Phil 15.5F

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

VOL. XV.—No. 1. SUNDAY, JANUARY 6, 1895. PRICE TWOPENCE.

BRADLAUGH.

CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

Charles Bradlaugh: A Record of his Life and Work. By his Daughter, Hypatia Bradlaugh Bonner. With an Account of his Parliamentary Struggle, Politics, and Teachings, by John M. Robertson. (London: T. Fisher Unwin.) 2 vols.; 21s.

CHARLES BRADLAUGH has been dead nearly four years, and his long-promised Biography is now before the world. There does not seem to be any sufficient reason why it was not published earlier, nor would the work have suffered in consequence. Ample time has afforded an opportunity for over-elaboration. Sometimes a strain is put upon the patience of all but idolators. Charles Bradlaugh, for instance, learnt to write, just like other children who never become distinguished; but who wants to be informed that he wrote better at nine than at seven, or what texts and pictures were on the school-cards that contain his youthful caligraphy? Nor does the biography of Charles Bradlaugh seem the place for Mr. Robertson to argue Atheism, or to refute the views of Mr. Kipling on India. On the other hand, with all this plethora of detail—now most precious, and anon quite superfluous—there is a singular silence about some matters, while others are presented in a mixed light or with some distortion or exaggeration. The fact is, both Mrs. Bonner and Mr. Robertson have written from a special point of view. What they give us is not a complete portrait, but a variety of sketches. Perhaps we should say that they have collected and edited a lot of valuable material; but there is a great deal more floating about in the world, and when it is gathered together the whole mass, including the valuable matter in these bulky volumes, will be used by some artist in biography, who will give the world a truer conception of the mighty personality of Charles Bradlaugh. Years, perhaps many years, will elapse before this is done; but one of the greatest Englishmen since the days of Cromwell can afford to wait. There is really no hurry so far as he is concerned.

Having said this at the outset, so as to get rid of it once for all, we now proceed to express our gratitude to Mrs. Bonner for the great pains she has taken to vindicate her father's memory. It has been a labor, though a labor of love. In the grand old Roman sense of the word, her undertaking has been truly pious. Mr. Robertson, also, has compiled an extremely able history of Bradlaugh's parliamentary struggle. This piece of work is of high merit and permanent value.

We cannot say that we like the binding of these volumes; otherwise they have a neat appearance. The illustrations are generally excellent; the most interesting, perhaps, being a photogravure of Charles Bradlaugh, at the age of twenty, in the regimentals of the Seventh Dragoon Guards. The face is true "Bradlaugh," and the arms are folded over the chest, showing the backs of a pair of large, serviceable hands. There is another portrait, dated 1877, in the best-looking period of his life. Mr. Walter Sickert's picture of Bradlaugh at the Bar of the House of Commons is also reproduced, likewise his portrait of Bradlaugh belonging to the National Liberal Club. The latter may have artistic merit, but the reproduction is rather ghastly. Then we have the monument at Brookwood, the unveiling of the Northampton statue, a photograph of Bradlaugh's library, and a really fine portrait of Alice Bradlaugh. No portrait is given of any dead colleague of Charles Bradlaugh, not even of Austin Holyoake; but we have a portrait of Prince Jérome (Plon-Plon), and one of Madame De Brimont in a shockingly low dress, which should excite the indignation of Mrs. Ormiston Chant. It must be admitted, however, that what the lady reveals is shapely enough to disarm masculine resentment.

Digitized by Google

Mrs. Bonner's portion of these volumes—filling the first and running well into the second—is entirely biographical. She has mainly relied upon the National Reformer. Bradlaugh "made a point of destroying his correspondence," and "consequently (says Mrs. Bonner) I have very few letters to help me." Recourse has been had to old newspaper files in the British Museum, and in this respect Mrs. Bonner acknowledges her "great indebtedness to Mrs. Mary Reed," who has also compiled a very full Index to both volumes.

Young Bradlaugh.

Bradlaugh's family seems to have come from Suffolk, where the name is to be found on tombstones. His grandfather, James Bradlaugh, was a gunsmith in London; his father, Charles Bradlaugh, who died in 1852, was confidential clerk to a firm of solicitors. There was nothing remarkable about the family until it produced our Bradlaugh, who was born on September 26, 1833, in a small house in Bacchus-walk, Hoxton. He was baptised, as a matter of course; he also went to school, but he left at the age of eleven, and we may reckon him a self-taught scholar as he was a self-made man. The first introduction to politics was Cobbett's "Gridiron," and his first introduction to Freethought the open-air meetings on Bonner's Fields, where the lad joined in the wordy fray on the Christian side. The other side, however, had the best of the argument, and his faith became unsettled. To satisfy his doubts he sought the assistance of the Rev. J. G. Packer, the minister of his chapel; but the reverend gentleman acted like a bigot, and through his instrumentality the lad was driven from his home and his situation, and cast upon the wide world at the age of sixteen. Since Bradlaugh's death it has been repeatedly argued by soft-hearted and soft-headed Christians (we are sure about the soft-headed, anyhow) that if the Rev. J. G. Packer had not been a bigot his victim would never have been an Atheist. Upon this point Mrs. Bonner writes with vigorous good sense:—

> "It is now the fashion to make Mr. Packer into a sort of scapegoat: his harsh reception of his pupil's questions and subsequent ill-advised methods of dealing with him are censured, and he is in a manner made responsible for my father's Atheism. If no other Christian had treated Mr. Bradlaugh harshly; if every other clergyman had dealt with him in kindly fashion; if he had been met with kindness instead of slanders and stones, abuse and ill-usage, then these censors of Mr. Packer might have some just grounds on which to reproach him for misusing his position; as it is, they should ask themselves which among them has the right to cast the first stone. The notion that it was Mr. Packer's treatment of him that drove my father into Atheism is, I am sure, absolutely baseless. Those who entertain this belief forget that Mr. Bradlaugh had already begun to compare and criticise the various narratives in the four Gospels, and that it was on account of this (and therefore after it) that the Rev. J. G. Packer was so injudicious as to denounce him as an Atheist, and to suspend him from his Sunday duties. This harsh and blundering method of dealing with him no doubt hastened his progress towards Atheism, but it assuredly did not induce it. It set his mind in a state of opposition to the Church as represented by Mr. Packer, a state which the rev. gentleman seems blindly to have fostered by every means in his power; and it gave him the opportunity of the Sunday's leisure to hear what Atheism really was, expounded by some of the cleverest speakers in the Freethought movement at that time. But in spite of all this, he was not driven pell-mell into Atheism; he joined in the religious controversy from the orthodox standpoint, and was introduced into the little Warner Palace Hall as an eager champion on behalf of Christianity.
>
> "Those persons too who entertain this idea of Mr. Packer's responsibility are ignorant of, or overlook, what manner of man Mr. Bradlaugh was. He could not rest with his mind unsettled or undecided; he worked out and solved for himself every problem which presented itself to him. He moulded his ideas on no man's: he looked at the problem on all sides, studied the pros and cons, and decided the solution for himself. Therefore, having once started on the road to scepticism, kindlier treatment would no doubt have made him longer in reaching the standpoint of pure Rationalism, but in any case the end would have been the same."

Bradlaugh tried all ways to earn a living, but he smelt of brimstone. One customer told him so when he tried to sell coals on commission. He ran into debt, and was often hungry. Yet he lectured with acceptance on Freethought, his first advertised discourse (apparently) being delivered in a little hall in Philpot-street, Commercial-road, on October 10, 1850. Mr. G. J. Holyoake took the chair, and the subject was an extensive one—"The Past, Present, and Future of Theology." The lecturer was just turned seventeen.

The Soldier.

This kind of life could not last. The young reformer was crushed down by an appalling debt of £4 15s. A subscription was mooted, but he disliked the idea, and one day he enlisted as a soldier. The regiment he joined was the Seventh Dragoon Guards. On hearing this news, his father invited him home again to spend the Christmas Day. It was, at least, a semi-reconciliation, and the father appears to have suffered in his way as well as the son. We again quote from Mrs. Bonner:—

> "I have a very strong personal conviction that the whole affair preyed upon the father's mind, and that the harshness he showed his son was really foreign to his general temper. Anyhow, his character underwent a great change after he let himself come under the influence of Mr. Packer. He who before never went inside a church, now never missed a Sunday; he became concentrated and, to a certain extent, morose, and at length, on the 19th August, 1852, some twenty months after his son's enlistment, he was taken suddenly ill at his desk in Cloak-lane. He was brought home in a state of unconsciousness, from which he was only aroused to fall into violent delirium, and so continued without once recovering his senses until the hour of his death, which was reached on Tuesday, the 24th. He was only forty-one years of age, and had always had good health previously, never ailing anything; and I feel quite convinced that the agony of mind, which he must have endured from the time when his son was first denounced to him as an 'Atheist,' was mainly the cause of his early death."

Bradlaugh's regiment was drafted to Ireland. He was the butt of his comrades, on account of his overgrown figure, until they learnt to respect him. They nicknamed him "Leaves," as he was fond of tea and books. He was a fervid teetotaller, and sometimes eloped from barracks to give a temperance lecture. Of course he got into a discussion with the chaplain, who once answered him from the pulpit; but as the man of God's first sentence was impertinent, the three hundred dragoons unhooked their swords and let them crash on the ground.

"Leaves" fought a right-of-way case; also with fifteen picked comrades he fought his way through Donnybrook Fair. Further, he had to assist at evictions, and learnt something of the blessings of English rule in Ireland, and of the supreme blessing of Irish landlordism. One of his experiences gave point to a speech he delivered in 1873 at New York.

> "Those of you who are Irishmen will want no description of that beautiful valley of the Lee which winds between the hills from Cork, and in summer seems like a very Paradise, green grass growing to the water side, and burnished with gold in the morning, and ruddy to very crimson in the evening sunset. I went there on a November day. I was one of a troop to protect the law officers, who had come with the agent from Dublin to make an eviction a few miles from Inniscarra, where the river Bride joins the Lee. It was a miserable day—rain freezing into sleet as it fell—and the men beat down wretched dwelling after wretched dwelling, some thirty or forty perhaps. They did not take much beating down; there was no flooring to take up; the walls were more mud than aught else; and there was but little trouble in the levelling of them to the ground.

Digitized by Google

> We had got our work about three parts done, when out of one of them a woman ran, and flung herself on the ground, wet as it was, before the Captain of the troop, and she asked that her house might be spared—not for long, but for a little while. She said her husband had been born in it; he was ill of the fever, but could not live long, and she asked that he might be permitted to die in it in peace. Our Captain had no power; the law agent from Dublin wanted to get back to Dublin; his time was of importance, and he would not wait; and that man was carried out while we were there—in front of us, while the sleet was coming down—carried out on a wretched thing (you could not call it a bed), and he died there while we were there; and three nights afterwards, while I was sentry on the front gate at Ballincollig Barracks, we heard a cry, and when the guard was turned out we found this poor woman there a raving maniac, with one dead babe in one arm, and another in the other clinging to the cold nipple of her lifeless breast."

Bradlaugh left the army in October, 1853, with a first-rate testimonial. His discharge was purchased out of a small sum of money left by his father's great aunt. Mrs. Bonner thinks the three years of army life were of great value to him, setting him up physically, and impressing him with the importance of discipline, which people seldom learn who have not at some time been subjected to it.

James Thomson.

A young man of genius came in Bradlaugh's way in Ireland. He was an army schoolmaster, and his name was James Thomson. The two became acquainted, and the acquaintance ripened into a close friendship, which lasted for twenty years. Thomson himself left the army and came to London, where Bradlaugh often befriended him. He lived with the Bradlaughs for some time, and Mrs. Bonner says the children "simply adored him." But his fits of intemperance, which were due to an hereditary predisposition, prevented him from keeping situations, and he was too independent a writer to earn a living by press work. Mrs. Bonner makes no scruple about speaking of his failing in the plainest language, and indeed there is no use now in concealment. When Bradlaugh and Thomson quarreled she naturally sided with her father. But she need not have made gratuitous revelations. There was really no need for the "silver cup" or the "Colt's revolver" incident, and the exclamation of "poor Thomson" is unjustifiably condescending. Certainly it was not necessary to speak of Thomson's "illness" in Spain with sarcasm. She ought to know, and having known she should remember, that Thomson had a sunstroke there, under which he hovered between life and death. Nor is it right to create the impression that the debt was all on Thomson's side to Bradlaugh. The strong man's generosity is unquestionable, but there was some return in having a man of genius about him. To say nothing of the mental stimulus, there were Thomson's contributions to the National Reformer. They might not have increased the circulation by a single copy, but they gave a certain tone to the paper, and they were done simply for the love of the work. After a period of estrangement, Bradlaugh and Thomson quarreled and parted. Mrs. Bonner says that "Mr. Thomson for some reason felt injured." But why allege "some reason"? Thomson assigned a definite reason. What it was we know, for he showed us a copy of the letter he sent Bradlaugh. He was then on the regular staff of the National Reformer, writing a weekly article and two columns of "Jottings." His weekly stipend was not large, but it sufficed for his very modest wants. What he resented was the "forcing" of Mrs. Besant, then a recent recruit, who was paid twice as much as himself, while the books of living interest were all handed to her for review. We do not justify Thomson's resentment. Bradlaugh had a right to pay the staff, and to direct their labor, as he pleased. Nevertheless, it is only fair to state that Thomson not only had, but assigned, a definite "reason" for feeling "injured." Both men are dead. We may leave them at peace in the grave. But if the reason of their quarrel must be pursued, we say that the explanation in this case, as in so many others, is afforded by the proverbial expression of cherchez la femme. Men have always quarreled over women, and they will to the end of the chapter.

Mrs. Bradlaugh.

Bradlaugh married Susannah Lamb Hooper in 1853 The marriage, of course, took place in a church—St. Philip's, Stepney. Mrs. Bradlaugh's father was a sturdy Radical and Freethinker. He was deeply attached to his "Charles," and only survived him a few months. He was a fine-looking old man when we last saw him in 1890. Mrs. Bradlaugh herself was a fine, matronly woman. Up to 1869 she was occasionally to be seen at her husband's meetings. We remember seeing her at the Hall of Science in that year. But whispers were then abroad of domestic unhappiness, which Mrs. Bonner now unveils out of regard for her father's reputation. Mrs. Bradlaugh fell into habits of intemperance. She was not, apparently, an intellectual woman, and probably she found it dull at home while her husband was away on his lecturing tours. The home had to be broken up in 1870, and in 1877 Mrs. Bradlaugh died suddenly of heart disease "engendered by alcoholism." She loved her husband and children to the last. All who knew her, so far as we are aware, pronounced her a loving, generous woman; and we can understand the pain which Mrs. Bonner experiences in unlocking the door of this skeleton-cupboard. Some will doubt whether it should have been done, but Mrs. Bonner felt obliged to perform the "unhappy duty."

Bradlaugh's Brother.

Mrs. Bonner also feels it necessary to make some painful disclosures concerning Bradlaugh's brother. Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh is generally thought to have been "converted from infidelity," but he was brought up as a Christian, and never professed to be anything else. He is very strong on "virtue." As we write a circular of his lies before us, asking for money to defend a certain libel action. He declares that he is engaged in "an honest endeavor to drag into the light of day the obscene, filthy, immoral, and revolting character of the teachings and literature of Secularism." Such a boastful crusader should at least have a clean record. We do not find it, however, in Mrs. Bonner's pages. If her statements are true, Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh is a wretched hypocrite; if they are false, he should at once proceed against her as an infamous libeller.

Mrs. Bonner is indignant at his "public protestations of love" for her father, who "so well knew the worth of these phrases." She depicts him as the black sheep of the family. Bradlaugh found situations for him which he did not keep. He took to excessive drinking, and completely neglected his mother during the long illness which preceded her death. Early in 1872 he was sentenced at the Middlesex Sessions to six months' imprisonment for "embezzling various small sums from his employer." During these troubles his wife was assisted by the elder brother, and for some time afterwards Bradlaugh sent him money through his sister, Mrs. Norman. In 1874, while still receiving money from Bradlaugh, he attended some of Moody and Sankey's meetings, professed "conversion," and got "another berth" in connection with the Christian Herald. "From that day until my father's death," writes Mrs. Bonner, "his brother never ceased to try and annoy him—always, of course, under the cloak of religion and love." It would give her the "deepest pain and regret" to bring any injury upon her father's brother, but "he chose to pursue a course of conduct which has obliged me to tell the truth concerning their estrangement."

What will this "beautiful brother"—as Bradlaugh called him—do now? He has only the choice of two alternatives, if he has a spark of honesty; either to repudiate these charges as publicly as they are made, or to drop his Pharisaic airs, cease playing the censor, and "walk humbly with his God."

G. W. FOOTE.

(To be concluded.)

It seems to me that the bane of our country is a profession of faith either with no basis of real belief, or with no proper examination of the grounds on which the creed is supposed to rest.—James Russell Lowell.

Cain and Abel have been dead between five and six thousand years. According to the never-dying-soul dogma, Cain has been suffering the pangs and pains of hell-fire from death till now. Abel has been enjoying the bliss of heaven from death till now. At the day of judgment their "immortal souls" will be reunited to their "resurrected bodies," to be judged, then sentenced. One back to his everlasting burnings, the other to his abode of bliss. Does any sane person believe it?—Anglo-Angelus.

Digitized by Google

HYPOCRISY.

A FREETHINKER'S protest against the prevailing creeds is directed, not only at their untruth, but also at the hypocrisy which they engender. What we have very often to meet is not the conscientious opposition of genuine believers, whose faith is, as it were, the very life of their lives, and who actually live by it, and are ready to die for it—a belief which, however noxious, commands some respect by its sincerity; but the antagonism of interested professors who find their account in assuming a belief they no longer possess, of persons who think that religion is useful, and of those who merely believe that they believe, or play at pretending to believe.

We call this a Christian country, but, as a matter of fact, the mass of the inhabitants reject all that is distinctive of Christianity. They profess it with their lips, but their hearts and minds are far away. No one thinks of regulating his daily life and business by it. The good Christian takes anxious thought for the morrow, relies on doctors more than on prayer, and, like the Archbishop of Canterbury when robbed of holly, does not give his mistletoe also, but prosecutes the thieves. Christianity has little more than a Sunday existence. Few think ever of professing its precepts on other days, much less of practising them. Even on Sunday Rationalism is preached from the pulpit and disguised in Christian phraseology. On the subject of religion the age is honeycombed with hypocrisy. Unable to believe, it plays at pretending to believe, and is laboriously employed in decanting the new wine of modern thought into the old theological bottles.

Genuine belief, as Froude remarked, ended with persecution. When people really held that the soul's welfare depended on the suppression of heresy, they were prepared to suppress it at all costs. When they felt that to punish a man for maintaining an independent opinion was shocking and unjust, it was because a doubt had entered whether the faith was unquestionably true. Persecution logically follows belief in an infallible revelation from Jesus Christ, and that there is no other name under heaven whereby men can be saved. If Governments have it in their power to save men from everlasting perdition, they are warranted in doing so by the dictates of mercy as well as commanded thereto by the Bible. Indeed, says "George Eliot," "wherever the tremendous alternative of everlasting torments is believed in—believed in so that it becomes a motive determining the life—not only persecution, but every other form of severity and gloom, are the legitimate consequences."

Real belief in hell and in the damnation of unbaptised infants is becoming extinct, and we can hardly realise the gloom such doctrines were calculated to produce. Cross-examine a Christian on any article of Christian dogma, and you will usually elicit an expression of unconscious unbelief. Is he asked concerning eternal torments, he will probably make it evident he has never realised that as a possibility, at any rate, for himself. He may express a hope that even an Atheist may be saved, though he will not deny that "narrow is the way to eternal life, and few there be that find it." Satan is shelved, but the departure of the devil must not be supposed to herald the retirement of his celestial antagonist. Even the doctrine of evolution may be allowed, but one must not draw the inference that the story of creation is false. As a matter of fact, the dogmas now discarded were the very life of the old creed. Take, for instance, the Fall of Man. That doctrine lies at the very base of Christianity. If the Fall is a fable, then is the Redemption but a fiction. But who will now assert that the story of the Fall represents real facts?

The shifty wriggling and compromise, in the endeavor to reconcile contradictory notions, and to avoid a plain issue, is bound to be detrimental to character. In conforming to the faith that is no longer a faith in realities, but only a faith in names and in shams, men have lost the religion of self-respect. The hypocrites encourage the rogues even when they are not of their number, as they too usually are. And here I am reminded of a little fable, told by Horace Smith, in illustration of the hypocrisy of those who pretend, from pious motives, to retire from the world. "My dear children," said an old rat to his young ones, "the infirmities of age are pressing so heavily upon me that I have determined to dedicate the short remainder of my life to mortification and penance, in a narrow and lonely hole which I have lately discovered; but let me not interfere with your enjoyments; youth is the season for pleasure; be happy, therefore, and only obey my last injunction—never to come near me in my retreat; God bless you all." Deeply affected, snivelling audibly, and wiping his paternal eyes with his tail, the old rat withdrew, and was seen no more for several days, when his youngest daughter, moved rather by filial affection than by that curiosity which has been attributed to the sex, stole to his cell of mortification, which turned out to be a hole, made by his own teeth, in an enormous Cheshire cheese!

To see the value the Archbishop of Canterbury attaches to religion, one must observe him among the ladies at a garden party.

Hypocrisy is always detestable, because the first condition of all improvement is to face the actual facts. Sincerity alone brings intellectual tranquility. Nothing is at last sacred, says Emerson, but the integrity of your own mind. Nothing can bring you peace but yourself. One of the best satisfactions in life is that of independent self-reliance. Let us, then, have done with all shams and pretences, think freely, and say out plainly what we think.

> This, above all, to thine own self be true,
> And it must follow, as the night the day,
> Thou canst not then be false to any man.

J. M. WHEELER.

THE POWER OF CHRISTIANITY.

THE dawn of a new year is an appropriate time to consider the value of Christianity as a remedial force. Such a study has a special interest just at this period, when, from the various churches, sermons are being preached extolling Christianity as the harbinger of peace and goodwill, and exalting Christ as the great reformer who was to redeem the world from the cruelties, wrongs, and degradation to which for centuries the people had been subjected. The expounders of the Galilean faith appear to ignore the fact that the many defects which, although their religion has been existing nearly eighteen hundred years, still deface society, are proofs of the impotency of their system to regenerate the human race. Take as an illustration the poverty that abounds upon every side. What has Christianity done to remove this appalling evil? Jesus is reported to have said: "Ye have the poor with you always." The question, however, may fairly be urged: If Christ possessed "god-like" power, why were the poor always to be with them? It is a demonstrated fact that poverty is not only a curse to mankind, but the parent of other innumerable evils. It is a fertile source of crime; it robs the human mind of the vigor and independence which are so necessary to its proper action; it mars the harmony of domestic associations; and, further, it blights the noblest aspirations of our nature, and prevents many earnest toilers from realising the objects of their laudable ambitions. Surely this was a wrong which the "Reformer of Judea" should have striven to destroy; but he did nothing of the kind; on the contrary, he made poverty a mark of perfection, and pronounced the erroneous statement, "Blessed be ye poor." It is a significant comment upon the lack of wisdom in the "Master's" statement that those who profess to be his most ardent followers do their level best to avoid sharing in such "blessedness."

For centuries past, at the close of each year, the Church has been loud in its expressions of sympathy towards the suffering community; but what has the Church done to give practical effect to this sympathy? Why, comparatively nothing. The same fatal and degrading teaching to the poor has gone on. They are told to submit themselves to their "pastors and masters," to "honor the king" (or queen), to "be subject to your masters with all fear, not only to the good and gentle, but also to the froward" (1 Peter ii. 17, 18). The language of the New Testament is: "Let every man abide in the same calling wherein he was called" (1 Cor. vii. 20). "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory" (2 Cor. iv. 17). So far as we can judge from the Four Gospels, the principal object of Christ was to teach his followers how to die, rather than to instruct them how to live. He regarded man as an alien in this world. Anything like a triumph of moral good over evil by human means, anything like an escape from the pangs of poverty, anything like a successful insurrection of right which should produce the dethronement of might, appear not to have crossed the horizon of his mental vision."

Digitized by Google

The annual expression, "A Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year," no doubt sounds very pleasant; but in the present social condition of society it is a mere conventional phrase. At Christmas time, for instance, the expressions of goodwill among the wealthy classes are profuse indeed; but, as the Dispatch of December 23 last observed: "Taken at its highest, what is their ideal and practice of Christmas goodwill? For many of them it is the only occasion when the needs of their poorer neighbors have the slightest claim upon them, and they dole out a little from their plenty in order that one day in the year may bring with it a satisfying meal. Especially is it so in our rural districts. . . . But, looking beyond motives to results, we know that in hundreds of our rural villages the doles that will be given away from hall and vicarage will, however kindly the intention, act as a further means of degrading the laboring population. It is because of the Christmas joint of beef, the frock for the child, or the bag of coals, that much of the power of our rural squirearchy exists, and that for the moment the social iniquities for which landlordism is responsible are hidden. The anticipation and the memory of the customary Christmas gifts turn many a man into little better than a serf, buy his vote for his landlord, and foster in him that paralysing feeling of class dependence so ruinous to true manhood. . . . If we are to have the reign of peace on earth and goodwill to all men, it will not be ushered in by spasmodic outbursts of benevolence at fixed periods, but by striving towards that divine principle of ever-present justice which will make charity unnecessary. We do not desire to say one word that would lessen the generous impulses that prompt those who have much, to scatter with a liberal hand, some measure of comfort amongst those who have little; but we would put it in all seriousness to such: How much better would it be if they refrained from injustice in the first instance? We do not merely ask that class should draw near to class, but rather that all classes should be merged in the general brotherhood of the whole community."

This is common sense, and a true statement of the case. While every effort should be made to relieve existing distress, we should constantly aim to permanently establish that order of things where justice shall preclude the necessity of charity, which is too often humiliating to the recipient. In a land where there is enough for all, charity is an indication that there is a radical defect in societarian arrangements; and the really happy new year will be the one wherein commences an era of a fundamental improvement.

The boast that the power of Christ has established peace and goodwill is an utterly groundless one. If the words ascribed to him are to be relied upon, such was not his mission. For we read: "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth; I came not to send peace, but a sword. For I am come to set a man at variance against his father, the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law. And a man's foes shall be they of his own household" (Matthew x. 34–36). "Suppose ye that I am come to give peace on earth? I tell you nay; but rather division" (Luke xii. 51). "If any man come to me and hate not his father and mother, and wife and children, and brethren and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple" (Luke xiv. 26).

The power of Christianity has been manifested in the realisation of the conditions here foretold. Its influence, according to the New Testament, did not prevent "contentions," "strife," and "indignation" among Paul and his contemporaries. And from that time down to the present hatred, slander, cruelty, persecution, and oppression have marked the history of the Christian propaganda. This is a fact that even some Christians have been candid enough to admit. For instance, the Rev. T. Finch observes: "With few exceptions, religious sects manifest an ample portion of a savage spirit, and endeavor to vilify and destroy one another." Dr. Campbell exclaims: "Nothing can equal the dogmatism and arrogance with which one sect pronounces sentence against another, except, perhaps, the dogmatism with which the other retaliates upon them." Dr. Scott says of the Christian sects: "It is five hundred to one but that everyone is damned, because everyone damns all but itself, and itself is damned by four hundred and ninety-nine." Bennett writes: "Jealousy, detraction, and persecution are the sure attendants of a revival of religion." Chandler bursts forth: "What ruins and desolations—what rapines and murders—have been introduced into the world under the pretended authority of Christ!" Wyvil records: "The barbarities which professed Christians have committed against unbelievers, and against their own brethren of the same faith, exceed in horror whatever acts of cruelty have been perpetrated by tyrants."

It was this same Christian spirit that caused the rapine, desolation, and murders of the Holy Wars; that flooded the streets of Paris in the sixteenth century with human blood; that made the valleys of Piedmont a scene of most inhuman butchery; that instigated the sacrifice of more than three millions of lives by the conductors of the Inquisition; that prompted the enactments of the horrors of the Star Chamber; that produced the St. Bartholomew massacre; that prosecuted and imprisoned Freethinkers; and that to-day keeps "Christian nations" armed to the very teeth in consequence of their dread of each other. These facts show the hollowness of the contention that peace and goodwill have followed the alleged advent of Jesus.

Equally fallacious is the assertion that Christianity has been powerful in aiding national progress. J. A. Farrer, in his recently-published work, Paganism and Christianity, states: "Christianity, in the form it came to assume, did not improve in any essential respects the general state of the world. . . . . No one can read the works of the fathers without at once perceiving that he has passed, not merely from an altogether different, but to an altogether lower, intellectual atmosphere. Painful to the last degree is the change from Cicero or Seneca to Tertullian or Augustine. It is like the change from Italian sunlight to an English fog. . . . There is a moral no less than an intellectual abyss; that is to say, that a man may derive more mental and spiritual profit, higher aspirations for virtue, toleration, and humanity from Seneca or Marcus Aurelius than from writers like Augustine or Tertullian. The moral teaching of the Pagans is on a purer and higher level than that of the fathers."

Similar truths are recorded by Lecky in vol. ii. of his "European Morals." On page 18 he shows that our civilisation is due to other than Christian sources. After pointing out that modern progress is attributable to purely secular causes, he observes that for centuries theology "numbed and paralysed the whole intellect of Christian Europe. . . . In medicine, physical science, commercial interests, politics, and even ethics, the reformer has been confronted with theological affirmations, which barred the way, which were all defended as of vital importance, and were all in turn compelled to yield before the secularising influence of civilisation."

It will thus be seen that the power of Christianity has not by any means always been exercised for good; and, although at the present time it is less powerful for evil than it was in former days, it is because of the secular forces with which it has to cope. A careful and impartial study of history reveals the fact that Christians have always been necessitated to modify their conduct in the presence of a high-toned morality. Hence the truth appears that it is morality that has purified religion, not religion that has purified morality. CHARLES WATTS.

Christianity and Islam.

Ah! how true it is that Christianity has not, as you say, Christianised the world. There is something curious in the spectacle of the embarrassment of every sect of Christians in accounting for this fact. To me, the wonder would be if it had Christianised the world. Its unfitness for saving the race, for an universal reception by mankind, seems to be shown clearly enough by the rise of Mohammedanism, and by the spread of that faith so far beyond the extent that Christianity ever attained as to include, in our day, a fifth part of the whole human race. That religion, imperfect as we see it to be, met needs and guided faculties, among certain races of men, which Christianity wholly neglected.—Harriet Martineau.

Digitized by Google

SCRIPTURE MATERIALISM.

When Thomas Cooper, the doctor, not the Chartist orator, was accused of Materialism, he retorted that this was the Scripture doctrine, since the Bible says nothing of the immortality of the soul, but of the resurrection of the dead. He argued that, on the modern theory of an immaterial soul that survives the body and never dies, the resurrection of the dead would be a useless absurdity and a falsehood. When Jesus Christ talks of the resurrection of the dead, it must be the resurrection of that which is liable to death. It cannot mean the resurrection of that which is not liable to death, but, being immortal, never dies. Even when Christ is resurrected he never speaks of his soul, but says, "Behold my hands and my feet, that it is myself"; and he levitates to heaven with fish and honeycomb inside him. The Christadelphians, who, for the most part, are a plain people, very studious of the words of the book, take a similar position, and, on textual grounds, they really have a very strong case. They point out that the word translated soul has a number of physical meanings, and is sometimes even synonymous with "stomach." They notice that the curse of disobedience was death, and adduce the many passages in the Old Testament in which death is declared to be the end of all human beings.

Job, for instance, says explicitly, "He that goeth down to the grave shall come up no more"; prophets and psalmists declare that the wicked perish, while the preacher asserts "that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them; as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that a man hath no pre-eminence above a beast; for all is vanity."

Christadelphians believe that we are all to be raised up from the dead, judged in the valley of Jehosophat, the wicked sent dead again to their second death, while the righteous—that is, themselves—will have the gift of immortality, wearing crowns of glory, and judging the nations upon the earth. It is a cheeky faith, but what else can be expected from "Brethren of Christ"!

Lucianus.

IF CHRIST CAME TO LONDON.

If Christ came to London, and walked through the town,
His brow would be furrowed with many a frown;
A scourge he would make, not with "small cords," but big,
To teach pious Christians a punitive jig;
The churches and chapels, so costly and grand,
All built with the bread of the poor of the land,
He'd enter, and wrathfully listen and gaze
A moment or two, then his scourge he would raise,
And yell—not a doubt of it—
"Humbugs! come out of it!
Wasting your money and time with these buildings,
Ethical essays, and carvings, and gildings!
Think you that Art and Philosophy please me?
Think you that praises and pew-rents appease me?
Hypocrites, liars, and thieves, ev'ry one of you!
Out of it, hussies! and each mother's son of you!
Christ's come to London!"

If Christ came to London at our time of day,
And entered a hospital, what would he say?
He'd say, midst the proofs of the skill and the care
Of Doctors of Science, the rivals of Pray'r:
"Is this the result of my death and my tears,
Of preaching my precepts for hundreds of years?
This temple of Science, the Atheist's friend,
Of Science the foe of my methods and end—
Come out of it! out of it!
Humbugs! come out of it!
Godless and prayerless hot-bed of Science,
Atheist's providence, trust, and reliance!
Where are the 'signs' that should follow believers,
Promised by me to confound the deceivers?
Genuine Christians—so diff'rent from 'Spurgeons'—
Pray, and repudiate doctors and surgeons;
Always they're safe from disease and disaster,
Curing themselves through belief in their master.
Hypocrites, liars, and thieves, ev'ry one of you!
Out of it, hussies! and each mother's son of you!
Christ's come to London!"

If Christ came to London and read through a lease,
Inspected the Law Courts, and saw the Police,
Or entered an Orphanage, Warehouse, and Bank,
His scourge would be lashing out many a spank!
"What! Landlords, Policemen, and Lawyers, forsooth!
Pretend to be Christians with 'tooth for a tooth'!
No Christians, when damaged, redress ever seek;
They yield 'good for evil,' and 'turn the left cheek';
No Christians have 'savings' in banks nor elsewhere;
'Gainst 'thought for the morrow' my precepts declare.
The sceptics provide for the morrow, and try
To better the earth, where their only hopes lie;
But Christians, whose hopes are all centred above,
Obey all my precepts and trust in my love.
What! homes for the orphan, whose costs are defrayed
By usury, secular science, and trade!
Does no one believe what I oft did declare,
That God feeds the sparrows, and hearkens to pray'r?
Come out of them! out of them!
Humbugs! come out of them!
Think of it! After these hundreds of years,
London I search, but no Christian appears.
Nothing but godless and sceptical creatures,
Hospitals, banks, and such secular features.
Fool that I was to attempt your salvation!
Ass that I was to endure degradation,
Pain, and discomfort, in all of their phases,
Death on the cross, and descent into blazes!
Hypocrites, liars, and thieves, ev'ry one of you!
Go to the devil, for I will have none of you—
Humbugs of London!"

G. L. Mackenzie.

ACID DROPS.

Fluent, genial, shallow "Tay Pay" concluded his New Year's article in the Sun by quoting Browning's

> God's in his heaven,
> All's right with the world.

We don't know whether God's in his heaven or not. "Tay Pay" seems to be better informed on this point than we are. But we are quite sure that all is not right with the world. "Tay Pay" himself is always trying to mend it. The fine income he makes at the business may have something to do with his optimism and his "unshaken faith."

In the late hurricane God rode upon the storm with a vengeance, causing much destruction of life and property both by land and sea. In the Midlands and North many were killed by falling chimney-stacks and buildings, and all round the coasts there have been shipping disasters.

Sir Herbert Maxwell, in a recent number of the Pall Mall Gazette, draws attention to the awful havoc among birds, and even among denizens of the sea, in great gales. "It is," he says, "as if for a few hours the heavens and the earth had been given over to the power of some maleficent demon." How is this to be "reconciled with the scheme of a beneficent Creator"? Sir Herbert Maxwell does not try to answer the question. It is evidently too much for him. Those who talk about "the anger of the Almighty," he says, seem to regard him as "an angry old man in a blue coat," like a certain friend of Horace Walpole's.

The Liverpool Daily Post devoted about three columns to a review, with copious extracts, of Mrs. Bonner's Life of Charles Bradlaugh. The reviewer offers, as a palliative of the unjust treatment Mr. Bradlaugh received, that he wore himself out in trying to prove the non-existence of deity. It is an ancient device to misrepresent a man in order to justify rancorous hostility to him; but men of education should be above such tactics.

The Rev. R. A. Armstrong has written protesting against Mrs. Bonner's statement that Unitarians distinguished themselves by their hostility to Mr. Bradlaugh. Mr. Armstrong and several other prominent Unitarians are free from any charge of illiberality, but he need not go outside his own congregation to find pronounced instances of the contrary feeling. Prominent Unitarians voted in the City Council against letting the Picton Lecture Hall for the N.S.S. Conference in May last. Some Unitarians are very tolerant to their own wretched narrowness. Mrs. Bonner's strictures are generally justified.

The death of Miss Christina Rossetti reminds us of two incidents. The first is, that the most beautiful review of her beautiful poems was written by James Thomson in the Secularist in 1876. She was a fervid Christian, and he was a confirmed Atheist. The second is this. A dear friend of Miss Rossetti's, who was also a dear friend of ours, wanted to introduce us to her. She declined, however, but not with ill-feeling. In a beautiful letter—beautiful in expression and written in a beautiful hand—she said that, while on intellectual grounds she might be proud of such an acquaintance, she could not see how honest Christians and honest Atheists could mix with each other; it was better, she thought, without judging each other, to keep apart. Such was the effect of religion on one of the tenderest women that ever breathed.

Digitized by Google

The Church Army service at St. Mary-at-Hill, Monument, advertises a discourse on Belial's Bullies, two solos by Miss Julie Glover, with orchestral accompaniments, and Darby and Joan given as a cornet solo by Mr. Frank Loker. The address is to be illustrated by dissolving views. Evidently the Rev. W. Carlile could have given some useful hints to the apostles.

Magic-lantern Sunday evening services are becoming popular with the Church Army. This is all very well for a beginning, but to thoroughly outrival Booth's big drums it may be necessary to get up a series of living pictures, and provide the congregation with spittoons.

Mrs. Josephine Butler is, we believe, the wife of a Canon of the Church, yet in the Humanitarian she speaks pretty strongly about the Bible being a man's book as opposed to woman's.

The Oban Times reports a meeting of the Glasgow University Ossianic Society, at which a paper was read by the Rev. Dr. Russell on the Druids. This gentleman wound up by saying that if any of his hearers intended to give up Christianity (horrid thought!) he hoped they would return to the old religion of the Druids rather than adopt "the short-seeing doctrines of modern Secularism." Dr. Russell did not say whether they should also return to the primitive costume of the Druidic age, which sometimes consisted of plenty of paint and a few feathers.

The superintendent minister of the Lambeth Wesleyan Chapel sends to a vice-president of the N.S.S., among others, a curious begging circular, which illustrates how a faith, with omnipotence at its back, yet seeks aid from Mammon. The circular states that Lambeth Chapel, "once filled with Methodist families," has its congregations small and its sources very limited. "Despite the earnest ministry of a succession of able, devoted men, the cause has been going down, down continuously." But, says Mr. Pawlyn, "God is omnipotent, our few people are prayerful." Does he rely on prayer and omnipotence? Not a bit. He follows this by the declaration, "Meanwhile, our pressing want is money."

In the Kirchenfreund (Orthodox Church Friend), Professor Orelli writes on "The Secularisation of the Church," which he finds pervaded by worldly anti-Christian spirit. He says the open opposition of the social democrats is as nothing beside the treachery of conservatives who, while maintaining the forms of Christianity, wholly depart from its spirit.

He remarks that people praise the Bible and say it was never so well understood as now, while all their efforts tend to show it can no longer be considered the word of God. They praise Christ as a man, but will not admit him a god or follow his teachings.

Professor Orelli adds that in England and America, as well as on the Continent, "one denomination after another has been ravaged in this way. Communities which were built up entirely on the ground of personal faith, and had no other justification for their existence, have given up the principles of their faith, and yet live on."

A story is going the rounds about the new Czar. It is said that when, as a lad, he heard the story of the unfortunate end of the prophet of Nazareth, he much lamented his hard fate. His tutor drily remarked that, if J. C. were to venture to preach his doctrines in St. Petersburg, General Gresser, then Chief of Police, would have him arrested and committed to prison quite as unceremoniously as in ancient Judea.

That Scottish pulpit mountebank, the Rev. John Robertson, of Glasgow, says that "the theatres are mere houses of assignation, where rich and bloated men meet their mistresses and harlots." How about the gods in the gallery? Johnnie, like Mrs. Chant, has an eye for only one part of the house.

Johnnie is particularly wroth with the Moderates of the Church of Scotland and other ministers who have been seen in a theatre. "It's enough," he says, "to make the Covenanters turn in their graves." Yes, with anxiety to fill a seat at the performance.

Free Church Principles is the title of a printed address by the Rev. A. Holden Byles, of Hanley. The reverend gentleman does not believe in State Churches, but he believes in a Church, to which he of course belongs. This Church is inspired, and some of its inspiration has fallen on Mr. Byles. He is a dissenter from the Church of England, but no one must dissent from his Church. All dissent, he says, which does not arise from ignorance is a sin. Such are the principles of the Free Church! Was there ever a more facetious title?

Professor Newman once observed—and we have often made the observation ourselves—that the religion of barbarians is often decided by their chieftains. A curious illustration of this tendency may be found in Mr. R. G. Wilberforce's new book on the Indian Mutiny, the most conspicuous figure in which is John Nicholson, whom Colonel Malleson called "the greatest soldier and the most perfect master of men in India." He was adored by the Pathans and Afghans who followed him from the North, and a Nicholson cult arose among the Sikhs, who made pilgrimages to see him. After his death a whole tribe of them said, "Let us learn to worship Nickelseyn's god." They went to Peshawur, and were baptised to a man. "It may be doubted," says the Westminster Gazette, "whether, in India at least, any priest of peace ever had such a triumph."

Mr. G. L. Mackenzie having, in the Echo, drawn attention to the insincerity of Christians who preach peace and forget the texts where Christ says, "I came not to send peace, but a sword," and "he that hath no sword let him sell his garment and buy one," Mr. H. J. W. Morden writes to say that the word sword "means, in the local idiom, separation." What a pity the divine revelation does not say what it means.

At the examination of the Wick School Board, according to the Northern Ensign, the children were asked: Where was the Catechism written? Answer—On Mount Sinai. Who wrote the Catechism? Answer—Moses.

In the same district the Dunnet School Board opens with prayer by the chairman, the Rev. D. Mowat, Free Church minister. Soon after the Established Church minister, the Rev. W. J. S. Falconer, said: "I am not to be bullied by you;" to which the chairman replied: "You are the bully." And the parish minister abruptly left the meeting in a passion.

Satolli, the Pope's vice-regent in America, has promulgated an edict from his holiness, placing under the ban of the Church as secret societies the Oddfellows, the Knights of Pythias, and the Sons of Temperance. The real reason is doubtless that the Pope fears these Orders may draw the faithful from their allegiance to the priests. The Jesuits are far more closely a secret society than any of these, but never were they more in favor with the Papacy than at present.

The Rev. Richard Watson, one of the lights of the Methodist Church, says of the ghost raised by the witch of Endor: "The real Samuel appeared, and the message uttered is so much in character, and so manifestly breathes the spirit of the divine commission, that, containing, as it does, an explicit prediction which was exactly accomplished, we must conclude (let loose and sceptical commentators conjecture what they please) that there was no deception here. The account not only shows that the Jews believed in the doctrine of apparitions, but that, in fact, such an appearance on this occasion did actually occur, which answers all the objections which were ever raised, or can be raised, from the philosophy of the case, against the possibility of the appearance of departed spirits."

Wesley is still more explicit, and says, in so many words, that "the giving up witchcraft is in effect giving up the Bible" (Journal, May 25, 1768). Dr. Adam Clarke, in his commentary on the passage, "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live" (Exodus xxii. 18), observes: "If there had been no witches, such a law as this had never been made."

Not the Anti-Gambling League, but the Chief Constable of Peterborough, determined to try if, having put down all lotteries, religious ones could be carried on with impunity. The Rev. Canon Moser was accordingly summoned for selling lottery tickets on behalf of a proposed Roman Catholic church. One witness stated that he had addressed 10,000 envelopes for the circulars announcing the lottery. On Canon Moser giving an undertaking that the lottery should not be proceeded with and the money returned, the magistrates adjourned the case to enable the promise to be fulfilled, stating that in the event of this being done there would not be a conviction.

The pious people who delight in suppressing other people's enjoyments draw attention to the profanity which prevails at some music halls. A popular song, for instance, imported from America, has for chorus:—

Digitized by Google

He's up with the angels now,
With a bright crown upon his brow;
A pain came in his "tum,"
Then he went to Kingdom Come,
And he's up with the angels now.

No doubt it's awfully shocking, but the question as to whose taste should regulate popular amusements is not so easily settled as some people think.

The Cape Argus gives an account of the Dutch settlers in the country districts. It makes them out to be very pious, very ignorant, and immoral. It accuses the rich, smooth elders of the Church of having "bywoners" on their farms for purposes of immorality, and says: "Many of the children of those 'bywoners' are his children. Could it be otherwise? Nothing to read but the Bible; and surely the Old Testament is, according to my light, rather a dangerous book to put in the hands of such people." The writer goes on to say that they pay their ministers well and have numerous wealthy churches, but do nothing for education.

It appears, from a letter in the Hampshire Telegraph, that the ex-Mayor of Portsmouth was fully justified in referring to the sectarian character of the Royal Seamen's and Marines' Orphan School and Female Home, at its annual meeting, there being no other opportunity for subscribers to express their opinion of the management. It seems that the late Alderman Emanuel, the father of the ex-Mayor, was one of the original founders of the Home, which is now so perverted that it is only open to children of Church of England members, who are only 75 per cent. of the seamen and marines, while the subscriptions are drawn from all classes. Jack, if of the Church of England, is not such a churl as to desire that the children of a chum, who is not exactly of the same faith as himself, shall be debarred from privileges open to his own if anything happens to himself; and this matter should not be allowed to drop until either the Home is made unsectarian, or every collecting-box, card, and circular states on it the fact that the Home is for Church of England children only.

The general statistics of the Roman Church in the United States are as follows:—Archbishops, 14; Bishops, 75; clergy, 9,388; churches, 8,477; chapels, 1,763; stations, 3,485; colleges, 127; academies, 636; schools, 3,587; Roman Catholic population, 8,806,095. Monsignor Satolli has virtually transferred the Roman Catholic centre of operations from Baltimore to Washington, where the wire-pullers are ever ready to bring pressure on the Government.

During the past eight years, including 1893, the Catholic schools for Indians in the United States have received from Congress $2,366,416, while fifteen of the other leading religious bodies have received but $1,400,000. The publication of the facts will add to the movement for stopping all grants to religious bodies. The Catholics vote like sheep, with the object of dipping as deeply as possible into the public purse on every available occasion.

The close alliance of the Roman Church with the corrupt Tammany political organisation of New York has been strikingly manifested lately. Father Ducey was asked to assist the Commission of Investigation of New York Politicians with facts. He did so, and immediately received a peremptory mandate from Archbishop Corrigan not to appear before the Commission again.

M. Félix Lecaze, a Paris journalist, who is also a Catholic, has been lecturing at Frankfort on the Lourdes "miracles." He examined case after case, and found that the result was due to suggestion and hypnosis. No person has been cured who was blind or lame from birth. M. Lecaze denounces the "expropriation of the superstitious tendency" which is carried on by the Catholic dignitaries, who reap a rich harvest for the Church by this policy.

The secular press sometimes make some queer errors in dealing with things of the Church. A northern paper recently had a heading, "Churching of the Mayor," that individual being a male, unlike some of the mayors in New Zealand. This was almost as ridiculous as the paper which wrote of "suspended thurifers," the thurifer being the person who wafts the incense from the thurible.

Another attempt to get out of the difficulty occasioned to the orthodox by the fact that the Sinai MS. states that Joseph begat Jesus is made by "A Parish Priest" in the Church Times, who suggests that "begat" may only mean "was succeeded as his heir by." Apart from the fact that Jesus is not said to have inherited anything from his mother's husband, "A Parish Priest," moreover, omits to notice that verse 25 goes on to say, "She bore to him a son."

An article on Christmas in the Vegetarian, by J. S. Herron, makes some surprising statements. He says: "The rules the Apostles laid down, instructed by their Lord, were—No flesh, no fermented wine. The wine drank in Palestine was not fermented; there was the vintage season when all the grapes were ripe, and everyone drank the juice of the grape, and had a great festival, though a harmless one."

Where did Mr. Herron find the instructions against flesh or wine? Christ and his disciples partook of the Passover Lamb, and Peter saw heaven opened and a sheet let down, "wherein were all manner of four-footed beasts of the earth. And there came a voice to him, Rise, Peter, kill and eat." Thus, one of the apostles was instructed in slaughter as well as in flesh-eating.

Then as to the unfermented wine. What nonsense to suppose that the wine which is always spoken of in connection with drunkenness, which upset Noah and Lot, and made Paul complain that some of those who celebrated the Lord's Supper were drunken, was quite a harmless beverage. The attempts of Christian cranks to make the old book endorse their fads bring credit neither to the book nor to themselves.

The Vegetarian writer goes on to say: "The manner of celebrating the Christian festival now is taken from the pagan feast of Bacchus, a feast greatly delighted in by the Romans, where everyone got drunk and behaved in a most obscene and disorderly manner." He concludes by observing: "Unless the Christian Church is reformed throughout all its branches as to its purity, it will fall and never rise again."

The Rochford (Essex) School Board, under clerical domination, decided to introduce the Apostles' Creed into the schools. Three Dissenting members have appealed to the Education Department on the ground that the creed is a formulary such as is interdicted by the fourteenth clause of the Education Act. Should the Department decide that the creed is admissible, this forgery will, doubtless, be introduced in most of the schools where the clericals are in power; and it will be the duty of Freethinkers to everywhere expose the fictions of that creed and the facts concerning its concoction.

Nellie Laws, 13, and Maggie Winter, 14, were charged at the North London Police-Court with stealing a cash-box and £4 5s. belonging to Mrs. Morris. The prisoner Laws had been connected with the Salvation Army, and met Mrs. Morris at the Clapton Congress Hall. Afterwards she called at Mrs. Morris's and abstracted the cash-box, inducing her servant, Winter, to leave at the same time. The Salvation Army girl said Winter took the box, but admitted helping to spend the money; and she added, "God knows I have done everything I could for that girl, and prayed for her." In the dock each girl accused the other, and Laws declared that what she had done was out of "Christ-like love" for Winter.

Colonel Ingersoll called Shakespeare the greatest genius of this world, and Mr. Gladstone asked him how he knew that. Mr. Gladstone afterwards called Aristotle the greatest thinker of antiquity, and Colonel Ingersoll asked him how he knew that. Mr. Gladstone did not answer. He thought it best to lie low.

Mr. Swinburne is of the same opinion as Colonel Ingersoll. He calls Shakespeare "the mightiest genius that ever dwelt among men"—which the orthodox will think rough on Jesus Christ. Mr. Swinburne also refers to the spring of 1616, in which Shakespeare died (and for that reason), as "the darkest that ever dawned upon England or the world." Evidently, in Mr. Swinburne's opinion, Jesus Christ is not in the running.

Mr. A. J. Balfour, the Tory leader in the House of Commons, sowed his intellectual wild oats in The Defence of Philosophic Doubt. He will soon publish the fruits of repentance in a new work entitled The Foundations of Belief. We shall be happy to investigate Mr. Balfour's "foundations."

Archdeacon Farrar is one of the gassiest preachers in England. He makes a lot of money by writing about the poor Carpenter of Nazareth. We are not surprised, therefore, to learn that he is also a flunkey. For four months he fills the post of Deputy Clerk of the Closet in waiting on the Queen. We are unable to state the precise functions of this office, and perhaps they are better left to imagination.

Lord Erskine, hearing that a man had died worth a million, said: "Well, that's a good sum to begin the next world with."

Digitized by Google

Mr. Foote's Engagements.

Sunday, January 6, Hall of Science, 142 Old-street, London, E.C.: 11.15, "Social Equality: Will it Ever be Realised?" 7, "The Freethought Outlook in 1895."

Wednesday, January 9, Hall of Science: 8.30, "A Night with George Meredith."

January 13, Hall of Science, London; 27, Liverpool.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

MR. CHARLES WATTS'S ENGAGEMENTS.—January 6, Chesterfield; 13, Leicester; 20, Nottingham; 27, Hall of Science, London. February 3, Hall of Science, London; 10, Camberwell. March 3, Manchester.—All communications for Mr. Watts should be sent to him (if a reply is required, a stamped and addressed envelope must be enclosed) at 81 Effra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

LECTURE NOTICES must reach 28 Stonecutter-street by first post Tuesday, or they will not be inserted.

PETER DICKSON.—Hardly worth the price, we should say.

W. BOOTH.—Thanks for good wishes. See "Acid Drops."

MR. AND MRS. J. KENNEDY.—We heartily reciprocate your "best wishes" for the new year. The sight of your pretty country house on the card makes us feel sicker than ever of London's "long unlovely streets," and its dirt and din.

IMPARTIALIST.—The man acted generously, but it seems a little Pharisaic to put the occurrence in print. Besides, it would be no news to our readers that a Freethinker can be a tender-hearted man.

R. F. (Beswick, Hull).—Mr. Naewiger, 22 Osborne-street, Hull, will supply you with our literature.

G. MANCO.—Thanks. See "Sugar Plums."

G. LUCAS.—We will look into the matter. What is your fresh sub. intended for? Josephus does not mention the massacre of the innocents by Herod. He would have done so if he had heard of it.

G. R.—Shall appear. No room this week.

G. W. B.—Under consideration.

RESEAR.—Mr. Forder sees to your order. Glad to know you are so pleased with the Freethinker.

E. TIMEWELL.—There have been several articles on Spiritism in back numbers of the Freethinker, the dates of which we may supply next week. In our issue for August 12, 1894, there are several "Acid Drops" on the subject. The Confessions of a Medium (published by Griffith & Farren), Truesdell's Bottom Facts Concerning Spiritualism (Boston), and a work by Mr. Maskelyne may supply what you require.

G. GRAHAM.—There is no law to prevent a Freethinker from receiving a legacy. The law disables Freethought Societies.

G. F. WENBORN.—Glad to have your support.

A. J. MARRIOTT.—Will deal with it next week. Thanks.

MR. FOOTE'S FIGHTING FUND.—Mr. and Mrs. Durant (St. Thomas, West Indies), 7s.; W. A. Argall, 1s.

J. G. FISHER.—Handed to Mr. Forder. Kindly send in future direct to him.

J. NICHOLSON.—Cuttings are always welcome.

W. SIMONS sends us the annual report of the Ball's Pond Secular Sick and Tontine Society, which is as healthy as the members appear to be.

J. NEATE.—Thanks. See paragraph.

W. S. PARNALL.—Obliged for the cuttings. We note your hope that our New Year's number will be "as terse and classic as the Almanack."

A. J. NEWTON.—Thanks for the reference. Stevenson's intellect was too keen not to pierce through the Christian superstition.

H.—Please send future orders for literature direct to Mr. Forder. Mrs. Besant is not a Freethinker of "our class." We regard her present beliefs as a worse superstition than Christianity, though perhaps less malignant, being two thousand years more recent.

F. J. BOORMAN.—Mr. Foote wrote you on the subject. His letter must have crossed your second one in the post. He will gladly visit Chatham again either for lecture or debate.

W. J. HEATH.—(1) Glad to have your thanks for what you consider the spirit we have infused into the question of Secular Education. By the way, that spirit is likely to cost us something. There is still a deficit of over £10 in connection with Mr. Watts's candidature in Finsbury, for which we hold ourself personally responsible. It seems hardly fair to let us bear the burden of cost, as well as a heavy burden of work. (2) We will try to furnish precise references to our Freethought Gleanings, which would certainly be more useful with them.

E. H.—(1) We have recommended Greg's Creed of Christendom dozens of times. (2) The libellous Life of Bradlaugh may be the same as the one you refer to. We do not know. (3) We are unable to direct you to any cheap history of the Slave Trade. The literature of the subject is large and rather expensive. (4) Ratepayers have no control over the so-called Voluntary Schools, which are supported out of imperial taxation, though not out of the rates. They are now clamoring for a share of the rates too, and if they succeed it will be their destruction.

N.S.S. BENEVOLENT FUND.—Miss E. M. Vance acknowledges:—Mrs. Hancock, 5s.; Ch. Girtanner, 5s. 9d.; Westminster Branch, 17s.; F. Rogers, 5s.; Daniel Baker, £2 2s.; J. Chamberlain, 2s. 6d.

T. E. M.—Your re-copy to hand. Shall appear at an early date. It is in the compositor's hands.

R. MORROW.—Thanks.

PAPERS RECEIVED.—Dundee Advertiser—Cape Argus—Echo—Two Worlds—Western Figaro—Freidenker—Reynolds's Newspaper—Boston Investigator—Independent Pulpit—Crescent—Islamic World—Weekly Times and Echo—New York Sun—Chat—Truthseeker—Isle of Man Times—Twentieth Century—Liberty—Progressive Thinker—Liberator—Open Court—Torquay Times—Lucifer—Northern Ensign.

FRIENDS who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish to call our attention.

LETTERS for the Editor of the Freethinker should be addressed to 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

The Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the publishing office, post free, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 10s. 6d.; Half Year, 5s. 3d.; Three Months, 2s. 8d.

CORRESPONDENCE should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

ORDERS for literature should be sent to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

IT being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will receive the number in a colored wrapper when their subscription expires.

SCALE OF ADVERTISEMENTS.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—(Narrow Column) one inch, 3s.; half column, 15s.; column, £1 10s. Broad Column—one inch, 4s. 6d.; half column, £1 2s. 6d.; column, £2 5s. Special terms for repetitions.

SUGAR PLUMS.

MR. FOOTE lectures at the London Hall of Science on the first two Sundays in the new year. His morning subject to-day (Jan. 6) is "Social Equality: Will it ever be Realised?" In the evening he will lecture on "The Freethought Outlook in 1895." On the following Wednesday (Jan. 9) Mr. Foote delivers the first of two new literary lectures, the subject then being "A Night with George Meredith."

We hope to see a large and genial gathering at the Holborn Restaurant on Monday evening (January 7). It is the occasion of the seventh Annual Dinner of the London Secular Federation. Mr. Foote will preside, and be supported by Mr. Charles Watts and other well-known Freethinkers. There is sure to be a good "spread," and the Dinner Committee has arranged an excellent musical program to be alternated with the toast-list. Let us gather together for one evening and fleet the time merrily as they did in the golden age. After the merriment we shall all fight the better for "the good old cause."

Mr. Charles Watts lectured the last two Sunday evenings at the Hall of Science, London. Considering the holiday season, the audiences were very good. Mr. Watts lectures three times to-day, Sunday, January 6, in the Assembly Room, Market Hall, Chesterfield. We have no doubt that our Derbyshire friends will muster in good force.

The conclusion of Mr. Foote's article on "Who was the Father of Jesus?" stands over till next week, in consequence of the pressure upon our space by the Bradlaugh article. The cartoon also stands over till then for the same reason. Our readers must be satisfied this week with the fine portrait of Charles Bradlaugh.

Dr. Stanton Coit lectured for the Liverpool Branch last Sunday. The weather was generally dry, but bitterly cold, and to this must be attributed the fact that the audiences were not so large as the merits of the lectures deserved. Those who attended, however, were delighted with the powerful addresses given. The evening lecture was especially fine; Mr. George Wise opposed, and the proceedings were prolonged much beyond the usual time. Dr. Coit's replies to his opponent were crushing; but God's people have the privilege of singing hymns of victory even after defeat.

The Liverpool and Bootle Secular Tontine Society has concluded a very successful year. Two-thirds of the subscriptions were returned to the members in the divide, and the New Year opens with a good substantial reserve fund. New members are invited; all information being obtainable at the lectures on Sunday evenings.

Digitized by Google

Mr. C. Cohen has concluded the first half of his six months' mission at South Shields, and has just been enjoying a well-deserved holiday. He has made many friends in the district, and his services are highly appreciated by one and all.

The Camberwell Branch holds its general meeting of members this afternoon (Jan. 6) at 4. Tea and soirée (tickets 1s.) will begin at 6. South Londoners are earnestly invited to attend.

The Finsbury Branch holds its annual meeting in the Minor Hall of Science to-day (January 6) at 12 o'clock (noon). Officers have to be elected, and other important business determined.

Last week's Athenæum gave the place of honor to a review of Mrs. Bonner's biography of Charles Bradlaugh. Reservations are made, but on the whole the article is laudatory. The following paragraph is perhaps worth quoting: "The main facts of Bradlaugh's public life are too well known to need recapitulation, though, perhaps, the time has not yet come for such thorough understanding of them, or rather of him, as only dispassionate examination can secure. Throughout many years he provoked much opposition which was excusable, if not quite reasonable, and which was evidently not unwelcome to him, though he bitterly complained of it, by his persistent attacks upon opinions regarding secular as well as religious affairs held by most of his countrymen. On many occasions 'Iconoclast,' as he styled himself, went out of his way both to give offence and to take offence; but even in his stormiest days, as well as in the later and more statesmanlike stage of his career, he often showed a regard for justice and a spirit of generosity surpassed by few. In fact, he was a born fighter, the conditions of whose life inclined him to modes of warfare and placed him in battle-fields which involved much waste of energy and lack of dignity. But before going into the fray he always satisfied himself that his cause was a good one and worth struggling for; and it is notable that during the few years in which he was allowed to sit in Parliament he won the sullen admiration of even enemies by his peculiar dignity and sustained energy."

The Pall Mall Gazette says the two volumes are written with tedious minuteness, and uses hard words in speaking of Mr. Robertson's share of the composition. On the other hand, it admits, rather patronisingly, that Bradlaugh was "a really remarkable man," and "one of the greatest speakers of his day." This is qualified, however, by the statement that he had a "strictly mechanical, machine-like mind." Perhaps the Pall Mall reviewer will explain the difference between "mechanical" and "machine-like," and inform us how the possessor of such a mind could ever be a great orator. We pause for a reply.

The Literary Guide (Watts & Co.) for January is a good pennyworth, the principal feature being a review of the Life of Charles Bradlaugh. There is a valuable gratis supplement by Mr. F. J. Gould on "Who Wrote Genesis?"

A letter in the Birmingham Daily Post, signed "Pro Bono Publico," ably advocates the utilisation of the Board schools for Sunday evening lectures. Hundreds, it appears, were turned away who were eager to hear Dickens's Christmas Carol read at the Bristol-street Board school.

The Ironclad Age (Dec. 15) opens with a curious piece of verse from that erratic genius but stout Freethinker, George Francis Train, who, as usual, indulges wildly in capital letters.

The largest theatre in Boston was packed to hear Colonel Ingersoll's new lecture on the Bible. The Boston Investigator says: "The audience, intelligent, alert, appreciative, hung upon his utterances swayed, by his magnetism, fired by his eloquence into irresistible and continuous applause. What a victory for Freethought, what a triumph for genius! Voltaire, in the days of his greatest popularity, could never have received a heartier reception from the warm-hearted French people than was accorded the distinguished Freethinker, gentleman, and scholar on the occasion of his last visit to this city." Similar ovations have greeted him in the other towns where he has lectured.

Reynolds's Newspaper, in noticing the Secular Almanack, gave a good extract from Mr. Foote's article on "The Progress of Freethought," and the Weekly Times and Echo says of the Almanack: "It is full of good matter, which, for the most part, no one need to be a Secularist to enjoy; and the calendar is a refreshing contrast to the usual stereotyped list of dates of kings and battles in which no one now-a-days takes much interest or cares to be reminded of."

On Christmas Day, December 25, 1894, the scholars' annual tea party was held at the Failsworth Secular Sunday School, Failsworth. This party has now been held for over twenty years, and was, as usual, a decided success. Over two hundred sat down to an excellent tea. After tea, for which no charge is made to the scholars, a good program of songs and recitations was rendered by the younger children. Forty-nine volumes in all were distributed as prizes by Mr. Taylor. Refreshments and games followed, and the party spent a most enjoyable evening. The New Year's party will be held on January 5, 1895. After the tea the drama, "Leah the Forsaken," will be played.

The critical school of Dutch theology has made the Church in that country rationalistic, though it rests on our good friends of De Dageraad to uphold the banner of absolute Freethought. A writer in the Church Times was horrified to find that at the Amsterdam Free Evangelical Church they were having a course of lectures on "George Eliot." He says, moreover, that the congregations of the churches are very thin, the worshippers being mainly women.

Mr. Victor Roger, one of the N.S.S. vice-presidents, has been re-elected on the Lambeth Vestry. He has a Freethinking colleague in Mr. G. Coombes, and another in a member whose name we withhold. Mr. Roger had the odium theologicum raised against him. One prominent chapelite would not stand with Mr. Roger on any account. That is what he said, but he had to stand in the Progressive list with Mr. Roger, and now has to sit with him on the Vestry. It only remains to add that Mr. Roger was vigorously denounced by Christians at open-air meetings as a disgrace to the Vestry. The disgrace consisted in his vile, pestilent habit of thinking for himself.

In Bethnal Green three well-known militant Atheists have been elected on the Vestry—Messrs. Sumpter, Smither, and Neate, the last being the secretary of the local N.S.S. Branch. Mr. Smither has also a seat on the Board of Guardians, together with Miss Sumpter, who is a member of the East London Branch.

In Hackney we have Messrs. W. Vining and B. Dent, both of whom have lectured at the Freethought station in Victoria Park. Mr. Gay, a member of the N.S.S., has also been elected on the Hackney Board of Guardians.

In Poplar we have Mrs. Wilson and Messrs. Lansbury and Goult (all Secularists) elected as Guardians. Mrs. Grout has been returned as Guardian for Hoxton, and Mrs. Barralet for Homerton. Mr. E. Smith (Battersea Branch) polled over five hundred votes, but wanted ten more to win. At South Lynn Mr. Robert Green was elected as Guardian.

Annual Children's Party.

C. M. Jacob, 6s.; George Anderson, £2 2s.; Mrs. Donaldson, 6s.; "Not Bad," 2s. 6d.; Mrs. Bussie, 5s.; J. Chamberlain, 2s. 6d.—ROBERT FORDER, Treasurer.

A Brace of Saints.

St. Viar, a Spanish saint, has, it is said, been "evolved" from a curious error in reading an ancient stone (similar to the one discovered by Mr. Pickwick), which bore the letters S. VIAR. Spanish piety at once recognised a saint. Profane antiquaries, however, read the inscription otherwise. The letters are old Roman characters, and, if complete, would have read PrefectuS VIARum (overseer of roads). The stone was in honour of some Roman official connected with the highways.

On Soracte, a mountain in Italy, celebrated by Horace and Virgil, there is now a monastery of St. Oreste—i.e., the old name divided and softened into a saint. "These be thy gods, O Israel."—James A. Richardson.

How to Help Us.

(1) Get your newsagent to take a few copies of the Freethinker and try to sell them, guaranteeing to take the copies that remain unsold.

(2) Take an extra copy (or more), and circulate it among your acquaintances.

(3) Leave a copy of the Freethinker now and then in the train, the car, or the omnibus.

(4) Display, or get displayed, one of our contents-sheets, which are of a convenient size for the purpose. Mr. Forder will send them on application.

(5) Distribute some of our cheap tracts in your walks abroad, at public meetings, or among the audiences around street-corner preachers.

(6) Get your newsagent to exhibit the Freethinker in the window.

Digitized by Google

NOTABLE BOOKS OF THE YEAR.

ONE way of taking stock of the progress of a period is by noting the number of books which it has produced that are likely to live. And the past twelvemonth has furnished its quota. Of fiction—of which, indeed, there is no dearth—we shall not deal at length. There have been several notable novels, though not perhaps any masterpiece, sent forth during the past year. There is George Meredith's Lord Ormont and His Aminta, which certainly is worthy of the author of Richard Feverel. But George Meredith, of course, will never be read by the multitude. Lord Ormont and His Aminta contains many examples of that twisted language and exuberance of writing, as it may be called, which is one of the distinguishing literary mannerisms of George Meredith, and which is, perhaps, seen most markedly in One of Our Conquerors. Yet, for all that, George Meredith is perhaps the most scientific and cultured writer of fiction in England to-day.

Amongst the other notable novels which may only be named are Hall Caine's Manxman, Mrs. Humphry Ward's Marcella, dealing in the Wardian fashion with Socialism, Stanley J. Weyman's Under the Red Robe and My Lady Rotha, and Blackmore's Perlycross.

What we wish to deal with principally, however, are those books issued during the past year which appeal particularly to the attention of Freethinkers. In this class we may place the much-boomed and certainly striking work called Social Evolution, by Mr. Benjamin Kidd. It would, of course, be impossible in an article such as this to give anything like an adequate idea of Mr. Kidd's work. For, be it said, it is decidedly ingenious. But one can appreciate its value briefly.

Now, the thesis of the book is that there is "no rational sanction for progress." Mr. Kidd maintains that the interests of the social organism are opposed to the interests of the individual, and that "reason" would eliminate or take no account of the social interests; hence the necessity of "religion" to supply those sanctions for conduct which "reason" cannot supply. In other words, Mr. Kidd argues that religion is the sociological ballast which keeps the ship of humanity from toppling over. And by "religion" Mr. Kidd distinctly means unreason. He is prepared to give the title "religion," apparently, to any form of supernaturalism, from Buddhism down to the fetishism of savage tribes; thus Mormonism, according to him, is a religion, whilst Positivism is not (p. 115). So that really—if it be not disrespectful to put it so—it would appear that any kind of humbug or emotional tomfoolery possesses, in Mr. Kidd's eyes, a sociological value which a reasonable, sane system of ethics does not possess.

We hope we have conveyed as accurate an impression of Mr. Kidd's position as is possible in this brief survey. Of course the book contains much that is valuable and interesting. But many of the religious organs have hailed Mr. Kidd's book as an admirable apologetic, and have exalted its author to a position in the scientific world which it is probable he never aspired to. To these, therefore, we would address a word. And it is this: The first, the last, the only question for us to ask or discuss about religions and religious sanctions is: Are they true? All these "safe-side" arguments, these "hell-police-force" ideas, all this elaborate argument as to the sociological value of religion—all this is beside the question. Are the religious sanctions true? If they are, then we do not require your treatises as to their sociological value. If the religious sanctions be false, are we going to discuss the sociological value of a lie?

Mr. Kidd himself does not explicitly state that he accepts the religious motives as true. Possibly he does, more probably he does not. He is simply looking at their effect when believed by the masses. And he thinks that such belief is an essential condition of progress. Now, we would suggest, as our humble opinion, that Mr. Kidd is on the wrong tack altogether. We would gather that, as man has progressed so far against the forces of unreason, he would have progressed still more if he had not had to expend so much energy in fighting the forces of religion—using the word in the sense Mr. Kidd does. True, these forces of unreason were also set going by humanity—we will grant that. Humanity must be taken whole, so to say, with its weakness and its strength. But Mr. Kidd's error, it seems at least to us, is to put to the credit of the weakness what is really the outcome of the strength. The race has progressed—we both grant that. Mr. Kidd says because of religion or unreason. Nay, we say, in spite of religion, because reason has been too strong for unreason. And we claim that history is on our side and against Mr. Kidd. For, if Mr. Kidd's thesis be true, we ought to find that the greatest progress was made in the ages when religion was strongest. Do we find such to be the case? Why, it is a commonplace of even the most un-Macaulayan schoolboy that the ages of greatest "faith" were the ages of greatest ignorance and greatest degradation; that, as religion waxed stronger, civilisation grew weaker; that with the natural revival of learning came the decline of religion, thus demonstrating that reason is a stronger force than unreason; and that, given time, no matter how strong the irrational force, humanity will inevitably recover itself. And if we are better to-day than ever before, it is, we claim, because religion was never weaker than it is to-day. Much even of the knowledge on which Mr. Kidd relies in his book was acquired and spread by men who were fought bitterly by the very institution which Mr. Kidd is justifying. Of course Mr. Kidd does not write by any means as a religious hack, making out a case for his religion at the expense of sanity and truth. Primarily he is a student of the social organism, and his appreciation of the value of the religious force was probably the result of his investigations and reflections, such as they were; yet the net outcome of his book is that religion is the steadying element in society. But he has made a mistake. It may be necessary to re-examine our sociology; to test it and see if it has no weak places; but we cannot start to rebuild it on a false foundation. Truth is the keynote of all science—of all life, in fact; truth, in the long run, is the only safeguard against error and retrogression. And one might answer Mr. Kidd's proposition as to the value of unreason by adapting some eloquent and memorable words of the late Professor Clifford: "It can never be necessary for your race and for mine that, in order to progress, we must needs believe a lie: by trust in reason and in truth we have progressed so far hitherto; by trust in reason and in truth we shall never more fall back."

Perhaps we have devoted more space to Social Evolution than we should under the circumstances. For there is another book which has reached fame during the year—we mean Professor Drummond's Ascent of Man, that possesses considerable interest for Freethinkers. And here, remembering Mr. Kidd's book, we may emphasise a remark made some time ago in these columns, that really it is not necessary to go to sceptics for answers to the theologians; the theologians confute one another so brilliantly that it is superfluous for an Atheist to join in the task. It cannot be said, perhaps, with fairness, that either Mr. Kidd or Professor Drummond is a theologian; but they are both certainly on the theological side—they are both religious, they are both seeking to justify the ways of God. And as one would expect, they fall out. Really at bottom Professor Drummond's book is, to a large extent, a confutation of Mr. Kidd's whole thesis. Of that we shall presently deal. But even specifically Mr. Drummond devotes several pages to slating Mr. Kidd. He says of Mr. Kidd's work (p. 70) that "as an apologetic it only accentuates a weakness which scientific theology never felt more keenly than at the present hour." Theology can only retain its vitality, it seems, by being brought "into harmony with Nature and into line with the rest of our knowledge." Oh, that "harmony"! For ages they have been at it, and creating untold discord in the process.

But Professor Drummond goes bravely to his task, and seeks to show that the whole end of things was the Evolution of "love." There is a chapter on the "Evolution of a Mother," and another on the "Evolution of a Father," and so on, through pages of very pretty, semi-ecstatic talk. But it is not science. Indeed, when we meet early in the book (p. 47) a chapter headed "Why was Evolution the Method [of Creation] Chosen?" we know what to expect. But as Mr. Drummond answers Mr. Kidd by quoting a passage from Spencer, in which it is pointed out, in a word, that the social instinct is in reality a part, and an essential part, of the individual instinct, so we can answer Mr. Drummond by Mr. Kidd. Says Professor Drummond, referring to his question above: "The answer of modern natural theology has been that the evolutionary method is the infinitely nobler scheme." Now turn we to Mr. Kidd and see how the "infinitely nobler scheme" works out, remarking, parenthetically, that "modern natural theology" never perceived the "infinite nobility" until science had discovered Evolution and compelled the theologians to accept it. Mr. Kidd writes: "We admire the wonderful adaptation of many of the ruminants to their mode of life, the keen scent by which they distinguish an enemy at a distance which seems remarkable to us, their wonderful power of vision, their exceeding fleetness of foot, and their graceful and beautiful forms. But the evolutionist has always before him the cost at which these qualities have been obtained. He has in mind the countless host of individuals which have fallen a prey to their enemies, or failed in other ways in the rivalry of life in the immense period during which natural selection was at work, slowly accumulating the small successful variations out of which those qualities have been evolved. It is the same with other forms of life; progress everywhere is evident, but the way is strewn with the unsuccessfuls which have fallen in the advance" (Social Evolution, p. 61). Thus we have produced the flower of love, in one little corner, and amongst a small portion of one race, at the cost of hatred, suffering, and death. Truly an "infinitely noble scheme."

Digitized by Google

However, like Mr. Kidd's book, Mr. Drummond's is well worth reading. And, taking its argument merely to mean that ethical conduct, love, self-sacrifice, the "struggle for the life of others," or what possibly Mr. Kidd means by social conduct, that this is as much the result of evolution as the physical structure of man, that there is nothing supernatural or irrational about it—taking Professor Drummond's argument at bottom to be this, it is justifiable, and it is an answer to Mr. Kidd. Of course, if the book be taken merely as another specimen of modern Paleyism, the-beautiful-world-in-which-everything-goes-well-and-everybody-is-in-love idea, then the thing is worthless.

We have, we fear, spent too long over these books. And we have not touched on the essentially Freethought books of the year. There is, of course, the Life of Charles Bradlaugh by Mrs. Bonner, just published; Mr. Putnam's Four Hundred Years of Freethought; Colonel Ingersoll's lecture, About the Holy Bible; Messrs. Wheeler and Foote's little book on Voltaire; The Bottomless Pit, by W. Stewart Ross, and many others. One can only name a few. Certainly Freethinkers have no reason to feel other than gratified at a review of the year's books. For, even outside and apart from positive avowedly Freethought books, there is the permeation of general literature by Freethought ideas, which is always going on. It is to this general widening of thought, this loosening of dogmatic bonds, this gradual rusting away of the fetters—it is to this we look with pleasure, and it is in this we see the promise of a new and freer future. FREDERICK RYAN.

Christianity and Reason.

When a man goes to a Christian church, he generally leaves his reason behind the door with his umbrella. "Were I to reason on religion as I do on science," says Faraday, "I could never be a Christian." Reason calls for knowledge, Christianity demands faith. Reason demands miracles now, if they were ever performed—Christianity demands acceptance of the wonderful past, that can never be repeated, on pain of eternal damnation. Christianity shocks our reason at every step, and the more reasonable men become the faster they outgrow it.—William Denton.

An Atheist on Agnosticism.

The Agnostic, while contending that it is unreasonable to deny a God, admits that it is likewise unreasonable to affirm a God, because, if consistent with reason, he, of course, would not be an Agnostic, but accept or retain the Theistic faith. He insists no evidence exists to establish such an hypothesis upon a basis of science and reason; that we have no knowledge, and can have no conception, of such a being; and, a la Ingersoll, successfully refutes all arguments advanced in favor of the mystic faith. Yet he says, "There may be such a being; I don't know." Is this reasonable? Just? If all the sciences fail to corroborate, no! repudiate the theory; if it mocks reason and sense, eludes the highest understanding, and baffles its own votaries, is it, can it be then, unreasonable to repudiate and deny completely such an unreasonable proposition? And if reasonable to deny it, is it not our duty to deny and proclaim the denial to all the world?—Otto Wettstein.

TRANSMIGRATIONS UP TO DATE.

(With Apologies to the "Vicar of Bray.")

In youth and beauty's halcyon days,
When Pusey was the fashion,
A zealous High Church maid was I—
Religion was my passion.
I went to church three times each day,
My faith no mere profession;
The comfort of my soul was then
Auricular confession.

Chorus—And this is law, I will maintain,
Until the day I die, sir,
That whatsoever fad may reign,
I always mean to try, sir.

But soon a change came o'er the scene—
I made a new alliance,
And criticised my former views
With all the lights of science.
The creeds of Christendom I held
Were so much foolish chatter,
And could explain the universe
In terms of force and matter.

Chorus—And this is law, I will maintain, etc.

Malthusian doctrines once I taught,
And checks to population,
Believing them the recipe
For national salvation.
I oft debated on the theme
With eloquence seductive,
And proved by figures easy seen
The race was too productive.

Chorus—And this is law, I will maintain, etc.

To Socialism next I turned,
With faith almost fanatic;
My views progressed until they were Quite ultra-democratic.
Capitalists I loud denounced,
The bourgeois sleek I rated;
Carl Marx my prophet was just then,
And him I venerated.

Chorus—And this is law, I will maintain, etc.

Next to Theosophy I went,
By H. P. B. attracted;
For Eastern thought I bravely fought
When by its foes detracted.
A chela skilled I soon became,
And caused such great sensations,
When, by white magic, I produced
Materialisations.

Chorus—And this is law, I will maintain, etc.

In India I a Hindoo was—
For so the press reported;
While some allege, while in the States,
I was by Mormons courted.
Australia now I find my field,
And this is the result, sir—
Convinced by Antipodean priest,
I've joined the Maori cult, sir.

Chorus—And this is law, I will maintain, etc.

If time permits, I mean to try
The faith of every nation,
And, by my varied changes, prove
The truth of transmigration.
Now, will the cloister close my life,
Or shall I still meander,
Until at last I advocate
Anarchic propaganda?

Chorus—And this is law, I will maintain, etc.

S. SODDY.

Boggs says the French want to get back to Egypt, because they always hope for another plague of frogs.

Dying Planter—"Ah, Sambo, I fear I'm going, and I've a long journey before me." Sambo—"Nebber mind, massa; it am all down hill."

Superintendent—"Children, this is the Rev. Dr. McSnorter, from Gowanus, who will address you a few brief remarks. Children, he has come all the way to try and save your souls from hell. You are not paying attention. Now, can any little boy or girl tell me where this gentleman is from?" Chorus of children—"From Hell."

Digitized by Google

THE SCIENTIFIC STANDPOINT.

THE English Mechanic for January opens with an article entitled "A New Branch of Science," in which it deals with what is called psycho-physiology. The purport of the article is to show that mental forces are as measurable as physical ones, and that all phenomena, from the highest to the lowest, are to be interpreted in terms of matter and motion. We quote the following passage as significant of the scientific standpoint of the writer:—

"To the evolutionist, as has been so frequently said, matter and motion are eternal. There is no creation or destruction, but only transformation of both. Holding this belief, which, despite the Marquis of Salisbury in his recent address to the British Association at Oxford, and despite the half-timorous jubilation with which that address was received by a good many journals, is an exceedingly well-founded one, the evolutionist is logically driven to the further belief that all phenomena are ultimately reducible to this—some form or forms of matter undergoing some form of motion. To him there appears to be no other rational explanation of things as they are. But 'all phenomena' include mental phenomena, include the so-called psychical phenomena. Hence we are led to believe that, with advancing human knowledge, mental phenomena, the phenomena of sensation, of the so-called will, of intellect—memory, reason, judgment, abstraction, imagination—in a word, the phenomena of the whole of our consciousness, objective and subjective alike, will be shown to be connected with the matter and the modes of motion of our nervous system—of our brains, with their infinite divisions and complexities, our spinal cords, our nerves."

Further on it says: "Let us once again remind the reader that a law of nature means simply an accurate scientific generalisation, a statement of some large principle induced from observation and experiment, and connecting and explaining a certain series of facts. It does not imply—nay, indeed, it rigidly excludes—the anthropomorphic conception of a lawgiver."

Christianity and Atheism.

In my arguments with Christians I always find that they do not understand Atheism; they seem to look upon it as something inferior to Christianity. I think I am right in saying that most, if not, all Atheists have been Christians, and have given up their creed for something higher and nobler. Most people, when they arrive at Christianity, prefer to stay there. They find a kind of rest for their minds, and do not trouble to rise any higher. Atheism is like all great things, it must be earned. The power of thought, and of reason, must be cultivated, till at last the Christian, having learned to live a fairly good life through being a true Christian, finds himself fitted for a higher natural life, free from the chains of superstition, and can look back upon Christianity, as upon all other religions, and feel that he has passed through that stage when he thought he knew that which he now knows he did not, and finds himself face to face with nature, and does his best to read her, instead of taking other people's imagination for his knowledge. Atheists are not born, they are made. It is easy for an unthinking man to become a Christian, but it is not so easy to be an Atheist. The intellectual, thinking Christian is moving onward towards Atheism.—W. G. T.

Priests.

I can find no evidence that seriously militates against the rule that the priest is at all times, and in all places, the enemy of all men—Sacerdos semper, ubique, et omnibus inimicus. I do not deny that the priest is very often a most earnest and conscientious man, doing the very best that he knows of as well as he can do it. Lord Amberley is quite right in saying that the blame rests more with the laity than with the priesthood; that it has insisted on magic and mysteries, and has forced the priesthood to produce them. But, then, how dreadful is the system that puts good men to such uses! . . . . If there is one lesson which history forces upon us in every page, it is this: keep your children away from the priest, or he will make them the enemies of mankind.—W. K. Clifford.

Our fathers did not quite love God, nor quite hate the Devil; but they were afraid of both. They really wished to enjoy themselves with God in the next world, and with the Devil in this. They believed that the course of Nature was affected by their conduct; that floods and storms, diseases, earthquakes, and tempests, were sent as punishments, and that all good phenomena were rewards.—R. G. Ingersoll.

A GOD OF LOVE?

O CHRISTIAN, say, is he a God of Love,
Whose Bible reeks with war and blood,
Who drowned his children in the flood,
Who hurled down furious fire from heaven above?
A meek, mild God, the essence of sweet love.

Some men once ventured near his awful ark,
Then fiendishly he made them die
A fearful death of misery;
Behold, their bodies lying slain and stark!
I hear wild cries for mercy still; oh, hark!

That Satire throned in heaven, that peaceful dove,
Your dear God, slew in vengeance, then,
Full fifty thousand other men.
I think, dear Christian souls, if this is love,
God's love must sure make Hell of Heaven above.

And yet to-day each Christian praises him,
Whose bloody deeds are wide extolled
In Lunacy's wide Christian fold.
All honest eyes with sorrow's tears are dim;
Your God of Love is but a murderer grim.

J. J. BARRETT.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THEOSOPHY AND CREDULITY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE FREETHINKER."

SIR,—In your issue for December 23 you quote from the Weekly Times and Echo a paragraph which says that the recent "exposure" of Theosophy shows the limits to which human credulity can be carried. I wish to point out that the human credulity of the British public seems to have been carried to the extent of enabling it to swallow anything, however unsupported, so long as it is a calumnious attack on some prominent person. Many of us know this from our own bitter experience. The Westminster Gazette writer knew that what the public wanted was abuse—not truth. Theosophists will hold all parties concerned to be innocent until they are proved guilty.—Yours, etc.,

H. T. EDGE.

[This is a characteristic epistle. The Westminster Gazette writer made detailed charges. To call such charges "abuse" is an abuse of the English language. Let the Theosophists answer if they can. If they cannot, they will not impose on sensible people by assuming virtuous airs.—EDITOR.]

PROFANE JOKES.

"Where do the wicked finally go?" was asked at a Sunday school. An observant youth replied: "They practise law, and then become judges or members of Parliament."

Pruyn—"Then you do not approve of the Universalist doctrine?" Mrs. De Piscopal—"Oh, I have nothing to say of their orthodoxy, but I'm sure they're not sufficiently exclusive!"

Visiting Clergyman—"And did your faith bring you to this?" Salvation Army Bill (serving his third term for disorderly conduct and drunkenness)—"No, not my faith, but my convictions!"

M. High (to St. Peter)—"I see they are drawing the lines pretty tight on the earth just now. You will please revise the conditions of admission accordingly, and cast out all who do not come up to the new requirements." St. P.—"It shall be so." (Thirty years later.) St. P.—"Who comes?" (A voice.)—"Bob Ingersoll." St. P.—"Come right in. You always meant well enough." (A few minutes later.) St. P.—"What! going so soon?" R. G. I.—"Yes; too lonesome. Nobody here but God and Dr. Talmage."

The Rev. J. Colquhoun, of Leight, was a man of extreme solemnity of demeanor. On one sacrament Sunday morning his wife, being desirous to have him nicely out for the occasion, had his coat rigged, well brushed, his shirt white as snow, and his bands hanging handsomely on his breast; and when she surveyed her gude man she was so delighted with his comely appearance that she suddenly took him around the neck and kissed him. Thereupon the Rev. John was so offended by this carnal proceeding that he debarred his wife from the sacrament that day.

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY LECTURE NOTICES, ETC.

[Notices of Lectures, etc., must reach us by first post on Tuesday, and be marked "Lecture Notice," if not sent on post-card.]

LONDON.

HALL OF SCIENCE (142 Old-street, E.C.): 11.30, G. W. Foote, "Social Equality: Will it Ever be Realised?" (Free.) 6.30, musical selections; 7, "The Freethought Outlook in 1895." (Admission free; reserved seats, 3d. and 6d.) Wednesday, at 8.30, G. W. Foote, "A Night with George Meredith."

BATTERSEA SECULAR HALL (back of Battersea Park Station): 7, members' quarterly meeting—important business. Tuesday and Friday, at 8, social gatherings.

CAMBERWELL (North Camberwell Hall, 61 New Church-road): 4, members' meeting; 6, tea; 7, soirée. (Tickets 1s.)

WEST LONDON ETHICAL SOCIETY (Princes' Hall, Piccadilly): 11.15, J. H. Hobson, "The Waste of Labor Power."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BATTERSEA PARK GATES: 11.30, F. Haslam will lecture (weather permitting).

HYDE PARK (near Marble Arch): 11.30, St. John will lecture.

COUNTRY.

BATH (Corridor Rooms): 11, Stanley Jones, "The Origin of the Bible"; 3, "Christianity and Social Life"; 7, "The Church and Science."

BIRMINGHAM (Coffee House, corner of Broad-street): Thursdays, at 8, papers, discussions, etc.

BLACKBURN (Secretary's house): 3, members' meeting.

BRISTOL (Shepherds' Hall, Old Market-street): 3, business meeting.

DUNDEE (City Assembly Rooms): 11, discussion class; 12, elocution class; 12.30, choir practice; 1, shorthand class; 2.30, R. Cameron, "Our Father in Heaven"; 6.30, secular concert. Friday, Jan. 4, at 7.30, annual festival.

FAILSWORTH SECULAR SUNDAY-SCHOOL (Pole-lane): Saturday, Jan. 5, New Year's Party—tea, followed by drama, "Loah the Forsaken."

GLASGOW (Ex-Mission Hall, 110 Brunswick-street): 12, discussion class—D. Lindsay, "Public Affairs"; 6.30, Zosimus, "The Natural History of Christianity."

HULL (St. George's Hall, Storey-street): 7, members' annual meeting.

LIVERPOOL (Oddfellows' Hall, St. Anne-street): 3, philosophy class—Ernest Newman, "Kant"; 7, Ernest Newman, "Christianity a Failure."

MANCHESTER SECULAR HALL (Rosholme-road, All Saints): 6.30, R. Law, F.G.S., "The Earth as it was Eight Million Years Ago." (Free.)

NEWCASTLE (Irish Literary Institute, Clayton-street East): 7, R. Weightman, "Christianity and Secularism—a Moral Contrast."

PLYMOUTH (Democratic Club, Whimple-street): 6.45, Mr. Chubb, "Is there a God?"—affirmative.

PORTSMOUTH (Wellington Hall, Wellington-street, Southsea): 7, a meeting. Wednesday, at 8, dancing.

ROCHDALE (Working Men's College, 4 Acker-street): 11, discussion class; 2.30, Sunday-school; 3, Sam Standring "Jesus the Wine-Maker"; 6.30, "What do we Mean by A.D. 1895?" 8.30, Branch meeting.

SHEFFIELD SECULAR SOCIETY (Hall of Science, Rockingham-street): 7, limelight exhibition—see Saturday's local papers.

SOUTH SHIELDS (Thornton's Variety Hall, Union-lane): 11, C. Cohen, "Darwinism and Democracy"; 7, "Freethought and Morals."

SUNDERLAND (Lecture Room, Bridge End Vaults, opposite Echo office): 7, Robert Weightman will lecture.

Lecturers' Engagements.

C. COHEN, 12 Merchant-street, Bow-road, London, E.—All Sundays until April, 1895, South Shields.

STANLEY JONES, 58 Marlborough-road, Holloway, London, N.—Jan. 6, Bath; 13, Plymouth; 20, Chatham. Feb. 3, Edinburgh; 10, Dundee.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Credon-road, Rotherhithe, London, S.E.—Jan. 6, Leicester. Feb. 3, New Brompton.

One Penny each, by post Three-halfpence,

LETTERS FROM HEAVEN AND LETTERS FROM HELL.

BY J. M. WHEELER.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Works by Colonel R. G. Ingersoll.

SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES. The only complete edition in England. Accurate as Colenso, and fascinating as a novel. 132 pp. 1s. Superior paper, cloth 1s. 6d.

DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT. A Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy. 6d.

THE GODS. 6d.

REPLY TO GLADSTONE. With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler. 4d.

ROME OR REASON? A Reply to Cardinal Manning. 4d.

CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS. 3d.

ORATION ON WALT WHITMAN. 3d.

ORATION ON VOLTAIRE. 3d.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. 3d.

PAINE THE PIONEER. 2d.

HUMANITY'S DEBT TO THOMAS PAINE. 2d.

ERNEST RENAN AND JESUS CHRIST. 2d.

TRUE RELIGION. 2d.

THE THREE PHILANTHROPISTS. 2d.

LOVE THE REDEEMER. 2d.

GOD AND THE STATE. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part I. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part II. 2d.

FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Dr. Field. 2d.

GOD AND MAN. Second reply to Dr. Field. 2d.

THE DYING CREED. 2d.

THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION. A Discussion with the Hon. F. D Coudert and Gov. S. L. Woodford 2d.

THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH. 2d.

ART AND MORALITY. 2d.

DO I BLASPHEME? 2d.

THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE. 2d.

SOCIAL SALVATION. 2d.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE. An Agnostic's View. 2d.

SKULLS. 2d.

THE GREAT MISTAKE. 1d.

LIVE TOPICS. 1d.

MYTH AND MIRACLE. 1d.

REAL BLASPHEMY. 1d.

REPAIRING THE IDOLS. 1d.

CHRIST AND MIRACLES. 1d.

CREEDS & SPIRITUALITY. 1d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

"AN ADMIRABLE BOOK."

"400 Years of Freethought."

HANDSOMELY BOUND, WITH 141 PORTRAITS OF EMINENT FREETHINKERS.

1165 pages. Price £1 1s.

Mr. Charles Watts has just received a supply of the above work, and on receipt of £1 1s. he will be pleased to forward a copy to any address, carriage paid. Send to Mr. Watts direct—81 Effra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

WORTH READING.

"How I Came to be Boycotted."

By P. H. ECHLIN (author of Pernicious Parodies).

The above for ONE SHILLING Postal Order.

Address—33 Richmond-road, Barnsbury, London, N.
A. HEMINGWAY, 25 Higher Chatham-street, Manchester.

Price 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d. post free,

THE GRAND OLD BOOK.

A REPLY TO THE GRAND OLD MAN.

BY

G. W. FOOTE.

An Exhaustive Answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture."

CONTENTS:—Preface—Preliminary View—The Creation Story—The Fall of Man—The Psalms—The Mosaic Legislation—Corroborations of Scripture—Gladstone and Huxley—Modern Scepticism.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

MARRIOTT, CLOTHIER,

311 EDGWARE ROAD, W., near Metropolitan Music Hall (same side), six doors from Church-street. TROUSERS, good wear, 5s. 9d., 7s. 6d., and 9s. 6d.; Blacks, 7s. 6d. and 10s. 6d. Thirty sizes kept in stock. OVERCOATS from 12s. 6d.

CYRIL BEDE, M.A., is open to Lecturing Engagements in town and country. Subjects:—History, Literature, Theology, etc. Views:—Tolerant Scepticism. Manner:—Cynicism, Satire, Pathos. For terms write to 16 Ossian-road, Stroud Green, N.

W. J. RENDELL'S "Wife's Friend."

Recommended by Mrs. Besant in Law of Population, p. 82, and Dr. Allbutt in Wife's Handbook, p. 51. Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell-street, Clerkenwell; 2s. doz., post free (reduction in larger quantities). For particulars send stamped envelope. Higginson's Syringe, with Vertical and Reverse Current, 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 5s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. Dr. Allbutt's Quinine Powders, 3s. per doz. All prices post free.

W. J. RENDELL,

15 CHADWELL-ST., CLERKENWELL, E.C. (near the "Angel.")

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 331 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 5s. 6d. each, upper or lower set, £1. Best quality, 42s. each, upper or lower, £2, completed in four hours when required; repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum 7s. 6d. each, on 18 ct. gold 15s., stopping 2s. 6d., extraction 1s., painless by gas, 5s.

MARGATE.—TERRACE HOTEL, Marine Drive. Bed and Breakfast from 2s. 6d. A large room to seat 500. Beanfeasts and other parties liberally treated.

TO FREETHINKERS, Ladies and Gentlemen requiring SUPERIOR CUT GARMENTS at moderate prices. First-class Style and Fit Guaranteed.—H. HAMPTON, Artiste Tailor, 14 Great Castle-street, W. Three doors from Regent-street. [Patronised by leading Freethinkers.]

Price 1s., post free,

Is Socialism Sound?

VERBATIM REPORT OF A FOUR NIGHTS' DEBATE BETWEEN ANNIE BESANT and G. W. FOOTE.

R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price 1s. Superior edition for Subscribers, bound, numbered, and signed 2s.

VOLTAIRE:

HIS LIFE AND WORKS.

With some Selections from his Writings, by J. M. WHEELER and G. W. FOOTE.

Price Twopence,

SALVATION SYRUP;

OR,

LIGHT ON DARKEST ENGLAND.

A REPLY TO GENERAL BOOTH,

By G. W. FOOTE.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter street, E.C.

TEN £1 Shares of the Manchester Secular Hall Company, Limited, offered for £7 10s. cash. Address, J. H. A., care of Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

HOUSEKEEPER-COMPANION Wanted by Widower, of quiet habits; having one daughter aged 12; income £140 (Civil Service); near London. Address, George Denbigh Shrewsbury Villas, Plumstead.

Digitized by Google

WHY BE ILL?

MEDICAL ESSAYS. VOL. I. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Management of Infancy, Health, Longevity, Teeth, Brown Bread, Bread Making, Food, Vegetarianism, Tobacco, Drink Question, Fruit, Fresh Air, Exercise, Bathing, Light, Holidays, Cause and Cure of Disease, Constipation, Bilious-ness, Eczema, Blackheads and Pimples, Nervousness, Coughs and Colds, Chest Complaints, Deafness, Thread Worms, Long Worms, Tape Worms, Itch, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. VOL. II. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
The Healing Power of Nature; Clothing; Electricity in Disease; Apparent Health; Vegetarian Experiments; The Pig as Human Food; Popular Fallacies about Flesh; The Beef Tea Delusion; Salt; Saline Starvation; Tea Drinking; The Hair and its Management; Sleep and Sleeplessness; Want of Energy, etc.; Health Hints for Workers, Shop Assistants, and Servants; Advice for the Thin; for the Stout; and on the Proper Treatment of Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumors, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. VOL. III. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Health and Wealth; No More Death; Youth; The Necessity for Pure Air, and How to Get it; The Management of Young Children; Hunger and Appetite; Effects of Fasting; Perfect Foods; Green Foods; Suppers; Unsuspected Domestic Poisons; Thirst; Perspiration; Sea Bathing, etc. HOW—to Eat Properly, to Eat Fruit, to Judge Wholemeal Bread, to Breathe Properly, to Grow Tall, to Keep Warm, to Live, to Live One Hundred Years, to Improve the Memory, and to become Beautiful and Attractive. On the Cause and Cure of Stomach Troubles, Flatulence, Sleepiness, Varicose Veins, Boils and Carbuncles, Sebaceous Tumors or Worms, Hay Fever, Winter Cough, Chilblains, the Diseases Produced by taking Mercury, Epilepsy.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. VOL. IV. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
New Year Resolutions, Prevention better than Cure, Health Savings Banks, Hardening, Rubbish, Work and Overwork, Sugar and its Abuse, Macaroni, Salads, Wholemeal Cookery, Porridge, Celeriac or Celery Root, Milk as Food, The Tomato, Against Butter, Poultices, Quinine, Against the Knife, Arsenical Poisoning, Tonics, Infant Mortality, Against Stimulants in Disease, Stays and their Substitutes, About Swallowing Pins and other Articles, also the Cause and Rational Cure of Sun Stroke, Dog Bites, Pains in the Back, Pediculi or Lice, Chicken-pox, Synovitis or Inflammation of the Joints, Tonsilitis or Quinsy, Herpes (Tetter or Shingles), Erysipelas, Ulcer of the Stomach, Epidemic Influenza, Sciatica, Psoriasis or English Leprosy. Appendix.
The Four Volumes, strongly and neatly bound, for 5s. 6d.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE. An Eye-Opener to Drug Takers. Post free from the Author for Postal Order for 1s. 1d.

RHEUMATISM: Its Cause and Cure. Post free 7d. — CONSUMPTION: Its Cause and Cure. Post free 7d.—DIET AND DIGESTION. Post free 7d
THREE PAMPHLETS TO YOUNG MEN. Post free 1s. 1d.

 All these books (except Pamphlets to Young Men) bound together in cloth in one volume. Post free 8s. 6d.

All the above can be got from DR. T. R. ALLINSON, 4 SPANISH PLACE, MANCHESTER SQUARE, LONDON, W.

HOURS OF CONSULTATION are—Morning from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m.; fee, 10s. 6d. Evening from 6 to 8; fee, 5s.
Patients visited in London for a fee of 10s. 6d. Patients visited in the country. Fee according to distance and the time occupied in going and returning. Advice Given by Post.

ADVICE TO THE MARRIED

All persons whose circumstances will not permit them to maintain a large family should send for

"PRUDENCE AND PLENTY,"

an interesting dialogue, which should be read by all who wish to maintain and improve their position in life.
Copy, together with our Illustrated List of all the MODERN APPLIANCES as recommended by Dr. Allbutt and Mrs. Besant, sent on receipt of stamped envelope to—

E. LAMBERT & SON,

Manufacturers of Hygienic and Malthusian Appliances,

60 AND 62 QUEEN'S ROAD, DALSTON LONDON, N.E
or from R. FORDER.

THE BEST BOOK

ON NEO-MALTHUSIANISM IS, I BELIEVE,

TRUE MORALITY, or THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF NEO-MALTHUSIANISM.

By J. R. HOLMES, M.M.L., M.V.S., M.N.S.S.

180 pages, with portrait and autograph, bound in cloth, gilt lettered. Price 1s., post free.

 In order to bring the information within the reach of the poor, the most important parts of the book are issued in a pamphlet of 112 pages at ONE PENNY, post free 2d. Copies of the pamphlet for distribution 1s. a dozen post free.

The National Reformer of 4th September, 1892, says: "Mr Holmes' pamphlet . . . is an almost unexceptionable statement of the Neo-Malthusian theory and practice . . . and throughout appeals to moral feeling. . . . The special value of Mr. Holmes' service to the Neo-Malthusian cause and to human well-being generally is just his combination in his pamphlet of a plain statement of the physical and moral need for family limitation with a plain account of the means by which it can be secured, and an offer to all concerned of the requisites at the lowest possible prices."

The Council of the Malthusian League, Dr. Drysdale, Dr Allbutt, and others have also spoken of it in very high terms.

The Trade supplied by R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C. Other orders should be sent to the author.

J. R. HOLMES, HANNEY, WANTAGE, BERKS.

6d. ☞ NOW READY ☜ 6d.

THE

SECULAR ALMANACK FOR 1895.

Altered and Enlarged. Finely-Designed Cover.

EDITED BY
G. W. FOOTE & J. M. WHEELER.

CONTENTS: Progress of Freethought; by G. W. Foote—This World; by J. M. Wheeler—Heroes in the Service of Man; by Charles Watts—Dod Grile—A Wish; by Matthew Arnold—The Abducted Female Infidel—Farquhar of Nethertton—Bits from Selden's "Table Talk"—Jeremy Bentham on Inspiration—Abou-ben Adhem and the Angel—Man's Soul his God—The Sacred Books of the World—The Dear God—What have Unbelievers Done for the World?—Information Concerning Freethought Work and Organisation—Lecturers, etc.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

THE BIRTH OF CHRIST

A CHAPTER FROM

Strauss's Original "Life of Jesus."

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY

G. W. FOOTE.

(A Most Thorough Analysis and Exposure of the Gospel Story by a Master Hand.)

Price Sixpence.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C

Freethought Publications.

By G. W. FOOTE.

The Grand Old Book. A Reply to the Grand Old Man. An exhaustive answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture." 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Christianity and Secularism. Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Bible Heroes. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Letters to the Clergy. First Series. 128 pp., 1s.

Infidel Death-Beds. Second edition, much enlarged, 8d. On superfine paper, in cloth, 1s. 3d.

Darwin on God. 6d.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s.

Reminiscences of Charles Bradlaugh. 6d.

Flowers of Freethought. First Series. 221 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Bible Handbook for Freethinkers and Inquiring Christians. [Edited in conjunction with W. P. Ball.] Complete, paper covers, 1s. 4d.; superior edition, on superfine paper, bound in cloth, 2s.

Crimes of Christianity. Vol. I. [Written in conjunction with J. M. Wheeler.] Hundreds of exact references to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.
Chapters: — 1, Christ to Constantine; 2, Constantine to Hypatia; 3, Monkery; 4, Pious Forgeries; 5, Pious Frauds; 6, Rise of the Papacy; 7, Crimes of the Popes; 8, Persecution of the Jews; 9, The Crusades. Cloth, gilt, 216 pp., 2s. 6d.

The Jewish Life of Christ. Being the Sepher Toldoth Jeshu, or Book of the Generation of Jesus. With an Historical Preface and Voluminous Notes by G. W. Foote and J. M. Wheeler. Paper covers, 6d.; superior edition, superfine paper, cloth, 1s.

Bible Studies. Essays on Phallic Worship and other Curious Rites and Customs. By J. M. Wheeler. Illustrated, superior paper, 2s. 6d.

Biographical Dictionary of Freethinkers of All Ages and Nations. By J. M. Wheeler. Handsomely bound in cloth, 7s. 6d.

Darwin Made Easy. By Dr. Edward B. Aveling, Fellow of the London University. This is the best popular exposition of Darwinism extant. Cloth, 1s.

Essays in Rationalism. By Charles Robert Newman (Atheist Brother of the late Cardinal Newman). With a Preface by George Jacob Holyoake, and a Biographical Sketch by J. M. Wheeler. 1s. 6d.

Some Mistakes of Moses. By Colonel R. G. Ingersoll. The only complete edition published in England. Accurate as Colenso, and fascinating as a novel. 132 pp., 1s.; superior edition, cloth, 1s. 6d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

40/- WORTH OF GOODS FOR 20/-

ANNUAL STOCK-TAKING SALE.

LOT 1.—1 Tweed or Serge Suit Length, 1 Tweed Dress Length, 1 Lady's Umbrella, 1 Gent's Umbrella ... ... for 20s.
LOT 2.—4 Trouser Lengths, 2 Tweeds, 2 Worsteds, and 2 pairs of Drawers ... ... for 20s.
LOT 3.—1 Black Cashmere Dress Length, 1 Navy Serge Dress Length, 1 Blouse, 1 Belt, 1 Apron, 1 Underskirt for 20s.
LOT 4.—3 Dress Lengths: 1 Navy Serge, 1 Mixture Tweed, and 1 Black Cashmere ... ... for 20s.
LOT 5.—1 Suit Length, 1 Dress Length, 2 pairs of Curtains ... ... for 20s.
LOT 6.—30 yards of Remnants for Children's Dresses (all double width) ... ... for 20s.
LOT 7.—2 Flannelette Nightdresses, 2 Chemises, 2 pairs Knickers, 2 pairs Curtains, 2 Aprons, 1 Umbrella ... for 20s.
LOT 8.—1 Dress Length, 1 Under-Skirt, 1 Umbrella, 1 Blouse, 20 yds Muslin-de-laine, 1 Apron, 1 Belt, 1 pair Stockings... ... ... for 20s.
LOT 9.—1 Black Victoria-shaped Fur, and 1 Pure Wool Navy Serge Dress Length ... ... for 20s.
LOT 10.—1 Real Sealskin Satchel and Muff, 1 Black, Blue, or Brown Beaver Jacket Length, 1 Umbrella ... for 20s.
LOT 11.—1 pair All-Wool Blankets, 1 pair Sheets, 1 Quilt, and 1 Table-cloth ... ... for 20s.
LOT 12.—2 Dress Lengths and 2 Trouser Lengths. (Warranted all Wool.) ... ... for 20s.
LOT 13.—12 yards Shirting, 12 yards Muslin-de-laine, 10 yards Flannel, 10 yards Flannelette ... ... for 20s.
LOT 14.—1 West of England Black or Blue Worsted or Vienna Suit Length ... ... for 20s.
LOT 15.—3 Sailor Suits (to fit boys up to 8 years old) and 1 Navy Serge Dress Length (all wool) ... ... for 20s.
LOT 16.—1 Lady's Mackintosh, and 1 Black, Blue, Brown, or Fawn Melton Overcoat Length ... ... for 20s.
LOT 17.—1 Good Melton Overcoat Length in Black, Blue, Brown, or Fawn, and 1 Serge or Tweed Suit Length for 20s.
LOT 18.—3 Real All-wool Scotch Tweed Trouser Lengths (check or stripe) ... ... for 20s.
LOT 19.—1 Gentleman's Scarboro'-shaped Mackintosh. [Give length, chest, and waist measure.] ... ... for 20s.
LOT 20.—1 parcel of odd lots, including Suit Length, Dress Length, Blouse, Apron, Stockings, Socks, Belt, etc. for 20s.

We shall include one of our Beautiful ALMANACKS for 1895 in each Parcel. One Shilling must be added for Carriage. We cannot send Patterns. We guarantee satisfaction in every case, or return money in full.

J. W. GOTT, 2 & 4 UNION-STREET, BRADFORD.

ASK YOUR GROCER
FOR THE
ROYAL CHISWICK TABLE JELLIES

EXPERT'S OPINION—

"The Perfection of Jelly."

"Certainly far superior to all other Jelly Tablets—in transparency, strength, and in flavor utterly beyond comparison."

TOUZEAU PARRIS & CO.,
ENFIELD WORKS, ACTON, W.

☞ NOW READY ☜

Colonel Ingersoll's Great New Lecture
ABOUT THE HOLY BIBLE

Price Sixpence.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

The London Secular Federation's
ANNUAL DINNER
AT THE HOLBORN RESTAURANT,
ON MONDAY, JANUARY 7, at 8 o'clock.

Chairman—MR. G. W. FOOTE.
Supported by MR. CHARLES WATTS and other leading Secularists.

Tickets - - Four Shillings.

Obtainable at the Hall of Science and at 28 Stonecutter-street, also from London Branch Secretaries.

The Most Enjoyable Reunion of the Freethought Party.

THE JANUARY NUMBER
OF
THE LITERARY GUIDE
CONTAINS A
6 column Summary and Review
OF THE
"LIFE OF BRADLAUGH."
Also a 4 pp. Supplement entitled "WHO WROTE GENESIS?"
Post free, Three Halfpenny Stamps.
London: Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Printed and Published by G. W. Foote, at 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

VOL. XV.—No. 2. SUNDAY, JANUARY 13, 1895. PRICE TWOPENCE.

PRECEPT AND PRACTICE.

"Labor not for the meat which perisheth."

CHARLES BRADLAUGH.—II.

Charles Bradlaugh: A Record of his Life and Work. By his Daughter, Hypatia Bradlaugh Bonner. With an Account of his Parliamentary Struggle, Politics, and Teachings, by John M. Robertson. (London: T. Fisher Unwin.) 2 vols.: 21s.

BRADLAUGH AT HOME.

MRS. BONNER gives a very pleasant picture of her father's home-life, his considerateness for his wife, his tenderness to his children, his hospitality to his friends. Many refugees from France sought his counsel and assistance, and some of them taught his daughters French. Mrs. Bonner writes as follows of his treatment of herself and her sister:—

> "Never during the whole of our childhood did my father once raise his hand against us, never once did he speak a harsh word. We were whipped, for my mother held the old-fashioned, mistaken notion that to 'spare the rod' was to 'spoil the child;' but when scolding or whipping failed to bring obedience, the culprit was taken to that little study; there a grave look and a grave word brought instant submission. But it seldom went beyond the threat of being taken there, for we loved him so that we could not bear him even to know when we were naughty.'

TWO DEAD ONES.

Bradlaugh's elder daughter, Alice, whose portrait is given in this book, was a robust figure in the days of her young maidenhood. In later years her health seemed to fail, perhaps through over-study. An attack of typhoid fever carried her off, early in December, 1888. Her body, as she wished, would have been cremated, but the Woking Crematorium happened to be closed at the time, and she was buried at Brookwood. The sudden and fatal termination of her illness, Mrs. Bonner says, was "a great shock" to Bradlaugh. He went down to the House of Commons to attend to his duties, but he could not bear the condolences of his colleagues. Alice Bradlaugh, as Mr. Robertson says, was "her father's daughter in her high spirit, in her generosity, in her energy, and in the thoroughness of her work." All who knew her will echo this encomium.

Bradlaugh's only son died at the early age of eleven. We recollect seeing him at the London Hall of Science. His father was obviously proud of him, as well he might be, for the lad was remarkably bright and intelligent. Mrs. Bonner relates the circumstances of his untimely death, and gives a terribly pathetic picture of the stricken father's mastery of his grief:—

> "In June my brother was taken ill with a mild attack of scarlatina, of which we knew nothing until he came home to us for his holidays on the 20th of the month. Due precautions had been neglected, and almost immediately after he reached us kidney disease began to manifest itself. From this he died on July 15, and he was buried exactly a month from the day on which he came home. The shock of his death was terrible to all of us, and not least so to my father. Although barely eleven years old at his death, Charlie was a lad full of promise, quick to learn and to comprehend, amiable, honorable, and generous; and of these traits I can recall many little instances. I have a photograph of him taken at the age of seven or eight, and as I look at it I see his eyes gaze out from under his square brow with a wonderfully clear and fearless look.

Digitized by Google

"He was buried on July 20 in Cocking Churchyard, my grandfather's cottage at Cocking Causeway (Midhurst) being in the parish of Cocking. Of course, we had to submit to the Church of England service, for it was before the Burials Act was passed; but the Rev. Drummond Ash was a kindly, courteous gentleman, and he made things as easy as the circumstances would allow. The burial would have taken place at the Brookwood Necropolis had my father been able to afford the expense. As he was not, Charlie was laid perforce in consecrated ground at the foot of the South Down Hills with Christian rites and ceremonies."

"The telegram bearing the totally unexpected summons to my father to hasten to see his son for the last time was handed to him on the platform at Bury just as he was about to deliver a lecture. I have been told that when he read the words he turned deathly pale; but, with that self-control which never failed him in adversity, he rose, and, with the least perceptible hesitation, commenced and went through with his lecture. On Tuesday night he received his summons; on Wednesday he was with us, though only to leave again by the early train on Thursday morning. On Friday the boy died, and on that same day and the next my father had to be in the law-courts as witness in a case relating to the Naples Color Company. His grief for the loss of his son was intense, but he shut it up in his heart, and rarely afterwards mentioned the name of his boy, of whom he had been so proud."

Bradlaugh's paternal feelings were stronger than most men's, but he did not wear his heart upon his sleeve. How many who knew him only after this first bereavement, as they looked at his stalwart figure and saw the splendid life in his face, ever imagined that the strong man's heart had a mausolean chamber, only unlocked, perhaps, in darkness and solitude, when—> midnight makes

> Her giant heart of memory and tears
> Drink the pale drug of silence.

French Friends.

Bradlaugh had many French friends, and he frequently visited Paris. He met Gambetta, but there seemed to be a coldness between them, for what reason we could never discover. Madame de Brimont introduced herself to Bradlaugh during the war in 1870, her object being to solicit his aid in stirring up English feeling in favor of France. She brought funds for the agitation here. Of course Bradlaugh did not need much solicitation, as his sympathies were with France, and he hailed with delight the proclamation of the French Republic. Mrs. Bonner writes as follows about the Countess:—

> "The acquaintance between Madame de Brimont and Mr. Bradlaugh, commencing in her visit to his lodgings on September 17, 1870, ripened into a friendship which lasted for the rest of my father's life. From that September day these two never ceased to be friends; through good report and ill report Madame de Brimont stood by him. While my father lay upon what proved to be his deathbed I received a letter from her in which, writing in French, she sent him a message from sa meilleure amie, 'and that,' she said, 'I think I may claim to be, for during the twenty years I have known him I have never once swerved in my friendship for him—no, not for a single moment.' My father, very weak and ill, was deeply moved when I read the letter to him. 'It is true,' he said brokenly, 'it is true.'"

Mrs. Besant.

Mrs. Bonner devotes a whole chapter to Mrs. Besant. Soon after the death of Austin Holyoake, to whom Bradlaugh's daughter pays a just tribute of praise, Mrs. Besant made her advent in the Freethought party. "Having enrolled herself a member of the National Secular Society, in August, 1874," Mrs. Bonner writes, "Mrs. Besant sought Mr. Bradlaugh's acquaintance. They were mutually attracted; and a friendship sprang up between them of so close a nature that had both been free it would undoubtedly have ended in marriage." Mrs. Bradlaugh was still living, and Mrs. Besant was only separated (not divorced) from her husband. Mrs. Bonner speaks in the highest terms of Mrs. Besant's eloquence and industry. "Though not an original thinker," it is added, "she had a really wonderful power of absorbing the thoughts of others, of blending them, and of transmuting them into glowing language." This is substantially what Mr. W. P. Ball incurred so much odium for saying when he reviewed Mrs. Besant's earliest writings on Socialism. Using a very forcible, and as Mrs. Besant thought a very impolite expression, he declared that her mind was like a milk-jug; what was poured out of it was first poured into it. Mrs. Besant herself admits that, for some time before his death, Bradlaugh had lost all confidence in her judgment. The only wonder is that he ever had any. She drifted away from him as she had drifted towards him; and, despite all their old closeness of association, Bradlaugh "first learnt of Mrs. Besant's adhesion to the Theosophical Society through an article written by her in a weekly paper, and not from her own lips." He had counted upon her constant alliance, and he was bitterly disappointed. Mr. Robertson confesses that "the new and deep division of opinion undoubtedly pained and depressed him. He was to find, as so many have found, that when success comes something is sure to go which leaves success a different thing from what was dreamt of." Mrs. Besant's defection was clearly one of the burdens that weighed Bradlaugh down to the grave. Yet it was all so natural that it should not have caused surprise. Mrs. Besant is a born disciple, and when Bradlaugh became more and more absorbed in his parliamentary duties she fell under other influences, and the "thought" of thirteen years rapidly changed amidst a new personal environment.

Bradlaugh's Activity.

Mrs. Bonner's superabundance of detail has at least one advantage; it affords a clear idea of Bradlaugh's wonderful activity. Our difficulty is to know where to select an illustration. Here is one at a venture. Bradlaugh, who was then (1866) lecturing as "Iconoclast," rushed over to Bedlington to oppose David King, the champion "infidel-slayer" of that time; and this is what followed the encounter:—

> "After the discussion came the return drive of twelve or fourteen miles in the cold and the rain to Newcastle, which was reached at two in the morning. While my father snatched a couple of hours' sleep, some of his friends sat and watched in order to rouse him for the Scotch express, which passed through Newcastle about five o'clock. Arrived at Edinburgh, my father found he had twenty minutes to wait, so he thought he would get some breakfast, but 'alas!' said he, 'it was Sunday morning, and starvation takes precedence of damnation in the wee guid city. Instead of drinking hot coffee, I had to shiver in the cold, admiring the backs of the tumble-down-looking houses in the high "toon" for want of better occupation. I arrived in Glasgow just one hour before the time fixed for the morning lecture—dirty, weary, hungry, thirsty, and sleepy.'
>
> "After the evening lecture Mr. Bradlaugh had to hurry from the platform of the Eclectic Hall to catch the train which steamed out of Glasgow at twenty minutes to nine, so that he might be in time for Monday morning's business in the city, having spent two nights out of bed, travelled about 900 miles, and spoken at Bedlington and three times in Glasgow in less than forty-eight hours."

No wonder that when Bradlaugh was near death he told the doctors that he had lived the lives of three men, having burnt the candle at both ends and also in the middle—though that, by the way, is an un-Bradlaugh-like Hibernicism.

Father Ignatius.

Freethinkers of the younger generation will probably be astonished to learn that Bradlaugh once debated at the London Hall of Science with Father Ignatius. This monk of the Church of England is honest according to his lights. He denounces the "Higher Critics" as sceptics who eat the Church's bread. On the other hand, he has no ill words for the sceptics who honestly avow their unbelief and occupy their proper position. Father Ignatius debated with Bradlaugh, and always respected his integrity:—

> "In the summer of 1872 Father Ignatius wrote to Mr. Bradlaugh, asking that an opportunity might be given him to address an audience of London Freethinkers. This request was readily acceded to; but, in consequence of other work and ill-health, Father Ignatius was obliged to delay the delivery of this address until the end of November. The Hall of Science, which was put at his disposal, was crowded right out to the street, and it was estimated that at least two thousand persons were unable to gain admittance. Mr. Austin Holyoake presided over what was really an informal debate. Father Ignatius elected to speak on 'Jesus Christ, the Central Point of Human History,' and when he had finished Mr. Bradlaugh spoke for an equal time in reply. The audience, densely crowded as it was, listened intently and earnestly, and the perfect stillness maintained during both speeches was broken only by applause. Not a sound of dissent was heard; each speaker was listened to with respect and attention. At the conclusion Father Ignatius was thanked by the Freethinkers for the fearlessness and the courtesy with which he had spoken, and the audience were thanked by the Rev. Father for the fairness with which they had listened to him. He said 'he would be happy if his Protestant fellow-Christians would receive him with equal fairness.'"

Digitized by Google

"As he desired to reply to Mr. Bradlaugh's speech, Father Ignatius fixed to go again to the Hall of Science on December 12; but when the day arrived there was some doubt whether he could get there, as he had been subpœnaed to Worcester as a witness. In consequence of this the attendance was not quite so overwhelming as before. When Father Ignatius entered the Hall he was welcomed with much cheering, which was cordially renewed when he rose to speak. Before entering upon his subject, he said that he had received permission from Mr. Bradlaugh and the Chairman (Mr. Austin Holyoake) to ask God to aid him that night; but even with that permission he would not do so, for he had no wish to hurt anyone's susceptibilities, unless the meeting also gave its sanction. Those present having signified their assent by a show of hands, Father Ignatius, 'in an impassioned prayer, sought the assistance of God to render his address effectual.' Then proceeding to the business of the evening, he deftly—if not very convincingly—explained away the objections which had been urged by Mr. Bradlaugh to certain Biblical passages. As before, he was followed by Mr. Bradlaugh, and both apparently spoke with great force. In the spring of 1873 there was held a third of these informal controversies. On every occasion a charge was made for admission, and the proceeds given, by Father Ignatius' desire, to the Hall of Science building fund. His frankness, fearlessness, and courtesy made an indelible impression upon the minds of the frequenters of the Hall. To Mr. Bradlaugh he always wrote in terms of the greatest cordiality, and, although the differences between them were of the widest possible kind, I am quite sure that my father was sensible of this kindly feeling and reciprocated it."

The National Secular Society.

A special chapter is devoted to the National Secular Society, which Bradlaugh founded, and the presidency of which he held, except for one slight interval, till within twelve months of his death. With regard to his resignation of this office, Mrs. Bonner writes:—

> "To be a real President of the National Secular Society involved the performance of a vast amount of labor, the greater part of which was unrecognised and unseen. This he felt had become beyond his powers; it was not in him to bear the name and let others do the work; in giving up the duties of his position he must also give up the honors. Only those who knew the pride he always felt in holding this office of President of the associated Freethinkers of the nation knew the pain it cost him to lay that office down."

The present writer knows the truth of the first sentence, and he is profoundly convinced of the truth of the second part of the paragraph. Mrs. Bonner relates how her father first intimated his determination to resign the presidency. He was lying in his bed in his study, and, after being very quiet for some time, he startled her by suddenly saying that he would send in his resignation. She tried to argue the matter with him, but his mind was made up; however, he promised to make a statement that should leave no one in doubt as to his opinions. Those who heard that statement when he did resign, on his return from India, will remember it while life endures.

Mrs. Bonner's Last Chapter.

Mrs. Bonner's last chapter of her father's biography is inexpressibly touching. It is written with beautiful simplicity; a daughter's deathless love shines purely through every page. Some parts are too sacred for criticism; one feels in reading them that he is viewing the veiled things of life. The only proper attitude before them is silent reverence.

How well do we recollect that foggy November night when Bradlaugh delivered his last lecture. We took the chair on that occasion. Bradlaugh was obviously ill, and should have been in bed; but he would lecture, as the proceeds were to go to the testimonial which was being raised for Mr. Robert Forder, the secretary of the National Secular Society. He criticised "The Evidence for the Gospels," with special reference to Dr. Watkins's Bampton Lectures. His platform career began and ended with the advocacy of Freethought.

Bradlaugh's Atheism.

Many quotations are given by Mrs. Bonner from early and late speeches of her father, showing the consistency of his attitude as an Atheist. Over and over again he said that he would be a fool to make the unqualified assertion, "There is no god"—which involves the pretension of infinite knowledge. He asked for a definition of "god" before he would discuss; on hearing which he would not hesitate to say "Yes" or "No" as to the existence of such a being. Bradlaugh declared, to begin with, that he knew of no definition of God which was not self-contradictory. He called himself an Atheist and objected to "Agnostic," for reasons which Mr. Robertson sets forth with power and precision. And it was a distinction that Bradlaugh was honest to his fellow-men as he was to his own intelligence. Mr. Robertson does not (he could not) praise too highly the "energy and persistence with which he sought to bring his philosophy home to the popular mind." Mr. Robertson bravely vindicates Bradlaugh's followers from the charges of "vulgarity and illiteracy," and remarks that most of those who prefer this charge are not Atheists "for economical reasons." "Bradlaugh's artisan followers," he maintains, "have for the most part been the pick of their class for intelligence and energy." A further service to Bradlaugh's memory is done by Mr. Robertson in giving excellent passages from his writings and debates, showing that while his blows were heavy they were always delivered according to the exactest rules of combat. Bradlaugh always tried to answer what his opponent had really said, though the fairness was not often reciprocated. But then he understood his opponents, who were often incapable of understanding him.

Social Heresy.

Forcibly enough, though with prolixity, does Mr. Robertson defend Bradlaugh from the absurd charge of "Free Love." His Christian enemies dishonestly tried to make out that he endorsed all the opinions of the Elements of Social Science, although he had written that "it contains some points of ethics from which I expressly and strongly dissent." Mr. Robertson points out that "his own sad experience never made him decry marriage." The sexual freedom he wished to see was the freedom of legal divorce. No one, indeed, was less likely than Bradlaugh to subscribe to the doctrine that men and women should come together and part with the "freedom" of animals. He was too chivalrous to women, and too tender to children, to feel anything but horror at the thought of plunging them back into the old slough of degradation and misery. It may be that he never read Milton. We do not know. But we are sure that he was of a nature to feel the force of that terrible phrase, "Lust hard by Hate."

Bradlaugh was a convinced and earnest Malthusian, and Mr. Cotter Morison thought the fact a great distinction. "Mr. Bradlaugh," he wrote, in the Preface to The Service of Man, "with a courage which will no doubt be acknowledged after his death and when the fight is won, has borne the penalty of appearing as a champion of common sense and human well-being." Mr. John Morley may feel the same thing, but he has never spoken so bravely. It was not Bradlaugh's way to shirk danger or to hide the truth. He labored for his convictions, though he had to bear a tremendous penalty. There can be little doubt that his Malthusianism, perhaps more than his Atheism, brought upon him that long struggle with the House of Commons, from which he emerged victorious, but so broken in body that all that was left him was to die amidst a chorus of plaudits, including the voices of his murderers.

Digitized by Google

The Great Struggle.

Mr. Robertson's long history of "The Parliamentary Struggle," as we have already said, is a very valuable piece of work. Step by step he follows Bradlaugh in this great contest, and shows that he was the one man in the turmoil who knew his own mind and acted with unswerving consistency. There is a good description of the ejectment of Bradlaugh from the House of Commons, though some dramatic points are missed. That was the acme of the excitement, but it seems to us that the psychological climax was when Bradlaugh made his third speech at the Bar of the House. "If I am not fit for my constituents," he ended, "they shall dismiss me, but you never shall. The grave alone shall make me yield." The language was characteristic of the man. Words so simple, direct, and pregnant had not been used in politics since the days of the great Rebellion. They remind us of Cromwell's "Cease your fooling, sir, and come down," and "Take away that bauble."

It was a difficult task to follow Bradlaugh through all the litigation of this struggle, but Mr. Robertson has achieved it with eminent success. Here and there a point is missed, which is natural on the part of one who was not an eyewitness of the proceedings. Mr. Robertson does not notice an important fact which we drew attention to in our account of the "blasphemy" prosecution. Bradlaugh could not induce Justices Field and Stephen to quash his indictment, but they agreed to strike out two counts, which covered numbers of the Freethinker that were to him the most serious, and for which he could not be proceeded against again in consequence of the six months' limitation. We might also take exception to stray sentences about the Freethinker, but it is hardly worth while, as "taste" is proverbially a barren theme for discussion.

Mr. Robertson compares Bradlaugh with Wilkes, to the advantage of the former. Both fought for English freedom, but Bradlaugh was stainless and Wilkes was corrupt, though he had, as Mr. Robertson says, the "merit of geniality."

"Closing years" is the title of Mr. Robertson's final chapter, giving a succinct account of Bradlaugh's parliamentary work and various debates, especially on Socialism. The "Conclusion" is an eloquent panegyric. Mr. Robertson remarks that, beside the common run of reformers, Bradlaugh "stands out as one of larger mould and greater fibre, a battling and conquering Titan, sure of the sympathetic retrospect of happier days." "His sagacity never ceased to be heroic, and his commanding powers rested on a character more commanding still." "The bronze bust on his tomb," he concludes, "recalling as it does the high front and the unflinching eye which his friends loved to associate with him, and seeming as it does to face fate with an immovable strength and firmness, will for many a year say to passers-by what has been sought to be told in these pages, 'This was a man.'"

G. W. FOOTE.

BRUTAL ATHEISTS.

"Not one man in a thousand has either strength of mind or goodness of heart to be an Atheist. I repeat it. Not one man in ten thousand has goodness of heart or strength of mind to be an Atheist.

"And, were I not a Christian, and that only in the sense in which I am a Christian, I should be an Atheist with Spinoza; rejecting all in which I found insuperable difficulties, and resting my only hope in the gradual, and certain because gradual, progression of the species."—Samuel Taylor Coleridge, "Letters, Conversations, and Recollections of S. T. Coleridge," by Thomas Allsop, p. 47.

We all know the ideal Atheist of fiction. He is usually a low-browed, ugly wretch, devoid of sense, sensibility, conscience, or compunction, a sort of Iago and Caliban rolled into one. Gillespie said the Atheist was a monster created by nature in a moment of madness. The good and pious Dr. Hall declared Atheism a "base, bloody, and ferocious system"; and even the genial Professor Stuart Blackie calls it "an abnormal disease." To Atheists themselves such descriptions seem supremely ridiculous. It is not surprising that misconceptions of Atheists and of Atheism abound. In the past, religion was so bound up with the social order that anyone who questioned it was felt as an alien, possibly a dangerous traitor to the interests of the commonweal. Ancient gods being tribal chiefs, their acceptance was a condition of tribal unity, their rejection a sign of antagonism to the tribe. Every Jew was bound to kill "the wife of thy bosom or thy friend which is as thy own soul," if they enticed to the worship of other gods (Dent. xiii.). Though, as Bacon notices, "Atheism did never perturb States," the denial of the gods of one's country was, in former times, considered equivalent to treason.

An interested class maintain the notion when without any shadow of justification. The enemies of their order and their beliefs, they easily persuade themselves, are enemies of God, and, of course, enemies of man. Nothing is too vile to say of an Atheist. Even those destitute of faith, but afraid of scepticism, draw the line at Atheism. You may safely call yourself Agnostic or Positivist; but, if you say you are an Atheist, you have made it clear you reject the core of supernaturalism upon which all superstitions depend, and you have thus committed the mysterious sin that hath never forgiveness, neither in this world nor in that which is to come. "Admit a God—all other mysteries cease," said the poet Young; and if you refuse to admit this primal mystery, you may well be considered hopeless for the reception of any other.

I have made it my business to study the lives of some Atheists, and I have never been able to discover the brutal Atheists of whom I have read in fictions and sermons. Courage and tenderness, I should say, were their prominent characteristics. Shelley, whose voice was ever raised against the privileged and in favor of the oppressed; who, when the British code of law was written in blood, protested against capital punishment, and who lived on bread and raisins that he might be no party to the butchering of animals, was a brutal Atheist. Bentham, the soul of benevolence, whose life-long efforts were directed to the amelioration of the law, and the promotion of the greatest happiness of the greatest number, was another. Clifford, whose every pulse throbbed with the enthusiasm of humanity, and who was beloved by the whole circle of his friends and pupils, another. Harriet Martineau, who, deprived of hearing, smell, and taste, used all her faculties in the pursuit of truth, and spent her life in enlightening and elevating her fellows, acting as a pioneer of woman's emancipation, became another. And even before she herself embraced Atheism, she gave this testimony that the best state of mind was to be found, however it might be accounted for, in those who were called philosophical Atheists. "I know several of that class," she wrote, "some avowed, and some not; and I had for several years felt that they were among my most honored acquaintances and friends; and now that I know them more deeply and thoroughly, I must say that, for conscientiousness, sincerity, integrity, seriousness, effective intellect, and the true religious spirit, I knew nothing like them."

Very similar was the testimony of the late Professor Tyndall, while himself disclaiming the appellation of Atheist. In the Fortnightly Review of November, 1877, he wrote:—

"If I wished to find men who are scrupulous in their adherence to engagements, whose words are their bond, and to whom moral shiftiness of any kind is subjectively unknown; if I wanted a loving father, a faithful husband, an honorable neighbor and a just citizen, I would seek him among the band of Atheists to which I refer. I have known some of the most pronounced amongst them, not only in life, but in death—seen them approaching with open eyes the inexorable goal, with no dread of a 'hangman's whip,' with no hope of a heavenly crown, and still as mindful of their duties, and as faithful in the discharge of them, as if their eternal future depended upon their latest deeds."

I have personally met Mr. H. G. Atkinson, who had so much influence over Miss Martineau, and I found him in the best sense of the term "a perfect gentleman"—a phrase always recalling another dead Atheist friend, the late Mr. W. J. Birch, author of The Philosophy and Religion of Shakespeare, who was saint-like in generosity and in gentleness.

It has been my good fortune to know a great many Atheists of several nationalities, a few famous ones, others well known, and many unknown outside their narrow circle. I have met Atheists of all kinds—the jolly Atheist, the pessimistic Atheist, the impulsive Atheist, the cool, calculating Atheist, the genial Atheist, the cynical Atheist; but the brutal Atheist I have never met. Mr. Bradlaugh, who, finding every man's hand against him, was "ever a fighter," taking keen delight in the blows he gave his adversaries, was considered so by those who felt his lash. Yet he was as sensitive as a child, and melted in a moment at any story of suffering or wrong. He could so powerfully raise feeling because he deeply felt.

Digitized by Google

Another Atheist I had the honor of knowing, intimately in her later years, was the brave opponent to slavery, Ernestine Louise Rose. She was as large-hearted and as tender as she was brave, delighting in relieving want, and, above all, in ministering to the happiness of children. It was in no spirit of boast, but in absolute truth she said, in her Defence of Atheism: "Though I cannot believe in your God, whom you have failed to demonstrate, I believe in man. If I have no faith in your religion, I have faith, unbounded, unshaken faith, in the principles of right, of justice, and humanity. Whatever good you are willing to do for the sake of your God, I am full as willing to do for the sake of man."

I have known Atheists to whom their Atheism has been as the mainspring of their humanity. When they have given up the vain service of a God who cannot need their worship, they have first fully realised the need of serving man. The conviction that there was no supernatural eye to pity, no superhuman arm to save, has intensified their desire to be somewhat of a human providence to those around them. When they resigned the vain hope of personal immortality, they have the more clearly seen that what of good there is to be done must be done here and now; they have more strongly felt the call to work while it is day, for the night cometh wherein no man can work.

So generally have I found Atheists large-hearted, as well as clear-headed, that whenever I find a man or a woman bold enough to say "I am an Atheist" I feel pretty confident there is a character as tender as courageous. Such is my testimony. Let it be taken for what it is worth. If, at any time, an omnipotent deity were pleased to illumine me with a demonstration of his, her, or its existence, I should wish it to stand. Indeed, were I a Theist, I should be constrained to change the tactic of polemic against Atheism. I should then, perhaps, suggest that the Atheist, instead of being callous, rather suffered from over-sensitiveness, and that it was his too tender feeling which prevented him from seeing that God, acting by general laws, now using fire to warm the frozen and anon to burn the helpless, was nevertheless acting for the best. If creed be any test of callousness, surely the hard-hearted must be those who hold that in a world such as this, where misery abounds, where the welfare of the few is based on the destitution of the many, and where accident, sickness, and death may at any moment cast a blight on love, all is under the personal rule and supervision of an omnipotent Creator.

J. M. WHEELER.

WAS CHRIST A POLITICAL AND SOCIAL REFORMER?

ALTHOUGH Thomas Carlyle has said that "in these days it is professed that hero-worship has gone out and finally ceased," thousands of the professed followers of Christ idolise his memory to such an extent that they appear to be entirely oblivious of any defect either in his character or in his teachings. They regard their hero as having been the very embodiment of truth, virtue, and perfection; and those persons who are compelled to doubt the correctness of these assumptions are regarded by orthodox believers as most unreasonable and perverse members of society. Probably the principal cause why such erroneous and extravagant notions are entertained of one who, according to the New Testament, was very little, if at all, superior to other religious heroes can be accounted for by the fact that the worshippers of Christ were taught in their childhood to reverence him as an absolutely perfect character, and as being beyond criticism. Thus youthful impressions resulted in fancied creations which, in matured life, have been accepted as realities. The Rev. James Cranbrook recognised this truth, for in the preface to his work, The Founders of Christianity (page 5), he observes: "Our own idealisations have invested him (Jesus) with a halo of spiritual glory, that by the intensity of its brightness conceals from us the real figure presented in the Gospels. We see him, not as he is described, but as the ideally perfect man our own fancies have conceived. But let any one sit down and critically analyse the sayings and doings ascribed to Jesus in the Gospels—let him divest his mind of the superstitious fear of irreverence, and then ask himself whether all those sayings and doings are in harmony with the highest wisdom speaking for all ages and races of mankind, and with the conceptions of an absolutely perfect human nature, and I am mistaken if he will not find a very great deal he will be forced to condemn."

Even the sons of Labor, the apostles of Democracy, and the advocates of Socialism appear disposed to adopt Jesus as their Patron Saint. Conjectures are being constantly made by professed modern reformers as to what the Carpenter of Nazareth would say upon the many political and social questions that agitate the public mind in this the latter half of the nineteenth century. These hero-worshippers seem to overlook the apathy of Jesus in respect to the evils of his own time. Of course, it is not difficult for an impartial observer to learn why the name of Christ is invoked to support the various schemes that are now put forward to aid the regeneration of society.

However little Christianity is practised among us, it is extensively professed, and it is thought by many a virtue to assume a belief, whether there are sufficient grounds for doing so or not. This slavish adherence to fashion is an undignified prostration of mental freedom and independence, and it is also a fruitful source of the perpetuation of error. My purpose in examining the claims set up for Jesus as a political and social reformer is to ascertain if the records of his life, doings, and teachings justify such claims. If Jesus were judged as an ordinary man, living nearly two thousand years ago, my present task would be unnecessary. If we assume that such a man once lived, and that what he said and did is accurately reported, he should, in my opinion, be considered as a youth possessing but limited education, surrounded by unfavorable influences for intellectual acquirements, belonging to a race not very remarkable for literary culture, retaining many of the failings of his progenitors, and having but little regard for the world or the things of the world. Viewed under these circumstances, I could, while excusing many of his errors, recognise and admire something that is praiseworthy in the life of "Jesus of Nazareth." But when he is raised upon a pinnacle of greatness, as an exemplar of virtue and wisdom, surpassing the production of any age or country, he is then exalted to a position which he does not merit, and which, to my mind, deprives him of that credit which otherwise he would, perhaps, be entitled to.

The contentions which it is my purpose to dispute are: that Jesus was a political and social reformer, and that his alleged teachings contain the remedies for the wrongs of modern society. Before directly dealing with these points it may be necessary to glance at the various aspects of reform that have, at different times in our national history, been presented to the community; also to briefly consider the nature of the required reforms, and some of the principal methods that have been adopted to secure them.

In quite primitive ages important struggles took place to establish greater equality in the conditions of life. In the time of Moses, according to the Bible, the land, for instance, was not merely the subject of "tracts for the times," but the laws and regulations relating to it were practically dealt with. It did not, however, cease to be property, and its inheritance was recognised as a rightful thing. The stock-in-trade of many modern reformers is the denunciation of those who "add house to house, field to field, and grind the faces of the poor." If this condemnation is one of the many features of Socialism, then Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel may, in this particular, be fairly termed Socialists—a name foreign to their language and to the ideas of their day.

The contention with some is, that Christ was a successor to all these prophets, that he took the same kind of objection as they did to the then existing state of things, and that he used the same form of speech in denouncing them. The general reply to this is, that Christ was, if anything, only a prophetic reformer, not a real one. In proof of this many facts in his alleged history may be cited. For instance, he did not rescue the land from the control of the Romans, who held it from the people very much in the same way as landholders do now; he did not attempt to render any aid to the laborers of Rome, who in his day were resisting the injustice of the capitalists; he did not deliver his brethren of "the royal house" from their foreign rulers; he did not redeem the Jews from their social evils, or restore justice to their nation. In a word, he entirely failed to do the reforming work that was expected of him. About the year 1825 the "Christian Socialists of London" called special attention to the question of land as regulated by Moses, and the living in common by the early Christians; but no practical issue arose out of the discussion. From that period down to the present the same subject has been more or less agitated, and still the matter is very far from being settled. Now, if it is alleged that Christ sought to bring about a just settlement of the land problem, then the existence of the present oppressive land laws proves that he failed, and that his most devout followers have been equally unfortunate. If Christ had been a practical reformer, we should not have in our midst the deplorable injustice, the wrongs, and the inequalities that now afflict society. These evils and drawbacks—the growth of centuries during which Christianity was in power—will doubtless be lessened, if not altogether destroyed; but the work will be achieved by a moral revolution, inaugurated and conducted by men who will possess ability and experience that it is evident Jesus never had.

Digitized by Google

It must be borne in mind that there are two kinds of revolution—one that is gradual and intellectual, and therefore useful; the other that is sudden, born of passion, and therefore often useless as an important factor in securing permanent reforms. We know that every change of thought, or condition of things, involves a revolution which, if controlled by reason and regulated by the lessons of experience, must aid rational progress, and tend to build up a State, and secure its permanence. But there is another kind of revolution, which is sought to be produced by Nihilism and Anarchism, both of which aim at the destruction of the State. I am not in favor of either of these "isms," believing, as I do, that in our present condition of society some form of government is necessary. Law and order, based upon the national will, and the principle of justice, appear to me to be essential in any scheme that is accepted for the purpose of furthering the political and social progress of the world. Then we have Socialism, which concerns itself with economic, ethical, political, and industrial questions. The principal subject, however, dealt with by Socialists is the accumulation and distribution of wealth. State Socialism dates from time of the eminent French writer, Claude, H. Count de St. Simon, whose works were published in 1830. He tried to secure the amelioration of the condition of the poor, and aimed at the organisation of labor and the distribution of the fruits of industry, upon the principle of every man being rewarded according to his works. Socialism is, in fact, an attempt (whether it is the best that could be made is with some persons a debateable point) to regulate the social relations, making them more equal than they are at present, either by individual combination, by municipal or co-operative action, by a philanthropic policy of the Church, or by the control of the State. This last phase of the Socialistic scheme means the complete regulation by law of the equality of individuals, the State being the owner of the land, and of all the instruments of industry that are at present possessed by individuals, public companies, etc., who now regulate, in their own interest, production and distribution.

Having thus briefly stated the general conceptions and aims of political and social reformers, the next step is to inquire in what relation Jesus stands to any or all of them. Of course there is only one source of information upon the subject at our command—that of the four Gospels. From these it will not be difficult to demonstrate that Jesus was no mundane reformer. Although he was surrounded by poverty, slavery, oppression, and mental degradation, he made no effort to rid society of these curses to humanity. As John Stuart Mill observes, in his work upon Liberty (pp. 28, 29), in referring to Christian morality: "I do not scruple to say of it that it is, in many important points, incomplete and one-sided, and that, unless ideas and feelings, not sanctioned by it, had contributed to the formation of European life and character, human affairs would have been in a worse condition than they now are."

CHARLES WATTS.

(To be continued.)

THE WORLD AND THE WORLD.

If all the world must see the world
As the world the world hath seen,
Then it were better for the world
That the world had never been.

Yet if the world could see the world
As the world the world might see,
Then a happier world than this old world
Perhaps could never be.

Oh, world that lives upon the world!
You travel far too slow!
Oh, world! green grave of the worlds,
How wondrous swift you go.

CHARLES GODFREY LELAND.

ACID DROPS.

PREBENDARY EYTON says that the most intellectually alive of all forms of Socialistic thought is Christian Socialism—which is a very poor compliment to the Fabians and Social Democrats. Christian Socialism, it appears, is drawing together the heart and intellect of the day, and the glory of the Lord is being revealed. But we have heard of all that before. The glory of the Lord is always being revealed, and many gentlemen like Prebendary Eyton earn a good income by revealing it. The only solid thing in the business is the income.

"Nil Desperandum" writes to the Weekly Times, complaining of a North Wilts parson, who has an income of £900 a year, and is eloquent in his exhortations to the poor to be charitable. When the squire gave some books to the Reading Room, the parson collared the lot for himself, on the ground that they were too good for the villagers. Evidently they were not sermons.

James Bishop, of New Swindon, couldn't stand the Salvation Army band. Financial worries had made him sleepless, and he wanted rest and quiet; so he went out and asked the band to stop. Stop! Perish the thought! They were playing for the good of his immortal soul. Which was all very well, but James Bishop's mortal body could stand the row no longer. He therefore cut his throat with a penknife. Where he is now is a matter of conjecture. It is to be hoped, however, that the poor fellow is not in heaven; for the Salvation band plays there for ever and ever, and you can't escape it by means of penknives or prussic acid.

Dr. Danford Thomas, the Islington coroner, held an inquest on the body of Francis Eleanor Ottignon, who committed suicide by taking laudanum. In a letter to a friend she wrote, "I hope God will forgive me," and ended with the ejaculation, "May God help me." He didn't.

Just as service was being commenced last Sunday, the parish Church of St. Columb, Cornwall, was struck by lightning. The congregation had little faith in God's preservation of his own house, and rushed panic stricken from the church, the service being brought abruptly to a close.

In the Expositor for January, Archdeacon Farrar has a very unsatisfactory paper on "The Sinai Palimpsest of the Syriac Gospels." He admits this exhibits "the oldest Syriac text hitherto known," but tries to argue for the orthodoxy of the statement that Joseph begat Jesus, because it says he was "the husband of the Virgin Mary." Now, we want to know, if the word "virgin" was part of the primitive text how it got left out of all the Greek copies? To our mind, this suggests forcibly that the word "virgin" is a later insertion, for the virginity of Mary was no more known to Paul than recognised by the Ebionites.

The Tablet (January 5) has a more scholarly article on the same Gospels. It considers it certain that "the hypotheses of an heretical corruption must be excluded," but points to the fact that Philo believed, "wrongly, of course," that Sarah, Rebecca, Leah, and Sepporah conceived by divine operation, without the intervention of a man; though declared in Scripture to have born children, not to God, but to their husbands. Altogether, the Syriac vindication of the honor of Mary and the paternity of Joseph is causing a pretty fluttering in the theological dovecots.

The Report of the Archbishop of Canterbury's Commission on the Voluntary Schools suggests that it will be better policy to apply for aid to the imperial than to the local expenditure. This is, of course, to obviate the possibility of local control. With the immense amount already given to voluntary schools from imperial taxation, there ought to be increased public control. The Committee fail to observe that the trend of modern legislation is towards decentralisation and the investing of municipalities and other local authorities with increased powers of dealing with their own affairs.

Digitized by Google

It appears that the Education Department has already, in some cases, held that the teaching of the Apostles' Creed in Board schools is not an infraction of Section 14, directed against distinctive catechisms and formularies. The question is, however, more distinctly raised than before by the appeal of the Rochford School Board, and an authoritative judgment will have to be given.

Our jovial exchange, the Western Figaro, is responsible for the following: "At the morning service in the prison chapel, on a recent Sunday, the first hymn given out was the one beginning:—

> This is the house of prayer
> Where we, Thy servants, meet,
> And Thou, O Lord, are here,
> Thy chosen band to greet.

The congregation consisted of a particularly fine and large collection of thieves, burglars, and scoundrels of every description."

This reminds us of a text chosen by the chaplain of Colney Hatch Asylum, on the Sunday when the female inmates first appeared in the splendor of new bonnets with pink ribbons and Rob Roy tartan shawls. The words he chose were: "Even Solomon, in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of these."

A. A. Isaacs, a perverted Hebrew, writes in the English Churchman against the gratuitous circulation—except in special cases—of the New Testament Scriptures in Hebrew. He mentions that an Israelite in New York confessed that he had been in the habit of collecting the Hebrew New Testaments of Salkinson, gratuitously circulated, and committing them to the flames.

A person calling himself Father Benedict Elliott, O.S.B., and representing himself as a son of Lord Minto, has been sent to prison at Rome for frauds on ecclesiastics.

A coroner's inquest was held on the body of Anne Knight, who died in the Salvation Army shelter at Spitalfields. She paid twopence for a bunk, but no covering was provided, and her own rags were not enough to keep her from freezing. One of the jurymen said it was "a disgrace." Such shelters ought not to be allowed, in his opinion; what was the use of a bunk without a covering? And echo answers, "What?"

L. Nabokoff, a Mohammedan Russian, is conducting a Society for the Study of Islam at New York. He is reported, in the New York Herald, as saying that "his reason for embracing Islam was that he could see no reason for a man who keeps his eyes open accepting the religion of Christianity. Its followers are like a lot of sheep who jump over a log which may be in their path, but when the log is removed continue to jump over the place where it had been, simply because it had been their custom to do so, and because they did not use intelligence, if they possessed any. In former days ministers used to jump over dogmas, such as the Immaculate Conception, although such dogmas were kicked out of the way by Mohammed 1,250 years ago. Ministers are still jumping."

M. Nabokoff then referred to the priestcraft in Christianity as the common trick "by which a few unscrupulous men have fastened themselves on you, and are living off your sustenance, doing work only one day in the week."

According to Professor Kapteyn, of Groningen, our sun is but a member of an immense cluster of stars, and outside this cluster, at a much greater distance from us than the stars of the solar cluster, lies a considerably richer ring-shaped cluster, the light of which, reduced to nebulosity by immensity of distance, produces the Milky Way gleam of our midnight skies. Yet we are to suppose that the author of this got born in a corner of Palestine, and put the support of the boy's maintenance on a Jewish carpenter.

Referring to the agitation against atrocities in Armenia, the Crescent notices the lynching and other outrages by Christian whites on Christian negroes in the Southern States, and asks why don't the goody-goody Christians get up an agitation over this matter.

The Crescent reports that, as has been the custom since 1888, "the Liverpool Muslims celebrated the reputed birthday of the prophet Christ by feeding several hundred of his followers, whom their brother Christians permitted to starve on the day when, according to their superstitious notions, their Man-God was born!" A little fact like this should make Christians ashamed of condemning the followers of Islam, and open their eyes to the truth that the only religion worth having is one which dictates the service of humanity.

In the Open Court Aziz-ud-din Ahmad, writing on "The Future of Islam," says: "The future of Islam is ensured by the humanity or kindness of its followers towards one another. Colleges are open to all. No caste; no distinction of race. One god, one people. There is more self-sacrifice and less paper boast with the propagation of Islam than of Christianity."

Mr. Samuel Legier, of Newton Abbot, has had a cheap shillingsworth. Mr. Legier is a son-in-law of a Mrs. Hellier, who is buried in the parish churchyard of Hennock. He has made repeated appeals to the Rev. F. J. L. Gillman, the vicar of Hennock, to permit the grave to be re-turfed and the tombstone replaced. But the man of God refused to allow any graves of Dissenters to be turfed over. Mr. Legier made a last appeal to him on Sunday, and, on being refused, thrashed the vicar with a stick. He was summoned for assault, and fined one shilling and costs.

Nellie Laws, late a preacher of the Salvation Army, is now imprisoned for three months with hard labor. Sergeant Nursey said she lived by religious imposture for years. She pretended to be the daughter of a clergyman.

The Rev. Henry J. Dodwell, who has been confined in Broadmoor Lunatic Asylum for nearly seventeen years for shooting at the then Master of the Rolls, has, through his solicitor, made an appeal to the Home Secretary for the restoration of his liberty. The Home Secretary has sent a reply, stating that he has made inquiries, but regrets that he cannot authorise the patient's discharge from the asylum, as he is still insane, and could not be released without risk.

One of the Episcopal clergy at the Edinburgh English Cathedral has much roused theological ire by declaring that the Presbyterian organisations around are not branches of the Church of Jesus Christ. An angry correspondence ensued, and the Bishop has been asked to reprimand the clergyman, which he has declined to do. They are a happy family.

Mr. Thomas Williams, sub-inspector of schools, sends to the Spectator some answers received from a village school in Radnorshire. Asked who was the greatest man of the present time, they answered, "The rector, sir." Asked in what respect they considered the rector greater than Mr. Gladstone, they answered, "Please, sir, the rector is M.A., and Mr. Gladstone is only M.P." Inspector—"But how is an M.A. greater than an M.P.?" Children—"An M.A. is A1, sir." Inspector—"Yes?" Children—"Please, sir, nobody can be higher than A1." Evidently the rector is a little god almighty in his own district.

A story told of the late C. Baring, Bishop of Durham, who lived in great state and died leaving £120,000, comes in apropos of our cartoon. It is said that when he was asked for his favorite text he said it was, "Jesus Christ for our sakes became poor, that we, through his poverty, might be rich."

About two hundred lives have been lost from the Humber alone during the recent gales. At Heligoland part of the town has been washed away; while in Hungary and Silesia snowfalls have stopped railway communication, and there are reports of persons being caught in the storm and frozen to death. Providence is sleeping, or, peradventure, on a journey.

The cold weather has not eradicated cholera from Russia, for the Odessa correspondent of the Daily News says: "According to the latest official weekly cholera bulletin, there were 655 cases and 279 deaths in the twenty governments of European Russia. In the government of Podolia alone there were 473 cases and 173 deaths."

How faith will cling to a shadow is illustrated in a poem by the Rev. Newman Hall, in his just-published Lyrics of a Long Life. It is entitled "Prayer Answered in Disappointment":—

> "One jewel more," I cried, "to make me glad:"
> He took the one I had.
> "Come quickly, Lord, and heal this wounded heart:"
> Still more He made it smart.
> "At length from trouble bid my soul repose:"
> Yet thicker came the blows.

He asks, "Why in my portion mix such bitter leaven?" and gives the answer, "To fit thee more for heaven." So we are to suppose it is all for the best if a man loses all his beloved ones, "cut off in the midst of their sins" mayhap, so long as he is thereby fitted for heaven. A good deal of selfish vanity seems to underlie this faith and resignation.

Digitized by Google

The Rev. Walter Walsh writes in the Contemporary on the Labor Church, under the title of "The New Secularism." He affects to consider the old Secularism as dead, and says: "Higher Criticism and the New Theology have taken the wind out of the sails of Ingersoll and Foote." If this is, so it is not because we have changed our course, but because they have come upon our tack. Secularism stands where it did, but the Churches are bound to come in its direction under pain of being deserted by the secular spirit of the age. Mr. Walsh himself bears testimony to this when he complains that even the Labor Church "breaks with the past, belittles the future, and casts its vote for the present."

It appears from Willick's Tithe Commutation Tables that £100 of tithe rent-charge will be worth in 1895 but £73 13s. 0½d., or a reduction of over 26 per cent. The average value during the fifty-nine years which have elapsed since the passing of the Tithe Commutation Act is £98 17s. 10½d.; so the clergy have not done so badly on the whole, though they are grumbling, as usual.

The late Rev. G. W. Herbert, vicar of St. Peter's, Vauxhall, left personal estate amounting to upwards of £122,000. A nice little sum to begin the next world with; but how hardly shall they that have riches enter the kingdom of heaven.

The Rev. C. Garrett states that a rich Wesleyan has offered a good round sum to the Ministers' Retirement Fund, on condition that preachers consent to burn their old sermons. Probably he fancies they are often resurrected, and cremation is the best preventive of resurrection.

The recent American Church Congress was chiefly notable by the attempt to urge a boycott on the Sunday papers. The attempt is manifestly only dictated by trade rivalry, for the Sunday paper is prepared during the week, and only the Monday paper occasions Sunday work. As the Monday issue occasionally reports the ministerial sermons, there is never any mention of boycotting that.

Here is a rustic idyll from East Anglia. A London tripper encountered a venerable individual working among the graves in the churchyard, and, giving him good-day, said, "I suppose you are one of the Church officials?" "Ficials, sir," he answered; "why, lawk, I don't know what I deu be. When Parson Brown came he say I were the sextant. Then Parson Smith, he come and he call me the beetle. Now Mr. Jones be our parson, and he say I be the wargin."

A good story is told of a number of boys who were playing on Saturday in front of a city church. The rector suddenly came out of his parsonage and told the boys to be quiet in front of the Lord's house. "That is all right, mister," said the boys. "The Lord is not here to-day. He is down the street at the Jewish synagogue."

A Chinaman offers tinsel and gold to his god, and burns "mock money," or bits of colored paper, in idolatrous worship. The Chinee is artful. He knows that, if he made his offerings in the real metal, they would never go further than the pockets of the priests. It must be imported Chinamen who put the bad coins into the collection bags and plates about which a parson complains in a contemporary. "The offertory," says this indignant cleric, "has now become a recognised convenience for passing bad money." Alas and alack! The filthy lucre!—Reynolds's Newspaper.

R. H. Charles argues at length in the Academy that the Syriac version of Matthew i. 16, which states that Joseph, the husband of the Virgin Mary, begat Jesus, represents the original text. He says this view is steadily gaining acceptance among English and German critics.

This is the season for chestnuts, and in the Surrey pantomime an old Freethinker chestnut is introduced: "Don't you know, my good man, that drink is your worst enemy!" Inebriate—"Yes, mum; but the Bible says we are to love our enemies."

The Western Mail attributes to a Brecknockshire vicar the following story: "The incumbent of a seaside parish on the west coast of Pembrokeshire held weekly a Welsh prayer meeting, which was occasionally attended by some coast-guardsmen who understood not one single word of Welsh. For the benefit of these visitors the vicar asked one of the parishioners to pray in English. After not a little persuasion the man was induced to attempt the task, and, though he had never before prayed in English, all were agreeably surprised to find that he could do so with ease and fluency. He had prayed for a considerable time, and it was very evident to all that the poor man's great difficulty was how, and in what manner, to wind up or finish decently. He made two or three attempts, and at last, to the astonishment of all, he made a desperate effort to come to a close, saying, 'O Lord, hear our prayer; forgive us our sins, and believe me yours truly, John Jones.'"

While we are giving stories, we cannot resist offering the following one told by Truth of "a well-known Bishop": "The Bishop was one day examining a batch of deacons for priest's orders. After the theoretical part of the examination, he said to them: 'Gentlemen, you have passed a most excellent examination in theory; I should now like to see you do something practical. I shall go into the next room and personate a sick man. You will come in one by one, address me as a sick parishioner, and say something comforting.' When his lordship had retired, the candidates were in some confusion, and nobody cared to begin; but at last a mad Irishman volunteered to be the first. He entered the study, and, approaching the Bishop, who was lying with a woe-begone air on the sofa, he thus addressed him: 'Oh Anthony, Anthony! the dhrink again! Shure it will be the death of ye! Turn from your evil ways before it's too late, and be a man!' This is said to have been the last time that the Bishop held a practical examination."

Protestant open-air preaching is not an easy matter in the city of Cork. The Catholics don't like it, and they express their dislike in a tempestuous manner, by throwing mud and stones at the preachers. Of course, the Methodist Times is very angry at this state of things; but the Catholics can reply that they are served in the same way by Protestants in Belfast. Two blacks, it is true, do not make a white; and, in this case, both blacks are to the discredit of Christianity.

"Any nation," the Methodist Times says, "which prevents freedom of speech to religious teachers in the open-air is not only anti-Christian, but uncivilised, and must be ranked below the degraded Roman empire itself. Jesus Christ and his apostles were permitted to preach the Gospel in the open air all over the Roman Empire." Precisely so; and this very fact shows how much Christianity has done for freedom in nearly two thousand years.

Newcastle-on-Tyne is a fairly pious city. It hasn't as many public-houses to the square acre as some cities—for instance, Liverpool; but they are splendidly patronised, and 22 per thousand of the inhabitants get convicted every year for drunkenness.

In the early days of the Temperance movement it had no more bitter opponents than the ministers of religion. When it grew powerful they began to patronise it, and they have so nobbled it at last that a religious passport (we believe) is required by every Temperance society in the kingdom. But, somehow or other, the Temperance movement does not progress as it should under the fostering power of the Gospel. Mr. Caine boasts that there are seven million total abstainers in Great Britain and Ireland, and that the forces of Temperance were never so active as at present. Yet the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who calculated on getting £1,340,000 during the year from the additional tax on beer and spirits, has actually got £1,123,000 during nine months. And it will not do to put the increased consumption down to the "influenza," as was done when Mr. Goschen got such a handsome return from rum.

Miss Lucy Garnett, in the Nineteenth Century, has been dispelling some of the prevalent nonsense in Christian countries about the inferiority of the position of women among the Mohammedans. On the whole, their legal rights exceed those of the women in most Christian lands. Even with respect to the slaves, Miss Garnett says their lot is "preferable in many respects to that of the majority of free domestic drudges in the West."

How to Help Us.

(1) Get your newsagent to take a few copies of the Freethinker and try to sell them, guaranteeing to take the copies that remain unsold.

(2) Take an extra copy (or more), and circulate it among your acquaintances.

(3) Leave a copy of the Freethinker now and then in the train, the car, or the omnibus.

(4) Display, or get displayed, one of our contents-sheets, which are of a convenient size for the purpose. Mr. Forder will send them on application.

(5) Distribute some of our cheap tracts in your walks abroad, at public meetings, or among the audiences around street-corner preachers.

(6) Get your newsagent to exhibit the Freethinker in the window.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Foote's Engagements.

Sunday, January 6, Hall of Science, 142 Old-street, London, E.C.: 11.15, "Bradlaugh's Social and Political Teaching"; 7, "God's in His Heaven."

Wednesday, January 16, Hall of Science: 8.30, "A Night with George Meredith."

January 27, Liverpool.

February 3, Manchester.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Mr. Charles Watts's Engagements.—January 13, Leicester; 20, Nottingham; 27, Hall of Science, London. February 3, Hall of Science; 10, Camberwell; 17, Plymouth. March 3, Manchester.—All communications for Mr. Watts should be sent to him (if a reply is required, a stamped and addressed envelope must be enclosed) at 81 Effra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

Lecture Notices must reach 28 Stonecutter-street by first post Tuesday, or they will not be inserted.

E. Timewell.—You will find articles on Spiritism in the Freethinker of March 19 and July 30, 1893.

J. C. Mack (Teneriffe).—Thanks for your good wishes, which we reciprocate.

W. H. Morrish.—See paragraph. Thanks. Always glad to hear from you.

Potteries.—Mr. Foote offered the Hanley Branch a Sunday in January, or a later one if that was inconvenient, but he has received no reply. It is difficult to see what he can do more.

Mr. Foote's Fighting Fund.—R. Seago (S. Africa), £1 1s.; Mr. Horton (Kokstad, S. Africa), per R. Forder, 10s.; J. J. Crabtree, 2s. 6d.; Le Diable, 2s. 6d.

Watts Election Fund.—Mr. G. Ward, treasurer, acknowledges: C. J. Pottage, 10s.; A. Tripp, 5s.

Darius.—Pleased to know that you think our New Year's number "a splendid twopennyworth." Subscription handed to the secretary.

E. H.—The texts are open to public judgment. Mr. Watts gave his opinion of them, and of course you are free to entertain yours. It seems to us that Jesus did teach that poverty was a blessing, and wealth a curse. Lazarus went to heaven simply because he was poor; he had no other virtue; and Dives went to hell simply because he was rich.

N.S.S. Benevolent Fund.—Miss E. M. Vance acknowledges:—J. Mosenthal (Germany), 5s.; A. F., 2s. 6d.; A. Tripp, 5s.

E. D. H. Daly.—Thanks for cuttings.

J. Robinson.—If you send them on to Mr. Forder, he will pay carriage, and they will be used judiciously.

V. Page.—See paragraph. Will you communicate with us about the matter that was left standing over?

J. J. Crabtree.—We return the compliment.

E. G. Billington.—A parcel of our "Atheist Shoemaker" pamphlet shall be sent for distribution at Mr. Hughes's meeting.

T. Stubbs.—Thanks for the paper. The public is getting tired of Mrs. Besant and her Mahatmas.

William Cotsworth.—Professor Harnack, the leading German theologian, holds that the Apostles' Creed was the composition of the Church of Southern Gaul. His article was introduced to English readers by Mrs. Humphry Ward in the Nineteenth Century, about eighteen months ago. Other information will be found in the chapter on "Pious Frauds" in Crimes of Christianity. Mr. Wheeler will shortly write on the Apostles' Creed.

J. Fitch.—Mrs. Watts would have been with her husband at the Federation Dinner, but she is engaged every evening at a London theatre.

J. Brodie.—Addressed as desired.

A Young One.—Bradlaugh's "Speeches" price 5s. Order of Mr. Forder. The libel case may be tried any time between three and six weeks hence.

We have received for the Watts Election Fund: R. Seago (S. Africa), 10s.; Le Diable, 2s. 6d.

Papers Received.—The Rad—The Post—Twentieth Century—Two Worlds—Progressive Thinker—Western Figaro—Liberty—Isle of Man Times—Truthseeker—Open Court—Middlesex Express—Crescent—Secular Thought—Boston Investigator—Blue Grass Blade—Liberator—Freidenker—Fur Unsere Jugend—Rochdale Times—Torquay Times—Brighton Examiner—Daily News—Birmingham Daily Post—New Zealand Graphic—Bristol Evening News—Weekly Bulletin—Western Daily Mercury.

Friends who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish to call our attention.

Letters for the Editor of the Freethinker should be addressed to 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

The Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the publishing office, post free, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 10s. 6d.; Half Year, 5s. 3d.; Three Months, 2s. 8d.

Correspondence should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

It being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will receive the number in a colored wrapper when their subscription expires.

Orders for literature should be sent to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Scale of Advertisements.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—(Narrow Column) one inch, 3s.; half column, 15s.; column, £1 10s. Broad Column—one inch, 4s. 6d.; half column, £1 2s. 6d.; column, £2 5s. Special terms for repetitions.

THE N.S.S. MEETING.

The meeting of members of the N.S.S. at the Hall of Science, on Wednesday evening, January 2, was well attended. Mr. Foote was in the chair, and many of the vice-presidents sat on the platform. Of these there were present, Messrs. Watts, Forder, Parris, Wheeler, Truelove, Heaford, Hartmann, and Samson. Mr. Cohen, who was spending a few days in London, was also present. Mr. Foote stated why the Executive had suspended the N.S.S. affiliation to the Hall of Science Club. The hall had been let for a Boxing Contest, the program of which included professionals; and the advertisement of the performance, which was to have been followed by three others, while not illegal, was of a nature which the Executive felt bound to object to in connection with the Society's headquarters. As the Club committee could not cancel the letting, or give satisfactory assurances against a repetition, the Executive had no alternative but to clear the Society from all moral responsibility. The affiliation had therefore been suspended until a satisfactory arrangement could be arrived at. Mr. Charles Watts spoke strongly in support of the Executive's action, and moved a resolution accordingly; this was seconded by Mr. Heaford; and, after discussion, and explanations by Mr. G. Standring, the Club president, and Mr. J. Anderson, the Club secretary, was carried by an overwhelming majority. No one questioned the motives of the Club committee. It was a difference of judgment, but a difference which necessitated prompt action on the part of the Executive, in order to dissociate itself from what it disapproved. Happily we have good reason to believe that the difference will be amicably adjusted—that is, with respect to the future; and we shall doubtless be able to make a definite announcement in our next issue. We hope, also, to be then in a position to make another announcement that will, to most Freethinkers, be still more gratifying.

SUGAR PLUMS.

The London Secular Federation's seventh Annual Dinner took place on Monday evening at the Holborn Restaurant. There was a large muster of friends, the repast was excellent, and everybody had a good time. Mr. Foote, who presided, made the usual appeal for funds, with a gratifying result. A full list of donations will appear in our next issue. The toast-list included speeches by Messrs. Charles Watts, J. M. Wheeler, Touzeau Parris, H. Snell, A. B. Moss, J. Rowney, W. Heaford, and Robert Forder. All were in good form; indeed, the speeches were first-rate—witty, vivacious, and manly. They were varied with capital songs by Madame Burgwitz and Messrs. Walters and Vine. The final item was not on the program. Mr. Samson got up and proposed the toast of "The President," which "caught on" and elicited much enthusiasm. Mr. Roger seconded in an earnest speech, and the toast was drunk with honors, the whole assembly rising and singing "For he's a jolly good fellow." Mr. Foote, who was affected by this spontaneous compliment, made a suitable response; and the gathering then broke up with "Auld Lang Syne."

Mr. Foote lectured at the London Hall of Science on Sunday, and had good meetings, in spite of the dismal fog. He occupies the platform again to-day (January 13). The morning lecture will be on "Bradlaugh's Social and Political Teaching." The evening subject will be "God's in His Heaven."

Having been obliged to leave town, Mr. Foote could not give his "Night with George Meredith" on Wednesday last. He will deliver the lecture next Wednesday evening (Jan. 16). It should attract a good audience.

Mr. Charles Watts lectures to-day (Sunday, January 13), afternoon and evening, at Leicester, where he is sure to have good audiences.

Digitized by Google

Justice, noticing Messrs. Wheeler and Foote's little book on Voltaire, says: "Any one who wishes to obtain a brief but trustworthy account of this remarkable man cannot do better than purchase this book, for it bears every evidence of being a painstaking endeavor to put the great French satirist's career before the reader in as impartial a manner as possible."

The Universities are open to women in Belgium, Holland, Switzerland, Italy, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, and Iceland. Austria, Hungary, Spain, and Russia deny them. "If they will learn anything, let them ask their husbands at home" (1 Cor. xiv. 35).

The Truthseeker, in its last issue for the Old Year, gives a cartoon on "The Graveyard of the Gods." Tombstones are erected to Odin, Baal, Ormuzd, Osiris, Thor, Jove, Apollo, etc., and Father Time is digging a grave which a board announces is "reserved for Jehovah, the last and most brutal of all gods"—Christians and Jews the only mourners; Science and Education, undertakers.

In Mrs. Ireland's "Recollections of James Anthony Froude," in the January Contemporary Review, there is an anecdote of the first time Froude met Swinburne at a dinner, at which Arnold, Ruskin, and Houghton were present. "After dinner a little figure appeared, a 'boy man,' and, bounding past the guests, stood upon an ottoman so that he could well be seen. 'The lad began spouting some of his most outrageous poems,' said Froude, 'some of his very worst.' And the narrator smiled bitterly, continuing: 'We all sat in amazement till he finished, when Ruskin, making his way through the company, hurried up, and took Swinburne fairly in his arms, saying: "How beautiful! how divinely beautiful!"' Swinburne was at this time little more than a boy."

In Secular Thought Captain R. C. Adams well remarks, in reply to those who point to progress in the Churches: "The work of enlightenment must go on outside the Church, in order that a little light may get inside. The Church will never be a pioneer in progress, but will continue to adopt reforms, only in tardy response to the demands of its supporters, and only in the small degree that is necessary to save its life."

Secular Thought reprints, with acknowledgments, Mr. Wheeler's recent article on "Voltaire." It says itself of him: "There is no single man who ever lived who has done so much to enlighten and instruct his fellow men as Voltaire. There are none who cleared away so many cobwebs, dissipated so many illusions, or enunciated so many original truths as he. He was the greatest individual civilising force of all time, and he was bitterly persecuted by the Christian Church."

Mr. D. Bedford, a member of the Walthamstow Branch of the N.S.S., was returned at the head of the poll for the Northern Ward, Walthamstow District Council, at the recent election. At Hanworth, Mr. Williamson, a working man and Secularist, was elected chairman of the Parish Council.

The annual Christmas soirée and New Year's social, in connection with the South Shields Branch of the National Secular Society, were held in the Baring-street School-room. Both were highly satisfactory in every respect, and a good balance will remain to the credit of the Branch Fund. This successful result is chiefly due to the praiseworthy efforts of Messrs. G. White and D. Bow. The speakers were Messrs. Thos. Thompson and S. M. Peacock (President).

The Hull Branch held its annual meeting on Sunday. Seven new members have been enrolled during the year. The balance-sheet was encouraging. Mr. A. Adams, the present secretary, dates from 83 Spring-street.

Mr. J. Keast, 32 Morgan-street, St. Paul's, has resumed the secretaryship of the Bristol Branch. He will be pleased to hear from Freethinkers who wish to assist. It is intended to have some lectures in St. James's Hall, and some open-air meetings during the summer.

Mr. Ernest Johnson, of the Nelson School Board, lectures to-day (January 13) in the Labor Hall, Railway-street, for the local N.S.S. Branch. His subject at 3 is "Thoreau's Walden," and at 7 "The Philosophy of Secularism." Mr. Johnson, though a young man, is well read and an able speaker. We hope he will have good meetings.

James Lick, who was a Freethinker, left several millions of dollars to be expended in various public improvements and institutions. Everybody has heard of the great Observatory, on Mount Hamilton, which bears his name. A hundred thousand dollars was set aside for a California monument to be erected in front of the city hall in San Francisco. This was unveiled on November 29. Speeches were delivered by leading public men, and the children of the public schools sang patriotic songs. We believe it was James Lick who paid the whole cost of building the Paine Memorial Hall at Boston.

We see from New York papers that the "Rev." Citizen George Francis Train is announced to preach every Sunday at No. 8 Union Square Hall, on the subject of "Hell Be Damned."

In Devonport the clericals are making strenuous efforts to get the control of the School Boards in their hands. All Freethinking electors should work and vote for Mr. R. S. Smith, who has contended against the bigots in this matter.

WHO WAS THE MOTHER OF JESUS?

THERE has been no end of bother of late over that unfortunate question, overheard by Mr. Coxhead, as to who was the father of Jesus, and which our editor seems likely to settle in the series of articles now appearing in this journal. But little attention has been given to Jesus's mother. Many great men have attributed to their mothers some of the best traits in their characters; and, if it is true that the education of the child begins with the education of its mother, it may be of some little interest to Freethinkers to know what is said and known of the supposed wife of Joseph, the mother of Jesus.

It goes without saying that by what is "known" I mean what is said of her in the four Gospels; for it is self-evident, from the writings in the New Testament—some of which, according to expositors, were written before those Gospels—no mention whatever is made relating to Mary, except in Acts i., where she is represented as being present in that "upper room" with some of the Apostles and the brothers of Jesus, who, of course, were her sons. It is rather singular that John never mentions her name, and only refers to her as at the marriage feast, where Jesus says, "Woman, what have I to do with thee?" and at the crucifixion. This last reference is more than curious: "When Jesus, therefore, saw his mother, and the disciple standing by whom he loved, he saith unto his mother, Woman, behold thy son! Then saith he to the disciple, Behold thy mother! and from that hour that disciple took her to his own home" (John xix. 20).

Does it not seem somewhat singular that Mary should have been given over to John's care—for this was the disciple that "Jesus loved"—if she had her husband living (and there is no mention of his death), besides the wonder that must be excited when we know that Jesus had brothers, who certainly could not have been ignorant that Jesus was, or pretended to be, God, unless it be, as we are reminded elsewhere, that his brethren did not believe on him!

In the matter of converting his family, Jesus does not appear to have been nearly so successful as Joseph Smith was, the latter's family being soon convinced of his divine mission, and of the inspiration of the Book of Mormon. Singular, too, it is that this John should have written the life of her son, but not have mentioned her miraculous conception, or even the visits of the angel to Joseph or herself to announce it. His gospel is pretended to have been written as late as A.D. 78; but he gives us no account of her latter days or of her death. Therefore, if Christians made a harmony of what is known of Mary in the Bible, it would amount to really nothing at all, and, if it is not a bull to say it, of Joseph even less.

When we come to what is "said" of her, we have an embarrassment of riches, an abundance of details. It would require volumes to give a mere outline, not only of her earthly life, but of actions, appearances, discourses, and miracles, since she was taken bodily up to heaven. It will, however, be better to begin with her birth. This is supposed to have taken place on September 8, but in what year will depend on when Jesus was born—and who knows that? In a celebrated Catholic work, The Glories of Mary, we have a description of the flight into Egypt, in these words: "Any one can imagine what Mary must have suffered on this journey. To Egypt the distance was great. Most authors agree that it was three hundred miles; so that it was a journey of upwards of thirty days. The road was, according to St. Bonaventure's description of it, 'rough, unknown, and little frequented.' It was in the winter season; so that they had to travel in snow, rain, and wind, through rough and dirty roads. Mary was then fifteen years of age; a delicate young woman unaccustomed to such journeys."

Digitized by Google

In Smith's Dictionary of the Bible it is assumed that Jesus was born B.C. 4 (before Christ, four—is this not rather funny?); so that Mary was only fourteen when her husband had doubts of her chastity, and meditated obtaining a divorce. When one remembers how long it took the Jews to get from Egypt to Palestine—forty years—Mary's journey of thirty days seems to indicate that their donkey was an excellent specimen of the genus Jerusalem to do his ten miles a day. Unfortunately for the accuracy of the saintly Bonaventure, the road from Egypt to Palestine was neither "unknown" nor "little frequented," but was one of the principal highways of the ancient world, over which had marched and countermarched the vast armies of Egypt, Assyria, and Babylon for a thousand years.

We have, on the authority of the Infallible Church, some of Mary's milk preserved to this day in the Church of St. Mark, at Rome, which of itself ought to be sufficient to satisfy the most sceptical person. St. Ildephonsus apostrophises her milk in these words; "Suckle, O Mary, thy Creator; give milk to him who made thee, and made thee such that he could be made of thee" (Glories, p. 258). This means, if it means anything at all, that Mary was made of God, and God of Mary, and the father of Jesus was Jesus himself, and the mother was all three rolled into one.

Alban Butler, in writing on Mary's birthday, seems to forget altogether poor Joseph's doubts and perplexities, and approvingly quotes St. Jerome: "That Joseph, knowing her chastity, and admiring what had happened, suppresses, in silence, all which he could not understand." Also another ancient writer, who "rather believed her virtue than her womb" (Lives of the Saints, vol. ix.).

ROBERT FORDER.

CIVILISATION AND CHRISTIANITY.

CIVILISATION deals with this world only. It is a condition and a consequence resulting from the development and activity of the mental and physical faculties of men, and their application to the materials of a natural environment. It is the product of human ingenuity directed to material ends. The man who aids in the development of civilisation assists in the improvement of the human habitation, and the worldly comfort and happiness of the race. His thoughts dwell on this world, and he seeks to make it better, and to add to the comforts of the race here and now, not hereafter or in heaven. In doing this he violates the commandment of Christ, "Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat or what ye shall drink, nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on," "Take therefore no thought for the morrow" (Matthew vi. 25, 34).

If this absurd command were to be obeyed, no Christian could hope to assist in the civilisation of mankind and go to heaven. He would abandon his relatives, give no thought to the world or its improvement, waste no time on education, or art, or music, or thought, or even on food, but roam through the world a naked, starving, ignorant savage—an ideal Christian. There is no escape from this dilemma. The words of Christ are clear and positive, and, as civilisation involves the cultivation of all he condemns, no Christian can consistently be civilised.

Again, Christ taught the doctrine of non-resistance, and commanded, "If a man smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also." If this command were obeyed, when the barbarian smote the civilised man, the latter would not resist, and the barbarous races would rule the world. Not by submission to evil, but by resistance stern and long-continued, have the higher races held their own and laid the foundations of freedom.

Many have striven to obey these unnatural and nonsensical commandments. Hermits have retired from the world to live like beasts in caves, and fanatics have humbly surrendered to slavery. If these true Christians controlled the world, would it ever be civilised? No. It is the men who have deliberately disobeyed the commands of Christ and the doctrines of Christianity who have civilised the world, not by deserting it, but by improving it; not by submitting, but by resisting oppression.

Again, if men had obeyed the commands of Christ, "Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's," "Servants, obey your masters," and kindred despotic monarchical maxims, there would be no republic, no liberty, no equality, no democracy.

It may be well to note that not only have great civilisations existed long before Christianity was ever heard of, but they have also existed contemporaneously with it, though beyond its control. Thus, in Mexico and Peru, the Aztecs and the Incas reached a high state of intellectual development at a time when Europe, under the beneficent Christian creed, was plunged into comparative barbarism. The Incas of Peru in particular had reached a higher stage of social development than has been attained, even at the present time by any nation in Europe. These two great civilisations would probably still be flourishing, for the edification and instruction of mankind, had not the emissaries of Christian Spain, Cortez, and Pizzaro found their way to the happy lands, and, having repaid the hospitality of the kindly natives by bloodshed, plunder, and wholesale slaughter, handed them over to the tender mercies of the Catholic priesthood to undergo the experience of conversion to Christianity. In the course of this conversion, which was conducted in the good old Christian way, the majority of the people were rapidly starved, enslaved, tortured, and burned to death, and the races soon became extinct. Thus does Christianity encourage civilisation.

It is not necessary, however, to revert to ancient times or distant lands for illustrations of the opposition of the Church to progressive ideas. It is not very long ago that the clergy of the United States held meetings all over the Union to protest against the abolition of slavery, and to assert the divine right of the slaveowner to chain and whip, and buy and sell, and with bloodhounds hunt and slay his fellow men. This was quite in harmony with Christian doctrine, for Christ, living in the midst of slavery, and daily seeing the tortured captives of the Romans scourged by their masters, said not a single word against it in all his lengthy harangues, and had no more consoling advice for the poor bleeding victims than this: "Servants, obey your masters," or "Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's." Where would civilisation be, and where would democracy be, if men obeyed these fatal and foolish words? Give unto the king your body, and unto the priest your soul. Long and wearily men obeyed these words, and lived in barbarism. Now they obey them no longer, and are crowned with civilisation. "If a man be ignorant, let him be ignorant," says the blessed book which is called the fountain of civilisation; and how much freedom or wisdom would we have to-day if Christianity had been permitted to continue enforcing this sacred maxim by the soft persuasion of flame and sword, of rack and dungeon?

—Secular Thought. LUCIFER.

BLASPHEMY IN SWEDEN.

WE learn from Captain Thomson that a Swedish paper, the Söderköpings Posten, has been sequestrated by the Minister of Justice for blasphemy in an article on the Public School System in its issue for December 20. The paper, it appears, had the audacity to suggest that children would do better to learn the geography of their own land than that of Palestine, and their own history than the stories of the patriarchs and prophets. It seems that a prosecution ought to follow the sequestration, and this is looked forward to with the liveliest interest by the press, and especially by the Freethinkers in Sweden. The present Government is reactionary, and the repressive policy of the sky-pilots is to the fore; but in thus imitating the methods of Czar and Kaiser the Swedish Minister of Justice will only render himself contemptible in the eyes of Liberal Europe.

Obituary.

DIED, Sunday, Dec. 30, Mr. James Burns, editor of the Medium and Daybreak. Mr. Burns was one of the pioneers of modern Spiritism in England, and about twenty years ago debated the question with Mr. Bradlaugh. It is doubtful if his paper will be maintained.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO ST. JOHN.—Distasteful though to many, criticism must pronounce a fair estimate. Ingenuity may try to lessen the force of the internal evidence against John's authorship, but reason refuses to be satisfied. The gospel is still a theological more than a biographical composition, and reflects an Alexandrian atmosphere foreign to Galilee. It over passes the Ebionism of the synoptists, and mars the human portraiture.—Dr. Samuel Davidson, "Introduction to the New Testament," vol. ii., p. 417.

Digitized by Google

BOOK CHAT.

The author of The Oracles Ascribed to Matthew by Papias of Hierapolis (Longmans) holds the view that the books attributed to Matthew and Mark by Papias, apud Eusebius, were not the gospels which the Church subsequently canonised, but merely the materials out of which the gospels were in part constructed.

* * *

One of the most interesting papers in the January number of the English Illustrated Magazine is an interview with Mr. J. N. Maskelyne, the Egyptian Hall conjuror. Mr. Maskelyne expresses his contempt for Spiritism, Theosophy, etc., and takes delight in exposing the fraud and credulity passing under a pretentious appearance. The versatile Mr. Grant Allen continues his "Moorland Idylls."

* * *

In To-Day's Bible Dr. Joseph Parker has sought to bring the old book up to date by extracting some of its morality, and putting other aphorisms into scriptural language. Needless to say To-Day's Bible omits the legendary and barbarous part, retaining only the fountain head of superstition. A smaller, it is in some respects a better book than the old Bible, but entirely without the interest attaching to that famous undateable collection of old documents.

* * *

The Truthseeker Annual for 1895 is full of interest. There is an admirable account of Freethought in the United States; a brief but pithy paper on "The Old and the New," by Colonel Ingersoll; "What the Church has Not Done for Women," by Mrs. Gage; "What are Women Here For?" by Miss Helen Gardener; "A Queer God and His Queer Book," by John Peck; "The Education of Children," by Susan Wixon; "Secular Sunday Schools," by Katie Kelim Smith, and other articles, together with much useful information to American Freethinkers. Nor must we forget the amusing sketch of "The One-Horned Ox" of George E. Macdonald, who has an original fund of bright American humor. Who hope the Truthseeker Annual will have a wide circulation, for it should be enjoyed wherever it goes.

* * *

In G. Macdonald's story of "The One-horned Ox," in the Truthseeker Annual, there is an instance of cuteness. One Spattle made money out on an Indian settlement, by growing hops. Asked how he thought of hop-raising in that out-of-the-way place, he explained that it was the missionaries. When he saw these signs of civilisation he knew intoxicants would follow.

* * *

Dr. Carolus, Physician (Cardiff: Chapple and Kemp, Neville-street; 1895; 2s. 6d.; 116 pp.; boards), is a novel with a purpose. The author is a Spiritist, and an advocate of Free-love. The story tells of a Dr. Carolus, who is supposed to be a Mahatma. He mysteriously disappears, taking with him a Catholic priest, an Unitarian minister, a journalist, and others. They turn up at a psychic settlement, supposed to be in wild Wales, where they have a religion and a social code of their own. The religion is something of a parody of the Catholic Church without its dogmas, and includes the invocation of spirits, séances, and a liturgy, in which the priest says, "Let us remember that life here is short," to which the people respond, "Aye; and that death will soon overtake us." Priest—"May you never forget this." People—"We never can, nor will."

* * *

Among the sculptured heads and busts which adorned the Psychic church, the author says, "I recognised Moses, Homer, Socrates, Aristotle, Plato, Shakespeare, Comte the Positivist, Allan Kardec the Spiritualist, and a number of other great teachers." Altogether, the psychic settlement seems a curious mixture of the Positivists with the Shakers and the Free-love community at Oneida Creek. They have divorce, but no marriage, and "Dr. Carolus" argues at length against that institution as "selfish and undesirable." We must say his arguments appear to us superficial. The drawbacks to marriage upon which he chiefly dilates are mainly jealousy and the pain of separation by death; but we have yet to learn that jealousy would be eliminated by such a free-love institution as that at Oneida, while the pain of separation from loved ones, whether one or many, can only be minimised by lessening the love—a project which, like the Buddhist and Stoic schemes of eradicating desire, is equivalent to cutting off one's feet for fear of corns. We distrust the love which is all circumference and has no centre. In its plenitude there is a void. The home and the family have been the sources of altruism, and are likely long to remain so. "Dr. Carolus" should know that the mass of the world have not reached monogamy yet. The book is rather an argument than a novel, and we have treated it as such. It certainly shows thought, though not, we think, deep thought, and it is one of the signs how all questions, social and religious, are now being thrown in the crucible, whence, let us hope, the purer gold will emerge.

* * *

Another novel with a purpose is Six Thousand Tons of Gold—a good title to ask for at a book shop (A. D. Innes). The owner of this vast treasure, discovered in Patagonia, tries to see what good he can do with it, and, finding he makes everything worse, determines at length to sink it in the sea. The moral, if any, is—demonetise gold.

* * *

In S. R. Crockett's last book there is given a discussion by some Galloway shepherds on the death of the Devil. "The minister was sayin'," remarked one, "that the new moderates threep that there's nae deil at a'. He dee'd some time since?" "They say," said John Scott, pulling meditatively at his cutty, "that the pooer is vested noo in a kind o' comy-tee?" "I dinna haud wi' comy-tees myself," replied Meg; "it's juist haein' mony maisters, ilka yin mair cankersome and thrawn than anither?" "Weel, gin this cegs be true, an' the auld deil's deed at last, there's a heap o' fowk in this parish should be mentioned in his wull," said Jock Gordon, significantly. But the herd was a staunch Marrow man. He was not led away by any human criticism, nor yet by the new theology. "New licht here, new licht there," he said. "I canna' pairt wi' ma deil. Na na, that's ower muckle to expect o' a man o' ma age!"

IN MEMORIAM—1894.

A weary nineteen hundred years
Speeds onward through its last decade;
The woe the brute in man has made
Fills human hearts with anxious fears.

In vain the boasted Christian plan
To lift the race to high ideals,
The nation's groan beneath the heels
Of tyrannising Christian man.

And ranged are seen the priest and purse,
Akin in deadly enmity
To Reason's struggle to be free,
Unstayed by God's imagined curse.

Can one prophetic vision dare
Premise the future's chequered scroll,
And guess a single nation's goal,
Or voice the griefs our land shall bear?

Will man's asserting spirit mould
The circumstance to better things,
Nor dream a power Almighty flings
O'er all predestination cold?

Begone the lie that speaks the thought;
The human brain, in searchings deep
For truth, to woe alone must leap,
And knowledge is with evil fraught.

Our best endeavors now to grasp
The underlying facts of things
Will give our minds far fuller wings
To soar, and higher life to clasp.

May man in future years be found
Evolving out to sweeter light,
And, banished superstition's night,
Let mutual love shed joy around.

The wave of time that now succeeds,
In ties of trust and love to bind,
The creature sink to raise the mind,
And bury harsh, unrighteous creeds.

The thoughts of man unfettered rise,
And all his energies be spent
On schemes to lift his race intent—
United happiness the prize.

If this the great result shall be,
With universal peace and love,
We may our present state above,
Forget the buried century.

G. R.

Mr. G. J. Holyoake supports a petition of the Brighton co-operators, praying for the diminution of public-houses, by a letter to the magistrates, in which he mentions that in many streets in Brighton there is a licensed inn to every six of the inhabited houses. The letter, which shows the veteran's usual pith, is printed in the Brighton Examiner.

Digitized by Google

JEWISH COATS OF ARMS.

From the description of the symbols of the twelve tribes in the account of Jacob's dying blessing (Gen. xlix.), it has been surmised that the patriarchs had crests and coats of arms. The descriptions have, however, been applied by Kircher, Sir William Drummond, and Henry Melville, to the twelve signs of the Zodiac. Others think that the animals referred to were the totems of the tribes, and that the prohibition of various animals as food was originally part of totemism. In an article on "The Humors of Heraldry," in the Cornhill Magazine, the writer refers to the early heraldry ascribed to the Jews. He says: "Although heraldic authorities have made no direct attempt to solve the vexed question,

When Adam delved and Eve span,
Who was then the gentleman?

yet they have assigned to Adam two coats of arms. The first, which was borne in Eden before the Fall—when he needed neither coat for covering nor arms for defence—consisted of a shield gules, upon which the arms of Eve (a shield argent) were quartered as an escutcheon of pretence, she being an heiress. The second coat, borne after the expulsion from the Garden, was 'pally trenchè, divided every way and tinctured of every color.' The use of furs in blazonry is, it has been solemnly asserted, a relic of the garments of skins worn by our first parents. The second man who lived upon the earth, Abel, was, we are told, a true gentleman—a proof that it does not necessarily take three generations to manufacture the article. Cain was 'no gentleman' by behavior, but he was the first man who desired to have his arms changed, 'so God set his mark upon him.' Nearly all the principal characters in the Old Testament have been accredited with coats of arms. These are, as a rule, highly appropriate, except in the case of Joseph's heraldic coat, which was merely black tinctured with white—'chequy sable and argent'—whereas something after the pattern of Adam's second coat would surely have been more in keeping with the youthful Joseph's favorite attire. Gideon bore arms, sable, a fleece argent, a chief azure gutté d'eau; David, a harp, or in a field argent; and Samson, gules, a lion couchant or, within an orle argent, semée of bees sable. Armorial ensigns are supposed to have received divine sanction, for God, when prescribing unto Moses the form of conducting the Israelites in their journey through the wilderness, expressly commanded the use of armorial signs, saying, 'The children of Israel shall pitch their tents every man by his own camp, and every man by his own standard.'"

Pious Wants.

Here is a curious advertisement, copied by the Sporting Magazine from an old English country paper: "Wanted.—For a sober family, a man of light weight, who fears the Lord, and can drive a pair of horses. He must occasionally wait at table, join in household prayer, look after the horses, and read a chapter in the Bible. He must, God willing, rise at 7 in the morning, and obey his master and mistress in all lawful commands; if he can dress hair, sing psalms, and play at cribbage, the more agreeable. N.B.—He must not be familiar with the maid-servants, lest the flesh should rebel against the spirit, and he should be induced to walk in the thorny paths of the wicked. Wages, 15 guineas a year."

And here is another from the Daily Advertiser of December 8, 1797: "Wanted.—For a wine merchant's house in the City, as porter, an athletic man, of a serious countenance, a good character, and the Lady Huntington's persuasion. Must attend prayers twice a day, and divine service four times on Sunday; be able to bear confinement; have the fear of God before his eyes; and be able to carry two hundredweight. Wages fourteen shillings a week and find himself. N.B.—A Yorkshireman will not be objected to, but no Irishman will be accepted. Apply to-morrow, at 1 o'clock, to T. F., at No. 14 Philpot-lane."

Scene: A field adjoining the Gas Works. Operations being carried on for a balloon ascent.

A Justice of the Peace, Town Councillor, and Director of the Gas Company contemplating scientific man preparing apparatus for taking observations during voyage.

J. P.—"I would not go up were it ever so."

S. M. (eyeing portly J. P.)—"I don't think you ever could."

J. P.—"I would not go up for all B——."

S. M.—"I would a dozen times for half B——, and less than that."

J. P.—"I call it tempting Providence."

S. M.—"That does not affect me at all. I am under the care of the Devil, and he takes care of his own. Providence is not to be depended on." (Exit J. P. with palms up.)

Happiness by the Way.

Those only are happy who have their minds fixed on some object other than their own happiness; on the happiness of others, on the improvement of mankind, even on some art or pursuit, followed not as a means, but as itself an ideal end. Aiming thus at something else, they find happiness by the way. The enjoyments of life are sufficient to make it a pleasant thing, when they are taken en passant, without being made a principal object. Once make them so, and they are immediately felt to be insufficient. They will not bear a scrutinising examination. Ask yourself whether you are happy, and you cease to be so. The only chance is to treat, not happiness, but some end external to it, as the purpose of life.—J. S. Mill, "Autobiography," p. 142.

Lies Against Infidels.

Calumny is the homage which dogmatism has ever paid to conscience. Even in the periods when the guilt of heresy was universally believed, the spirit of intolerance was only sustained by the diffusion of countless libels against the misbeliever, and by the systematic concealment of his virtues. How sedulously theologians at that time labored in this task, how unscrupulously they maligned and blackened every leading opponent of their views, how eagerly they fanned the flame of sectarian animosity, how uniformly they prohibited those whom they could influence from studying the writings or frequenting the society of men of different opinions from their own, is well known to all who are acquainted with ecclesiastical history.—W. E. H. Lecky, "History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe," ed. ii., p. 298.

Inspiration and Revelation.

The sacred records of the Israelites and the Christians attribute to each of these religions a supernatural origin. They hold it in common with the adherents of many, nay, of most other forms of religion. Zarathustra, Sakya-Muni, and Mohammed pass among their followers for envoys of the godhead, and, in the estimation of the Brahmins, the Vedas, and the laws of Manu, are holy, divine books. At the same time, it does not follow from this that the description of these forms of religion must start from that belief. No one expects or requires this for Buddhism or Islam; with what right, then, can it be demanded with respect to Judaism or Christianity? If we look upon those other religions as so many manifestations of the religious spirit of mankind, are we not bound to examine the Israelitish and the Christian religions also from the same point of view?—Professor Kuenen, "Religion of Israel," p. 6.

PROFANE JOKES.

Adam fell for an apple. We, his descendants, not unfrequently come to grief on a piece of orange peel.

The serpent left his trail in the Garden of Eden, but the general belief is that Eve's dress-pattern was too scanty to enable her to do likewise.

"Ah, my dear," said a loving wife to her husband, "I believe mine will be the fate of Abel." "How so, my love?" "Abel was killed with a club, and a club will kill me if you continue to go out every night."

It is related of a certain clergyman, who was noted for his long sermons with many divisions, that one day, when he was advancing among the teens, he reached at length a kind of resting-place in his discourse, when, pausing to take breath, and asking the question, "And what shall I say more?" a voice from the congregation earnestly responded: "Say Amen."

"Say, deacon, we've bin playing poker, but when we found it was two o'clock on Sunday morning we felt guilty and stopped, and now we're trying to square our conscience by turning it over to the church." "Good boys, good boys; you may have sinned, but you ain't lost. How much is there?" "Fifteen dollars and sixty cents." "Um, um, don't ye think ye'd better play a little longer?"

A Stirlingshire farmer had his household gathered around him one Sunday evening for family worship, and selected for reading Revelation xii. It fell to the turn of Tam, the elder son, to read the third verse, "And there appeared another wonder in heaven; and, behold, a great red dragoon——" "Hout, tout!" cried the farmer; "Tam, that'll no dae. Wha ever heard o' a dragoon in heaven?" "Ay; but, father," said Tam, "ye maun mind it's ane o' the wonders."

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY LECTURE NOTICES, ETC.

[Notices of Lectures, etc., must reach us by first post on Tuesday, and be marked "Lecture Notice," if not sent on post-card.]

LONDON.

HALL OF SCIENCE (142 Old-street, E.C.): 11.30, G. W. Foote. "Bradlaugh's Social and Political Teaching." (Free.) 6.30, musical selections; 7, "God's in His Heaven." (Admission free; reserved seats 3d. and 6d.) Wednesday, at 8.30, G. W. Foote, "A Night with George Meredith."

BATTERSEA SECULAR HALL (back of Battersea Park Station): 7.30, J. McKillop (Fabian), "The Distribution of Wealth." (Free.) Monday, at 8, special entertainment and dance. (Tickets 3d. and 6d.) Tuesday and Friday, at 8, social gatherings. Thursday, Jan. 10, at 8, adjourned members' meeting.

CAMBERWELL (North Camberwell Hall, 61 New Church-road): 7.30, G. Bernard Shaw, "The Religion of the Twentieth Century." (Preceded by vocal and instrumental music.) Thursday, at 7.30, science classes. (Free.)

EAST LONDON (Swabe's Coffee House, 103 Mile-end-road): 8, F. Haslam, "Mahomet and his Bible."

WEST LONDON BRANCH ("Duke of York," Kensington-place, Silver-street, Notting-hill-gate): Monday, at 8.30, business meeting.

WEST LONDON ETHICAL SOCIETY (Princes' Hall, Piccadilly): 11.15, W. J. Jupp, "The Love that Saves."

WESTMINSTER BRANCH (Mr. Stace's, 42 Vincent-street): 8, members' meeting—all should attend.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

HYDE PARK (near Marble Arch): 11.30, F. Haslam, "The Exodus from Egypt."

COUNTRY.

BIRMINGHAM (Coffee House, corner of Broad-street): Thursdays, at 8, papers, discussions, etc.

CHATHAM SECULAR HALL (Queen's-road, New Brompton): 2.45, Sunday-school; 7, concert and dramatic entertainment—"Boots at the Swan."

DUNDEE (City Assembly Rooms): 1, choir meets; 2.30, J. P. Gilmour, "Man's Place in Nature"; 6.30, "The Races of Mankind" (with lime-light illustrations).

GLASGOW (Ex-Mission Hall, 110 Brunswick-street): 12, discussion class—P. Shaughnessy, "The Fallacies of Materialism"; 6.30, W. G. Unkles, "The Beginnings of Language."

HULL (St. George's Hall, Storey-street): 7, Mr. Ixley, "Common Sense."

LEICESTER (Secular Hall, Humberstone-gate): 2.30, Charles Watts, "The French Revolution"; 6.30, "Why Should We Lead Moral Lives?"

LIVERPOOL (Oddfellows' Hall, St. Anne-street): 11, Tontine Society; 3, philosophy class—Ernest Newman, "Kant"; 7, John Walter, B.A., "Darwin Up to Date."

MANCHESTER SECULAR HALL (Rusholme-road, All Saints): 11, E. Marx Aveling, "The Religion of Socialism"; 3, "Political Independence"; 6.30, "The Education of Children." (Admission 3d. and 6d.)

NELSON (Labor Hall, Railway-street): 3, Ernest Johnson, "Thoreau's Walden"; 6.30, "The Philosophy of Secularism."

PLYMOUTH (Co-operative Hall): 11, Stanley Jones, "The Origin of the Bible"; 3, "Christianity and Social Life"; 7, "The Church and Science."

PORTSMOUTH (Wellington Hall, Wellington-street, Southsea): 7, a meeting. Wednesday, at 8, dancing.

ROCHDALE (Working Men's College, 4 Acker-street): 11, Sam Standring, "Should we Hang Murderers?" 3, "Jesus the Dead-Raiser"; 6.30, "Our English Counties." Monday, Wednesday, and Saturday, debate with Mr. Smith (of Milnrow), "Is there a God?"

SHEFFIELD SECULAR SOCIETY (Hall of Science, Rockingham-street): 3, A. B. Wakefield, "Secularism: Is it a Success?" 7, John Morley: A Study—with special reference to Dr. Charles Berry's recent article respecting him."

SOUTH SHIELDS (Thornton's Variety Hall, Union-lane): 11, C. Cohen, "Voltaire"; 7, "The Bible and Board Schools."

Lecturers' Engagements.

C. COHEN, 12 Merchant-street, Bow-road, London, E.—All Sundays until April, 1895, South Shields.

STANLEY JONES, 58 Marlborough-road, Holloway, London, N.—Jan. 13, Plymouth; 20, Chatham. Feb. 3, Edinburgh; 10, Dundee.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Credon-road, Rotherhithe, London, S.E.—Feb. 3, New Brompton.

SAM STANDRING, 6 Bury-road, Rochdale.—Jan. 28, Tyldesley.

Price 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d. post free,

THE GRAND OLD BOOK.

A REPLY TO THE GRAND OLD MAN.

BY

G. W. FOOTE.

An Exhaustive Answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture."

CONTENTS:—Preface—Preliminary View—The Creation Story—The Fall of Man—The Psalms—The Mosaic Legislation—Corroborations of Scripture—Gladstone and Huxley—Modern Scepticism.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

"AN ADMIRABLE BOOK."

"400 Years of Freethought."

HANDSOMELY BOUND, WITH 141 PORTRAITS OF EMINENT FREETHINKERS.

1165 pages. Price £1 1s.

Mr. Charles Watts has received a supply of the above work, and on receipt of £1 1s. he will be pleased to forward a copy to any address, carriage paid. Send to Mr. Watts direct—81 Effra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

Price 1s., post free,

SATIRES AND PROFANITIES

BY

JAMES THOMSON (B.V.)

(Author of "The City of Dreadful Night").

Contents:—The Story of a Famous Old Jewish Firm (Jehovah, Son, and Co.)—The Devil in the Church of England—Religion in the Rocky Mountains—Christmas Eve in the Upper Circles—A Commission of Inquiry on Royalty—A Bible Lesson on Monarchy—The One Thing Needful.

"It cannot be neglected by any who are interested in one of the most pathetic personages of our time."—Academy.

"As clever as they are often profane."—Christian World.

"Well worth preserving."—Weekly Dispatch.

"Reminds one of the genius of Swift."—Oldham Chronicle.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Last Words on Suicide

A REPLY TO THE CRITICS

OF

"IS SUICICE A SIN?"

BY

COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

PRICE TWOPENCE.

London: ROBERT FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

MARRIOTT, CLOTHIER,

311 EDGWARE ROAD, W., near Metropolitan Music Hall (same side), six doors from Church-street. TROUSERS, good wear, 5s. 9d., 7s. 6d., and 9s. 6d.; Blacks, 7s. 6d. and 10s. 6d. Thirty sizes kept in stock. OVERCOATS from 12s. 6d.

CYRIL BEDE, M.A., is open to Lecturing Engagements in town and country. Subjects:—History, Literature, Theology, etc. Views:—Tolerant Scepticism. Manner:—Lyricism, Satire, Pathos. For terms write to 16 Ossian-road, Stroud Green, N.

W. J. RENDELL'S "Wife's Friend."

Recommended by Mrs. Besant in Law of Population, p. 82, and Dr. Allbutt in Wife's Handbook, p. 51. Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell-street, Clerkenwell; 7s. doz., post free (reduction in larger quantities). For particulars send stamped envelope. Higginson's Syringe, with Vertical and Reverse Current, 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 5s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. Dr. Allbutt's Quinine Powders, 3s. per doz. All prices post free.

W. J. RENDELL,

15 CHADWELL-ST., CLERKENWELL, E.C.

(near the "Angel.")

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 325 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each, upper or lower set, £1. Best quality, 4s. each, upper or lower, £2, completed in four hours when required; repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum 5s. 6d. each, on 18 ct. gold 15s., stopping 2s. 6d., extraction 1s., painless by gas, 5s.

MARGATE.—TERRACE HOTEL, Marine Drive. Bed and Breakfast from 2s. 6d. A large room to seat 500. Beanfeasts and other parties liberally treated.

TO FREETHINKERS, Ladies and Gentlemen requiring SUPERIOR CUT GARMENTS at moderate prices. First-class Style and Fit Guaranteed.—H. HAMPTON, Artiste Tailor, 14 Great Castle-street, W. Three doors from Regent-street. [Patronised by leading Freethinkers.]

Price 1s., post free,

Is Socialism Sound?

VERBATIM REPORT OF A

FOUR NIGHTS' DEBATE BETWEEN

ANNIE BESANT and G. W. FOOTE.

R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price Twopence,

Royal Paupers.

SHOWING WHAT ROYALTY DOES FOR THE PEOPLE, AND WHAT THE PEOPLE DO FOR ROYALTY.

By G. W. FOOTE.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price Twopence,

SALVATION SYRUP;

OR,

LIGHT ON DARKEST ENGLAND.

A REPLY TO GENERAL BOOTH,

By G. W. FOOTE.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter street, E.C.

Price 1s. Superior edition for Subscribers, bound, numbered, and signed 2s.

VOLTAIRE:

HIS LIFE AND WORKS.

With some Selections from his Writings, by J. M. WHEELER and G. W. FOOTE.

Digitized by Google

WHY BE ILL?

MEDICAL ESSAYS. VOL. I. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Management of Infancy, Health, Longevity, Teeth, Brown Bread, Bread Making, Food, Vegetarianism, Tobacco, Drink Question, Fruit, Fresh Air, Exercise, Bathing, Light, Holidays, Cause and Cure of Disease, Constipation, Biliousness, Eczema, Blackheads and Pimples, Nervousness, Coughs and Colds, Chest Complaints, Deafness, Thread Worms, Long Worms, Tape Worms, Itch, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. VOL. II. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
The Healing Power of Nature; Clothing; Electricity in Disease; Apparent Health; Vegetarian Experiments; The Pig as Human Food; Popular Fallacies about Flesh; The Beef Tea Delusion; Salt; Saline Starvation; Tea Drinking; The Hair and its Management; Sleep and Sleeplessness; Want of Energy, etc.; Health Hints for Workers, Shop Assistants, and Servants; Advice for the Thin; for the Stout; and on the Proper Treatment of Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumors, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. VOL. III. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Health and Wealth; No More Death; Youth; The Necessity for Pure Air, and How to Get It; The Management of Young Children; Hunger and Appetite; Effects of Fasting; Perfect Foods; Green Foods; Suppers; Unsuspected Domestic Poisons; Thirst; Perspiration; Sea Bathing, etc. HOW—to Eat Properly, to Eat Fruit, to Judge Wholemeal Bread, to Breathe Properly, to Grow Tall, to Keep Warm, to Live, to Live One Hundred Years, to Improve the Memory, and to become Beautiful and Attractive. On the Cause and Cure of Stomach Troubles, Flatulence, Sleepiness, Varicose Veins, Boils and Carbuncles, Sebaceous Tumors or Wens, Hay Fever, Winter Cough, Chilblains, the Diseases Produced by taking Mercury, Epilepsy.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. VOL. IV. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
New Year Resolutions, Prevention better than Cure, Health Savings Banks, Hardening, Rubbish, Work and Overwork, Sugar and its Abuse, Macaroni, Salads, Wholemeal Cookery, Porridge, Celeriac or Celery Root, Milk as Food, The Tomato, Against Butter, Poultices, Quinine, Against the Knife, Arsenical Poisoning, Tonics, Infant Mortality, Against Stimulants in Disease, Stays and their Substitutes, About Swallowing Pins and other Articles, also the Cause and Rational Cure of Sun Stroke, Dog Bites, Pains in the Back, Pediculi or Lice, Chicken-pox, Synovitis or Inflammation of the Joints, Tonsilitis or Quinsy, Herpes (Tetter or Shingles), Erysipelas, Ulcer of the Stomach, Epidemic Influenza, Sciatica, Psoriasis or English Leprosy. Appendix.

The Four Volumes, strongly and neatly bound, for 5s. 6d.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE. An Eye-Opener to Drug Takers. Post free from the Author for Postal Order for 1s. 1d.

RHEUMATISM: Its Cause and Cure. Post free 7d. — CONSUMPTION: Its Cause and Cure. Post free 7d.—DIET AND DIGESTION. Post free 7d.
THREE PAMPHLETS TO YOUNG MEN. Post free 1s. 1d.

 All these books (except Pamphlets to Young Men) bound together in cloth in one volume. Post free 5s. 6d.

All the above can be got from DR. T. R. ALLINSON, 4 SPANISH PLACE, MANCHESTER SQUARE, LONDON, W.

HOURS OF CONSULTATION are—Morning from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m.; fee, 10s. 6d. Evening from 6 to 8; fee, 5s.

Patients visited in London for a fee of 10s. 6d. Patients visited in the country. Fee according to distance and the time occupied in going and returning. Advice Given by Post.

ADVICE TO THE MARRIED

All persons whose circumstances will not permit them to maintain a large family should send for an interesting dialogue, which should be read by all who wish to maintain and improve their position in life.

"PRUDENCE AND PLENTY,"

Copy, together with our Illustrated List of all the MODERN APPLIANCES as recommended by Dr. Allbutt and Mrs. Besant, sent on receipt of stamped envelope to—

E. LAMBERT & SON,

Manufacturers of Hygienic and Malthusian Appliances,

60 AND 62 QUEEN'S ROAD, DALSTON LOND ON, N.E
or from R. FORDER.

THE BEST BOOK

ON NEO-MALTHUSIANISM IS, I BELIEVE

TRUE MORALITY, or THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF NEO-MALTHUSIANISM.

By J. R. HOLMES, M.M.L., M.V.S., M.N.S.S.

160 pages, with portrait and autograph, bound in cloth, gilt lettered. Price 1s., post free.

 In order to bring the information within the reach of the poor, the most important parts of the book are issued in a pamphlet of 112 pages at ONE PENNY, post free 2d. Copies of the pamphlet for distribution 1s. a dozen post free.

The National Reformer of 4th September, 1892, says: "Mr Holmes' pamphlet . . . is an almost unexceptionable statement of the Neo-Malthusian theory and practice . . . and throughout appeals to moral feeling. . . . The special value of Mr. Holmes' service to the Neo-Malthusian cause and to human well-being generally is just his combination in his pamphlet of a plain statement of the physical and moral need for family limitation with a plain account of the means by which it can be secured, and an offer to all concerned of the requisites at the lowest possible prices."

The Council of the Malthusian League, Dr. Drysdale, Dr Allbutt, and others have also spoken of it in very high terms.

The Trade supplied by R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C. Other orders should be sent to the author.

J. R. HOLMES, HANNEY, WANTAGE, BERKS.

Freethought Publications.

By G. W. FOOTE.

The Grand Old Book. A Reply to the Grand Old Man. An exhaustive answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture." 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Christianity and Secularism. Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Bible Heroes. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Letters to the Clergy. First Series. 128 pp., 1s.

Infidel Death-Beds. Second edition, much enlarged, 3d. On superfine paper, in cloth, 1s. 3d.

Darwin on God. 6d.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s.

Reminiscences of Charles Bradlaugh. 6d.

Flowers of Freethought. First Series. 221 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Flowers of Freethought. Second Series. 302 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Bible Handbook for Freethinkers and Inquiring Christians. [Edited in conjunction with W. P. Ball.] Complete, paper covers, 1s. 4d.; superior edition, on superfine paper, bound in cloth, 2s.

Crimes of Christianity. Vol. I. [Written in conjunction with J. M. Wheeler.] Hundreds of exact references to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.

Chapters:—1, Christ to Constantine; 2, Constantine to Hypatia; 3, Monkery; 4, Pious Forgeries; 5, Pious Frauds; 6, Rise of the Papacy; 7, Crimes of the Popes; 8, Persecution of the Jews; 9, The Crusades. Cloth, gilt, 216 pp., 2s. 6d.

The Jewish Life of Christ. Being the Sepher Toldoth Jeshu, or Book of the Generation of Jesus. With an Historical Preface and Voluminous Notes by G. W. Foote and J. M. Wheeler. Paper covers, 6d.; superior edition, superfine paper, cloth, 1s.

Bible Studies. Essays on Phallic Worship and other Curious Rites and Customs. By J. M. Wheeler. Illustrated, superior paper, 2s. 6d.

Biographical Dictionary of Freethinkers of All Ages and Nations. By J. M. Wheeler. Handsomely bound in cloth, 7s. 6d.

Darwin Made Easy. By Dr. Edward B. Aveling, Fellow of the London University. This is the best popular exposition of Darwinism extant. Cloth, 1s.

Essays in Rationalism. By Charles Robert Newman (Atheist Brother of the late Cardinal Newman). With a Preface by George Jacob Holyoake, and a Biographical Sketch by J. M. Wheeler. 1s. 6d.

Some Mistakes of Moses. By Colonel R. G. Ingersoll. The only complete edition published in England. Accurate as Colenso, and fascinating as a novel. 132 pp., 1s.; superior edition, cloth, 1s. 6d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Works by Colonel R. G. Ingersoll.

SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES. The only complete edition in England. Accurate as Colenso, and fascinating as a novel. 132 pp. 1s. Superior paper, cloth 1s. 6d.

DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT. A Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy. 6d.

THE GODS. 6d.

REPLY TO GLADSTONE. With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler. 4d.

ROME OR REASON? A Reply to Cardinal Manning. 4d.

CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS. 3d.

ORATION ON WALT WHITMAN. 3d.

ORATION ON VOLTAIRE. 3d.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. 3d.

PAINE THE PIONEER. 2d.

HUMANITY'S DEBT TO THOMAS PAINE. 2d.

ERNEST RENAN AND JESUS CHRIST. 2d.

TRUE RELIGION. 2d.

THE THREE PHILANTHROPISTS. 2d.

LOVE THE REDEEMER. 2d.

GOD AND THE STATE. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part I. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part II. 2d.

FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Dr. Field. 2d.

GOD AND MAN. Second reply to Dr. Field. 2d.

THE DYING CREED. 2d.

THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION. A Discussion with the Hon. F. D. Coudert and Gov. S. L. Woodford. 2d.

THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH. 2d.

ART AND MORALITY. 2d.

DO I BLASPHEME? 2d.

THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE. 2d.

SOCIAL SALVATION. 2d.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE. An Agnostic's View. 2d.

SKULLS. 2d.

THE GREAT MISTAKE. 1d.

LIVE TOPICS. 1d.

MYTH AND MIRACLE. 1d.

REAL BLASPHEMY. 1d.

REPAIRING THE IDOLS. 1d.

CHRIST AND MIRACLES. 1d.

CREEDS & SPIRITUALITY. 1d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

One Penny each, by post Three-halfpence,

LETTERS FROM HEAVEN AND LETTERS FROM HELL.

By J. M. WHEELER.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

40/- WORTH OF GOODS FOR 20/-

ANNUAL STOCK-TAKING SALE.

LOT 1.—1 Tweed or Serge Suit Length, 1 Tweed Dress Length, 1 Lady's Umbrella, 1 Gent's Umbrella ... ... for 20s.
LOT 2.—4 Trouser Lengths, 2 Tweeds, 2 Worsteds, and 2 pairs of Drawers ... ... for 20s.
LOT 3.—1 Black Cashmere Dress Length, 1 Navy Serge Dress Length, 1 Blouse, 1 Belt, 1 Apron, 1 Underskirt for 20s.
LOT 4.—3 Dress Lengths: 1 Navy Serge, 1 Mixture Tweed, and 1 Black Cashmere ... ... for 20s.
LOT 5.—1 Suit Length, 1 Dress Length, 2 pairs of Curtains ... ... for 20s.
LOT 6.—30 yards of Remnants for Children's Dresses (all double width) ... ... for 20s.
LOT 7.—2 Flannelette Nightdresses, 2 Chemises, 2 pairs Knickers, 2 pairs Curtains, 2 Aprons, 1 Umbrella ... for 20s.
LOT 8.—1 Dress Length, 1 Under-Skirt, 1 Umbrella, 1 Blouse, 20 yds Muslin-de-laine, 1 Apron, 1 Belt, 1 pair Stockings... ... ... for 20s.
LOT 9.—1 Black Victoria-shaped Fur, and 1 Pure Wool Navy Serge Dress Length ... ... for 20s.
LOT 10.—1 Real Sealskin Satchel and Muff, 1 Black, Blue, or Brown Beaver Jacket Length, 1 Umbrella ... for 20s.
Lot 11.—1 pair All-Wool Blankets, 1 pair Sheets, 1 Quilt, and 1 Table-cloth ... ... for 20s.
LOT 12.—2 Dress Lengths and 2 Trouser Lengths. (Warranted all Wool.) ... ... for 20s.
LOT 13.—12 yards Shirting, 12 yards Muslin-de-laine, 10 yards Flannel, 10 yards Flannelette ... ... for 20s.
LOT 14.—1 West of England Black or Blue Worsted or Vicuna Suit Length ... ... for 20s.
LOT 15.—3 Sailor Suits (to fit boys up to 8 years old) and 1 Navy Serge Dress Length (all wool) ... ... for 20s.
LOT 16.—1 Lady's Mackintosh, and 1 Black, Blue, Brown, or Fawn Melton Overcoat Length ... ... for 20s.
LOT 17.—1 Good Melton Overcoat Length in Black, Blue, Brown, or Fawn, and 1 Serge or Tweed Suit Length for 20s.
LOT 18.—3 Real All-wool Scotch Tweed Trouser Lengths (check or stripe) ... ... for 20s.
LOT 19.—1 Gentleman's Scarboro'-shaped Mackintosh. [Give length, chest, and waist measure.] ... ... for 20s.
LOT 20.—1 parcel of odd lots, including Suit Length, Dress Length, Blouse, Apron, Stockings, Socks, Belt, etc. for 20s.

We shall include one of our Beautiful ALMANACKS for 1895 in each Parcel. One Shilling must be added for Carriage. We cannot send Patterns. We guarantee satisfaction in every case, or return money in full.

J. W. GOTT, 2 & 4 UNION-STREET, BRADFORD.

ASK YOUR GROCER
FOR THE
ROYAL CHISWICK TABLE JELLIES

EXPERT'S OPINION—
"The Perfection of Jelly."

"Certainly far superior to all other Jelly Tablets—in transparency, strength, and in flavor utterly beyond comparison."

TOUZEAU PARRIS & CO.,
ENFIELD WORKS, ACTON, W.

☞ NOW READY ☜

Colonel Ingersoll's Great New Lecture
ABOUT THE HOLY BIBLE

Price Sixpence.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

6d. ☞ NOW READY ☜ 6d.

THE
SECULAR ALMANACK FOR 1895.

Altered and Enlarged. Finely-Designed Cover.

EDITED BY
G. W. FOOTE & J. M. WHEELER.

CONTENTS: Progress of Freethought; by G. W. Foote—This World; by J. M. Wheeler—Heroes in the Service of Man; by Charles Watts—Dod Grile—A Wish; by Matthew Arnold—The Abducted Female Infidel—Farquhar of Netherton—Bits from Selden's "Table Talk"—Jeremy Bentham on Inspiration—Abou-ben Adhem and the Angel—Man's Soul his God—The Sacred Books of the World—The Dear God—What have Unbelievers Done for the World?—Information Concerning Freethought Work and Organisation—Lecturers, etc.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

THE BIRTH OF CHRIST

A CHAPTER FROM
Strauss's Original "Life of Jesus."

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY
G. W. FOOTE.

(A Most Thorough Analysis and Exposure of the Gospel Story by a Master Hand.)

Price Sixpence.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C

Printed and Published by G. W. FOOTE, at 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

VOL. XV.—No. 3. SUNDAY, JANUARY 20, 1895. PRICE TWOPENCE.

MRS. BESANT CORNERED.

MRS. BESANT's short letter to the Daily Chronicle, which is referred to in our paragraphs, promised to deal with the Westminster Gazette revelations three months hence. The month she mentioned was April, and of all days in that month the first would have been the most appropriate. On second thoughts, however, she decided to make at least a partial reply at once. It did not require much sagacity to see that such a long delay might prove fatal. Judgment might, in the meantime, go by default, or the public might then be tired of hearing about Theosophy, and utterly indifferent about the fate or the reputation of the Theosophical Society. Mrs. Besant has, therefore, forwarded her exculpation, or explanation, or whatever she likes to call it; and the long, verbose document was published on Tuesday. It occupied three columns and a half, and was printed in large type. Greater prominence could not have been given to it if it had been a manifesto by Mr. Gladstone in the midst of a national crisis. Yet it only concerns the intrigues and squabbles of a comparatively insignificant society. What a testimony to the public interest in quarrels and scandal! What a testimony, also, to the respectability of superstition! Mrs. Besant as a Secularist might have been honored with twenty or thirty lines of small type; Mrs. Besant as a Theosophist is allowed to riot over the principal page of a great daily newspaper. Look on this picture and on this; and then reflect on the boasted intelligence of this fag-end of the nineteenth century.

The Westminster Gazette calls Mrs. Besant's long letter "a very pitiful document," and speaks of its "absence of all clear reasoning," its "avoidance of all sharp issues," its "mental wobbling," and its "moral flabbiness." Feebleness and laxity are its chief characteristics. You may search it in vain for any trace of Mrs. Besant's old vivacity. It concludes with a long-winded bid for Christian sympathy. Mrs. Besant will imitate "the holy Initiate"—Jesus Christ to wit—who was accused of consorting with sinners. If her "brother" Judge has "simulated" and "duped" her, she will still work with him. She will ask him to resign, but if he declines to do so she will not "separate" herself from her "brother." Of course not. Brother Judge knows too much. He holds the key of the Mahatma business; and, without Mahatmas, the Theosophical Society is a hook without bait.

We will go through Mrs. Besant's verbiage to the very heart of the matter. More than three years ago, soon after Madame Blavatsky's death, Mrs. Besant went to the Hall of Science and delivered her farewell lecture. "Mr. Foote," she says, "had charged Madame Blavatsky with forging the Occult World letters, and I said I believed the various letters I had received in June, July, August to be genuine." We are now favored with a verbatim report of her startling announcement on this point:—

> "You have known me in this hall for sixteen and a half years. You have never known me lie to you. My worst public enemy through the whole of my life never cast a slur upon my integrity. Everything else they have sullied; but my truth never: and I tell you that since Madame Blavatsky left I have had letters in the same writing and from the same person. Unless you think that dead persons write—and I do not think so—this is rather a curious fact against the whole challenge of fraud. I do not ask you to believe me, but I tell you this on the faith of a record which has never been sullied by a conscious lie."

This extraordinary announcement caused a "sensation," as well it might. Mrs. Besant subsequently assured an interviewer that these Mahatma messages came "not through the post," but by "precipitation," and "in a way which some people would call miraculous."

Note the use to which these Mahatma letters were put. They were to vindicate Madame Blavatsky against the most formal and circumstantial charges of forgery; they were to prove the existence of Mahatmas; they were to establish the reality of "precipitation," which, in any honest use of the word, is miraculous; and they were to show, though of course indirectly, that the occult mantle of Madame Blavatsky had fallen upon Mrs. Besant. And all this tremendous edifice was based upon nothing whatever but Mrs. Besant's bare word! She submitted no evidence, she invited no investigation. Nay, the very suggestion of inquiry was met with a theatrical air of injured innocence—"Do you doubt my honor, sir? Am I not a lad; I" And the cream of the joke was, that the lady claimed to be, above all, "scientific."

Mrs. Besant is now compelled to admit—not only to the Theosophic inner circle, but to the world at large—that the letters she announced so oracularly were forgeries. She played the confidence-trick upon the public after it had been played upon herself. She used a forgery to prove that Madame Blavatsky was no forger. And the lady who acted in this ridiculous fashion, the lady who duped others by standing sponsor for a very vulgar deception, pretended to have access to sources of wisdom which are inaccessible to common mortals! She questioned the stars and fell into a pit.

Let there be no misunderstanding. What we state is not an inference, but Mrs. Besant's explicit admission. "On the letters," she says, "I was duped." And she adds, "I willingly take any blame on my gullibility that may be cast upon me."

How generous! How humble! But is it done "willingly"? Nothing of the kind. It is done under irresistible pressure. Mrs. Besant's attitude in the whole of this wretched business is an illustration of the old adage that you cannot touch pitch without being defiled. Behind every mystery there is always a cheat. Dabblers in the "occult" are sure to get more or less corrupted. They wink at trickery for the sake of "the cause"; they are deceived themselves, they deceive others; and when they are undeceived they try to keep silence, rather than have their vanity wounded or suffer a loss of infallibility.

Mrs. Besant was bound in honor to undeceive the very people she had deceived. It was her plain duty to go to the Hall of Science again and unsay what she had said. The ordeal would have been a painful one, but Mrs. Besant is always boasting of her readiness to suffer in the cause of truth.

In the ordinary sense of the word, we do not dispute Mrs. Besant's integrity. But what of her judgment? How can any sensible person place the slightest reliance upon it in future? She has said that Charles Bradlaugh, for some time before his death, had lost all confidence in her judgment; which simply means that he had the sagacity to see what subsequent events have painfully demonstrated.

G. W. FOOTE.

Digitized by Google

THE APOSTLES' CREED.

RECENT attempts to introduce "The Apostles' Creed" into Board schools, and to obtain a decision from the Education Department that this is not in opposition to the fourteenth clause of the Elementary Education Act (33 & 34 Vict., 75), which provides that "no religious catechism or religious formulary which is distinctive of any particular denomination shall be taught in the school," render it advisable to give fresh attention to that creed. In The Crimes of Christianity some orthodox authorities will be found cited who admit that the Apostles' Creed is one of the many instances of pious forgery imposed on the credulity of the Christian world.

Dean Stanley, in an article on "The Creed of the Early Christians," in the Nineteenth Century (August, 1880), wrote: "The creed of the Roman Church came to be called 'The Apostles' Creed' from the legend that the Apostles had each of them contributed a clause. It was successively enlarged by 'The Remission of Sins,' 'The Life Eternal,' then by 'The Resurrection of the Flesh,' then by 'The Descent into Hell' and 'The Communion of the Saints.'"

Principal Tulloch, who writes the article "Creeds" in the Encyclopædia Britannica (vol. vi., p. 561, 9th edition), says: "The growth of this creed is involved in considerable obscurity. The tradition which ascribes it to the apostles themselves, it is needless to say, has no authority, and does not reach beyond the fifth century, if it can be carried back so far. The definite source of the legend is supposed to be two sermons spuriously attributed to St. Augustine, and found in the appendix to his works." So that the ascription of this forgery to the apostles depends itself upon other forgeries, probably the work of the same monkish gang.

Professor Adolf Harnack, in Schaff's Religious Encyclopædia, says: "The text, Latin and Greek, first occurs in a manuscript from the eighth or ninth century of the Psalterium Græcum et Romanum, erroneously ascribed to Gregory the Great." So the earliest manuscript is bound up with another forgery. The legend is that the apostles made the creed, by each putting a clause. Thus Peter said, "I believe in God, the Father Almighty"; John, "Maker of Heaven and Earth"; James, "And in Jesus Christ his only son our Lord"; Andrew, "Who was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary"; Philip, "Suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, dead, and buried"; Thomas, "He descended into hell; the third day he rose again from the dead"; Bartholomew, "He ascended into heaven, and sitteth at the right hand of God the Father Almighty"; Matthew, "From thence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead"; James, the son of Alphæus, "I believe in the Holy Ghost, the holy Catholic Church"; Simon Zelotes, "The communion of saints, the forgiveness of sins"; Jude, "The resurrection of the body"; Matthias, "The life everlasting." There are some disagreements in the various reports of the legend as to the authors of the various sections, but all agree, with monkish humor, in making the sceptical Thomas commit himself to the declaration that Jesus rose from the dead. "This legend," says Harnack, "is contemporary with the creed itself." Professor Harnack points out that the earlier forms of the Apostles' Creed omitted some of the most important dogmatic clauses. He says: "It is one of the best established results of history that the clause, born of the Holy Ghost and the Virgin Mary, does not belong to the earliest gospel preaching."* His conclusion is, that the Apostles' Creed is "the baptismal confession of the Church of Southern Gaul, dating from the middle, or rather from the second half, of the fifth century."

J. Rawson Lumby, B.D., in The History of the Creeds, brings it later. He says (p. 171): "The exact words first occur in the Creed given by Pirminius, a bishop who labored in France and Germany about the middle of the eighth century. This date, A.D. 750, may therefore be assigned to the first appearance of the Apostolic Creed in its present form." Again he says (p. 173): "Though the Creed has been found in the precise form we now have it, it would be a mistake to suppose that it was of general acceptance at the date of Pirminius. Even down to the fifteenth century variations of the language are to be found."

M. Michel Nicolas, a learned French Protestant, in his investigations into Le Symbole des Apôtres, finds the document "without the least dogmatic authority," and the only use of it is to afford us a list of the successive formations of Christian belief during the ages which witnessed its birth and development (p. 334). He says: "Not only is the Apostles' Creed not the work of those venerable personages to whom legend attributes it, but it is even far from being a faithful scheme of their doctrines. On the one hand, we find in it doctrines which they did not know, and others of which they formed to themselves an entirely different conception; and, on the other hand, there are wanting in it many of those to which they attached an extreme importance [such as the near approach of the end of the world], and which they considered as constituting the very essence of Christianity" (p. 75).

One instance of contradiction will suffice: While the Apostles' Creed affirms the resurrection of the flesh, St. Paul declares flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God.

J. M. WHEELER.

(To be concluded.)

* Nineteenth Century, July, 1893.

WAS CHRIST A POLITICAL AND SOCIAL REFORMER?

(Continued from page 32.)

PROFESSOR HUXLEY, in the Nineteenth Century, No. 144, pp. 178-186, points out that Christians have no right to force their idealistic portraits of Jesus on the unbiassed scientific world, whose business it is to study realities and to separate fiction from fact. The Professor's words are: "In the course of other inquiries, I have had to do with fossil remains, which looked quite plain at a distance, and became more and more indistinct as I tried to define their outline by close inspection. There was something there—something which, if I could win assurance about it, might mark a new epoch in the history of the earth; but, study as long as I might, certainty eluded my grasp. So has it been with me in my efforts to define the grand figure of Jesus as it lies in the primitive strata of Christian literature. Is he the kindly, peaceful Christ depicted in the catacombs? Or is he the stern judge who frowns above the altar of Saints Cosmas and Damianus? Or can he be rightly represented in the bleeding ascetic broken down by physical pain of too many mediæval pictures? Are we to accept the Jesus of the second or the Jesus of the fourth Gospel as the true Jesus? What did he really say and do? and how much that is attributed to him in speech and action is the embroidery of the various parties into which his followers tended to split themselves within twenty years of his death, when even the three-fold tradition was only nascent? . . . . If a man can find a friend, the hypostasis of all his hopes, the mirror of his ethical ideal, in the Jesus of any or all of the Gospels, let him live by faith in that ideal. Who shall, or can, forbid him? But let him not delude himself that his faith is evidence of the objective reality of that in which he trusts. Such evidence is to be obtained only by the use of the methods of science as applied to history and to literature, and it amounts, at present, to very little."

Equally emphatic are the remarks of John Vickers, the author of The New Koran, etc., who, in his work, The Real Jesus, on pp. 160, 161, writes: "Many popular preachers at the present day are accustomed to hold Jesus up to admiration as the special friend of the poor—that is, as the benefactor of the humble working class, and their representations to this effect are doubtless very generally believed. But a greater delusion respecting him than this can scarcely be imagined; for, however much he may have been disposed to favor those who forsook their industrial calling and led a vagrant life, his preaching and the course which he took were prejudicial to all who honestly earned their bread. He did nothing with his superior wisdom to develop the resources of the country and provide employment for the poor; all his efforts were directed to the unhinging of industry, the diminution of wealth, and the promotion of universal idleness and beggary. It was no part of his endeavor to see the peasant and the artisan better remunerated and more comfortably housed, for he despised domestic comforts as much as Diogenes, and believed that their enjoyment would disqualify people for obtaining the everlasting pleasures of Paradise. A provident working man who had managed to save enough for a few months' subsistence he would have classed with the covetous rich, and required him to give away in alms all that he had treasured as the indispensable condition of discipleship. On one occasion he is said to have distributed food liberally to the hungry multitude; but the food was none of his providing, since he was himself dependent on alms. Moreover, the recipients of his bounty were not a band of ill-fed laborers returning from work, not a number of distressed farmers who had suffered heavy losses from murrain or drought, but a loafing crowd who had followed him about from place to place, and spent the day in idleness. Such bestowment of largess would only tend to produce a further relaxation of industrial effort; it would induce credulous peasants to throw down their tools and follow the wonder-working prophet for the chance of a meal; they would see little wisdom in plodding at their tasks from day to day, like the ants and the bees, if people were to be fed by wandering about trustfully for what should turn up, as the idle, improvident ravens (Prov. vi. 6; Luke xii. 24)."

Digitized by Google

Many eminent Christian writers maintain that Jesus was a social reformer, because he is represented as having been in favor of dispensing with the private ownership of property, and also of people living together, enjoying what is called "a common repast." Professor Graetz, in the second volume of his able History of the Jews, devotes a chapter to the social practices which prevailed at the time when Jesus is alleged to have lived. On page 117 he states that Christianity was really an offshoot from the principles held by the Essenes, and that Christ inherited their aversion to Pharisaical laws, while he approved of their practice of putting their all into the common treasury. Further, like them, Jesus highly esteemed self-imposed poverty, and despised riches. In fact, we are told that the "community of goods, which was a peculiar doctrine of the Essenes, was not only approved, but enforced. . . . . The repasts they shared in common formed, as it were, the connecting link which attached the followers of Jesus to one another; and the alms distributed by the rich publicans relieved the poor disciples of the fear of hunger; and this bound them still more strongly to Jesus." But Graetz also adds that Christ thoroughly shared the narrow views held by the Judæans of his time, and that he despised the heathen world. Thus he said: "Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rend you" (Matt. vii. 6). If this is "Christian Socialism," it is far from being catholic in its nature. The Socialistic element of having "all things in common" was limited by Christ to one particular community; it lacked that universality necessary to all real social reforms. It was similar to his idea of the brotherhood of man. Those only were his brothers who believed in him. He desired no fellowship with those who did not accept his faith; hence he exclaimed: "If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered, and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned" (John xv. 6); "I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given" (John xvii. 9); "But he that denieth me before men shall be denied before the angels of God" (Luke xii. 9); "He that believeth not shall be damned" (Mark xvi. 16). This may be the teaching of theology, but it is not indicative of a broad humanity, neither would it, if acted upon, tend to promote the social welfare of mankind.

Professor Graham, M.A., of Belfast College, contends, in his work, Socialism: Old and New, that Christ taught "Communism" when he preached "Blessed be ye poor," when "he repeatedly denounced" the rich, and when he recommended the wealthy young man to voluntarily surrender his property to the poor. The Professor also says: "In spite of certain passages to the contrary, pointing in a different direction, the Gospels are pervaded with the spirit of Socialism"; but he adds: "It is not quite State Socialism, because the better society was to be brought about by the voluntary union of believers." He admits, however, that "the ideal has hitherto been found impossible; but let not any say that it does not exist in the gospels—that Christ did not contemplate an earthly society." Now this last point is just what could be fairly urged, if the Gospels were trustworthy. There can be no reasonable doubt that the disregard of mundane duties would be the logical sequence of acting up to many of the teachings ascribed to Jesus. For instance, he said, "My kingdom is not of this world" (John xviii. 36). "He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world shall keep it unto life eternal" (John xii. 25). "I am not of the world" (John xvii. 9). "Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body what ye shall put on. . . . Take therefore no thought for the morrow, for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself" (Matthew vi. 25, 34). "If any man comes to me and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life, he cannot be my disciple" (Luke xiv. 26). "Everyone that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive an hundred fold, and shall inherit everlasting life" (Matthew xix. 29). Even the disciple who wished to bury his father was advised by Christ to forego that duty of affection, for "Jesus said, Follow me; let the dead bury the dead."

The fact is, Christ was a spiritualiser, and not a social reformer. If he had been to his age what Bacon and Newton were to theirs, and what Darwin, Spencer, Huxley, and Tyndall have been to the present generation; if he had written a book teaching men how to avoid the miseries of life; if he had revealed the mysteries of nature, and exhibited the beauties of the arts and sciences, what an advantage he would have conferred upon mankind, and what an important contribution he would have given to the world towards solving the problems of our present social wrongs and inequalities. But the usefulness of Jesus was impaired by the idea which he entertained, that this world was but a state of probation, wherein the human family were to be prepared for another and a better home, where "the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest."

We have thus seen the views of the scientist, the historian, and the professor, upon the subject under consideration; it will now be interesting to learn what one of the successors to the apostles has to say in reference to the same question. B. F. Westcott, D.D., the present Bishop of Durham, in his work, Social Aspects of Christianity, says: "Of all places in the world, the Abbey, I think, proclaims the social gospel of Christ with the most touching eloquence. . . . If I am a Christian, I must bring within the range of my religion every interest and difficulty of man, 'for other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ.'"

This is not by any means correct, for many other "foundations," which have nothing to do with Christ, have been laid, and upon them systems, some good and some bad, have been built. For instance, there are Individualism, Socialism, material standards of progress, unlimited competition, and the application of science. These are "other foundations" that men have had apart altogether from Christ. But the solution to present social evils, Dr. Westcott considers, is to be found only in the Christian faith. He says: "We need to show the world the reality of spiritual power. We need to gain and exhibit the idea that satisfies the thoughts, the aspirations, the aims of men straining towards the light." He admits that science has increased our power and resources; but, he adds, it "cannot open the heavens and show the glory of God, and Jesus standing at the right hand of God." Of course it cannot; for science has nothing to do with the impossible, or with the wild speculations of theology. In the Social Aspects of Christianity, as presented by the Bishop, it would be difficult, indeed, to recognise the principles of true Socialism. Moreover, as it is admitted by him that science has increased our "power and resources," it is a proof that Jesus must have been a poor reformer, when we remember that he did nothing whatever to aid this strong element of modern progress.

From the references which I have here made to some of the ablest writers of to-day, it will be seen how Jesus is estimated by them. I now propose to analyse the various statements which, according to the Four Gospels, were uttered by him, that have any bearing upon the political and social questions of our time. It will then be seen whether Christ has any claim to be considered a political and social reformer.

CHARLES WATTS.

(To be continued.)

Digitized by Google

THE OLD AND THE NEW.

Our fathers did the best they could. They believed in the supernatural, and they thought that sacrifice and prayer, fasting and weeping, would induce the supernatural to give them sunshine, rain, and harvest—long life in this world, and eternal joy in another. To them, God was an absolute monarch, quick to take offence, sudden in anger, terrible in punishment, jealous, hateful to his enemies, generous to his favorites. They believed also in the existence of an evil God—almost the equal of the other God in strength, and a little superior in cunning. Between these two Gods was the soul of man, like a mouse between two paws.

Both of these Gods inspired fear. Our fathers did not quite love God, nor quite hate the Devil; but they were afraid of both. They really wished to enjoy themselves with God in the next world, and with the Devil in this. They believed that the course of nature was affected by their conduct; that floods and storms, diseases, earthquakes, and tempests were sent as punishments, and that all good phenomena were rewards.

Everything was under the control and direction of supernatural powers. The air, the darkness, were filled with angels and devils; witches and wizards planned and plotted against the pious—against the true believers. Eclipses were produced by the sins of the people, and the unusual was regarded as the miraculous. In the good old times Christendom was an insane-asylum, and insane priests and prelates were the keepers. There was no science. The people did not investigate—did not think. They trembled and believed. Ignorance and superstition ruled the Christian world.

At last a few began to observe, to make records, and to think.

It was found that eclipses came at certain intervals, and that their coming could be foretold. This demonstrated that the actions of men had nothing to do with eclipses. A few began to suspect that earthquakes and storms had natural causes, and happened without the slightest reference to mankind.

Some began to doubt the existence of evil spirits, or the interference of good ones in the affairs of the world. Finding out something about astronomy, the great number, the certain and continuous motions of the planets, and the fact that many of them were vastly larger than the earth—ascertaining something about the earth—the slow development of forms—the growth and distribution of plants, the formation of islands and continents, the parts played by fire, water, and air through countless centuries—the kinship of all life—fixing the earth's place in the constellation of the sun—by experiment and research discovering a few secrets of chemistry—by the invention of printing and the preservation and dissemination of facts, theories, and thoughts, they were enabled to break a few chains of superstition—to free themselves a little from the dominion of the supernatural, and to set their faces towards the light. Slowly the number of investigators and thinkers increased—slowly the real facts were gathered—the sciences began to appear—the old beliefs grew a little absurd—the supernatural retreated, and ceased to interfere in the ordinary affairs of men.

Schools were founded, children were taught, books were printed, and the thinkers increased. Day by day confidence lessened in the supernatural, and day by day men were more and more impressed with the idea that man must be his own protector, his own providence. From the mists and darkness of savagery and superstition emerged the dawn of the natural. A sense of freedom took possession of the mind, and the soul began to dream of its power. On every side were invention and discovery, and bolder thought. The Church began to regard the friends of science as its foes. Theologians resorted to chain and fagot—to mutilation and torture.

The thinkers were denounced as heretics and Atheists—as the minions of Satan and the defamers of Christ. All the prejudice, ignorance, and malice of superstition were aroused, and all united for the destruction of investigation and thought. For centuries this conflict was waged. Every outrage was perpetrated, every crime committed by the believers in the supernatural. But, in spite of all, the disciples of the natural increased, and the power of the Church waned. Now the intelligence of the world is on the side of the natural. Still the conflict goes on—the supernatural constantly losing, and the natural constantly gaining. In a few years the victory of science over superstition will be complete and universal.

So there have been for many centuries two philosophies of life: one in favor of the destruction of the passions—the lessening of wants—and absolute reliance on some higher power; the other, in favor of the reasonable gratification of the passions—the increase of wants, and their supply by industry, ingenuity, and invention, and the reliance of man on his own efforts. Diogenes, Epictetus, Socrates, to some extent Buddha, and Christ, all taught the first philosophy. All despised riches and luxury—all were the enemies of art and music—the despisers of good clothes and good food and good homes. They were the philosophers of poverty and rags—of huts and hovels—of ignorance and faith. They preached the glories of another world, and the miseries of this. They derided the prosperous, the industrious, those who enjoyed life, and reserved heaven for beggars.

This philosophy is losing authority, and now most people are anxious to be happy here in this life. Most people want food, and roof, and raiment—books, and pictures, and luxury, and leisure. They believe in developing the brain—in making servants and slaves of the forces of Nature.

Now the intelligent of the world have cast aside the teachings, the philosophy of the ascetics. They no longer believe in the virtue of fasting and self-torture. They believe that happiness is the only good, and that the time to be happy is now, here, in this world. They no longer believe in the rewards and punishments of the supernatural. They believe in consequences, and that the consequences of bad actions are evil, and the consequences of good actions are good.

They believe that man, by investigation, by reason, should find out the conditions of happiness, and then live and act in accordance with such conditions. They do not believe that earthquakes, or tempests, or volcanoes, or eclipses are caused by the conduct of men. They no longer believe in the supernatural. They do not regard themselves as the serfs, servants, slaves, or favorites of a celestial king. They feel that many evils can be avoided by intelligence, and for that reason they believe in the development of the brain. The school-house is their church, and the university their cathedral. The teacher, the interpreter of Nature, is their preacher, and all the truths that have been demonstrated constitute their creed.

They believe in the gospel of Intelligence, and they wish to save the world from ignorance, superstition, and misery.

The New Religion satisfies the heart and brain.

The Old Religion is cruel, childish, and absurd. The Old Religion was in perfect harmony with a flat world, with a little heaven above it, and a large hell beneath. The Old Religion had a powerful savage, an immense barbarian for a god, and another savage for a devil. Man at his best was a poor slave, whose happiness and misery dwelt in the smiles and frowns of these supernatural monsters.

The New Religion has destroyed these phantoms. The universe is no longer governed by a tyrant, and man at last is free.

The Supernatural has almost gone, but the Natural remains—the Gods have faded, but Man is here.

—Truth Seeker Annual. R. G. Ingersoll.

How to Help Us.

(1) Get your newsagent to take a few copies of the Freethinker and try to sell them, guaranteeing to take the copies that remain unsold.

(2) Take an extra copy (or more), and circulate it among your acquaintances.

(3) Leave a copy of the Freethinker now and then in the train, the car, or the omnibus.

(4) Display, or get displayed, one of our contents-sheets, which are of a convenient size for the purpose. Mr. Forder will send them on application.

(5) Distribute some of our cheap tracts in your walks abroad, at public meetings, or among the audiences around street-corner preachers.

(6) Get your newsagent to exhibit the Freethinker in the window.

Digitized by Google

THE DRAMA IN 1894.

THE Freethinker is by nature concerned with all that tends to raise and enliven and beautify life. And the drama is one of the most powerful of the culture-influences of the present day. The stage has become the vehicle for teaching, and often discussion; on it are thrashed out some of the most important problems of our social life. And, much as the problem-play has been decried, much as we have been appealed to to relinquish the strong meats of Ibsen and Pinero and Grundy for the milk-sop of the Adelphi or the semi-music-hall burlesque, yet experience has shown that the "problem-play" has come to stay. It may, therefore, be not out of place to take a brief look round at the stage output of the year that has just closed.

The first thing to remark is that there has been no play produced during 1894 to rank with "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray." That work, by common consent, has been adjudged first place. Even when all deductions have been made, when we have agreed that the main cause of Mrs. Tanqueray's wreck was not that which the author evidently intended to be the cause—nay, even when we have perceived that the moral which the play was popularly supposed to teach was vitiated by the author's creation of the happy, self-satisfied Lady Orreys; when all has been said, it still remains that "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray" represents alike the high-water mark of Mr. Pinero's genius and of the modern English drama. But if nothing to equal Mr. Pinero's play has been seen, it has had its effect. As a critic in one of the reviews recently remarked, we seem destined as one result to be treated to a series of "women with pasts," personally conducted across the footlights by hands less skilful than Mr. Pinero's. Indeed, it would be safe to say that a play is not now considered complete without a Magdalen somewhere or other in the cast. There does not seem any very obvious reason why this should be the case. But the success of a master will always beget imitators.

Nothing, however, has come from Mr. Pinero's pen during 1894. He is engaged on a new piece to which everyone is looking forward. But if Mr. Pinero has been silent, others have been prolific. Mr. Henry Arthur Jones has produced two notable plays, "The Masqueraders" at the St. James's, and "The Case of Rebellious Susan" at the Criterion. "The Masqueraders" gained the popular favor mainly through the melodramatic card scene, in which David Remon, a dreamy astronomer and sincere lover, plays a game for the woman he loves with the husband who maltreats her and whom she hates. There was not very much else of great interest in the play; though the upshot of "The Masqueraders" illustrates, at least to us, a singular hesitancy, which seems constitutional in Mr. Jones, to face the logical issues of his plots—a tendency to hedge at the last moment in deference to Mrs. Grundy. In the reviews and magazines there is no more strong-worded opponent of Mrs. Grundy than Mr. H. A. Jones. Passage after passage we might quote in which he has brilliantly assailed the cast-iron conventions and social shams that hamper art and life. Yet, when he comes to write his plays, his courage seems to ooze out at the pen-point; it is doubtless his temperament, for there is no reason for believing that he writes with his eye on the box-office.

Take, for instance, some of his recent plays. In "The Masqueraders" David Remon is truly the husband in spirit of Dulcie Larondie. She is tied to a drunken, gambling, dissolute brute, whom she hates, and even loathes, because of the odious suggestions he makes to her; on the other hand, she apparently returns Remon's love. Remon is invited by her husband to play, and the husband accepts Remon's bargain. Remon wins, and Dulcie goes with him to his observatory. Now, the natural result would be for Remon and Dulcie Larondie to live together happily as man and wife. The social conventions would, of course, be shocked; it would be adultery. But it would be the healthy, sane, proper ending; better a union like that than the sham union of Dulcie and Sir Bruce Skene. Yet Mr. Jones higgles. At the last he makes David's brother fetch him away, telling him that the platitudes which Dulcie's sister talks represent the "voice of God." Mr. Jones, in fact, seems to have been afraid to let David Remon and Dulcie live together. It would have been too outrageous.

In the same way Mr. Jones made an inconsequential play out of "The Bauble Shop" last year. The thesis—avowed thesis—of the play was that a politician who "went wrong" (in the conventional sense) was often very much better than the man who denounced him; and it was intended to illustrate the large amount of hypocrisy that enters into "purity" crusades. But Lord Clivebrook and Jessie Keber were as innocent, as far as one could judge, as the most zealous Vigilance Society could desire. The result was that all the pull-devil-pull-baker business about nothing made a farce out of what might have been a good play. Mr. Jones again was afraid; and even in his last work the same thing has to be said. Lady Susan and her calf-lover are enveloped in a mystic haze. Mr. Jones takes as the text of the play: "If women may not retaliate openly, they will retaliate secretly—and lie." But there is the greatest doubt as to what happened on that Sunday afternoon in Cairo, so much doubt that Mr. Labouchere headed a clever article in Truth "Is Susan Really Rebellious?" Mr. Jones seems again to be hesitant. And, as there is no compulsion on him to deal with the problems of sex relationship in his plays, it is all the more surprising that he should voluntarily get himself or his characters into such positions.

However, to turn to another dramatist of rank. Mr. Sydney Grundy must be congratulated on having scored several successes during the year. "An Old Jew," at the beginning, was a comparative failure, but "A Bunch of Violets" at the Haymarket, and "The New Woman" at the Comedy, went splendidly. "A Bunch of Violets" dealt with the career of a financial trickster, a la Jabez, who trades on his goody-goody surroundings and his charitable reputation to swindle large sums out of a blunt Yorkshireman, who had not so much portable virtue. Amongst the many admirable societies to which Sir Philip Marchant belongs is the Sunday Anti-Enjoyment League. Ultimately, having been proved to be a bigamist, he commits suicide. So ends the man of sanctity.

The other success of Mr. Grundy's, "The New Woman,' was a very clever caricature. The "old woman," who glories in "obeying" her husband and so forth, is held up in contrast to her "new" rival, much to the disadvantage of the latter. Mr. Grundy hits off the extravagances of the new movement admirably—the ladies who write books called Men the Betrayer, and Naked but Not Ashamed, and The Ethics of Marriage. All this hitting was very clever; but, of course, it was caricature. In order to plead for the removal of unjust laws and conventions, which even still restrict women's freedom, it is in no wise necessary to bounce about like a savage, wear ridiculous costumes, and talk brilliant nonsense to everybody who doesn't want to hear you. Nor is there any reason why a woman might not have all the grace and charm and sweetness of Marjorie; and a good deal of the sweet and charm, we fancy, was Miss Emery's nature rather than Mr. Grundy's art—without being a giddy, ignorant, frivolous little doll. But Mr. Grundy's play, of course, was not meant seriously as an attack on the ideals that underlie what has come to be called the new woman movement.

And we suppose we must add to Mr. Grundy's list "Slaves of the Ring," produced on December 29 at the Garrick; which makes Mr. Grundy the most prolific playwright of the year. "Slaves of the Ring" is a great play, too, and it is a realist play—realist in the best sense of the word. For true realism need not, and does not, perpetually concern itself with the dung-heap and the cess-pool; these things certainly are part of life, and in the rebound against the old it is well to emphasise that they exist. But there is the realism of "Slaves of the Ring" that refuses to end well and make everyone live happily ever after. "You know well enough that things don't really happen like that," says Ibsen's Petra. Tragedies are not so easily settled in real life as they are on the Surrey-side stage.

Mr. Beerbohm Tree has not had a very successful year. There was a pretty little fairy story, "Once upon a Time," which really, as an allegory illustrating the make-believe of the multitude on matters of which they are ignorant, was charming. The crowd who pretend to see the king's fine clothes when really there are none, and persuade themselves they see lest their fellows should think them fools or knaves—all this hit popular superstition to the heart. But the play was not a success, which, under the circumstances, is not surprising. And Mr. Tree also produced a moderately successful play of Robert Buchanan's, called "The Charlatan," which was directed at Theosophy. There was a Madame Obnoskin, a Russian adventuress, and a hysterical young lady who was shown a vision of her father by occult means, and so on. But it was more or less flat. Indeed, it is curious that Mr. Buchanan, master as he is of a pungent, full-bodied, biting style of prose, is yet not very convincing as a dramatist.

Digitized by Google

But one cannot omit in these columns to thank Mr. Tree for his reviving, and to some extent popularising, Ibsen's "An Enemy of the People"—perhaps the most defiantly Freethought play put on the English stage. It is not likely that allegories, and, least of all, such an one as this, will ever reach great popularity. But Mr. Tree's excellent personation of the heroic Stockmann fighting a world in arms, the perfect revelation—as in a flash—of how every "vested interest" is enlisted against an unpopular truth, and the demonstration that truth is even strongest and most feared when it is most attacked; all this won thousands of admirers. Take, for instance, this one extract from Stockmann's speech to the public meeting—a speech that ought to be circulated almost as a Freethought tract, and then judge of the effect of the performance. We quote from Mrs. Marx Aveling's translation in Mr. Archer's edition:—

Dr. Stockmann: "I'm going to revolt against the lie that truth resides in the majority. What sort of truths do the majority rally round? Truths that are decrepit with age. When a truth is so old as that it's in a fair way to become a lie, gentlemen. (Laughter and jeers.) Yes, yes, you may believe me or not, as you please; but truths are by no means the wiry Methusalehs some people think them. A normally-constituted truth lives—let me say—as a rule, seventeen or eighteen years; at the outside twenty; seldom longer. And truths so stricken in years are always shockingly thin; yet it's not till then that the majority takes them up and recommends them to society as wholesome food. I can assure you there's not much nutriment in that sort of fare; you may take my word as a doctor for that. All these majority truths are like last year's salt pork; they're like rancid, mouldy ham, producing all the moral scurvy that devastates society."

Such is a sample of the style, not very eloquent or polished perhaps, with no brilliant epigrams or daintily-worded commonplaces, but plain, direct, straight to the point, as becomes the character who utters it. For Stockmann is not one of your yellow drawing-room butterflies; he is a type of the sterlingly honest, clear-eyed thinker. And one owes some gratitude to the manager who put such a play on his stage.

But we have transgressed beyond our limits, we fear. We can only say, in conclusion, that in the drama too we can trace the influence of what we have called the Freethought spirit. We are leaving the old, worn-out, rosy-colored but false style behind. We want to see life as it is, not as in an imaginary world imaginary characters might be; we want real men and women on the stage, not fairies and phantoms, who talk a language that never was talked, and live a life that never was lived. And one has only to glance at the drift of things to see how far we are moving towards that ideal. Frederick Ryan.

God Sends the Little Babies.

They say, "God sends the little babies." Of all the dastardly revolting lies men tell to suit themselves, I hate that most. I suppose my father said so when he knew he was dying of consumption, and my mother when she knew she had nothing to support me on, and they created me to be fed from stranger hands. Men do not say God sends the books, or the newspaper articles, or the machines they make, and then sigh and shrug their shoulders, and say they can't help it. Why do they say so about other things? Liars! "God sends the little babies!" the small children say so earnestly. They touch the little stranger reverently who has just come from God's far country, and they peep about the room to see if not one white feather has dropped from the wing of the angel that brought him. On their lips the phrase means much; on all others it is a deliberate lie. Noticeable, too, when people are married, though they should have sixty children, they throw the whole onus on God. When they are not, we hear nothing about God's having sent them. When there has been no legal contract between the parents, who sends the little children then? The devil, perhaps! Odd that some should come from hell and some from heaven, and yet all look so much alike when they get here.—Olive Schreiner, "The Story of an African Farm."

ACID DROPS.

Parnell is said to have referred to Tim Healy as "the dirtiest little hound in all his pack." When the split came Tim did his best—and it was a very good best—to justify this description. The language he used about his old "chief" was simply disgusting; and still more disgusting the language he used about the unfortunate woman who shared in Parnell's calamity. Tim was always "on the make." All his variations have been determined by one motive. Years ago, at a South London meeting in favor of Home Rule, after a speech by Mr. Foote, Tim Healy said that Irishmen had watched his brave struggle for freedom with much sympathy. The remark served the turn at the moment, which was all it was intended to do. Tim is now on quite another tack. He is the most conspicuous champion of the Catholic hierarchy. His latest denunciation is launched at men like Michael Davitt and T. P. O'Connor for opposing Cardinal Vaughan's orders to the London Catholics to support the Diggleites in the School Board elections. Cardinal Vaughan, Tim says, was "simply carrying out the Gospel and the mandate of his Master." Tim Healy is shrewd. Now that Parnell is gone, he sees that the Church is the greatest force in Ireland, and he means to be on the winning side.

Mrs. Besant has left Australia and gone to India. We understand there are Mahatmas somewhere in that part of the world, and Mrs. Besant should really bring one home with her. It is all very well to say, as she does in her hasty letter to the Daily Chronicle, that she is a member of the Theosophic inner circle, which is pledged to secrecy like the Freemasons. The world at large—except in relation to its inherited religions—is sane enough, in the long run, to turn away from a curtain that is never lifted, and to say, "There is nothing behind it."

Mrs. Besant does not appear to see that she is playing the old confidence trick, which is really the basis of Paley's defence of the Christian miracles. Have I not been before the public for twenty years? she asks, and have I ever been detected in falsehood? Just in the same way, Paley argued that the Apostles were good men and true, that they suffered hardships in maintaining what they taught; therefore they were entitled to be believed, and, therefore, it is a fact that Jesus Christ rose from the dead. All this is logical hocus-pocus. Honesty in a witness does not prove the accuracy of his evidence. Every sensible person recognises this in daily life, and to ignore it in religion or philosophy is to hand one's self over to the dominion of the most vulgar credulity.

"I am a lady" is the burden of all Mrs. Besant's explanations and defences. The Westminster Gazette was unchivalrous in opening its batteries on the Theosophical Society while she was at the antipodes! It does not occur to her that it might be asserted, per contra, that she had gone off in order to be out of the way when the attack was delivered. Newspapers must deal with matters of immediate interest. They cannot wait until Mrs. Besant tells them it is convenient for her that they should begin.

High Churchmen, last week, were celebrating the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the execution of that pedantic bigot and callous persecutor, Archbishop Laud. Relics of this unfortunate man of God were publicly exhibited—such as his chair, his chalice, and his red skull-cap. The exhibition would have been far more interesting if it had included the sword of Oliver Cromwell, with the expressive if inelegant inscription, "I settled the blooming lot."

It was under Laud that Dr. Leighton, a Scotch divine, father of Archbishop Leighton, was punished for writing Zion's Zeal against Prelacy. For this offence he was fined £10,000, imprisoned for life, put in the pillory, whipped, and after whipping had one of his ears cut off, one side of his nose slit, and was branded on the forehead with "S. S." (sower of sedition); after this his other ear was cropped and the other nostril slit. Laud pulled off his cap when this merciless sentence was pronounced, and gave God thanks for it.

Hugh Price Hughes is back again, and the judges are once more complaining of perjury in Wales.

Hughes had a great reception at St. James's Hall on returning from his six months' holiday. By arrangement the meeting stood up and sang the Doxology, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow." Did they include "The Atheist Shoemaker"?

A very pious man at Thorncliffe Collieries, near Barnsley, is in the habit of carrying God's Word about with him.

Digitized by Google

Recently he was missed for two days, and when he was discovered his only companions were the Bible and a keen frost. The skin of his legs came off with his stockings. Of course we have all read of the Bible stopping bullets on a battle-field, but it doesn't seem able to counteract the cold.

The ancient wheeze about the pious soldier who was saved through a bullet lodging in the Bible which he carried in his pocket right over his sympathetic heart was improved on the other day by a Wellington evangelist. According to this man's story, a private, who was serving in Havelock's army when it entered Lucknow, had the usual Scripture buttoned inside his waistcoat and adjacent to his stomach, and while thus encumbered he was rushed by two mutineers—one in front with a gun, and one on the flank carrying a large axe. The Briton's own rifle was empty, and he felt that it was all up with him. Therefore, he uttered a silent prayer, and was going to lay on with the butt-end; but at that thrilling moment the man in front fired, and the bullet glanced off the Bible and killed the person with the axe; and, before the gunner could reload, the British soldier leaped on him and pounded him to death. This, said the speaker, was another proof that Providence was a great institution; and the audience evidently believed him. The average mission audience, in fact, will believe anything.

John Angell Gibbons, a well-known evangelist, named after Angell James, is a fallen angel. He was, for a considerable time, superintendent of a mission, held at Pin Mill Brow, Higher Ardwick, and in that capacity obtained a credit account at Mr. John Heywood's, the well-known publishing firm. From time to time he visited Heywood's place, and was detected stealing. When his house was searched three hundred and sixty new books, one hundred and twenty-eight of which were identified as stolen from Heywood's, were discovered. His counsel gave him a high character for religion, and contended he was a victim of kleptomania. The magistrate thought six months' imprisonment a proper prescription for the evangelist's disease.

Miss Tessa L. Kelso, librarian of the Public Library of Los Angeles, California, has sued the Rev. J. W. Campbell, of that city, for praying for her in public. She is said to be a "worthy young woman," and recently advised the purchase of certain books for the library. The offensive prayer was to this effect: "O Lord, vouchsafe thy saving grace to the librarian of the Los Angeles City Library, and cleanse her from all sin and make her worthy of her office." The prayer has been declared to be slanderous, and Miss Kelso demands $5,000 for "the defamation of her character in public."

Those who like to see Bibliolaters striving to squirm gracefully will enjoy the following from a Christian Evidence writer on the stoppage of the sun when Joshua fought the Amorites: "The whole narrative is perfectly consonant with reason and experience. Joshua makes a forced march all night to the relief of Gibeon, and when the rising sun and waning moon both have influence he makes the attack on the besieging army. He requires a continuance of the light, and the great God of the universe, in whom we believe, hears his petition by bringing natural forces to operate for the desired purpose at the precise time required."

This is not the best of it. The following is still more delicious: "An analogy is given in the action of Sir Garnet Wolsey at Tel-el-Kebir. He, like Joshua, wanted neither moonlight nor sunlight, but a mixture of both, so that the enemy could not see his approach. A mistake of half an hour would have been fatal to the whole British force, and a similar error in the case of Joshua would have resulted in the total annihilation of the Israelitish army. So closely do the two cases parallel each other that one is strongly inclined to think that the British Commander specially took Joshua as his guide and pattern."

We have reason to believe (says the English Churchman) that Cardinal Vaughan is pushing the claims of the Papacy in every department of English life. Information reaches us that he now holds courts, and exercises judicial functions. On one recent occasion he sat in great state, wearing the well-known historic robes of a Papal prince, and having the assistance of two of Her Majesty's County Court judges as legal assessors.

Cardinal Vaughan got his secretary, Monsignor Johnson, to say that he only acted as arbitrator in disputes between Catholics who loyally accepted his decision as final. This, however, appears not to have been the case with Mrs. Alice Laidlaw, who sued Father Fleming for £100. The Cardinal arbitrated in the priest's favor, but Judge French at the Bow County Court decided in favor of the lady, with costs.

"Peter Lombard," in the Church Times, laments the growing neglect of "kowtowing" in Church at every mention of the Lord's name. "Merely as a protest against Unitarianism, the wholesome practice should not be dropped." The inculcation of bowing is part of the game of inducing people to order themselves lowly and reverently.

The Jewish Rabbi at Hampstead has been insisting on the necessity of strict observance of the Sabbath. The priests of all religions are the same. They want the day reverenced and observed on which they come to the front. The motto of these would-be monopolists is, "No competition with our business."

John Burns has returned from America full of admiration for the public school system. He says the classes are smaller and better managed than at home. A correspondent of the Times, however, says that the common school system is largely going down before the Church, and especially the Roman Catholic, schools. It seems that, while 13,000,000 scholars are enrolled, there is only a daily average attendance of 8,329,234, and that the increase of scholars does not keep pace with the population of the States.

Christians are laggards in the path of secular progress, but when they come to a point which Freethinkers have long passed they generally ejaculate a lusty cock-a-doodle-doo. Some of our readers, perhaps many of them, will remember that Charles Bradlaugh once called a demonstration in Hyde Park to protest against the English slaughter of the Egyptians. The ministers of religion were dumb dogs; few of them whined, fewer still barked, against the iniquity; for the poor Egyptians were foreigners, and, worse still, Mohammedans—followers of that "Arab thief," as the Wesleys called him in their hymn-book. It was the Atheist who raised a voice on behalf of humanity, and all he got for his pains was brutal ill-treatment, which nearly robbed him of his life.

Peace principles have made much progress since then. "Now," says the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, "the very idea of war is utterly loathsome, except as a patriotic act." Surely there is much force in that "now." Why was it not always so, in the old days of Christian supremacy? Was it not Wordsworth, the Christian poet, who sang!—

> But Thy most dreaded instrument
> In working out a pure intent
> Is man arrayed for mutual slaughter;
> Yea, Carnage is thy daughter.

Mr. Hughes might also read a famous sermon by the great Baptist preacher, Robert Hall, addressed to soldiers who were going forth to fight the French. Such a sermon could not be preached "now." But we owe no thanks for this to Christianity. We owe them to the general spread of common sense and humanity.

The good Christians of Liverpool cannot let the Moslems of that city perform their devotions in peace. The Crescent reports that on Sunday evening last the snow lay heavily on the ground, and when the Muezzin, Brother A. Hassan Radford, went to give the Azan, a mob of Christians, who had collected near the Mosque, rushed forward and pelted the "caller to prayer" with snowballs. He was struck on various parts of the body, and one of his hands was severely cut open by the sharp edge of a stone which had been enclosed in one of the snowballs. Some hundreds of missiles were thrown, and many of them contained stones.

The male big drummer and the female cornet player of a Dumfriesshire Salvation Army band having simultaneously disappeared, an elopement is inferred. The drummer's wife is left lamenting.

It appears from Mr. Bramwell Booth's just-published account of Work in Darkest England that the financial aspect of Booth's much-vaunted scheme is very unsatisfactory. The Farm Colony has incurred a loss during the past year of £2,445 6s. 4d., and the City Colony of £4,423 12s. 4d., although the Food and Shelter section boasts a profit of £1,179; though it may be doubted, after the recent revelations of the poor woman who died from cold and exposure after paying twopence for her bunk, if the General can place this profit to his heavenly, or, at any rate, to his humanitarian, credit. The Hanbury-street Shelter, where the recent scandal took place, shows a profit of £6. The item of "firewood" also shows a respectable profit; but we are reminded of the wood-choppers who have complained of being driven to the workhouse because Booth spoiled their trade.

The curious fact, which, however, will not surprise readers of Salvation Syrup, is that, speaking generally, the Salvation Army, or Mr. Booth, has earned profits on such charitable schemes as the shelters, where losses might be expected, and provided for by generosity; but has incurred very marked losses on the industrial experiments, which can only pauperise unless they succeed financially. The accounts for 1894 show that, as a social experiment, the Salvation Army has been no more able to turn the "out of works" into profitable workers than before. The work done, therefore, can only have a bad effect on wages and prices in the ordinary labor market. And all there is to set against this is the record of an experiment.

Digitized by Google

In allusion to the story of John Morley going to prayers and joining in the singing of hymns "heartily and reverently," as told by Dr. Berry, a correspondent cites a passage from Morley's book on Compromise (p. 170), in which he says such conduct in others "is very edifying to all who are not in the secret, and who do not know that they are acting a part, and making a mock both of their own reason and their own probity, merely to please persons whose delusions they pity and despise from the bottom of their hearts. On the surface there is nothing to distinguish this kind of conduct from the grossest hypocrisy." We suppose the right honorable gentleman, now he is a statesman, has got under the surface.

We read in the Christian World that the Rev. David Thomas, the Grand Old Man of the Homilist, is "gone to his grave, like a shock of corn fully ripe." We never heard of a shock of corn going to its grave, but we presume that the Rev. David Thomas is dead and buried. "No thinker of the present century," we are told, "supplied so many thoughts for pulpit use." "He went in for pith and point and power." Naturally we looked out for a sample. And here it is—a bit of his versification; Martin Tupper himself couldn't call it poetry:—

> Never may sect-zeal pervert them,
> Narrow creed or priestly rite;
> God guard our pulpits from all bigots,
> And grant our preachers Christly light.

This is described as "his own characteristic prayer." What a "thinker"! What "pith" and "point" and "power"!

Christians are in communication with God Almighty, but they are no better at prophecy than other people. Dr. Parker and Canon Scott Holland have both given a glimpse of the twentieth century in Great Thoughts—worthy receptacle of the ideas of such tremendous personages. And what is the result? We quote from a Christian paper: "Everything that the one confidently declares is going to happen, the other, with equal confidence, assures the world is exactly what will not take place."

The Rev. Mr. Collect says he believes in personal religion. He pronounces it "purse an all."

The Lord Mayor of Liverpool (Councillor W. H. Watts) has expressed the opinion that there is nothing for the unemployed but to "let them go to the devil." This has evoked much feeling and controversy. The Lord Mayor is a Liberal, a Baptist, and evidently a follower of the "Manchester School." He was one of those who voted against granting the use of the Picton Lecture Hall for the N.S.S. Conference. In what does his "Liberalism" consist?

The Westminster Gazette, noticing the centenary of the London Missionary Society, concludes by mentioning that "the missionaries prepared the way and made the path straight for the Imperial authority." This looks much as if the chief use of Christianity was to make the running for Mammon.

The religious people are much elated because the Emperor of China, having heard that the Empress had been presented with a Bible by some Christian ladies, also sent and bought a "Jesus religion book." Despite its calamities, there is little likelihood of China turning to Christianity, which by no means suits the character of the people as well as the simpler ethical precepts of Confucius.

In the good old days the priests well knew they had only to convert a king or chieftain in order to obtain the following of his people; and the majority of the nations of Europe were converted to Christianity in this way. In the so-called mediæval romance entitled Floire et Blancefor the hero becomes a convert to Christianity, and no sooner is he received into the Church than he compels all his subjects to follow his example:

> Qui le baptesme refusoit,
> Ne en Diu croire ne voloit,
> Floire les faisoit escorchier,
> Ardoir en fu ou destrenchier.
>
> (Those who refused baptism,
> And would not believe in God,
> Floire caused to be flayed,
> Burnt in the fire, or beheaded.)

The American arch obscenist, Anthony Comstock, who has made himself notorious by prosecuting editions of Tom Jones and Roderick Random, and who is said to blush at the mention of the legs and drawers of a desk, has been charged with accepting bribes. If the immaculate Anthony is corrupt, where can virtue be found in America?

The Twentieth Century, of New York, says: "Of all the crimes committed in the name of Christianity, perhaps none calls for more severe condemnation than does the Trinity corporation. This trust, organised for the purpose of saving souls, has a capital of $160,000,000, and an annual income of $900,000, drawn principally from the most wretched class of New York's poor. Out of its tenant population of 1,681 there has been a mortality of 273, making the death-rate of Trinity's tenements thirty-five per cent. higher than the general death-rate of the city. This may be saving souls, but it is a process that sacrifices bodies, and such a process is generally known as murder."

The Rev. R. Heffernan, a Catholic priest, appears to have come to his death by an accident while intoxicated at the Albion Hotel, Chester. It appears that the rev. gentleman was in the habit of going to bed drunk.

Some people with a good deal of time on their hands, and others with personal grievances to air, have been writing to the Newcastle Weekly Chronicle on "The Decline of Secularism." The last person who joins in the correspondence is Mr. G. J. Holyoake, who displays his old fondness for suggesting that hardly anybody ever understood Secularism but himself. He admits that Secular principles are spreading, but he complains that Secular Societies are too anti-theological. But is not this a very cheap complaint? Is it possible for Secular Societies, as such, to take a great part in "other work"? They are tabooed socially after being robbed legally. We invite Mr. Holyoake to tell us what he himself has ever done for this "other work" in connection with any Secular organisation? Has he not been obliged to do it as an independent individual? And if this has been his own experience, why on earth does he spend so much time in lecturing other people for being as unfortunate as himself?

Robert Louis Stevenson hoped to die with his clothes on, and the hope was realised. This has led to a correspondence in the Westminster Gazette on the prayer in the Church of England liturgy against "battle, murder, and sudden death." One writer says it only means a death unprepared for; the sudden death doesn't matter if we are always "ready to meet our God." But this was not the idea of the Church when the prayer in the liturgy originated. The idea was that we might not die suddenly, perhaps after some mortal sin, for which we had not received absolution. Julius Cæsar, and other men of heroic mould, preferred a sudden death instead of long sickness or slow decay; and, indeed, the only objection to it, if our worldly affairs are settled, is the distress which a sudden shock might give to the dear ones we leave behind us.

J. S. Mill on his Father.

I have a hundred times heard him say that all ages and nations have represented their gods as wicked, in a constantly increasing progression; that mankind have gone on adding trait after trait till they reached the most perfect conception of wickedness which the human mind can devise, and have called this God and prostrated themselves before it. This ne plus ultra of wickedness he considered to be embodied in what is commonly presented to mankind as the creed of Christianity. "Think," he used to say, "of a being who would make a hell—who would create the human race with the infallible foreknowledge, and, therefore, with the intention, that the great majority of them were to be consigned to horrible and everlasting torment!"—J. S. Mill, "Autobiography," p. 41.

Obituary.

An advanced thinker and able historian has passed away in the person of Sir John Seeley, better known as Professor Seeley, of London and Cambridge. Professor Seeley first made his name by Ecce Homo, a work which Lord Shaftesbury described as "the worst book ever vomited forth from the jaws of hell," but which would now be considered a mildly rationalistic publication. His Natural Religion, which followed, was an equally thoughtful book, but did not excite the same interest. His most important historical work was the Life and Times of Stein, the Prussian land reformer.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Foote's Engagements.

January 27, Liverpool.
February 3, Manchester.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Mr. Charles Watts's Engagements.—January 20, Nottingham; 27, Hall of Science, London. February 3, Hall of Science, London; 10, Camberwell; 17, Plymouth; 24, Newcastle-on-Tyne. March 3, Manchester.—All communications for Mr. Watts should be sent to him (if a reply is required, a stamped and addressed envelope must be enclosed) at 81 Effra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

Lecture Notices must reach 28 Stonecutter-street by first post Tuesday, or they will not be inserted.

J. Tomlinson.—All religionists are Spiritualists. The small party which arrogates that denomination are really Spiritists. The essence of their system is personal communication with spirits. We mean no offence in designating them properly; nor can we see why they should be ashamed or hurt when we do so.

W. F. Wray writes: "As an appreciative reader of the Freethinker and of George Meredith, I suggest that you give us who live so far from London an opportunity of reading your lecture upon the latter, either in the former or in a pamphlet." We have not had the lecture reported, but the substance of it will be worked up in the Freethinker as soon as Mr. Foote gets time to do the writing.

J. Fulton.—Thanks. We hope to have the pleasure of seeing you in the spring, when we expect to visit Glasgow.

W. Dyson.—See paragraph.

E. Shedley.—Your orthodox friend should tell you what private right the clergy have to tithes, for instance. Thanks for the jokes. We have no doubt you will be pleased with Mr. Watts's lectures at Nottingham.

H. Peasody.—Your order is handed to Mr. Forder, to whom please send direct in future.

N.S.S. Benevolent Fund.—Miss E. M. Vance acknowledges:—Hull Branch, 6s.

C. Hughes.—(1) We are never offended by outspoken criticism which bears no trace of malignity. The world is wide enough for differences of opinion, and only a fool or a prig is offended at them. Will you, in turn, pardon us for saying that we think you have misread what we wrote about James Thomson and Charles Bradlaugh? It was only honest to state the reason which Thomson alleged at the final rupture, but we studiously refrained from approving or discussing it. (2) We do intend to write more literary articles in future in the Freethinker. Unfortunately, in one sense, we are much hampered by the heavy burden of presidential duties. We are glad to hear you have found our John Morley pamphlet useful.

G. J. Holyoake.—Thanks for cutting.

We have received for the Watts Election Fund:—J. Fulton, £1; J. K., 10s.

Mr. Foote's Fighting Fund.—F. W. Sirett, 2s. 6d.

Watts Election Fund.—Mr. G. Ward, treasurer, acknowledges: F. W. Sirett, 2s. 6d.; W. W. Roberts, 2s. 6d.

J. Sullivan.—Your question is obscure. Colonel Ingersoll has written many articles in the North American Review. Father Lambert's reply to Ingersoll is a poor and impudent production. The writer has no standing in America, where people would only laugh at Ingersoll for condescending to notice him.

W. H. Thresil.—We reciprocate your good wishes.

H. W. Jones.—Thanks. See "Sugar Plums."

E. Howard.—See paragraph.

C. Brown and H. Mills.—Received. Many thanks. The bird was deliciously tender, and should have been washed down with nectar from Olympus.

London Secular Federation.—Miss Annie Brown, secretary, acknowledges the following Dinner subscriptions received by her:—C. Thomas, £1; Mrs. Thomas, 10s.; C. J. Pottage, 10s.; W. Hardaker, 3s.; A Friend, 2s. 6d.—Full list in our next.

F. Attwood.—What was the subject of your verse? We do not recollect its arrival.

J. K.—Thanks. We hope there will be no earthquake.

J. C. Welch.—An amusing misprint, though not reproducible. Pleased to hear you value the Freethinker so highly as to take the pains to complete your set from the beginning.

A. J. W.—Your lines on Shelley possess merit, but are they not rather wild?

Papers Received.—Blackburn Times—Liverpool Mercury—Two Worlds—Eastern Daily Press—Labor Leader—Western Figaro—Progressive Thinker—Liberty—Newcastle Weekly Chronicle—Secular Thought—Liberator—Freedom—Der Lichtfreund—Der Arme Teufel—Freidenker—Fur Unsere Jugend—Kansas Lucifer—Scottish Guardian—Truthseeker—Open Court—Manchester Evening Mail—Eastbourne Chronicle.

Friends who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish to call our attention.

It being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will receive the number in a colored wrapper when their subscription expires.

Letters for the Editor of the Freethinker should be addressed to 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

The Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the publishing office, post free, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 10s. 6d.; Half Year, 5s. 3d.; Three Months, 2s. 8d.

Correspondence should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

Orders for literature should be sent to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Scale of Advertisements.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—(Narrow Column) one inch, 3s.; half column, 15s.; column, £1 10s. Broad Column—one inch, 4s. 6d.; half column, £1 2s. 6d.; column, £2 5s. Special terms for repetitions.

SPECIAL.

The Hall of Science Club Committee having given the Board of Directors a guarantee that no outside letting of the premises shall be made without their knowledge and consent; and the resolution of the Executive having been passed with a view to this condition being secured; I hereby—acting upon the terms of that resolution—declare the suspension of affiliation at an end; and announce that members of the National Secular Society visiting the Hall of Science are now free to participate in the Club privileges. G. W. Foote (President).

P.S.—The gratifying announcement I hoped to make this week, in addition to the above, is deferred until next week; not because I am not in a position to make it, but because I find it will take greater space than is here available.

SUGAR PLUMS.

The sudden setting in of milder weather on Sunday turned the streets of London into a dismal mud-swamp. In the circumstances, an excellent audience attended at the Hall of Science in the evening, when Mr. Foote lectured on "God's in his Heaven." Mr. Guest occupied the chair. This evening (January 20) the platform will be occupied by Mr. Touzeau Parris. We hope he will have a good meeting and a hearty reception.

Mr. Charles Watts had to contend against most severe weather in Leicester last Sunday, where he lectured twice. The bitter frost, snow, and wind made it most uninviting to venture from home. Still there was a good audience in the morning, and an excellent one in the evening. Mr. Watts always receives a hearty reception in Leicester, and Sunday was no exception. To-day (Sunday, January 20) he lectures three times in Nottingham.

Mr. Charles Watts has republished some of his recent articles in the Freethinker in a neat pamphlet, entitled "Why Do Right?" Our colleague displays thought, care, and eloquence, and we hope his pamphlet will enjoy a wide circulation.

The annual Children's Party will take place at the London Hall of Science on Wednesday, January 30. Tea will be served at 5.30 to as many children as the funds will provide for. A first-rate program of music, games, races, etc., has been arranged, and the proceedings are to terminate with an all-round distribution of toys. Adults can sit in the gallery and see the fun on payment of threepence, and it is well worth the money. Of course the Committee will be delighted to receive presents for the little ones in the shape of cake, oranges, apples, lemonade, etc. Even plum-pudding will not be declined. Equally, of course, the Committee will be pleased to receive subscriptions. Mr. Forder is treasurer, and Miss Vance secretary. There should be no lack of funds for such an entertainment.

Three Score and Ten Years (Scribner & Co.) is the title of a book of recollections by William James Linton, the poet, engraver, and author, who edited the National, the English Republic, and other advanced publications. Mr. Linton has interesting reminiscences of Mazzini, George Sand, Carlyle, Tennyson, O'Connor, Heywood, the Howitts, and others, as well as of the political and reform movements in which he participated.

Digitized by Google

London friends have not supplied us with the information to enable us to print a full list of Secularists returned in the late Vestry elections. Among the names hitherto omitted is that of Mr. George Standring, who was elected (unopposed) in No. 4 Ward of St. Luke's parish.

Mr. Thomas Hurley, who is ticketed "Socialist," and whose program included Secular Education, has been returned at the head of the poll in the Blackburn School Board elections. Mr. Hurley is a young man of ability, and a reader of the Freethinker.

The Westminster Branch held its half-yearly meeting on Sunday. Most of the old officers were re-elected. It was resolved to open the outdoor campaign in April; also that the local Free Library should be requested to include the Life of Charles Bradlaugh. As the Bell memorial wreath in Brompton Cemetery had been destroyed, no doubt by some religious fanatic, it was decided to substitute a marble slab.

The annual social party of the Failsworth Secular Sunday School was held on Saturday, January 12, and there was a large attendance. After tea the String Band discoursed acceptable music, and dancing, singing, and recitations completed a capital program.

The Bazaar is a strange paper in which to find the following answer to a correspondent: "No authentic reference to Jesus Christ is to be found anywhere outside the Gospels."

The death of Sir John Seeley reminds us of the ferment aroused by his Ecce Homo some twenty years since. Violently denounced, it yet did its work, and the orthodox find themselves glad to take up the position which formerly excited so much indignation.

The Monist for January is full of interesting philosophical matter. It opens with a posthumous essay, by Dr. Romanes, on "Longevity and Death." He says: "As after the breeding age is past the influence of natural selection is entirely withdrawn, the organism may be regarded as dead as soon as it has ceased to procreate; for any diseases which belong to old age will be allowed, by natural selection, to commit their ravages without let or hindrance, while diseases which belong to earlier periods of life will be, as far as possible, eliminated." Dr. Romanes frankly says that Mr. Darwin considered his views "speculative." As notable is a paper by Dr. Edmund Montgomery which follows, entitled "To be Alive: What is it?" Dr. Francis E. Abbot writes on "The Advancement of Ethics"; Moncure D. Conway on "Ought the United States Senate to be Reformed?" and Lester F. Ward on "The Natural Storage of Energy."

To Freethinkers, one of the most interesting items in the Monist is a triangular debate on Christian Missions, held before the Nineteenth Century Club of New York, in which Bishop Thoburn, Virchard Gandi (a Jain of India) and Dr. Paul Carus took part. The speech of the Hindu was most interesting. He said he had studied the way in which Christian ministers and missionaries were manufactured, and had learnt to pity them, for their education was all calculated to make them narrow-minded. He said: "The central ideas of Christianity—an angry God and vicarious atonement—are contrary to every fact in nature, as also to the better aspirations of the human heart; they are, in our present stage of enlightenment, absurd, preposterous, and blasphemous propositions." We shall probably return to this debate in an early number.

The Islington Branch have arranged for a series of Thursday evening lectures at the headquarters of the Liberal and Radical Association, near the Vestry Hall, Upper-street. Detailed notice will appear in next week's Freethinker.

At the Battersea Secular Hall, this Sunday evening, Mr L. D. Hewitt (of the Wimbledon Branch) will give a lantern lecture on "China and the Chinese," which is sure to be interesting and instructive. Friends in south-west London are earnestly requested to support the Branch by their presence on Sunday evenings. The lectures are of a varied description, and are followed by select social gatherings for members and friends.

M. Bigeon tells the story of Bjornson, and His Life Work, and recalls a legend current in Norway, which tells how one morning the great writer came down as if transfigured, and, calling both his family and servants together, told them that he recognised the error of his ways, and that he would in future take his place among the Freethinkers and Agnostics! Be this story true or false, observes the French critic, it is a fitting allegory of what has befallen the Norwegian nation during the last fifty years; for there, even more than elsewhere, the philosophers have taken the place of the prophets. Bjornson, according to M. Bigeon, is a seeker after truth, an enthusiast, a sentimentalist; his large heart is full of tragic intensity and love for humanity. Those who wish to know him as he is should read in the original his Little Verses.

In Professor Budde's edition of The Books of Samuel, the verses of which are printed in different colors to represent the different strata of authorship, no fewer than nine different colors are used. We shall shortly print an article on "The Dates of the Bible Books," from the pen of Chilperic, who will bring the results of recent criticism up to date in as concise a form as possible.

The Worcestershire peasantry, according to a correspondent of the Manchester Guardian, are wonderfully "indifferent in matters of religion." The parson plays but a small part in the life of the people, and is often a nonentity in his own village. Church nor chapel excites much interest; religion, in fact, is "at a discount." The Guardian writer declares that "it really appears that Churches might be established or disestablished, but not one elector in ten would care, and neither friends nor foes of the Established Church see any use in attempting to excite the interest of the constituency in the question." This is good news in its way, but the indifference is carried to a point which is profitable to the clergy who are in possession of the fleshpots.

We are pleased to note that the French Freethinkers have formed a committee to raise a monument to Maria Deraismes, an eloquent advocate of Freethought and of woman's emancipation. Maria Deraismes was the first female Freemason, having been invited to become a member by the Masonic Lodge of Le Pecq, near Paris.

Miss Amye Reade, cousin of Winwood Reade, who has recently appeared on the Freethought platform, has published two novels of a humanitarian character. One is entitled Ruby, and is founded on the life of a circus girl. The other, Slaves of the Sawdust, deals with the same phase of life.

The veteran, Dr. Ludwig Buchner, writes in the Freidenker on Celsus as "Ein Heidnischer Kritiker des Christenthums" (A Pagan Critic of Christianity). He shows the importance of the testimony of Celsus as to the credulous character of early Christianity.

Despite the patronage of religion by the Emperor of Germany, the theological students at the principal Universities have, for the last ten years, been steadily on the decrease, while those in medicine and jurisprudence have correspondingly increased.

Whereas, fifty years ago, at Cambridge, only five out of twenty-four professors were laymen, there are now, outside the Divinity professorships, forty professors at Cambridge and forty-eight at Oxford, only three of whom in each case are clergy. And whereas in 1843 ninety Fellows of the Royal Society were in Orders, there are now only sixteen. In other words, the intellect of the country, its leaders in science, learning, and literature, are no longer in the clerical ranks.

The January number of De Dageraad, of Amsterdam, opens with a portrait and an account of Dr. Robin, whose conduct of the orphanage at Cempuis occasioned a notable debate in the French Chamber. Another article on "Modern Sanctity" is translated from Professor Guglielmo Ferrero, of Bologna. In the Universal Review, as usual, there are a number of items translated from the Freethinker, by J. van der Ende.

De Dageraad gives a "Sugar Plum" to Mr. Foote, both for his editorship of the Freethinker and his conduct of the affairs of the National Secular Society. It congratulates its English comrades on having a zealous and able (ijverigen en flinken) President.

Charles Rose, who some years ago wrote an able little book entitled A Light to Lighten the Gentiles, is now contributing to Mr. Symes's Liberator a series of articles on "Philosophic Materialism."

It is said by many that there is one who watches over this world, ready to aid all who call upon him. If this were true, there would be neither error nor want anywhere; for we know that all the inhabitants have been at him with their passionate requests. The rule that theology lays down for success is that we should pray as though there was no help in us, and work as though there was no help in heaven. This is doubling our labor. The Secularist sees that Secular exertion is alone productive, and chooses that course without complaint.—G. J. Holyoake.

Digitized by Google

WHO WAS THE MOTHER OF JESUS?

(Concluded from page 27.)

These religious writers evidently consider faith more reasonable than evidence; but such credulity would stand but a poor chance if such a case took place to-day. When Joanna Southcott tried the same game early in the present century, it is true she deceived a very large number of people in all stations of life—medical men, clergymen of various denominations, and probably herself. A thorough exposure of her pretensions appeared in the Edinburgh Review, February, 1815; but, notwithstanding, thousands of her followers continued to believe in her, and that she would eventually return to earth to give birth to Jesus at his second coming. Now, considering that the very existence of Mary is highly dubious, whilst Miss Southcott's existence is unquestionable, the conclusion of the Edinburgh Review article may be quoted as applicable to all forms of superstition: "Upon the whole, the mission of Joanna Southcott is an extremely curious article in the history of human credulity. But, while we laugh at the simplicity of her disciples, we may all of us look homeward, and consider whether our own belief is not on various occasions determined by our feelings more than by evidence; whether we are not sometimes duped by respected names or bold pretenders, and sometimes by our own fancies, fears, or wishes."

The Christian Church fixed on Sept. 8 for Mary's birthday, certified as it was by a direct revelation from heaven; for the Catholic Forster, in his Perennial Calendar, describes how on that day, "a concert of angels having been heard in the air to solemnise this important event, the festival was appointed by Pope Servius about the year 695." This writer, with Alban Butler, thus perverts Genesis iii. 15: "I will put enmity between thee—serpent—and the woman, and thy seed and her seed. She shall crush thy head, and thou shalt lie in wait for her heel." What would be said of us if we were guilty of such palpable forgery? Having found her birthday, it became necessary to find her a father and a mother in the persons of Joachim and Anne; and in the fulness of time (1854) the doctrine of the Immaculate Conception was promulgated by Pius IX., and has now to be accepted by every Catholic Christian. This doctrine is that, as Mary had to be spotless and free from Original Sin, it was absolutely necessary that she should be conceived and born out of the ordinary course. But when we think on this for a moment, it will require that all Mary's ancestors should have been conceived in like manner. But Christians are anything but consistent when reason stares them in the face. It is sufficient here to say that both father and mother are purely legendary, and the miracles ascribed to them by Church writers and impudent fabrications.

Father Lambert, in that flippant and insulting tract, Notes on Ingersoll, quoting his antagonist, says: "Is it not wonderful that Luke and Matthew do not agree on a single name of Christ's ancestors for thirty-seven generations?" To which the wily priest replies: "It is wonderful only to those who are ignorant of the fact that Matthew gives the ancestors of Joseph, while Luke gives the ancestors of Mary, the Mother of God." What impudence! This is mendacity in excelsis. Yet for Lambert's readers it is sufficient; for no Catholic dare to have in his possession, let alone read, a Freethought book of any sort whatever. It is sad indeed to say it, but, during my experience years ago, when my business as an insurance agent took me to the homes of scores of Catholics, I never saw any literature in their dwellings other than devotional works, and these but few, except, in a few cases, Cobbett's History of the Protestant Reformation. Yet in every room there were cheap, gaudy prints of Mary, Joseph, saints, and crucifixes. The mental state of those who surrender their reason to a priestly caste is to-day what it was a thousand years ago—blank ignorance, dire credulity, utter neglect of all the means of secular improvement, and a thorough belief in the supernatural power of their priests. But priest Lambert's statement, that Luke gives the genealogy of the "Mother of God," is, of course, gratuitous, so far as Luke is concerned. The Authorised Version translates the passage as follows: "And Jesus himself began to be about thirty years of age, being (as was supposed) the son of Joseph, which was the son of Heli." This, of course, is early seventeenth-century English, that would now be rendered "who" in place of "which," and the parentheses would be left out. Sharpe, in his translation, who follows the original most faithfully, thus gives the passage: "And he, Jesus, when he began, was about thirty years of age, being, as was allowed, the son of Joseph, the son of Heli," etc. Not a word in the original, or to be deduced therefrom, of this being a genealogy of Mary.

Even the Roman Catholic version (Douay) is dead against Lambert's pretentious explanation, for it gives the rendering in almost the same words as the Protestant version, but has a note for the safe guidance of the faithful thus: "Who was of Heli. St. Joseph, who by nature was the son of Jacob (Matthew i. 16), in the account of the law, was son of Heli. For Jacob and Heli were brothers by the same mother, and Heli, who was the elder, dying without issue, Jacob, as the law directed, married his widow; in consequence of such marriage, his son Joseph was reputed in the law the son of Heli." So, from this authoritative statement of the infallible Church, Luke, or the Holy Ghost, omitted these particulars—and, by the way, if this was according to the "law," it is bad form for the Church to object to marriage with a deceased wife's sister. But the point is that the two contradictory lines of descent of Jesus still stare us in the face, and Father Lambert must try to confute Ingersoll on other lines.

Robert Forder.

PROGRESS OF FREETHOUGHT IN DENMARK.

Denmark is now hardly taken into account as a nation. It contains about half the number of inhabitants that daily parade London streets. Yet it has a language, government, literature, and institutions of its own; and some of the last mentioned are, I venture to say, not only unimitated, but far in advance of any country, except her Scandinavian sisters. When, a few years back, the great Norwegian writer and Freethinker, Björnstjerne Björnson, visited Denmark, he said, at a great public meeting, that the Danish country-people were the most enlightened peasantry he had encountered on his travels throughout the world. I think I may safely add—and also the most sceptical.

Now, I am bound to state that all this has, involuntarily, been brought about by Christian agencies, with a view of advancing Christianity; but we Freethinkers rejoice in the fact that it has proved itself to have the opposite result. This shows clearly to me that enlightenment is a greater factor in establishing Freethought than the most ardent propaganda. Denmark has had no great Freethought martyrs; the work of the spirit of Freethought has been going on in a docile and unconscious way within the Church, from the rigid and absurd form of Protestantism which you have here in England, through a broader and more liberal form called Grundtvigianism, Deism, and is slowly culminating in rank scepticism on the part of the young, and many of the leading Christian teachers of the young themselves.

I shall briefly review the movement, and, as far as the space at my disposal admits, record some of the principal causes of this development. In order to do this, it is necessary to take the reader back a century and a half. The people were nothing more nor less than serfs, entirely controlled by the parson and the squire, ignorant, stupid, and apathetic. Then arose a writer and poet, whose fantastically romantic nature almost bordered on madness—to practical people's minds. Nevertheless, he was a great genius. His name was Bernhard Severin Ingemann. He wrote a series of historical romances—half history, half fiction, all in a romantic style. Dry history, had it been accessible to the people, would have been too tedious for them; but Ingemann's works gave them taste for reading. They woke up, looked around for something to corroborate what they had read, found it in other manuscripts, read it, and so acquired some knowledge. Another great man of the same period was Steen Steensen Blicher. He was a village parson, but a devoted friend of the people. On Sundays, when people went home from the church he had preached in, it is said that they often met him on the heather, with his gun under his arm, and his field terrier with him. He was very fond of hunting, and also of associating with the gypsies, who then invaded the vast heaths of Jutland, and whose language, it is said, he learned. He wrote two great volumes of novels in the Juttish dialect, depicting the peasants' habits and customs, and attached them to places familiar to the inhabitants of the neighbourhood. They were, and still are, read with immense delight by the peasantry. This gave them still more fascination for reading.

Digitized by Google

The final abolition of the soccage-duty was another great step towards the emancipation of the people. When it received this liberty, it did not know what freedom was; but a child cannot learn to walk till it tries, and so, when the people got the liberty, they gradually learned to use it.

In the first part of this century arose a great literary giant and pedagogue, whose name was Nikolaj Frederik Severin Grundtvig. When he was a young man and a student, it is said, he passed through an ordeal of scepticism and temptations of affection to a married woman, which lasted for two years, and culminated in his adopting religious views, differing from those which then predominated. He began writing and preaching them at an early age. He held that no man could be saved by his actions, but only by faith; nor by knowledge of the Bible, but by believing the two articles, Baptism and Communion —which two he called "The word of God"; that playing cards, dancing, and other innocent jollifications were not necessarily evils; and that there was a chance of salvation after death. He advocated a fuller education, and that children should not learn lessons, but only be told and made re-tell, especially in religion; and contended that the clergy should not be appointed and paid by the State, but be entirely kept by the people. Of course, for pleading religious liberty he was persecuted by State and Church. His books were confiscated, and he was condemned to supervision by the police for life, his works having to be examined by them before they were published. Yet, at length, as he gained influence, this censure was retracted, for he won admirers and followers by the hundred; and he gradually rose, at last being appointed a bishop. He died at an extremely old age; but his writing—poetic and prosaic—and disciples he left behind him, to fight, suffer, and triumph.

In 1848, when the noble-minded and kind-hearted King Frederick VII., whose motto was, "The people's love is my strength," came to the throne, the hitherto existing press laws were repealed; persons undergoing terms of imprisonment for press offences were set at liberty; the Conservative ministry was replaced by a Liberal one, some members of which were leaders of the Democracy; a full constitutional Government was founded, and a so-called "Fundamental Law" was given, expressing the mutual duties of Sovereign, Government, and people towards each other.

In the same year the insurrection broke out in Holstein, which then belonged to Denmark, but which was surrendered to Germany in 1864. After a three years' struggle, the rebellion was quelled, and now, after those victories over internal and external foes, a wave of enthusiasm swept over the country. The Press revelled in its new-born freedom, poets arose on every hand, and wells of literature sprang up and flooded the land.

As time passed on, the seeds of mental independence and religious liberty, which "Old Grundtvig" had sown, speedily gained ground, and now—in order to make it short —Denmark is quite unlike what it was, say, thirty years ago. The people have banded together in Societies, Unions, and Companies; gymnastic and rifle unions, who come together once a year from whole districts to win prizes; dairy companies, the members of which send their milk to the headquarters, have their cream separated from it by machinery, and have it returned; provision companies, who have their household necessaries sent to them from Copenhagen, in order to dispense with the profit-making merchants; private schools and congregations have been, and are being, formed by people who feel themselves too independent to have their spiritual affairs guided by their "superiors." The Grundtvigian teachers and ministers gather young and old around them once a week to discourse to them on historical subjects gratuitously, besides forming evening classes for a trifle. When the youth has outgrown this instruction, he receives, on application, a sum from the Government towards his maintenance for six months at a so-called "High School." A word about these in conclusion. The High School is an entirely private institution, but is granted a certain sum from the State every year when it has attained to such a position that it is recognised as such. It has a class of young women in the summer months, and of men in the winter. For maintenance, lodging, and instruction the pupil is charged, as a rule, thirty krones per month, a krone being the equivalent of an English shilling. There are no degrees taken, no compulsory attendance, so that the degree of the instructor's ability is indicated by the number of his pupils. The students come together once a week in the lecture-room, and discuss the topics of the day with a fervor and earnestness which one would not expect to find with young people. All this tends to develop the young man's affections and intelligence. As he himself becomes a better man, so his God becomes better; he being filled with love to his fellow man, his God is no longer a revengeful monster, but a God of love, who cannot torment his children for ever, but will save all in time. Darwin's theory being proved to him, the story of the Creation and the Fall is absurd, and the Savior is gone. God is all-wise, and cannot fail in purpose; every man is created to fulfil a certain function, and if he goes to hell for ever, he has been created without a design. Hell is gone, and with it the Savior. As the many purposeless occurrences and injustices appear before the young man's widened view, and as his knowledge of astronomy increases, so God himself vanishes before his gazing eye in the chaos of the mighty universe; and although the High Schools are conducted in a Grundtvigian, Christian, spirit, somehow or other the young men and women, as a rule, leave it confirmed sceptics. Nay, what is more, the Grundtvigian leaders themselves gradually drift into infidelity.

In 1885 a Free Church minister (Henning Jensen) wrote a book which went to show that the alleged books of Moses were not written by that personage. This, of course, brought his colleagues into array, and one of them asked him to show his real colors, and admit that he was a Freethinker, in order that he might know how to deal with him. This same H. Jensen was brought into court for administering the communion to a dying child, not yet confirmed. Two eminent High School masters have lately, people assert who have visited their schools, entirely given up all belief in Hell, and are, in fact, so deeply adrift in scepticism that they don't know where they are.

Finally, at the annual Conference at a leading High School of the country, a few years since, an entirely modern spirit prevailed. Heterodoxy reigned supreme; most of the old ideas being discarded. Thus, superstition in Scandinavia is committing suicide by using the weapon against her enemies, under which she is herself doomed to fall. Scepticism is doing its work within the Church, bigotry is dying, the spirit of Freethought is gradually gaining headway, and I for one wish her "good speed."

J. A. Maagaard.

CHRISTIANITY.

Thou who standest at the threshold of the charnels of the dead,
Looking eastward, where the sunlight gloweth gloriously red,
And, with frightened eyes, beholdest how the skies grow bright o'erhead;

Thou with pallor on thy lips and the dry blood upon thy hands,
Trembling, seest how the morning spreads above the waking lands,
And how man, with eager glances, in expectant waiting stands.

All the earth before thee lieth, and, from Europe's very stones,
Goes a cry on thee with curses, and the winds are filled with groans—
Yea, before thee stand the living, and behind thee lie the bones.

By the memory of martyrs; by the children thou didst nurse;
By the evil heart of man; by thy hypocrisies made worse;
By the blood of Jew and Gentile—thou art cursed with a curse!

Thou hast trodden out the winepress; and the wine that rippled free
Was the blood of unbelievers, which thy lips have drunk with glee,
Till the richness of its virtue hath made glad the heart of thee.

From the open square at Strassburg, in discordant chorus rise
Shriekings of two thousand Jews, that roast for sacrifice
To the hell-born God thou dost invoke, who gloats on agonies.

There in Frankfort, Salzburg, Baden, thou didst scatter blood like rain,
Reddening all the peaceful cities by the waters of the Main,
Till the rivers of the Rhineland flowed encrimsoned with the stain.

Aragon, Madrid, Granada, in possession of the Moor,
Yielded shelter to the Rabbi; there in peace he might endure—
Where the Moslem banner floated he was quiet and secure.

But thy shadow loomed portentous; haughty Spain was forced to feel
What it is to groan and tremble under holy Christian zeal.
Quoth the priest, "My yoke is easy"—grinding Jews beneath his heel.

Digitized by Google

Spurned by England, Austria, Russia, he was sheltered by the Turk;
There in Judengasse or Ghetto was no longer need to lurk;
Islamitish hands were ever clean from thy accursed work.

Through the mad and furious ages thou hast finely borne thy part—
Cowed the people into bondslaves; crushed the wife's, the mother's heart;
Laid thy rod upon the children; banished beauty, stifled art.

Savage gods!—relentless ages! But by earth be it confessed,
Thou of all hast been most cruel—thy God fiercer than the rest;
For thou hast devoured the children that were suckled at thy breast.

What have been thy mild persuasions, who in love did so abound?
Lo! at Nuremberg a sample of thy tenderness is found—
Rack and thumbscrew, boot and caldron, in black dungeons underground.

Charitable institutions? Yea, indeed, for well we know
That the Spanish Inquisition founded many a year ago
Was a Christian institution ruled by holy saints below!

Blessed had he been for ever who had strangled thee at birth,
Ere thou hadst attained thy vigor, ere with wild Walpurgis mirth,
At thy bidding hell was emptied of its fiends upon the earth;

Ere thou didst from out the clutches of the mother tear the child,
Laughing loud to think the notions of a heretic beguiled:
In the glare of blazing fagots then thou sattest still and smiled.

Thou hast kept the people darkened from thy childhood until now—
Smothered truth and bound opinion; but a mightier than thou—
Science, rising strong and godlike, hast brought low thy brazen brow.

Crown thy head with foulest ashes—hater thou of Truth sublime!
Cry aloud and rend thy garments to the utmost bourne of time;
Thy Eternity would scarce suffice to expiate thy crime!

So the soul of man rejects thee, rising as from out a tomb,
And the world of mind denies thee, and thy face is toward the gloom,
And there is no Resurrection Day for the dead that Truth shall doom.

DARIUS HYSTASPES.

A Model King.

"In St. Ferdinand, King of Castile (d. 1252), the virtues of a king shone out brightly—magnanimity, clemency, love of justice, and, above all, zeal for the Catholic faith and a burning desire to protect and propagate its religious worship. He showed this especially by the vigor with which he pursued heretics. He never allowed them to exist in any part whatever of his dominions. When they were discovered, he himself with his own hands carried the faggots to burn them.—Breviarium Romanum, Feast of St. Ferdinand, June 5.

"Grant us grace so to follow thy blessed saints in all virtuous and godly living, that we may come to those unspeakable joys," etc.—Col. for All Saints.

Clergyman (to his son Bobby)—"Is there any news, my son?" Bobby—"Yes, father." Clergyman—"Well, what is it?" Bobby—"Why, a church caught on fire yesterday, and all were saved except the organ." Clergyman—"Why couldn't they save the organ?" Bobby—"Because the firemen couldn't play on it."

At the sacrament a priest gave, without perceiving it, a bone counter instead of the wafer. The communicant, thinking it would melt, patiently waited and sucked, but without effect. The priest, seeing him hesitate, inquired what was the matter. "Matter," said he, "I hope your reverence has not made a mistake and given me God the Father? He is so hard and tough there is no swallowing him."

BOOK CHAT.

Madame Blavatsky and Her "Theosophy": A Study, by Arthur Lillie (London: Swan Sonnenschein & Co.; 1895), takes for the motto of its title-page the words of Mrs. Besant: "If there are no Mahatmas, the Theosophical Society is an absurdity." Mr. Lillie, in his preface, tells us that, in sketching the career of Madame Blavatsky, "I propose to leave out as much as possible the private character of the lady as far as regards sex relations. The authenticity, or non-authenticity, of her 'miracles' is plainly too vital to be passed over."

* * *

With this side of her career omitted, the record of the modern Cagliostro is, nevertheless, a very shady one. She was ever an adventuress, and for the major, though lesser known, portion of her life posed as a Spiritist. And it is Spiritists, like Mr. W. E. Coleman, W. Oxley, and our author, who have devoted most trouble to expose her pretensions.

* * *

Mr. Lillie, however, does not advert to the accusation made by Mr. R. Hodgson, who was sent out to India by the Society for Psychical Research to investigate the lady's "miracles." Mr. Hodgson gave his opinion, in the third volume of the Proceedings of that Society, that the lady was a Russian spy. He came across some writings of hers which strongly bore out this view. Mr. Newton, who was treasurer of the Theosophic Society when first formed at New York, says she had an interview with the Russian Minister of Legation before deciding to transfer the Society to India. Possibly she only became an American citizeness with a view to protection in India. The political key of her Secret Doctrine is the statement in the Introduction: "We have not long to wait, and many of us will witness the Dawn of the New Cycle, at the end of which not a few accounts will be settled and squared between the races." Some other particulars of Madame Blavatsky's career, not appearing in Mr. Lillie's book, were given by Professor Coues in the New York Sun, of July 2, 1890, and by A. Rudolph in the San Francisco Chronicle of April 5, 1894.

* * *

According to Colonel Olcott, there were two distinct beings in the red dressing gown of Madame Blavatsky—a fibbing Russian lady and a mighty Mahatma. The trouble was that you could not tell t'other from which. A message was given to Mr. Sinnett as from the Mahatma, Koot Hoomi, and published in the Occult World, which proved to be a plagiarism taken almost verbatim from an address on Spiritualism by Mr. H. Kiddle, at Lake Pleasant. Madame Blavatsky's defence made matters worse by saying that the Mahatma explained that he had been present in his astral body at Mount Pleasant, and so gathered up the Spiritist discourse. A liar was never more clearly exposed than was Madame Blavatsky in Light of 1884. Dr. Wyld, Dr. Anna Kingsford, Mr. Maitland, Mr. Stainton Moses, and Mr. C. C. Massey retired from the Theosophical Society. But plenty of dupes remained, and the adventuress always was ready to make one defeat the prelude to another victory.

* * *

One would have thought she would never have recovered from the exposure by the Psychical Research Society. Writing experts certified that the Mahatma letters were in her writing. They contain the same misspellings and foreign locutions. But the credulous are not easily undeceived. "Doubtless the pleasure is as great in being cheated as to cheat."

* * *

Mr. Lillie's book is one which illustrates the perennial credulity of human nature, and the ease with which charlatans impose on those who are ever seeking something new. That Mrs. Besant should have become the dupe of a coarse, swearing impostor like Madame Blavatsky has been a wonder to many. And yet there is nothing surprising in it. The Russian lady really had the only secret of all magic and occultism. She understood the power of a determined will. Without any magnetic passes or hypnotism she could wind the Celt around her little finger. Madame Blavatsky had travelled widely, though Mr. Lillie gives reason to doubt her having ever visited Tibet; and she had a varied experience of human nature. The Cagliostro of the nineteenth century will long remain an interesting study.

* * *

Dr. Hermann Oldenberg, whose able work on Buddha: His Life, His Doctrine, His Order, has been translated into English, has issued at Berlin a work of about the same size on Die Religion des Veda.

* * *

Der Jesuit und der Freidenker is a play in three acts, by W. Gerling, published by W. Rubenow, Berlin. It was written for the Freethinkers' Congress at Cologne last year.

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY LECTURE NOTICES, ETC.

[Notices of Lectures, etc., must reach us by first post on Tuesday, and be marked "Lecture Notice," if not sent on post-card.]

LONDON.

HALL OF SCIENCE (142 Old-street, E.C.): 11.30, Touzeau Parris, "The Political Outlook." (Free.) 6.30, musical selections; 7, Touzeau Parris, "Science Against Theology." (Admission free; reserved seats 3d. and 6d.) Wednesday, at 8.30, a lecture.

BATTERSEA SECULAR HALL (back of Battersea Park Station): 7.30, L. D. Hewitt, "China and the Chinese," with lantern illustrations. (Free.) Tuesday, at 8, social gathering. Wednesday, at 8, dramatic club. Thursday, at 8, committee. Friday, at 8, dancing.

CAMBERWELL (North Camberwell Hall, 61 New Church-road): 7.30, George Standring, "Some Farcical Aspects of Religion." (Preceded by vocal and instrumental music.) Thursday, at 7.30, science classes. (Free.)

FINSBURY BRANCH (Minor Hall of Science): 12.30, special general meeting—all should attend.

MILTON HALL (Hawley-crescent, 89 Kentish Town-road): 7.30, John Turner, "Anarchism and Trade Unionism."

WEST LONDON ETHICAL SOCIETY (Princes' Hall, Piccadilly): 11.15, Dr. Stanton Coit, "Cleansing that which is Within the Cup."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

HYDE PARK (near Marble Arch): 11.30, a lecture.

COUNTRY.

BIRMINGHAM (Coffee House, corner of Broad-street): Thursdays, at 8, papers, discussions, etc.

BRISTOL (Shepherds' Hall, Old Market-street): 7, Mr. Hawker, "Flowers."

DERBY: Monday, at 7.30, meeting at the Wooding Institute, Pear-Tree-road—having been evicted from the Coffee Tavern, Friar Gate.

DUNDEE (City Assembly Rooms): 11, discussion class—paper by a Christian on "Christian Socialism"; 12, choir practice and elocution class; 1, shorthand class; 2.30, D. Taylor, "Burns"; 6.30, Burns concert.

GLASGOW (Ex-Mission Hall, 110 Brunswick-street): 12, discussion class—G. Faulkner v. J. Cowie, "State Socialism"; 6.30, Zosimus, "Great French Freethinkers—III., Pierre Bayle."

HULL (St. George's Hall, Storey-street): 7, A. Adams, reading—About the Holy Bible, by Robert G. Ingersoll.

LIVERPOOL (Oddfellows' Hall, St. Anne-street): 7, John Roberts, "James Thomson (B.V.)." (Owing to the continued illness of the conductor, the Philosophy Class is suspended for a week or two.)

MANCHESTER SECULAR HALL (Rusholme-road, All Saints): 6.30, C. Corbett, "The Bible and Theosophy." (Free.)

NOTTINGHAM (Assembly Rooms, Low Pavement): 11, Charles Watts, "The French Revolution—Causes of the Excesses"; 3, "Christ Not a Political or Social Reformer"; 7, "Why Live Moral Lives—the Christian and Secular Answers." (Admission 3d. and 6d.)

PORTSMOUTH (Wellington Hall, Wellington-street, Southsea): 7, a meeting. Wednesday, at 8, dancing.

ROCHDALE (Working Men's College, 4 Acker-street): 11, Sam Standring, "Associated Homes"; 3, "Jesus the Fish-Catcher"; 6.30, debate with Mr. Smith (of Milnrow), "That the Creeds are Essential to Christianity."

SHEFFIELD SECULAR SOCIETY (Hall of Science, Rockingham-street): 3, members' general meeting; 7, W. Dyson, "The Problem of Evil—Theism's Latest Defence."

SOUTH SHIELDS (Thornton's Variety Hall, Union-lane): 11, C. Cohen, "The Political Ethics of Herbert Spencer"; 7, "Is the Belief in Miracles Reasonable?"

STOCKTON (32 Dovecot-street): 6, business meeting—all friends are invited.

SUNDERLAND (Lecture Room, Bridge End Vaults, opposite Echo office): 7, The Secretary, "Why Should Atheists be Persecuted?"

Lecturers' Engagements.

C. COHEN, 12 Merchant-street, Bow-road, London, E.—All Sundays until April, 1895, South Shields.

STANLEY JONES, 58 Marlborough-road, Holloway, London, N.—Jan. 20, Chatham. Feb. 3, Edinburgh; 10, Dundee.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Credon-road, Rotherhithe, London, S.E.—Feb. 3, New Brompton.

SAM STANDRING, 6 Bury-road, Rochdale.—Jan. 23, Tyldesley. March 26 and 27, Sheffield.

☞ JUST PUBLISHED. ☜

24 pp., in neat wrapper, price 3d., by post 3½d.,

WHY DO RIGHT?

A SECULARIST'S ANSWER.

BY

CHARLES WATTS.

London: Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Price 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d. post free,

THE GRAND OLD BOOK.

A REPLY TO THE GRAND OLD MAN.

BY

G. W. FOOTE.

An Exhaustive Answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture."

CONTENTS:—Preface—Preliminary View—The Creation Story—The Fall of Man—The Psalms—The Mosaic Legislation—Corroborations of Scripture—Gladstone and Huxley—Modern Scepticism.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Now Ready, Price Twopence,

IS SUICIDE A SIN?

BY

COLONEL INGERSOLL.

Together with the Reply of MONSIGNOR DUCEY.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Last Words on Suicide

A REPLY TO THE CRITICS

OF

"IS SUICIDE A SIN?"

BY

COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

PRICE TWOPENCE.

London: ROBERT FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price 2d., by post 2½d.,

AN ESSAY ON SUICIDE.

BY

DAVID HUME.

With an Historical and Critical Introduction by

G. W. FOOTE.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

W. J. RENDELL'S "Wife's Friend."

Recommended by Mrs. Besant in Law of Population, p. 82, and Dr. Allbutt in Wife's Handbook, p. 51. Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell-street, Clerkenwell; 2s. doz., post free (reduction in larger quantities). For particulars send stamped envelope. Higginson's Syringe, with Vertical and Reverse Current, 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 5s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. Dr. Allbutt's Quinine Powders, 3s. per doz. All prices post free.

W. J. RENDELL,

15 CHADWELL-ST., CLERKENWELL, E.C. (near the "Angel.")

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each, upper or lower set, £1. Best quality, 4s. each, upper or lower, £2, completed in four hours when required; repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum 7s. 6d. each, on 18 ct. gold 15s., stopping 2s. 6d., extraction 1s., painless by gas, 5s.

TO FREETHINKERS, Ladies and Gentlemen requiring SUPERIOR CUT GARMENTS at moderate prices. First-class Style and Fit Guaranteed.—H. HAMPTON, Artiste Tailor, 14 Great Castle-street, W. Three doors from Regent-street. [Patronised by leading Freethinkers.]

FREETHINKER TRACTS

Sixpence per Hundred.

MARRIOTT, CLOTHIER,

311 EDGWARE ROAD, W., near Metropolitan Music Hall (same side), six doors from Church-street. TROUSERS, good wear, 5s. 9d., 7s. 6d., and 9s. 6d.; Blacks, 7s. 6d. and 10s. 6d. Thirty sizes kept in stock. OVERCOATS from 12s. 6d.

MARGATE.—TERRACE HOTEL, Marine Drive. Bed and Breakfast from 2s. 6d. A large room to seat 500. Beanfeasts and other parties liberally treated.

Mr. Foote's Portrait.

By AMEY.

CABINET SIZE, 1s. Post free, carefully packed, 1s. 1d.

IMPERIAL SIZE, very fine, 3s. Post free, carefully packed, 3s. 2d.

Digitized by Google

6d. NOW READY 6d.

THE

SECULAR ALMANACK

For 1895.

Altered and Enlarged. Finely-Designed Cover.

EDITED BY

G. W. FOOTE & J. M. WHEELER.

CONTENTS: Progress of Freethought; by G. W. Foote—This World; by J. M. Wheeler—Heroes in the Service of Man; by Charles Watts—Dod Grile—A Wish; by Matthew Arnold—The Abducted Female Infidel—Farquhar of Netherton—Bits from Selden's "Table Talk"—Jeremy Bentham on Inspiration—Abou-ben Adhem and the Angel—Man's Soul his God—The Sacred Books of the World—The Dear God—What have Unbelievers Done for the World?—Information Concerning Freethought Work and Organisation—Lecturers, etc.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price 1s. 6d.; superior edition, superfine paper, cloth, 2s., post free.

The Bible Handbook

FOR FREETHINKERS & INQUIRING CHRISTIANS.

BY

G. W. FOOTE AND W. P. BALL.

Sold also in separate parts as follows:—

1.—Bible Contradictions. The contradictions are printed in parallel columns. 4d.

2.—Bible Absurdities. All the chief absurdities from Genesis to Revelation, conveniently and strikingly arranged, with appropriate headlines, giving the point of each absurdity in a sentence. 4d.

3.—Bible Atrocities. Containing all the godly wickedness from Genesis to Revelation. Each infamy has a separate headline for easy reference. 4d.

4.—Bible Immoralities, Indecencies, Obscenities, Broken Promises, and Unfulfilled Prophecies. 4d

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Vol. I., cloth gilt, 216 pp., 2s. 6d., post free,

CRIMES OF CHRISTIANITY.

BY

G. W. FOOTE AND J. M. WHEELER.

Hundreds of exact References to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.

CHAPTERS:—1, Christ to Constantine; 2, Constantine to Hypatia; 3 Monkery; 4, Pious Forgeries; 5, Pious Frauds; 6, Rise of the Papacy; 7, Crimes of the Popes; 8, Persecution of the Jews; 9, The Crusades.

"The book is very carefully compiled, the references are given with exactitude, and the work is calculated to be of the greatest use to the opponents of Christianity."—C. BRADLAUGH, in National Reformer.

"The book is worth reading. It is fair, and, on the whole, correct."—Weekly Times.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

THE BEST BOOK

ON NEO-MALTHUSIANISM IS, I BELIEVE,

TRUE MORALITY, or THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF NEO-MALTHUSIANISM.

By J. R. HOLMES, M.M.L., M.V.S., M.N.S.S.

160 pages, with portrait and autograph, bound in cloth, gilt lettered. Price 1s., post free.

 In order to bring the information within the reach of the poor, the most important parts of the book are issued in a pamphlet of 112 pages at ONE PENNY, post free 2d. Copies of the pamphlet for distribution 1s. a dozen post free.

The National Reformer of 4th September, 1892, says: "Mr Holmes' pamphlet . . . is an almost unexceptionable statement of the Neo-Malthusian theory and practice . . . and throughout appeals to moral feeling. . . . The special value of Mr. Holmes' service to the Neo-Malthusian cause and to human well-being generally is just his combination in his pamphlet of a plain statement of the physical and moral need for family limitation with a plain account of the means by which it can be secured, and an offer to all concerned of the requisites at the lowest possible prices."

The Council of the Malthusian League, Dr. Drysdale, Dr. Allbutt, and others have also spoken of it in very high terms.

The Trade supplied by R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C. Other orders should be sent to the author.

J. R. HOLMES, HANNEY, WANTAGE, BERKS.

THE BIRTH OF CHRIST

A CHAPTER FROM

Strauss's Original "Life of Jesus."

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY

G. W. FOOTE.

(A Most Thorough Analysis and Exposure of the Gospel Story by a Master Hand.)

Price Sixpence.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price Sixpence.

WILL CHRIST SAVE US?

By G. W. FOOTE.

A Thorough Examination of the Claims of Jesus Christ to be considered the Savior of the World.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

221 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d., post free,

FLOWERS OF FREETHOUGHT

(FIRST SERIES)

BY

G. W. FOOTE.

CONTENTS:—

Old Nick	Judgment Day	The Logic of Persecution
Fire!!!	Huxley's Mistake	Luther and the Devil
Sky Pilots	The Gospel of Freethought	Bible English
Devil Dodgers	On Ridicule	Living by Faith
Fighting Spooks	Who are the Blasphemers?	Victor Hugo
Damned Sinners	Christianity and Common Sense	Walt Whitman
Where is Hell?	The Lord of Lords	Desecrating a Church
Spurgeon and Hell	Consecrating the Colors	Tennyson and the Bible
Shelley's Atheism	Christmas in Holloway Gaol	Christ's Old Coat
Long Faces	Who Killed Christ?	Christ's Coat, No. 2
Our Father	Did Jesus Ascend?	Scotched, Not Slain
Wait Till You Die	The Rising Sun	God-Making
Dead Theology	St. Paul's Veracity	God and the Weather
Mr. Gladstone on Devils	No Faith with Heretics	Miracles
Is Spurgeon in Heaven?		A Real Miracle
God in Japan		Jesus on Women
Stanley on Providence		Paul on Women
Gone to God		Mother's Religion
Thank God

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

302 pp., superior paper, bound in cloth, 2s. 6d. post free,

FLOWERS OF FREETHOUGHT

[Second Series]

BY

G. W. FOOTE.

CONTENTS:—

Luscious Piety	Christianity & Slavery	Down Among the Dead Men
The Jewish Sabbath	Christ Up to Date	Smirching a Hero
God's Day	Secularism and Christianity	Kit Marlowe and Jesus Christ
Professor Stokes on Immortality	Altar and Throne	Jehovah the Ripper
Paul Bert	Martin Luther	The Parson's Living Wage
Converting a Corpse	The Praise of Folly	Did Bradlaugh Backslide?
Bradlaugh's Ghost	A Lost Soul	Frederic Harrison on Atheism
Christ and Brotherhood	Happy in Hell	Save the Bible!
The Sons of God	The Act of God	Forgive and Forget
Melchisedek	Keir Hardie on Christ	The Star of Bethlehem
S'welp me God	Blessed be ye Poor	The Great Ghost
Infidel Homes	Converted Infidels	Atheism and the French Revolution
Are Atheists Cruel?	Mrs. Booth's Ghost	Pigottism
Are Atheists Wicked?	Talmage on the Bible	Jesus at the Derby
Rain Doctors	Mrs. Besant on Death and After	Atheist Murderers
Pious Puerilities	The Poets and Liberal Theology	A Religion for Eunuchs
"Thus Saith the Lord"	Christianity and Labor	Rose-Water Religion
Believe or be Damned	An Easter Egg for Christians
Christian Charity
Religion and Money
Clotted Bosh
Lord Bacon on Atheism

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

EVERYBODY HAS NOT YET TRIED

One Pair of BLANKETS
One Pair of SHEETS
One QUILT
One TABLE-CLOTH

LOT 11

ALL FOR 21s. CARRIAGE PAID.

Which, with the 19 other Lots offered in the "Freethinker" of January 13, 1895,

CANNOT BE BEATEN.

Great Purchase of Scarboro-shaped MACKINTOSHES | 500 at 26s. each, worth 42s.

ALL GOOD SCOTCH TWEED AND THOROUGHLY WATERPROOF.

Give Length at Back, Chest and Waist Measures.

J. W. GOTT, 2 & 4 UNION-STREET, BRADFORD.

ASK YOUR GROCER

FOR THE

ROYAL CHISWICK TABLE JELLIES

EXPERTS OPINION—

"The Perfection of Jelly."

"Certainly far superior to all other Jelly Tablets—in transparency, strength, and in flavor utterly beyond comparison."

Sample Dozen—Pints 4s. 6d.; Quarts 8s., carriage free.

WHOLESALE TERMS ON APPLICATION.

TOUZEAU PARRIS & CO.,
ENFIELD WORKS, ACTON, LONDON, W.

Colonel Ingersoll's
Great New Lecture

ABOUT THE HOLY BIBLE

Price Sixpence.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

ALLINSON FOR HEALTH.

HOME CONSULTATIONS—10 a.m. to 1 p.m., 10s. 6d.; 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., 5s. Patients Visited.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. I. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on Management of Infancy, Health, Longevity, The Teeth, Tobacco, The Drink Question. Also the Cause and Cure of Disease, Constipation, Biliousness, Eczema, Blackheads and Pimples, Nervousness, Coughs and Colds, Chest Complaints, Deafness, Thread Worms, Long Worms, Tape Worms, The Itch, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. II. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on The Healing Power of Nature, Urine, Saline Starvation, the Hair and its Management, Sleep and Sleeplessness, Want of Energy, etc. Advice for the Thin, for the Stout; Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. III. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on No More Death, Management of Young Children, Unsuspected Domestic Poisons, How to Grow Tall, to Keep Warm, to Live One Hundred Years, to Improve the Memory, and to become Beautiful and Attractive. On the Cause and Cure of Stomach Troubles, Flatulence, Sleepiness, Varicose Veins, Boils and Carbuncles, Sebaceous Tumors and Warts, Hay Fever, Winter Cough, Chilblains, Epilepsy, and on the Diseases Produced by Taking Mercury.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. IV. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on Hardening, Work and Overwork, Sugar and its Abuse, Milk as Food, the Tomato, Poultices, Quinine, Against the Knife, Arsenical Poisoning, Tonics, Against Stimulants in Disease, about Swallowing Pins and other Articles. Also Cure of Sunstroke, Dog Bites, Pains in the Back, Pediculi or Lice, Chicken-Pox, Synovitis or Inflammation of the Joints, Tonsilitis or Quinsy, Herpes (Tetter or Shingles), Erysipelas, Ulcer of the Stomach, Epidemic Influenza, Sciatica, Psoriasis or English Leprosy, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. V. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on Pure Water, The Mouth: Its Use and Abuse; Rules for the Aged, Training, Blood Letting, Nose Bleeding, Felon or Whitlow, Ingrowing Toenail, Gum Boil, Cold in the Head, a Red Nose, Flushing and Blushing, Toothache, Sore Mouth, St. Vitus' Dance, Goitre, Mumps, Inflamed Eyes and Eyelids, Fits, Fainting, Apoplexy, Spitting and Vomiting of Blood, Vomiting, Wounds, Burns, Scalds, Bruises, etc.

The Five Volumes, strongly and neatly bound, price 6s. 9d.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.—An Eye Opener to Drug Takers.
RHEUMATISM: ITS CAUSE AND CURE. Post free for 7d.
DIET AND DIGESTION. Post free for 7d.
CONSUMPTION: ITS NATURAL CURE. Post free 7d.
All these Books, bound in One Vol., post free, 3s. 6d. Send Postal Order.

THREE PAMPHLETS FOR YOUNG MEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.
A BOOK FOR MARRIED WOMEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

All communications to be addressed to—

DR. T. R. ALLINSON,
4 Spanish-place, Manchester-square, London, W.

Printed and Published by G. W. FOOTE, at 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

VOL. XV.—NO. 4. SUNDAY, JANUARY 27, 1895. PRICE TWOPENCE.

THE MAHATMA BUBBLE.

MRS. BESANT'S share in the great Mahatma hoax was the subject of our last week's article. We have now to deal with some other aspects of this wretched business.

In the first place, we take a little pride in pointing out that the Freethinker was all along on the right scent. As soon as Mrs. Besant became a Theosophist, and a spiritual slave of Madame Blavatsky, we felt quite sure—from our knowledge of her, of her tutor, and of the past history of such superstitions—that she would travel far on the road of delusion. We also saw that it would be an advantage to the Freethought party to be disembarrassed of her presence. Without the slightest hesitation, though not without pain, we acted upon these perceptions; and, although at the beginning we were both misunderstood and misrepresented, we held on our course unswervingly, trusting to the future to furnish our complete vindication. Mrs. Besant, in her letter to the Daily Chronicle, states, and states truly, that the very Sunday before she made that oracular announcement about the Mahatma letters at the Hall of Science, Mr. Foote had been trying to prove on the same platform that Madame Blavatsky was herself the forger of the Koot Hoomi letters. Mrs. Besant met that charge, not by going into the evidence—which is a risky method when you have a bad case—but by stating that the Mahatma letters that used to be received by Madame Blavatsky were now received by herself. On hearing of this, we said that Mrs. Besant was probably the victim of a deception. Later on it was plainly stated in the Freethinker that the forger of these bogus letters would in all likelihood turn out to be Mr. Judge. Well, we were right. Mrs. Besant's public confession (under pressure) fully justifies our prophecy.

It may be asked how it was that we were so well informed. But there is really no mystery to be explicated. We were right simply because we kept our eyes open, which is the meaning of scepticism; and because we went upon the principles of common sense. Superstitionists may be convinced of one cheat, but they are just as ready to be taken in by the next. We, on the other hand, are prepared to find a cheat behind every mystery. We stand, like Hume, upon a broad assumption of reason and experience. If a man tells us of a miracle—even if he juggles with language and calls it supernormal instead of supernatural—we do not require to investigate the story. We can decide at once what is the matter. The man is deceived or deceiving; some would say, a fool or a liar. And as, in Mrs. Besant's case, we felt it was more likely that she was credulous than wicked, we concluded that someone was deluding her. The next thing was to hit upon the probable rascal, and we decided (on very good grounds) in favor of Mr. Judge.

It is likely that Mr. Judge is an old practitioner. He knew Madame Blavatsky much longer than Mrs. Besant did, and to know her long enough was either to leave her or to share in her methods. Mrs. Besant admits—at first she boasted—that her Mahatma letters were in the same handwriting as those which came (through the supernormal post) to Madame Blavatsky. She also admits that her Mahatma letters were forged—or, at any rate, written—by Mr. Judge. Is it not, then, a reasonable inference that Mr. Judge was an adept in this line? Is it not a legitimate assumption that he had been Mahatma-letter-writer-in-chief to Madame Blavatsky? And is this the reason why Mrs. Besant cannot afford to press him too severely?

Madame Blavatsky's successor, the present high-priestess of Theosophy, is prudent enough to evade a pointed and dangerous question. The Westminster Review writer declares, and repeats the declaration, that when she made that sensational announcement at the Hall of Science she had nothing to go upon but two letters forged by Mr. Judge. He invites her to say whether she had, or ever has had, any others. But she does not reply, and her silence is significant. It is an open secret that Mrs. Besant never had any Mahatma letters but Mr. Judge's; that no other has ever been produced; and that, now the Judge fountain is closed, the Mahatma correspondence has entirely dried up. Indeed, the strength of Mr. Judge's position is precisely this: he can say to the leaders of Theosophy—"Well, if I am a forger, you are all the veriest dupes, and your occupation is utterly gone; for all your Mahatma communications have come through me. Round on me, and you round on the Mahatmas. Drive me away, and your shrine is left without an oracle."

This is truly a pretty state of things, and Mrs. Besant's present position is far from enviable. The great Mahatma bubble has burst. And what is Theosophy without Mahatmas? Why, a hook without bait. The Mahatma was the Theosophist's appeal to the bump of wonder. It was the "walk up, walk up!" of the Theosophic show. It was the web of the Theosophic fly-trap. Take away the Mahatma, and what is left? A mass of dull, pretentious, half-intelligible twaddle. There never was such a dreary literature as it puts before the world. Mrs. Besant's own writings are open to the same reproach. There is a certain charm in her platform eloquence, whether you don't understand her or know she is talking nonsense; but when you read her Theosophic utterances in cold blood, you find they have a certain measured fluency, but for the rest they are insufferably tedious, without so much as a flash of that illumination you sometimes get from "mystics" of originality, like Swedenborg.

Yes, the great Mahatma bubble is burst. And when such a bubble has burst, it is impossible to blow another like it in the same generation. We consider Theosophy the silliest delusion of the present age. It is not even a great delusion. Not a single person in it—apart from the debateable case of Mrs. Besant, whose talent seems to us entirely that of an advocate; not a single person in it, we say, has achieved, is ever likely to achieve, the slightest independent distinction. They have all been lifted into notoriety on a new wave of superstition; and as the wave retires, they are all left high and dry, with nothing to save them from present contempt and speedy oblivion.

Mrs. Besant is the only person of real popularity in this imposture, and she made her reputation as an advocate of Atheism. Freethinkers cannot help speculating as to her future. Will she become a Catholic? Oh no. Catholicism offers women nothing but suffering and silence. Will the end for her come in this way?—

> Then old age and experience hand in hand
> Lead her to death, and make her understand,
> After a search so painful and so long,
> That all her life she has been in the wrong.

G. W. FOOTE.

Digitized by Google

THE APOSTLES' CREED.—II.

(Concluded from page 34.)

Dr. Philip Schaff, in his History of the Creeds, while trying to argue that the baptismal creed gradually grew out of the confession of Peter (Matt. xvi. 16),* says: "It is the product of the Western Catholic Church." "It is not of primary, apostolic, but of secondary, ecclesiastical inspiration." "It assumed different shapes and forms in different congregations. Some were longer, some shorter; some declarative, some interrogative, in the form of questions and answers." "If we regard, then, the present text of the Apostles' Creed as a complete whole, we can hardly trace it beyond the sixth, certainly not beyond the close of the fifth century, and its triumph over all the other forms in the Latin Church was not completed till the eighth century, or about the time when the bishops of Rome strenuously endeavored to conform the litanies of the Western Churches to the Roman order." Dr. Lumby, as I have noticed, puts it even later.

It thus appears from the best orthodox Christian authorities that the so-called Apostles' Creed was written by no such persons as the Apostles; and with respect to the high authority which was for ages claimed for it, it is a convicted imposture and forgery, tending, from its acceptance in the Church, to cast doubt on all other productions said to be of apostolical authority.

If we turn from the history of the creed to its contents, they must be pronounced the concentrated essence of nonsense. First, a Father God, who, since he is not said to be a spirit, is presumably as much a masculine person as his Son. This son, we are to believe, was conceived by the Holy Ghost and born of a virgin. Of his teachings nothing is told, but the affirmation is made that he suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, dead, and buried; that he descended into hell, though we are told that he said to the thief on the cross, "To-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise"; that he ascended into heaven—against the laws of gravity—and sits on the right hand of an Infinite Person, without body, parts, or passions, whence he will return to judge the quick and the dead. We are further to believe in a nebulous Holy Ghost, a Holy Catholic Church—whose holiness rests in assertion—the communion of saints, the forgiveness of sins, the resurrection of the body after it is resolved into its elements, and the life everlasting. The Apostles' Creed, indeed, offers nothing but the driest husk of Christianity.

The desire of the High Church Party to introduce the Creed into the Board schools is not surprising, when it is noticed that the creed itself is distinctly a Romanising document. Beyond affirming the birth from the Virgin Mary, it inculcates the belief in purgatory in the statements that "He descended into hell," and the clause in regard to the communion of saints. It is true that Pearson and others point, in illustration of the doctrine of the descent into hell, to such texts as Luke xxiii. 43, Acts ii. 41, "his soul was not left in hell," or rather "in the grave," and to the much-disputed passage in 1 Peter iii. 19 about Christ speaking to the spirits in prison; but it is not easy to say why he was preaching to them, unless their prison was virtually a purgatory.

Dr. J. E. Carpenter (Theological Review, April, 1870) points out that, with one exception, the clause, "he descended into hell," is found in none of the Latin creeds until the doctrine of purgatory had assumed a very definite form; and it was evidently its growing importance which gained for the article insertion into the baptismal symbol. It was under the influence of similar ecclesiastical tendencies that the addition was made to the creed, "The communion of saints." This by no means meant the community of the holy, but the relation of living saints and the dead, and the power of the souls of dead saints to operate on the living. The doctrine of the communion of saints was closely allied, as it still is in the Catholic Church, with that of purgatory; and Protestants, in repeating the creed, impart to it a sense alien to that of its original propounders. The clause, "the forgiveness of sins," also refers to priestly absolution.

The Apostles' Creed is thus seen to be distinctly an inheritance from the Roman Catholic Church; and, like so many other documents derived from the same source, it is neither more nor less than a forgery. The proof is amply sufficient in the silence of the Apostolic Fathers, and in the fact that this so-called Apostles' Creed never had any currency in the East, where the Nicene Creed occupies its place. It is the product of the Roman Church, and was imposed on the people in the Dark Ages, remaining unquestioned until the revival of criticism by Valla and Erasmus. Since criticism has been applied to it hardly any scholar has ventured to uphold the apostolic authorship, though Gruntvig, the erratic Lutheran bishop of Denmark, of whom Mr. Maagnard has told us, thought it was as much to be attributed to Jesus Christ as the Lord's Prayer itself, and that its composition is to be referred back to the period between the Ascension and Pentecost!

The fact that the Apostles' Creed is a forgery is one which throws suspicion on all early Christian literature; and the anxiety of the clergy to have infant minds recite their belief in such spurious nonsense in the public schools shows that their aim is to stultify them at the outset. "How do you get people to swallow such an absurdity as transubstantiation?" was once asked by a Protestant of Talleyrand. "Oh, we first teach them the doctrine of the Trinity," replied the prince-bishop. A mind that has once gulped the Apostles' Creed need never strain at that of Saint Athanasius; and the children taught to believe this rubbish in their early days will be little likely to question the privileges and pretensions of the priests. Those who care for the development of rational manhood will fight with all their might against the imposition of such creeds on the plastic mind of childhood.

J. M. Wheeler.

* This passage is itself a barefaced forgery to support the claim of the fisherman at Rome to have the keys of the kingdom of heaven: "And whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven." How could a Jewish peasant make a pun in Greek and speak of a Church not in existence?

WAS CHRIST A SOCIAL AND POLITICAL REFORMER?

(Continued from page 35.)

That the political views held by Jesus were exceedingly crude is evident from the circumstance recorded in Matthew xxii. It is there stated that, on finding a coin of the realm bearing the superscription of Cæsar, Jesus declared that both Cæsar and God were to have their due. The very pertinent question put by the disciples afforded a good opportunity for some sound advice to be given upon the political subjection in which the people to whom Christ was talking were living. They were in bondage to a foreign power, and were anxious to know if it were "lawful to give tribute to Cæsar or not." Instead of returning a clear and intelligible answer, Jesus replied in words which were evasive and meaningless, so far as the information sought for was concerned. If he had any desire to alter the then existing political relations, or to suggest any improvement, he might have given a practical lesson upon the duties and obligations of the ruled to the rulers. Another opportunity was lost when, Pilate having asked Christ an important question, "Jesus gave him no answer" (John xix. 9).

Subsequently, however, Jesus recognised the "divine government," for he said: "Thou couldst have no power at all against me, except it were given thee from above" (John xix. 11). He also, having stated, "My kingdom is not of this world," added: "If my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews." Christ's notions of government were similar to those of St. Paul, who said: "The powers that be are ordained of God. . . . and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation" (Romans xiii. 1, 2; Timothy ii. 1, 2).

Now, in the very face of these scriptural utterances, we have men to-day who allege that Christ is their hero of democracy. The belief that he ever intended to improve the government of this world by secular means is utterly groundless. His negligence in this particular cannot be explained away by saying that society was not ripe for reform, and that Jesus lacked the power to revolutionise the institutions of his time. There is truth, no doubt, in the latter allegation, for the power of Christ for all practical work seems to have been very limited indeed. He did not attempt any political reform, as other men in all ages have done; he did not make honest endeavors to inaugurate improvements which, under happier circumstances, might have been carried out. There is no evidence that Christ ever concerned himself with such reforms as civil and religious liberty, the freedom of the slaves, the equality of human rights, the emancipation of women, the spread of science and of education, the proper use of the land, and the fostering of the fundamental elements of human progress. His language was: "Behold the fowls of the air: for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they? And why take ye thought for raiment? Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin. And yet I say unto you, That even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. Wherefore, if God so clothes the grass of the field, which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith? But seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

Digitized by Google

Christ's declaration that his kingdom was not of this world may be taken as a reason why he made no adequate provision for secular government; but those who worship him assert that his plan is the only one that can be successfully adopted to secure the desired reforms, and that he really did contemplate a better state of society on earth than the one that then obtained. Where is the evidence that this was so? Not in the New Testament, for it is nowhere recorded therein that such was his mission. With him the question was: "For what shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" Even Renan, who is so frequently quoted by Christian advocates as extolling Jesus, admits that he lacked the qualities of a great political and social reformer. In his Life of Jesus Renan says that Christ had "no knowledge of the general condition of the world" (p. 78); he was unacquainted with science, "believed in the devil, and that diseases were the work of demons" (pp. 79, 80); he was "harsh" towards his family, and was "no philosopher" (pp. 81-83); he "went to excess" (p. 174); he "aimed less at logical conviction than at enthusiasm"; "sometimes his intolerance of all opposition led him to acts inexplicable and apparently absurd" (pp. 274, 275); and "bitterness and reproach became more and more manifest in his heart" (p. 278.)

But let us further consider what it is said that he taught in reference to life's social requirements, and also what was his estimate of the world and the things of the world. Under any system conducted upon rational principles the first social requirement is to provide for sufficient food, clothes, and shelter; for to talk of comfort and progress without these requisites is absurd. Now, it was about these very things that Jesus, as it has already been shown, taught that we should take no thought. In Matthew (c. vi.) special reference is made to the Gentiles who did take thought as to the necessities of life; but other people were not to be anxious upon the subject, "for your Heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things," and a promise is given that he will provide them as he "feedeth" "the fowls of the air." Poverty and idleness were essentials to Christ's idea of a social state, as is proved by his advice to the rich young man, to whom he said: "If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor" (Matthew xix. 21). In John (vi. 27) it is also said: "Labor not for the meat which perisheth." What wealthy Christian will sell what he has and give to the poor, and thus carry out Christ's idea of social duties? And if the toiling millions did not labor for their meat, they would get but little of it. It is not overlooked that Jesus said to the young man, "and follow me"; which meant, I presume, that he was to join the Christian society in which they had "all things in common" (Acts iv.). But this state of existence could only be maintained by giving up all one's possessions and adding them to the general stock. If all did this, the stock would be soon exhausted. And the point here to be noted is, that in Christ's scheme no provision is made to provide for a permanent mode of living, except by prayer or miracle.

Surely it must be obvious to most people that a communion of saints, fed directly by God, could not be any solution of the social problem for those outside such communities. Besides, there is little prospect of outsiders being made partakers with the saints, unless God the Father draws them unto Christ (John vi. 44); but no one can go to the Father except by Christ (John xiv. 6). Thus our chances of admission into the Christian fold are very remote, for if we are admitted it must be through Christ, to whom we cannot go unless the Father draws us; but then we cannot go to the Father except by Christ. This is a theological puzzle, which must be left for a "Christian Socialist" to unravel if he can.

The belief that a social condition of society is sustained by an invisible power, where no labor is performed, and where no interest is taken in its progress, or in the dignity and personal independence of its members, is the height of folly. It implies the destruction of all human institutions, and the substitution of a "divinely ordered state of things," such as some of Christ's followers allege they are now hourly expecting. Well might the late Bishop of Peterborough say: "It is not possible for the State to carry out all the precepts of Christ. A State that attempted to do so could not exist for a week. If there be any person who maintains the contrary, his proper place is in a lunatic asylum" (Fortnightly, January, 1890).

The Sermon on the Mount, or "in the plain," as stated by Luke (vi. 17), has been called the Magna Charta of the kingdom of God, proclaimed by Christ, although it has never been made the basis of any human government. Its injunctions are so impracticable and antagonistic to the requirements of modern civilisation that no serious attempt has ever been made to put them in practice. It may be mentioned that the genuineness of the "Sermon" has been boldly questioned. Professor Huxley writes: "I am of opinion that there is the gravest reason for doubting whether the Sermon on the Mount was ever preached, and whether the so-called Lord's Prayer was ever prayed by Jesus of Nazareth" (Controverted Questions, p. 415). The Professor then gives his reasons for arriving at this conclusion.

The Rev. Dr. Giles, in his Christian Records, speaking of the Sermon on the Mount, says: "There is good ground for believing that such a collective body of maxims was never, at any time, delivered from the lips of our Lord"; and Milman declares that scarcely any passage is more perplexing to the harmonist of the Gospels than this sermon, which appears to be inserted at two different places by Matthew and Luke.

Mr. Charles B. Cooper, a very able American writer, aptly observes: "If this discourse is so important, as Christians profess to believe—the sum of all the teachings of Jesus, and the sufficient source of all morality—it is curious that Mark and John knew nothing about it, and that Luke should dismiss it with such a short report. Luke, omitting the larger part of the matter, takes only one page to tell what occupies three pages in Matthew; and to find any parallel to much of Matthew we have to go to other chapters of Luke and to other occasions. In addition to which, they disagree as to whether it was given on a mountain or in a plain."

Taking a broad view of the teachings as ascribed to Christ, I should describe most of them as being the result of emotion rather than the outcome of matured reflection. They are based upon faith, not upon knowledge, trust in Providence being the cornerstone of his system, so far as his fragmentary utterances can be systematised. In my opinion, the idea of his being a political and social reformer rests upon an entirely mistaken view of the union of what are termed temporal and spiritual things. Examples of this may be seen in such injunctions as "Love one another" and "Love your neighbor as yourself." The first was clearly applicable to the followers of Christ, for he expressly states, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples" (John xiii. 35); and the second command applied only to the Jewish community, not to strangers who lived outside. These injunctions did not mean that those who heard them were to love all mankind. Christ himself divided those who were for him from those who were against him. To the first he said, "Come, ye blessed of my father"; to the other, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels."

CHARLES WATTS.

(To be continued).

Mental power cannot be got from ill-fed brains.—Herbert Spencer.

Digitized by Google

ON BERNARD SHAW AND OTHER THINGS.

Mr. Bernard Shaw, it has been said, carries more heresies than any man in London. He positively revels in heresy. He is also, besides being an Atheist, a Socialist, a Vegetarian, and several other things, a brilliant man of letters; and he is, in addition, an art critic, a musical critic, a dramatist, a dramatic critic, and an expounder of Socialist economics. And knowing his capacity for saying fine, delightful, irritating things, I journeyed down to Camberwell the other Sunday to hear him give his views on "The Religion of the Twentieth Century." At least such ran the legend in the papers. But then the newspapers often know more than human intelligence could acquire. For, be it said, an ordinary individual would never have suspected after he came out, unless he were told, that he had been listening to a lecture on the religion of the twentieth century. Hence I say newspapers are useful things.

The cosy hall of the Camberwell Branch was well filled with an appreciative and not too docile audience. At least some people had a good deal to say afterwards. Mr. Shaw began by telling us, characteristically, that he had a curious knack of taking the opposite view always to that of his audience. If he were in a chapel that night, he would in all probability be very impious; as he was in a Secular hall, the chances were that he would deliver a very pious discourse. Among other things, he said that Secularists were often liable to fall into the error of thinking that all the truth was on their side, and all the falsehood on the religionist's. Mr. Shaw seemed to be generously of opinion that it was a case of six of one and half-a-dozen of the other, or, at most, seven of one and five of the other. He also had a little word to say about Secularist work in the past being concerned principally with demolishing superstitions and absurdities, without trying to get behind them and comprehend their origin. And he proceeded to gaily tell us that, for instance, the Trinity presented no mystery whatever to him. To the Camberwell chapel-goer, he said, the Trinity was simply an arithmetical absurdity—"three times one are one"—there it is, a mystery; the poor chapel-goer could make nothing of it, and he thought he believed he believed it. To the Camberwell Secularist, on the other hand, it was merely an arithmetical absurdity, and there was an end of the matter. But the brilliant G. B. S. could see it perfectly. And he gave an illustration: Many a lady is a mother and a daughter and a wife—three relationships in the one person. A man can be a father and a son, and he has a relation to his fellow-men, which typifies the H. G. in him. Then take the Immaculate Conception too. Mr. Shaw understood it. I don't know if I can convey, or, indeed, that Mr. Shaw could, his idea. It was the embodiment of the sinlessness of motherhood in the mind of the woman, or something to that effect; there you have the "poetic fancy" at the base of the doctrine. And Mr. Shaw would extract a "poetic fancy" from a cart-wheel.

And then the Atonement, that too was as simple as A B C. The martyr suffered for the shortcomings of others. Charles Bradlaugh, for instance, had raised and benefitted his country at the expense of his own life; and at the thought of what he did—as even one orthodox reviewer admitted—the pulse beat quicker and the blood ran faster. That was the "poetic fancy" at the base of the Atonement doctrine.

Now I do solemnly aver that at much of this Shawian talk hardly a ripple passed over the faces of the listeners. All this surpassing satire was more or less lost. And so at the end several gentlemen got up to righteously protest against galvanising a dead superstition into life, by extracting "poetic fancies" from falsehoods. Freethinkers have something better to do than spend themselves in propping up old and mischievous shams by delving for some possible support on which there is a shade of a chance the sham can rest. And it was shown that the Shawian formula would equally demonstrate a "quaternity," or any other like monstrosity. For a man can be father, son, husband, uncle, nephew, cousin, pork-butcher, and vestryman rolled into one—which, I think, leaves the Trinity a long way behind. In the same way, when you are at the "poetic fancy" business, you can work it up out of anything. "Two and two make five." Now that is quite understandable by the Shaw method. For if you take, say, a penny, and put it on the table, it is only a penny. Add two pennies and two pennies to it, and lo, you have five pennies. So that two and two really do make five where there was not five before. This "poetic fancy," I should remark, is patented.

It was also seriously remarked that, since large numbers of people are still enthralled by dogma, the "destructive" work of Secularists is more essential and more practical for the moment than any amount of the "fancying" business, though there is as much serious work done by Secularists as a body as by any other party. But if there is a condemned house which is a danger to human life that requires to be cleared away, most people would think it more profitable to get pick-axe and spade than to discuss what was the original object for which the house was built, what "fancy" the architect had in mind when he designed it, and what amount of propping and patching would render it merely harmless. The person of common sense would argue that, as the house stood in the way, the first and necessary thing was to clear it out of the way, and then start to re-build a habitable better dwelling in its place. All this was pointed out, not as I have said it, but substantially. And Mr. Shaw replied. He kept up splendidly. And he said several delightful things by the way. One was that his first impulse, on seeing the Bradlaugh statue at Northampton, was to take up a stone and fling it thereat, because it was a bad statue, and, "as an artist," it offended his eye. He also incidentally gave a testimonial to John Bunyan, whom he—"actually a professional writer himself"—considered one of the masters, if not the greatest master, of the English language. But his great sallies were really lost; the irony possibly was too subtle, and so, as Mr. Shaw says of something else, it was probably understood only by a few kindred spirits.

And, when I returned home, I took up the Saturday Review and pondered again some sentences therein, in an article over the initials "G. B. S." It should be mentioned, perhaps, that Mr. Shaw and Mr. Oscar Wilde are both Irishmen. And Mr. Shaw, in the course of a criticism of Mr. Wilde's last play, speaks thusly:—

"In a certain sense Mr. Wilde is to me our only playwright. He plays with everything: with wit, with philosophy, with drama, with actors and audience—with the whole theatre. Such a feat scandalises the Englishman, who can no more play with wit and philosophy than he can with a football or a cricket-bat. He works at both, and has the consolation, if he cannot make people laugh, of being the best cricketer and footballer in the world. . . . Ireland is, of all countries, the most foreign to England, and to the Irishman (and Mr. Wilde is almost as acutely Irish an Irishman as the Iron Duke of Wellington) there is nothing in the world quite so exquisitely comic as an Englishman's seriousness. It becomes tragic, perhaps, when the Englishman acts on it; but that occurs too seldom to be taken into account—a fact which intensifies the humor of the situation, the total result being, the Englishman utterly unconscious of his real self, Mr. Wilde keenly observant of it and playing on the self-consciousness with irresistible humor, and, finally, the Englishman annoyed with himself for being amused at his own expense. . . . He is shocked, too, at the danger to the foundations of society when seriousness is publicly laughed at."

And then this passage had a new meaning for me, and Mr. Shaw was vindicated. But the majority of the audience had not read Mr. Shaw's article, and, therefore, did not understand Mr. Shaw's lecture fully. But Mr. Shaw cannot complain if his Irish humor is misunderstood in these days when even English statesmen—and who is so intelligent as an English statesman?—fall foul of a very cheap piece of English irony.

Frederick Ryan.

An Infinite Person.

The very notion of a person implies limitation. A person implies an agent capable of affecting external agencies. No person ever was, or could be, infinite. The very notion of infinity, as the Brahmins, who wasted much time in reflection upon the subject, saw, implies the absence or dissolution of personality. When the devotee, they say, is absorbed in Brahm, his personality is like that of a grain of salt dissolved in the ocean. To talk of an infinite personality is to talk of a round square. It is an infinite absurdity.

Digitized by Google

OLD AND NEW CREEDS.

A PERUSAL of printed sermons, or an auricular attention to pulpit discourses, is instructive of what fearful straights the preachers are in to defend their theological positions. Hearty thanks must be rendered to all publishers who give to the world parsonic utterances in printed form, for the opportunity they afford to those outside the fold to become acquainted with modern Christian methods of controversy, to follow the ever-changing attitudes of the lights of the Churches, and to learn how they are readjusting their beliefs in deference to scientific discoveries, ascertained truths, and the improved culture of the human mind. "The same yesterday, to-day, and for ever" cannot be said of Christian doctrines, or rather of the doctrines of Christian sects (for which among the myriad bodies can properly claim possession of the pure and undiluted faith?), no more than it can refer to the Christian God, or, to be more precise, to the properties which Christian worshippers ascribe to their deity. To comprehend that this is inevitable, it should be borne in mind that change is the natural corollary of the existences of countries, peoples, and persons; and as no two Deists ever had an identical conception of their god, and as no two religionists ever had a similar comprehension of their faith, so, when nations arise and decay, when people are differently constituted, and influenced by altered environments and conditions, and when life itself scarcely appears to be composed of the same elements, do beliefs and ideas of gods fluctuate, and relations to old faiths become metamorphosed. This occurs in the ordinary process of things, and no one will question it, be they ever so affectionately attached to crude dogmas and stale fancies of bygone periods. The natural laws, however, which wreck unsupported mental conceptions, do not affect demonstrated facts and unquestionable truths, for these remain, like adamantine rocks, unmoved or unshaken by the ceaseless roll of ages.

Of the two classes of Christians—those who adhere to the literal interpretation of the Bible, and endeavor, or feign, to order their lives in unison with the teachings of Christ and his apostles, and those who accept, according to their own personal opinions and prejudices, the contents of the New Testament, and virtually reject the admonitions of the Nazarene—it is difficult to decide which to hold in the most contempt. The former certainly have sincerity on their side, which is, perhaps, their only virtue; but it is an advantage in these times to find some who are simple and fossilised enough to cling with pathetic affection to old and eccentric traditions. Still, it is lamentable that their intellectual depravity is so great, that they are so sunken in the mire of superstition and shallow-mindedness, and that they are so far from the saving arms of light and truth. It is hardly, however, with feelings of scorn that their position should be viewed, or with chastisements of angry words that their misplaced faith should be condemned. Thoroughness is an enviable quality in a man, be he a blackguard or a saint.

It is with the dishonest, insincere, and elastic adherents (if they are adherents) of the Christian religion that chief concern should rest. Professedly attached to a faith whose plain and unvarnished items are mostly repulsive to them, they have not the courage or the honesty to openly cast off its trammels; avowedly subscribing to a form of belief, and a manual of historical narrative, they exhibit, by every means in their power, their abhorrence of the essentials of the one, and their rejection of the veracity of the other; seemingly devoted to a spiritual ideal which excludes participation in worldly affairs, they do their utmost to excel in earthly matters, and revel in carnal delights. Perhaps an impossible standard of conduct, a crude and incomplete ethical code, or a false conception of human duties and responsibilities, is the main cause of the discrepancies which exist between the teaching and the practice of the Christian creed. Whether that be so or not, it must be recognised what William Hazlitt has written, that "there is not a bigger hypocrisy in the world than religious hypocrisy." Nothing engenders hypocrisy so much as religion. The vilest murderers are those from whose lips there hang pious phrases; the worst deceivers are those who are immersed in religion; the biggest swindlers are all fine Christian gentlemen. Praying Jabez will not be forgotten in a hurry.

Up-to-date sermons by advanced clericals are distinguished for a condescending recognition of the worth of sceptics, and of the merits of their works; and the assimilation of the discoveries and accomplishments of science. Where formerly heretics were treated to the scantiest considerations, their characters maligned, and their persons persecuted and tortured, a tardy tribute is now paid them for their disinterested services to mankind, their whole-hearted concern for the well-being of their fellow creatures, and for their honor and integrity. It is regretted that they cannot be numbered among the faithful; but the fold is being gradually made sufficiently accommodating to take them in, or some saving clause in the tenets of the faith is discovered to prove them to be working on the "Lord's side." But the most glaring hypocrisy of representative pulpiteers is their method of crediting religion with scientific knowledge and truths. "Science," say these men of God, "is but another blessing of the merciful Father to increase the delights and comforts of his children on earth. He reveals the hidden treasures of nature to man for his benefit; his handiwork is shown in the wonders of the universe. God has designed that man shall investigate his creation, and then glorify him for his goodness." But surely, if the products of science are blessings to man to-day, they would also have been equally blessings two thousand years ago. Then why did God allow man to be kept in ignorance of what would have been a great blessing to him? If the facts which science reveals to man to-day are of any value, they would have been infinitely more so to God's thick-headed chosen people four thousand years ago. And yet God kept them in ignorance of the properties of nature, through which lack of knowledge they suffered. But to whom shall be rendered thanks for the revelations of science? To God, who has kept them hidden for centuries, and has allowed his worshippers to persecute and murder those men who have sought to reveal the beauty of his handiwork? To God, who taught his people false ideas of the universe; who distorted their minds, and made them indifferent to all save the use of the sword and their neighbors' wives? To God, whose book contains more unscientific nonsense and inaccuracies than the mind of the most untutored savage? Or to man, who, during countless eras of the world's history, has searched the book of Nature for truth, and added to the store of knowledge at the cost of blighted constitutions and early graves? To man, who has fought the monsters of superstition and ignorance, heedless of the dungeon and the stake; who, being encompassed by unmerciful enemies, has still persevered in the sacred task of enlightenment? There can be no doubt who it is. Of course, no intelligent person whose mind was unhinged by dogmas would credit a deity with such performances as Christians do theirs. They rival savages in painting their God in devilish hues.

Even on the supposition that God is the creator and manipulator of the universe, it is difficult to conceive how his beneficent qualities can be thereby proved. While many of nature's laws tend to the advantage of the human race, there are those which are cruel in their working and their inflexibility, and which bring about untold evil and misery. Some even threaten to obliterate the human species. The aim of science is to obtain control over the forces of nature by becoming acquainted with their properties; to utilise them for man's benefit, instead of allowing them to militate against his prosperity; to direct their influences into channels from which blessings may flow. Will anyone question this? Yet it is tantamount to saying, if God be above, behind, or in nature, that as soon as man has frustrated God's creation, and as soon as he has brought into subjection and control God's forces, he will be safer, happier, and more successful in his worldly avocations. But there, the clericals were always dense, and the controversial bog into which they have now fallen will serve as a fine pictorial representation of the ridiculous.

So surely as the remark ascribed to Christ, "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon," was true to the early believers—it has been made possible since—is the truth incontestable that religion and science have nothing in common. Let Christians be honest, and they will acknowledge that, if they really believed what they professed, they would say that this earth is but a vale of tears; that it is insulting to God to endeavor to improve his work; that the world is but a temporary ante-room to the mansions prepared above; and that it is not their dwelling-place, but a desert through which they travel before gaining the joys of their heavenly home. Let them, like the honest Scotchman in Mr. Barrie's play, "The Professor's Love Study," who declares his unbelief in, and horror of, such scientific contrivances as electrical engines, on the ground that he does not read about them in the Bible, adhere to their text-book and abjure worldly matters, and then they may command, if not the admiration, at least the respect, of Rationalists for their sincerity.

Digitized by Google

FRED WILSON.

SOME LITTLE-KNOWN FREETHINKERS.

FREETHOUGHT can boast its noble army of martyrs and its glorious company of the apostles. Worthy work has been done, however, by those in the rank and file who have never aspired to eminence; and as it has been my fortune to know some of these, and to look up the lives and writings of others, I think well to jot down a few particulars of some minor workers in the good old cause. I begin with an early friend,

MYLES MCSWEENEY.

I was but a lad when I first heard the rich brogue of this Irish advocate at the Brill, Somer's Town, adjacent to the spot now crossed by the Midland Arches. The humorous way in which he referred to the myths of "Jasus and the Vargin" was irresistibly funny. His pet subject was the non-historical character of these legendary personages, and he brought to bear on his topic intimacy with the rites and doctrines of the Roman Church, in which he was educated, and a wide acquaintance with mythological lore. Born at Enniskillen in 1814, he early migrated to London, and, hearing the Rev. Robert Taylor at the Rotunda, in 1830, adopted the views of the "Devil's Chaplain." When I knew him he was a peripatetic stationer and book dealer, living in a very humble cottage down Westminster way. Yet his room was filled with books explaining "all the mythologies." Many of them were rare and valuable. There were the works of Drummond, Bryant, Maurice, Holwell, Pluché, Savory, Asiatic Researches, etc., mostly picked up secondhand during his peregrinations. Nor were later books wanting, such as those of Dr. Inman, presented by the author, whom McSweeney supplied with many books, as he did also Bishop Colenso.

He sold me some books, said to be "worth their weight in gold," and lent me others, from some of which I enlarged drawings for his lectures. Every Sunday he went from place to place discoursing on some phase of his constant theme. On one occasion I recollect that he took the chair for Mr. Bradlaugh at the Hall of Science, when our leader was lecturing on some similar topic to his own. I once accompanied McSweeney to a meeting of the old Anthropological Society to hear a paper by the Rev. Dunbar Heath. Myles opposed, and afforded much amusement by his rich brogue, and the Irish humor with which he satirised the lecture. At this meeting William Simpson—"Crimean Simpson," of the Illustrated London News, who was as good an antiquarian as he was an artist—was present and spoke. Some years afterwards, under the pen-name of Phandye, Simpson contributed to the Secularist, when under the conduct of Mr. Foote, an amusing skit, entitled "Is Myles McSweeney a Man, a God, or a Myth?" applying his own principles to resolve the living man into a solar hero. Myles was a good-humored man, and took the skit well. For his plainness of language about "Jasus and Mary," and what he considered the remnants of phallic worship in Christianity, he was regarded as coarse. Essentially he was not so. I well remember the fatherly way in which he advised me, while in my teens, to abstain from all indulgences and adopt the Stoic philosophy, which he not only held, but acted up to. For drawing my attention to the noble counsels of Antoninus and Epictetus I owe a debt of gratitude to this self-taught Irishman.

"Larn abethinince," he said, "afore ye thry motheration." His information was good and extensive, and it was at his tongue's tip. But two things he lacked that were essential to his studies—a sound knowledge of languages and philological evolution, and a knowledge of "primitive culture" and evolution. His mind was formed in the pre-Darwinian era. His writings in the National Reformer and Secular Chronicle are only valuable for their out-of-way information, which some other might shape to better purpose. The same criticism may be passed on a pamphlet on Moses and Bacchus, which he published, and which he intended to follow by Biblical and Mythical Parallels, which he compiled. An American, Mr. T. W. Doane, has since carried out this project in a way which reminds me of McSweeney's idea, which never received sufficient encouragement to obtain book form.

J. M. W.

Women's Christian Unionist—"Which do you consider the most improper and dangerous book in your stock?" Bookseller—"Well, mum, the Bible is very warm in parts."

ACID DROPS.

OUR "forward" contemporary, the Methodist Times, has just made the startling discovery that "what gave Mr. Bradlaugh his great position in Northampton was not his theological attitude, but his political opinions." This is not strictly true, for Bradlaugh's great personality counted for much in the long fight of thirteen years before Northampton elected him to a seat in the House of Commons. But, so far as it is true, it is certainly not new. Bradlaugh said so himself again and again; and, as a matter of fact, he dropped his Freethought propaganda at Northampton when he aspired to represent it in Parliament. On the other side, however, it is a fact that he was fiercely opposed in the name of Christianity, and vehemently denounced from Nonconformist pulpits. He did not win as an Atheist, but he certainly won in spite of his Atheism.

The Methodist Times, we observe, is still at war with the Christian Advocate. "Most people," the former says, "would apply to the statements of the Christian Advocate a very short, vigorous, and expressive Anglo-Saxon word." But it will not employ this word, because it believes its contemporary is only "grossly prejudiced and appallingly ignorant," and not animated by a desire to "deliberately and intentionally misrepresent the facts." From which it is a legitimate inference that the Methodist Times would employ the word "lie" if it were justified by the facts. But what a howl was raised when, being justified by the facts, we applied the word "lie" to Mr. Hughes's story of "The Atheist Shoemaker." The man's "dignity" was "outraged," and under this paltry pretence he avoided a Committee of Honor, which he knew would have to brand him as a liar in the face of the world.

Mr. Hughes does not use short, vigorous, and expressive Anglo-Saxon words. He shudders at "lie"—that is, when applied to himself—but he speaks of the Advocate's "moral obliquity," declares that what it says is "absolutely false and inaccurate from beginning to end," and calls a certain part of it an "outrageous untruth." Well now, it is a proverb that tastes differ; but, for our part, if a man thought all that about us, we would rather he said "lie" at once than waste his time and ours in ridiculous circumlocutions.

Considering that the Methodist Times is so rabidly teetotal, it is curious that it takes money for advertising "Mariani Wine."

Mrs. Mellon, the Spiritist medium at Sydney, who was "detected" in materialising "the small spirit form known as Cissie," has given the world an explanation. The gentleman who got hold of Cissie found he had caught Mrs. Mellon, whose shoes and stockings were afterwards discovered in her cabinet. But it appears that the spirits were bothered by the "inharmonious feeling at the meeting," so they "drew" only from Mrs. Mellon's "lower parts," and principally the "legs." "At one time," she says, "I felt as though I had no legs at all—they were rendered very small and shrunken; and that is how I explain my shoes and stockings coming off." It is said that this explanation satisfies the Chief Justice of the Colony. We hope he is not so easily satisfied when he sits upon the bench.

There is a ghost at Darweston, in Dorsetshire—one of those parts of the world in which ghosts are pretty much at home. This ghost is a real one. Of course! It has baffled the rector and the schoolmaster; but, as it writes on a slate, and spells money "mony," it seems greatly in need of the schoolmaster's services. We hope he will improve its neglected education.

Mr. W. T. Stead is a curious bundle of contradictions. In the new year's address to his readers he once more boasts that he is engaged in a Holy War on behalf of Human Brotherhood. A few pages farther he rather rejoices that Mr. Cecil Rhodes will soon be in a position "at any moment to be at hand's-grip with the Mahdi." What a pity it is that Mr. Stead and Mrs. Besant cannot work up a new religion between them! It would be one of the wonders of the world.

Mr. Stead has taken to singing the praises of Albert Edward, who is going to "marshal the forces making for the improvement and the amelioration of the social system." Mr. Stead sees all this in his mind's eye. "Hereafter," he says, "I may return to it again." The grammar is characteristic of the hasty gentleman who superintends the affairs of this globe. Ordinary people return; Mr. Stead returns again. Ordinary people would write "improvement" or "amelioration"; Mr. Stead writes both. And his style is on a level with his thinking.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Maskelyne, the conjurer, says that Mr. Stead arranged with his son to photograph a spirit under conditions which would preclude the possibility of trickery. To this end Mr. Stead endeavored to find a medium of unimpeachable character, but was informed by the Spiritists that they knew only of one—a lady who had left for Australia. Probably Mrs. Mellon, whose spirit, Cissie, so depleted her legs that her stockings came off when she was grabbed with bare feet at Sydney.

"Some time afterwards," continues Mr. Maskelyne, "I received a letter from Mr. Stead, saying that he had met with a wonderful materialising medium, and desired that we should attend to photograph a spirit at a séance to be held the next day. But, as usual, by the next post we heard that the medium had been taken ill, and the séance was postponed. Since then the camera and accessories have been constantly in readiness, but we are still waiting."

Credulity is ever bursting out into new developments. Many people believe in "graphology," or telling people's characters from their handwriting. The "graphologists" have been at work on Mark Twain's caligraphy—of course, without knowing whose it was; and they find him "inconstant, illogical, insincere, absolutely devoid of feeling, self-conscious, and wanting in moral rectitude." That's a pretty large order for poor Mark, isn't it? But he can afford to laugh at it—and at the "graphologists."

By and bye the world will be overrun with "professors" of all sorts of nonsense. Matthew Arnold was Professor of Poetry at Oxford, but he dropped the title of "professor," feeling, as he said, that it was so much better adorned by men like Professor Anderson and Professor Pepper.

The Unitarians were defined by Dean Hook, in his Church Dictionary, as "certain heretics who do not worship the true God." And Coleridge, who had been one of them, gave his opinion that they were not entitled to the name of Christians. Now they are making a considerable fuss over the Sinai palimpsest, which says that Joseph begat Jesus, as a proof that they are the true primitive and only original Christians after all.

Mr. F. C. Conybeare argues this thesis in the Academy. He holds that the doctrine of the virgin birth is late, not being found in Paul. "The Christian dogma," he says, "is a materialisation of a philosophical myth found in Philo." The myth—viz., that the Logos is born of the virgin Sophia, or Reason from Wisdom, and "the story of the descent of the Holy Spirit like a dove, had a similar origin in the pre-Christian Philonean and Talmudic symbolisation of the Divine Spirit as a dove."

The crowing of the Unitarians, of course, makes the orthodox repudiate the newly-discovered heretical gospel. The Church Times frankly says there is "only one solution—to reduce the claims of the Syriac gospels," and "to recognise them as relics of a side tradition of a corrupt nature"; and it concludes by saying that, "if the Lewis Codex is heretical, it must involve the Cureton, which all admit to be closely allied to it, in its own fate." One thing the orthodox can never admit, and that is, that Jesus had an earthly father.

The Bishop of Manchester has been fulminating from his cathedral against the claims of the Roman Church. "These claims," he said, "from the very first, had been based on forgeries." Well, Dr. Moorhouse cannot deny that the Roman Church was antecedent to his own, which has adopted a great deal from it. Does not this suggest that the claims of the entire Christian Church require rigid scrutiny?

Mrs. Justice, the lady who collected money for a bogus Orphanage, of course protested that she was working for the Lord, and the respectable young ladies who were used to assist in the collection were provided with religious badges with a lamb and an angel upon them. These pious frauds are stayed from their practices for a while; but while dupes abound rogues are likely to be forthcoming.

Gradually but surely the nasty priest is being expelled from the marriage laws. In Hungary just now the emperor has consented to create sufficient new lords or magnates to carry a Civil Marriage Bill through the "upper" house, where the creatures of the Pope had previously kicked it out. It is an instructive fact, as we have noted before, that it is in Catholic lands, where the priest is best known, that he is the most intensely hated; in Protestant England, etc., where he apes the Protestants for his own base ends, he is not only tolerated, but treated as a respectable fellow, although he is the deepest-dyed villain in the community.—Liberator.

At Minneapolis one Blitz, put in the dock for the murder of Miss Catherine Ging, brought his Bible in court and clung to it tightly all through the proceedings, as if it was his only hope. "His eyes were bloodshot and restless, his hair dishevelled, and his whole appearance disquieting."

On this the Progressive Thinker, of Chicago, remarks: "That Bible had taught the guilty wretch if he believed on the Lord Jesus Christ, though his sins were scarlet he should be made white as snow, and should enter the pearly gates of the New Jerusalem; while she who had no moment for preparation for the awful change did not believe, and was damned."

A Reuter's telegram from St. Petersburg mentions the trial of eleven persons of the province of Viatka for offering human sacrifices. They belonged to a sect known as Votiaks. The Daily News calls them an idolatrous sect, but we should like to know how many of the Russian Christians are not idolaters, or worshippers of icons. These Votiaks, however, are Pagans, though the population of Russia is classed as Christian.

From the evidence given at the trial it appears that the accused induced a certain beggar-man named Matriounine to visit the house of Moses Dimitrieff, one of the prisoners. After making the beggar drunk, they cut his throat and decapitated him. They then suspended the headless trunk from the ceiling, and, after making five incisions, collected the blood in dishes, and extracted the man's heart and lungs, which they subsequently used in their idolatrous rites. The mutilated body was thrown by the side of a high road. This atrocity was perpetrated as long ago as March, 1894, during the great Russian famine, and the object of the sacrifice was to appease the anger of Kourbane, the spirit of evil, and prevent a fresh visitation of the scourge.

According to the English Churchman, Judge Bagshawe, Q.C., and Judge Stonor sat with Cardinal Vaughan when, in his official robes, he tried a case in this country, by virtue of his position as head of the Roman Catholic Church in England. The court may have been an informal one of arbitration; but the Cardinal seems to have done all possible to a private person to give it an authoritative aspect. And, after all, one of the parties would not accept his decision.

Nominally, the Church of England is the Church of the entire nation. Judged, however, by the bishops' confirmations, which are necessary for the admission of adolescents into the Church, it is only the Church of an insignificant minority. Out of a population of thirty millions the only persons confirmed in 1893 were 222,893. The immense majority of these were females. This fact suffices to prove that, despite its boasted activity, the Church is losing ground, and should encourage those who are looking forward to Disestablishment and, what is still more important Disendowment.

The remedy suggested by the Church Times for the paucity of confirmations betrays the weakness of the Church. It wants children to be confirmed earlier in order to prevent leakage. All sensible persons acquainted with the thoughts of the juveniles who are confirmed would rather suggest that such a rite should be deferred till their minds were more matured. But the less mature and the more credulous the mind of the child, so much the better for the Church.

The Borough Polytechnic, London, is an institution supported by all sections of society, including Freethinkers. Its managers, however, are making a big effort to get the working classes to come to the Victoria Hall, where various ministers are to dose them with Christianity. As the Polytechnic funds cannot be used for the purpose, a circular has been sent to the subscribers, begging funds for this pious enterprise. Mr. George Anderson, having received one of these gentle solicitations, replied as follows:—

"BOROUGH POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTE.

"I would be pleased to subscribe to any effort to make better the lower classes; but preaching Christianity will not do it. Christianity has been preached for many hundreds of years, and it costs the country millions of money annually, and see the result. 'The neighborhood has been the despair of every Christian worker,' you write. Then why continue a system that has so failed? Why not teach the people something they can understand?—how to preserve their health, to keep the skin and hands in order, and not to fret over passing difficulties, but to work out their salvation instead of praying for it. Teach them the laws of health—sanitary science, some knowledge of the structure of their own bodies, and how to avoid prevalent diseases, the air to breathe, the clothes to wear, and things to avoid. Teach the people such things, and they will flock to you; they will understand what is said to them, and carry away ideas they can talk about; but the other leaves them in the clouds of ignorance, where neither teacher nor taught know anything. Instruct as I advise, and I will subscribe.—Yours,

"GEORGE ANDERSON."

Digitized by Google

Providence doesn't mean that we should enjoy cheap Florida oranges this year and forget our dependence on "one above." Towards the end of December an extraordinary frost visited Florida, and destroyed 85 per cent. of the orange crop, the damage being estimated at £1,000,000. The gospel is declared to be without money and without price, but the object-lessons of Providence are very costly.

Raphael's picture of the Miraculous Draught is a splendid piece of artistic audacity. The boat is tremendously dwarfed, and attention is thus concentrated on J. C. and the apostolic fisherman. Naturally speaking, it is clear enough that the little cockle-shell of a boat would capsize if a stout apostle stepped into it carelessly; and several of them, hauling away at a monstrous catch of fishes, is really grotesque—only, of course, the great painter knew that as well as his critics. The whole drama was miraculous; and, as nature was contravened in its details, she might be equally contravened in their representation.

Unfortunately for five fishermen on the Irish coast last week, they had no J. C. on board, and no miracle to help them. They had an extraordinary catch of herrings, but in hauling them in the boat capsized, and the poor fellows were all drowned. Miraculous draughts don't pay except on the Sea of Galilee—and probably not there in this sceptical, god-forsaken age.

Fiji—Wesleyan converted Fiji—has been visited by a terrible hurricane, in which many lost their lives. Of the five churches in Suva, the capital, three collapsed. The Anglican Church was unroofed, while the Catholic sustained less serious damage. The Customs bonded store was destroyed, but the sugar mills remained uninjured.

A special service of supplication to God on behalf of the entombed miners at the flooded Audley Colliery was held on the spot; but, despite the prayers, and the heroism of men wh o did something better than pray, over seventy of the men were drowned.

Alexander McInnes, of Dumbarton-road, Glasgow, would seem to need the attention of his friends. He writes to the Glasgow Weekly Herald that he has studied "faith science" for more than thirty years, and can turn on the weather pretty much as he likes. He says: "According to Revelation iv. 3, Christ is the true magnet-stone, attracting all that is true, but repelling all that is false; further, imparting the true electro-magnetic power to his genuine followers, that they may do impossibilities. Inter alia, I find that, with a very small jet of gas-light, I can fill my bedroom every night with a supernatural light, and angels are attracted, but demons are driven away—the two kinds of electrical energy." If Mr. McInnes is really responsible for the weather, he deserves something severer than the care of his friends.

Mr. Savage Landor, in his book on Corea, tells a story of the King and telephones. When the invention was shown him, he immediately, at great expense, set about connecting by telephone the tomb of the queen dowager with the royal palace, a distance of several miles. Needless to say, though many hours a day were spent by his majesty and his suite in listening at their end of the telephone, and a watchman kept all night in case the queen dowager should wake up from her eternal sleep, not a message, or a sound, or murmur even was heard, which result caused the telephone to be condemned as a fraud by his Majesty the King of Cho-sen. After all, the King of Cho-sen, the Hermit Kingdom of Corea, is not much unlike some good Christians who fall out with science because it does not confirm their old superstitions.

Scene, a Salvation Army meeting on the South coast. Captain to the meeting—"Dear friends, the collection is one shilling and fourpence halfpenny. Will some kind friends make up the other three shillings and sevenpence halfpenny?" They didn't.

"Dagonet" (Mr. G. R. Sims) in the Referee writes strongly on the subject of General Booth's shelters, which he regards as "capable of breeding enough disease to decimate London." Mr. Sims says it is "monstrous" that Mr. Booth should be the one person in England allowed to keep a common lodging-house without complying with the Act of Parliament. "The matter must be seen to at once," he concludes, "and the Booth shelters placed under proper police inspection and control. There is not a shadow of excuse for the continuance of the present disgraceful state of things."

We recently drew attention to some anecdotes retailed by the Rev. Charles Berry about John Morley's condescension to family prayers in houses where he is staying. Mr. Berry has hopes of the sceptic yet. "Perhaps some day," he remarks, "his spirit of piety will find a body for itself in a credible statement of the Christian message." What a roundabout way of prophesying that John Morley will become a Christian—as he may if he ever descends to the intellectual level of Mr. Berry. Happily that seems impossible.

The lauding of Laud, whom the High Church papers have been calling "the English Cyprian," "a martyr to the faith," etc., shows how these Churchmen would like to deal with Dissent. The hammer of the Puritans, who put in force against them all the musty old laws he could find, and who had no conception of tolerance, is the very ideal of the Romanising section of the Church; though in himself he was, as Carlyle said, "a kiln-dried man, a baked man, hard and dry like a cricket, unlovable as a locust." Worse, he was a bigoted persecutor.

A fac-simile begging letter from Father B. Murray, of Wellingboro', reaches us. It begins by saying, "The Holy Sacrifice of the Mass will be offered by Father Murray for you and all who read this letter, or who listen to it." It appeals for help for the struggling mission of our Lady of the Sacred Heart, and promises in return that "your name, too, shall lie on the altar of God and at the shrine of our Lady with the Sacred Heart." A medal or picture of our Lady is also promised. These fishers of men have learnt how to land their tin with glittering but valueless tin-bait.

An Aberdeen female pauper, in sending to St. Nicholas Parochial Board a letter pleading on behalf of another pauper whose allowance had been reduced, accompanied her letter with the following "revised" version of the 23rd Psalm:—

The Lord's my Shepherd, I'll not want,
Now seems to me a lie;
He leads me not in pastures green,
Nor quiet waters by.

My soul I must myself restore,
The walk myself must make;
My comfort and my happiness
Depend upon the path I take.

Yea, when I walk in death's dark vale,
Yet will I fear none ill;
For truth and justice are my creed
And staff to comfort still.

My table's always furnished,
Though very poor, Lord knows;
My head I don't with oil anoint,
My cup ne'er overflows.

Troubles and trials all my life
Have surely followed me,
And in old age the Poorhouse
My dwelling-place must be.

Last year the Bishop of Winchester inhibited the Rev. H. Lindsay Young, vicar of St. John's, Portsea, from joining in a Communion service at the Presbyterian Church, Portsmouth. Mr. Young asked his bishop to supply him with the law which prohibited him, and was referred to the Chancellor of the diocese for information. But he got none, and this year accepted the Presbyterian invitation to assert his civil and religious liberty. At which insubordination to bishops the Church Times is greatly shocked.

The Dreyfus affair exhibits one of the dangers of democracy, the danger of losing its head. Guilty or not guilty, the man was tried in camera, and found guilty beforehand by the crowd of journalists, who fancy themselves leaders of the people, though they merely echo its prejudices and voice its passions. The mobbing of Dreyfus at La Rochelle is a pitiable climax to a very sorry drama. Beating a helpless convict with sticks and umbrellas is simply disgusting. One is bound to say, after all, that the "spy" bore himself more proudly than his judges and executioners.

According to the Crescent, the police of Liverpool succeeded in arresting one of the fanatical Christians who threw missiles at the Muezzin, who called to prayers at the Mosque in that city. It turns out that the person arrested is a Christian Sunday-school teacher.

The Rev. W. Campbell, of Los Angeles, California, mounted his pulpit, stood on his hind legs, screwed up his eyes, and besought the Lord to vouchsafe his saving grace to the lady Librarian of the City Library, and to cleanse her from all sin, and make her worthy of her office. That minister will have to consult a solicitor in future before he prays in public for anyone but himself. The lady librarian has instituted an action against him for libel. She reckons she's as much "cleansed" as the minister, anyhow.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Foote's Engagements.

Sunday, January 27, Oddfellows' Hall, St. Anne-street, Liverpool:—11, "Problems of Civilisation"; 3, "Angels"; 7, "Did Jesus Ever Live?"

February 3, Manchester.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Mr. Charles Watts's Engagements.—January 27, Hall of Science, London. February 3, Hall of Science, London; 10, Camberwell; 17, Plymouth; 24, Newcastle-on-Tyne. March 3, Manchester. April 7, Sheffield.—All communications for Mr. Watts should be sent to him (if a reply is required, a stamped and addressed envelope must be enclosed) at 81 Effra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

Lecture Notices must reach 28 Stonecutter-street by first post Tuesday, or they will not be inserted.

Mr. Foote is obliged to defer the announcement he promised to make in this week's Freethinker. A serious obstacle has arisen, which may or may not be removed or surmounted. Next week, in any case, it will be his duty to print a public statement.

Chatham Branch.—Lecture Notices are too late on Wednesday, when yours arrived last week.

T. G. Dowse.—Dr. Parker is a Congregationalist. He is minister of the City Temple, Holborn Viaduct. The Temple, of which Dr. Vaughan is Master, is quite another place—a Church of England establishment.

Inquirer.—If you want to tackle George Meredith, we advise you to begin with Richard Feverel.

E. Gage.—We cannot reply to legal questions, except in relation to Freethought; though it is clear enough to the lay mind that you cannot leave a house without giving some notice, which will, of course, depend on the special circumstances of the case.

R. Ward.—That is exactly what happened before. A suitable hall could not be obtained at Hanley. Sorry to hear of your illness.

F. J. Boorman.—Mr. Foote was absent from London, and your letter could not be answered by the time desired. Financial considerations need not stand in the way of the debate. Mr. Foote will agree to anything in reason, only he cannot afford to lose money.

E. C. Ramsey, of the Wood Green Branch, who was educated at Christ's Hospital, would like to correspond with any old "blues" who are now Freethinkers. Address from R. Forder.

L. Levine (Charleston).—Always glad to receive your useful papers.

J. S.—You will see in Algar's Glimpses of the French Revolution that the story of Cazotte's prediction of the Reign of Terror, so famous with lovers of the marvellous, was invented for him after the event by La Harpe. Probably other remarkable prophecies might be explained in a similar way.

G. R.—Shall appear.

Watts Election Fund.—Mr. G. Ward, treasurer, acknowledges: O. Featherstone (2nd subscription), 5s.

Mr. Foote's Fighting Fund.—W. W. Roberts, 2s. 6d.

Inquirer (Bacup).—The oldest manuscripts of the Old Testament books are supposed to belong to the early part of the tenth century, but we are not inclined to admit this chronology without a reservation. The earliest manuscripts of the New Testament are supposed to be several hundred years older; to belong, that is, to the second half of the fourth century. Dr. Giles's Christian and Hebrew Records is one of the best and most honest works to which we can refer you.

G. Cruddas.—The clergy are State-supported in the sense that their right to their incomes is absolutely based on the law of the land. We cannot go into the matter at length in this column.

C. Kendrick.—What is the "critical" mistake you refer to in Darwin on God? We say that the lecture which Charles Bradlaugh delivered in aid of the Forder Testimonial was his last. Mrs. Bonner says so too in the Life of her father. What is the use of asking "Was not" this, that, or the other? Make your statement, if you have one.

G. J. Holyoake.—Shall be dealt with in our next.

E. H. B. Stephenson.—Shall appear.

E. J.—Not without some merit, but hardly up to the mark for publication.

J. Lightowler.—Will try to find room.

F. J. Voisey.—In our next, owing to Mr. Foote's absence from London.

Rushden Branch.—All members are requested to attend a special meeting in the Miners' Hall at 11 a.m. to-day (January 27).

In consequence of Mr. Foote's absence in the country, some answers to correspondents, and other items, stand over till next week.

Papers Received.—Montreal Saturday Times—Newcastle Weekly Chronicle—Progressive Thinker—Liberty—Lucifer—Open Court—Liberator—Western Figaro—Crescent—Clydesdale Catholic Herald—Post—Two Worlds—Rad—Glasgow Weekly Herald—Daily News—Freidenker—Fur Unsere Jugend—Secular Thought—Truthseeker—Twentieth Century.

Friends who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish to call our attention.

Letters for the Editor of the Freethinker should be addressed to 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Orders for literature should be sent to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

The Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the publishing office, post free, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 10s. 6d.; Half Year, 5s. 3d.; Three Months, 2s. 8d.

Correspondence should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

Scale of Advertisements.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—(Narrow Column) one inch, 3s.; half column, 15s.; column, £1 10s. Broad Column—one inch, 4s. 6d.; half column, £1 2s. 6d.; column, £2 5s. Special terms for repetitions.

SUGAR PLUMS.

A good Wednesday evening audience assembled at the London Hall of Science on January 16, when Mr. Foote gave "A Night with George Meredith." The lecture was followed with much interest, and the selections, especially the poetical ones, were highly appreciated. Mr. Foote did no lecturing last Sunday, but he lectures three times to-day (January 27) at Liverpool. The local Freethinkers should endeavor to bring as many as possible of their Christian friends to the evening lecture on "Did Jesus Christ Ever Live?" The afternoon lecture is also a new one on "Angels." The morning subject is "Problems of Civilisation." On the following Sunday (February 3) Mr. Foote will be at Manchester.

We regret to say that, owing to inflammation of the eyes, Mr. Parris was precluded from lecturing at the Hall of Science on Sunday. His place was taken by Mr. Forder, who dealt with the subjects advertised, and received quite an ovation at the close of the evening lecture on "Science and Theology."

Mr. Charles Watts had a very hearty reception last Sunday in Nottingham, where he lectured three times in the Assembly Rooms. The weather was severe in the extreme, raining in torrents the whole of the day, without a moment's cessation. Friends from all the surrounding districts braved the storm and attended all the lectures, and the audiences increased in number at each meeting. In the evening every seat was occupied. We are pleased to hear from Mr. Watts that the Nottingham Branch has an energetic Committee, who are arranging week-night meetings, to be held regularly during the remainder of the winter.

Mr. Watts lectures this Sunday evening (January 27) at the Hall of Science, London, taking for his subject, "Trust in God a Delusion."

The following is the complete list of donations received at the London Secular Federation's annual dinner:—G. Ward, £1; Mr. and Mrs. Fincken, 10s.; A. Sumner, 10s.; E. Wilson, 10s.; J. Pottage, 10s.; R. Forder, 10s.; Mrs. Foote, 10s.; G. Harlow, 10s.; Touzeau Parris, 10s.; W. Hunt, 10s.; E. Henderson, 1s.; P. Sabine, 2s.; J. West, 2s. 6d.; F. J. W., 5s.; Mrs. Forder, 5s.; H. Poulson, 4s.; J. C., 5s.; F. R. Cottrell, 2s. 6d.; A. J. Marriott, 2s. 6d.; J. W. Hancock, 5s.; Miss E. Robins, 5s.; Mrs. Miller, 3s.; B. Bowden, 5s.; E. C., 5s.; F. Martini, 5s.; E. Dunn, 5s.; C. Burton, 5s.; A. and D. Bury, 5s.; R. Cook, 1s.; L. Roger, 2s.; F. Wood, 2s. 6d.; P. Rossignal, 2s.; C. F., 3s.

Among members of the N.S.S. elected on the new vestries is Mr. R. W. Parsons, for Ward No. 1, Pentonville, N.

Those members of the West London Branch who are desirous of the lectures at Kilburn being resumed during the forthcoming season are requested to attend a meeting to-day (Sunday, Jan. 27), 3.30 p.m., at 4 Springfield-gardens, N.W.

The annual meeting of the East London Branch will be held to-day (Jan. 27), at 11.30 a.m., at the Tower Hamlets Radical Association, 16 Durham-row, Stepney, E. A full attendance is requested.

Commenting on the death of Professor Seeley, Reynolds's Newspaper pays a tribute to the memory of Houston, who issued a book called Ecce Homo in 1813, for which he was condemned to two years' imprisonment and a fine of £200. "This is the way," says Reynolds's, "that an ignorant clergy met an argument which they found unanswerable." Our contemporary also speaks in the highest terms of Strauss, and says it is largely through the influence of such men that "some of the best men in the Church, and the most educated of the aristocracy, are Agnostics, if not Atheists."

Digitized by Google

Monday's Daily Chronicle contained a review of the second volume of Mr. M. D. Conway's collected edition of Thomas Paine's writings. It speaks of the Rights of Man as "the most pungent and forcible statement ever made of the grounds and claims of English Radicalism," and as "a far more able and vigorous piece of thinking than Burke's work, though the literary form has not the charm of Burke." The reader is informed that "he will be surprised throughout at the long prevalent conception of Paine as a vulgar brawler against authority," and that "he will come into contact with a powerful mind, well-balanced, clear, honest, and able to express itself through a lucid and vigorous style." This is excellent. But what a pity that the truth cannot be admitted about a great writer till he has been dead nearly a century, simply because he had the courage to think all round the compass.

Darwin's grandfather defined Unitarianism as a feather-bed to catch a falling Christian. In the spirit of this definition we hail with satisfaction the news that Unitarian ministers are increasing faster than those of any other denomination in the United States. During the past three years the increase has been 25 per cent., and the accessions have mostly come from other Churches.

Mr. Richard Le Gallienne seems to have become more Pagan since he wrote his Religion of a Literary Man, in which he championed a vague idea called "Essential Christianity." Lecturing at South-place Institute lately on "The Puritan Crusade," he praised the old Greek view of life, and then proceeded as follows:—"Suddenly there comes to him, like the clang of a dolorous bell, the sound of the clock of time, striking the Christian era. A bitter east wind, full of spiritual influenza, swept across the world. As the poor Greek shivers in the blast, he realises for the first time, like Adam, that he is naked, that it is wrong for him to be happy in his simple, natural way." The Christian World says that all this will only provoke a smile, but, judging from some words in our contemporary's criticism, we should say it had produced an opposite effect.

Secular Thought, of Toronto, has now commenced its seventeenth volume. We congratulate Mr. J. Spencer Ellis on having so ably maintained a Freethought organ in priest, parson, and presbytery-ridden Canada.

Mr. Symes continues his Liberator, and mentions that it is now eighteen years since he delivered his first Freethought lecture at Newcastle. He has had a hard fighting life ever since, but then a good soldier always rejoices in the battle. The number of the Liberator before us reprints Mr. Wheeler's article on "Buddhism and Christianity."

Mr. Foote will lecture for the Humanitarian League at the Lecture Room, 32 Sackville-street, Piccadilly, on Thursday, February 14. The subject of his discourse is to be War. Full particulars will appear in our next issue. Mr. Foote has also consented to revise his pamphlet, The Shadow of the Sword, so as to bring it quite up to date for general circulation, and to let the Humanitarian League print it as one of their tracts.

The final meeting of the Children's Party Committee will be held at the Hall of Science on Sunday (January 27), after the lecture, when all collecting-cards should be returned. Those ladies and gentlemen who have promised assistance should be present, if possible, or write Miss Vance the time at which they can attend on Wednesday. Children's tickets can be obtained from members of the Committee and Branch Secretaries. Unattached members should apply to Miss Vance at 28 Stonecutter-street, enclosing stamped envelope. The tickets admit children not under five or over fourteen years of age, and not more than three can be given to one family. To make the Children's Party a thoroughly enjoyable one, cash is needed, and should be sent in at once to Mr. Forder or Miss Vance at Stonecutter-street.

Everybody is tinkering away at the great "drink question," including the Church of England Temperance Society, which recently held a demonstration at Newcastle, the local Bishop being in the chair, and two other Bishops in the list of speakers. A non-sympathiser got up and asked if an amendment would be allowed; whereupon he was surrounded by a mob of intemperate clergymen, and speedily ejected from the premises. After this there was perfect harmony. Resolutions were passed in favor of the Bishop's Bill, which aims at reducing licences to one per 1,000 of the population. This would allow about twenty-five public-houses for the clergy of the Established Church. Does any man in his senses think it would be sufficient? Now and then we read of a clerical toper who would keep a considerable part of that number of public-houses going by himself.

HOW IT FEELS TO BE AN ATHEIST.

MANY years ago, when I was a Christian, I often used to wonder what the feelings of an Atheist were like. I used to believe that there must be a constant dread of approaching death. Like other Christians at that time (years ago), I used to think that prominent Atheists had a really unhappy time of it, and I often joined in that old-fashioned Christian war-cry, "Wait till that Atheist gets on his death-bed." To me an Atheist was a person who, out of pure cussedness or bad morality, sets himself up to defy the Supreme Being. Consequently, when his span of life was run out, his end would not be an enviable one. And many Christians hold that view to-day. But how erroneous are these opinions, how faulty is the argument. If anyone had told me in those days that I would ultimately become an Atheist, I would, in all probability, have used forcible or physical arguments to rebut these statements. Yet to-day I am an Atheist; as proud of that title as, years ago, I used to be of that of Christian. And yet I am no God-defier, no man of bad morality. I do not deny God or the Supreme Being. I am an Atheist, but not because I wish to transgress some laws supposed to have been laid down by God years ago. No; I am an Atheist because my reason has made me one. Blind faith is detrimental to the society in general, and to the individual in particular. Where Faith reigns supreme Reason is powerless. Generals do not expect to win battles by the aid of faith, but they use their reason, and find out if their soldiers are numerous and brave enough to beat the enemy. Captains do not go to sea and trust to faith; they use compasses and charts instead. Inventors do not reckon on faith to help them when they wish to give to the world some great invention. No; they use their brains instead. And the same holds good as regards belief in Christianity. Christians walk by faith, and not by sight—not a safe mode of locomotion.

I became an Atheist, not from pure cussedness, but from logical reasoning. Literature of a Freethought nature came into my possession, materially changing my views. Sadly, at that time, did I give up my entrenchments of Christianity to the ever-conquering foe. My last fortress—namely, Deism—ultimately fell. I became an Atheist. The God to whom I worshipped became a shadow; Christ, my Savior, had fled from me; the Holy Ghost was a thing (?) of the past. The Bible was to me only like other books. The fires of hell have no terrors to me, and the expected joys of Christianity's heaven are to me less than tinsel of my childhood's toys.

And I have found out that the Atheists in general are brave men. Ostracism stares them in the face, bigotry is brought to bear upon them, and slander plays a prominent part in endeavoring to wreck the Atheist's career. I have found that the generality of people do not understand Atheism, and, what is much to be regretted, many do not want to; they will not reason, they trust to faith.

Why should an Atheist fear death? When he comes to his death-bed why should he call upon the "Lord" to forgive him? The Atheist knows that everything which has life must, sooner or later, come to an end—must resolve itself again into the elements. The Atheist knows man is no exception to this rule; be he Christian, Jew, Pagan, or Atheist, none can escape. If this is so, then why fear death? If an Atheist lives a good and upright life—and there are many of them—what cause has he to fear death? If a Christian has faith, but does not lead a good life, he is the one who should, and probably would, cry to the "Lord" to help him when on his death-bed. But when the Atheist, who has never seen or heard God (or gods), and lives a moral life, comes to die, he wants no one to save him, for his own actions and words will stand him in good stead if (?) there should be anything after death. And if death ends all, then what has the Christian gained by rejecting reason and preferring faith?

Speaking for myself, I am not the least uncomfortable as to whether death ends all or not. All my belief or disbelief cannot close the gates of heaven—if there be one. All the parsons in Christendom cannot make me believe that a fiery hell exists somewhere, the whereabout of which has, up to now, not been discovered. All the sermons in the world cannot make me believe that a good father exists somewhere in space, and that he allows misery to be so great a factor in life without endeavoring to help it or minimise it. Earthquakes swallow whole nations, disease carries off millions of our brothers and sisters, hunger is rampant, whilst riches are produced in abundance. Justice is seldom seen, might takes the place of right, the worker starves and lives in hovels, whilst the idlers fare sumptuously and live in palaces. The worker often ends his days in the workhouse, whilst the drone, when he comes to die, has all the luxuries of life to make his dying moments the easier. And where is God? Where is our father? What is he doing? Receiving no reply, man feels in his heart that he must do those things which require aid. Man, in all his majesty, then stoops to do that work which benefits mankind, and finds that God, or gods, have never done anything themselves. Then feelings (aided largely by reason) creep into the heart that perhaps there is no supreme, intelligent, and loving being up in the sky. And circumstances happen which strengthen and confirm this view, and then man becomes an Atheist. No fear of hell has he, no longing for heaven; no favor does he require from God or gods. The knowledge of having done his duty during life would debar him from calling on the "Lord." The knowledge of having lived a moral life, according to his lights, will smooth away all terrors of death. He knows that if there is nothing after death, his worn-out body will once more live again in flowers, and air, and water. And if there is something after death, his good actions and honest endeavors will be to him a passport to that place where suffering is not.

Digitized by Google

Looked at, then, from every standpoint, the Atheist has no cause to fear the approach of his end, but will look to it with equanimity, considering that if he lives right, then he will die right. The Atheist, therefore, jogs along on life's highway quite contented, calm, and philosophical. If any Christian should read this article, let him ponder these remarks carefully.

G. E. Conrad Naewiger.

WHAT ARE WOMEN HERE FOR?*

I was asked the other day if I was going to speak on "Woman's Rights" at a meeting of women which I was expected to address, and my questioner said that a good many somewhat "conservative" friends of hers were anxious to hear me, but might not want to come if I was to speak upon that topic. Personally, I do not recognise that there is such a topic as woman's rights, and certainly I have never spoken upon it in my life. There are human rights, and some of these have, so far, been withheld from woman; but what do these people mean by "rights," if it is not the opportunity to do and to be all of those things which are recognised as the legitimate occupations or means of development or support which human beings are capable of undertaking, or wish to undertake for their own benefit or happiness?

The lady who asked me that question did not realise, and her friends do not realise, that for a woman to stand before an audience at all and speak upon any subject in the world is a full assertion of what they are pleased to think they are shocked at under the name of "woman's rights." Every time a woman earns a dollar in any occupation whatsoever (outside of the kitchen) she is a living exponent of "woman's rights," unless she refrains from taking that dollar, and it is paid over to and spent by the men of her family. Until this movement began for the equality of the sexes before the law (which by these nervous folks is called woman's rights), every dollar a woman earned belonged to her father or to her husband. She couldn't collect it. She didn't own it. It was looked upon by those who were the "conservatives" of that day as exceedingly unwomanly for her to want to. They said: "Do you suppose I want to handle and own my own money? Never! Why, that would proclaim to the world that I suspected my husband of dishonesty. Would I give myself to a man, and not give him all my property?" And so, if the wife inherited property from her father, the moment she married she didn't own that property. If she earned it herself, she didn't own it. And it was looked upon then as far more "unwomanly" and "brazen," and as a "dangerous undermining of the family relation," and as "unsexing" the wife (whatever that absurd and hard-driven word may mean) for her to want to own her own property and collect her own wages, than it is now for her to want to own herself, and to count as one in the economy of life.

There are always timid people, however, who think it is just as good form to be what they call "conservative"—that is, to keep just far enough behind the procession of progress to reap all of its benefits without having met and helped to solve any of its difficulties. But I will venture to assert that there is not one so-called conservative woman in New York who does not take full advantage of her "woman's rights" to own her own home, collect her own rent, or her salary (if she does anything to earn one); to draw her own royalty if she is an author; in short, that she does what she can to reap the benefits of this struggle for woman's human and equal footing before the law, in so far as it has already been established; and if she does so, she is (whether she knows it or not) proclaiming to the world that she is in favor of "woman's rights." Now, all these concessions, so far, have been gained as concessions, and not at all as inalienable rights of a human being to stand before the law on a dignified and equal footing with other human units.

So long as this is true, it is possible for woman to lose those concessions. She has absolutely no way to guard or protect them. There is a way to enable her to secure them in perpetuity—a way that takes nothing from man; that deprives him of nothing; that is in no way or sense antagonistic to his interests—a simple, easy way, which has in its favor all justice, all honesty, all logic, all common sense; which has against it absolutely nothing but ignorance and prejudice—absolutely nothing! Because there has never yet been given one single logical argument in favor of self-government for men, in favor of a democratic government at all, which does not apply absolutely and wholly to women also—not one! Because there has never been one single objection brought against woman's equality before the law with man which is not equally valid against self-government of men, or else is based upon wholly unproven and untenable evasion or assumption; assumptions which have been met, and which can be met, with entire ease, and disproven without using a great deal of brain matter in the process. One of these was reset in its old frame in a recent article by Janette Gilder. She argued that there was too large an ignorant vote in New York now—and so there may be; but upon what possible idea of justice is this means of self-protection and self-development given to ignorant men and withheld from ignorant women? If there is to be an intelligence test (or an educational one), let it be an educational test; but that will have nothing to do with sex! That argument is entirely too large. It covers entirely too much ground to meet the demands required of it. It is a non sequitur.

Then there is another worn-out, frayed-at-the-edges argument about serving as soldiers. Now, in the first place, citizenship does not, as is so often asserted, rest upon man's ability to serve in the army or navy. If it did, then all men incapacitated for such service would lose their votes. Are you aware that that would disfranchise very nearly three-fifths of the male voting population? Don't you see that that argument cuts two ways? Don't you see that it is spurious? Don't you know that it would, in the main, be the most intelligent of all the voters who fall under this ban? It is not the man who is a good fighter (a perfect animal) who is the wisest or safest legislator. That soldier argument would disfranchise almost all of our college professors, our physicians, clergymen, lawyers—in short, almost all of the ablest professional men in the country. It would really disfranchise pretty much everyone who would fall inside of the educational test; while the intelligence and educational test would disfranchise a large majority of those who come under the war-service test—both of which are mere evasions of the basic question—the question of woman's right to stand before the law as a human being on exactly the same level as other human beings.

If you take "male" out of the constitution, women will make no objections to all the intelligence tests, and all the physical perfection tests you care to devise, and apply to both sexes alike! She is not afraid of a fair and equal test on an equal footing with man. She asks for no special privileges. It is he who insists upon protective privileges against those who, he says, are his inferiors; and, somehow or other, it looks to me as if there was an African in that woodpile! If he is so sure that he is her superior, why is he so mortally afraid of meeting her on an equal footing?

But, jesting aside, did it ever occur to you what a coward a man is who insists upon claiming legal and political rights which he is afraid to allow his wife and mother to share with him? Can he not hold his own on a level footing with her? And did it ever occur to you that it is not the large-brained men, the able men, who are opposed to this measure? Such men as Abraham Lincoln are always in favor of it, as he was. It is the men who are instinctively aware of personal inferiority to many women who cling so tenaciously to the legal privilege which makes him her superior by law—a position in which he is unable to sustain himself on simply his own merits. That is a coward's refuge. And it matters not one whit whether he can march and shoot in a war or not; he is a coward who claims for himself legal advantages which he withholds from his sister.

* Delivered before a meeting of fashionable women who had said they would "open their parlors" for discussion of the "legal status of women" if Helen H. Gardener would agree to be one of the speakers.

Digitized by Google

Again, no man is subject to duty as a soldier absolutely. He is permitted to furnish a substitute. The women of a nation have not only furnished their substitutes, but they have furnished to that country all of the soldiers it can get—substitute, conscript, and volunteer. And she has faced a greater danger and more suffering in doing it than that substitute will be called upon to face in protecting his mother in any war that may call him out. Yet again, whenever a war is stirred up in this country, voted for, wanted, and managed by women; whenever the flag is fired upon by an armed force of women, there will be an equal number of women ready, willing, and able to protect it. Whenever an army of women invades our country, there will be an army of women ready to repel the invasion. Until then, let those who want the wars, who bring them on, fight them out!

There is another assertion which sometimes passes for argument upon this question. It is said that "the immoral vote" will be doubled. I do not believe that (using the word "immoral" in the sense in which it is always implied here for women) there is anybody who will assert that there are half as many "immoral" women as men. We cannot measure the whole country by a few large cities in this regard. But that argument surely covers a good deal more ground than its inventors intended it to. It would result, would it not, if applied, in enfranchising about nine-tenths of all women the world over, and in disfranchising about nine-tenths of the present voters, not omitting our small army contingent? But is it the morality test which they want rigidly applied? Is it a man's morality which secures him his suffrage, his status before the law? or is it his needs as a human unit in a republican form of government? Which ground does he claim it on? If on the morality ground, as they apply that to women, don't you think his tenure of office or of citizenship is on a pretty shaky foundation? Ask them down in Kentucky?

HELEN H. GARDENER.

—Truth Seeker Annual.

(To be concluded.)

OPPORTUNITY.

A GREAT man dies, but still the world goes on,
For many quite as good are always left
To work the world with minds and hands as deft
As those of all the greatest, dead and gone.

Not one is indispensable; the world
Has sons of opportunity at hand
To fill the leader's place of ev'ry band,
Whate'er the banner be by it unfurled.

The seed that falls on barren stoney ground
Is just as good as that which elsewhere lies;
'Tis opportunity that makes it rise
To growth and strength, till full fruition's found.

A man has toiled through life, but who shall say
That what he best could do was what he did?
Perhaps, through lack of quick'ning chance, all hid
Within his brain some germ of genius lay.

Success is not secured by work alone,
Nor merit always measured by success;
A man may win, and yet have conquered less
Than he who, striving, fails to hold his own.

The unit works, but worlds for it must toil;
The ages clog each step that man may take,
With hosts at flanks, at rear, and van, to make
Or mar the opportune congenial soil.

Like anchored ships upon a restless sea,
We're tethered to the depths of all the past
By chains invisible that hold us fast,
And hold us most when most we think we're free.

The men who conquered nations were the fruits
Of circumstance that generated crimes;
Those men, perchance, in less unsettled times,
Had lived like honest folk, and less like brutes.

We hope to raise our race, and speed the course
Of progress, with the spread of mental light;
For Science breeds the love of truth and right—
The antidotes to baneful cosmic force.

G. L. MACKENZIE.

WAR UPON PHYSIOLOGY.

PHYSIOLOGY treats of the phenomena of organised life. To know one's self, and the laws governing his being—to preserve a healthy mind in a healthy body—a person should be educated in this department of scientific knowledge. In Illinois, and probably in other States, it is taught to the higher classes in the public schools. Teachers, to obtain first-class certificates, must be well educated in this science. It enables a person to guard himself against a thousand ills, and it is very essential to those who are entrusted with the care of the young, and to those who watch at the bedside of the sick and dying.

Churchmen have recently discovered that the teachings of physiology are pernicious, yea, heretical. In some school districts public meetings have been held protesting against its being taught, alleging it is inconsistent with the inculcations of the Bible.

The advanced student learns that miracles are incompatible with natural law; that God never intervenes, even in answer to prayer, to protect persons from being burned in furnaces; that life cannot be sustained for three days in a whale's belly; that virgins do not bear children; that the dead cannot rise, clothed in mortal form, and be seen of many.

It is very apparent, from this brief statement, that either knowledge must be restricted, or the dogmas of the Church must be constructed along new lines. The Catholics saw this, hence the real motive for their warfare on the common school system. For three hundred years the parent Church refused to allow the Copernican system of astronomy to be taught in its schools, because it conflicted with Bible teaching. All the sciences, as they have sprung up with advancing knowledge, have met with similar opposition. To be consistent with its past, physiology must be opposed, and suppressed, if possible.—Progressive Thinker.

After a Royal Dinner.

A single incident may help us to realise the moral atmosphere which was shed around the brilliant Court in Paris, where Admiral Coligny spent his boyhood. The Royal household was entertained after dinner by the burning of six heretics, one of whom was a woman. It was on January 19, 1535.

Among the company was Cardinal Duprat, Chancellor of France, bishop of half-a-dozen sees, besides his archbishopric of Sens, whose cathedral never saw him enter until his corpse was borne there to its burial.

The mode of execution of heretics was the estrapade. The victims were fastened to a beam which played up and down, and alternately dipped them into, and withdrew them from, the flames. As the torture was prolonged, the Duchess d'Etampes turned to Duprat and complained, not of the atrocious cruelty of the punishment, but of the smell of burning flesh.

"Madame," replied the Cardinal, jocosely, "it is clear you have never entered your kitchen when pork was being cooked—the odor is exactly the same."—"Pearson's Weekly," January 12.

Obituary.

ON Friday, January 18, William Dawson, of Annistford, was interred at Bedlington Cemetery. It was deceased's ardent desire to have a purely Secular burial. His remains were allowed to rest in the church, where Mr. R. H. Wharrier read the Secular Burial Service in an impressive manner. Mr. John Bryson also delivered a short address, pointing out the many sterling qualities of the deceased. Mr. Dawson was a veteran Freethinker, being eighty-three years old. He was a great admirer of the late Mr. Bradlaugh.—JAMES LATTY, Sec.

AN eminent German Freethinking philosopher has passed away in the person of Moritz Carriere, who died on January 18, at the age of seventy-seven. He was professor of philosophy at Giessen and Munich. Though a Theist, he showed considerable independence of thought. He wrote on such historical subjects as Abelard and Heloise, and the character of Cromwell.

It can do truth no service to blink the fact, known to all who have the most ordinary acquaintance with literary history, that a large portion of the noblest and most valuable moral teaching has been the work, not only of men who did not know, but of men who knew and rejected, the Christian faith.—John Stuart Mill.

Digitized by Google

BOOK CHAT.

We are pleased to note that a biography of Judge Stephen is being prepared by his brother, Mr. Leslie Stephen.

* * *

The Life and Teachings of Jesus, by A. Kenyon Rogers (Putnam & Sons; 3s. 6d.), professes to be a critical analysis of the sources of the gospels, together with a study of the sayings of Jesus, but goes on the plan of selecting about as much as the average modern religious body can be expected to swallow with its eyes partly open. The author admits, with regret, that on examination "a very large part, indeed, of all we seemed to know about Jesus has crumbled away."

* * *

According to the Academy, Messrs. Macmillan are just issuing A Confession of Faith, by an Unorthodox Believer, who seeks to show that the religious spirit, in what seems to him the true sense, is independent of belief in the miraculous.

* * *

A holiday book reaches us from the New York Truth-seeker Co., entitled A Tale of a Halo (28 Lafayette-place; cloth, $1; paper, 50 cents). The author is Morgan A. Robertson, and the amusing illustrations, which are even superior to the verse, are by A. Carey K. Jurist. The Tale of a Halo is all about a visit of Beelzebub to heaven, wearing a specially fine halo, and the "ructions" that ensue. The opening lines may be taken as a sample of the author's irreverent style:—

> St. Peter was gazing one day by the gate
> At a sign on the rampart, and, sad to relate,
> His face wore a look of surprise and chagrin,
> For the sign bore the legend, "No Smoking Within."
> It seems that Peter's pipe had a smell of its own,
> Too strong for the incense that hung round the throne.

The story contains some fun and satire on the pretensions of the Church. The illustrations are capital.

* * *

The daughters of Thackeray mingled with some notable people, and in Chapters from Some Memoirs (Macmillan) Mrs. Anne Thackeray Ritchie has given reminiscences of Chopin, Dickens, Leach, Mr. and Mrs. Carlyle, Fanny Kemble, her sister, etc. The book is written in a strain of tender feeling, which recalls the style of the father of the authoress.

* * *

From the Humanitarian League we have received two of its latest twopenny publications—No. 15, dealing with Cattle Ships and Our Meat Supply, by I. M. Greg and S. H. Towers; and No. 16, on Public Control of Hospitals, by H. Roberts. The writers seem to have a competent knowledge of the matter on which they treat.

WAS COLUMBUS A JEW?

Jews figure prominently in the history of the discovery of America. The plans and calculations for Columbus's expedition were largely the work of two Hebrew astronomers and mathematicians. Two Jews, also, were employed as interpreters by Columbus, and one of them, Luis de Torres, was the first European to set foot in the New World. When Columbus sighted the island of San Salvador, he imagined he was approaching a portion of the east Asiatic coast, and he sent Torres—who was engaged for his knowledge of Arabic—ashore to make inquiries of the natives.

It was probably this Torres who was the Madrid Jew to whom Columbus bequeathed half a mark of silver in his will. Another curious fact is that it has been seriously suggested, by Dr. Delitzsch we believe, that Columbus himself was a Jew, or of Jewish birth. The name Christopher was frequently adopted by converts, while the surname Colon was borne by a distinguished family of Jewish scholars. Christopher's brother, Diego, bore originally the Jewish name Jacob, which sounds surprisingly like a Shem Kadosh. Perhaps some Jewish scholar in Italy will make inquiry into the validity of this daring suggestion.—Peterson's Magazine.

The liberality of the age, or, in other words, the weakening of the obstinate prejudice which makes men unable to see what is before their eyes because it is contrary to their expectations, has caused it to be very commonly admitted that a Deist may be truly religious; but if religion stands for any graces of character, and not for mere dogma, the assertion may equally be made of many whose belief is far short of Deism.—J. S. Mill, "Autobiography," p. 46.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE BRIGHTON CO-OPERATORS AND LOCAL OPTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE FREETHINKER."

Sir,—I was not a little disgusted to see the report in your journal, that Mr. Holyoake had headed a deputation of Brighton co-operators to pray for a diminution of the number of public-houses in Brighton. I could understand Mr. Holyoake doing this as a Methodist; but what have co-operators, as co-operators, to do with the licensing question? You have in this spectacle an object-lesson re Local Option. Brighton is a great place for excursionists, and, of course, requires greater facilities for rest and refreshment than ordinary towns. Public-houses being primarily for travellers, it follows that the reasonable requirements of people who are away from home is the question to be studied in licensing, not the requirements of any particular locality. The fact is, snobs and bigots would like to prevent excursions—especially Sunday excursions—altogether. Now, Stiggins has grown artful, and has evidently become a co-operator, and he knows that to openly attack even Sunday excursions won't do. But there are more ways than one of trying to fill chapels and churches. To reform the public-house or to suppress drunkenness would not answer. Let us diminish their number, if we cannot close them altogether on Sunday, so as to put these vile excursionists to as much discomfort as possible, and we shall drive some of the wretches to the conventicle. Before the prayer of the Brighton co-operators is acceded to, let them show that Brighton is more drunken than towns where public-houses are more restricted in their numbers.—Yours truly,

A. J. Marriott.

Christianity.

Christianity is to be regarded as a system rather than as a doctrine, for, like Proteus, it changes its forms, and whenever defeated in attack, if policy so dictates, it adopts the proved ideas of its assailants, and thus preserves its organisation, which is more essential to its official supporters than are its dogmas. These are abandoned or changed whenever expediency dictates, making aggressive effort very difficult; for whenever a point is successfully assailed it is declared to be "unessential," or else not to belong to true Christianity. Everything is abandoned but natural morality, and still men call themselves Christians and support the system which has no excuse for continuance unless miracle and revelation are facts. When Rationalists see the duty of consistency, they will cease to uphold a system which has no logical existence apart from supernaturalism.—Robert C. Adams.

PROFANE JOKES.

Son—"What is that ceremony known as 'elevating the host,' papa?" Dad—"Dunno! Lifting him out from under the table, I suppose."

Nellie (looking at picture of Adam and Eve)—"Say, Bertie, which is Adam and which is Eve?" Bertie—"Don't be silly! How can anyone tell that when they're not dressed?"

> If the Devil should die,
> The priest would sie,
> Perhaps crie;
> For the reason whie
> His salarie
> Would "take wings and flie"
> To the "by and bie"
> "High and drie";
> He would have to trie
> To earn his pudding and pie.

Parson in the Pulpit (to congregation)—"I will take for my text this morning the subject of 'What must we do to save our souls?'" Voice from Congregation—"Walk on your heels."

Inspector (in the schoolroom)—"Who drove the Israelites out of Egypt? you, little boy in the corner." Little boy in the corner (trembling all over with fright)—"I-I never, sir; I only came from the country last week!"

Gabriel—"Well, what can I do for you?" Applicant—"I want to see St. Peter." Gabriel—"Engaged on important work, and can't be bothered just now." Applicant—"What is he doing?" Gabriel—"Making up his report on how many sparrows fell to the ground during the past month."

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY LECTURE NOTICES, ETC.

[Notices of Lectures, etc., must reach us by first post on Tuesday, and be marked "Lecture Notice," if not sent on post-card.]

LONDON.

HALL OF SCIENCE (142 Old-street, E.C.): 11.30, T. Jarvis (Fabian), "Why Do We Pay Rent?" (Free.) 6.30, musical selections; 7, Charles Watts, "Trust in God a Delusion." (Admission free; reserved seats 6d. and 6d.) 9, Children's Party Committee meeting in the Minor Hall; helpers wanted. Wednesday, at 5.30, Children's Party.

BATTERSEA SECULAR HALL (back of Battersea Park Station): 7.30, musical and dramatic entertainment. (Free.) Tuesday and Friday, at 8, dancing.

CAMBERWELL (North Camberwell Hall, 61 New Church-road): 7.30, Tonsean Parris, "The Causes Leading to the Formation of the Independent Labor Party." (Preceded by vocal and instrumental music.) Thursday, at 7.30, science classes. (Free.)

ISLINGTON (Liberal and Radical Association Committee Rooms, Upper-street, near Vestry Hall): Thursday, Jan. 24, at 8, Stanley Jones, "How We Got Our Bible." Thursday, Jan. 31, at 8, A. Gunst, "Is the Bible a Safe Guide?"

MILTON HALL (Hawley-crescent, 89 Kentish Town-road): 7.30, W. A. Coote, "The National Vigilance Association in Relation to Literature and Morals." (Free.)

WEST LONDON ETHICAL SOCIETY (Princes' Hall, Piccadilly): 11.15, Dr. Stanton Coit, "The Modern Rivalry of Duty, Humanity, and Christ."

WEST LONDON BRANCH: 3.30, important meeting of Kilburn members at 4 Springfield gardens, N.W.

WOOD GREEN (Star Coffee House, High-street): 7, W. Mawer, F.G.S., "Creation v. Evolution."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

HYDE PARK (near Marble Arch): 11.30, Stanley Jones, "The Origin of the Bible"; 3.30, Stanley Jones, "The State and the Schools."

COUNTRY.

BIRMINGHAM (Coffee House, corner of Broad-street): Thursdays, at 8, papers, discussions, etc.

BRISTOL (Shepherds' Hall, Old Market-street): 7, J. Kenat, "Christianity and Progress."

CHESTER (Old Chapel, Commonhall-street): 7, Lawrence Small, B.Sc., "Evolution and Design."

DERBY: Monday, at 7.30, meeting at the Wooding Institute. Tuesday, at 8, Anye Reade, "Secularism and Immorality—A Reply to the Church."

DUNDEE (City Assembly Rooms): 11, discussion class; 1, shorthand class; 2.30, J. Bowman, "The Prophecies Concerning Christ"; 8, elocution class; 6.30, concert.

GLASGOW (Ex-Mission Hall, 110 Brunswick-street): 12, discussion class—8, Downie, "Labor Problems"; 6.30, soirée, anniversary of Paine and Burns. (Tickets 6d.)

HULL (St. George's Hall, Storey-street): 7, Mr. Oxley, "Answers to Some Christian Objections."

LIVERPOOL (Oddfellows' Hall, St. Anne-street): 11, G. W. Foote, "Problems of Civilisation"; 3, "Angels"; 7, "Did Jesus Christ Ever Live?"

MANCHESTER SECULAR HALL (Rusholme-road, All Saints): 6.30, Abraham Newell, "The Local Government Act, 1894, and its Effect upon the Life of the People." (Free.)

PLYMOUTH (Democratic Club, Whimple-street): impromptu evening by members and friends.

PORTSMOUTH (Wellington Hall, Wellington-street, Southsea): 7, a meeting. Wednesday, at 8, dancing.

ROCHDALE (Working Men's College, 4 Acker-street): 11, discussion; 3, Bible study; 6.30, Sam Standring, "Worlds Outside Ours," with lime-light illustrations. Monday, at 7.30, discussion class.

SHEFFIELD SECULAR SOCIETY (Hall of Science, Rockingham-street): 3 and 7, vocal and instrumental music, recitations, etc. (Collections for local hospitals.) Thursday, soirée and ball in honor of Thomas Paine.

SOUTH SHIELDS (Thornton's Variety Hall, Union-lane): 11, C. Cohen, "The Creed of a Man of Science"; 7, "The Existence of God."

Lecturers' Engagements.

C. COHEN, 12 Merchant-street, Bow-road, London, E.—All Sundays until April, 1895, South Shields.

STANLEY JONES, 58 Marlborough-road, Holloway, London, N.—Feb. 3, Edinburgh; 10, Dundee. March 10, Sheffield.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Credon-road, Rotherhithe, London, S.E.—Feb. 3, New Brompton.

SAM STANDRING, 6 Bury-road, Rochdale.—Feb. 10, Bradford. March 26 and 27, Sheffield.

☞ JUST PUBLISHED. ☜

24 pp., in neat wrapper, price 3d., by post 3½d.,

WHY DO RIGHT?

A SECULARIST'S ANSWER.

BY

CHARLES WATTS.

London: Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Price 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d. post free,

THE GRAND OLD BOOK.

A REPLY TO THE GRAND OLD MAN.

BY

G. W. FOOTE.

An Exhaustive Answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture."

CONTENTS:—Preface—Preliminary View—The Creation Story—The Fall of Man—The Psalms—The Mosaic Legislation—Corroborations of Scripture—Gladstone and Huxley—Modern Scepticism.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price 1s., post free,

SATIRES AND PROFANITIES

BY

JAMES THOMSON (B.V.)

(Author of "The City of Dreadful Night").

Contents:—The Story of a Famous Old Jewish Firm (Jehovah, Son, and Co.)—The Devil in the Church of England—Religion in the Rocky Mountains—Christmas Eve in the Upper Circles—A Commission of Inquiry on Royalty—A Bible Lesson on Monarchy—The One Thing Needful.

"It cannot be neglected by any who are interested in one of the most pathetic personages of our time."—Academy.

"As clever as they are often profane."—Christian World.

"Well worth preserving."—Weekly Dispatch.

"Reminds one of the genius of Swift."—Oldham Chronicle.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price Twopence,

"A Letter to Lord Ellenborough."

OCCASIONED BY THE SENTENCE WHICH HE PASSED ON

MR. D. I. EATON,

AS PUBLISHER OF

THE THIRD PART OF PAINE'S "AGE OF REASON."

BY

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

THOMAS PAINE'S WORKS.

The Age of Reason. New edition, with Preface by G. W. FOOTE. 1s.

Miscellaneous Theological Works. 1s.

Complete Theological Works. (Including the Age of Reason.) Cloth, 2s. 6d.

The Rights of Man. Centenary edition. With a Political Biography by J. M. WHEELER. 1s.; bound in cloth, 2s.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

FISH.—Bassos of Selected Fish, containing three kinds, on receipt of P.O. for 2s. 6d., 3s., 3s. 6d., and 5s., carriage paid.—The Premier Fish Supply Company, Fish Docks, Grimsby. Quote paper.

Price 1s. Superior edition for Subscribers, bound, numbered, and signed 2s.

VOLTAIRE:

HIS LIFE AND WORKS.

With some Selections from his Writings, by J. M. WHEELER and G. W. FOOTE.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 5s. 6d. each, upper or lower set, £2. Best quality, 4s. each, upper or lower, £3, completed in four hours when required; repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum 7s. 6d. each, on 18 ct. gold 12s., stopping 2s. 6d., extraction 1s., painless by gas, 5s.

TO FREETHINKERS, Ladies and Gentlemen requiring SUPERIOR CUT GARMENTS at moderate prices. First-class Style and Fit Guaranteed.—H. HAMPTON, Artiste Tailor, 14 Great Castle-street, W. Three doors from Regent-street. [Patronised by leading Freethinkers.]

FREETHINKER TRACTS

Sixpence per Hundred.

MARRIOTT, CLOTHIER,

811 EDGWARE ROAD, W., near Metropolitan Music Hall (same side), six doors from Church-street. TROUSERS, good wear, 5s. 9d., 7s. 6d., and 9s. 6d.; Blacks, 7s. 6d. and 10s. 6d. Thirty sizes kept in stock. OVERCOATS from 12s. 6d.

MARGATE.—TERRACE HOTEL, Marine Drive. Bed and Breakfast from 2s. 6d. A large room to seat 500. Beanfeasts and other parties liberally treated.

Mr. Foote's Portrait.

By AMEY.

CABINET SIZE, 1s. Post free, carefully packed, 1s. 1d.

IMPERIAL SIZE, very fine, 3s. Post free, carefully packed, 3s. 2d.

Digitized by Google

Colonel Ingersoll's Great New Lecture

ABOUT THE HOLY BIBLE

Price Sixpence.

London R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

6d. ☞ NOW READY ☜ 6d.

THE

SECULAR ALMANACK

For 1895.

Altered and Enlarged. Finely-Designed Cover.

EDITED BY

G. W. FOOTE & J. M. WHEELER.

CONTENTS: Progress of Freethought; by G. W. Foote—This World; by J. M. Wheeler—Heroes in the Service of Man; by Charles Watts—Dod Grile—A Wish; by Matthew Arnold—The Abducted Female Infidel—Farquhar of Netherton—Bits from Selden's "Table Talk"—Jeremy Bentham on Inspiration—Abou-ben Adhem and the Angel—Man's Soul his God—The Sacred Books of the World—The Dear God—What have Unbelievers Done for the World?—Information Concerning Freethought Work and Organisation—Lecturers, etc.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

W. J. Rendell's "Wife's Friend"

Recommended by Mrs. Besant in Law of Population, p. 32, and Dr Allbutt in Wife's Handbook, p. 51. Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell-street, Clerkenwell; 2s. per doz., post free (reduction in larger quantities). For particulars send stamped envelope.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

BEWARE of useless imitations substituted by some dealers and chemists, the words "Rendell" and "W. J. Rendell" being speciously and plausibly introduced to deceive the public.

LOOK FOR AUTOGRAPH REGISTERED TRADE MARK

W. J. Rendell

No. 182,688.

IN Red INK ON EACH BOX, WITHOUT WHICH NONE ARE GENUINE.

Higginson's Syringe, with Vertical and Reverse Current, 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 5s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. Dr. Allbutt's Quinine Powders, 3s. per doz. All prices post free.

W. J. RENDELL, 15 Chadwell-st., Clerkenwell, E.C.

THE BEST BOOK

ON NEO-MALTHUSIANISM IS, I BELIEVE,

TRUE MORALITY, or THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF NEO-MALTHUSIANISM.

By J. R. HOLMES, M.M.L., M.V.S., M.N.S.S.

180 pages, with portrait and autograph, bound in cloth, gilt lettered. Price 1s., post free.

 In order to bring the information within the reach of the poor, the most important parts of the book are issued in a pamphlet of 112 pages at ONE PENNY, post free 2d. Copies of the pamphlet for distribution 1s. a dozen post free.

The National Reformer of 4th September, 1892, says: "Mr Holmes' pamphlet . . . is an almost unexceptionable statement of the Neo-Malthusian theory and practice . . . and throughout appeals to moral feeling. . . . The special value of Mr. Holmes' service to the Neo-Malthusian cause and to human well-being generally is just his combination in his pamphlet of a plain statement of the physical and moral need for family limitation with a plain account of the means by which it can be secured, and an offer to all concerned of the requisites at the lowest possible prices."

The Council of the Malthusian League, Dr. Drysdale, Dr. Allbutt, and others have also spoken of it in very high terms.

The Trade supplied by R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C. Other orders should be sent to the author.

J. R. HOLMES, HANNEY, WANTAGE, BERKS.

THE BIRTH OF CHRIST

A CHAPTER FROM

Strauss's Original "Life of Jesus."

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY

G. W. FOOTE.

(A Most Thorough Analysis and Exposure of the Gospel Story by a Master Hand.)

Price Sixpence.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Works by G. W. Foote.

The Grand Old Book. A reply to the Grand Old Man. An Exhaustive answer to the Right Hon W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture." 1s. Bound in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Is Socialism Sound? Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant. 1s. Superior edition, in cloth, 2s.

Christianity and Secularism. Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. 1s. Superior edition, cloth, 1s. 6d.

Bible Heroes. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Letters to the Clergy. First Series. 128pp., 1s

A Defence of Free Speech. Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes. 6d.

Comic Sermons and other FANTASIAS. Contents:—A Sermon on Summer—A Mad Sermon—A Sermon on Sin—A Bishop in the Workhouse—A Christmas Sermon—Christmas Eve in Heaven—Bishop Trimmer's Sunday Diary—The Judge and the Devil—Satan and Michael—The First Christmas—Adam's Breeches—The Fall of Eve—Joshua at Jericho—A Baby God—Sermon on Judas Iscariot. 6d.

Darwin on God. 6d. Superior edition, in cloth, 1s.

Infidel Death-Beds. Second edition, much enlarged, 6d. On superfine paper, in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Reminiscences of Charles Bradlaugh. 6d.

Rome or Atheism—the Great Alternative. 3d.

Letters to Jesus Christ. 1d.

Interview with the Devil. 2d

Philosophy of Secularism. 3d.

Atheism and Morality. 2d.

My Resurrection. A Missing Chapter from the Gospel of Matthew, discovered by G. W Foote. 2d.

The Folly of Prayer. 2d.

Ingersollism Defended agst Archdeacon Farrar. 2d.

Was Jesus Insane? A searching inquiry into the mental condition of the Prophet of Nazareth. 1d.

Christianity and Progress. A Reply to Mr. Gladstone. 2d.

The Impossible Creed. An Open Letter to Bishop Magee on the Sermon on the Mount. 2d.

What Was Christ? A Reply to J. S. Mill. 2d.

The Bible God. 2d.

Salvation Syrup; or, Light on Darkest England. A Reply to General Booth. 2d.

Is the Bible Inspired? A Criticism on Lux Mundi. 1d

The Dying Atheist. A Story. 1d.

The Rev. Hugh Price Hughes' Converted Atheist. A Lie in Five Chapters. 1d.

Mrs. Besant's Theosophy. A Candid Criticism. 2d.

Secularism and Theosophy. A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant 2d.

The New Cagliostro. An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky. 2d.

The Shadow of the Sword. A Moral and Statistical Essay on War. 2d.

Royal Paupers. Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty. 2d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Works by Colonel R. G. Ingersoll.

SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES. The only complete edition in England. Accurate as Colenso, and fascinating as a novel. 182 pp. 1s. Superior paper, cloth 1s. 6d.

DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT. A Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy. 6d.

THE GODS. 6d.

REPLY TO GLADSTONE. With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler. 4d.

ROME OR REASON? A Reply to Cardinal Manning. 4d.

CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS. 3d.

ORATION ON WALT WHITMAN. 3d.

ORATION ON VOLTAIRE. 3d.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. 3d.

PAINE THE PIONEER. 2d.

HUMANITY'S DEBT TO THOMAS PAINE. 2d.

ERNEST RENAN AND JESUS CHRIST. 2d.

TRUE RELIGION. 2d.

THE THREE PHILANTHROPISTS. 2d.

LOVE THE REDEEMER. 2d.

GOD AND THE STATE. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part I. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part II. 2d.

FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Dr. Field. 2d.

GOD AND MAN. Second reply to Dr. Field. 2d.

THE DYING CREED. 2d.

THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION. A Discussion with the Hon. F. D. Coudert and Gov. S. L. Woodford 2d.

THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH. 2d.

ART AND MORALITY. 2d.

DO I BLASPHEME? 2d.

THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE. 2d.

SOCIAL SALVATION. 2d.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE. An Agnostic's View. 2d.

SKULLS. 2d.

THE GREAT MISTAKE. 1d.

LIVE TOPICS. 1d.

MYTH AND MIRACLE. 1d.

REAL BLASPHEMY. 1d.

REPAIRING THE IDOLS. 1d.

CHRIST AND MIRACLES. 1d.

CREEDS & SPIRITUALITY. 1d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street E.C.

Digitized by Google

EVERYBODY HAS NOT YET TRIED

One Pair of BLANKETS
One Pair of SHEETS
One QUILT
One TABLE-CLOTH

LOT 11

ALL FOR 21s. CARRIAGE PAID.

Which, with the 19 other Lots offered in the "Freethinker" of January 13, 1895,

CANNOT BE BEATEN.

Great Purchase of Scarboro-shaped MACKINTOSHES | 500 at 26s. each, worth 42s.

ALL GOOD SCOTCH TWEED AND THOROUGHLY WATERPROOF.

Give Length at Back, Chest and Waist Measures.

J. W. GOTT, 2 & 4 UNION-STREET, BRADFORD.

Just issued, price 1s., by post 1s. 2d.,

WHAT DO I BELIEVE?

Two Essays in Justification of the Argument Advanced in "The Practical Value of Religious Belief."

BY HENRY SMITH.

I.—KNOWLEDGE AND BELIEF—CAUSE AND EFFECT.
II.—WHAT I AM—WHAT I KNOW.

"Dr. Smith is always interesting and instructive. This new work has the merit of being deeply suggestive and thought-provoking. Dr. Smith is a bold and fearless thinker."—The Literary Guide.

"The arguments adduced by Dr. Smith in these essays are what every man feels in his inmost heart, but which every man cannot put into words. The book is worthy of earnest study. It is the work of a clear-brained thinker of sound logical reasoning."—Ayrshire Post.

London: WATTS & CO., 17 Johnson's-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

ASK YOUR GROCER

FOR THE

ROYAL CHISWICK TABLE JELLIES

EXPERT'S OPINION—

"The Perfection of Jelly."

"Certainly far superior to all other Jelly Tablets—in transparency, strength, and in flavor utterly beyond comparison."

Sample Dozen—Pints 4s. 6d.; Quarts 8s., carriage free.

WHOLESALE TERMS ON APPLICATION.

TOUZEAU PARRIS & CO.,

ENFIELD WORKS, ACTON, LONDON, W.

ALLINSON FOR HEALTH.

HOME CONSULTATIONS—10 a.m. to 1 p.m., 10s. 6d.: 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., 5s. Patients Visited.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. I. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on Management of Infancy, Health, Longevity, The Teeth, Tobacco, The Drink Question. Also the Cause and Cure of Disease, Constipation, Biliousness, Eczema, Blackheads and Pimples, Nervousness, Coughs and Colds, Chest Complaints, Deafness, Thread Worms, Long Worms, Tape Worms, The Itch, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. II. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on The Healing Power of Nature, Urine, Saline Starvation, the Hair and its Management, Sleep and Sleeplessness, Want of Energy, etc. Advice for the Thin, for the Stout; Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. III. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on No More Death, Management of Young Children, Unsuspected Domestic Poisons, How to Grow Tall, to Keep Warm, to Live One Hundred Years, to Improve the Memory, and to become Beautiful and Attractive. On the Cause and Cure of Stomach Troubles, Flatulence, Sleepiness, Varicose Veins, Boils and Carbuncles, Sebaceous Tumors and Wens, Hay Fever, Winter Cough, Chilblains, Epilepsy, and on the Diseases Produced by Taking Mercury.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. IV. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on Hardening, Work and Overwork, Sugar and its Abuse, Milk as Food, the Tomato, Poultices, Quinine, Against the Knife, Arsenical Poisoning, Tonics, Against Stimulants in Disease, about Swallowing Pins and other Articles. Also Cure of Sunstroke, Dog Bites, Pains in the Back, Pediculi or Lice, Chicken-Pox, Synovitis or Inflammation of the Joints, Tonsilitis or Quinsy, Herpes (Tetter or Shingles), Erysipelas, Ulcer of the Stomach, Epidemic Influenza, Sciatica, Psoriasis or English Leprosy, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. V. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on Pure Water, The Mouth, Its Use and Abuse; Rules for the Aged, Training, Blood Letting, Nose Bleeding, Felon or Whitlow, Ingrowing Toenail, Gum Boil, Cold in the Head, a Red Nose, Flushing and Blushing, Toothache, Sore Mouth, St. Vitus' Dance, Goitre, Mumps, Inflamed Eyes and Eyelids, Fits, Fainting, Apoplexy, Spitting and Vomiting of Blood, Vomiting, Wounds, Burns, Scalds, Bruises, etc.

The Five Volumes, strongly and neatly bound, price 6s. 9d., post free.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.—An Eye Opener to Drug Takers.
RHEUMATISM: ITS CAUSE AND CURE. Post free for 9d.
DIET AND DIGESTION. Post free for 9d.
CONSUMPTION: ITS NATURAL CURE. Post free 9d.
All these Books, bound in One Vol., post free, 3s. 6d. Send Postal Order.

THREE PAMPHLETS FOR YOUNG MEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.
A BOOK FOR MARRIED WOMEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

All communications to be addressed to—

DR. T. R. ALLINSON,
4 Spanish-place, Manchester-square, London, W.

Printed and Published by G. W. FOOTE, at 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

VOL. XV.—NO. 5. SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1895. PRICE TWOPENCE.

MR. HOLYOAKE'S QUESTION.

MR. G. J. HOLYOAKE writes to us with respect to a paragraph in the Freethinker of January 20. "I will readily answer your questions," he says, "when I fully understand your meaning." He encloses a copy of his letter in the Newcastle Weekly Chronicle, to which our paragraph referred, and adds: "I wish you would print such parts of it to which you take objection."

Our paragraph was so plain that we despair of making it plainer. Here is the principal portion of it, containing the questions which we are asked to elucidate :—

"He admits that Secular principles are spreading, but he complains that Secular Societies are too anti-theological. But is not this a very cheap complaint? Is it possible for Secular Societies, as such, to take a great part in 'other work'? They are tabooed socially after being robbed legally. We invite Mr. Holyoake to tell us what he himself has ever done for this 'other work' in connection with any Secular organisation. Has he not been obliged to do it as an independent individual? And if this has been his own experience, why on earth does he spend so much time in lecturing other people for being as unfortunate as himself?"

Whatever may be the "constructive" side of Secularism—and we have our opinions on the subject, which we long ago expressed—it is utterly impossible to do any justice to it without the necessary means, and this is denied us by the law of England, which is upheld by infamous bigotry and despicable indifference. All the Churches subsist largely on dead men's money, secured by legal trust to the purposes for which they intended it; but Secularism is excluded from this source of income. We are in a position to state—and we do so with profound sorrow and indignation—that thousands of pounds have in this way been lost to our party during the last four years. And when we consider the small support that was accorded to Mr. Bradlaugh's attempt to repeal the Blasphemy Laws, and the little or no progress made by Mr. Holyoake's "Liberty of Bequest" bill, we cannot help seeing that, whatever may be urged theoretically, the only practical policy of Secularism is to go on attacking the Christian superstition, which erected and maintains these barriers to our natural rights and just opportunities. We cannot cultivate the Promised Land until we enter it. At present we have not crossed the Jordan.

So much for one aspect of the "other work," which Mr. Holyoake complains that Secularists do not engage in sufficiently. There are other reasons, and they were involved in the questions in our paragraph. We unhesitatingly affirm that Secularists are doing as much (perhaps more) political and social work as any section of Christians. They are to the front in every reformatory movement which is not of the purely soup-and-blanket order; most of them thinking that the promotion of justice is better than the extension of charity. But they are obliged to do all this work in their individual capacity. Secular Societies, as such, are still tabooed. Their co-operation in social reforms is neither requested nor desired, except in rare cases which only accentuate the general rule.

To a considerable extent the taboo is applied to individual Secularists, unless they are content to mouth the most commonplace party shibboleths. It is understood that they must serve orthodox interests, at least by holding their tongues. When they are outspoken they are usually ostracised. During the recent London School Board elections, for instance, Mr. Holyoake's friend, the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, made a passionate appeal to Nonconformists not to allow any Secularist to be selected as a "Progressive" candidate. Yet, in the face of all this, Mr. Holyoake has spoken of Secularist action as weakening the "Progressive" strength.

Mr. Holyoake opens his Chronicle letter with a compliment to Mr. Wakefield, who had written about the decline of Secularism, and denounced the policy of the National Secular Society's president. (Poor president! He is everybody's Aunt Sally. If anything goes wrong, fling something at him. No matter what.) Surely it would not have been a strain on Mr. Holyoake's generosity to put in a word for a colleague who cannot discuss himself in the public press. Instead of which he simply says that Mr. Wakefield "understands what he writes about," leaving the Chronicle readers to imagine that the denunciation of Mr. Foote is well-founded.

We remarked in our paragraph that Mr. Holyoake had a "fondness for suggesting that hardly anybody ever understood Secularism but himself." In reply to this he writes to us—"I mention Mr. Bradlaugh and Mrs. Besant as well understanding Secularism. I should have added your name, Mr. Watts's, and others, had I been making an exhaustive examination." This is excellent, in its way; but it is not exactly accurate. Mr. Holyoake did mention Mr. Bradlaugh and Mrs. Besant as at one time understanding Secularism, but he also said that at another (and later) time they did not understand it. Now by understanding Secularism he means understanding it as he does—which is rather papistical. We cheerfully concede to Mr. Holyoake the title of the Father of Secularism, but it is a title of courtesy, not one of patriarchal dominion. Mr. Holyoake did not invent our movement, and he has not patented our principles. We all aim at the same thing—the cultivation of human nature without theology. But that word "without" does not, and never did, appear to us as simple as it appears to Mr. Holyoake. To be without theology in the political, social, and ethical regions, you have to destroy it in very large quantities. We might give a hundred illustrations, but they will suggest themselves to the readers of the Freethinker. It is a cheap way out of the difficulty to describe "the existence of Deity and the reality of a future life" as "open questions of speculation." Such they are in theory, but they are not so in fact. The speculations have crystallised into dogmas and great historic faiths, with a tremendous power over the public and private life of whole communities; and you must challenge these to do anything decisive and durable in the way of reformation. Theology and Secularism, in short, cannot live peacefully together.

With all Mr. Holyoake's high qualities—his eloquence, his wit, and his charming style—there seems to us a certain defect in his composition. It is a lack of logic. He has written a book on Logic, but even grammarians have written very bad English. Mr. Holyoake does not see, in some cases, what is as clear as daylight to other persons. He did not see the logic of his position in the Atheist Shoemaker controversy. He has never seen the logical relation of Secularism, even as he understands and defines it, to such a religion as Christianity. Comte was even more denunciatory of "negation" than Mr. Holyoake, but though mistaken (as we think) he was logical, for he held that the negative work was all really done in the eighteenth century.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Holyoake praises the Leicester Secular Society. So do we. But we do not make its praise a reproach to less fortunate Societies. Affluent and generous men like the late Josiah Gimson are rare in our party. It was principally his investment and donations which enabled Leicester Secularism to hold up its head so proudly. But even in Leicester there is plenty of "negative" lecturing, and we doubt whether the Secularists of that town would endorse Mr. Holyoake's view of "anti-theology." Even when theology smiles on Mr. Holyoake it does not disarm their suspicions. "One may smile, and smile, and be a villain."

G. W. FOOTE.

ARE THE GOSPEL TEXTS GENUINE?

A SERIES of articles which appeared in the Scottish Guardian of last year, signed J. M. C., on "St. Clement's Epistle and the Newly-Discovered Latin Translation,"* have an important though indirect bearing on the above question. For the articles are directed against the genuineness of the Epistle attributed to Clement, and tend to show that both it and the newly-discovered Latin translation are forgeries, probably of the early sixteenth century. Now, this Epistle is found in what is reputed to be the oldest MS. of the New Testament in the British Museum, the Codex Alexandrinus, ascribed to the fifth century; and if the Epistle of Clement is spurious, and of late date, it will be difficult to contend that other portions of the famous Codex A are genuine. The portion of the second Epistle attributed to Clement is now generally allowed to be spurious, but till of late it has been supposed, nevertheless, of early date. If, however, the arguments of J. M. C., who it is not difficult to identify with the Rev. Joseph M. Cotterill, an able Greek scholar and critic, author of Peregrinus Proteus and Clement's Epistle to the Virgins, are valid, the epistles of Clement are little better than centos founded on other writings extending to a much later date. J. M. C. has even come to a conclusion, not merely as to the date, but also as to the personality of the forger, who he shows to have used the late and faulty text of Clemens Alexandrinus, and even to have used the notes of Hervetus (1499–1584). That forger was Stephens, of the great printing family of that ilk. J. M. C., having shown the remarkable affinity between the Greek of the Epistle and the Rudimenta Fidei of Henry Stephens, says:—

"I do not see how the force of the coincidences which have been produced, and which can be multiplied to almost any extent, can be resisted. They point unmistakably, as it seems to me, not to mere knowledge of the Epistle—that, if the document is genuine, Stephens could not have had—but to authorship. Questions, of course, on this point come readily enough to mind. It must suffice to say that something in some part of his life's history will be found to suggest an answer to every inquiry that may be made, if we dare to think of him as the master spirit, at least, in the manufacture of Clement's Epistles. Born and bred, as one may say, in musty libraries, he learned languages from MSS. rather than from printed books. He was as familiar with Latin as with Greek (though it is by his Greek Thesaurus that he is best known); and we find him, from time to time, discoursing upon old Latinity, and quoting Tertullian and other writers for their Latin as readily as in his Thesaurus he cites Plato and others for their Greek. Distinguished he was among men of his day for his scholarship, and for his penmanship as much as for his scholarship. Afflicted, too, he was, from time to time, so he tells us, with a strange disease unknown to medical books, which obliged him to shut himself up, to suspend his ordinary occupations, and to allow even the printer to knock at his door in vain for 'copy.' A strange disease truly it must have been, for it affected neither his mental nor his manual powers. On one occasion he resumed and completed a translation of the Hypotyposes of Sextus Empiricus, which, in his health, he [illegible] thrown on one side because of its difficulty (see his [illegible]ce thereto); while on another occasion, when the [illegible]sm had passed by, he produced some specimens of [illegible]ship on which he had been engaged. What he did [illegible]ny other occasions we do not know, but we can [illegible]s."

[illegible]win Johnson may certainly notice this as a [illegible]rmation of his views coming from an unof January 4 this year, "W. D. W." has "A Note on Clement's Epistle," which indicates that the work of forgery is still going on. By referring to a former article in the Critical Review (May, 1891), "W. D. W." identifies himself with the Rev. W. Dundas Walker. Both in that article and in the present note "W. D. W." shows the suspicious connection existing between the various MSS. of Clement's Epistles. Until 1875 the only known MS. was Codex A of the British Museum. But in 1856 a photographic fac-simile of the part of Codex A containing the Clementine Epistles was published, which facilitated the providential discovery of new MSS.—namely, a Greek version published in 1875, and a Syriac version in the following year.* Now, Mr. Walker supplies the clearest evidence that the text said to have been found by Byrennios (the metropolitan of Nicomedia, and the discoverer of the Teaching of the Twelve Apostles) at Constantinople, is a forgery. One point is decisive. On one page the Alexandrine MS. is defective. There is a hole in the parchment, which is otherwise defaced. At the self-same passage in the Constantinople MS. there is a mutilation. The parchment "has been scraped and scraped until a hole has been made closely resembling, in size and form, the hole just mentioned as in A. And it must be observed that the catastrophe happened not after, but before, this and the preceding page were written, for on both pages the Greek runs on correctly on either side of the hole." There is no other leaf of A so broken as this, and the Constantinople MS. is perfectly sound except at this one spot. It is incredible that an epistle, alleged to have been read in the churches, and consequently widely spread, should have, in manuscripts said to have been written in different countries and hundreds of years apart, exactly the same defect in exactly the same place. This, and other circumstances adduced by Mr. Walker, is sufficient to show that forgery has taken place, and I am grossly deceived if the same business is not going on to-day. The race of forgers did not die out with Constantine Simonides. Those who know the career of that individual, and the ease with which he imposed on experts at Berlin, Leipsic, Oxford, and the British Museum, and who recognise how supply keeps pace with demand, will not be surprised at the providential discovery of ancient manuscripts, and will be inclined to examine their history and evidences with a great deal of caution.

This is not all. In the Scottish Guardian

[illegible]pril 6 to July 27.

J. M. WHEELER.

WAS CHRIST A POLITICAL AND SOCIAL REFORMER?

(Continued from page 51.)

IT has always appeared to me to be remarkably strange that Christ should be regarded as the exemplar of universal love. Neither his own words, nor the conduct of his followers, justify such a belief. It is, of course, desirable that a social state of society should be based upon love and the universal brotherhood of man. This is the avowed foundation of the religion of the Positivists, their motto being, "Love our basis, order our method, and progress our end"; but no such commendable features are to be found in the Gospel of Christ, or in the history of the Church. Jesus declared that his mission was only to "the lost sheep of the house of Israel" (Matthew xv. 24). Moreover, the conditions of discipleship which he imposed would, if complied with, exclude the possibility of love among all men (Luke xiv. 26); as would also his avowed object of breaking the peace and harmony of the domestic circle (Matthew x. 34, 35). It may be said that such are the contingencies attending the belief and adoption of a new religion. Be it so; but that only shows the futility of the contention that Christ established universal brotherhood. It is absurd to argue that he did so, when we are told in the Gospels that his mission was to the Jews only (Matthew xv. 24); that he would have no fellowship with unbelievers (Matthew xv. 26); that he threatened to have his revenge upon those who denied him (Matthew x. 33); that he instructed his disciples to "go not into the way of

* It is notable that photography has not aided in the detection of forgery, but has given a powerful aid to the forgers. No one is allowed to test old skins or ink, because there are photographic reproductions.

Digitized by Google

the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not" (Matthew x. 5); and, finally, that he commanded those disciples, when they were about to start on a preaching expedition, that "Whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear your words, when ye depart out of that house or city, shake off the dust of your feet. Verily I say unto you, it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrha in the day of judgment than for that city" (Matthew x. 14, 15). Shaking the dust from the feet, be it remembered, was an Oriental custom of exhibiting hatred towards those against whom the act was performed. And surely the punishment that it is said was to follow the refusal of the disciples' administration was the very opposite of the manifestation of love. This accords with the non-loving announcement that "the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power" (2 Thess. i. 7, 8, 9).

These references ought to be sufficient to convince any one that Jesus cannot be reasonably credited with a feeling of unqualified love for the whole of the human race. His conduct, and the general spirit of his teachings towards those who differed from him, forbid such a supposition. His injunctions, if acted upon, would annul the influence of the ancient maxim of "doing unto others as you would they should do to you." Certainly he failed to set a personal example by complying with this rule, as his harsh language to those who did not accept his authority amply proves. It is reported that Jesus said (Matthew v. 22), "Whosoever shall say Thou fool shall be in danger of hell fire"; yet we find him exclaiming, "Ye fools, ye fools and blind" (Luke xi. 40; Matthew xxiii. 17). He advised others to "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you," while he himself addressed those who were not his friends as "hypocrites" (Matthew vii. 5); "ye serpents, ye generation of vipers" (Matthew xxiii. 33). We may here apply Christ's own words to himself: "I say unto you that every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment. For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned" (Matthew xii. 36, 37). In Luke (vi. 37) he counsels us to "forgive, and ye shall be forgiven"; but in Mark (iii. 29) it is stated, "He that shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost hath never forgiveness, but is in danger of eternal damnation." The unfortunate point here is, that we are not told what constitutes blasphemy against the Holy Ghost.

From these cases, and there are many more in the Gospels of like nature, it is clear that Jesus taught one thing and practised another—a course of conduct which his followers have not been slow to emulate. But such an inconsistent trait of character disqualifies those in whom it is found from being the best of social reformers. Example is higher than precept.

Whatever may be urged in favor of Christ's supposed "spiritual kingdom," his teachings have but little value in regulating the political and social affairs of daily life, using those terms in the modern and legitimate sense, inasmuch as he has given the world no practical information upon either the science of politics or of sociology. The affairs of this world had but little interest with Christ. With him pre-eminence was given to the soul over the body. We are not to fear him who can kill the body only, but rather fear him "who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell" (Matthew x. 28). Here we recognise the great defect in Jesus as a societarian reformer. He treats this world as if it were of secondary importance, and he furnishes no useful rules for its practical government. True he says, "Blessed are ye poor," and "Woe unto you that are rich"; but what does this amount to? These empty exclamations will not abolish pauperism, neither will it produce the organisation of honest industry, whereby human wants can be supplied and social comforts secured. Would it not have been better if Jesus had devised some plan whereby poverty should become extinct?

To talk, as Professor Graham does, about producing a better state of society by a "union of believers" is, in my opinion, folly. How is it to be done? Every member of "the union" would have to live on the alms of the wealthy members. It would, in fact, be a society of the destitute supported by voluntary contributions. Surely no sane Socialists ever proposed to divide mankind into two classes—i.e., paupers and those who feed them. We know what the result of such a policy was in the case of the Church. As the Professor says, the Church obtained the funds of the rich in return for certain considerations which were supposed to affect them in this world and in the next; and out of such proceeds the clergy distributed bread to the poor and kept something better for themselves. Thus Europe for centuries was infested by fat, idle monks and an army of miserable beggars. A more detestable condition of society to men of honor and independent spirit never existed. Yet this "Christian plan" finds favor, as we have seen, in "the Abbey," and is really the necessary outcome of Christ's mendicant teachings. For did he not allege that the poor were blessed, and that "ye hath the poor always with you" (Matthew xxvi. 11)? If he contemplated that the period would arrive when "it should be impossible for men to be poor," why did he not give some practical instructions to hasten its advent? This would have been a grand contribution to social reform. But his overwhelming anxiety about another life was, with him, the "one thing needful," and to it every other consideration had to give way.

I am quite unable to understand how anyone can mistake the obvious meaning of the parable in which the rich man appears in hell and the poor man in heaven (Luke xvi. 19–26). The only assigned reason is that the one was well-to-do in this life, while the other suffered privations. This is no justification for either of the men being where they are represented to have been. For poverty is no virtue, neither is it a crime to be rich. Men of wealth can be worthy characters, and poverty may be allied with much rascality. The wrong does not consist in possessing riches, but rather in the misuse of them; and, therefore, to be poor does not seem the highest qualification for future bliss, and to be rich is not a sufficient cause for anyone being excluded from an abode of happiness. But this parable is another illustration of Christ's exaltation of poverty. He even dispatched his disciples on a mission of propaganda, without scrip, money, or purse, to beg their way through the world (Luke x. 7–10). Is this the highest model that can be given for a mission to the poor? It is thought so little of to-day, even by professed Christians, that they never adopt the plan suggested by their "Master." They may preach "Blessed be ye poor," but they have no desire to be one of them. They read the warning, "Woe unto you that are rich; for ye have received your consolation" (Luke vi. 24); but they appear to be exceedingly comfortable with their material consolation. "A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush," and they are consoled more with the riches of this world than with the chance of having a harp in the next. In the case of the rich young man (Luke xviii.) it is true Christ advised the giving up of private property; but it is also true that the advice was not deemed practical, for the young man "went away sorrowful" (Matthew xix. 22). Supposing he had accepted the advice, he would then have swelled the ranks of the poor unemployed, and thereby have become the recipient rather than the benefactor, although it is recorded that "it is more blessed to give than to receive" (Acts xx. 35). The giving up all one's possessions would be as injurious to a community as the amassing of wealth by the few is pernicious.

What is required is a social arrangement whereby all members of the community shall have their fair share of the necessities and comforts of life; and this arrangement Christ did not understand, or, if he did, he made no effort to bring it into force, and consequently he lacked the elements of a true social reformer.

There is an incident recorded in Luke (xii.) which shows that Christ refused to say anything upon the subjects of property, civil rights, and law and government. "One of the company said unto him, Master, speak to my brother, that he divide the inheritance with me. And he said unto him, Man, who made me a judge or a divider over you?" Here Jesus had an opportunity, as a social reformer, to give the world an important lesson upon the duty of one man to another; but he did not avail himself of it. He acted more like a modern lawyer would do, who, when asked by a stranger to give him advice, would reply: "I am not your appointed solicitor; if you want information, you must consult your own legal adviser."

CHARLES WATTS.

(To be continued.)

Digitized by Google

THE DATES OF THE BIBLE BOOKS.

We have all heard the story of Pappus, that at the Council of Nice the assembled bishops put all the sacred books under a table in the church, and besought the Lord that the inspired writings might get on top of the table, while the spurious ones remained behind; and so the canonical writings were separated from the apocryphal. According to the Talmud, the Hebrew scriptures were verified in much the same way. Whenever an inspired author wrote a book, it was placed in the temple and left there all night. In the morning, if Yahveh had affixed his seal to it, it was at once placed in the canon; but, if not, it was rejected. It would have saved a great deal of trouble if such a rule had been followed, but we know for certain that most of the sacred books of the Jews differ very much from what they were when written by their original authors, and that some of them were not admitted as canonical till a very late date. We have no authentic record of any canon of Jewish scripture till the time of Josephus, about A.D. 80, who only mentions twenty-two sacred books instead of the twenty-four now reckoned by the Jews; and from his description his canon comprised all we have now, with the exception of the Books of Esther and Ecclesiastes, which were not admitted till a century after his death. It therefore follows that the books of the Old Testament must have all been written before the time of Josephus; but how long before we have no external evidence. We can only judge by the contents of the books themselves.

The Pentateuch and Book of Joshua are now generally recognised to form one body of writings, presenting the same peculiarities, and resulting from the same literary processes. Three main documents can be recognised in it the Yahvist, the Deuteronomist, and the Priestly Code. The Yahvist document appears to be the oldest. It gives a history of the world from the creation (commencing Genesis ii. 4) to the conquest of Palestine by Joshua, and its religious teaching differs little, if any, from that of ordinary Semitic heathendom as known to us from other sources. The Deuteronomist Code is entirely legal, and not historical. It mentions the Levites, but equates them with the priests, and represents them as living on the charity of the population. Its great doctrine is that Yahveh can only be worshipped at one religious centre. The Priestly Code commences at Genesis i. 1, gives a historical sketch entirely independent of that of the Yahvist, and embodies a definite and peculiar code of law. It distinguishes between priests and Levites, mentions the "High Priest," and represents that Jahveh was worshipped in the wilderness in a portable temple called the Tabernacle. The Yahvist document agrees essentially with the earliest-known Jewish prophetical writings, and may be dated about 750 B.C. The Deuteronomist is ignored by all writers before the prophet Jeremiah at the end of the seventh century B.C., when it suddenly becomes of great importance. It is generally recognised to have been the Book of the Law, which Hilkiah professed to have found in the temple in 621 B.C. The Priestly Code is unknown till the time of Ezra, and appears to be essentially the same book as that read to the people about 440 B.C., as related in Nehemiah viii.–x.

So far, critics are agreed; but, for the most part, they give us no indication of the date when these three codes of law were amalgamated into the work now known as the Pentateuch and book of Joshua. Seeing that the priestly code—the last and most important part of the Pentateuch—was only promulgated in the second half of the fifth century B.C., we must allow at least fifty years for its complete acceptance by the Jewish community, say 400 B.C. Then we must allow a further period of time for a feeling of its sanctity to grow up, and for the necessity to be felt for its amalgamation with the two earlier codes of law. Therefore, it must be evident that the Pentateuch, as we have it to-day, cannot have been compiled much earlier than the conquest of Alexander the Great in 331 B.C.

Judges, Samuel, and Kings must also, from their style and contents, be taken as one continuous work; for the divisions of the books of the Old Testament are quite arbitrary, and often absurd. When the book of Joshua was separated from the Pentateuch, in order that the latter might be better ascribed to Moses, the editors made the separation in the wrong place; and the result is that Moses is made to describe his own death and burial. The Talmud asserts that Samuel wrote the book of Samuel, who, therefore, went a step beyond Moses; for he not only details his own death and burial, but also relates the appearance of his own ghost to King Saul, after he was dead and buried. The combined work relates the history of the Jews from the death of Joshua to that of King Jehoiakin, who lived as late as the reign of Evil Merodach of Babylon, 560 B.C. The history, therefore, cannot have been composed till after the latter date. But it bears traces of being later still. The Babylonian conqueror of Jerusalem is called Nebuchadrezzar in the oldest portions of Jeremiah and Ezekiel, and this form of the name agrees very closely with that found in the Babylonian inscriptions. But Kings uses the late corrupted form, Nebuchadnezzar. The book of Kings also calls Tiglath-pileser, king of Assyria, by the name of Pul—a late contraction which does not occur upon any contemporary monument, and is first found in records of the time of the Persian king, Darius Hystaspes, about 480 B.C. Judges, Samuel, and Kings are written entirely from the point of view of Deuteronomy. They know nothing of the peculiar legislation of the priestly code. Therefore, they are earlier than the time of Ezra; but, as we have seen, they cannot be much earlier. The most probable date is 450 B.C.

Chronicles, Ezra, and Nehemiah are still more closely related together than Judges, Samuel, and Kings. Ezra and Nehemiah are still one book in the Hebrew MSS., though in the printed books they are generally divided for facility of reference. Ezra i. 1–3 repeats the last verses of Chronicles verbatim, and shows us that Chronicles ends in the middle of a sentence, the division of the books being even clumsier than usual. The Priestly Code is the standpoint from which the Chronicler views everything; and he colors the whole history in the interest of that Code. His sole authentic authority for the history of Judah is the present book of Kings, which is often quoted verbatim; and wherever he differs from the book of Kings he is giving us something out of his own imagination. De Wette, Graf, and Wellhausen have shown that the Chronicler had no other source, and that when he quotes authorities it is always a section of the book of Kings to which he refers. He holds the same theory that we meet in Josephus and the Talmud—namely, that the prophets of old each wrote the history of his own time; and, therefore, he quotes the book of Kings as the work of Samuel, Iddo, Jehu, or Isaiah, according to the period of which he treats. The Chronicler does not always understand the history related in Kings; for instance, he makes Pul and Tiglath-pileser into two distinct monarchs (1 Chronicles v. 26). His military ideas are not those of the Assyrian period, or even of that of Alexander. He is acquainted with the Roman artillery, and in 2 Chronicles xxvi. 15 he equips Uzziah with catapults and slings, which are entirely unknown to the Assyrian sculptures, and which were objects of wonder even to Josephus. Even in Nehemiah xii. 26, 47 the author speaks of "the days of Nehemiah" as though that were a remote epoch. We cannot well admit Chronicles, Ezra, and Nehemiah to a much earlier date than the capture of Jerusalem by Pompey, 65 B.C.

The Book of Ruth cannot be considered to be a veritable history. Its evident object is to explain the genealogy of King David. The Book of Kings knows nothing of David, except that he was the son of Jesse. Chronicles, on the other hand, knows and accepts the genealogy of David as given in the Book of Ruth. Consequently the latter was composed in the interval between Kings and Chronicles. As the story turns upon the marriage of a Gentile woman with a Jew who becomes the ancestor of the sainted King David, critics see in it a parable against Ezra and the Priestly Code, where Gentile marriages are denounced. Therefore, the Book of Ruth must be assigned to about 440 B.C.

The Book of Esther is also a romance. It professes to relate how a Jewess became the queen of Ahasuerus or Xerxes. The Book of Ezra, however, which gives a summary of the connection of the Persian kings with Judaism, represents Xerxes as an enemy of the Jews. It mentions an individual named Mordecai, but nothing is said of his relationship to the great King of Persia. In fact, the Book of Esther seems to have entirely escaped the notice of everyone before the writer of the second book of the Maccabees, who speaks of "Mardocheus' day," or the feast of Purim. 2 Maccabees can hardly have been written before the Christian era; and it does not profess to be an original work, but an abridgment of an earlier history by Jason of Cyrene (2 Maccabees ii. 23). The first Book of the Maccabees knows nothing of Purim, and Judas Maccabeus would not have instituted a fresh feast on the eve of Purim if the latter were known in his day. The canonicity of the Book of Esther was denied by the Jewish doctors as late as the time of Hadrian (120 A.D.). And it appears, from the Ecclesiastical History of Eusebius (iv. 26), that the book was rejected by the Christians as late as A.D. 180. There is no evidence that the feast of Purim was observed by the Jews before the third century A.D.; in fact, it appears to have been illegal. The feast only rose into vogue with the public recognition of Christianity. The Hebrew text of Esther speaks of Haman as being crucified; hence the Jews at Purim could have a fling at the crucified Christ. We have seen that Esther is not mentioned by any writer before the Christian era, and the very earliest date we can assign to it is 50 B.C.

Digitized by Google

CHILPERIC.

(To be concluded.)

WHAT ARE WOMEN HERE FOR?*

(Concluded from page 59.)

ANOTHER argument which crops up once in a while is that, if the suffrage were extended to women, only the low and vile would vote or run for office. Of course, I know that this is really no argument at all, for it is based on pure assumption, and, if true of men, would still not disfranchise those who did not wish to use the privilege. But, in point of fact, up to this stage of the proceedings it has been only the well educated, the able and the thoughtful women the world over, who have entered into this question. It has been conducted so far—for over forty years—by women who are the intellectual peers of the best men to be found in any country or in any state; and surely, with the experience we have constantly before us—the examples of our public men—no one will venture to say, or even to hint, that these fine women, upon whose lives a flood of light has been thrown for all these years, are not so far above the average male office-holder in moral character that it were absurd to even discuss the question. I feel that I can say this with a good deal of grace, for I am not myself one of these hard workers; but I honor them, and I thank them from the bottom of my heart for what they have already accomplished for me—for what they will yet accomplish for us all. I am only sorry that they who have borne the brunt of this struggle will not all be here to reap the reward when the time comes; and women ought to feel ashamed to enjoy what these women have already secured for us of liberty, of justice, and of hope, unless they are willing to stand by their colors and help to push this car of progress along.

Upon what possible grounds can anyone claim that these fine and able women will not continue to take an interest in their own and their less fortunate sisters' elevation? Will they suddenly labor to put into office the vile of their own sex? Hardly. Will the male voters insist upon doing this? We can scarcely suspect them of such a desire; but surely, if some had it, there are enough good women and good men combined to prevent the sad disaster. But suppose, simply for the argument, that this gratuitous assumption were true; I repeat the question, Is the suffrage to be given or withheld on the basis of moral character? Who is going to conduct the examination? How will the male voter stand the test? Are they prepared now to make all suffrage rest upon such qualification? If not all, why woman's? Let us be fair. Let us remember that humanity is a unit, and that its interests and aims are, and must ever be, indivisible.

One half of the human race cannot progress alone. In the effort to do so it has thrown itself into a tangle that has filled its madhouses, its hospitals, and its homes, alas! with dwarfed, half-developed human pawns, who are the legitimate fruit of the conditions under which they are born and under which they develop.

Perhaps you are wondering how woman suffrage is to remedy all this. Perhaps you are wondering if I think that women are so much wiser, more lofty, and better than men that they will legislate in the millennium the first vote they cast. Let me reply to that right here. I do not think anything of the kind. I am always sorry to hear anyone claim that women will vote this or that evil out of existence. We can't afford to mortgage woman's vote before she gets it. We don't know how she will vote; and it is not the least little bit of our business. What we do know, and what we claim will do the good, is this: that she is a human being, with interests and needs and aims that are as real and as strong and as vital both to herself and to the community as are those of her brother, and that it is right that she should be so placed as to be able to express herself about them on an equal legal footing with her brother—to count as one, and that one not an idiot, in the economy of nature. It is right that she should have a voice in her own affairs. It is right that such wisdom and ability as she does possess should be used to benefit not only herself, but the race. This is not a contest between men and women. It is silly, it is petty, it is failing to grasp the root of this subject at all, to place it upon such a basis as that. Man has quite as much to gain by the change as has woman.

One half of the race has not brain power enough to do the thinking for the whole race. It has proved this pretty fully in the past. It is proving it pretty fully in the present. And so long as the race is deprived of the earnest, honest thought of the other half—just so long as the half which produces the race is held as a subordinate and a mere pawn in the national life, just so long will the world continue to be only half as wise, half as good, half as true, half as lofty as its entire capacity warrants. If only half of the men were allowed to think—if only the Democrats of America were counted as voters, we would, as everybody knows, lose all the wisdom and ability that the Republican mind has evolved. If only the Republicans voted, were allowed to express themselves in the national life, we would lose whatever of thought has been contributed by the Democratic brain. I could hardly find one who would confess himself so narrow as to say that he believes it would be wise, or right, or just, to disfranchise every man who does not belong to his party. Yet that is exactly what is done with women. In a sense, woman is a party—that is to say, she is a special, unrepresented feature of the world far more truly than would be a disfranchised Republican or Democratic party, which all concede would be wholly unfair and unwise.

The time is coming, and it is not far off, when men will be utterly ashamed to remember that they were ever so unwise or so unjust (or so timid) as to claim for themselves the dignity, and the privileges, and the rights and duties of citizenship while denying them to women; and women will be utterly ashamed to let it be known that they had so little self-respect, so little public spirit, so little dignity of character, that they were satisfied to remain the only sane outlaws who had not wilfully forfeited their right to the dignity of citizenship.

In one of the newspapers the other day a writer said that evidently some of the ladies engaged in the effort to secure a dignified and equal footing before the law for one-half of the entire race were actuated by revenge! Revenge for what? Revenge upon whom? Why revenge? How would it be revenge, if in so doing no right or dignity is taken from man—if human rights and dignities are extended to women? Let us have enough dignity to look upon the question as if it were one between parties of men.

It is the fortunate women who must help, who must struggle for the liberty of all. The unfortunate have already all that they can bear. We who were born of, and have lived our lives with, men who had dignity of character enough not to be afraid of losing their influence in their own homes if their wives and daughters are permitted to stand upon an equal legal plane with themselves—those of us who have had the rare good fortune to have lived with men who scorn to take advantage of the situation, and who are as heartily ashamed of it as we are—can very readily understand how impossible it would be for those classes of women who are associated with narrow-minded or brutally inclined men to come out openly upon this or any other topic in opposition to that grade of man who is so absolutely certain of his own superiority that he recognises that the only way to prove it is to retain legal privileges which state his superiority in black and white.

Our great American orator, Ingersoll, has well said: "The men who claim that they are the intellectual superiors of women cannot prove the assertion by putting themselves in evidence." And it is equally true that no nation can hope to prove that the genius for self-government rests wholly in its male citizen so long as it insists upon protecting him from competition with those who he says are unfit. If men are the natural and only capable rulers of the race, the only way to prove it is to take the protective tariff off of him and allow nature to decide upon equal and fair terms the survival of the fittest in government as in life.

HELEN H. GARDENER.

—Truth Seeker Annual.

* Delivered before a meeting of fashionable women who had said they would "open their parlors" for discussion of the "legal status of women" if Helen H. Gardener would agree to be one of the speakers.

"Beg pardon," said the missionary, "but will you translate His Majesty's remarks again! Did he tell his daughter that he was to have guests to dinner or for dinner?"

Digitized by Google

THE PARSON'S SONG.

(From a Comic Opera of 1950.)

A servant of the Lord am I—
A parson meek and lowly,
And here on earth my trade I ply
With unctuousness so holy.
I wear each day a look of gloom—
It's burdensome to bear it—
To help impress the sinner's doom
Upon the fools who hear it.

Chorus—I'm a servant of the Lord,
And I preach his blessed word;
For it pays, in these days,
Of ranting and of canting,
Of gas-bag rant and canting.

When I was little but a lad,
My folks sent me to college,
And there what little brain I had
Was crammed with Bible knowledge.
To theologic classes then
They sent me as a student,
To learn the art of 'guiling men
In divers ways and prudent.

Like many another simple lad—
And few young men are clever—
I swallowed all the good and bad
I heard the Prof. deliver.
Betimes they gave me a degree
And sent me out as preacher,
To tell the yarns they told to me
Before they made me teacher.

But sometimes one is bound to think,
Let one be e'er so wary,
And soon I was upon the brink
Of doubt, and somewhat chary
Of hobbling to the gospel dodge;
But then—the job is steady;
And one need only preach at Hodge,
And miss the squire and lady.

The Gaberlunzie.

ACID DROPS.

Ingersoll's new lecture, "About the Holy Bible," is creating a big sensation in America, and the clergy are "answering" him right and left. One of these gentlemen, the Rev. F. Carson, a Presbyterian minister of Brooklyn, thinks it enough to point out that the Bible has withstood all assaults—by which he means, we presume, that it is still printed and circulated. Mr. Carson says he is not going to "reply" to the "infidel," as it would be defending the sun against the fog. Poor man of God! We should like to feel his bumps, as Charles Lamb said. He must be well developed at the bump of self-esteem, and very small at the bump of caution. The Yankees will only smile at such belated efforts to stem the tide of "infidelity." They can guess why Mr. Carson will not reply to Ingersoll. It doesn't require any miraculous penetration to see that.

Golf has been played on the Rye Links on Sunday, and this shocking desecration has roused the ire of the Rev. A. J. W. Crosse, a local sky-pilot, who calls upon God Almighty to vindicate the Lord's Day from such a terrible scandal. It is to be hoped that Rye will not be visited by an earthquake or a blizzard. Airs from heaven would be very agreeable, but sky-pilot Crosse appears to be soliciting blasts from hell, which may do when it is freezing hard, though not at other seasons of the year.

Preaching in Exeter Cathedral, the Rev. A. Mortimer denounced the School Board system as State Atheism, and said it had "blasted and ruined the happiness of more homes than all the dark horrors of drunkenness and adultery put together." This man of God must be drunk to say so, though the intoxicant in his case is not gin, but gospel. Parson Mortimer would evidently rather have the whole population drunkards and adulterers than see them educated without his own religious specific. Could madness go farther than this? It is really a case for a commission in lunacy.

Having half wiped out the Matabele, the Christians are going to instruct the remnant in the beautiful truths of religion—that is, to fit them for the kingdom of heaven before sending them there with the utmost dispatch. Mr. Cebil Rhodes, who doubtless understands the "civilising" power of the Christian religion, has subscribed £50 towards the erection of a Wesleyan chapel at Bulwayo, which will supply a snug job to some man of God who is amongst the unemployed in the overcrowded clerical labor-market of England.

At a lecture on Theosophy, at Bangor, the lecturer asked, in stentorian tones, "What comes after death?" No one answered, and after a pause he vehemently repeated the question. At this moment the door opened, and in walked one of the leading undertakers of Bangor. The audience smiled.

How thankful we ought to be that we dwell in a Christian land, where the tender mercies of God are over all his works. In a single day last week one coroner, Mr. Baxter, had to inquire into the deaths of four persons starved to death. These tragic cases only represent the acme of a vast amount of misery which stern winter brings on the poor.

Winter has been accompanied by lightning, which, in several cases, has struck churches and chapels, as if in indication that the elements are not entirely under the control of the being to whom these edifices are dedicated.

Many lives have been lost on the coast of late. At the shipwreck on the Cornish coast only nine were saved out of a crew of twenty-two. Subscriptions have been appealed for on behalf of the families of one hundred and six Hull fishermen who were drowned during the great gale at the end of last year.

The Lord Bishop of Down and Connor is working away at a Church Building Fund, which everybody knows will pretty well put an end to all the evils and miseries of Ireland. He is supported, of course, by the Belfast Evening Telegraph, which devotes a leader to the subject. According to this profound oracle of Orangeism, the enemies of law and order, who have "no sense of responsibility to either God or man," are "recruited principally from the ranks of Atheists, or, more correctly speaking, Agnostics." This is too contemptible for refutation. It is sufficient to point to the fact that the most violent Anarchists have all had a rigorous Christian education. What we wish the Telegraph to ponder is, that the greatest scoundrels of the age are recruited from the ranks of orthodoxy. Atheism doesn't seem to produce men like Hobbs, Wright, and Jabez Balfour, nor even fellows like De Cobain, who was one of the burning and shining lights of Belfast religious society.

Parson Davis, vicar of Ramsbury, has a perfect right to send out begging letters for his church, but it is playing rather low to express an "earnest hope of at least one shilling," and a waste of paper and stamps to address his circulars to Freethinkers.

Archbishop Ireland has been giving what the Chicago Tribune calls a "Crushing Reply to Ingersoll." The gist of the Archbishop's statement was that Christianity means civilisation. "Where Christ is not there is barbarism." Now, is this true? Were Plato, Aristotle, Cicero, Buddha, Confucius, and Lao-tse barbarians? Was Spain barbarian when it was under the Moors or when it was under the Christian Inquisition?

Beyond the reduction of the tithe commutation rent-charge, which gives a value only of £73 13s. 0½d. for £100, the editor of Kelly's Clergy List says that "in many counties, particularly in the east of England, the tithe rent-charge has largely remained unpaid, while we have not unfrequently met with cases in which livings have had to be given up owing to the income being insufficient to meet the charges on the land." If this process goes on, the Church won't be good enough even for the fools of the family.

It was stated at the meeting of the Evangelical Free Churches Council, at Birmingham, that in that city and suburbs there were 387,963 persons who ought to attend some place of worship. Even on Sunday evenings some 300,000 of these are absent. There are 426 places of worship, with sitting accommodation for 180,208 persons. In the churches, however, there are 38,212 unoccupied seats, and in the Dissenting chapels 42,300. Yet the Church Extension Society wants more churches and a bishop, and the Nonconformists are always wanting cash for more chapels.

The Quakers of Massachusetts have petitioned against capital punishment, on the ground that it is contrary to the law of God. While people have the text, "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed," facing them at Genesis ix. 6, they are little likely to attend to this plea. Indeed, a man of God of the name of Macmaster has put out a big book on The Divine Principle of Capital Punishment.

Digitized by Google

Among the stories of the late Father Healy is one that shows his geniality did not over-ride his sound Catholicism. It is said that a pompous Protestant ecclesiastic once met Father Healy at dinner, and after the second glass of port he said: "Father Healy, I am very glad to meet you, very glad. I have never been able to find any difference between a good Protestant and a good Catholic, and I have lived sixty-five years in this world." Father Healy immediately replied: "Ye won't be sixty-five seconds in the next without finding it out."

A French newspaper says there are in the French Academy three Protestants, Victor Cherbuliez, Leon Say, and M. de Freycinet; one Freethinker, Alexander Dumas; one Atheist, M. Challemel Lacour; while nearly every one of the rest is a nominal Catholic.

Several Italian bishops of small towns, advanced to that position while they were parish priests in Rome, are at variance with the Vatican, because, being used to a city like Rome, they feel miserable in their narrow surroundings, and continually appeal to the Pope to be called so some office in the Eternal City, or some canonship in one of the churches there. The Pope, vexed to find them so little inclined to do their duty, has, it is said, given it to be understood that he will never again nominate a parish priest of Rome to any Bishopric.

The attention of the Lord's Day Observance Society ought to be called to the fashionable club that uses "Niagara Hall" as a skating rink on Sunday. Among the patrons are the Duke of Wellington, the Earl of Essex, and many others of the nobility and gentry. A long list of fashionable ladies and gentlemen who spent last Sunday in skating appears in the St. James's Gazette.

We do not often have to thank the Secretary of the Lord's Day Observance Society, but we do this time for letting a little daylight on the fifty-four ministers who were boasted of as having celebrated Museum Sunday. "These," he says, "comprised twelve English Churchmen, two Scottish Churchmen, thirty-four Unitarians, one Baptist, one Independent, one Theist, two Ethicals, and one Positivist." If any one supposes that the men of God are generally disposed to allow of any competition with their business, they are much deceived. Thanks, Dr. Peake; and if you will only get up a prosecution against Secularists for keeping their halls open on Sunday, we will thank you still further.

The Tablet is responsible for the statement that at the recent Lahore Durbar the speech of the Viceroy was so badly translated that when he said, "I am no foe to criticism," it was rendered "I am not opposed to highway robbery"—a statement, it is said, which was received with wild shouts of applause from the assembled chiefs. This was almost as bad an error as that of some translators of the Sermon on the Mount, who rendered "Judge not that ye be not judged," "Do no justice that justice may not be done on you."

It is hoped that Almighty God understands his duties as protector of the Hohenzollern interests. At any rate, he gets some delicate reminders from the pious Emperor, who, for instance, when speaking on his birthday of Franco-Prussia, said he "glorified the name of the Almighty that He blessed our arms in such measure." The Emperor's gratitude looks like "a lively sense of favors to come." Does he want more bloodshed as a proof of the Almighty's favor?

Lent, like other ecclesiastical customs, is probably pre-Christian. In Grote's History of Greece, iii., 309, there is quoted a fragment from the early Greek poet Alcman, who calls spring the season of short fare. Alcman's idea was that the old crop was running short and the new crop not yet in. Agriculturists then had to depend on a fish supply. These natural conditions the apostolic fishermen seem to have worked up into an institution for their own benefit.

An inspector, examining a Church school in a large railway centre, asked: "What does Epiphany mean?" One replied: "A porter;" another, "A ticket collector;" a third, "A signalman." On making inquiries the inspector discovered that the children had learnt that Epiphany meant "a man of a station."

Parson (who has been teaching about St. Stephen)—"Are there any martyrs at present?" Boy (eagerly)—"Yes, sir, tomatoes." Parson (to elucidate)—"What are tomatoes?" Boy—"Please, sir, my father is a toe martyr; he suffers from corns."

January 30 was the anniversary of the execution of King Charles, the martyr, for whom there is a special service in the Church of England Prayer Book. A writer in the Church Times says anent the Laud celebrations: "While we commemorate the Archbishop, let us not forget to observe the anniversary of the death of the King whom he so devotedly served—a monarch who, with all his faults, was a true Christian and a sincere Churchman." It is rather late in the day, however, to revive the old service for the martyr.

This reminds us of a circular we received announcing The Legitimist Kalendar for 1895, edited by the Marquis de Ravigny and Raineval. This Kalendar is put forward by the White Rose League, who hold that her Majesty is not the legitimate holder of the throne, but Mary, Princess of Bavaria. It gives portraits of "their most Christian majesties the King and Queen of France and Spain," and a table of the Legitimist Christian Rulers of the World, with their heirs, the laws of succession, etc. It is evidently a remarkable calendar; but we have not yet sent in our subscription for a five guinea or even for a guinea copy.

By the way, the Thames Valley Jacobite Club, which was started with the same ridiculous objects as the White Rose League, has decided to alter its program, and change its name to the Thames Valley Royal Oak Club, with the object of holding the fort against the advance of Socialism, Atheism, and Anarchy. From Jacobite it becomes anti-Jacobin.

A Vienna correspondent of the Christian World writes on "Why the Jews are Hated," and tries hard to make out that anti-Semitism is due, not to the Jew's religion, but only to political and social reasons. It does not, however, require much knowledge of history and human nature to know that, when strife arises, it is intensified by difference of religion.

In consequence of the Rev. A. E. Briggs, one of the curates of St. Mark's, Marylebone, having openly taught "Ave Maria" and prayers for the dead, he has been inhibited by the Bishop of London, and the curate, who still officiates at "High Mass," will appeal to the Archbishop of Canterbury. The Ritualists are offering special prayers for him.

The Rev. James Hunt, Rector of Donegore, Connor, Ireland, says, in allusion to the consecration of a Protestant bishop of Madrid: "Rather than that the horrible history of Protestant ascendency in this country should be re-enacted amid the blue hills of Spain, I would prefer that the new conventicle in Madrid should be filled to the roof with dynamite, even though half the city were blown into fragments along with it." Mr. Hunt evidently holds that Christianity came to bring fire and division.

The Pope is pushing forward his plan for the conversion of England, and, after conferring with Cardinal Vaughan, has sent for the Bishops of Salford, Nottingham, and Southwark to visit him at the Vatican and confer on the subject. The fact is, the Catholics have so bamboozled the old man with the account of the progress of their faith, and of the proximity of the Ritualists, that it is doubtful if any of these bishops will have the courage to undeceive him. As a matter of fact, the leakage from the Church of Rome is fully equivalent to the conversions from the High Church party. Of course, in the event of Disestablishment, there would be a more pronounced procession Romewards.

Providence has been pretty active of late. To say nothing of the weather, there is the earthquake in Persia, which has wrecked hundreds of houses and killed hundreds of people. Still worse is the volcanic outburst on the island of Ambrym in the New Hebrides. One half the island is covered with ashes, and of the 8,000 inhabitants but few remain.

During a recent earthquake in Italy sixty people fled into a church to pray; but the earthquake destroyed the church, and buried the worshippers in the ruins. It is under such painful circumstances that the Presbyterian Assembly sees with regret the spread of modern indifferentism, and lays stress upon the great necessity for encouraging faith in a personal deity.

A writer in the Guardian deplores the fact that Oxford is no longer distinctively a Christian university. He says: "It was a home of learning that was Christian; now it is a home of learning that is non-Christian." True, a good deal of the tradition of the old religious régime lingers on at Oxford as elsewhere, together with other anomalies. M.A. degrees are still conferred in the name of the Holy Trinity, and so on. But, as Canon Liddon used to say, we have not yet seen the full effect of secularisation. The fact remains, "The University was founded on religious principles; now it is not so."

The New York City Christians, who have a Jew for a god, refuse to allow their children to associate with the Jewish children in the private schools of that city.

Digitized by Google

"A clergyman," writes a correspondent of the Westminster Gazette, "set out, the other afternoon, on a begging expedition. Three rich men were on this occasion selected as victims. Said Number One, after listening to an earnest appeal for funds to build a new church: 'I'm sorry I cannot help you; but the fact is, I don't like your views. You are too Evangelical.' Number Two would have been glad to contribute to the funds, but, unfortunately, the poor vicar was not sufficiently Evangelical to suit him. Arrived at Number Three, all seemed to promise well, and, after a very sympathetic chat, the rich man exclaimed, with a warm hand-shake: 'It is most cheering to meet with one whose views accord so perfectly with my own, but as I am firmly persuaded that the second coming of the Lord will take place before your church is built it would be useless for me to give you anything.'"

During his long holiday in Italy the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes found a dreadful want of true religion. He couldn't understand why the Italians were not all Wesleyan Methodists. Most of them, alas, were Roman Catholics—at least, by profession; and we all know what a horrid religion that is. How happy is England, with her true-blue Protestants, who boast of all the virtues under heaven! Above all, how blest is she in her Wesleyan Methodists, who are all the very souls of honor, and would sooner be burnt alive—every man of them, including Hugh Price Hughes—rather than tell the smallest untruth!

Somehow or other, though, those idolatrous Italians, while they don't understand Teetotalism and Purity Societies and Vigilance Committees, contrast very favorably with the people of (really) Christian England. Mr. Hughes witnessed a popular demonstration at Florence, and this is how he writes of the behavior of the multitude: "We were greatly impressed by two facts—first of all, the entire absence of coarse horseplay which disgraces so many English crowds; and, secondly, the yet more significant fact that among these thousands of persons there was not one single individual under the influence of excessive drinking. There was no crowding, no pushing, no swearing, no improper conduct of any kind." How different from the demeanor of an English crowd! But what of that? Englishmen may be rude and drunken, but they are Christians, and are going to heaven, while those polite and sober Italians have taken the wrong road, and are going to hell. 'Tis true, 'tis pity, and pity 'tis 'tis true.

Mr. Hughes paid a visit to the Franciscan monks, one of whom offered him some black coffee and brown bread. The monk wished to put some brandy into the coffee. "He seemed to be incapable," Mr. Hughes says, "of understanding the possibility of any man existing who could drink coffee without brandy in it." The Methodist visitor "made a tremendous effort," but could not imbibe any of the "dreadful mixture." Jesus Christ would probably have been less squeamish. Is it not curious that the very countries which breed people who are too sensitive and virtuous to take a spoonful of brandy are the very countries which breed the most awful drunkards on this planet? There is a moral here, if one could only beat it out.

A curious instance of superstition is mentioned in Notes and Queries. A writer cites from Mrs. Panton's Within Four Walls that in Roman Catholic villages in America it used to be a custom to place in the centre of a hive of bees, found in every cottage garden, a morsel of the sacred wafer kept back from the celebration of the Eucharist. This atom used to be called "the little God Almighty," and was supposed to ensure the bees from all harm, and that the crops of honey in such a protected hive should be above the average.

The good Christian who was caught throwing missiles at the Muezzin who calls to prayers at the Moslem mosque, Liverpool, was asked by Mr. Morgan, the ex-Mayor: "Why don't you leave these people alone and let them worship God in their own way?" Defendant: "They are heathens, and don't worship God." Magistrate's Clerk: "That is nonsense, and no defence, even if true." Defendant: "Well, they are not Christians." Evidently, in the mind of this attendant at St. John's Church, this is a justification for any outrage. He got off very lightly with an adjournment, "to see if there was any repetition of the offence."

Another illustration of "Christianity as it works out" is supplied by a wealthy Mexican Alcade, who, according to a Mexican correspondent of the United States Associated Press, treated his native town to a bull fight "in honor of the festival of Santa Eulalia, virgin and martyr."

Felix L. Oswald writes in the Open Court, apropos of Isis Very Much Unveiled: "The expose amusingly illustrates the fact that distance not only 'lends enchantment to the view,' but an aspect of plausibility to the idea of enchantment. Thousands, whose organs of mental digestion rejected Cock-lane ghost stories, had welcomed the chance to satisfy their miracle hunger with reports from distant India. A large proportion of these famished would-be believers will now have to fall back on the old expedient of chronological distance."

Mrs. Mellon, the Sydney mejum, who explained her being found barefooted by the spirits having depleted her legs so that her stockings came off, has been outdone. The Banner of Light, a Spiritist paper of Boston, reports that at Helsingfors, Finland, at a dark séance, given by Mme. Esperance, the visitors noted that the medium showed symptoms of excitement, and appeared to be in pain. "A few moments later she asked a neighbor to let her take his hand—which he did; whereupon she said, 'Feel here,' and put his hand where her person should have come in contact with her seat, but he felt only the chair. Another gentleman joined the first in a search for the lower parts of the medium without success, and then it dawned on the medium and the visitors that she had become dematerialised from the waist downward." This fact was held to account for Mme. Esperance's excitement, as it well might, especially as she expressed a fear that perhaps the parts would not return. If these are spiritual doings, verily they are horrible to contemplate.

The Rev. N. H. Boston is a Christian clergyman. He is also the pastor of Bullom, in the colony of Sierra Leone. This chosen missionary to the heathen black man is also at present the defendant in a charge of rape preferred against him, and which is to be tried at the present sittings of the Supreme Court of the colony. This little item of news from West Africa will, we are sure, be very gratifying intelligence to the old women of both sexes who contribute to the funds of missionary societies.—Crescent.

At the Congress of the Vegetarian Federal Union Colonel Wintle read a paper on "Christian Missions in India," arguing that they would never convert the Hindoos. Indeed, the latter were rather converting the Europeans with whom they came in contact, for their standard of justice, humanity, charity, courage, and resignation was of the highest. Mr. Chaganlal Haridas Vora quite agreed with Colonel Wintle, and maintained that the so-called conversions of Hindoos by missionaries were only those of persons seeking relief from poverty.

A Miss Katherine Drexel has taken her final vows of retirement from the world at the convent of the Blessed Sacrament, near Torresdale, Maryland. By her retirement the Church comes into her worldly possessions, valued at over a million dollars. This is the way the religious oracle is worked. It is worth an expensive apparatus to land such a fine fish as Miss Drexel occasionally.

Oh those belated Christians! The Methodist Times has just discovered "Nunquam," the editor of the Clarion, whose penny edition of Merrie England is having such a phenomenal sale. Our Methodist contemporary thinks that not one in a hundred of its readers has the remotest conception of who is "Nunquam." The "immense majority of Christian teachers" in this country have not so much as heard of his "existence." Of course not. They never wake till twelve o'clock. Secularists are earlier birds. They made the acquaintance of "Nunquam" years ago; in fact, they had him speaking in the Manchester Secular Hall at the unveiling of Mr. Walter Sickert's portrait of Bradlaugh. Mr. Blatchford is a Secularist himself, and we hope the Methodist Times will chronicle the fact. It might also report that the Clarion has expressed the view that Mr. Hughes may be worthy of attention when he has answered Mr. Foote's exposure of the Atheist Shoemaker story.

Obituary.

We have to chronicle the death, at the early age of 43, of Oscar Beck, one of the leading Belgian Freethinkers, founder of the Freethought Society at Liége, and editor of the Almanach des Libres Penseurs, published there. His civil funeral was attended by over two thousand people, prominent Freethinkers from all parts of Belgium being present.

The Gospels.—That no writer before Irenæus has named these writings, or seems to have known either them or their writers, save two or three notices of St. Paul found in works of suspected antiquity, can hardly lead to any other conclusion than that these books were written immediately preceding the time when they are first mentioned.—Rev. Dr. Giles, "Christian Records," chap. li., p. 418.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Foote's Engagements.

Sunday, February 3, Secular Hall, Rusholme-road, Manchester: 11, "Is Religion the Cause of Progress?" 3, "Angels"; 6.30, "God's in His Heaven."

Wednesday, February 6, Hall of Science, Old-street, E.C.:—8.30, "Kit Marlowe—Atheist, and Morning Star of English Drama." (Free.)

February 10 and 17, Hall of Science.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Mr. Charles Watts's Engagements.—February 3, Hall of Science, London; 10, Camberwell; 17, Plymouth; 24, Newcastle-on-Tyne. March 3, Manchester. April 7, Sheffield.—All communications for Mr. Watts should be sent to him (if a reply is required, a stamped and addressed envelope must be enclosed) at 81 Effra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

Lecture Notices must reach 28 Stonecutter-street by first post Tuesday, or they will not be inserted.

Pessimist.—Such questions have been repeatedly asked in our columns. We are now waiting for the orthodox to answer them.

T. Barnett.—Thanks for your trouble in copying the verses. "Near the drum" will not do for us. We can't take that seat, so must decline the ticket.

A. Mitchell.—Always pleased to receive suitable verses.

Spectator (Southport).—We have no space to record the exploits of such a ruffian. He seems to belong to an essentially criminal type. If he were not defending Christianity (heaven save the mark!) he might be doing worse—if that were possible.

J. K. (Greenock).—Sorry we cannot undertake it. Our hands are already too full.

G. S. Coole.—According to Matthew ii. 1, Jesus was born in the days of Herod the king, who died B.C. 4. From Luke ii. 2 it appears it was when Cyrenius was Governor of Syria, which was not till ten or more years after the death of Herod.

E. H.—Socialism is a special method of reform to which the N.S.S. is not committed. If it were so, all the non-Socialists would have to leave the Society. The destruction of the Christian superstition is our principal work at present; and it is the indispensable preliminary of all wise and desirable reform. We have no belief in a renovated society which is still under the dominion of theology. All the old evils would soon reappear, though perhaps in fresh and more insidious forms.

J. Keast.—Glad to hear the Bristol Branch is enrolling new members. Mr. Foote has written to you with respect to a date for lectures.

T. E. M.—Pleased to know you appreciate Mr. Ryan's article on the Drama. He is one of our most esteemed contributors. The article shall appear.

F. Holland.—The lines have merit, but are not quite suitable. We do not know Miss Reade personally. The paragraph you refer to was based on a correspondent's report.

B. Ingham.—Thanks. See paragraph.

C. Kendrick.—You did not indicate what you thought the right date; you merely said our date was wrong—which was not much assistance. The evening lecture referred to was not delivered on a Sunday. We followed Mrs. Bonner in the matter. Mr. Forder says the date was early in December, not late in November. Unfortunately we have not the N.R. file to consult.

G. G. Leonard.—We are unable to give you the address of Mr. A. Dawson who left Newcastle for America in 1893. Perhaps his address is known to our Newcastle friends.

H. Poulson.—We cannot answer such questions by post. Josephus (in the forged passage) says that Jesus drew after him many Jews as well as Gentiles. This implies that the majority were Gentiles.

M. Wellington.—Thanks. See paragraph.

W. H. Harnor.—You have a perfect right to your own opinion. Ours is not affected by your comments. You do not appear to have followed the Parnell case with close attention. The facts were certainly not as you represent them.

T. Garbutt.—Mr. Foote's pamphlet on Randolph Churchill can be obtained from Mr. Forder.

W. Wilson.—We will not give publicity to the blackguardism of such a half-insane "anti-infidel." Mr. Foote would be happy to visit Southport when he is in the neighborhood.

E. Howard.—Your letter was dated January 21, but did not reach us till Wednesday morning, too late for last week's issue.

Philalethes.—It is impossible to take that young pretender seriously.

F. S.—See paragraph.

J. W. Stafford.—Shall appear. Glad to know that you find the Freethinker an oasis in the benighted desert you are obliged to inhabit.

Watts Election Fund.—We have received: E. P. 42, £1.

Mr. Foote's Fighting Fund.—E. P. 42, £1; T. W. Gore, 2s. 6d.; M. Bywater, 2s.; H. Lyon, 2s. 6d.

H. Lyon.—Can you obtain a hall now for lectures at Leeds?

Papers Received.—Freethinkers' Magazine—Der Arme Teufel—Boston Investigator—Monro's Ironclad Age—Secular Thought—Southport Visitor—Isle of Man Times—Lancashire Post—Huddersfield Examiner—Truthseeker—Two Worlds—Freedom—Twentieth Century—Freidenker—Liberator—Liberty—Open Court—Progressive Thinker—Sporting Sketches—Reynolds's Newspaper—Saturday Times—World's Advance Thought—Literary World—Universal Republic—Catholic Herald—Weekly Bulletin.

Friends who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish to call our attention.

Letters for the Editor of the Freethinker should be addressed to 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Orders for literature should be sent to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

The Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the publishing office, post free, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 10s. 6d.; Half Year, 5s. 3d.; Three Months, 2s. 8d.

Correspondence should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

Scale of Advertisements.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—(Narrow Column) one inch, 3s.; half column, 15s.; column, £1 10s. Broad Column—one inch, 4s. 6d.; half column, £1 2s. 6d.; column, £2 5s. Special terms for repetitions.

It being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will receive the number in a colored wrapper when their subscription expires.

SUGAR PLUMS.

Owing to the cold, snowy, cheerless weather at Liverpool on Sunday, Mr. Foote's morning and afternoon audiences were not as large as usual; in the evening, however, the hall was crowded. Opposition was offered to this lecture by an earnest but unconsciously comical disciple of the late Black Champion, who proved the existence of Christ by the argument that there must have been a Christ, or there would not have been any Christians. Some of this gentleman's interpretation of Scripture was unspeakably diverting. Mr. George Wise, of the Christian Evidence Society, also opposed the lecture in two speeches; and rather astonished the meeting by standing up for the authenticity of the famous exploded passage in Josephus. Mr. Wise also cited Professor Sanday as supporting the orthodox view of the authorship of the Gospels. We advise him to read the sixth of Sanday's recent lectures on "Inspiration." Mr. Wise is not up to date.

Mr. Foote lectures to-day (Feb. 3) at Manchester. As the hard weather threatens to continue, and people may be deterred from coming in from the surrounding districts, it is to be hoped that the Manchester friends will make a special effort to provide good audiences on this occasion.

Mr. Charles Watts had a good audience last Sunday evening at the Hall of Science, London, when he lectured upon "Trust in God a Delusion." The subject "caught on," and was enthusiastically applauded. Mr. Rowney made an excellent chairman. Several questions were put to Mr. Watts at the close of the lecture by an intelligent young gentleman, who evidently had not been accustomed to Freethought lectures.

This (Sunday) evening, February 3, Mr. Watts again occupies the same platform, taking for his subject "Religion with and without Theology."

A debate is to take place in the Camberwell Secular Hall on Tuesday evening, February 5, between Mr. S. E. Easton (Secularist) and Mr. W. S. Clarke (Christian Defence Association) on the question—"Christianity or Secularism: Which is the Better Calculated to Benefit Mankind?" The admission is free, and there should be a large attendance.

On the following Sunday evening (February 10) Mr. Charles Watts lectures at Camberwell. We believe it is his first appearance there since his return from America.

In the United Presbyterian Magazine Dr. Whitelaw seeks to damage the higher criticism of to-day by showing that its main conclusions were anticipated by Thomas Paine in his Age of Reason. He wants to know if Jesus Christ was wrong in saying that Moses wrote of him (John v. 46), and Thomas Paine right in asserting that Moses did no such thing. Well, that is the conclusion the world is coming to.

Here, for instance, is Professor Guthe, who, in Die Christliche Welt (1894; Nos. 40, 41), points out that, according to Deut. xxxi. 9, Moses wrote down the laws. But the facts show that the law that Israel should worship in one place only (Deut. v. 12) was unknown by men like Samuel, Saul, David, Solomon, and Elijah, who are praised for patterns of piety. He holds they were not aware of such a precept of Moses. They did not transgress it only because it did not exist. So, also, he says: "The Book of Daniel professes to come from the time of the Babylonian exile; it arose, however, about the middle of the second century B.C. To write under a pseudonym became a favorite practice in later Judaism."

Digitized by Google

The Freethinkers' Magazine, conducted by Mr. H. L. Green at Chicago, now appears as the Free Thought Magazine. It opens with a capital portrait of Mr. J. A. Greenhill, and contains a number of interesting articles; also a summary report of Ingersoll's lecture, "Which Way," delivered before a crowded audience in the Columbia Theatre, Chicago, on the first Sunday in January. "God is dead," Ingersoll says in his fine peroration. This is a sufficient answer to some half-superstitious "Agnostics" in this country, who try to make out that Ingersoll is not an Atheist.

The Literary World, noticing Voltaire: A Sketch of His Life and Works, by J. M. Wheeler and G. W. Foote, says: "The English people ought to know Voltaire, an admirer and lover of their nation, better than they do, and this lively shilling pamphlet will give them a good deal of information as to his life and work. Cultivated men of all schools have long since ceased to regard the great Frenchman as the moral monster he was represented to be by the people he attacked, and have learned to do justice to his splendid services to the cause of intellectual freedom, and in the interests of the suffering and of the oppressed." It goes on to say that "the defect of this work is in adopting an attitude towards religion, as did Voltaire, which has been outgrown." As the same number of the Literary World speaks of Professor Huxley as "a belated Voltairean," we can easily reconcile ourselves to the criticism.

Rabbi Schindler has been lecturing for the Ingersoll Secular Society, Boston. Dr. Schindler referred to Jesus as the ideal of the Christian, the child of the imagination, and said that, when people came from the regions of the ideal to solid ground to deal with flesh and blood, they had a right to ask for facts and proofs of them. He claimed that the only place where Jesus was mentioned was in the gospel, and went on to show how improbable the story was, having been written 150 years after the time Jesus is alleged to have lived.

Dr. Schindler read extracts from Jewish authorities to show that, according to the Bible stories, Christ was tried and executed on a holiday, and that trials were not held by Jews on holidays; and he gave further quotations to show that the Gospel writers knew nothing of the jurisprudence and customs of the times of which they were writing. He spoke at length of the Jewish criminal code to show that, while the Bible claimed that Jesus was tried and convicted on the same day, such a procedure was entirely at variance with the custom of the Jews.

Public Opinion (Jan. 25) quotes at length from a Danish paper, Danskeren, on "Plato as a Forerunner of Christ." The paper bears out what Mr. Maagaard has recently written in our columns on "The Progress of Freethought in Denmark."

Mr. Robert Forder visits the Battersea Secular Hall this Sunday evening (February 3), and delivers his new lecture entitled "Christ and the Labor Party." There should be a large attendance.

In London, out of twenty-nine public libraries, sixteen are open on Sundays. With a little pressure, most of the others might be induced to follow suit.

In giving a free concert on Sunday to 1,200 of the inmates of the City Road Workhouse of the Holborn Union, the National Sunday League has started a humane and beneficial work, which, we trust, will soon be imitated all over the country. The L.D.O. Society may try its game of frightening, by an appeal to obsolete laws; but the work commenced is one which will at once commend itself to all the enlightened section of the public.

There are few ways in which a little money can promote more happiness than in giving a treat to children. Miss Vance has been very energetic in seeing that the usual party at the Hall of Science is a successful one; but she complains that the funds have not come in as desired. We hope our well-to-do readers will take the hint, remember the children, and remit their donations to 28 Stonecutter-street as speedily as possible.

Mr. Foote will deliver a series of Wednesday evening lectures at the London Hall of Science during February. They will all be literary. The first, on February 6, will be upon "Kit Marlowe—Atheist, and Morning Star of English Drama." The admission is free to all seats, and, as Mr. Foote gives all Wednesday evening lectures gratuitously, the whole of the collection will go into the N.S.S. exchequer. Freethinkers, we hope, will not only attend themselves, but bring their more orthodox friends on the occasions.

CHILDREN'S PARTY.

BEFORE this reaches the eyes of the readers of this journal the party will be a thing of the past. We anticipate a most excellent evening of enjoyment for the little ones; but, up to the present, we have not sufficient money to meet the expenses. Since my last list the following donations have been received: J. Mosenthal, 5s.; Philethesis, 1s.; E. Cruttenden, 1s. 4½d.; Mrs. Marks, 5s.; R. Parsons, 2s.; H. S. S., 10s.; G. Wenborn, 5s.; R. Malster, 2s.; W. Cabell, 2s. 6d.; W. L. B., 10s.; A. Lewis, 2s. 6d.; J. Robertson, 2s. 6d.; C. Thomas, 10s.; C. C. Andrews, 5s.; R. H. Side, 5s.; J. Brown, 6d.; Collected at Hall of Science, £2; C. Watts, 5s.; Collected by T. Wilmot, 3s. 6d.; J. Burrell, 3s.; Mrs. Courtney, 3s. 3d.; Mrs. Henderson, 8s. 10d.; Mrs. Sleigh, 2s. 11d.; H. Fox, 4s. 1d.; Miss K. Ward, 4s.; Mrs. Standring, 8s.; Bobby Forder, 5s. 10d.; Jimmy Forder, 5s. 10d.; Miss Robins, 14s. 9d.; Miss A. Brown, 10s.; Mrs. Casey, 3s.; Mrs. Fleming, 3s. 6d.; Mrs. Hindeman, 4s. 3d.; Mr. Guest, 1s.; M. A. M., 5s. Goods and cake sent will be acknowledged next week.

ROBERT FORDER, Treasurer.

MAX O'RELL AND THE PARSON.

MAX O'RELL tells this story about himself:—"I had just returned to the hotel, after having given a lecture on the Scotch at the town hall. I was half undressed when there came a knock at my bedroom door. It was a waiter bearing a card. The Presbyterian minister of the town wished to see me at once on a very urgent matter. I bid the waiter show the reverend gentleman up. A man of about fifty, in the usual black ecclesiastical coat and white cravat, and holding a soft felt hat, appeared in the doorway, wearing a sad face. I recognised him as one of my audience that evening. 'Excuse my costume,' I began, 'but you wished to speak to me on urgent business, and I thought best not to make you wait.' 'There is nothing the matter with your dress,' he broke in; 'this is not an affair of the body, but of the soul. I have come to pray for you.' I was taken a little by surprise, and felt a trifle discountenanced; but I quickly regained my composure. 'Why, certainly,' I said, 'with the greatest pleasure, if it can make you happy.' He knelt, put his elbows on the bed, buried his head in his hands, and began: 'Lord, this man whom thou seest near me is not a sinful man; he is suffering from the evil of the century; he has not been touched by thy grace; he is a stranger, come from a country where religion is turned to ridicule. Grant that his travel through our godly lands may bring him into the narrow way that leads to everlasting life.' The prayer, most of which I spare you, lasted at least ten minutes. When he had finished, my visitor rose and held out his hand. I shook it. 'And now,' said I, 'allow me to pray for you.' He signified consent by a movement of the hand. I did not go on my knees, but with all the fervor that is in me I cried: 'Lord, this man whom thou seest beside me is not a sinful man. Have mercy upon him, for he is a Pharisee, who doubts not for one moment, and that without knowing me, that he is better than I. Thou who has sent in vain thy son on earth to cast out the Pharisee, let thy grace descend upon this one; teach him that the foremost Christian virtue is charity, and that the greatest charity is that which teaches us that we are no better than our brethren. This man is blinded by pride; convince him, open his eyes, pity him, and forgive him, as I forgive him. Amen.' I looked at my good Presbyterian. He was rooted to the floor, amazement written on his face. I once more took his hand and shook it. 'And now,' said I, 'we are quits. Good night.' He went away somewhat abashed, pocketing the mild reproof."

A story is told in Fairplay of a north-country shipowner, whose vessel was detained in the Danube, and wired his captain, "Move heaven and earth to get the steamer away by Saturday." The reply he received was to the following effect: "Heaven unknown in these parts, earth played out; but hope, by playing the devil and moving hell, to get her away by Monday."

Digitized by Google

SOME LITTLE-KNOWN FREETHINKERS.—II.

DR. THOMAS INMAN.

IT was through Myles McSweeney that I became epistolarily acquainted with the author of Ancient Faiths Embodied in Ancient Names. Myles recommended me to the Doctor to make some drawings to illustrate his works; and this led to a good deal of frank correspondence, in which the Doctor treated me as one very much older than I then was. All bore on his discoveries of the evidences of phallic worship, which, as is often the case with discoverers, Dr. Inman pressed beyond their real importance. I have since learned that neither McSweeney nor Dr. Inman was original in the detection of phallicism as underlying Christianity. Earlier even than Payne Knight, Higgins, or Dulaure, was a Kabbalist crank in the last century, a Frenchman, whose work on Les Mystéres du Christianisme, published in 1771, is certainly one of the most curious volumes it has ever been my lot to look into. The Old and the New Testaments, and the seven sacraments of the Romish Church, are interpreted phallically. Dr. Inman had, however, arrived at his view independently, though he doubtless derived some hints from the Anacalypsis of Godfrey Higgins. His researches were originally into the meanings of names, and the mere inquiry why John was convertible into Jack led to some extraordinary results.

Dr. Inman was a Liverpool physician of high standing. He was born at Leicester, January 27th, 1820, and his father became director of the Bank of Liverpool, and his brother founded the famous shipping firm of that port. Educated at King's College and London University, he took the degrees of B.A. and M.D., settling at Liverpool, where he became lecturer on botany, medical jurisprudence, therapeutics, and the principles and practice of medicine. He was for some time President of the Liverpool Literary and Philosophical Society, and was physician to the Royal Infirmary of that city. He wrote several medical works, and his volumes on The Preservation of Health and The Restoration of Health are still worth reading. Dr. Inman was original-minded in his profession. He published a work, entitled Foundations for a New Theory of Medicine (1861), in which he regarded all disease as arising from a deficiency of vital force; and in his treatment he frankly placed dietetics before drugs, which, he pointed out, were chiefly respected because they deranged the vital force. He stated, as the conclusion of his large medical experience, that "the physician could do harm, but that his power for good was limited." But it was chiefly as an archæologist that his Freethought manifested itself. In his principal work, Ancient Faiths Embodied in Ancient Names, he examines all the cognomens in the Bible, eliciting many curious facts that lie behind those names, and showing there was no essential difference between the faith of the Hebrews and that of other Semites. Incidentally he notices that the alleged sojourn in Egypt left no evidence of having modified Israelitish language, names, or faith. He held that biblical testimony itself disproved the story of the sojourn in Egypt.

In my essay on "Phallic Worship among the Jews," in Bible Studies, I have given my opinion on the views of Dr. Inman more fully than is possible here; and I shall therefore at once pass to his less known Freethought work, Ancient Faiths and Modern, which was published at New York, though printed at Edinburgh, in the year of his death (1876). In the preface he tells how he came to doubt the nostrums both of physical and spiritual doctors. He says: "The physician, when professing to cure, has too often assisted disease to kill; and he who has the cure of souls has invented plans to make believers in his doctrine miserable. The first fills his coffers proportionately to the extent to which he can protract recovery; the second becomes rich in proportion to the success with which he multiplies mental terrors, and then sells repose. The one enfeebles the body, the other cripples the intellect, and aggravates envy, hatred, and malice." On examination, he says, "I found that in every nation there have been, and still are, good men and bad, gentle and brutal, thoughtful and ignorant; that the best men of Paganism—Buddha, for example—did not lose by comparison with the brightest lights of Christianity; and that such large cities as London and Paris have as much vice within them as ancient Rome or modern Calcutta. I found, moreover, that there is a culpable coloring in the accounts given by Christian travellers of Pagan countries. The clerical pen rests invariably and strongly upon the bad points of every heathen cult, and contrasts them with the best elements of Christianity." Dr. Inman entered considerably into the question of the rival merits of Christianity and Buddhism, and gave his preference to the latter as a non-persecuting system, and as containing no obscene stories such as those in the Bible. He says:—

"If we now ask ourselves what parts of the Bible most offend sense of propriety, we should answer that they are its untenable cosmogony; its preposterous accounts of the longevity of the men reported as being the earliest formed; the legend of the flood; the origin of the rainbow; the tales of Moses, Pharaoh, the plagues of Egypt, the sojourn in the desert, the capture of Canaan, the miraculous battles. We would wholly expunge the fabulous account of Elijah and Elisha; the ravings after vengeance uttered by the prophets; the apocryphal episodes described in the books of Jonah and Daniel; every obscene story and disgusting speech or writing, whether uttered as a threat against Israel or his enemies. In like manner, we would wish to expunge from the teaching of Jesus everything relating to the immediate destruction of the world, everything connected with community of goods, the advantages of beggary, and the potency of faith and prayer. We would suppress every miracle, and say nothing of a resurrection of the dead Jesus. We would equally abandon any attempt to describe Heaven or Hell or any immediate state. When all these were removed from the Bible, we positively should have very little left, except a certain amount of morality which is sound, and a large portion which is radically bad."

Ancient Faiths and Modern, like all of Dr. Inman's works, abounds in a variety of learning culled from all quarters. He concludes the book with a challenge to the champions of orthodoxy. He says:—

"I defy scholars to prove that the Israelites were ever, as a body, in Egypt; that they were delivered therefrom by Moses; that the people wandered during forty years 'in the desert,' received a code of laws from Jehovah on Sinai, and were, in any sense whatever of the words, 'the chosen people of God.'

"I assert that the whole history of the Old Testament is untrue, with the exception of a few parts which tell of unimportant events—e.g., it is probable that the Jews fought with their neighbors, as the Swiss have done in modern days; but I do not believe the tale about Samson, any more than that of William Tell.

"I assert that there is not a single true prophecy in the whole Bible which can be proved to have been written before the event to which it is assumed to point, or which is superior, in any way, to the oracles delivered in various ancient lands.

"I assert that the whole of what is called the Mosaic law had no existence in the days of David, Solomon and the early Hebrew chieftains or kings, if they are thought to deserve the title."

This was plain and to the point, and I am not aware of any orthodox champion who has successfully taken up his challenge on these topics.

In 1871 Dr. Inman retired from practice, and resided at Clifton, near Bristol, where he died on May 3, 1876. He was a man of handsome presence, and his genial temperament made him generally popular, despite his outspoken heresy. His antiquarian works will long hold a distinguished place in the cabinets of the curious. J. M. W.

A Waning Faith.

Notwithstanding the claims of the paid attorneys of Christianity to the contrary, the fact remains that this great system of religion has lost its grip on the intelligence of the people, and is fast assuming its rightful position among the fossil and exploded chimeras of the past. It is no longer a living force amongst the well balanced of mankind, but excites only ridicule and contempt where once it shook the brain of man with terror and despair.

Whoever doubts the truth of this assertion has only to follow the great Agnostic, Ingersoll, in his triumphant tour of the United States to have this doubt dispelled. Night after night his most radical and stinging utterances against Christianity are applauded by admiring thousands, who have paid regular theatre prices for the privilege of seeing this old theological scarecrow riddled by the shafts of satire, wit, and logic. Christianity will, of course, for many years, continue to exercise its baneful influence in the land; but it is patent to the most casual observer that its work henceforth will become more and more the spasmodic twitching of a dying serpent, until at last its workings fade entirely in the lethargy of death.—The Boston Investigator.

How to Help Us.

(1) Get your newsagent to take a few copies of the Freethinker and try to sell them, guaranteeing to take the copies that remain unsold.

(2) Take an extra copy (or more), and circulate it among your acquaintances.

(3) Leave a copy of the Freethinker now and then in the train, the car, or the omnibus.

(4) Display, or get displayed, one of our contents-sheets, which are of a convenient size for the purpose. Mr. Forder will send them on application.

(5) Distribute some of our cheap tracts in your walks abroad, at public meetings, or among the audiences around street-corner preachers.

(6) Get your newsagent to exhibit the Freethinker in the window.

Digitized by Google

RELIGIOUS IMMORALITY.

The following article, signed J. B., which appeared in a recent number of the Christian World, shows how far rational secular considerations are penetrating the religious world. J. B. says: "Religion in this country is, with a great proportion of the fashionable, the monied, and the influential classes, identified with the Established Church. This great institution has a teaching body of over twenty thousand clergy. Leaving for the moment the question of the relationship of the Church to its laity, let us consider what it has to say to this body of teachers, and especially to the new generation from whom its future ministerial recruits are to be drawn.

"It comes to them with both hands full. In the one are the statements of belief which are to be accepted, signed, and publicly taught. These, to the scientifically educated consciousness of the nineteenth century, are somewhat curious reading. They include a fourth century presentation of the most detailed kind as to the Being of God and the Incarnation and person of Christ, the acceptance of every part of which is to be declared necessary to salvation; a doctrine about Adam and the Fall, framed certainly not in view of modern discoveries concerning the ascent of man; a doctrine of regeneration by baptism, and another affirming the Divine choice of a certain number of persons to salvation, with its inevitable though unexpressed corollary of the leaving over of the rest of the human race to eternal perdition.

"There are over twenty thousand more or less educated men in England who have solemnly bound themselves, in full view of present-day knowledge, to hold and teach all this, and much more of a like kind, as representing the absolute truth concerning God, man, and the universe. These have actually taken the leap, and it is, perhaps useless to inquire into the mental processes by which they brought themselves to this position. It will be more profitable to study the Church's method with the new generation from which she expects to get her future teachers. Let us imagine the case of a theological neophyte who proposes to himself the career of a minister of religion, and to whom she makes her advances. She has presented him with the contents of one of her two full hands. As he ponders this fourth-century system of the universe, and asks himself whether the modern knowledge of human origins, the modern science of comparative religions, and the modern philosophy of the Divine Self-manifestation in nature and in history are reconcilable at all points with the antique view to which he is asked to commit himself, there is offered to him a series of considerations of another order. The Church opens her other hand. Its contents are dignities, privileges, and social and religious distinction. She says to him: 'Accept my terms, and you pass at once to the sunny side of the ecclesiastical hedge. You shall receive a social consideration and precedence entirely beyond what your own moderate abilities alone would secure. If you have real ability, or have influence, I can promise you a dazzling perspective of preferment. You may bask in the sunshine of a court. You may receive the social and spiritual homage of a prince of the Church. If you refuse these terms, if you declare yourself unable to sign your adherence to my fourth-century system, make up your mind to ecclesiastical exile and to social ostracism. Be prepared for a career as a religious teacher in which every door to titles, honors, and preferments will be close barred, and where, whatever your talents or character, no recognition will be vouchsafed you in court, law, politics, or society.'

"The argument is undoubtedly a powerful one. With a certain order of minds it is sure to be a prevailing one. But let this further, however, be said about it, that it is a distinctly immoral one. What happens to our neophyte? In some cases he signs, while distinctly at issue with many of the things to which he is declaring his assent and consent, saying to himself that, after all, the thing is demanded by the present constitution in Church and State, that he is only doing what multitudes of better men have done, and that he signs as giving a general adhesion to the Church system, without including all its details. This position is regarded by many as entirely satisfactory. Perhaps it is a question of temperament; but there are other men who would rather cut off their right hand than, as they say to themselves, soil their honor by following such an example. In other cases the neophyte signs, accepting the Church's authority for the things to which he is giving his adhesion, and believing that he believes them. If we admit this man's sincerity, it will certainly be at the expense of our sense of his competence as a public religious teacher. The natural consequence of his attitude will be the shutting up of a mind which has pledged itself to the fourth-century scheme of things to any truth or fact which may seem to militate against it. If this attitude is not immoral, it is, at any rate, an offence of the gravest kind against the spirit of truth, and against the intellectual progress of the race."

J. B.'s indictment is directed only against the established clergy. But the Dissenting ministers are tarred with the same brush. The Rev. T. Moore, in his Dead Hand in the Free Churches, proves that the Nonconformists are pledged to doctrines they now no longer preach. Chapels, where the freest salvation is offered, are often endowed on condition of teaching strict Calvinism. In narrow Bibliolatry and subservience to the bigoted of their congregations the dissenting sky-pilots are, as a rule, even worse than the clergy.

HOW LONG?

In the trusting infant world
God was manifest in might;
Lightnings on the impious hurled,
Stood in Israel's wondering sight
A cloud by day, a pillar of fire by night.

Then the serried ranks he led,
And his arm in strength was shown,
And his children's hands were red
In the blood of foes o'erthrown;
In his path like leaves his enemies were strown.

Israel slept beneath his care;
And whene'er his children cried
He remembered him to spare,
And his wrath was turned aside
That in peace before his face they should abide.

Never now the lightnings blind;
Never falls consuming flame
On the man of evil mind,
On the citadels of shame;
Sin goes scatheless; evil scarcely knoweth blame.

Nowhere now in flood or fire,
Or in mountain or in wood,
Speaks the voice in love or ire—
Words by any understood:
Mute is all the air, the earth a solitude.

Unto whom is he revealed?
Who has heard his awful tones?
Now methinks our ears are sealed,
Or the crying of the stones
Drowns that voice in sounds that seem like human groans.

Darius Hystaspes.

The Church in the Middle Ages.

To meddle with things not included within the narrow comprehension of the medieval Church was the most heinous offence of which a human being could be guilty. Converse with evil spirits, or with science, in the days of the power of the Church, was punished with torture and death. It was the Church that put Galileo upon the rack, and burnt Giordano Bruno at the stake. Under priestly influence human intelligence sank to a level of pitiable brutishness. Learning came from the cloister, and took the form of superstition. Belief in witchcraft and in possession by unclean spirits was universal, and it was gravely argued that an animal might be guilty of heresy. People in all countries tormented themselves with interminable and unintelligible doctrinal discussions, and it was accounted meritorious to throw stones at a cock on Sunday, because since Peter's denial the cock was the Devil's bird.—"Pall Mall Magazine," January.

Fragments.

Civilisation civilises religion—not vice versa.

All the good in religion is not religion, but morality, benevolence, love, culture, music, art, etc., all antecedent and surviving any special religion.

How vain for a man, who did not live fifty or a hundred years ago, to believe he shall live during eternity "hereafter."

It is no harder task to prove that there is no heaven or "spirit world" than that there is no hell. Such localities are born of superstition, and impossible in the economy of nature.

It seems to me that a God who has made such a wretched failure of a world here (though, personally, I have no reason to complain, so far) can hardly be trusted to make a success of it "over there."—Otto Wettstein.

Digitized by Google

IS CHRISTIANITY PLAYED OUT?

"Hence, doubting spirit, cease thy troubled guest;
Believe, have faith, and God will do the rest."
So speaks the wise apologist for that
Which seems to be at present falling flat.
"Our Christ," the parson cries, "our Christ played out?
Away! 'tis hideous sin to raise a doubt.
If you suggest that such a thing is true,
In everlasting fires you're sure to stew.
We know the Church does not, and cannot, cope
With human ills; the parsons, clergy, Pope,
On earthly misery have naught to say,
But tune their harps to heaven's immortal lay.
'The earth's the Lord's,' the Bible tells us so;
He's thus responsible for earthly woe.
'Tis naught to us what ails the human scum,
If good subscriptions to our coffers come.
Our occupation 'tis to advertise,
And wealth amass as pilots to the skies.
With squabbles oft we draw the public eye,
And thus to 'draw' the public pocket try.
From suffering men our path is very wide;
We pass their troubles 'on the other side.'
The only matter that we care about
Is 'What's the richest crowd?'—with them we'll shout.
Distress in everything around we see;
Oh, Lord, may no distress abide in me!
Such is our pleasant, though p'rhaps selfish, song;
With happy hearts through life we jog along.
We preach the gospel, and to faith exhort;
And, though 'tis true salvation can't be bought,
Still all our worshippers we oft assure
The more they give, the Lord will bless the more."
Religion pays too well to be played out;
Whilst fools exist, so will the pious tout.

G. R.

An Illustration of Design.

Mr James B. Alexander gives in the Truthseeker the following instance of providential design: "There is a newly-discovered worm called the Filaria Nocturna, that gets into the blood of men (and probably other animals) in India. The embryos of this worm are in the water, and when it is drank are taken into his stomach. From the stomach they bore their way into the lymphatic vessels, where they become sexually mature, and reproduce a prodigious number of minute embryos enclosed in a delicate shell. These pass from the lymphatics into the blood, and during the day are quiet and not easily detected, but are active at night. Now the mosquito, also a nocturnal animal, comes along, and, sucking the blood of her victim, transfers some of these embryos to her own stomach, where they grow. When the mosquito retires to water where she lays her eggs and dies, these embryos are scattered in the water, where they swim about and never develop any further, unless some drinker of the water swallows them, and so gives them a chance to produce a new generation. Providence has thus very ingeniously arranged this partnership between men and mosquitos for the benefit of the Filaria Nocturna. They are sometimes injurious to men, but not unless they are in great numbers."

Other-Worldliness.

I once asked Tom Clarkson whether he ever thought of his probable fate in the next world, to which he replied: "How can I? I think only of the slaves in Barbadoes!" Does Mr. Wilberforce care a farthing for the slaves in the West Indies, or if they were all at the Devil, so that his soul were saved?

As there is a worldliness, or the too much of this life, so there is another worldliness, or rather, other-worldliness, equally hateful and selfish with this-worldliness.—S. T. Coleridge.

I would rather go to the forest, far away, and build me a little cabin—build it myself—and daub it with clay, and live there with my wife and children; and have a winding path leading down to the spring where the water bubbles out, day and night, whispering a poem to the white pebbles from the heart of the earth; a little hut with some hollyhocks at the corner, with their bannered bosoms open to the sun, and a thrush in the air like a winged joy. I would rather live there and have some lattice-work across the window, so that the sunlight would fall checkered on the babe in the cradle. I would rather live there, with my soul erect and free, than in a palace of gold, and wear a crown of imperial power, and feel that I was superstition's cringing slave, and dare not speak my honest thought.—R. G. Ingersoll

BOOK CHAT.

Dr. J. Gilchrist has translated Professor Haeckel's Confession of Faith. It is published by Adam and Charles Black, and is entitled Monism as Connecting Religion and Science: The Confession of Faith of a Man of Science. We hope to give our readers further particulars shortly.

* * *

Cope, the Universal Soother, is the title of a brochure of verse issued at the office of Cope's Tobacco Plant, Lord Nelson-street, Liverpool. Though an advertisement, the illustrations by Pipeshank, and verses by Leland, Ashby Sterry, Manville Fenn, H. Lloyd, J. Brander Matthews, etc., are excellent, and will be treasured by lovers of good literature, even if anti-tobacconists. Two of the poems are by R. Le Gallienne, whence we conclude that the "Religion of a Literary Man" includes the rite of incense offering.

* * *

Miss Hester Pengelly, of Lamorna, Torquay, is engaged on a memoir of her father, the late W. Pengelly, F.R.S., whose geological and antiquarian researches at Kent's Hole did so much to enlarge ordinary ideas of human antiquity. Professor Bonney will supply a summary of Mr. Pengelly's scientific work.

* * *

Mr. W. M. Salter, one of the leaders of the American Society for Ethical Culture, has published at Philadelphia the first number of a new periodical, called The Cause.

* * *

In vol. xli., just issued, of the National Dictionary of Biography the account of William Nicholson, the chemist, man of science, and inventor (1753–1815), who conducted the British Encyclopædia and the Journal of Natural Philosophy, makes no mention that he was the author of Doubts of Infidels (1781)—a work republished by Carlile and also by Watson—although the fact is stated on good authority by Mr. Wheeler in his Biographical Dictionary of Freethinkers. The lives of Feargus O'Connor and George Odger are both brief, but will be read with interest by old Radicals.

* * *

The second volume of A Concise History of Religion, by F. J. Gould, is now published by Watts & Co. This volume deals with Judaism and the Jewish sacred literature, with a chapter on the religious environment of early Christianity. We have not yet examined the work with the care it demands, but we recommended the previous volume, and those who possess volume one will also be pleased to read its successor.

* * *

In the third volume of English Prose Selections, edited by Henry Craik, the editor, in giving a selection from the old Anglo-Dutch Freethinker, Bernard Mandeville, says he "deserves a place in the division of English prose-history which includes Latimer and Bunyan, Defoe and Cobbett."

PROFANE JOKES.

Boston Girl—"Do you know, I fancy heaven will be much like Boston." Chicago Girl—"Why? Because there will not be men enough there to go around?"

Tommy—"Does God make everybody, mamma?" Mamma—"Yes." Tommy—"Does he have a pattern?" Mamma—"Yes; the Bible says we are made like himself." Tommy—"Humph! I guess he must follow that pattern by his eye."

Mamma—"What was the sermon about this morning, Willie?" Willie—"Well, I guess it was tellin' about cash boys." Mamma—"What did the minister say about them?" Willie—"Nothin', but his text was, 'All the days of my appointed time will I wait till my change come.'"

Sunday-school Teacher—"The prodigal son suffered dreadfully for his wickedness in running away from home; but when he returned his father forgave him and killed the fatted calf." The New Pupil—"But what did they kill the fatted calf for? Hadn't he stayed at home all the time?"

The contradictions of popular theology are not unperceived by the child mind. A little girl four and a half years old lately said: "Papa, who made Mary and Joseph?" "Why God, of course." "Oh, no, papa, that could not be; for, if Jesus is God, and Mary is Jesus's mother, how could God make his own mother?" There are millions of grown-up people, however, who ought to possess sharper wits than this infant, who still place implicit faith in this infantile fallacy.

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY LECTURE NOTICES, ETC.

[Notices of Lectures, etc., must reach us by first post on Tuesday, and be marked "Lecture Notice," if not sent on post-card.]

LONDON.

HALL OF SCIENCE (142 Old-street, E.C.): 11.30, a lecture. (Free.) 6.30, musical selections; 7, Charles Watts, "Religion with and without Theology." (Admission free; reserved seats 3d. and 6d.) Wednesday, at 8.30, G. W. Foote, "Kit Marlowe—Atheist, and Morning Star of English Drama."

BATTERSEA SECULAR HALL (back of Battersea Park Station): 7.30, Robert Forder, "Christ and the Labor Party." (Admission 2d. and 4d.) Tuesday and Friday, at 8, dancing.

CAMBERWELL (North Camberwell Hall, 61 New Church-road): 7.30, Benjamin Dent, "Has Man Fallen?" (Preceded by vocal and instrumental music.) Tuesday, Feb. 5, at 8.30, debate between S. E. Easton and W. S. Clarke, "Secularism or Christianity: Which is the Better Calculated to Benefit Mankind?" (Free.) Thursday, at 7.30, science classes. (Free.)

ISLINGTON (Liberal and Radical Association Committee Rooms, Upper-street, near Vestry Hall): Thursday, January 31, at 8, A. Guest, "Is the Bible a Safe Guide?"

MILTON HALL (Hawley-crescent, 89 Kentish Town-road): 7.30, Dr. F. J. Furnivall, "Shakespeare." (Free.)

WEST LONDON ETHICAL SOCIETY (Princes' Hall, Piccadilly): 11.15, Sidney Webb, "The Making of London."

WOOD GREEN: 7, members' meeting at secretary's house, 71 Gladstone-avenue.

COUNTRY.

BIRMINGHAM (Coffee House, corner of Broad-street): Thursdays, at 8, papers, discussions, etc.

BLACKBURN: 3, members' meeting at secretary's house.

BRISTOL (Shepherds' Hall, Old Market-street): 7, vocal and instrumental music, recitations, and readings.

DUNDEE (City Assembly Rooms): 11, discussion—"Individualism"; 1, music class; 2.30, "The Prophecies Concerning Christ," by a Christian; 3, elocution class; 6.30, concert.

GLASGOW (Ex-Mission Hall, 110 Brunswick-street): 11.30, Thomas Ritchie, "Criticism of Gospel History"; 6.30, "Agnosticism and Theology." (Free.)

HULL (St. George's Hall, Storey-street): 7, Mr. Sketchley, "The Relation of Freethought to Socialism."

LIVERPOOL (Oddfellows' Hall, St. Anne-street): 3, philosophy class—"Kant" (Ernest Newman); 7, L. Bergmann, B.Sc., "Macbeth."

MANCHESTER SECULAR HALL (Rusholme-road, All Saints): 11, G. W. Foote, "Is Religion the Cause of Progress?" 3, "Angels"; 6.30, "God's in His Heaven."

PLYMOUTH (Democratic Club, Whimple-street): 7, Mr. Chubb, "The God of the Bible."

ROCHDALE (Working Men's College, 4 Acker-street); 6.30, Sam Standring, "Thomas Paine's Death bed."

SHEFFIELD SECULAR SOCIETY (Hall of Science, Rockingham-street): 7, Joseph Pearson, "My Religion, by Count Tolstoi—A Review."

SOUTH SHIELDS (Thornton's Variety Hall, Union-lane): 11, C. H. Reynolds, "Freethought Essential to Social Progress."

STOCKTON (Borough Hall Dining-room): Monday, February 4, at 7, C. Cohen, "The Fate of Religion." (3d. and 6d.)

Lecturers' Engagements.

C. COHEN, 12 Merchant-street, Bow-road, London, E.—All Sundays until April, 1895, South Shields.

STANLEY JONES, 53 Marlborough-road, Holloway, London, N.—Feb. 3, Edinburgh; 10, Dundee. March 10, Sheffield.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Credon-road, Rotherhithe, London, S.E.—Feb. 3 New Brompton.

SAM STANDRING, 6 Bury-road, Rochdale.—Feb. 10, Bradford; 17 Failsworth. March 26 and 27, Sheffield.

24 pp., in neat wrapper, price 3d., by post 3½d.,

WHY DO RIGHT?

A SECULARIST'S ANSWER.

BY

CHARLES WATTS.

London: Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Works by Colonel R. G. Ingersoll.

SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES. The only complete edition in England. Accurate as Colenso, and fascinating as a novel. 132 pp. 1s. Superior paper, cloth 1s. 6d.

DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT. A Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy. 6d.

THE GODS. 6d.

REPLY TO GLADSTONE. With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler. 4d.

ROME OR REASON? A Reply to Cardinal Manning. 4d.

CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS. 3d.

ORATION ON WALT WHITMAN. 3d.

ORATION ON VOLTAIRE. 3d.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. 3d.

PAINE THE PIONEER. 2d.

HUMANITY'S DEBT TO THOMAS PAINE. 2d.

ERNEST RENAN AND JESUS CHRIST. 2d.

TRUE RELIGION. 2d.

THE THREE PHILANTHROPISTS. 2d.

LOVE THE REDEEMER. 2d.

GOD AND THE STATE. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part I. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part II. 2d.

FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Dr. Field. 2d.

GOD AND MAN. Second reply to Dr. Field. 2d.

THE DYING CREED. 2d.

THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION. A Discussion with the Hon. F. D. Coudert and Gov. S. L. Woodford 2d.

THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH. 2d.

ART AND MORALITY. 2d.

DO I BLASPHEME? 2d.

THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE. 2d.

SOCIAL SALVATION. 2d.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE. An Agnostic's View. 2d.

SKULLS. 2d.

THE GREAT MISTAKE. 1d.

LIVE TOPICS. 1d.

MYTH AND MIRACLE. 1d.

REAL BLASPHEMY. 1d.

REPAIRING THE IDOLS. 1d.

CHRIST AND MIRACLES. 1d.

CREEDS & SPIRITUALITY. 1d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street E.C.

THOMAS PAINE'S WORKS.

The Age of Reason. New edition, with Preface by G. W. FOOTE. 1s.

Miscellaneous Theological Works. 1s.

Complete Theological Works. (Including the Age of Reason.) Cloth, 2s. 6d.

The Rights of Man. Centenary edition. With a Political Biography by J. M. WHEELER. 1s.; bound in cloth, 2s.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

THE BIRTH OF CHRIST

A CHAPTER FROM

Strauss's Original "Life of Jesus."

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY

G. W. FOOTE.

(A Most Thorough Analysis and Exposure of the Gospel Story by a Master Hand.)

Price Sixpence.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Now Ready, Price Twopence,

IS SUICIDE A SIN?

BY

COLONEL INGERSOLL.

Together with the Reply of MONSIGNOR DUCEY.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price 2s. 6d.,

THE WITNESS OF ASSYRIA;

OR,

THE BIBLE CONTRASTED WITH THE MONUMENTS.

By CHILPERIC EDWARDS.

"The work has a full index, and is in every respect a valuable one."—Freethinker.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

ONE or TWO ROOMS to Let, Furnished or Unfurnished. Freethinkers preferred. J. K. van Breugham, 363 Compton-buildings, Goswell-road, E.C.

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each, upper or lower set, £1. Best quality, 4s. each, upper or lower, £2, completed in four hours when required; repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum 7s. 6d. each, on 18 ct. gold 5s., stopping 2s. 6d., extraction 1s., painless by gas, 5s.

TO FREETHINKERS, Ladies and Gentlemen requiring SUPERIOR CUT GARMENTS at moderate prices. First-class Style and Fit Guaranteed.—H. HAMPTON, Artists' Tailor, 14 Great Castle-street, W. Three doors from Regent-street. [Patronised by leading Freethinkers.]

FREETHINKER TRACTS

Sixpence per Hundred.

MARRIOTT, CLOTHIER,

311 EDGWARE ROAD, W., near Metropolitan Music Hall (same side), six doors from Church-street. TROUSERS, good wear, 5s. 9d., 7s. 6d., and 9s. 6d.; Blacks, 7s. 6d. and 10s. 6d. Thirty sizes kept in stock. OVERCOATS from 12s. 6d.

MARGATE.—TERRACE HOTEL, Marine Drive. Bed and Breakfast from 2s. 6d. A large room to seat 100. Beanfeasts and other parties liberally treated.

LIFE IN AN ASYLUM.—Revelation Explained. Extraordinary Freaks of Monomaniacs.—From the publisher of this paper, or direct from F. Brett, Pilgrim-street, E.C. Seven stamps.

Digitized by Google

Colonel Ingersoll's Great New Lecture

ABOUT THE HOLY BIBLE

Price Sixpence.

London R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

6d. ☞ NOW READY ☜ 6d.

THE

SECULAR ALMANACK

For 1895.

Altered and Enlarged. Finely-Designed Cover.

EDITED BY

G. W. FOOTE & J. M. WHEELER.

CONTENTS: Progress of Freethought; by G. W. Foote—This World; by J. M. Wheeler—Heroes in the Service of Man; by Charles Watts—Dod Grile—A Wish; by Matthew Arnold—The Abducted Female Infidel—Farquhar of Netherton—Bits from Selden's "Table Talk"—Jeremy Bentham on Inspiration—Abou-ben Adhem and the Angel—Man's Soul his God—The Sacred Books of the World—The Dear God—What have Unbelievers Done for the World?—Information Concerning Freethought Work and Organisation—Lecturers, etc.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

W. J. Rendell's "Wife's Friend"

Recommended by Mrs. Besant in Law of Population, p. 22, and Dr. Allbutt in Wife's Handbook, p. 51. Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell-street, Clerkenwell; 2s. per doz., post free (reduction in larger quantities). For particulars send stamped envelope.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

BEWARE of useless imitations substituted by some dealers and chemists, the words "Rendell & Co." and "J. W. Rendell" being speciously and plausibly introduced to deceive the public.

LOOK FOR AUTOGRAPH REGISTERED TRADE MARK

W. J. Rendell

No. 182,688.

IN Red INK ON EACH BOX, WITHOUT WHICH NONE ARE GENUINE.

Higginson's Syringe, with Vertical and Reverse Current, 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 5s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. Dr. Allbutt's Quinine Powders, 8s. per doz. All prices post free.

W. J. RENDELL, 15 Chadwell-st., Clerkenwell, E.C.

THE BEST BOOK

ON NEO-MALTHUSIANISM IS, I BELIEVE,

TRUE MORALITY, or THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF NEO-MALTHUSIANISM.

By J. R. HOLMES, M.M.L., M.V.S., M.N.S.S.

160 pages, with portrait and autograph, bound in cloth, gilt lettered. Price 1s., post free.

 In order to bring the information within the reach of the poor, the most important parts of the book are issued in a pamphlet of 112 pages at ONE PENNY, post free 2d. Copies of the pamphlet for distribution 1s. a dozen post free.

The National Reformer of 4th September, 1892, says: "Mr Holmes' pamphlet . . . is an almost unexceptionable statement of the Neo-Malthusian theory and practice . . . and throughout appeals to moral feeling. . . . The special value of Mr. Holmes' service to the Neo-Malthusian cause and to human well-being generally is just his combination in his pamphlet of a plain statement of the physical and moral need for family limitation with a plain account of the means by which it can be secured, and an offer to all concerned of the requisites at the lowest possible prices."

The Council of the Malthusian League, Dr. Drysdale, Dr. Allbutt, and others have also spoken of it in very high terms.

The Trade supplied by R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C. Other orders should be sent to the author.

J. R. HOLMES, HANNEY, WANTAGE, BERKS.

Works by G. W. Foote.

Flowers of Freethought. First Series. 221 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Flowers of Freethought. Second Series. 302 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Bible Heroes. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Letters to the Clergy. First Series. 128 pp., 1s.

The Grand Old Book. A Reply to the Grand Old Man. An exhaustive answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture." 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Christianity and Secularism. Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Is Socialism Sound? Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 2s.

Infidel Death-Beds. Second edition, much enlarged, 8d. On superfine paper, in cloth, 1s. 3d.

Darwin on God. 6d.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s.

Will Christ Save Us? A Thorough Examination of the Claims of Jesus Christ to be considered the Savior of the World. 6d.

Reminiscences of Charles Bradlaugh. 6d.

A Defence of Free Speech. Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes. 4d.

Comic Sermons and Other Fantasias. 8d.

Rome or Atheism—the Great Alternative. 3d.

Letters to Jesus Christ. 4d.

Interview with the Devil. 2d.

Philosophy of Secularism. 3d.

Atheism and Morality. 2d.

My Resurrection. A Missing Chapter from the Gospel of Matthew, discovered by G. W. Foote. 2d.

The Folly of Prayer. 2d.

Ingersollism Defended against Archdeacon Farrar. 2d.

Was Jesus Insane? A Searching Inquiry into the Mental Condition of the Prophet of Nazareth. 1d.

Christianity and Progress. A Reply to Mr. Gladstone. 2d.

The Impossible Creed. An Open Letter to Bishop Magee on the Sermon on the Mount. 2d.

What was Christ? A Reply to J. S. Mill. 2d.

The Bible God. 2d.

Salvation Syrup; or, Light on Darkest England. A Reply to General Booth. 2d.

Is the Bible Inspired? A Criticism on Lux Mundi. 1d.

The Dying Atheist. A Story. 1d.

The Rev. Hugh Price Hughes's Converted Atheist. A Lie in Five Chapters. 1d.

Mrs. Besant's Theosophy. A Candid Criticism. 2d.

Secularism and Theosophy. A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant. 2d.

The New Cagliostro. An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky. 2d.

Bible Romances. New Edition. Revised and largely re-written. (1) The Creation Story, 2d.; (2) Eve and the Apple, 1d.; (3) Cain and Abel, 1d.; (4) Noah's Flood, 2d.; (5) The Tower of Babel, 1d.; (6) Lot's Wife, 1d.; (7) The Ten Plagues, 1d.; (8) The Wandering Jews, 1d.; (9) Balaam's Ass, 1d.; (10) God in a Box, 1d.; (11) Jonah and the Whale, 1d.; (12) Bible Animals, 1d.; (13) A Virgin Mother, 2d.; (14) The Resurrection, 2d.; (15) The Crucifixion, 1d.; (16) John's Nightmare, 1d.

The Shadow of the Sword. A Moral and Statistical Essay on War. 2d.

Royal Paupers. Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty. 2d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price 1s. 6d.; superior edition, superfine paper, cloth, 2s., post free.

The Bible Handbook

FOR FREETHINKERS & INQUIRING CHRISTIANS.

BY

G. W. FOOTE AND W. P. BALL.

Sold also in separate parts as follows:—

1.—Bible Contradictions. The contradictions are printed in parallel columns. 4d.

2.—Bible Absurdities. All the chief absurdities from Genesis to Revelation, conveniently and strikingly arranged, with appropriate headlines, giving the point of each absurdity in a sentence. 4d.

3.—Bible Atrocities. Containing all the godly wickedness from Genesis to Revelation. Each infamy has a separate headline for easy reference. 4d.

4.—Bible Immoralities, Indecencies, Obscenities, Broken Promises, and Unfulfilled Prophecies. 4d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

EVERYBODY HAS NOT YET TRIED

One Pair of BLANKETS
One Pair of SHEETS
One QUILT
One TABLE-CLOTH

LOT 11

ALL FOR 21s. CARRIAGE PAID.

Which, with the 19 other Lots offered in the "Freethinker" of January 13, 1895,

CANNOT BE BEATEN.

Great Purchase of Scarboro-shaped MACKINTOSHES | 500 at 26s. each, worth 42s.

ALL GOOD SCOTCH TWEED AND THOROUGHLY WATERPROOF.

Give Length at Back, Chest and Waist Measures.

J. W. GOTT, 2 & 4 UNION-STREET, BRADFORD.

ASK YOUR GROCER
FOR THE
ROYAL CHISWICK TABLE JELLIES

EXPERTS OPINION—

"The Perfection of Jelly."

"Certainly far superior to all other Jelly Tablets—in transparency, strength, and in flavor utterly beyond comparison."

Sample Dozen—Pints 4s. 6d.: Quarts 8s., carriage free.

WHOLESALE TERMS ON APPLICATION.

TOUZEAU PARRIS & CO.,
ENFIELD WORKS, ACTON, LONDON, W.

Vol. I., cloth gilt, 216 pp., 2s. 6d., post free,

CRIMES OF CHRISTIANITY.

BY

G. W. FOOTE AND J. M. WHEELER.

Hundreds of exact References to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.

CHAPTERS:—1, Christ to Constantine; 2, Constantine to Hypatia; 3, Monkery; 4, Pious Forgeries; 5, Pious Frauds; 6, Rise of the Papacy; 7, Crimes of the Popes; 8, Persecution of the Jews; 9, The Crusades.

"The book is very carefully compiled, the references are given with exactitude, and the work is calculated to be of the greatest use to the opponents of Christianity."—C. BRADLAUGH, in National Reformer.

"The book is worth reading. It is fair, and, on the whole, correct."—Weekly Times.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

ALLINSON FOR HEALTH.

HOME CONSULTATIONS—10 a.m. to 1 p.m., 10s. 6d.; 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., 5s. Patients Visited.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. I. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on Management of Infancy, Health, Longevity, The Teeth, Tobacco, The Drink Question. Also the Cause and Cure of Disease, Constipation, Biliousness, Eczema, Blackheads and Pimples, Nervousness, Coughs and Colds, Chest Complaints, Deafness, Thread Worms, Long Worms, Tape Worms, The Itch, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. II. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on The Healing Power of Nature, Urine, Saline Starvation, the Hair and its Management, Sleep and Sleeplessness, Want of Energy, etc. Advice for the Thin, for the Stout; Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. III. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on No More Death, Management of Young Children, Unsuspected Domestic Poisons, How to Grow Tall, to Keep Warm, to Live One Hundred Years, to Improve the Memory, and to become Beautiful and Attractive. On the Cause and Cure of Stomach Troubles, Flatulence, Sleeplessness, Varicose Veins, Boils and Carbuncles, Sebaceous Tumors and Warts, Hay Fever, Winter Cough, Chilblains, Epilepsy, and on the Diseases Produced by Taking Mercury.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. IV. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on Hardening, Work and Overwork, Sugar and its Abuse, Milk as Food, the Tomato, Poultices, Quinine, Against the Knife, Arsenical Poisoning, Tonics, Against Stimulants in Disease, about Swallowing Pins and other Articles. Also Cure of Sunstroke, Dog Bites, Pains in the Back, Pediculi or Lice, Chicken-Pox, Synovitis or Inflammation of the Joints, Tonsilitis or Quinsy, Herpes (Tetter or Shingles), Erysipelas, Ulcer of the Stomach, Epidemic Influenza, Sciatica, Psoriasis or English Leprosy, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. V. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on Pure Water, The Mouth, Its Use and Abuse; Rules for the Aged, Training, Blood Letting, Nose Bleeding, Felon or Whitlow, Ingrowing Toenail, Gum Boil, Cold in the Head, a Red Nose, Flushing and Blushing, Toothache, Sore Mouth, St. Vitus' Dance, Goitre, Mumps, Inflamed Eyes and Eyelids, Fits, Fainting, Apoplexy, Spitting and Vomiting of Blood, Vomiting, Wounds, Burns, Scalds, Bruises, etc.

The Five Volumes, strongly and neatly bound, price 6s. 2d., post free.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.—An Eye Opener to Drug Takers.
RHEUMATISM: ITS CAUSE AND CURE. Post free for 2d.
DIET AND DIGESTION. Post free for 2d.
CONSUMPTION: ITS NATURAL CURE. Post free 2d.
All these Books, bound in One Vol., post free, 2s. 6d. Send Postal Order.

THREE PAMPHLETS FOR YOUNG MEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
A BOOK FOR MARRIED WOMEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

All communications to be addressed to—

DR. T. R. ALLINSON,
4 Spanish-place, Manchester-square, London, W.

Printed and Published by G. W. FOOTE, at 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

VOL. XV.—No. 6. SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1895. PRICE TWOPENCE.

MR. DAVIDSON'S BALLADS.

Ballads and Songs. By John Davidson. (London: John Lane.)

NEARLY thirty years have elapsed since Mr. Swinburne burst upon the world with his Songs and Ballads. He had made a reputation already with his Atalanta, and was one of the established "younger poets." Much was expected of him, but the heresy and eroticism of his new volume horrified the godly purists, and young poets became odious. Shelley had shocked the world, and Swinburne had done the same thing; and bards would have to be looked at askance until they were turning bald or grey—in short, until their fervor cooled down to the temperature of mediocrity, when they might be "safe" even for bread-and-butter misses. Poets, however, will not be old before their time. They have their youth, like the rest of us; and it is a longer youth, for the divine enthusiasm burns hotter within them, and survives more of the sad chills of experience. For this reason, if for no other, we talk of our "younger poets," though they have lived into middle-age; indeed, it may be said that "younger poets" are poets under fifty.

Of this junior fraternity of song the most conspicuous, perhaps, is Mr. John Davidson, whose work has more substance than that of his colleagues or rivals. We need not chant his praises in tones of exaggeration, like the "log-rollers" who "laud each other face to face" in the newspapers and reviews. We need not say, with Mr. Zangwill, that he is "prodigal of every divine gift," or, with Mr. Le Gallienne, resemble him to George Meredith. Still less need we declare, with one of his panegyrists, that "everything" he does "bears the hall-mark of originality." Originality is a rare article, and everything is "a large order." It is enough to say, in more sober language, that Mr. Davidson has done some beautiful and forceful work, that he thinks as well as feels, and that his poetry challenges the attention of those who want something more than mere "sugared rhymes" when they invest their time and money in a volume of verse.

Mr. Davidson's latest production is of interest to Freethinkers. It is full of the new spirit. It is bright and bold in its defiance of orthodoxy—even the orthodoxy of "advanced" Christians. We like the two couplets, which are a kind of dedication of the book. The first is "To My Friend"—

> What is between us two, we know:
> Shake hands and let the whole world go.

The second is "To My Enemy"—

> Unwilling friend, let not your spite abate:
> Help me with scorn, and strengthen me with hate.

The longest poem is called a Ballad, though written in blank verse. It describes the "making of a poet." The youth lived "far in the North" (Mr. Davidson is a Scotchman), where

> Time could take his ease,
> And Change hold holiday; where Old and New > Weltered upon the border of the world.

His father, a rigid Calvinist, has no sympathy with the youth's poetical and pagan dreams. He addresses him in this fashion:—

> My son, have you decided for the Lord?
> Your mother's heart and mine are exercised
> For your salvation. Will you turn to Christ?
> Now, young and strong, you hanker for the world;
> But think: the longest life must end at last,
> And then come Death and Judgment. Are you fit
> To meet your God before the great white throne?
> If on the instant Death should summon you,
> What doom would the Eternal Judge pronounce—
> "Depart from me," or "Sit on my right hand"?
> In life it is your privilege to choose,
> But after death you have no choice at all.
> Die unbelieving, and in endless woe
> You must believe throughout eternity.

The father's beseeching is helped by the mother's, who implores God to save her "foolish boy," who, at that very moment, saw not the Holy Ghost, but Aphrodite, rising from the sea, stepping inland, and evoking Adonis from his sepulchre.

> Then all the trees were lit with budding flames
> Of emerald, and all the meads and leas,
> Coverts and shady places, glades and dells,
> Odored and dimly stained with opening flowers,
> And loud with love-songs of impassioned birds,
> Became the shrine and hostel of the spring.

But a "savage faith works woe." His mother dies in anguish for his sins. To spare his father he professes confidence in Christ, and goes to kirk and takes the communion. But he walks again in the evening beside the purple firth, and dreams again his old dreams. He says to himself that consciousness is God, that he is God; and he will preach this gospel of emancipation to all the crushed and suffering slaves of earth. He tells this to his father, who is horrified, but at last finds an awful comfort in the thought that he will himself go to heaven, and experience there > the exceeding glory of delight,

> That shall entrance me with the constant thought
> Of how in Hell through all eternity
> My son performs the perfect will of God.

The stern Calvinist dies, and the son, kneeling beside him, suddenly thinks that, if it be terrible to fall into the hands of the living God, it is > much more dire

> To sicken face to face, like our sad age,
> Chained to an icy corpse of deity,
> Decked though it be and painted and embalmed.

Finally he dismisses the proud thought that man is God. To convert men to that faith would only found

> A new religion, bringing new offence,
> Setting the child against the father still.

He will have nothing to do with the "ruthless creeds that bathe the earth in blood." They are moods made into dogmas, petrifactions of metaphors. He will be a man apart, a poet, a mouthpiece for the souls of all men.

> And lo! to give me courage comes the dawn,
> Crimsoning the smoky east; and still the sun
> With fire-shod feet shall step from hill to hill
> Downward before the night; winter shall ply
> His ancient craft, soldering the years with ice;
> And spring appear, caught in a leafless brake,
> Breathless with wonder and the tears half-dried
> Upon her rosy cheek; summer shall come
> And waste his passion like a prodigal
> Right royally; and autumn spend her gold
> Free-handed as a harlot; men to know,
> Women to love are waiting everywhere.

"Free-handed as a harlot" is a daring but convincing simile, and the whole poem is powerful in conception and execution.

Digitized by Google

The next longest poem is "The Exodus from Houndsditch"—after Carlyle, the preacher of the old faith being obviously suggested by Irving. One verse will show this preacher's attitude :—

> I preach no system nebulous and new ;
> God is or is not : I have not to sell
> Cosmetics for the soul : I offer you
> The choice of Heaven or Hell.

A vision is vouchsafed to this apostle of Jehovah of the break-up of his creed and of what shall succeed it. A man appears carrying a massive cross, which he flings into a deep abyss, whereupon despair falls from him, and there descends from the skies a sound of "joy and clapping hands." Hell at last burns out, and the "parish Heaven" ceases with it ; earth and sky are left fair and clear, and the people sing a song of emancipation ; at which the preacher starts aghast and falls down dead, and no one heeds his disappearance.

The "Ballad of a Nun" has earned the denunciation of Mr. W. T. Stead, who calls it a consecration of unchastity. The heroine is doorkeeper of a convent, which stands on a high hill, looking across a duchy :—

> Where everlasting mountains flung
> Their shadows over tower and town.
>
> The jewels of their lofty snows
> In constellations flashed at night ;
> Above their crests the moon arose ;
> The deep earth shuddered with delight.
>
> Long ere she left her cloudy bed,
> Still dreaming in the orient land,
> On many a mountain's happy head
> Dawn lightly laid her rosy hand.
>
> The adventurous sun took Heaven by storm ;
> Clouds scattered largesses of rain ;
> The sounding cities, rich and warm,
> Smouldered and glittered in the plain.

These are superb verses, with a strong, sure touch in every line. The poor nun scourges herself to suppress the rebellion of her blood, until one night, when the Carnival is being kept in the nearest city, she flings off her robe, and resolves to "taste of love at last." After a period of wild indulgence she returns to the convent, where she has not been missed, for the Virgin Mary has assumed her personality and acted as door-keeper in her absence. The Virgin speaks—

> "You are sister to the mountains now,
> And sister to the day and night ;
> Sister to God." And on the brow
> She kissed her thrice, and left her sight.

Mr. Stead's denunciation of this poem is based upon a fallacy. He assumes that a poet writes affidavits and syllogistic arguments. Mr. Davidson vindicates "the flesh," as Christianity calls it, in the heightened, telling way of a poet. What he means is this, that woman is marked out for a wife and mother, and that those who deny their sex are farther off from nature than those who abuse it ; also that if nature is turned out of doors she is very likely to come in at the window. Mr. Davidson is not one to be frightened by the Steads of journalism. He is a true poet, and he will deliver his message—in the poet's way.

G. W. FOOTE.

DECEIVING THE VULGAR.

CHRISTIANITY in England has been intellectually undermined. What keeps it in place is its material establishment with wealth, power, and respectability ; and a chief buttress of this is the dread of imaginary issues, should it fall. There are a class of people who view with dismay the break up of supernatural beliefs. They fancy that, whether true or not, these beliefs form a good auxiliary to the policeman. Some even of those who have given up belief in supernaturalism themselves think it good enough for others.

They think truth is too good a thing to be made common. For, they say, people cannot be got to think. To most it is a painful process. Why not rather let the herd lie in their happy delusion of angels and saints, gods and devils, while the thinkers, teachers, and rulers remain a caste by themselves? This was a philosophy which suited the slavish conditions of the past, and which the era of democracy has not entirely destroyed, as anyone will find out who gets in intimate conversation with some members of "the Broad Church." They are fond of saying with Voltaire : "Ah, croyez-moi l'erreur a son mérite." And with him they exclaim : "If God did not exist, it would be necessary to invent Him!" which, as Miron remarked, is exactly what has been done.

A double doctrine has run through the history of Christianity. Jesus Christ is said to have taught in parables, "That seeing they may see, and not perceive ; and hearing they may hear, and not understand ; lest at any time they should be converted, and their sins should be forgiven them" (Mark iv. 12). Paul boasted of being all things to all men, of having been crafty and caught some with guile ; and he said that God would send strong delusions that they should believe a lie, that they might all be damned (1 Corinthians ix. 22 ; 2 Corinthians xii. 16 ; 2 Thessalonians ii. 11, 12 ; see, too, Romans iii. 7).

Bishop Ellicott admits (Cambridge Essays, p. 175) of the early ages of the Church : "They certainly cannot be pronounced free from the influence of pious frauds"; and Mosheim (cent. iii., sec. 10) speaks of their "disingenuous and vicious method of surprising their adversaries by artifices, and striking them down, as it were, by lies and fictions." Hermas, who is supposed to have been saluted by Paul (Romans xiv. 14), and whose Pastor was said by Origen to be inspired, and is included in the Sinaitic Codex of the New Testament, is represented as confessing to an angel that he never told the truth, whereupon his divine visitor informs him that, if he keeps the commandments now, "even the falsehoods which you formerly told in your transactions may come to be believed through the truthfulness of your present statements. For even they can become worthy of credit." Eusebius, the father of Church history, in the words of Gibbon, "indirectly confesses that he has related whatever might redound to the glory, and that he has suppressed all that could tend to the disgrace of religion."

It is curious and suggestive that the Society of Jesus has pre-eminence for the use of deception for the cause of religion. But Jesuitism, ad Majorem Dei Gloriem, is not confined to the followers of Ignatius Loyola. It is seen in the Anglican, who reads new interpretations into the Thirty-nine Articles, and who preaches the salvation of the heathen, although he has sworn that he holds "They also are to be had accursed that presume to say that every man shall be saved by the law or sect which he professeth, so that he be diligent to frame his life according to that law and the light of nature. For holy scripture doth set out unto us only the name of Jesus Christ, whereby men must be saved." It is seen in the Presbyterian, who, sworn to believe in the Westminster Confession of Faith, preaches a doctrine wholly at variance with that confession. It is seen in religionists of all kinds, who studiously conceal the facts they have learnt about the history of the Bible and of theological beliefs.

Of all forms of deception the most detestable is that practised on children. Parents, guardians, governesses, and teachers ward off undesired questions with the old fables, and the minds of the young are warped and stultified with nonsense which no mature and rational mind could entertain. But often the children grow up to see that their own teachers do not believe the fables, and the discovery gives a far greater shock to their faith than if a frank, truthful explanation had originally been given. The religious practice of deceiving the vulgar leads to a cowardly hypocrisy, which stands in the way of all rational improvement, because it will not squarely front the facts.

J. M. WHEELER.

POLITICS IN THE PULPIT.—"Before the choir begins," said the minister, "I should like to make a statement to the brethren. I am told that Deacon Jones is a candidate for the legislature. Now, under ordinary circumstances, I should advise the brethren to vote for him ; but, as I am a candidate for the same place myself, it would not be good politics to do so. You who are not afraid of hot weather hereafter can vote for Brother Jones ; but all who desire short sermons, small collections, and cool salvation must step over on my side."

Digitized by Google

WAS CHRIST A SOCIAL AND POLITICAL REFORMER?

(Continued from page 67.)

THE parable of "the rich man who set up greater barns," related in Luke (xii.), is another illustration of Christ's defective teachings in reference to the affairs of this life. The man in the parable proposed to enlarge his premises so that he might be able to put by increased stock of fruits and goods, and thus be in a position to take his "ease, eat, drink, and be merry." There does not appear to be any great crime in this, for he lacked room wherein to bestow his fruits, etc. (v. 17). Surely there could be no serious objection to making such careful provision for "a rainy day." Such conduct is frequently necessary to the advancement of personal comfort and general civilisation. Have not Christians in all ages, since their advent, done the same thing, when they have had the opportunity? Laying up treasures on earth, although forbidden by Christ, is often an effective precaution against starvation, and against being in old age the slave of charity. But for doing this very thing the man was told: "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee; then whose shall those things be which thou hast provided?" (v. 20). Jesus then said, "Therefore I say unto you, take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat," etc. Here we have the prominent Christian requirement of making the duties of this world subservient to the demands of a future existence put forth by one who is claimed as being a model social reformer. If it is alleged that Christ meant that the man in the parable should have distributed his fruits and goods rather than store them up, the reply is, the account does not say so. Why did not Christ, instead of making heaven the principal consideration, point out the evil influence of the monopoly of wealth upon human society? The social problems cannot be solved by indulging in speculations as to another world, of which we have had no experience. The principle sought to be enforced in this parable is evidently that the soul is of more importance than the body, and that heaven is of greater value than earth. Thoughtlessness of the things of time is directly encouraged by reference to the ravens: "For they neither sow nor reap; which neither have storehouse nor barn; and God feedeth them" (v. 24).

It is worthy of note that Jesus never once intimated throughout his career, either by direct statement or illustration, that this world was the noblest and most desirable dwelling-place for man, and that it was the home of social felicity and mutual happiness. His heart and home were in his Father's house, whither he went to prepare a place for his followers, to whom he gave a promise that he would come and receive them unto himself (John xiv. 2, 3). So little did Christ understand the philosophy of secular reform that when he condemned covetousness (which was very laudable upon his part) it was because he thought it interfered with the preparation for inhabiting "mansions in the skies," rather than in consequence of its effects upon homes on earth. He entirely overlooked the agencies that promote human comfort. The means that have been employed to produce and to advance civilisation received from him no matured consideration. If every word attributed to him had been left unuttered, not one feature of modern progress would be missing to-day. Let anyone carefully read, with an unbiassed mind, the four Gospels, and then ask himself the questions: What philosophic truth did Jesus propound? What scientific fact did he explain? What social problem did he solve? What political scheme did he unfold? The New Testament does not inform us. On the contrary, while other men, with less pretensions than himself, were active in giving the world their thoughts upon these great questions, Jesus remained silent in reference to them. It is no answer to say that to deal with the subjects was not his mission. For, if he came simply to talk about another world, at the sacrifice of the requirements of this, then my contention is made good that, whatever else he was, he certainly was no political and social reformer.

It appears to me that the gospel of Christ is a very poor one for any practical purposes, inasmuch as it never deals with the material comforts of human beings. It does not suggest any means by which the poor could obtain that power by which they could secure the amelioration of their sad condition. It is not here overlooked that Christ is credited with saying that those who sought the "Kingdom of God" should have food, drink, etc., added unto them (Luke xii.). But, unfortunately, experience teaches that such a promise cannot be relied upon, for it is too well known that many of those persons who occupied much of their time in seeking the kingdom of God remained destitute of the necessaries of life. It was during the prevalence of this superstitious belief, and of an unreasonable reliance upon Christ, that personal misery and intellectual sterility prevailed throughout the land. For many generations the indiscriminate followers of Jesus failed to give the world any new thought, or to establish any new political or social institution; and from the Church nothing of practical secular value emanated during the fifteen centuries of its uninterrupted reign. This, however, is not all that can be fairly urged upon this point. The followers of Christ not only failed to originate any social scheme for the good of general society themselves, but they did their utmost to crush those who did. It appears almost incredible that such persistent efforts were ever made to extinguish every new thought as those recorded of Christians, when they had the power to do as they pleased. New books were despised and destroyed, and new inventions were said to be the work of the Devil. True happiness cannot co-exist with physical slavery and mental serfdom, and yet, it must be repeated, Jesus did nothing to remove these evils. His apathy towards the institution of slavery is the more strange if we accept the authority of Grätz, that Christ was connected with the Essenes, and that, to some extent, he founded his system upon theirs. By that community slavery, we are told, was prohibited; yet we read that both bond and free were one in Christ Jesus. Is not this striking evidence that Jesus had no intention to seek the removal of this inhuman blot from the history of our race?

Those persons to-day who desire to establish a relationship between Socialism and Christianity dwell with much persistency upon Christ's views as to the division of property. But let us see what are the facts of the case. Jesus told those who were willing to leave their homes, families, and lands for his "sake and the Gospels" (Mark x.), that they should receive "an hundredfold" of each in this world, besides "eternal life in the world to come." Now, this is ridiculous in the extreme; for what possible advantage could it be to any one to have his or her relatives multiplied a hundredfold? Besides, where could Christ get either a hundred mothers to replace every one that had been forsaken, or a hundred acres of land to compensate for each one that had been given up? And even supposing he could do this, what becomes of the theory of despising landed possessions? Moreover, if the smaller number and quantity were a drawback, the larger must be more so. Further, there is but little self-denial involved in parting with ten acres of land to secure a thousand. It is really surprising that the Jews did not "catch on" in this matter. Probably they saw that it was all a sham, because Christ had no means of keeping his promise. Where were the houses, land, etc., to come from? Evidently Christ had none, for he appears to have been entirely destitute of all worldly goods, having "not where to lay his head" (Matthew viii. 20). Would not such an augmentation of property be antagonistic to the principle Jesus taught on another occasion, when he said "lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth" (Matthew vi.)? No marvel that his friends thought he was "beside himself" (Mark iii. 21), or that the Jews considered "he hath a devil, and is mad" (John x. 20), and that "neither did his brethren believe in him" (John vii. 5). If any man at the present time dealt with the question of property in the same way as Christ is here represented to have done, he would not be regarded as a social reformer, but rather as a man whose intellect was far from being brilliant, and whose ideas were exceedingly confused. Christ's reply to the high priest, who asked him the question, "Art thou the Christ, the Son of the Blessed?" (Mark xiv. 61), is, to my mind, clear evidence that he was neither the political nor the social Messiah that some persons allege him to have been. His reply was, "I am; and he shall see the son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven." Does not this accord with his statement, "I am not of the world," and "my kingdom is not of this world"? Should not this settle at once, as a fact, that the mission of Jesus was not to be the founder of an earthly government, or the promoter of a mundane social system?

Digitized by Google

As to the idea that Christ will come, as he said, "in the clouds," that relates to the future, and has no bearing upon the present inquiry, the results of which will not be affected by either the fulfilment or the failure of that prediction. The question is not what will be, but rather what Christ did to entitle him to be classified as a secular reformer. Professor Graham, as we have seen, admits that Christ did not inaugurate State Socialism, but that he only proposed a sort of friendly society among Christians themselves. In doing even this, however, he showed himself sadly defective in the knowledge necessary to a real reformer. There exists to-day in this country an old-established Christian sect, termed Quakers, who keep a common treasury for the purpose of aiding those of their numbers who are in need. But, be it observed, they fill their treasury by industry and the result of laboring "for the meat which perisheth," the very thing that Jesus forbade. The method of the Quakers is a very charitable one, for it prevents their poorer members from going to the workhouse, or from begging in the streets, as other Christians are so often forced to do. They are enabled, by this plan of industry and of "taking thought for the morrow," to preserve their dignity and self-respect, and to receive all the advantages of assistance without being branded as paupers, who have to forfeit many rights in consequence of their poverty. This scheme of mutual aid is not based upon Christ's advice to "forsake all," under the insane idea that they will be kept alive, upon the same principle that the ravens and the lilies of the field are; on the contrary, among the Quakers all who can both "toil and spin." Jesus, in his method, counselled no sort of thrift, nor made any provision for the time of need. There is no record, that I am aware of, that any society of men ever lived upon help from heaven without labor, and due care being taken for the requirements of life. Certainly such a society does not exist in "Christian England."

CHARLES WATTS.

(To be concluded.)

THE DATES OF THE BIBLE BOOKS.

(Concluded from p. 69.)

Job.—The date we assign to Job will depend entirely upon our ideas of the date of the Psalms, for the book of Job displays close familiarity with the book of Psalms, even with the later ones. As we shall see presently, the Psalms are not earlier than the Maccabees; so that Job cannot have been written before 100 B.C., and was probably later. The speeches of Elihu, at the end of the book, are universally recognised to be by a much later hand; so that the work, in its complete form as it exists to-day, cannot be much earlier than the Christian era.

The Psalms betray a unity of thought and expression which precludes the idea of their having been written at various times during an extended period. They differ widely from the ancient songs of the Hebrews, such as the Psalm of Habakkuk iii., or the fragments quoted from the book of Jasher, and they move in a circle of ideas of their own. They seem generally to refer to a period of great unrest, when Judaism was suffering from external and internal foes, such as we find during the period of the Maccabean revolt. Psalm cx. agrees in its phraseology with 1 Maccabees xiv. 41, and contains the name of Simon Maccabeus in an acrostic. But if the Psalms themselves date from the Maccabean period, the book itself must necessarily be later, for it shows traces of being an amalgamation of previous collections, even to the extent of giving two versions of the same Psalm (such as xiv. and liii.). The most probable date for the amalgamation of these different collections of Maccabean Psalms is the enlargement and rebuilding of the Temple by Herod, B.C. 14.

Ecclesiastes.—Dean Plumptre has shown conclusively that this work is full of Greek idioms, and that it was written by one having a complete knowledge of the Stoic and Epicurean philosophies. He places it between the deaths of Zeno, the Stoic (240 B.C.), and Ptolemy Epiphanes (181 B.C.). The latter date is dictated by the particulars given in the prologue to the apocryphal book of Ecclesiasticus—a work which is founded upon Ecclesiastes. But Professor Grätz has shown that the text of this prologue varies widely, and that it is not found in all the copies and versions, so that it must be a late addition. We must allow a considerable interval from the death of Zeno before the Stoical philosophy could have penetrated to the Jews. Grätz assigns Ecclesiastes to the time of Herod, 4 B.C.; and, although most critics make it older by a century and a half, yet the balance of probability is in his favor. Ecclesiastes was not admitted into the Jewish canon till 160 A.D.

The Song of Solomon is an amorous stage play in dialogue form. Its canonicity was denied as late as the time of Hadrian, and many Jews treated it as a secular song, which they sung at their banquets—a practice vigorously denounced by Rabbi Akiba. It is written in very late Hebrew, and contains Persian and Greek words. It can hardly be earlier than 250 B.C.

Proverbs.—The book of Proverbs is difficult to date, as it offers no historical allusions. Seeing, however, that the language in some parts closely resembles Aramaic, and several common Aramaic words are used, the collection must have been made at a very late period, when Hebrew was passing out of general use. It is generally admitted to be later than the return from the Exile; and, as throughout it speaks very loyally of the "king," it is probably earlier than the Maccabean revolt.

Isaiah is a composite work. It is generally distinguished into two parts: 1 Isaiah and 2 Isaiah. 2 Isaiah comprises chapters xl.–lxvi., and is assigned by all critics of note to a poet living in the time of Cyrus; for the whole standpoint of the poem is that of the Babylonian exile. But it must not be supposed that the first thirty-nine chapters are all of an earlier date; some are even later. The only parts of the book which profess to be by the hand of Isaiah are vi. 1–13 and viii. 1–18; but these very verses speak of the Exile, "cities wasted without inhabitants"; "the land utterly desolate." When we study the sections referring to the Assyrian period, we come upon traces of Exilic coloring. Thus, in chapter vii., Isaiah is said to have a son bearing the unique name, Shear-jashub, "the remnant shall return." And this at a time when no remnant had gone away! xiii. 1–22, xiv. 1–23, and some other passages, are generally admitted to have been written during, or shortly after, the captivity. But the latest portion is contained in chapters xxiv.–xxvii. These chapters differ widely from Jeremiah, Ezekiel, or the Exilic writings. The seemingly historical allusions are really symbolical, and cannot be made to square with our knowledge of ancient history. The theological views of the writer accord more with those of the book of Daniel than any other Old Testament writer. xxiv. 21 teaches of guardian angels similar to those of the Persians and Jews in Daniel; and xxvi. 19 announces the resurrection, another late Jewish doctrine. xxvi. 20 advises the Jews to hide themselves for a while till the anger of Yahveh is passed, thus implying that it was written at a time of trouble. These points can hardly be accidental, and we are therefore justified in assigning these chapters to the Maccabean period, 165 B.C. Consequently, 1 Isaiah is a collection of prophecies, formed at the very earliest 160 B.C.; and the book was completed by the addition of 2 Isaiah at some unknown later period.

Jeremiah.—Strictly speaking, the present Hebrew book of Jeremiah is later than the Christian era. The Septuagint version differs widely from it in the arrangement of the prophecies, and in bulk, for it is quite a third smaller. So that the Greek translators must have had a different and shorter Hebrew text before them. This text, however, was not entirely by the hand of Jeremiah, for l. 2 to li. 50 are recognised as having been written after the Exile; while chapters xxvii. to xxix. differ in style and orthography from the rest of the book, and must have been taken from a post-Exilic source. Therefore, these prophecies cannot have been collected together till somewhere about 500 B.C.

Ezekiel is one of the most homogeneous books in the Old Testament, and we are justified in taking it as having reached its present form about 550 B.C. Its canonicity was disputed by some of the Rabbins on the ground of its divergence from the Pentateuch, for it is really a link between the Deuteronomist and the Priestly Codes; and, while advancing beyond the former, it falls obviously short of the latter.

Daniel was written in the early part of 165 B.C.

Hosea professes to have been written in the reigns of Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah; and Jeroboam, King of Israel. But Jeroboam was not the contemporary of these other kings; and Hosea, a prophet of northern Israel, is extremely unlikely to have dated his productions by the reigns of kings of Judah. The idea of the editor who prefixed this title appears to have been to make Hosea a contemporary of Isaiah, who is credited with the same date (Isaiah i. 1). Hosea iii. 4 clearly refers to the destruction of Samaria, and must be dated about 720 B.C.

Digitized by Google

Joel is dated in the margin of our Bibles as 800 B.C. As, however, he is quite silent about the kingdom of Israel, the Assyrians, or Babylonians, but mentions the Greeks, and speaks of the temple as though it were standing, and services regularly carried on in it, we can only conclude that he lived in the early days of the Greek domination, about 300 B.C.

Amos is the earliest book in the Bible. It is dated "two years before the earthquake" which happened in the joint reigns of Azariah of Judah and Jeroboam of Israel; probably about 750 B.C.

Obadiah mentions "Sepharad," which is shown by the cuneiform inscriptions to have been the ancient name of Phrygia, where Jews were settled by the early Greek kings; and he alludes explicitly to the exploits of Judas Maccabeus in 164 B.C., to which year the book must be referred.

Jonah.—The book of Jonah is referred to in the New Testament, and must have been well known when the Gospels were written. Modern critics see in it an allegory. Jonah typifies the Jewish nation, which has a mission from Yahveh to preach to the world. Judah neglects his mission, and is, therefore, swallowed up by Babylon (compare Jeremiah li. 34); but, after being disgorged by the monster, he preaches to the Gentiles and saves them from the threatened wrath of Yahveh. But, if this explanation be true, to what period must we assign the book of Jonah? It does not accord with the time of Ezra, for Ezra has no friendly feeling for the Gentiles; and his adversaries had no idea of evangelising the heathen either. Not until the beginning of the Christian era do we find the Jews anxious to spread a knowledge of the law among the Gentiles; and then it is only the sect of the Pharisees, who are described by the Evangelist as "moving heaven and earth to gain one proselyte" (Matthew xxiii. 15). Consequently we must consider the book of Jonah to be a kind of missionary tract, circulating at the Jewish May Meetings, and inculcating the conversion of the heathen. It may probably be dated about 50 B.C., or a little later.

Micah professes to have been composed in the reigns of Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah; but this can only refer to chaps. i. to v. Ewald has shown that vi. to vii. 6 is by a later hand, about the time of Manasseh; while Wellhausen shows vii. 7–20 to date from the Babylonian captivity, about 550 B.C. Thus the book cannot have been compiled before that date.

Nahum is a poem, celebrating the destruction of Nineveh in 606 B.C., and was most probably written shortly after that event.

Habakkuk is in two parts—one prose, the other poetry. He wrote before the Exile, but how long before is a matter of doubt. We will put him 600 B.C.

Zephaniah is dated, by the title in the reign of Josiah, about 620 B.C.

Haggai gives its date in the second year of Darius Hystaspes, 520 B.C.

Zechariah consists of prophecies by at least two different hands. In the title Zechariah is styled the son of Berechiah, the son of Iddo. But in Ezra v. 1, vi. 14, he is "Zechariah, son of Iddo." Knobel suggests a confusion with Zechariah, son of Berechiah, mentioned in Isaiah viii. 2.* Another Zechariah, son of Berechiah, is mentioned by Josephus as having been murdered in the temple shortly before the death of Nero; and he is also referred to in Matthew xxiii. 35. Zechariah i. to viii. are dated in the second and fourth years of Darius I.—i.e., 520 and 518 B.C. But the rest of the book is by an entirely different writer. Professor Wellhausen, in his article in the Encyclopædia Britannica, points out that chapters ix. to xiv. can best be explained as having been written during the time of the Maccabees; but he hesitates to accept this conclusion, as it would imply too late a date for the formation of the canon of the Minor Prophets. As, however, it appears that Obadiah must, from historical reasons, be dated in the time of the Maccabees, this objection disappears. Therefore, Zechariah, as a whole, must date from 160 B.C.

Malachi is part of the book of Zechariah, and has only been separated from it in order to make up the number of twelve minor prophets. Its title is in the same form as Zechariah ix. 1, xii. 1. "Malachi" is not a Hebrew name, but merely means "my messenger." The Septuagint has "The word of the Lord by his messenger," which shows that the translator read a Vau, instead of Yod, as in the present Hebrew text. The older Jews recognised perfectly that Malachi was not a proper name; for the Targum of Jonathan assigns this prophecy to Ezra, and the Talmud to Mordecai, which also affords proof that the real author was unknown.

CHILPERIC.

* The present Hebrew text has Jehorechiah, but the name is still Berechiah in the Septuagint.

NOT PEACE, BUT A SWORD.

THEY say England is a Christian country. If the country thinks this a desirable and honorable appellation, let it not question the justness of its application; if Christians consider the country a credit and a testimonial to their religion, let them not cavil at the fitness of the description. But the world is governed by terms, and ruled by appearances. The use of the word Christian in the present age in this country provides a clothing of respectability, and how necessary it is to assume respectability—society respectability—even if the quality be not really possessed, is the knowledge of the least experienced. There may, nevertheless, be an amount of accuracy in the observation that England is a Christian country. When we are brave enough to throw off our hypocritical airs and fictitious assumptions, and when we release ourselves from patriotic influences and come to impartially examine ourselves as a nation, we confess that one of the most respected and cherished institutions in England is that of drunkenness; that we support living monuments and systems which speak our licentiousness; that selfishness is soundly ingrained in our national character; that ingratitude is one of our distinguishing characteristics, and that avarice and hypocrisy are two vices with which we are not altogether unacquainted. Finally, we confess that, as a nation, we are marked for our religious proclivities. England is a Christian country. Of course. Last year our Christian legislators devoted over £21,000,000 of the country's funds for the support of the army, and over £18,000,000 for the navy, two "branches of the public service" whose functions are the destruction of human life. These vast sums, which are utilised for the maintenance of men trained in the use of deadly instruments, seem to regulate the propagation of the belief that it is glorious to engage in the slaughter of fellow men if the whims and fancies of kings and governments are thereby appeased, and the expenditure of so many millions on the implements of war can be taken to authorise on behalf of the nation the savage custom of honoring those who have devastated countries, wrecked homes, and washed their hands in human blood. The men who now so ruthlessly squander the national finances may one day be reproached for encouraging the gratification of the base and brutal instincts of men, for stifling their higher passions, for blasting their feelings of love, and for establishing their fellowship with the beasts. But that time is not yet.

That war is a curse—perhaps a necessary one under present conditions—is acknowledged by all classes to-day, and even Christian clergymen wax indignant in their denunciation of it. What value may be attached to their indignation can be estimated when we read that a sum of more than £58,000 was entered in the army estimates of last year for the remuneration of chaplains, whose duty it is, presumably, to accompany regiments to the battlefield in time of war, and pray for the defeat and slaughter of the opposing forces. There can be no doubt that England is a Christian country.

The National Debt of England is now fixed at a figure above £587,000,000. The greater part of this huge debt has been incurred by past wars, and more than half of the taxation which is levied on the country to-day is the price Englishmen have to pay for the unrighteous shedding of blood in the past and the preparation for similar sanguinary exploits in the future. Europe, which is for the most part

Digitized by Google

Christian, is saddled with the sum of £200,000,000 per annum for the maintenance of vast armaments, a similar sum representing the interest which has to paid on the debt incurred for previous wars.

If it were but calmly considered what good might be accomplished were these immense sums diverted from their present purposes, how much better in the matter of moral and intellectual strength nations would become, and how the brutal instincts of man could be subjugated and his affections cultivated were countries not cursed with the incentive to conflict, surely some great effort would be made by which greater securities for peace would be provided in the future. The patriotic Englishman is ever ready with the unholy cry that peace can only be promoted by keeping England armed to the teeth. Fancy, preparation for war being the best manner to ensure peace! Certainly in the present state of universal armament it would be absurd for any one country to divest itself of arms; but, viewed from an impartial standpoint, is the boasted aim of England to maintain a naval fleet equal to that of any other three combined more moral than the enforced militarism of continental countries? This anxiety on the part of one particular nation to equal in power the combined forces of any number of other nations is really the cause of the maintenance of such vast military and naval bodies, and constitutes, further, the principal danger to international peace. Is England, then, responsible for the present condition of armed Europe?

How well can we remember that oftentimes in our recent history a body of sensationalists have, for party or commercial purposes, raised a scare as to England's insecurity, and that many millions have been consequently expended on additions to the navy and the army. And how well do we also remember the sequels: Foreign countries have increased their armaments in a similar degree, and eventually our relations with foreign powers have been exactly the same as they were before the last big expenditure had been made. There is no soundness in the contention that England must arm herself so lavishly for the mere purpose of protection. The incentive of war lies in the maintenance of big armed forces. Lord Rosebery bore witness to the truth of this in his speech at Guildhall last November. He said: "There are three elements in the present situation which are not altogether reassuring in the interests of peace. One is those enormous armaments that roll up like snowballs, and snowballs which seem never to end, and which are, I freely acknowledge, in their essence, being territorial armies, measures of defence, and not of defiance; but there are in these great armaments some danger to peace itself. In the first place, there is the feeling that you cannot for ever perfect tools of great precision, of great expense, without sometimes having the wish to test them and to use them; and, in the second place, there is the still greater danger that the people who have to bear the burden of these armaments, weary of the blood and taxation that they involve, may some day say it will be better to put an end to this long-continued pressure and put all to the hazard of the die."

Such is the alarm of an English Prime Minister after centuries of religious education and domination. Had Agnostics, Atheists, and others of unorthodox bearings been the guardians of the country's fortunes, their descendants would have been long ere now swept from power, on the score that existing conditions were sufficient commentaries on the tendencies of their teachings. But Agnostics and anti-Christians have not been in power, and they have not moulded the fortunes of the country. England has given many of her best sons, and almost all of her governors and legislators, as partisans of that creed "in whose name," Mr. John Morley declares, "more human blood has been violently shed than in any other cause whatever." England has been subject to the sole direction and care of the disciples of one who, if we are to believe the Gospels, stated it was his mission to bring a sword upon earth, and not establish peace. Surely about the only thing he ever succeeded in doing! And not only has the long-continued establishment of Christianity failed to prevent nations battling one against the other with cannons, powder, and bayonets, on the slightest and most imaginary provocations, but its spirit of racial and class hatred, of personal animosity, uncharitableness, and persecution has permeated individual natures. In the wake of religion there lurk the monsters of oppression, tyranny, and war. It is said that the shedding of innocent blood was necessary for the world's salvation; the adherents of this belief have been guilty of the shedding of much innocent blood since the event in which they place so much concern. Be a household ever so happy and contented, the introduction of religion invariably tends to discord and sorrow; it turns the father against the son, the daughter against the mother, the brother against the sister. Be a community ever so peaceable, amicable, and loving, a bitter spirit of sectarianism is created, and riot and unrest occur in the event of religion obtaining a hold in its midst.

Mr. W. T. Stead, who is very cold-blooded at times in criticising his friends, recently wrote: "There are people, and good people too, who will make a prayer-meeting as much a field for the indulgence of their pugnacious instincts as Von Moltke and Yamagata made of the districts in which their armies operated. Indeed, there would often be a great deal more of the true Christian spirit in some of our little meeting-places if class leaders and officials could liberate their embittered sentiments by a good bout of fisticuffs, instead of taking them to the throne of grace and praying at each other in language the venom of which is very imperfectly concealed by conventional phraseology and a copious veneer of scriptural texts. There is nothing more familiar to those who are acquainted with the manifestations of the old Adam under a Christian cloak than the dexterity with which he can use texts from the Old Testament and the New, as the soldier uses the bomb, or the sailor his torpedo-boat. The spirit is there, full of wrath and bitterness and rivalry and all uncharitableness; and Diotrephes, in the class, or in chapel, or in church, is quite as much a child of the devil as any swashbuckler of them all." He came not to bring peace. Verily hath Christ succeeded, and truly is England a Christian country.

Arbitration, no doubt, is a very desirable substitute for war. The arbitrament of reason is preferable to the arbitrament of the sword; but the danger lies in the likelihood that those who are worsted in the reasoning may yet resort to the argument of the sword. International peace, however, will scarcely be brought about by deputations and public meetings. Not until nations cease to be cradled in the hatred of "foreigners," until children are trained no more in racial exclusiveness and affection for the trappings of war, and until men are educated out of the false ideas of the glories of slaughter, will arbitration be possible. It will only be brought about by the gradual and systematic eradication of the pugnacious instincts of man; for, while people of the same race, blood, and religion perpetually fall foul of one another, there will exist little probability of their becoming more amicable to those of a different nation, blood, and creed.

FRED WILSON.

ACID DROPS.

MR. AUGUSTINE BIRRELL has done some "Birrelling" in the Nineteenth Century. He remarks that first-class Freethinkers are caressed by society and hob-a-nob with bishops, while second-class Freethinkers are insulted and persecuted. Charles Bradlaugh belonged to the second-class, says Mr. Birrell. His life was a hard one, and he was "abused, but never criticised." "In a single sentence," writes Mr. Birrell, "he was never taught the extent of his own ignorance." Perhaps not. But we doubt if Mr. Birrell would have been able to teach him. Of all the impertinence in the world there is none so insufferable as the impertinence of "culture."

Now that Hugh Price Hughes is back again his "all very fine and large" style is spread over the Methodist Times. His adjectives, and especially his adverbs, are such as only a religious paper would tolerate. Every epithet, every description, is superlative. Mr. Hughes scorns such a miserable word as "greatly," and condescends to nothing less than "immensely." His cocksureness, too, is enough to startle a Macaulay. He is in an indentured partnership with God Almighty. Every servant of God, every true friend of Christ, every real promoter of the Kingdom of Heaven will (to put it briefly) agree on all points with the editor of the Methodist Times.

It is a significant fact that Mr. Hughes's paper is lusty in its praise of Sir William Harcourt, and steadily distrustful of Lord Rosebery. Sir William flatters the Nonconformist Conscience; Lord Rosebery is too proud to do anything of the kind. This is the whole explanation.

Digitized by Google

A great cause of the "crushing defeat of the Liberal party" at Evesham, according to Mr. Hughes, is "the failure of Lord Rosebery to arouse the moral enthusiasm of the Nonconformists." Poor creatures! Cannot they vote straight, not to say early and often, unless Lord Rosebery has his galvanic battery in constant application to their "moral enthusiasm"? We should have thought their own weekly organs supplied enough "arousing."

"Mr. Gladstone knew perfectly well, as he often confessed," says the Methodist Times, "that the Nonconformists were the backbone of the army of progress in England." Every Nonconformist on reading this should grow two inches taller. But is it true? Well, it all depends on what is meant by "progress." The "progress" of the Nonconformist Conscience means the reduction of English life to a monotonous drab, only relieved by tea-fights and muffin-struggles, and the excitement of a sermon by Mr. Hughes.

Nonconformists are the backbone of the army of progress, are they? Let us take an illustration. The last Wesleyan Methodist Conference was startled by the portent of a lady delegate. A special committee was appointed to consider this tremendous novelty. Should women be admitted to the Conference, or should they not? This committee met in the Centenary Hall recently, sat in the morning, adjourned for lunch, and sat again in the afternoon. At last it came to a decision, by a majority of sixteen to eleven, that women should be admitted to the Conference. The pill was coated, however, with the comforting assurance that "it is not probable that many women will be so elected." It was also pointed out that a delegation to the Conference is only "a lay office." The male sex is still to monopolise the pulpit, and every other function that has any salary attached to it.

This is how the Nonconformists assert themselves as the backbone of the army of progress. Secular Societies settled this woman question long ago; or rather they never regarded it as open. It did not occur to them that there was any reason why women, if they chose, should not be as useful as men; or any reason why they should be debarred, either by law or custom, from any office they were capable of filling. This was one of the things which John Stuart Mill admired in our movement. It is amusing to Secularists to see the Nonconformist backbone of the army of progress in a state of agitation over such a simple matter. They can only lift their eyebrows, and exclaim, "What a backbone!"

The Crescent, noticing the case of Mr. Wise, of Kansas, who is to be tried for sending a passage from the Bible (Isaiah xxxvi. 12) on a postcard, says: "What a contrast there is between this Christian Bible, with its plethora of filthy and disgusting passages, and the Holy Koran, not a single line whereof contains a word which would bring a blush to the cheek of the most modest virgin."

My readers credit me with power to do a great deal, but I mistrust my ability to get the Book of Common Prayer revised, or even to get the Psalter re-edited. I am obliged to say this, because a gentleman in the country has come to me for assistance in getting the imprecatory passages in the Psalms omitted from the public services of the Church. He cites such verses as the following:—

"55. v. 16.—Let death come hastily upon them, and let them go down quick into hell.

"58. v. 6.—Break their teeth, O God, in their mouths.

"58. v. 9.—The righteous shall rejoice when he seeth the vengeance; he shall wash his footsteps in the blood of the ungodly.

"68. v. 23.—That thy foot may be dipped in the blood of thine enemies, and that the tongue of thy dogs may be red through the same.

"109. v. 9.—Let his children be vagabonds, and beg their bread.

"109. v. 11.—Let there be no man to pity him, nor to have compassion upon his fatherless children."—Truth.

Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes said that the mind of the bigot is like the pupil of the eye—the more light you throw into it, the smaller it grows.

Frank Marscamp is a scamp who has marred the fortunes of several servant girls, and who is now retired for eighteen months at the public expense. Detective Sergeant Ward testified that the prisoner had been a speaker at religious meetings in Hyde Park.

A Glasgow chemist had a touching appeal from a callow younker on Sunday. "Gimme a penn'orth o' plaister, mister." "All right, my boy. Been cycling on Sunday, eh?" "Naw, I wis shavin' for the Sunday-schule!"

The Pope asks the American bishops to teach journalists to have respect for religion; but journalists are an intractable lot, and even those connected with Catholic papers sometimes consider their own office superior to that of a bishop.

When the convict first arrived at Princetown it struck him as rather appropriate to hear the warder whistling that lovely air, "Abide with me."

A church at Marsala was unroofed during a cyclone, and, a marriage being in progress, the bride was fatally crushed by the falling débris.

A writer in the Living Church analyses the returns of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States, and shows that there are 4,366 churches with less than 100 communicants each, 1,506 having between 100 and 200, twenty-four with 1,000, two with over 2,000 and one with over 3,000 communicants.

The American House of Bishops, assembled in Council at New York, have issued a pastoral letter in opposition to the growing rationalism and latitudinarianism. They affirm that all who minister in holy things must hold and teach the Incarnation; that Jesus Christ was, "by the operation of the Holy Ghost, made very man, of the substance of the Virgin Mary, his mother, and that without spot of sin." They say: "Unless our Lord Jesus Christ is firmly held to be God's own true and proper Son, equal to the Father as touching his godhead, and to be also the true Son of the Blessed Virgin, by miraculous conception and birth, taking our very manhood of her substance, we sinners have no true and adequate mediator; our nature has no restored union with God; we have no sacrifice for our sins in full atonement and propitiation, holy and acceptable to God."

They further affirm that the Holy Scriptures are the word of God, and "any instruction," say they, "or any study which makes any part of the Bible less authoritative than it really is, which weakens faith in its inspiration, which tends to eliminate Christ from the utterances of the Prophets, or which leads a man to think of miracles with a half-suppressed scepticism, is a pernicious instruction and a pernicious study."

The Church Times rejoices over this piece of mediævalism, and says: "Seeing how keenly the same truths have been attacked in our own country, and how much many ill-balanced minds have suffered in consequence, the present would seem to offer a fitting opportunity for the Bishops of the Church in England to issue a similar authoritative utterance, whereby the weak may be strengthened, and the faith of the Church may be declared without gainsaying." This would, at any rate, make the members of the Broad Church feel uncomfortable, and that would be a matter of rejoicing to the Church Times.

In the matter of the "Armenian atrocities," it appears the atrocities were not always the work of the "unspeakable Turk." The special correspondent of the Daily News says: "I believe there is no doubt of the fact that certain of these Armenian conspirators arranged to murder the Rev. Dr. Edward Riggs and two other American missionaries at Marsovan, and fasten the blame upon the Turks, in order that, as they imagined, the United States might inflict summary punishment upon the Turkish Government."

The Turks allege that Armenians have inflicted shocking outrages upon Turkish men and women, and, says the correspondent, "from what is already known of conspiracy methods, it is quite likely that the assertion is true."

In the case of an old man arrested for conspiracy, says the writer, "it was shown at the trial that the charge against him was a piece of religious spite, not of Moslem against Christian, but of Presbyterian against Baptist. There had had been a denominational dispute of some sort or other, and this was the way in which it was settled. The facts in this case will suggest to the person of impartial mind that the wholesale arrests that have been filling the wretched prisons of Armenia for several months past may not all be the work of the unregenerate Turk, and that controversial Presbyterians and Baptists may possibly be deciding knotty points of doctrinal usage with a thoroughness strangely suggestive of the early religious history of England and America."

Religion does not always impress the youthful mind—at least, not seriously. A bright youngster of eight, near Manchester, coming home from Sunday-school, was asked by his mother what he had learned. He replied: "Oh, about Jesus, the man that does the tricks."

Mr. R. H. Charles, who continues to write on the Syriac Gospels in the Academy, now thinks that verses 2 to 17 of Matthew i. are, in this version, an interpolation. We should say that the parties who did not scruple at this did not stick at much else. What a pity God does not clear up all difficulties by editing an infallible version of his revelation himself.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Bell, in his book on Obeah, says that candles are purchased from the Romish priests under the belief that they bring down a curse on an enemy's head. He says: "This, I fear, is quite a common thing, and frequently have I heard the threat used, 'I go to put a candle on your head.'"

Another characteristic of the West Indian negro is thus related by Mr. Bell: "A nigger begins a phrase with 'Please God,' in the same spirit as he generally ends it with a 'Damn it!' and I should not wonder if, when passing an especially tempting bunch of plantains within reach, he might find himself saying: 'Please God, I go tief dat plantain to-night?'"

A nice man of God is the Rev. Herbert Gregory, formerly of Southport, and afterwards curate of St. Michael's, Manchester. His wife, in the Divorce Court, gave evidence of brutal ill-treatment, and disgusting, indecent language. He spat in her face, and told her that no one cared for a married curate, and that if he had not married her he could have married some rich woman who would have kept him. The man of God elected to give evidence, but was threatened by Lord Lopes with an indictment for perjury. A decree nisi, with costs, was granted to his wife.

The Rev. Mr. Mackey, curate of St. Margaret's, Plumstead, endeavored to obtain a divorce from his wife, but the jury considered there had been wilful neglect of such a kind as to conduce to adultery, and the petition was dismissed with costs.

In another divorce case, that of Aubourg v. Aubourg, the wife prays for the dissolution of her marriage on the ground of the adultery of her husband, who was a Sunday-school Superintendent, with one of the young lady teachers.

That the constant contemplation of one subject, to the exclusion of all others, is apt to play sad havoc with the reasoning faculties is shown by a lecture recently delivered at Milton Hall, Kentish Town, by Mr. Coote, the Secretary of the National Vigilance Society. After expressing his belief that the bulk of our juvenile population gratify their prurient tastes by stealthy perusals of Boccaccio's Decameron and Zola's Nana, although most of us labor under the delusion that boys much prefer literature of the Dick Turpin sort, Mr. Coote, in answer to questions, said "that, in his opinion, none of the so-called filthy stories in the Bible could be considered indecent, from the fact that they were inspired."

After the laughter occasioned by this statement had subsided, Mr. Coote, who is not easily abashed, inquired in tones of cheery optimism, "how any story could be considered nasty that was found within the pages of the grandest, noblest, best book ever in the world?" When asked why, if this was so, it had been thought necessary to publish a children's edition of the Bible with all the suggestive passages and stories eliminated, Mr. Coote said: "Thank God I have not sunk so low as to question the morality of my maker's own book," and that he pitied any person who had. This reply provoked a perfect avalanche of awkward questioning, which, it is only fair to state, Mr. Coote endured with Christian-like resignation and pious fortitude. "Laugh as much as you please," he cried, "I do not mind, the Holy Ghost is with me." One gentleman asked him "Whether, in the event of the Empire presenting a tableau representing the expulsion of Eve from the Garden of Eden, he would consider that indecent?" Another wanted to know "What sort of a tableau Mr. Coote thought Lot sleeping with his daughters would make?" To neither of these questions did Mr. Coote vouchsafe a reply.

The schoolmaster has been abroad for a long while now, yet it appears that there is a considerable percentage of the world's inhabitants who cannot yet read, and, alas! some who can have no opportunities for perusing God's Word. Yet the Holy Bible is the sole revelation of truth and duty to the world, and he who dies ignorant of Jesus as the atoning sacrifice for sin must be eternally roasted.

The Romish Church is pledged by Papal Bulls to the authenticity of the Holy House at Loretto having been transported from Nazareth to Italy. Accordingly, we are not surprised to find an English Catholic paper seriously arguing that the stones are identical with others found at Nazareth. The trouble is that the monks at Nazareth say the Holy House is still there, and never has been shifted.

The truth about the House of Loretto is probably that when the Moslems held Palestine a good source of revenue was cut off from the monks for showing the birthplace of Jesus, and they accordingly declared that it had been removed bodily in the night by angels to Italy.

In one of E. Fitzgerald's letters to Fanny Kemble, published in this month's Temple Bar, he narrates the following, which was told him by "a pious but humorous man":—

Scene.—Country church on Winter's Evening. Congregation, with the Old Hundredth ready for the parson to give out some Dismissal Words.

Good old Parson (not at all meaning rhyme)—"The light has grown so very dim, I scarce can see to read the hymn!"

Congregation, taking it up, to the first half of the Old Hundredth:

> The Light has grown so very dim,
> I scarce can see to read the Hymn.

Pause, as usual. Parson (mildly impatient)—"I did not mean to read a hymn; I only meant my eyes were dim."

Congregation, to second part of Old Hundredth:

> I did not mean to read a Hymn;
> I only meant my eyes were dim.

Parson, out of patience, etc.:

> I didn't mean a Hymn at all—
> I think the Devil's in you all.

Henry Mansfield, a chorister at St. Mary's, Moorfields, died in the church while the service was proceeding.

Bishop Harold Browne used to relate, with great amusement, how, coming out of church on Trinity Sunday morning, after having preached as clearly as he could on the topic of the day, an old woman stopped him in the road to thank him for his "beautiful sermon," "for," said she, quite earnestly, "I never did see so clear before how there were three Gods!"

Mr. Symes, referring in the Liberator to the reading of the new Syriac Gospel that Joseph begat Jesus, says: "Unitarians and some others will be delighted to learn that Mary was not false to her spouse, that Jesus was lawfully begotten, and that the old gospel scandal is at length removed. But the orthodox will be in a terrible rage, and will perhaps send a few extra persons on to hell at once for daring to bring to light so decent a blasphemy. The ultra-pious would rather keep up the old fiction and regard Mary as—well, you know, you know—than adopt this decent record. It is so shocking, don't you see, to believe that Jesus was naturally and lawfully begotten. It takes away all the romance of his origin, and leaves you with—nothing in particular, to save your immortal soul upon." The Liberator, by the way, reprints entirely what the Freethinker had to say on the subject of this Syriac Gospel.

The disaster of the "Elbe" on our coast was even more appalling than the flooded pit of the Diglake Colliery. A terrible shipwreck like this should bring home to the least thinking how little reliance is to be placed on providence for safeguarding the lives of men, women, and children.

The parish church of Whittington, near Chesterfield, has been burnt down. One of the firemen, who endeavored to save the building, was struck by masses of falling stone, and was seriously injured.

A writer in the Sunday Times says that in democratic New York certain members of the plutocracy are so exclusive that they will not take the Communion in common with their fellow Christians. A "Sanitary Communion Outfit Company" has been started, which provides racks containing rows of small goblets, and the officiating priest tenders the rack, from which each one takes his own glass. This is Christianity as brought up to date.

The Church Times notes with alarm that, whereas the general marriage-rate shows a decrease, the marriage-rate in the case of divorces shows a marked increase. It urges that clergymen should not perform such marriages even in the case of innocent parties.

Whether Mr. Impey, the rejected of Evesham, is right as to the decadence of Dissent there, it is certain that the old type of Evangelical Puritanism, which was to the front in the last generation, is now pretty much in the background. As the rottenness of the Church becomes more evident, it is compelled to put on more paint and varnish. The old dogmas being incredible, musical and other attractions are resorted to in order to maintain the prestige of religion. The old type of religionist, who lived his religion, and was ready to die for it, is almost extinct.

Scene: Camp-meeting; young man coming down from the mourner's bench. Anxious Friend (grasping him by the hand)—"Is it well with your soul, brother?" Young Man (ruefully)—"Yes, but I've lost my hat."

Digitized by Google

Mr. Foote's Engagements.

Sunday, February 10, Hall of Science, 142 Old-street, London :—11.30, "The Government Program"; 7, "Humors and Absurdities of the Life of Christ."

Wednesday, February 6, Hall of Science, Old-street, E.C. :—"Shakespeare's 'Merchant of Venice.'"

February 17 and 24, Hall of Science.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

MR. CHARLES WATTS'S ENGAGEMENTS.—February 10, Camberwell; 17, Plymouth; 24, Newcastle-on-Tyne. March 3, Manchester. April 7, Sheffield.—All communications for Mr. Watts should be sent to him (if a reply is required, a stamped and addressed envelope must be enclosed) at 81 Effra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

LECTURE NOTICES must reach 28 Stonecutter-street by first post Tuesday, or they will not be inserted.

A. LEVITT.—Thanks for cuttings.

A. LEWIS.—We will try to find the reference and let you know.

PLODDER.—There are plenty of English Grammars. Almost any would serve your turn. Professor Bain's is a good book on English Composition. We advise you not to waste a great deal of time on such studies. Just master the chief rules, and then study with the utmost care some picked passages from a few of our greatest writers.

W. B. JEVONS.—Paper subscription handed to Mr. Forder, and N.S.S. subscription to Miss Vance. Thanks for your good wishes.

A. HINDLEY.—Glad to have your good opinion. Mr. Foote is not likely to imitate the example of M. Casimir-Perier. The French President resigned justly, finding the constitution gave him responsibility without power. Happily the N.S.S. constitution gives the President more authority, which he is resolved to exercise while he holds the office. Many tell us, as you do, the Freethinker improves in quality. We should like it to improve proportionately in circulation.

DARIUS.—The article shall appear. Glad you opine that the Freethinker "grows steadily better." The Westminster Review article on the Blasphemy Laws is from the pen of Mr. Taylor, a member of the N.S.S. Manchester Branch. We shall deal with it next week.

J. DRAPER.—Thanks. See "Acid Drops."

E. S.—(1) Christians never found out that Freethought objections to their faith were based upon caricatures of its doctrines until they had lost the chief part of their power to persecute. Besides, the Christians accuse each other of caricaturing the teaching of the Bible. Read what Catholics say of Protestants and Protestants of Catholics, and what the various Protestant sects say of each other. (2) We have never denied the part played by Christians like Wilberforce, Clarkson, and Sharp in the abolition of slavery; but other Christians upheld slavery; and, if both sides appealed to the Bible, it shows what a lucid text-book of morality is "Holy Writ."

A. THORNTON.—See "Acid Drops."

W. RUDD.—We cannot comment on the case until it is concluded. The report you send us ends with "continued on p. 8."

W. MOLE.—We think you will find the authority for the paragraph about the Rev. J. Hunt in the English Churchman.

S. T. PHILLIPS.—The texts you require are probably Genesis i. 2; Psalm cxlvii. 16, 17; Job xxviii. 9-11; Isaiah xlv. 7. You should furnish yourself with a copy of our Bible Handbook.

N.S.S. BENEVOLENT FUND.—Miss E. M. Vance acknowledges:—F. Jones, 2s. 6d.; W. V. Keeble, 5s.; M. E. M., 10s.; Mr. and Mrs. Lupton, 5s.; G. Willock, 6s.

LONDON SECULAR FEDERATION.—Miss Annie Brown, secretary, acknowledges:—W. H. Baker, 2s. 6d.; E. Robins, 5s. The 5s. acknowledged to J. W. Hancock should read Mrs. Hancock.

W. H. WHITNEY.—Thanks for the information.

W. H. HARRAP.—Draconian law is the policy of impatience, and it always increases the evils it would remove. Mr. Bradlaugh would never have brought in your bill to make adultery punishable with long terms of penal servitude. That was the old Christian plan of reformation, and history shows what came of it. Does it not occur to you how many women with adulterous husbands (or vice versâ) would suffer almost anything rather than take the first step in sending the fathers of their children to convict prisons? Only the more callous would obtain redress under your scheme. You forget that wisdom, not indignation, must prescribe the remedies for social evils.

J. KEAST.—Secularists who say the work is done simply mean they are tired of doing it. Go forward, and leave the "rest-and-be-thankfuls" to their inglorious repose.

C. DOBB.—All right.

G. L. MACKENZIE.—We will gladly advertise the little volume for you, as a small acknowledgment of your clever contributions.

A. N. STAIGER.—Better be glad of the good that has been done than lament it is no more. It is never any use depending on the majority. Whenever any good work is being done we may also be sure that some good man or two are really doing it. Active and zealous men find this out and get disheartened; and thus pay for a lesson they might have learned gratuitously.

WELL-WISHER.—There is still a deficit on the Watts Election Fund, for which we are personally responsible. Any who can assist to clear it off will save us from a loss which we can ill afford.

D. F. GLOAK.—Your lecture notices arrived as we are going to press—too late.

A. CLARK.—The arrangement was only one to tide over a present difficulty with the least possible unpleasantness. A strong feeling prevailed on the Executive, as it prevailed outside in the party generally, that the Hall of Science Club, on its existing basis, should be abolished, and that the social element there should be entirely confined to the members of the National Secular Society. This view was shared by the Directors, who intend, if they have the opportunity, to bring about this alteration, and thus to make the establishment worthier of our party's aims and objects. Unfortunately it is not possible to be "as swift as meditation" in the sphere of action; and the difficulty is all the greater in consequence of some recent, and different, complications, which the Directors have had to face, and which we shall probably have to write about next week in connection with the announcement already promised, and which we have been obliged to delay.

PAPERS RECEIVED.—The Rad—Vegetarian Messenger—Liberator—Two Worlds—Truthseeker—Secular Thought—Freidenker—Der Arme Teufel—De Dageraad—Manchester Spy—Liberty—Open Court—Bobcaygeon Independent—Isle of Man Times—Herts Leader—Reynolds's Newspaper—Church Reformer.

LETTERS for the Editor of the Freethinker should be addressed to 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

ORDERS for literature should be sent to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

The Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the publishing office, post free, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 10s. 6d.; Half Year, 5s. 3d.; Three Months, 2s. 8d.

CORRESPONDENCE should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

SCALE OF ADVERTISEMENTS.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—(Narrow Column) one inch, 3s.; half column, 15s.; column, £1 10s. Broad Column—one inch, 4s. 6d.; half column, £1 2s. 6d.; column, £2 5s. Special terms for repetitions.

DARWIN AND MISSIONS.

ABOUT the time of the death of Charles Darwin a paragraph went round the religious journals to the effect that, when the great naturalist heard of the success of the mission to the Yahgans, or coast Indians, of Tierra-del-Fuego, he was so struck that he contributed to the funds of the Church Missionary Society to the day of his death. A writer in the current number of Scribner's Magazine gives a sad sequel to this story; for it appears that the missionising of the Tierra-del-Fuegians has resulted in their virtual extinction. Whatever good was worked by the missionaries, their efforts have been fatal to their poor converts.

It was in 1870 that the first missionary landed, to make his home among the natives. "He was backed by a great society, and assisted by white men and women who believed as he did. To improve the Yahgans, warm houses were built to take the place of twig wigwams. Some of the Yahgans were taught to dig, to plant, to saw lumber, and so on. In return for furs and labor on the missionary plot of ground, the Yahgans received clothing and soap, which they were taught to use. An orphanage was erected, where orphan children were entirely supported.

"But the tribe had been ruined by its friends. The Indians, who had thrived when naked and living on whale-blubber, did not thrive as clothed farm-laborers, living on bread. The woollens of the whites were less efficient as clothing than whale-oil. Children, who had been sturdy and strong when naked in the storms of sleet, died when well-dressed and living in a warm orphanage; every child taken into it died. Pneumonia and consumption became plagues.

"In 1871 there were three thousand Yahgans; in 1894 there were less than three hundred. In 1871 every man among them was ready and eager to stand up and fight for his home, man-fashion. Of those that the traveller now may see, every soul is a cowering, hypocritical beggar. The attempt to change a tribe of wandering fishermen into farmers failed utterly. Nature had not fashioned them so."* P.

* "The End of the Continent," by John R. Spears, Scribner's Magazine, February, 1895.

Digitized by Google

SUGAR PLUMS.

The libel case, affecting the reputation of the London Hall of Science—Smith v. Snow and another—will be tried soon after this week's Freethinker goes to press. Our next week's issue will contain a full report of the proceedings. We shall print a large edition, so that our readers may take extra copies for distribution among their friends.

The bitter weather at Manchester thinned Mr. Foote's morning audience on Sunday, but there was an improvement in the afternoon, and the hall was filled in the evening, when the audience was very enthusiastic. Mr. Taylor presided on all three occasions. All copies of the Freethinker were sold out in the afternoon.

Manchester Freethinkers have long put up with the ridiculous antics of a certain Christian who has always abused the opportunity for discussion. Those who were most annoyed by his performances will be glad to know that he has now been refused admittance. He came in on Sunday morning without a ticket, and after a little scene he was ejected with the least possible violence.

Mr. Foote is engaged for three Sundays at the London Hall of Science. To-day (Feb. 10) he lectures in the morning on "The Government Program," and in the evening on "Humors and Absurdities of the Life of Christ." On the Wednesday (Feb. 13) Mr. Foote will deliver the second of his February course of literary lectures, the subject being "Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice."

The Humanitarian League holds a meeting at the Lecture Room, 32 Sackville-street, Piccadilly, on Thursday, Feb. 14, at 8 p.m., when a paper will be read by Mr. G. W. Foote on "The Shadow of the Sword." The paper will deal with the subject of War up to date, and will afterwards be published by the Humanitarian League as one of its propagandist pamphlets. It should be added that the admission on Feb. 14 is entirely free. Tickets are not necessary.

Last Sunday evening Mr. Charles Watts's lecture at the Hall of Science, London, upon "Religion with and without Theology," was most enthusiastically received. Mr. Guest ably presided. Although several Christians were present, they could not be induced to oppose Mr. Watts, in spite of the Chairman's repeated invitations. This evening (Sunday, February 10) Mr. Watts lectures in the North Camberwell Hall, 61 New Church-road, S.E.

Mr. C. Cohen lectured for the Bradford Sunday Society on February 3, his subject being, "Lucretius, a Roman Poet in the Light of Modern Science." Mr. W. P. Byles, M.P., was in the chair, and the lecturer earned the applause of a large audience. The local press describes his address as of "a most interesting and lucid nature."

The San Francisco Bulletin, noticing the benefactions of Mr. James Lick, the infidel, who erected the Paine Memorial Hall at Boston, says: "It will be noticed that James Lick gave nothing for mere charity. He did not believe in relieving any human being able to work from the necessity of earning his bread. Lick gave to science and educational improvement, to public necessity, and to art."

Mr. A. B. Moss is not asleep on the new Camberwell Vestry, though he would have liked to be recently when the Vestry had an all-night sitting. It was all over the question of the proper day for the elections. The Moderates wanted Thursday—for the shopkeepers; the Progressives wanted Saturday—for the working men. Mr. Moss created a sensation by saying that the really proper day was Sunday, when all classes would be free to vote at their leisure. Two clerical members of the Vestry were horrified. No doubt they fancy the end of the world must be approaching when such irreligion is allowed to pass without a thunderbolt from old Jahveh.

At the last meeting of the N.S.S. Executive leave was given for the formation of a Branch at Stockton-on-Tees. There are a good many Freethinkers in that district, and we hope they will organise for an active propaganda. The new Branch starts with the advantage of a zealous secretary in Mr. Dobson, who has lately removed from Huddersfield.

The usual circular is being sent out to N.S.S. Branches with regard to nominations for the Conference. It is hoped that the conditions will be carefully considered before answers are forwarded, and that the replies will be sent into the Secretary with all possible promptitude.

Bristol Secularists are reminded that the N.S.S. Branch meets every Sunday evening at 7 at the Shepherds' Hall. A social gathering takes place on the first Sunday evening in each month. The one held on February 3 was a great success. Mr. J. Kesst (secretary), 32 Morgan-street, St. Paul's, will be happy to hear from any lady or gentleman ready to join the Branch or to assist in its work; also to receive parcels of Freethought literature for distribution.

In the Truthseeker of January 26 Mr. W. H. Burr returns to his thesis that Thomas Paine was Junius, and seeks to show that Paine, in his early days, was better off than he is generally supposed to have been. But we cannot see that Mr. Burr adduces anything decisive; while the evidence of style and of handwriting goes against the hypothesis.

A number of gentlemen have formed themselves into an association called "The Sunday Philharmonic Union," for the purpose of organising public performances of music on Sundays and holidays. The enterprise is in no sense a commercial one, and, indeed, application has been made to the Board of Trade for registration as a company "not for profit." It is, however, intended to associate the concerts with literary, scientific, and art lectures and exhibitions.

The abortive prosecution of the Leeds Sunday Society has led to the formation of a National Federation of Sunday Societies, at a Conference of which resolutions were passed in favor of making Sunday lectures and concerts legal.

The Freethinker and Truth Seeker are now allowed upon the table at the Rochdale Workmen's Club, and are read by many who would otherwise never see them.

In the Open Court Mr. M. D. Conway, under the title of "The First French Socialist," writes upon one of the most interesting characters of the French Revolution—François Babeuf. Mr. Conway gives a letter of Thomas Paine, addressed to the French directory, in which he deals with the conspiracy of Babeuf, and which has never appeared in English until now.

In De Dageraad for February Dr. J. G. ten Bokkel writes on Vivisection, and on Darwinism and Belief. H. Peypers gives an account of the life and works of Dr. Herman Hartogh Heys von Zouteveen, one of the leading Freethinkers of Holland and the translator of Darwin's works into Dutch. Our contemporary continues its translation of our Crimes of Christianity.

Our lively exchange, the Ironclad Age, of Indianapolis, reprints Mr. Wheeler's recent article on "Hypocrisy," and the contribution to the Freethinker by Mr. J. A. Richardson on "How the Sun Stood Still the Second Time."

The Rev. A. J. Waldron, of the Christian Evidence Society, lecturing in the Public Hall, New Brompton, is reported to have spoken as follows: "He stated his willingness to accept the challenge of the Secularists for a two nights' debate in that hall. As the challenged party he had a right to choose both his opponent and the subjects." It is a pity Mr. Waldron did not also claim to settle the "conditions." He added: "As the champion of the Secularists he should choose Mr. Foote, and the subjects would be 'Which has been productive of the greatest good to the world, Atheism or Christianity?' and 'Did Jesus Christ rise from the dead?' He was willing to add a third subject if necessary." Mr. Waldron does not see that the subject opposed to Atheism is Theism, and that the one to be opposed to Christianity is Secularism. However, if he is really willing to debate with Mr. Foote, we have no doubt that satisfactory arrangements can be made, especially if Mr. Waldron is put forward as a representative by the Christian Evidence Society.

Ingersoll delivered his lecture on the Bible at Lima, O., Saturday, January 5. The churches all had free concerts and lectures. Ex-governor Chase talked to the disciples. At the P. B. O. Elks hall all the reading circles gave a free musical and literary entertainment. The Church might have been spared this great exertion and loss of cash, for the theatre where Ingersoll spoke was packed, even standing room at a good price. The intelligent masses are seeking enlightenment, and the Church trembles at the voice of Ingersoll demolishing its idols.—Ironclad Age.

Here is an advertisement from the Church Times:—"Young Rector (bachelor), in a beautiful part of Norfolk, with right of shooting and fishing over 1,000 acres, desires Paying Guests, ladies or gentlemen, from two guineas upwards. Dogs and guns furnished; golf and tennis. Late and early dinners.—Address, in first instance, Woodhouse, Fern Lodge, Cley, Norfolk." We should like to know the condition of the agricultural laborers in this beautiful part of Norfolk, and what they think of their young bachelor rector and his paying guests—ladies or gentlemen.

Digitized by Google

MR. HOLYOAKE ON HIS NEWCASTLE LETTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE FREETHINKER."

SIR,—You do not cite any portion of my letter to the Newcastle Weekly Chronicle (Jan. 12), but merely repeat what you said before; thus your readers have no means of judging whether I have done what you allege against me. In your questions and remarks I do not recognise my own letter, which is no doubt owing to that incapacity you discern in me, of not being "able to see, in some cases, what is clear as daylight" to more fortunate persons.

My object in writing the letter in question was to elucidate Secularism, as at first explained, and as assented to at one time by Mr. Bradlaugh, Mrs. Besant, and, I might have added, by yourself. Where, in all this, do I show any "fondness for suggesting that hardly anybody ever understood Secularism but myself"? This would be conceit and fatuity. On the contrary, I show pride in my letter that so many persons do understand what was new, when first proposed. Now many writers and speakers, more bright minded and more perspicacious than myself, illustrate the same way of thinking. My compliment to Mr. Wakefield related alone to his defence of Secularism against others. I am sorry I did not notice what he said of you. It would have been with me an act of party loyalty to disown anything unfair said of you.

You request that I will tell you what I have ever done of Secular work in connection with Secular organisation. In the Sixty Years of an Agitator's Life, which you reviewed in the Freethinker in many generous sentences, I tell of many things I did in consequence of my being a Secularist, though I have never ceased to contend against theological errors. But if, as you contend, we must first see the end of such error before joining in Secular work, neither I nor you will live to see the day when that work can begin.

I am busy on a book on the origin and nature of Secularism, which will prevent any saying, after my death, that I have in any way failed to maintain Secularist principles or the rights of Freethought. I may not be so unerring as you, but I am always for truth and the honor of the party to which I belong.—Very faithfully,

G. J. HOLYOAKE.

[We gave the pertinent sentences of Mr. Holyoake's letter. Most of it had no relation to the point raised in our criticism. We did not say that Mr. Holyoake had done no Secular work—which would be a contemptible absurdity. What we said was, that he had not done it, and could not have done it, in connection with a Secular Society, but as an individual Secularist. We also pointed out that other Secularists take their share of Secular labor in the same way. Secularism as a principle is permeating the whole of our civilisation, but Secularism as an organisation is obliged to fight for its very existence, in consequence of oppressive old laws which still disgrace our jurisprudence. This is the principal point at issue, and Mr. Holyoake does not touch it. His jocularity is admirable at his time of life, and we do a little in that line ourselves occasionally, but we like sticking to the argument for all that.—EDITOR.]

Hopes and Happiness.

To destroy a groundless hope is not to destroy a man's happiness. The instantaneous effort may be painful; but it is the price which we have to pay for a cure of deep-seated complaints. The infidel's reply is substantially this: "I may destroy your hopes; but I do not destroy your power of hoping. I bid you no longer fix your mind on a chimera, but on tangible and realisable prospects. I warn you that efforts to soar above the atmosphere can only lead to disappointment, and that time spent in squaring the circle is simply time spent. Apply your strength and your intellect on matters which lie at hand, and on problems which admit of solution. The happiest man is not the man who has the grandest dreams, but the man whose aspirations are best fitted to guide his talents; the most efficient worker is not the one who mistakes his own fancies for an external support, but he who has most accurately gauged the conditions under which he is laboring."—Leslie Stephen, "Essays on Freethinking and Plain Speaking," p. 356.

LUTHER ON THE DEVIL.

IN Dr. Martin Luther's Colloquia Mensalia there are several interesting particulars concerning the devil and his works which deserve to be extracted, as they illustrate the nature of the faith of the founder of Protestantism.

"I hold," said Luther, "that the devil sendeth all heavy diseases and sicknesses to people (for he is a prince of death); from hence St. Peter saith, Christ healed all that were oppressed of the devil." "A physician," said Luther, "is our Lord God's Botcher—he helpeth corporally, we divines spiritually; we make the case good again when the devil hath spoiled it. The devil ministereth poison to kill people." "The Devil is the Lord God's hangman." "I would wish," said Luther, "rather to die through the Devil than through the Emperor or Pope; for then I should die, nevertheless, through a great and mighty prince of the world. But if I die through him, he shall eat such a bit of me as will be his bane; he shall spew me out again; and at the last day of judgment I will, in requital, devour him."

"Witchcraft," said Luther, "is the Devil's own proper work, wherewith (when God permitteth) he not only hurteth people, but also often times through the same he maketh them quite awry; yea, in this world we are both body and soul cast under the devil, as guests and strangers. The Devil is so crafty a spirit that he can ape and deceive all human senses. He can bring to pass that one thinketh he seeth something, which, notwithstanding, he seeth not. Also that one heareth a thundering, a pipe, or a trumpet, which he heareth not." Worse still, "he bewitcheth and deceiveth the hearts and conscience in such sort that they hold and receive erroneous and ungodly doctrine and opinions for the upright and divine truth." A sufficient proof was found in the Sectaries, the Anabaptists, and other seducers.

Luther had scriptural authority for asserting that Satan could transform himself into an angel of light (2 Corinthians xi. 14). He goes yet further, and says: "It is a fearful thing when Satan intendeth to torment the sorrowful consciences with intolerable melancholy; then the wicked villain, master-like, can mask and disguise himself into the person of Christ, so that it is impossible for a poor human creature (whose conscience is troubled with such great and heavy tribulations) to mark and discover the villainy of the devil. From hence it falleth out that many of those (that neither know nor understand the same) do run headlong into despair, do kill and make themselves away; for they are blinded and deceived so powerfully by the devil that they are fully persuaded it is not the devil, but Christ himself, that vexeth and tormenteth them in such sort."

Satan often sought to seduce Martin himself, and in the room of the Wartburg, where he sat translating the Bible, they still show the stains from the inkstand which Luther flung full in the face of the fiend, who forthwith disappeared. It was a terrible belief, and Luther consoled himself with the faith that the Devil, once overcome, could never recur with the same temptation. Luther sometimes met him in even more ridiculous style than flinging inkpots. But, as the matter is rather coarse, I must refer to the Reformer's own words (Colloquia, chap. 35).

Luther believes that "the Devil can deceive people and beget children." He gravely tells the story of a gentleman who had a wife that died, but who came back and had children by him, vanishing when he uttered a particular oath. "The Prince Elector of Saxony (John Frederick), having received advertisement of this strange accident, sent thereupon presently unto me (said Luther) to have my opinion; what I held of that woman, and of the children which were begotten and born of these two persons. Whereupon I wrote to his Highness that, in my opinion, neither that woman, nor those children, were right human creatures, but devils. For the Devil casteth before the eyes a blaze, or a mist, and so deceiveth people; insomuch that one thinketh he lieth by a right woman, and yet is no such matter; for, as St. Paul saith, the Devil is strong by the children of unbelief. But inasmuch as children, or devils, are conceived in such sort, the same are very horrible and fearful examples, in that Satan can plague and so torment people as to beget children. Like unto this is it also with that which they call the (Nix) in the water, who draweth people unto him, as maids and virgins, of whom he begetteth (devils) children. The Devil can also steal children away (as sometimes children, within the space of six weeks after their birth, are lost), and other children called (supposititi) or Changelings, laid in their places. Of the Saxons they are called Killcrops." Luther has a section on these Changelings or Killcrops, who were known by sucking their mothers dry. He had seen one at Dessau, aged twelve, who did nothing but feed, and would eat as much as two clowns. He advised the Prince of Anhalt to throw it into the river Moldaw. Another near Halberstad, who sucked his mother and five other women dry, being carried in a basket to the Virgin Mary, when, crossing a bridge, "another devil that was below in the river called, and said: 'Killcrop, killcrop!' Then the child in the basket (which never before spake one word) answered: 'Ho, ho!' The devil in the water asked further: 'Whither art thou going?' The child in the basket said: 'I am going towards Hocklestad, to our loving Mother, to be rocked.' The man, being much affrighted thereat, threw the child, with the basket, over the bridge into the water. Whereupon the two devils flew away together, and cried 'Ho ho ha,' tumbling themselves one over another, and so vanished." Certain it is, said Luther, that good and godly Christians may be bewitched. "I am persuaded that my sicknesses are not always natural; but that the Devil, by witchcraft, practiseth his wilfulness upon me; but God delivereth his chosen from such evils."

Digitized by Google

"Dr. Spalatine," said Luther, "told me that a young maid at Altenburg was lately bewitched, insomuch that she wept tears of blood. The magistrate should make haste with such witches to punishment. I had lately a matrimonial cause in hand. A wicked woman, by poison, intended to make away her husband, insomuch that he vomited and cast out little vipers. When she was put to the torture, she refused to confess anything; for such witches are altogether dumb, and contemn the rack; the Devil will not suffer them to speak. But such actions are sufficient proofs for them to receive condign punishment to the example of others." Luther then gave his view that witchcraft is, as the Bible says, worthy of death; "forasmuch as witchcraft is an abominable offence, in that one giveth himself from God over to the Devil, who is God's utter enemy; so is the same well worthy of death's punishment.'

LUCIANUS.

FIEND OR FOOL.

To discover the will of a Deity whose sway
In the universe nought can resist,
It would seem at first sight that a sensible way
Is to notice the things that exist.

By his hand into space all the planets were hurled;
He for ages unchallenged has reigned.
It would seem as if God who created the world
Had created the things it contained.

But no; we must learn we are wide of the mark.
What is logical need not be right;
The disciples of Reason are all in the dark,
The disciples of Faith in the light.

If from slavery, cruelty, carnage, and crime
The intentions of God should be gleaned,
The Almighty Creator would seem for all time
But a paramount Infinite Fiend.

So we learn the Almighty is not what he seems,
But is better and kinder by far.
He intended great things that are still only dreams—
Is distressed by the facts as they are.

The Lord is a potter, and man is the clay;
But, in spite of his infinite skill,
He sadly refuses to have his own way,
And mould the poor stuff to his will.

The Lord is a shepherd who places his sheep
On the edge of a dangerous rock;
And, while to destruction they stumble or leap,
Sits bewailing the fate of his flock.

But, on seeing the fruit of the theory they state,
His defenders may open their eyes;
For, in robbing our hearts of a Deity to hate,
They have given us one to despise.

In working his dolls on their miniature stage,
If a showman would imitate God,
He'd weep for poor Judy and tremble with rage
When his Punch was applying the rod.

But, despite all the freaks that his puppets have played,
The showman contrives to keep cool;
While God by his puppets is grieved and dismayed,
And sits in despair like a fool.

Great God! though the timid who cringe at thy feet
May in terror thy wisdom avow,
The man who's conducting the show in the street
Is a hundredfold wiser than thou.

E. H. B. STEPHENSON.

THE CHILDREN'S PARTY.

NEARLY three hundred children enjoyed themselves to their hearts' content at the Hall of Science on January 30 The cake and tea they stowed away was a caution. And after that, during the evening, sweets, plum-puddings, etc., washed down by twenty-eight gallons of lemonade; for the skipping contests, walking matches, three-legged races, thread the needle, and tug-of-war contests were warm work, though Jack Frost was both within and without. The musicians, too, must have been thirsty, for they were kept going with little intermission, though they did not all drink lemonade. "Jack Frost" was the name of the children's operetta, and capitally performed it was by Misses O'Donoghue, Harding, Ward, Drew, and Guest, and by Masters Courtney, Winsor, J. and R. Forder, C. Shepherd, and B. Fox. The scenery, by Mr. R. G. Brown, represented an old Mill House. On the wall appeared, "Bill Stickers Beware"; but, just before the play, old Dan Chatterton solemnly stalked up and pasted a Freethinker bill over the notice, much to the amusement of youngsters and oldsters. There was a magic mill wheel, which had been stopped by Jack Frost, but which, after his defeat by the Fairy Sunshine, worked by hydraulic power, and ground out prizes for all the children present. None went empty away. Miss Vance was the substantial fairy behind the scenes who worked the oracle, and generally saw that things went right. Thanks are also due to Miss Robins, Miss Brown, Mrs. Sleigh, Mrs. Leekey, Mrs. Burch, and Messrs. Brown, Ward, Courtney, Forder, Guest, Bater, and Searle, for assistance in making the evening a delightful one to the children. A few pounds are still needed to clear up all accounts, and we hope they will reach Mr. Forder without delay.

FURTHER SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Per Mr. Searle, 7s.; Mr. Balchan, junr., 9s.; Mrs. Lightowler, 8s.; E. Winsor, 1s. 6d.; G. Ward, 5s. 6d.; Miss Simson, 3s.; Mr. Wood, 4s. 9d.; H. Cowell, 2s.; Mrs. O'Donoghue, 3s. 2d.; Mrs. Billot, 2s.; Mr. Bater, 2s. 6d.; W. Webber, 1s.; F. Schaller, 5s.; C. Shepherd, 5s. 3d.; Miss Neate, 6d.; H. M. Ridgway, 2s. 6d.; J. Walker, 1s.; W. Stewart, 2s. 6d.; E. Furby, 10s.; E. Newman, 5s.; Miss Pullen, 5s.; A. Wheeler, 1s.

The Committee desire to sincerely thank Mr. Church, of Holloway, and Mr. Godwin, of Hackney, for large supplies of sweets and cakes; Mr. Caspary for three hundred Bon-bons, and Messrs. Warborn, Penny, Mrs. Dunster, and an unknown friend, for toys, confectionery, etc.

Friends having collecting-cards are requested to return them not later than Sunday next, to Miss Vance.

R. FORDER, Treasurer.

AN UNKNOWN HERETIC.

IN Martin Luther's Colloquia (p. 86; 1652) I read: "Anno 1530 (said Luther) there was here at Wittenberg a student that had written in a book manie ungodlie questions; hee would wrest the Scriptures according to his own brains, and in a manner would prepare a new Epicurism; he alleged there were neither good nor evil angels, besides manie other blasphemous things against the Holie Ghost, the Resurrection of the dead, etc. The same was sharply reprehended by the Professors, who informed mee thereof; whereupon I desired the magistrates of the town to take these things into their consideration, and according to their offices would caus that Epicure to bee punished as other public offenders."

I should much like to know the name and the book of that Epicure. Can any German friend inform me if there is any record of his punishment at Wittenberg?

J. M. W.

Digitized by Google

JEHOVAH'S JOKES.

When cruel, bloody Abel seized a lamb,
And through his tender throat a stick did ram,
What do you think God did? Blamed him?
No; praised him.

When kindly Cain—who shrank from shedding blood
In "cold blood"—offered God a harmless "spud,"
What do you think God did? Praised him?
No; blamed him.

When Jacob sneaked from Esau all he had,
And vilely tricked his blind and dying dad,
What do you think God did? Cursed him?
No; blessed him.

When brutal Moses, Joshua, & Co.
Filled neighbors' lands with blood and fire and woe,
What do you think God did? Killed them?
No; helped them.

When Saul from cutting captives' throats refrained,
And thus respect from later ages gained,
What do you think God did? Blessed him?
No; cursed him.

When careful Uzzah carted Yahveh's box,
And held it safe when slipped the stumbling ox,
What do you think God did? Thanked him?
No; killed him.

When selfish Mary—vain, and lazy too—
Left worthy Martha all the work to do,
What do you think Christ did? Blamed her?
No; praised her.

When God's own folk assisted God's own plan,
By helping God to die for good of man,
What do you think God did? Blessed them?
No; cursed them.

This topsy-turvy God, whose best's our worst,
Who cursed and blessed where we'd have blessed and cursed,
This heav'nly clown had made, in playful spite,
His sense of wrong his creatures' sense of right;
And yet—and here's the joke—his Scriptures state:
Unless we love this God, whose deeds we hate;
Unless we honor those whose guilt amazes,
And scorn what all our moral judgment praises,
We'll die like dogs, and howl in hell and blazes!
(Selah!—and other refreshment.)
Let none, then, heed the disrespectful rumor
That God's a solemn party, void of humor.

G. L. MACKENZIE.

PROVIDENTIAL ACCIDENTS.

How often we read and hear of a "providential escape." The words are uttered so frequently and glibly as almost to make them sickening to the ears of those who understand their hollowness. One can hardly take up a newspaper without meeting with the phrase. It seems to be a sort of tail piece to nearly every accident recorded. If, while scores of lives are ruined, there can be found even one who gets off scot free, that person is sure to be the hero of providential interference, of at least one sort. But most people seem to lose sight of the other side of the picture, and, while rejoicing over the escape, forget that the same power—if such power there be—was also the cause of the disaster, and responsible for those who met their miserable fate. The term, "providential escape," is at best contradictory. If a providence presides over the destinies of the world, it should be a guarantee of perfect safety, and so control our lives as to leave no room for anything to happen which would tend to endanger our existence. A true providence ought rather to be an unfailing preventive of causes which would otherwise lead to mishaps.

This providential idea has also a tendency to lead those who have chanced to escape the clutches of a catastrophe to lose their manhood and offer up canting expressions of thanks for their deliverance to a "heavenly father," whose parental love and watchfulness has been the means of all the suffering to their fellow creatures. Of the many instances of this unmanly spirit we might mention that displayed by the few survivors of a terrible calamity at sea, who invariably tender thank-offerings to him who has drowned the rest.

If no other evidence will avail to persuade men from the notion that a god rules the universe, surely the obvious unconcern of that god for our welfare ought to dispel for ever such a misconception. If man will intelligently reflect and exercise some of his latent common sense and experience, he must inevitably come to the conclusion that human beings are of no more account than sparrows, and that both species of life exist without the slightest trace of divine intervention.

This foolish conception of an interfering providence is the bane of society, and not until it is swallowed up in reason will there be a stalwart, clear-headed, loving people, with all their energies centred upon the betterment of this world, judging its disorders in a rational light, and thoroughly convinced that upon man, and him alone, depends the lasting welfare of humanity. And let us for the future, when our Christian acquaintances begin to talk about providential escapes, call their attention to the other side of the account, and show them that for one providential escape there are a hundred providential accidents.

J. W. C. S.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. MARRIOTT'S LETTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE FREETHINKER."

DEAR SIR,—Your correspondent, Mr. A. J. Marriott, tells you (Freethinker, January 27) that "he is not a little disgusted that I should head a deputation of Brighton co-operators to pray for a diminution of public-houses in Brighton." In the courteous note you gave on this subject there is no foundation for Mr. Marriott's disquietude. There was no "deputation"—so I never "headed one." I merely forwarded a memorial, because a co-operative store, formed to promote thrift, always suffers if the members are induced to waste the wages, which, spent at the stores, bring saving and economy in the household. I am sorry Mr. Marriott should be "disgusted" at this. I have no doubt he has good sense enough to be delighted, if he understood the question.—Yours faithfully,

G. J. HOLYOAKE.

PROFANE JOKES.

Rev. Dr. Goodlee—"Tell me, Robert, why is it that you say your prayers?" Bobbie—"'Cause dad spanks me when I don't."

Darkey (in U.S. post-office)—"Please to gimme one stamp, sah." Clerk—"What denomination?" Darkey—"Baptis', sah! Baptis', o' course."

At prayers—Minnie (in a whisper)—"Jimmie, wot makes Uncle Eben shet 'is eyes wen he's prayin'?" Jimmie (in a louder whisper)—"Mebbe he's ashamed ter look the Lord in th' face."

Over the portal of a magnificent villa near Dresden, Saxony, is written: "Come unto me, all ye that are weary and heavy-laden, and I will give you rest." But at the back entrance to the garden is a sign that reads: "No beggars admitted. The dog bites."

An old darkey arose recently in one of the Southern prayer meetings and exclaimed: "Brethren and sistern, I've been havin' a dreffal time since las' we met together, chawing hard bones and swallowing bitter pills. I'm afraid I've broken every one of the Ten Commandments, but, thank the Lord, I haven't lost my religion!"

He was a curate, and nervous. On one occasion he read a chapter from Exodus, which he remembered for some time, as also did the congregation. "I am," he informed them, and then hurriedly turned over the pages, "an ass—the foal of an ass!" Realising that the pages had stuck together, he quickly parted them. "That I am!" triumphantly added the disconcerted youth.

How to Help Us.

(1) Get your newsagent to take a few copies of the Freethinker and try to sell them, guaranteeing to take the copies that remain unsold.
(2) Take an extra copy (or more), and circulate it among your acquaintances.
(3) Leave a copy of the Freethinker now and then in the train, the car, or the omnibus.
(4) Display, or get displayed, one of our contents-sheets, which are of a convenient size for the purpose. Mr. Forder will send them on application.
(5) Distribute some of our cheap tracts in your walks abroad, at public meetings, or among the audiences around street-corner preachers.
(6) Get your newsagent to exhibit the Freethinker in the window.

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY LECTURE NOTICES, ETC.

[Notices of Lectures, etc., must reach us by first post on Tuesday, and be marked "Lecture Notice," if not sent on post-card.]

LONDON.

HALL OF SCIENCE (142 Old-street, E.C.): 11.30, G. W. Foote, "The Government Program." (Free.) 6.30, musical selections; 7, G. W. Foote, "Humors and Absurdities of the Life of Christ." (Admission free; reserved seats 3d. and 6d.) Wednesday, at 8.30, G. W. Foote, "Shakespeare's 'Merchant of Venice.'"

BATTERSEA SECULAR HALL (back of Battersea Park Station): 7.30, Herbert Burrows, "Why Secularists should be Socialists." Monday, at 8, musical and dramatic entertainment and dance. (Tickets 3d. and 6d.) Tuesday and Friday, at 8, social gatherings for N.S.S. members and friends.

CAMBERWELL (North Camberwell Hall, 61 New Church-road): 7.30, Charles Watts, "Why Should we Live Moral Lives?—The Christian and Secular Answer." (Preceded by vocal and instrumental music.) Thursday, at 7.30, free science classes.

EAST LONDON (Swaby's Coffee House, 103 Mile-end-road, E.): 8, J. Fagan, "London To-day and Forty Years Ago."

ISLINGTON (Liberal and Radical Association Committee Rooms, Upper-street, near the Vestry Hall): Thursday, at 8.30, a lecture.

MILTON HALL (Hawley-crescent, 89 Kentish Town-road): 7.15, Olivia Dante Rossetti, "The Social and Political Conditions of Italy."

WEST LONDON ETHICAL SOCIETY (Princes' Hall, Piccadilly): 11.15, Dr. Stanton Coit, "Conscience as God's Voice."

WEST LONDON BRANCH ("Duke of York," Kensington-place, Silver-street, Notting-hill-gate): Monday, at 8.30, business meeting.

WOOD GREEN (Star Coffee House, High-street): 7, C. James, "Still it Moves."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

HYDE PARK (near Marble Arch): 11.30, F. Haslam, "Bible Stories: are they True?"

COUNTRY.

BIRMINGHAM (Coffee House, corner of Broad-street): Thursdays, at 8, papers, discussions, etc.

BRISTOL (Shepherds' Hall, Old Market-street): 7, G. E. Harris, "Phrenology."

BRADFORD (Oddfellows' Hall, Thornton-road): 7, Sam Standring, "The Prayer of Faith."

CHESTER (Old Chapel, Commonhall-street): 6.30, Charles Lewis, "The French Revolution—to the Overthrow of Robespierre." (Free.)

GLASGOW (Ex-Mission Hall, 110 Brunswick-street): 11.30, discussion class—James Gilbert, "Liberty in Art and Literature"; 6.30, Zosimus, "Great French Freethinkers—IV., Voltaire." (Free.)

HULL (St. George's Hall, Storey-street): 7, S. Ackroyd, "Gladstone as a Theologian."

LIVERPOOL (Oddfellows' Hall, St. Anne-street): 11, tontine society; 3, philosophy class—"Kant" (Ernest Newman); 7, Ernest Newman, "The Logic of the Faithful."

MANCHESTER SECULAR HALL (Rusholme-road, All Saints): 6.30, J. Greave Fisher, "Secularism and Individualism." (Free.)

PLYMOUTH (Democratic Club, Whimple-street): 7, miscellaneous evening.

ROCHDALE (Working Men's College, 4 Acker-street): 6.30, J. A. Ashton and others, recitations, music, etc.

SHEFFIELD SECULAR SOCIETY (Hall of Science, Rockingham-street): 3, Ernest Evans, "Science the Friend of Man—A Reply to the Grumblers"; 7, "Science from Lantern Slides." Wednesday, at 8, dancing.

SOUTH SHIELDS (Thornton's Variety Hall, Union-lane): 11, C. Cohen "Voltaire"; 7, "Christianity: its Rise."

SUNDERLAND (Lecture Room, Bridge End Vaults, opposite Echo office): 7, The Secretary, "Mind Considered as a Bodily Function."

Lecturers' Engagements.

C. COHEN, 12 Merchant-street, Bow-road, London, E.—All Sundays until April, South Shields.

STANLEY JONES, 58 Marlborough-road, Holloway, London, N.—Feb. 10, Dundee; 24, Edinburgh. March 3, Hull; 10, Sheffield; 11, Chesterfield.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Credon-road, Rotherhithe, London.—March 24, Camberwell.

SAM STANDRING, 6 Bury-road, Rochdale.—Feb. 10, Bradford; 17, Failsworth. March 26 and 27, Sheffield.

THOMAS PAINE'S WORKS.

The Age of Reason. New edition; with Preface by G. W. FOOTE. 1s.

Miscellaneous Theological Works. 1s.

Complete Theological Works. (Including the Age of Reason.) Cloth, 2s. 6d.

The Rights of Man. Centenary edition. With a Political Biography by J. M. WHEELER. 1s.; bound in cloth, 2s.

Last Words on Suicide

A REPLY TO THE CRITICS

OF

"IS SUICIDE A SIN?"

BY

COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

PRICE TWOPENCE.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C

Works by Colonel R. G. Ingersoll.

SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES. The only complete edition in England. Accurate as Colenso, and fascinating as a novel. 132 pp. 1s. Superior paper, cloth 1s. 6d.

DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT. A Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy. 6d.

THE GODS. 6d.

REPLY TO GLADSTONE. With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler. 4d.

ROME OR REASON? A Reply to Cardinal Manning. 4d.

CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS. 3d.

ORATION ON WALT WHITMAN. 3d.

ORATION ON VOLTAIRE. 3d.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. 3d.

PAINE THE PIONEER. 2d.

HUMANITY'S DEBT TO THOMAS PAINE. 2d.

ERNEST RENAN AND JESUS CHRIST. 2d.

TRUE RELIGION. 2d.

THE THREE PHILANTHROPISTS. 2d.

LOVE THE REDEEMER. 2d.

GOD AND THE STATE. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part I. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part II. 2d.

FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Dr. Field. 2d.

GOD AND MAN. Second reply to Dr. Field. 2d.

THE DYING CREED. 2d.

THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION. A Discussion with the Hon. F. D. Coudert and Gov. S. L. Woodford 2d.

THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH. 2d.

ART AND MORALITY. 2d.

DO I BLASPHEME? 2d.

THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE. 2d.

SOCIAL SALVATION. 2d.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE. An Agnostic's View. 2d.

SKULLS. 2d.

THE GREAT MISTAKE. 1d.

LIVE TOPICS. 1d.

MYTH AND MIRACLE. 1d.

REAL BLASPHEMY. 1d.

REPAIRING THE IDOLS. 1d.

CHRIST AND MIRACLES. 1d.

CREEDS & SPIRITUALITY. 1d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street E.C.

Price 1s., post free,

SATIRES AND PROFANITIES

BY

JAMES THOMSON (B.V.)

(Author of "The City of Dreadful Night").

Contents:—The Story of a Famous Old Jewish Firm (Jehovah, Son, and Co.)—The Devil in the Church of England—Religion in the Rocky Mountains—Christmas Eve in the Upper Circles—A Commission of Inquiry on Royalty—A Bible Lesson on Monarchy—The One Thing Needful.

"It cannot be neglected by any who are interested in one of the most pathetic personages of our time."—Academy.

"As clever as they are often profane."—Christian World.

"Well worth preserving."—Weekly Dispatch.

"Reminds one of the genius of Swift."—Oldham Chronicle.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price 2s. 6d.,

THE WITNESS OF ASSYRIA;

OR,

THE BIBLE CONTRASTED WITH THE MONUMENTS.

By CHILPERIC EDWARDS.

"The work has a full index, and is in every respect a valuable one."—Freethinker.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

ONE or TWO ROOMS to Let, Furnished or Unfurnished. Freethinkers preferred. J. K. van Breeghaze, 363 Compton-buildings, Goswell-road, E.C.

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each, upper or lower set, £1. Best quality, 4s. each, upper or lower, £2, completed in four hours when required; repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum 7s. 6d. each, on 18 ct. gold 15s., stopping 2s. 6d., extraction 1s., painless by gas, 5s.

TO FREETHINKERS, Ladies and Gentlemen requiring SUPERIOR CUT GARMENTS at moderate prices. First-class Style and Fit Guaranteed.—H. HAMPTON, Artiste Tailor, 14 Great Castle-street, W. Three doors from Regent-street. [Patronised by leading Freethinkers.]

FREETHINKER TRACTS

Sixpence per Hundred.

MARRIOTT, CLOTHIER,

311 EDGWARE ROAD, W., near Metropolitan Music Hall (same side), six doors from Church-street. TROUSERS, good wear, 5s. 9d., 7s. 6d., and 9s. 6d.; Blacks, 7s. 6d. and 10s. 6d. Thirty sizes kept in stock. OVERCOATS from 12s. 6d.

EMPLOYMENT WANTED, at CHARING or NEEDLEWORK,

By the WIDOW of a FREETHINKER. Willing to do anything to get food and rent. Once in good position. Recommended by Mr. Forder.

Address, Widow, care of Mr. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

PRICE SIXPENCE,

THE

SECULAR ALMANACK

For 1895.

Altered and Enlarged. Finely-Designed Cover.

EDITED BY

G. W. FOOTE & J. M. WHEELER.

CONTENTS: Progress of Freethought; by G. W. Foote—This World; by J. M. Wheeler—Heroes in the Service of Man; by Charles Watts—Dod Grile—A Wish; by Matthew Arnold—The Abducted Female Infidel—Farquhar of Netherton—Bits from Selden's "Table Talk"—Jeremy Bentham on Inspiration—Abou-ben Adhem and the Angel—Man's Soul his God—The Sacred Books of the World—The Dear God—What have Unbelievers Done for the World?—Information Concerning Freethought Work and Organisation—Lecturers, etc.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Colonel Ingersoll's Great New Lecture

ABOUT THE HOLY BIBLE

Price Sixpence.

London R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

W. J. Rendell's "Wife's Friend"

Recommended by Mrs. Besant in Law of Population, p. 32, and Dr. Allbutt in Wife's Handbook, p. 51. Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell-street, Clerkenwell; 2s. per doz., post free (reduction in larger quantities). For particulars send stamped envelope.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

BEWARE of useless imitations substituted by some dealers and chemists, the words "Rendell & Co." and "J. W. Rendall" being speciously and plausibly introduced to deceive the public.

LOOK FOR AUTOGRAPH REGISTERED TRADE MARK

W. J. Rendell

No. 182,688.

IN Red INK ON EACH BOX, WITHOUT WHICH NONE ARE GENUINE.

Higginson's Syringe, with Vertical and Reverse Current, 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 5s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. Dr. Allbutt's Quinine Powders, 2s. per doz. All prices post free.

W. J. RENDELL, 15 Chadwell-st., Clerkenwell, E.C.

THE BEST BOOK

ON NEO-MALTHUSIANISM IS, I BELIEVE,

TRUE MORALITY, or THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF NEO-MALTHUSIANISM.

By J. R. HOLMES, M.M.L., M.V.S., M.N.S.S.

160 pages, with portrait and autograph, bound in cloth, gilt lettered. Price 1s., post free.

 In order to bring the information within the reach of the poor, the most important parts of the book are issued in a pamphlet of 112 pages at ONE PENNY, post free 2d. Copies of the pamphlet for distribution 1s. a dozen post free.

The National Reformer of 4th September, 1892, says: "Mr Holmes' pamphlet . . . is an almost unexceptionable statement of the Neo-Malthusian theory and practice . . . and throughout appeals to moral feeling. . . . The special value of Mr. Holmes' service to the Neo-Malthusian cause and to human well-being generally is just his combination in his pamphlet of a plain statement of the physical and moral need for family limitation with a plain account of the means by which it can be secured, and an offer to all concerned of the requisites at the lowest possible prices."

The Council of the Malthusian League, Dr. Drysdale, Dr. Allbutt, and others have also spoken of it in very high terms.

The Trade supplied by R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C. Other orders should be sent to the author.

J. R. HOLMES, HANNEY, WANTAGE, BERKS.

Works by G. W. Foote.

Flowers of Freethought. First Series. 221 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Flowers of Freethought. Second Series. 302 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Bible Heroes. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Letters to the Clergy. First Series. 128 pp., 1s.

The Grand Old Book. A Reply to the Grand Old Man. An exhaustive answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture." 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Christianity and Secularism. Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Is Socialism Sound? Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 2s.

Infidel Death-Beds. Second edition, much enlarged, 8d. On superfine paper, in cloth, 1s. 3d.

Darwin on God. 6d.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s.

Will Christ Save Us? A Thorough Examination of the Claims of Jesus Christ to be considered the Savior of the World. 6d.

Reminiscences of Charles Bradlaugh. 6d.

A Defence of Free Speech. Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes. 4d.

Comic Sermons and Other Fantasias. 8d.

Rome or Atheism—the Great Alternative. 3d.

Letters to Jesus Christ. 4d.

Interview with the Devil. 2d.

Philosophy of Secularism. 3d.

Atheism and Morality. 2d.

My Resurrection. A Missing Chapter from the Gospel of Matthew, discovered by G. W. Foote. 2d.

The Folly of Prayer. 2d.

Ingersollism Defended against Archdeacon Farrar. 2d.

Was Jesus Insane? A Searching Inquiry into the Mental Condition of the Prophet of Nazareth. 1d.

Christianity and Progress. A Reply to Mr. Gladstone. 2d.

The Impossible Creed. An Open Letter to Bishop Magee on the Sermon on the Mount. 2d.

What was Christ? A Reply to J. S. Mill. 2d.

The Bible God. 2d.

Salvation Syrup; or, Light on Darkest England. A Reply to General Booth. 2d.

Is the Bible Inspired? A Criticism on Lux Mundi. 1d.

The Dying Atheist. A Story. 1d.

The Rev. Hugh Price Hughes's Converted Atheist. A Lie in Five Chapters. 1d.

Mrs. Besant's Theosophy. A Candid Criticism. 2d.

Secularism and Theosophy. A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant. 2d.

The New Cagliostro. An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky. 2d.

Bible Romances. New Edition. Revised and largely re-written. (1) The Creation Story, 2d.; (2) Eve and the Apple, 1d.; (3) Cain and Abel, 1d.; (4) Noah's Flood, 2d.; (5) The Tower of Babel, 1d.; (6) Lot's Wife, 1d.; (7) The Ten Plagues, 1d.; (8) The Wandering Jews, 1d.; (9) Balaam's Ass, 1d.; (10) God in a Box, 1d.; (11) Jonah and the Whale, 1d.; (12) Bible Animals, 1d.; (13) A Virgin Mother, 2d.; (14) The Resurrection, 2d.; (15) The Crucifixion, 1d.; (16) John's Nightmare, 1d.

The Shadow of the Sword. A Moral and Statistical Essay on War. 2d.

Royal Paupers. Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty. 2d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Freethought Publications.

Bible Handbook for Freethinkers and Inquiring Christians. Edited by G. W. Foote and W. P. Ball. Complete, paper covers, 1s. 4d.; superior edition, on superfine paper, bound in cloth, 2s.

The Jewish Life of Christ. Being the Sepher Toldoth Jeshu, or Book of the Generation of Jesus. With an Historical Preface and Voluminous Notes by G. W. Foote and J. M. Wheeler. Paper covers, 6d.; superior edition, superfine paper, cloth, 1s.

Bible Studies. Essays on Phallic Worship and other Curious Rites and Customs. By J. M. Wheeler. Illustrated, superior paper, 2s. 6d.

Biographical Dictionary of Freethinkers of All Ages and Nations. By J. M. Wheeler. Handsomely bound in cloth, 7s. 6d.

Darwin Made Easy. By Dr. Edward B. Aveling, Fellow of the London University. This is the best popular exposition of Darwinism extant. Cloth, 1s.

Essays in Rationalism. By Charles Robert Newman (Atheist Brother of the late Cardinal Newman). With a Preface by George Jacob Holyoake, and a Biographical Sketch by J. M. Wheeler. 1s. 6d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

GREATEST BARGAINS ON EARTH.

1 Suit Length, Serge or Tweed
1 Dress Length, Tweed
1 Gentleman's Umbrella
1 Ladies' Umbrella
All for 21s. Carriage Paid.

Gentleman's Scarboro-Shaped Mackintosh, 26s.
Worth at least 42s.
Give chest, waist, and length measurements.

1 Navy Serge Dress Length
1 Black Cashmere Dress Length
1 Mixture Tweed Dress Length
All for 21s. Carriage Paid.

Lot 11
1 Pair All-Wool Blankets
1 Pair of Sheets
1 Quilt
1 Table-cloth
All for 21s. Carriage Paid.

TROUSERS TO MEASURE, 10s. 6d. per pair.
Fill up one of our Self-Measurement Forms, and you will get a 15s. pair of Trousers for 10s. 6d.

Four All-Wool TROUSERS' LENGTHS.
SPLENDID QUALITIES.
All for 21s. Carriage Paid.

Three NAVY SAILOR SUITS
to fit Boys up to seven years old.
All for 21s. Carriage Paid.

1 Serge Suit Length
1 Tweed Suit Length
21s. Carriage Paid. Worth double.

Send at Once, before the Sale Ends.

J. W. GOTT, 2 & 4 UNION-STREET, BRADFORD.

ASK YOUR GROCER
FOR THE
ROYAL CHISWICK TABLE JELLIES

EXPERTS OPINION—
"The Perfection of Jelly."

"Certainly far superior to all other Jelly Tablets—in transparency, strength, and in flavor utterly beyond comparison."

Sample Dozen—Pints 4s. 6d.; Quarts 8s., carriage free.
WHOLESALE TERMS ON APPLICATION.

TOUZEAU PARRIS & CO.,
ENFIELD WORKS, ACTON, LONDON, W.

Price 2d., by post 2½d.,
AN ESSAY ON SUICIDE.
BY
DAVID HUME.
With an Historical and Critical Introduction by G. W. FOOTE.
London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

A THREE-QUARTER LENGTH
PORTRAIT OF CHARLES BRADLAUGH
(Life Size) for Sale at Thomas Garbutt's, 82 Nottingham-street, Sheffield. Acknowledged, by those who have seen most of them in England, to be the best likeness produced.

ALLINSON FOR HEALTH.
HOME CONSULTATIONS—10 a.m. to 1 p.m., 10s. 6d.; 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., 5s. Patients Visited.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. I. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on Management of Infancy, Health, Longevity, The Teeth, Tobacco, The Drink Question. Also the Cause and Cure of Disease, Constipation, Biliousness, Eczema, Blackheads and Pimples, Nervousness, Coughs and Colds, Chest Complaints, Deafness, Thread Worms, Long Worms, Tape Worms, The Itch, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. II. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on The Healing Power of Nature, Urine, Saline Starvation, the Hair and its Management, Sleep and Sleeplessness, Want of Energy, etc. Advice for the Thin, for the Stout; Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. III. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on No More Death, Management of Young Children, Unsuspected Domestic Poisons, How to Grow Tall, to Keep Warm, to Live One Hundred Years, to Improve the Memory, and to become Beautiful and Attractive. On the Cause and Cure of Stomach Troubles, Flatulence, Sleeplessness, Varicose Veins, Boils and Carbuncles, Sebaceous Tumors and Warts, Hay Fever, Winter Cough, Chilblains, Epilepsy, and on the Diseases Produced by Taking Mercury.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. IV. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on Hardening, Work and Overwork, Sugar and its Abuse, Milk as Food, the Tomato, Poultices, Quinine, Against the Knife, Arsenical Poisoning, Tonics, Against Stimulants in Disease, about Swallowing Pins and other Articles. Also Cure of Sunstroke, Dog Bites, Pains in the Back, Pediculi or Lice, Chicken-Pox, Synovitis or Inflammation of the Joints, Tonsilitis or Quinsy, Herpes (Tetter or Shingles), Erysipelas, Ulcer of the Stomach, Epidemic Influenza, Sciatica, Psoriasis or English Leprosy, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. V. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on Pure Water, The Mouth, Its Use and Abuse; Rules for the Aged, Training, Blood Letting, Nose Bleeding, Felon or Whitlow, Ingrowing Toenail, Gum Boil, Cold in the Head, a Red Nose, Flushing and Blushing, Toothache, Sore Mouth, St. Vitus' Dance, Goitre, Mumps, Inflamed Eyes and Eyelids, Fits, Fainting, Apoplexy, Spitting and Vomiting of Blood, Vomiting, Wounds, Burns, Scalds, Bruises, etc.

The Five Volumes, strongly and neatly bound, price 6s. 9d., post free.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.—An Eye Opener to Drug Takers.
RHEUMATISM: ITS CAUSE AND CURE. Post free for 3d.
DIET AND DIGESTION. Post free for 3d.
CONSUMPTION: ITS NATURAL CURE. Post free 3d.
All these Books, bound in One Vol., post free, 3s. 6d. Send Postal Order

THREE PAMPHLETS FOR YOUNG MEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.
A BOOK FOR MARRIED WOMEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.

All communications to be addressed to—
DR. T. R. ALLINSON,
4 Spanish-place, Manchester-square, London, W.

Printed and Published by G. W. FOOTE, at 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

VOL. XV.—NO. 7. SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1895. PRICE TWOPENCE.

CROMWELL'S STATUE.

A VERY amusing incident was recorded in Tuesday's newspapers. The evening before, in the House of Commons, Mr. W. Johnston asked the First Commissioner of Works when it was intended to erect the statue of Oliver Cromwell, and if he could specify the proposed site. Before the question could be answered, up jumped Mr. Stanley Leighton and asked another. He desired to know whether the right honorable gentleman could also find a niche for a statue of Protector Richard, better known as "Tumbledown Dick"—the heir and successor of his Highness Oliver Cromwell. This laborious joke—about as silly as was ever perpetrated—caused a good deal of laughter in the House of Commons, which, after the House of Lords, is about the dullest assembly in this kingdom. Silly things, however, do get ended; and when Mr. Stanley Leighton sat down, Mr. Herbert Gladstone replied that the proposed cost of a Cromwell statue would appear in the 1895-6 estimates, but the question of the exact site was still under consideration.

We may take it, then, that the House of Commons will, in all probability, vote a sum of money for a statue of Oliver Cromwell, and that it will be placed on some site under the control of the First Commissioner of Works, possibly in one of the passages of that architectural monstrosity, the Houses of Parliament.

Was ever anything more stored with latent humor? Oliver Cromwell was the one man in English history who turned the House of Commons out of doors—and the House of Commons is going to give him a statue. Charles the First went down to the House to arrest the Five Members, and met more than his match. He also dismissed parliament in 1628, and did not call another till 1640, but that was the Long Parliament, which would not be dissolved, and which lasted till after his head was amputated. Oliver Cromwell did worse than this. He went down with a band of resolute soldiers and sent the Rump a-packing; and as all the members wore swords and could use them, and some were fanatical enough for anything, it was no child's play. Then he locked the door and put the key in his pocket. And the worst of it was that not a dog in the whole of London barked against this unconstitutional proceeding. Cromwell called three parliaments afterwards, but they would jaw without doing any business. One of them spent a week discussing whether James Nayler, the Quaker, should be burnt alive, besides being branded and mutilated. Cromwell thought a week was too long for such nonsense; and he said so in his own way, by a deed; he told the parliament to go home. And again the key was in his pocket.

Fancy a statue put up by parliament to a man like that? Does it only mean that, say what we will about him, Cromwell was a great Englishman? Or does it mean that Cromwell was right in shutting-up parliaments? Let there be no mistake about it. Cromwell would have had as little sympathy with our National Palaver as with any to which he administered the quietus. How grimly he would have smiled at the statesmanship of appointing a special committee to report some time next summer on the "unemployed" who are starving this winter! Talk! Talk! Talk! Cromwell hated all that incontinence of speech. What was the use of talking unless it led to something? What wisdom could he perceive in debating for weeks when the voting could be foretold at the beginning? What can any man—not a jackass, or a pedant, or a time-server—see in it but mere vanity and vexation of spirit; vanity on the part of the talkers, and vexation of spirit to numerous other people?

It may, of course, be contended that Oliver Cromwell attempted the impossible; that human affairs will always refuse to be conducted in a sensible way. That is one view, the pessimist's. But there is another view, which is not exactly the optimist's—namely, that Cromwell was born three hundred years before his proper time. The late Prince Consort was not a particularly wise man, but he sometimes saw the truth; and he certainly did see it when he said that Parliamentary Government was on its trial. It was one of the few sensible things he ever said, and of course he was bitterly censured for saying it. Parliamentary Government is, indeed, more than on trial. It is under sentence. Every man who has any idea of business, and any honesty to back it, is perfectly aware that Parliamentary Government has proved a most ridiculous failure. Is despotism, then, the only alternative? Nothing of the kind. The alternative is common sense. Were it not for the standing armies, which might be used against a nation's liberties, there is no reason in the world why the affairs of every civilised nation could not be conducted on business lines, like the affairs of a ship on the high seas, or of a great commercial house on dry land.

Cromwell was not a parliamentarian. He saw "divine right" royalty break down. He also saw parliamentary government break down. After his time the two patched up a treaty of alliance; and, now two hundred years have rolled by, it is fatally discredited.

Cromwell would have done immense good for England, but the rogues and fools—especially the fools—would not let him do too much. He was a professed Christian, but he had little of the Christian's bigotry. Long before he was Lord Protector, he remarked, in a letter to the Speaker of the House of Commons, that if a man could serve the state no inquiry should be made into his opinions. He would not tolerate open Catholicism, but Catholicism was then a perpetual intrigue and rebellion against every liberal government. He would not sanction the persecution of the Quakers, he let the Jews come back to England after hundreds of years of banishment. He would never have assisted in persecuting even an Atheist, merely on account of his opinions. Men of all opinions, to use his own language, could serve the state. Whether they were going to Heaven or Hell was their own business.

Cromwell's heart was eaten out by the rogues and fools. They tried to kill him by poison and dagger, but they failed. They killed him more slowly. And after he was dead they had their innings; and what an innings it was! There is no argument like comparison.

Cromwell was the first man in English history who understood toleration; certainly the first great statesman who tried to reduce it to practice. He would have gone farther than John Milton. What does a man like this want with a niche and a statue at the hands of some insignificant Commissioner of Works? He fills a whole big chapter in English history—and fills it for ever.

G. W. FOOTE.

Digitized by Google

THE MORAL CLAIMS OF CHRISTIANITY.

If any instance were wanted of the spread of Secular principles, it might be found in the changed tactics of Christian advocates. In the good old days of Christian supremacy Christianity was put forward as a divine revelation and the only way of salvation. Stress was laid on its credentials of miracles and of prophecy as proving it to be superhuman and divine. The joys of heaven and the terrors of hell were dilated upon to attract the faithful and warn the unbelieving. Satan, the enemy of souls, was evoked as the explanation of all difficulties. Now-a-days Satan is superannuated, and hell never mentioned to ears polite. Its temperature is popularly supposed to fit it for a skating rink. Miracles and prophecies are kept in the background; the former are felt to be rather sources of difficulty to minds trained in the scientific conception of natural law, while prophecies only raise the troublesome question of proving that their records were in existence before the time of their alleged fulfilment. Accordingly, we now hear of the sublime moral teachings of Christianity, of the sweet reasonableness of Jesus, and of the good which Christianity has done to the world. Virtually this is a surrender of the whole question to the Freethinker. For he has no quarrel with morality or moral influences, and only objects to their being ascribed to superhuman sources and placed upon what he considers a false basis of supernaturalism.

The point at issue between the Christian and the Freethinker is not whether Christianity has done some good or not, but whether it is of supernatural origin. Is it infallibly divine, or is it but one of many religions which have guided men's lives? Let it be granted it has had a moral influence. Can this be denied to Buddhism, to Confucianism, or to Mohammedanism? All religions teach morality, but does Christianity give assurance of practice? When you say a man is a Mohammedan, for instance, you know he is sober. Can you have the same assurance when you say a man is a Christian?

Then, is there not a sufficient set-off to the good done by Christianity in the persecution, malice, hatred, and all uncharitableness which it has engendered; in the slavery and tyranny of the past taught by its god-given code; in its persecution of witches also inculcated by the Bible; in its opposition to science? It is Christian theology which has placed creed before conduct, which has extolled death-bed repentance above an honest and consistent life. It is Christian theology which has taught men to hate father and mother, and that duty consists in obedience to the will of God, irrespective of considerations of human welfare. It is Christian theology which has increased selfish egoism by its contemptible offer of salvation through the merits of another, its terrors of burning brimstone and torments, and its even more contemptible bribes of thrones and golden harps, and the recompense of a hundredfold hereafter for all that is resigned now. All this the Secular spirit of the age is recoiling from, and Christian advocates accordingly keep their theology as much as possible in the background.

The political and social life of the modern world shows a complete disregard for the teachings of Jesus. Indeed, Dr. Magee, the late Archbishop of York, admitted that the Sermon on the Mount was not practicable by the State. The profession of Christianity is only profession, upon which practice does not follow. In Mohammedan lands all law decisions are founded on the Koran. But Christian magistrates censure and punish the Peculiar People, who follow St. James, and when anyone is sick call in the elders and pray over them. They punish men who desert their wives for the sake of religion. Yet Jesus, or the monks who wrote about him, said: "Every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive an hundredfold, and shall inherit everlasting life," and "If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple" (Matthew xix. 29; Luke xiv. 26).

The truth is that, while pretending that the words of the Bible are wholly divine, people pick and choose, take what suits them, and quietly put aside the rest. Protestants forget that the books come down to us through the monks of the Romish Church, and that their view of Jesus and his religion is an entirely different one.

Is it true that, as Prebendary Row says, the evangel of modern enlightenment was taught more than 1,850 years ago? I answer, No. Jesus never spoke a word for education, enlightenment, industry, or social amelioration. He thought the world was coming to an end in the lifetime of those standing around him. He preached other-worldliness. He said, "The poor ye have always with you," and would deal with it by almsgiving. Science goes to work another way, and seeks to remove the causes of poverty and other evils. Nor were the teachings of Jesus original to himself. Everyone of his precepts can be paralleled from earlier Pagan teachers, and from the doctrines of Buddha, of Confucius, and of Lao-tse. Christians may be safely challenged to instance a single doctrine which was new to the world. Why, then, should it be supposed to be divine?

It is wrong to ascribe the benefits of Christianity, such as they are, to one man. From the New Testament itself it is plain that Paul had more to do with the spread of the religion than Jesus, who said he was only sent to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, and that it was not fit that the children's food should be cast to dogs. In truth, the Christian Church has been built up by the labors of thousands of men. And it is being slowly improved by the influence of the Secular spirit, substituting work for prayer, science for faith, conduct for creed, and attention to this world for attention to kingdom-come.

J. M. Wheeler.

WAS CHRIST A POLITICAL AND SOCIAL REFORMER?

(Concluded from page 84.)

The burden of Christ's preaching was, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." What was meant by this kingdom it is rather difficult to decide, for it is variously described in the Gospels. It is certain, however, that, whether it signified the reign of peace and justice on earth, or the appearance of Jesus "in the clouds," neither event has taken place up to date, although Christ said that in his time the kingdom was "at hand." In Luke (xvii. 21) it is stated "the kingdom of God is within you"; but that does not quite harmonise with the description given of it in Matthew (xiii. 47–50), where it is alleged that the kingdom of heaven is "like unto a net that was cast into the sea," which, when full, had the good of its contents retained, and the bad cast away. "So shall it be at the end of the world," when the angels are to "sever the wicked from among the just, and shall cast them into the furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth." Now, if this refers to a condition upon earth, it is not a very happy one. And in neither case is there any light thrown upon the rational conduct of men, either politically or socially. Besides, the repeated references made by Christ to the approaching end of all earthly institutions render the idea of his being a reformer of this world altogether meaningless. The termination of mundane affairs was to occur in the presence of those to whom Jesus was speaking (Matthew xvi. 28). Whatever other texts may be cited to the contrary, the meaning here is clear, that no opportunity was to be given, and no provisions made, to reform the political and social conditions of earth. Let any one read the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew, and try to harmonise the declarations there ascribed to Christ with the belief that his mission was to reform the world, and the impossibility of the task will soon be evident. True, in Matthew (xxv.) works of utility are required to secure a place at the "right hand" of God. But what does this involve? Uniformity of belief (Mark xvi. 16), and only the relief, not the cure, of poverty. No scheme was even hinted at by Christ whereby the great army of the poor and depraved should be impossible. He was inferior to the French philosopher, who aimed at providing a condition of society wherein men should be neither depraved nor poor.

To put the matter concisely, what are the factors of political and social progress? Briefly, they are these: The cultivation of the intellect, the extension of physical and mental freedom, the recognition and the application of the principle of justice and liberty to all members of the community, regardless of their belief or non-belief in theology, the knowledge and application of science and art, the organisation of labor and the proper cultivation of the soil, the possession of political power, the understanding of the true value and use of wealth, and, finally, the persistent study of, and the constant struggling against, the numerous evils, wrongs, and injustice that now rob life of its comforts and real worth. These are the agencies that all men, who claim to be political and social reformers, should support and cultivate. Not one of these originated with Jesus, and throughout his career he never availed himself of these essentials of all progress. Thus, to designate him as the great social redeemer is entirely unjustifiable. His very mode of living was the opposite to that of a practical reformer. He was an ascetic, and avoided as much as possible the turmoil of public life, from which he might have learnt something of what was necessary to adjust the social relations. Prayer, not work, was his habit. In the day, and at night, would he retire to the solitude of the mountain, and there pray to his father (Luke vi. 12 and xxi. 37). So far did he believe in the efficacy of supplications to God that he frequently told his disciples that whatever they asked of his father he would grant the request (Matthew xviii. 19; xxi. 22; John xvi. 23). That this was a delusion is clear from the fact that he prayed himself for the unity of Christendom, that his followers might be one (John xvii. 21); yet from his time down to the present divisions have always existed among Christians. He distinctly promised that "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do" (John xiv. 13, 14). Relying upon this, the Church for centuries has been asking that unbelief should cease, and yet we find it more extensive to-day than it ever was. The lesson learnt from experience is, that all reforms are the result of active work, not the outcome of prayerful meditations.

Digitized by Google

With all these drawbacks in the character of Jesus, it is to me marvellous how he can be accepted as a model for us in the present age. But thousands of his devotees insist upon claiming him as their Ideal, although they cannot regulate their conduct by such a standard. Such persons overlook the fact that, if the better parts of an Ideal are marred by that which is erroneous and impracticable, it is comparatively useless as a guide in life. That Christ's alleged teachings are so marred the Gospels amply testify. His conduct, on several occasions, was such as his followers would not attempt to emulate to-day. Such, for instance, as his treatment of his parents (Luke ii. 43–49; John ii. 4); his cursing of the fig-tree (Matthew xxi. 18, 19); his driving the money changers from the temple with "a scourge of small cords" (John ii. 15); his possession of an ass and a colt, which evidently did not belong to him, and riding upon both of them into Jerusalem (Matthew xxi. 2-11); his expletives to the Pharisees (Luke xi. 37–44); his breaking up the peace of the domestic circle (Matthew x. 34–36).

Judged by the New Testament, Christ was certainly not "The Light of the World," for he revealed nothing of practical value, and he taught no virtues that were before unknown. No doubt in his life, supposing he ever lived, there were many commendable features; but he was far from being perfect. While he might have been well-meaning, he was in belief superstitious, in conduct inconsistent, in opinions contradictory, in teaching arbitrary, in knowledge deficient, in faith vacillating, and in pretensions great. He taught false notions of existence, had no knowledge of science; he misled his followers by claiming to be what he was not, and he deceived himself by his own credulity. He lacked experimental force, frequently living a life of isolation, and taking but slight interest in the affairs of this world. It is this lack of experimental force throughout the career of Christ that renders his notions of domestic duties so thoroughly imperfect. The happiness of a family, according to his teaching, was to be impaired before his doctrines could be accepted. So far as we know, he was never a husband or a father; and he did not aspire to be a statesman, a man of science, or a politician. Now, a person who lacks experience in these phases of life is not in the best position to give practical and satisfactory lessons thereon. Even in the conditions of life he is said to have filled, this "Light of the World" failed to exhibit any high degree of excellence, discrimination, or manly courage. As a son, he lacked affection and consideration for the feelings of his parents. As a teacher, he was mystical and rude; and as a reasoner, he was defective and illogical. Lacking a true method of reasoning, possessing no uniformity of character, Christ exhibited a strange example—an example injudicious to exalt and dangerous to emulate. At times he was severe when he should have been gentle. When he might have reasoned he frequently rebuked. When he ought to have been firm and resolute he was vacillating. When he should have been happy he was sorrowful and desponding. After preaching faith as the one thing needful, he himself lacked it when he required it the most. Thus, on the cross, when a knowledge of a life of integrity, a sensibility of the fulfilment of a good mission, a conviction that he was dying for a good and righteous cause, and fulfilling the object of his life—when all these should have given him moral strength, we find him giving vent to utter despair. So overwhelmed was he with grief and anxiety of mind that he "began to be sorrowful and very heavy." "My soul," he exclaimed, "is sorrowful even unto death." At last, overcome with grief, he implores his father to rescue him from the death which was then awaiting him.

It is contended by some that, although Christ did not give detailed remedies for existing evils, he taught "general principles" which would, if acted upon, prove a panacea for the wrongs of life. This was not so, for his "general principles" lacked the saving power that was desired. What were those "principles" as laid down in the Gospels? So far as they can be understood, they were as follows: Absolute trust in God; implicit belief in himself; reliance upon the prayer of supplication; disregard of the world; taking no anxious thought for the morrow; encouragement of poverty, and contempt of riches; obedience to the law of the Old Testament; neglect of home and families; non-resistance of evil; that persecution in this world and punishment in some other would follow the rejection of Christianity; and that sickness was caused by the possession of devils. These are among the leading "principles" taught by Christ; and, if they were acted upon, there would be an end of all progress, harmony, and self-reliance. But even if the "general principles" propounded by Jesus were good, that would not be enough to make him the greatest reformer. It is necessary, in addition to knowing what is to be done, to have the knowledge of how it is to be done. And this is just what Jesus has not taught us. Principles do not aid progress unless they can be applied; and, whatever value his teachings may have as matters of belief, they are incapable of application in the great cause of political and social advancement in the nineteenth century.

CHARLES WATTS.

THE CHURCH AND THE DEMOCRACY.

LATTERLY there has been shown a most remarkable interest in social problems by a section of advanced Churchmen. Now, we would be very reluctant to in any way deprecate such a movement, or say aught that might be taken as a sneer against it. It is only by everyone who considers there are grievances to be exposed and wrongs to be righted, making his voice heard, that any progress can come. And, reason knows, there are enough evils and social sores to engage the attention and study of every honest thinker. But when one sees this new-born zeal on the part of the Church—or a small portion of it—one needs to be cautious. When we bear in mind that, historically, the Churches have been the inveterate enemies of all reform; when it is recollected that the bishops, as the representatives in Parliament of the Church, have consistently voted against every measure calculated to make for advancement; when one remembers that the Church has always been the foe of science, and that science is the only hope of the future; when all this is kept in mind, one must scrutinise very carefully these new professions of democratic love. The Church, in short, has betrayed progress too often for her mere verbal promise to be accepted now.

One example of this new fervor is the Christian Social Union, under whose auspices courses of Socialistic sermons, full of denunciation of the capitalist and mammon-seeker, are delivered by clergymen—who are not exactly starving. Such a sermon was delivered a few weeks ago by Dr.

Digitized by Google

Stubbs, Dean of Ely, in Holy Trinity Church, Sloane-square—an eminently democratic neighborhood; and a report of the discourse is before us. It is because it contains a few remarkable things that may be noticed that we deal with it here. It is probably only a type of many sermons which the pulpit is now giving forth.

At the beginning of his sermon the Dean quotes an apocryphal saying of Jesus, that he was practically going to turn the existing state of affairs upside down. "Unless ye shall cause that which is on the right hand to be on the left, and that which is on the left hand to be on the right, and that which is above to be below, and that which is before to be behind, ye have no knowledge of the kingdom of God." Now, that is a pretty large order. Certainly, one would say such a preacher was a revolutionary, if the word "revolutionary" has any meaning. There must be an absolute change—that is the meaning of the declaration. Yet Dr. Stubbs says that Christ "was not a revolutionist." Probably Dr. Stubbs has an aversion to revolution. "Christ," it seems, "did come to remodel society; He did come to turn the world upside down . . . . . and the Christian Church, in the idea of its Founder, had for its object the reorganisation and the reconstitution of society, no less than the salvation of the individual." But what a commentary on all this is the simple record of nineteen Christian centuries! Christ came to turn the world upside down—and the world was too strong or too heavy for him. And he was omnipotent, forsooth! Let the Christian get out of this eternal dilemma as he may. Christ, he is always telling us, came to save the world, and the world is still "unsaved." Was Christ, then, a failure? Was he not powerful enough to effect his object? Was "God Almighty" too weak for his own "creation"? What has the religionist to say? Let us hear Dr. Stubbs again. He tells us that "it is, alas! only too easy to find many chapters which record only the Church's failure to sustain the character of a savior of society; yet, when we remember that all history is but a record of imperfectly realised ideals, it is only fair, surely, to ascribe the social failures of the Church to a falling short of the original ideal, rather than to any want of completeness in the ideal itself." How suave! The Christian ideal is perfect only—it can't be realised. And the Church, it seems, is just an ordinary natural phase of human effort, such as "all history" is concerned with. But we understood that this Church was the peculiar favorite of God; that it had large quantities of the Holy Ghost and divine grace, and other like commodities, stored on its premises. Now, Dr. Stubbs says it is only a human, imperfect institution. The fact is, these religionists cry hot and cold to suit their purpose. Just as the Bible is a unique and miraculous book at one time, and a merely human record when its errors and its filth have to be explained away, so the Church is a divine institution to-day, and a human one to-morrow. One can only say that sophistry of this kind does not evidence that love of truth and candor to which the democratic Dean aspires.

But the Dean, after some talk on the "democracy of to-morrow," gives expression to what we believe to be the real aim of, and object of, these ecclesiastics in the social movement. He is concerned, in fact, for the religiosity of the future. "For if," he tells us, "the English democracy of the future is not going to be a religious democracy, then God help us all." Aye, there's the rub! We must make sure that "religion"—and the loaves and fishes—are safe, anyhow, democracy or no democracy. And that we venture to suggest is the mission of what we may call these interlopers in the camp of reform; nine-tenths of them are there for the purpose of laying the foundations of their priestcraft in the new soil that seems so fruitful and so full of promise. Honest men in the Church who desire to assist the cause of progress there may be; nay, honest men there undoubtedly are. But they are the exceptions, not the rule. They represent a phase of opinion which cannot be general or permanent. You cannot belong to the camp of Progress and the camp of Faith without feeling the strain, and soon you will be compelled to break either with Progress or with Faith. And as the typical Churchman is a Churchman first and a humanist afterwards, one is compelled to look askance at the typical reforming ecclesiastic.

And, read in that light, this passage of Dean Stubbs's sermon is ominous and reveals a good deal. Listen! "There is no use mincing matters: unless the world goes back, democracy must go forward; the will of the people must more and more prevail. We cannot prevent numbers ruling; we can only try to teach them to rule well." The italics, of course, are ours. But doesn't that one sentence reveal worlds?—"We can only try to teach them to rule well." Isn't it the expression of a man forced against his will to concede something, and then trying to make the best of a bad necessity? Trying to teach them to rule well means, of course, dosing them up with "Christ" and reverence for his "Holy Church" and her deans. But the Dean gets even more definite. He goes on: "And the Church of Christ, if it is to be of any use at all in the world, must take part in that work. She must not waste time in lamenting the mistakes of the past—and God knows the social errors and sins of the Church, in its travesty of her Master's message of social salvation, have been great—but she must address herself to the tasks of the future." So there it is. The Church captured the old civilisation and dragged it down; it must set itself to the task of capturing the new. But Dr. Stubbs moves a bit too fast. If the Church has made so many mistakes as even he admits, we have surely a right, in the light of that history, to question her credentials now. To say in effect, in the one sentence: "We have blundered hopelessly in the past; we have made desperate mistakes. We are going to guide you in the future"; isn't it a little out of gear? The fact is, the meekness and candor displayed by Dr. Stubbs are very admirable in their way, and we welcome these admissions of the Church's incompetency and the Church's cupidity; but even Dr. Stubbs's meekness is a flimsy foundation for a fresh support to an organisation of which he is but a more or less unrepresentative unit.

Even in the conclusion of his sermon he suggests an analogy which he can hardly have intended, which bears out our point. He tells us that Christ "uttered words until then almost unknown—Love, Service, Sacrifice, Duty—and the dead arose . . . . . from that dead society arose the Christian world, the world of Liberty, Equality, Brotherhood." For the moment, it matters little that these statements are not true; indeed, if Dr. Stubbs were given to that sort of thing, we should take the reference to the Christian Liberty and Equality as downright joking. The "Brotherhood," of course, one may admit when one calls to mind Torquemada, St. Bartholomew's Eve, Calvin, Smithfield, and other brotherly memories. Decidedly the "brotherhood" part of Christianity has always been a strong point. But the real significance of the passage is this: Christ, vide the Dean, came with these fine phrases on his lips, and everything was to run smoothly ever after. Yet, instead of running smoothly, there were blunders and failures and crimes—vide the Dean. Now, however, comes the Christian reformer with a fresh batch of fine phrases—everything is to run smoothly now. Will the result be different? Or will some newer new Christian of the twentieth century come to tell us of the blunders of the Christianity of the nineteenth?

FREDERICK RYAN.

REWARD.

THE idea of reward as a stimulus to virtue is radically wrong. It must ever appear in a disfavorable light to thinking minds. The substance of a thing may be the same, but only that deed which is actuated by righteous motives can be properly considered as good. The man who throws a sovereign upon the plate from a wish to appear respectable has not done a righteous deed. A good motive, though it should result in abortive effort, is to be counted for righteousness. But to do good for sake of reward is to act on a bad motive. To hold up the rewards of heaven as a stimulus to mankind to act rightly is to instigate men to act by unworthy motives, and is, in itself, morally wrong. Yet this is what is constantly done. The highest rule that man can act upon—namely, to do right for righteousness' sake—occurs nowhere in the Bible. Man always asks himself, "Why should I do this thing?" and has not as yet acquired sufficient nobility of mind to satisfy himself with the answer, "Because it is right."

It is instructive to examine into the practical force which this idea of reward in a future life possesses in connection with the conduct of men here and now. Is it effectual in furthering the interests of truth and virtue in our midst? Is it useful in promoting the moral welfare of mankind? Regarded as a recompense, it has, to ordinary minds, the disadvantage of offering a reward of a different kind from the pleasure for whose loss it is to compensate. If a man abstain from the pleasure of the table, he knows the recompense of heaven will not be one of a similar kind to that pleasure he loses. It boots nothing to say it will be something far higher and nobler, or that the things of this transitory life are not to be compared to it. If men are to look upon it as a return for abstinence here, they will naturally look for a repayment in kind. Men's minds are made so, and will not be persuaded out of their nature into desiring to lose one thing and gain another in its place. There is also the lapse of time between the loss and its recompense to be considered. Man feels his abstinence as a very actual thing. Is the certainty of heaven (though it were assured as a fact of science) a very actual thing to him? Are the thoughts of heaven ever very real to men? How hard it is to throw away a little actual good which we hold in our hands, even on the assurance of a much greater benefit to follow. The idea, we may safely say, can be but rarely strong enough to persuade us to forego the pleasures of the hour. The fact is exemplified again and again in life. We choose intinctively the nearest and most certain good. If I may be excused a homely illustration, we prefer to sustain ourselves on broken victuals when we are hungry than await the feast that is being prepared. It is precisely the same with the great promised compensations of heaven, which most of us would barter for a little comfort to be enjoyed now, when we feel the want of it. Faust is not intended to represent a bad man, and in exchanging his soul for present pleasure he is but fulfilling the natural desire of all men. We can but possess the present, and most of us are in the habit of leaving the far future to take care of itself.

Digitized by Google

Over and above all such considerations it should be recognised that reward heresfter cannot truly be compensation for present ills. To be happy at one time does not repay the unhappiness of an anterior period. Man's present feelings are all-in-all to him. He lives but, as it were, a moment; for the past and future seem like unreal shadows. If, then, he experiences a moment of pain, he has suffered; and, though the next be spent in the most entrancing pleasures, it is so sharply divided from the first as to seem scarcely related. To say that in the past we sorrowed, but that now we experience pleasure, is to define two separately existing epochs, which do not interact upon each other—do not obliterate or annul one another. Pain is grievous, though happiness may follow; happiness retains its nature, though sorrows compass it on every side. It may be said that to look back on past sorrows when the present is bright and prosperous often brings an added feeling of comfort to men. It may be so; but whether memory of all the world's cares and vicissitudes must not also produce something of sadness is doubtful. Pain and sorrow are not merely grievous because of the negation of joy, but are inherently disliked and feared for their own sake. The idea of an after-life recompense, therefore, gains no sanction or reason for existence from the suffering of the present.

In placing reward as the ultimate aim of ambition we act merely on animal principles. The cattle follow us for food; the horse runs after the corn-sieve; our dog awaits his daily bone at our hands. Yet even the dog will follow his master out of pure affection, and often clings to him with a devotion which has been found faithful unto death. Shall man prove himself to be lower than his dog in that he cannot follow that which is higher than himself but from selfish motives of gain and aggrandisement? It is untrue that any man has been heroic or noble from such motives. The idea of heaven is more tolerated than loved. If a scientist can work laboriously year after year expecting no return, seeing his discoveries sink into the mass of things which benefit mankind, but call for no special remark, the moralist surely can live in a similar fashion. Good is, at least, partially rewarded here—sometimes with generous fulness. Is heaven to pay for what is already recompensed? The good man will count himself sufficiently rewarded by the approbation of his own soul; the inward sense of having done right will be abundant reparation for any loss sustained. This is the true man's reward. Heaven is the wages of servitors and minions. The smile on the pale face which greets our efforts to ameliorate pain; the look of gratitude from the oppressed whom we have befriended; the warm shake of the hand when some noble soul recognises that, though weak and erring, we have done our best: these things are a full and overflowing reward to all generous hearts. Why should we ask for more? If we are paid in kind, the score is wiped out, and charity no longer blesses him that gives and him that takes. Repaid, we are on a mere equality with him whom we have benefited. To have the world in one's debt is to be surpassing rich in inward satisfaction. Let us thoroughly recognise the highest principle that man can act upon, and learn, as far as in us lies, to do the right for righteousness' sake alone.

DARIUS.

IGNATIUS LOYOLA ON HELL.

As a set-off to the excerpts from Martin Luther's Table Talk on the Devil, I extract the views of the founder of the Society of Jesus on hell. These views are not, like those of the Protestant leader, personal ones. They are the creed of the company, and are taken from the Spiritual Exercises, which have to be meditated upon by every Jesuit novice during his thirty days' retreat. The book almost takes the place of the Bible in the eyes of Jesuits, and is even said to have been inspired by the Holy Ghost. The work is devoted to various religious meditations, the fifth of which is on Hell:—

The first prelude gives the composition of place—viz., the eyes of the imagination must behold the length, breadth, and depth of hell. The second consists in praying for an intimate knowledge or consciousness of the sins for which the reprobate are suffering; so that, if ever we should forget the love of God, the fear of punishment, at least, should restrain us from sin.

The first point is to behold, in imagination, the vast conflagration of hell, and the souls therein, enclosed in certain flaming bodies, as it were in a prison of fire.

Secondly, to hear, in imagination, the wailings, the shrieks, cries, and blasphemies against Christ and his saints issuing thence.

Third, thoroughly to smell, even with the smelling of the imagination, the smoke, brimstone, and the horrid stench of some sewer or filth and rottenness.

Fourthly, to taste in like manner the bitterest things; such as tears, rancour, the worm of conscience.

Fifthly, to touch in a manner those fires, by whose touch those very souls are burnt up.

In the colloquy with Christ we must call to mind the souls of those who are condemned to hell, either because they would not believe in the coming of Christ, or, if they believed, did not live in conformity with his precepts, either at the same time when Christ lived in this world, or after and subsequently. We must then give thanks to the same Christ most fervently for not having permitted us to rush to such destruction, but rather has, to this very day, treated us with clemency and mercy.

Having thus thoroughly immersed the novice in the thought of burning hell, he is fitted to become as the waxen mould, ready to take any impress his superiors chose to stamp upon him. The Jesuits well know the value of the hellish teaching of Christianity, and would endorse the saying of the old Scotch beadle, that "a kirk without a hell is'na worth a damn."

LUCIANUS.

The Bible and Truth.

We have proof in the Bible that, apart from the lying which constituted false witness and was to the injury of a neighbor, there was among the Hebrews but little reprobation of lying. Indeed, it would be remarkable were it otherwise, considering that Jahveh set the example; as when, to ruin Ahab, he commissioned "a lying spirit" (1 Kings xxii. 22) to deceive his prophets; or as when, according to Ezekiel xiv. 9, he threatened to use deception as a means of vengeance. "If the prophet be deceived when he hath spoken a thing, I, the Lord, have deceived that prophet, and I will stretch out my hand upon him, and will destroy him from the midst of my people Israel." Evidently from a race-character, which evolved such a conception of a deity's principles, there naturally came no great regard for veracity.—Herbert Spencer, "Principles of Ethics," sec. 158, vol. i., p. 404.

Digitized by Google

ACID DROPS.

Mr. Harry Foster, M.P., intends to move an amendment to the Address, regretting that the Queen's advisers have given no promise of "a policy of justice, fairness, and consideration" towards voluntary schools. Upon this matter we have two questions to ask. (1) Is Mr. Harry Foster selected, for the purpose of moving this amendment, by the Archbishop of Canterbury and his pious gang who want to thrust their hands deeper into the ratepayers' pockets? (2) Is this Mr. Harry Foster the company-promoter who came so badly out of that libel action against the Westminster Gazette? If these questions are answered in the affirmative, we commend this bit of business to the attention of Bishop Moorhouse, who ought to work it into the next speech he delivers on the immorality of Secular Education.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has given fresh currency to the statement of Bishop Moorhouse, of Manchester, that in the colony of Victoria, where the education in the public schools is purely secular, crime, and particularly juvenile crime, had alarmingly increased during the last ten years. The Archbishop's speech has been much commented upon at Melbourne; and, according to a Dalziel telegram, his figures as to the criminology of Victoria have been examined by Mr. H. Hayter, the Government statistician, who declares them to be incorrect.

We never could understand Bishop Moorhouse's figures except as pious efforts of imagination. Twenty years ago the Victoria Government stopped the grant of £50,000 a year which used to be distributed among the various Christian denominations. This horrible fact, taken with two others—namely, that no Christian minister is allowed to sit in the Legislature, and that no religion is allowed to be taught in the schools—will probably account for a good deal of clerical invention. If you fight priests, you must look out for calumny.

Mr. John Rae, in his new volume, Eight Hours for Work, gives a very interesting account of Victoria, where the eight-hour day is nearly universal. The working men there read more, save more, and drink less than they do in England. Victoria has actually less crime than any other part of Australasia. New South Wales tops the list with 213 commitments and 139 convictions per 100,000 of population. Victoria comes last with 68 commitments and 38 convictions. In the matter of convictions she shows better than England, where the proportion is 44 to every 100,000 of population. Yet here in England we have the great Bishop Moorhouse; we have also the Bible in the overwhelming majority of our schools; we have, further, many millions of public money spent in supporting Christianity.

Christian denominations are all alike in their use of "infidel death-bed" stories. One by one the heroes of Freethought are traduced by these black assassins, who slay reputations when they can no longer kill lives. Here is Pastor James Douglas, of Kenyon Chapel, Brixton, printing in his Silent Messenger, which is a very loud liar, that the great Ludwig Feuerbach died in "bewilderment" and "despair," crying "Truth! O Truth! where is it?" We have asked so many retailers of pious falsehoods for their "authorities" that we shall not waste our time in putting the question afresh to James Douglas. We just look at him and pass on.

The Price Hughes gang are playing the "converted Atheist" game again. At the annual meeting of the Central Mission, in the Holborn Town Hall, one of those veracious Sisters trotted out her rescued infidel. This is the report in the Methodist Times: "Sister Dorothy did not believe in arguing with persons who were opposed to Christianity. She had a different way of dealing with them. This way she made plain in a fine description of the conversion of an Atheist brought to Christ under Mr. Wakerley's ministry. The subject of her sketch was in the congregation."

Of course we shall never get the name and address of this converted Atheist, unless we get it by accident. That he was "in the congregation" is easy to affirm, and difficult to deny, especially if the man was not there. May be the man was there, but was not much of an Atheist before his conversion; something like Charles Alfred Gibson, the Atheist Shoemaker, who was never known to be an Atheist until he was made into one by Price Hughes and the Sisters who "converted" him.

Sister Dorothy is wise in not arguing with persons opposed to Christianity. Mr. Hughes follows the same discreet method. But then he is base enough to lie over them, and that is carrying discretion to the point of infamy.

The Herts Leader of February 1 gives an illustration of the Watford fig-tree, in which a tree is growing out of a tomb, the stones of which it has riven asunder. The little legend in connection with it is that the lady buried in the vault from which the tree is growing was an Atheist, and that on her death-bed she adhered to her tenet, and expressed a wish that a fig-tree might grow out of her heart if there was a God. Of course, the thing is absurd; but it was not thought so by the credulous of the last century, who handed the tale down from one to another.

The Leader says: "When the churchyard was lowered an opportunity accidentally presented itself for a peep into this vault, and those who embraced that opportunity clearly saw that the root of the tree was not in the vault, but in the crown of the arch, four or five feet from where the lady's heart must have been. A few of the tendrils of the root had found their way through the brickwork of the arch, and had attached themselves to the bottom of the vault; and to this probably may be attributed its luxuriant growth, as much more moisture must be obtained by these tendrils than the parts of the root attached to the crown of the arch." No doubt the Watford fig-tree serves the pious purpose of making the yokels regard Atheism with horror.

Really we would not be able to get along without our parsons. The Railway Review opens out on the Rev. J. T. Wardle-Stafford, who bosses the Wesleyan Chapel at York. The members of the York Branch of the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants asked him to preach a sermon in aid of the Orphan Fund. They supplied him with an Orphan Fund book and all the necessary literature to enable him to speak correctly and fully about the splendid work the fund is doing. Instead of which, Wardle-Stafford preached fire and brimstone upon the men and the cause of which the fund is a part. The collection, which was taken before the sermon, amounted to £11, and Wardle-Stafford refuses to give it to the Orphan Fund. He has offered half of it to the local secretary as a compromise, and the local secretary has told him rightly enough that he will have none of it. York is a fine old city, and contains some fine old curiosities. —Spy.

"What a grim tyrant is money!" exclaims the Rev. Mark Guy Pearse. No doubt. But how the grim tyrant is sought after by all the clerical tribe! Say to them, "Silver and gold I have none," and they soon drop your acquaintance.

The Rev. Samuel Smith, rector of Landulph, sued the Rev. F. G. May, rector of St. Mellion, Cornwall, for burying one of his parishioners and not handing over the fees. Letters were put in, in which the plaintiff called defendant "a sacerdotal snob," and said: "I will put him in court and see him damned." To prevent misunderstanding, he added: "Lest some pig-headed people should think this is a swear word, I beg to observe that I use the word damn in its proper sense." The plaintiff got as damages one farthing, and may consider himself damned by the observations which the judge made on the case.

The clergy in South Africa are complaining of poverty, and, at the Graham's Town Diocesan Synod, seem to have given their entire attention to the important question, how to improve their worldly position. The Bishop gave his opinion that the stipend of a married clergyman should be at least £400, but did not offer anything himself towards seeing that it reached this amount.

We have here a Christian Social Union, which puts itself a good deal in evidence at the propaganda of Christian Socialism. But we notice that the C.S.U. says nothing of equality of clerical incomes. If they would first start levelling matters among their own fraternity, we should have more faith in the consistency of the principles of these Socialists of the cloth.

An attempt to rob a bank was made at Portland, in San Francisco, by a Baptist minister, named Reid, who had disguised himself for the purpose. He entered the office with a revolver, and made the cashier, who was alone, hold up his hands while he was being bound and gagged. As Reid was putting all the coin on which he could lay his hands into a sack, a cashier of another bank entered the office with a shot gun, and Reid had to give himself up.

Mr. Franklin Steiner has recently given in the Truthseeker particulars of the religious status of the convicts in sixteen United States penitentiaries and in Canada, as gathered from official reports, all made by parties favorable to Christianity. The total list embraces 33,168. Of those who were members of churches, or were taught in Sunday-schools, there were 29,906. Of the remaining 3,262 two are reported Atheists, and one an Infidel. He reports as many preachers in one penitentiary as there are Atheists and Infidels in seventeen.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Steiner quotes the following from the Christian Advocate, a leading Methodist organ: "In Sing Sing there are 1,515 men. There are among them about one hundred men who, in the past, have been connected with Protestant churches as members. There are at least fifty who have confessed their sinfulness, and have professed to find God's favor. Of all those 1,515 men fifty-five per cent. are Roman Catholics, and forty-five per cent. nominally are Protestants. Of the whole number ninety per cent. went to Sunday school when boys."

Edwin O. Quigley, the Wall-street broker, whose wholesale forgeries have been the sensation of New York, and who is now remitted to Sing Sing Prison for fifteen years, was the son of a Methodist minister, and as remarkable for piety as Jabez Balfour and his colleagues.

The Montreal Daily Star (January 24) says "Christian Science" was responsible for the death of Mrs. Hammel D. Moore, who committed suicide by drowning herself. "Christian Science" taught her that the mind had complete power over the body, but her corpse testifies to the contrary. The jury in the case found that she walked into the river "deliberately of her own will, the said Mrs. Moore not being of sound mind, but distracted and despondent. We, the said jury, further find that her despondency was caused by her having taken up with a pernicious and dangerous doctrine called 'Christian Science,' which said doctrine we, the jury, wish most emphatically to denounce and repudiate as delusive and dangerous in the extreme to any community."

Anna Boecker, the one lady rescued from the "Elbe," curiously displayed her piety in her letter to the captain of the "Wildflower," who picked her up. She said: "Next to our Heavenly Father, I owe my safety to you and the crew." Our Heavenly Father does not seem to have had much care for the immense majority of Miss Boecker's fellow passengers. One would think modesty would make her silent as to his special regard for herself while drowning so many others of his children.

The papers during the past week have been filled with accounts of heartrending sufferings through the severe weather. In several cases omnibus drivers and cabmen have been frozen to death in their seats, and numerous tramps have succumbed to the cold. Sheep and game have perished in large numbers, children have had to be dug out of their schools, and the ranks of the unemployed have been increased so much that the ordinary channels have been inadequate to cope with the distress.

Not only England has suffered from the weather's severity. In many countries it has been far worse. In Austria there have been forty degrees of frost. The dead birds fall from the trees, and many human beings have died from exposure. In Russia wolves have attacked women and children on their way to church, and in Poland also they attack the villages in herds, and carry off children and domestic animals. In America they have had severe blizzards, destroying many lives, an entire family being frozen to death in Nebraska. In Nova Scotia small houses and shops near the beach have been blown into the sea. A moderate estimate of the damage done to fruits and vegetables in Florida places the loss at ten million dollars. In Texas thousands of yearling cattle have perished. How any one can simply read the papers, and yet credit that all things are under the superintendence of a Divine Providence, is a mystery.

At Constantinople they have had a revival of cholera, and in Norway earthquake shocks, eleven persons having been killed by the fall of an avalanche.

Jesus Christ, in speaking of God's providential care for sparrows, showed a very limited acquaintance with the facts of natural history. It is now well established that birds perish wholesale in their annual migrations; they drop by millions, and God does not notice. In severe weather, such as we have had recently, birds are deprived of their sustenance; and the consequence is that myriads on myriads die of sheer starvation, while others are literally frozen to death by the intense cold.

Whittington Parish Church, St. Bartholomew, Chesterfield, has been completely destroyed by fire; the Lord letting the conflagration break out in his house when the roads were thickly covered with snow and all the hydrants were frozen. The safe in the vestry, containing valuable deeds, registers, and plate, was red-hot. Evidently there will be no books or papers in Hades, unless the characters are stamped on asbestos.

At another House of God, at Hucclecote, near Gloucester, the fumes from the coke stoves half suffocated the congregation. One lady screamed before fainting. Perhaps she thought Old Nick had come at last.

Some sorts of Christian charity are as cold as the weather. An Edmonton correspondent tells us of a poor woman whose husband was at home suffering from consumption, and who applied, not vainly, to a Freethinker for help. On being asked what the district visitor had done for her, she replied that she had called and left a Church magazine. This for a woman who had only one sheet to cover herself, her husband, and four children!

Jules Cæsar Aubourg, a Civil Service clerk who has been figuring in the Divorce Court, is a peculiar gentleman. Besides making his wife a drudge, keeping her short of money, and urging the children to treat her disrespectfully, he brought a Miss Sharp into the house. He used to go into Miss Sharp's room, but then it was only to read prayers! Pah! An ounce of civet, good apothecary!

The Rev. Herbert Gregory is a fit companion for Jules Cæsar Aubourg. This man of God, in defending himself against dreadful charges of cruelty and adultery brought against him by his wife, was pulled up by Lord Justice Lopes, who hinted something about perjury and the Public Prosecutor; whereupon Saint Gregory caved in, and a decree nisi was granted forthwith.

The Library and Arts Committee of the Liverpool Corporation, which refused the Picton Lecture Hall for the N.S.S. Conference, have let the Walker Art Gallery for an exhibition to further the objects of the London Society for Promoting Christianity amongst the Jews. The Society has been misdescribed as the "London Jews' Society" in the announcements.

According to the Jewish Chronicle, the agents of the London Missionary Society do not stick at invoking the aid of the law to assist them in their gospel work among the Jews. In Poland, for instance, they always claim "police protection" for their blessed work as soon as they arrive. Accordingly, when a Jew thus coerced to accept a copy of the New Testament burns it, he is promptly arrested, and we are left to hope that he is not sent to Siberia.

"In Wolkovitz the missionaries put up at the Jewish hotel, and because the landlord refused to profane his Sabbath for the convenience of Christian visitors they apply to the police again. Those obliging authorities undertake to post up the bills 'inviting' Jews to attend the missionary service; and the Chief of Police himself attends to protect the good man from insult. So another Jew is arrested—for expressing his opinion to his own people on these doings, and the landlady tells her amiable guests to leave. Of course, they appeal to their powerful friends, 'and [it is from an English missionary journal that the Jewish Chronicle quotes] nolens volens she was obliged, not only to keep us, but to find accommodation for the "accursed" books on her premises.'"

After this triumph, however, they feared that "the Jews would not accept our New Testaments, so gave several hundred over to the police, who would gradually get them into Jewish hands." Those hapless Russian Jews! Heathens and Atheists pity them, but these devoted Christians pile yet more trouble and sorrow on their heads.

Virchand R. Gandhi, the representative of the Jains of India at the Parliament of Religions, says that it is only among the lowest classes that the missionaries can make converts, for every intelligent Hindoo knows the spurious origin of Christianity, and that its precepts were borrowed from India.

Christianity is a divine religion, but it needs certain adjuncts to keep it afloat. The negroes of Hayti have been Christianised for a long while, yet, under native rule, thousands of them have given up Christianity and replaced it by Voodooism and fetish worship. Many think that, if the West Indies was deserted by the whites, the punctilious church attendance of the negroes would soon be replaced by savage fetish dances.

Another case of insane fanaticism is reported from Constantinople. A Turkish soldier suddenly sallied forth from his quarters with a naked sword in his hand. Uttering cries of "Allah!" he rushed through the crowded streets slashing madly at men and women alike. He was finally seized, but not until he had inflicted mortal wounds upon five men and serious injuries upon eleven men and three women. Unless diluted with Secularism, religion is about as virulent as typhoid fever.

According to some official data just published, it appears that during the ten years, 1884-94, no fewer than 178 German Lutheran pastors were placed upon their trial before the Baltic Criminal Courts on various alleged charges of infringement of the Russian State Church regulations. One pastor died in prison. A considerable number have transferred their labors to the German side of the frontier to be out of the way of their fellow Christians of the orthodox Greek Church.

Digitized by Google

It was announced that the new Czar was going to be ever so much more Liberal than his father. It does not look like it. The Russkaia Zhizn, one of the Liberal papers, has been suppressed. This journal had already suffered repeated penalties for its advocacy of reform, and finally called down upon itself the displeasure of the Government by protesting against the exclusion of Freethinkers from the benefits of a fund in aid of needy literary men.

According to the special correspondent whom Reuter's Agency sent to Armenia to report on the alleged atrocities, there is little or nothing to choose between Christian Armenians and Moslem Turks. They both want the influences of secular civilisation to moderate their fanaticism.

Thurgau is a small canton, but its folk have a great repute for a singular wit. The Basler Nachrichten supplies us with the latest instance of a "Thurgauer joke." A rich old bachelor died last December in a village in Canton Schaffhausen; and, as the story goes, he bequeathed all his property to three old friends, one of whom was a Züricher, the second a St. Galler, and a third a Thurgauer. He expressed a wish that they should all take a last look at his corpse before following him to the grave, and that each should deposit a sum of 200 francs in his coffin, to be buried with him, according to a pre-historic custom. After the funeral one of the three friends, the Züricher, was anxious to learn whether the other two had loyally complied with the wish of the departed. "I placed my 200 francs in the coffin," he said, "in five-franc pieces." "And I," said the St. Galler, "put in a 200-franc bank-note." "I am thoroughly convinced of your fidelity," said the Thurgauer, "for I have taken out your 400 francs, and have placed in the hand of our dear friend a cheque for 600 francs, payable in heaven." —Westminster Gazette.

A story is told of a Roman Catholic priest whose sermons are usually of a practical kind. On entering the pulpit he took with him a walnut to illustrate the character of the various Christian Churches. He told the people the shell was tasteless and valueless; that was the Wesleyan Church. The skin was nauseous, disagreeable, and worthless; that was the Presbyterian Church. He then said he would show them the holy Roman Apostolic Church. He cracked the nut for the kernel, and found it rotten. Then his reverence coughed violently and pronounced the benediction.

The Unitarians in connection with a "forward movement" have published A Brief Account of Unitarianism. We see that they claim among adherents the name of R. W. Emerson. A reference to the lives of Emerson, by either Cooke or Conway, will show that he was outside all the Churches. T. Jefferson is also claimed, and he was a Deist, though he doubtless attended Unitarian services occasionally.

In the good old gospel days circumstances were managed so "that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of by the prophet"; but now-a-days things go on without any regard to these gentry. Last year there were to have been lots of earthquakes, and this year no snow; while Prophet Baxter has to shift on his date for the great wars and confederacy of ten kingdoms. Baxter, however, only shares the fate of all the many of his predecessors who have predicted the end of the world. Even Paul, who in his First Epistle to the Thessalonians had declared that "we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air," found it well to hedge, and to say that first of all the man of sin must be revealed—the son of perdition. Jesus Christ promised there were those standing around who should not taste of death till they saw him coming in his kingdom. As he was so egregiously mistaken, we cannot wonder at the minor delusions of his followers.

The Progressive Thinker asks: "Had six days been given to God and only one to productive labor, where would the money come from to pay the preacher? Things might be worse. One day in seven set apart to the service of God, six days in seven to practical life, is a great deal better than if all time was wasted on an abstraction."

Evidently there are some Americans who do not appreciate free institutions. There is, for instance, the Rev. Dr. Williams, who writes thus to the Baltimore American in regard to Ingersoll: "Now, considering the appalling wretchedness that a gifted writer and an attractive orator may bring to many, we think, no matter how much we believe in free speech and an untrammelled press, that his lips should be closed and his pen stopped in such terrible work."

The Rev. Dr. Williams ought to know that the only means to stop Freethinkers expressing their thoughts are those used by the Inquisition. To close the lips of all the Freethinkers in the United States would be a task beyond the power of Mr. Williams and all his fellow sky-pilots. He is, we understand, a Presbyterian, and perhaps regrets the days when his leader, Jean Calvin, burnt Servetus at a green-tree fire. That was an effectual way of closing the lips of an opponent.

Local Vetoists sometimes assume that, once the question of Sunday closing is put to the decision of the popular vote, their object will sure to be attained. Let them look at Cardiff, where the Western Mail has just taken a house-to-house vote, by means of voting cards, with the result that, out of 18,606 electors whose names appear on the last municipal register of the town, 8,553 were in favor of "amending the Welsh Sunday Closing Act, so as to permit of the licensed houses in Cardiff being opened on Sundays for one hour at dinner time, and between the hours of eight and ten in the evening." The "Noes" only numbered 2,574, the remainder of the electorate being either neutral or giving no account of themselves. This plebiscite appears to have been conducted very carefully, and is certainly an index to public opinion on Sunday closing.

Arguing in favor of written as preferable to extempore sermons, though Baxter glories in the burning for witchcraft of "an old reading parson" in the days of Matthew Hopkins, the Daily News says: "A Scot has been heard to say, from the pulpit, that eternal punishment is 'exceeding abundant, above all we can ask or hope.' Another has invited Heaven to 'keep one eye on thy servant, the minister of this parish.' These things, and a great many others of the same sort, could never have been soberly written down, and then read."

Lord Grimthorpe, who is Vicar-General of the diocese of York, makes a strong attack upon his Archbishop in the Nineteenth Century anent the question of the re-marriage of innocent divorced persons. Christians have been quarrelling on the subject through the ages, and it is no wonder, for the Gospels themselves variously report the teachings of Jesus on the matter.

The Church Times has been noticing some cases of public penances performed at church within the present century. One which took place at Begeley, Pembrokeshire, is amusing. In 1844 the person who supplied the stone for the rectory had a dispute with the rector, and was abusive. As a punishment, he had the choice of doing penance or being prosecuted. He chose the former, and on Sunday walked down the church in a white sheet, saying three times, "I called the Rev. R. Buckley a rogue"; he added each time, sotto voce, "which is true enough."

The American men of God are entering on a crusade against the Sunday papers. From their pulpits and through the Christian Statesman they preach a boycott of those papers which issue a Sunday edition, and of the advertisers who patronise their columns. The effort is a good deal like that of Mrs. Partington to mop up the Atlantic.

A curious one-act play by the well-known Neapolitan dramatist, Signor Antona-Traversi, has been put on the stage of the Sannazzaro Theatre at Naples. An Atheist father and Catholic mother, workpeople, have lost their only son, an infant who has not been baptised; and, while the little corpse is awaiting burial, the parents argue as to whether it shall have Christian sepulture or be cremated, as the father wishes. The deep grief of the mother prevails. A parish priest comes to bless the house, as is the custom at Easter. He bestows a benediction on the corpse (behind the scenes), and the father yields to the prayers of his wife. The artistic value of the piece (writes our correspondent) consists in the psychological condition of a wife who passionately loves her Atheist, or rather free-thinking, husband, who is herself a sincere Christian, and who is full of anxiety for the future of her child in the other world. The language of the married couple is necessarily too elevated for people of the class they are represented to be. The short piece was enthusiastically applauded by a full house, and the author called before the curtain eight times.—Daily News.

In Egypt, Tanta, "the city of healing," is yearly visited by over 200,000 pilgrims. This Lourdes of the East is the tomb of Seyvid, a Moslem saint, that has for 800 years stood in the mosque, and to which every day a crowd of halt and blind are led. Credulity is the same among all peoples, and doubtless the list of miraculous cures at the tomb of Seyvid is a pretentious one.

The saying, "The better the day, the better the deed," hardly applies to dairymen, for, according to the Analyst's Report, while the percentage of adulterated milk supplied on week days is only 5½, on Sundays it rises to 20. We suppose the inspector is not expected round on the Lord's Day

Digitized by Google

Mr. Foote's Engagements.

Sunday, February 17, Hall of Science, 142 Old-street, London :—7, "Mr. Balfour's Plea for Belief."

Wednesday, February 20, Hall of Science, Old-street, E.C. :—8.15, "Shakespeare's Golden Comedy of As You Like It."

February 24, Hall of Science.

March 3, Camberwell ; 10, Sunderland.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

MR. CHARLES WATTS'S ENGAGEMENTS.—February 17, Plymouth ; 24, Newcastle-on-Tyne. March 3, Manchester. April 7, Sheffield. All communications for Mr. Watts should be sent to him (if a reply is required, a stamped and addressed envelope must be enclosed) at 81 Effra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

LECTURE NOTICES must reach 28 Stonecutter-street by first post Tuesday, or they will not be inserted.

J. G. FISHER.—Thanks. May be useful.

W. SIMONS.—Obliged. See paragraphs.

H. G.—The Church accommodation in Wales, as given in the Official Year Book of the Church of England, is no more than 416,000.

W. L.—Carlyle meant, of course, that it was scepticism which had "abolished hell-fire." Not the thing, but the belief in it, which is after all the practical reality, so far as this life is concerned.

W. D. ROLLEY.—The passage occurs in Mill's essay, On Liberty.

J. K. MAAGAARD.—There is some truth in your observations, but you do not sufficiently allow for the great differences in the two nations. Our Churches have, all of them, fixed creeds, to which ministers must subscribe. Besides, there are enormous vested interests bound up with orthodoxy.

E. D. H. DALY.—Thanks for cuttings.

S. F. GRAY.—See "Acid Drops."

H. COURTNEY.—You have not sent the address.

GUILDFORD, SURREY.—Are there any saints in this neighborhood? A London lecturer is there for a few weeks, and should be utilised if there is an opportunity. We shall be glad to forward his address to any Freethinker in the neighborhood.

N.S.S. BENEVOLENT FUND.—Miss E. M. Vance acknowledges :—Wood Green Branch, 10s. ; J. D. Feilding, 10s. ; W. Clarkson, £1 ; H. A. Lupton, 10s. Cast-off clothing is greatly needed.

CHARLES WATTS'S ELECTION FUND.—G. Ward, treasurer, acknowledges :—Per Miss Vance, W. Clarkson, £1.

J. W. C. STAFFORD.—Shall appear.

WATTS ELECTION FUND DEFICIT.—E. P. 42 sends us a second subscription of £1.

E. P. 42.—Thanks for your assistance. It is a wonder the London friends do not wipe off the deficit on the Watts Election Fund. The letter by Mr. Gladstone, which you refer to, was used on behalf of Mr. Watts's candidature in Finsbury, and will be used again in future struggles.

J. TRAUKRAY.—You had better trust to the figures in the "Bible Absurdities" part of our Bible Handbook.

PAPERS RECEIVED.—Cape Times—Reading Observer—Two Worlds—Der Arme Teufel—Freidenker—Western Figaro—Melbourne Age—Irish Weekly—Ulster Examiner—Lindsey Star—Montreal Daily Star—Progressive Thinker—Truthseeker—Le Bluet—Secular Thought—Blackpool Gazette and News—Isle of Man Times—Crescent—Islamic World.

LETTERS for the Editor of the Freethinker should be addressed to 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

ORDERS for literature should be sent to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

The Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the publishing office, post free, at the following rates, prepaid :—One Year, 10s. 6d. ; Half Year, 5s. 3d. ; Three Months, 2s. 8d.

CORRESPONDENCE should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

SCALE OF ADVERTISEMENTS.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d. ; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements :—(Narrow Column) one inch, 3s. ; half column, 15s. ; column, £1 10s. Broad Column—one inch, 4s. 6d. ; half column, £1 2s. 6d. ; column, £2 5s. Special terms for repetitions.

IT being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will receive the number in a colored wrapper when their subscription expires.

SUGAR PLUMS.

OWING to the time taken by cases before it on the list, the Libel Case affecting the London Hall of Science has not yet been reached. Notice that it will be heard some time on Wednesday or Thursday (February 13, 14) reaches us as we are preparing to go to press with this number of the Freethinker. The full report of the proceedings, which we have arranged for, cannot therefore appear until our next issue.

Mr. Robert Forder took Mr. Foote's place at the London Hall of Science on Sunday evening, the latter having caught a cold, which, though not serious, was quite sufficient to keep him indoors, and certainly from lecturing in such bitter weather. Mr. Foote expects to be all right for platform work again this evening (February 17), when he will discourse on "Mr. Balfour's Plea for Belief." The Rt. Hon. A. J. Balfour, the Tory leader in the House of Commons, has just issued a big and costly book, entitled The Foundations of Belief, and it is this book which Mr. Foote will criticise.

On the following Wednesday (February 20) Mr. Foote will lecture upon, and give selections from, "Shakespeare's Golden Comedy of As You Like It."

Mr. Charles Watts had a good audience and a most enthusiastic reception last Sunday evening at the Camberwell Branch of the N.S.S. At the conclusion of his lecture he received quite an ovation, and was urged to visit the Branch again at an early date. The Camberwell friends deserve support, for they have an attractive hall and many active workers.

To-day (Sunday, February 17) Mr. Watts lectures three times at Plymouth.

Leave has been asked to form an N.S.S. Branch in Burma, where clericalism is creeping along stealthily, and where education—with the exception of a neutral Government college—is entirely in the hands of the religious parties. There seems to be a number of Freethinkers scattered over Burma, and it is believed that, if they were united, they would be able to wield some influence.

Bishop Gimyo Adache, a Buddhist missionary from Japan, has arrived at San Francisco. His object is to preach the faith as it is in Gautama the enlightened, and to bring benighted Christians to the practice of virtue without hope of reward. Gimyo Adache is but only twenty-five years old, but he has already built one temple at Kioto, and intends to erect one in America. He says: "When Americans see the beauty and goodness of my faith, they will wish to learn it, and many will become Buddhists of my order." Incidentally he will prevent Japanese in America from seceding to the Christian faith.

The Buddhist faith has no sacrifices or atonement; no Jew Shylock God, who will have his pound of flesh, even if he takes it out of his own begotten son. Such salvation as it offers has to be achieved by each individual for him or herself, and not in reliance on the merits of any other person. Altogether we fancy the Americans will be none the worse for the preaching of Bishop Gimyo Adache.

The Rev. R. C. Fillingham, who is vicar of Hexton, Ampthill, Bedfordshire, is an almost solitary advocate of Disestablishment among the clergy. In a letter to the Daily News, after citing the Acts of Elizabeth, whereby all who remained members of the pre-Reformation Church were deprived of their benefices, dignities, and emoluments, and these were handed over to the post-Reformation Church (which declared her predecessors to have been sunk in "damnable idolatry," and rejected her principal services as "blasphemous fables and dangerous deceits"), he says: "Those who are content to enjoy the proceeds of the disendowment of the Church of Rome must not, for very shame's sake, talk of sacrilege when it is proposed to deal similarly with the Church of England."

We think Mr. Fillingham and Lord Rosebery are both at sea in alluding to the claims of the Roman Church to English religious endowments. The true position is that the nation can at any time do what it likes with its own. Even Bishop Butler saw, and said, that no property could be gifted in perpetuity irrespective of the needs of posterity. "Property in general," he says, "is, and must be, regulated by the laws of the community." The statutes of mortmain suffice to show that the State has ever held religious endowments under stricter conditions than any other kind of property.

Miss Susan B. Anthony, who has been re-elected President of the National Woman Suffrage Association of America, is seventy-four years of age, but does not look it. Her figure is still as straight as a dart, and her eyes alert and bright. The oldest thing about her is the way she wears her heavy load of hair, which is combed, in soft white folds, over the tips of her ears, in the manner of a former generation. Her manners are charmingly fresh and young, and her enthusiasm for women's rights undimmed. Like her veteran colleague, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, she is a downright Freethinker.

Digitized by Google

A Bill has been brought before the Legislature of Michigan proposing that churches shall be taxed the same as other property. This is a step in the right direction, for, although there is said to be no connection between Church and State, the Church virtually obtains millions of dollars by its exemption from taxation.

The Daily News, noticing Mr. Dobell's edition of the complete works of James Thomson, says of his City of Dreadful Night: "It ranks with Omar Khayyam's Rubaiyat as a lyrical expression of despair, and it strikes a deeper note."

In the western part of Washington Territory there is a grand mountain, about 5,000 feet high, known as Mount Ingersoll. Locally it bears the appellation of "Colonel Bob."

Colonel Ingersoll's lecture, "Which Way?" recently delivered to a crowded audience in Columbia Theatre, Chicago, will be reprinted in an early issue of the Freethinker from the Progressive Thinker. The report seems to be verbatim as far as it goes, but it can hardly contain all the Colonel's afternoon lecture. Probably it comprises the freshest and most important passages.

A PARSON.

A PARSON is a person, mild and bland,
Who's paid to preach what none can understand;
He undertakes to solve divine enigmas,
And rescue souls from Satan's sinful stigmas;
All free of charge, eternal life he's giving
To dying men, from whom he seeks his living;
He booms the heav'n above, to which they'll go
If they'll provide for him on earth below.
Says he: "Our home's in heav'n, there's not a doubt of it!
But, meanwhile, do your best to keep me—out of it."

The book he calls the "Word of God" he reads
For texts to sanction all his words and deeds;
To whatsoe'er his heart may be inclined
A friendly text within the book he'll find:
Ev'n texts that seem to contradict his thesis
Support it, when illumed by exegesis;
The handy texts need no illumination,
The awkward ones require interpretation.
Approving texts are always clear and logical;
The doubtful ones are always anagogical.

He turns a page to find a friendly text,
But sees a hostile one, so turns the next;
If Paul condemns, so much the worse for Paul—
He passes on, nor quotes from him at all.
To hide's discreet, when quoting's not discreeter.
So Paul's suppressed for James, or John, or Peter.
If Gospel-texts condemn his pet behavior,
He quotes from Paul to controvert his Savior.
If critics quote from Moses, he'll reply
By quoting Christ, whom erst he did deny;
And if they quote from Christ, he'll quote from Paul,
And yet maintain that Christ is all-in-all!
Quote 'gainst him Christ, Paul, Peter, John, and James,
He'll say you're "dead in sin," and call you names,
Or say, with pious pity in his eye,
"You'll see your error when you come to die!"

His Book's to "all men, all things," so he finds
For ev'ry text that loosens one that binds.
Whate'er he does or says—resists, submits—
In Holy Writ he finds a verse that fits.
The Book's convenient, so's a feather-bed;
You squeeze it here, it bulges there instead,
And shapes itself to every droway head.

He'll praise a bad deed, or a good asperse,
With warranty of chapter and of verse;
Through all the ethic gamut he will run
Amuck, and wash himself with texts, when done;
And say, should any stains persist uncleaned and ugly:
"Christ's precious blood will wash them!" smiling smugly.

A parson is a person mild and bland,
The sweetest-mannered humbug in the land!

G. L. MACKENZIE.

Only a few weeks ago a lecturer at a big meeting gave utterance to the following: "All along the untrodden paths of the future we can see the hidden footprints of an unseen Hand."

SOME LITTLE-KNOWN FREETHINKERS.—III.

WILLIAM JOHN BIRCH.

IT was only in his old age that I had the pleasure of knowing Mr. Birch. His appearance was truly venerable, and his portrait (which adorns my room) is always remarked as that of an extremely fine-looking old man. Mr. Birch was born of a well-to-do family on January 4, 1811. He was educated at Baliol College, Oxford, and graduated M.A. at New Inn Hall. He became a barrister-at-law, but was never under the necessity of practising for a livelihood.

During the prosecution of the Oracle of Reason, in 1842, Mr. Birch came forward as a generous supporter of that paper and of the Anti-Persecution Union. He contributed to C. Southwell's Investigator valuable articles on "The Blasphemy Laws" and on "Money the Motive in the History of England." He also wrote in the Movement, the Reasoner, and the National Reformer. To him Mr. Holyoake dedicated his Last Trial for Atheism, as "a friend who was twice a friend, who helped us when we were unknown and struggling." Through his liberality "The Library of Reason"—a valuable set of reprints from Hume, Spinoza, Hibbert, Ensor, Burdon, Southwell, Strauss, Lyell, etc.—was issued, edited by W. Chilton. The Reasoner and the publications of the Fleet-street House, under Mr. Holyoake, were also aided by his ever generous assistance. On one occasion he gave Mr. Holyoake 600 acres of land in Canada, with the purpose of forwarding Secularism; but when the bulk of Mr. Birch's large fortune was lost Mr. Holyoake returned the land-script.

In 1848 Mr. Birch published his principal work, An Inquiry into the Philosophy and Religion of Shakespeare. Mr. Birch held that Shakespeare was a sceptic in regard to a future life, and devoid of reverence for the fundamental dogmas of religion. This position he endeavors to substantiate by a thorough examination both of his dramas and poems. He also wrote a work on The Real and the Ideal; and in a pamphlet, Paulus Idet not a Fact, first questioned the existence of the Apostles to the Gentiles. In 1856 he published An Inquiry into the Philosophy and Religion of the Bible. In his preface he states: "The principal inquiries in this book are the sum of what is taught in the Bible about a God, a Providence, and a future state; the Messianic idea, religion, and morality; the nature of things and of men. We still inquire whether God and Christ are ideas or facts, or, in other words, whether they personally existed. We shall inquire whether the Bible is a revelation of a God, or a revelation that we know nothing about him." In this book Mr. Birch strongly contended that education should be in morality, and not in religion. He says: "Nothing creates such a difference between mankind as religion. There often would be nothing but love between individuals, arising from their natural disposition, if they were not severed by religion. As there is said to be no morality without religion, unbelievers are treated as having no morality, and believers are absolved from morality towards them. We believe there can be no morality with religion."

Mr. Birch published through Mr. Truelove, in 1870, The Jesus Christ of John Stuart Mill, by "Antichrist," quoting on the title-page, "He is Antichrist that denieth the Father and the Son, and confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh" (1 John ii. 22, iv. 2, 3, and 2 John 7). This showed his standpoint. Like all Mr. Birch's productions, it was somewhat desultory. He wrote, like St. Paul, in an unconnected way, but he culled good things from all quarters. The work was adversely criticised in the National Reformer, and did not sell well. He also published anonymously Bible Bestiality and Filth from the Fathers, and a little book with much information on nicknames, entitled Tom Paine, Charlie Bradlaugh, and Bob Ingersoll.

Mr. Birch had a fine library and was a voluminous reader. He carried to excess the good habit of taking notes of what he read. To this I ascribe the fact that, although reading and writing all his long life, he never attained concise statement. He was always reminded of what others had said, and this led to over-much quotation and digression. Every theme elaborated itself to huge dimensions. To me he confided, when he went to Italy, the whole of his manuscripts, weighing many hundred-weight. They are full of rare information; yet no publisher would venture to print them.

As a gentleman of means and leisure, Mr. Birch collected, read, and made notes upon, I think, every work on the subject of Christian origins and early Christianity, published either in English, French, or Italian. His conclusions, though expressed on many points with the caution of one who had a legal training, was emphatic on the crucial question. He held that no such a person as the Jesus Christ of the Gospels ever lived. He thought the character an ideal, amalgamating Pagan myths on a Jewish basis. To the subject of the existence of Jesus, and cognate questions of Pagan religion and mythology, Josephus, Philo, the early Christian Fathers, etc., he devoted immense research, to which at least one individual (and that the present writer) is much indebted.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Birch, in the days of Garibaldi and Mazzini, had been a generous supporter of the cause of Italian freedom. He usually spent the winter in Florence, where he was well known both to the English colony and to the leading Italian Freethinkers and men of letters, such as Count Ricciardi and Angelo de Gubernatis. His wide reading was always at the service of others; and several of the Freethinking writers who gathered round Thomas Scott were indebted to him for assistance with their works. He died at Florence on April 4, 1891; and it is simple truth to say he was deeply lamented by all who knew him. J. M. W.

MAHATMAISM DEAD.

THE die is cast, the bubble's burst,
Theosophists look gloomy,
And dupes no longer conjure up
That King of sprites, Koothoomee.

Take Vitchli—Putzli, Jupiter,
Beelzebub, or Jesus;
They're nothing but exploded gods:
Koothoomee alone could please us.

Grand letters did he write to Judge,
And spicy ones to Besant;
But when compelled to "show the hand,"
Things turned out most unpleasant.

I do not blame the cunning rogues
Who gather in the honey;
I only laugh at silly fools
Who contribute their money.

The fool crop is perennial:
By spider-webs surrounded,
The silly flies are quickly caught,
And utterly confounded.

Oh, for a little common sense
To guide us in our actions!
That dreary spell, Theosophy,
Must lose its chief attractions.

L.

LUTHER AND THE DEVIL.

IN the contribution of "Lucianus" upon this subject he has omitted the coarsest expressions of Luther in regard to the Devil, and, indeed, they are not fit for the columns of the Freethinker. For Luther was coarse, and, as Mr. David Masson notices in the work, The Three Devils: Luther's, Milton's, and Goethe's, he illustrated the Evil Being of Scripture to himself by means of his personal experience. As Mr. Masson says (p. 48): "The narrative of his life abounds in anecdotes showing that the Devil with him was no chimera, no mere orthodoxy, no fiction. In every page of his writings we have the word Teufel, Teufel, repeated again and again."

"Lucianus" has also refrained from giving the moral of the subject, which is, indeed, sufficiently obvious. But I find it very well expressed in Flowers of Freethought (First Series, p. 136), and take the liberty of transcribing it: "Here is a case in which the Doctor of Divinity, though naturally a kind man, is quite ready to take human life at the behest of a devilish superstition, while the less fanatical laymen shrink from such inhumanity. The only devil in the story is the devil of fearful ignorance and misbelief in Brother Martin. He it was who needed the exorcist, although the truth would have greatly surprised him."

LUCIFER.

CHILDREN'S PARTY.

MANY thanks to the friends who have enabled us to give a most successful party to the little ones. I am glad to say that from sale of gallery tickets and programs, we have received sufficient to meet expenses. This is due to the kindness of Mr. W. Bell, of Drury-lane, who has done the entire printing gratuitously, as in past years. The cake, etc., acknowledged last week from Mr. Godwin, Hackney, should have been Mr. Goodwin, of Shoreditch. A balance-sheet will appear next week.

R. FORDER, Treasurer.

Brain and Mind.

No fact in our constitution can be considered more certain than this, that the brain is the chief organ of mind, and has mind for its principal function. As we descend in the animal scale, through quadruped, birds, reptiles, fishes, etc., the nervous system dwindles according to the decreasing measure of mental endowment.—Professor A. Bain, "The Senses and the Intellect," 4th edition, p. 11.

The Gospel of John a Forgery.

The author meant his work to be taken for the apostles' He intimates that he was an immediate disciple of the Lord, the beloved disciple, who was none other than the apostle John, and avoids all mention of the name. Instead of employing a direct method, he is contented with an indirect process, which served his purpose more effectually. John's authorship is but delicately hinted. To make his character correspond with the nature of the gospel, the writer idealised the apostle to a certain extent. . . . Under the inspiration of a philosophical Hellenist the Jewish Christian apostle—impetuous, ambitious, intolerant—becomes the calm preacher of love, the speculative disciple whose heart is as large as his view is extended; the expounder of a new and absolute religion, founded by the only-begotten Son.—Dr. S. Davidson, "Introduction to the Study of the New Testament," vol. ii., pp. 495, 497; 1894.

Imitating God.

Plato has said that "virtue consists in resembling God." But how is man to resemble a being who, it is acknowledged, is incomprehensible to mankind, who cannot be conceived by any of those means by which he is alone capable of having perceptions? If this being, who is shown to man under such various aspects, who is said to owe nothing to his creatures, is the author of all the good as well as all the evil that takes place, how can he be the model for the conduct of the human race living together in society? At most, he can only follow one side of the character, because among his fellows he alone is reputed virtuous who does not deviate in his conduct from justice; who abstains from evil; who performs with punctuality those duties he owes to his fellows. If it be taken up, and insisted he is not the author of evil—only of the good, I say, Very well; that is precisely what I wanted to know. You thereby acknowledge he is not the author of everything. We are no longer at issue; you are inconclusive to your own premises, consequently ought not to demand an implicit reliance on what you choose to assert. —D'Holbach, "System of Nature," part ii., chap. viii.

About the Holy Bible.

Is anything to be learned from Hosea and his wife? Is there anything of use in Joel, in Amos, in Obadiah? Can we get any good from Jonah and his gourd? Is it possible that God is the real author of Micah and Nahum, of Habakkuk and Zephaniah, of Haggai and Malachi and Zechariah, with his red horses, his four horns, his four carpenters, his flying roll, his mountains of brass, and the stone with four eyes? Is there anything in these "inspired" books that has been of benefit to man?

Have they taught us how to cultivate the earth, to build houses, to weave cloth, to prepare food? Have they taught us to paint pictures, to chisel statues, to build bridges, or ships, or anything of beauty or of use? Did we get our ideas of government, of religious freedom, of the liberty of thought, from the Old Testament? Did we get from any of these books a hint of any science? Is there in the "sacred volume" a word, a line, that has added to the wealth, the intelligence, and the happiness of mankind? Is there one of the books of the Old Testament as entertaining as Robinson Crusoe, the Travels of Gulliver, or Peter Wilkins and his Flying Wife? Did the author of Genesis know as much about nature as Humboldt, or Darwin, or Haeckel? Is what is called the Mosaic Code as wise or as merciful as the code of any civilised nation? Were the writers of Kings and Chronicles as great historians, as great writers, as Gibbon and Draper? Is Jeremiah or Habakkuk equal to Dickens or Thackeray? Can the authors of Job and the Psalms be compared with Shakespeare? Why should we attribute the best to man and the worst to God?—R. G. Ingersoll.

THE CHRISTIAN FATHERS.—Their credulity was unbounded. They had a sublime disregard for truth; not so much from perversity as from carelessness and indifference to its sacred character. Their unscrupulousness when seeking for arguments to enforce their positions is notorious; as well as the prevalence among them of what are known as pious frauds.—Judge C. B. Waite, "History of the Christian Religion to the Year 200," p. 454; Chicago.

Digitized by Google

BOOK CHAT.

The Danish critic and Freethinker, Dr. Georg Brandes, is finishing a book on Shakespeare, which will appear in German at Paris.

* * *

Herbert Spencer has reprinted his essay on Weismannism from the Contemporary Review, and it is now published with a postscript. Mr. Spencer rightly says that, "as influencing men's view about Education, Ethics, Sociology, and Politics, the question whether acquired characters are inherited is the most important question before the scientific world." The question still remains an open one, though Mr. Spencer ably sustains the affirmative, while the case for a negative conclusion is strongly presented by Mr. W. P. Ball in his book, Are the Effects of Use and Disuse Inherited?

* * *

Dr. J. R. Monroe, the founder of the Ironclad Age, who died in 1891, at the age of sixty-eight, wrote, when in his teens, a Byronic skit entitled Will Cobbett's Vision; or, the Devil and Tom Paine. It has been reprinted by his daughter, and is published at the office of the Ironclad Age (Indianapolis) at 25 cents. Like all Dr. Monroe's writings, it is full of gay wisdom. In portraying his Satanic Majesty and his abode there are opportunities for much fun and satire upon orthodox doctrines, of which Dr. Monroe fully avails himself.

* * *

An English translation of Dr. Max Nordau's pessimistic work, Degeneration, will be published shortly. Those who know his Conventional Lies of Our Civilisation are aware of the iconoclastic character of the writings of this Hungarian Freethinker of Jewish birth. Among the subjects which come under his lash, as symptoms of the sickness of the fin de siècle, are Tolstoism, pre-Rephaelism, Wagnerism, and Ibsenism.

* * *

Lives of Christ are as numerous as blackberries, and as divergent as Christian creeds. Many have lamented that Jesus Christ never left any records himself, or even any instructions to his disciples to do so for him. It seems that at last—can it be owing to disgust at Farrar's gush?—J. C. has determined to rectify the omission; and an Autobiography by Jesus of Nazareth is published by J. P. Cooke, of Boston. One Olive G. Pettis is the "humble instrument" of this revelation. Olive declares: "Sentence by sentence it has been printed before me in bright electric letters ere I consigned them to paper, and every expression was as new to me as to the reader from first to last." We have not yet seen the book, but only its announcement in the Two Worlds. If, however, the revelation reveals anything, it will be vastly different from others of its species.

* * *

Some time ago a Glasgow Spiritist published the revelations of Hafed, Prince of Persia, supposed to be a contemporary of J. C., who gave particulars of his early life. The revelations came through the influence of Mr. David Duguid, a toucher-up of photos to Mr. Bowman, a leading Glasgow Spiritist—this "mejum" being also celebrated for skimble-skamble pictures, attributed to the spirits of Jan Steen or Turner. It appears from Hafed that both the Prince of Persia and Jesus Christ talked in the Scots tongue, using "will" for "shall," etc. This revelation, however, was surpassed by that vouchsafed to a member of the French Academy, who was a great collector of autographs, and purchased a letter signed by Jesus Christ, written in excellent French. Why not?

* * *

In Mr. Wheeler's pamphlet on The Christian Doctrine of Hell he has given many citations from the old divines to the effect that one of the enjoyments of heaven will be to witness the torments of the damned. To these might be added the Scotch poet, Sir David Lindsay, of the Mount, 1490–1567, who says of the blessed:—

> They sall rejoyis to se the great dolour
> Of dampnit folk in Hell, and thair torment,
> Because of God it is the juste jugement.

* * *

Professor C. H. Tawney's translation of the collection of Jain stories, entitled Kathakosa, for the New Oriental Translation Fund (at the rooms of the Royal Asiatic Society, 22 Albemarle-street, London, W.), will be ready in the course of the present month. Students of comparative folk-tales must be eager to have this work in their hands, as Mr. Tawney's notes of variants of the tales in different countries of India, as well as in Europe, cannot fail to prove both interesting and useful.

* * *

The Religions of the World, by G. M. Grant, D.D. (A. & C. Black), is a very different production from the Religious Systems of the World published by Sonnenschein, which attempted to give a view of various faiths from the standpoint of those who hold them. Dr. Grant's work should be entitled "Other Religions as Seen by Christian Eyes." The book, nevertheless, gives much information in a cheap form, and will help to open eyes to the fact that there are other religions besides Christianity which can claim to have done good among the races who have held them.

WHAT I'D LIKE TO KNOW.

In these modern times of misery, daily trouble, pain, and strife,
While the poor class toil and labor in the struggle for dear life,
We are taught that a Creator, an essence of sweet love,
With fond sympathy and pity regards us from above.
We are told that on Mount Sinai the just Jehovah said
That the father's sins should rightly be heaped on their children's heads.
For what did this God create us all to suffer here below?
That's what I cannot comprehend, but what I'd like to know.

With infallible foreknowledge, why made he Mother Eve,
And, knowing well what would ensue, let the Devil her deceive?
Did he desire mankind's fall when, with his endless might,
With ease he could have kept the fiend from Eden's holy site?
Then, not content with having to degradation brought the pair,
He blessed them with two children, their misery to share.
Why Cain should hate his brother, and slay him as a foe,
Perhaps his God could comprehend, but I should like to know.

Then Cain he set his mark upon, and banished him to Nod,
Where, strange to say, he found a spouse, provided by his God,
That this pair they might propagate sin infinitum ad—
For the world it got so wicked that it made Jehovah mad.
Said he, "Of you I've had enough; I'm sorry I'm your God!"
(Which speech, for the Almighty, seems just a trifle odd).
"I'll drown the cursed lot of you, then send you down below!"
Why God made man to drown and roast is what I want to know.

"But no," said God, "this will not do; you're getting off too cheap;
I formed and put this race of man on earth to wail and weep:
If I the lot exterminate, the fiend will only grin
And say the great 'I am' has had to knuckle down to him."
So he commanded patriarch Noah to build a boat so huge
That he and household (pets as well) could float on the deluge.
But how they from all parts of earth into the ark did go
Is one of those great mysteries that I should like to know.

As years rolled by, strange to relate, the world grew worse than ever;
"Confound it all," said Pater G., "Old Nick's for me too clever;
I'll go on earth, in form of man—save them by hook or crook:
Beelzebub, mine enemy, now to your laurels look!"
But Satan only laughed with scorn, he knew his "biz" too well
To fear that such a helpless God could thin the ranks of hell.
He tried; but how the universe fared with its God below
Is what I cannot comprehend, but what I'd like to know.

Now, faithful all, just ponder deep before you bend the knee
To that imaginary God, the father of J. C.
Can he be kind and loving who could mankind create
To torture in this world and next with endless fiery fate?
The profligate, the wealthy, the good, the poor, and all:
Rascality predominant—the weakest to the wall.
Say rather, to yourselves be true, as through this life you go,
And since you cannot comprehend you need not seek to know

Alex. Mitchell.

Pupil Teacher (to little Isaacstein, who is learning the Ten Plagues)—"Now, Master Joseph, what would you have done had you been in the thick darkness, that might be felt?" Master Jo—"Vat might be felt? Vy, I vould start a hat factory."

Digitized by Google

FREETHOUGHT GLEANINGS.

I AM quite amazed to discover the extraordinary gresdiness and facility with which men assert, believe, and reassert, and are believed.—George Grote.

WE ask for long life, but 'tis deep life, or grand moments that signify. Let the measure of time be spiritual, not mechanical. Moments of insight, of fine personal relation, a smile, a glance, what ample borrowers of eternity they are!—Emerson.

No truth can, properly speaking, be apprehended and made a portion of our mental acquisitions which cannot be verified when told to us; and any proposition which we can verify we could discover—that is, what man can verify man could have reached and worked out for himself.—W. Rathbone Greg.

WE have never witnessed the construction of a world. We only perceive the everlasting flux and reflux of phenomena, the ceaseless pulsation of nature and life, evolution, transformation, birth, death, and birth again. But nature herself is dumb as to her whence or whither.—Professor W. Knight.

CASTING OUT DEVILS.—It is important to remember that the theory of demoniacal possession, and its supposed cure by means of exorcism and invocations, was most common among the Jews long before the Christian era. As casting out devils was the most common type of Christian miracles, so it was the commonest belief and practice of the Jewish nation. Christianity merely shared the national superstition, and changed nothing but the form of exorcism.—"Supernatural Religion," vol. i., p. 145.

THE Church has not allowed women to inherit or hold property. It was a general ecclesiastical rule that a woman could never take part of an inheritance with a man unless by the particular and ancient customs of certain towns and cities. This restriction upon woman's right of property so obliterated the sense of justice in men's mind that husbands have not hesitated to use property coming to them through wives in the maintenance of a second or illegal family, while denying the legal wife and children the commonest necessaries of life. As late as 1878, when a law was enacted in one of the Swiss cantons allowing sisters to share inheritances with brothers, it met with great opposition from such brothers, many of whom protested their own ruin would follow.—Matilda Joslyn Gage, in "The Truth Seeker Annual for 1895."

PROTESTANT PERSECUTION.—But while the pre-eminent atrocity of the persecutions of the Church of Rome is fully admitted, nothing can be more grossly disingenuous or untrue than to represent persecution as her peculiar taint. She persecuted to the full extent of the power of her clergy, and that power was very great. The persecution of which every Protestant Church was guilty was measured by the same rule, but clerical influence in Protestant countries was comparatively weak. The Protestant persecutions were never so sanguinary as those of the Catholics, but the principle was affirmed quite as strongly, was acted on quite as constantly, and was defended quite as pertinaciously by the clergy.—W. E. H. Lecky, M.A., "History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe," chap. iv., part ii., pp. 42, 43, vol. ii.

"It was in the War of the Rebellion," said the diffident and blushing assistant rector. "A company of Union soldiers were ordered to take a Rebel battery. Quickly they sprang to the charge; but, alas! before they reached the guns they broke and fled. All, that is, except one corporal, who rushed in, seized a gunner, and carried him off captive. When the company reached the little clump of trees from whose shelter they had started, they gathered round the gallant corporal, and asked how he managed to capture his prisoner.

"'I just went in and took him,' said the hero, modestly. 'Ah, boys, why didn't you all keep on? There was a man for every one of you there.'

"And so I say to you, my dear young Christian soldiers. There is a man for every one in this world.

"Yes, my dear young brothers; there is a man for every one of you here.

"Yes, my dear young sisters; there is—er—there is—er—there is work for you all in the vineyard of the Lord if you only seek it. Let us now sing the 425th hymn:—

"'Oh, save me from the careless word,
The swift, unbidden thought,
And make me always think and speak
Exactly as I ought.'"

And the young assistant sat down with an intensely relieved expression, and mopped his burning brow.

PROFANE JOKES.

"Is the bishop a broad man, and liberal in his views?" "O my, yes. He's abroad most of the time, and in giving his views he is most prodigal."

A gentleman dined one day with a dull preacher. Dinner was scarcely over before the gentleman fell asleep, but was awakened by the divine, and invited to go and hear him preach. "I beseech you, sir," said he, "to excuse me; I can sleep very well where I am."

Jenkins—"Great stroke of luck for Brownley. I knew him when he was a poor theological student, and he has just been selected as pastor of one of the most fashionable churches in the city." Mrs. Jenkins—"So I understand. Rich congregation, isn't it?" Jenkins—"Rich? They have special monthly prayer-meetings to pray for a tight money market."

A "hard case" was interrogated the other Sunday by a friend who had just seen him at church, but whom he now found swallowing a glass of brandy and water at a public bar-room. "I saw you in church this morning listening to a discourse upon righteousness and temperance. How comes it that I now see you here drinking?" "I always thirst after righteousness," was the reply.

Two colored men took refuge under a tree in a violent thunderstorm. "Julius, can you pray?" "No, Sam," was the reply; "nebber prayed in my life." "Well, can't you sing a hymn?" Just then the lightning struck a tree near by, shivering it, when the first speaker exclaimed: "See heah, honey, sumfin' 'ligious has got to be done, an' dat mighty suddin', too; s'pose you pass around de hat."

A Scotch minister, who was very fond of using the personal pronoun, often placed it wrongly. While preaching in London he once took for his text, "The devil he goeth about like a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour." "My friends," he said, "we will divide our subject into three headings. Firstly, who the devil he was; secondly, who the devil he was seeking; and thirdly, what the devil he was roaring about." The congregation also roared, but with laughter.

Darwin's Opponents.

One eminent clerical reviewer, in spite of Darwin's thirty years of quiet labor, and in spite of the powerful summing-up of his book, prefaced a diatribe by saying that Darwin "might have been more modest had he given some slight reason for dissenting from the views generally entertained." Another distinguished clergyman, vice-president of a Protestant institute to combat "dangerous science," declared Darwinism "an attempt to dethrone God." Another critic spoke of persons accepting the Darwinian views as "under the frenzied inspiration of the inhaler of mephitic gas," and of Darwin's argument as a "jungle of fanciful assumptions." Another spoke of Darwin's views as suggesting that "God is dead," and declared that Darwin's work "does open violence to everything which the Creator himself has told us in the Scriptures of the methods and results of his work." Still another theological authority declares: "If the Darwinian theory is true, Genesis is a lie, the whole framework of the book of life falls to pieces, and the revelation of God to man, as we Christians know it, is a delusion and a snare."—Andrew D. White, in "The Popular Science Monthly."

Obituary.

ON Sunday morning I had the melancholy duty of conducting the funeral, at Finchley, of Frederick Wilkinson, the grandson of our late much-respected friend, Mr. Trevillion. The deceased was a young man of great promise and ability, cut off at the early age of nineteen. All friends will condole with the bereaved mother and other relatives.—R. FORDER.

How to Help Us.

(1) Get your newsagent to take a few copies of the Freethinker and try to sell them, guaranteeing to take the copies that remain unsold.

(2) Take an extra copy (or more), and circulate it among your acquaintances.

(3) Leave a copy of the Freethinker now and then in the train, the car, or the omnibus.

(4) Display, or get displayed, one of our contents-sheets, which are of a convenient size for the purpose. Mr. Forder will send them on application.

(5) Distribute some of our cheap tracts in your walks abroad, at public meetings, or among the audiences around street-corner preachers.

(6) Get your newsagent to exhibit the Freethinker in the window.

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY LECTURE NOTICES, ETC.

[Notices of Lectures, etc., must reach us by first post on Tuesday, and be marked "Lecture Notice," if not sent on post-card.]

LONDON.

HALL OF SCIENCE (142 Old-street, E.C.): 11.30, a lecture. (Free.) 6.30, musical selections; 7, G. W. Foote, "Mr. Balfour's Plea for Belief." (Admission free; reserved seats 3d. and 6d.) Tuesday, at 8.30, dramatic class rehearsals. Wednesday, at 8.30, G. W. Foote, "Shakespeare's Golden Comedy of As You Like It."

BATTERSEA SECULAR HALL (back of Battersea Park Station): 7.45, Robert Shore, "Why Secularists are Not Socialists." (Free.) Tuesday, at 8, dancing for N.S.S. members and friends. Wednesday, at 8, dramatic club.

CAMBERWELL (North Camberwell Hall, 61 New Church-road): 7.30, C. James, "The Star of Science in the Night of Faith." (Preceded by vocal and instrumental music.) Thursday, at 7.30, free science classes.

MILTON HALL (Hawley-crescent, 89 Kentish Town-road): 7.30, Rev. Stewart Headlam, "The County Council and the Ballet." (Free.)

WEST LONDON ETHICAL SOCIETY (Princes' Hall, Piccadilly): 11.15, Dr. Stanton Coit, "The Empire of the Dead Over the Living."

WOOD GREEN (Star Coffee House, High-street): 7, W. J. Heath, "What Caused the French Revolution."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

HYDE PARK (near Marble Arch): 11.30, W. J. Ramsey will lecture.

COUNTRY.

BIRMINGHAM (Coffee House, corner of Broad-street): Thursdays, at 8 papers, discussions, etc.

BRISTOL (Shepherds' Hall, Old Market-street): 7, J. P. Cogito, "Knowledge v. Belief."

DUNDEE (City Assembly Rooms): 11, Stanley Jones, "God, Man, and Design"; 2.30, "The Doctrines of Christianity"; 6.30, "Woman: Past, Present, and Future."

GLASGOW (Ex-Mission Hall, 110 Brunswick-street): 11.30, J. M. Robertson, "Mr. Mallock and Socialism"; 2.30, "Mr. Gladstone on the Atonement"; 6.30, "The Failure of Christianity."

HULL (St. George's Hall, Storey-street): 7, Mr. Monro, "Christ and the Twelve Apostles a Myth."

LIVERPOOL (Oddfellows' Hall, St. Anne-street): 3, philosophy class—Ernest Newman, "Kant"; 7, C. Doeg, "Religion v. Superstition."

MANCHESTER SECULAR HALL (Rusholme-road, All Saints): 11, Leonard Hall, "The Unemployed: the Problem Stated and Solved"; 3, "Twelve Months of Liberal-cum-Toryism"; 6.30, "From Slavery to Socialism." (Free.)

ROCHDALE (Working Men's College, 4 Acker-street); 6.30, Orris Kaye, "Cremation," with limelight illustrations.

SHEFFIELD SECULAR SOCIETY (Hall of Science, Rockingham-street): 7, W. Dyson, "The Divine Sacrifice in its Newest Light—A Criticism."

SOUTH SHIELDS (Thornton's Variety Hall, Union-lane): 11, C. Cohen, "Population and the Social Question"; 7, "Christianity: its Progress."

STOCKTON-ON-TEES (32 Dovecote-street): 6, business meeting—friends invited.

SUNDERLAND (Lecture Room, Bridge End Vaults, opposite Echo office): 7, Robert Weighman, "Thomas Paine."

Lecturers' Engagements.

C. COHEN, 12 Merchant-street, Bow-road, London, E.—All Sundays until April, South Shields.

STANLEY JONES, 58 Marlborough-road, Holloway, London, N.—Feb. 24, Edinburgh. March 3, Hull; 10, Sheffield; 11, Chesterfield.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Credon-road, Rotherhithe, London.—March 24, Camberwell.

SAM STANDRING, 6 Bury-road, Rochdale.—Feb. 17, Failsworth. March 26 and 27, Sheffield.

THOMAS PAINE'S WORKS.

The Age of Reason. New edition, with Preface by G. W. FOOTE. 1s.

Miscellaneous Theological Works. 1s.

Complete Theological Works. (Including the Age of Reason.) Cloth, 2s. 6d.

The Rights of Man. Centenary edition. With a Political Biography by J. M. WHEELER. 1s.; bound in cloth, 2s.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Works by Colonel R. G. Ingersoll.

SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES. The only complete edition in England. Accurate as Colenso, and fascinating as a novel. 132 pp. 1s. Superior paper, cloth 1s. 6d.

DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT. A Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy. 6d.

THE GODS. 6d.

REPLY TO GLADSTONE. With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler. 4d.

ROME OR REASON? A Reply to Cardinal Manning. 4d.

CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS. 3d.

ORATION ON WALT WHITMAN. 3d.

ORATION ON VOLTAIRE. 3d.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. 3d.

PAINE THE PIONEER. 2d.

HUMANITY'S DEBT TO THOMAS PAINE. 2d.

ERNEST RENAN AND JESUS CHRIST. 2d.

TRUE RELIGION. 2d.

THE THREE PHILANTHROPISTS. 2d.

LOVE THE REDEEMER. 2d.

GOD AND THE STATE. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part I. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part II. 2d.

FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Dr. Field. 2d.

GOD AND MAN. Second reply to Dr. Field. 2d.

THE DYING CREED. 2d.

THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION. A Discussion with the Hon. F. D. Coudert and Gov. S. L. Woodford. 2d.

THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH. 2d.

ART AND MORALITY. 2d.

DO I BLASPHEME? 2d.

THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE. 2d.

SOCIAL SALVATION. 2d.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE. An Agnostic's View. 2d.

SKULLS. 2d.

THE GREAT MISTAKE. 1d.

LIVE TOPICS. 1d.

MYTH AND MIRACLE. 1d.

REAL BLASPHEMY. 1d.

REPAIRING THE IDOLS. 1d.

CHRIST AND MIRACLES. 1d.

CREEDS & SPIRITUALITY. 1d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street E.C.

Price Twopence.

"A Letter to Lord Ellenborough."

OCCASIONED BY THE SENTENCE WHICH HE PASSED ON

MR. D. I. EATON,

AS PUBLISHER OF

THE THIRD PART OF PAINE'S "AGE OF REASON."

BY

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C

Price 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d. post free,

THE GRAND OLD BOOK.

A REPLY TO THE GRAND OLD MAN.

BY

G. W. FOOTE.

An Exhaustive Answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture."

CONTENTS:—Preface—Preliminary View—The Creation Story—The Fall of Man—The Psalms—The Mosaic Legislation—Corroborations of Scripture—Gladstone and Huxley—Modern Scepticism.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Now Ready, Price Twopence,

IS SUICIDE A SIN?

BY

COLONEL INGERSOLL.

Together with the Reply of MONSIGNOR DUCEY.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price 2s. 6d.,

THE WITNESS OF ASSYRIA;

OR,

THE BIBLE CONTRASTED WITH THE MONUMENTS.

By CHILPERIC EDWARDS.

"The work has a full index, and is in every respect a valuable one."—Freethinker.

London: R. Forder, 28, Stonecutter-street, E.C.

MARGATE.—TERRACE HOTEL, Marine Drive. Bed and Breakfast from 2s 6d. A large room to seat 500. Beanfeasts and other parties liberally treated.

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 338 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each, upper or lower set, £1. Best quality, 4s. each, upper or lower, £2, completed in four hours when required; repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum 7s. 6d. each, on 18 ct. gold 15s., stopping 2s. 6d., extraction 1s., painless by gas, 5s.

TO FREETHINKERS, Ladies and Gentlemen requiring SUPERIOR CUT GARMENTS at moderate prices. First-class Style and Fit Guaranteed.—H. HAMPTON, Artistic Tailor, 14 Great Castle-street, W. Three doors from Regent-street. [Patronised by leading Freethinkers.]

FREETHINKER TRACTS
Sixpence per Hundred.

MARRIOTT, CLOTHIER,
311 EDGWARE ROAD, W., near Metropolitan Music Hall (same side), six doors from Church-street. TROUSERS, good wear, 5s. 9d., 7s. 6d., and 9s. 6d.; Blacks, 7s. 6d. and 10s. 6d. Thirty sizes kept in stock. OVERCOATS from 12s. 6d.

EMPLOYMENT WANTED, at CHARING or NEEDLEWORK.
By the WIDOW of a FREETHINKER. Willing to do anything to get food and rent. Once in good position. Recommended by Mr. Forder.
Address, Widow, care of Mr. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

Colonel Ingersoll's Great New Lecture

ABOUT THE HOLY BIBLE

Price Sixpence.

London R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Vol. I., cloth gilt, 216 pp., 2s. 6d., post free,

CRIMES OF CHRISTIANITY.

BY

G. W. FOOTE AND J. M. WHEELER.

Hundreds of exact References to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.

CHAPTERS:—1, Christ to Constantine; 2, Constantine to Hypatia; 3, Monkery; 4, Pious Forgeries; 5, Pious Frauds; 6, Rise of the Papacy; 7, Crimes of the Popes; 8, Persecution of the Jews; 9, The Crusades.

"The book is very carefully compiled, the references are given with exactitude, and the work is calculated to be of the greatest use to the opponents of Christianity."—C. BRADLAUGH, in National Reformer.

"The book is worth reading. It is fair, and, on the whole, correct."—Weekly Times.

"The book has a purpose, and is entitled to a fair hearing."—Huddersfield Examiner.

"The work should be scattered like autumn leaves."—Ironclad Age (U.S.A.).

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

W. J. Rendell's "Wife's Friend"

Recommended by Mrs. Besant in Law of Population, p. 32, and Dr. Allbutt in Wife's Handbook, p. 51. Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell-street, Clerkenwell; 2s. per doz., post free (reduction in larger quantities). For particulars send stamped envelope.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

BEWARE of useless imitations substituted by some dealers and chemists, the words "Rendell & Co." and "J. W. Rendell" being speciously and plausibly introduced to deceive the public.

LOOK FOR AUTOGRAPH REGISTERED TRADE MARK

W. J. Rendell

No. 182,688.

IN Red INK ON EACH BOX, WITHOUT WHICH NONE ARE GENUINE.

Higginson's Syringe, with Vertical and Reverse Current, 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 5s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. Dr. Allbutt's Quinine Powders, 8s. per doz. All prices post free.

W. J. RENDELL, 15 Chadwell-st., Clerkenwell, E.C.

THE BEST BOOK

ON NEO-MALTHUSIANISM IS, I BELIEVE,

TRUE MORALITY, or THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF NEO-MALTHUSIANISM.

By J. R. HOLMES, M.M.L., M.V.S., M.N.S.S.

280 pages, with portrait and autograph, bound in cloth, gilt lettered. Price 1s., post free.

 In order to bring the information within the reach of the poor, the most important parts of the book are issued in a pamphlet of 112 pages at ONE PENNY, post free 2d. Copies of the pamphlet for distribution 1s. a dozen post free.

The National Reformer of 4th September, 1892, says: "Mr Holmes' pamphlet . . . is an almost unexceptionable statement of the Neo-Malthusian theory and practice . . . and throughout appeals to moral feeling. . . . The special value of Mr. Holmes' service to the Neo-Malthusian cause and to human well-being generally is just his combination in his pamphlet of a plain statement of the physical and moral need for family limitation with a plain account of the means by which it can be secured, and an offer to all concerned of the requisites at the lowest possible prices."

The Council of the Malthusian League, Dr. Drysdale, Dr Allbutt, and others have also spoken of it in very high terms.

The Trade supplied by R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C. Other orders should be sent to the author.

J. R. HOLMES, HANNEY, WANTAGE, BERKS.

Works by G. W. Foote.

Flowers of Freethought. First Series. 221 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Flowers of Freethought. Second Series. 302 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Bible Heroes. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Letters to the Clergy. First Series. 128 pp., 1s.

The Grand Old Book. A Reply to the Grand Old Man. An exhaustive answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture." 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Christianity and Secularism. Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Is Socialism Sound? Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 2s.

Infidel Death-Beds. Second edition, much enlarged, 8d. On superfine paper, in cloth, 1s. 3d.

Darwin on God. 6d.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s.

Will Christ Save Us? A Thorough Examination of the Claims of Jesus Christ to be considered the Savior of the World. 6d.

Reminiscences of Charles Bradlaugh. 6d.

A Defence of Free Speech. Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes. 4d.

Comic Sermons and Other Fantasias. 8d.

Rome or Atheism—the Great Alternative. 3d.

Letters to Jesus Christ. 4d.

Interview with the Devil. 2d.

Philosophy of Secularism. 3d.

Atheism and Morality. 2d.

My Resurrection. A Missing Chapter from the Gospel of Matthew, discovered by G. W. Foote. 2d.

The Folly of Prayer. 2d.

Ingersollism Defended against Archdeacon Farrar. 2d.

Was Jesus Insane? A Searching Inquiry into the Mental Condition of the Prophet of Nazareth. 1d.

Christianity and Progress. A Reply to Mr. Gladstone. 2d.

The Impossible Creed. An Open Letter to Bishop Magee on the Sermon on the Mount. 2d.

What was Christ? A Reply to J. S. Mill. 2d.

The Bible God. 2d.

Salvation Syrup; or, Light on Darkest England. A Reply to General Booth. 2d.

Is the Bible Inspired? A Criticism on Lux Mundi. 1d.

The Dying Atheist. A Story. 1d.

The Rev. Hugh Price Hughes's Converted Atheist. A Lie in Five Chapters. 1d.

Mrs. Besant's Theosophy. A Candid Criticism. 2d.

Secularism and Theosophy. A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant. 2d.

The New Cagliostro. An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky. 2d.

Bible Romances. New Edition. Revised and largely re-written. (1) The Creation Story, 2d.; (2) Eve and the Apple, 1d.; (3) Cain and Abel, 1d.; (4) Noah's Flood, 2d.; (5) The Tower of Babel, 1d.; (6) Lot's Wife, 1d.; (7) The Ten Plagues, 1d.; (8) The Wandering Jews, 1d.; (9) Balaam's Ass, 1d.; (10) God in a Box, 1d.; (11) Jonah and the Whale, 1d.; (12) Bible Animals, 1d.; (13) A Virgin Mother, 2d.; (14) The Resurrection, 2d.; (15) The Crucifixion, 1d.; (16) John's Nightmare, 1d.

The Shadow of the Sword. A Moral and Statistical Essay on War. 2d.

Royal Paupers. Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty. 2d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price 1s. 6d.; superior edition, superfine paper, cloth, 2s., post free,

The Bible Handbook

FOR FREETHINKERS & INQUIRING CHRISTIANS.

BY

G. W. FOOTE AND W. P. BALL.

Sold also in separate parts as follows:—

1.—Bible Contradictions. The contradictions are printed in parallel columns. 4d.

2.—Bible Absurdities. All the chief absurdities from Genesis to Revelation, conveniently and strikingly arranged, with appropriate headlines, giving the point of each absurdity in a sentence. 4d.

3.—Bible Atrocities. Containing all the godly wickedness from Genesis to Revelation. Each infamy has a separate headline for easy reference. 4d.

4.—Bible Immoralities, Indecencies, Obscenities, Broken Promises, and Unfulfilled Prophecies. 4d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

GREATEST BARGAINS ON EARTH.

1 Suit Length, Serge or Tweed
1 Dress Length, Tweed
1 Gentleman's Umbrella
1 Ladies' Umbrella
All for 21s. Carriage Paid.

Gentleman's Scarboro-Shaped Mackintosh, 26s.
Worth at least 42s.
Give chest, waist, and length measurements.

1 Navy Serge Dress Length
1 Black Cashmere Dress Length
1 Mixture Tweed Dress Length
All for 21s. Carriage Paid.

Lot 11
1 Pair All-Wool Blankets
1 Pair of Sheets
1 Quilt
1 Table-cloth
All for 21s. Carriage Paid.

TROUSERS TO MEASURE, 10s. 6d. per pair.
Fill up one of our Self-Measurement Forms, and you will get a 15s. pair of Trousers for 10s. 6d.

Four All-Wool TROUSERS' LENGTHS.
SPLENDID QUALITIES.
All for 21s. Carriage Paid.

Three NAVY SAILOR SUITS
to fit Boys up to seven years old.
All for 21s. Carriage Paid.

1 Serge Suit Length
1 Tweed Suit Length
21s. Carriage Paid. Worth double.

Send at Once, before the Sale Ends.

J. W. GOTT, 2 & 4 UNION-STREET, BRADFORD.

THE BIRTH OF CHRIST

A CHAPTER FROM
Strauss's Original "Life of Jesus."
WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY
G. W. FOOTE.
(A Most Thorough Analysis and Exposure of the Gospel Story by a Master Hand.)
Price Sixpence.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

ASK YOUR GROCER
FOR THE
ROYAL CHISWICK TABLE JELLIES

EXPERT'S OPINION—
"The Perfection of Jelly."

"Certainly far superior to all other Jelly Tablets—in transparency, strength, and in flavor utterly beyond comparison."

Sample Dozen—Pints 4s. 6d.; Quarts 8s., carriage free.
WHOLESALE TERMS ON APPLICATION.

TOUZEAU PARRIS & CO.,
ENFIELD WORKS, ACTON, LONDON, W.

ALLINSON FOR HEALTH.

HOME CONSULTATIONS—10 a.m. to 1 p.m., 10s. 6d.; 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., 5s. Patients Visited.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. I. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on Management of Infancy, Health, Longevity, The Teeth, Tobacco, The Drink Question. Also the Cause and Cure of Disease, Constipation, Biliousness, Eczema, Blackheads and Pimples, Nervousness, Coughs and Colds, Chest Complaints, Deafness, Thread Worms, Long Worms, Tape Worms, The Itch, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. II. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on The Healing Power of Nature, Urine, Saline Starvation, the Hair and its Management, Sleep and Sleeplessness, Want of Energy, etc. Advice for the Thin, for the Stout; Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. III. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on No More Death, Management of Young Children, Unsuspected Domestic Poisons, How to Grow Tall, to Keep Warm, to Live One Hundred Years, to Improve the Memory, and to become Beautiful and Attractive. On the Cause and Cure of Stomach Troubles, Flatulence, Sleeplessness, Varicose Veins, Boils and Carbuncles, Sebaceous Tumors and Warts, Hay Fever, Winter Cough, Chilblains, Epilepsy, and on the Diseases Produced by Taking Mercury.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. IV. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on Hardening, Work and Overwork, Sugar and its Abuse, Milk as Food, the Tomato, Poultices, Quinine, Against the Knife, Arsenical Poisoning, Tonics, Against Stimulants in Disease, about Swallowing Pins and other Articles. Also Cure of Sunstroke, Dog Bites, Pains in the Back, Pediculi or Lice, Chicken-Pox, Synovitis or Inflammation of the Joints, Tonsilitis or Quinsy, Herpes (Tetter or Shingles), Erysipelas, Ulcer of the Stomach, Epidemic Influenza, Sciatica, Psoriasis or English Leprosy, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. V. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on Pure Water, The Mouth, Its Use and Abuse; Rules for the Aged, Training, Blood Letting, Nose Bleeding, Felon or Whitlow, Ingrowing Toenail, Gum Boil, Cold in the Head, a Red Nose, Flushing and Blushing, Toothache, Sore Mouth, St. Vitus' Dance, Goitre, Mumps, Inflamed Eyes and Eyelids, Fits, Fainting, Apoplexy, Spitting and Vomiting of Blood, Vomiting, Wounds, Burns, Scalds, Bruises, etc.

The Five Volumes, strongly and neatly bound, price 6s. 9d., post free.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.—An Eye Opener to Drug Takers.
RHEUMATISM: ITS CAUSE AND CURE. Post free for 7d.
DIET AND DIGESTION. Post free for 7d.
CONSUMPTION: ITS NATURAL CURE. Post free 7d.
All these Books, bound in One Vol., post free, 2s. 6d. Send Postal Order
THREE PAMPHLETS FOR YOUNG MEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
A BOOK FOR MARRIED WOMEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
All communications to be addressed to—
DR. T. R. ALLINSON,
4 Spanish-place, Manchester-square, London, W.

Printed and Published by G. W. FOOTE, at 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

VOL. XV.—NO. 8. SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1895. PRICE TWOPENCE.

HUNTED DOWN.

A YEAR ago, this very month, I had the honor of exposing a shameless fraud—the story of the converted Atheist Shoemaker, by the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes. Now that February has come round again I have the satisfaction of knowing that I have succeeded in publicly branding the vilest libel that was ever launched against our much-abused party. I do not mean that I have done this piece of work entirely by myself. I simply mean that it would not have been done without me. Others have shared in the labor, and I should be base to conceal or minimise the fact; but this matter, like all others, has required leadership, and I have not shrunk from the responsibilities of my position.

One of the responsibilities of my position is the facing of misunderstanding, misrepresentation, and detraction. Our party encourages freedom of opinion, and a good deal of it is exercised upon the President's policy. Notwithstanding the unanimous opinion of the Executive that something should be done to check the infamous slander referred to, there are persons who shook their heads, muttered misgivings, whispered that it was all a mistake, and hinted that the President had urged the party upon a rash course. Some of them prophesied disaster, and perhaps they are secretly grieved at the failure of their vaticinations. The great majority of the party, however, is always sound enough, and always generous in its loyalty. It does not expect supernatural wisdom or capacity; it only expects its officers to do their best, and it supports them in their endeavor. There was no need to incite the majority to defend its reputation. It longed to do so. Indifference to insult is all very well in its way, and some of it is indispensable; but it should never be carried to the point where it may be mistaken for guilt or pusillanimity. There is a time to bear and a time to resist; a time to be grimly silent, and a time when the sword of indignation should leap from its scabbard. And surely that time had arrived when an incredibly filthy libel upon the headquarters of the National Secular Society was circulated in a pamphlet, with an abundance of detail which gave it a very dangerous air of plausibility.

This libel will be found in the report of last Monday's trial in the Court of Queen's Bench, which has been reported verbatim for the Freethinker by the Press Association. Unfortunately, the whole of it could not be given in this week's issue. Neither time nor space permitted of this being done. It will be concluded next week; after which it will be republished in a permanent form, with introduction, notes, and a decisive statement about the "Leeds Orgies," which have been for so many years the theme of heated rhetoric on Christian platforms, and which, alas! have even been held up for abhorrence, as an outcome of "Bradlaughism," in a journal with pretensions to Freethought!

As the whole of the trial does not appear in this week's issue, I may briefly tell the readers what is in store for them. There is first the examination of John Snow, the Christian publisher, and his merciless cross-examination by Mr. Walton; secondly, Mr. Walton's splendid speech in reply to the defence, a speech which commanded universal admiration; thirdly, the judge's charge to the jury; and, lastly, the jury's verdict with the Court's judgment.

The trial itself occupied several hours, though the issue was, legally, a very narrow one. Mr. Harper, of the firm of Harper and Battcock, the solicitors for our side, was in attendance with his clerk, Mr. Hurrel. It would be impossible to praise too highly the care and ability displayed by this firm in their preparation of the case. Mr. Cluer, the junior counsel on our side, is a son-in-law of Mr. R. A. Cooper, of Norwich. His capacity and attainments ought to have secured him a high position at the bar. Mr. Lawrence Walton, M.P., the senior counsel, had the case remarkably well in hand. He is a first-rate speaker, with a real oratorical faculty. I listened to him as a connoisseur, and I was delighted. His plea for freedom of thought and speech for all inquirers, his reprobation of bigotry, and his censure of the "charity" which thinketh all evil of opponents, were delivered in beautiful language and with great force and sincerity. Mr. Murphy, the senior counsel on the other side, struck me as an excellent browbeater. There was an absence of "breeding" in his whole manner. He bluntly told Mr. Smith that his opinions were important in estimating the value of his character. He had no case, and he knew it. His object was to excite prejudice, and to introduce illegitimate evidence. In this attempt he was foiled in a masterly manner by Mr. Walton. Finding the game was up, Mr. Murphy decamped, leaving the poor, battered case in the hands of his junior, Mr. Rawlinson; a gentleman of loose, shambling, but fluent eloquence, with a great gift for worrying a point, and pressing an obvious absurdity as though it were a cogent argument. Mr. Rawlinson is of a pious turn of mind. He occasionally indulges in open-air preaching. I hear that he was very interested in this case, and that he pleaded for Snow & Co. gratuitously. If this be true, he has furnished a fresh illustration of the truth that what is got for nothing is generally worth it.

Judge Lawrance did not exhibit any particular ability. What little he did display seemed rather at the service of the defendants. He never uttered a word in reprobation of a libel which Mr. Justice Wright said was about the worst he had ever read. He appeared to regard it as one of those things which a Christian disputant might be expected to say in a moment of exaltation. His lordship remarked that people forgot themselves in politics, for instance, as well as in religion; as though it were common, in political controversy, to accuse opponents of crimes like the promotion of unnatural vices! On the whole, his lordship created the impression that he would not be displeased by a verdict for the defendants. Of course an English judge is beyond suspicion of partiality; but, as a matter of fact, Justice Lawrance, when he sat in the House of Commons, was a rabid opponent of the late Charles Bradlaugh.

John Snow, the principal defendant, cut a sorry figure under cross-examination. He is evidently a Christian. You could not mistake him for anything else. His code of morality would make an Atheist shudder. Somehow or other, John Snow kept at a safe distance from his friend, W. R. Bradlaugh. As far as profane eyes could see, they exchanged no civilities; in fact, they held no communication. W. R. Bradlaugh himself I saw in court for the first time. One inspection is sufficient. He has nothing of "Bradlaugh" but the name. If there is anything in physiognomy, he is—well, fit to edit the Anti-Infidel.

Mr. R. O. Smith, on our side, bore the brunt of cross-examination. Owing to his legal position at the Hall of Science, in the old days, he had to figure as plaintiff—no other person having any status in an action. Mr. Smith has had a lot of trouble in this matter, which I cordially recognise. He should not have said, however, that I solicited subscriptions on his behalf. I have done nothing of the kind. Certainly I have opened a Fighting Fund, of which I will give an account when it is prudent; probably at the next Conference. But I have not said what I wanted the money for, nor have I told anyone; still less have I authorised anyone to make any sort of statement in regard to it; and I entirely decline to endorse Mr. Smith's statement in the witness-box. Of course I say this merely out of self-defence, and not out of any discourtesy to Mr. Smith, who was no doubt under the impression that he had to state as a fact what was only his inference. I must also correct the statement that Mr. Smith built the Hall of Science with his own capital. It would never have been built at all if the Freethought party had not subscribed the initial sum of £1,298, which Mr. Smith has admitted that he received through Mr. Bradlaugh. More money was subsequently expended by Mr. Smith out of his earnings and savings; but it is a little misleading to put it, as it was put in court, that Mr. Smith built the Hall of Science entirely out of his own capital; as though the National Secular Society, and Charles Bradlaugh at its head, were simply housed there at Mr. Smith's good pleasure. I am well aware that Mr. Smith did not intend to create this impression. It was an exaggeration into which Mr. Walton fell through not knowing all the details. Nevertheless, as I am giving the report to the world, I am bound to provide the correction.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Charles Watts, Mr. Robert Forder, and Miss E. M. Vance, the other witnesses on our side, were not much cross-examined. The testimony in favor of Mr. Smith's moral and legal responsibility for the conduct of the Hall of Science was simply overwhelming.

The line of defence adopted by the other side was a singular exhibition of Christian morality. When the action was begun, the defendants boasted that they had at last an opportunity of publicly establishing the vile immorality of Secularism. They promised their dupes that when the case was tried the charges in the libel would be "proved up to the hilt." Christian evidencers went about chuckling. It was rumored that a whole army of detectives would appear as witnesses to cover the Atheists with confusion. I heard all this, and I smiled. It soon came to my knowledge that the gang of libellers were quarreling amongst themselves. W. R. Bradlaugh bitterly complained of being led into a trap by Powell. There was not a shadow of a shade of evidence obtainable; the libel was a mere malignant invention. But it was against the rules of Christian Evidence to confess an error and offer reparation. The sole desire of the libellers was to save their own skins. Accordingly they instructed their counsel to plead that they never meant their accusations to apply to the Hall of Science, but to a hall at Leeds. This was a policy of desperation. It has been a jest among Christians for twenty-five years that the Hall of Science is opposite a lunatic asylum. It is also known to be the headquarters of the Secular party. Yet although the place referred to in the libel was "the headquarters of the Secularists" and "opposite a lunatic asylum," these good Christians, these champions of virtue, these guardians of morality, set up the monstrously base and lying plea (at the eleventh hour) that the place referred to was two hundred miles away in Yorkshire!

It is easy to see what the libellers were depending upon. Their trust was in the Christian prejudices of the jury. But the libel was too gross to be countenanced by any dozen men who had no interest in its circulation. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, with £30 damages. The libellers have also to pay costs, and their total bill will amount to something like £250.

Thirty pounds is not a great sum. It would hardly repay me or Mr. Smith (I should imagine) for the time and attention we have given to the case. But the great thing is the VERDICT. It is the opening of a new era. Henceforth the baser sort of Christians will know that they cannot libel Secularists with absolute impunity. All the London papers, with the exception of that ridiculous Daily News, have published the fact that a jury has punished Christians for libelling Freethinkers. The fellows tried to send me to prison for an article headed "Hunting Them Down," but they failed, and I have now the pleasure of putting the title in the past tense. They are now "Hunted Down."

G. W. FOOTE.

A RATIONAL SUNDAY.

THE City Corporation of London is hardly the most enlightened or liberal of bodies, yet by the substantial majority of ninety-eight against sixty-eight the Court of Common Council has decided that the forthcoming Art Exhibition at the Guildhall shall be open on Sunday afternoons. On the last occasion the Sunday opening was allowed by a narrow majority as an experiment, and the large increase of the majority may be taken as a sign that the orderly character of the attendance is quite satisfactory. Indeed, this is the universal testimony. Wherever such Sunday exhibitions are opened those who attend them are orderly. Quiet, innocent enjoyment is afforded to thousands, and sobriety and good conduct are increased. In congratulating the City upon the good sense of the majority of its Council on this question, I cannot but ask if it is anything less than a scandal that collections formed by the State and paid for out of the money of the people should be closed to the toiling thousands on their one day of leisure. Under the most despotic government on the continent such an infringement of freedom would not be tolerated. Yet in this boasted land of liberty, with a Premier who was at one time a president of a Sunday Society, and with Mr. John Morley in the Cabinet, no assurance can be obtained of a speedy removal of those restrictions which bar working men from seeing their own property in the British Museum, the National Gallery, and other national treasure-houses on the one day when they can view them with ease and convenience.

Here, as elsewhere, it is clericalism that is the enemy. The priests want no competition with their own monopoly of the Lord's Day. The Sunday Society instituted a Museum Sunday, and boasted that fifty-four sermons had been delivered on their behalf. It proved that the bulk of the preachers were Unitarians, while Ethical culturists and Positivists were included to swell up the number. The men of God, as a whole, want no such healthy competition with their avocation as is afforded by museums, art galleries, libraries, lecture and concert rooms. The shut-up Sunday is an institution preserved in the interests of this particular class of parasites on the commonwealth. If they believed in the Sunday as a commandment of God, as they preach, they should keep holy Saturday, the Jewish Sabbath, the day on which the Almighty rested from his labors. They should put to death any one who as much as kindled a fire on that day (Exodus xxxv. 3, 4). As to Sunday, its very name betrays its Pagan origin, and indicates how much of sun-worship and sun-myth is interwoven in the fabric of Christianity. It is to Constantine, if to any one, that the sacred character of the first day of the week is due.

To Jesus, the Sabbath-breaker, is attributed the sensible utterance, that the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath. But the men of God virtually say to the rest of the world, "The Sabbath was made for us; but you were made for the Sabbath." They have resorted to every device to preserve the monopoly of their day. They have pretended concern for the poor attendants at public institutions; but, when shown that that objection could be obviated by the attendants having another day, they have, to put off Sunday opening, increased the hours of attendance by the needless opening of the museums in the evening, when the jaded workers, having journeyed home to rest, have no inclination to return to visit museums. They have pretended that Sunday opening is not desired by the workers, though the élite of them have again and again pronounced their decision from their Trade Unions. They hold up the bugbear of a Continental Sunday, especially to those who do not know what the Continental Sunday is like. One might as well pretend that, because preachers are fond of vestments and histrionic attitudes, therefore they will proceed to wear paint, powder, and wigs like actors, as to suppose that the English workmen will turn Sunday into something they do not desire.

A day of rest existed before Christianity, and would remain though all its dogmas had vanished. But the worker requires not only physical rest, he needs the best rest of recreation: the employment of new faculties, the refreshment of eye and heart by contact with the beauties of nature and the masterpieces of art; and the interested men of God, in restricting their choice between the church and the public-house, are largely responsible for the degradation they so often lament.

Digitized by Google

The irksome stress of the Sabbatarian Sunday, as Charles Dickens pointed out nearly half a century ago, falls mainly on the poor. The well-to-do can, and do, enjoy themselves then as on any other day. At their homes and clubs they can take any amusements and any refreshments they please. At the Niagara Hall an aristocratic crowd skate regularly all Sunday, unheeding the invitation of church bells. In summer time pleasure boats, carriages, wagonettes, and trains take out of town the well-to-do; or the rich man, if pious, can go on Saturday to his country house, and as he is walking in his beautiful gardens can turn up his eyes at the passing cyclist, who risks damnation by obtaining fresh air and change of scenery in his own way.

Children, as well as the poor, are the worst sufferers from our pious Sunday. Only those who have lived in Scotland or in religious families in England, where "keeping the Lord's Day holy" is enforced in its full austerity, can tell the suffering regularly imposed every seventh day upon little ones by their forced restraint on Sunday. Every natural impulse is set down as a sin. To play, run, jump, sing, or whistle is checked as though inspirations of the devil, instead of the spontaneous ebullition of natural, healthy life. Mr. H. Crabb Robinson, in his Diary, tells how he was not even allowed to look into a picture book. To read anything save "the word of God" or pious literature was considered an infringement of the fourth commandment, as likely to be punished as an infraction of any of the other prohibitions of the Decalogue. Such teaching is largely responsible for making us, what the continental nations do not scruple to call us, the most hypocritical nation on the face of the earth. I have frequently had the pleasure of witnessing children, brought up in strict observance of the Sabbath, yet romping and dancing with delight when they spend the Lord's Day with a Freethinker's family.

The little progress made with the legislative enfranchisement of the Sunday shows how much work has to be done; but little by little the ice-bound creeds of the past are loosening. The sun of Freethought is rising, and the Sunday, wrested from the hands of the priests, will become a day of gladness instead of a time of gloom.

J. M. WHEELER.

THE REAL REDEEMERS OF THE WORLD.

THE present condition of the world is certainly not all that could be desired; still, it is satisfactory to know that it is a considerable improvement upon the past. The history of the human race has been one of progression from physical serfdom and mental darkness towards freedom and knowledge. The men who have been the principal contributors to this advancement were not founders of religious systems, but expounders of science, philosophy, and the principle of individual liberty. The real redeemers of the world are those who study the great facts of nature, learning her secrets, and revealing her power and value to the human family. While Christ devoted himself to the mysteries of theology, such reformers as Copernicus, Galileo, Bruno, and subsequently Newton, Locke, Darwin, and a host of other servants of humanity, endeavored to the best of their ability to ascertain the truths of existence, and to vindicate the principle of freedom. Copernicus and his immediate successors redeemed the world from errors which for ages had been nursed by the Church; Locke based his philosophy upon knowledge, not upon the faiths of theology; Newton contended that the universe was regulated by natural law, not by supernatural power; and Darwin exploded the Bible error of creation. These redeemers rescued mankind from the burden of ignorance and superstition that had so long prevented the recognition of truth and the advancement of knowledge. Shakespeare contributed more to the enlightenment of the human race than Christ was capable of doing; Darwin far surpassed St. Paul in bringing to view the great forces of nature, and the Freethought heroes and martyrs aided the emancipation of intellect to a far higher degree than either the "Carpenter of Nazareth" or the whole of his followers. The power that has enabled these secular redeemers of the world to achieve their glorious results was found, not in perplexing theologies, but in the principles of Science and Liberty—the true saviors of men.

Christ is paraded as the one redeemer of the world, but his system lacks such essentials of all reform as worldly ambition, and reliance upon the human power of regeneration. If we lament the poverty and wretchedness we behold, we are told by Christians that "the poor shall never cease out of the land." If we seek to remove the sorrow and despair existing around us, we are reminded that they were "appointed curses to the sons of Adam." If we work to improve our condition, we are taught that we should remain "in that state of life in which it has pleased God to call us." When we endeavor to improve our minds and to cultivate our intellects, we are informed that "we are of ourselves unable to do any good thing." If we seek to promote the happiness of others, we are assured that "faith in Christ is of more importance than labor for man." We to-day have but a vague idea of the extent of the influence such teachings once exercised over the minds of those who believed them. These teachings have permeated the minds of orthodox Christians, stifling their reason and perverting their judgment, till they cherish the delusion that the reasonings of philosophers, the eloquence of poets, and the struggles of patriots are all worse than useless unless purified by the "Spirit of Christ." It is such delusions which foster the erroneous and retarding belief that every thought which does not aspire to the throne of Christ, every action which is not sanctioned by him, and every motive which does not proceed from a love for him should be discouraged as antagonistic to our real progress in life.

The two elements in society which are termed respectively radical and conservative have, it is supposed, been in operation in all periods and in all nations. Hence, in every country some freedom has been found; but its extent has always had to be determined by the amount of culture that existed. No doubt the conservative element in nature has its advantages; it is, however, a mischief when it is employed to retain the existing condition of things merely from a dread of change, and not because what exists is right or needful. It is, in my opinion, through this error that the notion that Jesus was a secular reformer has been so long perpetuated. In times of mental darkness and political servitude Christ was accepted by some as the "star of hope," and ignorance and fanaticism have since fostered the delusion. It is not surprising that the superstitious ideas which were imparted to the young, and encouraged by priestly influence, self-interest, and bad training in the domain of real knowledge, should have held their sway upon the human mind. Robert Owen showed clearly that men are the result of the conditions in which their characters were formed and developed. The circumstances which surrounded the early stages of societarian man were favorable to intellectual stagnation; hence the slavish prostration to the machinations of theology, and the persistent adherence to false notions of the duties of man, and of the power of the universe. It is science and liberty that have redeemed mankind from their primitive state of ignorance and slavery.

When knowledge and freedom were secured, the power of theology decreased, and men acquired faith in self-help and united effort. Men who live under the influence of science and liberty create the institutions, the government, and the sentiments of their time. They are no longer the slaves of others, dependent on doles and alms, but they become a self-supporting productive power in society. Thus is developed in the race that which is always admired—namely, dignity in character, and self-reliance in action. To call forth and sustain these features in man should be the object of all social reformers. Christ failed to do either, and his principles do not possess the power necessary for such a purpose.

If science and liberty had never been known, or if they had never operated in the improvement of human affairs, in all probability theology, with its prophets and priests, would have allowed all that is noble and best in human nature to become extinct. The policy of the Church has been to crush mental freedom and to curb all criticism, particularly criticism of its own teachings. But, in spite of all this, knowledge has become a power that, to a large extent, has deprived the Church of the position it once had. When it held uninterrupted sway true freedom was unknown. With the advent of science the emancipa-tion of mankind commenced. The deliverance from that ignorance and slavery which for centuries degraded mankind, and which Christ and his system failed to remove, was the work of the real redeemers—Science and Liberty.

Digitized by Google

There is something sublime in the contemplation of the scientific intellect at work seeking for the solution of the problems which nature presents to those students whose minds are free from the trammels of ignorance and of prejudice. Progress is supported by, and is grown upon, the discoveries such men are constantly making. Science, the great providence of man, is not mere guess-work, but it is the investigation into, and the application of, the facts of existence. From these it learns what the possible and the actual really are. Its disciples set their affections on things below, and they are anxious for the morrow, although the New Testament advises the very opposite. Their faith rests upon the experience of the past, not upon conjectures of a future, that is hidden from the gaze of mortal man. Science and liberty are founded upon the requirements of human nature; they are the levers by which men can alone be permanently elevated; they are the stars that guide us safely through life, and that enable us to leave valuable legacies for the service of future generations.

The true redeemers of our race are those who, disregarding Bible injunctions, love the world and the things of the world; whose kingdom is of the earth, and whose yearnings are for the secular well-being of their fellows. The world's reformers are not influenced by spiritual imaginations, but by the power of reason; they are captivated, not by the allurements of theology, but by the grandeur and potency of natural truths; not by the hope of sharing mansions "beyond the skies," but by the desire to enjoy happy homes in the life we now have. With such reformers facts are more important than fiction, realities are more serviceable than fancies, and knowledge is of greater value than belief. These are the characteristics that have marked the true benefactors of all time, who have ever found in science and philosophy the resources which have contributed to personal and national progress, shedding the halo of mental freedom upon a too long neglected humanity. CHARLES WATTS.

ACID DROPS.

"UNSCIENTIFIC SCIENCE" was the title of a rare old Hugh Price Hughes article in last week's Methodist Times. It was a review, or rather a laudation, of Mr. Balfour's new book. First of all, the volume is called "one of the most remarkable books this generation has seen"—meaning, of course, produced. But any slipshod is good enough for an excited Methodist. Secondly, Mr. Balfour is called "one of the ablest apologists for the Christian religion since the days of Bishop Butler." All the infidel arguments against Christianity may be used with "tenfold greater effect" against his own boasted science. A little lower down we read that "every objection which is made to Christianity is equally applicable to the dogmas of its enemies." What a state of mind the man is in, to be sure! "Tenfold" and "equally" are just the same in his boiled-rice-pudding intelligence.

Mr. Hughes declares that Mr. Balfour has shown "the hideous immorality of Naturalism." Mr. Balfour does not employ such language; the expression belongs to Mr. Hughes; who, by the way, would consider it shocking if we were to talk about "the hideous immorality of Christianity."

"Many living advocates of Naturalism are immeasurably better than their creed," says Mr. Hughes. It is a gross piece of impertinence, and abject would be the Secularist who could take it as a compliment. For our part, we don't at all think that Mr. Hughes is immeasurably better than his creed. He is about on its level—intellectually and morally, especially in the matter of lying for the glory of God.

Mr. Hughes winds up with the statement that "in England, at any rate, the extreme foolishness of Agnosticism is being found out." Well, if anything could exceed the extreme foolishness of the observation, we should like to see it introduced. Fancy a poor creature like Hughes, who is absolutely incapable of anything like thought, in the philosophical sense of the word; fancy a man who means the same by "tenfold" and "equally"; fancy such a fellow talking about the extreme foolishness of John Stuart Mill, Matthew Arnold, Professor Huxley, and Herbert Spencer! Why, he isn't worthy to tie up the shoestrings of any one of them.

Mr. Holyoake should note that any virtue he has ever displayed, according to Mr. Hughes, is entirely owing to Christianity. This applies to all Secularists at present. None of them will have any virtue to display if "the views they advocate prevail and the existing Christian environment disappears." The Christian environment means the presence of a lot of people like the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes. Mr. Holyoake was influenced by that environment during the Atheist Shoemaker controversy, and the result was not such as to induce other Secularists to follow his example. Mr. Hughes could probably teach Secularists a good many things, but whether he could teach them anything worth knowing is quite another question.

"It is a distinctly Christian move," says the Methodist Times, apropos of the effort which is being made to induce the Government to "raise the British to the French standard" by fixing twelve years, instead of eleven, as the limit for juvenile labor in factories and workshops. What kind of a move was it, then, when France made it before England? Was it a Christian move then? Or did it only spring from the natural depravity of French infidels?

A Northumberland lady is reported to have given £2,000 for the sepulchre wherein Christ was laid outside Jerusalem. This, however, is not the only sepulchre of Christ, and if the price rules at £2,000 there will soon be a still larger supply in the market.

The Bishop of Winchester was addressing a Church meeting at Bournemouth. He was dealing with the necessity of keeping clear and bright the light of Christianity. Just at that point the gas went out.

Sophia Dobson, who also called herself Minerva, has been fined £25 for telling fortunes in the City of London by aid of palmistry. The fine was paid, so the business is probably a lucrative one; indeed, Sophia said she had practised it for four years in Manchester without molestation. At the same time thousands of black-coated gentry are able, not only to obtain money from the willing, but the unwilling also, by telling people's fortunes after they are dead; and the theology upon which they base their pretensions is quite as little of a science, and as much discredited a superstition, as palmistry.

Christian clergymen, and other prominent officials, have been distinguishing themselves lately. Three "reverend" Church of England parsons have figured in the Divorce Court, either as respondents or co-respondents, and have been found guilty of both adultery and cruelty; and one of them was threatened by the judge with a prosecution for wilful and corrupt perjury. A Nonconformist minister made a successful debut in the Birmingham Police-court, and was fined five shillings and costs for being drunk in the public streets. A superintendent of a Wesleyan Sunday-school is charged with an indecent outrage upon one of his female teachers, and a Catholic priest is accused of similar offensive practices with one of his flock. The Prophet Christ said: "By their fruits shall ye know them." Judged by this standard, Christianity must be a very corrupt tree to produce such evil fruit.—Crescent.

The Behar Times says Englishmen succeeded with apparent ease in conquering India, but there can be hardly any doubt that English missionaries have failed in conquering the religion of India.

The Crescent gives a very far from flowery account of the Armenians, whom it calls the Shylocks of the East. It says: "Although as a nation they pretend to be the gentlest and most docile of people, their creed contains the most fearful curses upon everybody who differs from them. Like the Russians, they permit no instrumental music in their churches. Their Bibles contain two books in each Testament unfamiliar to our ears—the History of Joseph and his Wife, and the Testimony of the Twelve Patriarchs in the Old Testament; the Third Epistle of the Corinthians and the Epistle of the Corinthians to Paul in the New Testament."

According to the Glasgow Weekly Herald, at a recent presentation of a handsome watch in the Western Highlands, the gentleman who made the presentation hoped the recipient "would not wear the watch on the Sabbath, because it might be a temptation to himself and to others by withdrawing their attention from higher things."

In the course of a lecture in Aberdeen, the other night, the speaker produced a rude kind of harp, declaring that the one used by David of Israel was probably very similar. The lecturer jangled a tune on the instrument, after which the clergyman who occupied the chair remarked that he now knew why Saul threw a javelin at David.

Digitized by Google

At a public dining-table, the other day, a discussion arose on Bible knowledge, and one gentleman, to test a disputant's acquaintance with the sacred print, asked him if he could tell where "whisky" was mentioned in the Bible. "Whisky," was the reply, "is not referred to in the Bible; at least, if it is, I do not remember." "Look at Hezekiah iii. 4," said the first speaker, in a voice loud enough to be heard by the others around the table. No one seemed to know the passage, and there was a general reference to the Old Testament, with what result we leave our readers to find out for themselves.

The North Bay Times reports: "A unique method of raising money for church purposes was introduced at last Sunday morning's service in the Baptist tabernacle, Ingersol. The pastor, Rev. J. F. Barker, gave to each member attending the morning service a dollar bill, on the promise that they were to invest it, and, at the end of the year, 1895, return it along with what it had earned in the meantime. About $100 was passed out." No doubt there will be much prayer offered for the safe investment of those dollars. But how about the Bible injunctions against usury?

The Catholic, of Dublin, alluding to St. Winifrede's Well, says: "Opposition being the life of trade, the wise Roman Catholics of Wales have set up an opposition shop to Lourdes." Evidently it looks at the matter from the proper commercial point of view, though it complains further on that "eighteen-pence for a tin of water is a little too much."

In the New York Cosmopolitan for February, Julian Hawthorne gives an account of the tortures used by the Inquisition, etc., under the title of "Salvation via the Rack." He points out that the horrible cruelties of the torture chamber flowed naturally from religious beliefs. He remarks that men then believed the Bible with an intense faith. "They read in the Bible that God punished sin; that, if it were persisted in, He punished it after the death of the body with an eternity of torments, compared with which the worst that man can inflict were as nothing. That was their precedent."

"Their excuse," he goes on to say, "was yet more plausible. Evil in man was caused by the machinations of the Devil—by the suggestion and persuasion of his angels. The Inquisition, by torturing the body, aimed to cast out these devils. This accomplished, the soul would be saved from the everlasting torments of hell. Temporal pain was the severe but merciful means of guarding against the pains to which there was no end."

Mr. Hawthorne does not mention that this belief in the agency of devils was also a Scriptural one. Jesus especially inculcated it (see Matt. vii. 22; ix. 32; xii. 27; Mark ix. 17-27; Luke xi. 14-19), and the belief led to the persecution of witches, as well as to the horrors of the Inquisition. The Pagan Hippocrates wrote a treatise with the view expressly to combat the superstition, which was sanctioned by the authority of Jesus Christ.

The Devil, on the one hand, has been a great scapegoat for religious sinners, who have ascribed all their backslidings to his temptations. On the other hand, his supposed agency has led to the persecution, torture, and death of myriads, as recorded in the annals of all Christian countries.

The Rev. M. Macaskill, of the Free Church of Scotland, is determined that the evolutionary doctrines of Professor Drummond's Ascent of Man shall not go before the world as the teaching of his church, and he has accordingly called the attention of his Presbytery, that of Dingwall, to the matter. He cited many passages from the work to show that Professor Drummond's views were heretical, and not in accord with the word of God.

"If," said Mr. Macaskill, "Professor Drummond's theory of creation by evolution was true, then the Bible was a mass of fables, a tissue of the most terrible falsehoods from beginning to end. Evolution, as expounded in this book, plucked up by the roots all the doctrines of grace, blotted out all hope for man of a blessed eternity, and left him in as orphaned a world and in as fatherless a universe as infidelity ever painted, and all this by a gentleman who, on taking his professorial chair, had solemnly professed his adherence to, and solemnly vowed his defence of, the confessional statement acknowledging the truth of the record of the Creation and the Fall of Man."

Mr. Macaskill emphatically gave his opinion that "the man who taught such theories could neither be a Christian nor a Professor of the Free Church." Evidently Professor Drummond is too "free" for him. It was resolved that a committee should inquire and report upon the book, the Revs. Macaskill, Munro, and Beaton being appointed. This will be a good advertisement for the Ascent of Man.

Mayor Strong, of New York, proposes to settle the Sunday liquor question by allowing saloons to open between the hours of 2 in the afternoon and 11 at night. If this is done, as seems likely, despite the howling of ministers and prohibitionists, the folly of closing libraries and museums will only be more apparent.

If, instead of seeking to put a stop to all use of the Sunday except church attendance, and trying to put "God in the constitution," the American States were to raise the age at which they permit a girl to consent to her own ruin, they would have a better title to be considered civilised. According to the Arena, this age is fixed at ten years in Alabama, North Carolina, South Carolina; twelve years in Kentucky, Louisiana, Texas, Wisconsin; thirteen years in Iowa, New Hampshire, Utah; and fourteen years in Arizona, California, Connecticut, Georgia, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Maine, Maryland, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, Vermont, and West Virginia.

"Ayjay," writing in the Two Worlds, says: "For the vivisectionist inquisitor Secularism had, so far as I know (I should be glad to be shown to be in error), no condemnation." "Ayjay" is in error. Cruelty to animals is expressly antagonised in the principles of the National Secular Society. It was Bentham whose motto was, "Maximise morals, minimise religion," who first spoke with effect for animals' rights in England; and among those who have worked on the same side have been many Secularists. In America Colonel Ingersoll is the most eloquent opponent of vivisection.

It appears that bishops sometimes repent, in their after life that is. At any rate, a gentleman at the Conference of Sunday Societies, in alluding to the Act of George III. against Sunday lecturing, which is said to have been inspired by Bishop Porteous, created much amusement by stating that, at a Spiritist meeting at Notting Hill on the previous night, they had the "apparition" of Bishop Porteous, who said he exceedingly regretted the use which had been made of his Act, and that, if he were in the House of Lords now, he would vote against any such measure.

A certain minister in Perthshire was very particular that the hymns sung should be suitable to his discourse, to the sometimes no small annoyance of his precentor. One Sunday morning, on the precentor appearing for his list, the minister remarked to that worthy, "Weel, John, my subject for to-day is 'Self-help'; have you anything to suit?" "Nothing," replied John, "except 'Paddle your own canoe.'"

The American Board of Missions claim to have issued five hundred millions of pages in the Arabic language. Can they claim to have converted even five Moslems?

The cause of the conservatism and hatred of progress among the Chinese is superstition. They object to developing their great resources of coal because the good-luck spirits, coming every spring from the south, would fall into the mines and be lost. They object to railways because the digging would disturb the bones of their ancestors. No improvement can be suggested that would not, in some way, make trouble between them and the spirits of the departed. There is a fine sentiment in the reverence for antiquities, but the civilised man tries to do something that will entitle him to the goodwill of his successors.—Chicago Interior.

We never heard of the International Tract Society before. It dates from 451 Holloway-road, London. In connection with it there is a printing business, and the Society has been summoned at Clerkenwell police-court for employing two females and one male young person on Sunday, January 27. Mr. John Gibson, the secretary, stated that the Society's object was to bring about the recognition of Saturday as the Sabbath. They gave a half-holiday on Friday, and closed their premises on Saturday. Mr. Gibson contended that this was all the law required, but the magistrate said the law would have to be obeyed as it stood. A fine was inflicted which, including the costs, amounted to nearly £4; but Mr. Gibson said he had a conscientious objection to paying—as a good many other people have, only they don't find it catch on.

Seriously, however, we rather sympathise with the International Tract Society. So long as its employees are satisfied, it does seem hard that their "Sunday" should be confined to one day in the week. If they get their day of rest, what does it matter if they take the "wrong day"? What's in a Sunday? The rest on any other day is just as sweet.

Digitized by Google

But there is a far more important point. The magistrate is a Christian, and so are the members of the International Tract Society. All of them accept the Bible as God's word. Yet they read it in different ways, and one of them punishes the others for not reading it as he does. What a pretty book the Bible is, to be sure! God wrote it, and perhaps the Devil understands it. Anyhow, men don't. They've been quarreling over it for ever so many centuries.

The Rev. Archibald Brown recently told the London Baptist Association that "things are simply going from bad to worse in Christendom." Evidently it is high time for the "second coming of Christ." And the worst of it is that, while the world is waiting, there are sceptics who unblushingly question whether he really came the first time.

Leeds is keeping behind the age in some things. The City Council has decided, by twenty-eight votes to thirteen, not to open the Fine Art Gallery on Sundays. Perhaps the City Fathers feel that if the inhabitants were to gaze at works of art on Sunday they might grow dissatisfied with the beauty of Leeds.

Professor Cornill, a German theologian, says he has read the book of Jonah a hundred times. He says that Jonah is one of the grandest things ever written, and he can never read it or talk about it without moist eyes and a beating heart. Professor Cornill is really too simple for this sophisticated age. He should have lived in the time of Jonah. How he would have enjoyed the prophet's company—everywhere, that is, but in the whale's belly.

At the breakfast of the Liberation Society Mr. Illingworth spoke strongly of the curse of religious disability and religious favoritism, saying that "Nonconformists feel the effects of this curse in every branch of life, whether social, political, ecclesiastical, or religious." How about the Freethinker, then, who suffers from disabilities from which the ordinary Nonconformist is entirely free; who not only has to support a State Church of which he disapproves, but who may be legally robbed of any endowment left to further his own views?

Alarmed at the progress of civil marriage and religious liberty in Hungary, the Bishop and Magnates have formed a Catholic People's Party, with whose aid they hope to battle against the new Church Laws. In an address they appeal to the industrial classes to support them in efforts to place social reforms on a Christian basis. This appeal is now answered in the most satirical manner by the Hungarian Socialists. They publish a proclamation in which they say: "We shall certainly join the People's Party, for with its help we will abolish class differences. The Magnates will be sure to give up their ranks and titles and their property, and the Bishops will give up their rich estates for the good of the community to prove that their ideals of universal brotherhood are sincere."

The Rev. Leon Penrod, a Baptist minister, of Grassy Creek, Kentucky, argued about baptism with a layman, Mr. John Slate; and, not finding his arguments convincing, he seconded them with a revolver, shooting his obdurate opponent in the leg. Mr. Slate did not appreciate this kind of reasoning; he rushed at the man of God, who seized a butcher's knife, and was going to argue the matter out completely, when the interesting controversy was stopped by "friends."

Twenty-six inquests in one day in London on persons who had died from the effects of the cold weather make a striking item in connection with the theory of an all-controlling Providence. In most parts of Europe a similar state of things prevails, many having been killed by avalanches as well as exposure, while in the rural parts of America, where the fierce winter blizzards rage, the deaths from exposure came thick and fast.

Nonconformists at Blackburn have accepted donations for Church purposes from Alderman Rutherford, but they would have nothing to do with his £50 for the relief of local distress, on the ground that he is a brewer. It is a rule of prudence with these gentlemen to be punctilious when it costs them nothing, and to be magnanimous at other people's expense.

A college student was invited one Sunday to occupy the pulpit in a little country church. After what he considered a masterly effort on the subject of "Lazarus and the Rich Man," he called on a good old brother to pray, and was somewhat electrified to hear the following: "O Lord! we thank thee that we are not like this poor despised beggar, Lazarus, who we've just been listenin' to."

THE HALL OF SCIENCE LIBEL CASE.

On Monday, February 18, before Mr. Justice Lawrance and a Common Jury, in the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice, the case of the National Secular Hall Society and another v. Snow and another came on for trial.

Mr. Lawson Walton, Q.C., M.P., and Mr. Cluer appeared for the plaintiffs; and Mr. Murphy, Q.C., and Mr. Rawlinson were for the defendants.

The officer of the court, by his lordship's direction, ordered that all women and children were to leave the court.

Mr. Cluer said the plaintiff was Robert Owen Smith, and the defendants were John Snow and Messrs. Cook & Co. The plaintiff claimed damages for a libel, printed and published by the defendants. Defendants admitted the publication, but denied that it in any way referred to the plaintiff.

Mr. Lawson Walton: Gentlemen of the jury,—As no doubt, you have gathered from the announcement just made by the officer of the court that all women and children are to leave the court, this is a somewhat painful and distressing case. Mr. Robert Owen Smith, the plaintiff, has come into court to meet a libel, published (as he thought and you will probably have no doubt) of him, possibly in common with other persons, of a most flagrant kind. The defendants are the printers and publishers of the paragraph which Mr. Smith impugns, and they are responsible for having given to the world one of the most atrocious charges which, perhaps, can be launched against the character of any individual. The libel appeared in a publication which professed to be a report of a public discussion which took place in the city of Leeds between a Mr. Powell and a Mr. Fisher. The pamphlet was headed "Is Secularism Degrading?" and it placed into the mouth of one of the controversialists the charge of which Mr. Smith complains. It runs thus: "Now, sir, in the Hall of Science in the Dancing Academy, the headquarters of the Secularists, which is built just opposite a lunatic asylum—(laughter)—they had held meetings—and this is vouched for in the daily Standard of August 11, 1879—where they got boys together and taught them the act of self-abuse, in order, so they said, to make muscular and strong the organs of procreation. I am in a mixed audience, and cannot open my mind freely." I think, notwithstanding the mixed audience, that disputant had opened his mind freely, and had used his tongue with equal freedom. That charge, of as horrible a course of instruction for the young as the human mind can conceive, was fixed to a class of persons, not designated by name, but sufficiently designated by description to lead every person acquainted with the facts to come undoubtedly to the conclusion at whom it was directed. They have had meetings. They have established a dancing academy, and in that academy they have given this atrocious and horrible instruction. The question which arises, and which appears to be the only question involved in the inquiry, is the identification of the persons against whom the charge was launched. Who were the individuals referred to in the expression as "they"? Who was responsible for founding the National Hall of Secularism which existed in the City of London? Who had organised, at the headquarters of Secularism, the meetings for the purpose of propagating Secularist opinions? Who established the Dancing Academy in connection with the hall, and who organised these classes for the young in which this horrible doctrine was supposed to be propagated? Unfortunately, Mr. Robert Owen Smith has had to come forward, because, undoubtedly, to every person who is acquainted with his relationship with this Hall of Secularism, and his connection with the classes, there can be no doubt that, if anybody was responsible, Mr. Smith was responsible; and if anybody was to come forward and clear his character from these odious accusations, that person was Mr. Smith; and I will tell you why. Mr. Smith, in the year 1868, purchased the site upon which the Hall of Science, in Old-street, was built. That was the very year in which Mr. Bradlaugh, perhaps one of the best-known lecturers at the Hall of Science, first stood for the borough of Northampton. Mr. Smith built the hall with his own capital, and conducted it at his own expense. The lecturers were paid by him, and any receipts from them were received by Mr. Smith, and were applied by him to meeting the expense of the venture. Mr. Bradlaugh, Mrs. Besant, and various other persons of Secularist opinions, lectured from week to week at the Hall of Science; and, after a while, Mr. Smith established in connection with it a Club and Institute. Classes were opened for the instruction of the young, entertainments were given of a special character, and among other classes was one for teaching dancing. Mr. Smith organised these classes, superintended them, and some of them he actually conducted himself. Under his supervision the art of dancing was taught to young people by dancing masters whom he employed, and I hold in my hand the public bills which were issued, and the tickets which were issued: and on the face of them Mr. Smith was publicly described as the Secretary and Manager of the hall, and of all the undertakings and classes held in connection with it. Therefore, the Hall of Science which was referred to in the paragraph owed its origin to Mr. Smith's enterprise, to his capital, and its operations to his supervision and personal management. Therefore, if it is suggested that, at that Hall of Science, practices which outrage human nature took place at classes actually superintended by Mr. Smith himself, the person who came forward to meet an accusation of that sort, and the only person against whom it can be levelled, and popularly regarded as such, is Mr. Smith, the plaintiff in this action. When this paragraph appeared a letter was written to the defendants, who had given it to the world, and to the defendants alone. The obscure libeller and slanderer, who said what he had to say in some obscure hall in a provincial town, is a comparatively unimportant person, and the slander was a comparatively unimportant matter. But here, in the City of London, under their own names, the two defendants, as publisher and printer, gave to this slander the prominency of print, and the currency of a pamphlet scattered broadcast over the whole country. Mr. Smith therefore wrote to these two defendants, and called upon them for some explanation and retractation of this horrible accusation. They met that appeal with absolute silence. Neither of them deigned to answer the letter which was written to them. Absolute silence on the part of both of these defendants. But some third person, who had not originally uttered the slander, and to whom no letter was written, voluntarily put himself into the breach, and made himself responsible for the charge. Mr. Smith had, under advice, sought to hold the two defendants—the printer and publisher of this pamphlet—as primarily answerable; and it was from them alone he was determined to have some retractation, as public as the original charge was which had been made. Unfortunately, the matter does not rest there. This accusation was not met by silence, but it was met by persistent repetition; and I shall be able to show you that another publication, which was issued by one or both of the defendants, and which describes itself as the Anti-Infidel, made an appeal for subscriptions from the credulous public—who, I suppose, are willing to believe any foul thing, in their wealth of charity, of anybody who does not share their own religious opinions. An appeal was made for contributions—for the purpose of retracting? No; but for the purpose of proving the charge up to the hilt; and in this publication an assurance is made that the charge is going to be proved up to the hilt. What is their course now? They originally start by bluster, and they now meet us in this Court of Justice with the cowardice of the person who would make such a charge, and then say that they will prove it to be true. Now, do they say it is true? Do they use the subscriptions raised by the credulous public for the purpose of proving it is true? No! The appeal, I presume, resulted in the flow of the money they desired; and, having obtained these funds, they put them into their pocket, and come into court, and try and back out of it, and escape their responsibility for having made it; and the defence, and the only defence, that they have put upon the record is this: It is true it was said—we don't say whether it is true or false; but we certainly say we did not say it of Smith. I doubt not that you will deal with such a defence in the way that it merits. If they did not say it of Mr. Smith, of whom did they say it? If they did not speak of the person who organised the classes, and who personally superintended them, then who was the man responsible for this outrage? Why did they not care to take the first chance of exonerating him, and repudiating the suggestion that he was the person referred to. Instead of meeting the challenge, they tell the world, when Mr. Smith is suing them, that they are going to prove the truth of the charge up to the hilt. The defence has only to be set out for you to grasp the true situation, that there is, and can be, no answer to the action. Why are the defendants here if all this could not be proved, as they did not suggest it could? Why, if it cannot be seriously denied that Mr. Smith is seriously reflected upon, are the defendants here in a public court of justice to resist the accusation? I think you may guess. They are here because they think there are persons so steeped in religious prejudice that they will believe to be true any gross accusation made against persons who do not share their views, and because they think that, on the jury, there may be a man so biassed by his religious opinions that he cannot do justice to a fellow citizen who does not happen to share his opinions. I hope they will be defeated by your verdict, and that you will show that spirit of justice which shines among the highest virtues. On behalf of Mr. Smith, I ask you by this action to clear his character from a stain cast upon him for which there is no sort of justification; a stain on a long record of an honorable life, and to give him the only reparation which the law allows for such an injury.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Robert Owen Smith, the plaintiff, then went into the witness-box and made affirmation, giving his address as 81 Ridge-road, Hornsey. He was examined by Mr. Cluer.

In 1868 did you take a lease of the premises on which the Hall of Science in Old-street is built?—I did.

Did you yourself have the building erected there?—I did.

And paid for it?—Yes.

What position did you hold from 1868 to 1892 with reference to the Hall?—I was the leaseholder and proprietor. I was also secretary and manager of the Club and Institute, which was established by myself, up to 1881. Through ill-health I gave up the secretaryship and management, and was the treasurer of the Club; and I was the sole proprietor and organiser of the lectures given there.

Was the Hall of Science the headquarters of the Secularist party?—It was; and their council meetings were held there.

Is it an annual meeting you refer to?—No; monthly.

And they meet there regularly?—Regularly.

Were there lectures delivered at the hall?—Yes; every Sunday evening, and sometimes Sunday mornings and week nights.

Who arranged the lectures?—I did.

Did you pay the lecturers?—I did.

Had you control over the hall and the meetings that took place there?—I had.

And did you personally attend to it during the years from 1868 to 1892.—I did.

When was it that you started a series of dancing classes there?—In 1869.

Would you look at this? Is that an advertisement of the dancing classes?—Yes.

Was that inserted by your authority?—It was; and my name is at the bottom of it.

The Judge: What is the book?—It is the North London College and School Guide.

Mr. Cluer: Is it a fact that every day in the week there was dancing carried on under your superintendence?—There was.

Did you personally supervise those classes and see to them?—I did.

For how many years did you personally look after them?—From 1872 to 1881.

At that time did you actually yourself give dancing lessons with assistance?—I did.

Was any instruction given there during that time without your supervision?—There was no instruction given there that I was not responsible for. I did not give instructions in science, because I was not a duly-qualified teacher. All the classes held there I was responsible for, and for everything that took place in the building. Science classes were taught by Dr. Aveling.

Were there classes in which the pupils were examined by a Government department?—In connection with South Kensington.

And examinations were held on the subjects taught in the science classes of the subjects prescribed by the South Kensington school?—They were.

And lectures delivered by responsible, qualified persons?—Yes.

I believe the Rev. Stewart Headlam was one of the lecturers?—Yes; he has given lectures there, and he was a member of the Science Classes Committee, who were responsible for the teaching. The authorities at South Kensington insist on having a committee on which there must be one clergyman. I was also on the Committee.

With reference to the club, did you establish a club and institute?—I did.

Were you daily on the premises?—Daily.

That was your business, you had no other?—Yes.

What date was it that the club was established?—1870.

Were you a member of the club yourself?—I was secretary and manager.

Did you see yourself what went on from time to time among members of the club?—I did.

Will you just look at this copy of the libellous pamphlet, Is Secularism Degrading? Will you tell me, with regard to the paragraph in question, first, was the name of the building in Old-street the Hall of Science?—It was.

Had you there a dancing academy?—I had.

Is St. Luke's Lunatic Asylum nearly opposite your place in Old-street?—Yes.

Your place is on the South side, and that is on the North?—Yes.

Before you saw that pamphlet, had you ever heard of any such report, as is there vouched, in any paper called the Daily Standard or any other paper?—Never.

Mr. Justice Lawrance: What is the Daily Standard?

Mr. Cluer: There is no such paper, I believe. (To the witness) Is there a word of truth in the suggestion that is made in this libel?—There is not.

Cross-examined by Mr. Murphy, Q.C.: This pamphlet purposes to be a debate between Mr. Walton Powell and Mr. Greaves Fisher. Is that so?—Yes.

And the preface seems to be in these words: "In October last Mr. Walton Powell, President of the Liverpool Branch of the National Anti-Infidel League, conducted a crusade in Leeds; and as the debate, of which the following pages contain a report, arose out of that discussion, it is now published in the belief that it will excite thought on matters of importance to society, and enable readers to answer for themselves the question, 'Is Secularism Degrading?'" and that appears to be signed by W. R. Bradlaugh, President of the Anti-Infidel League. Is there such a person as W. R. Bradlaugh?—There is.

Digitized by Google

The next thing we find is this: A reporter's certificate, dated January 1894, certifying that it is a correct transcript of the debate between Walton Powell and Greevz Fisher, at St. James's Hall, Leeds, October 17, 1892, signed by two reporters. Then there is the debaters' certificate as to accuracy, signed by Mr. Powell and Mr. Fisher. Then follows what purports to be a verbatim report of this debate, as it is called. When first did you hear of this pamphlet?—I cannot tell the exact date.

Shortly after it took place?—Yes.

And you knew the name of Powell, who used these words, and you knew the name of Bradlaugh too?—I knew of Bradlaugh, but not Powell.

Did you make any complaint of the publication at the time?—I did not.

Although it was published in the papers. Have you made any complaint to Mr. Powell, the utterer of these words?—I have not.

The debate took place at Leeds?—Yes.

Had there been, to your knowledge, in the year 1878, a great scandal about some immoral proceedings at a hall in Leeds?—I heard something.

Very disgusting proceedings had taken place there?—I don't know.

Did not you ascertain that? Was it not a matter of discussion, to your knowledge, of this trial that took place in 1878?—There was a trial.

And evidence was given of very disgusting proceedings at a hall there?—I was not aware of it.

Do you seriously say that you did not know the trial was with reference to certain obscenities at a hall in Leeds?—I was under the impression that it was for disorderly conduct; but I did not read the trial.

And had never heard it discussed?—I had heard that proceedings were taken.

And that evidence was given of disgusting conduct in the hall?—No.

You say that? Think! You never heard it alleged that evidence was given of disgusting proceedings in a hall between boys and young men. Have you ever heard of it? I beg for a distinct answer to a plain question.—I have not.

Do you know Mr. Foote?—I do.

Has it been discussed in his presence and in yours?—I don't know.

Come, do yourself justice in this matter. Do you say you never it heard alleged that evidence was given of disgusting conduct in the hall in the year 1878?—I am not aware of any of the proceedings in relation to the matter.

I am not asking whether you are aware; my question is whether you heard it discussed.—Not to my knowledge.

How can you have heard it if it was not to your knowledge?—I will say no more than that.

Do you persist in saying you never heard the matter discussed?—I don't remember on any occasion it was discussed, in my presence, with Mr. Foote.

With anyone?—Or with anyone.

You never heard of it before?—I have heard of the proceedings.

Have you heard it suggested before that evidence was given of disgusting proceedings in the hall at Leeds?—I have said I believe it was for disorderly conduct, but I really don't know any more about the matter.

Have you never heard until this moment?—I have heard that evidence was given.

Never heard it suggested?—No.

Have you not seen the report in the public paper of what occurred there?—No, I have not.

Have you never seen the report?—No, I have not.

Did you ever hear of a place called the Secular Hall, Leeds?—I have heard of a hall at Leeds used for Secular purposes and lectures.

Lectures in connection with gentlemen of your opinions?—Yes.

And owned and leased by gentlemen connected with them?—I have no knowledge who was the owner.

Well, leased by persons of your opinions?—I believe so.

Did you hear there was a prosecution about something that occurred there?—I did hear there was a prosecution in connection with proceedings held at that hall. I do not know whether the proceedings were against the persons who leased it, or against other persons.

Did you never hear of this charge?

Mr. WALTON: I object. My friend is referring to a matter extremely remote, because we are dealing with a hall specifically described; and now he is travelling to some other matters in another part of the country. The witness has already said he saw no report relative to that prosecution. My friend is not entitled to suggest that such a report did appear, unless he can prove it by his witnesses. He is not entitled to hold by this witness that there was a report after the witness has said he did not see it.

Mr. MURPHY: I disagree entirely with my friend. My friend says the article here points to his hall. I say, Nothing of the sort. The debate was carried on at the Secular Hall at Leeds, which is another hall entirely. I am going to put to the witness ——

Mr. WALTON: My friend is not entitled to read a document with the object of suggesting to the jury certain facts (of course that is his object), after witness has said no such paper was ever seen by him.

Mr. JUSTICE LAWRANCE: Yes; but he may put it to him.

Mr. WALTON: The opening out of a newspaper is a way to suggest facts which he is not entitled to prove. I think it is most irregular. If the witness says he did not see these reports, that is the end of it.

Mr. MURPHY (to witness): Have you not been present when the report of these trials has been discussed?—I may have been present when the matter was talked about.

The report of this trial?—No.

Never in 1878?—No; I don't know the date. I have never been present when the report of the trial was discussed.

Nor about what was reported to have occurred then?—I have said before that I have heard this matter talked about.

Have you never heard it suggested that disgraceful proceedings took place there?—No, I have not.

Do you read the Secular Review sometimes?—No; I have seen it.

Did you ever see the passage speaking of the unspeakable, obscene character of the orgies seen in the Leeds Branch of the National Secular Society?—No. You are speaking from the Secular Review?

Yes. You have never taken pains to ascertain what took place at Leeds?—No.

We have heard something about subscriptions. Have you and Mr. Foote been applying for subscriptions in support of this action?—I have not.

Has Mr. Foote, with your knowledge?—Yes; on my behalf.

Was it with your authority that this passage was written: "The London Hall of Science, for instance, has been the constant object of calumny. It is said to be opposite a lunatic asylum, though it is not. It is really midway between the church and the asylum, and on the opposite side of the road. The position is a good one, as it gives us an opportunity of intercepting persons whose wits may be disordered by the House of God"?—No, not on my authority.

Is the Freethinker one of your party's papers?—Yes, it represents the Society's views, but it is Mr. Foote's paper.

It was one of the papers in which you advertised for subscriptions to conduct this trial?—Yes.

And on the 15th April it contained the passage I have just read?—Yes.

Without any protest from you?—Yes.

And the same number contained an appeal for subscriptions?—Yes, I believe so.

Mr. MURPHY: I did not read the whole of the quotation, to do Mr. Foote justice: "It gives us an opportunity of intercepting persons whose wits may be disordered by the House of God before their arrival at the house of imbeciles."

Mr. WALTON: I submit my friend is not entitled to read this, unless he has called evidence to connect it with the plaintiff. Mr. Smith says it was not issued by his authority.

Mr. MURPHY: I entirely disagree. The witness has said this paper was issued for the purpose of obtaining subscriptions for this trial, and was issued by the Society.

Mr. SMITH: No, not by the Society.

Mr. WALTON: That does not make the witness responsible for the language Mr. Foote may have used. The paper was not issued by the plaintiff, and it does not belong to the Society.

Mr. JUSTICE LAWRANCE: I do not understand it.

Mr. WALTON: The witness went on to say it was not the property of the Society, but belonged to Mr. Foote, and that it only represented the views of the Society.

Mr. MURPHY: He saw the article, and used the paper to collect subscriptions.

Mr. WALTON: My friend is not entitled to use this. The article is published by some other person without being submitted to Mr. Smith. It is true it contained an appeal for subscriptions, but that does not make Mr. Smith responsible for the language used in it. Until my friend shows that Mr. Smith authorised the publication of the article he cannot be held responsible.

Mr. JUSTICE LAWRANCE: I understood him to say he saw it.

Mr. WALTON: Yes, after it was published.

Mr. MURPHY: He saw it, and used it for the purpose of obtaining subscriptions.

Mr. SMITH: I did not use it to get subscriptions.

Mr. WALTON: I think it was in October that this appeal for subscriptions went out?

Mr. MURPHY: No; you are wrong.

(Continued on page 122.)

Digitized by Google

Mr. Foote's Engagements.

March 3, Camberwell; 10, Sunderland.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Mr. Charles Watts's Engagements.—February 24, Newcastle-on-Tyne. March 3, Manchester. April 7, Sheffield.—All communications for Mr. Watts should be sent to him (if a reply is required, a stamped and addressed envelope must be enclosed) at 81 Effra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

Lecture Notices must reach 28 Stonecutter-street by first post Tuesday, or they will not be inserted.

Openshaw.—We presume so.

R. Green.—Nothing can be sillier, in a public debate, than to quote a passage from a great historian, which agrees with your own view, and to call it "an authority" on your side. It may be an authority on a mere matter of fact; it cannot be an authority on a matter of opinion. If it is so, you are confronted with this dilemma. One "authority" says one thing, and another "authority" the very opposite. You cannot bow to both, and if you choose between them you set up a third authority, namely yourself.

S. Howard.—Ingersoll is not alone in regarding parts of the book of Ecclesiastes as interpolations. See Canon Driver's Literature of the Old Testament, pp. 447-449. Of course no Christian scholar now regards the book, or any part of it, as the writing of Solomon. The statement to that effect in the opening of the book is a piece of imposture; or, as "the wise call it," a "literary artifice." See also Dr. Giles's Hebrew Records and Canon Cheyne's Job and Solomon.

H. L. Sumner.—We handed your order to Mr. Forder. Kindly send to him direct in future at 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C. Glad to hear you are "much pleased" with our writings.

C. Glendinning.—Thanks for cuttings. Always pleased to receive such useful bits.

N.S.S. Benevolent Fund.—Miss E. M. Vance acknowledges:—H. F. S., 8s. 6d.

E. P. 42.—The want of pence which vexes public men is always acute in an unpopular and comparatively poor party like ours. Still, there are a good many, as you suggest, who could subscribe more liberally to Freethought if they would.

A. Spencer.—There is no Freethought paper in France like our own. Some of the leading Paris journals contain Freethought articles from time to time, so there is less need for a special Freethought organ there.

L. C. H.—Thanks for cutting.

J. K. Maagaard.—Shall appear as early as possible.

J. Barnes.—Hardly up to the mark. Writing poetry does not come by nature like sucking milk. It requires deep study and hard training.

Mr. Foote's Fighting Fund.—E. P. 42, £1.

R. Mellor.—Sorry we are unable to give you the information.

E. Howard.—The obituary of the late Jonathan Taylor shall appear in full in our next issue. We are sorry to delay it, but we are short of space this week. Mr. Charles Watts would have attended the funeral had he not been kept waiting at the Law Courts day after day as a witness in the Hall of Science libel case.

C. Doeg reports that the great distress at Liverpool has been mainly coped with by the Socialists. The clergy and religious organisations have been almost unheard of in the crisis. The Daily Post, speaking of the Central Relief Society, says that, "with its army of highly-paid officials, it is barely equal to the cooking of a boilerful of soup."

Mr. Watts made a slight mistake in his evidence on Monday. He omitted to mention the second Hall of Science outside London—the one at Grimsby.

E. H.—Dr. Coit was referring to Mr. Foote's pamphlet, A Virgin Mother—one of the "Bible Romances;" but he did not say what the journal you mention ascribes to him. Anyone who can find "filth" in that or any other of Mr. Foote's pamphlets must have a nose of preternatural sensitiveness. Of course, it is impossible to write at all about the miraculous birth of Jesus without giving offence to some persons; but that is the fault of the doctrine itself.

Papers Received.—Armagh Standard—Birmingham Gazette—Ironclad Age—Secular Thought—Progressive Thinker—Two Worlds—Open Court—Crescent—Islamic World—Brisbane Telegraph—Echo—Lucifer—Newcastle Weekly Chronicle—Glasgow Weekly Herald—Isle of Man Times—Las Dominicales—Church Reformer—Munsey's Magazine—Cosmopolitan.

Friends who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish to call our attention.

Letters for the Editor of the Freethinker should be addressed to 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

The Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the publishing office, post free, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 10s. 6d.; Half Year, 5s. 3d.; Three Months, 2s. 8d.

Scale of Advertisements.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—(Narrow Column) one inch, 3s.; half column, 15s.; column, £1 10s. Broad Column—one inch, 4s. 6d.; half column, £1 2s. 6d.; column, £2 5s. Special terms for repetitions.

It being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will receive the number in a colored wrapper when their subscription expires.

Orders for literature should be sent to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

SUGAR PLUMS.

Mr. Foote's lecture at the London Hall of Science on Sunday evening dealt with Mr. Balfour's Foundations of Belief. His criticism of the book was highly appreciated. In the next issue of the Freethinker we shall begin a lengthy reply to Mr. Balfour's attack on Naturalism from the pen of Mr. Foote.

Mr. Foote managed to keep his engagement with the Humanitarian League on Thursday evening, February 14. For several days he had been kept indoors with a bad cold, and it was a bitter evening when he went westward to lecture on "The Shadow of the Sword." Mr. Ernest Bell presided, and was supported by Mr. H. S. Salt, the League's honorary secretary, who cannot be too highly praised for the steady devotion he has given to a noble cause. The attendance was only fair, partly owing to the weather, and partly to the press boycott. It seems hardly credible that not only the press, but even the most "advanced" people, would not tolerate a lecture by the President of the National Secular Society, even in favor of Peace. One part of the boycott, into which we are not free to enter, was simply disgusting.

A Church of England clergyman present spoke in the highest terms of Mr. Foote's discourse, and there was marked applause at the announcement that it would soon be published by the Humanitarian League. This clergyman assured the audience that he would never consecrate a military banner, even if he lived to sit on the episcopal bench.

There was a report of Mr. Foote's lecture in the Westminster Gazette. It now remains to be seen whether the general press boycott will be maintained when "The Shadow of the Sword" is published by the Humanitarian League.

A national Humanitarian Conference, called by the Humanitarian League, will be held at St. Martin's Town Hall, Trafalgar-square, on the afternoons and evenings of Thursday, February 28, and Friday, March 1. The subjects of discussion are "The Criminal Code," "The Public Control of Hospitals," "Slaughter House Reform," and "Cruel Sports." The National Secular Society has been invited to send delegates. The general public may obtain entrance by tickets.

Mr. Charles Watts lectured three times last Sunday in the Co-operative Hall, Plymouth. The audiences were most enthusiastic, and there was a large number of ladies present. The proceedings in the evening had to be abbreviated to enable Mr. Watts to catch the night mail for London, in order that he might be in Court on Monday morning.

To-day, Sunday, February 24th, Mr. Watts lectures three times in the Amphitheatre, Newcastle-on-Tyne. An interesting debate is expected, as several clergymen have been invited, and a well-known Christian debater has intimated his intention to be present to oppose the lecturer. We hope the friends from the surrounding districts will rally on the occasion, as Mr. Watts intends giving his impressions upon the result of the trial of Monday last.

The Hall of Science platform will be occupied to-day (February 24) by Mr. Oswald Dawson in the morning, and by Mrs. Frederika Macdonald in the evening. Mr. Dawson, who is Honorary Secretary of the Legitimation League, holds views on the question of marriage and children which most people would regard as peculiar; but he is entitled to a hearing, and his views must be opposed in a reasonable way. Mrs. Macdonald is already known to the Hall of Science audience, and is sure to be well received.

Ryhope is the place where Mr. Foote had such a stormy reception, which nearly ran to riot and bloodshed. The stirrer-up of the excitement was the fellow Powell, who uttered that filthy libel on the Hall of Science which has just been branded by a jury in the Court of Queen's Bench. This fellow is a most reckless liar; among other things, he stated as a fact of his own knowledge that Mr. Foote was the author of the Elements of Social Science! By working upon the baser sort of Christians he made Ryhope warm for a time for the little band of Secularists there. They were turned out of their meeting-place, and the newsagent refused any longer to sell the Freethinker. Still they persevered, and the cloud has lifted. For some time the Freethinker has been allowed a place on the table of the Miners' Reading Room, and now it is to be paid for out of the Miners' funds.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Bertram Dobell sent us a few weeks ago a book which we intended to notice at considerable length, and which we shall thus notice as soon as we find the time amidst our multifarious duties. We refer to the Poetical Works of James Thomson (B.V.), in two handsome volumes, with a portrait and a memoir. The work is published by Messrs. Reeves and Turner at 5 Wellington-street, Strand, and Mr. Dobell at his shop in Charing-Cross-road; the price of the two volumes being twelve shillings. The second volume will be of special interest to Thomson's admirers. It contains several poems never before published, including a long one entitled The Doom of a City, which has passages of great power and one or two really splendid lyrics. There should be a fair demand for this collected edition of Thomson's poems, though we fear it will yield little or no profit to Mr. Dobell, who, however, has never looked for that kind of satisfaction. His efforts to obtain recognition for Thomson's genius have always been a labor of love.

Mr. Louis Levine, of Charleston, to whom we are indebted for many American papers and periodicals, publishes an excellent circular letter on the Sunday Laws of the United States, intended and well calculated to promote more liberal and rational views of the day of rest.

Dr. Lyman Abbott, the successor of Henry Ward Beecher at Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, is an evolutionist, who seeks to reconcile evolution with Theism. But he confesses that it cannot be reconciled with the story of the Fall of Man as given in Genesis, and distinctly says so in a sermon reported in the New York Press of January 29: "I am an Evolutionist. Frankly, I believe Genesis iii. to be an ancient legend, which a great writer took, as Tennyson took the Arthurian legends, and rewrote it, in order that he might write into it a moral and spiritual lesson. I think that the Hebrew people believed that the Fall of Man affected the whole human race. I think very likely Paul believed so; at all events, Paul used that belief in his arguments and teachings with the Hebrew people in his writing."

Here, too, is pastor B. A. Elzas, of the Beth Elohim Synagogue, Charleston, who tells his Bible-class that the Bible story of Creation is based upon a similar story in Babylonian literature, and that the only rational way of regarding it is as apoem. "The world does move," though the Freethinkers who move it often have to suffer at first; while the sky-pilots afterwards say, "Just what we told you."

GIORDANO BRUNO.

NEARLY three hundred years ago
A hero in the cause of man
Was seen to pass the streets of Rome,
To die upon the Field of Flowers
(Fit emblem of his purity),
And bear alone the agonies
Of fire, without a murmur.
The only man amid those Christian fiends
Who piled on wood to scorch and feed on flesh;
The truest, bravest in the world,
So soon to mingle with the winds
And permeate all following days
With spurs to valor in the fight for truth,
And overthrow of that same faith
Which from its birth has stamped on liberty.
One speck of manhood in that motley crowd,
Towering above his torturers
As zenith above horizon,
To calmly end a valiant life,
More nobly than a Christ.
Dying for what?—for bigots' creed
To gain a heaven? No! Spurn such thought.
It was for Reason, Truth, and Victory!

J. W. C. STAFFORD.

Would you subject all other things to yourself? Then first subject yourself to Reason.—Seneca.

Easy men dream that we live under a government of law. Absurd mistake! We live under a government of men and newspapers. Your first attempt to stem dominant and keenly-cherished opinions will reveal this to you.—Wendell Phillips.

THE HALL OF SCIENCE LIBEL CASE.

(Continued from page 120.)

Mr. WALTON: Well, they are Mr. Foote's views, and not Mr. Smith's. The whole object of my friend is to prejudice this gentleman. If he says, I have not published it, it is clear my friend can't use it.

Mr. MURPHY: The whole object is to make this gentleman responsible for their opinions.

Mr. WALTON: My friend must prove that Mr. Smith published this article.

Mr. MURPHY (reading): "The solicitor is instructed to accept no offer of compromise. The case must be determined in court, where all the circumstances can be clearly understood"—was that with your consent?—No, it was not.

Was this with your consent: "There happens to be a man of reckless scurrility—"

Mr. WALTON: I object to this. He cannot produce this till he has shown Mr. Smith is responsible for the publication.

Mr. MURPHY: I am going to ask him if he authorised this.

Mr. WALTON: But before you can read the passage you must first show the witness published it. You are not entitled to get the advantage of reading the passage, and then ask the witness was that published with his authority. If it is his publication, you must first show the witness was responsible for it, instead of taking it as the foundation of your question. The witness said he never saw it before it was published. It was not published by him, but was published by Mr. Foote.

Mr. JUSTICE LAWRANCE: I did not know he said he did not see them before they were published.

Mr. SMITH: I had not seen these things before they were published, my lord.

Mr. MURPHY: Did you see them after they were published?—Yes.

Did you afterwards agree with Mr. Foote that he should write in the same Freethinker and invite subscriptions for this case?—I did not agree with him in anything. He did not consult me.

Did you know he was doing it?—I did not know until the articles and paragraphs appeared; but I knew he was going to solicit subscriptions in the Freethinker.

And you thought it right that he should do this?—I could not help myself. It is his own paper.

You left him to write what he thought proper, and to ask subscriptions for your case?—Yes; of course he would write what he thought proper.

I will put the matter in another way. Does this passage represent your opinions? "It is said to be opposite a lunatic asylum, though it is not. It is really midway between the church and the asylum on the opposite side of the road. The position is a good one, since it gives the opportunity to intercept persons whose wits may be disordered by the House of God before they arrive at their destination in the house of imbeciles." Does that represent your opinions?—Are my opinions under discussion?

Yes; your character is at stake.—My character?

Does that represent your opinions?—They are not my opinions.

You are not shocked by them?—No, I am not shocked. (Laughter.) Abuse is given on both sides in this question.

That was in the course of the debate, was it not?—I was not at the debate.

You have read it?—I have read it.

You have not applied to Mr. Powell, or to Mr. Bradlaugh, I understand?—No.

Here is a book called The Elements of Social Science. Are you familiar with it?—Yes.

Is it sold by your Society?—Yes; by members, not by the Society.

I see in the book the passage: "Prostitution is a valuable substitute until we have reached a better state of things, by banishing the marriage laws." Are those your opinions?—No.

But it is one of your books, which you sell?—No, it is not sold by the Society. It is sold only by members of the Society.

Is it sold at a shop over which your Society has control?—No; our Society has no control over any shop.

Is it sold at the hall?—Yes.

By the Society of which you are a committee-man?—Yes.

Is this a passage from that book: "The laws of exercise, and the health of the reproductive organs and emotions, depend on their having sufficient means of normal exercise; and the want of this tends to produce diseases in men and women"?—I have read that.

Is that one of the books you sell?—It is one of the books sold.

Have you seen advertisements of this pamphlet?—I have not.

Re-examined by Mr. Walton: Have you any connection with either the printing or the publication of this work,

Digitized by Google

The Elements of Social Science?—No; all the books we sell we do not approve of. We do not approve of every doctrine. We sell books containing all sorts of doctrine; but it does not follow we approve of them.

You do not hold yourself responsible for the opinions of every professor of Freethought?—Certainly not.

Freethought means freedom of thought on the part of every member of society?—Yes.

And this book my friend has referred to, which is written by a doctor of medicine, has on its frontispiece this quotation from J. S. Mill: "The diseases of society cannot be prevented or cured without being spoken of in plain language." How many years has that book been before the world?—I have known it for thirty years.

Has any effort been made to suppress this book as immoral or illegal?—Not so far as I know. I do not agree with the writer of the book.

But he is entitled to his own opinions?—Certainly.

And the law allows him to sell the book?—Yes, but they are not my opinions.

Have you ever made any charges of immoral misconduct or any accusation of that kind against your opponents?—I have not. I am not in the habit of making charges.

It is now suggested that this pamphlet had reference not to what took place at the Hall of Science in London, but at the hall in Leeds. Have you ever, till this moment, heard the suggestion?—No, I was not aware that there was a Hall of Science in Leeds. I do not think there is a hall called the Hall of Science there.

Did you instruct your solicitors to write to the defendant before the action commenced?—Yes.

Mr. MURPHY: The only one I know of is the one issuing the writ.

Mr. WALTON: In answer to that letter, or at any time during this action, have you ever heard it suggested by anybody that the Hall of Science here mentioned was the hall in Leeds?—I have not. I am informed there is no Hall of Science in Leeds.

Is there any other headquarters of Secularism except that with which you and the late Mr. Bradlaugh were connected?—No.

Is there any other Hall of Science opposite a lunatic asylum?—No.

Is there any Hall of Science in the kingdom to which this description can apply except your own?—No; it has been specially spoken of as being opposite a lunatic asylum. It is some twenty-five years since I first heard the expression.

Have you any sort of connection with what has been described as the Hall of Secularism at Leeds?—No; and I am not aware of what goes on there.

Or any responsibility for what happens there?—No.

You are told fifteen years ago there was a prosecution of some persons at Leeds in connection with the hall. Do you know anything about it? Have you ever heard it suggested that that prosecution referred to disgusting conduct in the nature of that imputed?—I never knew any of the facts. I knew there was a prosecution there, but I did not know the facts connected with it.

Do you happen to know if the prosecution was withdrawn?—I do not know how it terminated.

Suppose there had been a conviction, would you have expected to hear of it?

Mr. MURPHY: You may have expected a good many things.

Mr. WALTON: Did you ever hear of anybody being convicted in connection with it?—No, I did not.

By Mr. MURPHY: Have you seen the advertisement of this pamphlet in the Torch, under the head of "The Leeds Orgies. Full account of the Abominable Proceedings in the Leeds Secular Hall. Demoralising Result of Secular Teaching"?—I never saw the Torch, and never heard of it.

Mr. WALTON: The date is significant. It is February 1, 1895, and the writ was issued April, 1894.

Miss EDITH VANCE was the next witness. She made an affirmation, and was then examined by Mr. Cluer.

Are you the secretary of the National Secular Society?—I am.

Did you, on April 14, go to the defendant Snow's place of business?—I did.

Five days after the writ in this action?—Yes.

Did you purchase there, from his place of business, a copy of the publication of this libel?—Yes.

Mr. MURPHY: I have nothing to ask the witness.

Mr. ROBERT FORDER, examined by Mr. Cluer: Have you known the plaintiff since 1868?—I have.

Have you constantly been at the Hall of Science yourself from that time?—From 1868 to 1870 there was a break, but I came back in 1871. I became committee man in 1873, and I was elected paid secretary.

Mr. JUSTICE LAWRANCE: We don't want all this history.

Mr. CLUER: In 1873 you were a committee man?—Yes.

From that time had you an intimate connection with the hall?—Yes.

Was Mr. Smith there?—Yes, as a rule, every night.

Who was the person responsible for the meetings, lectures, and classes that went on there?—Mr. Robert Owen Smith.

Did you know that science and art classes went on there?—Yes; I was secretary of them.

Did Mr. Smith supervise what went on at the Hall?—Yes.

Was he known among Secularists generally as the manager?—Yes, of the hall. We hired the hall for the science and art classes of him.

Was he known generally as the person who conducted the dancing academy there?—Yes.

By Mr. MURPHY: Who were you who hired the hall?—The Society engaged the hall every Sunday.

Were you your own manager?—No; Mr. Smith managed them all.

He was the lessor of the hall and manager of it?—Yes; on Sundays.

It was only on Sundays you held it?—Yes; but we were entitled to it on Good Fridays, Christmas Days, and every Sunday, and generally also on Wednesday evenings.

He managed the dancing?—Yes; with lady assistants.

Mr. CHARLES WATTS, examined by Mr. Cluer: Have you for many years known the Hall of Science?—Yes; and Mr. Smith in connection with it.

Who was responsible for the conduct of the classes?—Mr. Smith.

He would be regarded as responsible for the conduct of the classes of the Dancing Academy and for the Society's meetings held there?—Just so.

By Mr. MURPHY: What did you say you were?—I am a journalist and lecturer.

Lecturer for any particular body?—No.

A general lecturer?—Yes.

What connection, if any, have you with the Hall of Science?—I was on the committee.

How long have you been so?—Since my return from America, about two years ago. Formerly I was there for ten or twelve years.

Where were you in 1879?—In London.

It is suggested you were in America?—No; I went to America in 1884.

Then you were in London at the time of the Leeds trial?—Yes.

Did you hear of the trial?—Yes, I heard of it.

Mr. WALTON: I object to this. This cannot be relevant to the question of damages—what he may have heard about the Leeds trial—until my friend is in a position to make the evidence at the Leeds trial pertinent to this matter.

Mr. MURPHY: I really don't know what the meaning of this objection is. The question is whether these words uttered in the reports pointed to something in London. All the surrounding circumstances must be taken into account, in order to see what the words meant. One of these things was whether there was a trial at Leeds immediately before, and what occurred at it. My friend assumes that this relates to the Hall of Science in London. My case is that it does not.

Examination continued: You have heard of the trial at Leeds?—Yes.

Did you hear evidence was given there of abominable practices?—I did not.

Never heard it suggested till to-day?—Never.

Do you know a paper called the Secular Review?—I have not read it lately, I used to.

Were you not editor of it?—I was.

In what year?—Up to 1883.

And not after that?—Not after that.

Had you a kindly interest in it after that?—No, no interest directly, kindly or unkindly.

On June 26, 1886, will you undertake to say you did not see a paragraph in that paper about the obscenity alleged to have occurred at the Hall of Science at Leeds?—In 1886 I was in America.

Was it never discussed in your presence?—Never.

There are many of these Halls of Science in different parts of England, are there not?—I only know of two; one in London, and one in Sheffield.

One in Leeds?—No, that is not a Hall of Science; it is never known by that name.

So far as you know?—That is all I can say.

Mr. WALTON: I put in a paper called the Anti-Infidel of May, 1894. It is printed by the defendant Cook, and is published by the other defendant, J. Snow & Co. The letter appears on the first page of the paper. The passage I rely upon is the last paragraph in the first column [stating that when the case came into court the libel would be proved up to the hilt].

Mr. MURPHY insisted the whole article should be read.

Mr. WALTON thereupon read the whole of the letter, and upon concluding said that was the plaintiff's case. The Court then rose for luncheon.

After the luncheon interval Mr. MURPHY proceeded to open the case for the defence. He said: That the statement which is contained in this paragraph is untrue I am not here to dispute. My client does not pretend to justify it. It was set out in this book as having been stated publicly at this debate—about that there can be no sort of doubt; but to say that it was true at present is a thing my clients have not said, and do not say. That they are legally responsible I do not also dispute. One is the publisher and the other the printer of the pamphlet. The publisher's position in this particular matter seems to be this. He allows his name to be used as the publisher of the pamphlet, and he gets a commission, which, in this particular instance, if the number which had been sent to him had all been sold, would have produced the magnificent remuneration of 16s., and in respect of that matter he stands his trial for libel. The printer, on the other hand, has had his remuneration for printing the pamphlet, and I think you will find it is not of an extravagant character. The one was employed to print, and the other to publish, by Mr. Bradlaugh, whose name has been mentioned; and it has been known to the plaintiff and to the committee of this National Secular Hall Society ever since the time of the discussion, when Mr. Powell was the person who uttered these words, subsequently that Mr. Bradlaugh was the person who authorised their publication in the shape which they are at present. For reasons best known to himself, the plaintiff, who is most anxious to vindicate his character, which he says has been assailed, but which I deny, has passed by the man who used the words and the man who authorised their publication, and has come upon the printer and publisher, neither of whom, it will be proved, ever had any idea that there was any libel contained in the words at all, much less that the plaintiff was the person designated by them. It is a lawful course for a man to take; whether it is a just or a fair one is another question. It has been said that the plaintiff came into court without the slightest idea that there could be any question that the Hall of Science in London was not the one designated by Mr. Powell when he spoke at Leeds. Do you believe it? Do you believe that these gentlemen, one and all, have come up here and told you the full truth as to whether or not they ever heard of a disgusting trial at Leeds in the year 1878? What do you think of the way in which the plaintiff answered my questions? Had he answered them in a straightforward way? Do you think you got his whole mind? Do you think he told you all he knew about the trial? Do you think he ever heard it suggested there was a scandal attached to the proceedings of 1878 which came before the public, and published in the newspapers of the time in reference to the occurrences in the Hall of Science, or the hall connected with the Association, whatever it might have been called, in the year 1878? You are men of the world. I could not force them to say more than they did; but was the impression left on your minds that they were telling the whole truth about the matter? Judge for yourselves. The President of the Society (Mr. Foote) is, for aught I know, in court, sitting in front of my learned friend. Does he know nothing about it? Why was not he called? His name has been frequently mentioned, and he is the person who was employed to collect subscriptions in support of the action. Where is he? He is a gentleman whose opinions on the subject of the proximity of the lunatic asylum to the place of worship you have just heard would be valuable. Where is Mr. Foote? Does he know too much about the Hall of Science, or the hall at North-street, Leeds, about which it is suggested this trial took place? Do you think this discussion has been going on all the time without any inquiry being made by the authorities as to what took place at the trial? Gentlemen, don't believe it for a moment. Bring your own good sense to bear on the matter, and then you will be in a position to see whether the article points to anything that occurred in London, as distinguished from what occurred in Leeds. The pamphlet purports to give an account of a public discussion, not in London, but in Leeds, between two advocates of the two systems. The subject was whether or not Secularism was degrading, and you won't expect me to attempt to justify the course of that debate upon the one side or upon the other. If there are people who think that the cause of religion, upon the one hand or upon the other hand, is advanced by discussions of the character you have heard, let them have their opinions. You won't get me to express an opinion favourable to the one or to the other. What I have got to do is to defend my client as best I can against the proceedings in this libel action, which neither of them ever contemplated or intended. They may be legally responsible, and, in one sense, may be morally responsible in not having read this article and pamphlet, and inquired what was referred to, and justify the statements made before they published them; but as regards any feeling in the mind of either of them, either against the National Secular Association or against Mr. Smith, before the end of the case you will be satisfied, I am certain, that they had no malice of any sort or kind. Of Mr. Smith I believe they never heard until this action, and certainly it is a very strange thing that it should be in the year 1895 that Mr. Smith should emerge from his comparative obscurity in order to fight the battle of this Secular Association. When this action was commenced, it began as one would have expected. It was an action brought by the National Secular Hall Association, Limited, and another. That another was Mr. Smith, but the real plaintiffs in the matter were the Association. It was found, as the action went on, that they had no locus standi in the matter, and their names were struck out, so that they had to fall back on the "another." Mr. Smith nobody had heard of until this matter was brought to its present shape. What is the answer to this case? It is this. It is made on behalf of my client, who knew nothing about the facts. That the debate at Leeds took place in reference to matters that were familiar to the audience, we have proved. They all knew about the trial of 1878. Somebody has got the name of the Daily Standard in, showing the muddle that Mr. Powell must have got into. He was obviously referring to the Leeds Daily News, which did contain a report of the trial—a trial which disclosed, if the evidence was to be believed, the existence of obscenity and filthy practices in this hall, and which was disclosed in the course of the prosecution. It was a prosecution against licensed premises, and the license was opposed by the police; and it was the subject of discussion, not merely in Leeds, but all over the country. Perhaps that is the reason why we do not see Mr. Foote. He is a journalist, and is familiar with the subject of Secularist literature, and would know how far discussion went at Leeds. He is not called, and you can draw your own inference. I have been wondering to see whether they would call witnesses to say: "We have read this article. We know Leeds, and we know London; and, when we read the article, we saw at once that Mr. Smith was the person pointed to." No such person is called, and you are left in the dark. Every attempt has been made to exclude me from throwing any light on what took place in 1878, in order that you might be invited to take a leap in the dark, and find a verdict for the plaintiff. I shall ask you to keep your judgment open, and say whether or not it is more probable that the people were talking in Leeds to a Leeds audience, and were referring to matters that took place at the North-street Hall, Leeds, and not in London. That is the main question, and the one upon which I propose to address you. I shall lay before you, as one of the surrounding circumstances in the case, the papers from the British Museum containing an account of the trial. I shall also lay before you such papers referring to the Leeds scandal in order to enable you to form a judgment as to whether the speech of this gentleman pointed to the plaintiff. No doubt it is a very convenient matter for the proprietors of the Hall of Science to come here and obtain a cheap popularity, with the assistance of other people's money, by bringing an action of this sort; and, if it ever becomes a question of damages, I beg you will remember some of the views expressed by the champion of this hall, and say what damages ought to be awarded to persons of such a character. People who sell such a book in their own hall as the one that I have read passages from to you, admitted by the plaintiff to be part of the current literature of this sect—what title have they to come and ask for damages, even if they are unjustly assailed? Let them sue Mr. Bradlaugh or Mr. Powell, the people who are responsible; but don't let them go and make victims of the printer and publisher, even though, perhaps, they ought to have exercised some supervision, even although the name of Smith was not known to them at the time, and they never anticipated, for a single moment, the feelings of him or his friends could be affected by the paragraph in question.

Digitized by Google

Mr. GRAVES was then called. He said he was an officer of the British Museum, and produced from their custody a file of the Leeds Daily News.

Mr. WALTON: I take your Lordship's opinion whether it is admissible evidence to produce the file of a newspaper. I do not see on what issue this has bearing.

The JUDGE: I understand Mr. Murphy's case is that this matter had reference only to what took place in 1878.

Mr. WALTON: My friend says that the Hall of Science referred to is the Hall of Science so called at Leeds. That is the first proposition, and that is evidence which can be proved by calling persons who will describe the situation of this hall in Leeds, and tell us how it is known; but it cannot be proved by producing the file of a newspaper.

The JUDGE: This witness only produces a file of the paper. The use made of it after is a different thing.

Mr. WALTON: I object to the file going in at all as evidence.

The JUDGE: This is the paper which I suppose Mr. Murphy means is referred to as the Daily Standard.

Mr. WALTON: Of course London should be Leeds, and Daily Standard should be Daily News. His friend could not put in the Daily News, and say it was meant instead of the Daily Standard.

Mr. MURPHY: The view I present is this. The question for the jury is: Has the plaintiff made out that the pamphlet refers to the London Hall of Science, and to the orgies there? I propose to prove, not the facts of what occurred in the Hall of Science at Leeds, but that it was a matter of discussion amongst newspapers at the time referred to in the pamphlet; that there had been in the hall at Leeds orgies of a scandalous description. That will enable the jury to decide one way or the other.

Mr. WALTON: My learned friend is trying to draw a herring across the scent. When the question as to whether the Hall of Science described here as the headquarters of the Secularists, and the situation in which it is in reference to a well-known public institution, is the London hall, how could his learned friend propose to show, not that it was an accurate description of the Hall of Science at Leeds, but that certain proceedings, which he does not propose to prove, took place in another institution, which is not this institution, and to which this description does not apply? I submit we have nothing to do with any proceedings except those in the Hall of Science, which corresponds to the description.

Digitized by Google

The JUDGE: This took place in October, 1892. Was he clearly referring to something which took place in 1879?

Mr. WALTON: At a place indicated. If his learned friend could prove that the place indicated was not the place I have referred to, let him do so.

The JUDGE: It may be that the paper is not sufficient proof.

Mr. WALTON: That is my objection. The production of the paper is evidence of nothing, and I submit is irrelevant. The contents of the paper are not proved, and can have no bearing on the inquiry. I object to its production.

The JUDGE: Well, I think the paper had better go in now. What use is made of it is a different matter.

Mr. MURPHY: I may as well meet the matter now. I have got no witnesses from Leeds, but I press the paper upon these grounds. It would have been open for me to have proved that during the meeting someone called out: "Oh, you are referring to the hall at Leeds." That would be evidence to satisfy the jury that the speaker was referring to what took place in Leeds. In the same way, publication of the paper is known to the audience that was being addressed at Leeds.

Mr. JUSTICE LAWRANCE: That is a long way from producing the paper, saying you put everything in it in.

Mr. MURPHY: I don't put it in as evidence of what occurred there, but as evidence of what the speaker was speaking about. The paper shows there is a scandal at Leeds.

Mr. WALTON: Let him call Mr. Powell, and ask him what he was referring to.

Mr. MURPHY: My friend is inviting me to call a person whom he won't bring an action against. I decline to do it. I propose to read an account of a trial in 1878, dated September 6, 1878.

Mr. WALTON: The paper referred to in the libel is August 11, 1879.

Mr. MURPHY: I am quite aware they were wrong dates, wrong names, and wrong towns.

Mr. WALTON: I ask your Lordship to rule that it is not evidence.

The JUDGE: I think not.

Mr. MURPHY: I tender it as containing an account of a trial in which obscenity took place at the Hall.

Mr. WALTON: My friend is not entitled to use that description, because I don't agree with him. There is no suggestion in this report to which the term "obscenity" can apply. He is not entitled to describe an article which he is seeking to prove, bearing on the case.

The JUDGE (to Mr. WALTON): Your people knew nothing about it, except that there was a charge of disorderly conduct.

Mr. WALTON: They do deny that they ever heard the conduct was obscene.

Mr. MURPHY: Your lordship rejects it.

The JUDGE: Yes.

Mr. MURPHY: I ask your lordship to take a note of the objection.

Mr. RAWLINSON (to witness): Do you also produce another Leeds paper?

Mr. MURPHY: You need not go through the form. I have another witness on another paper, but the objection will be the same.

(To be concluded next week.)

Rough work, iconoclasm; but the only way to get at Truth.—O. W. Holmes.

The moral amelioration of man is the principal mission of woman.—Auguste Comte.

To be able to discern that what is true is true, and that what is false is false—that is the mark and character of intelligence.—R. W. Emerson.

Theology is nothing more than a science of words, which by dint of repetition, we accustom ourselves to substitute for things.—D'Holbach.

In synagogue and cloister, mosque and school,
Hell's terrors and heaven's lures men's bosoms rule;
But they who pierce the secrets of "The Truth"
Sow not such empty chaff their hearts to fool.
—Omar Khayyam; E. H. Whinfield, Trans.

Carlyle and the Church.

His (Carlyle's) destination was "the ministry," and for this, knowing how much his father and mother wished it, he tried to prepare himself. He was already conscious, however, "that he had not the least enthusiasm for that business; that even grave prohibitory doubts were gradually rising ahead." It has been supposed that he disliked the formalism of the Scotch Church; but formalism, he says, was not the pinching point, had there been the preliminary of belief forthcoming. "No church or speaking entity whatever can do without formulas; but it must believe them first if it would be honest."—J. A. Froude, "The Early Life of T. Carlyle."

Religious Prejudices.

If your nurse has told you that Ceres presides over corn, or that Vishnu or Sakyamuni became men several times, or that Odin awaits you in his hall towards Jutland, or that Mohammed or some other travelled to heaven; if, moreover, your preceptor deepens in your brain what the nurse has engraved, you will hold it all your life. Should your judgment rise against these prejudices, your neighbors, above all your female neighbors, will cry out at the impiety and frighten you. Your dervish, fearing the diminution of his revenue, may accuse you before the Cadi, and this Cadi impale you if he can, since he desires to rule over fools, believing fools obey better than others; and this will endure till your neighbors, and the dervish, and the Cadi begin to understand that folly is good for nothing, and that persecution is abominable.—Voltaire, "Dictionnaire Philosophique."

Why Infants Ought to be Damned.

If we want to see Christian theology at its best, we must go to the old divines. A famous Presbyterian of his day was Dr. William Jameson, who occupied the post of Professor in Glasgow University. In his Verus Patrocles, published in 1689, he explains why children are damned in the following manner (pp. 147–8): "Certain it is, from the whole tenor of the Scriptures, and, in special, Revelation xxii. 25, that those who in the sight of God are dogs are guilty persons, and to be excluded from heaven, and, therefore, to be thrust into hell; but whole nations, without exception, are such (Matthew xv. 26). Therefore, infants, being a part of these nations, deserve to be excluded from heaven and sent to hell.' . . . . 'None can enter into the kingdom of heaven except they be born again' (John iii. 7). But surely this new birth is the gift of God, and a privilege which he may withhold from whom he will; and, therefore, without prejudice to his justice, may exclude whosoever hath it not from the kingdom of heaven; but none are excluded from it but guilty persons, which, I believe, none will deny; therefore infants may well be accounted guilty persons."

The Second Epistle of Peter a Forgery.

Jude is copied or imitated by Peter, a fact inconsistent with the position and character of an apostle. Is it likely that Peter would follow Jude's letter as it is followed? Had Jude been an apostle, Peter might, perhaps, have adopted his sentiments and words; but even in that case it would be improbable. There is a visible anxiety on the part of the author to identify himself with the apostle Peter. Thus, in i. 1, he uses the double name, Simon Peter. He has a threefold allusion to his death (i. 13, 14, 15). In i. 16–18 he refers to the transfiguration on the mount, wishing to show that he was present. In iii. 1 he identifies himself with the author of the first epistle, and in iii. 15 he wishes to appear as an apostle. A self-prominent air and conscious effort are visible. "I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things." "I think it meet to stir you up," etc. "I will endeavor that ye may be able after my decease," etc. "In both which I stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance." The language is an echo of Jude's. "I gave all diligence to write unto you . . . . it was needful for me to write unto you." "I will, therefore, put you in remembrance." Those expressions are hardly consistent with the conscious authority of an apostle.—Dr. Samuel Davidson, "Introduction to the New Testament," vol. ii., pp. 539, 540.

They have stormed the stars with their passion-cry
For hope or mercy or justice here,
Plead that their darlings should never die—
Plead with many a sob and tear.

Folly! for never an answer came,
And never an arrow was turned away;
It sped to its beautiful mark the same,
Whether they prayed or scorned to pray.
—Kenneth Lamar.

Digitized by Google

PROFANE JOKES.

"Ah, Charley, old boy, off to church? You go to St. Highjinks, don't you? Very High, isn't it?" "Yaas; candles, crosses, confession; ah, everything except—burning pastilles."

"I want to be an angel,"
Sang the choir, sweetly solemn;
An editor in the audience said,
"Put an ad. in our 'want' column."

A Yorkshire clergyman had been taking an eager part in a cricket match on Saturday, and next morning thoughts of the stirring contest would creep in; for, much to the amusement of some hearers, he said, very solemnly, after the first lesson, "Here endeth the first innings."

"Are you the Judge of Reprobates?" said an old lady of the Malaprop school, as she walked into the Judge's office. "I am the Judge of Probate," was the reply. "Well, that's it, I expect," said the old lady. "You see my husband died detested and left me several little infidels, and I want to be their executioner."

Country Parson—"You have no idea how hard it is for me to perform my duties here." Visiting Bishop—"What are some of your difficulties?" Country Parson—"Take this week, for instance. Just as the piece of swamp they allow me for a garden got dry enough to make my potatoes thrive, the congregation requested me to pray for rain."

A small youth is just now deeply interested in the mechanical arts, and especially devoted to the various forms of the steam-engine. His aunt was recently instructing him in Bible history, and dwelt, at some length, on the story of Abraham. "He was a very rich man," she told the boy; "he had a great many horses and cattle and sheep; he had a great deal of land, and ever so many servants; and he had a dear little boy whom he loved very much. But he was a good man, and there was something he loved more than all else—even more than his little boy." "I know!" interrupted the youth, with enthusiasm. "What was it?" asked his aunt, pleased to have led him up to the right point. And the boy's eyes sparkled with sympathy for Abraham when he answered, "An engine!"

SUNDAY LECTURE NOTICES, ETC.

[Notices of Lectures, etc., must reach us by first post on Tuesday, and be marked "Lecture Notice," if not sent on post-card.]

LONDON.

HALL OF SCIENCE (142 Old-street, E.C.): 11.30, Oswald Dawson, "The Bar Sinister and Licit Love." (Free.) 6.30, musical selections; 7, Frederika Macdonald, "The Rights of Childhood according to Jean Jacques Rousseau." (Admission free; reserved seats 3d. and 6d.) Wednesday, at 8.30, a lecture.

BATTERSEA SECULAR HALL (back of Battersea Park Station): 7.45, musical and dramatic entertainment. (Free.) Tuesday, at 8, dancing for N.S.S. members and friends. Thursday, at 8, committee.

CAMBERWELL (North Camberwell Hall, 61 New Church-road): Tea and Soirée. (Tickets 1s., members 9d.) Thursday, at 7.30, free science classes.

MILTON HALL (Hawley-crescent, 89 Kentish Town-road): 7.30, Enid Stacy, B.A. (I.L.P.), "Modern Shams." (Free.)

WEST LONDON ETHICAL SOCIETY (Princes' Hall, Piccadilly): 11.15, Dr. Stanton Coit, "The Corruption in the Church before the Reformation."

WESTMINSTER BRANCH (Mr. Stace's, 42 Vincent-street): 8, members' meeting.

WOOD GREEN (Star Coffee House, High-street): 5.30, tea; 7, musical and dramatic entertainment.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

HYDE PARK (near Marble Arch): 11.30, a lecture.

COUNTRY.

BIRMINGHAM (Coffee House, corner of Broad-street): Thursdays, at 8, papers, discussions, etc.

CHATHAM SECULAR HALL (Queen's-road, New Brompton): 11, W. D'Matteo (Fabian), "The Blight of Dogma"; 7, "Municipalisation of Industries."

EDINBURGH LABOR HALL: afternoon, Stanley Jones, "The Soul and Science"; evening, "Woman: Past, Present, and Future."

GLASGOW (Ex-Mission Hall, 110 Brunswick-street): 12, discussion—James Woodburn, an essay; 6.30, social meeting. (Tickets 6d.)

HULL (St. George's Hall, Storey-street): 7, Gustav Smith, "Social Movements in Ancient Rome and the Triumph of Cæsarism."

LIVERPOOL (Oddfellows' Hall, St. Anne-street): 11, tontine society; 3, philosophy class—Ernest Newman, "Kant"; 7, John Walter, B.A., "Herbert Spencer."

MANCHESTER SECULAR HALL (Rusholme-road, All Saints): 6.30, Robert Law, F.G.S., "My Journey to the Rocky Mountains and Visits to the Camps of the Blackfeet Indians." (Free.)

NEWCASTLE (Amphitheatre, Northumberland-road): 11, Charles Watts, "The Bible Not the Cause of Modern Civilisation"; 3, "Christ Not a Political and Social Reformer"; 7, "Why Should we Live Moral Lives?—the Christian and Secular Answer."

ROCHDALE (Working Men's College, 4 Acker-street): 6.30, Sam Standring, "Charles Bradlaugh and his New Critics"; 8.30, members' meeting.

SHEFFIELD SECULAR SOCIETY (Hall of Science, Rockingham-street): 3, H. Ancketill, "The Land Question and the Drink Question"; 7, "The Abolition of Poverty." Tea at 5.

SOUTH SHIELDS (Thornton's Variety Hall, Union-lane): 11, C. Cohen, "The Awakening of Modern Europe"; 7, "Christianity: Its Decline."

SUNDERLAND (Lecture Room, Bridge End Vaults, opposite Echo office): 7, the Secretary, "Man's Place in Nature."

Lecturers' Engagements.

C. COHEN, 12 Merchant-street, Bow-road, London, E.—All Sundays until April, South Shields.

STANLEY JONES, 58 Marlborough-road, Holloway, London, N.—Feb. 24, Edinburgh. March 3, Hull; 10, Sheffield; 11, Chesterfield.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Credon-road, Rotherhithe, London.—March 24, Camberwell.

SAM STANDRING, 6 Bury-road, Rochdale.—Feb. 17, Failsworth. March 26 and 27, Sheffield.

On Sunday, February 24, 1895,

AT 11.30 A.M.,

MR. OSWALD DAWSON

(Hon. Sec. of the LEGITIMATION LEAGUE)

WILL DELIVER A LECTURE

ON

"The Bar Sinister and Licit Love,"

AT THE

HALL OF SCIENCE,

Old-street, City-Road, E.C.

Colonel Ingersoll's Great New Lecture

ABOUT THE HOLY BIBLE

Price Sixpence.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

ASK YOUR GROCER

FOR THE

ROYAL CHISWICK TABLE JELLIES

EXPERT'S OPINION—

"The Perfection of Jelly."

"Certainly far superior to all other Jelly Tablets—in transparency, strength, and in flavor utterly beyond comparison."

Sample Dozen—Pints 4s. 6d.; Quarts 8s., carriage free.

WHOLESALE TERMS ON APPLICATION.

TOUZEAU PARRIS & CO.,
ENFIELD WORKS, ACTON, LONDON, W.

Digitized by Google

ALLINSON FOR HEALTH.

HOME CONSULTATIONS—10 a.m. to 1 p.m., 10s. 6d.; 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., 5s. Patients Visited.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. I. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Management of Infancy, Health, Longevity, The Teeth, Tobacco, The Drink Question. Also the Cause and Cure of Disease, Constipation, Biliousness, Eczema, Blackheads and Pimples, Nervousness, Coughs and Colds, Chest Complaints, Deafness, Thread Worms, Long Worms, Tape Worms, The Itch, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. II. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on The Healing Power of Nature, Urine, Saline Starvation, the Hair and its Management, Sleep and Sleeplessness, Want of Energy, etc. Advice for the Thin, for the Stout; Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. III. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on No More Death, Management of Young Children, Unsuspected Domestic Poisons, How to Grow Tall, to Keep Warm, to Live One Hundred Years, to Improve the Memory, and to become Beautiful and Attractive. On the Cause and Cure of Stomach Troubles, Flatulence, Sleeplessness, Varicose Veins, Boils and Carbuncles, Sebaceous Tumors and Warts, Hay Fever, Winter Cough, Childbirth, Epilepsy, and on the Diseases Produced by Taking Mercury.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. IV. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Hardening, Work and Overwork, Sugar and its Abuse, Milk as Food, the Tomato, Poultices, Quinine, Against the Knife, Arsenical Poisoning, Tonics, Against Stimulants in Disease, about Swallowing Pins and other Articles. Also Cure of Sunstroke, Dog Bites, Pains in the Back, Pediculi or Lice, Chicken-Pox, Synovitis or Inflammation of the Joints, Tonsilitis or Quinsy, Herpes (Tetter or Shingles), Erysipelas, Ulcer of the Stomach, Epidemic Influenza, Sciatica, Psoriasis or English Leprosy, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. V. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Pure Water, The Mouth, Its Use and Abuse; Rules for the Aged, Training, Blood Letting, Nose Bleeding, Felon or Whitlow, Ingrowing Toenail, Gum Boil, Cold in the Head, a Red Nose, Flushing and Blushing, Toothache, Sore Mouth, St. Vitus' Dance, Goitre, Mumps, Inflamed Eyes and Eyelids, Fits, Fainting, Apoplexy, Spitting and Vomiting of Blood, Vomiting, Wounds, Burns, Scalds, Bruises, etc.

The Five Volumes, strongly and neatly bound, price 6s. 3d., post free.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.—An Eye Opener to Drug Takers.
RHEUMATISM: ITS CAUSE AND CURE. Post free for 9d.
DIET AND DIGESTION. Post free for 9d.
CONSUMPTION: ITS NATURAL CURE. Post free 9d.
All three Books, bound in One Vol., post free, 2s. 6d. Send Postal Order.

THREE PAMPHLETS FOR YOUNG MEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
A BOOK FOR MARRIED WOMEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

All communications to be addressed to—

DR. T. R. ALLINSON,
4 Spanish-place, Manchester-square, London, W.

W. J. Rendell's "Wife's Friend"

Recommended by Mrs. Besant in Law of Population, p. 32, and Dr. Allbutt in Wife's Handbook, p. 51. Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell-street, Clerkenwell; 2s. per doz., post free (reduction in larger quantities). For particulars send stamped envelope.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

BEWARE of useless imitations substituted by some dealers and chemists, the words "Rendell & Co." and "J. W. Rendall" being speciously and plausibly introduced to deceive the public.

LOOK FOR AUTOGRAPH REGISTERED TRADE MARK

W. J. Rendell

No. 182,688.

IN Red INK ON EACH BOX, WITHOUT WHICH NONE ARE GENUINE.

Higginson's Syringe, with Vertical and Reverse Current, 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 5s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. Dr. Allbutt's Quinine Powders, 3s. per doz. All prices post free.

W. J. RENDELL, 15 Chadwell-st., Clerkenwell, E.C.

THE BEST BOOK

ON NEO-MALTHUSIANISM IS, I BELIEVE,

TRUE MORALITY, or THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF NEO-MALTHUSIANISM.

By J. R. HOLMES, M.M.L., M.V.S., M.N.S.S.

360 pages, with portrait and autograph, bound in cloth, gilt lettered. Price 1s., post free.

 In order to bring the information within the reach of the poor, the most important parts of the book are issued in a pamphlet of 112 pages at ONE PENNY, post free 2d. Copies of the pamphlet for distribution 1s. a dozen post free.

The National Reformer of 4th September, 1892, says: "Mr Holmes' pamphlet . . . is an almost unexceptionable statement of the Neo-Malthusian theory and practice . . . and throughout appeals to moral feeling. . . . The special value of Mr. Holmes' service to the Neo-Malthusian cause and to human well-being generally is just his combination in his pamphlet of a plain statement of the physical and moral need for family limitation with a plain account of the means by which it can be secured, and an offer to all concerned of the requisites at the lowest possible prices."

The Council of the Malthusian League, Dr. Drysdale, Dr. Allbutt, and others have also spoken of it in very high terms.

The Trade supplied by R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.
Other orders* should be sent to the author.

J. R. HOLMES, HANNEY, WANTAGE, BERKS.

PRICE SIXPENCE,

THE

SECULAR ALMANACK

For 1895.

Altered and Enlarged. Finely-Designed Cover.

EDITED BY

G. W. FOOTE & J. M. WHEELER.

CONTENTS: Progress of Freethought; by G. W. Foote—This World; by J. M. Wheeler—Heroes in the Service of Man; by Charles Watts—Dod Grile—A Wish; by Matthew Arnold—The Abducted Female Infidel—Farquhar of Netherton—Bits from Selden's "Table Talk"—Jeremy Bentham on Inspiration—Abou-ben Adhem and the Angel—Man's Soul his God—The Sacred Books of the World—The Dear God—What have Unbelievers Done for the World?—Information Concerning Freethought Work and Organisation—Lecturers, etc.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Works by G. W. Foote.

Flowers of Freethought. First Series. 221 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Flowers of Freethought. Second Series. 302 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Bible Heroes. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Letters to the Clergy. First Series. 128 pp., 1s.

The Grand Old Book. A Reply to the Grand Old Man. An exhaustive answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture." 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Christianity and Secularism. Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Is Socialism Sound? Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 2s.

Infidel Death-Beds. Second edition, much enlarged, 8d. On superfine paper, in cloth, 1s. 3d.

Darwin on God. 6d.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s.

Will Christ Save Us? A Thorough Examination of the Claims of Jesus Christ to be considered the Savior of the World. 6d.

Reminiscences of Charles Bradlaugh. 6d.

A Defence of Free Speech. Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes. 4d.

Comic Sermons and Other Fantasias. 8d.

Rome or Atheism—the Great Alternative. 3d.

Letters to Jesus Christ. 4d.

Interview with the Devil. 2d.

Philosophy of Secularism. 3d.

Atheism and Morality. 2d.

My Resurrection. A Missing Chapter from the Gospel of Matthew, discovered by G. W. Foote. 2d.

The Folly of Prayer. 2d.

Ingersollism Defended against Archdeacon Farrar. 2d.

Was Jesus Insane? A Searching Inquiry into the Mental Condition of the Prophet of Nazareth. 1d.

Christianity and Progress. A Reply to Mr. Gladstone. 2d.

The Impossible Creed. An Open Letter to Bishop Magee on the Sermon on the Mount. 2d.

What was Christ? A Reply to J. S. Mill. 2d.

The Bible God. 2d.

Salvation Syrup; or, Light on Darkest England. A Reply to General Booth. 2d.

Is the Bible Inspired? A Criticism on Lux Mundi. 1d.

The Dying Atheist. A Story. 1d.

The Rev. Hugh Price Hughes's Converted Atheist. A Lie in Five Chapters. 1d.

Mrs. Besant's Theosophy. A Candid Criticism. 2d.

Secularism and Theosophy. A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant. 2d.

The New Cagliostro. An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky. 2d.

Bible Romances. New Edition. Revised and largely re-written. (1) The Creation Story, 2d.; (2) Eve and the Apple, 1d.; (3) Cain and Abel, 1d.; (4) Noah's Flood, 2d.; (5) The Tower of Babel, 1d.; (6) Lot's Wife, 1d.; (7) The Ten Plagues, 1d.; (8) The Wandering Jews, 1d.; (9) Balaam's Ass, 1d.; (10) God in a Box, 1d.; (11) Jonah and the Whale, 1d.; (12) Bible Animals, 1d.; (13) A Virgin Mother, 2d.; (14) The Resurrection, 2d.; (15) The Crucifixion, 1d.; (16) John's Nightmare, 1d.

The Shadow of the Sword. A Moral and Statistical Essay on War. 2d.

Royal Paupers. Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty. 2d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

From the "Bradford Weekly Telegraph," Saturday, February 16, 1895.

GREAT FIRE IN BRADFORD.

EXTENSIVE DAMAGE.

Early on Saturday a big fire took place in the warehouse, No. 2 Union-street, Bradford, occupied by Mr. R. Higgins, who occupies a large part of the ground floor, and numbers the following tenants occupying the other offices and rooms: Mr. Ernest Hahnel, Messrs. Schmidt & Co., Mr. J. W. Gott, Messrs. G. D. Wright & Co., and Mr. J. Pepper. The damage done is very extensive, and is roughly estimated at a figure between £8,000 to £10,000. It certainly cannot be less than £8,000, as many of the firms occupying the building had large and valuable stocks stored in the various rooms. Mr. R. Higgins had a big stock of woollens, stuffs, and yarns, and estimates his loss at over £4,000. He is insured up to £4,000. Messrs. Wright & Co., stuff merchants, have had fully £1,000 damage done to their stock and premises, but it is completely covered by insurance. Mr. J. W. Gott, cloth and stuff merchant, had a stock valued at £1,500, and it is partially destroyed, chiefly by water. The other firms, with the exception of Mr. J. Pepper, have suffered in like manner, a lot of stock being destroyed by water. The cause of the fire is unknown, but, judging by appearances, it broke out in the packing-room of Mr. R. Higgins.

To the Readers of "The Freethinker."

We had just got the New Spring Goods ready for Sale when this unfortunate fire took place, and, although we have sustained no damage by the fire itself, most of our goods have been soaked in water. We have taken immediate steps to have all the goods dried, and for all practical purposes they are not worth one penny less than before the fire took place. The finish which is put upon new goods has, of course, been disturbed, but that always takes place in making garments up. So that if you get a length of this cloth, or stuff, and have it made up, there is not the slightest difference between that and any other new goods you might buy, when made into garments.

We have got a Big Allowance from the Insurance Company,

and to make room for New Goods, which we have already ordered, and which will be ready for sale in one month,

We now offer all our Present Stock at HALF PRICE.

We are making the goods up into the following lots:—

Parcel for 21s. carriage paid.

A Lot of GOODS for GENTLEMEN'S WEAR, worth at warehouse prices 42s.

☞ State what will be most useful. ☜

Parcel for 21s. carriage paid.

A Lot of GOODS for LADIES' WEAR, worth at warehouse prices 42s.

☞ State what will be most useful. ☜

Parcel for 21s. carriage paid.

MIXED LOT OF GOODS,

Worth 42s.

For Ladies' and Gentlemen's wear.

Parcel for 21s. carriage paid.

Mixed Lot of Goods, such as

BLANKETS, SHEETS, QUILTS, TABLE-CLOTH, APRON, BELT, PURSE, Etc.

We have engaged 25 additional Tailors to make up Trousers. Price during Salvage Sale,

7s. 6d. per Pair to Measure.

Fill up form and state Color preferred.

Round waist .....
Round seat .....
Inside leg seam .....
Outside leg seam .....
Thigh .....
Knee .....
Bottom .....
Lined or Unlined .....
(Lined 6d. extra.)
Color .....

SEND AT ONCE.

J. W. GOTT, 2 & 4 UNION-STREET, BRADFORD.

Printed and Published by G. W. Foote, at 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

VOL. XV.—No. 9. SUNDAY, MARCH 3, 1895. PRICE TWOPENCE.

THE WOMAN WHO DID.

The Woman Who Did. By Grant Allen. London: John Lane.

MR. GRANT ALLEN is one of the brightest of the champions of Evolution. His arm is not so strong as Professor Huxley's, nor is his sword of the same weight and trenchancy. But there are very few Huxleys. We never find more than one in a single generation. It is therefore no disparagement of Mr. Grant Allen to place him below our great protagonist of Evolution. Yet in one respect he has a decided advantage. He has not hesitated to speak out plainly on the subject of religion—far more plainly than Huxley, whose Agnosticism seems at times a mere excuse for reticence.

Mr. Grant Allen has also written with the utmost plainness upon the social and ethical aspects of Evolution. He may be right or wrong, but at least he is honest. At one time we could only have said this with a reservation. But that was Mr. Grant Allen's own fault. He told the world that he had written a masterpiece, which he had not published, but destroyed, because he could not run the risk of committing the unpardonable sin against Mrs. Grundy. This was an act of cowardice, though there was some courage in the confession. But we take it that the masterpiece was only destroyed in a Pickwickian sense. It is presumably the book which has just been issued from the Bodley Head.

Mr. Grant Allen has waited until the air is thoroughly saturated with the odor of the Woman question, and he is sure of a hearing. He has also put his revolutionary argument before the world in a handsome attire. Mr. John Lane issues dainty volumes from his press in Vigo-street, and a dainty volume helps to disarm prejudice. There is nothing furtive about it. It seems to say that we may dislike it, but we must admit it is good-looking; and so it moves about, challenging a certain inevitable admiration.

It is a pity, however, that the title on the cover was not punctuated. "The Woman Who Did Grant Allen" is a very awkward joke. Of course it is a small matter; but the worst thing a revolutionist can do is to start a laugh at his own expense.

The Woman Who Did is a brightly written story; in some parts it is written beautifully. But it is not a mere story. It is really a fierce impeachment of marriage. Now this is a dangerous line for a writer to take, though less dangerous than it was ten or twenty years ago, and far less dangerous than it was in the days of Shelley. Mr. Grant Allen displays a discreet instinct, therefore, in dedicating the book to his wife—"to whom I have dedicated my twenty happiest years." After this he informs us that the book was written at Perugia, in the spring of 1893—"for the first time in my life wholly and solely to satisfy my own taste and my own conscience." By this time the reader is put, if possible, in the frame of mind to judge the book upon its merits.

Before we proceed to judge the book upon its merits, we have a word to say on the subject of novels with a purpose. We conceive them to be an utter mistake, unless the purpose is latent, as it is in the tragic masterpieces of Shakespeare. The method of art is indirection. Shelley learnt this long after he wrote Queen Mab, and forcibly expressed it in the sentence, "Didactic poetry is my abhorrence." You may write a novel with a purpose ever so powerfully, but you will never make it convincing. The reader who dissents from your conclusions can always say, "This proves nothing; it never happened; it is all imaginary." Besides, as Flaubert said, somebody else may write a story as powerfully to illustrate the opposite thesis. And where are you then? Art—if it is art—has counterbalanced art; and the result is a futile equilibrium. If you have a thesis to maintain, do it in the proper way. Challenge the intellect directly. Appeal to fact and logic. Put your case so that it may be proved or disproved. To do otherwise is to evade your logical responsibilities.

The only good a novel with a purpose can really do is to draw attention to a principle or a grievance. It is very doubtful, however, if the persons whose attention can only be excited in that way are capable of any profitable thinking. The chances are, therefore, that you have appealed to the wrong audience; which is a serious waste of time and energy.

These are general considerations, and we now come to a more particular criticism. Mr. Grant Allen has made a tremendous blunder in logic, even as a novelist. He sets out to illustrate the argument that marriage is a relic of ancient slavery, and that men and women should unite their lives, or separate them, not only without the sanction of religion, but also without the sanction of the law. Accordingly, he introduces a beautiful, cultivated, and high-spirited girl, who refuses on principle to marry the man who loves her, and argues him into becoming her husband in the merely natural sense of the word. So far so good. But it is only, after all, the beginning; the first act, so to speak, of the drama. Mr. Grant Allen should then have worked out the after-life of this couple; he should have shown us how they bore themselves towards the world, and how the world bore itself towards them; he should have developed their relationship to each other when passion had settled into affection; he should have told us how the experiment answered for them, in the course of many years, and in the existing social environment. Instead of doing this, he kills off the hero (if we may call him so) in seven months with typhoid fever; giving him no time to echo Shelley's apostrophe to the skylark, "Thou lovest, but ne'er knew love's sad satiety." Mr. Grant Allen says that it is the fools who always put that question, "What of the children?" and think it a crushing one. All the more, then, was he bound to work out the problem from the point of view of the unmarried husband and wife. Killing the husband off—and it is the novelist, not nature, who perpetrates the assassination—is a weak evasion of the real difficulty. The problem that remains is not the primary one, but the secondary one, which Mr. Grant Allen rather hastily declares to be no problem at all, or only a problem for fools.

Digitized by Google

The second half of Mr. Grant Allen's book answers his first half, and proves (if it proves anything) that "What of the children?" is not merely a question for fools. Herminia Barton is cut by most of her old acquaintances, and even by her father, the Dean of Dunwich. She is also cut by the family of her child's father. Her child grows up a Philistine. It was a case of atavism. Dolores Barton's beauty brings her a good offer of marriage. She learns of what she regards as her mother's "shame," rounds upon her in vehement Philistine language, goes to her paterna grandfather for "protection," and leaves Herminia no alternative but to take poison and leave a free stage for her daughter's career.

Mr. Grant Allen winds up with a funeral dirge, in which is a certain note of triumph. "Herminia Barton's stainless soul had ceased to exist for ever," but—"Not for nothing does blind fate vouchsafe such martyrs to humanity. From their graves shall spring glorious the church of the future." The sentiment is worthy of reverence; yet the cool intellect bids us ask what can possibly spring from imaginary graves, and whether the blood of imaginary martyrs can ever again be the seed of a church.

Dolores Barton was a beautiful young Philistine. She could not rise to the level of her mother's principles. But was it her fault? Mr. Grant Allen brands as "a silly error" the idea that parents can "influence to any appreciable extent the moral ideas and impulses of their children." Character, he maintains, is congenital, and cannot be "altered or affected after birth by the foolishness of preaching." Very well, then; if the law of atavism, which is only a deeper heredity, so often makes children unlike their parents, is it safe, is it fair, to involve children, whose character you cannot foresee, in the consequences of your own social experiments? Herminia Barton meant to give her daughter the glorious blessing of being "the first free-born woman ever begotten in England." But the blessing proved a curse, and it is idle to say that the daughter "made a curse of it." It was a curse to her. "All my life has been sacrificed to you and your principles!" exclaims Dolly. "You had no right," she cries, "to bring me into the world at all; if you did, you should have put me on an equality with other people." Herminia is unable to reply effectively; in other words, Mr. Grant Allen is unable to lay the spectre he has raised. We put it to him, in all seriousness, whether the fate of offspring is really a problem for fools. If it is, he should have been logical; he should have made Herminia resolute to the end, and have raised the "glorious church of the future" on the martyrdom of Dolores as well as the martyrdom of her mother.

In every civilised society the principle is gaining recognition that the rights of children are supreme. However marriage originated—and all good things had vulgar beginnings—it has held its own, just as monogamy has triumphed over polygamy, by virtue of the protection it affords to offspring. Family life may be purified; it can never be abolished without the ruin of civilisation. Children cannot grow up as they should without a home, and how is a home possible without marriage? This is the very kernel of the question, and not to see it is to be blind to the very essence of human evolution.

Mr. Grant Allen has strong views on the subject of marriage, and we shall deal with them in our next article. We shall also note some of his outspoken observations on other points in ethics and religion. He has put his heart into the work, and is entitled to a fair hearing and a candid criticism.

G. W. FOOTE.

(To be continued.)

CHURCH MEMBERSHIP AND CHURCH PROPERTY.

THE Parish Councils Act has been generally recognised as an excellent piece of legislation, developing the possibilities of public life in the villages, and helping to remove the village parishioners from the thraldom of parson and squire. The Act was opposed by these interested classes, and the bishops were consistent with the whole course of their legislative career in their antagonism to the measure. It is an open secret that their opposition was not extreme, both because it was seen to be unavailing, and because the new measure was not without some benefit to the Church. The old vestries having had their church functions swallowed up by their civil business, it became a distinct advantage to the Church to make the new civil council go to the schoolroom, or other building, instead of to the church vestries, thus dissevering the old and true idea that the church belonged to the parish, and could itself be used, as in old time it was used, for parish business. Still more, to retain parish charities as ecclesiastical charities, without the control of the parish councils, was, as it were, to obtain the advantages of disestablishment without the disadvantages of disendowment. Within narrower limits the Church may have more real power than ever. The Act restored to the vestry and the churchwardens their ecclesiastical character, and now Churchmen in Convocation have been discussing the question whether the election of the parish vestry, formerly the right of parishioners, cannot be confined exclusively to Churchmen. At first sight the question may appear to have no more importance than the ordinary discussions of Convocation (which, by the way, once had the right of examining all Bills brought before Parliament that in any way related to religion, but which can now only pass resolutions that nobody heeds); but on examination it will be found to be wide-reaching. If the church affairs of the parish are to be decided by Churchmen only, and not by the majority of the parishioners, it is evident that the Church of England, which has long ceased to be really co-terminous with the nation, will also cease to be entitled to the designation of the National Church. The Bishops in the Upper House of Convocation saw this, and adhered to the old precedents, which, as laid down by Hooker, declared "there is not any man a member of the Commonwealth who is not also of the Church of England." The Bishops of London and Rochester distinctly admitted that every citizen, as such, has a right to a voice in the affairs of the Church. The Bishop of Ely dissented; but he appears to have been the only member of the Upper House of Convocation who ventured to antagonise the existing law. For, by the law, all members of the nation are, ipso facto, members of the National Church, entitled to all the privileges of such membership. Though I have ceased to be a Christian, and consequently do not claim these privileges, I am in law a nonconforming member of the Church of England, and have as much legal right to a voice in Church matters as any of my fellow-parishioners.* I may, moreover, if able, invest money in the purchase of advowsons, and present livings to any ordained clergymen I may select. The Lower House of Convocation appeared to be in a hopelessly muddle-headed condition on the question. Evidently they wished to limit the right of voting for the vestries to Churchmen; but as evidently they feared the State would never permit such a limitation of the rights of other parishioners. That mysterious body, the new House of Laymen, which has been, under the leadership of Lord Selborne, more sacerdotalist than the sacerdotalists, rejected the propositions of the Upper House. They would limit the voters for vestries to persons baptised in the Church of England; and since it is notorious that many who have been so baptised have become "nonconforming members of the Church of England," some would limit the voters to confirmed and communicating members. As, however, less than ten per cent. of baptised persons, and those mostly females, go through the ceremony of confirmation, any such rule would at once restrict the membership of the Church of England to within much narrower bounds than that of the Wesleyans, and render more glaring the iniquity of its holding for its exclusive behalf vast sums of national wealth. The Church is in a strait "between the Devil and the deep sea." If all parishioners vote, it must face the possibility of a nonconforming majority some day altering the very constitution of the Church, and possibly re-applying its buildings, lands, and endowments, or it must, by narrowing the term of its membership, confess it is no longer the Church of the nation, and consequently no longer entitled to those endowments. It hopes to sail between Scylla and Charybdis, and use the Liberal Parish Councils Act to dish the Liberationists. The very proposals show that the Church has lost its ancient, national basis, and that it has no more title to national property than any other of the various sects that teach in the name of religion. For it must never be forgotten that the churches, cathedrals, glebe lands, tithes, rents, and other funds in the administration of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, are national property. The clergy have no more right to consider the churches as their property than the Admiralty have to consider the dockyards and the ships of the navy as their property. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners and the various Church corporations are trustees for the entire nation. Nor is this affected by the fact that private persons have endowed the Church. As a matter of fact, of the aggregate annual income of six millions, only the comparatively small sum of £284,380 is derived from "private benefactions since 1703." The Churchman who gives his property to a church of which every member of Parliament is a ruler, and of which every citizen is a member, can no more question legislation concerning it than had he given property for a road or for a public park. The nation cannot take gifts on the condition that it shall never afterwards legislate concerning them. Mr. Gladstone made this clear in the debate on the Irish Church Bill in 1869, and the late Lord Chief Justice Coleridge remarked that, "if men give property to the Church, and the Church takes it, the property is given and taken subject to State control, on State terms: upon conditions laid down from time to time by the State, and liable to be altered by the power which has laid them down."

* Even if excommunicated, my excommunication might not be recognised by the State. The Church was compelled, in the case of Mr. Jenkins, who was refused the sacrament because he did not believe in the Devil, to admit an acknowledged heretic into the fold.

Digitized by Google

The Church is shrieking against its disestablishment in Wales as spoliation and robbery, though it has long robbed and despoiled a people who want none of it. Its talk of sacrilege and robbery will be regarded by no wise statesmen. A nation can no more rob itself than a man can rob himself. Should the nation deem it wise and expedient to devote the whole or any portion of ecclesiastical property to secular purposes, whether for the promotion of education, the encouragement of science, the endowment of research, the establishment of pensions for old age, or for the relief of the poor, it has exactly the same right as any individual has to buy books or give alms, instead of paying for fire insurance. When the nation is convinced of the unsoundness of theological post-mortem fire insurance it will certainly reconsider the wisdom of investing six millions and more per annum in that dubious business.

J. M. Wheeler.

CHRISTIAN HISTORY NOT TRUSTWORTHY.

Whatever value the Christian religion may possess in itself, there can be no reasonable doubt that its early history was associated with fraud, falsehood, and barefaced forgery. For centuries the followers of Christ were not only guilty of interpolating different writings, with such alterations and additions as were deemed necessary to suit the purpose of Christian propaganda, but they actually forged entire passages that were favorable to their dogmas, attributing them to authors who had nothing to do with their production. Bishop Faustus says: "It is certain that the New Testament was not written by Christ himself, nor by his Apostles, but a long while after them, by some unknown persons, who, lest they should not be credited when they wrote of affairs they were little acquainted with, affixed to their works the names of Apostles, or of such as were supposed to have been their companions, asserting that what they had written themselves was written according to those persons to whom they ascribed it" (Lardner's Gospel History, vol. vi., part 2, chap. 63, p. 559). Probably these writers were influenced by the words of St. Paul: "If the truth of God hath more abounded through my lie unto his glory, why yet am I also judged as a sinner?" (Romans iii. 7).

Mosheim, in his Ecclesiastical History, writes: "Thus it happened . . . . that they who were desirous [in the third century] of surpassing all others in piety looked upon it as lawful, and even laudable, to advance the cause of piety by artifice and fraud" (p. 77). "The interests of virtue and true religion suffered yet more grievously by two monstrous errors which were almost universally adopted in this [the fourth] century, and became a source of innumerable calamities and mischief in the succeeding ages. The first of these maxims was, 'that it was an act of virtue to deceive and lie, when by that means the interests of the Church might be promoted'" (p. 103). "Nor did the heralds of the Gospel think it at all unlawful to terrify, or to allure to the profession of Christianity by fictitious prodigies, those obdurate hearts which they could not subdue by reason and argument" (p. 171). Such falsehood and deceit were not confined to mere professed Christians, for Mosheim says: "It cannot be affirmed that even true Christians were entirely innocent and irreproachable in this matter" (p. 55).

One of the most audacious instances of the endeavors of the Christians to palm off upon the world forged writings as real is that of ascribing to the Jewish historian, Josephus, a direct reference to Jesus as "the Christ." There are two passages that refer to Jesus in the Antiquities, which Josephus is supposed to have written A.D. 93; but the more important of the two is that found in chapter iii., book xviii., which reads thus: "Now, there was about this time Jesus, a wise man, if it be lawful to call him a man, for he was a doer of wonderful works—a teacher of such men as receive the truth with pleasure. He drew over to him both many of the Jews and many of the Gentiles. He was [the] Christ; and when Pilate, at the suggestion of the principal men amongst us, had condemned him to the cross, those that loved him at the first did not forsake him, for he appeared to them alive again the third day, as the divine prophets had foretold these and ten thousand other wonderful things concerning him; and the tribe of Christians, so named from him, are not extinct at this day." Now, there is a general consensus of opinion among able writers (including eminent Christians) that this entire passage is a forgery.

C. B. Waite, who published his History of the Christian Religion in Chicago during the year 1884, says: "It is the general verdict of scholars that the paragraph in the third chapter of the eighteenth book of the Antiquities, wherein it is stated that Jesus was the Christ, etc., is an interpolated forgery" (pp. 16, 17). Eusebius is the Christian charged by several writers with the forgery, as it is well known that this pious writer was not over particular in keeping to the truth, if, by the use of falsehood, he could promote the interests of the Church.

Dr. Lardner, in the third volume of his works, says: "Probably some learned Christian, who had read the works of Josephus, thinking it strange that this Jewish historian should say nothing of Jesus Christ, wrote this paragraph on the margin of his copy; and thence it came to be afterwards inserted into many copies of Josephus." In the preface to his fourth volume Lardner writes more definitely, for therein he observes: "Indeed, it is not Josephus, but Eusebius, or some other Christian, about this time, who composed this paragraph."

Judge Strange, in his Sources and Development of Christianity, speaks of the passage as "a recognised forgery," and remarks: "The language is plainly that of a Christian, and not such as would be held by a Jew. Nor can it have proceeded from one so near the alleged events of Christianity as Josephus, who, sixty years after the atonement said to have been made by the Messiah, would not have had to point to the fact that he still had a following at this day as a noteworthy circumstance" (p. 21).

The Rev. Dr. Giles, in his Apostolic Records (p. 285), observes that the forged paragraph "is not noticed by any earlier writer than Eusebius, and plainly shows that the writer of it was a Christian. It has been rejected by all critics as a forgery, introduced into the text of Josephus to supply what was thought to be a serious want of evidence in favor of the Christian history." A host of other authorities could be cited, all being decidedly against the theory that the passage under consideration was written by Josephus. Even Professor Graetz writes, in his History of the Jews (vol. vii., p. 166), in referring to the circumstances that are said to have occurred in connection with the life of Christ: "Strange that events fraught with so vast an import should have created so little effect at the time of their occurrence at Jerusalem that the Judæan historians, Justus of Tiberias and Josephus, who related, to the very smallest minutiæ, everything which took place under Pilate, never mentioned the life and death of Jesus."

Digitized by Google

In my opinion, the paragraph, as it appears in the Antiquities, bears the strongest possible evidence of its being a forgery, and it requires no scholarship to detect its lack of genuineness. If anyone were to read a speech delivered by an archbishop of the Church of England in favor of the Establishment, and found that it was interpolated with opinions of the Liberation Society, the difference of the language and its import would be speedily detected. All that is required to discover the forgery in the book of Josephus is to remember who he was, and what religious views he held, and then to note the nature and position of the interpolation. Josephus was an orthodox Jew, and would not, therefore, use language that would indicate he believed in the divinity of Christ. There would be nothing extraordinary in a Jew mentioning the name Jesus, for that was an ordinary name, whereas Christ was not; it was a title, the "Anointed One," the Messiah. But the passage says that Josephus wrote, "He was the Christ," which is absurd, inasmuch as, had he done so, the early Christian Fathers would surely have alluded to the fact in their discussions with the Jews. "Origen," says Judge Strange, "could not have failed to have made use of it in his argument with Celsus, when occupied in bringing before him the testimony of Josephus. On the contrary, he has to admit the absence of any sufficient notice of Jesus by Josephus, and to endeavor to account for his silence."

Let us note the position of the passage as it appears in the Antiquities. The edition of 1737 gives in the margin the dates of the events recorded. It mentions three things as having happened A.D. 28—the first being a riot, in which Pilate's soldiers killed many of the populace, while others ran away. The account then says: "Thus an end was put to this sedition." Following in the order of this date, the historian adds: "About the same time, also, another sad calamity put the Jews into disorder." But between these two accounts appears the forged passage, which has no relation whatever to what preceded and what followed. In fact, it entirely destroys the continuity of the two narratives of the national disasters. Besides, the whole affair of the birth, miracles, death, and resurrection of Christ is disposed of in a few sentences, which is a most improbable thing for Josephus to have done, considering he gave full details upon local riots, which had no comparison in importance with the wonderful incidents mentioned about Christ. The concluding sentence of the paragraph ought to settle the matter once and for all. It reads thus: "And the tribe of Christians, so named from him [Christ], are not extinct at this day." Does not this point to the fact that the passage was written long after A.D. 93?

The allegation that the paragraph is after the "style" of Josephus is not true. His usual plan was to enlarge even upon trivial matters; yet in this case he is made to dismiss events of unparalleled magnitude in a few words. The fact is, all trustworthy evidence that has any reference to this "testimony of Christ" shows it to be one of the many glaring forgeries for which the early Christians were noted. As the author of Supernatural Religion, speaking of the early Christian Fathers, says: "No fable could be too gross, no invention too transparent, for their unsuspicious acceptance, if it assumed a pious form, or tended to edification. No period in the history of the world ever produced so many spurious works as the first two or three centuries of our era. The name of every apostle or Christian teacher, not excepting the great Master himself, was freely attached to every description of religious forgery." Such were the men who controlled the infancy of the Christian faith; and such were some of the elements that comprised its history. CHARLES WATTS.

We look before and after,
And pine for what is not;
Our sincerest laughter with some pain is fraught,
Our sweetest songs are those that tell of saddest thought.
—Shelley.

ACID DROPS.

THE recent severe weather is not much of a testimony to the wisdom and benignity of "Providence." It has inflicted the most frightful hardships upon the poorest classes. Inquests have been held in London upon men and women who died of sheer cold and starvation. In one very sad case the Coroner was very pathetic in his lamentations, and gave some coal and food tickets to the surviving family. After the inquest it was discovered that several of the jurymen were themselves suffering from lack of sustenance, and the coroner distributed tickets amongst them as well. All this is a curious commentary upon our boasted "Christian civilisation." It is very doubtful whether any ancient pagan state, or any modern heathen country, could show such poverty, destitution, and misery as obtain where the Bible is read and Christ is worshipped.

Mr. Barnes, a Sheffield publican, determined to give away soup and loaves to the destitute poor in his neighborhood. Some tickets were sent to the Rev. C. F. Knight, of St. Simon's Vicarage, to distribute, but the man of God would not have anything to do with such tainted charity. He would not have people go to a public-house, even to save themselves from starvation. Of course this is a very noble attitude, but a correspondent of a local newspaper wants to know whether the reverend gentleman, who took a tour on the continent lately, stayed at hotels or not. We have not seen his answer to this pertinent question. Probably we never shall.

A story is being circulated about Mr. Gladstone at Cannes, where the venerable statesman is escaping the rigors of our English winter. Going to church one day, the G.O.M. was accorded a seat near the pulpit; but his deafness still prevented him from catching the sermon. "I can't hear," he said, turning to his helpmeet. "Never mind, my dear," said Mrs. Gladstone, "never mind; go to sleep. It will do you much more good." We should think so.

The Gifford lectures are becoming quite jocular. Professor Wallace, the latest Gifford lecturer at Glasgow, has just defined the soul as follows: "Our soul was that not in which we were separated from others, but that in which we were most one with others; that which was not a part of our structure, but something that was higher than physical structure, something which used physical structure for its ends, something which, so far as we knew, did not live, did not exist, except where two or three are gathered together." If this sort of thing continues, the Freethinker will have to look to its laurels.

The old man Moyes, recently murdered at Liverpool, earned a living by selling Bibles. He couldn't have been less under the protection of Providence if he had earned a living by selling the Freethinker.

John Jones, sub-postmaster at Trealaw, in the Rhondda Valley, has been arrested on a charge of embezzlement to the extent of £1,000. The prisoner, who has been a Nonconformist deacon, thanked God that he had been a Christian for thirty years. He trusted God would have mercy upon him, and incline the hearts of the officials to pardon him. Nice man, John Jones!

The goody-goody paper which boasts the title of Great Thoughts gives, in its issue for March 2, a portrait of Pierre Joseph Proudhon. But there is no hint that the Father of Anarchism was a Freethinker, though his saying, Dieu c'est le mal, was almost as famous as La propriété c'est le vol. This is the more notable as the writer of the paper upon him is the Rev. S. E. Keeble, who says: "Proudhon's life was strictly moral and upright. He appears to have been singularly free from personal immorality, an affectionate husband, a true friend, an upright man, free from feelings of personal hatred against any man." After this it might have astonished the Christian readers to be told he was an Atheist.

Mr. E. Thornton has been stating in the Church Times that in London shops and factories, out of 2,000, 1,000, and 700 men, only two or three are found to go to church or chapel. The statement has provoked a revival of the oft-discussed question why working men do not go to church, to which so many answers have been given without bringing them any nearer to the house of God. Perhaps the causes mentioned by the Rev. F. L. Donaldson are as amusing as any. They are "carnality, conceit, and Calvinism."

Digitized by Google

It appears from the second annual report of the Liberator Relief Fund that there are on the books of the Fund 2,472 victims of that sanctimonious fraud, their losses amounting to £700,000. Most of them were people of small means, who, misled by the pious aspect of the scheme, thought to have treasure above and increase their possessions here at the same time. After much has been done for their relief, hundreds of the sufferers still have the workhouse staring them in the face.

Christians, conveniently forgetting the past of their faith, which has been found compatible with the most atrocious forms of persecution, war, and slavery, put it forward as synonymous with all that is humane. They should read the series of articles in the Law Times on the history of punishment, and they would discover that in the palmy days of Christianity its professors were as inhumane and remorseless as North American Indians or South Sea Islanders. No Christian expressed pity when, in the reign of Henry VIII., Richard Mekins, a boy of fifteen, was publicly burned for "heresy," or even when a woman was boiled to death in Smithfield, in the middle of the sixteenth century.

As late as 1812 Daniel Isaac Eaton, then aged sixty, was placed in the public pillory, a punishment which often meant the violence of the mob, as well as the torture of the instrument, for having published Paine's Age of Reason. Fortunately, the populace was sympathetic, and a ballad in his honor was sold round the pillory. The sentence, however, excited the indignation of Shelley, and evoked his spirited Letter to Lord Ellenborough.

We have already referred to the shameful boycott of Mr. Foote's lecture for the Humanitarian League on "The Shadow of the Sword." We now invite our readers to look at an opposite picture. On Sunday afternoon St. James's Hall was crowded. The Daily News says 8,000 people were present, but that is nonsense. Still, it was a large meeting, and it was held under the auspices of the West London Mission. The speakers included Sir John Hutton, chairman of the London County Council, the Rev. Alderman Fleming Williams, and the Rev. Dr Clifford. The boss of the show was the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes. It does not matter that he is a convicted liar. He is in the swim; he is respectable. Nor does it matter that Mr. Foote exposed the lie. He is out of the swim; he is a naughty Freethinker; and he must be boycotted.

According to the report in the Daily Chronicle, the Rev. Fleming Williams expressed himself in a fashion which he professed to disdain when he had that friendly discussion with Mr. Foote at the Hall of Science. Speaking of the project of breaking London up into twelve municipalities, he said that this "involved consequences as black with Atheism and as foul with iniquity as anything outside hell."

We acquit Mr. Williams of meaning anything particular by this, except that, as a Progressive alderman, he hated the policy of the Moderates. Logic is not his strong point, and we do not expect it of him. At the same time, it would be well for him to be a little less wild in his utterances. He knows that he had no sort of right to bring in "Atheism" in this connection. The Atheists in London are almost to a man Progressives, and the party of reaction is almost entirely composed of rather ostentatious Christians. Mr. Williams should give this fact his careful attention, instead of dragging in "Atheism" to please the bigotry of the Methodist groundlings at St. James's Hall.

"Outside hell" is a good mouthful, and Mr. Williams loves big phrases. But, as the Yankees say, what the hell did he mean by it? The sentence implies that there is fouler Atheism in hell than outside it. Perhaps there is. Mr. Williams may be a better authority on hell than we are. But is he a better authority than the Bible? And does not the Bible say that "the devils also believe and tremble"? The natural inference from this is that there is no Atheism in hell. Mr. Williams, however, asserts otherwise; and we leave him to settle the matter with the Holy Ghost.

Dr. Clifford made a very unfortunate historical reference. He said that the Progressives should go forward in the spirit of the Crusaders, who cried "God wills it." Yes, that was indeed their cry; and what did they do on the strength of it? They went forward plundering, torturing, ravishing, and massacreing—like the vilest set of ruffians ever let loose upon the world. It is to be hoped that the Progressives will not fall under the same spiritual influences. The fact is, Dr. Clifford was like Alderman Williams; he did not think beyond the exigency of the moment; otherwise he would have let the Crusaders rest in their unhallowed graves.

"That ridiculous Daily News" was an expression in our first leading article last week. Of all the London newspapers, this highly respectable organ of official Liberalism was the only one that gave no report whatever of the Hall of Science libel case. The Daily News has always pursued these ostrich tactics. It treats as non-existent what it does not like to recognise. For a long while it affected not to know that there was such a person as Charles Bradlaugh. It kept up the affectation until its own public laughed at its absurdity. When the whole country "stunk of Bradlaugh," as the Tories put it, the Daily News readers opened its pages and could never see his name. In the same way, Mr. Foote's name has been systematically excluded from the reports of meetings, even when he was one of the principal speakers. The Daily News has an unconquerable aversion to anything and everybody connected with Freethought.

A week or two ago the Daily News gave a very appreciative review of M. Fouillée's biography of M. Guyau, in which it lavishly praised the latter's power of thought, fine imagination, and grace of style. But not a word suggested that he was a Freethinker, and the author of a striking book on The Irreligion of the Future. Of course the silence was not due to ignorance. The writer knew his subject well enough. He was obliged to be reticent. Freethought is tabooed by the editor. He cannot "abide" it. Like Macbeth, he exclaims, "Come in any other form but that!"

"A Stupid Boy," who is really very different, writes a jocular letter in the Eastern Daily Press on the Bible teaching he suffered in his youth at a Church school. The chief thing he recollects is the schoolmaster, who was very muscular, and who wielded the cane most effectually. After the schoolmaster comes the parson:—

> His coat so sleek and buttony,
> His cheeks so smug and muttony.

The authorities up in Springfield have intercepted a package sent thither from China. It was ostensibly a book, but on being opened it was found that the leaves had been cut out and a gorgeous silk handkerchief, of dutiable value, was smuggled therein. The sad thing about it is that it was sent by a converted Oriental to a Springfield missionary.—Boston Herald.

The Tablet notices Mr. Balfour's book so favorably that it evidently thinks that in denouncing Rationalism he is preparing others for the road to Rome, even if he is not sufficiently logical to take that road himself.

A bishop with £8,000 a year can hardly be expected to be in favor of Disestablishment, but it is a notable sign of the times that the Bishop of Durham should address a letter to his diocese on the subject, in which, among much other questionable matter, he states that, if the Church be disendowed, the heaviest losses will fall on the poor. Nonsense, bishop. The fact is, that the poor might then resume their right to the tithes, and the national property now devoted to the Church might provide the whole of the aged poor with pensions.

Digitized by Google

Representatives of Burial Boards, in different parts of the country, have waited on the Home Secretary and represented to him that the clergy in many cases made excessive charges on account of graves, monuments, tombstones, etc., in the consecrated portions of cemeteries and burial grounds provided out of the public rates. The public were at the expense of providing those places, and the clergy rendered no service for the charges made.

Mr. T. E. Page writes to the Times that, in consequence of the head-mastership of public schools being given to clericals, those posts are occupied by persons who, at the university, would not be considered worthy of a college lectureship. He says: "That this should be so is a scandal to education; but it is men like the Bishop of London who are mainly responsible. They know that teaching is not a necessary appanage of the clerical profession; but they prefer to keep it so, no matter at what cost of public detriment."

A big Missionary meeting was recently held at Dr. Parker's City Temple. Mr. H. M. Bompas, Q.C., who presided, tried to stir up young men and women to take part in missionary work, and to push the Gospel of Christ with the energy displayed in pushing English commerce all over the world. While this gentleman was exhorting his hearers to go and convert the heathen, thousands of people were living in poverty, squalor, and degradation within a mile of the place where he was speaking. Christianity, thy name is (or should be)—Hypocrisy!

The next speaker was the Rev. R. P. Ashe, of the Church Missionary Society. This gentleman was very eloquent over the change that Christianity has produced in Uganda. He admitted the melancholy business of the fighting, says the Daily News report, but he appeared to find some subtle consolation in the fact that the machine guns were made by European Christians. Guns or no guns, the Bible was being read in Uganda, and there was liberty of conscience—at least for the missionaries. Mr. Ashe forgot to say, however, how soon, in his opinion, the natives of Uganda would be exterminated. The guns, the rum, and peculiar Christian diseases, will probably send them to kingdom come, and leave their soil free for the occupation of the missionaries' friends.

Fred Douglass, the runaway slave, and afterwards the eloquent champion of the black race in America, is just dead, and the Christian newspapers are gushing over his grave. It would be more honorable, and perhaps more profitable, if they reflected on the old attitude of Christians in general to slavery, before it was condemned by the conscience of civilisation. Fred Douglass once delivered a lecture in the town where Colonel Ingersoll resided, and after the lecture he walked the streets because no hotel would afford him accommodation. When this outrage came to the ears of the "infidel," he sallied out into the streets and took the "nigger" to his own house. No wonder that Douglass spoke of Ingersoll on public platforms as the eloquent friend of the downtrodden blacks.

The Rev. Conrad Haney has too much of the man after God's own heart in his composition. In 1879, while pastor of a Methodist flock in Sherman, Texas, his admiration of other men's wives made him conspicuous, and he was obliged to seek fresh woods and pastures new. Recently he has had to skedaddle from Chicago, where he saved souls in the Lake Avenue Evangelical Church. He has gone off with a Mrs. Brandt, leaving his own wife and children destitute. No doubt he will turn up in another part of the Lord's vineyard, and find there another Bathsheba.

What knowest thou, man, of life? and yet, for ever twixt the womb, the grave,
Thou pratest of the coming life, of heaven and hell thou fain must rave.

The world is old, and thou art young; the world is large, and thou art small;
Cease, atom of a moment's span, to hold thyself an all-in-all.

—Hajji Abdú El-Yezdí.

THE HALL OF SCIENCE LIBEL CASE.

(Continued from p. 125.)

Mr. John Snow, one of the defendants, was then examined by Mr. Rawlinson. He said he was a publisher and bookseller, carrying on business in Ivy Lane, London. His name appeared on the pamphlet.

As a matter of fact, what connection had you with the production of the pamphlet?—I am merely agent for the sale of the pamphlet.

That is a common practice in your trade, I think?—It is.

You receive so many copies from the printers, and sell them and account to the proprietors?—Yes.

On what terms do you receive them?—I sell them at a commission of 5 per cent.

That is all the connection you had with the production of these pamphlets?—Yes.

Before this action was brought had you ever heard of Mr. Smith?—Never heard of his name before.

I need hardly ask you whether you had any feeling of any sort against him?—None.

You knew that this pamphlet was a reproduction of what had already been published in some other paper?—Yes.

It also appears that it is a verbatim report of what occurred at Leeds?—Yes, certainly.

So far as you were concerned, had you any knowledge at all even of the existence of this paragraph in the middle of the pamphlet?—Not until I received a letter from the plaintiffs' solicitor.

The Judge: What is the date of that?

Mr. Rawlinson: 6th April, 1894. (To witness) In that letter there was no indication to you as to what part of the pamphlet was complained of?—None whatever.

And no suggestion that Mr. Smith was in any way connected with the Hall of Science, which it now appears he is connected with?—No.

And at that time had you any idea of what was complained of in the pamphlet?—None.

Now since this action was brought have you, through your solicitor, collected a large number of different papers, Secular or otherwise, having reference to the conduct of Secular halls at Leeds?—Yes.

Amongst others have you received a copy of a review called the Secular Review?

Mr. Walton: How is this evidence, passages which may have appeared in other contemporaneous papers?

Mr. Rawlinson: In this way. The question here is whether or not the audience who heard this remark would apply it to the Leeds or London hall. I venture to submit it is evidence of a discussion which appeared in the Secular papers published by people who held the same line of thought, to show, as a matter of common notoriety, it was a subject which had been under discussion between Christian and Secular debaters shortly before the time of the speech complained of. I propose to bring a large number of papers to show the Leeds question had been discussed, and it was a matter of public interest at the time, and therefore to ask the jury to hold that when the speaker referred to a hall, speaking at Leeds, he referred to a hall in Leeds, and not in London.

Mr. Walton: It is a very simple issue. The question is whether Mr. Powell said this having reference to a building in Leeds. That could be proved by calling persons who heard it and the person who spoke it, and proved by giving a description of the building in Leeds, which would answer the description given in this article. It is not proved by throwing in a large armful of newspapers and saying, If you look at them you will see the speech discussed.

Mr. Rawlinson: I propose to show that the speech on conduct at Leeds was the subject of public discussion.

The Judge: You don't find in the pamphlet that it was a subject of discussion.

Mr. Rawlinson: Up to that time it was an important subject of discussion; and in the pamphlet itself it was also the subject of discussion.

Mr. Walton: Your lordship has already ruled upon that point.

The Judge: You cannot put papers forward as evidence of what took place in Leeds. There is surely another way of getting it.

Mr. Rawlinson: I don't care what took place at Leeds.

The Judge: You have got a faint denial from the plaintiff of having heard that some scandal had taken place at Leeds. Had not you better be content?

Mr. Rawlinson: I am showing that this subject was under discussion between the parties during all these years, and that it was referred to by these gentlemen on that occasion. That is the line of my argument. Of course it is a very loose description on page 29 of the pamphlet. In other parts of the pamphlet the matter is put more accurately. I don't know that I can put it any further than that.

The Judge: You have got the pamphlet there, and if you can find a case in that, so much the better.

Digitized by Google

Mr. RAWLINSON: Then I will deal with the pamphlet, and I shall hope to alter your lordship's mind, to a certain extent, so as to show what I mean. I submit I am entitled to prove what he was referring to.

Mr. WALTON: He describes it, not as having happened at a Hall of Science, but at the North-street Hall, Leeds; but that was in his first speech.

Mr. RAWLINSON: I submit it is the same subject.

The JUDGE: Then you are met with the same difficulty. If you can call somebody who is able to tell us what happened, all very well; but at present it is like asking to put in a copy of the Times, and saying you are not going to call any witnesses, asking me to believe everything in it.

Mr. RAWLINSON: If it was a subject of ordinary interest, I should be entitled to read articles in publications which appear to show that it was an article of public interest. Here I am asking your lordship to allow me to read a matter which must have been known to the Secularists at the time.

The JUDGE: Already you have got proved by the plaintiff that something had taken place at Leeds, and that the matter had been discussed in his presence. You have got that. Mr. Smith says himself he was present when the report of the trial was discussed.

Mr. RAWLINSON: I was wishing to tell your lordship what the nature of the scandal was.

Witness was then cross-examined by Mr. Walton.

I understand, Mr. Snow, you publish numerous publications of this class?—Yes.

Do you publish a paper called the Anti-Infidel?—I do.

With your name upon the face of it?—Yes.

And I think you were the first in the pages of the Anti-Infidel to give this discussion to the world?—The proprietor, Mr. Bradlaugh, was.

I am speaking of you as publisher. You published it under your name; is that so?—The discussion was published in the Anti-Infidel.

Do I understand you to tell the jury you published that discussion in the newspaper, without troubling yourself to read it?—I did not read it.

The JUDGE: What had Mr. Bradlaugh to do with it?—He is the editor and proprietor.

Mr. WALTON: What is the circulation of the Anti-Infidel?—I sell about 2,000.

I did not ask you what you sold.—I only receive it from Mr. Bradlaugh on sale.

How many copies pass through the press?—I don't know. I am not the printer.

You have no idea?—No.

Not the remotest?—No.

The JUDGE: You did not print the pamphlet, I understand?—No.

The JUDGE: It was sent to you to sell, the same as the Anti-Infidel was?—Yes, on the same terms.

Mr. WALTON: It appeared in pamphlet form, with your name on frontispiece?—Yes.

Do you regard yourself as responsible for what appears under your name as publisher?—No.

Mr. RAWLINSON: That is a legal question which your lordship may have to decide later.

The JUDGE: If he does regard himself as liable, and he is not legally so, it won't hurt him to say he is.

Mr. WALTON: You tell that to the jury. You issue a pamphlet with your name on the front, and you do not consider yourself responsible for having given it to the world?—I am responsible for the copies I sell, of course.

Are you responsible for allowing your name as publisher to appear on the document for its contents?—Responsible for the name appearing.

Before you allowed your name to appear on this, do I understand you did not trouble to read it?—I did not see it before it was put on.

Your attention was called to it by the solicitor later?—It was.

That was a serious letter?—It was.

Did it complain that this pamphlet contained a serious libel both upon Mr. Smith as the manager of the Hall of Science, and upon the National Secular Hall Society, Limited?—I don't think the letter did.

Let me read it; perhaps you did not read it?—I did read it.

Mr. WALTON (reading): "I have received instructions from the National Secular Hall Society, Limited, and from Mr. Owen Smith, the late manager of the Hall of Science, to commence an action against you and the printer for certain defamatory libels." Did you, after you got the letter, take the trouble to read the document?—I did.

Did you come across the passage in question?—I did not notice it particularly when I received the letter.

When did you first notice it?—On the receipt of the writ.

Did you answer the letter?—No, because I thought I had better see the proprietor of the pamphlet first.

When you did read the passage, did you think it a very shocking libel on somebody?—I thought it was a libel on the Hall of Science.

In London?—Well, I did not know where it was.

Do you really tell the jury that?—I do.

You are the publisher of the Anti-Infidel and similar literature, and did not know where it was?—No; I had never seen it.

Did you know it was in London?—I knew there was one in London.

Did you know it was the one in London that was suing you?—I did not suppose anything about it.

Did you say you did not form any opinion?—No.

Did you think it was any other Hall of Science in London?—I did not know.

You did not know which it was?—No.

And you did not trouble to inquire?—I went to see Mr. Bradlaugh.

Did you ascertain from him that it was any other hall than the one in London that was referred to?—No.

You thought, then, it was the Hall of Science in London?—I thought it might be.

And was no other?—Well, I knew of the hall in Leeds.

Did you think that the one referred to?—I thought it quite possible?

You swear that?—I do.

Then you thought it did not refer to the plaintiffs?—I thought not.

When you were served with a writ?—Yes.

That you swear?—Yes.

Then, having come to the conclusion that this did not refer to the plaintiffs at all, did you write and tell them so?—No.

Why not?—Because I saw Mr. Bradlaugh.

I am not speaking of what you said to Mr. Bradlaugh, but of what you said to these gentlemen complaining of the libel?—I said nothing.

Why not?—Because I did not know him. (Laughter.)

You think that is a serious answer?—I do.

And you tell the jury you thought it did not refer to him?—I put the matter in the hands of my solicitor.

I see. Did you continue to publish the Anti-Infidel after the action had begun?—Certainly.

Did you happen to have been publishing it in May and June, 1894?—Yes.

In May and June, 1894, you were strongly of opinion that this did not refer to the plaintiffs who were suing you?—I cannot say what happened in May and June. This was in April.

Did you change your opinion before May, 1894, as to whom the libel referred to?—No.

Then you thought it did not refer to the plaintiffs?—I thought so.

Will you tell the jury, if you did not think the action referred to the plaintiffs, how you came, in May, 1894, to publish a letter containing this passage: "The fact that Mr. G. W. Foote can only bring forward one solitary paragraph on which he thinks it even possible to base an action is a tacit admission on his part that every other charge concerning the filthy and immoral literature issued from the Secular press, and the vile conduct and practices of Secularists themselves, has been proved up to the hilt. When the case comes before the court the evidence lacking in the involved paragraph will be forthcoming, and then the charges will be proved up to the hilt"? How came you, if you thought in May, 1894, that this paragraph did not refer to the plaintiffs at all, to publish a statement that you were going to prove the charges up to the hilt?—Mr. Bradlaugh wrote that; I did not.

You published it. Do you mean to say you did not read that?—No; I don't mean to say so.

And do you mean to tell the jury you allowed these gentlemen to come into court under the impression that the libel referred to them, without having in any way sought to correct that opinion? You know now, perfectly well, it refers to them?—It was only my opinion.

Have you any doubt about it?—Oh yes.

Do you suggest there is no Hall of Science in London?—No, there was one.

In 1879?—I cannot say what year.

Did you ever hear of a Hall of Science in Leeds, so-called?—Yes.

The National Secular Hall is referred to in this libel. Is there any Hall of Science in Leeds the headquarters of the Society?—I don't know.

Can you suggest any Hall of Science in the United Kingdom which can be described as the headquarters of the Secularists, except that managed by Mr. Smith?—I cannot suggest any.

Or any situated, as that is, near a lunatic asylum?—I don't know where it is situated.

Inasmuch as this Hall of Science is a Hall of Science in London, and inasmuch, therefore, as Mr. Smith manages it and conducts it, you now understand that the passage refers to him?—He says it does.

Have you any doubt?—Oh yes.

If what he says is true, it must?—Yes.

Have you offered any retractation or apology yourself?—No, I have not.

Are you indemnified in respect of damages and costs?—Yes.

Digitized by Google

Re-examined by Mr. RAWLINSON: My learned friend has asked you about the Hall of Science in Leeds in 1878. Did you know when it was shut up?—I can't say from my own knowledge.

Only from what you have read?—Yes.

The JUDGE: Is it shut up?—It is, I believe.

Mr. WALTON: There is no such building, and never was.

Mr. RAWLINSON: There was a Secular Hall.

Mr. WALTON: There is this hall in North-street, Leeds; but it has not this description. It was not called the Hall of Science. I am instructed that that is a malicious and malignant fabrication.

Mr. RAWLINSON: The Secular Hall was the one I asked about. You can, if desired, tell what has become of the hall in Leeds?

Mr. WALTON: My friend is not entitled to that.

The JUDGE: You are both knocking your heads against a brick wall. One of you refers to the Secular Hall, and the other to the Hall of Science.

Mr. RAWLINSON: I was only going to ask the date.

The JUDGE: Mr. Walton says there is no Hall of Science at Leeds.

Mr. Cook, the second defendant, was then called, and said he was the printer of this pamphlet.

Were you instructed to print it in the ordinary course of your business?—Yes.

At the time you printed it did you know of this paragraph, the subject-matter of this action, being in at all?—I did not.

It was printed as a reprint of what had been in the Anti-Infidel?—Yes.

And that was a copy of a report of a meeting held at Leeds?—Yes.

You never heard of Mr. Smith before this action?—No.

Cross-examined by Mr. WALTON: Are you indemnified too, are you in that happy position?—Yes.

Damages and costs?—I don't know.

Which?—I don't know.

Both?—I don't know.

Which do you think? (Laughter.)

The JUDGE: Have not you got what you want, Mr. Walton?

Mr. WALTON: I think so.

Mr. RAWLINSON then addressed the jury for the defence. He said: I shall detain you a very short time in summing up the evidence laid before you. The point which my learned leader, Mr. Murphy, made when he addressed you is one which I think is certainly worthy of your consideration. The main question for you is, Was this remark, which was made by Mr. Powell, reasonably to be understood as referring to the London Hall of Science, or was it referring to a Secular hall in Leeds, about which scandals had arisen. And a prosecution had taken place shortly before the date referred to in the pamphlet? I do call your attention most carefully to this. As appears from the pamphlet, these two disputants, Mr. Powell and Mr. Fisher, made alternate speeches. Mr. Powell first made a speech, and Mr. Fisher replies at some length. Mr. Powell again replies on him, and so the combat is carried on. In his first speech Mr. Powell opened the case against Secularism in great detail, and in that opening, one very short part of which I shall read to you, he deals in detail with the charges of disgusting conduct against the National Secular Hall at Leeds. There is not the slightest doubt as to what he is referring. When he refers to the "rotten proceedings" at the National Secular Hall, he is obviously referring to the scandal which was well known to his audience, because he does not go into detail. Mr. Fisher then makes a speech of some length, and then Mr. Powell has the reply upon him, and it is in the second speech that this paragraph occurs. If it was meant to have referred to the London hall, you would have found it set out in his first speech. As it is, you find it in the second speech, which is a continuance merely of his first speech. He puts his case in his first speech, and details very shortly the proceedings which occurred before the Leeds magistrates, and then goes on to the Elements of Social Science. In his second speech he again refers, as I submit, to the Leeds Hall in the paragraph complained of, then reverts to the Elements of Social Science. My friend very properly objects when I want to put in the Leeds Daily News, because it is not the Daily Standard, so I cannot show you to what this libel refers. It is spoken by a man who is summing up his case replying to Fisher. He has identified the hall before in detail, and he sums it up, saying: "If you doubt me, look at the Daily Standard of August 11, '79." There is no such paper, and so you are asked to take the words verbatim, and say, if you take the man as having spoken exactly what he knew, you cannot have the slightest doubt it applied to the National Secular Hall in London, and it was impossible to apply them to the hall in Leeds. The point I wish to make here is this: Mr. Fisher, one of the disputants, was a member of the Council of the National Secular Society. He went down to speak as representing the Secular Society to that extent. He was a member of the committee, fighting their side of the case. After this remark had been made he had a reply, and he made full use of his opportunity and entered fully into the reply. If he had thought it applied to the London hall, would not he have replied at once and said: "What a scandalous lie you have told? There has never been a suggestion against the London Hall of Science. There has never been a suggestion that the Hall of Science allowed unnatural offences to take place in their hall"? He was in Leeds; he was present there carrying on the dispute. If he thought it meant London and not Leeds, would he not have answered it? Of course he would; but he does not, because he knows perfectly well it has been referred to properly in the first speech, and he knew what was being referred to—the hall at Leeds. If he had, the answer would have been: "We know the class of thing that went on there; we know what came out before the magistrates." I am entitled to use that as a fair argument here. My learned friend has suggested that I ought to call Mr. Powell. As a matter of fact, we cannot call him to help us in this matter. He is not helping us; but why does not my learned friend call Greaves Fisher, the member of the National Secular Society who took part in the debate, and who did not answer the charge. He must have known perfectly well to what hall it referred, and the whole facts of the case. Why is he not called? My friend comes down here and defends, with the ardor which is perfectly right, the idea that anything could be meant about Leeds instead of London. Why does he not call Mr. Fisher to come and say, "I knew he meant the Leeds hall"? Remember that my friend has opened the case saying they had no idea of the case they had to meet. The defence, in this matter, was put in on June 4, 1894, and that defence was this: "They admit that the words set out in the complaint were printed and published by them; but they deny that the said words had any reference to the plaintiff, either in reference to the position as alleged, or at all." Could you expect a clearer denial than that? We have said from the beginning that this does not refer to the plaintiff at all. Greaves Fisher must have known it never referred to them, and he did not reply on it. It was not until it was printed by Cook and published by Mr. Snow that the action was brought against us. My friend has made a very strong point about why we did not answer that solicitor's letter more fully before the action was brought. Can he suggest any sort of answer we could have made? We know that Mr. Powell had not been attacked in the matter; that no action had been brought against him. He had spoken the words complained of, and could have been attacked. They knew we had done it at the request of Mr. Bradlaugh, the proprietor of the Anti-Infidel. We are the first to get the solicitor's letter. What possible answer could have been sent to that? A great point has been made that no answer was made to it; but what sort of reply was there to a solicitor's letter of that kind? Does it request an apology or withdrawal? Does it tell us what part of the pamphlet of forty pages was complained of? Never a word suggested as to what the libel complained of was. Never a suggestion it was that passage subsequently taken out and put in the statement of claim. Never a suggestion that it applied to Mr. Smith as manager of the hall. The answer is obvious: we cannot, because we don't know what part we are attacked about. The letter does not ask for an apology or withdrawal, but simply says: "I wish to have the address of solicitors to accept service on your behalf, and if you do not send it I will serve you personally with a writ." I can only say that my friend must be consciously hard driven when he had to come to such a complaint against the defendant in this case. Directly he puts in his defence he says: "I admit I published the words, but they do not refer to you, either in your position as manager of the hall or refer to you in any way." What more can my friend wish for than that? Have we had a chance from beginning to end of more clearly expressing our case than we have to-day, and in our defence? Now, I have put the simple facts before you. I don't think anything the plaintiff has done here will make you think he is entitled to large damages in this matter. Do you think his character has been seriously affected? They all knew the attack was made in Leeds, and the whole subject of the controversy was in Leeds; and do they mean to say the plaintiff was damaged at all, looking at all the circumstances? Further than that, are there any matters in the conduct of the defendants which make you think they ought to pay larger damages than they ought to if they are wrong? Both the defendants knew nothing at all about the libel before it was put in print. They were very negligent, and possibly they ought to have read it before they put it in. But I say there is nothing which defendants have done which should lead you in any way to unduly press the case against them. The last topic of prejudice is this: They have been indemnified; and, it is suggested, by Mr. Bradlaugh, on whose behalf they were published. If you think that is a topic which you ought to take into account, by all means do so. But the main question is: Did the audience who heard the statements, and the persons who read them, not know perfectly well from the context, and from the fact that Fisher did not reply in any way to the charge—must they not have known that the real sting of the libel was against the Leeds hall, and had no reference to the London hall, still less to Mr. Smith, whom nobody ever heard of?

(Continued on page 185.)

Digitized by Google

Mr. Foote's Engagements.

Sunday, March 3, Secular Hall, New Church-road, Camberwell-road, S.E.:—7.30, "God is Dead."

March 9, Ryhope; 10, Sunderland; 17, Nottingham; 24, Bristol.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Mr. Charles Watts's Engagements.—March 3, Manchester; 17 and 24, Hall of Science, London; 31, Newcastle-on-Tyne. April 7, Sheffield.—All communications for Mr. Watts should be sent to him (if a reply is required, a stamped and addressed envelope must be enclosed) at 81 Effra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

Lecture Notices must reach 28 Stonecutter-street by first post Tuesday, or they will not be inserted.

J. G. Fisher.—You are quite right. The libellous pamphlet referred to the North-street Hall, Leeds, on p. 8, and the utterance on p. 29 about "headquarters" is, as you say, in every respect additional and distinct. This is dwelt upon in Mr. Walton's speech, which we give this week in the second half of our verbatim report of the trial.

J. K. Maagaard.—Thanks for your interesting letter. You are quite right in exercising a certain discretion. But a leader's position is necessarily different. If he knows a moment's fear, he is unfit to lead at all. In fighting bigots, liars, persecutors, and libellers, he must take Danton's motto: "De l'audace, et encore de l'audace, et toujours de l'audace."

C. Harwood, 4 Wingmore-road, Church-road, Tottenham, is the new secretary of the Edmonton Branch. Mr. Patten has been obliged, for domestic reasons, to resign the office.

T. E. M.—Pleased to receive your congratulations on the result of the libel action.

H. Gillett.—The amount claimed as damages in a libel suit is little else than a formality. It is usually fixed by the lawyers.

W. Simons.—Thanks for cutting. See paragraphs.

Mr. John Payne, 6 Heavily-grove, Horwich, Lancs, will send, to any Branch willing to pay carriage, twenty-four dozen of mixed Freethinkers and National Reformers, for distribution.

Inquirer.—Mr. Foote caught a nasty cold, but he nursed himself carefully, and got better. Mr. Watts caught a bad cold too, but he too is nearly himself again. Mr. Parris has been unwell for some weeks. Mr. Moss had a bad fortnight's bronchitis, but is now able to follow his vocation, though he has to be careful. Secularists are just like Christians—liable to the ills that flesh is heir to—especially in bitter weather.

N.S.S. Benevolent Fund.—Miss E. M. Vance acknowledges:—C. J. Pottage, 10s.

New Reader.—If you read the report in our last number carefully, you will see that all our witnesses in the Hall of Science libel case affirmed, instead of swearing.

A. B. Moss.—Glad to hear of your recovery. Be careful for some time.

H. Jones.—Pleased to have your congratulations. There is too much truth in your remark that "All the rascality of the churches seems to filter down into the slime of Christian Evidences."

P. Sabine.—See paragraph. Many thanks.

W. Owen.—Success atoones for a lot of trouble. We hope to teach some other rascals a lesson before we have finished.

E. D. H. Daly.—Thanks for cuttings.

J. T. Ives.—We cannot print a list of all the apocryphal books in this column. You can obtain a copy of the New Testament Apocrypha for half-a-crown, and the Old Testament Apocrypha for less.

London Secular Federation.—Miss Annie Brown acknowledges:—Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Lupton, 5s.; H. A. Lupton, 5s.

Implacable.—Any persons who now circulate the libel on the Hall of Science, either by sale or gratuitously, can be prosecuted under the criminal law, and sent to prison if found guilty. We beg our readers to send us immediate information if they learn of any continued circulation of the libel.

Mr. Foote's Fighting Fund.—W. Owen, 2s.

Papers Received.—Manchester City News—Eastern Daily Press—Der Arme Teufel—Secular Thought—Ironclad Age—Progress—Toronto Globe—Boston Investigator—Newcastle Daily Leader—Puck—Travel—Open Court—Liberator—South Wales Echo—Freethinkers' Magazine—Two Worlds—Newcastle Chronicle—Cambria Leader—Twentieth Century—Echo—Brisbane Telegraph—Nottingham Evening Express—Sheffield and Rotherham Independent—Liberty—Melbourne Age—Cape Times—Progressive Thinker—Irish Ecclesiastical Gazette.

Friends who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish to call our attention.

Letters for the Editor of the Freethinker should be addressed to 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

The Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the publishing office, post free, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 10s. 6d.; Half Year, 5s. 3d.; Three Months, 2s. 8d.

Scale of Advertisements.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—(Narrow Column) one inch, 3s.; half column, 15s.; column, £1 10s. Broad Column—one inch, 4s. 6d.; half column, £1 2s. 6d.; column, £2 5s. Special terms for repetitions.

Correspondence should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

It being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will receive the number in a colored wrapper when their subscription expires.

Orders for literature should be sent to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

SUGAR PLUMS.

The verbatim report of the Hall of Science libel case is concluded in this week's issue of the Freethinker. It is our intention to keep the case on permanent record. The report will be put into pamphlet form, with an introduction and notes, and a statement as to the Leeds affair which was so lied about in the trial. The pamphlet should be circulated by Secularists wherever they hear any slander against our movement.

Mr. Foote lectures this evening (March 3) in the Secular Hall, New Church-road, Camberwell, his subject being "God is Dead." On the following Saturday evening (March 9) he will lecture at Ryhope, and the next day (Sunday) at Sunderland, which he has not visited for a considerable time. The local Branch has engaged a large hall capable of holding three thousand people, for two lectures in the afternoon and evening. No doubt friends will come to Sunderland from the surrounding district, and help to fill the big building.

The Bristol Branch congratulates Mr. Foote on the success of the Hall of Science libel action, and hopes he will live long to continue his leadership of the Freethought party.

Last Sunday Mr. Charles Watts had excellent audiences at Newcastle, where he lectured three times. The opposition by local Christians was considerable. In the evening Mr. Lynn, the vice-president of the Christian Evidence Society in Newcastle, spoke for half-an-hour in an able and most gentlemanly manner. The audiences thoroughly enjoyed the discussion after each lecture. There was a great demand for the Freethinker, on account of the report of the trial.

To-day, Sunday, March 3, Mr. Watts lectures three times in Manchester, where we hope to hear that he has had good audiences.

This Saturday (March 2) the Failsworth Sunday School holds a tea party at 5, the proceeds of which will go towards defraying the expenses of the Whit-Friday procession. On Sunday Mr. Evans, of Burnley, lectures at 6.30.

Last year the National Secular Society's Almanack arrived when Mr. Symes was in New Zealand, and no notice of it appeared in the Liberator. This year the Almanack, edited by G. W. Foote and J. M. Wheeler, appears in a new and improved form, and is full of the most interesting matter. We have never been so pleased with it as in the present number. The price is 6d., but it is honestly worth double the money, and would be a capital shilling's worth. We wish it every success.—Liberator.

Professor H. D. Müller, of Vienna, has called attention, in his Studies in Ezekiel, to some suggestive parallels between the phrases of scripture and those found in cuneiform inscriptions. For instance, Assurbanipal records that certain persons were punished "according to the curses as many as were written in the writing of agreement" (see Deut. xxix. 21). Professor Müller thinks his many instances prove Hebrew indebtedness to Assyrian sources.

Hugh Price Hughes was the principal speaker at the anniversary meeting of the South London Mission on Monday evening, and the Camberwell Secularists thought they would go and hear him. A dozen members of the Branch committee armed themselves with three hundred copies of our "Atheist Shoemaker" pamphlet, which they distributed outside the chapel. One copy was carefully handed to H. P. H. as he went in. When the Secularists took their seats they were amused at seeing the audience busily reading the great man's exposure. After the great man's speech Mr. Sabine rose and asked if he might put a question; whereupon the great man, looking very chalky, nudged the chairman, who said, "No, no." Mr. Sabine, however, got out the explanation that his proposed question had reference to the great man's book about a converted Atheist. H. P. H. then left the meeting, leaving both the County Council candidates behind him.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinkers' Magazine gives as frontispiece a capital portrait of George Everitt Macdonald, brother and assistant to the editor of the Truthseeker. In the sketch accompanying the portrait George is described as the Prince of Good Fellows. Having read with interest his "Observations" in Freethought and the Truthseeker for many years, this is a statement we can well believe. His character shows in his portrait.

Mr. Maurice Russell, of the West Ham School Board, is standing for re-election. He is running, as before, on the "secular education" ticket, and it will be a misfortune if he does not retain his seat. We hope the local Freethinkers will work for his return as well as vote for him at the poll. Mr. Russell's committee rooms are at 33, High-street, Plaistow, and 61, West Ham-lane, Stratford.

Kingsland and district Freethinkers are requested to meet to-day (March 3) at 12 noon, at Mr. Davey's, 21, Castle-street, to make arrangements for carrying on the open-air propaganda at Ridley-road. Lecturers have already been engaged for almost every Sunday during the summer.

The East London Branch has just held its annual meeting. Mr. G. J. Warren, ever faithful and zealous, was reappointed honorary Secretary and Treasurer; a strong committee of seventeen was appointed, with Messrs. Loafer and Thorrington as auditors. It was decided to carry on the open-air work at Mile-end-waste from April to September. A resolution was passed expressing pleasure that the Hall of Science Club was to terminate on its present basis. It was also resolved to nominate London for the Conference in view of Mr. Putnam's intended visit.

THE HALL OF SCIENCE LIBEL CASE.

(Concluded from page 136.)

Mr. RAWLINSON (to the Judge): I do not know whether I ought to have taken the point as regards the question whether the publisher is liable. As Mr. Snow was merely a conduit pipe for the selling of the book, under a case which I will hand up, he would not therefore be liable, as he was in the position of a mere news-vendor. Where a publisher publishes, it is another thing; but here the evidence is that he simply received copies from the printer, to sell on commission.

The JUDGE: His name is put on them as publisher.

Mr. RAWLINSON: But that is only a custom of the trade. He certainly sold them on commission. If necessary, I will put the point before your lordship later.

Mr. WALTON then addressed the jury on behalf of the plaintiff. He said: I am not surprised that my learned friend has not more than once in the course of his speech referred to three persons who are before you in this litigation; and, before I advert to one or two material observations which, it occurs to me, I ought, on behalf of the plaintiff, to make, I think it would not be inadvisable to ask ourselves for a moment, Who is Mr. Smith? who are these two gentlemen in the position of defendants? Mr. Smith and his connection with the Hall of Science, referred to in this libel, has been made abundantly clear. My learned friend has had the opportunity of cross-examining Mr. Smith; and, with that opportunity, with the large license which the law gives him—with the little scruple which has characterised my learned friend's method in using that license, which you have witnessed—he has completely failed to discredit and disparage Mr. Smith; but my learned friend has had no instructions to suggest that Mr. Smith has not been a man of eminent respectability and of unimpeachable character, and who has borne himself honestly and honorably in all relations of life. It is perfectly true that Mr. Smith has what some of us would regard as a misfortune—not those religious opinions which many of us hold. But, except the fact that his religious opinions differ from those of the majority of us, there is no kind of suggestion that Mr. Smith is not moral and trustworthy in every relation of life. Mr. Smith has been connected with this building called the Hall of Science in a very intimate way. He helped to found it; and within those walls men of the most eminent character, men who lectured in the cause of Freethought, have lectured; men who, although they have suffered for their opinions, won the respect of the British people. These men here have had the opportunity—which I trust every man may be afforded in the light of day of expressing freely, to the people who thought them worth hearing, the views which they entertained. And it turns out further that Mr. Smith, through a long course of years, endeavored to make the Hall of Science a centre of education and instruction. He connected it with the Art and Science Classes of South Kensington. He had associated with him a clergyman of very free opinions, but of the very highest character—the Rev. Stewart Headlam, who was a member of the committee, and co-operated with him. He had, in addition, entertainments for the amusement of the young people who were members of his Society, and whose parents were connected with the movement; and in this way it is obvious that, in the actual conduct of these very classes, the foundation of the dancing academy, admission to which was by ticket, the regulation of these proceedings, the supervision, and the mode in which it was conducted, Mr. Smith is regarded by his own people—by the Secularists throughout the country—as a respectable person. Mr. Watts only told us what is obvious. He said: "I regard Mr. Smith as responsible in this matter." Mr. Smith of himself says: "I am responsible. I was actually present at these instructions, and actually superintended these very classes. A state of things such as that indicated would have been impossible without my knowledge, and could not have occurred without my authority"; and therefore Mr. Smith, with the long years of respectable character which he is bearing, comes face to face with these honorable and moral and honest men, who hold Freethought in relation to religion. Mr. Smith is compelled to come into court, and to challenge from them some sort of substantiation for this monstrous attack levelled against him. It is essential that Mr. Smith leaves this court to-day with your verdict, with damages marking your sense of the attack made against him, and his right to invite an expression of opinion against him. Who are the defendants? They have been put into the box, and, if they had to pay these damages and costs, I could understand why my learned friend should call them, and make an appeal ad misericordiam that you should take into consideration their own negligence and own general respectability in awarding that sum; but why they should be put forward when they are not the real defendants, and when the verdict will not involve them in any damages, when they are merely show defendants for the spirits that are stabbing in the dark, wreaking their malignity in the dark, and were not put into the box, gentlemen, it is very difficult to understand. Of course Mr. Cook is only the printer, and of course Mr. Snow is only the publisher, and your verdict will be a verdict against them. But through Cook and Snow you are hitting those men who, for aught I know, have been sitting here within sound of my voice, and who have put in motion the printing press which gave currency to this malignant attack, and who dare not answer for it and submit themselves to cross-examination. After Snow and Cook have told us they will not be affected by your verdict, you need give very little consideration to the sort of appeal which my learned friend has addressed to you. Even though they are the defendants, I fail to see how they can ask for any consideration in the matter of this action. Mr. Powell, the obscure person who goes from Liverpool and vanishes into the obscurity from which he emanated, might have been made a defendant in this action. What would have been said then? They would have said that what Mr. Powell stated he said in the heat of the moment, and it was an excess of zeal; and, therefore, he made a statement which, in calm moments, he would regret. It is these defendants who have given prominence to the libel. They have put it into the hands of every person interested in the matter throughout the kingdom, and they have professed to refer to a paper called the Daily Standard, which most men would understand referred to one of the most influential London papers. The defendants, who carelessly printed and carelessly published a document such as this, are not in a position to ask for any consideration from the jury when they have to do justice to the unfortunate man who may have been injured by the publication for which they are responsible. Now, let me consider for a moment how my learned friend, on behalf of the defendants, has sought to meet the case. I do not wonder at the line he has taken. I think I proved a true prophet in my opening. I ventured to predict what the real defence to the action was, and what the real tactics were which Mr. Murphy was instructed, on behalf of these persons, to pursue; and I do not wonder he tried to induce you to disregard the motive of justice, which is, perhaps, as sacred as any other motive in human nature, to disregard the motive of justice, because you disapprove of the opinions of the man who asks you for the justice of your verdict. My learned friend produces this book called The Elements of Social Science, and reads pages from it, and from the work of another Freethought writer; and he said to Mr. Smith, Are these the opinions of Freethought writers? are they your opinions? My learned friend knew perfectly well they are not the opinions of Mr. Smith, and he said so at once. He said: I am a Freethinker, and belong to the school which says that every man is entitled to speak and think freely on those subjects, and these are the opinions of honest men published in the light of day. It challenges the interference of society and the interference of the police, and neither society nor the police have interposed in any way to stop the dissemination of these books. We may dispute them and think them in error; but every person thinks differently. Here is a book which for forty years has been on public sale, being sold up and down the kingdom, dealing with matters of great importance, and it has never been challenged by any public authority, charged with the administration of the law in the matter. Mr. Smith says it is perfectly true it is sold on a bookstall which is licensed to a bookseller by the person who owns the Hall of Science in Old-street; but he is entitled to sell any books he likes. If they ought not to be sold, the police can interfere; but we simply let the man the bookstall, and he sells what books he likes, and Mr. Smith says it would be an impertinence to come forward and attempt to revise his list and proceed to make out an index of certain books which I, Mr. Smith, in the exercise of my superior wisdom, will not allow him to sell. That is an affair between the owner of the book shop and the police. And this book has laid on this bookstall for thirty or forty years without any sort of challenge. It is the kind of line by which my learned friend hopes to disparage Mr. Smith in your estimation. I think all of us draw a strong line between opinion and moral conduct. My learned friend would be the last man to say this was a country in which opinion ought not to be as free as air. There was a time when those who professed different religious opinions had no tolerance, even in courts of law, or in society; but, fortunately, the time has come when every man is entitled to express his views freely; and just as we give freedom to men for religious opinion, so we allow freedom to other opinions, conscious that the forces of orthodoxy are stronger than the forces of error; and therefore we need have no fear of error. Against Mr. Smith's moral conduct, and the character of all the men associated with him, there is not a suggestion in this case; and yet this libel is not a libel of his opinions, but of his conduct, because it alleges a condition of things which makes the best feelings of one's nature rise in revolt. It is not that he taught these lads Freethought; that he taught them to disregard the Divine Being; that he gave them his views about the future state; that he expounded the tenets of Secularism; but it is that he taught practices which can only be mentioned in order to be scouted in every society of human beings. It is not a matter of religion, depending on orthodoxy or heterodoxy of religious opinions; but it is a matter of ordinary common decency, in connection with which this libel has been published. What is the sort of defence which has been put forward? First we have what I may describe as the illegitimate defence; then we have the legitimate defence. The illegitimate defence I described, while my learned friend was cross-examining, as drawing a herring across the scent; and it has been admirably illustrated by the tactics in this case. We have had to deal with what occurred, in the year 1879, in connection with the Hall of Science in London; but my learned friend has sought to divert the whole of our attention to what occurred at a different place and at a different time; to what occurred, not in London, but in Leeds; not at the Hall of Science, but at the North-street Hall in Leeds; and my learned friend has suggested, in what is the most dangerous and the most illegitimate mode conceivable in a court of justice—he has suggested that these proceedings were in relation to obscene and improper conduct. The suggestion is absolutely false. There is not a tittle of evidence to support it. The only evidence is that given by Mr. Smith himself. He said he heard that certain proceedings had been taken against a place in North-street, Leeds; but what those proceedings were Mr. Smith had never heard. He never heard until this moment that they spoke of obscene conduct, or that the nature of the conduct was obscene; and, so far as Mr. Smith is aware, that prosecution was withdrawn. He never heard of a conviction as in fact having taken place, and Mr. Murphy would have been the first one to prove it.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Rawlinson: You ought not to say there was no conviction.

Mr. Walton: I say it was a charge of disorderly conduct. My learned friend is a lawyer, and knows that if, a publican allows dancing to take place in his house, he can be charged with keeping a disorderly house; and the prosecution against the Jockey Club at this moment is for disorderly conduct. My learned friend ought to be the last to make cheap capital out of the facts, because he knows perfectly well that, if you allow proceedings to take place on premises and you are not properly licensed, you are charged with allowing disorderly conduct to take place if you allow the public to take part.

Mr. Rawlinson: The proceedings were not against a licensed house.

Mr. Walton: I quite understand my learned friend's restlessness—(laughter)—and his anxiety to make up a case which cannot be proved by evidence of what took place. Where is the conviction—where is it? In the imagination of those who instruct my learned friend, in whom they have succeeded in infusing some of the spirit which seems to have characterised the proceedings on their part. Nothing would have been easier than to have called the police who laid the prosecution. Nothing could have been easier than to have put in the conviction; but we are told, and that is the whole evidence you are told by Mr. Smith, that the prosecution took place; but, so far as he knows, no conviction occurred, and if it occurred he would have been the first to hear of it. I say this effort to draw this question into a trial of what happened at Leeds, in another place, and for which other persons are responsible, is done in order to confuse your minds as to the real issue. That is the illegitimate defence, and, like all illegitimate defences, tries to establish itself by illegitimate means; and my learned friend, instead of bringing witnesses from Leeds to prove the facts, comes here with an armful of newspapers. A more irrelevant and and fruitless inquiry I cannot imagine. These papers, some of which have been raked up from the cellars of the British Museum, he wants to scatter around, and create a confusion as to what we have to try. I am perfectly certain if any witnesses came up from Leeds we should have listened to them with the greatest respect; but, as there is no substance in this sort of suggestion, they have endeavored to infuse into these proceedings an animus which can only have been introduced to confuse your minds. What is the real defence? It is that this was not spoken of the Hall of Science in London at all, but spoken of the Hall of Science in Leeds. In the first place, that defence would have been established by calling two or three witnesses. It would have been established by calling the speaker of this at the discussion, who would have told us what hall he was referring to, and by calling the people to whom he was speaking; but, instead of calling them, they leave you to imagine that this description applies to a hall in Leeds. If you look at it, there is no Hall of Science in Leeds at all. The only Hall of Science out of London is the one at Sheffield. It is true the Secularists have a hall at Leeds, but they don't call it the Hall of Science. But this is referred to as the headquarters of the Secularists, which is in Old-street. Then you have a reference to a newspaper called the Daily Standard, which is not produced, but the Leeds Daily News is attempted to be set up as the one meant. Such efforts are only the sort of devices which we expect from persons having a hopeless case. Now how is this case met, because that is the real question for your consideration? It is obvious they know perfectly well (both Snow and Cook) the very serious nature of this libel. The solicitor's letter has been read, and when that letter was received I should have thought that one course—and only one course—could be pursued by honorable men anxious not to do injustice to anyone. Honorable men in a matter of this kind would be most anxious not to do an injustice to people against whom a prejudice was entertained, because there are some men of whom if you say a foul thing it does not matter, because no one believes it; but if a man happens to be a Secularist, there are a great many evil-minded men who will believe it. And the defendants knew this was being said of persons who were Secularists. If they were anxious to act honorably, they would have been the first to repudiate the libel and make reparation. Mr. Snow said he thought it did not refer to the plaintiff. Why did not he write so at once and say they were mistaken, withdraw it, and offer an apology? Because he had those behind him, those who had indemnified him, and were putting him forward to bring this into court to satisfy their fanatical prejudice. Instead of that, Mr. Snow published a letter, signed under the name of the man he represented, and those who were supporting him in the matter, which contains this passage: "When the case comes into court we will not say, 'It is not true what it was I said about you': we will not say, 'It is a mistake,' and ask the jury to give as little damages as they can, because we are poor printers and publishers. Not that sort of defence at all. But, when it comes before the court, the evidence lacking will be forthcoming, and that charge, like others, will be proved up to the hilt." So that we get, until the last moment, when they are anxious to save their skins—we get the language of bluster. "It is true. Take us into court, and we will prove it. You did give this instruction. You (the plaintiff) are responsible for the Hall of Science, where it took place. We shall prove it, and publish it to the world; and kind friends will come forward with their subscriptions, and we will fight under the flag of truth." Now, instead of fighting under the flag of truth, they are skulking and crawling away, and making piteous appeals to the jury. I should have had some respect if they had stuck to their guns, and, having got the public money, had tried to prove their case, and failed. But, having got it under this brave profession, the courage oozes and the bravery vanishes, and they now say: "We are poor publishers and printers. Let us off, because we are only agents." I ask you to give Mr. Smith such a verdict as will enable him to still hold up his head, so that those who may be connected with this matter will have no ground for saying there was one tittle of evidence of the monstrous and barbarous charge made against him. (Subdued applause.)

Digitized by Google

Mr. JUSTICE LAWRANCE, who was very indistinctly heard, in summing up, said: Gentlemen of the jury, the question you will have to consider is, how far the defendants have made out that which they say is an answer to the case—viz., that this matter had no reference to the plaintiff's place at all; that it was not known to the man who uttered the slander first—Mr. Powell. Smith was not known to him, and he was not known to Mr. Cook or to Mr. Snow, the other defendant, the publisher and printer of the libel; and it is said that the transactions had no reference to the Hall of Science in London at all. A great many considerations have been imported into this case, necessarily from the very nature of the case. All I can suggest is, that you should do the best you can in the matter, and not allow whatever feelings you may have on one side or the other to interfere with you in the discharge of your duty. Look at it just as you would at an ordinary case. The matter is a very simple one. Smith, the plaintiff, is the manager and treasurer and organiser of lectures, etc., at the Hall of Science in London, and he held that position till, I think, 1892, when it was turned into a Limited Company. (To Mr. Walton) What position does he hold now?

Mr. WALTON, Q.C.: He is a director of the Company, and that is why the action by the Company was discontinued, because the Company were not the proprietors of the hall at the date referred to. The action was originally brought by the Company, but when it was seen that the Company were not the proprietors of the hall in 1879, the action was discontinued.

Mr. JUSTICE LAWRANCE: Now, Mr. Smith says it was his duty to carry on the business of this Company, and to do so he had lectures and science classes, and was generally responsible for the management of the hall. The debate took place in October, 1893, and the plaintiff says he heard of it soon afterwards, and made no complaint against Mr. Powell, who said there had been a great scandal at Leeds. He also said he had heard of the trial in 1878, but he did not read it, and did not know what the evidence was. He says he knew Mr. Foote, but never heard the matter discussed in his presence, and he had not seen the report of the debate. He says he did not know who owned the Secular Hall at Leeds; but he seemed to say he had heard the report of the trial discussed. Now, gentlemen, Mr. Murphy has asked you to say that Mr. Smith's answers were not satisfactory on that point, and that he was not clear in giving a distinct denial to the statement; but that the fact was he knew exactly what had taken place at Leeds. On that point you must judge by your own conclusions from the evidence given before you. With regard to the suggestion that the defendant has been indemnified of the costs of this action, the plaintiff also seems to have been getting up money for the costs of the trial; so there is not much to be said on either side, because "what is sauce for the goose is also sauce for the gander." (Laughter.) It appears that both of them were getting up public funds for the trial. No point has been made that plaintiff was not responsible for the management of the Hall; and Mr. Charles Watts said he was on the Committee, and always looked upon Mr. Smith as the responsible person of the Company. Then a copy of the Anti-Infidel was put in, in which portions of the letter from Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh were printed, and on this it is said, on behalf of the plaintiff, that the points taken by Mr. Bradlaugh there were that, if this case went on, the charges made in the libel would be proved. Well, that was said to depend on what was the defence in the action; and I may have a word more to say about Mr. Bradlaugh's position, and the letters written by him in the case, because he is the person responsible for them and the person making profit out of it as the owner of the Anti-Infidel. Therefore, he is one of the persons who would be primarily responsible and liable for any injury the plaintiff might have sustained. Well, Mr. Murphy's case is shortly this: That the observations made by Mr. Powell at Leeds had reference to what had taken place at Leeds, and that Mr. Powell, like a great many other public speakers, not only in matters of religion, but in other matters which we read of every day—say politics, for instance—(a laugh)—Mr. Powell was like a good many more people who used extremely strong language, and had gone a great deal further than they were entitled to go, or would have gone in their calmer moments. There can be no doubt at all about that; and it is said here that what Mr. Powell had done was to mix up two or three things, and what he really intended to convey was that what he was saying had reference to the scandal that took place in Leeds in 1878. That there had been a scandal at that time there can be no doubt from the evidence of the plaintiff himself. Mr. Walton is quite right in saying he won't permit anybody to say that it was so of the Hall of Science, because there is no evidence about that. There had been something in the shape of a prosecution in Leeds, which may have been for only keeping a disorderly house—we are left in doubt; but there had been something—a prosecution which was of interest to Secularists generally, because the plaintiff said the matter had been talked about before him, and Mr. Watts remembers the Leeds trial. But I suppose we shall never know the real truth about the Leeds trial. That being the state of things, let me read you the parts of the pamphlet relied on by the plaintiff. It is said the Hall of Science was not the proper name, and that it should have been the Secular Hall, and therefore it could not refer to the London hall. It was said by the plaintiff: "The dancing academy must refer to me because there is no proof that there was a dancing academy at Leeds"; and then he relies on the fact of its being near a lunatic asylum, thus completing the identification. These things are said by the plaintiff to point—and can only point—to the Hall of Science in London. It is said by the defendant that the date 1879 was wrong, and was intended for 1878; that it was wrong to call it the Hall of Science; it should have been the Secular Hall in North-street, Leeds, and that the Daily Standard should be the Daily News. All that is said to be a mistake made by the speaker in the heat of debate, and what he really meant was the hall in Leeds; and the reference to 1879 was a reference to what had already taken place in 1878 in regard to the hall at Leeds, and not to the London hall. It is to be noticed that Mr. Powell was a Liverpool man; he was said to be an obscure Liverpool man, who had emerged from there, had spoken, and had retired again. Mr. Fisher was a Leeds man; and Mr. Powell, I observe, talks about certain books sold by Kingfisher of Leeds, and in one discussion Fisher acknowledges he is the person who sold the books referred to. Then he goes on to make the charge complained of. The question you have got to decide is whether that really had reference to the place in London, or whether it had reference—badly expressed by a man in the heat of debate—to the proceedings which had taken place in Leeds, and was intended and taken to be understood by those who heard him to have reference to the Leeds hall only.

Mr. WALTON: May I say, so far as the libel is concerned, would not the question be whether persons reading this pamphlet would not take it to refer to the London hall?

The JUDGE: Quite true. It is not what was spoken at Leeds. The question is this: Without knowing anything further, would anybody taking up this book, and reading what was said there—and you have heard the most that can be said, and the best way it can be put for the defendants—the question is whether a person taking that up would apply it to the Hall of Science in London, and so apply it to the person—namely, the plaintiff—who was responsible for the manner in which that business was carried on. Mr. Murphy produced a paper which is not the Daily Standard, but is the Leeds Daily News; but of course he cannot go any further than that. Mr. Snow then comes, and it turns out that the contents of the pamphlet had been published week by week, so far as I can gather, in the Anti-Infidel; and therefore it must have been going on for some time between October and January. It is dated January, 1894.

Mr. RAWLINSON: The pamphlet was not published until March, I am told.

The JUDGE: There is the whole of the evidence upon the one side and the other. There are only one or two other considerations. We have heard a great deal why Mr. Powell has not been called on one side, and Mr. Fisher on the other. You always have, in cases of this kind, complaints by learned counsel on each side. They have each got complaints, and I suppose the answer to them really is—Mr. Walton does not hesitate to say: "I have nothing to do with Mr. Powell. He is not worth powder and shot, and I am not going against him." I do not know what your view is; but, when you are considering the position, one would have thought there was some reason why Mr. Bradlaugh should not have been made a party to the case. It may be that they think he is not worth going for. I don't know. He is the owner of the pamphlet and of the Anti-Infidel, and he was the person who was going to take any profits, and when you cannot get the man who is going to profit by the libel then you generally go for the printer and publisher. There may be some reason, but no reason has been forthcoming, as to why Mr. Bradlaugh should not be made a party to this suit. Mr. Bradlaugh was the person who, if any profit was to be made, would be entitled to it. But the writ reached the printer, who, I do not suppose, ever takes the trouble to see what he is printing; and the publisher, who only had a certain number of copies sent to him, having no control over the matter at all. But for some reason, best known to the plaintiff, Mr. Bradlaugh was not included. He seems to have been one of the principal parties concerned. There are the whole facts. The question is, Did those words refer, or would they reasonably be taken by anybody reading the pamphlet to refer, to the plaintiff, or do you think that the defendants' case is made out that they referred, and ought only to be taken to refer to, the case at Leeds and the Leeds hall? If you find they refer to the plaintiff, then comes the question of damages. That is a matter for you entirely to deal with. The libel, no doubt, is a serious one. The action is brought against two men, who are, as far as they are concerned—if there is any injury to the plaintiff—are not nearly so much concerned with the matter as the parties who get a profit by it, and who have been let go—viz., the man who spoke the words and the man who was the owner of the pamphlet. That may make a difference to you when you come to consider the amount of damages to which the plaintiff is entitled. It is for you to say whether you find for the plaintiff or defendant. If for the plaintiff, what damages do you think he is entitled to?

Digitized by Google

The jury retired at 4.30, and, after a deliberation of three-quarters of an hour, came into court and gave a verdict for the plaintiff, with £30 damages.

On Tuesday, February 19, Mr. Lawrence Walton, Q.C., who appeared for the plaintiff, said, in the case of the National Secular Society and another versus Snow and another, in which the jury, the day previously, found for the plaintiff, he had now to apply that judgment be entered in accordance with the finding of the jury.

Mr. JUSTICE LAWRANCE assented, and judgment was entered accordingly.

Obituary.

ON Saturday, February 9, the remains of the late Mr. William Morton, of Failsworth, were interred in the Failsworth Cemetery. Mr. Morton's family were connected with the Secular School at Failsworth, and have been workers for, and supporters of, the school all their lives. The deceased was fifty-nine years of age. Mr. S. Standring, of Rochdale, conducted the Secular funeral service in a very sympathetic and impressive manner.

ON Monday, February 11, the remains of the late Mr. Jonathan Taylor, of Failsworth, were interred in the Failsworth Cemetery. All the members of the District Council, the guardians and officers for the district, the sanitary inspector, the medical officer of health, the School Board officer, a deputation from the Failsworth Liberal Club, of which deceased was a member, and a large number of the teachers and members of the Secular School, of which body he has been a member for a large number of years, besides many of his friends and acquaintances, attended, along with the members of his family. The funeral service, which was of a Secular character, was conducted by Mr. S. Standring, of Rochdale, who, in the course of his remarks, said Mr. Taylor had never been afraid of death. He died as he had lived. Mr. Taylor's life might be divided into two parts: the public and the private life. His public life had been well known to all. He was one of the originators of the co-operative movement in Failsworth, and that alone gave a halo to his name. For long before the formation of the Local Board he was connected with the Ratepayers' Association, and for over twenty-seven years had been clerk of the Failsworth Local Board. He was one of the originators, and on the first board of directors, of the Failsworth Liberal Club. In his private life he was a member of the Secular Society; first as a scholar, then as a teacher. Thirty years ago he was conductor of the singing, and later he taught a grammar class, and in various other ways was a worker and supporter of the school, to which his loss will be irreparable. The Secular lecturers visiting Failsworth always found in Mr. and Mrs. Taylor a kindly and obliging host and hostess. General sympathy and respect were manifested by the hundreds present at the graveside for the members of the family in their sad bereavement.

Accuracy of language is one of the bulwarks of truth.—Mrs. Jameson.

No indwelling deity now regulates the burning of the life sun, no guardian angels drive the stars across the arching firmament; the divine Ganges is water flowing down into the sea, to evaporate into cloud, and descend again in rain. No deity simmers in the boiling pot, no presiding spirits dwell in the volcanoes, no imprisoned demon shrieks from the mouth of the howling lunatic. There was a period of human thought when the whole universe seemed actuated by spiritual life. For our knowledge of our own history, it is deeply interesting that there should remain rude races yet living under the philosophy which we have so far passed from since physics, chemistry, biology, have seized whole provinces of ancient Animism, setting force for life, and law for will.—Dr. E. B. Tylor.

LONDON SECULAR FEDERATION.

THE adjourned General Meeting was held at the Hall of Science on February 7; the President in the chair. Present: Messrs. J. M. Wheeler, G. Standring, G. J. Warren, C. Thomas, J. Wood, A. Wheeler, J. Neate, A. F. Taylor, W. Williams, M. Loafer, Edith Vance, and the secretary. Minutes of previous meeting read and confirmed. The old list of officers was proposed for re-election, and carried. Mr. Charles Watts was invited to become a vice-president. The undersigned was re-elected as hon. secretary, and Mr. Robert Forder as treasurer. It was decided to arrange a course of lectures for the North-West London Branch; and the secretary received instructions to make inquiries concerning a second course, either for Battersea or West London Branch. Proposed by Mr. Warren, seconded by Mr. Wood: "That a dramatic performance, etc., take the place of the usual Federation Ball, and a sub-committee be appointed to arrange details." £5 was voted to the printer, and the meeting closed. ANNIE G. BROWN, Hon. Sec.

Branch secretaries are reminded that delegates' fees for 1895 are now due, and an early remittance will assist the work in hand.

PROFANE JOKES.

It was an Ardrossan schoolboy who the other day, when asked by the school inspector which was "the longest day," struck bottom facts by the reply, "Sawbath."

"How, brethren," shrieked the Salvationist, "how shall we save souls?" "Walk on your uppers like me," remarked the blear-eyed man who had come in to get warm. And then the doorkeeper showed him out.

The Rev. Rosy Babbleton (detecting Johnny stealing an orange from a sleeping apple-woman)—"Ah, Johnny, Johnny, this is a little matter, but where will it end?" Johnny (in an injured tone, but dividing the orange)—"That's just it; there's always somebody wants to stand in. There yer are; but if you are a square cove, you will nick some nuts and divide."

Watson—"What was the largest trout you ever caught, James?"

James—"Let's see; what day of the week is this, Watson?"

"Monday, I believe. What in the world has that to do with my question?"

"Oh, nothing; only I think you'd better wait until Wednesday. I always like to get as far as possible from Sunday when I tell my fishing experiences."

Some ridiculous mistakes are made by missionaries, who have but an imperfect acquaintance with the language in which they teach. Everyone knows how the Chinese call Christianity the pig religion, through missionary mispronunciation of the word for Lord, as if it were pig. In Japanese the word for "rat" is similar to that for "fountain," and missionaries have been known to tell the natives to fly for refuge to the rat; and, the word for hell being similar to that for post-office, unbelievers have been threatened that they would all be sent to the post-office.

Professor Sayce fancies he has discovered Nimrod in the cuneiform inscriptions. He says: "His full name was Nazi Muruda the Kassu, and he was the Babylonian contemporary of the father of the Assyrian king who restored Nineveh and founded Calah about fifty years before the Exodus." This looks pretty much like a guess in the dark, like Professor Sayce's identification of Melchisedek with Eben Tob. Probably some one will come after him and discover that Nazi Muruda was not a bit like Nimrod, and not even a mighty hunter before the Lord.

The infidels of one age have been the aureole saints of the next.—Ingersoll.

The altar and throne have leaned against and supported each other.—Ingersoll.

Humility is the first of the virtues—for other people.—O. W. Holmes.

A Church should put no fetters on the man; it should have unity of purpose, but with the most entire freedom for the individual. When you sacrifice the man to the mass, in Church or State, it becomes an offence, a stumbling-block in the way of progress, and must end or mend.—Theodore Parker.

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY LECTURE NOTICES, ETC.

[Notices of Lectures, etc., must reach us by first post on Tuesday, and be marked "Lecture Notice," if not sent on post-card.]

LONDON.

HALL OF SCIENCE (142 Old-street, E.C.): 11.30, a lecture. (Free.) 6.30, musical selections; 7, A. B. Moss, "What Do Christians Believe?" (Admission free; reserved seats 3d. and 6d.) Wednesday, at 8.30, a lecture.

BATTERSEA SECULAR HALL (back of Battersea Park Station): 7.45, a lecture. (Free.) Tuesday, at 8, dancing for N.S.S. members and friends. Wednesday, at 8, dramatic club.

CAMBERWELL (North Camberwell Hall, 61 New Church-road): 7.30, G. W. Foote, "God is Dead."

FINSBURY BRANCH: 12, important members' meeting at 120 St. John-street, Clerkenwell.

ISLINGTON (Liberal and Radical Association Committee Rooms, Upper-street, near the Vestry Hall): Thursday, at 8.30, J. Rowney, "What Think Ye of Christ?" (Free.)

ISLINGTON BRANCH: 8.30, important members' meeting at 10 Waterloo-terrace, Upper-street.

MILTON HALL (Hawley-crescent, 85 Kentish Town-road): 7.30, A. Westcott, "Pasteur: His Life and Works"—with dissolving views by limelight. (Free.)

WEST LONDON ETHICAL SOCIETY (Princes' Hall, Piccadilly): 11.15, J. A. Hobson, "Victor Hugo and the Proletariat."

WEST LONDON BRANCH ("Duke of York," Kensington-place, Silver-street, Notting-hill-gate): Monday, at 8.30, business meeting.

WOOD GREEN (Star Coffee House, High-street): 6.45, monthly meeting: 7.30, W. J. Heath, "What Caused the French Revolution?"

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BATTERSEA PARK GATES: 11.30, F. Haslam will lecture.

HYDE PARK (near Marble Arch): 11.30, St. John will lecture.

WOOD GREEN (Jolly Butchers' Hill): 11.30, W. J. Ramsey, "What Christ Said of Himself—a Reply to the Rev. Mr. Pedley."

COUNTRY.

BIRMINGHAM (Coffee House, corner of Broad-street): Thursdays, at 8, papers, discussions, etc.

BRISTOL (Shepherds' Hall, Old Market-street): 7, musical program by Miss Humphries.

BLACKBURN: 3, members' meeting at secretary's house.

CHATHAM SECULAR HALL (Queen's-road, New Brompton): 7, A. R. Rowcroft, "Personal Experiences of Spiritualism."

FAILSWORTH SECULAR SUNDAY-SCHOOL (Pole-lane): Saturday, at 5, tea party. Sunday, at 6.30, Ernest Evans, "Animals and Plants: a Lesson from Nature."

HULL (St. George's Hall, Storey-street): 11, Stanley Jones, "The Problem of Unsectarian Moral Teaching"; 2.30, "Radicalism and Socialism"; 7, "Woman: Past, Present, and Future."

LIVERPOOL (Oddfellows' Hall, St. Anne-street): 3, philosophy class—Ernest Newman, "Kant"; 7, Mr. Miller, "Energy in Nature."

MANCHESTER SECULAR HALL (Rusholme-road, All Saints): 11, Charles Watts, "Mohammed and Christ"; 3, "Trust in God a Delusion"; 6.30, "Religion with and without Theology." (3d. and 6d.)

PLYMOUTH (Democratic Club, Whimple-street): 7, a meeting.

PORTSMOUTH (Wellington Hall, Wellington-street, Southsea): 6.30, committee meeting; 7, lantern entertainment.

ROCHDALE (Working Men's College, 4 Acker-street): 6, singing practice; 6.30, Sam Standring, "The Rise and Fall of Nations."

SHEFFIELD SECULAR SOCIETY (Hall of Science, Rockingham-street): 7, Mr. Gorrill, "Japan and the Japanese"—with lantern illustrations.

SOUTH SHIELDS (Thornton's Variety Hall, Union-lane): 11, C. Cohen, "Buddha and Buddhism"; 7, "The Rev. A. J. Harrison as Christian Apologist—A Reply."

SUNDERLAND (Lecture Room, Bridge End Vaults, opposite Echo office): 7, the Secretary, "Christianity and Medical Science."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

ROCHDALE (Town Hall Square): 11, Sam Standring, "God's Frost."

Lecturers' Engagements.

C. COHEN, 12 Merchant-street, Bow-road, London, E.—All Sundays until April, South Shields.

STANLEY JONES, 53 Marlborough-road, Holloway, London.—March 3, Hull; 10, Sheffield; 17, Hanley; 24, Derby.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Credon-road, Rotherhithe, London.—March 24, Camberwell.

SAM STANDRING, 6 Bury-road, Rochdale.—March 26 and 27, Sheffield.

Vol. I., cloth gilt, 216 pp., 2s. 6d., post free,

CRIMES OF CHRISTIANITY.

BY

G. W. FOOTE AND J. M. WHEELER.

Hundreds of exact References to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.

CHAPTERS:—1, Christ to Constantine; 2, Constantine to Hypatia; 3, Monkery; 4, Pious Forgeries; 5, Pious Frauds; 6, Rise of the Papacy; 7, Crimes of the Popes; 8, Persecution of the Jews; 9, The Crusades.

"The book is very carefully compiled, the references are given with exactitude, and the work is calculated to be of the greatest use to the opponents of Christianity."—C. BRADLAUGH, in National Reformer.

"The book is worth reading. It is fair, and, on the whole, correct."—Weekly Times.

"The book has a purpose, and is entitled to a fair hearing."—Huddersfield Examiner.

"The work should be scattered like autumn leaves."—Ironclad Age (U.S.A.).

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

ALLINSON FOR HEALTH.

HOME CONSULTATIONS—10 a.m. to 1 p.m., 10s. 6d.; 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., 5s. Patients Visited.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. I. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Management of Infancy, Health, Longevity, The Teeth, Tobacco, The Drink Question. Also the Cause and Cure of Disease, Constipation, Biliousness, Eczema, Blackheads and Pimples, Nervousness, Coughs and Colds, Chest Complaints, Deafness, Thread Worms, Long Worms, Tape Worms, The Itch, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. II. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on The Healing Power of Nature, Urine, Saline Starvation, the Hair and its Management, Sleep and Sleeplessness, Want of Energy, etc. Advice for the Thin, for the Stout; Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. III. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on No More Death, Management of Young Children, Unsuspected Domestic Poisons, How to Grow Tall, to Keep Warm, to Live One Hundred Years, to Improve the Memory, and to become Beautiful and Attractive. On the Cause and Cure of Stomach Troubles, Flatulence, Sleepiness, Varicose Veins, Boils and Carbuncles, Sebaceous Tumours and Warts, Hay Fever, Winter Cough, Childbirth, Epilepsy, and on the Diseases Produced by Taking Mercury.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. IV. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Hardening, Work and Overwork, Sugar and its Abuse, Milk as Food, the Tomato, Poultices, Quinine, Against the Knife, Arsenical Poisoning, Tonics, Against Stimulants in Disease, about Swallowing Pins and other Articles. Also Cure of Sunstroke, Dog Bites, Pains in the Back, Pedicels or Lice, Chicken-Pox, Synovitis or Inflammation of the Joints, Tonsilitis or Quinsy, Herpes (Tetter or Shingles), Erysipelas, Ulcer of the Stomach, Epidemic Influenza, Sciatica, Psoriasis or English Leprosy, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. V. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Pure Water, The Mouth, Its Use and Abuse; Rules for the Aged, Training, Blood Letting, Nose Bleeding, Felon or Whitlow, Ingrowing Toenail, Gum Boil, Cold in the Head, a Red Nose, Flushing and Blushing, Toothache, Sore Mouth, St. Vitus' Dance, Goitre, Mumps, Inflamed Eyes and Eyelids, Fits, Fainting, Apoplexy, Spitting and Vomiting of Blood, Vomiting, Wounds, Burns, Scalds, Bruises, etc.

The Five Volumes, strongly and neatly bound, price 6s. 9d., post free.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.—An Eye Opener to Drug Takers.

RHEUMATISM: ITS CAUSE AND CURE. Post free for 3d.

DIET AND DIGESTION. Post free for 3d.

CONSUMPTION: ITS NATURAL CURE. Post free 3d.

All these Books, bound in One Vol., post free, 3s. 6d. Send Postal Order.

THREE PAMPHLETS FOR YOUNG MEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

A BOOK FOR MARRIED WOMEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

All communications to be addressed to—

DR. T. R. ALLINSON,

4 Spanish-place, Manchester-square, London, W.

Freethought Publications.

Bible Handbook for Freethinkers and Inquiring Christians. Edited by G. W. Foote and W. P. Ball. Complete, paper covers, 1s. 4d.; superior edition, on superfine paper, bound in cloth, 2s.

The Jewish Life of Christ. Being the Sepher Toldoth Jeshu, or Book of the Generation of Jesus. With an Historical Preface and Voluminous Notes by G. W. Foote and J. M. Wheeler. Paper covers, 6d.; superior edition, superfine paper, cloth, 1s.

Bible Studies. Essays on Phallic Worship and other Curious Rites and Customs. By J. M. Wheeler. Illustrated, superior paper, 2s. 6d.

Biographical Dictionary of Freethinkers of All Ages and Nations. By J. M. Wheeler. Handsomely bound in cloth, 7s. 6d.

Darwin Made Easy. By Dr. Edward B. Aveling, Fellow of the London University. This is the best popular exposition of Darwinism extant. Cloth, 1s.

Essays in Rationalism. By Charles Robert Newman (Atheist Brother of the late Cardinal Newman). With a Preface by George Jacob Holyoake, and a Biographical Sketch by J. M. Wheeler. 1s. 6d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

W. J. Rendell's "Wife's Friend"

Recommended by Mrs. Besant in Law of Population, p. 32, and Dr. Allbutt in Wife's Handbook, p. 51. Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell-street, Clerkenwell; 2s. per doz., post free (reduction in larger quantities). For particulars send stamped envelope.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

BEWARE of useless imitations substituted by some dealers and chemists, the words "Rendell & Co." and "J. W. Rendall" being speciously and plausibly introduced to deceive the public.

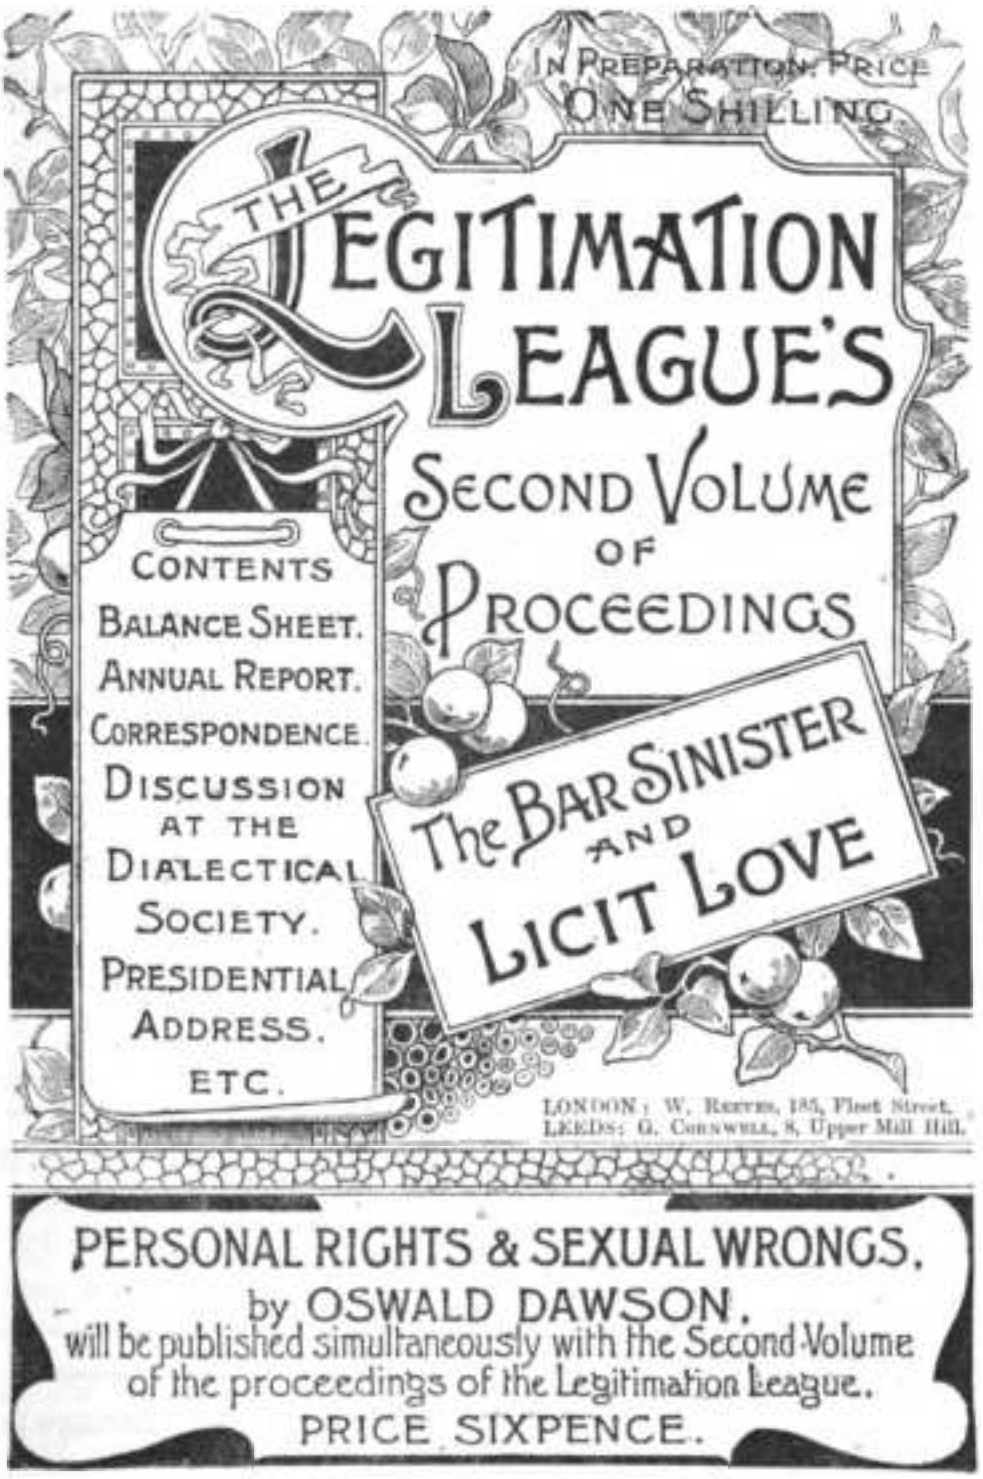
LOOK FOR AUTOGRAPH REGISTERED TRADE MARK

W. J. Rendell



No. 182,688.

IN Red INK ON EACH BOX, WITHOUT WHICH NONE ARE GENUINE.

Higginson's Syringe, with Vertical and Reverse Current, 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 5s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. Dr. Allbutt's Quinine Powders, 3s. per doz. All prices post free.

W. J. RENDELL, 15 Chadwell-st., Clerkenwell, E.C.

Digitized by Google

THE BEST BOOK

ON NEO-MALTHUSIANISM IS, I BELIEVE,

TRUE MORALITY, or THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF NEO-MALTHUSIANISM.

By J. R. HOLMES, M.M.L., M.V.S., M.N.S.S.

160 pages, with portrait and autograph, bound in cloth, gilt lettered. Price 1s., post free.

 In order to bring the information within the reach of the poor, the most important parts of the book are issued in a pamphlet of 112 pages at ONE PENNY, post free 2d. Copies of the pamphlet for distribution 1s. a dozen post free.

The National Reformer of 4th September, 1892, says: "Mr. Holmes' pamphlet . . . is an almost unexceptionable statement of the Neo-Malthusian theory and practice . . . and throughout appeals to moral feeling. . . . The special value of Mr. Holmes' service to the Neo-Malthusian cause and to human well-being generally is just his combination in his pamphlet of a plain statement of the physical and moral need for family limitation with a plain account of the means by which it can be secured, and an offer to all concerned of the requisites at the lowest possible prices."

The Council of the Malthusian League, Dr. Drysdale, Dr. Allbutt, and others have also spoken of it in very high terms.

The Trade supplied by R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C. Other orders should be sent to the author.

J. R. HOLMES, HANNEY, WANTAGE, BERKS.

Now Ready, price 6d., by post 7d.

The Path I Took, and Where it Led Me.

AN AUTOBIOGRAPHY AND ARGUMENT.

By A MONMOUTHSHIRE FARMER.

Revised by G. J. Holyoake.

London: Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Colonel Ingersoll's Great New Lecture

ABOUT THE HOLY BIBLE

Price Sixpence.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

From the "Bradford Weekly Telegraph," Saturday, February 16, 1895.

GREAT FIRE IN BRADFORD.

EXTENSIVE DAMAGE.

Early on Saturday a big fire took place in the warehouse, No. 2 Union-street, Bradford, occupied by Mr. R. Higgins, who occupies a large part of the ground floor, and numbers the following tenants occupying the other offices and rooms: Mr. Ernest Hahnel, Messrs. Schmidt & Co., Mr. J. W. Gott, Messrs. G. D. Wright & Co., and Mr. J. Pepper. The damage done is very extensive, and is roughly estimated at a figure between £8,000 to £10,000. It certainly cannot be less than £8,000, as many of the firms occupying the building had large and valuable stocks stored in the various rooms. Mr. R. Higgins had a big stock of woollens, stuffs, and yarns, and estimates his loss at over £4,000. He is insured up to £4,000. Messrs. Wright & Co., stuff merchants, have had fully £1,000 damage done to their stock and premises, but it is completely covered by insurance. Mr. J. W. Gott, cloth and stuff merchant, had a stock valued at £1,500, and it is partially destroyed, chiefly by water. The other firms, with the exception of Mr. J. Pepper, have suffered in like manner, a lot of stock being destroyed by water. The cause of the fire is unknown, but, judging by appearances, it broke out in the packing-room of Mr. R. Higgins.

To the Readers of "The Freethinker."

We had just got the New Spring Goods ready for Sale when this unfortunate fire took place, and, although we have sustained no damage by the fire itself, most of our goods have been soaked in water. We have taken immediate steps to have all the goods dried, and for all practical purposes they are not worth one penny less than before the fire took place. The finish which is put upon new goods has, of course, been disturbed, but that always takes place in making garments up. So that if you get a length of this cloth, or stuff, and have it made up, there is not the slightest difference between that and any other new goods you might buy, when made into garments.

We have got a Big Allowance from the Insurance Company,

and to make room for New Goods, which we have already ordered, and which will be ready for sale in one month,

We now offer all our Present Stock at HALF PRICE.

We are making the goods up into the following lots:—

Parcel for 21s. carriage paid.

A Lot of GOODS for GENTLEMEN'S WEAR, worth at warehouse prices 42s.

☞ State what will be most useful. ☜

Parcel for 21s. carriage paid.

A Lot of GOODS for LADIES' WEAR, worth at warehouse prices 42s.

☞ State what will be most useful. ☜

Parcel for 21s. carriage paid.

MIXED LOT OF GOODS,

Worth 42s.

For Ladies' and Gentlemen's wear.

Parcel for 21s. carriage paid.

Mixed Lot of Goods, such as

BLANKETS, SHEETS, QUILTS, TABLE-CLOTH, APRON, BELT, PURSE, Etc.

We have engaged 25 additional Tailors to make up Trousers. Price during Salvage Sale,

7s. 6d. per Pair to Measure.

Fill up form and state Color preferred.

Round waist .....
Round seat.....
Inside leg seam.....
Outside leg seam .....
Thigh .....
Knee .....
Bottom .....
Lined or Unlined .....
(Lined 6d. extra.)
Color .....

SEND AT ONCE.

J. W. GOTT, 2 & 4 UNION-STREET, BRADFORD.

Printed and Published by G. W. Foote, at 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

VOL. XV.—No. 10. SUNDAY, MARCH 10, 1895. PRICE TWOPENCE.

THE WOMAN WHO DID.—II.

The Woman Who Did. By Grant Allen. (London: John Lane.)

MR. GRANT ALLEN'S preface justifies us in assuming his personal responsibility for the opinions and sentiments he puts into the mouth of Herminia Barton. There is, indeed, a perfect similarity between the utterances of the heroine and the utterances of the author. We shall quote from both indifferently, leaving Mr. Grant Allen to make any disclaimer he may think necessary.

In four consecutive pages Mr. Grant Allen argues out his case against marriage. He starts with Patriotism, which he calls "one of the lowest vices." In his opinion it means "My country, right or wrong, and just because it is my country." We regard this as a very one-sided account of the matter, but we will not pause to justify our opinion. The next vice, and "a baser and more sordid one," is "the monopolist instinct of property." The plethora of words prevents us from judging whether Mr. Grant Allen is against all property. Next comes "slavery." And last of all, and the hardest to eradicate, is "the monopoly of the human heart, which is known as marriage."

"Based upon the primitive habit of felling the woman with a blow, stunning her by repeated strokes of the club or spear, and dragging her off by the hair of her head as a slave to her captor's hut or rock-shelter, this ugly and barbarous form of serfdom has come in our own time by some strange caprice to be regarded as of positively divine origin. The Man says now to himself: 'This woman is mine. Law and Church have bestowed her on me. Mine for better, for worse; mine, drunk or sober. If she ventures to have a heart or will of her own, woe betide her! I have tabooed her for life; let her so much as cast eyes on any other man to admire or desire him—and, knife, dagger, or law-court, they shall both of them answer for it.' There you have in all its native deformity another monopolist instinct—the deepest-seated of all, the grimmest, the most vindictive."

"I know what marriage is," says Herminia; "from what vile slavery it has sprung; on what unseen horrors for my sister women it is reared and buttressed; by what unholy sacrifices it is sustained and made possible." Again: "Marriage itself is still an assertion of man's supremacy over woman. It ties her to him for life; it ignores her individuality." Twenty such passages might be given, but repetition does not add to the truth of an assertion.

Mr. Grant Allen very much exaggerates in all these statements and exclamations. Marriage, in any proper sense of the word, did not originate in club-law; it arose in a later stage of human evolution. Nor is it fair, or even sensible, to judge it now in the light of the mere letter of the law, apart from the influence of public opinion. Mr. Grant Allen is not even abreast of the law in France and America. Even in England the woman is not "tied" to the man, drunk or sober; it is the man who is tied to the woman in either condition. Relaxations have crept into our marriage laws, greatly in the woman's favor; and it seems to us that a rational law of divorce would provide against every valid objection to the institution of marriage. No institution will secure happiness for fools and rogues. Marriage is not the only partnership that sometimes requires dissolution. Just as many, and perhaps more, mistakes are made in the other relationships of life.

Marriage exists for the sake of children. It is curious that Mr. Grant Allen never catches a glimpse of this fact. And as society becomes more complex, with a greater division of labor, and it becomes more and more impossible for the average woman to be a bread-winner, the institution of marriage becomes more imperative than ever, for the sake of the mother as well as for the sake of her offspring.

Herminia Barton goes on school-teaching, and lives in her own little cottage by herself, as she did before her "natural" union with Alan Merrick. They do not live under the same roof, and they have separate incomes. It was a pretty arrangement, but it came to grief when she had to bear the burden of maternity. Then she needed the man's support. Precisely. Man and woman must unite over the child's cradle.

Mr. Grant Allen, however, longs for the millennial time when the men who do the hard work of the world will "collectively guarantee every necessary and luxury to every woman of the community equally." Then the women will be free to perform their function of maternity "without pre-occupation of any sort." Comte himself made a somewhat similar proposal; it amounted to a guarantee, but not to a universal provision. Comte, however, made this proposal in the interest of marriage and the family. Mr. Grant Allen makes it for the sake of destroying both.

It does not seem to us in the least degree probable that such an arrangement would lessen man's "virile self-assertion." "Deep down in the very roots of the idea of sex," says Mr. Grant Allen, "we come on that prime antithesis—the male, active and aggressive; the female, sedentary, passive, and receptive." Quite true, and to a certain extent the difference is eternal; and how on earth is it to be diminished by the man's doing all "the hard work of the world" and sheltering the whole female sex from the necessity of touching it with a finger?

Mr. Grant Allen's idea appears to be this, that in the millennial age he foresees in a spirit of prophecy there will be no marriage, no home, and no family. Men will not live with women; they will visit them. Maternity will continue, but paternity will be reduced to a mere fact in physiology. What a training this will be for the men! And what a training for the children! Two or three generations of it would produce a curious mixture of effeminacy and debauchery. For this at least is certain, that men are only partially monogamous; the polygamous instinct is still powerful within them; and without the discipline of domestic life, it would lead them backward instead of forward.

We are not of those who use the phrase "free love" as a reproach, for love was never anything else but free. It cannot be commanded. It cannot be had to order. It is spontaneous, like all our affections. Nevertheless, the freedom, not of feeling, but of action, which Mr. Grant Allen pleads for, runs dangerously near to promiscuity; or at least to an instability which is almost as bad. "No man is truly civilised," he writes, "till he can say in all sincerity to every woman of all the women he loves, to every woman of all the women who love him," etc. And the same will be said by the truly civilised woman to "every man of all the men she loves, and of all the men who love her." Mr. Grant Allen may explain that these many loves are not to be simultaneous, but successive. It must be confessed, however, that his language grates upon the sensibilities of ordinary people. Herminia Barton, when she is persuading Alan Merrick to try the great experiment of love without marriage, talks to him in this remarkable fashion:—

"If I love a man at all, I must love him on terms of perfect freedom. I can't bind myself down to live with him to my shame one day longer than I love him; or to love him at all if I find him unworthy of my purest love, or unable to retain it; or if I discover some other more fit to be loved by me."

Digitized by Google

What a cold-blooded expression! How inartistic! How unnatural! Did ever a woman talk in this way to the man she loved? It is the logic of Mr. Grant Allen's theory, not the logic of human feeling. Mr. George Meredith, who understands women as no one else has understood them since Shakespeare, is incapable of making an enamored girl talk such monstrous pedantry to the lover whose first kiss is still warm upon her lips. What a relief it is to turn from this argumentative love-making between Herminia Barton and Alan Merrick to that magical twentieth chapter of Richard Feverel.

Mr. Grant Allen does not seem to us to understand the passion of love. Nor does he seem to understand that a mere philosophy of rights can only end in chaos. Rights must be balanced by duties; indeed, as Comte pointed out, and Mazzini after him, it is only upon duty that the social edifice can be reared. George Eliot understood this, and the fact may explain an act of hers which Mr. Grant Allen condemns.

"When Mary Godwin chose to mate herself with Shelley, she took her good name in her hands; but still, there was Harriet. As soon as Harriet was dead, Mary showed she had no deep principle of action involved, by marrying Shelley. When George Eliot chose to pass her life with Lewes on terms of equal freedom, she defied the man-made law; but still, there was his wife to prevent the possibility of a legalised union. As soon as Lewes was dead, George Eliot showed she had no principle involved, by marrying another man."

George Eliot, we imagine, might have easily replied to this censure. She might have said that she acted on principle in both cases; in defying public convention when it was necessary, and in conforming to it when the necessity for defiance had ceased.

However wrong-headed on the subject of marriage, Mr. Grant Allen is sound enough in other respects. He recognises the beauty and glory of motherhood.

"Herminia was far removed indeed from the blatant and decadent sect of 'advanced women' who talk as though motherhood were a disgrace and a burden, instead of being, as it is, the full realisation of woman's faculties, the natural outlet for woman's wealth of emotion. She knew that to be a mother is the best privilege of her sex, a privilege of which unholy man-made institutions now conspire to deprive half the finest and noblest women in our civilised communities."

He also recognises the evils of late marriage. "The worst of all possible and conceivable checks upon population," he says, "is the vile one which Malthus glossed over as 'the prudential,' and which consists in substituting prostitution for marriage through the spring-tide of one's manhood." "To be celibate," he writes, "is a very great misfortune even for a woman; for a man it is impossible—it is cruel, it is wicked."

It is on the subject of religion that we find ourselves most in agreement with Mr. Grant Allen. Herminia Barton's poor neighbors noticed that she never went to church or chapel; and it is asked sarcastically: "When people cut themselves adrift from church and chapel, why, what sort of morality can you reasonably expect of them?" Reference is made to "that vacantly, well-meaning smile, peculiar to a certain type of country rector." There is also the epigram, "The shadow of a cathedral steeple covers a multitude of sins." Here is a passage allotted to Herminia:—

"Worldly people don't care for fundamental problems of the universe at all; they accept passively what is told them; they think they think, and believe they believe it. But people with an interest in fundamental truth inquire for themselves into the constitution of the cosmos; if they are convinced one way, they become what we call theologians; if they are convinced the other way, they become what we call free-thinkers."

Herminia also bursts into versification in a time of great trouble. The first line of her brief poem (which Mr. Grant Allen published some time ago) reads, "A crowned Caprice is the god of the world." She also writes a novel which is "blankly pessimistic." Whereupon we have the following from Mr. Grant Allen:—

"Blank pessimism is the one creed possible for all save fools. To hold any other is to curl yourself up selfishly in your own easy-chair. . . . . Pessimism is sympathy. Optimism is selfishness. The optimist folds his smug hands on his ample knees, and murmurs contentedly: 'The Lord has willed it'; 'There must always be rich and poor'; 'Nature has, after all, her great law of compensation.' The pessimist knows well self-deception like that is either a fraud or a blind, and recognising the seething mass of misery at his doors gives what he can—his pity, or, where possible, his faint aid, in redressing the crying inequalities and injustices of man or nature."

But if the pessimist does this he is not a pessimist, but a Meliorist—to adopt a word from George Eliot. Things are not so well as they might be, nor so ill as they might be, and it is possible to improve them; at any rate, it is worth a trial. Such is the philosophy of all reformers, and it is Mr. Grant Allen's philosophy, although he almost shrieks to the contrary.

We have a word in conclusion. The best scene in The Woman Who Did is the love-making between Walter Brydges and Dolores Barton—Herminia's daughter. And the best fellow in the book is Walter Brydges. He would have married her "if her father had been a tinker and her mother a gipsy girl." When he knows the worst, and Dolores releases him from the engagement, he replies. "Our engagement remains exactly as it was. Nothing is changed. I hold you to your promise." Capital! Mr. Grant Allen struck a true note there. That is exactly how a manly fellow would feel. And it is precisely this love which is our best hope for marriage in the future. It is love of this kind which "bears it out even to the edge of doom." Mr. Grant Allen worked as a theorist, and produced a failure in Herminia, and a colorless shadow in Alan Merrick. He worked as a realist, and produced Walter Brydges—a real man, who loves a woman, takes her as his wife, and bids the world go hang. And thus is wisdom justified of her children.

G. W. FOOTE.

"THE GOSPEL OF BUDDHA."*

Dr. Paul Carus, who was brought into intimate contact with the Buddhist delegates to the Parliament of Religions at Chicago, has performed a service to the student of comparative religion by compiling the work to which he gives the above title. The aim of the volume is to expound the teachings of Gautama Buddha as they are found in the Buddhist sacred writings. Even those who have the works of Oldenberg, Beal, Rhys Davids, Spence Hardy, Max Müller, and St. Hilaire will be glad to possess this volume, for it gives in brief compass some of the finest gems of the sacred books of the East. The story of the Buddha's life and his teachings are both told in the words of these ancient records, though much that is considered superfluous or unsuitable is omitted.

Many beautiful legends and many wise sayings will be found in this Gospel of Buddha which must remind the reader of those found in the later Christian Gospels. It would be easy, indeed, to make a parallel to all the choicest Christian sayings. Yet Buddhism is essentially rather a philosophy of life than a religion. Buddha entirely dispensed with the usual apparatus of religion. Sacrifices he denounced as cruel and useless. The only worship he inculcated was reverence for the best specimens of humanity. He said: "If a man for a hundred years sacrifice, month after month, with a thousand, and if he but for a moment pay homage to a man grounded in true knowledge, better is that homage than a sacrifice for a hundred years." The object of Buddhism is deliverance from the sorrow and suffering which lie deep in the heart, as well as plain on the surface of things. The cause of sorrow is that state of grasping and striving which Schopenhauer calls the "will to live," and which must be renounced to attain eternal calm. "All that we are is the result of what we have thought; it is founded on our thoughts, it is made up of our thoughts. By oneself evil is done; by oneself one suffers; by oneself evil is left undone; by oneself one is purified. Purity and impurity belong to oneself; no one can purify another."

* The Gospel of Buddha, according to old Records, told by Paul Carus. (Chicago: Open Court Publishing Co.) $1.50.

Digitized by Google

The Gospel of Buddha is a gospel of character. It depends not on creed, but on conduct. It leaves on one side the usual topics of religion. Thus Buddha says: "To feed one good man is infinitely greater in point of merit than attending to questions about heaven and earth, spirits and demons. These matters are not to be compared to the religious duty we owe to our parents; our parents are very divine." Each has to work out his or her own salvation, independently of any superhuman agency. Considered as a religion, it has a unique place by ignoring a personal god, and by setting forth Nirvana, and not any heaven, as the goal of men. It has no atoning sacrifice, no belief in the efficacy of blood; yet it aims at nothing less than the salvation of all beings by the extension of charity and the extinction of passion.

There are many coincidences between the doctrines of Buddha and Christianity; but the ethical teaching of the Buddha appears to me as, on the whole, superior to that of the Christ. For instance, the teaching of the Dhammapada, "Let a man overcome anger by love; let him overcome evil by good; let him overcome the greedy by liberality, the liar by truth," is decidedly superior to the later and unqualified saying of Jesus, "Resist not evil." Its view of self-salvation is decidedly superior to the Christian doctrine of reliance on the blood of Jesus.

Having said thus much for the merits of Buddhism, I must add one criticism. Dr. Carus deserves thanks for his painstaking compilation. But he has perforce selected from the translated books of the voluminous literature of Buddhism, and these are naturally those most suited to the Western mind. From these books he has naturally selected the passages most congenial to Occidentals. But the evidence is indisputable that Buddhism is, like Christianity, essentially a monkish system, although it has a sphere for the layman. Equally clear is it that not monkish retirement from the world, but active participation in its work and welfare, is the true vocation of humanity. The modern man will select what is of modern value from the old religions, but will leave aside all that is incompatible with the teachings of science and the influence of modern civilisation. J. M. Wheeler.

THE PROVIDENTIAL GOVERNMENT OF THE WORLD.

The term Providence has two meanings, secular and theological. In the former sense it signifies prudence and foresight, and refers to those mundane agencies whereby man is enabled to secure and enjoy the comforts and well-being of life. In the latter sense it is employed to indicate what is termed "the divine superintendence over all created beings; the care of God over his creatures." Milton exclaims:—

> What in me is dark,
> Illumine; what is low, raise and support,
> That to the height of this great argument
> I may assert eternal providence.

And Shakespeare writes: "There is a special providence in the fall of a sparrow." Again he observes:—

> There's a divinity that shapes our ends,
> Rough-hew them how we will.

Reserving for the present our views upon the Secular Providence, we purpose to inquire as to the nature and value of the alleged "Divine Providence." This phrase is intended to mean, by those who use it, that God orders all things, and that his mercy and goodness are infinite. Hence, "Trust in God" is the sheet anchor of all believers in the Providence of theology who travel by sea or land; it is the power upon which they are supposed to rely in all the perils of life, and it is the guardian angel that hovers over them at the hour of death. To use Chaucer's words:—

> Be it of war, or peace, or hate, or love,
> All this is ruled by the sight above.

Believers in this Providence contend that whatever happens to man is determined by God, regardless of the natural law of cause and effect; that nature and man are under the special personal rule of an Omnipotent Being, who regulates the whole machinery of existence; that man's destiny is absolutely controlled by this all-powerful "Creator," and that the human race are what they are as the result of the will and pleasure of this supernatural Providence. If this theory be true, then life's certainties and uncertainties, its pleasures and pains, all emanate from a source which it is impossible for man to control, or in any way to interfere with. Dr. Watts wrote:—

> Diseases are thy servants, Lord;
> They come at thy command.

And St. James says: "The prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up" (v. 15). The "Peculiar People" accept this teaching as true, and they consider that to rely upon any other means for help in sickness is "flying in the face of Providence." That such a belief is a palpable delusion experience fully testifies. Still, it is the doctrine of the New Testament, although the majority of Christians will have nothing to do with putting St. James's teaching into practice.

Is the view that a "Divine Providence" preserves men from sickness or death, or from any of the vicissitudes of life, a sound one? Let us see by an appeal to facts. Lord Bacon held that the universe was not without a mind, and he says: "It is heaven upon earth to have a man's mind move in charity, rest in Providence, and turn upon the poles of truth." But, like the Gospels, Bacon's writings are not always in harmony, for in his essay on "Vicissitudes of Things" he writes: "Certain it is that matter is in a perpetual flux, and never at a stay. The great winding-sheets that bury all things in oblivion are two—deluges and earthquakes. As for conflagrations and great droughts, they do not merely dispeople, but destroy." Now, if this work of unrest and destruction is always going on, of what use is the mind in "this universal frame," and what becomes of "rest in Providence"? Bacon's idea of "Divine protection" from heaven is entirely destroyed by the "deluges, earthquakes, and conflagrations" to which he refers. Where is such protection when the volcano pours forth its red-hot lava, and the earth opens and swallows up thousands of men, women, and children? What can be said of a "Divine Providence" that allows epidemics, war, and pestilence to decimate millions of human beings, as if they were of no more value than rats and mice? Among the poor helpless mortals who are deluded into the belief in such a Providence, ruin and destruction are continually busy with their devastating process, as though in mockery of the delusion these people cherish.

Logically analysed, this "Divine Providence" must necessarily be the direct cause of all the pain and misery that robs life of its joys and sunshine. For, if there be only one source of power in nature, then all effects, good or ill, must be attributed to that one source. The theological subterfuge that "all partial evil is universal good" is no more true than the statement would be that all partial good is universal evil. We can understand what partial personal "providential" care means, but we fail to find any confirmation of its existence in daily life, or in the constant recurrence of cause and effect. The old proverb says that "heaven helps those who help themselves," which is equivalent to saying that, unless people help themselves, heaven will render them no assistance. But how can they help themselves if they are under the absolute control of a "Divine Providence"? St. Paul says that "it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that showeth mercy. Therefore hath he mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth. Thou wilt say then unto me, Why doth he yet find fault? For who hath resisted his will? Nay, but, O man, who art thou that repliest against God? Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why hast thou made me thus? Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel unto honor, and another unto dishonor? What if God, willing to show his wrath, and to make his power known, endured with much long-suffering the vessels of wrath fitted to destruction?" (Romans ix.).

The wise thing to do is to rely upon human effort, and not to concern oneself about heaven. Bonaparte said that Providence was on the side of the largest battalions, and the pious Cromwell told his soldiers to "trust in God and keep their powder dry." The Jesuist, Loyola, who was a master of casuistry, told his followers to "pray as though there was no help on earth, and to work as though there was no help in heaven." This was equal to the Greek oracle, who proclaimed: "Alexander, a great nation, shall conquer." So that, whether he conquered a nation or a nation conquered him, the oracle would be right. The same principle applies to the Christian advice, "Work and pray." If the double advice is given and acted upon, the Providence of theology is fairly safe.

Digitized by Google

The manifestation of the belief in Divine Providence is sometimes exceedingly comical. A negro preacher, upon one occasion, dismissed his congregation with the announcement that, God willing and weather permitting, there would be a service on the following Sunday; but, whether or not, he would preach on the Sunday after.

Not long since a rural clergyman, who resided some distance from his place of worship, found, on arriving at the church, that he had forgotten to bring with him his written sermon. He said, however, that he would "trust to Providence." At the close of his discourse he apologised to his hearers for not having done better; at the same time assuring them that he would make up for all the defects next time, when he would have his MS. with him.

When Diagoras, who was surnamed the Atheist, was on board a vessel during a great storm, the sailors thought the raging sea was the result of God's anger because this impious person was aboard. Looking at other vessels that were in similar peril, Diagoras asked if he was also aboard all of them?

When Charles II. visited the blind poet, Milton, and told him that his blindness was a punishment from Providence for his Republican sins, Milton replied: "If Providence has punished me with blindness for my sins, how much greater must have been the sins of your father, whom Providence punished with death."

Many nations have "a God of weather," to whom they pray for rain or sunshine, according to their taste. The Hindoos attributed rain to supernatural causes; the Indians have their "rain-makers"; the same view is found among the Africans and Arabians; and in "Christian England" the clergy pray for rain and fine weather, and they thank Providence for harvests that are frequently anything but what the farmers desire.

The theological notion of Providential government must not be confounded with government by invariable law. The reign of law is not the reign of personal will. The operation of universal law is thus beautifully expressed by the poet Rogers:—

> That very law that moulds a tear,
> And bids it trickle from its source;
> That law preserves the earth a sphere,
> And guides the planets in their course.

CHARLES WATTS.

(To be concluded.)

THE HUMANITARIAN CONFERENCE.

As a delegate from the National Secular Society, in company with Mr. Foote, I attended the meetings of the first National Humanitarian Conference, held at St. Martin's Town Hall on February 28 and March 1. The Conference was called by the Humanitarian League, which, thanks to its able secretary, Mr. H. S. Salt, has already done most valuable work, and which arranged the subjects for discussion. About forty societies were represented by delegates, a large number of whom were of the better sex. The first question was that of "The Criminal Code." The chairman, Mr. E. H. Pickersgill, M.P., adverted to the absurdly cumbrous forms of indictment, the defective system of prosecution, whereby only one in five is convicted, and the gross inequality of sentences. He seemed to me master of his matter, but to deal with it too much from the side of the lawyer legislator, who likes everything cut and dried. The Rev. W. Douglas Morrison, a prison chaplain, who moved that an appeal should be made to the Lord Chancellor "to consider the desirability of instituting an inquiry into the subject of judicial sentences on convicted offenders," read a paper which showed much knowledge of the influences which make criminals, and of the nature of their life both in and out of prison. Incidentally it showed how unjust was any hard-and-fast line of punishment. The motion was seconded by the Rev. J. W. Horsley, also a prison chaplain, who said it would meet the wishes of both those who wanted shorter and those who wanted longer sentences. Mr. Horsley, who is also a gentleman of great experience, spoke so much from the standpoint of a functionary that the meeting was relieved when, after Mr. Salt had read a paper by Mr. R. Johnson, Mr. Foote rose and spoke, not as a chaplain or lawyer, but as a twelve-months' prisoner who knew from experience the failure of our prison system. It was a splendid speech, and the amendment which he moved, "That, in the opinion of this Conference, the idea of reform should be substituted for that of punishment in the treatment of criminals, so that gaols may no longer be places of brutalisation, or even of mere detention, but places of physical, intellectual, and moral elevation for those afflicted with anti-social tendencies," was received with acclamation. This was seconded by Mr. G. Bernard Shaw (Fabian Society) in a humorous speech, and supported by several speakers. A delegate from the Salvation Army, instead of speaking to the question, treated us to some preaching on the efficacy of the blood of the Christ to solve all questions. I was constrained to rise and ask the chairman if the delegate was in order, and I might have mentioned, as was afterwards suggested, that the blood of Christ might have been more appropriately introduced when we came to deal with Slaughter-House Reform. Mr. Foote's amendment was adopted as a second resolution by the conveners, and was carried with only one dissentient. As the resolution was almost word for word the program enunciated in the objects of the N.S.S., and the majority of the delegates were Christians, one congratulating Mr. Foote on his "Christian" speech; this was a decided score for our party at the first meeting.

The evening session was devoted to discussing vivisection and the control of public hospitals. It being the evening of the monthly meeting of the N.S.S., neither Mr. Foote nor myself could attend. A resolution was passed in favor of all large hospitals being controlled by the municipal authorities. On Friday afternoon "Slaughter-House Reform" was discussed. Sir Benjamin Ward Richardson, M.D., presided, and introduced Mr. Lester, of the Model Abattoir Society, who spoke of the cruelty practised in private slaughter-houses and the humaner methods of the model abattoirs which have been established at Croydon and fifty or sixty other towns. He moved a resolution in favor of properly-supervised abattoirs under direct municipal control. The motion was seconded by Colonel Coulson, an earnest and effective speaker of a manly type. Mr. Josiah Oldfield, editor of the Vegetarian, took exception to the resolution, and moved that, slaughter-houses being but relics of the barbarism of the past, every step should be taken to terminate the necessity for their continuance. His speech, in which I understood him to advance as the highest ground for vegetarianism that the shedding of blood gave potency to evil spirits, seemed far enough from practical, though seconded by Mr. J. C. Kenworthy, who spoke of improved methods of slaughter as the consecration of iniquity; and supported by a number of vegetarian ladies. Lord Coleridge, Q.C., who reminds me much of his lamented father, and who inherits the gifts and graces of his distinguished family, gave a more practical tone by supporting the original resolution in a very neat speech. The chairman made an excellent speech, which, unfortunately, was not reported, the reporters having left. He alluded to the necessity for abattoirs in the meat-producing districts to prevent cattle being driven through towns, stated that he had successfully asphyxiated sheep in a similar lethal chamber to that which he established at the Dogs' Home, and that all cattle could be killed as painlessly as when a man's leg is taken off under chloroform. He also mentioned that he had succeeded in producing from vegetable products food chemically equivalent to that which had gone through the animal system, the only remaining difficulty being that of taste. After a somewhat lengthy discussion, Mr. Foote pointed out that Mr. Oldfield's amendment was rather a counsel of perfection than the subject the Conference had been called to discuss, and ultimately the original resolution was carried, and that of Mr. Oldfield was not put to the meeting.

In the evening the discussion was on "Cruel Sports." The Rev. Hugh Price Hughes took the chair in the place of Mr. Passmore Edwards, who was absent through illness. Mr. Hughes said he should have to run away at eight to another meeting. He has only just learnt of the good work of the Humanitarian League, but he had great opportunities of feeling the pulse of the English conscience, which, he said, was prepared to deal with this question. He should himself hold a conference on the subject in St. James's Hall. The Rev. J. Page Hopps moved: "That this meeting, while disavowing any desire to interfere with legitimate sports and pastimes, respectfully invites the attention of the Government to the need of strengthening the law for the prevention of cruelty to animals by the enactment of the Sport Regulation Bill now before Parliament, and by the discontinuance of the Royal Buck-hounds, an institution which is viewed with the strongest disapproval by a large section of the public." He strongly denounced the brutality of hunting tame animals, and remarked that, if any one announced a Page Hoppe' Cat Hunt, he should take every step possible to disclaim his connection with such an abomination. He wanted to know why Her Majesty did not do so in regard to the hunting of tame bucks which went on in her name, and was paid for out of the people's money. Colonel Coulson seconded, and described the cruelty of rabbit coursing and pigeon shooting. The Rev. J. Stratton, as an eye-witness, described the cruelties to tame stags caused by Her Majesty's Buckhounds, and Mr. A. C. Morton, M.P., who has charge of the Bill on the subject, told how it was blocked by Viscount Cranborne, who takes special charge of the interests of the Church. Mrs. Frederika Macdonald objected to the term "legitimate" sports, and said Humanitarianism resulted from a new view of life, which did not regard our lower fellow beings as given to us solely for our use and pleasure. Mr. Foote proposed the deletion of this passage, and ultimately the proposal of Mr. Hobson, substituting that the Conference was in favor of innocent sports and pastimes, was adopted.

Digitized by Google

My impression of the Conference, as a whole, was decidedly pleasant. If the "faddist" was a little to the front, yet the gathering of a number of representative men and women, earnestly bent on the diminution of suffering and the amelioration of the lot of the humblest of their fellow beings, was cheering to a Secularist, despite the evident attempt of the men of God to "nobble" the humanitarian movement. I mentally contrasted the Conference of the Humanitarian League with the councils of the Church, by no means to the disadvantage of the former. J. M. WHEELER.

WHICH WAY?

BY COLONEL R. G. INGERSOLL.

I HAVE called the lecture I am going to deliver to you this afternoon "Which Way?" because I want you to think very seriously about the two ways that are always before you. There is one way we travel for the world we are in, and the other in which we travel for the world which we expect. Along one road is a tide of people who live for supernatural phantoms; along the other go those who live for what they can know and understand. One set, in a word, lives for God; the other lives for man.

THE WORLD WE KNOW.

Why should we sacrifice the world we have for the one we know not of? Why should we torture ourselves by fasting and deprivation, and weary ourselves with prayer, when we might enjoy the sunshine and sweetness of life? I say to you, do not follow that path. Be a man. Be something that will be counted "one" when the census of the universe is being taken. Take the course that developes the brain and the body, not the one in which man shrinks and withers, and at last dries up.

Since the world began it has loved the supernatural, and it has been fond of the impossible. Look at machines, and think of the labor that has been spent in the search for perpetual motion. In chemistry all science was long concentrated on finding the universal solvent; and one of the seekers was once asked what he was going to hold his universal solvent in after he had found it. In medicine people delighted to be cured by prayers, and the relics of the saints, bits of paper, and the most idiotic remedies. You will find the supernatural in every art, and in every religion, and in every people, in exact proportion to the ignorance of men.

There are two philosophies, illustrating the two ways. One is the philosophy of Diogenes, of Buddha, of Jesus Christ, of the monks and nuns, and of the pulpits. It teaches man to destroy desire, to deprive one's self of everything, to do with little food, and to go clad in rags; to live on roots, berries, and a little water; to live in a den, a barrel, or a desert. It teaches man to avoid men, to restrain his appetites, to go through the world gloomy, unhappy, and miserable, that at last he may become a glorified angel, the heir to an eternity of bliss. That is the ascetic philosophy.

The other is the philosophy of humanity, and it seeks to increase, as well as to gratify, the wants of man. The only way to civilise a people is to increase their wants. The African savage will not work until he has been taught the use of alcohol and tobacco, and then he will scour the continent for elephant tusks to trade for them. Civilised man wants good food, shelter, and clothes, and he should strive to supply himself with everything that can increase the comfort of his body or mind. He should surround himself with art and beauty and ease. I say to you, this is the true philosophy. Deny yourself nothing that will not hurt others or yourself. Make your groans as far apart as you can put them; suffer nothing that you can help suffering; live for this world and for the people in it.

Clergymen, with their faces like sepulchres, tell me that this is "sensualism, that to want nothing beyond comfort and joy and happiness is low." If it is low, how low is their motive who are striving for an eternity of happiness? Does not the harp here sound as sweet as the harp in the next world? Are not joy and content here joy and content anywhere? Enjoy what you can get. Take what you can.

TWO WAYS IN GOVERNMENT.

And so, too, there are two theories of government—the one deriving its authority from the clouds, the other from the consent of the governed. There is not a king nor a prince who is not hid behind the pillars of a church; not an aristocracy that is not grouped about an altar. Their existence depends upon the credulity of the people, and the rulers and the priests work hand in hand to keep that credulity alive. Human society will fall, they tell you, without religion. Many persons think that if you don't believe you want to steal. It is the believers who commit the crimes. Who crucified Jesus Christ? The believers. Who held the hemlock to the mouth of Socrates? The believers. Why, the Devil is a believer; but I have seen no effect of his faith on his moral character. He is just as bad now as he was at first. Calvin was a believer and a murderer. Torquemada was a believer, and he believed in God and torture. The believers have persecuted and racked and tortured and burned until they brought the darkness of the Middle Ages on the world. Voltaire was not a believer, but he was a good man. So were Spinoza, Haeckel, Huxley, Helmholtz, Darwin, Draper, Buckle, and George Eliot. Charles Sumner believed in a better trinity than your churches—the trinity of reason, justice, and liberty.

Religion has cultivated credulity and thrived on it. When the barbarian saw an eclipse of the sun he said, "That means me," and he doubled his gifts to the priests and his sacrifices on the altars to square the offended god. And this feeling is alive in the churches to-day—this sense of our importance in the universe. Ah, my friends, man makes very little difference. If not a human being existed on the earth to-day, the sun would rise just as brightly as ever in the east to-morrow morning, and set in the sapphire islands of the west. The earth's flight would not vary. The violets and the roses would blow. The beauty of the poem of the seasons would be just as lovely. The rainbow would arch the clouds. Spring would weave again her tapestry of green. Wind, wave, and fire, the architects of the globe, would go on if none of us were here.

In olden times the believers held heretics responsible for every disaster. They do yet. A few earthquakes would fill every church in Chicago to overflowing. It would go hard with me then, for very surely I would not be let address an audience like this and awake the further anger of a punishing God. Let a pestilence come, and the priests would thrive again. Famine is always followed by faith. Calamity is the sunshine of superstition. Let disaster occur, and God would soon again be placated with unbelievers. There would soon be sacrifices and prayers and a rattling of the beads and a shutting of the eyes again.

THE RIGHT GOD.

All Christians know that all other gods are false and unreliable; they have the only genuine article. In India they had many gods, and gave much to many priests to keep them in good humor. In the hour of their need the gods deserted them. Think of what Egypt did for its gods; but they were no good, and the descendants of the temple builders are serfs. In Greece, not having enough gods, they erected altars to the unknown God, and Greece went down. The Roman gods fell palsied from their altars when Rome was in extremity. Now, have we the right God? Their gods were all wrong. How about ours? The reverend clergy assure us that theirs is the simon-pure article, and all others are fictitious and fraudulent. How can we tell? Shall we investigate or shall we believe? How can we test the God described in our holy and blessed Bible?

Digitized by Google

To find out a man there is no better way than to give him power and watch how he uses it. Well, God has power, and how has he used it?

Would a decent god appeal to prejudice and make it the armor of faith? Would a decent god make credulity the first condition in his service? Would he frighten or enlighten? Would he love blood, or would he love love? What would a good man do in his place? Take the record. When Adam and Eve were driven out of the garden, did God try to reform them? Did he stoop over to lift them up?—and I tell you no man stands so erect as he who is stooping over a fallen brother. No, this God said, "I will multiply their sorrows," and he told the woman that she should bring forth children in anguish. Now, I will not worship any God who increased the pains of maternity. I won't adore a god who established the torture and the slavery of a sex. I tell you we have got the wrong god.

The clerical teachers tell us that the Bible first gave us the truth, and proved its inspiration by giving us one God instead of a multitude. I say this is not true. Thousands of years before Egypt believed in one supreme God. Not alone that, but they believed in the idiotic doctrine of the trinity, the immortality of the soul, judgment, heaven, and hell. Persia believed in one God, so did the Hindoos; and I tell you more, that in the matter of character Jehovah cannot compare with Zeus or Brahm or the God of the Aztecs, nor with decent people.

Our Jehovah established slavery. Cicero and Zeno protested against it before Christianity came. Jehovah himself says that he is a jealous God, and the ministers urge that he did not mean he was jealous of other gods, but of the images. Think of him—he jealous of a stone god or a wooden god! Compare him with Brahm, who said, "I receive all worship, and reward all worshippers. All gods are me, and all are true gods because they are me." Jehovah broke all his promises to the nation; he gave nothing but disaster, wreck, and misery. Friends, nothing can be worse for any nation than to have Jehovah for its God.

But they say he improved and reformed, and that when he came again 1,900 years ago his temper was sweeter and his morals better. And yet the teacher who, when half a man, said, "Forgive your enemies," when he became all God again said, "Depart, ye cursed of my father, into hell everlasting." Why should the torture be eternal, except, indeed, to give some orthodox angel the pleasure of saying "I told you so" to the damned soul. Think of the futility of the punishment. After the end of infinity that soul will be no better than at the beginning. He will not be reformed; he will be useless, except for more torture. Suppose, after 5,000,000 of years of hell fire, a soul should say to God: "Here I have been burning for 5,000,000 years, and I am no better. I never will be any better. Why waste any more brimstone on me? Give me annihilation." What could God reply?

ETERNAL PUNISHMENT.

What did God come for that has helped to make men higher and nobler? He taught the infamous doctrine of eternal punishment—the dogma that has furrowed the brow and chilled the hearts of generations; that tortured man and made man torture; that gave us the inquisition and the faggot. Church people are shocked that the faith of their fathers should be attacked. It is no honor to our fathers to stick to their mistakes. They will not see how it has taken centuries of persecution to bring us to liberty, and that persecution is founded on hell belief.

Look at it. In the same year that the Emperor Constantine murdered his wife and son, 325, he summoned the Council of Nice to decide upon the nature of the godhead. The council produced the doctrine of consubstantiality, and from that time on for twelve centuries the dogma of the trinity was changed and altered until it took the present form. Think of the millions of souls that have dropped into hell while waiting for the discussion to end, so that they could find out what sort of a trinity they must believe in to avoid hell.

To my mind, the saints of the Middle Ages are responsible for the darkness of the times. They murdered the sunshine. They hated everything that was really good. They brought gloom and sorrow upon the people, and yet they are everlastingly blessed; while the men and women whom they burdened with deadly hell fear are in torment eternal. Can you not see which way to choose?

(To be concluded).

EFFECTS OF ENLIGHTENMENT.

SOME of us are apt to think that enlightenment is now universally recognised as the most important factor of human happiness. Still, one hears it frequently murmured in the corners that one can be too clever, and fingers are pointed to great criminals. Were not these intelligent men? We are well acquainted with the allegations of Christians that knowledge is inferior to faith, although there is a lot of talk about "Christian knowledge"—which is, presumably, equivalent to the "wisdom" of Samuel—i.e., the knowledge of God, and of his will. Indeed, we have recently heard that criminality is increasing in France, as secular teaching is gaining ground. These allegations may be true to a certain extent; but if it is to be inferred that we should confine our seeking for knowledge to the Unknowable, that Science should be stopped in her progress, and that we should keep ourselves and our fellow-men as ignorant of the laws of this visible universe and of things pertaining to this world as possible, then I emphatically say, No.

There is a proverb which says: "Where God builds a chapel, the Devil builds an inn." It is perfectly true. Wherever a good principle is advanced, its corresponding evil crops up alongside of it. This dual force pervades nature. The grandest intellects that ever adorned the world were, as a rule, childishly absurd in certain sides of life. The better men are, the greater inclinations for evil they have to struggle against. Cleverness is apt to assume the shape of cunning. Affectionate natures have the strongest temptations to become sensual. All the religions and systems of the world have their peculiar evils arising out of them to cope with. The higher civilisation, the more warfare and starvation.

But we do not say, "Let us check the progress of these good principles, because they bring their deteriorating influences." We rather help to advance them, and, at the same time, try and suppress the evils. If the secular teaching in France tends to increase criminality, it certainly has its cause in insufficient moral training, as a daily paper has remarked. But education of the moral faculties can be affected apart from what is commonly called religion. Man has made his religions, and the individual chooses to believe in the one that corresponds the most with his character and his mental capacity. The character of man makes his religion, not vice versâ, as sure as Christianity has as many different interpretations as there are Christians.

Instruction—mere dry intellectual study—only widens the faculties that we possess, good and bad alike; sometimes the good more, sometimes the reverse. Education—moral and intellectual—brings forth our good qualities, subdues evil inclinations, vivifies the imagination, broadens our views, exalts the intellect, and ennobles our character. Self-sought enlightenment has as many different effects as there are natures, because the student generally seeks for that kind of knowledge which will gratify the strongest phase of his nature. But the faculty, which has been gratified, is extended all the same, and makes for good in the end. A melancholy temperament, when refined by enlightenment, brings with it a steady, persevering energy, which will leave no stone unturned till the problem is solved, or till the ultimate goal is reached, its motto being, "Thoroughness and toleration." A loving character, beginning with its sympathy at home, will extend its love to its country, and eventually to the whole world. A sanguine or affectionate mind will develop into a fanatic, with the same result as the melancholic. Only it is narrower and more intolerant, and may wreak evil if it is pursuing a bad cause. The seemingly apathetic person, when subjected to enlightenment, will become a stoic with an iron will, unhurt by malicious slander and persecution. And, in conclusion, I would like all self-educators and pedagogues to understand this: A faculty of the human mind can never be annihilated; but it can be led into another channel, to be utilised in the service of good; whereas, in its uncultivated state, if allowed to go its own course, it would make for evil. J. K. Maggarr.

Digitized by Google

ACID DROPS.

We called attention last week to a monstrous utterance by the Rev. Alderman Fleming Williams at a Christian meeting at St. James's Hall. Our criticism of what he said was founded on the report in the Daily Chronicle. We have since seen a full report of this speech in the Methodist Times, and we are sorry to say that the objectionable passage reads worse when we have it verbatim. After denouncing the proposal to divide London into ten distinct municipalities—a proposal so silly that only a perfervid Christian could ever think of going into hysterics over it—Mr. Williams went on to brand it as "a proposal as black as Atheism." This is really outrageous, and Mr. Williams should be asked to recall his words. If he did not utter them in a moment of excitement and forgetfulness, what are we to think of the very different language he used at the Hall of Science during his friendly discussion with Mr. Foote?

Dr. Clifford, at the same meeting, uttered some dreadful nonsense. He said, for instance, that the first London County Council was the gift of God. This is the sort of rubbish we shall meet with more and more as the religious parties press into politics and social reform, and carry on their quarrels with each other at the expense of secular progress.

Fervid Nonconformists like Hugh Price Hughes, Dr. Clifford, and Dr. Horton threw themselves into the London County Council election struggle on the Progressive side. Their support has been of very questionable value; or rather its value has proved to be a minus quantity. The Progressives have lost over twenty seats, and their total poll has diminished by 20,000 votes. The fact is, these men of God are a nuisance in public affairs. They introduce wrong methods and absurd rhetoric; and as the people at large don't want pulpit tricks outside church and chapel, they resent the interference of these men of God who read other people such high moral lessons, and pretend to be so much better than their fellow citizens. If the Progressives want to win in the next elections, they will have to keep the white-chokers out of the battle. It is worth noting that John Burns himself has suffered ever since Hugh Price Hughes took to praising him.

Mrs. Hugh Price Hughes, Mrs. Baxter, and some other leading Nonconformist ladies issued "A Call to Prayer," in view of the London County Council election. The prayers of these pious women do not appear to have been answered.

A terrific hurricane has devastated Fiji. Several churches were destroyed, as well as the Customs Houses.

The severe weather and the influenza epidemic have sent up the London bill of mortality to double its normal rate. This instance of our heavenly father's regards gave the preachers a good opportunity of shaking their hearers over the verge of hell. "We may soon be launched into eternity" we heard a Salvationist exclaim. Evidently he did not think he was in eternity already.

The reactionaries in Germany are not content with bringing back the Jesuits. Dr. Rintelen, of the Centre party, has proposed in the Reichstag to punish, with a fine of six hundred marks or two years' imprisonment, anyone who publicly, or in print, or by illustrations, attacks belief in God, or the immortality of the human soul, or the religious and moral character of matrimony and the family.

The Daily News says: "When it first became known some time ago that this motion was being prepared, a storm of indignation went through the Liberal population of Germany, for it was clear that this monstrous legislative proposal had for its purpose nothing less than the entire destruction of scientific and philosophical research."

Dr. Rintelen remarked that modern science was answerable for the undermining of the belief in God, as was easily proved from the works of modern authors. This literature poisoned the soul of the people, filling them with doubts as to God's existence. What was called science had a most injurious effect on youth. Formerly unbelief was a privilege of the so-called educated classes, and one noticed nothing of it amongst the people. But now it had penetrated to the very lowest classes. By the Bill, as proposed by the Government, only these uneducated classes would be hit, and not the real originators and propagators of irreligion, who sat as professors at the universities.

Dr. Barth (Liberal) hailed the motion with satisfaction, for it exposed the ultimate aims of the reactionists. Should it be passed, a great part of German and foreign literature would have to be prohibited and many of the public libraries destroyed. The motion was an attack upon civilisation. Herr Bebel, leader of the Social Democrats, also sharply criticised the motion, which, as it was not supported by the Government, was lost, though it served to betray the real wishes of the clerical party.

Archbishop Magee was once reported to have said, in the House of Lords, "Drunkenness is jolly." What Dr. Magee did say was "folly."

Mr. J. L. Wilkinson, the chief goods manager of the Great Western Railway, mentioned recently that, in 1840, bishops and clergy along the line petitioned the directors against Sunday trains; and it was stated that travelling by railway was more sinful than travelling by highway.

John Thomas Clayden, a well-dressed Christian worker and preacher in connection with the Independent Church at Lower Edmonton, has been fined 20s. for brutal ill-usage of his wife. Because "she hindered him in his work for Christ" he stuck pins in her, dragged her out of bed, and kicked her round the room. She was granted a separation order, with custody of the children, and the bench ordered Clayden to contribute 12s. 6d. weekly towards their support.

The Rev. G. Hustler, rector of English Bicknor, Coleford, Gloucestershire, has become a bankrupt. He inherited £15,000 from his father, £5,000 from brothers, and £3,000 from an aunt. He had an allowance of £550 yearly, and his income as rector was valued at £400. He estimated that his household expenses had amounted to £1,000 yearly, and his creditors will have to whistle for their money.

The Animals' Friend quotes from "A Civilian's Life in India," "that Hindu boys never dream of throwing a stone at a bird or beast or shouting at them, or in any way annoying them, except in self-defence." Evidently these heathens need Christianising.

Michigan Adventists are said to be giving away their watches, and other earthly possessions, because their prophet tells them that they will be translated to heaven en masse on March 5, 1896. It would be interesting to learn if the possessions find their way to the prophet.

"Another Engineer," writing in the Church Times on "Why Working Men Don't Go to Church," says: "I have worked in factories where there were from 1,000 to 10,000 employed, and I can honestly say I never found a communicant of the English Church in any of the factories."

The Rev. H. E. Warner, in the Homiletic Review, recommends "the judicious study of science" to ministers. He says: "It is not new truth that the world needs, or wants, indeed; but old truths, reached by fearless, vigorous, independent processes." It appears, however, that what he really wants is an emasculated science, to back up what he calls "the great truths of the Gospel."

There is a man in Greenock who is anxious to be interviewed by the papers, because he believes he "is the Shiloh promised in Revelation xii." He desires them to hurry up, because he expects to be translated like Elijah.

"Five prophet evangelists have," says the Westminster, "appeared in Tacoma, Washington, who declare that the world is coming to an end in 1897. They declare that 'nine-tenths of the human race will perish miserably by war, plague, famine, pestilence, and earthquake during the next five years. Satan will be sealed up for a thousand years, and heaven will hang in mid-air all that time. They have seen hell, and it is six thousand miles wide, and long enough to hold all the wicked.' This out-Baxters Baxter."

It is reported that the Catholics, with the blessing of the Pope, are going to organise a special show at the Paris

Digitized by Google

Exhibition in 1900. It is to be a side exhibition, illustrating the origin and growth of Christianity. If it begins at the very beginning, and follows the narrative of Luke, it will be a greater attraction than the danse de ventre was in the Paris Exhibition of 1889.

The theologians are still exercised over the Syriac version of the Gospels, which says Joseph begat Jesus. But is not this the natural conclusion from the genealogies given being those of Joseph? What was the good of tracing Jesus through Joseph to David and Abraham if Joseph had nothing to do with his parentage? The orthodox now take up the position that the reading, "Joseph begat Jesus," is an interpolation. Must not, then, the whole preceding genealogy, beginning "The book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham," be also an interpolation?

Hugh Price Hughes had a correspondence with Lord George Hamilton. This correspondence was sent to the Standard, and the reverend gentleman complains that the Standard did not print it in extenso, but "actually published mere fragments of it." He calls this "dishonorable." Perhaps he will now tell us the proper epithet to apply to his own conduct as editor of the Methodist Times. During the "Atheist Shoemaker" controversy he did not permit a single word of our side of the case to appear in his journal. We, on the other hand, printed both sides impartially, and gave our readers the fullest opportunity of coming to a just decision. Hugh Price Hughes crying out "dishonorable" seems to us very much like Jack the Ripper crying out "murder."

In Tegg's Dictionary of Chronology, 1854, it is stated that in January 7, 1846, a £100 note was lodged in a Dublin bank, and offered to any clairvoyant who could tell its number, date, whence issued, and signature. It was never claimed. At the time of the thought-reading boom with Bishop and Cumberland, Mr. Labouchere offered a £1,000 note, with a similar result. Spiritists, prophets, mejums, mahatmas, and miracle-workers are generally shy of honest tests.

The Christian Herald and its editor, the Prophet Baxter, subsist by pandering to the lowest ignorance and credulity. We do not wonder, therefore, that Prophet Baxter's paper inserts a begging appeal on behalf of the fellow who boasts of his responsibility for the infamous libel on the London Hall of Science, which has just been branded as such by a jury in the Court of Queen's Bench. The baser sort of Christians regard anything as fair against Freethinkers; even collecting money to defray the expenses of an infamy. Not one of the miserable wretches on the Christian side in this libel action has expressed the slightest regret at having circulated a detestable lie. They do not even make a virtue of necessity. Their "charity" is maintained to the very last.

It appears from the Straits Times that "living pictures" have got to Singapore, where, thanks to an advertising denunciation by a Methodist minister, the Rev. Mr. Munson, they are all the rage. The Straits Times strongly advises the man of God to restrain his zeal.

The Jewish Chronicle remarks upon the Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister Bill: "As a matter of fact, the Mosaic Law not only allowed a woman to marry her deceased husband's brother, but in certain circumstances imposed the marriage on the husband's brother as a positive duty.'

We predicted that some one would soon question the Rev. A. Sayce's identification of Nimrod with Nazi Murud, and here already is Mr. St. Chad Boscawen speaking of it as a mare's nest, and declaring that Nimrod has long since been identified with Izdhubar.

According to the Rangoon Times, the native Karen Christians of Burmah have revolted against the authority of the American Baptist missionaries, and mean to manage things in their own way. The R. T. accuses the missionaries of not accounting for money received, and of trading under the plea of doing God service, and under cover of St. Paul's example.

The Freeman complains of the Bishop of Calcutta planting Church missions in the midst of Baptist missions in Bengal. It says: "This very Bishop of Calcutta presides over a diocese of 130,000,000 souls; and we should think that of these nearly, if not quite, 129,000,000 are non-Christians. Why not seek to convert heathens and Mohammedans before attempting to make Baptists Episcopalians?" Probably because the latter job is by far the easier.

A woman in Flemington, Victoria, under the influence of religious mania, or taking seriously the words of Jesus, "If thy right hand offend thee, cut it off," actually chopped off the forefinger of her left hand. She was sent to an asylum. A similar doom would probably be experienced by the author of the nonsense which turned her brain, if he visited any Christian country at present.

Mr. T. S. Henry, of Sydney, who caught Mrs. Mellon personating spirits, has published a pamphlet, Further Light from the Mysteries of Spookland. It includes his sworn deposition that he caught Mrs. Mellon on her knees barefooted, and with a black mask impersonating a black child spirit, and that a false beard and other articles were found in her cabinet.

The Rev. Stewart Smyth, vicar of St. Mark's, Victoria Docks, has been charged, and found guilty, of habitual intoxication and of indecent behavior towards a female parishioner, by the Consistory Court of the Diocese of St. Albans.

The London Missionary Society has been holding its centenary rather jubilantly. It was not noticed that the Bishop of Rochester had declared that the South of London was practically heathen.

Mr. Gladstone is devoting his old-age leisure to theology. He has just brought out a Psalter, and contributed a long article to a People's Pictorial Bible to be issued by a New York firm. In this article, says the Rock, he presses home the question which no Freethinker can answer. Well, we are going to disprove that by answering it, after stating that we have answered it scores of times before.

Mr. Gladstone wants to know, and the Rock wants to know after him, how Christianity gained its enormous influence if it were a fraud or a mere human invention? By twisting statistics he makes out that the Christians are the most numerous body—more numerous even than the Buddhists. Now, suppose we admit this, what does it prove? Mohammedans number (say) two hundred millions; therefore Mohammedanism is a fraud. Buddhists number (say) three hundred millions; therefore Buddhism is a fraud. Christians number (say) four hundred millions; therefore Christianity is true. Such is Mr. Gladstone's logic, when put plainly; and it doesn't require any other answer than just putting it so that everybody can see through it.

God Almighty enters into competition with Buddha. He gives Buddha six hundred years' start, and then takes eighteen hundred years to catch him up! Mr. Gladstone seriously asks us to believe that of Omnipotence!

We make Mr. Gladstone and the Rock a present of the following argument for the supernatural origin of Christianity: No other religion pays so well. No other Bible than the Christian one could bring an aged statesman a handsome cheque for a prefatory article, patting God Almighty on the back. No one gets big cheques for writing prefatory articles to the Koran. Mohammedans are not such fools as to shell out for that kind of commodity. They leave it to the Christians.

Here is another argument, free, gratis, for nothing: Most people are fools. The Christian religion is the most foolish on earth. Therefore the Christians are more numerous than other bodies.—We hope the Rock is satisfied.

NATIONAL SECULAR SOCIETY.

EXECUTIVE MEETING held at the Hall of Science, February 28. The President in the chair. Present: Messrs. V. Roger, J. M. Wheeler, W. Heaford, J. Potter, G. J. Warren, G. Ward, E. Bater, E. Quay, H. J. Stace, C. Thomas, A. F. Taylor, and the Secretary.

Minutes of previous meeting read and confirmed. Cash statement received. An application from the South Shields Branch was referred to the Organisation Committee, and the Secretary instructed to write the Branch. The President reported that the N.S.S. had been represented at the Conference of the Humanitarian League by himself, Mr. J. M. Wheeler, and other delegates, and a resolution successfully carried in accordance with N.S.S. principles. Also, that the recent libel action in connection with the Hall of Science had resulted in a verdict in our favor, with damages.

The Branches willing to receive the Conference were: Bristol, Chatham, Glasgow, and Nottingham; and the Secretary was instructed to make further inquiries in regard to accommodation for delegates, and to issue the circulars to enable all Branches to record their votes. The meeting adjourned. E. M. VANCE (Assistant-Secretary).

Digitized by Google

Mr. Foote's Engagements.

Sunday, March 10, Miners' Hall, Ryhope :—10.30, "Will Christ Save Us?"

Sunday, March 10, People's Palace, High-street, Sunderland :—3, "Did Jesus Christ Ever Live?" 7, "A Search for the Soul."

March 17, Nottingham; 24, Bristol.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

MR. CHARLES WATTS'S ENGAGEMENTS.—March 17, Hall of Science, London; 24, Hall of Science, London; 31, Newcastle-on-Tyne. April 7, Sheffield.—All communications for Mr. Watts should be sent to him (if a reply is required, a stamped and addressed envelope must be enclosed) at 81 Effra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

J. K. LENTHORPE.—The essays you speak of are certainly not by Sir Charles Lyell. There is no copy of them in the British Museum.

C. E. SMITH.—A full account of Rachel Dashwood Lee, the "Female Infidel" of De Quincey's Autobiographic Sketches, and of the circumstances of her abduction, is given in the Secular Almanack for this year.

TRURO.—The Freethinker may be obtained from Mr. Vincent, newsagent.

JAMES ROWNEY, 1 Carthusian-street, E.C., will send catalogue of Freethought and other books of his library to any desirous of purchasing.

J. CARVER.—We can only smile at the fellow's "moral victory" and "premature grey hairs." We do not intend to notice his ravings.

J. KRAFT.—See paragraph. Please send us a copy of the bill you issue at Bristol. Branches should always do this in the case of Mr. Foote's lectures. Some of them omit to do it, and cause him inconvenience.

G. R.—We hope to insert your "Christian Puzzle."

H. R. SANDELL.—Why should we waste a minute over the scoundrel's vaporings? Mr. Foote's writings are all published openly, and all bear his name. Those who wish to prosecute him are free to try their hands at the business. Their attack is awaited with the most perfect equanimity.

E. A. CUMBER.—The forbidden fruit got to be called an apple by men in apple-growing countries. Now every man was once a boy, and most boys have "had it" for filching apples.

J. W. ELSWORTH.—Your advertisement, we believe, was not sent to us direct, but to Mr. Forder. We will see him about the matter as soon as he is well enough to attend to business, and let you know the result.

AGNOSTIC (Rangoon).—G. W. M. Reynolds's Errors of the Christian Religion was published in 1832. It is scarce. For particulars of his life you had better write to Reynolds's Newspaper.

E. HORSLEY.—The anecdote in Mushler seems given only as an instance of monkish ignorance. There was, however, a German Franciscan who seriously argued that the New Testament was written in Latin, as did also the learned Jesuit, Father Hardouin.

J. STEWARD.—(1) Mr. Bradlaugh did not refuse to affirm when he first went to the House of Commons; on the contrary, he claimed to affirm, and was actually sued for £500 penalty for sitting and voting without having taken the oath. (2) Mr. Bradlaugh did not "recant." He never said a word about religion during his last illness. On this matter we have the word of his daughter, Mrs. Bradlaugh Bonner, and the signed testimony of the professional nurses. It is really sickening to have to contradict these Christian falsehoods.

N.S.S. BENEVOLENT FUND.—Miss E. M. Vance acknowledges:—W. Bed, £1 1s.; M. Christopher, 2s.; Derby Branch, 5s.

H. W. JONES.—Glad to have the congratulations of the Blackburn friends. As you say, the boasts of the libellers have ended in a miserable whine. If this lesson is not a warning to others, we shall have to administer a further dose of the same medicine; in fact, it is half-invited already.

E. S.—(1) Tertullian was a heated rhetorician and an unscrupulous partisan. No historian attaches the slightest value to any of his statements. Nero never issued an edict against the Christians; there were no laws against them at the time of Trajan; nor was any form of religious opinion, as such, ever put under the ban of the law during the reign of the Pagan emperors. Persecution for opinion was introduced into the Roman jurisprudence under Constantine, the first Christian emperor. See the first chapter of Crimes of Christianity. (2) Certainly the N.S.S. has no objection to its members joining a Socialist organisation. Why should it?

J. A. WILKINSON.—There is no "Easter Saturday" that we know of. Easter Sunday is a Church date, and Easter Monday came in use as a holiday. If an "Easter Saturday" must be made up, it would, of course, be the Saturday after Easter Sunday.

W. BALCK, 8 Celia-road, London, N., desires to form an instrumental band composed exclusively of N.S.S. members. Those who are willing to join should communicate with him, and state the instrument they play. Players, not aspirants, are wanted. Mr. Balck doesn't want applicants like the man who was asked if he could play on the violin, and who replied: "I don't know; I never tried."

J. SEDDON (Manchester).—Mr. Foote will offer you another date shortly.

A. P. CURTIS.—Thanks. See paragraph.

J. MORISON.—It appeared in our last issue. Thanks all the same.

D. T. W.—See "Acid Drops."

E. H. DALY.—Thanks. Your cuttings are always welcome.

W. W. DICKSON, Park-lane, Newbury, would like to become acquainted with any local readers of the Freethinker. This correspondent was a Christian till three years ago, when he suffered a painful bereavement. A friend lent him the Age of Reason and a few copies of the Freethinker, to which he soon became a regular subscriber.

LECTURE NOTICES must reach 28 Stonecutter-street by first post Tuesday, or they will not be inserted.

PAPERS RECEIVED.—Rangoon Times—North Star—Straits Times—Church Reformer—Vegetarian Messenger—De Dagsraad—Two Worlds—Civil Service Prayer Union Quarterly Paper—Isle of Man Times—Animals' Friend—Newcastle Leader—Open Court—Twentieth Century—Progressive Thinker—Liberty—Reynolds's Newspaper—Lyttleton Times—Liberator—Brisbane Telegraph—Free Methodist News—Glasgow Herald—Speler—Leek Times.

FRIENDS who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish to call our attention.

LETTERS for the Editor of the Freethinker should be addressed to 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

The Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the publishing office, post free, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 10s. 6d.; Half Year, 5s. 3d.; Three Months, 2s. 8d.

SCALE OF ADVERTISEMENTS.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 4s. 6d.; half column, £1 2s. 6d.; column, £2 5s. Special terms for repetitions.

CORRESPONDENCE should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

IT being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will receive the number in a colored wrapper when their subscription expires.

ORDERS for literature should be sent to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

SUGAR PLUMS.

MR. FOOTE lectured at Camberwell on Sunday evening. Considering the bitter weather, there was a capital attendance, and the audience seemed highly interested. Mr. Foote lectures to-day (March 10) at Sunderland, where he hopes to meet many of his Durham and Northumberland friends. The People's Palace is a large one, and good meetings will be necessary to keep it moderately warm.

The Ryhope friends appear to think that Mr. Foote is made of cast-iron. They invited him to lecture in the Miners' Hall on Saturday evening (March 9), and he agreed to do so. Then, without obtaining his consent, they advertised his lecture for Sunday morning. Of course they meant it for the best. Ryhope, however, is a train ride from Sunderland; it is a good walk (and very likely a dirty one) from Ryhope Station to the Miners' Hall. All this discomfort, especially in such weather, would be trying to the strongest of men, if he had to deliver two other lectures on the same day in a big hall at Sunderland—to say nothing of the discussion that may follow. Three lectures in one day are a tax under the best circumstances. No man alive could keep on doing it, Sunday after Sunday, without at least having quiet and comfort before and after the lectures. People should really remember this, and not fancy, after hearing a lecture, that the lecturer is just as fresh as they are, when he is often terribly fagged. Mr. Foote happens to be carrying about the relics of a cold, which he hardly expects to get rid of until the weather changes; and this makes it doubly unpleasant to have such a day's work mapped out for him by excellent, but in this instance injudicious, friends.

Mr. Charles Watts has been fighting the influenza. We are happy to state that he is the winner. On Sunday last he was to have lectured at Manchester, and he foolishly went as far as Euston station; but finding himself quite too ill to travel, he was obliged to go home again and return to bed. Mr. Forder and Miss Vance have also been down with the fashionable malady. They too are happily recovering. It is this aspect of the case which justifies a paragraph in "Sugar Plums."

On Wednesday, March 13, at 7 o'clock, the Bristol Branch will celebrate their anniversary at Shepherds' Hall. There will be vocal and instrumental music, recitations, dancing, etc.

Digitized by Google

The Annual General Meeting of the Finsbury Park Branch will be held at 91 Mildmay-park, N., on Sunday next, March 10, at 3 p.m. prompt, when a full attendance is particularly requested, as the open-air season is near at hand, and it is desired to make arrangements for the lectures. Members in arrears with their subscriptions should bring their cards.

The Gentlemen's Annual Tea Party at the Failsworth Secular School was a complete success, and the profits (a little over £16) go towards the expenses of the Whit Friday procession.

Great Thoughts (March 6) gives a portrait of Mr. G. B. Shaw, and an article by that gentleman on "Socialism in the Twentieth Century," predicting all sorts of nice things for all except idle landlords, shareholders, and capitalists.

De Dageraad, of Amsterdam, opens with an article on the results of historical criticism on the old beliefs. In the "Universal Review" a number of items are translated from the Freethinker.

The Rev. E. Lloyd Jones appears to be a liberal preacher. He is reported in the North-Eastern Daily Gazette as having said: "The cruellest things done in England to-day were done in the name of Christ. Did they not find that the country was full of social bitterness owing to a difference of theological beliefs? Did they not find that honest men were ostracised because of the sincerity of their religious convictions? Was not the history of the Established Church an example of that? They could not imprison them, but they could look on them with social contempt. If he wanted to see the truest example of the spirit of Christ, he would not go to the bishops and clergy, but to the noble Agnosticism of John Morley."

The February number of the Independent Pulpit (Waco, Texas) contains some interesting original articles, and a reprint from the Freethinker of Mr. Wheeler's article on "Hypocrisy."

D. T. K. Cheyne contributes a notable letter to the Academy (February 23) on the subject of the reading in the new Syriac gospels. He admits that in the story of the Incarnation the relation of mythology to the Biblical traditions must be taken into account. He says: "For the virgin birth of the Lord Jesus (the ideal value of which is clearly by no means inseparable from the outward form of the story) we have not only the more familiar mythic parallels, but the story of the wonderful birth of Zarathustra by a ray of the divine glory descending from one sphere to another till it reached the bosom of Dughdo, mother of the prophet. The latter story has, of course, no historical connection with that in Matthew i.; its probable antiquity is admitted by Darmesteter; and its value as a parallel is not affected by the legendary character of Dughdo. It is also a fact of importance that mythic elements attached themselves to the mother of Jesus in post-evangelical times in Egypt, Arabia, and Asia Minor."

Dr. Lyman Abbott, the successor of Ward Beecher at Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, in a sermon preached on January 28, frankly confessed himself an Evolutionist. After giving his opinion that the stories of the Creation and the Fall of Man in Genesis cannot be reconciled with the teaching of science, Dr. Abbott proceeded as follows: "I believe Genesis iii. to be an ancient legend, which a greater writer took, as Tennyson took the Arthurian legends, and rewrote it, in order that he might write it into a moral and spiritual lesson. I think that the Hebrew people believed that the Fall of Man affected the whole human race. I think very likely Paul believed so; at all events, Paul used that belief in his arguments and teachings with the Hebrew people in his writing; but when he came to speak of sin, as he does in Romans vii., he has nothing to say about Adam, nothing to say about original sin; his prophecy is on an entirely different level; it is in every respect consistent with the notion that man started out of the germ, and has grown through animal conditions to his present status."

Christianity and Race.

The origin, development, and teaching of primitive Christianity were essentially Semitic, since it had its origin in a people of that race, and in a man of that people. Yet the Semitic race did not become Christian; and, after so many ages have elapsed, it still rejects Christianity. It was the Aryan race, to which we Europeans belong, which adopted this teaching and became essentially Christian, although this race is psychologically the most idolatrous of the world—as far as the æsthetic idol, not the common fetish, is concerned.—Tito Vignoli, "Myth and Science," p. 177.

OF WHICH JESUS WAS PAUL A DISCIPLE?

IN a short article—"Paul on Christ"—in the Freethinker dated August 20, 1893, I pointed out that, according to his own statement, Paul was a follower of Christ some sixty years before Jesus of Nazareth was born. A Christian, who has recently read my remarks, suggests that the reference in 2 Corinthians xi. 32 is to the Aretas, who was father-in-law of Herod Antipas. The suggestion is ingenious; and, as it is made use of as a sort of argument, it may be worth while to briefly notice it.

At the outset, it is of the utmost importance to remember that of the Jesus of the Gospels history knows nothing—apart, of course, from the hopes and fears and crimes of those who have professed to be his followers. Here and there an ignorant Christian may still quote the spurious passage in the Antiquities of Josephus; but Christian scholars, and even writers like Archdeacon Farrar, have long recognised it as an interpolation. Pace, then, Blaise Pascal and his modern imitators, who, with extreme simplicity, have contended that the silence of Jewish and Roman writers was intentional, and that thus the position of the Christian is the more secure, one thing is clear to the impartial student of Christianity, and that is that, whether Professor Johnson be wholly right or mostly wrong, the Christ of the Gospels never existed outside the imagination of his worshippers.

The next question is, Who was Paul? What does history tell us of him? As the writer of the article on "Paul" in the Encyclopædia Britannica truly says: "We have no means of knowing when he was born, or how long he lived, or at what times the several events of his life took place." Justin Martyr never mentions Paul, nor does he quote any of his writings, although he deals with the doctrines of Marcion, who was Paul's greatest disciple. Christian tradition represents Paul as visiting Athens, Corinth, Ephesus, Rome, and other places, boarding Roman and Greek philosophers in their strongholds, and despatching his extraordinary letters broadcast over the civilised world. But, if this be true, the silence of all historians concerning the Apostle of the Gentiles is inexplicable. In face of facts like these, the common argument, that there is surely a great personality behind the four "genuine" epistles, loses all its force. In any case, the important question is, When did this "great personality" exist? This point must be decided by the epistles themselves.

Now, the only passage that will serve as a time-marker is that one in which Paul describes his escape from Damascus "under Aretas the king." It is argued that the Aretas here referred to was the father-in-law of Herod Antipas. But is this likely? Damascus was held by a king Aretas some sixty years B.C., when Syria was conquered by Pompey and annexed to the Roman dominions; but history knows nothing of any subsequent king Aretas ruling at Damascus. The father-in-law of Herod Antipas was king of Arabia Petræa, while Antipas was tetrarch of Galilee; and although Josephus tells us that Aretas made war on Antipas and defeated him when Herod put away his wife in order to marry Herodias, there is nothing to show that Herod's father-in-law ever ruled at Damascus. By the way, it may be noted that this quarrel occurred just as Tiberius died, and Herod appealed for assistance to Caligula. So that, in any case, the chronology of the Gospels is inconsistent with Jewish, as it is also with Roman, history; for the Synoptics represent Herod as cohabiting with Herodias much earlier. Discussing 2 Corinthians xi. 32 in the Free Review for April, 1894, Mr. J. M. Robertson—a writer who, like Mr. J. M. Wheeler, must surely prove very helpful to studious young Freethinkers—opines that, in the unsettled state of the country about the time of the death of Tiberius, there may very well have been an occupation of Damascus under an Aretas, "otherwise it is to be presumed later Christians would have deleted the passage." But to have been consistent they would have selected every unhistorical reference in the Gospels, as well as in the epistles, and this would have been "a large order." There remains, of course, as Mr. Robertson further says, the question whether the passage is a forgery, based on Acts ix. 25.

On the whole it would seem reasonable to assume that, if the passage be genuine, the reference is to the Aretas of whom history does speak as king at Damascus—i.e., to "Aretas, the King," who ruled there when Syria was conquered by Pompey. This, of course, will connect Paul with an earlier Jesus than the hero of the Gospels. But, apart from Christian tradition, what is there to connect Paul with the Gospel Jesus? Even if we could regard the Christ of the Synoptics as a real historical character, it is evident that Paul did not know him. The utmost the epistles can be held to prove is that, assuming the historic actuality of Paul, he believed in a slain and risen Christ. They reveal no knowledge of Christ's parents, or of his miracles, or of his teachings. And in connection with Paul's belief in a slain and risen Savior, it is important to remember:—

Digitized by Google

(1) The significance of Paul's doctrine that it behoved the Christ to suffer and to rise from the dead.

(2) The prevalency of this belief before the time of the Gospel Jesus.

I am no scholar myself, but I have endeavored to acquaint myself with what scholars on both sides have written. And, taking a purely judicial view of the alleged facts, the conclusion seems to me irresistible that the Christ believed in by Paul was a pre-Christian Jesus. Who that Jesus was is another question. Many have suggested Jeschu Ben-Pandira, of whom the Rev. S. Baring Gould says: "That there really lived such a person as Jeschu Ben-Pandira, and that he was a disciple of the Rabbi, Jehoshua Ben-Perachia, I see no reason to doubt. That he escaped from Alexander Jannæus with his master into Egypt, and there studied magical arts; that he returned after awhile to Judea, and practised his necromantic arts in his own country, is also not improbable. Somewhat later the Jews were famous, or infamous, throughout the Roman world as conjurers and exorcists. Egypt was the head-quarters of magical studies. That Jeschu, son of Pandira, was stoned to death in accordance with the law, for having practised magic, is also probable."* The suggestion that this was Paul's Jesus would seem, on the whole, a good one; and, toute de même, I, at least, am prepared to accept it, provisionally.

ANDREW LIDDLE.

CHRISTIAN CIVILISATION.

CHRISTIAN civilisation and the Christian God strongly resemble each other. Much talked of, but never seen; neither have existence outside of the Christian imagination.

That many nominally Christian countries have attained a high degree of civilisation is certainly true. Where this is the case their Christianity has been largely diluted with Freethought, and the leaders in the upward march have either discarded it entirely or received it in its most diluted form. A dose of it in its full strength paralyses the intellect and renders man incapable of progress. Nations, really Christian, are always low down in the scale. Such advancement as they have made they have been compelled to fight for step by step against the opposing power of a Church. Where Christianity has acquired control of a people previously civilised, their civilisation has been slain.

To Egypt once flocked the best of earth's inhabitants, in pursuit of learning and of wisdom. In her schools philosophers were instructed, who carried to their own lands the instruction they had received. Her scientists traced the course of the planets when other races regarded the stars as tiny lamps suspended from the sky. Her architects erected gigantic structures, which to-day astonish the beholder. There was civilisation along the shores of the Nile centuries before the alleged birth of Jesus. But Christianity came, blighting the land with its infectious threat, cursing the people with its bitter, cruel dogmas, until some, in their wild fanaticism, fled to the deserts, living and dying with no companions but ferocious beasts; and others remained among men, but, neglecting all human interests, striving to win a heaven hereafter instead of making a heaven here, they sank lower and lower, from generation to generation. Between the cross and the crescent a civilisation more perfect, in some respects, than any we have in our time, and older by thousands of years than this earth, according to Bible chronology, was strangled to death, and its very memory sought to be obliterated from the historic page.

Greece saw the highest intellectual development to which humanity has yet attained. Long before the Christian era she was the home of poetry, of science, of art, of the purest virtues, and of the noblest deeds. But Greece became corrupt and weakened. In her decadence she bowed her neck to the cross. If we ask for her civilisation to-day, we must seek it among lazy beggars or ignorant fishermen, as they mumble their prayers while waiting for the finny tribe to enter the dragging net.

Rome, pagan Rome, once mistress of the world, once civiliser of savage hordes, whose rule was a blessing to the races subdued by her victorious arms—where is the power of her glorious institutions? Where is the light of her mighty mind? Fled when papal Rome usurped her authority and established a rule which proved a curse. But now the descendants of her stern old citizens are rising again. The enlightened among them refuse to submit longer to the yoke of the priesthood. Strong Roman hands are pulling down the crucifix. In the place of Jesus and of Peter they are honoring the nobler names of real saviors and of real men—of Giordano Bruno, and of Guiseppe Garibaldi.

Point to a spot where Christianity lives and reigns, where it has active power over the minds and regulates the action of a people, and you mark where the face of humanity is turned backward. It is false to say that the Church of Rome alone is guilty. The guilt of all the Churches is a question only of degree to be measured by the extent of their power. The poorest little Protestant sect is as persecuting as that great Church where its authority is as unquestioned. The meanest Bible thumper is as great a tyrant over the few he can enslave as the Pope is over the many. Anathema or social ostracism, the stake or the trade boycott, the rack and the wheel, or the tongue of envenomed slander, it matters not which. The sentence is the same in spirit, whether it is pronounced by a son of Dominic in a tribunal of the Inquisition, or by some Reverend Stiggins at a pious tea. It is always that human thought must be chained, that human progress must cease. The only difference is that between the big dog who can tear his victim's throat, and the little cur who can but snarl and snap at his heels.

Italy, Spain, Ireland, are at the feet of the Roman Church. The civilisations once theirs exist no longer. Russia is enslaved by the Greek Church, and her condition is one of semi-barbarism. Liberty is unknown to her people, and he who dares but to blame her may end his days amid Siberian snows, or perish on the scaffold. England and Scotland are but emerging from periods of subjection to their respective forms of Protestant belief. As they rise up and grow, as they develop their natural powers, they cast away the shackles placed upon them by ecclesiastical authority. In our own land we have had Christianity retarding our civilisation. We have had Blue laws. We have them yet, and even some Christians, still living at the close of this nineteenth century, who endeavor from time to time to procure their enforcement. Miserable traitors to the freedom of man, who would impose upon us all the observances of their religion, with or without our consent. These are not the people to whom we owe our railroads, our telegraphs, and the many conveniences that make life easy. They are not the people who have discovered the laws of health and the means of benefitting the masses. The world's benefactors have almost, to a man and woman, been free from theological creeds and practices. They have labored to make heaven on earth. The heaven of the Christians would be altogether too poor and mean a recompense for their grand good works.

All nations who have once started in the path of progress have continued to advance so long as their freedom to do so has been unrestrained. The people who govern themselves improve; those governed by others deteriorate. If the ruling power be of the clerical class, the populace are abject slaves, physically and mentally. Christianity and civilisation cannot unite. They are essentially antagonistic. Civilisation is the state of humanity developed and developing. Christianity would prohibit the development of the human race, that it might not outgrow its resemblance to the image of its early barbarism, the Christian God.

E. J. BOWTELL.

—Boston Investigator.

* Vide "Lost and Hostile Gospels," pp. 62, 63.

Digitized by Google

A FORBIDDEN PLAY.

HAUPTMANN'S Socialistic drama, Die Weber, has been banished from the stage in Germany on the pretext that it undermines (!?) the moral status of the country. In this remarkable play the sufferings of the poor weavers are graphically described, and the machinations of the scoundrels who live by the exploitation of all who labor are exposed with great fidelity. All is drawn from life, even the shooting of the weavers by those licensed assassins, the soldiers.

When only a boy, I remember receiving a poem in MS. from a friend of Heinrich Heine, which was circulated privately in Germany, and caused the most poignant grief to all who read it. It was to have appeared in the Romancero, but the German censor ordered it to be suppressed more than forty years ago. This poem is, I assert, the keynote to Hauptmann's play, Die Weber. The author is Heinrich Heine. Translation :—

"THE SILESIAN WEAVERS.

"No tears in their dimmed eyes; they are seated at the loom, and grind their teeth: Germany, we weave thy shroud, we weave into it the threefold curse ;—we weave.

"A curse upon God to whom we have prayed in winter's bitter cold and starvation; in vain we longed and hoped; He has mocked, derided, and fooled us ;—we weave.

"A curse upon the king, the king of the rich, whose heart our misery could not soften; who squeezed the last coppers from us, and orders us to be shot like dogs ;—we weave.

"A curse upon the false fatherland where naught but shame and degradation thrive; where the sweet flower is quickly nipped, where foulness and rot quicken the worm ;—we weave.

"The shuttle flies, the loom rattles; we weave diligently day and night. O, Germany, we weave thy shroud; we weave into it the threefold curse ;—we weave."

"The threefold curse" is an allusion to the national colors—black, red, and gold.* The poet Freiligrath sang during the revolution of 1848: "Powder is black, blood is red, golden flashes the flame;" for which he was banished as inciting the people to revolt.

A day of reckoning will come. Those who toil hardest must not always be the slaves of a hardened and cruel plutocracy. Man alone will avenge the wrongs of mankind, and Job's prayer will be heard: "I know that my avenger liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth" (xix. 25). Then the gods will be dead—one and all.

CHARLES KROLL LAPORTE.

RELIGION IN JAPAN.

BUDDHISM in Japan is too firmly implanted amongst the vast mass of forty odd millions of people to be lightly brushed away. With experience of official responsibility and the cares of government under the new transient conditions, wiser counsels prevailed; many of the best men of the old régime came into office, and a superior class of clansmen appeared in the van of the restoration, desiring progress and the betterment of their country. The power of the priesthood was felt and recognised, and whilst in politics their interference was very properly prohibited, the value of their goodwill was felt. Mischievous meddling ceased, and the people were left to follow their own inclinations, home or foreign, Shinto or Christian, Buddhist or what not.

Whilst individual foreign missionaries have made friends and gained some influence, yet as a body they are not held in high esteem. Their relations with the foreign colonies at the treaty ports, which consist of persons of many nations and various degrees of education, are not so cordial as to lead the natives to suppose that the class from which missionaries are recruited are held in high respect in their own lands.

At the same time, the natives that visit the missionaries see something of foreign domestic life. The tone of the homes, the comfortable houses, the family relations of the Protestant missionaries—all contrast with the comparative wretchedness of the native home life (of the lower classes), and excites the envy of those who cannot imitate it. The missionaries' wives and their female domestics work in the girls' schools, gain some influence, and do some good in teaching the future wives and mothers, and in busying themselves with match-making between the young people supposed to be favorably inclined towards Christianity.

With the aid of schools, medical mission work, and other institutions, numbers of foreign missionaries, representing many different sects of Christianity from various parts of Europe and America, still reside, on sufferance, throughout the islands.

"The bread cast upon the waters" does not always return; the seed spread broadcast does not give the harvest desired, more often bearing fruit other than that intended, for the native students have their own ideas and ways of applying what is presented to them.

One result is a reaction and consequent activity among the Buddhists, and a growing desire not to be left behind in the competition.

Out of the chaos of indigenous and foreign religious and philosophical literature perused, new ideas arise. No foreigner can foresee the end, and no two Japanese agree as to the ultimate outcome of it all. The "smart" writer or lecturer of the day is followed by another, who, in his turn, gains transient notoriety.

The indigenous cults, Shintoism and Buddhism, as modified by the Japanese during the dozen or more centuries of its existence in the country, are still closely allied, and together form a very solid foundation for any superstructure of the future. Buddhism, in its entirety as a system, lends itself readily to the course of events from age to age, so that in the future there is no doubt of its adaptation to the needs, aspirations, and sentiments of the people.

With the proper education of carefully-selected aspirants for sacerdotal office, a generation or so would produce great advances in liberality, and would relegate objectionable features to the limbo of oblivion.

There is a special feature of Japanese Buddhism that is unique and of sufficient importance to warrant notice, the more so as it probably forms an important factor of the future.

The Jodo Shin Shiu sect, the new Jodo, now called Shīn, or true, sect, consisting of several branches, the East and West, the Butzukoji, Takada, and Koshoji, with several other smaller sects, include a large percentage of the temples and followers of Buddhism in Japan. Office is practically hereditary; failing male issue, a husband is adopted for the daughter, being almost invariably selected from the same order, to fill vacancies. As numerous progeny is common, many lay families, well-to-do farmers and traders, by intermarriage become closely related, and the position of incumbents in the temples of the sect occupy a somewhat parallel social position to the Church of England parson in aristocratic old England, where "blood is thicker than water," and family ties mean "taking care of Dowb."

Whatever objections there may exist to a hereditary sacerdotal class, whether from the Asiatic, foreign, Christian, or Buddhist standpoint, the fact still remains, that the greater respectability of the Shin-shiu incumbents, their social position, family ties, and consequent greater influence, are important points not to be lost sight of.

In other sects, scions of noble lineage are "settled," and too numerous offspring of those by birth "near the throne" are got rid of, and future legitimate offspring checked, by placing these, male and female, in the monasteries of one or other of the celibate sects—a policy that also binds the priesthood of these sects to the reigning dynasty.

In the Shin-shiu the noble offspring of both sexes are adopted into or married to the heads of the sect or sub-sect, thus adding to the prestige thereof; and the children, when numerous, are "settled out" in the principal monasteries, the incumbents thus being linked by family ties.

The personal interest in the temple, the congregation, and the neighborhood is thus very strong, and continuous from parent to child; practical freedom from anxiety as to old age is removed, and entire devotion to the sect secured.

The very best results may be hoped in the future from the young men of this sect, notwithstanding its sectarian narrowness and limitations of creed; the very simplicity of which makes it acceptable to the illiterate class of toilers—the laborer, agriculturist, etc.—and popular.

The best and truest friends of Buddhism in general, and of this sect in particular, will do well to get a good knowledge of all the objections that may be advanced against the hereditary system, and to spread it as widely as possible amongst the future incumbents of office, so that one and all may carefully avoid those characteristics that arouse hostile feeling and give ground for antagonistic criticism, all of which readers of the Open Court are familiar with. Because a youth is sure to succeed his father upon death or retirement in old age, that is no reason he should be dilatory in his studies; or that he should "give himself airs" as a "person of superior birth," or look upon his position as a sinecure to which it has been his good fortune to be born, and therefore "take things easy" and go through his duties and the routine services in a half-hearted perfunctory spirit.

The sect has established schools, and sent some of its people abroad to study at a very considerable cost. These number among them such well-known and scholarly names as B. Nanjio, M.A., Oxon, R. Akamatzu, and many others, through whose efforts the study of Sanskrit is, after many centuries, again being taken up in Japan.

* Schwarz-roth-gold.

Digitized by Google

Japan is, undoubtedly, at present, the most important Buddhist centre, and in the future may become to Buddhism what Rome was to Christianity. As Japan has not suffered by foreign conquest as other lands have—Ceylon, etc., for instance—the Buddhism received from the mainland still remains intact; the oldest temples still exist; and the teaching is yet unchanged and unalloyed. And as the bonzes are intellectually the superiors of those in other countries, and far better taught, we may look upon the future as hopeful if proper attention be given to the education of the youths destined to become the officiating clergy in the temples and homes of the people.

In Japan may be seen "the meeting of the waters" from the east and from the west—the old and the new. Asiatic, Aryan, and Turanian, the European, and later the American; education, science, philosophy, and religion.

America, too, has become the common meeting-ground for all the aspirations and ideals of the old civilisation and the progressive, practical ideas of the new, as shown in its liberalism in religion and in its recent congresses. The general feeling is, to glean from all, to gather from all sources. The echo, and the counter echoes, east to west, and west to east, resound about the globe. And who shall gainsay the truth that we can teach and learn, and impart fresh energy to the old that reciprocates by giving us the old-time wisdom; like ballast for the clipper, so that more canvas may be spread and more rapid progress attained? The platform has been made free to the Asiatic, Buddhist, Hindu, and Mohammedan alike; the pulpit is open to all, and every one who has a message to deliver, and is competent to set it forth, may do so. And nevermore can platform or pulpit be closed. Hereafter it will be the narrow sectarian, the little-minded bigot, the pitiable fanatic alone who shall refuse the open hand of fellowship to all alike. And, in the near future, the true, liberal Buddhist, when weighed in the balance, will not be found wanting.

—Open Court. C. Pfoundes.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE FREEDOM OF THE DRAMA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE FREETHINKER."

Sir,—It is necessary, now that the office of the Censorship of Plays is vacant through the death of Mr. Piggott, the late Censor, that a strong effort should be made to have this relic of mediævalism abolished. It is amazing that the English people should submit to a tyranny and an insult such as is implied in the maintaining of the office, the more especially as we turn up our eyes in horror at anything in the shape of interference with liberty of speech in other countries. Yet it is difficult to see a tittle of difference between our Dramatic Censorship and the Press Censorship of the Czar.

For the moment it is not necessary to dwell on the demerits of the late Censor—unless, indeed, the upholders of the office force its opponents to do so. But the fact that Mr. Piggott refused to license such a play as Shelley's Cenci, and only allowed Ibsen's plays to be performed because he considered them beneath contempt, while at the same time never apparently withholding his sanction to the most suggestive and smutty of burlesques—the one essential of such performances being, seemingly, that the indecency should be sufficiently obvious—all this presents a complete case against keeping such an anomaly.

The insult, too, offered to the play-going public by the implication that, without such a check, it would plunge headlong into obscenity and disorder, is monstrous. It is put better than I have seen it put, by Mr. Bernard Shaw in a vigorous article, entitled "Down with the Censorship," in the current Saturday Review. He writes: "The justification of the Censorship is to be found in the assumption repeatedly and explicitly advanced by the late holder of the office that, if the stage were freed, managers would immediately produce licentious plays, actresses would leave off clothing themselves decently, and the public would sit nightly wallowing in the obscenity which the Censor now sternly withholds from them. This assumption evidently involves the further one that the Examiner of Plays is so much better than his neighbors as to be untainted by their assumed love of filth. This is where the theory of the Censorship breaks down in practice. The Lord Chamberlain's reader is not selected by examination either in literature or morals. His emoluments, estimated at about £800 a year, will fetch nothing more in the market than well-connected mediocrity."

This puts the matter in a nutshell. But as Freethinkers we are especially concerned with all that threatens freedom in any direction. And it is a scandal that the dramatist is under a restraint and an injustice from which the journalist or the painter or the composer is free. It is probably a relic of the time when the stage was under a social ban, and acting and play-wrighting looked on as the pursuit of the vulgar and the immoral. Even amongst the rigid Puritans there is still the idea that actors are terrible fellows, actresses abandoned women, and the theatre the gate of the "broad-way." Still, however, the voice of all self-respecting men and women must be raised in protest against the continuance of an office which insults their taste by presuming that they are unable to choose for themselves what plays they shall see, and that, if left to themselves, they would sanction degraded or vicious performances.

While, therefore, the office of Examiner of Plays is vacant, and before (as has been said) a new vested interest is created, it is necessary that the cry should go forth, loud and strong, "Down with the Censorship."

I would, therefore, advise Freethinkers who are interested in the matter to write to their M.P.'s to initiate a discussion of the matter in the public journals, to write to the Prime Minister, and, in short, make it known that there is a resolute body of opinion in the country opposed to the continuance of the tyrannical office.

Frederick Ryan.

The Prayer-Test.

Professor Tyndall was one of the three or four men who have made English science in the nineteenth century famous for its union of German thoroughness of research with French lucidity of exposition. A great part of the influence of his writings, as of those of Huxley and Professor Foster, and, in a less degree, Darwin, has been due to the wonderful clearness and charm of their style. Clear thinking was, no doubt, responsible for a good share of the clear writing; but, over and above this, he must have had a special gift for popular presentation of scientific results. It is doubtless true that the world must assign the supremacy to the ponderous scientific learning of the Germans; but we may yet hope that the typical scientist of the future may be nearer like those Englishmen we have mentioned, who smelted their ore instead of flinging it out in amorphous masses. Tyndall came into great disrepute with the religious world in 1872 by his bold suggestion that the efficacy of prayer be made a subject of scientific experiment. In this he was substantially anticipated in Hawaii, where the natives, years before, had challenged the missionaries to a competitive test of the value of prayer and of heathen sacrifices as a means of stopping the dangerous flow of lava from Mauna Loa.—"The Nation," New York.

Are the Devils Damned Already?

The common opinion among theologians is that wherever they go the demons are tortured by the fires of hell, though they are by no means agreed as to the way in which the fires of hell exercise this strange power over them. On the other hand, it was commonly held by ancient writers that the demons will not be tortured by the fire of hell until the day of judgment, and Petavius says one who maintains "that the Devil and his angels are not yet tortured by that extreme and utmost torture, that they do not yet feel the efficacy of that fire in which the chief part of their damnation, so far as feeling and suffering go, consists, is not to be accused of error, much less of heresy." On this theory the rebel angels will begin to experience the eternal torments of hell-fire at the day of judgment.—"A Catholic Dictionary," by W. G. Addis and T. Arnold; article, "Devil."

PROFANE JOKES.

Evangelist—"Young man, do you want to go to hell?" Hardened Sinner—"When do you start?"

Nellie—"I wonder why they have big eagles in the church?" Freddy—"'Cause they're birds of prey, of course; ain't it, ma?"

Jasper—"The Rev. Simon Mangus is always up to date." Jumpuppe—"What is his latest freak?" Jasper—"He has an attendant to turn on a limelight while he is pronouncing the benediction."

Editor in Chief—"Where did you put that parrot of mine?" Office Boy—"I hung him in the religious editor's office, sir." Editor in Chief—"Didn't I tell you I didn't want that bird to learn how to swear?"

Pastor—"It is instructive to note what a flood of light one passage of scripture throws upon another." Ewe Lamb—"Yes; I couldn't understand about there being no marrying or giving in marriage above until I read how hard it was for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven."

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY LECTURE NOTICES, ETC.

[Notices of Lectures, etc., must reach us by first post on Tuesday, and be marked "Lecture Notice," if not sent on post-card.]

LONDON.

HALL OF SCIENCE (142 Old-street, E.C.): 11.30, a lecture. (Free.) 6.30, musical selections; 7, W. Heaford, "Religion and Insanity." (Admission free; reserved seats 3d. and 6d.) Wednesday, at 8.30, G. W. Foote will lecture.

BATTERSEA SECULAR HALL (back of Battersea Park Station): 7.45, John P. Coppock, F.C.S., "The Life and Work of a Plant." (Free.) Monday, at 8, Marlowe Dramatic Company. (Tickets 3d. and 6d.) Tuesday, at 8, dancing. Thursday, at 8, committee.

CAMBERWELL (North Camberwell Hall, 61 New Church-road): 7.30 a lecture.

EAST LONDON (Swaby's Coffee House, 103 Mile-end-road, E.): 8, J. F. Haines, "Anti-Toxin a Disease."

ISLINGTON (Liberal and Radical Association Committee Rooms, Upper-street, near the Vestry Hall): Thursday, at 8.30, J. Rowney, "Secularism v. Christianity." (Free.)

WEST LONDON ETHICAL SOCIETY (Princes' Hall, Piccadilly): 11.15, Dr. Stanton Coit, "The Revival of the Roman Church after the Reformation."

WEST LONDON BRANCH ("Duke of York," Kensington-place, Silver-street, Notting-hill-gate): Monday, at 8.30, business meeting.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BATTERSEA PARK GATES: 11.30, W. J. Ramsey, "Thank the Lord."

HYDE PARK (near Marble Arch): 11.30, F. Haslam, "Bible Stories: Are they True?" 3, "Mohammed and his Bible."

WOOD GREEN (Jolly Butchers' Hill): 11.30, a lecture.

COUNTRY.

BIRMINGHAM (Coffee House, corner of Broad-street): Thursdays, at 8, papers, discussions, etc.

BRISTOL (Shepherds' Hall, Old Market-street): 7, Mr. Smith, "Insect Life." Wednesday, at 7, entertainment and dance. (Free.)

BRADFORD (Oddfellows' Hall, Thornton-road): 7, James Hooper, "Our Aristocracy: their Origin and Deeds." (Free.)

CHATHAM SECULAR HALL (Queen's-road, New Brompton): 7, dramatic entertainment.

HULL (St. George's Hall, Storey-street): 7, Mr. Sketchley, "Rome and the Revolution."

LIVERPOOL (Oddfellows' Hall, St. Anne-street): 11, J. M. Robertson, "The Last Shifts of Religion"; 3, "The Wealth of Nations—A Reply to Mr. Mallock"; 7, "The Failure of Christianity."

MANCHESTER SECULAR HALL (Rusholme-road, All Saints): 11, H. Smith, "The Limits of Individual Liberty." (Free.)

PLYMOUTH (Democratic Club, Whimple-street): 7, a reading from "Nunquam's" Merrie England.

ROCHDALE (Working Men's College, 4 Acker-street): 6.30, Sam Standring, "Voltaire"; 8, singing practice.

RYHOPE (Miners' Hall): 10.30, G. W. Foote, "Will Christ Save Us?"

SHEFFIELD SECULAR SOCIETY (Hall of Science, Rockingham-street): 11, Stanley Jones, "The Problem of Unsectarian Moral Teaching"; 3, "The Origin of the Bible"; 7, "Woman: Past, Present, and Future."

SOUTH SHIELDS (Thornton's Variety Hall, Union-lane): 11, C. Cohen, "Confucius and Confucianism"; 7, "Christianity and Slavery."

SUNDERLAND (People's Palace, High-street): 3, G. W. Foote, "Did Jesus Christ Ever Live?" 7, "A Search for the Soul."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

ROCHDALE (Town Hall Square): 3, Sam Standring, "Ritualism and the Church Association Van."

Lecturers' Engagements.

C. COHEN, 12 Merchant-street, Bow-road, London, E.—All Sundays until April, South Shields.

STANLEY JONES, 58 Marlborough-road, Holloway, London.—March 10, Sheffield; 17, Hanley; 24, Derby.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Credon-road, Rotherhithe, London.—March 24, Camberwell.

SAM STANDRING, 6 Bury-road, Rochdale.—March 17, Bradford; 24, 26, and 27, Sheffield.

Now Ready, price 6d., by post 7d.,

The Path I Took, and Where it Led Me.

AN AUTOBIOGRAPHY AND ARGUMENT.

BY A MONMOUTHSHIRE FARMER.

REVISED BY G. J. HOLYOAKE.

London: Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Colonel Ingersoll's Great New Lecture

ABOUT THE HOLY BIBLE

Price Sixpence.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Works by Colonel R. G. Ingersoll.

SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES. The only complete edition in England. Accurate as Colenso, and fascinating as a novel. 132 pp. 1s. Superior paper, cloth 1s. 6d.

DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT. A Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy. 6d.

THE GODS. 6d.

REPLY TO GLADSTONE. With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler. 4d.

ROME OR REASON? A Reply to Cardinal Manning. 4d.

CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS. 3d.

ORATION ON WALT WHITMAN. 3d.

ORATION ON VOLTAIRE. 3d.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. 3d.

PAINE THE PIONEER. 2d.

HUMANITY'S DEBT TO THOMAS PAINE. 2d.

ERNEST RENAN AND JESUS CHRIST. 2d.

TRUE RELIGION. 2d.

THE THREE PHILANTHROPISTS. 2d.

LOVE THE REDEEMER. 2d.

GOD AND THE STATE. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part I. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part II. 2d.

FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Dr. Field. 2d.

GOD AND MAN. Second reply to Dr. Field. 2d.

THE DYING CREED. 2d.

THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION. A Discussion with the Hon. F. D. Coudert and Gov. S. L. Woodford. 2d.

THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH. 2d.

ART AND MORALITY. 2d.

DO I BLASPHEME? 2d.

THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE. 2d.

SOCIAL SALVATION. 2d.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE. An Agnostic's View. 2d.

SKULLS. 2d.

THE GREAT MISTAKE. 1d.

LIVE TOPICS. 1d.

MYTH AND MIRACLE. 1d.

REAL BLASPHEMY. 1d.

REPAIRING THE IDOLS. 1d.

CHRIST AND MIRACLES. 1d.

CREEDS & SPIRITUALITY. 1d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street E.C.

Read "THE TRUTH SEEKER."

MONTHLY, PRICE 1D.

Edited by JOHN GRANGE.

The MARCH Number contains a FINE PORTRAIT of

MR. C. COHEN.

Of all Newsagents to order. Wholesale, Mr. Forder.

THOMAS PAINE'S WORKS.

The Age of Reason. New edition, with Preface by G. W. FOOTE. 1s.

Miscellaneous Theological Works. 1s.

Complete Theological Works. (Including the Age of Reason.) Cloth, 2s. 6d.

The Rights of Man. Centenary edition. With a Political Biography by J. M. WHEELER. 1s.; bound in cloth, 2s.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price 2s. 6d.,

THE WITNESS OF ASSYRIA;

OR,

THE BIBLE CONTRASTED WITH THE MONUMENTS.

By CHILPERIC EDWARDS.

"The work has a full index, and is in every respect a valuable one."—Freethinker.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 338 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each, upper or lower set, £1. Best quality, 4s. each, upper or lower, £2, completed in four hours when required; repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum 7s. 6d. each, on 18 ct. gold 15s., stopping 2s. 6d., extraction 1s., painless by gas, 5s.

LIFE IN AN ASYLUM.—Revelation Explained. Extraordinary Freaks of Monomaniacs.—From the publisher of this paper, or direct from F. Brett, Pilgrim-street, E.C. Seven stamps.

BOOT TRADE.

WANTED, a RESPECTABLE MAN as a Good All-Round REPAIRER, and to take Charge of Branch Shop. Must have good references. Apply by letter only—S. Perren, 157 Rushy Green, Catford, Kent, S.E.

TO FREETHINKERS, Ladies and Gentlemen requiring SUPERIOR CUT GARMENTS at moderate prices. First-class Style and Fit Guaranteed.—H. HAMPTON, Artiste Tailor, 14 Great Castle-street, W. Three doors from Regent-street. [Patronised by leading Freethinkers.]

Digitized by Google

ALLINSON FOR HEALTH.

HOME CONSULTATIONS—10 a.m. to 1 p.m., 10s. 6d.; 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., 5s. Patients Visited.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. I. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Management of Infancy, Health, Longevity, The Teeth, Tobacco, The Drink Question. Also the Cause and Cure of Disease, Constipation, Biliousness, Eczema, Blackheads and Pimples, Nervousness, Coughs and Colds, Chest Complaints, Deafness, Thread Worms, Long Worms, Tape Worms, The Itch, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. II. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on The Healing Power of Nature, Urine, Saline Starvation, the Hair and its Management, Sleep and Sleeplessness, Want of Energy, etc. Advice for the Thin, for the Stout; Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. III. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on No More Death, Management of Young Children, Unsuspected Domestic Poisons, How to Grow Tall, to Keep Warm, to Live One Hundred Years, to Improve the Memory, and to become Beautiful and Attractive. On the Cause and Cure of Stomach Troubles, Flatulence, Sleepiness, Varicose Veins, Boils and Carbuncles, Sebaceous Tumors and Warts, Hay Fever, Winter Cough, Chilblains, Epilepsy, and on the Diseases Produced by Taking Mercury.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. IV. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Hardening, Work and Overwork, Sugar and its Abuse, Milk as Food, the Tomato, Poultices, Quinine, Against the Knife, Arsenical Poisoning, Tonics, Against Stimulants in Disease, about Swallowing Pins and other Articles. Also Cure of Sunstroke, Dog Bites, Pains in the Back, Pediculi or Lice, Chicken-Pox, Synovitis or Inflammation of the Joints, Tonsilitis or Quinsy, Herpes (Tetter or Shingles), Erysipelas, Ulcer of the Stomach, Epidemic Influenza, Sciatica, Psoriasis or English Leprosy, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. V. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Pure Water, The Mouth, Its Use and Abuse; Rules for the Aged, Training, Blood Letting, Nose Bleeding, Felon or Whitlow, Ingrowing Toenail, Gum Boil, Cold in the Head, a Red Nose, Flushing and Blushing, Toothache, Sore Mouth, St. Vitus' Dance, Goitre, Mumps, Inflamed Eyes and Eyelids, Fits, Fainting, Apoplexy, Spitting and Vomiting of Blood, Vomiting, Wounds, Burns, Scalds, Bruises, etc.

The Five Volumes, strongly and neatly bound, price 6s. 9d., post free.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.—An Eye Opener to Drug Takers.
RHEUMATISM: ITS CAUSE AND CURE. Post free for 3d.
DIET AND DIGESTION. Post free for 3d.
CONSUMPTION: ITS NATURAL CURE. Post free 3d.

All these Books, bound in One Vol., post free, 3s. 6d. Send Postal Order.

THREE PAMPHLETS FOR YOUNG MEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.
A BOOK FOR MARRIED WOMEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

All communications to be addressed to—

DR. T. R. ALLINSON,
4 Spanish-place, Manchester-square, London, W.

THE BEST BOOK

ON NEO-MALTHUSIANISM IS, I BELIEVE,

TRUE MORALITY, or THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF NEO-MALTHUSIANISM.

By J. R. HOLMES, M.M.L., M.V.S., M.N.S.S.

160 pages, with portrait and autograph, bound in cloth, gilt lettered. Price 1s., post free.

 In order to bring the information within the reach of the poor, the most important parts of the book are issued in a pamphlet of 112 pages at ONE PENNY, post free 2d. Copies of the pamphlet for distribution 1s. a dozen post free.

The National Reformer of 4th September, 1892, says: "Mr Holmes' pamphlet . . . is an almost unexceptionable statement of the Neo-Malthusian theory and practice . . . and throughout appeals to moral feeling. . . . The special value of Mr. Holmes' service to the Neo-Malthusian cause and to human well-being generally is just his combination in his pamphlet of a plain statement of the physical and moral need for family limitation with a plain account of the means by which it can be secured, and an offer to all concerned of the requisites at the lowest possible prices."

The Council of the Malthusian League, Dr. Drysdale, Dr. Allbutt, and others have also spoken of it in very high terms.

The Trade supplied by R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C. Other orders should be sent to the author.

J. R. HOLMES, HANNEY, WANTAGE, BERKS.

W. J. Rendell's "Wife's Friend"

Recommended by Mrs. Besant in Law of Population, p. 32, and Dr. Allbutt in Wife's Handbook, p. 51. Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell-street, Clerkenwell; 2s. per doz., post free (reduction in larger quantities). For particulars send stamped envelope.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

BEWARE of useless imitations substituted by some dealers and chemists, the words "Rendell & Co." and "J. W. Rendall" being speciously and plausibly introduced to deceive the public.

LOOK FOR AUTOGRAPH REGISTERED TRADE MARK

W. J. Rendell

No. 182,688.

IN Red INK ON EACH BOX, WITHOUT WHICH NONE ARE GENUINE.

Higginson's Syringe, with Vertical and Reverse Current, 8s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 2s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. Dr. Allbutt's Quinine Powders, 8s. per doz. All prices post free.

W. J. RENDELL, 15 Chadwell-st., Clerkenwell, E.C.

Works by G. W. Foote.

Flowers of Freethought. First Series. 221 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Flowers of Freethought. Second Series. 302 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Bible Heroes. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Letters to the Clergy. First Series. 128 pp., 1s.

The Grand Old Book. A Reply to the Grand Old Man. An exhaustive answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture." 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Christianity and Secularism. Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Is Socialism Sound? Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 2s.

Infidel Death-Beds. Second edition, much enlarged, 8d. On superfine paper, in cloth, 1s. 3d.

Darwin on God. 6d.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s.

Will Christ Save Us? A Thorough Examination of the Claims of Jesus Christ to be considered the Savior of the World. 6d.

Reminiscences of Charles Bradlaugh. 6d.

A Defence of Free Speech. Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes. 4d.

Comic Sermons and Other Fantasias. 8d.

Rome or Atheism—the Great Alternative. 3d.

Letters to Jesus Christ. 4d.

Interview with the Devil. 2d.

Philosophy of Secularism. 3d.

Atheism and Morality. 2d.

My Resurrection. A Missing Chapter from the Gospel of Matthew, discovered by G. W. Foote. 2d.

The Folly of Prayer. 2d.

Ingersollism Defended against Archdeacon Farrar. 2d.

Was Jesus Insane? A Searching Inquiry into the Mental Condition of the Prophet of Nazareth. 1d.

Christianity and Progress. A Reply to Mr. Gladstone. 2d.

The Impossible Creed. An Open Letter to Bishop Magee on the Sermon on the Mount. 2d.

What was Christ? A Reply to J. S. Mill. 2d.

The Bible God. 2d.

Salvation Syrup; or, Light on Darkest England. A Reply to General Booth. 2d.

Is the Bible Inspired? A Criticism on Lux Mundi. 1d.

The Dying Atheist. A Story. 1d.

The Rev. Hugh Price Hughes's Converted Atheist. A Lie in Five Chapters. 1d.

Mrs. Besant's Theosophy. A Candid Criticism. 2d.

Secularism and Theosophy. A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant. 2d.

The New Cagliostro. An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky. 2d.

Bible Romances. New Edition. Revised and largely re-written. (1) The Creation Story, 2d.; (2) Eve and the Apple, 1d.; (3) Cain and Abel, 1d.; (4) Noah's Flood, 2d.; (5) The Tower of Babel, 1d.; (6) Lot's Wife, 1d.; (7) The Ten Plagues, 1d.; (8) The Wandering Jews, 1d.; (9) Balaam's Ass, 1d.; (10) God in a Box, 1d.; (11) Jonah and the Whale, 1d.; (12) Bible Animals, 1d.; (13) A Virgin Mother, 2d.; (14) The Resurrection, 2d.; (15) The Crucifixion, 1d.; (16) John's Nightmare, 1d.

The Shadow of the Sword. A Moral and Statistical Essay on War. 2d.

Royal Paupers. Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty. 2d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price 1s. Superior edition for Subscribers, bound, numbered, and signed, 2s.

VOLTAIRE:

HIS LIFE AND WORKS.

WITH SOME SELECTIONS FROM HIS WRITINGS.

By G. W. FOOTE AND J. M. WHEELER.

"The English people ought to know Voltaire, an admirer and lover of their nation, better than they do, and this lively shilling pamphlet will give them a good deal of information as to his life and work."—Literary World.

"A lucid and interesting sketch of the great French philosopher. We strongly recommend it to all who want to know what the influence was which Voltaire exercised."—Weekly Times and Echo.

"Those of the new generation who desire to know more of a man with whose writings their fathers were intimate should consult this little shilling volume."—Reynolds's Newspaper.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Now Ready, Price Twopence,

IS SUICIDE A SIN?

By COLONEL INGERSOLL.

Together with the Reply of MONSIGNOR DUCKY.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

From the "Bradford Weekly Telegraph," Saturday, February 16, 1895.

GREAT FIRE IN BRADFORD.

EXTENSIVE DAMAGE.

Early on Saturday a big fire took place in the warehouse, No. 2 Union-street, Bradford, occupied by Mr. R. Higgins, who occupies a large part of the ground floor, and numbers the following tenants occupying the other offices and rooms: Mr. Ernest Hahnel, Messrs. Schmidt & Co., Mr. J. W. Gott, Messrs. G. D. Wright & Co., and Mr. J. Pepper. The damage done is very extensive, and is roughly estimated at a figure between £8,000 to £10,000. It certainly cannot be less than £8,000, as many of the firms occupying the building had large and valuable stocks stored in the various rooms. Mr. R. Higgins had a big stock of woollens, stuffs and yarns, and estimates his loss at over £4,000. He is insured up to £4,000. Messrs. Wright & Co., stuff merchants, have had fully £1,000 damage done to their stock and premises, but it is completely covered by insurance. Mr. J. W. Gott, cloth and stuff merchant, had a stock valued at £1,500, and it is partially destroyed, chiefly by water. The other firms, with the exception of Mr. J. Pepper, have suffered in like manner, a lot of stock being destroyed by water. The cause of the fire is unknown, but, judging by appearances, it broke out in the packing-room of Mr. R. Higgins.

To the Readers of "The Freethinker."

We had just got the New Spring Goods ready for Sale when this unfortunate fire took place, and, although we have sustained no damage by the fire itself, most of our goods have been soaked in water. We have taken immediate steps to have all the goods dried, and for all practical purposes they are not worth one penny less than before the fire took place. The finish which is put upon new goods has, of course, been disturbed, but that always takes place in making garments up. So that if you get a length of this cloth, or stuff, and have it made up, there is not the slightest difference between that and any other new goods you might buy, when made into garments.

We have got a Big Allowance from the Insurance Company,

and to make room for New Goods, which we have already ordered, and which will be ready for sale in one month,

We now offer all our Present Stock at HALF PRICE.

We are making the goods up into the following lots:—

Parcel for 21s. carriage paid.

A Lot of GOODS for GENTLEMEN'S WEAR, worth at warehouse prices 42s.

☞ State what will be most useful. ☜

Parcel for 21s. carriage paid.

A Lot of GOODS for LADIES' WEAR, worth at warehouse prices 42s.

☞ State what will be most useful. ☜

Parcel for 21s. carriage paid.

MIXED LOT OF GOODS,

Worth 42s.

For Ladies' and Gentlemen's wear.

Parcel for 21s. carriage paid.

Mixed Lot of Goods, such as

BLANKETS, SHEETS, QUILTS, TABLE-CLOTH, APRON, BELT, PURSE, Etc.

We have engaged 25 additional Tailors to make up Trousers. Price during Salvage Sale,

7s. 6d. per Pair to Measure.

Fill up form and state Color preferred.

Round waist .....
Round seat.....
Inside leg seam.....
Outside leg seam .....
Thigh .....
Knee .....
Bottom .....
Lined or Unlined .....
(Lined 6d. extra.)
Color .....

SEND AT ONCE.

J. W. GOTT, 2 & 4 UNION-STREET, BRADFORD.

Printed and Published by G. W. Foote, at 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

VOL. XV.—NO. 11. SUNDAY, MARCH 17, 1895 PRICE TWOPENCE.

MR. BALFOUR'S "FOUNDATIONS."

The Foundations of Belief. Being Notes Introductory to the Study of Theology. By the Right Hon. Arthur James Balfour. (London: Longmans, Green, & Co.)

SOME years ago the finest sport in England was baiting Bradlaugh. Country gentlemen found it better than fox-hunting. There was more cruelty in it, and it gratified a keener malignity. The young bloods of the Tory party found it particularly agreeable. It gave them zest without danger, and excitement without the trouble of thinking. Above all, it gave what was called "the fourth party" a great opportunity. The leader of that party, Lord Randolph Churchill, afterwards gained a big reputation on the strength of a very slender performance. We never could perceive that he possessed any special ability; his mind seemed to us of a commonplace order. But he had a certain debating-society power of speech, and a boundless supply of that quality which, according to circumstances, is variously known as courage, tenacity, or cheek. He had ability enough, however, to see that capital could be made out of the vulgar bigotry against Bradlaugh, and he played the game for all it was worth. He was not sincere, and he had no real animosity against Bradlaugh. It was a mere matter of business with him. He wanted a platform, and Bradlaugh's broad back just suited his necessity. Or shall we say that he hopped upon Bradlaugh's shoulders like a monkey, and jabbered and gesticulated to the mob from that convenient eminence? Anyhow, the one achievement of Churchill's life was his successful appeal to the religious fanaticism of Englishmen. It was an ignoble policy, and its success could only be temporary. The time came, as it was bound to come, when the nation, once more in its sober senses, grew ashamed of its injustice. And when that time did come, it is noteworthy that Lord Randolph Churchill was already a spent force in English politics.

Lord Randolph Churchill's chief colleague, in the old days of the Fourth Party, was Mr. A. J. Balfour. Between these two young men there was a great contrast. Churchill was boisterous, Balfour was languid, and almost lackadaisical. Churchill cultivated a "gallery" style, Balfour was always academic. Appearances, however, are proverbially apt to be deceitful. It was Balfour, after all, who had the real ability and staying power. His dolce far niente air was an artificial cultivation. Behind the scenes he must have been a fairly hard-worker; at any rate, his knowledge, if not as exact as it is various, would have broken the intellectual backs of a dozen Churchills.

Mr. Balfour holds the undisputed leadership of the Tory party in the House of Commons, and the duties of his position cannot be very easy. Nevertheless he finds time, as Mr. Gladstone used to, for the study of religious and philosophical questions; or rather, perhaps, of philosophical questions as they affect religion. He has written essays upon other topics, but this is the subject-matter of his two books; the first, on Philosophic Doubt, published some years ago, and the second, now fresh from the press, on The Foundations of Belief.

Before dealing with the matter of this volume, we have a word to say on its manner. Professor Huxley has praised Mr. Balfour's style. It is indeed a good style in its way. There is no slovenliness about it; everything is precise and well-bred, not without a certain distinction. Mr. Balfour is incapable of the tumid and bombastic phraseology in which Lord Randolph Churchill delighted. The vice of his style is negative; that is, it is not really a vice, but a defect. He seldom sinks, but he seldom mounts. His level is maintained with remarkable regularity. He warms occasionally, but he never glows. We feel the lack of emotion. We do not assert, however, that Mr. Balfour is actually deficient in this quality. It may be that he elects to play the aristocrat even in philosophical and religious discussions; and that, in his efforts to keep himself always unruffled, he conveys a mistaken impression that he is never really in earnest.

Mr. Balfour's new book has been lauded with the utmost extravagance; chiefly, of course, by the religious journals. It was natural that the Times should regard Mr. Balfour's "Notes" as a remarkably important contribution to British philosophy—which of course it is not, and does not pretend to be. It was also natural that the Methodist Times should weep with delight over this book, and couple its author with the famous Bishop Butler. That journal is always in raptures, and always speaking in hyperboles. It found an epoch-making book in Mr. Kidd's Social Evolution, and soon afterwards it found another in Mr. Balfour's Foundations of Belief. Every defender of religion, outside the ruck of its paid advocates, is sure to meet with a gratifying reception. Theology is in such dire straits that it is thankful for the smallest mercies.

Dismissing the eulogy of flatterers and dependents, let us see what the book actually contains. Two-thirds of it is a criticism of unbelief; the other third does deal with belief, but only in the way of suggestion. The foundation for the great superstructure of theology does not make its appearance; unless a foundation can be found in hints, surmises, and possibilities. Part I. deals with "Some Consequences of Belief;" Part II., with "Some Reasons for Belief;" Part III., with "Some Causes of Belief;" Part IV., with "Suggestions Towards a Provisional Philosophy." The first two parts are wrongly named. They are really one essay, and should have been called "The Irrationality and Immorality of Unbelief."

Mr. Balfour rightly says that he has not written a volume of Apologetics. He has not taken up theological doctrines and defended them from current objections. He endeavors to recommend "a certain attitude of mind"—"a particular way of looking at the World-problems which, whether we like it or not, we are compelled to face." Surely this is an easy task, especially when most of your readers are already prejudiced in favor of the attitude you are recommending. Selecting it, however, may not be a sign of cowardice. It is a foolish courage which faces an impossible enterprise. Mr. Balfour is not a madman, and therefore he will not defend theology directly. He will not take its doctrines and justify them at the bar of reason. Being a man of discretion, he prefers to "recommend" them; well knowing that thoughtful "believers" do not require fresh demonstrations, which may only intensify their doubts, but a plausible justification for still professing what they half disbelieve.

What is really Mr. Balfour's object? It is this. He sees that Freethought, if successful, will swamp a great many things in which he is interested, in common with most purchasers of twelve-shilling books. He knows that the old Theology is the basis of the old Sociology. This is the secret of all his "recommendations." And this is the explanation of the following passage:—

> "Though I have devoted a chapter to the consideration of Transcendental Idealism as represented in some recent English writings, it is not with overt or tacit reference to that system that I have arranged the material of the following Essay. I have, on the contrary, selected a system with which I am in much less sympathy, but which under many names numbers a formidable following, and is in reality the only system which ultimately profits by any defeats which Theology may sustain, or which may be counted on to flood the spaces from which the tide of Religion has receded. Agnosticism, Positivism, Empiricism, have all been used more or less correctly to describe this scheme of thought; though in the following pages, for reasons with which it is not necessary to trouble the reader, the term which I shall commonly employ is Naturalism. But whatever the name selected, the thing itself is sufficiently easy to describe. For its leading doctrines are that we may know 'phenomena' and the laws by which they are connected, but nothing more. 'More' there may or may not be; but if it exists we can never apprehend it: and whatever the world may be 'in its reality' (supposing such an expression to be otherwise than meaningless), the World for us, the World with which alone we are concerned, or of which alone we can have any cognisance, is that World which is revealed to us through perception, and which is the subject-matter of the Natural Sciences. Here, and here only, are we on firm ground. Here, and here only, can we discover anything which deserves to be described as Knowledge. Here, and here only, may we profitably exercise our reason or gather the fruits of Wisdom."

Digitized by Google

We have ourselves defined Secularism as "Naturalism in morals, as distinguished from Supernaturalism." It is the ethical significance of the term which is practically all-important. Mr. Balfour sees this clearly enough, for his first chapter is on "Naturalism and Ethics."

G. W. FOOTE.

(To be continued).

WHO ARE CHRISTIANS?

A general word like Christianity becomes, by much using, like a box with a false bottom, into which you can put as much or as little as you please.—T. W. Higginson.

To be a Christian, the modern thinker must be dull or dishonest; he must palter with his own convictions or with the world.—Leslie Stephen.

THE question, "What is Christianity?" is not one which becomes clearer by age. There were from the first disputes among Christians as to who were genuine believers. Paul taught a different doctrine from Peter, and James a different one from Paul. With the multiplication of sects the question only becomes more complicated, and now-a-days the influence of Rationalism has so penetrated the Churches that those call themselves "Christians" who a century ago would have been scouted as "infidels." It is not that the one divinely-revealed religion has changed, but that men have changed, and they now accommodate the old faith to their new ideas and convictions.

Those who wish to have definite ideas attached to the words they use will not allow the term "Christianity" to be applied to vague generalities. A Christian is a person with a definite faith. We should take, for instance, the Apostles' Creed, the creed into which all members of the Christian Church are baptised, as an irreducible minimum. Those who do not believe in the virgin birth, the descent of Jesus into hell, and his ascension into heaven, where he sits on the right hand of an infinite being, may call themselves what they please, but they have departed from the historic faith of Christianity. They are no longer Christians in any proper signification of the term. The term "Christian," moreover, implies at the outset a belief that the Christ has come, that Jesus was the Messiah of the Jews. Those who think that the Jews ought to understand their own prophecies best can hardly be Christians, in the natural and evident sense of the word. For my part, when I discovered that the Messiah spoken of in the Old Testament was a conqueror, ruler, and judge, doing at his first coming all those things which Christians, in order to have these prophecies fulfilled, say that Christ will do at his second coming, and when I saw that this alleged second coming was prophesied as to take place in the lifetime of the generation of Jesus, and that the early Christians believed he would reappear shortly, I felt that I had ceased to be a Christian.

Christianity is a term which cannot possibly be accepted by any Jew. Nor can it be accepted by any Confucian, Buddhist, Hindu, or Mohammedan. Its claims are exclusive. It pretends to be the one only divine revelation. There is no other name under heaven whereby men can be saved, said the apostle Peter; and Jesus himself is said to have affirmed that no man could come to the Father except through him. To him, also, is ascribed the saying: "He that believeth and is baptised shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned." This implies that all the heathen and all unbelieving infants, and heretics, however honest, shall be damned. Those who do not accept this view, which is endorsed by the thirteenth and eighteenth Articles of the Church of England, have ceased to be Christians in the old sense. The passage last cited goes on to notify the signs whereby we may know true believers: "In my name they shall cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues. They shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." If thaumaturgists of this description are the only true believers, they must be scarce indeed.

To-day genuine believers are almost extinct, and Christianity as a system is dying a lingering death. We hear much, from those whose wishes are father to their thoughts, of the decay of Secularism. The fact is, Secularism is penetrating and modifying every item of the old doctrines of Christianity. The pious themselves lament it. People are more and more governed, not by the supposed requirements of God, but by the ascertained needs of society. They more and more set their affections, not on things above, but on things of this world. Churches, chapels, and the religious press are becoming more secular in tone, and it is now common to hear Christ, who said, "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" extolled as a true Secularist. All his distinctive doctrines are abandoned, and we are offered, as real Christianity, a nebulous compound that can hardly be distinguished from old Deism. Christianity, as it appears in the New Testament, has nothing but condemnation for the things of this world. It inculcates, not work and self-reliance, but prayer and fasting as a means of combatting its evils. Its theory of life, with its reliance on the supernatural and its hope of reward for loss here in gain hereafter, is in practice scouted by its professed followers.

Its legends are discredited. Who now really believes that the creator of the universe came down to earth and was born in an obscure corner of the earth of a mortal woman, who remained a virgin, although she had a family of at least six boys and girls, and that dreams and the visits of angels were employed to induce a carpenter to father God's Son, who is as old as his father? Its miracles are absurd and paltry, compared with the triumphs of science. Christianity has a lip profession, but whoever goes in search of a Christian will have a harder task than ever had Diogenes.

J. M. WHEELER.

Pagan and Christian Morality.

The Progressive Thinker, of Chicago, prints the following: "The newly-published official reports of the material and moral condition of natives in India give a very interesting contribution to the now discussed mission question. It appears from the figures that not alone do we, by converting the natives to our belief, decidedly lower their moral status, but the standpoint of their natural morality is so high that, although they become Christians, we cannot make them so immoral as we ourselves are. The figures which show the comparative moral status among the different classes are as follows: European, one out of 274; native Christian, one out of 709; Hindoos, one out of 1,361; Eurasian, one out of 509; Mohammedans, one out of 856; Buddhists, one out of 3,787. The last figure is a tribute to the noble purity of Buddhism; but the statistics impart to us here at home another teaching, that as regards our social life we would do better if we, for a generation or two, contributed our superfluous pennies and our energies to the moral improvement of our own countrymen, in place of trying to destroy the morality and religion of other people, people who in truth could send us their missionaries to convert us."

Digitized by Google

THE PROVIDENTIAL GOVERNMENT OF THE WORLD.

(Continued from page 148.)

THE world is constantly being startled by the sad and heartrending accounts of explosions in mines and on land, of appalling railway accidents, and is horrified to hear of the extensive sacrifice of human life by the storms and tempests of the ocean. How is it possible to reasonably reconcile such terrible incidents as these, followed by woe and desolation, with the belief in the "Divine government" of the world? Let us put this matter to a logical test. All calamities and loss of life, as indicated above, take place either according to God's will, or in spite of his will. If they take place according to his will, he is not all-good, and if they occur in spite of his will, he is not all-powerful. In either case, one of his alleged attributes is destroyed, and the theological idea of "Providential government" is thereby impaired.

It is said by theological exponents that events take place the issues of which are hidden from us, and that, if we knew more of the "Divine plan," we should be enabled to understand its purpose and to recognise its justice. But we do understand, and that too well, the nature of the acts which rob the wife of her husband, the children of their parents, and the mother of her son, upon whom, perhaps, she has to depend for her means of living. We know that such events produce untold misery, pain, and desolation upon thousands of heartbroken wives and mothers, who are left with helpless children to depend upon charity. Besides, under the rule of this "Providence," the loving, affectionate, and virtuous are often cut off from life in the flower of their youth, while the brutish and vicious are allowed to live and flourish in all their depravity. Moreover, it is an insult to tell us, in the present wretched and unfair condition of society, that there is an omnipotent being above doing his best for those below. Take the injustice and lack of fatherly care that are seen in connection with the children of the lower classes. Those who know what the tuition of the ordinary street arab has been under the theological Providential scheme; those who have compared the gutter-child, with his fluttering rags, his unkempt hair, dirty face, obscene and ribald language, habits of theft, lying, etc., with the well-clad, neat, dainty, and "respectable" scion of the aristocrat or plutocrat can well see the necessity for a higher and truer Providence than the one that theologians have hitherto endeavored to delude us with. In the image of God, says the theologian, are we all made; but shame to the hypocrisy which, Pharisee-like, suffers this neglected gutter-urchin to give the lie direct to its own loud professions of God's love and care for his children. To-day, under the shadow of our proud cathedrals and lofty domes, under which incense burns, and gaudily-vested priests and choristers chant praises to God for having done all things well; to-day, be it remembered, beneath the shadows of the towers and pinnacles of the many churches and chapels, staring with gaunt countenance, hollow cheek, and hungry eye, dying ever and anon on doorsteps, and being carted away enclosed in a parish coffin, are thousands of those "images" for whom, apparently, God has done nothing.

There is no doubt that this delusion of "Divine Providence" is directly sanctioned by the Bible. Throughout the history of the Jews the elements and human life were made frequent subjects of Providential interference. For instance, the march of the Israelites through the Wilderness and across the Red Sea, the pillar of fire, the manna from heaven, the water from the rock, the feeding by ravens of a man who was afterwards carried up to heaven alive, the sun and moon standing still, the fall of the walls of Jericho at the sound of trumpets, and the exploits of Samson are specimens of the doubtful character of the supposed interference of the theological Providence. In the Psalms we read: "Trust in the Lord, and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed. Delight thyself also in the Lord; and he shall give thee the desires of thine heart. Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in him, and he shall bring it to pass. The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord; and he delighteth in his way. Though he fall, he shall not be utterly cast down; for the Lord upholdeth him with his hand. I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread" (xxxvii.). "Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he shall sustain thee; he shall never suffer the righteous to be moved" (lv.). These are a few of the many incidents given in the Old Testament which show that the belief in "Providential government of the world" is in accordance with the teachings of the Bible. If we are to regard these Scriptural references as referring to facts, then the lessons of science as to fixed laws, the invariable order of nature, and the laws of cause and effect are all a mistake. As to the rhapsodical ravings of the Psalmist, general experience contradicts his conclusion. The believer has no more advantage from "Divine Providence" than has the unbeliever. The lightning strikes the church as readily as it does a Freethought hall; the cold hand of death grasps the Christian preacher as firmly as it does the Secular lecturer; and the pious and profane alike meet a watery grave when a ship is wrecked at sea. Whatever the writer of the psalms might not have seen, we have seen that those who are termed "righteous" have been "forsaken," and their "seed begging bread." Reliance upon a heavenly Providence is like resting upon a broken reed; it affords no solid support in the hour of need.

The doctrine of "Special Providence" in heaven is also clearly taught in the New Testament. Absolute trust in God and neglect of human effort are enjoined in the Gospel ascribed to St. Matthew (see chap. vi. 25–30; vii. 11). Such teaching has proved a dire misfortune to the world, and has been one of the greatest delusions that has ever cursed the human race. Men rely upon their heavenly Father, and, to show his "tender mercies" and loving care, he (if the "Divine government" of the world be true) sends floods, frosts, blights, and numerous insects that kill the seed and destroy the crops. George Combe pertinently asked: "Are the fertility of the soil, the health of the body, the prosperity of individuals and of nations, now governed by supernatural power?" Science and general experience answer: "They are not." We look in vain for practical blessings to flow from "on high." Remembering the havoc, ruin, and sacrifice of human life that ever and anon are being forced upon our attention in "God's handiwork," may we not exclaim?—

> Praise God from whom all cyclones blow!
> Praise him when rivers overflow;
> Praise him who whirls the churches down,
> And sinks the boats their crews to drown.

Rejecting, then, the theory that there is a heavenly Providence watching over us, ever ready to afford help in the hour of need, have we any Providence to rely upon? Undoubtedly we have; and that Providence is science, and the forces of nature, the true sources, so far as we know, of all help that has been of material service to man. We must cultivate personal effort, allied with the knowledge of those laws upon which health, happiness, and progress depend. Taking our stand upon science, we interpret all events as the result of preceding ones, and as having an influence upon those that follow. In proportion as men believe in the unalterable connection between cause and effect, so will they get rid of the false notions of "chance" and a "Pre-ordained Providence," and they will rely for help upon the known and the knowable. For ages, under the influence of the Church, this Providence was ignored, except by the few brilliant intellectual stars who illuminated the clouded atmosphere of theology. Blind, unhesitating credulity reigned on every side, and its victims looked for assistance to heaven, not to earth; to God, not to man. The result was a condition of almost universal absence of personal comfort, moral activity, and mental cultivation. But now it is seen how fallacious the doctrine is that God ordered all things for the best in a world that has its—> ravaged plains,

> And burning towns and ruined swains,
> And mangled limbs and dying groans,
> And widows' tears and orphans' moans,
> And all that misery's hand bestows,
> To fill the catalogue of human woes.

The enlightened discovery of modern times is that "Science is the true Providence of Man."

CHARLES WATTS.

On March 17 a commemoration of the Commune will take place at Milton Hall. Among the speakers are Prince Kropotkin, Louise Michel, and P. Gori.

Digitized by Google

WHICH WAY?

By Colonel R. G. Ingersoll.

(Concluded from page 150.)

It was the triumph of ignorance, the saturnalia of credulity. Learning was lost. If the people who had lived in that night had known aught of the poetry and philosophy of Greece and Rome; if they had anything of the laws, the genius, and the art of antiquity, they could have saved themselves; but they knew nothing, and they were lost. Instead of universities they built cathedrals. Where they should have had teachers they had preachers. If they had had the light, the seeds of superstition would never have been planted; but they didn't have it, and the plant grew. The priests governed the world. They were the men who had influence with the God that the ignorant had made for themselves, and who were induced to use that influence by proper offerings and proper petitions and formulæ. The clergyman stands in the same position to-day, but his power is lessened, and it is lessening. It is not as strong to-day as it was when I was a boy. It weakens more and more as men come to consider. The ministers pray for us, and the fact that God permits their pious impertinences is a proof against him. Who has not heard prayers that were simply shocking in the light levity with which they approach infinity? I have heard preachers pray for the absurd and the utterly impossible. Only a short time since I heard the chaplain of Congress address to the Almighty a petition which was so ludicrously beyond the power of the Omnipotent to grant that I must tell it to you. He bowed his head, closed his eyes, and said: "Oh, God, give Congress wisdom."

THE EVILS OF THEOLOGY.

Theology and the theologians are at the base of most of the wrong and all of the ignorance of the world. They are antiquarians, ever digging out of the cemeteries of the past, dead and rotten opinions. Their claims are false, their results evil. They call the great men of the ended centuries theirs, and point to history. The witnesses against them they burned, and because few voices call to us they argue that their case is made. I myself have seen a religion born and come to maturity. Mormonism is younger than I. Joseph Smith's miracles and his followers I have watched. A thousand years hence Mormons will argue that, in a country bristling with newspapers, not one journal denied the authenticity of the Smith miracles. Of course they did not. The miracles were too idiotic to deny.

Let me tell you a story from Japan. A pious old monk was guardian of a very holy shrine that had bones in it of extraordinary virtue, to which good Buddhists came from all sorts of places to be cured of various zymotic and other diseases. Owing to the pressure of competition, or for some other reason, business fell off so badly that the monk was compelled to discharge his assistant, a young bonze, to whom he gave a white donkey and a fervid blessing. The young man journeyed along, playing in extremely bad luck, until, for lack of food and overwork, the donkey died on the wayside. The young monk had an inspiration. He buried the donkey on the road, and as soon as some travellers approached he prayed piously over the grave and besought the passers-by to give him money to build a temple over the last resting-place of the Sinless One. The money poured upon him, so that soon he had a fine temple up and a reputation for sanctity that drew business from all parts of the empire. He had to employ nearly thirty priests to help handle the crowds, and few monks were doing better or giving more satisfaction. At last he visited his old preceptor, travelling with a big retinue and giving evidences of prosperity that were beautiful to see. The old man was glad to see him, and the young priest, with much vanity, told him how much more successful and enterprising were the ideas of young people over old, and illustrated by showing what returns he had got from the donkey's bones.

"Son," said the old man, "truly young and old are alike. This shrine where you were raised and instructed was built over the bones of the mother of that donkey which has made your fortune."

INGERSOLL'S SOLUTION.

I am asked what I propose to substitute for religion, and what could be done to carry on the work of making men good? The answer is simple. I would put theology out of religion, in the first place. Theology has no place in religion, anyhow. Our duties are all here, not in some other place. Knowing all that can be made known about God does not help religion. Our duties are all here, and nothing that we can do or leave undone can alter these duties. We have nothing to do with God. We can do nothing for him. It is better for us to attend to our own business, and let God attend to his. Theology, remember, is superstition, organised and correlated and fixed. Religion is the performance of duty and of right action. What can they have to do with each other?

And I would put theology out of government. Government should get its power from mankind, not from God. There is no crusted relic of barbarism, from the king upon his throne to the priest at his altar, who is not holy, and who is not a theological product. When we erase theology from politics we wipe out the crown and the mitre, we abolish aristocracy, we destroy the right divine, and we replace all these with liberty and manhood.

I would put theology out of education, from the common school to the college. I would hire no teachers to make superstitious sausages out of my children, by telling them of the things they guess at, rather than the things they know. I would not have professors chosen by their faith rather than by their works. We produce no great men, because the faculties of our colleges are afraid to teach. They are afraid, because the president of the college is usually some narrow little parson, much more concerned to preserve the credulity of the pupils than to increase their knowledge. Theology is a shackle and a gag upon American learning.

And I would get theology out of morals. Superstition is not a virtue. Faith is not a virtue. Because God said this was right and that wrong does not make the thing right or wrong. God doesn't know. That which increases the world's happiness is the right thing, and here God has palpably failed. Instead of creed, we want investigation, in ethics as in other lines. That is good which is good; not that which a priest says is good.

And, finally, I would take theology out of charity, and make charity as broad as man and as wide as day.

THE TWO PATHS.

Yes, there are two ways to live. You can live for God, who has drenched this world with blood and scorched it with flame, or you can live for man, who stands for peace and liberty and brotherhood.

The blessed Scriptures tell us that there is a straight and narrow path, upon which one must walk towards heaven. It is only wide enough for one. No man may have his wife walk by his side, nor his child. It is paved with shards and ashes. There is a flower, but don't you dare to touch it. A beautiful view opens up in the fog on the side, but you dare not look at it. Keep your eyes fixed on the New Jerusalem, if you would save your miserable, worthless soul. Do not even look back to see if your wife is following safely. If she has strayed from the straight and narrow path and gone to hell, why, hell is the best place for her in God's infinite mercy. If your son has fallen, do not stop to pick him up; for what is your son to your immortal soul? Keep on the path, keep off the grass, keep on the straight and narrow path that leads to the New Jerusalem, and maybe at last your withered, shrunken soul will get there.

Give me the broad way, pleasant, flower-bordered, delightful, sunny. I want to go with the crowd, where all the good things are, the happiness and the love that last from the dawn of life's birth into the dusk of death. I want to eat the fruits and pluck the flowers. The broad path is the one for me and for you. Let us suck this orange of life so dry that when Death comes we can toss him the withered peel, sure that we have drawn from it every drop of its sweetness.

CULTURE IN ETHICS.

How shall we be moral on the broad path? theology asks. With more schools, and with culture and investigation in ethics. We want education that is education, not education that is catalogued ignorance. We want more schools and less churches. I tell you I am delighted when I come into a village now and find the school-house larger than the church, and that happens often now. We want to put deed over creed; we want to put character over faith. We want, above all, to wake the people from the nightmare of hell fear.

Digitized by Google

We want to reform men and women, and who was ever reformed by fear? God made a man refrain from an act by the fear of eternal torture, perhaps; but God cannot scare him into not wanting to do it. We must substitute for the vicarious atonement the law of consequences, the inexorable law of the effect that treads upon the heels of cause, the sure certainty that what a man does he does himself, and must pay for. Nowhere in the abysms of space is there a bankrupt court where ethical insolvents can clear off their indebtedness and get a clearance. Consequences are the inevitable, remorseless policemen of progress. They follow, and they will not be denied. This is the lesson we must teach our children. We must teach that honor is not an alms, but a wage that must be earned. God cannot give it, neither can he take it away. If you want happiness, you must earn it. No man can collect a jugful of happiness, seal it hermitically, and put it away on a celestial shelf, to be used when he dies.

This lesson learned, poverty will disappear, men will do their own work, and they will not hire theological attorneys-at-law to argue with God about their affairs. What little business they may have with infinity they will attend to themselves, and the lesson will be easily taught. It would be a delightful change if a congregation of sensible people would get some bright man to study up all of those questions which interest healthy-minded persons, and every Sunday tell them what he has learned during the week. Think of Sunday-schools where botany would show the child all about flowers, and entomology would open up to him the fairyland of insect life, and all of this without any of the idiotic theology which has cramped the world so long.

THE MISTAKES OF MAN.

When I think of the mistakes men have made in the gods they have worshipped, and the sorrows these gods have brought into the world, the pain, the woe, the blood, the torment, that blister the world's history, by the acts of the world's gods, it is enough to drive one mad for pity. I look back along that awful record of my race; I see the snake god waiting in his cave for the victim, the baby, that must be given him to appease him, while the mother wails without. I see altars red with blood, while the sacrificial knife plunges into the white bosom of the maiden. I see other altars, where goats and bulls are done to death, and still others, upon which the liberties of the nation were sacrificed. I see the palatial cathedral, fringed about with the wretched huts of the people. I see the millions of martyrs crushed out of life to put the world beneath the feet of priests. I see that earth a place where crime is virtue and virtue crime, and bending over it the black, starless night of religion.

INGERSOLL'S PROPHECY.

I look again, and I see the herald star of the morning, and the east brightens. There is more war, more fighting but it is now the people fighting for freedom. I see the thrones crumble and the altars fall. Then come the days when the churches are turned into schools, and the teacher sits where the priest once knelt before his empty sanctuary.

I prophesy that popes, priests, and kings are going and are gone. Aristocracy perishes. God is dead. The new religion of reason and joy is already here. The evangel of health and happiness is preached to willing ears. Soon no gibbet shadow will fall across this earth, no beggar's palm will be held out, no miser's scowl will deny him. Ours will be a folk without crime and without disease. I see life lengthen, love intensify, and fear die. I see a free world, emancipated after all the centuries, and I see the real heaven here in the real earth.

Surely this shall be.

Horne Tooke used to tell a story of Bishop Burnet. One day Lord Bolingbroke dined with him, and a sumptuous entertainment was provided. The Freethinking Lord asked the Bishop whether he thought the Apostles fared so well. "Oh, no, my lord." "And how do you account for the difference between the clergy of the present day and those of the primitive Church?" "It is so," replied the Bishop, "on all occasions; we always see that inventors and speculators are ruined, while others reap the gain."

CHRISTIANS AND EVOLUTION.

We have witnessed, during the past few years, many curious changes in the beliefs of people who take delight in describing themselves as Christians; but I venture to think that of all the changes none are more marked, or more important, than the one taken by many eminent Christians in regard to the doctrine of Evolution. Only a few years ago there was no name more detested by pious persons than that of Darwin; but to-day the name of the greatest scientist of this century is treated with respect even by editors of Christian journals. There must be some reason for this. The fact is, thoughtful Christians have begun to see that Biblical science is at a discount; that intelligent people no longer believe in the story of the creation of a perfect man about six thousand years ago; indeed, that they begin to throw discredit upon the whole Biblical story of creation altogether. Recognising this fact, some clever Christians have contrived to work the doctrine of Evolution in as a part of God's plan, and have endeavored to show that it is a much better design, and more in conformity with divine wisdom, than the idea of special creation. Once a theologian was bold enough to formulate this new teaching as a part of his Christian faith, it was only natural to expect a number of scientific men, imbued with what we may vaguely describe as "some sort of a religious spirit," writing a book on the subject enforcing the same kind of conclusion. Lately we have had a whole host of works written by Christians more or less favoring the teaching of Evolution. The most notable book, however, treating on this subject which has been produced recently is the now famous work of Professor Drummond on The Ascent of Man. Although Professor Drummond doubtless thinks that his admirable work will assist the Christian in taking a larger and more comprehensive view of natural phenomena, and especially of the evolutionary process by which "the ascent of man" has been brought about, I have no doubt whatever that his book will have the effect, in a much larger degree, of converting a number of nominal believers into pronounced Rationalists. For what does this learned writer demonstrate? Not only that Darwin was right when he said that man evolved from a lower animal form, but that Haeckel and other scientific men did not push the evolutionary doctrine too far when they declared that man's pedigree was to be traced through every form of animal life down to the protoplasmic germ.

In support of this view, take the following passage from Professor Drummond's work. He says: "The proposition is not only that man begins his earthly existence in the guise of a lower animal embryo, but that, in the successive transformations of the human embryo, there is reproduced before our eyes a visible, actual, physical representation of part of the life-history of the world. The same processes of development which once took thousands of years for their consummation are here condensed, foreshortened, concentrated into the space of weeks. Each platform reached by the human embryo in its upward course represents the embryo of some lower animal, which in some mysterious way has played a part in the pedigree of the human race, which may itself have disappeared long since from the earth, but is now and forever built into the inmost being of man. These lower animals, each at its successive stage, have stopped short in their development; man has gone on. At each fresh advance his embryo is found abreast of some other animal embryo, a little higher in organisation than that just passed. Continuing his ascent, that also is overtaken, the now very complex embryo making up to one animal embryo after another until it has distanced all in its series and stands alone. As the modern stem-winding watch contains the old clepsydra, and all the most useful features in all the timekeepers that were ever made; as the Walter Printing Press contains the rude hand-machine of Gutenberg, and all the best in all the machines that followed it; as the modern locomotive of to-day contains the engine of Watt, the locomotive of Hedley, and most of the improvements of succeeding years, so man contains the embryonic bodies of earlier and humbler and clumsier forms of life" (Ascent of Man, p. 67).

Now, the case for Evolution could not well be put in clearer or more forcible terms than these. And yet Professor Drummond writes of the wisdom and beneficence of a deity who made the arrangement by which human beings have had to fight through ages of animalism, savagery, ignorance, want, and misery, before they could even rise to the height of the first rung of the ladder of civilisation. Indeed, the learned Professor devotes the whole of a chapter to describing "the scaffolding left in the body" after man has passed through various stages of development—scaffolding which shows that man has not only been animal, fish, and reptile, but that he has passed through every stage of animal life, from the lowest to the highest. To use the language of Haeckel: "The history of the embryo, therefore, is a picture in little, an outline of that of the race."

Digitized by Google

Another important book that deserves the careful study of Freethinkers is one by Dr. J. Bland Sutton on Evolution and Disease. In this remarkable work Dr. Sutton points out that "it is impossible to state definitely the borderland between health and disease, either in relation with functional aberration or textural alteration. And in many instances we shall find conditions which we regard as abnormal in man presenting themselves as normal states in other animals." For example, the case is given of children who have been born with tufts of hair inside their cheeks, in the place usually occupied by a soft lining known as mucous membrane. It is found, however, that the inside of the cheeks of rabbits, hares, and porcupines present, naturally, patches of hairy skin. Indeed, many of the diseases from which human beings suffer are found to be but the reappearance of characteristics which were normal conditions in a lower state.

Now, if the evolutionary process is part of God's design, what shall we say either of the wisdom or goodness of a God who allows some animals to be born with two heads instead of one, six legs instead of four; human beings with webbed feet or fingers; or, as an illustration given by Dr. Sutton, of a girl born with a congenital fold of skin stretching from the thigh to the heel? What shall we say of the manifold reversions to ancestral types? Is it an evidence of God's wisdom that he allows one child in a family to be born with a well-formed head and brain, which will enable the child to develop into an intelligent and useful member of society, and another child in the same family to be born with a head and brain that will render it for life a microcephalous idiot?

Where is the wisdom of this plan? If, in reply, the Christian says, "Well, even according to you, nature plays these pranks with almost every form of life with absolute recklessness," we answer that we do not worship nature, that nature is not conscious as a whole, that nature is not intelligent, that she does not know what she is about, that she is neither all-wise nor all-good; that, indeed, man's highest wisdom consists in modifying and changing nature in her spontaneous course of action.

In my judgment, it is impossible to consider the doctrine of Evolution from a Theistic point of view without introducing the whole question of design. If all our organs and faculties are the result of development, what becomes of Dr. Paley's illustration of the beautiful design of the human eye? If the eye was once only a soft particle of matter in the animal organisation, that was more susceptible to the rays of light than any other part, and if through a series of changes it has developed to what we know it to-day, it does away once and for ever with the idea of God manufacturing a perfect eye. Indeed, it does away with the idea of God manufacturing any of the organs or faculties of man or beast, for it makes known to us the fact that all these faculties are the result of growth through untold centuries.

Professor Drummond says that, as far as the bodily faculties of human beings are concerned, man has reached the highest point of development; that, as a matter of fact, the savage races of mankind see better, hear better, and smell better than civilised man. So that the glory of man's bodily faculties is on the wane. The brain alone continues to develop. And it continues to grow, not because God has done anything to promote its development, but because man has cultivated his intelligence, and has manufactured a multitude of scientific instruments and other appliances, that assist it to grasp facts which must otherwise have remained unknown, to enlarge the scope of human inquiry, and open up new sources of information which were previously inaccessible to man. And so the evolution of man will go on; man will grow and improve with the growth and cultivation of the human intellect, until he will become nobler and grander in all his faculties than the imaginary gods who, in his vanity, he manufactured to account for his own existence.

ARTHUR B. MOSS.

THE CHRISTIAN RATEPAYERS' GUIDE.

If you cannot pay your taxes, buy a hook,
And attach it to a string, without delay;
Catch a fish therewith, then down its gullet look,
And you'll find therein the wherewithal to pay.

In the Christian's Guide—Jehovah's Holy Book—
You will read that Christ to pay a tax did wish.
So he straightway told a friend to "take his hook,"
And he'd find the needed cash within a fish.

Whereupon the fish-cum-cash collector threw
Hook and line into the sea, and brought to land
The official fiscal fish, from which he drew
The amount to meet the publican's demand.

You will also read that Christ—who can't deceive—
Said the works that he performed would all be done—
Yea, and greater works—by all who should believe,
Over all the world, till time shall cease to run.

What a fool a sceptic citizen must be!
When believing gives believers, at a wish,
"Floating capital" and funds in ev'ry sea,
And finances in the mouth of ev'ry fish.

What an ass a Christian citizen must be
If he worries o'er his taxes, when his Book,
In the clearest manner, promises that he
Can at once procure "the needful" with a hook.

If a needy person vainly tries to hook
A financial cod or haddock, you can tell
That the person's not a Christian (see the Book),
And that probably his soul will roast in hell.

G. L. MACKENZIE.

ACID DROPS.

CHRIST came to save the world, and how beautifully he has done it! After eighteen hundred years of Christian salvation the world has hardly conquered the elements of social well-being. The rich are richer than ever, and the poor poorer, at least by comparison. Is it possible to conceive a greater mockery than the promises of Christianity? Idle wealth and overworked poverty exist side by side, as they did before God Almighty condescended to be born of that Galilean "virgin."

What a satire on Christian civilisation is that terrible tragedy at Tooting! Poor Taylor, unable to get work, although he was honest, industrious, and thrifty; and unable to bear the thought of what might happen to his wife and children; takes a razor and cuts the throats of all of them, and kills himself into the bargain. The eldest boy escapes, though dreadfully injured; but eight corpses silently give the lie to all the boastings of Christian pulpits.

What audacity to talk about "saving" the world, while such tragedies are not only possible, but certain to occur! The poor Taylors—father, mother, and children—lie there with their throats cut; while a bishop, with thousands a year, with a smug smile preaches "Blessed be ye poor."

It is curious to note that Taylor was a Christian man himself. He was a regular attendant at Tooting Church, and some years ago he sang in the choir. The police found in his pocket some leaves of a Bible, and a letter full of religious expressions. His piety, however, did not prevent him from killing himself and turning his home into a slaughter-house. Yet the Christians tell us, until we are sick of hearing it, that unbelief is the principal cause of suicide.

There appears to be a Protestant Christian Evidence Society at Newcastle-on-Tyne, and, according to the local Evening News, it was recently regaled with a lecture by a Mr. Robert Edwards, whose discourse is described as "thoughtful and telling." After the lecture there was a discussion, which was participated in by the Secretary, a Mr. C. J. Whitfield. This gentleman was great on "morality," and, in the interest of the particular brand which has the great honor of his patronage, he advised Christians to vote against any Freethinkers who aspired to "public offices." After this exhibition of Protestant Christian Evidence charity and toleration there followed a hymn and a prayer, and thus ended what is called "a very profitable meeting." We should lay the accent on the "very." And, after all, it is profitable to witness the practical effects of Christianity when it is untinctured with civilisation and common sense.

Digitized by Google

Mr. George Wise, of Liverpool, writes an article on "What is a Secularist?" in the March number of the Christian Evidence Gazette. Very naturally he finds Secularism "the vilest enemy of mankind," and he is going to oppose it with "a bold front." Mr. Wise is certainly able to do that. He attended one of Mr. Foote's last course of lectures at Liverpool, and represented Professor Sanday as contending that the four Gospels were written by Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John. His mistake was pointed out to him, but he persisted in it. Apparently he has not "bold front" enough to correct his own public mistakes.

The "Army" welcomed its "General" home again on Monday evening. It was a big affair, with the usual raucous eloquence. But a much bigger affair was organised for Tuesday evening—namely, a midnight march and demonstration through Piccadilly, which is haunted by the females that the "General" promised to take down to cultivate the strawberry beds in Essex. For our part, we quite fail to see why the Boothites should be allowed to play bands, and perform what they call singing, in the public streets at midnight. The police would not let Radicals or Socialists hold a midnight parade in the West-end. Why, then, should they allow "General" Booth to "make night hideous with his hollow" instruments and equally hollow soldiers?

The owner of the vast trading establishment called the Salvation Army has given himself another bold advertisement by gathering his employés at the Albert Hall last Monday evening, to give him a reception on his return from America. The circular issued by "Colonel" Sturgess on the occasion was characteristic. It ended with the words, "believing that God will graciously respond to our endeavors for his glory." The response most appreciated was hard cash. But what if God did not respond to these endeavors for Booth's glory?

Booth said at the Albert Hall that of all the sights he had seen going round the world the one that pleased him most was people at the penitent form. This means recruits and obedient followers. Once people are hypnotised to declare themselves saved, they become mere puppets in the hands of the General. They wear his clothes, drink the tea he supplies, and put their spare cash in the Salvation Army Bank.

To-Day, speaking of the L.C.C. elections, says: "Men of the stamp of the Reverend Hugh Price Hughes and Alderman Fleming Williams have talked as if God had been specially engaged by them as their chief electioneering agent. Christ himself has been dragged through the mud of their dirty politics, has been paraded on their platforms, and patted on the back in their election addresses. A more disgusting exhibition even the Nonconformist conscience itself has never dared to parade. Had such methods succeeded, it would have been a bad thing for religion, and Christianity would have suffered another of the many cruel and cowardly stabs that are for ever being dealt it by the Devil's emissaries, who, for their treacherous purposes, have taken service within its ranks."

It is amusing to see the "Progressives" going in for petitions to the Lord for assistance, and the Tories laughing at them for doing it. At the recent annual dinner of the Lambeth Carlton Club, Mr. Jerome, a London County Councillor, said it was "lamentable that people should be imbued with such impracticable ideas as to resort to prayer in matters affecting the government of London."

Poor Mr. Hughes! He can't get away from that Atheist Shoemaker. The ghost of Charles Alfred Gibson follows him everywhere. Even on Monday evening, at Exeter Hall, during the annual meeting of the Wesleyan Mission, Mr. H. P. Chanter got up and asked Mr. Hughes: "Are you going to make any remarks as to Mr. Foote's criticism on missions re the Atheist Shoemaker?" The reverend gentleman looked surprised, and replied in the negative. Of course.

The vacancy of the head-mastership at Rugby has led to a prolonged controversy on the custom of appointing clergymen only to this position. A general feeling has been expressed that, since the best teachers are now laymen, this custom must be abandoned. Mr. Bosworth Smith points out that the clerical profession gives parents no assurance of sincerity. The minister may have secret doubts; "a lie in his right hand, which must lessen all his capabilities for good." The Church Times betrays its want of faith by saying: "We believe that the appointment of laymen as head-masters would, sooner or later, result in the schools being undenominationalised, then secularised." Against so horrible an event let us pray!

A writer in the Church Times deplores the neglect of Lenten fasting. Jesus went without food for forty days and nights, and was afterwards an hungered, and his followers will not even dine on salt cod and egg sauce in remembrance of his remarkable staying powers.

There has been a shindy on the Lynn Board of Guardians. Mr. Robert Green, a member of the Board, in the exercise of his right and duty, visited the workhouse, where he found amongst the inmates a sceptic who longed for something suitable to read. Being himself a Secularist, Mr. Green gave him some copies of the Freethinker; and upon this incident the Guardians had a very lively debate. The Lynn Advertiser actually devotes a leading article to the subject in which the Freethinker is alluded to as "a coarse and vile infidel publication." The sceptic to whom it was lent did not keep this "improper" publication to himself; it "naturally passed from hand to hand for the entertainment of the inmates." "Naturally" is a good word. It implies that the unfortunate paupers relished the Freethinker more than the goody-goody literature which the Guardians would like to see them perusing. Yes, yes; "naturally" is a good word. A Daniel come to judgment; yea, we say, a Daniel.

According to the People's Journal (Aberdeen), the Congregationalists and Evangelical Unionists have recently been discussing an alliance, and "matrimony," so to speak, was in the air. One gentleman told a story which "greatly tickled" the godly ears of his listeners. It was about an eminent divine who was staying at the house of a friend, where he became captivated by a good-looking housemaid. Meeting her on the stairs one day, he asked her whether she loved the Lord Jesus Christ. Mary said "Yes," and the man of God rejoined, "Then will you be my wife?" Mary's reply is not given, nor are we anxious to hear it. The funny thing is the way in which these pious people mix up their jokes with their "Redeemer."

Sir Robert Hunter, who was formerly solicitor of the Commons Preservation Society, told, at the Saturday Popular Lecture at Toynbee Hall, how, in the famous Loughton case, the rector of the parish, as lord of the manor, sought to enclose a part of Epping Forest, and on the following Sunday preached a sermon on "Covetousness."

A curious story is told by the Vienna correspondent of the Daily News: "A rich farmer named Pap, at Fekete Gyarmat, in Hungary, married about fourteen years ago; but his wife eloped after a year of marriage. Pap took no trouble to find her, but a few days ago a peasant named Gabriel Soki, from a distant village, came to him and said that it was he who had robbed him of his wife. He had, however, lately become a 'Nazarene,' and one of the first rules of that sect is, that believers must return everything that is not by right their own to its rightful owner. He therefore begged to say that he would bring back the wife and also their five children. Pap, after the first surprise, gave Soki a thrashing, but the affair does not end there, as Soki will not keep her, and the Court will have to decide who is to provide her with a home."

The chief Church of England at Broken Hill, N.S.W., has been sold by auction to pay a bank overdraft; and all over Australia ministers are deserting their pulpits because congregations absolutely refuse to cash up the necessary subsistence.—Sydney Bulletin.

It has at last been amply demonstrated that a really rousing effective funeral sermon is productive of good results. A Christchurch family, who believed that two young men relatives went down with the "Wairarapa," ordered an exceedingly sad and impressive discourse to be delivered in the church, and two days afterwards the boys turned up and wanted to know if dinner was ready.

Monday, February 24, the Public Library Committee of Ealing condemned Hall Caine's Manxman as being unfit for the public gaze, and ordered its removal. The chairman of the Committee, the Rev. J. S. Hilliard, called it "disgraceful," and Mrs. Force forcibly described it as "shocking and shameful." Not much chance for Freethought books where so mild a production as the Manxman is thus denounced.

The Rev. J. S. Hilliard, of Ealing, has, of course, been interviewed relative to his banning of the Manxman. According to To-Day, he described it as "disgusting," "filthy," "indecent," and "a distinct incentive to the commission of immorality." Those who expect to find the filthiness, etc., will never do so unless they have a nose like the Rev. J. S. Hilliard.

Digitized by Google

Life in Boston grows funnier. Young man—theological student—goes to Sunday night "sacred" concert to secure evidence of its non-sacredness. Young man—theological student—secures evidence; appears before committee of the Truly Good; questioned variously, says he heard nothing of a sacred nature sung at said concert; further questioned, what did he hear? says he heard song relating to the shortness of a pair of pants worn by person named McGilligan; did not think song sacred; further questioned by manager of theatre, did he not hear the "Ave Maria" sung? says he did; would he not call that sacred? couldn't say; did he know the meaning of "Ave Maria"? did not. Consternation; exit of young man witness—theological student.—Liberty.

Dr. Pullman points out that the sixteen American bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church take the sum of 200,000 dollars. He wants to know what they do with it. Evidently the business has improved since Peter went fishing and Paul tent-making.

It having been arranged that a lady should preside at the Aberdeen Conference of the Women's Guild of the Church of Scotland, and offer the inaugural prayer, the Rev. Dr. Cooper, of the East Parish Church, Aberdeen, strongly protested against any such arrangement, as opposed to Paul's injunction that women should keep silence in the churches.

A curious story about the Pope is being told in a French paper. Leo XIII. takes great interest in his museum of saints, and it is said he recently wrote to the prebendary of Limoges Cathedral to ask for a part of the skeleton of Saint Martial, which is in the possession of the Cathedral. The reply was that no part of the skeleton could be parted with. Thereupon the Pope made a formal demand for the entire relic. Letters passed, and the position was becoming critical, when the Bishop of Limoges came to the rescue, and, having one of the back teeth of the saint drawn, sent it to the Pope, who was satisfied with this addition to his collection.

A railway accident in Mexico has resulted in the loss of over one hundred lives, besides eighty-five severely injured. The wrecked train was conveying back to Mexico a number of persons who had been on a religious pilgrimage.

Floods in Hungary, spoiling the fields and sweeping away houses; a death-rate reaching 55 per thousand in Liverpool, and in excess in all the other large towns, are among recent instances of our heavenly Father's care.

The Rev. H. B. Ottley, vicar of Eastbourne, has been presiding at a boxing competition. He is also given to singing, his favorite ditty being "Hard Times Come Again No More." Wouldn't it be more appropriate that he should chant, "The Lord is a Mighty Man of War"?—Reynolds's Newspaper.

Edward Holmes, a lay reader in clerical attire, has been sentenced to a month's hard labor for begging. He had a collecting book, in which contributions were entered, under the heading of "Father Edward's Mission for the Relief of East-end starving poor, without distinction of class or creed."

The Tottenham Star contains a full report of the case of the man John Thomas Clayden, the worker for Christ, connected with the Independent Church of Lower Edmonton. He brutally assaulted his wife, who has obtained a separation order.

In 1788, when Beaufoy made an attempt to obtain the repeal of the Corporation and Test Act, a deputation waited on the Lord Chancellor Thurlow to obtain his support. The deputies were Drs. Kippis, Palmer, and Rees. The Chancellor heard them very civilly, and then said: "Gentlemen, I'm against you, by God. I'm for the Established Church, damme! Not that I have any more regard for the Established Church than for any other Church, but because it is established. And if you can get your d——d religion established, I'll be for that too."

In the debate on the Burials Bill, which happily passed its second reading with a majority of 111, the House was told of one Christian clergyman who called public attention to a Nonconformist funeral in the churchyard by a sermon from the text, "He shall be buried with the burial of an ass."

Robinson Souttar writes to the Daily News on the necessity for the Burials Bill, as follows: "I have been at funerals all over the world; I have mourned with the Mussulman and sorrowed with the Hindoo, and I have found only one country on the face of the earth where burial with indignity is legalised, and that country is Christian England."

The Daily News special correspondent in Wales shows the feeling there against the Established Church. He mentions that, while the Church is nearly empty, the clergyman stoutly insists upon his tithes. Professing to be interested in the reunion of Christendom, the clergyman refused the other day to allow a Nonconformist to speak at a grave.

The Emperor William has been telling his sailors, "You are bound to give up your whole life for me." He concluded by saying: "Thus as we hope in God shall we destroy the enemy. Be you like the Brandenburghers of old."

William makes much of religion, but it must be his own. An Alsatian conscript, who belonged to the sect of Mennonites, whose faith forbids an oath and the use of the sword, has been again and again imprisoned for acting up to what he believes to be the dictates of Christianity.

The Baron Konigwater, a wealthy Jew, left the bulk of his large fortune to his son, whose wife was a proselyte to the Jewish faith of her husband. In his will he made the condition that, if his son ever became a Christian, he should pay one million florins to Jewish public charities. The son, with his wife, has since been baptised. His sister now declares that he has no right to accept the bulk of the fortune, as their father left it to him in the certain faith that he would remain a Jew. There is a paragraph in the Austrian law according to which an heir can be declared "unworthy" to inherit if he has committed certain actions, among which is having practised deceit towards a father. But it seems well nigh impossible that any Austrian court should declare a man unworthy because he has become a convert to Roman Catholicism.

The architect of the church of Lourdes, who considerably added to his banking account by that piece of work, was incited by the priests to bring an action against M. Zola for libel in his book, Lourdes. Judgment was delivered for the defendant, and the priests have only further advertised the book they object to.

JUDAS.

No name in legend casts a darker shade
Than that of Judas, who his Lord betrayed;
And yet, reflect, O Christian, where you'd be
Had Judas not betrayed his Lord for thee.

The controversy on "Why Working Men Don't Come to Church" still occupies much space in the Church Times. One writer plainly says: "Like so many men in other classes, they are practically Agnostics." A "Churchwarden" says the real question is, "Why are our churches empty?"

The Rev. Clifford Rickards, chaplain of her Majesty's convict establishment at Princetown, is not a very consistent Christian; at any rate, he does not obey his Master's injunction to give his cloak to anybody who is good enough to steal his coat. On Sunday night last the reverend gentleman, being unable to sleep, went downstairs for a smoke, and found a burglar ransacking the drawing-room. Instead of doing as he would be done by, and helping the burglar to complete his operations, the reverend gentleman seized a gun (the burglar having a knife), and the result of the battle was awkward for the visitor. Parson Rickards received a cut on the hand, while the enemy was shot in the arm, and so badly that it had to be amputated. The next time that burglar breaks into a clergyman's house he had better make sure beforehand that the man of God is a practical believer in the Sermon on the Mount.

Canon Moore Eds, preaching at the parish church of Stockton on "Christ and the Claims of Labor," argued that Christianity had abolished slavery. He did not explain how it did so, or why, after Christ abolished it, it nevertheless remained among Christian nations for eighteen hundred years.

Mr. Henry Maudslay, the engineer, stated that, when in Portugal fixing some machinery at the disused convent of Xabregas at Lisbon, he had occasion to cut through the walls under a staircase, and he found there a mass of bones of babies and young women, while a further examination disclosed the fact that one of the stone stairs was cunningly made to revolve on a pivot, so that a body could be instantaneously disposed of; the whole arrangement having been carefully contrived for concealing the crimes of the monks.

As the intelligence of any race increases, their religious fervor grows more timid and parsimonious.—Charles Letourneau.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Foote's Engagements.

Sunday, March 17, Assembly Rooms, Lower Pavement, Nottingham:—11, "Is Religion the Cause of Progress?" 3, "How the Bible Stands Now"; 7, "Did Jesus Christ Ever Live?"

March 24, Bristol; 31, Hall of Science.

April 7 and 14, Hall of Science; 21, Glasgow.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

MR. CHARLES WATTS'S ENGAGEMENTS.—March 17 and 24, Hall of Science, London; 31, Newcastle-on-Tyne. April 7, Sheffield; 14, Liverpool.—All communications for Mr. Watts should be sent to him (if a reply is required, a stamped and addressed envelope must be enclosed) at 81 Effra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

E. H. (Longsight).—Cardinal Manning stated something of the kind in an article in one of the monthlies—we believe the Nineteenth Century. His position was that to steal food to satisfy hunger was not a crime. Many others besides Cardinal Manning have held the same doctrine.

W. C. HANT informs us that the London Anarchists have for some years had a paper called the Torch, which has "no connection with the rag of that name mentioned in the Hall of Science libel case."

J. J. CHAPPER.—Please send future orders for books or pamphlets direct to Mr. Forder. Sending to Mr. Foote only causes trouble and delay.

A. STARINGTON.—Mr. Bradlaugh belonged to a French lodge of Freemasons. In England, we believe, a Freemason must profess belief in the architect of the universe. Personally, we could never understand the use of Freemasonry in a free country. It may be said, of course, that Freemasons help each other; but every man is morally entitled to be helped, and morally bound to help others, by virtue of a common humanity.

J. MORISON.—Thanks. See paragraph.

MAURICE RUSSELL.—We are highly pleased to hear of your success at West Ham.

T. SHARP.—See paragraph. Thanks for your promise to bring it to their attention.

R. CARROLL, 42 Madrid-street, Belfast, will be glad to hear from any local Freethinkers who are ready to take part in putting the Ulster Branch upon a better footing. What is wanted in Belfast is an active propaganda.

N.S.S. BENEVOLENT FUND.—Miss E. M. Vance acknowledges:—Bolton Branch, 4s.; W. Stewart, 2s.; Camberwell Branch, £1 6s.

LECTURE NOTICES must reach 28 Stonecutter-street by first post Tuesday, or they will not be inserted.

R. GREEN.—Thanks. See paragraph.

J. K. MAAGAARD.—Will try to find room.

P. H. ECHLIN.—Vegetarianism is too large a subject to be treated in a few sentences. We have not the slightest objection to inserting a terse, well-written plea for vegetarianism in a non-editorial part of the paper.

FORWARD.—We will bear the suggestion in mind, but it is one that we could not possibly carry out in the immediate future.

F. SHEPHERD.—Under consideration.

J. JONES.—Rev. Fleming Williams did not reject the doctrine of the Atonement at the Hall of Science; what he rejected was the orthodox, historic interpretation; what he accepted was something new-fashioned, hazy, and half intelligible.

G. J. WARREN.—It seems to us too late. An appeal now would, in our opinion, be utterly useless.

W. MANLEY.—We will send a copy weekly to the Stratford Free Library. Kindly inform us whether it is allowed to lie upon the table as promised.

A. E. ASPINALL.—Büchner's Force and Matter would probably suit you. The price is 7s. 6d. We are sorry to hear of your bereavement.

HAMILTON.—Our review of Mr. Balfour's Foundations of Belief had to be postponed, in order to find room for the criticism of Mr. Grant Allen's The Woman Who Did.

A. G. LEVETT.—We have written some paragraphs on the Tooting tragedy. Thanks for your efforts to promote our circulation.

E. G. TAYLOR.—Indisposition and the libel case together were responsible for the oversight. Are you having the article printed as a pamphlet? Both matters shall be dealt with in our next issue. There are great demands on our space this week.

J. RICHARDS.—Received.

A. B. MOSS.—List shall appear in full next week. Glad to hear that you are quite recovered from your illness, and that you had a gratifying reception at the Hall of Science on March 3.

C. DOBB.—We note your postscripts.

A. MITCHELL.—Shall appear. Thanks for your interesting letter. It is always pleasant to hear from those we have assisted in becoming Freethinkers.

A. LIDDLE desires to correct a blunder in his article in our last week's issue. "Deleted" should stand for "selected" in the ninth line from the bottom on page 154.

W. WILSON.—Not bad, but rather far-fetched.

E. H. B. STEPHENSON.—Thought it had appeared. Will look it up.

PAPERS RECEIVED.—Western Figaro—Islamic World—Crescent—Freethinkers' Magazine—Truthseeker—Twentieth Century—Staffordshire Sentinel—Open Court—Lucifer—Secular Thought—Liberator—To-Day—Harbinger of Light—Progressive Thinker—Two Worlds—Chat—Christian Evidence Gazette—Blyth Scribe—Labor Leader—Reynolds's Newspaper—Daily News—Kent Messenger—Humanity—People's Journal—Tottenham and Wood Green Star—Reading Observer—Stockton and Thornaby Herald—Echo—Sunderland Echo.

FRIENDS who send us newspapers would enhance the favour by marking the passages to which they wish to call our attention.

LETTERS for the Editor of the Freethinker should be addressed to 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

The Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the publishing office, post free, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 10s. 6d.; Half Year, 5s. 3d.; Three Months, 2s. 8d.

SCALE OF ADVERTISEMENTS.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 4s. 6d.; half column, £1 2s. 6d.; column, £2 5s. Special terms for repetitions.

CORRESPONDENCE should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

IT being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will receive the number in a colored wrapper when their subscription expires.

ORDERS for literature should be sent to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

SUGAR PLUMS.

MR. FOOTE had a very busy time of it on Sunday. In the morning the streets of Sunderland were full of slush; it had snowed in the night, and a thorough thaw had set in with the daylight. Slop, slop, slop! went the boots of Mr. Foote and two local friends, Messrs. Weightman and Bowey, as they walked to the Sunderland station after breakfast. On arriving at Ryhope station, by which time they were joined by other Sunderland friends, including one brave lady, they tramped through the slush to the Miners' Hall. Ryhope is a large colliery village, and it conforms to the geometrical definition of a line—length without breadth. It was nearly a mile and a half's walk to the hall, and it was slop, slop, slop! again all the way. The hall itself was soon filled with a good audience, and on the whole the lecture was listened to with fair attention. That peculiar Christian charity which takes the form of brutal interruption, and bestial noises, had toned down a little since Mr. Foote's previous visit. What there was left of it found expression after the lecture, during the time allowed for discussion, in which three Christians participated. A piano being at the back of the hall struck up a hymn and left off when they were tired. Still, the proceedings were a considerable improvement on those of the previous occasion. Some parts of the lecture were actually applauded, and the pamphlets and copies of the Freethinker that were sold will probably be seed of Freethought in Ryhope.

Sunderland gave Mr. Foote, in the afternoon and evening, the two best audiences he has ever had there. The People's Palace is a very large place, and the meetings were excellent in point of numbers. Unfortunately, in the afternoon, it was far from excellent in point of conduct. Several followers were present of the most ruffianly advocate of Christian Evidences in England—perhaps in the world. We refer to the fellow who uttered that infamous libel on the London Hall of Science, for which the printer and publisher have had to pay damages with costs. Mr. Justice Wright said it was about the worst libel he had ever read; yet the fellow who uttered it knew he had not the slightest justification, and, with the courage of a pious Bombastes, he left the printer and publisher of his libel in the lurch, although he goes about saying that he (forsooth!) has paid all the expenses. This reckless liar and malignant libeller is kept at a great distance by the respectable Christians of Sunderland; not a single minister will condescend to have anything to do with him. But he rather pleases the baser sort of Christians, who are tickled by his vaunting language. The fellow took the Co-operative Hall for the same day, and issued a vulgar circus-bill "challenging G. W. Foote." Of course Mr. Foote has no intention of debating with this ignorant blackguard. Being questioned on this point, Mr. Foote told the meeting what the fellow had been guilty of, and said that he had to draw the line somewhere, and he drew it where the gentleman ended and the blackguard began. Respectable people cheered this statement, but the friends of Bombastes howled like emigrants from Hades. Their conduct throughout the afternoon lecture was characteristic—that is, it was disgusting. They would not listen themselves, nor let others listen. Mr. Foote kept on in spite of the noise, but, of course, it was a severe strain. Finally, after three Christians had been allowed to oppose, the rowdies made Mr. Foote's rising to reply the signal for a perfect pandemonium, and the meeting had to be brought to a close. And this is what some people are still proud of as Christianity!

Digitized by Google

Mr. C. Cohen presided in the afternoon, and made a first-rate chairman. He came over with a dozen friends from South Shields, returning in time to deliver his own evening lecture. Mr. Cohen held his ground manfully. We knew he had ability, and we are glad to find that he has also decision of character. Both are needed for a career in the Secular party.

A change came over the scene in the evening. Either the rowdies were hearing their own champion, or they were tired out. At any rate, there was very little interruption. The lecturer soon got command of the meeting, and held it for more than an hour. The discussion which followed was good-tempered, and the big day's work ended in peace and harmony.

The Sunderland Branch worked hard to make the meetings successful, and the advertising was particularly well attended to. They want the President of the N.S.S. to visit Sunderland again as early as possible.

The Sunderland Daily Echo reports Mr. Foote's lectures. It speaks of the Ryhope meeting as "a dense audience," and says that at Sunderland "the afternoon and evening audiences were very large."

Mr. Foote delivers three lectures to-day (March 17) at Nottingham. We hear that the bills are well displayed on the city walls, and we dare say there will be good meetings. On the following Sunday (March 24) Mr. Foote lectures at Bristol.

Mr. Charles Watts, having recovered from his recent attack of influenza, will lecture this Sunday evening, March 17, at the Hall of Science, London. He will take for his subject, "The Drawbacks of Theism."

Mr. Charles Watts has just republished in pamphlet form the articles he has recently contributed to the Freethinker on "Was Christ a Political and Social Reformer?" We happen to know that some of our readers, at least, will be glad to have this essay in a permanent form. It is carefully written, and contains much useful information. We hope to hear that it has a good sale, as its merits certainly entitle it to a wide circulation.

The Humanitarian League has begun the publication of a monthly journal, entitled Humanity, edited by H. S. Salt. The first number contains a report of the recent Humanitarian Conference, and in its notes mentions Mr. Foote's paper on "The Shadow of the Sword," which will shortly be published by the League.

We have received a copy of the Secular Almanack, 1895, issued by the English National Secular Society, and edited by Messrs. G. W. Foote and J. M. Wheeler, editors of the Freethinker. The calendar is carefully filled in with dates of interest, and is accompanied by a choice selection of extracts from the greatest writers. The following articles comprise one on "The Progress of Freethought," by G. W. Foote; others by J. M. Wheeler, Charles Watts, etc., and one selected one by our valued contributor, M. Emily Adams, from our own columns, "What have Unbelievers Done for the World?"—Secular Thought.

"Mary" writes in the Hawick News (March 8) a very good account of the martyrdom of Bruno, as an instance of Christian intolerance. She concludes by remarking: "This is just exactly what some of the 'lambs of God' would do at the present time if they dared. You may say they would scarcely do that now; but it is not very long ago since we heard of three good citizens of London who were incarcerated for giving their opinion of the Christian religion. Their names are Foote, Ramsey, and Kemp; and I am perfectly sure some of the bigots of the present time would do more if they were allowed. Remember, sir, I don't say they are all alike; but when we see so many of them showing their teeth at one another in the papers, like so many curs, the only conclusion we can come to is that they would worry one another for Christ's sake."

The Boston Investigator announces a Symposium on the Bible for its issue of March 16. The topics discussed are: "The Bible in Civilisation"; "The Inspiration of the Bible"; "The Contradictions of the Bible"; "Ingersoll and the Bible"; "The Bible and its Critics"; "Is the Bible a Moral Book?" "Is the Bible a Fit School Book?"

The Truthseeker, of New York (March 2), in announcing the death of Frederick Douglass, the ex-slave orator, says: "He was a Freethinker, although the Church is now claiming him, as usual."

The Rev. Walter Lloyd (Unitarian), in an article on "The Bible in the Schools," in the March number of the Westminster Review, says: "It is a book for students, and not for children. The reading of it in schools is generally either useless or injurious. It either has no effect at all, which we believe is the fact in the majority of cases, or else it has a bad effect. That is to say, it fills the undeveloped mind with a mass of erroneous impressions. Children obtain from it notions of the universe at variance with the conclusions of astronomy and geology. They obtain notions of human nature at variance with the teachings of anthropology and psychology. They learn that God approves of war; that he is partial to monarchs; that ritualistic religion is of divine origin, and that morality rests upon arbitrary foundations." The article indicates that the Unitarians, at least, are being driven to the logical position of excluding the Bible from the schools.

The Nottingham Branch congratulates Mr. Foote on the success of the recent libel action, which it regards as having been most necessary and, in the issue, useful to the Secular movement.

Mr. Maurice Russell, whose candidature was recently the subject of one of our "Sugar Plums," came out third on the poll for the West Ham School Board, with 9,433 votes. Mr. Russell ran on the "secular education" ticket.

In a paper on "The Descent into Hades," in the current number of the Contemporary Review, Mr. Percy Gardner shows that the doctrine of Christ's descent into hell was but a continuance of the legend of Orpheus in the Orphic mysteries. Mr. Gardner might have mentioned that Orpheus is represented as the central divinity in the so-called Christian catacombs at Rome. He does say incidentally that, "in the wall paintings which adorn the sepulchre of the early Christ, also we may see, side by side, representations of Christ and of Orpheus."

The Colorado House of Representatives has passed a Bill taxing all Church property in that State. There is expected to be a strong opposition to the Bill in the Senate; but the snowball has been set rolling, and it will gather.

A new Freethought paper, called El Libre Examen, has been started at Merida, Yucatan, Mexico. The editor is D. Thomas Péves Ponce.

The Vossicher Zeitung, of Berlin, reports that, while new and costly churches are constantly going up in that city, "the ministers preach to empty benches."

Mr. Foote's recent Wednesday lectures at the London Hall of Science on some of the plays of Shakespeare attracted improving audiences, in spite of the severity of the weather. Unfortunately, there was a hitch on the last Wednesday evening (March 6). Miss Vance was down with the influenza, and as she had not given notice of the lecture the hall was not cleaned and seated. Mr. Foote knew nothing of this contretemps until he arrived at the Hall, a few minutes before half-past eight. No such thing has ever occurred before, to our knowledge; and those who attended, and found the doors closed, may accept our assurance that it will never occur again.

Mr. Foote has not had many public debates of late years. There has been a run upon Mr. Watts in this line of business since he returned from America and settled down again in England. The Derby friends, however, have been trying very hard to bring about a debate between Mr. Foote and Mr. Lee. This gentleman has displayed the common Christian desire of having everything his own way, and all the original arrangements of the joint-committee have had to be set aside. Mr. Foote protested, as a matter of course; but he practically gave the committee power to agree to almost anything on his behalf sooner than there should be no debate at all. It now remains to be seen whether Mr. Lee will be satisfied if he settles all the arrangements himself.

One thing is very peculiar about Mr. Lee. Although the Derby friends only asked if he was willing to enter into a public discussion, and although they have told him again and again that Mr. Foote neither issues challenges nor accepts them, he insists on regarding himself as the "challenged" party, and in demanding certain "rights" in consequence. Such "rights," of course, can only mean an advantage; which is surely a strange stipulation for a gentleman who is cocksure that he is championing truth against error, and the cause of God against the weak invention of men.

Digitized by Google

The Chatham friends are also arranging a debate between Mr. Foote and the Rev. Mr. Waldron, of the Christian Evidence Society. We have never had the pleasure of hearing this gentleman, but we are told that he is a capable speaker, and that he eschews personalities. If this be so, the debate—which may take place in April—should be interesting, and perhaps instructive.

The annual meeting of the Finsbury Park Branch was held on Sunday last, when the secretary and other officers were re-elected for the ensuing twelve months. The treasurer reported a substantial balance in hand—the result of a very successful open-air season last year. Arrangements for the forthcoming propaganda were made, and date for commencement fixed. A hearty vote of thanks was moved to Mr. Foote for the great services he had rendered the party by exposing the tactics of the vile Christian libellers in the action just concluded.

The pamphlet containing the report of the trial of the Hall of Science libel case, with an historical and critical introduction by Mr. Foote, and an account of the so-called "Leeds Orgies," will be on sale next week. We hope our readers will see that it is well circulated amongst their Christian friends.

SOME LITTLE-KNOWN FREETHINKERS.—IV.

Evan Powell Meredith.

I never met the author of The Prophet of Nazareth, though I had the honor of eliciting some articles from him contributed to the National Reformer, on the subject of the early Christian love feasts and immorality. They were signed "Lucianus," a signature which, like those of "Julian" and "Celsus," has been taken by more than one writer in the Freethought ranks.

Evan Powell Meredith was born in Wales in 1811. He was educated for the ministry at Pontypool College, became a pastor in the Baptist connection, and an eloquent preacher in the Welsh tongue. He made a translation of the Bible into Welsh. Study of the Scriptures led him to see through their pretensions, and about 1844, as he states in the preface to his largest work, he quietly withdrew from Christianity "whose doctrine, after considerable examination and research, he had ceased to believe, and, therefore, could no longer conscientiously preach." He adds that he had, ever since his secedure, almost daily pursued his researches after the real origin of the Christian religion. These studies he pursued to the last, and he had, I believe, prepared a work on the Gospels, which never appeared. What became of it on his death at Monmouth, July 23, 1889, I cannot say. Mr. Meredith lived a very secluded life. Probably he could have done much had he taken to Freethought advocacy in Wales; but he remained a Deist all his days, and possibly did not care to co-operate with Secularists. Mr. Meredith's Prophet of Nazareth was evoked by the offer by Mr. George Baillie, of Glasgow, of a prize for the best essay on the question whether Jesus predicted the last day of judgment, and the destruction of the world, as events inevitable during the then existent generation of men. The prize was only ten guineas, a sum which could never have compensated Mr. Meredith for a tithe of the labor he put into his performance. But his motive was not gain. As he states in his preface, "he thought that thus to write on a given subject was an inoffensive and a favorable manner of making some of his theological views known to Christians generally, and particularly to those who had studied in the same college with him, and had taken so much pains to brand him as an infidel."

The Prophet of Nazareth is one of the most convincing works ever written. It thoroughly exhausts its subject, and the upholder of the supernatural character of Christianity is left without a leg to stand upon. Nor is it wanting in eloquence, as the following passage may testify: "There is no man, however depraved, who is not more or less strongly prompted by his own feelings to be just, from a love of justice,—to be benevolent from a spontaneously kind emotion,—and to do good, in general, from a love of virtue. The threats of hell and the promises of heaven, as incentives to virtue, together with the whole tenor of the superstitious creeds prevalent in the world, have made man believe that he is much more immoral, and more helpless, than he really is. Free him from the trammels of book-revelations—let him study nature alone—and man will make rapid strides towards happiness. He has already discovered that his degree of enjoyment is in proportion to his moral and intellectual progress. He has learned that all his miseries arise from a violation of the natural laws—either by him, or by members of the community in which he lives—and that all his happiness is the result of obedience to these laws, in discovering which, and learning to obey them, he daily progresses, gathering a thousand facts from his own experience, as well as from that of others. When mankind, universally, will learn to obey these laws, each individual will feel intense pleasure in promoting the happiness of others, which cannot fail to secure the happiness of the whole race. Then will knowledge and benevolence be inseparably connected in each individual, and vice and misery accidents in human life—rarely witnessed. The progress in knowledge and happiness which man has already made, by studying nature, warrants this conclusion, and forbids us to prescribe limits either to the high degree of knowledge he is capable of acquiring, or the intensity of happiness he is capable of enjoying."

In 1865 Mr. Meredith entered into some correspondence with the Bishop of Llandaff, in consequence of his hearing that dignity deliver a sermon in which he advocated the utility and advantages of wealth. Our Freethinker strongly contrasted the preaching of the bishop with the doctrines of Jesus, as found in Matthew vi. 25-34, xix. 16; Mark x. 17; Luke xviii. 18, and John vi. 27. At first his lordship fenced in his reply, stating that he had been misrepresented, and had not inculcated the pursuit of riches. Mr. Meredith produced a shorthand report bearing out his representations, and persisted in asking an explanation. The bishop now changed his tack, and said he had no time for correspondence. About the same time the Rev. J. F. Francklin, vicar of Whaplode, Spalding, having perused "some extracts from your horrible and blasphemous production, entitled The Prophet of Nazareth," addressed him an arrogant epistle against employing his "ungodly pen in the service of Satan." He was answered at length, and the letters to the bishop and the vicar were published under the title of Amphilogia.

To those who enjoy the sight of Christians squirming and wriggling in the grasp of a hard-fisted Freethinker Amphilogia affords excellent reading. But, of course, Mr. Meredith's chief service to the cause was his great work on The Prophet of Nazareth. The world of letters was then giving much attention to Bishop Colenso's work on The Pentateuch and the Book of Joshua. But Mr. Meredith struck a blow, not at any outwork, but at the very citadel of Christianity; and, in dealing with the prophecies of the gospel, he hit the Christian superstition in its weakest part. As long as that superstition endures his work will retain its value, though in these days, when great books are felt to be more than ever great evils, it is to be wished that someone may condense its six hundred pages to sixty.

J. M. W.

A DREADFUL GOD.

The following pious hymn, No. 42, second book of the old collection of Dr. Isaac Watts, used to be a favorite in the good old days, when the good old religion was poured out hot and strong. The children of to-day, brought up on "sweet Jesus" pap, hardly realise what Christianity meant to their forefathers, and what a dreadful bogey was the blessed "Gord":—

"With holy fear and humble song,
The dreadful God my soul adore;
Reverence and awe become the throng,
That speaks the greatness of His power.

"Far in the deep where darkness dwells,
The land of horror and despair,
Justice hath built a dismal hell,
And laid her stores of vengeance there.

"Eternal chains and heavy plagues,
Tormenting racks and fiery coals—
Darts to inflict immortal pains,
Dipt in the blood of damned souls.

"There Satan, the first sinner, lies,
And roars and bites his iron bands;
In vain the rebel strives to rise,
Crushed with the weight of both thy hands.

"These guilty souls of Adam's race
Shriek out and howl beneath thy rod;
Once they could scorn a Savior's grace;
But they incensed a dreadful God.

"Tremble, my soul, and kiss the Son.
Sinners, obey your Savior's call,
Else your damnation hastens on,
And hell gapes wide to wait your fall."

I will call no being good who is not what I mean when I apply that epithet to my fellow creatures; and if such a being can sentence me to hell for not so calling him, to hell I will go.—J. S. Mill.

Digitized by Google

WHERE WAS GOD?

"YES'EM, yes'em, we had hard times," said Aunt Peggy, a little, heavy-set old woman, who had been a slave before the late rebellion.

"Yes'em, I've walked eight miles a day and washed for the young ladies in de boarding-school five days in de week, an' den pick up my own wood an' cooking my own supper an' breakfast. I done tink I earn mo' money for Ole Marse den de men slabes did, an' Ole Marse neber eben tank me. All dat money do me no good, an' now I got a bad rupture, made by de washboard. Ole Marse got dat money I yearned to spend for finery an' hab good times on; an' me, well poor ole me's jes got dat rupture to torment me all my days. Dat's wat I got!

"De ole elder wat cum roun' sometimes preachin' to us said we 'mus'en't xist de will ob God, must obey de master,' an' be 'law-erbidin',' cos if we diden't we'd be blamed wid evry ting bad 'at happened; we'd be pinted out as de onery law-breakin', 'bellious sinners, an' dat God would hide his face away from us, an' we'd be cast in der outer darkness an' be lost for eber an' eber. An' den we mus'en't complain, fer dat was a sin in de eyes ob God, an' we mus' bow our heads an', an', pass under de rod.

"Well! well! I'se done pass under de rod. I done 'bey de orders till Ole Marse Lincum sot me free.

"But, honey, I does keep a wonderin' wat de Lord let Ole Marse 'buse us so for. I knows well er nuff I'd a been worked to death and a been in my grave now if I haden't been set free. I wonder why de Lord set me free, an' so many more he let de slabe-driber kill wid de whip an' hard work. Dey bow dey heads, too, dey pass under de rod, too. Dey had to! dey couldn't he'p it. De law make 'em bow an' pass under de rod. De law was all agin us; we mus' 'bey, er be damned; but de masters, de law let dem 'buse us an' do tings to us we neber dare do to dem, an' dey go right on to heaben. I knows dey jes been pullin' de wool ober our eyes. I sees it, co'se I do.

"One summer Ole Marse sent ten ob us slabes down souf to pick cotton. No babies was 'lowed ter go, but Halie jes cried an' cried 'bout leaving her baby, and so Ole Marse tole her ter tuck it along. It was her fust baby, an' she 'peered kind o' crazy 'bout it. When we went on de boat de slabe-driber stood dar on de boat, an' tole Halie ter take der coon on de shore an' Ole Marse ud get it; but Halie she jes scream, an' run an' hole on tight to her baby. De boat push right off, an' Halie feel better now, an' hide on de boat, an' lay down on de boards an' go sleep.

"Po' Halie! po' Halie! so tired; been cryin' all night 'bout leavin' de baby. Putty soon roun' comes dat slabe-driber peekin' roun'. I tout he's lookin' for Halie. Sho 'nuff he find her fast ersleep. Po' Halie! You's done pass under de rod; you had to! Now de Lord musten't hide his face from you. No; 'cos not. You's gwine ter work fer der marser. You's gwine ter 'bey orders—all but dat one. Dat one 'bout de baby, an' you's tryin' to hab your way 'bout dat. Po' Halie! you can't hab you own way. What are you (only a nigger woman) to the master? What is your baby to him? No more, po' Halie, den de cats an' dogs dat run about de street. You know berry well dat nobody keer fer dat baby but you, an' you are its on'y pertecter; but Halie's soun' asleep. De slabe-driber slip dat baby out her lap an' frow it in de riber as quick an' careless like as if it jes' been a rat.

"De Lord turn his face 'way from po' Halie jes' wen she need him ter keer fer her an' her baby.

"I look roun' ter see if de Lord diden't strike dat man down dead; but no, he neber. Dat driber walk off and diden't 'pear ter be 'fraid o' nuffin'. After 'while Halie woke up. She look fer her baby. Po' Halie, we couldn't tell her; we nod to de riber, we point to de slabe-driber. She look all roun' at eb'ry one of us; we all nod to de riber, we all point again to de oberseer. Po' Halie! she look down in her lap, an' wid one scream she jumped up on the boat railin' an' threw herself into the riber. Po' Halie!

"Den de slabe-driber did jump roun' an' roun'; den he feel bad; but, den, dat was on'y a scare 'bout de money dey lose. Diden't matter 'bout Halie—no! no! but de money dey lose did trouble him. He talk all de time 'bout de loss ob property, an' I neber heard him say anyfing 'bout breakin' laws, er bein' 'fraid ob de law er any kind er damnation. Us po' niggah women, honey, us po' women ain't no moah 'count to de rich masters den hogs, an' dey go on 'joicin' on deir way to heaben, 'busin' us women worse'en brutes.

"An' I don't 'pear to be thankful to de Lord for anyfing, no how, fer wen we need him mos' he's lookin' de oder way. An' wen he smiles its only fer der rich, fat masters.

"An' I believes dat de 'ligion dat makes dem fat an' rich is de same 'ligion wat makes us women so po' an' tired."
—Lucifer.

Help yourselves, for heaven will not help you.—Oscar Beck.

JESUS CHRIST.

JESUS CHRIST cam' here to dee,
Ha, ha, the deein' o't.
To save puir souls like you an' me,
Ha, ha, the deein' o't.
Mary got him unco queer;
Hoo it was ye need na speir,
For a ghaist made her its dear,
Ha, ha, the deein' o't.

Jesus cam' an' Jesus pray'd,
Ha, ha, the deein' o't.
Ne'er a cheenge for guid be made,
Ha, ha, the deein' o't.
Ilka Jew juist stood an' leuch,
For his tale was unco teuch;
It was hardly guid eneuch,
Ha, ha, the deein' o't.

"Life on earth is but a spell,
Ha, ha, the deein' o't.
Death'll land ye into hell,
Ha, ha, the deein' o't.
Gif ye doobt a wird," quoth he,
"Ye'll be sure auld Nick to see,
Syne ye'll maybe think on me,"
Ha, ha, the deein' o't.

Hoo it comes lat parsons tell,
Ha, ha, the deein' o't.
Jesus spak' a deal on hell,
Ha, ha, the deein' o't.
An' the Jews ca'ed him a fraud;
Thocht him juist a half-wit lad;
Mair a fool than dooright bad,
Ha, ha, the deein' o't.

What fell oot the story gies,
Ha, ha, the deein' o't.
Though at times it disagrees,
Ha, ha, the deein' o't.
Jesus they nailed to a tree;
Kept him hangin' there to dee;
But he rose his freends to see,
Ha, ha, the deein' o't.

Sic a tale as nurses tell,
Ha, ha, the deein' o't.
Warlock, curse, an' witch's spell,
Ha, ha, the deein' o't.
Superstition ga'e it birth;
Priests alane ha'e proved its worth,
An' ha'e made it curse the earth,
Ha, ha, the deein' o't.

THE GABERLUNZIE.

Christianity and Civilisation.

It is the habit of paid teachers of Christianity to credit the form of organised religion with all the higher civilisation of the world. We only know Christianity, so-called, as it is embodied in creeds and churches, and it is simply a fact that, so far from this boast having any foundation, popular churches and creeds have invariably denounced as pernicious or profane, in one age, discoveries in science and criticism which the inexorable logic of events has compelled them to approve in the next. Science and criticism have always, in the first instance, had to encounter clerical opposition.—Matthew Macfie.

Obituary.

DIED, on March 2, Martha Fagan, the wife of John Fagan, a well-known lecturer and worker in the Freethought movement. Like her husband, she was devoted to the Secular cause, and believed that creeds and priests were the outcome of ignorance and superstition. She was a good wife and mother, and those that knew her have lost a friend. She was buried on Friday last, March 8, at Finchley Cemetery. Our old friend, Mr. Haslam, read the Secular Burial Service.

She ne'er on fancy's wings could fly
To mansions built above the sky.

IT is with sorrow I announce the death of Laurence Perrett, aged three and a half years, son of Eliza and Sergeant Perrett, of Metropolitan Police, Greenwich, whose remains were interred in Lewisham Cemetery on Saturday, March 9, at 1.30 p.m. Mr. Ramsey read the burial service with much effect, giving the greatest satisfaction to the bereaved parents and friends.—CHARLES JOHNSON.

Digitized by Google

WHERE WAS EDEN?

Dr. Dubois, a Dutch army surgeon stationed in Java, has found three fragments of skeletons in the pleistocene strata of the island, which introduce us to a new species between man and the higher apes. The remains are pronounced to be much lower and more Simian in type than the famous Neanderthal skull. It is peculiar that Dr. Dubois appears to think that this discovery illustrates the Biblical account of Adam and Eve, for he congratulates himself that it leads to the theory that man originated on the southern slope of the Himalaya mountains, which is not so far from the Garden of Eden! This is rather ambiguous, since no one knows the geographical situation of Eden. It would have been more to the point to have mentioned that it confirmed Darwin's conjecture that man may have originated on the submerged continent now occupied by the Indian Sea.

The question of the situation of Eden has attracted some attention in Germany of late, owing to a controversy between Professor F. Delitzsch, of Breslau, and Professor Paul Haupt. The former maintains that Eden was somewhere in ancient Babylonia, while the latter pronounces this location as most improbable. Professor Haupt contends that the story of Eden belongs to about the time of Assurbanipal (669–625 B.C.). He frankly explains that the geography is mythical. The Biblical story (Gen. ii. 10-14) says that a river went out of Eden to water the garden; and from thence it was parted, and became into four heads—Pison, Gihon, Hiddekel, and Euphrates. There are no four rivers having their origin in the same source as the Euphrates. Josephus makes the Pison the Ganges, Gihon the Nile, and Hiddekel the Tigris. Kalisch, who says that "scarcely any part of the habitual globe has remained without the honor of being regarded as the happy home of our first parents," follows Josephus, save that he regards the Pison as being the river Indus. He admits this makes the geography of Genesis inaccurate, for he says, "It will be asked, How is it possible to consider the Nile as an arm of the same river which sends forth the Euphrates and Tigris?" Professor Haupt thinks Pison may mean the Persian Gulf, and, speaking of the Gihon, says: "If the reader will consult a modern atlas, he will find that there is no such river. Is it possible that the Hebrew narrator followed the line of thought expressed by Alexander, who believed that the African river Nile had its source in the north-western part of East India? Was the mythical Gihon River the imaginary Nile of India?" He reminds his readers that "the question must not be considered from the present standpoint of geography. Maps constructed in the Middle Ages show that such mistakes happened as late as that."

"Evidently," says Professor Haupt, "the Hebrew writer had no clear conception as to the mouth of the Euphrates and Tigris. He did not know that they flowed into the Persian Gulf, but assumed they were lost in the swamps of Southern Babylon—a conception popular in Arabia, as a map of the world, by an Arabian geographist of the year 1000 A.D., proves. Taking the Biblical story, together with the above corrections, into consideration, we must conclude that Paradise was situated on the south of the Caucasus. This is in an eastward direction from the location of the Hebrew narrator, in the neighborhood of the sources of the Euphrates and Tigris, and in the extreme north of the earth (as far as it was then known), in that mythical region from where God proceeded to the earth, according to Hebrew legends. That God lived in the north was an idea generally accepted among the Hebrews. The Babylonians, too, believed in Paradise and the Tree of Life; according to their idea, Eden was situated near the Persian Gulf, in the neighborhood of the region where the four rivers fall into it. For there are four rivers, though not the rivers mentioned in the Old Testament."

The geographical errors of the Bible by no means prove its extreme antiquity, for all through the Middle Ages Jerusalem was generally regarded as the centre of the earth, and was so drawn on maps.

Uncle Benjamin.

How to Help Us.

(1) Get your newsagent to take a few copies of the Freethinker and try to sell them, guaranteeing to take the copies that remain unsold.

(2) Take an extra copy (or more), and circulate it among your acquaintances.

(3) Leave a copy of the Freethinker now and then in the train, the car, or the omnibus.

(4) Display, or get displayed, one of our contents-sheets, which are of a convenient size for the purpose. Mr. Forder will send them on application.

(5) Distribute some of our cheap tracts in your walks abroad, at public meetings, or among the audiences around street-corner preachers.

(6) Get your newsagent to exhibit the Freethinker in the window.

APHORISMS.

With Nature there is no forgiveness.

Nature is God to one man, and Devil to another. Skate-makers rejoice in the frost that is biting other people's noses.

Natural law is as potent and inexorable in mind as well as in matter, and the laws of natural selection and of the survival of the fittest operate as surely in the one as in the other.

Naturalism is a solid structure founded on the rock of fact. Supernaturalism is but a castle in the air.

Logically there is no medium between Atheism and the abnegation of all reason.

Were there no other reason for Atheism, a sufficient one might be found in the unmerited sufferings of domestic animals.

All gods were made in the image of man. That is the reason most of them were such ugly devils.

Metaphysics is a bog which, if you are not big enough to wade through, you had better avoid.

God is a gentleman who always retires as science advances.

It is better to be dubious of the doubtful than credulous of the incredible.

Knowledge and liberty are the best safeguards of morality.

Love of God is usually spiritual pride, a dangerous and insidious form of self-love.

The monk who wrote Credo quia absurdum understood the attractions of his creed. The fascination of a mystery remains, even though the mystery be an absurdity.

The doctrines of substitutionary atonement and death-bed repentance place a premium on crime.

Christianity idealises poverty; Freethought would extirpate it.

Those who transfer their hopes from a visionary heaven to an actual earth gain far more in the distinctness of their aims than they lose in their extent.

The person who always has his eyes fixed above is in danger of having his pockets picked and stumbling down an earthly hole.

What worse waste is there than the love and devotion wasted on abstractions and supernatural beings who cannot need our service, while suffering humanity everywhere around is crying for assistance.

Lucianus.

PROFANE JOKES.

Country Minister (from the pulpit)—"As the air of the church seems chilly, I would ask the sexton if he will kindly close the front doors and windows of the building. The collection will now be taken up."

Rev. Doogood (to the penitentiary warder)—"My friend, is the spiritual welfare of the poor fellows under your charge properly attended to?" Warder—"Well, sir, it ought to be, for there are eight Sunday-school teachers among them."

Aunt Mandy (at sacred concert)—"What's next, Josiah?" Josiah—"They're going to sing 'For a Thousand Years.'" Aunt Mandy—"For the Land's sake, Josiah, you'd better sell the tickets, or telegraph the children what's keepin' us."

Heard at a Pantomime.—Clown—"Good-bye; I'm going a long, long journey." Pantaloon—"Indeed; where are you going?" Clown—"To heaven." Pantaloon—"Hum; s'pose you never get there?" Clown—"Then I'll get my money back."

A rustic went into the office of a missionary society, on the wall of which hangs a map of the world, with the religions indicated by colors; heathenism, of course, by black. "Bless me," said the gentle bucolic, "I had no idea that the coalfields were so widely distributed over the world."

It occurred the other night. Their mission was to "save souls," and his to sell baked potatoes. They "queered his pitch," and he got the needle. "Friends," shouted a female, with a cast in her eye and an asthmatical wheeze in her voice, "you must be born again—" "All o't!" yelled the murphy monger. "All 'ot!" The meeting moved on.

Mrs. McGreedie—"An' fwhat dae ye say is the sma'est amoont that ye prent a donor's name in the report wi'?" Collector for the Canniballoo Islanders' Missionary Fund—"Naething lower nor five shillin's, mem." Mrs. McGreedie (reluctantly producing a crown)—"Here's the siller. It fair ruins me tae gie it ye, but it's for the guid Chreestian cause, ye ken. Noo, ma man, see that ye dinna make ony mistake, and that Mrs. McGreedie, o' Greedie Villa, comes out in yer report."

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY LECTURE NOTICES, ETC.

[Notices of Lectures, etc., must reach us by first post on Tuesday, and be marked "Lecture Notice," if not sent on post-card.]

LONDON.

HALL OF SCIENCE (142 Old-street, E.C.): 11.30, A. J. Marriott, "The Churches, the Public, and the Public-house." (Free.) 6.30, musical selections; 7, Charles Watts, "The Drawbacks of Theism." (Admission free; reserved seats 3d. and 6d.) Wednesday, at 8.30, a lecture.

BATTERSEA SECULAR HALL (back of Battersea Park Station): 7.45, J. W. Woods, "Tidal Intellects; or, the Case for the Independent Labor Party." (Free.) Tuesday, at 8, dancing. Wednesday, at 8, dramatic club—members wanted.

CAMBERWELL (North Camberwell Hall, 61 New Church-road): 7.30, conversazione for members and friends. (Tickets 6d.)

ISLINGTON (Liberal and Radical Association Committee Rooms, Upper-street, near the Vestry Hall): Thursday, at 8.30, A. Guest, "Is there a God?" (Free.)

MILTON HALL (Hawley-crescent, 89 Kentish Town-road): 7.30, celebration of the French Commune. (Free.)

WEST LONDON ETHICAL SOCIETY (Princes' Hall, Piccadilly): 11.15, Graham Wallas, "Can Virtue be Taught?"

WOOD GREEN (Star Coffee House, High-street): 7, S. R. Thompson will lecture.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BATTERSEA PARK GATES: 11.30, F. Haslam, "How I Became a Secularist."

HYDE PARK (near Marble Arch): 11.30, S. E. Easton, "Under which Flag?" 3.30, "Some Bible Stories."

COUNTRY.

BIRMINGHAM (Coffee House, corner of Broad-street): Thursdays, at 8, papers, discussions, etc.

BRADFORD (Oddfellows' Hall, Thornton-road): 7, J. G. Fisher, "Secularism and Individualism." (Free.)

BRISTOL (Shepherds' Hall, Old Market-street): 7, Mr. Tutcher, "An Evening with the Microscope." (Free.)

CHATHAM SECULAR HALL (Queen's-road, New Brompton): 11, A. Westcott, "Municipal Hospitals"; 7, "What has Vivisection Done for Humanity?"

FAILSWORTH SECULAR SUNDAY-SCHOOL (Pole-lane): 6.30, Mrs. Callaghan, "Our Present Social Position."

GLASGOW (Ex-Mission Hall, 110 Brunswick-street): 12, discussion—J. Cowie, "Bakounine's God and the State"; 6.30, J. P. Gilmour, "The New Theism."

HANLEY (Secular Hall, John-street): 11, Stanley Jones, "Modern Researches for the Soul"; 3, "The Problem of Unsectarian Moral Teaching"; 7, "The Origin of the Bible." Monday, at 7, "Radicalism and Socialism." Tuesday, at 7, "Woman: Past, Present, and Future." (Free.)

HULL (St. George's Hall, Storey-street): 7, J. W. Stark, "Spiritualism v. Materialism."

LIVERPOOL (Oddfellows' Hall, St. Anne-street): 7, Mr. Hammond, "Spiritualism and its Claims."

MANCHESTER SECULAR HALL (Rusholme-road, All Saints): 11, J. M. Robertson, "The Last Shifts of Religion"; 3, "The Wealth of Nations—A Reply to Mr. Mallock"; 6.30, "The Failure of Christianity." (3d. and 6d.)

NOTTINGHAM (Assembly Rooms, Low Pavement): 11, G. W. Foote, "Is Religion the Cause of Progress?" 3, "How the Bible Stands Now"; 7, "Did Jesus Christ Ever Live?" (3d. and 6d.)

PLYMOUTH (Democratic Club, Whimple-street): Important business meeting.

ROCHDALE (Working Men's College, 4 Acker-street): 6.30, Sam Standring, "What is an Archdeacon?"

SHEFFIELD SECULAR SOCIETY (Hall of Science, Rockingham-street): 7, entertainment.

SOUTH SHIELDS (Thornton's Variety Hall, Union-lane): 11, C. Cohen, "Mohammed and Mohammedanism"; 7, "The Scepticism of Christians."

STOCKTON-ON-TEES (32 Dovecote-street): 6, Mr. Wallace will lecture.

SUNDERLAND (Lecture Room, Bridge End Vaults, opposite Echo office): 7, Robert Weightman, "The History of the Devil."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

ROCHDALE (Town Hall Square): 3, Sam Standring, "Apostolic Succession—a Reply to Mr. Smith, of Milnrow."

Lecturers' Engagements.

C. COHEN, 12 Merchant-street, Bow-road, London, E.—All Sundays until April, South Shields.

STANLEY JONES, 53 Marlborough-road, Holloway, London.—March 17, Hanley; 24, Derby.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Credon-road, Rotherhithe, London.—March 24, Camberwell.

SAM STANDRING, 6 Bury-road, Rochdale.—March 24, 26, and 27, Sheffield; 31, Failsworth.

INDIVIDUALISM AND SOCIALISM.—M. D. O'BRIEN is willing to LECTURE for Associations on either or both of the above subjects, Without Fee.—18 Albert-grove, Withington, Manchester. List of subjects sent free.

FISH, FISH, FISH.—Bascs of SELECTED FISH sent on receipt of P.O. 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., and 5s., carriage paid. Premier Fish Supply Co., Fish Docks, Grimsby.

TO FREETHINKERS.—Ladies and Gentlemen requiring SUPERIOR CUT GARMENTS at moderate prices. First-class Style and Fit Guaranteed.—H. HAMPTON, Artiste Tailor, 14 Great Castle-street, W. (three doors from Regent-street). Patronised by leading Freethinkers.

Colonel Ingersoll's
Great New Lecture
ABOUT
THE HOLY BIBLE
Price Sixpence.
London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Now Ready, Price Twopence,
IS SUICIDE A SIN?
BY COLONEL INGERSOLL.
Together with the Reply of MONSIGNOR DUCEY.
London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price Twopence,
LAST WORDS ON SUICIDE
A Reply to the Critics of "Is Suicide a Sin?"
BY ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.
London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street E.C.

Price 2d., by post 2½d.,
AN ESSAY ON SUICIDE.
BY
DAVID HUME.
With an Historical and Critical Introduction by
G. W. FOOTE.
London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Just published, price 4d., by post 5d.,
WAS CHRIST A POLITICAL AND SOCIAL REFORMER?
BY CHARLES WATTS
(Vice-President of the National Secular Society).
London: Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Read "THE TRUTH SEEKER."
MONTHLY, PRICE 1D.
Edited by JOHN GRANGE.
The MARCH Number contains a FINE PORTRAIT of
MR. C. COHEN.
Of all Newsagents to order. Wholesale, Mr. Forder.

Price Twopence,
"A Letter to Lord Ellenborough."
OCCASIONED BY THE SENTENCE WHICH HE PASSED ON
MR. D. I. EATON,
AS PUBLISHER OF
THE THIRD PART OF PAINE'S "AGE OF REASON."
BY
PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY.
London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each; upper or lower set, £1. Best Quality, 4s. each; upper or lower, £2. Completed in four hours when required; repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above, they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18 ct. gold, 10s.; stopping, 2s. 6d.; extraction, 1s.; painless by gas, 5s.

Digitized by Google

ALLINSON FOR HEALTH.

HOME CONSULTATIONS—10 a.m. to 1 p.m., 10s. 6d.; 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., 5s. Patients Visited.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. I. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Management of Infancy, Health, Longevity, The Teeth, Tobacco, The Drink Question. Also the Cause and Cure of Disease, Constipation, Biliousness, Eczema, Blackheads and Pimples, Nervousness, Cought and Colds, Chest Complaints, Deafness, Thread Worms, Long Worms, Tape Worms, The Itch, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. II. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on The Healing Power of Nature, Urine, Saline Starvation, the Hair and its Management, Sleep and Sleeplessness, Want of Energy, etc. Advice for the Thin, for the Stout; Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. III. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on No More Death, Management of Young Children, Unsuspected Domestic Poisons, How to Grow Tall, to Keep Warm, to Live One Hundred Years, to Improve the Memory, and to become Beautiful and Attractive. On the Cause and Cure of Stomach Troubles, Flatulence, Sleepiness, Varicose Veins, Boils and Carbuncles, Sebaceous Tumors and Wens, Hay Fever, Winter Cough, Chilblains, Epilepsy, and on the Diseases Produced by Taking Mercury.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. IV. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Hardening, Work and Overwork, Sugar and its Abuse, Milk as Food, the Tomato, Poultices, Quinine, Against the Knife, Arsenical Poisoning, Tonics, Against Stimulants in Disease, about Swallowing Pins and other Articles. Also Cure of Sunstroke, Dog Bites, Pains in the Back, Pediculi or Lice, Chicken-Pox, Synovitis or Inflammation of the Joints, Tonsilitis or Quinsy, Herpes (Tetter or Shingles), Erysipelas, Ulcer of the Stomach, Epidemic Influenza, Sciatica, Psoriasis or English Leprosy, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. V. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Pure Water, The Mouth, Its Use and Abuse; Rules for the Aged, Training, Blood Letting, Nose Bleeding, Felon or Whitlow, Ingrowing Toenail, Gum Boil, Cold in the Head, a Red Nose, Flushing and Blushing, Toothache, Sore Mouth, St. Vitus' Dance, Goitre, Mumps, Inflamed Eyes and Eyelids, Fits, Fainting, Apoplexy, Spitting and Vomiting of Blood, Vomiting, Wounds, Burns, Scalds, Bruises, etc.

The Five Volumes, strongly and neatly bound, price 6s. 9d., post free.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.—An Eye Opener to Drug Takers.
RHEUMATISM: ITS CAUSE AND CURE. Post free for 7d.
DIET AND DIGESTION. Post free for 7d.
CONSUMPTION: ITS NATURAL CURE. Post free 7d.
All these Books, bound in One Vol., post free, 2s. 6d. Send Postal Order.

THREE PAMPHLETS FOR YOUNG MEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
A BOOK FOR MARRIED WOMEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

All communications to be addressed to—

DR. T. R. ALLINSON,
4 Spanish-place, Manchester-square, London, W.

THE BEST BOOK

ON NEO-MALTHUSIANISM IS, I BELIEVE,

TRUE MORALITY, or THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF NEO-MALTHUSIANISM.

By J. R. HOLMES, M.M.I., M.V.S., M.N.S.S.

180 pages, with portrait and autograph, bound in cloth, gilt lettered. Price 1s., post free.

 In order to bring the information within the reach of the poor, the most important parts of the book are issued in a pamphlet of 112 pages at ONE PENNY, post free 2d. Copies of the pamphlet for distribution 1s. a dozen post free.

The National Reformer of 4th September, 1892, says: "Mr Holmes' pamphlet . . . is an almost unexceptionable statement of the Neo-Malthusian theory and practice . . . and throughout appeals to moral feeling. . . . The special value of Mr. Holmes' service to the Neo-Malthusian cause and to human well-being generally is just his combination in his pamphlet of a plain statement of the physical and moral need for family limitation with a plain account of the means by which it can be secured, and an offer to all concerned of the requisites at the lowest possible prices."

The Council of the Malthusian League, Dr. Drysdale, Dr. Allbutt, and others have also spoken of it in very high terms.

The Trade supplied by R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C. Other orders should be sent to the author.

J. R. HOLMES, HANNEY, WANTAGE, BERKS.

W. J. Rendell's "Wife's Friend"

Recommended by Mrs. Besant in Law of Population, p. 32, and Dr. Allbutt in Wife's Handbook, p. 51. Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell-street, Clerkenwell; 2s. per doz., post free (reduction in larger quantities). For particulars send stamped envelope.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

BEWARE of useless imitations substituted by some dealers and chemists, the words "Rendell & Co." and "J. W. Rendell" being speciously and plausibly introduced to deceive the public.

LOOK FOR AUTOGRAPH REGISTERED TRADE MARK

W. J. Rendell

No. 182,688.

IN Red INK ON EACH BOX, WITHOUT WHICH NONE ARE GENUINE.

Higginson's Syringe, with Vertical and Reverse Current, 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 5s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. Dr. Allbutt's Quinine Powders, 8s. per doz. All prices post free.

W. J. RENDELL, 15 Chadwell-st., Clerkenwell, E.C.

PRICE SIXPENCE,

THE

SECULAR ALMANACK

For 1895.

Altered and Enlarged. Finely-Designed Cover.

EDITED BY

G. W. FOOTE & J. M. WHEELER.

CONTENTS: Progress of Freethought; by G. W. Foote—This World; by J. M. Wheeler—Heroes in the Service of Man; by Charles Watts—Dod Grile—A Wish; by Matthew Arnold—The Abducted Female Infidel—Farquhar of Nethertton—Bits from Selden's "Table Talk"—Jeremy Bentham on Inspiration—Abou-ben Adhem and the Angel—Man's Soul his God—The Sacred Books of the World—The Dear God—What have Unbelievers Done for the World?—Information Concerning Freethought Work and Organisation—Lecturers, etc

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d. post free,

THE GRAND OLD BOOK.

A REPLY TO THE GRAND OLD MAN.

BY

G. W. FOOTE.

An Exhaustive Answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture."

CONTENTS:—Preface—Preliminary View—The Creation Story—The Fall of Man—The Psalms—The Mosaic Legislation—Corroborations of Scripture—Gladstone and Huxley—Modern Scepticism.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price 1s. Superior edition for Subscribers, bound, numbered, and signed, 2s.

VOLTAIRE:

HIS LIFE AND WORKS.

WITH SOME SELECTIONS FROM HIS WRITINGS.

By G. W. FOOTE AND J. M. WHEELER.

"The English people ought to know Voltaire, an admirer and lover of their nation, better than they do, and this lively shilling pamphlet will give them a good deal of information as to his life and work."—Literary World.

"A lucid and interesting sketch of the great French philosopher. We strongly recommend it to all who want to know what the influence was which Voltaire exercised."—Weekly Times and Echo

"Those of the new generation who desire to know more of a man with whose writings their fathers were intimate should consult this little shilling volume."—Reynolds's Newspaper.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Freethought Publications.

Crimes of Christianity. Vol. I. By G. W. Foote and J. M. Wheeler. Hundreds of exact references to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.

Chapters:—1, Christ to Constantine; 2, Constantine to Hypatia; 3, Monkery; 4, Pious Forgeries; 5, Pious Frauds; 6, Rise of the Papacy; 7, Crimes of the Popes; 8, Persecution of the Jews; 9, The Crusades. Cloth, gilt, 216 pp., 2s. 6d.

Bible Handbook for Freethinkers and Inquiring Christians. Edited by G. W. Foote and W. P. Ball. Complete, paper covers, 1s. 4d.; superior edition, on superfine paper, bound in cloth, 2s.

The Jewish Life of Christ. Being the Sepher Toldoth Jeshu, or Book of the Generation of Jesus. With an Historical Preface and Voluminous Notes by G. W. Foote and J. M. Wheeler. Paper covers, 6d.; superior edition, superfine paper, cloth, 1s.

Bible Studies. Essays on Phallic Worship and other Curious Rites and Customs. By J. M. Wheeler. Illustrated, superior paper, 2s. 6d.

Biographical Dictionary of Freethinkers of All Ages and Nations. By J. M. Wheeler. Handsomely bound in cloth, 7s. 6d.

Darwin Made Easy. By Dr. Edward B. Aveling, Fellow of the London University. This is the best popular exposition of Darwinism extant. Cloth, 1s.

Essays in Rationalism. By Charles Robert Newman (Atheist Brother of the late Cardinal Newman). With a Preface by George Jacob Holyoake, and a Biographical Sketch by J. M. Wheeler. 1s. 6d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

From the "Bradford Weekly Telegraph," Saturday, February 16, 1895.

GREAT FIRE IN BRADFORD.

EXTENSIVE DAMAGE.

Early on Saturday a big fire took place in the warehouse, No. 2 Union-street, Bradford, occupied by Mr. R. Higgins, who occupies a large part of the ground floor, and numbers the following tenants occupying the other offices and rooms: Mr. Ernest Hahnel, Messrs. Schmidt & Co., Mr. J. W. Gott, Messrs. G. D. Wright & Co., and Mr. J. Pepper. The damage done is very extensive, and is roughly estimated at a figure between £8,000 to £10,000. It certainly cannot be less than £8,000, as many of the firms occupying the building had large and valuable stocks stored in the various rooms. Mr. R. Higgins had a big stock of woollens, stuffs and yarns, and estimates his loss at over £4,000. He is insured up to £4,000. Messrs. Wright & Co., stuff merchants, have had fully £1,000 damage done to their stock and premises, but it is completely covered by insurance. Mr. J. W. Gott, cloth and stuff merchant, had a stock valued at £1,500, and it is partially destroyed, chiefly by water. The other firms, with the exception of Mr. J. Pepper, have suffered in like manner, a lot of stock being destroyed by water. The cause of the fire is unknown, but, judging by appearances, it broke out in the packing-room of Mr. R. Higgins.

To the Readers of "The Freethinker."

We had just got the New Spring Goods ready for Sale when this unfortunate fire took place, and, although we have sustained no damage by the fire itself, most of our goods have been soaked in water. We have taken immediate steps to have all the goods dried, and for all practical purposes they are not worth one penny less than before the fire took place. The finish which is put upon new goods has, of course, been disturbed, but that always takes place in making garments up. So that if you get a length of this cloth, or stuff, and have it made up, there is not the slightest difference between that and any other new goods you might buy, when made into garments.

We have got a Big Allowance from the Insurance Company,

and to make room for New Goods, which we have already ordered, and which will be ready for sale in one month,

We now offer all our Present Stock at HALF PRICE.

We are making the goods up into the following lots:—

Parcel for 21s. carriage paid.

A Lot of GOODS for GENTLEMEN'S WEAR, worth at warehouse prices 42s.

☞ State what will be most useful. ☜

Parcel for 21s. carriage paid.

A Lot of GOODS for LADIES' WEAR, worth at warehouse prices 42s.

☞ State what will be most useful. ☜

Parcel for 21s. carriage paid.

MIXED LOT OF GOODS,

Worth 42s.

For Ladies' and Gentlemen's wear.

Parcel for 21s. carriage paid.

Mixed Lot of Goods, such as

BLANKETS, SHEETS, QUILTS, TABLE-CLOTH, APRON, BELT, PURSE, Etc.

We have engaged 25 additional Tailors to make up Trousers. Price during Salvage Sale,

7s. 6d. per Pair to Measure.

Fill up form and state Color preferred.

Round waist .....
Round seat.....
Inside leg seam.....
Outside leg seam .....
Thigh .....
Knee .....
Bottom .....
Lined or Unlined .....
(Lined 6d. extra.)
Color .....

SEND AT ONCE.

J. W. GOTT, 2 & 4 UNION-STREET, BRADFORD.

Printed and Published by G. W. Foote, at 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

VOL. XV.—No. 12. SUNDAY, MARCH 24, 1895. PRICE TWOPENCE.

PRICE HUGHES AND CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

ON returning from India, after that dreadful illness which broke his constitution, Charles Bradlaugh politely requested the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes to furnish him with particulars of that "Atheist Shoemaker" story. Hughes declined. He knew he could not face an investigation by the eagle eyes of Charles Bradlaugh. Thereupon the great Atheist declared that the story was certainly false in its main outlines, and that Mr. Hughes had peculiar notions of honor.

Hughes had enough of that discretion, which is the better part of his valor, to lie low until Bradlaugh was dead. Then he took to praising the man who had despised him, and he has been at it ever since. It is a most loathsome eulogy. Freethinkers, at least, detest it more than the virulent abuse of Bradlaugh's enemies; just as sober people hate riotous drunkards, but abominate them worse when they are maudlin. Even a blow is better than a deluge of drivel.

We have before us a copy of the Hammer, containing a long report of the speeches delivered at the recent annual meeting of the London Wesleyan Mission. One of the speakers was the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, who had a lot to say about Bradlaugh. He had been reading the great Atheist's "Life" with "painful interest." He had actually gathered, in his feeble, fatuous way, that Bradlaugh's unbelief was "caused"—yes, actually caused—by the treatment he received when young at the hands of a clergyman! And if it had not been for his Atheism he would have been a Cabinet Minister. He was popular with the working classes, not because, but in spite, of his Atheism. He was a good man, and "a far better Christian than the Bishops." And so forth, and so forth; in the well-known vein of pious insincerity.

Mr. Hughes, however, could not "speak with respect of his Atheism." Who asked him to? What would his "respect" be worth? He should keep it until it is wanted.

We are indebted to Mr. Hughes for the remarkable discovery that, "When Mr. Bradlaugh's Atheism was separated from his great democratic sympathies, he had no following at all." This is followed, in the report, by a note of admiration. And it certainly deserved one. No following at all! Mr. Hughes has never heard of the National Secular Society! He has never heard of the Freethinker! There is something colossal about the fellow's affectation. It is not exactly sublime, but it only falls short of it by a single step.

It was natural, of course, that Mr. Hughes should chuckle over Mrs. Besant's defection. Atheists can smile, however, when he describes her as "the only real, active, and able disciple" that Bradlaugh ever had. Certainly she has "left Atheism," but she has not become a Christian. Nor was her defection a mortal blow to the cause of Secularism. People still flock to hear our gospel; and the Freethinker, even at the increased price of twopence, enjoys a larger circulation than the National Reformer did, except at special times of great excitement.

Now comes the crowning point of Hughes's disquisition on Bradlaugh. We give his own words as they appear in the Hammer:—

> "He was so alive to this, and well aware he owed his position to God-fearing constituents, that he told them there was, and should be, no Hall of Science in Northampton, and there would be no propagation of Atheism."

Mr. Hughes is not a man to mince words with. We tell him plainly that this is A LIE. Bradlaugh never said anything of the kind. The statement is a sheer invention.

One of our readers—Mr. W. Mole, of Sheffield—wrote to Mr. Hughes, asking him when and where Bradlaugh gave this pledge to the Christians of Northampton. Here is the reply:—

> 8 Taviton-street, Gordon-square, London, W.C.
> March 11, 1895.
>
> Dear Sir,—Mr. Price Hughes desires me to tell you that what he said about Mr. Bradlaugh he heard at Northampton, where it is a matter of public notoriety. You will find on inquiry that, as a matter of fact, no Hall of Science was started and maintained in Northampton during the time that Mr. Bradlaugh represented that city.—Yours truly,
>
> Mr. W. Mole. SISTER ADELINE.

Could anything be more ridiculous? He heard it at Northampton! Is this a ground for making a public statement? It is a matter of public notoriety! What is this but a liar's refuge? Sister Adeline's letter is no answer to Mr. Mole's inquiries. Mr. Hughes made a definite public statement, and he is bound to give a definite justification. It will not do to say "I heard it" and "People say so." Where is the evidence? Who were the people to whom Bradlaugh gave that pledge? When was it given? Where was it given? We do not invite Mr. Hughes to reply. He is too far gone on the road of mendacity. We merely put these as questions that must be answered before any sensible, honest man will believe what Mr. Hughes says about Charles Bradlaugh.

One would think that Bradlaugh went all over the country founding Halls of Science, and that Northampton was the great exception. There are only three in all England—one at Sheffield, one at Grimsby, and one in London; and it was only the last that Bradlaugh was active in establishing.

Bradlaugh did not himself deliver Freethought lectures at Northampton, and it was a wise policy. He did not choose to complicate matters in the city which he represented in Parliament; just as he would not allow "M.P." to be printed after his name on bills announcing his Secular orations. There was a scrupulosity about him which Mr. Hughes is incapable of emulating, and apparently incapable of understanding. But if Bradlaugh refrained from Freethought lecturing in the city he represented in Parliament, he continued it to the very last in every other part of Great Britain. Other lecturers spoke in Northampton, if he did not; and more would have done so, only the bigotry of the local Christians—who accepted Bradlaugh when they could not do otherwise—shut our lecturers out from suitable halls on Sundays. Indeed, it is still impossible to obtain one for love or money.

When our artist obtained one of Mr. Hughes's photographs for a Cartoon, he remarked that it could not be improved; it was a perfect type of the sneak, and might figure as such in any physiognomical collection. This man of God, who has all Jack Falstaff's peculiar love of truth, without a scintillation of his redeeming wit, is perpetually crawling away from the consequences of his public utterances. He first indulges in light and airy evasions, that would hardly deceive an infant just toddling from its cradle; then, if pressed, he stands upon his dignity, and refuses to give reasons upon compulsion, even if they were as plentiful as blackberries; finally, he skulks off into pious communion with his God. And there we will leave him. Such a God is well worthy of such a worshipper.

G. W. FOOTE.

Digitized by Google

MR. GLADSTONE ON THE LORD'S DAY.

MR. GLADSTONE has been called a "born ecclesiastic," and his wonderful activities, released from the turmoil of politics, appear now to be mainly directed towards theology. To the March number of McClure's Magazine, of New York, he contributes what that magazine naturally advertises as an important article on "The Lord's Day." There is certainly nothing original about the article, and its only importance, in my estimation, arises from the personality of the author. Mr. Gladstone, of course, upholds the divine authority of the Lord's Day, and even goes beyond the mass of his fellow believers in maintaining that the day should, after including works of necessity and charity, be entirely devoted to divine service. Could Mr. Gladstone have declared that he attributed his own intellectual vigor in old age to this use of the Sunday, it might have been an interesting question whether, indeed, Church attendance and prayers are as healthful as wood-chopping. But Mr. Gladstone only treats his readers to a dry course of theological argument, even while mentioning at the outset that among the forces employed in Sabbath defence there are important auxiliaries "who put wholly out of view the revealed sanction and the properly Christian motive." That is to say, the utility of a day of rest can be defended from purely secular considerations. Personally, indeed, I should uphold these as strongly as any Christian. Such a rest day belongs exclusively to no particular religion. It is found in all faiths. It existed in Judaism before Christianity, among Babylonians before the time of Moses, and among the Accadians before the Babylonians. As we trace it back we may note its lunar character and its connection with feminine periodicity. Beyond its religious dedication the observance of such a day of rest and recreation serves distinct purposes of social utility, and, indeed, separates civilised man from the mere savage, to whom all days are alike. The question between the Christian and the Secularist is not whether such a day should be retained, but how it should be utilised. Mr. Gladstone would devote it entirely to a deity, to whom all days must be alike, and who cannot need man's service. The Secularist would devote it to opportunities of health, study, recreation, and enjoyment, not possible to the masses during the dull drudgery of every-day life.

Mr. Gladstone, of course, bases his argument on the impregnable rock of Holy Scripture, which in this case, indeed, seems a mere shifting quicksand. The Earl of Beaconsfield once sarcastically defined Mr. Gladstone as an Italian in charge of a Scotsman. The wariness implied in the definition is displayed in the agility with which he glides from the Jewish Sabbath to the Christian Lord's Day. He seems aware that he is on shifting ground. He says of the former: "It was not relaxed by our Lord, who lived obediently under the conditions of the older covenant, and whom we are evidently to understand, on some marked occasions, not as impairing the Commandments, but as protesting against and cancelling an artificial and extravagant stiffness in its interpretation." Now, the Jewish law declared death even for picking up sticks on the Sabbath. Was this "not relaxed by our Lord" when he said "the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath"? Mr. Gladstone says: "Two changes have indeed been imported into this law; one of them into its form, the other into its spirit. The first has been altered, by translation of the Commandment, from the seventh day of the week to the first; the second, by imparting to it a positive and affirmative, in addition to its originally negative and prohibitory, sense." Now, what authority is there for this change of form and spirit? Not one verse, not one line, not one word can be quoted from the New Testament changing the day of rest from the seventh to the first day of the week; and a Jewish delegate to the Parliament of Religions had to tell that assembly that the orthodox Jews could never sanction such a change. Mr. Gladstone, of course, cites the usual texts from the fourth and latest gospel about the disciples meeting on the first day of the week. These texts, he says, "go far towards showing that among the Apostles themselves, and, therefore, from apostolic times, the practice of divine worship on the Lord's Day has been continuously and firmly established." Here Mr. Gladstone reads into the texts what is not in them. Not a word is said about divine worship. On the contrary, we read that for this purpose they assembled on the Sabbath, and I am unaware of any clear evidence of another practice until Constantine decreed the observance of "the venerable day of the Sun." The fact is, Protestants derive their Sunday from the Catholic Church, and that Church adopted the day held sacred by Pagan sun-worshippers. Moreover, the Catholic Church, in adopting that day, by no means invested it with the rigor of the Jewish Sabbath. So far from consecrating it entirely to God, Catholics usually hold that, the religious duty of attending mass having once been performed, the day may be devoted to innocent recreation.

The observance of the Christian Sunday being absolutely without any authority in the Christian Scriptures, why is it so frantically persisted in by the Protestant ministers and their supporters? It is to retain their monopoly of the day; to fill their empty pews and extend the power of the pulpit. For this they will go the length of erecting the authority of Moses above that of Paul or Jesus; for, despite Mr. Gladstone, it seems to me that Paul, in saying, "Let no man judge you in respect of Sabbath days," and Jesus in declaring that the Sabbath was made for man, did virtually cancel and oppose the legislation ascribed to Moses. But the freedom they would have allowed may be insufficient to-day.

The Jewish law is no longer suited to us, neither is the Christian. We want not only fires in our houses on the Sabbath day, but the refreshment of eye and heart by contact with the beauties of nature and the masterpieces of art. Those who ask that the people's libraries, museums, and art galleries shall be open on their one day of leisure demand no favor but simple justice. They do not propose that those shall visit or attend them who prefer to spend their Sunday otherwise. They only claim the right to go themselves when so disposed, and the denial of that right is a violation of liberty. To tax people to support such places when they have no chance of visiting them is flagrant injustice. Mr. Gladstone, in supporting the old-fashioned notion of the Lord's Day, is maintaining the interests of the men of God at the expense of those of the masses of the people.

J. M. WHEELER.

THE SUPERNATURAL NO GUIDE FOR MAN.

IN mentioning the term "supernatural" we do not commit ourselves to a belief in its reality; we simply accept the word as representing the belief of those persons who allege that they have faith in the existence of something besides nature. Our contention is that, supposing this assumed something exists, we know nothing of it, and, therefore, to believe in it can be of no service to the human race as a guide in conduct. We start from the fact that the natural we know, but of the supernatural we know nothing. Of course, as its name implies, the supernatural means something higher than nature—something above nature. But if there is a sphere higher than nature, and yet often breaking through nature, nature itself must be limited by something, and the question that at once arises is, By what is such limitation fixed, and what is the boundary line which marks it off and separates it from the supernatural? Further, supposing such a line to be discovered and to be well known, so that no difficulty could arise in pointing it out, a still more difficult problem presents itself for solution—namely, how man, who is a part of nature, and able only to come into contact with nature, can push his knowledge into that other sphere, which, being non-natural, cannot be at all accessible to a natural being? If the supernatural region be synonymous with the unknowable, it clearly cannot concern us, simply because we have no faculties with which to cognise it, and no powers capable of penetrating into its profound depths. In this case, as far as we are concerned, there is practically no supernatural, for none can operate on that sphere in which man lives and moves and displays his varied powers.

If there be a sphere where the supernatural plays a part and exercises any control, it must clearly be in some remote region, of which we have no knowledge; and the forces in operation must be other than those with which we are conversant upon this earth. Science cannot recognise the supernatural, because she has no means at her disposal for its investigation. She leaves to the theologian all useless speculations regarding such a region, contenting herself with reminding him that he is, in all such discussions, travelling outside the domain of facts into a province which should be left to poets and dreamers, and which belongs solely to the imagination. All law is and must be natural law, from a scientific standpoint, because we can have access only to nature. Even the most extravagant flights of imagination that we find, either in poetry or in the products of religious ecstacy, are always shaped in natural moulds, either as a whole or, what is more general, in their parts. An image formed in the human mind cannot possibly be other than natural, if not in its entirety, at least in the component parts of which it is made up. We can conceive of a centaur, though no such thing ever existed; or of a mermaid, though no person has ever seen one, these being creatures purely of the imagination. They are compound things, each part of which has been seen a hundred times, and are formed by blending a portion of one animal with a part of another, thus making an image which, on the whole, is unnatural, but the parts of which are taken from nature.

Digitized by Google

It is well known that all the great religions of the world were first floated upon the stream of time by an appeal to the feeling of wonder, and to a love of the marvellous, both having their basis in the belief in the supernatural. Christianity was no exception to this fact, for it is said that its birth was surrounded by supernatural manifestations, and that its earliest expounders were required to cast out devils, and to perform other extraordinary and, to us, incredible things, as "signs" that they were genuine believers. In fact, the claim of Christ and his faith upon the believing faculty was based upon the alleged departure from the known order of nature; the wonderful and the marvellous were considered evidences of the truth and value of the Christian faith. Fear was by far a greater factor in early conversions to Christianity than argument; hence Mosheim, in his Ecclesiastical History, says, in writing of the fourth century: "There is no doubt but that the victories of Constantine the Great, the fear of punishment, and the desire of pleasing this mighty conqueror and his imperial successors, were the weighty arguments that moved whole nations, as well as particular persons, to embrace Christianity" (p. 91). The same Christian writer further observes: "Multitudes were drawn to the profession of Christianity, not by the power of conviction and argument, but by the prospect of gain and the fear of punishment" (p. 102). Lecky also states, in his History of European Morals, that "Christianity floated into the Roman Empire on the wave of credulity that brought with it this long train of superstitions and legends." Again, he says Christianity "proclaimed with a thrilling power the immediate destruction of the globe—the glory of all its friends, and the damnation of all its foes" (vol. i., pp. 397, 412). Thus fear and a belief in the marvellous were striking factors in early Christianity. But the slightest reflection should convince Christians that these factors can be no evidence of the truth of their faith; for religions that are proclaimed by the followers of Christ to be false have the same claim urged on their behalf.

There is no doubt that, by Christians, Jesus is regarded as being the highest type of the supernatural. We have recently shown in these columns that, whatever his character might have been, Jesus was no guide for mankind in their efforts to secure political and social reforms. But where is the evidence that Christ was more than human? He suffered from hunger (Matthew iv. 2), he yielded to the weakness of anger (Mark ii. 5), he gave way to passion (Matthew xxi. 18, 19), he lacked power (John v. 19–30), and he was limited in wisdom (Mark xiii. 32). If a supernatural being is such as is claimed for him, Christ should have been impervious to such human weaknesses. It is utter nonsense to sing:—

Impassive he suffers, immortal he dies.

If he were impassive, he did not suffer; and if he were immortal, he could not die. It would be impossible to kill the natural body of a supernatural being, for the best of all reasons—he would not have one to kill. The infinite can no more be contained in the finite than can the mortal exist through all eternity. To urge that Jesus had a double nature is absurd. To ally the human with the alleged divine would be to destroy the perfection of both; for where humanity is, perfection cannot be. Any conception of the supernatural, whatever it may be, must be different from a conception of the natural. To think of the greater being contained in the lesser, whether actual or imaginary, is impossible; it is not a mystery, as commonly stated, but it is a contradiction and an absurdity. Our minds are incapable of conceiving an infinite being that can exist and not exist at the same time; yet the supposition that Jesus was a God-man involves this unthinkable proposition. A supernatural power can be of no value as a guide to us, for as we are only natural we can follow nothing that is above or beyond.

The resurrection and ascension of Jesus are deemed the invulnerable rocks on which the vessel of scepticism is wrecked. But these two events involve innumerable features that do not admit of being formulated in words, so as to be comprehended. They perhaps present one of the strongest specimens of what is called the supernatural, and yet what effect can such events have upon the affairs of life? Wherein can they be a guide to us? Will the belief in their reality produce good government, promote social reform, or remove our wrongs, sorrows, and sufferings? To regard the two events as true will not lighten the burdens under which society now groans. The belief that a supernatural person had power over life and death two thousand years ago can be of no value to us at the present day in forming personal character. The power that is supposed to have sustained Christ, when he died to satisfy the justice and to appease the wrath of God, will not remove the injustice and wrath of man. If Jesus pleads for us in another world, that will not compensate us for his neglecting our welfare in this. Moreover, such pleading is vain if "the judge of all the earth" is all-wise and all-good; for in that case he would know what is best for his children, and would "reward every man according to his works."

It appears to us, therefore, that a belief in the supernatural is quite valueless for all practical purposes, and that it frequently causes much waste of time, while it also impedes human effort. CHARLES WATTS.

(To be concluded.)

COMFORT OF ILLUSIONS.

A CHRISTIAN friend of mine the other day said to me: "I would not wish to give up my faith in religion even though it should be proved to be untrue, because I derive the most of my happiness and comfort from my belief in the protecting power of God and the expectation of an immortal life after my death here, in which I shall meet again my wife and children, and all the friends who have made life pleasant for me here."

"Well," I said, "there is no doubt that, in a certain limited sense, happiness is the main object of life; but can there be any true happiness derived from cherishing a delusion? Go with me to the State lunatic asylum and see how many of the unfortunate patients there are happy in the illusions that it is the business of that institution to cure. Is it not cruel in the State to expend vast sums of money to destroy the happiness of that poor woman who fancies herself the queen of heaven, and who lives in daily expectation of the coming of her Lord and husband to place her on her throne, to dispel her happy illusion and send her back to the sober realities of daily life, to hard work and household cares?

"Was it not cruel in Martin Luther to prove to the purchasers of the Pope's indulgences that those same indulgences were worthless, and that they would be damned, notwithstanding they had paid their money in good faith for salvation?

"We spend millions in missionary effort to destroy the illusions of the poor heathen, who enjoy their religion as much as the Christians can theirs, and who derive all their happiness and comfort from their faith in the power and favor of Mumbo Jumbo, or some other buggaboo as invisible and as impotent as our Jewish Christian Jehovah."

The happiness which should be the object of life is not the happiness that results from ignorance or illusion. There may be a selfish gratification in cherishing a delusion; but true happiness—that which should be the object of life—is the happiness of the race, the well-being of all mankind; and that is only to be promoted by knowledge, by dispelling all the illusions, and opening the eyes of men to the truth. All the progress the world has made in civilisation has been by dispelling illusions. All the arts which now conduce so much to our happiness disturbed the happy dreams of our ancestors, who found their happiness in doing without them. That we are not now grovelling in the ignorance of the dark ages is due to the light of science in dispelling the ignorance and illusions of men in the golden age of the Church. The people who now hug the delusion of a protecting God and an immortal life, because it makes them feel happy, would—had they lived three hundred years ago—have condemned the Copernican system of astronomy because they found so much comfort in the belief that the earth was flat and stationary, with God sitting immediately over their heads on the solid firmament.

Digitized by Google

Granting, for the sake of the argument, that the Christian is happy in believing in God and immortality, think of the suffering, the blood and tears, the envy, hate, and discord that that belief has brought upon the world. Think of the poor man, who can hardly earn enough to feed and clothe himself and family, obliged to deny himself the necessaries of life to feed and pamper a bloated clergy, whose goodwill he must secure or be damned to all eternity.

Think of the millions upon millions of wealth piled up in churches and cathedrals, around which cluster the close-packed tenements of poverty filled with wretchedness, filth, and crime, all the direct result of that religion which promises an eternity of joy in compensation for the evils it bids them suffer here. Think of the enormous revenues wrung from vice and poverty, used to prevent the spread of knowledge and to keep men from finding out the falsity and hollowness of the pretensions of religion. Think of the man who can find happiness in the belief that his little, contemptible soul is safe from the flames of hell, while nine-tenths of his fellow mortals, including his friends and neighbors, are to burn for ever in torment immensely worse than the imagination of man can conceive. When a man with a soul so little worth saving as this asks me not to take away his comfortable belief, he seems to me like the Thug who begs us not to make any law against murder, because he finds so much comfort in performing his religious duty by strangling his victims.

Was it for the sake of saving such fellows as this that God went to all the expense of sacrificing one-third of himself to the other two-thirds to appease the wrath of his whole? If it was, he was much more saving than the man who spoiled his jack-knife to skin a flint; though the two operations were much in the same line.

But do these Christians, who believe in God and immortality, really derive any happiness or comfort from that belief? If they do, it is not manifested in their faces, for they wear a look of woe that would eclipse the "knight of the woeful countenance." Perhaps they think they are happy, or try to make themselves think so; but their efforts are not as successful as those of Mark Tapley, who prided himself upon being jolly under adverse circumstances. If you find a professing Christian with a round, rosy, cheerful face, you may be sure that his religion sits very lightly upon him.

The bitter sorrow that weighs down our hearts when we lay away the dead we have loved and lost is not extinguished, nor is it even mitigated, by the belief that some time in the uncertain future—in some unlocated place in the endless realms of space—we shall meet again those who have gone before us. The yearning of our hearts is for the love and companionship of our lost friends now and here, in the shape and bodily presence that we have known and loved; and strive as we may to console ourselves with that problematical immortality that religion vainly offers, the feelings rebel against it, and we refuse to be comforted, till time—that heals all sorrows—has wrought its perfect work. It is a feeling common to all that lives—to the so-called lower animals as well as to man; and we are unfaithful to the truth when we cling to an illusion that all Nature repudiates, for the sake of a pretended consolation that never comes to us.

The philosophical student of Nature, who recognises the truth that all forms and individualities pass away, and that Nature, with her endless chain of cause and effect, alone persists, submits to the inevitable, and finds consolation in the reflection that his loved and lost friend or companion is past all contingencies of this uncertain life, that he is safe from all troubles, and has experienced his last of pain. He finds in his memory an immortal influence from his life communion with the departed, and recognises the truth that that influence will be eternally transmitted to all who come hereafter. He mourns, but he knows that he too must follow in the course of Nature, and all sorrow will end in that peaceful sleep that will never be disturbed by angel, trumpet, or the voice of an anthropomorphic God calling upon him to take his chances in a trial for heresy.

—Independent Pulpit. J. P. RICHARDSON.

CHURCH BELLS.

THE above is the title of a lecture given at the Victoria Armory, under the auspices of the Freethought Club, by Captain Robert C. Adams.

The lecturer began by asking why the church bells rang at five o'clock every morning. Was it to call the attention of the few who go to early mass? Thousands can go to concerts and theatres without any such warning, and in these days of dollar clocks everybody knows the time. Was it to praise God? Surely the infinite being has not so unmusical an ear as to delight in such jarring noises. Those who, on the Lord's day, suppress an orchestra and worship their God with bell-ringing pay no compliment to his taste. Noise is an accompaniment of barbarism, and the tendency of civilisation is always towards subdued sound.

In the distance the sound of bells is often musical, although near to they are distressing, and to invalids agonising. Father Prout refers beautifully to "the bells of Shandon that sound so grand on the pleasant waters of the river Lee," and to many the bells speak of "peace on earth, goodwill to men." The Church, the lecturer said, represents the current standard of morality. Religion improves with the advance of civilisation; for all religions, being of human origin, must simply represent the mental condition of their authors. It follows, therefore, that while the church bells speak of the moral sentiments of mankind, they also proclaim the frailties of those who cause them to be rung.

After giving due credit to the Church and to the Christian religion for much that is good in them, the lecturer went on to describe some of the evil things that the bells pealed forth. He spoke, in substance, as follows:—

(1) The bells ring: "No taxation. We buy corner lots, get police and fire protection, drains and pavements, and secure the increase in value caused by the growth of the city; but we pay no taxes, because it is God's property." In the Province of Quebec the Church possessions are valued at 150,000,000 dols. The revenues of the Catholic Church amount to 12 dols. per head of the population, whereas in France, before the revolution, the Church revenue was only 1.50 dols. per head, and this was felt to be cause enough for rebellion. About 10,000,000 dols. worth of Church property is exempted from taxation in the city of Montreal, and every man who pay 20 dollars in taxes pays over a dollar for the benefit of the Church. He is robbed of this amount, and robbery in the name of God is the meanest kind of robbery.

(2) The bells ring: "No recreation. Come to church all day on Sunday and every week evening. Avoid theatres and dances. Close all libraries, museums, and art galleries on the working man's day of rest. Stop all trains or boats that will take him to the green fields and the fresh air. We have the monopoly of the Sabbath, and man was made for us." Every year a bill is introduced into the parliament of Canada to suppress fishing, hunting, and games on Sunday; and the ministers of Montreal troop to the city hall, praying that the ferry to St. Helen's Island Park may be prohibited from running on Sunday. Can there be a God in heaven who does not rebuke the men who, in his name, try to rob babes of fresh air in order to drive the parents into their musty churches? Is there a greater infamy on earth?

(3) The bells ring: "Hell and damnation." They used to ring out loud and clear, but now the tones are muffled. They seem ashamed of the barbarous doctrines of ancient times, and they only mutter, in dull tones, the old curses upon unbelievers. Still, they keep up a pretence of holding to the old doctrines, though they are ignored by all the cultivated preachers. The churches are becoming merely religious fun clubs, and in the Young Men's Christian Association more men are drawn to the swimming bath than to the "fountain filled with blood." Still, they teach their adherents to despise and ostracise those who are too intelligent to believe in miracles.

Digitized by Google

(4) The bells ring: "Church domination over every relation. In birth, marriage, death, and burial call for the priest, and if you do not believe his teaching you have no legal status in the Province of Quebec." A child is not deemed to have been born unless a minister of religion certifies to it; he alone can legalise marriage, and he is expected to perform all funeral services. Any drunken loafer who believes what the priest tells him is a credible witness; but any educated follower of Darwin, Spencer, and Huxley, who is too honest to say he knows all about the eternal mysteries, is not allowed to give evidence in the civil courts of the Province of Quebec. Until Quebec grants civil registration of births and civil marriages, and abolishes religious tests, she stands disgraced before the world as an uncivilised nation. In 1893 the dominion parliament granted the right of affirmation to all who have conscientious scruples against taking an oath. Every liberally-minded man ought henceforth to avail himself of this privilege, and refuse to take the oath in the criminal courts or the custom house. By so doing he will help on the reform in Quebec.

(5) The bells ring: "Woman's subjugation. The Church has been the enemy of woman. Beginning with the mythical rib story and the infamous libel upon God, that he inflicted the pains of motherhood because of woman's transgression, down to the days of Paul, the Hebrew scriptures enjoin the submission of woman to man. She is told to keep silence in the churches, not to teach, and to be in subjection. All the movements for woman's political and social advancement have, in their early stages, been opposed by the Church. It has only espoused her cause when the success of it was almost assured, and yet women are the chief supporters of the Church, and but for them its oppressions would cease in a day.

So the bells ring on: "No taxation, no recreation, hell and damnation, Church domination, woman's subjugation."

What is the remedy for these evils?

The noise of the bells could be stopped by law. In France, except at certain hours, the bells cannot be rung without a permit; and a cure was arrested for ringing the bells at midnight on Christmas Eve. Voltaire suggested that the bell rope should be used to hang the sexton. But it is better to suppress evil by moral suasion rather than by legal enactment, and it is to be hoped that the growth of refined tastes and of human sympathies will put a stop to the bell banging.

The remedy for Church oppression is to destroy belief in the Bible, from which she draws all arguments for her authority. Men must learn that the Bible is merely a collection of Hebrew literature, and that the ideas that prevailed two thousand years ago are only to be accepted when they accord with modern science and the cultivated judgment of society. Until this book ceases to be used as an authority, its claims must be unsparingly attacked, and only when it is put on the bookshelves to take rank with Homer, Virgil, and Shakespeare, as a purely human production, can Freethinkers cease to indulge in "Bible banging."

But these reforms and all other reforms hinge upon the elevation of woman. Civilisation is manifested in a country by the position accorded to woman. The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world. Some may fear to give woman the suffrage while she is the tool of the priest, and shows her inconsiderateness by wearing a large hat at the theatre. But the vote is a means of education. If women are to think rightly, they must have equal rights with men, and equal pay for equal work. The greatest motive power in the world is woman's love. Men will do anything or be anything under that influence. The destiny of empires has often depended upon woman's will; but too often it has been the Cleopatras and the Aspasias who have determined the fate of nations. Woman has not used her power aright. Her reproach is voiced in the lines of Coventry Patmore:—

> Oh, wasteful woman, she who may
> On her sweet self set her own price,
> Knowing he cannot choose but pay,
> How has she cheapened paradise!
> How given for naught her priceless gift,
> How spoiled the bread and spilled the wine,
> Which, used with due respective thrift,
> Had made brutes men and men divine!

When woman wakes to the realisation of her power and the full use of her reason, the world's progress will be assured. The Shakers call God he—she, and say he was first manifested as a man in Jesus, and then as a woman in Ann Lee. It will be when upon perfect equality man and woman walk hand in hand, we shall see the world regenerated by the coming of "the Christ that is to be."

The lecture was enlivened by numerous anecdotes and narrations of facts in illustration, and frequently received hearty applause.

—Montreal Saturday Times.

THE TOOTING TRAGEDY.

In face of the intensely pathetic story which will probably long be known as "The Tooting Tragedy," the ghastly mockery of Christian Theism ought surely to make some Christian ministers ashamed of their teaching. So highly respected were Taylor and his wife that even the poorest of their neighbors were willing to help them in their terrible struggle with poverty and sickness. Yet the Christians' God looks calmly on while starvation and influenza drive an affectionate father and husband mad, and while, in his frenzy, he cuts the throats of his wife, of all his children, and, finally, his own, feeling, no doubt, even in his madness, that it were better that they all should die at once than prolong their miserable existence in a world in which they were de trop. Say the newspapers: "Taylor, when found lying across the body of his wife, appeared to be in the position of a man who had been praying. Nor is this all the doctors noticed. They found an open Bible—open at a page in Chronicles." Poor Taylor seems, indeed, to have died crying "O Lord, O Lord." But the Lord was as deaf to his despairing cries as Baal was to the frantic prayers of his prophets. And it is for teaching the ignorant masses to trust in this God that Christian preachers draw handsome salaries, while those who oppose such preaching are denounced as "infidels"!

Poor Taylor's troubles are now over. But millions are being deceived as he was. Deluded by the hopes of retribution in another world, where Dives shall change places with Lazarus, solaced by the splendid promises of a Christ who never lived, "tens of thousands and thousands of thousands" are dragging out an existence as miserable as his, while priests, sovereigns, and statesmen live in luxury. Well might Shelley say that Christianity is, chiefly, a means of deceiving and enslaving the people.

As was, of course, to be expected, Christian Socialists blame our iniquitous social system for the Tooting tragedy. But our social system is just what some 1,400 years of Christianity have made it. For fourteen centuries Christianity has been established; it has had all the power and, practically, all the wealth of Europe on its side. If, then, we have a state of society in which thousands die of starvation, while many seek relief from a life of misery in suicide, it is absurd to say that Christianity is in no way responsible. It is no wonder that so many are starved, when tens of millions of pounds sterling per annum are wasted on "the foolishness of preaching."

Andrew Liddle.

The Factors of Civilisation.

Science and freedom were the great factors of civilisation, or of progress in every kind of conceptions, sentiments, and social conditions: the first dissolved and destroyed the matrix of myth in which the intelligence was at first enveloped, and liberty, which was wholly due to science, made steady progress a matter of certainty. So that it may be said that the whole web of human history, so far as it consists in civilisation or the progress of all good things, of the arts, and of every intellectual and material achievement, was the conflict of science, and her offspring freedom, against ignorance, and the despotism which results from ignorance, under all the social forms in which they are manifested.—T. Vignoli, "Myth and Science," p. 121.

Digitized by Google

PARSON AND SON.

A CLERGYMAN pompous, of countenance smug,
As befitted a pious exhorter,
Entertained black-clothed brothers, ten of them all told,
In his study with whiskey and water.
Now, this generous gargle his eloquence freed,
And the sins of this world he discoursed on;
But behind the sky-pilots his son Tom was sat
(A lad whom his sermons were lost on),
For, sad to relate, an Atheist was Tom,
And a by-word with him was "damnation"—
For somehow he couldn't, in spite of his pa,
Recognise Jesus Christ as "Salvation."
But he, nevertheless, with pater agreed
That snug quarters were good for the body,
And the holy crew jostled to get nearer the fire,
And passed up his glass for more toddy.
But the rector frowned at him with visage so stern,
And bade him get back from the fire,
For to elbow a parson was deserving, he said,
Of punishment speedy and dire.
Then hot words arose, and young Tom he was told
To go per express train to Hades
(A place, we're informed, full of brimstone and flames,
Not usually mentioned 'fore ladies).
At this mandate paternal Tom took himself off,
And for six months from home was absented,
Till one fine spring morning he turned up once more,
And himself to his father presented.
The good man inquired, "Well, where have you been?"
"Where you told me to go!" "And you found it?"
"Oh yes, but 'twas chilly; so I came away."
"What! chilly in hell! is that what you say?"
"Yes, for, like our own fire in the study that day,
For parsons I couldn't get round it!"

ALEX. MITCHELL.

ACID DROPS.

DR. DALE, of Birmingham, having fallen a victim to the fashionable epidemic, the religious papers have naturally been singing his praises; and, indeed, as clericals go, he was not a bad sort. The Daily Chronicle lauds his spirit of tolerance, and says he was just to "all classes of honest thinkers." Now we protest against that "honest." It is an epithet which covers any convenient amount of bigotry. There cannot be "honest" thought or "dishonest" thought. These terms are only applicable to actions. Men do not think as they would; they think as they must. The operations of the intellect are not subject to volition. This is a primary truth of psychology, and the denial of it has been the basis of all persecution.

The Chronicle is wrong in stating that John Milton extended toleration to all forms of opinion. He drew the line at Catholicism and Atheism. Milton was ahead of most of his contemporaries, but it is idle to assert that he was abreast of the more advanced ideas of the nineteenth century.

Clovis Hughes, the erratic Socialist poet, produced a Passion Play at the Socialist Maison du Peuple, in Paris. Jesus Christ was represented between the two thieves. The unrepentant thief twits him with not boldly preaching the right to live, and the Prophet of Nazareth replies that he tried to teach men to love one another; which, by the way, is a thing that cannot be taught at all, except by example. Jesus Christ says to the two thieves, "I bless you both," and the bad thief magnanimously says, "I forgive you." It is reported that this stuff was "listened to with reverent attention and loudly applauded."

W. R. Bradlaugh writes in the Christian Herald—one of the silliest papers in Christendom—that he still wants £150 to meet the costs of that Hall of Science libel action. "I fear," he says, "that, unless I obtain the balance in a few days, my home will be sold." He leaves it to be inferred that his "home" will be sold up by the "infidels." If it is sold up at all, it can only be sold up by his pious publisher, to whom he gave (or says he gave) an indemnification.

W. R. Bradlaugh wants £150 more, and his quondam friend Powell, who uttered the filthy libel that was branded by the jury's verdict, is actually stating at Sunderland that he (Powell) has paid the money out of his own pocket. What a noble brace of worthies!

Only a few subscriptions are acknowledged in the Christian Herald; even Baxter's gudgeons don't seem to bite at this bait. One subscriber sends half-a-crown "For Christ's Sake." Perhaps this is an abbreviation of "For Christ's sake, don't do it again." It is charitable to suppose that the subscriber doesn't mean "For Christ's sake, libel those Freethinkers again."

Our readers have heard of St. Winifred's Well at Holywell, which is declared by the Catholics, and believed by many Protestants, to possess miraculous properties. Places of this kind were once numerous, but only a few now exist to provide for a slackened demand. It is curious how miracles keep pace with credulity.

The water of St. Winifred's Well cures all manner of diseases, though it has no effect upon ignorance and stupidity. Samples of it are ordered from all parts of the world. The Daily News says that two hundredweight of it is posted every night in sealed cans to all parts of the United Kingdom, to America, and to the colonies. Silliness is evidently well-spread over this curious planet.

As Easter approaches there is always an extra stir among the Second Adventists, who placard the walls with announcements of Coming Great Events, including the positive reappearance of Jesus Christ, and the ascension of 144,000 Christians to meet their Lord in the air. A strong argument for the general insanity of mankind might be drawn from the influence of the nightmare of Cranky John of Patmos, extending right down through the ages unto the nineteenth century.

Sunday last being St. Patrick's Day, the Orangemen and Catholics at the South-end of Liverpool had a riot in honor of the occasion. Ultimately, the C Division of the City Police put a stop to the religion, when it was found that a number of the celebrants were seriously hurt. Four ring-leaders were made prisoners by the bobbies, and can now wear martyrs' crowns.

Prebendary Reynolds, in his report for last year on the Church Schools of London, gives some words of warning to the teachers. It is not advisable to tell children that the evening and morning of the first chapter of Genesis means twenty-four hours, for this teaching may afterwards have to be explained away. To teach that Adam or Cain or Abraham actually saw the First Person of the Holy Trinity is to contradict the teachings of the New Testament, that "no man hath seen God at any time." Also, it would be well to restrict the teaching of the Old Testament to the smallest limits in infants' schools. Prebendary Reynolds' report forcibly suggests that, after all, the old Jew books are not suitable for children.

Once more a member of the "Peculiar People" has had to appear before a coroner to explain the death of her child. The laying on of hands and prayer treatment, prescribed by the apostle James, were the only means adopted to cure the child of convulsions. Coroner Hicks said the "Peculiar People" were illogical; for, in the case of a broken arm or leg, they would send for a doctor in the ordinary course. It was, however, explained that in the Scriptures there were no instructions that God would heal a broken bone; but they were distinctly told to call upon him in the day of trouble, and he would heal the sick by the prayer of faith. They were told of no other remedy, and they adhered to the Scriptures.

The village of Greenford, Middlesex, has been excited over the strange disappearance of the Rev. Henry Treweeke Briscoe, the rector of the parish. All sorts of rumors have been afloat as to the cause of his absence, one of the chief of these being that the reverend gentleman has become so involved in financial difficulties that he has left the village for good, and taken up his residence in an obscure district of the metropolis. The living was worth £350 a year.

Anna Gould became the Countess de Castellane in the city of New York. She was married to the Count by the Archbishop of New York, having secured a special dispensation permitting her, although a Protestant, to marry in Lent, the holy season in which marriages are usually deemed unlawful, or rather improper in the Catholic Church. On the same day this marriage took place a poor Italian applied to the Cathedral rectory for leave to marry in Lent. His betrothed was ill and friendless, and he wanted the right to protect her from a stepfather. Her mother was dead. The dispensation was refused. Moral: If you want dispensations, see that your bride is wealthy.

According to the Record, a clergyman in a West-end church announced the banns the other Sunday in a manner calculated to lead to a breach of promise action. He forgot to perform the duty at the proper time, much to the chagrin of the affianced couple, who attended church specially to hear their names read out. The reverend gentleman remembered the omission before entering the pulpit to preach, and accordingly he took the banns-book with him

Digitized by Google

The result was that he announced: "I publish the banns of marriage between John M——, widower, and Elizabeth N——, spinster;' and, without a pause or introduction of any kind, he then read out the text of his sermon, "And the last state of that man is worse than the first."

The fight on the Circular of the London School Board has begun again. In a preliminary skirmish Mr. Athelstan Riley boasted that his party had been returned by a majority in defence of Christianity. Reminded that they represented a minority, he added: "Their opponents had got a majority of votes, it was true; but whose votes were they? They were the votes of persons who sent their representatives to the Board to wreck Christian instruction." This shows the way in which Churchmen regard the Nonconformists, who were so religiously anxious for the compromise.

Pure, unadulterated Christianity is a very dangerous article. Emperor William, for instance, is a first-water Christian. His wife builds churches, though the people won't fill them; and her hubby is constantly talking pious nonsense, especially to his army and navy, which he evidently regards as the most religious departments of his empire. Some time ago he took it into his head that democracy could only be checked by "more religion," and in this he was perfectly right. Accordingly his Government brought in a bill to provide a further supply of Christian teaching in the public schools; the said teaching, of course, to be forced upon all children, even if their parents happened to be Freethinkers. Germany stands a lot from its emperor, but it couldn't stand this. The Reichstag kicked the bill out, and pious William had to put it back in the cupboard. Its introduction, however, shows what the Christian disease is when a man has taken it badly.

More recently a bill was introduced in the Reichstag, rendering every person liable to a fine of £30, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, who should openly attack religion, the monarchy, matrimony, the family, or property. This was a pretty wide net, calculated to catch all but the most sluggish and conservative Germans. The measure was severely denounced by the Liberals and Social Democrats, and the Committee appointed to consider it, by a majority of 13 to 12 votes, rejected this particularly dangerous part of the Anti-Revolutionary Bill. Thirteen to twelve, however, is a very narrow squeak. Freethought has escaped a great peril in Germany. It is obvious that Christianity and bigotry are still synonymous, if not actually identical; and that there will be no security for freedom of thought and discussion until "the Galilean serpent" is sent the way of all the dead pests of superstition.

"King-deluded Germany," under its present pious and military régime, is fast losing every shred of liberty, and it is little wonder that the most enterprising of its sons show a disposition to quit the Fatherland as soon as possible. At a meeting at Sondershausen, the other day, Herr Weiss, a Liberal member of the Reichstag, delivered a speech on the subject of the Anti-Revolutionary Bill, in which he said that, if the Church alone had had to decide scientific questions, we should not enjoy the achievements of modern astronomy. The earth would then still be standing still, and the sun with its satellites revolving round it. In consequence of these remarks, the meeting was dissolved by the police. This occurs before the Anti-Revolutionary Bill is passed. One may imagine what would happen if it was in force. Pious William is sitting on the safety-valve. When an explosion comes he will probably be lifted to the third heaven.

A compositor's slip brought the editor of a little newspaper, published at Intersburgh, Eastern Prussia, into trouble. An article appeared in the paper on the subject of the German Emperor's speech at Koenigsberg, and in it occurred the word "damahlig" (of or relating to a previous period of time). But the printer set it up "damlig," which would be "damnable," and, although the article was perfectly loyal, and even complimentary, in tone, the censor saw in the introduction of such a word an outrage upon the person of the Sovereign. Hence there was a police-court prosecution. The magistrate who tried the case acquitted the editor, who had, he said, acted in perfect good faith in the matter; but all the copies of the incriminated issue were ordered to be destroyed.

The Rev. E. A. Barker, of Ludlow, in following the footsteps of the carpenter's wife's son, amassed a nice little fortune of £156,000. For of such is the kingdom of heaven!

Christ, if living Christ indeed, should have mercy on his namesake, Paula Christ, a Viennese seamstress, who has been sentenced to a week's imprisonment for pawning linen, the property of her employers. For four years she has supported her old parents by her needle, and this cold winter the need of fuel prevented her from saving enough to pay the small rent. Her father and mother would have been turned out of doors, so she pawned the shirts she had been working upon to pay the sum owing. During all the bitter winter this girl has been paid at the rate of a shilling for each dozen shirts made. The judge asked her how long she took to make them, and she said that she had to work hard to finish them in twelve hours. One penny for an hour's hard work, and three people to keep out of it! The Court considered the theft to have been committed under very hard circumstances, and sentenced the girl to only a week's detention.

A poor woman applied at the North London Police Court for assistance from the poor-box. Her husband was ill, and she could not earn enough to support the family. She worked at the Salvation Army Laundry, where she was paid at the rate of 1½d. for washing a dozen sheets! Booth ought to have had his laundry women on exhibit at his Albert Hall reception, as an evidence of what he is doing for darkest England.

The Daily Telegraph, of Sydney (February 4), has a slashing attack on the Archbishop of Canterbury for his slandering the colonies in his attempt to bolster up the cause of religious education in England. It declares that the pretended statistics given by Archbishop Benson as a proof that secular education is followed by an increase of crime are "wholly imaginary."

It observes: "The facts are precisely the other way about, as throughout the whole of Australia there has, during the period, been a steady and consistent rise in the moral standard. For the last four decennial terms the crime record shows a continuous fall, the number of convictions being in 1892 only one-third of the total for 1861. Since the secular system of education came into use the rate of improvement has been fully sustained; especially so in Victoria, which has one of the lowest crime records in the whole group."

We felt quite sure at the time that Dr. Benson's figures were, what the Sydney Telegraph calls them, "grossly misleading"; and it shows how they are so: "It is only within the past ten years or so that Victoria has had a native-born element of the crime-committing age. In the days of denominational education the bulk of the natives were children, amongst whom convictions in the law courts were necessarily fewer than amongst the adult immigrants. They have now grown up, and prove no better or worse than their fellow colonists. But within their own ranks the percentage increase of crime by a reckless use of figures may be made to seem abnormal simply because it started from almost nil and reached the average."

"With these facts open to Dr. Benson in the official records of the colony," says the Sydney Daily Telegraph, "there is no excuse for his hurling such a charge against a people who have not an opportunity of effective reply." "His example," it adds, "is a very poor argument in favor of the kind of religious teaching which Dr. Benson champions. The curriculum should, apparently, include special lessons upon the propriety of not going out of your way to meddle with other people's characters—at all events, until you have taken some little trouble to make sure of your facts."

The ministers of Victoria have discovered that, out of a population of 1,170,330, there are only 511,792 churchgoers. The Rev. W. A. Quick has, accordingly, been dilating upon the ungodliness of the colony; but the Rev. W. Strong says the fault is with the Church, and reminds Mr. Quick that Jesus never inculcated either going to church or keeping the Sabbath.

Twenty-one Buddhist clergymen have been appointed by the Japanese Government to go to the front and perform the rites of the Church for the dead and dying. Their principal duty will be to pray for the souls of the departed and attend to burial services. These reverend gentlemen expressed great interest in the clerical system of the British army and navy, the garrison chaplains, the warships' "sky pilots"—a term which quite took their fancy when explained.

Two poor women, a mother and a daughter, suffocated themselves at a small house in Railway-crescent, South Melbourne. The daughter left a written message or prayer. It begins: "Blessed Father, Loving Savior,—I humbly ask thy loving mercy and pardon for the deed we are going to do. I have not been able to get any work to do. I have not a penny in the house and deep in debt, and to see my darling aged mother turned out into the cold street without any money, and not to have any place to put her dear head into. Oh, God, it is more than I can bear." The only answer to this prayer was death.

Say! What conceited things they must be who imagine God answers their trumpery, formal prayers, put up when there is nothing the matter, while he leaves hundreds to drown and hundreds to die in coal-pits, whose prayers are wrung out of them by the agony of their situation! And what an execrable thing God must be to attend to the cry of the formalist, and turn a deaf ear to the affrighted and horrible appeals of the direst agony! Religion is a monstrous thing, and the Christian God the most ridiculous monster that ever was feared or worshipped.

Digitized by Google

The Jewish Chronicle (March 13) extracts from the annual report of the Cardiff Charity Organisation Society an account of some conversionists and converts in that town. The report states that, under the auspices of some benevolent Cardiff gentlemen, a Home for Jews was opened, and a person holding holy orders was appointed agent. There was an influx into the town of converted Jews, and the Society was desired to investigate. It found the records of these converts more than doubtful. One of them was travelling about with another man's wife; another received two valuable pictures for framing, and sold them twice, besides receiving money for framing them. Reports of other converts were not at all satisfactory. The record of the agent was found to be bad, and he had been summarily dismissed by a prominent London clergyman who had employed him in similar work. A considerable amount in subscriptions had been collected in Cardiff, and, so far as could be discovered, no adequate work had been done for it, and no account rendered of it. Despite these disclosures, the work of bringing God's chosen to Christ goes merrily on.

The Jewish Chronicle remarks: "Jewish ministers are unanimous in deploring the growing laxity of the community in regard to Sabbath observance, and in viewing this laxity as the greatest danger which has ever assailed Judaism." It points out that the difficulties surrounding the question are not easy of solution. "Certainly, pulpit exhortations have not effected any cure." God calls one way and Mammon another, and the chosen race are readier to listen to the latter.

In Brampton, in Chinguacousy township, Ontario, an entire family went religiously mad. The second son of a widow, David J. McClure, claiming to be Jesus Christ at his Second Advent, nearly murdered his mother in his efforts to exorcise a devil, and was finally arrested and lodged in gaol with his brothers. The whole family had indulged for some days in a wild orgie of religious exercises, singing, furniture-smashing, etc. These people took their religion undiluted.

A Buffalo despatch says that Henry Koehler, a clergyman aged sixty-two, was sentenced to the penitentiary there for twenty days for vagrancy. Koehler says he has lectured in many towns in Canada, and was married in Port Elgin to a lady now living there with her parents. He fell from grace by means of an old failing of his—drunkenness, but he had been sober for two days when he was unjustly arrested. Where is "the power of Jesu's name" in such a case as this?

New Facts is the title of an occasional journal issued by Mr. Britnell, of Yonge-street, who appears to be a disgruntled Salvationist, and sets forth a number of damaging statements regarding the Army. It is stated that on December 16, 1888, the Telegram census showed a total of 3,541 attendants at the various Salvation barracks in Toronto, morning and evening. On Sunday, February 3, 1895, Mr. Britnell says he caused a census to be taken, when a total of 318 attendants was found. We could wish that the street noises would decrease in the same proportion. Seven years ago, says Mr. Britnell, the membership in Canada was 40,000, and the War Cry sold 23,000. To-day the Canadian membership is 6,000, and the War Cry sales less than 10,000. "How the Army Makes Sceptics" is one of the headlines.—Secular Thought.

So many laws for Sunday regulation have been introduced into the Missouri legislature that a senator has capped them by moving to substitute for the original Blue Law measure the following: "Section 1—It is a sin to steal a pin, or shave a chin, on Sunday. Section 2—No one shall smile or think of guile, or wicked wile, on Sunday. Section 3—No one shall kiss a wife or miss, on Sunday."

Cardinal Kopp, of Berlin, has given his pronouncement against woman's rights from the standpoint of the Church. He says: "It is against the order of the world that the emancipation of woman should mean her absolute equality with men. God's will is that woman should be the helpmate. She is bodily unfit for man's work, and her emancipation, to the end that she might work side by side with man, would mean the deterioration of the Christianity that freed her from slavery and made her man's social equal. Unrestricted equality would mean woman's ruin." The Cardinal holds with St. Paul and St. Peter that the woman was made for the man, and should be in subjection in all things.

Hugh Price Hughes is "in hearty sympathy with manly and recreative sport." Perhaps he is, but he doesn't look it. We fancy he speaks more sincerely in saying that "the present craze for cricket and football is a sign of mental degeneracy such as marked the decadence both of Greece and Rome." We suppose it is not "a sign of degeneracy" when people flock to hear Mr. Hughes's platitudinous sentimentalities. We also suppose, as the reverend gentleman sees danger in cricket and football, that he finds "manly and recreative sport" in tops and marbles.

"Three Hours of Hallelujah" heads the Methodist Times report of "General" Booth's meeting at the Albert Hall. This is not a "sign of mental degeneracy."

Dr. Lunn, one of Price Hughes's bosom friends, complains of the paltry way in which British aristocrats support religious movements. Their cheques are hardly worth lighting candles with. Rich men in America are always helping on the cause of Christ. American millionaires give big subscriptions to the churches. Of course they do. It is a sort of insurance premium. American millionaires are no fools. They know that one minister is worth ten policemen. He keeps the people down without their knowing it.

Father Ignatius continues on the warpath. He has been referring to Archdeacon Farrar as "that awful man." If that is how he refers to so mild a heretic as "not everlasting but eternal hell-fire" Farrar, what would he say of the editor of the Freethinker? He would have to outdo the Billingsgate of Jesus in Jerusalem.

The Christian World complains that Father Ignatius denounces even those who "hold enlightened views of the Atonement." Surely good phrases ever were commendable. What on earth is an "enlightened" view of the Atonement? Can it mean anything but a dishonest view—something between the acceptance of orthodoxy and the rejection of rationalism?

The average missionary, according to the late Matthew Arnold, is a "grotesque" creature. He and his friends carry unintelligible doctrines to the poor "heathen." They also carry some very questionable morality. It seems necessary, to their narrow minds, that the "heathen" in hot countries should dress like Britishers; which is incidentally a good thing for the missionary's friends at home in the cotton and tweed business. Well, the poor "heathen" get dressed in these unsuitable garments; and the result is that they get hot, dirty, depressed, and finally diseased.

These good Christians are actuated by what they regard as a sense of modesty. They are nice people—that is, as Swift said, people with nasty ideas. They forget that the Old Testament patriarchs, God's especial friends and favorites, were not overburdened with raiment; that when Rebekah sat at the well she probably thought nothing of displaying more than half of a glowing bosom; that Saul had not much to do when he stripped to lie down naked with the prophets; that David showed more skin than coat when he danced before the ark; and that Jesus Christ himself needed very little stripping when he was hung up naked on "that fatal tree."

Robert Louis Stevenson blazed out at a Christian lady in Samoa, who had all her female native servants dressed in the European fashion. "Woman," he thundered, "is your mind so base that you cannot see and admire what is beautiful in the form God Almighty has created? Do you not understand that their own dress is right for the climate and their simple way of living? And do you not see that the first thing you do on landing on this beautiful island is to pollute their minds and sully their modest thoughts?"

Those simple Samoans, by the way, have nothing to learn from Bible-reading countries in the essentials of morality. They are gentle and generous, and even when they engage in fighting they do not abandon their gallantry. Miss Frazer, the authoress of In Stevenson's Samoa, relates that once, during a war, both sides stopped a battle to let a woman drive a cow over the field!

At the milliner's hung a hat very fair,
And Mrs. Blinker prayed for it.
The powers immortal answered her prayer;
But Mr. Blinker paid for it.

American men of God are a privileged species. They travel half-fare on all the railroads. It is reported, however, that the New York Central proposes to withdraw the clerical tickets on the ground of abuse. Ministers are alleged to have lent or even sold their tickets. Well, well! It is a hard world for most of us; and men of God must make a dollar when they can.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Foote's Engagements.

Sunday, March 24, St. James's Hall, Cumberland-street, Bristol: 11, "Is Religion the Cause of Progress?" 3, "How the Bible Stands Now"; 7, "Did Jesus Christ Ever Live?"

March 31, Hall of Science.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

MR. CHARLES WATTS'S ENGAGEMENTS.—March 24, Hall of Science, London; 31, Newcastle-on-Tyne. April 7, Sheffield; 14, Liverpool; 21 and 28, Hall of Science, London. May 5, Glasgow; 12, Dundee.—All communications for Mr. Watts should be sent to him (if a reply is required, a stamped and addressed envelope must be enclosed) at 81 Effra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

E. G. TURNEY.—Your Christian friend who told you that Mr. Foote "would not meet the late C. Edwards in debate" has a romantic imagination. Edwards was never "put forward by the Christian Evidence Society." That Society has never put forward anyone, and steadily declines to do so. Mr. Engstrom, the secretary, will corroborate this statement. The statement that Mr. Foote is "afraid to meet Dr. Parkes" is very funny. Who is Dr. Parkes? We have never heard of him before.

W. CARTER.—"Lesson" doesn't rhyme with "blessing." Stick to prose. You do that better.

T. ELLIOT.—We deeply regret to hear of poor Brown's sad condition. No doubt his brain trouble had been coming on for a considerable time; it explains many things that were difficult to understand. Brown has been a hard and loyal worker for the Freethought cause on the Tyneside, and we should esteem it a favor if you would acquaint us with the financial aspects of his case.

F. FRISBEE.—(1) So far as phrenology is a science, it is open to study and acceptance by Atheists as well as other people. If the author you refer to says that "no Atheist can become a true phrenologist," he simply talks nonsense. (2) Dr. Aveling's Darwin Made Easy would serve your purpose. Mr. Forder sells it at one shilling. It is an admirable summary. If you want larger works, read Darwin's Descent of Man and Dr. Wallace's Darwinism. Professor Drummond's Ascent of Man is largely a religious and metaphysical disquisition.

D. D. (Brisbane).—Thanks. Australian papers are always welcome.

N.S.S. BENEVOLENT FUND.—Miss E. M. Vance acknowledges:—J. Brown, 2s.; Newcastle Branch, 18s.

W. C. R. (Wallingford).—Pleased to hear you derive so much satisfaction from the Freethinker. There is a Branch of the N.S.S. at Reading, but not at Oxford. The N.S.S. secretary (28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.) will send you, on application, printed forms about Secular burials and affirming in courts of justice. There is no Freethought circulating library. Several Branches have libraries, but not of that character.

F. J. BOORMAN.—Thanks. See paragraph.

H. GUTHRIE.—Sorry we must postpone doing what you desire. The libel case diverted our attention from Mr. Birrell's article.

J. G. BARTRAM.—Mr. Foote is writing to you.

R. JOSLIN.—Received with thanks. We shall refer to the matter at length presently.

W. CLOGG.—Your suggestion shall be considered.

MR. FOOTE'S review of Mr. Balfour's Foundations of Belief will be continued next week. His pen is active in other directions in this week's Freethinker.

PAPERS RECEIVED.—Christian Herald—Two Worlds—Progressive Thinker—Echo—Reynolds's Newspaper—Newcastle Chronicle—Open Court—Liberty—Twentieth Century—Crescent—Islamic World—Truthseeker—Newcastle Leader—Sunderland Echo—Secular Thought—Liberator—Post—Sydney Daily Telegraph—Brisbane Telegraph—Melbourne Age—Melbourne Herald—Isle of Wight Guardian—Harbinger of Light—Melbourne Argus.

LETTERS for the Editor of the Freethinker should be addressed to 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

THE HALL OF SCIENCE.

I AM desired by the Board of Directors of the National Secular Hall Society (Limited) to make a statement on certain matters in this week's issue of the Freethinker. Communication with the shareholders in a more private way would not meet the necessities of the case. Not only is there no time to be lost, but subscribers have an interest in the Hall of Science as well as shareholders.

First of all, I will say a few words about the Club. A few months ago the Club Committee persisted in allowing a professional boxing contest to take place in the large hall, in spite of the protests of the N.S.S. Executive and of the Board of Directors; on account of which, it will be remembered, the Executive felt obliged to suspend the N.S.S. affiliation to the Club. At the N.S.S. members' meeting, held early in January, the Club president stated that it was the Club which kept the roof over the heads of the Freethought party. This statement has been industriously circulated. It is far, however, from being true. The Executive has paid a great deal more rent than the Club, and for a much less extensive use of the premises. The Club's capacity for paying rent has steadily declined. During the past year it has only paid the Directors the sum of £45 altogether. Its occupancy terminates on March 25; and the Directors are resolved, so far as they are concerned, that whatever social element is to exist there in future shall be entirely confined to members of the National Secular Society.

I now come to a more serious matter. Some five months ago the Club Committee sent a formal, written complaint to the Directors about the state of the premises. Thereupon the Directors requested a practical builder to make a survey and report. This document was not very flattering, but it was repudiated by Mr. R. O. Smith (the vendor of the premises to the Society) as partial and exaggerated. An outside builder, not a member of our party, was then called in, who made a survey in the presence of Mr. Smith and myself. His report was of such a character that it was necessary to hold a special meeting of the Board. Mr. Smith attended, and, after stating that the report was as much a surprise to him as to the other Directors, he offered to forego £600 of the purchase money (£3,000). The Directors, however, would not agree to pay more than £2,000 in all; of which £1,400 had been paid already.

The matter was then left for me to negotiate with Mr. Smith, with a view to his interest in the lease being terminated, and the premises being closed for the possibility of a speedy rebuilding.

A friend of the movement, whose name should not be disclosed without his sanction, consented at my request to find the sum of £500 for the mortgage held by Mr. Smith free of all encumbrances. After some haggling Mr. Smith agreed (I have it in writing) to take £525 in cash and £75 in shares. The gentleman in question, under a good deal of friendly pressure from me, reluctantly agreed to the higher figure; but the prolonged negotiation gave him time to see the matter in a fresh light, and at the last moment he declined the responsibility for reasons I felt it impossible to confute. I was away at the seaside then with a sick wife. On my return to London a few days afterwards, I saw Mr. Smith again, and offered to raise the money in another way if he still adhered to the terms of our agreement. Two days later the Board received a letter from his solicitor, stating he intended to obtain the money owing to him or to realise his security. Since then all our endeavors to obtain a definite answer from Mr. Smith as to a revision of the original agreement have been fruitless.

Mr. Smith objects that we have not the money in hand to make him an offer; and we reply that we shall raise no money until we have a definite understanding in black on white.

It now remains for Mr. Smith to leave the matter as it stands, in which case the Directors have no alternative but to let him foreclose the mortgage; or, after admitting that the premises are not what he thought them at the time of sale, to consider the moral claims of our party as well as his own technical rights. Personally, I am not without a hope that he will be just; I would fain hope that he will even be generous.

G. W. FOOTE.

SUGAR PLUMS.

MR. FOOTE had three capital audiences on Sunday at Nottingham. His lectures appeared to be highly appreciated. The evening meeting was specially large and enthusiastic. Messrs. Hooper, Anderson, Stapleton, and other zealous members of the Nottingham Branch were well in evidence; and friends were present from Derby, Newark, Beeston, and other places. Announcement was made during the day that the Branch had secured a hall for its regular meetings, the new course of which is to be inaugurated by Mr. James Hooper next Sunday (March 31). We hope the Branch will be well supported in this new enterprise. Readers of the Freethinker in Nottingham, who have not yet joined the Branch, should make up their minds to do so at once, and to give it both moral and material assistance.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Foote visits Bristol again to-day (March 24) after a considerable absence. His lectures will be delivered in the large St. James's Hall. Unfortunately, the hall is let on condition that no discussion is permitted after the lectures. Questions, however, will be allowed.

The debate at Derby between Mr. Foote and Mr. Lee is definitely fixed to take place on Wednesday and Thursday, May 8 and 9. The subject for discussion is "Atheism or Theism: Which is the More Reasonable?" Mr. Lee, who has practically made all the arrangements himself, has the advantage of the last speech. He has also declined to discuss Christianity, which is the speciality of his religious propaganda; Theism being a system of belief that could be defended by a Mohammedan, a Brahman, or even a Jew, quite as well as a Christian. Mr. Lee prefers to take a position in which all religionists will be at his side. Perhaps it was this idea which made him, at first, stipulate the fantastic condition that a vote should be taken at the end of the debate, though he never explained what the audience was to vote upon. If he meant—and it was difficult to see what else he could mean—that the audience was to decide by vote whether there was a God, it was a piece of most peculiar and atrocious irreverence, to say nothing of its monstrous folly. Mr. Foote replied at once that he would never agree to such an absurdity.

The debate will not be a very profitable one to Mr. Foote. The Christians maintain laws which keep our party poor; their men have salaries, and ours have none; yet they are fond of stipulating that we shall gain nothing for the hard labor of a public debate, nor even be recouped for loss of time. A debate fell through at Nottingham because the Rev. George Bishop's committee would not consent to Mr. Foote's hotel expenses being paid during the time he would be away from home debating. Mr. Bishop lived at Nottingham, so this form of self-denial would have cost him nothing; the whole weight of it would have fallen upon Mr. Foote. The Nottingham friends offered to pay his hotel expenses themselves, but Mr. Foote said he would not connive at an act of barefaced injustice, even if he were as rich as Rothschild.

Mr. Lee's friends are not so bad as this. Mr. Foote, like the other disputant, is to be allowed his railway fare and the sum of two guineas for hotel expenses. The balance of admission money will go to the Royal Derbyshire Infirmary. Mr. Foote will not be out of pocket directly, but he will be so indirectly, as he will lose two days' time, in which he would otherwise be earning something towards the maintenance of his household. This is quite independent of whatever time may be given to preparation for the debate.

Since the preceding paragragh was written we learn that the debate between Mr. Foote and the Rev. A. J. Waldron has been definitely fixed to take place in the Public Hall, New Brompton, on Wednesday and Thursday, April 17 and 18. The question for discussion is, "Did Jesus Christ Rise from the Dead?" The bills are already posted in the district, and the Chatham friends tell us that very large audiences are expected.

Mr. Charles Watts had a hearty reception at the Hall of Science, London, last Sunday evening. His lecture, "Theism Tested," "caught on," and was throughout enthusiastically applauded. A stranger spoke fairly in opposition, and volunteered the statement that he should again attend the hall and defend the Christian faith. Mr. Rowney made an excellent chairman.

Mr. Watts lectures again at the Hall of Science this evening (March 24), taking for his subject "The Birth, Reign, and Death of Christianity." Mr. Watts will deal specially with the why and wherefore of the origin of the Christian faith.

Mr. Watts has still a few copies left of Mr. S. Putnam's Four Hundred Years of Freethought. The work extends to nearly a thousand pages, and comprises scores of portraits of dead and living Freethinkers. Mr. Watts will send a copy carriage free for one guinea. Applications (with remittance) to 81 Effra-road, Brixton, S.W.

Mr. Symes is in trouble once more. He now has to appear before the Chief Justice of Victoria on a charge of contempt of court for some observations made in the Liberator on the finding of a jury. The case was down for February 15th, but we are unable to state the result. We wish our old colleague safe deliverance from all his enemies.

The ministers of Hoboken, New Jersey, did their utmost to prevent Colonel Ingersoll from lecturing in the local theatre. As a result of their united protest the Mayor was induced to issue an order that the theatre should be closed on the day of the lecture. The decree made much excitement and comment, and the corporation attorney gave his opinion that it was illegal. The Mayor had to ignominiously crawl down. Detectives were, however, sent to stop any blasphemous utterances. Ingersoll lectured as usual, and, when speaking of the savagery of the Bible, introduced the following: "There was enacted a statute in the State of New Jersey a hundred odd years ago, when most of its inhabitants were savages, which says that nobody shall ever discuss the Bible except on one side. Since then the inhabitants have grown civilised. They have grown to have a knowledge of fair play; they have been civilised to a degree where they can realise its absurdity, and to realise that the statute sleeps in the dimness of the past. It has now been invoked by a number of narrow-minded persons, who should have died three hundred years ago. I don't blame them; their heads are that shape, and they are not to blame."

The New York Times says of the Rev. Mr. Beatty, who made himself prominent in the attempt to stop Colonel Ingersoll from speaking at Hoboken: "His bumps should be felt by the common phrenologist under circumstances of the utmost possible publicity."

The New York Independent, one of the chief religious journals of America, now tells the ministers of Hoboken: "It is not well to pay any attention to such a man as Mr. Ingersoll." They may reply in the words of the Scotch song, "Ye should have tell't me that in time." The ministers of Hoboken found that out when too late, and the Independent's advice must come like a mother's scolding to foolish children who have hurt themselves.

The Committee who arranged the Children's Party are requested to meet at the Hall of Science on Sunday evening at 9 o'clock, to receive balance-sheet, etc.

The second volume of Mr. F. J. Gould's Concise History of Religion (Watts & Co.) has for some time been lying on our table for review. We hope to give it an adequate notice in our next issue. Meanwhile we commend it to our readers' attention. It gives an excellent account of Judaism and the Jewish Scriptures; and shows great care, thought, and research.

The Hull Branch of the N.S.S. desires to remind its friends of the forthcoming Annual Soiree and Ball, held on Monday next, Lady Day. Tickets (1s. 6d. each) may be had from any of the members.

The Newcastle Daily Chronicle, March 14, reports at length Mr. M. D. Conway's lecture on "Thomas Paine," delivered before the Literary and Philosophical Society of that city.

We understand that Mr. Conway's last Sunday's discourse on "The Story of St. Patrick" is written for publication, and will shortly appear.

Liberal governments are funny things. Mr. Asquith, for instance, said in the House of Commons that it ought not to be possible for the Lord's Day Observance Society, or any other body, to institute prosecutions on account of Sunday lectures; but he added that the Government had no intention of legislating upon the subject. We presume it is not the business of a Liberal government to remove an admitted injustice, unless the people who want it removed are strong enough to turn the government out of office if their wishes are neglected. Principle counts for nothing in itself; it only counts when allied with an obvious profit. Fortunately, however, Lord Hobhouse has introduced a Bill in the House of Lords. What an irony it will be if the Bill is carried in the Lords and shelved in the Commons! Let us hope it will meet with a better fate.

Mr. E. T. Gourley, member for Sunderland, has introduced the Religious Prosecutions Abolition Bill. Mr. Storey, who introduced it last session, is unfortunately not well. He backs the Bill, however, along with Mr. Maden, Mr. Dalziel, Mr. Labouchere, Mr. Lloyd-George, and Sir Henry Roscoe. The schedule is copied verbatim from the Bill that was introduced by Mr. Bradlaugh in 1889. Mr. E. G. Taylor, who has interested himself so much in this matter, had an article on the general subject of the Blasphemy Laws in the February number of the Westminster Review. We were too busy to deal with it at the time, but we believe it will soon be reprinted as a pamphlet, which will enable us to atone for the oversight.

Mr. Foote's recent lectures at Sunderland seem to have made a great impression, and, in response to the urgent invitation of the local Branch, he is arranging for another visit at an early date. Meanwhile two Freethought lectures will be delivered at Sunderland, in the Co-operative Hall, by Mr. C. Cohen, on the afternoons of March 24 and 31. The chair will be taken at 3 on each occasion, and we hope our Sunderland readers will do their utmost to secure Mr. Cohen the large audiences which he deserves.

Digitized by Google

EDUCATION OF THE CHARACTER.

PARENTS who put children into the world should give them a good education, as a means wherewith to fight their way through life. There are many who will the best, but who entertain erroneous ideas as to the means. Some think that preaching morals to the child will make it moral, while example set by the elders and surroundings is really the best lesson. Once it knows that the parents' suspicion is upon it, it will pursue the vice of which the parents are suspicious, if it has it not already. What love, confidence, and example cannot accomplish nothing in the world will. It is of no use trying to introduce evil to children, and to induce them to withstand it. Their untrained will is as yet too soft and bendable to resist it, and it will result in miserable failure. The only way is to keep them away from it as long as possible, and when the time has come that they have to face it, the parents should express their abhorrence of evil and tell the child what harm it does. The old notion that to spare the rod is to spoil the child is a most fallacious and pernicious doctrine. For the stronger to lay hand on the weaker is cowardly; wisdom cannot impart itself to ignorance by physical force; love cannot prevail upon ought by striking it; and the act of beating a child is a downright declaration of mental incapability. Fear may prevent wrong-doing, but, instead of diminishing the inclination to crime, it will increase it, and, besides, originate new incentives thereto—as hatred, spite, and a desire for revenge. A most abominable practice is that of lying to children, in order to evade awkward questions, or as a persuasive. It undermines the youngster's confidence in and attraction to you; it corrupts his sense of truthfulness, and ends in imitation.

Others deem knowledge synonymous with education, and think that stuffing a lot of dry science and arithmetic into the child will educate it. Now, learning is indispensable per se, but something more is required besides. As soon as the child can begin to move about, symptoms of a certain character, certain likes and dislikes, are displayed. Before education begins, the educator should study the child's mind and act according to it. More prominent faculties should be cherished the most, while the rest should not be neglected. Base, brutal, and evil inclinations are often engendered by foolishness on the part of the parents. They are often seen to promise reward for good and punishment for bad conduct, which tends to degrade the moral sense; instead of teaching them that good deeds bring their own reward, and bad ones their own evil consequences. It is, further, a general habit to qualm the little one's sorrow by a piece of sugar or a farthing. It seems very benevolent and innocent, and it looks, at the most, a paltry offence. But yet the result it carries with it is appalling. When the child grows up it will likewise seek to drown its sorrows in the pleasures of the world. To let the infant quietly cry out its grief will engender steadfastness of character and consignment to fate. Others, again, will teach their children to avenge themselves—to kick the stone they fell over, to hit the boy again, etc. The primary result is, that the little fellow is cooled, he and the parents are satisfied, and no more is thought of it. But a revengeful, uncharitable disposition is developed in the little mind, and the result which may spring therefrom is better untold.

There are obstinate natures to whom warnings and punishments are only enticements for continuance in wrong-doing. What should be done to them? Mental faculties cannot be destroyed, but they can—best without the child's knowing it—be gently led into other directions. Every evil principle has its corresponding good; and it is a peculiar fact that the mind of man can be led from one to the other, can be made to serve the one side or the other, without altering its especial characteristic. The mind which has an inherited inclination for hard-heartedness and cruelty may, by the guidance of a loving hand, be transformed into one with steadfast intentions for enlightening his fellow men, as Bj Björnson has shown us in his novel, Det Flager. The boy who roams about in the forest, climbing trees and robbing birds' nests, may be turned into a useful sailor or a naturalist. The little fighter may be guided to take a fancy to gymnastics instead. The youth who exhibits indications of lascivious tendencies may, by a tender hand and especial care, be moulded into a loving father and a true husband. A whimsical disposition may be pacified by regular habits and exclusion from too many conditions at one time, while a one-sided mind may be enlivened by more conditions and by being forced to quick thinking. So every faculty and quality of the mind is capable of being utilised for good, as it may be manipulated by the reverse. This process must be taken in hand by parents. The school-teacher has too many under his supervision to study their minds and train them individually. Besides, they are within his reach too short a time. The education of the character does not belong to the school. The child's mind is moulded chiefly at home and in the playgrounds, wherefore care should be taken by the parents to show it a good example and provide it with good surroundings.

J. K. MAAGAARD.

CONDITIONS OF THOUGHT.

PRESENT-DAY conditions of thought are decidedly more favorable to a legitimate exercise of the reasoning faculties than have been the circumstances of bygone ages. The times when the mind was fettered as well as the body, or when the mind was retained in bondage after physical freedom had obtained, have passed away, and to-day remembrance of the tyrannical influences once exerted over peoples militates against the continuance of the insane cry for a return of the "good old times." Thought, as a function of the brain, must have existed in every era since the beginning of the human species; but thought without means and opportunities for free expression has always been valueless. What are called the lower animals think, but to very little purpose, as they are devoid of the power to give articulate interpretation to their mental conceptions. Thus, in the remotest and darkest ages of the world's history, men have turned their minds to their proper accounts; their ideas on political and religious matters, and even their conjectures respecting things pertaining to science, may have been as cultured, as finely wrought, as those of men of to-day; how many of their theories were superior to ours, and how more beneficial to the world they would have been had they been told to others and put into practice, no one can tell. Keen intellects are of no purpose unless the productions of reflection can find an outlet into the world through the tongue or by the pen. The free expression of opinion was denied our predecessors by the powers that have been, and so to-day we are not benefitted by what they thought; we do not reap the advantages of their ideas. Our forefathers—with a few exceptions—up to a few hundred years ago, may as well have been oysters for all the legacy of thought they have bequeathed us. It can be seen, therefore, that a finely constituted and active brain is, to other persons than its owner, a non-existent quantity if the conditions do not allow of the publicity of its work. Thought, to be of any value, must be freely and openly expressed.

It has never been a sin to think, but it has been made a crime to tell the world the results of your mental deliberation. Nobody would dream to-day of seeking to prevent even an excessive indulgence in reasoning. From the pulpits and the clerical platforms comes the injunction to test every question by the standard of reason and common sense, it being claimed that the old dogmas and doctrines may be examined as critically as mathematical propositions; that the foundations of belief may be as rigidly investigated as a murder by a British jury; and it is further alleged that, out of these ordeals, the grand old religious truths will emerge unscathed and firm as ever, more fully prepared to resist the onslaughts of future doubts and errors. There are, however, in those indulgences in reasoning, examinations, and investigations, important conditions laid down, which it is necessary should be fully observed. They are willing to make the conclusions coincide with established conclusions; determination to preclude from consideration everything that tends to explode these conclusions; and, therefore, exclusive assimilation of those evidences whose testimony is on the one side. Oliver Wendell Holmes remarked that "theological students developed a third eyelid—the nictitating membrane, which is so well known in birds, and which serves to shut out, not all light, but all the light they do not want."

What else was the reprimand of Dr. Pusey to a doubter, "It is not your duty to ascertain the truth; it is your duty to accept and believe the truth as laid down by the Church," than a command to abjure reason and the dictates of conscience? It is only conventional thought that is allowed at the present day: "thought," the free expression of which can only be tolerated if it is conformist, bearing relationship to preconceived formulas. He who is so bold (and unfortunate) as to defy public custom, impartially examine for himself without deference to the antiquity or social power of the subject of his inquiry, forming his opinions according to his accumulated information, is taking the shortest route for ostracism, boycott, and calumny. Freedom of opinion is still a long way from enjoying a pleasureable existence.

Digitized by Google

Our reverend fathers, imbued with faith in the righteousness of their cause, or prompted by an ambition for dishonorable authority, seem unable to recognise thought as leading to opinions other than their own. The stubborn, asinine position which they take up on this matter is supported by wanton ignorance and dishonest affectation. Consider their hypocritical ostentation of dependence on thought and reason. Emerson deals most effectively with those who, with a pretension to intellectuality, virtually consider their cases with the end already agreed upon. In his essay on Self-Reliance he says: "I hear a preacher announce for his text and topic the expediency of one of the institutions of his Church. Do I not know beforehand that not possibly can he say a new and spontaneous word? Do I not know that, with all this ostentation of examining the grounds of the institution, he will do no such thing? Do I not know that he is pledged to himself not to look but at one side, the permitted side, not as a man, but as a parish minister. He is a retained attorney, and these airs of the bench are the emptiest affectation." What an ignoble position for theological teachers to hold at the close of the nineteenth century—forbidden to think for themselves. Untrammelled thought would mean for old creeds partial extinction; being created and forced on peoples by governmental systems without the sanction of investigation or reason, they would, if subjected to the influences of these forces in a more enlightened age, be instantly dismissed from the premier position in all sane minds. It is because the conditions of the time, even yet, do not allow people to think and express their thoughts with as much freedom on religious as on, say, political matters that the star of truth continues to be obscured by the cloud of error.

An amusing parade has been made lately of what is termed "religious thought." The adjective is convenient in enabling one to determine as to the nature of the mental process denoted. That those who are striving to monopolise thought are thereby doing the best that can be done to stifle true thinking altogether is as palpable as have been the efforts of the same party in the past to render reason and thought futile by causing the prohibition of their legitimate practice and expression. The only thought which they allow distribution is the thought that is conventional.

Orthodoxists make an impossible, absurd, and unnatural claim when they demand that thought shall lead all people in one direction. Were the mind independent of the body, as some would have us believe, it might be more possible to secure uniformity of thought; but the nature of thought must, to a large extent, depend upon the state of the brain, and the nature of the brain in turn must depend upon the state of the body. Thus, in no two persons can thought be identical; there must be a dissimilarity somewhere, as the conditions are not the same. As one writer has so pointedly put it: "If all people thought the same, it would be good evidence that they did not think at all." And so it is seen that the attempt to monopolise thought is an immoral one, and can only result in closing up the means of exit by which individual thought is conveyed to the outer world. The struggle for freedom of expression is really of far more importance than the fight for free thought; for that, as we have seen, has always been possible, and has only been rendered impotent by the prohibition of the methods of egress. Thought, in the first place, must be independent—if it is independent it will be valuable; and, as all the civilised advantages and blessings we experience to-day are but the outcome of the thoughts—obscure and frail at the time, maybe—of our predecessors, it is incumbent on the present generation to facilitate the conditions of that eternal source of good, so that in the times that are to come the peoples may cry and bless our memories because we made ourselves absolutely free men. "Every revolution," to again quote Emerson, "was first a thought in one man's mind, and when the same thought occurs to another man it is the key of that era. Every reform was once a private opinion, and when it shall be a private opinion again it will solve the problem of the age."

FRED WILSON.

SOME LITTLE-KNOWN FREETHINKERS.—V.

THOMAS SCOTT.

FEW have done more valiant work for Freethought, in a quiet way, than the subject of my present sketch. Born April 28, 1808, Thomas Scott lived the life of a cultured gentleman and scholar. He had acted as page to Charles X. of France, and he travelled widely in all parts of the world. Having thoroughly investigated Christianity, he, in the latter part of his life, set himself to the work of enlightening others as to his conclusions. To this task he devoted his time, money, and talents. From his house at Mount Pleasant, Ramsgate, he began by issuing small tracts designed to aid the cause of free inquiry and free expression of thought. These were printed at his own expense and given away, mostly sent by post to the clergy and the cultured classes. Soon a number of writers gathered round him whose works he published and distributed, mainly at his own cost. Altogether, the pamphlets which he published made no fewer than sixteen good-sized volumes. Among the writers who contributed to the series may be mentioned Francis Newman, W. R. Greg, Dr. Willis, J. Cranbrook, M. D. Conway, E. Maitland, M. Macfie, C. Bray, E. V. Neale, J. Robertson, F. E. Abbott, Sir R. D. Hanson, W. Jevons, M. Kalisch, T. Lestrange, J. Muir, J. A. Symonds, P. A. Taylor, Rev. R. Suffield, Judge Strange, Dr. G. Wild, Dr. Zerffi, and Bishop Hinds. Thomas Scott was well called a prince of propagandists. He had always fresh irons in the fire, and the entire series of pamphlets were of the scholarly, cultured order, calculated to win the attention of those for whom they were designed.

As a specimen of his own incisive style, take the first of 21 Questions, to which answers are respectfully asked from the orthodox (1865): "(1) As we are required to love our enemies, may we not safely infer that God loves his enemies? (2) If God loves his enemies, will he punish them more than will be for their good? (3) Would endless punishment be for the good of any being?" As an instance of illustration, take the following from his reply to Dr. M'Neile, the Dean of Ripon, on the Resurrection: "If any one comes and tells us that a man, like the cow in the nursery rhyme, jumped over the moon, or that he walked through a six-feet-thick wall, or that he could show himself and vanish at will, we should say at once that his statements might possibly be true, so far as his report of what he thought he had seen was concerned; but that, if it was true, then the creature who did these things was not made of flesh and blood, but had an organisation so entirely different from man that no points of likeness could be traced between the one and the other."

The principal work issued with Thomas Scott's name was the English Life of Jesus. The title shows it was designed to do for English readers a similar work to that which Strauss and Renan had done for Germans and French. Unlike more popular and pretentious Lives of Jesus, it did not attempt to build an edifice without the needful materials, but rather examined those materials, and showed that they could not consistently be fitted together. It shows, in short, that in the Gospels we have to do with legends and fictions, rather than with facts. The work was written in conjunction with Sir G. W. Cox, or rather, I believe, was founded on manuscripts by that gentleman, who, being a dignitary of the Church of England, could not afford to put his name to such a work, and preferred that the whole credit or odium should fall on Mr. Scott, ever ready to do anything for the cause of Freethought. In 1871 Mr. Scott issued a challenge to the Christian Evidence Society, but that body acted with their accustomed discretion, and Mr. Scott followed up his challenge with a scathing exposure of The Tactics and Defeat of the Christian Evidence Society.

In a farewell address to his readers, after fifteen years of work, which he published in 1877, Mr. Scott said: "The spectacle of millions of my fellow-countrymen bound hand and book by metaphysical and priestly exclusiveness made so painful an impression upon my mind that I felt irresistibly impelled to expose dogmatic assumptions and promote free theological inquiry as the undoubted right of all thoughtful minds." He entered on his task single-handed, but he soon made friends who rejoiced to help him in his labors. He says: "Expressions of sympathy with my design and offers of co-operation in the work reached me from what seemed to be the most unlikely quarters, and, for a considerable period afterwards, able and highly-educated clergymen forwarded me manuscripts for publication, containing attacks on the false bulwarks of ecclesiasticism, and expositions of absolute moral verities. Cultivated and earnest laymen, capable of dealing with the points at issue, also came forward voluntarily and contributed useful papers to the series." Essays on every branch of theology were issued "illustrating the unhistorical character of many Bible records, the gradual development of beliefs and ceremonies from Solar and Phallic worship to Christianity, the priestly origin of creeds, and the true inductive methods of investigation." In laying down his work he was able to say: "The persuasion gains ground everywhere that the only true orthodoxy is loyalty to reason; and the only infidelity which merits censure is disloyalty to reason." The seed, he says, may for a while appear unproductive. Mrs. Grundy is still strong. "But over all such untoward agencies the cause of freedom of thought and freedom of expression will certainly triumph; and every anathema of priests and denunciation by bigots will but tend to accelerate its progress."

Digitized by Google

Thomas Scott died at Norwood on December 30, 1878. In a memoir contributed to the Liberal of March, 1879, Mr. G. G. Flaws says: "His was a grand presence; tall, yet robust, with strikingly handsome head and face; in bearing, dress, and manners every inch a perfect English gentleman. Though fond of deluding himself into the belief that he was destitute of humor, he often chuckled with kindly malicious glee at some of his own repartees, and unconsciously manifested great powers of drollery; albeit, his wit, if used in writing—which it seldom was—would have barbed itself with sarcasm. He hugely relished the lighter sallies in others, particularly when, through pen and pencil, they waged war against the unrealities of theology and the creeds. No man more detested cant, in every form; no man more gloried in sincerity, both in himself and others. His was as purely transparent a soul as ever honored mankind."

No notice of Mr. Scott would be complete without mention of his wife, who assisted him in all his work with whole-souled devotion. She was a lady of great culture and refinement, in every way fitted to be the helpmeet and companion of one of nature's gentlemen.

J. M. Wheeler.

SOMETHING TO BE THANKFUL FOR.

In calm and trustful confidence the missionary sat,
While the energetic sexton was a-passing round the hat.
The services were over, and now had come the pause
To give an opportunity to help along the cause.

But vainly went the sexton teetering up and down the aisle—
In all the congregation no one recognised the tile.
The missionary's hat returned as empty as it went;
He'd been preaching to an audience that wouldn't pay a cent.

O'er the parson's face there flitted a disappointed look,
As from the solemn sexton his empty hat he took;
Then, smiling on the audience, he returned it to the rack,
With the words, "I'm very thankful that I've got my beaver back."

CORRESPONDENCE.

A SECULAR BAND.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE FREETHINKER."

Sir,—I am afraid I have been too exclusive in attempting to form a band composed only of members of the N.S.S. I have correspondents who would help to form the band who, not being members yet, would be willing to join the N.S.S.

Will you kindly announce that all players are invited to address me if the idea of joining the N.S.S. subsequently is agreeable to them?

As to capacity, any one who can play, even if only fairly, will be welcomed, when once the thing is started. Practice will conduce to perfection, and will draw talent to our orchestra.

William Balsk.

8 Celia-road, London, N.

I hate this hypocrisy! It obscures from ourselves the measure of truth we really possess. Men put forth profession instead of belief, till they do not themselves distinguish between the two. They shuffle and confuse their own best faiths among articles of creeds to which they give a mere verbal assent.—W. H. Smith, "Thoresdale; or, The Conflict of Opinions," p. 321.

BOOK CHAT.

Mr. Forder has purchased a number of copies of the second edition of The Evolution of Christianity, by Mr. C. Gill, originally published by Williams and Norgate. The work is a thorough examination of the Christian legends and doctrines by a gentleman who unites erudition and common sense. The savage character of the Jewish records, the belief of Jesus in his speedy second coming, and the destruction of the world; his failure to rise above the superstition of demoniac possession, the misreading of the Messianic prophecies, and the evolution of the doctrine of the Trinity, are all dwelt upon in disproof of the divinity of Christianity. The author, who had edited the Book of Enoch, also shows the indebtedness of the New Testament to this apocryphal book, which is endorsed by Jude.

* * *

To the members of the Thirteen Club, who are endeavoring to eradicate the superstition attached to that number by the easy plan of always sitting thirteen at a table, we commend the following from p. 253 of The Perfect Way; or, the Finding of Christ, written, we believe, by Edward Maitland and the late Dr. Anna Bonus Kingsford: "The number 13, which, on the earthly plane, and before the 'crucifixion,' is, through the treachery of 'Judas,' the symbol of imperfection and ill-fortune, becomes, in the 'Kingdom of the Father,' the symbol of perfection. As the number of the lunar months, it is the symbol also of the woman, and denotes the Soul and her reflection of God; the solar number, 12, being that of the Spirit. The two numbers in combination form the perfect year of that dual humanity which alone is made in the image of God—the true 'Christian year,' wherein the two, the inner and the outer, spirit and matter, are as one. Thirteen, then, represents that full union of man with God wherein Christ becomes Christ."

* * *

No. 17 of the Humanitarian League's publications is The Evils of Butchery, by Josiah Oldfield (Reeves, 185 Fleet-street; 6d.). This book, with its illustrations by Mr. R. E. Holding, is calculated to be very disquieting to meat-eaters. Mr. Oldfield's own statistics, however, show that, whereas in the period 1831–40 80 lbs. per annum was consumed by each person, in the period 1881–87 the yearly consumption per head had risen to 98 lbs. Under these circumstances only fanatical vegetarians would seek to disparage the attempts to reform the barbarities perpetrated in slaughter-houses; and, despite Mr. Oldfield's strictures on the humaner methods, we fully credit Sir Benjamin Ward Richardson's statement that animals can be killed painlessly. What is needed is that public attention should be drawn to the subject, and the Humanitarian League is worthy of all praise for seeing that this is done.

* * *

Some time ago F. Brunetière, in a moment of weakness, after having visited the Pope at the Vatican, uttered the words, Science is bankrupt. The phrase was caught up by all classes of obscurantists, mystics, and religionists. Its absurdity is well shown in an open letter addressed to M. Brunetière, by an Hungarian, Sigmund Bodnar, of which a German translation, Ueber den Bankerott der Wissenschaften, is sent to us from Budapest. We hope the pamphlet will have a good circulation.

PROFANE JOKES.

Inquiring Boy—"Mamma, don't the little angels have a good time in heaven?" Mamma—"Certainly, my child. Why do you ask?" Inquiring Boy—"Because it says here in the Prayer Book, 'The cherubim and seraphim continually do cry.'"

A golfer who was not in the habit of playing his lofting iron with any measure of success managed, on one occasion, to send his ball particularly high, but very short. "That's a good loft," he remarked to his caddie. "Ay," rejoined the boy, "it's a gude shot—if the hole had been in heaven."

"I was sorry, Willie," said his Sunday-school teacher, "to see you keep your seat when the superintendent asked all those who wanted to go to heaven to rise. Don't you want to go to heaven?" "Yes'm." "Then why didn't you rise?" "'Cos he didn't have no right to tell me to rise, ma'am," answered Willie. "He ain't no angel Gabriel."

Mr. Meeks—"Mrs. Sauers must have thought a good deal of her husband to erect that stained glass window to his memory." Mrs. Meeks—"No; she did it to spite Mrs. Bloom and her daughters. The window is right opposite the Bloom's pew, and just see what a sickly yellow and green light it casts over them during the entire service."

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY LECTURE NOTICES, ETC.

[Notices of Lectures, etc., must reach us by first post on Tuesday, and be marked "Lecture Notice," if not sent on post-card.]

LONDON.

HALL OF SCIENCE (142 Old-street, E.C.): 6.30, musical selections; 7, Charles Watts, "The Birth, Reign, and Death of Christianity." (Admission free; reserved seats 3d. and 6d.) Wednesday, at 8.30, a lecture.

BATTERSEA SECULAR HALL (back of Battersea Park Station): 7.45, F. Haslam, "The Life and Times of Robert Owen." (Free.) Monday, at 8, Marlowe Dramatic Company. (Free.) Tuesday, at 8, dancing. Thursday, at 8, committee.

CAMBERWELL (North Camberwell Hall, 61 New Church-road): 7.30, Arthur B. Moss, "What do Christians Believe?"

WEST HAM SECULAR ETHICAL SOCIETY (61 West Ham-lane): 7.15, Thomas Stephenson (of Boston, U.S.), "Do Men Live After they are Dead?"

WEST LONDON ETHICAL SOCIETY (Princes' Hall, Piccadilly): 11.15, Graham Wallas, "The Service of Mammon."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BATTERSEA PARK GATES: 11.30, J. Fagan, "The Folly of Prayer."

HYDE PARK (near Marble Arch): 11.30, a lecture; 3.30, a lecture.

WOOD GREEN (Jolly Butchers' Hill): 11.30, S. R. Thompson, "Is there a Life Beyond the Grave?"

COUNTRY.

BIRMINGHAM (Coffee House, corner of Broad-street): Thursdays, at 8, papers, discussions, etc.

BRISTOL (St. James's Hall, Cumberland-street): 11, G. W. Foote, "Is Religion the Cause of Progress?" 3, "How the Bible Stands Now"; 7, "Did Jesus Christ Ever Live?"

CHATHAM SECULAR HALL (Queen's-road, New Brompton): 7, A. E. Rowcroft, "Æriel Navigation: Is it Possible?"

HULL (St. George's Hall, Storey-street): 7, S. Ackroyd, "Ancient Monuments and Sacred History." Monday evening, annual soirée and ball. (Tickets, 1s. 6d. each.)

LIVERPOOL (Oddfellows' Hall, St. Anne-street): 11, Tontine Society; 7, Mr. Rhodes, "The Settlement of the Jews in Palestine."

MANCHESTER SECULAR HALL (Rusholme-road, All Saints): 6.30, Ernest Evans, "A Chapter of Evolution." (Free.)

PLYMOUTH (Democratic Club, Whimple-street): 7, social evening.

ROCHDALE (Working Men's College, 4 Acker-street): 6.30, J. A. Aston, "Astronomical Telescopes and the Moon"—limelight illustrations.

SHEFFIELD SECULAR SOCIETY (Hall of Science, Rockingham-street): 11, Sam Standring, "Secularism and Social Life"; 7, "The Prayer of Faith." Tea at 5.

SOUTH SHIELDS (Thornton's Variety Hall, Union-lane): 11, C. Cohen, "Woman: Past, Present, and Future"; 7, "The Holy Bible."

SUNDERLAND (Co-operative Hall, Green-street): 3, C. Cohen, "Christianity the Enemy of Progress."

SUNDERLAND (Lecture Room, Bridge End Vaults, opposite Echo office): 7, The Secretary, "Secularism Defined and Defended."

Lecturers' Engagements.

C. COHEN, 12 Merchant-street, Bow-road, London, E.—All Sundays until April, South Shields.

STANLEY JONES, 53 Marlborough-road, Holloway, London.—March 24 and 25, Derby; 31, a. and e. Tottenham. April 7, m. and e. Wood Green; 14, m. Pimlico Pier, a. Hyde Park, e. Camberwell.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Croydon-road, Rotherhithe, London.—March 24, e. Camberwell. April 14, m. Mile End, a. Victoria Park; 21, m. and a. Hyde Park, e. Hammersmith; 28, m. Camberwell. May 5, a. Finsbury Park; 12, m. Mile End, a. Victoria Park; 19, m. and a. Hyde Park, e. Hammersmith; 26, Clerkenwell.

SAM STANDRING, 6 Bury-road, Rochdale.—March 24, 26, and 27, Sheffield; 31, Failsworth.

WORKS ON EVOLUTION by ARTHUR B. MOSS.

Every Freethinker should read these books:—

THE BIBLE AND EVOLUTION, boards, 1s.

CHRISTIANITY & EVOLUTION, cloth, 2s. 6d.; boards, 1s.

LECTURES AND ESSAYS, 1s.

R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street; Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's-court, E.C.

INDIVIDUALISM AND SOCIALISM.—M. D. O'BRIEN is willing to LECTURE for Associations on either or both of the above subjects, Without Fee.—18 Albert-grove, Withington, Manchester. List of subjects sent free.

FISH, FISH, FISH.—Bases of SELECTED FISH sent on receipt of P.O. 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., and 5s., carriage paid. Premier Fish Supply Co., Fish Docks, Grimsby.

TO FREETHINKERS.—Ladies and Gentlemen requiring SUPERIOR CUT GARMENTS at moderate prices. First-class Style and Fit Guaranteed.—H. HAMPTON, Artiste Tailor, 14 Great Castle-street, W. (three doors from Regent-street). Patronised by leading Freethinkers.

NEW AND SECONDHAND FURNITURE, Sewing Machines, Pianos, Pictures, China, etc. Good and Cheap. Call and see stock. GEORGE SMITH, 15 Railton-road, Brixton, S.W.

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each; upper or lower set, £1. Best Quality, 4s. each; upper or lower, £2. Completed in four hours when required; repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above, they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18 ct. gold, 10s.; stopping, 2s. 6d; extraction, 1s.; painless by gas, 5s.

Colonel Ingersoll's Great New Lecture

ABOUT THE HOLY BIBLE

Price Sixpence.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Read "THE TRUTH SEEKER."

MONTHLY, PRICE 1D.

Edited by JOHN GRANGE.

The MARCH Number contains a FINE PORTRAIT of

MR. C. COHEN.

Of all Newsagents to order. Wholesale, Mr. Forder.

THE BIRTH OF CHRIST

A CHAPTER FROM

Strauss's Original "Life of Jesus."

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY

G. W. FOOTE.

(A Most Thorough Analysis and Exposure of the Gospel Story by a Master Hand.)

Price Sixpence.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price Twopence,

"A Letter to Lord Ellenborough."

OCCASIONED BY THE SENTENCE WHICH HE PASSED ON

MR. D. I. EATON,

AS PUBLISHER OF

THE THIRD PART OF PAINE'S "AGE OF REASON."

BY

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Freethought Publications.

Crimes of Christianity. Vol. I. By G. W. Foote and J. M. Wheeler. Hundreds of exact references to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.

Chapters: — 1, Christ to Constantine; 2, Constantine to Hypatia; 3, Monkery; 4, Pious Forgeries; 5, Pious Frauds; 6, Rise of the Papacy; 7, Crimes of the Popes; 8, Persecution of the Jews; 9, The Crusades. Cloth, gilt, 216 pp., 2s. 6d.

Bible Handbook for Freethinkers and Inquiring Christians. Edited by G. W. Foote and W. P. Ball. Complete, paper covers, 1s. 4d.; superior edition, on superfine paper, bound in cloth, 2s.

The Jewish Life of Christ. Being the Sepher Toldoth Jeshu, or Book of the Generation of Jesus. With an Historical Preface and Voluminous Notes by G. W. Foote and J. M. Wheeler. Paper covers, 6d.; superior edition, superfine paper, cloth, 1s.

Bible Studies. Essays on Phallic Worship and other Curious Rites and Customs. By J. M. Wheeler. Illustrated, superior paper, 2s. 6d.

Biographical Dictionary of Freethinkers of All Ages and Nations. By J. M. Wheeler. Handsomely bound in cloth, 7s. 6d.

Darwin Made Easy. By Dr. Edward B. Aveling, Fellow of the London University. This is the best popular exposition of Darwinism extant. Cloth, 1s.

Essays in Rationalism. By Charles Robert Newman (Atheist Brother of the late Cardinal Newman). With a Preface by George Jacob Holyoake, and a Biographical Sketch by J. M. Wheeler. 1s. 6d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

ALLINSON FOR HEALTH.

HOME CONSULTATIONS—10 a.m. to 1 p.m., 10s. 6d.; 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., 5s. Patients Visited.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. I. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Management of Infancy, Health, Longevity, The Teeth, Tobacco, The Drink Question. Also the Cause and Cure of Diseases, Constipation, Biliousness, Eczema, Blackheads and Pimples, Nervousness, Coughs and Colds, Chest Complaints, Deafness, Thread Worms, Long Worms, Tape Worms, The Itch, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. II. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on The Healing Power of Nature, Urine, Saline Starvation, the Hair and its Management, Sleep and Sleeplessness, Want of Energy, etc. Advice to the Thin, for the Stout; Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. III. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on No More Death, Management of Young Children, Unrecognised Domestic Poisons, How to Grow Tall, to Keep Warm, to Live One Hundred Years, to Improve the Memory, and to become Beautiful and Attractive. On the Cause and Cure of Stomach Troubles, Flatulence, Sleepiness, Varicose Veins, Boils and Carbuncles, Sebaceous Tumors and Worts, Hay Fever, Winter Cough, Chilblains, Epilepsy, and on the Diseases Produced by Taking Mercury.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. IV. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Hardening, Work and Overwork, Sugar and its Abuse, Milk as Food, the Tomato, Poultices, Quinine, Against the Knife, Arsenical Poisoning, Tonics, Against Stimulants in Disease, about Swallowing Pins and other Articles. Also Cure of Sunstroke, Dog Bites, Pains in the Back, Pediculi or Lice, Chicken-Pox, Synovitis or Inflammation of the Joints, Tonsilitis or Quinsy, Herpes (Tetter or Shingles), Erysipelas, Ulcer of the Stomach, Epidemic Influenza, Sciatica, Psoriasis or English Leprosy, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. V. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Pure Water, The Mouth, Its Use and Abuse; Rules for the Aged, Training, Blood Letting, Nose Bleeding, Felon or Whitlow, Ingrowing Toenail, Gum Boil, Cold in the Head, a Red Nose, Flushing and Blushing, Toothache, Sore Mouth, St. Vitus' Dance, Goitre, Mumps, Inflamed Eyes and Eyelids, Fits, Fainting, Apoplexy, Spitting and Vomiting of Blood, Vomiting, Wounds, Burns, Scalds, Bruises, etc.

The Five Volumes, strongly and neatly bound, price 6s. 3d., post free.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.—An Eye Opener to Drug Takers.
RHEUMATISM: ITS CAUSE AND CURE. Post free for 7d.
DIET AND DIGESTION. Post free for 7d.
CONSUMPTION: ITS NATURAL CURE. Post free 7d.
All these Books, bound in One Vol., post free, 3s. 6d. Send Postal Order.

THREE PAMPHLETS FOR YOUNG MEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.
A BOOK FOR MARRIED WOMEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

All communications to be addressed to—

DR. T. R. ALLINSON,
4 Spanish-place, Manchester-square, London, W.

THE BEST BOOK

ON NEO-MALTHUSIANISM IS, I BELIEVE,

TRUE MORALITY, or THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF NEO-MALTHUSIANISM.

By J. R. HOLMES, M.M.L., M.V.S., M.N.S.S.

180 pages, with portrait and autograph, bound in cloth, gilt lettered. Price 1s., post free.

 In order to bring the information within the reach of the poor, the most important parts of the book are issued in a pamphlet of 112 pages at ONE PENNY, post free 2d. Copies of the pamphlet for distribution 1s. a dozen post free.

The National Reformer of 4th September, 1892, says: "Mr Holmes' pamphlet . . . is an almost unexceptionable statement of the Neo-Malthusian theory and practice . . . and throughout appeals to moral feeling. . . . The special value of Mr. Holmes' service to the Neo-Malthusian cause and to human well-being generally is just his combination in his pamphlet of a plain statement of the physical and moral need for family limitation with a plain account of the means by which it can be secured, and an offer to all concerned of the requisites at the lowest possible prices."

The Council of the Malthusian League, Dr. Drysdale, Dr. Allbutt, and others have also spoken of it in very high terms.

The Trade supplied by R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C. Other orders should be sent to the author.

J. R. HOLMES, HANNEY, WANTAGE, BERKS.

W. J. Rendell's "Wife's Friend"

Recommended by Mrs. Besant in Law of Population, p. 32, and Dr. Allbutt in Wife's Handbook, p. 51. Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell-street, Clerkenwell; 2s. per doz., post free (reduction in larger quantities). For particulars send stamped envelope.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

BEWARE of useless imitations substituted by some dealers and chemists, the words "Rendell & Co." and "J. W. Rendall" being speciously and plausibly introduced to deceive the public.

LOOK FOR AUTOGRAPH REGISTERED TRADE MARK

W. J. Rendell

No. 182,688.

IN Red INK ON EACH BOX, WITHOUT WHICH NONE ARE GENUINE.

Higginson's Syringe, with Vertical and Reverse Current, 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 5s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. Dr. Allbutt's Quinine Powders, 2s. per doz. All prices post free.

W. J. RENDELL, 15 Chadwell-st., Clerkenwell, E.C.

Works by G. W. Foote.

Flowers of Freethought. First Series. 221 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Flowers of Freethought. Second Series. 302 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Bible Heroes. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Letters to the Clergy. First Series. 128 pp., 1s.

The Grand Old Book. A Reply to the Grand Old Man. An exhaustive answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture." 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Christianity and Secularism. Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Is Socialism Sound? Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 2s.

Infidel Death-Beds. Second edition, much enlarged, 8d. On superfine paper, in cloth, 1s. 3d.

Darwin on God. 6d.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s.

Will Christ Save Us? A Thorough Examination of the Claims of Jesus Christ to be considered the Savior of the World. 6d.

Reminiscences of Charles Bradlaugh. 6d.

A Defence of Free Speech. Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes. 4d.

Comic Sermons and Other Fantasias. 3d.

Rome or Atheism—the Great Alternative. 3d.

Letters to Jesus Christ. 4d.

Interview with the Devil. 2d.

Philosophy of Secularism. 3d.

Atheism and Morality. 2d.

My Resurrection. A Missing Chapter from the Gospel of Matthew, discovered by G. W. Foote. 2d.

The Folly of Prayer. 2d.

Ingersollism Defended against Archdeacon Farrar. 2d.

Was Jesus Insane? A Searching Inquiry into the Mental Condition of the Prophet of Nazareth. 1d.

Christianity and Progress. A Reply to Mr. Gladstone. 2d.

The Impossible Creed. An Open Letter to Bishop Magee on the Sermon on the Mount. 2d.

What was Christ? A Reply to J. S. Mill. 2d.

The Bible God. 2d.

Salvation Syrup; or, Light on Darkest England. A Reply to General Booth. 2d.

Is the Bible Inspired? A Criticism on Lux Mundi. 1d.

The Dying Atheist. A Story. 1d.

The Rev. Hugh Price Hughes's Converted Atheist. A Lie in Five Chapters. 1d.

Mrs. Besant's Theosophy. A Candid Criticism. 2d.

Secularism and Theosophy. A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant. 2d.

The New Cagliostro. An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky. 2d.

Bible Romances. New Edition. Revised and largely re-written. (1) The Creation Story, 2d.; (2) Eve and the Apple, 1d.; (3) Cain and Abel, 1d.; (4) Noah's Flood, 2d.; (5) The Tower of Babel, 1d.; (6) Lot's Wife, 1d.; (7) The Ten Plagues, 1d.; (8) The Wandering Jews, 1d.; (9) Balaam's Ass, 1d.; (10) God in a Box, 1d. (11) Jonah and the Whale, 1d.; (12) Bible Animals, 1d.; (13) A Virgin Mother, 2d.; (14) The Resurrection, 2d.; (15) The Crucifixion, 1d.; (16) John's Nightmare, 1d.

The Shadow of the Sword. A Moral and Statistical Essay on War. 2d.

Royal Paupers. Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty. 2d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price 1s. 6d.; superior edition, superfine paper, cloth, 2s., post free,

The Bible Handbook

FOR FREETHINKERS & INQUIRING CHRISTIANS.

BY

G. W. FOOTE AND W. P. BALL.

Sold also in separate parts as follows:—

1.—Bible Contradictions. The contradictions are printed in parallel columns. 4d.

2.—Bible Absurdities. All the chief absurdities from Genesis to Revelation, conveniently and strikingly arranged, with appropriate headlines, giving the point of each absurdity in a sentence. 4d.

3.—Bible Atrocities. Containing all the godly wickedness from Genesis to Revelation. Each infamy has a separate headline for easy reference. 4d.

4.—Bible Immoralities, Indecencies, Obscenities, Broken Promises, and Unfulfilled Prophecies. 4d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

From the "Bradford Weekly Telegraph," Saturday, February 16, 1895.

GREAT FIRE IN BRADFORD.

EXTENSIVE DAMAGE.

Early on Saturday a big fire took place in the warehouse, No. 2 Union-street, Bradford, occupied by Mr. R. Higgins, who occupies a large part of the ground floor, and numbers the following tenants occupying the other offices and rooms: Mr. Ernest Hahnel, Messrs. Schmidt & Co., Mr. J. W. Gott, Messrs. G. D. Wright & Co., and Mr. J. Pepper. The damage done is very extensive, and is roughly estimated at a figure between £8,000 to £10,000. It certainly cannot be less than £8,000, as many of the firms occupying the building had large and valuable stocks stored in the various rooms. Mr. R. Higgins had a big stock of woollens, stuffs and yarns, and estimates his loss at over £4,000. He is insured up to £4,000. Messrs. Wright & Co., stuff merchants, have had fully £1,000 damage done to their stock and premises, but it is completely covered by insurance. Mr. J. W. Gott, cloth and stuff merchant, had a stock valued at £1,500, and it is partially destroyed, chiefly by water. The other firms, with the exception of Mr. J. Pepper, have suffered in like manner, a lot of stock being destroyed by water. The cause of the fire is unknown, but, judging by appearances, it broke out in the packing-room of Mr. R. Higgins.

Read these Lines.

We have had a fire as particulars herewith.
We got a big allowance from the Insurance Company.
We bought the whole of G. D. Wright & Co.'s stock.
We bought it at less than half price.
We are determined to make a lot of new customers.
We are selling at ridiculously low prices to do it.
We ask every reader to give us one trial.
We will do our best to please you.
We have given great satisfaction to many.
We allow none to remain dissatisfied if we know it

A Few 21s. Parcels, carriage paid; worth 42s.

No. 1.—2 Suit Lengths or 4 Trousers' Lengths, good quality.
No. 2.—1 Black Figured and 1 Heavy All-Wool Navy Serge Dress Length; tip-top quality.
No. 3.—1 Suit Length and 1 Dress Length, any color or make.
No. 4.—Blankets, Sheets, Quilt, Table-cloth, Belt, Apron, Purse, etc.
No. 5.—Mixed Lot of Goods for Ladies' and Gentlemen's wear.

We have engaged 25 additional Tailors to make up Trousers. Price during Salvage Sale,

7s. 6d. per Pair to Measure.

J. W. GOTT, 2 & 4 UNION STREET, BRADFORD

Round waist .....
Round seat.....
Inside leg seam.....
Outside leg seam .....
Thigh .....
Knee .....
Bottom .....
Lined or Unlined .....
(Lined 6d. extra.)
Color .....

Works by Colonel R. G. Ingersoll.

SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES. The only complete edition in England. Accurate as Colenso, and fascinating as a novel. 192 pp. 1s. Superior paper, cloth 1s. 6d.
DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT. A Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy. 6d.
THE GODS. 6d.
REPLY TO GLADSTONE. With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler. 4d.
ROME OR REASON? A Reply to Cardinal Manning. 4d.
CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS. 3d.
ORATION ON WALT WHITMAN. 3d.
ORATION ON VOLTAIRE. 3d.
ABRAHAM LINCOLN. 3d.
PAINE THE PIONEER. 2d.
HUMANITY'S DEBT TO THOMAS PAINE. 2d.
ERNEST RENAN AND JESUS CHRIST. 2d.
TRUE RELIGION. 2d.
THE THREE PHILANTHROPISTS. 2d.
LOVE THE REDEEMER. 2d.
GOD AND THE STATE. 2d.
WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part I. 2d.
WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part II. 2d.
FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Dr. Field. 2d.
GOD AND MAN. Second reply to Dr. Field. 2d.
THE DYING CREED. 2d.
THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION. A Discussion with the Hon. F. D. Coudert and Gov. S. L. Woodford. 2d.
THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH. 2d.
ART AND MORALITY. 2d.
DO I BLASPHEME? 2d.
THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE. 2d.
SOCIAL SALVATION. 2d.
MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE. An Agnostic's View. 2d.
SKULLS. 2d.
THE GREAT MISTAKE. 1d.
LIVE TOPICS. 1d.
MYTH AND MIRACLE. 1d.
REAL BLASPHEMY. 1d.
REPAIRING THE IDOLS. 1d.
CHRIST AND MIRACLES. 1d.
CREEDS & SPIRITUALITY. 1d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street E.C.

THOMAS PAINE'S WORKS.

The Age of Reason. New edition, with Preface by G. W. FOOTE. 1s.
Miscellaneous Theological Works. 1s.
Complete Theological Works. (Including the Age of Reason.) Cloth, 2s. 6d.
The Rights of Man. Centenary edition. With a Political Biography by J. M. WHEELER. 1s.; bound in cloth, 2s.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

302 pp., superior paper, bound in cloth, 2s. 6d. post free,

FLOWERS OF FREETHOUGHT

[Second Series]

BY

G. W. FOOTE.

CONTENTS:—

Luscious Piety
The Jewish Sabbath
God's Day
Professor Stokes on Immortality
Pa'l Bert
Converting a Corpse
Bradlaugh's Ghost
Christ and Brotherhood
The Sons of God
Melchizedek
S'welp me God
Infidel Homes
Are Atheists Cruel?
Are Atheists Wicked?
Rum Doctors
Pious Puerilities
"Thus Saith the Lord"
Believe or be Damned
Christian Charity
Religion and Money
Clothed Rush
Lord Bacon on Atheism
Christianity & Slavery
Christ Up to Date
Secularism and Christianity
Altar and Throne
Martin Luther
The Praise of Folly
A Lost Soul
Happy in Hell
The Act of God
Keir Hardie on Christ
Blessed be ye Poor
Converted Infidels
Mrs. Booth's Ghost
Talmage on the Bible
Mrs. Besant on Death and After
The Poets and Liberal Theology
Christianity and Labor
An Easter Egg for Christians
Down Among the Dead Men
Smirching a Hero
Kit Marlowe and Jesus Christ
Jehovah the Ripper
The Parson's Living Wage
Did Bradlaugh Backslide?
Frederic Harrison on Atheism
Save the Bible!
Forgive and Forget
The Star of Bethlehem
The Great Ghost
Atheism and the French Revolution
Pigottism
Jesus at the Derby
Atheist Murderers
A Religion for Rascals
Rose-Water Religion

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Just published, price 4d., by post 5d.,

WAS CHRIST A POLITICAL AND SOCIAL REFORMER?

BY CHARLES WATTS

(Vice-President of the National Secular Society).

London: Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Printed and Published by G. W. FOOTE, at 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

VOL. XV.—No. 13. SUNDAY, MARCH 31, 1895. PRICE TWOPENCE.

MADAME BLAVATSKY.

THE latest book about Madame Blavatsky is entitled *A Modern Priestess of Isis. The title is by no means so happy as that of The New Cagliostro, chosen by Mr. Foote for his open letter to that lady. Madame Blavatsky, though she claimed to have uplifted the veil of Isis, sought rather to be the foundress of a new religion than the priestess of an old one. About this modern priestess there was no austerity and little reticence. She smoked like a chimney, slanged like a music-hall entertainer (which at one time she was), and swore like a trooper. Her oaths were as round and as finished as her cigarettes. Her Theosophy demanding celibacy for the perfection of occult powers, or perhaps, I should say, assigning non-celibacy as a reason to any one disappointed at the failure to obtain such powers, it was given out that she was the widow of a Russian General, and the Governor of Erivan, who had left her husband before the marriage was consummated. Really, she ran away some time after her marriage with N. V. Blavatsky, who is still living (although, according to Mr. Sinnett's untrustworthy Incidents in the Life of Madame Blavatsky, the marriage took place in 1848, when she was about seventeen, and he "something between fifty and seventy"), without any hope of ever obtaining the generalship or governorship she credited him with, and who had ample cause to consider himself well rid of her. "She had," says the author (p. 141), "the reputation of a priestess of Venus, rather than of Isis." Her early life has not been fully unveiled, and probably is as well left in oblivion. Certainly she had liaisons with many men.

The famous medium, D. D. Home, who knew her Russian career, speaks of her as of the demi monde, and mentions a liaison with the Prince Emile de Wittgenstein, by whom she had a deformed son, who died at Kieff in 1868.†

Madame Coulomb, in a letter to Colonel J. C. Bundy, editor of the Religio-Philosophical Journal, of Chicago, in 1885, asserts: "Madame Blavatsky is not Madame Blavatsky; she is Madame Metrovitch. I have known her husband in Egypt."

It was probably the success of D. D. Home, who performed before the Czar, and received a diamond from him, that turned H. P. B. to Spiritism, at the period of life when personal charms begin to fade. Certain it is that for many years she was in the medium business.

We gain sight of her in Egypt in 1872. The Spiritual Magazine of April for that year (p. 176) reports: "A society of Spiritualists has been formed in Cairo, Egypt, under the direction of Madame Blavatsky, a Russian lady, assisted by several mediums." Human Nature, of the same date, has a longer notice, and adds (p. 190): "If you should chance to see Mr. D. Home, medium, please tell him that a friend of his late wife, 'Sacha'—a St. Petersburg friend of past years—sends him her best compliments, and wishes him prosperity." Mr. James Burns wrote in the Daily Chronicle (September 12, 1891):—

"It may interest your readers to learn that I corresponded with Madame Blavatsky when she was in Cairo twenty years ago. She was then a Spiritualistic investigator of the crudest order, and enclosed a printed circular of her scheme, her quest being to find a physical medium who would go out there and give promiscuous séances—a practice which is discountenanced by all enlightened Spiritualists. She then knew nothing of the 'Mahatmas' or the pretended enlightenment of 'Theosophy,' or she never would have thought of opening a shop for phenomenal mediumship."

Madame Coulomb, who was with her in Egypt, has left the following account of her "spiritual" fiasco at Cairo:—

"I called again when the closet was ready, but what was my surprise when, instead of finding the kind spirits there to answer our questions, I found a room full of people, all alive, and using most offensive language towards the founder of the Society, saying that she had taken their money and had left them only with this, pointing at the space between the wall and the cloth, where several pieces of twine were still hanging which had served to pull through the ceiling a long glove stuffed with cotton, which was to represent the materialised hand and arm of some spirit. I went away, leaving the crowd as red as fire, ready to knock her down when she came back. Later on I met her again, and I asked her how she came to do such a thing; to which she answered that it was Madame Sebire's doings (this was a lady who lived with Madame Blavatsky), so I let this matter drop. I saw that she looked very unhappy. I called on her the next day, and on hearing that she was really in want I gave her pecuniary help, and continued doing so for some time."*

Prof. Coues makes the assertion that Madame Blavatsky was expelled from Egypt by the police. She went to Odessa, taking with her Madame Sebire, who abused her confidence so shamefully in Cairo. They started an enterprise of making some extraordinary inks. The speculation was unsuccessful, though utilised afterwards. At Odessa she sought to go in the Russian Service to India viâ Thibet, and her vain attempt to pass that land probably afterwards suggested the location there of the mysterious Mahatmas. She then went to America, landing at New York July 7, 1873. Dr. E. Coues says: "Her real business at that time was in the secret service of her government as a Russian spy, and she was instructed, as usual, to play any part that would divert attention from the facts in the case." One reason for visiting America may be stated in her own words: "for the sake of greater protection that the citizenship of this free country affords." Russian agents in this country and in India are usually naturalised citizens. The fact that H. P. B. was one was urged on her behalf when, upon her arrival in India, she was subjected to formal police surveillance.

Madame Blavatsky went so far in her American citizenship as to get married at Philadelphia early in 1875. Her husband's name was M. C. Betanelly. He was an American from Tiflis, and in business at Philadelphia. Why a lady who had hitherto shown herself untrammelled should have contracted bigamy, with one husband at least still living, is doubtful. Perhaps she thought that at the age of forty-four it is time to become respectable. She pretended to V. S. Solovyoff (author of A Modern Priestess) that she was unconscious or hypnotised. Olcott "was a witness at the wedding, and signed the register" (M. P., p. 163). Perhaps he was hypnotised too. The married life of Mrs. Betanelly was brief and stormy. Betanelly scratched the Russian lady, and found the very cream of Tartar. He sought for refuge in the divorce court, and the public records of Philadelphia tell how he obtained it. About the same time the wife of Henry Steele Olcott also obtained a

* A Modern Priestess of Isis. Abridged and translated on behalf of the Society for Psychical Research, from the Russian of Vsevolod Sergyeevich Solovyoff, by Walter Leaf, Litt.D. (London: Longmans, Green, & Co.; 1895.)

† Madame Blavatsky said she adopted a son to save the honor of a friend (see A Modern Priestess, p. 141).

* Some Account of My Association with Madame Blavatsky.

Digitized by Google

divorce, and the careers of the joint founders of the Theosophical Society were linked henceforward. But I must reserve the story of founding the Society to a new chapter.

Had H. P. B. been only a vulgar impostor and demi mondaine, she would certainly never have attracted the attention she did. She was much more. She was a woman of great natural ability, great experience, and great force of character. She had the real secret of all magic—a determined will—and the Committee of the Society for Psychical Research, which sent a special commissioner to India to investigate her alleged wonders there, were constrained to report: "For our own part, we regard her neither as the mouthpiece of hidden seers, nor as a mere vulgar adventuress; we think that she has achieved a title to permanent remembrance as one of the most accomplished, ingenious, and interesting impostors in history."*

J. M. Wheeler.

(To be continued).

MR. BALFOUR'S "FOUNDATIONS."—II.

(Continued from page 162.)

The Foundations of Belief. Being Notes Introductory to the Study of Theology. By the Right Hon. Arthur James Balfour. (London: Longmans, Green, & Co.)

Mr. Balfour's attack on "Naturalism" is not, in our opinion, very formidable. It is elegant in composition, but weak and almost commonplace in argument. After laying down the propositions that no moral code can be effective which does not inspire emotions of reverence, and that its power to do this cannot be independent of its supposed origin, Mr. Balfour proceeds to ask, What is the origin of the moral law according to Naturalism? The answer is given in a long and labored passage, not without a certain academical eloquence; an eloquence that extorts admiration for its cleverness, but does not (at least in our case) excite any higher pleasure. When all is said and done, Mr. Balfour's jeremiad is but an echo of the old complaints of Ecclesiastes. Human nature is frail, life is short, and the very existence of organic beings on this planet is but "a petty episode in the history of the universe." Evolution itself will end in devolution, and as the earth cools its living forms will deteriorate and finally disappear. What is still worse, from the moral point of view, every part of man's nature has exactly the same origin; everything springs from the same matter, and arises in the same process of evolution; so that it is difficult to see "why morality should be put above appetite, or reason above pleasure."

Now there is a juggle, and no very subtle juggle either, in the use of this word "above." Strictly speaking, it is a term of space; indirectly, or metaphorically, it is a term of classification; and as classification is a matter of convenience, it is hard to see why "above" and "below" should be denied to the Naturalist any more than to the Supernaturalist. Mr. Balfour is too clever not to perceive that, on the naturalistic hypothesis, "higher" and "lower" are really terms of value; and in ethics, as in political economy, value is determined by supply and demand. Appetite is not so rare as morality, and pleasure is not so rare as reason. What is most serviceable to the race, and at the same time least available, will always be regarded as most valuable. There is no reason, in what metaphysicians call the eternal fitness of things, why gold should be more valued than lead; it is the reasons that induce us to use gold for our coinage that make us place it "above" other metals. A higher utility gives a higher position in this case; and the higher utility of reason and morality to the human race at large, as compared with appetite and pleasure, gives them their relative positions in our ethical classification. A higher utility is really a wider and longer utility. There are circumstances in which an ounce of lead would be more useful than a ton of gold; there are also circumstances in which a little appetite would be worth any quantity of ethics; but these circumstances are exceptional, and do not affect the validity of the general law which they appear to contravene.

* Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research, vol. iii., p. 207.

Let us take another illustration from botany. The loveliest rose is supported by a stem, which is connected through a trunk with roots embedded in dirty soil. The rose cannot live apart from the stem, the trunk, and the roots; nor all of them together apart from the earth. In one sense, therefore, they are all on the same level. What is it, then, which gives the rose a "higher" position? Simply this, that it ministers more obviously to our gratification; not the gratification of one man here or there, but the gratification of all men with normal eyes and noses, in all ages and in all parts of the world. Mr. Balfour may depend upon it that no Atheist will ever value roses the less because controversial Supernaturalists cannot see why "one natural agent" should enjoy "a dignity or consideration not shared by all the others."

Mr. Balfour proceeds to deal with Determinism and Free Will in their ethical aspects. He appears to think that Naturalists universally teach Determinism, and that Supernaturalists universally teach Free Will; at least, the whole of his argument is based upon that supposition; and there was never a greater mistake. Mr. Balfour reminds his readers that, "on the naturalistic view, free will is an absurdity." Well, what was it on the view of John Calvin and Martin Luther? The fact is, whether you believe in God or in Nature, you are equally left to the reign of Necessity. Every logician has seen this. Those who have argued to the contrary have never understood the question.

Mr. Balfour, we should say, is not without at least a partial perception of the truth. He admits that "there is nothing in the theory of determinism which need modify the substance of the moral law," and that "no argument against good resolutions or virtuous endeavors can fairly be founded upon necessitarian doctrines." For which relief much thanks! But we soon find Mr. Balfour arguing that Determinism conflicts with the sense of personal responsibility. His ironical criticism, however, does not amount to an explanation. He does not tell us what he means by "personal responsibility." All through his book, indeed, he evades the "personal responsibility" of defining his terms. In the absence of definition on Mr. Balfour's part, we have only to remark that "personal responsibility" is just as real, and just as operative, if it is generated by the external influence of human society as if it were generated by the external influence of a supernatural ruler of the universe.

Mr. Balfour denies the Naturalist any rational devotion to Humanity.

> "Of the combination of causes which first converted a dead organic compound into the living progenitors of humanity, science, indeed, as yet knows nothing. It is enough that from such beginnings famine, disease, and mutual slaughter, fit nurses of the future lords of creation, have gradually evolved, after infinite travail, a race with conscience enough to feel that it is vile, and intelligence enough to know that it is insignificant. We survey the past, and see that its history is of blood and tears, of helpless blundering, of wild revolt, of stupid acquiescence, of empty aspirations. We sound the future, and learn that after a period, long compared with the individual life, but short indeed compared with the divisions of time open to our investigation, the energies of our system will decay, the glory of the sun will be dimmed, and the earth, tideless and inert, will no longer tolerate the race which has for a moment disturbed its solitude. Man will go down into the pit, and all his thoughts will perish. The uneasy consciousness, which in this obscure corner has for a brief space broken the contented silence of the universe, will be at rest. Matter will know itself no longer. 'Imperishable monuments' and 'immortal deeds,' death itself, and love stronger than death, will be as though they had never been. Nor will anything that is be better or be worse for all that the labor, genius, devotion, and suffering of man have striven through countless generations to effect."

But is not all this a greater impeachment of God than of Humanity? If this is all that God has been able, or willing, to do on this planet, he deserves not our worship, but our hatred or contempt.

G. W. Foote.

(To be concluded.)

Adhere to your act and congratulate yourself if you have done something strange and extravagant, and broken the monotony of a decorous age.—R. W. Emerson.

Digitized by Google

THE SUPERNATURAL NO GUIDE FOR MAN.

(Concluded from page 179.)

THERE are doubtless many persons who sincerely believe in the supernatural; but it should be remembered that belief is not knowledge. It is quite true that we have faith in much of which we have no actual knowledge, and in every-day life we are compelled frequently to exercise such faith. For instance, we believe in countries which we have never seen, and in the existence of persons with whom we have never come in contact. But such belief is not opposed to knowledge, because proof could easily be obtained; whereas the belief in the supernatural is, inasmuch as no one pretends that he knows what the supernatural really is. We should always be careful not to take for granted, without proof, that which is improbable. If a man asserted that one thing was in two places at the same time, we should not stop to ask for the evidence that he had to produce, because no amount of evidence could serve to substantiate as a truth that which experience has shown could not be. There are many subjects which no amount of testimony could prove, simply because the matter is of such a nature as not to admit of proof.

The same principle applies to the belief in the supernatural. A man may tell us that he has seen a miracle, and that, therefore, he knows from experience that the supernatural exists; and he brings a dozen persons to verify his statement. Now, the testimony may be unimpeachable, but the conclusion arrived at perfectly erroneous. The event which he describes may have happened, but how is it to be proved to be a miracle? The forces in operation in its production may be to him unknown, and, while his evidence may vouch for the fact, the cause must be a matter for inquiry. The assertion that the forces producing it were supernatural is a gratuitous one, and utterly opposed to everything that we know. Belief should have a rational basis, or it is wild and chimerical. Faith is good in its place, but it must always be confined within the sphere of knowledge. A man can have faith in that which he never saw, and perhaps never will see; but the thing in which he has faith must be a possible one, or his faith is misplaced, and he himself deluded. In our opinion, faith in the supernatural is an unreasoning faith, pre-supposing a knowledge which we do not and cannot possess, since a knowledge of that which may lie beyond nature is an impossibility. The sphere of faith is legitimate enough, but it is not a sphere distinct from that of knowledge, but one which arises out of it, and should never go beyond it.

Even if it could be demonstrated as a fact that Christ, as a supernatural being, existed about two thousand years ago, of what value would that be to us? Daily, on land and at sea, men, women, and children suffer agony, privation, and some die heartrending deaths; people are struck by lightning and consumed by fire, and Christ renders no assistance. The sick pine away, the widow is disconsolate, the fatherless weep, and the poor die through starvation, and yet the supernatural Jesus helps them not. It is of no avail to us to be told that centuries ago he raised the dead; what we need now is the power to improve the living, so that life shall be relieved of the many evils which at present so sorely oppress it. But supposing Jesus did exercise a supernatural power upon the dead, he did not select the best subjects for the operation. Had he raised from the dead such men as Confucius, Aristotle, Socrates, or Plato, the world might have benefitted by the resuscitation. But he left these great men in their graves, and raised objects of no intellectual importance to mankind. We hear nothing of their service to society after their resurrection; it was therefore a waste of energy, and indicated, upon the part of Christ, a lack of good judgment.

Besides, the use that we are told the supernatural is to be put to in the future is not either useful or cheering. When Christ comes to execute judgment at the last day, it is said, the sun will be darkened, and the moon will not give her light; the stars are to fall, and the very heavens are to be shaken. He is to come in the clouds in great glory, and gather his elect from the four winds of the earth; further, the heavens are to pass away, and the globe is to be burnt up, while all unbelievers are to meet with a fate terrible to contemplate. The beneficent character of the supernatural will be entirely destroyed if it is employed, as we are assured it will be, to raise all from the dead, and then save only a few, while the many are to be assigned to eternal misery. To an intelligent, humane mind it would appear better to let the whole human family sleep on for ever than to awaken them, and then to doom the great majority to perpetual suffering. To believe that there is a supernatural power capable of doing this may be possible to minds that have been hardened by a cruel theology; but a being who could perform such revolting deeds would, in our opinion, be a demon, and not a loving and merciful Savior. To picture a supernatural being who could design and carry out such a diabolical proceeding is an idea so odious that we wonder any rational creature can believe in it. But, unfortunately, the belief does obtain, and our duty is to point out its monstrous character, and thereby lessen, as much as possible, its pernicious influence upon weak and credulous minds.

But it is said that the belief in the supernatural inspires hope of everlasting happiness. Suppose it does, the fact still remains that the orthodox supernatural theory involves the dread of everlasting misery, and the further melancholy fact that only a few are to experience that happiness, and that the many are to endure the misery. If it is said that the hope of heaven influences people to be good, the answer is that, if so, selfishness is the basis of such goodness. That is not the highest moral teaching that could be inculcated. Right doing should not be the result of the desire for merely personal reward in another world, but it ought to be prompted by the wish to improve the general community in this life. If Christianity has not the force to ensure upright conduct without its doctrine of rewards and punishments, then the faith is placed on a lower level than the old Pagan morality. Dean Milman acknowledges that, when the belief in the supernatural was at its height in the Roman Empire, morals were inferior to those that existed in the best Pagan times. And we have no doubt that, if the belief in the supernatural ceased to-morrow, virtue would still remain, and human affections would continue to adorn and elevate the race. Good deeds spring from the natural, not from the supernatural; and useful actions originate on earth, they are not importations from heaven.

Our aim is to urge upon mankind the importance of confining their attention to the known and knowable, and those are only to be found, so far as we can discover, within the domain of the natural. To indulge in idle speculations as to some supernatural power is to divert men's minds from the real business of life, and to take their attention from the study of those subjects which have proved useful in aiding the civilisation of the world. The belief in the supernatural is not only no guide to us, but it has led to strife, divisions, persecutions, and insanity; and further, even among men of intellect, it has caused incorrect thinking, loose reasoning, the drawing of false conclusions as to the facts of life, and the substitution of wild imagining for the realities of existence.

The believer in the supernatural talks of Jesus as though he had more than human love for man, and a superhuman desire to effect his welfare. The Secularist maintains that the same high and lofty feeling of philanthropy, of brotherly love, may beat in the human bosom, and needs only wise and patient cultivation to bring forth golden fruit. He declares that there can be no grander impulse, no loftier, more animating incentive, than an honest, steadfast desire to benefit the whole human race.

CHARLES WATTS.

Real Hell.

As the idea of a material heaven was doubtless borrowed from natural phenomena such as mirages, so too was borrowed the idea of a material hell from the volcanoes found along the Mediterranean, where the idea had birth. Affidavits have been made by sea captains and sailors, representing they saw the Devil bearing into a belching volcano a lost soul. E. G. Squier, in his Nicaragua, in describing the volcano of Masaya, says: "Some confessors have imposed no other penance than to visit this volcano." He informs his readers that priests are in the habit of taking their parishioners to the summit of an open volcano, with the surging molten lava in full view, and then telling them of the undying misery of those doomed to spend an eternity writhing in these lurid flames.—Progressive Thinker.

Digitized by Google

WONDERS IN GOZO.

Is any reader so ignorant as not to know where Gozo is? I confess with shame that I never heard of the place until I read an article in the Month for January, 1893, giving an account of the wonders which have recently occurred there. The obscurity of the place, however, is no argument against the wonders. Many educated Romans in the first century had probably never heard of Nazareth or Capernaum. Lourdes and Knock were not celebrated until the Virgin and the pilgrims found them out. Miracles are usually done in a corner, and for them, as for kissing, a dark corner is best—Galilee or Gascony, or Mayo or Malta, near which island Gozo is situated, and, like it, afflicted by the scourge of English heresy, "a horrible monster dwelling at the very doors of the inhabitants, meeting them at every turn, and which they detest with a passion which rules their lives."

Notwithstanding this sacrilegious environment, the suitability of the Gozitans to receive a divine revelation is indisputable. In their goodness (shown by their poverty and hatred of heresy) "there is a simplicity which is beautifully child-like, and which probably attracted Our Lady's favors to them." Now—as of old—the faith of a child is the passport to the kingdom of Heaven.

In this pious island there is, or was in 1883, a little chapel containing a picture of the Assumption of the Virgin, "borne up on the heads of three cherubs," and steadied by "four angels, two on either hand." The place is so remote that Mass was rarely said there; but the country people, especially the women, went in to pray occasionally. "Lord bless their little hearts, they thinks it's all right, and don't know no better; but they're the victims o' gammon," to quote the words of Mr. Weller, senior.

One of these "victims" in Gozo, named Carmela Grima, was passing the sanctuary in June, 1883, "reciting certain favorite prayers," when she heard a voice saying, "Come! Come! Come! Come to-day, for you will not be able to come back for a whole year." She accordingly entered the chapel and knelt before the picture, from which the same voice spoke again, and said: "Say three Hail Marys in honor of the three days that my body remained in the tomb." The words do not seem remarkable, but it is presumption to judge a message from heaven. . . . . Carmela repeated the invocations, and, as no more was said, she departed, and, in obedience to the "heavenly vision," did not return for a year. What is more remarkable in a woman, she for two years kept silence about what she had heard.

This silence, which, as the writer in the Month remarks, "has something of the supernatural about it," she at last broke. "She was moved to open her heart to a youth of holy life, named Francesco Portelli, who shared her devotion to Our Lady. When she asked him whether he ever heard anything unusual while praying before her picture, during his frequent visits to the sanctuary, he told her in confidence that on six different occasions Our Lady had spoken to him from her picture, and had exhorted him to have great devotion to the 'wounds on our Lord's shoulder, caused by bearing the Cross.'"

Francesco was not able to keep a secret so well as Carmela. His hints concerning the loquacious picture, which, however, was somewhat monotonous in its communications (like the four beasts in the Apocalypse, Rev. iv. 8), caused "vague rumors to spread themselves abroad." "A spontaneous, irresistible burst of devotion ran over the whole island like wildfire . . . . the field adjoining the chapel was black with the kneeling multitude." It was now high time for the Church to "regulate the devotion"—i.e., to secure its share of the spoil. Carmela and Francesco were examined before the Bishop. The woman readily told what she had heard or imagined. The youth was very reticent, "and confined himself to briefly answering the questions put to him on oath." The difference is significant. Carmela was a sincere fanatic, crazed with hard work, praying, and fasting. Francesco was a clever rogue, who knew that his testimony would be more valuable if reluctantly given. On a subsequent occasion, in 1890, Carmela disclosed to the Bishop further revelations, "several of which are reported to take the form of prophecies." These, however, "remain sealed and locked up from public view" (no doubt awaiting their fulfilment), like the utterances of the "Seven thunders" in the Revelation (Rev. x. 4).

"The graces, both spiritual and temporal," which, of course, have followed, "disprove the theory which may occur to the English reader that the story was a fabrication" (or a delusion?) of Carmela and Francesco. "Of these graces—the cures professedly miraculous—a register has been kept by order of the Bishop, after careful examination on oath." "Therein may be found many a beautiful story of faith and answer to prayer"—e.g. The first person cured was Francesco's mother, Vincenza Portelli, in November, 1886. She suffered from heart disease and dropsy in an aggravated form. The doctors pronounced her incurable (cf. Luke viii. 43). Her three pious sons—hers was a praying family—"recited the Rosary, and promised to light a lamp before the holy picture." The old lady was restored to health. It should be observed that this is one of the best authenticated miracles on record. It was deposed to on oath by Vincenza and her family. No doubt the doctors were questioned. The heart disease might be a nervous malady, curable by imagination; but what of the dropsy? Finally, it is published to the world within ten years, while all the parties, or at least most of them, are alive. Can we believe in the cures of Peter's wife's mother, and Publius's father (in the same neighborhood, Acts xxviii. 8), and deny that of Francesco's mother?

Somewhat less marvellous was the case of Maria Cutajar. She was in great grief because she could not nurse any of her children. She promised to offer her gold earrings at the shrine, and to visit it herself, fasting on bread and water. She felt an instantaneous change come over her, and clasped her infant to the breast. The milkman came no more to the Cutajar's door.

Our Lady of Gozo, like her son, could cure at a distance. "Some of the oil from the lamp, which was now always kept burning before the picture, has been the chief vehicle of Our Lady's healing power." An application of it to her teeth cured Maria Cefai of lockjaw. Carmela Sultana, whose hand was withered and paralysed, was cured by it. Saverio Busuttil regained the use of his limbs, Angela Borg of her eyes. Maria Caruana broke her hip; the doctors could not set it to rights on account of her age, but a prayer to a picture of Our Lady of Gozo cured her in a moment. Margherita Bartolo, a girl of twenty-seven, had suffered for eleven years from an internal complaint. The doctors despaired of curing her, and advised her to go to Valetta to undergo an operation. Margherita, however, like the anonymous woman in the Gospel, had spent her all on the physicians, and determined to try the Virgin, who was only five miles off. She had nothing to offer but "a Mass with a Sermon" (this does not seem a high bid), but it was enough; her cure was instantaneous.

"The number of ex votos (waxen effigies of arms, legs, eyes, babies, intermingled with crutches, surgical appliances, etc.) which cover the walls of the little chapel tell a tale of favors received, far more graphically than can any written record." (Where are the offerings of those who were not cured?) But the most pleasing signs of gratitude are the cases, in every part of the chapel, densely packed with gold earrings and other gold ornaments, "to be sold for the expense of building the new church which is soon to replace the present sanctuary." It was with such trinkets that Aaron, thirty-three centuries ago, constructed the Golden Calf. Has the world grown wiser in three millenniums? The delay in erecting the new church has been caused by the avarice of the owner of the land on which the old chapel stands, who thought he should share with Mother Church the "unearned increment" caused by Our Lady's communications. There is always a Judas or an Ananias in such cases. The law-courts, however, have decided for the bishop, and the only fear now is that the coming publicity may tarnish the isle "which is still radiant with the touch of Our Lady's choice." The footsteps of a Zola may one day pollute the sacred soil of Gozo.

One thought more, as the preachers say. Where does this record of folly, fraud, and fabrication appear? In a high-class monthly periodical sold at half-a-crown, and presumably read by the richer, if not the most intelligent, Catholics. Do the accomplished Jesuits who edit the Month believe in such stuff? I trow not. Why, then, do they publish it? I turn to the G. O. B., and find the answer in the words of an old Freethinker called Jeremiah, whom the authorities of his time disliked so much that they threw him into a dungeon: "A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land [Surely not wonderful, Jeremiah, however horrible]; the prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means; and my people love to have it so." So it is still. For one educated Catholic who would smile at the restored hip of Mrs. Ceruana, and the renewed lactation of Maria Cutajar, half-a-dozen "simple people" will be builded up in their most holy faith.

Digitized by Google

While supernatural religion exists there will always be fools who believe in miracles, and rogues to supply the demand. The wonders will be repeated which have occurred in Gozo, and Knock, and Lourdes, and Loretto, and Galilee, and Judea. JAMES A. RICHARDSON.

THE CONSOLATIONS OF BELIEF.

WE often hear the serene confidence of the believer contrasted with the anguish and doubt which are supposed to rack the mind of the sceptic. But what must be the thoughts of an earnest and honest Christian when he contemplates the fate of those near and dear to him in the light of the Christian doctrines of heaven and hell? Here is the testimony of one of the ablest commentators upon the New Testament, Albert Barnes. He says: "I confess, when I look on a world of sinners and of sufferers, upon death-beds and graveyards, upon the world of woe, filled with hosts to suffer for ever and ever, and see my friends, my parents, my family, my fellow citizens; when I look upon a whole race, all involved in this sin and anger; when I see the great mass of them wholly unconverted, and when I feel that God only can save them, and yet he does not do it, I am struck dumb. It is all dark, dark, dark, to my soul, and I cannot disguise it." As an honest man, Albert Barnes could not get away from the evidence that the doctrine of eternal torments was taught in the New Testament, as he believed, revealed by God; and he was equally unable to conceal that it was not in accordance with the dictates of his own reason and conscience. Where is the perfect serenity of such a faith? There was more serenity in those callous divines who frankly threw over all the humaner feelings of nature, and believed that with God they should rejoice in the torments of the non-elect. In Mr. Wheeler's Christian Doctrine of Hell there are many examples of such pious utterances, and I have culled a few more samples of Christian barbarity from the sound old orthodox sermons of the past:—

"When they (the saints) shall see how great the misery is from which God hath saved them, and how great a difference he hath made between their state and the state of others who were by nature, and perhaps by practice, no more sinful and ill-deserving than they, it will give them more a sense of the wonderfulness of God's grace to them. Every time they look upon the damned it will excite in them a likely and admiring sense of the grace of God, in making them so to differ. The sight of hell's torments will exalt the happiness of the saints for ever."—Rev. Nathanael Emmons' "Sermons," xi.

"The happiness of the elect in heaven will, in part, consist in witnessing the torments of the damned in hell. And among these it may be their own children, parents, husbands, wives, and friends on earth. One part of the business of the blessed is to celebrate the doctrine of reprobation. While the decree of reprobation is eternally executing on the vessels of wrath, the smoke of their torment will be eternally ascending in view of the vessels of mercy, who, instead of taking the part of those miserable objects, will say, 'Amen, hallelujah, praise the Lord.'"—Rev. N. Emmons' "Sermons," xvi.

"When the damned have drunken down whole draughts of brimstone one day, they must do the same another day. The eye shall be tormented with the sight of devils, the ears with the hideous yellings and outcries of the damned in flames, the nostrils shall be smothered, as it were, with brimstone; the tongue, the hand, the foot, and every part, shall fry in flames."—Rev. I. Ambrose's Discourse on "Doomsday."

"The godly wife shall applaud the justice of the judge in the condemnation of her ungodly husband. The godly husband shall say amen to the damnation of her who lay in his bosom. The godly parents shall say hallelujah at the passing of the sentence of their ungodly child. And the godly child shall from the heart approve the damnation of his wicked parents who begot him, and the mother who bore him."—Rev. Thomas Boston's "Fourfold State," p. 333.

What is this but saying that people in heaven will be a great deal worse than those on earth? Who can derive consolation from such a faith? The idea of a hereafter in which but one sentient being, and that the worst that ever lived, should be tortured without purpose, because, if "for ever," it must be purposeless, is repugnant to any humane mind.

The contemplation of hell for any we love is calculated to drive people mad. It has led many into asylums. If people honestly believed such a doctrine, they ought to go mad. But they never realise hell as for themselves, or for those they care for. Hell is always for the uncared for, for the sinners; while the believers are the saints. As long as the doctrine endures, it will be a proof of the essential barbarism of Christianity, and Christians will do well to be modest in dilating upon the consolations of their religion.

UNCLE BENJAMIN.

GEMS FROM LICHTENBERG (1742-1799).

(Selected and translated from his works by F. MALIBRAN.)

The works of Lichtenberg can serve us as the most wonderful divining-rod; wherever he makes a jest, there lies hidden a problem.—Goethe.

MATERIALISM is the asymptote of psychology.

The wooden saints have done more than the living ones.

I have played at times the Atheist in Society merely: exercitii gratia.

God created man in his image, probably means that man created God after his image.

Doubt everything at least once, even if it were the proposition: 2 and 2 makes 4.

Is not our conception of God but merely personified incomprehensibility?

There are plenty of people who can believe everything they choose to believe; what happy creatures to be sure!

I would willingly sacrifice a part of my life in order to get to know what has been the average position of the barometer in Paradise.

The world will get to grow so acute that it will become as ridiculous to believe in God as to believe in ghosts.

. . . . he was a clever youth, he was hardly six years old, yet he could recite the Paternoster backwards.

The almighty must be very fond of us, indeed; see how often he visits us in the shape of rain!

It is to the thoughtless veneration which people have for old laws, old customs, and old religion that we owe every evil in this world.

The death of a gifted and talented man produces upon me the greatest sorrow, because the world has more need of such men than heaven.

Man is, perhaps, half spirit and half matter, just like the polypus is half plant and half animal; the strangest creatures are to be found there where extremes meet.

I think it will be hardly possible to prove that we are the work of a supreme being, rather than that of an imperfect one, who created us as a pastime.

Is it not strange that most people fight so willingly for a religion, and yet live so unwillingly after the precepts it teaches?

I have read Heydenreich's Letters on Atheism, and I must admit that, contrary to the author's intention, the letters written by the unbelievers appear more powerfully written than those of the believers.

Already, for many years, I have thought this world might be the production of a subordinate being, and I have not been able to shake off this idea.

The men who invented the absolution of sins through latin formulæ are responsible for the greatest part of the corruption in this world.

It is really astonishing how we have come to base our belief in God upon obscure conceptions of causes about which we know and can know nothing, because all conclusions based upon an originator of the universe will never be anything else but anthropomorphism.

Dialogue: A.—"The nuns have armed themselves against unchastity not only by a vow, but also by strong iron bars on their windows." B.—"Quite so; but there would be no difficulty in making them break their vow, provided we succeeded in breaking the iron bars."

Digitized by Google

What I believe forms so many Deists among thoughtful and intellectual people is the unchangeable laws of nature. The more a man makes himself acquainted with these laws, the more evident it appears to him that what now takes place has always taken place, and that it has never been otherwise, and that miracles no more happen now-a-days than they did in the past.

POOR PRICE HUGHES!

The Rev. Hugh Price Hughes was announced to preach at Holy Trinity Church, Rockferry, on Tuesday evening week. It also occurred to two waggish Secularists, of Liverpool and Birkenhead respectively, that that very evening would, to them, be a most opportune occasion for paying the aforementioned place a visit for the purpose of making a critical survey of its architecture as it presented itself to them exteriorly. So there they betook themselves, but not before it had dawned upon their economic minds of the advisability of killing as many birds as they could with the one shot. And, miraculously to relate, it crossed their mental horizon of the existence of four hundred odd pamphlets that were safely ensconced in a cupboard on the premises of the Liverpool Branch of the N.S.S. Pamphlets not dealing with the various styles of architecture, by the by, but copies of the famous one written by the President of the N.S.S. on "The Atheist Shoemaker and the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes," etc.

In due time they arrived at their destination, secured the assistance of some youths, and thereafter addressed themselves—one and all—to the distribution of the said pamphlets to those bent on listening to the flowery rhetoric of the rev. gentleman. The pamphlets were gracefully and, apparently, gratefully received, the men carefully lodging them in their inner pockets, and the ladies deftly folding and afterwards securely clutching them, after the manner they do their purses—of course, going to church, they had wisely left them at home. Consequently, the pamphlets were the sole occupants of that safe and enviable position.

During the distribution one noteworthy incident transpired. Two men in clerical garb approached the side entrance, one being no less a personage than the notorious reacher of the evening; and will it be credited that the distributor at that entrance, with a temerity worthy of the Victoria Cross, tendered the rev. gentleman himself a copy! Whereupon he—well, meekly declined with a doleful shake of the head. The gentleman accompanying him, unparson-like, gracefully accepted a copy with the query: "Is this from Foote?" "Yes." "Thank you; we expected this."

I have not heard how the rev. gentleman acquitted himself that evening; but it requires no extraordinary acquaintance with physio-psychological science to aver that the knowledge of the fact of the distribution of that pamphlet among his audience would unduly involve a tremendous expenditure of energy in the endeavor to keep it from occupying the focus of his consciousness, even in the delivery of a sermon. Imagine the poor man's case as from the pulpit he espies from the pockets of the men the edges of the pamphlet jeeringly peering at him, and, worst of all, in their entirety from the graceful grip of the ladies, loudly mocking him. For well he knoweth the contents thereof. The singing has ceased, and the last note of the organ has slowly faded away. The text he is giving out, and, while doing so, has a haunting fear that, as he proceeds with the delivery of his sermon, he will be disconcerted by that blessed pamphlet, twisting itself, as it were, from beneath his pressure of it to infraconsciousness. He makes a desperate effort, and, hurrah—succeeds; and joyously he dashes along with a sweep of perfervid pulpit palaver. But, alas! a reactionary moment is at hand, and with lightning rapidity that pamphlet has twisted itself and proudly soars on the crest of the uppermost wave; then, in consciousness, and as a consequence, disarranging all his oratorical toilette. Another supreme effort at pressing it down; but again it is quickly uppermost, until, in sheer desperation, he exclaims with Macbeth, "Take any shape but that." Let us commiserate the poor man, for, verily, the way of the transgressor is hard.

Notwithstanding their visit, my friends are unable to acquaint me of the style of architecture of Holy Trinity Church.

John Roberts.

The world has been soldier-ridden and priest-ridden to death—the soldier in the saddle, and Jack priest on the crupper.—Puck.

Whoever is afraid of submitting any question to the test of free discussion is more in love with his own opinion than with truth.—J. S. Mill.

ACID DROPS.

Religious nuisances are hard to suppress; witness the longevity of Salvation Army bands. At Bingera, in New South Wales, the Salvation Army bangers and tootlers were voted "the boss nuisance in the district," and the municipality instructed John Plunkett, their inspector of nuisances, to take action against them when they next made a row in the streets. He did so, and the Salvationists went to law and got big damages against him; but he wouldn't pay, and the municipality wouldn't pay for him, so he is in prison for contempt of court. Happy Salvationists! The world is all before them where to choose.

Mr. James Monro, late Commissioner of Police in London, is engaged as a medical missionary in Nuddea, Lower Bengal. His antecedents cause the natives to look upon him with suspicion. Some even regard him as a Government spy. Such is the reward of piety in Bengal!

Jesse Hitchcock, driver of the Post Office mailcart from Leicester to Loughborough, has been committed for trial on a charge of stealing packages. When arrested he had eaten two packets of bridecake, and was just reading a hymn-book. Jesse Hitchcock's literary tastes will be accommodated if he happens to reside for some time in prison.

Providence works with blind impartiality. During the recent earthquake in Sicily a church fell in while the people were worshipping, and a number of persons were buried in the ruins. We commend this incident to the attention of Christians.

The Faversham Guardians have unanimously requested Miss Burgess to resign. She is the matron's assistant, and she was requested to go to the Workhouse chapel one Sunday and take charge of the girls during service. This she refused to do, and she explained to the Guardians that she had not entered their service as a Churchwoman, and that she disliked the Church service. She declined to give any assurance that she would not make a similar refusal if occasion should arise again. She has therefore to look for another situation, and we hope she will find one where the employers do not hire their servants "body and soul."

That delightful répertoire of religious trash, the Christian Herald and Signs of the Times (March 28), makes the late F. Douglass out to have been a very good Christian. It also gives a story of "An Infidel's Death-bed." The nameless infidel, however, was not converted. "He had," says the writer, "found it hard work to stupefy conscience, but he persisted in his effort, and he did it; and, as far as is known, continued an infidel up to the time of his death, like Voltaire, Tom Paine, and Shelley; and in such a case he is now with them, crying out for a drop of water to cool the tip of his tongue, in the abode of eternal despair." Well, even the Christian Herald has learnt that not all infidels are converted. Some day it may find they are not crying out either in the abode of eternal despair.

The correspondence in the Church Times on "Why Working Men Don't Come to Church" has brought out a letter from W. Carlile, the head of the Church Army. He believes in street services, and, above all, in the power of the magic lantern, "summer as well as winter," as a means of arresting the sinner and instructing the saint. "Make religion an entertainment" seems to be the modern prescription.

The Liverpool Post is responsible for the statement that a boy who is a member of a church choir, and whose father is superintendent of a Sunday-school, gave the following account of the origin of the Catholic Church:—"The Catholic Church was established by Henry VIII., who started the Reformation against the Church of Rome. Henry did not really wish for a reformation, but only started it to frighten the Pope, with whom he had quarrelled."

Our Liverpool contemporary appears to see that a little profanity is relished by ordinary readers. We see put amongst a column of its "Facts and Fancies" a story of a village Sunday-school boy in a farming district, who was asked by the minister how Jacob knew it was Joseph sending for him from Egypt; whereupon the boy replied: "'Cause he see'd his name on the waggons."

Prebendary Reynolds might have cautioned teachers against reading to juveniles the savage details of the wars of the Israelites, and such statements as "the Lord is a man of war." The Peace Association has been seeking to substitute a manual of their own on peace and war for the worship of naval and military heroes cultivated in some school books, but they will hardly effect their object while the Old Testament fills juvenile minds with notions of blood and battle.

Digitized by Google

Dr. Bilsborrow, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Salford, has been replying to Dr. Moorhouse, the Anglican Bishop of Manchester, on the question, "Was St. Peter Bishop of Rome?" He adduces the usual questionable authorities, and reveals the weakness of his case by contending that "Indeed, St. Peter might have held the Roman Episcopate, and held it to his death, without residing in Rome for one hour." The spectacle of these rival bishops belaboring one another on behalf of the claims of their rival churches is, however, an exhilarating one, and some Freethinkers may be found to exclaim: "Go it, Bilsborrow! Pitch in, Moorhouse!"

One point insisted upon by the Bishop of Salford, in his controversy with the Bishop of Manchester, is that "no writer, Pagan or Christian, Rationalist or Infidel, Protestant or Catholic, can be quoted who ever denied that St. Peter was Bishop of Rome, until the time of the Waldenses, in the thirteenth century." But what nonsense is this. The Bishop would find it a hard task to strictly prove that the legends are of much earlier date than their denial, and there is the undoubted fact that, when the Christian Church was triumphant, there was no criticism upon its pretensions, or the critics and their writings were ruthlessly put out of the way.

The Huddersfield Examiner reports a "powerful and impressive" sermon at the Buxton-road Wesleyan Chapel by the Rev. G. Talalun Newton, of London, on "Elijah, the National Reformer." This godly hero of the man of God invited 450 priests of Baal to an open-air exhibition of miracles, jeered at them because they had no petroleum to make their sacrifices blaze, and, not satisfied with his victory, pursued his defeated rivals, shouting, "Let not one of them escape"; and thus roused the mob to slaughter the whole 450 in cold blood. Truly a fine hero and "National Reformer" to extol in the nineteenth century!

Hugh Price Hughes had a paragraph in last week's Methodist Times on "The Genesis of Great Ideas." We wish he would explain the genesis of that great idea of the "Atheist Shoemaker."

Mr. Hughes announces that the High Church party has captured not only Mr. Tom Mann, but also "Nunquam" (Mr. R. Blatchford) of the Clarion. We regard this announcement with very great suspicion. Mr. Hughes's "trustworthy" sources of information are generally of the opposite character.

A Welsh correspondent of the Daily News says: "All sorts of dirty dodges are being resorted to in furtherance of the anti-Disestablishment crusade in Wales. The Nonconformists, it is represented by the sponsors to these memorials, are about (if they can) to pull down the churches; tithes are to be appropriated for the erection of theatres; and churchyards are to be 'destroyed.' One lady actually had the audacity to ask a parishioner to sign 'the petition' without reading it, and she naively checked any thirst for knowledge in this respect on the part of her victim by covering the text with her hand."

Religious people, who identify the cause of God with their own, are nearly always unscrupulous. The names of Sunday-school children and ignorant old women were largely used to hinder Charles Bradlaugh from taking his seat as representative of Northampton.

The special correspondent of the Daily News says a postmaster had been asking one woman why she had signed, and it seemed they had told her that, if this Bill passed, any husband leaving a little money to keep his widow could never be quite sure she would get it.

The special correspondent of the Daily News says: "'How are you getting on with the petition?' a young Churchman was asked here in Aberayron, a day or two ago. 'Oh, getting on well. Get a good haul every morning when the tramps turn out from the workhouse.'"

Mr. Howell is cited as saying: "I hear that the arguments used in urging the people to sign the petition are that the churches will be demolished, the graveyards ploughed up, and that Popery will establish itself throughout Wales."

"I wished to be buried by the side of my wife in the churchyard," said one man. Somebody had convinced him that, if Disestablishment really came about, church and churchyard, with all their solemn associations, would be swept away.

"I am told," says this special correspondent, "that Cardiganshire families are all expected to raise, at least, one pig and one parson. It is, no doubt, a tradition that ought to be rejected as out of keeping with the reverence due to the cloth. Nevertheless, it affords a piquant indication of the feeling between Wales and her parsons."

A Lyons Roman Catholic paper, called La France Libre, has had a series of violent clerical attacks on the Freemasons of that city. Lists of names have been given, and employers have been exhorted to have nothing to do with those who were thus denounced. Among the persons thus brought into prominence is an organist at one of the Lyons churches, and the result was that he was dismissed from his employment.

The organist brought an action for libel against the paper, claiming 3,000 francs damages. A printer who is also aggrieved in the same way has brought an action to recover 2,000 francs. The case, which attracted to the court a large gathering of priests and friends of the clerical party, resulted in a verdict for the plaintiffs for the amount claimed, but judgment was postponed.

The Rev. W. Gilby Smith, rector of Dorsington, near Alcester, Worcestershire, was missing from his home, and, as a result of a continued search, a note was found which, it is stated, shows that the rev. gentleman contemplated suicide by drowning himself in the Avon. Subsequently he was traced to the river, a considerable distance from the rectory, and footmarks were seen on the river bank. The jury returned a verdict of "Suicide whilst temporarily insane."

The Rev. W. Jackson, vicar of Monks Kirby, was fined the usual penalty of five shillings at Lutterworth Sessions for not sending his boy regularly to the elementary school, of which he is manager. He pleaded that his boy was so advanced that regular attendance was unnecessary; but the Bench held that he must obey the same rules and regulations as people of lower station so long as his son remained in an elementary school.

More mejums in trouble! A dispatch from Dora, Ind., to the Chicago Record says: "Jacob Garnett's residence was the scene of great excitement when 'Professor' Henderson, of Anderson, and 'Doctor' Small of this city, spirit mediums, were exposed, and a free fight ensued. Garnett is a Spiritualist, and had invited Henderson and Small to hold a circle. The audience was treated to various materialisations, while tables and chairs danced, and spirits addressed those present in poor English. The little town was interested, and last night the attendance was larger than ever. During a spirit conversation Wilbert Teagarten struck a match, disclosing Henderson talking through the large end of a tin horn ten feet long, while Small capered around the room. The circle broke up, furniture was overturned, and Small and Henderson were knocked down and the tables piled on them; but they finally escaped."

The Rockford Register Gazette reports that William Whipple, of Sycamore, one of the wealthiest farmers in that vicinity, recently became violently insane. He had been attending a series of revival meetings at the M. E. Church at Charter-grove, and became impressed with the idea that he was the prohibition candidate for president. He was adjudged insane, and taken to Elgin. Revivals are as dangerous as brandy for the manufacture of insanity.

The Dundee Weekly News reports that the Glasgow police have received information of the death of William Dobbie (62), missionary, which occurred a few days ago under tragic circumstances. While kneeling in prayer at a prayer meeting he suddenly expired.

The Wesleyan missionary of Colon, the Rev. C. M. Clark, sends out a circular asking for subscriptions and gifts to a Boys' Brigade, the object of which is the advancement of Christ's kingdom by means of military drill. It is a truly Christian method, and shows the skill of men of God in raking in the shekels.

A Daily News leader mentions that in the diary of a young lady who went to a course on Biblical criticism were found these words: "The Elohist says, 'Oh, how awfully dull this is! Do look at that girl's bonnet.'" The Elohist certainly never said such things, and the remarks apparently attributed to him are a nineteenth-century gloss.

The clericals continue active in their opposition to the Religious Freedom Bill in Hungary. In the debate in the Upper House the number of votes for and against the Bill was level. The President gave his casting vote with the Ayes, in order that the clauses of the Bill might be debated. The first two paragraphs of the Bill were accepted by small majorities. When it came, however, to the important chapter removing all disabilities from persons professing no religion, the old fight began over again, and this section of the Bill was rejected by a majority of eight votes, a fact which will, no doubt, lead to the Bill being thrown out. The Liberal party in Hungary are decided that, if Religious Freedom does not mean this, it has very little meaning.

Digitized by Google

The concern of the Church for the real elevation of the people was displayed by the attempt of the Archbishop of Canterbury to thwart the new Sunday Bill, brought before the House of Peers by Lord Hobhouse. This Bill did not propose to repeal the intolerant Act of George III., but only to amend it, so that lectures on science, ethics, or literature might be delivered if not for the pecuniary benefit of the promoters. To this modest amendment the Primate would not give his assent, and the probability is that Lord Hobhouse's well-meaning Bill, if it ever reaches the Lower House, will do so in a maimed and lamed condition. Meanwhile Secularists go on with lectures as usual.

The late gale was accompanied with much loss of life, and God's houses seem to have specially suffered. In London the cross on the top of St. Thomas's, at Shepherd's Bush, toppled over. At Wolverhampton four pinnacles of St. Peter's were blown down. At Peterborough two pinnacles of St. John's, and at Newport Pagnal three pinnacles of the parish church tower, were destroyed. At Cambridge one side of the Salvation Army barracks was blown in, and at Nuneaton the church was much damaged.

A portion of the roof of St. Michael's Church, Bath, was blown off, and the pinnacle of St. Bartholomew's Church was blown down, and the front part of the building was so much damaged that the service had to be discontinued. At Ironbridge, Shropshire, a portion of the Wesleyan chapel was wrecked, and the service had to be suspended. Stirchley Church was also seriously damaged.

The parishioners of St. Botolph have been much enraged because they are powerless to secure the appointment of the curate, the Rev. T. S. Henrey, as vicar. The right of appointment has been disposed of by the Dean and Chapter of Westminster to a speculator, and they have treated the claims of the parishioners with scant courtesy.

The Bible belief in witchcraft and possession by devils survives in Clonmel, co. Tipperary, Ireland. Michael Clery, a cooper, and a number of other men, stand charged with having caused the death of Clery's wife. It appears the poor woman was suffering from influenza, which her husband and others believed was the effect of being bewitched. To expel the evil spirit, she was forced to swallow a decoction obtained from a medicine-man, and then carried to a fire and held over it by the men until she was so terribly burnt that her death ensued.

From the North Bay Times, which is sent to us from Canada, we cut the following instance of the effects of overmuch religion: "D. J. McLure, a highly-respected farmer, about three miles from Brampton, and his two brothers, have gone insane. They are in jail. It is thought to be a religious craze, for only recently they killed all their hogs and threw them away, believing the end of the world was near, and that food would not be required long."

A paper on "Ancient Chaldean Temples," in the Echo (March 25), says that in the early sacrificial code there is no mention of the sacrifice of animals, but only of such things as wine, fruit, bread, etc. In this respect it contrasts advantageously with the code of Jehovah, which was a system of wholesale slaughter. Judaism has been described as a religion of blood and thunder, in which the devotee offered the one for the fear of the other.

Lord Halifax, the President of the English Church Union, has been to Rome to confer with the Pope on the subject of Reunion. The E.C.U. boasts of 34,876 members, of whom 4,262 are clergymen. But these do not represent the English people, or even the Anglican Church, and their adherence to any scheme of union means precious little. What is noticeable is that, as the Church gets more Papistical, while the State and people remain Protestant, the time for the separation of Church and State palpably draws nearer.

The widow of Father Butler, D.D., Roman Catholic chaplain to the forces at Devonport, claimed his pension for herself and two sons. As she produced proofs of legal marriage, her claim was allowed. The English Churchman remarks: "We wonder are there many Roman Catholic priests in England who have imitated Father Butler's example."

One Christopher Jabarra, of Damascus, a gentleman who has visited England, has started at Cairo an Arabic weekly, entitled Shahadatul Hag (the Evidence of Truth), designed to unite Christians and Mohammedans on common ground. Commenting on this, the Crescent remarks that almost all the existing Christian creeds and Islam are as far apart as the North and South Poles. The Unity of God is the central doctrine of Islam, while the Christians are Trinitarians. Islam teaches that every child born is innocent at its birth, though liable to err in after years; but Christianity teaches the innate depravity of the whole race at birth from "original sin." Islam teaches that faith and good deeds combined together merit salvation; while Christians believe all good actions to be "filthy rags," and that salvation can only be obtained through the vicarious atonement of Christ.

The Crescent concludes by asserting that Christianity and Islam can never become one until Christians recant their blasphemy upon the one and only God by giving him as partners in his inheritance "the man, Christ Jesus," and the mysterious "Holy Ghost."

People make the Bible teach anything they please. Here is Richard Nagel, M.D., saying in the Vegetarian (March 23): "Whilst in the Old Testament (the Jews' Bible) meat as food held dominion, the New Testament (the Bible of the Christian) teaches a non-flesh diet." To make out a case, he refers to the Essenes, who are not as much as mentioned in the New Testament, and omits all reference to Jesus taking fish, meat and lamb at Passover; or to his saying, in a vision to Peter, when all manner of animals were let down from heaven in a sheet, "Rise, Peter, kill and eat."

At the suggestion of the Bishop, Wednesday in Ember week was observed in the Truro district as a day for intercession for home missions. There was a special service in Truro Cathedral, when the Bishop himself preached. In the course of it he told how, on a recent visit to his university, he noticed a tutor returning the salute of various foreign undergraduates. He (the Bishop) asked, "Who are those?" and the answer was, "They are Chinese and Japanese and Indian gentlemen, who come to study and to take a degree here." "Are they clever?" he asked. "Yes," he said, "they are clever with our cleverest." He said, "Do they become Christians here?" "No," the tutor replied, and his voice was still sadly ringing in his (the Bishop's) ear; "No, they are less Christians when they leave than when they come. When they come, Christianity is with them an open question; it is shut for ever when they leave us, for they have seen the Christian life in England, and they say, 'God forbid that we should be Christians.'" Jesus is reported as saying, "By their fruits ye shall know them."

Church buildings and sites, in London alone, are calculated to represent a monetary value of twenty millions. Yet all this property is not only untaxed, but is totally unavailable to the public, who pay for it, at any other time save on Sunday during the hours of "Divine service." Surely public churches should be open as places of rest at all hours, and public churchyards be universally turned into gardens or recreation grounds.

We regret to hear that Mr. J. M. Headley's shop, at 21 North Howard-street, Yarmouth, has been the scene of a destructive fire. Mr. Headley is a well-known purveyor of advanced literature, and a wag in the local Independent remarks that "the Socialist and Secularist literature, with which the shop was well stocked, was hot enough to cause spontaneous combustion." Mr. Headley informs us, however, that the fire really broke out in the part of the shop where he kept the Christian literature. He suggests that the hell-fire in that department caused the conflagration.

Christian meetings "for men only" are only too common, but the Rev. G. A. Wilson, of Fuel-lane Chapel, Sowerby Bridge, has hit upon the new idea of meetings "for women only." We are puzzled to understand, however, what claim he has to address such meetings. Sydney Smith said that there were three sexes—men, women, and clergymen. Mr. Wilson, perhaps, addresses the ladies as a member of the third sex.

The meeting "for women only" was held on Sunday afternoon. Mr. Wilson's address is not reported. Reporters are generally males, and they were excluded by the terms of the invitation. In the evening, however, when Mr. Wilson spoke to both sexes, he warned his hearers against "wolves in sheep's clothing," the chief of which, he said, was Agnosticism. Mr. Wilson appears to regard himself as a kind of sheep-dog. We hear his bark, but we have little dread of his bite.

Jesus Christ, by the way, did not include sceptics among the wolves in sheep's clothing. The parties he denounced were gentlemen who made long prayers and devoured widows' houses.

A few Sundays ago a clergyman in Ireland made the following announcement: "Next Sunday, in this church, the Rev. Mr. ——— will renounce the errors of Rome for those of Protestantism."

Digitized by Google

Mr. Foote's Engagements.

Sunday, March 31, Hall of Science, 142 Old-street, London :—7, "New Light on the Old Book."

April 7 and 14, Hall of Science; 17 and 18, debate at New Brompton with the Rev. A. J. Waldron (C.E.S.); 21, Glasgow.

May 8 and 9, debate at Derby with Mr. Lee (C.E.S.).

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Mr. Charles Watts's Engagements.—March 30, Blyth; 31, Newcastle-on-Tyne. April 7, Sheffield; 14, Liverpool; 21 and 28, Hall of Science, London. May 5, Glasgow; 12, Dundee.—All communications for Mr. Watts should be sent to him (if a reply is required, a stamped and addressed envelope must be enclosed) at 81 Effra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

Quiz.—A report of Mr. Conway's discourse on St. Patrick appeared in the Echo of March 18.

A. Mitchell.—Shall appear. We are pleased to hear that you have gained us three new subscribers during the past month at Sheffield.

Vincit Veritas.—Sorry to hear the Reading Branch is so quiescent. We quite believe there is plenty of good material for a strong society there. With respect to the other matter, you will perhaps read what we may have to say in our next issue.

W. Lake.—Thanks for the reference, and for your expression of sympathy.

G. Cruddas.—The pamphlets you inquire about were destroyed in the fire at our premises some years ago.

E. P. Schofield.—The best edition of Mosheim is Murdock's translation, edited by Soames, in 4 vols. Maclaine's edition is untrustworthy; it is, indeed, a rhetorical paraphrase of Mosheim, who is nothing if not "judicious."

W. Manley.—Thanks for the remainder. The matter is attended to.

T. Ramsden.—See paragraph.

T. Wise.—(1) You misread our article. We did not say that Mr. Bradlaugh had never lectured on Freethought in Northampton, but only that he did not (and wisely) lecture on Freethought there while he represented the city in parliament. (2) Nor did we say that there were only three Freethought halls in this country. There are several besides those you mention. What we said was that there were only three Halls of Science. (3) Pleased to hear from such an old Freethinker as yourself.

J. M. Headley.—Glad to hear that the Freethinker "sells like wildfire in Yarmouth."

W. Finedon.—(1) Sorry to hear of your illness and other untoward circumstances. We believe the Secular Hymn Book published at Leicester is now out of print. You could learn for certain by applying to Mr. Holyoak, Bookstore, Secular Hall, Humberstone-gate, Leicester. (2) Mr. Foote has had too many worries of late to find time for literary work outside the Freethinker. He hopes to enjoy a little more freedom in the near future, and will then complete the Bible Romances and other writings on which he was engaged before the N.S.S. business made such terrible demands upon his time and energy. (3) The comic bill you enclose appeared in our columns many years ago. (4) We should like to see more Secular activity at Southampton. A visit from Mr. Foote would perhaps do some good. We wish a few friends there would see whether a decent hall is obtainable on a Sunday.

C. E. Smith.—Mr. Wheeler has shown us your note. We intend to deal with the Professor Romanes matter shortly. The sketch you refer to has not been overlooked. We are waiting for an opportunity.

O. N. Weld.—Dr. Allinson was a duly-qualified medical practitioner, and is so still as a matter of fact, though not so according to the medical register. The doctors' trade-union, which has a legal charter, struck his name off the list because his heresies made other members uncomfortable. He fought the question on principle, and at great expense, though he was foredoomed to lose. You should read his essays, to which you make reference, before you pronounce a judgment.

A. Hittite (Austria).—The Jews may be nefarious in your experience, but, after all, they are human, and largely what Christians have made them. In attacking their charter we seek to neutralise the danger of which you speak.

William Balck, 8 Celia-road, London, N., is very anxious to organise a Secular Band, which might be serviceable at Freethought gatherings in London. It is an excellent object, and we hope it will be successfully realised. Mr. Balck has heard from some Freethinkers, but he would like to hear from more. Correspondents should state what instrument they play.

G. C. Walker.—Victor Hugo was not an Atheist; he might rather be described as a Pantheist.

J. R. Carpendale, 24 Dundas-street, Bradford, supplies this journal and all other Secular publications.

F. Bull.—Taylor's Diegesis would be of assistance. You can obtain it of Mr. Forder at 28 Stonecutter-street. Mr. Foote intends to develop his lecture on "Did Jesus Christ Ever Live?" into a good-sized pamphlet.

C. Dodd.—Mr. Roberts had sent us an amusing account of the matter. The clergyman who asked for a second copy of our "Atheist Shoemaker" pamphlet has probably ceased to be an admirer (except in the old sense of admiration) of Mr. Hughes.

E. Smedley.—(1) Pleased to hear your friends were so delighted with Mr. Foote's lectures at Nottingham. (2) Mr. Foote will be happy to arrange for a publication of his debate with Mr. Lee. He has already written to that effect. (3) Members of the N.S.S. have a perfect right to sell books by authors whose opinions they dissent from. A Freethought bookseller would be considered a bigot if he would not sell the Bible. (4) We know nothing about the man Kesteren.

Papers Received.—The Faith—Two Worlds—Liberty—Open Court—Secular Thought—North Bay Times—Echo—Progressive Thinker—Twentieth Century—Liberty—Illustrated Church News—Crescent—P. C. Supplement—Liberator—Truthseeker—Newcastle Chronicle—Nottingham Guardian—Boston Investigator—Daily News—Freidenker—Der Arme Teufel.

Friends who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish to call our attention.

Lecture Notices must reach 28 Stonecutter-street by first post Tuesday, or they will not be inserted.

Letters for the Editor of the Freethinker should be addressed to 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Correspondence should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

Orders for literature should be sent to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

The Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the publishing office, post free, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 10s. 6d.; Half Year, 5s. 3d.; Three Months, 2s. 8d.

It being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will receive the number in a colored wrapper when their subscription expires.

Scale of Advertisements.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 4s. 6d.; half column, £1 2s. 6d.; column, £2 5s. Special terms for repetitions.

THE HALL OF SCIENCE.

Under this heading, I have first of all a word to say with respect to the late libel action. The defendants, Snow and Cook, against whom a verdict was obtained in the Court of Queen's Bench, appeared to think that the day of reckoning could be postponed until W. R. Bradlaugh had begged enough money to settle the bill. But in this they were mistaken. Messrs. Harper & Battcock, the solicitors for the plaintiff, after waiting longer than justice required, at length issued an execution against John Snow, and the whole of the damages and taxed costs, amounting to £150, was soon in the hands of the sheriff.

The action taken in this matter will probably damp the ardor of our calumniators. It appears to have struck consternation into the ranks of the more reckless missionaries of Christian Evidence. Some of these gentry report that I am asking for £300 to defray my own expenses. Of course I am doing nothing of the kind. I am sufficiently rewarded by the punishment of the malefactors.

. . . . . .

The Club at the Hall of Science has ceased to exist. The committee handed over the keys to the Board of Directors on Monday. Whatever social element is introduced, under a possible re-organisation, will be entirely confined to members of the National Secular Society, and will be under the direct control of the Executive.

Some unpleasantness occurred before the Club gave up possession, which occasioned me a good deal of trouble. The committee, however, were not responsible for it; and I hope I shall be spared the necessity of referring to it again.

. . . . . .

Mr. R. O. Smith has not favored me with any communication on the subject of my last week's announcement, but as I hear that he professes a willingness to bring the matter to a friendly settlement, I have had a meeting of the Board of Directors called for Thursday (March 28), at which he will have an opportunity of submitting an offer for consideration. On Sunday evening I lecture at the Hall of Science, after a considerable absence; and I shall make what will probably be an important announcement respecting the future of the institution. I invite the London members of our party to be present on this occasion.

G. W. FOOTE.

Digitized by Google

SUGAR PLUMS.

Blow hurricanoes! Spout cataracts! cried old Lear out on that "blasted heath." The weather on that occasion must have been something like it was at Bristol on Sunday. A heavy storm raged for several hours, doing considerable damage in the city. Of course it had some effect, though not so great as was expected, upon Mr. Foote's morning and afternoon audiences. There was a capital audience in the evening, however; and a very respectable audience, too—not in the cant sense of the word. The lectures were all highly appreciated, and very warmly applauded. At the close of the day's proceedings a meeting of members and friends was held in the ante-room, and Mr. Foote talked over with them the condition and prospects of the Branch, with reference to a more vigorous propaganda in the immediate future.

Mr. Foote had the pleasure of speaking to several Freethinkers at Bristol who had been Christians before his debate with the Rev. J. M. Logan. That debate set them thinking, and thinking led to the usual conclusion. Those who see no use in public debates should ponder this fact. We can quite understand why Christians should regard discussion as unprofitable, but we cannot understand how any Freethinker can share that opinion.

Mr. Foote lectures this evening (March 31) at the London Hall of Science, his subject being "New Light on the Old Book." Prior to the lecture Mr. Foote will have to make a very important announcement.

Mr. Charles Watts had an excellent audience at the Hall of Science, London, last Sunday evening. Mr. Rowney presided, and made a brief, but pleasant, speech. A short debate followed the lecture.

Mr. Watts lectures to-day, Sunday, March 31, morning and evening, in the Amphitheatre, Northumberland-road, Newcastle-on-Tyne. In the afternoon Mr. Watts will debate with Mr. M. Lynn, the official of the local Christian Evidence Society, upon the question, "Secularism: Is it an Adequate Philosophy for Mankind?" We are informed that Mr. Lynn is an able and gentlemanly opponent; our friends may therefore fairly expect a good debate. Mr. Watts will also lecture on Saturday night, March 30, at Blyth, his subject being, "The Bible in our Public Schools."

On another page our readers will find an announcement by Mr. Charles Watts with respect to Mr. Putnam's visit to England. We have not the pleasure of Mr. Putnam's personal acquaintance, though we look forward to it with much expectation; but we have no doubt that he is all Mr. Watts represents him to be, and we hope he will receive the warmest possible welcome from the Freethinkers of old England. Branches of the N.S.S. should communicate early with Mr. Watts in order to secure a visit from Mr. Putnam during his brief stay in this country.

Mr. C. Cohen concludes his six months' mission at South Shields on March 31, and will then be open for other engagements. He lectures at Newcastle during April. Circulars have been sent out by the Newcastle Branch for funds to carry on this month's mission with vigor and success. Friends who have received copies are invited to return them—with subscriptions or guarantees—to the Branch secretary as soon as possible. There may be other readers of the Freethinker in the district who would like to support this particular enterprise. Their donations will be very welcome, and will be expended judiciously.

Mr. Edward Truelove, the veteran Freethinker, is a little older than Mr. Gladstone, and still moves about with a freedom that might be envied by men who are ten years younger than himself. Mr. Truelove sends us a copy of the thirty-first edition of The Elements of Social Science, of which he has sold 79,000 copies since 1854; and with it he sends his best wishes for our health and happiness. It is the fashion of Christian apologists to talk as though the National Secular Society is somehow responsible for this book—which is a monstrous absurdity. There are opinions expressed in it, especially in regard to marriage, from which we strongly dissent; but the writer, whoever he is, writes with earnestness and sincerity as well as with knowledge and power, and his views must be attacked with the weapons of reason, not with denunciation and calumny.

The Nottingham Branch opens its new hall (situated at the corner of Woodland-place, Upper Parliament-street) to-day (March 31). The annual meeting will be held at 3.15 sharp. A tea will be provided (price 6d.) at 5, to which all members and friends are cordially invited. In the evening Mr. Hooper will lecture as announced. We hope there will be a good attendance.

The Battersea Branch holds its quarterly tea to-day (Sunday, March 31) at 5.30, followed by musical and dramatic entertainment and dancing. Strangers specially invited. Tickets are 6d. each, and can be obtained at the hall and at outdoor lecture. The general meeting for election of officers, etc., takes place on Thursday, April 4, at 8 sharp, when all members should attend. Those in arrears with their contribution should pay up at once, as the Branch requires funds for outdoor work.

George Macdonald, in his lively "Observations" in the Truthseeker, has the following: "Editor C. C. Moore sees things as through blue grass—darkly. Speaking in his paper, the Blade, of a book he wrote while (unjustly) in jail, he observes that, apart from Flexta, a law book, and Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, his is the only book composed under similar circumstances. So Mr. Moore, though a professed exponent of Rationalism, has not heard of Thomas Paine in the Luxembourg prison writing Part I. of The Age of Reason; of Robert Taylor in Oakham jail producing his Diegesis and Syntagma; of George William Foote in Holloway 'goal' engaged on A Prisoner for Blasphemy; nor of D. M. Bennett in the Albany penitentiary devoting his leisure hours to a series of letters entitled Behind the Bars, and composing the two-volume octavo, The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times." Editor Moore's advocacy of Rationalism might be rendered more coherent by familiarity with its history. He should add knowledge to his understanding, and mingle thought with his literary labors."

Mr. Macdonald is under a slight misapprehension. Unlike Paine, Taylor, Carlile, and Bennett, Mr. Foote had no opportunities of writing in prison. A Prisoner for Blasphemy was written after he emerged from Holloway.

A Brahmin, writing in the Forum on "Christian Missions," says: "Let the aim of the missionary be to civilise and educate the savages and barbarians. To India send machinery instead of missionaries. Millions of people are kept back for want of education owing to intense poverty. Send good schoolmasters, mechanics, and scientists, and teach your practical arts to our people. This will cost you less than the missionaries."

F. M. Holland, writing in the Open Court on Byron, mentions the poet's irreligion. He says: "For him the Church was only a Niobe, weeping over her perishing tithes. The main theme of 'Cain, a Mystery' is the difficulty of reconciling the sin and suffering in human life with the goodness of 'the prayer-exacting Lord.' The first draft of 'Childe Harold' denied the probability of immortality (see note on canto ii., stanza 8), and the poet's own philosophy, if he had any, may be detected in the speech ascribed to the demon in 'The Deformed Transformed':—

> This is the consequence of giving matter
> The power of thought. It is a stubborn substance,
> And thinks chaotically, as it acts,
> Ever relapsing into its first elements.

Byron's irreligion was increased by indignation at the support of despotism everywhere in Europe by the clergy."

Mr. J. W. Beeton has a capital letter in the Lynn News, defending Mr. Robert Green, one of the local Guardians, who has been so vehemently denounced for lending a pauper a copy of the Freethinker. It is a well-written, outspoken letter, and should set some of the Lynn people thinking.

Another good letter on the "History of the Bible" appears in the Kidderminster Times from the pen of Mr. W. F. Griffiths, a local Secularist, who makes shoes and has time for thinking. Such letters in local newspapers must be beneficial to our movement.

Hudson Tuttle, one of the leading Spiritists in America, says in the Progressive Thinker, of Chicago: "While Atheists are noted for upright lives, the most despicable criminals are superstitious believers in a personal God, and the most terrible crimes recorded in history have been committed in furtherance of God's worship."

The Ironclad Age, of Indianapolis, has entered on its fortieth year. This is a good age for a Freethought paper, and in this respect the Ironclad Age stands second only to the Boston Investigator. We congratulate Mrs. Monroe Power on the way in which she sustains her father's paper. The Age is always lively, though it does let the cranks meander somewhat freely through its pages.

To look for history in myths is like searching for solid ground while pursuing will-o'-the-wisps. One may stumble here and there on a firm footing, but swamps and fogs and darkness are what are met with for the most part.—Dr. E. C. Maclagan, "Scottish Myths," p. 252.

Digitized by Google

AN AMERICAN VISITOR.

I AM pleased to inform the readers of the Freethinker that next month Mr. S. P. Putnam, the popular Freethought lecturer and writer of America, will visit England. He will sail from New York on April 24, and he comes as President of all the nationally-organised Freethought Societies of the United States. I have known Mr. Putnam for many years, and I have always found him as genial in private as he is able in public. Next to Colonel Ingersoll, Mr. Putnam is the most eloquent speaker upon the American Freethought platform; while, as a poet and writer, he has won a high reputation on the other side of the Atlantic. His last work, Four Hundred Years of Freethought, which I have on sale for him, is a proof of his literary skill and industry. I should like him to have a good reception from the Secularists of this country.

Mr. Putnam will remain with us about three months, and during that time he wishes to lecture in all our principal towns. I have undertaken to arrange his lecturing tour, and shall be glad, therefore, to hear from friends throughout the country who are desirous of having the services of our American visitor. All applications for lectures from Mr. Putnam must be addressed to me at 81 Effra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

CHARLES WATTS.

THE BIBLE: GRAND, IF HUMAN; ABSURD, IF DIVINE.

If the English be in English saved or damned,
And the Dutch be lost or sanctified in Dutch,
It would seem—unless Jehovah's scheme is shammed—
That with ancient tongues we needn't bother much.

Is it likely that Jehovah had inspired
The original of what is called "His Word,"
And neglected all its copies, nor desired
That translators be inerrable? absurd!

But the Word's as full of errors as of speaks,
Whence conflicting, inter-damning creeds arise;
Hence, these parson-priest-and-god-degraded books
Are but human, therefore precious in our eyes.

G. L. MACKENZIE.

SOME LITTLE-KNOWN FREETHINKERS.—VI.

JUDGE STRANGE.

THOMAS LUMISDEN STRANGE was one of the most earnest of the band of Freethinkers who gathered round Thomas Scott. He was an illustration that a good Christian makes a good Freethinker. When a young man, he experienced "conversion," and, belonging to the straitest sect of religionists, the Plymouth Brethren, it is almost a wonder that he ever got outside the wall of that exclusive body. But he was ever an earnest truthseeker, and his very earnestness brought him to the light. Educated as a barrister, he threw himself into evangelical work, and so set was his mind to religious subjects that in 1852 he published a work entitled The Light of Prophecy: Being an Attempt to Trace out thereby the Coming Judgments and the Promised Glory. Only last year there were published extracts from this work, entitled Light on the Future. The publisher says that some time ago his brother gave him the work, printed at the Wesleyan Mission Press, Bangalore, 1852, and adds: "I cannot find out who T. L. Strange was, or if he is at present alive; but I have little doubt he would be well pleased to find in England an echo of his wonderful work." The curious thing is that the publisher lives at Malvern, where Judge Strange resided during the latter period of his life. He also wrote Observations on Mr. Elliott's "Horæ Apocalypticæ," in which he sought to refute the historical system of interpreting the Apocalypse. Mr. Strange was in the Indian Civil Service, and was animated by a desire to bring the natives to his own faith. He obtained a judgeship in the High Court at Madras, which he occupied about thirty years, and he published a Manual of Hindoo Law, Madras, 1856 and 1863.

Among the natives of India he was bound to receive some impressions adverse to the exclusive claims of his own faith. He found a people essentially moral and religious, yet moved by an ancient faith entirely different from his own. In the preface to his work on The Sources and Development of Christianity he says: "At one time my duties in India involved the charge of a jail and attendance at the execution of criminals. Trials calling for the sentence of death had to be referred to the superior court at Madras, for whose benefit the whole of the examinations had to be translated. There was always thus in these cases a considerable interval between the trial and the sentence and its execution. I was then a devout Christian, and used to take advantages of my opportunities to 'bring' the prisoners who were in these risks 'to Jesus.' They were ordinarily of the uneducated class; but one was otherwise, having been a servitor in a pagoda. He had professed himself influenced by what I had put before him; but when we met at the gallows he proclaimed his trust to be in Ráma, and not in Christ. He died earnestly, calling upon his fancied mediator and savior." This set the judge thinking. He continues: "What are we to say to such a phenomenon? Ráma's character is painted in the most exalted colors, and is described in a history considered to be an embodiment of divine truth. Ráma was a god incarnate, devoting himself for the good of mankind. What is there to induce a follower of his to relinquish him for just such another form, presented to him from a foreign quarter? And do a man's eternal prospects depend upon his critical selection of the true history? Happily the means are ample for our extrication from any such dilemma, and, as I may acknowledge to have been the case in my own instance when I was involved in these meshes, it is simply ignorance of the true character of the materials before us, coupled with a vein of superstition, inherited, working round us, and cultivated in us from early youth, that forges those bonds in which mankind are held to the prevailing baseless expressions of belief."

The complete breakdown of Mr. Strange's faith occurred from reading, in an orthodox work, an attempt to reconcile the facts of palæontology with the Bible statement that death came into the world through the sin of Adam. Looking into the matter, he learnt that the earth's strata also contained evidences of man's existence for some immeasurable time before the period assigned to Adam. The fall of the first Adam necessarily shook the position attributed to the second Adam. He says, in his introduction to Contributions to a Series of Controversial Writings issued by the Late Mr. Thomas Scott (1881): "I proceeded to make as close and as full study as my opportunities gave me of the Biblical statements, and especially of the representations of Christ as a real personage; and, as I proceeded, every figuration broke down before me, and appeared even traceable to remote Oriental heathen sources." He closely examined the alleged evidences, and came to the conclusion that "there is a very decided gap between the occurrence of Christianity and the era asserted for the facts alleged as those on which the system has its foundations. It follows that the facts themselves, so bound in an historical expression of them at a particular period, cannot have been enacted, and that the creed has otherwise to be accounted for." Truth thus discovered, Judge Strange was not slow in communicating it to others. For Mr. Scott's series he wrote a number of tracts, afterwards collected as Contributions to a Series of Controversial Writings. This volume contains "How I Became, and Ceased to be, a Christian," "A Critical Catechism," "The Bennett Judgment," "Clerical Integrity," "Communion with God," "The Exercise of Prayer," "The Christian Evidence Society," "An Address to all Earnest Christians," "The Portraiture and Mission of Jesus," "The Christian Evidences," "The Pauline Epistles," "Scripture and Science," and "The Supreme Power in the Universe." His larger and more important works are The Speaker's Commentary Reviewed, a criticism of dishonest orthodox defences; The Bible: Is it the Word of God? a valuable and an extended examination of the fetish books in the form of a dialogue between a pundit and a student; The Legends of the Old Testament, in which their similarity to Hindu and other legends is pointed out; The Sources and Development of Christianity, in which he traces the era of Christianity, its constituents, its phases, the construction and integrity of the Christian records, and the Gentile moulds of Christianity; The Development of Creation on the Earth, in which the teachings of science are contrasted with those of Scripture; and What is Christianity? a historical sketch embellished with a chart illustrating the interval between the alleged time of Christ and that of the alleged evidence. His opposition was not only to the miracles and alleged facts of Christianity, but also to its principles. In regard to its central doctrine of atonement, he said: "It is impossible that the sin of one man can be imposed upon another. It is by a fiction, not to be realised by the mind, that the transference is to be. Can blood of any sort wipe away sin? Sin has to be repented of and turned from, and can be got rid of in no other manner." Judge Strange was a diligent student and writer, and ever an earnest advocate of practical piety in life and conduct. He died at Norwood on September 4, 1884, at the age of seventy-five. Major-General Forlong was appointed his literary executor.

J. M. WHEELER.

Digitized by Google

THE MEANING OF ALL FOOLS' DAY.

A JEW—a real, live, wicked Jew—asked me yesterday the following innocent-looking question: "Why was the first day of the fourth month called April Fools' Day?" In the simplicity of my heart I imagined Abraham's descendant was thirsting for information, and I answered with all the glad fervor of one who hopes to add to a fellow-creature's stock of knowledge: "I have access to an encyclopædia; I will look up the subject, and let you know in a day or two." A wave of Hebraic hilarity dashed over the counters and shelves of the shop in which I stood, and intuitively I knew that the children of the circumcision were guying me, acting like the forty and two youths who made fun of a bald-headed old gentleman of ferocious proclivities; but I looked in vain for the two lady-bears to come to my rescue. Doubtless the ursine bearers of divine wrath were near by; but, as I did not by cursing invoke the merciful Jehovah's aid to avenge me of the Jews who were mocking me, the good little lady-bears went to bed supperless that eve. When the laughter at my expense subsided, I asked the Jew who had questioned me to answer his own conundrum.

Adjusting his toga with all the grace of a Roman orator, and inhaling with pardonable pride the aroma of admiration which floated from the eyes of his compatriots, my Jew thus delivered himself:—

"You Christians" (I did not like being called names, but I held my peace); "You Christians commemorate the 25th of December as the day upon which one-third of your God was born. You also assert that the mother of this fraction of a Deity was a holy virgin. A very large crowd of you profess to believe that this young lady of immaculate virtue, having been on somewhat intimate terms with another one-third of the Deity, possessed great influence over the mind of the one-third-in-chief of Deity, and every request made by her to this chief ever was and ever is granted. This is more or less the belief of you Christians. Now, let me tell you how we figure this thing out. Mary, alias Mrs. Joseph (Miriam the lagchim, as we call her), on the evening of March 31, nearly 2,000 years ago, compromised her character by a serious indiscretion. Fearful of consequences and to shield her good name, the prudent virgin gave out the next morning (April 1) that one-third of Deity, being a little less than kin, had been rather more than kind to her on the previous night. Many believed this absurd story; and Mary and her most intimate friends laughed at their folly, and among themselves called these credulous dupes April Fools. But some nine months later, towards the end of the year, when these believers came to do poojee (homage) to the 'Consequences,' the foresightful virgin-mother congratulated herself on having lied so sagely on the first day of the fourth month. Now you know why the gullible, who are ready to believe any cock-and-bull story told them, are, on a certain day, called April Fools." Another peal of mocking, Hebraic laughter was heard at the conclusion of the silly joke, and I walked away sore displeased. WINNIPEG.

—Secular Thought.

A gentleman was conversing with an Idaho minister whom he happened to meet on a railroad train. "You have been preaching in the West for several years?" he inquired. "Yes, for the last twenty years," replied the minister. "You know," continued the Eastern man, "how we sometimes read of ministers in your country frequently having to go into the pulpit with a revolver to use in maintaining order in a turbulent congregation. Is there anything in it?" "Oh, yes, I have known ministers to do it, but I consider it entirely unnecessary." "That was always my idea, too." "Oh, yes; yes, altogether unnecessary," returned the preacher. "Besides, it always seemed to me in very poor taste for a minister of the Gospel, preaching peace on earth and goodwill towards men, to go around tied to a hip cannon. Yes, a gun is wholly uncalled for," continued the good man, as he took the roll of sermons in his left hand and reached down with his right and extracted a 14 in. knife from his boot-leg; "yes, wholly uncalled for. Give me this bowie in my boot-leg and a good pair of brass knuckles and a hymn-book in my coat-tail pocket, and I will agree to carry the Gospel to any man that ever looked through a collar. The shooting-iron has had its day as a method of evangelisation."

A FEW QUESTIONS FOR THE GOSPEL TWISTERS.

SAY, if 'twas truly God's design
To keep men ignorant as swine,
  Not knowing good from evil,
Why didn't he just harm that tree
With spines as thick as bristles,
Then hedge it round upon the ground
  With cactus and bull-thistles?

Why plant that murderous tree at all,
So dangerous to the health of all,
  And to himself so galling?
And then, why give that fierce command
He knew they could not understand,
With all its mystic meanings, and
  So sure to cause their falling?

And what about the serpent wise—
Was he a god in that disguise,
  Or devil in a snake's skin,
Who dared dispute that threat of dying,
And charge his God with wilful lying,
And every word he said denying—
  Was it a scheme to make sin?

Why did not God that serpent choke,
Or was it but a funny joke?
  'Twould seem so in our version.
When neither right nor wrong they knew,
He wished to see what they would do,
And test his handiwork when new,
  All for his own diversion.

If God in justice judges sin,
Why did he not at once begin
  With his first pets in error;
First stand that serpent on his head,
His tail tied to a limb till dead,
For telling truth, must it be said,
  A monument of terror;

Then call his children to his knee,
And give them both a pardon free?
  It seems so very odd like,
When right from wrong they could not tell,
How was it that they could rebel,
And was it right to give them hell
  For trying to be God-like?

S. M. BAYARD.

Daniel Isaac Eaton in the Pillory.

We recently referred to the punishment of Eaton in the pillory for selling Paine's Age of Reason, a punishment which evoked Shelley's splendid Letter to Lord Ellenborough. In Crabb Robinson's Diary, under the date May 26, 1812, is the following: "Walked to the Old Bailey to see D. I. Eaton in the pillory. As I expected, his punishment of shame was his glory. The mob was not numerous, but decidedly friendly to him. His having published Paine's Age of Reason was not an intelligible offence to them. I heard such exclamations as the following: 'Pillory a man for publishing a book, shame!' 'Religious liberty!' 'Liberty of conscience!' Some avowed their willingness to stand in the pillory for a dollar. 'This a punishment? this is no disgrace!' As his position changed, and fresh partisans were blessed by a sight of his round, grinning face, shouts of 'Bravo!' arose from a new quarter. His trial was sold on the spot. The whole affair was an additional proof of the folly of the ministers, who ought to have known that such an exhibition would be a triumph of the cause they meant to render infamous."

Obituary.

IT is with sincere regret that I announce the death of Mary, the beloved wife of John Hume, of Willington, at the age of fifty-two, having been an invalid for a great number of years. She was laid in her last resting place at Willington Cemetery, March 20, 1895. As Mr. Hume is a Freethinker of a noble type, and greatly respected by all who have the pleasure of knowing him, it was his desire to have a Secular Burial Service over his lamented wife, which was ably and impressively conducted by our friend, Michael Stitt, of Crook. Many persons, having for the first time heard our Service, were greatly pleased by the beauty of expression it contained.—J. C.

The destroyers of the old are the creators of the new. As time sweeps on the old passes away, and the new in its turn becomes old.—Ingersoll.

Digitized by Google

BOOK CHAT.

The reminiscences of the late well-known scientist and Freethinker, Jacob Moleschott, have been published by Emil Roth, of Giessen. The book is entitled Für meine Freunde (For my Friends), and concerns itself rather with his early life in Holland and Germany than with his later days in Italy. It gives interesting particulars of many noteworthy men, including Humboldt, Feuerbach, Gervinus, Strauss, Georg Forster, and Renan.

* * *

We have received some Truth Seeker pamphlets, which are issued under the auspices of the editor of the monthly bearing that name. One is on "Secularism," and is from the pen of the editor himself. Mr. Grange writes with force and ability, and his pamphlet deserves a wide circulation. Mr. C. Cohen writes on "The Decay of Belief." His pamphlet is full of good matter, presented with interest and perspicuity. Mr. Sam Standring chooses the curious title of "Christ and Ally Sloper." Each pamphlet has a recognisable portrait of the author. The price is one penny.

* * *

M. Tarde, who is already favorably known by his works on Criminology and Sociology, has issued, through Messrs. Alcan, a new work on La Logique Sociale. M. Tarde connects sociology with psychology, comparing society to the brain. He finds in the laws of imitation and invention, which, after all, are much like the biological laws of inheritance and variation, the threads of social logic.

* * *

Homœopathy: All About It, by John H. Clarke, M.D. (Homœopathic Publishing Co.), gives in short compass a number of arguments in favor of this treatment. Without entering into controversial matter, we can well believe that any treatment that minimises the action of drugs is likely often to be beneficial.

* * *

The third edition of Professor Geikie's Great Ice Age has just been issued. He does not give in to Sir William Dawson's labored attempt to reduce the antiquity of man, but contends that he lived in the interglacial epoch, and that there is a wide gap between palæolithic and neolithic man.

* * *

A biography of the late Rev. Dr. Crosskey, by the Rev. R. A. Armstrong, B.A., will shortly be issued from Birmingham by Messrs. Cornish Brothers. Dr. Crosskey was a leading light among the Unitarians, and altogether a liberalising influence in Birmingham.

* * *

The Path I Took, and Where it Led Me, is an autobiography by a Monmouthshire farmer, who, it appears, is now over eighty years of age. Mr. G. J. Holyoake has revised the manuscript, which gives some interesting particulars of religious life in the early part of the century. The author, fully convinced of the unsuitability of the clergy as moral guides, exhorts his fellows to examine all they are taught by the light of reason.

* * *

Sir Arthur Helps once wrote a very able novel, entitled Realmah, in which he sought to depict primitive man. M. Armand Charpentier has gone a step farther, and in Le Roman d'un Singe describes the emotions of an anthropoid ape who is almost a man.

* * *

Mr. R. Bruce Boswell, in his interesting Footprints of the Devil in Our Own Country (which is not a religious production), shows the connection between the Devil and the old Pagan deities. Among places associated with the Devil in the British Isles he mentions the Devil's Island, which frowns over Muckross Lake, Killarney; a Devil's Glen in Wicklow, as well as in Wales; the Devil's Point at Plymouth; the Devil's Water, a tributary of the Tyne, near Hexham; the Cave of Devils at Little Orme's Head; the Devil's Pit, at Cadgewith, Cornwall; a Devil's Hole in Jersey, and another near Lough Erne, in Ireland. On Marlborough Downs there is a dolmen or cromlech known as the Devil's Den; and at Castleton, in Derbyshire, is a cavern called the Devil's Cellar. To find the Devil's Kitchen we must go to Llyn Idwal, in North Wales; to mount his Staircase one must visit Glencoe; and his Chimney is within an easy walk of Cheltenham.

* * *

A second and enlarged edition of Speeches by Charles Bradlaugh has just been published by A. & H. Bradlaugh Bonner (63 Fleet-street). The added matter includes a fine address on the Irish question, delivered at New York in 1873. Mr. J. M. Robertson has enriched the volume with some very useful annotations. The price is five shillings, and the book should have a place in the library of every Freethinker and Radical who can spare the money to purchase it. We ought not to close without a word of praise for the remarkably fine portrait which serves as frontispiece.

* * *

The posthumous works of the late Dr. Norman Pearson, author of National Life and Character, are being collected by Professor H. A. Strong. They consist of numerous essays on political and social subjects, and of poetry.

WHERE RIDICULE COMES IN.

You ask me why I ridicule the "holy name of God."
But what does "holy" mean, my friend, and who in heaven is God?
And where is heaven? and where is hell? and are they very far?
Until you answer me these things I "dunno where you are."

You say I ought to speak with awe on what the crowd believe;
That is, that I should "look respect" while laughing up my sleeve
At all the little legends which through age have won repute.
Why, really, friend, you'd have me act to earn a taste of boot.

You tell me that I ought to speak with awe and bated breath
About the Eden story and the origin of death,
And of the curse of sorrow which on mankind had been wrought,
While many men had lived and died in ages more remote.

You surely would not have me bolt the fairy Babel tale,
Nor that which tells how Jonah found a lodging in a whale,
Nor that of how Cap. Joshua made sun and moon stand still,
Nor yet that one where Moses struck a rock and struck a rill.

They all are fairy stories, and tho' millions may be gulled
Into belief that they are true, withal my doubt's unlulled,
For numbers of believers do not make a tale more true;
The tales are still ridiculous, whate'er they seem to you.

You never catch me laughing at the sayings pure and sage
Which shine like gems among the trash upon the sacred page
Of Bible or of Vedic hymn, of Sûtra or Shih-King;
But when it comes to rubbish—why, I'll laugh like anything.

THE GABERLUNZIE.

PROFANE JOKES.

Sunday-school Teacher—"What is faith?" First Pupil—"Faith is believing in the superintendent's stories." Second Pupil—"Believing what you know isn't true."

Grandpa—"Well, Willie, you have been to church, haven't you?" Willie—"Yes, sir." "Well, what can you tell us about it?" Willie—"Why, sir, the man that sat in front of us had ears that wasn't alike."

Minister—"So you say that you saw some boys out fishing Sunday, Bobbie? I hope you did something to discourage them." Bobbie—"Oh, yes, sir. I stole their bait."

"Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray the Lord my soul to keep;
If this were not a folding-bed,
I'd take all risks myself," she said.

Aunt (poetically)—"Ah, what is more beautiful, more sublime, than the tolling of the church bells upon a Sabbath morning! What happy thoughts it brings us!" Nephew (practical)—"You bet it does, aunt! Just as soon as a fellow hears them he knows that it's Sunday, and he can turn over and sleep all day if he wants to."

Parson Whangdoodle Baxter, of the Thompson-street Blue Light Tabernacle, on arriving at his place of worship one Sunday morning, was surprised to find no one present but Sam Johnsing, the sexton. "What de debbil am de matter dat dar's nobody heah?" "Nobody heah bekase dar's a notice in the Freeman's Journal dat dar would be no sarvice bekase ob de disunwellness ob de pasture." "Did dat fool niggah editor put dat notice in his paper for a fac'?" "He did dat berry ting." "Wall, I declar'. I told him 'stinctly de notice of my disunwellness was intended for de Sunday arter nex'."

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY LECTURE NOTICES, ETC.

[Notices of Lectures, etc., must reach us by first post on Tuesday, and be marked "Lecture Notice," if not sent on post-card.]

LONDON.

HALL OF SCIENCE (142 Old-street, E.C.): 6.30, musical selections; 7, G. W. Foote, "New Light on the Old Book." (Admission free; reserved seats 3d. and 6d.)

BATTERSEA SECULAR HALL (back of Battersea Park Station): 5.30, tea, entertainment, and dance. (Tickets 6d.) Tuesday, at 8, social gathering. Thursday, at 8, members' quarterly meeting.

CAMBERWELL (North Camberwell Hall, 61 New Church-road): 7.30, J. B. Coppock, F.C.S., "The End of the Universe"—with lantern illustrations.

ISLINGTON (Liberal and Radical Association Committee Rooms, Upper-street, near the Vestry Hall): Thursday, at 8.30, F. Haslam, "How I Became a Secularist, and Why I Remain One." (Free.)

MILTON HALL (Hawley-crescent, 89 Kentish Town-road): 7.30, George Bernard Shaw, "Great Men—Are they Real?" (Free.)

WEST LONDON ETHICAL SOCIETY (Princes' Hall, Piccadilly): 11.15, Leslie Stephen, "The Vanity of Philosophising."

WESTMINSTER BRANCH (Mr. Stace's, 42 Vincent-street): 8, members' monthly meeting.

WEST HAM SECULAR ETHICAL SOCIETY (61 West Ham-lane): 6.15, discussion—"Self-Determinism"; 7.30, G. Carter, "The Unemployed Problem."

WOOD GREEN (Secretary's house, 71 Gladstone-avenue): 7, members' meeting.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BATTERSEA PARK GATES: 11.30, W. Heaford, "Why Did Christ Die?"

HYDE PARK (near Marble Arch): 11.30, a lecture; 3.30, a lecture.

WOOD GREEN (Jolly Butchers' Hill): 11.30, S. R. Thompson will lecture.

COUNTRY.

BIRMINGHAM (Coffee House, corner of Broad-street): Thursdays, at 8, papers, discussions, etc.

BRISTOL (Shepherds' Hall, Old Market-street): 7, Mr. Ellis, "Local Rome and its Remains."

CHATHAM SECULAR HALL (Queen's-road, New Brompton): 7, F. J. Boorman, "Is Jesus a Fact or Fable?"

FAILSWORTH SECULAR SUNDAY-SCHOOL (Pole-lane): 6.30, Sam Standring, "Great is Diana!"

GLASGOW (Ex-Mission Hall, 110 Brunswick-street): 12, discussion class; 6.30, Zoeimus, "Great French Freethinkers—V., Rousseau."

HULL (St. George's Hall, Storey-street): 7, Mr. Monro, "The Ten Commandments."

LIVERPOOL (Oddfellows' Hall, St. Anne-street): 7, Mr. Hill, "Eccentricities of the Law."

MANCHESTER SECULAR HALL (Rusholme-road, All Saints): 6.30, E. Wainscott, "The Labor Problem—A Reply to Mercie England." (Free.)

NOTTINGHAM (Woodland Hall, Woodland-place, N. Parliament-street): 3, annual meeting; 5, tea (6d. each); 7, James Hooper, "Moses, Huxley, and Tyndall."

ROCHDALE (Working Men's College, 4 Acker-street): 3, A. B. Wakefield, "John Morley: A Study"; 6.30, "Secularism: Is it Successful?" For place, see Observer.

SHEFFIELD SECULAR SOCIETY (Hall of Science, Rockingham-street): a celebrated local Professor of Magic, etc., lectures, with practical illustrations.

SOUTH SHIELDS (Thornton's Variety Hall, Union-lane): 11, C. Cohen, "The Ethics of Evolution"; 7, "Scepticism, its Influence and Value."

SUNDERLAND (Co-operative Hall, Green-street): 3, C. Cohen, "Is the Belief in God Reasonable?"

SUNDERLAND (Lecture Room, Bridge End Vaults, opposite Echo office): 7, The Secretary, "War."

Lecturers' Engagements.

C. COHEN, 12 Merchant-street, Bow-road, London, E.—April 7, 14, 21, 28, Newcastle-on-Tyne. May 2, Wood Green; 5, m. Mile End, a. Victoria Park, e. Edmonton; 9, Wood Green; 12, Sheffield; 19, Manchester; 26, Wood Green; 26, m. Finsbury Park, a. Victoria Park, e. Wood Green; 30, Wood Green.

STANLEY JONES, 58 Marlborough-road, Holloway, London.—March 31, a. and e. Tottenham. April 7, m. and e. Wood Green; 14, m. Pimlico Pier, a. Hyde Park, e. Camberwell.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Cordon-road, Rotherhithe, London.—April 14, m. Mile End, a. Victoria Park; 21, m. and a. Hyde Park, e. Hammersmith; 28, m. Camberwell. May 5, a. Finsbury Park; 12, m. Mile End, a. Victoria Park; 19, m. and a. Hyde Park, e. Hammersmith; 26, Clerkenwell.

SAM STANDRING, 6 Bury-road, Rochdale.—March 31, Failsworth.

FISH, FISH, FISH.—Basses of SELECTED FISH sent on receipt of P.O. 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., and 5s., carriage paid. Premier Fish Supply Co., Fish Docks, Grimsby.

TO FREETHINKERS.—Ladies and Gentlemen requiring SUPERIOR CUT GARMENTS at moderate prices. First-class Style and Fit Guaranteed.—H. HAMPTON, Artiste Tailor, 14 Great Castle-street, W. (three doors from Regent-street). Patronised by leading Freethinkers.

NEW AND SECONDHAND FURNITURE, Sewing Machines, Pianos, Pictures, China, etc. Good and Cheap. Call and see stock. GEORGE SMITH, 15 Railton-road, Brixton, S.W.

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each; upper or lower set, £1. Best Quality, 4s. each; upper or lower, £2. Complete in four hours when required; repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above, they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18 ct. gold, 15s.; stopping, 2s. 6d.; extraction, 1s.; painless by gas, 5s.

Works by G. W. Foote.

Flowers of Freethought. First Series. 221 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Flowers of Freethought. Second Series. 302 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Bible Heroes. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Letters to the Clergy. First Series. 128 pp., 1s.

The Grand Old Book. A Reply to the Grand Old Man. An exhaustive answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture." 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Christianity and Secularism. Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Is Socialism Sound? Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 2s.

Infidel Death-Beds. Second edition, much enlarged, 8d. On superfine paper, in cloth, 1s. 3d.

Darwin on God. 6d.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s.

Will Christ Save Us? A Thorough Examination of the Claims of Jesus Christ to be considered the Savior of the World. 6d.

Reminiscences of Charles Bradlaugh. 6d.

A Defence of Free Speech. Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes. 4d.

Comic Sermons and Other Fantasias. 8d.

Rome or Atheism—the Great Alternative. 3d.

Letters to Jesus Christ. 4d.

Interview with the Devil. 2d.

Philosophy of Secularism. 3d.

Atheism and Morality. 2d.

My Resurrection. A Missing Chapter from the Gospel of Matthew, discovered by G. W. Foote. 2d.

The Folly of Prayer. 2d.

Ingersollism Defended against Archdeacon Farrar. 2d.

Was Jesus Insane? A Searching Inquiry into the Mental Condition of the Prophet of Nazareth. 1d.

Christianity and Progress. A Reply to Mr. Gladstone. 2d.

The Impossible Creed. An Open Letter to Bishop Magee on the Sermon on the Mount. 2d.

What was Christ? A Reply to J. S. Mill. 2d.

The Bible God. 2d.

Salvation Syrup; or, Light on Darkest England. A Reply to General Booth. 2d.

Is the Bible Inspired? A Criticism on Lux Mundi. 1d.

The Dying Atheist. A Story. 1d.

The Rev. Hugh Price Hughes's Converted Atheist. A Lie in Five Chapters. 1d.

Mrs. Besant's Theosophy. A Candid Criticism. 2d.

Secularism and Theosophy. A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant. 2d.

The New Cagliostro. An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky. 2d.

Bible Romances. New Edition. Revised and largely re-written. (1) The Creation Story, 2d.; (2) Eve and the Apple, 1d.; (3) Cain and Abel, 1d.; (4) Noah's Flood, 2d.; (5) The Tower of Babel, 1d.; (6) Lot's Wife, 1d.; (7) The Ten Plagues, 1d.; (8) The Wandering Jews, 1d.; (9) Balaam's Ass, 1d.; (10) God in a Box, 1d. (11) Jonah and the Whale, 1d.; (12) Bible Animals, 1d.; (13) A Virgin Mother, 2d.; (14) The Resurrection, 2d.; (15) The Crucifixion, 1d.; (16) John's Nightmare, 1d.

The Shadow of the Sword. A Moral and Statistical Essay on War. 2d.

Royal Paupers. Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty. 2d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Freethought Publications.

Crimes of Christianity. Vol. I. By G. W. Foote and J. M. Wheeler. Hundreds of exact references to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.

Chapters:—1, Christ to Constantine; 2, Constantine to Hypatia; 3, Monkery; 4, Pious Forgeries; 5, Pious Frauds; 6, Rise of the Papacy; 7, Crimes of the Popes; 8, Persecution of the Jews; 9, The Crusades. Cloth, gilt, 216 pp., 2s. 6d.

Bible Handbook for Freethinkers and Inquiring Christians. Edited by G. W. Foote and W. P. Ball. Complete, paper covers, 1s. 4d.; superior edition, on superfine paper, bound in cloth, 2s.

The Jewish Life of Christ. Being the Sepher Toldoth Jeshu, or Book of the Generation of Jesus. With an Historical Preface and Voluminous Notes by G. W. Foote and J. M. Wheeler. Paper covers, 6d.; superior edition, superfine paper, cloth, 1s.

Bible Studies. Essays on Phallic Worship and other Curious Rites and Customs. By J. M. Wheeler. Illustrated, superior paper, 2s. 6d.

Biographical Dictionary of Freethinkers of All Ages and Nations. By J. M. Wheeler. Handsomely bound in cloth, 7s. 6d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

ALLINSON FOR HEALTH.

HOME CONSULTATIONS—10 a.m. to 1 p.m., 10s. 6d.; 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., 5s. Patients Visited.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. I. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Management of Infancy, Health, Longevity, The Teeth, Tobacco, The Drink Question. Also the Cause and Cure of Disease, Constipation, Biliousness, Eczema, Blackheads and Pimples, Nervousness, Coughs and Colds, Chest Complaints, Deafness, Thread Worms, Long Worms, Tape Worms, The Itch, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. II. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on The Healing Power of Nature, Urine, Saline Starvation, the Hair and its Management, Sleep and Sleeplessness, Want of Energy, etc. Advice to the Thin, for the Stout; Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Biliousness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. III. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on No More Death, Management of Young Children, Unsuspected Domestic Poisons, How to Grow Tall, to Keep Warm, to Live One Hundred Years, to Improve the Memory, and to become Beautiful and Attractive. On the Cause and Cure of Stomach Troubles, Flatulence, Sleepiness, Varicose Veins, Boils and Carbuncles, Sebaceous Tumours and Warts, Hay Fever, Winter Cough, Chilblains, Epilepsy, and on the Diseases Produced by Taking Mercury.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. IV. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Hardening, Work and Overwork, Sugar and its Abuse, Milk as Food, the Tomato, Poultices, Quinine, Against the Knife, Arsenical Poisoning, Tonics, Against Stimulants in Disease, about Swallowing Pins and other Articles. Also Cure of Sunstroke, Dog Bites, Pains in the Back, Pediculi or Lice, Chicken-Pox, Synovitis or Inflammation of the Joints, Tonsilitis or Quinsy, Herpes (Tetter or Shingles), Erysipelas, Ulcer of the Stomach, Epidemic Influenza, Sciatica, Psoriasis or English Leprosy, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. V. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Pure Water, The Mouth, Its Use and Abuse; Rules for the Aged, Training, Blood Letting, Nose Bleeding, Felon or Whitlow, Ingrowing Toenail, Gum Boil, Cold in the Head, a Red Nose, Flushing and Blushing, Toothache, Sore Mouth, St. Vitus' Dance, Goitre, Mumps, Inflamed Eyes and Eyelids, Fits, Fainting, Apoplexy, Spitting and Vomiting of Blood, Vomiting, Wounds, Burns, Scalds, Bruises, etc.

The Five Volumes, strongly and neatly bound, price 6s. 9d., post free.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.—An Eye Opener to Drug Takers.
RHEUMATISM: ITS CAUSE AND CURE. Post free for 7d.
DIET AND DIGESTION. Post free for 7d.
CONSUMPTION; ITS NATURAL CURE. Post free 7d.

All these Books, bound in One Vol., post free, 3s. 6d. Send Postal Order.

THREE PAMPHLETS FOR YOUNG MEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.
A BOOK FOR MARRIED WOMEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

All communications to be addressed to—

DR. T. R. ALLINSON,
4 Spanish-place, Manchester-square, London, W.

THE BEST BOOK

ON NEO-MALTHUSIANISM IS, I BELIEVE,
TRUE MORALITY, or THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF NEO-MALTHUSIANISM.

By J. R. HOLMES, M.M.L., M.V.S., M.N.S.S.

100 pages, with portrait and autograph, bound in cloth, gilt lettered. Price 1s., post free.

 In order to bring the information within the reach of the poor, the most important parts of the book are issued in a pamphlet of 112 pages at ONE PENNY, post free 2d. Copies of the pamphlet for distribution 1s. a dozen post free.

The National Reformer of 6th September, 1891, says: "Mr Holmes' pamphlet . . . is an almost unexceptionable statement of the Neo-Malthusian theory and practice . . . and throughout appeals to moral feeling . . . The special value of Mr. Holmes' service to the Neo-Malthusian cause and to human well-being generally is just his combination in his pamphlet of a plain statement of the physical and moral need for family limitation with a plain account of the means by which it can be secured, and an offer to all concerned of the requisites at the lowest possible prices."

The Council of the Malthusian League, Dr. Drysdale, Dr. Allbutt, and others have also spoken of it in very high terms.

The Trade supplied by R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C. Other orders should be sent to the author.

J. R. HOLMES, HANNEY, WANTAGE, BERKS.

W. J. Rendell's "Wife's Friend"

Recommended by Mrs. Besant in Law of Population, p. 32, and Dr. Allbutt in Wife's Handbook, p. 51. Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell-street, Clerkenwell; 2s. per doz., post free (reduction in larger quantities). For particulars send stamped envelope.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

BEWARE of useless imitations substituted by some dealers and chemists, the words "Rendell & Co." and "J. W. Rendell" being speciously and plausibly introduced to deceive the public.

LOOK FOR AUTOGRAPH REGISTERED TRADE MARK

W. J. Rendell

No. 182,688.

IN Red INK ON EACH BOX, WITHOUT WHICH NONE ARE GENUINE.

Higginson's Syringe, with Vertical and Reverse Current, 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 5s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 3d. Dr Allbutt's Quinine Powders, 3s. per doz. All prices post free.

W. J. RENDELL, 15 Chadwell-st., Clerkenwell, E.C.

Vol. I., cloth gilt, 216 pp., 2s. 6d., post free,

CRIMES OF CHRISTIANITY.

BY

G. W. FOOTE AND J. M. WHEELER.

Hundreds of exact References to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.

CHAPTERS:—1, Christ to Constantine; 2, Constantine to Hypatia; 3, Monkery; 4, Pious Forgeries; 5, Pious Frauds; 6, Rise of the Papacy; 7, Crimes of the Popes; 8, Persecution of the Jews; 9, The Crusades.

"The book is very carefully compiled, the references are given with exactitude, and the work is calculated to be of the greatest use to the opponents of Christianity."—G. BRADLAUGH, in National Reformer.

"The book is worth reading. It is fair, and, on the whole, correct."—Weekly Times.

"The book has a purpose, and is entitled to a fair hearing."—Huddersfield Examiner.

"The work should be scattered like autumn leaves."—Ironclad Age (U.S.A.).

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d. post free,

THE GRAND OLD BOOK.

A REPLY TO THE GRAND OLD MAN.

BY

G. W. FOOTE.

An Exhaustive Answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture."

CONTENTS:—Preface—Preliminary View—The Creation Story—The Fall of Man—The Psalms—The Mosaic Legislation—Corroborations of Scripture—Gladstone and Huxley—Modern Scepticism.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price 1s. Superior edition for Subscribers, bound, numbered, and signed, 2s.

VOLTAIRE:

HIS LIFE AND WORKS.

WITH SOME SELECTIONS FROM HIS WRITINGS.

By G. W. FOOTE AND J. M. WHEELER.

"The English people ought to know Voltaire, an admirer and lover of their nation, better than they do, and this lively shilling pamphlet will give them a good deal of information as to his life and work."—Literary World.

"A lucid and interesting sketch of the great French philosopher. We strongly recommend it to all who want to know what the influence was which Voltaire exercised."—Weekly Times and Echo.

"Those of the new generation who desire to know more of a man with whose writings their fathers were intimate should consult this little shilling volume."—Reynolds's Newspaper.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price 1s. 6d.; superior edition, superfine paper, cloth, 2s., post free,

The Bible Handbook

FOR FREETHINKERS & INQUIRING CHRISTIANS.

BY

G. W. FOOTE AND W. P. BALL.

Sold also in separate parts as follows:—

1.—Bible Contradictions. The contradictions are printed in parallel columns. 4d.

2.—Bible Absurdities. All the chief absurdities from Genesis to Revelation, conveniently and strikingly arranged, with appropriate headlines, giving the point of each absurdity in a sentence. 4d.

3.—Bible Atrocities. Containing all the godly wickedness from Genesis to Revelation. Each infamy has a separate headline for easy reference. 4d.

4.—Bible Immoralities, Indecencies, Obscenities, Broken Promises, and Unfulfilled Prophecies. 4d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

WORKS ON EVOLUTION by ARTHUR B. MOSS.

Every Freethinker should read these books:—

THE BIBLE AND EVOLUTION, boards, 1s.

CHRISTIANITY & EVOLUTION, cloth, 2s. 6d.; boards, 1s.

LECTURES AND ESSAYS, 1s.

R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street; Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's-court, E.C.

Digitized by Google

From the "Bradford Weekly Telegraph," Saturday, February 16, 1895.

GREAT FIRE IN BRADFORD.

EXTENSIVE DAMAGE.

Early on Saturday a big fire took place in the warehouse, No. 2 Union-street, Bradford, occupied by Mr. R. Higgins, who occupies a large part of the ground floor, and numbers the following tenants occupying the other offices and rooms: Mr. Ernest Hahnel, Messrs. Schmidt & Co., Mr. J. W. Gott, Messrs. G. D. Wright & Co., and Mr. J. Pepper. The damage done is very extensive, and is roughly estimated at a figure between £8,000 to £10,000. It certainly cannot be less than £8,000, as many of the firms occupying the building had large and valuable stocks stored in the various rooms. Mr. R. Higgins had a big stock of woollens, stuffs and yarns, and estimates his loss at over £4,000. He is insured up to £4,000. Messrs. Wright & Co., stuff merchants, have had fully £1,000 damage done to their stock and premises, but it is completely covered by insurance. Mr. J. W. Gott, cloth and stuff merchant, had a stock valued at £1,500, and it is partially destroyed, chiefly by water. The other firms, with the exception of Mr. J. Pepper, have suffered in like manner, a lot of stock being destroyed by water. The cause of the fire is unknown, but, judging by appearances, it broke out in the packing-room of Mr. R. Higgins.

Read these Lines.

We have had a fire as particulars herewith.
We got a big allowance from the Insurance Company.
We bought the whole of G. D. Wright & Co.'s stock.
We bought it at less than half price.
We are determined to make a lot of new customers.
We are selling at ridiculously low prices to do it.
We ask every reader to give us one trial.
We will do our best to please you.
We have given great satisfaction to many.
We allow none to remain dissatisfied if we know it.

A Few 21s. Parcels, carriage paid; worth 42s.

No. 1.—2 Suit Lengths or 4 Trousers' Lengths, good quality.
No. 2.—1 Black Figured and 1 Heavy All-Wool Navy Serge Dress Length; tip-top quality.
No. 3.—1 Suit Length and 1 Dress Length, any color or make.
No. 4.—Blankets, Sheets, Quilt, Table-cloth, Belt, Apron, Purse, etc.
No. 5.—Mixed Lot of Goods for Ladies' and Gentlemen's wear.

We have engaged 25 additional Tailors to make up Trousers. Price during Salvage Sale,

7s. 6d. per Pair to Measure.

J. W. GOTT, 2 & 4 UNION STREET, BRADFORD

Round waist .....
Round seat.....
Inside leg seam.....
Outside leg seam .....
Thigh .....
Knee .....
Bottom .....
Lined or Unlined .....
(Lined 6d. extra.)
Color .....

Works by Colonel R. G. Ingersoll.

SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES. The only complete edition in England. Accurate as Colenso, and fascinating as a novel. 132 pp. 1s. Superior paper, cloth 1s. 6d.
DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT. A Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy. 6d.
THE GODS. 6d.
REPLY TO GLADSTONE. With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler. 4d.
ROME OR REASON? A Reply to Cardinal Manning. 4d.
CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS. 3d.
ORATION ON WALT WHITMAN. 3d.
ORATION ON VOLTAIRE. 3d.
ABRAHAM LINCOLN. 3d.
PAINE THE PIONEER. 2d.
HUMANITY'S DEBT TO THOMAS PAINE. 2d.
ERNEST RENAN AND JESUS CHRIST. 2d.
TRUE RELIGION. 2d.
THE THREE PHILANTHROPISTS. 2d.
LOVE THE REDEEMER. 2d.
GOD AND THE STATE. 2d.
WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part I. 2d.
WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC Part II. 2d.
FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Dr. Field. 2d.
GOD AND MAN. Second reply to Dr. Field. 2d.
THE DYING CREED. 2d.
THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION. A Discussion with the Hon. F. D. Coudert and Gov. S. L. Woodford. 2d.
THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH. 2d.
ART AND MORALITY. 2d.
DO I BLASPHEME? 2d.
THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE. 2d.
SOCIAL SALVATION. 2d.
MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE. An Agnostic's View. 2d.
SKULLS. 2d.
THE GREAT MISTAKE. 1d.
LIVE TOPICS. 1d.
MYTH AND MIRACLE. 1d.
REAL BLASPHEMY. 1d.
REPAIRING THE IDOLS. 1d.
CHRIST AND MIRACLES. 1d.
CREEDS & SPIRITUALITY. 1d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price Twopence,

"A Letter to Lord Ellenborough."

OCCASIONED BY THE SENTENCE WHICH HE PASSED ON
MR. D. I. EATON,
AS PUBLISHER OF
THE THIRD PART OF PAINE'S "AGE OF REASON."
BY
PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

PRICE SIXPENCE,
THE
SECULAR ALMANACK
For 1895.

Altered and Enlarged. Finely-Designed Cover.

EDITED BY
G. W. FOOTE & J. M. WHEELER.

CONTENTS: Progress of Freethought; by G. W. Foote—This World; by J. M. Wheeler—Heroes in the Service of Man; by Charles Watts—Dod Grile—A Wish; by Matthew Arnold—The Abducted Female Infidel—Farquhar of Netherton—Bits from Selden's "Table Talk"—Jeremy Bentham on Inspiration—Abou-ben Adhem and the Angel—Man's Soul his God—The Sacred Books of the World—The Dear God—What have Unbelievers Done for the World?—Information Concerning Freethought Work and Organisation—Lecturers, etc.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Read "THE TRUTH SEEKER."

MONTHLY, PRICE 1D.
Edited by JOHN GRANGE.
Of all Newsagents to order. Wholesale, Mr. Forder.

Just published, price 4d., by post 5d.,

WAS CHRIST A POLITICAL AND SOCIAL REFORMER?

BY CHARLES WATTS
(Vice-President of the National Secular Society).

London: Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Printed and Published by G. W. FOOTE, at 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

VOL. XV.—No. 14. SUNDAY, APRIL 7, 1895. PRICE TWOPENCE.

THE DISESTABLISHMENT OF THE CHURCH.

ACCORDING to the principles of the National Secular Society, Secularism seeks to disestablish religion—that is, to separate it from the State; and it urges the necessity of it being maintained (where the profession is thought desirable) from its own resources. Hence, one of our "Immediate Practical Objects" is, not only to secure the Disestablishment, but also the "Disendowment of the State Churches in England, Scotland, and Wales." This desirable work was really commenced by Mr. Gladstone at the time of the Disestablishment of the Irish Church; but the Bill of the present Government, in reference to the Church in Wales, is a more complete application of the principle, inasmuch as it provides that the funds which have hitherto been monopolised by the Church shall be used for useful secular purposes.

Personally, I am opposed to all Government interference with the advocacy of opinions, and also decidedly object to its giving any patronage to one form of speculative views in preference to others. Government should have no concern in any speculative scheme that refers to problematic issues which are apart from human life and human wants. Whether there be one or three Gods, or no God at all, mundane requirements should alone claim the attention of those who are appointed by the people to regulate national affairs. There ought to be no difficulty in learning from the history of the past that the government which is best calculated to administer to the welfare of the community is the one which devotes itself wholly to the affairs of this world.

In the struggle to obtain the separation of Church and State Secularists are not fighting alone, for many who profess Christianity are as much opposed to the union as we are. Still, the fact must not be overlooked that a large section of orthodox believers in this country hold the opinion that the Church of England should be protected by law. The reasons given for this desire are very fallacious. The defenders of Church and State must indeed have very peculiar notions of justice and equality. Supposing the National Secular Society claimed Government support in their propagandism, Churchmen would be horrified. But why? Is it because Secularists are in a minority? So are Churchmen; for it cannot, with any degree of truth, be alleged that the Establishment represents the opinions of the majority of the people. Is it because Secularists have not the means to do as much for the national good as the Church has at its command? If, however, there is any force in the plea for State aid, would not its support increase the means of the Secularists? Unfortunately, this Church has had the means, but it has failed to employ them usefully; hence, as a secular agency, it has proved a decided failure. Its power has been used not for, but against, the development of political and social reforms. It has, moreover, sadly neglected the education of the young, and the providing for the pauper population. Bishops and the clergy have had the control of funds that should have been devoted to the benefit of the poor and ignorant; but the poor have not been adequately provided for, and the ignorant have not been properly instructed by the representatives of our "National Religion." The consequence is that now these duties have to be performed by Poor Law Guardians and Board School teachers at the public expense, while the funds are going to the Church all the same.

In the face of these facts the Church Establishment is but a sham and a delusion. It is a sound principle upon which to rely, that when the opinions of a nation change it is only in accordance with equity that laws and institutions should be altered and made to harmonise with the new conditions. Whatever our forefathers might have been contented with, the fact is evident that to-day religion can only be accepted as a question of individual opinion; it cannot be enforced as a national injustice. This is the only view that can consistently be said to accord with that religious freedom of which we hear so much and see so little among orthodox Christians at the present time. If all the inhabitants of this country shared the religious views taught by the Established Church, the case would be different; but where there are so many different and conflicting sects of religionists, and so many that have no religion at all, it is manifestly unfair to "nationalise" one section of the community to the exclusion of all others.

One of the reasons given for the union of Church and State is, that it serves as a solid breakwater to keep back the flood of Romanism, which our forefathers so justly feared. This, however, is not so, for modern clerical engineers have invented a sort of Forth Bridge, which connects High Churchism with Roman Catholicism. But there is not much danger of the Pope exercising any civil power in the United Kingdom, since he has become practically a prisoner in the Vatican. The barrier to the encroachments of Catholicism is not the theology of the Church of England, but rather the spirit of scepticism, which so extensively prevails within its domain. Moreover, the lack of unity in the Establishment prevents it, as a religious institution, from being a formidable foe to Romish aggression. For, while one portion of the English Church is tending towards Romanism, another portion is drifting towards Rationalism. If there ever was a time when the Church could be defended as the representative of one doctrine and one faith, and when it was the visible emblem of the "unity of faith in the bond of peace," that time has past. England is probably the home of more divergent sects of religionists than any other country at the present day, and this fact alone affords a powerful argument against a State Church. Allied with Freethought propagandism, religious dissent has broken the political power of the Church; so much so that even in our rural districts, at the present time, its political power is openly defied, and its religious authority is persistently ignored.

It may be asked, Has the State no concern with the various religious views promulgated throughout the land? The answer is, None whatever. But it has something to do with the individuals who promulgate those views. It appears to me that the function of the Government in regard to this matter is simply to maintain order, and to secure the right of free discussion for the advocates of all opinions of a speculative character, which have divided, and probably always will divide, mankind. There is no more justification for placing persons at a disadvantage on account of the opinions they entertain than there would be for blaming them for their stature or the color of their hair. Men can no more help thinking than they can avoid breathing; therefore, freedom should be secured whereby all should be allowed to think and to speak freely, without dread of social or penal disabilities being the result. The world is slow in learning the lesson of political and religious freedom. Protestant Churchmen and dissenters alike object to subscribe to the Roman Church, but they complain of the Secularist when he objects to subscribe to either section of the Protestant Church.

Digitized by Google

The aspect of this question in the early part of the present century was very different from what it is now. While at that period people did not openly advocate the rule of a religious minority because they held the true faith, the right of the majority to coerce the minority was questioned only by the few. To-day the opinion is rapidly extending that the State has no business to interfere with any but secular things. It is said that Christ neither established nor endowed any Church by the law of the land, and, therefore, such an institution is without the authority of the Founder of Christianity. Of course, it he had done so, the injustice would have been the same.

In reference to the cry of the bishops that the Disestablishment of the Church involves "the dethronement and robbery of God," it is only necessary to say that the right of kings and churches to rule is regarded in modern times in the same light as is the right of action conferred upon police constables, and that is the power given them by the law of the land, which is alterable and improvable at the pleasure of the electorate and Parliament. The right exists to elect or dismiss any branch of the Civil Service. To those clergymen who say they are not aided by the State the reply is: In that case they can suffer no loss from ceasing to be partners in a concern which yields them no profits.

CHARLES WATTS.

MR. BALFOUR'S "FOUNDATIONS."—III.

(Concluded from page 194.)

The Foundations of Belief. Being Notes Introductory to the Study of Theology. By the Right Hon. Arthur James Balfour. (London: Longmans, Green, & Co.)

MR. BALFOUR devotes a whole chapter to a "summary and conclusion" of his attack on Naturalism. He says he is anxious not to overstate his case, but we are accustomed to these mock-modest protestations; and, indeed, this particular one looks very curious in the light of the following passage:—

> "If naturalism be true, or, rather, if it be the whole truth, then is morality but a bare catalogue of utilitarian precepts; beauty but the chance occasion of a passing pleasure; reason but the dim passage from one set of unthinking habits to another. All that gives dignity to life, all that gives value to effort, shrinks and fades under the pitiless glare of a creed like this."

This may be forcible writing; it is just as certainly forcible folly. How on earth can morality, on the basis of naturalism or utilitarianism, or whatever other term you choose to substitute, be "a bare catalogue of precepts"? In the common language of mankind, have we not hearts as well as heads, however we came by them? Reason dictates the precepts of morality, but it can only do so under the impulsion of sympathy; and the genesis and development of that feeling is as clear as daylight on the principles of evolution. As for the second sentence in this passage, what is it but an absurd paradox? How can "reason" and "unthinking" be logically coupled together? And does it not strike Mr. Balfour, in his calmer moments, that the "dignity" of life can hardly depend upon the mass of wild, and often hideous, ideas men have entertained about the "supernatural"? This champion of the faith is not always consistent with himself. In addressing the Church Congress at Manchester, he said that Positivism—which is precisely what he now assails as Naturalism—might enable us to live with dignity, though it could not enable us to die with hope; but now the "dignity" is sacrificed in the interest of a fresh dialectic. With regard to the "value of effort," surely it depends upon its success; and we venture to tell Mr. Balfour that Naturalism, with the practical aid of science, has done more for what Bacon called "the relief of man's estate" in a single century than Supernaturalism has done from the beginning of history. Whether it has done as much for "the glory of God" is quite another matter, and one which, at present, we need not trouble to discuss. Finally, we must remark that Mr. Balfour is very unfortunate in his expression about the "pitiless glare" of a creed like Naturalism. It brings to our mind, at least, the Christian doctrine of Hell. How a man who believes (or does not repudiate belief) in such a terrible doctrine as that, can talk about the "pitiless glare" of any other creed, is like the peace of God—it passes all understanding.

Mr. Balfour first sets up a theory that certain feelings and opinions are inconsistent with Naturalism, and then argues that the triumph of Naturalism will banish all those feelings and opinions from the face of the earth. He is "wholly unable to understand" how Naturalism can do otherwise than "eat all nobility out of our conception of conduct, and all worth out of our conception of life." Mr. Balfour's ability to understand, however, is not the measure of natural possibility. This is particularly a case in which the investigator's "personal equation" throws the whole problem into disorder. With all his undeniable gifts, Mr. Balfour wants a little more imagination. He cannot place himself at his opponent's point of view. But even on grounds of common reason and general experience, he might see the futility of this diatribe against Naturalism. Christians have generally been unable to understand how nobility of conduct and worthiness of life could exist outside their own faith; yet both existed before Christianity was heard of, and they have always existed beyond its limits. Nor is this attitude confined to the Christian; it is common enough in all the faiths of the world. It is only the Naturalist who is really above this petty insularity. He feels the very beating of what Wordsworth called "the universal heart of man." There abides the eternal security for what Mr. Balfour fears will be lost. It cannot be destroyed, though it may be veiled, by the mists of superstition; and now and then it appears in its naked integrity, as Mont Blanc gleams serenely in sunshine and clear air.

Mr. Gladstone has declared that if he ever entertained the prejudice that unbelievers could not be men of high and noble character, it would have been banished by his experience of public life and his knowledge of public men. Mr. Balfour is also confronted with the fact that the devotees of Naturalism are not more wicked or grovelling than their neighbors. He protests that he does not desire to ignore or depreciate the "shining examples of virtue unsupported by religion." What he denies is that their virtue is any credit to their creed. What virtue you have, Mr. Balfour says to them, you derive from us; there are parasites in the physical world, and you are the parasites of the moral world.

> "Their spiritual life is parasitic: it is sheltered by convictions which belong, not to them, but to the society of which they form a part; it is nourished by processes in which they take no share. And when those convictions decay, and those processes come to an end, the alien life which they have maintained can scarce be expected to outlast them."

We have heard this before—at street corners, in churches and chapels, and from religious platforms. We have also read it in books on apologetics. It is variously expressed; sometimes vulgarly, and sometimes with an air of good breeding; but it is always the same thing at bottom. Religion fills the reservoir of virtue, and irreligious persons only draw off their convenient supply. But the curious thing is—and Mr. Balfour should note it—that the devotees of Naturalism assert the very opposite. They declare that Humanity fills the reservoir, at least by providing its contents; and that Religions are no more than chartered Water Companies, which call the water by their own names, arbitrarily regulate the supply, and always charge a heavy rate for their transcendent services.

Some defenders of "faith"—such, for instance, as Mr. Benjamin Kidd, the author of that extravagantly lauded book on Social Evolution—tell us that scepticism is declining; that Bradlaugh and Ingersoll are spent forces, and that Huxley's eloquence falls flat upon the public ear. Mr. Balfour, however, is not foolish enough to echo this premature pean of victory. He admits that the influence of Naturalism "has increased, is increasing, and as yet shows no signs of diminution." This admission has been ignored by the general body of reviewers, especially in the religious journals; but it should be noted in a journal like the Freethinker. Those who attended the funeral of scepticism forget that they walked behind an empty coffin. Mr. Balfour, at any rate, will not sign its death certificate.

Mr. Balfour agrees with Mr. Kidd, however, in snubbing Reason. She is useful in her way, but she is a menial, and must not obtrude in the drawing-room. The leader of the Tory party in the House of Commons naturally prefers Authority.

Digitized by Google

> "It is Authority rather than Reason to which, in the main, we owe, not religion only, but ethics and politics; it is Authority which supplies us with essential elements in the premises of science; it is Authority rather than Reason which lays deep the foundations of social life; it is Authority rather than Reason which cements its superstructure."

There is a certain truth in this statement if Authority means our inherited wisdom from the past; but in any other sense of the word, the statement is a plea for prejudice and irrationality. Mr. Balfour must be joking when he pretends to imagine that the advocates of Reason regard nothing as practically settled. He may rely upon it that they will not allow their children to experiment on prussic acid in their pursuit of dietary knowledge. Mr. Balfour is a clever man, but his book will only comfort and console his own party; it will not disturb the mental serenity of a single disciple of Naturalism.

G. W. FOOTE.

MADAME BLAVATSKY.

(Continued from p. 194.)

FROM 1858, when Daniel Dunglass Home, immortalised in Browning's "Sludge the Medium," was married in Russia to a sister of Count Koucheleff, one of the richest grandees in the country, Helena Petrovna Blavatsky had been a Spiritist medium. In that year Home met her in Paris, where she pretended to be a medium. It was, according to Olcott's account in his book entitled People from the Other World, at spirit séances at Chiltenden, Vermont, in October, 1874, that he first met H. P. B. Olcott (p. 453) calls her "one of the most remarkable mediums in the world," and gravely relates how numerous spirits came out of the cabinet. Dr. Elliott Coues, formerly president of the Washington Theosophical Society, says of Olcott's book:—

> "It is one of the best ghost books extant; full of spectral pictures, not a word of truth in the text, and redolent with the flavor of gullibility. Yet it is a thoroughly dishonest book, for Olcott knew perfectly well, before it came out in book form, that every phenomenon he described was fraudulent; and when somebody proposed to show up the Eddy tricks in their true light, Olcott begged for God's sake not to have it done, because 'it would injure the sale of his work.'"

The manifestations mentioned by Olcott in his book booming Blavataky having been attacked by Dr. G. M. Beard, H. P. Blavataky wrote to the New York Graphic, October 27, 1874, in defence of Spiritism. She says: "People that know me know I am far from being credulous. Though a Spiritualist of many years' standing, I am more sceptical in receiving evidence from paid mediums than many unbelievers." Again (New York Graphic, November 13, 1874): "I deem it my duty as a Spiritualist to," etc. In a letter to Light ten years later (October 11, 1884) she said: "I say again, I never was a Spiritualist." Hundreds in America are aware of the contrary. The "familiar spirit" of the lady medium was "John King," buccaneer, who is notable as the original Mahatma. In a letter to Aksákoff (April 12, 1875) she says: "The spirit, John King, is very fond of me, and I am fonder of him than of anything on earth." Colonel Olcott relates that the defunct pirate obligingly offered to commit forgery on any bank desired. This "John King" was such a success that he was patronised by many of the "mejums." The only thing necessary was a hoarse voice and coarse talk. If materialised, a heavy black horse hair beard and a white sheet were the only accessories needed. No wonder John was popular. "At this time," says Dr. Coues, "several of her letters to friends, which I have read, are curiously scribbled in red and blue pencils, with sentences and signatures of 'John King,' just as, later on, 'Koot Hoomi' used to miraculously precipitate himself upon her stationery in all sorts of colored crayons." W. E. Coleman, in his Critical Historical Review of the Theosophical Society (p. 3), says:—

> "Early in 1875 Madame Blavatsky sent to General F. J. Lippitt a picture, which she said had been painted for the General by the spirit John King himself. In Mind and Matter, Philadelphia, November 27, 1880, was published conclusive evidence, found in Madame B.'s room in Philadelphia, that she had herself painted this picture, except certain flowers, etc., which were already on the satin when she procured it. Madame B. is known to have fair skill as a painter. Further, Mrs. Hannah M. Wolff, of Washington, D.C., in a published account of her experience with Madame Blavatsky in 1874, has stated that, Madame B. having claimed that certain pictures were painted by spiritual power direct, she was watched by three journalists residing in the same house, and they saw Madame B. get up in the night and paint them herself."

V. S. Solovyoff, in his Modern Priestess of Isis, has explained from H. P. B.'s own letters to the Russian Spiritist, Aksákoff, how she was forced to find fresh fields and pastures new. D. D. Home had heard of her use of his name, and told the plain facts about her. She had previously dreaded that Aksákoff might reveal something. "To him," says Solovyoff (p. 236), "not foreseeing that she would soon need to play the part of the 'pure virgin,' she presented herself as the 'penitent Magdalen.'" When the blow came she wrote: "There is nothing left but to start for Australia, and change my name for ever." This was, however, not necessary for a woman of her resources, with Olcott to help her. First they started a Miracle Club, and then (Oct. 30, 1875) the Theosophical Society. The immediate cause was the alleged discoveries of a Mr. G. H. Felt, who was said to have found out the secret whereby the Egyptians evoked the spirits of the dead, and the geometric figures of the Egyptian Cabala. H. P. B., in her Isis Unveiled (p. 22), says: "He may one day be recognised as the greatest geometer of the age." Mr. H. J. Newton, the first treasurer of the Theosophical Society, tells how the geometer swindled him out of $75, which Olcott recommended should be given to him for promised lectures. He adds: "I was out over $200 before I got through with the society." As the testimony of the first treasurer is somewhat notable, and is referred to neither by Mr. Lillie nor by M. Solovyoff, I reprint some important statements from the Progressive Thinker of June 6, 1891:—

> "'In less than two years the society died a natural death. I resigned both my treasurership and membership towards the end of 1877. For months before my resignation, and up to the time Madame Blavatsky and Colonel Olcott went to Europe in 1878, not more than three members could be got together, so it was impossible to have any legal business meetings. The society was practically dead and abandoned when I resigned. Nevertheless, on the eve of their departure from America, an article appeared in the Sun stating that Blavatsky and Olcott had been commissioned by the society to go to India and preach Theosophy to the Hindoos. This was not true, as there was no society then in existence, and no such action at any time appears on its records.' 'What was the object of publishing such a statement?' queried the reporter. 'I believe it emanated from Colonel Olcott, and was designed simply to screen the real nature of their visit to India. The Russians were then advancing on the Afghan frontier, and it was of great importance that they should have knowledge of the English position and preparations to resist their movement. Madame Blavatsky had twice visited India before, and was an experienced traveller, a clever talker, and an accomplished linguist, speaking ten or twelve languages. Only a short time before they decided on going, she spent the whole evening talking with a member of the Russian Legation here in this house [Mr. H. J. Newton's own house, 128 West Forty-Third-street, New York]. Colonel Olcott was also well fitted for a political mission of this kind. His appointment as Colonel in the United States army was given him by President Lincoln in recognition of his services as Chief of the United States Secret Service during the war. He was also a linguist of rare ability, speaking six or seven languages. It looks as if the religious or philosophical movement, intended at first only as a cloak to their real mission in India, proved such a success that, when their services were no longer needed by the Russian Government, they kept up Theosophy in India, and afterwards started it in England.'"

Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten, at whose house some of the early meetings of the society were held, in the Two Worlds (June 5, 1891) independently corroborated Mr. Newton's statement. She says:—

Digitized by Google

> "Quite early in the movement one of the officers first appointed made a series of most damaging statements against the life, conduct, and character of the corresponding secretary, Madame Blavatsky; and as Madame Coulomb's tremendous exposures, Dr. Richard Hodgson's Psychical Research volume, and Professor Elliott Coues's New York Sun exposures were at that time things of the distant future, the chivalric feeling of the newly-formed society induced them to expel the too candid but offending member, swear fealty to the great Psychologist founder, and organise themselves into a secret society, with pass words, signs, and grips."

She notices that a library was formed, and remarks its utilisation in the composition of Isis Unveiled. This work, the plagiarisms of which, exposed by W. E. Coleman, are mentioned in the appendix to The Modern Priestess of Isis, was a composition founded on many works, and on MSS. left by the Baron de Palma, a gentleman who left also some property to the new society. Professor A. Wilder wrote the preface and supervised some part of the work. Isis Unveiled certainly shows talent of a peculiar kind, and some of its tall stories illustrate the imaginative power of its compiler.

Mr. Newton was, I believe, right in his surmise. The original idea in going to India was to rope in the leading native princes, rajahs, and maharajahs, prepare them in the esoteric section for the coming cataclysm, and, when all was ripe, have messages from the Mahatmas commanding revolt. Political designs in the East are usually worked in this way. The Indian Mutiny was by no means to be attributed solely to the use of greased cartridges, but to industriously-circulated prophecies that the rule of the English Feringees would come to an end in one hundred years from the date of the battle of Plassey, June, 1757. We shall see later on that Madame Blavatsky admitted having such a scheme.

J. M. Wheeler.

(To be continued).

DOES RELIGION TEACH MORALITY?

Not long ago, in conversation with one of my esteemed Christian friends, I asked him if a man could be moral without being religious? He at once replied that he could. Now, if that be true (it certainly is, and every Christian will say so), morality can form no part of religion, but must be an entirely separate and distinct quality in the character of men.

There can be only two answers to that question: they must either affirm or deny. If they affirm, the only conclusion is that morality is not a part of the Christian religion; if they deny, we must conclude that a man is religious to the extent that he is moral. Let them answer as they will, the case is equally against them. I have never met a Christian yet who was willing to admit either conclusion. They have a way of giving a common-sense answer to a simple question, and then denying every inference that can be had from it. When asked to explain their position, they resort to their ever available side-door subterfuge, and reply: "There are many things in religion we cannot understand."

Now, certainly, if the Christian religion be a thing that cannot be understood, it can be of no benefit to us in the end. It really does seem that Christians cannot explain their religion, for, after near nineteen centuries of almost frantic effort, even with the help of priests specially inspired for the purpose, they have made a most signal failure. But, while they have so faithfully been trying what they claim to be an impossibility—while they have endeavored to frame a definition of their religion as it is, and, at the same time, please their fancy as to what it should be, there has been a progressive element at work—a spirit of liberalism that has defined it for them. A jury has weighed the evidence of the case, both circumstantial and positive; its deliberate verdict is that the Christian religion is a delusion, a phantom, a fairy-like dream. The great judge, Human Reason, has passed the sentence of oblivion, and the great executive, Human Progress, is executing the decree. The Christian religion must finally take its proper rank in the category of mythology.

But back to the question: Can a man be moral without being religious? The affirmative answer is always given, and I like it better, for it suits both parties, and can be sustained by reason. Christians will not admit that a man is religious unless he believes in their angry God and good-natured, pleasure-giving Devil. Liberals see no necessity for any such absurdities. That answer meets the approval of all. It resolves itself, then, into two distinct questions, What is religion? and What is morality?

Religion, robbed of the usually associated idea of morality, cannot mean more than the belief in, and worship of, a Supreme Being. If we seek to include morality in a definition of religion, we leave the principle of religion, and infringe upon one equally sovereign with it. Religion has nothing to do with morality; neither has morality anything to do with religion. Morality has to do with man's intercourse with his fellow man; religion has to do with man's conception or omnipotence of his God.

It is curious to note what a radical change this God has undergone. At one time men must see their object of worship; they must have some visible form to make their sacrifices to—some visible form into whose insensible ears they could pour the torrent of their wants. They feared an evil nature working against them, and prayed for an escape from all its harm; they prayed for "blessings both spiritual and temporal"; they resigned themselves to the care of the object of their worship, as Christians now do; they felt that calmness and serenity of mind that Christians now feel; they voiced the emotional energy of the moment, and were satisfied. What more do Christians now? But from that invariable law, that all things must change, not even God could escape! and lo, we find him to-day "a spirit without body, parts, or passions"—in other words, absolutely nothing. So far as we know, or can know, he is totally imaginary. No living person has ever seen him, and of those who have passed beyond the veil none have returned to testify.

Christians say that God is omnipresent; but reason cannot conceive of omnipresence without a material body. They attribute to him the faculty of thought; but rationality cannot conceive of thought without a brain, and a brain would certainly be a part. They say he is jealous (Exodus xx. 5), and jealousy is only a passion. I am forced to conclude that the attributes Christians claim for their God absolutely contradict his very existence.

What definition, what description then, can I give for the Christian religion? Simply that it is the belief in and worship of an imaginary and impossible God. It is the religion of absurdity and ridiculousness, of crime and cruelty, of power and despotism. It is the shield of the tyrant, the sword of the oppressor. It is the enemy of liberty and of every manly sentiment.

Morality has for many ages been associated with some religious creed, and many have come to look upon it as a necessary part of religion. Christians even assert that the Bible contains every moral sentiment of which the human mind can conceive. I must take issue with them on that point. I must assert that the Bible does not teach morality, for it limits a person to certain set rules of action, and his every act must conform to them, regardless of what he may think himself. It takes away his manhood, and leaves him an imitator, a machine. It allows him no liberty of thought, and where there is no liberty there can be no morality.

Morality is conscientious action from a principle that the actor considers right. We must consider it as affecting individuals, and not society. We must regard it from an individual basis, for society is composed of individuals, and they must be affected before society possibly can be. Every idea, every movement, every revolution that has affected society in the least, was originally a mere thought in the mind of an individual, and could not possibly affect society before affecting him. Then, if morality be an individual qualification, the question arises, How came an individual to be moral?

The experience of every person teaches him that the standard of morality changes; that no system is permanent; that there is a continual, silent, majestic progression of ideas. The greatest lesson taught by all experience, individual and general, is that man has constantly before him an ideal existence; and as he gradually advances towards that existence his ideal has advanced. Then, if we assume that the human family sprung from a single pair, or that it evolved from a lower to a higher order of intellect, we must conclude that there was a time when the moral standard was limited, either by inexperience or a low degree of intellect. Morality is a kind of negative term—we recognise it only as we know immorality. Until we learn that a thing is immoral, either by our own experience or that of others, we can have no conception of that which is moral. Morality has its origin in the association of man with man; it implies a knowledge of the rights of others, and that can be had only by association with others. Unless we fully consider every probable consequence, and then act in a way that seems wisest to us, we cannot be said to be moral. The higher the appreciation of the needs and privileges of our fellow men we have, the higher may be our standard of morals. The more we allow to our fellow men those needs and privileges which experience has taught us are their right, the more moral we are. The more liberty we have, the more moral we can be. Absolute knowledge of the nature of men, and absolute liberty of conscience and of action, would permit men to be absolutely moral. That would be the highest ideal existence, the highest sphere of action in which man could move.

Digitized by Google

Has religion anything to do with this condition of things? Does Christianity teach morality? Does Christianity give to us one single progressive idea, one iota of tolerance? Does it teach, by precept or example, a single degree of conscience or action? Does it teach men to think for themselves, to judge for themselves, to act for themselves? Come, ye pioneers of science; ye thinkers of every age since Christendom was known; ye victims of the inquisition; ye peasants of France; ye poor, defenceless women and children, starved by the taxation of the Church, and left to die along the roads—come, all ye victims of Christian oppression, and array yourselves in solid phalanx before your persecutors, and be to all religious creeds a living accusation! Christians, followers of the Lamb, blessed of the Lord, witness. Listen! from Spain, from those dungeons of horror, comes the sound of clanking chains; hear the groans of anguish wrung from the victim by inconceivable torture; look on the haggard faces of women and children in the highways of France; hear their supplications as they beg for crumbs to fan again the spark of life! Look, and then answer: Does Christianity teach morality? Shame! Go break every tie that binds you to such a record; laugh at your system for its ridiculousness, spurn it for its intolerance and cruelty, bury your Bible under ten thousand curses, place yourself on the side of humanity, and henceforth be men. Let history raise a monument to Christianity that shall be a warning for all time to come, to every species of bigotry, intolerance, and oppression.

A. H. BURKE.

—Independent Pulpit.

THE NEW WOMAN.

My only objection to the New Woman is that she is too usually old. If she chooses to wear a divided skirt or "knicks," what is that to me? She has as much right to kick or "bike" as I. After all she is a biped, not a monopod. The New Woman goes in for her "rights," but she accepts her responsibilities. She does not wish to be treated like a wax doll, wrapped in cotton wool and lavender. She does not expect always to have chicken breast and ice cream, nor desire me to ride outside, for her convenience, on a cold night. She is self-reliant and self-sufficing. I prefer even my dog to be my companion and friend rather than my slave. Ni Dieu, ni maître either for me or my companion, s'il-vous-plait.

America is the land of the New Woman. You may find her dashing over Europe, too, going everywhere in easy self-reliance, no more needing a chaperone than a glass-case. I have before me a specimen of the American New Woman in the World's Advance Thought and the Universal Republic, two monthly papers in one, edited, printed, and published by Lucy A. Mallory, at Portland, Oregon. Lucy writes most of the articles and bits, picks up the type, carries the formes to press, and prints them herself. And she does all this on biscuit, cheese, and raisins, devoting her surplus income to feeding and teaching other folk's children. Lucy is, I fear, a bit of a crank, judging by the "Soul Communion Time Table" she places at the beginning of her journal, and which gives the corresponding times in various latitudes for entering into communion on the 27th day of each month "to invoke, through co-operation of thought and unity in spiritual aspiration, the blessings of universal peace and higher spiritual light." The time for London is from 8.11 to 8.41 p.m. But Lucy is a good sort, and her papers are full of bright bits, so at that time, if I don't forget, I'll drink your health Lucy—in orange-juice, of course, for tea and all intoxicants are tabooed by the World's Advance Thought.

The New Woman, for one thing, has got well away from St. Paul. That hot-headed old misogynist, it was said by the Ebionites, turned Christian because rejected by a Jewish rabbi's daughter. After that he wrote, "It is good for a man not to touch a woman." What did the crusty old bachelor know about it, anyway? He declared the man was not created for the woman, but the woman for the man, and said, "Let the woman learn in silence with all subjection." The New Woman could have taught him a thing or two that might have modified his opinions. Anyway, having tasted the sweets of a freer gospel, she will never go back to the bondage of Scripture texts. In this respect the New Woman, and she only I fear, is fit to be a companion for a Freethinker.

"Les races se féminisent," said Buffon, the great naturalist, in the last century. The world is growing more feminine; woman is everywhere coming to the front. Happily so. It means the triumph of heart over stomach, nerve over muscle, of peace over war, of love and insight over brute strength and sheer stupidity. The poorest woman to-day is born to an inheritance her ancestors never dreamt of. Should she sigh for the fleshpots and bondage of Egypt, be a slave when she may be an equal, obey St. Paul rather than agree with Stuart Mill? Once deny Paul's dictum that she is to be subject in all things, and what shall you hinder her from doing and becoming? There is no logical via media between slavery and freedom. On this question the traditionary position of the sexes has been reversed. The New Woman has all the logic, and the Old Man all the prejudice.

Of course, the New Woman will cause trouble. The transition from feudalism was a flea-bite compared to the emancipation of an entire sex. Of course she will often go wrong, and conclusively demonstrate that she is indeed no angel. But Nature and sex—Nature's fundamental fact—will take care of itself. If the New Woman fancies she can do what she cannot, she will soon find out by experiment. Let her try. She may not prove a worse duffer at engineering than a man would be at millinery or minding a baby.

One thing is certain: the New Woman has come to stay. Had we not better make her feel at home? Robert Lowe said, in accents of despair, at the passing of the Reform Bill: "We must now educate our masters." Let us quickly educate our girls not to be our masters, but our equals. Teach them physiology, and they will never think it womanly, or possible, to unsex themselves.

The New Woman is popularly supposed to be, if not a free lover, at least not without considerable sympathy with The Woman Who Did. This is her worst offence. The male Turk can forgive anything but this. Polygamy is permissible; polyandry abominable. But the New Woman is not a polyandrist, any more than Herminia Barton. She merely is not ashamed of her sex, and holds that the same code of morality should apply to man and to woman. What right, she asks, has man to demand a fidelity he is not prepared to give himself? Why are his sexual derelictions venial, and hers mortal? "Oh," you say, "she has to bear the consequences, which he escapes." But let me tell you, the New Woman has studied physiology. She has learnt that indulgence need not be followed by "consequences." She is a Neo-Malthusian, and knows how over child-bearing leads to the degradation of her sex. How now, Captain Turk? Can she only be innocent when ignorant? or may she not, having your knowledge, fairly say, "Let us be on the same level—not by woman's descent to man's promiscuity, but by man's ascent to woman's fidelity"? For my part, I see the best hopes for human elevation in the New Woman placing a high price upon herself, and insisting on it too.

My conclusion is that the old woman was good—my own particular old woman emphatically so; but the New Woman is better. My own particular old woman is a New Woman. As I have said before, my only objection to the New Woman is that she is too usually old.

UNCLE BENJAMIN.

Digitized by Google

OUR AMERICAN VISITOR.

Mr. S. P. Putnam, the President of the American Secular Union, and the most popular speaker (after Colonel Ingersoll) on the trans-Atlantic platform, will soon be visiting England; and I am sure our party will give him a good old English welcome. Mr. Putnam will stay in the old country about three months, and during that time he ought to speak in most of our big towns. Branches of the N.S.S. who desire—and all should desire—to arrange for a visit from our distinguished visitor should lose no time in communicating with Mr. Charles Watts, who has undertaken to arrange his old friend's lecture-tours. Mr. Putnam has just written to me, and although his letter is not exactly intended for publication, I take the liberty of printing it here for the benefit of my readers:—

> "My Dear Mr. Foote,—I shall set sail for England April 24, in the 'City of Berlin.' It is with great pleasure that I anticipate this visit to England. It has been the dream of my life; and I feel sure that I shall receive a cordial welcome from English friends. It will be a delight to know personally those whom I have read so much about, and whose labors I have watched so closely, and who have carried on the fight so bravely, in which all American Liberals are deeply interested. You know I shall write up my experiences in England for the Truthseeker and Investigator, so that my friends who stay at home may see somewhat with my eyes the great work and progress in your land. I do think this better acquaintance will help us both. We in America need the knowledge of your methods and results. We need to be inspired by your success, which in many things is superior to ours. There are a thousand reasons why I should come to England, the land of my ancestry, with such a wonderful history, and such a wealth of literary and poetic memory, and such marvellous beauty of scenery; but I assure you, after all, the best of reasons with me is to greet the Freethought army, and to mingle with its ranks, to enjoy its comradeship around the camp-fires. I want to see you with all my heart, who have suffered in our cause, and the light of whose struggle has illuminated our battle-fields here. I am sure we shall strike hands with cordial goodwill; and I shall be proud to make known to my countrymen the soldiers of English liberty. Whatever you can do for me as a representative of American Freethinkers will be gladly welcomed, and I hope to serve you to the best of my ability. With kindest regards,—Yours truly,
>
> "Samuel P. Putnam."

Mr. Watts and I intend to meet Mr. Putnam at Southampton. We mean to board the "City of Berlin" and welcome him to the shores of old England. It is also my intention to arrange for Mr. Putnam's occupying the Hall of Science platform on the first Sunday in May, and to take the chair myself on that occasion. The President of the American Secular Union must have the welcome which the National Secular Society would like to see extended to its own President if he visited the New World.

G. W. FOOTE.

TO CHRIST.

Thou bad'st let children come to thee:
What children now but curses come?
What manhood in that God can be
Who sees their worship, and is dumb?
No soul that lived, loved, wrought, and died,
Is this their carrion crucified.

Nay, if their God and thou be one,
If thou and this thing be the same,
Thou shouldst not look upon the sun;
The sun grows haggard at thy name.
Come down, be done with, cease, give o'er;
Hide thyself, strive not, be no more.

—A. C. Swinburne, "Before a Crucifix."

When men are destitute of the critical spirit, when the notion of uniform law is yet unborn, and when their imaginations are still incapable of rising to abstract ideas, histories of miracles are always formed and always believed; and they continue to flourish and to multiply until these conditions are altered. Miracles cease when men cease to believe and expect them.—W. E. H. Lecky.

ACID DROPS.

What a horrible story is that "witch-burning" at Clonmel! We commend it to the attention of Mr. Benjamin Kidd, Mr. A. J. Balfour, and other gentlemen who tell us that human conduct must be based upon "ultra-rational sanctions." There is something peculiarly sickening in all those men seizing hold of one poor woman and subjecting her to such tortures. Her own husband—nay, her own father—helped to hold her over the fire, in order to make her say whether she was a witch or not. "Are you," he asked, "the daughter of Patrick Boland, wife of Michael Cleary?" "I am, dada," the poor creature replied, as the room filled with the stench of her burning flesh. That father, tormenting his "own flesh and blood," called upon her to tell the truth "in the name of God."

When Judge North sentenced Mr. Foote to twelve months' imprisonment, there was a great row in the gallery, and one enraged Freethinker cried out "Damn religion!" What other exclamation is appropriate over this Irish witch case?

"Oh men," cried poor Mrs. Cleary as they took her to the fire, "give me a chance." That is what men have never done. The worst stress of superstition has always fallen upon the weak. A thousand women were burnt for every man during the acute stage of the witch-mania.

The Rev. Z. B. Woffendale is dreadfully annoyed at our "attacks" on the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes. Very likely. There are certain characteristics which these two "reverends" have in common; and was it not Shakespeare who said, "A fellow feeling makes us wondrous kind?"

Mr. Woffendale presumes to give us a "friendly hint." He is a hypocrite to use such an adjective. He states that Mr. Holyoake called Mr. Foote "a secular ruffian." He is a liar to say so. After denying us "a single gleam of wit," he perpetrates the miraculous joke that "Secularism is unfortunate in its foot." Mr. Woffendale is unfortunate in his head.

Jehovah is not half as sharp as Old Nick. When the severe earthquakes occurred some years ago in the South of Europe, several churches were destroyed or badly injured, and in some cases the worshippers were killed by the falling of the "sacred" edifices; but no damage whatever was done at Monte Carlo. During the recent hurricane in our own country an advertisement hoarding beside a Primitive Methodist Chapel at Swindon was blown down. It fell upon several people, one of whom was killed. He was a young man named Farr, a Wesleyan local preacher, who was on his way to conduct a Sunday service, six or seven miles distant, for another local preacher who had been taken ill. A boy of thirteen, who was severely injured, was also on his way to a Methodist Chapel at Gorse Hill. Providence acted on this occasion with its usual blindness.

In The Faith, a Christadelphian organ, E. N. Sheffield writes against the Advanced School. How much E. N. Sheffield knows about it may be judged by the statement: "Though Bradlaugh and Ingersoll without doubt attracted crowds, they were men who, in an unusual way, could make the worse appear the better reason, always an irresistible fascination to the vulgar mind; neither did they ever charge for being heard—a test perhaps that might have proved more crucial than they would have liked."

The Presbyterian Observer says: "The Sultan of Turkey is sending out Mohammedan missionaries to Africa, at his own expense, to check the Christian advance in that continent." The Christian advance, so far as the natives are concerned, has been chiefly an advance backwards. Islam has made ten times more converts among North Africans than has Christianity.

The Rev. C. Ferguson, an Episcopal clergyman of Cohasset, Massachusetts, has taken his stand against the American Bishop's Pastoral Letter. While not venturing to deny the virgin birth of the baby said to have been born in Palestine nearly 1,900 years ago, he declares he cannot teach it as an absolute essential of the Christian faith.

The Rev. C. Ferguson adds: "Nor is it possible for me to say that the Holy Scriptures are inspired of God in a peculiar and miraculous manner, distinguishing them from all other writings. The doctrine that the Bible alone is inspired is, I think, full of dishonor to the power of the Holy Spirit, and full of discouragement to the spirits of living men. And the teaching that it is miraculously and infallibly inspired has been, as an historical fact, the spring of endless sectarian discord and the source of the most deadly kind of intellectual pride—the pride which, exulting in its superior insight, masks under the guise of humble obedience to the Word." Mr. Ferguson will probably be called over the coals and asked either to recant or resign.

Digitized by Google

Lord Kelvin and Professor Perry differ slightly in regard to the age of the earth. His Lordship thinks it is 100,000,000 years old, while the Professor is of opinion that it is 400,000,000. Though it be as old as either says, it will probably last our time with a little repair.

The Koelnisch Zeitung says that Count Hoensbroech, who forsook the Jesuits and was converted to Protestantism, will enter the Prussian diplomatic service under the Emperor's special patronage. This will be a bitter pill for the clericals, to whom Hoensbroech is a constant thorn in the side.

The Rev. M. L. Gates, of Grace M. E. Church, in Jersey City, recently prayed to the Lord to give "the sense and intelligence needed in public affairs to the incoming Congress." In view of our recent experiences, the Rev. Mr. Gates would seem to be crowding the mourners somewhat.

Professor E. Johnson has made a convert of citizen George Francis Train. In the Ironclad Age (March 16), after citing the contradictory accounts of the death of Judas in Matthew and Acts, he says: "Each chapter calls next Liar! Thief! Boodler! Fact is, the Bible is not six centuries old! Born with invention of printing!"

A German statistician looked up the question whether Friday was really unlucky. He found that fewest accidents were recorded on Friday, and most on Monday. Monday's bad record probably follows from Sunday's superstitious sacredness and enforced idleness.

When the French Catholics find any of their old privileges in danger, they begin to call out "persecution." The religious communities have hitherto had their property exempt from taxation, and now that it is proposed that, like other bodies, they shall contribute their share to the support of the State, there is a great outcry. The spectacle of the most intolerant Church in the world declaiming against intolerance is a noteworthy one.

The New York Sun (March 17) has an amusing account of a clock invented by Mr. Vokey Chamberlain, a colored Bible student, to guide the owner to salvation. The clock has 72 minutes to the hour, "for the sufficient reason that twice 72 is 144, and that was the number of the cubits in the measure of the wall, the measure of a man which is an angel (Rev. xxi.)." It says: "The inventor's charts are even more symbolistic. Some of the decorations are of familiar scenes, as one which shows Wall-street, with Trinity Church in the distance. When asked the meaning of this, the inventor replied: 'If the Bridegroom should go into Wall-street, and I should appear before that minute, he might declare me to be an infidel; but my duty would be to love him none the less.' Any one tired of Ibsen and Maeterlinck, and having ten years to spare, might go further into this subject with interest, if not profit."

Mr. J. Keir Hardie, member of Parliament and Christian Socialist, has been holding forth in a Congregational church at Fulham on a far greater Scotsman—Robert Burns. It pleased Mr. Hardie to say that Burns was extremely religious. We know the writings of Robert Burns as well as Keir Hardie does, and perhaps better; but it never struck us that religion was his speciality. Keir Hardie admits that Burns laughed at "what passed for religion in those days," but contends that "he never scoffed at Christianity as taught in the New Testament." Didn't he though? Isn't hell fire taught in the New Testament? Isn't salvation by faith? Isn't predestination? Isn't free grace? And didn't Robert Burns laugh at these delicacies of the Christian menu? Why, his hearty laughter shook the religion of Scotland to its very foundations; and it was something like laughter to do that.

Mr. Keir Hardie went on, in his illogical, sentimental way, to talk of Freethinkers as the best Christians. "The men who were living nearest to the ideal life to-day," he observed, "were the men who spurned the very names of Church and Christianity; men who called themselves Atheists to repudiate their connection with professing Christians who were mere hypocrites." Mr. Hardie is really catching the twang of the "advanced" Nonconformist tabernacle. It doesn't occur to him that men do not merely call themselves Atheists, but are Atheists. This is a horrid thought to a man like Keir Hardie. When the Socialist millennium arrives, we shall all have plenty of leisure, perhaps two Sundays a week; and oh! what opportunities we shall enjoy of sitting for whole hours and listening to the addle-headed Christianity of the millennial preachers, of whom Keir Hardie will assuredly be Archbishop, unless Hugh Price Hughes—or even Tom Mann or Ben Tillett—cuts him out in the general election for that holy office.

Lady Herbert, of Lea, having done "Six Weeks in Russia," is, of course, competent to write on the subject in the Catholic Dublin Review. She finds Russia very religious, and thinks nothing of political prisoners in Siberia or the persecution of the Jews. "Certainly," she says, "our Lord reigns in Moscow, receiving there the homage due to his Divine majesty as in no other city in the world." "In no country in the world is there greater devotion to the Blessed Virgin than in Russia." "Our Lord reigns in Moscow" reminds us of Czar Nicolas's "Peace reigns in Warsaw," after ruthlessly suppressing an insurrection.

Lady Herbert, of Lea, finds that "every thinking man and woman in Russia desires a renewal of union with the Holy See." Perhaps, if she had stayed a little longer, she might have learnt a little better. She is disgusted with the fact that the ecclesiastical ruler of Russia, the Procurator, is a layman, but reflects with joy that even he is not immortal, and hopes that a change may soon come. She adds in a note the curious hope that the enormous number of requiem masses and prayers offered for the late Czar may "convince our Protestant country men and women of the necessity of such sacrifice for their beloved dead."

Amelia Payne, an elderly Clapham lady, is a fervent pietist, and indulges in loud interjections of "Amen" in the responses at St. Savior's, Cedars-road, Clapham. She is also alleged to sing louder than the rest of the congregation, and to have been the cause of its diminishing. She was brought up before the South-Western Police Court, and though she pleaded that she went to church to pray to God, and not to please men, she was fined forty shillings and costs for brawling.

The School Board Chronicle mentions a decree of the Catholic Bishop of Nottingham to the effect that a parent guilty of sending his children to a Board school imperilled the welfare of his soul in the life to come, and quotes Dr. Sparrow, of Liverpool, who says that to send children to a non-Catholic school is as great a sin as to send them to steal in the streets.

Francis Clark, the chief of the "Christian Endeavor" movement, writes to the American Review of Reviews that respect for America and Americans has sadly waned in Europe. Moreover, and worst of all, American Stock has gone down in European markets. Of course his remedy is "Christian Endeavor." We fancy the cause lies in the corrupt plutocracy of America, which can atone for anything by building churches and subscribing to religious societies. It is this kind of Christian endeavor that has helped to bring America into disrepute.

The Rev. H. R. Haweis, who gets a good living by subscribing to doctrines he does not preach, writes in the North American Review on "The New Pulpit." According to him, the new pulpiteer will preach anything and everything except the old book. He says: "If only the preacher knew it, the whole world belongs to him. The time is past when he need knot his discourse with texts. If he leaves a few out, no one will miss them, any more than Bible readers notice the entire omission of the word 'God' in the book of Esther."

The Ritualists complain much of the anti-Ritualists invoking the law against them; but it appears from The History of the English Church Union, by the Rev. G. Bayfield Roberts, that this High Church Union offered £500 to the Archbishop of York towards the expenses of the prosecution of the Rev. C. Voysey for heresy. They only object to law when invoked against themselves.

"Nunquam" of the Clarion, as we expected, pokes great fun at Price Hughes's important discovery that he has been "captured" by the High Church party. Mr. Blatchford says that he did dine with four parsons, and that he will be just as happy to dine with four Dissenting ministers, if they will give him a slice of good beef and listen to his talk about Socialism. It appears to "Nunquam" that the Methodist Times men are "amongst the funniest dogs that ever wagged a tail" (Ah, "Nunquam," they do worse than that!). Finally, the Clarion editor promises an early chapter on "Marc's Nests."

The British Weekly laments that since the Saturday Review has changed hands it is no longer a Christian paper. Under Mr. Beresford Hope it was sacerdotal. Now it has reverted to Freethought, which, to some extent, pervaded it when John Morley and Sir Fitzjames Stephen were contributors. The B. W. mentions with reprobation an article on Death, which concluded thusly: "Mortal man and the immortal protozoa have the same barren immortality; the individuals perish, living on only in their descendants, creatures of their body, separated pieces of their undying protoplasm; the type alone persists." This is flat Materialism.

Digitized by Google

St. Mary's Church, Port Elizabeth, South Africa, has been rendered a complete wreck by fire. The Lord took no care of his house, but his servants had it heavily insured.

Pierre Loti has been giving an account of a recent visit to Jerusalem in La Nouvelle Revue. He was mostly struck by the modernness and European hotel atmosphere of the holy city. He finds specially odious the hawkers who flooded the hotels with cheap "objects of piety" and so-called souvenirs of the holy places. The souvenirs are, after all, probably more genuine than the holy places themselves.

Rev. Dr. H. S. Lunn finds arranging for religious pilgrimages, picnics, and reunions more profitable than preaching the Word. He announces a lot of tours this summer, and is going to bring over to London a pilgrimage from the Women's Christian Temperance Union of America, an organisation which looks over Jesus turning water into wine at Cana, and seeks to bring God into the American constitution.

Secularism is triumphing all along the line. The Churches are infected with its spirit, and so are the religious newspapers. We take up the Christian World, for instance, and scan its front page. It contains eight leading articles, and every one of them is on a social or political topic. Religion is relegated to the inside of the paper, which doesn't meet the public eyes as it rests upon the counter or is displayed in the window.

The triumph of Secularism is shown in many other ways. We have always denounced the doctrine of hell-fire and everlasting burnings. Well, the clergy themselves are beginning to follow suit. A famous Nonconformist, the Rev. Silas Hocking, has been preaching at Southport from the text, "They limited the Holy One of Israel," and in the course of his sermon he said that "some people" talked as though Christ had been a failure, as though the world had been wrecked and the Lifeboat had just managed to save a few, and as though heaven was nearly empty and hell crowded. Mr. Hocking believes that God will gather his children home, and that the great majority will not be faggoted for the flames. So far, so good; but heaven and hell, except as they exist on earth, are only fancies after all.

Daniel Hall Western, a Croydon wine and spirit merchant, who suffered from religious mania, committed suicide by hanging himself in his loft. He left a letter in which he said, "Oh, God! why was I born? The Lord hath formed all things for himself, even the wicked for the day of evil." A text like this is well calculated to upset the mind of anyone who really believes it.

The power of the parson is breaking, and Dissenting ministers have to mind their p's and q's. Formerly they used to preach against sinners wholesale and retail; now they have to drop the retail department. Down at Southsea a publican named Pitts has recovered £75 damages against the Rev. Charles Joseph, a Baptist minister, for slander. Alas! how are the mighty fallen! Pity the sorrows of a poor man of God who can no longer mount the pulpit and give his free, unbiassed opinion of every man's character in the parish.

The Free Church Congress has been confabulating at Birmingham, and amongst the subjects discussed was "Modern Biblical Scholarship in its Bearing on Christian Thought and Faith." Dr. Agar Beet read a paper on this topic, in which he said that the Bible was not a revelation, but the record of a revelation. This is very much like a conundrum, and we give it up. We understand Dr. Beet better when he admits that the Bible contains mistakes. There he touches solid ground, and we can follow him with intelligence—and pleasure.

One of the Free Church Congress speakers, the Rev. H. T. Andrews (Swansea), boasted that Biblical research had "spiked the guns of the enemy," by having rendered obsolete and useless the old infidel attacks upon the Bible. This is a pretty way of putting it, but metaphors are proverbially dangerous. We should put it in this way: the infidels have battered down the fort of Bible infallibility, and the Christians have abandoned a ruined position. We have other batteries, quite up to date, for attacking other forts. Our guns are playing away merrily, and as we destroy fort after fort the Christian defenders, who retreat towards their citadel of "God," are entirely welcome to the comfort of boasting that we can't batter them there any more.

Count Tolstoi, the Russian novelist who has turned prophet, is in high favor with the "advanced" Christians in this country. Even the Christian World says that "between the Christianity of the Russian prophet and that of Rome and Canterbury lies the great fight of the future." We don't think so, but let us see what the statement implies. Count Tolstoi's latest work is upon the Four Gospels, which he "harmonises," like a good many previous writers, though the worst of it is that there is no harmony amongst the "harmonies." But the remarkable thing is that Tolstoi gives up all the miracles, including the Incarnation. He simply clings to the teaching of Jesus. What he has now to consider is that all Jesus taught was taught before he was born.

It is evident that the churches are getting shaky about the deity of Jesus Christ, and that Messrs. Diggle and Riley were correct in their suspicions of those who objected to the London School Board circular on religious education. Over in the United States the Bishops of the Episcopal Church had put forth a Pastoral Letter on the Incarnation and the Inerrancy of Scripture, in which the birth of J. C. from a virgin is insisted upon as of overwhelming importance to the human race. Whereupon our English Christian World points out that St. Paul never heard of the immaculate conception, and that if two chapters in Matthew and Luke were lost we should never have learnt anything about the immaculate conception from all the rest of the New Testament.

The Open Court, of Chicago (March 21), says: "The latest statistics of India show that among the inhabitants of the country there is one convicted criminal to every 274 European Christians, to every 509 Euro-Asiatics (the children of European fathers and native mothers), to every 709 native Christians, to every 1,361 Hindu Brahmans, and to every 3,787 Buddhists. Accordingly, as a matter of fact, European Christians furnish comparatively the greatest amount of criminals, and Buddhists the fewest.

Margaret Shiell, aged twenty-one, a machinist, of 83 Great Cambridge-street, Hackney-road, drowned herself in the Eagle Pond at Snaresbrook. The poor girl left a letter for her father, stating that she had been accused of unchastity with "three fellows." Her brain, she said, was on fire, and she hoped God would forgive her. At the coroner's inquest Dr. Collins, divisional surgeon of police, testified that the deceased could not have been guilty of unchastity. "My daughter," said her father, "has been attending the mission-room attached to the church, where a lot of backbiting, bickering old women attend." The jury returned a verdict of "Suicide whilst insane," but the verdict should have been "Killed by Christian charity."

The organ of the Hall of Science libellers complains that the cruel Atheists put in an execution to recover the damages (with costs) awarded in the Court of Queen's Bench. Surely the whining of these fellows is most pitiable. The damages could have been recovered the next day after trial, and the costs as soon as taxed; yet they were allowed a month's grace, and the execution was only put in when their solicitors gave no answer to the Atheists' solicitors' application for a settlement. The execution cost the libellers about £12 in addition to the £145 of taxed costs and damages. All this is very sad. But those who publish atrocious libels, and glory in them, and express not a word of regret even when they are branded by a jury in a court of justice, are simply dastards to cry out for "mercy."

Let us take a few samples of these men's tender consideration for others. Their organ prints as its own a part of the verbatim report of the trial taken from the Freethinker. It gives all the filthy insinuations against the Secularists in Mr. Murphy's cross-examination, and then says that "the nature of the evidence" forbids it to give the rest. Next it hints that Mr. Smith committed perjury in the witness-box, and finally it informs the public—or rather its public, which is a more limited affair—that Mr. Foote receives "a big commission on the sale of atheistic felt hats." It is impossible to fathom the baseness or the folly of these Nazarenes. Nor do we intend to notice them any further unless they give us another opportunity of dragging them before the bar of justice.

Before leaving them on this occasion we may repeat that the fellow Powell, who first uttered that stinking libel on the Hall of Science, left the editor, printer, and publisher in the lurch, and the two cronies are now lying (or perhaps telling the truth) about each other in the most amusing fashion. The contemptible bearer of the great name of Bradlaugh actually states that the fellow Powell is a member of the National Secular Society. This is silly enough for anything, even for the libellers' own organ. We light a cigarette at this point, just to drown the smell.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Foote's Engagements.

Sunday, April 7, Hall of Science, 142 Old-street, London :—"The Death of God and the Life of Humanity."

April 14, Hall of Science, London ; 17 and 18, debate at New Brompton with the Rev. A. J. Waldron (C.E.S.) ; 21, Glasgow ; 28, Sunderland.

May 8 and 9, debate at Derby with Mr. Lee (C.E.S.).

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Mr. Charles Watts's Engagements.—April 7, Sheffield ; 14, Liverpool ; 21, Hall of Science, London ; 28, Hall of Science, London. May 5, Glasgow ; 12, Dundee ; 19, Manchester.—All communications for Mr. Watts should be sent to him (if a reply is required, a stamped and addressed envelope must be enclosed) at 81 Effra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

L. Levine (Charleston).—Many thanks for your papers. See paragraphs.

C. Aarstad.—Papers always welcome.

C. B.—Luke xxiii. 56 indicates that the apostles, after Christ's death, kept the Jewish Sabbath. See, too, Acts xiii. 44, xvii. 2, xviii. 4.

E. W. Bhacey.—We lost the Spencer legacy of £500 that was left to Charles Bradlaugh and George Payne for the Manchester Secularists. Some years previously we lost some property at Bolton. Owing to the state of the law, which renders legacies for Freethought propaganda invalid, men of means are often afraid to make uncertain bequests ; the result is that we lose thousands of pounds, which would otherwise be promoting Secularism. Mr. Manfield, Member for Northampton, introduced a Bill to remedy this state of things, but it never reached the second reading. Mr. Bradlaugh introduced a Bill to abolish the Blasphemy Laws altogether, but it was only supported by forty-five members in the House of Commons. While opinions are held to be criminal, the judges are bound to treat legacies to promote them as invalid. If the end is illegal, the means are also illegal.

A. Brycerson.—General satisfaction is felt at the disappearance of the Club at the Hall of Science. We had anticipated your suggestion, and shall guard against the danger.

E. G. Watson.—Thanks for cutting.

W. H. Hollick.—Thanks. See paragraph. Mr. Foote is in first-rate health.

G. Gee.—Your verses are too pessimistic, and death is a hackneyed theme in versification. Try something a little more inspiriting.

N.S.S. Benevolent Fund.—Miss E. M. Vance acknowledges :—Balance Children's Party, £2 1s. 9d. ; Sale of Literature, per Mr. O. Dawson, 7s. 10d. ; Nottingham Branch, 5s. ; T. Carne, 6s.

E. D. H. Daly.—Cuttings always welcome.

J. Stacey.—Freethought institutions, as such, cannot be endowed, because the law holds their objects to be illegal. This follows from the Statute of William III. and the Common Law of Blasphemy. The Buddhist Ray was published at Colombo, Ceylon. We have not seen it for some time.

W. Scrivener.—Does it really matter whether he speaks every Sunday or not ?

Jas. Neate.—See paragraph. The policy of reconstruction will be very carefully considered.

A. G. Levett.—Thanks for cuttings.

J. W. Kennedy.—We may treat the subject at greater length by-and-by.

T. Ballam.—The Clonmel witch case is a good illustration of what would happen if the Bible were as influential as it was once.

W. M. Knox.—It is scarcely in the way of our special public. Is it ?

Papers Received.—Cape Argus—Eastern Province Herald—Port Elizabeth Gazette—Echo—Looker On—Clarion—Non-Sectarian—Illustrated American—Review of Reviews—New York Sun——Liberator—Calcutta Statesman—Two Worlds—Truthseeker—Crescent—Liberty—Open Court—Boston Investigator—Forum Library—Freidenker—Der Arme Teufel—Independent Pulpit—Birmingham Daily Post—Torch—Freethinkers' Magazine—Church Reformer.

Friends who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish to call our attention.

Lecture Notices must reach 28 Stonecutter-street by first post Tuesday, or they will not be inserted.

Letters for the Editor of the Freethinker should be addressed to 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Correspondence should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

Orders for literature should be sent to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

The Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the publishing office, post free, at the following rates, prepaid :—One Year, 10s. 6d. ; Half Year, 5s. 3d. ; Three Months, 2s. 8d.

Scale of Advertisements.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d. ; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements :—One inch, 4s. 6d. ; half column, £1 2s. 6d. ; column, £2 5s. Special terms for repetitions.

THE HALL OF SCIENCE.

Mr. R. O. Smith has at length sent me a definite answer, which will be considered by the Board of Directors at its next meeting, a few hours after this issue of the Freethinker goes to press. My anticipation is that the Directors will accept Mr. Smith's offer, which is identical with the one he made early in January and afterwards withdrew. I shall be in a position on Sunday evening to make a definite announcement at the Hall of Science, and I invite all who are interested in the maintenance of our headquarters to be present on that occasion.

Mr. Smith complained at the last meeting of the Board that my statement about the negotiations with him was incomplete and inaccurate. I should be very sorry to do him an injustice, but he did not convince us that his complaint was well-founded, and as he has not put it formally in writing I do not see that I can give him any satisfaction.

G. W. FOOTE.

SUGAR PLUMS.

There was a large and enthusiastic audience at the London Hall of Science on Sunday evening, when Mr. Foote lectured on "New Light on the Old Book." Owing to the delay in the negotiations with Mr. Smith, Mr. Foote was unable to make a complete announcement as to the future of the institution, but he will certainly do so this evening (April 7) before or after his lecture on "The Death of God and the Life of Humanity."

Mr. Charles Watts had a most successful day last Sunday in Newcastle-on-Tyne. He had a particularly fine audience in the afternoon to listen to his debate with Mr. Lynn, the vice-president of the local Christian Evidence Society. Mr. Watts speaks very highly of the gentlemanly manner in which his opponent conducted his share of the debate. The audience warmly applauded both disputants. A lengthy discussion also followed the lectures in the morning and evening.

To-day, Sunday, April 7, Mr Watts lectures three times in Sheffield, when he will be glad to see friends from the surrounding districts.

At the last meeting of the National Secular Society's Executive, on Thursday, March 28, the place for holding the Annual Conference on Whit-Sunday was under discussion. Nottingham and Bristol had the largest number of votes, the former being one ahead of the latter ; but, as Nottingham had not stated that it could positively secure a suitable hall for the evening meeting, the Executive unanimously decided that the Conference should be held at Bristol. The West of England has had but one Conference, that held at Plymouth in 1884, and such an important part of the country ought not to be neglected. In the circumstances, we hope the Nottingham friends will not be impatient. They had set their hearts on having this year's Conference in their city, but they will, in all probability, only have to wait until next year to have a great foregathering of the "saints" under their auspices.

The West of England has produced its share of front-rank men in the Freethought party. Richard Carlile, who suffered more than nine years' imprisonment, was a native of Devonshire ; G. W. Foote was born and bred in the same county ; and Charles Watts was born and bred at Bristol.

We earnestly appeal to the Secularists all over the kingdom to make the Whit-Sunday Conference a great success. Branches of the N.S.S. should begin immediately to arrange for their being represented by bond fide delegates. Bristol is a fine, busy city, and there is some splendid scenery in its neighborhood.

Freethinkers will all be glad to hear that Mr. Daniel Baker, of Birmingham, the oldest next to Mr. Truelove of our N.S.S. vice-presidents, is recovering from his recent severe attack of influenza. Mrs. Baker, who is still older than her husband, was down at the same time with this fell disorder, but she also is now on the road to recovery. We saw Mr. Baker in bed at his residence, as soon as he had taken a favorable turn, and we told him that we had booked him for the Annual Conference. All the delegates will be delighted to see him there.

Digitized by Google

The Nottingham Branch sends us its report and balance-sheet for 1894–5. The committee seem full of zeal, and earnestly invite the support of all local Freethinkers. Reference is made to the courses of lectures by Messrs. Foote and Watts, and to the return of Mr. Snell to Nottingham. We have great hopes of Mr. Snell, and we shall be glad to hear that he is taking a leading part in the work of the Nottingham Branch.

In spite of repeated evictions, the Derby Branch of the N.S.S. has succeeded in securing another room for meetings, this time at Pollicott's (late Bocsey's) Dining Rooms, Market-place, where meetings will be held on the first Sunday in each month. The last meeting was a decided success, and, several strangers being present, it was felt to be a great encouragement to the members. A few more friends, a little heartier support, and Derby could be counted as a Secularist stronghold.

Mr. C. Cohen begins his month's mission at Newcastle to-day (April 7). His inaugural meeting is an open-air one on the Quayside at 11 in the forenoon. We strongly appeal to the local Secularists to rally round him on this occasion. They should protect him by their presence from the disorder that may be attempted by the baser sort of Christians.

The Bethnal Green Branch, at a special meeting last Sunday, congratulated Mr. Foote on the success of the Hall of Science libel action, which "must have a great effect on our propaganda." It also resolved to call upon all members of the Branch to do their utmost in spreading the report of the trial. Further, it expressed satisfaction at the closing of the late Hall of Science Club.

The Isle of Dogs is a very unromantic locality. But a Progresive Club is doing good work there, and it has invited the N.S.S. to send some Freethought lecturers down on Sunday mornings. Mr. Robert Forder opens the ball this morning (April 7) at 11.30, his subject being "Why I am Not a Christian." The Progressive Club is situated in Stebondale-road, Cubitt Town.

The Manchester Branch held its Annual Meeting on Sunday last, and it was satisfactory to find that the Branch is in a better condition, financially, than it was this time last year. This is mainly to be attributed to the hard and harmonious way in which the Committee, as a body, has worked. The outlook for the coming season is brighter, and shows every sign of being one of increased activity. Mr. Ring, the treasurer, has been very unwell for a considerable time now, but he was persuaded to again accept office, as were also all the other officials.

The seventh Annual Soiree and Ball of the Hull Branch was entirely successful, so far as the enjoyment of the company was concerned. About one hundred persons joined in the proceedings.

Freethinkers who wish to spend a jolly evening on Good Friday should visit the Battersea Secular Hall. There will be a musical and dramatic entertainment, and plenty of dancing. Tickets (3d. each) can be had at the hall. The services of vocalists or instrumentalists will be gladly accepted.

Mrs. Emily Adams, writing in Secular Thought (March 16) on "Equal Suffrage for Men and Women," points out that it was in the dark ages, when Christianity was triumphant, that woman's lot was worst, and that her emancipation has largely been achieved by Freethinkers. She mentions Frances Wright, Lucretia Mott, Ernestine L. Rose, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Matilda Joslin Gage, Susan B. Anthony, Harriet Martineau, John Stuart Mill, and others, as deserving of honor for their work in the movement.

The same number of Secular Thought reprints the poem, "Down with the Barriers," by Mr. E. B. H. Stephenson, from our columns.

CHILDREN'S PARTY.

The following additional sums have been collected and paid to the Treasurer:—S. B., 3s.; per J. Fagan, 10s.; per Mr. Clifton, 3s.; B. Waterhouse, 5s. The balance-sheet, which has been audited and passed by the Committee, showed receipts £23 18s. 8½d., and after paying all expenses there remained £4 3s. 6d. This surplus has been divided between the Benevolent Fund and the London Secular Federation.

R. Forder (Treasurer).

SOME OF THE DEVIL'S PROPERTY.

Far back in the history of our island, when life in the country districts was lonesome and monstrous and there existed but scanty communication with the outside world, when education was unknown and science unheard of, and at a time when every manifestation of Nature other than ordinary was ascribed to supernatural power, there were created what are now known as legends, traditions, and weird stories of immortals, both evil and good. Life in the rural parts of England has scarcely possessed great attractions for those whose tastes have been uncultivated and knowledge crude, and therefore the superstitious beliefs and practices of village communities may have been the means of affording some colour to their surroundings, relieving the dull progress of the weeks, months, and years, and of rendering existence, if not exactly romantic, at least tolerable. Many of these fairy stories, students of folk-lore tell us, can be traced back to pre-Christian times, while others have their birth in the days when England was kept ignorant and superstitious by the rule of Roman Catholicism. The duty of the antiquary is to discover from what circumstances these legends arose; this having been done, the moral and intellectual state of the country at any particular period can more easily be fairly determined. Of especial interest are the traditions respecting the Devil, his escapades, and the performances of his attendant demons; for at a time when his fiery majesty is being consigned to the background of theology, and his pretended existence ridiculed by the leading lights of the Church, it is both curious and instructive to learn what a very terrible reality he was to our ancestors, how the fear of his displeasure influenced their actions, making them pay as much deference to his supposed wishes as those of their Deity, and in what manner his records have been preserved and handed down from generation to generation with holy awe and a sense of religious duty.

If all the landmarks, freaks of nature, and other curiosities of the earth's surface in the United Kingdom with which the Devil's name is connected can be taken to imply that the fiend's ownership of them is established, then the question whether the Devil's domains extend outside the "lower regions" is definitely settled. At any rate, the naming of the places indicates the Devil's patronage, and, in many cases, his workmanship. Scarcely can the traveller visit the quietest little nook of the country without learning from the simple folk of the Devil's agency in the district, and many of the tales which are told him of the local operations of the Prince of Darkness are interesting as well as being highly amusing. In other instances the legendary accounts related are of an instructive character.

To the former category belongs the legend of the Devil's Dyke, near Brighton. From the top of the noble hill at the rear of the town, it will be remembered, a vast and beautiful expanse of country is witnessed, and it was here that the Devil, glancing over the fertile weald and noting the numerous church spires shooting skyward betwixt the trees, determined upon a base scheme of destruction. One night he commenced to carry into execution his terrible plan, which was to cut a channel through the downs and let in the sea on the level plain below. He toiled arduously at his task, and when completion was not far distant the noise of his gigantic labors awakened an old woman, who immediately guessed the design of the fiend. She lit a candle and placed it in her window, and the Devil, mistaking this for the rising sun, forsook his work and fled.

A deep "combe" in the hill represents the extent and nature of the Devil's nocturnal exertions. Unlike the dyke at Brighton, the Devil's Dyke (or ditch) on Newmarket Heath and the Devil's Dyke near Andover, in Hampshire, are ancient earthworks. Localities which the Devil was supposed to frequent, probably owing to their gloomy and weird appearance, include, according to Mr. R. Bruce Boswell, a writer on "Footprints of the Devil in Our Own Country" in a recent issue of the Pall Mall Magazine, "the Devil's Island, which frowns over Muckross Lake, Killarney; a Devil's Glen in Wicklow, as well as in Wales; the Devil's Point at Plymouth; the Devil's Water, a tributary of the Tyne, near Hexham; the Cave of Devil's at Little Orme's Head; the Devil's Pit at Cadgewith, Cornwall; a Devil's Hole in Jersey; and another near Lough Erne, in Ireland. On Marlborough Downs there is a dolmen, or cromlech, known as the Devil's Den; and at Castleton, in Derbyshire, is a cavern called the Devils Cellar. To find the Devil's Kitchen we must go to Llyn Idwal, in North Wales; to mount his Staircase one must visit Glencoe; and his Chimney is within an easy walk of Cheltenham." There is also a cavern in the north-western part of Derbyshire called Devil's-ass-o'-the-Peak.

Digitized by Google

Of Devil's bridges there are a number. A noted one is to be found in Cardiganshire, and is known as Pont-y-Mynoch; another can be traversed at Morben, also in Wales; while England has the privilege of the possession of one at Wensley Dale. The Devil's highway, tower, battery, cheesering, mill, pulpit, frying-pan, spoon, cauldron, punchbowl, lime-kiln, bellows, throat, head, elbow, and mouth are to be found in other parts of the country, thus showing that his person and his property are of a fragmentary character.

In a good many cases the legends which give the Devil a connection with the places indicated are not lacking of the comic element. The boulders which are found near Studland, in Dorsetshire, are supposed to have fallen out of the demon's possession under the following circumstances: The Devil was carrying an enormous rock through the air for the purpose of casting it at Salisbury Cathedral, against which he had his anger aroused on account of its great architectural grandeur. Unable to carry the weight to its destination, he was forced to let the huge mass fall on Studland Heath, where it remains to the present day a solid testimony against those who discredit the Devil's reality.

Another queer story comes from Cumberland. It is said that the Devil desired to build a bridge from the mouth of the river Irt to the Isle of Man. He carried a huge stone across the country to the coast in his apron, the string of which was tied round the burden as a security; but ere his purpose could be accomplished the wind arose and took the rock out of his grasp; the apron string was broken, but the mark of it can still be seen upon the stone. Another tale in which the Devil's apron plays a conspicuous part is connected with Wensleydale, aforementioned, where there is a wide chasm, near which are the remains of a structure representing yet another of the Devil's failures. While collecting stones wherewith to build a bridge, the unfortunate constructor lost the all-necessary apron, which apparel was carried away into the stream to the Kail Pot, a deep cauldron which has ever since continued to boil and bubble.

Apparently, the infernal king has a decided penchant for stones. The writer quoted from above says: "Zoit's mill, near Liebechwitz, Germany, was haunted at night by the Devil, who was in the habit of using one of the stones to grind down his hoofs. On one occasion a young fellow employed at the mill lay in wait for the fiend, and spied him at his work, but dearly paid for his pains, for the Devil seized him and held his hinder parts to the grind-stone till he had lost at least half of them. Another of the miller's men, however, who was older and wiser, came upon the intruder unawares, and this time it was the Devil himself whose posteriors suffered curtailment; while, later on, a clever lad tied him up in a sack, in spite of all his struggles, and threw him into the mill pond, which put an end to his pranks." After which who will henceforth deny those who proclaim "the Devil is dead"? Notwithstanding this legend, the generality of stories do not represent the Devil as half a bad fellow. His pranks were, at the most, innocent amusements, and if some of his designs were not carried into actual execution, who will say that we are not the sufferers? Our ancestors, seemingly, kept his majesty fully employed on the earth, with a view, perhaps, of prevention from torment in other quarters. Now-a-days his exact geographical location is impossible to determine, and men of knowledge have hitherto failed to apportion any part of the solar system for his realms. Anyhow, if only on account of the interesting traditions of his former exploits, a place should be carved for him in our memories, and his cloven foot, goat's beard, cock's feather, ox's tail, horned head, and pitchfork should ever be revered.

FRED WILSON.

I know no great men but those who have rendered great services to humanity.—Voltaire.

THE JEWS AND PROPHECY.

THE condition of the chosen race is often adduced as a proof of the truth of Bible prophecies. Are they not, indeed, a hissing and a bye-word? Is not the punishment for the rejection of their Messiah manifestly upon them? Well, we are not so sure of that. The Jews are, on the whole, healthier and wealthier than other races, and Christians have had a knack of fulfilling prophecy themselves, as far as persecution is concerned.

If we look at some of the plainest of the Bible prophecies regarding the Jews, we shall see that, manifestly, they are not fulfilled. Take the first: "And the Lord said unto Abraham, after that Lot was separated from him, Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art, northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward; for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed for ever" (Genesis xiii. 14, 15). Do the seed of Abraham possess the whole of this land at present, or does for ever mean a very limited period?

The next prophecy is the following: "And I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth; so that, if a man can number the dust of the earth, then shall thy seed also be numbered." Are the chosen ones as numerous as the dust of the earth, or did Jehovah object to David taking a census because any census must disprove his promise?

In Genesis xv. 13 we find the next prophecy concerning the seed of Abraham: "Know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, and shall serve them; and they shall afflict them four hundred years." Doubtless this prophecy was written long after the sojourn in Egypt—if the Jews ever were there. Yet the prophecy cannot be made to tally with the story, which gives only two hundred and fifteen years for that sojourn; as, moreover, during the life of Joseph and of the Pharaoh that knew Joseph, the Jews were favored, the oppression of the Jews could not have extended to half the period named in the prophecy.

The next prophecy with regard to the Jews is to be found in Genesis xxii. 18: "In thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." Well, this is a whopper! The blessed Jews were commanded to slaughter and destroy other nations wholesale. Were the Canaanites blessed in the seed of Abraham, or are we to-day? Oh, it is said, we are blessed through Christ, who came of the seed of Abraham to save the world. We fancy history shows he brought not peace, but a sword; but, anyway, his coming did not bless those who died before him.

The curses against the Jews, on which Christians lay stress, are found in chapters xxviii. and xxix. of Deuteronomy. Let us see if they are, indeed, fulfilled. Take, for instance, the plain verse: "The Lord will smite thee with the botch of Egypt, and with the emerods, and with the scab, and with the itch, whereof thou canst not be healed" (Deut. xxviii. 27). Is it true that Jews all have these incurable complaints, or are they not healthier than Gentiles?

Perhaps the most ridiculously false of these prophecies is the prediction in verse 44: That the stranger "shall lend to thee, and thou shalt not lend to him." Whereas the very reverse is, and long has been, the case.

CELSUS.

Obituary.

WE have to record the death of Mr. Joseph Brown, one of the N.S.S. vice-presidents, and secretary of the N. E. Secular Federation. Mr. Brown worked too hard for Freethought and all sorts of advanced movements. His health gave way, and finally he was stricken with brain-disease, which is incurable; and it is some consolation, therefore, to know that his troubles and sufferings are over. He was a man of lofty integrity, and full of devotion to his ideals; a brave volunteer in the army of progress.

DIED at Walsall, Mr. E. A. Scholey, well known for many years as an advanced Radical, a temperance reformer, and a Freethinker. He carried on the business of a second-hand bookseller, and, when no free library existed, established a sort of semi-public reading room, and placed his wide knowledge of books at the disposal of the young men who gathered round him. He had been a friend of Thomas Cooper, Ernest Jones, and the leading Chartists.

A VETERAN Freethinker and supporter of Mr. Bradlaugh has passed away in the person of Mr. George Priestley, of Rochdale, at one time president of the Rochdale Secular Society. He died on March 23, and was buried in Rochdale Cemetery on the 28th.

In Rome in 1849 I visited myself every convent. I was present at all the investigations. Without a single exception we found instruments of torture, and a cellar with the bodies of infant children.—Guiseppe Garibaldi.

Digitized by Google

LECTURE BY MOSES.

(Delivered at the Convocation of Animals assembled outside the Ark on April 1, 4000 B.C.)

Now all you animals are about to start on a voyage of discovery, and there is a certain amount of uncertainty as to where you are going, how long you will be away, when you will start, and what will become of you generally. Now you will have the supreme advantage of sailing in an ark that is commanded by my most excellent friend, Mr. Noah. Probably no man living has had the experience in sailing one of these delightful pleasure boats possessed by my aged friend; for is it not an undisputed fact that he has worked the route between the "Cock," at Kilburn, and the Mansion House for the past four hundred years? (Hear, hear.) Now, one thing that I wish most particularly to impress upon you is that, if any of you should feel a kind of sinking sensation when you arrive in the middle of the Serpentine, be sure you immediately call for Shem, Ham, or the other son of my worthy friend, who will bring you with celerity the white china basin. (Loud cheers.) By paying attention to these instructions, you will obviate the necessity of frequently swabbing down the decks; and I might add in passing that a sea-sick elephant is no joke. Your meals will be served most regularly, and it is hoped that the lions and tigers will bear in mind that there are only two sheep on board, and will treat them with respect, for it is very much to be desired that so useful and intelligent a breed of animals should not be allowed to die out. (Hear, hear.) With regard to your luggage, the firm of Noah & Sons will take the greatest care of any articles of value deposited with them; but they give you most distinctly to understand that they will not hold themselves responsible for the negligence of any of their servants, or for the thieving propensities of Shem, Ham, and the other Johnnie. The elephant is expected to take care of his own trunk, and the male domestic fowl will look to his own comb; the robber of poultry yards is also expected to keep an eye on his brush, otherwise it may be used by the pelican for brushing the sand off his boots in the desert, or by the owl in the wilderness, or possibly by the common or garden sparrow to pick his teeth when engaged in relieving the monotony of sitting all alone upon a housetop. And now, as time is pressing, it behoves me to bring this short address to a close. (Loud and prolonged cheers.) I have only to wish you a long, happy, and prolonged voyage, a happy Christmas, and a glad New Year. May your shadows never grow less, and may the Lord look sideways upon you. Farewell, and mind the varnish. (Roaring, barking, trumpeting, etc.)

—Fairplay.

A BUDDHIST STORY.

In the first volume of the Jataka; or, Stories of the Buddha's Former Births, edited by Professor E. B. Cowell, is one which illustrates the roguery practised under pretence of religion. One of the Buddhist brethren was found to be a hypocrite, and the Buddha told how he had a similar disposition in a former incarnation. Ages ago a certain rat was king of the rats in the forest. This rat was a Bodhisatta—this is, a being on the road to Buddhahood.

"Now, there was a roving jackal who espied this troop of rats, and fell to scheming how to beguile and eat them. And he took up his stand near their home with his face to the sun, snuffing up the wind, and standing on one leg. Seeing this, when out on his road in quest of food, the Bodhisatta conceived the jackal to be a saintly being, and went up and asked his name. '"Godly" is my name,' said the jackal. 'Why do you stand only on one leg?' 'Because if I stood on all four at once, the earth could not bear my weight. That is why I stand on one leg only.' 'And why do you keep your mouth open?' 'To take the air. I live on air; it is my only food.' 'And why do you face the sun?' 'To worship him.' 'What uprightness!' thought the Bodhisatta, and thenceforward he made a point of going, attended by the other rats, to pay his respects morning and evening to the saintly jackal. And when the rats were leaving, the jackal seized and devoured the hindermost one of them, wiped his lips, and looked as though nothing had happened. In consequence of this, the rats grew fewer and fewer, till they noticed the gaps in their ranks, and, wondering why this was so, asked the Bodhisatta the reason. He could not make it out, but, suspecting the jackal, resolved to put him to the test. So next day he let the other rats go out first, and himself brought up the rear. The jackal made a spring on the Bodhisatta, who, seeing him coming, faced round and cried, 'So this is your sainthness, you hypocrite and rascal.' . . . . The king of the rats sprang at the jackal's throat, and bit his windpipe asunder just under the jaw so that he died. Back trooped the other rats and gobbled up the body of the jackal with a 'crunch, crunch, crunch'—that is to say, the foremost of them did, for they say there was none left for the last comers. . . . This hypocritical Brother was the jackal of those days, and I the King of the rats."

It is noteworthy that, although bloodshed of any kind was a deterrent to the attainment of Buddhahood, nevertheless the Bodhisatta, or Buddha, in an earlier incarnation, deemed it right to destroy the hypocritical jackal who used piety as a pretence to gain his own ends.

WANTED—A FACT.

Ah, parsons are solemn, and grave, and wise!
But still, when I sit in some cushion'd pew,
My lashes will droop o'er my half-shut eyes,
And I can't help wishing the service thro'.

For they dish up miracles not a few—
With dogmas galore is the discourse pack'd;
But I long for talk that's a trifle new,
And I'd give all creeds for a single fact.

They ask me to swallow such ancient lies,
With fictions and stories each phase imbue;
They dwell on the gourd of stupendous size
That up over Jonah so quickly grew.

And by pictures the old-time prophets drew
My spirit is tortured, my brain is rack'd.
And I'm tired of their texts and tenets, too,
And I'd give all creeds for a single fact.

And so, when I listen, I can but rue
That rarely the preachers will seek to rise
Up into the heights of the brave and true,
Away from the darkness their faith implies.

But seldom they offer to serve in lieu
Real knowledge, the world has always lacked;
So when they hold forth I'm exceedingly blue,
And I'd give all creeds for a single fact.

ENVOI.

And silent they are when I humbly sue
For legends with proof and the vouchers back'd;
But still they must know it's my simple due,
And I'd give all creeds for a single fact.

—Freethinkers' Magazine. NELLY BOOTH SIMMONS.

Boys, Don't Copy David.

"All men are liars," said the sweet singer of Israel, otherwise the good David (Psalm cxvi. 11), and thus gave utterance to what he conceived a great truth. Knowing his character, he judged others by his own standard. David was consistent, even in his dying moments, with the vile conception he had formed of his fellows. At such a moment, the eyes dim, memory nearly gone, his hates should have been forgotten, in view of the awful change he knew was coming on him. He had called Solomon before him, whom he made his successor, and instructed him how to conduct himself towards God, so he should prosper in all he did. The death sweat on his brow, the heart beating languidly, he turned to his loving son: "Thou knowest Joab. . . . Let not his hoar head go down to the grave in peace." Scarcely able to speak, he stammered on: "When Shimei surrendered to me at Jordan, I swore to him by the Lord, saying, I will not put thee to death by the sword . . . . but his hoar head bring thou down to the grave with blood." These were David's last and dying words. The narrative continuing: "So David slept with his fathers" (1 Kings ii.).

We pray our youthful readers not to copy after this David, who was a man after God's own heart, for revenge and kindred passions should end at the grave at least. Those kings of Israel must have been a bad lot.—Progressive Thinker.

The Christian world has something to learn at this day, even from the Atheist; for he asks entire freedom for human nature; freedom to think, freedom to will, freedom to love, freedom to worship, if he may—not to worship, if he will not.—Theodore Parker.

The virtuous man is he whose actions tend uniformly to the welfare, constantly to the happiness of his fellow creatures. The vicious man is he whose conduct tends to the misery, whose propensities form the unhappiness of those with whom he lives, from whence his own peculiar misery most commonly results.—D'Holbach.

Digitized by Google

BOOK CHAT.

Some of the poems by Mr. Lowell which are to appear in the forthcoming collection made by Professor Norton have never been printed. The editor has written an introduction for the volumes, and for a frontispiece it will have a new etched portrait of the poet.

* * *

Omar Khayyam, the Persian Freethinking poet, will ever be known to English lovers of literature by the incomparable translation of Edward Fitzgerald. There is, however, in addition to the scholarly translation by Mr. Whinfield and the pretentious one by Mr. J. H. McCarthy, an American translation by Mr. John Leslie Garner, published at Milwaukee. Mr. Garner is no poet, but his work is done with sympathy and scholarship. There is a French translation of Omar by M. Nicholas, and a German one by F. Bodenstedt. Some of the quatrains have been rendered into Dutch by one of our friends on the editorial staff of De Dageraad.

* * *

Shakespeare's plays have been translated into the Armenian language, and the translation will soon be published in Russia.

* * *

Messrs. Remington and Co. will begin, early in April, the publication of a new series of foreign classics, edited by Mr. Sonley Johnstone. The first issue will be volume one of Molière's Comedies, to be followed, at monthly intervals, by La Rochefoucauld's Maxims, Corneille, Boileau, Voltaire, Racine, etc. Each volume will contain a short history of the author's life and work.

* * *

That Monster, the Higher Critic, by Marvin R. Vincent, is a brochure showing the untenability of the old views of inspiration. The author gives an explanation of what the "Higher Criticism" really is, and offers a vigorous defence of its rights. "Let it be plainly understood—and the sooner it is understood the better for all parties—that criticism, Higher Criticism, has come to stay, and to fight if necessary."

* * *

We see announced as issued by the Industrial Publication Co., of New York, The Natural History of Hell, being a discussion of some of the relations of the Christian plan of salvation to modern science, by John Phillipson.

* * *

It is notable that the Quarterly Review, in noticing Mr. Froude's Erasmus, says that the three most notable men of letters during the Christian era were Augustine, Erasmus, and Voltaire. Of these the first may be said to have established Christian dogmas, the second to have diluted them with reason, and the third to have destroyed them.

* * *

Professor J. M. Baldwin, of Princeton College, has written a work on Moral Development in the Child and the Race. The book is published by Macmillan & Co.

* * *

The Familiar Letters of Thoreau, edited with an introduction and notes by Frank B. Sanborn, has been issued by Houghton, Mifflin, & Co., of Boston.

* * *

The third volume of the late Canon Liddon's Life of E. B. Pusey reveals the morbid asceticism of this devout religionist. He writes to Keble: "Amid special mercies and guardianship of God, I am scarred all over and seamed with sin, so that I am a monster to myself; I loathe myself; I can feel of myself only like one covered with leprosy from head to foot."

* * *

The London Quarterly is shocked at the disclosure: "Such highly-colored and self-loathing pictures of penitential experience, such confessions of inward sin and guiltiness, are not to be found, so far as we know, in any modern biography, scarcely even in the confessions of such penitents as Bunyan, John Nelson, or Newton of Olney. They are profoundly pathetic, but it almost makes one shudder to read them."

* * *

The L. Q. continues: "He regarded himself as a penitent who had greatly sinned after baptism, and who could only obtain peace through confession and absolution. His wife's death he regarded as a direct punishment for his sins, and his suspension as a preacher as a providential chastisement for his 'secret faults.' The death of his daughter also was a punishment for his sins. His illness was another stroke of punishment from the hand of God.

* * *

"One of Pusey's rules of discipline was not to smile. Among an infinite number of details, he resolved 'to wear haircloth always by day unless ill; to use a hard seat by day and a hard bed by night; not to wear gloves or protect his hands; to eat his food slowly and penitentially,' 'making a secret confession of unworthiness to use God's creatures before every meal.'" Jesus, we are told, was a man of sorrows, and most of his devoted followers have indeed been miserable creatures.

* * *

That ancient Rome was brought to a state of ruin rather by the Christians than by the Pagan barbarians was shown last year by Signor Lanciani, the eminent archæologist, in the Strand Magazine. The recently-published translation, by Annie Hamilton, of F. Gregorovius's History of the City of Rome in the Middle Ages shows that Gregorovius is of the same opinion; and no higher authority could be given. Goths are still blamed for what Roman Christians themselves did. The historian points out that the gradual process by which the city was stripped of its beauties and laid in ruins could not have been the result of disconnected wars. What really happened was that the people changed in their feeling towards the art and architecture which they beheld around them. They turned their backs upon Pagan civilisation, stripped the temples of the old gods, and used the materials for their own churches. When the noblest ceased to care for the rites and symbols of the old religion, it did not take the ignoble long to lay hands on ancient things for new uses. Many a priceless bronze was turned into old metal by those to whom sculptors were only objects of superstition.

* * *

The Literary Guide (Watts & Co.) for April is an excellent number. The supplement is a summary of Graham's Creed of Science—a book which can hardly be called new, and which the summariser (who does his work well) praises far above its merits. The Guide attributes a volume of poems by George Anderson to a gentleman whose name is familiar in Freethought circles. This is a mistake. The poet is another George Anderson, and his verses are lauded extravagantly under a misapprehension.

* * *

Mr. A. B. Moss's Christianity and Evolution was noticed in our columns at the time of its first publication. His publishers (Watts & Co.) now issue a "cheap popular edition" at one shilling. We hope it will have a much wider circulation in the new form. Mr. Moss has put his best thought and knowledge into this volume.

PROFANE JOKES.

Aunt—"Don't you say your prayers at night?" Willie—"Nope! I ain't afraid with a light in the room."

Mr. Longtext—"Johnny, can you tell me where the bad little boys go?" Johnny—"Yes, sir; to Sunday-school, when there's going to be a picnic."

Two little children looking at the moon one evening, the younger asked: "Is the moon God's wife?" Older child (patronisingly)—"No, you silly child. God is a bachelor."

She—"I wonder why Eve was not created before Adam?" He—"Oh, that's simple. The Lord knew that, if he made woman first, he'd never be able to make a man to suit her."

Miss Dogood—"You are very active in charity work, Miss Slumly, but how is it you never visit Rat-alley or Tumble-down-lane?" Miss Slumly—"You know, my dear, I belong to St. Dives' Church, and it owns all that part of the town."

Parson (condoling with widower on death of his wife)—"The Lord has indeed seen fit to afflict you. The last time I saw you your cattle were dying of pleuro, and now I hear a more grievous calamity has befallen you." Widower—"Aye; there ain't even a hide to sell this time."

Farmer—"That new hand's a fraud. He's only ploughed one furrow, and then laid down and gone to sleep." Wife—"What excuse does he make?" Farmer—"He says he believes in going according to Scripture, and that when a man puts his hand to the plough he should never turn back."

First Beggar—"Where did you get that fine overcoat?" Second do—"At the big house at the corner." First do—"Why, I went there only this mornin' shiverin' with cold, and dey wouldn't gimme a rag." Second do—"Oh, ah! but I didn't ask for clothes for myself. I told 'em it was fur the pore heathen in darkest Africa."

Deacon Sassafras (a Hardshell Baptist)—"I have just been reading about a man who was killed by lightning while playing base-ball on Sunday in Kentucky. There's a jedgment for you!" Hiram Oatcake—"I don't know about its bein' a jedgment; a church near by was struck and destroyed at the same time." Deacon Sassafras—"That doesn't cut any figure. It was a Presbyterian church."

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY LECTURE NOTICES, ETC.

[Notices of Lectures, etc., must reach us by first post on Tuesday, and be marked "Lecture Notice," if not sent on post-card.]

LONDON.

HALL OF SCIENCE (142 Old-street, E.C.): 6.30, musical selections; 7, G. W. Foote, "The Death of God and the Life of Humanity." (Admission free; reserved seats 3d. and 6d.)

BATTERSEA SECULAR HALL (back of Battersea Park Station): 7.45, Robert Shaw, "Radicalism v. Socialism." (Free.) Tuesday, at 8, social gathering. Thursday, at 8, committee. Good Friday, at 8, entertainment and dance. (Tickets 6d.)

CAMBERWELL (North Camberwell Hall, 61 New Church-road): 4, members' general meeting; 6, tea and soirée.

FINSBURY BRANCH: 12, important members' meeting at 120 St. John-street, Clerkenwell.

ISLINGTON: 3, special business meeting at secretary's, 19 Alwyne-road, Canonbury.

WEST LONDON ETHICAL SOCIETY (Princes' Hall, Piccadilly): 11.15, Dr. Stanton Coit, "The Popular Belief in a Higher Power."

WEST LONDON BRANCH ("Yorkshire Stingo," Silver-street, Notting-hill-gate): Tuesday, at 8.30, business meeting.

WEST HAM SECULAR ETHICAL SOCIETY (61 West Ham-lane): 6.15, discussion class; 7.15, J. Veitch, "That Man Survives Physical Death."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BATTERSEA PARK GATES: 11.30, W. J. Ramsey, "Mansions in the Sky."

HAMMERSMITH BRIDGE (Middlesex side): 7, S. E. Easton, "Under which Flag?" Thursday, at 6.30, F. Haslam, "How I Became a Secularist."

HYDE PARK (near Marble Arch): 11.30, S. E. Easton, "Under which Flag?" 3.30, "Some Bible Stories."

MILE END WASTE: 11.30, W. Heaford, "Why we Do Not Believe in Christianity."

OLD PIMLICO PIER: 11.30, F. Haslam, "History of Our Times."

VICTORIA PARK: 3, J. Marshall will lecture.

WOOD GREEN (Jolly Butchers' Hill): 11.30, Stanley Jones, "The Soul and Science"; 7, "The Origin of the Bible."

COUNTRY.

BIRMINGHAM (Coffee House, corner of Broad-street): Thursdays, at 8, papers, discussions, etc.

BLACKBURN: 3, members' meeting at secretary's house.

CHATHAM SECULAR HALL (Queen's-road, New Brompton): 11, J. B. Coppock, F.C.S., "The Life Growth of a Plant"; 7, "The Nervous System"—with lantern.

DERBY (Pollicott's Dining Rooms, Market-place): 7.45, Mr. Wright, "God and the Devil."

GLASGOW (Ex-Mission Hall, 110 Brunswick-street): 12, discussion class; 6.30, J. Ritchie, "Criticism and Gospel History."

IPSWICH (Co-operative Rooms, Cox-lane): 7, members' meeting.

LIVERPOOL (Oddfellows' Hall, St. Anne-street): 11.30, quarterly meeting of Tontine Society; 7, Ernest Newman, "Mr. Balfour's Foundations of Belief."

MANCHESTER SECULAR HALL (Rusholme-road, All Saints): 6.30, C. Doeg, "The Best of all Possible Worlds." (Free.)

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE (Northumberland Hall, High Friar-street): 3, C. Cohen, "The Scientific Basis of Morals"; 7, "Religion or Freethought."

ROCHDALE (Working Men's College, 4 Acker-street): 6.30, Sam Standring, "Bel and the Dragon"; 8, Branch meeting.

SHEFFIELD SECULAR SOCIETY (Hall of Science, Rockingham-street): 11, Charles Watts, "Trust in God a Delusion"; 3, Religion with and without Theology"; 7, "Theism Tested and Found Wanting." Tea at 5.

SOUTH SHIELDS (Captain Duncan's Navigation Schools, King-street): 7, important business meeting.

SUNDERLAND (Lecture Room, Bridge End Vaults, opposite Echo office): 7, Robert Weightman, "The Bible and Common Sense."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

DERBY (Market-place): 6.45, Mr. Briggs will lecture.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE (Quayside—weather permitting): 11 C. Cohen, "Christianity."

ROCHDALE (Town Hall Square): 11, Sam Standring, "Some Events of the Week"; 3, "St. Matthew's Gospel."

Lecturers' Engagements.

STEPHEN H. ALLISON, Sunnyside, 72 Union-grove, Clapham, London, S.W.—April 28, Manchester. May 5, Sheffield.

C. COHEN, 12 Merchant-street, Bow-road, London, E.—April 7, 14, 21, 28, Newcastle-on-Tyne. May 2, Wood Green; 5, m. Mile End, a. Victoria Park, e. Edmonton; 9, Wood Green; 12, Sheffield; 19, Manchester; 26, Wood Green; 26, m. Finsbury Park, a. Victoria Park, e. Wood Green; 30, Wood Green.

STANLEY JONES, 53 Marlborough-road, Holloway, London.—April 7, m. and e. Wood Green; 14, m. Pimlico Pier, a. Hyde Park, e. Camberwell; 28, m. Battersea. May 5, e. Battersea.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Croydon-road, Rotherhithe, London.—April 14, m. Mile End, a. Victoria Park; 21, m. and a. Hyde Park, e. Hammersmith; 28, m. Camberwell. May 5, a. Finsbury Park; 12, m. Mile End, a. Victoria Park; 19, m. and a. Hyde Park, e. Hammersmith; 26, Clerkenwell.

FISH, FISH, FISH.—Bassos of SELECTED FISH sent on receipt of P.O. 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., and 5s., carriage paid. Premier Fish Supply Co., Fish Docks, Grimsby.

TO FREETHINKERS.—Ladies and Gentlemen requiring SUPERIOR CUT GARMENTS at moderate prices. First-class Style and Fit Guaranteed.—H. HAMPTON, Artiste Tailor, 14 Great Castle-street, W. (three doors from Regent-street). Patronised by leading Freethinkers.

NEW AND SECONDHAND FURNITURE, Sewing Machines, Pianos, Pictures, China, etc. Good and Cheap. Call and see stock. GEORGE SMITH, 15 Railton-road, Brixton, S.W.

Wanted—Instrumental Musicians

To join the National Secular Society's Orchestra now forming. No pay. Reply by post-card, stating name or initials, address, and instrument played, to "Orchestra," office of this paper, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Freethought Publications.

Crimes of Christianity. Vol. I. By G. W. Foote and J. M. Wheeler. Hundreds of exact references to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.

Chapters:—1, Christ to Constantine; 2, Constantine to Hypatia; 3, Monkery; 4, Pious Forgeries; 5, Pious Frauds; 6, Rise of the Papacy; 7, Crimes of the Popes; 8, Persecution of the Jews; 9, The Crusades. Cloth, gilt, 216 pp., 2s. 6d.

Bible Handbook for Freethinkers and Inquiring Christians. Edited by G. W. Foote and W. P. Ball. Complete, paper covers, 1s. 4d.; superior edition, on superfine paper, bound in cloth, 2s.

The Jewish Life of Christ. Being the Sepher Toldoth Jeshu, or Book of the Generation of Jesus. With an Historical Preface and Voluminous Notes by G. W. Foote and J. M. Wheeler. Paper covers, 6d.; superior edition, superfine paper, cloth, 1s.

Bible Studies. Essays on Phallic Worship and other Curious Rites and Customs. By J. M. Wheeler. Illustrated, superior paper, 2s. 6d.

Biographical Dictionary of Freethinkers of All Ages and Nations. By J. M. Wheeler. Handsomely bound in cloth, 7s. 6d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Works by Colonel R. G. Ingersoll.

SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES. The only complete edition in England. Accurate as Colenso, and fascinating as a novel. 182 pp. 1s. Superior paper, cloth 1s. 6d.

DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT. A Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy. 6d.

THE GODS. 6d.

REPLY TO GLADSTONE. With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler. 4d.

ROME OR REASON? A Reply to Cardinal Manning. 4d.

CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS. 3d.

ORATION ON WALT WHITMAN. 3d.

ORATION ON VOLTAIRE. 3d.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. 3d.

PAINE THE PIONEER. 2d.

HUMANITY'S DEBT TO THOMAS PAINE. 2d.

ERNEST RENAN AND JESUS CHRIST. 2d.

TRUE RELIGION. 2d.

THE THREE PHILANTHROPISTS. 2d.

LOVE THE REDEEMER. 2d.

GOD AND THE STATE. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part I. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part II. 2d.

FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Dr. Field. 2d.

GOD AND MAN. Second reply to Dr. Field. 2d.

THE DYING CREED. 2d.

THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION. A Discussion with the Hon. F. D. Coudert and Gov. S. L. Woodford. 2d.

THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH. 2d.

ART AND MORALITY. 2d.

DO I BLASPHEME? 2d.

THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE. 2d.

SOCIAL SALVATION. 2d.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE. An Agnostic's View. 2d.

SKULLS. 2d.

THE GREAT MISTAKE. 1d.

LIVE TOPICS. 1d.

MYTH AND MIRACLE. 1d.

REAL BLASPHEMY. 1d.

REPAIRING THE IDOLS. 1d.

CHRIST AND MIRACLES. 1d.

CREEDS & SPIRITUALITY. 1d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Read "THE TRUTH SEEKER."

MONTHLY, PRICE 1D.

Edited by JOHN GRANGE.

Of all Newsagents to order. Wholesale, Mr. Forder.

Just published, price 4d., by post 5d.,

WAS CHRIST A POLITICAL AND SOCIAL REFORMER?

BY CHARLES WATTS

(Vice-President of the National Secular Society).

London: Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each; upper or lower set, £1. Best Quality, 4s. each; upper or lower, £2. Completed in four hours when required; repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above, they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18 ct. gold, 15s.; stopping, 2s. 6d; extraction, 1s.; painless by gas, 5s.

Digitized by Google

ALLINSON FOR HEALTH.

HOME CONSULTATIONS—10 a.m. to 1 p.m., 10s. 6d.; 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., 5s. Patients Visited.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. I. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Management of Infancy, Health, Longevity, The Teeth, Tobacco, The Drink Question. Also the Cause and Cure of Disease, Constipation, Biliousness, Eczema, Blackheads and Pimples, Nervousness, Coughs and Colds, Chest Complaints, Deafness, Thread Worms, Long Worms, Tape Worms, The Itch, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. II. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on The Healing Power of Nature, Urine, Saline Starvation, the Hair and its Management, Sleep and Sleeplessness, Want of Energy, etc. Advice for the Thin, for the Stout; Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. III. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on No More Death, Management of Young Children, Unsuspected Domestic Poisons, How to Grow Tall, to Keep Warm, to Live One Hundred Years, to Improve the Memory, and to become Beautiful and Attractive. On the Cause and Cure of Stomach Troubles, Flatulence, Sleepiness, Varicose Veins, Boils and Carbuncles, Sebaceous Tumors and Worts, Hay Fever, Winter Cough, Childbirth, Epilepsy, and on the Diseases Produced by Taking Mercury.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. IV. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Hardening, Work and Overwork, Sugar and its Abuse, Milk as Food, the Tomato, Poultices, Quinine, Against the Knife, Arsenical Poisoning, Tonics, Against Stimulants in Disease, about Swallowing Pins and other Articles. Also Cure of Sunstroke, Dog Bites, Pains in the Back, Pediculi or Lice, Chicken-Pox, Synovitis or Inflammation of the Joints, Tonsilitis or Quinsy, Herpes (Tetter or Shingles), Erysipelas, Ulcer of the Stomach, Epidemic Influenza, Sciatica, Psoriasis or English Leprosy, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. V. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Pure Water, The Mouth, Its Use and Abuse; Rules for the Aged, Training, Blood Letting, Nose Bleeding, Felon or Whitlow, Ingrowing Toenail, Gum Boil, Cold in the Head, a Red Nose, Flushing and Blushing, Toothache, Sore Mouth, St. Vitus' Dance, Goitre, Mumps, Inflamed Eyes and Eyelids, Fits, Fainting, Apoplexy, Spitting and Vomiting of Blood, Vomiting, Wounds, Burns, Scalds, Bruises, etc.

The Five Volumes, strongly and neatly bound, price 6s. 9d., post free.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.—An Eye Opener to Drug Takers.
RHEUMATISM: ITS CAUSE AND CURE. Post free for 9d.
DIET AND DIGESTION. Post free for 9d.
CONSUMPTION: ITS NATURAL CURE. Post free 9d.
All these Books, bound in One Vol., post free, 3s. 6d. Send Postal Order.

THREE PAMPHLETS FOR YOUNG MEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.
A BOOK FOR MARRIED WOMEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

All communications to be addressed to—

DR. T. R. ALLINSON,
4 Spanish-place, Manchester-square, London, W.

THE BEST BOOK

ON NEO-MALTHUSIANISM IS, I BELIEVE,

TRUE MORALITY, or THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF NEO-MALTHUSIANISM.

By J. R. HOLMES, M.M.L., M.V.S., M.N.S.S.

160 pages, with portrait and autograph, bound in cloth, gilt lettered. Price 1s., post free.

 In order to bring the information within the reach of the poor, the most important parts of the book are issued in a pamphlet of 112 pages at ONE PENNY, post free 2d. Copies of the pamphlet for distribution 1s. a dozen post free.

The National Reformer of 4th September, 1892, says: "Mr Holmes' pamphlet . . . is an almost unexceptionable statement of the Neo-Malthusian theory and practice . . . and throughout appeals to moral feeling. . . . The special value of Mr. Holmes' service to the Neo-Malthusian cause and to human well-being generally is just his combination in his pamphlet of a plain statement of the physical and moral need for family limitation with a plain account of the means by which it can be secured, and an offer to all concerned of the requisites at the lowest possible prices."

The Council of the Malthusian League, Dr. Drysdale, Dr. Allbutt, and others have also spoken of it in very high terms.

The Trade supplied by R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C. Other orders should be sent to the author.

J. R. HOLMES, HANNEY, WANTAGE, BERKS.

W. J. Rendell's "Wife's Friend"

Recommended by Mrs. Besant in Law of Population, p. 32, and Dr. Allbutt in Wife's Handbook, p. 51. Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell-street, Clerkenwell; 2s. per doz., post free (reduction in larger quantities). For particulars send stamped envelope.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

BEWARE of useless imitations substituted by some dealers and chemists, the words "Rendell & Co." and "J. W. Rendall" being specinualy and ulansibly introduced to deceive the public.

LOOK FOR AUTOGRAPH REGISTERED TRADE MARK

W. J. Rendell
No. 182,688.

IN Red INK ON EACH BOX, WITHOUT WHICH NONE ARE GENUINE.

Higginson's Syringe, with Vertical and Reverse Current, 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 5s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. Dr. Allbutt's Quinine Powders, 3s. per doz. All prices post free.

W. J. RENDELL, 15 Chadwell-st., Clerkenwell, E.C.

221 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d., post free,

FLOWERS OF FREETHOUGHT

(FIRST SERIES)

BY

G. W. FOOTE.

CONTENTS:—

Old Nick	Judgment Day	The Logic of Persecution
Fire!!!	Huxley's Mistake	Luther and the Devil
Sky Pilots	The Gospel of Freethought	Bible English
Devil Dodgers	On Ridicule	Living by Faith
Fighting Spooks	Who are the Blasphemers?	Victor Hugo
Damned Sinners	Christianity and Common Sense	Walt Whitman
Where is Hell?	The Lord of Lords	Desecrating a Church
Spurgeon and Hell	Consecrating the Colors	Tennyson and the Bible
Shelley's Atheism	Christmas in Holloway Gaol	Christ's Old Coat
Long Faces	Who Killed Christ?	Christ's Coat, No. 2
Our Father	Did Jesus Ascend?	Scotched, Not Slain
Wait Till You Die	The Rising Son	God-Making
Dead Theology	St. Paul's Veracity	God and the Weather
Mr. Gladstone on Devils	No Faith with Heretics	Miracles
Is Spurgeon in Heaven?		A Real Miracle
God in Japan		Jesus on Women
Stanley on Providence		Paul on Women
Gone to God		Mother's Religion
Thank God

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Works by G. W. Foote.

Bible Heroes. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Letters to the Clergy. First Series. 128 pp., 1s.

The Grand Old Book. A Reply to the Grand Old Man. An exhaustive answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture." 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Christianity and Secularism. Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Is Socialism Sound? Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 2s.

Infidel Death-Beds. Second edition, much enlarged, 3d. On superfine paper, in cloth, 1s. 3d.

Darwin on God. 6d.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s.

Will Christ Save Us? A Thorough Examination of the Claims of Jesus Christ to be considered the Savior of the World. 6d.

Reminiscences of Charles Bradlaugh. 6d.

A Defence of Free Speech. Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes. 4d.

Comic Sermons and Other Fantasias. 8d.

Rome or Atheism—the Great Alternative. 3d.

Letters to Jesus Christ. 4d.

Interview with the Devil. 2d.

Philosophy of Secularism. 3d.

Atheism and Morality. 2d.

My Resurrection. A Missing Chapter from the Gospel of Matthew, discovered by G. W. Foote. 2d.

The Folly of Prayer. 2d.

Ingersollism Defended against Archdeacon Farrar. 2d.

Was Jesus Insane? A Searching Inquiry into the Mental Condition of the Prophet of Nazareth. 1d.

Christianity and Progress. A Reply to Mr. Gladstone. 2d.

The Impossible Creed. An Open Letter to Bishop Magee on the Sermon on the Mount. 2d.

What was Christ? A Reply to J. S. Mill. 2d.

The Bible God. 2d.

Salvation Syrup; or, Light on Darkest England. A Reply to General Booth. 2d.

Is the Bible Inspired? A Criticism on Lux Mundi. 1d.

The Dying Atheist. A Story. 1d.

The Rev. Hugh Price Hughes's Converted Atheist. A Lie in Five Chapters. 1d.

Mrs. Besant's Theosophy. A Candid Criticism. 2d.

Secularism and Theosophy. A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant. 2d.

The New Cagliostro. An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky. 2d.

Bible Romances. New Edition. Revised and largely re-written. (1) The Creation Story, 2d.; (2) Eve and the Apple, 1d.; (3) Cain and Abel, 1d.; (4) Noah's Flood, 2d.; (5) The Tower of Babel, 1d.; (6) Lot's Wife, 1d.; (7) The Ten Plagues, 1d.; (8) The Wandering Jews, 1d.; (9) Balaam's Ass, 1d.; (10) God in a Box, 1d. (11) Jonah and the Whale, 1d.; (12) Bible Animals, 1d.; (13) A Virgin Mother, 2d.; (14) The Resurrection, 2d.; (15) The Crucifixion, 1d.; (16) John's Nightmare, 1d.

The Shadow of the Sword. A Moral and Statistical Essay on War. 2d.

Royal Paupers. Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty. 2d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

FIRE

SALE ENDS APRIL 20.

Don't miss some of the Bargains.

A Few 21s. Parcels, carriage paid; worth 42s.

No. 1.—2 Suit Lengths or 4 Trousers' Lengths, good quality.
No. 2.—1 Black Figured and 1 Heavy All-Wool Navy Serge Dress Length; tip-top quality.
No. 3.—1 Suit Length and 1 Dress Length, any color or make.
No. 4.—Blankets, Sheets, Quilt, Table-cloth, Belt, Apron, Purse, etc.
No. 5.—Mixed Lot of Goods for Ladies' and Gentlemen's wear.

TROUSERS TO MEASURE 7s. 6d. Per Pair.

Round waist .....
Round seat.....
Inside leg seam.....
Outside leg seam .....
Thigh .....
Knee .....
Bottom .....
Lined or Unlined .....
(Lined 6d. extra.)
Color .....

NEW PATTERNS FOR SPRING

NOW READY. WRITE AT ONCE.

They Include all the Latest Novelties for both Ladies' and Gentlemen's Wear.

LEADING LINES—

10s. 6d. Trousers to Measure.
35s. Black & Indigo Serge Suits.
Pure Wool Dress Materials, in Pretty, New Designs.
Boys' Sailor Suits 4s. each.

J. W. GOTT, 2 & 4 UNION-STREET, BRADFORD.

302 pp., superior paper, bound in cloth, 2s. 6d. post free,

FLOWERS OF FREETHOUGHT

[Second Series]

BY

G. W. FOOTE.

CONTENTS:—

Luscious Piety
The Jewish Sabbath
God's Day
Professor Stokes on Immortality
Paul Bert
Converting a Corpse
Bradlaugh's Ghost
Christ and Brotherhood
The Sons of God
Melchizedek
S'w'elp me God
Infidel Homes
Are Atheists Cruel?
Are Atheists Wicked?
Rain Doctors
Pious Puerilities
"Thus Saith the Lord"
Believe or be Damned
Christian Charity
Religion and Money
Clotted Bosh
Lord Bacon on Atheism
Christianity & Slavery
Christ Up to Date
Secularism and Christianity
Altar and Throne
Martin Luther
The Praise of Folly
A Lost Soul
Happy in Hell
The Act of God
Keir Hardie on Christ
Blessed be ye Poor
Converted Infidels
Mrs. Booth's Ghost
Talmage on the Bible
Mrs. Besant on Death and After
The Poets and Liberal Theology
Christianity and Labor
Dueling
An Easter Egg for Christians
Down Among the Dead Men
Smirching a Hero
Kit Marlowe and Jesus Christ
Jehovah the Ripper
The Parson's Living Wage
Did Bradlaugh Backslide?
Frederic Harrison on Atheism
Save the Bible!
Forgive and Forget
The Star of Bethlehem
The Great Ghost
Atheism and the French Revolution
Pigottism
Jesus at the Derby
Atheist Murderers
A Religion for Eunuchs
Rose-Water Religion

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

THOMAS PAINE'S WORKS.

The Age of Reason. New edition, with Preface by G. W. FOOTE. 1s.

Miscellaneous Theological Works. 1s.

Complete Theological Works. (Including the Age of Reason.) Cloth, 2s. 6d.

The Rights of Man. Centenary edition. With a Political Biography by J. M. WHEELER. 1s.; bound in cloth, 2s.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price 1s., post free,

SATIRES AND PROFANITIES

BY

JAMES THOMSON (B.V.)

(Author of "The City of Dreadful Night").

Contents:—The Story of a Famous Old Jewish Firm (Jehovah, Son, and Co.)—The Devil in the Church of England—Religion in the Rocky Mountains—Christmas Eve in the Upper Circles—A Commission of Inquiry on Royalty—A Bible Lesson on Monarchy—The One Thing Needful.

"It cannot be neglected by any who are interested in one of the most pathetic personages of our time."—Academy.
"As clever as they are often profane."—Christian World.
"Well worth preserving."—Weekly Dispatch.
"Reminds one of the genius of Swift."—Oldham Chronicle.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price 1s. 6d.; superior edition, superfine paper, cloth, 2s., post free.

The Bible Handbook

FOR FREETHINKERS & INQUIRING CHRISTIANS.

BY

G. W. FOOTE AND W. P. BALL.

Sold also in separate parts as follows:—

1.—Bible Contradictions. The contradictions are printed in parallel columns. 4d.

2.—Bible Absurdities. All the chief absurdities from Genesis to Revelation, conveniently and strikingly arranged, with appropriate headlines, giving the point of each absurdity in a sentence. 4d.

3.—Bible Atrocities. Containing all the godly wickedness from Genesis to Revelation. Each infamy has a separate headline for easy reference. 4d.

4.—Bible Immoralities, Indecencies, Obscenities, Broken Promises, and Unfulfilled Prophecies. 4d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Printed and Published by G. W. FOOTE, at 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

VOL. XV.—No. 15. SUNDAY, APRIL 14, 1895. PRICE TWOPENCE.

WAS HE CRUCIFIED?

EVERY one has heard of the sailor who was looking into a shop-window at a picture of Jesus Christ agonising upon the cross. As he was looking a Jew came up, and the sailor knocked him down. The son of Israel picked himself up, and inquired the reason of such treatment. "Didn't you damned Jews crucify him?" said the sailor. "Oh," said the smarting Hebrew, "that was a long time ago." "Never mind," replied Jack, "I only heard of it yesterday."

The story of the Crucifixion has been the making of Christianity. It is full of moving incident and thrilling pathos. Children, who knew nothing of tragedies and martyrdoms, have followed Jesus in imagination from Gethsemane to Calvary, and his sufferings have become associated with their earliest feelings of pity, and, through pity, of affection. Had the Prophet of Nazareth ascended to heaven like Elijah, without tasting a bitter death; had he even died of some disease, however terrible and excruciating, and risen from the dead after such a decease; he would never have become the object of such profound sympathy. Death from disease is common. It is a violent death that excites attention. And when the violence is inflicted on an innocent man, whose sufferings are depicted with considerable art and invested with awful mystery, it is no wonder that the story should gain a supreme hold upon the human mind—particularly when we remember that it is so carefully pressed upon every fresh generation, in its susceptible childhood, when the feelings are unblunted, and the imagination is at the mercy of accident or authority.

Considering the nature of this story, it is curious how its chief incident—the death of Jesus—is commemorated by millions of professed Christians. According to the Gospels there was a huge eclipse during the Crucifixion; or, as Christian poets have said, the sun veiled its face at the insult offered to its God. But other times bring other manners; and, as the Jew said, the Crucifixion was such a long time ago. Christians call the anniversary of their Savior's death Good Friday. No sign of sadness appears upon their countenances. They seem to say "Let us eat, drink, and be merry, for to-day he died." And certainly they do drink. It is a glorious opportunity for the publicans as well as the sinners.

How few of these merry-making Christians ask themselves how it is that Good Friday is a shifting anniversary. Jesus Christ must have died (if he ever lived) on a particular day, and the day should be punctually celebrated. Shakespeare's death always occupies the same place in the calendar. Jesus Christ's death has to be fixed every year by astronomical calculations. Such a fact is enough to make us ask whether his death is really an historical fact.

It is no answer to this question to point to the circumstantial character of the Gospel narrative. Art is always more circumstantial than history. Look at the wonderful details of Robinson Crusoe. Observe the vivid portraiture of Hamlet and Othello. Does it not make them more real to us than many of the persons with whom we are intimately acquainted? Yet they are creatures of imagination. The highest art conceals the traces of art. In the language of paradox, its productions are more natural than nature itself.

The art of the Gospels is not so great as the art of Shakespeare. It does not satisfy the intellect and imagination that are fortified by experience. To the critical investigator it reveals grave flaws, wide discrepancies, and serious self-contradictions. One reason for these defects is, that the picture of Christ was not the work of a single master-hand. It was the work of many hands, in several generations. The first sketches, which seem for ever lost, grew into a finished design, not in a private studio, but in a public school. Fresh touches were constantly being given by daring artists, until orthodoxy checked any further development. The picture satisfied the simple and uncritical, but the keen-eyed and reflective see its composite character, and notice the botches of the original designers under the improvements of later and more finished artists.

We have no space to deal with the many self-contradictions of the Crucifixion story. We shall therefore confine ourselves to the task of pointing out some of its serious improbabilities.

Jesus had wrought many miracles. He had even raised the dead. What madness it was, then, on the part of his enemies to seek his life! He had the power of blasting them into nothingness, yet they compassed his death as though he were but an ordinary mortal, to be put out of the way as a nuisance or an inconvenience.

They paid Judas to betray him; that is, they gave Judas thirty half-crowns to identify the best-known man in Jerusalem. We cannot believe that Jews were ever such spendthrifts. Nor can we believe that they were ever so foolish. Suppose the London police had to arrest the late Charles Bradlaugh. Would they pay anyone £3 15s. to identify him?

Judas is the second figure in the Crucifixion story. We are told that he was smitten with remorse and committed suicide. Yet the earliest Christian writer who mentions a Gospel—namely, Papias—informs us that Judas lived on a great example of impiety, that he grew very corpulent, and was eventually crushed to death between a chariot and a wall. Evidently, therefore, the Judas episode had not been finally worked-up even in the days of Papias—that is, more than a hundred years after the date of the Crucifixion.

John, who gives Jesus a more ideal and mystical character than the Synoptics, states that Jesus advanced of his own accord to his arresters, saying, "I am he," and that the very sound of his voice threw them upon their backs. They got up, however, and completed the arrest; which is more than English policemen would do in such circumstances. A man who could floor you with a word would be too dangerous to apprehend.

Bringing Jesus before the High Priest for trial involves ignorance of both Jewish and Roman jurisprudence. The priests' court had no penal jurisdiction except in temple affairs, and only then over priests and Levites. It is also monstrous to suppose that the judges who were trying a prisoner would walk about the room, with the witnesses, the servants, and the crowd, and even spit upon and revile him. The writers of our Gospels were not Jews. They wrote long after the fall of Jerusalem, when there was no one to check their absurdities, and they also wrote for Gentiles.

Pilate, the Roman Governor at Jerusalem, is said to have sent Jesus to Herod, who ruled in Galilee, because Jesus was born there. Is not this ridiculous? Would a Frenchman who committed a murder in England be sent for trial to Paris?

Is it credible that the wife of a Roman governor should send him a message while he sat upon the judgment-seat, requesting him to acquit a prisoner because she knew he was innocent?

Digitized by Google

Would a Roman governor—especially a proud one like Pilate—sentence a prisoner to execution, although knowing him to be innocent, and then exculpate himself by washing his hands in public? Such a thing was never heard of in the history of Roman jurisprudence. Washing the hands, indeed, was a purely Jewish symbolism. The idea could never have occurred to a Roman judge.

Pilate's whole conduct is opposed to all we know of the duties and responsibilities of a Roman governor. His going to and fro between the prisoner and his accusers was justly described as impossible by the Rev. Dr. Giles, who declared without hesitation that "no Roman governor ever condescended to an act which he would deem so derogatory to his rank and dignity."

The haste of the trial and execution, the miracles at the Crucifixion itself, and many incidents which we have no space to criticise—all show that we are not reading history, but romance; a romance in the interest of a Church which had the effrontery to assert that Pilate sent an account of the Crucifixion to Tiberius, and that Tiberius proposed the deification of Christ to the Roman Senate!

G. W. FOOTE.

MADAME BLAVATSKY.

(Continued from p. 212.)

BEFORE going to India, Olcott wrote to Swami Dyanand Saraswati, president of the Arya Samaj, that the title of the Theosophical Society should be changed to the Theosophical Society of the Arya Samaj, acknowledging the Swami as chief. Early in 1882, however, he realised that he had been imposed upon, and publicly denounced them. In India, Theosophy assumed new features. Spiritism, with its threefold nature of man, was changed for Occultism, with its sevenfold nature. We now hear, for the first time, of the mysterious occult Brotherhood residing in that enlightened but inaccessible country, Thibet. Hindus had for ages believed that holy men called yogis could, by a course of meditation or asceticism, obtain magical powers, which placed them out of the category of ordinary mortals, and told wonderful stories of these Paramokshas or Mahatmas. The Theosophical adepts were modelled partly on the Indian yogis, partly on the mystical Mejnour, in Lytton's Zanoni. They could perceive occurrences and precipitate messages, despite any distance, and only used their powers for good. In short, they possessed all the qualifications requisite to make good Scotland Yard detectives.

The path to the possession of Mahatmaship was confessedly a hard one. Few members of the Theosophical Society could boast that their lives had been completely chaste, even in dreams, or that they had never taken alcoholic liquors, never touched animals, never partaken of animal food, and never worn the product of the sacred cow, all of which things, and far more, was necessary for the blossoming of this "efflorescence of the human race." No wonder gentlemen like Mr. Sinnett preferred the shorter cut of pumping the Hindu adepts, Madame Blavatsky being the channel of communication with the blessed occult brothers. The letters of the Mahatma, Koot Hoomi, were certified by experts as being in the handwriting of Madame Blavatsky. On many points an outsider could judge as well as an expert. Thus H. P. B. wrote: "Olcott says you speak very well English"; K. H. wrote: "One who understands tolerably well English." She wrote "thiefs," so did K. H.; "defense," so did K. H. She wrote: "So more the pity for those"; he: "So more the pity for him," etc. One of Koot Hoomi's letters, giving out original revelations, was almost word for word a plagiarism from a speech delivered by Mr. H. Kiddle, some months previously, at a spiritist camp meeting at Lake Pleasant, in America, and reported in the Banner of Light, which exchanged with H. P. B.'s Theosophist. Her explanation, that the astral spirit of Koot Hoomi had been at Mount Pleasant, only made matters worse.

To meet the demand for occult teaching, a new edition of Isis Unveiled was promised. I have before me the Philosophic Inquirer, Madras, February 17, 1884, in which is advertised "The Secret Doctrine, a new version of Isis Unveiled, with a new arrangement of the matter, large and important additions and copious notes and commentaries by H. P. Blavatsky, assisted by T. R. Subba Row Garu, B.A., B.L., F.T.S." Mr. Subba Row subsequently discovered H. P. B.'s fraud, and withdrew from the Society. The Secret Doctrine proved to contain a totally different doctrine from that in Isis Unveiled, and one which was even more a work of imagination.

The new religion was heralded by signs and wonders. The power of adepts to recreate matter was shown by the reproduction of broken saucers and vases in the occult shrine at the headquarters, Adyar. The shrine was simply that familiar device of conjurers, the "trick cabinet." It had three sliding panels in the back. This Madame admitted; they were "for convenience of packing in case of removal." It was fixed against the wall of her bedroom, and just behind it was a recess in the wall lightly boarded over, which had once been a window. On the other side, in Madame Blavatsky's room, was a sideboard with a false back. There was a hole in the boarding big enough to admit a person into the recess, and a hole in the boarding, on the shrine side, big enough to let an arm through to manipulate the sliding panels. All this, when discovered, it was said, was made after H. P. B. had left, in order to defame her. For the revelations of her fraud by an accomplice, Madame Coulomb, at length compelled her to leave India. These revelations were accompanied by proof in the shape of letters. The letters were afterwards denied as forgeries. If so, they were the most clever and purposeless forgeries ever perpetrated. But they, too, were certified by experts to be in H. P. B.'s writing, and they were corroborated by Mr. Hodgson, who was sent out by the Psychical Research Society, of London, to investigate the occult phenomena alleged to have taken place at Adyar. One instance must suffice.

On May 26, 1883, Colonel Olcott writes: "Fine phenomenon. Got pair of tortoise-shell and lacquer vases, with flowers, in a cabinet, a moment before empty." When the sorceress was confronted with the statement that Madame Coulomb had herself purchased these vases, and that the Mahatmas had nothing to do with sending them by occult agency, she replied that Madame Coulomb had tried to obtain vases like them, but failed; and that she (Madame C.) had purchased one pair of vases afterwards, and that they differed in shape, etc., from those received by Colonel Olcott. Mr. Hodgson, however, discovered who was lying by going to the establishment where Madame Coulomb said she had purchased them. He was shown the entries in the books of the firm, and writes: "Madame Coulomb therefore purchased the vases on May 25; Colonel Olcott received them on May 26." Comment is unnecessary.

Mr. Hodgson, who investigated the whole business in India with great care, came to the conclusion that "her real object had been the furtherance of Russian interests." He first noticed "her sudden and curious excitement at the news of the recent Russian movement upon the Afghan frontier," and he says: "Madame Blavatsky's momentary emotional betrayal of her sympathies in the onset of her excitement was not rendered less significant by the too strongly-impressed 'afterstroke' of a quite uncalled-for vituperation of the Russians, who, she said, would be the death-blow of the Society if they got into India." Mrs. Besant curiously defended H. P. B. from the charge of being a Russian agent by stating in the Chronicle of September 25, 1891, that "many Indian Theosophists, by Madame Blavatsky's advice, enrolled for service, if needed, to repel a Russian invasion during Afghan troubles." This was letting the cat out of the bag with a vengeance. The Russian lady used her secret society in Bombay and Madras to repel an invasion on the Afghan frontier. These were truly extraordinary precautions against Russian invasion. It was doubtless with a similar object Madame Blavatsky wrote continually to Russia. A fac-simile of a fragment which came into the hands of Mr. Hodgson is given in the third volume of the Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research. It reads as follows:—

> "Military men, more than any other, must remember that the approaching act of the Eastern drama is to be the last and the decisive one; that it will require all our efforts, every sacrifice on our part, and requires more careful preparation in every direction than did the last war. They must remember that to sit idle now, when everyone has to be busily preparing, is the highest of crimes, a treason to Rus, their country, and their Czar. He who hath ears to hear let him. . . .

Digitized by Google

In the fac-simile it may be noticed that the word "Rus" is crossed out, and the word "Czar" written so that it might be taken for "God."

Mr. Hodgson quotes another letter, which begins: "Is our friend a Sikh? If so, the fact that he should be, as you say, very much pleased to learn the object of our Society is not at all strange. For his ancestors have for centuries been—until their efforts were paralysed by British domination, that curse of every land it fastens itself upon—battling for the divine truths against external theologies. . . . ." The letter concludes: "Could you not hook out for your Bombay Branch either Gwalior (Scindia) or the Holkar of Indore—those most faithful and loyal friends of the British (?)"

It was the discovery of her impostures, and not her political work, which forced Madame to fly from India. She had been watched in a most bungling fashion. Mr. Sinnett says he pitied the unhappy police-officer who was employed to watch her. He observes:—

> "She pursued this officer with sarcasms all the while that he, in the performance of his irksome duty, pursued her in her vague and erratic wanderings. She would offer him bags or letters to examine, and address him condolences on the miserable fate that condemned him to play the part of a mouchard. I suspect, from what I heard at Simla at the time, that the Bombay Government must have been treated by the superior authorities to remarks that were anything but complimentary on the manner in which they conducted this business."

No wonder this officer was ordered to be withdrawn; but we may be quite sure the Government fully appreciated her inducing Theosophists to enrol for service, if needed, to repel Russian invasion. J. M. WHEELER.

(To be continued.)

WHAT IS MEANT BY LAWS OF NATURE?

GREAT confusion and misapprehension exist in the theological mind in reference to the real meaning of the term, "laws of nature." The laws are regarded by most orthodox believers as commands given, and as arrangements made, by the "creator of the universe." They are of two kinds: those which prescribe men's religious and social duties, which are called moral; and the movements in the material world, which are termed physical. The incorrect use of the term "law" is so general among poets, statesmen, and philosophers that it is not surprising to find the general masses of the community entertaining the same erroneous ideas as to its true signification. We desire, therefore, to state what, in our opinion, is the correct meaning of the term "law" when it is applied to nature. This becomes the more necessary because theological disputants are continually propounding fallacies upon the subject.

"Law" is a Saxon word, but its interpretation is founded upon the Latin, to govern, which we call rule. In cases where it is applied to the general government of society it means something written, and it refers to conduct. Thus used, the term implies a command, or commands, from some superior power, whether it be the King or the State. Law, so defined, may be ignored, altered, or abrogated; or it may be interpreted in many different ways, according to the requirements of society. It may also vary at different times, and in different countries, according to the wishes and customs of the people where it is in force. But the same cannot be said of the laws of nature—a phrase which has quite another meaning. Fleming writes: "When a fact, frequently observed, recurs invariably under the same circumstances, we compare it to an act which has been prescribed, to an order which has been established, and say it occurs according to law." That is, the observed order, or continuity in nature, is what should be termed the law of nature. This does not mean that the law is a command given by some personal being, but simply that it represents the sequence we find in the universe. Law, applied to nature, is a formula used to express the mode, not the cause, of phenomena; it indicates the manner in which things act and are acted upon, and, therefore, it must not be regarded as an entity apart from, or added to, nature. Law does not make the needle point to the north, nor does it cause the leaves and fruit to fall from the trees; it is nothing more than a name for the conditions under which the forces of nature are manifested, and are recognised by the human mind. We perceive the regularity or invariability which characterises certain movements in nature, and to this uniformity of action we apply the term "law."

Some of the most advanced writers of the early part of the present century, who recognised the idea of law, interpreted it to mean that there were certain consequences which always followed causes that had been so pre-ordained by the creator. To them the order of nature was the will of God; hence they considered that any infractions, infringements, or breaking of the laws of nature were sins against the laws of God. But such an interpretation of the operations of nature involves some curious conclusions. It really amounts to ascribing a preconceived intention to every natural event that happens. Suppose a man is killed by lightning, and that a village is destroyed by an earthquake, there is no dispute but that both took place in accordance with the laws of nature. But, be it observed, it was nature, not the laws, that did the mischief. To say that these events were pre-ordained means that the man was to be killed, and the village was to be destroyed in any case. If this were true, what a reflection it would be upon the supposed law-maker! Such an assumption is as inhuman as it is unscientific. The death of the man and the destruction of the village can be accounted for by natural causes; and it is a wise axiom not to assume more causes than are sufficient to account for phenomena.

We allege that whatever happens occurs in accordance with what we call the laws or mode of nature, and is not produced by any external power. Against this position it is urged that, if it were so, no law of nature could be "broken," inasmuch as that would imply that nature could act against herself. Now the error of this objection is in supposing that, because the totality of all things is nature, therefore there can be no conflict in the various parts. Nature, as a whole, cannot of course be altered; but one portion may and does come into conflict with another. A man may use his physical powers, which are, of course, natural, to do that which produces injury on his bodily organisation, which is also quite natural, and we say he has "broken a law of nature." We do not, however, mean that he has done anything which nature did not give him the power to do, but that he has used his power to a disadvantage to himself, and, it may be, to others. The expression, therefore, is relative, not absolute. Of course, strictly speaking, the laws of nature cannot be broken.

It is further objected, as there are certain acts which we are in the habit of speaking of as being unnatural, that nothing can be unnatural if nature includes everything. Let us see what should be understood upon this point. We say of a man who treats his own kith and kin cruelly that he acts unnaturally, and we designate certain crimes as unnatural offences. But we do not mean by such phraseology that these acts are super-natural, but that they are infra-natural—that is, they are not higher, but lower, than nature. Further, a moment's reflection should show that, by the use of these terms, we do not intend to convey the idea that anything has been done outside of nature as a whole, for the very powers employed are natural, and the acts are no less so. What is meant is that a person who so acts has pursued a course of conduct which is not in harmony with our exalted conception of the sphere in nature to which he belongs. Measured by ordinary standards, one part of nature is higher than another. Man's sphere is the highest of all that we are acquainted with; he has intellect of a far superior degree to that of any other animal, and he has evolved a moral law by which he is supposed to regulate his conduct.

Now, if, instead of conforming to the laws of his own being, man descends to a lower platform, and acts in a way that is utterly out of harmony with his exalted functions, we say that he is unnatural, meaning thereby that he is descending to a lower sphere in nature than that which we have a right to expect him to occupy. The act that we call unnatural in him would probably be natural enough in a lower animal, and therefore cannot be outside nature, but is only out of accord with the requirements of that part of nature in which he plays his part. There is evidently a legitimate function for every passion and desire of which man finds himself possessed, and the proper use of these, according to the purpose of nature, we call natural; while to divert them from their proper object or end we say is unnatural. A man has an appetite for food, which is natural; but he can starve himself to death, which, in a sense, is natural too; and yet, in another sense, we should say it was unnatural, because it was a violation of an instinct common to us all. Suppose a starving man to be destitute of food, and his own child, who has plenty, refuses that aid to his parent that would save life, we should regard such a son as an unnatural monster; not meaning thereby that he had done anything that nature did not furnish the means of doing, but that he had not acted according to the higher laws of nature which appertain to all beings moving in his sphere. All, therefore, that can be done is accomplished by what we term the laws of nature.

Digitized by Google

It must not be overlooked, as J. S. Mill points out in his essay on Nature, that "the observed uniformities in the occurrence of phenomena, the uniformities of antecedence and sequence, are what in science are meant by the laws of nature." He also mentions that we should know what particular law to use in a particular case, so that we may "use one law to counteract another." This means that, by studying the various forces of nature, we can avail ourselves of one force to control the effect of another. For instance, if a building is saved from destruction by a lightning conductor, it simply means that another natural force protected the building from that of the lightning. Both are in strict keeping with the laws of nature.

CHARLES WATTS.

(To be concluded.)

THE JERUSALEM GHOST.

AT this time of the year, when the Pagan world celebrated the uprising of vegetation from the underworld, the Christian world is edified with a very ancient ghost story of the rising of a man from the dead—a curious event to celebrate with a movable festival. For such a stupendous event no one pretends there is any other evidence than testimony transmitted down to us through a period of some eighteen hundred years. What is it worth on such a subject? Should we believe a man who told us such a ghost story to-day. Should we not think it far more probable that he was lying, or lying under a delusion, than that such an event really occurred? But what is the testimony? If we look into it a little, I think we may discover how it grew.

Mark, the shortest gospel, is now admitted to represent the oldest version. Yet it is certain from the testimony of all the best manuscripts that the early version of Mark had no story of the resurrection at all. Chapter xvi. ended with verse 8, and the remaining twelve verses have been added by another and a later hand. All the original Mark tells us is that Joseph of Arimathea begged the body of Jesus and laid it in a sepulchre; that early on Sunday morning Mary Magdalene, Mary of James, and Salome went with spices and found the body gone; and that a young man told them he is risen. Thus the earliest account does not venture even to say that anybody saw Jesus alive after death. Three women found his body was not in the tomb—that was all. What had become of it? Common sense would say, Ask Joseph of Arimathea. But this is never done, and the excited reports of the women may have given rise to the cock-and-bull ghost story with which the other gospellers favor us.

Matthew, in giving a fuller story, betrays its legendary character. He makes the Jewish priests know that Jesus said he would rise again, though, according to John xx. 9, his disciples were ignorant of this. They bribe Roman soldiers to say they slept at their posts, the punishment of which was death, and to deny for cash the most stupendous miracle they had themselves witnessed!

Matthew tells us that the eleven disciples went to Galilee and met Jesus in a mountain; "but some doubted." Luke gives no time for this journey, but makes him ascend to heaven from Bethany, says that they stayed in Jerusalem, and were continually in the temple. Acts, however, makes him stay on earth forty days. John makes it necessary for him to work another miracle for them—a miraculous draught of fishes, such as they had had before. In 1 Corinthians xv. we are told the first appearance was to Peter. John and the addition to Mark say it was to Mary Magdalene. Matthew says it was to the two Marys. The Gospel according to the Hebrews says it was to James. According to Paul, the second appearance was to the twelve. Luke says the eleven. Judas, having repented, either returned the money and hanged himself, according to Matthew; or bought a field with the money, wherein he fell and burst asunder, according to Acts. John says the ten, Thomas being absent. Apparently, Paul had never heard of the doubting Thomas, or the defection of the much-killed Judas. But he goes on to tell us of a third appearance to five hundred brethren at once. How the story grows! According to Acts, there were only "about an hundred and twenty" disciples altogether.

From all this contradictory evidence, which would not bear ten minutes' cross-examination in a police court, the only thing plain is that a number of persons said that a number of other persons had seen the Jerusalem ghost. The only person who says "I saw him" was not near Jerusalem, and not a believer at the time. This was Paul, who, for a while, was an unbeliever and a persecutor. And how did Paul see him? Apparently he had a sunstroke on the Damascus road, and heard a voice from heaven, which he took to be that of Jesus. He says: "Last of all he was seen of me also, as of one born out of due time"; and we should say that those who credit such a ghost story on such evidence must be born out of due time also.

J. M. W.

A FURTHER WORD ON MR. KIDD.

IN the February number of the Nineteenth Century Mr. Kidd has an article in which he defends himself, so to say, for not dealing with the critics of his Social Evolution, because, he thinks, his main positions have not been challenged, and the time has not yet come when any reply would be profitable. But he goes over and re-states some of his central arguments. And here let me say frankly that Mr. Kidd is in many ways a most admirable writer, at least in my humble opinion. He is modest, he writes with the force of a man who believes what he is writing, and he is extremely interesting. He boldly says, in the conclusion of his article, that the opinion of the multitude—mostly the religious multitude—which received his work with extravagant applause, is not particularly valuable. He writes, and the passage is a noble and a just one:—

"But I do not hide from myself that, from this class equally with the other, no searching criticism is to be expected. I have had no purpose to serve in the book except the statement of the truth as it presented itself to me. I have sought neither to oppose nor defend any party or opinion, and no preconceived conviction or opinion of my own has been allowed to stand in the way of the application of the principles of human development therein presented. Science is an exacting mistress, and it is in the belief that it is in this spirit alone that she accepts service that I have endeavored to do her work."

This passage, admirable as it is in tone, breathing as it does the true scientific spirit which seeks for the truth regardless of preconceived notions, yet exemplifies at the same time Mr. Kidd's radical inconsistency. For here is a writer, speaking in the name of science, and reverently declaring that to science alone he owes allegiance, who uses the language of science, and applies the methods of science, yet whose whole work is to laboriously show that science is not to be trusted, and that to keep the social organism intact it is necessary to appeal to moral sanctions which are not only outside or above, but are opposed to, scientific knowledge. Mr. Kidd seems to belong to that "self-drugged" school, of which Mr. Mallock is a leading type, who scientifically prove that science is valueless, and profoundly reason themselves into the position that reason is useless as a guide in the highest things of life.

Take, for instance, Mr. Kidd's main proposition, which he repeats in the Nineteenth Century. This is the kernel of Mr. Kidd's faith:—

"All religion is essentially ultra-rational. No form of belief is capable of functioning as a religion in the evolution of society which does not provide sanctions for conduct outside of, and superior to, reason."

Now let us examine this proposition for a moment. In the first place, of course, as to what constitutes a religion, or what forms of belief are "capable of functioning" as such,

Digitized by Google

it is not relevant now to decide, though one might suggest that, historically, foolishness and falsehood have proved no bar to a belief "functioning" as a religion. At the same time, it seems to me that in the above proposition, as through his book, Mr. Kidd is rather begging the question. His logic amounts to this:—

"No belief is a religion which does not provide ultra-rational sanctions; these beliefs [Christianity, Mormonism, etc.] provide such sanctions; these beliefs are religions—ergo, only religions are capable of providing such sanctions as enable societies to exist."

In short, he attaches an arbitrary meaning to the term "religion"—an arbitrariness which was emphasised by his excluding Positivism from the designation, and then produces an arbitrary result.

But now let us come down from these vague "scientific" generalities to definite examples. Instead of dealing hazily with "ultra-rational sanctions," we will take one religious sanction. Take the belief in hell. That is decidedly a religious motive of conduct—at least it is intended to be such. And here I must say that I do not quite understand what Mr. Kidd means by sanctions "outside of, and superior to, reason." Religionists are often fond of talking in this strain about theological propositions being "beyond reason." Take hell. Now, the hell doctrine is not "ultra-rational," or "superior to reason," or "beyond reason." These are the old word-juggles. The proposition that two and two make five is not ultra-rational or ultra anything else; neither is the hell belief; neither is the belief in a fallen man, or a crucified man-god, or any other of the motley array of ridiculous propositions that go to make up the Christian religion. These doctrines are simply false. And really the time has come to cease playing with these high-sounding phrases over beliefs that no sane man now holds.

But I contend that, to the man who really does believe in hell, that belief is so far a rational factor in determining his conduct. In any case, it is difficult to see how a man can be influenced in his actions by beliefs—true or false—which he cannot comprehend. And this raises the question at the root of Mr. Kidd's special pleading. The distinction between "rational" and "ultra-rational" belief is a false one. If, for instance, hell be true, a man is justified in so regulating his conduct as to avoid hell; in fact, such a man would be acting in the most rational manner possible. The real distinction is between true and false beliefs, not between rational and supra-rational ones. Hence it is I would like Mr. Kidd to give a plain answer to a plain question. Will he say definitely that he thinks the hell-belief, for instance, has provided a useful sanction for conduct, and so facilitated the progress of the race? Will he distinctly tell us whether he thinks the belief in a savior crucified for the sins of others—in other words, the doctrine of vicarious atonement—will he tell us that that has been a beneficial "ultra-rational" sanction? For, after all, it is not quite satisfying to deal in vague general propositions about beliefs "capable of functioning as religions," and "ultra-rational sanctions," and all the rest. One likes a little definite details. But, naturally, Mr. Kidd does not push his theories so far, or pursue a "supra-rational belief" till he finds its logical end in the inhuman horrors of a Furniss or a Pinamonti. He merely concerns himself with daintily-worded abstractions—which is well for his theory. There is nothing more dangerous than to apply a general proposition to a particular case. And when you are so constituted as to be incapable of perceiving the necessity of the particular application, then so much the better for your peace of mind; but so much the worse for the value of your thinking.

The whole fact appears to be that Mr. Kidd does perceive a certain difficulty—the difficulty which was dealt with by Professor Huxley in his Romanes Lecture some time ago. The struggle for existence would lead individuals to fight for themselves regardless of others, and ruthlessly crush out those less able; the whole burden of ethical teaching is that such crushing out is wrong. How, then, are "ethics" and "evolution" to be reconciled? Mr. Kidd's reconciliation implies that the purely individual instinct is solely rational, and the ethical instinct, so to say, is simply a necessary piece of unreason which humanity carries with it to save itself from extinction. The explanation, which involves, as a corollary, the absurd proposition that, if the race were perfectly reasonable, it would die out, is surely condemned on its face. One might reply broadly that, since reason is human knowledge and experience, and since it embraces the whole field of human polity, whatever conduct helps and builds up the race, whatever conduces to human welfare, must have a sanction in human reason. The social instinct, then, the desire to succour others and help others, reacts on and modifies the purely individual instinct, and both are essentially part of human nature. That man in society subordinates his individual desires and ambitions to the welfare and happiness of others is a natural phenomenon; and it is a phenomenon which will remain after all the ultra-rational beliefs are swept away. If Mr. Kidd calls this social instinct in human nature the religious part, and if he imagines that it can only be kept alive and nurtured by false beliefs, he is in a curious intellectual cul-de-sac. The parental instinct is surely a social instinct as opposed to an individual one, yet assumedly in an Atheist or Positivist community, according to Mr. Kidd, the parental instinct would disappear. Does Mr. Kidd really think so? If he does, he has been imposed on by some of the worst nonsense of the lower-class aggressive religionist—nonsense which even less cultured and scientific writers on the Christian side than Mr. Kidd have been above accepting.

One must, finally, protest against the Kidd method—if the phrase be permissible—of taking beliefs and treating them as if they were objective entities, apart altogether from the question of their truth or falsehood. Suppose society could be saved if everyone believed that two straight lines could enclose a space, does Mr. Kidd think social salvation would be possible? And what, then, would we think of a sociologist who went about treating this proposition and its effect on those who did believe it, and its probable effects on those who might be induced to believe it, and never once touched on the vital fact of its falsehood? If society can only be saved or kept together by sanctions which, though they may be trebly ultra-supra-rational, are yet in plain English false, then society is in a bad way indeed. In sociology Mr. Kidd, in fact, is the greatest pessimist of our time.

FREDERICK RYAN.

THE "CHRISTIAN WORLD" NEWSPAPER AND FATHER IGNATIUS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE FREETHINKER."

SIR,—Allow me to thank you very sincerely for the short paragraph in your columns of March 24 upon the above. I hope that the Christian—it should be Rationalistic—World will answer your very sensible and practical question, "What on earth is an 'enlightened' view of the Atonement?' I, in common with all honest Christians, Catholic or Protestant, regard the Christian World's "enlightened" view of the Atonement as utterly and entirely dishonest.

You also speak of my denunciation of Archdeacon Farrar, as "that awful man," and then ask "what would I say of the editor of the Freethinker?" As you have asked, allow me to reply. I think that you are probably a gentleman and an honest man. But, Sir, if I heard to-morrow that you had allowed yourself to be made an Archdeacon in our Church, and were receiving the salary of one, I should change my opinion of you and think you a blackguard and a rogue. If Archdeacon Farrar would accept the sub-editorship (at your invitation, of course) of the Freethinker, I should similarly regard him—as I do you—as a gentleman and an honest man.

You have publicly asked me a question. I have answered it.—Yours faithfully, IGNATIUS, O.S.B., Monk.

There is the greatest difference between presuming an opinion to be true because, with every opportunity for contesting it, it has not been refuted, and assuming its truth for the purpose of not permitting its refutation. Complete liberty of contradicting and disproving our opinion is the very condition which justifies us in assuring its truth for purposes of action; on no other terms can a being with human faculties have any rational assurance of right.—J. S. Mill, "On Liberty," p. 36.

Digitized by Google

BLASPHEMY IN SWEDEN.

Captain Otto Thomson sends us a copy of the Stockholm Dagens Nyheter (Daily News), which reports that Gustaf Thoren, the editor of the Söderköping Posten has been found guilty of blasphemy and sentenced to two months' imprisonment and a fine of twenty-five crowns, for this impossible "crime." Our readers may remember that it was for an article on "Schools and Religion" that this prosecution was commenced. This contemptible attempt to suppress free speech is as ridiculous as the attempt to mop out the Atlantic, and the prosecution will advertise Freethought views in places where they were unknown before.

Captain Thomson informs us that a new Freethought paper, Nya Sanningar, or New Thoughts, has been started in Stockholm. Captain Thomson has recently translated from our columns Colonel Ingersoll's lecture, "Which Way?" which he will shortly publish to see if they are as ready to prosecute for blasphemy in the capital as in a small provincial town like Söderköping.

NOAH'S SONG.

Tune: "I'm afloat, I'm afloat."

I'm afloat, I'm afloat on my three-storey'd bark,
Designed by Jehovah, my boat-house, the Ark;
She's built like a stable, and roofed like a shed,
With nought to distinguish her stern from her head;
She boasts no superfluous windows nor doors,
Of each she has one, and her triad of floors
Foreshadows, in some sort of mystical sense,
Some change in her *Ark*itect centuries hence.

The Lord, who designed this pestiferous tub—
My "second-sight" shows me—would suffer a snub
From people who know what a ship ought to be,
Like "Lloyd's"—which with optics prophetic I see—
Just think of it! cribbed in a three-storey'd Ark
With thousands of animals, all in the dark!
Of light not a ray, and of air scarce a breath,
A coffin of life on an ocean of death!

I'm afloat with earth's fauna, my children and wife,
Although we don't care for a seafaring life.
The fact is, Jehovah found out his mistake
In tempting young Eve with a logical snake;
And now, in his rage, he is drowning our race,
The living reminders of all his disgrace;
In short, all his creatures, save those on my barge,
Are drowning, in millions, this moment at large.

I'm afloat on an ocean where land used to be;
My body's afloat, and my mind's "all at sea,"
Dumbfounded in trying to fathom God's scheme;
For, surely, the notion quite foolish doth seem,
To save one or two of a core-tainted brood,
In hopes of a progeny wholesome and good!
I'm glad I am saved, but, between me and you,
He ought to drown all, and create life anew.

I'm afloat on the flood that's now destined to be
An ocean of corpses—a sepulchre sea;
A black heaving desert of water abhorred—
The grave of a world, the accurst of the Lord!
My bark is a life-boat to tigers and swine,
But also, through infinite mercy divine,
A death-boat to thousands of children that gasp
Whilst striving its black, mocking timbers to grasp.

I hear, high above my menagerie's din,
The shrieks of the doomed drowning children of sin,
And strive to extinguish my grief for their fate
In terror lest I the creator should hate!
'Tis sinful, as Ham was remarking to Shem,
To pity the folk whom the Lord doth condemn;
So, harden your hearts, all ye creatures on board;
We're bound to be right if we copy the Lord!

G. L. Mackenzie.

ACID DROPS.

The Methodist Times is "delighted" that a Wesleyan Methodist has induced "that enlightened body," the Nottingham Town Council, to pass a resolution in favor of abolishing the delivery of letters on Sunday. "If London, with all its millions," says our pious contemporary, "can live without a Sunday delivery, it is quite certain that any other city could." London, of course, could "live" without a good many things. It could even live without the Methodist Times. But it is simply ridiculous that London should be treated as it is by the Post Office. There is no delivery of letters on Sunday, nor is a single mail dispatched till after twelve o'clock at night. If you drop a letter in a London pillar-box after six o'clock on Saturday evening, it will not reach Manchester till midday on Monday. All this waste of public time, and interference with public convenience, is pretendedly in the interest of Sunday rest. It is really in the interest of a bastard economy. The Post Office will not employ enough hands to give them all one day's rest in seven, without giving them all the same day. It takes the easiest and cheapest course for itself; the hardest and dearest course for the public.

The Methodist Times is bitterly opposed to Established Churches, and quotes Mr. Bryce to the effect that Constantine "secularised the Church." Mr. Hughes's organ regards this as a calamity. So do we. But it was not a calamity to Christianity. It took Christianity three hundred years to convert one in twenty of the inhabitants of the Roman Empire. Nine-tenths of the rest were converted in the next century through the patronage of the emperors, who used every means—bribery, intimidation, and actual persecution—to make their subjects Christians. Constantine was a great rascal, but he was no fool; he knew that the Christian religion was a most convenient instrument of tyranny.

Mr. Hughes is, after all, a half-hearted Nonconformist. He objects to the State paying for religion in churches, but he wishes the State to pay for religion in schools. At the recent Free Churches Congress at Birmingham he spoke in opposition to the Rev. J. Hulme, a member of the Birmingham School Board. He declared that, "if any attempt were made to revive the system of Secular Education advocated by George Dawson and the late Dr. Dale, the whole of the Wesleyan Methodists of England would be forced into the opposite camp." That is, they would vote with the Church party rather than with the friends of Secular Education.

The Rev. J. Hulme replied "with considerable warmth." He said that Mr. Hughes was free to differ from him, but "no Nonconformist could be true to his principles who countenanced the payment for religious teaching out of the imperial revenue or out of the rates." This was received with "strong dissent." The fact is, the majority of the Nonconformist men of God want the help of the State as far as it serves their interest; their objection to it begins when it serves the interest of their opponents.

That Free Churches Congress discussed "The Church and Social Questions." Mr. George Cadbury, the cocoa man, presided at this sitting. He argued that the Churches must supply leaders to the great social revolution that was going forward; otherwise the consequences would be disastrous, as in France, where "such a revolution was led by non-Christian men." What this cunning Quaker really means is that the Churches, and especially (as he said) the Free Churches, should nobble the revolutionary movement. Men like George Cadbury don't want too great a change in the existing order of things. Nor do the Churches want such a change. It is so hard to get coppers from working men, and so convenient to fall back upon the capitalist Cadburys, who can write out big cheques for religious purposes.

Most of the men of God who took part in this discussion were very strongly in favor of a rigorous enforcement of the law against vice and immorality. That is all very well, gentlemen; but where the deuce do you come in? Why should you be paid so handsomely, merely to call in the police?

Under the heading of "Whispers," the Birmingham Owl finds: "That Mr. Hugh Price Hughes expresses himself as violently opposed to the Birmingham system of education. That the Reverend Hugh Price Hughes is always violently opposed to somebody or something. That if he would learn to think more and talk less he might yet live down his reputation for exaggeration, sensationalism, and cant."

One of our readers attended Mr. Keir Hardie's address on Burns, which was criticised in our last issue. When the address was over, this gentleman rose and asked the orator why he introduced religion and Jesus Christ in connection with the Independent Labor Party. Mr. Hardie gave an evasive reply. Discussion, he said, was a waste of time; the choir, therefore, would sing a hymn. Fancy a man like this leading the hosts of Labor out of the Wilderness into the Promised Land!

Digitized by Google

Lucy Garnett, writing in the Athenæum on "Other People's Superstitions," calls attention to the following passage from The People of Turkey: "Mohammedans execrate the Christian faith, and Christians the Mohammedan faith; but both, in cases of incurable disease, have recourse reciprocally to each other's holy wells, to the sacred tombs of the saints, and to the prayers of the clergy of both creeds. I have often seen sick Turkish children taken to the Armenian church at Brousa, and heard prayers read over them by Armenian priests. I have also seen Christian children taken to Hodjas to be blown or spat upon, or have the visitation of intermittent fever 'tied up' by means of a piece of cotton thread twisted round the wrist." Miss Garnett adds that Jews as well as Christians frequently have recourse to the good offices of Dervish sheikhs and Turkish witches.

It is reported that the Pope, in his brief on Christian reunion, will not refer to the validity of Anglican orders, but simply urge the Church of England to return to the fold. The Catholics are doing their best to see that the publication of the brief is followed by reports of converts, and it is said that some prominent members of the English Church Union will go to Rome, where they hope to be followed by some Welsh parsons if disestablished.

It is probably with a view to taking advantage of Disestablishment that the Papal Brief has been placed in the hands of Cardinal Vaughan, authorising the collection of eleven Welsh counties into an Apostolic Vicariate, to which a new Catholic bishop will shortly be appointed.

Saint Athanasius Riley, of the London School Board, is a High Churchman, and a patron of the old Sarum Missal, which of course is thoroughly popish. There are other High Churchmen who share the same predilection. At St. Mark's, Marylebone, last Sunday (being Palm Sunday), palms were blessed and censed and carried in procession round the church, the choir singing antiphons, responses, and versicles. Something was wanted, however, to perfect the function. Some one—say the parson—should have mounted a donkey and headed the procession.

H. K. Carroll says in the Forum Library: "The wealthiest denomination in the United States, if we estimate denominational wealth according to the average value of the church edifices and sites, is the Jewish. The next is the Unitarian, the third is the Reformed (Dutch), and the fourth the Protestant Episcopal. The average value of the churches of Reformed Jews is $38,839; of the Unitarian, $24,725; of the Reformed (Dutch), $19,227; and of the Protestant Episcopal, $16,182."

In America the sky-pilots usually get half fare on the railroads, as well as low rates for education and other services, and free tickets to concerts and entertainments. The subject has recently been publicly discussed at Chicago, divinity students themselves saying that "the day is past when the priesthood can claim special favors," and "society owes only one duty to the man who is always holding out his hand—to kick him."

But the Rev. Young said: "I have no scruples about taking a free ride, since I always remember the free journey Christ took on an ass when he entered Jerusalem." The ass was requisitioned without the leave of the owner. The Rev. Young, if he will take a "free ride" under similar circumstances which surrounded "Our Lord," will find himself in the penitentiary. Let him go in and win.

The Rev. Thomas Dixon has been forced to resign his connection with the Twenty-third-street Baptist Church, New York, many of his congregation objecting to his sensational preaching, which has been much discussed in the Herald. Mr. Dixon says: "I seek to be in the spectacular line." He succeeded first by a long series of sermons denouncing Ingersoll, and then by being arrested and fined for shooting robins on a "hunting expedition." His most recent sensation was a pulpit attack on Dr. Parkhurst.

There has been a row at St. John's African Methodist Episcopal Church, Brooklyn, the fashionable colored church of that place. The Rev. F. F. Giles, the presiding elder, is accused of not believing in the Holy Ghost. He was impeached by Mrs. Hiram Worrell, a prominent travelling evangelist who believes in visions and manifestations of the Holy Ghost as in the days of Pentecost. The congregation is divided on the subject.

The American public, especially the Catholic section, are easily bamboozled. An Italian correspondent of the New York Sun, after hinting that the English press knows nothing about the matter, suggests that the late visit of Lord Halifax to Rome may bring about the end of the Anglican schism, and the reunion of the Church of England with her long-hated mother. If ever the Pope was foolish enough to expect such a reunion, Cardinal Vaughan and the English bishops have probably undeceived him.

Of course, as Christianity breaks up, there will be much talk of, and many attempts at, reunion; but such attempts may only precipitate the end. While the Catholic Church confines the drinking of the blood of the Savior to the priest, it will have little chance with the lay Anglican, who thinks he ought to have a regular supply of that fluid himself.

A writer in the New York Sun points out that, while they are appealing for more money for churches, there are within easy distance six churches whose entire congregations could easily be accommodated in one.

Mr. Joshua Nunn, of Maldon, has been sued by two parsons for tithe rent charge. The Rev. J. Coling demands £10 12s. 8d., and the Rev. Reginald Tavernor Love £11 13s. Mr. Nunn says there is nothing on the land wherewith to pay, and the tithe charge is ruinous; but the men of God have piled expenses against him to the tune of £24 18s. 8d., and the end is not yet.

The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Chronicle gives an instance of gross superstition in Russia. A Jew farmer sold his wife (who was enciente) to some robbers for a large sum of money, the intention of the purchasers being to kill the woman and draw out her veins, from the superstitious belief that the veins of pregnant women render thieves invisible. Luckily for the intended victim, her little daughter, aged only four years, overheard the bargaining, and told her of it. She sought the protection of the landowner, and the husband and robbers were arrested.

The Emperor William's piety is of the royal diplomatic order. He thoroughly understands that a God is a useful article to a king. But he will also patronise a Pagan deity on occasion, as last week, when launching a new ironclad at Kiel, he is reported as saying: "Thou art now to be ranged among the armed vessels of the German navy. The names of the ships which belong to the same class are taken from the old Germanic legends. Therefore shalt thou also recall the grey ages of our ancestors, and the mighty god who was worshipped and feared by all our Germanic seafaring forefathers, whose mighty empire extended from the icy North Pole to the distant South Pole, on whose ocean waves were fought the northern fights, and death and destruction brought into the land. This great god's name shalt thou bear. Mayst thou prove thyself worthy of it. I christen thee with the name of 'Aegir.'"

The prisoners in the witch-burning case have been committed for trial. It appears that the husband, Cleary, was a regular member of the Roman Church, and mass was celebrated in the room where the crime was committed, though the priest pleaded ignorance of what was taking place.

One of the things which confirmed the belief that the poor woman was a witch was that when the sacred wafer was administered she spat it out. What became of the consecrated element which contains the body, blood, and bones of divinity? Were these sacred elements trodden upon on the floor, or did the priest, as in duty bound, take it up and eat it himself?

Belief in the Bible-warranted superstition of witchcraft lingers in some parts of England as well as in Ireland. The Western Chronicle of October 4, 1889, mentioned a case at Hornington, in the New Forest. The daughter of a local Primitive Methodist preacher was believed to have been bewitched by an old gipsy, and it was thought that to cut the witch's finger would break the charm.

As late as September 4, 1863, a poor old paralysed Frenchman died in consequence of having been ducked as a wizard at Castle Hedingham, Essex; and on September 17, 1875, an old woman was killed as a witch by a half-insane man at Long Compton, Warwickshire.

The St. Louis Globe Democrat says: "While the House of Congress was in session Sunday night, which by legislative fiction was called part of Saturday, Mr. Broderick, of Kansas, strolled over to the seat of Mr. Bailey, of Texas, who has a great reputation as a parliamentarian. 'Bailey,' queried the Kansan, 'do you suppose the LIIId Congress by calling this Saturday will be able to fool the Lord?' 'I don't know,' replied Mr. Bailey, doubtfully; 'perhaps it will. It has fooled everybody else.'"

Digitized by Google

Listening to a discussion among his officers as to the value of a name, Bonaparte once said: "It has much. Do you suppose that I could ever have become Emperor of France if my name had been Skaggs? No, no. The French will stand a great deal, but Emperor Skaggs would have aroused their deepest animosity." If Jesus had been known by his proper name of Joshua, all the gilt would have come off the gingerbread.

General Booth insulted the reporters at Sunderland, first turning them from their place, which he said was not for reporters, but a penitent form. He called them poor, dead, shrivelled-souled creatures, scribes who put questions, but nothing in the collection-boxes. When they rose and left, he said they were running from God. What have the reporters done to the "General"? Have they incurred his resentment by taking down and publishing his speeches exactly as delivered?

Lord Rosebery has at last given a Broad Churchman a turn by appointing Canon Fremantle as Dean of Ripon. We suppose he got his billet for his Liberal politics, not for his liberal theology.

Canon Barnett, who was formerly vicar of St. Jude's, Whitechapel, says that the Church schools in the East End are, "as a rule, inferior schools." He advises the Church to give up the existing schools and build a few model ones.

Before the St. Asaph Board of Guardians, the master of the workhouse admitted that a lady had received permission to visit the workhouse and collect signatures to a petition against the Disestablishment of the Welsh Church. Mr. Mostyn Williams inquired if any of the imbeciles signed. The master replied: "Yes; one or more; but, strictly speaking, one is not an imbecile." These admissions gave rise to an animated discussion.

At Barrow the parish council, in opposition both to the Home Office and the Bishop of Peterborough, have dedicated their cemetery without any consecration. They see that the only meaning of consecration now is extra fees for the clergy, and are right in standing out against the imposition.

At Chevill, Wilts, the first Nonconformist burial, under the Act of 1880, took place last week. An old man named Isaac Ealey was laid to rest by a minister of the Plymouth Brethren, of which he was a member. Some excitement and feeling shown on the occasion by the crowd of mourners were intensified by the action of the rector, who refused to allow the deceased to be buried with his wife, but ordered the grave to be dug in the remotest corner of the churchyard, behind the church. A most unseemly altercation also was raised at the grave by the sexton.

The name Easter is doubtless derived from Eoster, a Saxon goddess of light, whose festival was kept by our Pagan forefathers about this time of the year. In the East, Easter is called Bright Day; in Bohemia, the night and morning ushering it in are called "The Great Night." In the Middle Ages the poor at this season fed in churches, where there were passion plays on Good Friday, and sports, dances, and farcical exhibitions within the holy building. There is plenty of evidence that religion was essentially Pagan down to a period little prior to the Reformation.

The early Christian Church is said to have been rent by a violent dispute as to when Easter should be celebrated. The Eastern Christians kept it like the Jews kept Passover, from which, with them, it was a development, on the fourteenth day of the first Jewish month, which, of course, involved a constant variation in the day of the week. The Western Christians, with a truer appreciation of the meaning, declared it must always be kept on Sunday, and this view is said to have been adopted by the Council of Nice. But the question gave rise to much controversy, in which the rival churches and bishops damned each other, "quite persuaded all the apostles would have done as they did."

It is possible that the Motza cakes eaten by Jews at Passover may, like the Good Friday bun, be a survival of a sun-sacrament. They are always of a round shape, and the Jewish Chronicle says that when a baker tried to introduce square ones he did not sell a single pound.

On Seder night, at Pesach, the Jews say: "Next year in Jerusalem." But they do not wish to go there, for all that. Moses knows a trick worth two of that.

The Jewish Chronicle (April 5) says it is amusing to note how anxious the Temperance Societies are to prove the unprovable. "The late Dr. Edersheim was offered one hundred pounds by such a society to prove that the wine mentioned in the New Testament miracle at Cana was unfermented, and, therefore, non-intoxicating. But he refused."

It adds: "Dr. Erich Harnack has just given the same folly a knock-down blow in his pamphlet, Die Bibel und die alkoholischen Getränke" (Berlin: B. Hirschwald; 1895). Total abstinence may be a desirable thing, but it is the sheerest ignorance to argue that the wine of the Bible was non-alcoholic.

Samuel Fox has a follower in Edward Pickard, another Quaker, who was turned out of Truro Cathedral for keeping on his hat. He maintained that the building was national property, and that he was within his legal rights; but he was marched out by the wardens. There is a long report in Lake's Falmouth Packet. Pickard said: "The fact is you mustn't wear your own hat—that is, you mustn't possess your own head—on the priests' premises."

The Philadelphia Times (U.S.A.) reports the prosecution of Joseph and Elizabeth Copestake, of Fifty-Second and Wakefield-streets, by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. They had subjected their two boys, John and Joseph, aged respectively eight and eleven, to frightful tortures. Their hands were tied to the cellar water-pipe on cold days, and they were stripped naked and denied food. One time their feet were placed in a bucket of ice-cold water; another time they were compelled to place their hands on a red-hot stove. All this was done for the children's good. "All that we did," said Copestake, "was done in a Christian spirit." "Where did you get your idea of Christianity?" asked the magistrate. "From the Bible," was the reply.

An American committee of women is charged with the task of getting out a revision of the Bible which will show the mistranslations in other editions, so far as woman is concerned. It seems to be the notion of the committee that the "we" in Genesis includes the "motherhood of god," instead of the polytheism of the writer, as is undoubtedly the case. This is another instance of attempting to read into the Scriptures what the reader-in wants there.

A clergyman died in his pulpit at Dayton, Ohio, while delivering his sermon. This, of course, was in due process of nature; but had a Spiritualist or Agnostic lecturer died under similar circumstances, the religious press would have proclaimed it an act of God, to punish the offender for disbelief of his holy teaching.—Progressive Thinker.

Ingersoll once told a story of a Yankee who visited Mount Ararat and brought away a stone with him, which he exhibited at a Sunday-school in the United States as a proof of Noah's Flood. The Rev. James Gibson, Methodist New Connection minister, of Hucknall Torkard, is not quite so bad as that Yankee, but he is bad enough. Having recently visited Rome, he has much to say about the Catacombs, and he pretends to have found in them proofs that there were Christians in Rome at the time of the Ascension! Every scholar knows that this is utter nonsense. Mr. Gibson draws upon his imagination too largely. He says that "for 250 years it was death to confess Christianity." Of course the statement is ridiculously false.

At the recent County Council elections in London the following conversation took place between the wife of a Secularist and a canvasser on behalf of a sky-pilot: "Good morning, madam. Is Mr. R. in, please?" "No, he is not. I am Mrs. R." "When will it be convenient for me to see him?" "Any time after seven this evening." "Is your husband a Moderate or a Progressive?" "I don't know which he is." "What paper does he read?" "The Freethinker." "Um! Ah! Good day, madam."

Too Much for Poor Human Nature.

The Moravians, it is stated, send wives out to their missionaries, who are not allowed to choose for themselves, for the very proper reason that men who do this frequently fall in love with their wives, and love interferes with the true missionary spirit. A third wife was once sent to a twice-afflicted widower. He boarded the ship when she arrived. The bride came upon deck to meet her bridegroom. She advanced with downcast eyes and blushing cheeks. It was an anxious moment. The officers of the ship stood by. The sympathising passengers expected a meeting of real pathos and of edification. The bride raised her head and stood before her chosen. Alas, all he said, as he smote his brow, was, "Ach, Himmel, red hair again!"

Digitized by Google

Mr. Foote's Engagements.

Sunday, April 14, Hall of Science, 142 Old-street, London :—7.30, "The Romance of the Resurrection."

Wednesday and Thursday, April 17 and 18, debate at the Public Hall, New Brompton, with Rev. A. J. Waldron, of the Christian Evidence Society, on "Did Jesus Christ Rise from the Dead?"

April 21, Glasgow ; 28, Sunderland.

May 8 and 9, debate at Derby with Mr. Lee (C.E.S.).

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Mr. Charles Watts's Engagements.—April 14, Liverpool ; 21, m. Walworth Radical Club, e. Hall of Science ; 28, Hall of Science. May 5, Glasgow ; 12, Dundee ; 19, Camberwell ; 26, Manchester.—All communications for Mr. Watts should be sent to him (if a reply is required, a stamped and addressed envelope must be enclosed) at 81 Effra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

Fair Play (Manchester).—We referred to the matter in last week's "Acid Drops." Powell as a member of the N.S.S. is ineffably ludicrous. Could you not see through such folly ?

Charles Harding, 2 Sydenham-terrace, Fratton, Portsmouth, is now secretary of the local N.S.S. Branch, in place of Mr. Hore, who has resigned. C. W. Loveridge, 200 Fawcett-road, Southsea, is corresponding secretary. The Branch will hold no regular meetings during the summer.

J. M. (Liverpool).—The quarrel between the two libellers is amusing, but we do not intend to notice either of them any further, unless we get an opportunity of making them suffer in purse or person for their sweet exhibitions of Christian charity. It is bad policy to give them the advertisement without the punishment.

T. Dunbar.—Thanks. See paragraph.

Mark Nixon.—Glad to have your cheerful letter. We remember your telling us personally about that Christmas Number.

A. Comley.—We are publishing the Hall of Science Libel Case in a separate form. It will be ready for circulation soon after this number of the Freethinker is published. What we said at Bristol is quite true. Every religious idea and moral maxim in the Gospels was common property before the Christian era. Jesus taught nothing, except belief in himself, with which the world was not already familiar.

J. G. Bastram.—Your letter is manly. You did quite right in leaving that braggart severely alone. A fellow who can advertise himself as "the most able champion of Christian Evidences ever head" should undergo medical treatment. It is amusing to hear that "the infidels dread him." We know the Debate is still sold, but it has been expurgated since the trial.

Anti-Cant.—Obliged. See paragraph.

T. Wise.—(1) Many thanks for your kind and interesting letter. It is pleasant to find so much life and love for Freethought in one so old as yourself. (2) Certainly the damages in the Hall of Science libel case were ridiculous, but it was something to get a verdict, when a Freethinker was suing Christians. (3) A Branch of the N.S.S. would doubtless do well at Paddington. We are giving the whole subject of organisation, especially in London, our serious attention. It is pretty clear that ordinary democratic methods fail in all militant enterprises.

E. Smedley.—Thanks for cutting. See paragraph. (1) Certainly the Bible is responsible for the superstition of witchcraft in Christian countries. It teaches demoniacal possession, even in the New Testament. Saul went to the Witch of Endor to raise the ghost of Samuel, and Exodus says, "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live." That single text has shed innocent blood enough to dye all the Bibles that were ever printed. (2) Protestants did burn witches as well as Catholics. (3) We cannot say whether Allan Ramsey was a sincere Christian. Few poets have been, unless they had the blues. (4) We agree with you that Mr. Watts's new pamphlet on Christ as a Social Reformer deserves a wide circulation.

F. Carey.—See "Acid Drops." Thanks. We should like to see the whole Tyneside district the scene of an active propaganda.

W. Foster.—We did not recommend the lady because we were ignorant of her character and qualifications. Those who did recommend her now admit that they were grievously mistaken. Generous impulses are admirable, but they should only be gratified at one's own expense, not at the expense of others. It is dangerous, and even worse, to press untried and unknown persons upon the Secular platform, especially when it is complained that the lecturers already there are far too little employed.

Sunderland Reader.—We understood that the Branch enrolled some new members, but we were not apprised of the number.

J. T. Robson.—Commands to destroy the Canaanites are found in Deut. vii. 2, xx. 17. It was David who, when he took Rabbah, "brought forth the people that were therein, and put them under saws, and under harrows of iron, and under axes of iron, and made them pass through the brick kiln. And thus did he unto all the cities of the children of Ammon" (2 Samuel xii. 31).

W. J. Gainer.—(1) The Garibaldi passage was from his Rule of the Mind. The Maudsley passage was from the Unitarian Society's publication on Mockery and Immorality. (2) We are obliged to you for the N. R. quotation. Bradlaugh's challenge of Price Hughes's story is dealt with in our exposure of it. (3) Delighted to hear that we helped to bring you to Freethought.

As we go to press we learn from Nottingham (not from Rochdale) that the Rochdale Branch "strongly protests" against what it is pleased to call "the unconstitutional action of the Executive in overriding the votes of the Branches in the matter of the place of the Annual Conference." It was distinctly stated that there was but one vote for Nottingham above Bristol, and this became a tie when the London Branches made up their votes on the Executive. It must also be remembered that the vice-presidents have a voice in this matter, according to the old rule of practice. The real ground, however, for deciding on Bristol was that the Nottingham Branch had not complied with the conditions by guaranteeing a suitable place for the evening meeting. The Executive was unanimous, and the President kept perfectly neutral. The Rochdale Branch should really make enquiries before passing votes of censure.

A. G. Levett.—Thanks.

Papers Received.—Stockholm Dagens Nyheter—Harbinger of Light—Echo—Blyth Bi-Weekly News—Clarion—Two Worlds—World's Advance Thought—Post—Universal Republic—Lake's Falmouth Packet—Crescent—Bradford Telegraph—Zoophilist—Huddersfield Examiner—Liberator—Financial Bulletin—Dawn of Day—Twentieth Century—Truthseeker—Las Dominicales del Libre Pensamiento—Newcastle Leader—Isle of Man Times—Cape Times—Review of Reviews—Forum Library—New York Sun—Non-Sectarian—Freidenker—Der Arme Teufel—Chanter's Magazine.

Friends who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish to call our attention.

Lecture Notices must reach 28 Stonecutter-street by first post Tuesday, or they will not be inserted.

Letters for the Editor of the Freethinker should be addressed to 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Correspondence should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

Orders for literature should be sent to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

The Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the publishing office, post free, at the following rates, prepaid :—One Year, 10s. 6d. ; Half Year, 5s. 3d. ; Three Months, 2s. 8d.

Scale of Advertisements.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d. ; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements :—One inch, 4s. 6d. ; half column, £1 2s. 6d. ; column, £2 5s. Special terms for repetitions.

THE HALL OF SCIENCE.

Mr. R. O. Smith offers to take £525 in cash, and £75 in paid-up shares, to satisfy his entire claim as vendor and mortgagee on the lease of the Hall of Science. The original purchase-money was to be £3,000 for the lease, fixtures, and furniture. Of this sum £1,400 has already been paid. It will be seen, therefore, that the new arrangement involves the considerable reduction of £1,000.

Mr. Smith stipulates that the matter shall be settled during the present month of April. The Board of Directors of the National Secular Hall Society, Limited, at a meeting in Mr. George Anderson's office, agreed to satisfy Mr. Smith's claim on this basis, if possible ; and authorised me to appeal to the Freethought party for its prompt and generous support.

Prospectively there can be no doubt as to the value of the lease. The neighborhood is a rapidly improving one, and in another ten or fifteen years the lease should be a first-rate marketable property.

Upon this site it is intended to erect new premises, which shall be suitable headquarters for the Secular party and a worthy memorial to Charles Bradlaugh.

To acquire the unencumbered lease is the first necessity, and I earnestly appeal to the Secular party for the means. Existing shareholders may increase the number of their shares. Non-shareholders may take shares immediately. They are £1 each, payable at once, or in instalments of 2s. 6d. on application, 2s. 6d. on allotment, and 2s. 6d. per call afterwards. Friends of the movement who do not wish to become shareholders can forward donations, which will be invested as shares in the name of any person they please, or in the name of the National Secular Society.

Intending shareholders may save time, which is very important in the circumstances, by filling in the application form which will be found in the Freethinker advertisement columns.

Digitized by Google

This is a great opportunity, and every Freethinker should ask himself, "What can I do in this crisis?" and then do it. The law of the country is against us; it treats us with indignity and injustice; it deprives us of the proprietary rights which are enjoyed by all religious bodies; but this is a reason why we should tax ourselves all the more freely, and even severely, for the great cause for which some of us have suffered, and for which some of us would die.

No one can say that I have spared myself in this enterprise. A few intimate friends know what time and trouble it has cost me. And it may cost me even more in the future; for I am resolved that no more quarrels or disputes shall arise from divided responsibility. Still, fresh precept must be enforced by fresh example. I propose, therefore, by way of encouraging others, to give the whole proceeds that accrue to me from last Sunday's and this Sunday's lectures. I am only a poor man, with many claims and heavy obligations. There are many members of the Secular party who are more fortunately situated. I appeal to them to do their best in this emergency. And I also appeal to all others, even to the poorest, who can only take a share or give a shilling.

We have vindicated the reputation of the London Hall of Science, and indirectly the memory of Charles Bradlaugh, against infamous libellers. Let us now acquire and renovate the one, and do a still greater justice to the other. Let us build a Freethought temple on the spot which was consecrated by the eloquence of one of the noblest heroes who ever battled for truth and liberty.

G. W. FOOTE.

SUGAR PLUMS.

THERE was another capital audience at the London Hall of Science on Sunday evening, when Mr. Foote lectured on "The Death of God and the Life of Humanity." His discourse was highly appreciated and rapturously applauded. Mr. Foote occupies the same platform again this evening (April 14), and will take a particularly seasonable subject—"The Romance of the Resurrection; or, Did Jesus Christ Rise from the Dead?" It should be noted that the Sunday evening lectures now commence at half-past seven.

Mr. Foote's debate with the Rev. A. J. Waldron on "Did Jesus Christ Rise from the Dead?" takes place in the Public Hall, New Brompton, Kent, next Wednesday and Thursday evenings. Major Scott Moncrieff, R.E., and Mr. Charles Watts are to be chairmen. The joint-committee have made a curious arrangement. Both chairmen are to act each evening; the Major is to keep Mr. Foote in order, and Mr. Watts is to keep the reverend gentleman in order. We shudder to think what would happen if the chairmen differed. Perhaps the debaters would have to keep them in order.

There is sure to be a crowd to hear the debate. The Christians expect to see the infidel "wiped out." They generally do—and they are generally mistaken. If anything happens to Mr. Foote, Mr. Watts will be there to bring home the fragments.

Freethinkers or Secularists residing in or near New Brompton are requested to purchase their tickets for the debate in the Public Hall, on the 17th and 18th inst., re Rev. Waldron v. G. W. Foote, upon "Did Christ Rise?" on or before the 14th inst., after which date they will be sold to the public.

Mr. Charles Watts had three excellent audiences last Sunday at Sheffield. Friends from surrounding districts mustered in good force. Mr. Watts, we are informed, was in his best form, and he received hearty applause from his audiences, who were evidently pleased with what the chairman termed "an original and intellectual treat." All the Freethinkers on hand were sold by the close of the afternoon meeting.

Mr. Watts lectures to-day, Sunday, April 14, three times at Liverpool.

Mr. Putnam, the President of the American Secular Union, will arrive in England probably on May 1. As we announced last week, he will be met at Southampton by Messrs. Foote and Watts. His first lecture will be at the London Hall of Science on Sunday evening, May 5, when Mr. Foote will preside. Mr. Putnam's subsequent lectures in this country are being organised by Mr. Watts, to whom all applications should be made immediately.

Mr. Putnam will attend the Annual Conference of the N.S.S. at Bristol, and read a special letter to the English Freethinkers from Colonel Ingersoll. Out of respect to our American visitor, it is to be hoped that the chronic grumblers will take a holiday on that occasion.

The report of the Hall of Science libel case is being issued in pamphlet form by Mr. Foote. Besides the verbatim report, which appeared in the Freethinker after the trial, the pamphlet includes an historical and critical Introduction, and an account of the so-called "Leeds orgies," which have for so many years been the principal stock-in-trade of a certain class of Christian Evidencers. The delay in issuing the pamphlet has chiefly arisen from Mr. Foote's desire to be overwhelmingly accurate, so as to leave no possible room for further misrepresentation. We appeal to Freethinkers to spread this pamphlet broadcast. Whether they do so or not, we have incurred the expense of producing it as "a piece of justification"—to borrow a French phrase. It appears to us that a permanent account of the libel action is almost as necessary as the libel action was itself. To publish it is an act of policy, and to circulate it is an act of duty. The pamphlet runs to sixty-four close-printed pages, and the price is only threepence. The first edition will not, at this price, pay for the cost of production; but we shall be happy to reprint for a larger demand. It is our intention to send a copy to all the religious journals in the kingdom, and to the leading daily and weekly newspapers. The pamphlet will be on sale soon after the issue of this week's Freethinker.

The Newcastle papers report the funeral of Mr. Joseph Brown, late secretary of the North-Eastern Secular Federation, whose death was announced in our last issue. The Daily Leader notices that "there was no clergyman present, nor was there the usual tolling of the bell." Mr. C. Cohen spoke at the graveside "with solemn impressiveness." The Evening Chronicle calls his address "a neat and beautifully-worded oration."

We are pleased to note that Professor Huxley, who has passed through a severe attack of influenza, is much better. He is a fighter who could ill be spared.

At Rome the funeral of Signor Rosea, the founder of an anti-clerical club and a prominent Freemason, was made the occasion of an anti-clerical demonstration. No priest had been allowed to visit the dying Freethinker, who passed away quite serenely. But the hearse bore the emblem of the cross. This was at once objected to and covered over with the banner of the Giordano Bruno Association, "to the great satisfaction of the anti-clericals," says the paper. The body was cremated.

A new Freethought journal has appeared in the republic of Argentina. Its name is Giordano Bruno.

They had a religious census at Bulawayo, South Africa, the total population of the township being 1,537. Of these the Church of England numbered 974; Lutherans, 98; Roman Catholics, 95; Jews, 92; Presbyterians, 90; Dutch Reformed, 86; Wesleyans, 61; Baptists, 10; no religion, 7; Freethinkers, 4; Free Church, 3; Congregationalists, 3; Greek Church, 6; Agnostics, 2; Atheists, 2; Deists, 2; Pantheist, 1; Pagan, 1. Evidently there are a few heretics not afraid of declaring themselves so at Bulawayo.

Freethinkers owe a special debt of gratitude to Mr. Speaker Peel. When that masterful man got into the chair he speedily put an end to the baiting of Bradlaugh, which the Tories and bigots had indulged in for four years, and which neither Mr. Speaker Brand nor Mr. Gladstone had been able to stop. All that was really wanted was firmness, and that Mr. Speaker Peel brought to his new post. There was a stir among the young bloods of the "stupid party" as Bradlaugh approached the table to be sworn in, but the new Speaker would not tolerate any unconstitutional interference, and Bradlaugh took his seat and held it unchallenged. What a blessing it is to have a strong man in a responsible position!

The authorities at Dusseldorf, Heinrich Heine's birthplace, would not find a place for his statue, and it is now suggested that the monument should be sent to New York and placed in the Central Park there.

Mr. Walter R. Cassells, the author of Supernatural Religion, writes in this month's Nineteenth Century on the "Diatessaron of Tatian." He contends that, allowing everything that is claimed for the Diatessaron, it does not give us any earlier date than A.D. 140 for the Gospel of John, and leaves us without any proof of the apostolical authorship of that Gospel.

Digitized by Google

The South Shields Branch, which was very successful with its social gatherings at Christmas and New Year, announces a Soiree for Easter Monday. It is only necessary to mention that this will be under the able management of Messrs. White and Bow to ensure that all the arrangements will be satisfactory. To commence at 7.30. Double ticket, 2s. 6d. Refreshments; moderate prices.

The Chatham friends intend having a tea on Good Friday, at 4.30, price 6d. Social in the evening, price 1s. Tickets for Tea and Social, 1s. 3d. Just the place to go and spend a pleasant time; dancing till 2 a.m.

The Huddersfield Branch sends us its printed balance-sheet for the year ending March 31. There appears to have been very little lecturing done in that period, chiefly owing, we believe, to the difficulty in obtaining halls. Huddersfield contains some sturdy Freethinkers, and we should like to see them working under more favorable conditions.

We print in another column a characteristic letter from Father Ignatius. It is impossible not to feel a certain sympathy with him in his protest against "infidelity" in the Church. At the same time, we cannot help feeling that the necessity for his honest indignation only marks the irresistible progress of the spirit of Freethought.

The American press has unanimously condemned the New Jersey sky-pilots who sought to prevent Colonel Ingersoll from speaking at Hoboken. The New York Commercial Advertiser says: "It is humiliating and pitiful, the efforts of inefficient preachers to enforce by law the respect for the Bible which their feeble tongues are not able to inspire. They have had centuries in which to promulgate the faith they profess, and yet we find them returning once more to the methods of the Puritans, who, seeking religious freedom, persecuted the good Quakers and waged bloody war on poor old women accused of witchcraft."

The Duluth News-Tribune remarks: "It is absurd to say that Mr. Ingersoll may not entertain any views that please him, or that he may not expound his views, so that he keeps within the bounds, not of prejudice, but of decency and common morality. If Mr. Ingersoll takes Sunday as a day for argument and discussion, it is the Christian Church which has set him the example, and Mr. Ingersoll, it must be remembered, does not pretend to regard the day as sacred."

The Christian Register (Unitarian) says: "Col. Ingersoll's lectures, though they may offend good taste, are not any more blasphemous than a theology which made God a cruel Devil and the majority of mankind the victims of his unrighteous hatred. For ministers who preach such doctrines to accuse Colonel Ingersoll of blasphemy is a parody on reverence."

The New York Morning Journal devotes nearly a column to a description of the roof garden of 400 Fifth-avenue, New York, where the grandchildren of Colonel Ingersoll have their playground and a tobogan slide. It says: "They have just as much fun up there as the other little folks do, and ain't so likely to get run over, or to catch diphtheria, scarlet fever, mumps, bad manners, or bad English, as they would be on the street. Colonel Ingersoll goes up there to play with them. He has a good time with his grandchildren. In the drawing-room of the house is an enlarged photograph of the champion of Freethought, with his two little ones hanging about his neck."

De Dageraad opens its April number with a paper by F. Domela Nieuwenhuis, the leading Dutch Socialist, entitled "The Way to Canossa." Mr. Wheeler's account of "The Religion of the Bab" is also translated by J. van der Ende, for the benefit of the readers of De Dageraad.

Professor O. M. Marsh, the distinguished naturalist of Yale College, contributes a paper to the American Journal of Science on the discovery of a missing link in Java. He cautiously affirms that Dr. Dubois "has proved to science the existence of a new prehistoric form, not human indeed, but in size, brain power, and erect posture much nearer than any animal hitherto discovered, living or extinct." He, however, expresses without reservation the opinion that now, "when zeal for exploration is so great," the discovery of additional remains of "still other intermediate forms" "may be expected at no distant day." He indicates the tropical region of both Asia and Africa as the most inviting fields for such ambitious explorations.

"I may mention," writes a correspondent, "that it was one of your illustrations that first set me thinking about religion. General Booth was depicted on his knees, and another fellow was pouring poison down his gullet. Some verses from the last chapter of Mark were underneath. Your fine work, Infidel Death Beds, was advertised on the back of the paper. I looked through the list of names given, among them being Stuart Mill and Lord Amberley. I at once obtained their works from our Free Library, and read them with avidity. After obtaining and reading Bradlaugh's works and your own, I developed into an uncompromising Freethinker."

At a recent meeting of the Blyth Trades Council, Mr. Carey, the local secretary of the Sailors' and Firemen's Union, raised a protest against the reading of the Bible in the Board schools. Mr. Douglass, the chairman, put on his hat and retired, but Mr. Nuttall got into the chair, and the debate continued. There was some pretty plain speaking, though no resolution was voted upon. A resolution, however, will come by-and-by. What is needed at present is agitation, and Mr. Carey deserves thanks for starting it at the Blyth Trades Council, whose members ought to see that the workers will never gain their full rights while they are trained up as slaves to superstition.

The Annual Conference of the National Secular Society will be held at Bristol on Whit-Sunday. We hope there will be a large attendance of delegates and individual members. Bristol is easy enough of access, and there is some delightful scenery in its neighborhood for those who can stay to see it. All notices of motion for the Conference agenda must be forwarded to Miss Vance, at 28 Stonecutter-street, not later than May 4. The financial year closes on April 27.

MR. S. P. PUTNAM.

NEXT week we shall insert a list of the lecturing engagements that Mr. Watts has made for Mr. Putnam. In the meantime we give below the subjects upon which our American friend will speak during his visit. Societies who have engaged Mr. Putnam will please select the subjects they prefer from the following:—

1. The Bible and Modern Thought.
2. Christ and the Nineteenth Century.
3. Secularism and Christianity.
4. Freethought and Morality.
5. Evolution and Creation.
6. Christianity and Woman.

Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll says: "Mr. Putnam believes Freethought has a future; that the time is coming when the superstitions of this world will be forgotten or remembered —some of them with smiles, many of them with tears. His abilities are of the highest order. He compels the admiration of everyone who really loves the just and true."

THE HIGHER CRITICISM AND "THE AGE OF REASON."

THE New York Truth has the following description of a striking scene in a recent Baptist Congress in Detroit:—

"President Harper and President Andrews, of Brown University, with others, had been advocating the methods of modern Higher Criticism, and saying that the last twenty-seven chapters of Isaiah were written by some other man, when Professor Howard Osgood, of Rochester, arose to reply. He spoke briefly, completely answered the Higher Critics, and then said: 'I have here an article, written almost exactly one hundred years ago. I will read it, and then tell you the name of the author.' He read a criticism on the Bible, and especially on Isaiah, advocating a double authorship of the latter, in almost exactly the language of Harper and his friends. He made a few comments upon the clearness of the ideas of the author, and showed his teachings to be identical with modern Higher Criticism. He then exclaimed after a long pause, 'The author of this paper was Thomas Paine.' The effect was wonderful. There was a look of surprise on the faces of the critics, and then, as the applause rang out, they looked as though they would like to escape. . . . It was carefully kept out of the papers for some reason."

This evidence that the conclusions of the Higher Critics had been put before the world a hundred years ago was looked upon as a great triumph of orthodoxy. It really is a proof of the unblushing effrontery of the Christians who reviled, tabooed, and persecuted the works of men whose conclusions were in advance of their time, but are now adopted by the most competent in the Church.

Digitized by Google

RELIGION AND CRIME.

Ellen Dietrick, writing in the Twentieth Century, cites Dr. Buckley, editor of the Methodist Advocate, as saying that 90 per cent. of the criminals imprisoned at Sing-Sing had been Sunday-school scholars in their youth. Dr. Buckley, she says, was unable to find the real significance of his discovery. He seemed to see in it only another proof that "the heart of man is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked," and to take it for granted that there could have been no defect in the early education of those criminals, for are not Sunday-schools absolutely devoted to good teaching?

But what does it mean when we find that any one set of criminals in our midst have had "orthodox" religious teaching in their youth; that the vast majority of the criminals in our prisons to-day are orthodox believers in dogmas of ecclesiasticism, and that only a very small proportion of Freethinkers are to be found among the prison population? What is the real significance embodied in the fact that 90 per cent. of those Sing-Sing criminals were unquestioning believers, and that Freethinkers contributed only 10 per cent. of evil-doers?

Arthur Macdonald, a profound and dispassionate student of and writer on "Criminology," admits that, "while some of the chiefs of the bands (of criminals) ridicule religion, the majority of criminals believe in it," and he quotes the testimony of European authorities on Criminology to the same effect. According to Lombroso, "61 per cent. of the violators and 56 per cent. of the assassins frequent the church." Out of two hundred assassins Ferri (another authority on Criminology) found only one who professed to be an Atheist, seven of the others showed an exaggerated religious devotion, five were strong in the faith, and the rest, while scoffing at the priests, affirmed that they believed in God. One said, "It does not depend upon me to be a good man; it is God who gives this sentiment."

Macdonald says that "a criminal, having killed twelve soldiers and a priest, believed himself invulnerable because he kept on his breast a consecrated offering. . . . A criminal, after strangling three women, was said to be the most assiduous and sincere at church and the confessional. . . . A woman criminal, who had strangled a little girl, on hearing her death sentence, turned and said, 'Death is nothing, the essential is to save the soul; as I have saved mine, I mock at the rest,' and so on, in innumerable cases."

Thus scientific students of Criminology agree that religious dogmas do not prevent vice and crime. They point out the characteristics of criminals as "much credulity," superficial cleverness, superstition, violent passions, bigotry, hypocrisy, and benevolence combined with vanity. "The great criminals," says Macdonald, "never foresee the possibility of their being discovered, and when they are they are astonished that they could have made such a 'great mistake!'" Swindlers are characteristically "lavish with their money." But while religion does not seem to have a restraining effect on those inclined to crime, scientific cultivation of the intelligence does decrease the tendency to wrong-doing. "Crime is very rare among mathematicians and natural scientists. Men of science in general find their investigations a pleasure in themselves; their work requires them to hold rigidly to the criticisms of the true. This training enables them to overcome their passions easier, and to see clearer how a criminal action is not only unjust, but illogical and of no profit, because the reaction comes back with full force upon the author of the crime."

A NICE PARSON.

The Rev. Henry Treweeke Biscoe, M.A., rector of Great Greenford, Middlesex, and formerly chaplain of King's College, Cambridge, appeared at Brentford yesterday for his public examination in bankruptcy. The debtor's statement of affairs showed liabilities, £2,470; assets, £8 6s. Mr. Biscoe said that, with the exception of a few tradesmen's debts and two sums owing to parish charities, his liabilities consisted wholly on amounts owing to money-lenders. He was instituted to the living of Great Greenford in 1890. Its annual net value was about £380, and there was a rectory house. He had had dealings with various money-lenders for twenty years, and lately the interest on the various loans had swallowed up pretty nearly the whole income of his living.

Questioned as to his connection with certain parish charities, the debtor said he was the acting trustee of Betham's Charity, which was left for the maintenance of a school at Greenford, and from which there was an annual income of about £210. He was the only person authorised to draw cheques on the school account, which was kept at the Fleet-street branch of Lloyds Bank. From 1892 to 1894 he drew £120 from the account, and he had not paid it in again.

Official Receiver: You mean that you received the money and have appropriated it to your own purposes?

Debtor: Am I bound to answer that question?

Official Receiver: Certainly; but I will put it in this way—Was any part of that money used for the purposes for which the charity was founded?

Debtor: No.

The Official Receiver next examined Mr. Biscoe as to an amount of £462, which he had stated that he owed to another parochial charity—Bennett's. Mr. Biscoe said that when he came to the parish there was an amount of £462 invested in consols. The interest amounted to about £12 a year, and the founder of the charity provided that a grant of £1 annually should be made to each of twelve poor parishioners of Greenford. The money was invested in his name and that of a Mr. Dix Perkin, who was now dead. After Mr. Perkin's death he sold out the stock.

What did you do with the money?—It was paid into my bank at Cambridge.

Used for your own purposes?—Yes.

Whose duty was it to investigate the accounts of the charity?—The vestry, I believe.

How do you justify these transactions?—I cannot attempt to justify them.

I should think not!

The examination was then adjourned, and the debtor was ordered to prepare a statement showing how he had disposed of the amounts received from Betham's and Bennett's Charities, and hand over to the Official Receiver all his books and papers.—"Morning Leader," April 3, 1895.

IMPLORA PACE.

When I lie cauld beneath the mool,
My death will gie but sma' concern;
The railway trains will still be full,
And steamboats crammed frae stem to stern.

When I lie cauld beneath the mool
Others will stand in dead men's shoes,
Wee rosy bairns will gang to school,
And newspapers be fu' o' news.

But years tak' aff the gladsome zest,
And a' grows wearisome and dull;
There's naething after a' like rest
For weary banes and aching skull;

Rest from the joys and pains o' sense,
Rest from the east wind and the snaw,
Rest from a wrangle about pence;
Rest from divinity and law.

—Henry Glassford Bell.

Obituary.

It is my painful duty to record the death of one of the oldest members of the Newcastle Branch. Mr. W. Bell died from bronchitis, at his residence, on Saturday, March 30, aged fifty-three years, and was buried at St. Andrew's Cemetery on Tuesday, April 2. Mr. C. Cohen read the burial service by Austin Holyoake in an impressive manner to a large number of friends. Deceased had been connected with the Secular movement for over twenty years, and, right up to his last illness, took a prominent part in the Sunday Music Society. Needless to add, he died as he lived, an earnest Freethinker. He leaves a widow and family of four to mourn his loss.

Mr. Joseph Brown, late Secretary of the North-Eastern Secular Federation, whose death was announced last week, was interred at Elswick Cemetery. On this occasion Mr. C. Cohen gave a beautifully-worded and impressive extempore address, which won the admiration of all present. The South Shields Branch was represented by Messrs. Peacock, Chapman, White, and Thompson; Sunderland, by Messrs. Duncan and Robert Tate; Newcastle, by Messrs. Cresswell, Summerfield, Sturt, Mein, Richardson, Bennett, Bartram, and others. Mr. Brown also leaves a widow and son to lament their loss. A brief sketch of Mr. Brown's career appeared in the Freethinker of May 7, 1893.—J. G. Bartram.

Professor Peter H. Vander Weyde, a distinguished man of science, died at his home in New York on March 18. He was born in Nymegen, Holland, eighty-two years ago. The chair of Industrial Science was expressly created for him at Girard College in 1864. He was one of the editors of Appleton's American Cyclopedia; editor of the Manufacturer and Builder; took out over two hundred patents on inventions of his own, mostly electrical; was noted as a musician and composer, and was a painter of no mean merit. He wrote much for the scientific press, completing only a week before his death an article on modern electricity. Professor Vander Weyde was a radical Freethinker, and for some years a prominent member of the Manhattan Liberal Club.

Digitized by Google

CORRESPONDENCE.

AN APPEAL TO THE DEVOTEES OF THE THREE F's.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE FREETHINKER."

SIR,—I think myself that all persons should be vegetarians, and when it is objected that such and such a one has tried vegetarianism and failed, and therefore it does not suit him, I answer, the trial has not been of the right sort—not the proper food, or not long enough taken. I am afraid that want of success lies in the ever-recurring craving for the "too too solid flesh," dread of ridicule, or of the defection of friends. Nevertheless, I say that, as there are far more momentous interests at issue than the above (hard nuts as they appear to be), these should not be allowed to stand in the way of our ultimate self-conversion.

There is, we know, very little new that can be written in support of the system, which to me simply spells right or normal, in the same way as the eating of an animal brought into being solely to be murdered (whether "humanely," "scientifically," or what not, matters nothing) for our tables, would mean all which is wrong. That a man "gets his bob'sworth," and with it conveys to his body material which keeps the machinery in the best repair; that neither his muscles nor his mind are one whit the worse off; and that he might count on a long life of happiness by being a vegetarian, is no news to most.

As a Secularist—that is, in the sense of not being a religionist, having no sympathy with Church or Bible cant—I earnestly ask all Secularists to give vegetarianism a patient, thorough trial, and not be beaten back by the banter of the unco' clever ones, nor be allured by odors of the only too-welcome roast beef or mutton, and then they will discover what is doubtless news to the many—that life has undergone a metamorphosis of so satisfactory a character, the wonder will be that of not having become a vegetarian long ago. It will be discovered that things difficult or impossible of accomplishment upon a flesh diet are got through with the greatest ease when living upon a wisely-chosen vegetarian diet. In like manner, losses, disappointments, and sorrows, which upon the artificial mode of living cause the most poignant suffering, lose their sting by virtue of vegetarianism.

In urging people on to the adoption of our diet, I must be understood to include women. I think it necessary to mention this, the inference almost invariably being that vegetarians are of the male gender. Pleasant for the human species ultimately if such were the fact. If it is proper for the "stemer sex" to banquet without slaughter, how much more appropriate is it to the "gentler sex." Women, by the way, make a rare fuss over their offspring, and are in a frenzy of fear lest any hurt should befall them. It would be but natural and fair if they could let their thoughts dwell occasionally upon the like solicitude of other animals for their young. High time is it that this matter was pondered seriously by both sexes. Save for the possession of a more articulate voice, and the capacity for doing more harm in general, by what right are we to be considered before those species which are doomed for the roasting-jack or the skillet? Why are these goodly-shaped, inoffensive ones to be so slighted?

As all Secularists aim at the attainment of morality, what could tend more to that consummation than the endeavor—per vegetarianism—to save from murder and its attendant cruelties the less formidably-equipped species? Surely it is something highly laudable and consolatory to be one of those who not only cannot endure the thought of, but actually help to do away with, the daily barbarities inseparable from making ready animals for the table. Those who touch no "animal food" eat but their legitimate provender, and cannot consequently be robbing anyone else of his or hers.

Again, having regard to the vital subject of population, vegetarians, for two cogent reasons at least, will never overstock the world with children. Finding his all-sufficient, no vegetarian covets the goods of another, nor does anyone suffer by the non-payment of his just debts, because a vegetarian never lives beyond his means. Looking at the matter in this light, it is clear that, in proportion as all become non-flesheaters, less emigration from one's own native country on the risk of earning a livelihood elsewhere is an inevitable consequence.

To sum up, the full benefits can only be acquired by total renunciation of flesh-meat (harsh condition as that may seem), for there is no comparison between the results obtained from "little meat eating" and those obtained from no meat eating. The latter is a sine qua non. Speaking for my wife as well as myself, it is perhaps worthy of remark that we look upon our non-flesheating as a matter of course, and prove our right to such by the fact that we never require the aid of doctor or physic, and that we literally live and let live. P. H. ECHLIN.

VEGETARIAN RECIPES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE FREETHINKER."

SIR,—From time to time I read with interest your kindly notice of the question of vegetarianism in the columns of your paper, and have ventured to hope you would allow me to express my willingness to send free, to any of your readers, recipes for the preparation of cheap, simple, and nourishing vegetarian dishes, along with a few recipes which will, I am sure, be found most useful by housewives and all interested in this question. ALBERT BROADBENT.

9 Peter-street, Manchester.

THE FAITH THAT IS LOST.

NAY, nay, I do not seek again
The faith of childhood lost to me—
The legend of the holy tree;
The legend of a savior slain.

Nay, nay! I do not wish to live
Through bitter restlessness and pain
To struggle with the Truth again,
And seek the joy Faith could not give.

For now my fight with Faith is done,
And thought is free as earth is wide
To seek the Truth Faith fain would hide
Until my fight with Life is done.

THE GABERLUNZIE.

From the North.

The South Shields Branch, after a long absence, last Sunday returned to its old retreat, Captain Duncan's Navigation School. There was a very good attendance. The president, Mr. J. M. Peacock, occupied the chair. The evening was chiefly spent in reviewing Mr. Cohen's mission and its results. Mr. White, the treasurer, reported that there was a small deficit on the six months, but it was generally agreed that, everything—especially bad weather—considered, the course had been very successful. The lectures had included, besides anti-theological, ethical, biographical, and historical discourses, both interesting and instructive to old Freethinkers as well as our younger friends. The gratifying result was largely due to the marked ability of our lecturer, who has made many new and sincere friends during his stay in the district. It was decided to ask him to visit South Shields when he comes North in June. It was also decided to communicate with Mr. Watts in reference to Mr. Putnam. A vote of condolence with the widow of Mr. Joseph Brown, of Newcastle, who was well known to the South Shields friends, was passed unanimously.—R. CHAPMAN.

PROFANE JOKES.

It is a theological error to suppose that Adam lost anything by exchanging the Garden of Eden for the whole wide world. He "gained ground" by the operation.

"Is your rector High Church?" "Oh, yes." "I suppose he calls sin, then, a moral obliquity?" "Higher than that. He calls it a psychological eccentricity."

Scene—Country House. Host—"Why, you're surely not going to bed yet, Captain? We're going to have prayers, presently." Captain—"Aw, yes, thanks very much. I never take anything after dinner."

A little girl in a western town, after studying for some time a picture of the Magdalen reclining on her face and weeping, suddenly turned to her mother, and exclaimed: "Mamma, I know why Mrs. Magdalen is crying. It is because Mr. Magdalen does not buy her clothes enough."

An old-fashioned cathedral verger, "lord of the aisles," saw a pious visitor on his knees. The verger hastened up to him and said, in a tone of indignant excitement: "The services in this cathedral are at ten in the morning and at four in the afternoon, and we don't have no fancy prayers."

A preacher at an open-air meeting was holding forth on temperance. "When Dives was in h—— what did he call for? Did he call for stout? No. Did he ask for bitter? No. Did he ask for brandy or champagne? No. He asked for water. What does that prove, dear friends?" and he paused, when a toper in the crowd called out, "It proves where all you blooming teetotalers go to!"

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY LECTURE NOTICES, ETC.

[Notices of Lectures, etc., must reach us by first post on Tuesday, and be marked "Lecture Notice," if not sent on post-card.]

LONDON.

HALL OF SCIENCE (142 Old-street, E.C.): 7.30, G. W. Foote, "The Romance of the Resurrection; or Did Jesus Christ Rise from the Dead?" (Admission free; reserved seats 3d. and 6d.)

BATTERSEA SECULAR HALL (back of Battersea Park Station): 7.45, L. Hewitt, "Pompeii: Past and Present"—lantern illustrations. (Free.) Easter Monday and Tuesday, at 8, social gatherings for N.S.S. members and friends.

CAMBERWELL (North Camberwell Hall, 61 New Church-road): 7.30, Stanley Jones, "The Soul and Science."

EAST LONDON (Swaby's Coffee House, 103 Mile-end-road, E.): 8, Dr. Stanton Coit, "Does Evolution Justify the Ways of God to Man?"

OPEN AIR PROPAGANDA.

BATTERSEA PARK GATES: 11.30, F. Haslam, "Christianity or Civilisation."

CAMBERWELL (Station-road): 11.30, C. James, "The Brain or the Bible."

DEPTFORD BROADWAY: 6.30, W. J. Ramsey, "The Atonement."

HAMMERSMITH BRIDGE (Middlesex side): 7, a lecture. Thursday, at 8.30, W. J. Ramsey, "The Resurrection."

HYDE PARK (near Marble Arch): 11.30, J. Fagan, "The Apostles' Creed"; 3.30, Stanley Jones, "The Soul and Science."

MILE END WASTE: 11.15, A. B. Moss, "Ancient Saints and Modern Sinners."

OLD PIMLICO PIER: 11.30, Stanley Jones, "The Soul and Science."

VICTORIA PARK: 11.15, St. John will lecture; 3, A. B. Moss will lecture.

WOOD GREEN (Jolly Butchers' Hill): 11.30, S. E. Easton, "Some Old Tales Re-told"; 7, "Under which Flag?"

COUNTRY.

BIRMINGHAM (Coffee House, corner of Broad-street): Thursdays, at 8, papers, discussions, etc.

BRISTOL (Shepherds' Hall, Old Market-street): 7, social gathering.

CHATHAM SECULAR HALL (Queen's-road, New Brompton): 11, S. J. Boorman will lecture; 7, dramatic entertainment.

GLASGOW (Ex-Mission Hall, 110 Brunswick-street): 12, discussion class; 6.30, J. Cowie, "Our Currency: Its Imperfections, and a Remedy."

HULL (St. George's Hall, Storey-street): 2.30, Hunter Watts, "A Mad World"; 7, "A Glad World."

LIVERPOOL (Oddfellows' Hall, St. Anne-street): 11, Charles Watts, "Trust in God a Delusion"; 3, "Theism Tried and Found Wanting"; 7, "Christianity: Its Birth, Reign, and Death."

MANCHESTER SECULAR HALL (Rusholme-road, All Saints): See Friday's Evening News for announcement.

NOTTINGHAM (Woodland Hall, Woodland-place, N. Parliament-street): 7, James Hooper will lecture.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE (Northumberland Hall, High Friar-street): 3, C. Cohen, "The Dream of Immortality"; 7, "Christianity and Morality."

ROCHDALE (Working Men's College, 4 Acker-street): 6.30, Sam Standring, "Mrs. Besant on Re-incarnation."

SHEFFIELD SECULAR SOCIETY (Hall of Science, Rockingham-street): 7, musical and other recitals.

SOUTH SHIELDS (Baring-street Board Schools): Easter Monday, at 7.30, soirée.

STOCKTON-ON-TEES (32 Dovecote-street): 6, G. Wallace, "Was Jesus Christ a Social Reformer?"

SUNDERLAND (Lecture Room, Bridge End Vaults, opposite Echo office): 7, The Secretary, "The Folly of Prayer."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

DERBY (Market-place): 6.45, Mr. Briggs will lecture.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE (Quayside—weather permitting): 11, C. Cohen will lecture.

ROCHDALE (Town Hall Square): 11, Sam Standring. "Some Events of the Week"; 3, "The Resurrection."

Lecturers' Engagements.

STEPHEN H. ALISON, Sunnyside, 72 Union-grove, Clapham, London, S.W.—April 21, West Ham; 28, Manchester. May 5, Sheffield.

C. COHEN, 12 Merchant-street, Bow-road, London, E.—April 14, 21, 28, Newcastle-on-Tyne. May 2, Wood Green; 5, m. Mile End, a. Victoria Park, e. Edmonton; 9, Wood Green; 12, Sheffield; 19, Manchester; 23, Wood Green; 26, m. Finsbury Park, a. Victoria Park, e. Wood Green; 30, Wood Green.

STANLEY JONES, 53 Marlborough-road, Holloway, London.—April 14, m. Pimlico Pier, a. Hyde Park, e. Camberwell; 21, m. Victoria Park, a. Tottenham, e. Deptford; 25, Hammersmith; 28, m. Battersea, a. Victoria Park. May 5, m. Finsbury Park, e. Battersea; 12, m. Wood Green, e. Edmonton; 19, m. Finsbury, e. Deptford; 22, Hyde Park.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Ordon-road, Rotherhithe, London.—April 14, m. Mile End, a. Victoria Park; 21, m and a. Hyde Park, e. Hammersmith; 28, m. Camberwell. May 5, a. Finsbury Park; 12, m. Mile End, a. Victoria Park; 19, m. and a. Hyde Park, e. Hammersmith; 26, Clerkenwell.

TWO FREETHINKERS.—Ladies and Gentlemen requiring SUPERIOR CUT GARMENTS at moderate prices. First-class Style and Fit Guaranteed.—H. HAMPTON, Artiste Tailor, 14 Great Castle-street, W. (three doors from Regent-street). Patronised by leading Freethinkers.

NEW AND SECONDHAND FURNITURE, Sewing Machines, Pianos, Pictures, China, etc. Good and Cheap. Call and see stock. GEORGE SMITH, 15 Railton-road, Brixton, S.W.

FISH, FISH, FISH.—Bases of SELECTED FISH sent on receipt of P.O 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., and 5s., carriage paid. Premier Fish Supply Co., Fish Docks, Grimsby.

PRICE SIXPENCE,

THE

SECULAR ALMANACK

For 1895.

Altered and Enlarged. Finely-Designed Cover.

EDITED BY

G. W. FOOTE & J. M. WHEELER.

CONTENTS: Progress of Freethought; by G. W. Foote—This World; by J. M. Wheeler—Heroes in the Service of Man; by Charles Watts—Dod Grile—A Wish; by Matthew Arnold—The Abducted Female Infidel—Farquhar of Netherton—Bits from Selden's "Table Talk"—Jeremy Bentham on Inspiration—Abou-ben Adhem and the Angel—Man's Soul his God—The Sacred Books of the World—The Dear God—What have Unbelievers Done for the World?—Information Concerning Freethought Work and Organisation—Lecturers, etc.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Read "THE TRUTH SEEKER."

MONTHLY, PRICE 1D.

Edited by JOHN GRANGE.

Of all Newsagents to order. Wholesale, Mr. Forder.

Just published, price 4d., by post 5d.,

WAS CHRIST A POLITICAL AND SOCIAL REFORMER?

BY CHARLES WATTS

(Vice-President of the National Secular Society).

London: Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Price 1s. 6d., post free,

ESSAYS IN RATIONALISM.

BY

CHARLES ROBERT NEWMAN

(Atheist Brother of Cardinal Newman).

With Preface by G. J. HOLYOAKE, and Biographical Sketch by J. M. WHEELER.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price 1s. Superior edition for Subscribers, bound, numbered, and signed, 2s.

VOLTAIRE:

HIS LIFE AND WORKS.

WITH SOME SELECTIONS FROM HIS WRITINGS.

BY G. W. FOOTE AND J. M. WHEELER.

"The English people ought to know Voltaire, an admirer and lover of their nation, better than they do, and this lively shilling pamphlet will give them a good deal of information as to his life and work."—Literary World.

"A lucid and interesting sketch of the great French philosopher. We strongly recommend it to all who want to know what the influence was which Voltaire exercised."—Weekly Times and Echo.

"Those of the new generation who desire to know more of a man with whose writings their fathers were intimate should consult this little shilling volume."—Reynolds's Newspaper.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Wanted—Instrumental Musicians

To join the National Secular Society's Orchestra now forming. No pay. Reply by post-card, stating name or initials, address, and instrument played, to "Orchestra," office of this paper, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each; upper or lower set, £1. Best Quality, 4s. each; upper or lower, £2. Completed in four hours when required; repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above, they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18 ct. gold, 15s.; stopping, 2s. 6d; extraction, 1s.; painless by gas, 5s.

Digitized by Google

ALLINSON FOR HEALTH.

HOME CONSULTATIONS—10 a.m. to 1 p.m., 10s. 6d.; 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., 5s. Patients Visited.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. I. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Management of Infancy, Health, Longevity, The Teeth, Tobacco, The Drink Question. Also the Cause and Cure of Disease, Constipation, Biliousness, Eczema, Blackheads and Pimples, Nervousness, Coughs and Colds, Chest Complaints, Deafness, Thread Worms, Long Worms, Tape Worms, The Itch, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. II. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on The Healing Power of Nature, Urine, Saline Starvation, the Hair and its Management, Sleep and Sleeplessness, Want of Energy, etc. Advice for the Thin, for the Stout; Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. III. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on No More Death, Management of Young Children, Unsuspected Domestic Poisons, How to Grow Tall, to Keep Warm, to Live One Hundred Years, to Improve the Memory, and to become Beautiful and Attractive. On the Cause and Cure of Stomach Troubles, Flatulence, Sleepiness, Varicose Veins, Boils and Carbuncles, Sebaceous Tumors and Warts, Hay Fever, Winter Cough, Childbirth, Epilepsy, and on the Diseases Produced by Taking Mercury.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. IV. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Hardening, Work and Overwork, Sugar and its Abuse, Milk as Food, the Tomato, Poultices, Quinine, Against the Knife, Arsenical Poisoning, Tonics, Against Stimulants in Disease, about Swallowing Pins and other Articles. Also Cure of Sunstroke, Dog Bites, Pains in the Back, Pediculi or Lice, Chicken-Pox, Synovitis or Inflammation of the Joints, Tonsilitis or Quinsy, Herpes (Tetter or Shingles), Erysipelas, Ulcer of the Stomach, Epidemic Influenza, Sciatica, Psoriasis or English Leprosy, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. V. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Pure Water, The Mouth, Its Use and Abuse; Rules for the Aged, Training, Blood Letting, Nose Bleeding, Felon or Whitlow, Ingrowing Toenail, Gum Boil, Cold in the Head, a Red Nose, Flushing and Blushing, Toothache, Sore Mouth, St. Vitus' Dance, Goitre, Mumps, Inflamed Eyes and Eyelids, Fits, Fainting, Apoplexy, Spitting and Vomiting of Blood, Vomiting, Wounds, Burns, Scalds, Bruises, etc.

The Five Volumes, strongly and neatly bound, price 6s. 3d., post free.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.—An Eye Opener to Drug Takers.

RHEUMATISM: ITS CAUSE AND CURE. Post free for 7d.

DIET AND DIGESTION. Post free for 7d.

CONSUMPTION: ITS NATURAL CURE. Post free 7d.

All these Books, bound in One Vol., post free, 3s. 6d. Send Postal Order.

THREE PAMPHLETS FOR YOUNG MEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.

A BOOK FOR MARRIED WOMEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

All communications to be addressed to—

DR. T. R. ALLINSON,

4 Spanish-place, Manchester-square, London, W.

THE BEST BOOK

ON NEO-MALTHUSIANISM IS, I BELIEVE,

TRUE MORALITY, or THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF NEO-MALTHUSIANISM.

By J. R. HOLMES, M.M.L., M.V.S., M.N.S.S.

380 pages, with portrait and autograph, bound in cloth, gilt lettered. Price 1s., post free.

 In order to bring the information within the reach of the poor, the most important parts of the book are issued in a pamphlet of 112 pages at ONE PENNY, post free 2d. Copies of the pamphlet for distribution 1s. a dozen post free.

The National Reformer of 4th September, 1892, says: "Mr Holmes' pamphlet . . . is an almost unexceptionable statement of the Neo-Malthusian theory and practice . . . and throughout appeals to moral feeling. . . . The special value of Mr. Holmes' service to the Neo-Malthusian cause and to human well-being generally is just his combination in his pamphlet of a plain statement of the physical and moral need for family limitation with a plain account of the means by which it can be secured, and an offer to all concerned of the requisites at the lowest possible prices."

The Council of the Malthusian League, Dr. Drysdale, Dr. Allbutt, and others have also spoken of it in very high terms.

The Trade supplied by R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C. Other orders should be sent to the author.

J. R. HOLMES, HANNEY, WANTAGE, BERKS.

W. J. Rendell's "Wife's Friend"

Recommended by Mrs. Besant in Law of Population, p. 32, and Dr. Allbutt in Wife's Handbook, p. 51. Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell-street, Clerkenwell; 2s. per doz., post free (reduction in larger quantities). For particulars send stamped envelope.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

BEWARE of useless imitations substituted by some dealers and chemists, the words "Rendell & Co." and "J. W. Rendall" being speciously and plausibly introduced to deceive the public.

LOOK FOR AUTOGRAPH REGISTERED TRADE MARK

W. J. Rendell

No. 182,688.

IN RED INK ON EACH BOX, WITHOUT WHICH NONE ARE GENUINE.

Higginson's Syringe, with Vertical and Reverse Current, 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 5s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. Dr. Allbutt's Quinine Powders, 3s. per doz. All prices post free.

W. J. RENDELL, 15 Chadwell-st., Clerkenwell, E.C.

Works by G. W. Foote.

Flowers of Freethought. First Series. 221 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Flowers of Freethought. Second Series. 302 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Bible Heroes. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Letters to the Clergy. First Series. 128 pp., 1s.

The Grand Old Book. A Reply to the Grand Old Man. An exhaustive answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture." 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Christianity and Secularism. Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Is Socialism Sound? Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 2s.

Infidel Death-Beds. Second edition, much enlarged, 8d. On superfine paper, in cloth, 1s. 3d.

Darwin on God. 6d.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s.

Will Christ Save Us? A Thorough Examination of the Claims of Jesus Christ to be considered the Savior of the World. 6d.

Reminiscences of Charles Bradlaugh. 6d.

A Defence of Free Speech. Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes. 4d.

Comic Sermons and Other Fantasias. 8d.

Rome or Atheism—the Great Alternative. 3d.

Letters to Jesus Christ. 4d.

Interview with the Devil. 2d.

Philosophy of Secularism. 3d.

Atheism and Morality. 2d.

My Resurrection. A Missing Chapter from the Gospel of Matthew, discovered by G. W. Foote. 2d.

The Folly of Prayer. 2d.

Ingersollism Defended against Archdeacon Farrar. 2d.

Was Jesus Insane? A Searching Inquiry into the Mental Condition of the Prophet of Nazareth. 1d.

Christianity and Progress. A Reply to Mr. Gladstone. 2d.

The Impossible Creed. An Open Letter to Bishop Magee on the Sermon on the Mount. 2d.

What was Christ? A Reply to J. S. Mill. 2d.

The Bible God. 2d.

Salvation Syrup; or, Light on Darkest England. A Reply to General Booth. 2d.

Is the Bible Inspired? A Criticism on Lux Mundi. 1d.

The Dying Atheist. A Story. 1d.

The Rev. Hugh Price Hughes's Converted Atheist. A Lie in Five Chapters. 1d.

Mrs. Besant's Theosophy. A Candid Criticism. 2d.

Secularism and Theosophy. A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant. 2d.

The New Cagliostro. An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky. 2d.

Bible Romances. New Edition. Revised and largely re-written. (1) The Creation Story, 2d.; (2) Eve and the Apple, 1d.; (3) Cain and Abel, 1d.; (4) Noah's Flood, 2d.; (5) The Tower of Babel, 1d.; (6) Lot's Wife, 1d.; (7) The Ten Plagues, 1d.; (8) The Wandering Jews, 1d.; (9) Balaam's Ass, 1d.; (10) God in a Box, 1d. (11) Jonah and the Whale, 1d.; (12) Bible Animals, 1d.; (13) A Virgin Mother, 2d.; (14) The Resurrection, 2d.; (15) The Crucifixion, 1d.; (16) John's Nightmare, 1d.

The Shadow of the Sword. A Moral and Statistical Essay on War. 2d.

Royal Paupers. Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty. 2d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Vol. I., cloth gilt, 216 pp., 2s. 6d., post free,

CRIMES OF CHRISTIANITY.

BY

G. W. FOOTE AND J. M. WHEELER.

Hundreds of exact References to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.

CHAPTERS:—1, Christ to Constantine; 2, Constantine to Hypatia; 3, Monkery; 4, Pious Forgeries; 5, Pious Frauds; 6, Rise of the Papacy; 7, Crimes of the Popes; 8, Persecution of the Jews; 9, The Crusades.

"The book is very carefully compiled, the references are given with exactitude, and the work is calculated to be of the greatest use to the opponents of Christianity."—C. BRADLAUGH, in National Reformer.

"The book is worth reading. It is fair, and, on the whole, correct."—Weekly Times.

"The book has a purpose, and is entitled to a fair hearing."—Huddersfield Examiner.

"The work should be scattered like autumn leaves."—Ironclad Age (U.S.A.).

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

FIRE

SALE ENDS APRIL 20.

Don't miss some of the Bargains.

A Few 21s. Parcels, carriage paid; worth 42s.

No. 1.—2 Suit Lengths or 4 Trousers' Lengths, good quality.
No. 2.—1 Black Figured and 1 Heavy All-Wool Navy Serge Dress Length; tip-top quality.
No. 3.—1 Suit Length and 1 Dress Length, any color or make.
No. 4.—Blankets, Sheets, Quilt, Table-cloth, Belt, Apron, Purse, etc.
No. 5.—Mixed Lot of Goods for Ladies' and Gentlemen's wear.

TROUSERS TO MEASURE 7s. 6d. Per Pair.

Round waist .....
Round seat.....
Inside leg seam.....
Outside leg seam .....
Thigh .....
Knee .....
Bottom .....
Lined or Unlined .....
(Lined 6d. extra.)
Color .....

NEW PATTERNS FOR SPRING

NOW READY. WRITE AT ONCE.

They Include all the Latest Novelties for both Ladies' and Gentlemen's Wear.

LEADING LINES—

10s. 6d. Trousers to Measure.
35s. Black & Indigo Serge Suits.
Pure Wool Dress Materials, in Pretty, New Designs.
Boys' Sailor Suits 4s. each.

J. W. GOTT, 2 & 4 UNION-STREET, BRADFORD.

Works by Colonel R. G. Ingersoll.

SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES. The only complete edition in England. Accurate as Colenso, and fascinating as a novel. 132 pp. 1s. Superior paper, cloth 1s. 6d.
DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT. A Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy. 6d.
THE GODS. 3d.
REPLY TO GLADSTONE. With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler. 4d.
ROME OR REASON? A Reply to Cardinal Manning. 4d.
CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS. 3d.
ORATION ON WALT WHITMAN. 3d.
ORATION ON VOLTAIRE. 3d.
ABRAHAM LINCOLN. 3d.
PAINE THE PIONEER. 2d.
HUMANITY'S DEBT TO THOMAS PAINE. 2d.
ERNEST RENAN AND JESUS CHRIST. 2d.
TRUE RELIGION. 2d.
THE THREE PHILANTHROPISTS. 2d.
LOVE THE REDEEMER. 2d.
GOD AND THE STATE. 2d.
WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part I. 2d.
WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part II. 2d.
FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Dr. Field. 2d.
GOD AND MAN. Second reply to Dr. Field. 2d.
THE DYING CREED. 2d.
THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION. A Discussion with the Hon. F. D. Coudert and Gov. S. L. Woodford. 2d.
THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH. 2d.
ART AND MORALITY. 2d.
DO I BLASPHEME? 2d.
THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE. 2d.
SOCIAL SALVATION. 2d.
MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE. An Agnostic's View. 2d.
SKULLS. 2d.
THE GREAT MISTAKE. 1d.
LIVE TOPICS. 1d.
MYTH AND MIRACLE. 1d.
REAL BLASPHEMY. 1d.
REPAIRING THE IDOLS. 1d.
CHRIST AND MIRACLES. 1d.
CREEDS & SPIRITUALITY. 1d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price Twopence,

"A Letter to Lord Ellenborough"

OCCASIONED BY THE SENTENCE WHICH HE PASSED ON
MR. D. I. EATON,
AS PUBLISHER OF
THE THIRD PART OF PAINE'S "AGE OF REASON."
BY
PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Freethought Headquarters
AND BRADLAUGH MEMORIAL.

In order to provide Suitable Headquarters for the Secular Party in London, which shall also be a worthy Memorial of its late leader, CHARLES BRADLAUGH, the

NATIONAL SECULAR HALL SOCIETY (LIMITED)

has been formed under the Friendly Societies Acts. Of this Society MR. G. W. FOOTE, President of the N.S.S., is Chairman, and every one of the Directors is, and must be, also a member of the N.S.S.

This can only be done by the assistance of the whole Secular Party, who are hereby appealed to earnestly. The shares are £1 each, payable in easy instalments of 2s. 6d. on application, 2s. 6d. on allotment, and 2s. 6d. on each call, of which two months' notice must be given.

FORM OF APPLICATION.

GENTLEMEN,—

Please allot me.....Shares in the "National Secular Hall Society, Limited," on account of which allotment I herewith hand you the sum of.....pounds.....shillings, being a deposit of.....pounds.....shillings per share thereon. And I hereby agree that, if admitted a Shareholder in the above-named Society, I will conform to its rules, and to such of its bye-laws as may be from time to time in force.

Name (in full).....

Postal address .....

Occupation (if any) .....

CUT THIS OUT AND FILL IT IN,

and forward (with remittance) to the Secretary—

MISS E. M. VANCE,
28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Printed and Published by G. W. FOOTE, at 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

VOL. XV.—No. 16. SUNDAY, APRIL 21, 1895. PRICE TWOPENCE.

THAT ATHEIST!

INTRODUCTION.

THERE is a paper called the Liverpool Pulpit. It is issued monthly, and appears to have existed about three years. Its editors are R. A. Armstrong, C. F. Aked, and Robert Veitch. We believe these gentlemen belong to different Nonconformist denominations We also believe that they have been very active in "putting down" the "social evil" in Liverpool—that is, in harrying prostitutes and crusading against brothels. This is not, in our opinion, an ideal way of warring against lust. Certainly it is not a way which should be patronised by the "spiritual" leaders of mankind. It seems to us a business for the police, if for anyone; but Christian teachers, ever since the days of Constantine, have shown a wonderful tendency to rely upon "the arm of flesh."

These three Nonconformist preachers are regarded—and probably regard themselves—as "advanced." One of them, we believe, is a Unitarian, and another is a friend of the "Higher Criticism." Naturally, therefore, the Liverpool Pulpit is of highly superior tone. And this high superiority is specially manifest in its review of Mrs. Bonner's biography of her father. The said review is headed "The Iconoclast"—a personage whom the writer holds in ill-concealed detestation. Bradlaugh is lauded for his political and social work. The oil of praise is poured out copiously in this direction; the vinegar of detraction being reserved for the Bradlaugh who battled against Theism and Christianity. That he was a great man is indisputable. He was great, says the Liverpool Pulpiteer—very great; but his greatness was all displayed in the political and social arenas; in the aren aof religion he was simply farcical. Which is surely a most cheerful theory—for Christians.

For the sake of fairness, even at the risk of boring our readers, we reproduce the whole portion of the article which deals with

"ICONOCLAST."

