bull story, The Atheist Shoemaker, of such people as "Christian Atheists." Our contemporary says that, "The phrase Christian Atheist, whatever else it may be, is the starkest nonsense, the flattest contradiction in terms. And if any one thinks Atheists are to be caught by this 'fulsome flattery,' let him just read the review of the very book in which Mr. Hughes makes this outrageous compliment, in the leading Atheist journal, the Freethinker. For Atheists, however hard-hearted, are sometimes hard-headed."

We are passing through the press the second part of Ingersoll's Why am I an Agnostic? It will make a sixteen-page pamphlet, and will be ready next week, price twopence. This appears to conclude the essay, but, should a third part appear, we shall reprint it in another pamphlet.

We are also reprinting Ingersoll's remarkably fine address before the State Bar Association of New York. It is entitled Crimes against Criminals, and is one of those fine social studies with which Ingersoll now and then shows the world the true way to the millenium. This also will be ready next week. The address is very lengthy, and will make a thirty-two page pamphlet, the price being threepence.

"BEAUTY LIVES WITH KINDNESS."

By Hugh O. Pentecost.

From the "Twentieth Century."

(Concluded from p. 135.)

Men say the social revolution can never be brought about without force of arms. If that is so it is because so many working men are cowards. They are afraid of being called Socialists or Anarchists. They are afraid to speak up to their employers firmly and kindly and say: "In this and in that you do us injury." They are afraid to vote as they think, afraid to attend public meetings, afraid to let it be known that they think they are wronged. They keep silent like cowards and then some day they hope to fly to arms like cowards; for I tell you he is not the brave man who fights for his rights; he is the brave man who lets his wrongs be known and fearlessly trusts to public opinion to see that they are righted. There is many a man brave enough to join a mob who is not brave enough to run the risk of losing his situation by talking for his rights.

I have digressed a little. I was saying that kindness smooths our way in life in a thousand encounters with persons whom we see to-day and are gone to-morrow. And if this is so, how much more happiness-producing is it in those social relations that are permanent.

It is said that marriage is a failure because of the legal restraints that attend it. It is said that because each couple must ask leave of the priest and the politician before they can marry or unmarry, an artificial condition is set up that necessarily produces unhappiness. I suppose this is true as a general statement, although it is something that the average man or woman cannot understand. Persons who think that society could not exist unless we allowed two or three hundred thousand politicians and policemen to rob us for their own support, will naturally think that marriage can never be a pure and holy institution unless the State charges the bridegroom for a license and the priest kisses the bride.

It is quite possible for me to understand that if men were free to make a living as they pleased without asking permission of the people who own the land, the money and the machinery, and if women were equally free so that they were no longer dependent upon men for support, they might be able to make homes for themselves without the intermeddling of persons in black robes or blue uniforms. I believe profoundly in the ability of human beings to take care of themselves if the priests and politicians would only give them a chance.

But it is not my purpose now to discuss the question of whether marriage is a failure or not, or if it is, why it is. All that I wish to do is to point out to you that a good many marriages are failures that need not be, because the husband and wife are not kind to each other. There are thousands upon thousands of married people who would not separate from each other under any conditions or would come together again in a month if they did, who, nevertheless, do not know how to live very happily together because they do not know the magic power of kindness.

The relation of husband and wife is the most intimate possible relation that one person can sustain to another, and for that reason all reserve is apt to be thrown down between the two. Men are apt to cease to be polite to their wives and women are apt to grow careless of what they say to their husbands. Men are inclined to be overbearing and women are inclined to nag. Men are inclined to criticise and women are inclined to suspect. Both are human; both are subject to temptation; both are liable to drift into that unhappy familiarity that breeds contempt; both are apt to say and do unkind things.

I am not called upon to discuss the philosophy or practice of conjugal love. I observe that when public speakers begin to talk about conjugal love they are very apt to commit a sacrilege upon sentiments that should never be put into words, or else they grow maudlin—I might even say mushy—or else they are indelicate. I am not attempting to tell you that you should or how you should love each other. I only wish to impress it upon you that the beauty of married life lives in kindness. If a man is kind to his wife in his thoughts, in his words, in what he does, and if the wife is kind to him, I warrant you love will sit long at their fireside.

And with children—ah, who can be unkind to a child; and to his or her own child above all others? There are some persons—lost to shame—who beat their children. There are women—whom we call the gentler sex—who shut up their children in dark closets, or send them supperless to bed, or who harry them with loud and strident scolding. Clubs and prisons are bad enough when we are dealing with "hardened criminals," but to bring these horrors into the home circles—what palliation can there be for that? Such parents say they have bad children. Not so. Such children have bad parents. There are no bad children.

You say all this is moonshine? You say I am a person with poetic theories, that I am given to vaporings and vagaries. I tell you that I know what can be done with children by kindness; I know a home in which there is no government by physical force or angry words and in which unkindness is almost as rare as snow in June. A home in which the flame of love is fanned by gentleness and self-control, which is a safeguard against evils without its walls and a solace for every annoyance and pain. A home which no sensible man would exchange for a heaven in which it could not be.

And I know not what can be hoped for from people who do not know how to build such homes. Homes in which there is no ruler and no slave; no one to fear, no one to obey. Homes in which there are no menials, no masters, no mistresses. Homes in which beauty lives with kindness.

Digitized by Google

It is idle to say that such homes cannot be made even in this dark age when everything fights against the fireside and tends to spoil the beauty of that real and holy trinity—father, mother and child. Such homes can be made even among the very rich and the very poor—our two most unfortunate classes. The secret of their making is kindness.

No one can doubt the horrid snarl into which our industrial life has got. Look at the disparities of life. Here is an indolent woman, who sleeps nearly all day, and decks herself in diamonds and dissipates nearly all night. There is a woman who takes care of the idle woman's child. She wears a cap and apron to show that she is a menial. And there are other women who wash and scrub and cook. One is the mistress. The others are servants—a noble name unless the service becomes servitude. They all live under the same roof, but they are not one family either in fact or feeling. The mistress is rude, insolent or patronising to the servants. (Not infrequently the most ill-bred person in the household is the mistress.) The servants are sometimes sly, deceitful and dishonest in many other ways.

This is a barbaric state of things. It means that society enables some persons to live without working and compels others to put up with humiliating conditions in order to live at all. It is shameful that it should be so. But it is so and it will be so until society is so arranged that no one can live without earning his or her living, until there shall be no exclusive monopoly of the means of making a living. But meantime how can the shameful state of things be mitigated a little; made bearable? By kindness; only by kindness.

Here is a man who rolls to his office in his carriage, spends a few hours there and then rolls away to his home or his club. And here are a thousand people, men, women and children, working for him, producing three dollars in wealth for every one they get. It is a barbaric state of things which enables one man to pocket two-thirds of the earnings of a thousand men, women and children. But nothing can be done to change that until poor people are allowed to work vacant land wherever they find it and to pass any kind of money that people will take from them. But what can be done meantime by way of apology for the shame of the social arrangement that binds one man to a machine and sets another free from toil? Kindness. This commercial king need not stand so far away from his subjects; he need not steal from them any more than the system compels him to. And they need not hate him nor destroy what he calls his property.

Beauty lives with kindness. I have seen a white master and a black slave who loved and respected each other and between whom there was kindness. It did not make the relation of master and slave less wicked, but it made them both happier under a condition with which neither should have been content. I do not say that we should forget for a moment that social conditions are awfully out of joint. I do not say that we should cease to expose the infamy and when necessary call men and things by their right names with no particular mercy nor kindness toward them as the representatives of what is evil. What I say is that as we touch elbows with people in this world it is better for our own sakes to be good-natured and kind, and when we are thrown with the same persons every day it is positively ill-bred and destructive of the amenities of life and of our own peace of mind not to be kind.

Why poison your happiness with hatreds; with thoughts of retaliation; with bitterness of feeling? Revenge is the weapon of the foolish. Anger is the language of the vulgar. To make another suffer is the trick of a mean nature. To smile when others frown; to laugh when others swear; to extend the hand to one who has injured you; to be as polite to your wife as you were to your sweetheart; to be, at least, as kind to your children as you are to your pet dog—these are marks of beauty, for "beauty lives with kindness."

AN IRISHMAN'S SOUL.

If the average Irishman devoted as much attention to the welfare of his body as he does to what he calls his "soul," it would be better for himself, and a great deal better for his country. Instead, however, of doing anything of the kind, he looks upon the stubborn fact of this world as of no consequence compared with the imaginary world beyond the grave. When I speak of the Irishman in this connection I mean the Catholic Irishman; as the Protestant Irishman, to do him justice, leaves the welfare of his soul almost entirely to his God; does a maximum of business while satisfied with a minimum of worship and prayer; and, fervently hating Pope and Papists, goes down to his grave convinced that he is "safe in the arms of Jesus." The Protestant Irishman, like other Protestants, allows nothing to interfere between God and himself but Christ and the Bible; he does not care a fig about his clergyman, and does not believe that the latter can do much good for his soul, and it is to his credit that he disdains to have his soul fenced round by all sorts of protections and precautions. With the Catholic Irishman it is very different. He makes such provisions and takes such elaborate precautions as not only enable him to outwit the Devil, but God himself into the bargain. As a consequence, though Ireland does not turn out much that is remarkable in the manufacturing line, it exports to "kingdom-come" some of the best-cured and most superfine brands of souls that can be produced anywhere.

The trade of soul-curing in Catholic Ireland is carried on with marvellous industry, and it pays better dividends than any other trade on the face of the earth. It supports a body of about 4,000 men, and keeps them well-housed, fat and purse-proud. It is a trade, too, that is never affected by strikes, and but little influenced by bad seasons. How much the 4,000 soul-curers make out of the business cannot possibly be known, but the "wages of sin" must be something enormous. Nobody grudges the big dividends, however, for is not the salvation of "immortal souls" secured in return for the shillings and half-crowns advanced?

How an Irishman's soul is saved should be an interesting study for the seeker after the curious, as well as for the student of human nature. Built on a basis of the most besotted credulity, the business of soul-curing is carried on with the most audacious imposture. Sleek clergymen preach that soul-curing can be practised with as much system, and with as good prospects of certain results, as pig-curing. Their dupes implicitly believe them, and having surrendered their minds to the preachers, they complete the business by surrendering their hard-earned coins as well.

From the cradle to the grave, and even beyond the grave, the Irishman's soul is not neglected for a moment. The two great essential things that must be done for it are—the owner of the soul must never miss mass of a Sunday or holy day, and he must go to confession at least once a year. Otherwise, eternal damnation is the result. Of course there are a multitude of other things necessary; but these are the great fundamental essentials. The Catholic who wilfully misses mass is, as the Americans say, "a gone coon." And if he does not go once a year and confess all his sins to a priest, the case of his soul is hopeless indeed. The penalty for this awful omission is "exclusion from the house of God whilst living and deprivation of Christian burial at death."

Confession and communion are great and infallible medicine for a troubled soul. A man must tell all his sins to a priest, and express himself as being very sorry for them, or sorry that he cannot work up a decent sorrow for them, which is as good a sorrow as any other. The first then "absolves" him as well from the sins he has thought of as from those he happened to forget. Next day the penitent receives the "Blessed Eucharist," a very tiny wafer, which he must believe to be the real body and blood of Christ. After this extraordinary piece of pious canibalism is duly executed, the cannibal goes away without a stain on his soul! He is then as innocent as the new-born babe—and remains so? Not a bit of it. Why, if his sins are washed out once why not a hundred times?—and thinking thus he goes his way,—often a very crooked, dirty way — and having duly enjoyed his favorite sins he returns to the priest and is made stainless again! This goes on during a man's whole time, and when death stares him in the face, he is not very much in dread of it, if the priest is by to give him nourishment for the long journey he is told is before him. Of course, besides the ceremonies of confession and communion there are a thousand and one other protections raised up to save the soul. Prayers, fasting, and alms-deeds, are said to be excellent things. Praying on beds, praying before images and pictures, praying to saints without number, are also prescribed.

Digitized by Google

But it is when a man dies that all the fuss is made about his already well-cared for soul. That is, plenty of fuss is made if the man was wealthy and has left rich relatives behind him. For the poor man's soul nothing at all is done. No priest goes and reads a burial service over his dead body. No surpliced impostor troubles to offer up masses for his soul, or to implore the Virgin Mary and the Saints to intercede with God for him But if the priest is paid to read the burial service or to say masses, then the thing will be done willingly, and to all outward appearance piously. And it is taught that the results of these prayers and masses will be something astonishing. There are three departments in the other world, heaven, purgatory and hell. The good Catholic cannot possibly get into hell, for he has been forgiven the crimes that warrant his being sent there. On the other hand, it is not likely that anybody is good enough to get straight to heaven. God is supposed to be very good, but he is not quite so good as to transplant an Irishman from the Bog of Allan straight to heaven. Now, supposing there were only hell and heaven on the other side—in that case prayers would be useless, as out of hell nobody could be fool enough to desire anything better than heaven. So that in such an event there would be no use in praying, and consequently there would be no revenue. A revenue being useful the third department, purgatory, was added on. This is a favorite haunt of dead Irishmen—crowds of them are said to be roasting there comfortably. It is quite as hot as hell, say our celestial geographers, with the one difference, that it is possible and comparatively easy to get out of purgatory. The priests say that they have the power to release the imprisoned ones in purgatory, provided they are paid for it. The more they are paid the sooner the prisoners will be released, and without payment there is no release until God thinks it time to bestir himself without being asked. Of course the coin is forthcoming, and the Virgin Mary and St. Patrick and St. Bridget are bombarded with requests until these interesting individuals are moved to go on a deputation to God to ask him to release Paddy Muldoon out of Purgatory, if he is there. If Paddy, however, happens to have gone to hell or to heaven, what then? Simply this. Somebody else will be released instead, so that whoever pays the money can be satisfied that some good result will accrue to somebody.

Suppose, now, that 4,000 Irish priests are praying day after day for as many dead Irishmen as they can get paid for; and suppose also that the B. V. M. and her good-natured spouse, followed by a procession of saints, are always ready to intercede on behalf of those prayed for, what a terrible time of it the "old chap" must have, and what a disappointment it must be to him to have to release an Irishman from "frizzling" whom he had sent to have a good long roast in purgatory! For my own part, I fear that the poor wretch is so bothered about it that he is quite sorry he ever gave a "soul" to an Irishman at all.

J. O'Donovan.

SUNDAY MEETINGS.

LONDON.

Ball's Pond Secular Hall, 36 Newington Green Road, N., 7 Mr. T. Pearson, "Commercial Anarchy."

Battersea—The Shed of Truth, Prince of Wales's Road, 7.30, Mr. Magenis, "Spiritualism." Social evening every Tuesday.

Camberwell—61 New Church Road, S.E., 7.30, Mr. J. M. Robertson, 7.30, "The Meaning of Materialism."

Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, E.C., 7. Mr. G. W. Foote, "Mr. Gladstone on the Impregnable Rock of Scripture."

Hyde Park, near Marble Arch; 11.15, Mr. F. Haslam, "Who Was Jesus, and What Did He Teach?"

Milton Hall, Kentish Town Road, N.W., 7.30, musical evening, orchestral band, etc.

West Ham—121 Broadway, Plaistow, 10.30, committee meeting; 11.30, Mr. Frank Fawcett, "David"; 7, Mrs. Thornton Smith, "The Resurrection"; 8.30, music.

Westminster—Liberal and Radical Club, Chapter Street, 7, Mr. T. Garner, "Modern Irreligion: for Good or Evil?"

Woolwich—"Sussex Arms," Assembly Room, 60 Plumstead Road (entrance, Masey Road), 7.30, Mr. A. B. Moss, "The Phantoms and Ghosts of Theology."

COUNTRY.

Birmingham—Baskerville Hall, Crescent, Mr. G. Standring, 11, "The Follies and Frauds of Superstition;" 3, "Absurdities of the Church Prayer-Book;" 7, "Heaven and Hell."

Derby—20 Newland Street, 6.30, meeting of members, special business.

Glasgow Secular Society and Branch of N. S. S, 122 Ingram Street.—6.30, Mr. William Cassels, "The Land Question."

Hanley—Secular Hall, 51 John Street, 7, quarterly meeting; subscriptions now due.

Liverpool Branch N.S.S., Camden Hall, Camden Street—at 3, discussion class; 7, Mr. E. S. Jones, "A Defence of Atheism." The financial year ends March 31.: subcriptions due.

Manchester — Rusholme Road, Oxford Road. Sunday and Monday, sale of work, open at 3 on Sunday, admission (including tea) 1s., tea at 5; admission after tea 6d.; open on Monday at 6; dancing, admission, 6. Long night, Good Friday.

Newcastle-on-Tyne — Lecture Hall, Nelson Street, at 11, Mrs Annie Besant, "What is Theosophy?"; 3, "Biblical Floods and Others"; 7, "Salvation by Man or Christ"; tea provided at Society's Rooms, 4 Hall's Court, Newgate Street, after the afternoon lecture; tickets, 9d. each.

New Swindow—"Golden Lion," Bridge Street, 7, Mr. Card, "Col. Ingersoll's 'Breaking the Fetters.'"

Sheffield—Hall of Science, Rockingham Street, at 7, Local, but renowned Professor will give short anecdotal and humorous lecture on "Magic," with marvellous illustrations of the dexterous art.

LECTURERS' ENGAGEMENTS.

Arthur B. Moss, 44 Credon Road, London, S.E.—March 23, Milton Hall; 30, Woolwich. April 6 (morning), Kingsland Green (evening), Ball's Pond; 13, (morning) Pimlico, (evening) Camberwell. May 18 (morning), Clerkenwell Green, (evening), Ball's Pond; 25, (afternoon) Regent's Park. June 1 (morning), Pimlico; 15, Ball's Pond; 29, Mile End. July 13, Mile End.

Tolerman-Garner, 8 Heyworth Road, Stratford, London, E.—March 23, Woolwich; 30, Westminster. May 4 (morning), Mile End Waste; 11, Clerkenwell Green; 18 (afternoon), Regent's Park; 25 (morning), Hyde Park. June 1 (morning), Mile End Waste; 8 (morning), Clerkenwell Green.

James Hooper, 11 Upper Eldon Street, Sneinton, Nottingham.—April 13, Nottingham.

T. Thurlow, 7 Dickson's Villas, Rutland Road, East Ham.—April 13 (evening), Plaistow; 27, Hyde Park.

H. Smith, 3 Breck Place, Breck Road, Everton Road, Liverpool—April 6, Liverpool; 13, Manchester. May 4, Birmingham.

PROGRESSIVE PUBLISHING CO.'S LIST.

All orders to be sent, with remittance, to R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C. Rate of postage—Orders under 3d., one halfpenny; orders under 6d. one penny. Orders over 6d. post free.

G. W. FOOTE.

	s.	d.
PRISONER FOR BLASPHEMY. Cloth ... ... A Full History of his Three Trials and Twelve Months' Imprisonment. Copies in paper covers, soiled, 6d.	2	6
IS SOCIALISM SOUND? ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant.	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
CHRISTIANITY AND SECULARISM ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. In paper covers.	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth	1	6
INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS ... ... Second edition, enlarged.	0	3
Superior edition, in cloth	1	3
DARWIN ON GOD	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth ... ... Contents:—Darwin's Grandfather—Darwin's Father—Darwin's Early Piety—Almost a Clergyman—On Board the "Beagle"—Settling at Down—Death and Burial—Purpose of Pamphlet—Some Objections—Darwin Abandons Christianity—Deism—Creation—Origin of Life—Origin of Man—Animism—A Personal God—Design—Divine Beneficence—Religion and Morality—Agnosticism and Atheism.	1	0
DEFENCE OF FREE SPEECH ... ... Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes.	0	4
LETTERS TO JESUS CHRIST	0	4
PHILOSOPHY OF SECULARISM	0	3
THE BIBLE GOD	0	2
THE FOLLY OF PRAYER	0	2
CHRISTIANITY AND PROGRESS ... ... A Reply to Mr. Gladstone.	0	2
WHAT WAS CHRIST? ... ... A Reply to J. S. Mill.	0	2
THE DYING ATHEIST. A Story	0	1
WAS JESUS INSANE? ... ... A searching inquiry into the mental condition of the Prophet of Nazareth.	0	1

Digitized by Google

NOW READY.

LETTERS TO THE CLERGY

FIRST SERIES.

1.—CREATION
To the Bishop of Carlisle.

2.—THE BELIEVING THIEF
To the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

3.—THE ATONEMENT
To the Bishop of Peterborough.

4.—OLD TESTAMENT MORALITY
To the Rev. E. R. Conder, D.D.

5.—INSPIRATION
To the Rev. R. F. Horton, M.A.

6.—CREDENTIALS OF THE GOSPEL
To the Rev. Prof. J. A. Beet.

7.—MIRACLES
To the Rev. Brownlow Maitland, M.A.

8.—PRAYER
To the Rev. T. Teignmouth Shore, M.A.

By G. W. FOOTE.
128pp., in Wrapper. ONE SHILLING.

2d. Now Ready. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC?

A NEW PAMPHLET BY

COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

A

BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY

OF

FREETHINKERS

OF

ALL AGES AND NATIONS.

BY

J. M. WHEELER.

Price 7/6 Handsomely bound in cloth. Price 7/6

THE IMPOSSIBLE CREED

An Open Letter to the

BISHOP OF PETERBOROUGH

By G. W. FOOTE.

Price 2d. Price 2d.

Price 1d. Price 1d.

A LIE IN FIVE CHAPTERS.

THE REV. HUGH PRICE HUGHES'S

CONVERTED ATHEIST

By G. W. FOOTE.

Should be circulated by Freethinkers who desire to see this pious fraud exposed as widely as possible.

MARRIAGE & DIVORCE

AN AGNOSTIC'S VIEW.

By COL. R. G. INGERSOLL.

2d.] Reprinted from the "North American Review." [2d.

Everh Freethinker, Radical or Socialist should read it and circulate it amongst his friends.

W. J. Rendell's

"WIFE'S FRIEND."

Recommended in "Law of Population," and "Wife's Hand Book." Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell Street Clerkenwell, and supplied per post, 2s. dozen. For particulars of this Malthusian discovery send stamped envelope. Higginson's Syringe, with vertical and reverse current, 3s. 6d. and 4. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. All other Malthusian Appliances. All prices post free.

HARTNOLL,

ENGLISH AND FOREIGN CHEMIST,

1A PICCADILLY

(Under the London Pavilion Music Hall),

LONDON, W.

Hartnoll's Specialities, Appliances and Medicated Preparations are world-renowned.

Spiral, Douche and Latest Improved Syringes.

ESTABLISHED OVER 50 YEARS.

IRETON'S

INDELIBLE JET BLACK MARKING INK

(NO HEATING REQUIRED)

For Rubber Stamps, Stencil, Type or Pen.

PRICE 6d. 1/- and 2/6 per Bottle.

Sample bottle 4d. post free.

IRETON & Co., 92, Gracechurch St., LONDON, E.C.

The largest makers of Rubber Stamps.

Special terms to the Trade.

Dyed with Ireton's Ink, no hope of ever changing my Color.

THE BIBLE AND EVOLUTION.

By ARTHUR B. MOSS.

Handsomely Bound in Cloth, 2s. 6d.

A book every Freethinker should possess. A hard subject made easy. The style is simplicity itself. Argument, ridicule and wit in every page. Goes over a wide field. Read and judge for yourselves. Watts and Co., 17 Johnson's Court; Progressive Publishing Co.

Now Ready. Price sixpence.

Will Shakespeare, Tom Paine, Bob Ingersoll and Charlie Bradlaugh.

"The object is to show that the nicknames used by orthodoxy to slur and belittle the immortal men it so hates, are really pet names—names of endearment and not of reproach. This is another instance where pious malice maims its own carcase—cuts off its own nose, as it were—in its efforts to carve the ungodly. The author makes out his case.—"Iron-clad Age."

"The work shows considerable research, and will be found interesting."—"Secular Thought."

"This pamphlet is from the pen of a veteran Freethought scholar, and is very good reading."—"Freethinker."

R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C.

VEGETERIAN FALLACIES. By Dr. C. R. DRYSDALE. A paper read at the Health Congress, Hastings, 1889; with opinions of Sir Edwin Chadwick and several Doctors, in course of discussion. Price 2d.; post free 2½d. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, E.C.

READING BOY WANTED.—Apply at "Freethinker" Office, 14 Clerkenwell Green, E.C., between 10 and 4. Second floor.

FOR SALE, Book, Stationery and News Business. Only Freethought booksellers' in Hull. 35 years same hands; low rent; £200 required. Address "Genuine," 1 Suffolk Row, Hull.

MANCHESTER BRANCH OF THE N.S.S., Rusholme Road, Oxford Road, All Saints.

On March 30th and 31st

A SALE OF WORK will be held for the purpose of Re-Furnishing the Hall with more comfortable Seats. Donations, either in money or articles, will be thankfully received by the Committee or Secretary, A. Hemingway, 25 Higher Chatham Street, C.-on-M., Manchester.

THE FAMILY LIMIT,

OR,

THE QUININE TABLOID,

1s. 6d. per doz., post free.

For further Particulars send stamped directed envelope to

A. MOSS, 36 Upper Park Street,

ISLINGTON, LONDON, N.

GRATIS.

AN ILLUSTRATED 16-PAGE PAMPHLET, containing extracts from the utterances of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Manchester; the Revs T. R. Malthus, A. E. Whatham, M. J. Savage, Leonard Dawson, — Lawton, H. R. Haweis; the following Doctors—Allbutt, Allinson, Armstrong, Drysdale, Pye Chavasse, E. B. Foote, Nicholls, Wilder, Raciborski, Napheys and Reamy. Also Plato, Aristotle, Sismondi, Huxley, Mill, and numerous others. Should be read by every married and marriageable person. Sent on receipt of stamped addressed envelope by J. R. HOLMES, Hanney, Wantage, Berks.

TESTIMONIALS (Extracts from).

"The one you sent me some months since is

Quite Worn Out

with being lent to so many friends."

"Some of us have paid five shillings for less than one-tenth of the information."

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each, upper or lower set, £1. Best quality, 4s. each, upper or lower, £2, completed in four hours when required, repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18c. gold 15s.; stopping, 2s. 6d. extraction, 1s. painless by gas, 5s.

Printed and Published by G. W. Foote, at 28 Stonecutter Street Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

Vol. X.—No. 14.] SUNDAY, APRIL 6, 1890. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

MR. GLADSTONE'S ROCK OF SCRIPTURE.

THERE is something exhilarating in the vivacity which Mr. Gladstone preserves at the age of eighty. His restless energy, his unflagging interest in so many pursuits, if not the signs of a great originality, are indications of a wide sympathy and a strenuous intelligence. Age cannot stale nor custom wither him. His shining personality irradiates the nation at a period of life when most men who linger so long are but the shadows of their former selves. Surely it is a glorious spectacle, which heightens our sense of the dignity of human nature.

The Grand Old Man spent a few days of academic retreat at Oxford before the opening of Parliament, and in the intervals of college sociality he wrote a series of articles on the Bible for Good Words. The first appears in the current number of that magazine, and is entitled "The Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture."

According to a writer in the Speaker, the late Dr. Döllinger placed Mr. Gladstone in the front rank of English theologians. "I do not think," said the great German scholar, "that you have in your Church any theologian superior to him." But this, we fancy, must be taken with a large grain of salt. When one Grand Old Man praises another Grand Old Man, who happens to be his personal friend and admirer, we must allow a liberal margin for the warmth of sentiment. It appears to us, indeed, that Mr. Gladstone does not shine as a theologian. Lord Macaulay chopped up his early work on Church and State very respectfully, but he made mincemeat of it nevertheless. One remembers, too, how his pamphlet on the Vatican Decrees fared at the hands of Cardinal Newman. More recently, his tilt with Ingersoll was no credit to his reputation; in fact, as we think, he hardly grasped the full significance of the points at issue. And his present defence of the inspiration of Scripture shows, in our opinion, an imperfect acquaintance with the subject or a serious misunderstanding of sceptical objections. If Mr. Gladstone is one of the best theologians in England, and this is the best defence he is able to make of the Bible, the orthodox case is utterly hopeless. For our part, we think there are better theologians, but they understand the question too well to risk a battle for their creed.

With admirable and engaging ingenuousness Mr. Gladstone tells us, at the outset, what are his qualifications for the task he has undertaken. He does not understand Hebrew, but that is a trifling disadvantage in the present stage of controversy. There are very few persons who understand Hebrew, and some of them understand nothing else. Nor will the inspiration of Scripture, with the masses of thoughtful people, stand or fall on the discussion of Hebrew texts. In this country they think in English, and must be saved or damned in English. The question will be decided, so far as they are concerned, not on grounds of archæology or minute scholarship, but on the broad grounds of science and common sense. Whitman's advice to every reader is, "Dismiss what affronts your own soul," and men can and will do this while the pundits are wrangling over textual obscurities and subtle problems of syntax and style.

Secondly, Mr. Gladstone believes, what is true, that "there is a very large portion of the community whose opportunities of judgment have been materially smaller than his own." But this is only saying that the one-eyed man will be king among the blind. Thirdly, he has devoted a great part of his leisure during forty years to "the earnest study of prehistoric antiquity and its documents in regard to the Greek race," and here he flings in the perilous statement that "the early Scriptures may in the mass be roughly called contemporary with the Homeric period." In other words, Mr. Gladstone is the author of Juventis Mundi, a volume which attests his industry, but is not generally cited by scholars as an authority. Were the truth told, we fancy Mr. Gladstone's political leadership would be called his work, and his Greek studies his recreations. But in any case the most profound study of Greek antiquities, would scarcely confer any special fitness for a judgment on the antiquities of a people so dissimilar as the Jews. The real fact, therefore, is that Mr. Gladstone has the same qualifications, perhaps a little heightened, as ordinary educated Englishmen. He is at the mercy of specialists like the rest of us, and only argues from the obvious results of their labors.

A much less acute man than Mr. Gladstone would see that those obvious results have effectually disposed of the doctrine of plenary inspiration. It is not surprising, therefore, that he warns the Spurgeon-Denison school against their danger. He sums up the difficulties of their position under seven heads. He says "there may possibly have been"—

1. Imperfect comprehension of that which was communicated.
2. Imperfect expression of what had been comprehended.
3. Lapse of memory in oral transmission.
4. Errors of copyists in written transmission.
5. Changes with the lapse of time in the sense of words.
6. Variations arising from renderings into different tongues, especially as between the Hebrew text and the Septuagint, which was probably based upon MS. older than the compilers of the Hebrew text could have had at their command.
7. There are three variant chronologies of the Old Testament, according to the Hebrew, the Septuagint, and the Samaritan Pentateuch, and it would be hazardous to claim for any one of them the sanction of a Divine revelation.

"That in some sense," Mr. Gladstone says, "the Holy Scriptures contain something of a human element is clear, as to the New Testament, from diversities of reading, from slight conflicts in the narrative, and from an insignificant number of doubtful cases as to the authenticity of the text." This admission is honest, but is made with considerable discretion. "An insignificant number of doubtful cases" is a very judicious expression; while "slight conflicts in the narrative" is perhaps a trifle more than judicious. There are three contradictory accounts, for instance, of such an extremely important event as the conversion of Saint Paul; and although the inscription on the cross of Christ was written in Greek, as well as in Latin and Hebrew, the Holy Ghost inspired the four evangelists (in Greek) so accurately that they copied it in four different ways. These instances are only a sample of a monstrous mass of "slight conflicts." We must further add that "diversities of reading" is a very mild expression of the fact that there are a hundred and fifty thousand various readings of texts in the Greek manuscripts of the New Testament.

Digitized by Google

This does not exhaust Mr. Gladstone's admissions. He refers, with apparent approval, to Dr. Driver's recent article in the Contemporary Review, in which it is shown "with great clearness and ability that the basis" of continental criticism is "sound and undeniable." Then he writes as follows:

"It has long been known, for example, that portions of the historical books of the Old Testament, such as the Books of Chronicles, were of a date very far later than most of the events which they record, and that a portion of the prophecies included in the Book of Isaiah were later than his time. We are now taught that, according to the prevailing judgment of the learned, the form in which the older books of the Old Testament have come down to us does not correspond as a rule with their titles, and is due to later though still, as is largely held, remote periods; and that the law presented to us in the Pentateuch is not an enactment of a single date, but has been formed by a process of growth, and by gradual accretions."

Mr. Gladstone says that these are "disturbing announcements," and they would be far more "disturbing" if he made them as complete as he might find warrant for in the pages of Dr. Driver, Canon Cheyne, and Archdeacon Farrar. Nevertheless, the Grand Old Man does not lose his equanimity. He was brought up a believer, he has lived a believer, and he will die a believer. So far from being dismayed, he is in a perfect state of jubilation. The more the old Book is turned about in the kaleidoscope of scientific criticism, the more it shifts into new forms, the better he likes it. If the old arrangement showed it was inspired, the new arrangement shows it still more. He rejoices to think that no "weapon of offence" has "yet been forged" which can impair the "efficiency" of Scripture for "practical purposes." Let destructive criticism do its worst, we "yet may hold firmly, as firmly as of old," to the impregnable rock.

Such words sound like and are a challenge "to accept the Scriptures on the moral and spiritual and historical ground of their characters in themselves, and of the work which they, and the agencies associated with them have done and are doing in the world." But this is the introduction of a fresh argument. For the present at any rate, Mr. Gladstone is bound to argue in the light of Cardinal Newman's aphorism, "A true religion is a religion founded on truth; a false religion is a religion founded on falsehood."

Mr. Gladstone goes even farther. He is ready to be on with the new love as soon as he is off with the old one. He surmises that "this destructive criticism, if entirely made good, would, in the view of an inquiry really searching, comprehensive, and philosophical, leave as its result not less but greater reason for admiring the hidden modes by which the great Artificer works out his designs." In other words, the Lord may have been keeping us in a fog for two thousand years in order to make us appreciate the change when he brings us into the daylight. But this is not the method adopted by human parents towards their children; and any Board School teacher who followed it would be soon amongst the unemployed.

The argument indeed—if it be an argument—is a pawky one; for, if Mr. Gladstone thinks the new view of the Bible is likely to increase our faith, why does he not accept it unhesitatingly? His attitude is really that of a man who has made up his mind to cling to the Bible in any circumstances, and he is obviously writing for readers who are filled with a similar determination.

G. W. FOOTE.

(To be concluded.)

BIBLE QUOTATIONS AND MISQUOTATIONS.

The Bible is a great deal more commenced than read. "He has scripture for it" is the expression of the illiterate, who think everything correct that gets into print. Sky-pilots have so pandered to this superstition that there is nothing the average Christian likes better than a mixture of chopped-up Bible. Everything is right if rivetted with scripture. In sermons and tracts and controversial divinity we find a miscellaneous assortment of texts slung together, with little regard to their original meaning or their proper connection. A minister thinks nothing of making a hash of the Holy Ghost by jumping from the Old to the New Testament, and illustrating the Song of Solomon by the Apocalypse. "It's all equally divine," as the old Covenanter said, who would always read aloud the long list of names in Chronicles and the obscene chapters in Genesis and Leviticus. If the Holy Ghost is really sensitive to blasphemy, we should guess that many a preacher will never have forgiveness, neither in this world nor in the world to come. The Dutch theologian Cocceius held that scripture means whatever it can be made to mean, and this apparently is a common view, though it is not everyone who would carry it as far as the divine who preached against a once fashionable way of dressing the hair from the text, "Top-knot come down," the full passage being, "Let him that is upon the housetop not come down." Bibliolators are not only careless of the meaning of the word of God, they are often careless of the word itself. What is more common than to hear of the place where "there is weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth"; but in the many texts where weeping and gnashing occur wailing is never mentioned. Only the other day Mr. Foote corrected a ministerial opponent of scepticism, who made the common mistake of quoting "a reason for the faith that is in you" instead of "the hope that is in you"; and Sir William Harcourt has recently been taken to task for his misreading from scripture.

A former Bishop of London quoted 1 Tim. iii., 1, as "He that desireth the office of a bishop desireth a good thing." No doubt he thought £10,000 a year indeed a good thing. We often hear of Mount Calvary, though there is nothing whatever in scripture to show the crucifixion took place upon a mount. We hear of "doing your duty in that state of life in which it has pleased God to call you," as a divine injunction although it is taken from the catechism, and so with such phrases as "God ordains whatsoever comes to pass."

Some misquotations of the Psalms are taken from the Prayer Book, the rendering of which is on the whole superior to that of the authorised version. Such a practice is of course legitimate if one knows what one is doing, which, unless expressed, may usually be doubted. Catholics quote from the Vulgate, and many recognise no other version, but when one quotes Job as saying "Bless God and die," a Protestant is somewhat astonished to find his holy book has "Curse God and die;" and whereas the Catholic quotes the Douay translation of the Vulgate "We shall not all be changed," the authorised version declares "We shall all be changed."

Everyone knows there are thousands of various readings in the Hebrew and Greek texts of the Bible. In some passages the Septuagint Version reads altogether different from the received text. With regard to the New Testament Dr. Tischendorf states in his introduction to the Tauchnitz New Testament (p. xv.): "I have no doubt that very shortly after the books of the New Testament were written, and before they were protected by the authority of the Church, many arbitrary alterations and additions were made in them." Dr. Scrivener in his Plain Introduction to the Criticism of the New Testament says of the various readings—"If the number of these variations were rightly computed at thirty thousand in Mill's time a century and a half ago, they must at present amount to at least fourfold that quantity." Pretty fair for an infallible revelation.

Digitized by Google

What a multitude of sermons on the Trinity have been preached from the now admittedly spurious text of the three witnesses (1 John v., 7)! What eloquent discourses have been delivered on false translations! Take the famous text "I know that my redeemer liveth," etc. (Job xix., 25). Compare the Authorised and Revised Versions, then go to the Vulgate, and see what scope there is of making what you please of the blessed word. Just fancy one minister preaching from the text "Thou hast multiplied the nation and not increased the joy" (Is. ix., 3), while another uses the Revised Version and reads "Thou hast multiplied the nation, thou hast increased their joy." Even punctuation may alter the eternal word of God, as with the passage "The wicked flee [or flea], when no man pursueth but the righteous, is as bold as a lion." The mistakes made by nervous people like the one who said "Christ made the dem to hear and the duff to speak," the blushing corrector of "tot and jittle" to "tit and jottle," or the one who said "Immediately the cock wept and Peter went out and crew bitterly," are appalling to contemplate.

Some preachers have even not scrupled to play on the words of Scripture. An apt quotation, and quite as pertinent as that of the texts of many preachers, was that of Dr. Mountain, who, being asked by George II. who was a fit person to be appointed to the see of Durham, replied, "Hadst thou faith as a grain of mustard seed, thou wouldst say to this mountain [laying his hand on his breast], 'Be removed and be cast into the sea.'" The king, pleased with his joke, gave him the bishopric.* Equally personal was a curate named Joseph who, when preaching before Butler, Duke of Ormonde, chose the text, "Yet did not the chief butler remember Joseph, but forgot him." Another clerical at Bedford used scriptural puns during an election contest. One of the candidales was named Sparrow, and the sky-pilot took for his text, "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? Fear ye not therefore: ye are of more value than many sparrows." Then there was the gay Mr. Paul, who, preaching a farewell sermon to ladies, founded it upon the passage, "All wept sore, and fell upon Paul's neck and kissed him." One of the best of the punning applications of the scriptures was that which compared the Royal Academicians to lilies, since Solomon in all his glory was not R. A.'d like one of these. This very text, by the way, was chosen by the chaplain of Colney Hatch Assylum the first Sunday after the female patients got their new and gaudy, but old-fashioned, bonnets with pink ribbons and red shawls.

Scripture often gets the credit of many good things to which it is not entitled. "Know thyself," the inscription on the Temple of Apollo at Delphi, is often quoted as scripture. So, too, is the old Latin proverb, "A word to the wise is sufficient." Robert Hall once planned a sermon on the text, "In the midst of life we are in death," which occurs in the Church of England Burial Service, and has been traced back to a monk of the tenth century. "God tempers the wind to the shorn lamb" is another scriptural saying taken from Laurence Sterne's Sentimental Journey, though it is found earlier in the French Freethinking printer and writer Henry Estienne.

A provincial newspaper, in doing an obituary, says: "We may say of him as the holy scriptures have so beautifully expressed it, 'An honest man is the noblest work of God.'" This stock quotation is from Pope's Essay on Man, a poem inspired by Lord Bolingbroke. The text has been improved by Ingersoll into "An honest god is the noblest work of man." "Spare the rod and spoil the child" is another proverb usually ascribed to Solomon, though it is a paraphrase in Hudibras, by the Freethinker Butler, of Proverbs xiii., 24: "He that spareth his rod hateth his son: but he that loveth him chasteneth him betimes."

"A merciful man is merciful to his beast" is an improvement on Proverbs xii., 10, "A righteous man regardeth the life of his beast." How many quote from Paul the sayings, "Evil communications corrupt good manners," and "For we are his offspring," unaware that these are quotations made by Paul from older Greek writers with no pretence to inspiration?

J. M. Wheeler.

* A Freethinker gave an apt misquotation of this text: "If thou hadst faith even as a mountain, it could not remove a mustard seed."

TO THE MEMBERS AND FRIENDS OF THE NATIONAL SECULAR SOCIETY.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

The Executive has sanctioned my scheme for augmenting the Society's income—so seriously reduced by the loss of £60 a year consequent on the cancelling of the bond under which Mr. Bradlaugh paid that sum to the Treasurer in respect of the Thompson Bequest—and has authorised me to draw up and issue a circular on the subject.

My scheme is to open a list of annual subscribers to the Central Fund. Hitherto it has been the custom to subscribe spasmodically in times of excitement, but henceforth an effort must be made to secure regular subscriptions for the regular work of the Society. Members who can afford to do so should feel it incumbent upon them to give a certain sum annually, and the list of donors should be published in the Society's organ, provision being made to print initials or pseudonyms for those who do not wish to be identified.

With an assured, and it is to be hoped an increasing income, the Society will be able to extend its operations, and carry on a more systematic work of propaganda and organisation; while, without something of the kind, the loss already referred to will leave the Society in a worse financial position than it has known for many years.

I have therefore to ask you to give a prompt and generous response to this appeal, and I shall be glad to receive the names and addresses of annual subscribers. Those who can forward the current year's subscription at an early date will help to relieve the Executive of a grave anxiety, and brighten the prospect of the approaching Conference.

I remain, yours faithfully,

G. W. Foote (President).

P.S.—Intending subscribers are requested to state the amount they will give. Those who desire to withhold their names from publicity, should notify to that effect. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be crossed.

A negro, was being baptised, and slipped from the parson's grasp and came near being drowned. He floundered around though, and finally rose up out of the water considerably strangled, and furiously angry, and started ashore at once, spouting water like a whale, and remarking with great asperity, that "one of dese days some gen'leman's niggar gwyne to get killed with jess such dam foolishness as dis!'

Mrs. Shoddy: "What has become of your beau, Belle?' Miss S.: "He has gone to the seaside for his health." Mrs. S.: "He's rich, and I can't see why you shilly-shally with him so long. Why don't you marry him?" Miss S.: "I don't care to marry him. He is a valetudinarian." Mrs. S.: What's that got to do with it? We're no sticklers about religion. It ain't like as if either of you were Catholics and needed a dispensation. You ought to be glad of the chance. If I was in your place I'd marry him if he was a vegetarian."

Digitized by Google

LOT.

Tune—"The Rakes of Kildare."

I WILL tell you a story that's perfectly true.
Though I have to confess it's not very new;
It is needless to try to conceal it from you
That I find it narrated by Moses.

Away down in Sodom there dwelt Mr. Lot,
A jolly good fellow and fond of his pot;
A wife and two daughters it seems he had got,
For so 'tis narrated by Moses.

Now so shockingly black grew the sins of this town
That God's anger was kindled. Said he, with a frown,
"With brimstone and fire I will burn the lot down,"
So I find it narrated by Moses.

Two angels he sent to inform Mr. Lot
That it was his intention to make the place hot,
And to tell him he'd better be off like a shot—
That's how 'tis related by Moses.

They arrived at Lot's house the same evening at ten,
And he urged them to enter for fear of the men—
This Sodom, it seems, was a queer sort of den,
For so 'tis narrated by Moses.

He pressed them so hard that they could not refuse,
Then he gave them a supper and plenty of booze;
And they had, we are told, quite a jolly carouse—
So you'll find it narrated by Moses.

When the citizens heard he had strangers within
They surrounded his house and kicked up a great din;
But the visitors smote them all blind for their sin—
So I find it narrated by Moses.

When morning arose they prepared to depart,
Telling Lot it was time he was making a start.
Poor Lot seemed to take the thing sadly to heart,
A fact that's narrated by Moses.

They warned him expressly to look straight ahead,
For whoever looked back would be surely struck dead.
Then they left him with thanks for their supper and bed,
That's what is narrated by Moses.

He then packed up his bundle and cut for his life,
Followed close at his heels by his daughters and wife,
And he cautioned them not to look round on the strife,
So we find it narrated by Moses.

But poor Mrs. Lot, like the rest of her kind,
She could not refrain from just glancing behind—
When, Holy Jerusalem! what do we find
In the story narrated by Moses?

Why, we find that the moment she came to a halt
God converted her into a pillar of salt,
Which seem rather hard for so trifling a fault,
But so 'tis narrated by Moses.

Now what after to Lot and his daughters befell
While up in the hills, I would rather not tell.
If you're anxious to know you'll find it as well
Just to read what's narrated by Moses.

T. CLARK.

Mrs. Ward, in the Nineteenth Century, says "The English Life of Christ, which must come, has still to be written, cannot perhaps be written yet." It strikes us that whatever criticism may do in the way of destruction, there will never be any more materials for the life of Christ than there are now, and Mrs. Ward ought to be aware that a book with this very title, The English Life of Christ, was published by Thomas Scott. It was, we believe, written by Sir G. W. Cox, though Scott's name was on the title-page; and though it neither satisfies us, nor possibly Mrs. Ward, it contains some good criticism on the Gospel stories.

ACID DROPS.

The "City of Paris," one of the Inman liners, after being almost given up as lost, has turned up badly damaged, but with all her passengers alive and well. They owe their safety to the steady courage of the captain and the heroism of the second engineer, who shut off the steam at the risk of his own life. Before leaving the ship, however, the passengers held a meeting, and returned thanks to Providence. But they also thanked the captain and crew, without whose assistance it would no doubt have been impossible for Providence to save them.

After the tornado in the United States came floods, almost entirely stopping the railway traffic of the Mississippi Valley, literally washing away some places, and depriving thousands of their regular food and ordinary communication with the world. Cyclones and floods are also the order of the day in Australia. Yet parsons continue to preach that all is ordered for the benefit of man.

Saint Joseph's Convent, Milwaukee, has been burnt to the ground. The Brides of Christ within were saved by the firemen, not by their Bridegroom; but one who jumped from the window was fatally injured.

"Mont-Thomas," writing in the Sunday Chronicle on a sermon by Dean Oakley on the righteousness of war in certain cases, says "Christianity and bayonets were never intended to mix." Well, they mix remarkably well, and have done so almost ever since J. C. said he came not to send peace but a sword. Even Christian volunteers begin their Easter manœuvres on Good Friday by way of celebrating their blessed Savior's death.

"I solemnly believe," said Dr. Dana Boardman at Washington, "that my Divine Master is summoning earth's nations to a policy of disarmament." What a pity he didn't do it eighteen hundred years ago!

Over 800,000 gallons of whiskey were sent from this country to Africa last year. We had no idea that the missionaries were so numerous on the dark continent.—Kansas City Times.

After all the columns of gush over Sister Rose Gertrude it is amusing to read that the Sisters of the Sacred Heart at Molokai won't let her nurse the lepers there because she belongs to the Dominican Sisters. So much for Christian charity.

Miracles happen still—in places where they are believed in. A story was spread in Kangra that a yogi, or Hindu saint, had cut out his tongue, and that the goddess to whom he was consecrated had replaced it. Hindus flocked in crowds to see the wonder. The fact, as declared by the civil surgeon, is that three-sixteenths of an inch was cut off the tip of the tongue, and that, when the wound healed, the yogi was able to speak without difficulty.

Clergymen have hitherto been exempted from taxation in Ontario. But the Government has carried a measure for putting an end to this little privilege. Alas, the poor clergy have fallen on evil times. By and bye some villainous Government will take them at their word, insist on their practising "Blessed be ye poor," and compel them all to live like Goldsmith's vicar, who was "passing rich on forty pounds a year."

A young woman went to St. George's Church, Camberwell, on Sunday evening. After the preacher had held forth for a few minutes she jumped up and exclaimed "Judas Iscariot." Later on she shouted again, and two churchwardens made tracks for her pew, but on their arrival she flourished a knife and screamed "Judas Iscariot." It does not appear whether her observation was addressed to the preacher or to the gentleman who hurried on the Atonement. Perhaps it would be well to explain to her that Judas died more than eighteen centuries ago, and that if she wants to "knife" him she must wait till the Resurrection and find him out in the crowd.

Over at Oakland, in the far West of America, there is a blatant crank named Bennett, who goes through the streets on a bicycle, crying out, "Flee to the mountains." Sometimes he stops and harangues a crowd at the street corner. He predicts the destruction of Oakland and San Francisco by an earthquake and a tidal wave, and there are many people foolish enough to believe it will happen on April 14. They meet and arrange plans for saving the faithful; and what with Prophet Bennett, and the Salvation Army, and "holiness bands," the sensible part of Oakland's inhabitants are beginning to wonder whether they can find money enough to build the necessary asylums.

Digitized by Google

A New York man was fined ten dollars for sleeping in church. We are not told how much the preacher was fined for not keeping him awake.

The Rev. R. F. Horton, to whom Mr. Foote addressed one of his Letters to the Clergy, has a short and easy way of getting rid of Bible difficulties. Writing in The Young Man—we should say for very young men—he declares that the proper answer to an objector who cites the text as to the Lord putting a lying spirit into the mouth of the prophets, is to say simply "We cannot believe it." Very likely not, for yours is a gruel-and-water faith. But why give children a book to read as God's truth when you know it contains a lot of lies?

Nil Desperandum is Spurgeon's motto. He says that "the Lord has still a people left on the face of the earth." P.S.—Apply at the Tabernacle any Sunday morning. Good old Spurgeon!

A man with influenza died,
As many have before,
And then he swiftly upward skied
And knocked at Peter's door.
Before the gate did Peter stand—
"Canst give the sign?" With pride
He gave the grippe to Peter's hand,
Then entered by his side.

For a courteous, indeed an unctuous man, the Rev. C. J. Engstrom is capable of strange things in the way of misrepresentation. He was the mildest-mannered man in the world to Mr. Foote's face, but he took the opportunity of saying the other Thursday night, in Mr. Foote's absence, that the Freethinker called the Virgin Mary a low, wanton woman. Challenged by Mr. Rowney, however, he was unable to produce his proofs. All he could do was to read a verse from Mr. Mackenzie's clever jeu d'ésprit in our Christmas Number. The fact is, we have laughed at the story—Mr. Engstrom's story, every parson's story—of Mary's having a child by a ghost; but we have said again and again that the story was a pious concoction; that the Jews, even according to the Gospels, never heard of it; and that Jesus was in all probability the lawful and natural offspring of Joseph and Mary.

It is not we but the Christians who asperse Mary's character. We believe she married Joseph, and had her first baby in the usual course of honest wedlock. But they say she did nothing of the kind. They declare that her husband was no relation to her baby, and affirm that she was visited one night, before her marriage, by an angel. Indeed, some Catholic writers have described him as a handsome young man of five-and twenty. Yet these traducers of poor Mary have the impudence to turn upon us, and accuse us of calling her a wanton!

The pious ladies of Paris know how to combine religion with pleasure. Last Sunday being Palm Sunday, that is the supposed anniversary of Jesus Christ's ride into Jerusalem, there were high jinks in Paris. The Eiffel Tower was reopened and gaily decorated, and the Spring races were on in the Bois de Boulogne. "Many ladies," says a telegram from Paris, "went straight from the churches to the racecourse."

What humbug the keeping of Lent is! Because J. C. went through the farce of fasting and being tempted, his followers are supposed to mortify the flesh on Lenten fare from Ash Wednesday to Easter Monday. The High Church papers, which insist on this as highly meritorious and look on marriage in Lent as something akin to blasphemy, at the same time advertise a book of "Maigre Cookery," giving 250 recipes of how to mortify the flesh luxuriantly with twenty different sauces, forty different soups, twenty-five ways of dressing fish, and as many of cooking eggs, etc.

Dr. Klein says that according to Jewish Talmudic law, women who do not cover their hair break the law, and may be divorced without compensation. But the Bible allows any man to divorce his wife if she is disagreeable to him. Among the Polish and Russian Jews a custom prevails of cutting off the bride's hair on her nuptial day, thereby compelling her to adopt a wig as a head-covering.

According to the Jewish Standard, the Motso bakers of the chosen race sharp their brethren at Passover time by putting but a small supply of unleavened bread on the market and thus keeping up the prices of an article indispensable for Pisach.

Dr. Duncan, the Islington fossil, apparently does not relish our recent observations on himself. In lecturing on "Foes to Fight" he classes "the infidel print" with "the obscene volume." "He should protect himself from infidel publications of all sorts because their tone was always low and their methods always tricky." To class antagonists with the obscene is of course high-toned Christianity. Nothing tricky about that.

Dr. Duncan appears to have information direct from Satan or his angels, for he says, "I say on the testimony of those who know, that the waltz has waltzed thousands of girls into hell." He does not mention the fate of the girls' partners. But dancing-halls, theatres and music-halls are all "Foes to Fight" in the eyes of the doctor—for they are rivals to his own show.

It appears from the second volume of the new series of Records of the Past, edited by Professor Sayce, that a standpoint has been found linking the chronology of Egypt with that of Assyria and Babylonia, and proving that the Hebrew Exodus, if it took place at all, cannot have been earlier than 1320 B.C., whereas the usual date given is 1491 B.C.

The Rev. T. Ashcroft, of Manchester, is a popular lecturer on "Spiritualism: a Farce and a Fraud." This thesis, illustrated by a spirit hand—a glove stuffed with cotton wool,— may be correct, but it does not exhaust the question. Spiritism gains adherents by offering a slightly improved theory of a future life to that which launches us suddenly into either heaven or hell.

Was there ever a cruder notion of human nature than that of Jesus Christ dividing all into sheep or goats, the one meriting eternal happiness, the other deserving eternal misery? As a matter of fact, the hair and wool are so mixed only a God could tell t'other from which. Suppose a husband and wife, both with the virtues and the frailties incident to humanity. One, however, weighed in the balance is just on the right side, the other just on the wrong. Orthodoxy says they will be eternally separated; Spiritism denies this, and we cannot wonder that it makes some way with the orthodox, despite its humbug and absurdities.

Are there any real Christians in the world? It looks as though there were not. The Catholics regard the Protestants as heretics, and the Protestants appear to reciprocate the compliment. There was an annual meeting on Monday at Exeter Hall of the "McAll Mission," which is devoted to "evangelical work among Roman Catholics and sceptics." The society's operations are carried on in France, and last year's income was £19,499. It is a very pretty sum, and no doubt affords some decent "pickings" to a number of pious gentlemen.

What a mass of contradictions is the life of England. We are a Christian people, yet we do all sorts of things in defiance of Jesus Christ and all his apostles. For instance, Jesus looked askance at all domestic relations, and Paul teaches that celibacy is preferable to marriage. Yet a Christian judge, Mr. Justice Day, on the verdict of a Christian jury, has just mulcted William Ambler, a farm laborer, in forty shillings damages for breaking his promise to marry

Digitized by Google

Rebecca Lorriman, after discovering that she was subject to epileptic fits. For such a woman to marry and procreate is a crime against humanity. Human justice, therefore, would invalidate her claim for damages; while Christian justice—if there be such a thing—would pronounce the "fickle swain" a true follower of Christ.

Professor Blackie gives a diatribe on Atheistic Science in the British Weekly, and winds up with a sonnet, which in his view is all that Darwin deserves. The sonnet is a sort of paraphrase of David's polite remark about the fool, and ends with these lines:

> Go to! go to! when two and two make five,
> Men shall greet thee the wisest fool alive.

If this is the only sort of refutation to which they are subject, Darwinian Atheists will go on their way rejoicing.

In a recent paragraph we called H. L. Hastings a "cowardly liar" for libelling Colonel Ingersoll in England. One of his admirers (or, for all we know, himself—the letter being unsigned) sends us two American editions of Hastings' lecture in which the libel appears. One of these American editions, however, bears no imprint, and the other bears the imprint of "Simpsom, printer, Richmond, London." On the whole we have nothing to retract. Hastings seems to have borrowed the libel from that wretched creature Clarke Braden; and, like that wretched creature, he thinks personalities are arguments, and slandering Ingersoll is a good defence of Moses.

We notice that Hastings leaves himself a loophole of escape. He begins his libel on Ingersoll with the saving premise of "it is said." Thus he avoids the necessity of proving what he does not absolutely affirm, while enjoying all the advantage of tickling the prurient ears of his Christian readers. "Cowardly liar" is therefore a happy description of H. L. Hastings. We uttered it in a moment of "inspiration."

The business side of a God business came out in a correspondence in regard to St. George's Church Brighton. Sir Charles Peel, the owner of the chapel, divides with the Rev. Mr. Selwyn, the incumbent, any income in excess of £500. Mr. Selwyn offered £4,000 to get all the extras to himself, but some of the parishioners think £500 the full value and a considerable correspondence has ensued.

James Albert Mason, scriptural reader has been mildly emulating the example of the Lord's favorite patriarchs. James only had two wives, and Jehovah, according to Ezekiel xxiii., 4, had as many, but he, that is James not Jehovah, has been committed for trial at the Liverpool assizes.

Christian Evidence lecturers never tire of citing Sir George Stokes as a scientist who accepts their creed. Well, we hope they derive comfort from his lecture at the Finsbury Polytechnic last Sunday on the soul. He repudiated the immortality of the soul, which he evidently felt himself unable to support by any scientific or philosophical reasoning. Indeed, he relied entirely upon the Bible for his belief in a future life. We are promised a future life in the blessed book; therefore there will be a future life; and the "spirit," which Sir G. Stokes knows nothing whatever about, will have some sort of a body, which he also knows nothing about, except that Scripture tells us it will be very different from our present bodies. Here, then, is the scientist, who is cited in support of the Bible, absolutely leaning upon the Bible for every article of his faith.

Mr. Engstrom is a minister of the Church of England, which teaches the "resurrection of the body." Yet Sir G. Stokes calls it an "extravagant and incredible belief." It would be interesting to hear these two Christian Evidencers discussing this point in public.

Puritanism reigns in Boston, and they consequently believe in Solomon's doctrine regarding the use of the rod. In that city 18,000 cases of flogging occurred in the Boston schools in 1889. We think Col. Ingersoll should pay Boston a visit, and try to civilise this centre of "culchah" a little.

At a Conference of Swedish Lutherans, held at Rockford, Illinois, a resolution was presented, thanking God for the prosperity of the past year. The Swedes, however, thought it over in their practical hard-headed fashion. They remembered the failure of their crops and the low prices now obtainable, and concluded that God had not come up to their reasonable expectations. They accordingly negatived the resolution. When the pious Portugese sailors found that prayers to the Virgin did not abate the storm they pitched her statue overboard, and the Swedes seem inclined to act similarly to their God.

We read in the Hindu that the Hindu Preaching Society is sending its missionaries to counteract the work of the Christian missionaries. One of them is reported as preaching for six hours at a stretch! He boasts of having preserved many of his countrymen from the awful fate of becoming converts to the Christian superstition. Surely the competition is very amusing. We are inclined to say to Christian and Brahmin, "A plague on both your houses."

The barbers of Bombay, it is said, refuse to shave widows' heads, rightly holding that the custom obliging widows to shave once a week is a barbarity. Native journals have denounced the practice despite the opposition of the Brahmins, the most pious of whom have threatened to cut the hair of the widows if the barbers refuse. This, however, it is said, they could not do without losing caste. Any practice, stupid, barbarous and likely to enforce the subjection of women, has naturally the priests in its favor.

Among the injunctions of Paul are that women shall be veiled, and "if the woman be not covered let her also be shorn" (1 Cor. ix., 6); and "if a man have long hair it is a shame unto him" (v. 14). But no one thinks of paying any more heed to Paul in this matter than to the holy injunction of Leviticus (xix., 27), "Ye shall not round the corners of your heads, neither shalt thou mar the corners of thy beard."

The Rev. Samuel Topham, of 38 Amersham Vale, Deptford, did not gain much by summoning Walter Nicholson for assault. Walter was able to prove that the man of God molested his sweetheart. The holy man's statement that no window was broken was directly contradicted by the police-constable, who said that the prisoner was sober but the prosecutor was under the influence of drink. The next time the rev. gentleman gets razzle-dazzled, molests young females and has his face slapped, he had better hush it up in the sublime interests of the Church of Christ.

How hard it is to get Christians to see that Freethinkers have convictions. Here is the Rev. H. Bromby who, addressing a meeting at Oxford Hall, referred to Mr. Bradlaugh as once a Sunday-school teacher in the neighborhood, and expressed a belief that "he might have used his terrible earnestness in a different direction if the clergy had treated him more sympathetically." Nonsense, Mr. Bromby, flat nonsense! Mr. Bradlaugh might have shown a little more tenderness to the feelings of your species if you had shown him a little charity, but his assurance of the falsity of your creed is not based on personal grounds. It rests on evidence, which would remain unaltered if the clergy were as charitable as they are bigoted. What an absurdity it is, for instance, to suppose that a kind-hearted clergyman is a bit of solid proof that Jesus Christ rose from the dead.

In Spain the Minister of Public Worship looks after the schools. That is, nominally. Practically, he does nothing of the kind. He has no time to listen to the complaints of the teachers, many of whom are reduced almost to beggary by their salaries being a year overdue. But he has plenty of time for bull fighting, and has accepted the presidency of a Society for promoting that sport. We suggest that the Spaniards should make him Minister of Public Worship and Bull Fighting, and appoint another official to take care of the public schools.

"The New Genesis, or Moses made Scientific" is the announcement of Dr. Joseph Parker's discourse at the City Temple on Good Friday. Holy Moses!

The following announcement appeared recently in one of the papers: "St. James's Church—on Sunday next the afternoon service will commence at half past three and continue until further notice." Perhaps it is not finished yet.

Digitized by Google

MR. FOOTE'S ENGAGEMENTS.

Sunday, April 6, Milton Hall, Hawley Crescent, Kentish Town, at 7. 30, "Did Jesus Christ Rise from the Dead?"

Wednesday, April 9, Shelley Society, University College, Gower Street, at 8, "The Religious Opinions of Shelley." Free Admission.

Friday, April 11, Secular Hall. 61 New Church Road, Camberwell Road, S.E., at 8 "Freethought and the Bible." Free Admission, and unlimited discussion.

April 13, Portsmouth; 20, Hall of Science; 27, Hall of Science.

May 4, Newcastle; 11, South Shields; 18, Hall of Science, London; 25, N. S. S. Conference.

June 1, Hall of Science London; 8, Gladstone Radical Club and Hall of Science, London.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

LITERARY communications to be addressed to the Editor, 14 Clerkenwell Green, London, E.C. All business communications to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C.

THE Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the office, post free to any part of Europe, America, Canada and Egypt, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 6s. 6d.; Half Year, 3s. 3d.; Three Months, 1s. 7½d. Australia, China and Africa:—One Year, 8s. 8d.; Half Year, 4s. 4d.; Three Months, 2s. 2d. India:—One Year, 10s. 10d.; Half Year, 5s. 5d. Three Months, 2s. 8½d.

SCALE OF ADVERTISEMENTS.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 3s.; Half Column, 15s.; Column, £1 10s. Special terms for repetitions.

IT being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will in future receive the number when their subscription expires in a colored wrapper.

W. DUFFIELD (New Plymouth).—Your order and remittance to hand. Both have been handed to Mr. Forder, to whom all such business communications should be addressed.

E. ANDERSON.—Particulars of Beethoven's scepticism are given in Mr. Wheeler's Biographical Dictionary of Freethinkers.

I. IRELAND.—No doubt, as the worthy deacon declared, a Bible Class which allowed free discussion would make more sceptics than Christians. Fortunately there are some Christian young men who will see through the trick of silence.

S. M. PEACOCK.—It is an old circular, and not worth recurring to. Delighted to hear the good news as to the gentleman you mention. He would be worth having, and we should be proud of having contributed to the result.

T. A. BRUCE.—We should prefer the official statistics to the Archbishop's figures. Someday or other—perhaps before very long—we will look them up. Our view is that the conscription, with its attendant evil of barrack life, must have a bad effect on the morale of the French people.

H. P.—You have a legal right, under Mr. Bradlaugh's Act, to affirm instead of swearing in the witness-box. But it is difficult to say whether you should avail yourself of the right. As a government servant, liable to be discharged by a bigoted superior without any cause being assigned, you should weigh the danger before you resolve. There is no special law to prevent a Freethinker from holding a civil office under the crown.

SENEX.—We have not heard from you. Has your letter miscarried?

HUGH IRVING sends us £1 for the Swedish Prisoner Fund.

No. 12.—Pleased to hear you are still pushing our circulation. We missed the Canon Boynes incident, and it is too late to return to it now.

VANINI.—YOU need not go to a church to get married. Give the usual three week's notice to the registrar of your parish. At the expiration of the notice you can get married at the registrar's office, as myriads of people do every year.

J. S.—Good sentiment but not good verse.

J. ROWNEY.—Thanks. You did us a service by challenging Mr. Engstrom's statement.

J. K.—We think you are mistaken. In our opinion Home Rule will be a blow to the Irish priesthood. They will lose their old prestige as patriots, when they no longer oppose the rule of the Protestant Saxon; and when Irishmen have a Parliament of their own, they will no longer be bound together by a common antipathy to an alien government. All their natural differences of interest, sentiment and opinion, will assert themselves, and the break-up of Ireland's stagnation will begin. Protestants will not be tyrannised over by Catholics—not, at least, for any length of time. In the first place the Protestants are too strong; in the second place, the Catholics would have to count with men like Parnell and Davitt; and in the third place, the weight of British influence would be too great. In short, Ireland will learn more from England when the hatred is out of her heart.—The rest of your letter we have read with interest.

J. BURRELL.—If the crank is in the Westminster Branch you had better get rid of him at once and return his subscription

S. STANDRING corrects a mistake in our last issue. The workmen's meeting he addressed in the Brighton Town Hall was not on Saturday but Sunday.

J. ROBINS.—There is nothing of a religious character on the bill you enclose.

B. STEVENS.—We agree with you that the opposition was rather feeble.

PAPERS RECEIVED.—Neues Freireligioses Sonntags Blatt—Der Arme Teufel—Western Figaro—Liberator—Truthseeker—Ironclad Age—Bulletin des Sommaires—Menschenthum—People's Press—Echo—Methodist Recorder—Freidenker—Lucifer—Church Reformer—Dundee Evening Telegraph—Sussex Daily News—Open Court—Portsmouth Evening News—Jewish Standard—Sunday Chronicle—Tocsin—Reading Standard—Vancouver Weekly News Advertiser—Islington Gazette—Chatham and Rochester News—Secular Thought—Star—Daily Graphic—Freethought Record.

FRIENDS who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish our attention directed.

SUGAR PLUMS.

Letters to the Clergy will be resumed next week. The tenth letter will be addressed to the Rev. Dr. Matheson on "The Fear of God." Owing to a press of other matter, the conclusion of "Freethought in Spain" stands over till next week.

Mr. Foote's lecture on Mr. Gladstone's Good Words article was listened to by a good audience on Sunday evening at the Hall of Science. The lecture lasted for an hour and a half, and rivetted attention until the end, when the lecturer received a perfect ovation. Two Christians mounted the platform and defended the Bible, the Rev. Mr. Brennan and the eccentric Mr. Mitchell. When they were replied to the meeting broke up, but discussion was carried on in groups on the pavement, Mr. Brennan's voice being distinctly audible in the committee room.

This evening (April 6) Mr. Foote lectures at Milton Hall on a subject suitable to Easter Sunday—"Did Jesus Christ Rise from the Dead?"

Mr. Foote lectures before the Shelley Society next Wednesday evening (April 9) on the poet's Religious Opinions. Any person who wishes to hear the lecture and discussion will be admitted free. Time, 8 o'clock; place, University College, Gower Street.

The London Secular Federation's second course of Free Lectures will begin at the Secular Hall, Camberwell, on Friday, April 11, when Mr. Foote lectures on "Freethought and a Future Life." Mr. Foote will also deliver the fourth lecture of this course. The other lecturers will be Mr. J. M. Robertson and Mr. G. Standring.

The Federation's third course of Free Lectures will begin at Milton Hall on Tuesday, April 15. Mr. Foote will deliver the first and third lectures, and the second and fourth will be taken by Mr. J. M. Robertson and Mr. A. B. Moss. As soon as possible a fourth course will be organised in the East-end, where there is such an inadequate propaganda of Freethought among a population of two millions. Freethinkers in the various localities where these Free Lectures are given should make a special effort to bring their Christian friends and acquaintances.

Captain Thomson telegraphed to us on Monday that the King's Court had sentenced Viktor Lennstrand to an additional three months' imprisonment. Thus the cowardly scoundrels pile the penalties upon a young hero who has dared to challenge their superstition and affront their bigotry. The only consolation is that he is brave enough to bear their malice. He has a full measure of that noble spirit which made one of Carlile's shopmen exclaim, when sentenced to three years' imprisonment for selling the Age of Reason, "My lord, I have a mind that can bear such a sentence with fortitude."

The Swedish courts imprison Freethinkers, but they cannot destroy Freethought. On the contrary, they strengthen it by kindling the martyr spirit in its champions and exciting public admiration of their heroism. The growls of indignation at the infamy are swelling into a roar, and thousands of Swedes are being taught, in the most practical manner, that Christianity is the implacable enemy of liberty. That is worth something; and if Viktor Lennstrand suffers, as he must, it is only by such suffering that Freethought is possible.

Digitized by Google

Swedish Prisoner's Fund.—Heckmondwike Branch N. S. S., 14s.; W. Hardie, 5s.; Darlington Branch N. S. S., 7s. 6d.; John White, 2s. 6d.; Jas. White, 2s. 6d.; A. White, 2s. 6d.; R. White, 2s.; J. R., 6d.; J. Stapleton, 1s. 6d.; J. Fitzgerald, 2s. 6d.; D. Colville, 2s. 6d.; G. Carter, 2s. 6d.; "Lawret," 2s.; F. Bayle, 2s.; E. Sims, 2s.; E. Meek, 1s.; E. Parker, 6d.—R. Forder, Secretary.

The Chatham News gives a long and fair report of Mr. Foote's "able and eloquent" lecture in the Gladstone Hall. Some of the jocularities are included in the report. They will be good reading for the Archbishop of Canterbury and the clergy of his diocese.

Seriously speaking—really now, we are in earnest—it is something to get a bit like this in a "reputable" newspaper: "The Church resisted every reform with might and main, and when at last the reform was carried, the clergy took off their hats and wiped their perspiring brows, and said 'We did it.'"

The Newcastle Sunday Music League's candidate was beaten in West All Saints' Ward by the narrow majority of sixteen, the figures being 403 to 387. According to the local press "The only municipal question apparently upon which the candidates differed was that of Sunday music in the parks." It is obvious therefore, that the bigoted action of the City Council is not supported by any serious majority of the citizens; and it will probably be reversed before very long, as the Sunday Music League intends to press the question at outdoor meetings during the summer.

The Newcastle Branch keeps Good Friday this year after the fashion of the Paris Freethinkers. The celebration takes the form of a tea, concert and dance at the Arcade Assembly Room, Pilgrim Street. The Branch's rooms will be open at 10 in the morning for the convenience of friends from the country. Tickets can be had at Mr. Peter Weston's, newsagent, Newgate Street.

Mr. Clarke, our latest special lecturer, is touring in the north of England this month under the auspices of the North-Eastern Secular Federation. He begins at Hartlepool on April 6, and winds up on the 20th at Newcastle. The intervening dates are taken by Middlesborough, Stockton, Chester-le-Street, South Shields, West Auckland, Darlington, Wallsend, North Shields, Bedlington, and Oxhill.

"I regard the Church as the basic principle of immorality in the world, and the most prolific source of pauperism, of crime, and of injustice to women." This is the testimony of Mrs. Matilda Josyln Gage, one of the leaders of the Women's Rights Movement in America, who has recently presided at a conference at Washington.

The Leicester Secular Society sends us its report for 1889. We have read it through and found it instructive. There is evidently some good work done by the Society. The cricket club, the sick club, and other departments are no doubt useful. So is a Club (with a capital C) where members, not necessarily Secularists, can spend their evenings at cards, billiards, and skittles, or hear a song, or enjoy a glass and a smoke, or read the periodicals of the day. But all these things are more or less provided elsewhere. The chief business of a Secular Society, at any rate at present, is to propagate Secularism, and to assist in this work the late Mr. Josiah Gimson left £100 a year for ten years. Well, we look into the Balance Sheet and find that while the Society's income has increased during the past three years, chiefly through "Sales in the Club," from £710 to £826, the amount expended on lectures, week days and Sundays, has diminished from £43 to £34—just a third of the Gimson bequest. Nor have the lectures, apparently, been of a very definite character. They have been delivered by all sorts of persons on all sorts of subjects. It seems, therefore, that the Leicester Secular Society is far from realising Mr. Gimson's ideal. Instead of extending Freethought we believe it simply lives on the stock accumulated in the old days of vigorous propaganda.

Our remarks are not made in an unfriendly spirit. The Society sent us its report, and we have criticised it honestly. And having done so we venture to offer a piece of advice. A little "respectability" might be exchanged for a little earnest Freethought, and we are confident that the alteration would be welcomed by the rank and file of the Secular party in Leicester, who, we understand, are in the position of being obliged to take what is given them.

It is all very well to say, as the Leicester Secular Society does say, that Secularists need not contest the divine origin of the Bible; but the statement is nonsensical in view of the other statement that Secularists accept no authority but that of Nature. If the Bible is of divine origin Secularism is impossible; and while the divine origin of the Bible is upheld by English law, and inwrought with English thought, it is idle, and in fact ludicrous, to assume these airs of most unphilosophical indifference. After all ideas rule the world, and there is a logic of ideas, whether the Leicester Secular Society admits it or not.

George Harrison, the poor fellow who got five years' imprisonment for his share in the Trafalgar Square "riots"—heaven save the mark!—has been released after serving two years and three months of his sentence. He called at our publishing office on Tuesday to thank us for our poor efforts on his behalf. It is a curious thing that the least assistance to his family was rendered by those who were most eager for a second raid on the Square.

Donations are still required for the memorial to Kit Marlowe, the Atheist poet and founder of the English drama, and may be sent to the hon. treasurer, Mr. Sidney Lee, 18 Edwardes Square, Kensington, W.

The department of the Seine spends twenty-six millions of francs in the education of 150,000 children. The French are beginning to find this is a better investment of their money than putting it in fortifications.

Mary A. Ward, authoress of Robert Elsmere, calls attention in the Nineteenth Century to a new work on The First Three Gospels; their Origin and Relation by Mr. J. E. Carpenter. It is written from the Unitarian standpoint, but does much to show the results of criticism upon the Synoptics.

Mrs. Ward says "When we have learnt something of the literary habits which prevailed in the first two Christian centuries and in the two centuries immediately preceding them; when we have understood something of the process of 'dramatic personation' which produced the Book of Daniel about 165 B.C., and led to the composition of the fourth Gospel about 120 A.D., and of the Pastoral Epistles later on in the second century; when we have penetrated something of the force of diffusiveness of the Messianic idea under its two forms of 'The Ideal King,' and 'The Servant of Yahve'; and when, moreover, we have realised the presence throughout the period of those legend-making forces which attend the birth of all religions: then, and then only shall we have grasped the first elements of the Christian problem." This looks a good deal like suggesting that Christianity depended on the forgeries of its propagators and the credulity of its believers.

Paul Janet in the Revue des deux Mondes, argues that Chateaubriand was at bottom a sceptic despite his Génie du Christianisme.

We are delighted to see that the Russian students are in revolt. Under the pious Czar and the ignorant and besotted clergy of the Holy Greek Church, Russia is in an intolerable position, and every open sign of discontent is cheering to the friends of liberty and progress. It is noteworthy that the Moscow students demand "freedom of instruction and equality of educational rights for the Jews" as well as for the rest of the community.

Secular Thought (Toronto), after recording Mr. Foote's election as President of the N. S. S., says: "This we think a wise selection, as we know of no other man in the old country so well qualified for the office." Freethought (San Francisco) says: "Conceding that Bradlaugh is the ablest Secularist in England, Mr. Foote certainly holds the second place as an all-round Freethought advocate." Evidently the American Freethinkers do not take a despairing view of the prospects of our party in England.

Digitized by Google

We opened the little box with wonder. It contained wedding cake. What a curious thing in a newspaper office! But it came from two good Freethinkers who are honeymooning. Miss Hawksley, the President of the Nottingham Branch, has condescended to marry the Secretary, Mr. Atkey. We congratulate him. He is a lucky man, and we believe he has the sense to know it.

Things are going on famously at Reading. The Rev. D. Amos, Unitarian, is demolishing Christianity, and is being feebly replied to by Mr. T. Barber, of Northampton. Mr. Barber's ignorance is almost amazing. For instance, Mr. Amos derided the Josephus passage on Christ as a wretched interpolation, which no scholar accepts as genuine. To this Mr. Barber replies that "the writings of Josephus were never questioned during the first four centuries." What imbecility, to be sure! The fact is, there is not a single Christian writer before Eusebius who ever heard of this Josephus passage. What Mr. Barber has to explain is the silence of all the early Fathers as to a passage which, if it existed, they would have seized on with avidity. We are really tired of giving Mr. Barber elementary lessons in Christian evidences.

Freethought is spreading in the police force. It is also spreading in the navy, one of our war-ships having a large company of Freethinkers on boards. In the army, too, the cause is making headway. Two Branches of the N. S. S. have just been formed at Gibraltar and Barbadoes. The members in the former Branch, for a very good reason, are all passive; but those of the latter are all active. The secretary is Sergeant Westerman of the York and Lancaster regiment. A quantity of Freethought literature has been sent to both places, as well as to Trinidad.

The N. S. S. Branches should make a special effort to secure the success of the approaching Annual Conference. Coming so soon after the General Meeting of February 16, the Conference will be a tax on the party's resources of money and enthusiasm, but it will be a very important gathering, and steps should be taken at once to provide for a full representation.

Freethinkers of any means are earnestly desired to think over the President's circular to the members and friends of the National Secular Society, which appears in another column. Money is indispensable to the Society's work, if it is to be done with any degree of efficiency. New members are being enrolled, and there are signs of fresh activity in many directions. But no enterprises can be engaged in, except spasmodically—and that can only lead to transient results—without an assured income. The N. S. S. ought to have an income of £1,000 a year at least, and although this cannot be realised all at once, it is high time to make a beginning. What is wanted is a list—a gradually growing one—of yearly subscribers; that is, of persons who undertake to give a definite sum annually. Some can afford five or ten guineas, others five or ten shillings; but all should do something who can, and do it regularly.

A special meeting of the N.S.S. Executive has been summoned for Thursday evening at the Hall of Science. Every member should attend if possible.

CANON SHUTTLEWORTH EXPLAINS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE FREETHINKER."

DEAR SIR,—You have apparently been misled by an inaccurate report of my lecture at the National Liberal Club upon the matter of Church and State. I have already been obliged to publicly disclaim any responsibility for the sentiments and sentences with which this report has credited me; and I will ask you to allow me to say that I cannot accept as mine the position and proposals upon which you comment in last week's issue.—Faithfully yours,

March 28. W. SHUTTLEWORTH.

MRS. BESANT'S RESIGNATION.

MRS. BESANT has definitively resigned her vice-presidency of the National Secular Society, and I presume her membership as well. The reason she assigns is that she could not work in harmony with the new President. Behind this, of course, is the fact that she has become a leader of Theosophy.

Greatly as I deplore the loss of Mrs. Besant I do not feel any shock at her nominal resignation. Her real resignation took place many months ago, when she gave her enthusiasm to the cause of Theosophy, and ceased attending the Executive meetings of the National Secular Society.

In common with the rest of the Executive, I recognise the great services which Mrs. Besant has rendered the Society during her fifteen years' membership. Her eloquence, accomplishments, and high character were invaluable to the movement. And her absence will of course be felt. At this moment the Society is passing under a heavy cloud. I assumed the Presidency, which I did not seek, in a time of adversity. Mr. Bradlaugh's leadership is summarily ended by a break-down of his health, Mrs. Besant goes over to Theosophy and leaves us, and the Society's finances suffer a heavy loss at the same time. Still, I am not discouraged. I believe in the future of the Freethought party. If I fail or fall in the struggle, the party will go on, and ultimately prosper.

Mrs. Besant hopes the Society will not degenerate into a mere sect. But it always was a sect, and it will remain so until its principles triumph. Those principles were drawn up as they now stand with Mrs. Besant's assistance. She was aware that a declaration of adhesion to them was indispenable to membership. In that sense the Society will remain a sect, but I hope in no other sense. And I do not believe I have given any reasonable cause for thinking otherwise.

G. W. FOOTE.

THE NIGHTMARE OF THEOLOGY.

THEOLOGIANS are continually proclaiming their belief in an infinite spirit; and in addition to this infinite spirit pervading the whole of the universe, they profess to believe in an infinite number of infinite spirits, which take possession of human bodies and act upon them in a similar manner to a musician who performs upon an instrument.

But is it not a contradiction in terms to talk of an infinite spirit, and in the same breath to speak of a number of finite spirits—separate and apart from the one infinite spirit? A God who is everywhere, is a God who is everything, and nothing can be conceived as existing apart from him. Yet this infinite spirit existing everywhere throughout all time is alleged to be the creator and governor of the universe. But if God created the universe, where was he when he did it? Either he must have been in the universe or out of it. If he was in the universe, the universe must have been already in existence—and therefore did not need to be created; on the other hand, if he was not in the universe, but was somewhere outside of it—where is that?

Nature seems boundless. Man can set no limits to it. In whatever direction he turns man finds something, and he is driven irresistibly to the conclusion that something is everywhere; that the universe is infinite, limitless. Now if the universe is everywhere, what room is there for an infinite spirit? Is it possible to have two things in the same place at the same time?

Although theologians tell us that it is absolutely necessary that we should believe in Deity, when we seek to understand what is meant by the term, they gravely inform us that we cannot by searching find out God; that he is incomprehensible, and yet that the evidence of his existence is so plain that every sensible man must be at once convinced. Obviously this is an attempt to beg the question by sheer audacity. If every sensible man is satisfied with the evidence of the existence of Deity, it must be because the evidence appeals to his senses—in other words, the theologian is wrong in saying that God is incomprehensible—because all sensible men are convinced the moment they bring their minds to bear upon the subject. But is this true? Are there not thousands of intelligent unbelievers? Man takes cognisance of the phenomena of nature, these act upon his senses; but the God of the theologians acts upon none of his senses. God is said to be everywhere. Point to a particular object—say, to a table, a building, or a book—and ask your learned divine, are any of these things God? Go on pointing out objects until you have exhausted everything on the earth of which you have any knowledge. Point to the sun, to the moon, and the myriads of stars in the heavens, and press for an answer—are these things God? and the theologian will be bound to say "No."

Digitized by Google

Where, then, is the evidence of God's existence? "Oh," reply the theologians, "the evidence of God's existence is to be found in the order prevailing in the universe." What order? Is an earthquake evidence of order? Are volcanoes, famines, diseases, droughts, evidence of order?

The truth is, per se, there is neither order nor disorder in the universe. Nature goes right to her end, ruthlessly mowing down whatever happens to be in the way. A thunderbolt falls. In its descent it is just as likely to kill a priest as a publican, a bishop as a sportsman, if they happen to be in the road. A shipload of soldiers are as safe in a storm as a similar number of parsons. Nature has no respect for persons; she is perfectly impartial in all her actions; she treats the Freethinker as kindly as the Christian, and at times she treats them both with equal cruelty. Nature kills us all once, and sometimes by the most cruel and insidious methods it is possible to conceive. Nature starves millions of creatures that are born into the world; others she freezes, burns or drowns; indeed Nature's methods are so cruel that there is scarcely an animal whose existence is not dependent upon the destruction of others. If God is behind Nature, directing her, he is the cause of these horrors. What order, we may ask, can be seen in this?

The fact is, man calls that order which affects him pleasantly, and that disorder which affects him painfully. Much of what we call order is the result of man's intelligence. The gods have given us no assistance. Man has learned by a hard and painful experience how to control the forces of Nature, how to use one force to counteract the effects of another—and thus man creates the very results which the theologian points to triumphantly as evidence of harmony.

Now although the theologian talks of harmony in the universe, he is forced to recognise that there is something in the world, the very antithesis of this very evil; and as he regards his God as the embodiment of all that is good, he cannot ascribe the existence of evil to his Deity; he therefore manufactures another being, more powerful than God who is able to frustrate his purposes at every turn.

But who made the Devil? Either he is co-eternal with God, or must have been created. But as God is the only eternal and uncreated being, the Devil must have been created by God. An eccentric gentleman named McGrigor Allan has been writing to the Echo to say that the Devil is a fallen angel. Poor Devil!!! But if the Devil was ever an angel, how came he to fall? Either he must have fallen by the will of Diety or the fall was opposed to God's will. But how can the Devil or anybody else resist the will of an omnipotent being? If the Devil fell by the desire of God then God is the cause of his fall.

Again, if the Devil has fallen, why are not steps taken for his conversion? A story is related of a simple-minded Italian monk, who one day gravely announced to his congregation that by dint of mediation he had discovered a sure way of rendering all men happy. "The Devil," said he, "is the cause of all sin. He it is who tempts men only to have in hell companions of his misery. Let us therefore apply to the Pope, who has the keys of heaven and hell; let us prevail upon him to pray to God, as the head of the whole Church, to consent to a reconciliation with the Devil, to restore him to favor, to reinstate him in his former rank, which cannot fail to put an end to his malicious projects against mankind." Poor, simple-minded monk; he had evidently been bamboozled by his professional brethren, and did not know the value of the Devil to the priesthood. Evidently he was not aware that the Devil was a theological scarecrow, manufactured in an age of ignorance to frighten poor credulous Christians into supporting an incredible creed.

It is nonsense for Christians to talk of man's free will. If God is infinite in power how can man resist his desires? And if an omnipotent God cannot conquer the Devil how can man be expected to triumph over him? The fact is, theology is a nightmare. It is worse than a dream; the effect of a dream wears away with time, especially if the dreamer walks about with his eyes open in the world of fact; but the nightmare of theology clings to one—its effects are felt through generations—and only by a vigorous course of reasoning, and a firm adherence to facts can we gradually eradicate the evil effects of a subtle and poisonous theology from the brain and blood of mankind.

ARTHUR B. MOSS.

HOW TO HELP US.

(1) Get your newsagent to exhibit the Freethinker in his window.
(2) Get your newsagent to take a few copies of the Freethinker and try to sell them, guaranteeing to take the copies that may remain unsold.
(3) Take an extra copy (or more), and circulate it among your acquaintances.
(4) Display, or get displayed, one of our contents-sheets, which are of a convenient size for the purpose. Mr. Forder will send them on application.
(5) Leave a copy of the Freethinker now and then in the train, the car, or the omnibus.
(6) Distribute some of our cheap tracts in your walks abroad, at public meetings, or among the audiences around street-corner preachers.

A NOTE ON EASTER.

The very name of Easter denotes that it is a Pagan festival, and its dependence upon the moon shows that it is an astronomical feast, being, in fact, identical with the Pagan spring feast which celebrated the procreative powers of nature, and, after mourning the death of the sun-god, rejoiced at his resurrection. The early Asiatic Christians celebrated Easter on the fourteenth day of the moon, on whatever day of the week it fell; so that if some years they kept Good Friday, at others they kept Good Monday or Wednesday. These Eastern Christians pretended they had the authority of St. John. The Western Churches used to observe the day of the sun after the fourteenth day of the March moon, and they said St. Peter and St. Paul were their authorities. About the year 190, Victor, Bishop of Rome, presumed to excommunicate those Christians who kept Easter in the Eastern fashion. They held, however, to their custom, until the civil power of Constantine established and enforced uniformity. Even after this a difficulty arose when the fourteenth day of the full moon of March fell on a Sunday. The Eastern Church then celebrated it, but the Western Churches deferred it till the Sunday following.

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY MEETINGS.

LONDON.

Battersea—The Shed of Truth, Prince of Wales's Road, 7.30, a lecture. Social evening every Tuesday.

Bethnal Green—Opposite "Salmon and Ball," Mr. J. Fagan, 11.15, "Is there a God?"

Camberwell—61 New Church Road, S.E., 7.30, Mr. T. Parris, "Why I am a Freethinker."

Claremont Hall, Penton Street, Pentonville Road, N., at 7, Mr. J. M. Robertson, "What Christianity has done."

East London—Mile End Waste, 11.30, Mr. F. Haslam, "The Miracles of the Bible."

Edmonton—Corner of Angel Road, 3, Mr. L. Keen, "Christ and Crime."

Finsbury Park (near the band-stand) 3.30, J. Rowney, "The Resurrection."

Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, E.C., 7, Mrs. Annie Besant, "Easter Day."

Hyde Park, near Marble Arch; 11.15, Mr. H. Courtney, "The Converted Cobbler: a Challenge to the Rev. Hughes Price Hughes."

Milton Hall, Kentish Town Road, N.W., 7.30, Mr. G. W. Foote, "Did Jesus Christ Rise from the Dead?"

West Ham—121 Broadway, Plaistow, Good Friday, soiree: 6, concert; 9, dancing. Sunday, 11-30, a member, "Practical Socialism"; 7, Mr. F. Haslam, "Miracles"; 8.30, music.

Westminster—Old Pimlico Pier, 11.30, Mr. C. J. Hunt, "Christianity and Secularism."

Wood Green—Jolly Butchers' Hill, 11, Socialist speakers.

Woolwich—"Sussex Arms," Assembly Room, 60 Plumstead Road (entrance, Masey Road), 7.30, "Theosophic Facts, Fallacies, and False Pretences," by an Orientalist.

COUNTRY.

Birmingham—Baskerville Hall, Crescent, Mr. R. S. Bransby, 7, "Shelley."

Glasgow Secular Society and Branch of N. S. S, 122 Ingram Street.—6.30, Mr. Ritchie (Edinburgh), "Two Visions of Judgment: Byron and Southey."

Hanley—Secular Hall, 51 John Street, 7, A. Hall, a reading, "How Man Makes Gods."

Hull Branch—No. 2 Room, Friendly Societies' Hall, Albion Street, Mr. Smith, "Why I am an Agnostic."

Liverpool Branch N.S.S., Camden Hall, Camden Street—at 11, Tontine Society; 7, Mr. Harry Smith, secular sermon, "Her House is the Way to Hell" (Prov. vii., 26).

Manchester — Rusholme Road, Oxford Road. Good Friday, 6, ball, gentlemen, 1s. 6d., ladies 1s.; Sunday, see Saturday's Manchester Evening News.

Newcastle-on-Tyne—4 Hall's Court, Newgate Street. Good Friday, in Arcade Assembly Rooms, Pilgrim Street, a grand conversazione and dance, tickets of Mr. Peter Weston, newsagent, or J. Brown, 86 Durham Street, 1s. 6d. The Society's Rooms will be open for the convenience of strangers on Good Friday at 10 a.m.; tea at 4.30. Sunday, 11, meeting of Sunday Music League.

Sheffield—Hall of Science, Rockingham Street, at 3, members' quarterly meeting; 7, special music and other recitals, etc.

South Shields—Captain Duncan's Navigation Schools, King Street; at 7, business meeting.

West Pelton—Co-operative Hall, April 9, 7, Mr. Clarke, "The Childhood of Jesus."

A series of Sunday organ recitals will be given at the Albert Hall from April 6th. Tickets can be obtained from Mr. H. Mills, Secretary National Sunday League, 8 Theobald's Road, W.C.

LECTURERS' ENGAGEMENTS.

Arthur B. Moss, 44 Credon Road, London, S.E. — April 6 (morning), Kingsland Green (evening), Ball's Pond; 13, (morning) Pimlico, (evening) Camberwell. May 18 (morning), Clerkenwell Green, (evening), Ball's Pond; 25, (afternoon) Regent's Park. June 1 (morning), Pimlico; 15, Ball's Pond; 29, Mile End. July 13, Mile End.

Toleman-Garner, 8 Heyworth Road, Stratford, London, E.—May 4 (morning), Mile End Waste; 11, Clerkenwell Green; 18 (afternoon), Regent's Park; 25 (morning), Hyde Park. June 1 (morning), Mile End Waste; 8 (morning), Clerkenwell Green.

James Hooper, 11 Upper Eldon Street, Sneinton, Nottingham.—April 13, Nottingham.

T. Thurlow, 7 Dickson's Villas, Rutland Road, East Ham.—April 13 (evening), Plaistow; 27, Hyde Park.

H. Smith, 3 Breck Place, Breck Road, Everton Road, Liverpool.—April 6, Liverpool; 13, Manchester; 20, Rochdale. May 4, Birmingham.

PROGRESSIVE PUBLISHING CO.'S LIST.

All orders to be sent, with remittance, to R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C. Rate of postage—Orders under 3d., one halfpenny; orders under 6d. one penny. Orders over 6d. post free.

G. W. FOOTE.

	s.	d.
PRISONER FOR BLASPHEMY. Cloth ... ... A Full History of his Three Trials and Twelve Months' Imprisonment. Copies in paper covers, soiled, 6d.	2	6
IS SOCIALISM SOUND? ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant.	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
CHRISTIANITY AND SECULARISM ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. In paper covers.	1	0
Superior edition in cloth	1	6
INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS ... ... Second edition, enlarged.	0	3
Superior edition, in cloth	1	3
DARWIN ON GOD	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0
Contents:—Darwin's Grandfather—Darwin's Father—Darwin's Early Piety—Almost a Clergyman—On Board the "Beagle"—Settling at Down—Death and Burial—Purpose of Pamphlet—Some Objections—Darwin Abandons Christianity—Deism—Creation—Origin of Life—Origin of Man—Animism—A Personal God—Design—Divine Beneficence—Religion and Morality—Agnosticism and Atheism.
DEFENCE OF FREE SPEECH ... ... Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes.	0	4
LETTERS TO JESUS CHRIST	0	4
PHILOSOPHY OF SECULARISM	0	3
THE BIBLE GOD	0	2
THE FOLLY OF PRAYER	0	2
CHRISTIANITY AND PROGRESS ... ... A Reply to Mr. Gladstone.	0	2
WHAT WAS CHRIST? ... ... A Reply to J. S. Mill.	0	2
THE DYING ATHEIST. A Story	0	1
WAS JESUS INSANE? ... ... A searching inquiry into the mental condition of the Prophet of Nazareth.	0	1

G. W. FOOTE and W. P. BALL.

BIBLE HANDBOOK FOR FREETHINKERS AND INQUIRING CHRISTIANS	1	4
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
Sold also in separate parts as follows—
Bible Contradictions ... ... The Contradictions are printed in parallel columns.	0	4
2. Bible Absurdities ... ... All the chief Absurdities from Genesis to Revelation, conveniently and strikingly arranged, with appropriate headlines, giving the point of each absurdity in a sentence.	0	4
3. Bible Atrocities ... ... Containing all the godly wickedness from Genesis to Revelation. Each infamy has a separate headline for easy reference	0	4
4. Bible Immoralities, Indecencies, Obscenities, Broken Promises, and Unfulfilled Prophecies ...	0	4

A

BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY

OF

FREETHINKERS

OF

ALL AGES AND NATIONS.

BY

J. M. WHEELER.

Price 7/6 Handsomely bound in cloth. Price 7/6

THE IMPOSSIBLE CREED

An Open Letter to the

BISHOP OF PETERBOROUGH

By G. W. FOOTE.

Price 2d. Price 2d.

Price 1d. Price 1d.

A LIE IN FIVE CHAPTERS.

THE REV. HUGH PRICE HUGHES'S

CONVERTED ATHEIST

By G. W. Foote.

Should be circulated by Freethinkers who desire to see this pious fraud exposed as widely as possible.

MARRIAGE & DIVORCE

AN AGNOSTIC'S VIEW.

By COL. R. G. INGERSOLL.

2d.] Reprinted from the "North American Review." [2d.

Every Freethinker, Radical or Socialist should read it and circulate it amongst his friends.

Digitized by Google

NOW READY.

LETTERS TO THE CLERGY

FIRST SERIES.

1.—CREATION
To the Bishop of Carlisle.

2.—THE BELIEVING THIEF
To the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

3.—THE ATONEMENT
To the Bishop of Peterborough.

4.—OLD TESTAMENT MORALITY
To the Rev. E. R. Conder, D.D.

5.—INSPIRATION
To the Rev. R. F. Horton, M.A.

6.—CREDENTIALS OF THE GOSPEL
To the Rev. Prof. J. A. Beet.

7.—MIRACLES
To the Rev. Brownlow Maitland, M.A.

8.—PRAYER
To the Rev. T. Teignmouth Shore, M.A.

By G. W. FOOTE.

128pp., in Wrapper. ONE SHILLING.

PRICE TWOPENCE.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC?

A NEW PAMPHLET BY

COLONEL. R. G. INGERSOLL.

2d. Now Ready. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC?

PART II.

By COLONEL INGERSOLL.

NOW READY. NOW READY.

CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS.

A Noble Plea for a Rational Treatment of Prisoners and a Humane Jurisprudence.

BY

COL. R. G. INGERSOLL.

THIRTY-TWO PAGES. PRICE THREEPENCE.

W. J. Rendell's

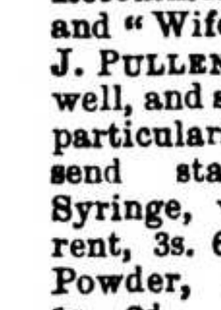
"WIFE'S FRIEND."

Recommended in "Law of Population," and "Wife's Hand Book." Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell Street, Clerkenwell, and supplied per post, 2s. dozen. For particulars of this Malthusian discovery send stamped envelope. Higginson's Syringe, with vertical and reverse current, 3s. 6d. and 4s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. All other Malthusian Appliances. All prices post free.

HARTNOLL,

ENGLISH AND FOREIGN CHEMIST,

1A PICCADILLY



(Under the London Pavilion Music Hall),

LONDON, W.

Hartnoll's Specialities, Appliances and Medicated Preparations are world-renowned.

Spiral, Douche and Latest Improved Syringes.

ESTABLISHED OVER 50 YEARS.

IRETON'S

INDELIBLE JET BLACK MARKING INK

(NO HEATING REQUIRED)

For Rubber Stamps, Stencil, Type or Pen.

PRICE 6d. 1/- and 2/6 per Bottle.

Sample bottle 4d. post free.

IRETON & Co., 92, Gracechurch St., LONDON, E.C.

The largest makers of Rubber Stamps.

Special terms to the Trade.

Dyed with Ireton's Ink, no hope of ever changing my Color

THE BIBLE AND EVOLUTION.

By ARTHUR B. MOSS.

Handsomely Bound in Cloth, 2s. 6d.

A book every Freethinker should possess. A hard subject made easy. The style is simplicity itself. Argument, ridicule and wit in every page. Goes over a wide field. Read and judge for yourselves. Watts and Co., 17 Johnson's Court; Progressive Publishing Co.

Now Ready. Price Sixpence.

Will Shakespeare, Tom Paine, Bob Ingersoll and Charlie Bradlaugh.

"The object is to show that the nicknames used by orthodoxy to slur and belittle the immortal men it so hates, are really pet names—names of endearment and not of reproach. This is another instance where pious malice maims its own carcase—cuts off its own nose, as it were—in its efforts to carve the ungodly. The author makes out his case."—"Ironclad Age."

"The work shows considerable research, and will be found interesting."—"Secular Thought."

"This pamphlet is from the pen of a veteran Freethought scholar, and is very good reading."—"Freethinker."

R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C.

VEGETERIAN FALLACIES. By Dr. C. R. DRYSDALE. A paper read at the Health Congress, Hastings, 1889; with opinions of Sir Edwin Chadwick and several Doctors, in course of discussion. Price 2d.; post free 2½d. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, E.C.

FOR SALE, Book, Stationery and News Business. Only Freethought booksellers' in Hull. 35 years same hands; low rent; £200 required. Address "Genuine," 1 Suffolk Row, Hull.

TO MARRIED PEOPLE.

A New and Enlarged

ILLUSTRATED LIST OF MALTHUSIAN APPLIANCES AND SPECIALITIES

Will be forwarded per return of post on receipt of 1d. stamp.

DAVIES, CHEMIST,

101 PARK LANE, LEEDS.

THE FAMILY LIMIT,

OR,

THE QUININE TABLOID,

1s. 6d. per doz., post free.

For further Particulars send stamped directed envelope to

A. MOSS, 36 Upper Park Street,

ISLINGTON, LONDON, N.

GRATIS.

AN ILLUSTRATED 16-PAGE PAMPHLET, containing extracts from the utterances of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Manchester; the Revs. T. R. Malthus, A. E. Whatham, M. J. Savage, Leonard Dawson,—Lawton, H. R. Haweis; the following Doctors—Allbutt, Allinson, Armstrong, Drysdale, Pye Chavasse, E. B. Foote, Nicholls, Wilder, Raciborski, Napheys and Reamy. Also Plato, Aristotle, Sismondi, Huxley, Mill, and numerous others. Should be read by every married and marriageable person. Sent on receipt of stamped addressed envelope by J. R. HOLMES, Hanney, Wantage, Berks.

TESTIMONIALS (Extracts from).

"The one you sent me some months since is

Quite Worn Out

with being lent to so many friends."

"Some of us have paid five shillings for less than one-tenth of the information."

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each, upper or lower set, £1. Best quality, 4s. each, upper or lower, £2, completed in four hours when required, repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18c. gold 15s.; stopping, 2s. 6d. extraction, 1s. painless by gas, 5s.

Printed and Published by G. W. Foote, [illegible] cutter Street Farringdon Street, Lo[illegible]

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

Vol. X.—No. 15.] SUNDAY, APRIL 13, 1890. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

MR. GLADSTONE'S ROCK OF SCRIPTURE.

[CONCLUDED.]

MR. GLADSTONE is so far, indeed, from yielding without reserve to the conclusions of destructive criticism, that he warns his readers against an excessive alarm. "Those conclusions," he says, "appear to be in a great measure floating and uncertain, the subject of manifold controversy, and secondly they seem to shift and vary with rapidity in the minds of those who hold them." Then, with the dexterity of the old parliamentary hand, he introduces a lecture by Mr. Margoliouth, the Laudian Professor of Arabic at Oxford, who thinks it possible to reconstruct the Semitic original of the Book of Ecclesiastes, and who is for giving Rabbinical Hebrew a greater antiquity than is usually assigned to it. This would, of course, involve a greater antiquity for Middle and Ancient Hebrew, and by such means the Pentateuch and the "historical" books might be made a century or two older than is allowed in the current chronology. Here, then, says Mr. Gladstone, there is "war, waged on critical grounds, in the critical camp;" and he thinks the spectator will be "the more hardened in his determination not to rush prematurely to final conclusions."

This bit of dexterity is perhaps an effective piece of ad populum rhetoric. But is it worthy of Mr. Gladstone? His friend, Professor Max Müller, in the recent volume of Gifford lectures, utters an anticipative protest against this infatuation. "To say that critics disagree among themselves," he remarks, "and that they need not be listened to till they agree, is one of those lazy commonplaces which no true scholar would dare to employ." It is true that Mr. Gladstone does not quite go to this length, but that is where his observations will lead the orthodox reader.

We have called Mr. Gladstone's attitude "infatuation." It is a strong word, but is it not justified? No one doubts that critics disagree. But do they not also agree? Is it not a fact that, in the mass, they move farther and farther from the orthodox position? Certainly they debate many points as they progress, but they keep moving in the same direction; and it is worse than idle for Mr. Gladstone to obscure this fact by directing attention to their discussions along the road. He forgets that perfect harmony is not to be expected. It has not been arrived at in regard to the Greek classics—for instance, Homer—which have been discussed with the greatest freedom, as well as by the keenest intellects, ever since the Renaissance; and how could it be hoped for in regard to the Bible, which has only been scientifically studied during the last half century? Another difficulty is that most of the critics have eaten orthodox bread, and have thus been deterred from free and fearless movement by the severe law of self-preservation.

The word "infatuation," as applied to Mr. Gladstone's attitude, is further justified by a cursory view of the problem which the critics are solving. The Old Testament, if we except the so-called Apocrypha, is the whole extant Jewish literature before the time of Christ. Probably there were hundreds, possibly thousands, of other writings, but they have all perished. The consequence is that comparative Hebrew is a very different study from comparative Greek. All the Jewish books treat of one subject—religion. This dreadfully narrows the field of research. And it is still further narrowed, as well as obscured, by the absence of a mass of contemporary writings in any one age, that would throw light upon each other. Thus the study of comparative Hebrew is almost entirely internal to the Bible, and its difficulties are immense. Were not the critics testing the foundations of the greatest historic religion, their labors—so recondite, so painful, and so minute—would be a frightful waste of human energy.

Well, these critics, working at such a task, which is not half finished, are not quite harmonious. But with what an ill grace does this come from a politician like Mr. Gladstone! The Irish problem, for intricacy and obscurity, is nothing to the problem of the date and authorship of the Old Testament books. Yet although it has been before Mr. Gladstone ever since he entered parliament; although it has been a burning question during the fifty years of his public life; and although the data for a solution were always at hand; he has only "found salvation" at the eleventh hour. He might reply, of course, that he has always been moving in one direction. But that is precisely what may be said of the body of destructive critics.

The very illustration Mr. Gladstone gives of the "floating and uncertain conclusions" of these gentlemen is damnifying to his argument. Wellhausen, in editing the work of Bleek, accepted "in a great degree the genuineness of the Davidic Psalms contained in the First Book of the Psalter," but he has since abandoned this position, and he "brings down the general body of the Psalms to a date very greatly below that of the Babylonic exile." Now if Wellhausen had first held the Psalms to be modern, and afterwards held them to be ancient, he would have served Mr. Gladstone's purpose. But Wellhausen's movement has been in the opposite direction. Like other Biblical critics, the farther he goes the farther he leaves the orthodox position behind him. Surely the old parliamentary hand must have nodded when he introduced this fatal illustration.

But Mr. Gladstone's girds at the critics are, after all, but reassuring asides to his readers. He does not seriously contest that the Bible must henceforth be regarded in a new light, and he sets himself to the task of showing that the grand old book is still as safe and sound as ever. To this end he calls upon his readers to "look broadly and largely at the subject of Holy Scripture." "I ask them," he repeats, "to look at the subject as they would look at the British Constitution or at the poetry of Shakespeare." But this overlooks the vast difference between revelation and the productions of human genius. We may respect the British Constitution as fairly good in the circumstances. We may revere the work of Shakespeare in spite of its imperfections. But does Mr. Gladstone mean that we can adopt such an attitude towards the revelation of God? It is idle to tell us that God's method with us is "one of sufficiency not of perfection"? The Bible is no more sufficient than it is perfect. It may, of course, be sufficient for those who read into it the mental and moral discoveries of later ages. But taken as it stands it is clearly insufficient. Neither slavery nor polygamy, for instance, does it ever mention with the slightest disapproval. We have outgrown both, not by means of the Bible, but in spite of it. On the other hand, the "sacred volume" contains a host of cruel, brutal, and filthy passages, which a wise and good Being would never have inserted in a revelation which he intended for future ages of refinement. This is a truth which Mr. Gladstone perceives, and he attempts to drown it in a torrent of rhetoric.

Digitized by Google

"Even the moral problems, which may be raised as to particular portions of the volume, and which may not have found any absolute and certain solution, are lost in the comprehensive contemplation of its general strain, its immeasurable loftiness of aim," etc., etc.

What is this, however, but a palpable evasion of the sceptic's argument? Loftiness of aim is obvious in the works of Plato, Aristotle, Marcus Aurelius. Spinoza, and other great writers; and "immeasurable" is simply a question-begging epithet. Besides, no one contends that the Bible was written for the purpose of teaching immorality. Then, as to "comprehensive contemplation," we suspect it means seeing what you want to see, and missing everything else. A prisoner in the dock, charged with murder, and clearly proved guilty, might demand to be tried by a "comprehensive contemplation" of his whole life, and offer to produce a hundred witnesses to show that on ever so many other days than the one on which he committed the murder he was an honest and respectable citizen. But the plea would not prevent a verdict of Guilty.

It is a pity that Mr. Gladstone did not give a few illustrations of this "broad view" and "comprehensive contemplation." He does, however, deal slightly with the Book of Genesis.

"With regard to the Book of Genesis, the admission which has been made implies nothing adverse to the truth of the traditions it embodies, nothing adverse to their antiquity, nothing which excludes or discredits the idea of their having formed part of a primitive revelation, simultaneous or successive. The forms of expression may have changed yet the substance may remain with an altered literary form, as some scholars have thought (not, I believe rightly) that the diction and modelling of the Homeric Poems is comparatively modern, and yet the matter they embody may belong to a remote antiquity."

Now it is difficult to think that Mr. Gladstone, when he wrote this passage, had the details of the problem in his mind. If the Book of Genesis was written many centuries after the time of Moses by unknown hands, it is certainly open for any person to assert that its statements may nevertheless be true. There is no limit to the license of affirmation. But where is the evidence? We venture to say there is not a tittle. On the contrary, there is the strongest negative evidence against the assertion. Never once, in the history of the Judges, or the reigns of the early kings, including David and Solomon, is allusion made to the mythology of Genesis, any more than to the Mosaic law. Mr. Gladstone has therefore not only to produce some positive evidence of his "may be," but to dispose of the strong negative evidence to the contrary. For the rest, "traditions" are not revelation, nor is their truth proved by their "antiquity"; and a primitive revelation is an idle dream in the light of Evolution.

Nothing is clearer than that the mythology of Genesis and the chief part of the Mosaic law belong to the post-exile period. The Jews were never an inventive people. They did invent the synagogue, which is the original of the Christian church or chapel; but what else can they claim as theirs? They contributed to Christianity its spirit of fanaticism and its apparatus of the Sunday meeting-place. All the rest was contributed, directly or indirectly, by Babylon, Persia, Egypt, and Greece.

Mr. Gladstone promises, in future articles, to show that the Bible is consistent with science, that it contains nothing offensive to the moral sense, that man's progress through the ages has not been purely natural, and that the Bible stands altogether apart from the other sacred books of the world. He has evidently undertaken "a large order," and we shall be interested in watching its execution.

Meanwhile we can only stand aghast at his concluding statement that "the operations of criticism, properly so called, affecting as they do the literary form of the books, leave the questions of history, miracle, revelation, substantially where they found them." This is equivalent to saying that writings which come into existence hundreds of years after the events they record are as good as contemporary documents. It is like saying that traditions about Julius Cæsar, written down for the first time in the age of Charlemagne, would have the value of Suetonius, the Speeches and Letters of Cicero, and Cæsar's "Commentaries." It is, further, an assumption, which is unspeakably monstrous, that the gossip of centuries is excellent evidence of the truth of a miracle.

We must likewise point out the wild rhetoric of the assertion that "the Bible invites, attracts, and commands the adhesion of mankind." It does not command the adhesion of Mr. Gladstone's first political lieutenant, Mr. John Morley. It does not command the adhesion of 160,000,000 Hindus, 155,000,000 Muhammedans, and 500,000,000 Buddhists. It does command the adhesion—such as it is—of 350,000,000 Christians. And that adhesion is "attracted" by the well-nigh irresistible force of early training, and "invited" by the political and social ostracism—if not the active persecution—of every open dissenter. With such advantages "Jack the Giant Killer" might command the adhesion of mankind.

Towards the close of his article Mr. Gladstone refers to the scepticism or indifference of the working classes. There is an impression that they have largely lost their hold upon the Christian creed. But, while admitting that this is to some extent true, Mr. Gladstone denies that, amongst us, they have "lost respect for the Christian religion, or for its ministers; or that they desire their children to be brought up otherwise than in the knowledge and practice of it." Their perversion simply means that "their positive, distinct acceptance of the articles of the Creed, and their sense of the dignity and value of the Sacred Record, are blunted or effaced." But this is a grandiose way of saying that they are neither Bibliolators nor Christians.

Curiously enough, Mr. Gladstone does not find this scepticism or indifference among the "leisured and better provided classes." Surely he must be basking in a kind of fool's paradise. It may be that his acquaintances are chary of troubling him with heterodox opinions. Even Mr. Morley may eschew Diderot and Voltaire in conversing with his orthodox chief. Yet it is clear that educated society is honeycombed with scepticism. And Mr. Gladstone has an inkling of the fact. Why else should he refer to "the wide disparagement of the Holy Scriptures recently observable in the surface currents of prevalent opinion"?

Mr. Gladstone is struck by the fact that the "poor" who first welcomed Christianity are now so indifferent to it. He says it "affords much matter for meditation." But he has himself unconsciously solved the problem. He remarks that there were few obstacles in the way of the poor becoming Christians in the primitive ages. "They had by contrast," he says, "more palpable interests in the promise of the life to come, as compared with the possession of the life that now is." Precisely so. They eagerly embraced the fine promises of Christianity, and, as happiness seemed impossible for them on earth, they welcomed the prospect of it in heaven. Those who mourned and those who hungered were to be comforted and filled—in the sweet by and bye. But the "poor" have found out the trick; and now, instead of yearning for the celestial shadow, they are trying to secure the earthly substance. On the other hand, the wealthy are averse to change. Many of them have as much "faith" as the present writer, but they support Christianity as the strongest conservative agent. They resemble old Lord Eldon, who denied being a pillar of the Church, and exclaimed, "No, I am a buttress, I prop it up outside."

Digitized by Google

Here we leave Mr. Gladstone standing on his impregnable rock. It has been disintegrated by all sorts of mines and explosives during the past century; Science, scholarship, morality, and common sense have all been busily at work; and, although there is no great outward solution of continuity, and the rock will last Mr. Gladstone's time, the collapse is approaching. Mr. Gladstone hears the rumbling and cracking, or he would not strive to reassure the faithful; and those who are familiar with the agencies at work know that the "impregnable rock" bears within itself all the elements of ruin.

G. W. FOOTE.

SAUL'S SPIRITUAL SEANCE AT ENDOR.

(1 Sam. xxviii.)

"Our own time has revived a group of beliefs and practices which have their roots deep in the very stratum of early philosophy, where witchcraft makes its first appearance. This group of beliefs and practices constitutes what is now commonly known as Spiritualism."—Dr. E. B. Tylor, Primitive Culture, vol i., p. 128.

The oldest portions of the Old Testament scriptures are imbedded in the Book of Judges and the Books of Samuel. Few, indeed, of these narratives throw more light on the early belief of the Jews than the story of Saul and the witch of Endor. It is hardly necessary to recount the story, which is told with a vigor and simplicity showing its antiquity and genuineness. Saul, who had incurred Samuel's enmity by refusing to slay the king Agag, after the death of the prophet, found troubles come upon him. Alarmed at the strength of his enemies, the Philistines, he "enquired of the Lord." But the Lord was not at home. At any rate, he "answered him not, neither by dreams, nor by Urim, nor by prophets." The legitimate modes of learning one's fortune being thus shut up, Saul sought in disguise and by night a woman who had an ob, or familiar spirit. Now Saul had done his best to suppress witchcraft, having "put away those who had familiar spirits, and the wizards out of the land." So when he said to the witch, "I pray thee divine unto me by the familiar spirit and bring him up whom I shall name unto thee," the woman was afraid, and asked if he laid a snare for her. Saul swore hard and fast he would not hurt her, and it is evident from his question he believed in her powers of necromancy by the aid of the familiar spirit. This alone shows that the Jews, like all uncivilised people, and many who call themselves civilised, believed in ghosts and the possibility of their return, but, as we shall see, it does not imply that they believed in future rewards and punishments. Saul's expectations were not disappointed. He asked to see Samuel, and up Samuel came. He asked what she saw, and she said Elohim, or as we have it, "gods ascending out of the earth." In this fact that the same word in Hebrew is used for ghosts and for gods, we have the most important light upon the origin of all theology.

The modern Christian of course believes that Samuel as a holy prophet dwells in heaven above, and may wonder, if he thinks of the narrative at all, why he should be recalled from his abode of bliss and placed under the magic control of this weird, not to say scandalous, female. But Samuel came up, not down from heaven, in accordance, of course, with the old belief that Sheol, or the underworld, was beneath the earth.

Christian commentators have resorted to a deal of shuffling and wriggling to escape the difficulties of this story, and its endorsement of the superstition of witchcraft. The Speaker's Commentary suggests that the Witch of Endor was a female ventriloquist, but, disingenuously, does not explain that ventriloquists in ancient times were really supposed to have a spirit rumbling or talking inside of their bodies. As Dr. E. B. Tylor says in that great storehouse of savage beliefs, Primitive Culture, "To this day in China one may get an oracular response from a spirit apparently talking out of a medium's stomach, for a fee of about twopence-halfpenny."

Some make out, because Saul at first asked the woman what she saw, that, as at many modern séances, it was only the medium who saw the ghost, and Saul only knew who it was through her, else why should he have asked her what form Samuel had?—which elicited the not very detailed reply of "an old man cometh up; and he is covered with a mantle"—that is, we suppose, with the ghost of a mantle. She did the seeing and he the hearing. But it says "Saul perceived it was Samuel," and prostrated himself, which he would hardly have done at a description. Indeed the whole narrative is inconsistent with the modern theory of imposture on the part of the witch. Had this been the explanation, the writer should have said so plainly. He should have said her terror was pretended, that the apparition was unreal, and that Saul trembled at the woman's words, whereas it is plainly declared that "he was sore afraid because of the words of Samuel." Moreover, and this is decisive, the spirit utters a prophecy—not an encouraging, but a gloomy one—which was exactly fulfilled.

All this shows the writer was saturated in supernaturalism. He never uses an expression indicating a shadow of a ghost of a doubt of the ghost. He might easily have said, the whole thing was deceit. He does not, for he believed in witchcraft like the priests who ordered "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live." One little circumstance shows his sympathy. Samuel says: "Why hast thou disquieted me to bring me up?" This is quite in consonance with savage belief that spirits should not be disturbed. Here was Samuel quietly buried in Ramah, some fifty miles off, taking his comfortable nap, may be for milleniums in Sheol, when the old woman's incantations bustle him out of his grave and transport him to Endor. No wonder he felt disquieted and prophesied vengeance to Saul and to his sons, "because thou obeyedst not the voice of the Lord nor executedest his fierce wrath upon Amalek."*

Matthew Henry and other commentators think that the person who presented himself to Saul was not Samuel, but Satan assuming his appearance. Those who believe in Satan, and that he can transform himself into an angel of light (2 Cor. xi., 14), cannot refuse to credit the possibility of this. Folks with that comfortable belief can credit anything. To sensible people it is scarcely necessary to say there is nothing about Satan in the narrative, nor any conceivable reason why he should be credited with a true prophecy. The words uttered are declared to be the words of Samuel.

* The seventeenth verse stupidly reads "The Lord hath done to him as he spake by me." The LXX. and Vulgate more sensibly reads to thee.

Digitized by Google

Much is said of Saul's wickedness, but the only wickedness attributed to him is his mercy in not executing God's fierce wrath. If it was wicked to seek the old woman, it is curious God should grant the object he was seeking, by raising up one of his own holy servants. Why did the Lord employ such an agency? It looks very much like sanctioning necromancy. And further if a spirit returned from the dead to tell Saul he should die and go to Sheol—where Samuel was, for he says "to-morrow shalt thou and thy sons be with me"—why should not spirits now return to tell us we are immortal? If the witch of Endor could raise spirits why not Lottie Fowler or Mr. Eglinton? Such are the arguments of the spiritists. We venture to think they cannot be answered by the orthodox. To us, however, the fact that the beliefs of the spiritists find their countenance in the beliefs of savages like the early Jews is their sufficent refutation. Spiritism, as Dr. Tylor says, is but a revival of old savage animism.

J. M. WHEELER.

THE NATIONAL SECULAR SOCIETY'S CONFERENCE.

BY an unhappy coincidence, all the Branches that nominated Newcastle, Bradford, Huddersfield, and Southampton for the holding of the Conference, omitted to comply with the condition of inquiring whether the Branches in those towns were able and willing to undertake the arrangements. This was discovered almost accidentally. On learning it I desired Mr. Forder to summon a special Executive meeting. But, owing to the Easter holidays, such a meeting could not well be held before Thursday, April 10. In the circumstances, as there was no time to be lost, I deemed it my duty to take immediate action. I therefore wrote to the Manchester Branch, asking whether it would, if required, arrange for the holding of the Conference in its hall. Mr. Hemingway called a committee meeting within forty-eight hours, and the answer was "Yes." Thereupon I ventured to fix the Conference at Manchester, and I have no doubt the Executive will approve of my decision. I am sorry the emergency obliged me to strain my powers, but I could not stand on punctilios in face of a grave danger. I now appeal to the Branches and the individual members of the National Secular Society to make the Conference a success. All resolutions for the Agenda must be sent in before the end of April.

G. W. FOOTE (President).

HE LOVED TO STEAL.

An amusing incident occurred in one of our down-East churches a few months ago. The clergyman gave out the hymn:

I love to steal awhile away
From every cumbring care,
And spend the hour of setting day
In humble, grateful prayer.

The regular chorister being absent, the duty devolved upon Deacon M., who commenced "I love to steal," and then broke down. Raising his voice a little higher, he then sung, "I love to steal." As before, he concluded he had got the wrong pitch; and deploring that he had not his "pitch-tuner," he determined to succeed next time. All the old ladies were tittering behind their fans, while the faces of the "young ones" were in a broad grin.

At length, after a desperate cough, he roared out, "I love to steal." The effort was too much, Everyone but the clergyman was laughing. He arose and said: "Seeing our brother's propensities, let us pray." It is needless to add that but few of the congregation heard the prayer.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

"I noticed," said old Misfit, as he walked out of church after service, "that the choir made an honest acknowledgment in one of the responses." "Indeed," said Mr. Pewholder, "in what part of the services was that?' "Why, where they all said 'We are miserable singers.'"

ACID DROPS.

Good Friday is the day when, according to Carlyle, Christians celebrate the death of their Redeemer by getting drunk. Anyhow the majority of them, at least in London, do not look very mournful on this dread anniversary. We took a walk round Hampstead on Good Friday afternoon and saw thousands of people—most of whom, we suspect, would have hissed a Freethought speaker—enjoying the brilliant sunshine like Pagans. Concertinas, harps and fiddles were playing, swings were doing a roaring trade, and drums drew attention to various well-patronised shows. The ever-shifting crowds were as merry as the bunting that fluttered on the flag-staff. And over all was the miraculous soft blue sky, high and cloudless, and so stedfast that as you looked up through the dark tree-tops they seemed painted against the firmament. The whole scene was as far removed as possible from the drama of Calvary. And perhaps it was only the peripatetic infidel who remembered the words "By thine agony and bloody sweat, by thy cross and passion."

Dr. Parker gave Moses a lift on Good Friday morning. As usual he whipped up a big audience by writing a mysterious letter to the press, the Christian World being this time the recipient of his oracular communication. According to the Saturday papers, the sermon was directed against the scientific gentlemen who think they can improve on the Mosaic account of the universe. Well now, perhaps Dr. Parker doesn't know it, but hundreds of thousands of schoolboys are able to correct the mistakes of Moses. Dr. Parker may give the old Hebrew a leg-up, but he will never get him over the stile of Evolution.

Canon Liddon, preaching the Easter sermon at St. Paul's, administered a withering rebuke to the scientists who will not recognise God's right to suspend his own laws. But the worthy Canon mistakes the argument. Scientists are quite ready to investigate a good sound miracle; in fact, some of them are yearning for the opportunity; but to use the language of the Rev. Dr. Littledale, the Lord is very reluctant to become the subject of a scientific experiment.

Some of the big London churches had a running service on the double or treble shift system on Good Friday. But the service was mostly musical, and the clergy are cheating themselves into the belief that all the folk who drop in to hear good music are devoted believers.

On Good Friday, they showed at the Church of Notre Dame an alleged scrap of the seamless garment the prophet of Nazareth went about in—a sort of long bathing dress made of camel's hair, measuring five feet in length and four in breadth, with loose short sleeves. No wonder crowds followed him.

The Passion Play in which Sarah Bernhardt was to appear as the Virgin Mary, being prohibited by the Censor, Sarah read the rôle at the Winter Circus in Paris on Good Friday. The gifted actress threw all her genius into the reading, but without stage accessories it simply wearied the audience, who were only moved to express their impatience with the mother of Christ and her many sorrows.

It is reported that the Roman Catholics will boycott Sarah Bernhardt when she performs in London. They want to teach her that she must not play with sacred subjects. But the divine Sarah is a very self-willed lady, and we guess she will "gang her ain gate."

Richard Davies was hung on Tuesday morning. His last words were "O Lord, to thee I commend thy spirit, and receive it for Christ's sake." He appears to have been pretty certain that he was going to heaven. Indeed, he set up as a kind of authority on emigration to that locality. He assured his brother George that he would never go to heaven unless he corroborated Richard's account of the murder. When we further consider the fine distinction he drew between murdering his father and helping George to do it, we incline to think a first-rate Jesuit was lost in Richard Davies.

The young murderer's last pious letter from prison very much resembles the one previously published. He expects to enjoy God's mercy, but not a word of pity escapes him for the probable fate of his father. Whether the murdered man went to hell or not does not seem to have caused the parricide a moment's trouble. Were we not right in saying that such "repentance" is a bit of sublime selfishness? Had it been impossible to prove the murderer's guilt, it is highly probable that he would have wasted little time in remorse; and the whole tone of his "sorrow" only shows that religion invariably appeals to man's innate selfishness.

Digitized by Google

Opposed as we are to capital punishment, we object to the hanging of Richard Davies. We fail to see, however, why those who would retain the death penalty were so clamorous for a reprieve. Granted that the elder Davies was a wretched, cruel despot; is it not clear that the family had a better remedy than murder? And was not the murder conceived and carried out deliberately, instead of being perpetrated in the heat of passion? The young men were not bound to live with their father. They could have gone and earned their own bread. Mrs. Davies herself could have obtained redress in a magistrate's court. Of course that would have been washing the family linen in public. But is it not washed in public now with a vengeance?

Those who believe that Richard Davies has gone to heaven are very inconsistent in denouncing the Home Secretary. Mr. Matthews did him a good turn by declining to reprieve him. Instead of being miserable in a convict establishment, Richard Davies is drinking his first draughts of deathless felicity in the New Jerusalem. So says theology. But the instinct of human nature is against it. Heaven is a good thing in reserve, but practical philosophy says, "Keep out of it as long as you can."

Dr. J. A. Rentoul, the newly-elected Unionist M.P. for East Down, says that "it was the Bible which taught men to think for themselves." Yes, and just to encourage them it says, "He that believeth and is baptised shall be saved and he that believeth not shall be damned."

According to Dr. Talmage, Gladstone said to him when in England, "Do you have any of that dreadful Agnosticism in America?" It is barely credible that the Grand Old Man can have asked so silly a question as this after his encounter in the North American Review with Colonel Ingersoll. If our great statesman can so readily forget the thrashing he then received from an American Agnostic, he must have one of the happiest memories in the world.

A crazy evangelist, named J. R. Rice and called "the boy preacher," is working out a ten dollar fine for obstructing the streets of Oakland. He did not have the money to pay his fine, and so was very appropriately set at work with hoe and broom cleaning the streets where he had formerly harangued.—Freethought.

The Rev. Alex. Grant, pastor of a Winnepeg Church, is reported to have created a great sensation by declaring that "he would not be surprised if at the Judgment, when all is revealed, it was found that the churches had been instrumental in sending more people to hell than to heaven." The suspicion that Satan inserted many things into the Bible casting reflections upon the character of God, is followed by the one that he rigs the churches in the interests of Sheol. We always thought they were on the wrong track.

Two large beams of the parish church of Helpringham, Lincolnshire, fell into the body of the church, smashing the pews and church furniture. Fortunately the Lord's house was empty of people.

Poor little Annie Brightling, aged six, was burnt to death at Welling on Thursday morning. She had been taught that she had a friend in Jesus, and most likely she prayed to him before going to bed. But Jesus did not help his little friend when the house caught fire. Perhaps he was too busy looking after the arrangements for his funeral anniversary.

The leader of a lot of Second Adventists in Georgia is collecting from each of his dupes 5 dols. with which to fly to heaven with. There are nearly four hundred of the sect, and if the leader succeeds in collecting 5 dols. apiece from his entire flock he will have a neat little sum to fly away with himself.

Mr. C. R. Parsons, leader of an adult Bible class at Bristol, claims to have broken up an infidel club there. Is this correct? It is certain that the city where the Oracle of Reason was first started ought to show more activity.

Who first doubled the Cape of Good Hope? In this enlightened age the reply of every schoolboy to this query will be, "Why, Vasco de Gama, to be sure." In Portugal, however, a much more ancient navigator has been mentioned. Antonio Vieira (1608—1697), a preacher of great renown at Lisbon, said in one of his sermons: "One man only passed the Cape of Good Hope before the Portuguese. And who was he? and how? It was Jonah in the whale's belly! The whale went out of the Mediterranean, because he had no other course; he kept to the west of Africa on the left, scoured along Ethiopia, passed by Arabia, took port in the Euphrates on the shores of Nineveh, and, making his tongue serve as a plank, landed the prophet there." Southey, upon reading this, remarked: "The sermons of Vieira, more than any other compositions in any language, display the strength and weakness of the human mind."

The good old Bible institution is dying in its last citadel. Mr. Woodruff, the leader of the Utah polygamists, has declared that the days of divine revelation are over; and this, coming from a man supposed to be himself inspired, has fallen like a bombshell in the Mormon camp. They expect their leader will go from bad to worse in his heresy, and will shortly "go for" polygamy itself.

Ally Sloper quotes the following from a West Indian newspaper dated April 10, 1820. It was taken from a funeral sermon by a negro preacher, Sam Quaco:—"A man dat bon ob a woman hab not long time to lib. He troble ebery day too much. He grow up like a plantin. He cut down like a banana. Pose de man do bad he get bad. Pose he do good, he go to de place call him Glolio, where Goramity stans upon a top, and Debble on a bottom. Pose he do bad, he go to de place call him Hell, where he mot burn like a peppercon. He call for drink of wara: no man give him a drop of wara to cool him dam-tongue. So breren Goramity bless you all. Amen."

The Birmingham Daily Gazette prints a letter from T. H. Aston, a local Christian, who "praises God" for the blows which have recently fallen upon the National Secular Society. This gentleman forgets that Mr. Bradlaugh is still a member of the Society, and that the Freethought party is better organised and more active as this moment than it has been for a considerable time. He also forgets that the circulation of the Freethinker is steadily increasing, and that this fact belies all his foolish prognostics.

Mrs. Besant's resignation is of course a blow, but the blow fell before Mr. Bradlaugh's resignation of the Presidency, when she became a leader of Theosophy and ceased attending the Executive meetings. Certainly the Society loses five pounds per month through Mr. Bradlaugh's breakdown, but up to the present the increased receipts have more than compensated for the loss, and new members are being enrolled more rapidly than ever. Mr. Aston is evidently shouting a long while before he is out of the wood.

Mr. Aston flatters himself that he was a true prophet with regard to Mrs. Besant. He predicted, what anyone with common gumption could see, that Theosophy would lead her away from Secularism. "Now it appears," he says, "that I was accurate in my estimate, for in the columns of the Spiritualist weekly, The Two Worlds, I notice the name of Mrs. Besant included among the 'prospective speakers' at Spiritualist meetings during April. Thus the Atheist platform is abandoned, and we find her in association with a system that is without doubt modern witchcraft, but under a more respectable name."

According to this funny gentleman Mrs. Besant has become a witch. Well, if that be true, why does he "thank God" that she is lost to the N. S. S.?

Digitized by Google

The Tithe Bill, which has been pretty well described as a bill to set by the ears landlords, tenants and ratepayers for the benefit of parsons, doesn't satisfy the black parasites after all. They complain that they will no longer have the right to distrain on the land, and that consequently tithes will decrease in value.

That the clergy have long ceased to discharge the functions for which the tithes were originally given is a flagrant fact. Those purposes included the relief of the poor, the repair of the churches, and very often the saying of masses for the dead.

"How to bring a fresh eye to the reading of the Bible" was the title of a recent address in Glasgow by the Rev. Alexander Whyte. Our opinion is that people don't want a fresh eye for the business. All they require is to use their two old ones a little better. To do this they must cast away their theological spectacles.

The contrast between the industry and prosperity of the North of Ireland and the thriftlessness and poverty of the South which has better soil, to which Mr. T. W. Russell calls attention in the Nineteenth Century, suggests to us a different conclusion from that of Mr. Russell. His belief is simply that the lack of the law-abiding spirit has frightened capital away. We trace the turbulence, ignorance and absence of enterprise in the South to its devotion to a religion which encourages population and preaches content while fostering disaffection and hatred to those of a different faith.

Mr. W. S. Lilly, the Romanist, fights Herbert Spencer's Agnosticism in the Nineteenth Century with the argument of the Atheist. He says the very nature of intelligence forbids such a conception of the Absolute as that which Mr. Spencer presents under the name of the Unknownable. If, as Mr. Spencer insists, our experience is only conditioned, assuredly we are not justified in asserting an unconditioned existence in any form, conceivable or inconceivable. Astute Roman Catholics like Mr. Lilly always seek to make the issue clear. Either their church or atheism. They fancy people will be frightened, and retreat into the church. Those who are logical, however, will simply press forward and accept the issue.

Lord Penzance thinks that to suspend the Rev. George Collins the Vicar of Charlesworth for three months is sufficient punishment for his having been intoxicated, and whilst in that condition having been uproariously riotous. The object of the sentence he observed was that time might be allowed for the recollection of his conduct to subside or pass away.

THE Archbishop of Servia will be declared a bankrupt if Jacob Braun, a banker, of Buda Pesth, to whom his Holiness is indebted to the extent of two hundred thousand florins for losses at the Vienna Board of Trade, is successful in his complaint just made to the Belgrade Court. The Metropolitan, when asked to pay, replied that his office declared him beyond the reach of the law. The Court, however, thinks differently, and has replied that a Metropolitan has no right to become a stock-jobber unless he intends to pay his losses. The Archbishop threatens to excommunicate Judge, jury, and, above all banker Braun.

Mr. Spurgeon's opinion about the new theological movement, typified by Drs. Dods and Bruce, is "that evil men and seducers will wax worse and worse, and, by this means, the Prince of Darkness will put the Free Church in chains." All people not Calvinists hold that the so-called Free Church of Scotland is the most slavish body in existence.

IT was in the infant class of the Sunday School. The teacher was trying to bring out the fact that David was a man of varied occupations. There had been smooth sailing until the question was asked, "What do you call a man who plays on a harp?" After a brief pause, a youngster raised his hand and answered, "An Italian!" The teacher and scholars had a good laugh, and a new topic was introduced.

The April number of the Contemporary contains a feeble reply by the Rev. Dr. A. Cave to Canon Cheyne and Canon Driver's criticism of the Old Testament. Dr. Cave himself admits that Genesis is a composite work, that "the books from Judges to Kings were produced by the labors of several generations of prophets," and that the Books of Chronicles are compilations of a relatively late date. But he seeks to throw discredit on further results of the Higher Criticism because, forsooth, Kuenen and Wellhausen, Graf and Vatke, Kalisch and Colenso, were not adherents of "supernatural Christianity." He says: "Supernatural Christianity has so many reasons in its favor [trot out a few, please] that any theory which seems to be alien to supernatural Christianity is ipso facto rendered suspect—not without justice." Well, supernatural Christianity is rapidly decaying, and perhaps Dr. Cave may live to find that arguments in its favor are "ipso facto rendered suspect."

Dr. Cave seeks to throw discredit upon the "Higher Criticism" because conducted by Germans, who, he would lead us to fancy, follow each other like a flock of sheep. But the fact is, the results of research have had to stand against the assaults of established orthodoxy in Germany as well as elsewhere. Besides, Dr. Cave should know that Colenso, Dr. Robertson Smith, Dr. S. Davidson and Canon Driver, are not Germans.

The rector of Bow does not get on well with his churchwardens, one of whom states that the herald of peace in the parish has on Sunday often applied to the inspector of police on duty at Bow Station for two gentlemen in uniform to be at the church on Sunday evening. That application was refused, but the inspector placed a man in plain clothes at the church in case of any disturbance arising. The dispute is, of course, about the holy trinity £ s. d. The parson wants to take up a collection for church expenses, and the churchwardens think the usual offertory is sufficient.

There are "ructions" in North Britain. The Rev. Jacob Primmer, of Dunfermline, is on the war path, and the enemy must look out for their scalps. His heroic soul is stirred to its depths by the attempt to make Roman Catholics eligible to the offices of Lord Chancellor and Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. Perish the thought that Protestants should lose this glorious monopoly! Primmer is agitating against the infernal conspiracy. He is rousing the nation against "this infamous and revolutionary bill," and he will either save the British Constitution or perish amidst its ruins. Good old Primmer!

Another cyclone in America has demolished Prophetstown, Illinois, and destroyed a number of lives. God, according to Cowper, rides upon a storm; but one would expect him to destroy any place rather than Prophetstown.

The Christian World prints an awfully stupid article by "J. B." on "Youth and Religion," in which the writer congratulates England on having two good Christian poets like Browning and Tennyson, while the French poets are "avowed and cynical pagans, rejecting with scorn every religious inspiration, and making the sole object of life to be the gratification of the passions." Fancy a man writing in this way of Victor Hugo and Leconte de Lisle! Why doesn't he learn French before writing about French poets? It would save him from scribbling a deal of nonsense: for, if French poets are irreligious, they don't teach that "the sole object in life is the gratification of the passions."

That religious encyclopædia called the Bible is remarkably lucid, and one of its most perspicuous contributors was a gentleman called Paul. His phrase "Baptism for the dead," for instance, according to the Rev. J. W. Horsley, has had thirty-seven different explanations. But as Paul doesn't say which is the right one, the commentators have no alternative but to knock up thirty-seven more.

More than one religious paper has been fishing for definitions lately. Hundreds of answers to the question, "What is a Christian?" have been gathered. But the very best comes from the Rev. W. J. Woods. It is so good that no other is worth mentioning in the same breath. It is Woods first and the rest nowhere. His definition of a Christian is "a voluntary slave of Christ." There you are, ladies and gentlemen. The thing is done once for all. Nobody need try it again. The definition ought to be printed over every page of the New Testament—"A Christian is a voluntary slave of Christ."

Digitized by Google

MR. FOOTE'S ENGAGEMENTS.

Sunday, April 13, The Circus, Portsmouth; at 11, "Mr. Gladstone's Defence of the Bible"; at 3. "Why I am an Atheist"; at 6.30, "An Hour with the Devil.'

Tuesday, April 15, Milton Hall, Hawley Crescent, Kentish Town, at 8, "Freethought and a Future Life." Free admission.

Friday, April 18, Hall, Powis Street, Woolwich, at 8, "Why I am an Atheist."

April 20, Hall of Science; 27, Hall of Science.

May 4, Newcastle; 11, South Shields; 18, Hall of Science, London; 25, N. S. S. Conference.

June 1, Hall of Science London; 8, Gladstone Radical Club and Hall of Science, London.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

LITERARY communications to be addressed to the Editor, 14 Clerkenwell Green, London, E.C. All business communications to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C.

THE Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the office, post free to any part of Europe, America, Canada and Egypt, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 6s. 6d.; Half Year, 3s. 3d.; Three Months, 1s. 7½d. Australia, China and Africa:—One Year, 8s. 8d.; Half Year, 4s. 4d.; Three Months, 2s. 2d. India:—One Year, 10s. 10d.; Half Year, 5s. 5d. Three Months, 2s. 8½d.

SCALE OF ADVERTISEMENTS.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 3s.; Half Column, 15s.; Column, £1 10s. Special terms for repetitions.

IT being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will in future receive the number when their subscription expires in a colored wrapper.

A. LOVETT.—"At Church" is not up to your usual form.

J. BROWN.—Delighted to hear of the progress the cause is making in Newcastle. We don't wish to outrage your modesty, but very much is due to your own energy and devotion. Mr. Foote is much better, but not quite himself.

F. GILBERT.—Bible Romances are on the stocks. We expect to begin their republication next month, and to make a formal announcement next week.

W. SIMONS.—Cuttings are always welcome.

W. LITTLETON, 61 Regency Street, S.W., has a few subscribers' letters for the Brompton Hospital, which he will be glad to give to any of our readers requiring the same. He also sends 2s. 6d. for the Free Lectures in London.

E. SIMS.—Thanks for your subscription to the N. S. S. The list of subscribers will be formally opened next week, when all subscriptions and promises will appear up to date. The mediæval list of repairs you send us is a very old one. It appeared in our columns many years ago.

J. O'DONOVAN, the recent accession to our list of contributors, sends a half-yearly subscription to the N. S. S., which he has just joined. He is also forming a Branch in Dublin, which we hope will do good work there.

ONE.—Certainly. Members of the N. S. S. who wish to respond to the appeal for special annual subscriptions, but are not able to send any considerable amount at once, can forward quarterly. Your annual subscription, on this footing, is booked, and we hope it will be followed by many others. The five shilling subscribers are wanted as well as the five guinea ones.

G. F. L.—Cardinal Newman reviewed Mr. Gladstone's pamphlet in a Letter to the Duke of Norfolk. It is reprinted in the second volume of Difficulties of Anglicans.

NEANIAS.—Read Mr. Foote's Philosophy of Secularism. The Secular Society does not publish any book as a recognised standard. If you cannot purchase the books you require, you could borrow some of them for a small consideration from Mr. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street. Apply personally.

H. MARGERISON assures us that the employees at Price's Candle Factory are under no kind of compulsion to attend the gospel-shop on the premises.

J. COLE.—Will see what can be done.

S. R. STEPHENSON.—Received. The list of annual subscribers will be commenced next week.

SWEDISH PRISONER FUND.—A. Guest, 2s. 6d. Proceed of sale of portrait of Richard Carlile presented by Lot Hill, 10s.

C. KING.—Thanks. See "Acid Drops."

LONDON SECULAR FEDERATION.—W. J. Birch, £3.

H. O. THOMAS.—Your cheque has been handed to Mr. Forder, to whom all orders should be addressed. Letters addressed to the Editor are answered through these columns. No such letters as you refer to have reached us.

DR. VOELKEL (Magdeberg).—"The Hibbert Trust" was money left for promoting the study of comparative religion. Many important lectures have been given under its auspices. Messrs. Williams and Norgate, publishers, Henrietta Street, London, will give full information. Mr. Wheeler's Footsteps of the Past has been out of print since our fire. Friendly greetings.

PAPERS RECEIVED.—Neues Freireligioses Sonntags Blatt—Der Arme Teufel—Western Figaro—Liberator—Truthseeker—Ironclad Age—Bulletin des Sommaires—Menschenthum—Progressive Thinker—Fair Play—Freidenker—Freethought—Freethought Record—Lucifer—Twentieth Century—Echo—Labor Elector—Women's Suffrage Journal—People's Press—Staffordshire Sentinel—Evening News—Star—Bournemouth Guardian—East London Observer—Le Courrier de Londres—Boston Investigator—Secular Thought—Evening Standard—St. Pancras Gazette.

FRIENDS who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish our attention directed.

CORRESPONDENCE should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

SUGAR PLUMS.

There was a larger audience at Milton Hall than could have been expected on Easter Sunday to hear Mr. Foote's lecture on "Did Jesus Christ Rise from the Dead?" It is hard to believe that no Christians were present, but no one ventured to question the lecturer's review of the evidences of the Resurrection.

Mr. Foote lectures at Portsmouth to-day (April 13) in the Circus. This is a large building which takes a great deal of filling. It is to be hoped, therefore, that the local Freethinkers will do their best to bring some of their orthodox friends to the lectures.

This number of the Freethinker will be in the hands of many South London readers before Friday night (April 11) when Mr. Foote opens the course of Free Lectures in the Camberwell Secular Hall. We beg to remind them that the presence of Christians at this and the following lectures is earnestly desired, their object being to convert the unconverted. Mr. Foote is followed on April 18 by Mr. J. M. Robertson.

The Milton Hall course of Free Lectures opens next Tuesday evening. We press the same advice upon our North London readers.

The Christian Evidence Society has been invited to send representatives to these Free Lectures, but Mr. Engstrom says he does not think his committee will accept the invitation. In that case the discussion will be open to all comers, and we hope there will be plenty of it.

The Daily Telegraph, in its "Paris Day by Day" columns, notices the banquets of Freethinking associations, organised as a counterblast to the rigid fasting and abstinence of the pious, and mentions that at one Good Friday dinner of Unbelievers the bill of fare contained items of consumption labelled, for the occasion, with names of political or semi-political import. Thus there was "Gamelle soup." to remind those who partook of it of the doings and sayings of the young Duc d'Orléans; "Constans sausages," so called after the energetic Minister of the Interior; "Jersey filets," to recall General Boulanger; "Freppel nuts," and "Wilsonian pots de vin." This banquet was designed, according to its organisers, to celebrate the "Triumph of Tripe over Ecclesiastical Salt-fish."

The Newcastle Branch had a splendid social gethering on Good Friday. The ladies were in strong force, and contributed greatly to the entertainment. These parties are rallying the old Freethinkers to the standard. They had got tired of fighting without a little recreation.

The Rev. Walter Walsh, of Newcastle, is continuing his efforts to convert the Secularists; and as he only helps to swell their ranks, we hope he will persist in his good work. He lectures to-day in the Nelson Street Lecture Hall on "Is there a God?" He is also going to give a course of Sunday evening addresses in the Rye Hill Baptist Chapel, in which he will reconcile Evolution and Christianity. But, although the Secularists are invited, they do not see their way to spending six Sunday evenings in a Baptist chapel where no discussion is permitted.

An effort will be made to revive the old North London Branch of the N. S. S., under the name of the St. Pancras

Digitized by Google

Branch. It is hoped this can be done in time to carry on on the open-air station during this summer, beginning early in May. Mr. Foote will be glad to hear from someone in the district who can have a small members' meeting in his house to start the Branch. A public meeting could be held subsequently.

Fair Play, Valley Falls, Kansas, says—"G. W. Foote, editor of the Freethinker, has been elected to succeed Charles Bradlaugh as President of the National Secular Society. For thirty years he has been the official and real leader of the English Freethought army. Mr. Foote is his natural successor, the mantle of the great Iconoclast more nearly fitting him than any other of the Freethought captains."

A Coming Man in England.—Mr. Bradlaugh is, to all appearances, a coming man. Mr. Bradlaugh has carefully cultivated the House of Commons. He came in with the reputation of being, among other things, a great platform orator, a very Boanerges of the East-end meeting and the provincial meeting. He has a powerful form and a most tremendous voice. When, after a long struggle, he was at last allowed to take his seat in peace, the House assumed that it was in for frequent and ponderous rhetorical exercitations. Mr. Bradlaugh gave the House nothing of the kind. He never, so far as I know, made a long speech. He always goes straight to the point, and when he has said what he wants to say he always sits down. He is really a very eloquent and powerful speaker, with a remarkably impressive voice, and it must be a temptation to such a man to let himself fully out now and then. But Mr. Bradlaugh is always concise, and the House now knows perfectly well that he at least will never bore his audience. Then he has devoted himself very closely to what we call the "business of the House"—to committees, and private bills, and all that sort of work which your popular orator generally disdains with a lofty disdain—and the House likes a man who looks after its work. Moreover, he is a man of the most winning courtesy of manner. He has disarmed the dislike of all his former political and religious opponents—and he had a good many of them—by his anxiety to oblige, by his willingness to make graceful concessions, by his genial toleration of difference of opinion. He is, I should think, destined before long to be a member of a Liberal Administration, and even of a Liberal Cabinet.—North American Review.

Our Swedish friends are carrying on the agitation with energy. Captain Otto Thomson informs us they have published the pamphlet "Why I Attack Christianity," for which Mr. Lennstrand has his last sentence. Captain Thomson and Messrs. Berghell and Mentzer went before the Minister of Justice, demanding that the pamphlet should be prosecuted in order that it might be brought before a jury, and Mr. Mentzer on Sunday March 30, read the lecture to a large audience. The pamphlet will accordingly be prosecuted.

Captain Thomson was spokesman of a deputation which waited on Prince Charles, Duke of Södermanland, who is regent during the king's absence, with a protest against Mr. Lennstrand's imprisonment, to which there were 9,159 signatures—this by no means including all the lists that are out. The Regent, though constrained to speak with reserve, let it be understood he was not favorable to prosecutions for opinion. It is certain our good Swedish friends have a strenuous battle before them, but it is equally certain the issue will be to the advantage of Freethought. Our warmest sympathy goes to Captain Thomson and his brave comrades who are fighting so hard for their imprisoned leader.

The Blair Educational Bill—the object of which was to enforce religious instruction in the public schools of the United States—has been thrown out by the Senate. It had the luring bait of a big appropriation to be distributed among the States in proportion to the density of illiteracy. It is not so easy nowadays to put time backwards. The clock hands may be shifted, but things go forward all the same.

A. K. Fiske, writing in the Forum, says: "Men of intellect and education, who are capable of enthusiasm and ardor in the service of mankind, are deterred from seeking to do that service through the Christian ministry. They cannot honorably accept its doctrinal requirements, and will not submit to its mental restrictions."

An important decision has been given by the Supreme Court of the United States in a case in which Roman Catholics who sent their children to the public schools objected to their being read to and taught from King James's Version of the Bible, on the ground that it constitutes sectarian instruction. The Supreme Court upheld this objection, and in its decision said: "Any pupil of ordinary intelligence who listens to the reading of doctrinal portions of the Bible will be more or less instructed thereby in the doctrines of the divinity of Jesus Christ, the eternal punishment of the wicked, the authority of the priesthood, the binding force of the efficacy of the sacraments, and many other conflicting sectarian doctrines." This is correct. Bible reading without comment is a compromise which can suit no party that is in earnest. The only fair solution of the religious difficulty is to let all religion be taught at home.

Some of our vegetarian readers, and perhaps others, will be interested by Dr. Drysdale's Vegetarian Fallacies, a pamphlet he has just published through G. Standring. It includes his paper read at the Health Congress last year in Hastings, and an account of the subsequent discussion. Dr. Drysdale believes in eating meat as well as vegetables, and his physiological and chemical arguments deserve attention.

Mr. A. B. Moss has issued through Watts and Co. a handsome little volume on The Bible and Evolution. It is by far the best production of Mr. Moss's pen, and we heartily recommend it as an excellent text-book of the subject. The matter is good and the style is bright. The reader is carried along an easy-flowing stream of science, history, ethics, and common sense.

Owing to a continued press of matter, Mr. Foote's letter to the Rev. Dr. Mathieson on "The Fear of God" stands over till next week.

HOME RULE AND ROME RULE.

"We shall take our religion but not our politics from Rome," is the invariable defence advanced by Irish Nationalist politicians to meet the charge made by the Protestants that Home Rule and Rome Rule are synonymous terms. The Protestant minority make their charge in good faith, and the Catholic majority advance their defence in all sincerity. But everything depends upon where the boundary line can be drawn between Roman religion and Irish politics. My own experience tells me that the religion of Rome and the politics of Ireland are so inextricably mixed up that it is impossible to tell where the one ends and the other begins. The Catholics may mean well when they say that they will accept nothing from Rome but religion; but unfortunately for their assertion nobody is so blind as not to see that they are not free agents in the matter. Rome, it is true, may not dictate a political policy for adoption in Ireland; but it can use religion at any time to forbid the adoption by Catholic Irishmen of any policy which is not pleasing to the Vatican. Consequently when the Vatican can dogmatically condemn any phase of politics it dislikes, and when it tolerates only the kind of politics agreeable to it, it is obvious that it has the same power over Ireland as if it sought to compel Irishmen to adopt any particular line of political conduct. By constituting it a "sin" on the part of Catholics to support any political creed which he may choose to condemn, the Pope has virtually the power to exert a sway over Ireland quite as effectual as if he were an authorised and despotic ruler of the country. Irish Catholics have no option as to what they are to accept, or not accept from Rome, and their favorite formula (as quoted above) is therefore an expression with more sound than sense. From this point of view, the question might be disposed of at once by saying that Home Rule, or no Home Rule, Ireland will be under the sway of Rome so long as the majority of Irishmen remain good Catholics, but no longer.

In the event of our getting Home Rule, Rome Rule would doubtless become more powerful, but if my judgment is worth anything, I feel that I can safely predict that after Home Rule is enjoyed for a short time the power of Rome will gradually dwindle away. There are forces at work in Ireland, beneath the surface, that will ultimately make the gentlemen in Roman collars and tall hats a trifle uncomfortable; but having regard to the enormous power of the priesthood, and their great hold on the minds of a naturally credulous people, the struggle to shake off the yoke of Rome will be a long and bitter one.

Digitized by Google

When Home Rule is conceded, one half the battle for Irish freedom will not be won. The right to govern ourselves after our own fashion will be but a shadowy right as long as the influence of Rome holds good. Catholicism is a conglomeration of religion and politics; the religious department being equivalent to mental slavery and superstition, and the political department being essentially Conservative. Catholic politicians who wish to remain in good odor with the Church will not be actuated by what they deem to be good for their country, but by what they consider advantageous for their "souls." This latter they cannot decide for themselves, nor can the Irish priests, except under orders from Rome. What is good or baneful for the "souls" of the Irish politicians will altogether depend upon the prevailing political intrigues at Rome. These intrigues will have reference to England. The Pope has his eye on the land of the Saxon. To have the Saxon on his side is his great ambition at present; for he believes that the countenance of England would further the interests of the Church in more important places than Ireland. Accordingly, Ireland has been reserved, and is destined to be reserved, to act the part of puppet, and to be ready at all times to do what the Pope thinks would please England or further the interests of the Church. This is no mere speculation. Catholics themselves say that the Pope is justified in prosecuting such a policy; and they even confess that it is better that the whole Church should benefit than that the Irish section of it should be allowed to have matters its own way as far as "temporal" interests are concerned. When the Rescript against the Plan of Campaign was issued, many Irishmen growled; but the body of them lay down calmly and said that the welfare of their "souls" demanded that the Pope should be implicitly obeyed. Those who spoke pretty plainly were condemned for their levity; but at the same time the growling in certain quarters was growing so threatening that the Bishops, except one, did not actually enforce the Rescript, fearing, doubtless, that their doing so would endanger the hitherto strong hold which Rome Rule had on Ireland. It will yet be found that that Rescript was the beginning of the end. The end is far off, very far off, but it is nearer than if the Rescript never left the Vatican. In the hearts of the younger men, the insult to their country and the unwarrantable interference with their right of combination, are still rankling; and if Home Rule were granted, this feeling of soreness would make itself felt in the towns, and wherever the Gaelic Athletic Association has influence, for the young men of that body have been the first to resent priestly interference, by insisting on managing their association without priestly aid. Political expediency keeps those who feel inclined to oppose the priests silent for the present; but if Home Rule were once a reality, all necessity for restraint would be abolished, and all with notions of Liberty above the milk-and-water Liberal principals of the Church of Rome, would undoubtedly commence to assert themselves, timidly, perhaps, at first, but gathering strength as time went on, and as abuse, if not persecution, was heaped upon them.

With the advent of Home Rule and the temporary increase of the influence of the Rule of Rome in Ireland, there is no fear that the latter power will exhibit itself in the form of persecution of the minority. The fears that Protestants express of persecution are groundless. It is not the Protestants that Rome Rule will trouble itself to persecute. From motives of policy it would be dangerous to persecute non-Catholics, even if it were not absurdly out of date to attempt anything of the kind. Rome Rule will reserve its malignant forces for those who dare to oppose the political policy of the priests, and opposition to that policy will not come from the Protestants, except in the unlikely event of an attempt being made to endow the Catholic Church. Irish Protestants are generally conservative in politics, and it is quite on the cards that they would willingly join with the creatures of the Catholic priests for the purpose of putting down those who will preach nationalisation of the land, and the establishment of free and undenominational education. As Conservatives, Protestants and good Catholics will combine to "protect property" from the reformers who will want to do something substantial for the long-neglected artizans and farm laborers; and as bigots they will combine to defeat those who will demand free education for the people. Not that there is ever likely to be anything like a feeling of harmony between the Catholics and the Protestants. The bitter spirit of sectarianism will always render friction of some kind inevitable. Protestants under Home Rule will not have the pick of the good positions under the Government, as they have been accustomed to, and this will perhaps make them a trifle cantankerous. The worst that is to be expected is an occasional row between the most bigoted and ignorant on both sides, and a continuance of that mutual hatred, which is kept alive by the clergymen of all sects, and which is only to some extent satisfied by the consoling belief that the opposing party is safe for eternal damnation. For my own part I do not apprehend any religious persecution under the combined Home Rule and Rome Rule; but I do most certainly apprehend that there will be bitter persecution of those who may be bold enough to attack the stick-in-the-mud policies of clericals, solicitous for their own influence and welfare, and for the influence and welfare of their churches.

To sum up. Rome Rule need not be feared as likely to very vastly increase under a Home Rule Parliament. It may flourish undisturbed while the people are rejoicing over their triumph, and while the services of the priests in securing it give them a sort of right to the gratitude of the nation. It will affect the Protestant minority but very slightly, and that not in the direction of persecution. But on the moment that the influence of Rome will oppose itself to Progress, then the fight will commence—not between Catholics and Protestants, but between the genuine Home Rulers and those whose Home Rule principles are mixed with Rome Rule principles. There are a few men ready to start that fight as soon as opportunity offers. Behind them will be ranged a good sprinkling of the younger men, and of the artizans. Once the struggle is under weigh Freethought will spread, and a new life will be infused into Ireland never dreamt of during the days of religious ascendancy. Priestly influence, superstition, and all the paraphernalia of Rome Rule will perhaps require a great deal of mangling, and will die hard. But I hope that I will not have descended into the eternal oblivion of the grave until I see the darkness of religious superstition giving place to the lights of Truth and Reason, which, unhappily for herself, have never yet shed their benign lustre on poor Ireland.

J. O'Donovan.

THE RISE AND PROGRESS OF FREETHOUGHT IN SPAIN.

(Concluded from p. 147.)

In other countries religious wars and persecutions have only been passing incidents, which have left no trace upon the national character; but this has not been the case with Spain. In England the last two persons burnt for heresy were Legate and Wightman in 1612. In Spain the last victim of the Inquitition perished as late as 1822.* The Inquisition arose as soon as the monarchy was established, and became an auxiliary to its power. During three consecutive centuries it impressed upon the Spanish nation such an indelible stamp of bigoted perfidy and monachal mummery, that in spite of the efforts of the Spanish people they have not quite succeeded in shaking it off. As the church retained her hold over the highest as over the lowest intellects, writers were proud of counting themselves among the ecclesiastical authorities. Thus we find that Lope de Vega and Calderon beecame priests towards the end of their lives. The latter has been justly called by Sismondi "the poet of the Inquisition." Cervantes became a Franciscan monk. Montalvan, Solis the historian, and de Molina, received holy orders. Mariana was a Jesuit. We will not tire the reader by inserting more names, which perhaps he hears for the first time. It suffices to say that in those horrible times everybody of eminence and property took good care to flatter or join the Holy Office.

Beaumarchais puts in the mouth of Figaro the following ironical remarks, which show the sort of liberty enjoyed by the Madrid press in the eighteenth century. "They tell me," says Figaro, "that during my economical retreat [he had been imprisoned] there has been established in Madrid a system of liberty which extends even to that of the press; and that provided I don't mention in my writings anything concerning the authorities, politics, religion or morality, or the people present, or credited corporations, the opera and other spectacles, or lastly concerning any person who keeps to anything, I can print as much as I like about everything else, always of course under the supervision of a few censors"!

* In Mexico the custom of burning witches seems not quite to have died out. In 1874 a poor woman was accused of witchcraft and publicly burnt! See Stanford's Compendium of Geography, America.

Digitized by Google

The above "sweet liberty" was the only one enjoyed by authors and journalists in Spain almost up till now. Is it, then, astonishing if Freethought has not been able to make progress in such a country?

When Tyndall's Heat as a Mode of Motion came out, importation and translation of the work into Spain was prohibited. When in '59 the world's gossip was the Origin of Species, only one man in Spain (Castelar) wrote a few timid remarks in a review! But things, we are glad to say, have changed in the last twenty-five years, thanks to the unceasing labors and indescribable sufferings of a few enlightened men.

It is not only in the nineteenth century that Freethought existed in Spain. During the period in which that country was governed by the Arabs, nearly 800 years, a Freethinking sect arose. Thus we find Abu Abdallah Muhammad Ibn Masara al Jabali, an upholder of Pantheism and a student of the works of Empedocles and other Greek philosophers. His books were burnt. Died 931. Abu Bakr Ibn Al Tufail, who died at Morocco in 1185, wrote a philosophical romance, Hai Ebn Thokdan, i.e., the Man of Nature. Averroes, the prince of Arabian philosophers, was imprisoned for his heterodoxy. He was born at Cordova 1126. He is too well known for it to be necessary that we should mention much about him. The reader will find all desired information in Rénan's splendid volume. Sabin was born at Murcia about 1218; he corresponded with Frederick II. and replied to his philosophical questions.

The above are the names of the Hispano-Arabic Freethinkers, mentioned in Mr. Wheeler's Dictionary of Freethinkers; they are not numerous, but there is no doubt that a greater number must have existed of whom details have been lost. The writer has not been able to consult the valuable dictionary, in four volumes, written in Arabic and Spanish, by Ebn Alkhali Mahomed Ben Abdalla, which is kept in the Escurial; nor the literary history of Ben Mohamed Abu Nasser Alphrath, of Sevilla, which is to be seen in the Bibliothèque Nationale in Paris. A careful perusal of these two works would certainly reveal more names of Freethinkers.

The first Freethinker we meet after the Arabic period is Alfonso X., surnamed the Wise. He learned his scepticism from the Jews and Arabs. He is credited with saying that had he been present at the creation, he could have given "the Old Jew upstairs" a few hints on improvement. Hurtado de Mendoza, who flourished about 1503, was undoubtedly a sceptic at heart, but limited himself to vituperating the conduct of the clergy. His "Lazarillo" and satires were condemned by the Inquisition.

Miguel Servet (1509-1553). One of the martyrs of Freethought; intended for the Church, he left it for law, and finally studied medicine. He certainly contributed largely towards the discovery of the circulation of the blood. His two books, Trinitatis Erroribus and Christianismi Restitutio, brought him the hatred of both Catholics and Protestants. We all know the infamous conduct of Calvin towards Servetus. The unfortunate Servetus was burnt alive at a slow fire at Genoa on the 25th October, 1553. Bruno has had a statue erected to him on the spot where he was burnt. Why should not Servetus have one also erected to him in his native place, or in the town where he suffered martyrdom? Let us hope that ere long a committee for the proposal of an erection of a statue to Servetus will be formed, so that his effigy, like that of Bruno, may stand out with menacing looks warning the Church of her approaching ruin!

Mendizabal was born at Cadiz 1790. He learnt his scepticism from the English Freethinkers. He subjugated the clerical party, abolished religious orders, and proclaimed their goods as national property. Readers of George Borrow's The Bible in Spain will recollect the interview this reverend gentleman had with Mendizabal. Here is the finish of it: "What strange infatuation," continued Mendizabal, "is this which drives you over lands and waters with Bibles in your hands. My good sir, it is not Bibles we want, but rather guns and powder. I have not lived thirteen years in England without forming some acquaintance with the phraseology of your good folks. Now, now, pray go; you see how busy I am. Come again whenever you like, but let it not be within the next three months."

José Marchena (1768-1821) was intended for the Church, but was "converted" by reading the works of French philosophers. He was very active, and translated into Spanish a good many Freethought works.

Pedro Aranda (1718-1799). He imbibed the ideas of the Encyclopædists, and contributed largely to the expulsion of the Jesuits from Spain. The Inquisition was completely disarmed by him. Larra (José)1809-1837. Became obnoxious to the Spanish government by the publication of his Poor Gossip. The journal was suppressed after its fourteenth number. He translated Lamennais' Paroles d'un Croyant, under the title "The Dogma of Free Men." The following saying of his betrays his scepticism: "All the truths of this world can be wrapped in a cigarette paper." Ramon de la Sagra (1798) was less a savant than an economist, but in this science he kept the first place among Spaniards. He published numerous works and was a disciple of Proudhon, whom he greatly admired. It is said, but without foundation, that in later years he modified his opinions.

Espronceda (1810-1842) may be called the Spanish Shelley. Want of space prevents me from doing justice to him, but any one who wishes to become acquainted with the finest lyrics in the Spanish language, let him read "A una Estrella" and "El Pirata."

Garcia-Vao, was born at Manzanares 1862. A young man of great talent and capacity, he was cowardly assassinated four years ago. His Echoes of a Free Mind will continue to be read, as well as his satires on the monks.

With Garcia-Vao terminates the list of notable Spanish Freethinkers, who have wandered over "to the undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveller returns." Of living Spanish Freethinkers, materials for their biographies are wanting; besides the Freethought party is very young and feeble still. It is a consolation though to know that such able men as Castelar, Pi-y-Margall, Ruiz Zorrilla, Perez Galdos, Salmeron, Varela, Morayta, Nakens, Miralta, Chies, Pompeyo Gener, Tubino, etc., the best men that Spain has, are most decidedly "on our side."

South America can show also the names of a few Free-Freethinkers. We find general Miranda (1750-1816) who was a friend of Tom Paine. It is said that Miranda made a sceptic of James Mill. Bolivar (Simon) 1783-1830. Lost his belief by reading the works of Diderot, Voltaire, Rousseau, etc. Francisco Zarco (1829-1869), a Mexican journalist, propagated liberal ideas in his country and was imprisoned by the reactionaries.

Positivism found an exponent in Lastarria. He is a prolific author, and his Politicia Positiva has been translated into French. Rafael Nunez, the Columbian President, is a writer on political questions and in philosophy a follower of Mill, Comte and Spencer. Lastly we come to Guillermo Mata, a Chilian poet, who has been justly called the South American Byron. He was educated in Europe, where he imbibed his Atheistical opinions. He is sixty years old, and as staunch a Freethinker as ever. We have already spoken of the spirit of bigotry and intolerance which has always prevailed in Spain, and of the difficulties Freethinkers had to surmount. Here are the names of some persons who have suffered for their Freethinking ideas:—Dr. Gabarro was sentenced to four years' imprisonment; he fled, and continues in France to edit his anti-clerical journal La Tronada. Senor A. de Maglia, who lately paid us a visit, was condemned to six years' imprisonment and a fine of 4,000 francs. Like Gabarro, he has left Spain also. The last prosecution took place only last December. The editor of Las Dominicales, Ramon Chies, was condemned for blasphemy to six months' imprisonment and a heavy fine. After a great struggle he was acquitted, to the extreme disgust of the sky-pilots and bigots.

It would be surprising to many to hear the number of Freethought papers published in the Peninsula. We could give their titles, but we shrink from doing so, for fear of tiring the reader. The number of Secular societies and clubs is very extensive; and in no other country are so many civil marriages and secular burials performed as in Spain. A great number of unbaptised children are registered annually. Cremation is also making progress.

It will not be out of place here to mention that translations of the most important scientific and philosophical works have been made lately. Any Madrid bookseller will supply you to-day with a copy in Spanish of the Origin of Species, Force and Matter, Strauss' and Rénan's Life of Jesus, Haeckel's History of Creation, Spencer, Maudsley, Comte, Bain, Guyot, Letourneau, Schopenhauer, etc.

Last autumn when the International Congress of Freethinkers took place, Spain sent her delegates; and the next International Congress of Freethinkers will take place this year, and in Madrid! As we see, Spain has entered into a new era. The dawn of a great future has broken over her, and all that is now wanted for the realisation of her dreams is the establishment of a Republic. But the moment for sounding the tocsin and marching towards the second Bastille has not yet arrived. The Republican and Freethought parties, as we have said before, are too young and too feeble still. If they want to see their efforts crowned with success, they will do well to wait another ten years at least; so that they may have adequate time to recruit partisans and choose for their leaders wise and experienced men. Men who, with the welfare of their country at heart, and power in their hands, will regenerate the nation, make commerce and industry advance, establish just and wise laws, elevate the position of women, and give the masses a useful and healthy education. Then will Spain be able to take her place again among the great nations, and contribute largely to the welfare of humanity. And if this sublime task is ever accomplished, it will be thanks to that class of unselfish, valiant and honest men, who are proud of belonging to the noble Army of Freethought.

Digitized by Google

F. MALIBRAN.

ANOTHER NOTE ON EASTER.

Easter has no connection with the mythical Christ. The word is usually derived from Eoster, the Saxon goddess of the East, the dawn, spring and resurrection. She is probably to be identified with Ishtar, the Assyrian goddess of love, fertility and generation. Ishtar corresponded both in name and attributes with the Astarte or Ashtoreth of Phœnicians and Syrians. Like the Greek Aphrodite and the Roman Venus, she was the queen of love and beauty, and presided over all reproduction, of animals and plants as well as of man. The Easter egg symbolises her fecundity and power of initiating new life. Ishtar was fabled to have descended into hell, and to have there been one by one divested of her adornments, but she returned again with all her beauteous attire. This transparent myth of the resurrection of life in spring was recorded on tablets above a thousand years before the Christian era. Jeremiah (vii., 18) alludes to the Jewish women kneading their dough to make cakes to the queen of heaven, a practice they had learnt in Babylonia, and which survives in our Easter buns. The spring festival celebrates the procreative power of nature, the bursting of life from the underworld, and the myth of Ishtar is both more appropriate and poetical than that of Christ.

LUCIANUS.

OBITUARY.—We have to record the death of Rose Florence Coxesedge, daughter of Mr. Coxesedge, of Bath Street, Clerkenwell, and granddaughter of Mr. A. Hilditch. The Secular Funeral Service was read over her remains at Finchley Cemetery on Sunday by Mr. F. Haslam.

SUNDAY MEETINGS.

LONDON.

Battersea—The Shed of Truth, Prince of Wales's Road, 7.30, a lecture. Park Gates. 11.15, Mr. F. Haslam, "Is the Bible True?" Social evening every Tuesday.

Bethnal Green—Opposite "Salmon and Ball," Mr. G. Spiller, 11.15, "The Secular Basis of Morality."

Camberwell—61 New Church Road, S.E., 7.30, Mr. A. B. Moss, "What do Christians Believe?"

East London—Mile End Waste, 11.30, Mr. S. Standring, "Why we Reject Christianity"; 8, Swaby's Coffee House, 103 Mile End Road, Mrs. Thornton Smith, "The Resurrection."

Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, E.C., 7, Mrs. Annie Besant, "Can Christ Atone for the Sins of Men?"

Milton Hall, Kentish Town Road, N.W., 7.30, Mr. John M. Robertson, "Right and Wrong; or Praise and Blame."

West Ham—121 Broadway, Plaistow, 10.30, committee meeting; 11.30, Mr. Frank Fawcett, "The Exodus from Egypt"; 7, Mr. T. Thurlow, "Jesus and his Beliefs"; 8.30, music, etc.

Westminster—Old Pimlico Pier, 11.30, Mr. A. B. Moss, "What Do Christians Teach?"

COUNTRY.

Birmingham—Baskerville Hall, Crescent, 7, Mr. C. C. Cattell, "Man's Natural Origin and Great Antiquity."

Hanley—Secular Hall, 51 John Street, 7, Mr. W. Hall, "The House of Lords."

Liverpool Branch N.S.S., Camden Hall, Camden Street—7, Mr. D. S. Collins, "Why I Believe Jesus Rose from the Dead"; secretary to reply.

Newcastle-on-Tyne—4 Hall's Court, Newgate Street. 11, meeting of Sunday Music League; 2.30, in Lecture Hall, Nelson Street, Rev. Walter Walsh, "Is there a God?"; 7.30, fortnightly business meeting of members. April 14, at 7, Mr. J. Clarke lectures in Bigg Market on "Is the Bible Inspired?"

South Shields—Captain Duncan's Navigation Schools, King Street, at 7, business meeting.

LECTURERS' ENGAGEMENTS.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Credon Road, London, S.E.—April 13, (morning) Pimlico, (evening) Camberwell; 27, Reading. May 18 (morning), Clerkenwell Green, (evening), Ball's Pond; 25, (afternoon) Regent's Park. June 1 (morning), Pimlico; 15, Ball's Pond; 29, Mile End. July 13, Mile End.

TOLEMAN-GARNER, 8 Heyworth Road, Stratford, London, E.—May 4 (morning), Mile End Waste; 11, Clerkenwell Green; 18 (afternoon), Regent's Park; 25 (morning), Hyde Park. June 1 (morning), Mile End Waste; 8 (morning), Clerkenwell Green.

JAMES HOOPER, 11 Upper Eldon Street, Sneinton, Nottingham.—April 13, Nottingham.

T. THURLOW, 7 Dickson's Villas, Rutland Road, East Ham.—April 13 (evening), Plaistow; 27, Hyde Park.

H. SMITH, 3 Breck Place Breck Road, Everton Road, Liverpool.—April 13, Manchester; 20, Rochdale. May 4, Birmingham.

PROGRESSIVE PUBLISHING CO.'S LIST.

All orders to be sent, with remittance, to R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C. Rate of postage—Orders under 3d., one halfpenny; orders under 6d. one penny. Orders over 6d. post free.

G. W. FOOTE.

	s.	d.
PRISONER FOR BLASPHEMY. Cloth ... ... A Full History of his Three Trials and Twelve Months' Imprisonment. Copies in paper covers, soiled, 6d.	2	6
IS SOCIALISM SOUND? ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant.	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
CHRISTIANITY AND SECULARISM ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. In paper covers.	1	0
Superior edition in cloth	1	6
INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS ... ... Second edition, enlarged.	0	8
Superior edition, in cloth	1	3
DARWIN ON GOD	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth ... ... CONTENTS:—Darwin's Grandfather—Darwin's Father—Darwin's Early Piety—Almost a Clergyman—On Board the "Beagle"—Settling at Down—Death and Burial—Purpose of Pamphlet—Some Objections—Darwin Abandons Christianity—Deism—Creation—Origin of Life—Origin of Man—Animism—A Personal God—Design—Divine Beneficence—Religion and Morality—Agnosticism and Atheism.	1	0
DEFENCE OF FREE SPEECH ... ... Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes.	0	4
LETTERS TO JESUS CHRIST	0	4
PHILOSOPHY OF SECULARISM	0	3
THE BIBLE GOD	0	2
THE FOLLY OF PRAYER	0	2
CHRISTIANITY AND PROGRESS ... ... A Reply to Mr. Gladstone.	0	2

A

BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY

OF

FREETHINKERS

OF

ALL AGES AND NATIONS.

BY

J. M. WHEELER.

Price 7/6 Handsomely bound in cloth. Price 7/6

THE IMPOSSIBLE CREED

An Open Letter to the

BISHOP OF PETERBOROUGH

By G. W. FOOTE.

Price 2d. Price 2d.

Price 1d. Price 1d.

A LIE IN FIVE CHAPTERS.

THE REV. HUGH PRICE HUGHES'S

CONVERTED ATHEIST

By G. W. FOOTE.

Should be circulated by Freethinkers who desire to see this pious fraud exposed as widely as possible.

MARRIAGE & DIVORCE

AN AGNOSTIC'S VIEW.

BY COL. R. G. INGERSOLL.

2d.] Reprinted from the "North American Review." [2d.

Everh Freethinker, Radical or Socialist should read it and circulate it amongst his friends.

Digitized by Google

NOW READY.

LETTERS TO THE CLERGY

FIRST SERIES.

1.—CREATION
To the Bishop of Carlisle.

2.—THE BELIEVING THIEF
To the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

3.—THE ATONEMENT
To the Bishop of Peterborough.

4.—OLD TESTAMENT MORALITY
To the Rev. E. R. Conder, D.D.

5.—INSPIRATION
To the Rev. R. F. Horton, M.A.

6.—CREDENTIALS OF THE GOSPEL
To the Rev. Prof. J. A. Beet.

7.—MIRACLES
To the Rev. Brownlow Maitland, M.A.

8.—PRAYER
To the Rev. T. Teignmouth Shore, M.A.

BY G. W. FOOTE.

128pp., in Wrapper. ONE SHILLING.

PRICE TWOPENCE.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC?

A NEW PAMPHLET BY

COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

2d. Now Ready. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC?

PART II.

BY COLONEL INGERSOLL.

NOW READY. NOW READY.

CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS.

A Noble Plea for a Rational Treatment of Prisoners and a Humane Jurisprudence.

BY

COL. R. G. INGERSOLL.

THIRTY-TWO PAGES. PRICE THREEPENCE.

W. J. Rendell's
"WIFE'S FRIEND."

Recommended in "Law of Population," and "Wife's Hand Book." Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell Street Clerkenwell, and supplied per post, 2s. dozen. For particulars of this Malthusian discovery send stamped envelope. Higginson's Syringe, with vertical and reverse current, 3s. 6d. and 4s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. All other Malthusian Appliances. All prices post free.

HARTNOLL,
ENGLISH AND FOREIGN CHEMIST,
1A PICCADILLY
(Under the London Pavilion Music Hall),
LONDON, W.

Hartnoll's Specialities, Appliances and Medicated Preparations are world-renowned.

Spiral, Douche and Latest Improved Syringes.

ESTABLISHED OVER 50 YEARS.

IRETON'S
INDELIBLE JET BLACK MARKING INK
(NO HEATING REQUIRED)
For Rubber Stamps, Stencil, Type or Pen.
PRICE 6d. 1/- and 2/6 per Bottle.
Sample bottle 4d. post free.
IRETON & Co., 92, Gracechurch St., LONDON, E.C.
The largest makers of Rubber Stamps.
Special terms to the Trade.

Dyed with Ireton's Ink, no hope of ever changing my Color.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. VOL. I.
By Dr. T. R. ALLINSON,
4 SPANISH PLACE, MANCHESTER SQUARE, LONDON, W.
Of the Author, for Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
It contains Articles on: Management of Infancy; Health; Longevity; The Teeth; Brown Bread; Bread Making; Food; Vegetarianism; Tobacco; The Drink Question; Fruit; Fresh Air; Exercise; Bathing; Light; Holidays; &c. Also the cause and cure of Disease; Constipation; Biliousness; Eczema; Blackheads and Pimples; Nervousness; Coughs and Colds; Chest Complaints; Deafness; Thread Worms; Long Worms; Tape Worms; The Itch, &c.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. VOL. II.
Of the Author, for Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Containing Articles on: The Healing Power of Nature; Clothing; Electricity in Disease; Apparent Health; Vegetarian Experiments; The Pig as Human Food; Popular Fallacies about Flesh; The Beef Tea Delusion; Salt; Saline Starvation; Tea Drinking; The Hair and its Management; Sleep and Sleeplessness; Want of Energy, &c.; Health Hints for Workers, for Shop Assistants, and for Servants; Advice for the Thin; for the Stout; and on the Proper Treatment of Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, &c.

No House is Complete without these Works.
When ordering the Essays, be sure and state which Volume you require.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE:
OR, THE ONLY RATIONAL WAY OF TREATING DISEASE.
Everybody likes it who reads it.
Of the Author, for Postal Order for 1s. 1d.

TO MARRIED PEOPLE.
A New and Enlarged
ILLUSTRATED LIST OF MALTHUSIAN APPLIANCES AND SPECIALITIES
Will be forwarded per return of post on receipt of 1d. stamp.
DAVIES, CHEMIST,
101 PARK LANE, LEEDS.

VEGETARIAN FALLACIES. By Dr. C. R. DRYSDALE. A paper read at the Health Congress, Hastings, 1889; with opinions of Sir Edwin Chadwick and several Doctors, in course of discussion. Price 2d.; post free 2½d. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, E.C.

THE FAMILY LIMIT,
OR,
THE QUININE TABLOID,
1s. 6d. per doz., post free.
For further Particulars send stamped directed envelope to
A. MOSS, 36 Upper Park Street,
ISLINGTON, LONDON, N.

GRATIS.

AN ILLUSTRATED 16-PAGE PAMPHLET, containing extracts from the utterances of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Manchester; the Revs T. R. Malthus, A. E. Whatham, M. J. Savage, Leonard Dawson, — Lawton, H. R. Haweis; the following Doctors—Allbutt, Allinson, Armstrong, Drysdale, Pye Chavasse, E. B. Foote, Nicholls, Wilder, Raciborski, Napheys and Reamy. Also Plato, Aristotle, Sismondi, Huxley, Mill, and numerous others. Should be read by every married and marriageable person. Sent on receipt of stamped addressed envelope by J. R. HOLMES, Hanney, Wantage, Berks.

TESTIMONIALS (Extracts from).

"The one you sent me some months since is Quite Worn Out with being lent to so many friends."

"Some of us have paid five shillings for less than one-tenth of the information."

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each, upper or lower set, £1. Best quality, 4s. each, upper or lower, £2, completed in four hours when required, repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18c. gold 15s.; stopping, 2s. 6d. extraction, 1s. painless by gas, 5s.

Printed and Published by G. W. Foote, at 28 Stonecutter Street Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

Vol. X.—No. 16.] SUNDAY, APRIL 20, 1890. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

LETTERS TO THE CLERGY.—X.

"THE FEAR OF GOD."

To the Rev. George Matheson, D.D.

"Primus in orbe deos fecit timor."—PROPERTIUS.

"Almighty Fear, the Fiend-God."—SHELLEY.

SIR,—I propose in this letter to criticise your paper on "The Fear of God" in the April number of Good Words. The subject is all-important from a religious point of view. If the fear of God is not the beginning of wisdom, it is at least the beginning of religion. According to the Roman poet it was fear that first created gods in the world, and the same view is expressed by a later English poet whose words I have also cited. I believe it is no less true that fear is generally, if not invariably, commensurate with ignorance. Man trembles before the unknown. His want of knowledge makes him the slave of his imagination. A danger which is understood loses half its terror, while a danger which is shrouded in mystery is so magnified by fancy as to paralyse the faculties. Under this glamor the bravest shrink into cowards. Were a couple of hardened duellists to be ordered to fight a duel in a darkened room, it is doubtful if either would have the courage to begin the engagement. Now savages, among whom religion originates, are always fighting in the dark against the forces of nature. Hence they are frightened in situations in which the civilised man preserves his composure. When, for instance, the lightning flashes and the thunder roars, they crouch in abject terror, precisely as a herd of cows will huddle together in a storm. But the civilised man understands the phenomena, he is acquainted with their causes, he estimates the infinitesimal amount of the danger to himself, and frequently, instead of being alarmed, his whole being dilates with the tempest, and he revels in the enjoyment of a magnificent spectacle.

The difference in this respect between the savage and the civilisee is the difference between ignorance and knowledge, religion and science. The poor victim of superstition—and religion is only the superstition in fashion—is smitten upon his knees or even upon his face. But the votary of science stands erect and unalarmed. The one trembles, the other is equable; the one prays, the other observes; the one worships, the other reflects.

Out of the terror of ignorance sprang the first gods of superstition. Accordingly the earliest cultus is the worship of malignant powers. A benevolent God is the growth of a later age. Even then, however, the ritual of religion bears traces of the older strata of belief and sentiment. While prayer against plague, pestilence, and famine, battle, murder, and sudden death, survives in the Christian liturgy, we have visible evidence that religion retains sufficient relics of its older form to indicate to the student the ideas in which it originated and the essential character of its influence.

You are far from denying the historic or evolutionary truth of this survey. "It is a favorite argument of the sceptic," you say, "that religion is the product of fear. Little does he knew what a compliment he is paying to religion when he makes the statement." I agree with you that the sceptic does not know that he is paying religion a compliment in ascribing its origin to fear, but you are the best judge of what is a compliment to your faith. I do not envy you, and I am reluctant to disturb your enjoyment. I must, however, question the argument you advance to excuse what appears like fatuity. You discover something excellent in fear, although it is a sign of weakness, and it is difficult to see how weakness can be anything but a misfortune. You contend that "fear in its essential nature is something peculiar to man, something which marks out man from the beast of the field." I believe the assertion will astonish those who have any acquaintance with the lower animals. Nothing is more animal than the human expression of fear. We differ from the lower orders of life far more in the expression of our joy. And the explanation is obvious. Joy, unless it be excessive, stimulates us; it heightens our vitality, and gives free play to our faculties. But fear represses and disorders. It strikes reason torpid and paralyses the will, it throws us back upon the law of self-preservation, and leaves us to the mere instincts of our animal nature.

But while I dissent from your assertion that fear is in any sense peculiar to man, I equally dissent from your assertion that "man is the least courageous creature in the world." To affirm this of civilised man is absolutely grotesque. He digs into the bowels of the earth for treasure, and climbs the mountains for sport. He faces the mightiest tempests at sea, and in pursuit of all sorts of objects he laughs at the fear of death. He tames even lions and tigers, and makes them leap at his will, standing the while within reach of their terrible claws and fangs. There is nothing he will not attempt if he sets his heart upon it. Physical courage is indeed so cheap, that multitudes of men will join a mercenary army, and stand to be shot at for a shilling a day; and it is pretty well established that the men of all nations will fight courageously if they are properly commanded. Nor is your assertion true of primitive man. With little knowledge, and slender appliances, he subdued the wild wolf and domesticated it into the dog. He captured and tamed the wild buffalo and bred from it the useful ox. He flung himself upon the back of the wild horse and broke the creature's pride. He defended himself against infinitely more powerful animals, and took his life in his hands when he hunted the food for his wife and child. It appears to me that man is the bravest denizen of this planet. He does not fight the lion with his teeth or the elephant with his hands, but this does not show his want of courage, it only shows his possession of sense.

G. W. FOOTE.

(To be concluded.)

Digitized by Google

WORLDLINESS.

In the cant phrase of the conventicles worldliness is a very heinous sin. There is an absolute incompatibility between devotion to God and attention to the things of this world. Whatever is given to the one is taken from the other. Worldliness is a kind of blasphemy, a disregarding of those interests which God has declared paramount; a setting aside of his authority in favor of other interests. If religion is true, and the eternal destiny of most of us will be unending torment, then

> There's nothing worth a thought beneath,
> But how we may escape the death
> That never never dies.

But if this view is false, and the practical life of men show that they act as though they thought so, an indictment lies against religion for seeking to warp mankind from their most profitable pursuits by bribes of heaven or threats of hell.

If we reckon up simply the cost of religion, the millions spent on ministers, churches, and missions, who does not see that the same sum expended on the tangible amelioration of the lot of humanity in this world would produce far more beneficent results? Take only the annual income of the Established Church of England. The sum would amply suffice for the purposes of free education, or to start co-operative establishments which might solve the questions in dispute between capital and labor.

Then again, consider the loss involved in dedicating one special day to the service of God, a day on which the much needed opportunities of instruction, amusement and healthy recreation are as far as possible denied to the workers in the name of religion. Were but Sunday understood as a day to be devoted to the service of man what a change would be at once effected?

Christianity tends to weaken human interest in temporal and social amelioration by its substitute of bliss hereafter. As in a recent instance parricide may even be a speedy means of arriving at this end. The end itself is so all important that everything must be subordinated to it.

The genuine religionist lives in two worlds at once. He is in the world of struggle, action and progress, but he is of the world above, where all is calm and there is nothing more to be gained. It is true one has to work and eat—at any rate to eat—but these are not his real concerns. Religion places God first, and declares that you cannot serve God and Mammon. No one has expressed more strongly than Jesus the necessity of hating the world and everything in it—father and mother, and wife and children, brothers and sisters, yea and one's own life also—if you would be his disciple (Luke xiv., 26). "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him," says the apostle John (1 Ep. ii., 15). Modern Christianity, seeking to compound Christianity with Secularism now the theological dose is found too nauseous if administered alone, leaves out of sight as far as possible the ascetic and monkish principles of Christianity, which it cannot, however, expunge either from its books or from the history of its faith.

Wherever Christianity has been adopted in earnest it has tended to destroy man's interest in temporal and social improvement, and taught him to sacrifice the tangible objects of worldliness to otherworldliness, the equally if not more selfish pursuit of a visionary happiness in another and hypothetical existence. By attracting his desires and diverting his efforts towards another world, it has sought to minimise his attention to this. And this position is a logical one, far more so than that of the gentlemen who sit on two stools and seek to make the best of both worlds. If we are eternal beings, this life is truly an insignificant affair. Heaven and hell dwarf this world into comparative nothingness. Only when we see that all there is of worth in life must be gathered here and now do we see the true importance of daily duties.

The men who have done most good to humanity, like Harvey, Spinoza, Voltaire, Priestley, Paine, Watt, Beethoven, Owen, Goethe, Darwin, Stephenson and Edison, are justly esteemed because they loved the world and the things connected with it. Had they been engrossed with religion and their supposed interests in some other world, they could not have benefited the world as they did. Those who have most busied themselves with God's business, priests and monks and Inquisitors, have invariably been the greatest scourges to humanity. Let us then gladly confess we are worldly, and that this world at once affords sufficient motives for our aspirations and scope for our energies.

J. M. Wheeler.

PRIESTS AND WORKERS.

At a time when the Labor Problem is the great question of the hour, it is interesting to observe the attitude of the Irish priests towards the Irish workers. With that policy and cunning for which they are famous, the Irish priests are endeavoring to keep as much as possible aloof from the labor struggle, or to adopt a position of neutrality if they cannot keep altogether aloof with good grace. To the impartial observer it is perfectly evident that the clergy are in fear and trembling of the consequences that might follow any pronounced interference on their part. They see that their best policy is "to run with the hare and hunt with the hounds." If they sided with the capitalists in labor disputes they might lose their hold of the workers; and, on the other hand, if they sided with the workers, they might lose the big subscriptions and the good dinners which accompany friendship with Catholic employers. Their great aim, therefore, is to effect compromises between masters and men, and to pose as the best friends of both parties, without whose interference strikes and disputes would end in ruin. This is a prudent policy. So long as it can be safely prosecuted there is little fear of their losing their hold of the body of the workers; and so well are they pleased with their own attitude that they are exceedingly jealous of anything likely to disturb it or to create a diversion.

We had a good example of this jealousy in Dublin the other day. Dr. Aveling addressed a mass meeting of the Dublin laborers, with a view to securing their co-operation with the English Laborers Union. Instantly clerical circles were perceptibly perturbed. The organ of the priests, The Irish Catholic, issued a solemn warning to the Catholic workers to beware of the friendship of Dr. Aveling and his kind. As to the probable results of such a friendship this pious print went into hysterics, and predicted a reign of ruin and anarchy if men with "a vile hatred of God and religion" were listened to for a moment. Catholic Ireland had Catholic priests, it said in effect, to settle all those labor questions without the aid of these foreign and irreligious interlopers. In issuing its warning The Irish Catholic forgot to be logical, as it usually does. It ignored the fact that the Catholic priests do not trouble themselves about the condition of the laborers until the laborers strike, and that then their "friendship" is directed towards cajoling the strikers into accepting terms which are not at all as good as justice demands. As a matter of fact, their policy is a "dog in the manger" sort of policy—they will not befriend the workers themselves, nor will they allow others to befriend them.

The most protracted strike we have had in Ireland this long time was the strike in the bacon trade in Limerick, Cork, and Waterford. In the last-named city the strikers rejected the proffered interference of a priest, and lost much public sympathy by so doing, as interested parties raised a cry that the Catholic clergy were thereby insulted! Finally the strike was brought to a close, mainly through the instrumentality of the Bishop of Limerick. The strikers were thereupon preached to, to the effect that in all these labor struggles the workers should look to the clergy, and to the clergy alone, for support. Now, mark the sequel. In the city of Limerick the Catholic clergymen had refused to pay taxes, and prosecutions were instituted against them by the Corporation. After the strike had concluded the Corporation passed a resolution exempting from taxation all conventual residences in the city, excluding Protestant and other non-Catholic establishments. So that the friendship of these priestly "friends" of the poor has taken the shape in Limerick of putting on the shoulders of the workers the burden of taxation which the pious idlers have managed to shirk, through the pliant action of a too religious corporation.

Digitized by Google

The "friendship" of the Irish priests for the Irish workers amounts in the main to this: preaching from the pulpits that "blessed are the poor for theirs is the kingdom of heaven"; preaching also that the poor should be contented with their lot, because the scriptures say that "the poor we shall always have with us"; and last, and by no means least, taking from the worker's scanty earnings as many pennies as cajolery and threats can enable them to extract. Of course there are a great many Irishmen who object to this queer kind of "friendship," and who think that the clergyman should do something more than preach the uses and inevitableness of poverty. To meet the objections of such folk there is an article in the April number of The Lyceum, a clever magazine edited by a scholarly Jesuit. The article is evidently written with a purpose and is entitled "The Social Mission of the Church." It is to some extent meant as a reply to Mr. Stead's "Letters from the Vatican," or more correctly "The Pope and the New Era." The point of the article is that the Catholic Church was founded for the sake of souls, and not to civilise the world or to promote earthly happiness. "The aim of Christ's public life," we are told, "was wholly spiritual . . . . It was no part of his plan to provide remedies for earthly ills. And yet the political and social condition of his people gave him ample opportunity for doing so, if he would . . . . He would not act the part of a human peacemaker." This Jesuitical opinion of Christ is slightly different from Mr. Stead's idea that Christ was an exalted character and a sort of divine Socialist. The writer further explains, with delightful candor, that it is no concern of the Church whether men are slaves or freemen, learned or ignorant, poor or rich; and that it is none of its concerns either whether women are ennobled, or whether children, the poor, and the suffering are treated with tenderness provided their souls are safe. Far from troubling itself about any such considerations, the Church believes that temporal prosperity and the advance of education react unfavorably on Catholicism, and should be discountenanced rather than promoted for the sake of the welfare of "souls" and of the Church's own interests. These definitions of the Church's relations to social progress, and its attitude towards the social problem, are honestly though brutally candid. They epitomise exactly the real motives that are actuating the clergy of Ireland in their attitude towards the workers. The pity of it is that the Irish workers are still too priest-ridden to see through the imposition of teachings which aim at showing that happiness in a "future world" is the only happiness worth seeking for, and that the best way to secure that happiness is to suffer as much as possible here. What is more astonishing in this short-sightedness of the toilers is that very few of them take the fact into account that while the priests preach poverty and humility, they practise the pursuit of all the enjoyments and comforts that this world affords, and always at the deluded workers' expense.

J. O'DONOVAN.

SHELLEY'S RELIGION.

ON Wednesday, April 9, the room of the Shelley Society at University College was crowded with an unusually large audience, many of them ladies, intent upon hearing what Mr. Foote had to say upon this question.

Dr. FURNIVALL, upon taking the chair, mentioned that Mr. W. M. Rossetti had expressed his regret at his unavoidable absence. He was quite sure what Mr. Foote had to say on the important subject of Shelley's Religion would be of value as coming from a close student of the poet.

Mr. FOOTE excused himself for not having prepared a paper, because he had never read one in his life, and because he had not time. The subject was one which ought to be discussed first of all by a body of experts, and presuming he was addressing such a body he should take for granted a considerable acquaintance with the prose and verse of the poet. It could not be settled by what Mr. Gladstone called a comprehensive contemplation. It was necessary to look to details, and to remember that Shelley, with his high, strong temperament, was often at the mercy of his moods. In appealing to specific passages, what Mr. Foote proposed to show was that, with just here and there an unimportant break, there was a continuity of his Freethought from his first proclamation of Atheism in "Queen Mab" until the end. He was aware there was a strong consensus of opinion against him. Robert Browning, despite his enormous intellectual power, in matters of religion had scarcely got beyond the theology of the Methodist chapel. He was mistaken as to the forged Shelley letters, and probably equally so in supposing the poet would ever have become a Christian. Mr. Rossetti thought that Shelley could not have been an Atheist because he became a Berkeleyan idealist. But, argued Mr. Foote, Berkeleyan idealism did not lead to a god. If the Materialist was debarred by the relativity of human knowledge from affirming that matter was the cause of all, so was the idealist debarred from ascribing all to mind. Then there was the Rev. Stopford Brooke, who held that Shelley was a Pantheist, but who admitted that in his ordinary moments he was not a Pantheist. The poet, said Mr. Foote, is a personifier. He endows Nature with sentiments derived from himself. Every poet assuredly must be Pantheistic to this extent, that he looks on Nature as in sympathy with himself, the process really being the reverse. But, he contended, in Shelley the philosopher spoke as well as the poet. He would first cite the testimony of Trelawny, who knew him well in his last years. Trelawny said: "The principal fault I have to find is that the Shelleyan writers, being Christians themselves, seem to think that a man of genius cannot be an Atheist, and so they strain their own faculties to disprove what Shelley asserted from the earliest stage of his career to the last day of his life. He ignored all religions as superstitions. Some years ago, one of the most learned of the English bishops questioned me regarding Shelley; he expressed both admiration and astonishment at his learning and writing. I said to the Bishop, 'You know he was an Atheist?' He said 'Yes.' I answered 'It is the key and the distinguishing quality of all he wrote.'" Mr. Foote then gave numerous extracts from both the prose writings and poems of Shelley in support of his contention. He admitted one was apt to find his own views in a favorite poet, but he had said that Shelley was an Atheist before sharing his opinions. His judgment was formed from long acquaintance with the works of a poet he held to be the poet of Atheism, as well as of political and social revolt, a beacon flinging its light across the tossing seas our bark of progress has to travel.

Dr. FURNIVALL, in opening the discussion thought Mr. Foote had done injustice to Browning in describing his theology as that of a Methodist. He did not believe in damnation, and said frankly, What is red to me is green to you. Dr. Furnivall thought Shelley objected mainly to the evil done in the name of God. The religious people owed a debt to Shelley because he freed them from their dogmatic superstition. He (Dr. Furnivall) was an Agnostic himself, but he thought there was development in Shelley's writings, and that at the end although he hated all this blasphemous stuff called Christianity, this devil called God, he believed in something more than the immortality of fame.

Digitized by Google

Mr. SALT thought the most important point was the definition of Atheism. If it meant the denial of a personal God, Shelley was an Atheist; if it meant the denial of any spirit running through the universe, he was not. His Pantheism was the positive side of his religion. He did not believe there was any change in the direction of Shelley becoming Christian, and it was a happy thing that none of the usual death-bed stories could be circulated in regard to him.

Mr. G. BERNARD-SHAW said he was always happy to call himself an Atheist. A personal being was practically the meaning of the word "God." If you make it known you are an Atheist you do people a deal of good by their discovering that you say this and are not struck dead immediately. Your crude Materialist forgets that in many things we are in the metaphysical stage, and when he discovers that consciousness and will are not fully accounted for, plunges back again into Theism. We had a recent example in Mrs. Besant. Mr. Shaw then promoted some hilarity by describing the consternation he had some years ago caused the Shelley Society by declaring that he was, like Shelley, an Atheist, a Socialist, and a Vegetarian.

Mr. MASSINGHAM, of the Star, continued the discussion from a Theistic standpoint. He thought Shelley was more favorable to Christianity than Mr. Foote supposed.

Mr. FOOTE, in replying, urged that Shelley as an ideal poet was a personifier when he spoke of the spirit of the universe. Mankind, as a whole, never accepted any god save a personal one. Religion was worship, and Shelley wanted every man to stand erect and free without awe and without worship. He agreed that Shelley developed the poet more and sank the critic. Agnosticism was only a name to cover a respectable form of scepticism. One who rejects a personal God is practically an Atheist.

Mr. Bishop has been contending, in the English Churchman, that Jonah's whale was a whale as affirmed by Jesus, that, moreover, whales are occasionally found in the Mediterranean, and that Jonah was not taken down the gullet but remained in the whale's mouth. "All would go well," says Mr. Bishop, "as long as the whale floated on the surface of the sea." A Mr. Carwell points out that this also appeals to faith, and prefers to believe that it was "a large fish with a capacious stomach so formed that Johah—under divine protection—could dwell therein." A sort of chamber fitted up with air tubes, praying cushions, a dining table, and other appurtenances, we presume.

Some correspondents of the Church Times call attention to a superstition still to be found in the country in regard to bread baked on Good Friday. It is believed that it will cure stomachic disorders and never grow mouldy. If it does not turn out as expected, there has been some fault in the baking. This is one of the beautiful legacies of superstition left from the ages of faith.

There are two important rival societies for distributing the Bible: the British and Foreign Bible Society and the Trinitarian Bible Society. For about sixty years these societies have been at loggerheads in their claims upon the subscriptions of the faithful, and again the feud has broken out by the Trinitarian Society, circulating among the subscribers to the former, damaging statements in regard to its rival. The British and Foreign Society has retorted that in the attack there is some suppression of the true if not some suggestion of the false. It is altogether a very pretty quarrel as it stands.

THREE JOLLY JUGGLERS.

Tune—"Of a' the airts that wind can blaw."

Of all the writers e'er I read,
I dearly love old Mo,
He spins such rare side-splitting yarns
'Bout I am, Self and Co.
Old Gulliver's tours and 'Rabian Nights
Are nowhere in the race,
And bold Munchausen's wildest flights
Must e'en take second place.

On Pharaoh, the Egyptian king,
They played full many a trick;
They swarmed his land with frogs and lice
Through conjuring with a stick;
O'er all the waters in the land
They stretched their magic rod,
And all the streams at Mo's command
Were straightway turned to blood.

King Pharaoh's jugglers bravely strove
With Aaron to compete,
They turned the waters into blood,
Made snakes and frogs complete;
But when it came to raising lice
They had to yield the stakes,
And Aaron's serpent in a trice
Devoured their wriggling snakes.

Mo cussed the whole of Egypt's stock
From cattle-plague to die;
And locusts brought in multitudes
That darkened all the sky.
And each time Pharaoh's heart grew soft
To let the children go,
Old Moses telegraphed aloft
"We want more tricks to show."

The senior partner of the firm
Then hardened Pharaoh's heart,
And made him swear by all his gods
No Hebrew should depart;
But Moses, after some more tricks,
With all the Jews marched out,
And landed Pharaoh in a fix
Among the Red Sea trout.

T. CLARK.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A NOTE FROM MRS. BESANT.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE FREETHINKER."

SIR,—In your last issue you think it worth while to quote a statement as to my being a speaker at Spiritualist meetings, from a Mr. Aston, a person notoriously untruthful in his attacks on Freethinkers. The only foundation for the falsehood is the fact that I have given one lecture, showing my reasons for not accepting the Spiritualist explanation of certain observed phenomena.

Permit me to add that if the Freethinker finds it useful to print Christian falsehoods about me, while I shall regret its policy, I shall trouble it with no further contradictions. I can only hope that no one whose opinion I value will accept as mine the opinions or actions ascribed to me in its columns.

ANNIE BESANT.

[Mrs. Besant makes a mountain of a mole-hill. We certainly did quote from Mr. Aston, but it was in "Acid Drops," and we quoted from him only to ridicule him. We put Mr. Aston's words in quotation marks, and we are only responsible for our own comments. We never said that Mrs. Besant was a Spiritualist, and we don't understand her annoyance. The suggestion that we are in the habit of printing "Christian falsehoods" about her may be left to the judgment of our readers.—EDITOR, Freethinker.]

OBITUARY.—Died at Woolwich on the 8th inst., Henry Augustus Leisten. Although a most staunch Secularist, he had not become a member of any Freethought Society, owing to long continued sickness. While preferring a secular burial, he at his parents' desire consented to Christian rites being performed. By his own desire I write this notice for publication in the Freethinker.—H. W. Leisten.

Digitized by Google

ACID DROPS.

Mr. W. H. Reynolds, the honorary treasurer of the National Secular Society, applied for the use of the large hall of the Hatcham Liberal Club for a Freethought lecture, of course on the usual business terms. Mr. W. Wood, the Club secretary, replied, "I am directed by my committee to inform you that, it being contrary to the rule of the Club to allow discussion on religion, they regret your request cannot be acceded to." Well now, that is rich. The Club has actually itself, openly, deliberately, officially had lectures by Colonel Olcott and Mrs. Besant on Theosophy, and these lectures were followed by discussion. Perhaps the committee would say "Oh, Theosophy is not a religion." But that is simply humbug. The real fact, we take it, is this, that a line is drawn between the utter scepticism of the National Secular Society and the views of people who have some sort of a God and some sort of a future life. Any sort will do; but it must be some sort, and then you are respectable. The Hatcham Liberals are too squeamish to let naked Reason enter their Club.

The Hatcham Liberals, however, were very glad to receive aid from Secularists when they were establishing their club. At the very least £40 or £50 was subscribed by Secularists out of the £300 raised on debenture bonds. But the Club is prosperous now, and gratitude, of course, is a lively sense of favors to come.

The Christian World shies at Richard Davies's pious ejaculations before emigrating to heaven via the gallows. "The religious portions of the letter," it says, "seem unspeakably unpleasant. There is not one word of regret or repentance, nothing of humble reliance on an infinitely merciful Judge, but much of an almost self-righteous assurance of salvation." Not one word of regret or repentance! That is exactly what we said. The young murderer only thought of himself.

Tilehurst Congregation Chapel, Reading, has just held its first anniversary services. It was a great occasion, and the Rev. S. McComb rose to its full height. In a characteristic passage of a sublime discourse, he said that "a certain light in sceptical quarters, by name Mr. Foote, had footed down to Reading." This brilliant and original witticism threw the congregation into positive convulsions, and many of them are still suffering from the shock. It is really hard to conceive why this Goliath of Christianity, who wields such powerful and pointed weapons, does not accept the challenge of the poor little David of Secularism.

A lively scene was witnessed at a prayer-meeting in a British church at Springfield, Ohio. Mrs. Mary Higgins and Miss Jerry Taylor, two leading members, became involved in a fuss over some matter, and so far forgot themselves that they engaged in a hair-pulling scuffle before the whole congregation. The belligerent females were separated, and next morning Miss Taylor had Mrs. Higgins arrested, charging her with assault and battery.

St. James's Church, Taxal, Whaley Bridge, has been the scene of a squabble between Parson Evans and his churchwarden, Lieutenant-Colonel Hall. The parson is alleged to have assaulted the churchwarden in the very house of God, during divine service, and it is believed that legal proceedings will follow. Let us pray.

More religious love! This time in Hoyerswerda, a little town in Prussian Silesia. The Protestants attacked the Catholic church, broke all the windows, cut the pictures to pieces, and battered all the holy utensils on the altar. As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end, Amen!

The German American Christ, who rejoices in the name of Schwenfurth, has been holding a convention of his followers at Rockford, Illinois. He repeated his claims to the Messiahship, and finds quite a number to bear their testimony in his favor.

The Protestant missionaries of Madras allege that in their part of India the Salvation Army "has not been successful." The S.A., they say, "have only labored where other missions have planted themselves." The Army swells its ranks only "from the converts of other churches." They moreover assert that the number of deaths among its agents and of those disabled by sickness is exceptionally large.

The Christian Mission at Highbury is situated at the house of a gentleman who attends to the soles and toes of the populace. The inscriptions on the windows read "Mr. So-and-so, Chiropodist," "This man receiveth sinners," "What think ye of Christ?" "Corns extracted without pain."

The belief in witchcraft still survives in Suffolk, as in many other country places. At an inquest held on a child at Fressingfield, both the father and mother stated they believed the death was due to the witchcraft of the child's step grandmother, who died a few hours before the child. This woman's husband also stated that he was of opinion his late wife had the powers of a witch, but he seems to have let out the real secret when he added that he always tried to do what she wanted in consequence.

Zélie Bourion, the French fasting woman, has been dismissed from the Dordogne hospital. Dr. Lafon saw signs of inanition and would not let the ordeal be prolonged. Some of the Sisters of Charity believe that Zelie is possessed, but the doctors know better.

A serious affray has taken place at Belgaum, India, between Mohammedans and Hindoos. Over a thousand persons were engaged in a religious riot, and three followers of Mohammed and one Hindoo were killed and many more injured.

Religious bigotry came into play during the late riots in Vienna. Only the Jews' shops were plundered, and on the following days such inscriptions as "Christian old clothes shop," "Christian brandy shop," everywhere met the eye. One woman was stoned as a Jewess and narrowly escaped being burnt alive.

No doubt there are some social reasons for the odium incurred by the Jews, but this is everywhere intensified by religious bigotry. The curse of God is supposed to be upon them, and nothing can be too bad to inflict on the race who crucified the blessed Savior.

The Rev. B. J. Snell has been to Jerusalem and seen the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, where rival Christians have to be kept in order by the "infidels." Mr. Snell says, "It is not lovely to see how Christians of different Churches worship under one roof, and that roof, by all their accepted signs, the most sacred roof in the world. They would fight again, as they have fought before, wildly, like beasts, but that the precaution is taken of having a hundred stacks of arms in the courtyard, with Mussulman soldiers behind the stacks. Soldiers swarm in all quarters of the church, soldiers stand on guard before every shrine, soldiers clear the space before every procession—Moslem soldiers, to restrain these Christians from actions marked by zeal without knowledge." Mr. Snell adds that even "the howling dervishes of Cairo manage without soldiers."

Hugh Price Hughes has begun a series of addresses at St. James's Hall on "Why am I a Christian?" Why not begin a series on "Why am I a Liar?" It would draw.

The Wesleyan Methodists, who are certainly the most active of the dissenting sects, only claim 423,701 members in Great Britain. This is not a very grand show after one hundred and fifty years' active propaganda, with the Lord of Hosts to back them up.

The Methodists are not to have the monopoly of the "forward" movement. The Presbyterians in London, most of whom are Scotch, have sounded the pibroch, and there has been a gathering of the clans. Bawbees have been shelled out, and the Rev. John McNeill has been commissioned to hold the fort on Sunday afternoons at the Central Hall, Holborn, a building capable of seating about 4,000 people.

We intended to address one of our "Letters to the Clergy" to the Rev. John McNeill, but after reading two or three of his sermons we found nothing to write about.

Digitized by Google

Such poverty of matter is really extraordinary in a man of such reputation.

A leader writer in the Daily News, we believe Mr. Andrew Lang, tells us that "In Loch Leven when the trout do not rise to fly, they are trolled for with angels, or even with the natural minnow, so hard are the hearts of the Caledonian race." We are not great on Scotch angling, but we never thought they were so hard hearted as to use angels for trolling.

A correspondent of the Christian World inveighs against the Victoria authorities, not only for excluding the Bible from public schools, but for keeping the very name of Christ out of the school books. We are glad to hear the gentleman has such a grievance. It is good to see the Christians wailing because they cannot tyrannise over their neighbors and their neighbors' children.

The Rev. Stewart Headlam states in the Church Reformer that the London School Board, besides establishing and endowing that Protestantism which makes the "Bible and the Bible only" its religion, also in one little corner of its domain has established and endowed the Jewish religion. In about half-a-dozen schools, several Jewish teachers are specially appointed: special religious instruction is arranged for: the holidays are given at the suggestion of the chief Rabbi, and alteration in the ordinary school session is allowed on Fridays: and those members of the Board, who are most particular about insisting on what they call the training of teachers, which means a residence at one of the Training Colleges, appoint without a murmur "untrained" Jewish teachers.

The Rev. Walter Walsh's lecture at Newcastle on "Is there a God?" drew a big house. His friends cheered his points, but, according to the Leader, he did not make "much impression upon the Secularists." Judging from the report, the Secularists must have wondered how any rational man could expect to convince his opponents by such flimsy arguments. It says much for their patience that they gave him a courteous hearing. When a Theist invites Atheists to hear him, and then tells them that a belief in God is natural to man, he is wasting their time as well as his own. The belief is not natural to them, and they want it proved by other arguments than one which represents them as monstrosities.

Dr. Pressensé, a French Protestant, is among the prophets. "The final utterance of our Latin races," he says, "shall neither be Atheism nor Ultramontism." We should offer him ten to one it will be one or the other, and the odds are in favor of Atheism, for the brain of France is becoming more and more irreligious.

Cannon Liddon says, "Disprove the Resurrection, and Christianity will fade away into thin air as a graceful but discredited illusion." We say it is the Christian's duty to prove the Resurrection. It has never been proved yet, and all the evidence it can boast would be laughed at in any court of law. Is there any Christian champion willing to discuss the Resurrection with a leading Freethinker?

The Rev. Alfred Rowland, who delivered the Merchants' Lecture last week, said it was the duty of the legislature to enforce the day of rest by closing every place but churches and chapels. But why not have a complete day of rest? Why not stop Mr. Rowland's tongue from wagging on the Sabbath? It might be a great loss to the world, but the world would survive it.

Archdeacon Denison is now joined by the Bishop of Lichfield. This right reverend father in God protests against Lux Mundi, the new High Church volume which, written by Oxford clergymen, admits some of the best established conclusions of German criticism. The Bishop of Lichfield and other protestors regard this as a scandal, as in a certain sense it is, for men who cannot preach the doctrines of their Church should go out of it. Even if they contracted to prove that the moon is made of green cheese, they should go on preaching it, or else throw up their positions and salaries.

According to the Temps the tiger is almost a divinity in Annam. Pagodas have been consecrated to him, and he has had conferred upon him titles of nobility. Such is the influence of fear on superstitious minds. Yet the law of self-preservation asserts itself, and the people try to kill the tigers who are as numerous as themselves. They entice them into pits and then destroy them.

"I have often," said General Gordon, executed men, but never without the direct sanction of the Almighty. I placed the Bible on my knees, and I prayed that if he saw fit to reverse my sentence he would signify it to me. On no single occasion was my decision reversed." Of course not. What God tells a man is what he tells himself. Now, however, Gordon is himself "executed" by the Madhi, who is quite sure that he likewise obeyed the will of God in dispatching the "infidel."

Several of the religious papers are angry with Sir George Stokes for denying that the doctrine of immortality is part of the Christian faith, and do not understand how bishops who recite the creed that they believe in the life everlasting and declare that Jesus Christ brought life and immortality to light can endorse him. But we suppose Sir G. Stokes and the bishops he cites in his favor want to get away from the absurdities of the resurrection of the body.

Of course J. C. didn't bring life and immortality to life. Apart from the fact that we are as much in the dark about it as ever, the Egyptians notoriously taught the doctrine of immortality ages before Moses forgot to learn that doctrine, together with all the wisdom of the Egyptians.

It is curious that while many Theists like Mr. Francis Newman give up the immortality of the soul, there are also a few spiritists—we believe Hudson Tuttle, St. George Stock and George Barlow of the number—who believe in the immortality of the soul while denying the existence of any personal God.

The High Church papers rejoice that more churches than ever went in for elaborate ritual at Easter. The Low Church English Churchman calls the Ritualistic churches "Flower Shows and Music Halls." Yet this is what attracts. It won't do to rely on the Blessed Trinity nowadays.

Dr. Lightfoot, the late Bishop of Durham, left by his will £23,622 17s. 9d.—not so much for the bishop of a wealthy see, but pretty good for a follower of the meek and lowly, who had not where to lay his head.

Earl Compton brings forward in Parliament a bill to prevent the appropriation of seats in church, and to practically make all seats free. Does the Church hope to stave off disestablishment by becoming democratic? It will find in the long run that the democracy mean not only to have the seats but the churches.

According to the Brazil correspondent of the New York Tribune, the Brazilians hail with joy the establishment of religious equality. They have long been disgusted with the character of the priesthood. He says "Some of the most active politicians here are known to be sons of priests." Celibacy is too often only a cloak for immorality.

This is equally the case in England and Ireland, if we can credit the revelations just published by Miss Cusack, who was formerly known as "The Nun of Kenmare," in her work Life inside the Church of Rome. The lady had full experience of what she tells, and she affirms that the Roman Catholic priests are not only unchaste, but drunken and unscrupulous.

The latest figures given of the tithe rent charge are those for 1887. The sum amounts to £4,054,403, more than enough to defray the cost of free education.

He who would follow Christ must share Christ's experiences, says Dr. Marcus Dods. Prof. Succi, the fasting man, seems to be acting on this motto, which we hope won't lead to any one being crucified.

Digitized by Google

MR. FOOTE'S ENGAGEMENTS.

Sunday, April 20, Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, E.C.; at 7, "Is the Bible Fit for Children?"

April 27, Hall of Science.

May 4, Newcastle; 11, South Shields; 18, Hall of Science, London; 25, N. S. S. Conference.

June 1, Hall of Science London; 8, Gladstone Radical Club and Hall of Science, London.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

LITERARY communications to be addressed to the Editor, 14 Clerkenwell Green, London, E.C. All business communications to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C.

THE Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the office, post free to any part of Europe, America, Canada and Egypt, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 6s. 6d.; Half Year, 3s. 3d.; Three Months, 1s. 7½d. Australia, China and Africa:—One Year, 8s. 8d.; Half Year, 4s. 4d.; Three Months, 2s. 2d. India:—One Year, 10s. 10d.; Half Year, 5s. 5d. Three Months, 2s. 8½d.

SCALE OF ADVERTISEMENTS.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 3s.; Half Column, 15s.; Column, £1 10s. Special terms for repetitions

IT being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will in future receive the number when their subscription expires in a colored wrapper.

E. WALLER.—Mr. Touzeau Parris has not written any account of his conversion to Freethought for our columns. We should be glad if he would do so. We recently announced a lecture by Mr. Parris on this subject which is perhaps what your friend refers to.

J. C. H.—Hardly up to the mark, and scarcely in our way.

H. BORLAND (Dum Dum)—Thanks for the "hearty congratulations" of your little band of Freethinkers. We believe the characters you refer to are meant for Shelley and Byron.

W. WESTERMAN.—Glad to hear from you as, in a sense, one of our converts. Your letter is extremely interesting. It is evident that Christianity has not made a paradise of the West Indies.

H. S. FRIZELLE.—Mr. Forder will write you. We hope there will be a good Branch in Dublin.

J. HARRIS.—Newsagents often tell lies to hide their bigotry. They can all supply the Freethinker if they wish to. There are, as you say, many small towns in which our propaganda might be introduced. Something is being attempted in the South.

B. W.—A Branch that has no copies of the Freethought papers on sale at its lectures is neglecting its duty. There is no excuse with respect to the Freethinker, which is supplied on sale or return.

MR. FORDER desires us to say that his name was placed on the Freethought Record without any communication with him before it was printed and issued.

J. S.—Thanks. See "Acid Drops."

A. J. FIELD is just joining the National Secular Society with six of his friends. Many other readers of the Freethinker have written us to a similar effect during the last week or two. Our correspondent sends a subscription, at the same time, in response to our appeal.

S. A. GIMSON.—Your letter arrived too late for this week's Freethinker. It shall appear in our next.

W. T. LEEKEY.—The reverend gentleman is like many of his cloth, a keen and unscrupulous advertiser.

G. HALL. (Chester-le-Street)—We are pleased to hear good reports of Mr. J. Clarke's work in your district.

C.—We have always understood that Florence Nightingale was a professed Christian, but unsound on the dogma of future punishment.

W. CABELL.—It was a slip. Lenten fare only lasts from Ash Wednesday to Easter Saturday.

E. BOYS.—Cuttings are always welcome.

W. H. COWSHILL.—It makes no difference.

E. BUCKLE.—We prefer light, satirical or comic verse. Serious verse is judged by a higher standard. Glad to hear you have gained us some fresh subscribers.

J. KEAST.—Thanks. See reply to J. A. Williams.

H. NICHOLSON.—Temperate, well-reasoned letters in the local press do the cause a great deal of good. You do right in leaving the Christians a monopoly of personalities.

C. JUNGE.—We are obliged. It may be useful.

TOLEMAN GARNER notifies Branches that he is booked right through the summer season.

J. DEAN.—Ten shillings is a handsome yearly subscription from a shop assistant. We hope your example will prove contagious.

J. READ suggests that we should open a column for brief accounts by Freethinkers of how they were converted from Christianity, as a reply to the Hugh Price Hughes species. We will think it over.

W. K.—Thanks for the cuttings. The Bishop of Liverpool may well judge Christianity by its fruits. It yields him a very handsome salary, which he would never earn in any honest occupation.

J. W. RUSH.—A great deal too long for our columns. The matter shall be laid before the Federation or the Organization Committee.

J. A. WILLIAMS (Bristol).—We thought it was an idle boast. Mr. Parsons seems to have a fertile imagination. With more brains he might be a poet.

A. SPENCER.—Mr. Wilks is in error or he has inadvertently misled you. The Freethinker is always sent out from our office on sale or return.

T. CRISFIELD.—Sorry to hear the Brighton Branch is doing so badly. No doubt such a town is very hard to work. We print your address for communications and subscriptions—8 Rose Hill Terrace. Could you get a good hall if Mr. Foote paid you a visit?

A. GUEST.—Shall appear.

BIRCH, newsagent, 25 Queen's Road, Peckham, supplies this journal and other Freethought publications.

PERSHORE STREET, Birmingham.—Your name was mutilated in opening your letter. The Society at Baskerville Hall will be pleased to see you. Ask for the secretary, and introduce yourself.

PAPERS RECEIVED.—Neues Freireligioses Sonntags Blatt—Der Arme Teufel—Western Figaro—Liberator—Truthseeker—Ironclad Age—Bulletin des Sommaires—Menschenthum—Progressive Thinker—Fair Play—Freidenker—Freethought—Birmingham Daily Gazette—Reading Observer—Consett Guardian—Rochdale Observer—Open Court—Evening Standard—Liberal Thinker—Washington Critic—Hull Daily News—Secular Thought—Nation—Scarborough News—Newcastle Daily Leader—Weekly Times and Echo—Kettering Observer—Lyceum—Chatham and Rochester News—Referee.

THE FREETHOUGHT FUND.

Mr. FOOTE'S appeal, as President of the National Secular Society, for funds to make up the recent loss of income, and to extend the Society's work, is being responded to by friends in various parts of the country. Some of the subscribers promise to remit annually as much as they can afford; others, who can only send a little at a time, promise to remit half-yearly or quarterly. As soon as possible a list of intending subscribers will be prepared. Meanwhile the following subscriptions are acknowledged as actually received by Mr. Foote or Mr. Forder.

	£	s.	d.		£	s.	d.
D. Baker	10	0	0	A. J. Field	0	10	0
W. H. S.	1	0	0	J. Dean, Jr.	0	10	0
E. Truelove	1	0	0	Hubert Richardson	1	0	0
G. R.	1	0	0	Alexander White	0	10	0
W. H. Morrish	1	0	0	S. R. Stephenson	1	1	0
Mrs. Stevens	0	5	0	E. Sims	1	0	0
A. C. G.	0	0	6	One (quarterly)	0	1	3

It is to be hoped that this first list will soon be followed by a second. Members of the N. S. S., or unattached friends of the movement, should bestir themselves. Let the President and his colleagues on the Executive be supplied, as they should be, with the sinews of war, and they will carry on the battle of Freethought with vigor, and they hope with success.

G. W. FOOTE.

HOW TO HELP US.

(1) Get your newsagent to exhibit the Freethinker in his window.

(2) Get your newsagent to take a few copies of the Freethinker and try to sell them, guaranteeing to take the copies that may remain unsold.

(3) Take an extra copy (or more), and circulate it among your acquaintances.

(4) Display, or get displayed, one of our contents-sheets, which are of a convenient size for the purpose. Mr. Forder will send them on application.

(5) Leave a copy of the Freethinker now and then in the train, the car, or the omnibus.

(6) Distribute some of our cheap tracts in your walks abroad, at public meetings, or among the audiences around street-corner preachers.

Digitized by Google

SUGAR PLUMS.

Mr. Foote's lectures at Portsmouth on Sunday were well attended. The advertising was exceptionally thorough, and the result was a considerable increase in the audiences. The afternoon lecture on "Why I am an Atheist," brought two opponents on the platform. The first was a very self-complacent gentleman, apparently an amateur local preacher, who declared with a smug smile that he was going to heaven, and talked generally as if he were taking part in an experience meeting. The second was the well-known Mr. Millet. This gentleman began by blowing his own trumpet. After giving himself a first-rate character, he proceeded to do a little forgery. He read out curious Theistic declarations from Darwin, Spencer and other writers. "Will you give me the references, please?" asked Mr. Foote. No, Millet couldn't; he had the passages copied out, and that was all. But he did, unfortunately, bring with him a copy of Mill's Three Essays on Religion, and from this volume he triumphantly read out a sentence to the effect that man's mind must have come from an infinite mind. Now Mr. Foote knew this was a fraud, so he asked Mr. Millet for the loan of the book. It was granted, and Mr. Foote showed the audience that the noble Millet had deliberately left out three words, "it is said," from the middle of the sentence, in which Mill merely stated an argument which he immediately rebutted. The Christian sat convicted and ashamed, but far from repentant. He was only angry at being found out. He came again in the evening and tried to create disorder, but failed ignominiously. Happily there was another and a better representative of Christianity. Major-General Synge spoke for ten minutes like a gentleman, and was suitably answered.

Two young men came down to Portsmouth from Poole, a distance of over fifty miles, which they covered on bicycles. They arrived in time to hear the fag end of the morning lecture, and, after hearing the afternoon lecture and the discussion, they mounted their machines to ride back to Poole.

The Portsmouth Branch is organising some summer excursions, and the experiment might be imitated by other Branches. These excursions are thoroughly enjoyed, and they yield a profit to the Branch funds.

The many friends of that Portsmouth veteran, Mr. J. Brumage, will be glad to hear that he is nearly recovered from his recent illness, and is beginning to look his old self again.

The special Executive meeting of the National Secular Society, held at the Hall of Science on Thursday, April 10, unanimously endorsed the President's action in fixing the Conference at Manchester, and decided to keep the Agenda open for resolutions until the end of the month. The matter is now in the hands of the party, and we hope no effort will be spared to make the Conference a representative one. Even Glasgow and Edinburgh could send delegates to Manchester. Distance will be no difficulty to the Branches included in the North Eastern Secular Federation. Yorkshire and Lancashire should be represented strongly. The Midlands, including Birmingham—from which we hope to see Mr. Daniel Baker—will also be able to send delegates at a moderate expense. London, of course, will remember that it owes the provinces a debt of courtesy. The South of England ought to be represented by Plymouth, Southampton, Portsmouth, and Reading. We should also like to see delegates from Grimsby in the East, and Cardiff in the West. Then there is Ireland. The Belfast Branch ought to be represented, and it would be very pleasant to see a delegate from the Dublin Branch, which is just being established.

Since the last Conference was held at Manchester, in 1873, during Mr. Foote's imprisonment, the Manchester Secularists have obtained a hall of their own. It was once a chapel and is now turned to a better use. No doubt this will attract Freethinkers from other localities, who will be able to talk with the Manchester friends and find out how the thing was done.

Mr. Foote will have some important proposals to make as to the future organisation of the party. New conditions call for new measures, and it is well that such proposals should be thoroughly discussed before being adopted.

Freethinkers residing in Battersea, Wandsworth, or Clapham should at once join the Battersea Branch of the N. S. S.; its meeting place is at present at the Shed of Truth, Prince of Wales's Road, Battersea Park, but the members hope soon to take a larger hall. This Branch intends conducting a vigorous campaign during the outdoor season. All the work as well as the expense now falls on the shoulders of a few earnest men. Freethinkers should rally round and help in the good cause.

Mr. Foote's lectures on the Religious Views of Shelley will be written out by and bye for publication. Many friends have expressed a wish to have it in print.

We have just printed and sent to the binders a remarkable work by a great German Atheist, Ludwig Feuerbach. It is rather tough reading, being as full of thought as an egg is full of meat, but every serious Freethinker should read it carefully. It is entitled The Essence of Religion. Feuerbach uses the psychological method, and shows how religion springs up and developes in the mind of pre-scientific man; that is, he goes to the root of the whole matter.

"The Freethinker, of London, England, edited by that able writer, G. W. Foote, ought to have a very large circulation in this country. We advise each of our readers to send a five-cent silver piece for a sample copy. No number is worth less than five times that sum."—Freethinker's Magazine (Buffalo).

In a review of Professor Robertson Smith's Lectures on the Religion of the Semites in the Westminster Review for April, Mr. Walter Lloyd says: "Whatever transmutations the practice and idea of sacrifice have undergone, they are traced back originally to essentially heathen and idolatrous customs. These were at first common to the Israelites and all the Semitic tribes; they underwent various modifications in the course of time, were essentially altered in Judaism after the exile, and a whole mass of ideas which had become associated with them were most disastrously carried over into Christianity by the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews, and finally adopted in scholastic and Calvinistic theology."

The Chatham Secular Society challenges the local clergy in the advertisement pages of the News. If any minister o' Christ is willing to debate "What has Christianity Done?" the Society will put forward Mr. Foote as a representative. Up to the present the Secretary has not been deluged with replies.

We had the pleasure of listening to the debate between Mr. J. M. Robertson and the Rev. J. Tinling. The reverend gentleman did far better than we expected. Mr. Engstrom publicly threw him over as incompetent, but in our judgment he could give Mr. Engstrom points as a debater. He was overweighted with a very bad case, but he pressed his own strongest points, and said as little as possible about his opponent's strong points, which is a degree of dexterity to which Mr. Engstrom has never to our knowledge attained.

Mr. Robertson did excellently. He was quick and adroit, and never at a loss for a neat reply. Since we first heard him speak in public he has wonderfully improved. He is acquiring a good platform style, and by and bye, when he conquers his tendency to too rapid speech, makes his points with greater deliberation, and crowns his arguments with a forceful peroration, there is no reason why he should not take a high position on the Freethought platform. Oratory, of course, is an art. A man must have a faculty for it to succeed, but the faculty must be cultivated, and that involves long and varied practice. Mr. Robertson has the ability, the knowledge and the earnestness. We hope he will persevere in his effort to master the art of public speech, and thus make his fine gifts of the utmost service to the cause he loves.

Some day or other Freethought will attract more men of Mr. Robertson's stamp. If young men would only be content with simplicity of living, and work hard in our party until their merits were recognised, they would find the battle worth fighting. Other terms are at present out of the question. The knight of Freethought must be content to forego the world's prizes. He must work hard, read and think much, and feel a passion for the cause; and eventually he will find in influence and respect a better reward than Bumble and Mrs. Grundy can offer.

Digitized by Google

It is sometimes said that Brahmanism is not a missionary religion, though Sir A. Lyall has given evidence that at the present day it is converting aboriginal tribes Christianity has not got hold of. A paragraph now reports that in one Hindoo meeting held in Benares, India, over 3,000 dols. were subscribed for missionary purposes in Australia.

A Brahman of high rank had visited that country and noted the intemperance there prevailing, and he believed the best way to save these poor Christian drunkards would be to convert them to Brahmanism. Several Brahmans of rank have declared themselves willing to go as missionaries, and translations of suitable passages from Hindoo religious books have been begun.

The Report of the debate in Parliament upon Mr. Acland's resolution in favor of Free Education, when 163 voted in favor of the principle and 223 against, is now published by the Hansard Publishing Union, Limited.

The Freethought Record is a penny monthly, started in the interest, apparently, of the Yorkshire Secular Federation. Its editor is J. Greeves Fisher, and it sub-editor John Grange. We wish it every success, and it shows signs of life. But the editorial announcement is rather wide. It is hardly the duty of Freethought (at present) to take up spelling reform, or to advocate everything on the extreme lines of Mr. Fisher. We hope he will pardon us for saying that Freethought is a speciality, and that while every Freethinker has a right to advocate, in his individual capacity, a thousand real or imaginary reforms, it is a grave impropriety to urge them as if they were a part of our propaganda.

Mrs. E. Lynn Linton, the popular authoress of Under Which Lord? has been studying the Irish Question in Ireland. She makes the following remarks on the influence of the priesthood: "The Church uses up its influence for everything but the practical purposes of work-a-day life. It teaches obedience to its ordinances, but not civic virtues. It encourages boys and girls to marry at an age when they neither understand the responsibilities of life nor can support a family; but in its regard for the sacrament it forgets the pauperisation of the nation. It enforces chastity, but it winks at murder; it demands money for masses for the souls of the dead, but it leaves on one side the homes and bodies of the living; it breeds a race of paupers to drag the country lower and lower into the depths of poverty, and thinks it has done a meritorious work, and one that calls for praise because of the paucity of numbers in the percentage of illegitimate births."

We learn from the Liberator that a Freethought paper has been issued at Brisbane, Queensland, with the very Australian title of the Stockwhip. It is, we gather, conducted by Mr. Wallace Nelson, formerly of Sheffield. We expect the Stockwhip will make the orthodox smart.

A few years ago, says an exchange, Ingersoll was passing through Cincinnati, and at his hotel he was accosted by a working man, who addressed him as follows: "Mr. Ingersoll, I am a poor, hard-working man, having a family to support, and I want a favor." "Well," said Robert, "what can I do for you?" "I want to call a brand of my cigars after you, 'and permission to use your photograph," answered the man. 'Certainly, my man, and I will give you a motto, if you desire." "I would thank you if you would," responded the man. Colonel Ingersoll gave it to him as follows: "We shall smoke in this world, but not in the next." Some months afterward, while passing through Cincinnati, Colonel Ingersoll was informed that the man made 9,000 dols. off the brand of cigars in less than a year.

An American judge of Philadelphia decided that a witness need not kiss the Bible. The lawyer having objected to a lady's evidence on this ground, Judge Arundel said "I am not surprised that this witness did not kiss the book. I would not do it either—a dirty book like that. This custom is a relic of idolatry, and the sooner it is abolished the better it will be. I don't think this witness objected to kissing the book because she intended to lie, but because it is a dirty book. I respect her regard for her person and her health." Such straws show the way the wind blows. Secular considerations take precedence of theological customs.

The charge of blasphemy brought against Mr. Walker of Lancaster, Tasmania, has been abandoned, and he is now charged with using language calculated to promote a breach of the peace. This shows that even in that backward spot they are afraid they cannot obtain a conviction for blasphemy.

Dr. Remigius Stölzle, Professor of Philosophy at Würzburg, has discovered some MSS. by Giordano Bruno in the library at Augsburg. They are commentaries on Aristolelian works and will be published with Bruno's complete works by Signor Tocco.

Mr. J. D. Shaw has purchased a corner lot in Waco, Texas, and proposes to rebuild a Freethought Hall and establish an Independent Pulpit Publishing House. We wish him success.

DID MOSES WRITE THE PENTATEUCH?

THE debate on this subject between Mr. J. M. Robertson and the Rev. Mr. Tinling, which took place at the Hall of Science on Thursday, April 10, was fully as lively as could be expected, and was very well attended. The debate arose out of a challenge thrown down by Mr. Tinling, who attended on behalf of the Christian Evidence Society at a lecture on "Freethought and the Bible" delivered by Mr. Robertson on behalf of the London Secular Federation.

The chair was taken by the Rev. Mr. Matthews, who exhorted the hearers to recognise all the facts and preserve an unbiased judgment.

Mr. ROBERTSON, in his opening speech, alluded to the tendency, even of Church scholarship, to give up the Mosaic authorship of the five books placed first in our Bible. In confirmation he cited Canon Driver, the Rev. Stanley Leathes, Dr. S. Davidson, and the Rev. Mr. Oxford. On the face of it only certain parts pretend to have come from Moses. There were others he could not have written. In the time of the Second Temple the Sadducees held that Moses only wrote the Ten Commandments. Even Jerome thought Ezra might have written the law. For the orthodox side there was only tradition, and to show what that was worth Mr. Robertson mentioned that the Rabbis in the Talmud held that Moses wrote the book of Job. Tradition was of no critical value. He then referred to 2 Kings xxii., which tells how the book of law was found in the reign of King Josiah. This was the first mention of any such work, and there was no reason to believe that it was known in the days of Hezekiah, Solomon or David. Go further back to the Book of Judges, within measurable distance of the Mosaic period, and there was no trace of the law. They offered up sacrifice at local shrines in direct opposition to it, and the historic writers never say they broke the law. The law ascribed to Moses set up a vast sacerdotal system, a large tabernacle with much upholstery, elaborate service and 22,000 Levites. How could all this have been set up in the wilderness and then utterly disappear? In Judges we found no king, no high priest, no sacerdotalism, no organised nation, but half-civilised tribes, who occasionally united under leaders of ability like Gideon. In Samuel the centre of worship, a little ark on a cart, was put in the hands of a private person. Judges showed there could have been no such numbers as stated in Exodus, 600,000 fighting men, or a nation of two and a half millions in a wilderness, without water, living on manna, killing an enormous number of lambs a male lamb of the first year for every family, implying two million sheep, who would need 400,000 acres of grazing ground. For the tabernacle there was metal work; yet in the reign of Saul there was no smith in Israel, and Solomon had to send abroad for workmen to build his temple. Mr. Robertson dwelt on the preposterous details of the Jews' forty years in the wilderness, and contended that everything could be explained by the books having been composed by the priests after their return from the captivity, when the hierarchy in the place of the king controlled Israel after a small remnant of the people returned from Babylon.

Mr. TINLING thanked Mr. Robertson for his courtesy in opening the debate, although the challenge had been given by Mr. Tinling. He devoted most of his half-hour to showing that the critics disagreed among themselves. Disregarding Spinoza, he said criticism had been going on since 1753, and reviewing it, we were struck with the disagreement of the critics. All allowed that Deuteronomy was the great battleground. Wellhausen contends the Book of Deuteronomy was written first, and Leviticus after, but one of these great scholars, Dr. Bleek, held it certain that Deuteronomy was written to supplement the Levitical law. Professor Rawlinson wrote thirty years ago that there were twenty different theories, each more complicated than the last, as to the origin of the Pentateuch, so you may guess how many there are to-day. Some said the Book of the Covenant was written by a Jehovist, others by an Elohist. One says one thing and another, another. One said the Jehovist was first. "No, no," say the other critics, "the Elohist was first." Why? Because their theories required it. Wellhausen, the apostle of the new school, thinks he can trace three documents and three editions. Ewald says there are seven. Others say it is a mass of fragments. You will find them flatly contradicting each other with equal scholarship. Those are facts. Delitzsch, the great Hebrew scholar who has just died, says the style of Deuteronomy marks it as unique and in one mould, but d'Eichthal says Deuteronomy was a lot of fragments. We don't know where they are or what they will say next. If you take one you must sacrifice all the rest. Wellhausen had come at last to the opinion that only on the ground of antiquities could the matter be settled. If we could get on the ground on antiquities he had strong hopes Mr. Robertson would be on his side. Where were these books to be put? In the time of Ezra, said the critics. Why? Because they cannot be put any lower. They don't fit anywhere but in the time of Moses. There are things in the time of Ezra not in Leviticus. The time of Ezra was the beginning of the synagogue, an opposite movement to the Levitical system, which centralised all at the capital. He held that the historical books and the Psalms were full of the law. But the critics say the passages are late or interpolated. Why? Because it conflicts with their theories. The Psalms was chokeful of the law of the Lord, so they would have that none of the Psalms were written by David. But the superscriptions at the head of the Psalms was part and parcel of the Psalms themselves. Then there was Jesus Christ, who said "if they do not believe in Moses, neither will they believe though one rose from the dead." After his crucifixion he again referred to Moses. (Laughter.) If the critics are divided into two camps he thought that with parties so balanced they might allow a little weight to that man Jesus, if they thought him a man, who was at any rate in touch with Judaism and nearer the scene. The evidence was flowing in that Moses was the writer of these books. In the book of Judges he found much reference to the law. The vows were binding, as is the case of Jephthah; there was circumcision, clean and unclean meats, the Nazarite as in Samson, burnt and peace offerings and trumpets. One of the boldest critics, Hartmann, said the arranger of Judges was well acquainted with the Pentateuch. In many passages in the historical books the prophets showed they were seeking to bring the people back to the same God and the same system of his servant Moses. Applause.)

Digitized by Google

Mr Robertson complained that Mr. Tinling had devoted only a tenth part of his speech to meeting his arguments. His long discourse on the critics, mostly those of from twenty to fifty years ago, only showed they disagreed as to how the documents were put together. All agreed that Moses did not write them. Even Ewald, who was largely orthodox, admitted this. Mr. Tinling said Jesus Christ lived nearer the scene, but he did not deal with his statement that the Sadducees of the second temple, who were still nearer and who were the most critical of the Jews, held that Moses only wrote the Decalogue. Mr. Tinling said there were thirty theories. There were at the start, but he should be aware that there was now a large consensus of opinion agreeing with the views of Keunen and Wellhausen. They had profited by the labors of their predecessors, and human sagacity was getting at the truth despite the forgery of the books. Mr. Robertson then alluded to the fact of the Jews being said to have shekels of the sanctuary in the wilderness. Did they coin the money or steal it from the Egyptians? In the time of Solomon they paid in corn and oil. He also mentioned other difficulties his opponent had not taken up. The references to the law of the Lord was to the old cultus not the Mosaic law, which expression never occurred until Malachi. He denied that Moses wrote the Pentateuch, and equally that David wrote the Psalms. As to the superscription being part of the original there were no Hebrew MSS. of the middle ages. The synagogue movement only had regard to meetings on Sabbath, and was not antagonistic to the movement which made Jerusalem the one central temple of Judaism. The items referred to in Judges were all common to other Semitic faiths besides Judaism.

Mr. Tinling, after citing Hartmann the second time as saying that the man who wrote (A voice: "arranged") Judges was acquainted with the Pentateuch, said Moses foresaw the Jews would have a king. There was not only the Hebrew version, but that of the Samaritans, and the translation of the Greek Jews. Here were three versions all bearing testimony to the Mosaic authorship. This was scarcely ever denied within the first four centuries of the Christian era, and then those few who said Moses did not write the books did not want his authority over them. All the Greek and Latin writers admitted Moses as the author, and he argued if the ages of the past had handed down a tradition, unless you had proofs to the contrary, you ought to accept it as a matter of course. Consider what the law was—the most burdensome ever given. Will any sane man believe that this burdensome law was imposed on the Jews when it meant tithing three times a year? The language was just what would be expected of Moses. If he did write, it was just the kind of book we might expect. Even the critics acknowledged there were archaic fragments. Note the simplicity of Genesis, the difference between Genesis and Exodus—they represent different epochs. After Exodus the books assume the character of a journal written down hastily at the places where they encamped. The Egypt of the Ramassides so corresponded with that of Moses that Egyptologists read them side by side with the monuments and find them exactly correct.

Mr. Robertson denied the alleged correspondences with Egyptian monuments, and pointed out some particulars of the Jewish religion copied from the Egyptians, such as the breastplate of priests, the cherubs on side of the ark, bells and pomegranites, etc. Such correspondences as existed depended on the stability of Oriental life. The life of the Bedouin Arab to-day corresponded with that in the time of Abraham. Mr. Robertson further pointed out that the account of Moses in the bullrushes was similar to a myth in regard to Horus, and that the two mid-wives for the whole nation of Jews were really the Egyptian goddesses who presided over births. He then proceeded with his general argument that the story of the Jews in the wilderness involved a constant miracle, and that no trace of the Mosaic laws could be discovered before the time of Josiah. How could the tabernacle system have existed in the wilderness, and then totally disappear? He did not deny that the books preserved certain legends and customs, but the further you went back in the historical books there was the less correspondence with the priestly code. Only a few of the Jews came back from Babylon, and those the most fanatical under priestly leaders. They had an easy task. It was easy to set up the tithing system by appealing to old custom among a fanatical people. In regard to the Jubilee, Kalisch admitted there was no proof the Jubilee was ever kept. None of the kings obeyed the law. Deuteronomy said that when they came to the land they should set up a king, but Samuel, the servant of the Lord, was angry when they sought to do this. He reminded Mr. Tinling that he had not dealt with the difficulties in regard to the Jews in the wilderness.

Mr. Tinling said he believed it was an epoch in which the Creator did work miracles for the establishment of his religion. In regard to the large flocks and herds, herbage formerly grew where now none was found. We read of Moses feeding his flocks in the wilderness. Where did they get them from? They were instructed to ask for them from the Egyptians. He did not see anything wonderful in their having coins. They were led by a man who had been trained in the wisdom of the Egyptians. Mr. Tinling then in his last speech introduced much new matter, citing Mr. Stuart Poole, Sir Wm. Dawson, and Professor Palmer, to show that the accounts of Egypt and of the topography of the wilderness were correct. He concluded by observing that the matter was a most important one. If we see the connection between this question and that of Jesus and the apostles nothing could be more important. If the books ascribed to Moses were fraudulent the foundations of Christianity were vain, but if they came from God it also was divine.

A vote of thanks to the chair concluded the proceedings.

Mrs. Smith: "What do you suppose makes the new minister so undersized? He looks as if he hadn't got his growth." Mrs. Bascom: "I donno, but I kind o' suspect he was brought up on the Shorter Catechism."

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY MEETINGS.

LONDON.

Ball's Pond Secular Hall, 36 Newington Green Road, N., 7, Mr. F. Millar, "The Evolution of Religious Ideas."

Battersea—The Shed of Truth, Prince of Wales's Road, 7.30, a lecture. Park Gates, 11.15, a lecture. Social evening every Tuesday.

Bethnal Green—Opposite "Salmon and Ball," Mr. R. Rossetti will lecture at 11.15.

Claremont Hall, Penton Street, Pentonville Road, N., at 7, Mr. Sam. Standring, "Protestantism."

Camberwell—61 New Church Road, S.E., 5.30, tea and soiree.

East London—Mile End Waste, 11.30, Mr. T. Thurlow, "The Beliefs of Jesus."

Edmonton—Opposite the "Angel," 3, Mr. L. Keen, "The Last Scene."

Finsbury Park (near the band-stand) 3.30, Mr. S. Standring, "The Westminster Confession of Faith."

Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, E.C., 7, Mr. G. W. Foote, "Is the Bible Fit for Children?"

Hyde Park, near Marble Arch; 11.15, Mr. G. Standring, "Faith and Freethought."

Milton Hall, Kentish Town Road, N.W., 7.30, Mr. Herbert Burrows, "Three Aspects of Freethought: Social, Political, and Moral."

New Southgate, Betstyle Bridge, 11, Mr. Sam. Standring, "Looking after Number One."

West Ham—121 Broadway, Plaistow, 11.30, members' quarterly meeting; 7, Mr. C. J. Hunt, "Is Deity Conceivable?"

Westminster—Old Pimlico Pier, 11.30, Mr. Mr. F. Haslam, "Why I Remain a Freethinker."

Wood Green—Jolly Butchers' Hill, 11.30, Socialist speakers.

Woolwich—"Sussex Arms," Assembly Room, 60 Plumstead Road (entrance, Masey Road), 7.30, Mrs. Thornton Smith, "And Yet it Moves."

COUNTRY.

Birmingham—Baskerville Hall, Crescent, Mr. A. B. Moss, 11, "Man's Place in Nature"; 3, "Apostles of Freethought"; 7, "Inspired Nonsense."

Chester-le-Street—At the house of Mrs. McLean, 6.30, special members' meeting, business very important.

Glasgow Secular Society and Branch of N. S. S, 122 Ingram Street.—6.30, Mr. McCluskey, "The Single Tax Fallacy Reviewed."

Heckmondwike—at Mr. John Rothera's, Bottoms, 2.30, a meeting.

Hull Branch—No. 2 Room, Friendly Societies' Hall, Albion Street, 6.30, Mr. H. Porter, "Christ's Parables."

Liverpool Branch N.S.S., Camden Hall, Camden Street—11, Tontine Society; 11.30, committee meeting; 7, Mr. Gowland, "Individual and Social Evolution."

Manchester—Rusholme Road, Oxford Road, 6.30, humorous and dramatic recitals by Mr. and Mrs. E. C. White. Free. Dancing class on Wednesday at 8.

Newcastle-on-Tyne—Lecture Hall, Nelson Street, Mr. J. Clarke, 11, "The Power of Fear"; 3, "The Religion of the Future"; 7, "Anthropomorphism, or the Human Character of Gods." Tea provided in the Society's rooms after afternoon lecture.

Nottingham—Secular Hall, Beck Street, Dr. C. R. Drysdale, 11, "Popular Medical Questions: Alcohol, Vegetarianism, and Vaccination"; 7, "Overpopulation and its Remedies."

Portsmouth—Wellington Hall, Southsea, 7, Mr. Lush, "Vegetarianism, a False Ism"; several prominent vegetarians likely to attend, and good discussion will follow.

Sheffield—Hall of Science, Rockingham Street, Mr. W. Heaford, 11, "Did Christ Rise from the Dead?"; 3, "Christianity and Civilisation not Friends but Foes"; 7, "Secularism Superior to Christianity."

South Shields—Captain Duncan's Navigation Schools, King Street, at 7, Captain W. B. Duncan, "Theosophy."

LECTURERS' ENGAGEMENTS.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Credon Road, London, S.E. — April 20, Birmingham; 27, Reading. May 4 (moroing), Westminster (evening), Woolwich; 11 (morning), Camberwell; 18 (morning), Clerkenwell Green, (evening), Ball's Pond; 25 (afternoon), Regent's Park. June 1 (morning), Pimlico, (evening), Woolwich; 8 (morning), Bethnal Green; 15 (evening), Ball's Pond; 22 (morning), Clerkenwell; 29 (morning), Mile End. July 13, Mile End.

TOLEMAN-GARNER, 8 Heyworth Road, Stratford, London, E.—May 4 (morning), Mile End Waste; 11, Clerkenwell Green; 18 (afternoon), Regent's Park; 25 (morning), Hyde Park. June 1 (morning), Mile End Waste; 8 (morning), Clerkenwell Green; 22 (evening), Woolwich; 29 (morning), Bethnal Green. July 6 (morning), Hyde Park; 13 (morning), Clerkenwell Green; 27 (morning), Mile End Waste.

JAMES HOOPER, 11 Upper Eldon Street, Sneinton, Nottingham.—April 27, Hull; 28, Grimsby. May 4, Nottingham.

T. THURLOW, 7 Dickson's Villas, Rutland Road, East Ham.—April 27, Hyde Park.

H. SMITH, 3 Breck Place, Breck Road, Everton Road, Liverpool.—April 20, Rochdale. May 4, Birmingham.

MARRIAGE & DIVORCE

AN AGNOSTIC'S VIEW.

BY COL. R. G. INGERSOLL.

2d.] Reprinted from the "North American Review." [2d.

Every Freethinker, Radical or Socialist should read it and circulate it amongst his friends.

PROGRESSIVE PUBLISHING CO.'S LIST.

All orders to be sent, with remittance, to R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C. Rate of postage—Orders under 3d., one halfpenny; orders under 6d. one penny. Orders over 6d. post free.

G. W. FOOTE.

	s.	d.
PRISONER FOR BLASPHEMY. Cloth ... ... A Full History of his Three Trials and Twelve Months' Imprisonment. Copies in paper covers, soiled, 6d.	2	6
IS SOCIALISM SOUND? ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant.	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
CHRISTIANITY AND SECULARISM ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. In paper covers.	1	0
Superior edition in cloth	1	6
INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS ... ... Second edition, enlarged.	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0
DARWIN ON GOD	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0
CONTENTS:—Darwin's Grandfather—Darwin's Father—Darwin's Early Piety—Almost a Clergyman—On Board the "Beagle"—Settling at Down—Death and Burial—Purpose of Pamphlet—Some Objections—Darwin Abandons Christianity—Deism—Creation—Origin of Life—Origin of Man—Animism—A Personal God—Design—Divine Beneficence—Religion and Morality—Agnosticism and Atheism.
DEFENCE OF FREE SPEECH ... ... Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes.	0	4
LETTERS TO JESUS CHRIST	0	4
PHILOSOPHY OF SECULARISM	0	3
THE BIBLE GOD	0	2
THE FOLLY OF PRAYER	0	2
CHRISTIANITY AND PROGRESS ... ... A Reply to Mr. Gladstone.	0	2
THE SHADOW OF THE SWORD ... ... A moral and statistical Essay on War.	0	2
ROYAL PAUPERS ... ... Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty.	0	2
BIBLE HEROES—First Series, in elegant wrapper ... (1) Mr. Adam, (2) Captain Noah, (3) Father Abraham, (4) Juggling Jacob, (5) Master Joseph, (6) Joseph's Brethren, (7) Holy Moses I., (8) Holy Moses II., (9) Parson Aaron, (10) General Joshua, (11) Jephthah and Co., (12) Professor Samson. One Penny each singly.	1	0
BIBLE HEROES—Second Series, in elegant wrapper... (13) Prophet Samuel, (14) King Saul, (15) Saint David I., (16) Saint David II., (17) Sultan Solomon, (18) Poor Job, (19) Hairy Elijah, (20) Bald Elisha, (21) General Jehu, (22) Doctor Daniel, (23) The Prophets (Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Hosea); (24) St. Peter, (25) St. Paul	1	0
MRS. BESANT'S THEOSOPHY ... ... A Candid Criticism.	0	2
THEOSOPHY AND SECULARISM.. ... ... A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant.	0	2
THE NEW CAGLIOSTRO ... ... An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky.	0	2
WHAT WAS CHRIST? ... ... A Reply to J. S. Mill.	0	2
THE DYING ATHEIST. A Story	0	1
WAS JESUS INSANE? ... ... A searching inquiry into the mental condition of the Prophet of Nazareth.	0	1

G. W. FOOTE and W. P. BALL.

BIBLE HANDBOOK FOR FREETHINKERS AND INQUIRING CHRISTIANS	1	4
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
Sold also in separate parts as follows—
Bible Contradictions ... ... The Contradictions are printed in parallel columns.	0	4
2. Bible Absurdities ... ... All the chief Absurdities from Genesis to Revelation, conveniently and strikingly arranged, with appropriate headlines, giving the point of each absurdity in a sentence.	0	4
3. Bible Atrocities ... ... Containing all the godly wickedness from Genesis to Revelation. Each infamy has a separate headline for easy reference.	0	4
4. Bible Immoralities, Indecencies, Obscenities, Broken Promises, and Unfulfilled Prophecies ...	0	4

COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

MISTAKES OF MOSES	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth ... ... Only Complete Edition published in England	1	6
DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT ... ... Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy.	0	6
REPLY TO GLADSTONE ... ... With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler.	0	4
ROME OR REASON? Reply to Cardinal Manning	0	4
FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Rev. Dr. Field ...	0	2
GOD AND MAN. Second Reply to Dr. Field	0	2
THE DYING CREED	0	2
THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH	0	2
THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION ... ... A Discussion with Hon. F. D. Courdert and Gov. S. L. Woodford.	0	2
ART AND MORALITY	0	2

Digitized by Google

READY NEXT WEEK.

"THE ESSENCE OF RELIGION"

GOD THE IMAGE OF MAN—MAN'S DEPENDENCE UPON NATURE THE LAST AND ONLY SOURCE OF RELIGION.

By LUDWIG FEUERBACH.

"No one has demonstrated and explained the purely human origin of the idea of God better than Ludwig Feuerbach."
—Büchner.

"I confess that to Feuerbach I owe a debt of inestimable gratitude. Feeling about in uncertainty for the ground, and finding everywhere shifting sands, Feuerbach cast a sudden blaze in the darkness and disclosed to me the way."
—Rev. S. Baring-Gould.

Price One Shilling.

LETTERS TO THE CLERGY

FIRST SERIES.

1.—CREATION
To the Bishop of Carlisle.

2.—THE BELIEVING THIEF
To the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

3.—THE ATONEMENT
To the Bishop of Peterborough.

4.—OLD TESTAMENT MORALITY
To the Rev. E. R. Conder, D.D.

5.—INSPIRATION
To the Rev. R. F. Horton, M.A.

6.—CREDENTIALS OF THE GOSPEL
To the Rev. Prof. J. A. Beet.

7.—MIRACLES
To the Rev. Brownlow Maitland, M.A.

8.—PRAYER
To the Rev. T. Teignmouth Shore, M.A.

By G. W. FOOTE.

128pp., in Wrapper. ONE SHILLING.

---

32 pages. NOW READY. Price 3d.

CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS

A Noble Plea for a Rational Treatment of Prisoners and a Humane Jurisprudence,

BY COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

Price 1d. Price 1d.

A LIE IN FIVE CHAPTERS.

THE REV. HUGH PRICE HUGHES'S

CONVERTED ATHEIST

By G. W. FOOTE.

Should be circulated by Freethinkers who desire to see this pious fraud exposed as widely as possible.

2d. each. PARTS I. and II. 2d. each.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC?

NEW PAMPHLETS BY

COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

A

BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY

OF

FREETHINKERS

OF

ALL AGES AND NATIONS.

BY

J. M. WHEELER.

Price 7/6 Handsomely bound in cloth. Price 7/6

W. J. Rendell's

"WIFE'S FRIEND."

Recommended in "Law of Population." and "Wife's Hand Book." Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell Street, Clerkenwell, and supplied per post, 2s. dozen. For particulars of this Malthusian discovery send stamped envelope. Higginson's Syringe, with vertical and reverse current, 3s. 6d. and 4s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. All other Malthusian Appliances. All prices post free.

HARTNOLL,

ENGLISH AND FOREIGN CHEMIST,

1A PICCADILLY

(Under the London Pavilion Music Hall),

LONDON, W.

Hartnoll's Specialities, Appliances and Medicated Preparations are world-renowned.

Spiral, Douche and Latest Improved Syringes.

ESTABLISHED OVER 50 YEARS.

IRETON'S

INDELIBLE JET BLACK MARKING INK

(NO HEATING REQUIRED)

For Rubber Stamps, Stencil, Type or Pen.

PRICE 6d. 1/- and 2/6 per Bottle.

Sample bottle 4d. post free.

IRETON & Co., 92, Gracechurch St., LONDON, E.C.

The largest makers of Rubber Stamps.

Special terms to the Trade.

Dyed with Ireton's Ink, no hope of ever changing my Color.

GOD AND THE STATE

A New Pamphlet by

COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

Twopence. Twopence.

THE IMPOSSIBLE CREED

An Open Letter to the

BISHOP OF PETERBOROUGH.

By G. W. FOOTE.

Price Twopence. Price Twopence.

THE BIBLE AND EVOLUTION.

By ARTHUR B. MOSS.

Handsomely Bound in Cloth, 2s. 6d.

The "National Reformer" says: "The author has long won his spurs as a Freethought lecturer, etc. . . one of his best sustained literary efforts."

The "Freethinker" says: "It is by far the best production of Mr. Moss's pen, and we heartily recommend it as an excellent text-book of the subject. The matter is good and the style is bright. The reader is carried along on an easy flowing stream of science, history, ethics and common sense."

Watts and Co., 17 Johnson's Court; Progressive Publishing Co.

TO MARRIED PEOPLE.

A New and Enlarged

ILLUSTRATED LIST OF MALTHUSIAN APPLIANCES AND SPECIALITIES

Will be forwarded per return of post on receipt of 1d. stamp.

DAVIES, CHEMIST,

101 PARK LANE, LEEDS.

VEGETARIAN FALLACIES. By Dr. C. R. DRYSDALE. A paper read at the Health Congress, Hastings, 1889; with opinions of Sir Edwin Chadwick and several Doctors, in course of discussion. Price 2d.; post free 2½d. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, E.C.

THE

FAMILY LIMIT

1s. 6d. per doz., post free.

For further Particulars send stamped directed envelope to

A. MOSS, 36 Upper Park Street,

ISLINGTON, LONDON, N.

GRATIS.

AN ILLUSTRATED 16-PAGE PAMPHLET, containing extracts from the utterances of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Manchester; the Revs T. R. Malthus, A. E. Whatham, M. J. Savage, Leonard Dawson, — Lawton, H. R. Hawels; the following Doctors—Allbutt, Allinson, Armstrong, Drysdale, Pye Chavasse, E. B. Foote, Nicholls, Wilder, Raciborski, Napheys and Reamy. Also Plato, Aristotle, Sismondi, Huxley, Mill, and numerous others. Should be read by every married and marriageable person. Sent on receipt of stamped addressed envelope by J. R. HOLMES, Hanney, Wantage, Berks.

TESTIMONIALS (Extracts from).

"The one you sent me some months since is

Quite Worn Out

with being lent to so many friends."

"Some of us have paid five shillings for less than one-tenth of the information."

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each, upper or lower set, £1. Best quality, 4s. each, upper or lower, £2, completed in four hours when required, repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18c. gold 15s.; stopping, 2s. 6d. extraction, 1s. painless by gas, 5s.

Printed and Published by G. W. Foote, at 28 Stonecutter Street Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

Vol. X.—No. 17.] SUNDAY, APRIL 27, 1890. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

LETTERS TO THE CLERGY.—X.

"THE FEAR OF GOD."

To the Rev. George Matheson, D.D.

[CONCLUDED.]

BUT if your comparative psychology of man and the lower animals is inaccurate, courtesy forbids me to describe your psychology of man by himself. Claiming fear as something particularly human, you proceed to affirm that it does not spring from experience. You assert that a castigated dog dreads the whip or stick, but "in a human soul fear precedes memory." "Did you ever ask yourself," you enquire, "why a child dreads the dark?" You ask again, "What is the reason that the infant so often cries when lifted by a stranger?" And these common facts supply you with "evidence that there is present in the breast of man from the very beginning a feeling of futurity, a presentiment of to-morrow, a putting forth of invisible hands beyond the present hour."

Surely no one but a theologian, whose trade is mystery, would found a prophetic argument on such a natural basis. The fanciful part of your explanation vanishes when the real explanation is supplied. There is no doubt whatever that fear precedes experience. But this is explained by natural selection and the law of heredity. In the long struggle for existence, through which evolution has operated, a confiding disposition would have made its possessor an easy victim to its enemies. It was inevitable that suspicion should be inbred. The rule of safety—and only those who obeyed it stood a chance of surviving and continuing the species—was to regard every other being as a foe until it proved itself a friend. And this was, and is, the law of savage and barbarous societies, as it must have been the law of primitive men. We see a philological proof of this is Latin, in which hostis means both stranger and enemy. And in our own language, to take the proof by the opposite handle, the words kindred and kindness come from the same root. Evolution shows us that fear has been at once an effect of the struggle for existence and a necessary element of preservation, and heredity explains its manifestation in a child antecedent to experience. Nor is there any mystery in the instinct being more active in the dark than in the light, for the danger is then greatest and the instinct most useful. To the Evolutionist, therefore, it is perfectly obvious that the civilised men and women—to say nothing of babies—who are timid in the dark, are under a psychological law of mortmain, being ruled by their ancestors from whom their instincts were inherited.

Thus a few sentences have exploded the "mystery" on which you base the doctrine that "human fear is a divine thing," an evidence of unseen spiritual powers, and a presentiment of futurity; and the foundation being gone, the superstructure might be left to its fate.

You perceive that as men slowly but surely become more civilised—and, I may add, more moral—fear loses its intensity, and its power of appeal to the coward and slave within us. With the growth of orderly society, in which life, liberty, and property are secured; and the development of science, by which our control of natural forces is continually strengthened; men become more confident and self-reliant. And theology has to undergo a corresponding change. This is why you argue that the threat of penalties is addressed to man's moral infancy, and that it changes into the law of holiness as he advances to moral maturity. But in doing this you betray the baseness and the falsity of your faith. You are obliged to justify the "divine" guidance of the human race by appealing to principles which are at once fallacious and degrading. "You can only teach a child love," you assert, "through the revelation of fear." Now if this has any relevance to your argument it means that punishment is the first stage of moral discipline. I deny this. I say it is a legacy of folly and brutality from the savage past. Repression is not education. Morality is a question of balance, and the balance is only effected by developing the intellect and the social feelings. Policemen may prevent burglary, but they will not make burglars moral. Prisons may deter from crime, but they do not foster virtue. Stimulate the good, and the powers of life will flow in that direction, while the evil atrophies from disuse. When punishment makes men moral, strait-waistcoats will make them sane.

When this truth is understood the whole system of supernatural ethics is seen to be false and mischievous. The fear of God appears as a relic of ignorance and barbarity, which priestcraft employs for its sinister ends. Heaven is a bribe for fools and Hell is a threat for slaves. Moral causation and the science of character take the place of these fictions, and man walks the path of progress in the sunlight of truth.

Let me say, in conclusion, that when you talk of the punishment which follows the transgression of moral laws and the violation of our ideals as "the judgment of God," and the honorable man's dread of wrong-doing as "the fear of God," you are pursuing the old method of theological mystification. Evolution explains conscience as easily as it explains fear. Conscience is the product of social training, and is unintelligible in solitude, where fear might be supreme. On the other hand, it is certain that fear of the gods had at first no connection with morality. Nor has it any real connection now; for virtue is not the dread of a tribunal, but a spontaneous effort flowing from the natural affections of a sympathetic heart. Such is the view, and I think a dignified one, which I take as a Secularist. But your theological system of ethics is very different. It begins, apparently with a child's mistrust of strangers and dread of the dark, and it ends with the fear of a God who is at once witness, judge and executioner. Whether you know it or not, you are worshipping an idol, and you are far behind the grand old Pagan who said that virtue is its own reward.

G. W. FOOTE.

Digitized by Google

THE FEAR OF DEATH.

All go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again. Who knoweth if the spirit of man ascendeth upward; and if the spirit of beasts descendeth downward. Wherefore I perceive there is nothing better than that a man should rejoice in his work; for that is his portion: for who shall show him what shall be after him?—ECCLESIASTES III. (Jewish Translation.)

AMONG the sources of religion I place the dread of death and the fear of the dead. The latter has been held by Herbert Spencer to account for the worship of all gods, who were originally ghosts. But the fear of death, with which the fear of the dead is intimately connected, goes deeper. It is in fact bound up with the instinct of self-preservation which pervades all life. It persists even when the belief in ghosts has vanished, and it remains a trump card in the service of superstition.

Fear of death may be analysed into various elements. One may dislike leaving accustomed things, or dread loved ones being left to the tender mercies of the world; one may be afraid of the unknown, or shudder at annihilation, or be afraid of physical pain in dying, or dread torture in another world.

Against the reluctance to quit life it is little use to argue. The shadow cast by love of life must remain, and the more intense the light the darker the shadow. That death is common to all does not lessen the blow. If we love life we must shun death, and as Sir T. Browne says, "the habit of living indisposeth for dying." Yet who would live on when he had become a burden. All must depart, and in truth it is not death but only premature death that is to be deplored.

The sorrow at leaving loved ones no words can assuage. Yet could we by attention to this world secure that they are provided for, one of the keenest anxieties of the thought of death might be removed.

Death, it has been said, is an untried experiment, and all dread the unknown. To the materialist, who deems it the end-all, it can have no terror, while the Theist may justly say with the wise heathen, Marcus Antoninus, "He who fears death either fears the loss of sensation, or a different kind of sensation. But if thou shalt have no sensation, neither wilt thou feel any harm, and if thou shalt acquire another kind of sensation thou wilt be a different being."

Fear of annihilation is hardly worth mentioning, despite the statesman who said he would rather go to hell than be annihilated. To dread a dreamless night is indeed to be frightened at nothing. Lucretius asks—

> What horror see'st thou in that quiet state,
> What bugbear dreams to fright thy after fate?
> No ghost, no goblin, that still passage keep,
> But all is there serene in that eternal sleep.

There is also the fear, not of death, but of being buried alive. So much are our customs matters of sentiment that it is possible this fear may be yet as powerful an incentive in favor of cremation as its many recommendations.

When crematories are substituted for cemetries and sensible solemnity for the senseless parade of funerals, some of the terrors of death will depart.

Many dread dying rather than death. Bacon says, "I do not believe that any man fears to be dead, but only the stroke of death." Here science avails. Its anodynes and anæsthetics diminish pain, and it has shown the so-called "death agony" is no more a conscious state than the rigidity which follows. A child in birth undergoes an ordeal, which if conscious, would be more trying than the most painful death. Most die as unconsciously as they are born. Physicians notice that fear of death departs with the dying. The nearer the end the less the apprehension. Hunter when dying said, "If I had strength enough to hold a pen, I would write how easy and delightful it is to die." "I thought that dying had been more difficult," said that gay sinner Louis XIV. Montaigne having met with an accident which was supposed fatal, said on restoration, "I thought that life hung only on my lips, and I closed my eyes to aid me in expelling it, and I had sincere pleasure in the thought that I was passing away." Walter Savage Landor in extreme old age wrote:

> Death stands above me whispering low,
> I know not what into my ear,
> Of his strange language all I know
> Is, there is not a word of fear.

Christians claim that the King of Terrors can only be calmly encountered by aid of their faith. Yet a Japanese will disembowel himself on small provocation. Contempt of life is found in the most uncivilised races. The Tchuktes, a native fishing tribe of north-east Siberia, will deliberately drown themselves to save the cargo for the survivors. This is putting life on a strictly politico-economical basis. In truth Christianity has vastly enhanced the terrors of death. If it is true the odds are that to any given person death is the entrance to eternal torture. To anyone who realised this, the mere uncertainty as to whether one's loved ones were doomed to heaven or to hell must be appalling.

It is noticeable that in Bacon's well-known essay on Death, all the instances he gives of its being borne with equanimity are taken from Pagans. If they had less respect for the lives of others they also held their own at the service of the State. Cæsar deemed a sudden death the best, and Sir Thomas Browne says: "Were I of Cæsar's religion I should be of his desires, and wish rather to go off at one blow, than to be sawed to pieces by the grating tortures of a disease." But Christianity added a new terror to sudden death; the thought of being cut off in the midst of sin "unhouseled, unaneled." The Church of England prays against sudden death, which the Pagan was apt to pray for. The idea so strikingly illustrated when Hamlet refrains from killing the King while in prayer because:

> To take him in the purging of his soul
> When he is fit and seasoned for his passage, is to send his father's murderer to heaven, is at bottom as absurd as that a parricide goes straight to heaven via the gallows, simply because he believes in the Lord Jesus Christ. But both are part and parcel of the great budget of Christian absurdity.

Religion has found its account is investing death with all that is hideous. "Prepare for death, flee from the wrath to come" have been its cries. "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." By appeals to fear and imagination it has made a terror of that which should be accepted with perfect serenity; and in proportion as men relinquish superstition and study the facts of nature, they discover that the creed that makes death a bugbear is as false as it is foolish.

J. M. WHEELER.

A QUESTION FOR ARIANS.

Can God the Father annihilate the Son and the Holy Ghost? This question, in the mouths of Freethinkers, would be flat blasphemy. In Charles Butler's historical account of the Confessions of Faith he shows how this question triumphantly overthrew Dr. Samuel Clarke at the court of Queen Caroline, the consort of George I., who desired a conference between Dr. Clarke and Dr. Harwarden, a celebrated Roman Catholic divine. Dr. Clarke first stated his view of the supremacy of the Father. Dr. Harwarden said the only reply which he would make was asking a single question, which he desired should be answered by the affirmative or negative monosyllable. To this Dr. Clarke assented. Then said Dr. Harwarden, "I ask, can God the Father annihilate the Son and the Holy Ghost? Answer me, yes or no." Dr. Clarke continued for some time in deep thought, and then said, "It was a question which he had never considered." Butler points out that had he answered Yes, he would have made the Son and the Holy Ghost to be "mere creatures. If he answered No, he admitted them to be absolutely Gods."

Digitized by Google

"CONVERTING" AN ATHEIST.

Nobody who has not been a Catholic himself can thoroughly appreciate the difficulties and unpleasantnesses that have to be encountered in the mental transit from Catholicism to Freethought. From the very nature of his faith the Catholic has to free himself from a more intense mental slavery than the followers of any other religious persuasion, and his self-emancipation is accordingly the more difficult. If he has been carefully trained it becomes almost a second nature with him to believe implicitly what he is taught, and to reject unreservedly the promptings of his mind to think for himself. But there is more than this to deter him. His religion tells him that his conduct should be regulated by fear of the consequences in another world than this; and the continuance of such a frame of mind makes him more subject to fear of consequences in this world than would be the case with a man of more robust moral principles. To be regarded as a renegade of the most disgraceful character; to be looked upon even by one's nearest and dearest friends as the owner of "a lost soul," and a person sure of eternal damnation; to be avoided as one possessed of a devil, and to be constantly reminded by looks and words that the mere suggestion of Atheism causes deep pain to those particularly dear—all these considerations are likely to daunt the timid Freethinker, and to make even the boldest pause before declaring publicly that God and religion are shams and frauds, and that it is in Reason, and in Reason alone, that the mind, true to itself, can find refuge and rest. Once, however, that the first great step is taken; once the long-practised habits are cast aside; and once the mind is made up to follow the course which it believes to be the true one; then difficulties that appeared to be insurmountable glide gradually away, and unpleasantnesses are compensated by pleasures that were not even supposed to exist. The contentment which the acceptance of Atheism produces in the mind is a pleasure in itself, and an enduring one; but it is of a less substantial pleasure I am about to speak at present, namely, the pleasure to be derived from the efforts towards "conversion," which the ex-Catholic is bound to experience.

Undergoing the process of "conversion" is capital sport. To meet men who imagine they have "a mission" in the direction of plucking "a brand from the burning," and who are deeply imbued with the notion that they can expel the devil that has taken possession of the Atheist's heart, affords excellent amusement to the good-humored sceptic who is able to turn opportunities to advantage for attacking superstition and ridiculing the pretensions and the absurdities of priests and their dogmas. Ever since I accepted Atheism, numerous acquaintances have thought it their duty to "convert" me, and have done me the honor to inform me that it is my own perverseness rather than the weakness of their case that has led to their being unsuccessful.

As well as I remember, the first man who took my "conversion" in hand was a person deeply versed in theology, who was intimately connected with the Jesuit clergymen in Dublin, and who had managed to accumulate a splendid collection of medals with alleged miraculous qualities. The first step he took towards my "conversion" was to place in my hands a book called Mistakes of Modern Infidels, by a Father Northgraves, a Canadian priest. Colonel Ingersoll was the modern infidel whose mistakes were pointed out. My friend told me that this was the best and most complete refutation of Ingersoll that ever appeared. Afterwards I was able to tell him that if that was the case the other "refutations" were poor affairs indeed. But at the time I contented myself with inquiring whether he had read Ingersoll. He replied in the negative; and when I remarked that his opinion as to the completeness of the "refutation" might have more weight if he had read Ingersoll's writings, he looked a trifle out of humor. However, I read the book, and am glad to say it did me good. It saved me the necessity of looking at a comic paper for at least a week. It was a lengthy book, and might with advantage to the writer have been boiled down to a page or two. The drift of the whole volume was that as there was a God, miracles were possible, and therefore took place. This, mixed with abuse of infidels in general, was the substance of the great "refutation." When returning the work to the "converter" I gave him my opinion accordingly. He was disappointed, and went into the matter of the authenticity of miracles at great length. I inquired how it could be accounted for that, if God performed all those miracles nearly two thousand years ago, he thought it well "to shut up shop" all the time since. At this point he lost his temper, and saying that he could not allow his ears to be polluted by such language, he went his way and has not interfered with me since.

The next person who took steps to convert me was more astute. He took to praying for my conversion, and good Catholic though he is, he has discovered by now that his praying was a sad waste of time and energy. He also went and consulted a clergyman as to the best steps that could be taken to bring me back to the "true faith." That clergyman was a wise man. His opinion was that once a Catholic disbelieved in any article of faith he was a hopeless case and a good candidate for hell, to which he should be allowed to go undisturbed.

Then there turned up the man who expected that God would surely exert himself in expelling the devil if I did what he prescribed. First, I was to wear a "scapular" round my neck, though it was not necessary that I should regard it as of any more consequence than an ordinary piece of tape. I declined, and informed him that though tape had its uses, still I did not think it was yet endowed with the power to compel me to believe in a God. Next day he appeared again, this time armed so well with antidotes to Atheism that he expected me to fall an easy prey. He produced a certificate to the effect that he had enrolled me as a member of the "Apostleship of Prayer" in the "Holy League of the Sacred Heart of Jesus." The result of this enrolment is that I am now, according to the certificate, "prayed for every day by millions of fellow-members, including an immense number of holy religionists." Poor God! And all this hubbub about me, a wretched Atheist! I felt flattered; but as no effect has yet been produced, I have commenced to fear that either "the millions of fellow-members" have neglected to pray properly, or that God has turned a deaf ear to them (which is shabby on that gentleman's part) and is determined to reserve me for a hot corner in hell. This conduct of God's is the more unaccountable when we learn what he has done for other folk. In a monthly periodical called the Messenger of the Sacred Heart—given to me together with the certificate I have mentioned—are recorded some surprising things done in answer to the prayers of members of the body to which I belong. I read that a Dublin girl who wanted a letter from her brother lit "a candle in honor of the Sacred Heart" (at the cost of a penny). The letter turned up a fortnight later! A Kerryman lost a great sum of money; he promised the "Sacred Heart" that if he got the money he would publish the fact; and the honor of publicity was so much coveted by the Heart, that the money was found next day! Wonderful! A school-teacher was to have an examination of her children. She, too, promised to publish the fact if the Sacred Heart managed to prevent her pupils from saying that five and five were eleven, or that "of" was a "noun"; and the Sacred Heart did what was wanted, and was duly honored by having the fact published. But in my perverseness these astounding instances of the efficacy of prayer only made me smile at the credulity of my fellow-men. In addition to all this my friend brought two medals with which to convert me. He asserted that if I wore those medals "something" would happen, very likely in the direction of preventing me from organising a Branch of the National Secular Society, at which I am now engaged. He pressed me very hard to wear the medals; but he declined to enter into any arguments, though I managed to have a few jokes at his poor God's expense. This gentleman threatens that he is going to have another and yet another trial with the Devil, which he believes has possession of me. As it is, I am having a high old time of it; and the foolish efforts being made for "converting" me are only helping to convince me the more that religion is the hugest fraud this world has ever seen.

Digitized by Google

J. O'Donovan.

AN ANSWER TO PRAYER.

The parson of the village one day was walking out,
With senses all alert and eyes sharp cast about
To claim obeisance meek from every passing lout.
He had not travelled far on this eventful day,
When Jake, the local sweep, came trudging by the way,
With face so sad that plain it seemed grief heavy on him lay.
"Good morning, Jake," says parson, "what makes you look so sad?"
"Oh, sir," says Jake, "behold in me a man 'most driven mad,
And all by th' other rival sweep, the nasty dirty cad.
The chimneys of the village he cleans so very nice;
He's handy too, to every call he comes just in a trice,
And does the work, quite up to par, at half the usual price;
And here you see a ruined man, with business gone to pot.
I'll sweep no more; with what I've saved I'll be the village sot,
And in the workhouse sure I'll die. Oh, what a sad, sad lot."
"Cheer up, poor Jake," the parson said; "'tis but a chastening rod,
All of us meet with troubles keen as through this life we plod.
Now brace your heart, your courage rouse, and put your trust in God.
Don't fail each morning when you rise, nor yet at end of day,
To ask kind Jesus, friend of all, your troubles to allay;
Rest sure your grief will disappear if fervently you pray."

. . . . . .

Again, when just two weeks had passed, Jake and the parson met;
The former looked quite blithe and gay, 'twas plain he'd ceased to fret.
That luck had fallen in his way you might quite safely bet.
"I'm glad," says parson, "now to see that God's been kind to you.
'The Rock of Ages' never fails, God's word is always true;
But how this change has come about come quickly tell me, do."
"O reverend sir," said humble Jake, "I prayed, and prayed, and prayed;
My bitter troubles, one and all, before the Lord I laid,
And praying, sure, 'tis plain to see, is quite a paying trade.
You know that rival sweep came here to steal away my bread,
But thanks to you, my parson kind, God's power upheld my head.
When I'd been praying just a week, the dirty cuss dropped dead."

A. Lewis.

A young man about to be married asks for the prayers of the congregation, was the announcement made at a prayer meeting lately.

There is a railway crossing near the depot in Adrian, Mich, has a big sign up with these words painted on, "Prepare to meet thy God."

Minister: "So you saw some boys fishing on the Sabbath my young man. Did you do anything to discourage them?" Small Boy: "Yes, Sir; I stole their bait."

"My dear friend," said a minister at the bed of a sick man, "I want to call your attention to the blessed consolation which religion brings in hours of suffering and danger to those—" "I'm much obliged to you," interposed the grateful patient, "but you are too late." "Too late?" "Yes, sir my physician says that the crisis is past, and all danger is over."

ACID DROPS.

"We teach in the Highlands, from Sabbath to Sabbath, this doctrine, that unbelief is the greatest of all sin." So writes the Rev. (?) W. Mackinnon in the Methodist Times, and he justifies himself from Scriptures. Yes, unbelievers will be damned. Not the least doubt about it. And what is an unbeliever? Why, a man who doesn't believe what I believe. And who am I, sir? The preacher, sir, the preacher. And what is a preacher?—But here we must answer. A preacher is a man who gets a living by talking dogmatic nonsense, and shouting "Damned be he who first cries, Hold, enough!"

The Bishop of Lichfield is a knowing one. He knows a hawk from a handsaw when the wind is southerly—that is, when it affects the interests of Holy Mother Church. In his recent Charge he expresses a wish that discussions, like those in Lux Mundi, as to the date and authorship of the Scriptures, could be carried on in Latin. This would keep the truth among scholars, and allow the clergy to go on hoaxing the multitude with good profitable lies.

The Rev. John McNeill, "the Scotch Spurgeon," seems to be a poor imitation of the Tabernacle orator. The Daily News, reporting his services at the Central Hall, Holborn, says his comments were "at times humorous, though by no means strikingly original." His "wit" was displayed in giving out the line of a hymn "within these sacred walls" as "within these Holborn walls." He seems to know that he must play down to a popular audience. A promising circus clown appears to have been spoilt in the Scotch Spurgeon.

It has frequently been remarked that Revivalism and Forward Movements are only reshufflings of the same old pack of cards. One sect makes a special effort and snatches a few members from another sect. Some time ago the Rev. J. Llewellyn Davies declared that the Salvation Army in Marylebone made no converts, but simply drew the most excitable people away from Church. This was denied by "Commissioner" Railton in the Times, but the clergyman challenged him, of course in vain, to produce the drunkards and other sinners reclaimed in that district. Now the Presbyterians, following the Methodists, who followed the Salvation Army, are making a big effort to catch souls for Christ in the Central Hall, Holborn, the net being wielded by the Rev. J. McNeill. On the first Sunday afternoon more than two thousand people assembled. But who were they? The loose fish of the Holborn and Clerkenwell slums? Nothing of the kind. According to the Christian World "the audience was a highly respectable one, being evidently very largely made up of the church-going element."

Dr. Parker, who is a bit of a showman himself, draws the line at these enterprises, and his remarks bear out what we have written. Speaking on Monday as president of the Congregational Union, he said, "He would express his strong distrust of the occupation of theatres and halls on Sunday afternoons. In some cases they were only traps for catching ordinary seatholders. The most of the attendants were Sunday-school teachers, or stated adherents, or lovers of novelty, who laugh at any jokes the preacher might be foolish enough to provide. For his part, he would rather open the British Museum on a Sunday afternoon than establish a religious joking saloon or an ecclesiastical circus." This seems a pretty straight thrust at the Scottish Spurgeon. If the Rev. J. McNeill replies it will be a lively time for the profane.

The National Advance gives circulation to a lie headed "Beecher and Ingersoll." The story goes that Beecher compared the Colonel to a man who knocked the crutches from under a cripple. Both Beecher and Ingersoll have denied the story. They were, indeed, good friends till the day of Beecher's death, which they could hardly have been if there was any truth in the tale, which is thought so good by the National Advance that it has awarded a guinea prize "for the best religious anecdote" to Mrs. M. J. Hawley, who sends it from Leeds. When lies against infidels are worth a guinea each there is not likely to be any dearth of them.

Digitized by Google

The good old lady who runs the Spectator says "a propagandist Atheism is impossible, if not unthinkable." Do not be alarmed, dear Mrs. Hutton, if we whisper that a propagandist Atheism is actually on foot in every country of the civilised world.

A rating case which will affect most places of worship was decided this week at the Highgate Police-court. The Hornsey Local Board sought to recover rates for the road in front of the Ferme Park Baptist Chapel, and it being proved that the chapel was used for concerts, meetings, etc., the Bench decided that the chapel trustees were liable.

Here are the returns of the persons present at each service held during the month of March at the four Billingsgate churches: The average for St. Dunstan's-in-the-East is 49, of whom 21 were officials and their families. St. George's, Botolph Lane, only attracted 47 persons, of whom 21 were there as a matter of duty. St. Mary-at-Hill had an average of 22 officials and a congregation of 17. St. Margaret Pattens, with a staff averaging 38, managed to attract an average attendance of 111, but only by means of two performances of the "Stabat Mater" and a distribution of palm leaves. The churches provide 1,750 sittings.

The other day Mrs. Wolf, the young wife of John Wolf, a German living near Monticello, stole up behind her husband and crying, "God has ordered me to kill you, John," felled him with a club. He disarmed and quieted her, but after a few hours she stole to the woods with a babe, and though she was retaken the babe has not been found.

Jacob Andersen hanged himself in New York city recently while crazed by the belief that he was pursued by devils. The same belief, in a mitigated form, is harming many millions in varying degrees.

The Rev. Edward Cadogan, Rural Dean and Rector of Wicken, North Hants, committed suicide last week by shooting himself. There is no reason for supposing that he was an Atheist.

Lieut. Roundell committed suicide by drowning himself in the Severn. He was a son of Bishop Wordsworth and a relative of the Bishop of Lincoln. More facts for Talmage!

A bad accident happened at a "dipping" ceremony near the Baptist Church, at Springfield, Ohio, on Sunday. A crowd of two thousand persons watched the cleansing of sinners from a bridge, which suddenly gave way, the result being that five were killed and many seriously injured. Is this to be taken as a sign that Providence disapproves of adult baptism?

A person advertises in the Times for the loan of £350 to bring out "a deeply religious and highly moral novel in three volumes." Here is a chance for a pious capitalist!

The Rev. Samuel Evans, M.A., rector of Taxal, goes in for muscular Christianity. He had a dispute with Colonel Edward Hall, J.P., one of the churchwardens, relative to fixing a notice on the church door. The man of God ordered the colonel to leave the church on Sunday, and as he refused, took him by the collar of the coat and struck him a violent blow on his cheek with his clenched fist. Colonel Hale said he felt for some days as if he had a mustard plaster on his face. The reverend gentleman was bound over to keep the peace and to pay the costs of the proceedings.

"Be not afraid" was the text of a minister of Nonconformist chapel on the high road between Barnes and Mortlake. A bear, who had escaped from the custody of a travelling showman, entered the chapel, and the congregation forgot the discourse of their pastor. Fortunately Bruin's owner followed him shortly and succeeded in removing him from the holy edifice.

The Hindoos are greatly agitated because one of their temples has been demolished by orders of a government official. The residence of a God is of course holy ground and taboo like Jehovah's ark. To save a bother, the official has been sent to another district, and government has ordered the rebuilding of the temple.

An English Catholic pilgrimage has started for the holy land with the blessing of Cardinal Manning on their heads. We should not care if the Catholics displayed their activity by going to Jericho and staying there.

"This is a smart story, but slightly profane, I regret. A suave, clerical member of our School Board, it seems, was examining a small class of boys during a short visit to a certain school. It is uncertain what special point regarding humanity he wished to bring out, or if he only asked the question thoughtlessly, when he said, with a bland smile, 'And who do you think I am, my little man?' The small boy thus addressed seemed rather nonplussed, for he suspected some allegorical answer was expected instead of a merely mortal cognomen. Whatever strange fancy passed through the little man's mind as he timidly gazed up at the great one cannot be ascertained, but as a timid answer to the question he whisperingly answered the one word, 'God!' And the great man smiled as he patted the small boy encouragingly on the head, saying, 'Not quite, my boy; not quite.' This story was certified as true by the narrator, but it is open to question, I think."—Glasgow Evening News.

Canon Hole has been proposing an inquiry into the administration of the Church of England Working Men's Society, which is accused of carelessness, extravagance, and mismanagement. The C.E.W.M.S. is deeply in debt, and it is very doubtful if an investigation of its affairs will lead to a removal of the burden.

The Convocation of York has issued its solemn protest against the recent Divorce Bill passed by the colony of Victoria, on the ground that it is opposed to the express words of J. C. The world goes on all the same, and will hardly now be stopped any more by the teachings of J. C. than by the legislation of Moses.

The great question of bags v. plates for the collection in churches has agitated more than one Easter vestry. The parsons find their offerings getting scantier, and advocate an open collection, while the parishioners prefer to follow the injunction of Jesus and give their alms in secret. The parsons, who know that religion is mainly a matter of show, think that with a plate collection they may shame their auditors into giving what they would otherwise withhold.

The Rev. A. A. Lyne, of Westgate, does not wish that any of the attractions of that watering-place shall compete with his own show. At a public meeting of the inhabitants he moved that any band engaged to play in Westgate during the summer season should be engaged with a proviso that they were not to give any performances on Sunday. The resolution was seconded by the Rev. T. Blandford, but was lost. It was then moved by a layman that only sacred music should be played, but an amendment adding the words "or classical" should be added was carried.

The distinction between sacred and profane music is pure nonsense. On what ground can Beethoven's pious songs be considered sacred and his sonatas profane? The only distinction is between superior and inferior music, and what we suppose is meant by "classical" is that the bandmaster shall rather select from Mozart and Wagner than from Dan Godfrey.

A sect of Faith Healers at South Woodford believe in the literal truth of the saying of J. C. that those who believe in him shall never die. One of the prominent ladies of the movement, according to the Woodford Times, makes periodical visits to Claybury Hill, Woodford Bridge, in the belief that she will be "caught up," and wafted into heaven or interstellar space. It seems the devil and the law of gravitation are one and the same. Those who, like J. C., overcome the Devil, levitate à la Elijah. But alas! the devil and the law of gravitation are too strong even for the faith-healers, who are said to be building a temple at Claybury, pending the time of their ascension to the New Jerusalem.

Digitized by Google

The Archbishop of Canterbury, it is said, has received a native letter from Central Africa. There is some difficulty about the translation, one version reading, Please send us more rum and less religion; another version asks for more religion and less rum; a third wants more rum and more religion; and a fourth neither religion nor rum. It has been sent back to Africa to get some missionary there to properly translate the strange document.

Dr. Parker says of Joseph Cook, "Twelve children and twelve months' affliction would complete his education." As it would take Joseph at least twelve years or so to get the twelve children, he has a poor prospect of becoming a finished theologian. He could get the twelve months' affliction by listening to Dr. Parker.

Hobbes said that words are the counters of wise men and the money of fools, and the truth of the observation is often exemplified. At Northampton, for instance, the Rev. T. Gasquoine has been arguing that "brotherhood implied fatherhood." So it does in the strict, prosaic sense of the word; but in the wider, ideal sense of the word it does nothing of the kind. Men are brothers, not through the fatherhood of God, which has set them quarreling and fighting, but through their common nature, common wants, common hopes, common aspirations, and mutual helpfulness.

The parsons are always boasting of their "charity," but the Christian World declares that "the last person who should have anything to do with a public charity is a parish clergyman," and it gives the case of one of these gentry who stopped the loaf of a poor woman eighty years of age because she put her nose inside a Wesleyan chapel. The "fatherhood of God" doesn't seem to have led to much "brotherhood" in this instance.

Professor Max Müller is very mildly heretical, but his Gifford lectures have been stirring up the righteous, godly folk in Glasgow. The concluding lecture of the second course excited particular indignation, and the Rev. John Hunter has been attacked for allowing it to be redelivered in Trinity Church. Puir auld Scotland!

The British Weekly says, "It is a hopeful sign that the Freethinker has found it expedient to discontinue the frightful illustrations which used to appear on the first page." We beg to inform our contemporary that we dropped the illustrations partly because we had worked the Bible through, and partly because we could not afford them when we enlarged the Freethinker.

Mr. G. J. Holyoake's references to Mr. Foote, in his interesting reminiscences in the Newcastle Weekly Chronicle, have roused the ire of a correspondent who signs himself "Gyronny," which is perhaps a misprint for "Gowrongy." This gentleman wants to know if Mr. Holyoake is aware of the awful blasphemies which Mr. Foote published in the Freethinker. Well, we guess Mr. Holyoake knows a good deal more about "blasphemy" than "Gyronny" can teach him. Mr. Holyoake knew the brave old "blasphemers"—such as Carlile, Southwell, Hetherington and Paterson—of forty and fifty years ago, and he was himself imprisoned for the fictitious crime which Christians manufactured to get rid of their opponents.

The Christian Commonwealth is responsible for the statement that in America there are 7,000,000 young men, of whom 5,000,000 never darken a church door. "Seventy-five out of every 100 of these young men do not attend church; 95 out of every 100 do not belong to the Church, and 97 out of every 100 do nothing to spread Christianity." Awful! But our contemporary is still hopeful. Things are not worse than they were!

While the young men are slowly coming over, the C. W. looks for the conversion of the heathen—we mean those outside Christendom; and, in order to get this carried out it recommends the raising-the-wind scheme of the Rev. A. T. Pierson Taylor, who suggests that each church member should give twopence-halfpenny a day, in which way "£100,000,000 per annum would be raised for the missionaries." Good! But will you get the twopence-halfpennies?

Ministers are always finding out that Mr. Bradlaugh's scepticism rests upon a mistake, and that he would soon swallow Christianity if they made up the prescription. "We think," says the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, "that many of Mr. Bradlaugh's personal objections to Christianity would disappear if he could distinguish between ecclesiastical and scriptural Christianity." It is difficult to say whether ignorance or impudence predominates in this passage. Both are there in a very high degree. It is impudence to settle the measure of Mr. Bradlaugh's unbelief in this way, and ignorance to suppose he does not know the Bible as well as ecclesiastical history. By and bye Mr. Hughes will be teaching his grandmother to suck eggs.

Mr. Bradlaugh's "personal objections" to Christianity are not likely to be removed by Mr. Hughes, nor is he likely to be enamoured of the "scriptural Christianity" which leads to the concoction of lying stories of converted Atheists.

The Rev. Earl Gray tries to justify himself in the Redditch Observer for saying that "a beautiful girl of immoral character" was worshipped by the French Revolutionists as the Goddess of Reason. He thinks it sufficient to quote Carlyle's description of her as "Demoiselle Caudeille, of the opera, a woman fair to look upon, when well rouged." That settles it, in the opinion of the Rev. Earl Gray. But the poor man only betrays his ignorance of the opera, where all the performers have to make up with rouge and powder, to say nothing of more mysterious pigments. Madame Patti herself has to make up, and it would surprise her admirers to find she is therefore an immoral woman.

Mr. Gray's "beautiful girl" was not only not immoral, but not even a girl. If the reverend gentleman read a little further in Carlyle, he would find that she was only a "miss" on the stage. Off it she was a respectable married woman, and after the Feast of Reason she went home with her husband, who was a bookseller, and sat down with him to a frugal supper. The Rev. Earl Gray should really try to cultivate a sense of accuracy, which he will never do, by the way, if he spends too much time in reading the Bible.

The pill-vendor's Baptist concern at Southgate has been having an anniversary and boasting of its mighty deeds. Its chief achievement seems to have been the circulation of 1,000 copies of the Dying Pillow, a pamphlet à la Hugh Price Hughes, stuffed with lies about dying infidels. Such is the light of the world at Southgate.

A Liverpool friend says a two-headed boy is being exhibited in that city, and asks how many souls he has got. We don't know. Ask a Theosophist.

"Incendo" in the Consett Guardian gloats over the fact—with a good deal of what Hamlet calls damnable iteration—that only fifteen persons (we don't vouch for his figures) turned up at a meeting called for the purpose of starting a local Branch of the National Secular Society. Likewise, he almost bursts with delight at the thought of the deficit, which had to be borne by the Oxhill Branch, whose committee attempted the experiment. We beg to remind this journalist, who is perhaps as venal as he is slanderous, that if financial success is the true test of prosperity, the party of Jesus Christ must have been in a bad way when Cashier Judas sold the whole concern for thirty shillings. We further beg to remind him that the party was reduced to one leader and eleven followers, and that when the leader was arrested the eleven followers "all forsook him and fled." The Oxhill Branch of the National Secular Society has more than eleven members, and they are not good at running away. It is also probable that the Freethought cause will prosper, slowly but surely, at Consett; and as soon as a Branch there numbers eleven members, who won't run away, it will be stronger than the party of Jesus Christ was after three years' preaching and a perfect epidemic of miracles.

"Incendo" opines that "men by adopting Secularism in lieu of Christianity bring themselves to the dead level of so many dogs." After reading "Incendo's" libel on Secularist homes we are tempted to say he might rise to that level.

Digitized by Google

MR. FOOTE'S ENGAGEMENTS.

Sunday morning, April 27, Bethnal Green Liberal and Radical Club, 22 Abbey Street, Bethnal Green Road, E.; at 12, "Should Parliament Regulate the Hours of Labor?"

Sunday evening (at 7), Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, E.C.; 7, "Mr. Gladstone on the Creation Story."

Tuesday, April 29, Milton Hall, Hawley Crescent, Kentish Town, N.W.; at 8, "Freethought and God." Free admission.

Friday, May 2, Secular Hall, New Church Road, Camberwell Road, S.E., "Freethought and Christ." Free admission.

May 4, Newcastle; 11, South Shields; 18, Hall of Science, London; 25, N. S. S. Conference.

June 1, Hall of Science London; 8, Gladstone Radical Club and Hall of Science, London.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

LITERARY communications to be addressed to the Editor, 14 Clerkenwell Green, London, E.C. All business communications to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C.

THE Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the office, post free to any part of Europe, America, Canada and Egypt, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 6s. 6d.; Half Year, 3s. 3d.; Three Months, 1s. 7½d. Australia, China and Africa:—One Year, 8s. 8d.; Half Year, 4s. 4d.; Three Months, 2s. 2d. India:—One Year, 10s. 10d.; Half Year, 5s. 5d. Three Months, 2s. 8½d.

SCALE OF ADVERTISEMENTS.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 3s.; Half Column, 15s.; Column, £1 10s. Special terms for repetitions.

IT being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will in future receive the number when their subscription expires in a colored wrapper.

FREETHINKER.—Sorry you are disappointed. We will give the Rev. J. McNeill's sermons another trial as soon as we have leisure.

J. BRUMAGE.—We note your change of address to 38 Sydenham Terrace, Fratton, for the sake of your friends.

T. CLARK.—Rather too long, and your indignation at Jehovah's bandits has overwhelmed your versification. Why not try to reduce it by a half? It would gain by compression.

A. LEWIS.—It ought to convert us anyhow.

FREETHINKER.—The verse is not so good as the prose it is based on—a passage in Ingersoll's Mistakes of Moses.

F. GOODWIN.—Glad to hear you so highly appreciate the work put into this journal. We reproduce the paragraph on the late Mr. Powell.

L. STANLEY.—Half-crowns are as welcome as larger sums to the Freethought Fund. We hope no one will hesitate to send what he can afford, however small the sum may be. It would be pleasant to see a hundred pounds realised before the Conference.

W. ELCOAT.—Mr. Foote will be in the district early in May. Something should be done with the Stockton Branch. There is a large field for its enterprise, and we believe a fertile one.

REX REGES.—Cuttings are always welcome. Pleased to find you thoroughly approve our criticisms on Theosophy. We simply acted from a sense of duty and took the risk which we foresaw.

C. H. KELP.—We note your suggestion. It is worth considering. Meanwhile we are always glad to answer questions as to the best books for any line of study.

SOPHIA ROBERTSON.—Doubtless you mean well, but you are only wasting time, paper and postage.

SCRUTATOR.—Thanks. See "Sugar Plums."

The Freethinker and all Secular literature can be obtained at the small shop attached to the meeting place of the Battersea Branch N. S. S., Prince of Wales' Road.

DAYLIGHT.—Thanks for your congratulations. See "Acid Drops."

G. W. BALR.—We note the subject and await further particulars.

H. ROTHERA.—The Heckmondwike Branch is acting generously in sending an annual subscription to the new N. S. S. Fund. It is hardly to be expected that Branches should strain themselves. They consist chiefly of poor hard-workers. The well-to-do Freethinkers are the persons who should subscribe.

S. PEACOCK.—Glad to hear you are getting a few subscribers at South Shields for the new Fund. We believe it will be a great success in time.

C. DOEG.—Mr. Foote thanks the Liverpool Branch for its resolution of approval of his efforts as President of the N. S. S.

T. H. ASTON.—If you wish to set Mrs. Besant right you must apply to the journal she contributes to. We are not responsible for her statement that you are "notoriously untruthful." No doubt she will prove it or retract.

J. WILKS.—You are entitled to return your unsold Freethinkers, but our publisher cannot be expected to pay for the carriage of your returns. Nor can he make other publishers give you special terms. The real reason, we suspect, for the reduced sale of Freethought literature in Bradford, is that the local Secularists do very little but quarrel. It is high time that they sank their differences and fought the common enemy.

A. HASSELDINE.—You may rely on our doing our best to make the N. S. S. more lively and effective. To this end it is necessary for the members to subscribe liberally.

QUIZ.—That Mary Magdalen was a loose character is merely a a Christian tradition. There is no contemporary evidence of the existence of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, or even of Jesus. Glad to hear you circulate five copies of this journal weekly. Would that a thousand readers did the same.

W. BRANDLE.—We have always found you courteous, and we hope to find you so in future. But in stepping upon the C. E. S. platform you will have to remember the proverb about evil communications.

PAPERS RECEIVED.—Neues Freireligioses Sonntags Blatt—Der Arme Teufel—Western Figaro—Liberator—Truthseeker—Ironclad Age—Bulletin des Sommaires—Menschenthum—Progressive Thinker—Fair Play—Freidenker—Freethought—Cardiff Weekly Mail—Echo—Independent Pulpit—Margate and Ramsgate Gazette—Twentieth Century—Leeds Mercury—Woodford Times—Yorkshire Daily Chronicle—Newcastle Chronicle—National Advance—Grays and Tilbury Gazette—Redditch Indicator—Christian Globe—La Verité—Sheffield and Rotherham Independent—Devon Evening Express—Consett Guardian—Freedom—Fritankaren—Der Lichtfreund—Evening Standard—Cosmopolitan—Leicester Daily Mercury—Boston Investigator.

FRIENDS who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish our attention directed.

CORRESPONDENCE should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

THE FREETHOUGHT FUND.

MR. FOOTE'S appeal, as President of the National Secular Society, for funds to extend the Society's work, is being responded to by friends in various parts of the country. Some of the subscribers promise to remit annually as much as they can afford; others, who can only send a little at a time, promise to remit half-yearly or quarterly. As soon as possible a list of intending subscribers will be prepared. Meanwhile the following subscriptions are acknowledged as actually received by Mr. Foote or Mr. Forder.

Second List.

	£	s.	d.		£	s.	d.
J. T. Hampson	1	0	0	G. Payne	2	2	0
Mrs. A. Hampson	1	0	0	B. H. Brace	0	10	6
A. Lewis	0	5	0	Heckmondwike Brch	0	10	0
G. Smith	0	6	0	J. V. Pearce	0	10	6
D. Hughes	0	5	2	H. S. Frizelle	0	5	0
G. V. Ball	0	10	0	L. Stanley	0	2	6
O. Hasseldine	0	5	0	S. Holmes	1	0	0

It is to be hoped that this second list will soon be followed by a third. Members of the N. S. S., or unattached friends of the movement, should bestir themselves. Let the President and his colleagues on the Executive be supplied, as they should be, with the sinews of war, and they will carry on the battle of Freethought with vigor, and they hope with success.

G. W. FOOTE

SUGAR PLUMS.

Mr. Foote performed a dreadfully difficult task on Sunday evening. He lectured on "Is the Bible Fit for Children?" without shocking his audience. But he took the precaution of leaving the Bible at home lest he should be tempted to read from it. This evening (April 27) Mr. Foote lectures again at the Hall of Science, when he will reply to Mr. Gladstone's new article on "The Creation Story" in the May number of Good Words.

The Woolwich Branch had some difficulty in obtaining the Co-operative Hall at Woolwich for Mr. Foote's lecture. Twice the Committee refused it, and it was only let after the Secularist members of the Co-operative Society talked of calling a general meeting. Mr. Foote's lecture on "Why I am an Atheist" drew a large audience, which included several ladies. Six local ministers had been specially invited, and one of them, the Rev. Mr. Baker, attended and offered some courteous opposition. He was followed by three other Christian speakers, each less rational than his predecessor, until the audience grew restive under the infliction. Mr. Foote's reply to his critics was very heartily applauded, and the Rev. Mr. Baker, in shaking hands, said he was perfectly satisfied with the courteous treatment he had received.

Digitized by Google

A freethinking lady got up to expose one of the Christian speakers, but the audience thought it beside the subject. Still, we can sympathise with the lady. She had heard this man traducing Mr. Foote at an outdoor meeting, where he read out a disgusting passage as if from the Freethinker. She promptly challenged him, and asked him to show her the paper he was reading from. At first he declined, but he yielded to pressure, and it turned out that not a word of the stuff was to be found in the paper. Such was the lady's story. Yet in Mr. Foote's presence the man claimed him as "a brother." And of such is the kingdom of heaven.

Mr. Wheeler has published through Mr. Forder a new pamphlet, entitled The Christian Doctrine of Hell. Its object is to show that actual future torment has been taught by Christian divines throughout the ages. Some of the extracts should be serviceable to opponents of Christianity.

Mr. A. B. Moss lectures to-day (April 27) at Reading, and we hope the local Freethinkers will give him a good reception.

Mr. C. J. Hunt, who is going north during his holiday on a lecturing tour under the auspices of the Organisation Committee, will work the Tyneside district pretty thoroughly. He will visit the following places:—May 20, Hartlepool; 21, Stockton; 23, Ox Hill; 24, Chester-le-Street; 25, South Shields; 26, Newcastle; 27, Cramlington; 28, Bedlington; 29, Gateshead; 30, Sunderland. Sunday, June 1, Mr. Hunt lectures at Belfast.

Birmingham Freethinkers should all foregather at Baskerville Hall to-day (April 27). Tea will be served at 5, and the entertainment will begin at 7. The proceeds will go to the Benevolent Fund. Those who cannot attend should take a ticket.

Mr. Foote has agreed to open the winter season for the Birmingham Branch with two lectures at Baskerville Hall and an afternoon free lecture in the Town Hall, a building capable of holding four or five thousand people.

The Newcastle Branch has done good work in establishing and sustaining the Sunday Music League. According to the Evening Chronicle the strength of the friends of the League can no longer be denied. A memorial with more than a thousand signatures has been presented to the Mayor, requesting him to call a town's meeting. The Mayor has acceded to the request, and the bigots who desire to regulate their neighbors' observance of the "Sabbath" will either have to defend themselves or let judgment go by default.

The annual meeting of the Liverpool Branch will be held next Sunday (May 4) at 11 o'clock. All members and supporters are earnestly desired to attend.

North Middlesex Secular Federation.—From May 4 all the North Middlesex stations will be open for Freethought lectures, Tottenham excepted. New Southgate and Wood Green, 11.30; Finsbury Park, 3.30; Edmonton, 3; Old Southgate, 6.30. The arrangements for Tottenham are not yet completed.—Sam. Standring, 9 Finsbury Street, E.C., secretary.

Another petition with 5,338 signatures of Swedish Utilisters (Secularists) has been presented to Prince Karl in favor of Mr. Lennstrand's release, and protesting against punishment for opinion. The Swedes are a serious and determined people. Having once taken up with Freethought, they will hold on despite all opposition, and they have evidently the nucleus of a powerful organisation which will soon make impossible such prosecutions as those which have disgraced the present Government.

At the General Assembly of the French Freethought Federation held at the Salle de l'Ermitage, 29 Rue de Jussieu, Paris, on Sunday April 20, the statutes of the New Federation were approved and the following persons elected on the commission: E. Pasquier, C. Cilwa, Mme. Pasquier, G. Verone, MM. Beugnot, Schaere, Bevalet, Cottar, Okecki, Odin, Mlle. Chelega Loevy, MM. Lebey, Dobelle, Cordeau, and Rouselle. The energetic secretary M. Pasquier, and our good friend M. Cilwa were level at the head of the poll, and the rest followed in the order given. Our French friends also organised a Dernier de la Libre Pensée, for collecting money after the fashion of Peter's Pence for the Propagation of Freethought.

President Carnot, who is too much of a Freethinker to go to church, has had a splendid reception in the south of France. Boulanger, who ecquetted with the Church, is pretty well played out, while Carnot is daily rising in the esteem and affection of the people. At Corsica he was rather startled when the fishermen kissed his hand; it looked like treating him as a king; but it was only their fashion of greeting the great. One of these fine fellows saved twenty lives in a violent storm. While Carnot is respected by such men he may laugh at Boulanger and the Church too.

The Independent Pulpit, a Freethought monthly, of Waco, Texas, is in its eighth volume, and is full of interesting advanced Freethought matter.

Buddhism is not only making surprising advances in America and Austria, but in France. Leon de Rosny, a distinguished Orientalist, says it has taken firm root. He says that many of its disciples confound Buddha's pure philosophy with a variety of supernatural theories and dabble in spiritism, hypnotism, and occult practices.

A. E. Buultjeens, B.A., a young man brought up at St. Thomas's College, Colombo, Ceylon, has renounced the Christian faith and attached himself to that of the Lord Buddha. His name has been struck off the panels of the college, where it had been inscribed with honor.

The Austrian Christians have instituted a prosecution against Dr. Bruehl, Professor of Natural History in the University of Vienna, for "crimes against the Church and religion," the said crimes arising out of his lectures, in which he has taught Darwinism. Dr. Bruehl is seventy years of age and widely respected. The prosecution is bound to make the evolutionary doctrines more widely discussed and accepted.

The Liberal Woman's Convention, which met at Washington in February, has formally published its resolutions. The following will interest our readers, as showing a strong spirit of Freethought:—

Resolved, That as the first duty of every individual is self-development, the lessons of self-sacrifice and obedience taught women by the Christian Church have been fatal, not only to her own vital interests, but through her to the vital interests of the race.

Resolved, That every Church is the enemy of liberty and progress and the chief means of enslaving woman's conscience and reason, and therefore as the first and most necessary step towards her emancipation we should free her from the bondage of the Church.

Resolved, That the Christian Church, of whatever name, is based on the theory that woman was created secondary and inferior to man and brought sin into the world, thus necessitating the sacrifice of a Savior. That Christianity is false and its foundation a myth which every discovery in science shows to be as baseless as its former belief that the earth was flat.

Resolved, That morality is not theology, but has a basis independent of "Thou shalt," and "Thou shalt not"; that right is right and wrong is wrong, not because any being in the universe so declares, but in the nature of things, the origin of right being in truth and not in authority.

A work upon which Mr. J. Stuart Glennie, the friend of Buckle, has long been engaged, will shortly be published by D. Nutt. It is entitled The Origin of Civilisation.

The Truthseeker gives as its cartoon for April 12, the figure of a Christian maiden clinging to a cross in the water, hard by the rocks of superstition. Priestly sharks are playing round her as the Freethought lifeboat approaches and offers her relief. She holds to the wooden cross with such fervent devotion that it is doubtful if she will accept the proferred help.

Digitized by Google

Religion does not play a very important part in the courts of New York nowadays. A juror in the Flack conspiracy case, on his examination, was asked: "Have you any religion?" "No, sir. We live to-day and die to-morrow." "Then you have no fear of the future?" "Not at all." He was sent to the box as a juror. A few years ago the man would have been discharged from the jury panel as incompetent to serve. —Truthseeker.

Kaliprasanna Kavyabisharad, editor of the Cosmopolitan, Calcutta, has sent us an obliging letter in excellent English. He tells us that he has translated two of our essays into the vernacular. He also informs us that "the bubble of Theosophy is all but blown out here," but Mrs. Besant's conversion has caused some persons to make fresh inquiries about it, though with no very noticeable result.

Dr. Remegius Stölzle, the Professor of Philosophy at Wurzburg, states in a letter to Karl Blind, in London, that he has discovered a number of manuscripts in the Town Library of Augsburg and in the University Library of Erlangen, containing the transcript of writings and notes on Aristotelean works made by Giordano Bruno, the Italian philosopher, who was burnt at Rome in 1600, at the order of the Inquisition. Some letters of a German friend of Bruno have also been found referring to the travels, studies and publications of the ex-monk during his sojourn in Germany. The whole will be published in the forthcoming edition of the works of Giordano Bruno, which is to come out in Italy.—Daily News.

Mr. Hendricks has introduced into the New York Senate a bill to abolish arrests in civil actions except for contempt. Lawyers are divided in opinion as to the advisability of this proposed complete abolition of imprisonment for debt. Colonel Ingersoll says: "I am opposed absolutely to imprisonment for debt. It is a relic of barbarism and savagery. The bill to abolish arrests in civil actions as published in the Herald meets my views exactly as to what is demanded in the way of a reform of the abuses that have grown out of this crying evil. I hope the bill will become a law."

The Reading Observer prints two replies to the Rev. J. Rose on the subject of miracles. That of the Rev. D. Amos, the Unitarian minister, is very strong. Unfortunately the editor is obliged to close the correspondence. Liberal-minded as he is, he must keep an eye to business, and it won't answer to let orthodoxy be so soundly thrashed, and so frequently.

Our next number will contain an article by the editor on Mr. Gladstone's second Good Words article on the Bible—"The Creation Story." We shall print an extra supply in the hope that some of our friends will take more copies than usual for distribution among their orthodox acquaintances.

CHRISTIAN MORALITY NOT UNIQUE.

THE commandment of love our enemies and to return good for evil, the most sublime doctrine of Christianity—so sublime, indeed, that Christians themselves have declared it to be too sublime for this world—can be shown to belong to the universal code of faith and morality from which the highest religions have drawn their strength and life. Let me first quote the words of Christ: "You have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you. That you may be the children of your Father which is in heaven; for He maketh His sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and the unjust." Now, let us first consult a religion which cannot possibly be suspected of having borrowed anything from Chistianity. Let us take one of the three great religions of China, Taoism, such as we know it from the writings of Lao-tze, who lived about 600 B.C. In the xlix. chapter of the Tao-te-king, Lao-tze says, "The good I would meet with goodness, the not good I would also meet with goodness. The faithful I would meet with faith, the not-faithful I would also meet with faith. Virtue is faithful. The sage dwells in the world with a timid reserve; but his mind blends in love with all. The people all turn their ears and eyes upon him, and the sage thinks of them all as his children." In chapter lxiii. he says again: "Recompense injury with kindness." How widely spread and how old this doctrine must have been in China we may gather from some curious remarks made by Confucius, the contemporary of Lao-tze and the founder or reformer of the national religion of China. In the "Anelects" we read: "Some one said, 'What do you say concerning the principle that injury should be recompensed with kindness?' The Master said: 'With what will you recompense kindness? Recompense injury with justice, and kindness with kindness.'" This is evidently the language of a philosopher rather than of a religious teacher. Confucius seems to have perceived that to love our enemies is almost too much for human nature, and he declares himself satisfied therefore with demanding justice to our enemies—and who does not know how difficult it is to fulfil even that commandment? However, the true prophets who thought not so much of what men are as what men ought to be, insisted on love, or at all events, on pity for our enemies as the highest virtue. Thus Buddha said: "Let a man overcome evil by good; let him overcome the greedy by liberality, and the liar by truth. . . . For hatred does not cease by hatred at any time; hatred ceases by love; this is an old rule." Remark here again the same expression, that the commandment to love your enemy is an old rule in the eyes of Buddha as it was in the eyes of Confucius. What, then, becomes of the attempts to show that the doctrine of love towards our enemies must have been borrowed, wherever we find it, from the New Testament, as if that doctrine would become less true because other religions also teach it, or because it had been revealed, in the truest sense of that word, to all who had eyes to see and hearts to love. It is truth that makes revelation, not revelation that makes truth.—Professor Max Muller in his last Gifford Lecture at Glasgow.

TRIBUTE TO A DEAD FREETHINKER.

THE Grays and Tilbury Gazette prints the following:—

"We regret to record the death of Mr. Edwin Powell, of Grays, which sad event took place at his residence on Friday, the 11th inst. Deceased, who was widely known as "Ted Powell," was one of the most prominent working men Radicals in the district. His presence was to be seen at all meetings for the propagation of Radical principles, and his outspoken advice will be greatly missed by the whole of the party in South-East Essex. He was also one of the most active officials of the Grays Co-operative Society, which society on Friday had their flag flying half mast high as a token of respect. Deceased, who had been ailing for some time past, was 40 years of age at the time of his death, which occurred from a complication of diseases, dropsy and heart disease being, however, the immediate causes. He had been employed by Messrs Brooks, Shoobridge, and Co. ever since the commencement of their works, and has always been highly esteemed and respected by the members of the firm as well as by his fellow workmen; and it is a noteworthy fact that at all times, when others were working against the firm, he was one of its staunchest supporters. He was one of the leaders of the old Liberal Reform Club which was started in Grays some time back, and at the time of his decease he was one of the most prominent members of the existing Grays Liberal and Radical Club, and has invariably figured in all elections, both political and otherwise. He leaves a wife and six children to mourn his loss, although the bitterness of that loss will be less keen to the widow from her knowledge of the fact that during his life her husband worked for a firm who after his death will not allow her or her children to starve.

"Deceased was a professed Secularist. The funeral took place on Sunday at the Cemetery, in the presence of one of the largest gatherings which has ever assembled there. His widow and a large number of relatives followed, and in accordance with Mr. Powell's expressed wish he was buried as a Secularist, no religious ceremony being performed. The Secretary and other representatives of the Secular Society in London were present, and an eulogy on his life was read by one of the members. At the funeral Messrs. Brooks' firm was represented by Mr. Walter Brooks and Mr. Simpson."

Sir G. Stokes has published his lecture on "I" through the office of the Family Churchman. We shall get a copy and give it our attention. From the reports we have seen it is all my I.

Digitized by Google

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE LEICESTER SECULAR SOCIETY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE FREETHINKER."

SIR,—Will you allow me to make a few comments on the criticism of the report of the Leicester Secular Society for 1889, which appeared in your issue of April 6th. I am sorry I had not time to send this letter before.

It is not correct to say that members of our club are "not necessarily Secularists." We do not intentionally admit a single person who is not a Secularist. It is possible for a non-Secularist to become a member by deceiving us but not otherwise.

It is hardly accurate to say that only £34 is spent "on lectures." £34 16s. 7d. is the amount paid to lecturers, but the cost of the lectures is of course much more than that. There are rent, rates, gas, water and coal (for heating), manager's salary and numerous other expenses connected with keeping up such a hall as ours, altogether amounting to over £200 per year spent in the purely propagandist side of our work. It would puzzle any Secular Society in the kingdom to show a better lecture list than ours, and if some of our friends do not ask much for their lectures, sometimes even charging nothing, I think we are to be congratulated on that fact. The lectures certainly are on all sorts of subjects, as we believe that Secularists should be interested in all sorts of subjects and given opportunities for discussing them. Still, our report shows that the large majority of the lecturers last year were pronounced Secularists.

I believe my father's bequest is being used in accordance with his wishes, and on that point I think I am a better judge than the writer of the criticism.

What "respectability" means I confess I don't know. If it means "ability to claim respect" I hope we may increase and not diminish our share of it. If it means considering "Mrs. Grundy" before the claims of Freethought, and developing a tendency towards pot hats and kid gloves, then I do not think we needed your critic's advice. This last kind of respectability has no hold on our Society, I cannot imagine Freethought being more free anywhere or more consistently vigorous. Our Secularism is not intermittent, alternating grand revivals with seasons of sloth; we keep steadily at work month after month, and year after year, with the result that our influence is always felt in our town.

There is nothing like going from home for news. Your critic thinks the "rank and file of the Secular party in Leicester" are dissatisfied. My impression is that it would be difficult to find anywhere a body of men and women working more harmoniously or more earnestly. In any case they are not "obliged to take what is given them." All our officers are elected by ballot, one member one vote, the smallest subscriber having exactly the same power as the largest. The policy of the Society is therefore in the hands of the majority.

I think your critic has somewhat mis-read the quotation from Mr. G. J. Holyoake. He does not say that "Secularists need not contest the divine origin of the Bible," but that secular principles can be stated and certain mischievous views of theology combated "without digressing into the discussion of the truth of Theism or divine origin of the Bible." I take this to mean that we can discuss Secularism without everlastingly hammering at God and the Bible. Criticism of Theism and the Bible has its place and is most necessary, but that is not all that Secularism consists of—at least, so we think at Leicester. We like to put God and the Bible in the background sometimes, and show that we are independent enough to do a little secular work without their help.

In conclusion, allow me to thank you for the criticism. It is always good to have our work examined, and a Secular Society whose work would not bear the closest examination would not be worthy of the name. If any of your readers are interested in knowing what we are doing at Leicester, I shall be glad to send a copy of the report on receipt of address.—Yours truly, SYDNEY A. GIMSON.

[We insert Mr. Gimson's letter for the sake of fair play. It does not convince us, however, that our criticism was very inaccurate. What he says about the self-denial of lecturers seems to us a sort of "sweater's" excuse, and we are unable to follow him in his arithmetic in the third paragraph. Nor do we think he has rightly read the principle he refers to in paragraph seven. As for the other paragraphs, more might be said about them if we had time to say it. It must now suffice that Mr. Gimson has made his reply. There are men whom we respect in the Leicester Secular Society, and we would not be uncivil to anyone who bears the name of Gimson.—EDITOR, Freethinker.]

HOME RULE AND ROME RULE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE FREETHINKER."

SIR,—Your paper very properly eschews politics; but it seems right to permit some discussion on the religious aspect of the Irish Question raised by your able contributor, Mr. O'Donovan. Most Freethinkers are Radicals, and many, like Mr. Morley, were Home Rulers long before the question was taken up by the Liberal party. Some few—very few, I think, but I know at least two—however, are Conservatives, placing Order before Liberty or Progress. Others, including such eminent Freethinkers as Huxley, Tyndall and Lecky, decline to follow Mr. Gladstone on this question, and would rather vote with the Conservatives than place Ireland in the hands of an Irish Parliament. Some again, and I confess myself of the number, though they deem Home Rule just and inevitable, feel much like a man who has to hand over a fortune to a relative, who, perhaps from its being too long withheld, has fallen upon bad times and bad company. The man can but doubt the issue. But the relative is clamorous, and will be satisfied with nothing short of his rights. The man can only say: "Take it freely, but I warn you new power will bring new responsibilities. Beware of those black parasites who have so long kept you poor, and who I fear only demand your rights to secure more for themselves."

Mr. O'Donovan sees what so many politicians and political journalists scrupulously put out of sight—that the religious and political questions are inextricably mixed. He has himself told us in burning words of the credulous submission of his countrymen to the priests. He sees hope in liberty. I heartily admire his bravery in propagating Freethought in Dublin, and I wish I could share his hopes of success. But Irish Freethinkers will have a long and uphill fight. I agree the Church will be too astute to directly persecute Protestants. But will it show the same tolerance to those who sap its authority and that of all religion? A College Green Parliament would have much to do. Will not the priests who control the votes, take care they control the expenditure? Will not Catholic schools thrive while others starve? Will not Parliament discover that the Protestants of Ulster can and must contribute the major portion of the expenses of the whole country? Will they not aim eventually not only at Catholic ascendancy, but at making Ireland an entirely Catholic nation? Prophecy is a gratuitous form of error, and I avoid it. I only ask for information. Mr. O'Donovan's views from the capital I have read with sincere pleasure, but I should also like to hear the opinions of Freethinkers in Ulster.

SAXON.

PROFANE JOKES.

Some one called a clergyman a fool. The latter threatened to complain to the bishop. "Do so," said the former, "and he will comfirm you."

"What did you see at church, grandfather?" asked Minnie after her first visit to the sanctuary. "I saw a man come in with his nightgown on, an' he was so 'shamed he hid his face in his hands a little while 'fore he dared to say a word."

"Say, Pathrick, whispered Jacobson to his Hibernian friend, "I vonder vot sort of man dot is at de odder end of de looncheounter?" "Begob," returned Pat, eyeing the stranger, "he musht be wan av thim new-fangled ducks called Eggnostics. A man that will ate bacon on a Froiday is nayther Jew nor Christian!"

A clergyman, mounted on a tall, lank, row-boned animal, asked a dirty urchin which was the nearer road to town. The boy said, "Who are you, old fellow?" The clergyman replied, "My son, I am a follower of the Lord." "A follower of the Lord, eh? Well, it makes mighty difference which road you take; you'll never catch Him with that horse."

SACRIFICES.—At first it is supposed that the spirits actually eat the food offered them. Soon, however, it would be observed that the animals sacrificed did not disappear; and the natural explanation would be that the spirit ate the spiritual part of the victim, leaving the grosser portion to his devout worshippers. Thus the Limboos, near Darjeeling, eat their sacrifices, dedicating, as they forcibly express it, "the life-breath to the gods, the flesh to ourselves."—Sir John Lubbock, "Origin of Civilisation," p. 365. 1889.

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY MEETINGS.

LONDON.

Ball's Pond Secular Hall, 36 Newington Green Road, N., 7, "Theosophy of the Day: its Autopsy and Obsequies," by an Orientalist."

Battersea—The Shed of Truth, Prince of Wales's Road, 7.30, a lecture. Park Gates, 11.15, a lecture by Mr. Hunt. Social evening every Tuesday.

Bethnal Green—Opposite "Salmon and Ball," Mr. W. Heaford, "Some Objections to Christianity"; 3.15, at 2 Railway Place, Cambridge Road, members' general meeting.

Claremont Hall, Penton Street, Pentonville Road, N., at 7, Mr. J. M. Robertson (closing lecture), "Rationalism."

Camberwell—61 New Church Road, S.E., 7.30, J. B. Coppock, F.C.S., "Evolution in the Domain of Chemistry."

East London—Mile End Waste, 11.30, Mr. S. Standring, "Why we Advocate Secularism."

Edmonton—Opposite the "Angel," 3, Mr. Sam. Standring, "God and Mammon."

Finsbury Park (near the band-stand), 3.30, Mr. J. Rowney, "Christ and Freethought."

Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, E.C., 7, Mr. G. W. Foote, "Mr. Gladstone on the Creation Story."

Hyde Park, near Marble Arch; 11.15, Mr. T. Thurlow, "Jesus and his Beliefs."

Milton Hall, Kentish Town Road, N.W., 7.30, Mrs. A. Besant, "Free Education, Shall we Compromise?"

West Ham—121 Broadway, Plaistow, 11.30, Mr. Jesse Cocks, "The History of Freethought in Stratford"; 7, Mr. A. Dipper, "The Resurrection"; 8.30, music, etc.

Westminster—Old Pimlico Pier, 11.30, Mr. F. Millar, "Decline of Christianity." On Saturday (April 26) at "Duke of Ormonde," 13 Prince's Street, social meeting of members and friends.

Wood Green—Jolly Butchers' Hill, 11.30, Socialist speakers.

COUNTRY.

Glasgow Secular Society and Branch of N. S. S, 122 Ingram Street.—6.30, Mr. M. Gass, "The Single Tax: Will it Solve the Labor Problem?"

Hanley—Secular Hall, 51 John Street, 7, Mr. H. Barkby, "Let the Slaves Unite."

Hull Branch—Cobden Hall, Albion Street, 6.30, Mr. J. Hooper, 10.30, "Bible Heroes"; 2.30, "Birth, Life, and Death of Christ"; 6.30, "The State Church, its Origin and Deeds."

Liverpool Branch N.S.S., Camden Hall, Camden Street—Mr. J. Clarke, M.A., 11, "The Religion of the Future"; 3, "Anthropomorphism"; 7, "The Childhood of Jesus."

Manchester—Rusholme Road, Oxford Road, 6.30, humorous and dramatic recitals by Mr. and Mrs. E. C. White. Free. On Friday, May 6, ball of the season, commence at 6.30; gents, 1s. 6d., ladies, 1s.

Nottingham—Secular Hall, Beck Street, 7, Mr. R. J. Murray, "Bruno."

Portsmouth—Wellington Hall, Southsea, 7, Mr. Woods, "Vegetarianism, a False Ism"; several prominent vegetarians likely to attend, and good discussion will follow.

Sheffield—Hall of Science, Rockingham Street, 7, music, recitations, etc., by several friends.

South Shields—Captain Duncan's Navigation Schools, King Street, at 7, a lecture by Mr. Thos. Thompson.

LECTURERS' ENGAGEMENTS.

Arthur B. Moss, 44 Credon Road, London, S.E. — April 27, Reading. May 4 (morning), Westminster (evening), Woolwich; 11 (morning), Camberwell; 18 (morning), Clerkenwell Green, (evening), Ball's Pond; 25 (afternoon), Regent's Park. June 1 (morning), Pimlico, (evening), Woolwich; 8 (morning), Bethnal Green; 15 (evening), Ball's Pond; 22 (morning), Clerkenwell; 29 (morning), Mile End. July 13, Mile End.

Tolman-Garner, 8 Heyworth Road, Stratford, London, E.—May 4 (morning), Mile End Waste; 11, Clerkenwell Green; 18 (afternoon), Regent's Park; 25 (morning), Hyde Park. June 1 (morning), Mile End Waste; 8 (morning), Clerkenwell Green; 22 (evening), Woolwich; 29 (morning), Bethnal Green. July 6 (morning), Hyde Park; 13 (morning), Clerkenwell Green; 27 (morning), Mile End Waste.

James Hooper, 11 Upper Eldon Street, Sneinton, Nottingham.—April 27, Hull; 28, Grimsby. May 4, Nottingham.

T. Thurlow, 7 Dickson's Villas, Rutland Road, East Ham.—April 27, Hyde Park.

H. Smith, 3 Breck Place, Breck Road, Everton Road, Liverpool.—May 4, Birmingham; 11, Hanley.

PROGRESSIVE PUBLISHING CO.'S LIST.

All orders to be sent, with remittance, to R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C. Rate of postage—Orders under 3d., one halfpenny; orders under 6d. one penny. Orders over 6d. post free.

G. W. FOOTE.

	s.	d.
PRISONER FOR BLASPHEMY. Cloth ... ... A Full History of his Three Trials and Twelve Months' Imprisonment. Copies in paper covers, soiled, 6d.	2	6
IS SOCIALISM SOUND? ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant.	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
CHRISTIANITY AND SECULARISM ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. In paper covers.	1	0
Superior edition in cloth	1	6
INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS ... ... Second edition, enlarged.	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0
DARWIN ON GOD	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0

Contents:—Darwin's Grandfather—Darwin's Father—Darwin's Early Piety—Almost a Clergyman—On Board the "Beagle"—Settling at Down—Death and Burial—Purpose of Pamphlet—Some Objections—Darwin Abandons Christianity—Deism—Creation—Origin of Life—Origin of Man—Animism—A Personal God—Design—Divine Beneficence—Religion and Morality—Agnosticism and Atheism.

DEFENCE OF FREE SPEECH ... ... Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes.	0	4
LETTERS TO JESUS CHRIST	0	4
PHILOSOPHY OF SECULARISM	0	3
THE BIBLE GOD	0	2
THE FOLLY OF PRAYER	0	2
CHRISTIANITY AND PROGRESS ... ... A Reply to Mr. Gladstone.	0	2
THE SHADOW OF THE SWORD ... ... A moral and statistical Essay on War.	0	2
ROYAL PAUPERS ... ... Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty.	0	2
BIBLE HEROES—First Series, in elegant wrapper ... (1) Mr. Adam, (2) Captain Noah, (3) Father Abraham, (4) Juggling Jacob, (5) Master Joseph, (6) Joseph's Brethren, (7) Holy Moses I., (8) Holy Moses II., (9) Parson Aaron, (10) General Joshua, (11) Jephthah and Co., (12) Professor Samson. One Penny each singly.	1	0
BIBLE HEROES—Second Series, in elegant wrapper... (13) Prophet Samuel, (14) King Saul, (15) Saint David I., (16) Saint David II., (17) Sultan Solomon, (18) Poor Job, (19) Hairy Elijah, (20) Bald Elisha, (21) General Jehu, (22) Doctor Daniel, (23) The Prophets (Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Hosea); (24) St. Peter, (25) St. Paul	1	0
MRS. BESANT'S THEOSOPHY ... ... A Candid Criticism.	0	2
THEOSOPHY AND SECULARISM.. ... ... A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant.	0	2
THE NEW CAGLIOSTRO ... ... An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky.	0	2
WHAT WAS CHRIST? ... ... A Reply to J. S. Mill.	0	2
THE DYING ATHEIST. A Story	0	1
WAS JESUS INSANE? ... ... A searching inquiry into the mental condition of the Prophet of Nazareth.	0	1

G. W. FOOTE and W. P. BALL.

BIBLE HANDBOOK FOR FREETHINKERS AND INQUIRING CHRISTIANS	1	4
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
Sold also in separate parts as follows—
Bible Contradictions ... ... The Contradictions are printed in parallel columns.	0	4
2. Bible Absurdities ... ... All the chief Absurdities from Genesis to Revelation, conveniently and strikingly arranged, with appropriate headlines, giving the point of each absurdity in a sentence.	0	4
3. Bible Atrocities ... ... Containing all the godly wickedness from Genesis to Revelation. Each infamy has a separate headline for easy reference.	0	4
4. Bible Immoralities, Indecencies, Obscenities, Broken Promises, and Unfulfilled Prophecies ...	0	4

COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

MISTAKES OF MOSES	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth ... ... Only Complete Edition published in England	1	6
DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT ... ... Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy.	0	6
REPLY TO GLADSTONE ... ... With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler.	0	4
ROME OR REASON? Reply to Cardinal Manning	0	4
FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Rev. Dr. Field ...	0	2
GOD AND MAN. Second Reply to Dr. Field	0	2
THE DYING CREED	0	2
THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH	0	2
THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION ... ... A Discussion with Hon. F. D. Courdert and Gov. S. L. Woodford.	0	2
ART AND MORALITY	0	2
DO I BLASPHEME?	0	2
THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE	0	2
THE GREAT MISTAKE	0	1
LIVE TOPICS		1
MYTH AND MIRACLE	0	1
REAL BLASPHEMY	0	1
SOCIAL SALVATION	0	2

G. W. FOOTE and J. M. WHEELER.

CRIMES OF CHRISTIANITY. Vol. I. Cloth ... Hundred of exact References to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.	2	6
THE JEWISH LIFE OF CHRIST ... ... With voluminous footnotes. An extraordinary work.	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0

Digitized by Google

Now Ready.

"THE ESSENCE OF RELIGION"

GOD THE IMAGE OF MAN—MAN'S DEPENDENCE UPON NATURE THE LAST AND ONLY SOURCE OF RELIGION.

By LUDWIG FEUERBACH.

"No one has demonstrated and explained the purely human origin of the idea of God better than Ludwig Feuerbach."
—Büchner.

"I confess that to Feuerbach I owe a debt of inestimable gratitude. Feeling about in uncertainty for the ground, and finding everywhere shifting sands, Feuerbach cast a sudden blaze in the darkness and disclosed to me the way."
—Rev. S. Baring-Gould.

Price One Shilling.

LETTERS TO THE CLERGY

FIRST SERIES.

1.—CREATION
To the Bishop of Carlisle.

2.—THE BELIEVING THIEF
To the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

3.—THE ATONEMENT
To the Bishop of Peterborough.

4.—OLD TESTAMENT MORALITY
To the Rev. E. R. Conder, D.D.

5.—INSPIRATION
To the Rev. R. F. Horton, M.A.

6.—CREDENTIALS OF THE GOSPEL
To the Rev. Prof. J. A. Beet.

7.—MIRACLES
To the Rev. Brownlow Maitland, M.A.

8.—PRAYER
To the Rev. T. Teignmouth Shore, M.A.

By G. W. FOOTE.

128pp., in Wrapper. ONE SHILLING.

2d. each. PARTS I. and II. 2d. each.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC?

NEW PAMPHLETS BY
COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

---

32 pages. Now Ready. Price 3d.

CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS

A Noble Plea for a Rational Treatment of Prisoners and a Humane Jurisprudence,

By COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

Price 1d. Price 1d.

A LIE IN FIVE CHAPTERS.

THE REV. HUGH PRICE HUGHES'S

CONVERTED ATHEIST

By G. W. FOOTE.

Should be circulated by Freethinkers who desire to see this pious fraud exposed as widely as possible.

A

BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY

OF

FREETHINKERS

OF

ALL AGES AND NATIONS.

BY

J. M. WHEELER.

Price 7/6 Handsomely bound in cloth. Price 7/6

W. J. Rendell's

"WIFE'S FRIEND."

Recommended in "Law of Population," and "Wife's Hand Book." Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell Street, Clerkenwell, and supplied per post, 2s. dozen. For particulars of this Malthusian discovery send stamped envelope. Higginson's Syringe, with vertical and reverse current, 3s. 6d. and 4s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. All other Malthusian Appliances. All prices post free.

HARTNOLL,

ENGLISH AND FOREIGN CHEMIST,

1A PICCADILLY

(Under the London Pavilion Music Hall),

LONDON, W.

Hartnoll's Specialities, Appliances and Medicated Preparations are world-renowned.

Spiral, Douche and Latest Improved Syringes.

ESTABLISHED OVER 50 YEARS.

RUBBER STAMPS.

Your Monogram to mark Linen or Paper; two letters, 1s.; three letters, 1s. 6d.; any Name, 1s. 6d. Box, Pad and Ink included. All kinds of Stamps. Patterns free. Carriage 2d. extra. F. M. IRETON and CO., 92 Gracechurch Street, London. Agents wanted.

GOD AND THE STATE

A New Pamphlet by
COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

Twopence. Twopence.

THE IMPOSSIBLE CREED

An Open Letter to the
BISHOP OF PETERBOROUGH.
By G. W. FOOTE.

Price Twopence. Price Twopence.

THE BIBLE AND EVOLUTION.

By ARTHUR B. MOSS.
Handsomely Bound in Cloth. 2s. 6d.

The "National Reformer" says: "The author has long won his spurs as a Freethought lecturer, etc. . . one of his best sustained literary efforts."

The "Freethinker" says: "It is by far the best production of Mr. Moss's pen, and we heartily recommend it as an excellent text-book of the subject. The matter is good and the style is bright. The reader is carried along on an easy flowing stream of science, history, ethics and common sense."

Watts and Co., 17 Johnson's Court; Progressive Publishing Co.

TO MARRIED PEOPLE.

A New and Enlarged
ILLUSTRATED LIST OF MALTHUSIAN APPLIANCES AND SPECIALITIES
Will be forwarded per return of post on receipt of 1d. stamp.

DAVIES, CHEMIST.
101 PARK LANE, LEEDS.

Marriage and Divorce

AN AGNOSTIC'S VIEW.
By COL. R. G. INGERSOLL.
Price Twopence.

THE

FAMILY LIMIT

1s. 6d. per doz., post free.

For further Particulars send stamped directed envelope to

A. MOSS, 36 Upper Park Street,
ISLINGTON, LONDON, N.

GRATIS.

AN ILLUSTRATED 16-PAGE PAMPHLET, containing extracts from the utterances of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Manchester; the Revs T. R. Malthus, A. E. Whatham, M. J. Savage, Leonard Dawson, — Lawton, H. R. Haweis; the following Doctors:—Allbutt, Allinson, Armstrong, Drysdale, Pye Chavasse, E. B. Foote, Nicholls, Wilder, Raciborski, Napheys and Reamy. Also Plato, Aristotle, Sismondi, Huxley, Mill, and numerous others. Should be read by every married and marriageable person. Sent on receipt of stamped addressed envelope by J. R. HOLMES, Hanney, Wantage, Berks.

TESTIMONIALS (Extracts from).

"The one you sent me some months since is

Quite Worn Out

with being lent to so many friends."

"Some of us have paid five shillings for less than one-tenth of the information."

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each, upper or lower set, £1. Best quality, 4s. each, upper or lower, £2, completed in four hours when required, repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18c. gold 15s.; stopping, 2s. 6d. extraction, 1s. painless by gas, 5s.

Printed and Published by G. W. Foote, at 28 Stonecutter Street Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

Vol. X.—No. 18.] SUNDAY, MAY 4, 1890. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

MR. GLADSTONE ON THE CREATION STORY.

MR. GLADSTONE'S second article in defence of the Bible appears in the May number of Good Words. It deals with the Creation Story, a subject which, from the Christian point of view, is of the highest importance. This story stands at the very threshold of the Bible, and if it is a fiction it inevitably throws discredit on all that follows. But this is not all, nor even the worst. The story of Creation is inseparably connected with the story of the Fall. They stand or perish together. And if the Fall is to be regarded as a myth, what becomes of Christianity? The Christian scheme of salvation is unintelligible without the antecedent doctrine of the fall of man. It is the Garden of Eden which gives meaning to Gethsemane, the curse upon Adam and Eve which gives meaning to the tragedy of Calvary. Without the fall, and the ensuing curse, the Atonement is a baseless dogma, and the Incarnation, the Crucifixion, and the Resurrection are but tremendous mistakes.

The Creation Story opens the first of the five books commonly thought to have been written by Moses, although, as Professor Max Müller says, no scholar believes anything of the kind (Natural Religion, p. 556). Mr. Gladstone himself, who disclaims any pretension to Biblical scholarship, does not venture to speak of Moses as an author. He designates the writer of the Creation Story as "the Mosaist or the Mosaic writer," and thus leaves the whole question of the date and authorship of the Book of Genesis to settle itself as it can. Nevertheless he speaks again and again of the Creation Story being a revelation to "primitive man." This is a very misleading phrase. Some readers will think it means Adam; or Cain, Abel, Seth and the rest of the first human family, according to the ethnology of Genesis. Others will think it means the family of Noah, and still others the Jews of the Exodus, while another class of readers will think of the "primitive man" of Darwinism, and wonder whether Mr. Gladstone fancies the Creation Story was "revealed" when our far off ancestors were dodging the mammoth and disputing snug quarters with cave bears and hyenas. It is difficult to believe that so acute a man as Mr. Gladstone did not catch a glimpse of this perplexity. We cannot help thinking he felt the phrase to be a very convenient one, as suggesting a good deal without affirming anything, and helping his argument without involving the necessity of defence. Accordingly he used it with the dexterity of a practised rhetorician.

Suggestion, however, was not enough; it had to be supported by something positive, for the antiquity of the Creation story is indispensable to Mr. Gladstone's argument. But the difficulties of such a theory are immense. Supposing the story to have been "revealed" to Moses, whether written down by him or transmitted orally, it is astonishing that not a mention of it occurs in the whole of the Jewish scriptures outside the Book of Genesis, with the single exception of the Fourth Commandment. This first piece of revelation, this primary message of the divine Father to his children, this record on which the whole institution of the Sabbath is said to have been based, was treated by Hebrew writers, century after century, with an unbroken conspiracy of silence. Such is apparently the fact, and it is too hard for flesh and blood to credit. Mr. Gladstone sees this, and he argues that "there are signs in subsequent portions of the volume that this tale of the Creation was regarded by the Hebrews as authoritative and important." But what are these "signs"? Surely they are the most marvellous "signs" that ever signified nothing. Mr. Gladstone finds them in Job xxxviii. and Psalms civ. and cxlviii. He discreetly refrains from quotation, and we will follow his example, though for a very different reason. We merely ask the candid reader to turn to those chapters, and see whether he can find the remotest allusion to the Creation story without putting on Mr. Gladstone's spectacles.

Mr. Gladstone may be a master of fence, but he cannot resist the pressure of facts. The Jews were never an inventive people, and it is now established beyond dispute that their cosmogony was borrowed. Some of it was the common possession of the Semitic people, but most of it was derived from Babylon, whence the Jews also took their weights and measures, their period of work and rest, and other basic elements of their post-exile civilisation. That something is due to the shaping of Hebrew writers we are far from disputing; but the Creation Story, the Fall, and even the Flood were all writ large in the stone records of mighty empires long before they were embodied in the Jewish scriptures by an hierarchy which was able to pass off new teachings as the voice of antiquity.

Not only does Mr. Gladstone fail to advance a single valid argument in favor of the Creation Story, but he practically treats it as a fiction. He remarked some time ago, in his discussion with Huxley, that the Story was not a treatise but a sermon. Since then he has been working out the line of defence, and he now discloses it in a state of perfection. "The conveyance of scientific instruction," he says, would not have been "a reasonable object for the Mosaic writer to pursue"—a statement with which we agree, for the Mosaic writer had none to convey. His object, it appears, was twofold. He did not say so, but apparently Mr. Gladstone has some occult information as to his intentions. First, he wished—or God wished through him—"to teach man his proper place in creation in relation to its several orders." Secondly, he wished to "make him know and feel what was the beautiful and noble home that he inhabited, and with what a fatherly and tender care Providence had prepared it for him to dwell in."

Let us examine these reasons. We will take the second first. The Mosaist's object—that is, if the story be inspired, God's object—was to show how the world had been prepared by the Heavenly

Digitized by Google

Father as a dwelling place for his children. Now it seems to us that Mr. Gladstone's has lost all historic perspective in this statement. The earth is at present very largely made fit for man to live in, although, even in an old country like India, thousands of persons yearly fall victims to tigers and snakes. But so far as the earth is made fit, it is perfectly clear that man has himself done the work. He felled the forests, drained the swamps, tamed the buffaloes, broke the wild horse, domesticated the wolf, and bred sheep from a savage stock. The Genesaic story of the animals passing in meek review before Adam as the lord of creation, is a pretty picture, but a pure work of imagination. Primitive man was "monarch of all he surveyed" only while he looked upon his squaw and his offspring, and the rough walls of the natural cave, or artificial hole in the ground, where his highness lay sheltered from his prowling subjects, who were seeking to dine on his regal person. His faculties were sharpened through a wild and terrible struggle for existence, and finally he triumphed; but surely it is idle, in face of these facts, to talk of the "fatherly and tender care of Providence" in preparing his dwelling-place.

Even if the facts were otherwise, it is strange that God should have given this lesson as to his "fatherly and tender care" for his children to a few semi-savage and fanatical Jews, who kept the "revelation" strictly to themselves, and never imparted it to the mighty civilisations of Egypt, India, Phœnicia, Carthage, Persia, and Assyria, to say nothing of the more modern Greece and Rome.

But if the Mosaist's first object was unhappy, his second object was absurd. Man did not need a revelation to teach him "his proper place in creation." He did not require to be told that he was superior to fishes. Knowledge and vanity assured him that he was at the top of the scale, although his "dominion" was exceedingly precarious. When Ovid was versifying the old Pythagorean philosophy he naturally placed the creation of man at the end of the process.

> A creature of a more exalted kind
> Was wanting yet, and then was Man designed:
> Conscious of thought, of more capacious breast,
> For empire formed, and fit to rule the rest.

We utterly dissent, therefore, from Mr. Gladstone's view that "primitive man" needed to or did receive "a conception, thoroughly faithful in broad outline, of what his Maker had been about on his behalf." Nor can we read without a smile his assertion that "the simplest phrases" were so necessary "that the Maker condescended "even to represent himself as resting" after his work. The Hebrew, we understand, really says that he "took breath." This rendering is a still more "simple phrase" than resting, and still more illustrates the condescension of the Maker.

Following out his theory, Mr. Gladstone regards the six days of creation, not as days of twenty-four hours, nor as geological periods, but as "Chapters in the History of the Creation." True, the text speaks of "evening and morning" in connection with every day, but that is only a rhetorical device to emphasise the distinction between the chapters; and just as day does not mean day, so evening and morning do not mean evening and morning. Mr. Gladstone, however, overlooks a very important point. Is there any evidence that the Jews ever looked upon the "days" of Creation in this light? Did they not understand the expression literally? Was it not the literal sense which gave its sanction to the fourth commandment? Are we to presume that God "condescended" to use "simple and familiar" language for the sake of a handful of ancient Jews, at the cost of misleading populous and more civilised nations in future ages, or was this a necessity of Almighty Wisdom?

G. W. FOOTE.

(To be continued.)

CHRISTIANITY AND CIVILISATION.

Christianity claims as its own all the progress and triumphs due to civilisation. A sufficient refutation is found in Abysinnia where Christianity has existed for over fifteen hundred years without advancing the people from semi-barbarism, because unaccompanied by those other circumstances to which progress is really due. But there is another way of disposing of the Christian claim. It is to examine the course of Christian history and see what has been actually its effects and its attitude towards science and civilisation.

For my part, I hold it as something more than a mere coincidence that the triumph of Christianity was followed by the irruption of the barbarians into the Roman Empire, and the decline of the old Roman civilisation. There are good reasons for holding it mainly responsible for these calamities. No doubt other causes contributed to the result. Constantine in setting up his capital in the East left Rome in the hands of subordinates and it tended to become little more than an outlying province of the empire. But the main cause of the fall of Rome was the decline of the Roman spirit of civic virtue and patriotism. And this had been sapped by Christianity, which turned men's thoughts from the things of the world and pointed them to the city of God instead of to the city of Rome.

Embraced by slaves Christianity directed their thoughts to realms above, leaving them here condemned to their hell on earth, their chains rivetted by iron religious terror. This is its condemnation. Jesus in a similar spirit to Mohammed had promised his followers that no man that left house, or wife, or brethren, or parents, or children for the Kingdom of God's shall who shall not receive manifold more in this time as well as eternal life in the world to come. But the promise was never implemented here on earth. Slavery lasted in Europe till eight hundred years after Constantine and in America until our own time. Take the important point of law. Hear the testimony of Lecky in his History of European Morals (vol ii., 44): "Indeed the more carefully the Christian legislation of the empire is examined, and the more fully it is compared with what had been done under the influence of Stoicism by the Pagan legislators, the more evident, I think, it will appear that the golden age of Roman law was not Christian but Pagan . . . In no respect is the greatness of the Stoic philosophers more conspicuous than in the contrast between the gigantic steps of legal reform made in a few years under their influence, and the almost insignificant steps taken when Christianity had obtained an ascendancy in the empire, not to speak of the long period of decreptitude that followed."

The attitude of Christianity towards Pagan literature was one of complete hostility. The Fathers exhorted the faithful to avoid all contact with Pagan culture, St. Antony refused when a boy to learn letters because it would bring him into two great intercourse with other lads. Under Theophilus, Primate of Alexandria, the magnificent library of the Serapion was destroyed by the monks, and Hypatia was hounded to death by St. Cyril. The fourth General Council of Carthage forbade the reading of all Pagan books, and Mosheim records that the most powerful party in the Church "considered learning and especially philosophical learning as injurious, and even destructive to true piety and goodliness." The burning of heretical works was a natural corollary to the persecution of the heretics themselves.

Protestants never realise how largely early Christianity was a monkish system finding its natural expression in retirement from a world which it believed was devoted to wickedness and would come to a speedy end. Consider the effect of numbers of the most earnest and devoted persons, who should have been productive and reproductive citizens leading lives of sterility and inactivity, saving, as they thought, their own souls, utterly regardless of the State. The ascetic, anti-worldly spirit was part and parcel of Christianity as at first promulgated. The attempt to make the best of both worlds, now so generally promulgated by modern Christians would have been rejected by those of the primitive faith as a device of the evil one. Genuine Christianity was tried during the first centuries, and its result was the breakdown of civilisation and the night of the Dark Ages. J. M. Wheeler.

Digitized by Google

THE IRISH SOUL MARKET.

To the Freethinker the existence of such a thing as a market for "souls" is a fact which, in the abstract, is calculated to excite merriment, but which, in the concrete, excites nothing but feelings of pity and disgust. It is due, perhaps, to the peculiar fancy of the Irish people for religion that we are able to maintain in Dublin a very active "soul" market indeed. It is true that people do not go about announcing "souls to sell"; and it is also true that there is no place yet that puts out the sign "Souls, damaged and sound, purchased here." But the market exists all the same, and the term "soul traffic" is a recognised word whose meaning everybody knows and understands.

The Irish "soul-hawkers" have their head-quarters in Dublin, but have branches throughout the country, chiefly in the midland counties and in the west. They are altogether Protestant, of some kind or other, as the Catholics do not engage in this sort of business, probably because of the fact that there are no poor Protestants

> "To sell their sowls
> For penny rowls,"

or for any other species of reward. The trade is in the hands of those Protestant old women, of both sexes, with more money than sense, and more bigotry than both. These subscribe their coins freely for the purchase of Catholic "souls" of a juvenile order, and for the support of the "soul" cases, or bodies, in orphanages, when the purchases are duly effected. Attention is also devoted to bribing adult Catholics into deserting their faith, and to circulating the Bible as broadcast as can be managed by paid, but very often dissolute agents. For the purchased "souls" I think that the bargain is a good one, for the bartered ones have a chance of enjoying life in a manner more comfortable than they otherwise could ever hope to experience. They become mean "cusses," however, for their training includes the development in their minds of the most intense hatred of everything Catholic, which is as different as possible from the hatred of the Freethinker for all religions, Catholic and non-Catholic alike.

These holy "soul" seekers are ghouls after a fashion. They go about by stealth, and ply their despicable trade in holes and corners, usually of an unsavory reputation. They penetrate into the slums of the city where the Catholic poor literally starve and rot, unforgotten and uncared for; and by tempting offers of coin they purchase the wretched offspring of wretched parents who cast them off in secret to the orphanages, or "Birds' Nests," while the parents who sold their little ones enjoy a square meal, or perhaps a square "drunk" on the proceeds. In case the religion of the denizens of the slums is too powerful for even starving cupidity, the "soul" merchants go their way and leave the starving wretches to rot away unpitied and unrelieved. It is "souls" they are after, and if no "souls" are to be had, then the bodies must manage to get along without the perverters' aid.

I don't know after all whether I was right in saying just now that there is something in this business to excite merriment, even from the abstract point of view. On second thoughts I am more inclined to say that it is altogether a dirty, devilish business, repulsive to the manly feelings of anybody with more than a mustard-seed order of mind. To contemplate these ghouls hovering round the fœtid dens in which the slummers of Dublin drag out their poor lives, is almost as sickening to me as to think of the vultures hovering over the Indian Towers of Silence in wait for the Parsee dead. That religious bigotry should descend to such depths makes one at times almost despair of human nature. The only redeeming feature is the comparatively better fate of the poor bartered ones. To leave the crowded, unhealthy homes, to depart from the sinks of filth and immorality, and to live henceforth amid wholesome air and wholesome, if mentally dark and bigoted, surroundings, are prospects after all that are alluring, if we put into the background the contemptible motives of the proselytisers.

The slums where the "soul" catchers ply their trade are places that it is by no means pleasant to visit. In a poor city it is inevitable that the slums should be horribly overcrowded. One half of the population of Dublin, in fact, live in a room-and-a-half for every seven individuals! Christian landlords take high rents from the odious dens in these slums; church bells innumerable clang away right in their midst everyday, and especially on Sunday; crowds of ragged dirty Catholic wretches come out of their holes on the Sabbath and piously go to thank God for his mercies to them, instead of to curse him if it was he who sent them into the world; and smug clergymen preach to them, and tell them, "blessed are the poor for theirs is the kingdom of Heaven." All very fine, indeed; but it strikes a person that these are queer folk to fill a heaven with! The neglected Catholic poor are left to their fate by the priests and the good Catholics and Protestants who extract rents from them; and they go on producing children, if they do nothing else, acting under the ruinous belief that God never sends mouths into the world without sending something also to fill them with. Yes; but this being that sends plenty of food to feed all, is not able to secure a fair division of it. But to return to the degraded denizens of the Dublin slums. I have said that they are allowed to rot in their filthy dens neglected and forgotten. Alas! it is but too true. The Catholic "soul" curers are too busy about the "souls" of those who can pay, to care for the "souls" or bodies of those who cannot.

It is only when the proselytisers are at work, or when they have bargains perfected, that the "spiritual" directors of the poor come on the scene. Besotted parents, when the money received for their offspring is spent, repent, and go with their tale of woe to their clergy. Then great efforts are made to secure the lost ones. There are police-court proceedings and High Court of Justice proceedings to compel the purchasers to give up what they have bought, and in these proceedings more money is squandered than would keep the poor people concerned in comparative luxury all their lives. But not a penny was forthcoming until the immortal "soul" of the child of the slums was endangered. There are many obstacles put in the way of these pious rescuers of lost "souls." The purchased ones are spirited away from orphanage to orphanage, and it is no easy matter to discover who is the proper person to direct a Habeas Corpus writ to. Sometimes the inmates of the orphanages are stolen away, usually by pious relatives who never cared a pin for them until their "souls" were endangered. To provide for the rescued ones, there are "homes" kept by Catholic nuns, and in connection with these it is on record that people have sold their children to the Protestants and directed them to afterwards escape to the Catholic "homes," to which they could not gain admission otherwise.

Digitized by Google

There are many amusing episodes in the tragi-comical record of this "soul" bartering business. Of these I may speak on some other occasion. For the present it must suffice to draw attention to as degrading an institution as ever existed under the cloak of the insane thing called religion.

J. O'Donovan.

THE CHAMPION MASHER.

Tune—"St. Patrick was a Gentleman."

King Solomon was a gay young spark
As ever maiden courted,
He'd wives enough to fill the ark
From foreign lands imported;
There were Moabites and Ammonites
And fair Hittite princesses,
Zidonians and sweet Edomites,
To share his fond caresses.

But still the wise king wanted more
To grace his high position,
So concubines some fifteen score
He kept up in addition;
He asked the Lord to send him wit,
And, we are told, received it;
But were it not for "Holy Writ"
We scarce could have believed it.

Full seven hundred wives he had
Besides those scores of "others";
'Twould surely drive a sane man mad
To keep a thousand mothers.
Think how he was aroused each night
To find some squaller's bottle!
No wonder sometimes he got tight—
How could he be teetotal?

With half a thousand boys to cane
And tend their education,
What wonder he called pleasures vain
And every joy vexation;
Then think upon their boots and shoes,
And dresses for each daughter;
And say what saint would scoff at booze
And pin his faith on water?

T. Clark.

HOSPITALS BEFORE CHRIST.

The first real hospital was one situated at Epidaurus, and dedicated to Æsculapius. This hospital was in full working order five hundred years before Christ. It consisted not only of a general hospital, but of two special hospitals in addition. The Temple proper contained accommodation for ordinary or acute cases, and also a hydropathic establishment. In separate buildings were a lying-in hospital and a chronic hospital, and to the latter the aged and infirm, and those believed to be in articulo mortis, were admitted. The priests of Saturn in Egypt treated people for lunacy 1500 years before Christ. This last fact is important, because we find that under them lunacy was considered as a disease not to be repressed, but as one to be overcome by kindness and skilled treatment, and the temples of Saturn combined much that is now to be met with in our best lunatic asylums. These hospitals and asylums were founded on the pay principle, for no one who resorted to them had so little self-respect as to desire to obtain free medical relief, and all took care to compensate those at whose hands they received treatment and benefit. There were home hospitals at Rome 250 years before Christ, called Tabernæ Medicæ, which at first only contained consulting rooms, where the physician used to see out-patients on payment. After experience it was found that there were many cases that could be better treated if they were constantly under observation. So rooms were built for the reception of in-patients as annexes to the Tabernæ, where paying patients were admitted and treated successfully. This is a very interesting point, because these Tabernæ included all the branches of our present hospitals—i.e., an out-patient department, an in-patient department, consulting rooms, and hospital accommodation for paying patients; but all those who attended—i.e., both the in-patients and out-patients—had to pay for the treatment they received.—The Hospital.

ACID DROPS.

The London Diocesan Conference had a wrangle over the Revised Version of the Bible. The Rev. D. White moved that the Houses of Convocation should be memorialised to take steps to secure the introduction of the Revised Version into the public service of the Church. His resolution, however, was lost. The fact is, the Church is prompted by instinct to keep the old Version, notwithstanding its many errors. The new Version would unsettle ancient dogmas, and dethrone many a regal text. It would also set people thinking too much. While they were getting up a reverence for the new Bible the carnal spirit of reason would have its fling, and the result might be very unfortunate. On the whole we rather sympathise with the Church. As the infallible Word of God the Bible is a long lie from beginning to end, and a few thousand blunders in the translation could not make it worse.

"Religion," says Louise Michel, "does not interest me. I feel no animosity. I simply do not care for it." Louise's animosity is reserved for the rich. She does not seem to see that religion is at the bottom of the misery that nearly drives her mad.

The Worcestershire Echo finds an argument for Christianity in Joseph Merrick, "the elephant man" who died recently at the London Hospital. Poor Merrick is said to have been so hideous that seeing him men turned sick with loathing, and woman fainted, so that he hardly dared to venture abroad even by night. Exhibited in an East-end show, his visitors commonly enough shrieked and ran out as soon as the curtain was drawn. By the kindness of Mr. Treves, one of the surgeons of the London Hospital, he was taken to that institution, where a special room was built for him in a remote wing of the building. The story, to us, is another illustration that in human science and human sympathy lies the only providence for man.

Here was a human being sent, on the Christian theory, by his heavenly father into this world so misshapen as to be a burden to himself and a terror to others. His heavenly father did nothing for him. Brutal Christians ill-used him, when science and sympathy, fortunately stepped in to mitigate a lot with which God had cursed him.

At a church in the Isle of Man the clergyman "published the banns" for half a dozen couples, and the clerk then gave out the hymn—

Mistaken souls who dream of Heaven,
And think themselves secure.

The Rev. Horace Elliott inquires in the Church Times "why so few men are seen in the majority of our churches," and finds the disparity in their numbers most alarming. Is it not largely because men have outgrown the creeds and cannot be caught by the emotional fervor which attracts so many women?

How these Christians love each other! The Nonconformist accuses the country clergy of boycotting Dissenters, and the Anti-Liberation Society, in its leaflet No. xvi., entitled "Dissenting Mendicity," accuses the Dissenters of turning their chapels into palaces of Mammon, and asserts that "ethical novelty was never more industriously pursued than it is in our day in the chapels of our own modern Separatists."

The enterprising New York World took a census of the number of children in 300 families in Fifth Avenue, the fashionable quarter where Colonel Ingersoll resides, and found that there were 91 children under 10 years of age, and six children was the total number born within the last twelve months. It also took a census of 300 families in Cherry Hill, the lowest Irish quarter, and found 660 children under 10, and 111 born within the past year. There is more food for meditation in these figures than in any sermon we ever heard.

Louisville is to publicly "thanksgive" for the tornado. If God spares us a calamity we publicly thank him; if he visits it upon us, all the more we thank him. In the latter case it brings bereavement to the Church and is worth to priestcraft all it costs the stricken. Hence these thanks.—Ironclad Age.

Digitized by Google

The Rev. F. A. Gace, vicar of St. Barling, Essex, is a sensitive gentleman. He described Nonconformists as heretics, Atheists, and idolators, and in return a Nonconformist, Mr. Lockwood, called him a bigot and likened him to a mad bull. This induced the reverend gentleman to bring an action for libel, but the jury found for the defendant with cost. No doubt Mr. Gace will be more careful in future, and commend his enemies to the wrath of the Lord of Hosts.

James Rae, an elder and session clerk in Rychill United Presbyterian Church, Dundee, committed suicide through financial difficulties—not through Atheism, Mr. Talmage.

W. E. Reid, the spiritist medium who conducted a spiritual post-office and pretended to give replies from spirits to letters sent to him, has been tried and found guilty of using the United States mails for purposes of fraud.

The Rev. Thomas Smith, residing near Shrewsbury, fell down dead after addressing a meeting of the Church of England Working Men's Protestant Union. Catholics may deem this "a judgment." as it would be generally interpreted in the case of a Freethought lecturer.

The striking gear of the clock of St. Peter's Church, Colchester, weighing about half a ton, dropped from the tower on Sunday, and fell in the porch, through which some people had passed some few minutes earlier. Providence saved them, but considerably damaged the church entrance.

Christ Schweinfurth, the new Messiah at Rockford, Illinois, seems to prefer travelling on the well-used lines of religious fanaticism rather than to startle the world by originality. His confession of faith is: first, to acknowledge him as the only savior; second, to promise perfect obedience; third, to deny yourself, which means give up money, lands and family to him, receiving in return promises of post-mortem value. Quite the same old game, unaltered since the days of the apostles!

At Demerara the Rev. Mr. Kelshall, Wesleyan minister, has raised a commotion by his denunciations of a native religious dance known as the "Long Tom Dance." Formerly the ministers used to recognise the ancient institution of Long Tom, and join in if they could find a comely partner. Mr. Kelshall is more Puritanical, though it may be doubted if the Long Tom dance is anyway as objectionable as the dance of David before the ark of the Lord, clad only in a linen ephod, much to the disgust of one of his wives.

A German photographer was arrested at Constantinople for breaking the Koran law against idolatry by making likenesses. But for his nationality he would have been condemned to death; as it is he has to leave the city of the faithful.

The committee of the Royal United Hospital, Bath, explain that they advertise for a nurse who must be a member of the Church of England, because they already have a chaplain of that persuasion. and the nurses are expected to attend his services. Yet they appeal for subscriptions to all the community.

England pays £300 a year for an Anglican chaplain at Vienna. This gentleman is supposed to provide for the spiritual wants of the English residents in that city. We have no objection to his doing so, but they should pay for their own edification. In religious matters, at any rate, John Bull is about the biggest fool in creation. He pays, and pays, and pays, and is positively humiliated when the leeches don't suck with all their might.

A vehement discussion is going on as to whether Christ quoted from the Old Testament according to the knowledge of his time, or made use of his omniscience. Canon Liddon declares in favour of Christ's absolute infallibility. But how can that be sustained? The Gospel says he increased in wisdom as well as in stature, and increasing in wisdom is not the mark of an infallible being.

The Christian World gives a summary of Mr. Gladstone's article on Creation, but does not venture on a word of criticism. In such a case it finds discretion the better part of valor.

The Western Morning News thinks that "Mr. Bradlaugh was not very far wrong when, on resigning his official position among the Secularists, he warned them that the next struggle would be with Rome." Our contemporary may find that Mr. Bradlaugh is right on many other matters.

Cardinal Manning is appealing for fresh funds to support a training college for his clergy. He says that the rapid spread of Catholicism causes a demand for more priests than can at present be supplied. It appears that the Irish priests are gradually being drafted from London and their places taken by English priests who have nearly all come over from the Anglican Church. Freethinkers should lay these facts to heart, and brace themselves for the coming struggle.

The Rev. J. Mc Neill, who is described as an "eagle" in the Methodist Times, while holding forth in the Central Hall had occasion to quote from the Psalms. He began, "David said." and then, pulling himself up, remarked, "In these critical days we may not say that David wrote the Psalms. We will therefore say 'The man who wrote the Psalms said.' The critics can't put us out of that." Yes they can, though. The Psalms were written by several hands, and Mr. McNeill must say "The men who wrote the Psalms."

Bigotry at Woolwich is discriminating. The Assembly Rooms were refused for Mr. Foote's recent lecture, but they have been let for the Rev. Hugh R. Baker's reply. We hope the reverend gentleman is proud of his co-religionists.

The Woolwich friends asked Mr. Foote to come and oppose Mr. Baker, but they will see from his engagement list that he was lecturing that evening at Milton Hall. Mr. Foote will be happy to meet Mr. Baker in a set debate.

Speaking at Islington, the Rev. T. E. Slater, an Indian missionary, said that "the hill tribes, who represent the lowest scale of civilisation in India, are very simple people, and much more likely to receive the Gospel than the higher races." What a splendid tribute to the Gospel! It cannot convert the higher races, but it gets on very well with the lower races and simple people. Yes, and the simpler the better.

Mr. Slater wound up with a skilful appeal for support for the missionaries. Unless they made haste, he said, India would be "over-run by scepticism, rationalism, and deism." Evidently it is a stiff race between God Almighty and his own creatures. Of course this sounds blasphemous, but Mr. Slater is responsible for it. For our part, we should bet three to one on Rationalism. When the subtle Hindoo gets rid of his old religion, he doesn't usually take another not half as fascinating. He goes right over to Freethought.

Canon Cheyne asks us to interpret the sayings of Christ "with the breadth conceded to poetry." One of them, at any rate, namely that about eunuchs, is broad enough already.

Mr. Bellamy's Socialist romance, Looking Backward, being popular, a clergyman advertised a discourse with this title. His congregation was treated to a sermon on Lot's wife.

The myth of Lot's wife, by the way, doubtless arose from natural salt pillars near the Dead Sea, Dean Stanley says: "A great mass of legends and exaggerations, partly the cause and partly the result of the old belief that the cities were buried in the Dead Sea, has been gradually removed in recent years."

Now traveller after traveller visits the Dead Sea region, but nearly all omit to follow the injunction of Jesus to "Remember Lot's wife." They seem to think it best to forget her. The story is such a palpable legend that no modern man of repute will venture to endorse it, though it and directed them to afterwards escape to the Catholic "homes," to which they could not gain admission otherwise.

Digitized by Google

There are many amusing episodes in the tragi-comical record of this "soul" bartering business. Of these I may speak on some other occasion. For the present it must suffice to draw attention to as degrading an institution as ever existed under the cloak of the insane thing called religion.

J. O'Donovan.

THE CHAMPION MASHER.

Tune—"St. Patrick was a Gentleman."

King Solomon was a gay young spark
As ever maiden courted,
He'd wives enough to fill the ark
From foreign lands imported;
There were Moabites and Ammonites
And fair Hittite princesses,
Zidonians and sweet Edomites,
To share his fond caresses.

But still the wise king wanted more
To grace his high position,
So concubines some fifteen score
He kept up in addition;
He asked the Lord to send him wit,
And, we are told, received it;
But were it not for "Holy Writ"
We scarce could have believed it.

Full seven hundred wives he had
Besides those scores of "others";
'Twould surely drive a sane man mad
To keep a thousand mothers.
Think how he was aroused each night
To find some squaller's bottle!
No wonder sometimes he got tight—
How could he be teetotal?

With half a thousand boys to cane
And tend their education,
What wonder he called pleasures vain
And every joy vexation;
Then think upon their boots and shoes,
And dresses for each daughter;
And say what saint would scoff at booze
And pin his faith on water? T. Clark.

HOSPITALS BEFORE CHRIST.

The first real hospital was one situated at Epidaurus, and dedicated to Æsculapius. This hospital was in full working order five hundred years before Christ. It consisted not only of a general hospital, but of two special hospitals in addition. The Temple proper contained accommodation for ordinary or acute cases, and also a hydropathic establishment. In separate buildings were a lying-in hospital and a chronic hospital, and to the latter the aged and infirm, and those believed to be in articulo mortis, were admitted. The priests of Saturn in Egypt treated people for lunacy 1500 years before Christ. This last fact is important, because we find that under them lunacy was considered as a disease not to be repressed, but as one to be overcome by kindness and skilled treatment, and the temples of Saturn combined much that is now to be met with in our best lunatic asylums. These hospitals and asylums were founded on the pay principle, for no one who resorted to them had so little self-respect as to desire to obtain free medical relief, and all took care to compensate those at whose hands they received treatment and benefit. There were home hospitals at Rome 250 years before Christ, called Tabernæ Medicæ, which at first only contained consulting rooms, where the physician used to see out-patients on payment. After experience it was found that there were many cases that could be better treated if they were constantly under observation. So rooms were built for the reception of in-patients as annexes to the Tabernæ, where paying patients were admitted and treated successfully. This is a very interesting point, because these Tabernæ included all the branches of our present hospitals—i.e., an out-patient department, an in-patient department, consulting rooms, and hospital accommodation for paying patients; but all those who attended—i.e., both the in-patients and out-patients—had to pay for the treatment they received.—The Hospital.

ACID DROPS.

The London Diocesan Conference had a wrangle over the Revised Version of the Bible. The Rev. D. White moved that the Houses of Convocation should be memorialised to take steps to secure the introduction of the Revised Version into the public service of the Church. His resolution, however, was lost. The fact is, the Church is prompted by instinct to keep the old Version, notwithstanding its many errors. The new Version would unsettle ancient dogmas, and dethrone many a regal text. It would also set people thinking too much. While they were getting up a reverence for the new Bible the carnal spirit of reason would have its fling, and the result might be very unfortunate. On the whole we rather sympathise with the Church. As the infallible Word of God the Bible is a long lie from beginning to end, and a few thousand blunders in the translation could not make it worse.

"Religion," says Louise Michel, "does not interest me. I feel no animosity. I simply do not care for it." Louise's animosity is reserved for the rich. She does not seem to see that religion is at the bottom of the misery that nearly drives her mad.

The Worcestershire Echo finds an argument for Christianity in Joseph Merrick, "the elephant man" who died recently at the London Hospital. Poor Merrick is said to have been so hideous that seeing him men turned sick with loathing, and woman fainted, so that he hardly dared to venture abroad even by night. Exhibited in an East-end show, his visitors commonly enough shrieked and ran out as soon as the curtain was drawn. By the kindness of Mr. Treves, one of the surgeons of the London Hospital, he was taken to that institution, where a special room was built for him in a remote wing of the building. The story, to us, is another illustration that in human science and human sympathy lies the only providence for man.

Here was a human being sent, on the Christian theory, by his heavenly father into this world so misshapen as to be a burden to himself and a terror to others. His heavenly father did nothing for him. Brutal Christians ill-used him, when science and sympathy, fortunately stepped in to mitigate a lot with which God had cursed him.

At a church in the Isle of Man the clergyman "published the banns" for half a dozen couples, and the clerk then gave out the hymn—

Mistaken souls who dream of Heaven,
And think themselves secure.

The Rev. Horace Elliott inquires in the Church Times "why so few men are seen in the majority of our churches," and finds the disparity in their numbers most alarming. Is it not largely because men have outgrown the creeds and cannot be caught by the emotional fervor which attracts so many women?

How these Christians love each other! The Nonconformist accuses the country clergy of boycotting Dissenters, and the Anti-Liberation Society, in its leaflet No. xvi., entitled "Dissenting Mendicity," accuses the Dissenters of turning their chapels into palaces of Mammon, and asserts that "ethical novelty was never more industriously pursued than it is in our day in the chapels of our own modern Separatists."

The enterprising New York World took a census of the number of children in 300 families in Fifth Avenue, the fashionable quarter where Colonel Ingersoll resides, and found that there were 91 children under 10 years of age, and six children was the total number born within the last twelve months. It also took a census of 300 families in Cherry Hill, the lowest Irish quarter, and found 660 children under 10, and 111 born within the past year. There is more food for meditation in these figures than in any sermon we ever heard.

Louisville is to publicly "thanksgive" for the tornado. If God spares us a calamity we publicly thank him; if he visits it upon us, all the more we thank him. In the latter case it brings bereavement to the Church and is worth to priestcraft all it costs the stricken. Hence these thanks.—Ironclad Age.

Digitized by Google

The Rev. F. A. Gace, vicar of St. Barling, Essex, is a sensitive gentleman. He described Nonconformists as heretics, Atheists, and idolators, and in return a Nonconformist, Mr. Lockwood, called him a bigot and likened him to a mad bull. This induced the reverend gentleman to bring an action for libel, but the jury found for the defendant with cost. No doubt Mr. Gace will be more careful in future, and commend his enemies to the wrath of the Lord of Hosts.

James Rae, an elder and session clerk in Rychill United Presbyterian Church, Dundee, committed suicide through financial difficulties—not through Atheism, Mr. Talmage.

W. E. Reid, the spiritist medium who conducted a spiritual post-office and pretended to give replies from spirits to letters sent to him, has been tried and found guilty of using the United States mails for purposes of fraud.

The Rev. Thomas Smith, residing near Shrewsbury, fell down dead after addressing a meeting of the Church of England Working Men's Protestant Union. Catholics may deem this "a judgment," as it would be generally interpreted in the case of a Freethought lecturer.

The striking gear of the clock of St. Peter's Church, Colchester, weighing about half a ton, dropped from the tower on Sunday, and fell in the porch, through which some people had passed some few minutes earlier. Providence saved them, but considerably damaged the church entrance.

Christ Schweinfurth, the new Messiah at Rockford, Illinois, seems to prefer travelling on the well-used lines of religious fanaticism rather than to startle the world by originality. His confession of faith is: first, to acknowledge him as the only savior; second, to promise perfect obedience; third, to deny yourself, which means give up money, lands and family to him, receiving in return promises of post-mortem value. Quite the same old game, unaltered since the days of the apostles!

At Demerara the Rev. Mr. Kelshall, Wesleyan minister, has raised a commotion by his denunciations of a native religious dance known as the "Long Tom Dance." Formerly the ministers used to recognise the ancient institution of Long Tom, and join in if they could find a comely partner. Mr. Kelshall is more Puritanical, though it may be doubted if the Long Tom dance is anyway as objectionable as the dance of David before the ark of the Lord, clad only in a linen ephod, much to the disgust of one of his wives.

A German photographer was arrested at Constantinople for breaking the Koran law against idolatry by making likenesses. But for his nationality he would have been condemned to death; as it is he has to leave the city of the faithful.

The committee of the Royal United Hospital, Bath, explain that they advertise for a nurse who must be a member of the Church of England, because they already have a chaplain of that persuasion, and the nurses are expected to attend his services. Yet they appeal for subscriptions to all the community.

England pays £300 a year for an Anglican chaplain at Vienna. This gentleman is supposed to provide for the spiritual wants of the English residents in that city. We have no objection to his doing so, but they should pay for their own edification. In religious matters, at any rate, John Bull is about the biggest fool in creation. He pays, and pays, and pays, and is positively humiliated when the leeches don't suck with all their might.

A vehement discussion is going on as to whether Christ quoted from the Old Testament according to the knowledge of his time, or made use of his omniscience. Canon Liddon declares in favour of Christ's absolute infallibility. But how can that be sustained? The Gospel says he increased in wisdom as well as in stature, and increasing in wisdom is not the mark of an infallible being.

The Christian World gives a summary of Mr. Gladstone's article on Creation, but does not venture on a word of criticism. In such a case it finds discretion the better part of valor.

The Western Morning News thinks that "Mr. Bradlaugh was not very far wrong when, on resigning his official position among the Secularists, he warned them that the next struggle would be with Rome." Our contemporary may find that Mr. Bradlaugh is right on many other matters.

Cardinal Manning is appealing for fresh funds to support a training college for his clergy. He says that the rapid spread of Catholicism causes a demand for more priests than can at present be supplied. It appears that the Irish priests are gradually being drafted from London and their places taken by English priests who have nearly all come over from the Anglican Church. Freethinkers should lay these facts to heart, and brace themselves for the coming struggle.

The Rev. J. Mc Neill, who is described as an "eagle" in the Methodist Times, while holding forth in the Central Hall had occasion to quote from the Psalms. He began, "David said." and then, pulling himself up, remarked, "In these critical days we may not say that David wrote the Psalms. We will therefore say 'The man who wrote the Psalms said.' The critics can't put us out of that." Yes they can, though. The Psalms were written by several hands, and Mr. McNeill must say "The men who wrote the Psalms."

Bigotry at Woolwich is discriminating. The Assembly Rooms were refused for Mr. Foote's recent lecture, but they have been let for the Rev. Hugh R. Baker's reply. We hope the reverend gentleman is proud of his co-religionists.

The Woolwich friends asked Mr. Foote to come and oppose Mr. Baker, but they will see from his engagement list that he was lecturing that evening at Milton Hall. Mr. Foote will be happy to meet Mr. Baker in a set debate.

Speaking at Islington, the Rev. T. E. Slater, an Indian missionary, said that "the hill tribes, who represent the lowest scale of civilisation in India, are very simple people, and much more likely to receive the Gospel than the higher races." What a splendid tribute to the Gospel! It cannot convert the higher races, but it gets on very well with the lower races and simple people. Yes, and the simpler the better.

Mr. Slater wound up with a skilful appeal for support for the missionaries. Unless they made haste, he said, India would be "over-run by scepticism, rationalism, and deism." Evidently it is a stiff race between God Almighty and his own creatures. Of course this sounds blasphemous, but Mr. Slater is responsible for it. For our part, we should bet three to one on Rationalism. When the subtle Hindoo gets rid of his old religion, he doesn't usually take another not half as fascinating. He goes right over to Freethought.

Canon Cheyne asks us to interpret the sayings of Christ "with the breadth conceded to poetry." One of them, at any rate, namely that about eunuchs, is broad enough already.

Mr. Bellamy's Socialist romance, Looking Backward, being popular, a clergyman advertised a discourse with this title. His congregation was treated to a sermon on Lot's wife.

The myth of Lot's wife, by the way, doubtless arose from natural salt pillars near the Dead Sea, Dean Stanley says: "A great mass of legends and exaggerations, partly the cause and partly the result of the old belief that the cities were buried in the Dead Sea, has been gradually removed in recent years."

Now traveller after traveller visits the Dead Sea region, but nearly all omit to follow the injunction of Jesus to "Remember Lot's wife." They seem to think it best to forget her. The story is such a palpable legend that no modern man of repute will venture to endorse it, though it is not only related in holy scriptures but was appealed to by Jesus and by many of the fathers of the Church.

Digitized by Google

The German Reichstag consists of 212 who class themselves as evangelicals, but who vary in every shade of Protestant belief; 147 Catholics, who vote and act together, 3 Reformed Catholics, 5 Jews and 20 Freethinkers. They have sanctioned the abrogation of the Law of 1874, which rendered priests liable to banishment for non-compliance with laws of the State. This shows what the Catholics can do by holding together.

Have the Blasphemy Laws no terror for the editor of the Western Figaro? The number for April 25 gives three illustrations of "Adam and Eve—a tragedy." Act I., The Forbidden Fruit, depicts a loving pair of yokels munching an apple while seated on a rail; Act II. illustrates The Fall, and Act III. The Expulsion, the farmer and his dog appearing on the scene.

The Rev. H. Lloyd Jones, having received notice to terminate his services at the Ulverstone Free Church, unburdened his mind on the subject of the duties of deacons and other matters during his sermon last Sunday. At the conclusion of his discourse the chairman of the church committee jumped up and characterised the remarks of Mr. Jones as an unwarrantable and uncalled-for personal attack on members of the committee. A regular squabble ensued in the course of which an accusation of falsehood was made against the pastor, who had to remind his congregation that they were not at a political meeting.

A conference of Wesleyan churches in New York State has condemned dancing, theatre-going, and card-playing as inconsistent with church membership. These sour fanatics are clearly of opinion that Shakespeare is incompatible with salvation, that whist means woe, and dancing damnation.

Our pious contemporary, the Christian Commonwealth, has a "Mental Troubles Column," in which we see a letter from "G. A. G.," a young fellow of eighteen who has attended atheistical lectures, read Paine's Age of Reason, "likewise productions of Ingersoll, Bradlaugh, and Foote," and finds himself drifting into utter disbelief. Our advice to him would be "Go on thinking for yourself, form your own convictions, and hold by them honestly." But very different advice is tendered to him by the Christian editor. He gases about the flowers smelling of God, and about God's name being written across the midnight sky. We fear, if "G A. G." doesn't get stronger advice from his Christian guide, philosopher, and friend, he will become "a lost soul."

The Duke of Edinburgh rubbed shoulders on Monday with the Archbishop of Canterbury and that pattern of sober piety, Sir R. N. Fowler, M.P. The Duke took the chair at the annual meeting of the "Missions to Seamen," and pleaded for bigger subscriptions. He took occasion to refer to the good work of Miss Weston at Portsmouth, and said that much good was done in the Royal Navy by such religious agencies. But of course he forgot to say that ladies like Miss Weston are allowed a free run in the service, as though they were a Government department, while every kind of petty tyranny is practised to prevent the spread of Freethought.

Poor Bishop Temple! The public really ought to present him with a gross of soft pocket-handkerchiefs to wipe his eyes with. Recently he was addressing a meeting and the poor man wept in public. "People," he said, "tell me I am overworked, but when I think of my poor, overworked clergy——" Here his lordship broke down and sobbed like a child. How pathetic! But we did not read that his lordship sobbed over the sufferings of the poor folk during the dockers' strike. He reserves his tears for his clergy, whose bread is assured, and the poorest of whom live in some degree of comfort.

Some of Bishop Temple's friends, it appears, tell him he is overworked. Have any of them told him he is overpaid?

The Rev. John Owen, a Welshman, is the new president of the Baptist Union. In his address to that body he boasted that the Welsh preachers had educated the people and rescued them from "infidelity and irreligion." But we rather fancy the task was a very simple one, for the Welsh people, owing to their comparative seclusion and their separate language, have been little under the influence of the scepticism which has pervaded the rest of Great Britain. Scientists and philosophers do not write in Welsh, and thus the inhabitants of the Principality have been left to the mercies of their ministers, who are looked upon as little God Almighties.

The Baptist President sees that what is true of Wales is far from true of England. "While admitting," the Daily News report says, "that the influence of the Christian ministry was greater to-day than it ever was, he admitted that the leaders in science and literature, as also the laboring population in great towns, were but little affected." For our part, we think the religious fanaticism of the Welsh people—which, by the way, is gradually breaking down—is a poor offset to the indifference of the working population of England, and especially to the indifference of "the leaders in science and literature."

Colonel Saunderson, the famous Orangeman, says "My chief pleasure of London is found in the Marylebone Presbyterian Church and the Book of Job." Well now, truth is strange, as Byron said—stranger than fiction. Who would have thought the heavy wit of the Irish Tory party was nourished on the Book of Job? Still, we expect he will appreciate the Book of Job even more when Home Rule is carried.

There are "ructions" at Reading. It has been discovered that the Rev. J. M. Guilding has been carrying on Confession in St. Laurence's parish church for many years. The ladies—of course the confessing souls are all of the fair sex—pour their sins into the holy ears of the man of God at the altar, the parish clerk being in the building but out of hearing. This gentleman acts as "gooseberry" to save the proprieties. Nevertheless the Reading folk don't like it, and many members of Mr. Guilding's congregation are indignant. They ought to bear in mind, however, that the Prayer Book sanctions confession, and recognises the power of the minister to "declare and pronounce to his [God's] people, being penitent, the absolution and remission of their sins."

Mr. Gladstone recently said that England will not have discharged her debt to India until she has given her the Gospel in all the length and breadth of the Empire. This is a remarkable "New Way to Pay Old Debts," and will hardly be relished by the Hindoos, who don't want our Christianity, but do want our civilisation.

Mr. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock" does not commend itself to "Schoolmaster," who writes in the Sporting Chronicle that he and most of his colleagues "feel that the time spent on these old Scripture stories is literally wasted." He thinks the English rebellion against King Charles is of more importance to English boys than the Rebellion of David against Saul. So does every man with a grain of sense in his noddle.

Some of the London papers are making strange discoveries about Mr. Bradlaugh. The Pall Mall Gazette finds that his Atheism was "accidental," while, according to the Speaker, his reply to Cunninghame Graham showed "how much has been gained by diverting his activity from Secularist agitation to political and economical matters." If we know anything of Mr. Bradlaugh he will smile at both these utterances.

Hugh Price Hughes has got into hot water with the Wesleyan missionaries in India by his statements in the Church Times as to their high living and little doing. At a recent meeting on the subject he said he had no wish to shirk any inquiry and would welcome the fullest investigation. Why does he not take the same position in reference to the Converted Atheist?

Dr. Parker seems to have had an eye on the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes when he said at the meeting of the Congregational Union that religious journalism was the hope of the Devil. It is not so very long since Dr. Parker had a journal of his own.

Digitized by Google

MR. FOOTE'S ENGAGEMENTS.

Sunday, May 4, Lecture Hall, Nelson Street, Newcastle-on-Tyne; at 11, "The Follies of Theosophy: a Reply to Mrs. Besant"; at 3, "A Defence of Atheism: a Reply to the Rev. Walter Walsh"; at 7, "An Hour with the Devil."

Monday, May 5, North Shields.
Tuesday, May 6, Stockton.
Thursday, May 8, Darlington.
Friday, May 9, Oxhill.

May 11, South Shields; 18, Hall of Science, London; 25, N. S. S. Conference.

June 1, Hall of Science, London; 8, Gladstone Radical Club and Hall of Science, London; 15, Manchester; 22, Liverpool; 29, Reading.

July 13, Hall of Science; 27, Hall of Science.

August 31, Birmingham.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

LITERARY communications to be addressed to the Editor, 14 Clerkenwell Green, London, E.C. All business communications to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C.

THE Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the office, post free to any part of Europe, America, Canada and Egypt, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 6s. 6d.; Half Year, 3s. 3d.; Three Months, 1s. 7½d. Australia, China and Africa:—One Year, 8s. 8d.; Half Year, 4s. 4d.; Three Months, 2s. 2d. India:—One Year, 10s. 10d.; Half Year, 5s. 5d. Three Months, 2s. 8½d.

SCALE OF ADVERTISEMENTS.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 3s; Half Column, 15s.; Column, £1 10s. Special terms for repetitions.

IT being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will in future receive the number when their subscription expires in a colored wrapper.

J. SIMPSON.—Jokes are always welcome. We like to have a good stock in hand.

W. WARRY.—We are not responsible for the statements of the debaters, whose speeches were fairly reported in our columns. If you want Mr. Robertson's authority for any statement, you should apply to him direct. Address, 63 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

TOLEMAN-GARNER.—We are sorry to hear of your health being impaired and hope you will soon recover.

J. PARTRIDGE.—The date is booked.

C. BUSSIE.—We are extremely pleased to hear from you after so many years, and shall be very happy to see you again if you will send us your address. We value your congratulations.

No. 12.—Thanks for the cuttings. Glad to see you are still "pegging away."

J. COOKE writes: "I have just finished the Essence of Religion, and found it very valuable. I hope you will bring out more of Feuerbach's works." This correspondent is informed that a copy of the Dictionary of Freethinkers shall be sent as desired.

J. BURRELL.—Yes, we know Mr. Taylor personally, and can appreciate the Branch's loss.

W. LEYS.—Try to get the reverend gentleman, or one of his colleagues, to debate publicly with Mr. Foote.

T. J. MOORE.—Thanks. See "Acid Drops." We hope the Branch will remind Mr. Baker of the bigotry of his "friends."

J. SMALL.—Please send orders for literature to Mr. Forder in future.

H. NICHOLSON.—Mr. Foote is always ready to meet any representative Christian in public debate.

R. NICHOLLS.—Thanks for the N. S. S. subscription and your annual promise. Business is fairly good, and the circulation of this journal is improving. We have just set up our own composing room.

A. WHEELER.—We have already said that Guide Notices must be sent weekly. We cannot undertake to file lecture programmes.

H. HURRELL.—Pleased to hear you were delighted with our reply to Gladstone on Sunday.

J. SLYFIELD.—Cuttings are always handy.

A. F. WALDEN.—There is something in what you say. Your letter shall be considered.

W. WHEELER.—The statute against Blasphemy has never been enforced, perhaps because it was drawn too stringently. All prosecutions have been under the Common Law. We were prosecuted for "bringing the Holy Scriptures and the Christian Religion into disbelief and contempt." Legacies to Secular Societies are invalid. The Manchester friends lost £500 left by the late Mr. Spencer only a few years ago.

CIVIS.—The versification is rather stiff in the joints. Mr. Foote is quite willing to visit Brighton.

W. BOWDEN.—Mr. Foote's lectures are not reported in any paper.

H. CALASCA.—Thanks for the report.

BUSCO LA VERDAD.—Glad to hear you so enjoy the Freethinker, and that it so successfully runs the gauntlet of the Russian censorship. You are right. Our contributor was slightly mistaken. Castelar is hardly a Freethinker. We did not know that Sagasta was one. The office of Las Dominicales is 5 Cueva, Madrid.

F. SMITH.—Dr. Kinns's book is hardly worth reading, but there is no harm in your seeing for yourself.

H. W. BOLTON.—Mr. Foote did not write the article you refer to. He has no time for any writing outside the Freethought cause, and for years he has written nothing but what bore his name. We shall deal with the Lux Mundi volume when we have done with Mr. Gladstone.

B. T. HALL, political secretary of the Hatcham Liberal Club, who is himself a Secularist, desires it to be known that he has nothing to do with the refusal of the Club hall to Mr. Reynolds. The responsibility rests with the General Committee. Many Secular lecturers have spoken at the Club on politics.

PAPERS RECEIVED.—Neues Freireligioses Sonntags Blatt—Der Arme Teufel—Western Figaro—Liberator—Truthseeker—Ironclad Age—Bulletin des Sommaires—Menschenthum—Progressive Thinker—Fair Play—Freidenker—Freethought Secular Thought—People's Press—Boston Citizen—Referee—Woolwich Gazette—Echo—Keble's Margate and Ramsgate Gazette—Twentieth Century—Stockholm Dagens Nyheter—Birkenhead Advertiser—Canterbury Press—Camberwell Leader—Dalton News—Liverpool Weekly Post.

FRIENDS who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish our attention directed.

CORRESPONDENCE should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

THE FREETHOUGHT FUND.

MR. FOOTE'S appeal, as President of the National Secular Society, for funds to extend the Society's work, is being responded to by friends in various parts of the country. Some of the subscribers promise to remit annually as much as they can afford; others, who can only send a little at a time, promise to remit half-yearly or quarterly. As soon as possible a list of intending subscribers will be prepared. Meanwhile the following subscriptions are acknowledged as actually received by Mr. Foote or Mr. Forder.

Third List.

	£	s.	d.		£	s.	d.
J. Umpleby	1	1	0	H. Hurrell	0	2	6
C. B.	0	10	0	W. J. Birch	5	0	0
R. Nicholls	2	2	0	W. P. Mills	0	10	0

SUGAR PLUMS.

Whit-Sunday is approaching, and with it the National Secular Society's Conference. We hope there will be a large and representative gathering at Manchnster. Every Branch should see at once whether it can send a delegate, and make the necessary arrangements. Individual members will be welcome from all parts of the country, and they have a right to speak and vote on the important proposals which Mr. Foote will submit.

We have printed an extra supply of this week's Freethinker so that our friends may take the opportunity of circulating our reply to Mr. Gladstone among their acquaintances. We are happy to say that the Freethinker is becoming more prosperous every week, but it does not yet remunerate the editor for his work, and we hope our friends will continue to push its circulation. Every week brings us letters from persons who met with the paper by accident and have become regular subscribers.

There was a capital audience at the Hall of Science, London, on Sunday evening to hear Mr. Foote's lecture on Mr. Gladstone's article on "The Creation Story." The lecture was followed by an hour's discussion, the Gladstonian side being defended by Mr. Elflein, who returned thanks for the very fair and courteous hearing he had received.

Mr. Foote is leaving London for an eight days' lecturing tour in the North of England. He begins work at Newcastle, goes through Durham and South Northumberland during next week, lecturing every night, and winds up with three lectures at South Shields. Altogether about 700 miles' travelling and twelve lectures in nine days, besides writing for the Freethinker and attending to a lot of correspondence. Such is the easy life of a Freethought lecturer and editor.

Digitized by Google

In "Hyde Park on Sunday"—a descriptive article in the Speaker—after telling of a Christian speaker who offered to demolish all Freethinkers scientifically, the writer says, "On the place where the scientific defender of Christianity had succeeded so well, the sale of free-thought publications was also successful." We are glad to hear it.

The Stockholm Dagens Nyheter of April 22nd gives publicity to a lengthy address to the Swedish King, written from prison by V. E. Lennstrand. The publicity given to this case by the Swedish press contrasts well with the general indifference of the English papers to the imprisonment of Mr. Foote.

Not only in Sweden are the Scandinavians waking up out of their religious sleep. The last four numbers of the Svenska Folkets Tiduing (Swedish People's Journal) of Minneapolis, devote two or three editorial columns to the Church's war against science. They go over the whole ground of its opposition to astronomy, geography, geology and medicine, especially its opposition to the use of anæsthetics in labor cases; and tell again of the persecution of Galileo and the martyrdom of Bruno. The writer shows the Church's errors in the domain of economics even down to Luther's time, and quotes from that worthy as follows: "Every usurer is a thief, and ought to be hanged. I call him an usurer who lends money on interest." This is notable in a Swedish paper having many Lutheran subscribers. The paper concludes: "We see here, in great and small matters, how mankind step by step has had to struggle with unspeakable pain against the Church's despotism that was so wicked as to attempt to destroy all possibilities of human weal."

The Boston Investigator for April 2 copies from our columns, with acknowledgment, Mr. Wheeler's two articles on Rome in America and Rome in England. The good old Investigator now enters upon its sixtieth volume.

Professor C. H. Toy of Harvard University has an excellent article on "Ethics and Religion" in The Popular Science Monthly of New York. He shows that religions have only copied their ethics from what men by their unaided efforts have arrived at, and that it is very doubtful whether ethics has received any new idea from religion.

Prof. Toy says, "If the ancient Hebrews received their ethical code directly from God, whence comes it that manners were milder in Ezra's time than in the pre-exilian prophetic period, less mild in the days of David, and comparatively rude in the period of the Judges? It would be singular if the generations which stood nearest the revelation were least affected by it."

The Hospital says that the first real hospital in the world was one situated at Epidaurus, and dedicated to Æsculapius. It was in full working order five hundred years before Christ. This, however, was not really the first hospital. The Egyptians, ages before, had public establishments for the treatment of disease.

The New York Sun has had a symposium on miracles, including those of the Old and New Testament. Prof. E. D. Cope of the University of Pennsylvania, boldly ascribes them to "Careless observation, inexact recording and absolute fabrication." Mr. D. G. Thompson, president of the Nineteenth Century Club, says: "Those statements in the scriptures which set forth facts commonly styled miraculous are, in my judgment, false; their falsity coming rather from mistakes of fact made in relying upon traditions with their primitive credulity, which is seen in all eastern peoples."

Hermann, the conjuror, who joins in the symposium, gives his opinion that Moses was an excellent sleight-of-hand performer and adept prestidigitateur, who did not hesitate to use his skill in this direction to fortify and strengthen his position as leader; while Kellar, another "magician," thinks "Christ is a sun-god" and the transformation of water into wine, like the resurrection, is performed yearly.

We are informed that Freethought works are gradually creeping into the library of Toynbee Hall, and are much sought after. A short time ago it was discussed whether the Freethinker and the National Reformer should be placed on the table, and the proposal was only lost by one vote.

Mr. Toleman-Garner's list of lecturing engagements is withdrawn, but his faith in Freethought is not shaken. He is obliged for physical reasons to discontinue out-door lecturing and to confine himself to in-door engagements. Open-air lecturing tries all but the very robust, and the Freethought party is much indebted to those who do such arduous work.

The Birkenhead and Cheshire Advertiser inserts a capital letter from "True Blue" on the question "Has Christianity had its Day?" "True Blue" points out that what is admitted to be erroneous by the learned is sooner or later seen to be so by every one else. The letter is so straightforward that the editor is constrained to append a note and ask "what does he propose to substitute in its place." Fancy a man with a tumour wanting to know what he should have instead when the tumour was taken away.

The eighth annual conference of the German Freethinkers' Union will take place at Hannover from May 31st to June 2. Addresses will be given by Prof. Ludwig Büchner, Dr. A. Specht, Dr. T. Voelkel, Dr. P. A. Rüdt, and Frau Hedwig Henrich Wilhelmi.

At large meetings held in Calcutta to condemn Lord Cross's Councils Bill cries were raised of "Bradlaugh for ever."

The friends of freedom must be delighted to see that Boulangism is on its last legs in Paris. No doubt the French Republic has its failings, but it has done and is still doing a great work. It has educated France and upheld religious liberty. Under any successful reaction the latter would soon disappear.

Mr. Grant Allen has contributed two striking articles to the Pall Mall Gazette, giving an account of "The Gospel according to Herbert Spencer." This is how he sums up Spencer's teaching:—"Know yourself, and your own place in the universe about you. Fear no phantoms, but face realities. Understand your own Body, and the light cast upon it by the analogy of other bodies. Understand your own Mind, and the light cast upon it by the history and evolution of other minds. Understand the phenomena, organic or inorganic, physical or psychical, by which you are surrounded, and the laws to which they severally conform. Understand the Society of which you are a member, and learn from like analogies the origin and functions of its various parts. So, in your capacity as individual, will you govern your own path through the world aright; so, in your capacity as parent, will you produce and bring up better units for the composition of the Society in future; so, in your capacity as citizen, will you help to mould the State, of which you are a part, to ultimate conformity with Truth and Justice. In contradistinction to all the preachers of Faith—that is to say of contented and uncritical Ignorance—Mr. Spencer stands forth as the preacher of Knowledge."

Mr. Grant Allen admits that Herbert Spencer's gospel is "not a gospel for the Man in the Street. It cannot be peddled about on Sundays with drums and fifes, like General Booth's free salvation." But it has "profoundly modified every fibre of our collective brain and nerve in Europe and America."

Better late than never. Last week's Academy contained a fair report of Mr. Foote's lecture on Shelley's Religion before the Shelley Society in Easter week. The report mentions the "large audience" and describes the lecture as "exceedingly interesting."

The Camberwell Leader reports a debate at the Camberwell Liberal Institute on the subject "Has Christianity Advanced Liberty and Progress?" The negative side seems to have been well supported by Messrs. Soddy, Hartman, Wood and Veitch.

Mr. A. B. Moss's lectures were enjoyed by the Reading Freethinkers. He effectively disposed of a discourteous opponent.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Woods, late Unitarian minister, attended at the hall of the Portsmouth Branch on Sunday evening, and took part in the discussion on Vegetarianism. He said that at one time he would have hesitated to mix with Secularists in any way, but he now felt, although he differed from them, that they were helping to remove superstition.

The annual report of the Nottingham Branch shows a financial improvement. We hope the next winter season will be still more prosperous.

One of our subscribers in Russia (not the one answered in "To Correspondents") writes to thank Mr. Forder for giving him the address of a Russian Freethinker in the city he is engaged in. We don't give the name of the city for obvious reasons. Our subscriber says, "I had some difficulty in finding him. He is a Russian student who speaks English, and I have had several pleasant chats with him. He very eagerly accepted the loan of some Freethought literature, and lent me in return the prosecuted Christmas Number for 1882 (I wonder how that found its way into Russia!) and several years' Freethinkers bound complete."

The courses of Free Lectures at Camberwell and Milton Hall have not been largely attended, but most of the attendants have been strangers, and these are the persons the London Federation aims at reaching.

THE IMPROVED MAN.

THE improved man will be in favor of universal liberty—that is to say, he will be opposed to all kings and nobles, to all privileged classes. He will give to all others the rights that he claims for himself. He will neither bow nor cringe, nor accept bowing and cringing from others. He will be neither master nor slave, neither prince nor peasant—simply man.

He will be the enemy of all caste, no matter whether its foundation be wealth, title or power, and of him it will be said: "Blessed is that man who is afraid of no man and of whom no man is afraid."

The improved man will be in favor of universal education. He will believe it the duty of every person to shed all the light he can, to the end that no child may be reared in darkness. By education he will mean the gaining of useful knowledge, the development of the mind along the natural paths that lead to human happiness.

He will not waste his time in ascertaining the foolish theories of extinct peoples nor in studying the dead languages for the sake of understanding the theologies of ignorance and fear, but he will turn his attention to the affairs of life, and will do his utmost to see to it that every child has an opportunity to learn the demonstrated facts of science, the true history of the world, the great principles of right and wrong applicable to human conduct—the things necessary to the preservation of the individual and of the State, and such arts and industries as are essential to the preservation of all.

He will also endeavor to develop the mind in the direction of the beautiful—of the highest art—so that the palace in which the mind dwells may be enriched and rendered beautiful, to the end that these stones called facts may be changed into statues.

The improved man will believe only in the religion of this world. He will have nothing to do with the miraculous and supernatural. He will find that there is no room in the universe for these things. He will know that happiness is the only good, and that everything that tends to the happiness of sentient beings is good, and that to do the thing—and no other—that adds to the happiness of man is to practice the highest possible religion. His motto will be: "Sufficient unto each world is the evil thereof." He will know that each man should be his own priest, and that the brain is the real cathedral. He will know that in the realm of mind there is no authority—that majorities in this mental world can settle nothing—that each soul is the sovereign of its own world, and that it cannot abdicate without degrading itself. He will not bow to numbers or force, neither to antiquity nor custom. He, standing under the flag of nature, under the blue and stars, will decide for himself. He will not endeavor by prayers and supplications, by fastings and genuflections, to change the mind of the "infinite" or alter the course of nature, neither will he employ others to do these things in his place. He will have no confidence in the religion of idleness, and will give no part of what he earns to support parson or priest, archbishop or pope. He will know that honest labor is the highest form of prayer. He will spend no time in ringing bells or swinging censers, or in chanting the litanies of barbarism, but he will appreciate all that is artistic—that is beautiful—that tends to refine and ennoble the human race. He will not live a life of fear. He will stand in awe neither of man nor ghosts. He will enjoy not only the sunshine of life, but will bear with fortitude the darkest days. He will have no fear of death. About the grave there will be no terrors, and his life will end as serenely as the sun rises.

The improved man will be satisfied that the supernatural does not exist—that behind every fact, every thought and dream, is an efficient cause. He will know that every human action is a necessary product, and he will also know that men cannot be reformed by punishment, by degradation, or by revenge. He will regard those who violate the laws of nature and the laws of States, as victims of conditions, of circumstances, and he will do what he can for the well-being of his fellow-men.

The improved man will not give his life to the accumulation of wealth. He will find no happiness in exciting the envy of his neighbors. He will not care to live in a palace, while others who are good, industrious, and kind are compelled to huddle in huts, and dens. He will know that great wealth is a great burden, and that to accumulate beyond the actual needs of a reasonable human being is to increase not wealth, but responsibility and trouble.

The improved man will find his greatest joy in the happiness of others, and will know the home is the real temple. He will believe in the democracy of the fireside, and will reap his greatest reward in being loved by those whose lives he has enriched.

The improved man will be self-poised, independent, candid and free. He will be a scientist. He will observe, investigate, experiment, and demonstrate. He will use his sense and his senses. He will keep his mind open as the day to the hints and suggestions of nature. He will always be a student, a learner, and a listener—a believer in intellectual hospitality. In the world of his brain there will be continuous summer, perpetual seed-time and harvest. Facts will be the foundation of his faith. In one hand he will carry the torch of truth, and with the other raise the fallen.—ROBERT G. INGERSOLL (New York World).

"This world," says the Echo, has been made green by God, and should now be made glad by man." We agree with both halves of the sentence. God has made the world very green indeed. Was it not Carlyle who said that England—Bible-reading, church-going, infidel-hating England—contained thirty millions of people, mostly fools. And what is true of England is true, and sometimes still more true, of other countries. The people are led by the nose by priests and plundered by the privileged classes, and in return for all their miseries in this life they are promised any amount of felicity in the next life. Yes, yes; God has made the world green enough. But it is no less true that the world "should now be made glad by man." And how can he do it? By studying in Nature's school; by exchanging his fancies for knowledge, his religion for science; by dismissing his hopes and fears of heaven and hell, and subduing evil and promoting good in this world.

Digitized by Google

THE FASTING PROPHET.

(From the Hebrew Chronicle.)

GALILEE and the regions around being in a state of considerable excitement regarding the alleged exploits of one Jehoshua ben Joseph, who is said to be a wonderful thaumaturgist, we sent our reporter to Galilee to ascertain for himself if possible the correctness or otherwise of the reports. The feat upon which Jehoshua has now entered has excited much noise in consequence of its being identical with that performed by the renowned prophets Moses and Elijah. He has engaged to fast for 40 days, and as a preparation thereto, it is said had been eating and drinking enormously at a marriage feast at Cana, so much so, that it is said he had a reputation as a glutton and wine-bibber.

Our reporter had some difficulty in discovering the wonder-worker's quarters, for he had located himself in a wilderness. Being at length directed to the spot by a hairy man, who looked like a wild man of the woods, and who himself lived on locusts and wild honey, our reporter was astonished to find that no proper arrangements had been made for medical supervision. He instantly despatched messengers to Cæsarea, Capernaum and Tiberias, and secured the eminent physicians, Dr. Moses Schwindlar, Rabbi Judas Hashbaz, and Dr. Levi Shikkur. It appears from their observations that the patient, if we may so call him, is losing at the rate of 9¾oz. every 24 hours. His bulk has shrunk enormously, having decreased round the abdomen from 41⅜ in. to 21¾, at the chest from 39⅛ to 20⅞, round the thigh from 19¾ to 6⅛, and the knee from 19¾ to 15, at the calf from 11½ to 7¼; the biceps have shrunk from 7¾ to 6⅛, and the neck from 16¾ to 10⅝, while his stature shrank from 4·11¾ to 4·11½. Otherwise their bulletin is of a satisfactory character, the pulse being 78 and the temperature 96½ in the shade. As the fast has progressed he has shown signs of dementia, doubtless arising from the enfeeblement of the system. He says he has been tempted to eat stones by the devil, who has carried him up to a high mountain and stuck him on a pinnacle of a temple.

Latest Intelligence.—As the fasting prophet shows signs of utter emancipation and collapse, a number of women came and ministered to him of their substance. He swears they are angels.

OUTWARD BOUND.

On Saturday night, the 26th ult., at the "Duke of Ormonde," Prince's Street, a general meeting of members and friends was held, the room being crowded for the purpose of presenting an illuminated address to Mr. J. Taylor, upon his departure for Australia. The design and execution of the address had been entrusted to a young friend, who is exceptionally gifted, and its artistic excellence was much admired. The presentation was made by Mr. W. Wheeler on behalf of the members in a most eloquent speech, commenting upon Mr. Taylor's valuable services rendered to the Branch, and paying a tribute to his earnest work in the Secular cause. Deep regret was felt by all present at his departure, and they wished him and Mrs. Taylor health, happiness, prosperity, and long life. The reply of Mr. Taylor was most impressive. Short farewell addresses were delivered by the following gentlemen: Messrs Burrell, Ross, Johnson, Smith, Greenman, Pothozth, Frazer, and Varley (of the Central Branch). Mr. S. Ross recited an original poem written expressly for the ocoasion, and during the evening Mr. J. Stace sang a farewell ode. The evening concluded with a variety entertainment, to the success of which the following ladies and gentlemen contributed: Miss C. Woolley, whose good voice and pleasing manner were well displayed in her recital, "Nail your Colors to the Mast"; Mr. F Cullimore presiding at the piano, his humorous songs being much applauded; the ballad singing of the brothers Rous was also greatly appreciated, and our thanks are due to Messrs. Clark, Johnson, Freeman, Varley, and W. Wheeler for their singing. The evening concluded by all present singing "Auld Lang Syne," bringing to a close the most memorable evening in the history of the Westminster Branch.

OBITUARY.

Died on April 22nd, aged 27, John Cole, an active member of the Bethnal Green Branch. He had formerly been a teacher at St. Philip's Church, Bethnal Green. About twenty minutes before he died he stated that he wished his Christian friends were present that he might show them what he thought of their cowardly lies of infidel death bed scenes. His end was so quiet that his wife thought he had fallen asleep. He was respected by all who knew him.—James Neate, Hon. Sec.

Died at Paris, 22nd April, Citizen Joseph Bonier, an active French Freethinker, and founder of the "Groupe Garibaldi" of the Anti-Clerical League. He was buried without religious ceremony.

CHRISTIANITY AND VEGETARIANISM.

FREETHINKING Vegetarians are by no means scarce, and from the accounts occasionally set forth, are far from satisfied with the unreasonableness on the part of the Vegetarian Society's officials of mixing so much religion with their publications. Every issue of the Vegetarian Messenger teems with Christian matter nearly as absurd as that to be found in Prophet Baxter's Christian Herald; and although the practice has again and again been objected to by those who look upon Vegetarianism from a scientific standpoint, no improvement apparently will ever take place.

The present writer, a Vegetarian for the last ten years, has more than once written strongly to the Editor and Secretary, pointing out that Vegetarianism requires no religious aids to support its teachings, and that if the system cannot rely on scientific aids alone, the sooner it gives up the ghost the better; for it must be clear to the most careless critic that no sane person would appeal to a book so full of bloodthirstiness as the Bible is from beginning to end, in support of a system which prohibits the shedding of blood.

Freethought and Christianity are of course quite independent of Vegetarianism, and one set of teachings has as much right to be introduced into Vegetarian publications as the other; and those who do not approve of the action of one set of thinkers cramming their pet notions on religion down the throats of others in connection with a purely scientific matter, should withhold their subscriptions to the Vegetarian Society, and transfer them to a more worthy and honest institution. Our Christian friends would then probably see the folly of their onesidedness.

This is not the place to air Vegetarian views, and the remarks are made merely to call attention of non-Christian Vegetarians to the great importance of our rights being enforced in all cases; and that something might be done to bring about a more liberal spirit even in the ranks of our Vegetarian leaders who appear to be as conservative as Jehovah himself.

There are many members of the Vegetarian Society, who cannot fail to disapprove of the unfair teachings set forth by the Society: Professor Newman, and Mr. Smallman, for example; and probably some friends will pursue the question further.

Would not our money be spent to a much greater advantage by the National Secular Society for its legitimate object, than by a Society which uses its funds for purposes other than those for which they are subscribed? At any rate many of us cannot approve of money intended for the spread of Vegetarianism being used for the furtherance of false religions.

W. J. F.

In the course of an article on "Flaws in Ingersollism" in the April North American Review, the Rev. Lyman Abbott expresses surprise that the "inspiring story" of Abraham should have no attraction for Colonel Ingersoll. Abraham, it will be remembered, was commanded by the Lord to kill his son, and appears to have been willing if not anxious to obey the command. A similarly "inspiring story" now comes from Faulkton, South Dakota, to the effect that E. Eckhart, while suffering from theological dementia, stabbed his two young sons with a bread knife and cut his wife's throat. Eckhart claims that the Lord told him to commit the murder. Since this incident involves the killing of three persons instead of one, Dr. Abbott should find it three times as inspiring as the story of Abraham.—Freethought.

Parson to widow in tears: "I presume your husband had made all preparations to face his Maker?" Widow: "He had, indeed. He was insured in six different companies!"

Bishop (reproving delinquent page): "Wretched boy! Who is it sees all we do, and before whom even I am but a a crushed worm?" Page: "The missus, my lord."

Governess: "Certainly, it says in the Bible that King Solomon had seven hundred wives." Astonished child: "Did he have them all at once? Miss Smith?" Governess (hesitatingly): "Yes I think so." Astonished child (who has lately seen an auntie married): "Oh. Miss Smith, however did they all get into the church together?" And then why does it say "he slept with his fathers?"

A sailor having died at sea, the carpenter made a coffin for the corpse, but found he had no lead to sink the coffin, so he put in coals instead. A sailor stood by, laughing while the funeral service was being conducted, and being asked by the captain the meaning of his unseemly conduct, replied: "I have seen many a man going to hell, but I never saw one take his own coals with him."

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY MEETINGS.

LONDON.

Ball's Pond Secular Hall, 36 Newington Green Road, N., 7, Mr. C. J. Hunt, "Christ's Teachings"; 11.30, Kingsland Green, "Miracles."

Battersea—The Shed of Truth, Prince of Wales's Road, 7.30, a lecture. Park Gates 11.15, Mr. Calvert, "History of the New Testament Canon." Social evening every Tuesday.

Bethnal Green—Opposite "Salmon and Ball," Mr. J. Fagan, 11.15, "The Apostles' Creed."

Camberwell—61 New Church Road, S.E., 7.30, Mr. B. Hyatt, "Our Conversation as in Heaven"; 11.30, Station Road, Camberwell, "The Myth of the Ascension."

Clerkenwell Green, 11.30, Mr. F. Haslam, "Who was Jesus, and What did he Teach?"

East London—Mile End Waste, 11.30, a lecture.

Edmonton—Corner of Angel Road, 3, Lucretius Keen, "Holy Morality."

Finsbury Park (near the band-stand), 3.30, Mr. Sam. Standring, "The Greek Philosophers' 'God.'"

Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, E.C., 7.30, Mrs. Annie Besant, "Is the Bible Impregnable?"

Hyde Park, near Marble Arch; 11.15, Mr. W. Heaford, "The Sermon on the Mount." May 7, at 8, Mr. E. Calvert, "Is Matter able of Itself to Produce its Phenomena?"

Milton Hall, Kentish Town Road, N.W., 7.30, Mrs. Thornton Smith, "A Plea for Atheism."

New Southgate, Betstyle Bridge, 11.30, Mr. Sam. Standring, "Man First, God Nowhere."

Old Southgate—On the Green, 6.30, Sam Standring, "The Foolishness of Faith in God."

Victoria Park, near the fountain, 3.15, Mr. J. Marshall, "Something Personified called God."

West Ham—121 Broadway, Plaistow, 11.30, Mr. T. Thurlow, "Salvation"; 7, Mr. J. Simes, "The Fundamental Objection to Christianity"; 9, Music.

Westminster—Old Pimlico Pier, 11.30, Mr. Arthur B. Moss, "Heavenly Government."

Wood Green—Jolly Butchers' Hill, 11.30, a Freethought lecture.

Woolwich—"Sussex Arms," Assembly Room, 60 Plumstead Road (entrance, Masey Road), 7.30, Mr. A. B. Moss, "The Devil's Doom."

COUNTRY.

Birmingham—Baskerville Hall, Crescent, Mr. H. Smith, 11, "By the Grace of God I am what I am"; 7, "By the Blast of God they Perish."

Glasgow Secular Society and Branch of N. S. S, 122 Ingram Street.—6.30, Mr. McClusky, "The Moral Teachings of Christianity."

Heckmondwike—at Mr. John Rothera's, Bottoms, 2.30, a meeting.

Hull Branch—No. 2 Room, Friendly Societies' Hall, Albion Street, 6.30, Mr. G. E. C. Naewiger, "The Fourth Commandment."

Liverpool Branch N.S.S., Camden Hall, Camden Street—11, annual meeting of the Branch; Tontine Society; 7, Mr. Bergmann, "Bible Morality Unsound."

Manchester—Rusholme Road, Oxford Road, 6.30, William Russell, "Sky-pilots and Devil-dodgers."

Newcastle—Lecture Hall, Nelson Street, Mr. G. W. Foote, 11, "The Follies of Theosophy: a reply to Mrs. Besant"; 3, "A Defence of Atheism: a reply to the Rev. Walter Walsh"; 7, "An Hour with the Devil." Tea in Society's Rooms after the afternoon lecture.

Portsmouth—Wellington Hall, Southsea, 7, Mr. Charles Cater, "The Single Tax, and Why I Adhere to it."

Sheffield—Hall of Science, Rockingham Street, 7, a lecture.

South Shields—Captain Duncan's Navigation Schools, King Street, at 7, a business meeting.

LECTURERS' ENGAGEMENTS.

Arthur B. Moss, 44 Oredon Road, London, S.E. — May 4 (morning), Westminster (evening), Woolwich; 11 (morning), Camberwell; 18 (morning), Clerkenwell Green, (evening), Ball's Pond; 25 (afternoon), Regent's Park. June 1 (morning), Pimlico, (evening), Woolwich; 8 (morning), Bethnal Green; 15 (evening), Ball's Pond; 22 (morning), Clerkenwell; 29 (morning), Mile End. July 13, Mile End.

James Hooper, 11 Upper Eldon Street, Sneinton, Nottingham.—May 4, Nottingham.

H. Smith, 3 Breck Place Breck Road, Everton Road, Liverpool.—May 4, Birmingham; 11, Hanley; 25, Liverpool.

E. Stanley Jones, 3 Leta Street, City Road, Walton Liverpool.—May 11, Liverpool; 18, Failsworth. June 8, Manchester.

T. Thurlow, 7 Dickson's Villas, Rutland Road, East Ham.—May 4 (morning), Plaistow Green; 18 (morning), Mile End Waste; 25 (morning), Battersea. June 15 (morning and evening), Battersea.

PROGRESSIVE PUBLISHING CO.'S LIST.

All orders to be sent, with remittance, to R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C. Rate of postage—Orders under 3d., one halfpenny; orders under 6d. one penny. Orders over 6d., post free.

G. W. FOOTE.

	s.	d.
PRISONER FOR BLASPHEMY. Cloth	2	6
A Full History of his Three Trials and Twelve Months' Imprisonment. Copies in paper covers, soiled, 6d.
IS SOCIALISM SOUND?	1	0
Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant.
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
CHRISTIANITY AND SECULARISM	1	0
Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. In paper covers.
Superior edition in cloth	1	6
INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS	0	3
Second edition, enlarged.
Superior edition, in cloth	1	3
DARWIN ON GOD	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0
Contents:—Darwin's Grandfather—Darwin's Father—Darwin's Early Piety—Almost a Clergyman—On Board the "Beagle"—Settling at Down—Death and Burial—Purpose of Pamphlet—Some Objections—Darwin Abandons Christianity—Deism—Creation—Origin of Life—Origin of Man—Animism—A Personal God—Design—Divine Beneficence—Religion and Morality—Agnosticism and Atheism.
DEFENCE OF FREE SPEECH	0	4
Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes.
LETTERS TO JESUS CHRIST	0	4
PHILOSOPHY OF SECULARISM	0	3
THE BIBLE GOD	0	2
THE FOLLY OF PRAYER	0	2
THE IMPOSSIBLE CREED	0	2
An Open Letter to the Bishop of Peterborough on the Sermon on the Mount.
CHRISTIANITY AND PROGRESS	0	2
A Reply to Mr. Gladstone.
THE SHADOW OF THE SWORD	0	2
A moral and statistical Essay on War.
ROYAL PAUPERS	0	2
Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty.
MRS. BESANT'S THEOSOPHY	0	2
A Candid Criticism.
THEOSOPHY AND SECULARISM	0	2
A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant.
THE NEW CAGLIOSTRO	0	2
An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky.
WHAT WAS CHRIST?	0	2
A Reply to J. S. Mill.
THE DYING ATHEIST. A Story	0	1
WAS JESUS INSANE?	0	1
A searching inquiry into the mental condition of the Prophet of Nazareth.
BIBLE HEROES—First Series, in elegant wrapper ...	1	0
(1) Mr. Adam, (2) Captain Noah, (3) Father Abraham, (4) Juggling Jacob, (5) Master Joseph, (6) Joseph's Brethren, (7) Holy Moses I., (8) Holy Moses II., (9) Parson Aaron, (10) General Joshua, (11) Jephthah and Co., (12) Professor Samson. One Penny each singly.
BIBLE HEROES—Second Series, in elegant wrapper...	1	0
(13) Prophet Samuel, (14) King Saul, (15) Saint David I., (16) Saint David II., (17) Sultan Solomon, (18) Poor Job, (19) Hairy Elijah (20) Bald Elisha, (21) General Jehu, (22) Doctor Daniel, (23) The Prophets (Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Hosea); (24) St. Peter, (25) St. Paul

G. W. FOOTE and W. P. BALL.

BIBLE HANDBOOK FOR FREETHINKERS AND INQUIRING CHRISTIANS	1	4
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
Sold also in separate parts as follows—
Bible Contradictions	0	4
The Contradictions are printed in parallel columns.
2. Bible Absurdities	0	4
All the chief Absurdities from Genesis to Revelation, conveniently and strikingly arranged, with appropriate headlines, giving the point of each absurdity in a sentence.
3. Bible Atrocities	0	4
Containing all the godly wickedness from Genesis to Revelation. Each infamy has a separate headline for easy reference
4. Bible Immoralities, Indecencies, Obscenities, Broken Promises, and Unfulfilled Prophecies ...	0	4

COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

MISTAKES OF MOSES	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth	1	6
Only Complete Edition published in England
DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT	0	6
Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy.
REPLY TO GLADSTONE	0	4
With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler.
ROME OR REASON? Reply to Cardinal Manning	0	4
FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Rev. Dr. Field ...	0	2
GOD AND MAN. Second Reply to Dr. Field	0	2
THE DYING CREED	0	2
THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH	0	2
THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION	0	2
A Discussion with Hon. F. D. Courdert and Gov. S. L. Woodford.
ART AND MORALITY	0	2
DO I BLASPHEME?	0	2
THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE	0	2
THE GREAT MISTAKE	0	1
LIVE TOPICS	0	1
MYTH AND MIRACLE	0	1
REAL BLASPHEMY	0	1
SOCIAL SALVATION	0	2

Digitized by Google

NOW READY.

"THE ESSENCE OF RELIGION"

GOD THE IMAGE OF MAN—MAN'S DEPENDENCE UPON NATURE THE LAST AND ONLY SOURCE OF RELIGION.

By LUDWIG FEUERBACH.

"No one has demonstrated and explained the purely human origin of the idea of God better than Ludwig Feuerbach."
—Büchner.

"I confess that to Feuerbach I owe a debt of inestimable gratitude. Feeling about in uncertainty for the ground, and finding everywhere shifting sands, Feuerbach cast a sudden blaze in the darkness and disclosed to me the way."
—Rev. S. Baring-Gould.

Price One Shilling.

LETTERS TO THE CLERGY

FIRST SERIES.

1.—CREATION
To the Bishop of Carlisle.

2.—THE BELIEVING THIEF
To the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

3.—THE ATONEMENT
To the Bishop of Peterborough.

4.—OLD TESTAMENT MORALITY
To the Rev. E. R. Conder, D.D.

5.—INSPIRATION
To the Rev. R. F. Horton, M.A.

6.—CREDENTIALS OF THE GOSPEL
To the Rev. Prof. J. A. Beet.

7.—MIRACLES
To the Rev. Brownlow Maitland, M.A.

8.—PRAYER
To the Rev. T. Teignmouth Shore, M.A.

By G. W. FOOTE.

128pp., in Wrapper. ONE SHILLING.

2d. each. PARTS I. and II. 2d. each.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC?

NEW PAMPHLETS BY
COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

---

32 pages. NOW READY. Price 3d.

CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS

A Noble Plea for a Rational Treatment of Prisoners and a Humane Jurisprudence,

BY COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

Price 1d. Price 1d.

A LIE IN FIVE CHAPTERS.

THE REV. HUGH PRICE HUGHES'S CONVERTED ATHEIST

By G. W. FOOTE.

Should be circulated by Freethinkers who desire to see this pious fraud exposed as widely as possible.

A

BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY OF FREETHINKERS OF ALL AGES AND NATIONS.

BY

J. M. WHEELER.

Price 7/6 Handsomely bound in cloth. Price 7/6

W. J. Rendell's "WIFE'S FRIEND."

Recommended in "Law of Population," and "Wife's Hand Book." Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell Street Clerkenwell, and supplied per post, 2s. dozen. For particulars of this Malthusian discovery send stamped envelope. Higginson's Syringe, with vertical and reverse current, 3s. 6d. and 4. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. All other Malthusian Appliances. All prices post free.

HARTNOLL,

ENGLISH AND FOREIGN CHEMIST,
1A PICCADILLY
(Under the London Pavilion Music Hall),
LONDON, W.

Hartnoll's Specialities, Appliances and Medicated Preparations are world-renowned.

Spiral, Douche and Latest Improved Syringes.

ESTABLISHED OVER 50 YEARS.

RUBBER STAMPS.

Your Monogram to mark Linen or Paper; two letters, 1s.; three letters, 1s. 6d.; any Name, 1s. 6d. Box, Pad and Ink included. All kinds of Stamps. Patterns free. Carriage 2d. extra. F. N. IRETON and CO., 92 Gracechurch Street, London. Agents wanted.

GOD AND THE STATE

A New Pamphlet by
COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

Twopence. Twopence.

THE IMPOSSIBLE CREED

An Open Letter to the
BISHOP OF PETERBOROUGH.
By G. W. FOOTE.

Price Twopence. Price Twopence.

THE BIBLE AND EVOLUTION.

By ARTHUR B. MOSS.
Handsomely Bound in Cloth. 2s. 6d.

The "National Reformer" says: "The author has long won his spurs as a Freethought lecturer, etc. . . one of his best sustained literary efforts."

The "Freethinker" says: "It is by far the best production of Mr. Moss's pen, and we heartily recommend it as an excellent text-book of the subject. The matter is good and the style is bright. The reader is carried along on an easy flowing stream of science, history, ethics and common sense."

Watts and Co., 17 Johnson's Court; Progressive Publishing Co.

TO MARRIED PEOPLE.

A New and Enlarged
ILLUSTRATED LIST OF MALTHUSIAN APPLIANCES AND SPECIALITIES
Will be forwarded per return of post on receipt of 1d. stamp.

DAVIES, CHEMIST,
101 PARK LANE, LEEDS.

Marriage and Divorce

AN AGNOSTIC'S VIEW.
BY COL. R. G. INGERSOLL.
Price Twopence.

THE

FAMILY LIMIT

1s. 6d. per doz., post free.

For further Particulars send stamped directed envelope to

A. MOSS, 36 Upper Park Street,
ISLINGTON, LONDON, N.

GRATIS.

AN ILLUSTRATED 16-PAGE PAMPHLET, containing extracts from the utterances of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Manchester; the Revs T. R. Malthus, A. E. Whatham, M. J. Savage, Leonard Dawson, — Lawton, H. R. Haweis; the following Doctors:—Allbutt, Allinson, Armstrong, Drysdale, Pye Chavasse, E. B. Foote, Nicholls, Wilder, Raciborski, Napheys and Reamy. Also Plato, Aristotle, Sismondi, Huxley, Mill, and numerous others. Should be read by every married and marriageable person. Sent on receipt of stamped addressed envelope by J. R. HOLMES, Hanney, Wantage, Berks.

TESTIMONIALS (Extracts from).

"The one you sent me some months since is

Quite Worn Out

with being lent to so many friends."

"Some of us have paid five shillings for less than one-tenth of the information."

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each, upper or lower set, £1. Best quality, 4s. each, upper or lower, £2, completed in four hours when required, repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18s. gold 15s.; stopping, 2s. 6d. extraction, 1s. painless by gas, 5s.

Printed and Published by G. W. Foote, at 28 Stonecutter Street Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

Vol. X.—No. 19.] SUNDAY, MAY 11, 1890. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

MR. GLADSTONE ON THE CREATION STORY.

[CONTINUED.]

MR. GLADSTONE makes the extraordinary assertion that "no moral mischief ensues because some have supposed the days of creation to be pure solar days of twenty-four hours." Certainly the belief in a literal six-days' creation does not prompt a man to pick pockets or commit adultery. But is there no "moral mischief" in hindering the progress of science, upon which so much of our well-being depends? Is there no moral mischief in the persecution of those who are afterwards seen to be our benefactors? Was there no moral mischief in the intimidation of Galileo? Was there no moral mischief in the murder of Giordano Bruno? Was there no moral mischief in the early prejudices of Sir Charles Lyell against what he subsequently recognised as truth, or in the insults heaped upon him when he proclaimed it to the world? Was there no moral mischief in the bigotry with which the clergy as well as their fanatical dupes treated the teachings of Darwin? Is there no moral mischief in wasting the working man's precious day of leisure, every week, in obedience to a Sabbatarian law which is founded on the literal Story of Creation?

We would also observe that Mr. Gladstone is extremely vague, and, in so far as he is clear, inaccurate, in his remarks on the Sabbath. "It seems also probable," he says, continuing his lessons of the Mosaist, "that the Creation Story was intended to have a special bearing on the great institution of the day of rest, or Sabbath, by exhibiting it in the manner of an object lesson." Now in the whole of the early Jewish history there is no trace of a Sabbath. We find it in the Mosaic Law, which is a post-exile concoction, but not in the annals of the Judges and Kings. Indeed, the very reference in the Fourth Commandment to "the stranger within thy gates," shows that it was not delivered to desert nomads, but to a people settled down in Palestine and dwelling in walled and fortified cities. For these reasons, or partly for these reasons, Paley maintains that God "blessed the seventh day and sanctified it" by a sort of historical anticipation. But Mr. Gladstone would have us believe that "Assyrian researches" have revealed traces of some primitive "institution or command." This is, however, the veriest perverseness. What Assyrian researches have shown is that the number seven was held sacred by the masters of the Jews, and that they had a Sabbath, or day of rest, long before the chosen people. Here again the Jews were not inventors, but borrowers; and the primeval sanctification of the Sabbath is one of the many impostures of their priestly annalists.

The Egyptians had a periodic day of rest; namely, one day in every ten; but it appears that they were also acquainted with the seven-days division of time. The Assyrians, the Romans, and other ancient nations had likewise their periods of rest and work. And why? For the simple reason that the leaders of a civilisation based upon slavery discovered the necessity of a periodic rest to the laborer. Without it his energies decayed. And that the time of rest, whatever it was, should be associated with mythical events, was only natural in a society in which every part of life was under a religious sanction.

It is also clear that the sacredness of the number seven, in Assyria as in scores of other parts of the world, sprang out of natural reasons. Moon worship precedes sun worship because man's attention is excited by the changeable rather than the regular. It was discovered that the full lunation occupied twenty-eight days. That number was halved, and the result was fourteen. That number was halved again, and the result was seven. But this number could not be halved, or divided in any way; it was indivisible and mysterious, and therefore sacred. Then there were the seven planets, from which the days were named, and this not only doubled but squared the sacredness of the number seven. But behind this there is something older and more vital. The covering of the generative organs is often neglected by the males among savages, but scarcely ever among the females. That covering was the beginning of decency, and it rose from the fact of menstruation. Now the sexual periodicities throughout the whole animal world, including the human race, run in seven days or multiples of seven days. Let this truth, therefore, be connected with the indivisible quarter of the moon's total phases, and the number of the planets, and you have an importance, a mystery, and therefore a sacredness attaching to the number seven, which could never attach to another number. This is the reason why the number seven appears and reappears in all religious systems. It is found among savages, and it asserts its ancient and august claims in the teachings of Theosophy, which talks learnedly, but after all superstitiously, of the sevenfold nature of man. Thus religion is like the mythical snake of eternity. Extremes meet, and the head and the tail are united.

There is still another aspect of the question. It is shrewdly observed by Rénan, in his Histoire du Peuple d'Israel, that the Sabbath could not have arisen among nomads. Except when they shift their tents, and travel to fresh pastures, they have nothing to do but to sit and watch their flocks and herds. One day is exactly like another, and a day of rest would be unintelligible. It is obvious, therefore, that the story of the primeval sanctification of the Sabbath, and its injunction in the Mosaic Law, belong to a much later period than the Exodus. They belong, in short, to the post-exile period. Every fact supports this theory, and there is not a single fact which contradicts it.

G. W. FOOTE.

(To be concluded.)

Digitized by Google

THE BOOK OF ENOCH.

"And Enoch also, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these saying, Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousands of his saints, To execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him."—Jude 14-15.

THE work appealed to as a supernatural prophecy by "the seventh from Adam," though it had the fate of being lost to Europe for a thousand years is still in existence, and of late has had considerable attention drawn to it, though it is by no means as well-known as it should be to all students of early Christianity. The Book of Enoch has had a curious fate. It was much used by the Christian writers of the first five centuries, and the earlier ones certainly regarded it as of divine authority. As the doctrine of the coming of Christ to judge the world fell into the background, or from some other cause, the work was neglected and, after the decline of literature consequent on the triumph of the Church, remained unknown till 1773, when Bruce the Abyssinian explorer brought back three copies from that country, where it forms part of the Sacred Canon standing immediately before the book of Job. He deposited a copy at Oxford, but it remained untranslated till 1821, when it was published by Dr. R. Laurence, afterwards Archbishop of Cashel whose work has been republished with an important introduction by Mr. Charles Gill, author of The Evolution of Christianity.* Irenaeus, the first father who mentions the Four Gospels, and who indeed founds the reason of their being four on the cosmology given in the book of Enoch, affirms that Enoch although a man filled the office of God's messenger to the angels (Against Heresies iv., 19.) See Enoch xv.

Tertullian, in his treatise "On Female Dress," in which he traces feminine ornamentation to the conjunction of daughters of men with fallen angels, asserts (bk. i., ch. 3) that "the Scripture of Enoch was published before the deluge," and argues that it was preserved by Noah, and is authoritative although not accepted by the Jews. He says:

"But since Enoch in the same Scripture has preached likewise concerning the Lord, nothing at all must be rejected by us which pertains to us; and we read that 'every Scripture suitable for edification is divinely inspired" [see 2 Tim. iii., 16]. By the Jews it may now seem to be rejected for that very reason, just like the other portions nearly which tell of Christ. Nor, of course, is this fact wonderful, that they did not receive some Scriptures which spake of Him whom even in person, speaking in their presence, they were not to receive. To these considerations is added the fact that Enoch possesses a testimony in the Apostle Jude."†

Modern apologists compare the quoting of Enoch by Jude to the citation by Paul of Gentile poets (Acts xvii., 28; 1 Cor. xv., 33; Titus i., 12). Why Paul, if inspired, should quote uninspired writers, is not easy to see, but at least he describes them correctly, whereas Jude makes the mistake of saying the seventh from Adam prophesied, and indeed builds upon this prophecy his own doctrine of angelology and eschatology. The work from which he quotes is indeed a farrago of fanatical rubbish, now mainly of use as illustrating what insanity passed in the East for inspiration.

The Book of Enoch, like so many other works of the early Christian period, is a forgery. That is, it pretends to be written by Enoch the prophet, the son of Jared and the father of Methusaleh, who walked with God, while in reality it was composed in the first century before the Christian era. It was quite the fashion of that time to draw attention to religious works by affixing to them the name of some noted personage. Thus we have Ecclesiastes pretending to be the utterance of "the son of David the king in Jerusalem," though Solomon was as innocent of its composition as of that of The Wisdom of Solomon in the Apocrypha. Psalms were ascribed to David, which were written in the Maccabean period, and another work of the same time ascribed to Daniel. New Testament literature labors under similar suspicion. An approximation to the date of the Book of Enoch can be attained from its contents. It evidently arose among devout Jews, whether Chasidim or Essenes, who longed and looked forward to the restoration of the true faith and the judgment of the righteous upon the ungodly. The citation in Jude fixes a date below which it cannot be placed, and although it may be argued that different strata are embeddied in its composition, the absence of the name of Jesus or any allusion to the Roman power shows that it was all written for Jews before the Christian era, and probably from the time of the Maccabees to that of Herod.

Nevertheless the book is permeated with what we may call Christian thought. The coming of the Lord with ten thousand of his saints is indeed a central idea. The work reveals the source of many Christian dogmas and mysteries and it especially shows that Jesus in his predictions of the end of the world and cranky John of Patmos in his mad description of the same in the Apocalypse, were neither of them as as original as usually supposed. This statement is scarcely so strong as that made in a paper prepared for the Church Congress of 1888 by the Rev. Sir George William Cox, and read by the Rev. R. Healey at Manchester that year. Sir G. W. Cox contended that the eschatological matters in the epistles bearing the name of Jude and Peter was obtained from the Book of Enoch—that the imagery of the Apocalypse and the matter of the discourses in Matt. xxiv. and xxv. was obtained from the same source, and that these discourses were therefore not uttered as given to us, and were probably not uttered at all. This statement was greeted with loud hisses at the Manchester Church Congress, but all the clerical cackle in Christendom could not now remove the evidences that the New Testament is honeycombed with ideas and phrases founded on a work admittedly spurious.

In proof of this assertion we can only afford space for a few extracts, followed by New Testament references, both of which might be largely multiplied.

Enoch xliv. 4: "And a voice was heard from heaven."—See Matt. iii. 17.

En. vi. 9: "The elect shall possess light, joy and peace, and they shall inherit the earth."—Matt. v. 5.

En. xcvi. 6, 7, 25: "Woe unto you, sinners, who say, 'We are rich, possess wealth, and have acquired everything which we can desire. Now then will we do whatsoever we are disposed to do whatsoever we are disposed to do; for we have amassed silver; our barns are full.' . . . They shall surely die suddenly."—Luke xii.

En. xlvi. 2: "This is the Son of man . . . who will reveal all the treasures of that which is concealed."—Col. ii., 3.

En. ix., 3, 4: "Then they said to their Lord, the King: Thou art Lord of lords, God of gods, King of kings. The throne of thy glory is for ever and ever, and for ever and ever is thy name sanctified and glorified. Thou hast made all things; thou possessest power over all things; and all things are open and manifest before thee. Thou beholdest all things, and nothing can be concealed from thee."—Rev. iv. 11.

En. lxxix.: "In the days of sinners the years shall be shortened, . . . and every thing done on earth shall be subverted and disappear in its season. . . In those days the fruits of the earth shall not flourish in their season, ... heaven shall stand still. The moon shall change its laws, and not be seen at its proper period, . . . and all the classes of the stars shall be shut up against sinners."

En. lxi., 9: "And trouble shall seize them when they shall behold this Son of woman sitting upon the throne of his glory."—Matt. xxiv. 7, 21, 22, 29, 30.

En. cii. 17: "The former heaven shall depart and pass away, a new heaven shall appear."—Rev. xxii. 1.

The phrase applied to Judas by Jesus, "it were better that man had never been born," is taken literally from Enoch. For numerous other instances of how far the New Testament compilers were indebted to this uninspired writer who flourished before the world had heard of Christianity, we refer our readers to the work itself and its Introduction by Mr. Gill.

J. M. WHEELER.

* Published by Kegan Paul, Trübner and Co.
† P. 308 Ante-Nicene Christian Library, vol. xi.

Digitized by Google

RELIGION AND VIRTUE IN IRELAND.

WHENEVER I assert, in conversation with my Christian acquaintances, that men and women would live much happier and better and more useful lives if there were no such things as priests and churches, I am always met by the argument that but for the restraints of religion, and the fears of hell, the bulk of the people "would go to the dogs" from the point of view of morality. They point with triumph to the great virtue of the Irish women as an instance of the influence of religion, and they say that but for the confessional matters would be very different indeed. These are the stock arguments of the religious folk, and there are people who go so far as to say that even if religion is all humbug, it is very much better that men and women should believe pious lies than they should believe secular truths and act up to them.

There is no doubt but that the women of Ireland are very virtuous, and that the confessional exercises a very great influence over their conduct. There is no denying that there are fewer illegitimate children in Catholic Ireland than there are in non-Catholic Ireland. This fact is a continual boast of the priests, who say that it is all due to their teachings and the teachings of the Church. Admitting all this without reserve, the fact still remains that this boasted virtue must be very artificial when it is unable to subsist except under threats of the most awful torture in a future world.

If it is true that morality in Ireland would be shattered by the overthrow of religion, then there are two conclusions that must inevitably be come to. One is that the virtue that now prevails is not genuine, as it cannot stand the test of freedom from imaginary terrors; and the other is that the teachings of the Catholic clergy for centuries must have been exceedingly empty when they have resulted in nothing better than this knock-kneed morality that depends for its existence upon fears of punishment and hopes of reward. Both of these conclusions are valid in every way.

Virtue in Ireland is a negative sort of thing. People are not virtuous because it is good to be virtuous, but because they fear to be otherwise. In reality I do not think that we are much better than our neighbors. From what the priests themselves say, it is perfectly plain that the people, if left to themselves, would conduct themselves very differently from what they do at present. They are inclined to break certain commandments, we are told; they desire to ignore certain codes of conduct laid down by the Church; and they merely stop short of carrying out their inclinations and their desires through fear of the consequences in another world. This is all that religion has done for virtue in Ireland; it has done everything for making people virtuous in act, but it has done nothing at all to raise the minds of the people to that level whose standard is, that true virtue is its own reward and its violation its own punishment.

I am not to be taken, for a moment, as meaning that I would look with unconcern at anything like a lowering of the present standard of female virtue in Ireland, even though that standard is far and away more artificial than real. But at the same time I can see clearly that while the present state of things last there will be no true progress, and no genuine advance in civilisation in Ireland. The Irish are not natural enough. Their civilisation is a cast-iron sort of affair, incapable of much alteration or improvement. They regard the teachings of their Church as the whole truth and nothing but the truth, and that for all practical purposes the last word has been spoken about what it is right to believe and disbelieve. As long as they remain in this stick-in-the-mud condition their mental and moral development will be sadly hampered. And if the priests can manage it, in this condition they will remain for all time.

I have just said that the Irish are virtuous in act, if in no other way. But the bulk of them have really no true ideas of sexual virtue at all. They have a horror of civil marriages, and would as soon think of committing murder as of getting married at a registry office. Yet their notions of marriage, in the great majority of instances, do not rise above carnal or mercenary motives. Amongst the peasantry marriages are a mere matter of barter, and anything like marriage for love is hardly ever heard of. The priests foster this degrading state of affairs. Mercenary alliances bring fat fees into the priestly till, and that is what the priests want. As to young men and young women choosing mates for themselves, the thing is never dreamt of. But to protect them from wishing so to choose, all merry-making in country places is discountenanced, and there are instances even where priests will not allow young men and young women to talk to each other in the village street in broad noon-day. For anybody with genuine respect for woman, the summary manner in which she is disposed of in rural Ireland is at once disgusting and disheartening.

In the cities the cry of the priests to young men is "Get married." They preach incessantly the enormity of the crime of "keeping company" with young women. How decent Catholic young men tolerate the way they are preached to is simply amazing. It is no unusual thing to hear preachers state that it is little short of a "mortal sin" for a man to take a walk into the country in company with a woman. To the man who does so they address fervent appeals to get married. These teachings are followed by evil results. Under them marriage is too often but a mere licence for immorality, and the boasted virtue anything but virtue. I fear that too many people follow the priest's advice and marry for no better reason than to satisfy their passions. But they are told and believe that the mumblings of a priest make matters all right and constitute them highly virtuous and moral folk.

While there are no higher ideas of marriage than these, it must be expected that the Irish as a people can never reach that standard of moral and manly excellence of which they are capable. Where such marriage customs hold good, the home-life can never offer such healthy examples to the young as if marriage was free and regulated by choice, instead of being regulated by the priests' desire for money and by their notions of what constitutes morality. Outwardly the Irish home may be an example of happiness, while the reality too often is that a "cat and dog life" prevails. Men and women are driven to marry, and no matter how they may come to hate each other, there is no hope for anything like a divorce. The intercourse of such people may be called "virtue," but if it is, virtue loses its beauty in my eyes.

If the restraints of religion were removed there might be some falling off in the decorous conduct observable in Ireland. But it would be well at any rate to have the people natural, as then we might expect them to progress, the ambition for which is in the nature of man when he is not under unnatural restraint. As matters now are there can be no progress and no appreciable advance in civilisation. Religion in Ireland and the virtue it enjoins are insuperable bars to that development which the natural intelligence of Irishmen would, under happier circumstances, impel them to attain.

J. O'DONOVAN.

A little girl in church, after the contribution plate had been passed, complacently and audibly said, "I paid for four, mamma; was that right?"

Teacher: "Tommy, what did our Savior mean when he said to Peter, 'from henceforth thou shalt catch men'?" Tommy: "I suppose he meant Peter was going to be a policeman."

Digitized by Google

THE MAGIC FIGHT.

Tune—"The Enniskillen Dragoon."

THE Jews had pitched at Kephidim
While on their famous tramp,
When there arose a mighty king
To pulverise their camp.
Said Moses unto Joshua,
"Go fight him in the plain,
And I will to yon hill repair
Your valor to sustain."

Then Josh and all his men marched out
The enemy to kill,
While Moses, Hur, and Aaron
Climbed up a neighboring hill;
And when Mo held his stick aloft
The Israelites prevailed;
But when he let his hand go down
They just as sadly failed.

Then Aaron hunted up a stone
Whereon good Moses sat,
And Hur stood on this side of him,
While Aaron stood on that,
And steadied up his heavy hands
That Josh might win the fight;
And in that queer position
Remained till it was night.

No doubt they found it tiring work
To keep his elbows straight;
For we are told in "Holy Writ"
His hands were no light weight.
And then, suppose the merry louse
At work among their thatch,
How could they, with both hands engaged,
Perform the needful scratch?

By that time General Joshua
Had vanquished all his foes;
Then Moses dropped his weary hands
And from his rock arose,
And built an altar to the Lord
For bringing them such luck,
And giving to the Jewish troops
The right amount of pluck.

'Tis strange no ancient artist
Has portrayed this battle scene,
With Moses perched upon a hill
Two godly priests between,
'Twould be a grand attraction
In a gallery of art,
And bring the Jews from far and near,
Their golden "quids" to part.

T. CLARK.

HOW TO HELP US.

(1) Get your newsagent to exhibit the Freethinker in his window.
(2) Get your newsagent to take a few copies of the Freethinker and try to sell them, guaranteeing to take the copies that may remain unsold.
(3) Take an extra copy (or more), and circulate it among your acquaintances.
(4) Display, or get displayed, one of our contents-sheets, which are of a convenient size for the purpose. Mr. Forder will send them on application.
(5) Leave a copy of the Freethinker now and then in the train, the car, or the omnibus.
(6) Distribute some of our cheap tracts in your walks abroad, at public meetings, or among the audiences around street-corner preachers.

Johnny: "Pa, what do they ring church bells for?" Pa: "To make people believe there's a fire in another world my son."

Johnny: "Is God Irish?" Sunday-school Teacher: "Why no, my dear. Why do you ask such a question?" Johnny: "Coz, he always says 'ye.'"

ACID DROPS.

The blessed May Meetings are in full swing. We don't refer to the Labor demonstrations, but to the meetings of the Black Army who swarm in London and plot and plan in the interest of superstition. Anyone who bought a list of these assemblies at the Christian World office, and attended them all, except when two or more took place at the same hour, would be fit for a lunatic asylum at the finish. Only a miraculously strong head could possibly stand such a dose of unction, cant, snuffling, lies, and hypocrisy. For our part, we think it would be politic on the part of the Christians to concentrate their forces. Church and chapel might be kept separate, but they might form two great divisions. One might be presided over by the weeping Bishop of London, the other by the oily and unscrupulous Hugh Price Hughes. Nay, the two leaders might co-operate in producing a novel, or a drama. Temple might supply the pathos, and Hughes the invention. For a title we suggest "The Christian Mother and her Atheist Son."

A Methodist correspondent of the Echo says "Methodists need to be rich people. The fancy pet West-end scheme [of Hugh Price Hughes] is crippling finances in all our country circuits." The Wesleyan Missionary Society, like its other organisation, is in an unsatisfactory condition. It began the year with a debt of £9000 and the year's contributions were £10,000 less than in 1888.

The clerical majority on the Plymouth School Board are doing their best in favor of denominational education, in direct opposition to the spirit of the Education Act. They have put out an innocent-looking circular, asking pupil teachers, etc., to join religious instruction classes. Although this circular is signed by the Archdeacon of Totnes and others, it is distributed by the Church representatives on the School Board. Pupil teachers, who have enough to do to be proficient in the secular subjects included in the Code, should leave these religious instruction classes severely alone.

Who is "Horace Courtney," hailing from Clapham, who writes a curious letter to the Newcastle Weekly Chronicle? We suspect he is a Christian masquerading as a Freethinker. He "ventures to say" that there is not a single Freethinker of culture and intelligence who has the least sympathy with the vile stuff purveyed by Mr. Foote under the fair name of Freethought." Well, we don't pretend that any of our readers possess the colossal "culture and intelligence" of Horace Courtney, but some of the best friends of this journal are doctors, solicitors, schoolmasters and university men. More than one professor takes the Freethinker weekly, and some of our correspondents, whose names we are not free to publish, are famous in the world of letters.

"Horace Courtenay" is evidently very ignorant of current Freethought literature. He writes as though Comic Bible Sketches were still appearing in the Freethinker. He also says that the party we "supply" is "rapidly dying out," in face of the fact of our increasing circulation.

Disestablishment is bound to come in Scotland. Even the Grand Old Man is a convert at last. There are twelve parishes in the Highlands, with a total population of 13,353; each parish has a church and a minister, and the total number of communicants is 63, an average of five and a quarter for each church.

The Rev. James Owen, the new president of the Baptist Union, in his opening address to the Spring Assembly, admitted that the Christian ministry did not exercise a dominant—if indeed any influence over either the leaders in society and literature or the laboring populations in large towns. Yet he has faith that all will yet go well. Faith is here the evidence of things not seen.

Political men marry for love, but they generally like a pile of money as well. Mr. O'Brien, it is reported, is going to marry the rich Miss Raffalovitch. She has plenty of cash and is a Home Ruler, two desiderata to begin with. But, according to the Star, she has another qualification besides these, and besides her mental gifts. She has a most accommodating disposition. "It is significant," says the Star, "of the completeness with which Miss Raffalovitch identifies herself with her bridegroom that she will adopt Mr. O'Brien's religion." Really, it is enough to make a Freethinker split his sides with laughter. The lady puts on a new religion with her wedding dress. It is to be hoped she will change again if Mr. O'Brien should turn Protestant.

Digitized by Google

If the Kentish Mercury's report of the Rev. Hugh R. Baker's reply to Mr. Foote's lectures at Woolwich is accurate, it was a very unsatisfactory reply indeed. Mr. Baker said he "wanted to show in a general way that Mr. Foote's statements were not truthful." He singled out the statement that the God of the Old Testament was a national one. What then does the phrase the God of Israel mean? In Judges xi. 24, Jehovah is distinctly compared with Chemosh, another national God.

Mr. Baker is reported as saying that Mr. Foote "spoke in glowing terms of Apollo, Juno, Diana, Venus and Cupid as good examples which might be followed." Mr. Foote is in the north of England, but without consultation the sub-editor will venture to characterise this statement as untruthful. Those who know Mr. Foote know he is not so ready to expose himself to Christian gibes. Then Mr. Baker spoke of prayer. He "considered the primary object of prayer was to converse with the Almighty and not necessarily to ask for blessings." Yet the Lord's Prayer asks for daily bread.

Mr. Baker founds another charge on the statement that religion was founded on fear. This, said the man of God, was a slander, distinctly opposed to the teaching of the Bible, which was that of love. We fancied we had read a good deal about the fear of the Lord in the old book, but its teachings after all have little to do with the original foundations of religion, which are far older and go much deeper than any written documents.

"Stanhope" signs a long, old-fashioned screed in the Consett Guardian against Atheism in general and Mr. Bradlaugh in particular. When we state that he writes, "the death-bed of the infidel is anything but nice," we have said enough to show that he is beneath contempt. "Stanhope" must rise to the level of the age—not, perhaps, a very lofty one, after all—if he wishes to be listened to. Fantastic lies are played out in the controversy.

The Rochester Diocesan Conference pronounced against Sunday bands, Sunday papers and Sunday dinners. It was a fine old clerical Protectionist meeting, but it will not affect the progress of Free Trade in religion as well as in commerce.

Marcus T. Bergman, a missionary to the Jews, calls for a Bible in Judeo-Polish or Hebrew-German. He is especially anxious that the East-end Jews shall not continue to get their ideas of Jesus Christ from the "blasphemous" Sepher Toldoth Jeshu, which he wrongly refers to as "in the Talmud." Those who would like to see the real facts about this work should read the Jewish Life of Christ, edited by G. W. Foote and J. M. Wheeler.

Mr. Spurgeon says that "a man with a mind must have a creed." True. But a man with any mind worth speaking of must have a better creed than Spurgeon's.

Mr. Spurgeon puts in a fresh word for Calvin. Jack of Geneva, it seems, when he cremated Servetus, was only doing what any other person in his position would have done. Mr. Spurgeon's excuse is that "they all did it." But this is not held to be an excuse for those guilty of the ordinary frailties of human nature, whom Mr. Spurgeon damns to hell without the slighest compunction. Jack's excuse for murder won't hold good for Tom, Dick, and Harry's peccadilloes.

Richard Weaver has been advertised as a great attraction at Wood Green. "Scribo," in the North London Echo, wonders whether Richard's "past life at Macclesfield and Stockport is like a forgotten dream," and suggests that the place for "broken-kneed" Christians is not the pulpit but the pew.

A Liverpool paper is severe upon "the London begging gang" who run philanthropic institutes on Gospel lines and cadge right and left, making the most piteous, and often whining, appeals for help "by return." It gives an extract from the begging letter of a London Cottage Mission, in which it is stated that the landlord is going to distrain (hard-hearted man!), and the poor "little ones" will be turned out in the streets unless six subscribers send £5 each "by return of post." As all these beggars believe in prayer, it is wonderful that they don't ask God to soften the landlord, instead of investing in postage stamps.

Dr. Parker "hates" the Calvinism of Mr. Spurgeon as he "hates selfishness and blasphemy." He calls it "leering, slavering, and sly-winking," and says he would not condescend to kick it. Yet this same Dr. Parker thinks the Blasphemy Laws should be maintained to make Freethinkers polite in criticising Christianity. It is the old, old story of the beam and the mote.

A very curious case was that of Lampard v. Buck, tried before the Queen's Bench Court last week. Lampard is a tea merchant, intimately connected with the Salvation Army, of which Buck has been a staff captain. Buck, however left, and threatened to lecture against the Army and write a book exposing "the headquarters of the army as a house of ill-fame and a den of thieves." He obtained £50 from Mr. Lampard, which he afterwards advertised as "hush money." It was however decided by the court that the money was a loan, which must be refunded.

In a Government Commission on the number of persons in the Russian empire without visible means of existence, out of a total of 293,445 beggars 3,491 were clergymen. This large number is probably accounted for not by their adherence to the command of Jesus to give all to the poor, but by the custom which deprives the parson of his living when his wife dies.

The Rev. A. J. Johnson, vicar of Toftries, near Fakenham, the clergyman who wandered from home in the winter and was discovered frost-bitten and starving, has died in the Norfolk and Norwich Hospital after having his feet amputated.

The cranks who believed in the prophesy that San Francisco and other cities would be destroyed on April 14 had the sense to hedge. They prayed that the disaster might be averted, and now claim that their prayers were answered. But what is the use of the Lord inspiring prophets when his purposes can be turned aside by prayer?

The inspired prophets who predict the end of the world and the destruction of cities are, like the religious maniacs, instructive examples. As the fossils found in geological strata show us the kind of life which once existed on the earth, so these survivals show us what the old prophets actually were and what a curse was their superstition.

While the trembling believers waited last Monday for the earthquake which was to destroy the city, there came over the wires from the observatory on Mount Hamilton these words: "No earthquake tremor, however slight, registered on the delicate seismometers of the Lick Observatory." It was like the voice of the Freethinker James Lick rebuking the cowardice of the Christian community.—Freethought.

Prophet Baxter has two assistants, Messrs. Jaye and Osborne, who are zealously propagating the end of the world delusion at Brighton. It is a money-making game. Induce people to think the end of all things is at hand, and they will surely contribute well to God's elect. Like all other Christian humbug, this variety thrives well in the rank soil of Bibliolatry.

In the report of the British Commissioners of Lunacy, "religious excitement" is credited with 3,769 cases of insanity. This is a more potent cause even than love affairs, which are credited with 2,224, while "over-exertion" is responsible for 761. "Mental anxiety," the chief cause, occasions 25,897 cases, and of these we suspect religious anxiety has a considerable place, for it may not always develop into decided recognisable religious mania.

Count Tolstoi's Kreutzen Sonata is to be translated into

Digitized by Google

English and published by Mr. Walter Scott. It is reported to be a Zolaesque novel, and it will no doubt excite a great deal of interest, particularly as Tolstoi means it as a social study from the standpoint of the Sermon on the Mount.

The great Russian novelist has devoted much of his leisure of late years to expounding his social and religious views in the direct form of essays. He writes as an uncompromising Christian of the Quaker type, or rather, perhaps, of the type of George Fox and William Law rolled into one. He takes the commandments of Christ literally, and he is, in that sense, one of the very few real Christians on this planet. Whether his philosophy could be practised in actual life is quite another matter. We hope to give a fuller account of it some day, for a man like Tolstoi is better worth attention than the gentlemen who preach the Gospel for as much as they can get.

Under the Christian king, Mwanga, the followers of Jesus have fought and beaten the followers of Mohammed. According to the London Chronicle, "the reconquest of the country appears to have been followed by a division of the spoil, the land being parcelled out among the victors, while very little is left to the 'heathen.'" The earth is the Lord's, and he has given it to the saints—white or black.

The world does move. The Christian Commonwealth steps in front of Jesus Christ, and declares that "no law, human or divine, can morally compel two human creatures to be bound together for life when one of them proves himself to be a brute, or a sot, or a drunkard."

Prof. D. G. Porter's long paper on "The Agnostic Controversy" is running through the Christian Commonwealth. He lauds the Rev. Dr. Wace to the skies, damns Huxley with faint praise, and says that Ingersoll's reply to Gladstone "does not require any consideration." This is the famous old trick of the ostrich. But it doesn't pay.

Handbills have reached us of four public discussions at Swindon between Pastor King and Mr. H. Jones, who is described as "a Secularist." The subjects are rather curiously worded, and one evening's discussion is to be on Bible Morality "for men only." This is a condition which we have always regarded as objectionable. Secular Societies do not recognise any distinction of sex, and if women cannot be admitted at any meeting, either the subject is not one for public treatment, or it is very badly handled. Let the Christians lecture "for men only." Freethinkers should avoid it as foolish or prurient.

A Bedfordshire correspondent mentions that at Sewell in that county he heard of some badgers who had made their abode in a disused Quaker's burial ground, and had also made very free with the remains of departed Friends there. He thinks the fact may be adduced as "an additional reason in favor of incineration," and adds, "it's bad enough for some of us to be badgered whilst living."

The Rev. J. V. Sutton, presiding at the Chester-le-Street meeting of the Religious Tract Society, said that "a certain paper called the Freethinker had lately lamented the powerful influence of the society." We do not remember our lamentation. Possibly it is just as true as the story which immediately follows, of "the conversion of a young man who pretended to be an infidel" by means of one of the society's tracts.

The Church Times defends the empty City churches on the ground that they offer the mute witness of their consecrated walls to people apt to be lost in worldliness. We should fancy a few consecrated hoardings might be even more useful.

The wave of secession to Rome continues to roll on. According to the English Churchman, the principal of the Oxford University Mission at Calcutta has followed the example of the head of a similar mission at Bombay, and joined the Papists, who have also received the Revs. W. Tatlock, R. Beasley and G. Clark, besides numerous lay converts, those converted at Brighton being estimated at five hundred.

"Nebuchadnezzar" is the title of an oratorio performed this week at St. James's Hall. We presume there will be a pastural symphony descriptive of the king grazing, and some firework fugues representing Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego in the fiery furnace.

The South Wales Echo sees nothing startling in some of the Welsh Wesleyan Methodists asking Cardinal Manning and the Marquis of Bute to subscribe to the building of a Methodist chapel. It says, "Christians are everywhere showing a desire to come nearer to one another whenever possible, especially in the face of Giant's Doubt and Despair that threaten the stronghold from without." That's it. Whatever semblance of unity there is comes upon compulsion, but when the Catholic lion lies down with the Wesleyan lamb the Methodist will be inside.

Charles Wells, a Staffordshire magistrate, and an ironmaster in a large way of business at Wolverhampton, shot himself through the head in the Queen's Hotel, Coventry. He left a letter for his solicitor, concluding with the words, "May God bless and prosper you and yours." The poor man's head was turned by financial losses, though he was not reduced to want. We merely mention the case as another fact for Talmage.

Sir Edwin Arnold has poetised the Life of Buddha in Tennysonian blank verse, and the volume has had a considerable sale. Its well-known title is The Light of Asia. He is now writing The Light of the World—that is of the fourth part of the world which possesses Christianity. Its subject will be the Life of Jesus, and we daresay it will be written from a Daily Telegraph point of view. Matthew, Mark, Luke and John are evidently played out.

The conference of the African M. E. Church expelled the Rev. G. H. Smith on the remarkable charge of being a thief, a fugitive from justice, and a conjuror.

Some American holy humbugs appropriately chose April 1 for a Convention at Washington of those who want to insert God into the Constitution of the United States. Joe Cook was the leading spirit. If the Americans are wise his wind will be wasted.

Stewart Headlam asked the London School Board to banish Bible reading and explaining from its schools. Copeland Bowie seconded the motion. Both these gentlemen are "reverends." The motion was supported by Mrs. Besant. Apparently it had no other friend, which is somewhat surprising. The opposition was led by the Hon. Lyulph Stanley and Professor Gladstone. The former cited the authority of "the late Arthur Arnold"—we suppose it means Matthew Arnold—as to the beneficial effect of Bible teaching; but he forgets to say that the same Mr. Arnold had likened the Christian Trinity to three Lord Shaftesburys. The Grand Old Man's kinsman soared on the wings of prophecy. He predicted that "candidates for the Board who proposed to exclude the Bible from the schools would have very little chance of being elected." Well, we shall see. A few Secular Education candidates were returned at the last and next time we may do still better.

Ultimately the "friends of the Bible"—that is, the folk who force it down the mental throats of children without mastication or saliva—burked the motion by passing "the previous question," the Star says by thirty-six votes to two. But where was the third vote? There should at least have been three.

The Age, a Melbourne paper of March 22, reports "An important seizure of blasphemous literature was made by the Customs authorities yesterday in the shape of the Christmas number of a freethought publication. The contents of this particular number were exceedingly coarse and ribald, and very little consideration was required, after a glance at them, to cause them to be pronounced unfit for circulation. The parcel, which came by mail from Sydney, was, therefore, taken possession of by the Customs officers and burned." No further particulars have yet come to hand, but we hope soon to obtain further information from our Australian friends.

Digitized by Google

MR. FOOTE'S ENGAGEMENTS.

Sunday, May 11, Free Library, South Shields; at 11, "Shelley, the Poet of Atheism"; at 3, "Mr. Gladstone's Defence of the Bible"; at 7, "Is there a Future Life?"

May 18, Hall of Science, London; 25, N. S. S. Conference.
June 1, Hall of Science, London; 8, Gladstone Radical Club and Hall of Science, London; 15, Manchester; 22, Liverpool; 29, Reading.
July 13, Hall of Science; 27, Hall of Science.
August 31, Birmingham.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

LITERARY communications to be addressed to the Editor, 14 Clerkenwell Green, London, E.C. All business communications to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C.

THE Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the office, post free to any part of Europe, America, Canada and Egypt, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 6s. 6d.; Half Year, 3s. 3d.; Three Months, 1s. 7½d. Australia, China and Africa:—One Year, 8s. 8d.; Half Year, 4s. 4d.; Three Months, 2s. 2d. India:—One Year, 10s. 10d.; Half Year, 5s. 5d. Three Months, 2s. 8½d.

SCALE OF ADVERTISEMENTS.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 3s.; Half Column, 15s.; Column, £1 10s. Special terms for repetitions

IT being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will in future receive the number when their subscription expires in a colored wrapper.

L. STANLEY'S subscription of 2s. 6d. should have been acknowledged as from him and F. Zambia.

A. TARN.—We are overcrowded with copy at present.

G. H.—Hardly a profane joke. Thanks, however. It may be worked in later on.

A. GUEST.—Presently.

H. BEE.—(1) Among his miscellaneous verses. (2) Thackeray's Four Georges, the Greville Memoirs, and Walpole's Letters. The first is a cheap book, the others are dear.

F. ABLARD.—The Second Series of Bible Heroes were delayed by an accident, and Mr. Foote has been too busy since to remedy it. But the volume will be ready before the end of this month, and Mr. Forder will then execute your order with others.

A. E. HINE.—The card arrived too late to be of service.

K. FIELD.—We don't doubt a word of your letter, but we cannot afford to fight a libel case against a big hospital. Thanks for the cutting.

W. R.—We will see if there is substance enough in the Scottish Spurgeon's deliverances to found a Letter upon. See "Acid Drops."

JOSEPH BROWN, hon. sec. North Eastern Secular Federation, 86 Durham Street, Bentinck, Newcastle-on-Tyne, acknowledges the following subscriptions:—E. Elcoat, 5s.; Stockton Branch, £1 0s. 7d.; a Friend, 1s.; Mr. Greenwell, 2s. 6d.; West Hartlepool Branch, 17s.; Darlington Branch, 7s. 6d.; Chester-le-Street Branch, 10s.; West Auckland Branch, 6s. 9d.; Oxhill Branch, 10s.; Newcastle Branch, 9s.; Samuel Seal, towards Mr. Foote's tour, £3.

J. N.—Mr. Forder has issued a catalogue, which he will supply on application.

J. WEBB.—The manuscript is under consideration. You will hear from us shortly.

SENEX.—The President of the National Secular Society has no more control over the Hall of Science platform than you have. It is a matter, therefore, in which he cannot possibly interfere. He has already given his opinion as to the policy of the Secular platform being used for the advocacy of what ninety-nine (at least) out of every hundred Secularists are opposed to, and what most of them regard as rank superstition.

R. S. BRANSBY.—We cannot be supposed to have a personal knowledge of every member of the party. If Mr. Ridgway and Mr. Daniel Baker will stand sponsors it shall be inserted. Everyone must see that there must be some conditions of publicity.

IN consequence of Mr. Foote's absence many correspondents remain unanswered this week.

PAPERS RECEIVED.—Neues Freireligioses Sonntags Blatt—Der Arme Teufel—Western Figaro—Liberator—Truthseeker—Ironclad Age—Bulletin des Sommaires—Menschenthum—Progressive Thinker—Fair Play—Freidenker—Freethought Boston Investigator—Fritankeren—Twentieth Century—Freedom—Citizen—Transvaal Standard—Kentish Mercury—Chester-le-Street Advertiser—La Lanterne—Mot d'Ordre—L'Etoile—La Rennovator—La Verité—Newcastle Leader—Newcastle Chronicle—Sussex Daily News—El Radical—Northern Daily Telegraph—Liberty.

FRIENDS who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish our attention directed.

THE FREETHOUGHT FUND.

MR. FOOTE'S appeal, as President of the National Secular Society, for funds to extend the Society's work, is being responded to by friends in various parts of the country. Some of the subscribers promise to remit annually as much as they can afford; others, who can only send a little at a time, promise to remit half-yearly or quarterly. As soon as possible a list of intending subscribers will be prepared. Meanwhile the following subscriptions are acknowledged as actually received by Mr. Foote or Mr. Forder.

Fourth List.

	£	s.	d.		£	s.	d.
James Fisher	1	0	0	H. J. Putz	0	5	0
H. M. Ridgway	0	3	0	W. Anderson	0	5	0
Peter Weston	1	0	0	J. G. Barnes	0	2	6
G. Anderson	2	2	0	A. Carter	1	1	0
H. S. Ashford	0	5	0	J. H. E.	0	10	0
C. H. B. (per R. O. Smith)	1	0	0	W. Stewart	0	5	0

NATIONAL SECULAR SOCIETY'S CONFERENCE.

AGENDA.

1. Minutes of last Conference.
2. Report of Executive.
3. Treasurer's Report.
4. Election of President. Motion by Finsbury Branch:—
   That Mr. G. W. Foote be President for 1890-1.
5. Election of Vice-Presidents.
   [The following are nominated by Executive.]

G. Anderson.	Dr. E. Schlaeger.
Daniel Baker.	Thos. Slater.
Hypatia Bradlaugh-Bonner.	R. O. Smith.
Prof. Ludwig Büchner.	Joseph Symes.
W. W. Collins.	Geo. Standring.
P. A. V. Le Lubez.	J. Swaagman.
J. Pratt.	E. Truelove.
W. H. Reynolds.

5a. Motion by Finsbury Branch:—
That Mr. J. M. Wheeler be elected a Vice-President.
6. Election of Treasurer.
7. Election of Auditors.
8. Election of Secretary.
9. Announcement relating to certain shares.
10. Notice of motion by G. W. Foote:—
(1) That the yearly subscription of membership be altered to a minimum of one shilling, each member being allowed to fix his subscription in excess of that amount according to his means and inclination.
(2) That Branches shall henceforth pay to the central fund the sum of sixpence per year for each member.
(3) That the Propagandist and General funds be henceforth merged into one.
(4) That it is advisable to consolidate and centralise the lecturing system except in cases where the lecturers work on the plan of taking the surplus of proceeds; and that (2) an attempt should at once be made to send lecturers on tour at the expense of the central fund, the Branches being expected to bear the necessary local expenses; and that (3), when a charge for admission is made at such lectures, the Branches shall forward to the General Secretary a statement of receipts and expenditure, and remit to him one-half of any balance that may remain in hand.
(5) That instead of a special collection for the Propagandist Fund, every branch shall make at least one annual collection for the general purposes of the Society, and remit the same within a fortnight to the General Secretary.
11. Notice of motion by Birmingham Branch:—
That in future no person shall hold the office of President for more than three years in succession.

Digitized by Google

12. Notice of motion by Newcastle Branch:—

That the Conference instruct the Executive to take active steps to bring about the repeal of the Blasphemy Laws, and exhort all Freethinkers in the United Kingdom to bring pressure to bear wherever possible upon Parliamentary candidates.

13. Notice of motion by Liverpool Branch:—

That it is desirable that the Annual Conferences should be held only in towns affording facilities for access, and that the expenses attending them should in part at least be defrayed from the general fund.

14. Any other business.

After the above business is concluded, the Conference will be thrown open and all Freethinkers can then take part therein; but on the above business none but members of the National Secular Society can speak or vote.

The morning sitting will open at 10.30 and close at 12.30; the afternoon sitting will open at 2.30, closing at 4.30; the evening sitting opening at 7.

The Conference will be held at the SECULAR HALL, RUSHOLME STREET, MANCHESTER.

At the Public Meeting in the evening addresses will be given by G. W. Foote, J. M. Robertson, Arthur B. Moss, R. Forder, and others.

J. M. ROBERTSON,
G. STANDRING. } Agenda Committee.

SUGAR PLUMS.

Mr. Foote had good audiences [at Newcastle on Sunday. The afternoon lecture, "A Defence of Atheism," in reply to the Rev. Walter Walsh, was well reported in the next day's Leader, and still better in the Chronicle. After the evening lecture a collection was taken on behalf of the North Eastern Secular Federation. During the day the Newcastle Branch enrolled seven new members.

The Newcastle Branch is making excellent headway. It has over a hundred financial members, and a great many outside supporters and sympathisers. It is now seeking better premises for its ordinary meetings, and if it succeeds in this quest it will undoubtedly very much improve its position. Mr. Joseph Brown is an energetic leader, and he is well backed up by a strong committee. An extremely gratifying and promising feature of the Branch is the number of earnest and intelligent young men it comprises.

The sale of the Freethinker has largely increased in Newcastle and is still increasing. Mr. Peter Weston, in Newgate Street, began by selling a dozen or two; at the time of Mr. Foote's last visit he was selling seventy copies weekly; he is now selling a hundred. The paper is also sold by other newsagents in Newcastle and Gateshead.

Mr. Foote concluded the Camberwell course of Free Lectures on Friday last. There was a considerably improved attendance, notwithstanding the fine weather, and a large proportion of strangers. Next season, with better advertising, these Free Lectures will probably be a great success.

Despite advancing summer, the London Secular Federation has arranged for a course of Thursday evening Free Lectures in the West-end. They will be delivered in the hall of the Hammersmith Club. The lectures have been fixed for Thursday evenings, May 15, 22, 29 and June 5. Mr. Foote will deliver one of the course. The Hammersmith Club is situated at No. 1 The Grove, Broadway.

The Federation has not been able to arrange for a course of Free Lectures in the East-end. There has been a great difficulty in obtaining a suitable hall at a reasonable rent. A Church schoolroom was offered by a clergyman, but he stipulated a variety of impossible conditions. He evidently thought them perfectly just, but that only shows how the clergy are accustomed to having everything their own way. The East-end will have to wait for its Free Lectures till the fall of the year, when a strong effort will be made to carry our propaganda among that vast working population.

The immense demonstration in Hyde Park last Sunday was notable as signalising not only how rapidly social problems are coming to the front, but how entirely secular interests are displacing theological ones on the Sunday. Here were half a million of people gathered together all concerned in a matter of worldly interest and with bands and banners expressing secular sentiments. Whatever else it showed, the demonstration certainly proved that the so-called sanctity of the Sabbath has no hold on the workers of London.

The debate upon the Disestablishment of the Scotch Church was notable for two things, the division in which as many as 218 voted in favor of disestablishment and disendowment as against 256, and the declaration of the Marquis of Hartington that "in voting against the motion they were not voting that an indefinite continuance of the present state of affairs was desirable."

Despite the energies of the Church party, the Deceased Wife's Sister Bill has once more passed the Commons by an increased majority, and it now remains to be seen if the lawn-sleeves in the Lords will again reject a measure legitimatising unions which are legitimate in all our colonies.

The Sussex Daily News has a very sensible leader on the Deceased Wife's Sister Bill. It ridicules the idea of the bishops deciding such a matter, and says "We are governed by the common sense of the community and not by the traditions of parsons."

We admire the pluck of the Rev. Stewart Headlam and J. Copeland Bowie in bringing their motion for the abolition of Bible reading before the London School Board, though we are surprised they were not better supported by the other members of the Board. Mr. Headlam's speech is given in this month's Church Reformer.

The Newcastle Sunday Music League has sustained a check, which we hope, however, will only stimulate its efforts. The town's meeting, convened by the Mayor, showed a majority against Sunday freedom. But this success of the bigots was won by a hard whipping up in the churches and Sunday schools, and some characteristic rowdyism to boot. The Daily Leader admits that the majority against the League was "not nearly so large as anyone who watched the meeting would have suspected," and confesses that "the body of persons in the hall in favor of Sunday music was large enough to show a volume of opinion that might make itself felt."

The Liverpool Branch of the N. S. S. held its annual meeting last Sunday. The balance-sheet and the report of the energetic secretary, Mr. Doeg, was adopted, and the outgoing officers re-elected. A donation of £1 from "B" was acknowledged. A committee was appointed and delegates nominated to the Manchester Conference.

At the third meeting of the Yorkshire Secular Federation, held at Laycock's Hotel, Kirkgate, Bradford, it was decided to hold a demonstration at Shipley Glen on June 8, at 3 p.m. A picnic at Highfield House, Morton, near Bingley, on the 18th of May, at 2 p.m., was also arranged for.

Our French friends keep Whit Sunday as a Feast of Flowers and Youth. This year they have an excursion to Meudon, a parish for ever celebrated since the Freethinker Rabelais was appointed curé thereof. We hope there will be a large gathering, and we are sure there will be plenty of enjoyment.

We have received a copy of a new Spanish Republican and Freethought paper entitled El Radical. It is edited by Odon de Buen, one of the Spanish delegates to the Freethought Conference at Paris. The first number gives a portrait of Senor Figueras, the first President of the Spanish Republic in 1873.

Mr. J. M. Robertson is having another set debate at the London Hall of Science. It comes off on Wednesday and Thursday, May 21 and 22. His opponent is the Rev. Mr. Ford, an "advanced" Christian. The subject of debate is, "Is Christianity True?"

Mr. A. B. Moss intends to do a lecturing tour during his annual holiday, from July 26 to August 16. He will be glad to arrange for visiting South Lancashire, Tyneside, and, if possible, Ireland and Wales.

Digitized by Google

There has been a big two night's debate at the Metropolitan Temple, San Francisco, between Samuel P. Putnam and Moses Hull, on the question "Do the Phenomena of Spiritualism Demonstrate a Future Life?" Both disputants are unbelievers in Christianity. Moses Hull, who takes the affirmative, is a skilled debater, and Mr. Putnam has occupied the position of President of the American Secular Union.

Mr. Putnam, who has been both an orthodox and a Unitarian preacher, has issued a narrative of his phases of religious thought, entitled "My Religious Experience."

The Truthseeker has taken up the cause of the Swedish Freethinkers, and has several letters on the subject. One encloses a letter from Mr. Lennstrand, written from prison. Mr. Lennstrand says: "I see the dawning of a better day in this country. I do not stand alone in this struggle, for thousands have declared themselves willing to fight for truth and liberty for this and coming generations. Our organisation is growing stronger every day, and I only wish my countrymen in America would do something jointly to drive away all nonsense, prejudice and superstition that has bedimmed our eyes and stolen away interest for our real welfare."

One of the lectures for which Mr. Lennstrand has been imprisoned is translated into English and published by Mr. Forder, with an introduction by Mr. Wheeler.

By paying nothing to authors or their representatives, American publishers are able to issue reprints of English works very cheaply. We see that the Humboldt Publishing Co., of New York, is issuing a number of standard works of Freethought tendency, such as Mr. S. Laing's Modern Science and Modern Thought, J. Stuart Mill's Utilitarianism, etc., at prices which should command a large sale and do much to spread Liberal ideas in the States.

Dr. Büchner has prepared a paper on "The Future History of Humanity in the Light of the Development Theory," which he will read before the German Freethought Conference at Hannover.

A translation of Arthur Schopenhauer's Aphorisms has just been published by Messrs. Swan, Sonnenschien and Co., It is entitled "The Wisdom of Life." Mr. T. Bailey Saunders, the translator, contributes a preface.

Professor John Fiske opens the Popular Science Monthly for May with an account of the life of Edward L. Youmans, including the story of his association with Herbert Spencer. Professor Fiske was a warm friend of the late Professor Youmans, and describes his fruitful labors in popularising science and the evolution philosophy in America with sympathetic appreciation. Herbert Spencer also writes on "Justice," and the Bishop of Carlisle on "Dr. Wallace on Darwinism."

Mr. Herbert Spencer's philosophy has been epitomised by Mr. F. Howard Collins, whose book is already in a second edition. It is a notable sign of the times to find so many readers for such a work.

Mr. Swinburne contributed a fervent poem "In Memory of Aurelio Saffi" to last week's Athenæum. The two following stanzas show that the poet retains his hatred of priests—

No hate of man, but hate of hate, whose foam
Sheds poison forth from tongues of snakes and priests,
And stains the sickening air with steams whence Rome
Now feeds not full the God that slays and feasts;
For now the fangs of all the ravenous beasts
That ramped about him, fain of prayer and prey,
Fulfil their lust no more: the tide of day
Swells, and compels him down the deathward way.

Night sucks the Church its creature down, and hell
Yawns, heaves, and yearns to clasp its loathliest child
Close to the breasts that bore it. All the spell
Whence darkness saw the dawn in heaven defiled
Is dumb as death: the lips that lied and smiled
Wax white for fear as ashes. She that bore
The banner up of darkness now no more
Sheds night and fear and shame from shore to shore.

The Stockwhip has reached us from Brisbane, Queensland. It is edited by Wallace Nelson, and in its first number proclaims that "Christianity will be the special object of our attack." Mr. Nelson has entered upon a bold enterprise, in which we wish him all success.

The Stockwhip has a column headed "Freethought all over the World," in which it makes the following reference to ourselves: "'No one,' says Mrs. Besant, 'can hope to take Mr. Bradlaugh's place in the hearts of the thousands who love his personality'; and in another place she says, 'his loss is irreparable.' Now we think all this is overdrawn. The Freethought movement must ultimately stand or fall on the truth or falsity of its principles; no mere man, however great, is indispensable. Besides, Mr. Bradlaugh will still remain a Freethinker, and continue, at least with his pen, to advocate our principles. Where the 'irreparable loss' comes in we fail to see. There is only one man in England who has a right to take Mr. Bradlaugh's place. Mr. Foote by his culture, his capacity, and his courage has won the right to be regarded as England's representative Freethinker. No man understands our principles better, or loves our cause more dearly. The National Secular Society will honor itself by making him President."

The Stockwhip commences a novel by the editor entitled "God and Man." It promises to depict the career of a youth from Theology to Secularism, and we suspect contains some autobiographical matter.

Messrs. Rose and Seago, who went out to Johannesburg, in the Transvaal, are evidently doing something for Freethought in that locality. In two different papers we have received from Johannesburg there are Freethought items such as would scarcely be admitted into any of our newspapers.

Mr. Foote's article, "God in a Coal Pit," is reprinted with acknowledgment in our esteemed exchange, the Ironclad Age.

We publish in another column the Agenda of the National Secular Society's Annual Conference at Manchester on Whit-Sunday. It is to be hoped that every Branch that has not yet appointed delegates will do so without delay. The 1890 Conference will probably be a turning-point in the Society's history.

"THE DEVIL'S PRAYERS."

Such a title as "The Devil's Prayers" would be blasphemous if it emanated from a Freethinker. As, however, it originates with a popular preacher who placards the East End of London with announcements of this subject as his leading article in his religious magazine The Shield and Spear, it is evident that the title is perfectly consistent with godliness, truth and respectability. If there is any doubt in these points, the responsibility will lie with the Rev. W. Evans Hurndall, M.A., who issues the address. He commences thus:—

"A strange subject that, some one cries! We did not know, say others, that Satan was in the habit of praying. But he is! And he is very much fonder of praying than a good many Christians are! He shames the mass of believers by his zeal and fervency in supplication. Come away to olden times, and see in Job i., 6—12, and ii., 1—6.; how he prayed concerning the patriarch, and how he prevailed in prayer. Turn to Matt. iv., 1—11, and note how he prayed to the Lord Jesus and did not prevail. Read in Rev. xii., 10, about the accuser of the brethren, who accused them before God day and night: plenty of prayer mixed up with those accusations. Yes! Satan is a great hand at prayer. And he is by far the more dangerous because he knows how to use this weapon, and to use it in many adroit ways. Do we not sing,

'And Satan trembles when he sees
The weakest saint upon his knees?'

But how do matters look when Satan himself takes to his knees! And how do matters look when Satan takes to his knees, but the weak saint does not! Brothers and sisters, we had better pray. Life is largely 'a battle of prayers.' Let us pray—for Satan is praying against us, and that in many ways."

If the preacher desired further confirmation of his belief, or pretended belief, in a praying Devil, he might have shown his congregation that the little devils could pray as well as the big Devil himself.

Digitized by Google

He could have told them how the devils "besought" Jesus that they might enter into two thousand pigs, and how graciously and pitifully their supreme Lord and Master answered their prayer of faith by granting the desired boon without any regard to the feelings of the pigs and their owners, who apparently were most righteously punished for failing to offer prayer to the incarnate deity to whom even the devils bent the knee. The good pastor could point to these devils, and recommend his audience to imitate them in praying to Jesus not to torment them (Luke viii., 28), or at least not to torment them before their time (Mark v., 7). At the same time he might explain why the natural desire to escape torment is so grand and glorious a motive in the Christian, although it is shared by the devils who equally "believe and tremble."

Modern preachers, however, with any pretension to knowledge and culture, fight shy of the little devils who talked to Jesus two thousand years ago, but who very sensibly retire from business as fast as they are discredited by the growth of reason and science. Even the great Devil they convert as far as possible and as often as possible into a figure of speech, or allegorical personification of moral evil; although they are perfectly willing to dangle the puppet before the eyes of those who are still frightened by it. How far the Rev. W. Evans Hurndall is one of the conscious or unconscious hypocrites I have no means of knowing. He certainly professes belief in the personal Devil who afflicted Job and planted Jesus on a pinnacle of a temple, and yet he does not carry out such views to their logical conclusion. Perhaps he is one of the many preachers who believe in Satan with their lips but not with their hearts and understandings. He keeps a devil just as he does a parrot, but keeps them both caged up and utilizes them both in the same offhand way, as models of conduct as far as earnest praying is concerned. He says:

"When we pray, let us pray as Satan does—with all our might of earnestness. I have a parrot at home who prays a great deal better than many of you do. When she wants anything she crawls up to the top of her cage, hangs backward, holding on by her talons, and then shrieks as though she would shriek the house down. Magnificent earnestness that! She generally gets what she wants, and that pretty speedily too. She is a grand hand at prayer, that parrot."

Having learned to pray like the devil and like a parrot, we are next told to notice that "not only does Satan himself pray, but he teaches others to do so." He commonly converts the Lord's Prayer into a Devil's Prayer, it seems, and causes the latter prayer to be uttered with the greater sincerity and fervency. He teaches weak Chiristians to wish that their heavenly Father may not keep a rod, but may rather break it, or burn it, or destroy it in any way rather than make them uncomfortable with chastisements from above instead of the pleasant gifts they desire. He teaches men to wish on that their own will may be done rather than the Lord's, and that God's kingdom shall not come, because life would not be worth living then with all its pious restrictions and worries. The artful Devil also causes falling saints to ask for cheese and butter, and meat, and fine houses and furniture and clothes besides the daily "bread" which is apparently all they ought to ask for; and he tempts them to wish for more than the "daily" food which should content the faithful who are willing to live from hand to mouth, in full reliance on the Lord's continued help. He makes them want to "know about to-morrow as well as to-day" and to see a good way ahead" and to acquire money and property, for fear the Lord might forget the family meals some day, and might not prove quite so regular and certain as the daily calls of the butcher and baker and greengrocer. The popular preacher forgets to tell us whether it is the Devil that inspires the desire for a parrot and other luxuries, and the pastor's desire for a good income, and his habitual trust in the baker and butcher and the power of cash and property and secured prospects rather than an implicit reliance on divine providence, plus human improvidence and ceaseless prayer.

There is one consideration which never by any chance occurs to preachers so far as their own beliefs or assertions are concerned. If the Devil inspires prayers or wishes may he not inspire sermons and teachings? May he not enter the pulpit as well as the pew or the confessional? Does so cunning a deceiver stupidly refrain from misleading priests and evangelists? Would he not be likely to poison the waters at the fountain-head? Would he not introduce plausible forgeries into the Bible and all manner of errors and delusions into the minds of the conflicting teachers of conflicting sects? May there not be Devil's Sermons and Devil's Doctrines as well as Devil's Prayers? And may not the condemnation of human forethought and human providence, and the glorification of self-seeking prayer and mendacious terrorism and fraud and folly proceed from a bad source rather than a good one?

If the preacher is right in his views, Satan's prayers must be far more efficacious than those of Christians. For nearly two thousand years Christians have prayed for the conversion of the world and the coming of Christ's kingdom. Yet Satan's wishes and prayers to the contrary have so far prevailed that not a fourth of the world's population is converted, and science and Freethought are fast undermining and dissolving their belief. Even among this Christian section of mankind, the Protestant sub-section must own that Satan has perverted the belief of the majority of Christians into the gross superstition and immorality of Popery and the Greek Church, to say nothing of Mormons, Anabaptists and so forth, who have only been put down by physical force. Up to the present the Devil has been more powerful than Jesus. Jesus, for whose prayers on our behalf we are to pray, has not prayed with sufficient energy. The ministers should stir him up "with strong crying and tears" till he too is in as "deadly earnest" in his prayers, as we are told that his great and successful rival is. How can Jesus and his followers ever expect to convert the world if they allow themselves to be beaten by their adversary even in their own special line of praying?

One important question the Rev. Evans Hurndall never attempts to solve. He does not tell us why God answers the Devil's Prayers, or permits them to be answered, instead of fulfilling the prayers and wishes of his omnipotent Son and of earnest Christians in general. Good Christians must be content to know that Satan's successes are somehow achieved by prayer, and that if they would imitate his successes they must imitate the means by which he gains them. They must never venture to suspect that the Devil himself speaks from the Christian platform to recommend reliance on prayer, while he laughs in his sleeve at his poor dupes and resorts to more active and more effective means of baffling their pious intentions. Still less may they venture to suspect that the Christian bogey is a contemptible fraud, or a mere figure of speech. They must rest assured that any such suspicion would be a sure and certain proof of the presence and activity of the Great Tempter, and they must at once expel him and his insidious suggestions by the power of Christian prayer. Whether the Christian prayers for crushing thought and reason under the heel of blind credulity may not be Devil's Prayers, is an idea that must be similarly crushed under the great steam-roller of faith as another subtle device of the terrible enemy of mankind. If there is no Devil there is no need of a Savior. God and Satan, heaven and hell, must disappear together, and what would the Christian do then, poor thing? What could possibly restrain him from ruining the world by his inevitable indulgence in the awful vices and terrible crimes for which he proclaims his almost unconquerable predilection? The poor Christian libels himself. He would survive the loss of his darling Devil and even of his beloved priest, just as well as Sinbad survived the loss of his Old Man of the Sea. When Christendom attains manhood it will smile at the lost bogey of its childhood, and live by higher ideals and wiser rules than were possible while degrading superstitions still maintained a hold upon men's feelings and upon their daily life.

Digitized by Google

W. P. BALL.

OBITUARY.

Died on May 1, at Derby, James Birken, aged 58, after a lingering illness. A stedfast friend, a kind husband, indulgent father, and staunch Freethinker. His last wish was to be buried as he had lived, a Secularist.

The funeral of John Cole, an energetic member of the Bethnal Green Branch, took place on April 30, at Finchley Cemetery. There was a large gathering; Mr. Forder read the Secular Burial Service.

SUNDAY MEETINGS.

[Notices of Lectures, etc., must reach us by first post on Tuesday, and be marked "Lecture Notice," if not sent on post-card.]

LONDON.

Ball's Pond Secular Hall, 36 Newington Green Road, N., 7, Mr. Soddy, "The English Language and the Confusion of Tongues."

Battersea—The Shed of Truth, Prince of Wales's Road, 7.30, Free Concert. Social evening every Tuesday.

East London—Swaby's Coffee House, 103 Mile End Road, Capt. Pfoundes, F.R.G.S., "Philosophic Buddhism."

Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, E.C., 7.30 Mrs. Annie Besant, "An Answer to the Question: What is your Opinion about Spiritualism?"

Milton Hall, Kentish Town Road, N.W., 7.30, Rev. Stewart D. Headlam, "Some Popular Mistakes about the Church's Teachings."

West Ham—121 Broadway, Plaistow, 7, Mrs. Thornton Smith, "And yet it Moves"; 9, music, etc.

Woolwich—"Sussex Arms," Assembly Room, 60 Plumstead Road (entrance, Masey Road), 7.30, Mr. C. J. Hunt, "Free Will and Responsibility."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

Battersea Park Gates 11.15, Mr. Calvert, "Is Matter able of Itself to Produce its Phenomenon?"

Bethnal Green—Opposite "Salmon and Ball," 11.15, Mr. G. Standring, "Faith and Freethought."

Edmonton—Corner of Angel Road, 3, Lucretius Keen, "Holy Morality."

Finsbury Park (near the band-stand), 3.30, Mr. J. Rowney "The Bible against Civilisation."

Kingsland Green, 11.30, Mr. F. Millar, "A Future State."

Mile End Waste, 11.30, W. Heaford, "A Vindication of Freethought."

New Southgate, Betstyle Bridge, 11.30, Mr. Sam. Standring, "Men who have Risen."

Old Southgate—On the Green, 6.30, Sam Standring, "What Think ye of Christ?"

Plaistow Green, 11.30, Mr. J. Fagan, "Is there a God?"

Victoria Park, near the fountain, 3.15, Mr. J. Marshall, "Who Shall Deliver me from the Body of This Death?"

Westminster—Old Pimlico Pier, 11.30, Mr. F. Haslam, "The Life and Times of Thomas Paine."

Wood Green—Jolly Butchers' Hill, 11.30, Mr. T. Thurlow, a Freethought lecture.

COUNTRY.

Glasgow Secular Society and Branch of N. S. S, 122 Ingram Street, 6.30, Mr. J. P. Gilmour, "Secularism in Glasgow, 1881-90."

Hanley—Secular Hall, 51 John Street, Mr. H. Smith, 11, "By the Grace of God I am what I am"; 3, "What Think ye of Christ"; 7, "The Child of Hell."

Liverpool Branch N.S.S., Camden Hall, Camden Street—7, Mr. E. S. Jones, "A Defence of Atheism."

Newcastle—4 Hall's Court, Newgate Street, 11, a meeting of Sunday Music League to make arrangements for concerts on Town Moor; 3, fortnightly financial meeting of members.

Portsmouth—Wellington Hall, Southsea, 7, Mr. Hore will read Bellamy's Looking Backward.

Sheffield—Hall of Science, Rockingham Street, 7, Dr. Gaunt, the deferred humorous lecture on "Magic," with startling illusory experiments.

South Shields—Free Library Hall, Ocean Road, Mr. G. W. Foote, 11, "Shelley, the Poet of Atheism"; 3, "Mr. Gladstone's Defence of the Bible"; 7, "Is there a Future Life?"

LECTURERS' ENGAGEMENTS.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Credon Road, London, S.E.—May 11, (morning), Camberwell; 18 (morning), Clerkenwell Green, (evening), Ball's Pond; 25 (afternoon), Regent's Park. June 1 (morning), Pimlico, (evening), Woolwich; 8 (morning), Bethnal Green; 15 (evening), Ball's Pond; 22 (morning), Clerkenwell; 29 (morning), Mile End. July 13, Mile End.

H. SMITH, 3 Breck Place, Breck Road, Everton Road, Liverpool.—May 11, Hanley; 25, Liverpool.

E. STANLEY JONES, 3 Leta Street, City Road, Walton Liverpool.—May 11, Liverpool; 18, Failsworth. June 8, Manchester.

T. THURLOW, 7 Dickson's Villas, Rutland Road, East Ham.—May 11 (morning), Wood Green; 18 (morning), Mile End Waste; 25 (morning), Battersea. June 15 (morning and evening), Battersea.

PROGRESSIVE PUBLISHING CO.'S LIST.

All orders to be sent, with remittance, to R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C. Rate of postage—Orders under 3d., one halfpenny; orders under 6d. one penny. Orders over 6d. post free.

G. W. FOOTE.

	s.	d.
PRISONER FOR BLASPHEMY. Cloth ... ... A Full History of his Three Trials and Twelve Months' Imprisonment. Copies in paper covers, soiled, 6d.	2	6
IS SOCIALISM SOUND? ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant.	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
CHRISTIANITY AND SECULARISM ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. In paper covers.	1	0
Superior edition in cloth	1	6
INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS ... ... Second edition, enlarged.	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0
DARWIN ON GOD	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0

CONTENTS:—Darwin's Grandfather—Darwin's Father—Darwin's Early Piety—Almost a Clergyman—On Board the "Beagle"—Settling at Down—Death and Burial—Purpose of Pamphlet—Some Objections—Darwin Abandons Christianity—Deism—Creation—Origin of Life—Origin of Man—Animism—A Personal God—Design—Divine Beneficence—Religion and Morality—Agnosticism and Atheism.

DEFENCE OF FREE SPEECH ... ... Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes.	0	4
LETTERS TO JESUS CHRIST	0	4
PHILOSOPHY OF SECULARISM	0	3
THE BIBLE GOD	0	2
THE FOLLY OF PRAYER	0	2
THE IMPOSSIBLE CREED ... ... An Open Letter to the Bishop of Peterborough on the Sermon on the Mount.	0	2
CHRISTIANITY AND PROGRESS ... ... A Reply to Mr. Gladstone.	0	2
THE SHADOW OF THE SWORD ... ... A moral and statistical Essay on War.	0	2
ROYAL PAUPERS ... ... Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty.	0	2
MRS. BESANT'S THEOSOPHY ... ... A Candid Criticism.	0	2
THEOSOPHY AND SECULARISM ... ... A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant.	0	2
THE NEW CAGLIOSTRO ... ... An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky.	0	2
WHAT WAS CHRIST? ... ... A Reply to J. S. Mill.	0	2
THE DYING ATHEIST. A Story	0	1
WAS JESUS INSANE? ... ... A searching inquiry into the mental condition of the Prophet of Nazareth.	0	1
BIBLE HEROES—First Series, in elegant wrapper ... (1) Mr. Adam, (2) Captain Noah, (3) Father Abraham, (4) Juggling Jacob, (5) Master Joseph, (6) Joseph's Brethren, (7) Holy Moses I., (8) Holy Moses II., (9) Parson Aaron, (10) General Joshua, (11) Jephthah and Co., (12) Professor Samson. One Penny each singly.	1	0
BIBLE HEROES—Second Series, in elegant wrapper... (13) Prophet Samuel, (14) King Saul, (15) Saint David I., (16) Saint David II., (17) Sultan Solomon, (18) Poor Job, (19) Hairy Elijah (20) Bald Elisha, (21) General Jehu, (22) Doctor Daniel, (23) The Prophets (Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Hosea); (24) St. Peter, (25) St. Paul	1	0

G. W. FOOTE and W. P. BALL.

BIBLE HANDBOOK FOR FREETHINKERS AND INQUIRING CHRISTIANS	1	4
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
Sold also in separate parts as follows—
Bible Contradictions ... ... The Contradictions are printed in parallel columns.	0	4
2. Bible Absurdities ... ... All the chief Absurdities from Genesis to Revelation, conveniently and strikingly arranged, with appropriate headlines, giving the point of each absurdity in a sentence.	0	4
3. Bible Atrocities ... ... Containing all the godly wickedness from Genesis to Revelation. Each infamy has a separate headline for easy reference	0	4
4. Bible Immoralities, Indecencies, Obscenities, Broken Promises, and Unfulfilled Prophecies ...	0	4

COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

MISTAKES OF MOSES	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth ... ... Only Complete Edition published in England	1	6
DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT ... ... Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy.	0	6

Digitized by Google

NOW READY.

"THE ESSENCE OF RELIGION"

GOD THE IMAGE OF MAN—MAN'S DEPENDENCE UPON NATURE THE LAST AND ONLY SOURCE OF RELIGION.

By LUDWIG FEUERBACH.

"No one has demonstrated and explained the purely human origin of the idea of God better than Ludwig Feuerbach."
—Büchner.

"I confess that to Feuerbach I owe a debt of inestimable gratitude. Feeling about in uncertainty for the ground, and finding everywhere shifting sands, Feuerbach cast a sudden blaze in the darkness and disclosed to me the way."
—Rev. S. Baring-Gould.

Price One Shilling.

LETTERS TO THE CLERGY

FIRST SERIES.

1.—CREATION
To the Bishop of Carlisle.

2.—THE BELIEVING THIEF
To the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

3.—THE ATONEMENT
To the Bishop of Peterborough.

4.—OLD TESTAMENT MORALITY
To the Rev. E. R. Conder, D.D.

5.—INSPIRATION
To the Rev. R. F. Horton, M.A.

6.—CREDENTIALS OF THE GOSPEL
To the Rev. Prof. J. A. Beet.

7.—MIRACLES
To the Rev. Brownlow Maitland, M.A.

8.—PRAYER
To the Rev. T. Teignmouth Shore, M.A.

By G. W. FOOTE.

128pp., in Wrapper. ONE SHILLING.

2d. each. PARTS I. and II. 2d. each.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC?

NEW PAMPHLETS BY
COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

---

32 pages. NOW READY. Price 3d.

CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS

A Noble Plea for a Rational Treatment of Prisoners and a Humane Jurisprudence,

BY COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

Price 1d. Price 1d.

A LIE IN FIVE CHAPTERS.

THE REV. HUGH PRICE HUGHES'S CONVERTED ATHEIST

By G. W. FOOTE.

Should be circulated by Freethinkers who desire to see this pious fraud exposed as widely as possible.

A

BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY

OF

FREETHINKERS

OF

ALL AGES AND NATIONS.

BY

J. M. WHEELER.

Price 7/6 Handsomely bound in cloth. Price 7/6

W. J. Rendell's

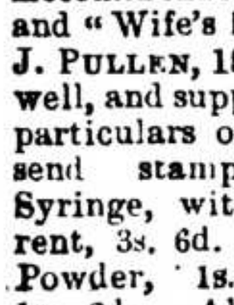
"WIFE'S FRIEND."

Recommended in "Law of Population," and "Wife's Hand Book." Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell Street Clerkenwell, and supplied per post, 2s. dozen. For particulars of this Malthusian discovery send stamped envelope. Higginson's Syringe, with vertical and reverse current, 3s. 6d. and 4s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. All other Malthusian Appliances. All prices post free.

HARTNOLL,

ENGLISH AND FOREIGN CHEMIST,

1A PICCADILLY



(Under the London Pavilion Music Hall),

LONDON, W.

Hartnoll's Specialities, Appliances and Medicated Preparations are world-renowned.

Spiral, Douche and Latest Improved Syringes.

ESTABLISHED OVER 50 YEARS.

RUBBER STAMPS.

Your Monogram to mark Linen or Paper; two letters, 1s.; three letters, 1s. 6d.; any Name, 1s. 6d. Box, Pad and Ink included. All kinds of Stamps. Patterns free. Carriage 2d. extra. F. N. IRETON and CO., 92 Gracechurch Street, London. Agents wanted.

GOD AND THE STATE

A New Pamphlet by
COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

Twopence. Twopence.

THE IMPOSSIBLE CREED

An Open Letter to the
BISHOP OF PETERBOROUGH.
By G. W. FOOTE.

Price Twopence. Price Twopence.

THE BIBLE AND EVOLUTION.

By ARTHUR B. MOSS.
Handsomely Bound in Cloth. 2s. 6d.

The "National Reformer" says: "The author has long won his spurs as a Freethought lecturer, etc. . . one of his best sustained literary efforts."

The "Freethinker" says: "It is by far the best production of Mr. Moss's pen, and we heartily recommend it as an excellent text-book of the subject. The matter is good and the style is bright. The reader is carried along on an easy flowing stream of science, history, ethics and common sense."

Watts and Co., 17 Johnson's Court; Progressive Publishing Co.

TO MARRIED PEOPLE.

A New and Enlarged
ILLUSTRATED LIST OF MALTHUSIAN APPLIANCES AND SPECIALITIES
Will be forwarded per return of post on receipt of 1d. stamp.

DAVIES, CHEMIST,
101 PARK LANE, LEEDS.

POPULATION LIMITATION.—Practical instructions. Allbutt, Besant, Owen, Knowlton; 7d. each; lists 1d.; all post free. FISHER, Koburg, Leeds.

IS THE HOLY GHOST FOOLISH? See "Freethought Record" for May. One penny monthly. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C.; FISHER, Koburg, Leeds; and newsagents.

AUXILIARY Postman, age 26, active and willing, seeks Permanent Employment in any capacity. H., 1 Charlton Place, Islington Green, N.

THE

FAMILY LIMIT

1s. 6d. per doz., post free.

For further Particulars send stamped directed envelope to

A. MOSS, 36 Upper Park Street,
ISLINGTON, LONDON, N.

GRATIS.

AN ILLUSTRATED 16-PAGE PAMPHLET, containing extracts from the utterances of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Manchester; the Revs. T. R. Malthus, A. E. Whatham, M. J. Savage, Leonard Dawson, — Lawton, H. R. Haweis; the following Doctors:—Allbutt, Allinson, Armstrong, Drysdale, Pye Chavasse, E. B. Foote, Nicholls, Wilder, Raciborski, Napheys and Reamy. Also Plato, Aristotle, Sismondi, Huxley, Mill, and numerous others. Should be read by every married and marriageable person. Sent on receipt of stamped addressed envelope by J. R. HOLMES, Hanney, Wantage, Berks.

TESTIMONIALS (Extracts from).

"The one you sent me some months since is

Quite Worn Out

with being lent to so many friends."

"Some of us have paid five shillings for less than one-tenth of the information."

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each, upper or lower set, £1. Best quality, 4s. each, upper or lower, £2, completed in four hours when required, repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18ct. gold 15s.; stopping, 2s. 6d. extraction, 1s. Painless by gas, 5s.

Printed and Published by G. W. [illegible] Stonecutter Street Farringdon Street, [illegible]

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

Vol. X.—No. 20.] SUNDAY, MAY 18, 1890. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

MR. GLADSTONE ON THE CREATION STORY.

[CONCLUDED.]

Now let us return to the centre of Mr. Gladstone's argument. Everything turns upon his convenient theory that the six days of creation are not six literal days, but six "chapters in the history of the creation." By this means he seeks to overcome the difficulty of the fact that the order of creation in Genesis does not properly correspond with the teachings of Evolution. The Mosaic writer, it appears, anticipated the modern fashion of writing history, of which we have the first great example in Gibbon. His order is not strictly chronological, but in accord with his subject matter. Thus "in point of chronology his chapters overlay." So that, if light exists three days before the creation of the sun, the explanation is that the Mosaist simply puts them in different chapters, not for chronological reasons, but for a special purpose. And what was that purpose? Mr. Gladstone says it was "to convey moral and spiritual training." He goes to the length of saying that "the conveyance of scientific instruction" would not have been "a reasonable object for the Mosaic writer to pursue." An ordinary person might suppose the Deity capable of imparting scientific instruction as well as moral instruction, and the Jews capable of receiving the one as well as the other. Mr. Gladstone's theory implies a very serious limitation of God's power, or a no less serious misconception of the causes of human progress. Is not science as necessary as morality? Is there much use in desiring the welfare of mankind without the knowledge of how to promote it? Will a good-hearted doctor do a patient any service if he is lacking in skill? Buckle, indeed, contended that civilisation was entirely owing to the advance of the intellect, and very much the same contention was advanced by Macaulay. But here is Mr. Gladstone arguing that "moral and spiritual training" is most necessary, while mental training is so unimportant that the Deity wisely refrained from taking the trouble to assist us in that respect.

We have already said that Mr. Gladstone's interpretation of the "six days" as "six chapters" is arbitrary. Neither the chosen people, nor their inspired teachers, ever understood their cosmogony in that sense. They existed before the days of antagonism between the Bible and Science, when new meanings have to be discovered in every part of God's Word. They took the language of Genesis, as the Church of England presents its Articles, in the plain, grammatical sense of the words. It is too late to rescue the Mosaist in Mr. Gladstone's manner. The "six chapters" theory is worthy of the old parliamentary hand, but he himself perceives its inadequacy, or why does he endeavor to show that the chronological order of creation is after all in harmony with the conclusions of modern science? Will it be believed that after pressing his super-subtle argument through thick and thin; after declaring that day is not day, and morning and evening not morning and evening; after claiming that the Mosaist sacrificed chronology for the sake of shaping his chapters so as to convey a moral and spiritual and not a scientific lesson; will it be believed that, after all this, Mr. Gladstone goes on to argue for so close an agreement between Genesis and Science that nothing short of inspiration is adequate to account for it? Yet that is precisely what he does. "The Creation Story in Genesis," he asserts, "appears to stand in such a relation to the facts of natural science so far as they are ascertained, as to warrant our concluding that they first proceeded, in a manner above the ordinary manner, from the Author of the visible creation." Or as he expresses it in his concluding sentences, "to warrant and require thus far the conclusion that the Ordainer of Nature, and the Giver or Guide of the Creation Story, are one and the same."

This is clearly a complete change of front. The "six chapters" theory is virtually discarded as useless, and Mr. Gladstone proceeds to defend the scientific character of Genesis. The Creation Story was a scientific lesson after all, only it was skilfully disguised. Moses anticipated Darwin; in fact, Moses is the original author and Darwin is only the commentator. Such is the true character of Mr. Gladstone's theory, and in arguing it he flounders, as might be expected, in a morass of bad science, bold assumption, and wild exegesis.

According to Genesis the earth was at first "without form and void," a description hard to realise, and "the spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters." Now Mr. Gladstone is aware that "the Hebrew word for earth means earth, and the word used for water never means anything but water." How then is this to be explained away? Why easily. The Hebrew word always means water, but the Mosaist meant something else. He meant that the world was at first fluid, and as the people he wrote for only knew of one extensive fluid, namely water, he called it water to suit their comprehension. But in reality he was adumbrating the nebular hypothesis. That, at any rate, is what Mr. Gladstone argues, and we will not venture to refute him. We can only stare with astonishment at his coolness—not to use a harsher word; and we suspect that the writers of the Creation Story, if they could live again and read Mr. Gladstone's article, would be quite as astonished as we are.

The Mosaist, it seems, not only sketched (in a very occult manner) the nebular theory, but showed how "the chaos passed into cosmos, or, in other words, how confusion became order, medley became sequence, seeming anarchy became majestic law, and horror softened into beauty." But chaos is not a doctrine of science. It belongs to the old Pagan cosmogonies. The laws of nature obtained in the fiery cloud whirled off from the sun precisely as they do now it has cooled down into a solid planet. According to Mr. Gladstone's science, if we may reason from analogy, there is cosmos in a cubic inch of cold water, and chaos in a cubic foot of steam.

Digitized by Google

With regard to the existence of light three days before the sun, Mr. Gladstone tells us that it simply means (observe how he knows what the Mosaist meant but did not say) that the sun became visible in that stage. The earth's photosphere, or something, cleared away, and "the visibility of the sun was established"—when there was no one to see it. The "light-power" became "concentrated by the operation of the rotatory principle," and —— But how on earth are we to go on? Our gravity is not equal to Mr. Gladstone's. We require an interval for laughter.

Modern science has told us the truth about the stars. Outside our solar system there are other and mightier systems. But it was natural for the Jews to regard the stars as dots of light. The sun and the moon were the "two great lights," and the stars were thrown in with an "also." But "relativity is the basis of the narrative," and the Mosaist wrote like an ignoramus, not because he was not as wise as Herschel, but because his readers were too thick-headed to learn the truth. He was like the gentleman in the play, who "could an' he would."

The Mosaist also tells us that not only grasses, but the later fruit trees, grew before the sun shone upon the earth. This nonsense was exposed by Professor Huxley, but Mr. Gladstone has not profited by that discussion. Assuming that the sun, in the Creation Story, can be shuffled in before the earth, and that our planet was veiled in vapor, he argues that "there were light and heat, atmosphere with its conditions of moist and dry, soil prepared to do its work in nutrition," and so the Mosaist is saved by the skin of his teeth. But the argument is really too barefaced. Fruit trees are not a part of the world's primitive fauna. They are probably later than man himself.

Mr. Gladstone strains his faculties in vain to reconcile the Creation Story with palœontology. He cannot work in reptiles and marsupials, so he says they did not come within the Mosiast's "moral and spiritual" purpose. Then there is the difficulty that fish and fowl are created on the same day, while geology shows they are separated by millions of years. But day does not mean day. The Mosaist simply puts them in the same chapter, and he puts the fowl after the fish, and that is the right order.

After all this special pleading, the credit of the Mosaist being saved at every point by incessant assumption and forced logic, Mr. Gladstone advances to his triumphant conclusion. The Creation Story is a perfect miracle of scientific anticipation, and if God did not write it who did? But it will be observed that the old parliamentary hand is silent as to the creation of man. "As the objector is silent," he says, "I remain silent also." The objector silent, indeed! Whatever objector has Mr. Gladstone in his mind? The account of Adam and Eve is the most difficult, and the most ludicrous, part of the Creation Story. Up to that point the writer preserves a certain grandeur, however mistaken; but the narrative of Adam's production from dust, and Eve's production from one of his ribs, to say nothing of the farce of the Fall, and the six thousand years' chronology, is positively food for mirth. Mr. Gladstone is the Rip Van Winkle of religious controversy. For seven years Darwin has lain in his grave, yet Mr. Gladstone writes as though the Newton of biology had never been born. Still Mr. Gladstone's "silence" is not without its eloquence. It shows that the champion of the Creation Story must avoid Darwinism. In the light of that great doctrine, which has revolutionised the world of thought, the Creation Story is an old fable, the drama of Eden a Semitic fiction, the Fall a fallacy, and the foundation of the Christian creed a mere fragment of oriental mythology.

G. W. FOOTE.

THE APOSTLES' SISTERS.

When Christians are told of the ill-effects of their faith, their usual plan is to attribute these effects to corruptions which crept in and tainted the original purity and simplicity of the Church. Why a divine revelation should become tainted is not explained, nor is proof offered of this original purity. The earliest Christian writings, those of Paul, exhibit a scene of perpetual strife between the apostles who adhered to the declaration of Christ that he was sent only to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, and the self-constituted "apostle to the Gentiles." Paul boasts himself "not a whit behind the very chiefest apostles" (2 Cor. xi., 5), speaks of others as "false apostles, deceitful workers" (v. 13), sneers at James, Cephas and John as seeming to be pillars (Gal. ii., 9) and declares he withstood Peter to the face because he acted the hypocrite (v. 11-13).

Paul tells us of the "envying, strife and divisions" among the believers (1 Cor. iii., 3), whom he accuses of being "drunken" at the Lord's Supper (1 Cor. xi., 21), and of having wickedness among them such as was "not so much as named among the Gentiles" (1 Cor., v. 1).

Speaking of the primitive Christians, Dr. Donaldson, the editor of the Ante-Nicene Christian Library, says in his paper on Christianity and Woman in the Contemporary Review, Sept. 1889:

"The sects may be divided into two classes. Some affirmed that marriage was unnecessary, that full liberty had been conceded to them of indulging the passion, and that indeed the way to rise to perfection was by a practical acquaintance with all forms of action possible to man. Others held that marriage was immoral, that the flesh was corrupt; that those who sowed to the flesh must reap corruption, and that in the kingdom of God on earth as in heaven there is neither marrying nor giving in marriage."

Again he says:

"It is one of the most striking facts in all history that in the second century the Christians were universally believed by Pagans to be secret conspirators combined for immoral purposes, and at their trials it was sufficient for a man to confess that he was a Christian to be condemned as a licentious villain. The assertions made in regard to them were that they met in secret, that slaughtering an infant they poured his blood into a cup, and that passing this cup round they all drank of it, that then the lights were extinguished and the men and women proceeded to indiscriminate licentiousness."

Of course Dr. Donaldson does not believe in these charges, neither do I. But he agrees there was quite sufficient to give color to the accusation.

"They called each other father and sons, mothers and daughters, brothers and sisters. They were in the habit of assembling before dawn, or at night men and women together in private houses to conduct their worship. The assembly consisted of a strange assortment of characters and grades. The Apostle Paul, in writing to the Corinthian Church, says to them: Be not deceived: neither fornicators, nor idolators, nor adulterers, nor effeminates, nor sodomites, nor thieves, nor cheats, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor plunderers, shall inherit the kingdom of God: and these things were some of you."

Two features of the Christian Church which only survive in the case of some small sects further offered ground for the Pagan charge. These were the agapæ or love feasts at night when they all supped in common, and when, as St. Paul shows (1 Cor. xi.) sometimes intoxication and riotousness prevailed. The other was the custom enjoyed by Paul himself of saluting the brethren "with a holy kiss of love," a custom found to be dangerous, or it would not have decayed, being enjoined upon believers no less then five times in the New Testament, while scores of other Christian practices—as for instance keeping the Sunday holy—are not enjoined at all.

It is noticeable that while the orthodox repelled these charges as against themselves, they were quite ready to admit they were true of the heretics. Says the Rev. S. Baring-Gould in his Lost and Hostile Gospels, p. 26. "Nicolas, a hot Pauline, and his followers, 'rushed headlong into fornication without shame'" [Euseb. Hist. Eccle. iii., 29]; he had the effrontery to produce his wife and offer her for promiscuous insult before the assembled apostles [Ibid]; the later Pauline Christians went further. Irenæus identifies this Nicolas with the one of the seven deacons mentioned in Acts.

Digitized by Google

M. Emile Ferrière, in his work Les Apôtres (Paris, 1879) expresses the conviction that "Les Apôtres dans leurs missions emenenaient chacun une concubine chrétienne." He gives a far from flattering portrait of the twelve apostles, exhibits their obtuse intelligence (Matt. xiii., 36; Mark vii., 18), superstition (Matt. xiv., 26), cupidity (Mark x., 24), jealous rivalry (Matt. xviii., 1), ingratitude and cowardice (Matt. xxvi., 56; Mark xiv., 50). Bad manners (Matt. xv., 2) is added to the indictment. He points out that Christ exhorted to celibacy (Matt. xix., 12), that the disciples were enjoined to abandon not only father and mother, but wife and child (verse 29), and that they regarded this as demanding some recompense (Matt. xix., 27). They were told that whoever had given up house or wife should receive a hundredfold "now in this time" as well as eternal life in the world to come (Mark x., 29-30; Luke xviii., 28-30). From 1 Cor. ix., 5, M. Ferrière argues that it was among the privileges of an apostle to carry about with him a sister-woman who was virtually a concubine. Since the apostles had to give up their wives, he contends that the "woman a sister" there mentioned could not bear the interpretation of being a wife. He points out that these sisters, known as agaptæ or "beloved," were frequently the occasion of scandal, and remained in the Church from the earliest times, not being definitely suppressed until the Lateran Council of 1139.

McClintock and Strong, in their Cyclopædia of Biblical, Theological and Ecclesiastical Literature, article "Agapetæ," say: "In the early ages of the Church this title was given to virgins who dwelt with monks and others professing celibacy, in a state of so-called spiritual love. This intercourse, however pure and holy it may have been at first, soon occasioned great scandal in the Church, and at length became the cause of such evils that it was synodically condemned."

Dr. Hefele, in his standard work on the Christian Councils, writing on Canon 3 of the Council of Nicæa (325) which forbids these Agapetæ or subintroducta, says: "In the first ages of the Church some Christians, clergymen and laymen, contracted a sort of spiritual marriage with unmarried persons, so that they lived together, but there was not a sexual, but a spiritual connection between them, for their mutual spiritual advancement. They were known by the name of suneisaktoi, agapetai and sorores." "That," he adds, "which began in the spirit, however, in many cases ended in the flesh."

In our own time a clergyman, the Rev. Mercer Davies, of Chiswick, has argued in favor of Christians being permitted to have concubines.* He cites the 17th Canon of the Council of Toledo, which distinctly permits those who live with a concubine to receive communion, provided they have not a wife at the same time. The clergyman finds additional reasons from the practice of the Patriarchs. In view of these facts it looks as if the question of the primitive purity of the Christians was worthy of reconsideration.

J. M. Wheeler.

According to the Athenæum, Stanley's forthcoming book is to have for preface an open letter to Sir William Mackinnon, in which the great traveller "repeats his determination to testify to the hand of God before the eyes of men." It is a curious study in religious psychology, how adventurous men like Stanley are prone to see the hand of God in all their successes. Did not Oliver Cromwell call his victory at Worcester "a crowning mercy"? What the Scotch thought of it was something different. The Royalists said Cromwell was in league with the Devil.

* See Hagar, or Lawful Concubinage.

THE GOSPEL OF FACT.

Part I.

Facts are stubborn things. As far as man is concerned, facts are everything. In the pursuit of knowledge it is facts we are after, and experience shows that, like all things valuable, they are hard to get. Schools and colleges and universities are all only institutions for the discovery and utilisation of facts, while books are the storehouses in which discovered facts are preserved for general use. The pursuit of fact is what was Stanley's mission into the heart of the Dark Continent, as it was the same pursuit that moved the great men of old to proceed in their memorable voyages of discovery around the world.

Fact and truth are synonymous terms. Both are used to describe what we know; and at any given time what we call "knowledge" is the sum of the facts or truths we have discovered. But unfortunately most people make a distinction between Fact and Truth; the former, they say, is what they know to be true, while the latter includes in addition what they only believe to be true. This use of the term Truth is a prostitution of its real meaning. We cannot possibly say that any belief is Truth of which we have not actual and trustworthy evidence. To believe a statement as true without adequate grounds is exceedingly foolish; to have faith in its truth is equally insane. Faith and Fact are totally inconsistent. Fact makes faith unnecessary, for what is a fact, or an established truth, renders faith superfluous. Faith in reality is only credulity writ large; and people who express their faith in the truth of any statement only admit that that statement is not a fact. A fact stands on its own legs. The crutch of faith it can neither need nor use.

In man's intercourse with man fact is the great and all-important consideration. Truth in act and truth in word are honesty, and honesty is virtue. On the other hand untruth in act and untruth in word are dishonesty, which is a social crime. In other words, fact is a virtue, and anything not in accordance with fact or contrary to it is reprehensible. This all-important fact which governs every-day life is the fact which our senses recognise and accept. Any thing extern to this is simply not a fact, and is not taken into account between man and man.

In dealing with fact our senses are the sole judge. This is self-evident, as indeed is everything I have said up to the present, for facts are always self-evident. Anything that is not patent to our senses should really have no concern for us except as speculation. Speculation in itself is harmless, and becomes objectionable only when it masquerades as truth or fact, which it has for so long succeeded in doing. The hold which speculative teaching has obtained on men's minds justifies the disciples of fact in eschewing all speculation and adhering strictly to their Gospel, which excludes nothing that is a fact, and admits nothing contrary to or unknown to human reason.

The Gospel of Fact then is the simplest of all gospels. It contains nothing that is not known to be true, and truth is simplicity itself. It is not however a stereotyped, cast-iron sort of gospel. It expands as human knowledge increases; and it accompanies the scientist in his voyages of discovery, encourages him in his investigation, and joyfully accepts the truths he is able to demonstrate. In short, the scientist—who uses nothing but fact whereby to discover other facts, and who deals with nothing but what is evident to human reason—is at once the founder, the supporter, and the preacher of the Gospel of Fact.

While the Gospel of Fact is elastic enough to accept discovered truths at all times, it is otherwise a stern, inexorable Gospel. No fine theories, however plausible or clever, can be included in its tenets, nor be tolerated at all except in so far as they seem to be reasonable deductions from established truths.

Digitized by Google

What we know of ourselves and of the world is the limit of the Gospel of Fact. That we exist, that we have feelings, that we have eyes to see and minds to think, are the facts that are the groundwork of all our knowledge. That there is a world, wonderful, grand and beautiful; that there are sun and moon and stars, magnificent, brilliant and moving with inexorable regularity, are facts that every human being is aware of. Practically, this is the sum total of the teachings of the Gospel of Fact. This much we know; more than this we cannot know. Our minds are such that it is beyond their power not alone to know how the world originated, but even to conceive it as originating at all. That the universe is there, and that it reveals its nature and its motions to our senses, are facts enough for us. Behind this we cannot go. Beyond the visible and apparent attributes of nature all is mystery and uncertainty; all is incomprehensible. The Gospel of Fact shuts it absolutely out, and completely ignores it. Because the mind cannot unravel the mystery is no reason why we should trouble ourselves by endeavoring to account for things by plausible explanations and apologies. We must take things as they are, admit nothing but what we know, and not bother about reconciling fact with speculation, or speculation with fact.

As to the origin of Nature, if it had an origin within human comprehension, we now know nothing, and mayhap may never know anything. As to the ultimate destiny of Nature, we are and must be in equal ignorance. But this really does not matter. Established facts are what we have to deal with, and nothing else. As to the origin of life and mind and reason, we are not in such blank ignorance. Evolution may not be the absolutely correct theory of the origin of species and the development of the human mind; but it is the nearest to the truth that we have yet been able to get. Evolution as a whole may not be allowed to form a portion of the Gospel of Fact, as it is not absolutely devoid of all speculation; but in so far as its principles are deductions from fact, and in strict accordance with human reason, it is not only allowable but essential that evolutionary principles, in the main, should form a portion of the Gospel of Fact.

It might be more satisfactory if the Gospel of Fact was not so limited as it is. With this, however, we have nothing to do. Unsatisfactory or otherwise, fact is fact. Wishing things to be different, or trying to convince ourselves that they are different, will not help matters. If we do try to so convince ourselves we are merely using our minds, which can only comprehend facts, for the purpose of endeavoring to explain matters which our reason tells us are inexplicable. By speculating at random the mind is abused, as it is used for purposes for which it is unfit and worthless. In strict truth, therefore, the name Freethinker is somewhat paradoxical, as it implies a man who denies himself the freedom of mind to soar into the realms of speculation, where all is doubt and uncertainty.

J. O'Donovan.

(To be continued.)

The criminal statistics fully justify the expenditure devoted to education since the School Board Act of 1870. In 1868-69 there was one known thief to every 1,000 of the population. In 1887-88 the percentage had fallen by nearly half, and there was only one known thief to every 1,945. The decrease in receivers of stolen goods is still more marked; in 1868-69 there was one in 8,430, in 1887-88 one in 25,595. Murders have, however, increased, which perhaps is not to be wondered at, since every condemned murderer is sure to evoke a deal of public sympathy, in addition to having secure quarters in Abraham's bosom.

ACID DROPS.

General Caprivi is apparently as pious as Prince Bismarck. In his speech on Monday he said that "the rifle and the Bible must do the work of Christianity" in Africa. That they will do so who doubts? They have done it in America, and in the course of a century or two the African blacks will probably be as rare as the American redskins. Their exterminators will pray and prey, and however unscrupulous the white policy may be the men of God will be found "to bless it and approve it with a text."

Any clergyman who wants a striking opportunity for a sermon on Prayer might avail himself of the recent fire at a large lunatic asylum near Montreal. Many of the inmates were burnt to death, most of the poor creatures having been too frightened to move. The rescuers strove with great gallantry, and in one or two cases lost their own lives. But the personage called Providence did nothing. After creating the poor lunatics in such a boggled fashion that they were incapable of helping themselves, he left them to their fate when they were threatened by the most agonising form of death. We are not saying that this shocking calamity proves the inefficacy of prayer, or the non-existence of Providence; but we do say it would give a justifier of the ways of God to men a splendid scope for the strenuous exercise of all his faculties.

The newspapers will write nonsense about Mr. Bradlaugh. Here is the London correspondent of the Western Morning News asking if Mr. Bradlaugh is to be "a preacher of the faith he once reviled," and gravely asserting that "the idea is mooted in religious circles, and there are outside indications enough to cause it to be regarded seriously, even by those who know 'Iconoclast' well." This will be news indeed to some who do know Mr. Bradlaugh well, or at any rate better than the writer of this oracular rubbish. Our old general is very much talked of at present, and he hears a great deal of novel information about himself. The gentlemen of the press credit him with religious virtues, which he repudiates every week in the National Reformer.

The Morning News man draws on his imagination very freely. He refers to the "bitter hostility" shown towards Mr. Bradlaugh in "some of the blatant organs of the more blasphemous." Names, please. But of course they will not be given. It is a pious invention à la Hugh Price Hughes.

That funny paper The Christian Herald and Signs of Our Times looks on the railroad from Jaffa to Jerusalem as a fulfilment of prophecy. The Bible writers, however, quite forgot to mention any of the inventions of modern science. We guess the railway will help cut up the supposed sanctity of the Holy Land.

The same paper, under the heading of "Anecdotes and Incidents at Gospel and Temperance Meetings," has a story of a nameless "gentleman" who until the last five months was "an infidel and a follower of Charles Bradlaugh and Mrs. Besant." This "gentleman" was in the habit of jeering at his wife and religion, and, after the usual fashion of infidels, "burnt her Bibles and religious books." But she, good woman, never ceased to pray for him, and he is now "a believing, faithful [but nameless] Christian."

"H. S. B." writes to the Hornsey and Finsbury Park Journal asking that the Secularist lectures in Finsbury Park shall not be allowed "to poison the sweet stillness of the Sabbath and the minds of our people" He says he shall bring the matter before the London County Council, but is evidently doubtful of the result since he asks, "Could not some Evangelist, accompanied by a good choir, do something to remedy the sad state of affairs of which I complain." "H. S. B." evidently trusts to Freethought being suppressed by authority or by noise rather than by argument.

According to the Weekly Times and Echo, "the casuistry with which Mr. Gladstone evades the objections of plain people to the obvious fact that the author or authors of Genesis contradict themselves hopelessly in the first chapter is worthy of a Jesuit."

Digitized by Google

The chaplain of the American House of Representatives on April 30 caused consternation by protesting against the blasphemy used during a debate. The States seem to have a profane Parliament or a particular chaplain.

Sky-pilots are proverbially prolific. We suppose they trust in Providence and human stupidity for provision for their families. Last year the Poor Clergy Relief Corporation relieved 127 curates who had families of from five, the lowest, to twelve children. Their average income was £115 each, which is regarded as a beggarly stipend for a man of God who must keep up appearances.

The Wesleyan Missionaries urge that if their salaries are reduced, those of home ministers should be equally reduced in proportion, and they propose to begin with the salary of Hugh Price Hughes, whose West-end Mission has bled the Wesleyan body so profusely.

There was quite a scene at the Glasgow Presbytery of the Established Church. Only six out of thirteen candidates for the ministry brought certificates with them and the Rev. R. Thomson insisted on their being catechised. They were accordingly asked the stupid questions about election, justification and sanctification from the Shorter Catechism, and their replies induced Mr. Thomson to say it was a shame to pass such men. Mr. Thomson then took to catechising himself. Addressing one student, he asked "Who is the author of the first five books of the Bible?" Student: "Moses." "Did he write by inspiration or invention?" Student: "Inspiration." "That's right," said Mr. Thomson, quite satisfied as to the orthodoxy of this candidate.

The Liverpool Citizen (May 7), in an article on the Corporation Churches, gives figures showing that they cost the city an annual loss of £2,748. It suggests that it would be better if they were let at a low rent to the Salvation Army.

Orthodoxy can only advance by the march of its expounding army away from its base of supplies. And it can only forage on the enemy by becoming the enemy's. Orthodoxy is in a bad way, because the world is moving. To move forward with it is death to orthodoxy; to stay behind and let it move on is extinction to orthodoxy.—Ironclad Age.

An American paper remarks on the inscription on their coinage, "In God we trust," that it should properly read "In this God we trust."

The Christian Life, the organ of the backward Unitarians, writes of the late Sunday demonstration in Hyde Park under the title "Labor's Debt to the Bible." If we may believe Genesis, the laborer is indebted to Adam for the curse of labor. We do not recollect any passage exhorting to shorter hours, though we do to "be content with your wages."

Five thousand Italian dupes made a pilgrimage to Rome last week, and were addressed by the Pope, whom they hailed with "Long live Pope King." The dispatch describing the affair says that "the Pope admitted to kiss his feet the principal personages of the pilgrimage." It is presumed the other members of the party had to content themselves with less exalted privileges.

The poor old Pope laments that ungodliness is now exalted in Italy. He says, "Look at the men whose names are now selected for honor after death, men who died opposing Christianity—men like Mazzini and Saffi." Yes, people are beginning to see that progress is owing to men who not only put aside the papal creed but fought against the continual enemy of freedom.

The Pope is anxious to proclaim as a dogma of the Universal Church that the Papacy should have temporal power. Does he hope that other Catholic nations would enforce the claim? If so he will be sorely disappointed. The proclamation of the temporal power will only exasperate the Italian Liberals and convince the world that the Papacy can neither learn nor forget.

A fact was recently mentioned by Dr. Sadler in connection with the life of Priestley, which we do not remember having heard before. Everyone knows how Priestley's house at Birmingham was attacked by rioters in 1792; but Dr. Sadler says Priestley's granddaughter told him that on four occasions an attempt was made on his life. It was no joke to avow unpopular opinions a century ago. No wonder Priestley thought it best to end his days in America.

Beza, in his history of the Reformation in France (Geneva, 1580) says that a parrot that had been taught to say "Fi de la messe!" was arraigned before the Inquisition at Toulouse, condemned, and publicly burnt by the executioner."

The Birkenhead and Cheshire Advertiser has thought fit to rather summarily close the discussion on "Has Christianity had its Day?" suppressing some passages as blasphemous in the letters of "True Blue," which it nevertheless justly speaks of as "ably and logically expressed."

Hazlitt records that when the Persian Ambassador was at Edinburgh, an old Presbyterian lady, more full of zeal than discretion, fell upon him for his supposed idolatrous belief, and said: "I hear you worship the sun!" "In faith, Madam," he replied, "and so would you too, if you had ever seen him."

The Bishops of Melbourne and Ballarat have directed the clergy in their dioceses to refuse to officiate at any marriage of persons divorced under the new Victorian Act, or to issue marriage licences to such parties. The clergy are always stout supporters of the law while it serves their turn, and turbulent law-breakers when it does not. The action of the Australian bishops may do something to render civil marriages more common.

M. Bouchor, the manager of the famous marionette performances in Paris, announces that he is preparing a new piece entitled, "The Mystery of the Nativity," which is to be performed entirely by these wooden figures, and produced with scenery, costumes, and music designed and composed for the occasion. We are assured that though the Virgin holding the infant Jesus will appear in the last act, she will not be made to speak, though she will sing a cradle song It seem that the traditional comic personages of the mediæval "moralities" will be represented by "Asmodeus the demon," who will deliver a humorous discourse. The action will be comprised in four tableaux, representing the stable in Bethlehem, the shepherds in the fields, the star of the Magi, and the Adoration.

No doubt the marionette play will be far more amusing than the passion play at Oberammergau, which is a dreadfully serious business. The old passion plays which used to import some humor into the characters of Satan, Judas, and Caiaphas, were suppressed, and that at Oberammergau is nearly the only one left which is regularly performed, viz., every Sunday in summer every ten years, it is said in accordance with a religious vow in consequence of being spared from a plague.

Scenic representations played a large part in religion formerly, and seeing that to this day they go through the performance of a crucifixion and resurrection in Jerusalem at Easter, it may be questioned whether the ancient performance of lamentation for the death of the sun-god and joy at his resurrection did not give rise to the story. Myth is often founded upon ritual.

Herr Meyer, the villager who is to take the part of J. C. in the Oberammergau Passion Play, suffers like some other gentlemen who go into training. He has been used to attending the village inn, drinking beer and playing at skittles; but these habits are considered infra dig., and the poor fellow is obliged to leave them off until he ceases to be Jesus Christ and once more becomes plain Jacob Meyer. For our own part, however, when we reflect on J. C.'s partiality for wine, and how he manufactured seventy-five gallons in five minutes, we incline to think that public opinion is unnecessarily hard on his histrionic successor.

Mr. James Neate, the secretary of the Bethnal Green Branch, has been trying desperately to obtain a hall for a course of free Secular lectures in the East of London, but he has everywhere met with refusal. The Hope Town Hall was "engaged." The Morley Hall was "built to specially promote the cause of Christianity." It is therefore available for Celestine Edwards, the black preacher, to attack Freethought, but not for a Secularist lecturer to defend it. St. Andrew's Hall is under the control of the vicar, who curtly "regrets he cannot" etc. St. John's School-room is also unavailable. Victoria Hall likewise is "not available for the objects of the Secular Society."

Digitized by Google

The Christian gentleman who sent Mr. Neate the information as to Victoria Hall is not a sworn enemy of discussion, only he likes it all on one side. He "encloses a little book," which he commends to Mr. Neate's notice. It is a pamphlet by a lawyer, who rejoices in the ironical name of Lamb, and its title is Unbelief, England's Greatest Sin.

We hope the Bethnal Green Branch will advertise this bigotry. A neat tract, working in these letters of refusal with pointed comments, should do good in the East-end. It is well that the public should know how respectable citizens are treated by the proprietors of halls in that district.

The Literary Society of South Shields is a sensitive body. One of the members of the South Shields Branch of the N. S. S. inserted an advertisement in one of the local papers. "respectfully informing" the members of the Literary Society that Mr. Foote was going to lecture last Sunday morning in the Free Library on Shelley. Nothing whatever was said about the other lectures. However, the Literary Society—or rather its orthodox members—could not stand it, and another advertisement was inserted, informing the world that the Society was not responsible for the first advertisement, as if any sane person supposed it was. The manœuvre did not spoil Mr. Foote's audience. Even the rain did not do that. We therefore condole with the Literary Society, and regret that its members are too exalted to hear what was relished by the Shelley Society. Perhaps, after all, the fussy bigots whose bristles were drawn out by the advertisement, would be surprised to learn that more than one passive member of the National Secular Society is in their midst.

Henry Rouse, the skipper of a Lowestoft fishing-boat cruising off Cornwall, has more religion than is good for him. He went through the streets of Newlyn with a Bible under one arm, flourishing his hat with the other, and warning the people of the coming end of the world. He frequently knelt in the streets and offered up prayers. He found his way to Penzance, where being followed by a crowd he was arrested and charged with being a wandering lunatic. It seems he had previouly suffered with too strong a dose of the Holy Ghost and was locked up in Plymouth last year.

A medical man, who made a foolish speech after one of Mr. Foote's lectures at Cardiff, has started a monthly magazine called Body and Soul. He devotes a good deal of space to criticising the lecture on "The Gospel of Secularism," and is especially surprised that the Freethinkers did not cry when Mr. Foote told them that, in his opinion, death was an eternal sleep. This is a fair sample of Dr. Williams's sense, and everyone will understand why we do not comment any further on his remarkable criticisms.

The Rev. Walter Walsh, of Newcastle, did not attend Mr. Foote's afternoon lecture, "A Defence of Atheism," although he was specially invited. Nor will he hold a public debate with Mr. Foote. But he appears to like discussion all the same. Now Mr. Foote is in London again the reverend gentleman is going to reply. He has issued bills announcing that he will defend his own lecture and reply to Mr. Foote's this afternoon (May 18). Probably he will demolish the Atheist, but at the same time it is unfortunate that he shrinks from meeting the Atheist face to face. If he prefers a written debate, we shall be happy to put the Freethinker at his service.

Stanley, it appears, owes something to the superstition of the Arabs. His white cap, designed and made by himself from a piece of tenting as a protection against the sun, was always recognised as a talisman or charm. The Jewish phylacteries ordered Deut. vi., 8, are also of the nature of talismans.

Another action against Dr. Barnardo was heard last week at the Queen's Bench. It was brought by a Catholic mother, who had placed her child with Dr. Barnado, but now wants the boy brought up a Catholic. It appears that the woman was so little particular that she had the child baptised at a Protestant church, just (as she explained) because a neighbor's child went, and sent it to a Protestant school because it was one minute's walk nearer than the Catholic school. Now the priests have taken up the case her religious scruples are aroused and she wants the child back. The case well illustrates Mr. O'Donovan's recent article on the traffic in souls.

A person applied at Bow Street for a summons against Sir T. Phayre, the chairman of a meeting of the Protestant Reformation Society at Exeter Hall who because the applicant said to a speaker "Don't overlook the ruined souls" rose in an excited manner and incited the people to turn him out. He was gripped by the throat and ejected, this being the usual way in which Exeter Hall Christians turn the other cheek. The summons was not granted.

The London Society for promoting Christianity among the Jews has been holding its annual meeting. The society's expenditure last year was £35,455 but it wisely withholds the number of its converts.

A large majority of the Prussian Upper House has voted in favor of the separation of Jews and Christians in public schools, owing to the Christians being outnumbered in some of the higher educational institutes. While Christians outnumbered Jews there was no cry for a remedy.

John the Baptist Freund was charged with causing a crowd to assemble at Exeter Hall, by waving a flag and blowing a small trumpet. He said his was a small crowd compared to what surround the Salvation Army, and hoped his offence would be overlooked on account of his endeavor to preach the truth. He was bound over to keep the peace, which, if it means holding his peace, John the Baptist Freund will find very difficult.

Mr. T. G. Barry sent a letter, headed "Warning," to the Grimsby News. He bewailed the dreadful fact that shocking infidel lectures were announced outside the Hall of Science, and hinted that some mark of God's displeasure would fall upon the town if the authorities did not enforce the Blasphemy Laws against these profane wretches. Grimsby, however, is not so easily frightened as it used to be, and the authorities are in no hurry to get some of the most respected citizens thrown into prison. Mr. S. Alward and Mr. J. W. Wittering have given Prophet Barry a good dressing in the News, and there the matter is likely to rest.

By the way, if Prophet Barry is really anxious to put down "blasphemy" in Grimsby, there is a short and easy way of doing it. Let him pray to the Lord for help, and then go into the Hall of Science, and imitate Samson, who slew a thousand men with the jawbone of an ass. Prophet Barry has the necessary weapon, and, with a proper supply of inspiration, he should be able to demolish all the "infidels" in Grimsby.

"Where are the dead?" was the subject of a sermon by Mr. Isaac Pitman at Bristol last Sunday. We very much doubt if he has any firsthand information on the subject, but "no matter, the time will come," and when the veteran phonographer joins the majority he will be able to preach, if at all, with greater authority. "Where are the dead?" is a subject on which a dead man would be the most convincing preacher. But, as the Bible says, the dead know not anything, unless they are too discreet to blab.

Hypnotism, which the Theosophists regard as proving the existence of soul, is being played very low in Paris. Dr. Luys has found that men can be fascinated like larks, by revolving colored glasses. After watching for some time they drop off into immobility, the retina having first been affected, and afterwards the whole nervous system. When completely under the spell they are made to go through the usual antics; and it would seem, from the reasoning of some folk, that when a man has been hypnotised, and made to play the fool, it is clearly demonstrated that he has an immortal spirit.

Digitized by Google

MR. FOOTE'S ENGAGEMENTS.

Sunday, May 18, Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, London, E.C., at 7.30, "Is there a Future Life?'

May 25, N. S. S. Conference at Manchester.

June 1, Hall of Science, London; 8, Gladstone Radical Club and Hall of Science, London; 15, Manchester; 22, Liverpool; 29, Reading.

July 13, Hall of Science; 27, Hall of Science.

August 31, Birmingham.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

LITERARY communications to be addressed to the Editor, 14 Clerkenwell Green, London, E.C. All business communications to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C.

THE Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the office, post free to any part of Europe, America, Canada and Egypt, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 6s. 6d.; Half Year, 3s. 3d.; Three Months, 1s. 7½d. Australia, China and Africa:—One Year, 8s. 8d.; Half Year, 4s. 4d.; Three Months, 2s. 2d. India:—One Year, 10s. 10d.; Half Year, 5s. 5d. Three Months. 2s. 8½d.

SCALE OF ADVERTISEMENTS.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 3s; Half Column, 15s.; Column, £1 10s. Special terms for repetitions

IT being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will in future receive the number when their subscription expires in a colored wrapper.

T. W. READE.—Certainly you are eligible as a member of the N. S. S. We have asked Mr. Forder to send you a form to fill in.

A. WHEELER, W. Lappage and others, omitted to mark their envelopes with "Lecture Notice." Their communications were sent on to Mr. Foote in the North of England, and were thus too late for last week's Freethinker. We beg the secretaries of Branches to observe this rule, which is not a very onerous one.

J. MILTON.—Mrs. Besant's new belief is called Theosophy. You should read her pamphlet, Why I became a Theosophist, and also Mr. Foote's three pamphlets on the subject, if you want to know what it is all about.

J. SPENCER.—Your experience in hospitals is not novel. Those institutions are wretchedly sectarian. Of course a copy of the Freethinker is enough to throw the sisters into hysterics.

G. ARMITAGE.—Mr. Foote did not mean to suggest that Mr. Walsh's religion was a matter of £ s. d. Mr. Walsh talks like an honest man, and no doubt is one, only he lets his emotion run away with his reason.

W. HUNTER.—Mr. Bradlaugh's health is very much improved, but he is not his old self yet, and we hope his friends, political and freethought, will not press him to try his strength before he has fully recovered. Thanks for the cutting.

J. PARKER.—Thanks for cutting and enclosure.

BRUNO.—We cannot answer medical questions. Write to Dr. Allinson, 4 Spanish Place, Manchester Square, London, W.

H. G. SHEPHERD.—Thanks See Sugar Plums.

JAMES NEATE.—The East-end of London is more bigoted than we thought. It is really surprising in such a working-class quarter of London.

A. J. F.—The father's bigotry is contemptible, but we hope your friend will be able to adjust himself to his new circumstances. Even a father who wants to force his opinions down your throat is better at a distance.

W. H. JACKSON.—Read Greg's Creed of Christendom, and if possible Supernatural Religion. Reade's Martyrdom of Man, Strauss's Old Faith and the New, and Mirabaud's System of Nature, are also worth your attention. Glad to hear you circulate six copies of this journal in the house where you are employed, and that you have made several conversions during the last month or two.

W. HOLLAND.—Thanks for the batch of jokes.

C. P.—The tract is one of the multitude of silly things issued by Christians. It is hardly worth our notice. No young man it could influence has brains enough to be a Freethinker.

W. NICHOLS.—There is no such danger. Mr. Forder might be able to supply you with a copy of the Owen-Bachelor debate.

C. BUSSIE.—Omitted by accident, but acknowledged this week. Thanks for the book of engravings.

REX REGES.—The Rev. Mr. McFarlane was quite right. The man who can read the Bible without seeing that Jehovah was a purely national god must have a twist in his brain.

W. A. NEWCOMB, 320 Westminster Road, Kirkdale, Liverpool, has a large collection of Freethinkers, National Reformers, and other Freethought literature, which he will be happy to send to any Branch for distribution. This correspondent is thanked for his good wishes.

R. HASTINGS. Stuff and nonsense! Secularism does not deny moral responsibility, if that means the law of duty. Certainly it does not teach that delicate children should be slaughtered. Your Christian friend is trying to impose on you.

FREETHINKERS' BENEVOLENT FUND.—E. Harriman (Liverpool), 2s. 6d.

"FREETHINKER" CIRCULATION FUND.—T. Parker, 1s.

J. J. BYRON.—We take it that, in the note you refer to, Shelley is only expressing the logical force of that particular argument. There is no destruction of matter in the disappearance of the moon's atmosphere. It is absorbed by the satellite, which is like a big cinder.

JOSEPH BROWN, hon. sec. North Eastern Secular Federation, 86 Durham Street, Bentinck, Newcastle-on-Tyne, acknowledges the following subscriptions:—Newcastle Branch, 8s.; Mr. Gillespie, 2s.; J. Brown, 2s. 6d.; H. Sanderson, 2s.; A Friend (per Mr. Peacock) 10s. 6d.; collected at Mr. Foote's Newcastle lecture, £1 3s. 1d.; Peter Weston, 17s. 6d.

R. O. SMITH, hon. treasurer London Secular Federation, acknowledges 2s. 6d. from A. Moss.

BRENO.—The name shall not be divulged. Kuenen's Religion of Israel.

J. ROBINSON.—Pleased to hear that you and your wife, who heard Mr. Foote for the first time at Newcastle, were so delighted. If every reader of this journal were to subscribe not less than five shillings a year to the N. S. S, a large income would be realised, and the cause would progress with leaps and bounds.

PAPERS RECEIVED.—Neues Freireligioses Sonntags Blatt—Der Arme Teufel—Western Figaro—Liberator—Truthseeker—Ironclad Age—Bulletin des Sommaires—Menschenthum—Progressive Thinker—Fair Play—Freidenker—Freethought—Liverpool Citizen—People's Press—Freedom—Christian Life—Hornsey and Finsbury Park Journal—Christian Herald—Twentieth Century — Knowledge — Hertford Monthly Magazine—Body and Soul—Birkenhead and Cheshire Advertiser—Liverpool Citizen—Cornish Telegraph—Echo—Postmen's Gazette—Secular Thought—The Glasgow Herald—Northern Daily Telegraph.

FRIENDS who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish our attention directed.

CORRESPONDENCE should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

THE FREETHOUGHT FUND.

MR. FOOTE'S appeal, as President of the National Secular Society, for funds to extend the Society's work, is being responded to by friends in various parts of the country. Some of the subscribers promise to remit annually as much as they can afford; others, who can only send a little at a time, promise to remit half-yearly or quarterly. As soon as possible a list of intending subscribers will be prepared. Meanwhile the following subscriptions are acknowledged as actually received by Mr. Foote or Mr. Forder.

Fifth List.

	£	s.	d.		£	s.	d.
W. Holland	0	2	6	W. O.	0	5	0
C. B.	1	0	0	J. H. Ridgway	0	2	6
J. Robinson (qrtrly)	0	1	3	J. Partridge	0	2	6
E. L. G.	5	0	0	James Laing	1	1	0

ANNUAL CONFERENCE N.S.S.

The Reception Committee will be in attendance at the Secular Hall, Rusholme Road, All Saints, Manchester, on Saturday, the 24th inst., and on Sunday morning from 9 o'clock, to receive delegates.

Delegates, on arriving in Manchester, are requested to take the tram for All Saints, which church is only two minutes' walk from the hall.

Delegates requiring lodgings will please inform the undersigned, stating whether they prefer private or hotel accommodation, and if for one or more nights.

Arrangements are being made for luncheon after the morning sitting, and also for tea at the close of the afternoon sitting, and we shall be pleased if friends intending to partake of same will kindly notify to that effect.

Arrangements have also been made for a limited number to view the workings of the Manchester Ship Canal, on Whit Monday, commencing at the Salford Docks, and inspecting the works along the Canal (about three miles) to Barton Docks, assembling at the Secular Hall at 10 a.m., and returning to the Hall after the inspection for tea, etc. Tickets, including railway fares and tea, 2s. each. Delegates and friends who intend taking advantage of this opportunity must send in their names to the Secretary, the number being strictly limited.

A. HEMINGWAY, Hon. Sec.

25 Higher Chatham Street, Manchester.

Digitized by Google

SUGAR PLUMS.

Mr. Foote lectures to-night (May 18) at the London Hall of Science on "Is There a Future Life?" The lectures now begin at half-past seven.

Mr. Foote's lecturing tour in the North closed on Sunday night. During the preceding week, after the Sunday lectures at Newcastle, he visited North Shields, Middlesboro, Sunderland, Darlington and Dipton. Most of the lectures were followed by discussion, especially at Middlesboro, where the proceedings ended at a late hour. Some of the Christian champions were great curiosities. One declared, at Middlesboro, that St. Paul was one of the three most learned men that ever lived Mr. Foote innocently asked him who were the other two, and the reply was "Milton and Shakespeare." Shade of Ben Jonson! It was a wonder the ghost of Rare Old Ben did not appear, and swear a rattling Mermaid oath.

Sunday morning at South Shields was "a caution." The rain poured down spitefully. But notwithstanding the deluge a very fair audience assembled to hear the lecture on Shelley. The afternoon meeting was still better, and, the weather clearing up, there was a first-rate house at night. Altogether the North Eastern Secular Federation is well satisfied with Mr. Foote's visit, and is full of hope for the cause of Secularism in the district. New members are being enrolled, persons of means and influence are joining the movement, subscriptions are flowing in more rapidly, every branch of the work is being developed, and the press is taking notice of the cause as one that can no longer be ignored.

For some time the Sunderland Branch has been languishing. There was great difficulty in obtaining a hall for lectures. But the Assembly Room is now available again for week nights, and perhaps for Sundays. Under fair conditions, in so large a town, the Branch should flourish.

The South Shields Branch is fortunate in two things; first, in having a man like Mr. Peacock in its service, and secondly in having the use of the large hall of the Free Library, which is conveniently situated in the leading thoroughfare. Mr. Peacock, Captain Duncan, and some other members of the Branch are public characters, and they do much to liberalise the town. Two members of the Branch reside at Jarrow. John and Henry Sanderson are well known there, and widely respected. But we must stop. The fine Freethinkers in that district—men of whom any cause might well be proud—are too numerous to be recounted.

Mr. Bradlaugh, like a wise man, will spend the Whitsuntide in fishing. We hope he will catch health. He urges the Freethought party to muster strongly at Manchester, and certainly it is important that the Conference should be a great success, for our enemies are making much of Mr. Bradlaugh's enforced resignation, and trying to persuade the public that our cause is expiring. Of course this is great nonsense, and the sooner the public is plainly disabused the better. The Conference agenda, which we printed last week, will show that there is a possibility of striking out new lines of propaganda and organisation. Mr. Foote's proposals have been well thought out, and they demand the attention of every member of the National Secular Society.

John Burns did not like to tackle Mr. Bradlaugh, and we are not surprised at his reluctance to meet the old gladiator in the arena. But why did he throw out a challenge? John Burns is a good, honest, hard-working labor-leader, but he is not a Bradlaugh. We hope he will keep his head, be on his guard against flatterers, and avoid hobnobbing with Cardinals and Bishops. He ought to know the real object of the leaders of the Black Army when they coquet with the leaders of the Army of Labor.

Dr. Dodel-Port's book, Moses oder Darwin, has reached a third edition, which will number 5,000 copies. Dr. Dodel-Port is professor at Zürich University, and eminent as a botanist all over the world. He is a staunch Freethinker and evolutionist.

Freedom, of New South Wales, speaks of Mr. Wheeler's Biographical Dictionary of Freethinkers as "characterised by that faithful and patient research customary in Mr. Wheeler's writings."

"We are glad to learn that Mr. Foote's 'Letters to the Clergy' are about appear in a separate volume; they contain some of Mr. Foote's best writing, and should be in the hands of all Freethinkers who are gifted with the faculty of enjoying really good literature."—Stockwhip.

The Belgian Conference of Freethinkers at Joliment was a great success. La Raison, their monthly organ, edited by M. Leon Fournement, now circulates 5000 copies.

The Rev. R. S. Long, who has returned from a mission to Burmah, laments that translations of Ingersoll are now found in that country. Mr. Long was stationed at Rangoon, where we send occasional parcels.

The Hornsey and Finsbury Park Journal inserts a very temperate and forcible letter from Mr. Arthur J. Field, defending the right of Freethinkers to lecture in Finsbury Park. Such letters are a real service to the cause.

The announcement we inserted last week as to the course of Free Lectures at the Hammersmith Club, was premature. The four lectures will be delivered on Thursdays, June 5, 12, 19 and 26, by Mr. A. B. Moss, Mr. G. Standring, Mr. J. M. Robertson and Mr. G. W. Foote. One result of the lectures, it is hoped, will be the starting of an open-air lecture station.

Bournemouth is a fashionable watering place, and of course it has been very difficult to get the Freethinker there. But it is now exposed for sale in a newsagent's window at No. 1 The Avenue, the most aristocratic promenade in the town. One of our readers, who has had to get his weekly copy of this journal by post, went into the shop and bought two copies to give away. The next day he wanted another copy, but the newsagent had sold out. No doubt, if the seller is not intimidated, the Freethinker will soon have a fair circulation in Bournemouth, and do something to liberalise that hotbed of bigotry and hypocrisy.

The Manchester Secular Hall Company holds its annual general meeting this morning (May 18) in the hall at Rusholme Road. We are sorry to see there is a loss of £16 on the year's account, and we hope the directors and the honorary secretary (Mr. G. Payne) will succeed in inducing the shareholders to clear off the mortgage, the interest on which is a serious burden. The Branch is at present paying a reduced rent. We fear it has suffered from the loss of some old workers.

Viktor Lennstrand's lecture on The God Idea, for which he was sentenced to six month's imprisonment, has been translated into English by a Swedish gentleman. Mr. Wheeler has slightly revised the English, and the pamphlet is published by Mr. Forder at twopence.

"H. P." (Henry Porter) has done our cause a service by replying to a Catholic slander of Giordano Bruno in the North Lindsey Star. Freethinkers should press our views in their local papers whenever an opportunity occurs.

A Mohammedan mission to convert the Americans is rather a startling project. But this is what Moulvi Hassan Ali is proposing to large crowds at Hyderabad, and the faithful are actually responding with subscriptions to defray the Moulvi's expenses.

The French Freethought Federation now comprises 77 societies, besides individual adhesions. Its establishment was one of the results of the Paris International Conference of last September.

James Allen, one of the wealthiest men in Stark county, Ohio, died last month, leaving a will in which he said: "I wish that no advocate of the contemptible and blasphemous doctrine of eternal punishment be permitted to talk at my funeral. I desire that the speaker be a Freethinker or Universalist."

The Freethinkers' Magazine for May gives a portrait and notice of Mrs. Matilda Joslyn Gage, the President of the American Women's Liberal Union. Prof. J. B. Buchanan writes on Bibliolatry, and among other interesting contents is the exposure of a myth regarding the bad ends of thirty-six infidels which is being circulated in the States.

Digitized by Google

RELEASE OF MR. LENNSTRAND.

Our readers in all parts of the world will rejoice to know that Viktor Lennstrand, the brave champion of Freethought, in Sweden, is once more free. His liberation was however dictated by fear. Upon being visited in prison last week by his brother, Mr. Axel Lennstrand, that gentleman was seriously alarmed and declared that his brother was being murdered by the imprisonment. Every force was set in motion to obtain his liberation, and aided by a lady of literary reputation, our friends succeeded in obtaining his pardon within four days. The authorities were fully aware that had serious consequences ensued to Mr. Lennstrand, as there was too much reason to fear from his delicate and nervous constitution, there would have been a storm of indignation throughout the land. Mr. Lennstrand, our readers will be happy to learn, seems now thoroughly recovered, though the doctors urge that he should take complete rest for a while in some country place. He appends to a note from our good friend Captain Otto Thomson, with whom he is now staying, at 25 Bryggargatan, Stockholm, the following letter:—

"At last out from prison. I send you my most hearty wishes and thanks for all you have done for me and my cause during my long captivity. As soon as I am quite composed and strengthened both in body and mind, I will do all that I am able to do in order to hold the awakened interest alive. Please forward my warmest thanks to the Freethinkers of England.—Yours fraternally, sincere friend, Viktor E. Lennstrand."

It remains to be seen what will be done with the remaining prosecutions against Mr. Lennstrand. It is certain his release is a triumph to the Freethought cause, and they can no longer cause serious apprehensions.

ARE CLERGYMEN FRAUDS?

By Hugh O. Pentecost.

(From the "Twentieth Century.")

Are clergymen frauds? This is a delicate and difficult question to answer justly. No general statement can be made of any class of persons without qualification. Some clergymen are frauds and some are not. So much may be said without qualification; without stopping to define the word fraud. There are some bad men among clergymen, as there are in any class of persons. But many clergymen are good men, in a general way, and some of them are very good men, both in general and in particular. In striving to answer the question I have propounded, I mean to leave out of the discussion the confessedly bad men among the clergy. I will not take into consideration the ministerial common, every-day liars, thieves, drunkards and libertines. There is no doubt that there are such ministers even among the very well-known and highly paid clergy. That these are frauds goes without saying, and some of them escape general condemnation and disgrace even when it is pretty well understood by many that they are impostors.

But it would not be fair to condemn an entire class of persons because some of them are notoriously bad. I intend, therefore, to discuss the question: whether the average respectable and respected priest and minister is a fraud even if he is ordinarily honest in his business transactions and clean in his sexual relations.

What do I mean by a fraud? In speaking of ministers I mean one who does not believe what he preaches, or one who does not preach what he believes, or one who conceals his doubts, or one that does not live according to what he believes or professes to believe. A fraud is an insincere man, and inconsistent man, a man without the moral courage to live up to his professions or to confess that he does not do so.

With this definition in mind let us look at facts with regard to clergymen. I will try to keep within the range of those things which are generally understood to be facts. It will not be necessary to go into the inner consciousness of the ministers and attempt to pass judgment upon their motives. No person is capable of judging another person's motives. I leave motives out of the question entirely. I do not inquire whether clergymen mean to be frauds, or whether they know that they are frauds. I merely inquire whether they are frauds.

It is a fact that clergymen, as a rule, do not believe in the precepts of Jesus Christ, and do not conform to them in their own lives. I will not discuss the question as to whether those precepts are true or false, wise or unwise. I merely say that the orthodox clergymen proclaim that Jesus Christ was God and at the same time they deny the truthfulness of most of his teachings and the wisdom or practicability of his manner of life. They declare that he was the "way, the truth and the life," but they turn from the way, reject the truth, and will not follow the life. Jesus forbade the laying up of treasures on earth, forbade taking anxious thought for the morrow, commanded to sell all one's goods and give to the poor. The average minister declares that Jesus is his master, his guide, and his God, but he invariably takes the highest salary he can get, he insures his life, he is no more apt to give his money to a tramp than is anybody else. Jesus forbade the use of titles. All clergymen have one title, at least, and set great store by it, and some of them are so greedy for the supposed honor of having more than one that they are quite willing to wink at any device by which it can be obtained from a college, in some cases actually buying it. Jesus was a very simple-minded man in his religion. He believed in praying for what we need. He said that sickness would be healed by prayer, that snake bites would be cured by prayer, that mountains would be removed by prayer. The modern clergyman believes no such thing. The Jesus-like Faith Healers have no bitterer enemies than the clergymen. There is not a minister in the United States, I venture to say, who would show that he believes in the teaching of Jesus by letting a rattlesnake bite him.

Please understand that I am not defending the teachings of Jesus. I am simply saying that clergymen pretend that Jesus was God and yet they do not hesitate to declare that his teachings are not to be followed. If they would speak right out and say that Jesus is wholly unreliable as a teacher, although he was God, all would be fair. We would then understand that the God of the clergymen was an ignorant and impracticable crank, and we would know just what to do.

But the clergyman flares up in a moment if you intimate that Jesus did not know what he was talking about. He will tell you that Christian civilisation is built upon principles exactly the reverse to those inculcated by the Galilean, and if you ask him why he does not live according to those teachings he will tell you that they were not practised in this day and generation, because the weather is colder here than it was in Palestine, and to follow out the precepts of Jesus generally would interfere with the admirable arrangements of the Charity Organisation Society; and if ministers did not have titles nobody would know who are the genuine articles and who are irregular.

You are all familiar with the various explanations clergymen give of why they do not follow the teachings of Jesus, but the real reason is because if they did they would be poor, and they would not be respectable, and they could not enjoy those worldly honors that are so dear to vain and worthless people. The real reason why the ministers do not follow Jesus, although they worship him, is because it is so much easier to worship him than it is to follow him. It is fashionable to worship him but it is vulgar to follow him. The reason why they do not follow him is because they are frauds.

I know that there are hundreds of clergymen belonging to the Universalist and Unitarian churches who would say that all this does not apply to them because they repudiate the deity of Jesus and openly say that his teaching is impracticable. But they are frauds, too, because they call themselves Christians. They deny that Jesus was the Christ and yet call themselves Christians. This they would not do if it were not that the name Christian carries with it a certain amount of respectability by which they wish to profit.

Another fact is that there is hardly a clergyman in existence who does not preach for the truth that of which he himself doubts the truth. Observe the way I put this. There is many a minister who will tell you that he believes in the existence of God, or the divinity of Christ, or the vicarious atonement, or the reality of heaven and hell. But if you ask him whether he ever doubts these things he will be obliged to tell you that he does. He may tell you that the Devil makes him doubt or that doubt arises out of his own sinful heart, whatever that may mean. But he doubts, nevertheless. If he would go into the pulpit and tell the people that he believes in the existence of God and all these other things but he also doubts whether what he says is true or not, he would be and honest man. But because he hides his doubts and preaches his beliefs as if they were certainties, he is a fraud.

Digitized by Google

(To be concluded.)

THE BLIND MAN AND THE FLEA.

A Fable.

"Why dost thou so trouble me,"
Said a blind man to a flea.
"Know'st thou not that I am blind?
Prithee other refuge find.
All night long I'm kept awake
Through the itching thou dost make;
All day long I writhe in mind
Through thy capers so unkind.
Prithee nimble little flea,
To some other refuge flee.

Said the flea, "No, no, not I;
Don't you think it. I'm too fly.
Here I'll stay, and here I'll hatch
My sweet brood, for you can't catch.
God, who everything does well,
Meant that I with you should dwell.
I'm the finger of our God,
Bow beneath his chastening rod."

Then the blind man thought awhile,
Till his face beamed with a smile:
"Yes, I've got it," thus he cried,
"Wretched insect, you're defied.
Science-given turpentine,
'Neath whose breath all insects pine,
Water clear and cleansing soap,
Powders strong with you shall cope.
Yes, I've got it! I'll be damned,
Holy Boss, your finger's jammed!

(Moral to be worked in here.)

Alfred Lovett.

SATAN v. JESUS CHRIST.

In Mr. Quaritch's collection of MSS. there is a famous illuminated manuscript written by one Bishop Anton Ruettel in 1480. It is called Belial, and describes a lawsuit between the Devil and Jesus Christ. J. C. has so greatly damaged the Evil One by coming into the world and saving sinners who would otherwise have fallen victims to the E. O's favorite fires, that he forthwith brings an action for damages against Christ. There is a count in damages for every soul.

Good old Bishop Ruettel went about his work in a very accurate and methodical way. The plaintiff and defendant in the case each have a lawyer. Lucifer appears as counsel for the Evil One, and Moses is lawyer for Christ. Moses, by the way, is depicted with the Mosaic horns of wisdom on his head, and they are quite as diabolical looking as the genuine diabolic horns of Lucifer himself.

Solomon is the Judge and sits supreme above both angels and devils. He can hardly be considered an absolutely impartial judge, since he permits the greatest laxity of speech to Moses, but holds Lucifer strictly to the courtesies of the court-room.

The witnesses, who are various—imps, lost souls and the parties themselves to the suit—are sworn on the Holy Scriptures, just as they are to-day. The effect on a first-class cantankerous devil from the seventh hell of administering to him an oath to tell "the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help you God," to all of which proper sanction is given by a kiss to the Scriptures, is amusingly depicted by the artists. The devils, little and big, swear and kiss the Bible, and then, with their faces still awry, go on the witness-stand and tell what they know.

Moses hectors and bullies the Devil's witnesses on cross-examination in fine lawyer-like style, and whatever he says seems to go with the Court. As for Lucifer, who has Old Nick for his client, he is as courtly and suave as you please, never once forgets himself, and even in defeat, and with the taunts of Moses still ringing in his long ears, is still the courtly, polished Devil. Of course Solomon non-suits the Devil and sends him back to hell.

BEATITUDES OF THE HOLY SINNERS.

(Appointed to be read in a loud tone of voice in the Church of the Holy Sinners, on the first Sunday in the calendar of Saint Dives, and fifty-one Sundays after that, and three times a day, before, after, and during services, and at other times when convenient and there is a big crowd present. To be read in all the churches that expect or hope to collar the shekels of the ungodly, or rake in the scads of the good, in the year of grace 1890.)

Now there was a certain rich man which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day.

Blessed forever be his memory; for he hath this day given 95,000 dols. to the church societies, and hath 4,000,000 left for himself.

Shout his name mightily, and let it appear in four-line pica at the head of each column.

Blessed is the man who can give his cheque for three figures; his seed shall be mighty upon the earth.

But more blessed is he who can make it four; his name shall be written in the records and printed in the minutes of the association, and graven with the pen of a cunning scribe upon the chronicles of the conference. Yea, they shall call him Mister in the synod and Doctor in the convention.

But thrice blessed is he who can make it a ten and five noughts; his horn shall be exalted with honor; he shall be known in the congregation and on 'change, where he sit'eth with the elders of the land. Yea, when he goeth forth a horn shall be blown before him, and when he giveth a dollar a gong shall be beaten in the sanctuary.

Lazarus shall behold him afar off, and make ready to vacate the premises in Abraham's bosom.

Abraham shall hear of it, and shall greatly enlarge his bosom, and have it newly furnished and re-upholstered throughout. Selah!

The praise of our lips shall set him on high; if it be so that he cannot read, then will we call our colleges after him; and if it be that he signeth his name with a "mark," then we shall endow chairs of Egyptology and Sanscrit literature in his name.—Brooklyn Eagle.

NOT GOOD ENOUGH FOR HIM.

Jack o' Nanny's was out walking one day when he came across the curate of the village church. The curate had only been a few months in that district, so he did not know the character of all the inhabitants. He stopped Jack one day and told him he had never seen him at church since he came into that neighbourhood, and asked if he would come. Jack turned his eyes towards the curate and said—"Nawe, I'st not come. I've nobbut been twice, an' booath times they made a fool on me. Th' furst time aw went they slat some watter in me face, an' th' second time teed a gurt bouncin' woman raand me neck whear shoo's fast yet; an' I can't get shut ov her. It's not good enough. Let them goa at likes."

LOOKING AT THE FUTURE.

Deacon Jones: "Mr. Holiman, that sermon of yours bewailing the mad rush for riches which characterises the present generation was the most beautiful thing I ever heard. Your pulpit efforts are getting better and better, and we trust that you may continue with us many years to inculcate in our community the lessons of humility and meekness which you exemplify so powerfully in your own life."

Rev. Mr. Holiman: "Yes, Deacon, I shall only be too glad to remain with you. But—er—my expenses, you know, are pretty heavy, and I've received a very flattering call from another parish, I'm getting along in life where I ought to be putting by something for old age."

PROFANE JOKES.

"Young man," said an apostle, solemnly, "do you realise that when you retire at night you may be called before morning dawns?" "I hope so; I'm a young doctor, and I need encouragement of some kind."

At a Sunday school a teacher asked a little boy if he knew what the expression "sowing tares" meant. "Course I does," he said, pointing to his little breeches, "there's a tear mother sewed. I teared it sliding down hill."

"I landed a cargo on the wharf of a Turkish town not far from Constantinople," said an old sea captain. "It was towards evening, and I suggested to the Mohammedan gentleman in charge of the quay that a guard be placed over the goods. 'Have no fear,' he declared, stroking his beard, 'there is not a Christian within forty miles.'"

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY MEETINGS.

[Notices of Lectures, etc., must reach us by first post on Tuesday, and be marked "Lecture Notice," if not sent on post-card.]

LONDON.

Ball's Pond Secular Hall, 36 Newington Green Road, N., 7, Arthur B. Moss, "The Bible and Common Sense."

Battersea—The Shed of Truth, Prince of Wales's Road, 7.30, Mr. Rossetti, "What has Christianity Done for the World?" Social evening every Tuesday. Thursday evening, discussion.

Camberwell—61 New Church Road, S.E., 7.30, Mrs Thornton Smith, "Miracles."

Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, E.C., 7.30, Mr. G. W. Foote, "Is there a Future Life?"

Milton Hall, Kentish Town Road, N.W., 7.30, Mrs. Annie Besant, "Christianity and Woman."

Woolwich—"Sussex Arms," Assembly Room, 60 Plumstead Road (entrance, Masey Road), 7.30, Mr. Sam Standring, "Christ's Ascension."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

Battersea Park Gates 11.15, Mr. Rossetti, "Is Christianity of Divine Ori in?"

Bethnal Green—Opposite St. John's Church, 11.15, Mr. W. Heaford, "What Think ye of Christ?"

Camberwell—Station Road, 11.30, Mr. F. Millar, "What is Freethought?"

Clerkenwell Green, 11.30, Mr. Arthur B. Moss, "Shams and Delusions."

Edmonton—Corner of Angel Road, 3, Mr. J. Rowney, "Freethought and Christ."

Finsbury Park (near the band-stand), 3.30, Lucretius Keen, "Holy Matrimony, Part I."

Hyde Park, near Marble Arch, 11.15, Mr. F. Haslam, "Bible Stories: Are They True?" May 21, Mr. F. Haslam, "Civilisation, its Rise and Progress."

Kingsland Green, 11.30, Mr. P. H. Snelling, "Romans xiii., 1, 2."

Mile End Waste, 11.30, Mr. T. Thurlow, "Salvation."

New Southgate, Betstyle Bridge, 11.30, Mr. Sam. Standring, "Men who are Rising."

Old Southgate—On the Green, 6.30, Mr. J. Fagan, "What is Sin?"

Regent's Park, near Gloucester Gate, 3.30, Mr. E. Calvert, a lecture

Victoria Park, near the fountain, 11, a debate between Mr. Cohen (Spiritualist) and Mr. Elflein (C. E. S.) on "Transmutation of Species"; 3.15, Mr. A. B. Moss, "Apostles of Freethought."

Westminster Old Pimlico Pier, 11.30, Mr. R. Forder, "Truthful Christians."

Wood Green—Jolly Butchers' Hill, 11.30, Mr. George Standring, "Faith and Freethought."

COUNTRY.

Birmingham—Baskerville Hall, Crescent, Mr. J. Clarke, 11, "The Future of Religions"; 3, "The Childhood of Jesus"; 7, "Anthropomorphism."

Heckmondwike—at Mr. John Rothera's, Bottoms, 2.30, an important business meeting.

Hull Branch—No. 2 Room, Friendly Societies' Hall, Albion Street, 6.30, Mr. Charles Reynolds, "The Relation of Socialism to Freethought."

Liverpool Branch N.S.S., Camden Hall, Camden Street—11, Tontine Society; 7, Mr. Doeg, "The Resurrection: a Reply to Prebendary Row."

Manchester—Rusholme Road, Oxford Road, 6.30, Mr. Ernest Evans, "Man's Place in Nature according to Paley and Darwin." Free.

Newcastle—4 Hall's Court, Newgate Street, 11.30, a meeting of Sunday Music League 3, special meeting of members to consider the taking of new premises.

Reading—Forester's Hall, West Street, Mr. J. M. Robertson, 3, "How the Bible was Made Up"; 7, "Christianity and Civilisation."

Sheffield Branch N.S.S.—Members' and friends' first outing of the season, to Catcliffe, by invitation of Mr. J. Nelson. Meet at Midland Station at 1.45 for Rotherham train.

South Shields—Captain Duncan's Navigation Schools, King Street, 7, a business meeting.

LECTURERS' ENGAGEMENTS.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Credon Road, London, S.E.—May 18, (morning), Clerkenwell Green, (evening), Ball's Pond; 22, Hammersmith Club (free); 25 Manchester (Conference). June 1 (morning), Pimlico, (evening), Woolwich; 8 (morning), Bethnal Green, (evening), Camberwell; 15 (evening), Ball's Pond; 22 (morning), Clerkenwell; 29 (morning), Mile End, (afternoon), Victoria Park. July 6 (morning), Pimlico, (evening), Woolwich; 13 (morning), Mile End, (evening), Camberwell; 20 (afternoon), Victoria Park.

E. STANLEY JONES, 3 Leta Street, City Road, Walton, Liverpool.—May 18, Failsworth. June 8, Manchester.

T. THURLOW, 7 Dickson's Villas, Rutland Road, East Ham—May 18 (morning), Mile End Waste; 25 (morning), Battersea. June 15 (morning and evening), Battersea.

THE IMPOSSIBLE CREED

An Open Letter to the

BISHOP OF PETERBOROUGH

By G. W. FOOTE.

Price 2d. Price 2d.

PROGRESSIVE PUBLISHING CO.'S LIST.

All orders to be sent, with remittance, to R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C. Rate of postage—Orders under 3d., one halfpenny; orders under 6d. one penny. Orders over 6d. post free.

G. W. FOOTE.

	s.	d.
PRISONER FOR BLASPHEMY. Cloth ... ... A Full History of his Three Trials and Twelve Months' Imprisonment. Copies in paper covers, soiled, 6d.	2	6
IS SOCIALISM SOUND? ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant. Superior edition, in cloth	1 2	0 0
CHRISTIANITY AND SECULARISM ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. In paper covers. Superior edition in cloth	1 1	0 6
INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS ... ... Second edition, enlarged. Superior edition, in cloth	0 1	8 8
DARWIN ON GOD .. .. Superior edition, in cloth ... ... CONTENTS:—Darwin's Grandfather—Darwin's Father—Darwin's Early Piety—Almost a Clergyman—On Board the "Beagle"—Settling at Down—Death and Burial—Purpose of Pamphlet—Some Objections—Darwin Abandons Christianity—Deism—Creation—Origin of Life—Origin of Man—Animism—A Personal God—Design—Divine Beneficence—Religion and Morality—Agnosticism and Atheism.	0 1	6 0
DEFENCE OF FREE SPEECH ... ... Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes.	0	4
LETTERS TO JESUS CHRIST	0	4
PHILOSOPHY OF SECULARISM	0	3
THE BIBLE GOD	0	2
THE FOLLY OF PRAYER	0	2
THE IMPOSSIBLE CREED ... ... An Open Letter to the Bishop of Peterborough on the Sermon on the Mount.	0	2
CHRISTIANITY AND PROGRESS ... ... A Reply to Mr Gladstone.	0	2
THE SHADOW OF THE SWORD ... ... A moral and statistical Essay on War.	0	2
ROYAL PAUPERS ... ... Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty.	0	2
MRS. BESANT'S THEOSOPHY ... ... A Candid Criticism.	0	2
THEOSOPHY AND SECULARISM.. ... ... A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant.	0	2
THE NEW CAGLIOSTRO ... ... An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky.	0	2
WHAT WAS CHRIST? ... ... A Reply to J. S. Mill.	0	2
THE DYING ATHEIST. A Story	0	1
WAS JESUS INSANE? ... ... A searching inquiry into the mental condition of the Prophet of Nazareth.	0	1
BIBLE HEROES—First Series, in elegant wrapper ... (1) Mr. Adam, (2) Captain Noah, (3) Father Abraham, (4) Juggling Jacob, (5) Master Joseph, (6) Joseph's Brethren, (7) Holy Moses I., (8) Holy Moses II., (9) Parson Aaron, (10) General Joshua, (11) Jephthah and Co., (12) Professor Samson. One Penny each singly.	1	0
BIBLE HEROES—Second Series, in elegant wrapper... (13) Prophet Samuel, (14) King Saul, (15) Saint David I., (16) Saint David II., (17) Sultan Solomon, (18) Poor Job, (19) Hairy Elijah (20) Bald Elisha, (21) General Jehu, (22) Doctor Daniel, (23) The Prophets (Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Hosea); (24) St. Peter, (25) St. Paul	1	0

G. W. FOOTE and W. P. BALL.

BIBLE HANDBOOK FOR FREETHINKERS AND INQUIRING CHRISTIANS	1	4
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
Sold also in separate parts as follows—
Bible Contradictions ... ... The Contradictions are printed in parallel columns.	0	4
2. Bible Absurdities ... ... All the chief Absurdities from Genesis to Revelation, conveniently and strikingly arranged, with appropriate headlines, giving the point of each absurdity in a sentence.	0	4
3. Bible Atrocities ... ... Containing all the godly wickedness from Genesis to Revelation. Each infamy has a separate headline for easy refereuce	0	4
4. Bible Immoralities, Indecencies, Obscenities, Broken Promises, and Unfulfilled Prophecies ...	0	4

COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

MISTAKES OF MOSES	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth ... ... Only Complete Edition published in England	1	6
DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT ... ... Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy.	0	6
REPLY TO GLADSTONE ... ... With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler.	0	4
ROME OR REASON? Reply to Cardinal Manning	0	4
FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Rev. Dr. Field ...	0	2
GOD AND MAN. Second Reply to Dr. Field	0	2
THE DYING CREED	0	2
THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH	0	2

Digitized by Google

NOW READY.

"THE ESSENCE OF RELIGION"

GOD THE IMAGE OF MAN—MAN'S DEPENDENCE UPON NATURE THE LAST AND ONLY SOURCE OF RELIGION.

By LUDWIG FEUERBACH.

"No one has demonstrated and explained the purely human origin of the idea of God better than Ludwig Feuerbach."
—Büchner.

"I confess that to Feuerbach I owe a debt of inestimable gratitude. Feeling about in uncertainty for the ground, and finding everywhere shifting sands, Feuerbach cast a sudden blaze in the darkness and disclosed to me the way."
—Rev. S. Baring-Gould.

Price One Shilling.

LETTERS TO THE CLERGY

FIRST SERIES.

1.—CREATION
To the Bishop of Carlisle.

2.—THE BELIEVING THIEF
To the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

3.—THE ATONEMENT
To the Bishop of Peterborough.

4.—OLD TESTAMENT MORALITY
To the Rev. E. R. Conder, D.D.

5.—INSPIRATION
To the Rev. R. F. Horton, M.A.

6.—CREDENTIALS OF THE GOSPEL
To the Rev. Prof. J. A. Beet.

7.—MIRACLES
To the Rev. Brownlow Maitland, M.A.

8.—PRAYER
To the Rev. T. Teignmouth Shore, M.A.

BY G. W. FOOTE.

128pp., in Wrapper. ONE SHILLING.

2d. each. PARTS I. and II. 2d. each.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC?

NEW PAMPHLETS BY
COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

32 pages. NOW READY. Price 3d.

CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS

A Noble Plea for a Rational Treatment of Prisoners and a Humane Jurisprudence,

BY COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

Price 1d. Price 1d.

A LIE IN FIVE CHAPTERS.

THE REV. HUGH PRICE HUGHES'S

CONVERTED ATHEIST

By G. W. FOOTE.

Should be circulated by Freethinkers who desire to see this pious fraud exposed as widely as possible.

BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY

OF

FREETHINKERS

OF

ALL AGES AND NATIONS.

BY

J. M. WHEELER.

Price 7/6 Handsomely bound in cloth. Price 7/6

W. J. Rendell's

"WIFE'S FRIEND."

Recommended in "Law of Population," and "Wife's Hand Book." Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell Street Clerkenwell, and supplied per post, 2s. dozen. For particulars of this Malthusian discovery send stamped envelope. Higginson's Syringe, with vertical and reverse current, 3s. 6d. and 4s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. All other Malthusian Appliances. All prices post free.

HARTNOLL,

ENGLISH AND FOREIGN CHEMIST,
1A PICCADILLY
(Under the London Pavilion Music Hall),
LONDON, W.

Hartnoll's Specialities, Appliances and Medicated Preparations are world-renowned.

Spiral, Douche and Latest Improved Syringes.

ESTABLISHED OVER 50 YEARS.

RUBBER STAMPS.

Your Monogram to mark Linen or Paper; two letters, 1s.; three letters, 1s. 6d.; any Name, 1s. 6d. Box, Pad and Ink included. All kinds of Stamps. Patterns free. Carriage 2d. extra. F. N. IRETON and CO., 92 Gracechurch Street, London. Agents wanted.

Hot and Strong. Price Twopence.

THE CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE OF HELL.

By J. M. WHEELER.

"An effective little pamphlet, bristling with pertinent quotations."—"National Reformer."

R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street.

THE BIBLE AND EVOLUTION.

By ARTHUR B. MOSS.

Handsomely Bound in Cloth 2s. 6d.

The "National Reformer" says: "The author has long won his spurs as a Freethought lecturer, etc. . . one of his best sustained literary efforts."

The "Freethinker" says: "It is by far the best production of Mr. Moss's pen, and we heartily recommend it as an excellent text-book of the subject. The matter is good and the style is bright. The reader is carried along on an easy flowing stream of science, history, ethics and common sense."

Watts and Co., 17 Johnson's Court; Progressive Publishing Co.

TO MARRIED PEOPLE.

A New and Enlarged
ILLUSTRATED LIST OF MALTHUSIAN APPLIANCES AND SPECIALITIES
Will be forwarded per return of post on receipt of 1d. stamp.

DAVIES, CHEMIST,
101 PARK LANE, LEEDS.

POPULATION LIMITATION.—Practical instructions. Allbutt, Besant, Owen, Knowlton; 7d. each; lists 1d.; all post free. FISHER, Koburg, Leeds.

IS THE HOLY GHOST FOOLISH? See "Freethought Record" for May. One penny monthly. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C.; FISHER, Koburg, Leeds; and newsagents.

Second Edition. Price 2d.

VEGETARIAN FALLACIES. By Dr. C. R. DRYSDALE. A paper read at the Health Congress, Hastings, 1889; with opinions of Sir Edwin Chadwick and several Doctors, in course of discussion. Price 2d.; post free 2½d. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, E.C.

THE

FAMILY LIMIT

1s. 6d. per doz., post free.

For further Particulars send stamped directed envelope to

A. MOSS, 36 Upper Park Street,
ISLINGTON, LONDON, N.

GRATIS.

AN ILLUSTRATED 16-PAGE PAMPHLET, containing extracts from the utterances of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Manchester; the Revs T. R. Malthus, A. E. Whatham, M. J. Savage, Leonard Dawson, — Lawton, H. R. Haweis; the following Doctors—Allbutt, Allinson, Armstrong, Drysdale, Pye Chavasse, E. B. Foote, Nicholls, Wilder, Raciborski, Napheys and Reamy. Also Plato, Aristotle, Sismondi, Huxley, Mill, and numerous others. Should be read by every married and marriageable person. Sent on receipt of stamped addressed envelope by J. R. HOLMES, Hanney, Wantage, Berks.

TESTIMONIALS (Extracts from).

"The one you sent me some months since is

Quite Worn Out

with being lent to so many friends."

"Some of us have paid five shillings for less than one-tenth of the information."

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each, upper or lower set, £1. Best quality, 4s. each, upper or lower, £2, completed in four hours when required, repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18c. gold 15s.; stopping, 2s. 6d. extraction, 1s. painless by gas, 5s.

Printed and Published by G. W. Foote, at 28 Stonecutter Street Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

Vol. X—No. 21.] SUNDAY, MAY 25, 1890. PRICE ONE PENNY.

STANLEY ON PROVIDENCE.

BUCKLE, the historian of Civilisation, points out that superstition is most rampant where men are most oppressed by eternal nature. Wild and terrible surroundings breed fear and awe in the human mind. Those who lead adventurous lives are subject to the same law. Sailors, for instance, are proverbially superstitious, and military men are scarcely less so. The fighter is not always moral, but he is nearly always religious.

No one acquainted with this truth will be surprised at the piety of explorers. There is a striking exception in Sir Richard Burton, but we do not remember another. From the days of Mungo Park down to our own age, they have been remarkable for their religious temperaments. Had they remained at home, in quiet and safety, they might not have been conspicuous in this respect; but a life of constant adventure, of daily peril and hairbreadth escapes, developed their superstitious tendencies. It is so natural to feel our helplessness in solitude and danger, and perhaps sickness. It is so easy to feel that our escape from a calamity that hemmed us in on every side was due to a providential hand.

Whether Stanley, who is now the cynosure of all eyes, began with any considerable stock of piety, is a question we have no means of determining; but we can quite understand how a very little would go a very long way in Africa, amid long and painful marches through unknown territory, the haunting peril of strange enemies, and the oppressive gloom of interminable forests. Indeed, if the great explorer had become as superstitious as the natives themselves, we could have forgiven it as a frailty incident to human nature in such trying circumstances. But when he brings his mental weakness home with him, and addresses Englishmen in the language of ideas calculated for the latitude of equatorial Africa, it becomes necessary to utter a protest. Stanley has had a good spell of rest in Egypt, and plenty of time to get rid of the "creeps." He should, therefore, have returned to Europe clothed and in his right mind. But instead of this he deliberately sits down and writes the following rubbish for an American magazine, with one eye on God above and the other on a handsome cheque below.

> "Constrained at the darkest hour humbly to confess that without God's help I was helpless, I vowed a vow in the forest solitudes that I would confess his aid before men. Silence, as of death, was round about me; it was midnight; I was weakened by illness, prostrated by fatigue, and wan with anxiety for my white and black companions, whose fate was a mystery. In this physical and mental distress I besought God to give me back my people. Nine hours later we were exulting with a rapturous joy. In full view of all was the crimson flag with the crescent, and beneath its waving folds was the long lost rear column."

Danger and grief are apt to make us selfish, and no one would be hard on Stanley for showing weakness in such circumstances. But he rather glories in it. The danger is gone, and alas! the egotism remains. Others perished miserably, but he escaped. Omnipotence took care of him and let them go to the Devil. No doubt they prayed in their extremity as heartily as he did, but their prayers were unheard or neglected. Stanley was the lion of the party. Yes, and in parading his egotistic piety in this way, he is in danger of becoming a lion comique.

There is something absolutely farcical in Stanley's logic. While he was praying to God, millions of other persons were engaged in the same occupation. Agonised mothers were beseeching God to spare their dear children; wives were imploring him to restore the breadwinner of the family to health; entombed miners were praying in the dark depths of coal pits, and slowly perishing of starvation; shipwrecked sailors were asking for the help that never came. Providence could not, apparently, take on too much business at once, and while Stanley's fate trembled in the balance the rest of mankind might shift for themselves.

But the farce does not end here. Stanley's attitude was much like Jacob's. That smooth-skinned and smooth-tongued patriarch said that if God would guarantee him a safe journey, feed him, clothe him, find him pocket money, and bring him safe back again—well, then the Lord should be his God. Stanley was not so exacting, but his attitude was similar. He asked God to give him back his people (a few short, killed or starved, did not matter), and promised in return to "confess his aid before men." Give me the solid pudding, he says, and I will give you the empty praise. And now he is safe back in Europe he fulfils his part of the contract, and goes about trumpeting the praise of Omnipotence; taking care, however, to get as much cash as possible for every note he blows on the instrument.

Even this does not end the farce. Stanley's piety runs away with his arithmetic. He reminds us of a Christian lady we heard of the other day. She prayed one night, on going to bed, for news from her daughter, and early the next morning a letter came bearing the Edinburgh post-mark. This was clearly an answer to her prayer. But a sceptical friend showed her that the letter must have been posted at Edinburgh before she prayed for it. Now Stanley reasons like that lady. Nine hours is no time in central Africa. The "long-lost rear column" must have been near, though invisible, when Stanley struck his little bargain with the Almighty. Had it been two or three hundred miles off, and miraculously transported, the hand of Providence would have been unmistakable; but in the circumstances its arrival was natural, and the miracle is obviously a creation of Stanley's heated brain. He was "weakened by illness" and "prostrated by fatigue," and the absurdity was pardonable. We only protest against his playing the child when he is well and strong.

That it is childishness, and not humbug, we are willing to believe. Still we confess to a certain suspicion. Stanley's denunciation of the Quakers as connivers at slavery is so utterly grotesque as to require something more than ignorance as an explanation. It looks as though he had sufficient pliability to truckle to the prejudices of his patrons, and this reflects a sinister light on other of his utterances.

Digitized by Google

Stanley is not the only sinner in this line. The Grand Old Man himself is quite as ready to take God's name in vain. Jumping out on the platform at Ipswich for a five minutes' speech, he said that "neither the wisdom nor the folly of man is strong enough to separate these countries [England and Ireland] which the Almighty has joined together." With these words before us we should say that human folly is strong enough for anything. Mr. Gladstone enrols the Almighty as a member of the Liberal party. He makes God a Home Rule Unionist, and "with the help of God," his new colleague, he promises to make Pat, Sandy, Taffy and John Bull "a united people." We wish him success, but what does he mean by saying that the Almighty has joined England and Ireland together? If the Almighty has done anything, he has clearly separated them. The St. George's Channel is broader than the straits of Dover, and, talk as we will, the dividing sea makes two nations. Mr. Gladstone may, if he pleases, thank the Almighty" for preserving him to such a green old age. That is a personal matter, and it is simply a question of taste whether a lucky man should thank God effusively in the presence of his unlucky neighbors. But flying publicly in the face of geography, ethnology, and other sciences, is not an edifying spectacle; and when an eminent statesman presses God into a political partnership, we may be pardoned for thinking of Hamlet's description of a politician. Is it not strange that those who uphold the Blasphemy Laws are so ready to tell us how God would vote in a contested election? G. W. FOOTE.

THE LAST WORDS OF EPICTETUS TO HIS SON.

By Voltaire.

[Originally published in the Recueil Necessaire, a collection of heretical tracts, mostly by Voltaire, issued at Leipsic in 1765, and afterwards published with the imprint, Londres, 1768. Unaware of any previous translation, I have somewhat freely rendered this dialogue.—J. M. Wheeler.]

Epictetus. I am dying; I expect your tender memories, not useless tears. I die content, since I leave you virtuous.

His Son. You have taught me to be so, but you know what troubles me. A new Palestinian sect seeks to implant in me remorse.

E. Remorse appertains to scoundrels. Your hands and your soul are pure. I have taught you virtue, and you have practised it.

S. Yes; but this new sect announces a new virtue to me unknown.

E. What sect is this?

S. It is composed of Jews who sell old clothes and philtres, and clip the coins at Rome.

E. The virtue which they teach is apparently false coinage.

S. They say it is impossible to be virtuous without clipping the prepuce, or without being plunged in the water in the name of the Father by the Son. It is true they are not of accord in this. Some desire circumcision, others not; some think the water necessary, others omit it; but all say it is necessary to give money.

E. What! money? Doubtless one should with his superfluities succor the poor who cannot work, pay those who cannot gain their livelihood, and divide his necessaries with his friend. This is our law, our morality; thus have I done since freed by Epaphroditus, and thus have I seen you do also, with a satisfaction which renders my last moments happy.

S. The teachers of whom I speak exact far other than this; they desire brought to their feet all that one has, even to the last farthing.

E. If it is thus, they are robbers, and you are bound to give them up to justice.

S. Oh no! These are not robbers. They are merchants who give you the best bargain in the world for your money; for they promise you eternal life; and if in putting your money at their feet, as they order, you keep only enough wherewith to eat, they have the power to make you die suddenly.

E. These are assassins from whom society must be purged forthwith.

S. No, I tell you, they are magicians, who have wonderful secrets and who kill with words. The father, say they, has bestowed this grace through the son. One of their proselytes, who smells horribly but who preaches with much success in garrets, told me of one named Ananiah, who having sold his land to please the son in the name of the father, carried all the money to the feet of a magician named Barjona, but having kept in secret enough to buy necessities for his child, he was punished with instant death. His wife followed. Barjona killed her likewise in pronouncing a single word.

E. My son, here are abominable people. If this is true, they are among the most infamous criminals on the earth. They have told you ridiculous stories. You are a good fellow, but I fear lest you turn out a simpleton.

S. But father, if one wins eternal life by giving all one's goods to Simon Barjona it is clear one buys it cheaply.

E. Believe me, my son, eternal life, communion with the Supreme Being, has nothing in common with your Simon Barjona. The good and great God who animated Cato, Scipio, Cicero; the father of gods and men, has not, doubtless, remitted his power into the hands of a Jew. I knew these people were among the most superstitious of Syria, but I did not know they carried their insanity so far as to call themselves the prime ministers of God.

S. But, my father, they continually work miracles. You sneer, my father. You shrug your shoulders.

E. Alas! One who is dying has little desire to laugh, but you force me, poor child. Hast thou seen the miracles?

S. No; but I have spoken to men who have spoken to women who say that their gossips have seen them. And then the fine morality of the Jews who are circumcised and are washed from the feet even to the head!

E. And what are the moral precepts of these people?

S. It is, firstly, that a wealthy man cannot be a well-doer, and that it is more difficult for him to get to the kingdom of heaven than for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, so that all the rich should give their goods to the beggars who preach this kingdom. Secondly, that the fools and poor in spirit are blessed. Third, that those who neglect to hear the Church should be detested like a tax-collector. Fourth, that if any man hate not his father and mother, and wife and children and brethren, he has no part in the kingdom. Fifth, that they bring not peace but a sword. Sixth, that when one makes a wedding feast, one forces the passers by to attend, and casts into outer darkness those who have no wedding garments.

E. Alas! my son, a little while ago I was on the point of laughing, and now I feel you make me die with indignation and grief. If the wretches of whom you speak seduce the son of Epictetus, they will seduce plenty of others. I foresee frightful evils on the earth. Are these possessed people numerous?

S. Their number increases daily. They have a common fund from which they pay certain Greeks who write for them. They have invented mysteries. They exact an inviolable secret. They have instituted inspired ones who decide upon all their interests and who will not suffer that those of the sect recognise or plead before the magistrates.

E. An imperium in imperio. My son, all is lost!

Digitized by Google

CAN MAN OFFEND GOD?

CHRISTIANS of all denominations believe that it is possible to offend Deity. They allege that God is looking down from heaven upon his creatures and is frequently displeased at what he beholds. The orthodox hold that man began to manifest an offensive spirit very early after his creation; in fact on the very first day of his existence; and then maintain that on account of Adam's alleged sin all mankind deserve to be punished. "If," say these orthodox gentlemen, "God made man, surely he has a right to punish him when he sins."

Now in the first place I deny that it is possible for man to sin against God; and if it were possible, I should hold that if it were true that the God who made man is omniscient and omnipotent he would have no right to punish the creatures of his manufacture.

Observe how I propose to demonstrate these two positions. First let us understand what is meant by sin against God. All Christians will admit that sin against Deity implies that man does something that God does not want him to do. But if God is Almighty how can man resist the all powerful? To say that man can offer opposition to the all powerful will of Deity, is to say that the finite can overcome the Infinite; which is a contradiction in terms and an absurdity.

Nor is it conceivable that an infinitely good God would permit a wicked act to be performed, since his goodness, being allied with infinite power, would prevent not only the deed itself, but the thought that would give rise to it. But if it were possible for man to sin against God, by what right would he punish him? If a man makes a watch that will not go, does he blame the watch or himself for its imperfections? Suppose I made a machine which, when set in motion, killed somebody. Would the machine or I be held responsible for the result? Besides, God is not only the manufacturer of human machines; he is also the author of the materials out of which they are composed. If there be any inherent defects in the material, he is conscious of it, and can supply the remedy. Moreover, I hold that it is impossible to injure an infinite being, and, as all sin implies injury, it is impossible to sin against God, or even to offend or annoy him in the smallest degree. In truth, if God could be either pleased or annoyed, or influenced in any way by the conduct of his creatures, he would of all beings be the most miserable.

Imagine what he would behold if he looked down from heaven upon his creatures and saw and heard all that was going on on this terrestial globe! He would hear millions of lies told every hour of the day. He would see the strong crushing the weak, the lion devouring the lamb; the iron heel of imperial tyrants trampling on the rights and liberties of the people. He would watch the poor in their hovels herding together like beasts; hear the children's cry for bread, see the starving child die upon its mother's breast, while in the palaces of the rich he would see nothing but splendor, luxury, and wanton waste. He would see the drunkard's home, hear the foul words and see the brutal blows given to the poor half-starved wife. He would watch the licentious man in the house of infamy, and listen to the prurient talk of painted harlots. He would see the burglar laying his plans; and watch the murderer as he lifted the assassin's dagger to destroy the poor unfortunate. He would understand the statesman's ambition, and be behind the scenes when position and place were given to time-servers. He would understand the causes of wars, and behold thousands of innocent lives destroyed for the glorification of ignorant and heartless kings. He would see asylums in flames and hear the moans of madmen in despair. Vessels would be wrecked before his eyes, and trains collide, and he would hear the sufferers' prayers and feel their sorrow. Indeed, in imagination, he would suffer all the agonies and experience all the joys of mankind. Billions of prayers would be offered up to him from the various races of mankind, and he would have to discriminate between them, to determine which among them, if any, were worthy of answer. In truth he would be so fully occupied in hearing and seeing the comedies and tragedies of life, that he would have no time for action, and probably his mind would get so distracted with what he saw, that at times he would, like Juliet, propose to "dash out his desperate brains."

Was I not right in saying that such a God would be the most miserable of all creatures? A good man who had the power to stop these calamities would be impelled to do so. Will a good God be less kind?

Away at once with such absurd ideas of God; dispel them for ever from the human mind. Learn that man cannot offend God, cannot sin against an Infinite being. But while it is impossible to sin against Deity it is possible to sin against our fellow man. We can offend him; we can sin against him; we can do him injury. And once the sin is done it is irrevocable. Remember that it is written indelibly upon the book of nature from which no leaves can be torn and nothing expunged. With this truth burned into his brain the Freethinker should strive day by day to work earnestly and faithfully in the service of man; for man needs our service—while God does not.

ARTHUR B. MOSS.

A PROTEST FROM TOYNBEE HALL.

DEAR SIR,—I shall esteem it a favor if you will find a place in an early issue of your paper for the correction of certain inaccurate statements concerning the Toynbee Library, contained in the Freethinker of May 4th, to which my attention has just been directed.

As librarian I can speak with absolute knowledge of the facts in stating:

(a) That "Freethought works" are not "gradually creeping into the library." I would fain believe that the expression "gradually creeping" was a slip of the pen, for, to say the least of it, it is not a pleasant phrase.

(b) That "Freethought works" are not "much sought after," if by "much" it is intended to convey that many or even several persons make such request.

(c) That no discussion has ever been held in the Library Committee as to the admission of the Freethinker within the library.

(d) That no vote has ever been taken in Committee on the question of admitting the National Reformer. True it is that an offer to supply it gratis was kindly made by one of the readers, but by unanimous agreement of the Committee it was decided to decline the offer.

Only a few months previous to that, a proposal was made to place on the table the Pall Mall Budget; that proposal too was negatived. the Committee being of opinion that newspapers and controversial journals are not within the scope of the purposes of this library.

A printed catalogue of the library is in course of preparation. As soon as that is issued, nay, this very day, in the manuscript catalogue open to the inspection of any person, the public may ascertain for themselves what are the contents of the library.

Permit me, sir, to add, in justice to our work here, that that work is neither for nor against "Freethinkers" as such, nor indeed is it for or against anything but what the best men of all parties would most wish to help or to hinder.—Yours truly,

SAM. HALES, Librarian.

Toynbee Hall, 28 Commercial Street, E.

[We appear to have been slightly misinformed. At the same time we fancy the worthy librarian has somewhat exaggerated the error. If all works of a controversial nature are excluded from Toynbee Hall Library, it must be deficient in some of the chief works of the leading men of the age.—EDITOR, Freethinker.]

First elder (at the kirk "skailin'"): "Did ye hear Dougal More snoring in the sermon?" Second elder: "Parfec ly disgracefu'! He waukened 's a'?"

Digitized by Google

ACID DROPS.

Sir Harry Verney, speaking at the Bible House, said that Stanley, being asked to name what he would like as a present before starting for Africa, asked for a Bible—as though he couldn't have bought one for a shilling. During his wanderings Stanley read that Bible through three times. So Sir Harry Verney says, and the Bible House folk are in raptures. Of course they forget the story of the Gothic Bishop who would not translate the fighting parts of the Old Testament into the language of his people lest their sanguinary passions should be inflamed beyond all bounds.

We suppose it will be said that the Bible is at the bottom of Stanley's success. But how about the rifles and the gunpowder? If Stanley had nothing better to trust to than the blessed book, the natives (every man of them God's image) would have eaten him, and perhaps have cooked his best joints with his Bible.

We are disappointed in the Rev. Walter Walsh of Newcastle. We understood he was a gentleman, but he loses his temper like any vulgar Christian. Replying to Mr. Foote's lecture on "A Defence of Atheism," last Sunday evening in his own chapel, Mr. Walsh said he had given his reasons against entering into a public debate, and his special reasons for not meeting Mr. Foote he would not give there. We beg to tell Mr. Walsh that this is the merest insolence. We also venture to observe that while Mr. Walsh's objection to discussing with Mr. Foote does not prevent his answering him in his absence, there are many sensible Tynesiders who will see through such a thin pretence.

Mr. Walsh let the Christian right out of the bag at the end of his discourse. He declared that the philosophy of the National Secular Society was "a kind of jackal philosophy, which lived by snarling at and worrying and rending the constructive thoughts of abler and nobler men"—Mr. Walsh himself for instance. All this shows he is badly hit, and when he takes to calling names we agree with him that it is time he retired from the controversy. It was none of Mr. Foote's seeking. Mr. Walsh obtruded himself on the Newcastle Secularists, thinking to "bring them to God." His object, it appears, was exhortation and not discussion, and he has come to grief. He does not like discussion, and the Secularists can dispense with his exhortation.

In leaving Mr. Walsh, as he desires to be left, for ever, we ask our readers to give a candid judgment on the whole matter. Mr. Walsh wanted to show Atheists that they were wrong. They asked him to debate the subject with one of their representatives in a friendly way. He declined. Then we offered to put the Freethinker at his disposal for a written discussion. Again he declines, and leaves the "jackals" in disgust. Now, we ask whether the Secularists have not shown perfect fair play, and whether Mr. Walsh has not displayed a childish egotism and ill temper.

Emperor William has been insisting that he reigns by the grace of God. So did Charles the First, but he had his head cut off So did Louis the Sixteenth, and he lost his head—what there was of it—in the same way. The grace of God is an excellent thing till you put it to the proof, and the young Kaiser may yet learn it by experience.

Mr. Ben Tillett, the real organiser of the Dock Laborers, whose claims are apt to be overshadowed by those of more showy figures, in addressing a big meeting outside the East India Dock gates on Sunday morning, said (we quote from the Echo)—"Talk of the 'sweet by-and-bye'—what they wanted was not promises but performance, money down on the nail now; something here as a pledge of the better hereafter." Right in substance, Ben, but wrong in expression. So far from the good of this life being a pledge of a better hereafter, it is the people who get least of it who look for the sweet bye-and-bye! Just inquire among the rich and the poor, and see for yourself.

Mr. W. W. Wills, a local preacher of Musbury is a person of curious taste. At a funeral at Axminster he thought it his duty to attend and give at the grave a long oration on the sinful life of the deceased, who it appears had avoided Mr. Wills and his ministrations, as we should fancy most persons will do in future.

Mr. Edward Davy was going to the Tabernacle to hear Spurgeon. On the way he stopped to listen to another trader in mystery. This gentleman was doing the purse trick, and Mr. Davy bought two purses for very much less money than he believed was in them. But on opening the purses he found the shillings were halfpence and the half-crowns were pennies. This incensed his pious soul. The large profit he calculated on, at the vendor's expense, turned out to be a bad loss. Not all Spurgeon's eloquence could allay his virtuous indignation, and the purse-trick performer was indicted for larceny, but the law said "No, Mr. Davy, you made a bargain and you must abide by it." No doubt Mr. Davy will remember that gentleman in his prayers.

Stupidity and Bigotry met and kissed each other, as they often do, in Exeter Hall on Tuesday when that pious alderman Sir R. N. Fowler presided over the anniversary meeting of the British Society for the propagation of the Gospel among the Jews. Rarely is a questionable society matched with so fitting a chairman.

The Manchester Sunday Chronicle tells, in its graphic way, of a romance in real life which has just happened in that city. Mr. Aaron Howard, a devout Manchester fishmonger and staunch churchman, recently gave a peal of bells and illuminated clock and a window illustrating Aaron the High Priest, to the parish church of Blackley. He died just before the bells were set pealing, and it was discovered that this wealthy churchman had three daughters, whom he had turned out of home and who had a desperate struggle for existence, two of them being in domestic service. They now come into a fortune of thirty thousand a piece, and may put up memorial windows to their father with the inscription, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Near to the top of Highgate Hill is a handsome edifice known as St. Joseph's Retreat. It is a fine Roman Catholic church, costing a goodly sum, much of which has yet to be paid. The process of raising the wind is illustrative of the credulity and humbug which is doing so much for Catholicism. Circulars are issued in England, Ireland and America, offering 50,000 shares at one dollar, or four shillings English. Shareholders are divided into three classes. Those who take one share are entitled benefactors, those who take five shares are zelators, those who take twenty are founders.

£500 is offered in bonuses to the faithful who dispose of shares. The touter who sells most gets £100, the second £50, the third £25, the fourth and fifth £10; the next twenty-five get £5 each, while one hundred and eighty will have £1 for selling shares. The bait to the buyers is largely spiritual. Every one who subscribes a dollar will have a share "in all the masses, communions, prayers and good works offered up in St. Joseph's Church for as long as it will last." Moreover, 1,000 masses will be offered up for all benefactors.

Zelators will, in addition, get five books of photographs and a medal of the Holy Father, while the founders may each call himself Fundator, and will have his name inscribed in a splendid volume, which will be presented to the Holy Father. Moreover, like the man and his wife in Grimm's stories, Mr. Fundator may have a wish, and "Holy Mass will be said for his intention in the new church." Well, it is a foolish world.

Dr. Martineau's latest work on The Seat of Authority in Religion will be sad reading for the orthodox. He accepts Vischer's view of the Apocalypse as "a Jewish apocalypse, with Christian interpolations, set in a Christian frame." He says the Fourth Gospel "has its birthday in the middle of the second century, and is not the work of a witness at all," while the Synoptic Gospels are only "compiled and edited." The Book of Acts is the work of a writer who stood at "a distance from its inner conflicts," and "gives a distorted and highly ideal representation" of the primitive history of the Church, while the "vain attempts" of the first disciples to "solve the mystery" of Christ's personality, have "left us the unfortunate legacy of a Christian mythology." In other words—for this is what it comes to—the New Testament records are works of imagination.

Digitized by Google

Dr. Martineau is just as plain-spoken on another subject. After a list of the highest human qualities, he writes: "When I pass through Church history in search of these. I doubtless find them, but in such sparse and partial gleams from a wilderness of passion and of wrong, that secular history itself, though less inspiring in its supreme heights, is less dreary on its ordinary levels, and less dreadful in its darker depths."

God's tender mercies are over all his works, especially the human ones. A few days ago a ferry boat was crossing the Oder from Slawikau to Thüze, carrying forty-two children just returning from comfirmation. By some accident it overturned, and as Providence winked just then, all the children were precipitated into the river and thirty-six were drowned. Moral—Don't go to confirmation or be particularly careful how you go home afterwards.

In an article on Mr. R. L. Stevenson's vindication of Father Damien, the leper hero, the Speaker makes some excellent remarks on General Gordon. "The first portraits of Gordon," it says, "were all in treacle. His eyes were always cast heavenward, and he thrust his Bible on you like a certificate of character. It seemed wicked to think of him singing, smoking, falling into a passion, doing a stupid thing. Then, in due time came the blessed truth that he was capable of all these enormities. We were permitted to see him in his futile rages, his grievous lapses from common sense, in his inexpressibly silly commentaries on the Book of Genesis, in his childish attempts to identify the Forbidden Fruit with something that grows on an island of the Seychelles. From that background of human frailty his true greatness stood—fresh, clear, and bright. The courage, and the faculty of his management of the ever-victorious army, found a splendid foil in the fiddle-dee-dee of his theory of the Fall. The grandeur of his death at Khartoum was a bill of indemnity for all the pettiness of his taunts to the Mahdi in that curious system of theological controversy by cartel which they kept up from their respective sides of the wall. Gordon became one of us by this revelation of his weaknesses; and it was stimulating in the highest degree to know that one of us might, upon occasion, become so much like one of the angels. But if he had been left all angel from the beginning, as the chromo-lithographers had drawn him, the sense of brotherhood which gave the sole interest to the study must have been altogether lost."

The London Echo prints a curious extract from the parish magazine of All Saints, Clapham Park. Here it is in all its naked loveliness: "Unmarried workers are requested not to marry for some little time, as we cannot afford to lose their services, as we have lost many lately. If marriage is a blessing, workers should continue their work in thankfulness; if a curse, in penance for their folly. The caution is particularly addressed to the ladies, who seem to be the offenders, judging both by parish experience and by Bible history—which latter, with many an Eve and Jezebel in its annals, mentions no case of a man leading his wife astray."

Had the parson who penned this exquisite flattery of the ladies lived sixteen hundred years ago, he would doubtless have cried "hear, hear!" when a certain Christian Father called woman "a malignant she ass."

Of course the Bible mentions no case of a man leading his wife astray. And why? Because men wrote it.

Mr. W. H. Hurlbert's France and the Republic is one long libel on the country of Voltaire. This gentleman's animus is easily seen in his references to religion. He calls the republican Mayor of Amiens a "rampant Atheist, and a cotton-velvet bagman of blasphemy." "The doctrine of the Third Republic," he declares, "is that all Frenchmen must be Atheists." Even the clerks in the Ministry of Worship are "all of them now, doubtless, good Atheists." Well, we are very glad to hear it; and if Atheism necessarily puts Mr. Hurlbert in such a ferocious temper, we hope he will never cool down.

A scurrilous paper, supposed to be run in the interests of religion, gives a paragraph from the Daily Graphic with this comment: "Secularists who want to know where the water of the flood went, will find a part of the curiosity satisfied if they read the last two sentences. Freethinker, copy if you dare!!"

We do copy the paragraph, as our readers may be interested in seeing what is considered a confirmation of the legend of the Flood. Here it is: "The second volume of the 'Report on the Scientific Results' of the Challenger's voyage has recently been published, and it is no whit less interesting than its predecessor. The deep sea is full of wonders. There are fish living 2,600 fathoms down; some blind, others almost eyeless, which are so compressed from the weight of the water, that when brought to the surface their bodies expand. Three miles down there is no light and no change of temperature. Being no light there is no vegetable growth, and the fish feed on each other—at least so many of them as have teeth probably do so. Those without teeth no doubt feed on animalculæ. From Professor Tait's experiments it seems that at a depth of six miles the sea is compressed about 620 feet. May this compression long continue: for should it cease something like 2,000,000 square miles would be inundated."

Who after this will see any difficulty in getting all species of animals into the ark, and providing them with proper food and temperature, and landing them above the snow line on Mount Ararat? Who after this can doubt that God repented of his own handiwork, and showed his loving-kindness in drowning nearly all creation, including "beasts and fowls of the air," for human sin? Who will henceforth wonder at what became of all the water which covered all the highest hills under heaven.

We have called the paper a scurrilous one, and our epithet is warranted by its attack upon Dr. Allinson (presumably because he is known to be a Freethinker) treating a paper, the Rising Sun, which contained his biography, as though it was edited and written by himself, when really it was issued by a vegetarian entirely unconnected with Dr. Allinson.

Dr. Westcott, the new Bishop of Durham, like a true disciple, of the meek and lowly Jesus, has gone through the blasphemous farce of "enthroning." After the completion of the ceremony his lordship preached a sermon from the text, "Brethren, pray for us." He receives a bigger salary than the Prime Minister, and perhaps he doesn't know how to spend it. Hence he desires the prayers of the brethren. We suggest however, that he should apply to the poor curates of his diocese. They would help him to get through his salary.

Alfred Carter has been studying for the Wesleyan ministry, but his brain does not seem strong enough for that. He has asked the Queen for some money, and offered to marry her. The magistrates regard him as a lunatic, and have handed him over to his father for safe custody.

South Missouri preacher reported by Life: "Now, my brethren, having disposed of that ar lyin' hepocritical cuss, who runs the Methodist church across the way, I'll continue my discourse on 'peace on earth, good will to men.'"

The Virgin Mary is reported in the Tablet to have appeared to two peasant women at Castel Petroso a remote mountainous village of Southern Italy. The B. V. M. seems like her son only to show herself to believers. To sceptics the family trait was evasiveness.

Oberammergau seems to be demoralised by the profits of the Passion Play. The performers and the villagers reaped such a golden harvest in 1880 that they lived in indolence for five years. Then want and discontent ensued, and the second half of the decade has been spent in looking forward to the next raking in of the shekels.

How entertaining this must be to the cynic! Thousands of well-to-do Christians flock to Oberammergau to see the drama of the Crucifixion enacted. Probably their faith is a little weak, and they want to have the "agony and bloody sweat" and the "cross and passion" of their Redeemer performed before their eyes. What a pity it is all simulation! If the villager who acts Jesus Christ were only crucified in reality, the bull fights of Spain would sink into commonplace spectacles, and half the idle classes of Europe would flock to Oberammergau for a strong sensation. But s all simulation, and when the play is over J. C. goes on drinking and playing skittles.

Digitized by Google

The Religious Tract Society's income last year was £211,675. What a lot of money for waste paper!

London seems to have acquired a good clown in the Scotch Spurgeon. The Rev. J. McNeill has been holding forth against preaching in a gown. He says a minister should preach with tongue, eye, hands, and feet. Yes, but how about head, Mr. McNeill, how about head?

The Scotch Spurgeon advocated plain speaking. Christ, he said, had in his work a splendid abandon. Well, he certainly did let out in ferocious style now and then. But his chief case of abandon was on the cross, when he cried out "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

How the men of God differ! The Rev. Fleming Williams told the Congregational Union that "the new tenderness and sympathy that was finding expression in social channels was melting away out of the land all the societies that were formed by Mr. Bradlaugh's influence years ago." But Mr. Williams is an emotional gentleman. with no corresponding powers of perception and intelligence, and the wish is the father to most of his thoughts. A very different verdict is given by Mr. Spurgeon. Addressing the annual meeting of his Colportage Association, he referred to the 500,000 people who assembled in Hyde Park the other Sunday, and remarked that probably not one per cent. of that multitude gave any attention to religion. There were entire streets where not one of the inhabitants attended any place of worship. Infidelity was also bolder than ever.

Mr Spurgeon appears very anxious to break up the association of his old students, some fifty in number, who preferred to stand by the Baptist Union. Some, it is true, have been excommunicated beyond all hope of forgiveness, and cut off from even personal intercourse. Others who were considered more hopeful have had a final chance of returning to the Spurgeonic fold. A few in this latter category have each received a letter from Mr. James Spurgeon, holding out hope of pardon; but they prefer impenitence, if that means liberty of conscience, to the Calvinistic yoke which it was sought to impose upon them. —Christian World.

Bigotry and Bible reading go together. It is therefore not surprising to read that there is an energetic circulation of the blessed book in the country which has disgraced itself by imprisoning Viktor Lennstrand. The Swedish Bible Society, since its formation, has distributed 338,607 Bibles and 730,505 New Testaments.

At the recent conference of the Congregational Union, the Rev. Robert Mansergh produced two gaily colored handkerchiefs, bearing striking sketches of beer-bottles and spirit glasses, which were being sent out to Africa in vast quantities by Glasgow merchants to advertise their business. The members of the firm thus bent on alcoholising the negroes for a profit are all Christians.

Dr. Parker complains that when Dissenters get £1,000 a year they go over to the Church of England. We sympathise with the Doctor. It must be hard to lose the birds that are best worth plucking.

Dr. Parker protests that, as a Liberationist, he will never associate in destroying the Church Establishment with men who wish to destroy religion. But what of that? He will vote the same way as they do, and that is all they want of him.

The Dissenters protest against the proposed religious census next year. Perhaps they are afraid that a lot of indifferentists will put themselves down as belonging to the Church of England. It can hardly be that they are moved by a perfect hatred of State recognition of religion, for do they not keep up the Blasphemy Laws, and do they not support Bible reading in Board schools?

The College Committee of the Free Church of Scotland in their report upon the alleged heresy of Professors Dods and Bruce, with Scotch caution say there is ground for anxiety on the subject of their beliefs but not ground for a prosecution. The professors have themselves made statements, Dr. Marcus Dods giving mild instances of what he had called the inaccuracies and immoralities of Scripture. Professor Bruce holds that "Inspiration does not inderdict the hypothesis that the Evangelists may in some cases have modified the form of the Lord's words, for good and worthy reasons."

The Sabbatarian Laws in Indiana have been brought into play against an automaton, which was convicted at New Haven of acting when a nickel was dropped into the slot. The proprietor was fined fifty dollars for not stopping the hole on Sundays. God's feelings, we suppose, were damaged to the extent of fifty dollars. That automatic machine will never get to heaven!

FLO'S LETTER.

"Dear God, the baby you brought us
Is awful nice and sweet,
But, 'cause you forgot his toofies,
The poor little thing can't eat.
That's why I'm writing this letter
A purpose to let you know.
Please come and finish the baby;
That's all. From little Flo."

The Manchester Corporation declines to grant permission to one of our readers to give a band performance on a Sunday afternoon in Alexandra Park. No matter, the time will come.

Last week we told of a Middlesboro Christian who said that St. Paul, Shakespeare and Milton were the three most learned men in history. This week we have to tell of a similar piece of nonsense, perpetrated by one who should know better. Mr. Augustus Birrell, a very much overrated "literary gent," who, owing to the accident of the choice of a Scotch caucas, sprang suddenly into a seat in Parliament, was one of the speakers at the recent Liberation meeting in Spurgeon's Tabernacle. In the course of his speech he named what he considered the three greatest events in history. The first was the birth of Christ—of course. The second was the Hegira of Mahomet. The third was—well, we will give the reader five thousand guesses, and bet him ten to one he doesn't name it. The third greatest event in history was—but wait a bit, it is too good to hurry over. Nobody but a Scotchman would ever think of it at all. "Ah," cries the reader, "it was the battle of Bannockburn, or the opening of the Forth Bridge." No, guess again. You give it up? Well, here it is then. It was the Disruption of the Scotch Church!

O canny Augustus Birrell, you spoke as a Scotchman and a Liberationist. But very likely as a Scotchman, pure and simple, you have a shrewd suspicion, which it would not do to give tongue to in Spurgeon's Tabernacle before the hosts of Dissent, that the day will come when the Disruption —ay, and the very existence—of the Scotch Church will be a matter of archæology, and when the birthday of Robert Burns will be looked upon as the greatest event in Scotch history.

Then as to the birth of Christ. Some centuries before that event three hundreds Spartans died in the Pass of Thermopylæ to give the Greeks time to rally against the Persian hordes. Afterwards was fought the battle of Marathon, and the little army of Grecian freemen broke the pride of Persia, and scattered its power to the winds. Yes, Mr. Birrell, the battle of Marathon was a very big event. Had the Greeks lost, Asia would have overrun Europe, and perhaps Christ himself would never have been heard of.

CHRISTIANITY AND MORALITY.—When we realise the true position of Christianity in the world; when we admit, on the strength of plain facts and figures, that it has only existed during a relatively brief period of the whole history of the race, and then only amongst a small minority; that it has broken up into numerous and utterly discordant sections, that it has decayed as knowledge has increased, and that a vast majority of the race has got on very well without it, it is hopeless to assert that morality is caused by a belief in Christianity.—Leslie Stephen, Nineteenth Century, Sept. 1888.

Digitized by Google

MR. FOOTE'S ENGAGEMENTS.

May 25, N. S. S. Conference at Manchester.
June 1, Hall of Science, London; 8, Gladstone Radical Club and Hall of Science, London; 15, Manchester; 22, Liverpool; 29, Reading.
July 13, Hall of Science; 27, Hall of Science.
August 3, Camberwell; 31, Birmingham.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

LITERARY communications to be addressed to the Editor, 14 Clerkenwell Green, London, E.C. All business communications to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C.

THE Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the office, post free to any part of Europe, America, Canada and Egypt, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 6s. 6d.; Half Year, 3s. 3d.; Three Months, 1s. 7½d. Australia, China and Africa:—One Year, 8s. 8d.; Half Year, 4s. 4d.; Three Months, 2s. 2d. India:—One Year, 10s. 10d.; Half Year, 5s. 5d. Three Months, 2s. 8½d.

SCALE OF ADVERTISEMENTS.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 3s; Half Column, 15s.; Column, £1 10s. Special terms for repetitions

IT being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will in future receive the number when their subscription expires in a colored wrapper.

SOUTH PECKHAM AND WEST HAM.—Your Guide Notices were sent to Stonecutter Street. The Editorial address is 14 Clerkenwell Green. Unless notices are sent to the proper address there is sure to be delay.

P. W. BARKER.—You must see that we cannot give you names of our subscribers that "we are not free to publish." They are sent to us in confidence, and confidence means telling no one.

BLUE-JACKET.—The personalities of the journal you send us are beneath contempt. We discuss principles, not persons.

DOLF.—Good, but hardly good enough. Besides, the incident is no longer fresh.

H. ROWDON.—You forgot to stamp your letter. No, the magistrate cannot go behind the witness's declaration that taking an oath is contrary to his religious belief. Mill's Utilitarianism is published at 5s.

D. C. B.—Your letter to the Glasgow Herald should do good. It is gratifying to see the press gradually opening for such communications.

W. A.—"Pat and the Parson" fails in reproducing the Hibernian dialect.

THE friend in Berlin (Germany) who sent the Freethinkers to Mr. Smith, Liverpool, for distribution, is thanked and assured that his wishes shall be carefully carried out.

H. SMITH.—The matter shall be mentioned at the Conference.

W. HOLLAND.—Thanks. See "Acid Drops."

J. NEATE desires to correct a misstatement in his last Lecture Notice. Mr. Elflein is not a member of the Christian Evidence Society.

J. SAUNDERS.—Nobody knows how far Jonah travelled, and there are no whales in the Levant. But if a whale did get Jonah on board, the animal must have been frightened and pained. A harpoon in him would be nothing to it. Reckoning the animal started off at twenty miles an hour, and kept it up for three days and nights, he must have covered—well, you can reckon it yourself. Thanks for the cuttings. We are glad to hear the Reading Freethinkers were so pleased with Mr. Robertson.

F. C. P. states that the Freethinker can be obtained at another newsagent's in Bournemouth,—at 141 Old Christchurch-road. There also it is difficult to get a copy unless you go early.

T. THURLOW.—Yes, it is quite right to exclude from any of our open-air platforms a Christian who is systematically abusive. Some of that creed think they have a vested interest in insult, and it is time they should be taught a lesson.

W. C. JOHNSON.—Mr. Bradlaugh's pamphlet on the laws relating so Blasphemy and Heresy gives what you require. We may ourselves draw up something brief on the subject.

INCOG.—You will no doubt breathe freely now you have resigned the post which obliged you to teach what you did not believe. The world is wide, and honest livings are not so scarce but that an energetic Freethinker will find one.

G. FRASER.—You should return the Christian compliment at Reading by distributing Freethought tracts. We are just preparing a fresh supply.

T. SHORE.—Much obliged. See Sugar Plums.

J. F. WATSON, secretary of the Sunday Cricket Club (92 Upton Park Road, Forest Gate) throws out a challenge to any Branch of the N. S. S. for "a home and home match."

J. BANNERMAN.—Apply to J. Brumage, 38 Sydenham-terrace, Fratton, Portsmouth. The Branch meetings are held in the Wellington Hall. To join the N. S. S. yon have to put your name to a printed form and pay the subscription.

P. J. WALSH.—Your suggestion has been pressed before. A collection might well be made at the outdoor lectures.

H. CALASCA.—Thanks for the cuttings. Mr. Walsh must have played very low if he urged that, because Mr. Foote said that philosophically every thing was natural, he was therefore an advocate of vice. The very report before Mr. Walsh showed Mr. Foote to have said that natural and unnatural were purely moral distinctions. In the face of this, Mr. Walsh was positively dishonest. But what can we expect from these professional soul-savers?

PAPERS RECEIVED.—Neues Freireligioses Sonntags Blatt—Der Arme Teufel—Western Figaro—Liberator—Truthseeker—Ironclad Age—Bulletin des Sommaires—Menschenthum—Progressive Thinker—Fair Play—Freidenker—Freethought—Fritankaren—Cosmopolitan—Boston Investigator—Echo—East Devon Mail—Accrington Chronicle—Newcastle Daily Leader—Newcastle Chronicle—Grimsby News—Seafaring—Der Lichtfreund—Wolsingham Parish Magazine—Tailor and Cutter—South Wales Echo—Loyal American—Lucifer—Sunderland Echo—Worcestershire Echo.

FRIENDS who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish our attention directed.

CORRESPONDENCE should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

THE FREETHOUGHT FUND.

MR. FOOTE'S appeal, as President of the National Secular Society, for funds to extend the Society's work, is being responded to by friends in various parts of the country. Some of the subscribers promise to remit annually as much as they can afford; others, who can only send a little at a time, promise to remit half-yearly or quarterly. As soon as possible a list of intending subscribers will be prepared. Meanwhile the following subscriptions are acknowledged as actually received by Mr. Foote or Mr. Forder.

Sixth List.

	£	s.	d.		£	s.	d.
W. C. Johnson	1	1	0	G. S. H.	1	0	0
A. Carter	1	1	0	G. Alward	1	0	0
J. H. E.	0	10	0	Incog.	0	1	0
J. Moffat	0	7	6	R. Birtwistle	0	2	0
W. R. (per Mr. Bradlaugh	1	0	0	C. N.	0	1	0

SUGAR PLUMS.

Notwithstanding the fine warm weather there was a capital audience at the London Hall of Science on Sunday evening, when Mr. Foote lectured on "Is there a Future Life?" Discussion was invited, but only one gentleman arose and he was a questioner. He wanted to know which was the safe side, and his primitive state of mind caused a good deal of laughter.

To-day (May 25) the National Secular Society's Conference takes place at Manchester. The morning sitting opens at half-past ten. Every member of the National Secular Society has a right to attend, and speak and vote. Other Freethinkers can watch and listen from the back seats or the gallery. In the evening there will be an open meeting addressed by various speakers.

Mr. Wheeler will attend the Conference in order to report for the Freethinker. Our readers may look forward to a full, though not a tediously minute, account of the proceedings.

The Council of the London Secular Federation held a special meeting at the Hall of Science on Thursday evening, May 15, to discuss the Agenda of the N.S.S. Conference. Mr. Foote thought it better not to attend the meeting. Being president of the N.S.S., he did not wish to lay himself under the suspicion of pre-influencing the votes of the London Branches; and, in the second place, he did not think it right to anticipate the explanations he will have to make before the whole Society. The agenda was thoroughly discussed, and most of Mr. Foote's proposals were cordially approved. About the first proposal for altering the annual subscription there was a division of opinion, but a majority were in its favor. Some of the objections to it, as reported to Mr. Foote, were founded upon a misconception, and will probably disappear at the Conference.

Mr. Foote's four-nights' debate with the Rev. Dr. McCann is a present running through Secular Thought. Mr. Watts, the editor of that journal, seems to find debates good copy.

Digitized by Google

He is himself a veteran debater, and has crossed swords with many Christian champions in America. We have just received a written debate he held recently with the editor of the Halifax Evening Mail. It makes a big pamphlet, priced at a quarter of a dollar. Mr. Watts more than holds his own in this discussion on Secularism. He demolishes his opponent.

READ THE "FREETHINKER" 1D. Published at 28 STONECUTTER STREET, E.C. Order of your Bookseller.

This is a fac-simile of a stamp which Messrs. Ireton and Co. have produced for Miss Vance, who desires to advertise us by thus marking her paper, envelopes, etc. Any reader who feels disposed to go and do likewise will be supplied by Messrs. Ireton and Co. with the complete apparatus for 2s. This is a wonderfully cheap and we think effective way of advertising us.

We have just issued from our publishing office a little volume which every Freethinker should possess. It was written more than a hundred and fifty years ago by Anthony Collins, the father of English Freethought, a man whose character was equal to his intellect, which is saying a great deal. He was a personal friend of the great John Locke, who praised his love of truth and moral courage as superior to almost any other he had ever known, and by his will made him one of his executors. Many works in defence and illustration of Freethought proceeded from his active pen. The one we have reprinted is his masterpiece, and it goes to the root of the matter. It deals with the doctrine of Free Will, and, on the admission of Professor Fraser, the learned Editor of Berkeley, it "states the arguments against human freedom with a logical force unsurpassed by any necessitarian." Professor Huxley also, speaking of Collins's encounter with Dr. Samuel Clarke, the famous theologian, says that the Freethinker "writes with wonderful power and closeness of reasoning."

Mr. Wheeler has contributed to this reprint a full and very interesting account of Collins's life and works, and Mr. Foote has supplied some annotations. The price of the volume is one shilling. A small number of copies, printed on superfine paper, and well bound in cloth, are priced at two shillings.

Should this reprint meet with a favorable reception—and we can hardly doubt that it will—it will be followed by some other reprints of the "Fathers of Freethought."

Mr. John M. Robertson's articles on "Christ and Krishna" in the National Reformer have been reprinted and are now published in a two shilling volume which should receive attention of all interested in the disputed question of the influence of India upon Christianity. We shall shortly notice the work at greater length.

Among the signs of the spread of heresy among women may be mentioned a novel The New Continent by Mrs. Worthey, published this year by Macmillan and Co., apparently called out by Robert Elsmere. It depicts the progress of the heroine from the Broad Church influences of Maurice, Hinton, and Kingsley, via Matthew Arnold and Wm. Kingdon Clifford to Positivism, or as she calls it Human Catholicism.

Among the fresh letters of Keats just issued by Mr. Buxton Forman there is one which contains the following: "Parsons will always keep up their character, but as it is said there are some animals the ancients knew which we do not know, let us hope our posterity will miss the black badger with tri-cornered hat."

The Italian Liberals are preparing to erect a monument in Rome to Arnold of Brescia, who was burnt by the Inquisition in 1155 for the crime of denouncing the corruption of the clergy. This will be another thorn in the side of the Papacy which now laments that it cannot escape from its past. Thus does the whirligig of time bring its revenges.

The titles of our streets when they soar beyond the commonplaces of High, King, Church or Chapel, usually register the names of some landlord or jerry-builder unknown outside the district of his property. They manage these things better in France, where the thoroughfares call to mind the existence of men who have been a glory to the nation. We see by a new decree the names of the eminent Freethinkers; Danton, Paul Bert, and Pierre Larousse are among those given to different Paris streets.

The number of Fritankaren which announces Viktor E. Lennstrand's release, contains a translation into Swedish of Mr. Wheeler's recent article on Christianity and Civilisation, made by Captain Otto Thomson.

No doubt there is room for much Freethought work in India, and we are pleased to see the Cosmopolitan, of Calcutta, is continuing its useful work. The fourth number now before us, reprints articles by Messrs. Foote, Wheeler, and Ball, as well as original ones from the pen of the editor and others.

The French drama "Mahomet," which was prohibited at the instance of the Turkish ambassador, has been printed. It seems that the author, with a reckless disregard of history and probability, makes the prophet of Arabia commit suicide and in his last moments embrace Christianity.

Mr. Hyndman is more courageous or less prudent than Mr. Burns, and he is going to debate the legal eight-hours question with Mr. Bradlaugh. From the papers we see that propositions are drawn up on both sides. The discussion will be looked forward to with great interest.

A correspondence on the truth of Christianity has been appearing in the Grimsby News. We hope our friends will keep the ball rolling.

The Yorkshire Secular Federation had a picnic on Sunday at Bingly. After tea the company went into the heart of the town and held an open-air meeting. Mr. White delivered a stirring address, which was listened to by a large crowd. Arrangements are being made for another excursion to Shipley Glen on June 8.

Mr. M. D. Conway is in England again. He discoursed at South Place Chapel last Sunday morning, and his dry humor refreshed the congregation after Dr. Coit's greater solemnity. Speaking of Mde. Blavatsky, Mr. Conway said that he saw her in India, and asked her what the "miracles" of Theosophy were all about. What was the meaning of plucking jewels and broaches out of flowers, and tea plants growing out of chairs? The astute lady replied "It is all glamor, all pretence." Mr. Conway thinks her frankness was intended to prevent the investigations he proposed to make, which might have produced a bad effect on the ignorant disciples downstairs.

THE HALO OF THE SCAFFOLD.

A rollicking, reckless villain I've been,
And now—unwillingly guest of the Queen—
The prison knell I with longing await,
For the gallows-trap is but heaven s gate.

I've put out the light of more people than one.
And got nabbed at last long before I had done;
Yet I care not a jot for my well-deserved fate,
For the gallows-trap is but heaven's gate.

My partner, Will Cracker, they strung up last Spring;
To heaven he flew upon angelic wing;
In the regions of bliss I shall soon join my mate,
For the gallows-trap is but heaven's gate.

The chaplain declares that to glory has passed
All the hanged who for mercy have cried out at last;
So I'll soon mix with saints in a happier state,
For the gallows-trap is but heaven's gate.

A. Guest.

Who is the Rev. W. Jacomb of Willesden, advertised in the Tailor and Cutter as "late Secularist lecturer" who will conduct a gospel meeting in the Tailor's Lecture Hall, off Regent Street? His fame never travelled so far as to reach our ears.

A Falkirk Christian felt a call from the Lord to kill every woman he met. Armed with a stout stick, he chased a woman in Comely Park Terrace, and beat her badly about the head before he could be secured. On being seized he shouted "Hallelujah, praise the Lord." Evidently the poor man was born three thousand years too late. As an ancient Jew, during the conquest of Palestine, he would have been in his element.

Digitized by Google

THE GOSPEL OF FACT.

Part II.

Fact is strength. The man who accepts the Gospel of Fact as his guide can neither believe in, nor have any fear of, anything with which neither he nor anybody else has any acquaintance. Standing on the pedestal of the Gospel of Fact, its disciple can calmly look the world in the face, and examine the dogmas and the theories of his fellows by applying to them the infallible test of reason.

Before reason everything not in strict accordance with fact will vanish away. The first thing that will go is the belief in inspired books. The inspired books in which men believe and trust cannot stand the test of reason, even were we assured that there was such a being as could inspire the writers of them. As to the origin of those books all is uncertainty. The only evidence offered of their inspiration is the books themselves. This evidence is absolutely worthless. We would not for a moment accept it in a history or a biography. We should have some facts to back up the assertions of the books themselves; without those facts the assertions are absolutely worthless. The inspired books purport to deal with actual facts, and, accordingly, we are as much bound to have those alleged facts supported by corroborative evidence as we have in the case of Cæsar's narrative of the Gallic wars. But nobody knows who wrote the Bible or the Gospels; nobody knows when they were written; nobody of whom history has any knowledge ever experienced anything like the Bible occurrences; in a word, nobody knows anything for certain about the Scriptures except that they exist, and that they assert that they are inspired, or are believed to be inspired, which is much the same thing. Their authenticity, therefore, being impossible of proof, and incapable of proof, the inexorable Gospel of Fact brushes "inspired" literature aside as so much rubbish.

The Bible being rejected, the Bible God of necessity goes with his inspired book. His history and character as painted by his "prophets" would damn the Bible, even if strong evidence were advanced in proof of its authenticity. To think that a being who could make this world out of nothing would be such a failure when he made angels and men is inconceivable. To imagine him making angels who turned out rebels, and making man who disobeyed him almost as soon as he was made, is to have the most unqualified contempt for his character. From the time when he is alleged to have made hell for man, and man for hell, until he is alleged to have sentenced his own son to death, his record is that of a divine Czar, with the success of the human Czar left out. A fickle tyrant, a brute, and a failure, this scarecrow of the skies would, were he possible and existent, deserve nothing from men but contempt and rebellion. But the Bible evidence of his existence, and the character in which he is therein painted, are in themselves infallible proofs that he is a myth.

But there are people that reject the Bible who still say that there is a God. These do not profess to know so much about his sayings and doings as those who accept the Scriptures as divine truths. They want to explain the origin of the universe, and they do it by saying that God made it. They cannot explain God, or give any definite opinion about him. To these people God is a convenient refuge when their minds fail them in trying to imagine the origin of the world. Belief in him is soothing to timid minds, as it is self-satisfying to those for whom the mystery of the world's origin is too much.

But when we apply the teachings of our Gospel of Fact to the God of the Deist, we shall find that he is no better than a mere guess at the origin of what is really incomprehensible. Once the Bible is rejected there is no justification for dethroning reason in considering the existence or non-existence of a supernatural being. It is inconsistent to apply reason to the Bible without applying it to God afterwards. If reason is applied to the Bible, it must also be applied to God. There is no possible justification for any other course.

Immediately reason is applied to the assertion that there is a God, God disappears. By thought we may not be able to add a cubit to our stature, but by thought we can dethrone a God. For God is incomprehensible. We cannot possibly conceive such a being as a God. The human mind is incapable of the thought. What the mind is incapable of thinking, and what it has no evidence whatever of, is not a fact, and is almost unworthy of being speculated upon even for a moment. The Gospel of Fact only allows what is known to be true, and nobody knows that there is a God. Far from knowing, nobody can even conceive him, no matter how he tries. It is no use to say that without a God there would be no world. The world is a fact of which we have absolute knowledge, even if we are ignorant of its origin. It does not help us a bit to endeavor to explain the inexplicable by alleging that an incomprehensible being is the explanation. This is only making confusion worse confounded.

When people talk of believing in a God they must ignore fact and reason, the latter because reason forbids belief in a God, the former because there is not the smallest particle of evidence that such a being exists. Out of infinite space no word, no token, has ever come that a God dwells among the stars. If he is there he takes care to keep dark and to reveal nothing. In infinite space there is no room for him. Where he could be, and how he could come into being, and what could be his motives, are all unknowable and unthinkable. Did he exist he would never have let us be undecided about him, nor have given us minds that cannot form an idea of his existence. Did he exist he could never be so cruel as to cause and maintain the sufferings of human beings. A being who could run a world could make the lot of man less free from pain and misery. No; reason, our only criterion, forbids us to think that God exists. He is unthinkable, unknowable, a mere invention, a bogey,—anything and everything, that speculative minds may imagine, but never a Fact!

J. O'Donovan.

(To be concluded.)

ARE CLERGYMEN FRAUDS?

By Hugh O. Pentecost.

(From the "Twentieth Century.")

[concluded.]

There are a great many ministers who preach what they do not believe and many more who do not preach what they believe. When they cease to believe in a dogma of their church they keep silent upon that point instead of giving up their salaries and leaving the church. But I have tried to put the case in the most favorable light possible.

Clergymen have a way of juggling with words that is very dishonest. They will say they believe in the divinity of Jesus, because divinity means anything or nothing to them. The fraud consists in trying to make other people believe that they mean the Deity of Jesus.

I once saw a young clergyman examined for installation. In his examination paper he said that he believed in the divinity of Jesus. But one of the most influential ministers in the council asked him if he meant that he believed in the Deity of Jesus The poor fellow was so scared that he said he did. It so happened that I had been talking to him on that very subject, and he told me that he did not believe in the Deity of Jesus but he believed in the divinity of Jesus, and when I asked him what he meant by the divinity of Jesus he did not know. But he said before the council that he believed in the Deity of Jesus. He was a liar. But he is one of the most what they call "active" clergymen in his denomination. The last time I heard of him he was begging for 150.000 dollars with which to build a billiard room and tenpin alley as an annex to his church.

Digitized by Google

How do you suppose those very liberal Episcopal clergymen, of whom we all know, get along while they go through their Prayer Book service, which declares that Jesus was born of a virgin and that children are regenerated when they have the baptismal water put upon them? Why, some of them say that the word virgin was sometimes applied to any married woman who was faithful to her husband; and as for baptismal regeneration, they say that is what the church teaches, not what they believe. They simply read the service; that is all. But do you believe that any man on this green earth would higgle and quibble and whip his conscience into justifying such humbug if there were not some worldly advantage to be gained by it?

Every one knows that there are a great many priests in the Episcopal church who do not believe in the Thirty-nine Articles, a great many ministers in the Presbyterian church who do not believe in the Westminster Catechism, a great many ministers in the Baptist church who do not believe in the New Hampshire Confession of Faith, a great many ministers in the Methodist church who do not believe in the Book of Discipline, a great many priests in the Roman Catholic church who do not believe in the infallibility of the Pope. All these ministers and priests are frauds; they are hypocrites, although that is an ugly word to apply to anybody; because they encourage people to think that they do believe in all these things, and if many of them were put before an authoritative examining committee they would say they believe in them.

Nobody will or can truthfully deny these facts, and whatever may be the motives of these clergymen in thus living their false lives, however they may have succeeded in making themselves believe that what they are doing is right, I think I am safe in saying that if some worldly advantage were not to be gained by their doing as they do, they would act differently.

It is not a pleasant nor an easy thing for a man to stifle his convictions or pretend to believe what he does not believe. There are very few joys that are comparable to the joys of freedom. There is hardly any pleasure so great as that of speaking your mind, honestly and truthfully. And no man would forego that pleasure unless he was tempted to do so by safety from physical pain, or freedom from poverty or social ostracism. Nobody can possibly believe that clergymen would conceal their real opinions if money and power and respectability were to be obtained by speaking them.

It is proverbial that clergymen will confess in private conversation what they will not confess in the pulpit, that they will talk more freely about their doubts among each other than before their congregations, that they will sympathise with a heretic in private and denounce that same heretic in public. Everybody who has had private conversation with clergymen knows that this is true, and everybody knows that it could not be true of men who were thoroughly honest.

But the saddest part of the whole business is that the laymen of the Christian Church all know that everything I have said is true, but they do not seem to care. Of course, knowing their ministers as well as they do, they cannot respect them as they would if the clergymen were thoroughly honest men, but they pretend to; they become partakers of the sham; perhaps because the clergy are their faithful friends in all their legal and respectable dishonesties.

This leads me to say that I could forgive the clergymen all their intellectual immoralities much more easily than I can forgive them for their persistent enmity to the poor. Whatever may be said of Jesus of Nazareth, as he is portrayed to us in the four Gospels, it must be admitted that all his sympathies were with the poor. It is plain to me at least, that he was not God. It is equally plain to me that he did not understand why the poor were poor; he did not understand economics as that science is coming to be understood, after all these centuries of experience; his solution of the problems incident to wealth and poverty—that the rich should give their possessions to the poor in charities—is not the true solution of these problems. But he loved the poor, he lived among them, he was one of them, and all his fault-finding and denunciations were directed toward the rich. His heart was in the right place.

But the modern clergyman praises the intelligence and enterprise of the rich and blames the poor for being poor. He accuses them of indolence, intemperance and unthrift. The clergymen of to-day are the defenders and apologists of land monopoly, money monopoly, machinery monopoly and transportation monopoly. If a rich employer and a poor employé are members of the same church the clergyman will be for the rich employer and against the poor employé. There is hardly a clergyman who would not be delighted to have the most greedy monopolist in the land join his church. The causes of poverty are now well understood, but the clergymen are in favor of continuing those causes.

It may be said that they are ignorant. That is true to a great extent. But they have no business to be ignorant. The very fact that Jesus was the poor man's friend while they are the poor man's enemies ought to startle them into the recognition that something must be wrong with their position. They cannot possibly be ignorant of the fact that churches run away from poor districts as men run from a plague. They cannot possibly read the story of their Master, as they call him, and not see the immense difference between what he was and what they are. If they can—if they are so ignorant as that—they are not fit to teach and lead the people.

I wish to say again that I know nothing of the motives of these men. They may be perfectly conscientious for aught I know to the contrary. Nothing is easier than for a man to debauch his conscience and then follow in its horribly diseased condition. But I am firmly convinced that facts indicate that clergymen, as a class, are shamefully dishonest men, intellectually. They are—and this is the kindest thing that can be said of them—blind leaders of the blind, and as long as the people follow them they will continue to fall into the ditch of poverty and superstition.

HUXLEY ON PERSECUTION.

Professor Huxley's paper on "Government" in the current number of The Nineteenth Century is a very thoughtful production. He argues neither in favor of socialism or individualism but against à priori method. So far from being content with the present lot of the workers, he says if the increase of knowledge, the winning of greater dominion over nature and the wealth which follows that dominion are to make no difference to the extent and intensity of want, with its concomitant physical and moral degradation among the masses of the people, he would hail the advent of some kindly comet which would sweep the whole affair away, as a desirable consummation. If he believed the socialistic schemes would attain their desired end, he would gladly devote the remainder of his days to their advocacy. But he sees a cardinal defect in all such schemes in that they ignore the population question. On the subject of the sphere of government he has the following words on the influence of Christianity:

"One heritage of old Roman statecraft, at any rate, passed bodily over to Catholic churchcraft. As soon as the Church was strong enough, it began to persecute with a vigor and consistency which the Empire never attained. In the ages of faith, Christian ecclesiasticism raged against freedom of thought, as such, and compelled the State to punish religious dissidence as a criminal offence of the worst description. The ingenuity of pagan persecutors failed to reach the shameful level of that of the Christian inventors of the Holy Office; nor did the civil governors of pagan antiquity ever degrade themselves so far as to play the executioner for a camarilla of priests. The doctrine that the authority of the State extends to men's beliefs as well as to their actions, and, consequently, is conterminous with the whole of human life; and that the power of the State ought to be used for the promotion of orthodoxy and the extermination of heterodoxy is, in fact, a necessary corollary of Romanism, which, however disguised by prudence when the Papacy is weak, is sure to reappear when it is strong enough to dispense with hypocrisy. In the sixteenth century, the theory and practice of a thousand years had so thoroughly incorporated intolerance with Christianity, that even the great reformers held firmly by this precious heirloom of the ages of faith, whatever other shards of ecclesiastical corruption they might cast aside. Happily, the pretensions to infallibility of sects, who differed only in the higher or lower positions of the points at which they held on to the slope between Romanism and Rationalism, were so absurd that political Gallios have been able to establish a modus vivendi among them."

"An old salt is a man who has for many years followed the sea, I believe?" "Certainly." "I know of a woman who never went to sea, but who is the most famous old salt the world ever knew." "And who is it?" "Lot's wife!"

Young curate (on a parochial visit): "You go to Sunday School, little girl?" Little girl: "Yeth, sir," Y. C.: "I hope that the little girls and boys whom you meet there never do or say anything naughty?" L. G.: "Well, thir, Bobby Brown said yethterday that Bill Thomath was a damn fool, but then he ith, you know."

Digitized by Google

CORRESPONDENCE.

GENESIS I., 16.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE FREETHINKER."

SIR,—I read in your able leader on Gladstone's rhapsodies anent Genesis,—"The sun and moon were two great lights, and the stars were thrown in with an—also." Of course you quote from the faulty English translation. Permit me to add for the information of your numerous readers, not conversant with the Hebrew text, that no such a sentence as, "He made the stars also," occurs in the vernacular. Literally translated verse 16 reads thus: "And then made Elohim two instruments of light, great ones; the light, great for the rule of day, and the light little for the rule of the night, and reflectors." (i.e. stars.) It clearly shows what a poor idea the concoctor of this silly fable had of the innumerable worlds, revealed to us through the telescope. In Hebrew two words dispose of those innumerable worlds,—more important than the sun, moon and our planet. Our sun is only a speck in the infinite expanse,—a mere drop in the universal ocean. The clergy justly alarmed at the rapid and enormous progress of the human intellect, try to make this clumsy biblical fiction dovetail in with modern science, but in vain.

CHARLES KROLL LAPORTE.

SUNDAY MEETINGS.

[Notices of Lectures, etc., must reach us by first post on Tuesday, and be marked "Lecture Notice," if not sent on post-card.]

LONDON.

Battersea—The Shed of Truth, Prince of Wales's Road, 7.30, Mr. Dipper, "The Resurrection—Did it Happen?" Social evening every Tuesday. Thursday evening, discussion.

Camberwell—61 New Church Road, S.E., 7.30, Mr. F. Millar, "A Future State."

Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, E.C., 7.30, Mr. T. Parris "Freethought: What it Means."

West Ham—121 Broadway, Plaistow, 7, Capt. C. Pfoundes, "The Ethics of Buddhism."

Woolwich—"Sussex Arms," Assembly Room, 60 Plumstead Road (entrance, Masey Road), 7.30, Mr. W. Heaford, "Bible Barbarities and Absurdities."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

Battersea Park Gates. 11.15, Mr. T. Thurlow, "Jesus and his Beliefs."

Bethnal Green—Opposite St. John's Church, 11.15, Mr. G. Spiller, "In the Year of our Lord 1890."

Camberwell—Station Road, 11.30, a lecture.

Clerkenwell Green, 11.30, Mr. W. Heaford, "The Mission and Teachings of Christ."

Hyde Park, near Marble Arch, 11.15, Mr. J. Rowney, "Miracles." May 28, at 8, Mr. W. Heaford, "Miracles."

Kingsland Green, 11.30, Mr. S. Soddy. "Religion and Science."

Plaistow Green (near the station), 11.30, a lecture.

Regent's Park near Gloucester Gate, 3.30, Mr. A. B. Moss.

Victoria Park, near the fountain, 11, Mr. F. Haslam, "Dr. Draper's Conflict between Science and Religion."

Westminster Old Pimlico Pier, 11.30, Mr. F. Millar, "The Evolution of Religious Ideas."

COUNTRY.

Hanley—Secular Hall, 51 John Street, 7, a lady Freethinker, miscellaneous recitals.

Liverpool Branch N.S.S., Camden Hall, Camden Street—7, Mr. Harry Smith, "Why Call ye me Lord?" Train for Manchester leaves central station at 9 a.m.

Newcastle—Lecture Hall, Nelson Street, Mr. C. J. Hunt, 11, "Life and Death"; 3, "Mind and Matter"; 7, "Free Will and Responsibility." Monday, 26, Tynemouth Sands, "The Christian Creed." Thursday, 29, Gateshead (Sunderland Road end), "Christianity and Secularism." Blyth (in the open air) May 27 and 28. Tea provided in Society's Rooms, Newgate Street, after the Sunday afternoon lecture.

Sheffield Hall of Science, Rockingham Street, 7, musical and other recitals, by several ladies and gentlemen.

LECTURERS' ENGAGEMENTS.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Credon Road, London S.E.—May 25, Manchester (Conference). June 1 (morning), Pimlico, (evening), Woolwich; 8 (morning), Bethnal Green, (evening), Camberwell; 15 (evening), Ball's Pond; 22 (morning), Clerkenwell; 29 (morning), Mile End, (afternoon), Victoria Park. July 6 (morning), Pimlico, (evening), Woolwich; 13 (morning), Mile End, (evening), Camberwell; 20 (afternoon), Victoria Park.

E. STANLEY JONES, 3 Leta Street, City Road, Walton, Liverpool.—May 18, Failsworth. June 8, Manchester.

H. SMITH, 3 Breck Place, Breck Road, Everton Road, Liverpool.—May 25, Liverpool. June 1, Sheffield; 15, Birmingham.

T. THURLOW, 7 Dickson's Villas, Rutland Road, East Ham.—May 25 (morning), Battersea. June 15 (morning and evening), Battersea.

THE IMPOSSIBLE CREED

An Open Letter to the

BISHOP OF PETERBOROUGH

By G. W. FOOTE.

Price 2d. Price 2d.

PROGRESSIVE PUBLISHING CO.'S LIST.

All orders to be sent, with remittance, to R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C. Rate of postage—Orders under 3d., one halfpenny; orders under 6d. one penny. Orders over 6d. post free.

G. W. FOOTE.

	s.	d.
PRISONER FOR BLASPHEMY. Cloth ... ... A Full History of his Three Trials and Twelve Months' Imprisonment. Copies in paper covers, soiled, 6d.	2	6
IS SOCIALISM SOUND? ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant.	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
CHRISTIANITY AND SECULARISM ... ... Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. In paper covers.	1	0
Superior edition in cloth	1	6
INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS ... ... Second edition, enlarged.	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0
DARWIN ON GOD	0	6
Superior edition, in cloth	1	0
CONTENTS:—Darwin's Grandfather—Darwin's Father—Darwin's Early Piety—Almost a Clergyman—On Board the "Beagle"—Settling at Down—Death and Burial—Purpose of Pamphlet—Some Objections—Darwin Abandons Christianity—Deism—Creation—Origin of Life—Origin of Man—Animism—A Personal God—Design—Divine Beneficence—Religion and Morality—Agnosticism and Atheism.
DEFENCE OF FREE SPEECH ... ... Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes.	0	4
LETTERS TO JESUS CHRIST	0	4
PHILOSOPHY OF SECULARISM	0	3
THE BIBLE GOD	0	2
THE FOLLY OF PRAYER	0	2
THE IMPOSSIBLE CREED ... ... An Open Letter to the Bishop of Peterborough on the Sermon on the Mount.	0	2
CHRISTIANITY AND PROGRESS ... ... A Reply to Mr. Gladstone.	0	2
THE SHADOW OF THE SWORD ... ... A moral and statistical Essay on War.	0	2
ROYAL PAUPERS ... ... Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty.	0	2
MRS. BESANT'S THEOSOPHY ... ... A Candid Criticism.	0	2
THEOSOPHY AND SECULARISM.. ... ... A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant.	0	2
THE NEW CAGLIOSTRO ... ... An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky.	0	2
WHAT WAS CHRIST? ... ... A Reply to J. S. Mill.	0	2
THE DYING ATHEIST. A Story	0	1
WAS JESUS INSANE? ... ... A searching inquiry into the mental condition of the Prophet of Nazareth.	0	1
BIBLE HEROES—First Series, in elegant wrapper ... (1) Mr. Adam, (2) Captain Noah, (3) Father Abraham, (4) Juggling Jacob, (5) Master Joseph, (6) Joseph's Brethren, (7) Holy Moses I., (8) Holy Moses II., (9) Parson Aaron, (10) General Joshua, (11) Jephthah and Co., (12) Professor Samson. One Penny each singly.	1	0
BIBLE HEROES—Second Series, in elegant wrapper... (13) Prophet Samuel, (14) King Saul, (15) Saint David I., (16) Saint David II., (17) Sultan Solomon, (18) Poor Job, (19) Hairy Elijah (20) Bald Elisha, (21) General Jehu, (22) Doctor Daniel, (23) The Prophets (Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Hosea); (24) St. Peter, (25) St. Paul	1	0

G. W. FOOTE and W. P. BALL.

BIBLE HANDBOOK FOR FREETHINKERS AND INQUIRING CHRISTIANS	1	4
Superior edition, in cloth	2	0
Sold also in separate parts as follows—
Bible Contradictions ... ... The Contradictions are printed in parallel columns.	0	4
2. Bible Absurdities ... ... All the chief Absurdities from Genesis to Revelation, conveniently and strikingly arranged, with appropriate headlines, giving the point of each absurdity in a sentence.	0	4
3. Bible Atrocities ... ... Containing all the godly wickedness from Genesis to Revelation. Each infamy has a separate headline for easy reference	0	4
4. Bible Immoralities, Indecencies, Obscenities, Broken Promises, and Unfulfilled Prophecies ...	0	4

COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

MISTAKES OF MOSES	1	0
Superior edition, in cloth ... ... Only Complete Edition published in England	1	6
DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT ... ... Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy.	0	6
REPLY TO GLADSTONE ... ... With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler.	0	4
ROME OR REASON? Reply to Cardinal Manning	0	4
FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Rev. Dr. Field ...	0	2
GOD AND MAN. Second Reply to Dr. Field	0	2
THE DYING CREED	0	2
THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH	0	2

Digitized by Google

FREE WILL AND NECESSITY.

A PHILOSOPHICAL INQUIRY CONCERNING

HUMAN LIBERTY.

By ANTHONY COLLINS.

First Published in 1715. Now Reprinted, with Preface and Annotations, by G. W. FOOTE, And a Biographical Introduction by J. M. WHEELER.

"I do not know of anything that has been advanced by later writers in support of the scheme of Necessity, of which the germ is not to be found in the Inquiry of Collins."—Prof. Dugald Stewart.

"Collins states the arguments against human freedom with a logical force unsurpassed by any Necessitarian."
—Prof. A. C. Fraser

"Collins writes with wonderful power and closeness of reasoning."—Prof. Huxley.

"Collins was one of the most terrible enemies of the Christian religion."—Voltaire.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

Superior Edition, printed on superfine paper, and bound in cloth,

Two Shillings.

PROGRESSIVE PUBLISHING COMPANY, 28 STONECUTTER STREET, FARRINGDON STREET, LONDON, E.C.

"THE ESSENCE OF RELIGION"

GOD THE IMAGE OF MAN—MAN'S DEPENDENCE UPON NATURE THE LAST AND ONLY SOURCE OF RELIGION.

By LUDWIG FEUERBACH.

"No one has demonstrated and explained the purely human origin of the idea of God better than Ludwig Feuerbach."
—Büchner.

"I confess that to Feuerbach I owe a debt of inestimable gratitude. Feeling about in uncertainty for the ground, and finding everywhere shifting sands, Feuerbach cast a sudden blaze in the darkness and disclosed to me the way."
—Rev. S. Baring-Gould.

Price One Shilling.

2d. each. PARTS I. and II. 2d. each.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC?

NEW PAMPHLETS BY
COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

32 pages. NOW READY. Price 3d.

CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS

A Noble Plea for a Rational Treatment of Prisoners and a Humane Jurisprudence,
BY COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

W. J. Rendell's
"WIFE'S FRIEND."

Recommended in "Law of Population," and "Wife's Hand Book." Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell Street Clerkenwell, and supplied per post, 2s. dozen. For particulars of this Malthusian discovery send stamped envelope. Higginson's Syringe, with vertical and reverse current, 3s. 6d. and 4s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. All other Malthusian Appliances. All prices post free.

HARTNOLL,
ENGLISH AND FOREIGN CHEMIST,
1A PICCADILLY
(Under the London Pavilion Music Hall),
LONDON, W.

Hartnoll's Specialities, Appliances and Medicated Preparations are world-renowned.

Spiral, Douche and Latest Improved Syringes.

ESTABLISHED OVER 50 YEARS.

RUBBER STAMPS.

Your Monogram to mark Linen or Paper; two letters, 1s.; three letters, 1s. 6d.; any Name, 1s. 6d. Box, Pad and Ink included. All kinds of Stamps. Patterns free. Carriage 2d. extra. F. N. IRETON and CO., 92 Gracechurch Street, London. Agents wanted.

THE GOD IDEA.

BY VIKTOR LENNSTRAND.

A Lecture, for delivering which the author was sentenced to six months' imprisonment for Blasphemy in Sweden. Translated from the Swedish, with an Introduction by J. M. WHEELER.
PRICE TWOPENCE.
R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C.

THE BIBLE AND EVOLUTION.

By ARTHUR B. MOSS.
Handsomely Bound in Cloth, 2s. 6d.

The "National Reformer" says: "The author has long won his spurs as a Freethought lecturer, etc. . . one of his best sustained literary efforts."

The "Freethinker" says: "It is by far the best production of Mr. Moss's pen, and we heartily recommend it as an excellent text-book of the subject. The matter is good and the style is bright. The reader is carried along on an easy flowing stream of science, history, ethics and common sense."

Watts and Co., 17 Johnson's Court; Progressive Publishing Co.

TO MARRIED PEOPLE.

A New and Enlarged
ILLUSTRATED LIST OF MALTHUSIAN APPLIANCES AND SPECIALITIES
Will be forwarded per return of post on receipt of 1d. stamp.

DAVIES, CHEMIST,
101 PARK LANE, LEEDS.

POPULATION LIMITATION.—Practical instructions. Allbutt, Besant, Owen, Knowlton; 7d. each; lists 1d.; all post free. FISHER, Koburg, Leeds.

IS THE HOLY GHOST FOOLISH? See "Freethought Record" for May. One penny monthly. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C.; FISHER, Koburg, Leeds; and newsagents.

Second Edition. Price 2d.

VEGETARIAN FALLACIES. By Dr. C. R. DRYSDALE. A paper read at the Health Congress, Hastings, 1889; with opinions of Sir Edwin Chadwick and several Doctors, in course of discussion. Price 2d.; post free 2½d. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, E.C.

THE
FAMILY LIMIT

1s. 6d. per doz. post free.

For further Particulars send stamped directed envelope to

A. MOSS, 36 Upper Park Street,
ISLINGTON, LONDON, N.

GRATIS.

AN ILLUSTRATED 16-PAGE PAMPHLET, containing extracts from the utterances of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Manchester; the Revs. T. R. Malthus, A. E. Whatham, M. J. Savage, Leonard Dawson, — Lawton, H. R. Haweis; the following Doctors:—Allbutt, Allinson, Armstrong, Drysdale, Pye Chavasse, E. B. Foote, Nicholls, Wilder, Raciborski, Napheys and Reamy. Also Plato, Aristotle, Sismondi, Huxley, Mill, and numerous others. Should be read by every married and marriageable person. Sent on receipt of stamped addressed envelope by J. R. HOLMES, Hanney, Wantage, Berks.

TESTIMONIALS (Extracts from).

"The one you sent me some months since is

Quite Worn Out

with being lent to so many friends."

"Some of us have paid five shillings for less than one-tenth of the information."

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each, upper or lower set, £1. Best quality, 4s. each, upper or lower, £2, completed in four hours when required, repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18c. gold 15s.; stopping, 2s. 6d. extraction, 1s. painless by gas, 5s.

Printed and Published by G. W. Foote, at 28 Stonecutter Street Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

Vol. X.—No. 22.] SUNDAY, JUNE 1, 1890. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

FARRAR'S REPLY TO INGERSOLL.

WHAT a swarm of Christian apologists flutter round Colonel Ingersoll! He is a perfect nobody; he has no learning, and no brains to speak of; nothing he says is new, and it has all been answered before; in brief, he is a smart pretender, a showy shallow-pate, and every sensible Christian should leave him alone. But somehow they cannot leave him alone. He requires no answer, but they will answer him. He is not worth a thought, but they shower their articles upon him. Meanwhile the Colonel smiles that great, genial smile of his, and never loses his temper for a minute. He knows his own strength, and the strength of his cause, and he knows the meaning of all this pious blague.

Judge Black tilted at Ingersoll, and would not try a second round. Then came Dr. Field, then Mr. Gladstone, then Cardinal Manning, then Dr. Abbott and some smaller fry, and now comes Archdeacon Farrar with "A Few Words on Colonel Ingersoll" in the North American Review. Dr. Farrar is a prolix gentleman, with a style like a dictionary with the diarrhœa, and his "few words" extend to fifteen pages. All he has to say could have been put into a third of the space. On Mr. Gladstone's admission, Colonel Ingersoll "writes with a rare and enviable brilliancy." Archdeacon Farrar writes effeminately, with a vehemence that simulates strength, and a glare that apes magnificence. He revels in big adjectives and grandiose sentences, and is a striking specimen of literary flatulence.

This is not a complimentary description, but the Archdeacon has invited it. To prove the invitation we quote his opening sentence. "Although the views of Colonel Ingersoll," he says, "lie immeasurably apart from my own, he will not find in this paper a word of invective or discourtesy." Now this sentence is loose in style and false in statement. "Although" implies that invective and discourtesy might well be expected by anyone who differs from Dr. Farrar. "Immeasurably" is nonsense, for Colonel Ingersoll and Dr. Farrar both have definite views, and the difference between them is easily ascertained. "Discourtesy," at least, is infelicitous. Dr. Farrar speaks of Colonel Ingersoll's "enormous arrogance of assumption"; of his looking down "from the whole height of his own inferiority;" of thousands of intellects that, compared with his, are "as Dhawalaghari to a molehill." Here is "courtesy" for you! But this is not all. With his customary extravagance of language, the Archdeacon speaks of "those myriads of students of Holy Writ, who probably know ten thousand times more of the Scriptures than Colonel Ingersoll." What delightful good breeding! It seems that the Christians have so long enjoyed the right of "immeasurably" abusing Freethinkers that they fancy themselves quite polite when they are impudent enough to invite a kicking.

Let us now see what Dr. Farrar's "few words" amount to. He accuses Ingersoll of asserting instead of arguing, of indulging in "the unlimited enunciation of immense generalities," of "tossing aside the deepest and most permanent convictions of the vast majority of mankind as though they were too absurd even to need an answer," and generally of putting forth arguments which have been killed by the theologians, and really ought to feel that they are dead, and to get decently buried. Dr. Farrar evidently regards Ingersoll as a sceptical Banquo who indecently haunts the supper-room of the theological Macbeth.

But when he condescends to details the Archdeacon cuts a sorry figure. He takes some of Ingersoll's "immense generalities" and tries to explode them, with shocking results to himself. Here is number one.

I. The same rules or laws of probability must govern in religious questions as in others.

This would have been regarded by the great Bishop Butler as an axiom. But Dr. Farrar is not a Bishop Butler, so he calls it "an exceedingly dubious and disputable assertion." Revelation appeals to man's spirit, and Colonel Ingersoll ignores that "sphere of being." He is therefore like a blind man arguing about colors, or a deaf man arguing about music. In other words Dr. Farrar cannot prove the truth of his religion. He knows it intuitively, by means of a high faculty which Ingersoll does not possess, or only in an atrophied state. But this piece of fatuous impudence is far from convincing. Besides, Dr. Farrar is shrewd enough to see that the sceptic may reply, "Very well, then, what is the use of your talking to me?" Consequently he falls back upon the contention that the evidences of Christianity are "largely historical." But instead of adducing these evidences, and firmly defending them, he flies back immediately to his special faculty. "Men of science tell us," he says, "that there are ultra-violet rays of light invisible to the naked eye. Supposing that such rays can never be made apprehensible to our individual senses, are we therefore justified in a categorical denial that such rays exist?" Certainly not. Those ultra-violet rays of light can be demonstrated. They are apprehensible, though not to the naked eye. The analogy, therefore, is perfectly fallacious. Nor would anyone but a hopelessly incapable logician have adduced such a mal à propos illustration. Dr. Farrar is affirming the existence of a spiritual faculty as common as sight, and whose absence is as rare as blindness, and he adduces an instance of a fact which is only known to specialists.

II. There is no subject—and can be none—concerning which any human being is obliged to believe without evidence.

This proposition of Ingersoll's is indisputable. Dr. Farrar allows its truth. But he says it "insinuates" that Christianity is believed without evidence, and this is "outrageous and historically absurd." We will not discuss "outrageous," but we venture to say that "historically absurd" is a great absurdity. Nothing is clearer than that the mass of mankind, whether Christian or heathen, do believe without evidence. Their religion is simply a matter of education, and their faith depends on the geographical accident of their birth. Dr. Farrar may deny this, but every man of sense knows it is true.

Digitized by Google

We will not follow Dr. Farrar's tall talk about "the divine beauty of Christianity," the "unparalleled and transcendent loveliness" of Christ, and the "proved adaptation" (heaven save the mark!) of Christianity "to the needs of every branch of the human race." All this is professional verbiage. It is like the cry of "fresh fish!" in the streets, and is perfectly useless in discussion with Freethinkers.

III. Neither is there any intelligent being who can, by any possibility, be flattered by the exercise of ignorant credulity.

Dr. Farrar cannot deny this, but again he complains of insinuation. What right has Colonel Ingersoll to stigmatise as ignorant credulity "that inspired, inspiring," etc. etc.?

IV. The man who, without prejudice, reads and understands the Old and New Testaments will cease to be an orthodox Christian.

Dr. Farrar flies into a passion over this proposition, though the Catholic Church has always acted upon it, and tried to keep the Bible out of the people's hands. He also flies off on the question of "what is an orthodox Christian?" Colonel Ingersoll, he says, would probably include under the word orthodox "a great many views which many Christians have held, but which are in no sense a part of Christian faith, nor in any way essential to it." But who constituted Dr. Farrar the supreme authority on this question? Colonel Ingersoll judges for himself. He follows the sensible plan of taking the Bible as the Christian's standard. After that he takes the accepted and published doctrines of the great Christian churches. He is not bound to discuss the particular views of Dr. Farrar. Indeed, it is ludicrous that at this time of day, nearly two thousand years after Christ, a discussion on Christianity should be stopped to settle what Christianity is.

V. The intelligent man who investigates the religion of any country without fear and without prejudice will not and cannot be a believer.

Ingersoll's opinion may be unpalatable to Christians, though they would endorse it with regard to every religion but their own. His language, however, is perfectly courteous. Having to convey such an opinion, he could not have chosen less irritating words. But this moderation is lost on Dr. Farrar, who bursts into a characteristic storm of sound and fury.

"Argal, every believer in any religion is either an incompetent idiot [did you ever know a competent idiot?] or a coward with a dash of prejudice! If Colonel Ingersoll really takes in the meaning implied in his own words [really!], I should think that he would have [grammar!!] recoiled before the exorbitant and unparalleled hardihood of thus branding with fatuity, with craven timidity, or with indolent inability to resist a bias, the majority of mankind, as well as the brightest of human intellects. Surely no human being can be taken in by the show of self-confidence involved in such assertions as this! It is as useless to combat their unsupported obstreperousness as it is to argue with a man who bawls out a proposition in very loud tones [could he bawl in soft tones?] and thumps the table to emphasise his own infallibility. We have but to glance at the luminous path in the firmament of human greatness to see thousands of names of men whose intellect was, in comparison with the Colonel's, as Dhawalaghari to a molehill, who have yet studied each his own form of religion with infinitely [infinitely?] greater power than he has done, and have set to their seal that God is true."

Hallelujah! But after all this sputter the question remains where it was. Dr. Farrar is too fond of "words, words, words," and like Gratiano he can "talk an infinite deal of nothing." He would do well to study Ingersoll for a month or two, and prune the nauseous luxuriance of his own style.

G. W. FOOTE.

(To be concluded.)

PRAYERS.

In a very acute and philosophical pamphlet on Prayer, issued this year at Belfast, it is contended that prayer arose in savage times from the supplication for life by the vanquished to the victor. It was the natural and necessary result of a state of perpetual warfare. There is much to be said in favor of this theory. The very forms of prayer usually show a slavish spirit. The able author might have adduced the strong testimony of gesture language, the earliest of all forms of conveying thought and feeling. The attitudes of prayer are the attitudes of abject submission, the hands together as if bound or powerless, the petitioners on their knees, or as with the Mohammedans prostrate with face to the earth. Bowing at the name of Jesus; indeed all bowing is a sign of submission.

The Hebrew root of prayer signifies to bend, and we have the old form of prayer in the statement (Josh vii., 6), that Joshua rent his clothes and fell to the earth upon his face before the ark of the Lord and put dust upon his head. We are told too of the Lord swearing that every knee shall bow before him (Isaiah xlv., 23.) But although the pamphlet alluded to gives the core of the matter, there is another aspect of prayer which I think is overlooked by this able and original writer. It is that of its being a spell or incantation, whereby one may obtain power over spirits. Early religion is all magical. The relations of cause and effect are ill-defined and the power of words exaggerated. Much prayer may, it seems to me, be traced to a development of the belief in the efficacy of words as charms or spells to obtain the wishes of the utterer. The Jews used the words of the Lord as an amulet. They were bound as the frontlet between the eyes and fastened upon the doorposts of the house, just as verses of the Koran are used as talismans among the Mohammedans. Belief in the power of names as spells is found in all religions,* and is preserved in Christian baptism "in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost." The names are charms to ward off evil spirits. Prayer-books are collections of spells, as well as petitions, for blessings, fine weather, success in war and other desired objects.

Prayer in its early phases was a humble request for personal advantages. Even in the relation of master and slave there is often the disposition of the latter to gain mastery. Prayers became the means of controlling the unseen powers. Much of this is still found in current religion. Even Tennyson says:

> "More things are wrought by prayer
> Than this world dreams of."

From being as flexible as requests to a living chief, prayers stiffened into traditional formulars whose repetition required verbal accuracy, and whose nature practically assimilated more or less to that of magical charms. We find this especially in all liturgies in dead languages. Here the more unintelligible the prayer the more holy. Repetition itself has a merit. The Hindu cried Om so many thousand or even million times, and this repetition was believed to give power over the gods. The Catholics have their kyrie elisson copied by our formulars, Lord have mercy upon us, and Good Lord deliver us! The Catholics have copied their rosaries from the Buddhists, and keep their unintelligible prayers right by "telling their beads." But the Buddhists in their praying wheels, have brought mechanical piety to perfection. The prayer-mill was originally a "chakra" or symbolising wheel of the law, but has become a cylinder mounted on an axis which by each rotation is considered to repeat

* See Gen. xxxii. 29; Lev. xxiv. 11—16: Jud. xiii. 13; Matt. viii. 16; Acts iii. 16, iv., 6; Philip ii. 9, 10. Those who desire further information on this point are referred to my essay on Rumpelstiltskin, Freethinker, April 21, 1889, and the notes to the Sepher Toldoth Jeshu or Jewish Life of Christ.

Digitized by Google

the sentences written upon the papers it is filled with, usually Om mani padme houm (O the jewel in the lotus). This prayer-mill, turned by wind or water power, will "pray without ceasing" while the owner sleeps. But we have plenty of mechanical praying in our own churches.

"Supplication is the marrow of worship," said Muhammed, and the devotees of Islam carry out his theory. Among the Moslems, says Dean Stanley, "prayer is reduced to a mechanical act as distinct from a mental act, beyond any ritual observances in the West. It is striking to see the figures along the banks of the Nile going through their prostrations, at the rising of the sun, with the uniformity and regularity of clockwork; but it resembles the worship of machines rather than of reasonable beings." We doubt, however, if there is anything more perfunctory about Moslem worship than the bobbing down of the head and "smelling the hat" when the Protestant worshipper enters his pew. Among the sayings of Muhammed with reference to prayer was the curious one that "God accepts not the prayers of a woman arrived at puberty unless she covers her head." Covering the head was a sign of modesty and submission.

Whatever opinion we may have of the origin of prayers it is certain that reliance upon them is worse than futile. It is disastrous in that it hinders self-help, which is the great condition of progress. Christianity, as the writer of the pamphlet alluded to remarks, "intervened like a glacial period of ignorance between the time of Aristarchus and Epicurus to that of Newton and Darwin." As men become assured of the immutability of natural law they will cease praying for daily bread and co-operate with their fellows to assure it for themselves.

J. M. Wheeler.

THE GOSPEL OF FACT.

Part III.

To say that nature had its origin in a God is only like saying that the moon is made of green cheese. Saying so does not mean that it is so. God is contrary to Fact, and consequently in putting our gospel into practice must be altogether ignored. As a no-fact let him be!

The Gospel of Fact when it inculcates belief in nothing except what we actually know, teaches us to fall back on our own resources and to be self-reliant. The great question to be considered is not what was the origin of man so much as what is to be done with him. We see him the victim of ignorance, pain, and poverty; we see him the slave of an imaginary being; we see him wasting much energy to conciliate that being, through fear of punishment and hope of reward; and we see him believing in all sorts of lies and absurdities, and subordinating his interests in this world of fact to his supposed interests in the shadowy world beyond the grave. If he only could be brought to see it, the Gospel of Fact is good tidings indeed for deluded and suffering mankind. It teaches men that Gods and Devils are pure inventions and absurd impossibilities, and it aims at emancipating them from their slavery to both. It teaches them to devote their energies to the affairs of this world, and to leave the affairs of the other world to rogues, cowards and fools. It warns them to beware of everything contrary to fact, and reminds them that lies and absurdities are poor things to work a world with.

The problem of how to make the most of this world is quite complicated enough without introducing the concerns of another world of which we know nothing, and in which reason forbids us to believe. We know quite enough about life when we know that it is inseparable from pain and misery, and that it must end in the grave. A soul is as inconceivable as a God. Nobody has had ever any experience of such a thing as a soul, either of his own or anybody else's. As there is no harbor in space for a God, neither can there be for a soul, and to think of a soul —a spiritual nothing—flying through billions upon billions of miles of space to its supposed home beyond the stars, is preposterous, and it only requires a little reflection to convince anybody of its ridiculousness. The soul, then, should have no concern for man; his body is quite enough for him to care for, and difficult enough too.

In a word, the Gospel of Fact teaches that to make the most of life should be the great aim of man, and to make the most of it in accordance with the dictates of reason. To live as happy as possible; to do as much good to others as is possible; to endeavor to leave the condition of man better than they found it; and to give a helping hand to the cause of Progress—these are the aims of the followers of the Gospel of Fact, the godless men to whom a present life is everything, a future life nothing at all.

These principles of the Gospel of Fact may sometimes be claimed to be the product of that other Gospel which is not the Gospel of Fact; but claiming them does not make them so. The followers of the Christian Gospel have not a monopoly of goodness, of practice of kindness. Goodness, and justice, and kindness, are facts, natural facts, as inseparable from many men as the shape of their countenances. They are qualities implanted in human hearts by the process of evolution, and far from being the outcome of any Christian Gospel teaching, they are in reality tenets of the Gospel of Fact that were drawn on by the pious liars and dreamers of two thousand years ago. The Gospel of Fact has nothing to acknowledge to the Gospel of Christ—it is rather the other way.

To educate the young without frightening them about gods and devils; to teach them to be useful and to be just; to inculcate feelings of brotherly love—these are the great ambitions of the Gospel of Fact. To dispel ignorance; to extirpate poverty; to relieve pain; in short to secure everything that we know to be good, and to banish everything that we know to be hurtful—these, too, are the aims and the ambitions of the Gospel of Fact. To the religious person with the hope of reward beyond the grave, happiness here may seem a poor substitute for the "consolations of religion." But when the "consolations of religion" are proved to be shams; when everything outside this world has really no concern for us; and when the grave and eternal rest is the goal of humanity, the substantial happiness capable of being secured in this life is a thing not to be despised. If men could be induced to look facts in the face, and consider nothing but facts, death would lose its terrors, and the departed would be followed to the grave with genuine regrets, tempered with no false hopes of meeting in another world than this; while the certainty of parting for ever when Death comes on would make men kindlier towards each other, and would of itself help on civilisation towards that goal of perfection which is the ultimate aim and hope of the Godless Gospel of Fact.

J. O'Donovan.

HOW TO HELP US.

(1) Get your newsagent to exhibit the Freethinker in his window.
(2) Get your newsagent to take a few copies of the Freethinker and try to sell them, guaranteeing to take the copies that may remain unsold.
(3) Take an extra copy (or more), and circulate it among your acquaintances.
(4) Display, or get displayed, one of our contents-sheets, which are of a convenient size for the purpose. Mr. Forder will send them on application.

Digitized by Google

NATIONAL SECULAR SOCIETY'S CONFERENCE.

Held at Manchester, on Whit-Sunday, May 25.

"ALL SAINTS?" was the inquiry of the stranger delegates to Manchester, and the congregation of Secular saints in that city had worked well to decorate their hall and accord their visitors a good reception.

The proceedings commenced by Mr. Foote taking the chair at half-past ten precisely. Having stated the conditions of the Conference, he called on Mr. Forder to read the roll. Delegates were present from Belfast, Bradford, Brighton, Bolton, Birmingham, Ball's Pond, Blackburn, Cardiff, Camberwell, Darlington, Lower Darwen, Deptford, Dublin, E. London, Finsbury, Farsley, Grimsby, Hawley, Halifax, Hamilton, Heckmondwicke, Huddersfield, Hull, Hyde, Hyde Park, Lincoln, Liverpool, Manchester, N. W. London, Newcastle, Portsmouth, Plymouth, Rochdale, South Shields, Staleybridge, Swindon, West Auckland, Westminster and Woolwich. Several of these places were represented by two or three delegates, and in addition individual members attended not only from the surrounding districts, but from all parts, one lady travelling all the way from Saltash, Cornwall, in order to be present at the gathering.

The minutes of last Conference having been taken as read, the President read the Report of the Executive as follows:

EXECUTIVE'S REPORT.

This year, for the first time, the Executive has been obliged to fix the meeting-place of the Society's Conference. Four places were nominated—Newcastle, Huddersfield, Bradford, and Southampton; but the Branches in those towns had not been consulted and it was found, on inquiry, that neither of them was prepared to make the necessary arrangements. In these circumstances the President took the responsibility of immediate action, which was endorsed by the Executive at a special meeting. The Manchester Branch was communicated with, and promptly acceded to the request that the Conference should be held in this city. Had the Branch been without a hall of its own the difficulty might have been graver. It is to be hoped, therefore, that in future, when any town is nominated for the Conference, there will be no omission of the preliminary duty of obtaining the concurrence of the local Branch.

Unfortunately this is not the only circumstance of an exceptional nature. The Conference lacks the presence of two familiar figures. Stricken down by a perilous illness, Mr. Bradlaugh felt obliged to resign the presidency, which he has held for so many years, and which it was hoped he would continue to hold for many years to come. His resignation was formally tendered and accepted at a general meeting of members, held at the Hall of Science, in London, on February 16. Mr. Bradlaugh himself nominated Mr. G. W. Foote, one of the then vice-presidents, as his temporary successor, and the nomination was accepted unanimously. Since then your old President has partially recovered his health. He is now spending a brief holiday in Scotland, whence it is hoped he will return with recruited strength. In resigning the presidency, he has not severed his connexion with the National Secular Society. He has accepted a life membership, and will always be ready to place his wide experience and ripe judgment at the service of his successors.

The other familiar figure now absent is Mrs. Besant, who has resigned her connexion with the Society. Her reasons for this step have been already published. The Executive was unwilling to lose the co-operation of a lady so long and so shiningly connected with Secularism, but Mrs. Besant's resolution was unshakeable, and the Executive had no alternative but to accept her resignation.

After these misfortunes, which it would be idle to regard as anything but grave, it is a relief to find that the Society has in some respects a hopeful prospect. There is, to begin with, an increase in the Society's membership. Last year it was reported that 492 new members had been enrolled; this year the number amounts to 709. The Treasurer's balance sheet shows also a financial improvement, partly due to increased income and partly to diminished expenditure. Last year's General Fund was £84 3s. 1d.; this year's is £115 14s. 8½d. Last year's Propagandist Fund was £52 16s. 8½d.; this year's is £56 18s. 5½d. Last year's Benevolent Fund was £27 11s. 9½d.; this year's is £37 10s. 8d. The total account shows a balance of £45 12s. 3d. in advance of the previous year.

On the proposal of Mr. Foote, the Executive authorised the formation of a Central Fund, for the purpose of extending the Society's work. Up to the present the sum of £58 11s. 8d. has been subscribed. This will be carried forward into the new year's account, the appeal and the object being alike prospective. A constant effort should be made to swell this Fund. Hitherto the Secular party has subscribed handsomely in times of persecution and excitement. Henceforth the party will be asked to subscribe regularly for the regular work of the Society. Every member should feel it incumbent upon him or her to devote a definite sum yearly to the Society's objects. It is only thus that a voluntary Society, existing solely for the maintenance of a cause, can hope to carry on its organisation and propaganda.

The balance-sheet also shows a sum of £34 19s. 4d. collected for the Swedish Prisoner's Fund. Of this £30 6s. 10d. has been remitted, and a balance of £4 13s. 4d. is held at the disposal of the Swedish committee.

Mr. Bradlaugh and Mrs. Besant have handed over to the Society a number of shares in various Secular Hall Companies. A statement on this matter will be made in the course of your proceedings, and the shares will be offered for sale, if the Conference endorses the view of the Executive that it would be better to dispose of these shares than to hold them.

During the past year eleven new Branches have been formed at Reading, Hamilton, Dublin, Woolwich, Gibraltar, Bombay, Trinidad, Barbados, Finsbury Park, Edmonton and Farsley. The Reading and Woolwich Branches are growing in number and in strength and doing excellent work. The Dublin branch, but just started, is represented here to day. There are now two Branches in Ireland. Before long it is hoped that further efforts will be made to carry the light of Freethought into the darkness of Irish superstition.

One Branch, the Central London, has been wound up, as no longer necessary in the changed conditions of the metropolis. Another, at Bristol, has become defunct, after outliving its usefulness. But such an important centre of population is not to be neglected. The Organisation Committee has already taken steps for the formation of a new Branch, and Messrs. Foote and Forder are to visit Bristol for that purpose.

The Organisation Committee, established by a vote of the last Conference, has proved successful. It has helped to form new branches and strengthen old ones, and in many ways has given a business turn to otherwise haphazard work. Its members have been Messrs. R. O. Smith, G. Standring, W. H. Reynolds, W. Smith, and G. W. Foote, the last acting as chairman, and Mr. R. Forder as secretary.

Special thanks are due to the ladies and gentlemen who have administered the Benevolent Fund. They are brought face to face with distressed Freethinkers, and there is universal praise of their tact and sympathy in the performance of difficult duties.

Your Executive has distributed, directly and indirectly, a good deal of Freethought literature during the past year. The stock of Tracts is now running low. They have been overhauled by the Organisation Committee. Some of them are obsolete, and the Committee recommend the publication of a fresh supply suited to present requirements.

Throughout the country there is a welcome tendency among the Branches towards the union which is strength. The London Secular Federation continues to do excellent work. During the past year it has inaugurated a new policy of free lectures in various parts of the metropolis. The course at the Hall of Science was very largely attended, and the lecturers —Messrs. Robertson, Standring, and Foote—were opposed by special representatives of the Christian Evidence Society. The Federation's second annual dinner was also a great success, and its summer excursion to Epping Forest was another step in a genial direction. It is pleasant to record that the Federation takes very little from the Branches. Its income is derived from subscriptions that would otherwise be unavailable, and after no niggardly expenditure, it is still able to boast of a handsome balance.

The example of London having proved contagious, other Federations of Branches are being formed. The North Eastern Secular Federation, which was assisted by a grant of £3 from the Executive, has put new life into the movement in the Tyneside. A great number of lectures have been delivered, literature has been distributed, and social gatherings have knit the Branches together. Messrs. Brown, Peacock, and their colleagues, may well be gratified with the result of their efforts.

(Continued on page 261.)

Digitized by Google

ACID DROPS.

Sir Andrew Clark was the big gun at the annual meeting of the Christian Evidence Society. He professed to have reached "the quiet haven" of Christianity through "seas of doubt." We suspect they were very calm seas, as calm as the haven itself. Perhaps Sir Andrew Clark will tell the world when he was in doubt, what kind of doubt it was, and how he left it behind him. This would be more interesting, and far more useful, than a vague general statement of the "converted infidel" order.

The second gun was Professor Beet, to whom Mr. Foote addressed one of his Letters to the Clergy. This gentleman talked about Mr. Herbert Spencer's "power behind the universe," and seemed to think that this power—which, if anywhere is not behind but in the universe—proved the truth of Christianity. But any logic does for a meeting of the Christian Evidence Society.

Professor Beet's remarks on Scripture ought to be printed as a Tract and widely circulated by the Christian Evidence Society. According to the Christian World, he said that "no one reverenced the Bible more than he did. But our faith did not rest upon the authority of that Word. We must fight now, not on the authority of Holy Scripture, but we must go back to the open grave of Jesus Christ and see there his resurrection." Allowing for the inadequacy of a summarised report, it seems evident that Professor Beet sees the "inspiration" of the Bible is a played out doctrine. Christians must throw it over and stick to Christ. Anyhow they must stick to the Resurrection. They must look into the open grave of Christ. In other words, the world must be dwarfed to a grave, and humanity to a resurrected corpse.

The Tablet, the principal English Roman Catholic paper, has been celebrating its own fiftieth anniversary by giving an account of the progress of Popery in England during the half century. It claims that the number of churches, chapels and stations, which in 1840 amounted to 457 for England and Wales, and 65 for Scotland, in all 522, has been multiplied threefold, the figures for 1890 being 1,641, 1,312 being for England and Wales and 329 for Scotland. The number of priests has increased from 624 to 2,791. Religious orders have increased still more rapidly, and altogether it says the Church counts possibly two millions of the population.

The Catholics possess in the United Kingdom some fifty-four colleges, several of which are missionary colleges bent on the conversion of England. When will Freethought have its college endowed to equip young soldiers for the war with superstition?

Mr. Gladstone says that he looks with apprehension on the Government's arrangements with Rome. So do we. No fewer than twenty-three new Catholic dioceses are to be formed in India, all to be placed under the jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Calcutta, and officially recognised by the British Government. Thus Rome crawls in the Empire and waits to bite the hand that foolishly cherished it.

The Rev. H. V. Brown, senior curate of the parish church at Wycombe, cut his throat last week. The usual verdict of temporary insanity was returned.

The Rev. J. W. Hedgland, rector of the united parishes of St. Stephen and St. Martin, Exeter, died suddenly on Sunday at lunch, after having gone through the morning service at St. Stephen's Church. A big moral, with reflections on the visitation of God, ought to be worked in here, but we leave it to our readers.

The curate of All Souls, Bolton, has bolted. He was to have been married in a few days. "Much sympathy," says the Evening News, "is expressed with the young lady who has been so heartlessly deserted."

Some day or other the Malthusian propaganda will reach the clergy. Meanwhile they go on adding vigorously to the population. Mrs. Horsley, wife of the vicar of Holy Trinity, Woolwich, recently died at the age of thirty-five. According to a report of the funeral in a local paper, she 'leaves seven young children."

One of our readers says that the "Rev. W. Jacomb," advertised as "a late colleague of Mr. Bradlaugh," was a prominent member of the Eleusis Club in 1882. He was never known to lecture on Secularism. By trade he was a tailor. In '84 he got "converted" and found an easier way of getting a living.

Dr. Sinclair, Archdeacon of London, deplores that in the religious press "the spirit of faction, intolerance, and misrepresentation is most rampant. There the entire want of charity and the bitter invective against those who differed were in sad opposition to the brotherly love that should prevail." Very true; but Dr. Sinclair and others forget the saying that the tree is known by its fruits.

The Rev. A. J. T. Johnson, now pastor of the Free Christ Church, North Fitzroy, Australia, is charged with having, when a missionary at Millstone Lane, Leicester, England, run away with a Mrs. James, with whose husband he lodged. It is said he caused an announcement to be sent to Leicester that he had been taken to a lunatic asylum in America. His congregation has decided that he should be dismissed.

A burglar was shot at St. Louis. He turned out to be H. Y. Kunolt a zealous church-goer, and director of a Y. M. C A. who had been leading a double life of piety and burglary. A similar case has happened at Montchair, New Jersey.

When a panic occurs in a church we see how little superiority religion imparts to its votaries. Such an occurrence is just reported from Hildesheim. The villagers were assembled in the church to pray for the cessation of the hailstorms which were injuring their crops. While they were thus engaged the church was struck by lightning. Four persons were killed on the spot, twenty were seriously injured, and four blinded. Immediately there was a panic among the congregation, and in the mad rush for the doors four little children were crushed to death. Such an incident is at once a cogent proof of the efficacy of prayer, and a striking testimony to the consoling and sustaining influence of religion.

Some wealthy French Jews have offered the Pope £40,000 for the Vatican copy of the Hebrew Bible. It weighs about three hundredweight. The price is a big one for such heavy literature.

A stranger who has been visiting Bournemouth has been telling the town, through the Guardian, that it is altogether too good on Sunday. The yachts lie idle, the Hallelujah Chorus is unheard in the Pleasure Grounds, the policeman outside the pier hears not the call of the newspaper boy, and the very children paddle not in the water on the Sabbath. Worldly people will be apt to spend their shekels at less pious watering-places.

The Rev. C. Lacy, Rector of Allhallows London Wall who has recently died, during half a century received some £85,000 for holding what is practically a sinecure. The living was £1,700 per annum and the resident population under 500.

We are rather amused at the virtuous indignation of the Congregational Union against the "tyranny" of the Church in our public schools. The members of that body desire to keep the parson out, but they want to keep the Bible in. That is the point at which they preach "rest and be thankful." They don't see—because they won't see—that they are only seeking to shift the line of religious privilege. If they wanted perfect freedom, they they would go in for pure and simple secular education, leaving religion to be taught independently.

The Christian Commonwealth appears to have lost faith in the Temperance agitation. "The hope of the 'present distress' is that the churches may be driven to prayer throughout the land and to call for Divine deliverance from the threatened doom of the nation." Well, let the churches "pray without ceasing," and see if it makes any difference to Goschen's next budget.

O Lord, who hast said that wine cheereth God and man who didst turn seventy-five gallons of water into wine at Cana in Galileo, and who didst inspire thy holy servant Paul to advise his beloved Timothy to take a little wine for his stomach's sake, look down upon the distress of this nation, banish drink from our midst, and make us all teetotallers like thyself. Amen.

Digitized by Google

This is how temperance prevailed when there was no other guide but the Bible. The following entry is found in the town records of Woburn, Massachusetts:

To Mr. Jonathan Poole, Esq., for subsisting the ministers, messengers, and gentlemen at the time of Mr. Jackson's ordination over the Congregational Church, 1729.

	£	s.	d.
To 433 dinners at 2s. 6d. a dinner ...	54	2	6
Suppers and breakfasts, 178	8	18	0
Keeping 32 horses four days	3	0	0
Six barrels and a half of cider... ...	4	11	0
Two gallons of brandy and two of rum	1	16	0
25 gallons of wine	9	10	0
Loaf sugar, lime juice, and pipes ...	1	15	0
	£83	12	6

At the Plymouth Annual Meeting of the Church Missionary Society, the Rev. J. Vernall, who has recently returned from Africa, said that outside his own church he had counted 20,000 cases of gin brought there by the Europeans for the natives. Another missionary had told him that in his district he had seen thousands of young African girls drunk outside the European canteen. The rev. missionary then went on to speak of the curse of idolatry, but we doubt if he convinced even his hearers that African superstitions are worse than their Christian importations.

Moody has a strange method of gauging the growth of scepticism. He says it is declining in America; in fact, it is almost dead. True, Ingersoll is getting a big audience in the North American Review, and his writings are read with avidity by all classes. True, Freethought papers are multiplying and increasing in circulation. But what of that? Moody gets very few "infidel" questions from young men after his meetings, so "infidelity" is clearly played out. The Yankee revivalist overlooks the probable explanation of the fact he adduces. Very likely the young men troubled with doubts have found the uselessness of applying to Moody.

A very curious and suggestive sentence occurred recently in the correspondence of the Times from India. It told how a native police officer wrote to the Government authority, "A new Deity has appeared on the Swat frontier, the police after him." This officer is evidently a praiseworthy functionary. New deities are constantly arising in the East, where any man with a box of good pills can obtain the reputation of a prophet. Their followers soon lead to tumult and disorder, and a wise government will do as much to discourage the appearance of deities as possible.

Some intelligent functionary in Palestine may have sent a similar intimation to the government at Rome. But time was more propitious for the development of deities then.

J. C. said he would come again like a thief in the night, but the exact locality where he would turn up is as difficult to determine as the spot he ascended from. Suppose he has appeared on the Swat frontier and the police are after him! It was always an unfortunate family.

The West-end London Wesleyan Mission contrives to go to the Derby at other people's expense. Mr. Nix, the leader of the party, says, in the Methodist Times: "Next week we want £50 or £60 in money, some hams, plenty of blue ribbon, suitable tracts, and a stock of New Testaments." A few hampers from Fortnum and Mason's might also be acceptable.

Hugh Price Hughes has been cadging in Edinburgh for money to convert the people in West London, which he calls the wickedest place out of hell. The Scotsman gives him a scathing article, and calls upon the Edinburgh folk to discountenance this preposterous humbug.

There is a remarkable fitness in some things. The quarters of the Army Chaplain at Woolwich are designated "L."

The London correspondent of the Liverpool Daily Post relates an anecdote concerning the recent consecration of a church. The ceremony was performed whilst the building was still in a very unfinished state; the western doors not being in position a curtain was substituted, bearing the passage, "I was glad when they said unto me We will go unto the house of the Lord." The sermon was long and dull, and the congregation, leaving before its close, tore the curtain at the door in going out, the result being that the text ended with the word "go." The correspondent adds that the story is doubtless true, as it is told by a high church dignitary. M'yes!

The critics say that at the Oberammergau Passion Play, the part of Judas is overdone and causes laughter. The visitors when they obtain their bills will think that the whole performance smacks over much of him surnamed Iscariot.

In the Passion Play as now produced, the part of Mary is acted by a girl of twenty-two, while her son J. C. is a man of forty-eight. This is justified by the pictures which make the B.V.M. ever young, and is there not in the Bible the case of Ahaziah who was two years older than his father?

It is said that Barnum will give a good price to the Oberammergau peasants if they will repeat their performance in New York. When the railway from Jaffa to Jerusalem is completed some enterprising impressario will exhibit a Passion Play of the Crucifixion on the spot. The days of reverence are over.

According to a writer in the World, Mr. Best, assistant to Dr. Bramwell the hypnotist of Goole, has, by suggestion, produced the same phenomena of blood flowing as in the case of Louise Lateau, one of the most famous of modern Catholic miracles. This is all very well in the interests of science, but what does the girl who was experimented on think about it?

There is a town in America called Ingersoll. It was founded by one of the orator's admirers. At present it only contains one Freethinker, but Mr. J. E. Remsburg has just been lecturing there and perhaps a few more Freethinkers are growing. The American Secular Union ought to bombard that town.

A Catholic book firm in Ottawa has been trying to prove that Victor Hugo's works are immoral. With this view they refused to fulfil a contract, and the recreation has cost them 700 dollars and costs. Judge Davidson gave a decision in favor of common sense, and the Pope's Index Expurgatorius won't be recognised in Ontario.

How hard it is to make Christians play fair! For a long while the American clergy have been denouncing Sunday newspapers as violations of "the day of rest." But their real reason was a very different one, and the Christian Advocate has blurted it out. "If no Sunday work," it says, "were required of employers in getting out a Sunday paper, it would still be an evil. It hinders people from attending church."

Miss Close, the chief nurse of the Newcastle infirmary, nearly fell a victim to diphtheria. Happily she recovered, and is once more able to attend to her duties. This event is naturally referred to in the Infirmary Report for 1889. But how funnily it reads!—"Through the blessing of Providence, and the skilful and constant exertions of Dr. Philipson and Dr. Oliver, Miss Close was restored to comparative health." Providence, Dr. Philipson, and Dr. Oliver may join hands and say "We did it."

According to Canon Liddon, faith is health, and doubt is disease. But faith in what? Of course the Canon would reply "Faith in my creed, sir." Those, therefore, who agree with Canon Liddon are healthy; and those who differ from him are diseased. A modest creed!

THE ANTIPODES.—Baden Powell records that three views were taken by great Christian authorities as to the existence of Antipodes. St. Augustine declared the belief unscriptural, Lactantius pronounced it absurd, while St. Boniface said there might indeed be Antipodes, but that they would all without exception be damned.

Digitized by Google

MR. FOOTE'S ENGAGEMENTS.

Sunday, June 1, Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, London; at 7.30, "Mr. Gladstone on the Jew-Book."

June 8, Gladstone Radical Club, and Hall of Science, London; 15, Manchester; 22, Liverpool; 29, Reading.
July 13, Hall of Science; 27, Hall of Science.
August 3, Camberwell; 31, Birmingham.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

LITERARY communications to be addressed to the Editor, 14 Clerkenwell Green, London, E.C. All business communications to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter Street, London, E.C.

THE Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the office, post free to any part of Europe, America, Canada and Egypt, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 6s. 6d.; Half Year, 3s. 3d.; Three Months, 1s. 7½d. Australia, China and Africa:—One Year, 8s. 8d.; Half Year, 4s. 4d.; Three Months, 2s. 2d. India:—One Year, 10s. 10d.; Half Year, 5s. 5d. Three Months, 2s. 8½d.

SCALE OF ADVERTISEMENTS.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 3s.; Half Column, 15s.; Column, £1 10s. Special terms for repetitions.

IT being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will in future receive the number when their subscription expires in a colored wrapper.

C. DORG.—See "Sugar Plums." We hope Mr. Clarke will be a successful propagandist in South Lancashire.

G. WILDMAN.—We agree with you as to the value of open-air lecturing.

J. BROAD.—The clergy are not fond of discussing. We are always ready to debate with a representative Christian, but we cannot throw out special challenges.

T. R. FOX.—There is no error. The bridge over the Wear was made from Paine's model. He did not construct the bridge.

G. WARREN.—The financial matter will be decided at once by the L. S. F. sub-committee. Lecturers who lose their tempers should be politely but firmly admonished to keep cool. A friendly word in private is best.

W. MANN.—It shall be included if possible. Giles's Hebrew Records would help you.

G. HILL.—Many of our readers, we hope, will lend Bible Contradictions about. They will no doubt find the same happy results as you have. Thanks for the jokes.

A. W. BARBER.—Thanks for your interesting letter. Your suggestion is a good one. We have long had it in our mind, and we hope to carry it out. Glad to hear you appreciate "the way in which matters of immediate interest are turned to account in the Freethinker."

A FREETHINKER.—We are overcrowded with matter at present. Your questions for Stanley might be multiplied.

J. T. CONGREVE.—Your criticism is not just. We are neither Optimist or Pessimist, but Meliorist. Things are neither so bad nor so good as they might be, and they can be improved. Anyhow it is worth a trial. "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die" would be all right if man were all stomach. But he isn't—a fact you have overlooked.

W. T. L.—Pleased to hear of Mr. Snell's success in Regent's Park. What subscription do you refer to? We have not noticed it.

J. E. BASCOMBE—Dr. Farrar's article is having our attention.

F. SIMPSON.—Hastings's falsehoods have already been exposed in our columns. We cannot do the dirty task over and over. These pious soul-savers are always shaky in the matter of dates and places.

BRENO.—There are good reasons against pursuing the matter. They were contained in your own letter some weeks ago.

H. CALASCA.—Thanks for the cuttings. You will punish Mr. Walsh most by taking no notice of him.

P. H. ECHLIN.—We echo your wish that there were many such open Freethinkers as Dr. Allinson.

J. FENWICK.—We are much obliged to you for your trouble.

J. E. ROOSE.—Shall appear.

J. FERGUSON.—We have read the book you mention. We gave the Rev. R. F. Horton a reply in Letters to the Clergy. He says now that "the Atheist is simply a fool." But he knows better than to debate with one.

W. BUSSEY.—The "converted infidel" game is getting played out. When religious history is impartially written, it will be recorded that Christian champions were the biggest liars that ever trod the earth. The other nineteen cases are as true as you yourself know the twentieth to be. Glad you are so delighted with Letters to the Clergy and our replies to Gladstone, and also that the circulation of the Freethinker is improving in your district, partly through your own generous efforts.

J. BARTRAM.—No doubt Mr. Foote will visit the Tyneside again before Christmas.

W. HYDE.—Cuttings are always welcome.

JOSEPH BROWN AND J. TULLIN.—Your letters in the Newcastle Leader will do good, but, for our part, we decline to devote any more paragraphs to the Rev. Walter Walsh, who has completely lost his temper, and is discharging his venom in a manner that shows how hollow were all his professions of amity. Like many other Christians, he is good-tempered while he has everything his own way.

REX REGES.—We should say that the allusions in the three passages you quote from F. W. Robertson are to Shelley, Byron, and Laplace.

